That said, women apparently value loyalty to their Wheels more than to the men who provide for them. So perhaps what she means by 'solipsism' is men's out-group perspective on women's in-group loyalties. This would explain why men find women to be rather disloyal in general — because their loyalties lie elsewhere.

When men point this out and describe their end of what they see in women as solipsism (according to the Red Pill definition), women's response is a superficially polite and verbose "F_ck off!", as we've seen in her essay and also IRL.

Anyway, whatever she is referring to as 'solipsism' is not a justifiable excuse for disregarding, and therefore disrespecting the men who protect and provide for these women.

Related

Case studies of previous arguments between women and Manospherians about female solipsism are given below. Of note, the big discoverie of female solipsism in the Red Pill sphere is contained in the posts dated 2012/9/18-19. Rollo Tomassi and Illimitable Men finalized our understanding of the topic on 2015/9/2-9.

- Alpha Game: Susan challenges a concept (2012/9/18)
- Dalrock: Female Solipsism (2012/9/19)
- Cane Caldo: We Hold This Solipsism as Self-Evident (2012/9/19)
- The Red Pill Room: The Tangled Chains On The Swing Set of Solipsism (2012/9/19)
- Verus Conditio: Solipsism (2012/12/2)
- Alpha Game: Alpha Mail: The Magical Tool (2014/1/3)

- Going Your Own Way (Kyojiro Kagenuma): The Female Psychosis (2014/3/16)
- The Rational Male: Solipsism I (2015/9/2)
- Illimitable Men: A Most Solipsistic Nature (2015/9/4)
- The Rational Male: Solipsism II (2015/9/9)
- Black Label Logic: On Female Solipsism (2016/5/12)
- Red Pill Pushers: Women – There are no Mirrors (2018/10/22)
- Σ Frame: The Evils of Solipsism (2019/11/19)
- !ncels Wiki: Female Solipsism (2021/8/9)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Kyojiro Kagenuma on Women's Agency (2022/12/5)

The Sundress Gate

Jack · 16 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Sundresses: Adored by men. Roundly condemned by the P_ssy Cartel. Coincidence?

Readership: Men
Theme: Transactions
Length: 3,300 words + 33 pics of babes in sundresses to help you through it.
Reading Time: 16 minutes

Intro

Over the summer, there's been a sundress trend on TikTok and X. Women are calling it the 'Sundress Gate' for some reason. Read on and you'll understand why. Prolific photography is provided.

Here's a few read-worthy headlines on the trend.

- Cartoons Hate Her: The Sundress Scandal Rocking Trad Twitter (2024/6/8)
- Evie Magazine: #SundressGate Took X by Storm because of Evie and the Comments are Wild (2024/6/8)
- Red State: What Is SundressGate and Why Does It Matter? (2024/6/10)
- Independent: How a sundress made by right-wing site Evie bridged the political gap – simply because it looked 'cheap' (2024/6/13)
- Evie Magazine: Rejecting The Value Of Sex Appeal Is Only Hurting You (2024/6/15)

Intersexual Competition

For a woman to maximize her hypergame of marooning the best mate she can get, she has to present a certain kind of image that showcases her character, personality, and of course, her reproductive / sex appeal.

Clothing, i.e. the classic sundress, is one of the most powerful monkey methods of pulling this off.

Sundresses appeal to the primate nature.

Why are Sundresses so darn Appealing?

Sundresses are breezy, comfortable, feminine, light, and simple. They're attractive because they are both dignified and flattering to the feminine form; they provide a clearly pronounced nubility, but leave just enough to the imagination to remain interesting — a VERY important combination, regardless of a woman's attire.

Sundresses in particular convey innocence, purity, youthfulness, and conservative traditionalism, and they inspire mental images of a simple, idyllic, country life.

Another prominent reason why Men are attracted to sundress clad ladies, is because a sundress is a dress that cannot be worn by a woman who isn't thin or fit. IOW, only attractive women can wear sundresses. Therefore, sundresses are attractive by association.

The very practical reason why Men love a woman draped in a sundress is because of the easy access it provides for those impromptu moments of urgent desire.

Or as Brittany Martinez politely said,

> "Husbands, buy this for your wives. Side effects may include an unplanned pregnancy."

Taken together, all of these things are a Norden bombsight delivering a direct hit on what men find attractive in women.

Sundresses are a Nubial Gate

From an anthropological / evolutionary / socio-sexual standpoint, sundresses are a fecundity / nubial exposé. Or put more objectively and simultaneously more crassly, it advertises a fertile reproductive portal. Thus, a sundress signals a sexual gate that needs to be kept — and there is constant inter- and intra-sexual warfare over WHO will do the keeping — and the clash is as intense as the evolutionary imperative to promulgate bloodlines!

This is the reason why sundresses receive diligent attention not only from men, but also even more from women too. The attention from men is quite warm-heartedly needy indeedy, but the attention from women is as frigid as a B!tches Wit, as I'll cover below.

Wowzers! Even better than P0rn Hubba Hubba!

Intrasexual Competition

As I described in Herd Behavior : Apparel, women have two 'modes' of dress: (1) Dressing to Conform, and (2) Dressing to Compete. In general, women dress to conform, and on certain special occasions, they'll dress to compete.

The more attractive 'Compete' mode comes in a few varieties, like…

- 'Festive' mode — When women dress up just to have fun and toss a splash.
- 'Formal' mode — When women pretend to be princesses.
- 'Pick Me' mode — When a woman is actively trying to impress or snag a man, or attract men's attention.
- 'Play' mode — When women objectify themselves as meretricious mustangs just to make themselves feel sexy.

All of these settings are an ego stroking boost to their convivial 'self-esteem'.

In the traditional past, events like date night, prom, weddings, and other formal occasions were the typical outlets for these prancing and preening behaviors, but anymore, women are flashing their spares at the beach, the gym, nature trails, sporting events / games, and elsewhere.

These days, when women slither off to the bars or dance clubs they're in 'Festive' mode. When they attend a wedding they're in 'Formal' mode. When they wear a bikini to the beach, or those bumper crack, camel toe, yoga pants to the gym, they're in 'Play' mode.

Turning the Other Cheek

Covfefe Anon wrote,

> "It's more complicated than that though. Women will wear the most absurdly revealing clothing and 'dare' men to look at them as a dominance display. It's not 'alluring' other than as a raw display of nakedness, but women agree to pretend that your labia in leggings isn't a sexual display."

Yes, because this is 'Play' mode. They're NOT dressing for men's eyes (although they are). It's to air out her soggy thatch that has been repressed by 'Conform' mode, and to freely assert her fungible feminine aura in public.

All that talk geared towards policing the P_ssy Cartel changes to a different tune when they dress up to migrate to a bar or a dance club or the gym. At that point, it's about seducing choice men from whom they can extract attention, resources, $$$, seed sop, etc., and dominating them if at all possible. Most all women will agree on this, unfortunately, although they'll never confess it.

SCW explains the recidivism behind the rules of the implicit dress code as follows.

> "The reason for the constantly churning fashion conversation among women isn't to look good for men — that would be far too easy — but to navigate / define the permission structures whereby other women will refrain from punishing your appeal to men."

IOW, "You might be a nubile sex nymph, but don't let other women think that you're signaling a willingness to be gate kept by a MAN (as opposed to the female herd), even if/when you're NOT, or don't intend to incite envy and/or turn men on."

However, if a girl can find a trusted posse of like-minded cougars who will feed her ears with soul sucking sexed up moxies, then she'll chase her hussie instincts to the full.

Sundresses are 'Pick Me' Attire

"Pick Me" is the polite version of what would be mansplained as "Marry ME and take me away" and/or "I'm DTF today", depending on the social context and the character of the girl.

SCW wrote a very good definition of A 'Pick Me' girl.

> "A 'Pick Me' is a woman who tries to bypass female consensus judgment by appealing directly to men. A 'Pick Me' betrays the pussy cartel by undermining collective female control of sexuality. This is why men aren't encouraged to have opinions about fashion; men and those who would please them are interlopers."

Sundresses are obviously 'Pick Me' attire, although sundresses could also just as easily fall into either 'Festive' mode or 'Play' mode, providing women with a small degree of plausible deniability. But they're all 'Compete' modes that wage war against both ugly feminists and the persnickety gatekeepers of various peer clusters / Wheels.

Women are fully aware of what kind of apparel makes them attractive to men. So when a woman is wearing a sundress when other women are NOT, she's not just in 'Compete' mode, she's blaring her hornys saying, "Pick MEEE!" (For an example, see inset image of Michelle Ivana's post.)

Even though a girl may or may not be competing for men and/or attention, she's definitely competing against other women whether she intends to do so or not. So whenever a girl is in 'Compete' mode under the auspices of Men, the envious fem-felines bare their claws and fangs to coerce the playful 'Pick Me' traitor back into 'Conform' mode.

This is the context in which the "Pick Me" label is brandished as a catty cope used by ugly women who are jealous of younger, better-looking, more appealing women. As with all cartels / unions, they are most zealously defended by those who are least likely to prosper outside of its benefits and protection, i.e. their least competent members. (In this case, competence = sex appeal.) Thus, the perpetually covetous and envious hive will buzz endlessly about a woman donned in a transcendently fresh sundress outside of the acceptable social settings.

The Sundress Gate Police

Mr. Congratulations Here's Your PhD (@wash_cloth) twisted the subject with this comment.

> "You're saying all this like it's a bad thing, but society gets messed up when men do the (seemingly necessary?) s1ut shaming. It needs to stay women's domain."

Nice attempt at Wh!te Knighting, but you can't turn traitor by shutting men out of the equation. Besides, wimmin are much MUCH more cruel and vindictive in their S1ut shaming than men are.

However, Mr. Ph.D. is correct that women are policing a dress code amongst themselves, just as they did in the now glorified 1950s — but the reasons for doing so are much different now.

Kelly Brook, Trad Wife extraordinaire.
In the past, Slut shaming was about policing sexual morality, and wearing modest clothing was just one facet of sexual morality.

But these days, the spirit of the law among women is NOT to enforce intersexual morality as twas in the past, but to crimp the sources of intrasexual envy. Hence, S1ut shaming is still used today as an effective tool in regulating clothing trends to enforce the P_ssy Cartel's gatekeeping.

The Cat Fights

Now that I've covered the contextual in's and out's, let's take a look at a few comments that illustrate why SundressGate has created a buzz.

Seasonal Clickfarm Worker (@ClickingSeason) tweeted,

> "The thing to understand about sundress gate is that obviously men think women look cute in sundresses and most women (rightly?) find it threatening to their core sense of identity and agency if they overtly wear something men like. It's much more important that their female friends like their choices, and anything Girly risks the wrath of friends for 'Pick Me' behavior. To appeal directly to male sexuality without first going through the filter of female consensus is traitorous to the sisterhood.

> Take a look at this image: What you have here are two warring social dominance strategies. One woman attempts to mog with a direct (cheap, tacky) appeal to male sexuality, and another woman mogs by stepping in to punish with consensus judgment of women and gays. Owned!"

Many rotten tomatoes were thrown by chagrined wimminz in the comments.

At first reading, this exchange was confusing to me, especially the part about "consensus judgment of women and g@ys", because Brittany didn't mention this. I can only guess that SCW is identifying Target, etc. as g@y, or maybe she's calling out Brittany's "stylish friends" as fluffies. Maybe I'm reading too much into this, but whatever the association is, a large number of commenters agreed with SCW's take. Readers are welcome to correct me or offer alternate explanations.

It wasn't until after I wrote the last few posts on female competition vs consensus and herd behavior when I really understood what the fuss was all about. So here, I'll explain the dynamics of this transaction and why 'Sundress Gate' is throwing chicks into a clucking tizzy.

Women Concertedly Deny Any Sexual Competition

The irony in all this is that, although fuglies will call out hotties wearing sundresses as 'Pick Me' poseurs, with the next breath they'll vehemently deny that women dress to impress men. In general, headstrong harridans feel they must deny the fact that bequeathed babes are inclined to betray the herd. Why? Because their allegiance to the herd must be regularly demonstrated to enforce the hegemony of the P_ssy Cartel.

"It's also immodest since it's coming from a more "conservative" outlet" WTH???
An opposite-sex comparison would be like a room full of Betas, Deltas, and Gammas collectively ganging up on an Alpha to cockblock him and prevent him from making a good impression on any of the girls present. Meanwhile, they're all bantering, "Did you see a Ch@d?" "What Ch@d?" "There's no Ch@d here!"

In the Man Land of Testosterone, this kind of behavior would immediately instigate a fist fight. Similarly, a comparable result occurs in the Land of Glossy Lips, except through covert methods. The rationalization hamster will perform some amazing mental cartwheels to maintain this collective narrative of monolithic conformity.

To offer an example, take a look at this poetic comment from Intra-Stellar (@WindDustStars).

Clue: Her hot indignant attitude is the 'tell' that indicates something struck a nerve.

> "No, that's not it. What is at work here is a dispute over aesthetics. Women hold strong opinions on what is beautiful and appealing, plus we know what is flattering on our bodies. Women with more refined aesthetics are perhaps similar to wine snobs who understand excellence and can taste the difference between a mediocre wine and an outstanding wine. People who don't understand wine, and to whom it all tastes pretty much the same, will not believe that people can care this much about something so trivial. So they will concoct other explanations. And those explanations will miss the mark, just like yours did. Look, we know guys would like to believe this is all reducible to intrasexual competition, with the male gaze as the ultimate prize. But you flatter yourself. Women care about what is beautiful, not just what is sexy. Refinement in taste is an outward expression of something elegant in the woman herself. So it can also be a form of status signaling among women. We know men don't get this and we don't care. This is not about you. Look again at the comments and notice the brand names mentioned. Zimmerman, Reformation. Those are fairly expensive brands. Dropping their names is code for "I understand elegance and refinement. I know good style. I am not an ignoramus who shops at Forever 21." For the record, the dress does look like it belongs in the juniors section at Target. It's fine for what it is — a cute, younger woman's casual dress. But it's not really that stylish or beautiful in itself, so I'm on the side of the women who looked at it and said, "Nah."

When she writes, "we know guys would like to believe this is all reducible to intrasexual competition, with the male gaze as the ultimate prize", she's (1) denying the fundamental truth that women are male attention seekers, and (2) she's arguing that women getting in thick with the P-ssy Cartel is of greater importance than women ingratiating themselves to men.

Moreover, she's essentially undermining Male Headship / Patriarchal authority.

The Magical Tool of Solipsism

Comments containing bulverizing, solipsistic, warp-drive hamsterbations from women like Intra-Stellar are common.

- Comments attempting to reframe the intrasexual competition as an elite fashion show or women's forever exclusionary domain (e.g. "[We are] women with more refined aesthetics … We know men don't get this and we don't care.").
- Comments indignantly denigrating men and out-grouped women as ignorant or low class (e.g. the 'wine snob' analogy).
- Comments attempting to cover their figurative nakedness by sophisticated virtue signaling (e.g. brand names).

Comments like these elucidate how solipsism is a Magical Tool that can be regularly implemented by wimmin to lie and deny, to enforce V Cartel hegemony, as well as to delineate and signal the in-group and the out-group — and remember, ALL men are permanently out-grouped.

The paradox is that women will sing to the tune of "Men don't matter" when they are in the company of other women … meanwhile, they're all secretly fantasizing about that HSMV man and speaking in code.

Mathematically, we have the following relationship.

Denial + Posture Posing = Solipsism

Why Men Don't Matter

Although men love sundresses, they'll never get a positive response for complimenting a girl who's wearing one. This is because a woman who wears a sundress already knows she looks good. But she is more concerned about…

- How comfortable her clothes are.
- How she feeelz wearing it in public.
- What she might lose by betraying the P_ssy Cartel.
- Navigating the heightened cutthroat intrasexual competition.
- Peer envy and any possible ostracization / punishment that may result.
- How to handle the constant, inevitable, unwanted attention from low-status men who crawl out of the woodwork everywhere she goes and do backflips to consume her attention, time, and energy.

All considerations and risks that men are totally unaware of, and frankly, don't really care about.

Furthermore, men aren't encouraged to state their opinions on women's fashion because men's estimations are invariably about the attractiveness of the woman in question rather than on the clothes she's wearing. Remember, a truly beautiful woman will look good in anything. Men are usually unaware of this fundamental bias because they're boobsmacked, and women won't point it out because it's embarrassing to the lesser endowed women who are sure to inflict revenge. Besides, those men who do have well-refined tastes in feminine attire are typically h0m0esque.

What boggles (straight) men's minds is that straight women actually care what Tw!nks think about female fashion. From a (straight) man's POV, any woman who either values the opinion of, or who keeps company with P00fs is damaged and/or low value. So when women get excited over a g@y man's opinion on women's fashion, they're left wondering, "Why does she want to devalue herself?" And then comes the clincher, "Why does HIZ opinion mean more to her than mine?" The perceived disrespect is revolting.

Sundresses are R@c!st ?!?

Davey Snope wrote,

> "There's a r@ce angle as well. Christiana is either Wh!te or Wh!tesp@n!c, and Martinez is darker H!sp@n!c. Wh!ter women look better in sundresses and therefore Wh!te or Wh!ter women in sundresses are a treat to Martinez getting to ride the carousel of top 20% Wh!te men. One of those men might settle down with Christiana and exit the carousel, so the Br0wner chick must suppress the Wh!ter to keep her access to top tier Wh!te men."

My first reaction was to ask myself, "Why is Davey r@c!@l!z!ng sundresses? Is what he's saying really true, or is this another fake narrative sponsored by the MGM?" So I had to check this out. Here are a few images for comparison. I've tried to pick out a few examples of every r@ce. Readers can decide for themselves whether sundresses are only for Wh!te chicks.

Wow! They all look pretty … pretty fine to me!

I'm sure some women will argue that some of these dresses are not 'sundresses' per se, but to men, they're all just 'sundresses', and they're all just sunny and fine.

One thing to note is that darker women do look better in lighter or brighter colors. But overall and regardless of r@ce, the thinner the lady, the fuller her breasts, and the more pinched her waistline, the better she looks in a sundress. But of course, this is true no matter what a woman wears, as I've said above and before.

Behold the following beauties in bags, gags, rags, snags, and tags.

So now we're back to rating women on their overall attractiveness, and NOT just their clothing. Oh well! Men will be Men.

Maybe that is precisely the draw. If a woman looks good in a sundress, then she'll look good in anything (or nothing really, to be completely dank). This is also true irrespective of r@ce, and to some extent, age as well.

H/T: Patriactionary and Info

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: Women Don't Really Understand Male Attraction and Implications (2017/4/12)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Feminine Beauty is Highly Controllable – Theory and Analysis Part 2 (2017/4/20)
- Σ Frame: DTFCupid (2017/12/17)
- Σ Frame: Sexual competition continues after marriage (2021/2/19)
- Σ Frame: Revisiting the Beauty of Purity (2021/4/9)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Gynapotheosis (2021/4/21)
- Σ Frame: Descriptors of Beauty and Attractiveness (2021/4/23)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Incentives for Bimbofication (2021/8/23)
- Σ Frame: Warning: New Ultra Conservative P0rn Trending (2022/6/3)
- Σ Frame: Ressentiment, Shame, and Accusation within Progressive Identity Politics (2022/6/20)
- Σ Frame: Lust (2023/2/10)
- The Fiamengo File: The Curious Case of the Self-Objectifying Feminist (2024/9/14)

Are Queen Bees Able to be Moral Agents?

Jack · 17 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A response to Adam Piggott's assertion that they're not.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Transactions
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Intro

Over the past couple of years, Thedeti's et al. writings have concluded that if the broken SMP/MMP is to improve at all, then the onus is on women to get their act together.

There are multiple reasons why the onus is on women, and not so much on men.

- In the West, women (and their male enablers, i.e. promiscuous Ch@ds and White Knight types) are collectively in rebellion against God's order. It is up to them to repent. Men cannot force women to repent.
- Men are hamstrung by gynocentric civil laws (e.g. Duluth), court systems, feminist social norms, and society at large.
- Women are the gatekeepers of sex. Women can wag their fingers at men all they want, but men can't take what isn't offered. So if you want to reduce fornication and the corruption of marriage and society, then the gatekeepers (i.e. women) need to keep their knees together outside marriage, and wide open within.

Moreover, men's hands are tied as to how much they can keep their women under control and protect them from their own feral instincts. In fact, civil law runs afoul of Christian Headship. Men's (and all of society's) impotency in reining in women's bad behavior is the whole reason we have MGTOW.

All of this is why we asserted that the onus really does fall on women to employ boundaries and instantiate moral agency. That's part of the consequences they must bear for their collective action of rejecting male authority.

The only alternative for them is a carouseling / careerist life followed by cats and wine, which we are already observing en masse.

Adam's Assertion that Women are Incapable of Being Moral Agents

In Only Societies that Treat Women as Property Survive (2024/8/28), Adam Piggott objected to the idea that women must get their act together and police themselves.

He stated,

> "If the onus is on women then you are experiencing societal collapse."

Yes, we are.

> "No nation or kingdom in the history of mankind has survived women having sexual moral agency. Women's sexual instincts are to go after men who are cads. The more sexual partners that a man has had then the more that he is attractive to women. This type of scenario implies a severe lack of impulse control and an attachment to short term thinking. For the individual cad, this is not a problem. For the woman this is a problem. For a society, this is the worst thing possible save the barbarians at the gates, and even the barbarians are survivable in comparison to this threat."

One quibble. If women are acting on impulse and going after cads, then they are NOT exercising sexual moral agency.

> "Women cannot, do not, and have never in the history of mankind policed themselves in this matter. To be impolite, you are f_ck!ng deluded if you think that women would ever show leadership and police themselves in this regard."

There used to be a time when women regularly s1ut shamed wayward women, and they were much more vicious and influential than any men who did so. Also, older women taught younger women how to be chaste, humble, and love their husbands, as it is written in Titus 2:3-5. (I doubt it would be written there if it were simply not possible.) In some ways, older women are better equipped to mentor younger women than fathers or husbands are. One of the main problems with the current state of the West these days is that these disciplines are now shunned as m!s0gyn!stic.

Women are NOT Helpless Waifs — NOT Anymore

I agree with Adam that women should be a part of a man's domain, except this is not the way things are IRL, and this is the source of all the trouble. Most Western women do NOT identify as a man's possession (e.g. father or husband) and are adamantly against the very idea. In lieu of belonging to a Patriarchal domain, women's peer groups are the domain in which they live, move, and breathe in the West today.

Furthermore, Adam's overall assumptions of the incompetency of women is not the way things are IRL. Not anymore. Right now, women are on par with or surpassing men in nearly every metric, e.g. earnings, education, etc. While some of this is due to "Equal Opportunity", there are some cases that are not. This stands to prove that women do in fact have agency, as argued before — or at least some of them do, and I'll assert that these are the women who have the most influence in their peer groups.

The Powerful Influence of Female Peer Clutches

TBH, while writing the Queen Bee post, I wasn't really sure if there exists "a critical mass of Queen Bees" that could turn the tide of feminism if they put their straws to it, and I wasn't sure if the nature of women was so inclined, or could be shaped thus. This uncertainty fueled my interest in writing the last few posts covering intrasexual social transactions among females, listed here.

- Σ Frame: Studless in Seattle : Competition in a Corrupted Shrinking Market (2024/9/5)
- Σ Frame: Female Competition : Consumerism (2024/9/6)
- Σ Frame: Herd Behavior : Cosmetics (2024/9/9)
- Σ Frame: Herd Behavior : Apparel (2024/9/10)
- Σ Frame: The Compliance Test (2024/9/11)
- Σ Frame: The Wheel Model : How Female Social Groups Function (2024/9/12)
- Σ Frame: Female Solipsism : Misplaced Loyalties (2024/9/13)
- Σ Frame: The Sundress Gate (2024/9/16)

We already know that women are herd creatures, but these posts illustrated the intrasexual dynamics that emanate from the female nature that manifest in said herd behavior — dynamics that appear very confusing and convoluted to men, but are really not, once they're understood.

In these posts, it was shown that women are usually more loyal to their female social groups than they are to men or family, and are strongly disinclined to go renegade. However, there is also a considerable degree of competition and infighting among women, much more than among men. So now I am much more convinced of my earlier conclusion that Western women should be considered as, and must be dealt with as cliquish groups (as opposed to a 'possession' of men). That's just facing reality. That means, one influential feminist or slore can ruin many younger girls within her domain of influence, whereas if a peer clutch of women is to be based, then they must all do it together. As part of this collective action, it is necessary for those females who are most influential to herd migration to be observant of Christian morality or else other women will NOT be motivated to conform. This was one of my main points in the Queen Bee post.

The Influential Role of Community

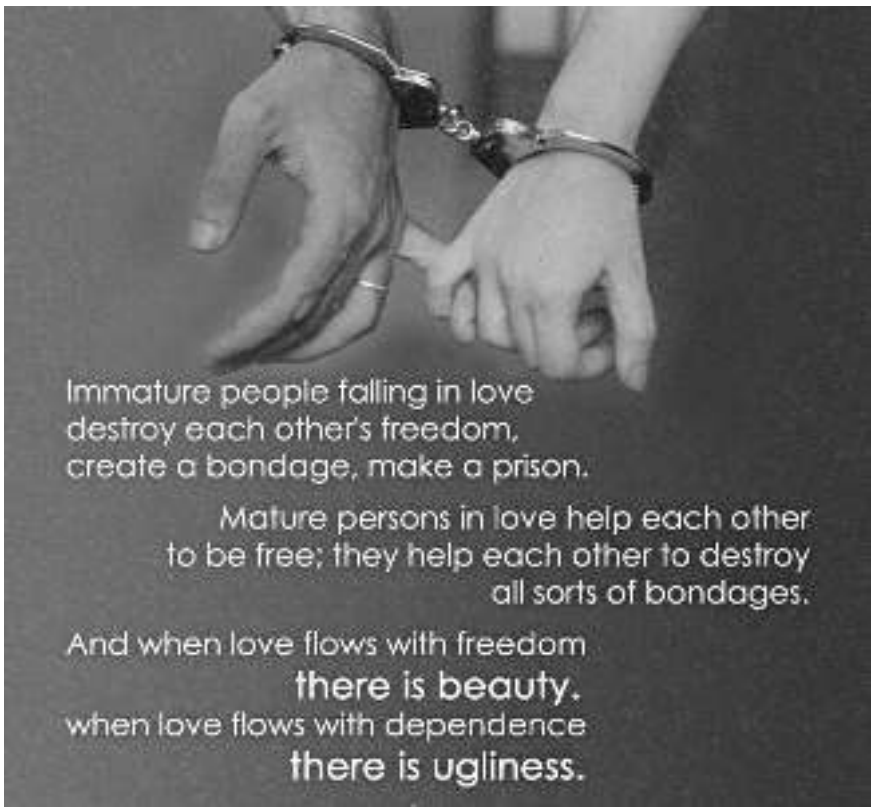
The question is whether there are any Queen Bee types that are making a diligent effort in this direction. We have seen some women adopt the Trad Wife image and these women have attracted a large following — enough for it to have become a social trend. (Readers might want to discuss whether they are truly authentic, or if their following is mostly men.) But what would be more powerful than these online culture shapers are based Queen Bees in local communities who have a direct influence on other women.

One or two women here and there repenting after hitting the Wall is not sufficient to turn the tide. As I stated in the Queen Bee post and a few more posts since then, there needs to be a collective action to get the herd rounded up. There needs to be a cooperative community to demonstrate in their daily lives how things should be, and to reinforce the Order of Order.

What Can Men Do?

Adam went on to point out what men CAN do in response, summarized here.

- Fathers need to actively protect and support their daughters, with the active and understanding support of their wives.
- Fathers must raise their daughters with a complete awareness of the realities of the sexual marketplace.
- Daughters need to be raised and taught that they must protect their virginity at all costs.
- Fathers do not send their daughters to college or leave their welfare to chance.
- Fathers must actively help their daughters to find a prospective husband within their community.
- Fathers treat their daughters as property that must be protected and then passed on to her future husband. Fathers must also make d@mn well sure that her future husband will be up to the job of protecting her.



All good, except personally, I would not say "women are the property of men" (although I agree in the sense of women being subject to a man's domain), because I know that would only feed the trolls. Most people would not understand this in terms of a traditional marriage and family founded on a man's God-given domain of loving influence and responsibility, and would instead misinterpret this as 'sl@very', i.e. a perceived violation of women's existential fear, and use this to vilify God's Order of Patriarchy. Instead, I would say women are (or should be) under men's (spiritual) authority (i.e. father or husband), whether they like it or want it or are willing to admit it or not. That's just how God created us.

Addendum: Adam Piggott shored up his views in a follow up post, Good People who Live in Evil Societies (2024/8/31).

However, what Adam has proposed is not enough. Adam's wise adages are only for fathers / parents of young girls who can still be molded. What can men who are NOT fathers do? What can men do about adult women?

As stated above, men cannot force women to walk the straight and narrow or repent. However, there are some societal developments that are pushing some women in that direction (e.g. Dobbs, MGTOW, Passport bros, paternity testing, frustrations with being an independent single mother and/or career gal, etc.).

As we've stated before, what men CAN do is start drawing boundaries, stating expectations, and holding women accountable / responsible for their decisions. Expecting women to police themselves is just one way this can be done. Whether women respond well to this is another matter, but let's consider the possibilities. If men collectively state that this is what they expect from women, then some women may very well walk the line.

Conclusions

I know every woman is a little different, and this dichotomy may not be so black and white in every case, but it essentially boils down to two choices for women.

1. Unrighteous Rebellion and with it, the fleeting momentary pleasures and the bitter, lonely, longitudinal consequences.
2. Obedience to God — If men are out of the picture (by women's own choice), then women are directly responsible to their Maker. Of course, this is not pretty as we are now seeing. Without a man playing the fatherly / husbandly role of a shepherd / spiritual mediator / priest, this route is much more difficult and harder for women. Adam is right in saying that women are not cut out for this. But there will be a few who take this to heart, and the Queen Bees are those women who are most influential in this regard. This is why I said that "If Queen Bee isn't chaste, those girls won't value purity."

The question at hand is not whether women en masse have agency (most don't), but whether individual women in question have moral agency to do what's morally right. I'll assert that some women do, and certain others can be taught to do so. (But these women are probably not in rebellion in the first place.) These women have the potential to influence their posse's in a positive direction.

The question is, what do these faithful Queen Bee women look like? What can we do to encourage them to take a stand for truth, beauty, and goodness in their peer groups?

Related

- Chateau Heartiste: The Moral Dichotomy of Women (2017/4/18)
- Dalrock: Empowered to Avoid Responsibility (2018/9/12)
- Σ Frame: The Feminine Dilemma (2018/10/27)
- Σ Frame: The Feminine Christian Marriage Quadrilemma (2021/7/16)
- Σ Frame: What we've learned about Female Agency (2022/12/20)
- Crisis Magazine (Michael Hoffman): Mansplaining Ephesians (2024/8/27)
- Adam Piggott: When Men Lead, Women will Follow (2024/9/18)

- Catacomb Resident: Another Law versus Faith Story (2024/9/18)

Meanwhile, in a Parallel Dimension of Time and Space...

Jack · 18 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A Patriarchal structure does exist!

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Transactions
Author's Note: This post is a summary of comments from readers and an email exchange between Jack, Red Pill Apostle, and Thedeti on 2024/9/4-6. Links to original comments are embedded in the initial words. Edited for readability.
Length: 2,500 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes

Intro

Why are women attracted specifically to men who won't commit? (2024/9/4) was based on an email from a happily married Christian woman. She argued that Christian women are designed to be a man's helper, and that they are drawn to men who make women qualify themselves to fill this role in his life. Unfortunately, it just so happens that Ch@ds are doing this, while marriage-minded Christian men are doing the opposite — they're trying to qualify themselves to women in order to be picked by her for marriage.

I thought this was a salient and true observation. However, there were some objections in the comments, especially to this statement:

> "From a (Christian) WOMAN's point of view, we are NOT stupidly running after men who will not commit. We are attracted to men who display dominance and have a purpose, and therefore offer a lifepath that a woman can fit herself into."

I thought the contrast would be pretty clear to long-time readers, but apparently, it is hard for us to imagine a Patriarchal structure, and it's easy for us to erroneously juxtapose statements about a Patriarchal structure onto the open secular structure that is prevalent in Western society. So here I'll sort out the confusion.

A Patriarchal Social Structure

The female author described a Patriarchal social structure in which the father chooses a small number of marriageable men for his daughter to meet, and she chooses one of them to marry. Young women do not start meeting (or dating) men until they're ready and willing to marry. The courtship is no longer than 6 months.

Here's what the female author left out.

1. What she describes only works in a patriarchy where the woman's father picks the men who are allowed to date her.
2. Time is actively working against women. They need to balance the tension between man who is on his purpose and is not committing, and woman qualifying for his commitment. Someone needs to put a time limit on it, at which time the man needs to either commit, or cut her loose. Or she needs to say, "He has this much time after which he either commits or I am cutting him loose." Usually the person who is going to put that time limit on it is the woman, or her father.
3. This works only if she or someone else puts hard limits on the man's sexual behavior. "No sex until commitment"; or "I'll do this and this; but I will NOT do that or that until I'm married."
4. Any man who makes sex a criterion for staying with a woman he's dating, automatically disqualifies himself as a good man worthy of marriage. (This is not to be confused with two horny young people falling to temptation.) So it is to be expected that such a man would prefer to avoid commitment.

An Open Secular Structure

What we have in the wider secular culture in the West is an open market — one that is NOT regulated or supervised by fathers, a community, or society. Women are free to pick and choose any man they want, and go as far as they want with any one of them, or ALL of them if she so chooses. There are no restraints placed upon women's sexuality, and no immediate consequences — only endless pleasures of the flesh and various benefits and incentives granted by the court system.

1. When women are left to their own devices, they go from attractive man to attractive man, all of whom will tend to use her for sex and won't commit. And those men don't commit because they don't have to. They are getting what they want.
2. What often happens is that women who are a 6 try to get a man who is a 9.* Thus, a man who is a 9 has a large variety of under-9 women to fornicate with and have fun with.
3. The woman who is a 6 gives him sex without commitment in order to attract him for a commitment. She is being strategic. This 9 man is attractive to a wide range of women, so the 6 woman has to use anything she can to get him to commit, and sex is the most powerful tool at her disposal.
4. Getting his commitment is unlikely to happen, but she wants to try, because she thinks it is possible. At least, she thinks she has time to try with multiple high-quality men until her peak SMV years run out and then she has to consider lower-quality men in desperation.
5. Since a woman doesn't usually go to bed with a man who she deems unworthy of commitment, she thinks men are the same. So for her, having him in bed is a sign that commitment is possible. She projects. After all, doesn't everybody know that men and women are 'equal'?
6. In addition, she could use some other things to attract the high-value man: femininity, help, submissiveness, etc. But feminism has taught her that (1) these are contemptible behaviors for a woman; she is not a 'doormat', and men want Strong Independent Women™ (a lie), (2) "men and women are equal" (another lie), so men don't need or value these feminine traits (also a lie), and (3) the only thing in which men and women are NOT equal is sex. So she plays what she thinks is her only card (and it is a high card) to get his commitment.
7. Once the 6 woman has had sex with a 9 man, she is ruined. She will always compare subsequent lovers to her 9 boyfriend and find them lacking. She will never seriously consider men below 9 for marriage. She will become a single mother of a child of a 9 man, a spinster, or a harpy wife tormenting the 6 man she eventually settles for, always seeing him as somebody below her.

8. Another tragedy I have seen is when the 9 girl and the 9 guy get together and it seems like a perfect match, but her mind and attitude are so corrupted by feminism that she can't keep him interested. So they break up. Then after a dozen rounds on the carousel, and having a kid along the way, she marries a 4 man who bends over backwards 24-7 to keep her pedestalized. It is a debased 'marriage' by virtue of the inverted structure.

 SMV numbers are approximations for the sake of illustration.*

Summary of the Open Secular System

The core problem in the secular system is hypergamy combined with fornication. That is, women are putting out for men who would never commit to them in the first place, as Cochran pointed out. As a result, women end up becoming sexually attached to men who are way out of their league, and are then chasing after a commitment from a man who is already decidedly opposed to a commitment. The non-committed man is intent on avoiding commitment so that he can continue to spin plates or whatever, and he is greatly annoyed by a low-quality chick with an entitlement complex who's pestering him for a ring — one who's good enough to F but not good enough to marry. As a result, both parties are frustrated.

Like moths to a flame. This is how many lives and marriages are ruined by fornication. The ancients were right in forbidding it.

In many cases, women are actually chasing men who won't commit for the same reason that men chase women they wouldn't consider marrying. They want sex with an attractive member of the opposite sex purely for recreational purposes. There are too many candid social media posts of women clearly identifying certain men as being recreational only. The women are having too much fun without the self-imposed constraints of a marriage commitment.

While this has been a rapidly expanding percent of the female population in our feminist world, there is still a segment of the female population that is young, inexperienced and lacks the ability to differentiate between the attractive man who won't commit and the attractive man who will. This segment of women is mainly limited to women who are early college aged. After that, around 22, they either have gained first-hand experience themselves, or have friends that have shared their experiences with them. Thus, women over ~22 have the knowledge they need to choose wisely, but opt not to use it in favor of riding a carousel of Ch@ds in the hope that one of them might commit.

Discussion of the Comparison: Patriarchal vs Secular

Returning now to the essay from the contributing wife, the author's perspective is valid only when a woman is fully submitted to her father; when her father controls who she dates; and she puts hard and fast limits on her suitors' conduct and the time in which they have to either $h!t out a ring or get off the pot.

In light of the female contributor's testimony, the question "Why are women attracted specifically to men who won't commit?" is NOT a true question for Christian men and women who have a purpose beyond shagging. But if shagging is the main purpose, then the question becomes rather valid.

In the usual case, we have to add "IF she thinks he's hot" to every statement a woman makes about men. But in the case described by the female contributor, the men have already been vetted by her father and are presumed to be marriage material. In sum, her father narrowed down her choices to an acceptable and eligible selection. She said she was attracted to these men, so I read this as "she already thinks he's hot enough". So going from there, her statements show what women look for — life path, lifestyle, and purpose (i.e. the kinds of daily activities that can be expected).

However, the social context described by the female correspondent is uncommonly rare and the socialization dynamics therein are simply not borne out in today's society. Most women do not live anything like the kind of life the married female correspondent lives. Therefore, her claims cannot be juxtaposed onto the wider secular SMP, because in this context they are simply false.

IF the female author were talking about an open secular system, then she would be wrong to say that "[women] are NOT stupidly running after men who will not commit." Um, yes, yes they most certainly are. Today, in 2024

America, they are.

Western women most definitely ARE stupidly chasing after and bedding down with men who won't commit, simply because they can, because no one tells them not to; and because they all know at least one of their peers who won the lottery by "stupidly running after" a bull alpha, and they think they can replicate such fantastic luck.

Most women do this because they can, because they really enjoy sex with attractive men and without commitment. Sure, they might want commitment and they might not like it if sex with a hot guy does not result in some kind of pair bond. But they like the sex MORE than they dislike NOT getting commitment. If given a choice between nothing from the hot guy and just sex with the hot guy, they'll take the sex.

The writer does not get that because she is a woman. Men that she sees as non-worthy are not visible to her. They are not classified as "men". Women DO want to qualify, but they want to qualify to a high-quality man, not to a common man, and even less to a dork. No woman wants to qualify to a low-value man. The cads are high quality men (if only because they are preselected by other women). In addition, the act of not giving commitment easily shows the woman that this is a quality man.

Conclusions

The female contributor's essay is best regarded as something that is truly possible within a Patriarchal community — but ONLY within a Patriarchal community.

Concerning the idea that …

> "[Women] are NOT stupidly running after men who will not commit. We (Christian women) are attracted to men who display dominance and have a purpose, and therefore offer a lifepath that a woman can fit herself into."

The underlying assumptions governing this thought are…

1. That men are looking for sex and women are looking for commitment.
2. The contextual social structure is Christian or at least Patriarchal in nature.

But this does NOT hold true for the wider secular culture. For a large swath of women, to the point I believe it is a majority these days, the above conditions are totally absent and abjuringly irrelevant to their interests. Women are actively looking for sex with HVMs, and men, for the most part, are desiring loyal commitment, and Christian sexual morality is practically non-existent.

There is too much evidence that, from college through the 20s, women are interested in either recreational sex with men hot enough to pass their moisture filters, or serial monogamy, and often a combination of both as they build their careers. There is very little evidence that women want to fit themselves into a dominant man's life path and much more evidence that women want to act like dominant men themselves.

As with all things in the relationship space, we are to listen to women but believe what they do over what they say. If women really wanted commitment from dominant men, the following trends would be exceptions.

- Almost no virgin marriages
- Family would take precedence over career.
- "Netflix and chill" would not be part of the lexicon.
- There would be no trend of women hitting the wall.
- The concept of the "hot girls' summer" would not exist.
- The concept of the boss b!tch would not be prominent in society.
- The average age of first marriages would NOT be in the late 20s and continuing to increase.

There are other indicators I could list, but y'all get the point.

Female behavioral trends are shouting the message loud and clear — that they are willing to have sex with dominant men without requiring commitment — and the dirty little secret is that they enjoy it!

This lifestyle only becomes a problematic issue when her biological clock starts running low and she wants to stick the landing by having her family with the dominant man after having had her fun in her 20s. However, the dominant man has no shortage of women willing to spread their legs for fun without commitment, so he ditches the women hitting the wall harder than Wile E. Coyote chasing the Road Runner, in favor of the lower-cost fun he's accustomed to.

Related

- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): How Feminism Erodes Marriage (2021/11/8)
- Σ Frame: The Wages of Sin are Paid in Marriage (2022/10/15)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): 16 Bible Passages for Teaching Wives and Daughters about Male-Female Roles

and Marriage (2023/5/15)

- Σ Frame: 7 Things Men Want out of a Woman in Marriage (2023/5/17)
- Adam Piggott: When Men Lead, Women will Follow (2024/9/18)
- Catacomb Resident: Another Law versus Faith Story (2024/9/18)

Taking care of women who don't want to be taken care of

Jack · 19 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A final response to Adam Piggott's posts.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Transactions
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

Adam Piggott and I have been discussing the role of women in society and how men are to best regard women.

- Σ Frame: If Queen Bee isn't chaste, those girls won't value purity (2024/8/28)
- Adam Piggott: Only Societies that Treat Women as Property Survive (2024/8/28)
- Adam Piggott: Good People who Live in Evil Societies (2024/8/31)
- Σ Frame: The Stronghold of the Beta Factory (2024/9/2)
- Σ Frame: Are Queen Bees Able to be Moral Agents? (2024/9/17)
- Adam Piggott: When Men Lead, Women will Follow (2024/9/18).

There has been some disagreement based on the fact that we are discussing two different social contexts.

- Adam is describing a Biblical Patriarchy.
- I'm describing the current social situation in the West.

A Clarification

In response to Adam's latest post, I have to make a couple clarifications of context and intent.

Adam wrote,

> "The back and forth continues with Jack over at Sigma Frame on the question of whether women need to be the driving force behind solving the family crisis."
>
> "What Jack is promoting here is essentially matriarchy."

I'm not promoting matriarchy nor do I hold the idea that women should solve the family crisis. I'm saying we already have a matriarchy — advanced feminism, and women are doing nothing to remediate the associated social ills. My posts are just describing the way things are and analyzing what needs to happen for women to be nudged in the right direction. I'm simply pointing out that without a Patriarchal social structure (as it is now), women are on their own, so they must look to their own leaders for guidance, i.e. Queen Bees. In the Western Matriarchy (AKA Feminism), Queen Bee types (including authors, celebrities, politicians, et al.) are the defacto culture shapers, and so they have the most influence to instigate a change. This is the best cope they have in the current fiasco.

The Intersexual Covenant / Social Contract

Adam has stated many times that men (should) protect and take care of their women, and that men lead and women follow. Yes. Ideally, this is how things should be. But the problem with Adam's Patriarchal view is that it doesn't work in a Matriarchal system. No matter how much or how well men might lead, it's up to women to follow and submit — that's the Covenant deal — and the grand majority of women in the West are vehemently against this notion.

For the most part, Western women don't have these benefits of Patriarchy because they don't want to do what is required to have it, not because men won't lead, etc. Although it is true that men are displaying less leadership, it is because men are not interested in leading and doing things for women who will not follow and are going to do their own thing anyway. IOW, women are on their own. They have rejected the Covenant in favor of a social gynarchy. When men continue to act as leaders in this context, then that's essentially the churchian concept of "servant leadership". It's up to the man to woo woo her fee fees into doing what's right, at any cost to himself, and none to her.

In fact, perhaps the best thing men can do for such women is to NOT lead, protect, and take care of them. I believe this is what the Bible refers to as "turning that one over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh" (1 Corinthians 5:5). In simple terms, we're turning them back into the world on their own, apart from the care and support of Christian fellowship / Covenant community / Patriarchy. Actually, they've already chosen this path for themselves, but men still need to recognize this and respond appropriately. Women have made their bed, now men need to let them wallow in it in the hope that they'll "Wake Up".

Of course, this "Wake Up" will not solve the family crisis, but it is something that needs to happen before the family crisis can be resolved. It is ugly and will continue to get worse, and there's probably no hope of restoring the vast majority of them. They're truly on their own.

We're already seeing the effects. Over the past year or two, some women are now beginning to realize how difficult life can be for Strong Independent Women. Too bad they're already ruined for marriage.

Conclusions

Concerning the dialogue between Adam and I… When Adam says that men should protect and take care of their women, and that men lead and women follow, it should be noted that this only holds true in a Patriarchal system. IOW, men should lead, protect, and take care of their OWN women, and women should follow their male Heads. It has to be a reciprocal cooperation for it to work. Men should NOT do these things for women who are NOT willingly submissive to their leadership. Christian men need to dump the idealistic secular altruism, as it only enables feminism.

As for the points I raised earlier… Will any Queen Bees read these posts and decide to become a guiding light in their peer groups? It's unlikely, but there it is for any takers. It is more likely that there may be some fathers, pastors, or elders who read these posts and take it upon themselves to do what they can to foster better behavior and instill accountability in the female social groups within their sphere of influence. And if they won't submit, then it is morally correct to cut them loose.

Anyway, I've done my small part in offering guidance to women who don't want to be taken care of, and I'm finished with that.

The onus is on them, as Thedeti and I have been saying. They can submit or else take the hard road. Meanwhile, we can't ask men to play Captain-Save-a-H0e in order to prop up a failing Matriarchal society.

Related

- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Knowing how things are supposed to be (2021/9/13)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual/Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Men's Role in the Mess (2022/12/21)
- Σ Frame: Ideal Women Don't Exist (2023/9/23)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Lie of Female Hypoagency (2024/4/1)
- Σ Frame: Drizzle Drizzle (2024/4/24)

- Σ Frame: Meanwhile, in a Parallel Dimension of Time and Space… (2024/9/18)
- Catacomb Resident: Another Law versus Faith Story (2024/9/18)

Chasing after a Deceptive Fantasy

Jack · 20 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Fitting her fantasy will find you a fast F_ck, followed by a fierce flaming.

Readership: Married Men; Marriage Minded Men; Mentors of young men;
Theme: Transactions
Author's Note: The contents of this post are taken from a discussion under Very Few Women Can Be Molded (2022/10/27). Links to the original comments are embedded in the initial words.
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 3.5 minutes

The Female Psychology of Serial Monogamy

Younger women, ranging from late teens to the near end of their peak fertility years, late twenty somethings in particular, but many thirty somethings as well, have a peculiar habit. They'll start a new romantic relationship, complete with Facebook lovey-dovey posts, etc.; then three to six months later, break it off.

At first, they're really into it, like they get with Mr. This Is IT!, thinking, "He's the one, this is my future husband"; "He's the one I'm going to marry and end my singleness," and then after a time they decide, "Nope, not him, heading back out to look around some more."

¡PooF!, no more relationship. Broken up.

Then a few months later, they've got another dude and more FB posts. Rinse and repeat.

This weird habit works directly against their prime goal of locking down a suitable man for marriage, particularly given their age; you know, the Wall and all that comes with it.

And what kind of men are they hopping on, to and fro? Masculine simps. Pretty boys. These are the kind of men who perpetually perpetrate the penetrating pump and monkey branch. Guys who look handsome enough to make her lips drool; soft and sensuous enough to make her mouth water. They're all similar to one another, with a certain look and a way about them — NOT Ch@d-certified masculinity-wise — they look the part on the outside, but on the inside rests the heart of a Simp. He's in her frame, NOT she in his. She's running the relationship. He's shagging along for the soft ride in the sack.

The Faux Full Frontal

It's so weird. At the beginning of a relationship a girl will literally turn herself inside out to become whatever it is you say you like. And at the end, if you ask her to bring you something from another room, she'll roll her eyes at you like you are the laziest ungrateful POS in the world for asking her such an off-putting request.

She'll "break all the rules" for you in the beginning, when she perceives you as "Alpha". Then, as the familiarity of constant daily F_cking sinks in and takes its toll on her dopamine addled hindbrain, you'll transform right in front of her eyes into a "Beta" with "boyfriend behaviors". Then she'll start piling the rules back onto you, just like she does with every other man, and just like she did with every one of her exes.

The "molding" is way easier at first. Then they resent it because they think all the cocky "Alpha-ness" they saw in you when you first met was a ruse and they were fooled by an imposter.

When what really happened was that you assumed she loved you "on the inside" and you could just "relax and be yourself".

It's why having to constantly keep your "game" up just to have her treat you right like she did in the beginning sounds exhausting (and not worth it) to most men.

Unless you figure out a way for your relationship to smoothly transition through this phase, serial monogamy is again the most rational answer for poon pedestalizers who can pull it off.

The Illusion

All women entertain a fantasy image in their minds of the perfect man toy. If you happen to fit this image well enough for her to believe you're the real thing, then she'll fall on your d!ck like a repentant sinner begging the Pope for forgiveness. But the fantasy they've built in their head doesn't match reality. It never does. When they figure this out, they completely lose it and have a melt down. Her fantasy is now shattered, and she puts ALL the blame on YOU. Even if you rub it in her nose, she'll never realize it was all a fantasy from the onset.

This is where "men are trash" comes from: men failing to live up to the fantastic ideals she holds that don't exist IRL.

None of this is Men's fault, except walking into this snaptrap of sin with the false expectation that she won't change.

Don't enable serial carouselers by chasing solipsistic tail. Save yourself the time and trouble. Don't be a Pretty Boy Masculine Simp who gets tossed aside at the end of her semi-half-@ss epiphany.

Related

- Σ Frame: Carousel Widow in Decline – Part 3 (2021/8/20)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual / Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame: The Simp (2022/5/27)
- Alexander Grace: The REAL REASON Teenage Girls Crave Pretty Boys (2023/2/11)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): You Can't Vet This (2023/9/21)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Mating Dance and Female Erotic Fantasy (2024/1/19)
- Σ Frame: Biblical Masculinity vs Worldly Masculinity (2024/4/10)
- Σ Frame: No Virtue Exists Without Masculine Incentives (2024/6/28)

The Parable of the Seeds : Red Pill Edition

Jack · 23 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Another parallel of the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy.

Targeted Readership: Men
Readership: All
Theme: Transactions
Author's Note: This post is based on an email discussion with Red Pill Apostle on 2024/1/28.
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

The Biblical Parable of the Seeds

The parable of seeds growing in different soils was given in Matthew 13:1-23 and Luke 8:4-8,11-15. Here, Jesus describes…

1. Seeds that were trampled and devoured by birds.
2. Seeds on rocks that sprout roots quickly, but then die out.
3. Seeds that were choked out by brambles.
4. Seeds in fertile soil that yield a bounty.

Later in the passages, Jesus gives us the respective interpretations of the parable.

1. The seeds devoured by birds are when the Devil steals the word out of people's hearts.
2. The seeds in rocky soil are people who hear the word, accept it with joy, and then fall away.
3. The seeds that fell among thorns are those who hear the word, but are then distracted by the cares, riches, and pleasures of life and forget about it.
4. The seeds that fell on good soil are those who hear the word, understand it, and produce fruit.

Concerning the first type of seed, “The Devil” could mean one of several circumstances:

1. They become soured against the truth for any number of reasons, maybe because it involves self-sacrifice and suffering, or it conflicts with worldly ideologies and values they hold dear.
2. They are too spiritually impoverished and dissipated by sin and therefore have no real power to choose or follow through on their decision.
3. They are not accepted by other Christians and/or are denied Christian fellowship for some reason, maybe because they are habitually unclean or too defiled.

Jesus is saying the first three types are not chosen by God for eternal life even though it would seem that they were part of the church for a time.

The Red Pill Parable of the Man Seed

Following the C : C :: H : W analogy, we have the following interpretative parallels, respectively.

In general,

- “Hearing the word” is analogous to marriage and/or sexual congress.
- A person who hears the word, accepts it, and then rejects God to worship the world’s idols is like the wife who leaves / divorces one man and bangs or marries another.

1. Seeds Devoured by Birds / the Devil

1. Feminism — Women who buy into the feminist ideologies that women are strong and independent, women don’t need a man, etc., and who patently refuse to submit to a man, and are therefore rejected by men for marriage for this reason.
2. Sexual Sin — Women who are casually promiscuous for many years. Either they never get serious about relationships and/or marriage, or they are passed over by men for marriage for this reason.
3. Traumatic Violations — Women who are defiled by !nc∂st, r@pe, OOWB, etc., and are rejected by men for marriage for any of these reasons.

In these cases, external influences creep in and corrupt the raw material needed for a sanctified marriage.

2. Seeds that Fell on Rocky Soil

1. Serial Monogamy — Women who fall madly 'in love' with a man, F-ck themselves silly on him, and then leave him when the feelings fade, and/or another Ch@d comes along (the template for serial monogamy).
2. Frivorce — A wife who divorces her husband.

In both cases, she falls for him, is all in, and then she isn't. In both cases, she moves on to another man or 'remarries', and now she's eternally done with husband #1.

3. Seeds Choked Out by Brambles

This category catches most other relational issues.

In general, 'brambles' are any false beliefs, hamster thoughts, temptations, or vain desires that effectively distract her from the constructive thoughts, habits, and purposes of maintaining the relationship she's in.

1. Stepping Out — Women who have a good relationship, but secretly have affairs on the side.
2. Monkey Branching — Women who start off with a good relationship, but then hop to another man under the notion that it will be better somehow. "Is he really the best I can do?"
3. Long-Term Relationship Ennui — Women who start off with a good relationship, but then become bored with the familiarity and regularity. "Is this all there is to life?"
4. FOMO — Married women who start off with a good relationship, or single gals with good potential for having one, but who will "leave the farm" to go off searching for that mysterious missing piece of her soul. This quest invariably ends with her in bed with another man, and then another, and another.

In all these cases, they'll do any combination of the following.

- Create relationship drama.
- Compare him to other men.
- Chafe and complain about having to 'settle'.
- Covet the trappings of MOAR luxuries / wealth.
- Make demands, 'Rules', Sh!t tests, ultimatums, etc.
- Put pressure on him to 'change' or to perform / produce MOAR.
- Entertain the notion that they've "grown out of the relationship".
- Think that the man is somehow "not keeping up his end of the deal".
- Become contentious, envious, jealous, or worried about any number of things.
- Fantasize about the romance that they're NOT feeeling and think they're entitled to.

4. Seeds that Fell on Fertile Soil

Much has already been written about the commonalities of successful marriages, and the many characteristics of stable relationships.

But here's an alternate 'reverse' perspective of the analogy. A wife who marries a man for nefarious reasons (e.g. Beta Bux, status climbing, etc.) and then leaves her husband to pursue peace with God (1 Corinthians 7:15-16, 32-35) is like one who hears the word, accepts it and then rejects the world's idols to worship God (though this happens after the 'marriage'). IRL, this interpretation is rare, because most women coming out of a divorce either have another man lined up already (Mark 10:12) or else they hit Tinder desperately hard (Matthew 5:32) — adultery in both cases. So this is where this interpretation breaks down into unbiblical territory.

Marriage Laws

Here's something to consider with the above analogies. Think back to Old Testament law (Deuteronomy 24:1-4). A divorced wife who marries another man was forbidden to 'remarry' her first husband, even if the second husband died. The good book goes so far as to say that this is an abomination. St. Paul confirmed that this doesn't change under the New Covenant (1 Corinthians 7:10-11).

Jesus specified that if a man divorces his wife or marries a divorced woman, then it is adultery (Matthew 19:9; Luke 16:18). If she marries another man and then leaves him too, then she's twice 'divorced'. For the case in which the second man dies, she's still divorced once, so if any man marries her, including her previous husband, it is adultery.

That's an odd law, because it would seem that reestablishing a broken marriage is righting a prior wrong, and that would seem like a good thing.

However, the rule against wives remarrying is intended to reflect spiritual realities. The issue is the treachery that's involved. For a man, taking back an adulterous wife is the same as submitting to her Frame and becoming a member of her male harem. It is a structural inversion of the hierarchy of authority, and the authority figure is an adulterous woman no less.

If we assume that Sex = Marriage, it constitutes the same spiritual depravity. If a woman breaks up with her lover, sleeps with another man, and then later returns to her first lover, then both men are effectively cuckolded. As soon as she takes another man into her heart and womb, the union with either man becomes debased no matter how he responds, because the woman is defiled. From his perspective, the best option is to let her go, because if he takes her back, he's essentially condoning, enabling, and participating in her sin.

Within this perspective, the glaring problem with some of the above interpretations is that it violates the one husband for life rule. But otherwise the symbolism holds.

Conclusions

There is supposed to be one God for life, and even with God being the creator and sustainer, people still chase falsehoods. Chasing falsehoods in no way changes the fact that God is their creator and sustainer.

Likewise, a woman who divorces her husband and sleeps with other men is chasing falsehoods, namely the notion that she is NOT subject to the authority of ONE man, and that her natural bonding affinites are no less divided. That is what renders it adultery. Even if she thinks she's leaving her Beta hubby to marry a Ch@d, the fact is that he's not her first, and that makes all the difference. Besides, this seldom happens IRL. This is just another elusive fantasy.

She may not believe that God still sees her covenant with her first husband, but her false beliefs do not dictate the reality of her situation. A person can believe that the earth is flat. The Flat Earth Society website is humorous. Well, you know the rest.

I could be way off base, yet from my vantage from the Reformed corner of Christianity, the remarried wife rule makes a little more sense to me now in light of the C : C :: H : W analogy.

Related

- Biblical Gender Roles: Why Unity In Marriage Has More To Do With The Wife Than The Husband (2016/11/23)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Headship in concept and practice (2019/1/24)
- Σ Frame: The Red Pill and Blue Pill as Paradigms of Sanctification and Defilement (with a mathematical analogy) (2020/11/15)
- Σ Frame: More on Relational Archetypes (2020/11/28)
- Σ Frame: Zizek – Everyday Sexuality (2020/12/14)

- Σ Frame: The Relinquished Life (2021/3/8)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority and Sanctification (2022/8/8)

The Effects of the Sexual Revolution on Female Sexuality

Red Pill Apostle · 24 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Removing constraints unleashes the fleshly nature.

Readership: Married Men; Marriage Minded Men; Mentors of young men;
Theme: Transactions
Author's Note: The contents of this post are the proceeds of an email exchange between RPA and Jack on 2024/1/31-2/1. Jack organized and compiled the content.
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Has the Sexual Revolution Redefined A1phatude?

Under The Larger Conspiracy that Justifies Feminism (2023/11/6), Rock Kitaro posed an interesting question.

> "Here's a question I'd like to ask in earnest. Regarding this point from the conclusion,
>
> > "That female sexual liberation breaks down assortative mating and permits all women to bed the top males with few repercussions."
>
> Do you think that the Sexual Revolution also redefined what's perceived to be the "top males"?"

> "I say that because just this morning, I was watching a Kendra G interview with an older married black couple (both in their 60s), where the woman got with him when he was just making $3.85 an hour, and now he's a millionaire. The couple placed a greater emphasis on values and how love is love, regardless of whether you're poor, sick, or unable to produce.
>
> I know there's always been alphas and whatnot … but for some reason, I suspect the sexual revolution, the > normalization of the hook-up culture, and the acceptance of sexual immorality has deteriorated what could have been the top male in the past. I'm thinking of the Gilded Age, where even when sexual immorality did happen, it was usually a scandal if it became public knowledge. Divorce was horrid. And virtues like respect and dignity were withheld."

The short answer is no.

Women's attraction to the Alpha Male is a timeless archetype. That's why it's the foundation for many evo-psyche models. It's even Biblical.

- Samson and Delilah.
- Women loved the warrior poet David as he danced in his linen ephod.
- Solomon was the child of the hot exhibitionist Bathsheba and David who is described as ruddy and handsome in 1 Samuel. Solomon was almost certainly a very good-looking man to go along with his gift of wisdom and incredible wealth.
- Both David and Solomon pulled pu$$y about any time they wanted it because a top man in the female attraction matrix back then is just like a top man in the female attraction matrix now.

Human nature is amazingly reliable.

Let's go over a few other things that have changed because of the Sexual Revolution, and you'll see what I mean.

The Sexual Revolution Unleashed the Fleshly Nature

I'm reading a book called A Billion Wicked Thoughts, by Ogi Ogas and Sai Gaddam (2011). Researchers analyzed web searches because they show what people really look for when there is no risk of judgment. Their findings were scandalously out of line with the SMP at that time, but since then, the SMP has become more like what they found, indicating that there is less risk of judgment now compared to a decade ago.

Going further back in history explains why this is. The Sexual Revolution introduced a liberal ethic of "Free Love", which effectively removed the social constraints on top men and the women who find them desirable.

It's like Joe2 wrote.

> "I believe constraints on all women were gone which, at least initially, resulted in greater participation. Not because women redefined what they perceived to be the "top males", and not simply because they could participate."

Yes. The reality is NOT that women could now participate. It is because they always wanted to participate and now no longer face the stigma for doing so. Over time, hypergamy did its thing and now we are living in a Pareto reality of 20% of men getting 80% of women's sexual attention.

In that sense, the sexual revolution is like alcohol. Alcohol does not change people. It disables inhibiting brain circuitry so that what is really inside comes out. The sexual revolution made women's base desires socially acceptable so now we get to see the unfiltered versions.

Human nature is amazingly reliable.

All Obstacles are Relocated or Removed

> "Perhaps their participation was due to Fear Of Missing Out [FOMO] or herd mentality. And there was no shortage of willing men. It was rather easy for the average guy to get some pu$$y back then."

Relatively easier, certainly. "Free love" was more free when it was novel and risqué, ironically. But what I think is a bigger driver of female promiscuity since the Sexual Revolution is that women really want sex — provided their attraction filters are satisfied — but once they are, watch out!

Women are very much interested in sex, but their source of arousal is different. As Rock mentioned, herd mentality has a bit to do with the matter, but I believe it is less FOMO and more the lack of judgment from the herd.

As Jack pointed out recently, female peer groups have replaced the role of Father / Husband, and thus, $1ut shaming is no longer based on the relative differences in women's $1uttery. Now it's about controlling the herd. The $1ut shaming we see today is from bitterly envious harridans who can no longer $1ut as easily as their cohorts who are "younger, hotter, tighter, and free".

Hence why women focus on building consensus. When women want to take down other women they'll resort to the classic $!ut shaming tactic. But when women get messages like FOMO, YOLO, and $1ut Faming instead of judgment and shame, then they're off on a race to the bottom — literally.

Human nature is amazingly reliable.

Ab0rt!0n "Rights"

Ab0rt!0n is another product of the Sexual Revolution that has irreparably changed Western culture. I wrote about this before in Moral Hazard is Collateral Damage (2022/3/14).

After having access to legalized ab0rt!0n since 1973, it has become ingrained in modern women's unconsciousness that ab0rt!0n needs to be legal and available, simply because women now take sexual license for granted, and having to bear the consequences of their sexual proclivities is unacceptable, and even religious women feel this way.

Now, everyone in our society wants to have consequence-free sex with whomever they want, however, whenever, and wherever they want, as NovaSeeker wrote. Even !ncels support such a proposition.

Conservatism's attempts to regulate and/or ban ab0rt!0n is now a lost cause, as modern women, even nominal 'Christian' women, will never vote against it.

Human nature is amazingly reliable.

Epilogue

As you can see, the effect of the Sexual Revolution was to remove all the previous constraints on sexual morality, thereby permitting the fleshly nature to run wild. The various developments that upended those constraints are what Red Pillers now call The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse. As these constraints fell one by one over the subsequent decades, all sorts of sexual immoralities have grown to become the norm. Interestingly, even the old forms of sexual immorality that were common in that bygone age have been displaced and superceded by new and improved avenues of lechery, as Rock described here.

> "So-called "gentlemen's clubs" feared going out of business because why would an average guy pay to see some half-naked woman dance when he could get some pu$$y without much effort? And many "gentlemen's clubs" did go out of business despite the fact there was an ample supply of desirable women willing to entertain men."
>
> "The pendulum has now swung back making it difficult or near impossible for the average guy, and "gentlemen's clubs" can't get desirable women, so the average guy is left with P0rn, etc."

Yes. Those of us living today have the bitter 'privilege' of witnessing firsthand the consequences of violating millenium old Biblical regulations on sexual morality. SMH.

Human nature is amazingly reliable.

Related

- The Power Moves: A Billion Wicked Thoughts: Summary & Review (2021/7/23) [Archive]
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Incentives for Bimbofication (2021/8/23)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): How Feminism Erodes Marriage (2021/11/8)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Turnings Applied to the State of Marriage (2023/12/11)

The Importance of Family and Community — Part II : Vetting

Jack · 25 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The important role of others in finding, building, and maintaining a good marital relationship / family / community.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Community
Author's Note: This post is a summary of an email exchange between Red Pill Apostle, Thedeti, Oscar, Caterpillar345, and Jack on 2023/8/29. Coauthored with Oscar.
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Intro

In our review of IOIs and Vetting back in September and October of 2023, it became apparent that the involvement of family and community (Part I) is an important part of marriage and the process of choosing a mate. The only way vetting can reliably work is if there is a small community of caring individuals involved. Ideally, the two families will have known each other for years, farts, warts, quirks, and all. In the past, Christians often met one another through church or a tight Christian community, but this is not very common anymore.

So let's examine a few aspects of culture, community, and family in view of how women's behavior in the mating dance is affected.

The Atomized MMP

The way dating in general, including Christian dating works these days is that a couple meets on their own, perhaps at a school function, or through a group of friends, or by going away to college, or (increasingly) online… but NEVER through family. These couples purposefully avoid social scrutiny, and become privatized rather quickly. As a result, young couples have no guidance or oversight that would encourage them to have a serious mindset about their relationship. Science geeks might draw an analogy to "negative phototropism" — when budding organisms grow away from light. This context breeds fornication and relationships that invariably turn out to be short-term. Couples hardly ever meet each other's families until she's at the point where she's ready to "settle down" (usually after a long ride) and he's already heavily invested in her. Furthermore, her family will be on their best behavior when she brings him home. Good luck convincing him to heed the red flags then, if he can even see them.

The Influence of Feminist Churchianity

Western culture treats boys like they're defective girls, and men like they're defective women. In the church, young women are considered to be Proverbs 31 Princesses, and adults think that girls are just better people than boys are. Current evangelical church theology assumes that women just develop better character on their own, and are better at it than boys. Women's solitary weakness is assumed to be "a Lack of Self-Esteem".*

Dalrock pointed out that one of the main reasons women DON'T develop moral character is because parents do not think they need to teach such things to girls.

Nowadays, thanks to Dalrock et al., we recognize all this as classic gynocentrism.

If you know the woman in question grew up in this kind of church environment, then you can expect her to behave like a bridled and muzzled feminist. Worse, certain traits harmful to marriage longevity, such as entitlement and hypoagency, are fully encouraged as virtues using false interpretations of scripture. That's an automatic Red Flag in vetting, no matter how well she knows the Bible.

The Importance of Family Life and Upbringing

Fathers play a major role in helping their daughters work on character development.

Thus, marital success is strongly predicted by whether a girl is on good terms with her father, a proxy for God Himself. Likewise, this characteristic is also a very important qualifier for her worthiness of marriage.

In terms of vetting, given the relative importance of interpreting IOIs within the proper context of the woman's character and history, the first observation a man should make of a woman who is displaying IOIs is to observe the girl's relationship with her father, and watch how both her and her mother interact with her father. What he sees going on in her own family dynamics is what the man is in for if he marries her. Even if she does have decent character, if she has a mercenary mother, then rest assured, there are some latent nasties just waiting for the ripe conditions of marriage to emerge.

A man who is already married to it might be able to change these patterns, but not without years of diligent hard work, vigilant prayer, and faith in the grace of God. NOT recommended. Paging Red Pill Apostle and Thedeti.

 Jack's take on women's "lack of self-esteem" is picked apart in No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29).*

The Importance of a Moral Community

This article from Aaron Renn speaks of the influence that a moral community can have.

> "Even without a tipping point, moral communities can still be powerful. The Quakers are a Christian example I've mentioned before. In 19th century England, which was the land of shady dealers and "caveat emptor", people sought out Quakers to do business with because they were known to be trustworthy. They didn't lie, steal, or sell products they knew were dodgy. They were, as one person put it, a "moral mafia."

> But for the minority rule to even plausibly come into play, that requires that you actually have a unified minority that functions as a moral community."
>
> Aaron Renn: The End of Moral Standards (2023/9/28)

Early 20th century Quakers.

Oscar has stated that he is a member of such a community, saying,

> "We already have that where I live. Don't think that means everyone will love you. The World will hate you, just as it hates Christ, and as your community becomes more effective, they'll hate you more.
>
> Regardless, this is how we win, through simple Christian living and obedience to God."

On what men can do to achieve this, Catacomb Resident wrote,

> "You cannot extend your covenant covering over anyone outside your tribe who does not at least temporarily submit to your authority from God."
>
> "You cannot bless anyone who does not submit to your personal dominion in terms of the covenant law code."
>
> "You should learn to reject all the manipulative pleas for charity that do not assume a priori your feudal authority in the Lord. The sense of false guilt is a lie from Hell. Random Americans have no claim on you, much less foreigners. The only question is what response will most clearly glorify the Lord, given that they have no clue about covenants. The point is that you should learn to discount any false sense of moral obligation. There is none outside the Covenant."
>
> Catacomb Resident: Peace Not Possible (2023/9/29)

Vetting is Inadequate if it doesn't Consider the Outliers

So far, these observations lend support to Oscar's Female Virtue Theory, namely that women need to make some progress in developing character before men can take them seriously.

However, a couple of case studies* have shown that just because a man is pursuing his purpose and is on top of his Game, or just because the woman is displaying strong consistent IOIs to him, or even just because the woman is a true virgin, none of this guarantees a successful LTR / marriage. Of course, it is much more likely to happen, especially if all three of these conditions are present. Still, there's always that small pesky possibility that hard hitters could bunt or swing south on the next inning — and those odd outliers are exactly what we need to be careful of in vetting.

And then there's the occasional odd situation in which a Blue Pilled man strikes cold gold in the way of a wife, thinking all is peachy keen, and then, women's base nature and the eviscerating conditions of marriage lead him to take the Red Pill.

 E.g., Soup Sandwich's first marriage, and Adriana Lima.*
 E.g., Red Pill Apostle's marriage.*

Adriana Lima married young as a virgin, and then left her husband for fame, fortune, and fast times.

Conclusions

We don't have a Patriarchal social structure, but this doesn't mean all hope is lost. The only way out of this mess is to resurrect a culture that is truly Christian, even if it is only a small local one within our church or community. The reason is because, in spite of laws and technology, and as independent as women like to think themselves to be, they are still herd creatures who need a home, hearth, and family. They are still dependent on government, society, and men. Thus, they will only observe sexual morality when it is taught, enforced, and policed by the herd, especially other women in the herd. They won't do it because men prefer it, or because of moral scruples, or because it is the right thing to do. The only chance that they might do it is if they're shamed by other women for NOT doing it.

The only way vetting can reliably work for single men seeking a spouse is if they pay attention to the larger picture — her family and the interactive nature of their relationship. There has to be is a small community of caring, invested individuals involved. Ideally, the two families will have known each other for years, farts, warts, quirks, and all.

The only place all this can happen is in a tight Christian community. If you don't have one, then find one, or else find some like-minded Christian men and form one.

The Anabaptists did it. The Quakers did it. The Amish are still doing it. We can do it again.

Related

- Radix Fidem: Foundation of a Covenant Community of Faith (2019/3/2)
- Radix Fidem: Radix Fidem Curriculum: Community (2019/6/5)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Radix Fidem: Protocol for Building a Covenant Community, Part 1 (2021/9/7)
- Aaron Renn: Newsletter #58: Loyalty Is the Coin of the Realm (2021/11/15)

- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual/Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The more things change, the more they stay the same. (2022/2/28)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community (2023/10/29)
- Catacomb Resident: Triad of Community Building (2023/11/26)
- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Selecting Markets for better Market Selection (2024/2/9)
- Catacomb Resident: Family Search (2024/7/5)

Related

- Σ Frame: Commonalities of Successful Marriages (2021/4/14)
- Σ Frame: Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT “Found” by Chance (2023/10/9)

The Importance of Family and Community — Part III : Patriarchal Mate Selection

Oscar · 26 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

How A Patriarchal social structure helps in finding a mate.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Young single Christian men
Theme: Transactions
Author's Note: Coauthored with Jack.
Length: 2,300 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes

Intro

In Jumping through Hoops (2024/8/30), Jack described how a Patriarchal social structure works in helping young people meet and move towards marriage. In this post, I'll add some of my own insights, based off some previous comments (links provided in the initial words).

On Making an Impression

As Jack pointed out, the key is to build a good reputation with the men in the community. That means that what you want to do is to make yourself useful and helpful to other men. Be the guy who always shows up before church to set up chairs. Be the guy who mows the elderly widow's lawn. Be the guy who volunteers to help a family move to a new house. Being willing to serve demonstrates good character traits, like humility and conscientiousness. Fathers look for those traits in potential prospects for their daughters. Additionally, men get to know each other best through activities and projects, not sitting around talking (that's what women do). You'll make friends with men of different ages. Some will be old guys with daughters (like me). Some will be younger married men with wives who have single friends, sisters, cousins, etc. Some will be young men who have single sisters.

In short, your goal is to earn the respect of the men of the church, NOT to impress the women. The men are elders, fathers, husbands, brothers, cousins, friends, etc. to single young women. Don't underestimate the importance of making friends with guys who have single sisters. (See Case Study below.) If the men respect you, then the single young women who love and respect those men will be attracted to you. That's the kind of girl you want, anyway. Girls who are untethered and unprotected are much more likely to make the kinds of decisions that makes choosing them for marriage risky.

Case Study 1 — Meeting Girls through Relatives (Oscar)

My sister married my best friend from high school. In fact, most of my high school friends married each other's sisters. They're all still married. Remember that women who have a good relationship with their fathers and brothers tend to like and respect men in general. To be clear, there was no patriarchal "system" for anyone to follow in the small Pacific Northwestern town where I attended high school. This was 30 years ago. There was still enough residual Christian patriarchy in the culture that sometimes things just worked like they should – almost by accident. But that wasn't always the case.

Case Study 2 — Meeting Girls through Relatives (Jack)

Jack had a bad experience with this set up. His best friend in high school dated two of his cousins and tried to date his sister. These relationships ended after a time, and his friend never wanted to speak about it with him. This created an awkwardness that set Jack and his friend at odds for several years. Jack believes it didn't 'work out' because it didn't happen in a patriarchal community. That is, Jack's friend used Jack to meet his eligible relatives, but he didn't go through Jack. He just used Jack to meet his female relatives. There was no openness or accountability that would induce Jack's friend and his cousins to take themselves more seriously.

On Acceptance

So, what does a young man need to do/be to be accepted? I'm speaking here as a Christian father with both sons and daughters. This is a non-exhaustive list of what I'm teaching my boys and will expect for my daughters.

Godliness: This is not negotiable. I've invested years of my life raising up my children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord (Eph. 6:4). I didn't do that to hand my daughters over to pagans. Besides, I want my grandchildren to be raised in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. That being said, Godliness can be inexperienced, like the young man in the case study below. If that's the case, a father wants to see…

Teachability / Humility: Ideally, a father-in-law should be a mentor to his son-in-law, but that doesn't always work, and that's fine. If a young man lacks Biblical knowledge, but he's willing to be mentored by a church elder, that's a great sign.

Diligence: A father wants to know that his son-in-law will provide for his daughter and grandchildren. To avoid sexual immorality, patriarchal Christian communities encourage marrying young. A man in his early 20s won't have a six-figure salary, but he should have a clear path to a viable career, and the work ethic to climb the ladder. That may mean college, or trade school, or entrepreneurship. Where I live that may mean running the family farm. Whatever it is, the young man needs to show the father that he will be able to provide for his daughter and grandchildren.

Strength / Aggression: A father wants to know that his son-in-law will protect his daughter and grandchildren. That doesn't mean that the young man needs to be John Wick (I'm certainly not), but strength, conditioning, and the ability to give and take physical punishment are important, especially as our culture becomes less civilized.

As an example, my church and its sister churches run a rugby club for boys from 8-years-old to college-age. The games are huge family events with all kinds of food and drinks on the sidelines, and they're total (wholesome) meat markets. Parents show up to cheer their sons, and sisters show up to scope out their brothers' teammates…. and cheer their brothers. My 8-year-old, 12-year-old, and 14-year-old boys play rugby. At the last game, while the younger boys played their games, my 14-year-old boy spent his whole time waiting for his game talking to a girl who was there to watch her brothers play. Obviously, they're too young to court, but this is how things start.

Leadership: A father wants to know that his son-in-law will effectively lead his daughter and grandchildren. It breaks my heard that I can no longer recommend the US military as a good place to learn to lead, but there are many other places – sports, church, work, school, etc. This is another place where mentorship is important. Most of us aren't natural leaders. I'm not. Being groomed for leadership by men already in leadership is crucial for the average guy. A young man should seek out these mentorships/apprenticeships.

Likeability / Social Skills: A father wants to spend a lot of time with his grandchildren, and that means spending a lot of time with his son-in-law. It's best for everyone involved if everyone enjoys each other's company. Besides, social skills are crucial for climbing the career ladder and thus being a good provider.

I could have listed a lot of moral character traits, but they're all covered under "Godliness" (see the Fruit of the Spirit). Keep in mind that as the girl's parents are interviewing you for the job of husband / father / son-in-law, you're interviewing them for the job of grandparents / in-laws. You're not just marrying the girl, you're marrying into her family. For better or worse, your in-laws will have a lot of influence over your children. If you can't stand her family, that's a problem. Some fathers are overbearing, overly critical, have unrealistic expectations, or have trouble letting princess go. You don't want to be stuck with that for life.

Case Study on Acceptance (Oscar)

A few months after we moved to our present home, my wife and I attended a newcomers' welcome event at our church. We met a young man (early 20s) who'd moved here by himself from the East Coast. He had a rough, secular upbringing and became a Christian at 18. He couldn't find a good church where he lived, heard about ours, and on a Saturday took a one-way flight here with $100 in his pocket. On Sunday morning, he showed up at church and told one of the elders his story. The elders found him a room to rent and a job with one of the entrepreneurs at church. That's faith!

When my wife and I met the young man, he told us that he wasn't sure how long he was going to stick around. My wife told me later, "Yeah right. He'll be engaged by the end of the year." Mrs. O was right. He's now married.

On Rejection

Rejection always feels like a pure negative, but that's not the case. First of all, it's a learning opportunity. Did the suitor do something wrong, or fail to do something as the young man below did? Or did the parents expect too much from a man who hasn't lived long enough to have the attributes they were looking for?

Ideally, the young man's father should have prepared him for this process ahead of time, and should guide him as he goes through it, but that doesn't always happen (see below). Maybe the young man doesn't have a father, or maybe his father happens to be weak in this area. That's an opportunity for the young man to seek out mentorship.

The biggest negative of rejection is the possibility that other girls and their families will write off the young man simply because he was rejected before. That's more of a problem in a smaller community. It shouldn't happen, but people can be petty, and Christian faith doesn't make them immune to pettiness. I wish it did, but experience says otherwise.

Fortunately, rejection is rarely the end of the world.

Case Study 1 on Rejection (Jack)

Jack had a close relationship with his pastor's son and daughter while he was an adolescent. He talked freely to everyone at church saying he was going to marry his daughter. (Was it true love or adolescent naivete?) No one ever discouraged him or challenged him on this idea. Her father, Jack's pastor, often met Jack for coffee or lunch, and called him his friend despite their age difference. Her grandparents accepted the idea and they often invited Jack to their family events. Her grandparents really loved Jack a lot. Jack had no reason to think he wouldn't marry this girl.

Jack and his pastor's son went to the same college and continued to be friends. A few years later while Jack was in college, he felt it was the right time to start a formal courtship with her. So he went to lunch with her father and told him, "Now is the time. I want to start dating [your daughter] with the intentions of marriage." But her father soundly rejected the idea, saying that she was too young. (She was 16.) Jack was heartbroken and angry. He didn't want any other girl except her, because they grew up together. But he respected her father's decision.

After that, her father kept Jack at a distance from their family. His son, Jack's friend, also stopped contacting him.

But just within a few months, she started dating another guy and married him as soon as she graduated from high school, which was just a couple years later. Jack was heartbroken all over again. She gave birth to 3 children by the time she was 22.

Case Study 2 on Rejection (Oscar)

Unfortunately, I know a family whose son experienced rejection. He was 17 at the time, and the girl was 18. The boy asked the father to court his daughter, and the father gave him an unemphatic "no". The boy had just finished homeschooling and earned a GED, and didn't have a real plan for a career (no kidding, he was 17). The boy and girl met at a homeschool co-op. The girl was ga-ga over the boy. This is what I mean when I say that it's a lot harder to impress a girl's father than it is to impress a foolish young woman. If the girl's father hadn't been involved, the young couple would've been off to the races. If they attended a typical American church, they'd have been humping in the boy's pickup.

I'm looking at this from the perspective of a father who's going to be on both sides of this equation soon, and from that perspective, I blame the boy's father. He should've taught his son that he needed to have a clear path to a career that can realistically support a family before asking a father to court his daughter. I wouldn't worry too much about the boy, though. He got a job at a local construction company with a good reputation. He's probably getting good mentorship there, and there is room for growth and promotion, so he should be fine in a few years.

Conclusions

These days, as the vestiges of Christian patriarchy fade away from the culture — and even the church — parents and prospective spouses need to be much more deliberate. If a guy isn't willing to go through a girl's father to court and eventually marry her, that's a problem. Likewise, if a girl is willing to circumvent her father to date a guy, that's a problem. She may be for recreational purposes only, and if you're a Christian man, you shouldn't be seeking out that kind of recreation.

Patriarchal communities protect their women, but in a civilized culture (I agree that we're becoming more uncivilized), the community doesn't need to protect their women from men all that much. The community mostly protects young women from their own foolishness. Remember, a young woman is endowed (heh!) with a fortune (in the form of youth and beauty) she's not prepared to manage. An attractive 18-yar-old girl is like your average 18-year-old boy with a million dollars. There's little doubt in my mind that I would've destroyed myself if someone had just handed me a million dollars when I was 18. We shouldn't be surprised when foolish young women untethered to and unprotected by a community destroy themselves. It's a miracle that it doesn't happen more often.

Related

- Σ Frame: Patriarchy is the Default Context (2021/6/2)
- Σ Frame: Headship Authority Takes Work (2022/8/12)
- Σ Frame: The Challenges of Moving Towards Headship (2023/4/5)
- Σ Frame: The Battle for Headship begins on the Home Turf (2023/4/7)
- Σ Frame: Vetting Social Systems (2023/10/9)
- Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority (2024/1/10)
- Σ Frame: 20 Ways to Honor Your Father (2024/6/16)
- Crisis Magazine: Mansplaining Ephesians (2024/8/27)

Women are the Gatekeepers of Sex : A Red Pill Truth, but is it Biblical?

Jack · 27 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Not if fatherly supervision, limited choice, and chastity are present.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Transactions
Author's Note: This post celebrates the 7th anniversary of Σ Frame on WordPress.
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Intro

Red Pill truths are important as they state what is true about our present-day society, but Biblical truth shows us God's original purpose and wisdom.

When we focus too much on the ills of society, we lose sight of the fact that, as Christians, we have the option to focus on God's original purposes.

- The purpose of salvation is for our sanctification — to become like Christ.
- God has a unique, individual purpose for each man.

To be able to live these realities out in our lives, we need to read the Bible from the lens of what was the original purpose. Only then can we try to find solutions to get back to what God intended for us — a relationship with Him; becoming Holy like Him, making disciples, etc.

It is tempting for those who read Red Pill literature to interpret the Bible from a Red Pill lens. However, the opposite is a better paradigm to adhere to for Christians. We need to read Red Pill truths from the Biblical lens.

In this post, I'll hone in on one particular long-held, widely accepted, Manosphere Axiom, that "Men are the Gatekeepers of Commitment" and "Women are the Gatekeepers of Sex".

It needs to be said that this is a Red Pill truth that accurately describes the nature of relationships in our modern-day secular society, but it muddies Biblical truth. To illustrate why this is, I'll explore the converse postulates.

Men are the Gatekeepers of Sex?

In the current SMP, we have the situation in which a small number of high SMV men are laying a significantly larger number of women in an arrangement that Red Pillers call 'spinning plates' or keeping a 'soft harem'. It is estimated (according to the Pareto principle) that 20% of men are banging 80% of the women.

Women have a strong, natural desire to bed down with these men, and many women have said that they cannot control themselves in the presence of high T pheromones. IOW, they suffer from an impaired moral / sexual agency. If/when this is true, then the decision to have sex rests more upon the men. Although Men who are suffering through a dry spell will take almost anything they can get, Men who are already bedding 5 women can easily say "No" to one more, but they usually won't simply because there are no incentives to restrain themselves.

We've looked at a few aspects in which secular men are more godly than Christian men. Here too, a high SMV man who says "NO" to women begging him for sex also fits the Biblical template of masculinity (e.g. Joseph's response to Potiphar's wife, and David's failure with Bathsheba). (As an aside, low SMV men who can resist lust, p0rn, OASIS, etc. are also following a Biblical template.)

Furthermore, some recent posts have examined how fathers play a key role in deciding who their daughters marry in a Patriarchal system. In this same system, it is also assumed that commitment is mutually agreed on by all involved, and sex is confined to marriage. Therefore, in this situation, men (i.e. fathers) are also the gatekeepers of sex.

Women are the Gatekeepers of Commitment?

Over the last couple years, the Christian Red Pill has come to the conclusion that the onus is on women to abide by the requirements of the covenant in the context of marriage. Men cannot force them to be chaste, godly, respectful, and submissive. They must choose to do so on their own initiative.

To repeat some factoids and statistics we already know…

- 80% of divorces are initiated by women.
- ~30-50% of marriages end in divorce, depending on locale.
- Women are easily seduced by their own fantasies in their selection of a mate.
- Women are more loyal to their female peer groups than they are to father or husband.
- Women's preferred mating strategy is serial monogamy (i.e. the Carousel) which more often than not culminates into the AF/BB strategy.

In sum, the success of a marriage largely depends on the woman's willingness to stick with it. IOW, she must be committed, and that is entirely up to her. But they usually won't be simply because there are no incentives to stay loyal and plenty of incentives to slore and screw around.

The Christian Manosphere has concluded that there is not much difference between Christian women and non-Christian women. However, a woman who sticks with one man (father or husband) and says "NO" to all the others, including sexually, fits the Biblical pattern of femininity.

Conclusions

The Red Pill Axiom, "Men are the Gatekeepers of Commitment" and "Women are the Gatekeepers of Sex" is an accurate description of a gynocentric / inverted mating structure.

However, "Men are the Gatekeepers of Sex" and "Women are the Gatekeepers of Commitment" better describes a Biblical / Patriarchal structure.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Is Patriarchy for Deplorables? (2021/5/31)
- Σ Frame: Patriarchy is the Default Context (2021/6/2)
- Σ Frame: Dolearchy Trumps Patriarchy (2021/6/4)
- Σ Frame: No Virtue Exists Without Masculine Incentives (2024/6/28)
- Adam Piggott: Only Societies that Treat Women as Property Survive (2024/8/28)
- Adam Piggott: Good People who Live in Evil Societies (2024/8/31)
- Adam Piggott: When Men Lead, Women will Follow (2024/9/18)
- Catacomb Resident: Another Law versus Faith Story (2024/9/18)

Social Transactions : Summary

Jack · 30 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Understanding the Hive's Social Behaviors.

Readership: All
Theme: Transactions
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

List of Posts

The following posts appeared in this month's theme.

1. Σ Frame: The Stronghold of the Beta Factory (2024/9/2)
2. Σ Frame: Spigots and Sponges (2024/9/3)
3. Σ Frame: Why are women attracted specifically to men who won't commit? (2024/9/4)
4. Σ Frame: Studless in Seattle : Competition in a Corrupted Shrinking Market (2024/9/5)
5. Σ Frame: Female Competition : Consumerism (2024/9/6)
6. Σ Frame: Herd Behavior : Cosmetics (2024/9/9)
7. Σ Frame: Herd Behavior : Apparel (2024/9/10)
8. Σ Frame: The Compliance Test (2024/9/11)
9. Σ Frame: The Wheel Model : How Female Social Groups Function (2024/9/12)
10. Σ Frame: Female Solipsism : Misplaced Loyalties (2024/9/13)
11. Σ Frame: The Sundress Gate (2024/9/16)
12. Σ Frame: Are Queen Bees Able to be Moral Agents? (2024/9/17)
13. Σ Frame: Meanwhile, in a Parallel Dimension of Time and Space… (2024/9/18)
14. Σ Frame: Taking care of women who don't want to be taken care of (2024/9/19)
15. Σ Frame: Chasing after a Deceptive Fantasy (2024/9/20)
16. Σ Frame (Jack, Red Pill Apostle): The Parable of the Seeds : Red Pill Edition (2024/9/23)
17. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle, Jack): The Effects of the Sexual Revolution on Female Sexuality (2024/9/24)
18. Σ Frame (Jack, Oscar, Red Pill Apostle, Thedeti, Caterpillar345): The Importance of Family and Community — Part II : Vetting (2024/9/25)
19. Σ Frame (Oscar, Jack): The Importance of Family and Community — Part III : Patriarchal Mate Selection (2024/9/26)
20. Σ Frame: Women are the Gatekeepers of Sex : A Red Pill Truth, but is it Biblical? (2024/9/27)

This month yielded one new model, The Wheel Model : How Female Social Groups Function (2024/9/12), two new analogies / parables, Spigots and Sponges (2024/9/3) and The Parable of the Seeds (2024/9/23), and one new vetting tactic, The Compliance Test (2024/9/11).

Summary

An outline of the major points raised in this theme are as follows.

The Sexual Revolution effectively removed the sociosexual constraints on top men and the women who find them desirable. Judgment, s1ut shaming, standards for modesty in clothing and makeup, etc. are instances of such social constraints. This is in addition to the removal of multiple legal and technological constraints, i.e. The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse.

With the absence of Biblical / Patriarchal authority shaping social structures, women now look to other women and groups of other women for guidance. Thus, Herd conformity is significantly more important than honoring elders and parents, or doing what is good for one's family / tribe.

Because women now have greater loyalty to other women than to fathers, husbands, and family, several aspects of the feminine nature, including clothing, cosmetics, and solipsism, become a supercharged expression of in-group identity, in-group loyalty, and maintaining secrecy from out-groupers, including men.

Now, women follow other women, and without men guiding them, they are on their own — 'Independent' as they like to call themselves.

Best frenemies forever.
Without pressure to submit to a man, or even stick with one man, women prioritize cavorting with only top SMV men and will even have children by them, with or without commitment. Consequently, these men are further motivated to continue playing the field and NOT commit. In turn, this puts more social pressure on women to compete, survive, and thrive.

Women are thus facing a complex and frustrating irony: They must conform to their competition while at the same time being self-sufficient.

Many of the old social constraints are being coopted to serve the interests of female groups. For example, s1ut shaming used to be implemented to enforce moral boundaries, but now it is used to control other women. Sundresses used to display nubile femininity to draw the attention of HVM, but now they're used to compete against other women for HVM.

Women do not check each other's unrealistic fantasies, but rather encourage them, sometimes with competitive or nefarious motives.

People, including Red Pillers, are prone to view the world through a Worldly / Red Pill lens, instead of a Biblical / Christian one, respectively.

All these changes tend to encourage sexual promiscuity and intrasexual competition.

Next month's theme will be a cache dump of several unsavory aspects of culture, society, and the SMP, which I'll call "Gunk".

Related

- The Sanctuary: Ladies, beware of herd mentality (2012/1/5)
- The Rational Male: Past Indiscretions (2018/10/23)
- Σ Frame: The Future of Intersexual Relationships is Transactional (2021/3/12)
- Σ Frame: The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse (2023/12/9)
- Stage in the Sky: Should Christians Shut Up Because They're Sinners Too? (2023/12/23)

- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)
- Σ Game: Overrated and Out of Context (2024/10/4)
- Σ Game: Target-Rich Environment (2024/11/17)

October

Jack · 1 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

This month's theme will be a cache dump of several unsavory aspects of culture, society, and the SMP, which I'll call "Gunk".

With all the wars, escalation of violence, and political unrest around the world coinciding with the month of October, I am reminded of this classic from my youth.

October and the trees are stripped bare
Of all they wear.
What do I care?

October and kingdoms rise
And kingdoms fall
But you go on
And on.

Originally released on 1981/10/20.

More information.

Sleeper Cell Explosion

Oscar · 2 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

It could happen at any time.

Readership: All
Theme: Gunk
Length: 400 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes
Warning: V!olent content ahead.

The following video is real footage from the October 7th attacks in Israel. It's extremely graphic. Watch at your own discretion.

> ⚠WARNING: EXTREMELY GRAPHIC AND UPSETTING CONTENT ⚠
>
> Here is the video. However difficult this will be for some to watch, I encourage you to watch all of it. Then imagine you had to live through it. We did.
>
> This is what the protesters march in support of. This is what the… https://t.co/SCUHzME2ss pic.twitter.com/0xm4v0eCQs
>
> — Cheryl E ⚠⚠⚠⚠⚠⚠⚠⚠ (@CherylWroteIt) August 21, 2024

Two things came to mind when I watched the video.

1. It's really easy to condemn the "Find Out" phase when you ignore the "F__k Around" phase.
2. We're likely to see something similar in the USA.

According to the House Judiciary Committee, the U.S. Border Patrol encountered 250 illegal aliens who were on the tərr0r watch list over a two-year stretch, and released at least 90 of them into the USA. How many did the U.S. Border Patrol NOT encounter? How many entered the USA who are NOT on the tərr0r watch list, but would very much like to be? How many Musl!ms who immigrated legally to the USA, or were born in the USA would join in?

> At International Al-Quds Day Rally in Dearborn, Michigan Protesters Chant "Death to America!"; Speakers at the Rally: America Is One of the "Rottenest Countries" on Earth; Israel Is ISIS, Nazis, a Cancer pic.twitter.com/B6hMlaKfi5
>
> — MEMRI (@MEMRIReports) April 7, 2024

How many American liberals would join in?

> Protesters in Chicago chant "Long live the intifada" and "Out of your house, out of your home, we'll bring the war home." pic.twitter.com/H4FXyrj5L8
>
> — The Post Millennial (@TPostMillennial) August 19, 2024

Let's look at the best case scenario. Let's suppose that each of the 90 Musl!m tərr0rists the Biden / Harris administration released into the U.S.A. is a team leader for a 4-man sleeper cell whose mission it is to attack a soft target packed with unarmed civilians — a mall, an airport terminal, an elementary school, etc. The 4-man cell that attacked the Crocus City Hall in Russia mŭrdərəd 130 unarmed civilians. Assuming similar and proportional results, that's 11,700 de@d Americans.

And that's the best case scenario!

There are an estimated 2.15 million adult Musl!ms in the USA. About half of those are men, so let's call it 1 million adult Musl!m men. If only 1% of them agree with the "de@th to America" crowd, that's 10,000 potential tərr0r!sts. That's 2,500 potential 4-man cells. Using the same math, that translates to 325,000 casualties in a domestic undeclared war.

Gentlemen, keep your hatchet sharp and your powder dry.

Related

- Σ Frame (Oscar): Tactical Preparation (2024/3/24)
- Lew Rockwell: Revisionist Zionists Dare the U.S. To Pull the Plug on Their Nakba Agenda (2024/8/20)
- Radix Fidem: Your Next Move (2024/8/16)
- Radix Fidem: Interesting Times (2024/8/20)
- Radix Fidem: Mission for the Apocalypse (2024/8/23)
- Catacomb Resident: It's Still "Unto the Shedding of Blood" (2024/9/29)

Authority vs Responsibility

Jack · 3 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

No authority? No responsibility!

Readership: All
Theme: Gunk
Reader's Note: The images depict a 1967 Chevrolet truck. Following the essay, the trucks illustrate how we might instantiate our purpose in life.
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

Under a previous post, Women are the Gatekeepers of Sex : A Red Pill Truth, but is it Biblical? (2024/9/27), Jax told us how he dealt with a lackluster response from a girl he met. My impression is that she stonewalled him for reasons she's not willing to disclose, but there could be another explanation. Jax called her out on the B$, but it did not affect her. Some commenters thought Jax's response made him appear butthurt over her apparent rejection.

I won't speculate about Jax's approach or the girl's intentions or motivations here, but I will address one point of confusion that came up in the comments. It is a common error that needs to be made clear.

What is the Most Appropriate Response?

AngloSaxon said,

> "Of course we need to call women out on their garbage decisions. Who cares if this comes across as 'butthurt'? Women need to be rebuked for how they behave. And why are you using such juvenile nonsense as 'butthurt' to express yourself anyway? Do we really think that men have to wait until gurlz 'respect' them before they get to do anything? You will be waiting a long time if you think that way…"

In general, this is a good attitude. However, the Christian Manosphere has had a long discussion of this issue (see posts under Related) and has concluded that there are some necessary conditions to consider, depending on the context.

DeepStrength answered,

> “There’s zero point to doing this, and in fact, it’s probably a negative. Women generally only take correction from men they respect. Not only does it fly right past her as Jack said, it only really confirms that her choice of action of being into school, feminism, eschewing dating, and whatever was right because it comes off as being butt hurt.”

AngloSaxon responded,

> “I completely disagree with Deep Dumb here. Someone needs to tell these girlies that their decisions are bad and they are to go find husbands. That should be coming from daddy + Mr. Preacher but often isn’t the case. Who cares about all that game garbage? Just tell these chicks what’s right.”

AngloSaxon added,

> “Don’t all Christian men have a degree of responsibility to Christian women? We’re brothers and sisters in Christ.”

Responsibilities

AngloSaxon poses a pertinent question. What are we responsible for?

We are responsible for our fellow human according to The Law of Responsibility — We have agency and freedom of will, and thus we are responsible for how we influence others. But we must also remember The Law of Power — We cannot change other people directly, but we do have the power to change our own selves which can often change other people indirectly — and The Law of Respect — We cannot violate the free will of others. We must be proactive in exercising self-control and respecting the boundaries of others.

There is also the practical reality of whether one has any genuine spiritual authority over the person. That is to say in very practical terms, will your words and actions have a beneficial impact, or will they be scorned and dismissed? It's the "Do not throw your pearls to swine" idea, because doing so would be irresponsible.

We must also beware of adhering to the general principle of secular altruistic idealism in which one's actions are indiscriminate of the beneficiary. This is also the basis of Chivalry, which is Feminist, NOT Christian. Most Western men have been erroneously taught that this is what it means to be a moral Christian man, and they've been trained to do this on autopilot, so they need to be made aware of it. In the Biblical view, moral actions should be primarily directed toward one's own dependents, family, tribe, etc. It is foolish to help strangers without any sense of evangelism, moral purpose, or responsibility, or without any interest in integrating that person into one's family / tribe / domain of authority.

All this boils down to one simple question: How far are you able and/or willing to go to make sure she gets it right and to see to her needs? If you really understand what all that involves, you won't be saying things like "ALL Christian men have a responsibility to Christian women". Although this is a general truism, it is more precise to say that Christian men have a responsibility to women with whom they have a covenant or contractual relationship with, i.e. wives, daughters, relatives, those in their church, employees, and maybe a few others who happen to submit to your authority. The others need to first decide whether they're willing to submit to a man's patriarchal authority in order to avail of the benefits thereof, such as being corrected. And yes, contrary to what feminists screech, being corrected and 'covered' by a man is a benefit for their souls.

Conclusions

It is only at this point that we can properly address this kind of situation with a full awareness of our own responsibility in the matter coupled with a realistic expectation of the outcome.

For those women who are within your domain of authority, AngloSaxon's view is correct.

> "Someone needs to tell these girlies that their decisions are bad and they are to go find husbands. […] Just tell these chicks what's right."

But for the grand majority of women, i.e. those who do not recognize you as an authority in her life, it is as DeepStrength said…

> "There's zero point to doing this, and in fact it's probably a negative. Women generally only take correction from men they respect. Not only does it fly right past her as Jack said, it only really confirms that her choice of action of being into school, feminism, eschewing dating, and whatever was right because it comes off as being butt hurt."

DeepStrength wrote (emphasis added),

> "Calling out a woman is what Christian men need to do IF they have responsibility for her such as a wife or children. You can also do this with friends or those you know well.
>
> However, calling out a random girl you've texted for a few days is going to do nothing at best and usually drive her more into her ways at worst."
>
> "If you want women to actually turn from feminism then you can't reinforce it by doing stuff like this."

So how? You let them flounder and fail until they see for themselves that they need a man, and that submitting to a man's authority has much needed benefits that they cannot obtain elsewhere.

Sorry Carly. It's another ugly RP truth.

Related

- Bruce Charlton: 'Pure abstract altruism': the underlying ideal principle of political correctness (2010/11/17)
- Bruce Charlton: Christian martyrs versus PC martyrs (2010/12/6)
- Wintery Knight: We Need to be Able to Tell Women Right and Wrong (2015/2/7)
- Σ Frame: On the discernment and wisdom of true morality (2019/2/2)
- Bruce Charlton: Promiscuous abstract altruism – why does the international mass media encourage it? (2019/12/15)

- Francis Berger: Loving Others As You Love Yourself Hinges On The Self You Love (2020/7/16)
- Francis Berger: Christian Love and The Love of Mankind: Two Entirely Different Worlds (2020/9/19)
- Bruce Charlton: Is Christianity selfish? Yes! But why is that a bad thing? (2021/4/29)
- Σ Frame: The Biblical Adage of “Dying to Self” is not Ego Ablation (2022/8/5)
- Σ Frame: Headship Authority Takes Work (2022/8/12)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Delusion of the Good (2022/8/19)
- William M. Briggs: It Takes Just As Much Free Will To Punish As To Do Wrong (2022/11/28)
- Σ Frame: Men’s Role in the Mess (2022/12/21)
- Σ Frame: Are Men Responsible for Women’s Behavior? (2023/2/1)
- Σ Frame: The Moral Law cannot be set aside (2023/2/24)
- Σ Frame: Men’s Altruistic Idealism in an Age of Apostasy (2023/7/28)
- Σ Frame: The Philosophical Basis of Secularized Altruism (2023/7/31)
- Σ Frame: Taking care of women who don’t want to be taken care of (2024/9/19)

No one has nice things anymore.

Jack · 4 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The Morality Police of Conservatism and the GynoPolice of Progressivism censors relatively tasteful expressions, even while gross immorality consumes the culture.

Readership: All
Theme: Gunk
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Catharsis

In one section of Aaron Renn's Weekly Digest: Promoting Polyamory (2024/1/20), entitled Why We Can't Have Nice Things, he covers a couple pieces written by expat Americans returning home who are shocked at how Murica has changed since they moved abroad. I had a similar reaction too, after living in Taiwan for several years. Renn attributes the societal degradation recounted by the authors to the fact that the U.S. has become a much lower trust society. I would say it is because of increased atomization and catharsis, and a redirected cathexis towards individualism, materialism, and progressivism.

In general, it's hard to disagree with either Renn's assessment or mine, but you see, that is the problem. An agreeable abstraction that doesn't address the real nature of the issue creates a sufficiently satisfying catharsis that prevents casual thinkers from examining the issue in any greater depth — or taking any action to remediate the damages.

Extrapolated to a societal level, this same catharsis assumes that the good aspects of culture and society can be lost, taken away, or forbidden, and no one is to complain or even notice. If someone does, like those returning expats or observers like Renn, then it is they who are considered out of touch with 'reality'.

This desensitizing, acceptance, and normalization is one more step down into the abyss.

This is why no one has nice things anymore.

The Morality Police of Conservatism

Only a month earlier, Snapper TRX had a different explanation of why we can't have nice things… (2023/12/27). It is because of the fear of being shamed by the morality police and the resulting rebellion. Snapper highlights the hypocrisy of 'conservatives' presuming to police morality by ridiculing conservative women who pose in swimsuits. In turn, this caused other 'conservatives' to censor the offending bits that are already concealed by swimsuits. As a consequence, more and more women have jumped on the 'conservative' swimsuit bandwagon.

NTB poses the rhetorical question, "What about this [censoring swimsuit photos] is conserving anything?" Snapper explained the metaphysical consciousness that leads to the self-perpetuation of this cycle [emphasis mine].

> "A man who sees a woman in a bathing suit and thinks she's sexy is not in sin, not even if he closes his eyes and imagines her with that bathing suit gone, or what her body might feel like in his hands. Ultimately he will go about his day, those thoughts having passed. It is an entirely different thing to set one's heart on obtaining that woman through whatever method possible, even if that means lying, cheating, stealing and murder. THAT is lust.
>
> Now some might say, "But why even tempt yourself! Better to not even have your mind wander into the thoughts by keeping your eyes from seeing such a woman!", and to that I say, "okay". That may be fine for you. If you find that you, as a Christian, fall into such thoughts at the mere sight of a woman in a bikini then by all means, avoid looking at her and avert your eyes, but do not prop that up as God's standard and make YOUR laws for yourself the laws of God, Who suggests no such thing. Doing so harms other Christians, who end up living lives wallowing in guilt and shame where none should be, and who force themselves to walk around, eyes cast to the ground, in a fruitless attempt to avoid seeing anything that may set off the smallest flame of sexual thought."

Most women will rebel and join the swimsuit craze in order to escape feelings of guilt and shame, thereby adding to their guilt and shame, ironically.

Since then, there's been a backlash of conservative women posing in swimsuits, including female politicians — followed by more righteous indignation and shaming which only perpetuates the craze for attention and notoriety. Soon, 'conservatism' will be stereotyped by women wearing revealing red, white, and blue bikinis with body tattoos peeking through.

Left to right: Anna Paulina Luna, Florida Representative; Linda Catalina, author and political activist; Lauren Boebert, Colorado Representative.
This is why no one has nice things anymore.

The GynoPolice of Progressivism

Meanwhile, Vox Popoli covered The End of Sports Illustrated (2024/1/19), the financial victim of a different sort of censorship — that of replacing attractive women with beached whales and other fuglies. But the underlying motivation for doing so is much the same — to remove the inspiration of beautiful women from public consciousness and to instill a sense of shame about it.

We may have a hundred free p0rn channels available at a click, but we can't allow attractive women posing in swimsuits because … "That would entice male lust!" OR the liberal equivalent … "That would shame less attractive women and pose 'unrealistic' standards on them!"

One more small ploy in the scheme of debasing and ressentimenting truth, beauty, and goodness. It is now considered a sin to allow men or younger generations to behold images of women in all their feminine glory.

Censoring swimsuit calendars might seem to be a trivial issue, but this is just another bellwether, a canary in the coalmine signaling the slippery slope to legalism and puritanism… OR enforcing Feminist / Progressive / W0ke narratives. If this is allowed to progress, then as time goes on, there will be less of a difference between the two, just as George Orwell foretold.

W0ke Puritanism?!? (Shudder)

This is why no one has nice things anymore.

A Note on Conservatism

I believe some influencers do not truly understand the nature of conservatism, which allows people the freedom to dissent, to rebel, and to run against the grain of the narrative for the sake of goodness, life, normalcy, and sanity.

The most conservative people in Murica are not the armchair philosophers on the far right, the Benjamin Beale's and the Matt Walsh's and the Tucker Carlson's of the world; nor is it the Tim Keller's, Russell Moore's, and Al Mohler's of the world; but rather, the most truly conservative people are those Salt-of-the-Earth's whom the left decries as "deplorables". The bearded man with sleeve tattoos riding a Harley and wearing a Hell's Angels jacket. The cynical High school chick wearing black fingernail polish and combat boots and sporting 20 piercings. The long haired, beer guzzling, pot smoking guy driving a Chevy half-ton full of scrap lumber while listening to heavy metal. The high school girl who gets pregnant with her boyfriend at 16, marries at 18, and has 3 children before she's 22. Such were the kind of people Jesus chose as His disciples and who gravitated towards Him. That is true conservatism, lest we forget.

To illustrate my point, the quickest way to start a fight with Mr. Muscles shooting pool in the back room of a honky tonk bar is to call him perverted and take away his MAGA swimsuit calendar.

This is no coincidence. Instilling shame and lowering the boom on various forms of censorship is just another stab at the heart of the lowly and unpresentable aspects of being human, which ironically are the characteristics of human weaknesses that glorify the Lord when rightly appreciated (2 Corinthians 12:9-10).

This is why no one has nice things anymore.

To reiterate my point for the spectral lurkers:

- “Nice things” are not extravagant luxuries, but the simple joys in life, including freedom from shame.
- There’s nothing ‘Christian’ about Chevrolets, heavy metal, Republicanism, swimsuit calendars, etc. but there is something definitely ‘unChristian’ about condemning and forbidding such things.

Related

- Σ Frame: Censorship of Praise is the Thief of Joy (2018/4/11)
- Σ Frame: The elephant in the room is the canary in the coalmine (2020/11/2)
- Σ Frame: “Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest.” (2022/4/27)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Rolling Forward (2023/8/7)
- Σ Frame: The Slow Demise of Masculine Leadership (2023/9/1)
- The Babylon Bee: ‘I Just Don’t Know Where We Went Wrong,’ Contemplates Sports Illustrated Executive In Front Of Framed Covers Of Obese, Trans Swimsuit Models (2024/1/19)
- Σ Frame: Reminiscing on Our Immoral Culture (2024/8/26)
- Better Bachelor: Women in government have a bikini competition to prove who’s conservative… (2024/8/21)

P_ssy makes men stupid.

Jack · 7 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Clam is the Great Motivator! However, the context thereof either builds or destroys.

Readership: All
Theme: Gunk
Length: 650 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Intro

TheDeti left this profound pearl of great price under a previous post, Are you a man or a mushroom? (2020/8/19).

> "P_ssy makes men stupid."

Indeed!

Since then, this has become a maxim repeated around the Manosphere.

The gender-converse maxim would be,

> "Tingles make women stupid."

But not without reasons, both clear and craven. Let's consider the evolutionary purpose for the stupidity.

It's a beautiful life! …but it's incomplete without a family to share it with. Men need a fertile womb to make it a reality.

A Domain of the Heart and Home

In one respect, it's all about building a domain of heart, hearth, and home.

The Shadowed Knight explained,

> "Marriage is all about sex and children. No matter how rich or poor, how dangerous, or any other consideration. If a man can be sure that he will have a woman who will have his and only his children, he will do nearly anything to make it happen. Without that, men go back to the hunter-gatherer ways of checking out of society, joining a gang, and meeting only basic survival needs.
>
> Men will create civilization if the only way to get p_ssy is by building and being civilized. Men will tear civilization apart and raze it to the ground if the only way to get p_ssy is to be a conqueror. Right now, we are building due to inertia, and that inertia is just about out. Unless men go back to hard paternal control over women, the decay and wear is going to tear this down."

As you might be able to imagine, all of man's greatest blessings and joys in this short life are delivered through the vagina or the owner thereof — sons and daughters, civilization and society, heart and home, love and inspiration, comfort, release, and solace, a clean, ordered home, tasty food, meat, and of course, sammitches. Therein is the basic appeal of the Trad Wife. Men like to have a multifunctional helper that is good for the home, industrious in the kitchen, enthusiastic in the bedroom, and easy on the eyes.

Not for sale. Out of stock. This rare elite mobile multipurpose kitchen utility unit is for infotainment only.

A Stronghold of Sin and Shame

But not everything is as it seems. This is especially true when dealing with women who are unwilling to stick with the grand God-ordained program and are thus incapable of fulfilling their carnal purpose.

The obvious problem with "P_ssy makes men stupid" is that … it makes men stupid. Heh.

To put a finer edge on it, men become stupid when their natural desires for obtaining all the aforementioned blessings are subjugated to cheap substitutional fantasies that are disconnected from reality. Men are thereby lured into depravity, lust, poverty, sin, and shame when carried away by their carnal cravings for cramming cream in the clam can.

Same goes for women choosing Ch@ds.

But maybe men are not so stupid after all. The problem is that they are so inspired by these great hopes that they fail to notice and properly deal with the complications and obstacles of living in a world broken by sin — and mobile wife units rendered inoperable by feminism, and which have no return warranty or upgrade chip.

A hostess of a drink shop in Taiwan. She dresses this way to sell more drinks. It does!
Unfortunately for gamers, women are not “plug and play”.

The most egregious error of the secular manosphere is that it emphasizes and encourages creaming many cans of clams and tossing them aside well spoiled.

The most egregious error of Christian men is in believing that if they can get ~~P_ssy~~ (ahem) “married”, then all the other blessings will, of course, follow naturally. Heh.

The most egregious error of women is that they have many of their own versions of vain fantasies and therefore easily fall for the falsehoods as well.

Conclusions

The moral of the story: Proper and sufficient motivation builds good families and civilized societies. But when debased or unregulated, it destroys them.

Hope can be a terrible thing when separated from reality.

Related

- Σ Frame: Musings on Feminine Soft Power (2017/10/24)
- Σ Frame: Social Authenticity Proof: Giving Women Attention (2021/12/10)
- Σ Frame: Riding the Raging Rivulet (2022/10/13)

- Σ Frame: The Glorious Warlord (2023/3/20)
- Σ Frame: The Next Step (2023/8/4)

On the Supply and Demand of Withholding Sex

Jack · 9 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Taking stock of the inventory.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Gunk
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

In a healthy relationship, there is a continual exchange in an unreserved transaction. While the husband is replacing a burned out light bulb, the wife keeps him inspired with tender urgent caresses and enthusiastic squeezes while he's on the ladder. While the wife is washing dishes, the husband will tickle her with a feisty reach around and a grinding pelvic bump from behind. This casual and continual exchange of natural affection throughout the day culminates in a more direct and natural exchange in the evening. There is no meta discussion of who gets what, how much, how long, or when. This is healthy and normal.

But let's take a little journey into the Bizarro world of informal intramarital pr0st!tut!0n, which is politely called "sexual withholding".

Sex for Service

In general, marriage is like a sexual monopoly between two private individuals. Regulating market transactions is good if it excludes extramarital interlopers and keeps busyness running smoothly, but it's very bad if it excludes the primary beneficiary of such an arrangement and puts the little guy out of business.

Red Pill Apostle posed this incisive question.

> "Is the application of the concept when she decides to withhold to change his behavior or when he changes his behavior as his payment to her and she then has sex with him?"

In most normal business transactions…

- Services and payments are entered into consciously and in good faith.
- The person with the cash decides whether an exchange is made.
- Payment is due after services are rendered.

Good businesses recognize that "The customer comes first." I'm not sure if this is also true for pr0st!tut!0n, but let's suppose it is.

In the case of tit-for-tat sexual withholding…

- If the man ponies up before the wife saddles up (which is usually the case), then assuming this takes the form of a normal business transaction — the woman's 'payment' of sex comes after the man's 'service' of complying to her wishes. The man is 'serving' the woman in this case.
- If the wife delivers the wet goods before the man dries the clothes and dishes (which is more proper but is seldom the case, unfortunately), then assuming this takes the form of a normal business transaction — the man's 'payment' of complying to her wishes comes after the woman's 'service' of sex. The woman is 'serving' the man in this case.

The larger problem with this setup is that sex is an urgent need for men while most behavioral modifications on the man's behalf, such as providing help with the housework, are merely a convenience for women. IOW, sex is a bottleneck commodity being controlled by the wife. Thus, withholding is less like a sexual monopoly and more like a sex cartel.

Therefore, in the usual case, withholding is operant conditioning using 'punishments' and 'rewards'. Withholding sex is a negative punishment, and giving sex is a positive reward. This can be acutely effective, as many premeditated Beta husbands quickly learn after marriage.

An Experiment in Exchange Regulation

Here's an experiment that some married men might like to explore, specifically those married men whose wives prefer to pr0st!tute themselves by giving their husbands starfish transactional sex.

Once you've identified what it is she wants from you, e.g. attention, consideration, housework, money, or whatever, then draw up a contract something like this.

Party A (Mr. Husband) will perform 30 minutes of housework each week.

Party B (Mrs. Wife) will perform 30 minutes of duty sex each week.

You could add in line-by-line items and small print, such as…

Party A (Mr. Husband) will clean the oven, vacuum the living room furniture, dust underneath the beds, and so on.

Party B (Mrs. Wife) will wear a revealing teddy around the house, beg for 'more', make cute rutting noises, swallow, etc.

The more items you can add to this, the better. Maybe 30-50 items would get her attention. If she objects to formalizing the details, tell her, "This is just what we've been doing for the last 5 years (or whatever). I'm just writing it down." If the husband includes everything he's doing for her, such as providing housing, meals, clothing, a car, paying bills, spending cash, and so on, then it should be pretty clear that she's got the better end of the deal. This puts him in a good bargaining position to demand better or more from her.

I imagine this would work something like Tracking Raw Sex Performance on a Spread Sheet. It would get her attention and make her aware of what she's actually contributing to the relationship.

Then there's this analogy that taps into the Three Magic Words, "You are mine."

"If I own a car, and it's truly mine, then I should have the freedom to drive it whenever I want and do whatever I want with it. I also have the responsibility of maintaining and taking care of the car. But if I have to ask permission or do chores to gain the privilege of using the car, then the car is not really mine, is it? Why should I make payments or even care about someone else's car?"

Alternatively, the distinguished jerkboy hubby will bypass the negotiation altogether and simply state that his 'payment' will be tendered after her 'services' have been rendered. If she complains that his performance is lackluster (in her opinion), he can state that he's only paying her what she's worth.

It is hoped that, at some point, she'll grow weary of the transactional tedium and prefer a more free and unstructured exchange, and more to the point, one that is more authentic and more sensuously generous.

Related

- Jim's Blog: Believing in male supremacy will make you more attractive to women. (2016/1/19)
- Σ Frame: Musings on Feminine Soft Power (2017/10/24)
- Σ Frame: Male and Female Power Deconstructed (2017/10/26)
- Σ Frame: Tracking Raw Sex Performance on a Spread Sheet (2022/1/19)
- Σ Frame: Infidelity is anything short of fidelity. (2022/1/24)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Denying sex to one's spouse is porneia. (2022/1/26)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): What can a husband do in response to a rebellious wife? (2022/1/31)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority and Sanctification (2022/8/8)
- Σ Frame: It's her choice whether or not to submit. (2022/10/28)
- Σ Frame: Repentance and Submission (2022/10/30)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Setting Boundaries Increases Openness (2024/1/28)

Not ALL DNA are Equal

Jack · 11 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Our ancestors do not contribute equally to our genome.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Gunk
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Intro

A while back, I did A Study of Consanguinity in Modern European History (2020/8/28). In this study, I devised a parametric equation to form a mathematical model that estimated the number of one's ancestors that would have been alive at any time in history. The data is shown in the Table below.

Who?	Ancestral Generation (n)	Years Ago	Date of Birth	Number of people in nth generation	World Population
You	0	0	2000	1	8,147,193,023
Parents	1	25	1975	2	4,073,592,509
Grandparents	2	50	1950	4	2,550,000,000
Great Grandparents	3	75	1925	8	2,000,000,000
You might have a few photographs	4	100	1900	16	1,600,000,000
	5	125	1875	32
Names only maybe	6	150	1850	64	1,200,000,000
	7	175	1825	128
	8	200	1800	256
	9	225	1775	512
Only Ancestry.com knows!	10	250	1750	1,024
	11	275	1725	2,048
	12	300	1700	4,096	610,000,000
	13	325	1675	8,192
People you don't know anything about	14	350	1650	16,384
	15	375	1625	32,768
	16	400	1600	65,536	500,000,000
	17	425	1575	131,072
Tribal Identity	18	450	1550	262,144
	19	475	1525	524,288
	20	500	1500	1,048,576	450,000,000
	21	525	1475	2,097,152
National Identity	22	550	1450	4,194,304
	23	575	1425	8,388,608
	24	600	1400	16,777,216	360,000,000
	25	625	1375	33,554,432
Continental Identity	26	650	1350	67,108,864
	27	675	1325	134,217,728
Ancestors surpass world population	28	700	1300	268,435,456
	29	725	1275	536,870,912
	30	750	1250	1,073,741,824
Mr. Jesus is going to	31	775	1225	2,147,483,648
	32	800	1200	4,294,967,296	360,000,000

According to this theoretical model, if 0 degrees of consanguinity are assumed (i.e. all ancestors are unique), then the number of one's ancestors living 700 years ago surpasses the world population, so it was concluded that our ancestors are NOT unique (i.e. we're all descended from multi-generational kissing cousins), and that Consanguinity (marriage between two people who are descended from a common ancestor) is much more common and more recent than what we might think.

IOW, we are all descended from a relatively small number of people.

Yeah. Noah.

Or are we?

Recently, I found a video from Marcus Gallo that offers some different answers to a few of the questions I raised in this study.

Marcus Gallo: You DON'T Descend From All Your Ancestors (2024/7/18) Length: 12:45

In this analysis, Gallo makes the same assumptions that I did in my model, and uses the same parametric equation. Gallo briefly covers the content of my study, i.e. comparing the generated information to the world population estimates, but Gallo goes further to compare these figures to those stipulated by the biomechanics of genetic pairings.

Gallo observes that there are only 4 types of nucleic acids that form 4 base pairs of DNA, and there are 3.1 billion base pairs of DNA in the human genome. Thus, we only need to go back 32 generations until the number of ancestors surpasses the number of base pairs of DNA.

This might not seem to make much of a difference from my own study — only 4 generations removed, or ~100 years.

But wait… There's more.

Here, I'll go through Gallo's explanation and add some takeaways.

Random DNA Pairings

We receive only a small amount of genetic material from any of our distant ancestors, but Gallo points out that we do NOT receive genetic material from ALL our ancestors because there is a great deal of randomness that occurs when reproducing 3.1 billion pairings.

Gallo cites a book by David Reich, Who We Are and How We Got Here, to explain why we do not descend equally from all of our ancestors.

Canadian rapper Drake with his wife, Sophie Brussaux, and son, Adonis. Adonis resembles his paternal grandmother more than either of his parents.
Here's how it works.

Each of us is born with 47 distinct pieces of DNA with the following characteristics:

- 23 chromosomes from our fathers, arranged in pairs.
- 23 chromosomes from our mothers, arranged in pairs.

- 1 complete set of mitochondrial DNA from our mothers.
- Two chromosomes determine sex. Men receive an X chromosome from their mothers, and a Y chromosome from their fathers. Women receive one X chromosome from each of their parents.
- Y chromosomes only come from fathers.
- Mitochondrial chromosomes only come from mothers.

Although we inherit 23 chromosomes from each parent, we do not transmit those chromosomes fully intact to the next generation. Instead, during meiosis, the pairs of chromosomes are randomly interspliced.

- When a spermatozoon is formed, it contains a set of 23 chromosomes that have an average of 26 splices. Any chromosome in a typical sperm cell will therefore have about half of its DNA from the man's father and half from the man's mother.
- When an egg is formed, it contains an average of 45 splices. The chromosomes in eggs will be split so that roughly one-third come from one of her parents and two-thirds come from the other parent.
- In every generation, these splits take place at different spots on the genome, and there are different numbers of splits that form each time. But on average, every generation adds 71 more splices than the generation before (26 from the father and 45 from the mother).
- Unlike a man's Y chromosome which remains intact, the crossover of genes affects all of a woman's chromosomes, including her X chromosomes, so that the X chromosomes she passes to her children mix the DNA from both of her own parents' X chromosomes.
- This randomly generated disproportionality can be readily observed when it is recognized that an individual closely resembles one parent or grandparent more than another.

This information allows genetic researchers to estimate the familial relatedness of two people by looking at their genomes: if they share identical sections of DNA, the longer those sections are, the more closely they are related. This is because there have been fewer random splicing events that have disrupted the shared stretches of DNA.

The Genetic Lottery Effect

The way all this works out, as generations advance, some ancestors will contribute disproportionately to a descendant's DNA, and some will contribute nothing at all.

Why? With every generation, the number of individual DNA segments only grows by 71 while the number of ancestors doubles. IOW, the units of genetic descent increase arithmetically, but the units of genealogical descent increase exponentially.

So, for example, 3 generations back (~1950, during the Cold War), you have 8 great-grandparents, whose genetic contribution will be divided into 260 pieces. On average, each great-grandparent will contribute about 5 or 6 chromosomes' worth of DNA in 32 large stretches.

Nine generations back (~1800, when the mid-western U.S. was pioneered), you have 512 ancestors, whose genetic contribution will be divided into 686 pieces. Although you still have more genetic slots than you have ancestors, some of these ancestors will have passed none of their genes on to you, and some will have multiple stretches of DNA that they gave to you completely intact. At this point, only 72% of these 7th-great-grandparents will give you some of your genetics.

After 10 generations, one's genetic constitution is extracted from less than 50% of one's ancestors.

Fifteen generations back (~1650, when the first English and Spanish colonies were founded in America), you have 32,768 genealogical ancestors, but only 1,112 genetic ancestors. In less than 400 years, 97% of your ancestors contribute nothing to your genetics.

In summary, it only takes a relatively short time for the number of your genealogical ancestors to dwarf the number of your genetic ancestors.

One thing Gallo did not consider is that there are fewer genealogical ancestors than what the model predicts, as I showed in my earlier study. I suspect that this would increase homogeneity and thereby compound the effects that Gallo describes, but I can't be certain to what degree.

Scattering Progeny

The same is true for our descendants. If you have living descendants in 400 years, there is only a 3% chance that you will contribute anything at all to their genome, unless you are lucky enough to be someone's direct maternal or paternal ancestor. Within only a few generations, any contributions you do make will appear in slivers of DNA so tiny that it becomes difficult to distinguish whether you or some other ancestor made the contribution.

Conclusions

In one sense, we are snippets of DNA extracted from a vast gene pool. In another sense, we are all descended from a relatively small number of individuals and thus share the same gene pool.

We are individually shaped by a few recent ancestral generations, we strongly shape a few generations of our descendants, and then our contribution passes into an anonymous stream of humanity.

You're looking at the future face of the Netherlands. Dutchman Jonathan Jacob Meijer has fathered 550 children through sperm donation. How? Hopeful mothers chose HIM over thousands of donors. Here's the kicker — many of these mothers chose 'natural' fertilization over invitro.
Gallo and Reich explain that this homogenization happens within a relatively short time frame, as few as 3 to 4 generations. This agrees with our previous examinations of mixed-race individuals who have lost the more obvious characteristics of their ancestors within 2-3 generations.

Interestingly, this time frame, 3-4 generations, is the same as that stipulated in the Old Testament as the extent of a generational curse (Exodus 20:5; Exodus 34:7; Numbers 14:18; Deuteronomy 5:9).

> "… you shall not bow down to them nor serve them. For I, the Lord your God, am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generations of those who hate Me…"
>
> Deuteronomy 5:9 (NKJV)

Apparently, it takes God 3 to 4 generations to sift out the bad genes, but only for those descendants who are willing to repent of the sins of their ancestors. Yes, I do believe there is a correlation, and that God plays a hand in what we call ‘random’ gene combinations.

Furthermore, the genetic selection and ‘random’ pairings that occur in meiosis, oogenesis, and spermatogenesis reflect the hand of God in our creation.

> [13] For You created my innermost parts;
> You wove me in my mother’s womb.
> [14] I will give thanks to You, because I am awesomely and wonderfully made;
> Wonderful are Your works,
> And my soul knows it very well.
>
> Psalm 139:13-14 (NASB)

Related

- Fox News: Genealogist: Almost Everyone on Earth Descended From Royalty (2006/7/5)
- Discover Magazine (Razib Khan): Cousin marriage can reduce I.Q. a lot (2012/7/20)

Book Review : Sperm Wars, by Robin Baker

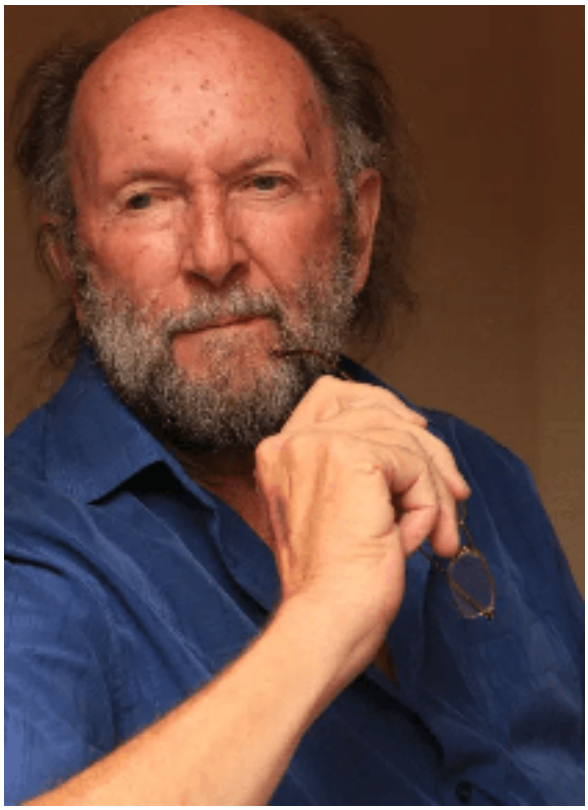
Jack · 14 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Key takeaways and conclusions.

Readership: Men
Theme: Gunk
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

In ye olden days of the Manosphere 1.0, I came across more than one comment that recommended the book, Sperm Wars, by Robin Baker [PDF download available], mentioning how "Red Pill" and insightful it was. It is also included in the Dark Enlightenment Reading List [Archive]. So I decided it was worth checking out.



Robin Baker

The author, Robin Baker, was Reader in Zoology in the School of Biological Sciences at the University of Manchester from 1980-1996. He is a bestselling author in the field of sexual biology and he has over a hundred scientific papers and magazine articles covering his work on the evolution of human behavior.

Although there are no citations to sourced research literature included in this book, he claims that the viewpoints presented in the book are based on companion studies that contain prolific citations to the proceeds of scientific research.

Highlights

I've collected the following assertions posed by Baker which are distributed throughout the book and which form the basis of many of his arguments and case studies.

- Some humans are more inclined towards monogamy but the basic instinct leans towards polysexuality for both sexes, hence “sperm wars”.

- Polyamorous groups of vertebrates engage in sperm competition most fiercely, leading to the evolution of males with a larger sized penis, testicles, and volume of sperm ejaculate. Females go into heat, discharge mucous, emit calls, and secrete odorous pheromones.
- Among monogamous groups of vertebrates, females have evolved to conceal fertility. The reason is not clear.
- Females regularly employ their concealed fertility as a sexual mating and reproductive strategy. Females have an intersexual competitive advantage if they are able to keep males confused about their arousal and their fertility cycles.
- Because women’s fertility is not evident, and because women’s monthly peak fertility does not always fall on the 14th day after the onset of menstruation, males have evolved to be continually fertile and to be ready for coitus on a moment’s notice.
- Men’s most robust mating strategy is to inseminate one female every 2 days, and not missing any days. Even one missed insemination might be critical to reproduction.
- Among humans, there are variations in both males and females anatomy which are correlated with fertility, although they’re not always consistent.
- Penis anatomy has evolved to have a reverse plunger head, which scoops / sucks out a competitor’s sperm with every thrust before pressing fresh sperm into the vagina.
- Virginal anatomy preserves and protects fertility, and virginal sex is more likely to result in pregnancy.
- The frequency and intensity of female orgasms are correlated with female fertility and male aggressiveness, respectively.
- Cervical mucous plays an important role in insemination. A larger amount and a lower viscosity of mucous corellate with a higher probability of insemination.
- Females exhibit a backflow of excess mucous and sperm, AKA a “wet patch”, 30-45 minutes after insemination. Baker offers several pieces of information that can be obtained by observing backflow.
- Spermatozoa are categorized into 3 different morphologies, each of which serve specialized functions: Killers / Warriors, Blockers, and Egg Getters. Warrior sperm are capable of disabling foreign sperm by chemical mechanisms. Blockers swim in circles and congeal, thereby congesting the reproductive canal. Egg Getters are strong, fast, and swim directly into the fallopian tubes by some amazing and unknown directive.
- Spermatozoa are weaker and of a different morphology when the man is under stress, AKA “family planning” sperm. Alcohol consumption makes this effect much worse.
- The role of masturbation in reproduction is to discharge old sperm. It is widely observed that female vertebrates also masturbate regularly, although the evolutionary purpose for this is not clear. For example, female chimps and porcupines use sticks and run to stimulate themselves.
- 10% of children are not sired by a woman’s partner, but by an interloper. This figure may be as high as 25-33% in certain circumstances and locales, such as during a war or other situations in which the man is away from home for long periods of time.
- Women are more creative than men in hiding infidelity.
- Men are caught more easily than women in the case of infidelity.
- Ovulation ceases while breast feeding, for as long as breast feeding continues. This may explain why men have a lower sexual desire for nursing mothers.
- Men are instinctively prone to reject women who have children with other men, as well as their children.
- Baker gives a brief overview of the history of contraception. In ancient times, leaves, crocodile dung, and other weird substances were inserted into the vagina as a contraceptive. Poisons, starvation, and violent ‘massages’ were implemented to induce an abortion.
- More sons are born on average, but sons are also more likely to die, leading to an equal gender representation.

- Baker offers detailed explanations of the reproductive mechanisms and effects of h0m0sexu@lity, bisexuality, infidelity, pr0st!tut!0n, r@pe, etc., and why these forms of sex are able to continue, propagate, and survive over generations.
- H0m0sexu@l men usually have uncles with the same tendency, usually on their mother's side.

Jack's Notes

I'm impressed that this book was originally written in the mid-90's, which was a full decade before PUA's started reporting clinical observations of intersexual dynamics, and a few more years before the Manosphere started churning out mating and reproductive models. This is further evidence that scientific findings were used as the foundation of the work, as was claimed.

This book highlights the gravity of human instinct and humans' amazing ability for survival as a race. Basically, Baker assumes women are merely tools of biology, fully operating on instinct, and wholly devoid of moral agency. Men are constant and persistent enablers of reproduction with only one agentic purpose — to inseminate as many females as they can, as often as they can. Of course, this is an oversimplification, but it forms a consistent theoretical model that provides extremely interesting and occasionally stimulating reading.

The problems with this approach are…

- It fails to take into account the multivariate motivations of women.
- The book is very factual and biological. It does not consider moral implications, and glosses over spiritual complications.
- Every single example of sexual interaction between a man and a woman that is depicted in the book is morally compromised.

These features of the writing are as much of a strength as they are a weakness, because to understand Biology (or any technical subject) for what it is, you have to take a step away from those other frames of reference and immerse one's cognizance in the topic. Once the biology is thoroughly understood, then reintegrating the knowledge into one's comprehensive Frame completes the learning process.

The widespread lack of this understanding provides insight as to just how much our conscious awareness is so far removed from biological processes.

An Interesting Point of Difference

Recent writings on Σ Frame concluded that women in a gynocentric social order compete to conform. In Baker's book, I found one point that stands at odds with this characterization of women: The argument that a woman (should) try to differentiate herself from other women in order to give herself an intersexual competitive edge in mating and to dominate the intrasexual competition.

On Page 348, it says [emphasis mine],

> "…individual females confuse their partner through unpredictable swings of mood and behavior (Scene 2), but also the female population as a whole manages to confuse through variety. As was clear from Scene 36, a woman gains in three main ways from being as different as she can be from other women.
>
> First, she can set each man a much more challenging test of experience and competence (Scene 27). From this she can quickly learn whether he has a little or a lot of experience of other women.
>
> Because women are so different, a man will only have encountered her type before and thus know how to treat her if he has had a lot of experience."

One comprehensive explanation of this difference is that women who chase after herd conformity, as opposed to abiding under the authority of one man, are setting up a social construct in which they exhibit a lower fertility rate. It does make sense and bears out in what we are now observing.

Speculative readers are invited to share other thoughts they may have.

Related

- Phys Org: Females fight back in sperm wars (2013/10/17)
- The Power Moves (Lucio Buffalmano): Sperm Wars: Summary, Review & Criticism (2018/10/20) [Archive]
- Code Reemus: Sperm Wars Review – The Truth About Our Sexual Nature (2021/8/15)

P0rn Wars for Kids

Jack · 16 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Are these ads / games suitable for children?

Readership: Christians; Parents
Theme: Gunk
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes
Warning to Readers: Images NSFW.

Take a look at these screenshots of an advertisement for the game, Hero Wars, that have appeared on Facebook and X. (Screenshots taken between 2024/7/20 and 2020/8/4.)

The animation for these ads progresses quite rapidly, so it's hard to notice the details. But if you take screenshots, you'll get a real eye-opener of what is being presented.

Corny P0rny

One ad contained several obscene scenes, some that were suggestively obscene and others that were obscenely obscene.

Here's a scene that depicts the 'Hero' moving his right arm rapidly, making it appear like he's masturbating to the image of a horned demon. On the vanity, there is a whip and a phone number, (666) 666-6666, written on the mirror. The woman in the foreground is wearing a short see-through nightie that clearly shows her @ss crack. In the following scene, it is shown that he isn't masturbating, but is sharpening a huge sword, but no sword can be seen in this image.

Here's a scene that is suggestive of petting. The woman's attire leaves little to the imagination.

I flipped out when I saw this next scene. Wh0rey horses!

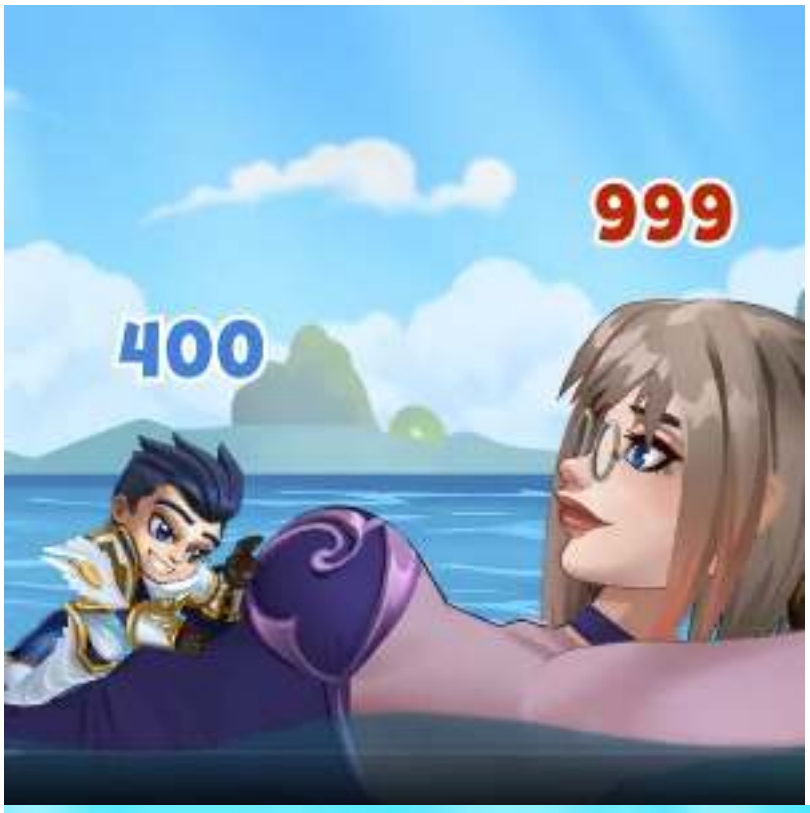
When the ‘Hero’ enters, the woman and the horse transform to ‘innocent’ in a puff of smoke.

Male Sexuality

Some scenes really get to the heart of the male desire for tender female affection, young ‘love’, and weakness for T & A.

Ancient Egyptian idolatry appears prominently. Here’s a shot of what looks like the ‘Hero’ suckling on Cleopatra’s humongous jeweled tit.

This scene depicts the ‘Hero’ caressing a spectacled and chokered chick while gazing at her boob. A wave-like motion and a splash of water gives the impression of body banging and a splurge respectively.



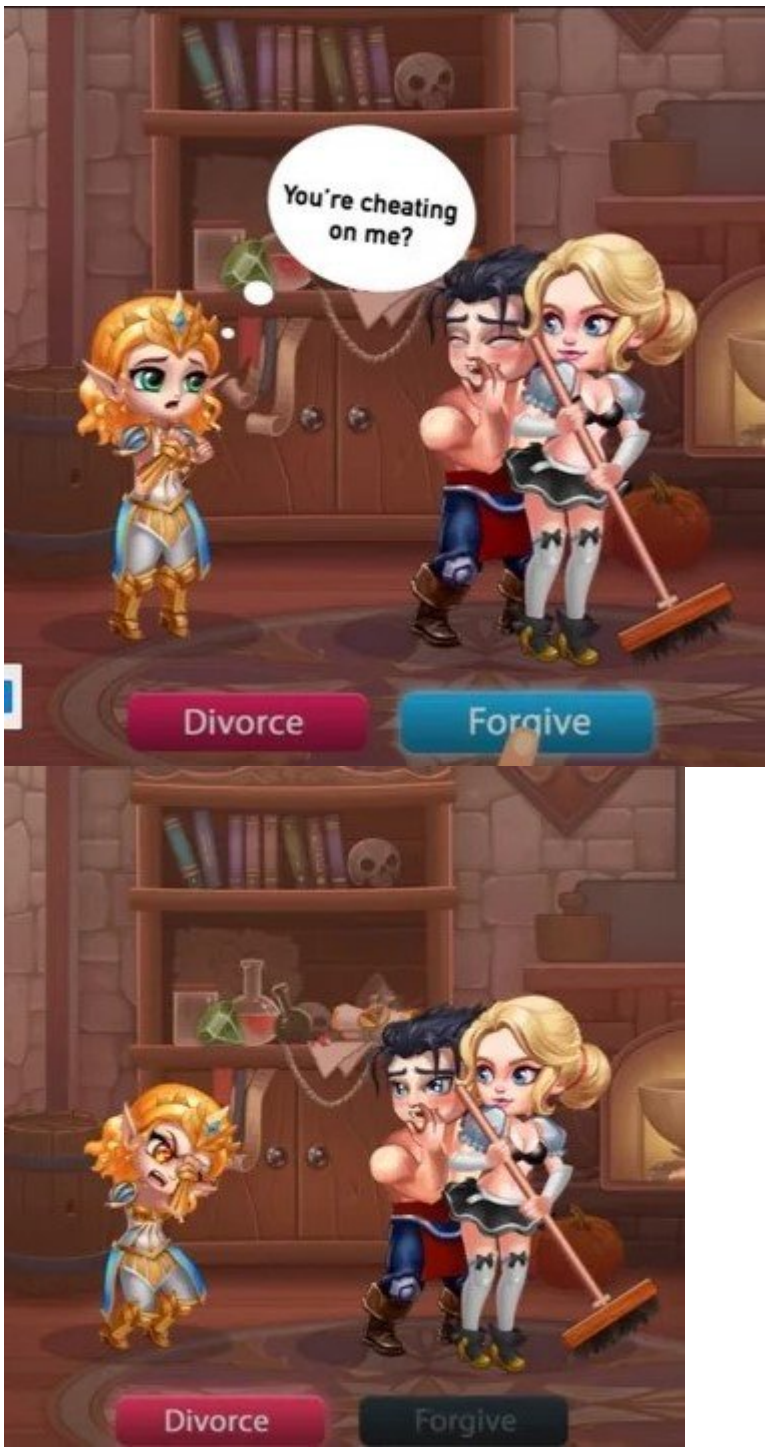
OTOH, other scenes highlight the masculine desire for female conquest and dominion.

One scene shows women being crucified in Japanese pagodas. It is assumed that the ‘Hero’ is supposed to rescue these women.

In one shot, it appears that the ‘Hero’ has a woman behind chains. In the animation, her eyes are hearts, her head is bobbing, and she’s moving her @ss like she’s getting humped.

Greek mythology also appears, complete with sexual imagery. The chick on the far right strokes the ‘Hero’s’ hip until he grabs her head and pulls her closer. All the chicks are blushing with desire.

In another scene, a chick walks in on the ‘Hero’ humping the maid.



Raw Reflections of Sordid Society

In this scene, a pointy-eared, purple-eyed mermaid is squeezing her tit with one hand and moving her other hand on the edge of the boat, giving the appearance of a handjob.

In the next scene, the mermaid turns evil, shoots purple fire out of her eyes, steals the kid, and dives underwater.

Mommy!

Quite a nice parable of family divorce court.

In fact, most of these scenes depict women seducing the ‘Hero’, him falling in ‘love’ with them, and then being bamboozled by them. Also, most scenes depict women and female giantesses eating, smacking, and/or kicking the ‘Hero’. Aside from the Japanese pagoda scene, Female dominance is obvious and ubiquitous.

Female Sexuality

Not only are these ads rather explicitly p0rnographic, I’m somewhat amused to find that the creators are also Red

Pill aware.

Here's a scene that depicts blindfolded male NPCs falling into a hole between a giantess' legs, one after another, as she mischieviously looks on. The number 69 appears ubiquitously, adding to the suggestive meretriciousness of the game.

Another scene depicts a 'princess' who's "hit the wall" with a banana in her mouth and splooge all over her face and hair.

Here's another ad depicting a proverbial 'Man Eater' who consumes men for her own pleasure until she gets fooled and destroyed by an 'Alpha'.

In this scene, a number of male characters are walking a plank into the chest cavity of an oddly long-limbed chick wearing body armor. The male NPCs remove their body armor and then toss it into her, where it is consumed with fire. She gets a orgasmic expression across her face and then gives him a look of approval. Then she kicks up the plank causing the NPC to slide down the plank into her, where he is also consumed with fire and she gets the same blushing O face. Her armor turns gold after consuming the first man, and becomes more ornate after ‘eating’ the second. When the ‘Hero’ approaches, instead of removing his armor, he tosses a bomb into her. She transforms into a w!tch and attempts to ‘eat’ him too, except the bomb explodes and expels him away from her.

62
69
12
HEROWARS

63
69
12
HEROWARS

63
6
69
8
HERO WARS

74
16
69
1
HERO WARS

75
8
16
69
HERO WARS

75
8
16
69
HERO WARS

A further insult to masculinity is revealed through an examination of the point values. The first NPC is worth 10 points; he is 3 without his armor, consuming his armor bumps up her value by 9, and the man himself is only 1. The second NPC is worth 12 points clothed, 8 after he removes his armor, and only 1 himself. The 'Hero' is worth 69 points. Heh.

Conclusions

One the one hand, there's much to be learned about human sexuality and behavior from watching these ads, and it's probably an effective medium for adolescents to learn about the Birds and the Bees. On the other hand, it is wholly inappropriate for younger preadolescent audiences who tend to imitate everything they see without understanding, and it might even be psychologically damaging.

If media like this is allowed and/or used for entertainment or instruction, it must be accompanied with adult guidance. The viewing experience must be monitored to see exactly what message young people are learning from this, and to ensure that the messages in the media are received as a description of human nature and a precaution, and NOT a prescription.

My reaction to these ads might be pearl clutching, especially seeing how there are many video games that are much more overtly p0rnographic than this, but my point here is that these are public ads that are aimed at an adolescent market outside of parental guidance and supervision.

Grief!

Update

On 2024/7/26, a community note appeared on X, saying…

> "This ad is misleading as it does not represent the actual core gameplay."

A link to a video displays what the actual game is like.

> "Investigations into the company have prompted a potential class action lawsuit."

If you are or were previously a Hero Wars customer, you may be interested in getting in on the class action. Click on the link below for more info.

Wittels McInturff Palikovic: Hero Wars Investigation – Autorenewal, Pay to Win, False Sales

Related

- Σ Frame: Psychological Impact on Children (from Frozen) (2017/11/18)
- Σ Frame: Why are there so many sexy aggressive women in anime and video game culture? (2021/7/9)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Cultural Myth of the SIW (2023/11/8)
- Cybercell: Hero Wars Honest Review – Gem or Scam? (2023/12/17)
- Movie Guide: How Popular Movies, TV Shows Have Exposed Your Child to Pornography

Should Female Online Content Producers be Considered OASIS?

Jack · 18 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Sexyness sells like sex does.

Readership: All
Theme: Gunk
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes
Warning: Video images may be NSFW.

Intro

Over the past few years, I've seen an increase in female online content producers (e.g. FB, IG, YT, X, etc.). I've also noticed that the overall presentation of these female producers has become more sensuous and sexualized. Narrations are delivered with a bouncing, breathy, chest heaving, hair tossing, lip licking, touchy feely vibe. It is not uncommon to see bare midriffs, bare shoulders, butt cheeks, camel toes, nips, and even side-boobs / under-boobs.

To offer some examples of what I'm referring to, take a look at these female content producers. The thumbnail images are probably enough for sensitive readers to get the idea.

Ari — Get Ready With Me

Jules Ari

Lauren Kim

Leicht Perlig, AKA Soft Sparkling

FB / IG

Maya / Maya Singer

Minsi Outdoors Beachcraft

Nacoco Music

Sequins & Satin

The Naked Gardener

WayWeMove by Zarina del Mar

That's probably more than enough for readers to get the gist without falling into lust for the rest of the day.

And that's just a sampling. This kind of content is all over social media.

And then there's a new 'Body Art' craze that just hit this month, which takes this to a whole new level.

Laurel Body Art

[Too profane to show video.]

Lulu Body Art

[Too profane to show video.]

Note: Since writing this post, one account I flagged, Madison Narcissa, described as a “health and fitness” channel, has been suspended by YT.

A Thought Experiment

I’ve also noticed that there has been an increase in the number of female posters who express their “opinions” on various topics mostly of interest to females (clothing, fashion, hair, makeup, nails, dating / SMP, etc.), but the presentation is sexy-flirty as if they’re geared towards male thirst rather than the intended female audience. A smaller number of these women actually do have something intelligent to say, but it’s half-dressed up in sultry sensuality just the same.

But why would these women’s “opinions” be deemed so important? Why would anyone, male or female, watch their videos at all?

To pose a little thought experiment — What if… ?

- What if they cut their hair?
- What if they packed on 50 kg. (~110 lbs.)?
- What if they reframed the camera to only show their face?
- What if they wore baggy cottons that concealed their physique?
- What if they only created audio podcasts with no imagery or video?

I believe if they did any of the above instead of the push and squeeze, they would only get a fraction of 1% of their current views. They would just be another air head, flighty femme, or whiny Karen that no one would want to listen to. There’s no way their “opinion” would be anywhere near as popular.

I’ll guess it’s not about their “opinions” at all. Truth be told, the entirety of their popularity is based on the fact that they’re moderately attractive and they entice with spice, and therefore, their “opinion” gets them cash, clicks, and views. In essence, their “opinion” is just a vocal fill.

Advertising and Click Bait

For some of these sites / channels, if you start clicking around, you’ll eventually wind up at OnlyF@ns. In essence, a lot of this content is click-bait advertising for their OF accounts.

- Women make 70% of all content on OF [1].
- The majority (60%) of OF users are male [1].
- Female OF creators earn 78% more than their male counterparts on average [1,2].

Some of these producers are actually selling something other than themselves, usually clothing, or some other product for women. So these videos are basically functioning as advertising / grift.

There are a select few female content producers who attempt to be about as Red Pilled as women can be. They do cover a lot of Red Pillish advice and information, mostly secular but sometimes Biblical (perhaps by coincidence). But I believe the same principle applies. They’re creating content directed towards thirsty men for the clicks, views, and $$$.

Furthermore, many male content producers will include a thumbnail and/or an introductory scene showing off some cleavage or leg or some other round, supple parts of scantily clad female anatomy. More visual click bait.

Conclusions

Of course, sex sells, or in this case, sex appeal sells, and if they've got it, why not flaunt it to bump up the clicks, views, and $$$?

Or perhaps their marketing strategy is to increase their views by offering something to both women and men, or so the theory goes.

But it's getting to the point at which the gaudy bawdy strumpeting overshadows their content and outweighs their message. In essence, the glorified lewdness IS the overriding message.

This heavy grinding emphasis on sex appeal, and the fact that most of this is advertising grift, click bait, and/or a dragnet for OF, is why I think female online content producers should be considered OASIS, or OASIS lite, or at least a front for it.

Sources

1. Gitnux: Must-Know OnlyF@ns Gender Statistics (2024/4/24)
2. Cosmopolitan: The growing industry where women earn significantly more than men (2017/5/4)

Related

- Σ Frame: Yet another variety of Internet Whoring (2019/10/19)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Exploiting Online Attention (2020/12/9)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Rise of the Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/4)
- Σ Frame: Why is the online amateur sex industry attractive to women? (2021/1/6)
- Σ Frame: Why is the online amateur sex industry attractive to men? (2021/1/8)
- Σ Frame: The Learning Psychology of Women who Participate in the Online Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/13)
- Σ Frame: The Addictive Nature of the Online Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/20)
- Σ Frame: The Future of Intersexual Relationships is Transactional (2021/3/12)
- Σ Frame: Cultural Influences on Asian OASIS Starlets (2021/5/5)

- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Incentives for Bimbofication (2021/8/23)
- Σ Frame: The Disappointments of Transactional Relationships (2023/2/14)
- Σ Frame: Slut Faming (2023/11/21)
- Σ Frame: Controlled Opposition (2023/12/6)
- Σ Frame: Uncovering Nakedness (2023/12/16)
- Adam Piggott: The difference between Mastery and Proficiency (2024/1/4)
- Σ Frame: Herd Behavior : Apparel (2024/9/10)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Effects of the Sexual Revolution on Female Sexuality (2024/9/24)

The Charms of a Psychopath

Jack · 21 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Why are psychos so smooth and suave?

Readership: All
Theme: Gunk
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes
Warning: Images may be NSFW.

Intro

Pr0st!tut!0n is at an all-time high.

…or low, depending on how you see it.

With the downfall of femininity and men pulling out of the dating and marriage markets, pr0st!tut!0n (AKA escorting, OASIS, sugaring) has become the fall-back go-to for wealthy men seeking female 'companionship'.

It's a logical choice. It's better to pay for exactly what they want, than to make a lifelong commitment to something they don't.

A very small number of women with… ahem, 'charms' are able to $uck in mouth over fist in this market.

Let's take a closer look at one in particular.

Case Study — Mia Lee

Articles

- Business Insider: A Wall Street accountant turned professional escort says she's a psychopath – and swears it's the key to making 6 figures (2023/5/21)
- New York Post: I used to work Wall Street — now I'm a 'psychopath' charging men $1.5K an hour (2023/5/22)
- New York Post: Escort who caters to Wall Street bankers rakes in $34K per week in December: 'Most interesting woman they've ever met' (2023/12/18)

Online Presence

- Website: https://www.mialeevip.com/intro
- Twitter: twitter.com/MiaLeeNYC
- Instagram: mialee_nyc
- TikTok: tiktok.com/@MiaLeeNYC
- OnlyFans (top 5%): onlyfans.com/MiaLeeNYC
- YouTube: moneytalkswithmia
- https://allmylinks.com/mialeenyc

Personal Information

- Statistics: 5'2, 115 lbs, 32DD
- Spent 12 years working in finance.
- Speaks 4 languages: English, Chinese, Spanish, Arabic
- Libertarian
- Prefers non-fiction

Psychopathy — The Secret to Success

Ms. Lee owns the label "Psychopath" and she says it is the secret to her $ucce$$.

From The New York Post article:

> "This super-successful sex worker says psychopathy is the secret to being the best in the biz.
>
> Mia Lee went from working on Wall Street to sleeping with married men for money — and doesn't experience any negative emotions about her behavior.
>
> The amorous escort is a "psychopath" by her own admission, who views things in a "transactional" manner, according to Insider's report.

> "I don't really have empathy," she defiantly declared during an interview about her kinky career pivot. "I'm much more cut and dry."
>
> She believes she's the best in the biz because she doesn't experience any feelings."

A crude RP Translation might be: "I'm willing to put aside my requirements for affirmation, dignity, honor, trust, and so on, in order to cash in on male lust." But frankly speaking, isn't this more or less what men want out of a woman? No arrogant pride, no whining and complaining, no drama, no exorbitant expectations, no head games, no incessant demands, no non-stop mouthiness, no Sh!t Tests, no strings attached, etc. Just good company, level-headed conversations, and P_ssy on demand. If she's actually helpful and/or exerts an influence that enhances a man's life, then that's a huge plus.

More from The New York Post article:

> "According to the National Institutes of Health, psychopathy "is a neuropsychiatric disorder marked by deficient emotional responses, lack of empathy, and poor behavioral controls, commonly resulting in persistent antisocial deviance and criminal behavior."
>
> About 1.2% of U.S. adult men and 0.3% to 0.7% of U.S. adult women are considered to have clinically significant levels of psychopathic traits, the American Psychological Association asserts.
>
> Lee added that she operates "very algorithmically" when it comes to relationships, which also stops her from developing any attachment to her male clients."

By 'attachment', I doubt that she's talking about pair bonding. I'm sure she's referring to attachments associated with feminine insecurities — attachments that would almost certainly bring out the inner latent W!tch with a B and lower her value to men.

We already know that psychos are more charming and more thrilling in bed. Now we know why.

What is the secret of her charm?

Certainly there must be more to it, or else every psycho would be as filthy rich as Ms. Lee.

Overall, Ms. Lee is not that beautiful; she's quite common by Asian standards. So what is it?

I believe it is because the "deficient emotional responses" and the "poor behavioral control" aspects of psychopathy have been carefully disciplined to deliver a very narrow set of emotional responses and behavior — specifically those that men find charming.

Here's what I mean.

Of course, I don't know Ms. Lee personally, but I know Chinese women well enough to be able to guess what it is about her that Western men find enchanting.

First of all, sex appeal is not strongly correlated with beauty. Attraction operates somewhat independently from beauty, and is affected by the following qualities.

- She's comfortable in her body. She's not afraid to reveal her sensual, sexual nature.
- She delights in her Femininity, as opposed to posing as a Strong Independent Woman™.
- She knows that vulnerability is what makes women irresistibly attractive and beautiful to men.
- She's self-aware. She knows exactly what men want from her, and she has the humility and self-discipline to not only deliver, but to surpass expectations.
- She's sufficiently intelligent enough to carry a conversation. Ms. Lee appears to be exceptionally intelligent and well educated, allowing her to converse about business, finances, and other cosmopolitan affairs that are of interest to high faluting men.
- She is wise enough to respect the Centrality of the Male Ego and to not get in the way of men's sources of dignity and self-esteem. She probably makes a whole-hearted effort to affirm and reinforce the male egos of her clients.
- Some Asian women have charms, skills, and "special abilities" that Westerners could never imagine.* Think of sucking a golf ball through a garden hose and the Old Faithful geyser spouting every minute, and you might get the idea. Their aim is so perfect that they actually have competitions.

- Last but certainly not least, her body is almost perfectly proportioned.

A little more on that last point. During my study of Ms. Lee, I came across some nude photos of her, and I can tell you that her anatomical symmetry and proportion extend to the finest details. This plays into western men's sexual penchant for mature female sexuality, i.e. full breasts and a well-defined HWR. In contrast, Chinese and other east Asian cultures place more emphasis on the shape and proportions of a woman's face. Concerning the body, Chinese tastes in aesthetic feminine beauty value thinness and especially thin, pencil straight legs above all other factors. Chinese men would deem Ms. Lee to be below average because her face is very 'common' and her body is 'over-sexed', much like how Wh!te men regard Black men's obsession with a huge booty.

To offer readers some additional trivia, some Asian women are what they call "Milkers". They have relatively large tits and they're always lactating 24-7. They have to wear maxi pads in their bras, and they always smell like milk, sometimes spoiled milk if they're not attentive to their hygiene. Some women who are Milkers are proud of it and make it known to others. I guess that is a healthy form of self-acceptance. There are also women called "Squirters". I won't explain because Westerners are already familiar with this. In general, Milkers and Squirters are held in high regard and are able to attract higher quality men for marriage. OTOH, some Milkers and Squirters who are not interested in marriage will cash in on these traits by going into 'escorting', P0rn, and/or pr0st!tut!on.

Western men find all these traits to be extremely 'exotic' (especially compared to liberal Western women) and will therefore shell out clams for the oriental oyster.

H/T: Patriactionary: Thirsty simps fork out for plain jane hapa ho (2023/12/18)

Related

- Σ Frame (Lexet): Gynapotheosis (2021/4/21)
- Σ Frame (Jack, NovaSeeker): Cultural Influences on Asian OASIS Starlets (2021/5/5)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Kardashian Fantasy (2021/5/24)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Women Crave Male Attention (2021/7/26)

- Σ Frame (Jack): The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The more things change, the more they stay the same. (2022/2/28)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft? (2023/12/5)
- Universitat Oberta de Catalunya: From sugar baby to online sex: the socio-demographic manifestations and characteristics of transactional sex (2024/1/31)
- Σ Frame (Jack): A Snapshot of Eastern Femininity (2024/2/26)
- Courage World: Taiwan's Prostitution

An Argument for Prostitution

Jack · 23 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Calling sloring strumpets what they are.

Readership: Men
Theme: Gunk
Author's Note: This essay was contributed by DocLove. Added commentary from Jack.
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Relationships Between the Sexes are Dwindling

First of all, I want to point out that the typical pr0st!tute these days is not the boozy, drug addled psychopath wandering the streets in a stained and tattered pink miniskirt as was stereotypical in years past. Pr0st!tut!0n has been whitewashed in the form of "escort services", and has taken a significant online presence in the form of the OASIS (e.g. OnlyF@ns), and more informally as "paid dating", and sugaring.

The demand for these types of transactional relationships has risen significantly in recent years, largely due to the breakdown in intersexual relations as described in this article at Lovism. (TheDeti shared these links in a comment. The second link is a discussion of the first on reddit.)

- Lovism (Henry Blair): The relations between the sexes are ending — The reason is not technology (2022/10/9) [Archive]
- reddit/AllPillDebate: Male sexlessness is skyrocketing compared to female sexlessness — basically, women are sharing Chads. There's no way to spin that any other way. (2022/10/11)

Everyone should read the first link. Lovism is a site that promotes Equalitarianism, so I was surprised to see this article which is absolutely Dalrockian in the way it breaks down the numbers and offers an objective critical review.

In the Lovism article, one claim in particular struck me as being off-kilter. The author, Henry Blair, says technological advancement (which includes Hookup apps such as OK Cupid, Tinder, or OnlyF@ns as some but not all examples) is NOT responsible for destroying heterosexual relationships. He argues that if this were the case, then h0m0sexual relationships for both men and women would be destroyed also. He says even though heterosexuals are having less sex than 20 years ago, h0m0sexuals are having more sex than 20 years ago, and this is evidence that hookup apps are bringing people together as designed. (My disagreement is to say this kind of technology enables more promiscuity, which in turn has longitudinal consequences that destroy not only heterosexual relationships but also families and the very fabric of society.) Instead, Blair says heterosexual relationships between men and women are being destroyed because of Feminism and m!s@ndry. (I'll agree on this, as would most readers here.)

Blair goes further to say man-h@t!ng Feminists and m!s@ndr!sts planned the disaster between the sexes — a conspiratorial view that I didn't expect to see from an Equalitarian site.

He is quite correct to point out that the goal of our ruling elite (who are mostly man hating Feminists and m!s@ndr!sts) is to harm heterosexuals, especially male heterosexuals, and to promote h0m0sexuals, especially female h0m0sexuals. Blair strongly implies that their goal is to make women the head of the household with all of the rights, privileges, and benefits with none of the obligations, duties, and responsibilities, while men get the exact opposite in heterosexual relationships of any and all kinds.

Sadly, even many anti-Feminist men are man hating / m!s@ndr!st, and so are many religious people of all faiths and even so called Conservatives or Traditionalists. All these groups hate men approximately the same as man hating Feminists and Leftists do. They've all fallen under the sway of TPTB and each group has played a part in tearing down heterosexual relations and marriage through various avenues.

That's the current situation that we're now facing.

Prostitution should be Decriminalized

All that said, I think pr0st!tut!0n should be decriminalized, or at the very least legalized and lightly regulated and taxed which is second best.

Christians may wonder why I say pr0st!tut!0n should be decriminalized, even though the acts of doing, and thinking about fornication, and even more so adultery are mortal sins which one can suffer in Hell forever for doing. Yet, it is less recognized that the sin of habitually masturbating and even the thoughts of lust are also mortal sins which can cause one to suffer in Hell forever. These are carnally different sins, but are spiritually the same.

I do not want to burn in Hell forever, but if I consider the position of an unbeliever who is going to burn in Hell forever, then given the choice, I would prefer to do it for fornication and adultery than for masturbation and lust because I would suffer equally or nearly so for both pairs of sins. (I know unbelievers are not likely to be concerned about this, but believers may consider this on their behalf.) There is little moral difference between fornicating or committing adultery with pr0st!tutes and fornicating or committing adultery with anyone you might meet. IMO, people are more likely to find the grace of God by fornicating with a lover than by visiting pr0st!tutes, but OTOH, the majority of men who see pr0st!tutes are men who are decided bachelors who have chosen that lifestyle, or men who have no chance with women anyway. Only man hating Feminists and m!s@ndr!sts would say pr0st!tut!0n sex is worse than casual sex / fornication (because the former does nothing for the Feminine Imperative), and they are not likely to have any qualms about fornication and adultery as being sins per se. What we see from them, rather, is that fornication is outrightly celebrated as a social convention and adultery is more or less acceptable for women but NOT for men.

Another reason I endorse legalizing pr0st!tut!0n is because it doesn't directly affect Christians. Christian men and women can always choose to NOT participate. But allowing it provides an outlet that will mercifully ameliorate the sex drive of non-Christian men and grant them a moment of post-nut clarity about what they're doing with their lives.

A third reason why I think pr0st!tut!0n should be legalized is because the defacto reason why pr0st!tut!0n is banned is to harm, humiliate, and control all men of all sexual orientations, but especially heterosexual men. Pr0st!tut!0n, when freely practiced, frees all men from the vices of withholding women, and especially heterosexual men from this gynocentric constraint, which is falsely proffered as a moral and/or religious constraint. It doesn't harm women who freely choose to be pr0st!tutes, and even reduces harm to all women, as it provides an outlet for the unquenchable male thirst. But the man hating Feminists and misandrists hate not being able to control, humiliate, and harm men, even if improving the better treatment of men would lead to better outcomes for women and reduce worse outcomes for women.

The fourth reason why I favor permitting pr0st!tut!0n is because I believe it would upset the black market sex trade and human trafficking. Maybe I'm wrong about this, but as of yet, I haven't been convinced otherwise.

Prostitution as a Political Counter-Force to Abortion

There's another politically motivated reason why I think pr0st!tut!0n should be permitted.

NaturallyAspirated wrote,

> "Additionally, this is why conservatives need to give up the issue [of abortion] politically. It's ingrained in modern women that abortion needs to be legal and available. It's a deep down subconscious feeling that modern women have, and they won't vote against it. They are products of the sexual revolution, and having to bear the consequences of sexual acts is unacceptable."

If we can't eliminate abortion, then maybe conservatives should push for legalizing and even subsidizing pr0st!tut!0n instead. It would be a bipartisan solution too, as this would solve the Democrat's "man problem" in a jiffy. Imagine how chipper men would be if they all had a trollop ticket for 10 freebies a month between the ages of 18 and 65! Any more in excess of 10 would be at their own expense. Let tramp tickets be legal tender, available at ATMs, transferrable, and with no expiration date. Unused tart tickets can be redeemed for a tax rebate. Let the harlots be government employees with their own calling card and have them be checked for cooties every day. Award meretricious strumpets bonus pay for servicing more than 10 Johnsons a day and for repeat customers. Hippos need not apply. Have running tiered competitions for the largest volume of ejaculate, the longest shot distance, and the most orgasms per hour, culminating in state and national Spunk championships. Charge spectators a fee for additional revenue. Give out chewing gum, mints, pennants, and snuff at the door. Make a reality TV series out of the most desperate and kinky nymphomaniacs. Anything for $$$ and taxes. After all, the need for sex is ingrained in modern men and it needs to be legal and readily available. It's a deep down subconscious satisfaction that modern men have been deprived of, and they'll never vote against it. The centrality of sex is a product of the sexual revolution, and men having to bear the consequences of a life without sex is unacceptable.

I'm hoping readers appreciate the satire, but it is a fascinating proposal. The bottom line is that pr0st!tut!0n would be more morally acceptable than bl00dy ab0rt!0n.

Caveats

One caveat here is that not all pr0st!tutes have freely chosen that lifestyle, but have been forced into it somehow. This gets into a can of worms surrounding abduction / k!dn@pping, human tr@ff!ck!ng, sex tr@ff!ck!ng, etc. which are on the rise in recent years. It is unknown whether decriminalizing pr0st!tut!0n would exacerbate these problems further or lessen them due to the greater ubiquity and availability of pr0st!tutes and the reduced market demand for them that would result. Perhaps regulation and taxation would be beneficial but its overall effectiveness remains questionable.

Another issue is that decriminalizing pr0st!tut!0n sends the message that illicit sex is acceptable… but gee… we're already there now, and have been for a few years. We just don't call it pr0st!tut!0n. Instead, it's labeled "bodily autonomy", "choice", "feminine power", OnlyF@ns, "sexual freedom", sugaring, etc. Only the Manosphere has the gall to correctly label them as H03s.

Maybe it's time we faced reality. There are no laws against OnlyF@ns, etc. Pr0st!tut!0n is already defacto legal.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Rise of the Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/4)
- Σ Frame: Why is the online amateur sex industry attractive to men? (2021/1/8)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Economics of the New Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/11)
- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)
- Σ Frame: On the Supply and Demand of Withholding Sex (2024/10/9)
- Catacomb Resident: Two Worlds (2024/10/24)

A “GOOD” Barbershop!

Jack · 25 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An anecdotal story of a culture shock.

Readership: All
Theme: Gunk
Author’s Note: Originally written on Saturday, 2008/4/5.
Length: 550 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

Before I came to Taiwan in 2004, my Taiwanese friends in the States told me to beware of barbershops in Taiwan. They said that many barbershops in Taiwan are fronts for pr0st!tut!0n.

Later, after I had come to Taiwan and had been here for about a month, I needed a haircut. Being so fresh off the plane, all the barbershops looked the same to me. I didn’t want to get caught in a bad scene that would affect my reputation, so I told my Taiwanese Boss at my place of employment what my friends in the States had told me, and I asked him to recommend a “good barbershop”.

Smiling, he said he understood me, and he gave me special instructions to go to a certain barbershop on a certain street, saying that he went there himself “quite frequently”. He also told me that another English Teacher at our school also went there too. He said they were “quite good!”

So I went to this barbershop, and I sat down in the chair. It was empty except for one very old woman who moved in slow motion. She didn’t speak English, nor I Chinese, so I made a cutting motion with my fingers in my hair, to convey my purpose there.

That lady was so slow, it took her about forty minutes to cut my hair, and she didn’t do an especially great job.

As I sat in the chair, I noticed that there were hundreds if not thousands of pornographic magazines stacked up all along the wall and in several other places throughout the room. I thought it was strange, but I didn’t think about it any further, because I trusted my boss’s advice.

During that time, a few men came into the shop. They waved to the lady, and walked straight to the back room. One of the men had a couple children with him, but the children stayed outside and played in the street. I was the only person there getting my hair cut.

When the old lady finished cutting my hair after what seemed like an eternity, I paid her and left, thinking it was a really bizarre Barbershop. I wondered why my boss had recommended this place.

During the next few days, I mulled this experience over in my mind, and slowly came to understand what had happened. I had asked my boss to recommend a “good Barbershop”. By that, I meant a Barbershop that was not morally compromising — one that was not a front for pr0st!tut!0n. But I am sure that when I said I wanted to find a “good Barbershop”, my boss thought I was looking for a Barbershop with good service, i.e. a legally registered business, with beautiful, young, healthy girls that were not too expensive. It shocked me to think that my boss and the other teacher openly professed to go there “quite frequently”, and said that they were “quite good”!

Related

- Wikipedia: Prostitution in Taiwan
- Σ Frame: Why is illicit sex so enticing, and so prevalent? (2019/5/25)
- Σ Frame: Why is premarital sex a sin? (2020/8/14)
- Σ Frame: One Night in Beijing (2021/2/12)
- Σ Frame: Concubinage (2023/5/19)
- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)
- Σ Frame: The Breakfast Shop (2024/2/14)

7 Types of Prostitutes in Taiwan

Jack · 28 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Different strokes for different folks.

Readership: All
Theme: Gunk
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes
Warning: Graphic descriptions ahead.

General Information

DocLove described pr0st!tut!0n in Amsterdam, South Korea, and Nevada in a previous comment.

Here's what I know about pr0st!tut!0n in Taiwan. I don't have first-hand experience, so all this is from word of mouth.

When I first came to Taiwan in 2004, pr0st!tut!0n was legal.* Brothels had to be registered with the government and working girls had to have a license. They were taxed like any other business, but they also had some special regulations. I don't know the details of those regulations, but I would guess they covered pay, working hours, etc. Outside of these establishments, pr0st!tut!0n was illegal.* The laws were poorly enforced if at all, unless there were some other scandalous implications going on.

A girl drinking pearl milk tea, a popular drink in Taiwan. The straw is extra large to allow the 'pearls' of tapioca to be sucked through it.

A typical price was NTD$5,000 (or ~USD$150) for 1/2 hour. Compared to what DocLove said about Amsterdam and Nevada with prices ranging from $700 to $3,200 for half an hour, this is really cheap. However, it wasn't like foreigners could just fly in and get a pr0st!tute for the weekend. Most pr0st!tutes would refuse to service a foreigner. The few that did were older, lower quality, and charged a lot more money. They'd also demand a clean health examination — a recent report obtained since arriving in Taiwan and issued by a national hospital.

Instead of the anonymous, touch-and-go approach of Western pr0st!tut!0n, most brothels and pr0st!tutes in Taiwan strongly preferred to have a loyal clientele of regular customers. Thus, a brothel was more like a small club or community rather than a wh0rehouse with a revolving door, as Westerners might think of it. One benefit of this "club membership" management strategy is that it controlled the spread of diseases. Another benefit is that it contained gossip and created a better 'reputation' for everyone involved. In terms of business, the reason for the low prices was to attract more frequent visits from regular clients, and to keep the girls busy and the clients satiated — a strategy that offers better customer service and satisfaction, and brings in more $$$ over time.

Sometime around 2010, pr0st!tut!0n was made illegal.* Other policy changes of seemingly Western origin soon followed. This hit the big establishments the hardest. By 'big', I mean, some of them were like 10 story hotels with over a hundred working girls — one in every room. Some were family businesses that had been operating for generations. All of these big establishments stopped operating as brothels, and most of them transitioned into either hotels or KTVs.

Many smaller brothels continued to service their regular clients under the cover of in-group secrecy, and the establishments hosted by gangs made special 'arrangements' with the police to continue operations. Interestingly, many policemen frequented the houses run by gangs.

 What I've heard is significantly different from what is written about the subject on Wikipedia.*
 A KTV is a place where a group of people can rent a room to party in. The room is equipped with disco lights, a movie projector, a nice stereo with hundreds of songs to choose from, microphones for karaoke, etc., and you can order all sorts of drinks and snacks.*

KTV girls.

7 Types of Pr0st!tutes

Another interesting thing I learned about pr0st!tut!0n in Taiwan is that there were different kinds of pr0st!tutes catering to different sorts of men's needs. I've given nicknames to these different types and summarized their specialty of expertise below.

1. Raw Dog Pr0st!tutes – Performs sexual favors straight-up and with no frills added. (This type best matches the stereotypical Western concept of pr0st!tut!0n.)

2. Party Pr0st!tutes – Wears slinky party clothes, serves drinks, will sing and dance, and then strip and go wild when the alcohol kicks in. (This type is what Westerners might call 'escorts'.)
3. Masseuse Pr0st!tutes – Will give clients a full body massage with a happy ending. You could choose from several types of massages, e.g. a Chinese medicine massage, an oil massage, a pressure point massage, etc. Some were chiropractors and would snap your back, neck, etc. to help you relax before the grand finale.
4. 'Special Skills' Pr0st!tutes – Catered to particular fetishes in which they are quite skilled. Some had unique anatomical abilities, e.g. Milkers, Shooters, Squirters, and others. For example, some Milkers have nipples so large that a 'small' man can insert his rod into them. Then after he finishes, she (or the client) suckles his sluice from her own tit. Shooters can suck spherical objects like ping pong balls into their obstetric orifice and then shoot them across the room with considerable force, hence their name. Also, large tapioca pearls (~1 cm. in diameter) are sucked up through a straw and popped out. Clients will try to catch them in their mouths. (I couldn't believe this stuff until I saw some photos and videos.)
5. Private Hires – Women hired for exclusive service to one man, or a group of men (e.g. business partners), or a family household. (Yes, fathers, sons, uncles, and cousins were all in). If good relationships were established, this arrangement would continue for years. In the latter context, it was not uncommon for the woman to be treated like a member of the family.
6. Mommy Pr0st!tutes – Mostly older women who could offer men no-holds-barred 'comfort', emotional intimacy, and 'moral' support. They'd patiently listen to your sob story, give you a hug (or whatever), help you cry it out, and feel better.
7. Granny Pr0st!tutes – Older women who had retired from the above types of prostitution, but who, due to their vast sexperience, were especially adept at giving advice and council about various things, as well as other favors too.

Depending on how pr0st!tut!0n is defined as transactional sex, Concubines and Sugar Babies might also be included in this list.

Younger men usually saw the first two types. Older men usually saw the last two.

A lot has changed since I first came to Taiwan. With the exception of the first 2 or maybe 3, I don't think you could find any of the above types anymore. Now, however, there are many pr0st!tutes of the OASIS variety.

Related

- Courage World: Taiwan's Prostitution
- Σ Frame: The Problem with Having a Foreign Boyfriend (2015/10/7)
- Σ Frame: Cross-Cultural Relationships and Dating in Taiwan (2016/10/17)
- Σ Frame: A Noodle Asian Inspiration (2017/11/3)
- The Salty Egg: Snakes & Whores: Snake Alley Then and Now (2017/12/31)
- Σ Frame: One Night in Beijing (2021/2/12)
- Σ Frame (Jack, NovaSeeker): Cultural Influences on Asian OASIS Starlets (2021/5/5)
- Σ Frame: The Charms of a Psychopath (2024/10/21)
- Σ Frame: An Argument for Prostitution (2024/10/23)
- Catacomb Resident: Two Worlds (2024/10/24)
- Σ Frame: A "GOOD" Barbershop! (2024/10/25)

New Developments on Microchimerism

Jack · 29 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Getting F_cked silly is now ¡Sc!eNcE!

Readership: Men
Theme: Gunk
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

How Microchimerism is Acquired

Microchimerism is the presence of cells and/or DNA from one individual in another genetically distinct individual.

HUMAN CHIMERA: When two fertilized embryos fuse, the resulting individual carries two distinct genomes. If the cell lines carry genes that code for significantly different skin colors, this form of chimerism can manifest in variegated skin patterns known as lines of Blaschko.
A. Bygum, et al., BMC Medical Genetics, 12:79, 2011.
Image Source.

Many studies agree that the sources of microchimerism (Mc) include…

- Pregnancies
- Organ transplants
- Blood transfusions
- A male twin, either live or 'vanished'.
- Abortion, including induced, spontaneous, or 'unrecognized' (???).
- An older brother's DNA transferred by the maternal circulation during gestation.
- Sexual intercourse, i.e. semen.

During pregnancy, genetic material and cells are bi-directionally exchanged between the fetus and mother, resulting in a persisting presence of the foreign cells and/or DNA in the recipient.

In women without sons, male DNA can also be acquired from an abortion or a miscarriage. In addition to prior pregnancies, male Mc could be acquired by a female from a recognized or vanished male twin, an older male sibling, or through non-irradiated blood transfusion.

It is believed that DNA and other cells can cross the human blood-brain barrier (BBB) and reside in the brain. Changes in BBB permeability occur during pregnancy and may therefore provide a unique opportunity for the establishment of Mc in the brain. One study by Chan et al. [1] detected male DNA in female brains. 63% (37 of 59) of the females tested harbored male microchimerism in multiple regions of the brain.

Findings vary, but in general, foreign DNA in the brain is significantly greater among women with neurological diseases, leading to the hypotheses that Mc is correlated with neurological degeneration, psychiatric disorders [2], and autoimmune disorders [3].

In addition to the brain, Mc appears to persist in the blood, bone, and bone marrow for decades, and is present among different hematopoietic lineages. Moreover, Mc appears to integrate and generate specific cell types in tissues.

Microchimerism in Childless Women

Yan, et al. [4] reported finding microchimerism in females who never had children, leading to the hypothesis that semen is the source of the foreign DNA.
In this study, women were categorized into 4 groups according to their pregnancy history.

- Group A had only daughters (n = 26). 8% had Mc.
- Group B had spontaneous abortions (n = 23). 22% had Mc.
- Group C had induced abortions (n = 23). 57% had Mc.
- Group D were nulligravid (n = 48). 10% had Mc.

Note that the prevalence of male microchimerism is significantly greater among women who have elected to have an abortion. It is unknown whether this originates from the vacated fetuses or from the gene pools of sperm swilling in their systems.

Conclusions

Reading between the lines, applying some Red Pill theory, and extrapolating outward…

- Women who elect to have abortions are more likely to have multiple partners.
- Sexual promiscuity may increase Mc and thereby increase the likelihood of neurological degeneration and/or disease.
- Women with neurological degeneration and diseases are the crazies, and we know crazies have a livid sex life.

Moreover, there is a correlation between Mc, promiscuity, and psycho. IOW, women can F-ck their brains out, quite literally. But researchers will never say this.

The Manosphere predicted this years ago (see links under Related), but now it's looking quite likely that women who get stuffed with multiple men's slop are more likely to have a higher incidence of Mc, and are thus more likely to lose their marbles and/or succumb to disease, especially as they age and/or rack up an N count.

References

1. Chan WFN, Gurnot C, Montine TJ, Sonnen JA, Guthrie KA, Nelson JL (2012) Male Microchimerism in the Human Female Brain. PLoS ONE 7(9): e45592. https://doi.org/10.1371/journal.pone.0045592
2. Demirbek B, Demirhan O. Microchimerism may be the cause of psychiatric disorders. Archives of Psychiatry and Mental Health. 2019; 3: 042-046.
3. Shrivastava S, Naik R, Suryawanshi H, Gupta N. Microchimerism: A new concept. Journal of Oral and Maxillofacial Pathology. 2019 May-Aug; 23(2):311. doi: 10.4103/jomfp.JOMFP_85_17. PMID: 31516258; PMCID: PMC6714269.
4. Yan Z, Lambert NC, Guthrie KA, Porter AJ, Loubiere LS, Madeleine MM, Stevens AM, Hermes HM, Nelson JL. Male microchimerism in women without sons: quantitative assessment and correlation with pregnancy history. American Journal of Medicine. 2005 Aug; 118(8):899-906. doi: 10.1016/j.amjmed.2005.03.037. PMID: 16084184.

Related

- Wikipedia: Microchimerism
- Wikipedia: Telegony
- Ultimate Men's Guide: Microchimerism – Women Retain Men's DNA
- The Scientist: From Many, One (2015/4/1) [Archive]
- The New Modern Man: The Carousel Effect: DNA from Previous Sex Partners Could Affect Future Offspring (2016/8/18)
- Identigene: DNA and Heterochromia: Two Different-Colored Eyes! (2017/7/10)

Pro-Choice = Anti-Responsibility

Jack · 30 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Let's be honest for a moment.

Readership: All
Theme: Gunk
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

The Arguments

Eternity Matters: Pro-Lifers Don't Care About Kids After They Are Born? (2024/4/19)

In this post, Eternity Matters offers an excellent logical / moral / philosophical rebuttal to the common arguments defending abortion. However, it misses the central, underlying, problematic issue of selfish motivation. Let me explain.

Let's start with the titular accusation.

> "Pro-lifers don't care about kids after they are born."

This psychological projection reveals the pro-choicer's position, NOT that of pro-lifers. It is the pro-choicers who don't care about kids, before or after they are born. They are more concerned about allowing women to evade responsibility for their poor choices. That's why they're so fervent in defending abortion, in spite of any moral argument thrown at them.

EM offers a couple arguments against the common pro-choicer's claims.

> "First, show that pointing out a moral wrong does not obligate you to take responsibility for the situation."

True, but this argument doesn't apply to the person making the choice — the woman who wants an abortion. In this case, pointing out that abortion is a moral wrong requires her to take full responsibility of the situation for the next 18+ years. Of course, she's not going to 'hear' any rationale that undercuts her preconcluded interests.

> "Second, explain that while we aren't morally obligated to help after the babies are born to be able to speak out against abortion, Christians do many things with their time and money anyway…"

Again, no matter what others do to help babies or mothers, this doesn't allow pregnant women to escape their responsibilities. Abortion does. So this argument fails to fall on morally deaf ears.

> "…unless you are truly pro-abortion, then you are obligated to help as well. After all, if you claim to be pro-choice and the women choose life, then the same care giving obligation falls on you."

Another non-starter, simply because it does not absolve them from their responsibilities or make selfish immorality any more acceptable.

"Reee!!! How dare you demand that women who want to escape accountability and responsibility should be obligated to care for other women who wish to escape accountability and responsibility and apparently were not able to do so!" (More projection.)

Another witty comeback I've heard is this one.

> "I am pro-choice before conception, and pro-life after."

But this argument is even more opprobrious to 'pro-choicers', because it requires one to take more responsibility, not only for a pregnancy, but also for one's sexual behavior. Unacceptable!

Politics are Personal

Remember the catch cliché, "The personal is political"? The converse is just as valid (within wimminz wanky world view): "Politics are personal" (viz. NOT moral philosophizing).

Thus, to debased minds, "taking responsibility" has a completely different meaning. In this context, 'responsibility' is NOT a moral issue surrounding sex and procreation. Instead, it means doing what is necessary to AVOID taking responsibility (for a pregnancy in this case) and making it appear politically acceptable. “Taking responsibility” means taking the necessary precautions to evade responsibility.

Peeling Back the Veil of Faux Propriety

Let’s be honest. The lawlessness of the defiled land stipulates that when no one is willing to be willingly responsible (e.g. father, mother, government, society…), then a sacrifice must be made to redeem the sins of the Feminine Imperative.

The root motivation of ‘pro-choicers’ is to evade holding women responsible for their sexual / reproductive behaviors, euphemistically called ‘choices’, when in fact, there is very little thought or planning behind it. Abortion is more of a default institutionalized failsafe.

So when you get down to the nutz and boltz of it, it’s not about babies, or mothers, or costs of living, or ‘family planning’, or freedom of choice, or lifestyle, or ‘quality of life’, or any other proxy wall of philosophical defense. The bare truth is, most pro-choicers are actually anti-accountability and anti-responsibility, and if given a ‘choice’, they will always choose less responsibility (for themselves, but more for others). They are thus pro-abortion by default, but they aren’t willing to own it because of the backlash they would receive (another evasion of responsibility).

Remember, accountability is anathema to women, and therefore will not be tolerated in a gynocentric society.

Furthermore, this attitude is not limited to abortion but extends to other morally tinged social issues as well (e.g. the role of big government, health care, homelessness, !mm!grat!0n, sanctuary cities, social contracts, socialism, welfare, etc.). For example, in his post, How Strange… (2024/4/14), fellow blogger Giuseppe Filotto points out how liberals mindlessly push a narrative (hosting !mm!gr@nts in this case) but have no wish to actually deal with the consequences of said narrative. They are essentially anti-responsibilitists.

The Conclusions

The problem with EM’s otherwise excellent post is that any moral or rational argument is ineffective when debating against a moral child masquerading in an adult skin suit and LARPing adulthood. You can’t argue with a moral child who is determined to eliminate children so that they can continue to be a selfish child themselves. You can't remove an ego supply of oxytocin from a narcissist any easier than you can take candy away from a baby. Women want an easy out, and just like selfish children, they will fight fang and claw to retain it. That is the real issue. That's why the issue of abortion will never go away.

Table 1: The Distribution of Women's Premarital Sex Partners, by Marriage Cohort
	1970s	1980s	1990s	2000s	2010s
0 partner	21%	17%	14%	12%	5%
1 partner	43%	36%	26%	21%	22%
2 partners	16%	15%	13%	13%	12%
3 partners	8%	11%	11%	11%	11%
4-5 partners	6%	12%	16%	17%	18%
6-9 partners	4%	5%	11%	13%	14%
10+ partners	2%	4%	10%	14%	18%
total	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%
N	268	1,921	4,312	3,598	273

Society has to be structured around the incompetencies of those who are the least morally responsible. Everyone else bears the burdens, pays the costs, and suffers from the antics of the lower moral quintile. That's why, regardless of any other moral, political, or social positions they might have, women, even conservative "Christian" women, will vote for any politician who supports abortion (i.e. Kamala Harris). That's why every politician has to be 'pro-choice' if he wants to win an election (e.g. Trump's waffling).

Insurrection Barbie @DefiantlyFree · 21h

Please stop lying about abortions. Almost all of them are performed as a form of birth control, and not because of God forbid r*pe or incest or mother's health.

This is from the CDC, the lies are just Orwellian.

Percentage	Reason
0.01%	The pregnancy resulted from an incestuous relationship
0.15%	The woman was raped
0.20%	The woman's life was endangered by the pregnancy
0.98%	There was a serious fetal abnormality
1.48%	The woman's physical health was threatened by the pregnancy
1.88%	The woman's psychological health was threatened by the pregnancy
20.4%	The woman aborted for social or economic reasons
74.9%	No reason (elective)

Once upon a time, I used to feel sorry for women who got abortions and their lost progeny. But over the years, after seeing the stubborn and sometimes violent incorrigibility of anti-responsibilitists (AKA 'pro-choicers') and learning that the majority of abortions (~95.3%) are chosen as a form of birth control, I've come to regard any empathy for them as a wasted emotional effort. Sympathy for blatant, unrepentant immorality is likewise immoral. They've lost the moral argument, they've forfeited the moral high ground, and there is no way to moralize immorality. There's no way to justify anti-responsibility.

Related

- Σ Frame: Abortion and Birth Control
- The Guttmacher Institute: Relationships Between Contraception and Abortion: A Review of the Evidence (2003/3/1)
- Master Class: Understanding the Tragedy of the Commons: Definition and Examples (2022/10/13)
- Pew Research Center: What the data says about abortion in the U.S. (2024/3/25)
- Giuseppe Filotto: How Strange… (2024/4/14)

The Price of Cats and Wine

Jack · 31 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Roughly 2-12 years of labor to pay it off.

Readership: All
Theme: Gunk
Length: 750 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Have you ever wondered how much $$$ aging spinsters spend on their cats and wine over the course of their lifetime? This post will give you an idea.

For the sake of analysis, let's suppose that a stereotypical post-wall rider finishes her cougar phase at the age of 40 and settles down into the proverbial life of wine and cats while working for Big Corp. She continues this lifestyle until shortly before her death. The average lifespan of an American woman is now at 77, reduced by 2.3 years since 2019 due to C0V!D. So let's say that's about 35 years of fur babies and self-anesthetization with ethanol.

The Price of Cats

If we suppose that Spinster Stacy attaches herself to 1 cat at a time, and replaces it with another when it dies, then assuming that a cat lives 15 years, she will have 2.3 cats over 35 years.

The cost of a cat varies depending on cat breed, age, and how much the owner wants to pamper the critter, but the basics come in around a minimum of $405 for the first year with vaccines, etc., and then about $340 for each year after.

$405 x 3 = $1,215
$340 x 32 = $10,880

Thus, the total cost of owning 1 cat at a time and 3 cats in succession for 35 years = $12,095.

If we assume that Stacy has more than one cat, then a rough estimate would multiply that number by the number of cats she has.

2 cats = $24,190
3 cats = $36,285
4 cats = $48,380
5 cats = $60,475

The Price of Wine

A conservative estimate of one $7.00 bottle of wine per day for 35 years totals $89,425. Let's call it an even $90,000 because of parties and weekends.

If she drinks 2 bottles of wine per day, then that figure doubles. $180,000.

Three bottles of wine per day is $270,000.

More than 4 bottles of wine per day is expected to reduce life expectancy, so we'll cap it off there.

If she prefers pricey French wine, then that number goes up proportionately.

Totals

The total cost of the cats and wine lifestyle is quite pricey. For a 35 year time span, the numbers work out like this.

1 bottle of wine per day and 1 cat = $102,095
1 bottle of wine per day and 2 cats = $114,190
1 bottle of wine per day and 3 cats = $126,285
1 bottle of wine per day and 4 cats = $138,380
1 bottle of wine per day and 5 cats = $150,475

2 bottles of wine per day and 1 cat = $192,095
2 bottles of wine per day and 2 cats = $204,190
2 bottles of wine per day and 3 cats = $216,285
2 bottles of wine per day and 4 cats = $228,380
2 bottles of wine per day and 5 cats = $240,475

3 bottles of wine per day and 1 cat = $282,095
3 bottles of wine per day and 2 cats = $294,190
3 bottles of wine per day and 3 cats = $306,285
3 bottles of wine per day and 4 cats = $318,380
3 bottles of wine per day and 5 cats = $330,475

These are just conservative estimates. If she buys expensive vintage, hosts parties, or spends thousands on pet gr00ming, manicures, and gourmet pet food, then these numbers may double or even triple.

Conclusions

It is not unreasonable to assume that a lonely spinster might spend upwards of half a million $$$ or more on wine and cats over the course of the 35 post fun years of her sad lifetime.

Assuming that she makes $40,000 a year, that means between 2.5 to 12.5 years of those remaining 35 years before retirement will be working just to pay for her booze and pets.

Under an alternate calculation, the current court system forces an ex-husband to underwrite that bill. Wise wimminz should be settling HARD at least once in life to avail of that financial bonus. She can just say, "It's for the children" (where 'children' means fur babies). Betas beware!

Considering the fact that more than 50% of women are single (and this number is expected to rise), the Californication wine industry could expect to see a huge boon in business in the coming decades. This would be a good time to invest in distilleries and wineries.

Also, the numbers of homeless / stray cats and cat shelters may very well go down, but that's good news for cats, or bad news if you're thinking about becoming a veterinarian.

Related

- Σ Frame: Wimmin Luv Cats because ¡Science! (2021/10/31)
- Σ Frame: The ¡ScIeNcE! of Cat Ladies (2023/10/31)
- Σ Frame: On the Incubation of Witches (2023/11/30)

The Strengths and Weaknesses of Virtue

Jack · 1 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The substance of a man's Virtue is also that of his Vice.

Readership: All
Theme: Virtue
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Chastity

A man who holds chastity as his chief personal value will always turn out to be a simpering cuck in the moment of crisis. His lovers will feel frustrated, pressured, and unfulfilled, and will curse him before dumping or divorcing him. Ch@ds will steal his love interests and ravage their hearts, driving him mad with jealousy, rage, and self-immolating ruminations.

But because I am with Christ, I am not chaste in vain. My chastity has a purpose to honor the Lord in my body and to preserve that which He intends to sanctify. But ironically, as I draw closer to Christ, my confidence, faith, and passion arouses my desire and makes me more irresistible to the opposite sex, thereby thrusting me through an obstacle course of temptations daily — the cute girl next door, the salacious coworker, p0rn at a click, and even my nightly dreams constantly arouse and abuse my libido. The more I pursue chastity, the more difficult it becomes.

Excellence

A man who holds excellence as his chief personal value will always turn out to be a cold, heartless cad in the moment of crisis. For the pursuit of excellence requires constant self-discipline and a relentless will to achieve more and perform better. One must habitually and regularly reject all pleasures and satisfactions that would erode one's ardor and lull one into complacency. One must reject or whip into shape anyone who holds him back or slows him down in any way. Worse, excellence is a goal that can never be achieved, as there is always more to be done and better ways to do it.

But because I am with Christ, I seek excellence in His name. But He says to me, "It is enough. Take time to rest." Then I must argue against my motives to live my best life. I must wrestle against my inner restlessness, and feelings of guilt for not performing as well as I think I should. I must settle on my dissatisfactions with mediocrity and learn that compassion for others begins with myself, which I see as a weakness.

Loyalty

A man who holds loyalty as his chief personal value will always turn out to be a traitor in the moment of crisis. For if a man's Loyalty lies with one in particular, then for his Loyalty to remain true, all others must be betrayed and forsaken.

But because I am with Christ, and seek to be loyal to Him, I am not a respecter of persons. But ironically, as I am loyal to Christ, I become a respecter of men, simply because I am also a man. As it is written in Matthew 7:12; Luke 6:31:

> "And just as you want men to do to you, you also do to them likewise."

Likewise, I don't show up empty handed, but I bring a treasure from my inner chamber, which I have painstakingly prepared for the presentation — a sacrificial offering of my time, will, and energies. Thus, as I recognize Christ as Lord, I also recognize my place in the hierarchy of men, some of whom I owe my loyalty as brothers in Christ.

The Paradox of Virtue

Anyone who has given a diligent effort to develop virtue will have discovered dichotomies, dilemmas, and paradoxes such as those described above, and has found themselves broken, or inadequate, or powerless as a result. If not Chastity, Excellence, or Loyalty, then another aspect of perceived righteousness forms the crucible that tests one's character, perhaps Alpha fortitude, or altruism, or dedication to one's family, or defending one's tribe, or faith, or personal discipline, or physical fitness, or (fill in the blank with your own deeply held principle of belief). At some point, you realize that pursuing virtue in one arena almost always requires a man to become a senseless, shameless dolt in another diametrical area. You'll see that a man's greatest virtue is also his greatest weakness. And then you'll begin to see that there are limits as to just how virtuous you can be.

As it is written,

> But we are all like an unclean thing,
> And all our righteousnesses are like filthy rags;
>
> Isaiah 64:6 (NKJV)

This month, we'll examine a multitude of viewpoints surrounding the topic of virtue. It is my aim to show readers how virtue is a self-defeating exercise in futility … unless and until one submits one's self to the authority of Christ, in which case pursuing virtue becomes a self-sacrificing exercise in holiness.

Virtue is hard won. There is no easy road. There is no shortcut. But it's better than the alternatives.

Related

- Σ Frame: Moral Agency is Dependent on Spiritual Maturity (2022/12/19)
- Σ Frame: Glorifying God through Spiritual Gifts (2023/3/27)
- Σ Frame: The Battle Within (2023/4/10)
- Σ Frame: Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21)
- Σ Frame: The Philosophical Basis of Secularized Altruism (2023/7/31)
- Σ Frame: Biblical Masculinity vs Worldly Masculinity (2024/4/10)
- Σ Frame: No Virtue Exists Without Masculine Incentives (2024/6/28)

- Σ Frame: Freedom, Potential, and Structure (2024/8/13)

Fiddler on the Roof : A Parable of Progressivism

Jack · 4 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Glorifying womens' m!s0gyn!st!c self-expulsion from a life of feminine purpose.

Readership: All
Theme: Virtue
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes + 6:43 minutes of video

The Story

The following is a clip from the 1971 musical, Fiddler on the Roof [summary].

The film takes place in Anatevka, a tiny Russian shtetl near modern-day Kyiv, in 1905. The lead actor and father in the movie is Tevye (played by Chaim Topol). Tevye is a poor but pious milkman who lives with his wife, Golde (Norma Crane), and five daughters.

Throughout the movie, Tevye engages in wry conversations with God, and these monologues guide viewers through the village's personalities and traditions, and also reveal how much Tevye cherishes the venerable traditions of his faith.

But the world is changing, and Anatevka is no exception: One after another, Tevye's three eldest daughters (played by Rosalind Harris, Michele Marsh, and Neva Small) defy the prescribed customs of courtship to follow their hearts and be with the men they love.

Torn between religious devotion and his own children, Tevye struggles to hold onto his faith in a new and uncertain world. Tevye's portrayal of a father torn between his love for his family and his loyalty to his faith traditions appears outstanding, even 50+ years on. Also, the superb musical score is enchantingly memorable.

Under the above video clip on YouTube, Stalicone wrote a good summary of Tevye's position and added some incisive insights.

> "For those who criticize Tevye, you should understand that he was probably the most progressive person > among the Jəws of Anatevka. He allowed his eldest daughter to cause him to break a bargain made with the butcher, which was absolutely scandalous. He allowed his second daughter to dictate her marriage to HIM, again… beyond comprehension. These 2 violations of Ashkenazi Jəwish tradition were absolutely revolutionary. How could he be expected to yield to a complete repudiation of his very identity? Remember what it was to be an Eastern European Jəw. To be hated and despised by the government, and the majority of the people, to be forbidden from holding public office, and to be subject to p0gr0ms, evictions, and expulsions. How easy would it be to disavow your religion, and your culture under those circumstances and have an easier life? The fortitude and dedication to who you are under such oppression is not to be taken lightly or dismissed out of hand. Why then should anyone expect that for the love of his daughter would he cast that aside? You shouldn't. Nor should you be surprised that he wouldn't."

Tevye's Daughters Represent Archetypes of Progressive Women

Here's something I observed about the movie that I haven't seen covered in any other review of this film. Fiddler on the Roof is a grass roots portrayal of how a weak patriarchal authority gives way to women's liberation, and it also illustrates many of the concurrent implications and subsequent consequences. Readers might discuss whether Tevye was a weak father or not (I think not), but I think in this case, the patriarchal authority was weak because it was only embodied within a small oppressed subculture that had very little influence on the larger host culture. Thus, the host culture dictated the social terms and conditions his daughters were exposed to as much as, if not more than, their Jəwish heritage. Christianity is facing the same situation today, with much less of a patriarchal structure to fall back on.

Jəwish author, Sholem Aleichem (1859-1916) was called the Jəwish Mark Twain.

The original story that the film is based on was written by Sholem Aleichem in the late 19th to early 20th centuries. In follow-up accounts of Tevye's later life, Aleichem includes a total of seven daughters. Tevye's daughters are briefly described as follows (in order from the oldest to the youngest):

1. Tzeitel refuses an arranged marriage to an accomplished man because she was in love with her childhood sweetheart.
2. Hodel married a man who promptly left her to join the Bolshevik revolution. He is arrested and sent to Siberia, and later she goes to live with him there. In another similar account, he left her to go fight in a war. She follows after him, only to find him captured as a prisoner of war and living in a dismal POW camp.
3. Chava eloped with a Russian, i.e. non-Jewish man, and married him in a Russian Orthodox Church. She inadvertently rejects her father's faith in doing so.
4. Shprintze fell in love with the son of a wealthy widow who later abandoned her. Heartbroken, she drowned herself [1].
5. Bielke moved to New York City in 1907 and worked in a factory. In 1911, she perished in the Triangle Shirtwaist Fire [2,3].
6. Taybl also moved to New York City in 1907 and worked in a factory. In 1912, she changed her name to Abel, dressed herself in men's clothes, and cavorted with immigrants on Ellis Island [3].
7. The original plot mentions a seventh daughter, but no information is given about her [1].

Do you see how Tevye's daughters embody specific archetypes of women under feminism? Furthermore, the progression of each daughters' rebellion is a chronological mirror of the evolving social roles and trends among liberated women. Amazing isn't it? And this story was written over a century ago!

There is at least one archetype that is not represented — a woman who 'dates' many men, marries late, and then divorces her husband. But that character description would've been entirely unacceptable to 19th century audiences. Perhaps this archetype could be symbolized by the seventh daughter whom Aleichem never developed — or never published.

Conclusions

To comment on the topic of virtue, Tevye truly loved his daughters. On the one hand, some of his daughters found true love through his acts of mercy, but on the other hand, his permissiveness led to the downfall of some of his daughters. Readers who have read the book or seen the movie might want to discuss how Tevye's love and mercy played a hand in these outcomes, or else, maybe it did not matter at all. Maybe it is simply a tragedy of the human condition.

Today, we might equivocate Tevye with the nominal Christian / Churchian man or the typical married man, and Tevye's daughters represent different types of feminist /progressive women and/or wayward wives. Tevye let his daughters do whatever they wished, chasing after 'love', working outside the home, dressing as a man, etc. — just as it is today. His daughters all had tortuous lives, some more than others, and some were tragic — just as it is today.

Tevye's inner struggle between love and loyalty to his family and his faith traditions also continues to resonate to the present day. Only the context is different. The Christian faith has always encouraged men to love their wives. And yet now, men must be reserved in approaching marriage (if at all), because of the potential risks involved. After marriage, men must be recalcitrant in their treatment of their wives in order to foster her feelings of attraction and to maintain dominance in the relationship. Otherwise, the marriage becomes markedly less Christian.

Today's men are juxtaposed between two opposing sets of ideals, just as Tevye was. Todays' women are caught up in a whirlwind of desires and emotions, and are heavily involved in worldly tumults, just as Tevye's daughters were. And it is frustrating and unfulfilling for both men and women, just as Tevye and his daughters experienced.

References

1. Tablet: Tevye's Forgotten Daughter [Shprintze] (2023/12/15)
2. Reddit/FanTheories: [Fiddler on the Roof] What happens after the movie ends? (2015/9/7)
3. People's World: Fiddler on the sidewalks of New York: What became of Tevye? (2021/7/2)

Related

- Σ Frame (Elspeth): The Glory of the Glory (2023/3/13)

- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part I (2023/10/9)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Effects of the Sexual Revolution on Female Sexuality (2024/9/24)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Importance of Family and Community — Part II : Vetting (2024/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part III : Patriarchal Mate Selection (2024/9/26)

The Sirach on Raising Daughters

Jack · 6 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Having a less positive and more realistic estimation of daughters tends to produce daughters of better character.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Fathers of daughters
Theme: Virtue
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

About The Book of Sirach

The Book of Sirach, also called Ecclesiasticus, is accepted as part of the canon by Catholics, Eastern Orthodox, and Oriental Orthodox Christians.

The Sirach was cited by the early church fathers, and was included in the Codex Sinaiticus* and the Codex Vaticanus*, the two oldest complete Christian Bibles in existence, as well as Rev. John Calvin's 1560 Geneva Bible, and the original Authorized English translation commissioned by King James Charles Stuart VI in 1611. However, the book was rejected from canonization by Martin Luther because no Hebrew version of the book had been found by that time and so it was considered a product of Hellenist / Greek culture. Later, Protestants expurgated the book from the King James Bible (along with many other deuterocanonical books) during the revision of this text in 1760. Since then, a Hebrew version of the Sirach was found among the Dead Sea Scrolls, and yet strangely, the Sirach remains an apocryphal text among Protestants.

Protestants would do well to consider ex-canonical works such as the Sirach, as did the church fathers and most all Christians living before the 19th century. Lest father's be 'surprised' when their daughters gleefully present their fleshly nature as a free gift to Ch@d.

 These codices are bases for the Nestle-Aland Critical Text, upon which most modern Protestant Bible translations are based.*

 Printing houses continued publishing the Authorized version until the early 19th century.*

The Sirach on Raising Daughters

The Sirach has this message for fathers.

> [24] Hast thou daughters? have a care of their body, and shew not thyself cheerful toward them.
> [25] Marry thy daughter, and so shalt thou have performed a weighty matter: but give her to a man of understanding.
>
> Sirach 7:24-25

Concerning verse 24, daughters should be taught to pay close attention to and give diligent care to their bodies, including their cleanliness, dress, health, gracefulness in movement and demeanor, physical fitness, and maintaining good habits in the way of diet and exercise. This makes sense when we recognize that a young woman's greatest assets and fleshly worth (in the eyes of men and society) lies in her beauty, vitality, physical health, and reproductive potential. Good fathers recognize this and will make an effort to foster and preserve her value.

As for "shew not thyself cheerful toward them", I believe this means that fathers should take a serious view towards their daughters and should not be doting on them and pedestalizing them as if they were perfect princesses.

Concerning verse 25, Oscar wrote about the patriarchal process of matrimonializing a daughter in his post, The Importance of Family and Community — Part III : Patriarchal Mate Selection (2024/9/26).

Elsewhere in the Sirach, it says…

> [9] The whoredom of a woman may be known in her haughty looks and eyelids.
>
> Sirach 26:9

"The whoredom of a woman may be known in her haughty looks and eyelids." ~ Sirach 26:9
Right there in the Bible we are given a very obvious s1ut tell, and yet many Christian men are not aware of this.

Oh, yeah… Some of us don't believe the Sirach is part of the Bible. That explains some things.

Continuing in the same chapter we find a warning.

> [10] If thy daughter be shameless, keep her in straitly, lest she abuse herself through overmuch liberty.
> [11] Watch over an impudent eye: and marvel not if she trespass against thee.
> [12] She will open her mouth, as a thirsty traveller when he hath found a fountain, and drink of every water near her: by every hedge will she sit down, and open her quiver against every arrow.
>
> Sirach 26:10-12

Verses 10-12 are pure Red Pill poetry. Men are not apt to think of their daughters as latent little s1uts in the making, but apparently, keeping this possibility in the back of your mind will serve to guard her against such behaviors. Hint: Look for impudence and shamelessness in their character. If daughters have these characteristics, then watch out!

Continuing on we find more.

> [9] The father waketh for the daughter, when no man knoweth; and the care for her taketh away sleep: when she is young, lest she pass away the flower of her age; and being married, lest she should be hated:
> [10] In her virginity, lest she should be defiled and gotten with child in her father's house; and having an husband, lest she should misbehave herself; and when she is married, lest she should be barren.
> [11] Keep a sure watch over a shameless daughter, lest she make thee a laughingstock to thine enemies, and a byword in the city, and a reproach among the people, and make thee ashamed before the multitude.
> [12] Behold not every body's beauty, and sit not in the midst of women.
> [13] For from garments cometh a moth, and from women wickedness.
> [14] Better is the churlishness* of a man than a courteous woman, a woman, I say, which bringeth shame and reproach.
>
> Sirach 42:9-14 (KJV)

In summary of this passage, raising daughters involves a lot of work and worry. There is good reason for this, as women, especially young women, are acutely susceptible to corruption, deception, defilement, and folly. They are the weakest link in the chain, so to speak. This is part of the reason why some cultures value sons over daughters.

 Churlish means boorish, low-class, mean, rude, stingy, and difficult to work with or deal with. Obviously, a churlish* woman would be the bane.

Conclusions

If I could summarize what the Sirach says about raising daughters, I would say fathers need to be discerning of their nature and carry the appropriate right attitude in dealing with them. What is the right attitude? In general, it cannot be falsely positive, nor harshly negative. It cannot be too accepting, nor too critical. It must be somewhat detached (as the Christian Manosphere understands this word). Fathers must show diligent love and care to their daughters, especially to their physical well-being, being circumspect of modesty and proper boundaries. But OTOH, they cannot be overly enthusiastic or lenient such that daughters become casual towards authority and respect is lost, nor should fathers be placing them on a pedestal. Moreover, fathers should be confident and self-controlled and view their daughters realistically, as through a Red Pill lens, much like they view other women, and have the mind to mold their daughters into women of godly excellence with every opportunity.

God willing, you'll have a daughter that brings you joy, not just during her childhood, but throughout all her years, and also to her husband.

Related

- Σ Frame: 13 Disciplines in Dealing with Delectable Daughters (2018/1/29)
- Christianity and Masculinity: The Sirach on Women (2018/5/20)
- Σ Frame: Teaching our daughters well is the early foundation of successful wife moulding (2020/2/14)
- Σ Frame: The Sirach on Women (2020/11/8)
- Σ Frame (Lexet, Jack): Gynapotheosis (2021/4/21)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Value of Feminine Humility (2022/10/4)
- Σ Frame: Sharkly on Women's Agency (2022/11/10)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): 16 Bible Passages for Teaching Wives and Daughters about Male-Female Roles and Marriage (2023/5/15)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)

He who keeps his daughter virgin does swell

Jack · 8 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Can fathers pose any incentives for daughters to resist fornication?

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Concerned fathers
Theme: Virtue
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

A Description of the Present Situation

Many past writings on Σ Frame have put forth the notion that the onus is on women to retain their chastity, to submit to father or husband, and to abide by the requirements of the covenant.

But what motivation do women have for doing so?

For the past half-century, pop culture has glorified sexuality and promiscuity, making one's Sexual Market Value the central figment of teenage identity. Western pop culture, with its fads and fashions, rises as an idol to the adolescent age group, carrying with it the clear message that one has to be hipster kewl and "fit in", in order to receive the satisfying affirmation of popularity and positive attention.

The lower middle class, which possesses many of the same depravities and natural vices of the lower class, except for having a modest disposable income which can be used to pursue trends and fads, is especially susceptible to this form of idolatry.

Teenagers are apt to think that remaining a virgin serves no tangible purpose, other than to exclude them from having all the fun that their peers are enjoying. Worse, virginity tends to invite mocking jeers from their sexually active peers.

Teenage boys are pressuring blossoming lasses to roll in the hay with them, and if she is duly attracted to one boy in particular, then this becomes a real temptation. If Tingles are sufficiently present, then this may push her past her threshold for resisting the urge to merge — IF she has the mind to resist in the first place.

If a petticoat princess has a particularly poor participation with her papa or parson, then this may derive from a d@mning distrust and disdain for her derelict dad. Taken to the extreme, she will be tempted to rebel against figurehead authority by becoming sexually active.

Meanwhile, out-of-date, out-of-touch, but otherwise well-meaning parental figures feign annoyance and take a backseat to the urgent, immediate dicktates of peers and pop tarts.

Moreover, with all of the above incentives to splurge the cooch, what incentives are there for a young maiden to remain chaste until marriage?

- Fear of STD's?
- Fear of pregnancy?
- Emasculation culture?
- Fear of condemnation? (From who?)
- The hope of having a better marriage?
- Because the Bible says, "Thou Shalt Not"?
- The blithe "Jesus is my husband" mantra?
- Churchianized Abstinence / Purity Culture?
- Purity rings and balls? (Sounds like a sex toy.)
- Despising men and masculinity (as feminists do)?
- The idolatry of waiting for the Wun Twoo Wuv™ Soul Mate?

All of the above are non-starters, and if employed, will only aggravate the complexity of the situation.

And it only takes 5 minutes of Alpha to spill the carte blanche and puncture the pristine pear.

What to do?

In the present situation in which there are plenty of incentives to slore and screw around, it is imperative that parents recognize the feral inclinations of their daughters' sexual proclivities.

In contrast to the incentives listed above, most of which offer only negative reinforcements, observant Christians might suggest that a person should remain chaste and spiritually obedient out of their love for God. This is truly an authentic motivation, but try telling a horny, hormone riddled young person that they need to keep their knees closed together and on the floor in prayer and love God more, and it's likely to go in one ear and out their arses, only to leave them confused and frustrated. Only a youth of exceedingly great conviction and a perpetual lack of opportunity could comply.

To this end, there needs to be a positive incentive that appeals to the desires of late-adolescents for them to do what's right.

But honestly, I have to ask myself, what benefit or reward is available to those who seek to do things God's way?

Why would any young person who is free from fears and coercion, willingly choose to wait until marriage to have sex?

Jack has suggested that chastity must be a status-qualifying expectation of a girl's peer group and/or community, but this proposal has not been well received as a serious solution.

So let's come up with some other working ideas.

Related

- Σ Frame: A Girl Becomes a Lady (2017/12/26)
- Σ Frame: 13 Disciplines in Dealing with Delectable Daughters (2018/1/29)
- Exegesis and Theology: Exegesis of 1 Corinthians 7:36-40: A Father and His Daughter or a Man and His Betrothed? (2018/4/20)
- Σ Frame: Reminiscing on Our Immoral Culture (2024/8/26)

Being Good vs. Being Nice

Jack · 11 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

They're NOT the same.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Virtue
Author's Note: This essay is based on an email exchange on 2022/12/17-18 with a reader who wishes to remain anonymous.
Length: 950 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

Back in December 2022, LastMod questioned the value of being nice or polite, followed by some comments about whether it is at all worthwhile to be nice in this world.

Feeriker responded [expanded by Jack],

> "No you don't ['have" to be nice]. You choose to be [nice] because it's "general manners" as you said; or because it's just who you are as a man."
>
> "This actually represents something of a dilemma. Many of us are "nice" (or more accurately, polite) because at least on a visceral level we know that [the social capital of a community and] the sustainment of a civilized society depends on such manners.
>
> On the other hand, we also realize that the society we live in and the people who are the recipients of our politeness and good manners generally do not merit them. We see them behaving in a fashion that clearly demonstrates why society is crumbling even despite our attempts to sustain it with our good behavior and manners. So why do we bother? Mostly because we've convinced ourselves that even though we can do nothing whatsoever to reverse the current decline (or even make a dent in it) with our good manners, we would be hastening said decline if we succumbed to the herd's ways."

To be Nice, or NOT to be Nice? That is the question.

What is ‘Nice’?

I have noticed this confusion in Christian circles.

Among Christians, there is a wrong teaching where goodness and kindness has been conflated with niceness.

Today, “loving your neighbor” is equated with being NICE to your neighbor. But is that GOOD?

No. There is a difference between GOOD / KIND and NICE.

Goodness is the display of godly character, and is more specifically understood as having an array of certain fruits of the spirit such as generosity, kindness, patience, forbearance, and good will, but it also involves calling out sin and doing what is right when there is great resistance.

Kindness is the act of opening one’s heart to another in such a way that it invites the recipient to respond in kind. It is a choice to act kind out of character and NOT simply to placate feelings.

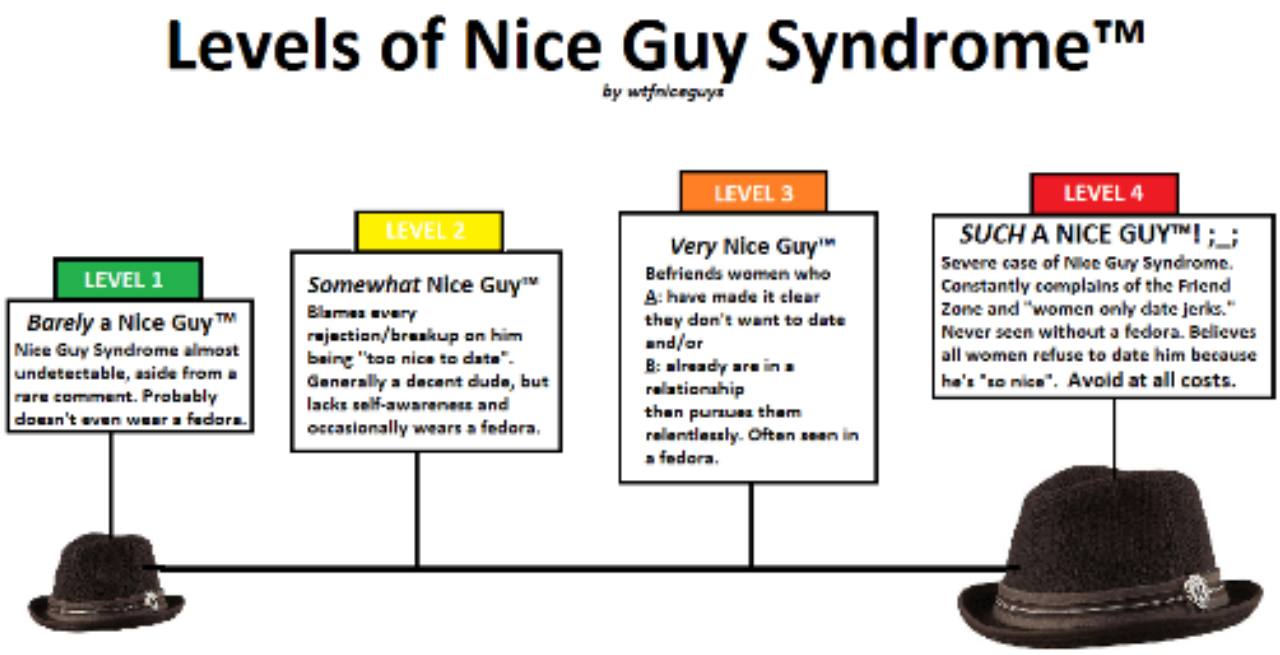
Nice, as LastMod intimates, has more to do with being courteous and polite. But that's not all. In today's culture, being nice has many other connotations that befit a certain overall behavior.

In the majority of cases…

- Being nice is autopilot.
- Being nice is altruism lite.
- Being nice involves chivalry.
- Being nice is being agreeable.
- Being nice is deferring to women.
- Being nice is pedestalizing women.
- Being nice is a covert contract (H/T Robert Glover).

Moreover, nice is understood as being sensitive to other's feelings. And since women are all about the feeelz, when we say a man is nice to a woman, what this means is that he makes some effort not to "hurt her feelings", i.e. NOT to offend her, even though she may very well have an entitled, overblown ego.

Goodness, Kindness, Love, and being Nice are NOT the same.



Jesus wasn't Nice!

There is another point of confusion I have noticed in Christian circles.

Today, Christians are called to be nice first and foremost, and there is much less emphasis placed on being good. But is this the Biblical example Jesus set?

Jesus was ALL GOOD, KIND, and GENTLE. But Nice???

Jesus called the Pharisees snakes and vipers (Matthew 12:34; 23:33) and whitewashed tombs (Matthew 23:27-28). That wasn't very nice at all!

When the Canaanite woman came to Jesus for the healing of her child (Matthew 15:22-28; Mark 7:25-30), Jesus did not say a word to her but told his disciples,

> "I was sent only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."
>
> "It isn't right to take the children's bread and throw it to the dogs."

Talk about r@c!sm! Only after she refused to take offense and instead responded humbly and wisely did Jesus grant her request.

How many young men today would feel comfortable calling an immigrant a willy w0g and then expect them to humbly persist with their entreaty before helping them out? Heh.

Here's another example. At the wedding in Cana, Jesus told his own mother,

> "What has this concern of yours to do with me, woman?" Jesus asked. "My hour has not yet come."
>
> John 2:4 (CSB)

That wasn't nice! But Jesus' mother's response was to tell the servants to do everything Jesus asked.

How many young men today would feel comfortable telling their inquisitive mother, "Woman, it's not my time", and then expect her to comply with his wishes and tell others to do so as well? Heh.

Then we all know the story of how Jesus made a whip, flipped over the tables, and threw the money / offering exchangers out of the Temple, calling them a den of thieves (Matthew 21:12-13; Mark 11:15-19; Luke 19:45-48; John 2:13-16).

Epilogue

Jesus wasn't nice to businessmen, foreigners, the Jəwish religious leaders, or his own mother. But He was always GOOD.

Furthermore, Jesus wasn't the only Biblical character who was Good but NOT Nice.

- Elijah confronted Ahab and Jezebel.
- The prophets in the Old Testament foretold doom and gloom.
- Jonah warned the people of Nineveh that in 40 days their city would be overthrown.
- John the Baptist called the Pharisees snakes and vipers before Jesus did. (Matthew 3:7)

They were NOT being NICE, but they were GOOD.

The question of what makes them good will be covered in the next 2 posts.

Related

- Man Talks: How to Beat 'Nice Guy Syndrome' (2017/8/2)
- Σ Frame: Elements of Emotional and Personal Maturity (2021/9/8)
- Σ Frame: Elements of Spiritual Maturity (2021/9/15)
- Σ Frame: Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church (2023/12/14)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Evaluation (2024/1/18)
- Σ Frame: Gammas – The Manosphere's Untouchables (2024/7/26)

Nice Lies

Jack · 13 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The false virtue of habitual politeness.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Virtue
Author's Note: This essay is based on an email exchange on 2022/12/17-18 with a reader who wishes to remain anonymous.
Length: 750 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

A Nice Lie

Today, what we see is that being Nice is considered good, and that true GOODness requires behavior condemned as NOT NICE, and is therefore wrong. As a result, we have too many NICE Christian men, and not enough GOOD Christian men.

The previous post stated that there is a difference between GOOD / KIND and NICE — a difference that the world will not see.

Here, I will go further to say the idea that Nice = Good or Nice = Kind or Nice = Christian behavior / Christian Love is a subtle LIE.

The Bible doesn't say, "Be thou nice to thine adversary, and in like manner he shall be nice to thee."

The Bible doesn't say, "Be thou nice and thou shalt receive the desires of thine heart."

There is not one single verse in the Bible that commands us to be NICE. We are not even commanded to be good, as GOODNESS, KINDNESS, and GENTLENESS are Fruits of the Spirit — NOT fruits of being Nice to a fault.

There are several products of this LIE:

- The whole precept of "Thou shalt not judge" has become a twisted interpretation of a verse. The new heretical meaning is "Thou shalt not cause sinners to feel ashamed of themselves."
- Telling a girl who is fornicating that this will yield bad results is not NICE (as it hurts her feelings).
- Telling a practicing h0m0sexual person that he is sinning is not NICE (as it hurts hiz feelings).

Biblically, we are not commanded to be Good or Nice, BUT we are called to be Good, NOT Nice.

Speaking the Truth in Love

Most of the time, correction is NOT pleasant, but it is always necessary when sin and self-deception are exposed, especially concerning those within our domain of influence. It takes a brave man to confront sin regardless of the consequential kickback. But if the recipients are honorable and worthy, they'll swallow their pride and accept a word of truth or a kind but painful gesture despite its subjective offense.

The same is true in a marriage. A husband needs to have a firm Christian Detachment to confront his wife's sinful behavior regardless of how she FEELS about it. We need more brave husbands in this respect — a man who is NOT subservient to his wife's feelings. We also need wives who are willing to be corrected according to the truth.

If a man is tiptoeing around a woman's emotions, always placating her, then he is being NICE, NOT Good! A woman who is always insisting that her solipsistic self-deceptions are her own subjective truths is fostering the formation of Nice Guys. Doing so inadvertently makes HER the head of the relationship, as it is HER emotions that are dictating HIS actions. A woman can sense that and it is a big turnoff for Good women!

The church needs to teach HEADSHIP in establishing true GOODNESS and authentic KINDNESS — NOT nincompoop Niceness — NOT in being sensitive to women's feelings. Men are already all too familiar with this nonsense to their own detriment.

Epilogue

When it comes to sharing our faith and/or exercising Headship authority, we need to be discerning about speaking the truth in love. Speaking the truth in love does NOT necessarily mean speaking the truth NICELY. It requires using God given wisdom to present the truth in such a way that it is best received by the listener.

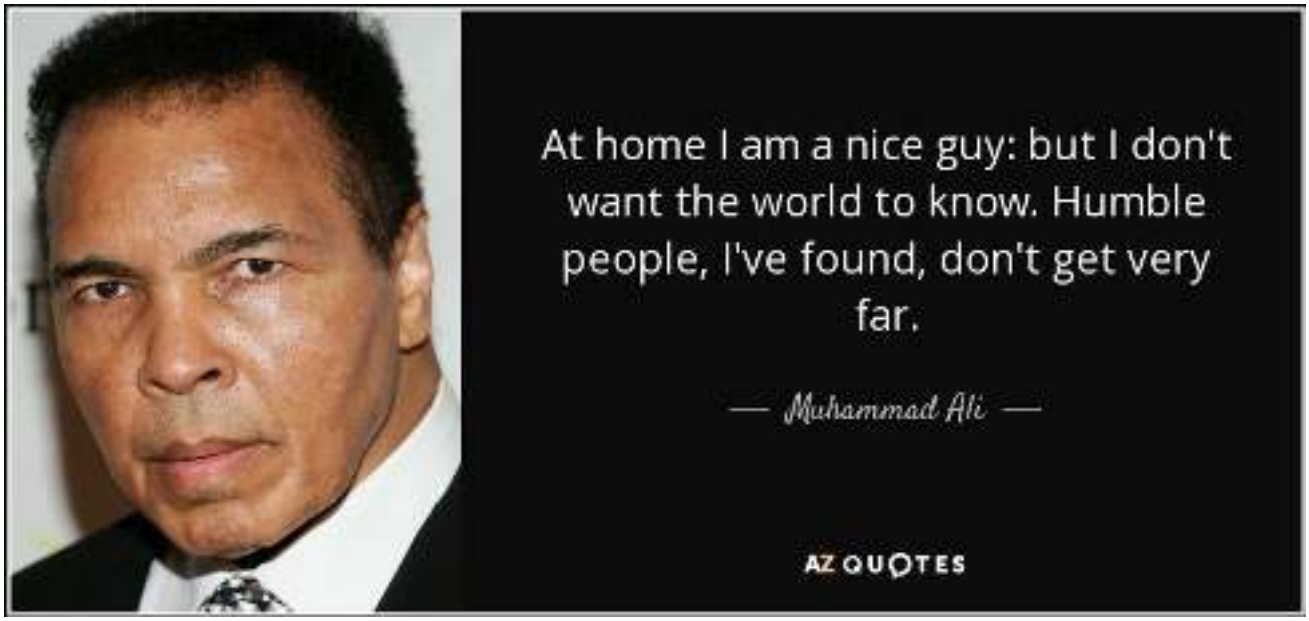
In the Bible…

- When Jesus addressed the common folk, He spoke in parables.
- When Jesus spoke to women, He appealed to their emotions and intuitions.
- When Jesus spoke to Nicodemus, a learned official of the Jewish law, He talked about being born again.

The message of truth never changes; just the methodology changes depending on the audience.



Of course, it helps to remember that we need to first have genuine authority over others before we can expect our words to be appreciated by them.

And if the listener is a woman, it bodes well to be aware she is PRIMARILY emotional and resistant to hearing hard truths.

Related

- Man Talks: How to Beat 'Nice Guy Syndrome' (2017/8/2)
- Σ Frame: Name it to Change it! (2022/10/21)
- Σ Frame: The Lie of Romantic Love (2023/2/3)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Glorifying God through Obedience (2023/3/8)
- Σ Frame: Glorifying God Through the Courage of Upholding His Moral Laws (2023/3/17)
- Σ Frame: Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft? (2023/12/5)

A Nice Code

Jack · 15 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Purpose, NOT politeness!

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Virtue
Author's Note: This essay is based on an email exchange on 2022/12/17-18 with a reader who wishes to remain anonymous.
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

A Nice Code of Conduct has Corrupted how Good Conduct is Perceived

The weaker and more emotional sex becomes offended rather easily. They carry a chip on their shoulder, are quick to take everything personally, and have a hair-trigger on their anger. In all this, they often fail to realize that just because a man / husband does NOT care about their FEELINGS, it does NOT mean he doesn't care about HER.

As the recipient, it is Ouch! OUCH! and double OUCH! But the humiliation of being confronted with the truth is one reason why chicks dig jerks. It's just that jerks have a sense of purpose that draws admiration and respect from chicks, whereas the common man is more interested in tamping down conflict and therefore seen (by women) as boring and shifty.

For an example of purpose, a man will respond to a woman's request to take out the garbage, NOT to be a helper to her, but because he recognizes it as something that needs to be done, and because he believes it is better or more efficient for her efforts to be directed towards another activity at that moment. He will NOT take out the garbage to please her or because he is afraid she will nag him or throw a hissy fit or deny him affection when they go to bed that night. Simply put, he does it because he is kind and wishes to maintain the quality of the home environment. He also does it because he knows this is one way to show love and care for his wife. IOW, he is kind out of choice, according to his character. He is NOT kind to placate her feelings or supplicate her whims. That would NOT be genuine kindness.

When women realize that men are willing to do something kind and risk being seen as a paddy last, or say something truthful and risk the brunt of her anger, NOT because they are fearful or intimidated of being 'disobedient' to her (as seen from her debased viewpoint), but BECAUSE they love and care, this added awareness is a lightbulb moment for her in the relationship — IF it ever happens.

But as long as women see men as 'equals' who are subservient to their whims, it is a shame that any Goodness / Kindness on his behalf will be misinterpreted as a weakness.

When Bad is Good

The supposed 'bad boy" is actually GOOD in the sense that he is acting as the head. He calls her out on her B$ and he does not care about her emotions. What is referred to as negging works especially well when it points out truths in her which she cannot deny. Negging is also deprecating and humiliating when it is used to put her down. And in Bizarro world, women find that maddeningly attractive because (1) they interpret it as a display of his higher status, and (2) being humbled by a man perceived as higher status makes them feel loved. Ironically, women don't see men as high value unless he treats her like a crappy play toy. Heh.

This is especially true for pretty women. They are always pedestalized by so called Nice Guys™. So it is refreshing to see a man about his own purpose, ruling over his life from his own pedestal, establishing headship, and calling out her sin. That is exactly why jerks are sexually attractive to women. It is because women want to mate with someone who demonstrates genuine headship authority over her, NOT a man who is too stinking Nice all the time.

Women are also drawn to bad boys because they let them do whatever they want and they don't hold them accountable or responsible for anything. From the bad boy's perspective, why mess up a good thing? These women serve a brief purpose as a c0ck ornament and then he'll just toss them out after they've made themselves intolerable and move on to the next one.

The reason why women pull away from a man about his purpose is because the better men will try to hold them accountable and won't let them play the victim. So a lot of women will intentionally reduce their standards in order to hook up with POS men with whom they share a self-centered purpose instead, AKA jerks, just so that they won't have any accountability in their relationship. This is why women sell out to bad boy jerks and give away the meat box for nothing in return. They HATE accountability THAT MUCH!

For those few women who can take a hit from the truth pipe every now and then, these women still lose out because they can't offer anything more than the P hatch that would entice a man to keep her around long term. Foolish impulsive chicks cannot say "No", so naturally, he'll snatch the hatch freely offered and discard her after she cooks breakfast and launders the jizz out of his sheets.

Epilogue

Women often say they want a man who is nice, but in reality, they are NOT attracted to nice guys. What they really mean is that they want a hawt triple 6 Ch@d to be nice to them. They want to believe that they're an Aphrodite of love who can soften Ch@d's heart. Of course, this is a feminine fantasy that is true in only a few of the most ideal cases and only for exceptional women, as Dr. Orion Taraban describes here. Paging Elspeth and Liz.

When women say they want men to be nice, there is one redeeming possibility in this statement. We know women respond positively to men's attention, kindness, and love, under the condition that he is attractive enough for her to accept it and he doesn't curl her toes too close to the purifying flames of accountability. Maybe this is what women are referring to when they say they want a nice guy. But what women fail to understand is that if a man is truly good, kind, and gentle towards her, it is NOT because her influence has induced a change of character in him as she is wont to think, but because it is a product of his walk with Christ and because he has her well-being at heart. Women have a peculiar and damning inability to discern this difference and will automatically jump to the conclusion that he is flaccid or else bargaining and/or posturing for sex, etc. And then monkey branch to another man who proves his worth by treating her worse.

With this in mind, and speaking to said men, when correcting your wife / daughter, you may make better progress if your appeals are kind, but you are not called to be nice in the sense of being so sensitive to her feelings that it affects your headship. In order to contain a woman inside the refining crucible of love, a man needs to offer a woman incentives and/or rewards that appeal to her desire more than her revulsion when he holds her accountable. A little negging and teasing helps.

The more you love her, the less she'll love you (2 Corinthians 12:15). Conversely, the worse you treat her, the better she'll treat you. Ironic, but true.

Related

- The Modern Man: Why Do Women Like Bad Boys?
- The Modern Man: Why Do Women Like Jerks and Bad Boys?
- Man Talks: How to Beat 'Nice Guy Syndrome' (2017/8/2)
- PsycHacks (Orion Taraban): Why NICE GUYS finish LAST, or: why women love jerks (2022/10/19)
- Σ Frame: Dealing with Feminine Insecurity (2023/11/22)
- Σ Frame: The Red Pill is a Dead End for Bachelors (2024/6/3)
- PsycHacks (Orion Taraban): Men do the right things with the wrong women: The importance of a system (2024/3/18)
- PsycHacks (Orion Taraban): Women do the right things with the wrong men: The good times-to-hassle ratio (2024/3/22)
- PsycHacks (Orion Taraban): Why successful men are jerks: No one wants to do the laundry (2024/10/11)

A Dark Horse

Jack · 16 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The Virtue of the Villain.

Readership: All
Theme: Virtue
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

A New Epoch is Unfolding

In late June of 2024 there was a turning in the moral / spiritual realm, marking the end of the W0ke epoch and the beginning of another new age of treason.

Regular readers might remember that I predicted Trump would win back in July after the assassination attempt, but I wasn't sure if there would be enough election fraud this time around to change that outcome (like what happened in 2020). But now that the election results have come in, it is clear that Donald Trump has won. It was a landslide.

I was amazed — NOT that Trump won, but because there was not a peep nor a scuffle about any possible fraud in the voting process nor of the validity of the election. WTH?

This surprise was followed by another — that the House, Senate, and gubernatorial races also came out solidly Republican. We will now have a quadrifecta unified party governance, but we're already seeing evidence that it will not be very unified.

The third and greatest surprise is that all of this has happened only a few short years after all civility and sanity appeared lost to B L M, C R T, demonrats, environmental slacktivists, feminists, liberals, gender fluffs, Gl0bal!sts, W0kesters, and TPTB.

But before we relax in our thoughts that all will be well, let us remember that history warns us that slacking off in the wake of a perceived victory often proves to be the undoing.

We are not out of the woods yet.

Photo taken in Redwoods, California, U.S.A.

A Black Horse Appears on the Horizon

Trump's reelection is a Black / Dark Horse according to every definition of the term.

Black horses signify…

- Death, figuratively or literally.
- One who triumphs against the odds.
- Something negative turning into a positive.
- Dark wild mysteries of the unknown are brought to life.
- Making a mistake that takes you on a leap of faith into the unknown.
- A presidential candidate who comes from behind to surprise everyone by winning the election.
- A candidate or competitor about whom little is known but who unexpectedly wins or succeeds.
- A person who keeps their interests and ideas secret, especially someone who has a surprising ability or skill.
- Someone with a secret, especially a secret ability, skill, or achievement, that surprises you when you finally discover it.
- A previously lesser-known person that emerges to prominence in a situation, especially in a competition involving multiple rivals, that is unlikely to succeed but has a fighting chance, unlike the underdog who is expected to lose.

Those who laud Trump will soon be disappointed (or pleasantly surprised) to find that he has some spades up his sleeve that will shock the world. I do not know what it could be, but we will see soon enough.

Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, by Viktor Vasnetsov (1887). From left to right are Death, Famine, War, and Conquest; the Lamb is at the top.

In Taiwan, people are apprehensive and some are fearful about Trump's reelection. They suspect that he will "poke the sleeping dragon", meaning that he'll do something that upsets the status quo between Taiwan and China. They also expect Trump to impose tariffs, taxes, and other regulations on imports from Asia that will cause inflation, a recession, or worse. Interestingly, younger people in Taiwan believe the same things about Trump, but they are more confident that these changes will protect Taiwan's industry, enhance the economy, and bring other positive results.

The question is, will this Dark Horse prove to represent or BE one of the 4 Horses of the Apocalypse? (It is one or the other.) Namely, the Black Horse bringing famine and justice unleashing aggravated distress and mourning (Revelation 6:5-6). The Black Horse carries the only horseman who speaks, stating outlandish prices for wheat and barley and saying, "Do not harm the oil and the wine" which signifies that this scarcity should not fall upon the superfluities, such as oil and wine, which men can live without, but upon the necessities of life — Weet-Bix and Wonder bread. On a positive note, the preservation of oil and wine also symbolizes the preservation of the Christian faithful, who use oil and wine in their sacraments. (This has been confirmed within the Radix Fidem community.)

On an interesting side note, the pastor and elders of my church have recently decided to start using red wine instead of grape juice for the communion. Of course, this is unrelated to Trump's reelection, but it is another signet indicating the Black Horse epoch has arrived.

Closing Statements

The Σ Frame blog has a pretty good track record with predictions, prophecies, and calling a spatula a food shovel. Readers beware. Meanwhile, those who have been marked for preservation (and you know who you are) can rejoice in their salvation.

To signify the dawn of the foretold Dark Enlightenment, I recommend celebrating (or self-anesthetizing as it may be) with something that comes in a black package. Here are a few that I've enjoyed — all come with a black label.

- Black Wine

- Taylor Port
- Kirkland's California wine
- Bacardi Black (Rum)
- Captain Morgan (Rum)
- Black Ram (Whiskey)
- Black Velvet (Whiskey)
- Jim Beam Black (Bourbon)
- Johnny Walker's Black Label (Whiskey)
- Black Beer — I recommend Schwarzer Herzog (Schwartz means 'black' in German.)

And if you're a Trump supporter you should also taste Schwarzer Herzog wheat beer which comes in an orange label.

Enjoy your dark spirits in this new Dark Age.

Related

- Σ Frame: Trump Appeals to Dignity, Not Racism (2016/3/7)
- Radix Fidem: Trump Will (Accidentally) Destroy Israel (2017/1/28)
- Radix Fidem: God's Warning to Trump (2017/4/5)
- Σ Frame: The Trump Look (2018/6/15)
- Σ Frame: Yankee Stay Home! (2019/2/12)
- Σ Frame: Come and See Hades (2020/6/1)
- The Mainframe: Rorschach Test du Jour (2024/7/14)
- Radix Fidem: The Implications of Divine Covering (2024/7/16)
- Radix Fidem: It's Already Enough (2024/8/8)
- Radix Fidem: Interesting Times (2024/8/20)
- Catacomb Resident: It's Our Turn (2024/11/8)
- Catacomb Resident: Automated Oppression (2024/11/13)

Sluglys turn to Celibacy as a way to ‘Punish’ Men

Oscar · 18 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Or so they say.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Virtue
Author’s Note: Coauthored with Jack.
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Speaking of raising daughters…

> “Liberal women have sworn to go on sex strike over Donald Trump’s election win.
>
> Mr. Trump swept to victory in Tuesday’s presidential race that Democrats cast as a referendum on abortion rights and protections for women.
>
> Some women are now threatening to punish men for voting for Trump, taking inspiration from a Korean feminist movement that vows to withhold sex from men in order to redefine the gender power balance.”

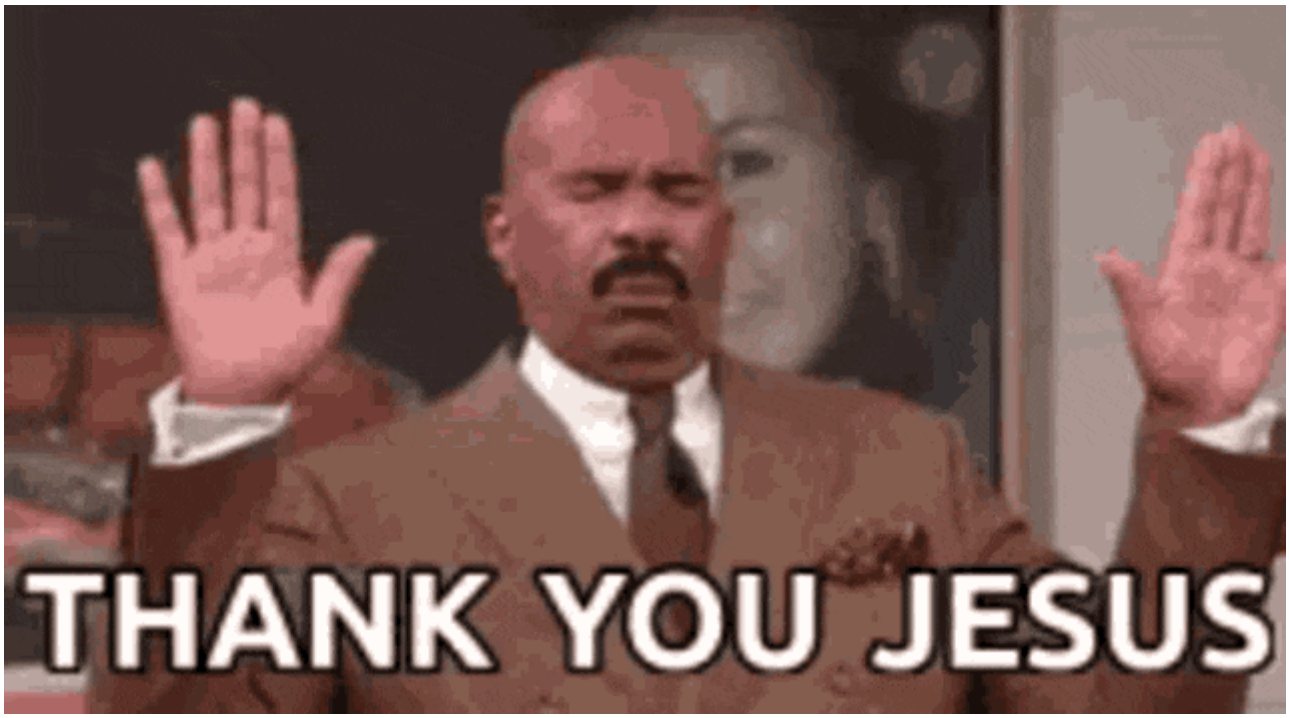
> In addition to “No Sex”, many Trumpaphobes are also cutting their hair (as seen in the above image), thereby making themselves even more ugly and less desirable.
> “Interest in the “4B movement” spiked since Kamala Harris’s defeat, with women sharing videos of themselves on social media pledging to commit to its four “no’s” — no sex, no dating or marriage and no having children with men — for the next four years.
>
> In one video shared on TikTok, a young woman pledges to go celibate and encourages others to delete dating apps in order to “exercise sovereignty” over their bodies.”

"As a woman, my bodily autonomy matters and this is my way to exercise sovereignty over that," she says.

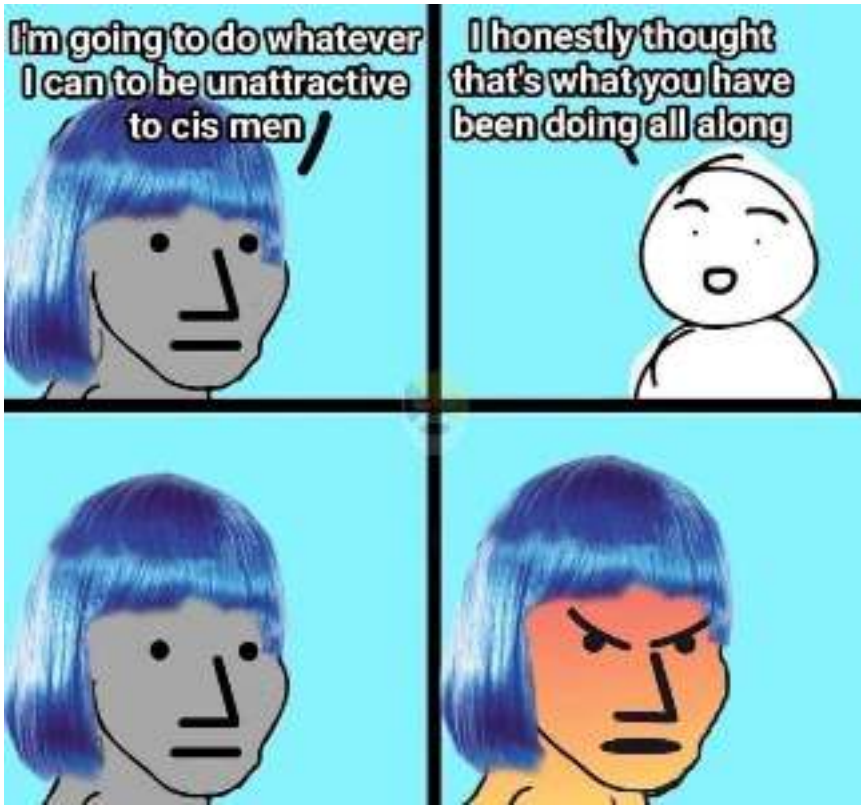
"So I highly encourage any other women who are single and still care about progressing women's rights and still fighting for our bodily autonomy to do the same. Delete your dating apps."

MSN: Liberal women going on sex strike over Trump win (2024/11/7)

Men everywhere…



Yeah. Red Pilled Men know that all the better chicks are either MAGA or married, and if all this trash talk is actually true, it would only remove a few lower-quality s1uts from the vast soft harems of top-shelf Ch@ds. For all men, Ch@ds included, life goes on as usual in spite of the 304B movement.



Lest we jump to the conclusion that we are witnessing real-life evidence of evolution by natural selection, it is more likely that these women have already removed themselves from the gene pool by making themselves unnaturally ugly, postponing marriage, and aborting their spawn. Oh… but that is also evidence.

As it is written, "The trash takes itself out" — once again.

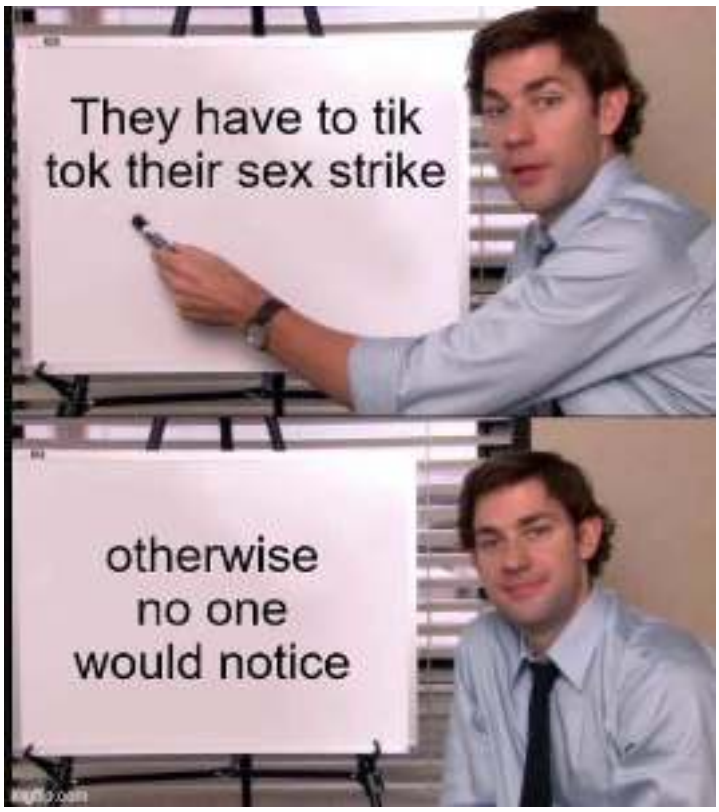
Moar False Virtue Signaling

I strongly suspect that these women are NOT really serious about mothballing the beehive, and that this hype is nothing more than 'virtue' signaling to other women, and an empty threat to men (as an indignant gesture of contempt for "The Patriarchy"). Denying men sex, even within marriage, is often considered to be 'virtuous' among rebellious women. I'm sure this dynamic is happening in this scenario as well.

The thought crossed my mind that "No Sex" (with men) could be a code for "More Lesb0 Sex", because I really doubt that all these women are going to remain totally celibate for 4 years. However, if the stock prices of d!ld0 manufacturers go up in the next few weeks, then I will stand corrected.



Just for a blog post discussion, let's suppose they really mean what they say, and/or that there are at least a few dimwit dames who actually believe what these other women are touting and try to go that route.

If an unmarried woman is celibate, then that would be, at least in theory, an act of spiritual obedience. They're doing what they should have been doing all along. But would that be considered truly virtuous or simply a false virtue signal that ironically happens to be truly virtuous? I have my doubts given their motivations. I don't think it indicates a true repentance from their love of fornication. It's just an expression of indignation from being exposed to the fact that the majority of Americans don't condone their flighty flying F fantasies.

Nevertheless, I have to wonder if their extreme self-discipline /S might come to bear any fruits of repentance or not. After all, God is extremely graceful to those who obey. Is it possible that these chicks might find redemption through their refusal to rutt?

Anyway, it sets a good example for younger chicks to follow, regardless of their motivations. The Pendulum is now on the back swing.

Related

- Σ Frame (Lexet) Failing to Launch (2022/11/28)
- Σ Frame: How Feminist Mothers create Feminist Daughters (2024/2/28)
- Σ Frame: The Logic of WGTOW (2024/6/14)
- Σ Game: The End of the Lines (2024/11/12)
- The Babylon Bee: To Protest Coronation Of Aragorn, Orcs Announce Sex Strike (2024/11/13)
- Σ Game: The Futility of the 4B Females (2024/11/17)
- Catacomb Resident: Clutching Their Pearls (2024/12/1)

The False Virtue of Altruism

Jack · 20 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

What feels good and looks good may NOT be truly good.

Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Virtue
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Intro

In the past, the topic of altruism has been the subject of intense discussion within the Based sphere, mainly Francis Berger and Bruce Charlton, but also including Σ Frame as of late. This post collates some relevant excerpts on this topic with respect to virtue.

Universal Altruism is a False Concept of Christian Love

In earlier writings, Bruce Charlton noted that secular altruism is responsible for Political Correctness and is the antithesis of Christian love.

In one essay, Francis Berger cites Dostoevsky's observation of the utilitarian allure of The Golden Rule and he describes how The Golden Rule has been deceptively coopted as a justification for secular altruism, extended to Political Correctness. He believes this to be the most egregious failure of Christian teaching.

> "Many modern people associate The Parable of the Good Samaritan from The Gospel of Mark with The Golden Rule. The same could be applied to "love one another" in The Gospel of John. In our contemporary world, the Biblical commands to love one another and to love thy neighbor as thyself have essentially been hijacked and appropriated by leftists as proof that, above all else, Jesus desired to establish a world of universal altruism perfectly analogous to The Golden Rule. What leftists — and many Christians — fail to include in these interpretations to love others as you love yourself is the prerequisite of loving God first. Re-establishing this omission helps clarify what Jesus [et al.] really mean by the injunction to love others as you love yourself."
>
> Francis Berger: Loving Others As You Love Yourself Hinges On The Self You Love (2020/7/16)

In another post, Berger says secular altruism is a symptom of people who have rejected reality.

Universal Altruism has Replaced the True Concept of Christian Love

Berger wrote another essay in which he uses Max Scheler's work, Ressentiment, as a philosophical springboard to assert that universal altruism has completely replaced Christian love.

> "We live in an era in which authentic Christian love has been fully eclipsed by altruism and the love of mankind. For all intents and purposes, the vast majority of modern people have become incapable of understanding –- to say nothing of internalizing or adhering to –- the fundamental truth and reality of Christian love. What we are experiencing today is the near-total abandonment of authentic Christian love in favor of a near-total devotion to humanitarian love.
>
> Of course, many have claimed that this shift in "love consciousness" is a necessary revolutionary step; that this transformative movement of love is an ascending force representing the next stage in the evolution of "human global consciousness".
>
> Mainstream Christianity has certainly embraced this idea, and many mainstream churches have begun agitating > for a new social contract to create a new human community, a tangible "civilization of love" based upon a heightened sense of humanitarianism and altruism fueled by "social and political love." All of this is packaged and sold to Christians as the very same Christian love Jesus demonstrates and attests to in the Gospels.

>
> And for all intents and purposes, most contemporary Christians have bought into this faux conception of Christian love, to the point that most now regard this indiscriminate and abstract "love of mankind" as the highest value to which all human beings, Christians foremost among them, can aspire.
>
> As a result, the "love of mankind" has become not only become synonymous with Christian love in the minds of most Christians, but also forms the axioms attesting to Christian truth and reality, which, in the minds of most modern Christians begins and ends with the temporal expansion of general welfare; an expansion that must include every single member of the human race.
>
> The argument that authentic Christian love and humanitarian love are not only synonymous and compatible, but actually one-in-the-same, is more than a mere misconception -– it is carefully crafted and purposive falsehood…"
>
> Francis Berger: Christian Love and The Love of Mankind: Two Entirely Different Worlds (2020/9/19)

Word! Some readers may need to reassess their concept of Christian love.

image

Universal Altruism is NOT Christian Love

In another essay, Berger compares and contrasts Altruism and Christian Love, noting that they are NOT equivocal.

> "…modern people generally embrace altruism as a high virtue, moral obligation, and guiding principle. Many consider it a high expression of love; for some, it represents the highest form of love.
>
> When the media broadcasts an individual or organization that is working to place the interests of others above its interests, modern people tend to regard such individuals or organizations as noble and virtuous.
>
> Contemporary Christians are no exception here. Most Christians think altruism is an innately Christian principle and virtue –- a principle and virtue that the secular left hijacks, corrupts, and retools to serve its nefarious purposes.
>
> Within this framework of contemporary Christian thinking, the disinterested and selfless concern for the well-being of others is an inherent Christian "good" toward which all Christians should aim."
>
> Francis Berger: Altruism Is Not Christian Love (2022/11/22)

In the last paragraph, "the disinterested and selfless concern for the well-being of others" deserves unpacking. Berger uses these words to describe how universal altruism appears in contemporary Christianity. This description is remarkably similar to Christian Detachment. However, the altruism that has replaced Christian love does NOT include the hallmark traits of Christian Detachment, such as installing boundaries, placing demands on others, and offering constructive moral feedback to others, and NOT just any or all others, mind you, but only those within covenantal relationships and/or one's sphere of authority / influence. Furthermore, these key aspects of Christian Detachment are NOT emphasized in most Christian teachings outside of the Christian Manosphere. In fact, they are de-emphasized, and yet this abstract, weak sauce, Christian-lite altruism is still assumed to apply to everyone.

Furthermore, the lack of these aspects of Christian Detachment within Christianity, due to their displacement by ideals of secular altruism, is precisely why the average Christian man is NOT effectively virtuous in his self-sacrifices, and also why he is NOT intuitively FOLLOW-able. Worse, this corrupted image of masculinity is commonly believed and presented as an archetype of Godly masculinity, which partly explains why Christianity is failing, flailing, and falling out of favor.

Under Berger's essay quoted above, William Wildblood asked a pertinent question.

> "What is the purpose of altruistic action even assuming the altruism is genuine? To make the world a better place? To relieve suffering and spread happiness? That has nothing to do with Christian love which is directed solely to bringing a soul closer to God. In other words, Christian love is focused on spiritual ends. It is not well-meaning, it does not have good intentions and it is not benevolent. Christian love derives from God and seeks to bring everything back to God."

Σ Jack answered Wildblood's initial question.

> "The bottom line for secularized altruism is NOT about the willful act of helping other people, it's NOT about the mercy or grace demonstrated, it's not about the efficacy nor wisdom nor outcome thereof, nor even about motive as Kant argued; the bottom line of altruism is the suffering of the moralized individual. True morality, according to the Post-Enlightened ethic, is shown in a blood sacrifice. You have to let others see you bleed. You have to be nailed to a cross. Kant makes this very explicit in his book, Critique of Practical Reason (1788)."
>
> Σ Frame: The Philosophical Basis of Secularized Altruism (2023/7/31)

Today, this self-sacrifice is coopted and rebranded as 'victimization' and is thus taken as the 'proof' of the purported 'virtue' demonstrated in virtue signaling.

If the reader is confused about the proper place, purpose, or value of suffering, then you need to sort out your Suffering.

image

Universal Abstract Altruism is NOT Christian

In a follow-up essay, Francis Berger goes on to write,

> "Christians who involve themselves with altruism are involved with a principle that is utterly incompatible with being a Christian. People can be altruists, or they can be Christians, but they cannot be both. The very notion of an altruistic Christian is a self-contradiction –- an oxymoron par excellence.
>
> To begin with, altruism -– in its purest definition -– is an anti-Christian principle because it denies the reality of God. It thereby negates the first Christian commandment to love God. It also negates the second Christian commandment to love the neighbor because it rejects the spiritual reality of man.
>
> Those who engage in altruism do not practice Christian love, which is an act directed at the concrete, real, spiritual person –- at the innermost reality of what makes a person a person. Instead, they practice what Auguste Comte defined as the moral obligation to renounce the self to live for the other. Comte believed this total submission of the self to others was vital to the benefit and progress of society, which in Comte's positivism supplants the role of God."
>
> Francis Berger: It is Spiritually Impossible For a Christian to Be Altruistic (2022/11/23)

Altruism as a Virtuous Cover for Evil

Bruce Charlton chased this topic into utter darkness [emphasis his].

> "…the implication of modern experience and explanations at the individual level is that ideally each person should be a hypocritical psychopath — hypocritically expounding altruism and groupishness for other-people, while (covertly) selfishly exploiting this situation for oneself."

> "… A superficial ideology of altruism and public-good covering a core ruthless and exploitative careerism and hedonism."
>
> Bruce Charlton: Alone with-God and against The World. What is the basis of human cooperation? (2023/3/9)

So we see the "Rules for thee but not for me" being expressed at the core of Secular Altruism.

Berger points out that this dankness even applies to Christians.

> "Cynically, I will even go as far as to suggest that most Christians have reached the point where they have inverted Comte's dictum of living for others to "living for myself under the guise of living for others."
>
> Francis Berger: Why Do So Many Self-Professed Christians Bother To Call Themselves Christians? (2023/9/7)

image

Conclusions

In conclusion, authentic Christian love has taken a backburner to altruism, and the former has been neglected and even forgotten.

Renouncing the 'Old Self' and 'putting on Christ' is NOT the same as prostrating / renouncing / sacrificing / submitting one's self for the auspices of mankind, which sacrilegiously places one in the stead of Christ. Therefore, infinite universal abstract Altruism, even as practiced by Christians within the church, is a false religion and is therefore evil. Altruism as it relates to the modern understanding of virtue and virtue signaling is in fact an anti-virtue. Likewise, what is regarded as victimhood and victimhood status is in fact evil (i.e. ressentimentalism). Also, the Nice Guy™ persona, as it relates to altruism and virtue, is also a false front, as most readers here are already well aware of.

There are a few Bible verses that warn us of this deception.

> To do righteouness and justice is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice.
>
> Proverbs 21:3 (ESV)

> Go and learn what this means: 'I desire mercy, and not sacrifice.' For I came not to call the righteous, but sinners.
>
> Matthew 9:13 (ESV)

> And to love him with all the heart and with all the understanding and with all the strength, and to love one's neighbor as oneself, is much more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices.
>
> Mark 12:33 (ESV)

It is imperative for Christian Men to be aware of this — that universal abstract altruism is NOT a framework of Christian morality, nor is it truly virtuous. Take a moment to think on this until you 'get it'. Read this essay again if it helps.

For those interested in further reading on this topic, Francis Berger, Bruce Charlton, et al. have written extensively on the deceptions of false Virtue and the pitfalls of universal abstract altruism. See links below.

Related

- Bruce Charlton: Mapping the causal pathway leading to political correctness (2010/11/19)

- Bruce Charlton: Christian martyrs versus PC martyrs (2010/12/6)
- Bruce Charlton: Defining 'altruism' and 'goods' with respect to political correctness (2010/12/24)
- Bruce Charlton: Bureaucratic Altruism versus Selfish Subjectivism (2011/2/1)
- Bruce Charlton: The psychology of abstract suicide deriving from secular altruism – the 'hypocrisy' of Western elites is a necessary consequence of self-destructive policies pursued by cowardly and short-termist people (2014/12/29)
- Bruce Charlton: Leftist motivation – how resentment and self-hatred are combined, and how theoretical long-termist group-sacrifice justifies short-term selfishness (2019/2/19)
- Bruce Charlton: Promiscuous abstract altruism – why does the international mass media encourage it? (2019/12/15)
- Bruce Charlton: What is the most important sin (and virtue) of these times? (2020/1/17)
- Francis Berger: Why Do People Embrace the System and Reject Reality? (2020/1/18)
- Francis Berger: Totalitarianism Via Altruism (2020/3/21)
- Francis Berger: Loving Others As You Love Yourself Hinges On The Self You Love (2020/7/16)
- Francis Berger: Christian Love and The Love of Mankind: Two Entirely Different Worlds (2020/9/19)
- Bruce Charlton: Is Christianity selfish? Yes! But why is that a bad thing? (2021/4/29)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Dark triad traits and virtuous victimhood (2022/2/21)
- Francis Berger: The Beatles Were Wrong; All Love Needs Is You (2022/11/29)
- Σ Frame: Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10)
- Francis Berger: Nearly Everyone in the West Has Achieved Transcendence (2023/7/1)
- Σ Frame: Men's Altruistic Idealism in an Age of Apostasy (2023/7/28)
- Francis Berger: Of All the Golden Calves in the World, None is More Golden Than Altruism (2023/11/9)
- Francis Berger: The Ideal of a Unified, Altruistic Society (2023/11/10)
- Francis Berger: Value Inversions Also Serve to Reflect Metaphysical Assumptions; Or, Why Virtually No Western Church Believes in God Anymore (2023/11/30)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The most successful strategy is NOT perfectly altruistic. (2024/1/9)
- Σ Frame: The Strengths and Weaknesses of Virtue (2024/11/1)
- Σ Frame: Being Good vs. Being Nice (2024/11/11)

Everyone is Nuts

Jack · 22 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

What you perceive is who you are.

Readership: All
Theme: Virtue
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Introduction

Everyone is a little bit nuts.

The reason why everyone is a little bit nuts is because we do not share the same values, beliefs, and purposes. Worse yet, some people are out of touch with reality. In other words, they are deluded [1]. Some people are more deluded than others, but when this is the majority of people, it doesn't seem that nutty but rather 'normal'.

As it turns out, the people who appear nuts are a little less nuts than the nuts who mindlessly believe what all the other nuts are saying. It takes nuts to be nuts.

It gets more interesting when we realize that the nuttiness we see in others is actually a reflection of the nuttiness within ourselves. We see ourselves in other people. The way we interact with others is like looking at ourselves in a dark mirror (1 Corinthians 13:12).

Here are a few general examples.

- Pro-Choicers say Pro-Lifers don't care about kids, while their motivation for saying so is to justify women's right to abort.
- A selfish person will believe that you are the one who is selfish, because you are unwilling to cater to their selfish interests.

- Liberals are in the habit of condemning Trump, et al. as N@zis, Wh!te Supremacists, etc., even while they seek to shut down freedom of speech.
- Women complain that men impose unrealistic beauty standards upon them, while the truth is that they dress to impress other women, even though men don't like it.
- A greedy person resents extending the least bit of generosity towards others, and thereby causes others to treat them in a similar manner. As the attitude of greed rubs off onto others, the person comes to believe that everyone is stingy, and it becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Because of the foolish naivete that accompanies the Mirror effect, people will often treat others in a way that they want other people to treat them, thinking that others have the same desires and expectations that they do.

For example…

- Men will be extra nice to a woman they are romantically attracted to, NOT because he is genuinely nice, but because he wants her to be nice to him and he falsely assumes that she also wants the same treatment.
- Women will try to make great achievements in life thinking that this makes them a more desirable partner, but in fact, this is what she wants in a man, NOT what would make her more attractive to men.

And so on.

What is going on here, and what can we do about it?

Psychological Projection

You might recall several people you have known who are always assuming the worst in others, and are always suspicious of others. That says more about themselves than the person they are critical of.

You see, humans subconsciously presume that other people have the same thoughts, values, and motivations that they do, and are predisposed to believe these assumptions over real evidence.

This psychological phenomenon is termed Projection.

Psychological Projection is a defense mechanism people subconsciously employ in order to cope with difficult feelings or emotions [2]. Rather than admitting to, or dealing with, the unwanted feelings, Psychological Projection attributes other people to be the source of the difficult, uncontrollable, or undesirable feelings or emotions. Thus, in the eyes of the Projector, the subjective experience of the outer world is colored with the Projector's inner problems which the Projector refuses to face [3].

Furthermore, people mistakenly believe that the traits they Project onto others, are really the true characteristics of others. People who are constantly dishing out a heavy dose of Projection are in a state of denial. They are denying that those thoughts and traits are truly their own, and NOT those of the person being addressed.

Thus, Projectors are subconsciously unwilling or unable to entertain the possibility that they are the ones who have the very same characteristics which they condemn others for. It is somehow easier for them to shift the blame onto everyone else and continue on in their delusional pathological ways, rather than to take responsibility for changing their own cognitive processes and system of beliefs [4].

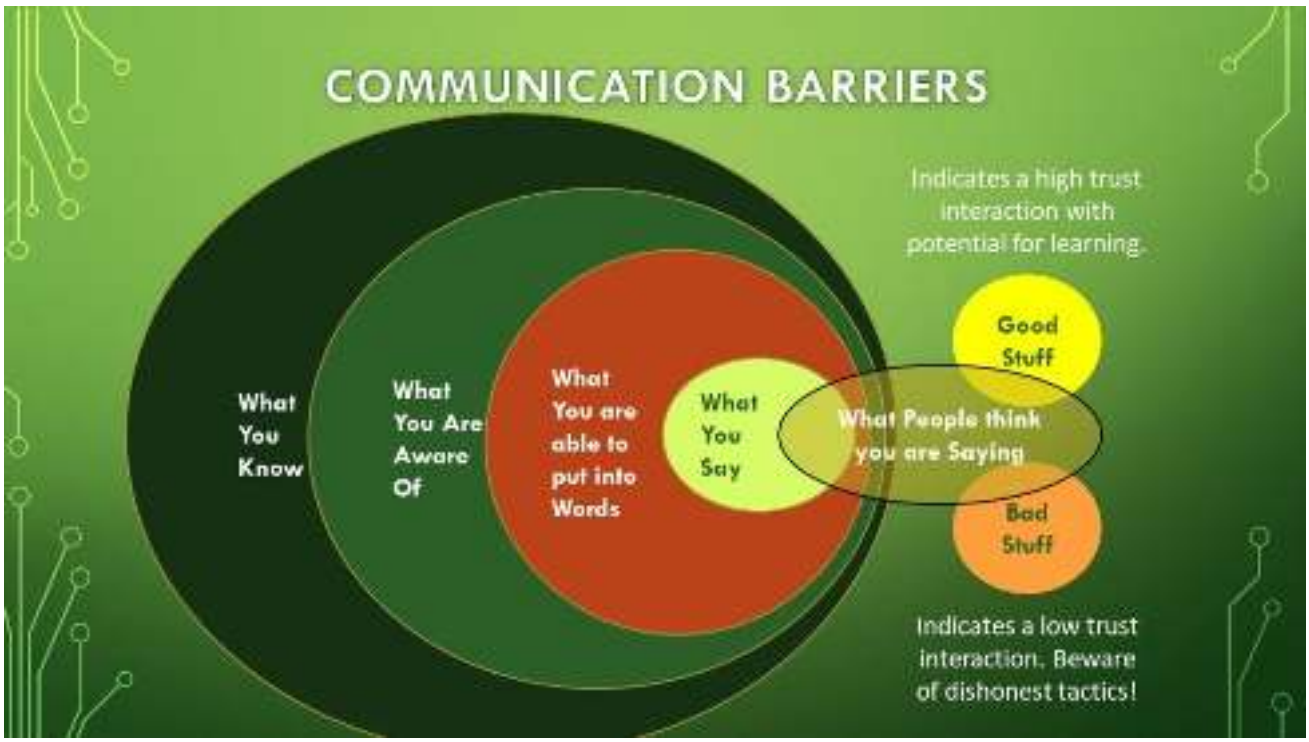
Projection, as experienced from the Projector's viewpoint, is called the Mirror Effect.* As this word mirror implies, the things that come out of a person's mouth indicate how that person views the world, and are therefore an expression of what lies within their heart. The Mirror Effect is NOT an effect intended or created by others, but is merely a chimera perceived by the one Projecting. It is a hell of one's own subconscious making.

Needless to say, a continued habit of Psychological Projection will invariably assassinate one's social potential.

* Note: The Mirror Effect is not to be confused with the action of Mirroring (when one person subconsciously imitates the gestures, speech pattern, or attitude of another, as an expression of rapport), or the Mirror Stage (described by Dr. J. M. E. Lacan as the formation of the ego through the process of identification). These are all very different concepts.

Communication Dynamics

Let's take a closer look at this phenomenon in terms of communication dynamics. The next image is offered as an illustrative guide to the text.



You might remember a time when someone you knew suddenly turned cringe for no apparent reason, and then you spent the next few days not talking to each other. For reasons unknown to you, that person became confused about your character and assumed the worst about you. They jumped to the conclusion that you're a bad egg, and so they won't talk to you about it.

You might become confused about why they are treating you this way, wondering what you did wrong. But in fact, it may not be because of anything you did or said. They just have a darkened mind and are therefore prone to interpret things in a negative way. They might even resort to lying, playing tricks, blame shifting, Gaslighting, etc. to keep you at a distance and make it impossible for you to deal with them, all in order to 'protect' themselves. Worse, they might even go so far as to try to inflict revenge on you for a perceived slight, or resort to telling twisted stories that align with their maligned view of your persona.

Furthermore, when someone assumes "Bad Stuff" about you, no matter how well you may try to explain yourself, the person will still think that you're just making excuses for your "Bad Stuff". They won't listen to you. They won't learn or be taught. They won't trust. So there's very little you can do about your relationship.

There are many reasons why someone might be this way. Maybe they're too egotistically proud, or maybe they're afraid to trust. Maybe they had a childhood that taught them that love is treacherous and unsafe. Maybe they've been surrounded by people who are overly critical and demanding. Maybe they're accustomed to being held responsible for things outside their control. Maybe they were blamed and shamed for not living up to someone's expectations [5]. Maybe something else.

Conclusions

There are several useful applications of this knowledge. The first is to improve yourself, and the second is to assess others more accurately. These are discussed as follows.

A person would be wise to apply the Mirror Effect to one's own edification by considering the unpleasant and negative images that one commonly attributes to others, and questioning whether the proliferation of such images might be the result of his own Psychological Projection. If so, then a change of heart and mind is in order.

We would also be wise to gauge what proceeds out of the mouth of the people around us, with the awareness that it just might be an expression of Psychological Projection. It may reveal the issues they are unable to face and tell you what lies within their heart. However, it is typically useless to point this out to the person, because Projection occurs on the meta-conscious level. If the person sticks to their guns when being confronted about their Projective behavior, then it only creates an offense and fosters additional distrust and recalcitrance. However, if a very strong, intimate relationship of trust is well established, then a confrontation may prove to be more constructive. In such a case, if the person can hear the deeper message, and receive the truth that motivates the provocation, then you have won a brother (or sister).

Last but certainly not least, choosing to think "Good Stuff" about others increases trust and smooths one's social interactions, leading to a better relationship and the enhancement of life. Choosing to think "Bad Stuff" weighs heavy on the relationship and will break it apart after continued infractions. So in general, it is better to give others the benefit of the doubt. Only time will tell if you're dealing with a thoroughly corrupted soul.

References

1. PsycHacks: Most people are DELUSIONAL: the psychosis of everyday life (2023/4/27)
2. Lifescript: Psychological Projection: Dealing With Undesirable Emotions
3. F. Baumeister, F. Roy, K. Dale, K. L. Sommer, "Freudian Defense Mechanisms and Empirical Findings in Modern Social Psychology: Reaction Formation, Projection, Displacement, Undoing, Isolation, Sublimation, and Denial" Journal of Personality 66(6):1090–92 (1998). doi:10.1111/1467-6494.00043.
4. S. Newman, K. J. Duff, R. F. Baumeister, "A new look at defensive projection: Thought suppression, accessibility, and biased person perception", Journal of Personality and Social Psychology 72(5):980–1001

(1997). doi:10.1037/0022-3514.72.5.980. PMID 9150580

5. The School of Life: Our Longing to Avoid Love (2024/10/18)

Related

- Σ Frame: Psychological Projection and the Mirror Effect (2017/12/9)
- Chateau Heartiste: Leftoid Cognitive Biases: Negative Transference And Psychological Projection (2018/2/28)
- Chateau Heartiste: Comment Of The Week: The Unwavering Self-Amnesty Of Leftoid Projection (2018/4/18)
- Chateau Heartiste: Projection (2018/9/20)
- Chateau Heartiste: Shitlib Self-Delusion And Psychological Projection (2019/5/4)
- Spawny's Space: Projection (2019/8/30)
- The Orthosphere (Kristor): Having Eaten the Red Pill, the Scales then Never Stop Falling from the Eyes (2024/7/27)

Being Dominant vs. Being Domineering

Jack · 25 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Don't be fooled by false assertions surrounding the code word for Headship.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Virtue
Author's Note: This essay is based on an email exchange on 2022/12/17-18 with a reader who wishes to remain anonymous.
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

In previous posts, I explained how being nice is conflated with being good. Similarly, being Dominant is conflated with being Domineering. Today, we'll pick this one apart.

Definitions

A Dominant person is one who is in control of a given situation and who has or exerts authority and/or influence. Dominant individuals typically occupy a commanding or elevated position, such as governing, leading, or ruling a group of people under his domain of influence.

A Domineering person is one who is overbearing, tyrannical, and inclined to rule arbitrarily or despotically. Domineering individuals are also known to be arrogant, cruel, oppressive, and unempathetic. One who is Domineering may very well be a Dominant person who lacks many key leadership qualities and is therefore a scathingly p!ss poor leader. IOW, they lack genuine authority.

Those readers who believe in equalism will be delighted to find that this description could be applied to men or women equally.

King Pins Win, Women Most Affected

One of the major failings of churchianity and other Christian circles is that the false Nice Guy™ = Good Guy trope, as seen in altruism, chivalry, complementarianism, servant leadership, etc., is so extensively promoted as the Christian standard. Even in the educational system, 'Nice'™ Behavior is taught to young men.

Young men are so extensively warned against being Domineering, that they're afraid of assuming any stance of authority or influence and end up NOT being Dominant as well.

Any self-respecting man has to be Dominant in order to survive in an anti-masculine culture. This is why literally only the thugs and bullies outside the church are truly Dominant. The problem with this is that practically every Dominant man out there is ALSO Domineering, solely because he has to put himself first in order to Dominate.

So then girls are attracted to the Dominant part of these "Bad Boys" but when they have to live with the "Domineering" part, they bail. And then after they're fully jaded by these jerks, they'll settle in with the "compliant" Nice Guy™ who they think will make good husband material because he is NOT Domineering. Except he isn't because he is NOT Dominant either. Worse, these compliant guys are NOT sexually attractive, resulting in yet another dead bedroom.

Avoiding Accountability is Key

Let's break this down.

In practice, being 'Nice'™ to females means to never let them feel ashamed or guilty about their behavior, decisions, or words, no matter how opprobrious they might be.

"Be Nice™" just means, "don't hold women accountable", and "don't expect women to develop moral agency." But this is exactly what is required for love and Headship authority.

The reason why Nice Guy™ behavior is touted as the preferred norm is because women HATE accountability and Nice Guy's™ don't hold women accountable.

The other, dirtier side of this social token is that women will intentionally reduce their standards in order to hook up with POS men — NOT because they are 'Nice'™ (or NOT 'Nice'™ — they prefer them to be genuinely nice, NOT 'Nice'™, although they seldom are), but because they'll titillate her Tingles and WON'T hold her accountable for anything. The reason why women flock to Bad@ss Ch@ds is because women HATE accountability and Don Dangledick doesn't hold his side chix accountable.

Do you see the pattern? It doesn't matter whether men are 'Nice'™ or NOT 'Nice'™, Sausage or Sizzlean. What matters most to unregenerated women is that they're free to do as they feeelz and NOT be held accountable for anything. That's it! It has nothing to do with what men are taught and told about "being Nice™". The idea that all men should "be Nice™ to women" is just a smokescreen that has a dual purpose of filtering out the non-Dominant men.

Dominant = Holding Her Accountable

Of course, there may be a few exceptions in which a man is truly a heavy turd, but usually, whenever women say a man is 'Domineering', what they mean is that he is a man who regularly attempts to teach and train her to do what's right, and will hold her accountable for her behavior when she doesn't. Women will never say Dirk Dynadong is Domineering, even though he really is. It's that aspect of holding her accountable that irritates their childish overblown ego and invokes the slanderous label 'Domineering'. Properly understood, such a man is 'Dominant', NOT 'Domineering'. Don't be fooled by the changeling's chatter.

Similarly, the conflated trope of Dominant = Domineering is assumed to be the antithesis of the conflated Nice Guy = Good Guy trope, but NOT because the man is NOT weak like the Nice Guy™, but because he'll hold her accountable.

These false concepts are extensively promoted, not only within Churchistanity and edjəwcation, but throughout the entire culture.

But the truth is essentially…

- Bad@ss Ch@ds = Dominant + Domineering
- Christian Men = Dominant + Good

- What the converged church and secular society promotes: Nice™ + Compliant = "Beta"

And…

- A Nice Guy™ is not usually very good.
- A Dominant man is not necessarily bad.
- Church Boys™ are seldom Dominant.

Jesus was Dominant but he was never Domineering. There is a difference.

Failing to make this distinction takes away Dominance from any application of Headship.

Conclusions

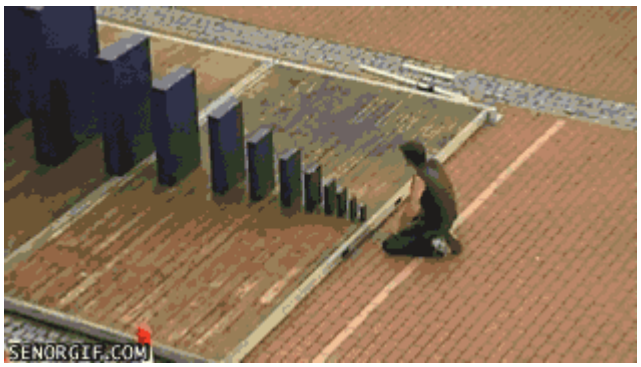
In the colloquial parlance of our gynocentric culture, being Dominant / Domineering means that a man is placing expectations on a woman and is holding her accountable for her decisions.

But contrary to whatever wily wimminz might call it in the trysty game of domino dating, this is good and right, even necessary.

Make no mistake, women lurrrve Dominant men, but they hate Hate HATE accountability. If ever forced to decide, they'll ditch the accountability AT ANY COST. They'll choose the Domineering man who WON'T hold them accountable, and then complain for years that he is abusive. Then they'll marry a spineless simp under the pretense that he is 'Nice'™ enough to never hold them accountable. Then they'll detonate their marriages and ruin their families when hubby finally learns that he has to bone up on his Game. They will cross the country and spend their last dime on a one-way plane ticket to Nairobi 2 weeks from Sunday to avoid any situation in which they even suspect a man might hold them accountable for their behavior. They HATE accountability and exercising moral agency THAT MUCH!

The Application

Women's penchant for teaching gullible men, including their own sons, to be 'Nice'™ is a ploy to mold them into compliant, NON-Dominant men who will NOT exercise Headship. Their motive is to protect the female herd from any men who might one day become Dominant enough to hold women accountable.



This is why men should not take women's opinions on men very seriously. This is why a woman cannot teach a boy or a young man masculinity. Mothers cannot either, no matter how much they may love their sons. Sometimes the most loving thing a mother can do for her son is to get out of the way and let the father take over, and trust that all will be well.

That being said, the distinctive practice of being Dominant but NOT Domineering, and being Good but NOT pushover 'Nice'™, can only be taught to young men by other men, ideally one's father. It is something that is Caught, NOT Taught. It is only imbibed by example.

Lest we forget.

Related

- Leon J. Podles: The Church Impotent: The Feminization of Christianity (2010)
- The Sociological Eye: Jesus in Interaction: The Micro-Sociology of Charisma (2014/4/12)
- Σ Frame: Profile of an Excellent Leader (2014/12/22)
- Warrior + Priest: Blessed Are the War Horses: On Christian Meekness (2018/5/2)
- Σ Frame: Der Breedergroomer's Fahrvergnugen (2020/5/25)
- Σ Frame: Objective Communications for Effective Group Leadership (2021/11/1)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Deti on Female Accountability (2022/1/25)
- Σ Frame: Agency is Anathema to the Female Fleshly Nature (2022/12/7)
- Σ Frame: A Gynocentric Society Inhibits Female Agency (2022/12/9)
- Σ Frame: Zippy Catholic's View of Female Hypoagency (2022/12/12)
- Σ Frame: Men's Altruistic Idealism in an Age of Apostasy (2023/7/28)
- Σ Frame: The Slow Demise of Masculine Leadership (2023/9/1)

Post-Election Hysteria

Oscar · 27 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Women's perceptions of doom and gloom in a Trump America.

Readership: All
Theme: Virtue
Length: 2,400 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes

Let's check in on American women since the presidential election of 2024. I've taken excerpts from three articles. I recommend that readers follow the links to read the complete articles.

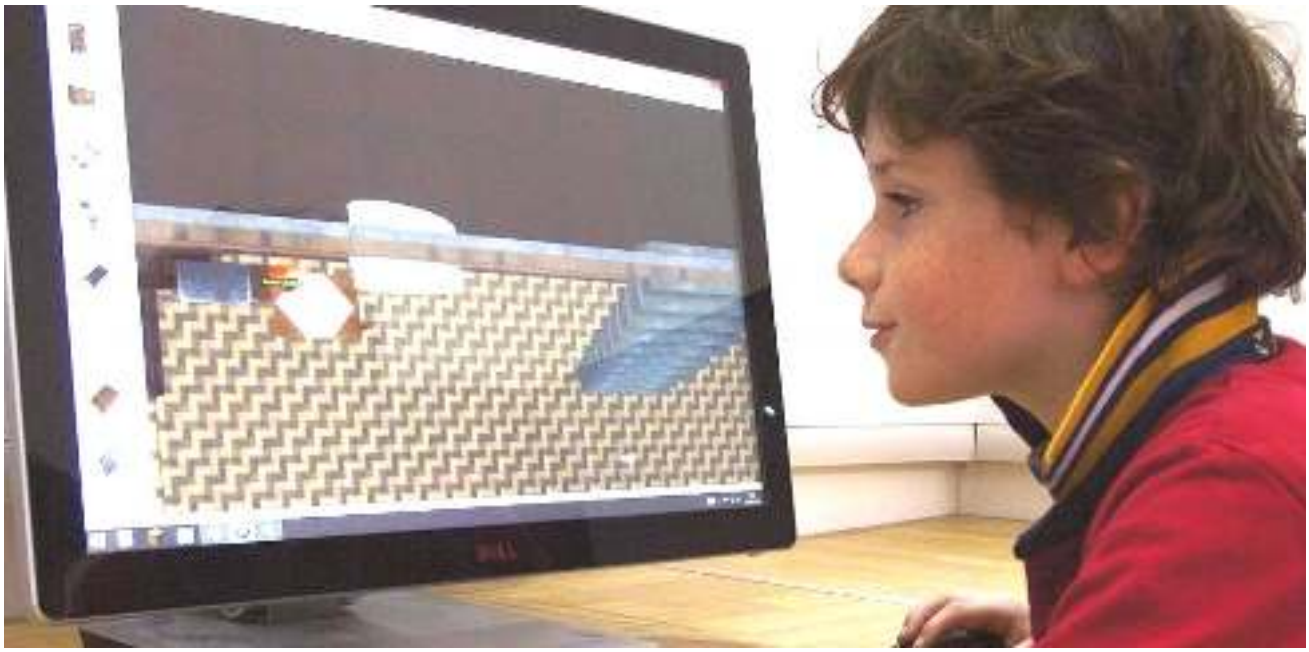
Case Study 1 — A Return to Normal

The first article is from The Salt Lake Tribune: I'm 16. On Nov. 5, the girls cried and the boys played Minecraft. (2024/11/19).

> "On the morning after the election, I walked up the staircase of my school. A preteen was crying into the shoulders of her braces-clad peer. Her friend was rubbing circles on her back.

> I continued up the stairs to the lounge, where upperclassmen linger before classes. There I saw two tables: One was filled with my girlfriends, many of them with hollows under their eyes. There was a blanket of despair over the young women in the room. I looked over to the other table of teenage boys and saw Minecraft on their computers. While we were gasping for a breath, it seemed they were breathing freely."

Sounds to me like the boys had their priorities straight.



> "What made my skin burn most wasn't that over 75 million people voted for Donald Trump. It was that this election didn't seem to measurably change anything for the boys around me, whether their parents supported Mr. Trump or not. Many of them didn't seem to share our rage, our fear, our despair. We don't even share the same future."

What could possibly be the problem?

> "I am scared that the Trump administration will take away or restrict birth control and Plan B — the same way they did abortion."

Of course. She's afraid that she won't be allowed to mur.der her baby in the womb. In New York. Seriously.

> "Why did it seem these boys were so unperturbed? I worried that my guy friends might only care about women until it conflicts with other, more pressing, priorities."

Says a person who never has to worry about trivialities like being drafted.

> "That morning, I spoke with a male classmate. He asked if I was OK. I nearly melted with relief. See, I knew not all guys were ignorant! Then, before I responded, he continued. Why, he wondered, are so many girls crying? I stared. I swallowed that familiar lump. And I had one thought: I pray that my older brother never asks that question. How could my classmate not know why girls in his grade were biting their nails and doing breathing exercises in the bathroom? It seemed like our future was sliding down the sides of our faces, and he asked me why we were crying? I have never felt that disconnected from men."

So, let me get this straight. A boy asked her if she was OK. He asked her why she and all the other girls were crying. She never bothered to tell him what was wrong, nor did she ever bother to ask any of the boys their thoughts, but it's the boys who lack empathy?

Sadly typical woman.

> "I saw it in the eyes of women in my subway car that morning. I saw it in the barista at the coffee shop on the corner, the female security guard at my school and in the face of my history teacher."

So, women behaved hysterically when their preferred candidate lost, but they expect us to elect a woman president.

Really?

> "In a terrible way, I've never felt more part of a sisterhood or more certain that pain is shared within that family. I wish the consequences of this moment for young women punctured the apparent indifference of so many men and boys I saw that day. I wish they could breathe in what the women and girls I know have been inhaling since Nov. 5."

I was 17 when I enlisted. At 18, I had to register for Selective Service, even though I was already serving. I wasn't even an American citizen yet. I wasn't even allowed to vote, but I could be drafted. And these silly bints are going into hysterics over the extremely unlikely possibility that they may not be allowed to mur.der their babies in the womb in a deep Blue state? Seriously?

> "I can't predict how well I'm going to do on an English test tomorrow and I definitely can't predict the future for me and my fellow young women. For now, all I can do is tell you how I feel."

She's making excuses and venting her feelings. Sadly typical woman.

Case Study 2 — Gender Polarity

The second article is from The Guardian: The boys in our liberal school are different now that Trump has won (2024/11/15).

> "When we walked into school on the morning of 6 November, we exchanged quick glances with the other girls in our social circle — looks filled with uncertainty and dread about the future. Because we are applying to colleges all around the country and about to leave our homes in the Hudson Valley, political issues suddenly have begun to feel a lot more personal."

Hudson Valley, huh? Sounds swanky. From Wikipedia:

> "The region stretches from the Capital District including Albany and Troy south to Yonkers in Westchester County, bordering New York City."

Yep. Pretty swanky.

> "Access to abortion and contraception, protection of the environment, and the growing hate and violence toward marginalized groups all have the potential to greatly impact our lives. We had only brief conversations about why Trump's victory felt so defeating, but our shared disappointment stuck with us as we walked to our first period classes."

Here we go again. "We live in a wealthy leftist city in leftist New York State, but we're 'oppressed' because Idaho is allowed to have a law that restricts women from mur.dering their babies in the womb."

> "But as we sat down at our desks, we noticed a very different attitude among our male peers. Subtle high-fives were exchanged and remarks about the impending success of the next four years were whispered around. It didn't make much sense. We live in a mostly liberal town in the Hudson Valley where Harris-Walz signs were posted outside of most of our friends' houses. This is not to say that families with dissenting opinions don't live in our town. But the boys that were the most vocal in their enthusiasm about the election results have progressive parents just like ours."

Again, did she bother to ask the boys their thoughts?

> "As these startling observations made us look back on the last couple of years, we started to realize that maybe this wasn't as unexpected as we thought. An increased interest in pursuing the ideal masculine appearance by going to the gym…"

I mean, the girls could do what women have done for eons and enjoy the beefcake.

Or not.

> "… and the creation of new male-dominated social activities like the infamous exclusive poker nights had seemed innocent and had been easy to write off as typical boyhood behavior."

God forbid that boys should enjoy each other's company. Are girl-only activities equally problematic?

> "It hadn't taken long for this focus on machismo to creep into these boys' mindsets and conversations. Seemingly harmless disrespectful comments with witty undertones toward girls became commonplace, and feelings of traditional male dominance started to sneak back into our friend groups."

So, boys making "Seemingly harmless disrespectful comments with witty undertones toward girls" is a portent of The Handmaid's Tale, but excoriating the boys publicly in an internationally-read newspaper is just peachy. Okie-dokie.

> "Upon reflection, we both recall speaking about stereotypically masculine interests or topics and then hearing snickering exchanges between the boys in the room followed by targeted belittling retorts disguised as trivial jokes. It genuinely felt as though they viewed us as unintelligent or even inferior."

Maybe try being a little less stereotypically hysterical?

By the way, did you know that the word "hysteria" derives from the Greek "hystera", meaning "womb"? "Hystera" is also the root word of "hysterectomy". In other words, in modern parlance, being hysterical means acting like a womb-bearing-person. If you don't like a stereotype, try not reinforcing it.

> "And the most dangerous aspect of this is how little it's talked about in mainstream media and how easily it has been overlooked in progressive communities. In fact, this is an epidemic that will continue to spread rapidly > until we start talking about it."

Are you serious? "Toxic masculinity", m!s0gyny, machismo, etc. have been perpetual topics of conversation for longer than I've been alive, and I'm almost 50.

> "So look closely because these boys will be among the voters responsible for deciding our future elections."

From your mouth to God's ear, little miss. But what about the girls? Can they learn, even if it requires painful experience? I mean, even amoebas are smart enough to turn away from pain.

Case Study 3 — Nine Lives

The third article is from Chronicles: Childless Cat Ladies for Law and Order (2024/11/21).

> "I am a woman living alone near Philadelphia with a cat, so I guess you could call me a "childless cat lady." I never wanted children, so I never had any."

Hopefully she didn't mur.der any.

> "Since I have dedicated my life to helping other people, for many years I subscribed to all of the social justice causes. That began to change when the neighborhood I live in became a hotbed of crime and leftist intolerance."

There's that false altruism.

> "Yesterday I stopped by a cafe for a bagel. I began frequenting this locally owned cafe after walking past it one Sunday morning and seeing that all its storefront windows had been smashed. I went in and asked if everyone was OK. Apparently, the vandalism had occurred in the predawn hours of the morning. Nothing was stolen — just windows smashed.

> I later discovered that on the neighborhood Facebook group people were extoling the act as a way to fight > gentrification! The cafe is not a chain and it employs residents of the neighborhood. But that didn't stop commenters from suggesting that smashing out their windows, gunfire, and loud groups of youth are all good ways to ward off would-be gentrifiers."

It would certainly ward me off.

> "I should have seen it coming. Two summers ago, I was taking my Sunday morning walk, chatting with a friend on the phone while I took pictures of summer flowers. I happened to be relaying the opinion of one of my friends who lives in Europe and is opposed to tr@ns women (biological males) in women's sports. While I was merely mentioning my friend's opinion on an issue to which I'd never given any thought, in a private phone conversation, two large white people who looked like women started screaming, "Fck you! Fck you!" at me. I kept walking. I am a petite woman and I try to avoid danger. I was so shaken that for weeks I spoke in code about anything that might be controversial if I was in public. People no longer respectfully disagree. They shout you down in a way that threatens worse."

Kind of like some of us have been saying for decades.

> "Of course I want to move. I do not care if people don't like me, but I fear violence. Violence is so well accepted in this neighborhood, as my experience noted above shows."

Oh, hell. Here we go.

> "When I drove through central Pennsylvania a few weeks ago, I felt my blood pressure go down as I left the city and saw the trees. I was not bothered at all by the alternating Trump and Harris lawn signs. I would feel fine living next to people who voted however they voted, as long as they do not threaten violence against me (or my cat!)."

But, will she move there and vote the same, like a locust?

> "A few months ago, there was a meme on Facebook that showed a white woman saying, "I don't feel safe in my neighborhood," and a man answered her, "You literally voted for this." I now understand that my situation resembles this cartoon."

Halleluiah!

> “I have voted Democrat all my life. I supported soft-on-crime candidates because I didn’t want to see people go to prison and lose their chance at a better life. But now I see the ruin that we have to live with as a result of these policies. The white liberals in the suburbs do not live with the consequences of their votes. I do.”

> “Kamala Harris urged women to vote for her in secret, to lie to their husbands about it. The irony is that a lot of women did vote in secret, but their husbands were not who they feared telling. Like me, these women voted Republican and not telling their friends and neighbors.”

Epilogue

There appears to be hope for the young ladies at the beginning of this article, but unfortunately, they may have to be mugged by reality (maybe literally) like the childless cat lady at the end of it.

Fortunately, not all Zoomers are like the girls who penned the tales of woe above.

As I've written before on this blog, all you have to do to see that Zoomer boys are moving Right is watch a bunch of them play Helldivers II. Zoomer boys have accurately deduced that Leftists hate them unless they cut off their balls and put on a dress. Unsurprisingly, boys don't want to do that. Another major factor is that Zoomers are the children of Gen-Xers and early Millennials. Those are the generations that started the trend of having few or no children. Religiously conservative Gen-Xers and Millennials had more children than their secular and/or liberals peers. And the most conservative couples had the most children.

It takes a long time to grow a human being. Consequently, demographic trends take 20 – 40 years to bear fruit. The oldest Zoomers are 27. The youngest are 12. The trend is just starting to bear fruit. I have a 12-years-old son, the youngest of the Zoomers. What do you think will happen when his kids are old enough to vote? Demographics are destiny. If you want an idea of what the country will look like 40 years from now, look at the people driving full size vans full of kids today.

As far as Zoomers go, the question is whether the girls will pull the boys left, or the boys will pull the girls right. I'm betting on the latter.

Related

- The Orthosphere (Alan Roebuck): Why You are Demoralized and What You Must Do About it (2012/6/8)
- Σ Frame: The 5 Phases of Deprogramming from the Matrix (2020/2/4)
- Σ Frame: Hitting Bottom must be necessary (2020/11/6)
- Wintery Knight: Young Woman Regrets that Older People in Her Life were Dishonest with Her (2020/12/7)
- Σ Frame: What Hitting Bottom will look like (2021/2/10)
- Catacomb Resident: Clutching Their Pearls (2024/12/1)

Go Up, Young Man

Oscar · 29 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

New frontiers to explore. New territories to conquer.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Young Men
Theme: Virtue
Author's Note: Jack contributed some input.
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

> "Washington [D.C.] is not a place to live in. The rents are high, the food is bad, the dust is disgusting and the morals are deplorable. Go West, young man, go West and grow up with the country."
>
> ~ Attributed to Horace Greeley, New-York Daily Tribune (1865/7/13)

> "Go West, young man, go West. There is health in the country, and room away from our crowds of idlers and imbeciles."
>
> ~ Horace Greely, according to Josiah Bushnell Grinnell

I'm not sure if the quotes above are real, or accurate, but it doesn't really matter. The phrase, "Go west, young man", has taken on a life of its own in American mythology. It represents a time of "Manifest Destiny".

Manifest Destiny

The catch phrase "Manifest Destiny" was the idea that God Himself had destined Americans to expand westward and conquer a continent. Behind "Manifest Destiny" was a spirit of dominion, of purpose.

That feeling of purpose was particularly crucial on 13 July 1865, when Horace Greeley supposedly coined the phrase, "Go west, young man". At that time, the nation was shattered from 5 years of Civil War. President Lincoln was assassinated just 3 months before on 14 April 1865. The American Civil War had just ended on 26 May 1865. 650,000 American men — men in their prime — lay dead. Countless others were wounded and maimed, and countless more bore physical, psychological, emotional, and spiritual scars that would never truly heal.

These scars and other visible reminders of the war remained well into the early 20th century, but it was during this same time that "the West was Won". Many soldiers who had outlived the war used their skills of survival learned in battle to conquer the challenges of pioneering and settling the vast new territories. They also taught these skills to younger men who took that same challenge.

"Manifest Destiny" was exactly what young American men needed at the time. It gave young men a sense of purpose, hope, and optimism in the form of a wild, utterly untamed frontier where literally everything wanted to kill them, and yet, they answered its siren call in droves. Heat, cold, drought, disease, vast expanses of nothingness filled with wild animals and hostile natives predictably took their toll, and yet they kept going west in the hopes of claiming their own little chunk of dominion.

Sounds like fun, doesn't it?

A New Frontier

Men are just the same now as they were in the late 19th century. Men have always needed a sense of purpose and dominion. It's what God created us for.

Men feel that need even more acutely when their lives have been turned upside down.

Young men today haven't fought a Civil war… Yet. Let's hope they don't have to. Nevertheless, they still have scars. Their scars are mostly emotional and spiritual, resulting from fatherlessness, social rejection, and having been told their entire lives that they are unnecessary at best, and "toxic" at worst. It's not so much that their lives have been turned upside-down, it's more like they were born in the upside-down.

Where can a young man go today to find purpose and dominion?

What frontiers remain to be discovered, explored, and conquered?

Similar to what Horace Greely said in 1865, today we say,

> "The West is not a place to live in. The cost of living is high, the women are debased, the Woke are disgusting, and the morals are deplorable. Go UP, young man, go UP and grow up in the breathtakingly vast expanses of space."
>
> ~ After Horace Greeley, New-York Daily Tribune

> "Go UP, young man, go UP. There is vast opportunity in space development, and room away from our crowds of feminists, narcissists, and gender nuts."
>
> ~ After Horace Greely, as quoted by Josiah Bushnell Grinnell

Cometh the Hour, Cometh the Man

Despite all the doom-and-gloom on the internet, it's an exciting time to be alive.

On 13 October 2024, Elon Musk's SpaceX pulled off yet another in a long list of mind-blowing world records. They landed a reusable rocket the size of a skyscraper by having the launch tower catch it.

Did you notice anything about the crowds of cheering SpaceX employees? There's a LOT of young men!

For a technical discussion on why we should be excited about this, please read this article from Devon Eriksen, whose subtitle I unintentionally cribbed when I started writing this article. I was going to discuss the technical, but Mr. Eriksen did it better than I could. The bottom line of Mr. Eriksen's article is that the conquest of the Solar System will be a combination of the Age of Exploration and the Industrial Revolution.

Think about that.

Note the simplicity of the 3rd Generation Raptor engine vs. the 1st Generation.

Imagine this. One group of intrepid entrepreneurs stakes claims to asteroids, takes core samples, and sells the claims to the highest bidders based on the valuable materials they contain. Other groups of intrepid entrepreneurs buy the claims, exploit them, and sell the contents to other entrepreneurs who refine the materials, who then sell them to other groups of intrepid entrepreneurs who make them into stuff we all buy. Other entrepreneurs build ships and habitations from materials mined in space — dwellings that will orbit space, never entering the atmosphere of any planet.

SpaceX's primary delays haven't been technical, or financial, they've been bureaucratic.

> "Unfortunately, we continue to be stuck in a reality where it takes longer to do the government paperwork to license a rocket launch than it does to design and build the actual hardware."

The Department of Justice even sued SpaceX for NOT hiring illegal aliens.

SpaceX won … thereby proving old Otto von Bismarck right yet again.

Consider the alliance between Elon Musk and Donald Trump.

With Trump back in office, the FAA, FCC, EPA, DOJ, and other regulatory agencies will likely clear the onerous hurdles.

And, it'll continue to get better, because SpaceX's incredible success has dramatically decreased the cost of lifting stuff into orbit.

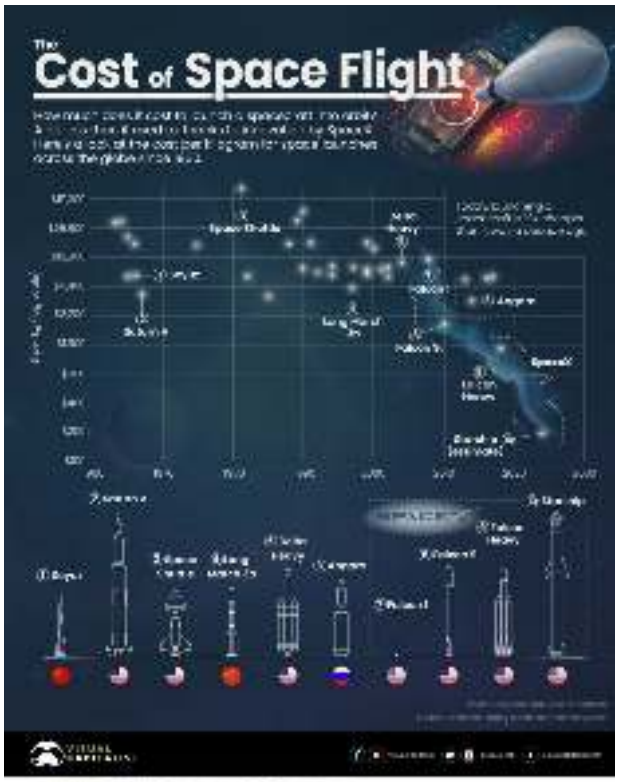

Image Source

As if that wasn't enough to prove old Otto right, the USA is at the forefront, and the competition is not even close. Until today, no one has surpassed reducing the cost to orbit below that of SpaceX circa 2010 with the Falcon 9, much less the Falcon Heavy, much less whatever it'll be when Starship's final form is fully operational.

Epilogue

For the first time since the United States expanded to the Pacific, young men have a hostile, dangerous, unforgiving frontier to conquer. They have a new "Manifest Destiny".

Just as what happened to the Conquistadores and pioneers, and the brave men who went west after the Civil War, and the settlers who came after them, some will die, some will go broke, and some will become wealthier than King Solomon.

Although wealth will obviously be a major motivating factor, I believe that the primary motivation — whether the men realize it or not — will be man's need for dominion.

Behold, we are now witnessing the birth of a new exploration — Space! The final frontier!

I don't know how much of this I'll live to see, but my 14-year-old son is determined to mine asteroids. I pray he and his peers get to fulfil their dreams on the Moon, Mars, the Belt, and beyond.

Related

- Σ Frame: Forming the Vision of Achieving a Goal (2022/4/6)
- Σ Frame: Meanwhile, in a Parallel Dimension of Time and Space… (2024/9/18)

And then they came for our Children...

Oscar · 30 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

And we watched as they were ravaged and savaged before our gaping watery eyes.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Virtue
Author's Note: Coauthored with Jack.
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes + 1 video (optional)

> First they legalized G@y marriage, arguing that "G@ys deserve love too",
> But I did not speak out, because it didn't affect me.
>
> Then they normalized Tr@nssexu@l!sm, saying that it was all for fun and "self-expression",
> But I did not speak out, because it didn't affect me.
>
> Then they officially condoned "sex change" castration and disfigurement, calling it "gender affirmation",
> But I did not speak out, because it didn't affect me.
>
> And then they came for our Children, to ravage their young bodies and tender souls with all these perversions they had established…
>
> But by then…
>
> It was too late.
>
> After Martin Niemöller's poem, First they came … (1948).

For years, Christians and Conservatives have been warning us about the Slippery Slope (or the Greasy Pole), and for years, liberals and degens have been crying out that it's ridiculously untrue.

It was feared that greater permissiveness would lead to polygamy, incest, and what is now called polysexuality. But even a decade ago, no one could imagine that the Slippery Slope would ever lead to ped0ph!l!a or the progenitive nullification of minors.

But now?

It is indeed true. We are already there. It's happening.

> "A California judge has permanently stripped Texas father Jeffrey Younger of all parental rights to his twin sons, James and Jude, granting Younger's ex-wife, Anne Georgulas, the authority to chemically and surgically transition their 12-year-old son, James, against his father's wishes."
>
> The Gateway Pundit: California Judge Strips Father of Parental Rights, Greenlights Ex-Wife to Proceed with Chemical and Surgical Castration of 12-Year-Old Son (2024/11/23)

Believe it or not, Mommy Geldulas is a pediatrician in Texas. God only knows how many boys she's eunuchized. Unbelievable!

Dr. Anne Georgulas with her son, James, in a professional advertisement, whom she wishes to see "transitioned". Note the crucifix on her necklace.

It gets worse. California courts are not the only complicit parties.

> "In 2019, a Dallas jury ruled to grant Younger equal custody. In 2021, Texas courts had prohibited Georgulas from unilaterally transitioning James, but this restriction was nullified when California became a "sanctuary state" for such procedures.
>
> Younger alleges that the Texas family court system, particularly Judge Mary Brown — whom he dubbed "Judge Bloody Mary Brown" — ignored evidence and expert testimony in favor of his son's well-being. Instead, the court granted his ex-wife full custody, allowing her to pursue the medical transition.
>
> Younger's appeals to the Texas Supreme Court were dismissed, forcing him into California's liberal court system, where he faced overwhelming judicial bias.
>
> "The Supreme Court of Texas denied my Mandamus, effectively terminating my parental rights. My children are now subject to being chemically castrated in California. Texas is an empire of child abuse, led by Texas judges." Jeffrey Younger said."
>
> The Gateway Pundit: California Judge Strips Father of Parental Rights, Greenlights Ex-Wife to Proceed with Chemical and Surgical Castration of 12-Year-Old Son (2024/11/23)

Jeffrey Younger with his sons, James and Jude.

It gets even worse. Younger has been fighting this battle for 5 years (since 2019). During this time, he's been placed under a gag order, and he's had to pay for all the "gender affirming counseling".

This is from August 2020 [emphasis mine].

> "In the ongoing legal battle between 8-year-old James Younger's parents, a Dallas judge has awarded the boy's mother, Dr. Anne Georgulas, sole decision-making power regarding her son's health care and schooling.
>
> Judge Mary Brown's ruling effectively reverses a previous ruling that had established a joint managing conservatorship with James' father, Jeffrey Younger.
>
> Georgulas now has the authority to enroll James in school as a girl named "Luna" and have him undergo tr@nsgender medical procedures.
>
> Although a formal hearing was scheduled for Aug. 11, Brown rendered her decision Aug. 10. No explanation was given as to why the judge issued the ruling without a hearing.
>
> Younger has been ordered by the court to pay $250 an hour for tr@ns-affirming counseling sessions, which he had previously objected to on grounds he was not permitted to help select his son's counselors."

Judge Mary Brown of the 301st State District Court in Dallas County is facing impeachment charges in the Texas House of Representatives, with the resolution's author citing her ruling in the custody case of James Younger as the reason he is seeking her removal from office.

"Younger is under a court-imposed gag order and is not permitted to speak to media, but some of his friends and supporters have set up a "Save James" Facebook page to bring awareness to the case.

According to Save James, counseling will cost Younger an estimated $5,000 a month, in addition to a $10,000 retainer required by the counselor.

The case received national attention last fall when a jury ruled 11-1 that Georgulas should have sole conservatorship over James and his twin brother, Jude."

Decision Magazine: Dallas Judge Reverses Previous Ruling, Gives Mother the OK to 'Transition' James Younger (2020/8/17)

And if all that wasn't bad enough, worst of all, Younger's other son, Jude, is liable to get snipped through this travesty as well.

In Jeff Younger's Words

Back in October 2024, Jeff Younger told his whole story in an interview hosted by Nick Freitas. It's a long interview, but I highly recommend watching it, especially to young men.

Nick Freitas: The State VS. Parents (2024/10/11) Length: 1:17:30

In this interview, Younger said his son James is motivated to transition because "Mommy only loves him if he's a girl". Who's going to tell him that any mother who wants to neuter her son doesn't truly love him?

Condemning Sentences

It's all fun and games until your liberal girlfriend or wife, or ex-wife in this case, decides to mur.der your baby in the womb, or decides that your boy is actually a gurl…

… and wastes 5 years of your life in court cases trying save your son.

… and makes you pay for the despicable “counselors” who gaslight him with lies, as well as court and lawyer’s fees.

… and severs his nuggets clean off even before his voice breaks.

… wiping out your generational line.

… and the courts and juries across 2 states are all united against you!

I want to say this is absolutely nuts (a pun that is hardly appropriate nor funny), but this is beyond foolishness. It’s diabolical evil and should not be taken lightly. It’s infuriating that such satanic injustice is allowed to exist.

If you are moved to support Jeff Younger, a GiveSendGo fund was set up to help with his case.

Related

- Crisis Magazine (David Mills): G@y Marriage and the Slippery Slope to Polyamory (2008/6/23)
- Bill Muehlenberg: H0m0sexual Marriage and the Slippery Slope (2010/11/22)
- Jim’s Blog: G@y needs to be suppressed (2019/8/6)
- Σ Frame: Eunuchs of the New Feminist Order (2019/8/31)
- The Gunfighters Guide: Liberals and Underaged Sex – Why ped0ph!l!a is the Weapon of Democrats to Usher in a Reset of the Vico Cycle (2020/9/14)
- Standing for Freedom: We’ve Reached The ‘+’: Ped0ph!l!a is Being Normalized, Popularized, and Defended (2023/4/24)
- The Orthosphere (Kristor): Having Eaten the Red Pill, the Scales then Never Stop Falling from the Eyes (2024/7/27)

The Centrality of the Male Ego

Jack · 2 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A woman can make it or break it.

Readership: Christians; The married;
Theme: Virtues in Relationships
Reader's Note: I received many contributed essays on the topic of Virtue, so for December, I'll continue this theme with a slight variation in the focus — Virtues in Relationships.
Length: 500 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

Intro

The mature, healthy, male ego is central to the stability of both society and the family and it is the seat of marital contentment for both a man and his wife. Without a healthy, well-adjusted ego, men cannot give their best to their employers, coworkers, girlfriends, wives, families, and children. A man's ego is central to his confidence and charisma, which are traits highly valued by women. Children cannot do well in life unless their father has a healthy ego.

In our modern gynocentric culture, the masculine ego has taken a direct hit. The church and society at large always cater to what women demand from men, and gives no consideration as to what would actually build up men and enable them to provide and deliver. The intended purpose is to reduce man to a hollow obedient workhorse for the supposed benefit of women and society — but this strategy is foolish because weak hypoagentic men can offer no real benefits.

Suppressing Unrecognized Latent Masculinity

When a woman attacks a man's ego, she is destroying his confidence and his reputation. She is also attacking the integrity of his soul by tearing down the main channel of communication between his heart and his mind. Even though a woman has so much to gain by reinforcing her man's ego, women never fail to notice men's weaknesses and deliver a well-placed kick in the nuggets — right there.

Even the Manosphere, which presumes to help men by advocating game, charisma, confidence, and sexual prowess, has harmed the egos of those men who cannot compete against stronger players in the SMP.

Worse… Antagonizing, destabilizing, and mocking the male ego is a very effective strategy of Satan to tear down men and to insult and destroy the glory of God in man. Paging Sh!tlord Sharkly.

Thus, it should not come as a surprise that the male ego has taken a direct hit en masse.

Conclusions

As flimsy and superficial as the male ego might appear to women, therein lies the root strength of his masculinity and self-esteem. Poking holes in it just for fun and knocking it down to give her own ego a boost will only leave her with a lesser man. If a woman feels the NEED to do this, and/or a false compunction when she DOESN'T, then she's delineating herself as a minion of evil.

Men need to become more ego-conscious, and learn to draw boundaries to protect and nurture their own egos — simply because it is crucially important to a man's well-being, and because no one else will do it for them.

Women need to do whatever they can to protect and nurture their man's ego. Any woman's effort great or small to stimulate her man's ego can be ascribed as virtuous behavior for the reasons mentioned above. There are no excuses because it is SOOO EASY for women to do this. Upcoming posts will reveal several ways that women can stroke a man's ego.

Related

- Radix Fidem: Husband and Lord (2012/6/19)
- Radix Fidem: The Blessing of Ego (2013/8/31)
- Σ Frame: Ladies Should Respect the Man and Love the Boy (2018/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Reevaluating the Centrality of the Male Ego (2020/4/15)

The Virtue of Vulnerability

Jack · 3 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Masculinity is glorified when coupled with femininity.

Readership: All; Married Men
Targeted Readership: Married Women
Theme: Virtue in Relationships
Author's Note: Coauthored with Oscar.
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes
Warning: Some images may be arousing or NSFW.

The Beauty and Power of Feminine Vulnerability

The introductory post for this month, The Centrality of the Male Ego (2024/12/2), asserted that any effort a woman makes to build up her man's ego is virtuous because of the positive, immediate and longitudinal effects it has on his confidence, reputation, and spirit, which then empowers all within his domain of authority / sphere of influence.

The most powerful ego boost a man can receive from a woman arises from his real claim of dominion over her sexuality, including her attractiveness, reproductive potential, sex appeal, and sexual submission. In this context, female vulnerability, especially her sexual vulnerability, does something truly magical within the heart of a man. It inspires him to conquer, to fight, and to work in order to secure that vulnerability, and also to defend, to nurture, and to protect that vulnerability, even if it requires changing himself and/or sacrificing himself — even to the point of death. It is THAT powerful!

As a side note, this 'magic' is the deceptive lure behind p0rn0graphy, and we all know how pervasive that is.

Men's Motivations

But for this to 'work' properly, a man has to be strong, courageous, and mature, and the woman has to truly 'belong' to and submit to the man. His dominion necessitates her submission and vulnerability. Her submission grants power to his authority. Together they create a sociosexual synergy that reaches its maturity in Peaceful Unity. It is this synergy that allows their relationship to grow deeper, to prosper, and to endure thick and thin throughout their entire lives. It is also what allows their children to experience God through their parents loving union, leading to their health and vitality.

In fact, this 'magic' offers the strongest motivation that men have to marry a woman. I'd even say that most ALL men get married in the hope that having the formally recognized responsibility of a woman's sexual vulnerabilities will effectively boost their own ego and masculine vitality and that it will continue to do so "until death do us part".

Unfortunately for Western men these days, so-called Strong Independent Women™ are not feminine nor vulnerable enough to make good on this hope. Hence MGT0W.

Women's Motivations in Expressing Sexual Vulnerability

How a woman handles her own sexuality can be either the most inspiring virtue, or the most degrading vice, all depending on the context and motivations of those involved.

The most crucial aspect that determines whether a woman uses her sexuality virtuously or sinfully all depends on whether she willingly and enthusiastically yields her sexuality to her husband, and ONLY to her husband (1 Corinthians 7:2-5).

Jack's post, On Sanctification (2024/4/12), discussed how the context of sexual relations determines whether it leads to defilement (outside of marriage) or sanctification (within).

This context also affects women's motivations. Here's an example of what I mean.

Many single women are prideful enough to wield their greatest power over men — their sexual allure, displaying their bodies, skin pics, etc. — in order to attract attention, $$$, sex, and validation. However, very few married women are humble enough to wield their greatest power over their husbands — their sexual vulnerability — to fire up his motivation, tamp down conflict, and maintain peace and harmony in their homes.

In this video, Karen Seitz at The Happy Wife School describes how wives (many of whom probably used their sexuality for selfish or vain purposes in the past and have never broken themselves from this habit) will express this same vulnerability in the wrong way within marriage.

The Happy Wife School: Why Women Always Argue

In general, women have a choice to express their feminine vulnerability in one of two ways.

1. Choosing to perceive everything as a personal criticism or threat, and being defensive, hypersensitive, insecure, argumentative, controlling, and so on as Karen Seitz described.
2. Accepting that vulnerability is what makes them attractive, beautiful, and inspiring, and being willing to reveal that part of their nature to their husbands and ONLY to their husbands as God intends.

Conclusions

A woman's motivation is a large determinant of whether her sexuality is either a virtue or a vice. Does she use her feminine powers to inspire and support her husband, or does she idolize her own sexuality and/or spend herself on the interwebs and/or random Ch@ds who'll break her heart and toss her aside — and then try to cover up and deny their vulnerability by posing as a "Strong Independent Woman™"?

Women hoping to be good wives must understand and recognize that their sexual vulnerability is a virtue that must be properly channeled in order to create the ambience in which God is glorified (1 Corinthians 11:7). This is the necessary and only context in which other feminine virtues (described in upcoming posts) will be seen by her husband and others as beautiful and inspiring. Her submission and vulnerability are essential for these behaviors to have the power of virtue (as described in the previous post).

Related

- Σ Frame: Nudity and Respect (2018/2/21)
- Σ Frame: Revealing the motives behind unconcealed sex and nakedness (2021/1/29)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Uncovering Nakedness (2023/12/16)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)

The Virtue of Flashing

Oscar · 4 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Sexual vulnerability and playfulness instill love, respect, marital harmony, and sex.

Readership: All; Married Men
Targeted Readership: Married Women
Theme: Virtue in Relationships
Author's Note: This post is based on some previous comments. Links to the original comments are embedded in the initial words. Coauthored with Jack.
Length: 950 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes
Warning: Some images may be arousing or NSFW.

Intro

The introductory post for this month, The Centrality of the Male Ego (2024/12/2), suggested that any effort a woman makes to affirm her man's ego is virtuous because of the many positive effects it has on him, which then benefits all within his domain of authority / influence. Thus, it serves to glorify God while also empowering the marital relationship.

This essay will delve into one of the simplest and most powerful ways that a woman can tamp down arguments and keep a man's engine humming smoothly — Flashing (in private settings such as the home).

The Virtue of Flashing

Our previous discussion of Make-Up Sex reminded me of something I heard from Dr. Laura Schlessinger. A female caller asked for help with frivolous (my wording) arguments with her husband that turned into much bigger conflicts. Dr. Laura told her that the next time an argument started to escalate, she should flash her breasts at her husband.

The caller tried it, and it worked so well that she told the women in her Bible study, who then tried it on their husbands and loved the results. The caller called Dr. Laura again to report all of this. It was one of the funniest things I've ever heard on the radio.

The wife exposing her breasts (or other bits) 'works' because she is willingly humbling herself by revealing her sexuality, and it is a non-verbal recognition of the man as her head.

Just as it is written,

> Above all, keep loving one another earnestly, since love covers a multitude of sins.
>
> 1 Peter 4:8 (ESV)

That one simple act of displaying her sexual vulnerability is a direct, easily understood, fun, immediately effective, and powerful way for a wife to show love and respect to her husband — and that love and respect immediately dissolves whatever the disagreement was about.

Benefits of Flashing

As you can see in the above video, one major benefit of Flashing is that it skips petty arguments and heads straight to the Make-Up Sex.

And isn't that the point? Aren't most spousal arguments kind of stupid and pointless? We've discussed ad-nauseum how men can avoid them, but really that's all we can (and should) do — avoid the argument.

That's why refusing to admit her argument, or walking out if she persists (as shown in the first half of the video), is usually the most effective tack a husband can take.

But Dr Laura's advice is one way that wives can avert an argument.

Remember, this was advice for stupid, petty arguments. It doesn't apply to arguments that need to happen. Should we include that in the budget? Should we allow Junior to quit the team? Should the wife homeschool the kids, or should we send them to a private Christian school? Should we buy car A or car B or get our old car repaired?

The arguments above are caused by real disagreements on substantive matters with advantages and disadvantages on both sides and real life consequences, but most disagreements in marriage are petty and stupid. These petty, stupid arguments build up over time, fester, and then derail substantive arguments.

But when husbands and wives learn tricks — especially fun ones, like flashing her boobs — to avoid the petty, stupid arguments, that builds up goodwill that they can spend on the substantive, necessary arguments. Instead of being defensive, and emotionally spent with frayed nerves before the substantive argument even starts, the couple is relaxed and ready to talk things out reasonably. Yes, emotions will be involved. Emotions are always involved when arguing with one's wife. But the emotions are a lot less raw. It's like taking a long hike on healthy feet vs. taking the same hike on feet that are already blistered.

Conclusions

Husbands naturally perceive their wives' Flashing as a playful act of sexual vulnerability and submission — qualities which are essential for behaviors like this to have the power of virtue (as described in the previous post).

Wives must understand that the regular display of feminine vulnerability through Flashing is NOT stupid or shameful, but is rather a fun, flirty, and VIRTUOUS wifely behavior that all wives should add to their regular daily interactions with their husbands.

As silly as a wife flashing her husband may seem, that's what the wise, godly wife does. And since it'll lead to sex, it may literally build up her house(hold).

In contrast, the foolish woman refuses to employ simple tactics like this one to impart grace to her marriage, keeps arguing, driving her husband crazy, and tearing down her house with her own hands (and mouth).

As deti has been pointing out for over a decade now, women have the real power here.

> The wise woman builds her house, But the foolish pulls it down with her hands.
>
> Proverbs 14:1 (NKJV)

Plus, women are (assumed to be) more intuitive and better skilled in communication than men.

That's why Jack has said that contentious wives are responsible for 100% of conflict in marriage. All she has to do is lift her blouse or hike up her skirt with a playful smile, and the conflict is instantaneously resolved. It really is that simple.

Exit Questions

1. Besides flashing, what other things could a wife do that would have the same effect?

Related

- Σ Frame: Nudity and Respect (2018/2/21)
- Σ Frame: Revealing the motives behind unconcealed sex and nakedness (2021/1/29)
- Σ Frame: Uncovering Nakedness (2023/12/16)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)
- Σ Frame: On Sanctification (2024/4/12)
- Σ Frame: The Virtue of Vulnerability (2024/12/3)

The Virtue of Streaking

Jack · 5 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Contextual vulnerability and latent playfulness boosts love, marital satisfaction, and sex.

Readership: All; Married Men
Targeted Readership: Married Women
Theme: Virtue in Relationships
Author's Note: This essay has some input from Oscar.
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes
Warning: Images may be arousing or NSFW.

Intro

The introductory post for this month, The Centrality of the Male Ego (2024/12/2), concluded that any effort a woman makes to build up her man's ego is virtuous because of the positive effects it has on his confidence and spirit, which then benefits all within his domain of authority / influence.

And as we said in The Virtue of Vulnerability (2024/12/3), how a woman handles her own sexuality can be either the most inspiring virtue, or the most degrading vice, all depending on the context and motivations of those involved.

Well, there are grey areas in between too. We all know some women who are very loose in their sexual morals but still inspire great fun and ego stimulation to a man, while other women can be quite chaste and fundamentally moral in handling their sexuality, but still fail to deliver the essential satisfaction that can empower a man. If pressed to choose, most men would prefer the former simply for the ego boost, and would feel like they 'settled' for the sake of order and stability with the latter.

But women (and men) should not feel like they must choose between these two extremes. This essay will describe one easy and powerful way that a wife can stride that gap and keep her husband purring — Streaking (explained below) in private settings such as the home.

Turn on the exhaust fan, Honey! You're smoking hot!

What is Streaking?

First, let me explain what I mean by 'Streaking'. There are two varieties, which I'll call Soft Streaking and Hard Streaking. Soft Streaking is more appropriate when there are children in the home, whereas Hard Streaking is mainly for (but not limited to) honeymooners.

Soft Streaking

Soft Streaking is when the woman's intimate parts are not openly revealed, but clothing is reduced such to allow quick easy access. Soft Streaking is basically when a wife wears light, loose clothing or a short dress or a tunic, while also going braless and/or pantyless while she's at home.

Similar to Flashing, a wife Soft Streaking at home can lighten the mood and lift the energy — namely HERS. He gets the benefit of having a wife who is literally more open and carefree in his presence. Even if she's wearing other clothes, and even if she's not actively flirting or seducing her husband with coy come-ons and tantalizing tease shows, she's signaling that it's right there for the taking anytime he gets the urge to merge.

Hard Streaking

Hard Streaking is when the woman's intimate parts are clearly visible from multiple vantage points. Hard Streaking is when a wife goes around the house wearing lingerie, or a sexy cosplay outfit, or an apron or socks and nothing else, or else just butt-@ss naked. The photos in this post depict Hard Streaking.

Hard Streaking is the default setting for hot horny hookups, but ideally, it should characterize a sizzling good marriage as well. The good news for commiserating couples is that the hot tamales can be preserved, (or resurrected as the case may be) by practicing habits that are characteristic of a primarily sexually oriented relationship (as a marriage should be). One of these habits is Hard Streaking.

As it is said, sex begins in the kitchen.

The Virtue of Streaking

A lot of husbands don't see enough of their wife in the nude. The wife is fastidious about keeping herself covered up at all times. She feels ashamed of any behavior that indicates desire or is even remotely reminiscent of sexual aggression. She might even say she won't "act or dress like a wh0re", etc. She's fundamentally opposed to wearing lingerie or other enticing clothing. Lovemaking is done in the dark. These husbands only get a brief glance of her feminine glory when she gets dressed in the morning, and when she gets in and out of the shower — moments of the day that don't allow time for sexual play. Aside from these fleeting moments, there are few other visual reminders that they have a nubile, sexually active woman in their home. Men greatly fear marrying a woman like this, and rue the day they did. IMO, this is a subtle form of marital fraud.

Like Flashing, Streaking is another fun contextual activity that wives (and husbands too) can engage in that will totally transform the home environment to be more fun and emotionally open. It showcases her natural beauty and delivers a powerful inspiration to her husband. It encourages a couple to be more relaxed in each other's presence and it builds up goodwill and feelings of intimacy. It defuses anxiety and defensiveness and reduces unnecessary arguments. Moreover, it sets the stage for a more authentic husband-and-wife relationship.

The wife exposing her butt cheeks, nips, ribs, thatch, thighs, and so on 'works' because she is willingly humbling herself, and it is a non-verbal recognition of the man as her head. Also, introducing the potential for sexual playfulness transforms the ambient mood of the relationship in favor of a Headship structure.

Time to put a bun in the oven!

In general, Streaking allows married women to express their vulnerability in a virtuous way, without being overtly aggressive (which some chaste / conservative wives may find objectionable).

Women won't like to hear this, but a Christian wife's body belongs to her husband (1 Corinthians 7:4). If he wants her to wear a teddy at home, or prance around the house in the buff, then it helps to recognize that her doing so will create a home environment in which God is glorified and that it will literally build up her house(hold).

This is because her acquiescence is an act of submission and vulnerability, which are essential for these behaviors to have the power of virtue (as described in the previous post).

But it would be much better if she did these things to glorify God in her body on her own initiative out of her love for God and her husband.

Case Study — Jack and Jill

I've said before how I encouraged my wife to go topless at home. She resisted it at first, but as serendipity might allow, she got into the habit after a few hot summer days with no A/C. Since then, she's learned to love stripping down to her panties as soon as she comes home from work. It's an effective and symbolic way to literally shed the clothing and the burdens of her workday.

Conclusions

A woman's willingness to wear (or not wear) clothing that physically signals her sexual availability to her husband is a key indicator of whether she's maximizing the power of her sex appeal according to God's directives (as opposed to her own) to encourage and inspire her husband (or not).

As crazy and embarrassing as a wife streaking around the house in front of her husband may seem, that's what the wise, godly wife does. Streaking is a virtuous wifely behavior that I recommend all wives should experiment with during those weekly down times spent with her husband at home.

In contrast, the foolish woman denies and/or hides her sex appeal in marriage and keeps gatekeeping the kitty long after the cat is out of the bag.

> The wise woman builds her house, But the foolish pulls it down with her hands.
>
> Proverbs 14:1 (NKJV)

Bundled up wives are responsible for 100% of frigidity in marriage. All she has to do is take her bra and panties off while she's at home with hubby, and the residual tension for both is relieved. (Although it might take some time for new Streakers to adjust.) It really is that simple.

Exit Questions

1. Besides flashing and streaking, what other things could a wife do that would have the same effect?

Related

- Σ Frame: Nudity and Respect (2018/2/21)
- Σ Frame: Revealing the motives behind unconcealed sex and nakedness (2021/1/29)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Spawny's Space (Jack): Tunics (2022/9/27)
- Σ Frame: Uncovering Nakedness (2023/12/16)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)
- Σ Frame: The Virtue of Vulnerability (2024/12/3)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Virtue of Flashing (2024/12/4)

The Virtue of Sexual Constancy

Jack · 6 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Constant feminine sexual vulnerability opens the door to love, redemption, and marital sanctification.

Readership: All; Married Men
Targeted Readership: Married Women
Theme: Virtue in Relationships
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Intro

The introductory post for this month, The Centrality of the Male Ego (2024/12/2), concluded that any effort a woman makes to reinforce her man's ego is virtuous because of the positive effects it has on his reputation and spirit, which then empowers all within his domain of authority / influence.

As we said in The Virtue of Vulnerability (2024/12/3), how a woman handles her own sexuality can be either the most inspiring virtue, or the most degrading vice, all depending on the context and motivations of those involved.

Much has been said about the virtue of modesty and the rare virtue of saying "No" to sexual congress outside marriage, which serves to preserve a girl's passions for the man worthy of committing to her in marriage. But not so much as been said about the equally rare virtue of a wife saying "Yes" out of habit within the context of marriage.

This essay will delve into one of the most ancient and reliable ways that a woman can keep a man's engine running at full throttle — the Liberally applied Labial Love.

Women's Greatest Power Over Men

The guys over at RPChristians often fantasized about "Finding the Girl You Can't Keep Yourself from Banging" (Part I, Part II). Verily, it's a true fantasy of how things are supposed to be. The problem with this fantasy is that there are precious few wives who are always down and ready to let their husbands poke their insides at a moment's notice. It seems that women were never taught that good wives are to be their husbands' release valve and that the valve needs to stay open at all times to keep his steam engine chugging. This is basic Husband Maintenance 101.

Most wives are totally obsessed with controlling their husbands through various nefarious means, but this is the wrong way to express their vulnerability. Wives need to be taught (by older, faithful, successful wives as per Titus 2:3-5) that the right way to dominate a man's heart is also the best and easiest way to love him too. The right way to keep a man wrapped around her finger is to keep her wet V sleeve wrapped around his pulsing manhood.

It seems like only the naughty girls ever figure this out.

You see, a husband who is unloading his heavy reproductive burden onto his wife on a regular basis will do practically anything for her and will never stray. He has to fight himself to tell her "No". And why do all the work to find another girl if there's a wet one waiting at home?

But if she's lax in the sack, then his heart will start wandering and the relationship will lag. Keep this up for a time, and he'll eventually find a new flame who does what the former should have been doing all along, and he'll put the cold one away in shame, in favor of her competition.

Sexual Redemption

The basic strategy is to create a need in him for hot humping with HER — and then FULFILL it — and it should be well noted that this is an ongoing dynamic, NOT a once-and-done deal just to seal his marital commitment (which is essentially fraud). This dynamic is the fundamental nature of redemption (from the tortuous temptations of desire) and sanctification (i.e. contentment in marriage — "Only YOU can fully fulfill this need"). In practice, she must continually feed his libido and then satisfy his sexual desire at every prompt. (The last two posts about Flashing and Streaking serve to feed his libido. This post covers the satisfying part.)

In fact, this aspect of the male nature is the whole basis of simpdom and wife goggles, and why men are instinctively given to altruism and chivalry. But when a woman misuses this aspect of a man's nature or neglects his sexual needs, then all she's left with is a Simp — an emasculated supplicating man (or worse). His sexual nature remains unredeemed, and so he'll tug the lug and spill his nuts on his keyboard in lieu of a wife proper.

This phenomenon occurs on a societal level as well. These days, Western women are neglecting men's sexual needs en masse, and lo and behold, there is a Simp epidemic. Surprise, surprise! You reap what you sow, ladies, so don't complain that "there are no good men". As TheDeti often says, you must pick a man, devote yourself to him and

ONLY him, and F_ck him regularly, and in doing so, give him a taste of dominion and allow him the fertile opportunity to grow into the man God created him to be (which may NOT necessarily be exactly what you want or expect). You might even be able to teach him how to love you in the way you desire. That is the influence that a woman has on a man.

The Virtue of Free Love in Marriage

All of this brings me to the main point of this essay.

Sexual desire is a great blessing if it is used properly and maintained well, and a curse if not. A virtuous wife actively pursues the former.

A wife who is always up for a daily sit-and-spin lightens the mood and lifts the energy. This is SOOO EASY for her to do. She doesn't need to actively flirt or seduce her husband with coy come-ons and tantalizing tease shows. She doesn't need to work or prepare anything to keep him satisfied. Really. She doesn't need to suck his c0ck for 4 hours a day until her neck is sore (although he'll not object if she does). She doesn't need to DO ANYTHING. All that is necessary is for her to be RECEPTIVE and APPRECIATIVE of him. He'll know it's right there for the taking anytime he gets the urgent pang to bang.

Moreover, maintaining a constant potential for sexual playfulness transforms the ambient mood of the relationship in favor of a Headship structure.

When a woman yields her feminine vulnerability through submitting sexually to ONE man, then she's doing what God created her to do, and she, her husband, and all their children will reap the benefits of a blessed home.

OTOH, if she places expectations on him and/or makes him 'work' to access her kitty, then she has reduced herself to a transactional tart and made her marriage into a permanent contractual pr0st!tut!0n.

A wife must understand that her sexual readiness is seen by her husband as an act of submission and vulnerability, which is essential for these behaviors to have the power of virtue (as described in the previous post). If a wife does NOT make herself sexually vulnerable, waiting, and eagerly willing before her husband's outstretched pedacter, and regularly too, then she is NOT fulfilling her most basic duty and purpose in marriage, and therefore cannot claim to be a good nor virtuous wife.

One important thing that a wife must always be aware of in expressing her sexual vulnerability is that she must ALWAYS be sexually available to her husband — that means 60-60-24-7. This is what it means to be FAITHFUL. If she refuses his advances even once (without a very good reason), then this is an instance of her NOT being faithful to her marital vows. Worse, even just one instance of her refusal can damage his ego more than her submitting 10 times will help. Even worse, if she is foolish enough to make a habit of rebuffing him for capricious reasons, then it will be very difficult for him to truly love and cherish her. Worst come to worst, he will NOT be able to return the faithfulness he is NOT getting from her. You reap what you sow.

Make-Up Sex

Jack's post, On Sanctification (2024/4/12), offered a satirical case study of how make-up sex may or may not contribute to sanctification, also depending on the context as well as the beliefs and temperaments of the individuals involved. For some people, it's fuel for reestablishing passion in the relationship. But for others, it's a pathetic cope.

In response, Deep Strength wrote an excellent summary.

> "Sex generates feelings of oneness and closeness and generally increases positive response toward your spouse. If this helps a married couple resolve arguments rather than get caught up in a cycle of negative emotions and being mean to each other I can't see how this is a net negative.
>
> I agree with the stance that we shouldn't use sex to cover up issues in a marriage like they don't exist, but sex may be able to be used analogously to 1 Peter 4:8: "love covers up a multitude of sins." The passage is not talking about erotic love of course but erotic love can be used in that manner as well.
>
> I agree with the rest that the quality of sex is not related to sanctification, but it can be a decent thermometer on if there are some potential issues within a marriage. However, the complementarian interpretation of the wife's respect and willingness to have sex with a husband as the thermometer is clearly wrong."

Husbands and wives rarely argue over factual or intellectual issues. Most of the time the arguments are over feelings, usually the wife's feelings. If the feel-good hormone cocktail that results from sex can smooth out the wifie's feeelz and promote emotional harmony between spouses (and it does), then what's the problem?

Conclusions

Always being ready and available for sex is a virtuous wifely behavior that all wives should be practicing on a minute-by-minute basis.

As silly as horning around the house and indulging in make-up sex might seem, that's what the wise, godly wife does. It'll literally build up her house(hold). In contrast, the foolish woman avoids, postpones, and denies her husband sex, thereby turning his balls a darker shade of Blue Pill, driving him crazy, keeping him on edge, making him bitter, frustrated, and regretful of marrying her, and subjecting him to dangerous unnecessary temptation. Closing her legs literally tears down her house.

> The wise woman builds her house, But the foolish pulls it down with her hands.
>
> Proverbs 14:1 (NKJV)

To repeat myself once again, contentious wives are responsible for 100% of conflict in marriage. Whenever hubby gets a lump in his pants, all she has to do is bend over the sofa, lift her skirt with a playful smile, and let hubby take a shot at her bushy bullseye, and all is well within the home. It really is that simple.

Related

- Σ Frame: Nudity and Respect (2018/2/21)
- Σ Frame: Revealing the motives behind unconcealed sex and nakedness (2021/1/29)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Revisiting Val Bure's Dominant Manhandling Incident (2023/9/19)
- Σ Frame: Uncovering Nakedness (2023/12/16)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)
- Σ Frame: On Sanctification (2024/4/12)

The Virtue of Ugliness

Jack · 9 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The inner qualities are what matter most.

Readership: All
Theme: Virtue in Relationships
Reader's Note: This post is based on a group email discussion among the authors of Σ Frame in late 2022.
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

A Private Discussion

A while back, in his post, Idolatry Refugees in the Church Marriage Market (2020/9/11), Ed Hurst discussed the folly of a man preferring a hot but banged up woman over a less attractive but more godly woman. Concerning the former, he emphasized that no matter whether she's a Christian or not (how would you know for sure?), such women seldom if ever wean themselves from their selfish indulgences and are usually incapable of virtuous wifely behaviors, not least that of supporting a man's mission.

Catacomb Resident expressed his disappointment with these men in his post on the Idolatry of Self-Indulgence (2022/9/11).

> "They believe it's a God-given right to lust after the hottest and pay no attention whatsoever to the long-term Covenant implications."

Over the past couple weeks, we've had the same discussion you suggested a while back, about how "men should pay more attention to Christian women who aren't naturally cute."

Have you been following along? Do you have any thoughts about the discussion?

Not really. The discussion has not been very enlightening. Most commenters cannot think outside the current SMP. Just like average men are "invisible" to women, most Men won't even consider a woman who doesn't pass the boner test on first sight.

Yeah, I got that impression too. They are just like Ed described. No one has picked up on the wisdom of your statement.

They sure are ugly, but they sure do love each other!
I think I figured out the essence and the value of your suggestion. I'm working on putting together some words to describe it.

Here's a little true story I'm building on.

Case Study — Jack's Grandparents

My grandfather was married twice. He was strikingly handsome, and had a relatively well-paying job ($40/week or about $700/week in today's dollars) as a boilermaker for the Pennsylvania Railroad — at a time when 25% of the country was out of work. His first wife was extremely beautiful and they married when they were both 17 (~1925).

I actually found an old photograph of a woman from that era who closely resembles her.

Sometime after they married, she became adulterous and began abusing their two daughters. She would go out on the town during the day while my grandfather was at work, leaving their daughters alone at home all day. Then she would come home a couple of hours before my grandfather did and cook dinner and clean up the house, including all the messes the children had made, in order to make it appear like she had been at home all day.

My grandfather eventually figured out what was going on, and he tolerated it for a while. He was Catholic, so divorce was out of the question. But one day he noticed that his youngest daughter's hands had cuts on them. He asked her what had happened to her hands, and she told him in childlike verbiage that mommy was gone for a long time and she got hungry, so she ate the cake mommy made for her lover and mommy punished her by chopping her hands with a knife. This, on top of everything else that had been going on, made him enraged. He once told me, "That was the only time in my life I ever punched a woman in the face." He filed for divorce and won custody of their two young daughters.

Back at that time (~1930), divorce was rare; a Catholic man divorcing his wife quickly became the talk of the town, and the man getting custody of two young girls was absolutely scandalous. The newspaper published a story about this bizarre situation and the parish priest could not tolerate the bad publicity. This led to my grandfather being excommunicated from the Catholic church for being divorced. He carried guilt for a long time, but eventually joined the Lutheran church later in life.

A little while after this, he met my grandmother. She was a virgin with a very shapely figure, but she was a butter face. She had a bony jaw, big teeth, a long hooked nose, and she was very hillbilly. She was so poor, she had to wear the same dress all throughout high school and she washed it every day after she came home. She had been seeing my grandfather's younger brother for a while, but his brother didn't want her because, as he said, "she's a good girl, but she's as cracker as can be". My grandfather regarded his condition of being divorced and in need of a wife and a mother for his daughters, sized her up as a good choice, and decided to marry her (in 1934). He was 26 and she was 20 at the time.

This is the woman I know as my grandmother. I have fond memories of my grandmother praising and doting on my grandfather, talking about how much she loves Jesus, baking cookies and pizza for us as grandchildren, and praying with me before bed at night whenever I stayed with them. When my grandfather died at the age of 78, they had been very happily married for 52 years.

Back in 1963, there was a number one hit by Jimmy Soul that said,

> "If you want to be happy for the rest of your life,
> Never make a pretty woman your wife.
> So for my personal point of view
> Get an ugly girl to marry you."

My grandfather often quoted and sang this song as wise words to live by. But it didn't register with others in the family because it seemed to disparage my grandmother, who was regarded as the family saint.

Conclusions

There is an ancient Chinese proverb that states,

家有丑妻如有一寶。

Translated as, "The ugly wife is a treasure in the home."

Thus, the Chinese regard ugly wives as very valuable and highly regarded. It is no shame to marry an ugly woman.

This is partly why ugly wives are somewhat common in Chinese culture.

Western supermodel Lu Yan is considered ugly by Chinese standards of beauty. She has a square head, small piercing eyes, “angry” eyebrows, a long strong nose, fat lips, and freckles — all of which makes her look very monkey-like! Unacceptable!

The overall point here is not that ugly women are angelic saints and perfect wives and mothers, nor that beautiful women are all morally corrupt and make bad wives and mothers, but rather that humility, grace, respect, reverence, and thankfulness are critically important qualities for a woman to have as a wife. It is somewhat of the nature of things that beautiful women often lack these qualities because they’re spoiled by all the attention they receive, whereas less beautiful women are forced to develop these other qualities of value because their looks aren’t enough to win them favor.

The application is that if a man is fleshly minded and focuses primarily on a woman’s outward attractiveness, then he’s overlooking those important qualities that would actually make a good wife.

OTOH, it does a man no good to choose an ugly wife, thinking that all will be well, as my grandfather and Jimmy Soul claimed, IF she lacks those inner virtuous qualities that constitute the deeper wisdom of this advice.

The problem today is that even fat ugly women are spoiled rotten, have an entitlement complex, and are sexually promiscuous. Hence, the virtue of ugliness no longer exists.

But apparently, it doesn’t matter anyway. Even men who are Red Pill aware are obsessed with T&A and can’t see any virtue in any women, no matter if she is a 2 or a 10.

So if that’s the case, then they might as well go for the 10. At least they’ll have a nice ride to hell.

Tom Brady and Gisele Bundchen.

Related

- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Why are attractive women more dangerous to beta men than their less attractive friends? (2023/2/13)
- Σ Frame: 7 Things Men Want out of a Woman in Marriage (2023/5/17)
- Σ Frame: Revisiting Val Bure's Dominant Manhandling Incident (2023/9/19)

The Virtue of Being Centered

Jack · 10 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Love is instilled by maintaining one's Mental Point of Origin.

Readership: All; Men
Targeted Readership: Single Men
Theme: Virtue in Relationships
Length: 1,900 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

What Does it Mean to be 'Centered'?

The Classic Manosphere author, Rollo Tomassi, defined "mental point of origin" in this way.

> "Your mental point of origin is really your own internalized understanding about how you yourself fit into your own understanding of Frame."

Rollo describes the practical importance of a man's mental point of origin according to his own experience.

> "It didn't take my doing anything for a woman to get laid or hold her interest. All I did was make myself my mental point of origin. It's when I started putting women as a goal, making them into more than just a source of enjoyment, that I transferred that mental point of origin to her and I became the necessitous one.
>
> A lot of guys will call that being 'needy', and I suppose it is, but it's a neediness that results from putting a woman (or another person) as your first thought — your mental point of origin."
>
> The Rational Male: Mental Point of Origin (2014/11/14)

Most all men at some point or another make the same mistake Rollo made. They start taking a woman too seriously. When she starts upping her demands, employing bulverisms, comfort tests, fitness tests, playing blame-and-shame games, etc., men think they have to jump through all her hoops to maintain the relationship. Then they wonder why they're not getting any love or respect … or p00n. Or if they are already getting it, then they become p_ssy whipped and fold to her every whim. Moreover, they start to make the woman their mental point of origin, and then they lose Frame, and then everything else unravels. Rollo has described this dynamic repetitively from many viewpoints, and it also aligns with the sensibilities of Christian Headship.

You see, a lot of Christian men are spiritually disobedient in order to remain carnally obedient, whereas, Rollo is being spiritually obedient in order to be carnally disobedient. In fact, unlocking this reality was the game-changer behind the rise of Game.

Let me explain.

The Idolatry of Making A Woman Your Mental Point of Origin

The Red Pill calls this pedestalizing the woman. In religious jargon, we would say that the man makes the woman into an idol. The idolatry is not so much in worshipping the woman in lieu of God, as we might be wont to think about that term (although that may very well be true in the case of a female dominated relationship), but rather, idolatry is the act of abandoning Frame and losing yourself in your own concupiscent fantasies and then letting yourself go to pieces.

So what happens when a man gets the idea that putting a woman as his first thought — his mental point of origin — is the right thing to do, or worse, that this is what it means to show love to her? Of course, he tips his head towards idolatry, and the other result is that she will NOT feel attracted to him.

Pop psychology has termed all this as being "unlucky in love" or more garishly, "only being attracted to bad / wrong people", But that's not really it. There's nothing esoteric or supernatural about it. It just seems that way to those who don't have enough self-awareness to realize how their spiritual disposition morphs into goon mode in the presence of their idol.

The Difficulty of Remaining Centered

It is quite common for men to lose their mental point of origin at the first whiff of fresh P00n and then downshift into gynolatry pedestalization mode. This happens all the time — often without them even realizing it. Worse, some men who are more self-aware know that they impulsively lose Frame control at the sight of T&A, but they can do nothing to help themselves. Even worse, it seems rather common for young Christian men to read passages in the Bible or other Christian literature that say, "husbands should love their wives", and interpret that to mean that he should make her his mental point of origin IF he is to love her. Worse yet, this particularly evil interpretation is emphasized by the male propensity towards altruism and chivalry, as well as cultural feminism and churchian doctrine (i.e. Complementarianism). Worst of all, on top of all this is the incessant gaslighting from women saying they want consideration, empathy, thoughtfulness, etc. which is then heard by men to mean that he needs to place her at his mental point of origin if he is to ever satisfy her. (Remember to add, "…if she already thinks he's hot" to whatever a woman says she wants in a man.)

But interestingly enough, the exact opposite is true. She will feel loved and possibly even experience genuine desire for him when he makes himself his mental point of origin, as Rollo stated. Or if you prefer to Christianize this concept, that would be saying he puts God first in his life — or more precisely, he makes himself his mental point of origin in order to better conform himself to God's will for his life. Circumscribing this psychological boundary of the self, i.e. being Centered, focusing on his Purpose / Work, and maintaining Frame, is essentially the crux of spiritual obedience (for men).

It's hard for Christian men to wake up from this deception because they think they're being obedient to God as long as they're NOT fornicating, but the reality is that they're NOT fornicating because they're gyno-idolaters who inadvertently forfeit those opportunities by repelling women — NOT because they're 'pure' (unless you consider !ncels 'pure'). Heh.

It's amazing that Rollo got this right, while most church leaders have dropped their balls here. It should be the other way around.

Case Study — Jack's Experience

When I was younger, I made a commitment to only date Christian women with intentions to marry. But again and again, the only women I could actually attract were either not Christians, or they were very bad Christians, or they were not attractive to me at all. Some people told me that the reason I only attracted women who were ineligible (according to my standards) was because I was "unlucky in love" (cursed?), or that I was "too spiritually immature". (I had no idea what that meant at the time.) Some said it was because I was a bad guy myself (assuming like attracts like). Anyway, I could never figure it out.

I always had the idea that love is when one does what is right or good for the other person (c.f. 1 Corinthians 13), even though this is sometimes disagreeable or unpleasant to the one being loved. But I've also had more than a few women tell me that they knew I was doing right by them, but it didn't feeel like I loved them (even though I thought I did), and they auto-rejected me because of this impression. Too much Headship for their tastes, I suppose.

As I grew older, I learned that people often do things out of love for others (or so they think), but actually, it is only for their own self-esteem. Men get an ego trip out of fawning over a hot girl, and think that they are "in love" when actually they're just tapping the thrill of a gynolatry rush. Women are especially sensitive to men who do this, and they strongly dislike it. Men are oblivious to this because they're obsessing over the possibility of poking her P00n. They're not aware that they've lost their mental point of origin, maybe because they never had one to begin with, or because they don't exercise it enough for it to be resilient in the face of a fertility goddess.

Well, it all makes sense now. That was me.

Now, I understand the reason why I was rejected by the women I favored most is because I made Christian women my mental point of origin, thinking that is what it meant to love them, and that I should love them because the Bible says so. I only focused on Christian women because I was marriage minded, but in reality, this heavy expectation only supercharged my propensity to become anxious and fall into a hamflustering gynoblithering anti-Frame. I felt like I couldn't control it. It was automatically, Meet Pretty Christian Girl → Become Fake Christian Simp. I'll admit, I also had a lot of other Blue Pill crap going on in my head at the same time, especially the Nice Guy™ syndrome. But now I know that ugly women and non-Christian women were attracted to me simply because I DIDN'T make them my mental point of origin, and that the women I truly desired didn't want me because I DID.

Case Study – Elspeth's Testimony

Elspeth wrote,

> "No man of any worth has the desire, time, or inclination to micromanage his wife. To have standards, Frame, and clear expectations is not the same as micromanaging.
>
> Maybe my lifelong experience with men who are both strong and chill has given me a specific view. I'll see if I can explain what this looks like.

> In both my home of origin, and in my marriage, there is a particular culture that is articulated NOT by lists of things to do or not do, or managing every aspect of life, or outlining the details of how time and money are spent. There is instead, an overarching view of what needs to be getting done, done well, and done within certain parameters. My job is to be smart enough to figure out how to execute his vision for the home without being micromanaged, and to ask for help when I need it.
>
> In the beginning, there's a lot more trial and error as you're combining the two disparate backgrounds and household cultures to create a new marital and family culture. When husband as head is fully internalized as the culture of the family, the wife usually adapts to his frame; IF he has any frame into which she can adapt. Women are malleable that way when we feel safe."

> "We came to understand that it's simply "whoever has the more dominant personality sets the tone". When it's the wife, she sets the tone, which is bad because our hormones make us more flighty. When it's the husband, he sets the tone. Love and romance and kindness and compromise and all of the beautiful things can still flourish without the husband needing to bend like a reed in the wind in response to his wife's emotions.
>
> However, none of that is based on some foolish type of "game". [My husband] cannot stand that whole idea and really had no frame of reference for it as described online. In the culture we grew up in, "running game" on a woman was always thought of as a way a man deceives and manipulates a woman whom he no intention of marrying.
>
> I've come to conclude that the reason a man with Frame is characterized as performing, barking orders, and having to "do game" is because in America, most men cannot conceive of a version of love that doesn't perpetually capitulate to his wife. It's what we've been stewing in for the past 60 years, so I can't fault them for thinking that way."

Conclusions

Within Christian circles, we have heard the claim that "godliness is attractive". The Manosphere has roundly mocked this claim. Dalrock, Deep Strength, and others have offered insights about the falsehood and deception of this claim. But if we understand a godly man to be one who makes himself and his God ordained mission in life his mental point of origin, then there might be a grain of truth to this saying.

Related

- The Rational Male: Plate Theory vs Lady's Game (2012/1/2)
- The Rational Male: Balancing Act (2014/6/25)
- Σ Frame: The Relinquished Life (2021/3/8)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Viewpoints on Man's Confusion about How God Works in the Life of a Believer (2021/3/29)
- Σ Frame: Knowing One's Self (2021/10/30)
- Σ Frame: The Young Man's Problem (2022/2/4)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Delusion of the Good (2022/8/19)

When Sons Reject their Fathers

Oscar · 11 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Good sons are a curse to disobedient fathers.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Virtue in Relationships
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Dear Oscar

The following is a breakdown of an article published in The Guardian, written by Sam Delaune. I haven't reproduced the entire article here. Readers can follow the link to read the whole thing.

> "I didn't get a call from my son on Father's Day this year. Our political disagreements have made things hard."

As a father, I empathize, but I can't say I'm surprised. Read on.

> "I'm a 59-year-old progressive and a special education teacher, and I'm voting for Kamala Harris in November. Nick* [pseudonym] is 21, and he would say that he holds traditional, conservative values — but he's conflating those values with radical MAGA ideas, which correlate the right with patriotism, manhood, intelligence, independence and honesty."

Gosh, I wonder how those values came to be associated with the political right, and not the political left. It's a mystery! /S

> "I understand where my son's vulnerabilities came from…"

No, he doesn't. Read on.

> "… and why this right-wing posturing was able to seep into him. I understand it, but I still regret it.
>
> Nick was a sweet kid. He was really quiet. He's on the upper end of the autism spectrum, so he can have difficulty interpreting social cues. All he wanted to do was follow whatever the big kids were doing.
>
> Nick never found a person that he could really link or vibe with."

Does that sound familiar? Autism is real, and it does make it more difficult for autistic people to connect with others, but those on the upper end on the spectrum can overcome those difficulties with coaching. It's parents' responsibility to provide that coaching. Autism is not an excuse for parents to give up on their child's socialization.

Let me use an analogy. If your child was born with only one leg, would you make the effort to teach him/her how to work around that disability? Of course you would!

As we'll see later, Nick was far from a lost cause. His parents simply neglected to help him. That help was primarily Nick's father's responsibility.

> "Some of the older guys at school who Nick was trying to emulate were really into building computers, hacking, and the dark web. He got online as a teen and joined some far-right message boards, and I think that's where he got massaged into these right-wing positions. He started echoing those points, and then he got praise from whatever knuckleheads posted that crap — it became a spiral. Nick was kind of lost, but on the internet, he was able to be a different person, to have more confidence and show off how bright he is."

Here we see Nick emulating older males. That's natural. It's what we're designed to do. Humans — especially children — learn primarily through observation and imitation.

Why did Nick feel the need to emulate the boys at school and not his dad? Why isn't his dad asking that question?

> "We had moved to the Bay Area in 2017, after Trump won the election."

Ah, yes, the San Francisco Bay Area, a well-known Mecca of masculinity /S. That'll be important later.

> "I also know that when you come of age, you want to reject your parents' beliefs. My father was a Reagan Republican who was really old school, values-wise. A lot of my political development was a rejection of his values, so I wonder now how much of Nick's fascination with MAGA is a reaction against the way I brought him up."

Gosh, it's almost as though we reap what we sow. This is the only mention of Nick's paternal grandfather in the article. The way that Mr. Delaune describes Grampa leads me to believe that Grampa is (was?) a traditionally masculine man. Mr. Delaune gives no indication of Grampa's involvement in Nick's life, but I suspect that Nick would've been far better off if Grampa had been heavily involved in his life. Mr. Delaune rejected Grampa's masculinity, completely neglected to teach Nick anything about masculinity, and apparently kept Nick away from the one man in his family who could've taught him, and now Mr. Delaune wonders why his son is rejecting him.

> "I've never been a macho kind of man."

I'm shocked! Shocked!

[image]
Mr. Delaune's experience with his son should've pricked him awake enough for him to ask himself why those phenomena intersect, but Mr. Delaune remains oblivious.

> "To me, our biggest responsibility as humans is to look after each other. Men have been given places of privilege in society, so when people talk about being a man, to me that means: what do you use your privilege for? I worked at a pirate radio station in Houston, and we helped with emergency efforts during Tropical Storm Allison in 2001. For me, manhood is all about using your energy to make life better for the person next to you."

Mr. Delaune says that as though being "a macho kind of man" is antithetical to making "life better for the person next to you" or "Look[ing] after each other", which explains a lot. The men who make Mr. Delaune's cushy first-world lifestyle possible are invisible to him — Men like these roughnecks — and they voted for Trump.

Apparently, Mr. Delaune thinks he knows better. He mentioned Tropical Storm Allison, yet he ignores the Cajun Navy, which has assisted in disaster relief efforts all over the USA for years.

Now there's the Redneck Airforce.

That's a whole lot of 'toxic' masculinity.

> "Nick and I would get into arguments at the dinner table over things like immigration. He would say that there's this invasion of people coming across the border, but I could usually move him when I got into the emotional, human thing."

This is a common leftist straw man. They habitually conflate legal and illegal immigration, which is like conflating shopping and shoplifting.

> "My wife and I divorced in 2020, and Nick lived with me for six months in California after that, but he later went back to live with her in Houston, so I saw and heard less from him. I no longer have the same influence over him. I can't be there to talk about the human cost of Trump's policies, which might change his mind."

Far be it from me to advocate for divorce, but in this case it may have saved young Nick.

> "Nick started hanging out with guys in Houston who shared his beliefs or had even more radical ones. They > started talking about what makes a man. They said men have to be strong, so Nick bought a bike and rides it around every day. That's a healthy habit. But they also say things like "men smoke", so now he does that too."

> "They introduced Nick to guns and started taking him to the shooting range. On his 21st birthday, his mother and I sent him money, thinking he'd spend it on a computer or something, but he went out and bought a gun. He didn't tell either of us, because he knows how we feel about them."

God forbid a man should be strong! I share Mr. Delaune's distaste for smoking — it's an unhealthy, nasty habit — but young Nick is embracing masculinity. Clumsily, perhaps, but why would anyone expect otherwise? He's been completely unguided up until now.

> "One of his rightwing friends is really wealthy. It's nice to have a friend who takes you out to dinner, but it also means Nick hears all this stuff about how people who aren't rich are basically parasites."

I seriously doubt that was Nick's friend's actual argument. Mr. Delaune habitually constructs straw people of indeterminate gender.

> "And he doesn't want to listen to his mom or me, because I've been a teacher my whole life and we always scrimped by, so he thinks we're lazy, stupid hippies. Why would he listen to anything we say, when his friend's parents have a Mercedes in the driveway and live in a million-dollar house?"

"Lazy"? Maybe. "Stupid"? Likely. Ramsey Solutions found that 'teacher' is the third most common career for millionaires in the USA, after engineer and accountant. That means that Nick's parents could have been millionaires, which means that they chose to NOT be millionaires. Certainly, living in the Bay Area and getting divorced didn't help. Why should Nick listen to them? He clearly doesn't want to be like Mr. Delaune, and why should he?

The MAGA Son Rises

But wait! There's more!

> "Nick has a girlfriend now, who he met online in one of his rightwing forums. My ex says that she's a perfectly lovely girl and isn't some sort of Marjorie Taylor Greene type, just a country Catholic kid. She's also Latina, so his feelings on immigration have softened after he spent time with her family. He's got something at stake now."

So, let me get this straight. Young Nick was an awkward, autistic kid who found the Androsphere online, and as a young man embraced masculinity, got in shape, found real-life friends who coached him in ways his parents wouldn't, and now he's dating a "perfectly lovely" conservative Catholic Latina country girl.

How can anyone see this as anything but a major win?

> "When Nick and I talk these days, it's mostly over text. We barely speak on the phone. I hope that I'll reach an economic status where I can fly to Texas more often. I just want to be physically present with him. If there's a conversation going on, even if he's just telling me to fuck off or calling me a libtard, that's something I can work with. Even if we argue, I can always tell him that I love him."

If Mr. Delaune really wants to spend more time with his son, why doesn't he move back to Houston? Clearly, something is more important to him than his son is. Why should Nick want to be like a father who doesn't care enough about him to move? Maybe Mr. Delaune could stop arguing with his son about politics and instead apologize to him for failing him as a father, and tell Nick that he's proud of all the progress he's made despite his lack of fathering. But of course, that won't happen, because — as a typical leftist — politics are his religion, his idol, his life.

Hopefully, young Nick will find faith in Christ, marry his Latin love and raise a large brood of Christian Texas country kids who embrace their God-given masculinity or femininity naturally and enthusiastically.

Let's pray for Nick and other young men on a similar journey. Nick is living evidence that young men can still find happiness today, despite the odds.

Related

- Σ Frame (Oscar): Cinderella Man (2023/6/28)

The Necessity of Womanly Virtue

Oscar · 12 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The building blocks of civilization.

Readership: All
Theme: Virtue in Relationships
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Intro

Every American should read Alexis de Tocqueville's "Democracy in America". de Tocqueville was a French statesman and diplomat who wrote his first-person observations on American society in the 1830s. His description of small, largely self-sufficient, Christian communities that had almost no dealings with the federal government sounds about as close to Heaven (or maybe Tolkien's Shire) as it's possible to be in this sinful, fallen world.

For this post, I want to highlight this statement by de Tocqueville.

> "As for me, I shall not hesitate to say it: although in the United States the woman scarcely leaves the domestic circle and is in certain respects very dependent within it, nowhere does her position seem higher to me; and now that I approach the end of this book where I have shown so many considerable things done by Americans, if one asked me to what do I think one must principally attribute the singular prosperity and growing force of this people, I would answer that it is to the superiority of its women."

Reading that for the first time blew my mind. Can you imagine anyone writing that today? de Tocqueville attributed the "superiority of [American] women" (compared to European – especially French – women) to their religious upbringing, stating that in America, religion (by which he meant Puritan Protestantism) "reigns as a sovereign over the soul of woman, and it is woman who makes mores" (i.e., "the whole moral and intellectual condition of a people").

The Importance of Good Teaching

Here, de Tocqueville isn't Blue Pill simping. A person's moral compass is set in early childhood, and rarely wavers thereafter. Mothers – as their children's primary caregivers – play the primary role in shaping children's moral compass. Fathers then refine it and add nuance to it. This is yet another reason to marry a virtuous woman.

As the old saying goes, the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world. Instilling and enforcing that kind of morality in young mothers is the domain of older, grandmother age, women.

> 1 But as for you, speak the things which are proper for sound doctrine: 2 that the older men be sober, reverent, temperate, sound in faith, in love, in patience; 3 the older women likewise, that they be reverent in behavior, not slanderers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things — 4 that they admonish the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be discreet, chaste, homemakers, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God may not be blasphemed.
>
> Titus 2:1-5 (NKJV)

Note that St. Paul associates women's behavior most closely with whether or not God's word is blasphemed. Communities that obey this commandment from the Holy Spirit are rare as hen's teeth in the modern USA, but they were common enough in de Tocqueville's day that he attributed the strength of America to exactly that.

Results

The result, according to de Tocqueville, was that…

> "Of the world's countries, America is surely the one where the bond of marriage is most respected and where they have conceived the highest and most just idea of conjugal happiness."

… and …

> "[T]he American draws from his home the love of order, which he afterwards brings into affairs of state."

Would anyone say that of modern America?

For a deeper dive on how family structure affects politics, you can watch the following video, but I don't want to focus on politics here.

Gynapotheosis

The point I want to drive home here is that womanly virtue is both a primary indicator and a cause of societal health or disease.

As I've stated before, patriarchal communities protect their women. In the uncivilized corners of this world that I've visited, the men's primary motivation is to protect their women from other men outside of their family, clan, tribe, etc. In these places, men consider unprotected women and children fair game for all kinds of unspeakable things.

In a more civilized culture (yes, the vast majority of the USA is still civilized compared to much of the world), the primary motivation of men in a patriarchal community is to protect young women from their own foolishness. It's not that men in civilized places are angels (we're all sinners), but that truly villainous men are rare. Even so, folly can be just as destructive as evil. Young women possess a fortune in the form of youth and beauty. The purpose of that fortune is to secure commitment from a good man so they can raise children together, but temptations to abuse that gift abound, from the rooster carousel to the OASIS.

We're far from the first culture to have grappled with this problem, as J. D. Unwin documented 100 years ago.

Ancient Israel dealt with it.

> 16 Moreover the Lord says:
>
> "Because the daughters of Zion are haughty,
> And walk with outstretched necks
> And wanton eyes,
> Walking and mincing as they go,
> Making a jingling with their feet,
> 17 Therefore the Lord will strike with a scab
> The crown of the head of the daughters of Zion,
> And the Lord will uncover their secret parts."

18 In that day the Lord will take away the finery:
The jingling anklets, the scarves, and the crescents;
19 The pendants, the bracelets, and the veils;
20 The headdresses, the leg ornaments, and the headbands;
The perfume boxes, the charms,
21 and the rings; The nose jewels,
22 the festal apparel, and the mantles;
The outer garments, the purses,
23 and the mirrors;
The fine linen, the turbans, and the robes.

Isaiah 3:16-23 (NKJV)

The Romans dealt with it.

> 26 For this reason God gave them up to vile passions. For even their women exchanged the natural use for what is against nature. 27 Likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust for one another, men with men committing what is shameful, and receiving in themselves the penalty of their error which was due.
>
> Romans 1:26-27 (NKJV)

And so it is today in the West.

The Fallout

Sex is inherently more risky for women than for men. Being penetrated places inherent physical, emotional, and spiritual risks on women that being the penetrator does not. Women are more likely to contract STDs, they're more vulnerable to losing the ability to pair-bond, and of course, men can't get pregnant. For these reasons and more, healthy cultures (which means patriarchal cultures), protect young women from their own foolishness and the consequences thereof. This is why every civilization considers chastity (celibacy prior to marriage, and faithfulness in marriage) the primary womanly virtue, but NOT the primary manly virtue (usually a combination of strength and courage). Far from being an indicator of m!s0gyny, protecting young women from their own foolishness is an indicator of a culture that loves its women.

In case I wasn't clear enough, I'm saying that our culture hates its women.

Most people (the ones who are honest, anyway), understand that feminists hate men, but over the years I've come to realize that feminists hate women even more than they hate men, and they hate children most of all. Given that our culture is thoroughly infested with feminism, no one should be surprised that it hates women.

When a culture hates its women, it neglects to protect them. The young women then become sexually immoral, as in ancient Israel. Sexually immoral women have always existed and will always exist, but in a healthy culture (as de Tocqueville described) they are a small percentage of the female population. When sluttiness becomes normal, that's an indicator that the structure prescribed in Titus 2 (and described by de Tocqueville) that protects young women from their own foolishness has broken down.

Mothers are the primary transmitters of cultural values, virtues, and morals (what de Tocqueville referred to as "mores"). If the mothers are immoral, then values, virtues, and morals will never be transmitted to the next generation. This is especially true when fathers are absent or hamstrung by feminism. As J. D. Unwin demonstrated, sexual immorality is the most reliable predictor of societal collapse.

Womanly virtue is that important. You can have civilization or you can have sexually immoral women. You can't have both – at least not for long.

Naked Athena stops the traffic.

None of this should be misconstrued to excuse male sexual immorality. Chastity is a Biblical commandment for both men and women, and as J. D. Unwin noted (he wasn't a believer, as far as I know), the civilizations that enforced chastity for both sexes fared best. This shouldn't be surprising. God created reality. Thus, it's reasonable to expect that following God's commandments works best in reality in the aggregate. Besides, sexually immoral men contribute to the problem. You can't spray gasoline on a burning house and then whine that the fire keeps getting worse.

Conclusions

So, what can men do about all of this? First and foremost, be a virtuous man yourself. Second, marry a virtuous woman or none at all. Third, raise your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord (Eph. 6:4). All of this is easier to do when you're part of a patriarchal Christian community that supports your efforts, as St. Paul prescribed and de Tocqueville described.

I want to make one final point clear. My aim is not to save Western Civilization or even the USA. God alone knows if either can be saved, and He alone will either have mercy on us or not. My goal is to raise my children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and to help my children do the same for their children. That will be my legacy irrespective of what else happens around us.

May God bless us and have mercy on us.

Related

- Σ Frame: 16 Qualities of an Irresistible Woman (2017/12/1)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Gynapotheosis (2021/4/21)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Effects of the Sexual Revolution on Female Sexuality (2024/9/24)
- Σ Frame: Fiddler on the Roof : A Parable of Progressivism (2024/11/4)
- Σ Frame: The Sirach on Raising Daughters (2024/11/6)
- Σ Frame: The Virtue of Vulnerability (2024/12/3)

The Necessity of Motherly Virtue

Oscar · 13 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Dispensing natural affection to children in their formative years carries many longitudinal blessings.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Fathers; Mothers; Mothers-to-be; Young Men;
Theme: Virtue in Relationships
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Intro

Previously, I've made the point that boys whose mothers lavish them with unconditional love and affection as babies and toddlers tend to not feel the need to seek out that kind of unconditional love and affection from women when they grow up. Men who received that kind of love as babies and toddlers are more secure in themselves, and have a stronger sense of self worth. That makes them more resilient, and helps them avoid the pitfalls that Jack mentioned here.

> "I believe the despairing types are those who have put all their hopes on shifting sands. What is it? Finding 'love'? Women? Men's fantasy of emotional intimacy? Something else?"

I reached that conclusion through personal observation and inductive reasoning, but I wasn't aware of any research that supported that observation. Then I stumbled upon this video by Carl Benjamin.

The subject of the video is David Beckham's publicly affectionate behavior towards his daughter, and how it drives feminists crazy(er), but Benjamin also shared an article from the Gottman Institute that reveals the positive effects of parental affection throughout a person's life. I believe that the research the article references supports some of the observations I've made on this blog. Let's take a look.

The ¡Sc!eNcE!

> "In 2010, researchers at Duke University Medical School found that babies with very affectionate and attentive mothers grow up to be happier, more resilient, and less anxious adults. The study involved about 500 people who were followed from when they were infants until they were in their 30s. When the babies were eight months old, psychologists observed their mothers' interactions with them as they took several developmental tests.

> The psychologists rated the mother's affection and attention level on a five-point scale ranging from "negative" to "extravagant." Nearly 10 percent of the mothers showed low levels of affection, 85 percent demonstrated a normal amount of affection, and about six percent showed high levels of affection.

> Then 30 years later, those same individuals were interviewed about their emotional health. The adults whose mothers showed "extravagant" or "caressing" affection were much less likely than the others to feel stressed and anxious. They were also less likely to report hostility, distressing social interactions, and psychosomatic symptoms."

Sounds great, right? How exactly is a mother supposed to lavish "extravagant" or "caressing" affection to her children while she's at work and they're at daycare?

> "The researchers involved in this study concluded that the hormone oxytocin may be responsible for this effect. Oxytocin is a chemical in the brain released during times when a person feels love and connection. It has been shown to help parents bond with their children, adding a sense of trust and support between them. This bond most likely helps our brain produce and use oxytocin, causing a child to feel more positive emotions."

Do you know when mothers release the most oxytocin? When they breastfeed. Again, how is a mother supposed to do that when she's at work while her kids are in daycare? And no, pumping milk and having a daycare worker bottle feed the baby doesn't have the same effects.

> "Next, a 2013 study from UCLA found that unconditional love and affection from a parent can make children emotionally happier and less anxious. This happens because their brain actually changes as a result of the affection. On the other hand, the negative impact of childhood abuse and lack of affection impacts children both mentally and physically. This can lead to all kinds of health and emotional problems throughout their lives. What's really fascinating is that scientists think parental affection can actually protect individuals against the harmful effects of childhood stress."

Note the effects that keep emerging in the results of all these studies — stress and anxiety.

> "Then in 2015, a study out of the University of Notre Dame showed that children who receive affection from their parents were happier as adults. More than 600 adults were surveyed about how they were raised, including how much physical affection they had. The adults who reported receiving more affection in childhood displayed less depression and anxiety and were more compassionate overall. Those who reported less affection struggled with mental health, tended to be more upset in social situations, and were less able to relate to other people's perspectives."

Isn't this amazing. Children who receive more affection grow into adults who are more empathetic. Empathy is crucial for developing social skills.

> "Researchers have also studied the benefits of skin-to-skin contact for infants. This special interaction between mother and baby, in particular, helps calm babies so they cry less and sleep more. It has also been shown to boost brain development. According to an article in Scientific American, children who lived in a deprived environment like an orphanage had higher levels of the stress hormone cortisol than those who lived with their parents. Scientists believe that the lack of physical contact in the orphanages is a major factor in these physical changes."

Our earlier study of Body Chemistry reported that there is a feedback loop between cortisol (the stress hormone) and Testosterone. Cortisol reduces testosterone in men, and can even negate some of the positive effects of testosterone in men.

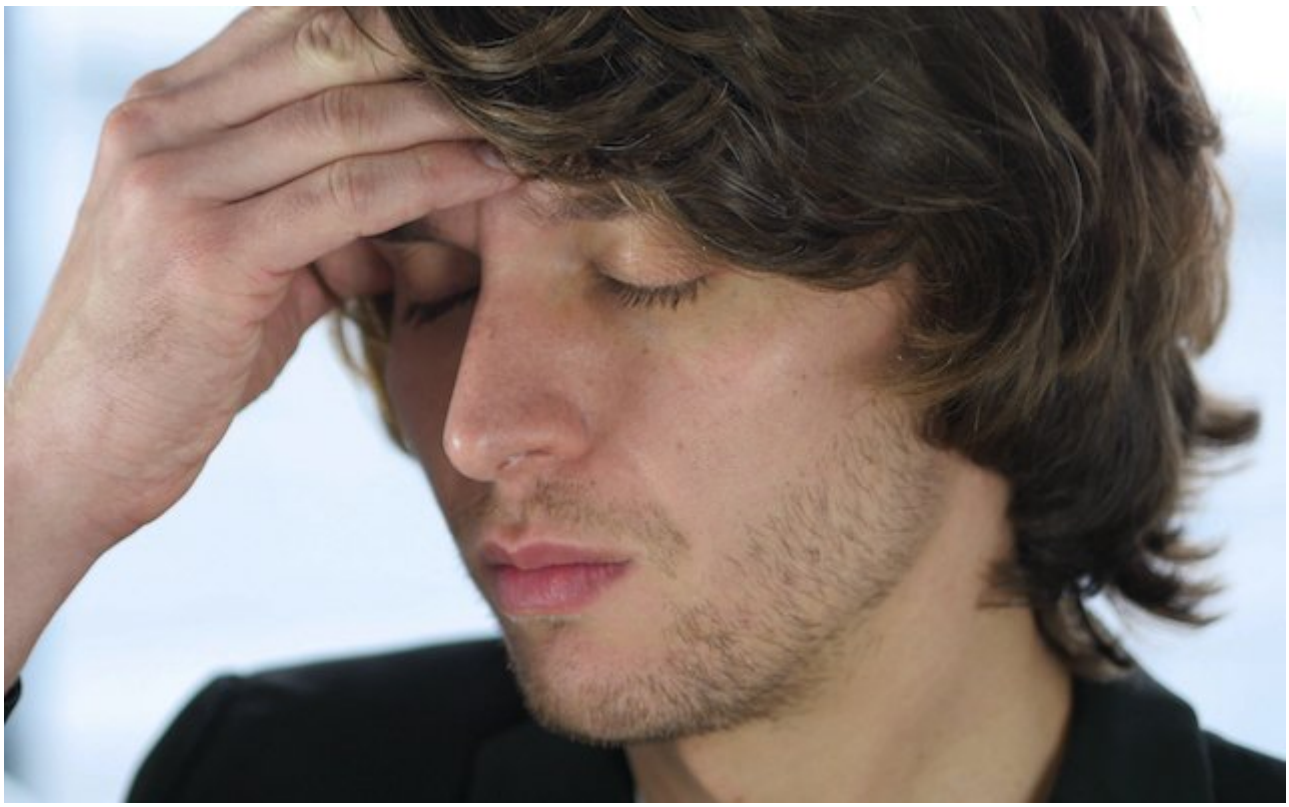
> "Despite the myriad non-hormonal factors that determine organizational promotion, the executives' endogenous testosterone and cortisol interacted to significantly predict hierarchical position: Testosterone positively predicted executives' number of subordinates, but only among low-cortisol executives."

"Low-cortisol" means low-stress — like the stress that a man might endure from an icey tit mother or a wife-initiated parental divorce. It makes sense that a dude who had an affectionless mother or who endured a stressful environment as a kid would grow into a low-T simp.

Simps are Longing for the Motherly Affection they didn't get during Childhood

Returning to my observation about men who were raised different ways, I ask the reader, whom do you think is more likely to chase after the dopamine hit of female affection like an addict chasing the dragon?

1. A secure, low-stress, low-anxiety, empathetic, high status, high testosterone man?
2. Or an insecure, stressed-out, anxious, low-empathy, low-status, low-testosterone man?



How can parents do that for their boys?

> "From the moment you bring your baby home from the hospital, be sure to hold, touch, and rock them in your arms. Spend many precious moments caressing your baby so that their skin can touch your skin.

> As they get older, be playful by doing fun activities like dancing together or creating silly games like pretending to be a hugging or kissing monster.

> Set a reminder to make sure hugging is part of your daily routine. In the recent Trolls movie, the Trolls wore watches with alarm clocks that would go off every hour for hug time. If that's what it takes, then set yourself an alarm. Or make sure to give your kids a hug during certain times of the day, such as before they leave for school, when they get home from school, and before bedtime.

> Another interesting idea is to use affection while disciplining your child. As you talk to them about what they did wrong, put your hand on their shoulder and give them a hug at the end of the conversation to ensure them that, even if you are not pleased with their behavior, you still love them. If your children hit their sister or brother, hug them and explain how hugging feels better than hitting."

I'm convinced that the stress, anxiety, and social awkwardness (often caused by a lack of empathy) that plague Zoomers – and to a lesser extent Millennials — is largely rooted in the fact that so many of them were raised in daycare. A mother can't lavish her baby with "extravagant" affection if she's pushing paper in a cubicle while her baby is at daycare. She can't come up with fun activities to do, play silly games, or hug her toddlers every hour from her cubicle either.

Coming Home

Now for the practical application.

Some readers may be thinking, "I didn't receive that kind of love and affection. How does this help me?" It's counterintuitive, but the best thing a man can do in this case is to turn over a new leaf in his lineage and start doing what he knows is missing and necessary. That is, he can create for his children what he wishes he had had for himself. He can give what he wanted as a child but didn't receive. He can lavish his own children with "extravagant" love and affection.

Also, a single man would do well to search for a wife who will lavish their children with "extravagant" love and affection, and stay home with them to do it. It would be even better if she was raised that way herself.

Mrs. O and I have attended several church get-togethers, usually at an elder's house. Inevitably, one or more ladies will bring a baby. Just as inevitably, the teenage girls will pass the baby around, cuddling the baby, cooing, and displaying a dreamy, starry-eyed look on their faces that says, "I want one!" That's the kind of girl a man wants if he wants his children lavished with "extravagant" love.

These conversations need to happen early in the relationship. I told Mrs. O on our first date that I wanted my future wife to stay home with our children. I don't recommend doing that on the first date (although it worked for me), but it should happen after a few dates. You don't want to get emotionally invested in a woman before you find out that she insists on being a careerist boss-babe who drops her babies off at daycare at the first opportunity.

Finally, if a mother is going to stay home so she can lavish "extravagant" love and affection on her babies and toddlers, that means her husband will need to make enough money to support a family on his own. All of these things go together, but this post is already too long, so I'll leave that subject for another post.

Conclusions

Many young men today have drunk the same feminist Kool-Aid as their female counterparts. They think that if a wife/mother isn't bringing home a full-time professional salary, then she's a freeloader. I hope that the evidence provided by the Gottman Institute has challenged that perception. Your children's well-being is worth more than any amount of money. That doesn't mean you have to live in poverty to ensure that your children are lavished with "extravagant" love, but that's a subject for another post.

Related

- Illimitable Men: The Suffering of The Lost Boys (2014/5/8)
- Σ Frame: 13 Disciplines in Dealing with Delectable Daughters (2018/1/29)
- Σ Frame: Teaching our daughters well is the early foundation of successful wife moulding (2020/2/14)
- Σ Frame: (Red Pill Apostle): 16 Bible Passages for Teaching Wives and Daughters about Male-Female Roles and Marriage (2023/5/15)
- Σ Frame: Misplaced Motherhood (2023/5/22)
- Σ Frame: Less Stress, More Testosterone (2023/8/25)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Chemistry (Testosterone) (2023/8/31)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Sowing and Reaping (2024/1/5)
- Σ Frame: How Feminist Mothers create Feminist Daughters (2024/2/28)
- Σ Frame: The Effects of Bad Mothering (2025/1/13)

The Virtue of Self-Control

Jack · 16 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Self-Control is hard work, but it has many benefits.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Single Men and Women; Mentors of Singles;
Theme: Boundaries; Moral Agency; Virtue; Virtue in Relationships;
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

What is Self-Control?

To begin, I'll offer a working definition of Self-Control.

Self-Control is the ability to know what behavior is fitting and proper for a given context and consistently demonstrating a skilled effort in acting that way.

Exercising Self-Control is hard work. The reason why most people prefer to congregate in cliques is so that they can reduce the tedious emotional work of maintaining Self-Control, which is necessary to stay on top of an arduous or unfamiliar social interaction.

A lot of people have the false, lazy notion that they can relax their Self-Control after marriage. NO. Marriage requires MORE Self-Control, especially when children are involved, and it requires BOTH husband and wife to be Self-Controlled day in and day out — without fail. Of course, this is impossible to do, but the more it is done, the better the marriage will be for the whole family.

Also, you don't need to be around other people to practice Self-Control. It takes discipline to stay focused on your work, or to finish a project, or to NOT waste time doomscrolling on the internet or gazing at p0rn.

As you can see, true Self-Control is an internal habit. It is a constant, disciplined use of one's time, efforts, and mental faculties. It is being a good steward of what one has been given. It is faithfully living out who God created us to be, and doing what God intends us to do.

Self-Control requires one to have…

1. A mental image of how one should properly act, and the presence of mind to know when
2. Discernment to know what behavior is fitting and proper in a given context
3. Emotional Maturity
4. The ability to resist impulse / temptation

5. The self-discipline / will to act appropriately

Together, these 5 points comprise the essential elements of Moral Agency, except Moral Agency adds a sixth element of acting responsibly and doing what is right.

Most people assume Self-Control is synonymous with 4 — controlling impulse. Although this is key, and perhaps the most taxing part, Self-Control needs all 5 to be genuine.

To offer an illustrative comparison, those who have spent themselves on worldly pleasures can easily control their impulses. But it is because such individuals are jaded and/or dead inside, NOT because they are mature or Self-Controlled. Also, they typically lack the discernment necessary for Self-Control, which also contributes to their own dissipation.

It used to be that Self-Control was regularly expected, imposed, and taught to children, mostly by instilling good habits and manners and showing respect to one's elders. This carried longitudinal benefits into adulthood, in the form of intersocial sophistication, social efficacy, winsome social graces, and being responsible in general.

But now, Self-Control is a lost art. Most people don't know how to behave properly, and instead, simply imitate pop celebrities and secular herd behaviors in order to "fit in"; behaviors like Altruism, Bimbofication, Inclusivity, Political Correctness, men being a Nice Guy™, and women being "Strong and Independent™", etc. In general, these behaviors cater to the fleshly nature and don't require one to exercise the habits of a moral agent listed above.

Some people don't realize the importance of genuine Self-Control until they go to a formal dinner or a job interview and are rejected because they come across as low-class rubes, senseless @sses, crass freeloaders, or fake try-hards. Even then, they may not figure it out.

The Beauty of Self-Control

Self-Controlled individuals always know the right way to act and the right words to say. They're consistently dishing out the social grease of grace and warm honest humility, and thereby shaping every social interaction for the better.

It's easy to love someone who knows how to love others by exercising Self-Control. Thus, it's easy to understand why Self-Control is the most obvious indicator of one's spiritual maturity, i.e. the ability to love others effectively.

In fact, Self-Control is named as a fruit of the Spirit in Galatians 5:22-26, along with love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, and gentleness. All of these traits are good for men, but are doubly attractive in women.

I don't know about other men, but personally, I find Self-Control to be an extremely charming, even alluring trait in a woman. So much so, that I've sometimes found myself attracted to otherwise low-to-average looking women who possess this trait. They're just sooo easy to love.

OTOH, readers would strongly agree that no man likes an impulsive woman with no sense of decorum, modesty, or propriety, i.e. one who lacks Self-Control (c.f. Proverbs 11:22). Unfortunately, modern women have missed this memo and have become intolerable, and many relationships and marriages have failed and will continue to fail as a result.

The Deception of Self-Control

Although Self-Control is a good and greatly advantageous trait to have, it is no seal of righteousness either.

The Manosphere often instructs men to pay attention to what a woman DOES, NOT what she SAYS. But the wisdom of this adage is useless for sizing up women who are well-practiced in Self-Control. You see, underneath the pleasant and well-practiced habit of Self-Control, a woman is still a woman with all the fears, vices, and weakesses inherent in womankind.

A person with Self-Control is probably more likely to be a (real) Christian, but even so, that doesn't mean they'll consistently choose to use their Self-Control for Godly purposes. They might exercise Self-Control to the extent that it allows them to access the BENEFITS of LOOKING like a Christian, but when no one is looking, they don't ACT like a Christian. Their motivations are NOT to serve and glorify God, but merely to control outcomes which are NOT very Christian.

This is exactly what Pick Up Artistry was all about. These men exercised genuine Self-Control in order to behave in a charming, confident, smooth, and responsive manner (which is right), but they used the resultant liberties to engage in fornication and s1utmaking.

Women foist an equivalent deception on men when they practice Machiavellianism, or when they conform to the Biblical archetype of an attractive, helpful, respectful, and submissive wife, but ONLY until they can secure a man's commitment, and then they drop this façade and "let themselves go".

The next post will cover how men can spot these fakers.

Conclusions

As you can see, Self-Control is a powerful characteristic that can either bring immense blessings into one's life and all those within one's sphere of influence, or else if neglected or wrongly used, it can impose very deleterious effects on many souls.

St. Peter (whom Jesus called the Rock upon which the church is built, in Matthew 16:18-19) urged us to pursue the former and warned us against the latter.

> [15] For this is the will of God, that by doing good you may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men — [16] as free, yet not using liberty as a cloak for vice, but as bondservants of God. [17] Honor all people. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the king.
>
> 1 Peter 2:15-17 (NKJV)

In the remainder of the book of 1 Peter, St. Peter devotes 3 ½ chapters to describe how Self-Controlled people should behave in various social contexts.

Related

- Donal Graeme: Moral Agency in Women Revisited (2013/3/11)
- Donal Graeme: Knowing When to Escape (2013/12/15)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Ethical Issues Surrounding the Christian Conundrum (2021/4/5)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Moral Guidance Based Feedback vs. Sexual Attention (2021/11/24)
- Σ Frame (Jack): No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Jack on Female Agency (2022/11/23)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part I (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment is a Boundary (2024/1/16)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Importance of Family and Community — Part II : Vetting (2024/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part III : Patriarchal Mate Selection (2024/9/26)

Self-Control : Trust and Deception

Jack · 17 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Self-Control fosters openness and trust which can then lead to folly.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Single Men and Women; Mentors of Singles;
Theme: Boundaries; Moral Agency; Virtue; Virtue in Relationships;
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

As I described in the previous post, Self-Control is the ability to know what behavior is fitting and proper for a given context and the demonstrated ability to act in that way.

I used to think that women who possess a lot of Self-Control were more likely to be chaste and virtuous — simply because they have more Self-Control, right? But also because Self-Control is named as a fruit of the Spirit in contrast to sexual immorality (Galatians 5:19-24). But as I've grown older, wiser, and more discerning, I've found that this presumed correlation is simply not true. Self-Control doesn't necessarily translate into sexual purity. In fact, Self-Control actually creates social situations in which purity is more likely to be casually discarded (as I'll explain below). It can also be used to deceive, as well as to enact other, more nefarious stratagems (as I described in the previous post and more below).

This post and the next will examine how this phenomenon works.

Self-Control Fosters Liberty

Self-Control is named as a fruit of the Spirit in Galatians 5:22-26, along with love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, and gentleness. These traits enable greater liberty (Romans 8:2). All of these traits are good for men, but are doubly attractive in women.

Although Self-Control is a fruit of the Spirit, and a good and greatly advantageous trait to have, it is no seal of righteousness either. Liberties can be abused (Galatians 5:13-14). Self-Control can be used deceptively, both intentionally and unintentionally.

So how does this work?

Those who are able to consistently exercise Self-Control always seem to do and say the right things at the right times, and behave in a way that is charming, confident, fitting, smooth, and responsive (which is right). As a result, these individuals are better able to hide their flaws and showcase the positive aspects of their personality, and thus generate a more dynamic social impact.

In effect, those who are disciplined in their Self-Control are able to elicit increased trust from others, and effectively lull them into relaxing their own Self-Control. Ironic, but true.

Others who are inspired by the Self-Controlled person will find it easy to like or even 'love' such a person and will desire more interaction and/or intimacy with him/her. They will drop their guard in their pursuit of affirmation and validation, and they will NOT have the mind to protect themselves or resist temptation. In fact, temptation will be magnified because it will be regarded as true authenticity or even 'love' in some cases, and NOT a temptation. This confusion is further compounded when the interaction really does constitute genuine Christian love, which is one of the reasons why we are to practice Self-Control in the first place (Galatians 5:13).

If such experiences are more common than not (as it usually is for Self-Controlled believers), then it is more likely that the sinful nature will manifest itself given the opportunity. This is exactly why Christians are often seen as hedonists, a phenomenon we've described before.

The Self-Deception of Self-Control

In addition to deceiving others, one can also deceive one's self. Let me explain.

Self-Control becomes self-deceptive when one becomes overconfident in these charms and feels entitled to dabble more loosely in the resultant social liberties. Boundaries are relaxed leading to a greater probability that boundaries will be compromised and crossed. All the while, the person continues to believe they are in control of themselves and the situation, even though they're inching ever closer to compromising their already risky standing (1 Corinthians 10:12).

Add alcohol, groovy tunage, and a casual, fun, party atmosphere to any formal social setting (in which desire is glorified and Self-Control is expected), and those inhibitions will be dropped even more. If there are no parents or supervisors to invigilate the event, then just about anything can happen.

Add to this the fact that people are devoutly hoping and intentionally seeking to have such experiences, and you've got an indelible powderkeg. (Think of how excited girls become when they go to the prom, and how crazy they behave at the afterprom.) Worse, young people who are high on the liberties of Self-Control may or may not know what they're doing with those liberties or how they arouse or impact others. If asked, they'll say, "I was just doing my own thing and having a good time, and it just happened!"

This is exactly how teenage girls lose their virginity and/or get impregnated by a guy they met at a formal dance or party, e.g. the prom. This is exactly how players and PUAs weasel their way into women's wombs (assuming they were not 'easy' to begin with). This is exactly how women use feminine charms and sex to hoodwink a man into marriage.

Related

- Donal Graeme: Moral Agency in Women Revisited (2013/3/11)
- Donal Graeme: Knowing When to Escape (2013/12/15)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Ethical Issues Surrounding the Christian Conundrum (2021/4/5)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Moral Guidance Based Feedback vs. Sexual Attention (2021/11/24)
- Σ Frame (Jack): No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Jack on Female Agency (2022/11/23)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part I (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment is a Boundary (2024/1/16)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Importance of Family and Community — Part II : Vetting (2024/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part III : Patriarchal Mate Selection

(2024/9/26)

The Virtue of Chastity : Boundaries vs Self-Control

Jack · 18 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Self-Control does not imply Chastity.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Single Men and Women; Mentors of Singles;
Theme: Boundaries; Moral Agency; Virtue; Virtue in Relationships;
Author's Note: This essay is based on an email conversation on 2023/10/2 with a long-time happily married female reader (HMFR) who wishes to remain anonymous.
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

As I described in an earlier post, Self-Control is the ability to know what behavior is fitting and proper for a given context and the demonstrated ability to act in that way. Self-Control is named as a fruit of the Spirit in Galatians 5:22-26, along with love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, and gentleness. All of these traits are good for men, but are doubly attractive in women. Those who are Self-Controlled are able to attract admiration and increased trust from others, and effectively lull them into relaxing their own Self-Control, thereby increasing the chances of temptation. Ironic, but true.

In the previous post, I brought up the question of why Self-Controlled individuals are not necessarily chaste or virtuous, even though it seems as though they should be, since Self-Control is named as a fruit of the Spirit in contrast to sexual immorality (Galatians 5:19-24). It seems like a cruel, twisted irony that those who have the gift of Self-Control and who do the hard work of exercising it should be subjected to greater temptations in which they may be deceived.

A happily married female reader (HMFR) explained this phenomenon from a Christian woman's point of view, which I found insightful. The remainder of this post conveys some things she wrote [edited for clarity and readability].

Chastity vs Self-Control

First of all, we have to understand that although Self-Control is a fruit of the Spirit, we may not be very well acquainted with what that actually entails. The idea of one being Self-Controlled conjures mental images of being a finicky stickler or an arrogant prude, but in reality, a woman with Self-Control will always find herself swimming through a sea of orbiting admirers, while a woman without Self-Control will find it more difficult to attract friends and is likely to repel men.

As such, it helps to understand that chastity has very little to do with Self-Control, and a woman doesn't even need to be a Christian to exercise chastity. You see, Self-Control is NOT a resolution to remain chaste or NOT to do such and such "before marriage", nor even a decision NOT to submit to a man (i.e. sexually) until after marriage. Young people don't even know whether they're able to resist that temptation until they're already in over their heads, and by that time, it's too late.

Fleeing Temptation is More Virtuous than Exercising Self-Control

For chaste women, one big challenge of remaining chaste, either before or after marriage, is knowing that Hypergamy Never Dies! — and that she WILL eventually meet sexually attractive men who MAY be MORE sexually attractive than her husband. That is the torturous reality that ALL chaste wives must swallow — a punishment in the flesh for being faithful.

Women dream about sexually attractive men — the Dan Bilzerians, Andrew T@tes, and Casey Xanders of this world — the type of men that the Manosphere calls CH@DS.

Dan Bilzerian and his concubines.
They are also sexually immoral men — men who are NOT to be trusted … at all!

Back in the day, my grandmother and mother called these sorts of men CADS. One of the rules my mother taught me was to never talk with or date a sexually immoral man. Now, my mother never told me NOT to SLEEP with those guys. She told me never to TALK to them.

You see, it was understood that they were charmers out to get you for the night. It was ASSUMED that if we (my sister and me) were talking with or dating these men, then we WOULD sleep with them. I was told, "You are looking for a HUSBAND to wife you up for ALL NIGHTS, not just ONE NIGHT."

I was taught that CHASTITY is LEARNED and CONDUCTED by setting BOUNDARIES, NOT by relying on Self-Control or any such thing.

Chastity is NOT about CONTROLLING ourselves in the face of temptation. NO. Chastity is about NOT placing yourself in the WAY of temptation.

Any confusion surrounding this issue is catastrophic in a marriage.

That is why young single girls should NOT TALK to those guys, much less DATE them.

A sexually pure, chaste CHRISTIAN woman FLEES from that temptation to go back to her father (if single) or her husband (if married).

The Importance of Boundaries

So why should a single woman practice celibacy? It is the same reason why a wife should remain faithful. Celibacy adds to your character and prepares you for lifetime sexual monogamy. The benefit of practicing celibacy is that it helps you develop discipline and Self-Control, and most importantly the BOUNDARIES that sexual monogamy requires.

A person who does NOT fornicate has developed BOUNDARIES that protect them and which they carry forward into marriage. These BOUNDARIES protect the marriage as well.

VP Michael Pence has fallen into disrepute since he betrayed Trump at the end of his first term as president, but he was right about The Pence Rule — it is a healthy BOUNDARY. Now compare Pence to Biden. Most young women practice what we might call The Biden Rule — flirt and hug and sniff and touch … until a boundary comes up — if at all.

This is why we have rules against fornication. Rules are essentially boundaries for the immature and undiscerning. They are there for our protection. If we break the rules and cross those BOUNDARIES, we should not be surprised if it ends in disaster or heartbreak.

What is poorly understood today is how fornication destroys marital sanctification and why this is bad for everyone involved. What is even more poorly understood is how lax boundaries allow the temptations that lead to fornication* and the debasement of marriage.

This is what older women are supposed to teach younger women (Titus 2:3-5) as they used to do in generations past.

In sum, a woman with Self-Control is much better than one without. But a woman who places boundaries is better than one who has Self-Control and doesn't, because she doesn't put herself in a compromising position in which her Self-Control will be tested.

That is the essence of chastity.

 Donal Graeme covered this in his post, Knowing When to Escape (2013/12/15)*

Related

- Donal Graeme: Moral Agency in Women Revisited (2013/3/11)
- Donal Graeme: Knowing When to Escape (2013/12/15)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Ethical Issues Surrounding the Christian Conundrum (2021/4/5)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Moral Guidance Based Feedback vs. Sexual Attention (2021/11/24)
- Σ Frame (Jack): No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Jack on Female Agency (2022/11/23)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part I (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment is a Boundary (2024/1/16)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)

- Σ Frame (Jack): The Importance of Family and Community — Part II : Vetting (2024/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part III : Patriarchal Mate Selection (2024/9/26)
- Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor, Jack): Patriarchal Vetting and Mutually Arranged Marriage ()

Boundaries : Self-Control vs Drawing the Line

Jack · 19 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The tricky dance of courtship.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Single Men and Women; Mentors of Singles;
Theme: Boundaries; Virtue; Virtue in Relationships;
Author's Note: This essay was submitted on 2023/10/2 by a long-time happily married female reader who wishes to remain anonymous. Reorganized and expanded for clarity and emphasis by Jack.
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Foreword

I was just about to write a long spiel about sex before marriage. Fortunately, Jack beat me to it when he posted, Is Sex a Necessary part of Vetting? (2023/10/2) on the same weekend. Jack said EXACTLY what I was going to say. So this will be a follow-up post (four actually) that fits nicely into the themes of Boundaries [and Virtues in Relationships].

The Necessity of Pushing the Boundaries

One of the axioms of the Manosphere is, "She must be willing to break the rules but just for you."

Why is this important?

For a man, this is a confirmation that a woman trusts him, submits to him, and is under his domain of authority.

But truth be told, this approach does not work for women. A single woman cannot break the rules for a man, even only one man, and expect that to play out well.

A woman who breaks the rules because she is sexually attracted to a man is a woman who believes sexual attraction HAS to be ACTED upon. But for women, Chastity does not work that way. Sexual Purity does not work that way.

We all want a spouse to remain faithful, so it doesn't work for a man to teach or tempt a woman to relax her boundaries "just for him". Besides, Men have no way of knowing whether it's "just for him" or "just for the man she's with at the time".

A girl who kisses a man simply because he bought her a coffee or who does not mind if he grabs her breast may be very sexually attracted to him and therefore submissive to him in their relationship. But she is NOT a chaste woman. She does NOT have boundaries.

These days, a lot of women are demanding much more than a coffee date before they put out, but it's still the same ritual only with a higher admission fee.

OTOH, if a woman does NOT care to kiss or have her breast grabbed on the first date, it does not necessarily indicate a lack of attraction. She may be a modest and chaste woman who is wisely drawing a boundary, biding her time, and doing her own vetting for a husband. Just because this type of woman is rare does NOT mean they don't exist.

But as Sir Red Pill Apostle said, a man has to press those boundaries in order to know her reaction.

This is where it gets touchy in this day and age (pun). Such actions place a man in a very vulnerable position.

- If a man does NOT press her, then a boundary cannot manifest and the relationship may not develop properly along those lines.
- If a man presses her and she gives in, then he's opened the door to promiscuity.
- Even if he presses her and she rebuffs him, there remains the problem of determining whether that means she is NOT a 304 or she is NOT attracted to HIM enough to be a 304.
- Another problem is the risk of him being accused of h@r@ssment.

Effective Communication of Intent

Proper boundaries can only be established by first communicating intent. It is a 2-way street, and there is not an inch of wiggle room for miscommunication — it is disastrous!

While I do not think it is right for a woman to expect a man to be a eunuch and NOT push for some kind of physical intimacy, OTOH, I do think if the girl refuses, a man needs to at least check whether it is because she is NOT attracted to him or because she is NOT someone who takes physical intimacy lightly. The latter does NOT signify disqualification.

The problem with this is that women may very well lie about this in order to exact what they want out of a man. But that also depends on her level of Self-Control — how much of a sophisticated liar a woman is capable of being, and how much energy she's willing to invest in maintaining this façade. Some women are quite skilled at this — scarily so, while others are total airheads. The former is a m!s0gyn!st generator while the latter type tends to get knocked up preggo rather early in life and then either becomes a single mother or else is wifed up and taken out of the SMP. A man would probably be much better off having chosen a blithering buffoon over a Machiavellian Maneater, but neither is ideal.

This is why I think communication is key, and I don't mean just verbal conversation. I mean specifically about expressing expectations and meta-cognitions, verbally and non-verbally — especially non-verbally. A lot of women won't 'hear' a man unless he communicates non-verbally, i.e. action and behavior. They already instinctively know that you have to watch what a man DOES, NOT what he SAYS, just as the Manosphere says to men about women. The problem with verbal communication is that once you start talking about expectations, intentions, and motives, it kills the 'magic' of romantic attraction, and women HATE this. But OTOH, that might be a good thing if the 'magic' is built on delusions. Delving into a meta-discussion would filter out those girls who just want to be lied to and repel them with self-revealing truths — like garlic is to a vampire.

These difficulties in communicating intent and reading women accurately is precisely why identifying IOIs and S1ut Tells have become so important in recent years. In a word, discernment.

More on this point in the next post.

Related

- Donal Graeme: Moral Agency in Women Revisited (2013/3/11)
- Donal Graeme: Knowing When to Escape (2013/12/15)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Ethical Issues Surrounding the Christian Conundrum (2021/4/5)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Jack on Female Agency (2022/11/23)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part I (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)

Why Good Women Reject Good Men

Jack · 20 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Being 'Good' is NOT good enough.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Single Men; Mentors of Single Men;
Theme: Boundaries; Virtue; Virtue in Relationships;
Author's Note: This essay was submitted on 2023/10/2 by a long-time happily married female reader who wishes to remain anonymous. Reorganized and expanded by Jack.
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Foreword

The MAJORITY of women DO want to marry "someday". They are looking for a husband, but ONLY AFTER they have "experimented" a bit. This is even true with supposedly Christian girls, unfortunately. Those girls are not god-fearing women. They're just worldly chickadees who claim to be Christians for whatever reason.

But here, I am talking about young, pure, marriage-worthy women, NOT "experimenting experience seekers", NOT Post-Wall repentant s1uts. The assumption here is that the woman is young, chaste, modest, and self-controlled. Again, just because this type of woman is rare does not mean she does not exist. And this is exactly the type of woman men want for marriage.

Good Women's View of Men

There is a difference between women who are looking for a One-Night-Stand or a One-Year-Stand, women who want to "experiment" or gain "experiences" (or have in the past), and chaste Christian women looking for a husband. A Christian woman wants to see if the man is faithful and responsible before anything sexual happens. And BTW, 'confidence' is often mentioned as an indication of 'faithful' — there is a correlation.

There are many Christian women who are frustrated with so called Christian men, NOT because these men are NOT 6-6-6 studs, but because most men in the The Beta Factory church are Simps. They are desperate beyond measure and they don't have enough confidence / faith to break away from the faux-masculine mold and make a relationship work long term.

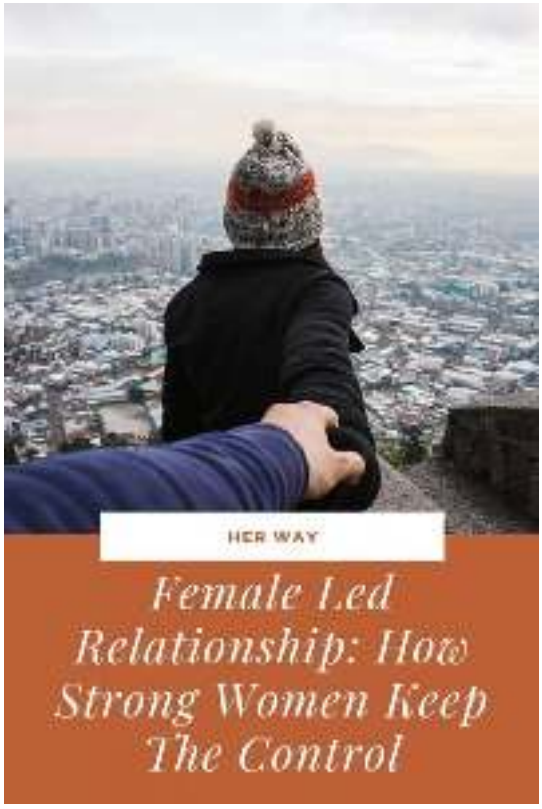
Continuing the ideas from my previous post, men who are weak in faith are not able to discern that her refusal MAY NOT be an indicator of frigidity. She just may be the self-controlled CHRISTIAN woman that a man is looking to marry — a woman who is acting on her boundaries to KEEP her chastity and NOT acting out her sexual attraction. This is a green flag for a man, but ONLY IF he can read her accurately. If he cannot, then it is a red flag for women.

Also, men too are also looking to "experiment" and are unsettled about whether they really want or are ready to commit. This is true for both Ch@d types and non-Ch@d types, as well as Christian men too, unfortunately. Christian women can sense this and they rightly withdraw from such men.

The way that men express the strength of faith that Christian women are looking for in a man is when he demonstrates masculine dominance by pushing the boundaries (both secular and Christian) to test a woman's character and to build trust. There is also a sense of self-awareness that plays into this — that the man is discerning, that he is careful that he is not being strung along by a woman who is NOT sexually attracted to him or who is using him, and that he is both conscious of his sphere of influence and conscientious of those within it. Women can sense these things and it feeds into her equations for attraction and Heart Trust. (These things MUST be in place for arousal to occur.)

All this is to say that a woman wants a man who "just gets it", as it is often said in the Manosphere. Being 'Good' is NOT good enough to pass a good woman's filters.

Bad Women's View of Men



Women who are NOT so good won't care about these things because they're NOT looking for an LTR leading to marriage or they couldn't care less about whether the man is marriage material. These women are looking for other things in a man, e.g. having an agreeable cooperative orbiter / pedestalizer, an anesthetic diversion, a sympathetic ear, affirmation, attention, emotional support, fun, security, sex, validation, $$$, or just someone to fix and carry stuff for her, etc. These women will USE the undiscerning man — the man who doesn't "get it" — and then toss him aside after she obtains what she wants out of him. As much as the man might hope and want and wish and try, there is no intention of marriage in her mind. The very idea is ridiculous to her because he doesn't "get it".

Worse, an evil woman might intentionally lure an undiscerning man into a relationship or marriage because he doesn't "get it" — for the very reason that she can dominate the relationship and control him for her own nefarious purposes. A marriage of this type will inevitably destroy the man (and the children too) and will never glorify God.

Conclusions

To dumb this down for the average male reader, if you are expecting self-control and chastity and sexual monogamy from a woman who is open-mouthed kissing on the first date just because you spent a few dollars on a coffee for her, then sure! She IS sexually attracted to you and she is ACTING on it. But is she really a good MARRIAGE option? NOT a One-Night-Stand option, but a MARRIAGE option?

The answer to this question is not so cut and dried, because some virtuous women will push and pull on the boundaries of decency just to test the man's reaction and see how discerning and responsive he is. (This is NOT the same as Comfort Testing or Fitness Testing and has different tactics aimed to invite or test his dominance.) Undiscerning men will naturally find this annoying and confusing, and may think it is not very virtuous of a woman to be testing him like that, but actually, that is part of the test. That is how virtuous women behave. She needs to know that he is faithful and trustworthy before she will go any further. OTOH, the non-virtuous woman will have other things on her mind and won't care whether he is discerning or trustworthy or not.

If a man can't sense her stance or figure this out (in spite of the mixed signals that reflect her level of sophistication in the Mating Dance), then a virtuous woman will conclude that he's a dolt and/or is NOT ready for marriage, no matter how much he might want it or need it. Again, this is what the Manosphere means in saying a woman wants a man who "just gets it".

A good woman will move on to the next suitor, while a bad woman will proceed to dominate the relationship — because she already knows he cannot.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): Moral Guidance Based Feedback vs. Sexual Attention (2021/11/24)
- Σ Frame (Jack): No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Jack on Female Agency (2022/11/23)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The most successful strategy is NOT perfectly altruistic. (2024/1/9)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Christian Detachment is a Boundary (2024/1/16)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Mating Dance and Female Erotic Fantasy (2024/1/19)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Setting Boundaries Increases Openness (2024/1/28)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Boundaries 101 for Dummies (2024/2/1)

Summary of Virtue

Jack · 21 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Drawing and maintaining Boundaries is the essence of Virtue.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries; Virtue; Virtue in Relationships;
Length: 450 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

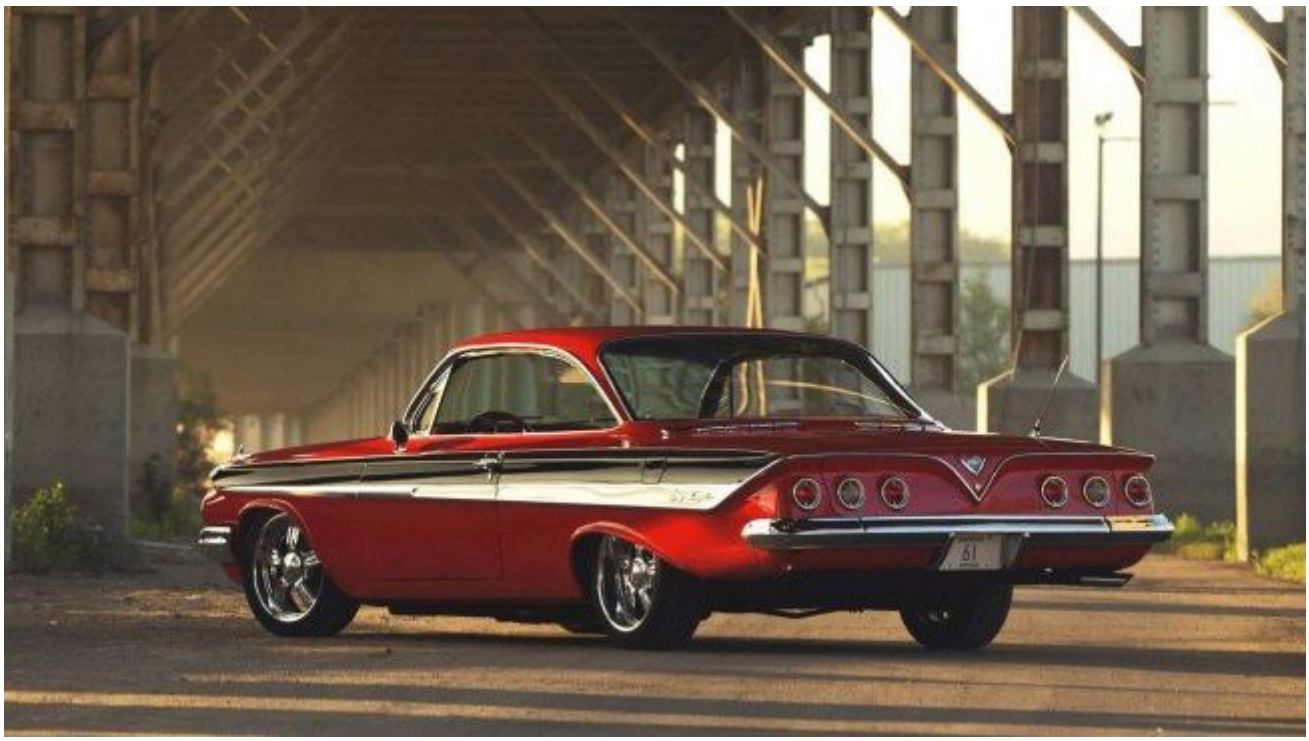
Summary

As readers may have noticed, the virtues that we've written about during this 2 month long theme on Virtue are not strictly intrinsic traits of character, as we might be accustomed to thinking about virtue. Rather, the virtues covered here might be better described as virtuous behaviors, or actions or habits which build and/or demonstrate virtuous character and/or encourage virtuous behavior in others. But isn't that really what virtue is? Doing what is good, noble, and right, even though it may be difficult? Isn't that what matters most about being virtuous (Coram Mundo and likely Coram Deo as well)?

From this study of Virtue, we've learned that virtuous behavior is more or less synonymous with setting and maintaining appropriate boundaries. Not only do those boundaries deal with saying "No" to the bad such as resisting evil influences and fleeing temptation, but also saying "Yes" to that which is good and right, such as dropping fraudulent sexual boundaries within marriage. Other aspects of virtue include self-discipline and instantiating the Fruits of the Spirit, i.e. Self-Control.

I suppose that faith is an important part of this, but to be honest, one doesn't need to be a believer to know what is right and to do it. The difference is that for Christians, virtue is either a fruit of the spirit, or it is done as an expression of one's love for God and/or others, whereas an unbeliever might exercise virtuous behavior for the more temporal benefits, such as dignity, honor, reputation, and living a full, robust life, or simply to avoid the negative consequences of NOT doing so.

I'll go further to say that virtuous behavior is synonymous with that rather nebulous concept we call 'godliness'. That is, when it is said that someone is 'godly', what we mean is that that person regularly demonstrates virtuous actions, behaviors, and habits, among other things.



Classic Virtue in automotive engineering — The 1961 Chevrolet Impala Sport Coupe Hardtop.

A List of Posts

Here are the posts that have appeared.

1. Σ Frame: The Strengths and Weaknesses of Virtue (2024/11/1)
2. Σ Frame: Fiddler on the Roof : A Parable of Progressivism (2024/11/4)
3. Σ Frame: The Sirach on Raising Daughters (2024/11/6)
4. Σ Frame: He who keeps his daughter virgin does swell (2024/11/8)
5. Σ Frame: Being Good vs. Being Nice (2024/11/11)
6. Σ Frame: Nice Lies (2024/11/13)
7. Σ Frame: A Nice Code (2024/11/15)
8. Σ Frame: A Dark Horse (2024/11/16)
9. Σ Frame (Oscar, Jack): Sluglys turn to Celibacy as a way to 'Punish' Men (2024/11/18)
10. Σ Frame: The False Virtue of Altruism (2024/11/20)
11. Σ Frame: Everyone is Nuts (2024/11/22)
12. Σ Frame: Being Dominant vs. Being Domineering (2024/11/25)
13. Σ Frame (Oscar): Post-Election Hysteria (2024/11/27)
14. Σ Frame (Oscar, Jack): Go Up, Young Man (2024/11/29)
15. Σ Frame (Oscar, Jack): And then they came for our Children… (2024/11/30)
16. Σ Frame: The Centrality of the Male Ego (2024/12/2)
17. Σ Frame (Jack, Oscar): The Virtue of Vulnerability (2024/12/3)
18. Σ Frame (Oscar, Jack): The Virtue of Flashing (2024/12/4)
19. Σ Frame (Jack, Oscar): The Virtue of Streaking (2024/12/5)
20. Σ Frame: The Virtue of Sexual Constancy (2024/12/6)
21. Σ Frame: The Virtue of Ugliness (2024/12/9)

22. Σ Frame: The Virtue of Being Centered (2024/12/10)
23. Σ Frame (Oscar): When Sons Reject their Fathers (2024/12/11)
24. Σ Frame (Oscar): The Necessity of Womanly Virtue (2024/12/12)
25. Σ Frame (Oscar): The Necessity of Motherly Virtue (2024/12/13)
26. Σ Frame: The Virtue of Self-Control (2024/12/16)
27. Σ Frame: Self-Control : Trust and Deception (2024/12/17)
28. Σ Frame (Jack, Anonymous Contributor): The Virtue of Chastity : Boundaries vs Self-Control (2024/12/18)
29. Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor, Jack): Boundaries : Self-Control vs Drawing the Line (2024/12/19)
30. Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor, Jack): Why Good Women Reject Good Men (2024/12/20)

Final Words

Thanks to Oscar and an Anonymous Contributor who wrote 8 and 3 posts, respectively, and added input to others. These two authors also contributed other posts which do not fit into this theme, but will appear next year.

Our coverage of virtue has not been exhaustive by any means. Here, I've only focused on a few virtuous behaviors that I believe have received too little airplay and need more attention. There are other virtuous behaviors that I wanted to write about (namely allegiance, loyalty, trust, and being thin and fit), but did not because of time limits. So expect there to be more posts on other virtues in the future.

As is my custom, this blog will cease posting for the 10 days between the winter solstice (12/21) and the beginning of the new year on the Gregorian / Western calendar. Comments and email will remain open.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year!

Related

- Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor): A Christian Woman's View of Submission (2023/9/13)
- Σ Frame: Summary of IOIs and Vetting (2023/10/30)

Lessons from the Game of Chess

Jack · 1 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Game theory becomes Life!

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 1,650 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Intro

I am a chess player, and I am not bested very easily or often. Even so, I have never won a single game against the man who taught me how to play the game at a very young age — my father.

My father was drafted on June 1, 1964 and served as a military policeman in Germany. While he was in Europe, he bought a (then) state of the art Voigtlander camera and traveled extensively throughout Germany, France, and Switzerland, touring and taking photos. He also bought many heirloom quality items that he gifted to family members. Among these items, there were two cuckoo clocks and several Hummel figurines (quite valuable today). While he was in France, he picked up a chess set. This is the set we always used while I was growing up.

The remainder of this essay conveys a few lessons I learned about the game from my father — lessons that also apply to life. If you've ever played chess, maybe you'll know what I'm talking about.

Keep the Main Objective in Mind

To win at chess, you have to keep the proper objective in mind — to checkmate the opponent's king. But many people fall into the notion that to win the game, you first have to control the board, and/or take most or all of the opponent's major pieces. But this is not necessary. Sometimes it can slow down the game and hamper you from making a checkmate. Other casual players get into a habit of concentrating on strategies, thinking through various possible moves, and thereby entertaining themselves with the game, perhaps because of the entrancing enjoyment it produces. The error in this approach is that they are lulled into various mental distractions while pondering all the possibilities, and are thereby diverted from the primary purpose of winning.

Two Strategic Methods

My father said the "old way" of playing chess was to dominate the central 16 squares of the board. The "new way"

AKA “hypermodernism” (since WW1) was to arrange certain key pieces on the periphery of the board such that they can dominate the central 16 squares through direct attacks. Both methods have pros and cons, but it helps to be aware of both and use them wisely.

Utilize Strategic Moves

It also helps to be familiar with certain strategic moves and to know how and when to use them.

Here are 15 of the most elegant moves given by their common names.

1. Blockade — The placement of a piece directly in front of an enemy pawn, where it is protected by that pawn, obstructs the pawn’s advance, and hinders the movements of the other enemy pieces.
2. Castling — Switching the positions of the king and a rook, thereby protecting the king and thrusting the rook into a more formidable position.
3. Discoverie — When one piece, e.g. a pawn, is moved out of the way, opening a line of attack from a queen, rook, or bishop.
4. Double Attack — Two attacks made with one move. These attacks may be made by the same piece (in which case it is a Fork), or by different pieces, for example in a Discoverie.
5. En Passant — A pawn is used to capture an enemy piece that has passed by its advance.
6. Fianchetto — Bishops are pulled out early in the game in order to create a cross-fire across the board which is then used to control the board and/or cover or protect other advancing pieces.
7. Fork — A simultaneous attack by a single piece on two (or more) of the opponent’s pieces.
8. Octopus — Placing a strongly positioned knight in enemy territory.
9. Promotion — A pawn is traded in for another piece of choice after reaching the opposite side of the board.
10. Pin — Attacking a piece such that it cannot legally move, because doing so would expose the opponent’s own king (or other strategic piece) to an attack.
11. Skewer — (Similar to an X-Ray) An attack on a valuable piece, compelling it to move to avoid capture and thus expose a less valuable piece which can then be taken.

12. Valve — A move that closes a defensive line of attack and opens an offensive line of attack, thereby shifting the control of the board to the other player.
13. X-Ray — (Similar to a Skewer) A two-move attack using two pieces against two of the opponents' valuable pieces in a single line of attack. The first play forces the first piece to move out of the way or else be captured, which then allows the second piece behind it to be captured by another piece in the same line of attack or by the same piece respectively.
14. Zugzwang — A situation in which a player is put at a disadvantage by having to make a move, where any legal move weakens their position.
15. Zwischenzug — An intermezzo, AKA a "raincheck", played before an expected reply. Often, but not always, this involves responding to a threat by posing an even greater threat, forcing the opponent to respond to the greater threat first, thereby allowing the board to be rearranged to one's advantage before a reply to the initial threat is made.

I've always felt a grand satisfaction in precisely naming the move in the moment after it has been played while my opponent is marveling in his consternation. The fact that many of these moves have French or German names adds an air of sophisticated virtuosity to the gambit.

Know the Value of Your Pieces

As a general rule of thumb, the pieces can be assigned a point value based on each one's offensive force, largely determined by the mobility / versatility of each piece.

- Queen = 9
- Rook = 5
- Knight = 3
- Bishop = 3
- Pawn = 1
- King = 1

The defensive value is the inverse of the offensive value. That is, lower numbers are of greater value in a defensive move. For example, the king and the pawns are of greater value in defensive plays — the king because it is the most protected; the pawns because they are the most expendable. Rooks, knights, and bishops have a greater versatility, but there are also 2 of each of these pieces, making them more expendable (compared to the queen) in a defensive play.

The outcome of an offensive gambit can be roughly determined by comparing the total value of the pieces involved in the play. For example, 2 rooks can beat 1 queen. A knight and a bishop can defeat a rook. Two pawns can corner a king (if one is covered by another piece). A row of staggered pawns can stymie a rook. And so on. Of course, this all depends on the layout of the board. But when in doubt, this method comes in handy.

Chess pieces (left to right): King, Queen, Bishop, Knight, Rook, Pawn.

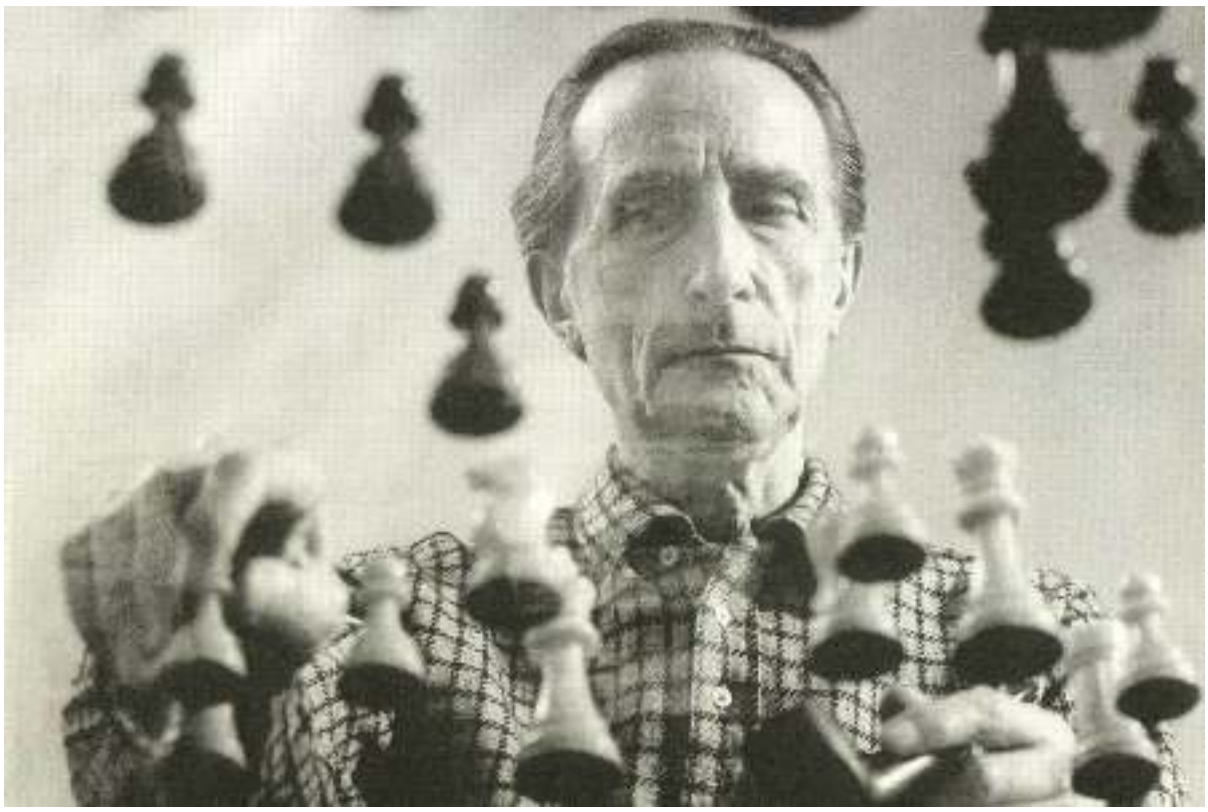
The Queen Covers the King at all Times

The king has the highest defensive value, as losing the king equates to losing the game. The queen has the highest offensive value because it has the most mobility of any piece. However, if the queen is used to defend the king, then it also takes on the highest defensive value. Therefore, a wise player utilizes the mobility of the queen to protect the king at all times while also making other attacks (unless / until the queen is used to checkmate the opposing king and thereby end the game). If the queen is ever more than 1 move away from covering the king's flanks, it is a liability. (The same idea applies to other pieces as well, but none are as effective as the queen.)

Know How to Execute a Win / Checkmate

It is of utmost importance to know how to skillfully execute a checkmate, AKA the "endgame". Novices who don't know how to capture the king will often make a series of clumsy attempts — making easily countered or evaded moves, oftentimes losing some of their pieces in the process, and/or chasing the king all over the board in frustration.

The best way to checkmate, IMO, is done by strategically setting up the board to create a circumstance in which a checkmate can be completed in 2 or 3 consecutive moves. But of course, you have to be familiar with a repertoire of checkmate strategies, know what you're doing, and concentrate on the objective to successfully pull this off.



Conclusions

While reading the above, readers who are familiar with the game of chess have probably already had several epiphanies as to how the game of chess relates to real life. Here I'll briefly comment on each of the larger concepts.

1. Keep the Main Objective in Mind = Be Purpose driven. Don't get distracted.
2. Two Strategic Methods = The smart rabbit has two holes. Always have a Plan B. Be prepared for a rainy day. Be aware that there are many ways to accomplish one's purpose — and there are many ways to fail.
3. Utilize Strategic Moves = Knowledge, preparation, and wisdom are of the essence.
4. Know the Value of Your Pieces = Have your priorities in place. Choose your battles wisely. Be willing to make small sacrifices in order to achieve your primary objective.
5. The Queen Covers the King at all Times = A Hierarchy of Authority Establishes Order. The second in command, i.e. a wife, is the strongest and/or the weakest link in the chain of command. If the wife / second in command stands behind her man, then they'll both stay strong. But if she neglects her influence, or worse, tries to take the man's position as Head, either in position, role, or decision making capacity, then they're both destined to failure.
6. Know How to Execute a Win = Don't let confusion, dissipation, fear, ignorance, or any other factor erode your directives or prevent you from apprehending your goals.

Readers are invited to share other insights in the comments.

Related

- Wikipedia: Glossary of Chess
- Official Staunton: How to Set Up a Chess Board
- Σ Frame: Introduction to Game Theory 101 (2018/2/11)

The Red Pill is a Fresh New Beginning for Bachelors

Jack · 3 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

> But I want you to be without care. He who is unmarried cares for the things of the Lord — how he may please the Lord.
>
> 1 Corinthians 7:32 (NKJV)

Readership: All; Single Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Intro

One post from last year, The Red Pill is a Dead End for Bachelors (2024/6/3), chronicled how the SMP had bifurcated into two general demographics of men — a few high SMV men who have practically unlimited access to females, and the vast majority of men who do not. As a result of this truth going mainstream, men of all stripes have resigned themselves to their respective fates, and marriage is not regarded as a realistic option and/or a very foolish or risky choice for those men who might take that chance.

There have been many voices, mostly schooled by the producers of The Narrative™, who have blamed all this nihilism on The Red Pill, but Red Pillers know that the advent of The Red Pill only accelerated the inevitable consequences of Feminism — an open and unregulated sexual market supported by overinflated socialism.

The main point of this post was that the Gift of Singleness* is now ripe for a redefinition. In the past, the Gift of Singleness* was generally understood as either being too fugly to lay, or having a low-key libido that liberated one from the urgent impetus of their carnal desires. But now, the Gift of Singleness* may be rightly regarded as simply realizing that the juice isn't worth the squeeze, and that being single is better than being attached to a soul-sucking 40% divorce risk, and an 80% burden-risk, all things considered.

Up until last year, men rued being virtually forced into or passively relegated to a life of singleness. They viewed it as an injustice, an indefinite punishment for simply being male, or a cruel form of suffering, although Christian Red Pilled men were more likely to regard this suffering as The Cross of Our Age, and/or the hand of God drawing us closer to Him, however much our fleshly nature may detest this harsh spiritual phenomenon.

But since this post was written, we have seen growing evidence that men are responding to this new reality with renewed courage and purpose. They are owning the reality on the ground by taking action against the clown craze and by pursuing personal ambitions.

Secular mouthpieces have dropped the "Pity Men" narrative and are now focusing on instances in which C R T / tr@nsgender / W0ke fluff is being eroded and/or displaced by reclamations of masculinity. Universities are dropping their "gender studies" and C R T courses and departments. There are lawsuits over tr@nnies in women's sports. G@y couples are being subjected to lengthy prison sentences for abusing their adopted children. Daniel Penny was vindicated. Trump was reelected. I could go on.

Red Pill videos have shifted from focusing on women's shameful behaviors and how men have been defrauded out of love and respect, and are now coming from the viewpoint of "Look who's laughing now, b!tch!" For instance, Alexander Grace covered a video in which a skilled male pianist was attracting a lot of female attention through busking. Whenever a pedestrian chick would try to talk with him, his pat response was a brisk, "Sorry, I have a girlfriend." LMAO!

Moreover, men are waking up to the basic fact that they don't need a woman to live a robust and deeply satisfying life. They are coming to view women as comical, effeminate, boob-baring buffoons carrying the worst connotations and implications imaginable, a burden who will only slow them down and become a source of shame and remorse. Men are embracing the New Gift of Singleness with genuine hope and a residual careless animosity towards simping. They are (re)discovering true spiritual liberty (1 Corinthians 7:25-40).

So this month, we'll be looking at this New Gift of Singleness — the pros, cons, and shticks.

 The Gift of Singleness is not to be confused with the Season of Singleness, which is a whitewashed euphemism for carouseling.*

Related

- Σ Frame: Why Do Men Need Visions and Dreams? (2018/5/15)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Constructing a Framework of Options (2021/3/15)
- Σ Frame (Jack): More on the Framework of Options (2021/3/22)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Ethical Issues Surrounding the Christian Conundrum (2021/4/5)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Cross of Our Age (2021/5/3)
- Σ Frame (Deti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)

- Σ Frame: The Young Man's Problem (2022/2/4)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual/Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Analysis Paralysis is the Gateway to the Abyss (2022/9/19)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/30)
- Σ Frame: The Quiet Desperation of the Autopilot (2022/10/1)
- Σ Frame: The Path to Contentment (2023/1/18)
- Σ Frame: Lust (2023/2/10)
- Σ Frame: The Red Pill is a Dead End for Bachelors (2024/6/3)

2024 Sigma Frame Performance Report

Jack · 6 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Σ Frame's eighth annual traffic performance report.

Readership: Anyone interested
Length: 3,850 words
Reading Time: 20 minutes

History

I've always had the conviction that my testimony, my life experiences, and the things I've learned are valuable to other men, and that it's important for me to share these things for the benefit of others.

My work as a Blogger began on March 7, 2008. My original purpose for blogging was to distribute teaching materials (for a Sunday school class I was teaching at that time) in an easily accessible and shareable format, and to foment discussion. The general appeal, and the quality that made my teachings popular, was its focus on applying the scriptures to the metaphysical incongruences of human nature through an ontological lens that would now be called a Mystical or Romantic Christian approach.

I took the Red Pill in early 2017, and found a renewed purpose in blogging. So on September 27, 2017, I transferred the best of my blog writings from Blogger to WordPress, and began concentrating on Red Pill topics. I received more views on WordPress in the first two months than I had on Blogger in the previous 8 years. Since then, posts have grown more frequent and more regular.

Early writings (2009-2018) were sporadic epiphanies focusing on the incongruences of human nature. There was a brief transitional period in 2018 and another in 2024 that could be described as a meta-discussion of the Manosphere / Red Pill (which may be of great value to interested web historians). Tri-weekly posting along monthly themes began in January 2020. Other noteworthy voices in the CRP soon joined the authors' panel. Shortly after Dalrock retired from blogging in January 2020, long-time CRP readers nominated the Σ Frame blog as Dalrock's successor. In 2021, the Σ Frame blog was one of the most popular blogs in the Christian Manosphere, as most of the others had stopped or slowed down posting. This popularity continued through 2022 and 2023, and waned in 2024.

Goals and Purposes

The authors of Σ Frame aim to provide clarity about what it means to be a Christian Man in the 21st century, and how Christian masculinity is to be demonstrated in an era of shifting sands. As this blog has matured, the overriding focus has targeted "Rebuilding Christian Masculinity", with an emphasis on agency, Christian virtues, Headship Authority, maturity, Patriarchy, and spiritual discernment, among others. One thing that has made Σ Frame a staple of the CRP is our emphasis on Biblical and philosophical purity, informed by the prophetic, and juxtaposed with the noetic sense, thereby sifting out truth from various Blue Pill and Red Pill concepts, and determining how these are to be properly applied to Christian Men's lives. Many of the terms and ideas originating from the Σ Frame blog have spread throughout the Manosphere and have gone mainstream, with a lag time ranging from 2 weeks to 2 years. A large number of men have stated that reading Σ Frame has changed their lives for the better and/or has given them hope in an age of apostasy when masculinity has come under increasing attack from both the church and secular culture.

More about my goals and purposes in blogging are summed up in my About page.

Authors

Even in this age of apostasy and tribulation, God continues working throughout the lives of many men as well as my own. It is for this reason that I've had a habit to pray frequently about the purpose of this blog, what I should write about, and what men need to read and know.

Recognizing the need for multiple perspectives, checks, and balances, I've also prayed for other men to join me in blogging at Σ Frame. Over the years, there have been regular contributions from around a couple dozen authors, with a few of them joining the authors' panel. Most of these authors have come and gone over the years as the times and seasons of life have changed, but a few remain with us still.

In summary, the authors for 2024 included…

1. Jack (175 posts)
2. Oscar (12 posts)
3. Red Pill Apostle (6 posts)
4. Anonymous Contributor (4 posts)
5. Thedeti (4 posts)
6. Lexet (2 posts)
7. Alexei Karamazov (1 post)

8. Arch Angel (1 post)
9. DocLove (1 post)
10. 1 reblogged post from Andrew Torba @Gab

In addition, Jack wrote 1 post at Spawny's Space this year.

We are truly grateful to all these who have invested their thoughts, time, and energy to produce these posts, and to all the readers who have contributed their insights to the discussions at Σ Frame.

Readers

The Top 10 Countries with the Most Viewers

In 2024, the readership fell for the second year. Figures in parentheses indicate the change from the previous year.

1. United States: 108,198 (-29.8%)
2. United Kingdom: 5,146 (-49.2%)
3. Czechia: 3,671 (+67.7%)
4. Canada: 2,755 (-21.0%)
5. Taiwan: 2,289
6. Australia: 2,041 (-23.4%)
7. Switzerland: 1,959
8. India: 1,869 (-3.9%)
9. Nigeria: 1,826 (+62.6%)
10. Netherlands: 1,631

Total number of viewing countries / principalities: 134 (-10.7%)

Taiwan, Switzerland, and the Netherlands displaced Germany, the European Union, and Italy this year.

Subscribers

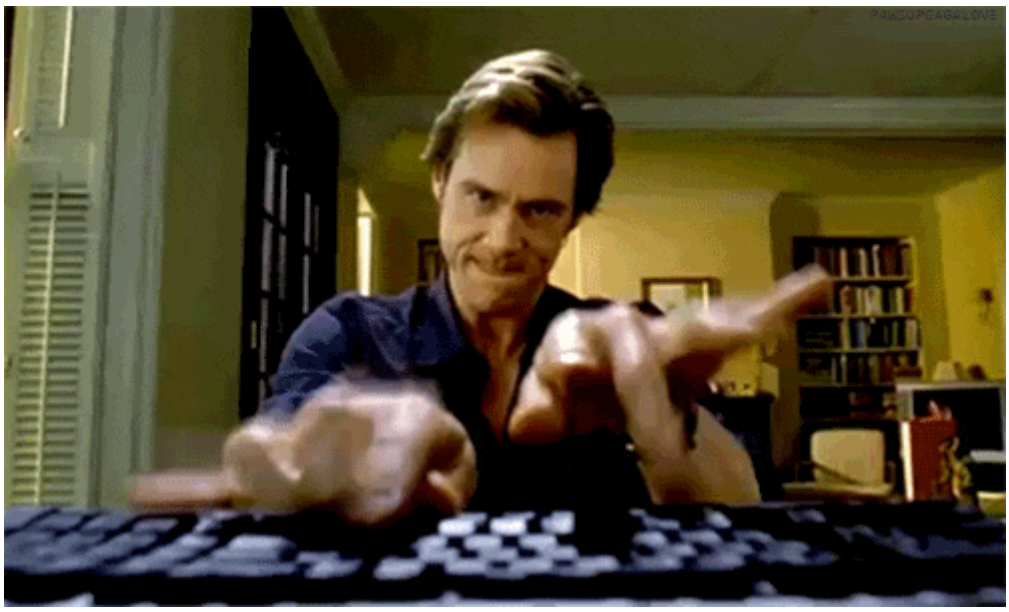
Total number of Subscribers: 246 (+4.8%)

In the past, several readers have reported that they were unknowingly removed from following and had to subscribe again. I have also found discrepancies between the number of subscribers in my previous reports and the number joining as reported by WordPress. Interestingly, WordPress no longer yields information on the number of new subscribers and the number of subscribers by email. I believe the reason for omitting these statistics is to cover up the details of these discrepancies. But why?

The Most Prolific Commentators

Although the total number of comments has decreased from last year, all of the most active commentators wrote more comments in 2024 than in 2023. Commentator Bardelys the Magnificent pushed Dead Bedroom Dating off the list this year.

1. Oscar: 3.7K (+27.5%)
2. Thedeti: 3.1K (+14.8%)
3. Jack: 2.7K (+22.7%)
4. Info: 1.6K (+33.3%)
5. Feeriker: 1.3K (+18.2%)
6. Red Pill Apostle: 799 (+71.6%)
7. Bardelys the Magnificent: 487



Site Changes in 2024

Appearance

The banner image displays a collection of old playing cards, all Jack of diamonds. These images are changed every season (4 images, 4 times a year).

Categories

Categories remain the same as last year. Some older posts had their categorizations updated.

New Pages

This year I added 2 new pages located in a drop-down menu in the Header.

- Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority (2024/1/10)
- Σ Frame: Manosphere / Red Pill Links (2024/12/21)

Also, the page Finding a Good Church? (2023/9/29) was updated.

Sidebar

On 2024/10/6, I added the Radix Fidem logo to the sidebar. When this action was done, the long list of Manosphere links disappeared for some unknown reason and I could not figure out how to restore it. So these links were placed into a separate new page (listed above).

Content

Projects

There are four long running projects that have become a regular staple on Σ Frame. These continued to be developed in many posts.

1. Archetypes, especially Headship and the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy.
2. Courtship Models
3. Discipline in Marriage
4. Masculine Authority and Dominion

Themes

The writing projects in 2024 were arranged in monthly themes, as has been done since 2020. The themes for 2024 were as follows.

1. January — The Laws of Boundaries
2. February — Culture
3. March-July — Problems with the Red Pill*
4. August — Community
5. September — Sociosexual Transactions
6. October — Gunk
7. November — Virtue
8. December — Virtue in Relationships

January, March, and May were the most popular months / themes.

Readers can go to the sidebar and find “Posts by Month” to read up on anything you’re particularly interested in.

 The in-depth analysis of the Red Pill proved to be much more intricate and extensive than I expected, lasting 5 months. It was found that most of the more significant problems are not so much due to errors or inadequacies of the theories and models in Red Pill lore, but due to men themselves having vastly different and conflicting perspectives of these theories and models. Some (younger?) men (e.g. Arch Angel) are actively rejecting and/or trying to dismantle certain Red Pill models (i.e. Rollo's evo-psyche contributions), while other men get hot about and/or refuse to engage in any criticism of their pet models (i.e. Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy). Other schisms arose about how Red Pill knowledge is to be interpreted and implemented. Readers' interest in this topic was very high in March and May, but as I continued to dissect these different perspectives, many readers disagreed and/or were offended and then disappeared. Read more here.*

 I received many contributed essays on the topic of virtue, so I extended this theme into December with a slight variation of perspective.*

Numbers of Posts, Words, Comments, and Likes

Year	Total posts	Total words	Average words per post	Total comments	Average comments per post	Total likes	Average likes per post
2007	2	2,415	1,208	13	6.5	1	0.5
2008	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
2009	29	55,907	1,928	165	5.7	3	0.1
2010	13	29,762	2,289	89	6.8	1	0.1
2011	5	5,781	1,156	16	3.2	1	0.2
2012	1	161	161	5	5.0	0	0
2013	2	2,095	1,048	8	4.0	0	0
2014	6	6,225	1,038	26	4.3	6	1.0
2015	12	20,502	1,709	57	4.8	3	0.3
2016	5	8,683	1,737	31	6.2	1	0.2

2017	34	57,392	1,688	473	13.9	67	2.0
2018	91	164,809	1,811	1,433	15.7	352	3.9
2019	79	142,156	1,799	1,000	12.7	301	3.8
2020	169	240,347	1,422	4,158	24.6	438	2.6
2021	164	368,059	2,244	12,718	77.5	440	2.7
2022	182	323,632	1,778	10,332	56.8	624	3.4
2023	212	312,081	1,472	7,417	35.0	521	2.5
2024	206	315,155	1,530	5,036	24.4	495	2.4
Sum/Avg	1,212	2,055,162	1,695.7	42,977	35.5	3,254	2.7

 Older posts have more likes and comments than what was reported in the 2023 performance report. In 2024, 1,887 comments were written under posts published before 2024/1/1.*
 Some figures are reported differently between the WordPress dashboard and the mobile app. Neither do these figures match manual calculations. Not sure why. Best estimates are shown.*

Traffic Statistics

Year	Number of visitors	Total views	Average views per day	Average views per month	Average views per visitor	Average views per post
2017	1,089	4,425	48	369	4.06	134.1
2018	15,075	42,128	115	3,511	2.79	462.9
2019	28,044	68,636	188	5,720	2.45	868.8
2020	56,715	161,632	442	13,469	2.85	908.0
2021	37,926	245,904	676	20,492	6.48	1,373.8
2022	28,232	209,227	573	17,436	7.41	1,149.6
2023	29,445	195,182	536	16,265	6.63	920.3
2024	24,300	144,313	395.4	12,026	5.94	700.5
All Time	220,815	1,071,507	404.9	12,316	4.85	884.1

Based on several years of statistics coupled with my observations, my overall impression is that Σ Frame has had about 200 very regular (daily) readers, around 2,500 regular monthly visitors, and roughly 25 regular commenters. These numbers dropped approximately 23% in 2024.

 Traffic statistics begin after moving to WordPress on 2017/9/27.*
 The outstanding performance in 2020-2021 is explained here.*

The Number of Views in 2024, by the Posts' Author

1. Jack: 77,330 views (-27.2%)
2. Oscar: 3,351
3. Thedeti: 2,358 views (-42.3%)
4. Red Pill Apostle: 2,269 views (-40.9%)
5. Lexet: 1,717 views (+19.3%)
6. NovaSeeker: 1,100 views (-27.2%)
7. Arch Angel: 805 views (-0.6%)
8. Caterpillar345: 11 views (-94.0%)

The Most Views in One Day (2024)

The top three days receiving the most views were all in January.

1. January 26, 2024: 162 visitors; 753 views
2. January 4, 2024: 166 visitors; 713 views
3. January 15, 2024: 129 visitors; 696 views

Apparently, the theme of Boundaries attracted much attention.

The Most Views in One Day (All-Time)

February 18, 2021: 1,882 views

Most Popular Weekday and Hour

Thursday (15% of views); 0:00 GMT, 10:00 a.m. EST, 10:00 p.m. Taiwan (7% of views).

Periods of High Activity in 2024

The first full week of June, 2024 received 627 visitors, 3,371 views, and 11 likes due to continued activity on 5 consecutive posts.

- Red Pill Truth is Not a Lifestyle to be Emulated (2024/5/29)
- Hypocrisy in the Manosphere (2024/5/31)
- The Red Pill is a Dead End for Bachelors (2024/6/3)
- The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss (2024/6/5)
- Sectarianism (2024/6/8)

The last week of August, 2024 received 688 visitors, 3,339 views, and 17 likes due to continued activity on the last 6 posts in August's theme of Community.

Popular Content

The Top 5 Most Popular Categories

The 2023 report showed a remarkable turnover from the previous year. This year shows another drastic reordering. Relationships was previously number 1, dropped to number 9 in 2023, and rebounded to number 3 in 2024. Counterfeit / False Paradigms and Discerning Lies and Deception dropped off the top 10.

1. Fundamental Frame: 383 views; 1,774 total views; (+27.5%)
2. Holding Frame: 362 views; 1,566 total views (+30.1%)
3. Relationships: 360 views
4. Power: 338 views
5. Moral Agency: 338 views
6. Introspection: 337 views
7. Decision Making: 313 views
8. Self-Concept: 307 views; 1,621 total views (+23.0%)
9. Agency: 307 views
10. Maturity, Personal Growth, and Development: 296 views

The yearly shifts in these categories indicate the following.

- In 2020, men were still focused on game strategies, relationships, and vetting.
- In 2021, men were backing away from the tortuous SMP and were placing more attention on improving themselves.
- In 2022, men were gaining a more thorough understanding of themselves, trying to piece themselves together and salvage what they could from their relationships.
- In 2023, men were focusing on honing their discernment of the reality on the ground and developing wisdom by sifting through the truth.

- In 2024, men were intent on holding themselves together and salvaging what they could out of life.

The Top 5 Most Popular Pages (2024)

1. What is Frame?: 401 views (-66.7%)
2. About: 308 views (+32.8%)
3. Σ Frame Maxims and Axioms: 305 views
4. Discipline in Marriage: 264 views (-41.5%)
5. What is a Sigma Male?: 169 views (-23.5%)

The Top 5 Most Popular Pages (All-Time)

The order of this list is unchanged from last year.

1. What is a Sigma Male?: 7,672 views
2. Discipline in Marriage: 7,266 views
3. What is Frame?: 5,140 views
4. About: 3,124 views
5. What is the Red Pill?: 2,284 views

The Top 5 Most Popular Posts (2024)

1. (Jack) The Breakfast Shop (2024/2/14): 972 views
2. (Arch Angel) Lovebreaker (2024/3/20): 764 views
3. (Lexet, Jack) Revisiting Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (2024/4/5): 712 views
4. (Jack) Problems with The Red Pill — Exposition (2024/3/1): 699 views
5. (Jack) The Ways of Women Around the World (2024/5/6): 682 views

Among the top 10 most popular posts in 2024, 3 posts (listed below) were written before 2024/1/1, including the number one post for 2024. This is not the first time in the history of this blog that the top post for the year was from a previous year. The top post in 2019 was a post written in 2018. (This same post also appeared in the top 10 for 2024 and is second on the list below.) However, it is the first time that 3 older posts were in the top 10.

1. List of Female IOI's (2020/3/30): 1,119 views
2. What To Do When A Girl Tries To Make You Jealous (2018/4/22): 811 views
3. P0rn is Faux Validation (2023/2/17): 702 views

Also, flash and crash author Arch Angel is credited with the 4th most popular post in 2024. Why did he quit?

The Top 5 Most Popular Posts (All-Time)

The order of this list is unchanged from last year.

1. What To Do When A Girl Tries To Make You Jealous (2018/4/22): 67,979 views
2. List of Slut Tells (2017/10/15): 7,944 views
3. List of Female IOI's (2020/3/30): 6,304 views
4. 16 Qualities of an Irresistible Woman (2017/12/1): 6,106 views
5. 50 Shades of Discipline in Marriage (2017/11/25): 4,096 views

The Top 10 Most Commented Posts (2024)

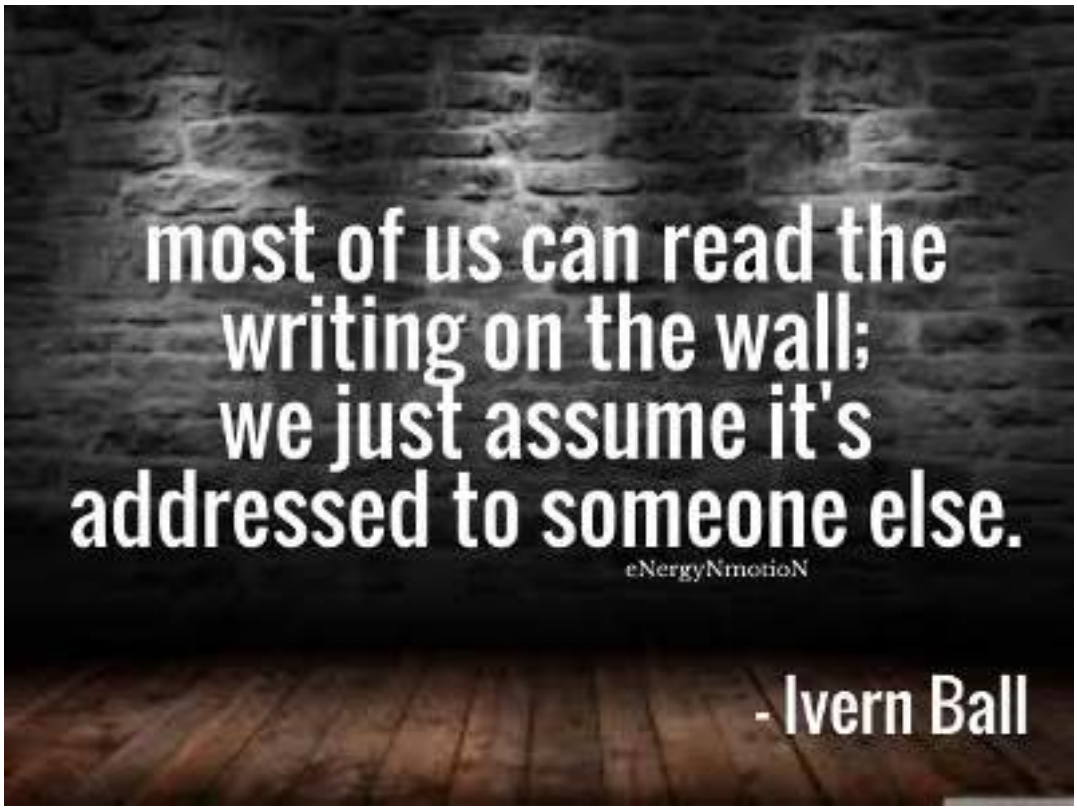
1. Defining the Christian Red Pill (2024/6/24): 196 comments
2. (ArchAngel) Lovebreaker (2024/3/20): 126 comments
3. Problems with The Red Pill — Exposition (2024/3/1): 125 comments
4. The Ways of Women Around the World (2024/5/6): 85 comments
5. (Lexet) Selling Blue Pills Painted Red (2024/3/13): 81 comments
6. (TheDeti) Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30): 81 comments
7. (Oscar) The Lie of Female Hypoagency (2024/4/1): 79 comments
8. The Absence of Actionable Knowledge — Part 1 (2024/5/13): 76 comments

9. (TheDeti) Deti's 10 Rules on Boundaries (2024/2/3): 76 comments
10. Trump's Near Miss is a Hit (2024/7/16): 75 comments

The Top 10 Most Commented Posts (All-Time)

These are all older posts written before 2024.

1. (NovaSeeker): The Lopsided Liberalized Mating Market (2021/2/17): 388 comments
2. Secrets (2021/8/18): 284 comments
3. Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy (2021/6/23): 281 comments
4. Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21): 248 comments
5. The Boring Loyal Dude (2022/5/11): 223 comments
6. The Status Signaling Narrative (2022/3/21): 223 comments
7. Nita Marie's threesome with her second husband and God (2022/10/5): 213 comments
8. (NovaSeeker): The Centrality of Sex in Western Culture (2021/2/8): 209 comments
9. (NovaSeeker, Jack): Is Patriarchy for Deplorables? (2021/5/31): 205 comments
10. Artisanal Toad on Women's Agency (2022/11/14): 199 comments



The Top Downloads

The number of PDF downloads increased substantially in 2023. Since then, downloads exceeding 500/year have been added to the Performance Report.

The top downloads in 2024 are as follows.

1. Cass R. Sunstein (2002), "The Law of Group Polarization", Journal of Political Philosophy 10(2):175-195. (2,725 downloads; +199.1%)
2. Suzanne Verdeber (2017), "BOOK REVIEW Kyle Harper, From Shame to Sin: The Christian Transformation of Sexual Morality in Late Antiquity" (Cambridge Mass.: Harvard University Press, 2013), ISBN:

978-0674660014. (2,719 downloads; +199.8%)

3. John Witte, "Sex and Marriage in the Protestant Tradition, 1500-1900", Adrian Thatcher, ed., Oxford Handbook on Theology, Sexuality, and Gender (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2015), 204-223. (2,694 downloads)

Searches

Top Search Engine Terms Leading to Σ Frame

Between 2017 and 2021, the majority of search terms included some variant of "sigma male", "sigmaframe", "sigma frame blog", etc. (of course), and the words, "wife", "discipline", and especially some variant of "jealous".

In 2022, the frequency of "sigma" terms decreased significantly, while "wife", "discipline", and "marriage" completely disappeared and were replaced by "IOI" and "MGTOW". Interestingly, MGTOW did not appear again in 2023. (Apparently the MGTOW moniker faded out of common usage, even while the movement continued to grow stronger than ever.) In 2023, there were a large number of p0rn related search terms. Since I do not post this type of content and vulgar words are c0rnw@llәd, I took this to be an act of God that some men are searching for p0rn and are finding the Σ Frame blog instead.

In 2024, readers found Σ Frame by searching for…

1. "amateur sexy eyes" — The top search term by far. WTH?
2. …a large number of profane or p0rn0graphic search terms (as usual), but this year there also appeared a much larger number of relatively softer feminine descriptors that were NOT explicitly p0rnographic. For example, these included terms like "amateur", "cheerleader", "college girls", "dreamgirls", "escort", "jailbait", "lingerie", "models", "thong", "virginity", "wild girls", etc.
3. Terms specific to the Manosphere / Red Pill, e.g. "Alpha widow", "Beta males", "Dalrock", "Kyojiro Kagenuma", "Red Pill", "Rollo Tomassi", "sexual agency", "tingly respect", etc. (This is a new trend.)
4. Titles of specific posts.
5. There were 3 search terms in Russian, down from 11 in 2023.

6. 1 search term in Turkish.

Interestingly, the term “sigma” or some variant was almost completely absent (only one hit).

Judging by the titles (number 4), the most searched for posts include these, in this order.

1. Are you a man or a mushroom? (2020/8/17)
2. Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/5)
3. Rollo Tomassi on Female Agency (2022/11/4)
4. Wayne Grudem’s Study of the Greek Word kephalē, “Head” (2023/4/19)

Funny or Odd Search Terms which have Led People to Σ Frame in 2024

1. haruna hana
2. motherless com
3. plastic teen show
4. ussr tits

Referrals

The Top 5 Incoming Referrers from Social Media, Search Engines, Aggregators, and Readers in 2024

The once immense popularity of Google continues to fade away, and is being replaced by a plethora of other search engines, most notably Microsoft’s Bing, and Yandex, a Russian search engine that is devoid of W0kery.

1. Google Search: 9,610 (-24.7%)
2. SynLogos (Based Aggregator): 3,967 (-15.5%)
3. Bing: 1,315 (+73.7%)
4. Yandex: 1,010
5. WordPress Reader: 915 (-26.0%)

For the first time, Bing and Yandex surpass the WordPress Reader! Heh.

The Top 10 Incoming Referrers in 2024 (Other than Search Engines and Readers)

Compared to the previous year, Spawny's Space, To Reclaim Normality, Okrahead, and Dalrock have been superseded by Jim's Blog, Sigma Game, newcomer Omega's Journey, and Catacomb Resident, who returns to the list after a 1 year hiatus. Figures in parentheses indicate the change from the previous year.

1. Pushing Rubber Downhill (Adam Piggott): 893 (+9.3%)
2. Christianity and Masculinity (Deep Strength): 801 (-62.1%)
3. Derek L. Ramsey: 700 (+62.0%)
4. Laughing at Feminism (Sharkly): 169 (-33.5%)
5. Gunner Q2 / Gunner Q3: 99 (+17.9%)
6. Omega's Journey: 86
7. Jim's Blog: 69
8. Catacomb Resident: 63
9. Cane Caldo: 57 (+18.8%)
10. Sigma Game: 46

For a time during 2024, Derek L. Ramsey was the #1 referrer, up from his usual place of #3! A slow down over at C&M has allowed long-time regular referrer Adam Piggott to take first place. Σ Frame continues to receive referrals from Cane Caldo, even though he stopped posting 4 years ago. Dalrock finally dropped off the list this year, due to his blog going private.

The Top 10 Blogs Receiving the Most Traffic from Σ Frame

Outclicks continue to decrease precipitously. Compared to the previous years' top 10 list, there has been a considerable reordering. Adam Piggott, Wintery Knight, and Vox Day all return to the list after a 1 year reprieve, while Patriactionary makes the list for the first time. Meanwhile, Hawaiian Libertarian, The Transformed Wife, Cornerstone, and Biblical Gender Roles have been ousted from the top 10.

Figures in parentheses indicate the change from the previous year.

1. Spawny's Space: 1,292 (-33.8%)
2. Pushing Rubber Downhill (Adam Piggott): 1,056 (+72.8%)
3. Christianity and Masculinity (Deep Strength): 944 (-23.5%)
4. Dalrock / Dalrock's Archives at The Red Pill: 310 and 339, respectively, totaling 649 (-13.0%)
5. Wh0res and Ale: 620 (-33.0%)
6. Gunner Q2 / Gunner Q3: 33 and 562, respectively, totaling 595 (-25.3%)
7. Wintery Knight: 532 (-14.1%)
8. Vox Day: 505 (-49.4)
9. The Other McCain: 452 (-56.8%)

10. Patriactionary: 383 (-37.3%)

Last year, we saw readers clicking on Manosphere sites long shuttered, rather than some of the few remaining Based / Christian Manosphere / Red Pill blogs that continued to post on a regular basis. This year, readers are clicking on ye olde faithful Manosphere bloggers.

Of note, Christianity and Masculinity, Dalrock and Gunner Q continue to be standard reading for Classic Christian Manosphere content, with C&M staying strong despite his infrequent posting as of late, Dalrock rising up the list from 7th place last year, and The GQ staying in 6th place. I'm not sure what it was with Adam Piggott that would cause Σ Frame readers to avoid him for 1 year, but he's back in the limelight as usual.

Related

- Σ Frame: 2017 Σ Frame Performance Report (2018/1/3)
- Σ Frame: 2018 Σ Frame Performance Report (2019/1/1)
- Σ Frame: 2019 Σ Frame Performance Report (2020/1/4)
- Σ Frame: 2020 Σ Frame Performance Report (2021/1/1)
- Σ Frame: 2021 Σ Frame Performance Report (2022/1/5)
- Σ Frame: 2022 Σ Frame Performance Report (2023/1/9)
- Σ Frame: 2023 Σ Frame Performance Report (2024/1/2)

Why I am “Red Pill”

Lexet Blog · 8 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Taking the Red Pill requires facing the truth, no matter how ugly it is.

Readership: Christians; Christian Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Author’s Note: Originally published in 2018 by Lexet Iustitia Blog.
Length: 3,000 words
Reading Time: 16 minutes

Intro

I guess it is no surprise to anyone who would come across this blog to learn that the author is “Red Pilled.” Here is my journey of how I learned of the Red Pill, and became “Red Pill aware.” This piece is rather long, but it is the condensed version.

What is Red Pill?

What do I mean by “Red Pill”? I think it means that I choose to see the world for what it is, as opposed to believing whatever the masses are into or what people might say. This includes being aware of people, their motives, and not being naive. For me, as a Christian, being Red Pill means realizing we have a sin nature, and live in a fallen world. We have spiritual desires that can’t be met on this side of life. We idealize and hunger for something we cannot possess. But we understand that the ideal is unattainable, and it can be a fatal error to live as if the ideal could be achieved.

Of course, many in the Red Pill community solely apply the term to their perspective on sexual relationships and gender differences. I find this interesting, because the RP community believes what the Bible affirms as our sin nature when it comes to sexuality.

My Journey

My journey to being Red Pilled was a long one. While my beliefs and upbringing confirmed some of the core beliefs of the “Red Pill”, it took personal experience and a whole lot of pain to realize how true, and real, my beliefs were.

I was raised in a single parent home for a long time. Unlike many others, I had lived with my father. The female contributor to my genetics had abandoned me and her other offspring (there were several of us). I grew up my entire life knowing that a woman is capable of incredible evil, even against her own children.

The other women in my family, despite how loving they are, tend to meddle where they shouldn’t, and every now and then, this creates conflict in our family / step-family. What is particularly frustrating for me is that I am often involved in these matters fairly quickly, being pulled by opposing forces to choose a side. I have since learned not to care and to stay out of the business of people far older than me (especially those of the opposite sex).

By the time I was in my teens, my parents (not including the female genetics-donor), instilled in me the many lessons they had learned as part of their background with law enforcement:

- "Don't have sex before you are 18."
- "Don't have sex with anyone younger than 18."
- "Don't have sex before you are married." (No explanation was given for this, other than it was a hard and fast rule.)
- "Look but don't touch." (There were many weird comments made to me that contradicted some of the other things said on this list. Sometimes it felt like my parents were trying to say, "You have the freedom to screw around, as long as we don't know about it.")
- "Girls will be after you because of our position, and our income, and will claim statutory r@pe." This by far was probably the most damaging, and truthful, thing I was taught growing up. The fear that one woman can manipulate you, pleasure you, and then destroy your entire life is not something that a very young man can digest easily. This was repeated dozens, if not hundreds, of times. Many workplace examples also appeared.

There weren't any other serious talks, rules, or conversations about dating. The only things I was told are those listed above. No advice was given when I went off to college, and joined a frat. To this day, I have never had a serious discussion about marriage with either of my parents (that lasted more than a handful of minutes). Like many latchkey kids, I was pretty much left to figure out life on my own.

In fact, the only dating advice I received was a book from my grandparents. They gave me two of Joshua Harris' books. At that point in my life, I didn't have much of a problem with what he wrote. However, since taking the Red Pill, I have come to see him as naive, Blue Pilled, and very young — too young to give valid advice on this topic. Since then, his leaving the faith and other actions show how Blue Pilled he was/is.

For my own thoughts on courtship, click here. I've also written about Courtship and Power here on Σ Frame.

The Garbage I Observed In Life

I will share a bit too much because I have actually met several others who had eerily similar experiences. If you see similar patterns, bail.

Between high school and college, I saw it all. The Christian girls praying outside around the flag pole on National Prayer Day were the same girls whose nude photos were regularly circulated among the males in my class during our senior year. (I can remember at least 3 of them — hard to forget that kind of thing at that age.) At that time, texting photos was still new for our community. These same girls were also known for sleeping around with other guys. Regularly. Same story in college.

I had girlfriends who left me to go back to their ex (nearly all will do this, if not for a new man). One girl broke up with me because I wouldn't sleep with her. One tried to break up with me on Valentines Day. My bro did me a solid and gave me a heads up, so I could preempt her. I had one ex-girlfriend (B) who interfered in my relationship with a (then) current girlfriend (A). It was quite funny later down the road, when I realized the two were ex-best friends who then became the worst enemies imaginable because they were both hitting up the same guys. Both of these women cheated on me. Looking back, there were female friends of mine who sent every indicator of interest (IOI) possible, yet I failed to pick up on them at the time. (Not that I would have done anything about them anyway.)

A "Christian" girl from college who was interested in me, had actually slept with a bunch of dudes in my fraternity. That was disappointing at the time, but even more sad now, as it shows just how far the church has fallen, and how much the church has failed its youth. It also confirms the very worst about our nature.

If I had a dime for every time I heard a sorority girl claim she was “abused” or “r@ped” by their ex-boyfriend or a guy they met at a party, I would have enough to buy a nice steak dinner. Every girl who ever made that claim about a former “lover” had been recently alienated and rejected by him (usually because she was sleeping around), and ended up back with him fairly soon after. Of course, every girl who says her ex was “abusive” is playing for power.

I did a ton of designated driving in college, and saw what actually went down at many parties. Women would get trashed, hand their drink to a person, go and throw up, and when they came back, they would accuse the man of taking their drink and drugging it.

Many girls in sororities would try and “clear” fraternity houses, or fraternity “families,” by sleeping with every guy in that particular group. This is why I have a cardinal rule that a woman’s participation in a sorority is a black-flag deal breaker. There is a problem with society when it’s not abnormal when a bunch of guys stop you after class, and try to resolve just how many men slept with a guy’s girlfriend. (One instance featured a GF cheating on her man with 7 other guys in one class, all at one all-long-weekend party.)

I had grown so disgusted with the opposite sex while obtaining my degrees, that I never even thought of dating a woman in the entire state I lived in (coastal, liberal). The modern MGTOW movement would have labeled me a Monk. My thinking changed a little bit as I was able to leave the state for internships.

The “Hard Lessons Learned” Courtship

If anyone read my response to Jack’s post on Courtship, here and here, I hinted in the comments at sharing my own courtship story at some point. Well, here I’ll share the abridged version of it. There is a lot of detail here, only because it did bring me to a huge wakeup call.

Fast forward several years later, to post post-graduate school. At this point of my life, I had grown immensely. I had grown in faith, in knowledge, financially, etc. I was finally a member of what seemed to be a decent church. I had encouraged some of the guys to ask out some of the girls they liked, and as a leader, I led by example. But my example turned out not so good. I failed, and then with one, I quasi-succeeded.

I had observed her for awhile, and thought she would be a decent human being. (For all those who are reading, please keep in mind that at this point of time, I was naive as heck about “good Christian girls” who actually attended church, etc.) What I didn’t know was that she had a shameful past known to many in the congregation, and those people never warned me at all at any point.

At first she said no, and then followed with a weird “I felt sorry for you, and I liked how you handled it, so maybe yes…” (I guess you could say this was a matter of me holding “Frame”, or perhaps my indifference made her insecure, but who knows.)

So we clicked, and with where I was at in life, I was willing to participate in a “courtship” hosted by her family. We spent a lot of time together, discussed pretty much everything under the sun, and then decided to get married. A venue was selected. The date was set. The ring was chosen and purchased. A home was selected and purchased. One week before the house closed, I was driving to the gym in the afternoon. I got a call from one of her parents, asking if I could come over.

I knew the relationship was done that very second. It wasn’t the tone, it was the fact that the parent was asking me to come over on a day I hadn’t planned on coming over. I did not know the particulars. The hour long drive over consisted of me understanding it was done, and over, and being at peace about it, and being nervous about the why, for some reason. Perhaps I was blindsided and in shock. Who knows.

When I arrived, I had the creepiest experience of my life. I sat across a table from a woman who was once loving, caring, emotional, and happy, and saw a cold hearted, emotionless robot look me dead in the eye and say, “I don’t love you, I never have, and I don’t know why I haven’t told you.” It took me a long time to process that statement, with the facts of the entire situation, and the stone-cold expression she had.

The events after that moment informed me as to what actually happened. Her statement actually disturbed another person (besides me) who was present. You see, her parents were more concerned about keeping the relationship intact than she was, or anyone else. After her confession, her parents’ narrative changed. They said she said those things because she was afraid she had “lost me forever”. So then everything became clear to me. What was really happening was that I was a mark, and was being taken advantage of, not by her, but by her family. She was just going along for the ride. I understand that parents want to make sure their daughters are well-provided for, but manipulating the situation like they did is not a good way to ensure a decent outcome.

Looking back at some of the messages I sent to her at the time, some of my comments were:

- "I don't need this. I can't believe this is happening. It's surreal. I feel numb."

And to her family,

- "I can't have a one-way relationship. I think the fact that she never shared any of this with me speaks for itself."
- "I believe you are being completely manipulative. Absolutely without question."
- "She doesn't want to make the decision (because that would upset her parents) and wants to force me to make it. I don't appreciate that." (I was wanting to force her to own up to the consequences of her actions.)
- "When I told you that [redacted], the wedding, and everything else was off the table and out of the question, you really did not show any emotion. Your facial expression was the same the entire time. [Redacted] even said you sounded robotic."

Some of her comments were comic gold.

- "It's been mutual. But I can't say I have felt the same way you have." OK bird-brain.

Everything she said to me at that point of time was something she "was told" by her ex a year prior to this relationship. Take that for crazy.

One of her parents really tried to push for "saving the relationship," and she did herself at one point in a letter saying she was hurt by her last ex and another guy in the church who turned her down prior to me asking her out and bla bla bla. (All BS arguments because she married a third dude, unknown to all at that time, less than a year later.) So where have all the good guys gone? /S

I had to hire an attorney to get out of the home contract and I lost a bit of that cost. I was screwed on the ring purchase. (A tip to you men out there — big box stores have return policies, small stores and custom jewelers don't.) I had to handle myself in a way that was much nicer than I wanted to be, and I did that to preserve my professional reputation and my career. Men with any high-level job, or any professional job, can have it taken away or ruined by a vindictive woman. Everything I did was documented, sent to friends, and recorded.

This stuff sounds just like the rubbish that Fresh and Fit, Rollo Tomassi, and those guys cover in their talk shows. I wish I could monetize this horsesh!t as well as they can. But no, I'm the sucker who lived it.

Lesson learned: It's not worth it to make breakups into lessons.

To this day, the thought that I could have married such an evil woman scares me.

Discovering The Red Pill

Up until this point of my life, I had spent years building my career, saving money, and sacrificing, with very little self-indulgence or pleasure. I never watched much YouTube, or blogged, and was generally not in touch with the happenings of the interwebs. But after the relationship ended, I decided I was just going to do the crap I wanted to do, and do it for me, and have a season of NOT being forward thinking. I went out to eat, watched movies, and did what I wanted to do, etc. I even bought a game system and binged on games.

I also started reading blogs and meeting people online. I discovered Terrence Popp and Jordan Peterson, and learned that there was this entire group of people on the internet who went through similar experiences. I wasn't unique. People were able to accurately describe exactly what I felt, and how I felt.

Everything I learned from the RP community allowed me to connect many dots in my previous relationships, and made me realize I had made similar mistakes in the past, and that many different types of women were, in fact, the same. AWALT!

Everything about the Red Pill helped me "make sense" of all my experiences. The Red Pill confirmed many lessons I had made in my past, and made sense of other happenings in my life. It made me realize how naive I was and what I had missed, and it confirmed a lot of the suspicions I had.

I am Red Pill because that viewpoint accurately describes human relationships in a fallen world. It is the only world view that allows you to see the world for what it is, and prepares you to handle the world for what it is. I believe it also confirms scriptural truths.

As a Christian, however, there is always tension with the secular side of the Red Pill community, as we are called to be obedient to Christ, obey God's laws, and live a different lifestyle than the rest of the world. I have already provided my perspective of what the Red Pill community looks like. In effect, how a Christian responds to Red Pill awareness is different from the response of a Red Pilled nonbeliever.

Related

- Σ Frame (Lexet): Christian vs. Non-Christian Women – A Negligeeable Difference (2019/3/20)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Christian vs. Non-Christian Women (2020/2/8)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Theories on Single Women in the Church (2020/12/5)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Charting the Red Pill World (2021/3/26)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Gynapotheosis (2021/4/21)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Aristocratic Hypergamy (2021/5/14)

Son-Husbands and Devouring Mothers

Oscar · 10 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Doom descends over a boy when his masculinity is squelched and suppressed by a dysfunctional mother unit.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Young Single Men; Mentors; Pastors
Author's Note: This post has some input from Jack.
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 2,300 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes + 2 videos totaling about 15 minutes

What is a 'Son-Husband'?

Growing up, we used to refer to certain boys as "Mama's Boys". They tended to be weak, effeminate, a little too attached to their mothers, and oftentimes didn't know their fathers. There's a newer term, "Son-Husband", that I think is more accurate, because NOT all devoured sons are effeminate or physically weak. (I'll explain how this works below.)

I first heard the term "Son-Husband" from Greg Adams, so I'll let him explain it.

Greg Adams is not the only Red Pill voice talking about the "Son-Husband" dynamic. If you look up the term "Son-Husband" on YouTube, you'll find video after video of black men explaining the phenomenon, and how to get out of it. That's because single moms are the most likely to become devouring mothers, and in the U.S.A., blacks are the most likely to come from single mother households.

As Greg Adams said, the absence of a strong father figure is extremely destructive to a boy.

We know women are prone to do these things because of the Curse of Eve desire to control a man, and the selfish motivation of keeping a provider under her thumb, but why would a mother who supposedly loves her son destroy him like that?

It's because she's NOT a loving mother. She's a devouring mother.

What is a Devouring Mother?

Women's love is devouring by nature. Women's love is constituted by obsession and consumption, literally taking the object of their love into their bodies, minds, and souls, and becoming that which they desire. This feature of feminine love is good when a woman literally takes her husband into herself and molds herself around him to be his companion and helpmate. However, it is corrupted and debased when a woman rejects her male Head and turns her consumptive appetites onto those under her care, i.e. sons (and daughters*).

I'll let Dr. Jordan Peterson explain how this works.

Devouring mothers deliberately sabotage their sons, as JBP pointed out with the story of Cartman from South Park. The most obvious method for sabotaging their sons is by over-feeding them. Devouring mothers deliberately coddle, infantilize, and over-protect their sons, and refuse to teach them social skills, or any useful skills really. Instead, they'll keep him nursing at her teat forever, figuratively speaking. This keeps the Son-Husband dependent on the devouring mother.

> "You don't have to do anything, but you can't leave."
>
> ~ Dr. JBP

But why?

From the devouring mother's perspective, the worst thing that can happen is for her Son-Husband to leave her (e.g. for another woman).

> "She's deeply, deeply, deeply terrified that if she helps that boy grow up, he will leave, and she'll have nothing."
>
> ~ Dr. JBP

That is the intense insecurity of a woman who has no heavenly Father nor male husband-shepherd in her life.

Case Study — Sean

For example, here's a link to a clip from the TLC show, My 600-Lb Life. I won't show the thumbnail because it's revolting. I cued the video to a point where the surgeon, Dr. Younan Nowzaradan says, "his mom needs to stop overfeeding him". Sean, the young man in need of bariatric surgery, was only 26-years-old during that episode. He literally, physically could not leave his mother. Sean died at 29-years-old.

Obviously, Sean was an extreme case, the most extreme I've ever heard of. However, what Sean's mother did to him is common in kind, if not in degree.

The Two Types of Son-Husbands

Essentially, the Son-Husband dynamic / phenomenon is created in one of two ways.

1. The absence of a father, or a really p!ss poor father figure.
2. A controlling, domineering, and/or insecure mother.

If BOTH of these conditions are in place, then the boy is doomed to a life of hardship and rejection. That's why single mothering is so horrendously damaging.

Concerning the first type (via an absent father), Greg Adams described how the Son-Husband assumes the masculine duties of the absent father whom the single mother either poorly chose or removed from the home.

Greg Adams presented the example of NBA player Kevin Durant. Obviously, a professional athlete is more masculine than the average man. However, he can still be emotionally, mentally, socially, and spiritually stunted by a devouring mother. In fact, that may be ideal from the devouring mother's perspective — a son who is physically and professionally excellent (a strong provider), but who is emotionally or psychologically crippled in a way that makes it easy for her to control him. The effect is that it teaches and trains a boy to be compliant to women (i.e. his mother), to sacrifice his own Frame (or worse, never develop it), and to forego his own masculine journey in life.

Concerning the second type (via an overbearing mother), married women can also sometimes become devouring mothers, as Jack pointed out when we first discussed this subject (i.e. Simps), and this situation leads to the second type of Son-Husbands. This usually happens when the husband and wife have a terrible relationship, and the mother turns to her son for the "emotional support" she feels she's NOT getting from her husband. This is also very destructive to a boy, but in a very different way. This also affects different boys in different ways, depending on their character and temperament. But in general, he'll either become emotionally (co)dependent on his mother, or else he'll turn on her and despise her feminine influence. (Prof. Peterson briefly mentions this in the above video from 3:20 to 3:50.) In either case, the devoured son may or may NOT become an effeminate wuss, like the first type, but he'll definitely learn some very unhealthy ways of viewing and dealing with women. The worst of it is that he's NOT seeing his mother love his father properly, and instead learns to see his father as somewhat cucked — by himself.

Overbearing Mothers / Wives and Passive Sons / Husbands

It gets worse. Growing up as a Son-Husband makes a man unattractive to other women. The Oedipal mother doesn't need to exert much effort to shoo her son's potential mates away, because he doesn't have many (or any) to begin with. In the eyes of women, he's been 'defiled' by his mother in this sense. In the rare case where a woman does find the Son-Husband attractive enough to marry him, it's usually a woman very similar to his mother — an obsessive, consumptive woman who satiates her desires through controlling a man — i.e. her son or her husband.

This is why passive men and overbearing women often marry each other. This is NOT a coincidence, but the effects of a generational curse. Men who had overbearing mothers will often end up with domineering wives, because that is what they're most familiar with. It's what makes them feel 'loved' (although dysfunctionally). At first glance, this seems like a great match. He doesn't want the responsibility of Headship. No, he wants a substitute mother. She sure as hell doesn't want to submit to a dominant man. Instead, she wants a passive man to dominate. This seemingly pragmatic arrangement is always strained by competition and animosity between the devouring mother (-in-law) and the overbearing wife.

But it all falls apart when the kids arrive.

When the overbearing wife has children, she suddenly feels the need for a masculine husband who exercises dominion and provides for and protects her and her children. Even though she would never bring herself to 'submit' to such a man, but now her husband's passivity makes her loathe him. She never respected him, but now she feels a seething, contemptuous disgust for him. She becomes more unbearably contentious than ever, and any sexual desire she once felt for him disappears completely. In response, the passive husband withdraws from the overbearing wife, maybe even leaves her, and the overbearing wife then turns to her son(s) for emotional support. She becomes a devouring mother, and the cycle perpetuates itself. This is the makings of a generational curse.

Overbearing Mothers / Wives and Strong Independent™ Daughters

So far, I've only talked about the effect on sons because this is a men's blog, but here I'll say a few words about the effect on daughters.

Devouring mothers (and absent fathers) can, and do, also devour their daughters through the same mechanisms described above, but with different effects. With sons, overbearing mothers devour a boy's masculinity. With daughters however, these mothers devour a girl's femininity.

If the devouring mother has daughters, the daughters will likely become one of the following…

1. If her SMV is high (or if sexual immorality is the norm), she'll become a hypersexual, strumped out slore / single mother. (Greg Adams discusses this in the above video from 2:12 to 2:50.)
2. If her SMV is low, she'll become a masculinized unbearable feminist.

We see this happening every day, all around us. It is how Strong Independent™ Feminists are gr00med, fostered, and foisted into the world.

Strong Independent™ daughters mimicking Strong Independent™ Mothers. Absent or weak fathers inadvertently teaching their daughters that they're more secure if they're Strong and Independent™ enough to NOT have to depend on a man. This is not only how the generational curse perpetuates itself, but also how the cycle accelerates.

The Role of Masculine Fathers

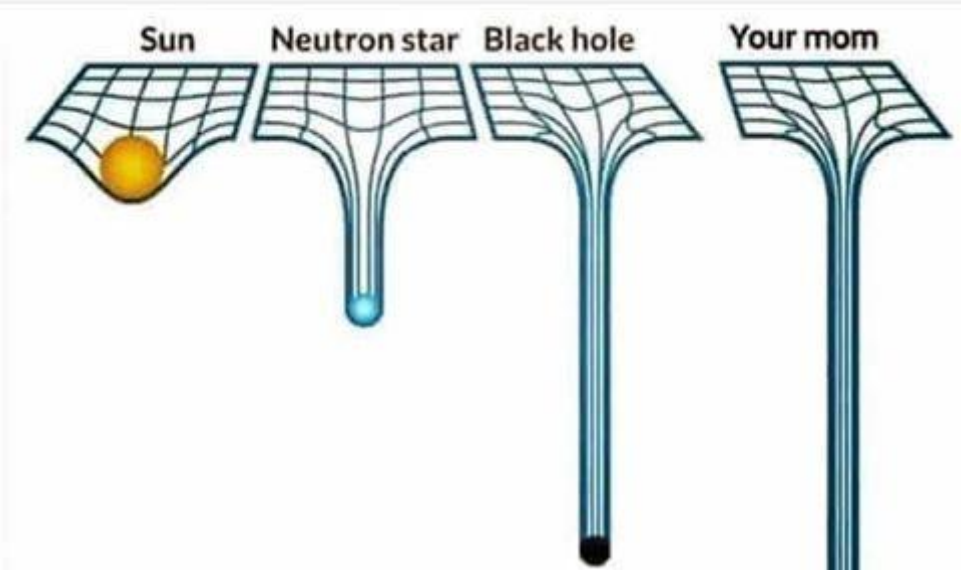
We men need to use wisdom in teaching our children useful skills, and pushing them to greater independence, especially boys. We can't expect our wives to push them out of the nest. That's our job.

From a mother's perspective, allowing their children to grow up is tough for moms in a way that it isn't for dads. Moms grow their children inside their bodies. They feed their children from their bodies. They have a connection to their children that we fathers will never experience and will never fully understand. As a consequence, mothers have a hard time letting their babies fly. Flying is dangerous, after all. But flying is true freedom.

Thus, we men also need wisdom in dealing with the wife's / mother's cantankerous obsessions with the children. We need to be dominant when they're making it difficult for our children to grow. We need to be compassionate and gentle, yet firm with our wives when their notions of safety, security, and socialization interfere with the riskier experiences that are necessary to build character, skill, and a sense of agency and responsibility in a child.

I've literally had to tell my wife a few times, "Back off and let me raise my boys!"

This dynamic is normal in a healthy, Godly family. Devouring mothers (and absent or weak fathers), however, are neither healthy nor Godly. As we saw with young Sean's mother, they're selfish and evil. They've always existed, but they're becoming more common now because single motherhood is more common than ever.



The Role of Masculine Mentors

The word "mentor" comes from Greek mythology. King Odysseus was about to leave for the Trojan War to fulfill an honorable obligation. His son, Telemachus, was only two-years-old. Odysseus knew that he may never return, so he asked an old friend to teach, train, and help raise his son in his absence. That man's name was Mentor. That's how the word "mentor" came to mean "surrogate father".

We older men need to be ready and willing to help young men around us who need mentorship, especially those men who don't (or didn't) have a father in their lives. Younger men need to be prepared to bring newcomers into their peer group. If there's anything a young man needs to escape his devouring mother, it's the rough-and-tumble fellowship of a male peer group.

What Can A Devoured Son-Husband Do?

To escape a devouring mother (or the effects of an absent or rejected father), a young man has to embrace masculinity and agency. He has to physically separate from his mother. Move out of her house. Get a job. Pay his own bills. Wash his own laundry. Do everything for himself that he can. Take responsibility for his own life. His plight is not his fault, but it's in his lap. He can either take ownership of the situation and reach escape velocity, or he can remain stuck for life. It's not fair, but those are his options.

If his parents are divorced, separated, or were never married, he may need to get to know his father. His mother may have poisoned him against his father, and he'll need to wake up from this spell. He'll need to Transcend the Abyss. OTOH, his father may be useless, or worse. Either way, he needs to find mentors. In fact, the young man seeking to escape the gravitational pull of his devouring mother will probably need several mentors. We all have strengths and weaknesses, and none of us can teach everything, because none of us knows everything. He may need one mentor for health and fitness, another for career, another for spiritual pursuits, another for academics, and so on.

None of this is easy, but it's easier to find mentors in a Christian community than as an atomized individual.

May God help us all.

In some upcoming posts, I'll review a few movies that I believe do a good job of presenting devouring mothers, Son-Husbands, and their escape attempts.

Related

- Lauren Dolloff: The Oedipus Complex (2006/11/16)
- Jordan Peterson: Overbearing Mothers (2017/4/30)
- Very Well Mind: What Is the Oedipus Complex? (2022/5/20)
- Σ Frame: The Simp (2022/5/27)
- Oscar's comment on Oedipal Mothers (2022/5/29)
- Σ Frame: Bastards (2022/9/9)

- Σ Frame: Misplaced Motherhood (2023/5/22)
- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Athaliah (2023/11/16)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Power to Create vs The Power to Destroy (2023/12/8)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Proactivity (2024/1/22)
- Σ Frame: How Feminist Mothers create Feminist Daughters (2024/2/28)

Joker

Oscar · 11 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A devoured son embraces evil.

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

The Story

Joker is a 2019 comic book character origin story directed by Todd Phillips and starring Joaquin Phoenix.

For those who think that comic books and comic book movies are kids' stuff, allow me to assure you that this movie is NOT for kids. In fact, it's barely a comic book movie. It feels as though it started out as a stand-alone story, and someone read it and thought "Hey, this would make a great origin story for The Joker!"

But it's more than that. Much more. This is a dark, DARK story, much more so than most fans realize, I think.

The story is set in the early 1980s in the fictional Gotham City, which stands in for every decaying, crime-ridden American big city. There is garbage everywhere, because the city sanitation department is on strike, echoing the 1981 New York City garbage strike. No one cares about anyone but themselves. The only person who appears to have any hint of optimism is Thomas Wayne (Brett Cullen), a billionaire philanthropist who is running for mayor. Yes, that's Bruce Wayne's father. Bruce (Dante Pereira-Olson) makes two brief appearances, but he's a child, so there's no Batman.

The titular character (definitely not a hero) is Arthur Fleck, played by a starved Joaquin Phoenix. Arthur works for an agency that hires out clowns for parties, events, advertising, etc. Arthur's dream is to be standup comedian, but he's held back by mental illness and his relationship with his mother.

And that's where things get dark.

The story is mostly told from Arthur's perspective, and Arthur is crazy, so he is an unreliable narrator, but we get glimpses of reality through the news, documents, and other characters.

The Insanity

Joker is one of the most anti-single-mom movies I've ever watched. Arthur's mother — Penny (Frances Conroy) — parasitizes Arthur. I don't know if the filmmakers did this on purpose, but Joaquin Phoenix's skeletal figure is a great visual representation of what Penny does to him emotionally. She's sucks the life out of him. We learn from documents that Penny's boyfriends abused Arthur when he was a child, which caused the mental illness that causes Arthur so much pain.

There is one iconic scene in which Arthur is dancing madly down a long, broad staircase strewn with rubbish and surrounded by rough stone walls. It is a vivid allegory of his descent into darkness.

Arthur's final descent into evil begins when he k!lls three men on the subway (that's in most of the trailers, so it's not a spoiler). Arthur believes he k!lled them in self defense, but he's an unreliable narrator, so we don't know that to be true. The k!lling inadvertently starts a movement of young men rioting in clown masks that imitate Arthur's clown makeup. Eventually, Arthur embraces this movement and becomes its leader.

Arthur is a Son-Husband that escaped his devouring mother by embracing masculinity in the form of violence, evil, and chaos. This is more than just a fictional storyline. Many Son-Husbands, starved of masculinity, turn to violent criminal gangs as the only source of masculinity available to them.

The Epilogue

2019 seems like a lifetime ago, so it's easy to forget about all the controversy that surrounded this movie when it debuted. Arthur was an !ncel who became violent, so the argument was that it would inspire !ncels in real life to become terr0r!sts.

Obviously, the feared !ncel apocalypse never happened. Surprise!

However, Arthur's story did resonate with many young men. It grossed over $1 billion with only a $55 million budget. This shouldn't surprise anyone. Young men grow up under the female thumb, raised by single mothers and taught by female teachers, only to be told that they are oppressors and all the world's evils are their fault.

Of course they're angry. Who wouldn't be?

Joker is an excellent film. I can't think of a single bad performance. It's disturbing and sad, but has enough humor sprinkled in that it's not a slog. Even though Arthur is no hero, he is a sympathetic character, so his descent into evil fills the viewer with conflicting emotions. There's no happy ending, but it's still a weird kind of triumph for Arthur.

I see Joker as a cautionary tale that warns against single motherhood, and the wrong way for a Son-Husband to escape his devouring mother.

Joker is currently streaming on Max and Amazon Prime.

Related

- Σ Frame: Who will Take Care of Men? (2023/8/2)

The Effects of Bad Mothering

Jack · 13 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A mother who models dysfunction instead of healthy relational habits may incite rebellion in her children and thus have adverse long-term effects.

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 2,500 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes

Intro

If bad fathering can cripple a child's psyche, so can bad mothering.

We have an understanding of the effects that bad or absent fathering can have on children.

- Sons fail to develop masculinity and grow into mature manhood.
- Daughters become insecure attention seekers who loosen their boundaries in their search for a sense of security and the masculine love they didn't get from their fathers. Some turn to promiscuity or create a meretricious online presence, or else become masculinized women themselves to try filling this void.

However, there hasn't been as much coverage on the effects of bad mothering. This post will help fill this information gap.

But before I delve into that, let's first describe what a good mom looks like.

A Good Mother's Influence

In general, a good mother teaches sons and daughters how to relate to people and the world at large in a constructive, efficacious, healthy, and winsome manner. She adds the 'heart' to the home, and brings life to the rote.

Good mothers help children learn how to take responsibility for their personal weaknesses, how to think constructively and creatively about desires, and how to maintain good relationships with others. They put the 'Passion' into 'Compassion' and teach children how to sincerely love themselves and others.

The most important thing a young man can learn from his mother is the Spiritual Power of submitting to (his father's) Authority — how the family and home is blessed in a multitude of ways through her support of his father, and how having grace, humility, and an open heart are essential to all these things.

A good mother is rather transparent about her motivations and may often explain the thinking behind her decisions. This helps a young man learn how to deal with the emotional undertones of his decisions that fathers don't often address.

Another benefit of having a good Mom is that it allows a man to recognize really bad women and mothers without having to invest a wasted effort in getting to know them better and still not knowing any different.

Moreover, a man who was blessed by having a decent Mom is leagues ahead of a man who did not.

Jack's Testimony

Oscar has written four posts about Son-Husbands and Devouring Mothers to be posted in January. (One pilot post, and 3 film reviews.) Perhaps by divine providence, reading Oscar's essays induced me to revisit how my own mother has affected me, and I've found I still have much to learn about this — and I'm 52 years old. God!

You see, my mom was a devouring mother and she tried to make me into a Son-Husband.

I was conceived while she was on birth control, and she continued to menstruate and didn't know she was pregnant until she went to a doctor to find out why she was gaining so much weight. (The same thing happened with my sister 8 years later.)

She refused to breast feed me when I was an infant ("too embarassing", "too much trouble", "too painful", etc.) and because mother's milk contains the antibodies that I didn't get, I was a sickly child as a result (~4 dozen allergies and asthma). She was exasperated with having to care for a sick child and so when my younger sister was born, she decided that breast feeding her would be less work.

At the age of 4, she would conspire with others to deceive me and force me to receive anti-allergy injections against my will. Every Saturday, the neighbors would come over and they would chase me all over the house until they caught me, and they would hold me down while my mother administered a shot. Many times, I ran away to avoid this situation, and so they ended up chasing me all over the neighborhood. Yeah, I was 4 years old. For years, I had nightmares of being surrounded by evil gremlins who would, with taunting sinister glee, puncture my body with needles and force me to take drugs.

When I became curious about sex at the age of 8, she sternly warned me never to have sex outside of marriage, threatened to disown me if I did, and told me that if I ever got a girl pregnant out of wedlock then I'd be damned. This scared the sh!t out of me.

My parents' relationship gradually deteriorated as I grew older. By the time I grew past adolescence, my mother favored me over my father. When I was a teenager, she often wanted to have long 'talks' in which she encouraged me to talk about my feelings, desires, and emotions. It made me feel very embarrassed and self-conscious.

A Child's 'Righteous' Rebellion

While growing up, I always had the strong impression that my mother's influence was preventing me from being my healthy self, making friends, and having a normal childhood. I didn't know how or why at the time, but looking back, I can see that my pre-adolescent intuition was more or less correct.

I figured out that there was something very evil about all this when I was very young — I don't know when, maybe as early as 7, but definitely before I was 10 — and I hated her for this. I reacted to this by fighting against her passive-aggressive soft-controlling influence.

Even as a 7-year-old child, I remember pointing my finger at her and telling her off whenever she had a heated or prolonged argument with my father. I distinctly remember loudly commanding her to "Stop fighting!" with all the rage I could summon.

I stonewalled her when I felt she was shifting into control mode. I holed up in my room and locked the door to avoid her whenever she came looking for me to 'comfort' her after these arguments, or to 'reassure' her of our relationship, or when she wanted to 'console' me after I had some difficulty at school. Once, she got the key to my room to let herself in, and my father caught her in the act. I still remember hearing his voice on the other side of the door sternly warning her, "Don't do it! If you do it, he'll never trust you again!" Fortunately, his words deterred her from her intentions, but I still didn't trust her. That was broken and gone long before I could even remember.

And, it seemed like I got a spanking from her every week whether I needed it or not, which only deepened my resolve.

Nevertheless, despite all my childish 'righteous' rebellion, I could not escape the curse of having a devouring mother. I wasn't a simping Oedipal 'Mommy's Boy', as Oscar and Jordan Peterson described. I was the opposite, whatever that is.

Dr. Peterson described it as "hypermasculine" for lack of a better description, and I think "hypermasculine" fits.

Case Study 1 — My Brief Stint as a 12 Year Old G@ng Lord

I was a g@ng lord in middle school. It was easy to do. I found some guys in school who were severely disadvantaged in some way; dirt poor, low intelligence, super ugly, or very unpopular. I approached them and asked them, "Hey, do you want to join my gang?" Man, you should have seen their faces light up! It was like they saw Jesus coming in the clouds! I gave them comradery, a purpose for living, a sense of belonging, and a shelter from their constant rejection. I gave them POWER! I could tell those guys to do anything, and they'd do it, no questions asked. I mean ANYTHING. I never had to lift a finger. And they went far beyond my expectations — too far.

To this day, I am saddened to think about what those guys did under my command. We inflicted genuine fear throughout the school and busted* a couple of guys for life. Eventually, I was transferred to another school so as to break up the gang.

I have repented of this, but it took an act of God. You see, I was in a car accident at the age of 14 in which I almost died. I witnessed the death of my mother's father who was driving. I saw angels come to take his soul and to save my life in the same action and moment in time. I am dead serious. I had no pulse at the time I arrived at the surgeon's table, but the doctor was so overwhelmed with compassion that he operated anyway. I'm missing some internal pieces now, but I lived. It was a miracle, and this turned my life around. I was no longer afraid of death, or power… or people (i.e. my mother).

Part of the reason that my life turned around after that car accident is because the fear of losing me put the fear of God into my mother and she started LEAVING ME ALONE.

When I recovered and returned to school 2 months later, I went from barely passing to a straight A student. Everyone treated me differently too. I felt grateful for my life. I felt loved by people. I felt loved by God.

 To be clear, I mean their confidence was permanently destroyed. I saw them years later as an adult, and they were so pansy @ss emasculated it was pitiful.*

Effects

Back to the topic, as you can see, this is just as bad as an effeminate "Mommy's Boy", but in very different ways.

I tend to be too formal, too cerebral, too structured, and I have difficulty with empathy. I've had a habit of bossing people around. I started a gang in middle school that was so disruptive that it eventually got me transferred to another school. I've even told my bosses what to do and how to be a better boss. I don't care about money, or popularity, or fitting in. I don't give a rat's @ss about people's 'feewings'. "Just do it!" I just want peace and order and structure, and to get things done, and done well. Anybody who is an obstruction to this, for whatever reason, is an obnoxious problem who needs to be put into their place and be forced or induced to conform and produce, or else ostracized if they can't, don't, or won't. "This is the way God made it" and "You can F_ck off RIGHT OVER THERE in the dusty @ss corner if you don't like it!"

A while back, Deep Strength once pointed out that I failed to recognize a woman's greatest positive effect on a man — her influence. I perceived that he was right, but I still had no idea what that positive influence might be.

My pastor once told me I was "missing an emotional chip" (striking an analogy of a computer memory chip). Recently, I prayed for more understanding of this and I got the idea that my bad relationship with my mother made me "disabled" or "handicapped" in a spiritual sense. (Within hours after I prayed, I met a man on the street who had no arms and was selling candy. It was obvious to me that this was an analogous answer to my prayers.) Praying more, I realized that I am unable to know who I truly love, or who truly loves me. I prayed some more about this and I came to see that my deep distrust of my mother had somehow blocked me from identifying the types of women and specific women who would have fit me best as a wife. God revealed to me who some of these women were, but looking back, it was like I couldn't "see" them at all in a romantic sense. They just seemed like 'friends' to me and I never got the idea for anything more. It just never occurred to me.

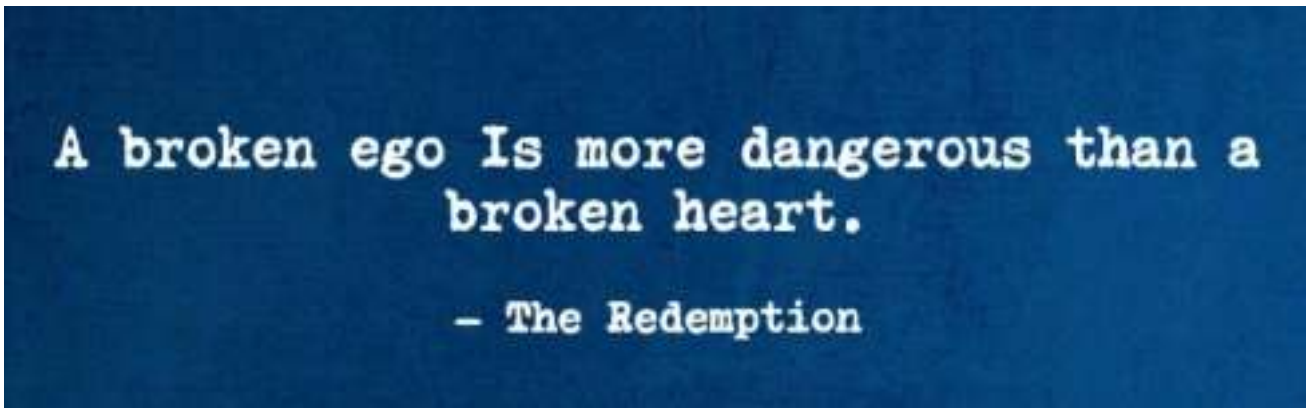
Yet in contrast to what you might surmise from all my sins, I am a very compassionate and protective individual, believe it or not. In fact, this feeds into, and motivates my dominance. Ironic, but true.

Concluding Statements

After reading Oscar's essays and pondering on it and praying about this, I came to see how my childhood matches the "Devouring Mother" and "Son-Husband" archetypes, in that order, i.e. my childhood and then adolescence, respectively. More specifically, I was the sub-type that rebels against a controlling, devouring mother and becomes 'hypermasculine'. But I couldn't see this as a child. At that time, all I knew was that something was very wrong, and I knew it had something to do with my Mother, but I didn't know what.

I decided to forgive my mother a long time ago, but it seems like forgiveness isn't enough to right the past, find redemption, or get healing. What's done is done.

I've also gathered that this distrust of my mother is why it has been very difficult and so slow for me to reach spiritual maturity — a Dunning Kruger effect. (In short, this means that people are unable to advance or succeed because they can't identify what their problem is and so they cannot take action on it.)



Anyway, that is my inner nature. But by faith and the grace of God, I'm able to channel this energy into more productive avenues. Since then, I have found more constructive ways to express this dominating side of my nature — as a professor commandeering the classroom, and as a Manosphere blog host.

Case Study 2 — I'm Nobody

Commenter imnobody identified himself as a recovering Son-Husband. He wrote a comment describing the huge effects it has had on his life.

> - Constant guilt for not making my mother happy.
> - Incredible guilt when she died last Christmas and I was not able to arrive to the hospital and see her conscious.
> - Inability to decide, and regrets when I have decided something, sometimes for years.
> - Problems with interaction with other people.
> - Problems with women.
> - Not having male friends.
> - Hate from my sister with no reason.
> - Envy from my father.
> - Moving to another continent to flee the overprotection and the family dynamics (9,000 km.).

With the exception of the first two, I can identify with all these points, though things have gotten better as I've grown older. Interestingly, from my childhood until grad school, I had feelings of worthlessness, like imnobody's username implies about him. So that's one more thing to add to the list — a poor self-esteem arising from a broken ego. I'll guess that these effects are common for Son-Husbands of Devouring Mothers.

Related

- Σ Frame: Misplaced Motherhood (2023/5/22)
- Σ Frame: How Feminist Mothers create Feminist Daughters (2024/2/28)
- Σ Frame (Jack, TheDeti): Are immoral women a product of an immoral culture, or vice versa? (2024/8/27)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Necessity of Motherly Virtue (2024/12/13)
- Spawny's Space: They Are Good, And The World Is Wrong. (2024/12/31)
- Catacomb Resident: Can We Admit? (2025/1/1)
- DefytheE's comment (2025/1/11)

Loneliness

Jack · 15 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

An emptiness of the soul.

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 850 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Loneliness

Loneliness is a mysterious thing. Sometimes, we can be all alone, and yet be completely content in the undisturbed serenity of the moment. At other times, we can be in a crowd of people, or with a group of good friends, or in a relationship or even a marriage, and still feel intense loneliness.

Perhaps this is the reason why Loneliness is hard to identify. One can feel lonely and not be aware of it. Loneliness doesn't tell you that you're lonely. There's no fear of NOT connecting with others. You may not even have any desire to see someone in particular or to interact with others in general. Instead, you're only aware that you feel anxious, restless, and tense. You can't stay focused. It's difficult to get down to work. You can't seem to make yourself do what you had set out to do for the day. You might have recurring thoughts of guilt, or regret, or self-doubt. "Is this all there is to life?" Satisfaction is elusive, even though you may have done a good job or have just finished an accomplishment. You might be aware enough to understand that you're having another one of those days that drags out and is hard to get through, but still not realize that you are lonely.

What is Loneliness?

Loneliness is the empty God-shaped hole in a man or woman's heart.

Loneliness occurs when one is not experiencing enough of God's presence on a daily basis. Too many days without God and/or meaningful human interaction, and loneliness begins to set in. If continued, this loneliness drives an individual to ever greater depths of depravity and self-destruction in an effort to assuage that nadir of emptiness.

More broadly, loneliness occurs when one is not fulfilling their God ordained purpose in life.

Loneliness also occurs when an individual is not able (or willing) to feed on the daily bread of human connection, love, and affection for an extended period of time. This time frame is different for everyone, and tends to decrease with age. For some, it could be 2 hours, while for others, 2 months. Over time, this hunger for love and affection gnaws away at the soul, as if to whisper, "This life is short and you're wasting it away."

How People Deal with Loneliness

People deal with loneliness in different ways.

The standard default cope for chronic loneliness is to be so occupied with other things that you don't notice it.

Some people who are intensely lonely may become workaholics, or sleepaholics, or sexaholics, or churchaholics.

It is not uncommon for people who are intensely and perpetually lonely to cultivate some kind of addiction to divert the pain, whether it's alcohol, p0rn, overeating, watching TV, binging on old films, gossiping … or maybe something harder or stiffer.

Young lonely women become OnlyF@ns nymphos who are ever writhing but never satiated. Older lonely women make love to their wine bottles and patronize a menagerie of furry critters.

The reason why some women just can't live without a man is because they'd be as lonely as hell without one. Without that one man to rack herself upon day and night, her fragile heart would disintegrate into hopelessness and s1uttery, and she knows it.

For married women, the ever looming specter of loneliness puts the Dread into Dread Game. That same loneliness can also dupe more foolish wives to divorce their husbands and destroy their families, thinking that the next Ch@d might fill that hole in her ~~loins~~ heart.

Younger lonely men turn to gaming, or shooting p0rnography. Older lonely men might just pull the trigger.

Busyness

Busyness is an essential element of loneliness, because if one were to remain quiet and still for even a few moments, then one will hear the still small voice of the Lord crying out for that which is missing, and speaking of that which hurts most — the acute, painful awareness of their loneliness.

This is not to say that busyness is all cope. Busyness is healthy for the most part.

If a man has people to see, places to go, and things to do every day, that's a healthy life. I encourage every man to get out of the house early in the morning and do something, even if it's only a 15 minute walk around the neighborhood or a thoroughly detailed survey of his backyard. Personally, I enjoy taking a bicycle ride to the park. Once a week, I'll ride my bicycle to a bakery that makes high-quality bread and buy some bread for the week. Twice a week, I'll go to the gym. It is a good discipline to do something every day.

It's those silent moments of the day (or night) that reveal to one's conscience whether the day's tasks have either been fruitful, or restful, or wasteful, or anesthetic.

In these moments of stillness, we must observe, seek God, learn, correct course, and try again the next day. With prayer and God's grace, a lonely person can eventually get turned around in the right direction.

Related

- Σ Frame: The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)
- Σ Frame: How to be Happy, No, Really (2024/4/19)
- The Thinking Ape: Male Loneliness (2025/1/10)

Vectors of Loneliness

Jack · 17 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

When you feel lonely, do you know why?

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 1,750 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Intro

The previous post on Loneliness (2025/1/15) stated that Loneliness can be diffuse and hard to identify.

Half of the solution is knowing what the problem is.

For this reason, I've put together a list of conditions, situations, and states that may cause one to experience loneliness. If you are/were lonely and you are/were having trouble identifying the source(s) of your loneliness, then you need to check this out. If you see something below that you have experienced before or while feeling lonely, chances are good that it has contributed to your loneliness.

Identity-Based Vectors of Loneliness

- Old age
- Divorce
- Having a weak or broken ego.
- A death or the loss of a loved one or a child.
- A man losing his job or being out of work for too long.
- A woman not being able to keep a man or have a child.
- When one is not fulfilling their God ordained purpose in life.
- Having unresolved 'soul questions' about one's identity, one's purpose for living, the meaning of life, etc.

Individual Vectors of Loneliness

- Illness, especially prolonged illness.
- Being confused to the point of misery.
- Unrequited desires, especially for love.
- A lack of love leading to hard-heartedness.
- Having one's sense of safety and security violated.
- Living on Autopilot and/or being frustrated, especially for a long time.
- Recalling memories of a traumatic experience or a sad time in one's past.
- Being controlled or manipulated or forced to do something against one's will.
- Not doing what is fitting and proper for you to do, whether you know what that is or not.
- Some men and women need sexual intercourse on the regular and will feel lonely if there's no action for too many days.
- Being under heavy expectations or pressure or stress, especially when you are not sufficiently able or equipped or skilled to perform well, and/or when it is long enduring with no timeframe of completion, and/or when you are unable to get adequate rest.

Relational Vectors of Loneliness

- Simply being alone for too long.
- Sexual withholding in marriage.
- Being the object of scathing criticism.
- A lack of heart-felt emotional intimacy.
- A lack of effective soul communication.
- Unresolved conflict, especially if it is enduring.
- Being abandoned or neglected, perhaps as a child.

- Not having (enough) quality time together with one's spouse.
- Being separated from a spouse and/or children, for whatever reason.
- For men, a lack of genuine respect. For women, a lack of heartfelt love.
- A baffling, waffling mixture of cruelty and kindness served up by those closest to you.
- Realizing someone close to you is much different than what you had always believed.
- Living with, or having to be patient with an angry, b!tchy, immature, prideful, or selfish person.
- Being misunderstood or being unable to express one's self in a way that others can understand or relate to.
- Betrayal, e.g. being set up in an unfavorable situation, exposing or ridiculing your weaknesses, telling others about your private matters.
- Being excluded or rejected or replaced, e.g. a break-up, not being invited to a party, someone else is selected for a favored position or promotion instead of you, etc.
- Anger, especially another person's anger towards you that you feel is excessive, misplaced, or unjustified. Moreso if the person is someone you live with or work with or see on a daily or weekly basis.

Generational Vectors of Loneliness

In general, these could be referred to as Generational Curses.

- Divorce.
- Parental divorce. In this case, loneliness may be long enduring, perhaps for decades.
- Children separated from one or both parents.
- Inner Vows (e.g. "I WILL NEVER do what my father did to me / be like him, etc. !!!")
- Having a Devouring Mother.
- Having an Insecure Attachment Style.
- Some people actually choose to be lonely because it feels familiar and they are more comfortable with it. Also, they may not be aware that they're making this choice.

Spiritual Vectors of Loneliness

- Idolatry.
- W!tchcraft.
- Unrepentant Sin.
- Lust, P0rnography.
- Sinful pride, arrogance, etc.
- Fear, especially fears of the unknown.
- Cumulative sexual promiscuity (Loneliness may not appear until years later.)
- Living in a pagan society, or being away from Christian fellowship for too long.
- Being subjected to temptation, especially severe temptation for a long period of time.
- General distrust, or an inability to trust someone in particular, especially one close to you, i.e. spouse or family member.
- One is not experiencing enough of God's presence on a daily basis, e.g. not enough Bible reading, Christian fellowship, meditation, prayer, rest, etc.
- Poor habits and addictions, e.g. alcoholism, masturbating, overeating, viewing p0rn, watching TV, binging on games or old films, gossiping … or maybe something harder or stiffer.
- Being intimidated by destructive, harmful, or violent people, such as bad neighbors, a mean boss, a burglar, a street gang, etc. (This could have longitudinal effects.)
- When others are apathetic or indifferent, e.g. when an accident or a crime occurs and no one steps up to help, or when you had a bad day or experienced a failure, and no one expresses any empathy. Worse, they might feign moral superiority or tell you it was your own fault.

In general, one is not able (or willing) to feed on the daily bread of human connection, love, and affection for an extended period of time, due to curses, bad habits, sin, spiritual strongholds, etc. This time frame is different for everyone. For some, it could be 2 hours, while for others, 2 months. Over time, this hunger for love and affection gnaws away at the soul, as if to whisper, "This life is short and you're wasting it away."

Alternations

There is another generalized source of loneliness that I'll call an "Alternation", which is more commonly referred to as a "Mood Swing"*. This is when one's emotional state is rapidly alternating from one extreme to another. Alternations can have causes and effects that range from, and transfer to physiological to social to spiritual. For example, a personal weakness or emotional trauma or spiritual immaturity can induce a mood swing, while mood swings often repel others who don't want to deal with the resultant stress, eventually resulting in dysthymia, loneliness, etc.

- Boredom vs. rollercoaster drama.
- Broken hopes or disappointed expectations.
- Making comparisons, being compared to others, either by yourself or others.
- Listening to melancholy music (e.g. tinkling piano) vs. energetic, joyful, passionate music.
- Achieving a significant success vs. when others among your peer group are outperforming you.
- Seeing others who are deeply contented and joyful, and realizing that you're NOT that way, e.g. close friends, or characters in a book or a movie.
- Spending too much time with ill people (e.g. nurses with patients), lonely people (e.g. ministers with sinners), or immature people (e.g. teachers with children).

 The reason I'm making a distinction by calling this an "Alternation" instead of a "Mood Swing", is because "Mood Swing" refers to the observed undulating instability of one's emotions, whereas an "Alternation" refers to amplified social or spiritual fluctuations that introduce confusion and/or add emotional stress onto one's psych, thereby leading to feelings of loneliness, as well as increased anxiety, stress, and general unhappiness.*

Imbalances

Another generalized source of loneliness is what I'll refer to as an "Imbalance", for lack of a better term. This is when something becomes drastically different from the norm.

- Moving into a new home or domicile.
- Changing jobs, schools, churches, etc.
- A sudden windfall of cash or increased income, or a drastic loss thereof.
- Moving away from home and/or family, e.g. going to college, AKA being "Homesick".

- Moving abroad, changing cultures, subcultures, or peer groups, AKA “culture shock”*.
- Changing one’s social identity, e.g. “coming out of the closet”, falling ill for an extended time, getting a BF or GF, getting married, getting divorced, etc.
- A change of lifestyle away from the familiar norm, e.g. controlling one’s diet, losing weight, having a newborn infant, starting a new habit or quitting an old one, etc.
- Chemical or hormonal imbalances leading to changes in mood (perhaps including mood swings but NOT necessarily an alternation as described above), e.g. hormonal birth control, post-partum depression, testosterone diminishing with age, etc.

 IME, the first two months after moving to a new country, home, job, location, etc. is the ‘honeymoon’ or ‘vacation’ period. After that, a sense of insecurity and vulnerability creeps in and reaches its maximum nadir at around 4 months. My interactions with scores of international students indicates the average worst period of culture shock is around 4 months after moving to another country, but ranges from 2 months to 8 months, some as long as 1 year, but few of these will stay.*

Closing Statements

Overall, there seems to be a link between disappointment, frustration, life changes, and the brokenness of sin, and the effects of loneliness. Indeed! Upon studying this topic, I’ve found that change itself is responsible for loneliness. Perhaps this is why people are so resistant to change. Also, coming face to face with the truth makes us more honest with ourselves, or at the very least, allows us to recognize root causes within ourselves. This deeper self-knowledge brings an acute awareness of just how broken and isolated we are as human beings — an awareness that we experience as loneliness.

Different people have varying sensitivities to any of the above vectors, so these may affect different people differently. For example,

- Unhappily married or divorced men and women might identify very different causes of their loneliness.
- Some people can entertain a bevy of romantic partners and feel quite content, while others would feel desperate, exasperated, and frustrated.

- Some men and women literally cannot function without a regular sexual partner, while others can go months or years and never feel distress or loneliness.
- Some people, upon leaving home for college, will become homesick to the point of being physically ill or will engage in faithless behaviors out of desperation, while others may not experience any longing whatsoever.

Finally, if there are several of the above vectors appearing concomitantly, then this will amplify the resulting sense of loneliness. For example, an abortion involves a sin of commission, the loss of a child, and a betrayal of some sort. Divorce involves a plethora of factors. So it can be fully expected that these situations would invariably lead to loneliness and despair for anyone, just as they do.

The important thing is for YOU to know how various situations affect YOURSELF, and to devise strategies to avoid, cope, counteract, or deal with the effects.

Readers are invited to add other vectors to these lists.

Related

- Σ Frame: The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)
- Σ Frame: How to be Happy, No, Really (2024/4/19)
- Σ Frame: Paradigms of Faith (2024/4/22)

Collateral

Oscar · 18 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A devoured son learns good from evil.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Young Men
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 550 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

Collateral is a 2004 action thriller directed by Michael Mann and starring Jamie Foxx and Tom Cruise.

The first time I watched the movie, I enjoyed it for its action, realistic gun handling, and smart plot. The second time I watched it, I realized that the movie is a study in contrasting masculine archetypes.

Max (Jamie Foxx) is a Devoured Son. He dresses sloppily in ill-fitting clothes that make him look homeless. He's socially awkward. He drives a taxi for a living, which unlike himself, he maintains meticulously. He has a dream of starting his own limousine service, but he keeps putting off his dream year after year. His excuse is that "It has to be perfect", but the real reason is clear — Max is afraid to take the risk. Perfectionism is oftentimes an excuse to not do things we're afraid of doing. The signs are there from the start, but it becomes obvious that he's a son-husband when we meet his mother. There's no mention of his father.

Vincent (Tom Cruise) is a dark triad man. He's literally a grey man, impeccably dressed in a grey tailored suit, with just-right grey stubble, and grey hair. He's a professional assassin who travels to Los Angeles to eliminate five targets. He hires Max to take him to each target, but things go wrong immediately. Like Max, Vincent makes a detailed plan, but unlike Max, Vincent believes in "good enough". He quickly improvises and adapts to whatever circumstances get thrown at him. He readily assesses his environment, changes tactics, and takes calculated risks. Vincent doesn't see people as people. To Vincent, everyone is an object. Some objects are targets to be hunted down, some objects are tools to be used, and some objects are obstacles to be negotiated. Vincent can change from charming … to deadly, like flipping a switch, depending on what the situation calls for in the moment.

Obviously, Vincent is evil. He's also masculine. At one point, Vincent tells Max about his overbearing, abusive father. There's no mention of Vincent's mother.

Max is a good man, he's just not very good at acting like one. His chance encounter with Vincent, and the life-and-death situations Vincent imposes on him force Max to discover and embrace aspects of masculinity he never knew he possessed.

This is a great example of Jack's thesis that good men can learn from bad men. Max is forced to learn from Vincent how to improvise and take risks. In one scene, you can see him asking himself, "What would Vincent do?" There's even one scene where Vincent confronts Max about the lies he tells concerning his dream of starting a limousine service. Vincent taunts Max, but in the process he gives Max solid advice. The viewer gets the impression that if Max were to keep his moral compass, but develop Vincent's sense of mission, he'd be a formidable, virtuous man.

I'll stop here because I don't want to give too much away. Suffice it to say that this really is a great movie.

You can currently watch Collateral on Netflix, Amazon Prime, Apple TV, and Paramount Plus.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Abusive Criminal / Thug (2022/5/29)
- Σ Frame: A Summary of Faux-Masculine Archetypes (2022/5/30)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Activity (2024/1/27)

- Σ Frame: Esoteric Masculinity (2024/4/8)
- Σ Frame: Being Dominant vs. Being Domineering (2024/11/25)

Greg Adams on How The Manosphere Destroyed ITSELF

Jack · 19 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Greg Adams maps out the schisms in the Manosphere / The Red Pill and discusses how censorship, content pirates, and the shift to video format has affected The Manosphere 2.0.

Readership: Men
Theme: Special Post / Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 200 words
Reading Time: 1 minute + 1 looong video

I want to draw readers' attention to a podcast from Greg Adams in which he goes over some of the history of and many of the problems within the Manosphere.

Regular readers will recall that I wrote extensively about this topic, Problems with the Red Pill, from March to July last year. Problems with The Red Pill — Summary (2024/7/31).

At 2 ½ hours, it's pretty long, and I've only started listening to it. But from what I've heard so far, Adams has come to some of the same conclusions I have — that men in the Manosphere have vastly different and conflicting perspectives, and there is no solidarity or larger purpose. I also wrote about the schisms arising from differences of opinion about how Red Pill knowledge is to be interpreted and implemented. My perspectives on this topic were predominantly philosophical and phenomenological, but Adams maps this out demographically and goes further to discuss how censorship, content pirates, and the shift to video format have affected the Manosphere 2.0.

I'll probably come back here to add some comments and takeaways after I've finished listening to it.

Coach Greg Adams: How The Manosphere Destroyed ITSELF (2025/1/19)

Commenter Lord_Vanns provided the following list of topics and timestamps. (Clicking on the timestamp links will take you to Adams' YouTube channel.)

0:00 | Show Intros

2:46 | It's Showtime!

5:26 | Today's Topics

7:52 | HOW TO SEND $$$ to Greg Adams and support his channels.

8:10 | The History of The Coach Greg Adams Channel

12:04 | Topic #1: The Anti-F3minist / Manosphere Framework

22:13 | Topic #2: This Is How Censorship Destroyed The Manosphere

38:47 | Topic #3: Content Pirates Destroyed The Peak Of The Manosphere

54:45 | Topic #4: Lack Of Creativity By Content Creators Destroyed The Manosphere

59:44 | Topic #5: Competition Between Content Creators Destroyed The Manosphere

1:09:12 | Topic #6: The Manosphere Was Destroyed By Weak Men / R3d Pill Ragers

1:18:01 | CGA Rants #1: CGA Roasts The Losers & Mitches

1:22:25 | Superchats

1:27:09 | CGA Rants #2: CGA Goes Scorched Earth On The Goofy Azz Ninjas

1:29:56 | Superchats Cont. (I)

1:31:58 | R3d Pill Content Creators Will Ignore CGA's Message Because Of THIS

1:39:40 | CGA Rants #3: CGA Drinks The Tears Of The Mitches

1:42:06 | Superchats Cont. (II)

1:44:41 | The R3d Pill Space Did More Damage To ITSELF Than Outside Creators

1:50:13 | Superchats Cont. (III)

1:56:48 | R3d Pill Ragers HATE To See Men In The Manosphere Win

1:59:57 | CGA Addresses The Full Story of the 21 Studios Convention & CME Beef

2:07:57 | The Manosphere Will NEVER Become Legitimized

2:14:27 | Superchats Cont. (IV)

2:16:12 | The Losers And Mitches Have No Power In The Manosphere

2:21:08 | Superchats Cont. (V)

2:28:29 | Show Outros

Related

The New Face of MGTOW

Jack · 20 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Has MGTOW disappeared, or has it grown into something much bigger yet mysteriously nameless?

Readership: All; Single Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

Since the advent of Men Going Their Own Way (MGTOW) ca. 2014, the Manosphere has struggled to define this social phenomenon in succinct terms. It seemed like every man had his own opinion of what MGTOW was all about.

Many Manospherians had the impression that MGTOW included men who never marry and never intend to get married, or who avoided or refused marriage on principle. It was assumed that each man has his own motivations for doing so, but the main reason they all share is that "the juice isn't worth the squeeze" for whatever reason. Early on, it was widely assumed that such men are invariably !ncels, and there was much evidence for this being true for the most part (for a time), but this has since been revealed to be a slanderous MGM spin. Beyond this, the details have remained nebulous.

A long while back under a previous post, Sexual Authority (2020/9/30), we had an insightful discussion about the definition of MGTOW.

Kentucky Head Hunter argued that the rising popularity of MGTOW was because…

> "Feminism does nothing to empower men."

…implying that men were searching for something else that would, e.g. MGTOW, MRA, etc. But for many men, these venues just don't cut the cake.

Then Jeff gave us some revealing insights about MGTOW.

> "…there is a significant proportion of MGTOW men, particularly those of the top 20%, who are in fact engaging in dating and hookups. These men can do this up to the ripe age of 40, but then many continue on the MGTOW journey and avoid marriage. Feminism hurts women but in a way empowers the MGTOW man. You say: There's no incentive for the top 20% of men to go MGTOW. I would disagree and say that the MGTOW truth is that there's no incentive for the top 20% of men to get married. You are falling for the feminist narrative that all MGTOWs are !ncels. This is done because women are afraid that good quality men, even those in the top 20%, will see the power of the MGTOW lifestyle. Jack is right that the MGTOW movement has feminists waking up to reality."

Kentucky Headhunter offered an alternate definition of MGTOW.

> "I would consider top 20%-ers who pump and dump with no thoughts of marriage to be "players"… and not really MGTOW…
>
> [Jeff is] conflating not getting married and being MGTOW as being the same thing. They are not. The top guys don't have to promise commitment of any kind, let alone marriage to get sex. […] They shouldn't marry either as they also eventually suffer the same fate as normie betas, re: divorce r@pe, etc. …
>
> I know that there are lots of decent, strong, skilled, and even fairly attractive guys who have chosen MGTOW or MGTOW adjacent lifestyles because they are smart enough to see the risk / reward situation out there for what it is."

Both men have good points. But actually, Jeff was NOT looking to argue about the definition of MGTOW. His point was that there ARE top 20% SMV men who abstain from marriage but NOT sex, and SOME of these men identify as MGTOW. KHH inadvertently affirmed this in his statement above.

What is MGTOW?

To clear up this confusion, it helps to recognize that MGTOW is a self-identification and/or a personal philosophy that is different for each man, but all share the common principium of flipping off the gynocentric life scripts and mainstream feminist narratives, including those proffered by the converged church. (BTW, this reaction is a common outcome of taking the Red Pill. MGTOW is just one such outcome.) Once a man has resolved to diverge from the cultural dictums, then his Purpose comes into focus, and that Purpose is unique to each man.

Whatever a man has been given in this life — his SMV, sexual opportunities, social status, and whether he desires marriage and/or family or not — are all personal traits and values that figure into each man's personal life equation and feed into what "Going His Own Way" means to himself. Of course, this is different for every man, and this may very well be the origin of all the confusion over what MGTOW is all about.

Case Study — "Married" MGTOW

I know some men who have, by all appearances, gotten 'married' in the 'natural' / Biblical sense. They cohabitate with their 'wives', they have sex every day, they have children together, they stay together long term — just like a 'normal' / traditional family — BUT they DON'T have a big wedding and they DON'T sign any marriage papers — because they know as soon as they do, the woman will get antsy, itchy, and uppity, and then the fairy tale family is over.

Conservative Christian hawks might judge such men as being faithless, immoral, or 'non-committed', but in reality, this is exactly how marriage transpired for all of history up until the Council of Trent in 1563. IMO, these men are dealing with the reality on the ground in a wise, efficacious way that still conforms to the Biblical model of marriage. The only real 'problem' with this approach is that it stands at odds with the modern model of marriage which is set up to favor women — a very non-Biblical reality.

Back to the topic. Are they MGTOW? According to the definition given in the previous section they are, but they're not at all like the stereotypical MGTOW.

Can you imagine that maybe, just maybe, our concept of Men doing their own thing and following their own purpose in life has been corrupted by debased gynocentric MGM propaganda? Maybe MGTOW simply means that a man must break from the debased, anti-Christian 'norm' and exercise wisdom and discretion in making his own decisions about how to live his own life in an environment that is decidedly anti-male and especially anti-male authority.

Conclusions

To concisely summarize the main points raised above…

1. NOT all MGTOWs are !ncels. Some are Top Thads.
2. There's no secular incentive for the top 20% of men to get married.
3. NOT getting married and being MGTOW are NOT the same thing. (That argument works both ways, with some overlap.)
4. Feminism does nothing to empower men short-term, but eventually leads to a different sort of men's empowerment in the long-term, as we are now seeing.
5. Sticking to God's ordained order, whatever that might look like, offers more blessings than playing by the Worldly System's rules.

Related

- Σ Frame (TheDeti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill as a Socio-Sexual Phenomenon (2022/9/17)
- Σ Frame: Discerning the Lies (2023/2/6)
- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Connecting the Dots (2024/5/10)
- Σ Frame: The Logic of WGTOW (2024/6/14)

The Rise of Middle-Class MGTOW

Jack · 22 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

MGTOW is no longer limited to basement dwelling, mouth breathing !ncels.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Author's Note: This essay was contributed by Frank Chalmers. Submitted on 2024/11/11.
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes + 1 video

Intro

We don't hear too much about MGTOW anymore, but in fact, it's bigger than ever before. It's just that men have better things to do than to commiserate about it online and they have the dignity to NOT identify themselves with an old label that others consider loserish.

So what does MGTOW look like now?

I recently watched this video that I thought offered an interesting examination of how MGTOW has gone mainstream. It never uses the label "MGTOW" for these men, but that's exactly what this video is about.

How Money Works: Why 10 Million Men Have "Given Up" on Work (2024/9/27) Length: 12:45

A Socio-Economic Slump

Predictably, these men are only receiving attention here because of what they're NOT doing or giving.

For all that is said in this video, yet people won't quite acknowledge the root problem or call it out as such. The narrator indirectly blames government assistance, the opioid epidemic, and the gig economy all being reasons men are underemployed, but only devotes a minute or two (starting at the 8:20 minute mark) to what the Manosphere would say is the root problem — men will only work long hours and make money if they have a wife and family, but a lot of men can't get a family. The thing is that there are jobs out there, especially blue-collar ones, that desperately need workers, but we men don't care if we have nothing to work for.

My Own Story

For years, the Manosphere and social analysts attempted to estimate the number of MGTOWs in society. Well, according to the reports in the above video, now we have a number. It's at least 10 million. IMO, it might be as high as 30 million if you include men who are duly employed but are still living on easy mode, viz. they're NOT maximizing their potential.

Like myself.

I've made 6 figures for 4 years now, and as a 27 year old, that's pretty good! My tenants likewise earn $60K+/year and are good at their respective jobs — certainly a contrast to the men the narrator talks about. But both me and the other young men I rent spare bedrooms out to aren't pushing the boundaries of our careers despite our capabilities to do otherwise. While we all wish we made more (and who doesn't?), none of us are particularly motivated to do so. Why not? It's because our respective jobs are fairly easy, the pay is "good enough", and we're comfortable living with friends. Only one of us is in an LTR, and we've all discussed how we would have worked harder if we thought there was a realistic possibility of getting a high-quality wife when we were in college/early career stages. (I alone am a consumer of Manosphere content.)

It's only one step removed from the men discussed in the video… and we are all high IQ individuals who could (and arguably should) be doing a lot better career-wise.

But why should we?

Middle-Class MGTOWs

While I recognize the arrogance and braggadocio of the last paragraph, I highlight our accomplishments (or lack thereof given the potential) to illustrate that MGTOW is not just men at the bottom anymore.

It makes sense if you think about it. We men naturally trend towards sloth if we have no driving force, be that our faith, our family, or our future. This bent towards ease and comfort is not limited to low SMV men or working class men. It affects all men who have no motivation to achieve more. And since middle-class men are doing just as poorly with women and marriage as the simps and the guys living paycheck to paycheck, now it's also men in the middle who are happy to be under-achievers because we don't see the point in doing more.

I mean, since I wasn't married younger and don't foresee that happening in the future, then why would I need to push beyond a comfortable salary? If my buddy can rent a room from me for less than $1K/month, why go back and get an MBA to make $200K?

Women simply aren't interested if you aren't flaunting that cash, so there's no need to make more than you need. And we don't want women who just want us for our money. Not the women these days, anyway. It's not worth the hassle and risk.

A Spiritual Home Revival

While what I've written so far is a more or less secular commentary, the reverse can be seen in our focus on our spiritual lives. We are all deeply involved in our respective churches, often taking on responsibilities that would net us significant pay outside of religious institutions should we apply the same level of commitment to our jobs.

These endeavors are richly satisfying to us, and not just in the temporal realm as having a wife and family or having a prestigious job and money might be, but also deeply fulfilling in the eternal sense. We have found the joys and spiritual liberties of singleness, as St. Paul described.

> [32] I want you to be free from anxieties. The unmarried man is anxious about the things of the Lord, how to please the Lord. [33] But the married man is anxious about worldly things, how to please his wife, [34a] and his interests are divided.
> [35] I say this for your own benefit, not to lay any restraint upon you, but to promote good order and to secure your undivided devotion to the Lord.
>
> 1 Corinthians 7:32-35 (ESV)

Faith has given each of us a driving force and purpose bigger than ourselves — just NOT one that benefits women or the wider economy.

Vi Et Honore.

Related

- Σ Frame: "Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest." (2022/4/27)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill as a Socio-Sexual Phenomenon (2022/9/17)
- Σ Frame: Discerning the Lies (2023/2/6)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The most successful strategy is NOT perfectly altruistic. (2024/1/9)
- Σ Frame: Esoteric Masculinity (2024/4/8)
- Σ Frame: The Absence of Actionable Knowledge — Part 1 (2024/5/13)

We're still a long way from Conservative Values

Jack · 24 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

What does that even mean?

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Note: This screed was brought to you by a discussion under The New Face of MGTOW (2025/1/20).
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

What are Conservative Values?

Oscar brought my attention to a discussion happening on X.

Matt Yglesias wrote a newsletter in which he asked,

> "…what are [conservative] values?"

> "On a policy level, the Trump synthesis is pretty similar to the Bush synthesis: right wing cultural values and sporadic gestures of economic moderation, but mostly low taxes and indifference to pollution.
>
> But on a values level, is the new vibe going to bring back marriage promotion? Is America going to re-Christianize? There's an endless internet discourse about "tradwife" influencers, but the fact is, Trump has appointed more women to his cabinet than George W. Bush (and the first-ever woman chief of staff). We've gone from protesting JCPenney for hiring Ellen to Trump tapping a g@y Treasury Secretary, and it's not even noteworthy. Do Trump-Voting Zoomers want to ban abortion? To privatize Social Security and Medicare? Or are they voting Republican in part because they believe these are settled issues and see the focal point of politics as something else entirely? And if it's the latter, are they correct in that calculus?"

The Shift Towards Conservatism is Only Half-@ssed

Liz Wolfe wrote a Tweet in response to Yglesias.

> “Contra Matt Yglesias’ newsletter, I really don’t think it’s all that hard to understand why the kids are shifting rightward, or what cultural + policy preferences this amounts to. When you’ve been fed an original sin gospel by nature of your status as a white male, you at a certain point grow disdainful and come to reject it. When you see your cities ransacked in the name of fighting police brutality — which the “experts” said was fine as a one-time exception to the otherwise-pervasive lockdowns to control a virus that minimally harms you — you begin to wonder whether this actually helps minorities, and whether this is actually the level of public order we seek to maintain, whether our laws mean nothing.
>
> My hunch is that, by and large, young people who have voted for Trump want slightly better cost of living — rent prices, food prices, ability to get education without going deep into debt — and, mostly, to be left alone by the hectoring scolds in the expert class and the little lackeys they’ve bred via academia, who’ve gone forth into a hundred different industries and multiplied like hydra heads. To have cities where you can expect to have the police show up when someone has committed a crime against you. To have genuine choice — both actual ability to pursue the lives they want and the freedom that comes from these choices not being culturally deemed heretical — to pursue the things that will fulfill them without being looked down on by fourth-wave feminists or vast swaths of the other gender.
>
> Maybe these are my own blinders, but I mostly believe that people want a touch more “live and let live”, that we’ve been in a cultural moment where the laws are, socially, quite permissive but where the culture is profoundly judgmental about any more “traditional” choice or path. I don’t think that implies any wild policy changes; I think the shift toward Trump by young men was probably just a repudiation of Democratic Party cultural messaging, along with a little grouchiness about how goddamn expensive rent is.
>
> Also, honestly? I think the gospel of “America was once great, but we’ve lost our luster, we must get back on track, we must pursue excellence again and take pride in our accomplishments” probably sells, […]. Biden’s flaccid infrastructure focus sort of gestured at that same theme, but in a very half-assed way that didn’t resonate.”

Jack's Observations / Conclusions

All this talk hovers over the target, but they're not even touching on the more fundamental imbalance in the West, which is the societal-wide transgression that Thedeti pointed out (once again).

> "Today, women are in the power position and men are now the Second Sex. Men's natural dominance and power are being artificially suppressed while women's natural sexual power is the currency of choice. This has produced men who aren't attractive enough for anything; and the normalization of women's character defects. (Our society in fact has codified women's character defects into national policy. Female character defects are now the foundational basis of US law and public policy.)
>
> Today, a man "going his own way" is a survival necessity. He must put himself first. If he doesn't, he's dead. Men simply don't have a choice now but to be ruthlessly selfish and self-interested."

All the chaos and confusion that Yglesias, Wolfe, and others have been buzzing about is a DIRECT RESULT of the Institutionalized Hypergynocentrism that Thedeti describes. How can you expect civility, reason, order, and structure in a society that orbits the ever shifting sands of feminine caprice (e.g. DEI, No Fault Divorce, and everything else that's been discussed here ad infinitum)?

Christian Manosphere blogs like Cane Caldo, Catacomb Resident, Christianity and Masculinity, Dalrock, Radix Fidem, and Σ Frame have been saying these things for years. We keep banging the drum, but will they ever listen?

No. Anything is better than women being held accountable, and without that, nothing will improve. So instead, it's "Let's take one more walk down The Babylon Way™."

Until so called 'conservatives' pull their heads out of the sand and deal with this problem, it will just continue to spiral further out of control.

And who will take up the slack? Boomers are finished. Xers have their hands tied. Millennials are swimming in quick setting cement. (Look at the talk from Yglesias and Wolfe for example.) The future of the West all depends on whether Zoomers and GenAlphas will recognize the real problem for what it is and do what must be done.

Executive Summary / Addendum from TheDeti

There are the political and economic realities that Yglesias and Wolfe were debating; and then there are the sociosexual ones that Oscar and Jack are inserting into this. Both are important, but the sociosexual ones are probably more important because politics is downstream from culture, and culture is composed of society writ large and small.

Socially, men have had it to the back teeth with an entire society that does nothing but careen from one emotion to another. One of the reasons men are so baffled now is because they have no idea how to act or what to be in a society that cannot think; it can only feel and emote. Women are running things now, the inmates are in charge of the asylum. Trump's election is being accepted as a symbol that maybe, just maybe, we need a better warden for the asylum. My marriage used to run on feelings; and when you do that, the wife is "in charge". You just can't have that.

Politically and economically, Wolfe touched on it, more or less. We're not really getting more "conservative". Rather, "conservatism" is being redefined further left, as in "not as batsh!t crazy woke as you crazies".
Just "liberalism that obeys the speed limit." "Don't worry — you all can still have sex with whomever you want", which is really the goal here. "Women can still share attractive men, and all other men can use the OASIS, and no one's going to say anything about it." We're not going to "reChristianize" as a country; that ship has sailed and it's not coming back. Rather, what's going on is more putting the brakes on "woke" — "You've gone too far. Dial it back some, guys."

Related

- Σ Frame (TheDeti): Heads in the Sand (2023/11/3)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): The Reality (2023/12/23)

Secondhand Lions

Oscar · 25 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Masculine mentors rescue a son-husband.

Readership: All; Single Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 600 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

Secondhand Lions is a 2003 family-friendly coming-of-age comedy directed by Tim McCanlies and starring Haley Joel Osmet, Michael Caine, and Robert Duvall. I usually include the trailer at this point, but the trailer gives far too much away.

Secondhand Lions is mostly set in 1960s West Texas, although we're not told exactly where. Walter (Haley Joel Osmet) is a 14-year-old son-husband described as a "sissy boy". His devouring mother, Mae (Kyra Sedgwick), drops him off with her uncles, Hub (Robert Duvall) and Garth (Michael Caine) McCann (note the similarity with the director's last name). Hub and Garth disappeared in 1914 and suddenly returned to Texas in the '60s. There are all kinds of rumors about where they've been and what they've been doing all those years, but the one consistent rumor is that they have a fortune stashed away somewhere on their farm.

Mae — whom relatives describe as "a lousy damn mother" and "that loose widow woman" — supposedly dropped off Walter so that she could attend the Fort Worth College of Court Reporting, but in reality she wants Walter to find the stash while she goes for another ride on the carousel.

Unexpectedly, Garth — the younger and less cantankerous of the two McCann brothers — begins to tell Walter stories about where he and Hub were for 50 years. According to Garth, they fought in WWI with the French Foreign Legion, then had all kinds of adventures in North Africa. Thanks to his great-uncles' mentorship, Garth learns to embrace agency and masculinity.

I saved this review for last in this series because the previous two movies I reviewed are pretty dark, especially Joker. By contrast, Secondhand Lions is much more cheerful and hopeful, and I wanted to end this series on a positive, optimistic note. This is one of my favorite movies to rewatch with my kids, and although there is some off-color humor, it's goes by quickly enough that little kids don't notice it. The scenes where Garth tells Walter about his and Hub's adventures in war and fighting slavers in North Africa are depicted through Walter's imagination, so the violence is bloodless and cartoonish. It's more comedic than scary.

Despite all that, the movie deals with a surprising number of heavy subjects. Mae is an immoral, selfish single mother, even though she's a widow. She only considers her own needs, neglecting Walter's needs. Predictably, Mae is attracted to abusive bad boys. Relatives squabble over the McCann brothers' rumored fortune. Hub suffers from unresolved grief, and both the McCann brothers struggle with finding meaning and purpose in old age after a life filled with war and adventure. They may be safe now, but they're bored. As Garth says, "A man's body may grow old, but inside his spirit can still be as young and as restless as ever."

In the end, Hub and Garth teach Walter what it means to be a man. People — especially children — learn mostly through observation and imitation. Consequently, no woman can teach a boy, or a young man, what it means to be a man. Only a man can do that. Ideally, that would be his father, but not everyone is so blessed. In such cases, a young man needs mentors – surrogate fathers. Secondhand Lions makes that point in a humorous, cheerful, lighthearted way which helps the message get through to younger children without being preachy. The abundance of slapstick humor keeps young children entertained, while the heavy subject matter keeps adults thinking.

I highly recommend Secondhand Lions for families with kids of all ages. You can find Secondhand Lions streaming on Amazon Prime.

Related

- Σ Frame: Son-Husbands and Devouring Mothers (2025/1/10)
- Σ Frame: Joker (2025/1/11)
- Σ Frame: Collateral (2025/1/18)

MGTOW's and Non-Tingly Respect

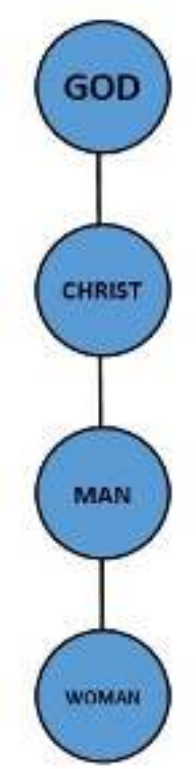
Jack · 27 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Men shall be respected, with or without the Tingles!

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

The Curse of Feminism

The natural order places the sexes in a hierarchy, with men in a place of authority, and women in the place of submission. However, due to the curse of the Fall, women find it tempting to usurp men's authority — in the home, in the church, and in society.



Feminism, having its roots in ancient pagan idolatry, appeals to women's addiction to choice, implements the prideful moxie of self-empowerment, and encourages women "to rebel against 'The Patriarchy'", as it is oft said. Thus, Feminism fully embodies the manifestation of the Curse of Eve on a culture-wide scale, thereby presenting an alternate paradigm in which women are encouraged to reject their place in the natural order, to declare themselves "equal" to men, and to place their own ambitions and personal goals on par with those of men.

Thus, Feminism has enabled and tempted women to shrink away from the time-honored Tingly Respect model, which was purported to be a "double standard" sans honor, riddled with 'abuses', and characterized by female discontentment (according to The Narrative™). Not only women, but also most men, e.g. White Knights, and even the church, AKA Churchianity, have rolled over to be fully sodomized by the Courtly Love model embraced in fairy tales and ubiquitous in Holeywould.

The resultant inversion of the power structure has brought disastrous consequences for marriage and family.

The Red Pill has Planted the Seeds of Anti-Rebellion

People will tolerate very poor leadership and social structure for a long time, but when the state of society has degraded to a situation in which a majority of individuals are unable to live a somewhat normal life marked by domestic peace and order, and slow or at least intermittent progress towards personal goals, then that is when we see rebellion begin to foment against the established social order.

Except in the present case, it is a rebellion against the prevailing rebellion — an Anti-Rebellion.

Thanks to the Red Pill, Men have woken up to the false inversion of authority imposed by Feminism. As the number of men who willing support the rebellion of Feminism slowly recedes, the shackles of feminism become more chafing for women. This has allowed many younger women to realize that feminism has done little more for them than take them out of the food-filled kitchen and comfy abode of home, and put them into the corporate meat grinder, and with considerably less social security and a smaller benefit package.

And by their own stupid choice, no less.

This revelation has exposed the fact that feminism is an institutionalized misogyny that teaches women to hate femininity, to hate themselves, to hate other women, and to hate men too.

Thus, as a result of the Red Pill going mainstream, it has slowly become evident that the Patriarchal Tingly Respect model that was previously prevalent in society before the so called “Women’s Liberation” in the 1970s, was in fact, a better and more Biblically astute model, especially in terms of women’s happiness, marital longevity, and social stability. Thus, younger generations (i.e. late Millennials and those after) are now (re)discovering the purpose and value of the natural gender hierarchy that was ordained by God — a Biblical truth that has been assiduously suppressed since the Sexual Revolution of the 1960s — the absence of which has led to the degradation of family, marriage, and the overall quality of life.

Moreover, the pendulum has passed its maximum amplitude and has started swinging the other way, in terms of the power structure and preferred narrative.

This brief summary of the recent developments in the Western social order brings me to the point of this post.

Could MGTOW's be Following After the Tingly Respect Model of Courtship?

In general, the MGTOW movement is a modern reaction to the decadence of feminism, and as such, it is a form of rebellion against the status quo of the defacto female leadership in society. But at the same time, it could be argued that they are returning to the basics of what it means to be a man. That is, men are doing their own thing, Men Go Their Own Way, and thereby, women are relegated to the role of a pursuer. Of course, certainly not all women will pursue, and not all men will be pursued. But overall, the sexual dynamics of this ontology are recast into something more befitting of the better Biblical examples, such as Ruth and Esther.

Removing the Tingle comes at an expense to Women, and not so much to Men. Nevertheless, Men shall require Respect to be forthcoming, with or without the responsibilities of having a woman in TOW.

In concise terminology, by assuming responsibility over their own lives, MGTOWs have made the following equation true.

Tingly Respect – Tingle = Respect

All this is to say that men are choosing respect over women, and they're flipping the long phalange at them on their way out the back screen door. Men would rather live free, even if it means they are utterly alone and unloved, than to tolerate the burden of a rebellious feminist b!tch's disrespect. Respect is THAT important to men!

Women who refuse to offer respect to men, Tingles or not, are essentially autorejecting themselves.

Women are their own worst enemies.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Objectivity of Offense Constitutes Respect (2018/5/6)
- Σ Frame: Tingles = Respect (2018/10/6)
- Σ Frame: On Womens' Response to MGTOW (2021/7/19)
- Σ Frame: Respect makes all the difference! (2022/8/17)
- Σ Frame: Restoring Respect (2022/9/28)

- Σ Frame: Understanding Respect (2022/9/29)
- Σ Frame: Are Men Responsible for Women's Behavior? (2023/2/1)
- Σ Frame: Discerning the Lies (2023/2/6)

Joshua 1:1-9 is NOT a Bootstrap Speech

Red Pill Apostle · 29 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The new form of Inner Game.

Readership: Men; Single Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Author's Note: Coauthored with Jack.
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Boomers and Bootstraps

Oscar wrote,

> "If you keep telling men that they have agency in their lives, the hope thieves will accuse you of making Boomer bootstrap speeches."

Bardelys the Magnificent wrote,

> "…the bootstraps speech, no matter who is giving it, is not a one-size-fits-all. Most modern men are not a pep talk away from making it. Sad, but true. I have sympathy for these men, and try to help them, even if it's just an internet "I got you, fam"."

Amen!

The following video from David Huberman is a good one to watch in light of BtM and Oscar mentioning Boomers and Bootstraps a few times.

Trending: There is Something David Goggins Knows Nobody Else Does, Andrew Huberman (Experiments Reveal) (2023/8/8) Length: 6:55

About his subject, Huberman says,

"… [David Goggins] was living in New York and I said, "Wait a second… Where are you?"

He said, "New York."

And I said, "It's 3:30 in the morning!"

And he goes, "Yeah, I'm going running of course…"

Then Huberman has a life-altering epiphany.

> …and I realized at that point, I was like, "Okay, you know there it is … it's undisputable … you know this guy lives the persona that he projects into the world."

> "…whatever it is that David has figured out how to do, it clearly involves taking whatever adrenaline pulse he feels and understanding something fundamental to biology, which is that that adrenaline response was designed to move us, NOT to keep us stationary. He uses Behavior as the way to shift sensation, perception, feelings, and thoughts. He understands how to run that program in the right direction, whereas most people, when they don't like what they feel, they start negotiating sensation, which will never work. They start trying to control their perception, which is hard. They're like, "I'm not going to think about that" or "I'll think about it differently." It's very hard to control the mind with the mind. He knows that's a tough one. Yeah, feelings. Lord knows what those are and how to control them. I mean, we'll eventually figure that out as a field; but thoughts are complicated, so he just goes immediately into action."

At 6:28, Huberman says,

> "…when it comes to wanting to shift the way that you function to get better or to perform better or to show up better or to move away from things like addictive behaviors, it's absolutely foolish for any of us, me included, > to think that we can do that by changing our thoughts first. It's behavior first, and then thoughts, feelings, and perceptions follow."

In summary, the main idea being conveyed is that IF we change how we act, our thoughts and perceptions change to follow along with those habits.

Be Strong and Courageous!

The big takeaway here, and the reason why I cited this discussion from Goggins and Huberman as a pertinent example, is that changing how we act, with the expectation that our thoughts and perceptions will change to follow along with those habits, is an act of FAITH and OBEDIENCE to the Lord.

Huberman's observations of Goggins match the instructions God gave to Joshua exactly.

> [6] Be strong and courageous, for you shall give this people possession of the land which I swore to their fathers to give them. [7] Only be strong and very courageous; be careful to do according to all the Law which Moses My servant commanded you; do not turn from it to the right or to the left, so that you may achieve success wherever you go. [8] This Book of the Law shall not depart from your mouth, but you shall meditate on it day and night, so that you may be careful to do according to all that is written in it; for then you will make your way prosperous, and then you will achieve success. [9] Have I not commanded you? Be strong and courageous! Do not be terrified nor dismayed, for the Lord your God is with you wherever you go."
>
> Joshua 1:6-9 (NASB)*

Comprehensively, the lesson we can take away from this passage is that there is an order to do things.

1. Take action! "Be strong and courageous!"
2. Think about what you're doing. Be mindful of the scriptures.
3. Work out the issues that come up and don't give up until you are successful.

The Order Matters!

Some people are waiting around for chance to strike or for conditions to be perfect. In the meantime, they'll busy themselves doing and thinking about other things. They may look very active and busy indeed, but in the end they're slackers because they're NOT addressing nor making progress on the things that matter most in life. Instead, they're just losing ground and wasting time. They're failing to do (1) first.

Armchair philosophers sit around thinking about what to do, and they never find a "solution" that they believe is worth acting upon. They're doing (2) first.

Other guys have a correct concept of what is important, but they'll run around fighting fires and trying to patch up every little issue that comes up. Although they might hold the ship together, they never make any progress in the larger scheme of things. They're doing (3) first.

Granted, a man who does (1) first is going to face the limitations of the flesh and step into some sticky situations, maybe even fall into temptation, but that is to be expected. In fact, that may be the exact reason why God tells us three times in Joshua 1 to be strong and courageous!

Wisdom in Purpose

Perhaps the trickiest part of deciding whether or how to take action in a particular context is in discerning the nature of the suffering that is involved and knowing how one should respond. You see, ANY choice is somehow going to involve some kind of suffering, whether it is suffering for righteousness' sake, or suffering the guilt and regret of inaction, or for opportunities lost or squandered, or suffering a fool's lot in life. Knowing the difference can inform one whether to Endure, Fight, take Flight, Fold, or Wait. The proper response all depends on what type of situation we're facing and the sort of decision that is being made. If one cannot pinpoint the purpose of the action and the reason for the suffering, then one may be confused about how to respond appropriately. Our response is important because if we do not respond appropriately, unnecessary suffering may be prolonged and then becomes more destructive than redemptive.

Conclusions

Gentlemen, the inconvenient bitter reality that most men don't want to face is that suffering will come sometime, eventually — whether it is now or later. It is a FACT that Suffering is unavoidable, but we can choose to suffer for the right reasons and reap the benefits thereof.

The value of a bootstrap speech is to encourage one to suffer for a gainful purpose, to be determined and vigilant in this endeavor, and to adopt / retain healthy habits.

The limitation of a bootstrap speech is that sometimes, no matter what or how much we might do, we may not get what we want. Even if we raise the bar on our self-standards, it may or may not change our outward life conditions. Words are indeed powerful, but we cannot rightfully expect that a few bootstrap speeches will elevate a man's consciousness beyond his ephemeral state and thereby grant him an additional 2-3 SMV points. Unfortunately, life doesn't work that way, and it helps to be aware of this.

The Lord's admonishments to Joshua, and by extension, to us living today, is NOT a bootstrap speech. It is a charge to pull yourself together and get busy living. Whether or not you are successful, whether or not you are getting what you want out of life, it shouldn't stop you from being the best man you can be.

We cannot live full lives by living for ourselves either; we must do it for the Lord.

> [23] Whatever you do, work heartily, as for the Lord and not for men, [24] knowing that from the Lord you will receive the inheritance as your reward. You are serving the Lord Christ.
>
> Colossians 3:23-24 (ESV)

We cannot stop with the bootstrap speech. We must go one step further. We must go Meta, and then get on with the show.

Related

- Σ Frame: A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame: The Spiritual Confusion of Clinging to the "Rules" (2021/3/24)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Unpacking and tying together the meta-levels of Christianity, reality and the red pill into a hierarchical understanding: theological, scientific, and philosophical/cultural (2021/3/29)
- Σ Frame: Taking Headship by Force (2021/5/26)
- Σ Frame: Identifying Your Spiritual Domain (2021/12/1)
- Σ Frame: The Male Hamster InAction! (2022/4/13)
- Σ Frame: The Battle Within (2023/4/10)

The Wake Up Call

Jack · 31 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Will MGTOW make a dent in feminism?

Readership: All; Single Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

The Influence of Top Stud MGTOWs

Going back to Jeff's comment that was written under a post long-ago, we have to admit that he has a valid point. If you think about it, the idea that a secular top 20% SMV man would remain celibate in today's SMP is a ridiculous presumption. A man like this has a choice of either getting married, or else he can spend his whole life running up lots of women's N counts. As marriage becomes more abused, more risky, and more unpopular, there will naturally be a greater segment of that 20% that will forego marriage altogether and opt for the steady stream of sluice.

Long-time readers of the Manosphere will fondly recall that Dalrock wrote many hilarious posts about how feminism fails because "weak men are screwing feminism up". "Weak men" being those who won't "man up and marry those h0es". But now, it's not just "weak men", it's most men.

And as TheDeti described in his essay On Womens' Response to MGTOW (2021/7/19), this is exactly what scares the $#!t out of women — NOT that any of the bottom 80% men might become MGTOWs, many of whom are !ncels anyway, but the idea that that ONE Ch@d might get away. Because no matter what their religious beliefs or sexual history might be, all women who hope to marry at some point in their lives want to lock down a top 20% man, even if only to have cute kids and/or a better return on divorce gr@ping him.

In summary of what has been written by the Greats, a top 20% man refusing marriage, either on principle (c.f. going MGTOW), or a general lack of interest, has several high-impact collisions with the female psyche.

- It upsets the belief that a man will always be waiting to marry them after they've exhausted themselves on the carousel.
- It casts doubts on their Life Script expectations of "sticking the landing".
- It means it will be harder for them to "stick the landing" and doing so will require them to settle HARD.
- It ruins their hope of marriage to a 'winsome' man.
- It destroys their sense of security.
- It erodes their brazen confidence to enjoy their "season of singleness" (sleeping around).
- It relegates those hopeful (and promiscuous) women to be nothing more than creamy-dreamy pump-and-dump slores and thereby puts them to shame.
- It pushes them to be totally self-reliant sl@ves for The Big Corp™ and to live at the mercy of the government dole. Yes, this "independence" (from men) is exactly what women have been saying they want, but the SIW lifestyle is not nearly as appetizing if it's the only option they have.

The Wake Up Call™

In sum, the essence of The Wake Up Call™ posed by the MGTOW movement (which is not so clearly articulated by players who avoid marriage), involves the revocation of the most damaging forms of feminine power combined with the pressure of having to assume personal responsibility for their decisions. The lurking specter of being held accountable for their actions is what has wayward women shaking in their pantsuits and seeing Red.

But will women ever actually wake up?

Back in 2020, KHH argued that…

> "Feminists never wake up, they just continue to blame all their problems on men HARDER. "It's weak men's fault that feminism doesn't work." "I'm now a 38 yo fat, ugly cünt, with an N-count over 100 and no hunky millionaires want to marry me! Men are such @ssh0les!"

3-4 years have passed since these earlier discussions. We are now seeing evidence that some women ARE waking up. The most obvious is the Trad Wife movement because this is a positive response, but also, Zoomers are observing Karens and Cat Ladies and have put 2 and 2 together. Thus, many of them are showing more wisdom and discretion about sex.

There have been many other negative responses that don't really 'register' on men's radar. These include a daily deluge of PSA screeds, denying men sex, the rage over MGTOW and the Passport Bros, a booming pandemic of escorting / OASIS / etc., and the 4B / WGTOW movements. For most women, anything is better than facing the truth and/or being held accountable.

Conclusions

To concisely summarize the main points raised above…

1. NOT all MGTOWs are !ncels. Some are Top Thads.
2. NOT getting married and being MGTOW are NOT the same thing.
3. There's no secular incentive for the top 20% of men to get married.
4. Feminism does nothing to empower men short-term, but eventually leads to a different sort of men's empowerment in the long-term, as we are now seeing.
5. Most women (i.e. feminists) won't change their patterns of behavior because of The Wake Up Call™ posed by MGTOW, but a few of them will.

Related

- Σ Frame (TheDeti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): On Womens' Response to MGTOW (2021/7/19)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill as a Socio-Sexual Phenomenon (2022/9/17)
- Σ Frame: Discerning the Lies (2023/2/6)
- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Connecting the Dots (2024/5/10)
- Σ Frame: The Logic of WGTOW (2024/6/14)
- Σ Frame: Studless in Seattle : Competition in a Corrupted Shrinking Market (2024/9/5)

Vice : What does it mean to be a Man?

Jack · 3 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Reviewing Vice's debate on modern masculinity.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Young Men
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes + 43 minute video

Vice's Debate on Modern Masculinity

The following video made a big splash when it came out 2 years ago. Let's review this and see how it's aged.

Vice: "Be A Man": Modernists and Traditionalists Debate Masculinity (2023/1/12)

Most of the participants are demonstrated leaders in some capacity. Some of these men are very influential.

The mens' names are given below with informative links added to the more noteworthy figures.

Front Row, left to right: Tahoe (New York), Paul Park (New York), Enosch Henry (Florida), Christian Walker (California).

Back Row, left to right: Griffin Maxwell Brooks (New Jersey), Dillon Carmichael (New Jersey), Casey Barker (Texas), James Killon (South-East U.S.), Andre Kim (New York).

Demographic profiles of the discussion panel:

- 4 Blacks
- 3 Wh!tes
- 2 Asians
- 3 non-stra@!ght men
- 7/9 from coastal metropolitan areas (my guess)
- 3/9 from New York

- 2/9 from New Jersey
- 2/9 from the South

As you can see, the demographics are NOT proportional to the U.S. population, but I suppose Vice was selecting participants on other factors, such as their widely varying perspectives on masculinity.

Enosch Henry (center) was an organizer for B L M in Florida. Whether or not you agree with his cause, that's definitely masculine.

Notes on the Discussion

Most of the men are totally confused about what masculinity is all about. None of them are very confident, nor do they really know how to be a man. Instead, there's a lot of shame and confusion about being men. They're even afraid to talk about, much less BE what they believe is a man.

A few men made the point that masculinity is a social construct based on the role men play in society. As long as everyone understands and agrees on that role then there is much more predictability, efficiency, and stability in the society. If that role is changed, or people don't agree on what it is, then we have a mess. IMO, that sense of solidarity is an important aspect of masculinity that has been lost over the past 20 years. Thus, there is no central principle of masculinity that all the men can agree on. IOW, masculinity is atomized.

Over the course of the discussion, all of the men made at least one good point IMO, but at the same time, all of the men were way off in some areas. Many times throughout the interview one of the men would say something that would throw me into total confusion. "Huh? Where did he come up with that idea?" It just didn't make any sense at all. Maybe Vice cut those statements out of context, or maybe I'm just experiencing their confusion vicariously.

I get the impression that Vice edited out a lot of what we Red Pillers would consider the best stuff, which these days is just about everything truthful. Instead, the conversation kept returning to media buzzword topics like t0x!c masculinity, p@tr!@rchy (in an archaic negative sense), 'validating' experiences, v!ct!m!z@t!0n, and so on. After a while, I got tired of hearing masculinity being discussed in this framework. Trying to adhere to these PC / W0ke social constraints are partly why none of the men can be confident in their beliefs about what it means to "be a man". I suppose that is exactly what TPTB intended.

Based Concepts of Masculinity Expressed

Most of the men kept it together and were respectful of each other (except Brooks and Walker, who IMO are the most similar in terms of their internalized sense of masculinity). I think this is one of the most outstanding displays of masculinity expressed by this group of men during the debate — each man knows where he stands, and does not get flustered or fold when faced with his archetypal nemesis.

The four men who expressed based / traditional concepts of masculinity were all seated in the front row.

Tahoe wisely expressed one of the few true traits of masculinity that is acceptable to the gynocentric masses.

> "Being a man is knowing when to be soft, knowing that you don't always have to run the charge. You can actually listen…"
>
> Tahoe

Park (the Asian man sitting in the front in the gray shirt) possessed the healthiest masculinity out of the entire bunch, IMO.

> "My take on masculinity is not about talking as much as doing. I think at its core, a man has to be efficient, competent, and be willing to do what it takes for themselves and their loved ones."
>
> Paul Park

Christian Walker (right) is the son of Herschel Walker (left), a U.S. senator from Georgia. Christian is an ultra-conservative pro-Trumper, and a vocal critic of the Bl@ck L!ves M@tter movement, labeling it as a “radical terrorist organization”.
Henry gets the part about responsibility, but he is more reticent about accountability.

> “I think what it means to be a man is responsibility. As a man, it can come with a lot of power, and with great power comes great responsibility, in short words.”
>
> Enosch Henry

Walker avoids any direct references to masculine traits, and instead expresses a reaction to the (then) current debate over “What is a Woman?”

> “What it means to be a man is to be an adult human male.”
>
> Christian Walker

At first, I couldn’t believe Vice had the temerity to seat Henry and Walker next to each other. But upon thinking it over, it makes sense. As radically diverged in political philosophy as Henry and Walker are, I suppose they’d more or less agree on what it means to be a man.

Uncertain Concepts of Masculinity Expressed

Three men expressed confusion or uncertainty about their concepts of masculinity. These men were all seated to the right in the back row.

Barker (the bearded man with the cowboy hat) obviously comes from a typical evangelical Protestant churchianity background.

Casey Barker is a conservative Christian social media content producer.

> "I was not always a good man. I was not always what you would call a healthy masculine man. And so as my life has changed, I've identified Five Points that I think make a truly masculine man masculine! I think Point number one is a man who walks with God. Point number two is a man who stands on principle. Point number three which is, a masculine man is self-sacrificing. So, someone who is willing to sacrifice for point four, the people that he leads; a true man is a leader. And number five, a masculine man is never a coward."
>
> Casey Barker

Barker's 5 points of masculinity sound good, but they ring hollow, without conviction, and they seem to evaporate out of his mouth. There's something missing from his masculinity. This is what the Beta Factory does to Christian men.

Killen is arguably the most conservative of the bunch, but he can offer no counterforce against the doubts about masculinity raging through society.

> "My name is James Killen, former United States Marine turned Air Force officer. Got a couple combat tours but I'm also a father of three girls who mellowed me out. The idea of masculinity is something that I find interesting because it is changing and I can actually see those changes in myself. And I think that's one of the reasons why I wanted to do this panel."
>
> James Killen

Kim has some solid ideas about masculinity, but he backs down and buffers himself against being identified with such ideas.

Andre Kim is a Korean-American Stand Up Comedian from Queens, New York.

> "My idea of a real man is someone that gets the job done and provides and all that. I don't even know what that means anymore. It just seems like everything is changing every day. It's like a new world order. I have a hard time keeping up with stuff, so I feel like tomorrow it's going to be something else and people are going to comment, be like, "You're wrong, dude! It's this now!" But it's hard to talk about some of this stuff because you feel like you might say the wrong thing. I'm not really masculine myself so I feel like I'm like the wrong person to ask."
>
> Andre Kim

Other Concepts Expressed

Two men expressed concepts of masculinity that are, to be frank, NOT very masculine IMO. These men were seated to the left in the back row.

> "I don't identify as a man. I'm non-binary. […] I personally just don't feel tied to the norms or the confines of gender at all."
>
> Griffin Maxwell Brooks

> "I think that the notion of masculinity is something that can be possessed by man or woman or non-gender conforming person. What it means to be masculine is changing and very fluid, but I think that masculinity is something that you embody based off how you show up in this world as a man and how you go about being your day-to-day…"
>
> Dillon Carmichael

Closing Statements

IMO, Park and Henry are the most in tune with their masculinity. Their shameless manspreading says it all.

I get the impression that most of these men are NOT very masculine in general. Some of the men do express what I would consider masculine traits, but their masculinity is compromised or suppressed somehow, e.g. carrying guilt / shame for being a man. For example, the two straight wh!te guys (Barker and Killen) apologize for being masculine. WTH?

Griffin Maxwell Brooks is a Jəw!sh former Division I diver and engineering graduate from Princeton University, best known for his T!kT0k videos focusing on comedy, fashion, and QTBGL social justice.
Take a look at any stillshot in the video that shows all the men on screen. In every shot, every man looks dejected, resigned, stoic, and/or emotionally withdrawn — except Brooks who doesn't identify as a man. Every man carries his own burden of being a man in a culture where masculinity is demonized. This is the consequence of the War on Men.

Lastly, watching this discussion reaffirmed something I learned just a few years ago — that one attribute of masculinity is having a healthy and well-adjusted ego, which few of these men have. Thus, it is interesting to note that Brooks has a rather healthy ego and therefore is, in fact, very confident in the way he speaks and carries himself, despite his feminized appearance, and even though he has nominally discarded his masculine identity. As much as traditionals might dislike hiz character (or whatever pronoun he goes by), there's something to be learned from him. Namely, that there is some virtue in not taking one's self too seriously.

Related

- Σ Frame: The 13 Harbingers of Masculine Doom (2022/9/7)
- Σ Frame: Biblical Masculinity vs Worldly Masculinity (2024/4/10)
- Σ Frame: The Stronghold of the Beta Factory (2024/9/2)
- Σ Frame: Authority vs Responsibility (2024/10/3)

The Two Mating Markets

Jack · 5 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Our romantic dispositions are rooted in developmental psychology.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Singles; Pastors; Mentors;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Intro

Since the beginning of The Red Pill 2.0 (~2020), there have been very few genuinely new insights or theories that have come out of the Manosphere. However, here's one theory that I believe is genuinely new. This idea originates from Adam Lane Smith and is discussed in the first few minutes of this interview hosted by Chris Williamson.

Chris Williamson: 17 Ugly Psychology Truths No One Wants To Admit — Adam Lane Smith (2023/8/31)

In the remainder of this essay, I'll cover ALS' explanations of how developmental psychology affects one's behaviors in the SMP, followed by the new theory that there are 2 parallel and non-intersecting mating markets.

[The transcript has been reorganized and edited for reading.]

The Effects of Sex are Different for Men and Women

ALS: Men and women are very different. [Women produce a lot of oxytocin during sex, while men have more dopamine. Oxytocin creates feelings of love and bonding, while dopamine elevates mood and motivation and gives feelings of pleasure and especially satisfaction.]

If a woman has an orgasm with a man, she's probably going to bond with him.

Sex with Low SMV Men: [This is one subjective reason why women are cautious about having casual sex with a non-Ch@d, in addition to Women's Existential Fear covered by Rollo Tomassi.] This is why casual sex is so difficult for women and especially maintaining a steady, platonic, casual friendship with a man after a Friends-With-Benefits situation has transpired. This attachment is why they'll turn Friends-With-Benefits into Situationships. They will start off agreeing to a casual sex or a FWB relationship, and then after a very satisfying sexual experience (oxytocin), they'll expect more from the man / relationship. You've probably seen this before.

Sex with High SMV Men: This is why women think that having sex with a [desirable high SMV] man on the first date will bond him to her in the same way. But that doesn't work with secure men or avoidant men. It really only works with crushingly insecure men who crave approval — men whom women don't want to bond with.

Men don't bond that way. They just don't. Men don't get the same kind of hormone release during sex that women do and men don't process it the same. For men, sex has a lot more dopamine. It's not the same level of oxytocin that women get. If there's already a bond happening (without sex), then having sex can be unitive. Sex may or may not make him love her more, but it will make him care for her more. It can increase his affection for her. It can increase the bonding, but the connection already has to be there. A woman cannot get a guy to fall in love with her simply by having sex with him. So this whole strategy of sleeping with a man on the first date so that he'll stay with her is built on a false understanding of male sexuality.

A False Cross-Sex Theory of Mind Arising from Poor Childhood Mirroring and Psychological Projection

CW: Women falsely believe that men are like women in thinking that "the only way that I would be able to sleep with somebody is if I felt very deeply about them. Therefore, if a man is willing to have sex with me, then this is how he must feel about me." Here, women are constructing a false theory of mind about men. In evolutionary psychology literature, it's called a "cross-sex mind reading failure".

ALS: You're very right. I believe this has to do with mirroring neurons, especially when we're little children. The amygdala and the mirroring neurons are the only structures that are fully formed at birth. Mirroring neurons allow infants to form psychological connections with others, e.g. mothers. Mom is supposed to be paying attention to us and looking at us and mirroring our expressions to her, so that we feel interesting to people just by existing. When we make a face, she mirrors it back to us, and we start mirroring each other. This is the way we learn how other people will respond to us. We come to believe, "I am enough." But if Mom doesn't engage in the mirroring interaction with her baby, if she's depressed, or she's tired, or she's exhausted, or she's working three jobs and is never there, or the child is in daycare all the time, or has had an NICU trauma, or various psychological issues, then our brain says, "Mom is not mirroring me" or "I can't get a response" or "I have to be interesting to get Mom's attention." This is where kids start acting out a lot, or they go inward and don't believe they can get any kind of response. Thus, the desire to elicit a response from Mom dies. At worst, the desire to even connect with anyone fades away.

The Effects

[Fast forward 20+ years to when this infant becomes a grown participant in the SMP.] So then, people are trying in dating to be interesting. They're trying to stimulate others in order to attract attention and create a connection.

When you hear women say, "I have to sleep with [a man] on the first date or he'll lose interest", her mother probably didn't mirror with her correctly, her father didn't mirror with her correctly, so she learned, "I have to be interesting and stimulating [to attract attention]."

It's the same thing for guys when they try to [monkey] dance for women's approval. It's the mirroring neurons all the way back. You've probably met guys like this, guys who try to be interesting instead of being real.

CW: I think there's a massive lack of confidence and insecurity around authenticity. There's all manner of rumor and half-truth and full-truth and no truth about vulnerability and when it's right to open up and when you shouldn't open up as a man. The more layers of Bro Science and half-remembered hearsay that you layer on top of an interaction, the more performative it becomes; the more Persona and less person there is in the interaction. The more that that happens, the less you actually feel connected with what you're doing because you're not connecting with another person, you're just playing a role. So even if you do get the outcome that you want, the person isn't in love with you. They're in love with this projection that you've given them. This is such a dangerous Catch-22 to fall into. I think it's the fundamental reason why the hardcore pickup World failed for men who were unconfident with women, because it taught them that the person they had to be and the person that they genuinely are, were so far apart. If I need to go through this massive rigmarole, saying inane fantasies like "Did you see the fight between two midgets outside?" Isn't that fake? If I've got to Neg her and twist the lemon [which may be too sour or not worth the squeeze], and if I've got to act as if I'm ignoring her and chat up her friend, and do all this B$… If I have to go through this complex rain dance to try and get a woman to go to bed with me, and that's NOT the kind of behavior that I would normally do, then what does that say about me?

ALS: Absolutely. You know, it's one of the problems of taking your cues from culture as opposed from yourself. Again, a lot of this could come from parenting problems too.

Two SMPs: Those who are 1nTeRe$t!ng vs Those who are Real

Having explained the supporting information, here's the new RP idea that I mentioned in the Intro.

At 4:52, ALS says [edited for reading],

From what I have found, there are two different dating pools and they don't flag or signal to each other at all. They have almost no crossover. They're not even aware of each other.

There's a Securely Attached group of people who want that direct human authentic connection. "We are together." "We are talking." "We're sharing this Bond." They don't want too much stimulation up front because it feels weird to them. They understand what a healthy connection is like, so they want the right bonding experience.

Then there's the Insecurely Attached pool where everybody is trying to be Interesting, 1nTeRe$t!ng,

"In.Te.Res.T!ng"! They're also dancing to the regimens of Anxious or Avoidant behaviors.

Mystery was one very InTeRe$t!Ng Pick Up Artist.

These two different pools of people never cross or interact. So when you see guys saying, "Every woman out there expects you to be eight feet tall and have an 18 inch d!ck, and you have to have 10 billion in the bank", and so on, then you know they're among the Insecurely Attached group. When you see women saying they want or must have those things, they're also identifying themselves as Insecurely Attached.

For the Securely Attached group, you don't need to have all those things. You don't have to dance for her amusement and endlessly play games or have Dread Game or control her. That's only going to work on those Insecurely Attached women in the other pool. It's never going to work on Securely Attached women. They will get up and walk away, because you're going to appear like you're on another planet or from another species. You will appear to be confused or disinterested in them, and they're going to track as confused or disinterested about you. Like I said, the two dating pools are segregated out completely (according to this model). It is wild to see.

Conclusions

ALS's "Dual SMP" model provides a psychological theory that explains why certain individuals fall for The Lie of Romantic Love.

It also agrees with Alain de Botton's explanation of why you will marry the wrong person.

In addition, it appears to correlate with the "Cooperate vs Defect Patterns" that Jim describes in The Three Magic Words (2020/8/7).

According to my previous studies of Attachment Style Theory and other psychopathologies, about 30% of people are Insecurely Attached for whatever reason. In conjunction with ALS's arguments above, this implies that the 1nTeRe$t!ng SMP pool comprises about 30% of the population, and the Real SMP pool is around 70% of the population. Interestingly, this 30% figure tracks closely with the average divorce rate, ~30% AND an assessment that about 30% of people have psychological issues stemming from childhood. I believe all these similarities are NOT a coincidence.

All these theories also provide explanations of why otherwise seemingly decent, moral individuals may find themselves perpetually unlucky in love and/or fall into bad form with certain others and/or in certain contexts.

This is precisely why I said Identifying Attachment Style is the New Game (2023/10/12).

Related

- Σ Frame: Identifying Attachment Style is the New Game (2023/10/12)
- Σ Frame: Attachment Style and Game (2023/10/13)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Rehab (2024/6/19)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): Son-Husbands and Devouring Mothers (2025/1/10)
- Σ Frame: The Effects of Bad Mothering (2025/1/13)
- Σ Frame: Vectors of Loneliness (2025/1/17)

5 Offenses of Being Unclean

Jack · 7 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A seemingly subtle but Life-changing condition.

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Author's Note: Written on 2024/6/20.
Length: 3,000 words
Reading Time: 16 minutes

Jack's Experience

I've always been in the habit of attending church, reading the Bible, and praying regularly.

I'd guess most Christian men are the same, at least those I've known personally. Well, some of them anyway.

But they can't get any traction within Christian social circles, especially not with younger single Christian women.

I was like this too when I was younger, up until my early 30s.

I shared applicable interpretations and deep insights of scripture, but hardly anyone took me seriously.

I organized social events, but no one attended. I thought it was because I didn't serve alcohol.

I prepared food for other events, but people did not eat much of what I had contributed. I thought I was a bad cook.

Non-Christians treated me better than most Christians, and I wondered why.

High-quality Christian girls didn't want to be around me. They flat-out rejected me. Instead, I kept attracting girls with a 'history', single moms, 'born again virgins', recovered (or trying to) addicts and alcoholics, foreign chicks who could barely speak English, and of course, the fatties and the fuglies.

I desperately wanted to marry and have a family, and none of these chicks qualified in my mind.

Some of these women wanted to have sex with me (and a few were quite aggressive about it), but none of them wanted to marry me (except a couple foreign chicks who wanted to get American citizenship).

It was frustrating.

So why was I like this?

Why was I NOT experiencing any of the benefits of being a Christian, even though I made considerable efforts and sacrifices?

I didn't understand the reason why until I was much older.

I was unclean.

The remainder of this essay will explain what I mean by that.

1. Bad Teaching and Conditioning

I had a slew of problems and issues arising from my upbringing, teaching, and conditioning, most of which I've written about before, including…

- Purity Culture
- Ego Ablation

- Confusion in Dealing with Discernment
- Denying and rejecting my own sexual desire (what I've called Covert Buddhism)
- The Beta Factory
- The Lie of Romantic Love
- The Young Man's Problem
- The 13 Harbingers of Masculine Doom
- The Soul Mate Myth
- Poor Boundaries = Poor Detachment
- The Centrality of Sex in Western Culture
- The Lopsided Liberalized Mating Market
- The Sexual Market IS the Marriage Market
- The Christian Marriage Dilemma
- The Christian Conundrum
- Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy
- The War on Masculine Sexuality
- The Son-Husband / Devouring Mother intergenerational dynamic

Looking back, everything was so messy. Good Lord, it is amazing that I've done as well as I have in life, all thanks to the Grace of God.

Nevertheless, all these issues are a departure from the Covenant ideal, thereby rendering its participants unclean.

Including me.

2. Impurity

A lot of the issues listed above were (and still are) a consequence of Churchianity, Feminism, and other societal influences, as well as Generational dynamics. Since these issues were external, there wasn't much I could do about those things, especially as a Blue Pilled youngster who didn't know much of anything else.

Okay. But I have to ask myself, what did I do personally that contributed to my woes?

From what I can see on my own end looking back on my life as an older man, my biggest problem, at least in the arena of my sociosexual life and Christian fellowship, was impurity.

The Bible says, "Let there be no hint of impurity."

> [3] But among you there must not be even a hint of sexual immorality, or of any kind of impurity, or of greed, because these are improper for God's holy people. [4] Nor should there be obscenity, foolish talk or coarse joking, which are out of place, but rather thanksgiving. [5] For of this you can be sure: No immoral, impure or greedy person — such a person is an idolater — has any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.
>
> Ephesians 5:3-5 (NIV)

It doesn't say "No impurity", it says "NO HINT of impurity!" That's an important distinction that I totally missed.

So let's take an inventory.

- I didn't use profane language, but I did tell dirty jokes on occasion. Even if it was truly funny, no one would laugh because that would've been improper. (That was embarrassing.)
- I wasn't r@cist*, but I did enjoy r@cist jokes. My cousins and my friends told a lot of them. I did too on occasion.

- I wasn't greedy. In fact, I rejected all semblance of wealth as being materialistic and therefore unChristian. But on the outside, this just made me appear purposeless, unambitious, or even lazy.
- I was too alone to be prideful, but I did have some trust issues. Interestingly, pride and distrust appear like the same thing to others.
- I wasn't sleeping around. In fact, I was virginal. I suppressed my sexual desire as something improper, but it came out in other ways. I had The Young Man's Problem. I was emotionally (and sexually) 'needy' and couldn't be 'detached'. (I'd never even heard of such a concept back then.) My words and behaviors were tinged with these emotional expressions and my desire for intimacy, love, and respect. Looking back through a Red Pill lens, it is easy to see how this added to my uncleanness.
- I could never manage to avoid lust. I didn't use p0rn (it was hard to get), but I did save a lot of fashion magazine photos of women in bikinis and underclothing and jerked off frequently. (This was before the internet.) I felt guilty about this, but as a teenager, there was no way I could stop this habit. I tried. Many times. In my youthful naïvete, I concluded that I needed to be married in order to resolve this. Heh. (I didn't get over this until I started having girlfriends in my mid-20s, which gave me a more realistic view of women.)
- I didn't smoke, drink, party, or use any kind of recreational drugs, and I avoided those who did, thinking them to be a bad influence. However, I often times had the same cynical, low-class attitude as many of those types of people. But I thought I was different because I didn't engage with them or practice those habits.

In summary, I was engaged in…

- Racism*
- Sectarianism
- Bitterness / Distrustfulness
- Sexual jokes and innuendos
- Profane speech (by topic, not vocabulary)
- Lust / (Soft) Pornography / Masturbation

All the things that the Bible admonishes us to avoid as per Ephesians 5:3-5 and elsewhere. But somehow, I was so immersed in these things that I couldn't see how it was having a negative effect on my socio-spiritual life. I was also very confused about why others could do these things, including popular Christians, but when I did it, it wasn't 'acceptable' or 'proper'. At the time, it wasn't even clear to me what 'purity' meant (despite all the sermons I'd heard on the topic). I thought it meant to be chaste and/or virginal. But it's so much more than that.

 Note: Racism is not a sin per se, but it is often expressed in a spiritually impure, offensive, or unclean manner.*

3. A Lack of Proactivity

There's more.

When I was younger, I didn't know anything about boundaries. When others imposed boundaries on me, it made me feel rejected or unloved. I didn't understand the value and purpose of doing so. I asked counselors and pastors to explain this, and they did, but I still could not understand.

Now as an older person, I see that I wasn't understanding The Law of Proactivity.

Proactive people show you what they love, what they stand for, what they want, and what their purposes are, which ties into The Law of Exposure.

In my mind, I was doing this. Sometimes it made me into a hero of the underdogs, but it always offended and repelled people. I thought it was because they didn't share my values. But looking back, I see it was because my impure / unclean attitudes, words, and behaviors were sending a conflicting message to people. The resulting confusion of not really knowing who I am or where I stood, and the troublesome task of trying to figure me out, are what caused them to withdraw.

Adding to this problem was the fact that I didn't really care what people thought of me, and this was amplified by the common Christian teaching "NOT to be a people pleaser". I knew what I believed, and that was enough. Or so I believed at the time. Maybe if I had cared more about what other people thought, then I would have been motivated to communicate with them more clearly. A strange irony.

4. No Discernment

Like most young people, I was spiritually immature, i.e. I had no discernment, and I had real difficulties in understanding this. This hurt me for many reasons in a multitude of ways. I'll try to condense it all here.

Jesus mentioned the Pharisees as being like whitewashed tombs (Matthew 23:27-28). I was the opposite. I was clean on the inside (at least from what I could tell), and all my filth and rottenness was worn on my shirtsleeve. My father said I was like Job — A righteous sh!t magnet. I learned the hard way that although this might give me a clear conscience (which is what I was focused on maintaining), it is not suitable enough to be acceptable to people — Christians especially, and ironically.

The problem with my self-awareness is that I did not know myself very well at all. Plus, hearing the common but inadequate and misguided adage to "Just be yourself."

All my altruism and self-discipline with respect to conscience only covered my blind spots and made me feel justified, resulting in a Dunning-Kruger effect. I could not see what I looked like to other people, so my relationships with Christians suffered, my efforts in joining a fellowship flailed, and my hopes of forming a romantic relationship failed — further preventing me from knowing myself any better.

Also, as I've said before, immaturity is a latent form of evil, because it fails to instantiate agency, and thereby makes instances of foolishness, impurity, sin, and shame more frequent and more probable. It also makes one into a moronic Blue Pilled minion or a useful idiot.

Furthermore, women won't take an undiscerning man seriously, Christian or not, because he doesn't "get it". But less worthy women are quite happy to USE him for all he's worth to them. That's exactly what I was experiencing.

In sum, a lack of discernment is one more form of uncleanness, especially in the eyes of Securely Attached Christian women.

Which brings me to the last point.

5. Insecure Attachment

I was praying if there was anything else I needed to add to this essay, and I came across this video from Chris Williamson, of all people. This same video excerpt was also covered in The Two Mating Markets (2025/2/5).

Chris Williamson: 17 Ugly Psychology Truths No One Wants To Admit — Adam Lane Smith (2023/8/31)

In this video, Williamson lays out 17 current confusing issues and discusses them with Adam Lane Smith. IMO, ALS's greatest contribution to the Manosphere is his work in Attachment Styles. This important topic is growing in relevance, and he has addressed this better than anyone else TMK. (If the reader is unfamiliar with Attachment Style theory, please click on the link to learn more.)

Beginning at 4:52, ALS says [edited for reading],

> "From what I have found, there are two different dating pools and they don't flag or signal to each other at all. They have almost no crossover. They're not even aware of each other.
>
> There's a Securely Attached group of people who want that direct human authentic connection. "We are > together." "We are talking." "We're sharing this Bond." They understand that connection so they want the right bonding experience. They don't want too much stimulation up front because it feels weird to them.

>
> Then there's the Insecurely Attached pool where everybody is trying to be Interesting, 1nTeRe$t!ng, In.Te.Res.T!ng! They're also dancing to the regimens consistent with Anxious or Avoidant behaviors, and cueing in to others who are doing a complementary dance to their own.
>
> These two different pools of people never cross or interact. So when you see guys saying, "Every woman out there expects you to be eight feet tall and have an 18 inch d!ck, and you have to have 10 billion in the bank", and so on, then you know they're among the Insecurely Attached group. [When you see women saying they want or must have those things, they're also identifying themselves as Insecurely Attached.]
>
> For the Securely Attached group, you don't need to have all those things. You don't have to dance for her amusement and endlessly play games or have Dread Game or control her. That's only going to work on those Insecurely Attached women in the other pool. It's never going to work on Securely Attached women. They will get up and walk away, because you're going to appear like you're on another planet or from another species. You will appear to be confused or disinterested in them, and they're going to track as confused or disinterested about you. Like I said, the two dating pools are segregated out completely (according to this model). It is wild to see."

Here, ALS is reiterating in great detail something I've been saying for years (and which has attracted a lot of controversy) — that if your GF or wife is a mature, agentic Christian, then you shouldn't need Game, but if she isn't then you most certainly will.

But ALS is describing this in terms of Attachment Style, NOT Game dynamics. (CW talks about this too in the video.) Moreover, people who get into marriage early and easily are those in the Securely Attached camp. If you're in the Insecurely Attached mob, then it will be very difficult for you to have a satisfying stable LTR or get into a good marriage. If you happen to have all those high SMV traits that have been discussed at length in the Manosphere, you might have a LTR or even marry, but it won't be a very good one, simply because you're unable to be Securely Attached.

Well, bingo. That was me.

I was Insecurely, i.e. Avoidantly Attached, due to trust issues originating from my upbringing. As a result, I only got traction with other Insecurely Attached people — people who are, more often than not, debased. This is why, instead of making progress towards marriage, I only got more temptations to engage in promiscuity. This temptation added to my frustration and made me bitter and resentful, and so this only added to my uncleanness.

Since I was in the Insecurely Attached pool, I had to compete and perform and produce as is necessary within that SMP paradigm. I had to make myself 1nTeRe$t!ng!, as ALS said.

So let's do another inventory.

- I was 6'3" (186 cm.), physically strong, thin, muscular, and I had 6-pack abs (until I was about 35). I was pretty good-looking, but I didn't know it.
- I didn't have much money. Of course, this is because I was young, but also, I didn't prioritize making money because I thought that was materialistic, as I said before.
- I limited myself to girls I thought were good wife material. However, my ability to assess what that looks like was impaired due to my lack of discernment. Besides, they wanted nothing to do with me. I didn't know why at the time, but now I know it's because I was not in the Securely Attached group, as well as the other things in this essay.
- I was immersed in Purity Culture. I avoided having sex. I was sexually frustrated. I couldn't express that part of myself — because I wasn't 'married'. If I had allowed myself to have sex, then that would have given me a considerable advantage in the secular, Insecurely Attached SMP, but I wouldn't do that because of Christian conviction and conscience.

- I wanted to be married in order to 'solve' this 'problem', but marriage was elusive. I dated lots of women, but not the ones I thought would be best for marriage because they didn't want me. And of those I dated, they only wanted to have sex with me. None of them wanted to marry me. If I proposed or suggested marriage, they were GONE in a heartbeat!

In summary, being Insecurely Attached is another form of uncleanness, and also impurity. This also ties everything else together in terms of my presentation to others and it explains why I felt like I was excluded from polite Christian social networks.

The Lessons Learned

As an older man looking back at my youth, the reasons for my socio-sexual inefficaciousness are more clear to me.

1. You can't mix Christianity with the degradations of the World.
2. Any HINT of impurity or uncleanness destroys the appearance of Godliness, creates confusion, introduces doubts, and repels those who live in the Spirit.
3. You can't realistically expect Insecurely Attached individuals to make breathtakingly admirable achievements in purity, Marriage, or Christian Morality, nor can you expect them to appear acceptable to Securely Attached individuals, especially not for marriage.*
4. These conclusions stand in stark contrast to the Classic Manosphere 1.0's adages for attracting women, which apparently caters to those who are Insecurely Attached.

 In fact, my pastor holds the opinion that Insecurely Attached individuals cannot even be true Christians, because their whole fundamental subconscious worldview is based on false concepts and fantasies, i.e. the drive to compete and perform and be 1nTeRe$t!ng!, as ALS said, in order to be accepted and loved by God and people.*

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): The Christian Marriage Dilemma (2021/2/26)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Christian Conundrum (2021/3/1)
- Σ Frame (Jack): More on the Framework of Options (2021/3/22)
- Σ Frame: The Young Man's Problem (2022/2/4)
- Σ Frame: Wandering in Search of God (2024/1/20)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Proactivity (2024/1/22)
- Σ Frame: Hypocrisy in the Manosphere (2024/5/31)

The Keys to Hope: Selling Your Image

Red Pill Apostle · 10 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

YOU are all you truly possess in this life, so make the best of it and make it count.

Readership: All; Single Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Author's Note: This post expands my previous comment with some input from Jack.
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

A previous comment from SurfDumb was as follows [amplified by Jack].

> "What hope does a normal guy have for a marriage, if all he sees here is, a professor with all-night sex (Jack), cynical and super articulate lawyers (Lexet, NovaSeeker, Thedeti), a guy with 10 kids speaking a second language (Oscar), a book writer (Deep Strength), a guy with 5 kids and no fights with his wife and can write extensively about many things (Derek). If that's what it takes for a good marriage, and most men aren't that, then the implication is that most men might have a Gift of Singleness."

In the same comment, SurfDumb also said he asked about what an average type of guy or a man in his own situation could do, and in return he got advice reminiscent of an Army recruitment brochure from the 1980's: "Be the best you can be."

Let's break this down a little further to suss out the truth of what it really means to "Be the best you can be", even if you're not 'exceptional'.

Assessing Assumptions

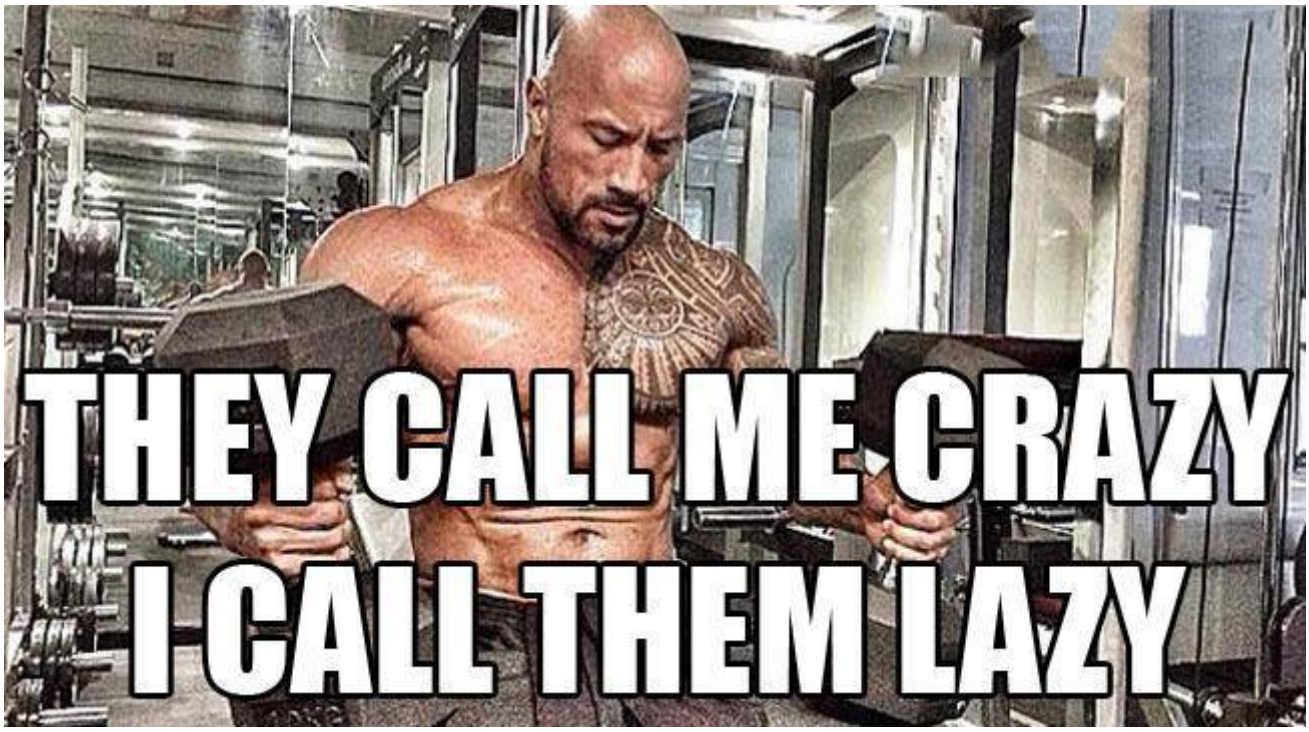
There are some built-in assumptions in RP thinking that need to be done away with.

1. One of the most corrosive assumptions is that 'improvement' is defined as getting a positive sociosexual response (e.g. IOIs) or a sexual payoff from women. No. Improvement just means you're better than you were yesterday, and the day before. It is not right to compare yourself to others, and you cannot let women be the final judge of your masculinity.
2. Another one is the overreliance on logic, which reduces the intricacies of life to positivism.
3. A third is the assumption that nature and nurture trumps agency, which is essentially fatalism.
4. The most critical of these bad assumptions is that human interactions are strictly formulaic and operate in a static environment.

Although behavioral patterns are valuable in assessing interactions, the reality is that we live in a dynamic environment in which there is a substantial gray area that is open to human action and decision-making.

Due to human nature, most people are typically emotional decision-makers. As men, we are prone to dismiss emotional decisions as being erratic, illogical, impulsive, and in general, very poor. However, a man who recognizes that others are like this can use this to his advantage. To put it bluntly, people who are driven by their emotions can be easily controlled through their emotions, much like a child can be. And no one is more easily swayed by their emotions than women.

What this means for an average bachelor is that his situation is not hopeless and that he has more control over the outcomes in his life than Red Pill knowledge fatalistically predicts.



Selling Your Image

In sales, there is a reason why most of the job training is geared towards adjusting the salesman's attitude and expectations rather than on technique. (The technical training is often shaped around certain words and verbal deliveries that highlight the best aspects of the salesman's personality, and it is up to each salesman to develop these techniques to fit his own style.) People make purchasing decisions based on how they feel about the salesman as much as they do on the product itself. If a salesman can show how a particular product can fulfill a client's specific desires / needs / wants, and do so in an amiable and smooth manner, then the sale will be imminent.

The same thing applies to the average bachelor.

If a man can develop his own style to operate with a smooth social interaction, then at minimum, he can avoid a harsh rejection. If he can allow others to find the fulfillment of their desires, then he will have made a good impression. In the best case scenario, they'll be coming back to him for more of whatever they got from him. He has found a need and filled it, which is the basic ontology of sanctification.

The Keys to Hope

In my humble opinion, here are the keys to hope.

1. Be gentle, yet unwaveringly firm at enforcing personal boundaries of what you will and won't do, what you like and dislike, and in your expectations that others reciprocate your efforts towards them. IOW, have and enforce expectations without being a d!ck about it.*
2. Reward others for good behavior and for treating you with respect. Instill punishment on those who do not, or else avoid future interactions with them.
3. Too many people give up way too soon when one or two strategies don't work out as planned. Be diligent and open to learning new social skills and adjusting existing ones. Be confident without being too pushy. IOW, don't be a d!ck about it.*
4. Have character, put that character into action and learn to recognize similar character in others.
5. Don't be slovenly, both in appearance and in how your home is kept.
6. Be reasonably ambitious, which means being able to live on your own and support yourself.

Points 1 and 2 are all about establishing and maintaining good boundaries. Becoming good at points 1 through 4 will get the average guy 80-90% of the way there. These habits are the hardest to master because they require a man to overcome the lies he tells himself and actually think and act differently. Points 5 and 6 involve making a favorable impression, including one's appearance and substantive material wealth, which constitutes much of what Red Pill advice centers around.

The shortcoming of this advice is that it does not address existing deficiencies in points 1 to 4. For example, if a man has a low confidence, or poor detachment, or a weak ego, he'll have to work on those things first or concomitantly with the others.

The key to all of this is that every average guy has within himself the capacity to master the essential parts.

 Not being "a d!ck about it" will vary by culture. In the U.S., a person can be what I call pleasantly persistent. I think of pleasant persistence as building rapport and a personal connection with someone then touching base at regular intervals after clearly laying out the desired outcome in the initial contact. The prospect knows what you want, so being around and being helpful in any way you can be, while accepting rejection, is the way to pass the business version of a fitness test. A key behavior in the process is taking the expected rejections in stride by not letting them affect your demeanor so you don't come across as desperate. Those who do not need to make the sale are often the people who make the most sales. The same concepts that apply to business, also apply to personal relationships.*

Related

- Okrahead: In a Hopeless World… Be the Hope (2022/9/14)
- Okrahead: On Faith (2022/9/16)

What's wrong with his budget?

Jack · 12 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A case study of the New MGTOW.

Readership: All; Single Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 600 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

Here's another example of an (Upper?) Middle-Class Non-!ncel MGTOW.

Austin Nasso (Image source: LinkedIn profile)

The guy's name is Austin Nasso. (The surname Nasso probably originates from Arabic, Greek, or Italian.) According to his LinkedIn profile, Nasso has a bachelor's degree in Computer Science from the University of California, Los Angeles. He attended from 2013 to 2017, so that puts his birth date around 1995, making him a late Millennial. He was a software engineer at Microsoft from 2017 to 2021. He's now a co-owner of a comedy entertainment startup called Socially Inept, LLC. located in L.A. In the post below, he says he lives in Pacific Heights, San Francisco, so he must run his business online, probably working from home.

This guy came to my attention because his posts were being promoted on the LinkedIn feed. I decided to check this out to see what's going on here.

Here's one of Nasso's LinkedIn posts of interest (quoted below). IMO, it's a humble-brag indignant entitlement screed likely (intended?) to foster unrealistic expectations and to provoke outrage among younger readers. (Remember, guys like this tend to be social trend setters.)

He writes,

> I make $340,000 per year in San Francisco as a software engineer and it's utterly unlivable.
>
> Let's break it down.

> After taxes, my take home is approximately $220,000 or $18,400 / month.
>
> Rent for 2 bedroom / 2 bathroom apartment in Pacific Heights: $9,500.
>
> Cybertruck lease: $1368.
>
> Pack and fold laundry service: $200.
>
> Doordash salads: $1680.
>
> Dinner and Drinks for Hinge Dates: $2380 (excluding 2-Michelin star+).
>
> Skiing: $2650 (average per month).
>
> New shirt: $20.
>
> Entertainment / Fun Budget: $1802.
>
> Total: $19,400.
>
> Despite working my butt off for 30 hours per week remotely and making $340,000 per year, I am somehow in the position where I'm losing $1,000 per month.
>
> What is wrong with this city?

Nasso asks, "What is wrong with this city?" But I think a couple of better questions would be, "What life choices am I making?", and "Can I make any better / more effective / more efficient life choices?", and then once that is settled, "On what and where and to whom should I be spending / investing my money?"

In this post, he says he makes $340,000/year, but in another post appearing a week later, he says he has two full-time software jobs at two competitor companies in San Francisco and brings in $928,000/year. Some of his commenters suspect some fakery (as do I). Maybe he's being gr00med by TPTB, and/or has his public online persona produced by TPTB, or maybe he's simply trying to create a professional / HSMV image for himself.

The numbers and itemized expenses may very well be improvised, but let's examine the budget he's giving in the first post cited above and determine what he's doing wrong or could do better.

Here are a few calculations to get us started.

- More than 1/3 (35.3%) of his income goes to taxes. I suppose this also includes health care, retirement fund investments, workers' compensation, etc.
- His rent is more than half of his net pay. I've heard finance gurus say it should be no more than 20%.
- He's spending just as much or maybe more on his dates than he is on food for himself.

Readers might also want to comment about what Nasso is doing right (or wrong) concerning his overall lifestyle and HSMV / professional image.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): Start Small to Build Internal Locus of Control (2021/10/14)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Forming the Vision of Achieving a Goal (2022/4/6)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Breaking Through Mental Barriers (2022/4/8)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): What One Man Can Do, Another Can Do (2023/1/4)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Red Pill is a Fresh New Beginning for Bachelors (2025/1/3)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The New Face of MGTOW (2025/1/20)

Cultural Credentialism is Counterfeit Currency

Jack · 14 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Don't stake your career on a piece of fancy paper.

Readership: All; young men
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 600 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes
Disclaimer: As an assistant professor with three degrees and a number of publications, I believe I have the expertise to address this issue with authority.

Several years ago, Manosphere 1.0 guru Roissy pointed out the vain futility in the ever-growing emphasis on education, not as a method of self-improvement, preparing for a career, or enhancing the quality of life, but simply as a label of ham-fisted clout to stick on our resumes and social entourage.

He wrote,

> "Credentialism is inherently shallow and effeminate, which is why college is now 60% female and the other 40% are uptalking soyboys who can only approach Asian girls after pinky-sipping a flight of craft beers.
>
> Culture messages have a big part in changing public attitudes, which changes social policy. Mocking the credentialist suckup diddle-jerk will help realign public perception toward a healthy skepticism and disdain of left-wing, post-America, anti-White academia, and drain their coffers while preventing fertilely fruiting women from getting pulled into the anti-natal vortex of degree whoring. More crucially, it will spiritually enliven our men who have been propagandized to view any life course not winding through a 4-year (now 6-year) college indoctrination struggle session as failure, and bring a renewed esteem to the technical crafts that are men's forte.
>
> A Trump trade policy reinvigorating manufacturing in the US will go a long way to diminishing the malevolent power of the leftoid academia menopausal complex."

> Chateau Heartiste: It's Time To Mock Credentialism As Foolish And Womanly (2018/1/8)

In contrast to Roissy's view, I see the meme as mocking overeducation and poor planning, rather than credentialism. However, I do agree with his point that women seeking a credential is often an unnecessary distraction from their pursuit of happiness, and it also detracts from a woman's SMV/MMV.

The problem with credentialism is that when everyone has a credential, including women, then the value of the credential is lowered in proportion.

Red Pill Apostle adds,

> "It is not just the prevalence of post graduate degrees that has caused them to decline in value. I believe the decline is due to the subject matter associated with those degrees and the lack of intellectual rigor required to attain them.
>
> If the Ph.D. is earned in field that is much more academically challenging, the prospects for gainful employment are much better. If there was a lick of common sense and the subject matter is also in high demand then that gainful employment will pay quite well.
>
> Of course, the guy with a high school diploma, a technical school certificate and a trade license will often make more than the average college professor. He'll do this long before the professor has completed his degree and have incurred little to no debt in the process."

Conclusions

I think the "pursuit of happiness" is wildly overrated. By making happiness a top priority western society has paradoxically ensured there will be less of it.

Happiness without purpose is fleeting and shallow. Women are especially susceptible to this as they do not have a strong innate sense of duty or honor. Left to pursue what they want, they will rarely get what they need, which is to submit to a man with a mission. They will inevitably become unhaaapy as their trivial pursuits (careers, education, etc) fail to replicate the fulfillment of a meaningful life.

If you look for happiness, then you'll never find it. But if you find an activity that you feel passionately about, then you'll find happiness. The state of Flow seems to be intrinsically linked with our sense of happiness.

Related

- Jim Craven: American Braggadocio and Tautological Credentialism: Yes, I am the "Best Judge" of Myself and My Capabilities–Just Ask Me (2013/7/15)
- Amerika: How Happiness Can Be The Wrong Goal (2021/2/10)
- Σ Frame: How to be Happy, No, Really (2024/4/19)
- Σ Frame: Meritocracy vs. True Upward Mobility (2024/8/19)
- Σ Frame: Doctor$ are Human$ too (2024/8/20)

10 Flavors of Masturbation

Jack · 17 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Which one whets your refined tastes the most?

Readership: Men
Theme: The Gift of Singleness / Overcoming Obstacles
Author's Note: This post condenses a conversation under A Blinding Obsession (2022/4/15). Links to the original comments are embedded in the initial words.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Intro

Lust, P0rn, and Masturbation are topics that men have a strong aversion to discussing, mostly because it is embarrassing and shameful. But we have to admit the fact that most men do it, including Christian men, and that this is an important issue that needs to be addressed, especially for Christian men.

But how?

The usual hushing and shaming is not likely to help men gain power over, nor any freedom from this habit. I think if men can talk about it and "share our testimonies" if you will, then we can sort things out, arrive at a confession, and hopefully master this aspect of our nature. Men would never discuss this face-to-face with another man, or even a pastor or counselor. (I sure wouldn't.) So doing this on a blog seems like an ideal forum.

I realize that some of my descriptions and euphemisms below are cheesy, odd, or maybe even inappropriate, but please humor me with this difficult topic. I hope to offer some language with which this topic can be breached and facilitate meaningful discussion.

As you might have guessed by now, this essay will be both terrible and wonderful. One day in eternity, I'll have to answer to God for writing this.

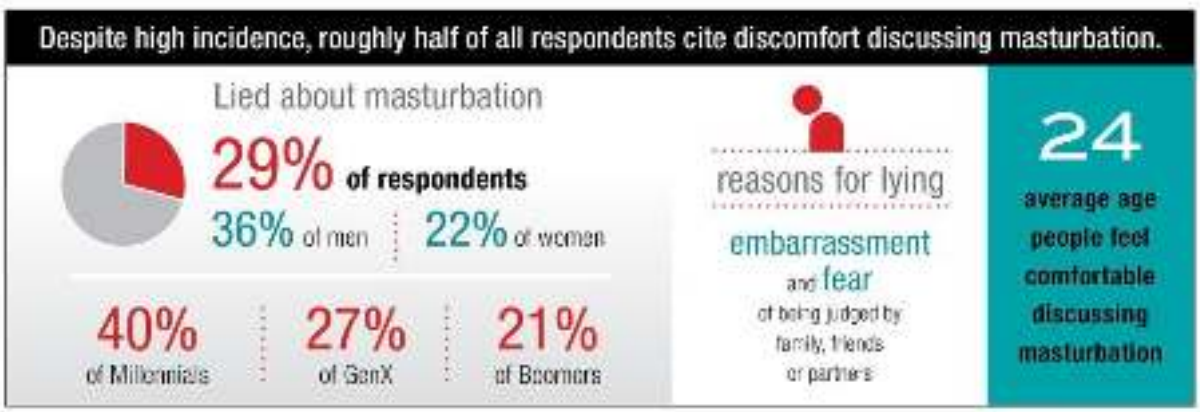

Image Source: Tenga: United States of Masturbation

What's the Flavor of Your Fapping Fantasies?

Pardon the perverse, click baity section title, but your attention is imperative.

Leaving aside Lust for the time being (I'll get back to this in a separate post), P0rn and Fapping comes in many "spiritual flavors"* of concupiscence.

1. Sweet — A refreshing, liberating relief from an opprobrious libido, similar to Post-Nut Clarity.

2. Sour — An oppressive ‘cloud’ of enervating guilt and/or burning shame; feeling demotivated or distant from God.
3. Sweet and Sour — Some combination of the above. For example, feeling relieved but also guilty, or having a clear mind coupled with ennui.
4. Salty — Beating off enables one to know one’s body (e.g. cyclical patterns, how much time elapses before Blue Balls or confusion kicks in, etc.), one’s physical desires (e.g. causes or sources of arousal, etc.), and one’s carnal nature (perceived relationship dynamics and structures, etc.) more intimately, often providing a sense of self-confidence and sexual expertise.
5. Bitter — When spanking the monkey leads to a callous hardness of heart. (Very bad for spiritual growth.)
6. Bittersweet — Cold self-sufficiency is accompanied by an increase in confidence. (Good for developing Ch@d-like, Dark Triad traits.)
7. Numb — Masturbating is a self-pleasuring form of escapism or fantasy that is employed as an anesthetic, a coping mechanism, or a distraction. (This one is especially unhealthy.)
8. Savory — “There’s just something special about this chick (or photo) that pushes me over the edge.”
9. Spicy — “There’s a certain kind of sexual stimuli (e.g. a fetish, or seeing or hearing copulation) or social situation (e.g. alcohol, bars, clubs, dance halls, parties, etc.) that will push me past my limit.“
10. Umami — “Oh my God! I just can’t control myself! I gotta cum RIGHT F-ing NOW!!!” (Common among adolescents.)

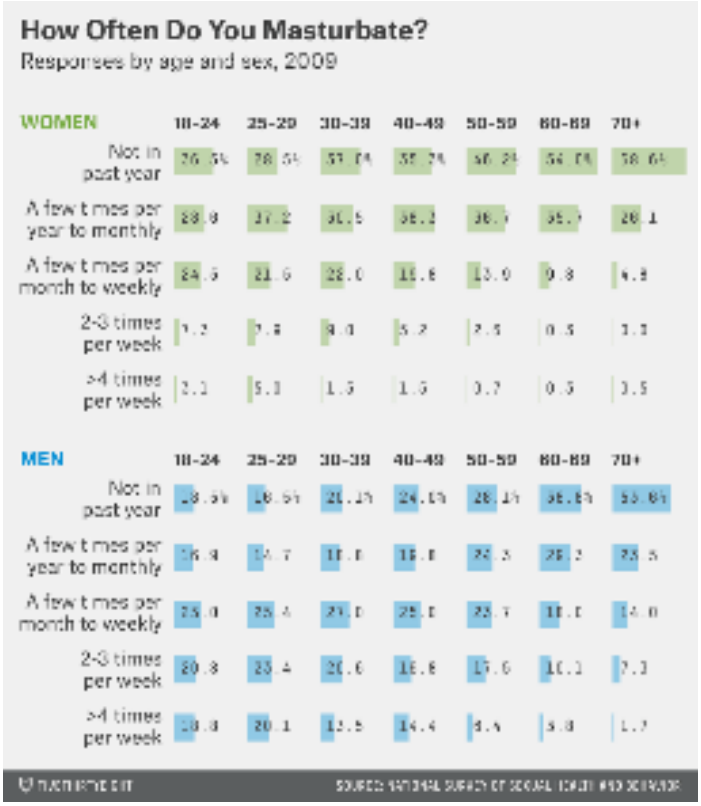
* Note: The delineating terminology is based on the 8 basic flavors from East Asian Culinary Theory.

1. Bitter — bases, caffeine, catechins, flavonoids, phenols, polyphenols, etc.
2. Numb — galangal, ginger, Sichuan pepper, etc.
3. Salty — $AlSO_4$, alum, baking soda, $MgSO_4$, NaCl, etc.
4. Sour — acids, lemon juice, tomato juice, vinegar, etc.
5. Spicy — capsaicin, cardamom, chili peppers, cumin, paprika, peppercorn, etc.
6. Sweet — honey, molasses, sucrose, fructose, maltose, etc.
7. Umami — bouillon, miso, MSG, seafood, seaweed, soup stock, etc.
8. Savory — most other herbs and spices



Data from the 2009 National Survey of Sexual Health and Behavior. (Image Source)

Becumming a Cum Laude Connoisseur

The first, Sweet, is acknowledged and discussed much less often than the others. One regular reader was brave enough to share his experience with this. He wrote,

> "[P0rn is] mainly just mental stimulation that results in my having a need to "relieve" myself, almost like a biological need to get it out of my system, like using the restroom. This "relieving" is important to mention, because I've seen MGTOW videos where pump-up guys are like, "Instead of fapping, you need to take that energy and hit the gym!"
>
> But for me… it's like, it isn't UNTIL I relieve myself that I can actually function on a higher, more productive level, letting go of feelings like loneliness or wishing I was with someone. I can still function without relieving myself, but I confess, it's more difficult. My stupid mind, like others have mentioned, keeps wandering to the sex that's flashed at me nearly every turn in society. Honestly, the relief really is like an internal reaction where the cloud is lifted. I'm now able to focus better on goals and be more efficient in my work. Not before, but after. Is that weird?"

Judging by what I've heard from other men, I think this experience is rather typical. However, a guy who is consciously aware of its effects on his life is doing better than average in mastering his own nature.

What is different from man to man is…

1. How severe that 'cloud' is.
2. Whether he is able to get that needed relief and/or jerk off without giving in to lust or losing himself in p0rn.
3. Whether it becomes a stumbling block in his spiritual life.

I'll presume that (Christian) men are well familiar with the second one, Sour, i.e. guilt and shame.

For the third, Sweet and Sour, it may be helpful for a man to be aware of the mixture of 'flavors', and try to determine how his soul functions in response to different stimuli. Knowing yourself (in the Biblical sense) may help you master yourself. (Sorry for the double entendre / pun. It's just too funny.)

The fourth, Salty, is perhaps the most beneficial aspect of squipping a load off every now and then.

The fifth and sixth, Bitter and Bittersweet respectively, tend to be empowering, but yet also isolating.

The seventh to the tenth, Numb, Savory, Spicy, and Umami, are largely dependent on one's phase in life, one's physical constitution, and the strength of one's desire / libido, and is a function of one's self-control.

Cloud Vectors : Chocolate or Vanilla?

I think the severity of the "cloud", the overall effects of masturbation on one's mood and spiritual life, and the magnetic draw towards p0rn, all depend on a wide assortment of exacerbating factors, including things like…

- A bad marriage (e.g. chronic disrespect, an affair, divorce, etc.)
- A dysfunctional upbringing (e.g. physical abuse, harpy female relatives, etc.)
- Generational Curses (e.g. idolatry, parental marital dysfunction and/or divorce, being orphaned)
- Physical issues (e.g. athletic disinterest, poor health, poor diet/nutrition, etc.)
- Poor Parenting (e.g. having a Devouring Mother and/or a single mother)
- Sick or immature or incapable family members.
- Poor socialization habits (e.g. being a poor communicator, poor social adjustment, history of rejection, etc.)
- Psychological Issues (e.g. personality, temperament, childhood trauma, low self-image, depression, repressed anger, etc.)
- Many others (see Vectors of Loneliness).

Mental Masturbation vs Mastering the Mind

Based on my personal experience (God, it's embarassing to confess this and I hope readers can benefit), I surmise that the activities of the mind while beating off play a large part in determining the resultant spiritual 'flavor'. IME, fantasizing about a real person whom you know you'll never "go together with" (in the Biblical sense) tends to produce feelings of isolation, or being distant or removed, or a Poverty Mentality. It will also make you lose confidence and/or behave awkwardly when actually interacting with that person IRL.

If P0rn is used, the type of P0rn can change the 'flavor' too. IME, IF the photos or videos depict a man and a woman who have an authentic relationship between them (and not just two P0rn stars F_cking around with a stranger), and if the female model is sincerely into it and genuinely enjoying herself (and not just acting s1utty for the camera), then the 'results' of hammering the bird are much more 'satisfying'. I believe this is because it is a better representation of how sex is supposed to be (as opposed to being defiled, debased, and depraved).

Yes, I know it is all a false fantasy, but my point is that some types of P0rn are obviously much more fake or false than others, and it shows up in the way it affects your psyche after spurting. YMMV.

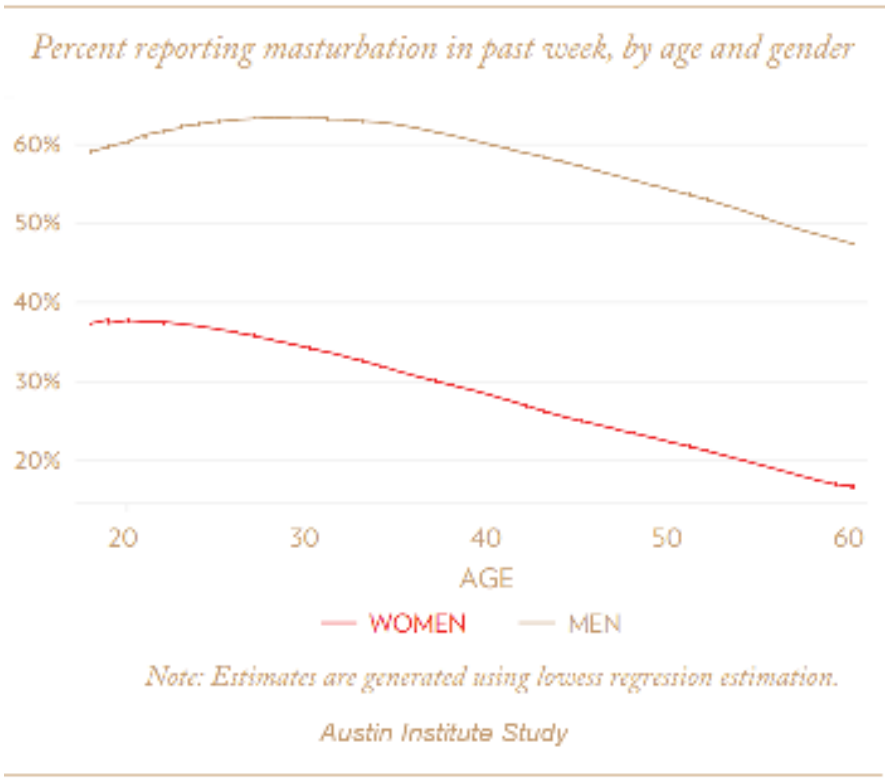

Image Source

Jack's Jacking Jerk-Off Junk Hypothesis

Here I'll propose a work-in-progress theory to explain the causes and nature of habitual lust, jacking off, P0rn use, Poverty Mentality, and such. This is offered as a heuristic model for men to consider what might be confining them to the habit of shooting the sluice when there's no opportunity to Juice the Goose.

Hypothesis: Men's habit of engaging in Lust, P0rn, and Masturbation is caused by…

1. Disengagement — A lack of concentrated focus on a task, often characterized by boredom, inactivity, or disinterest in a current activity. IOW, a lack of strong purpose and/or a lack of Flow. This may include not regularly participating in Christian fellowship or social intercourse.
2. Exposure to sexual stimuli. Men are constantly bombarded with female immodesty and sex from the time they're middle school age or earlier. Media blasts us with barely naked images of the hottest women in society. Advertisements, films, and TV shows are filled with sex scenes, sexual innuendos, jokes about sex, and other sexually suggestive images and situations. We overhear peers talking and bragging about their sexcapades. It's very hard to get sex off your mind once it's there. It would help if society had reasonably modest standards for female modesty.
3. Inactivity — NOT having a physically active lifestyle. Men have told me (in many words) that physical dormancy fosters lasciviousness and lust, whereas regular exercise reduces their propensity to tug the lug.

4. Libido — For most men, it's absolutely mind-numbing during post-adolescence, and remains very high until it gradually diminishes after the age of 45-50 (but could still be high enough to be disconcerting and/or problematic).
5. Loneliness — May be caused by a large consortium of vectors, and the more there are, and the more severe they are, the more acute the effects will be.
6. Guilt and/or Shame — Tends to keep one locked into the habit. (An effective confession may reduce the power that lust and masturbation may have over a man. Choose your confessor wisely.)

If more of these factors are present, or if the factors are more intense, then it will be more difficult for a man to resist the temptation to flog the log. If all five of these factors are present in a man's life, you can rest assured in the certainty that he's choking the chicken on the regular.

Epilogue

To be clear, Lust is a sin, P0rn is idolatry, and wanking the wiener is dissipating and enervating just as much as it can be refreshing and relieving. All these should be avoided altogether. But the reality for most men is that they cannot endure the temptation to relieve the physical and psychological pressure. Believing in Christ doesn't seem to change this reality, and for some men, it tends to aggravate it instead. IME, the closer I get to God, the more intense my desire for F_cking and Wanking becomes, the more I experience temptation, and the less I feel like I can control myself. And when I hit this barrier, I cannot get any closer to God because of it. Fortunately, this dynamic is slowly receding as I age.

Whether masturbating is detrimental to one's spiritual life, depends on the individual. Some men can function well without relieving themselves, while others cannot. Some men can jerk off without succumbing to lust and p0rn, but others can't. However, if a man cannot function without jerkin' the gherkin, and he can't masturbate without impulsively paging through p0rn, then this is likely to become a stronghold of sin, as described in A Blinding Obsession (2022/4/15).

Men of strong constitutional sexual substance, God help us all.

Related

- Psychology Today: Men Masturbate to Make Up the Difference — But Women Don't (2017/5/31)
- The Orthosphere (Kristor): Understanding Concupiscence (2020/3/23)
- Σ Frame: Does Masturbation improve Preselection? (2022/2/16)
- Σ Frame: A blinding obsession (2022/4/15)
- Σ Frame: Lust (2023/2/10)
- Σ Frame: P0rn is Faux Validation (2023/2/17)
- Σ Frame: How P0rn and Premarital Sex affects one's view of Women (2023/2/20)
- Relationships in America: How Often Do People Masturbate and What's Normal? (2024/1/8)
- BedBible: Masturbation Statistics & Facts [Research] (2024/4/16)
- Tenga: United States of Masturbation

Is Marriage a Solution to Lust?

Jack · 19 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Desire is exacerbated by a lack of commitment.

Readership: All; Single Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

Back when I was a single young man, there was an idea floating around in Christian circles. I don't think it was specifically taught or talked about, but the idea was somehow very clear.

Marriage is the remedial solution to the problem of Lust.

Of course, this idea originates from the Bible.

> …but if they cannot exercise self-control, let them marry. For it is better to marry than to burn with passion.
>
> 1 Corinthians 7:9 (NKJV)

That's very true, but it is a mistake to think that marriage eradicates all restraints of burning, or that it is a be all, end all solution to the spiritual stumbling block of lust.

I remember every time a guy in my church fellowship got married, one by one, they would all have this huge epiphany that marriage was NOT going to relieve them of the desire for emotional openness nor ameliorate the insatiable burning down under, or for some, a nagging sense of loneliness. The other single guys would gather around to support him in his forlorn sobering misery. They were truly concerned, but none of them truly understood. They were all thinking, "He's married, banging @ss every night, and he's STILL not happy!?! What's wrong with him?" Then it would be forgotten. Then a while later, the next guy would get married, and he would have the same epiphany. Same confused reaction from others. Repeat ad nauseum. The only guy who didn't have this shocking Wake Up call married a very discerning and intelligent girl with a physical handicap (shriveled arms). (I can only suppose that's because she was a real virgin when they wed. Imagine that!)

I think this idea is still floating around Christian circles, but it's couched in terms of honor or faith rather than purity. Same difference.

So is Marriage really a Solution to Lust?

The NOT so simple answer is… Yes, and No.

To be more specific, the cure is worse than the disease.

Men who are of the type that is habitually addicted to T&A for their own psychological stability will probably have to get married to escape this stronghold. In fact, I believe this psychological condition is one and the same as being "called to marriage", as it is said, in spite of the other fantasies surrounding this concept. The problem is, of course, that marriage introduces a whole new and different set of problems to work through.

Like what?

Intramarital Disappointments and Frustrations

If the wife you happened to have married has excessively poor character habits, such as a lack of passion in the bedroom, an acrimonious and unpredictably vacillating mood, a delectable skill in delivering insulting words, careless cruelty, drunkenness, inexplicable and perpetual anger, or crass violence … then you'll find that your marital sanctification is hanging on a prayer that is too weak and too late. With time, your emotional attachment to her will wither and fade with every instance of her disrespectful tone of voice, and with every loose word emanating from her once lovely kiss-of-life mouth turned vampire.

But the truth is, All Women Are Like That (AWALT). There was and is no "better choice", just the one you are most familiar with. That's the reality of marriage. The day in and day out tumult of living with an unappreciative harpy harridan who makes it her life purpose to $h!t test you day and night, 24/7.

But at least you're getting laid (sometimes), thank God!

Extramarital Temptations

Once you are married, the craven ravenous desire to pound random vivacious P00nani doesn't just disappear. It continues on, just as before, except now there is a visceral and very vexing restraint arising from the fact that one is now 'married'.

You will continue to meet and then regretfully choose to pass over many hot young women who will give you the same sense of vivacious life and livid love that penetrated your heart when you were single, and with every piece of luscious @ss you pass on, this will make you very angry, disappointed, and regretful, precisely because you cannot experience this kind of emotional passion in your marital life. Yes, the potential is there, but the wife's fickle willingness is NOT (unless you are among the decimal few who are exceedingly blessed with a flesh-feeding unicorn wife unit).

As a result, you'll find yourself experiencing emotional reactions to other women, and experiencing intense temptation, and this will vex you even more than it did when you were single, because you'll know in your heart that you've already made a very bad decision to be faithful to one very sour curd of whey.

Upon meeting other, younger, fresher, tighter, mobile reproductive units with a pinched waistline, long hair, and a firm @ss, you'll feel very anxious and upset that you ever let yourself be duped into a marriage to a mediocre harpy. You'll realize that you never truly loved your wife, but just accepted her as the best of the worst options available, just to have a pound of flesh to shoot your genetic juice into.

If you're already married and commiserating over the thought that you could have done (or still could do) better, the reality is that this is as good as it gets in this sin-forsaken life.

And you thought marriage would be so much better than being single … because of juicy, plush, sooo precious Peen in P00000nani… Slurp! Ahhhh!

Heh. Thou are a fool for a fantasy fetish. Tis' better to jerk one off and be free of this deceptive fantasy, if only for a few hours. I'll save you the trouble of an image search.

Conclusions

The upside of being involved with a real life love interest is that one's desire shifts from being a fantasy about an UNattainable object to a hope for something real and attainable (assuming there is the potential of moving forward toward marriage). The difference between lust and hope in this case is that you have the faith to obtain that which is hoped for. IOW, it's REAL. But the downside — and it is significant — is that IF your hope is not fulfilled within a short timeframe, or if she betrays you, or frivorces you at some point in the future, then it will leave you just as broken as lustfulness would have done, maybe more so, because it also breaks your faith / heart.

Men should NOT think that marriage will ameliorate the burden of one's libidinous procreative instincts. It doesn't, and it won't. It's not easier, just different; harder in many ways, because marriage adds to your responsibilities, and burdens your lusts with regret and shame.

You might think the reason you will marry, or got married, is/was to have an emotional attachment that would fulfill your dire needs for sexual intimacy and allow you to avoid lust and temptation. Heh. You are so naïve. You will eventually come to hate being tempted, either within your marriage, or outside of it, and you'll find that enduring this temptation, with nothing better to displace the desire that fuels the temptation, will eventually push you to confess the Lord Jesus Christ as the one and only source of satisfaction in this Life.

Or else… trudge through life waiting and hoping that the lubricious yet ambivalent wifie might be in the mood at least once a month, and combing through P0rnHub in between getting lucky.

This is the sum beauty and value of marriage. Not for the faint of heart.

Eat this truth now, or else vomit it later.

Related

- This Explains More: Better to marry than to burn (2013/6/22)
- The Orthosphere (Kristor): Understanding Concupiscence (2020/3/23)
- Σ Frame: On the Concept of Sin and the need for Marriage (2020/4/24)

- Σ Frame: Zizek – Everyday Sexuality (2020/12/14)
- Σ Frame: The Christian Marriage Dilemma (2021/2/26)
- Σ Frame: The Cross of Our Age (2021/5/3)
- Christianity and Masculinity: “That all changed after we married…” (2021/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Why you will marry the wrong person (2022/3/2)
- Σ Frame: What Changes after Marriage? (2022/3/4)

Modern men expect emotional openness with a woman, just like their Devouring Mamas trained them.

Jack · 21 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Devouring / Feminist mothers instill emotional dependencies and needs that can never be satisfied — or sanctified.

Targeted Readership: Men; Single Men;
Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Author's Note: This post expands my previous comment and is based on an email discussion with Red Pill Apostle on 2024/1/28, during the time we were writing on the theme of Boundaries.
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Foreword

This short essay conveys an important concept that has oft been referred to in many posts and comments over the years, but hasn't been explicitly stated in a stand-alone post.

Well, here it is.

How Much Emotional Disclosure is Necessary to Establish a Satisfying Connection?

In previous writings, I've argued that Heart Trust is the essential ingredient that yields satisfaction in a relationship for both men and women, leading to sanctification. In general, there is a certain amount and kind of emotional openness that is necessary to maintain trust — any less and trust is shaky, any more and things get sticky. Knowing where that line is would be the key for maintaining a satisfying relationship, and it is slightly different for each person.

Red Pill Apostle wrote a more specific answer to this question for men sparring with women.

> "Women and men often define what level of disclosure counts as openness that creates emotional connection. My experience is that scratching the surface of thoughts and feelings is plenty for most women. This gives them the feelz they want and need. Anything much beyond scratching the surface is too much for them."

That's good for men to know. But how much emotional openness is 'enough' for men? What kind or degree of emotional openness serves to create authentic emotional bonding for men? OTOH, why does a lack of emotional openness disappoint men or even destroy men's sense of sanctification and satisfaction within a relationship?

In the remainder of this essay, I'll posit that the line straddling enough and too much openness has receded over the last few decades, leaving men high and dry while women are swimming in their own stew.

The Gamma Game Generation

Over the last few decades, there have been several sociosexual factors that have caused men to become more emotional, and more emotionally needy than our forefathers.

Roosh observed that the assumption of gender equality and the integration of men and women has resulted in men becoming more feminine and women becoming more masculine, with more of the former than the latter occurring.

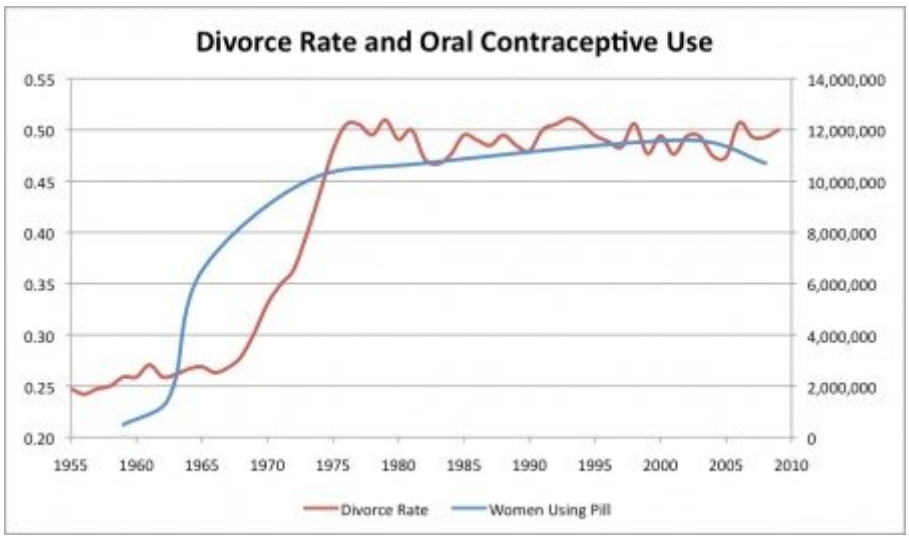
Men have been discouraged from developing masculine traits and expressing masculine behavior.

It has also been stated (by Dalrock, I think) that men are expected, taught, and trained to be women from a very young age, and then they are chided and denigrated for being poor carbon copies of women.

Also consider the reports that testosterone is decreasing and estrogen increasing, which would skew males more feminine. I believe this may be caused, at least in part, by the chemical influence of birth control pills.

All these factors have steadily increased over the past two decades (or longer) leading to the present reality in which men are afraid to be men.

Add to this The Beta Factory, the Young Man's Problem, cultural gynocentrism, etc. and you've got the current prevalent mess, characterized by intense male loneliness.



The Current Epidemic of Unloved Men

I described another contributing factor to this social phenomenon in Rollo Tomassi's Concepts of 'Love' (2024/4/15).

> "…there is an epidemic of unloved men right now, primarily because they had feminist mothers who never genuinely loved them or their fathers, and this is compounded by the present condemnation and ostracization of men due to cultural feminism."

Commenter Malcolm Reynolds further explained this phenomenon.

> "I reckon that this maladaptive behavioral pattern is probably learned inside a dominant mother household without any male role models present. This includes single mothers as well as families with male chicks as fathers. Single child families probably amplify the effect."

I believe this is a very significant and widespread issue that has never been properly addressed (except here on this blog).

A mini-series of posts that appeared last month under the categories of Son Husbands and Devouring Mothers (with two posts containing personal testimonies) have given readers vivid glimpses of the dysfunction that results from dishonest manipulative parents, weak or absent fathers, and/or careless or overbearing mothers, as well as a case study of the longitudinal damages that birth control can wreak.

Moreover, Devouring / Feminist mothers instill emotional dependencies and needs in their sons that can never be satisfied — or sanctified. This results in men being emotionally needy, men desiring a destructive, impractical, and unrealistic degree of intimacy with females, and their expectations and idealizations are thereby skewed towards perdition.

Normative Dysfunction

The kind of men that our grandfathers called wimps are what we would now call simps — effeminate, emotionally needy, lacking confidence, sensitive, thinking and acting like a child or a girl, etc. Years ago, wimps were rare enough to stand out as odd and be called out as such. But today, simps are so prevalent that they are the norm.

Of course, this is because (and this is the main point of this essay) that simps are being mass produced via a dysfunctional upbringing dominated by a feminist mother and a father who is either absent (due to wife initiated divorce) or is weak (due to Chivalry, cultural norms, Duluth, etc.), or who is a pedestalizing ATM / butler / therapist for the ex-carousel riding mother. And no one wants to acknowledge this reality because the solution would ultimately require holding women accountable.

When we consider the above information in combination with the statistics that 30-50% of marriages end in divorce (depending on locale), and cohabitation / single mommyhood is now hovering around 40%, this fully explains why there is an epidemic of boys and young men who are emotionally needy and spiritually insecure.

The desire for emotional openness with a woman only seems like a general male need because most all Gen X and later generations had feminist and/or single mothers, and suffered through parental divorce, etc. I know this was true for myself, but I didn't learn this about myself until I discovered that "women can't love a man in the way men want to be loved" — after I married. Of course, that didn't help my marriage at all.

D@mn these Generational Curses. They are truly generational-wide.

Conclusions

All of the factors described above, and especially the cultural rejection of masculinity, widespread generational dysfunction, and the associated intrinsic loneliness, explains why men adamantly expect full emotional openness with their love interest, GF, or wife, assuming they even have one.

I suspect that the prevalent phenomenon of many men looking for "emotional openness" with a woman, as well as many so called "Gamma behaviors", could be better described as a deep desire for genuine love and respect (that they never got from their parents during their upbringing), and/or wanting 'healing' from the myriad subtle abuses that come from being raised by a consuming / devouring, feminist (single) mother.

The obvious problem here is that this same neediness strongly repels women, and thereby perpetuates the cycle — with a vengeance. Remember, parental divorce kills a man's charisma and confidence, and these traits are what make a man stand out in the SMP (Σ Frame Maxim 31).

Red Pill Apostle asked how this evo maladaptive behavior could persist for so long.

> "…if Gamma behavior gets weeded out of the gene pool through assorted mating, why does [Gamma behavior] persist and even seem to be increasing?"

News Flash: Low SMV men and men displaying so called Gamma behaviors ARE being weeded out of the gene pool — with no mercy whatsoever. As we all know, 80% of women are banging 20% of men, and this has been increasing over the last 20 years. This is precisely why we have PUAs, !ncels, and MGTOW. But as the SMP continues to fracture and break down into oblivion, it only contributes to MORE broken marriages, MORE dysfunctional homes, MORE male emotional neediness, MORE male loneliness, and MORE Gamma behaviors. Only a very small subset of high SMV men are able to escape this reality, and I'll posit that most of these men do not suffer from the sociopsychological ills mentioned above. This is ~~partly~~ mostly what enables them to realize their mature masculinity and to compete well in the present SMP.

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: Women cannot love a man the way he wants to be loved (2016/7/26)
- Σ Frame: Do men need talk therapy? (2021/6/16)
- Σ Frame: Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy (2021/6/23)
- Christianity and Masculinity: The fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest part 2 (2021/6/24)
- Christianity and Masculinity: "That all changed after we married…" (2021/6/28)
- Σ Frame: When walking on eggshells, step boldly! (2021/6/30)
- Adam Piggott: Husbands must not unburden themselves (2021/7/6)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment (2023/1/30)
- Σ Frame: The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)
- Σ Frame: The Stronghold of the Beta Factory (2024/9/2)
- Σ Frame: The Next Step (2023/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment is a Boundary (2024/1/16)
- Σ Frame: How to resist becoming emotionally attached (2024/1/17)
- Σ Frame: Wandering in Search of God (2024/1/20)
- Σ Frame: Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions (2024/1/23)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Setting Boundaries Increases Openness (2024/1/28)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Boundaries (2024/1/31)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Rehab (2024/6/19)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): Son-Husbands and Devouring Mothers (2025/1/10)
- Σ Game: There is No Emotional Safety (2025/7/25)

Overcoming the Spiritual-Sexual Poverty Mentality

Jack · 24 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

…that erodes men's sense of discernment.

Readership: Men
Theme: The Gift of Singleness; Overcoming Obstacles;
Author's Note: This post condenses a conversation under A Blinding Obsession (2022/4/15). Links to the original comments are embedded in the initial words.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Intro

The three posts last week highlighted the tribulations of male libido and lust and reflected on three very common but rather unfulfilling venues in which men attempt to ameliorate this physio-psychological-spiritual burden.

- Without intersexual relations — 10 Flavors of Masturbation (2025/2/17)
- Sex within marriage — Is Marriage a Solution to Lust? (2025/2/19)
- Expecting emotional intimacy with a woman — (2025/2/21)

But the question remains: How is a Christian man to gain mastery over his own sexual desires such that it doesn't prevent him from attaining self-actualization?

Here, I'll posit that obtaining sexual relief does not lie in what a man does in the flesh, but in mastering his own Inner Game.

This essay will provide some feed for thoughts about how this masculine ordeal might be dealt with through the inner workings of the heart.

The Scarcity Principle

When people believe, or are made to believe, that a specific item is in high demand, or is rare, or the opportunity to obtain that item has dwindled or is rapidly dissapearing, then we are more likely to do whatever it takes to obtain that item before the supply runs out. People are idiotic enough to act this way even when the item is useless or they have no need for it.

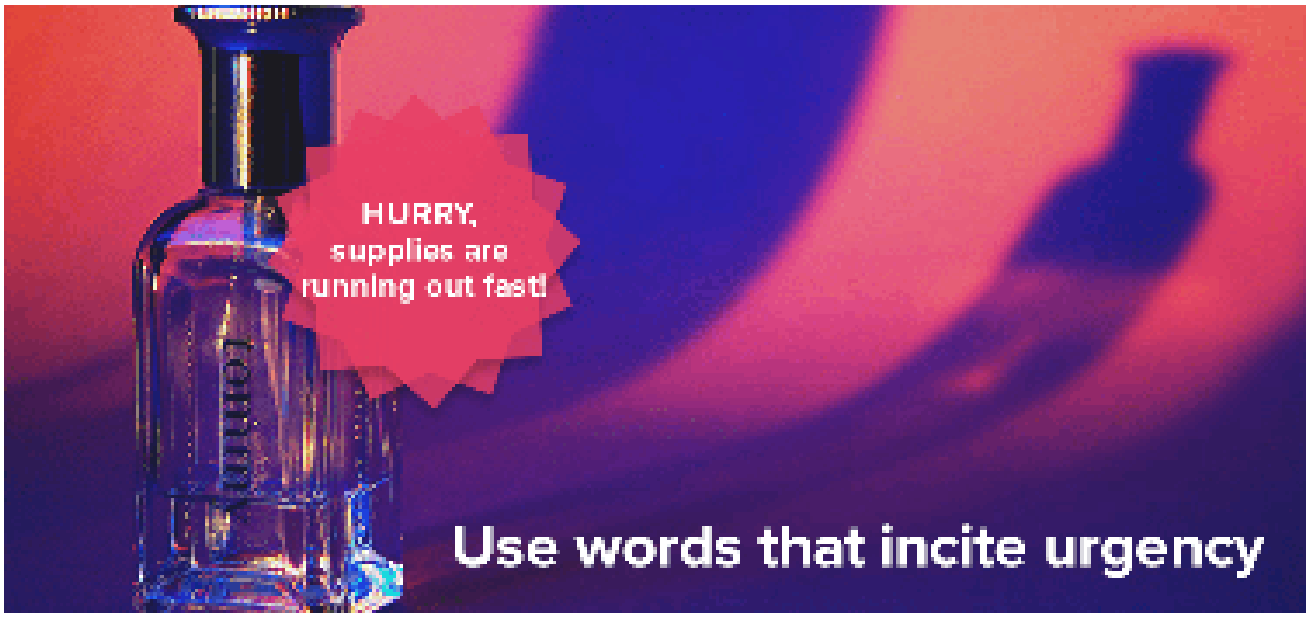
This peculiar behavioral phenomenon was first described by social psychologists as a Scarcity vs. Abundance Mentality and are thus concepts that predate the Manosphere.

The Scarcity Principle has implications in economic / game theory that makes it a commonly observable phenomenon. For example, the Scarcity Principle is why the Home Shopping Network has a countdown in the corner of the screen.

"Only 15 left."

"Hurry, while supplies last!"

And so on.

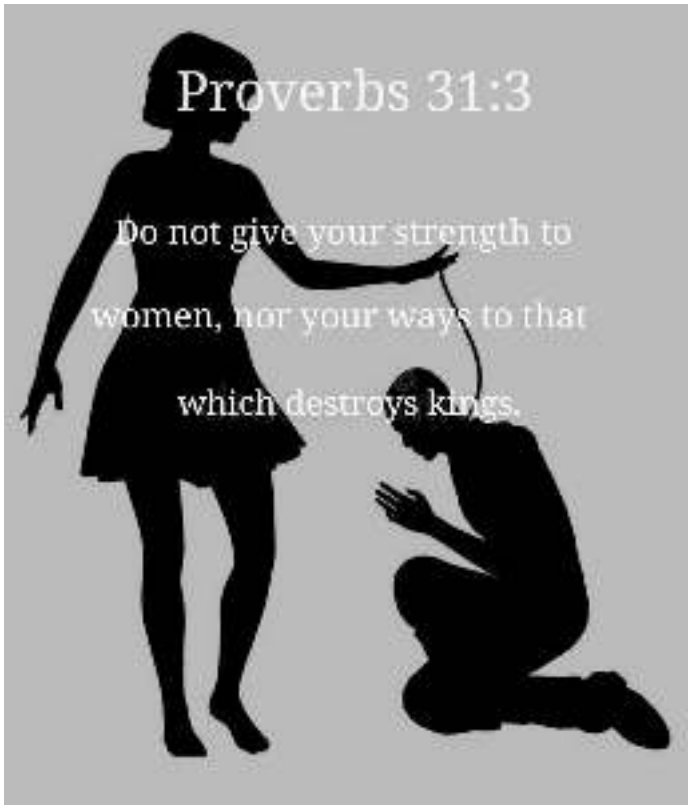


Scarcity Mentality

You can probably also see the Scarcity Principle playing out in many other areas of our lives, but here I'll focus on one in particular. It's the idea that women are a scarce commodity in a man's life, and how men will do backflips just to 'score' and/or hang on to one particular girl, even one who is remarkably low quality or one who is of decent quality but is very high maintenance or who does not offer much of any satisfaction in a relationship.

Another subcategory of the Scarcity Mentality is what the Manosphere calls "One-itis". It is when Men walk around pining for a girl they have latched on to with their orbiting crush behavior, or the one they just lost in a break up, believing that this girl was their "soul mate" or their One-And-Only "True Love." They feel they must heroically tolerate any kind of selfish BS she might dish out, or dashingly forgive every instance of betrayal or infidelity, and do everything within their power to make the relationship 'work'. They believe this because of everything from Lancelot to John Hughes.

The Scarcity Mentality is more than just a mind-numbing hunger pang for P00n. It is brain dead men throwing their lives away in an extravagance of fantasy, fem-centric vanities, idolatrous female pedestalization, self-destruction, and waste — all for the fleeting attentions of a capricious woman who doesn't give a rat's @ss about them.



This anomaly of the male nature is exacerbated by the culture and by women themselves. It is important (to women) for men to fester and flounder in a Scarcity Mentality because the female preferred mating strategy is serial monogamy, and hopefully sticking the landing on one who is presumed to be the last. If more men (or all men in the best / worst case scenario) are stuck in this mentality, especially the super sexy hot alphas that women actually want, then they can be manipulated to the full bend of the feminine imperative.

In short, a male with a Scarcity Mentality forfeits his masculine power to females, and enables women's bad / immature behavior and hypoagenticity.

Abundance Mentality

Abundance mentality then, is the idea (or simply just knowing in your heart) that there are a million more where she came from, and if you just wait for a half-second, another one will come along shortly. Like buses, or fish in the sea, or whatever metaphor you choose.

There are some things a man can do to increase his abundance mentality, but the usual caveats apply (most of it is genetic / developmental). Also, if you've never had "Meet Cutes" because of intrinsic interpersonal weirdness, you will probably latch on to any girl that looks in your direction, and be susceptible to One-itis.

To begin with, many men adopt an ego-reinforcing, self-sustaining mantra to keep themselves in the quick. Rollo's quip, "No matter how hot she is, there is some guy out there who is sick of her sh!t", is my favorite one. But it takes regular mental discipline, day in and day out, to nail down the sense of masculine self-sufficiency behind an Abundance Mentality. It involves laying down the desire for feminine companionship, inspiration, and sexual stimulation, and focusing on one's internal locus of control (described below), building a healthy ego, developing Frame, and forming a solid mental self-image of being a masculine man.

Poverty Mentality

The primary problem faced by Men who walk around with a Scarcity Mentality and/or who have “One-itis”, is that they are victims of their own lusts, and this is exacerbated by having a Devouring Mother, all of which was described in earlier posts. Their weakness for lust and ‘feminine love and affection’ is what screws up their inner game and makes them wussified. This weakness is also the same reason why women pass them over. Then they feel rejected and become desperate, and this increases their lusts and reinforces their Scarcity Mentality. It’s a stronghold.

At some point along the way, the particular trains of thought associated with a Scarcity Mentality gel in a man’s consciousness and it becomes an ingrained belief characterized by habitual thought patterns of self-defeat — what I call a Poverty Mentality. Commenter Malcolm Reynolds described this as ‘Learned Helplessness’. This is when a man gets the notion that what he desires is out of reach, and always will be, and he then internalizes this as a supernatural rejection. Meanwhile, he’ll stew in his unfulfilled desires until the frustration drives him bonkers. This desire could be almost anything, like having a particular woman desire him (e.g. One-itis), female companionship, having a GF or wife, pounding pristine P_ssy, emotional intimacy, romantic love, unconditional love, or something else. But it doesn’t matter. The effect is the same.

Of note, a Poverty Mentality often occurs in men who don’t know themselves very well at all, and so knowing one’s self can help avert the development of a Poverty Mentality.

Also, the term “Poverty Mentality” differentiates from “Scarcity Mentality” in that it puts the focus on one’s attitude and beliefs, NOT the market conditions. (This could be confusing too, because “poverty” is associated with financial destitution. But here I mean it to describe a spiritual destitution.)

Poverty Mentality = Lust

“Lust” is a weird word that evades a concrete general definition that would evoke livid mental images of exactly how it is expressed and the harm it does.

The Bible uses the descriptor “concupiscence” as a synonym for lust, but this word is nearly archaic and doesn’t offer much more insight towards an understanding.

It is hard to nail down a concise definition of lust because it is an abstract spiritual disposition, and not so much an observable behavior. But if I were to assign a set of behaviors that are associated with lust (for men), it would be feelings of chronic loneliness, intense unresolved desires, a weakened ego, and an addiction to masturbation and p0rnography (the latter is an idol associated with lust).

So this is my argument that a habitual, ingrained, ongoing Poverty Mentality, in comparison to an Abundance Mentality as I’ve described above, is equivalent to concupiscence / lust. Yes, it is a correlation, and it’s got some variant noise, but it’s a strong correlation. I urge readers to ponder on this correlation so as to arrive at similar epiphanies of self-knowledge (and self-mastery) as I’ve been able to obtain from this. Go up and read it again until it sinks into your conscious awareness.

Abundance Mentality vs Locus of Control

Is having an Abundance Mentality not the same thing as Charisma / Rizz / Meet Cute Mojo? How are these related?

The Manosphere has long made the point that having an Abundance Mentality is a key characteristic of efficacious masculinity. I believe the "Meet Cute Mojo", etc. correlates with having an Abundance Mentality, but there are other factors as well.

Scott said he thinks this is why he has been so "successful" in this regard. He wrote,

> "I have generally suffered in between LTRs and other less-than-ideal situations from One-itis with an intrinsic knowledge of the reality of the situation. Eventually, I snap out of it and back to abundance as soon as I "want" to or feel I have sufficiently processed the death of the previous relationship."

In the past, Scott said he felt like he had no control over when he got his "Meet Cute Mojo" back after a break up. Sometimes it took weeks, and other times it took a year or two. But then he wrote,

> "Looking back, I realize now that I was always in complete control of that process."

So what's going on with this phenomenon?

One of the key factors is that the last whiff of any residual Lust / Poverty Mentality has to be completely gone. Seeing how Lust (i.e. indulging in sexual fantasy, p0rn, and jerking) is often adopted as an anesthetic cope for Poverty Mentality / Rejection, I think this is why it takes most men some amount of time to recover.

Scott said a man's locus of control is another important factor.

> "I think the point I am making here is the difference between actually having no control and perceiving [that you have control]. It's locus of control stuff."

Yes, it's locus of control stuff. The odd thing about this is that as long as a man cannot perceive that he has control, he doesn't actually have control, whether the potential is there or not. As long as a man is living in fantasy land and/or suffering from One-itis, he'll not have a stable, reliable locus of control, his discernment will suffer, he'll not come up on women's radar, he'll be oblivious to new opportunities, and will therefore miss them.

> "When I think about the periods in between when I was wallowing in self-doubt and believing that I found the one true love who got away, it was all mindset. Some of it was aesthetic, to be honest. You sort of "have" to act that way so as to make it look like you're good for the cameras (your peers)."

That period of wallowing in self-doubt is a time when men grapple with the issues and learn that they DO have agency and control, and that they CAN move past it. Some men can do this in a short time, others longer, while some never "get it".

> "Never underestimate the power of conditioning."

Yes, and I would guess this largely depends on a man's overall track record / trajectory.

Conclusions

In summary, there are several key factors that feed into the thinking and the deeper beliefs behind self-actualization (or the lack thereof).

1. Abundance Mentality
2. Absolutely NO Lust / Poverty Mentality
3. Internal Locus of Control
4. Positive Conditioning
5. Track Record / Trajectory

There may be other factors specific to the individual man, but these 5 are crucially necessary and can make all the difference.

Of course, even if a man does all the hard work of developing these aspects of his persona, he will always struggle against lust. Except now this challenge can be winnable.

Best wishes to all my readers.

Related

- New Advent: Lust (2021)
- The Orthosphere (Kristor): Understanding Concupiscence (2020/3/23)
- Adam Piggott: Voluntarily Celibate (2022/3/26)
- Adam Piggott: Too thirsty for the chicks (2022/3/30)
- The Other McCain: 'A Pretty Face Can Hide an Evil Mind' (2022/4/14)
- Σ Frame: A Blinding Obsession (2022/4/15)
- Men in the Arena Podcast: AMA 6: Is Masturbation a Sin?- Equipping Men in Ten EP 535 (2022/4/19)

We always know the right thing to do after the right time to do it has passed.

Jack · 26 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Being single is a choice that is made without much awareness, precognition, or preparation.

Readership: All; Men; Single Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes + 4.5 minute video

Farm Boy wrote a post about Soft MGTOW (2025/2/10), which highlighted the fact that fellas became some type of MGTOW without really thinking about it, through circumstances. And how, due to those circumstances, it has become a larger thing through the years. This essay dives into some logistical and metaphysical possibilities that might explain why.

Unwanted Singleness

The Red Pill is a Dead End for Bachelors (2024/6/3) explored SurfDumb's wise suggestion that the Gift of Singleness lies in realizing that the best choice for some men is to remain single.

> "In the past, the Gift of Singleness was generally recognized in those with a flaccid, limp, or non-existing libido that permitted them to exercise full self-control and thereby escape the impetus of carnal desires and the impurities of lust. But if the Gift of Singleness is regarded differently due to the times we are now in, the Gift of Singleness might be in realizing that the juice isn't worth the squeeze. Maybe the Gift of Singleness now includes men who decide they can glorify God better by NOT being attached to a 40% divorce risk, and 80% burden-risk."

The problem here is that men are strongly predisposed to reject this outcome.

Because P_ssy.

Paging TheDeti.

But why the distress?

Marla Kanq. An independent blogger. Her Facebook account was suspended for "hate speech" for encouraging fitness and being proud of her body.

Some obese Woman. HuffPost and the American media so hated the site of a fit mother with beautiful and healthy children they opted to celebrate obesity, ugliness, and evolutionary doom.

The Gift of Celibacy

Joe2 answered this question when he wrote,

> "We are all born into this world single, so being single in and of itself is not a gift but simply a fact of life that affects all humans.
>
> The gift of singleness as mentioned by Paul in I Corinthians must be a gift that is unique, otherwise he is stating the obvious.
>
> I believe Paul is using the gift of singleness as a euphemism for the gift of celibacy. A Christian man with a normal libido has a desire for intimacy and sexual release. On his own effort, he can suppress the expression of these desires only for so long without causing some psychological or emotional damage or resorting to the use of p0rn, etc. Yet with the gift of celibacy, it is possible for a man to do just that.
>
> What we are experiencing now is a forced celibacy for Christian men with a normal libido without a concomitant outpouring of the gift of celibacy. Yes, some men have this gift, but they're very few."

Question: If so few men have the "gift of celibacy" in the midst of a thoroughly debased SMP/MMP, and are thus sentenced to a life of disquieted lust, curating a library of p0rn to browse and feast upon whenever the urgent need to wank the 'junk' genes arises, then how could a loving God subject these men to lifelong celibacy?

I have one possible explanation, although readers will probably not be happy to read it.

Missed Chances

In a previous post, Red Pill Truth is Not a Lifestyle to be Emulated (2024/5/29), I pointed out where the Bible says wives are 'found'.

> He who finds a wife finds a good thing and obtains favor from the Lord.
>
> Proverbs 18:22 (ESV)

> "…a good / prudent / sensible wife is a gift from the Lord."
>
> Proverbs 19:14 (ESV)

This is why I think most men, at some time in their lives, even if it was in middle school, knew a girl who was really into him and he thus had the heart-felt love of a young virgin lass — a girl who was worthy of marriage — at least at that time. But he had no interest in her whatsoever for whatever reason, and he passed on the opportunity.

That first rejection sets the trend for all that follows.

Once she's passed over by her 'first love', then heartbreak and disappointment set in, and that's where Ch@d steps in. Ch@d is more than happy to bang up that fresh hymenette that you turned away for whatever reason, thereby defiling her and turning her over to the tyrannical penchants of s1uttery. After that, she'll temporarily perch upon one dude after another, eventually settling for the nearest Beta orbiter whom she'll eventually reject as inferior to her previous meta-hubby Ch@d.

The same dynamic trickles down the SMV hierarchy until it reaches saturation.

I'm NOT saying that Ch@dwicks should "Man up and marry that h0e" AFTER the damage is already pumped and done. I'm just saying that that is how the SMP/MMP gets F-ed up. The early bird gets the ladybug. Evil triumphs when good men do nothing, as it is said. Ch@ds sow fresh fields where good men fear to frollick. You have to strike the iron while it's hot, before it's NOT.

Well, my dear single and desperate male reader, THAT was your ONE best chance at pounding fresh P00n and getting married in your whole life!

Sorry. I know it stings. But I just had to put this idea out there as a possibility to consider.

The Hammer is Cold when the Iron is Hot

As stated above, I have the impression that the Lord does offer this gift (a good wife) to most men, even in these deranged times. However, both men and women are not naturally predisposed to accept this gift during that brief window of time/opportunity when it is offered.

Why not?

There are several possible causes.

- The most obvious is that we might be 'unimpressed' by what is on offer. Men are hesitant to commit to a self-centered Pain In The A$$ Plain Jane. Women have Existential Fears over 'settling' for Beta Bob.
- We may have doubts and fears and qualms and are unable to actually choose freely.
- Some men might be afraid to close in on an opportunity, fearing regrets, sin, or creating offense, perhaps due to Learned Helplessness, or a Poverty Mentality curated by an ultra-religious upbringing.
- Worse, we may not even recognize this gift as a good thing, and/or we are afraid of making a commitment or a life-changing decision.
- Worse yet, we may even be blind to what the Lord has on offer because we are fleshly minded and we feel ashamed of something truly pure and good.
- Or worse still, we may be hampered by a Devouring Mother, or an Insecure Attachment style, and not even be able to 'see' what God is offering to us.
- Or worst of all, we may be attuned to what the World says is 'good', and we are looking for something quite different, something with cleavage and sauce that appeals to our lusts. IOW, we are proud and wish to be defiled / humbled by the sins of this World rather than to humble ourselves in service to the Lord and to glorify Him.

If this hits home for the reader, then while you're thinking about that experience, you may want to also think about why you wanted nothing to do with her, and whether that decision to reject her was in alignment with God's will for your life, or whether you were just totally clueless about what was really important to have in a woman in your life. I think I can identify with the latter.

Awareness vs Opportunity

Another part of the problem(s) described above is a lack of awareness. That is, the potential opportunistic source of satisfying a desire is not consciously associated with the more obvious object of desire that happens to strike one's awareness in a moment of craven concupiscence. This problem is further compounded by the fact that these two paradigms seldom occur concomitantly; that is, the awareness of a need and the opportunities leading to the fulfillment of that need do NOT usually coincide in the same moment of time.

Worse, sometimes an awareness of a desire or need can inflame the intensity of wanting, and thereby disrupt or obstruct the fulfillment thereof. This condition in conjunction with a ready opportunity is often referred to as a temptation.

Add to this the fact that some temperaments simply cannot wait or choose wisely, as demonstrated by The Marshmallow Test.

In addition to the important factors mentioned in the video, there are a few others which are seldom mentioned.

- Genuine Interest — Does the child actually want more marshmallows, or would he prefer chocolate or ice cream or pizza or … ?
- Intensity of Need (e.g. Hunger) — Has the child been eating marshmallows all day before the test, or nothing at all?
- Trust — Does the child believe that the adult will follow through on awarding more marshmallows if he is to wait?
- Self-Control — In the case where the child decides to wait for the bigger payoff, is the child able to withstand the imminent temptation and actually do what he has decided to do?
- Peer Pressure / Herd Behavior — Research has shown that social support can help children be patient and defer gratification when they are taught to do so and are provided strategies for doing so, but it adds no benefit without these conditions.

> "Mischel experimented with trials in which the treat was obscured from a child's vision, and some of the children were supplied with coping strategies to help them delay longer. They found positive associations between gratification delay and later outcomes only for children participating in trials in which no strategy was coached and the treat was clearly visible — a circumstance they called the "diagnostic condition."
>
> Watts et al., 2018 [1]

An Analogy : Food

We tend to think of the Marshmallow Test as a phenomenon concerning children. However, the same phenomenon is instantiated in adults as well.

For example, suppose that a large healthy meal is served at a time when one is away, or is busy traveling or working, or is simply not hungry. Then, at the time when one is finished with work and is famished and craving to eat food after a long busy day, the cafeteria has already closed for the evening. The hunger pangs then induce one to eat fast food, or junk food, or snack food from a convenience store, and/or to even travel some distance or go to great efforts for these meager unhealthy vittles.

Perhaps a bit of planning would be in order, such as packing or preserving or storing food to be eaten at a later time when it is most desired / needed. If there are a considerable number of people in this situation, such as members of a workforce, then perhaps hiring a cook or contracting a caterer would meet this need.

But we have no such planning for human sociosexual needs. We do have special catering services, but these are limited to Hook-Ups, OASIS, pr0st!tut!0n, etc. which are like a restaurant that only serves cheese crackers and Lay's potato chips during peak mealtimes. Very delicious, but very unhealthy.

Conclusions

As you can see, the unpleasant reality of mismatched and misdirected and inconveniently timed desire is not limited to hungry children subjected to the Marshmallow Test, or hungry workers getting out of work late after restaurants have closed. It also extends to adult human sociosexual needs. The space-time-awareness-opportunity mismatch that I have described above is a curious phenomenon of human nature and perhaps life itself. In some cases, it may be a symptom of sin and/or a function of temptation and the intensity of a desire.

Another way to say this is that we're stuck in our heads, both big and small, and NOT living from the heart. So when a desire (or an urgent need) strikes, we are caught unawares and unprepared. This is true for both men and women.

When you tell men and women from a young age that something that they naturally want to do is bad unless they do it in the right way, and meanwhile, everyone is doing it in the wrong way anyway and no one really cares, then you really have to have some sort of backup contingency or a plan. You have to have a community focused on helping them pair up, or doing arranged marriages in the churches, or working with people to get together. And if you're not doing that, then what you'll get is exactly what we're seeing right now — lots of frustrated singles out of luck and some of them fornicating on the fly — and even leaving the Church if there is a conflict of interests.

Exit Question: What can we do to plan ahead to ensure the satisfaction and sanctification of our youth's human sociosexual needs?

Sources

1. Watts TW, Duncan GJ, Quan H. Revisiting the Marshmallow Test: A Conceptual Replication Investigating Links Between Early Delay of Gratification and Later Outcomes. Psychol Sci. 2018 Jul;29(7):1159-1177. doi: 10.1177/0956797618761661. Epub 2018 May 25. PMID: 29799765; PMCID: PMC6050075.

Related

- The Federalist (Matthew Cochran): Most People Are Called To Marriage; It's Not Idolatrous To Act Accordingly (2019/8/30)
- Σ Frame: The New Face of MGTOW (2025/1/20)
- Σ Frame: The Rise of Middle-Class MGTOW (2025/1/22)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Sh!t Sammich (2025/2/7)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Soft MGTOW (2025/2/10)

Identity

Jack · 28 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Who you are may not be what you think you are.

Readership: All; Men; Single Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes + 1 video (optional)

Intro

Thedeti wrote,

> "Many people's relationship to God is very poorly defined throughout their lives. People also do not understand, especially early on, that their identities come from God.
>
> We too often believe our identities are from our parents, families, tribes, special interest groups, or activities. No, those are things we came from, belong to, or do; NOT who we are.
>
> Too often, men and women seek each other out based on satisfying urges or on what others will think; and not based on their identities.
>
> People would do much better if they accepted that their identities are from their Creator."

This is a key idea for Christian Masculinity, perhaps THE Key Idea.

But I fear many readers will not latch onto these sage words from Thedeti, nor recognize what it is that he's talking about.

So here I'll recount my own story about this. Readers are urged to reflect on this and hopefully arrive at a life-changing epiphany, if you haven't already done so.

The Kingdom of God is Within You

> [20] Now when He was asked by the Pharisees when the kingdom of God would come, He answered them and said, "The kingdom of God does not come with observation; [21] nor will they say, 'See here!' or 'See there!' For indeed, the kingdom of God is within you."
>
> Luke 17:20-21 (NKJV)

In 2005, shortly after I came to Taiwan, there was a movie called The Kingdom of Heaven, starring Orlando Bloom and Liam Neeson.

One line in this movie has stuck with me over the years (appearing at 1:05 in the video clip above).

> "Do you know what lies in the holy land? A new world. And there at the end of the world, you are not what you are born, but what you have it in yourself to be."

Very oddly, I remember thinking this same thought, perhaps in different words, at certain moments in my life, long before this movie came out and before I came to Taiwan. These moments happened to be times of great confusion and difficulty in my life. Or maybe I just remember those moments when I think of this quote. I cannot tell which.

Transformation

Anyway, I experienced what Neeson's character said after I came to Taiwan. In Taiwan, I was no longer what I was born to be, but what is within myself to be. Likewise, I no longer lived the life I was born into, but a new life in which I was joyful to Live Free.

Just as Neeson's character said about Jerusalem in the film, when I came to Taiwan, the identity that I'd known my whole life up until that point was instantly gone, and I found myself with another identity that was, in many ways, the opposite of my previous identity.

- I used to be somewhat nerdy, reserved, and self-controlled. But then I became a brash, funny, "crazy American".
- I used to be a homebody, preferring to stay at home and read or work on hobbies and projects. But then I became a somebody, traveling, meeting people, giving speeches, and enjoying a modest amount of local fame.
- I used to have trouble attracting girls. But then I had girls approaching me on the street, asking for my number, and/or following me home from the train station.
- I used to be a conscientious volcel. But then I became somewhat of a player.
- I used to be very religious. But then I realized that I didn't really know what I believed. I had to revisit and reaffirm all my beliefs one-by-one, and some changed.

My new identity was also very poorly formed. I had to work at developing this new identity. Building the foundation took a couple years, and it was hard and messy.

I was really happy for the first two months that I was in Taiwan, but after that, Culture Shock set in, and it was Baaad! I didn't know who I was, or who I could trust. I didn't know how to act or what to say. I felt confused, desperate, and lost. But at the same time, I felt hopeful, joyful, and thankful. I felt so spiritually alive in a way I had never experienced before. I floundered for about two years before I was able to get my bearings.

When Things Come Together Naturally

I worked very hard to earn my Bachelor's degree. It took me 7 years; I failed a few courses, I transferred a couple times, I went into debt, and I almost didn't finish. Earning my Master of Science was easier in some ways (financial, social), harder in others (coursework, research, psychological, spiritual). After that, I was so burned out on school that I gave up on the idea of ever earning another degree. I wasn't even sure I wanted to stay in engineering.

But after I came to Taiwan, I was invited to study for a Ph.D. under a noteworthy professor. He got me a full scholarship and a stipend. It was NOT something that I wanted to do for myself, but I had no reason to refuse. During this time I also had regular employment as a lecturer. I was making easy money. I'm not saying that earning a Ph.D. was easy (it wasn't), but I do feel like it was arranged by God. It was NOT something I broke my @ss trying to accomplish (like I did with my Bachelor's degree). It just came to me, as if it were already mine to have, and all I had to do was just to say, "yes", show up where I had to be, go through the motions, do the work, put in the time, and stick with it until it was finished.

The last 4 months before I graduated was a real trial though. While holding down a full-time job, I had to work late at night and on weekends to finish up my research and write my thesis. To make matters more difficult, my wife left me, took me to court a couple times, tried to get me in trouble with my employer, and made my life a living hell. Plus, I had to take care of two very young daughters by myself. I had to stick to a very rigorous and tight schedule for several months to make this work. At one point, I realized that I needed help so that I could finish everything. So I hired a babysitter and a house cleaner a few hours a week so that I could have more time to work on my thesis. I was also thankful to have several friends and coworkers who helped out in various ways.

I wish I had experienced the same fortuitous blessings in my marriage that I did in my career, but it was not so. Perhaps I was too Blue Pilled, too naïve about women, and too brokenhearted about my own parents' divorce to do any better. I also had a number of other detrimental issues that I wrote about before.

Shortly after I became a professor, I became a very popular teacher. Students stayed long after class was over to talk with me. There were waiting lists to get into my courses. My cumulative teacher's rating is 4.7 out of 5 (over 20 years).

I've had thousands of students over the years. Now, it is not uncommon to randomly pass them in public places. I do not always remember them, but they remember me.

Students gave me an endearing nickname (which I won't tell here). When I mention this nickname in my introductions, people do not perceive it to be as arrogant as it sounds. Instead, it sticks as authentic and adds to my notoriety. Upon hearing it, others smile and refer to me by this name with respectful affection, even those who were never my student. I am not ashamed to call myself by this name because, as I said above, it's not something I sought for myself. It was given to me by others, and ultimately from above. Therefore, I can boast in all these things as St. Paul did in 2nd Corinthians 11:16-33.

Again, all this was NOT something that I sought after or even wanted for myself. I just felt fed up with my life in America (e.g. family discord, entitled women, feminism, Pr!de stuff, materialism, stupid politics, high taxes and costs of living, etc.), and I wanted something different in life. I also felt touched by a few Taiwanese people I had met in the U.S. After I made that big step to come to Taiwan, everything else just came naturally.

Concluding Statements

I've come to believe that this is how life is (or should be) when we put ourselves where God wants us, and do what it is God wants us to do in life.

I'm not saying that Taiwan is a magical place and/or that every guy should come here to 'find God'. I'm just saying that coming here is what I personally had to do to experience God in a fresh new way. It's more about stepping away from the old and the familiar, out of your comfort zone, and into the unknown — somewhere where you'll be ejected from Autopilot Mode and be forced to trust and rely on God. You'll be amazed at what God can do with a man who places his life fully in His hands.

If you're NOT experiencing this kind of life, then you need to step outside of your regular routine and give yourself some fresh opportunities.

If you feel fearful when the alarm goes off in the morning, and you're dragging your feet and hanging your head as you trudge off to work, only to place yourself among constantly complaining, dishonest, and irresponsible coworkers who feel the same way about their own lives, all just to 'survive' another day, then you need to think about doing something else with your life — something completely different.

If you're NOT discovering and building a new identity that is truly YOU (as opposed to whatever you were 'born into'), someone who is loved, cherished, and celebrated by those around you, then you've yet to find all that God has in store for you.

It's up to you to make that move. Pray for God to lead you to and through the paths everlasting, no matter how challenging it may be. Pray for God to do for you what you cannot do for yourself. Pray for yourself to be who God made you to be (Philippians 3:12-14), and NOT what this world will most certainly mold you into with every tick of the second hand — unless you decide to do something different with your Life.

Related

- Σ Frame: On Choosing a Career (2009/9/11)
- Σ Frame: Why Do Men Need Visions and Dreams? (2018/5/15)
- Σ Frame: Shifting Gears in a Career (2018/7/8)
- Σ Frame: The Three Step Path to God (2018/9/27)
- Σ Frame: Finding Your Work / Purpose / Career (2019/5/15)
- Σ Frame: We're on a mission from God. (2020/8/21)
- Σ Frame: God's Glory is Obstructed by Pride (2023/3/15)
- Σ Frame: Glorifying God Through the Courage of Upholding His Moral Laws (2023/3/17)
- Σ Frame: God is Not Gentle (2023/3/24)
- Σ Frame: Hierarchy of Authority (2023/4/12)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)
- Σ Frame: Cultural Credentialism is Counterfeit Currency (2025/2/14)

Is Loneliness a bug, or an intrinsic feature of the male experience?

Jack · 3 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Covering The Thinking Ape's monologue on Male Loneliness.

Readership: Men
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 2,500 words
Reading Time: 14 minutes

Prologue

The Thinking Ape produced a video talk that fits perfectly within the current theme. So I'm including it here with the full transcript for our discussion and as a reference (edited for reading).

One important question for us to consider (and this is the reason why I'm covering this) is whether male Loneliness is a product of the current sociosexual dynamics we've discussed before (i.e. Devouring Mothers, parental divorce, the simp epidemic, etc.) or is it something forever implicit to the male experience, as Thinking Ape suggests. IOW, is Male Loneliness a bug or a feature? I believe it is the former in the current social realm (WRT women), and the latter in the spiritual realm (WRT God, short of salvation). (Thinking Ape touches on both aspects, but he doesn't make this ontological distinction.) For a broader survey of the causes and catalysts of Loneliness, see Vectors of Loneliness (2025/1/17). Please leave your comments below.

The Thinking Ape: Male Loneliness Is Different.... (2025/1/10) Length: 14:22

Intro

There's been a lot of talk and discussion in recent years around the so-called 'loneliness epidemic' and even to some degree around male loneliness. But in all this discussion around loneliness and specifically male loneliness, I think a lot of the key points about male loneliness have been lost, because there's something very critical and very particular to male loneliness that sets it apart from a broader sense of loneliness.

So if you're talking about the 'loneliness epidemic', what do people usually mean? They mean people without friends, people without partners… You're sort of stuck by yourself. You don't have people to communicate with or spend time with. It's this sort of conventional loneliness and the sense of isolation that arises from that. But if you're looking to construct an ideology of male loneliness, then you'll have to go a little bit deeper than that. It's not just a case of men not having friends or partners, although of course, that is a big part of it. There's a crucial feature about male loneliness that really makes it different, and that is, that it never really stops. It never really ends.

Loneliness and Male Utility

Generally speaking for most men, with the exception of Chads, supermodels, and [celebrities], their existence is predicated on their utility. It's just a sad fact of the world, depending on which side of the argument you stand on. Men need to provide utility — to the world broadly, to the people in their lives, of course, and very specifically to women. That is how men gain human company, broadly speaking, and then if they're really useful, they'll increase their chances of gaining female companionship in a traditional sense. Again, we're setting aside supermodels and Chads here.

The paradox in this is the sad simple fact that regardless of how many times you've proven yourself useful as a man, [you always must continue to perform and produce]. As a consequence, you may have garnered the attention of many people — you might have a wife, a family; but above all, you have responsibilities. All these things ultimately are a form of Busy Work [which serves] to push away the thoughts that you would otherwise have — that you are, at the end of the day, alone … and utterly so.

Normally, people make a distinction between [the "Have's" and the "Have Nots", and associate loneliness with the "Have Nots" in many cases. That is, men who] have no friends, no family, no wife, etc., are just alone, i.e. lonely, … versus [having your life] filled to the brim with tasks and never ending responsibilities and things that you have to do. [All these activities put you into regular contact with others, and so it's hard to think of someone like this as being alone or lonely.]

But you have to ask the question, what happens when you can take a break from all that?

[You'll start migrating towards isolation and loneliness.]

Loneliness and Companionship

Now I'm not just making this up, because I've experienced this myself in previous relationships where I was nominally 'together' with somebody, but I nonetheless felt very alone, even more so than I would have [felt] just being completely alone by myself. And of course, I've had instances where I was all by myself and felt alone too. But that's normal. But even more to the point, I've known married men with wives, with children, who in their Quiet Moments, in their moments of Darkness, concede to themselves (and have conceded to me) that they're actually very very lonely.

This Panacea that we refer to as "Male Utility" is just a cover up, and it took these guys years, and in some cases decades … to realize that, after all this time, they had had the wool pulled over their eyes — by themselves of course, but also by the broader Society, by human beings. Because they thought if they did the right things, if they proved themselves useful and helpful, then they would feel less lonely. But as the late great Robin Williams once pointed out when he said, "I used to think that the worst thing in life was to end up alone. It's not. The worst thing in life is to end up with people who make you feel alone*"*, and that's a situation that most men find themselves in — even Men who have the superficial things that are highly desired. They have a wife, a family, kids, [a secure, well-paying job, a social circle in which they are relevant], etc., but as I said, all of that is just Busy Work — a distraction to keep you preoccupied and to make sure you don't confront the actual situation you find yourself in — that you are alone as a man, and that you always will be.

Social Relevancy is a Function of Male Utility

Are there exceptions? Sure, and a lot of guys would say they don't even think about this because they get so much happiness and joy and contentment from their families, from their children, from their wives, and so on. But what happens if they lose the ability to be useful? Well, the picture can change quite quickly. Again, I've talked to many men over the years who've been married or in relationships, and the worst stories I've heard, I have to be honest about this, are the stories where the guy was basically a utility, where he was a "Beta Bucks", even though the wife treated him more or less fairly. But the minute the man had problems with his health [or his career], everything changed virtually overnight — because his utility was not being delivered anymore.

Yes, a lot of guys say they get so much joy from their children, but I remember one instance of a certain man I talked to some years back, even his children started to look at him differently because his children — not his wife — his children viewed him not just as a father, primarily, but as a deliverer of goods. (BTW, these were two daughters that he had.) When he fell ill to a very debilitating illness (which eventually he got over, but it took a long time) … even his own daughters no longer thought he was as cool as he used to be. Why? Because he couldn't deliver the goods.

Now you could make all sorts of weird arguments and say, "Well that might have been because the mother's influence on the daughters" or "He just chose [a wife] poorly." These are long-standing arguments, of course, that "people just choose poorly". Sure. I suppose [that is true]. But the reality is that most guys don't have a lot of options in a traditional sense. If your options are between being totally alone by yourself (something that most guys can't really deal with) … and living the so-called conventional dream, i.e., having a family, kids, wife, [a home in the suburbs, and so on.] … Well, most guys, if they have the latter option are going to opt for that, but they're not prepared for the underlying reality of that situation, because they think it's fundamentally different in terms of the emotions they feel, their mental state from when they were single and just by themselves.

At the end of the day, the utility of a man remains his best asset, and if he's ever robbed of that, all the positive feelings that people have for him, specifically his wife and even in some cases his own daughters — his own children — these feelings can quickly evaporate.

Existential Male Loneliness

It's a bit of an illusion — this idea that men can remedy their own loneliness by engaging in the traditional [activities] that men are always engaged in, [while carrying the notion that if they are] useful to the world, [then they] will be rewarded. You may be rewarded now. You may be rewarded financially to some degree. You might even be rewarded in terms of just having human company. But [these activities can never dislodge loneliness, but only suppress one's awareness of it.] The underlying feeling of being isolated, of being alone, of being fundamentally misunderstood… That will never go away. [Loneliness is endemic of the Male experience.]

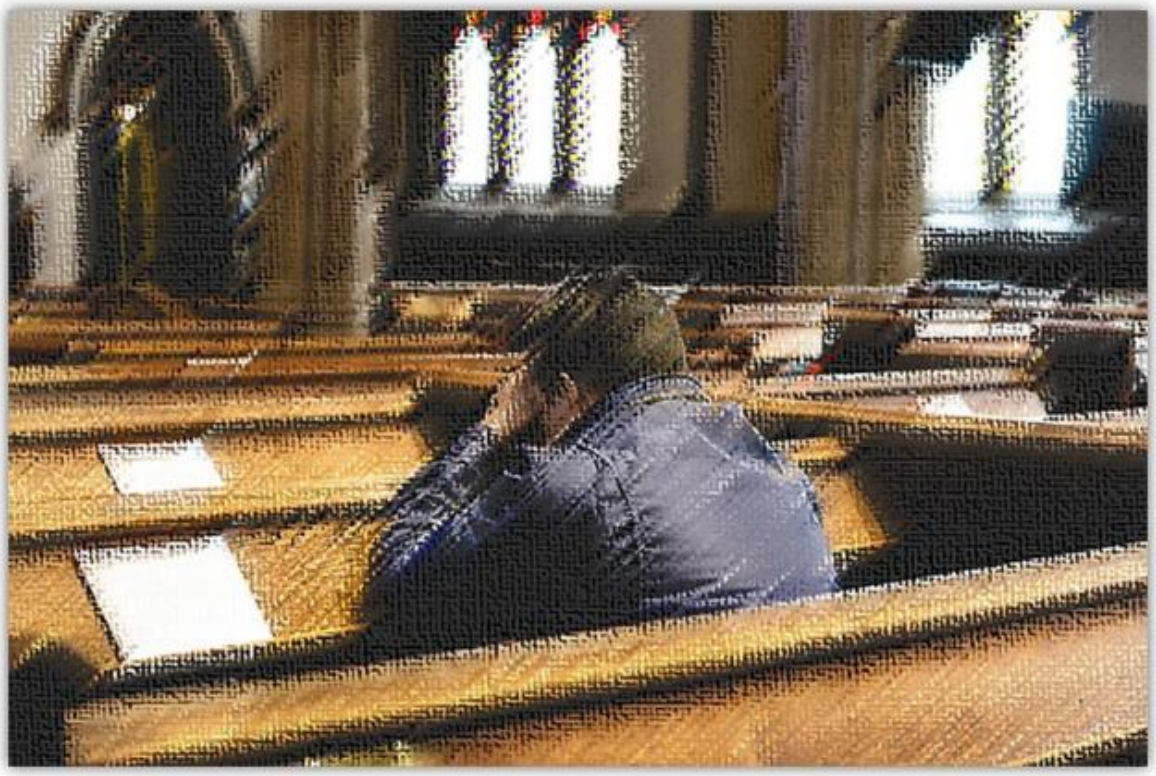
I've talked to too many men over the years, decades even, who have confirmed this again and again and again. In fact, the only people who "get it", [who understand what I'm talking about] … are men who have gone through [this process] themselves and men who can, at the very least, commiserate with each other on this unfortunate fact of male human reality.

Socio-Spiritual Blindness : A Lack of Self-Awareness

If you're a young guy, you're blind to this. You're too lost in all the things that you're doing in an effort to gain utility in the world, or to make yourself appealing, or to make yourself attractive, [the young man's version of Busy Work], that you don't have time to think about the Long Game and the actual underlying reality of your situation.

Later on [when you're building your career], … you're so busy … that you don't have time to think about it then [either].

[You don't really have the opportunity to address this underlying reality] until something happens [in your life that jars you out of your delusions]. It can be anything. It could be a breakup or a divorce or maybe you'll fall ill. [It is not until] those crucial moments that you realize, "Wow! I've been doing all these things but that one feeling that I never wanted to have, that I never wanted to sense, that's still there*."* It's as there as [much as] it was 20 years ago, 30 years ago, 40 years ago, or whatever it might be. Therein lies the rub, unfortunately.



[Again,] the only people who really "get this" are men who are honest with themselves and have the experience to realize this. Most guys don't get this. They really think the solution to their loneliness — that sense of "Cosmic Aloneness" … will always be remedied by simply talking to people, or by having friends, and/or above all, by pursuing relationships, getting married, having a family, [or whatever]. It's fine if men want to do those things, but … they should [NOT] be lulled into a sense of false security.

As I've said many many times, relationships and marriages are like full-time jobs. The only difference is at work, if you're lucky, [the time] when you clock out [at the end of the day] is [the time] when you clock out [of doing and thinking about your work]. You go home. You chill. You watch a film. You play video games. You go for a jog in the park. Whatever. But in a relationship or in a marriage, it's never done. It's a full-time job as a man, because you're always being tested, always being sniffed out for weakness to make sure that you are "worthy enough" of the relationship.

Case Study — Chris Bumstead

Chad Williamson has made many videos about Chris Bumstead. Chris Bumstead is the six-time classic physique Mr. Olympia. He's a multi-millionaire. He looks good. He's tall, ripped to shreds … he's a Chad Lite.

Chad Williamson is usually just playing his audience and not being honest, but here's one of the few videos where CW spoke actual truth.*

In some moment, Bumstead was really Under Pressure, enduring a lot of stress, and so he started to cry. But his wife didn't take umbrage at that. Bumstead said he was so thankful that his wife supported him in that moment of weakness, instead of criticizing him as so many other women like to do to their men when in similar circumstances.

But CW offers some unusual insight in this interview. He said, "you can't be a puddle on the floor 24/7", making the point that Chris Bumstead was 'allowed' to be weak. He said something to the effect of *"Well, you know the reason why [Bumstead] was able to [show weakness and still receive support from his wife] is because he had already reached so far into the clouds with his Fame, with his wealth, with his looks, and all these things." He basically had "money in the bank" — essentially "emotional savings" that prevented his wife from looking down on him because of his Never Ending Success™. His never ending streak of successes, as Mr. Olympia, as a businessman, the fact that he looks really good, and all these things accumulated emotional 'credit' that allowed him this one moment of weakness.

[As Chinese women like to say, "It is better to cry in a Benz than to laugh in a Toyota."]

But Chad Williamson, also correctly, was quick to point out that if you haven't done all the stuff that Chris Bumstead has done, then you don't have any of this "emotional credit" that you can expend.* So if you show weakness, emotional or otherwise, then you were done. You were out of the game.

The problem though is that we're all human beings, including men, and most of us don't have that emotional 'credit' in the bank. If you show weakness, she will instantly tear you to shreds internally, and she will look at you in a completely different way. Her perception of you will forevermore be fundamentally different. And for most men, that's the way it is their entire lives. They're never going to be Chris Bumstead. They're never going to be some super-rich multi-millionaire Chad, and so they'll never have that 'credit'.

That is another reason why men will always be alone. It's not a temporary thing, it is the default State: Whether you are actually alone, physically in relationships, married with kids, whatever it might be, that feeling, that sense of cosmic loneliness, that will always persist.

That said, I take solace in the fact that I know some other men take solace in the fact that at least there are men out there who understand that you might feel a certain way but at least you know you're not the only one.

 I could not find the video segment in which Chris Williamson said these things. If readers know, please leave a comment or link below.*

Related

- The AV Mind (Jordan Peterson): The Moment When A Woman Stops Loving A Man (2024/9/13)
- Σ Frame: Loneliness (2025/1/15)
- Σ Frame: Vectors of Loneliness (2025/1/17)
- Σ Frame: Modern men expect emotional openness with a woman, just like their Devouring Mamas trained them. (2025/2/21)

Celibacy vs Singleness

Jack · 5 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

They are NOT the same. Not anymore.

Readership: All; Men; Single Men; Pastors; Mentors;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness; Overcoming Challenges;
Author's Note: The contents of this post are based on comments under previous posts. Links to the original comments are embedded in the initial words.
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Foreword

Commenters Joe2 and SurfDumb introduced some pertinent insights about the modern 'plight' of singleness. Their ideas have since been mentioned several times in many comments and a few posts (see posts listed below under Related, published after 2024). Here, I'll add a few of my own epiphanies to explain and expand their ideas into an exposition for our discussion and future reference. Their ideas are closely related, I think, but I'll present them in 2 separate posts. This post will examine Joe2's idea, and the next will explore SurfDumb's idea.

Celibacy vs Singleness

Joe2 brought our attention to the differentiation between celibacy and singleness that we are now seeing in the SMP and especially in the Christian MMP.

He wrote,

> "We are all born into this world single, so being single in and of itself is not a gift but simply a fact of life that affects all humans.
>
> The Gift of Singleness, as mentioned by Paul in I Corinthians 7, must be a gift that is unique, otherwise he is stating the obvious.
>
> I believe Paul is using the gift of singleness as a euphemism for the gift of celibacy. A Christian man with a normal libido has a desire for intimacy and sexual release. On his own effort, he can suppress the expression of these desires only for so long without causing some psychological or emotional damage or resorting to the use of P0rn, etc. Yet with the gift of celibacy, it is possible for a man to do just that.
>
> What we are experiencing now is a forced celibacy for Christian men with a normal libido without a concomitant outpouring of the gift of celibacy. Yes, some men have this gift, but it's very few."

In so many words, Joe2 is proposing that…

The Gift of Celibacy ≠ The Gift of Singleness

You read that right. Not anymore.

They should be synonymous for a Christian, but the current social conditions are leading us to reconsider this assumption because they are NOT the same for some men (depending on the individual man's constitution). However, this carries a lot of implications that we have not yet thought through.

So here are some things to consider.

The Gift of Celibacy Should Lead to Sanctification

In terms of thinking through the Biblical passages about The Gift of Singleness (as St. Paul described of himself in 1 Corinthians 7:25-40), the idea of being able to be satisfied as celibate makes sense. In this case, Single = Celibate.

OTOH, if a man finds that his (biological) libido is so demanding, urgent, onerous, and problematic that it keeps him perpetually tied up in a fit of frustration (i.e. lust, p0rn, jerking off, etc.) and thus prevents him from growing in faith, then it stands to reason that he does NOT have The Gift of Celibacy, whether he is single or not. In this case, Single ≠ Celibate.

Joe2 thought St. Paul was referring to both ideas as one and the same, but he could not square the implications in the current SMP/MMP in which marriage is not an option for many men. The implication is that men who do NOT have the Gift of Celibacy will not be able to find Sanctification, or at least, not until their libido recedes in late middle age.

The Gift of Singleness Allows One to Avoid "Trouble in the Flesh"

In verse 25, Paul writes that he had no commandment from the Lord concerning virgins, but advised people to stay single in order to avoid "trouble in the flesh" (i.e. all the intersexual quandaries explained by The Red Pill). We can only speculate as to what St. Paul might say in the present conditions. However, SurfDumb observed that the modern version of the Gift of Singleness lies in realizing that the best choice for some men is to remain single, which more or less agrees with St. Paul's stance.

He writes,

> "In the past, the Gift of Singleness was generally recognized in those with a flaccid, limp, or non-existing libido that permitted them to exercise full self-control and thereby escape the impetus of carnal desires and the impurities of lust. But if the Gift of Singleness is regarded differently due to the times we are now in, the Gift of Singleness might be in realizing that the juice isn't worth the squeeze. Maybe the Gift of Singleness now includes men who decide they can glorify God better by NOT being attached to a 40% divorce risk, and 80% burden-risk."

Right. But if a man does NOT have The Gift of Celibacy, then he's going to have trouble in the flesh no matter if he is single or married. He'll have trouble with his wife if he marries, or else he'll have trouble with his own fleshly nature if he is single. There's no way around it.

The Trouble of Having Neither The Gift of Celibacy Nor The Gift of Singleness

The standard Christian view has always been that marriage is the only permissible context for sexual intercourse. However, Marriage may very well NOT be an effective solution to the problem of Lust. But either way, nowadays, many men are being forced into a situation where marriage is not really an option.

The trouble with not finding a wife is that it leaves a young man who doesn't have The Gift of Celibacy frustrated and stuck in a rut of lust (i.e. an addiction to p0rn and jerking off) which may destroy any chance of spiritual growth for most of these men.

Moreover, NOT having either The Gift of Celibacy or The Gift of Singleness means that a man is going to have perpetual trouble in the flesh with no avenue of sanctification. That sounds like hell.

For men in this condition, there is another issue to consider as to whether regular sexual congress (i.e. marriage in a Christian context), or to be more amorally specific, regular ejaculation (e.g. masturbation or sex), is an actionable and effective solution to this difficulty. Assuming that it is (as St. Paul suggested of marriage in 1 Corinthians 7:9), then what are the conditions that would allow this need to be sufficiently satiated such to allow one to get on with a normal life and/or grow in one's spiritual life? Is full legal marriage really necessary, or is ejaculation sufficient?

I hate to encourage this, but if a single man is already in a habit of getting off somehow, then it is absolutely necessary for him to determine how ejaculation outside a sanctified marital union affects his spiritual life, especially if it is detrimental in any way. (See posts listed below for starters.)

Conclusions

In summary, today's situation is the same as what St. Paul described concerning those who have the Gift of Celibacy / Singleness, but it is quite different for those who do NOT, because marriage is either NOT an option, or it's a very unwise option (leading to things worse than lust), or it cannot solve the problem of lust.

From a spiritual perspective, it has been suggested that accepting RP truths may be enough, but again, this only applies to those men who already have the Gift of Celibacy and just need some mental floss to accept it. For others, taking the Red Pill may NOT be enough to resolve the problem of desire.

Further, we have no social structure (e.g. Christian community) that is conducive to forming Christian marriages. Worse, widespread sexual immorality and the feminist tinged teachings that typify every young person's upbringing prevent young people from setting a good trajectory that would be necessary to ensure a good outcome.

Without this structure, every single person is left to fend for themselves in finding a mate. Then there is the confounding issue of NOT even being able to discern an opportunity for a legitimate course of action towards a promising marriage.

How can men who have neither The Gift of Celibacy (able to find sanctification through abstaining) nor The Gift of Singleness (able to avoid trouble in the flesh) get out of this rut in the present SMP/MMP? For the sake of young men's souls, we must brainstorm on these things and pray for an answer.

Red Pill Apostle offered a bullet list of solutions here, but none are quick or easy, and all come with tradeoffs.

Thank you, Joe2. This is really useful for us to ponder.

Related

- Σ Frame: How is illicit sex related to one's spiritual state? (2019/5/22)
- Σ Frame: Why is illicit sex so enticing, and so prevalent? (2019/5/25)
- The Federalist (Matthew Cochran): Most People Are Called To Marriage; It's Not Idolatrous To Act Accordingly (2019/8/30)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual / Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Lust (2023/2/10)

- Σ Frame: How P0rn and Premarital Sex affects one's view of Women (2023/2/20)
- Σ Frame: Is Sexual Experience a Stepping Stone to Faith? (2023/2/22)
- Σ Frame: The New Face of MGTOW (2025/1/20)
- Σ Frame: The Rise of Middle-Class MGTOW (2025/1/22)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Sh!t Sammich (2025/2/7)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Soft MGTOW (2025/2/10)
- Σ Frame: Overcoming the Spiritual-Sexual Poverty Mentality (2025/2/24)
- Σ Frame: We always know the right thing to do after the right time to do it has passed. (2025/2/26)

The 'IT' Factor

Jack · 7 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Some men have 'IT' within themselves to die breeding, others don't.

Readership: All; Men; Single Men; Pastors; Mentors;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness; Overcoming Challenges;
Author's Note: Some contents of this post are based on comments under previous posts. Links to the original comments are embedded in the initial words.
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Foreword

Commenters Joe2 and SurfDumb introduced some pertinent insights about the modern 'plight' of singleness. Their ideas have since been mentioned several times in many comments and a few posts (listed below under Related, post 2024). The last post examined Joe2's idea, while this one ponders SurfDumb's observation and ties it all together.

The SMP Stalemate

Today's SMP/MMP is very VERY selective, hastening future social collapse in some areas.* The selection by women is so ~~stiff~~ limp and unforgiving now, that even men with opportunities are choosing to opt out. As Joe2, Surfdumb, Thedeti, et al. have pointed out, women are such pompous persnickety princesses that no matter how well set up you are, no matter how high up the SMV ladder you are, no matter how many women are available to you, the juice STILL isn't worth the squeeze.

Moreover, the choice of being selected is beginning to fall back on men, and we see that some men who are 'chosen' are choosing NOT to be chosen.

 Fertility is well below replacement rate in East Asia, Europe, and North America. For example, TFR (2022): Hong Kong (0.7-0.8), South Korea (0.78-0.9), Taiwan (0.87), Singapore (1.1), China (1.2), Italy (1.24), Japan (1.3), Thailand (1.32), Vermont (1.35), Germany (1.46), U.K. (1.57), U.S. (1.66), France (1.79), Vietnam (1.94), India (2.01).*
 The meaning of 'chosen' is open to interpretation. It could mean "chosen by women" for sex and/or marriage, or it could mean "chosen by God" for fathering future generations.*

SurfDumb's Observation

In regard to the present conditions, SurfDumb wrote (edited and rearranged for reading),

> "[When I was growing up,] The men in my neighborhood were home for dinner, relaxed in the evenings; they weren't rebuilding cars or lifting twice their weight in their free-time. (I mention a car because my Dad had a 32 Ford coupe but didn't have time for it and sold it.) They all had 50 to 70-year marriages. [There was only] One divorce on the block, a dentist that looked every bit the 1970s swinger.
>
> It seems like that [kind of marital life] isn't available [to young men anymore] because … much more is needed now (at least in potential) to meet the bar of a Christian husband. (Granted, that's only my impression.) Why can't a dude grow in the Lord, and that be enough?"
>
> "If a reader thinks to himself, "I don't plan on trying to be a church leader, dead-lift twice my body weight, be a sex dynamo, move for job advancement or church but will be a Mary and pray regularly, help where / when needed, stay in shape, save, enjoy friends…", then I think a logical conclusion would be "maybe that man shouldn't get married then." If that lack of drive is evidence of singleness, then that is good to know, especially if it's godly wisdom. Otherwise, it's a crab-bucket situation, per Oscar's useful word-picture.
>
> [This is] not an attack on [those men who DO do the work to achieve and/or improve themselves, or] believers either, for having 5 or 10 talents, and doubling them for the Lord. However, I don't see from my experience or from my biblical understanding that PSALMing-up is what the Bible calls for most men to strive for, or what's needed to be a good husband. But it could mean such lack of ambition, in many cases (LocustsPlease is a good example of the exception), does mean a Gift of Singleness because it means a man who isn't eager to claw and climb doesn't have "enough" intrinsic desire for women."

> "[For the average man who doesn't have this drive,] Deti's answer actually makes the most sense: 80% of men are invisible and a good marriage isn't likely currently."
>
> "There is some connection to big doings and what the lack of it means that I am not explaining well. It's as if the real lesson at Σ Frame is that if you don't have an extraordinary ability, then this site isn't for you. It's that "not for you" aspect that is tied to The Gift of Celibacy / Singleness in my mind."

Reframing The Issue

SurfDumb attempted to identify The Gift of Singleness in terms of a lack of something, e.g. personal ambitions, a (natural) drive to compete and excel, an intrinsic desire for women, perceived SMV, etc. But let's not be disrespectful to these men by assuming that they are single because they're incomplete or missing something. (That's a femcentric estimation of men, BTW. Also, I don't believe SurfDumb intended any disrespect, but I do think some readers could take it that way.) Instead, it is better to say that these men have been graced with the Gift of being able to find sanctisfaction without having to wrangle with all the troubles of the flesh that necessitate taking The Red Pill. (This was one of the main points of the previous post.)

In the previous post, I posed the question, "How can men who have NEITHER The Gift of Celibacy (able to find sanctification through abstaining) NOR The Gift of Singleness (able to avoid trouble in the flesh) get out of this rut in the present SMP/MMP?" But this approach assumes that sanctification is only possible by finding a 'solution' to the present mating conundrum (which has not been found, despite years of Red Pill contemplations).

There is another possibility which we deplore considering. What if it is God's will … NOT for men to escape this crucible, but to go THROUGH it?

Tomb Refugee said,

> "Those who are committed to serving the Lord will find that He provides. When He does not, it is because He wants us to endure without."

Half the battle is in recognizing one's limitations early in life and accepting them, because this indicates where God's grace is at work in one's life. Ironically, it gets doable when you realize that there's only so much you can do and the rest is up to God. It's actually life-changing.

Something to think about.

A New Question

So let's turn the question around.

For those men who have NEITHER The Gift of Celibacy NOR The Gift of Singleness, what DO they have?

Let's consider the idea that these men have something 'extra', something which I'll call The 'IT' Factor for the time being.

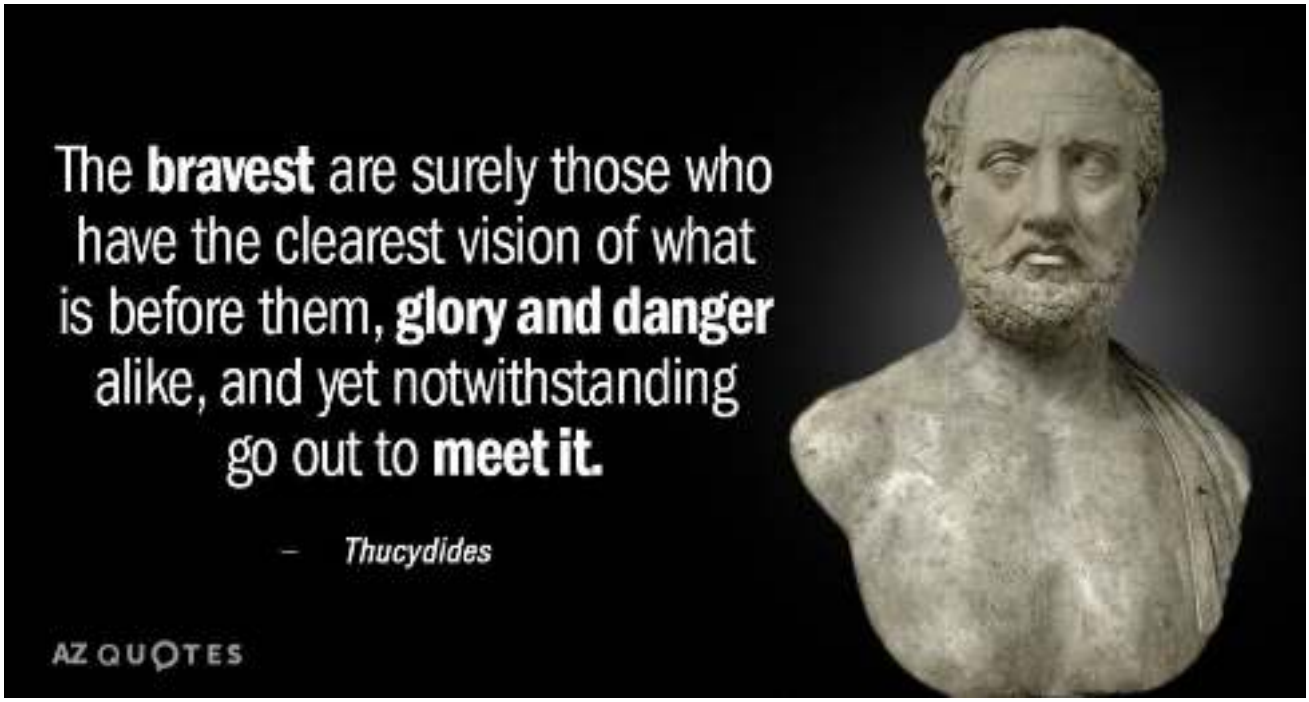
Here is where we begin to see some possibilities, some damning, some redeeming, some mentioned before.

- T levels that break the meter.
- Personal ambitions, for good or ill.
- A (natural) drive to compete and excel.
- A fervid desperation for poking P00nani.
- Too confused about themselves to know how to function.
- An intrinsic robust desire for women / a wife / children / family.
- Having the bravery (or foolhardiness) of being open to a woman's influence.
- Too lost or weak to pull themselves together without a woman's help or influence.

Readers are invited to add to this list.

More, why would God want them to endure life without these Gifts? What is the cosmic purpose?

All of the above are human / fleshly factors. But from a spiritual perspective, I think there must be a reason why God did NOT give the Gifts of Celibacy / Singleness to certain men, and I'll guess it's because He intends for these men to fight and strive, and/or to procreate, in spite of the present circumstances. There can be no glory without peril and struggle. I'm sure there's more, but only God knows what.



The 'IT' Factor may provide an answer to these questions.

The 'IT' Factor

Suppose there is an 'IT' factor that is present in those men who are being 'chosen' for marriage and/or procreation, and who are also choosing or willing to be 'chosen'.

So what is the 'IT' Factor that would set a man apart from inheriting the blessed peace of singleness?

Obviously, 'IT' has something to do with a man's sexual constitution and/or his spiritual disposition. But also, 'IT' is that hard core kernel of spaznutz within a stricken man that drives him to disregard the immense risks of playing a game that is adversely stacked against him, namely, pursuing a woman in a thoroughly debased SMP and taking a wife and/or fathering children. They're literally dying to breed.

Red Pill lore would suggest that this 'IT' factor would include things like Charisma / Rizz, Confidence, Game, Height, Looks, Athleticism, Money, Power, Status, or some special brew of these traits. But what we are seeing now is that the mating match up is no longer so cut and dried along these lines as before.

Yes, these things do factor in as qualifications. "You must be this tall to ride." We do see that those men who have these qualities continue to be outstanding contestants in the mating game. But now, it is not just those men who are confident, or handsome, or Game saavy, or wealthy, or set up well in terms of social influence and status, or what have you, who are still in the mating game. A lot of these men are opting out. They don't have 'IT' within themselves to risk lifelong hardship and certain loss just for the hell of it.

Within those men who embark on the hard road simply because it is hard, or else, wander through a convoluted detour if they find the way is blocked, or haunted by savage demons, their intrinsic 'IT' factor comes into play and motivates them to sally forth. Like men who bravely march off to face a certain grisly death in battle, these men see marriage as a masochistic male version of YOLO and rush in where angels fear to tread, fiercely shouting "Geronimo!"

Not for the faint of heart.

Related

- The Federalist (Matthew Cochran): Most People Are Called To Marriage; It's Not Idolatrous To Act Accordingly (2019/8/30)
- Σ Frame: The New Face of MGTOW (2025/1/20)
- Σ Frame: The Rise of Middle-Class MGTOW (2025/1/22)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Sh!t Sammich (2025/2/7)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Soft MGTOW (2025/2/10)
- Σ Frame: Overcoming the Spiritual-Sexual Poverty Mentality (2025/2/24)
- Σ Frame: We always know the right thing to do after the right time to do it has passed. (2025/2/26)
- Σ Frame: Identity (2025/2/28)
- Laughing at Feminism: Men are saviors (2025/3/2)

Review: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men into Boys

Jack · 10 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Where have all the good men gone?

Readership: All; Men; Single Men; Married Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 2,400 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes

A Summary of the Book

Kay Hymowitz wrote a book entitled, Manning Up: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men into Boys (published on 2012/3/6).

In this book, Hymowitz paints the picture that women are coming up in the world, advancing in earnings, education, career achievements, and other such accomplishments, often times above and beyond their male peers. Meanwhile, men have regressed, she says. Instead of pursuing careers and accomplishments commensurate to their female peers, men in their 20s are enjoying an extended childhood, filling their leisure time with video games, Adam Sandler movies, indie bands, beer pong parties, and the company of inebriated women. Unlike women, men have no biological clock telling them it's time to grow up. According to Hymowitz, they don't need to, because women have essentially filled those roles and responsibilities.

Kay Hymowitz

In light of these observations, Kay Hymowitz argues that the gains of the feminist revolution have had a dramatic, unanticipated effect on the current generation of young men. The old life scripts are gone, and young men now find themselves adrift. Without a firm male hand to guide them into clearly defined adult roles, lads become louts, and boys remain 'guys' long after they should have already become men.

Hymowitz summarizes this juncture of modern male development, in which boys become guys (i.e. adult children) before they become men sometime in their 30s, as a life stage she calls 'pre-adulthood'. Meanwhile, women have taken over the spheres that men have traditionally occupied in society (i.e. breadwinner, protector, and provider).

Hymowitz asks, "Where have all the good men gone?", and concludes that it's time for these young men to "man up." Since then, we've heard women and liberal megaphones (including some men) repeat these catchphrases again and again all over the web. (Hymowitz' book did not introduce these phrases, but it did popularize them.)

Hymowitz' characterizations are rather accurate point-by-point, but IMO it would be more truthful to switch these descriptions of the sexes. That is, women are immature, selfish, baby girls pretending to be entitled princesses, and men are the ones who are dissatisfied with women, dating, and marriage. I say this because men, for the most part, have never lost the idea of what intersexual relationships should be like, while women keep toying with gender roles, redefining marriage, and imagining themselves 'equal' to men in ways that they obviously are not (and don't even want to be, truth be told), and have denied the Natural Order. They are also very fearful and myopic decision-makers, and are therefore very poor at it, whereas men have always responded quite reasonably to the conditions on the ground (generally speaking).

The problem with Hymowitz' world view is that she does not recognize that women have abandoned their traditional roles as wives and mothers in favor of assuming a false role of authority in society (afforded by modern Feminism) and pursuing many other aspirations in which they are seen to excel over men.

Controversy

Immediately after an excerpt of the book appeared in the Wall Street Journal on 2011/2/19 [Archive], waves of Internet backlash chastised Hymowitz's "child-man" theory as anecdotal, man-hating, and "Reverse sex!sm!"

The Manosphere boiled over with hot screeds from Aaron Clarey, BadgerHut, and many others.

Roissy explained why Men are thoroughly unmotivated to "Man Up!"

> "I understand the Chateau has been mentioned as an outpost of loathsome, bowel-shaking truth in Kay Hymowitz's new book Manning Up.
>
> Dearest Kay, please tell the Chateau readership…

> What exactly does marriage offer to guys like us who have the tools to meet, f_ck and love women?
>
> It's not like marriage by its very nature isn't a raw deal for men. Even the supposed health benefits of marriage for men are a lie. Assuming the law was fair and not the man-hating femc_nt swamp of legalistic @ss-rogering that it is today, marriage would still be a bigger sacrifice for men than it is for women, simply because men are more naturally promiscuous than women and thus have more to lose by cuffing themselves to a legally enforced institution of monogamy. But now throw in the divorce industrial complex, the house, the kids, alimony, a washed up p_ssy distended from riding the c0ck carousel during her lean years, and all the rest, and that just makes the case against marriage even more airtight than it was before.
>
> PS: Any appeals to nobility or honor will not count as a valid answer. Instead, they will be seen for what they are: a flagrant, flailing attempt to shame men into making choices that further feminists' interests while undermining men's interests."
>
> Chateau Heartiste: Game And Life Trajectory (2011/2/24)

Vox Day opined that it's not only men who need to grow up,

> "The corresponding effect to the "men are delaying maturity" theme, recently written about by Kay Hymowitz and others, is the explosion of female narcissism. Once believed to be a personality disorder primarily displayed by males, it's now 50/50 (and rising). It's no wonder that many men believe that there are no good women left, at least not in the U.S."
>
> Alpha Game: NAWALT and You (2011/3/11)

To sum up all the controversy surrounding the prerelease teasers…

- Men resented the disrespect of being called 'immature boys', and being told to "Man Up!" on top of the already bad deal they were getting from women in the SMP/MMP.
- Women hated being caricatured as (relatively) traditional marriage-minded women who are expecting and waiting for men to "man up" and marry them. (In the minds of liberal women, men are irrelevant, so it really shouldn't matter if men are marriage-minded or not.)

In an article at The Daily Beast: Why Are Men Angry: Manning Up Author Kay Hymowitz Explains (2011/2/27)

[Alternate Source], Hymowitz herself weighed in on the caustic criticism the reviews of her yet-to-be-published book had received.

To her credit, she stuck to the difficult task of explaining mens' viewpoint, and she even cited the Greats of the Manosphere 1.0, Roissy and David DeAngelo, to explain why men are disappointed with women, dating, and marriage. Unfortunately (but perhaps wisely), Hymowitz' article did not address the reasons why women disagreed with her stance.

The Follow Up Review

In a move to capitalize on the surrounding furor (and shape the new narrative for women's consumption), Jenna Goudreau, writing at Forbes, reviewed Hymowitz's stance in a piece entitled, Has The Rise Of Women Turned Men Into Boys? (2011/3/3). Goudreau interviewed Hymowitz and extracted the following viewpoints from her.

Jenna Goudreau

- The "child-man" persona was not introduced by Hymowitz, but grew out of the "Frat house humor" that debuted in the 90s. Note: Hymowitz took it seriously, NOT as humor.
- Hymowitz said she is not engaging in "male bashing" but is actually sympathetic to men who find themselves in a post-feminist world. News Flash: Pitying men IS male bashing.
- Hymowitz says adulthood begins at marriage, and since the age of first marriage is being rolled back, this increases the number of "pre-adults". See next section.
- Hymowitz defines "pre-adulthood" as the period of life in which college-educated, unmarried, young adults live in cities and are developing their careers. She said, "It's taking a lot longer to grow up because it takes so much longer to get educated for work." See next section.
- When Goudreau asked Hymowitz why there is a need to define a new life phase (i.e. pre-adulthood"), she explains that people are redefining what it means to become an adult. Under the old paradigm, an adult is one who contributes to the next generation. But now, people have the idea that adulthood is to be self-sufficient. See next section.

Definitions of Adulthood

Hymowitz conceptualizes a male life phase of 'pre-adulthood', which is contrasted against her description of adulthood as (1) "one who contributes to the next generation", (2) beginning at marriage, and (3) being self-sufficient. These are all apt descriptions of adulthood in various contexts, but they do not define adulthood. Defining adulthood and marriage in this way creates a false construct of maturity that opens up a lot of holes.

First of all, Hymowitz is clinging to an outdated stereotype that married individuals are more likely to act as responsible adults. This assumption was generally valid up until the feminist revolution, but not anymore. Some of the most immature and irresponsible behaviors seen today are coming from married women.

Building on the claim that adulthood begins at marriage, it implies that anyone who is not married is not really an adult. This is also demonstrably not true.

Moreover, there are some obvious problems with tying adulthood to marital status, namely that it omits key personal characteristics such as age, agency, autonomy, and maturity from the definition. For example, a girl who marries at 17 may not have actually reached adulthood, while a 30-year-old single man would not be considered an adult.

Side Note: Ancient Hebrew culture regarded mens' age of maturity to be 30. This is why Jesus did not begin His ministry until that age.

Secondly, the other concept of adulthood, "one who contributes to the next generation", conveniently omits any mention of, and thereby fails to account for how women prioritizing education and careers, postponing marriage as late as they can get away with, and playing the field in the meantime, is NOT "contributing to the next generation", as this would imply that neither men nor women in their 20s are adults. Men for the reasons she pointed out, but also women for the fact that they've been pursuing the Feminist Life Script, not marriage and families, since at least the 1990s, if not earlier.

Third, defining adulthood as "one who contributes to the next generation" in the current state of marital instability will be interpreted as "one who supports women's (poor) life choices" which would include various benefits like child support or welfare payments to women whether they be married or not, including those who unwisely chose to be single mothers and those who foolishly rejected their marriages.

Since today's women routinely reject male authority over their lives and prefer other forms of social security, another interpretation of this phrase might also be "one who pays taxes", and we've seen evidence for this assumption. I don't think this is what Hymowitz was thinking, but that's how it is perceived by the Liberal Left.

Lastly, in light of the above considerations, Hymowitz's concept of 'pre-adulthood' preemptively assumes that men are not adults simply because they're not actively contributing to society and/or living up to women's expectations (if we're being honest).

As you can see, all these redefinitions of adulthood boil down to women judging male maturity in terms of their utility to female imperatives. (Many Manosphere authors have observed this, but have not explained it as I have here.) For those interested in further reading, Matthew E. Cochran wrote a very good explanation of the socioeconomic impact of male utility in his essay, The Fisherman's Choice (2013/12/17).

Epilogue

In the years since this book was published, Hymowitz' insights, though novel and controversial at the time, have grown to become a self-fulfilling prophecy.

As the regular Red Pill readers know, the real reason why women who want to (someday) get married have been struggling with love, marriage, a couple kids, and the white picket fence not happening according to the Feminist Life Script Phase 2: Sticking the Landing, is because they insist on having a top SMV man (<5%* of the population and falling), and refuse to settle for anything less. The reality is that 95% of men (including those who are willing to commit to a marriage) are NOT the top 5%* men that women want and who are thus prone to play the field.

 This 5% figure is representative. In reality, this number has shifted from the top 20% in the 2000s, to the top 10% in the 2010s, 5% by 2020, and then rapidly dwindling to less than 1% today.*

Looking back, this intersex stalemate had been simmering in the SMP since the turn of the century (indicated by, for example, the postponement of marriage and the rise of Pick Up Artistry), but Hymowitz's book followed by a steady stream of dramatizations from Kate Bolick [example] marked a sudden eruption of open intersexual belligerencies, and an accelerated disintegration of the SMP ensued.

Kate Bolick in 2011, age 39.

It was the Golden Age for players and carouselers (2005-2015). But within a few short years, all the good men figured out that they were excluded from the game and that they'd never qualify, so they cut their losses and moved on to other things in life — just not things that would directly benefit women or society. Hence the meteoric rise of MGTOW (~2014). Nowadays, the MGTOW lifestyle is so common that it is no longer referred to as MGTOW.

So to answer Hymowitz's question … THAT is where all the good men have gone. First they didn't measure up to women's astronomically hyperinflated expectations, then they became invisible to women's hypergamic senses, and then they gave up and went MGTOW. Of course, all of this is amplified by female sexual promiscuity (AKA 'women's liberation'), which is the root cause of all this mess.

Since then, women have continued to "come up in the world", as it is said, and more and more men have been checking out. In ever increasing fashion, just as Hymowitz described, men have had to deal with being regarded as immature boys, and women have become more vocal about their dissatisfactions with men, dating, and marriage.

It's time to flip the script.

Only recently, this trend has begun to change. In late 2023, the "Pity Men" narrative began to abate after Jack and Thedeti took a few cultural mouthpieces to task. In 2024, a crack in The Wall appeared when a wave of female voices began confessing their sins (although still short of repentance) and started asking women (NOT men) how they could do better.

But Hymowitz couldn't have foreseen how all this would play out back in 2011.

Or did she?

Maybe she did, but instead of warning women of the longitudinal consequences of their behaviors and choices, she chose solidarity with Team Woman™ and swept it under the bed?

But even if she had pointed out this truth, would it have mattered anyway? Would women have listened? Heh. If she did, her book would've never received as much attention as it did.

Related

- BadgerHut: Obligation Masculinity: Kay Hymowitz and Her Clueless Brethren (2011/2/23)
- Dalrock: Deflation (2013/3/1)

- Dalrock: Why aren't men responding to economic signals? (2013/3/29)
- Wall Street Journal (James Taranto): Are Boys Irrational? (2013/12/16) [Archive]
- Dalrock: Progress (2013/12/17)
- Matthew E. Cochran: The Fisherman's Choice (2013/12/17)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Aristocratic Hypergamy (2021/5/14)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Womens' Response to MGTOW (2021/7/19)
- Σ Frame: Origins of the "Immature Boy" Stereotype (2024/5/22)
- Wintery Knight: The denial of female accountability is causing the decline of marriage (2025/2/24)

Claiming Disability to Receive Benefits

Jack · 12 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The "Have Not's" envy of the "Have's" is a politically incorrect offense worthy of ¡Sc!eNt!f!c! research.

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness; Weaponizing;
Length: 2,500 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes

Intro

It is not uncommon for soldiers to go AWOL, or to feign illness, or to injure or even maim themselves as a last-ditch attempt to avoid going to battle.

We see a similar treachery among women going AWOL, when they…

- Intentionally postpone marriage in order to waste their peak SMV and prime childbearing years on ~~promiscuity~~ getting an education and starting a career.
- Turn down marriage proposals from good men in order to chase after Ch@ds for another 2.3 years before settling with said good man.
- Use abortion as a form of birth control.
- Have children out of wedlock in order to claim (more) court-ordered or government benefits.
- Abandon their marriages after waking up to what is required from them in marriage in order to make the marriage work (i.e. ¡SuBm!sS!oN!).

I've heard that some Australian couples will intentionally NOT get married because the taxes and benefits are less advantageous for the married in those parts.

Well, believe it or not, there is a group of researchers who believe that !ncels are intentionally lowering their SMV in order to claim victimhood status, presumably in an effort to escape their duty to love, respect, and serve their female overlords, which are presumed to include all the women of the human race.

Michael Halpin, Department of Sociology and Social Anthropology, Dalhousie University, Canada.
Here's the paper I'm talking about.

Halpin, M. (2022). Weaponized Subordination: How !ncels Discredit Themselves to Degrade Women. Gender & Society, 36(6), 813-837. https://doi.org/10.1177/08912432221128545

This paper is discussed on the forum !ncels and is summarized in an article at The Conversation (Michael Halpin, Finlay Maguire): Yes, the !ncel community has a sexism problem, but we can do something about it (2023/6/11).

In spite of being ¡Sc!eNt!f!c!, supposedly, this paper is explicitly W0ke and thus requires swimming through the jargon to obtain a sensible translation into Red Pillese. If deciphering and interpreting the loquacious language of Liberals is not your cup of crap, then kindly skip to the conclusions.

What is Weaponized Subordination?

Initially, I was very confused about what 'Weaponized Subordination' means. Is this like civil disobedience or passive resistance?

In the research article, Halpin defines 'Weaponized Subordination' as when…

> "!ncels use their perceived subordination to legitimate hegemonic practices. […] Put simply, !ncels strategically discredit themselves to justify their denigration of women."

At first reading, I had the impression that Halpin was arguing that men lower their social value / SMV by identifying as an !ncel and/or engaging in behaviors associated with !ncels, and that men will intentionally do this in order to avail of some kind of payoff (hence the title of my essay). (I don't think many men would be cruddy enough to do this, but at least this makes sense.)

According to Halpin, the payoff is having a justification for h@ting women — a license to ill. But Halpin doesn't address any incentives for why men would have evil and/or spiteful intent towards women, other than subtly insinuating that !ncels are hateful and m!s0gyn!st!c by nature. In reality, women, especially fem!n@zis, are more likely than men to possess evil and/or spiteful intent towards men, especially !ncels.

Still unsure of what he's talking about, I looked for some specific instances of "How !ncels Discredit Themselves to Degrade Women" to further my understanding.

In the section entitled, Weaponized Subordination, Halpin describes several behaviors that he says are instances of 'Weaponized Subordination'.

- Ch@dfishing — Creating a fake dating profile with an attractive man's photo and then sh!tlording over women who respond excitedly to the profile.
- What I would describe as Cross-Cultural Hypergamy — gloating over foreign women going gaga over Western Wh!te men.
- R@c!@l stereotyping, e.g. saying "Asian women are 'noodlewh0res'."
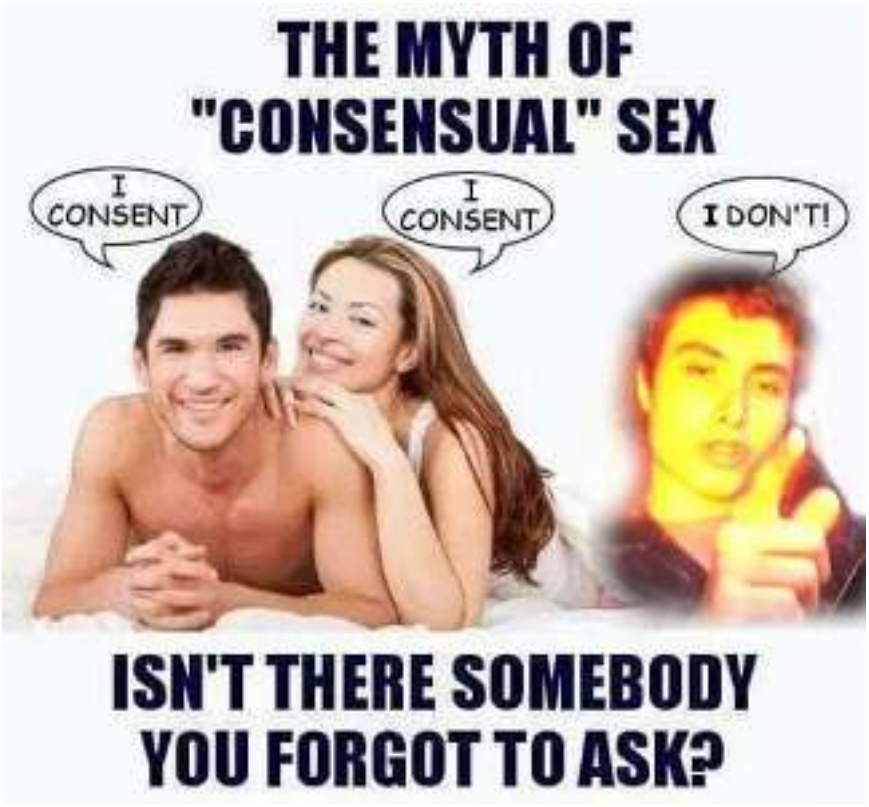
- Reframing inequalities between men in the SMP as an ethical issue.
- Feeling humiliated and disrespected after unwillingly witnessing the sexual encounter(s) of a higher SMV roommate in a college dormitory.
- !ncels stated desire for systemic male supremacy and the elimination of women's rights (e.g., banning abortion, birth control, and divorce).
- Demanding the complete subjugation of all women and/or a regulated traditional SMP/MMP as a solution to intrasexual inequalities, viz. "commodifying women" and "sexual redistribution".
- References to mass murdərərs who are also purported to be !ncels, e.g. Ell!0t R0dgər.



To sum up 'Weaponized Subordination' in my own words, I see five common denominators:

1. Evidence of natural hierarchies, both inter and intrasexual.
2. Celebration of masculine dominance and castigation of feminine dominance.
3. Envy of the sexual opportunities enjoyed by Ch@ds and St@ceys.
4. Exposing the unseemly behaviors of female sexuality.
5. Reframing all of the above as 'm!s0gyny'.

A Word on 'Weaponizing'

While writing an earlier essay on this topic, Weaponizing (2024/7/29), I studied a few articles and research papers about how stuff is 'weaponized' in an effort to understand what is meant by this term.

AFAICT, the colloquial meaning of 'weaponize' is to exploit something (e.g. an ideology), for the purpose of attacking a person or group, or for spreading discord.

In Weaponizing (2024/7/29), I concluded that whenever this word is used (e.g. in cultural media) it usually conveys the viewpoint that one finds themselves at the uncomfortable brunt end of an unassailable truth, and so one reverts to vituperative defamation in response. The 'weapon' being referred to is, in fact, the sword of truth. (2 Corinthians 6:7; Ephesians 6:17; Hebrews 4:12) Thus, an accusation of "Weaponizing" is likely to be based on a twisted ressentimentalism. (Click on the link to read about several ways that 'weaponizing' appears.)

We see the same phenomenon in Halpin's paper. Halpin ressentimentalizes the Natural Order as 'm!s0gyny'. He shames !ncel's defamation of immoral women in order to avoid facing the validity of their views. He 'Weaponizes' the concept of 'Weaponization' to discredit !ncels. A double reverse freeze frame.

Halpin's Argument

In his research paper, Halpin is rather harsh on !ncels. He writes,

> "I demonstrate that !ncels position themselves as subordinate, emasculated, "genetic trash," in relation to men they see as attractive, desirable, and hegemonic (i.e., "Ch@ds"). Whereas Connell (1995) differentiates subordinate and hegemonic masculinity and is skeptical of arguments that combine such practices (Connell and Messerschmidt 2005), I argue that weaponized subordination blends these practices, as !ncels draw on their self-perceived subordination to legitimate their hegemonic participation in the subjugation of women and to buttress masculine hierarchies."

IOW, !ncels see themselves as below Ch@ds, but still above women. Seems legit. But !ncels are not 'positioning' themselves as such. They're just playing the hand they've been dealt by nature and society.

Citing previous research, Halpin suggests that various online communities are teaching men to adopt 'm!sogyn!stic' attitudes and beliefs. These men will then congregate in !ncel forums where they wallow in these beliefs, forming an isolated echo chamber. Within these forums, !ncels justify and encourage more of their so called 'm!sogyn!stic" behaviors.

> "Our study shows that !ncels do not become misogynistic within the !ncel community. Instead, they are already misogynistic when they arrive in the community. This suggests that men are becoming misogynistic in other communities, such as men's rights groups like Men Going Their Own Way and those formed around online influencers like Andrew T@te. These communities can serve as a pipeline for !ncels."

The way I see it, Halpin has the Cause and Effect backwards. It is the other way around. Men are frustrated with the Feminist Order in general, and specifically instances of ostracization and rejection. These Men read MRA / Red Pill stuff, wake up to reality, and then respond with anger and desperation. !ncels gravitate towards online communities as places where they can discuss various disadvantages and mistreatments common to men these days (e.g. being rejected by women), air out their grievances, and find acceptance.

!ncels Imitate Ch@ds

In the section, Weaponized Subordination, Halpin laments that instead of imitating Male Feminists, !ncels view Ch@ds as their superiors and larp their worst behaviors with comedic effect.

> "In contrast to men who distance themselves from hegemony by borrowing subordinate or marginalized practices ("borrowing from below"), !ncels situate themselves as permanently subordinated men but imitate the denigrating and misogynistic treatment of women they associate with hegemonic Chads ("borrowing from above")."

Imagine that! Ch@ds, of all people, are modeling bad behavior that !ncels then imitate.

Halpin states,

> "!ncels' acquiescence to state power and dominant men to solve the "!ncel problem" differentiates weaponized subordination from both toxic masculinity and manhood acts (Kupers 2005; Schwalbe 2014) because !ncels accept both their subordination vis-à-vis other men and continued masculine inequalities in exchange for the > subjugation of women. !ncels do not endorse protest masculinity (Connell 1995) or resist Ch@ds for "monopolizing" women, but instead bring themselves in line with hegemony and masculine hierarchy. !ncels propose solving the "!ncel problem" not by raising their own status in relation to other men, but by making all women subordinate to all men. Even in their most grandiose fantasies of social control, !ncels remain subordinate to other men."

>
> "Weaponized subordination is thus a hybrid practice (Bridges and Pascoe 2014), as !ncels tightly couple their perceived subordination to their hegemonic desires."

IOW, men have testosterone and operate in hierarchies, both intra and intersexual. Duh. Halpin does not understand the nature of Men.

> "However, in contrast with other hybrid practices wherein men taper their "toughness" with "tenderness" (Bridges 2014), weaponized subordination combines subordination with subjugation."

News Flash: Male toughness and tenderness only comes with the possession of a female in submission to his authority. Halpin should do some research on that. Absent that, there is only militancy to restore Masculine dominance in the Natural Order.

In the article at The Conversation, Halpin and Maguire write [original links preserved],

> "Why are !ncels targeting women? !ncels argue that women and society treat them like subordinate, failed men and "beta males." As we argue, !ncels weaponize this subordination by saying women should be rented, bought and sold like property to "solve" the "!ncel problem." !ncels see themselves as the "real victims," who are being attacked by women, feminism and society. They think eliminating women's rights will improve society."

No doubt, !ncels ARE indeed the primary victims of feminism, but they're NOT 'weaponizing' their perceived inferiority. IMO, they're just pointing out how men have been ostracized and what they think needs to be done to restore civility to society.* But that's 'm!s0gyny' in Halpin's view. Halpin does not understand the nature of women at all.

 Side Note: It's not just !ncels. The entire Manosphere has thought through the problems associated with Women's Nature and Feminism's influence on society. The Christian Manosphere has condensed and purified the conclusions to simply state that Women need to be held accountable.*

Back to their research paper.

> "Such violent desires do not restore or assert their masculinity (e.g., Schwalbe 2014) because !ncels see themselves as subordinated men permanently unable to participate in heterosexual sex. Instead, their subordinated status is weaponized to justify violence."

News Flash: Total Sexual rejection IS a defacto rejection from the procreative human legacy of a society, not just only from women. Halpin either doesn't realize this, or doesn't want to admit that !ncel anger is a natural response to this rejection. SMH.

> "In these comments, such violence does not restore incels' masculinity (Kimmel 2013) or assert their dominance (e.g., Kupers 2005), but situates their violence as warranted, moral, and necessary because they view themselves as completely dominated and victimized."

Halpin assumes that !ncels think they can climb up the social / SMV ladder by slighting women. LMAO! He just doesn't "Get It" or have 'IT'. !ncels (may indeed) view violence as warranted, moral, and necessary, but NOT because they view themselves as completely dominated and victimized (although that might be true). It is because all that is necessary for (evil) feminism to triumph is for (good) men to do nothing.

There's a lot more in Halpin's paper to dissect, but that's more than enough to convey his stance, so I'll cut it off here.

Conclusions

I would summarize Halpins' thesis as a simple observation that sexless men find opportunities, willingly or unwillingly, to vicariously experience women's attraction and sexual reactions to sexcessful men, viz. Ch@ds … become envious of said men, and then become angry, crass, deceptive, and vindictive (viz. 'm!s0gyn!st!c') towards women who respond positively (and immorally) to said men but negatively to themselves. At some point, men realize that AWALT, and then make generalizations. The online language of these men refers to sociosexual hierarchies, masculine dominance, and violence, hence the associations thereof.

One problem with Halpins position is that he assumes men willingly choose to be !ncels. Come on! What does he think 'INVOLUNTARILY Celibate" means?

Another problem with Halpin's position is that he gets the Cause and Effect backwards. He is assigning ill will to men while ignoring the vast institutionalized ill treatment from women that would cause men to respond in this way.

The whole reason why these men are angry at women is because of perceived rejection and displaced envy. It is because the Natural Order is defunct and they have been rejected from both civil society and the gene pool.

Men are NOT choosing to be !ncels or looking for excuses to h@te women just because they are h@teful at heart or learned to h@te online. Instead, men learn to h@te debased women who are corrupted by sexual promiscuity and feminist indoctrination because those women h@te !ncels.

Halpin mentions how men participating in !ncel forums will vehemently deny receiving any female interest in order to identify as a true, "real !ncel" (i.e. in-grouping). However, Halpin has failed to offer a convincing argument that men are intentionally choosing victimhood status to receive any kind of social benefit. (It's a crazy idea, but I guess that's how W0kesters think.)

I could be wrong, and maybe I'm reading this incorrectly, but even in the ontological sense, I don't see how self-identification as an !ncel could offer any real benefit, solace, or social capital (other than online fellowship with other !ncels), or compensate for all the h@te that is commonly directed at !ncels. I don't see why a man would lower his status and/or identify as an !ncel … just to enjoy being rejected, defiled, or unclean. (That is something that women enjoy doing.)

So after a closer study of the paper and the article, I'm forced to conclude that "How !ncels Discredit Themselves to Degrade Women" specifically means how !ncels lose social credit in the Feminist / W0ke social system by sticking to masculine / Patriarchal norms, i.e. men being men.

Overall, Halpin's view is another variation of the "Pity Men" narrative, but without any pity whatsoever. Instead, there is only condemnation for !ncels NOT being more W0ke.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): The Dispensation of the Red Pill (2018/4/7)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): How to Change a Hostile Culture (2021/6/7)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Avoiding the Broken Window Effect (2021/7/21)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Red Pill Awareness (2021/7/23)
- Σ Frame: Domination is not Destruction (2023/4/14)
- Got Questions: What does it mean to speak the truth in love (Ephesians 4:15)? (2023/11/22)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Drizzle Drizzle (2024/4/24)

- Σ Frame (Jack): Connecting the Dots (2024/5/10)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Red Pill Rehab (2024/6/19)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Red Pill Bad! [B-] (2024/7/20)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Red Pill Arouses Feminist's Existential Fear

A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered.

Jack · 14 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

When did we learn that it is women's innate sin nature to desire control over men?

Readership: All; Men; Single Men; Married Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 1,900 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

The Hidden Knowledge

Under a previous post, SurfDumb said,

> "I have issues with not liking controlling women, not knowing that's how they are wired. A church counselor should have teased that out of me by knowing that's important to look for because it's such a common pattern."

I agree. This idea should be openly taught to both men and women in the church. Otherwise, women will wreak desolation through their matriculations to manipulate — not only to control men, but also entire social circles as well — until they are called out on it.

And like SurfDumb said, "That's how they are wired."

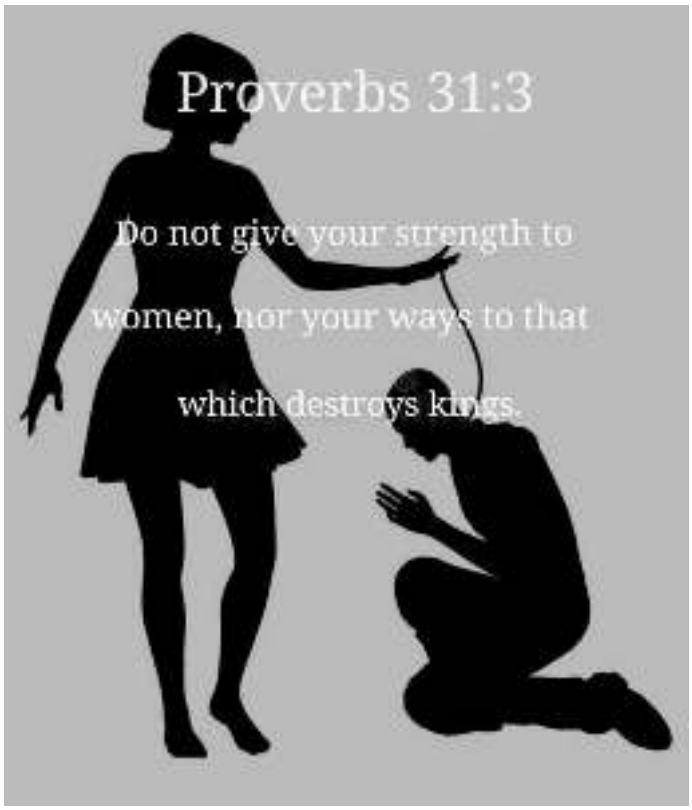
Of course, we're not talking about a few bad wives who debased their 'marriages' via fornication before they even walked the aisle, and then transmogrified into incorrigible scolds after sticking the landing.

We're not talking about Pink P_ssy Hatters dreaming and scheming about controlling men. This is not new. We've heard this silicone saber rattling for over a decade.



No. We're referring to the idea that it is women's innate nature to do so, IOW, AWALT, and that they are hell bent on doing so with no guilt, shame, qualms, or regrets about it. That they strut around with the firm conviction that the cosmos has appointed them to be the divine drivers and herders of men; wantonly picking and choosing which men are 'worthy' enough to be stripped of their assets; defiantly indignant when they find no man can meet their astronomical expectations nor is willing to worship her or waste himself on her.

And another thing: The reason why women do NOT behave this way to all men all the time is either because some of them had fathers who raised them well, or else they have a sufficiently strong incentive to act otherwise.

But when that strong loving father is absent, or that motivating purpose is either achieved or removed … Watch Out!

The Discovery

But why didn't SurfDumb's elders clue him into this?

Probably because this was one of the best-kept secrets of the late 20th and early 21st century, comparable to Colonel Sanders' secret recipe of 11 herbs and spices for Kentucky Fried Chicken. But instead of slaughtering chickens, it destroyed marriages and whole families … for generations.

Oscar responded,

> "Honestly, those men probably didn't / don't know. It used to be common teaching that Genesis 3:16 ("Your desire shall be for your husband, and he shall rule over you.") means that women will desire to usurp their husbands' authority, but I never heard that in church until fairly recently."

Although I grew up in church, like Oscar, I never heard this idea either … until one day (at the age of 48), I happened to read Genesis 3:16 in the Revised Standard Version (RSV), a newer version (first published in 2001) that I didn't normally read. I was confused about the wording because it didn't agree with my prior understanding of the passage. So I had to do some research to find out what it means.

I wrote of these chin scratching bordering on harrowing discoveries in a previous post, What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23). (Side Note: I found that the older translations are suggestive of a sexual desire, but the newer translations make it out to be a desire to control the husband.)

Since then, and not before, I've heard and read discussions about women's intrinsic desire to control men.

But why not until then? Was it because no one knew about it? Or is it because no one talked about it, like SurfDumb's elders? Or maybe they did, but it just didn't register with me (or Oscar or SurfDumb and other men like us) because of the hegemony of the Blue Pill, or an incomplete understanding, or inexperience, or naivete, or all of these?

Returning to Oscar's response to SurfDumb, Oscar concludes,

> "I'm not sure when churches stopped teaching that truth, but it's likely that the older men you know from church never heard it."

I believe this truth has been lost for at least three generations, and probably hasn't been mentioned since before the Women's Liberation movement of the early 1970s (which was undoubtedly inspired by (1) the Sexual Revolution which was in full swing by that time, followed by (2) No Fault Divorce legislation in 1970, and (3) the legalization of abortion in 1973.)

The Third Seal is Broken

How do we now have this dispensation of knowledge?

Why has there been a sudden explosion of this awareness since 2020?

It seems I (or we) would have learned this central Christian Red Pill idea from the Manosphere. Maybe Oscar and SurfDumb did, but I didn't. I got it from the Bible.

Looking back, I wasn't sure if the Manosphere had ever formally introduced this concept before my grand mal epiphany, so I did a little search and review of the major authors that I believe might have covered it.

Here's a brief summary of what I found.

In 2013, Rollo described how women want to control the conditions dictating their innate hypergamy, which necessitates controlling men.

> "…women don't want to eliminate men, they simply want to control them, both directly and indirectly, socially and personally, subtly and subconsciously as well as overtly when necessary, to comply with satisfying their innate hypergamy. They want independence from men's influence in the process of satisfying hypergamy – they want to rig the game by replacing his genuine desires by forcing him to comply with her control of his conditions. Women want the power to control men's desires, their ideologies, their sexual response, their individualism and the decisions that result from them all in order to optimize hypergamy."
>
> The Rational Male: Nursing Power (2013/11/25)

Illimitable Men wrote several essays that described women as Machiavellian manipulators (ca. 2013).

Dalrock wrote about specific instances in which women control men, i.e. V Power (ca. 2014), but it is framed as a power dynamic, or a weakness in men, and not explicitly as women's intrinsic desire to control men.

This comment from Radium at Illimitable Men nails it down (2016/2/11).

Deep Strength has done the most work on this topic. Starting in 2016, he covered this passage in several posts and made correlations to contentiousness, discontentment, disobedience to husbands, envy, usurping authority, women wanting to be like men, and that it is a form of punishment.

The Power Moves summarized the main idea and the major methods of how women control men in How Women Control Men: The Secret Psychology of Relationship Power (2020/8/9). (The original post is better.)

In summary, the idea was there, but only in bits and pieces, here and there, and once in a while, or else it was shrouded in other concepts. It was hardly mentioned (except perhaps by Deep Strength) that women's inclination towards intersexual tyranny is innate, and this is what the word 'desire' refers to in Genesis 3:16. You have to read between the lines to understand that it is women's sin nature to try to control or manipulate men.

Looking back, this knowledge had a 7 year incubation period in which it was implanted and slowly gained momentum in the conscious awareness of men. After 2020, it hatched and soared, mainly because of the popularity of Red Pill YouTube content during C0V!D lockdown.

The Suppression of the Truth

What is most amazing about all this is that women have been behaving badly for decades (e.g. cheating, frivorce, lying, sh!t tests, etc.), but this wasn't enough for men to clearly see women's nature and wake up from their Blue Pill delusions about women.

Even after it was first described a few years ago by Rollo, Deep Strength, et al., and seeing the non stop flood of moral corruption and manipulativeness of modern women on IG, T!kT0k, YouTube, and everywhere else since then, you'd think that this idea would have gained wider traction and caught on faster than it did.

Why not?

I found a comment from ChokingOnRedPills as early as 2016/7/4, in which he says the idea that women strive to control men was viciously suppressed in his church.

He wrote,

> "I shared about how this word in Genesis 3 had a negative connotation, i.e., the overwhelming desire from the wife to control, manipulate her husband, and usurp his leadership. However, her punishment was that her husband will rule over her. He disagreed strongly with me and almost suggested that this perspective was dangerous, must not be shared to other husbands (in our small group for young couples) for the fear of them believing that they could treat their wives harshly or beat them down."

So it seems that some older men did have this knowledge back then, but they intentionally chose to bury it.

But why?

Apparently, it was too Red Pilled for a Blue Pill church to accept. (In fact, I believe this truth is unique to the Christian Manosphere / Red Pill, and is thus confined to a very select group of men.)

Another reason why this truth remained esoteric is because of the sheer ugliness of it is unimaginable. Like saying, "many men died in WW2" is true, but it doesn't convey the bitter cruelty, macabre decapitations, and flying blood and guts that were common to battle scenes, or the blood curdling fear that crippled thousands of men for life. Those who have never experienced combat or a debased marriage cannot grasp the hellaciousness of it all.

Similarly, simply saying "women's desire is to rule over men" is true, but it does not create detailed mental images of the full range of desolation like what we are now seeing in Western nations. Also, to describe these things in the kind of detail necessary for the inexperienced to understand all the sordid implications would be like making a child watch B D S M P0rn or Faces of Death on replay for hours. In simple terms, it is unclean to speak of debased and defiled things.

A third reason why this truth was tamped down is because once enough of the idea to invoke the imagination is conveyed, then it arouses the curiosity and many hard questions will naturally follow, followed by adjustments in behaviors. Like the proverbial cat in the bag, once it's out of the bag, it's out of control.

But once you know this, the signs are literally everywhere you look.

Some women will even brag about controlling men "without even realizing it". IOW, they're cloyingly stating that it is women's nature to do so, while clouding the fact that this behavior is morally wrong.

Conclusions

The knowledge that women have an innate bent on controlling men was once esoteric for many decades, but now it is commonly known.

This knowledge surfaced from many sources, including…

- Newer Bible translations
- The Manosphere's Red Pill revelations.
- Women are literally baring ALL on Instagram, TikT0k, and YouTube.

The evidence is so obvious and prevalent now that only Derek would try to deny it.

Related

- Σ Frame: 50 Female Evasion and Control Tactics (2021/10/22)
- Σ Frame: Validation is about Losing Self-Control (2022/10/24)
- Σ Frame: A Christian Woman's View of Submission (2023/9/13)
- Σ Frame: The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse (2023/12/9)
- Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority (2024/1/10)
- Σ Frame: A Dark Horse (2024/11/16)

On Seriousness-ness

Jack · 17 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

It's only as serious as you take it and then make it.

Readership: All
Theme: Community / Infighting / Metacognitions / Problems with The Red Pill / Sectarianism / The Gift of Singleness
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

While living in Taiwan for a couple of decades, I've noticed a social tactic that men often use to deal with tense situations. Whenever an offense has been committed, either accidental or intentional, one has the choice to take it seriously, which may very well lead to kung fu fisticuffs and/or expensive lawsuits lasting for years. But if the issue is minor, and not deemed worthy of that level of energy, money, risk, and time, instead one may choose to laugh it off and walk away. As an expression of forgiveness and grace, laughing it off often proves to be the most expedient and wisest response in most situations.

Derek L. Ramsey has written a thoughtful essay entitled Anonymity and Plagiarism (2024/6/17), in which he has argued that I have 'deceived' readers by plagiarizing their writings.

Initially, I wasn't planning to respond to this accusation because it is peripheral to the purpose of the blog. Also because Derek has stated on several occasions that his purpose is to derail discussions here on Σ Frame, claiming that he must do what he can to deconstruct arguments that follow after false lines of reasoning — 'mental masturbations' as Adam Piggott might say. (Of course, I disagree with this characterization.) So I recognized this charge as a ridiculous concoction meant to distract and obfuscate. "Laughing it off" seemed to be the wiser response.

However, I reconsidered addressing this issue because I realized that this remarque kind of gets to the root of the mental puzzle that Founding Questions brought up: What is Seriousness? (2024/7/16).

What is Seriousness?

I believe Derek's opinions deserve the respect of a decent reply, but this is difficult when he has mischaracterized my stances with disingenuous candor. Respect begets respect. Even though I might assume he has honestly misunderstood, if I took Derek's false accusations seriously, would that in fact be "seriousness"?

Furthermore, would readers take me seriously if I took Derek seriously?

For instance, if I responded by saying,

"First of all, I'd like to thank Derek for pointing out how my writings can be improved."

Or…

"I appreciate Derek for caricaturizing my writings to suggest that I'm a charlatan."

… would that be sarcastic, satirical, sincere, or serious? How would readers be able to tell?

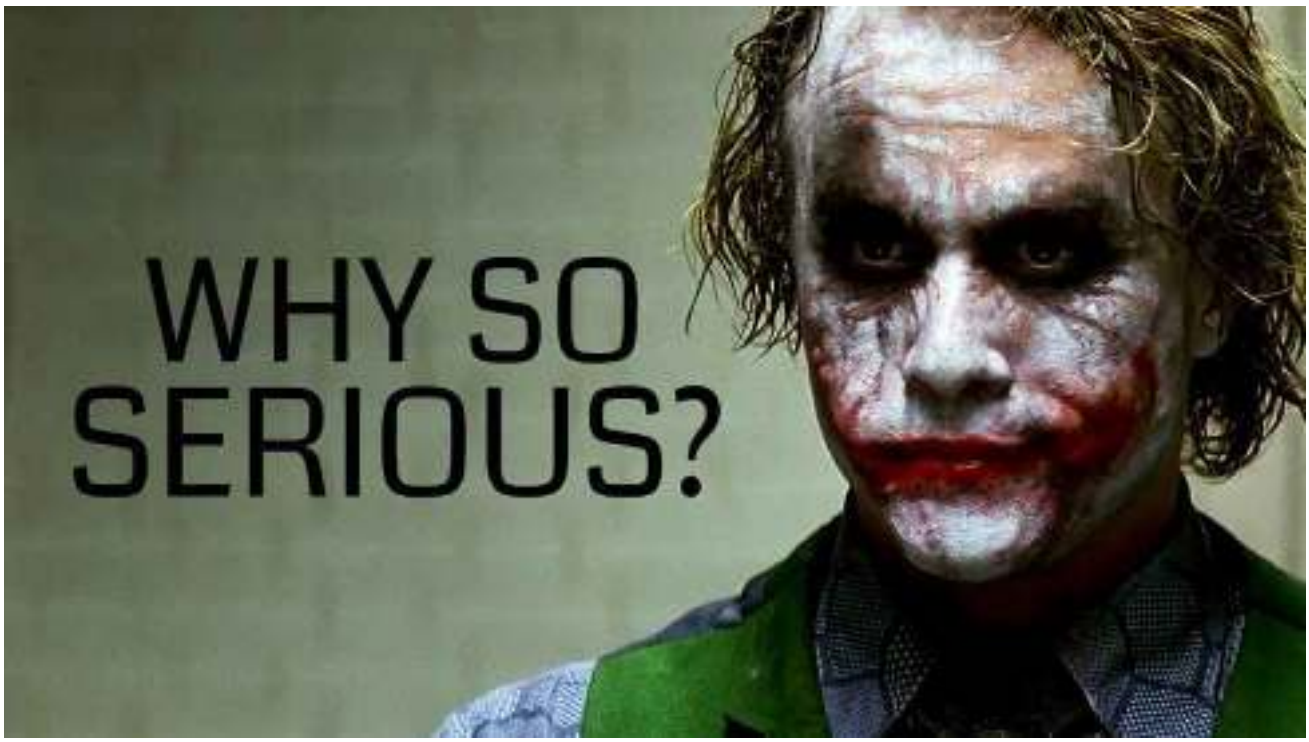
From these statements alone, readers cannot be certain. Rather, readers must read a large number of statements to determine my overall philosophical position and disposition towards Derek, and then interpret the statement according to their own estimations of my attitude towards him. But most readers honestly wouldn't know, and many wouldn't even care. For those who do "take it seriously", at some point, this question descends into a meta analysis — a confusing "he said I said you said she said" melodrama, getting lost in $S_{ub}S^{c}Ri_{p}^{t}$ land", and falling into analysis paralysis. In reality, readers will not go to all the trouble to sort out the tedium, but will instead believe whatever strikes their wits at first reading.

This type of confusion is not limited to this case study or my interactions with Derek, but appears quite frequently within text-based interactions online. Hence, why I believe this deserves a blog post.

Post Truth Stuff

Whether a topic is treated with seriousness all depends on the values and opinions of the reader. That is, if the reader generally agrees with the viewpoint of what he is reading, he is more likely to take it as a serious treatment of the matter. Whereas, if he disagrees, he is more likely to "laugh it off", and/or conclude that the author did not take the issue seriously.

Thus, from a larger frame, we might ask whether 'seriousness' is of value, or whether a more light-hearted or rhetorical or even sarcastic approach might be more effective.



To offer my readers a tentative conclusion of this question, I'll posit that for many issues (more and more these days) there does not exist a litmus test for 'seriousness' that can be externally and objectively applied. Why? Because 'seriousness' largely depends on what one already believes about the matter being discussed, and whether one deems it worthy of their time. The conclusions reached by the reader are ultimately determined by what they preemptively believe upon going into it, and whatever influence one's consciousness and set of values has upon their perception of the intent of the argument, and NOT so much on the logical rigor, validity, or even the truth content of the argument itself.

IOW, it's 'Post Truth' stuff.

And if it's too boring, too confusing, too convoluted, too deep, too fisky, too formal, too hard, too long, too meandering, too pointless, too tedious, too trivial, or too unsettling…

It's NEXT!

For those who are 'serious', I'll answer Derek's charge of plagiarism in a future post.

Related

- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Unpacking and tying together the meta-levels of Christianity, reality and the Red Pill into a hierarchical understanding: theological, scientific, and philosophical / cultural (2021/3/29)
- Σ Frame: Metaphysical Literacy (2022/9/21)
- Σ Frame: Meta Cognitions (2023/6/23)
- Σ Frame: Philosophical Dualism (2024/5/27)
- Σ Frame: The Red Pill 2.0: Analyzing Metacognitions and Identifying Critical Problems (2024/7/31)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)

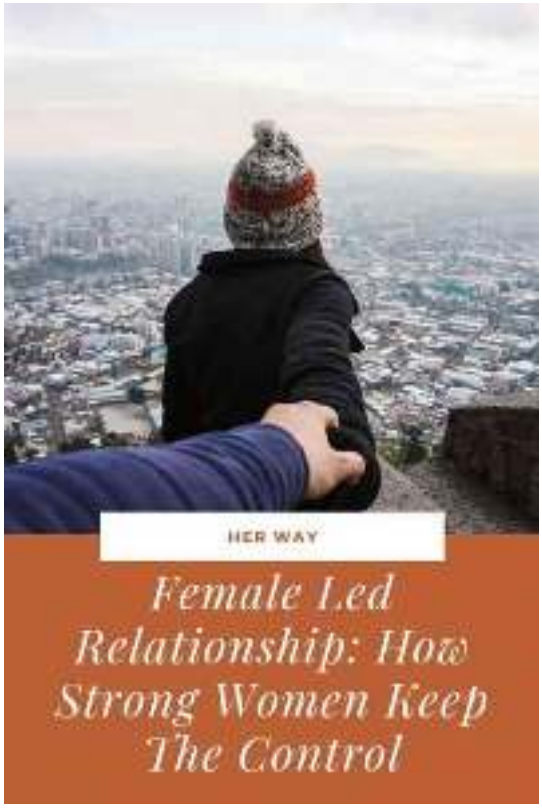
A True Heresy

Jack · 19 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Desire is not difficult to understand — unless you're overthinking it — or denying it.

Readership: All; Men; Single Men; Married Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Plainly Stated



The previous post, A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14), detailed a very elementary observation that women's controlling nature is more widely recognized now than it was in years past. So elementary, in fact, that I thought it was self-evident and not worth posting. But judging by the responses, there appears to be a few readers who struggle to understand this simple concept.

Apparently, I need to translate my thesis into the Syllogistician language that is spoken by the troglogeeks in order for them to understand. So here I'll restate my thesis more concisely by breaking it down into logical propositions.

It really is quite simple. Try to follow along. Here we go.

Postulate A: Desire is an essential trait of femininity (explained by Cane Caldo).

Postulate B: Women desire to usurp men's authority, to be like men or like God (Genesis 3:4-6).

Observed Behavior 1: That women desire to control / dominate / influence / manipulate men.

Exacerbating Factors of Observed Behavior 1: Feminism, Women's Liberation, and the 15 Sirens of the SocioSexual Apocalypse have liberated women from the various constraints that used to keep Behavior 1 in check.

Observed Behavior 2: The collective awareness of Observed Behavior 1 is becoming more widespread recently, beginning in the 1970s, but especially in the past 5 years or so. (This was the main topic of the previous essay.)

Evidence of Observed Behaviors 1 and 2: This awareness is being manifested in (at least) the following ways.

- Male and Female Nature, i.e. conflicting and/or sinful desires and intersexual enmity (since The Beginning).
- Newer Bible translations (since the 1970s)
- The Manosphere's Red Pill revelations of Women's Nature (since ~2010).
- The Christian Manosphere's condemnation of Chivalry, Complementarianism, Egalitarianism, etc. as inversions of Headship and as heretical compromises with Feminism (since ~2015).
- Women on Instagram, TikT0k, YouTube, etc. (since ~2020).

Genesis 3:16

There is some debate over whether Genesis 3:16 can be interpreted to mean women's desire to control men.

Apparently, some readers cannot accept that Postulate A, Postulate B, Behavior 1, and Behavior 2 truly exist, unless Genesis 3:16 specifically refers to these things.

They might even imagine that if they can somehow 'prove' that Genesis 3:16 cannot be interpreted to include these things, then these things cannot be happening. Or at least, they won't have to admit that these things do happen and are happening, and then be able to say that "Anyone who thinks so is a HERETIC, according to MY interpretation of Genesis 3:16!"

Some readers have the notion that Genesis 3:16 has only ONE specific meaning, when in fact, it has multiple interpretations. They cannot comprehend that it is written ambiguously because Women's innate desire is manifested differently in different contexts, and it also depends on the spiritual maturity of the woman in question.

I'll spell this out more explicitly for those who are lost in Aristotleland because they cannot implement inductive reasoning appropriately.

- In Headship, a woman's desire appears as an emotional and sexual longing for her husband.
- In a debased, inverted relationship, a woman's desirous nature drives her to be controlling and domineering.

As Deep Strength pointed out,

> "The wrong relationship — a wife usurping or fighting for some version of equality — is one of contentiousness and strife; whereas the right relationship — headship and submission — creates the sexual desire dynamic."

Derek deceptively states that this is a nonsensical contradiction because he cannot tolerate the idea of masculine authority or archetypal hierarchy, nor is he willing to admit that there is any sort of power dynamic inherent in intersexual relations. Instead, he wishes to obfuscate gender hierarchies, power dynamics, and the reality of intersexual conflict. Lately, he has been denying basic, long-established Red Pill tenets, like hypergamy — the natural feminine desire for a high quality male. He wants everyone to believe there is no archetypal structure of spiritual authority, no Headship, no female rebellion, no hypergamy … and that it is all a fabulously fabricated fable. And the more I read him, the stronger is my impression that this lacing of truths and lies in a web of philosophicalized confusion is evil; like the wicked w!tch handing you a poisoned thought apple and saying with a sly grin, "Who said there's a w!tch here? That's silly! There's no w!tch here!"

No. We are talking about two different archetypes of women in relationships, and the more common of the two (the second one above), is the one that Derek and Co. don't want to believe exists.

But instead of reading the Bible to understand reality (i.e. exegesis), some people are selectively interpreting the Bible to match their own illusions of reality (i.e. eisegesis).

The question is NOT "Which interpretation is correct?" (which is a false dichotomy with no real-world application), but rather, "How to apply a valid interpretation to a specific woman's spiritual constitution as expressed in her marriage (or LTR)?"

The fact that women desire to control men and the growing awareness of this behavior does NOT depend on whether we believe Genesis 3:16 intends to refer to this or not.

If this exegesis is indeed a heresy, then it is a true heresy.

Related

- Susan T. Foh, "What is the Woman's Desire?" The Westminster Theological Journal 37 (1974/75) 376-83. [PDF]
- The Rational Male: Nursing Power (2013/11/25)
- Illimitable Men: as Understanding Machiavellianism (2013/12/2)
- Dalrock: She who must be obeyed. (2015/1/31)
- Marg Mowczko: Teshuqah: A Rare Word (2015/11/10)
- Teshuqa Turnings: ESV changes Genesis 3:16 — A brief history of this verse's transformation (2016/9/14)
- Cane Caldo: Proposed: Femininity is Desire (2017/3/31)
- Cane Caldo: Real Men Don't Impede Her Desires (2017/9/11)
- Dalrock: Her soul essence is your master, and sets the terms for oneness. (2018/3/5)
- Dalrock: She's the boss, you're a guest. (2018/3/27)
- Dalrock: Whose job is it to keep mama happy? (2018/11/2)

- Dalrock: Feminism is the parasitic passenger chivalry longs for. (2019/1/2)
- Dalrock: Hail to the V. (2019/1/7)
- Cane Caldo: When all else fails, read the instructions (2019/2/4)
- Cane Caldo: DoW III: A Disagreeable Game (2019/3/11)
- The Power Moves: How Women Control Men: The Secret Psychology of Relationship Power (2020/8/9)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: 50 Female Evasion and Control Tactics (2021/10/22)
- Derek L. Ramsey: Genesis 3:16 Revisted (2025/3/18)
- Σ Game: Addressing Female Aggression (2025/3/19)

Vehicles of Upward Mobility

Jack · 21 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

In Taiwan, one's social image is predicated on what car you drive.

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Introduction

Years ago, a Taiwanese woman I was dating once told me,

> "It is better to cry in a Benz than to laugh in a Toyota."

Westerners will interpret this as crass materialism (as I did initially), but the intended idea being conveyed is philosophically sound — that if you have all your material needs met in great abundance, then whatever you're crying about is relatively insignificant, whereas, laughter is perhaps the only thing that makes life bearable if you're living hand to mouth, week to week.

This sentiment becomes salient when you consider that many older people in Taiwan grew up in homes that had very few modern conveniences. There were no electric appliances (e.g. A/C, washing machines, etc.). Drinking water had to be boiled every morning to sterilize it. Bath water had to be manually heated (usually by boiling water on a gas range). Food was preserved with salt, vinegar, and oil.

(Yes, I lived that way years ago when I first came to Taiwan. After I got used to it, I thought it was fun — like camping.)

Taiwan has come a Loong way since the Chinese Nationalists retreated to Taiwan during the Chinese Civil War in 1949. Now, Taiwan is the microchip and semiconductor capital of the world. For a brief time (2004-2005), Taiwan boasted the tallest building in the world. As of late, living standards exceed the rest of Asia and compare to Europe and the U.S.

Sunset skyline of Taipei cityscape, with the Taipei 101 building, Taiwan.

The Automobile as a Status Symbol

In Taiwan, the car that a person drives is considered to be the most obvious indicator of socioeconomic status and therefore social class. This is important because the Taiwanese social structure grants more dignity, honor, and respect to wealthier people. (In general, it is assumed that higher-quality individuals are more likely to acquire great wealth.)

Here, I'll convey some observations about how this status symbol has changed over the past 20 years (since I first arrived here).

First, I'll list several makes of automobiles according to their associated status. Then I'll describe the shift in status markers and what this means.

Class D

Years ago, and I'm talking about the 1960s to the 1980s, there were quite a few Taiwanese car manufacturers.

- Yue Loong (until 1992); now Yulon Motors
- Datsun (later Nissan) was manufactured in Taiwan under a subcontract with Yue Loong.
- Others

Westerners might scoff, but some of these cars, especially Yue Loong, were actually very well made. It is not uncommon to see farmers, rural business owners, and senior citizens still driving these cars 35-60 years later. But a young person, or a person of class wouldn't be caught dead in one.

1988 Yue Loong Feeling

Class C

- Honda
- Mitsubishi
- Peugeot
- Toyota
- Volkswagen (popular among women)
- American cars of any brand
- Other European cars not listed below.

Of note, Toyota is known to be the most durable, efficient, economical, and reliable car on the market — a very good choice for the average Joe — but it's NOT a status symbol.

2024 Toyota Corolla Altis

Class B

- Audi
- Bavarian Motor Works
- Cooper / MG
- Luxgen (a higher-end subsidiary of Yulon Motors)
- Mercedes Benz
- Porsche*
- Tesla

2024 Mercedes-Benz G63 AMG SUV

Class A

- Bentley
- Ferrari
- Lamborghini
- Land Rover
- Maserati
- Porsche*
- Rolls Royce

 Porsche is a brand name that lies between mid and upper tier. Some models, like the Macan, are cheap and basic, and are seen as mid. Most people who buy a Macan will have the gaudy Macan label shaved off the trunk lid to make it appear like an upper tier model. So it's very rare to see that label on a Porsche here.*

2025 Bentley Flying Spur

Status Symbol Shifts

When I first came to Taiwan in 2004, most people drove a Class C car, and there were a lot of farmers and older people who drove a Class D. Only very wealthy people drove a Class B car. Class A cars were around but were exceedingly rare. The only people who had a Class A car were the playboy sons of super wealthy business executives, like the owner of China Steel. (I met him once at a conference dinner.)

Times have changed since then. In 2024, most people drive a Class B car and only working-class people and those who have large extended families drive a Class C. Wealthy people are now driving Class A cars — every day. I'm not kidding.

So today, the saying goes,

> "It is better to weep in a Bentley than to giggle in a Benz."

Related

- Σ Frame: The Taiwanese Life Script (2021/5/8)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): A suitable ride with low mileage (2022/3/23)
- Σ Frame: Earthquakes (2022/9/23)

Sinful Nature on the Right, or Sinful Nurture on the Left?

Jack · 24 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Covering the NetFl!x mini-series : Adolescence.

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 550 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

Mini-Series: Adolescence

A reader brought my attention to a new Netfl!x mini-series called Adolescence, saying that it has created quite a stir in her church, with kids and parents talking about it.

I have not watched this mini-series yet. But I have seen the trailer (below) and a few reviews I found on YouTube.

The trailer talks about !ncels and "t0x!c masculinity", and even mentions the Pareto statistic, that 80 percent of women are attracted to 20 percent of men.

My impression so far is that…

1. It is a Catharsis – Cathexis.*
2. It is Feminist / W0ke fear-mongering.
3. It demonizes the Manosphere / Red Pill as a source of indoctrination that is radicalizing youth.
4. It is an attempt to control the societal narratives surrounding the Manosphere and to vilify the public perception of the Red Pill.

 Catharsis and Cathexis was the subject of a mini-series here on Σ Frame back in July 2022. See posts below under Related.*

Nature or Nurture?

Tomb Refugee wrote an excellent description of the Liberals' view of human herding.

> "A fundamental doctrine of Leftism in all its manifestations is that humans are malleable in the hands of the Leftist elites. They reject the notion of human nature, and assume that humans can be perfected if they are simply prodded enough. And when that prodding fails, they always blame those who can't respond as expected. They instinctively believe that the only explanation is moral evil in the person they are prodding. This is easily one of the most predictable facets of Leftism."

This truism also applies in the contrapositive. That is to say…

A fundamental doctrine of Leftism in all its manifestations is that Conservative / Christian culture shapes humans into hypocritical, judgmental bigots, and that Far Right ideologies induce humans to become callous, heartless, and v!olent extremists. They reject the notion of original sin, and assume that humans are corrupted by 'wrong think', i.e. when they are unwilling to accept Leftist prerogatives and values. And when Leftist brainwashing fails, they always blame those who expose the cold, hard, factual, inconvenient, uncomfortable truths. They instinctively believe that the only explanation for why anyone would choose to think for themselves instead of submitting to their deceptive narratives is because they are morally corrupted and evil. This is a predictable facet of Leftism.

This Leftist view of humanity is based on two lynchpins of human social dynamics which are more or less true to life.

1. Everyone is morally corrupted and evil, but in-groups will overlook this (or even deny it, as Liberals are in the habit of doing) in favor of community and solidarity. In this Babelesque context, a particular set of sins is 'acceptable' while others are not.
2. Children and compliant adults can be made to willingly behave in a desired manner, ethical, moral, subservient, or otherwise, by constructing a complex paradigm of lies in which the desired behavior appears to be a beneficial, logical, 'right', or 'safe' response.

Conclusions

With all this in mind, we see a few sociopsychological meta dynamics in play behind Adolescence.

1. Nature on the Right vs. Nurture on the Left.
2. The Red Pill is assumed to be Prescriptive rather than Descriptive.

If anyone has watched this series, please leave your thoughts below. I may come back and add some more commentary on this after I've watched it.

Updates

- Rollo Tomassi covered this mini-series in a video talk.
- Zero Hedge: Adolescence: Netflix Series Demonizes Young White Men And The Manosphere (2025/3/25)
- Men are Good (Tom Golden): Netflix Adolescence: Entertainment or Propaganda? (2025/3/27)

Related

- Σ Frame: Infiltrating the Minds of the Masses through Suspension of Disbelief and Social Catharsis/Cathexis (2022/7/25)
- Σ Frame: The Comfortable Danger of Social Catharsis (2022/7/27)
- Σ Frame: Frustrated Collective Catharsis as an Incentive for Social Unrest (2022/7/29)
- Σ Frame: The Distension of Cathartic Cathexis (2022/7/30)

- Σ Frame: Hexis Cathexis and Voodoo Catharsis (2022/7/31)
- Σ Frame: Double Bind (2023/12/8)
- Σ Frame: P_ssy makes men stupid. (2024/10/7)
- Instapundit (Glenn Reynolds): Denial of That Reality is the Whole Point (2025/4/1)
- Evie Magazine: Netflix's 'Adolescence' Has Heart But Doesn't Understand Its Subject. (2025/4/2) [Archive]
- The Podcast of the Lotus Eaters: Adolescence is a Government Psyop (2025/4/2)
- Instapundit (Stephen Green): More on "Adolescence" (2025/4/4)

Necessary Luxury

Jack · 26 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Some things just must be had, and when money is not an issue, then 'luxuries' are the economical option, all things considered.

Readership: All
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Investment Hacks of the Wealthy

Oscar left some valuable insights about wealth accumulation and preservation.

> "Spending a big percentage of your income on depreciating assets was foolish in King Solomon's day, and it's still foolish today."
>
> "Most people think wealth is making a lot of money and spending it on luxuries, but that isn't wealth at all."
>
> "Wealth isn't about how much you make, it's about how much you save."

As a Citizen wearing, DKNY clad, BMW driver, I will channel my inner Fat Cat here to add an additional Frame that should put things into perspective for the aspirational accelerant readers.

Many of the items that the low to mid classes would consider 'luxuries' are NOT considered 'assets' by the uber-rich. Properly understood from the perspective of the economically abled, they are 'necessities'. It doesn't matter whether these things depreciate in value, because you need to have them anyway. The longitudinal strategy then, is to make an initial investment that yields maximum utility and minimizes total costs.

Exemplary Examples of Economic Expediency

To offer four examples, a car, a house, a watch, and a wife — these are not 'assets', they're 'necessities'.

Prof. Hsin Kai Tsai doesn't buy a Mercedez Benz just to peacock and pick up Asian chickadees while cruising through Chinatown (that is just a side benefit). No. He buys a Benz because it is engineered to last for decades, long outlasting most other cars, and with less maintenance and fewer breakdowns. If you have to spend money on a car, then you might as well buy one that does what it's supposed to do for as long as you want it to. Oh, BTW, he's driving a nice car.

Sir Mortimer Lexington Esq. doesn't buy a large stone manor in a gated community just so he can posture pose while hosting swanky cocktail parties once a month. No. He lives there because it's a well-built structure in a safe and secure neighborhood located in a nice environment, surrounded by other wealthy people who will not envy his wealth, sue him over petty issues, and/or create the kinds of headaches common to lower class gentryhoods. Oh, BTW, he's living in a nice house.

Citizen Blue Angels World Chronograph Eco Drive watch.

Lord Randolph Q. Winthorpe III doesn't buy an Emporio Armani watch because it is "Armani!", or because it is seen as a luxury item, or even because of the sharp spiffy image it conveys. He buys it because it comes with a guarantee, and thus is less expensive than buying a cheaper watch every year for 50+ years over the course of his lifetime. Also, he doesn't need to worry that the watch will stop at an unpredictable moment, and it also saves him time shopping for a new watch whenever the el cheapo ticker unexpectedly bites the dust. Oh, BTW, he's wearing a nice watch.

Space Cadet Elon Musk doesn't marry or spend money on Ashley St. Clair as an investment on an asset, because that would be the most foolish investment imaginable — even in Biblical terms. Just like buying a new car that loses 40% of its value as soon as you sign the papers because it is now a "used" car, a woman's SMV/MMV hits the street just as soon as you pack her crack, and then she becomes a burdensome liability. But if you think about marriage this way, then no wealthy man would ever marry or even host a soft harem of concubines. No. You marry, or take a concubine, and/or have children in order to spread your seed, have a family (if the presumed mother is willing), and to expand the family dynasty. Expensive pseudo-MAGA concubines like Ashley St. Clair are a ‘necessary luxury’ that is limited in use to a few hours of carnal entertainment and a womb for birthing high-quality offspring who will continue the family legacy (hopefully). That’s it. Everything else is a collateral hassle that requires writing off the initial investment costs as a non-refundable expense. Oh, BTW, he’s draining his nuts in a F-ck-worthy c0ck sucker who can be paid to go away when her usefulness has expired.

Concluding Statements

When you have money, you think about everything differently. Everything becomes a utility in which the total value is weighed against the total costs, including functionality, money, security, time, and overall value. When money is not an issue, then it makes sense to spend more money on things that are of better quality, more comfortable, more convenient, more durable, more reliable, more useful, and which will save you money, time, and trouble. As seen in the above examples, many of these so-called ‘luxury’ items are actually more economical when used over a lifetime, all things considered. Of course, the initial costs of these high-quality items are much loftier than those that are mass-produced for the hungry trendy masses, and are therefore not an option to those of lesser means. But even without these optimized options, and even when the bottom line is a net loss, some things just have to get done.

But again, that’s all assuming that money is not an issue.

Related

- Σ Frame: Personal Wealth and Service (2009/9/12)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): What One Man Can Do, Another Can Do (2023/1/4)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Pursuit of Happyness (2023/7/3)
- Σ Frame: P_ssy makes men stupid. (2024/10/7)
- Σ Frame: Vehicles of Upward Mobility (2025/3/21)
- Spawny’s Space: Bachelor’s Tax (2025/3/26)

Is Masturbation a Sin?

Jack · 28 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Examining the Causes and Effects of Masturbation.

Readership: Men
Theme: The Gift of Singleness; Validation;
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Foreword

Since my coverage of masturbation in several recent posts, there's been a supernova of men breeching this topic online. I don't know if Σ Frame is the inspiration for these discussions, or if we're prophetically 2 steps ahead of the learning curve, or both in varying degrees for different topics, but this trendsetting phenomenon is typical for this blog.

Of course, the reason why masturbation is coming to the fore is because men are being denied their natural sexual expression within intersexual relationships on a mass scale, and standing tall under the monkey paw is the standby backup release valve. This is truly a new thing. For centuries or God only knows how long, men have always been too ashamed to mention this topic, but now it's being openly discussed. Yes, it is tawdry and unclean (depending on the context and social setting), but in spite of this, I think this is a good change, considering the present circumstances.

Masturbation as a Vector of Lust

My understanding of lust is a continual, habitual dwelling on unrequited desire and a succorance of this psychological state, such that it scrambles the senses, fumbles the Frame, loses internal locus of control, and upsets detachment, thereby forfeiting any claim of physical or spiritual dominion at the cost of the soul.

I've heard people say that "Masturbation is fine, as long as you don't lust". I think they're not being very realistic. I don't know if any studies have been done, but you would think that in about 99% of cases men who are beating off are either watching pornography or thinking about sex with a woman they're not married to. And for most men, once they've fallen into the throes of erotic passion, they're going to be scratching and clawing their keyboards to the ends of the internet for any skin pics they can find. Even if you deny yourself cable and internet service, there would be the unavoidable temptation to indulge in thoughts about women around you in real life who aren't your 'wife'.

Of course, this is because carnal desire is, by nature, overwhelming. It must be to ensure the survival of the species. And it is this deeply humbling 'losing control' aspect that makes sex of any form especially gratifying for both men and women, and ironically, it is this same quality that makes sex degrading and obscene.

- For men, inducing pair bonding through sex is validating, while the 'losing control' aspect can be spiritually vilifying.
- For women, 'losing control' is validating, while pair bonding with hubby is sanctifying, and pair bonding via Alpha enwidowment is defiling.

As you can see from this comparison, the expression of desire has different effects on men and women, but if the whole purpose of arousing desire is to be enslaved and unraveled by it, then that's lust. When the desire to be overwhelmed by passion is valued and sought after more than the beneficial purpose of desire for sex leading to pair bonding in marriage, then it becomes psychopathic madness. Whatever or whomever can induce the humiliating ravishing of the flesh is eagerly clicked / imagined / embraced, and poured over — literally, at the cost of all else, including one's bank account, one's domain, and one's soul.

Case Study – Taiwan's Christians Think No Evil!

I've known some Christians here in Taiwan who believe that it's corrupting / lustful / sinful to fantasize about love, romance, or sex — with anyone — at all! They won't put themselves into places or situations where sexual fantasies enter into their minds. They take Matthew 5:28 literally! Imagine that!

The way sex works for them is whenever sex happens, they get into the moment, immerse themselves in passion, and just do it. They don't think about it at all!

I never heard about this mental-control as a means of self-control until I met people from Taiwan. But I've come to believe that they have a much better handle on not letting lust enter into their hearts than anyone I've known in the States.

I think they picked up on this because James 1:14-15 corresponds to a Buddhist teaching that is well known in Taiwan culture (paraphrased):

> "Desires become thoughts.
> Thoughts become actions.
> Actions become habits.
> Habits become a lifestyle."

The Buddhist conclusion is that desire must be controlled or eradicated, but the Christian approach is to monitor the inclinations of the heart and to direct one's imaginings towards positive things (Philippians 4:8-9). 1 Corinthians 10 and Galatians 5:16-26 also correspond with this same idea.

I should add that these people seem to have a lower libido than average. I'm not sure if that's a cause or an effect of them taking this approach. Maybe both, as it has the nature of a stronghold.

Is Masturbation a Sin?

I was not raised to believe masturbation was a sin. But later in life, I concluded that it was, simply because of the blunting effect it often has on my spiritual life, the numbing effect it has on my discernment, and the fact that I was able to grow spiritually after reducing this habit (after replacing it with real women). Then more recently, after discussing this topic with other men online, I've come to hold a more tempered stance of viewing it as unclean.

Readers have written many varying accounts, confessions, and testimonies about this topic, both For and Against.

For

- Post nut clarity.
- Ohhh… What a relief it is!
- It makes psychological detachment easier.

- It reduces sexual tension and puts the man at ease with himself.
- Frequent ejaculation is linked to longevity and a lower prevalence of prostate cancer.
- 'Addictions' fuel a sense of power and autonomy, as confirmed by Jason's testimony.
- Rock Kitaro stated that the post nut clarity that comes of wanking is more or less necessary for maintaining his own vitality.
- Sharkly spoke from the standpoint of doctrinal polity, emphasizing the extreme error of enforcing an Anti-Fap doctrine.

Against

- It does not improve preselection.
- It reduces one's heart-felt passion and motivation to engage with real women.
- If it is known to others, it will have an adverse social effect of ridicule and rejection.
- Excessive or continual use of p0rn can foment a crippling self-consciousness and mental auto rejection.
- Caterpillar described his personal experience, emphasizing the confusion and difficulty, and concluded that NOT fapping is better for his spiritual life.
- Men masturbating is never sexy because it gives the impression that he is selfish, desperate, and low SMV, or that he cannot or will not get a woman to do it for him.
- Mogadishu Matt conveyed the story of a friend who suffered from a bad habit of masturbation. His description of his friend's low self-image and social / mental auto rejection confirms the detrimental effects of p0rn-based idolatry.
- RonTomlinson2 suggested that addictions and obsessions are unconscious strategies (or 'defense mechanisms') which we use in order to avoid particular feelings. Those who have an obsession with sex are unconsciously trying to avoid a higher order feeling, perhaps compassion. They might be trying to fill a void, be it joy, or love, or the unconditional acceptance of one's unfettered, passionate self-expression, or maybe they're trying to find healing from being deeply rejected.

Overall, the Cons outweigh the Pros, but then there's that pesky distracting itch that is not very easily controlled.

There is no warning specifically against masturbation in the Bible. However, "defiling the flesh" is mentioned as a trait of the ungodly (2 Corinthians 7:1; 2 Peter 2:10; Jude 1:8). That could mean many things (e.g. jerking off, piercings, tattoos, etc.), so take that for what it's worth to you. But whatever you believe, there will be many men who will be morosely happy to share the teachings of the bible with you about how you can tame your own d!ck. I suggest NOT to listen to them, but to do your own introspection and get in touch with your own convictions.

My own personal experience informs me that masturbation is shameful and degrading, which strongly indicates it is unclean, and suggests it may be sinful and/or culminate in other types of sin or transgression. But I could also believe that for some men, it is merely unclean, and not necessarily a sin. I suppose one's maturity, T levels, strength of libido, and life experience plays heavily into the self-assessment.

Conclusions

By juxtaposing all these viewpoints, we can conclude that men should be encouraged to refrain from fapping, but not legalistically 'required' to do so. It is best left to the individual man to "work out his own salvation" (Philippians 2:12). Thus, the question of whether wanking is a worsener is based on a false dilemma that the answer is an either-or dichotomy. The answer to this question lies in recognizing the respective context and how it affects one's psyche and soul for better or for worse.

I don't want men to get the impression that I am encouraging men to fap away to your heart's desire! (hyperbole intended), but rather to take a measured regard for how sexual stimuli influences your desire and your spiritual state.

More specifically,

1. Avoid sexual stimuli that would arouse your desire to d!ck around.
2. When you are exposed to sexual stimuli, train yourself to be aware of how different kinds of stimuli affect your mood, psyche, and spiritual disposition.
3. Avoid pulling peen as much as you can stand it without becoming depraved, warped, and twisted.
4. When you do tug the lug, be acutely cognizant of your spiritual state.
5. Hold yourself to be more aware of the metaphysical nuances of how your libido sways your spiritual state than the knee shaking infliction of your desire upon the flesh.

6. Take those gleanings of self-awareness to God in your prayers of confession, and trust that He'll give you the grace to overcome.

I could even imagine that it might be an act of brotherly love in some instances, to notice a brother is simping hard to the point of uncleanness and/or idolatry, and then pulling him aside and telling him he needs to rub one out before continuing fellowship. That way, he can get some post nut clarity, and his lusts won't be projected through his thoughts and words, thereby contaminating his social interactions with others and the group overall. Of course, this might be inappropriate depending on the man and the context, so discernment is needed. But whether or not pumping the stump is accepted, men can help other men take an inventory of boundaries and how desire affects their lives.

Related

- Your Brain on Porn
- Finndistan: Porn kills your dick's soul (2013/4/10)
- Finndistan: Masturbation kills the King of the Dongs (2013/4/16)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Zizek – Everyday Sexuality (2020/12/14)
- New Advent: Lust (2021)
- Σ Frame: The Young Man's Problem (2022/2/4)
- Biblical Sexology: Masturbation is not a sin in the Bible (2022/2/11)
- Σ Frame: Does Masturbation improve Preselection? (2022/2/16)
- Σ Frame: A blinding obsession (2022/4/15)
- Σ Frame: A Clarification on Fornication (2022/4/16)
- Men in the Arena Podcast: AMA 6: Is Masturbation a Sin? — Equipping Men in Ten EP 535 (2022/4/19)
- Σ Frame: Validation is about Losing Self-Control (2022/10/24)
- Σ Frame: P0rn is Faux Validation (2023/2/17)
- Σ Frame: 10 Flavors of Masturbation (2025/2/17)

The Gift of Singleness — Summary

Jack · 31 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

An Index of Male Needs.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: The Gift of Singleness
Length: 400 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

Intro

Compared to the Manosphere of a decade ago, Masculinity is no longer evaluated by a man's ability to pull P00n or commandeer a steady sailing marriage. Although this departure from defining masculinity in terms of female mating selection and sexual activity is a positive development, what has replaced it is much more difficult for men.

In this ever increasingly evil age, the Feminocracy desires to emasculate men, even by removing men's authority, d!cks, nads, and tadpoles. The challenge to men in this context is to grow some balls, protect them, and channel and regulate that masculine energy — with or without a woman in MGTOW.

The "weak men create hard times" cycle predicted by Ye Olde Red Pill Lore has arrived a year earlier than expected.

WEAK MEN CREATE HARD TIMES	HARD TIMES CREATE STRONG MEN	STRONG MEN CREATE GOOD TIMES	GOOD TIMES CREATE WEAK MEN
734 - 769	769 - 804	804 - 841	841 - 878
878 - 913	913 - 948	948 - 984	984 - 1021
1021 - 1057	1057 - 1092	1092 - 1127	1127 - 1164
1164 - 1201	1201 - 1236	1236 - 1271	1271 - 1307
1307 - 1344	1344 - 1380	1380 - 1415	1415 - 1450
1450 - 1486	1486 - 1523	1523 - 1559	1559 - 1594
1594 - 1629	1629 - 1667	1667 - 1703	1703 - 1738
1738 - 1773	1773 - 1809	1809 - 1846	1846 - 1882
1882 - 1917	1917 - 1952	1952 - 1989	1989 - 2026
2026 - 2061	2061 - 2096	2096 - 2132	2132 - 2169

Theme Summary

Last year, during our study of the Problems with The Red Pill, there were two posts that discussed the issue of singleness.

- The Red Pill is a Dead End for Bachelors (2024/6/3)
- The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss (2024/6/5)

These two posts were not the most popular posts in this theme, but they did define the period of highest activity for 2024, and therefore inspired the current theme, The Gift of Singleness.

This three-month-long theme is our best offerings to reframe the current situation of single men into something that can be appreciated. As we've seen in this theme, there is much that a single man can be thankful for. However, the big snafu — and it is a BIG one — that prevents single men from being thankful for their freedom and cashing in on the joy thereof, is the problem of carnal libidinous desire, as I've written about several times in the past. Therefore, this issue has been the focus of many posts throughout this theme. There are also several other issues that prevent single men from experiencing life and joy (generational curses, Insecure Attachment, lack of authentic fellowship, loneliness, NOT being accepted), and these have also been addressed.

Contributing authors included:

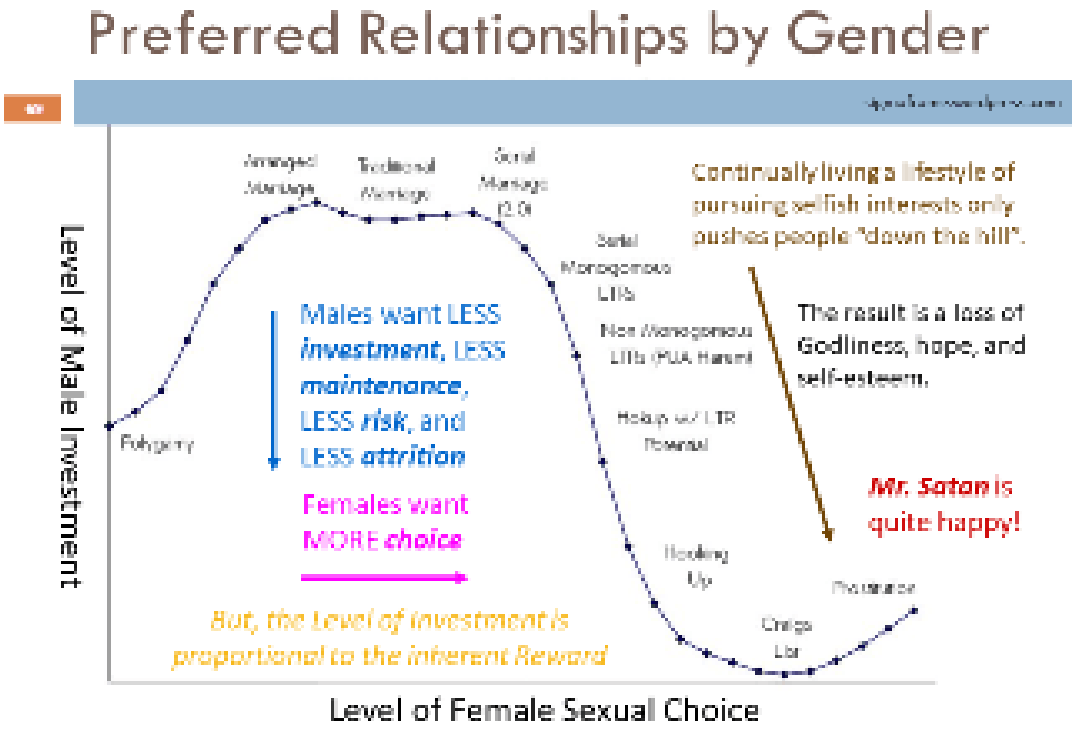
- Jack – 35 posts
- Oscar – 4 posts
- Red Pill Apostle – 2 posts
- Frank Chalmers – 1 post
- Lexet – 1 post

Judging by the most popular posts in this 3-month-long theme and the comments, readers are most interested in reading about (in this order):

1. How women hurt men, or have hurt men.
2. How men have quit women and gone MGTOW.
3. How men are disillusioned with women, dating, and marriage.

That pretty much explains the reasons for, and also the need for this theme.

Posts are categorized by subtopics below. Responses and related posts from around the sphere that appeared during this time period are also included.



We are now at the end of the line. Mr. Satan is puffing on his stogie and congratulating himself on a job well done.

Identity

Paradigms of Masculinity

- Radix Fidem: Genders and Formality (2025/1/7)
- Σ Frame: Vice : What does it mean to be a Man? (2025/2/3)
- Σ Frame: Identity (2025/2/28)
- Σ Frame: Celibacy vs Singleness (2025/3/5)
- Σ Frame: The 'IT' Factor (2025/3/7)
- Σ Frame: Review: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men into Boys (2025/3/10)
- Σ Frame: Claiming Disability to Receive Benefits (2025/3/12)
- Σ Frame: Sinful Nature on the Right, or Sinful Nurture on the Left? (2025/3/24)

Bachelorhood

- Σ Frame: The Red Pill is a Fresh New Beginning for Bachelors (2025/1/3)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Why I am "Red Pill" (2025/1/8)
- Radix Fidem: Marriage and Tribulation Norming (2025/1/23)
- Σ Frame: We're still a long way from Conservative Values (2025/1/24)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Joshua 1:1-9 is NOT a Bootstrap Speech (2025/1/29)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Keys to Hope: Selling Your Image (2025/2/10)
- Σ Frame We always know the right thing to do after the right time to do it has passed. (2025/2/26)

The New MGTOW

- Σ Frame: The New Face of MGTOW (2025/1/20)

- Σ Frame: The Rise of Middle-Class MGTOW (2025/1/22)
- Σ Frame: MGTOW's and Non-Tingly Respect (2025/1/27)
- Σ Frame: The Wake Up Call (2025/1/31)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Sh!t Sammich (2025/2/7)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Soft MGTOW (2025/2/10)
- Σ Frame: What's wrong with his budget? (2025/2/12)
- Gunner Q: A Way To Reenchant This World (2025/2/26)

Obstacles to Contentment

The Devouring Mother / Son-Husband Dynamic

- Σ Frame (Oscar, Jack): Son-Husbands and Devouring Mothers (2025/1/10)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): Joker (2025/1/11)
- Σ Frame: The Effects of Bad Mothering (2025/1/13)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): Collateral (2025/1/18)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): Secondhand Lions (2025/1/25)
- Σ Frame: Modern men expect emotional openness with a woman, just like their Devouring Mamas trained them. (2025/2/21)

Insecure Attachment

- Σ Frame: The Two Mating Markets (2025/2/5)

Loneliness

- Catacomb Resident: Can't do Less (2025/1/15)

- Σ Frame: Loneliness (2025/1/15)
- Σ Frame: Vectors of Loneliness (2025/1/17)
- Σ Frame: Is Loneliness a bug, or an intrinsic feature of the male experience? (2025/3/3)

Lust and Masturbation

- Σ Frame: 5 Offenses of Being Unclean (2025/2/7)
- Σ Frame: 10 Flavors of Masturbation (2025/2/17)
- Σ Frame: Is Marriage a Solution to Lust? (2025/2/19)
- Σ Frame: Overcoming the Spiritual-Sexual Poverty Mentality (2025/2/24)
- Mogadishu Matt: Life's Masturbation and Running Away From Contentment (2025/3/25)
- Σ Frame: Is Masturbation a Sin? (2025/3/28)

Perspectives

Insights

- Σ Frame: Greg Adams on How The Manosphere Destroyed ITSELF (2025/1/19)
- Aaron Renn: The Wounded Prophet (2025/2/26)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)
- Σ Frame: On Seriousness-ness (2025/3/17)
- Σ Frame: A True Heresy (2025/3/19)

$$$

- Σ Frame: Cultural Credentialism is Counterfeit Currency (2025/2/14)
- Σ Frame: Vehicles of Upward Mobility (2025/3/21)
- Σ Frame: Necessary Luxury (2025/3/26)

- Spawny's Space: Bachelor's Tax (2025/3/26)

Others

- Σ Frame: Lessons from the Game of Chess (2025/1/1)
- Σ Frame: 2024 Sigma Frame Performance Report (2025/1/6)

Related

- The Federalist (Matthew Cochran): Most People Are Called To Marriage; It's Not Idolatrous To Act Accordingly (2019/8/30)
- Σ Frame: Lust (2023/2/10)

Disney's Snow White should have been named Champurrada

Jack · 2 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

What's in a name? Everything in the case of Disney's new film, Snow White.

Readership: All
Theme: Whorable Wonders
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

Snow White, starring Rachel Zegler, was probably "inspired by" Disney's classic 1937 film, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs.

This film has become one of the biggest box office flops in recent decades, losing somewhere between $115-280 million in theaters (depending on the calculations and sources), and generating waves of sharp criticism that have swept across social media since its release on 2025/3/21.

This debacle extends the diminishing legacy of Disney, in decline ever since they began coopting W0ke narratives for their storytelling and 'diversifying' their casts. As oft said, "Go W0ke, go broke!"

Here we'll look at 3 interconnected factors that have contributed to its unpopularity and arrive at a very simple conclusion.

Character Incongruity

Obviously, the most controversial aspect of the film was casting Rachel Zegler as the titular character, Snow White.

Zegler's performance in the remake of West Side Story was pretty good, so I'll give her credit for being a decent actress (as long as she keeps the annoying sass in check), but also — and this is very important — she was an excellent choice for that particular role.

Obviously, the actress portraying Snow White should have a complexion that personifies her name, Snow White. That's not 'r@cist', that's just congruity in character — a necessary, even central quality of a good story. There's no way around this without either reverting back to the original story line and casting characters that fit the original roles … OR simply changing her name. (I'll address this possibility in the next section.)

The Left complains of cultural appropriation, e.g. Wh!tes lifting the character traits, dress, and hairstyles of Non-

Wh!te cultures, but fails to call it the same when Non-Wh!tes are cast into uniquely Wh!te character roles — which is exactly what Disney did by casting Zegler as Snow White, and with all the embarrassment that W0kers pin on cultural appropriation.

Another dismaying aspect of the film was that Disney totally screwed up the magical mythos of the classic fairy tale by adulterating it with a female protagonist who is an empowered, self-determined, Strong Independent Woman™, who actively seeks her own destiny rather than being a helper to the dwarves while innocently waiting for a prince.

The problem with these two points is NOT so much that it is inappropriate (which is a matter of opinion), but that there is not enough similitude to the original character and story to artfully allow viewers to suspend their disbelief enough to keep them glued to the script. At best, it is a parody. At worst, it is … what it is!

"Red Riding Hood" would be more believable.

The (Missing) Power of a Name

Think about it. Zegler's Snow White could have been an instant hit if only Disney had released this film with the title, A Cuban Fairy Tale, or Champurrada, or even Mocha Latte instead. Everything else about the film would have 'roughly' fallen into place. Ziegler's Hispanic sass would shine forth as a heroine of the SIW trope, and even the 'champ' in Champurrada would befit the image. Then it would be left to the audiences to delightfully discover that it was a reinterpretation of Snow White, properly appropriated into Liberal Hispanic culture (or vice versa). It would also honor and celebrate Zegler's ethnicity, instead of making her look like a wannabe try hard but failing badly.

Departure from the Mythos

The most critical aspect contributing to the film's total failure is that it fails to comply with the unyielding expectations placed upon any retelling of the original story.

For comparison, the animated classic film that was released by Disney in 1937 was true to the mythos of the medieval fairy tale of a young girl living a hardscrabble life, being persecuted by powerful envious villains (the Queen / w!tch), being forced to depend on the good graces of others (i.e. the seven dwarves), while also inspiring them with her youthful beauty and innocent charms … only to then be found by Prince Charming, thereby providing the kind neighbors and townsfolk and viewers alike with a satisfying conclusion of her presence in their lives, and also appealing to the girl's hypergamous desires.

A scene from Disney's original 1937 classic, Snow White and the Seven Dwarves.

The magic of the original story rests entirely on the inspirational charms of feminine vulnerability, and how all of humanity will bend over backwards to accommodate and protect this innocent beauty until she can be delivered safely into an appropriate social environment for reproduction with a high-quality male (implied by the euphemistic phrase, "and they lived happily ever after"). The whole reason why this mythos holds a magical appeal is because it points to the glory of God within intersexual relationships. If you get too far away from this central mythos, then the whole story falls apart, simply because it no longer glorifies the image of God that is manifested in the union of male and female archetypes.

But if the whole point of rewriting the script is to get as far away from this mythos as possible, as Disney has attempted to do, then all the 'magic' of the mythos is also lost. Of course it's going to flop.

Conclusions

In Snow White, Disney has continued to rely on Liberals' false view of human herding — that humans can be hammered into believing W0kerized notions of pseudo-reality given enough repetitive indoctrination. All to further the fabricated ~~lies~~ societal conversations about gender roles and representation.

Aside from this myopic approach, we can only conclude that this film was intended to implode; similar to controlled failure in engineering, or planned obsolescence in marketing, only here we have an example of recontextualized disappointment in storytelling — a poisoned apple.

The envious wicked queen, disguised as a hag, gives Snow White a poisoned apple.

The problem with casting a Latina actress as Snow White goes beyond mere cosmetic changes; and it is NOT about specious issues of race, representation, or even authenticity, as the W0ke Narrative™ weavers would have us believe. It is NOT even about foolishly choosing actors that do not fit their given roles well. No. The real problem with Zegler's Snow Wh!te is that a Fem-Powered™ Non-Wh!te Snow Wh!te does not align with the mythical vision of the original character, based on a traditional European fairy tale. IOW, the story is no longer about Snow White, but about a completely different character, only with the same name and sharing a few other similarities that are NOT key elements of the original character and plot, which is more or less dishonest advertising or false representation.

As it stands, the only way in which Snow White distinguishes itself from the other live-action adaptations of Disney's classic animated films, such as Alice in Wonderland, Aladdin, Beauty and the Beast, and The Lion King, is that Snow White proves that Disney is at last so far out of touch with both the art of storytelling and audience expectations that they won't hesitate to throw $120+ million in the can, just to churn out one more fatiguing rehash of inverted gender roles and ethnic W0kery.

Related

- Red Pill Doctor: Lost gravestone of the 'Real Snow White' located in Germany (2019/8/18)
- Σ Frame: Why are there so many sexy aggressive women in anime and video game culture? (2021/7/9)
- The Daily Signal: 'Snow White' Is Latest Disney Film to Get Woke-Washed (2023/8/4)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Cultural Myth of the SIW (2023/11/8)
- New York Post: Disney 'Snow White' disaster proves it again: Go woke, go broke! (2025/3/12)
- Better Bachelor: It's on track to be the biggest bomb in history just like all the others (2025/3/25)
- Practical Eschatology: "Snow White" And The Media Spin (2025/3/25)
- The Orthosphere (Bonald): A sense of unwholesomeness at the movies (2025/3/26)
- The Western Journal: Disney's Woke 'Snow White' Breaks Its Own Humiliating Record, Finally Hits Rock Bottom (2025/4/1)

The Feminine Hierarchy of Needs

Jack · 4 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Feminine Needs are that which motivates the Feminine Imperative, by definition.

Readership: Men
Theme: Whorable Wonders
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

One of the tricks of being a good mechanic is knowing how to maintain an engine in good running order. Things like, knowing how often to change the oil, and where to find the oil filler. How much brake fluid is sufficient, and how much is too much? If the engine is overheating, then is it because of a lack of coolant, a stuck thermostat, or something more serious? If the engine sputters when you step on the gas, then is it because of a faulty ignition system or a fouled spark plug? How green does the coolant need to be for it to be safe for winter?

Similarly, one of the tricks of being a good husband is knowing how to maintain a wife in good running order. A lot of husbands have the idea that wives are self-starters, self-maintaining, and self-regulating, but they're thinking of those classic models that haven't been produced in decades. These days, the modern husband must have a toolbox of tricks and an arsenal of supplies to keep the wife well lubricated and reciprocating in good order, and to prevent her from either freezing up or overheating.

So here I've collected a basic inventory of female emotional needs with some commentary about their importance.

12 Feminine Needs

The Manosphere has identified a sizeable number of female sociosexual / psychological 'needs'. Here are 12.

1. Acceptance — "I'm OK, you're OK."
2. Affirmation — "You must agree with meee that I am vaaluuuable because I have NO sin or shame — and if you think I do, then YOU are the one who is Baaad!"

3. Attention — "Look at meee! Wheee!"
4. Control — "I will have my way at any cost to you!"
5. Defilation (activities leading to defilement, e.g. "girls night out", YOLO, etc.) — "Girls just wanna have fun."
6. Drama — "My life consists of the meaning that I create."
7. Indignation — "How dare you prick my egotistical pride!"
8. Liberation — "I need the time, $$$, and sexual freedom to do what F-ing pleasures moi."
9. Relevancy — "The world revolves around meee!"
10. Secrecy — "No one can disrupt my self-centered paradigm of faux-reality if they don't know about it."
11. Validation — "I'm a sex goddess, so worship meee."
12. Vengeance — "If you fail to serve my interests, there will be hell to pay!"

As to the order of importance, Feeriker wrote,

> "…second only to drama, attention is women's greatest physiological need, outweighed only by oxygen (yes, even food, water, and shelter take a backseat to the need for drama and attention)."

After attention and drama, it is difficult to categorize these needs in terms of a hierarchy of importance. But one thing is certain, whichever need is most immediately useful for avoiding accountability and responsibility will be the most important one in any given context. Also, women can be very adaptive, creative, and innovative in switching from one to another, if any changes should ever be detected in the context.

Summary

Looking over this list of Feminine Needs, it is apparent why women are drawn to abortion, adultery, criminal elements, divorce, cliques / gangs, gay p0rn, IG / OASIS / 0nlyF@ns, prostitution, ONS's, serial monogamy, sexual profligacy, smutty romance novels, ~~sex tourism~~ traveling abroad, etc., as these things provide more of what is required to satisfy these 'needs'.

In many cases, these avenues plus earning capacity allow a woman to become self-maintaining and self-sufficient.

This is why women always vote in favor of abortion, adultery, immigration, socialism, and wealth redistribution.

Unfortunately, in spite of their productivity, such women remain broken and out of order, and are unlikely (and unwilling) to be of any practical use to a family minded husband.

This is why women "love opportunistically" and don't give a rat's @ss about commitment, honor, love, loyalty, etc. — because these things do nothing to satisfy these 'needs'.

This is why women are often compared to children.

From a Christian viewpoint, these are all "sinful cravings" / "desires of the flesh". In theory, Agentic / Christian / mature / regenerated women don't let themselves become a pawn of their own desires. But clinical specimens of this type are yet to be found.

This is why men are increasingly separating themselves from women — because women are more trouble than they're worth.

Epilogue

It is difficult for the owner of a 21st century wife to know which needs to feed, and which to starve, for the proper maintenance of the autonomous wife unit. There must be a homeostatic balance. It also depends on the manufacturer. Some expert husbands have told me that these needs should be fed to a limited degree, but also regulated and kept in moderation. If there is a zero tolerance policy, then most women will choke up and break down. Some begin rotating around the carousel while others wind up on the laps of divorce lawyers. Others fly into the stratosphere, or across the tracks to the other side of town. There's no standard straightforward procedure.

However, husbands would do well to remember the old adage, "Feed a fever; starve a cold." That means, rile up a woman's temper when she's overheating (e.g. Agree and Amplify, teasing, etc.), and shut her out cold when she's freezing over (e.g. Dread Game, Nexting, etc.).

Related

- Σ Frame: Taking Headship by Force (2021/5/26)
- Σ Frame: Headship Authority Takes Work (2022/8/12)
- Σ Frame: The Challenges of Moving Towards Headship (2023/4/5)
- Σ Frame: The Battle for Headship begins on the Home Turf (2023/4/7)
- Spawny's Space: To Want (2025/4/3)

Guilt is a Motivator for Women's Hypergamy and Desire for Status

Jack · 7 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Latent guilt explains a lot of women's behaviors.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Whorable Wonders; Validation
Length: 950 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

A Little Story

I've been to the Philippines a couple of times, once in 2006, and again in 2010, staying there about 2 weeks each time. I stayed in a very remote area in Pangasinan. It was hot as hell. People lived in bamboo huts with no electricity or plumbing. They pumped water by hand, cooked food over an open fire, and shared a community outhouse. Drunken riots and theft were commonplace.

One thing I noticed while I was there was this overwhelming sense of guilt. I couldn't figure out why I felt so guilty.

It's the same kind of guilt you might feel when you're still wearing your pajamas at 11:00 a.m., or when you're hung over the next day after an all-night drinking binge, or when you've been out of work for months and still have no job leads, or when you've been watching amateur granny p0rn all afternoon.

For these examples, the reason why you feel guilty is clear. You're slacking off, losing sight of your purpose, losing motivation, and not living up to your potential.

But visiting another country?

After some reflection, I determined that the overwhelming poverty had something to do with it. I discovered this when I bought a 16 oz. bottle of Coca-Cola at a ramshackle roadside market for what amounted to a day's wage in that neck of those desolate dusty plains of Pangasinan. After I drank the Coke, I didn't feel that enervating pervasive guilt for a few hours. Every day after that, I'd take a half-hour walk to that store and buy a Coke, just to take the edge off the heavy guilt and give myself something to do.

On the way there and back, I passed by an elementary school. Every time I walked past the school grounds holding that bottle of Coke, all the kids, probably numbering 200 or more, would come running to the wire fence and would stand there and stare at me as I strode by. At first, I thought they were intrigued to see a white foreigner … until I imagined what I must've looked like to them. To Westerners, it would appear like some rich foreigner dressed in silk Armani walking around holding a bottle of vintage Dom Perignon worth a couple thousand a bottle and sipping it throughout the afternoon. And doing that every day!

Latent Feminine Guilt

In A god we must obey. (2017/2/26), Dalrock reviewed Sheila Gregoire's message to Christian women in Guilt makes the woman go around, in which she wrote,

> "We women feel guilty about everything. In fact, they say that the most common emotion women feel is guilt…
>
> We feel guilty for relaxing, for reading a novel and leaving the housework behind, for spending money on a manicure instead of on paying down debt, and for feeding everyone cereal for dinner.
>
> We feel guilty for not saving more, not loving more, not giving more."

Men find this latent guilt hard to relate to, but as Gregoire writes, it is not a joke for women. Since the days of Eve, they've carried the residual generational guilt of causing the downfall of mankind.

My experience in the Philippines helped me understand why women feel guilty about everything, and why they're constantly striving for material wealth and status, be it through career advancement, earning $$$, hypergamy, social climbing, or whatever.

Women feel the same way as those dirty poor school kids felt when they lay their eyes on a tall, rich, handsome, well-dressed, relatively high-status man. Something akin to a golden-haired demiurge strutting the Earth in utter opulence.

And without that inspiration, the same latent guilt permeates their souls, just like what I felt in the Philippines.

Anything to Escape the Guilt

Women are easily deceived because they're burdened with latent guilt.

Like men are always chasing after material possessions, women, and worldly accomplishments to displace the loneliness in their souls (which only Jesus can do for Christian men), women will unreservedly bet the whole farm in the hope of tapping into that glorious life. The risks and potential losses are seen as insignificant compared to the payoff.

This also illustrates why women find it easy to believe that their hypergamic / romantic / sexual desires are holy, sacred, and sanctifying.

Or the 'sin' of lacking moxie, or 'repenting' of sexual morality, or the cult of women's self-esteem, or their self-centered solipsism.

As St. Dalrock wrote,

> "There is a key lie that is used to sell the idea that women become more moral by being self-centered. This is the lie that women's nature, their great fault, is to forever put others before themselves, and to feel guilty whenever they don't put others first. This is exactly the message self-centered women want to hear most, and it is why the message of virtuous self-centeredness, of holy selfishness, is so wildly popular in all forms of media aimed at women."
>
> Dalrock: A god we must obey. (2017/2/26)

Like that Coke I bought at that dusty roadside market every day, all these things are just something that takes the edge off their guilt. But they are deceived into mistakenly believing that whatever ameliorates that latent guilt is good, holy, and righteous.

The odd paradox here is that women's self-centered efforts to reduce their perceived guilt by branch swinging, controlling men, indulging in hypoagentic solipsism, pursuing education and career, or putting themselves first (or intentionally NOT doing so) only bring shameful results that heap more guilt upon themselves, especially if they fail to marry well, or stick the landing, or establish themselves somehow.

Related

- Dalrock: The sin of lacking moxie. (2013/9/11)
- Dalrock: Repenting of sexual morality. (2015/11/2)
- Dalrock: The cult of women's self-esteem. (2016/2/13)
- Dalrock: A god we must obey. (2017/2/26)

Working Girls at The Mega Corp™

Jack · 9 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The dark side of bureaucracies in Western corporations.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Whorable Wonders; Validation
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

Ideally, a man should be spending his time and effort on activities that generate real value in the form of products and/or services, and not just be a wage slave or a cog in a company's 'culture' machine.

Here's why.

The Mega Corp™

Many hourly wage jobs and some salaried positions consist of tedium that doesn't directly generate income for the company, or contribute to the real product or service provided by the industry. But it still needs to be done so that the company's main purpose can be accomplished. So industries will pay as little as necessary to keep someone piddling away on those tasks so that the money makers upstairs can continue to generate value without being concerned or distracted by these details.

I'm not talking about custodial or secretarial jobs, although they might be included. I mean jobs like HR, or internal analyst, or quality manager, or safety inspector, and to be honest, many middle manager and supervisory positions as well.

Critics of bureaucracies like to call these "Make Work" jobs, because the value provided by these jobs to the main enterprise is minimal and peripheral, and their contribution is mostly to support the bureaucracy itself. In a recession, these jobs are the first to be eliminated, because they are not part of the core wealth generating skeleton crew of the company.

These jobs are also what create what is often referred to as the 'culture' of a company. But from the CEO's view, it's just overhead that can be trimmed down and/or tossed out if/when it's necessary to bump up those bottom hemlines.

The Brad Boss™

The other, darker function of the massive bureaucracy in The Mega Corp™ is to act as a legally and socially acceptable front for an informal high-class brothel that houses and supports a multitude of defacto soft open harems on perpetual rotation.

I'm serious. So how does this work?

Powerful wealthy men in a large company hire vast numbers of females in their workforce, pay them an hourly wage or a salary to do 'Make Work', and then pick through them as time, chance, interest, and opportunity allow.

This is the real reason why many workforces exceed 50% women — women who have no direct contribution to production.

This is the real reason why "hiring equity" exists and is enforced as 'ethical'. Heh.

This is exactly why most business cultures are filled with young female 'interns', desperate divorcees, single mothers with no boundaries, smart (sexually) liberal sophisticated dames, and Strong Independent Women™. It is because chaste, conservative, family-minded gals, no matter how diligent, intelligent, or 'qualified', are not 'productive' in The Brad Bosses' lecherous eyes.

If for whatever reason, these women do NOT tightly embrace their fully-endowed loyalties to The Mega Corp™, then they are less 'beneficial' to The Brad Boss™ and risk expulsion from the soft open harem. For example, if they get too happy in their marriages, or too settled down with family life, or too preoccupied with raising children, or if they are unwilling to put their heads down and suck up, or sit through the daily grind a little harder, or won't work after hours, or overtime, or the Night Shift™, or are a little too old-fashioned, or just too old, then they are considered no longer 'available', 'beneficial', or 'useful' to The Brad Bosses' primary purpose for them at The Mega Corp™.

Then just like that, they are simply discharged from their lap-dog position, and they're thrust out of the revolving door. No alimony, no child support payments for the next 18 years, no court cases, no dividing assets… just a severance pay covered by The Mega Corp™. Thus, The Brad Boss™ has successfully dumped the b!nt who won't "play ball(s)".

This is the real reason why slacking single mothers who sleep with their bedroom doors open at night are given promotions over more capable, harder working men. It is The Peter Principle in play.

This is the basic reason (in addition to the lost labor and added costs) why The Mega Corp™ hates to give women (paid) maternity leave and even offers health care plans that cover abortions and writes policies that entice women to have them.

The Working Girls™

The thought of having a paid position riding the classy carousels of The Mega Corp™ is deeply arousing to many women. You see, The Mega Corp™ is a 'professional' culture that delivers the attention, propinquity, and ready access to a Rolodex of Big Shot executives — every day, as well as a few hawt colleagues to play with (viz. Coworkers With Benefits) whenever Brad is out of town on a business trip or is too 'busy' with a colleague to fit a ONS into his schedule.

This is why so many young women rabidly prefer having a job at The Mega Corp™ over getting married to Joe Schloe and having a family.

This is the reason why so many young girls think nothing of taking out massive loans to get a college education, just so they can be properly 'qualified' to move to the other side of the country (or anywhere away from home), and start their 'professional career' as a young Working Girl™ at The Mega Corp™.

This is also why working wives willingly obey their bosses but NOT their husbands. She's NOT just onto ONE Brad Boss™, mind you, but is wholly devoted to doing whatever it takes to be a preselected member of The Mega Corp™ carousel, even if that means SuBm!tT!nG to The Brad Boss™.

So you see, the stereotype of women sleeping their way up the corporate ladder is not without foundation. That is the reality of The Mega Corp™. Only the stupid ones who embarrass The Brad Boss™ get called out on it.

Related

- Biblical Gender Roles: What Wives could learn from Secretaries (2014/10/17)
- Christianity and Masculinity: The cultural blinders of authority (2018/6/1)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): The Feminist Life Script (2020/12/17)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): ADIEU HUSsies Sell a Broken Script (2021/5/12)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Upper Middle Class Career Life Script Model (2021/5/17)
- Σ Frame: Dolearchy Trumps Patriarchy (2021/6/4)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): How to Change a Hostile Culture (2021/6/7)
- Christianity and Masculinity: The parallels of temptation with sex and marriage (2022/2/8)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Why are women willingly submissive to authorities, but not to their husbands?

(2022/10/26)

Twitter / X is now the Hindu H0e's Instagram

Jack · 11 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Indian floozies advertise themselves online as wankerbait.

Readership: Western Men
Theme: Whorable Wonders; Culture
Length: 250 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

In the past, I've touched on how Feminism is developing as a national problem in India.

Recently, virile Vedic Vamps have taken their V Power to the next virtual venue. Dark, thick-haired Tamarind Tarts are now trolling their tits and tresses on Twitter, much like their western counterp00ns do on Instagram. This may be due to Elon Musk's easing restrictions on the site.

OnlyF@ns is outlawed in India because uploading any sexual content on the internet is illegal as per Indian law. However, India has an equivalent of OnlyF@ns called F@ncentro. It does not allow p0rn0graphy but it does facilitate fly-by-night fornication with floozies.

Indian folklore attests of flying monkeys, so an adaptation of the RP branch swinging metaphor takes on the mental image of a strumpet circus.

I've heard that Indian squaws are some of the horniest hussies on the planet, so it is to be expected that their primal p00n-pumping passions would push them to pimp themselves out even more than Western tramps do.

It will be interesting to watch how Feminism rocks and rolls the Indian subcontinent back into the dark ages. Meanwhile, we'll enjoy seeing the Turmeric Trollops advertising their womanly wares on Twitter.

An Indian Red Pill site called The Male Factor once informed those readers who had a divested interest in what's going on in that part of the world. Unfortunately, this site has recently been deplatformed.

Meanwhile, floxy floozies continue to flaunt their flesh on Twitter / X.

Not good for the Indian cultural shtick, but VERY good for the indiscriminate Brahman stud.

If you're Indian, it's still the best time to be a player.

Related

- Σ Frame: Women Crave Male Attention (2021/7/26)
- The Male Factor: Why Did Vedic India Want to Restrict Women's Sexual Freedom? (2021/9/26)
- Σ Frame: Something they didn't expect (2022/3/25)

Horny Housewives of the Future Patristic Age

Jack · 14 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A snapshot of the distant future consequences of the widespread use of birth control.

Readership: All
Theme: Whorable Wonders; Validation
Length: 2,500 words
Reading Time: 14 minutes

Introduction

The introduction of hormonal birth control medication in 1960 and the legalization of abortion in 1973 led to the regular, widespread use of these methods throughout Western nations. Studies have shown that the women who chose these options over bearing a child were predominately among one of several select demographics, namely women who were less beautiful, less stable, more intelligent, more liberally-aligned, or some combination of these traits. This led to a sharp decrease in the number of children born to these types of women. Furthermore, less intelligent and lower-class women tended to have abortions, while middle or upper-class women relied more on birth control pills to arrest their fecundity.

That all started nearly 200 years ago, and each generation since then has had, on average, a larger percentage of the population born to women who chose not to abort or use contraceptives. By and large, the women who have chosen not to deter or terminate natural procreation have been beautiful, emotionally reserved, politically conservative women, poorer, less intelligent women, and others (mostly East Asians and immigrants) who pursued early marriage instead of the Feminist Life Script that was so vastly popular in that bygone age. This has resulted in the more pronounced frequency of these traits that we see in today's women.

As a result of both natural and artificial selection via the use of abortion and hormonal birth control, the average female living in the 22nd century is less independent, less intelligent, less psychotic, more attractive, more conservative, and much more single-mindedly determined to have children, compared to the average woman living before the mid-20th century.

This phenomenon was first noted in the 2020s, just 60 years (about 2-3 generations) after the introduction of hormonal birth control. Since then, with every successive generation, women have become more proactive and more competitive about grabbing a man before the best men are taken, bedding down, and bearing children — and if necessary, abandoning legal marriage as a formality of a bygone age that is no longer convenient, and either joining an informal harem as a defacto concubine, or else signing on to a government sponsored dole program.

All these changes have resulted in a marked shift in the norm of women's mating instincts, as well as a legion of medical and social upheavals.

Anatomical Changes

In the early 21st century, it was predicted that lower IQ people would outbreed those with a higher IQ, and that the average IQ would steadily decline. Since then, this drop has been clinically documented. However, the fact that the average female IQ has declined at a greater rate than that of males was completely unexpected. Why is this? In addition to the well-known fact that less intelligent women were less likely to use birth control and more likely to have a higher fecundity, there was also a disproportionate percentage of more intelligent women who postponed or forfeited childbearing in favor of pursuing higher education and career advancement. Sociosexual researchers have further theorized that our ancestral women possessed a hypergamous preference to breed with taller, wealthier, more successful, and more intelligent men on average, thereby leading to the presently observed sex-linked IQ and height disparity.

Another consequence of natural selection since the introduction of the pill almost 200 years ago is that a greater proportion of women now have acute negative side effects in response to hormonal contraceptives. These side effects include clinical depression, dermatitis, eczema, psoriasis, gluten intolerance, nausea, rhinorrhea, projectile vomiting, and pusillanimous flatulence, among others varying on a case-by-case basis. Interestingly, these allergic reactions are not limited to hormonal contraceptives, but also include a greater sensitivity to any sort of hormonal disruptors. For example, bisphenol and phthalates, chemicals that were once commonly found in cosmetics and personal care products such as nail polish, hair spray, and shampoo, and also in synthetic fabrics such as nylon and polyester, can no longer be tolerated by most women. Highly sensitive women must avoid using these fabrics and products, especially cosmetics. Some women can only wear natural fibers (i.e. linen, wool, silk, and furs), while others who have severe skin allergies in response to these toxins prefer to wear nothing at all. Instead, many women now apply avocado oil or coconut oil to their skin and hair, which prevents aging and provides a protective barrier against irritating volatile pollutants in the atmosphere. Women who are extremely sensitive to airborne agents will stay at home in a controlled atmosphere environment where they can freely frolick in their shiny oiled buff.

Sociosexual Changes

Throughout history, women have always had a latent nurturing nature, but before the mid-21st century, this instinct remained largely dormant until after childbirth. It's hard for us to imagine this now, but at that time, women's mothering instincts were mostly inactive as long as a woman was on birth control and remained childless. It is well documented in early 21st century medical research papers that the acts of childbirth and breastfeeding triggered the production of oxytocin (once called the "love hormone") causing these motherly behaviors, including pair bonding with a male partner and a strong interest in nurturing offspring. Modern sociosexual scientists believe this is the reason why many women living at that time did not desire children until later in life, usually near the end of their fertility window in their early 30s — an average of 6.2 years earlier than women living today. But now, it has been clinically demonstrated that limbic sexual stimulation in the hypothalamus causes this major transformation in a majority of women's hormonal chemistry, thereby triggering them to desire having children. The result is that modern women's mothering and nurturing instincts kick in upon their first defloration, causing women to earnestly desire a conception to result from the act.

Closely related, it has also been discovered that this limbic mechanism bypasses the prefrontal cortex, thereby leading to a greater frequency of women displaying involuntary reflexes to sexual stimuli, such as direct male attention or in many cases the mere sight or sound of infants cooing. Thus, modern women are not only validated by male attention and/or having a child (as they were previous to the advent of pill), but are now also sexually aroused by these stimuli.

As a result, women's evolving hormonal chemistry has led to them displaying compulsive mating behaviors. These behaviors are frequently involuntary during an intense rutting phase between the ages of 17-21, indicated by profuse vaginal lubrication, the expulsion of ejaculate from the Skene's gland, and the most obvious (and annoying) spastic lordosis (AKA 'leaping' or 'lurching', and known in the early 21st century as 'twerking'), which is governed by the limbic-hypothalamic system through estrogen-binding neurons and a spino-midbrain-spinal neural circuit. Many less intelligent women will display these impulsive behaviors up into their 30s.

According to the data, it took about 4.6 generations for women's intersociosexual behaviors beneficial to mating and the intrinsic desire to bear and raise children to catch up to the decrease in fertility caused by the pill. Consequently, women living today are motivated to want children as much as they want sex, or even more so for some individuals.

Civil and Domestic Changes

All these evolutionary adaptive behaviors have been beneficial for the survival of the species. However, it has also brought constant disruptions to daily life. For example, some young girls exhibit such impulsive and violent symptoms of rutting and spastic lordosis that they're required to homeschool or take classes online so that they do not disrupt the educational environment for others.

Many women who are severely cursed with libidinous impulses too uncontrollable for them to manage have been unable to secure a man's commitment in marriage, mostly because marriage-minded men cannot be certain that such a woman is capable of remaining faithful. Meanwhile, as the average IQ of women has steadily dropped over the decades, they have also earned less income, leading to more and more women turning to more lucrative (as well as easier and more enjoyable) sex work. This dilemma eventually culminated in the Women's Hypoagency movement of the 2040s, and introduced a new social order in which many women willingly forfeited their political rights (e.g. owning property, voting) and some human rights (e.g. bodily autonomy, procreation, and others) in favor of a special asylum status. Women who chose this option became wards of the state and received community housing, a basic health care package, and monthly wages for their labors, mostly state-designated public service occupations such as cooking, cleaning, gardening, and for some, pr0st!tut!0n and/or eugenic breeding.

Socio-Psychological Changes

Just 6 generations (~150 years) after the advent of birth control in 1960, the human race had already undergone significant evolutionary adaptations.

The longitudinal result of introducing elective abortion and artificial birth control is that all women who possessed a genetic predisposition to avoid or postpone having children have been gradually filtered out of the gene pool. As a consequence, the number of women who are apathetic or passive about, or uninterested in having children has been severely reduced and almost completely eliminated from the population in certain urban locales.

In fact, over the past several decades, more and more women have become increasingly aggressive about sexual congress, copulation, and having children just as soon as they hit puberty. More and more women have been wholly unable to control their feral urge to lurch, snag studs, and copulate, even in public! Nowadays, one would have to travel to a Buddhist or Muslim nation to find intelligent women who have any semblance of self-control.

Legal Reforms

Beginning with the historic MeT00 movement in the early 21st century, many women have adopted the habit of accusing their bedmates — both willing and unwilling accomplices, of harassment, uxory, r@pe, and robbery, resulting in mass social pandemonium that eventually led to a slew of legal reforms in the 2060s.

It all began on the East Coast, when women started demanding monetary compensation after presumably random hookups and were denied on the basis of their willing (and eager) consent. Citing the Hypoagency Movement of their mother's generation, women claimed their consent was involuntary and indiscriminatory, but were told they had to restrict their activities to the state regulated brothels or else risk being charged with inciting public disorder. In response, streetwalkers and OASIS starlets stormed the city halls and the courts in an 8-month-long nude s1ut walk, obscenely seducing any willing male bystander to engage in public acts of disgrace, including several judges, politicians, and even the governor of Massachusetts (with nary a condemnatory word from his wife who was a staunch supporter of the movement). This continued until legal reforms were enacted, requiring men to pay a minimum of $3 per minute, regardless of where copulation occurs. Men responded by ponying up the ca$h, carrying condoms, and getting regular STI checks. A rash of vasectomy procedures were scheduled over the following weeks.

Many cities in the Mid-West and South have passed municipal laws forbidding women under the age of 40 to enter the workforce because they caused too much disruption with predictable regularity. These laws became necessary in the 2070's because young women were always flashing, streaking, and constantly pestering their handsome male coworkers to solicit breeding activities. Even in liberal corporate environments where there were few men and very little male Attenshun! was available, they'd be constantly dancing, lurching, masturbating, calling or moaning loudly, and squirting everywhere. No matter whether real mating opportunities were available to them or not, their rutting behaviors significantly disrupted the workplace environment, slowing down productivity, and ruining important documents with what has become euphemistically referred to as "watermarks" (superseding the older definition of the term and rendering it archaic).

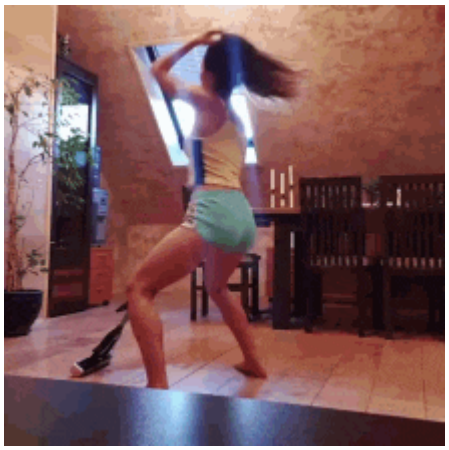
In the Mountain states, an epidemic of public sex acts fueled by marijuana and ecstasy aroused a consortium of conservative parents (i.e. Mormons and Wilsonians) to keep their children at home and out of school in order to avoid exposing them to the public spectacles of hedonism that had become commonplace. As a result, women under the age of 40 were restricted from roaming the streets alone and were required to be accompanied by a male relative when in public.

On the West coast, a string of pr0st!tut!0n franchises formed that charged a monthly membership fee. These were so prevalent and popular that it led to the legalization of pr0st!tut!0n after the big houses offered free membership to key politicians. The money earned through taxed and regulated pr0st!tut!0n proved to be such a boon to the economy that the tax rate in many cities dropped below 2.8%, thereby resurrecting the previously W0ke strangled economy. Within 12 years, all 52 states followed suit in legalizing pr0st!tut!0n and opening government operated brothels.

The New Normal

By the turn of the 22nd century, it became clear what the new 'normal' would be.

The dowry was legally reintroduced in the 2090s in order to help convince men to take on the hot, heavy, heaving responsibilities of marriage and keeping an unrelentingly horny wife in hand and satisfied.



At home, married men are perpetually entertained and sometimes annoyed by their flaming nude oily wives' constant spastic humping, and always, care must be taken not to slip on the snail trails of avocado oil and other fluids. Many working-class married men are into the habit of appeasing their wives' incessant desires by letting them fellate and ride them whenever they're watching VideoCasts. Thus, both men and women absolutely looove crime shows, home improvement shows, sitcoms, football games, NASCAR, and other sports broadcasts, leading to these programs being streamed 24/7. Since the typical housewife is much more obscene than most of what was once conveyed on P0rnHub, P0rn0graphy is now limited to starlets with unique anatomical abilities catering to special fetishes.

On the down side, men are frequently charged with the civil misdemeanor of uxory — a form of cruelty defined as a male lavishing a woman with intense attention in order to stimulate her limbic system unto intense uncontrollable arousal and thereby incite public disorder — "all in good fun", or so it is said. It must be assumed that women are strongly predisposed to coitus and do NOT have moral agency, because it can no longer be soundly proven that they do.

Not anymore, anyway.

All these social changes are why most women are married off young and kept at home nowadays, sometimes as young as 14 if they have already begun their life phase of rutting. The streets are no longer as safe for women (or men either) as they were in the 20th century.

A hundred years ago after the advent of feminism, women were clamoring to deny that they had any agency in order to displace their responsibilities onto men. Now they're wishing they could go back to "the good old days of the 1950s" when women had the freedom to cook, clean house, and raise children — WITHOUT the urgent libidinal sexual duress and the skin irritations of hormonal disruptors.

Related

- Laughing at Feminism: Horny Housewives of the Patristic Age (2019/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Revealing the motives behind unconcealed sex and nakedness (2021/1/29)
- Σ Frame: Sexual competition continues after marriage (2021/2/19)
- Σ Frame: Sex Appeal is not strongly correlated with Beauty (2021/4/30)
- Σ Frame: The Sexual De-Evolution (2021/7/28)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Effects of the Sexual Revolution on Female Sexuality (2024/9/24)

4 minutes and 12 seconds of love every other Tuesday

Red Pill Apostle · 16 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

You know times are bad when never enjoying sex becomes a joke.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Whorable Wonders
Author's Note: Coauthored with Jack.
Length: 500 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes + 1 minute of video

Those of us who have been around the Manosphere for a while are familiar with the trope of the carousel rider who somehow manages to stick the landing and then has a miserable marriage. Well, this has become so commonplace these days that female comedians are now joking about it — and sadly, people are laughing!

Bridesmaid FIGHT | Katherine Blanford (2024/12/26)

Her lines from 13:10-14:20. [Pardon the "like, you know" fluff.]

> "It was one of those moments in my life… We've all had this moment where you see somebody younger and then you realize how much you've elevated as a person. I was just looking at her like, "[__] I used to be you!" Do you remember in your 20s when you didn't eat because you were trying to stay scrawny because you're trying to find a mate? You know, because you needed shelter, right? You didn't want to live with your 17 roommates anymore, you know.
>
> But I was like, "Now I'm good. Now I live with an accountant in the suburbs and we've got an instapot." You know, you don't [need sex at all]. You're not horny anymore, you know. You don't have to pretend like you like butt stuff anymore. Now it's all like prepared, you know. You got 'sexy time' circled on the calendar every other Tuesday. He comes home, you clock in, you do your three positions, and you clock out. You're like, "Whoa! 4 minutes and 12 seconds! That that was a long one! Yeah we're going to have to use the massage gun tonight."

So here we have a hot blonde chick, making jokes about:

1. Being married to an accountant (Beta Bux).
2. Not having to work as hard to look good (letting herself go).
3. Scheduling sex 2x a month (lacking passion).
4. Not having to pretend she likes certain things in the bedroom (no enthusiasm).
5. Getting sex over with quickly (jaded).

Who knows what her marriage is actually like, but she hits all the Red Pill highlights for why guys opt for dating over marriage or to just remain single.

This just goes to prove that women can never escape their primary purpose of sex and procreation, and when that is absent or discarded, then they are relegated to sexual objectification — and it's not just men doing this — even women are objectifying themselves in presumed humor as Blanford demonstrates, and this is true whether they are actually enjoying sex or not. The sad part is that the women she's describing have probably never truly enjoyed sex in their whole life.

It's a shame that so many attractive women have reduced themselves to being everything they don't want to be by convincing themselves that they don't want to be what they truly are. (You can fill in the blank.)

And this is now considered funny. Ha ha.

H/T: F@cebook Reel

Related

- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Poison The Well (2025/2/12)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Unrelenting (2025/2/13)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Low End Market (2025/2/14)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Disgust (2025/2/17)

How to Juggle 3 Wives

Jack · 18 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Here's one guy's strategy.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Whorable Wonders
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

I came across this article at Alpha Male 2.0: Is Pair Bonding Good or Bad? Well, It's Both… (2025/2/28).

The titular topic of the article is 'pair bonding'. So going into it, I expected to read a lovey dovey description of peaceful harmony between a studly man and a loinstruck woman in a holy monogamous reciprocating union.

Imagine my surprise when I read:

> "So pair bonding doesn't require sexual monogamy, but it does require that she is (at least more or less) the only woman you're (at least somewhat) serious with and you are the only man she is serious with."

WTH?

Doesn't he know that pair bonding breaks down with increasing female N count?

Reading on, he says in so many words that he's "wired for pair bonding", but also for polygyny, and that he's got to have both. So now he has to do some mental acrobatics to puzzle through this conundrum.

His reason for desiring ~~pair~~ tryst bonding is thus.

> "I prefer pair bonding even though I don't want monogamy (because monogamy doesn't work). … at my age and my experience level, I don't want to date a bunch of women anymore, and I don't even want FwBs anymore, at least not in the traditional sense."

So it sounds to me like this Top Dawg wants a soft harem with all the joys of pair bonding and without all the messy complications of juggling multiple women.

Wow! Remind me to applaud his imaginative capabilities with a few slow penguin claps.

But that's not all. He also says there's a sweet spot for the number of women a man should have — NOT too few, NOT too long, and NOT too many either. He describes this extra requirement as follows.

> "Humans were never designed for anything even close to monogamy past about 2-3 years, and attempting such a thing, especially in the Western world, is just stupid.
>
> But they also weren't designed where you have seven wives living in your house either (sorry Andrew T@te and guys who want to be like him).
>
> That isn't even close to pair-bonding, so you're just going to create all kinds of drama, conflict, jealousy, and one-upmanship that's going to drive you and your wives insane (unless you enjoy drama, and some men do; cough Andrew T@te cough)."

He explains how to squeeze ‘pair bonding’ out of this experience as thus.

> “The term “pair bonding”, at least when I use the term, means you are in a serious, committed, loving (as in you love her and she loves you), long-term (or at least to be long-term) relationship with a woman.
>
> It means, or at least implies, that you don’t have this kind of relationship with anyone else, and she doesn’t either, though sex with other people is allowed as long as it’s not too serious.
>
> In Alpha Male 2.0 parlance, it means you have a high-end MLTR* and don’t have any other MLTRs besides her, or you have an OLTR.
>
> So pair bonding doesn’t require sexual monogamy, but it does require that she is (at least more or less) the only woman you’re (at least somewhat) serious with and you are the only man she is serious with.”

His description of ‘pair bonding’ is what I would call a ‘main squeeze’, with a few side hustles too.

I wonder what they’re all getting out of this arrangement? Well, I’m sure it involves lots of $$$.

So how does he pull off this stunt?

> "When I'm in Dubai for 7 months a year, I want to be with one special woman (more or less).
>
> Then when I'm in Paraguay for the other 4-5 months a year, I want to be with one special woman (again, more or less).
>
> When I visit the Collapsing USA, I want to be with one special woman.
>
> The fact that these are three different women means I'm not technically pair bonded. But it does mean that I'm de facto pair bonded whenever I'm in any one location. I don't have three wives with me at all times. I'm only with one in each location.
>
> This means I can have a pair bonding experience in any of my three big locations. It just happens to be a different woman in each location."

Right. So he delineates two types of pair bonding in order to make the logic work; technical pair bonding and de facto pair bonding. That's quite innovative.

> "I have initiated a back-up plan for my two main locations (Dubai and Paraguay) where I have one back-up woman per location, but that's only for backup purposes in case the first woman doesn't work out; it's not because I want to date two women per location. I just want one."

With all this sexperience, obviously, he's a top 1 percenter with a LOT of options — women, money, cross-cultural skills and probably multiple language abilities too (I'm assuming). So this lifestyle eliminates 99% of men (or more). Hope his readers realize this.

Summary

Long story short, this guy has 3 common-law wives and 2 concubines (viz. 'back-ups') living in 3 different countries that he travels to every year. The fact that they all live in different countries creates a very effective time-space boundary between each of these relationships, thereby averting the typical domestic drama associated with polygyny.

I'm not sure what to call this arrangement. This is like serial monogamy, but one that repeats in a cycle every year. Maybe 'cyclical' or 'seasonal' or 'triannual' monogamy would be a fitting descriptor. Although that is hardly monogamy.

And he calls this 'pair bonding'. Heh. It's more like a migrational breeding pattern.

Parting Shots

According to the Bible (Deuteronomy 24:1-4; Jeremiah 3:1; Luke 16:18), a man returning to a 'wife' after she has 'married' another man is debased. I take that to mean that any pair bonding they might have shared is lost or ruined. So, I guess his situation all depends on whether his 'wives' can remain chaste while he's making his rounds in 2 other countries banging 2 other women for the rest of the year (1 Corinthians 7:5). Because of the Nature of Women, I doubt that would last for very long. I guess that's why he has to keep 'back-ups' in waiting.

Also, there's no mention of any children involved. That's another complex issue that he's avoiding.

All this sounds only slightly less tiring than serial monogamy, a lot more expensive, and not so good for the women and children involved, but I guess it works for him.

 MLTR = Monogamous Long Term Relationship*
 OLTR = Open Long Term Relationship*

Related

- Big Think: The Economics of Monogamy and Polygyny (2010/9/22)
- Biblical Gender Roles: The biological case for Polygyny and marriage of young women — Part 1 (2014/8/21)
- Biblical Gender Roles: The biological case for Polygyny and marriage of young women — Part 2 (2014/8/23)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Advent of Polysexuality (2021/7/30)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): What constitutes Adultery? (2022/1/14)
- Σ Frame: Artisanal Toad on Women's Agency (2022/11/14)
- Σ Frame: Concubinage (2023/5/19)
- Σ Frame: Eschatological Polygyny (2023/5/20)
- Σ Frame: Expectations, Laws, and Policies regarding Marriage (2023/6/22)

Taming the Savage Termagant

Jack · 21 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

How civilization was spread throughout the Roman Empire.

Readership: All
Theme: Whorable Wonders; Validation
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

In the days of the Roman Empire, the world was still vast, unexplored, and largely uncivilized. Nothing so obviously indicated a barbarian culture than its women — combative, defiant, domineering, loud, mouthy, and proud. Whenever an opportunity presented itself, Roman soldiers went to considerable lengths to break and subdue the savage females in the new territories and train them to be submissive if at all possible.

Of course, none of these activities were recorded in the logs or the history books. But it occurred nevertheless.

Here is the story of one.

In 168 A.D., a Roman legion was passing through Pannonia on their way to an engagement in Dacia. They kept to the plains mostly, as that would allow easy visibility of any approaching barbarian forces. But they had to file through a small village situated at the mouth of a pass in the Carpathian foothills.

The local residents were unfriendly to the passing troops. Mostly farmers unable to muster any considerable force, they stood at a safe distance, shouted disparaging names, and threw mudballs, stones, and garbage at the soldiers. To further shame the soldiers, some lifted their tunics to expose their buttocks and genitals.

One large woman approached the centurion, shouting shameful slurs in an unknown tongue, and with one sharp snap of her hand delivered an over ripened tomato to the leader's cheek.

His personal guard immediately forced her back and trammeled her. However, this so incensed the Roman that he halted the procession. After he had wiped the juice and seeds from his face and neck, he angrily called to his troops. "Do I have a volunteer who will stay behind and teach this vile woman the noble ways of our civilized Roman culture?"

One man stepped forward, a Briton who had been pressed into service two years earlier, and who was still somewhat of a barbarian himself. The centurion told the soldier to remain in the village and discipline the woman so that she would learn to be respectful of Roman law, male authority, and civil order. He was told he would rejoin the legion when they returned from the campaign in Dacia. He was given 80 denarii to support himself during this time, as well as a few other items he requested for the assignment, including a length of rope, some chains, and a set of shackles.

The Briton gathered his things and said farewell to his companions. As the troops marched on, he turned to face the remaining villagers with a drawn sword and a steely gaze. The townspeople observed his fierce muscular countenance, and unarmed and untrained in warfare, lost the will to harass him any longer. One by one, they spat on the ground and then slipped away to return to their daily tasks, silently hoping that he would not remember their faces if any future confrontation arose.

With no one left to challenge him, the Briton followed the woman to her domicile, a small rough-hewn stone cottage with a thatched roof nestled on a hillside just outside of town.

He caught up to her just outside the door of her house. After a round of fisticuffs, he subdued her and used the chain and shackles to confine her to a pillar in the cottage. As it was the first time she had ever been constrained in her entire life, she tugged and wrestled against her bonds, grunting and screaming for hours.

Leaving her to calm down, the Briton roamed the vicinity of the cottage to take inventory of whatever tools and supplies he could find.

After two days with no food or water, the savage lass had grown sullen and quiet. From then on, he provided her with a flask of water, some raw vegetables, and a piece of unleavened barley or rye once each day. On occasion, depending on her good behavior, a small cutlet of mutton or pork was added to her wooden platter. If she mouthed off, she was soundly slapped on the face until she was silent. If she did not defecate in the pot she was given, then she was forced to lie in her own excrement. If she did not wash, she was doused with a bucket of cold water from the animals' trough.

Things went on like this for a time, until the woman eventually learned that it is utterly futile to disobey or resist.

No one in the village challenged him or came to her rescue, as she was not very well liked by her countrymen, at least, not well enough to risk death by a Roman sword. In fact, many of them were quietly curious about his intentions and so bided their time and watched from afar. Some of the townsfolks exchanged crass banter about the situation, while others made wagers about whether she would end up either pregnant or dead and how long it would be for either event to transpire.

As the days turned into weeks, the woman's demeanor gradually changed, as did her appearance. Her meager rations diminished her rotund constitution. After four weeks of forced fasting, she had lost her double chin. After six weeks, her collarbones and hipbones began to show. After eight weeks, she regained the waistline she hadn't had since her youth. Meanwhile, her hair grew longer and her frame more feminine, and her countenance began to glow.

One day, the Briton saw that the woman had become rather meek and very beautiful. So he began to force himself into her whenever he felt the carnal urge well up within his loins. She resisted him at first, scratching and biting him all she could in her famished, feeble attempts to fight him off. But after several failed attempts to repel his advances, she resigned herself to his intemperances and submitted her body to his passions, if only to quickly pass the ordeal. But with time, she learned to silently enjoy it, although she tried not to smile with satisfaction whenever he had groaned his last. One day, after experiencing for herself the throbbing ecstasies of being ravished, she began to crave it. Thus, their intercourse shifted from that of a violent struggle to one of mutually enthusiastic affection. When she began responding to his touch with humble fervid yearning, he released her from the shackles, knowing that she would not stray nor do him serious harm.

After 4 months, the 80 denarii had been spent. So the Briton took up a trade, sharpening knives, swords, scythes, and sickles in order to support himself and his charge. He had picked up enough of the local language to be able to communicate about essential matters. After observing his character, confidence, and diligence over the months, many of the townspeople took a liking to him, especially after they saw how his discipline had transformed a dismaying woman into a kinder and more agreeable person. Although a few held grudges against him simply because they had misjudged him and had therefore lost their wagers.

In the days after the harvest season was concluded, it became apparent that the woman was with child. She gave birth the following summer, and again the following year.

Three years passed, but the legion never returned. A passing trader brought news that the legion was decimated in a battle and the few remaining soldiers had scattered. Regarding this news as a fulfillment of his obligations, and having no hope of ever finding his way back to his homeland, he decided to settle down with the woman as his common-law wife, raise his children, and integrate himself into the local culture.

His work of molding a once terrible woman into a beautiful, disciplined, and respectful wife inspired the other men of the town to do the same with their wives. One by one, they would come to his cottage asking for advice, and would leave with the shackles in hand. A couple months later they would return the shackles with a good report, and the shackles were then loaned out to the next harried husband who knocked at his door. After this happened a few times, this pattern was observed by the more astute women of the town and they willingly fell in line in order to avoid being shackled by their fathers and husbands.

Within just a few short years, the entire village became a joyful hermitage with an atmosphere of civility, domestic peace, and good will, and great prosperity ensued.

Image Credit: Some images adapted from the HBO series, Rome, starring Kevin McKidd as Lucius Vorenus, Ray Stevenson as Titus Pullo, and Chiara Mastalli as Eirene, Pullo's sl@ve and object of his affection.

Related

- Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority
- Σ Frame: Der Breedergroomer's Fahrvergnugen (2020/5/25)
- Σ Frame: The Greatest Archetype (2021/5/21)
- Σ Frame: Taking Headship by Force (2021/5/26)
- Σ Frame: Women Rely on a Man's Frame for Redemptive Introspection (2021/6/28)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): What can a husband do in response to a rebellious wife? (2022/1/31)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority and Sanctification (2022/8/8)
- Σ Frame: Headship Authority Takes Work (2022/8/12)
- Σ Frame: The Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife Analogy (2022/8/29)
- Σ Frame: Women submit to their Head (2022/10/17)
- Σ Frame: The Challenges of Moving Towards Headship (2023/4/5)
- Σ Frame: The Battle for Headship begins on the Home Turf (2023/4/7)

- Σ Frame: Women were Created to Conform (2023/5/8)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): 16 Bible Passages for Teaching Wives and Daughters about Male-Female Roles and Marriage (2023/5/15)
- Σ Frame: Revisiting Val Bure's Dominant Manhandling Incident (2023/9/19)
- Σ Frame: Being Dominant vs. Being Domineering (2024/11/25)

How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman

Jack · 23 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Induce heart trust by enticing her desire while reviling her will.

Readership: Men; Christian Men; Married Men;
Theme: Whorable Wonders
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Intro

Have you ever wondered why some women are sooo in love with abusive, controlling men, or why they are attracted to rogue criminals, or why they get turned on by the domination described in 50 Shades of Grey … or by werewolves, of all things? Or why (for some women) you have to manhandle them, spank their butts, and put them in a choke hold before they're able to reach orgasm, and why they're not able to come without it? And what is the madness that underlies bondage as a fetish?

Here's a clue.

The Nature of Domestication, Taming, and Training (using the example of Horses)

Horses need to be 'broken' (or trained*) to be domesticated.

Horses are prey animals, so their instinct is to flee from potential threats, including humans on their backs.

Their natural instincts as prey animals would not readily allow them to willingly submit to being mounted by a human.

Through training, horses learn to accept a rider, wear tack (e.g. saddle, bit, bridle, etc.), and respond to cues like leg and hand signals, making them suitable for riding or pulling a wagon.

Essentially, 'breaking' a horse is the process of socializing them and training them to perform specific actions under human direction. It involves teaching them to accept human control and respond to commands, allowing them to be ridden or harnessed for work.

Well, some women are just like horses in this respect. This is why we hear a lot of women saying, "Men are too nice." They're not talking about the Robert Glover kind of 'Nice'. No. They want a man who can subdue their feral nature (but men aren't about to take that risk in today's social climate).

* Note on Terminology: 'Breaking' a horse is now considered an archaic, misleading term, as it often implies forceful or abusive methods which are frowned upon by modern social ~~parasites~~ paracletes, while 'training' focuses on positive reinforcement and gentle handling. In order to avoid the squabble, many equestrian trainers instead prefer the phrase 'starting' a horse.*

Case Studies 1a,b — Inducing Humility via the Pleasurable Objectification of the Flesh and via Upsetting Mental Constructs

Red Pill Apostle and I have exchanged email correspondence since early 2021. We often discuss our marital difficulties, among other topics.

In one message, I wrote,

> "Forgive me for saying so, but your wife sounds like a proud@ss. My wife is too. Have you found any way to induce humility in her? For me, I've found my wife feels humbled when I place my arm or hand around her neck, or slap her butt, or tickle her nipples, or make casual comments about how her particular choice of clothing is unattractive. Early in our marriage, she would try to stop me from touching her in these ways, and she would get angry if I disapproved of her clothing. With careful observation, I learned that she objected to these things because the humility it induced undermined her pride. But over time, she's grown to love the first three, and she's more willing to accept my opinions about her clothing."

Red Pill Apostle responded,

> "I have, in fact, found a way to induce humility in Mrs. RPA, but it is a once and done tactic. She is emotionally tied up in the image of the perfect family within certain people groups. It brought her to tears that I had told my brother about her antics, and in what can only be described as the pinnacle of solipsism, she was mortified that she would have to face him and fess up to her behaviors. "What will he think of me?" Dead serious. Her behavior was absolutely abhorrent for 17 years, and she's worried what my brother might think of her now that he knows. She doesn't care that I email you, Thedeti, and Mike, because she'll never have to face y'all. But close friends and family, knowing who and what she is, have the chance of ruining the image she likes to portray, and that bothers her to the core. Leaving her would be another way to break the ideal image she has in her mind, but the collateral damage of that defeats the purpose of trying to humble her."

Case Study 2 — Red Pill ~~Cad~~ Dad

R. P. McMurphy wrote,

> "…this time I tied her up, spanked her using a paddle, put a butt plug in her, and when I put my cock in her… she saw God*. I don't know if I've ever made a woman scream that loud…"
>
> Red Pill Dad, FR: RPD is in love, bad at night game, and an idiot. (2021/10/30)

Note that he is putting her in a vulnerable and completely helpless position, and thereby forcing her to trust him in this situation.

Is this what it takes to induce enough humility (in the Biblical sense) in some women? …enough for them to have a "breaking" experience and "see God"?

* Note on Terminology: I perceive that McMurphy's phrase "she saw God" refers to her sudden discovery of the eternally beautiful humility of submission and the joy of trust (not to mention the sheer oxytocin laced pleasure of being impaled under duress) — the essence of what used to be referred to as "falling in love" in a more civilized age.

Case Study 3 — Domestic Gr@pe

Some time ago, a reader wrote in.

> "Once, my wife was in the semi-regular habit of denying me sex. She would never tell me "No" outright. Instead, she would just make up an excuse and 'postpone' having sex.
>
> But then one morning, I awoke with a raging hard on. I thought, "I'm married. My wife is right beside me. Why should I pass on the opportunity? I'm not going to let this one go to waste."
>
> She was sound asleep, so I laid on top of her and worked my way into her puss. She was bone dry, but the extra force of my body weight got me half-way in. Good enough. I pounded her until I shot my load … royally, even while she was still in a state of sleepy delirium.
>
> Afterwards, when she was a little more awake, she remarked, "You r@ped me!"
>
> I was amazed by this statement. "We have been married for 9 years, and you think I 'r@ped' you. Are you serious? You are my wife, and I will do whatsoever I please with your body … and you will be grateful!"
>
> Sure enough, later in the day, she was itching for me to 'r@pe' her again. Turned out she liked it after all, despite all her protestations. She wanted it that way. So I f_cked her again. She loved it like never before!
>
> From this experience, I learned that I have to push through all her resistance to get her DTF. She wants me to fight her and force her, and it is this contest of the will that turns her on most.
>
> From that day on, she didn't deny me sex anywhere near as often as she did before the day I 'r@ped' her."

Conclusions

The worldly concept of humility is built around shame. But the Biblical concept of humility is about being faced with your desires and limitations, and opening the heart to receive from others.

That said, there is something about the combination of intense pleasure, true helplessness (NOT false or feigned), and humility that makes the soul soar. Like breaking a horse, or domesticating a wild animal, or … using your rock hard c0ck to F_ck a woman unto ecstasy and mold her into one worth keeping. This is exactly why The Red Quest advises men to "Tell your girl to use a vibrator during sex" and other bedroom tips. (2019/3/13)

The kinds of men who are most successful in corralling wild foxes, often referred to as "Domineering Jerks" by the less well-laid, are often simply men who understand that women must be trained to trust and submit to their authority, to be 'tamed' so to speak, and that this often requires disciplinary measures that are considered 'abusive', 'controlling', rude, or unpleasant by polite social norms.

For a virgin, or a young and relatively inexperienced woman, sexual intercourse alone is presumably enough to do this. But for older, moar experienced women who have already gone there and done that (perhaps for years), they need something MOAR to get the bit in their mouths and to bridle the breeder.

For the most stubborn wildebeests, the binding of the body and the frustration of the will is necessary to overcome the innate fear of being subdued and to reach that P in V pinnacle of symbiosis.

The fact that most modern women have been tamed and trained by Ch@d-c0ck-a-doodle-do-me's and NOT their fathers, is exactly why nice candlelight pasta dinners are no longer sufficiently impressive to most women.

Related

- Σ Frame: How to get more frequent, enthusiastic sex from your wife: Overcoming Pride and Psychological Resistance (2018/12/23)
- The Red Quest: Just listen to the music: Bad Boys bring heaven to you (2019/10/18)
- Σ Frame: A Snapshot of the Destruction caused by Pride (2021/8/25)
- Wintery Knight: New Study: Virgins have happiest marriages; More sex partners means more unhappiness (2021/10/30)
- Σ Frame: Women have sex to influence men (2021/11/10)
- Σ Frame: It's all about her Ego (2021/11/12)
- Σ Frame: Taming the Savage Termagant (2025/4/21)

Waking Up to Reality, Post Wall Edition

Jack · 25 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The Lord's judgment on a life well wasted.

Readership: All
Theme: Whorable Wonders
Length: 750 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Reader jvangeld shared this article from Pocket: Testing My Fertility at the End of My World (2023/10/2), and commented,

> "This article is popping up in my feed. It's all about women convincing themselves that they are good with their current reality. That they don't regret the years they wasted on their careers."

If it's popping up in feeds, then it is obviously being promoted, either by an algorithm or by The Keepers of the Internet. IOW, it is part of the worldly narrative.

I noticed that jvangeld left this comment about 6 weeks after the article was published, which is about the time it takes for the MGM overseers to estimate how well an article has been received, and if it is not as popular as desired, then it gets placed into the auto-feed mill.

This particular story, authored by Rachel Hislop, is a catharsis aimed at post-carousel riders lost in confusion over where their best years went.

The tagline reads,

> "The pandemic robbed Millennial women of peak years of fertility. The least we deserve is a space to process the grief — and reimagine what can come next."

Translation: The pandemic robbed Millennial women of ~2 peak years of hook-ups and rutting.

Now doth she say "the pandemic" hath 'robbed' her of her fertility?

> "I thought I had time. Who doesn't? We always think we have more of this finite resource. But after being robbed of years by the pandemic, an all-consuming career, and dead-end relationships, time has become more of a novelty."

Notice how she blames "the pandemic" and her "career" as a convenient excuse for her own poor decisions, rather than herself for prioritizing career and kicking marriage and kids(?) down the road.

> "The realization struck me last May, on the Mother's Day just after my 34th birthday."

She's 34! That means she was past 30 when C0v!d hit. What fertility?!? The worst person you can lie to is yourself. She can't face what's ahead of her, and she knows it.

> "…the man I recently spent four years in a relationship with was expecting twins — my second ex to follow our relationship with not one but two babies."

There's a lot of background information that she is omitting here, hinted at with statements like, "four years in a relationship", and "second ex to follow our relationship with [having children]". How many other exes were there, and how long was she diddling around before she "married"?

> "I was spiraling about the concept of motherhood. How did this time come so fast? I wasn't ready to think about wanting kids. I thought more frequently about external factors: our warming earth, rising sea levels, simultaneous global pandemics, war, racial inequality, stripped reproductive rights, and the general feelings of unease about the state of the world. How could I be ready to commit another life to this?"

Her mind was totally preoccupied with the worldly issues and concerns promulgated by The Narrative™ — intentionally designed by lower powers to serve as a distraction from the most important issues of life. Yet, the primal call of procreation hangs heavy on her hips.

> "I laughed at the irony and then felt a sharp pang of sadness at the reality. Here I was, 34, counting eggs as the news tells of a warming globe, AI takeovers, an unstable economy. But my mind stayed trained on a single question. What about the life I once held so tightly in my fist? The one with babies and marriage and success I thought I would get?"

Buuut… she obviously didn't hold that dream as tightly in her fistula as she believes. Or maybe she held it too tightly, and filtered out all the good men who didn't stack up or step up to her gynormous dreams.

BERLIN, GERMANY — OCTOBER 13, 2023: Rachel Hislop attends the Mozilla RISE 25 Awards at Alte Muenze on October 13, 2023 in Berlin, Germany. (Photo by Tristar Media/Getty Images)
Note her statements in bold above. In short, she's saying, "How did this happen?" It is the reminiscent past tense of "It just happened!" — something women often say when confronted about their sexual liaisons, revealing an obvious lack of Agency, as well as the usual Autopilot and Solipsism.

Anyway, we're looking at a carousel rider. We already know how the story ends for them.

We'll see more and moar of this in the coming years as increasing numbers of women age out of the carousel and join the vast swelling ranks of childless Karens and Cat Ladies.

Notes

Author is Rachel Hislop.

Related

- Chateau Heartiste: The Wall (2010/2/1)

Better Bachelor: They MUST 'settle' for an equal man and it's driving them CRAZY (2023/12/1) Length: 29 minutes

Who writes The Narrative™?

Jack · 26 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Introducing The Narrative™ ~~Spinsters~~ Spinners.

Readership: All
Theme: Whorable Wonders
Length: 400 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

A Correction

In yesterdays post, Waking Up to Reality, Post Wall Edition, I identified the author of the covered article as Rachel (Stein) Hislop (IG / TwiX; Career Info; Married Jay Hislop on 2017/10/7, age 29).

However, Thedeti identified the author as a different Rachel Hislop, a black author and activist.

I poked around some more to verify Thedeti's claim and found he is correct (again).

> View this post on Instagram
> A post shared by Rachel Hislop (@amazingrach)

This changes my assessment somewhat. The reason why this Rachel Hislop is still single and childless is more obvious — black, careerist, Feminist, Liberal activist, overweight, W0ke… Of course, she would prioritize her career as a Narrative™ author over marriage and having any children.

Who else writes The Narrative™?

I also found some other items of interest.

Hislop's article at Pocket has a few links in the header. One of them goes to this page.

Distilled: Mozilla announces 25 honorees for the Rise25 Awards (2023/10/4)

This event happened just days after Hislop's article was published.

The Rise25 Award is for…

> "25 game changers — artists, activists, creators, builders and advocates — who are shaping the future of the internet to be more ethical, responsible and inclusive, ensuring a positive future for all."

IOW, these are the people behind the MGM machine, the creators of the same Feminist / W0ke Narratives™ that we often refer to around here.

Seeing how the Alt-Right and the Manosphere are largely responsible for supplying the opposing narratives to The Narrative™, this means these people are the arch-nemesis of Biblical Christianity and The Red Pill. This motivates me to crank out more analogies, metaphors, parables, and Red Pill tales.

There's a video of the event showing the nominees. At the 1:06:00 mark, the host introduces the Rachel Hislop who wrote the above article, and yes, she is the person Thedeti identified.

Just as we might expect, most all of the nominees are fragile, fringe, misfit, sad, weak, etc. individuals — the usual strain of liberals.

The most noteworthy person in the limelight, IMHO, is Nyamekye Wilson (from Ghana), the nominee after Hislop (starting at 1:08:20 in the above video). She's known for developing educational programs for Black women around the world with her nonprofit org, Black Sisters in STEM. She thanks Jesus Christ for her success! … but she's still touting Grrrl Power™ with the support of G00gle and the UN.

Anyway, it's nice to attach some faces to the buzz terms, MGM, The Narrative™, and TPTB.

Whorable Wonders

Jack · 30 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

An index of Posts for April 2025.

Posts this month are categorized by subject below.

The top 3 posts this month are indicated by a [number] after the date.

Commentary on Culture

The World continues to disintegrate into delusion, fantasy, and madness … as we Men sit poolside tending the grille.

- Disney's Snow White should have been named Champurrada (2025/4/2)
- (Red Pill Apostle): 4 minutes and 12 seconds of love every other Tuesday (2025/4/16)
- Waking Up to Reality, Post Wall Edition (2025/4/25)
- Who writes The Narrative™? (2025/4/26)

Female Needs

The usual Red Pill entertainment; gloating over women's need for Male strength (among other things), and the depths of their depravity without it.

- The Feminine Hierarchy of Needs (2025/4/4)
- Guilt is a Motivator for Women's Hypergamy and Desire for Status (2025/4/7) [#2]
- Twitter / X is now the Hindu H0e's Instagram (2025/4/11)
- How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23) [#1]

Red Pill Fiction

There's an increasing demand (and need) for Red Pill fiction. This month, I made a concerted effort to meet this need. There's more coming in the future.

- Working Girls at The Mega Corp™ (2025/4/9) [#3]
- Horny Housewives of the Future Patristic Age (2025/4/14)
- How to Juggle 3 Wives (2025/4/18)
- Taming the Savage Termagant (2025/4/21)

In next month's theme, we'll review the old Red Pill concept of Validation and get a fresh idea of what this means in reality.

Thanks for reading Σ Frame.

Expectation vs Experience

Jack · 2 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

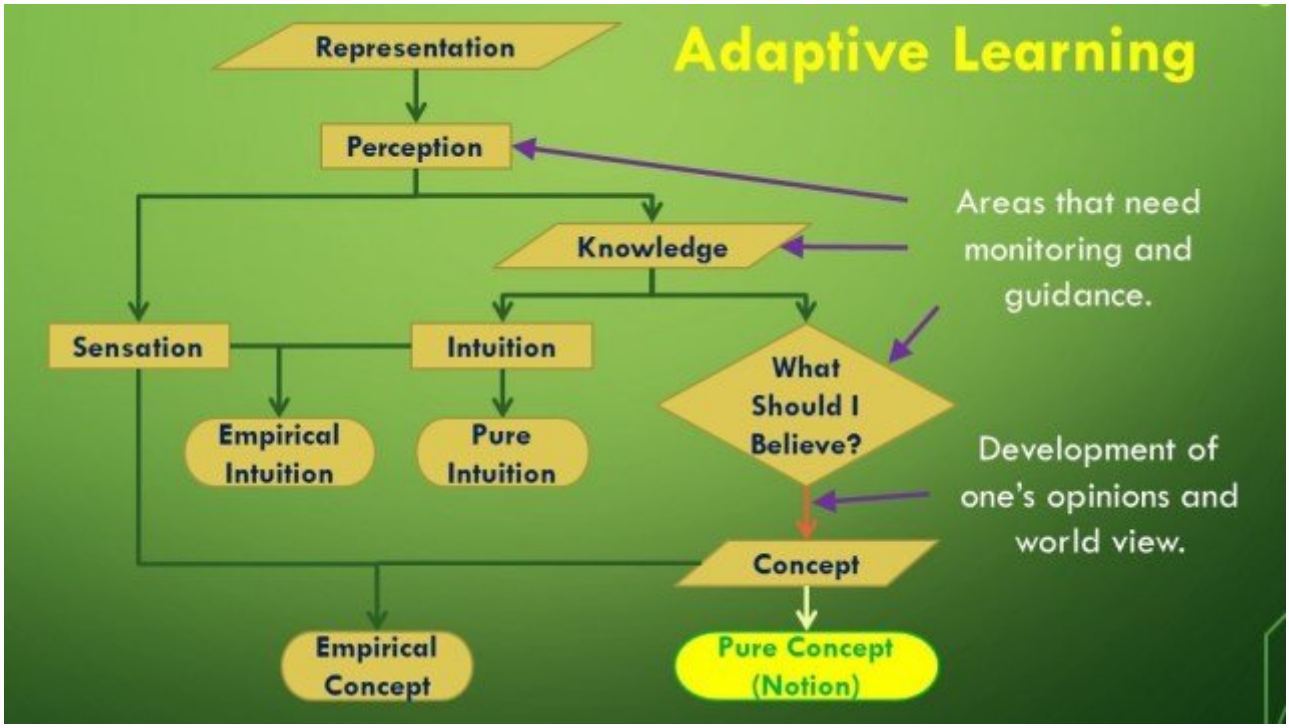
An Existential Conundrum.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders; Feminine Submission;
Author's Note: Some of the text has been lifted from previous comments. Links embedded in the initial words.
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

A Model of Learning

Our brains are constantly taking in information and trying to make sense of the world around us. As we gain more experience, we start to form mental models, attitudes, and expectations to simplify and streamline the process of decision making. After a while, we rely more upon this process, and any new information is examined and then used to fine-tune the process. After a long while, it is easy to get lazy and rely on the process alone without thinking too much, i.e. 'Auto-Pilot'. At the extreme, we operate solely on 'Auto-Pilot' and deny or ignore new information that is right in front of our noses. The result is that we perceive what we expect to see. We have become blind.

Moreover, our experiences shape our mental models, and our mental models help us form expectations. In turn, our expectations affect how we experience the world, and thereby shape our reality.



With that in mind…

Oscar and Thnking had a lightning volley under the previous post, How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23). I'll review their dust-up as follows.

Expectation Shapes Experience

Thnking is a younger man (I'm guessing) and his view is more introspective and orthodox (according to Red Pill lore). His viewpoint is that Proper Expectation Shapes Future Experience. That is, if you're dwelling on a bad mental model or ruminating on a fear of women, then you're more likely to live that out for the worse.

Thnking introduced the following insights throughout several comments.

- The basic Red Pill idea that women are attracted to 'Scary', and get turned on by domination. "Tingles are born in a defensive crouch."
- Ephesians 5:33 — "Wives, see that you phobeo your husbands." The majority of versions translate 'phobeo' to 'respect' in this familiar verse, but WYC hits the nail on the head with 'Dread'. Heh.
- Dalrock: Sarah was a doormat by Complementarian standards, as are her daughters. (2016/3/22)
- IMPORTANT: It is better to overshoot and get a woman who is 'too submissive' than to undershoot and get a contentious ball of contagious misery.

In summary, Thnking's point is that the female desire to be ruled over is good, God ordained, and necessary to create a male dominant hierarchy, and this cannot be negotiated. Her FEAR of him has to be baked into the wedding cake from the start, not added to the icing.

This is the premise behind the success of a Meet Cute.

This is why St. Paul advised women to phobeo their husbands.

This is also why women are attracted to strong Men, even rogue antagonist characters, and NOT Nice Bryce.

And AWALT.

Thnking's point entails that if a man intentionally chooses a woman who has qualms and fears about being dominated by a man (which is most women, especially Feminists), because he thinks a woman's innate desire to be ruled over is synonymous with any of the worst-case scenarios of dysfunctional abuse (as Feminists like to obsess over), rather than with the better-case scenario of genuine Christian Headship, then he is excluding himself from finding a good relationship having a God Ordained structure of authority.

Expectation Shapes Experience.

Experience Shapes Expectation

Oscar is speaking as an experienced older man, and his view is more practical and tempered. His viewpoint is that Past Experience Shapes Proper Expectation. That is, if a woman has a bad track record, then she's very likely to bring all her rubbish into every subsequent relationship, and is therefore NOT to be chosen as a wife.

Oscar made the point that women who are on the upper end of the spectrum of being susceptible to fantasies and FEARS are emotionally and spiritually unstable, and are NOT to be chosen as wives. He cited the following passages.

1. It's wise to marry a virtuous woman (Proverbs 31)
2. It's wise to avoid contentious women (Proverbs 21:9,19; 25:24; 27:15)
3. It's wise to avoid immoral women (Proverbs 2, 5, 7)
4. A wise woman builds up her house, but a foolish one tears it down (Proverbs 14:1)
5. An excellent wife is a crown to her husband, but one who brings shame is rottenness to his bones (Proverbs 12:4)
6. A beautiful woman who lacks discretion is like a gold ring in a pig's snout (Proverbs 11:22)
7. "Never stick your dick in crazy!"

And don't forget what the Sirach has to say about women.

Furthermore, women who are already crazy about The Lusty Fantasy have probably already had that kind of experience and are thus spoiled for wifery by another man.

Many readers agreed with the general wisdom of Oscar's point.

Experience Shapes Expectation.

Conclusions

Both men have valid viewpoints, but come from very different perspectives.

Oscar feels compelled to warn younger men about the pitfalls associated with evil women and therefore won't tolerate any compromise. But actually, younger generations are MUCH more aware of Women's carnal nature than Xers or Millennials ever were (until recently), thanks to them growing up with the Manosphere, The Red Pill, and TikT0k, etc. They don't need to be told to be aware of women's sinful nature. They already know all about it. Instead, they're wanting encouragement, male fellowship, and tips on building a solid Frame, as S. D. James wrote in Why Christian Men Need Friendship, Not Just "Accountability" (2025/3/24).*

Concerning their argument, from what I can tell, the main issue of contention is whether the meaning of phobeo in

Ephesians 5:33 refers to and/or includes women's innate attraction to aggressive men who may also be abusive and controlling, and whether AWALT. (If any readers see their issue of contention as being something else, please explain in the combox below.)

It is difficult to address this issue because this is yet another conundrum. That is, choosing a woman who truly FEARS you in order to form an authentic Headship relationship is the same thing as joining yourself to a raving psychopath.

AWALT strikes again!

J/K (but not really).

Oscar and Thnking never reached a consensus, and as of now, I believe it is because they have NOT fully understood the other's viewpoint.

- Oscar thinks Thnking is (1) mischaracterizing his own viewpoint and (2) insisting that men should seek out women who want to be forcibly dominated. (But this was not Thnking's point.)
- Thnking said Oscar has flown off on a tangent and has made a strawman out of his argument.

I hope that my above analysis can reset this discussion on a more fruitful track.

I will continue to go over this complex topic in future posts this month.

* H/T: jvangeld

Related

- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority (2020/9/30)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: P_ssy makes men stupid. (2024/10/7)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)
- Σ Frame: Taming the Savage Termagant (2025/4/21)
- Σ Frame: How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23)

Attraction vs. Promiscuity

Jack · 4 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Can one exist without the other?

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Feminine Submission;
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

My post, Expectation vs Experience (2025/5/2) offered an analysis of a debate that began under How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23). The discussion was about whether women who are attracted to dominant or rogue men are either wives or wh0res, respectively.

Pixelazer reduced the debate to two bullet points.

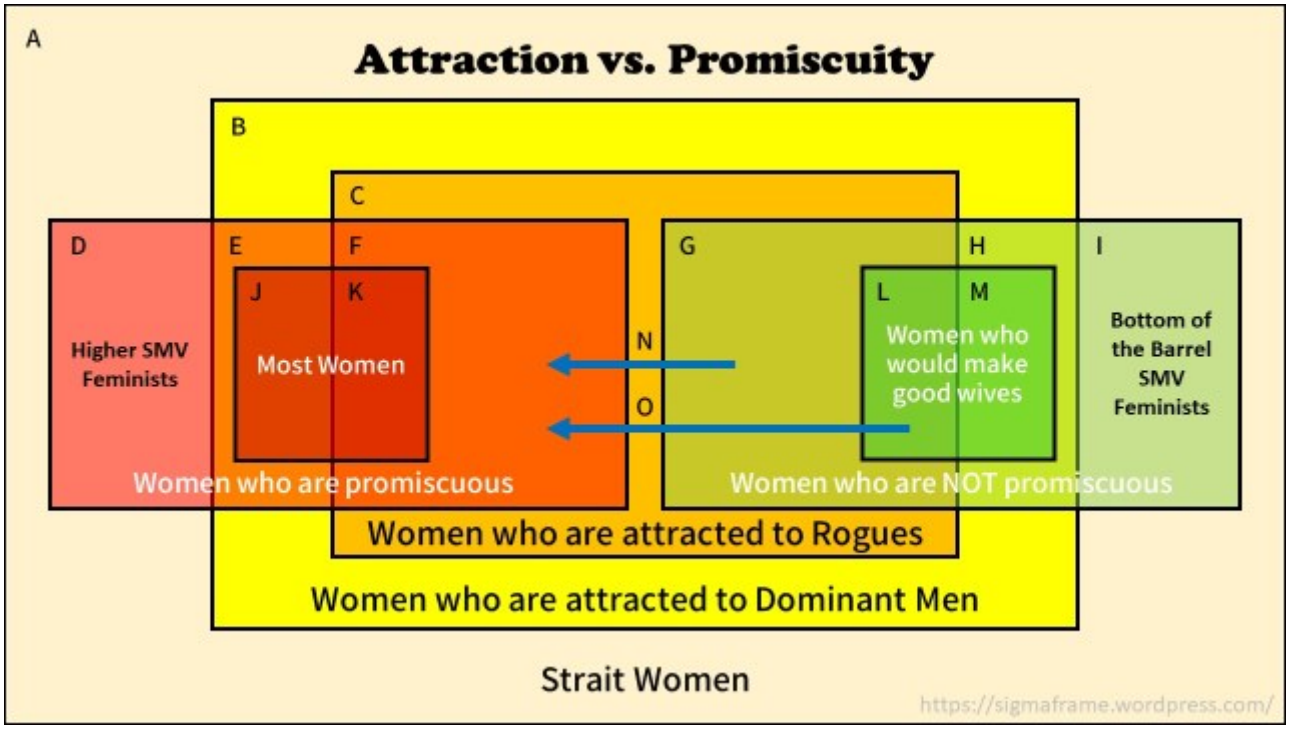
- Oscar: Don't marry a girl who's into abusers, criminals, and thugs.
- Thnking: All girls are into abusers, criminals, and thugs, so your point is meaningless.

The main purpose of this blog is to provide a forum for Christian Red Pill discussion that might educate and minister to men, especially younger men like Thnking. So I'll write one more post on this debate because I believe Thnking's curiosity (and probably also many other readers' too) has not yet been satisfied.

I was intrigued by Thnking's geometric analogy of rectangles and squares, paraphrased as…

All squares (promiscuous women) are rectangles (attracted to scary). But not all rectangles are squares.

This got me thinking in terms of superposition, and I put together a more complex Venn diagram of Women's Attraction vs. Promiscuity.



Let's carefully consider this diagram and see if we can come up with some more insights.

Here, the qualities of a 'good wife' encompass many things, but the key traits are being chaste, respectful, and submissive.

1. Regarding Genesis 3:16 and Ephesians 5:33, box A and B may be the same box (Red Pill 101).

2. Women are typically unable to make a distinction between dominant men and rogue men, so B and C may be the same box (Jack's point).
3. Combining 1 and 2, and because AWALT, boxes A, B, and C may be the same box (Thnking's argument).
4. If 1 is true, then there is no distinction between D and E (i.e. straight women are attracted to dominant men and are promiscuous), and H and I (i.e. straight women are attracted to dominant men and are NOT promiscuous (corollary to Thnking's argument).
5. If 2 is true, then there is no distinction between E and F, G and H, J and K, and L and M (corollary to Jack's point).
6. If 5 is true (i.e. L = M), then women who are attracted to dominance (rogue or not) and are NOT promiscuous (box L) may very well prove to be a good wife (corollary to Thnking's argument).
7. As indicated by vector N, women who are attracted to dominant rogue men and are NOT promiscuous may be highly susceptible to becoming promiscuous. (Not sure if this has been explicitly stated yet, but it's very important to the argument.)
8. Similar to 7 and indicated by vector O, women who are NOT promiscuous and are wife material, but who are attracted to dominant rogue men, may also be susceptible to becoming promiscuous.
9. Because of 2 and 8, women in box L are more risky than women in box M (coincides with Oscar's main point).
10. Because of 9 and because of the current state of the SMP/MMP, perhaps box L doesn't exist in certain paradigms of reality?

In summary, Oscar and Thnking agree that the red boxes (promiscuous women) are a bad bet for marriage. However, the contention is over the green boxes, namely…

1. If 2 is true, combined with uncertainty surrounding 8, i.e. whether a woman being attracted to dominant men but cannot discern the difference between good men and F_ckboys should be a deal breaker.
2. If box L exists, i.e. women who are attracted to dominant rogue men and would be submissive wives (necessary for Headship), and who can also resist sexual sin.

Concerning 1, in general, this is a question of whether she has sufficient agency and maturity to enter into marriage. The answer all depends on the character of the woman in question and her track record (Oscar's main point).

Concerning 2, The likelihood of 8-10 in the previous list being true depends on a combination of the following conditions.

1. Homeschooling.
2. How close she is to her father, i.e. whether she feels loved enough to appreciate male dominance and resist rogue attention.
3. Whether the woman is able to discern the difference between dominant men and rogues (i.e. 2 is true). If not, then fathers and brothers are needed here.
4. How much she is involved in a Christian community, i.e. her peer group / herd influence.
5. Whether the woman is indeed attracted to dominant men, but NOT rogues (???).
6. How much agency and self-control the woman possesses (individual factors).

All of these are known to decrease the probability of a woman becoming promiscuous (vectors N and O).

I also want to point out that point 10 in the first list disagrees with the stance that Oscar has taken in the past, in which he has suggested that women worthy of wifing up do exist in certain communities, but that it is very important for the family and community to be involved in the process to ensure things turn out well.

Oscar could quickly clear up the confusion if he could tell us whether he thinks box L exists, and why or why not.

If it does exist, then it's fair to say that all women are attracted to 'ScArY' (as per Thnking's argument that AWALT).

If not, then I believe it is because there is a very high probability that women who are attracted to rogues will invariably act on that attraction. Perhaps the reason is because women who are strongly attracted to dominant rogue men cannot enforce boundaries or don't know when to escape temptation (i.e. vector O always happens).

I know this analysis is probably more syntactic than what most readers would care for, but it is offered in the hope that it might help readers understand the issue of contention and reach some conclusions. It's also a good exercise in logic — and one that illustrates the limitations of logic.

Related

- Donal Graeme: Moral Agency in Women Revisited (2013/3/11)
- Donal Graeme: Knowing When to Escape (2013/12/15)
- Σ Frame: The Virtue of Self-Control (2024/12/16)
- Σ Frame: The Virtue of Chastity : Boundaries vs Self-Control (2024/12/18)
- Σ Frame: Why Good Women Reject Good Men (2024/12/20)

Remembering Kevin Samuels' Death and Legacy

Jack · 5 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The hand of God moves over a lost generation.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 2,700 words
Reading Time: 14 minutes

Historical Context

I foretold the era of transactional relationships in The Future of Intersexual Relationships is Transactional (2021/3/12). This global mating phenomenon (lasting roughly from 2022 to 2024) was documented in several posts, including…

- Σ Frame: The Black Pill is the Natural Outcome of the Secular Mating Paradigm (2022/9/14)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Why expectations of men and women are out of control (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: Laying out Expectations (2022/10/20)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Expectations and boundaries (2022/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Expectations (for LTRs) (2023/1/20)
- Σ Frame: SMP Paradigms Compared (2023/1/23)
- Σ Frame: The Disappointments of Transactional Relationships (2023/2/14)
- Σ Frame: Natural Selection Dynamics leading to the LTR / MMP Breakdown (2023/9/6)
- Σ Frame: Jack's Thoughts on Passporting (2024/2/5)
- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Drizzle Drizzle (2024/4/24)
- Σ Frame: Studless in Seattle : Competition in a Corrupted Shrinking Market (2024/9/5)

The era of transactional relationships is now trickling to a limp end. Of course, there will always be transactional pseudo-relationships; pr0st!tut!0n, OASIS, etc. will continue on just as before, but transactional relationships as a characteristic norm of the SMP is over.

Intro

Compared to the SMP between 2020 and 2022, which was characterized by cohabitation, hookup culture, and secretive liaisons, the era of transactional relationships (ca. 2022-2024) has brought a sea change in the way men and women regard each other. (Though not for the better — not yet.)

Kevin Roshon Samuels (March 13, 1969 – May 5, 2022) was an American internet phenomenon and image consultant who spearheaded these changes in the mainstream SMP. In the following essay, readers will see that his work effectively accelerated and shortened the era of transactional relationships. Indeed, this was the grace of God shed on our paganized secular society.

It has been exactly 3 years since Samuels' passing. This post will summarize the character he portrayed to the Manosphere and review his impact and his legacy.

Highlights

As I stated in The Strengths and Weaknesses of Virtue (2024/11/1), the substance of a man's Virtue is also that of his Vice. There is no better example of this phenomenon than the life and death of Kevin Samuels.

Kevin Samuels was born in Oklahoma City. He attended Millwood High School and studied chemical engineering at the University of Oklahoma, but was not able to graduate due to being diagnosed with Hodgkin lymphoma at age 21. He once said this was a point in his life when he "recognized [his] own mortality".

Samuels worked in the marketing industry before starting his own image-consulting firm in 2013. On May 15, 2015, he opened a YouTube account to further his influence as an image-consultant.

Sometime in 2020 during the p@ndemic l0ckd0wns, he pivoted away from fashion and started discussing SMP dynamics. His popularity really kicked off when he began doing livestream counseling / therapy with females seeking advice about intersexual dynamics, and interviews with female celebrities such as Nicki Minaj and Tamar Braxton. Samuels broke all barriers of sensationalism by calmly explaining in dispassionate philosophical language to his female callers how they were "leftovers", "low quality", "low value", etc. By early 2022, Samuels was the hottest YouTuber in the Black Manosphere, and he attracted a very large audience of Wh!tes as well, both male and female, thereby breaking into mainstream cultural discussions.

In early February 2022, KS teamed up with American Rap Star, Future, for a feature music video production.

> "Future admitted he has a bad habit of splurging on beautiful women during a link-up with self-dubbed relationship guru Kevin Samuels in a fake therapy session for his upcoming "Worst Day" music video. A clip of the venting session made its rounds on social media, and fans were quick to sound off with their thoughts on the alleged "Alpha Male" mentality and toxic relationships."
>
> ~ A Tweet from 1DJFirstClass

> "Twitter joked that the collaboration was the "high-value male" podcaster's dream but a Black woman's nightmare due to Samuels' history."

> Blavity: Future And Kevin Samuels Team Up For A 'High-Value' Mock Therapy Session And It's As Toxic As You'd Expect (2022/2/10)

In late April 2022, KS was ramping up the rhetoric on single women over 35 being "leftovers", which some believe provoked TPTB enough to decree his demise.

> "Just recently, he invited controversy by stating that unmarried women over 35 years were "leftover," adding that "men know that there is something likely wrong with you." The comment led to people calling him a misogynist."
>
> *NPR: YouTuber and self-appointed relationship guru Kevin Samuels, dead at 53 (2022/5/6)

When Samuels died suddenly at the peak of his fame, he had accumulated 1.4 million subscribers on YouTube, 1.2 million followers on Instagram, and thousands on several other online platforms like TikTok and Twitter (now X).

Samuels' YouTube account continues to be operated by a ghost host.

Event of Death

Kevin Samuels was a shooting star in the Black Men's Sphere, a beacon of hard truths standing leagues above all other voices in the Black community in terms of influence and impact. And just like all shooting stars, his light shone brilliantly for a short time before suddenly fading away.

Kevin Samuels died on a secular day of celebration, Cinco de Mayo — May 5, 2022. He was 53 — the same number featured on The Love Bug – a popular movie produced by Disney that was released on the same day Samuels was born (March 13, 1969). Coincidentally, the author (Jack) is 53 years old at the time of writing this eulogy.

That's incredible!

His death was shrouded by mysterious circumstances which continue to be the subject of speculation and conspiracy theories.

> "Police said that a woman who was with Samuels said she came to his apartment and spent the night. In the morning, he complained of chest pain. The woman told police that as she tried to help him, he fell on top of her. She called 911 and also asked the front desk for a defibrillator because she is a nurse."
>
> Yahoo News: Controversial YouTube personality Kevin Samuels dies at 53 in Atlanta (2022/5/7)

Samuels' mother, Beverly Samuels-Burch, wasn't properly informed of her son's death. She first found out about it through social media, leading her to doubt it as a rumor.

> "According to the police report, officers responded to a 911 call placed by a woman who was with Samuels at his apartment in Atlanta. The woman, identified in the police report as "Ms. Ortencia Alcantara," told officers that the person in distress was "Mr. Kelvin Samuels," apparently misspelling his first name. After the two spent the night together, Alcantara said Samuels complained of chest pain before "he fell on top of her."
>
> News One: Kevin Samuels, Controversial YouTuber And Self-Proclaimed Relationship Guru, Dies (2022/5/6)

"He fell on top of her" may very well be a polite way of saying that his heart sneezed its last while he was poking his willy-nilly into Ms. Alcantara. What a way to go out!

BTW, the name Ortencia Alcantara means “singing hydrangea” in Spanish. Hydrangeas symbolize, among many things, apology, arrogance, heartfelt emotion, vanity … and singleness — all signifying the burgeoning transactional SMP which Samuels synergized.

Blue Altona Hydrangeas

The Fulton County (GA) Medical Examiner performed an autopsy on Samuels on Friday, May 6, 2022. But it wasn’t until mid-July when the news reported that he died from hypertension. These news reports contained advertisements for Disney, which carried a sardonic symbolic meaning.

On May 5, 2022, I Ofc. J. Figuereo, unit # (2205), responded to a call at 297 E. Paces Ferry Ne. Apartment # 1605, regarding a person injured. Upon arrival, I Ofc.J.Figuereo observed the fire department engine # 21 performing C.P.R to a black male, unresponsive on the floor of his apartment. I then met Ms. Ortencia Alcantara, who identified the male as Mr. Kelvin Samuels.

Ms. Alcantara stated that she met Mr. Samuels last night, came to his apartment, and spent the night with him. Ms. Alcantara also said that early morning, Mr. Samuels complained of chest pain, and she attempted to help him, but he fell on top of her and proceeded to notify 911.

Ms. Alcantara also said she requested the 911 operator to contact the front desk for a defibrillator to keep Mr. Samuels responsive until Grady arrived because she is a nurse. Grady bus #741 Mr. Samuels was later transported to Piedmont Hospital by Grady bus #741.

Image from @Phil_Lewis_ Tweet

Kevin Samuels' Impact

"What Do Men Want?"

Kevin Samuels was famous for asking women this question. And it was piercingly poignant simply because he was asking WOMEN these questions.

"What do the men you want, want in a woman?"

"Where are the men you want?"

"What do the men you want do? What do they like doing?"

"How do the men you want live their lives?"

"Think about the men you claim to want: what are their lives like?"

"What do you have that the men you want, want?"

"Why would the men you want, want you?"

Before Kevin Samuels started flipping the tables by posing these questions, it simply never occurred to women even to think about these things. It never occurred to women to think about what men want; and then whether they could actually give a man what he wants, and whether they actually had something that the men they wanted, want.

Before Kevin Samuels put his figurative foot down on flighty female fantasies, all women thought about was what they wanted. All they thought about was what a man could do for them. It never occurred to women to consider:

"This man, who you want commitment from, who is fully half of whatever relationship you (want to) have with him, who you (will) lay with: What does HE want?"

Or as Kevin Samuels often asked women,

"What are YOU bringing to the table?"

Women were so flabbergasted by this question, that they spat fire and spluttered for lack of words. The most common brain-dead response was, "I AM the table!"

Apparently, the vast majority of women were under the delusion that just because they were "WOMEN" and were the (totally irresponsible) gatekeepers of the highly valued commodity of sex, then sex and/or their sex appeal was all they needed to offer in a transaction — and that they shouldn't have to offer anything else.

But Kevin Samuels made it crystal clear to these women that thinking this way reduces them to "low quality" / "low value" hoes. If the only thing women have to offer men is sex, then men will respond by becoming F__kboys and thirsty simps. Men will give women attention and pursue them; they'll hang out with them; they'll blow their backs out every chance they're given; and if they kind of like a chick they might — MIGHT — take her out for a drink or three and a few laughs. But that's about it. This is precisely why men fail to meet any of these women's extravagant expectations, and why they're not even motivated to try.

Then when Samuels got these women thinking about what "high value men" want, they started getting all traditional: "I can cook, I can clean, I can take care of a house…."

Then Samuels would blast them with…

"Have you ever actually done any of those things?"

"Do you actually know how to do any of those things?"

"Have you been taught and trained and brought up to be a wife?"

"Dress size? Weight? What did you weigh the last time you weighed yourself?"

And then it became shamefully clear that women could not match men's (quite reasonable) expectations either. Men want women who are fit, feminine, friendly, agreeable, cooperative, and submissive. Most women are none of these things — and they became hissy fit hysterical when Samuels pointed this out to them.

It took a looong time for women as a sex to wrap their heads around the fact that they are the bitter dragging high-maintenance half of a relationship. Women as a whole didn't come to accept the fact that the world does NOT revolve around Vaginas until late 2024. Many women still refuse to face this reality, but now there are sufficiently few women who think this way such that they're rightly regarded as deluded, immature, or selfish.

Since then, many women have seen the light, realizing that if they want high-quality, high-value men, then they will have to be high-quality, high-value women themselves, AND be willing to be held accountable and responsible by said men. This realization among women, once fully comprehended, shifted the SMP into the stalemate that we see today.

Kevin Samuels' Legacy

Kevin Samuels' influence did not only affect how Women perceive themselves, he has also effected a change in how Men view themselves. Samuels' influence as a male fashionista has inspired Black men to act and dress with class and distinction. Over the past few years, Black men have abandoned their baggy plaid boxers and once again started dressing in total splendor. Samuels played a significant part of this resurgence of dignity within the Black community.

Take a look at these men. Swag city!

> Fuck boy Twitter on their way to Kevin Samuels' funeral. pic.twitter.com/mKLBrG9j3M
>
> — journalist jawn (@dirtywhiteups) May 5, 2022

Twitter video from Twitter@BlackMenswear.
Samuels was also a firebrand who inaugurated landmark changes in how Men viewed and interacted with Women.

Before Kevin Samuels came along, most men, especially AFCs* and Blue Pillers, were obsessed with pedestalizing and pleasing women, thinking it was their 'duty' as 'Good Men' (a misnomer), or that it might even leverage them some P00n. (The fact that the Manosphere had already revealed that this doesn't 'work' wasn't a sufficient motivation for most mainstreamers to wake up from this idolatrous worship of women.) The default male mentality was to say and think, "I'll do whatever the Human-P_ssy-Bearers want. Please just have sex with me and don't take the P_ssy away. Please just give me a few table scraps of affection and appreciation and I'll be OK."

Before Kevin Samuels started prodding men to initiate intersexual negotiations, it never occurred to them that they could speak up and say to women, "Look, here's what I want…" … including P_ssy.

Granted, voices in the Manosphere had been saying this for more than 4 years by that time, but Kevin Samuels gave meaningful language to the previously esoteric intersexual negotiations, and took it mainstream by teaching men to say to women,

"If you are going to be my girl, then this is what I want / expect from you."

This monumental shift in consciousness (men placing expectations on women instead of vice versa) gave men the power they needed to flip the script. Ever since Kevin Samuels started demonstrating how men can Push the Line, Men for the most part have stopped begging women for lame leftover love.

 Average Frustrated Chumps*

Epilogue

Since Kevin Samuels laid it all on the table, women have had to step down from their porcelain thrones and men have had to step up their Game. Both men and women have had to face the truth about what each sex requires from the other for a relationship to commence.

Now, it is widely accepted that…

1. Women's expectations of men are too astronomical, and they think it's a 'sin' to 'settle'.
2. Men should have higher expectations of women, even if/though most women will not respond.
3. Most men just aren't attractive enough to stimulate a woman's sexual interest.
4. Most women just aren't feminine and/or agreeable enough to get a man interested in a committed LTR.
5. Most men and women aren't willing to do the work necessary to make themselves (more) attractive to the opposite sex.
6. Intersexual negotiations have finally reached a stalemate (after ~4 years).

Although all these changes are a good move in the right direction, there's still no upside to this for most men. Even if they tell women, "I want X", most women will tell men to F__k off anyway, saying, "I will not give you X."

As a result, MGTOW has become the norm for young men. Increasing numbers of men are simply walking away from the SMP because they don't have "IT", there's no 'In', and there's no 'angle' by which they can work their way in. Men very quickly learn that if there's no upside to something, they need to cut their losses and walk away, and do it very quickly so as to stop hemorrhaging energy, time, and resources.

Women have responded in many ways (e.g. 4B, WGTOW, withholding sex, various resolutions, etc.), but these have all been dismal failures to incite real change or improvement, simply because it's still NOT what Men WANT.

H/T: Comments from Thedeti.

Related

- Σ Frame: How To Get A Better Response From Your Girl (2018/2/27)
- Σ Frame: The Future of Intersexual Relationships is Transactional (2021/3/12)
- News One: Stop The Cap! We All Know Why Kevin Samuels' Death Is Making Black Women Feel A Way (2022/5/6)
- Stage in the Sky: The Impact of Kevin Samuels – A Brief Tribute (2022/5/6)
- Truth and Tolerance: Men and Women Really Should Try and Get Along (2022/5/7)
- Σ Frame: Imposing Masculine Presence (2022/6/10)
- Black Sports Online: Kevin Samuels' Cause of Death Revealed and If Ortencia Alcantara Had Anything to Do With It (2022/7/18)
- Σ Frame: The Disappointments of Transactional Relationships (2023/2/14)
- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)

Apex SMV = Prime Fecundity

Jack · 7 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Exposing the Lies about Women's Fertility Window.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Note: This post expands a previous comment with some updated information.
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Intro

There is a widespread but FALSE belief that women can get pregnant up until around age 40, with 35 being seen as the "fertility cliff". So, a lot of women get the erroneous notion that the "right time" to have children is between 27 and 35.

Everything you'll find on the internet supports this belief. Even the U.S. National Institute of Health will tell you…

> "When a woman is younger than 30, she has an 85% chance to conceive within 1 year. At the age of 30, there is a 75% chance to conceive in the first 12 months. This chance declines to 66% at the age of 35 and 44% at the age of 40." [1]

To put this into perspective, if you had cancer and the doctor gave you a 66% chance of recovery, you'd be putting your will in order. But women feel no compunction about giving their child a 66% chance to live by waiting until their mid 30s.

So instead, everyone is doing mental gymnastics to deny the fact that the prime fertility window is much earlier, between ~14 to 26 years of age.

Another peripheral deception of this LIE is that most people believe that menopause, usually regarded as the cessation of menstruation, is a good indicator of when a woman's fertility window has closed. But this is a FALSE indicator. Menopause and amenorrhea can occur looong after a woman's robust reproductive functionality has ceased (up to ~10 years).

Don't believe me?

What is the Truth?

We get a more accurate concept of real fertility when we look at the age specific fertility rates over time…

In the U.S.:

Figure 1: Changes in Birth Rates by Age over Time

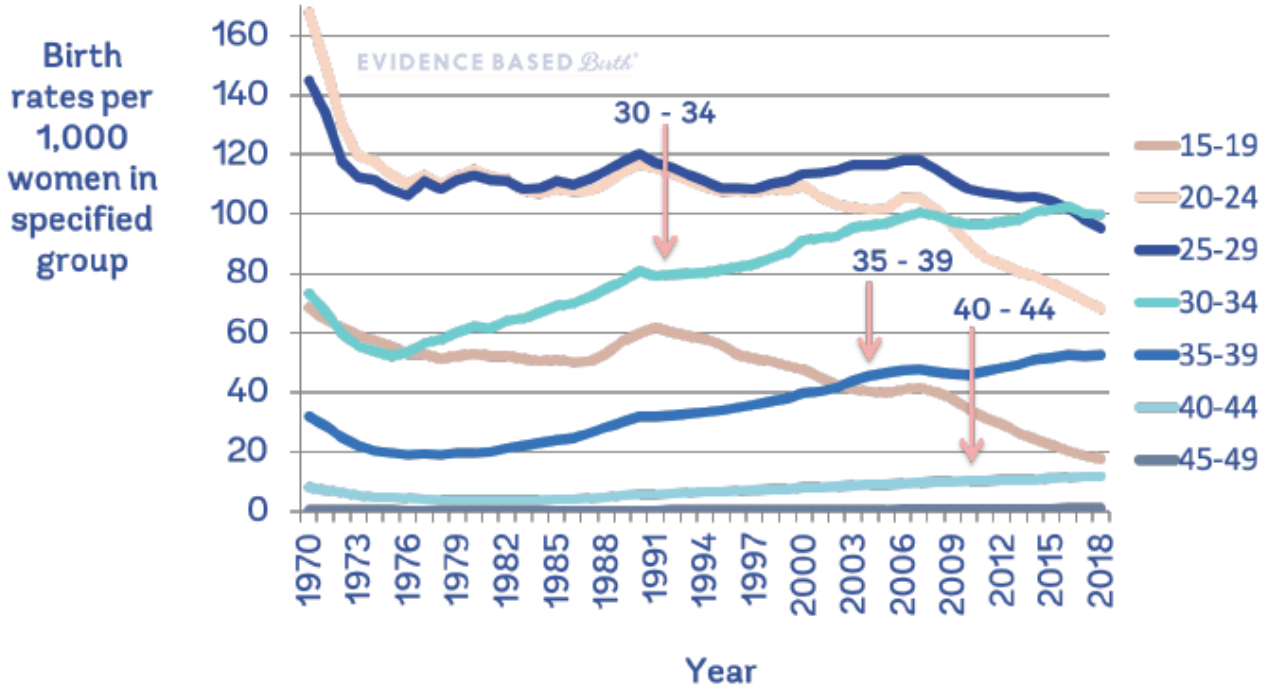

Image Source.
In England and Wales:

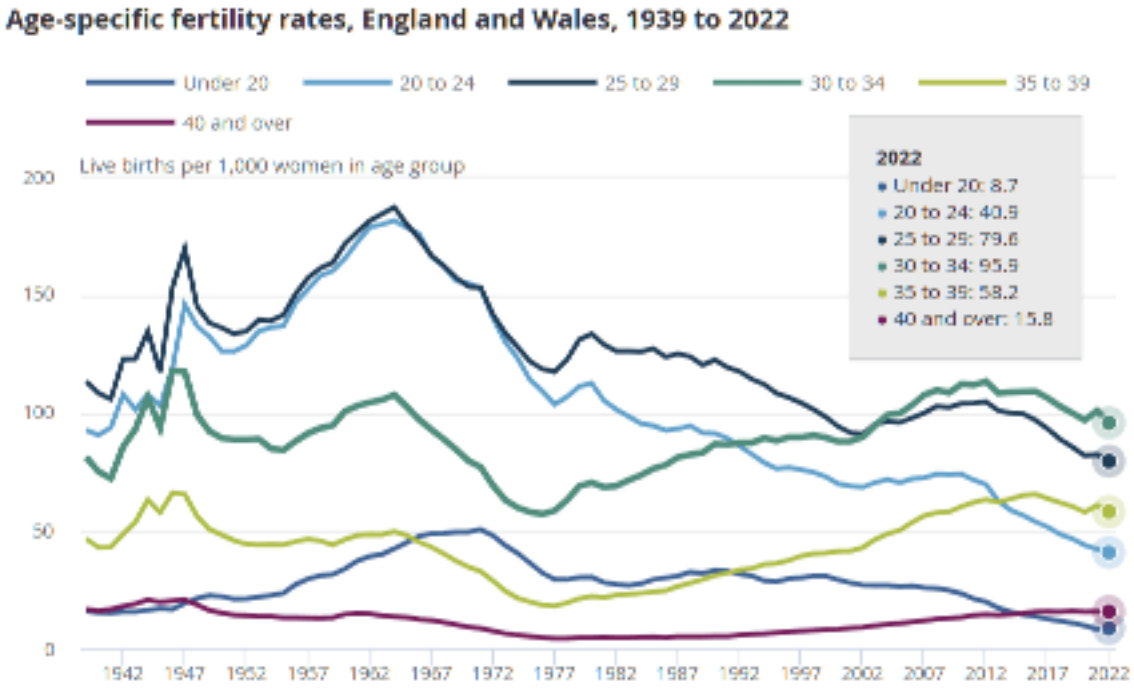

Image Source.
When we look at fertility rates before Women's Liberation in the 1970s, clearly, women in their 20s were (and still are) the most fertile.

Another factoid: Women who've already had children when they were young are MORE likely to get pregnant after 30. This explains why so many women living before Birth Control was introduced in 1960 continued to have children well into their 30s. OTOH, women who are promiscuous (i.e. contract STDs, which mess up the reproductive organs) and/or have abortions are much LESS likely to have a geriatric pregnancy. This certainly contributed to the decrease after 1960 (and still does).

But since then, it's gotten wanky.

InVitro Fertilization (IVF), using donor sperm ("sperm banks") and donor eggs ("test tube babies") came along in 1978, leading to an uptick for the 30-34 group. Then women decided they could wait a little longer to have children.

Assisted Reproductive Technology (ART), using a cocktail of fertility drugs, became popular during the mid to late 80s, leading to an increase for the 35-39 group. Then women decided they could wait a little while longer to have children.

Look at the numbers of women having children via IVF.

- One out of every 42 babies born in the U.S. in 2021 was conceived using IVF or other assisted reproductive technology.
- An average of one out of every 50 babies born in Europe [2].
- One in every 18 babies in Australia were born through IVF in 2021.
- One in every 15 babies in Taiwan were born through IVF in 2024.

But when we look at the success rate of IVF, we see that even medical ¡ScIeNcE! has limitations.

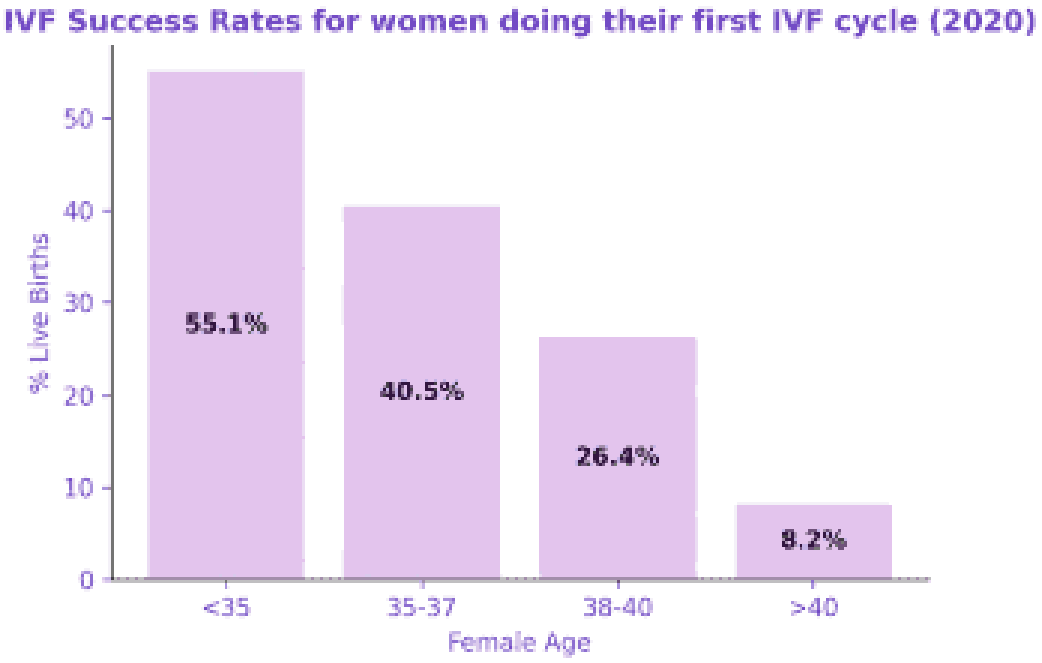

Image Source.
All this information is presented in a false positive vain of "LOOK WHAT WE CAN DO! Now you can postpone childbirth until middle age!"

It is never presented as "Look at all the cutting-edge medical technology and $$$ that is required just to give you a slim chance to make up for wasting your prime years of fertility on your career and riding the carousel!"

The Consequences

So now we have an epidemic of women who are working hard to advance their careers in their 20s so that they can earn the $$$ needed to pay for fertility treatments in their 30s, and to support themselves in their old age when that fails.

This LIE is why we now have a trend of women freezing their eggs and spending big $$$ at fertility clinics, often to no avail.

Case Study 1 — The Frustration of Ob-Gyn Doctors

Here's an example of how much trouble this LIE is causing everyone — not only women who vainly hope to have their first child at the ripe old age of 30+, but also ob-gyn doctors.

Slate (W. Spencer McClelland): Age 35 Isn't a Fertility Cliff. Why Do We Think It Is? (2020/8/17)

McClelland is the lead physician for Women's Care at the Denver Health Clinic, and an assistant professor of obstetrics and gynecology at the University of Colorado.

Similar to Rachel Hislop's piece, in this exposition, McClelland offers another catharsis aimed at post-carousel riders lamenting the difficulty of having children — but unlike Hislop's fine whine, McClelland's exposition is laced with a bit of truth.

Physicians use the term 'geriatric' to describe women's fertility above their early 30s. This is the typical age when women's reproductive organs no longer function normally and/or the genetic quality of their eggs gets wanky. But McClelland says the current estimate of advanced maternal age is younger than what everyone thinks — it's 32.5 years, NOT 35 as was estimated decades ago. He says, in so many tortuous words intended as a kindness and also as a warning, that a fertility specialist or obstetrician is NOT a god who can forgive a woman's self-centered ignorance of postponing childbearing. If a woman has waited this long, it may be too late.

Bwana Simba quipped,

> "Any old school pre-C0V!D doctors trying to explain to a hysterical white woman that her fertile years are gone must be questioning their career choice."

Heh. Well, at least they're earning a living off these Working Girls. Quite the switcheree!

Case Study 2 — Fecundity Fraud

This ought to be common sense, but apparently, common sense is truant. Here's the lesson they missed while they were playing ~~hooker~~ hooky.

A woman's fertility only lasts for a limited time. It has an expiration date. The MORE time a woman spends NOT having children during her fertility window, the LESS time she has remaining to have children, and the fewer children she will have.

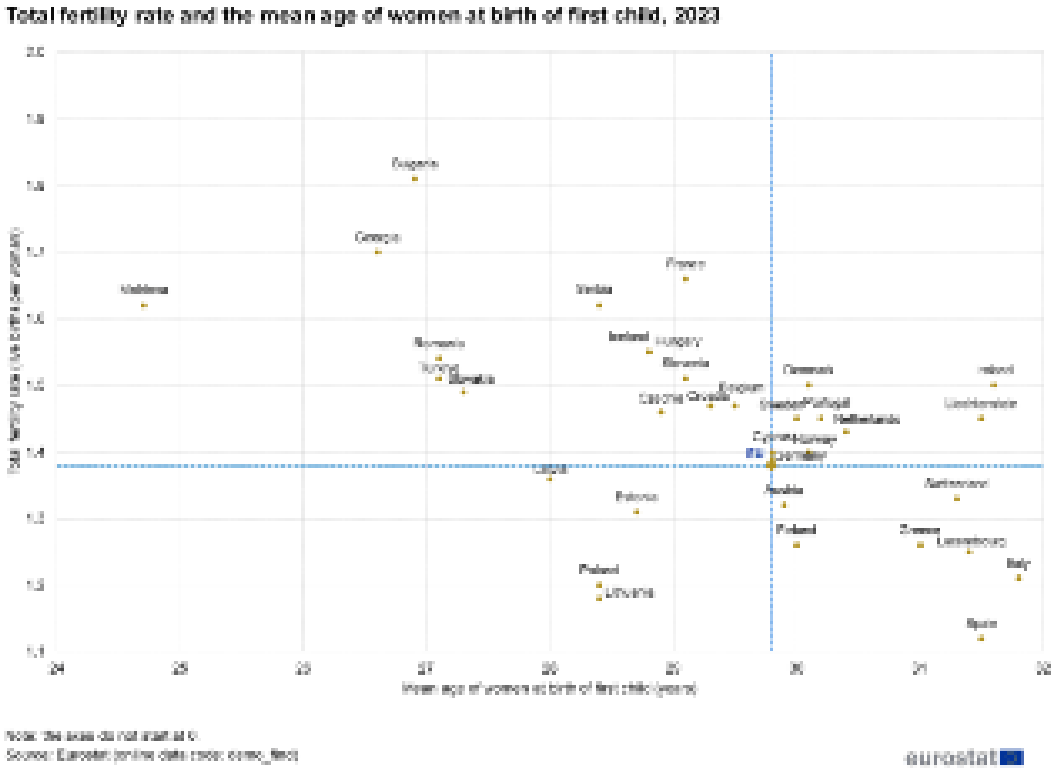

Image Source.
Furthermore, when women choose to postpone marriage and children for whatever reason, whether it be to pursue an education and career, or to travel, or to enjoy her penis sampling 'Season of Singleness', or … as Dalrock famously quipped, She wants 2.3 more years of sex with other men before she settles for you. (2017/10/2), they are unwittingly robbing their future husbands of the opportunity to have (more) children.

Men fall for this ruse too, when they marry a woman who's at the upper limit of her fertility window, which is the grand majority of men these days, as women's average age of marriage is ~~27.4~~ now 28.6 and rising fast. They swallow the LIE in thinking she still has a few good years of child-bearing left — when actually she doesn't. So then they have fewer children or none at all, or else they end up blowing big $$$ at fertility clinics with little hope of success.

Worse, many women have already reached a state of infertility and don't even know it.

Like what Bwana Simba told us,

> "At age 29, 90 percent of a woman's eggs are gone. I have known a number of couples where the women remained into their thirties to have kids, only to be shocked to discover they have fertility issues because of it."

Or worse still, due to her time making her rounds on the Carousel, a woman might have picked up a pesky STD that cuts her fertility window shorter than average. (For example, chlamydia causes scarring in the fallopian tubes which can totally and irreversibly arrest a woman's natural fertility.) But I repeat myself.

Worse yet, some diseases can escape detection, and still exact a toll on a woman's reproductive system.

Even worse, because of all the medications available to treat such diseases, she's able to entirely hide this hard hit to her heathery hearth.

(BTW, if a woman has a history of STDs, some of these can be indicated by the presence of specific antibodies for that disease, e.g. chlamydia.)

Worst of all, some diseases have the potential to be passed on to her stand-in 'husband' … and to the children.

Summary

To summarize, let's spell out the female fertility window in terms of an eight-phase timeline.

1. A woman's fertility begins at puberty. If she's menstruating, she can pop out kids.
2. Fertility peaks at ages 17-23.

3. Ages 23-26 are prime homemaking and childrearing years.
4. Age 26 is the fertility cliff.
5. Age 29 is when that door is closing.
6. Age 32.5 is geriatric, in terms of procreation.
7. A pregnancy at any age above 32.5 is an anomaly (unless she's had a history of bearing children earlier in life).
8. Sometime later … Amenorrhea and Menopause

Adding to this awareness, Men hoping to be fathers should learn to read the obvious signs. This should also be obvious, but it is seldom mentioned.

The Wall not only indicates that a woman is past her expiration date in terms of her sexual desirability, but also in terms of her fecundity as well. IOW, don't expect post-Wall pumpkins to become preggo. If it ever happens, it's a miracle of God (or ¡$c!eNcE!).

If she's young and hot, she'll bear a tot. If she's past the Wall, her legacy is null.

Don't let Pumpkin Pies tell you LIES otherwise, cutting your progeny down in size.

Apex SMV = Prime Fecundity

Read it well, and remember. Thus the Lord saith.

Conclusions

All in all, fertility is a fragile gift bestowed upon women as the weaker sex, and there are many factors that can hasten the demise of a woman's peritoneal baby factory, time being of the essence. Even if wives don't knowingly defraud their husbands, men can still experience fecundity fraud simply by believing the LIE and marrying a 'geriatric' wife. Trying to make up for this foolishness can be pricey and unsuccessful.

What I wrote about The Abortion Bottleneck also applies to women postporning marriage and children. Women who do not prioritize marriage and children early in life are self-selecting themselves out of the gene pool. And their 'husband's' too.

The Lord's judgment on a life well wasted.

References

1. Delbaere, I., Verbiest, S., & Tydén, T. (2020). Knowledge about the impact of age on fertility: a brief review. Upsala journal of medical sciences, 125(2), 167–174. https://doi.org/10.1080/03009734.2019.1707913
2. Dobson R. (2006). Proportion of babies born in Europe after IVF varies 20-fold. BMJ : British Medical Journal, 332(7542), 626.

Related

- Chateau Heartiste: The Wall (2010/2/1)
- Dalrock: Losing control of the narrative. (2012/8/11)
- Dalrock: Debasing marriage. (2012/10/7)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Theories on Single Women in the Church (2020/12/5)
- Σ Frame: The Feminist Life Script (2020/12/17)
- Σ Frame: Average age of first time sexual experience (data) and what this means for Christians (2020/12/20)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The more things change, the more they stay the same. (2022/2/28)
- Eurostat: Fertility Statistics (2025/2)
- The Rational Male: Why are Women Freezing their Eggs? (2025/6/3)

Asian Baby Girls

Jack · 9 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Appearances can be deceiving.

Readership: Anyone interested
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders;
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

The Asian Baby Girl Phenomenon

The Asian Baby Girl (ABG) phenomenon started in 2020-2021 as pent-up post-adolescent Asian-American girls repressed by Tiger Moms were emerging from (or sneaking out of) the C0V!D lockdown. The trend slowly spread until it went worldwide in the first half of 2023.

The ABG Aesthetic

The “ABG aesthetic”, as it is called, is characterized by tattoos (or henna tattoos for the less daring), multiple piercings, psychedelic nail treatments (see image below), fake eyelashes, fiercely contoured eyebrows, flashy / glittery / glowy highlighter, gray contact lenses, and ‘smoky’ eye makeup (see image below).

Hair is dyed or highlighted (e.g. ‘balayage’ or ‘ombré’), usually blonde.

BEFORE
AFTER
Ombré vs. Balayage

“Bodycon” skindress with denim jacket.

Clothing is usually a synthesis of very minimal or form-fitting garments (AKA “bodycon” clothing) covered by very loose, drapey, or baggy outerwear. I would describe this combination of apparel as “cloaked sexiness” or even Soft Streaking in the more extreme cases. The idea is that the frumpy outerwear can be opened or removed if the girl is in an environment where more attention is desired, and closed or donned again when more modesty is wanted. Also, depending on what is worn underneath, the act of removing the outer clothing can dramatize her presence by literally unveiling a semiotic exposé, thereby attracting the acute attention of others and adding an iconoclastic mystique to her persona.

Animal prints, knee-high socks, pleated mini-skirts, and scarves, which have all been popular among Asian women in decades past, have made a strong comeback, while adding elements of Western ‘Grunge’ or Hip Hop style, including bling-bling jewelry, cropped graphic tee shirts, jeans, trucker hats, and tube tops. Clompy white basketball sneakers, fur-lined hightop boots, and Bubble Tea (珍珠奶茶, AKA “boba cha”) also appear prominently.

"Smoky" eye shadow with fake eyelashes.

In summary, the ABG aesthetic is better described as an appearance of sociosexual sophistication at best, or bimbofication at worst. In probably the majority of instances, Asian Baby Girl may be more accurately described as Asian Party Girl. Thus, the ABG stereotype itself is the opposite of what its name implies.

The ABG Look

All across the pocket of social media catering to Asian women, a variety of beauty and style tutorials can be perused on how young Asian chicks can get "The ABG Look".

Here's a photo collage of "ABG transformations" for the reader's infomusement.

before
after
before
ABG
(asian baby girl)
transformation
after glasses
t-shirt who dis lashes hoops tattoos

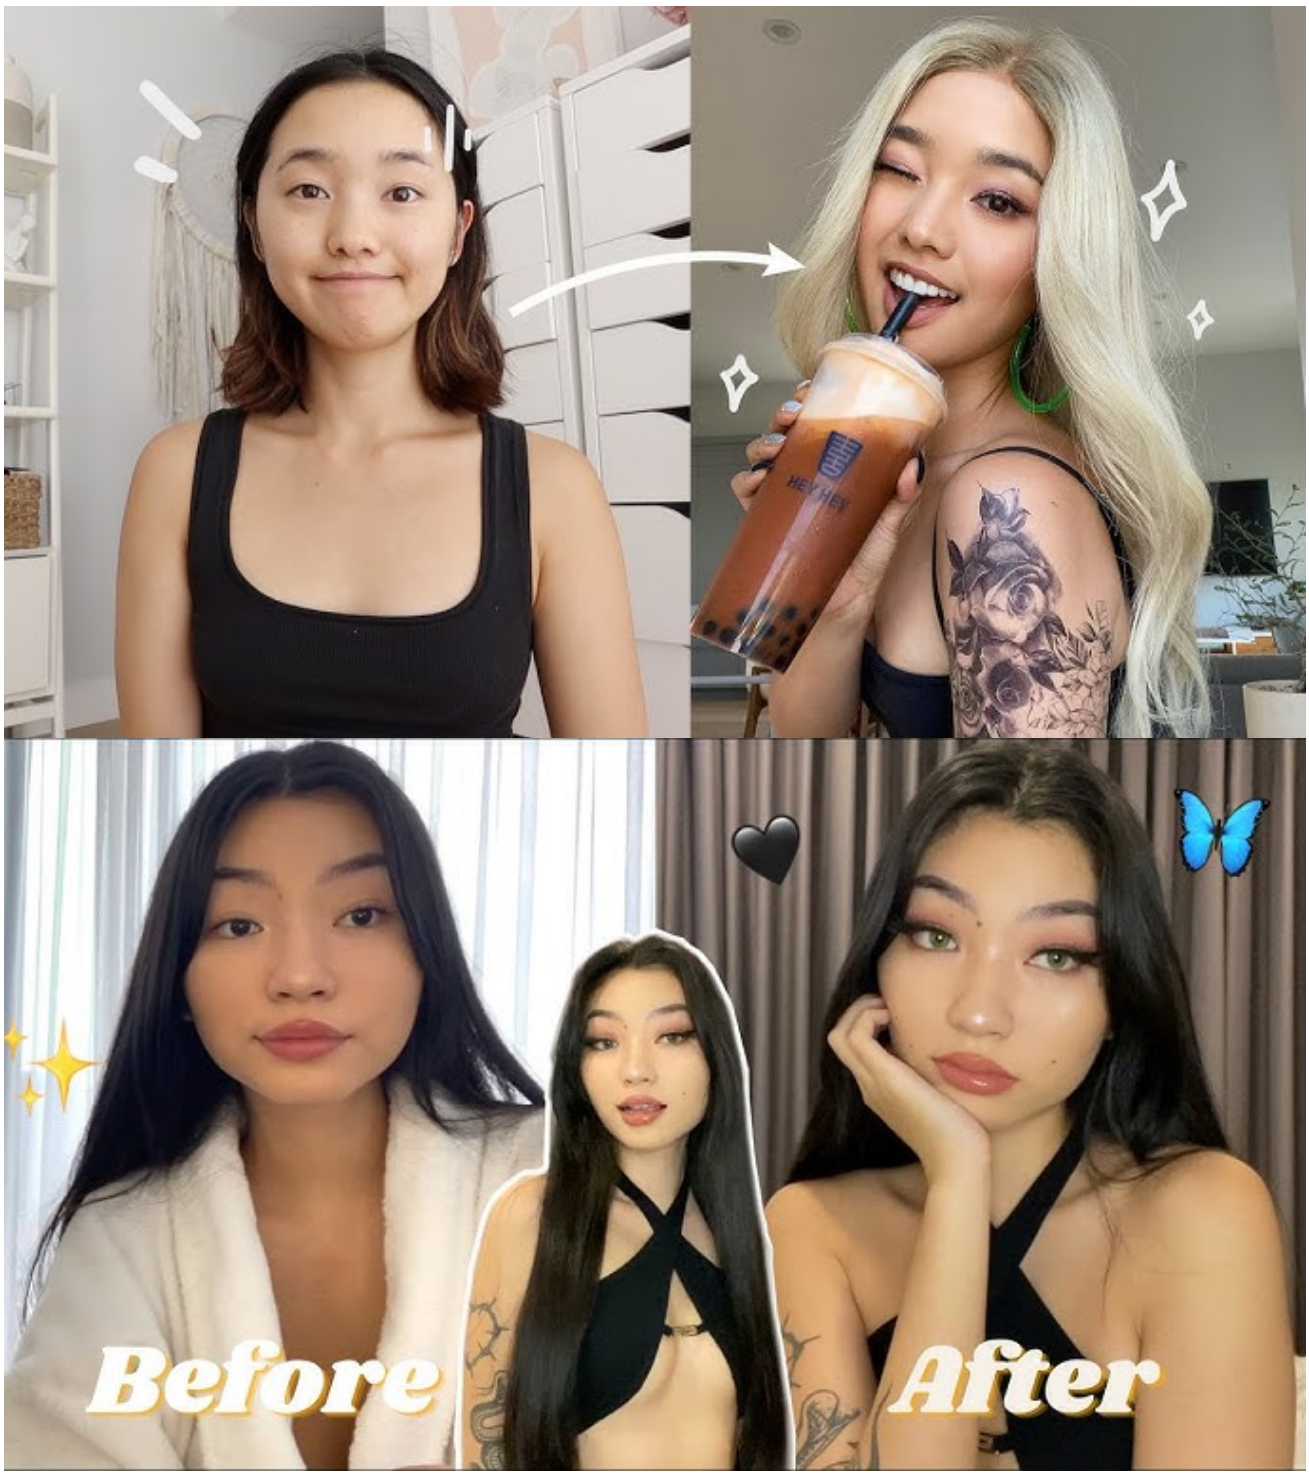
ABG
ASIAN BABY GIRL TRANSFORMATION
AFTER
BEFORE



Before
After

before
HAIR EXTENSIONS
COLORED CONTACTS
HOOPS
FAKE TATS
before after
ABG
transformation
contacts nose ring boba
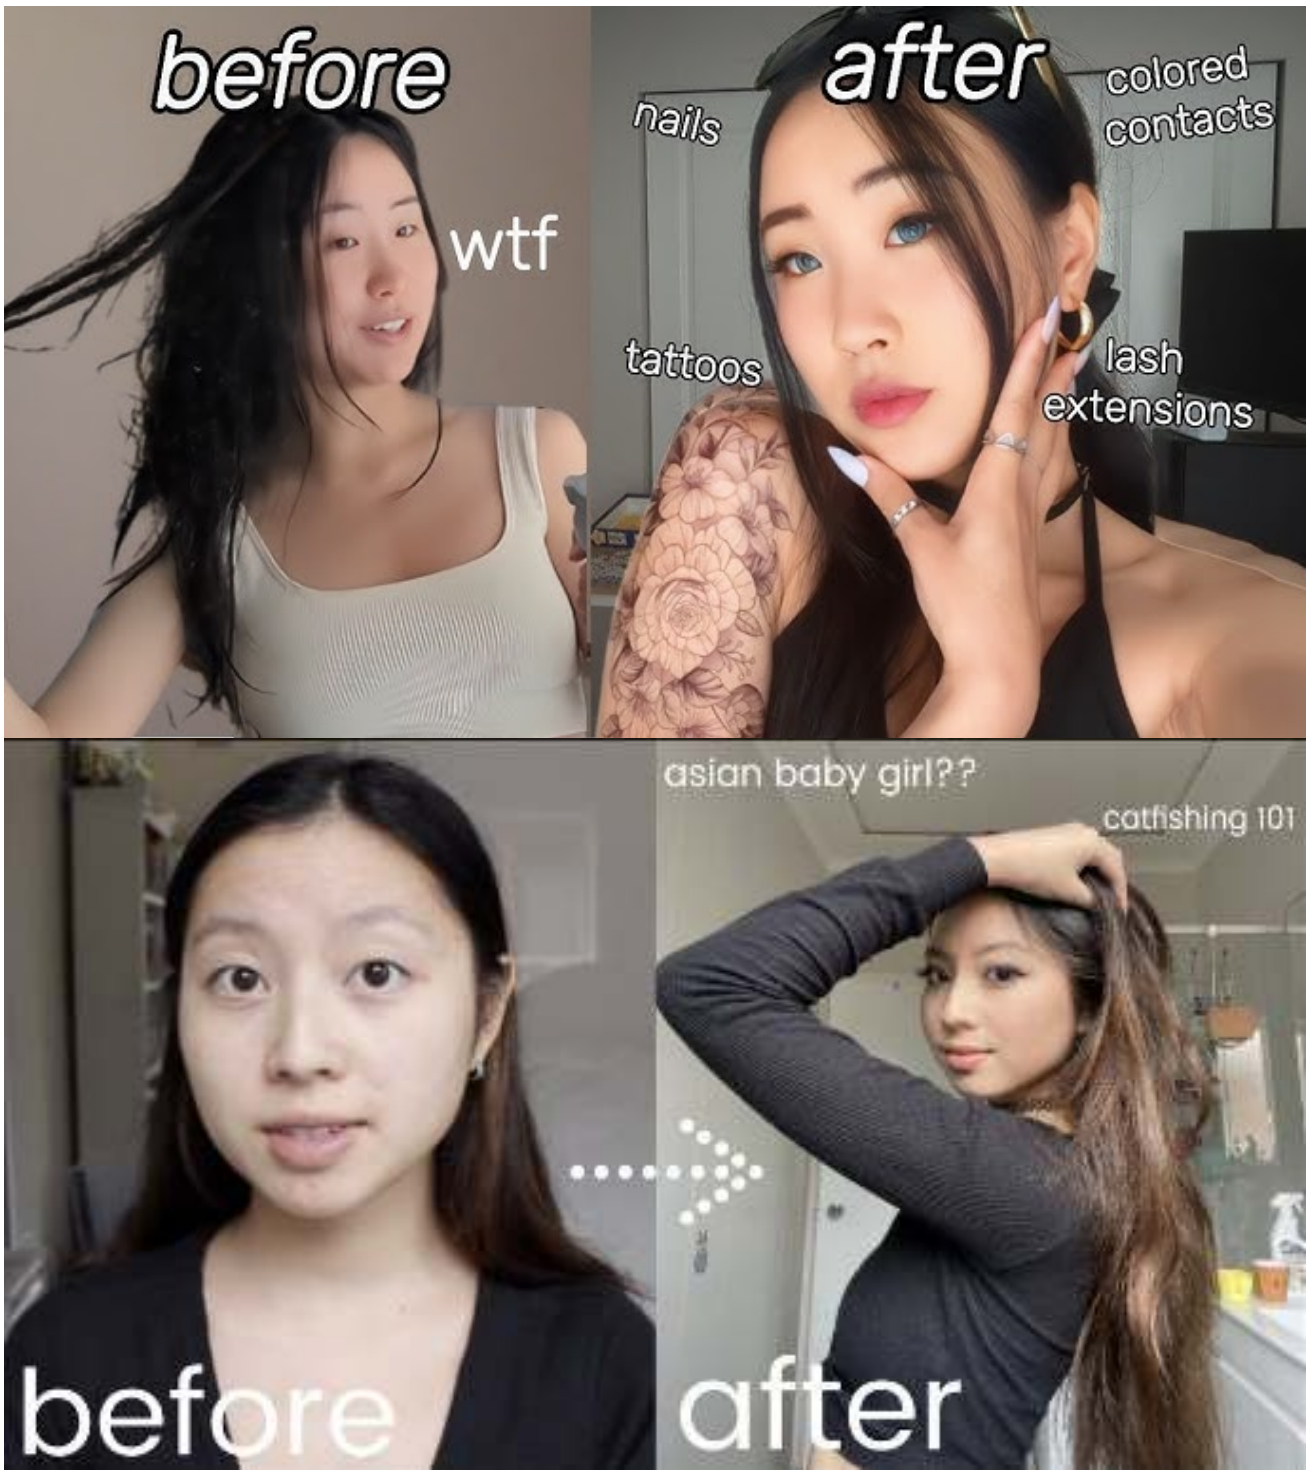
not the vibe. lol
nails
who is she???
tats



before
wtf
after nails colored contacts
tattoos
lash extensions
asian baby girl??
catfishing 101
before
after

IMO, most of these girls look better ‘Before’. Only a few of the most unattractive girls actually look better ‘After’.

before
after

What you're looking at here is NOT merely clothing and cosmetics. In addition to lighting and presentation, I think some of these girls have had some extensive cosmetic surgeries [e.g. blepharoplasty (eyelids), rhinoplasty (nose), genioplasty (chin), orthognathic surgery (jaw)].

If you care to watch a few of these girls' "transformations" on YouTube, you'll find that the weirdest thing about this whole craze is that these girls can make themselves look like socially mature / sexually active women, but their attitude, language, mannerisms, and overall demeanor screams "Loook at MEEE! I'm a pampered adolescent child playing with mommy's makeup." They are still PITA girls at heart. If you look closely, you can see it their eyes.

ABG!
试这样的风格但不知道怎么称呼它。现在
亚裔辣妹

Appearances can be very deceiving.

The Liberal Hype

The liberal MGM has proudly touted the ABG movement as a revolutionary counter-culture against the decades-long Orientalist stereotype of Asian-American women as the submissive "Lotus Blossom". The Narrative™ goes further to claim that the "Lotus Blossom" became a label "forced upon Asian women" after World War II, branding them as innocent, sexually submissive, and dependent on and subservient to men. You'll often find such descriptions include a stab at Wh!te men, e.g. "Yellow Fever", or how Wh!te men "fetishize" and "objectify" the feminine Asian female as "passive objects" according to their own "predatory appetites".

Heh. Snuffadat BS.

In reality, Asian women are by and large simply more conservative / traditional, more demure, and more feminine … and did I mention THIN … and that is what makes them attractive to men — ALL men really, not just Wh!te men.

The Liberal rave over ABG is little more than the Ugly Feminists' victory squawk of shadenfreude over conquering this last remnant of femininity.

Conclusions

At face value, the ABG movement is simply a wave of young Asian girls discovering their sex appeal and how to make themselves more attractive. But in many cases, they're taking a step away from the true family-oriented femininity that Asian women are famous for and are encouraging other women to do the same.

Let's see how that works out for them.

Sources

1. The F-Word Magazine: The Rise of the ABG (2020/3/7)
2. Jing Daily: Foreign affair: How China's Gen Z fell in love with the Asian Baby Girl aesthetic (2023/6/7)

Related

- China SMACK: Chinese Girls With & Without Their Makeup (2010/10/5)
- Σ Frame: A Historical Contrast: Western and Asian Women (2018/9/15)
- Σ Frame: Fantasy in Makeup and Photography (2021/4/16)
- Σ Frame: Descriptors of Beauty and Attractiveness (2021/4/23)
- Σ Frame: Cultural Influences on Asian OASIS Starlets (2021/5/5)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Incentives for Bimbofication (2021/8/23)
- Σ Frame: Women were Created to Conform (2023/5/8)
- Σ Frame: The Attraction of Glorification (2023/9/30)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Buddhist Culture on Women's Conduct (2024/2/23)
- Σ Frame: A Snapshot of Eastern Femininity (2024/2/26)
- Σ Frame: Herd Behavior : Cosmetics (2024/9/9)
- Σ Frame: Herd Behavior : Apparel (2024/9/10)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Effects of the Sexual Revolution on Female Sexuality (2024/9/24)
- Σ Frame: The Charms of a Psychopath (2024/10/21)

Detached young bucks, not simping suckers.

Jack · 12 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Indifference is not cowardice.

Readership: Men; Young Men; Anyone interested
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders;
Length: 3,200 words
Reading Time: 17 minutes

Intro

Back when I was in middle and high school (mid to late 80s), asking a girl to dance was easy. You stood in a conspicuous place, i.e. the center of the dance floor, and danced. I was particularly good at the Robot and the Worm.

You didn't have to dance well by any standard, but it was imperative to be bold and confident about it. Then, when a slow romantic tune came up, a freckled red head would appear out of nowhere, grab you around the shoulders, and smash her boobs into your chest.

And… Press toe! You were dancing with a girl.

But I reminisce. I know times aren't like that anymore. However, I do believe society will slowly come back around to that kind of interaction once again.

But we're not there yet.

Foster's Faux Pas

Pastor Michael Foster wrote an article so ignorant that it earned him a kick in the teeth on social media last week.

This is Foster: Jack Reacher Won't Ask Girls to Dance (2025/5/2)

In this essay, Foster tells about a prom for homeschoolers, where the boys refused to ask the girls to dance. Foster calls these boys "hesitant, uncertain, stuck", and chalks this up to fear, paralysis, passivity, and a lack of 'agency' / initiative. This analysis was probably true for Foster and his peers back in the day, but it's not applicable now — not anymore.

Foster cites a video from Charisma on Command (CoC) entitled, This Shift in Masculinity is Scary (2025/4/15).

Under the disco lights, we might gather that Foster's faux pas was in mistaking the fantastical Reacher series on Amazon Prime as a representative cultural case study, or in touting The Girl Next Door film, or Sean Connery's seductions in Casino Royale, as prime examples of Reformed courtship.

A strobing awareness of today's SMP would suggest that Foster is grossly out of touch with the male-oppressed mating hellscape and all the risks it imposes on men — even homeschoolers, apparently.

Most commenters responding to Foster's article and his accompanying tweets took either of these two stances.

But after examining Foster's piece and the video from CoC, I've come to some different conclusions.

Male Fantasy Fulfillment Genre?!?

First of all, CoC recasts traditional action hero films portraying male protagonists, who in the past, were considered male role models, such as Indiana Jones, James Bond, and Bruce Wayne of Batman, as belonging to a "Male Fantasy Fulfillment" genre. Heh.

If we're going to revise the names of film genres, we might as well classify films like 50 SoG, Eat, Pray, Love, and Pretty Woman as "Female Fantasy Fiction", or better yet, "Female Erotica" or "Female Pornolatry", and prohibit the sale or viewing to any woman not already over the age of ~~18~~ 21 and married.

Seriously, when I heard this reframe, I immediately suspected CoC as controlled opposition, or worse, hopelessly cucked (and Foster too by extension).

Although it is true that the lifestyles of the men portrayed in such films are largely fictional, dismissing it as "Male Fantasy Fulfillment" rejects the mythical archetype of masculinity as a cultural icon, as well as the genuine inspiration that these role models provide to men, especially adolescent and pre-adolescent boys. When idealized masculinity is rejected as merely a fantasy, we are, from a cultural and spiritual perspective, wading down the murky river Styx.

The Perceived Problem that is NOT a Problem

At 0:44, the CoC video states,

> "[Reacher] kills bad guys, saves the day, and beds a new woman in almost every book. This is nothing new in the male fantasy fulfillment genre, except there is something that's weirdly new in the show. Reacher, who is the most assertive, dominant action hero you could ever imagine in your wildest dreams, never initiates anything sexual. He's entirely passive with his female leads. We barely even see him look at the leading lady, who inevitably has to make the first, second, and third move before throwing herself at him."

As indicated by the chapter tag, the video claims this is "a problem", and I can only assume Foster agrees.

It is not explained why CoC (or Foster) believes Reacher should willingly chase after a lust for Poonani instead of keeping after his purpose in a professional manner. But from a Christian Red Pill perspective (of which I might consider myself to be an expert), Reacher's reticence is not "a problem" at all. This is exactly how things should be. The intersexual arena of offering affection, physical escalation, sex play, initiating sex, etc., is entirely within a woman's rightful domain of authority. This female-specific authority is encapsulated in the Manosphere axiom, "Women are the Gatekeepers of Sex", and this holds true for the Christian sphere as well.

The deafening complaint from men is that women are reprehensibly irresponsible with this power, and as a herd, they truly are.

Rather, it would appeal to our sense of moral rectitude to believe Reacher is strong because he remains detached, dominant, and refuses to simp, regardless of him not deadlifting, or his unhealthy eating habits, or the fact that he allows women to fornicate with his body, because to refuse them this affirmation would turn them into desperate s1uts (if they weren't already).

The Updated Fantasy that is NOT a Fantasy

At 3:44, CoC asks,

> "…if Reacher is the updated male fantasy, we need to ask ourselves, what does this fantasy of sexual passivity tell us about young men today?"

This "fantasy of sexual passivity" is not a fantasy at all. It's an expression of a man staying centered, and it is a realistic and effective response to the debased SMP.

Starting at 3:55, CoC explains what "updated" means as he recounts the cultural male fantasy / mating model that was insanely popular during the 2000s, in which an attractive woman unexpectedly appears in a man's life, and she "sees something in him" (essentially a Meet Cute) — without him doing anything stereotypically attractive — and turns his world upside down through her feminine presence (i.e. exibiting agency).

A scene from the film, The Girl Next Door (2004), starring Elisha Cuthbert.

Now, this model is half true, as (1) it recognizes that women need to exercise agency to establish a relationship (see last section below), (2) it follows the archetype of feminine willful submission to a man, and (3) it emphasizes that women are the scooters and shakers in the realm of the romantic. But the thing it gets hideously wrong is that women "see something" in average unattractive men that would motivate their submission. The Red Pill truth is that women are generally only attracted to dominant, high SMV men about town, with few exceptions.

CoC ignores the truthful aspects of this model and emphasizes the false, and then somehow arrives at a conclusion that is completely foreign to this model; namely, that a man — presumably any man — can win a laideys heart and hive by acting on his desire.

Starting at 5:17 [emphasis mine],

> "…there's one thing [the man of the 2000s] has that Reacher doesn't. He is undeniably attracted to [the object of his desire]. His desire for her cannot be hidden or suppressed, and his victory is in acting on that desire, despite NOT being the stereotypical hot guy…"
>
> "[The average guy] wins because *he goes for it. He doesn't do a million push-ups or beat anyone up. He just goes for it."

Pretty lies. The Red Pill dispelled this false Blue Pill myth ~15 years ago, but CoC (and I guess Foster too) is still touting this idea as truth. If it were true, then there would be no MGTOW.

Note to Newbies: This attitude is correct in the context of a man pursuing his purpose, but NOT when pursuing women. Getting laid, finding a GF or wife, or having a family are NOT men's purpose in life. Those things are women's purposes.

CoC then compares Reacher (and Foster on the young men at the homeschool dance, et al.) to this half-@ss understanding of a bygone and half-false narrative mating model, and concludes that Reacher is too passive.

> "This is the inverse of Reacher, who is super high agency in every action scene … but totally passive around women."

With Jack Reacher, the male is the center of wimminz' attention, just as it should be.

Chivalry Disguised as Male Bravado

In the chapter, Risking Rejection, CoC goes further to emphasize that men must be willing to sacrifice and suffer — NOT to protect a woman who already belongs to him, but to win wimminz' wuv. This is essentially Chivalry disguised as faux male bravado.

Beginning at 7:17 [emphasis mine],

> "…in the 2000s, male desire for women still existed in that stereotypical male fantasy genre. Victory came from risking rejection to act on that desire …
>
> > …that one special thing that means more to you than anything else in the world, and when you find her, you fight for her. You risk it all.
>
> …and a capable man could handle rejection without forcing the issue or getting overly flustered.

Of course, "that one special thing that means more than anything else in the world" (including a man's purpose) is understood to mean, fresh, glistening wet, steaming hot P000naaaniiii. (Chef's kiss for emphasis.)

> "And this is what worries me about Reacher. Desire for women, … desire for sex, for intimacy, for a relationship … it's all gone. Sure, Reacher is a participant, but he's not an active initiator…"

Reading between the lines, apparently "the problem" with Jack Reacher's character is that he isn't foolhardy enough to Game chicks or else simp and sacrifice himself on the chance that a girl might like him back.

The reality is that men like Reacher get so much P00n that the frustrations of unfulfilled desire never become an issue.

The average young man doesn't have that 'privilege', and yet they're still holding their own.

Acting leads to Getting, except when it doesn't

Foster attempts to explain how young men can maintain this detached behavior.

> "It's not that they don't want anything. It's that they've lost touch with how to act on what they want. They've been taught to suppress desire instead of disciplining it. They've learned that passivity feels safer than pursuit."

Foster is assuming that "Acting leads to Getting". This is generally true, but NOT if it's something within a woman's domain of authority — unless you become her personal ATM / butler / slave / therapist who caters to her every whim; and depending on if she's in a good mood at that moment, she might decide to 'reward' you once or maybe twice before sending you on another errand. But this is an inversion of Headship, and is therefore NOT a Christian arrangement.

Men take what posies they can get; they don't get what posies they can take.

It might be more accurate to assume that most of these young men were deflected from a trajectory towards having successful interactions with women, even before they were out of preschool, and have therefore already overcome the male-specific predilection for pedestalizing P00n.

Besides, it just so happens that Reacher's example of having a reserved stance towards intersexual liaisons is not only pragmatic and professional (i.e. purpose driven), but also acutely advantageous in today's SMP, as it evades the potential risk of being charged with h@r@$$ment, or receiving a thermonuclear rejection having a world wide fallout all across social media — all depending on whether she is 'pleased' with you at that moment. Men would do well if they followed Reacher's example, and in fact, many of them are, as CoC and Foster observed.

But instead of being thankful that Reacher's example offers young men a viable role model, even a Christian one in certain aspects, at a time when few others exist, standing in stark contrast with the contemptible wimpy W0ke automatons proffered by the MGM, they are worried about this 'problem', and wringing their hands with a furrowed brow that men don't actually need to take the initiative to challenge their inner wuss in order to capitalize on the perceived benefits of being a Chivalrous, self-sacrificing P00n pedestalizer.

Lest we forget, Foster is a pastor.

Conclusions

Men will cross seas, go to war, and move mountains for precious P00nani and all the attendant benefits thereof. But if no P00nani is coming on strong and wet, then men will want nothing to do with women. No hate. That's just how it is. Coram Mundo. "Put out or get out." — same as how women view male utility.

So in the final analysis, it appears that CoC and Foster are NOT only upset that men are apathetic about initiating intersexual congress, but more so that young men are NOT holding onto the false hope of piercing P00nani, and chasing after women in a desperate attempt to ~~appease~~ arrest their inner simp. Of course, this is all painted up as something brave and honorable (i.e. Chivalrous) in order to appeal to male sensibilities.

Their interesting logical switcheree is how they legitimize male simpery by asserting that NOT holding on to Blue Pill / gynocentric ideals, NOT acting on lust, NOT perusing and pursuing women, and NOT taking those risks, amounts to passivity or fearful cowardice. This is the same as saying the mark of a man is dependent on and determined by his success with women — a sociosexual heresy, according to The Christian Red Pill. This is exactly the kind of attitude that young men are rejecting en masse right now, and rightly so. A righteous rebellion, but CoC and Foster see this as "a problem".

Women's Role in the Mess

Going back to the topic of the reserved male social interaction observed by CoC and Foster, many commenters who responded to Foster's article pointed out that he is hammering on men's purported inadequacies and is failing to address women's role in the mess.

Dalrock anticipated this very same scenario 13 years ago. So let us review what this astute and diplomatic sage has foretold. Adapting Dalrock's words to the present day SMP, we might substitute the words 'court' for "interact with", 'courtship' for 'attention and validation', 'marriage' for 'LTR', and 'husband' for "LTR partner". These substitutions are given in brackets. [Emphasis mine.]

> "Many women are looking to mix the excitement of hookup culture with the search for a husband [LTR partner]. This makes no logical sense, but it is extremely tempting. I think they hear from their mothers, aunts, and grandmothers about men formally asking them out on expensive / exciting dates, seeking their hand in marriage, and see that as a sort of birthright. I'm not sure it even existed for the mothers and aunts, but these myths die hard. More likely, the mothers and aunts are mixing their abuse of beta orbiters with their memory of hooking up with exciting alphas.
>
> The reality is that the greater betas (the ones with options) won't be falling all over themselves to expensively court [interact with] women they don't already have a fairly strong relationship with. The alphas (and greater betas not looking to marry) have figured out that courtship [interacting with women] is for suckers, and have moved to only dating women they already have had sex with. These are rational responses to the changes women in general have made to chase alphas while trying to extend the courtship [attention and validation] phase indefinitely. But there is a lot of confusion right now, plus a lot of intentional misconstruing of what is going on. I don't doubt that 99% of young women who read this will laugh and dive right into the hookup culture. So be it. I won't waste much energy trying to figure out how to convince them. But there are parents who want to influence their own daughters, as well as some young women who may earnestly want to do something different than her peers for better results."
>
> A comment from Dalrock

> "I think resetting expectations on how much they can expect men who are looking to marry [LTR] to foot the searching cost is essential for those who are still serious about marriage [LTR]. They can still look forward to courtship [attention and validation], but it won't be with a series of dashing alphas (was it ever?). If they don't damage their ability to pair bond with an attainable man, they can look forward to a very enjoyable courtship phase [interaction] with the man they go on to marry [LTR]. But they shouldn't expect men to always formally ask them out and put on the full show upfront. The men they meet in everyday life are the men they have to choose from. If they have a good sense of their own league, what they are looking for, and which men are actually the marrying [LTR] kind, they can then take a little more of the initiative to place themselves on his radar and lower his perceived risk of asking her out. I know this is as romantic as sensible shoes, but it is what it is."
>
> A comment from Dalrock

IOW, women need to start taking the initiative to choose a man, form a relationship, and follow through on commitment, i.e. exercise agency.

> "What we need to explain to young women is not only that their own behavior will determine how willing men are to foot the searching costs, but that the behavior of women in general has already changed the rules. The whole point of courtship [interacting with the opposite sex] is finding out if there is a match there. Footing this investment has become a losing proposition for men in many ways. She can't expect the man to know that "she is different", because this is what the process is about. In the past, women enjoyed a free ride here, but it came at the cost of pressure to not dither and make marriage [LTR, i.e. 'settling'] a priority. That pressure is gone now, and so is much of the free ride. So, all a young woman can expect now is the new baseline limited courtship [interaction with the opposite sex], which men have adjusted to. The older she gets, the less of this she should expect. If she handles this badly, she will gain a reputation for such and will receive even less than the age-adjusted baseline. But either way. she can't expect what women received in the past, and even that is less than what Disney has likely sold to her."
>
> Dalrock: Women should reduce their expectations of courtship. (2012/5/5)

What goes around comes around. It's now time to tip the busking fiddler, ladies. Step up or buzz off with your cats and wine.

Related

- Dalrock: SMP searching costs and the unmourned death of courtship. (2011/10/10)
- Dalrock: Women should reduce their expectations of courtship. (2012/5/5)
- Dalrock: Why men are withdrawing from courtship. (2013/11/15)
- Dalrock: How should women respond to men withdrawing from courtship? (2013/11/17)
- Dalrock: Devouring a lifetime of courtship. (2017/12/8)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Blue Pill Arrogance of the 80s (2022/2/2)
- Σ Frame: Natural Selection Dynamics leading to the LTR / MMP Breakdown (2023/9/6)
- Σ Frame: Reminiscing on Our Immoral Culture (2024/8/26)
- Taylor the Fiend: Single Woman Loses Her MIND Because Men Aren't Putting In Effort Anymore (2025/1/1)
- Taylor the Fiend: Single Woman Loses Her MIND Because Men Won't Take Women On Dates Anymore (2025/1/5)
- Patriactionary: Pastor Blue Pill wonders why the boys won't ask the girls to dance at homeschool church social (2025/5/4)
- Taylor the Fiend: Why Men Are Giving Up On Approaching Women — Filipina Woman Gets It Right (2025/5/11)

The Feminist's FEAR of Man

Jack · 14 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

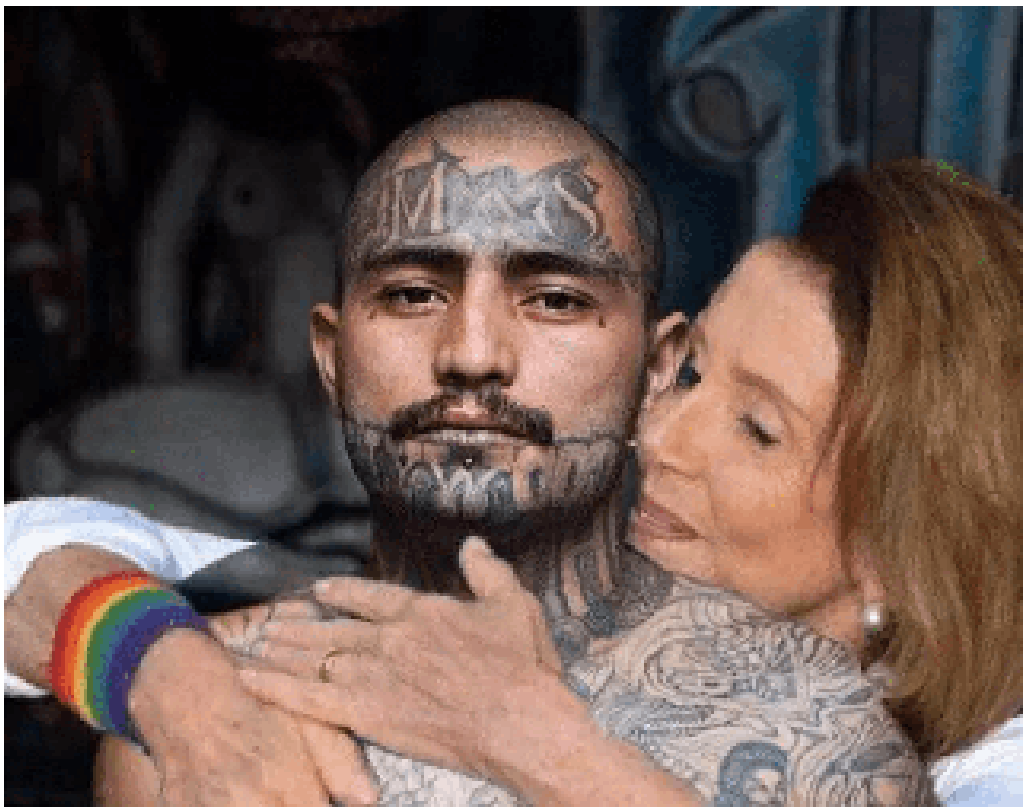
Le fantasme de l'érotisme macabre.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders; Feminism;
Author's Note: Some text expands previous comments. Links embedded in the initial words.
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

Many Feminists, including Churchian Egalitarianists, have a frightful obsession with the idea of a woman being overpowered by a man through coercion [1].

These women also have a strange co-dependence with lawless rogues and ¡ScArY! villains, although they'll never admit it and will outright oppose the idea in words.



It is bizarre that so many women obsess over this, because FEAR is an instinct that repels one away from an evolutionarily disadvantageous person or situation. Yet, this FEAR often drives women to chase after cads, cruds, and criminals, and/or embrace Feminism — both are evolutionary dead ends.

It is also bizarre because what we see in the grand majority of cases (in Western cultures) is that women have the upper hand over men, and thus, men pose very little threat. In fact, it is illegal and culturally unethical for a man to have authentic possession of a woman.

So what is behind all of this?

Women's Innate FEAR Fantasy

This mental preoccupation appears in two distinct forms, each having a multitude of subcategories.

1. The Lusty Fantasy — e.g. 50SoG, women's attraction to violent criminals, lycanthropy, vampires, Mr. Big, Gr@pe fantasies, women's fantasy of taming the Bad Boy (and only such men) with their V Power, etc.
2. The Lecherous Fantasy — "Men are controlling" (in the abusive sense), "Men are horn dogs", "All men want is sex, Sex, SEX!", and the so-called "R@pe culture", etc.

The Lusty Fantasy is directed towards high SMV SuperStuds, violent rogue figures, and other uberpotent 'Beings' (e.g. demigods, vampires, werewolves, etc.), and the thrill of being ravaged and ravished by them, even by forced coercion if that's what is necessary to spike her dopamine. This is an expression of women's innate DESIRE to be dominated, and their addiction to the endorphine rush associated with Dread, FEAR, Horror, and Terr0r.

… and/or Sexual Arousal.

… or ALL of these for the fully exhilarating grand mal high.

The Lecherous Fantasy is motivated by The Existential FEAR of getting stuck by/on/with a low SMV man. It is an expression of women's pathetic FEAR of being dominated and overruled by any less-than-desirable man — one who cannot inflict FEAR in some form or fashion.

… and thereby forfeit the Lusty Fantasy by opportunity cost. Unacceptable!

The common denominator of these fantasies is FEAR.

The Anatomy of Feminist Fear

The reason why Feminists, W0kesters, and all women in general are obsessed with the idea of a woman being dominated by a man (i.e. through coercion) is because this is what comes out of the heart of a woman who is overwhelmed by a W!tches brew of FEARS.

- The FEAR of Men in general.
- The Existential FEAR.
- The FEAR of losing control.
- The FEAR of NOT losing control.
- The FEAR of trusting a man.
- The FEAR implicit in NOT trusting a man.
- The FEAR of being dominated.
- The FEAR of NOT being dominated.
- The FEAR of submitting to a man.
- The FEAR of being held accountable and responsible.
- The FEAR of being shamed for being hypergamously insatiable.
- The FEAR of being confined or restricted to living a hardscrabble life.
- The FEAR of never being Validated as a diadem of desire.
- The FEAR of losing or never realizing the ancient diadem of femininity — to be beautiful, and to be desired and dominated by a high SMV man.
- The FEAR of discovering that she doesn't have that exquisite diadem quality of femininity, and with it the power to seduce and/or control men — or doesn't have it anymore.
- The FEAR of other women who have greater diadem powers than she does.

All these innate FEARs are blown out of proportion and into an obsession. Once grown out of touch with reality, these intrinsic FEARs degenerate into madness, and the ostensible object of this FEAR, Men, are demonized, reviled, and vilified — thus constituting a spiritual rebellion.

This twisted FEAR of Man is the paranormal force that drives Feminism, motivates charges of 'T0xic Masculinity', and fuels W0ke notions of 'V!Ct!m0L0gY'.

But instead of accepting their proper role in God's creation and submitting themselves to a protector and provider (i.e. father or husband), they deem the words 'obey' and 'submit' profane to the female mind, even though this is exactly what God hath decreed for them to overcome their FEAR of Man (Esther 5:1-8; Ephesians 5:22-24; Colossians 3:18; 1 Timothy 2:9-15; Titus 2:3-5; 1 Peter 3:1-6).

Like an addict who can't understand why his life is a mess, these women cannot understand that it is their addiction to dopamine fueled drama that drives their debased dereliction of men — NOT the actions of the men themselves.

Feminine FEAR is an Addiction

All things considered, women's default mental state is a psychotic (and often psychopathic) moshpit of Desire, Envy, Shame, FEAR, and grasping for Control, all juxtaposed in a boiling conundrum of wanting to be dominated and FEARing it at the same time. Hence why women are so insecure and unstable, i.e. "the weaker vessel" (1 Peter 3:7).

But ironically, this is exactly what women prefer. More specifically, they crave the intense emotions induced by the hormones released when the body is subjected to FEAR and/or sexual arousal, pinging every single neurotransmitter in her brain all at once … and continually if at all possible.

Think of it as an opioid.

Women are deceptively coy about hiding and nurturing this addiction.

They won't be honest enough to say that the reason why they won't express interest in a man or ask a man to dance is because that's "too easy" and "too boring", even though it 'works' every time.

They are cunning enough NOT to tell everyone the reason why they love Twilight is because it terrifies them and turns them on at the same time.

If they are ever confronted with these ideas, they'll flatly deny it to avoid the condemnation of Perverse Society™.

OTOH, if they are confronted with this idea and they own it, then they've probably already had that kind of experience and are therefore defiled and spoiled for wifery to any other man.

Literally anything to keep the fleshly Feeelz flowing freely, even at the expense of others, or even at the cost of her own future contentment.

So you see, women's obsession with the idea of being overpowered by a man through coercion is NOT so bizarre when we understand it as a psychological projection of deep desire for the traditional male-dominant intersexual dynamic that has gone missing, combined with a psychopathic figment of FEAR that is an intrinsic element of female romantic fantasies.

References

1. Bivona J, Critelli J. The nature of women's rape fantasies: an analysis of prevalence, frequency, and contents. J Sex Res. 2009 Jan-Feb; 46(1):33-45. [Link; PDF]

Related

- Chateau Heartiste: What Betas Can Learn From Women's Rape Fantasies (2011/4/18)
- HealthLine: Why We Like to Be Scared (2016/11/12)
- Cultural Analysis & Philosophy: Why Feminists Enjoy Rape Fantasies (2018/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority (2020/9/30)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)
- Σ Frame: Taming the Savage Termagant (2025/4/21)
- Σ Frame: How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23)

The Evils of AI

Jack · 16 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Primary thinking and creativity are unique human faculties that cannot be replicated.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

Bruce Charlton posed a few questions about how we should regard Artificial Intelligence (AI).

> "…from our spiritual and Christian point of view we need to ask – honestly, and by learning from past experience — what will be the overall effect of mass usage of AI-technologies: what will they (on average) do to the way people think, Western society and its institutions, our attitude to the world, our aspirations?
>
> Does the spread of AI technologies lead towards a more spiritual and creative, personal, loving, and Christian perspective — or towards ever-more this-worldly manipulative materialism?
>
> To ask is to answer."
>
> Bruce Charlton: The "AI" Litmus Test Fail: Is it caused by a kind of Stockholm Syndrome? Projection? Managerialism? (2025/4/11)

The Virtue of Human Creativity

That aspect of our nature which allows us to create, to empathize, to improvise, to reason, and to make moral decisions is a special gift granted to humanity. These are unique abilities that, among other things, identify us as being made in the image of God, the Father of creation, compassion, and moral rectitude. When we fail or neglect to use these faculties, we are somewhat less like the image of God.

Creativity and decision-making are immensely valuable because of the moral inspiration that results, best captured in the fine arts, but also in the many small details that make life enjoyable and memorable. It is through these actions that we identify with our work, claim it, and mark it as our own.

Human Limitation

But because implementing the will in creative efforts requires time, thought, and energy, it is also valuable because the conservation of will-power involves an opportunity cost due to human limitations. Less energy spent on frivolous decisions allows us to direct that energy towards more important ones, and vice versa. Thus, it is beneficial to reduce the number of unnecessary decisions we must make each day.

The popular but now dated anecdote that drives this practical wisdom home is the story of how Apple founder Steve Jobs only bought grey turtleneck sweaters, which resulted in one less decision he had to make every morning before beginning his work for the day.

The Importance of Good Habit

The point is that establishing habits, methods, and strategies for decision-making can help us allocate our limited energies more wisely and with better results, and to increase productivity by reducing frivolous expenditures of time, effort, and human resources. This emphasizes that we must form good habits that advance our purpose and well-being.

Moreover, there is a desire for less work and more simplicity to relieve the human burden. But when we become accustomed to relegating that choice — that authority — to rote habits of inductive reasoning without examining evidence (what I call 'Autopilot'), or automated systems such as AI (or Tesla's automated automobile, and I'm sure there are others that could be included), then we are also relinquishing whatever influence or authority we might have otherwise had in that matter.

The point of human weakness is that we are tempted to use such tools to "make our lives easier" but we often do so by forfeiting our God-like influence, either intentionally, or unwittingly, or out of exasperation — which is essentially the same as being lazy, or stupid … or evil.

The Evils of AI

AI clearly does not possess these faculties of moral character, and it never will. The closer AI gets to mimicking these qualities, the more macabre the uncanny valley becomes — first aesthetically, and then when that should be corrected, spiritually, in one form or another, inching ever closer to that which is unclean. This cannot be corrected.

In my view, the real evils of AI (or at least 5 aspects of it) are as follows.

Devaluation of Human Creativity — AI devalues human creativity by flooding the market with logically inadequate and morally defective products.

Dumbing Down Humanity — AI bypasses, removes, or shunts both the need for and the regular practice of agency, creativity, discernment, and judgment, especially in the ethical and moral realm.

The Moral Void — I think most readers would agree that there is "something missing" in AI generated output, e.g. code, images, text, etc. That "something missing" is the supernormal dimension of moral discrimination in terms of contextual practicality — an expression of The Creator — that quality of God in Man which also connects us to the moral fabric of reality, however corrupted or faint.

Spurious Junk — AI produces a great deal of content that is false, milquetoast, murky, "Politically Correct", and/or useless. This requires MORE human effort to sort through the result and decide what is truly of value.

The Singularity — A complex topic, but the point here is that it consumes and destroys.

For these reasons, IMO, even low-quality human output is of more value than the best-quality AI output, if for no other reason than the fact that a human being spent a few minutes or hours of his limited time on earth to create it.

IMO, AI is only good for provoking brainstorming and providing topics for critical thought, and it has a limited function for summarizing a large body of knowledge. It is NOT for thinking, or creating, or deciding, or producing.

Concluding Statements

For now, genuine human output remains a premium, but with AI, we'll need to invest a little more conscientious effort to keep things that way.

When choosing whether to use such technology, we must ask ourselves, "Is this really helping me deliver a higher quality result in the thing that matters most, or am I just wasting time with this, or being lazy, and/or abandoning my creative / moral influence?"

I believe, in probably more than 90% of instances, the use of AI is the latter.

Dennis Heretz, a programmer, puts that figure at 80%, but when you consider the opportunity cost of messing around with AI and the trouble of extracting and interpreting the 20% useful output and making up the difference, instead of investing creative effort elsewhere, that's why I say > 90%.

Related

- Bruce Charlton: Is AI (Artificial Intelligence) another Litmus Test issue? (2023/11/24)

- Bruce Charlton: The spiritual failure of All objective Systems (including institutions and corporations, including churches) (2025/3/11)
- Bruce Charlton: “AI” in public discourse: It’s a case of persons, or else nihilism (2025/3/20)
- Bruce Charlton: The reason why we ought Not to engage with “AI”, is the same reason we ought not to engage with demons (2025/3/30)
- The Narrow Desert: AI-dolatry (2025/5/5)
- The Orthosphere (Kristor): Originality as the Basic Human Product (2025/5/7)
- Francis Berger: Cultivating Primary Thinking is the Positive Response to AI (2025/5/9)
- Bruce Charlton: “AI” is strategically about destruction, not control – Francis Berger’s post, Laeth’s comment (2025/5/14)

The Sniff Test to Identify AI Generated Text

Jack · 17 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Honing the art of discernment to detect frivolous machine junk.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Author's Note: This essay expands my previous comment.
Length: 200 words
Reading Time: 1 minute

Over at The Orthosphere, Kristor asks,

> "How do you tell whether what you are reading was generated by AI, or by real humans (or, for that matter, other real spirits)?"
>
> "How to tell the difference between creative originality and repetitive stupidity?
>
> In the end, it seems to me that it must come down to something like smell."
>
> The Orthosphere (Kristor): Originality as the Basic Human Product (2025/5/7)

As authors, we owe it to our readers to 'prove' we are 'authentic humans' by making our writings more 'smelly' (or 'stinky'), so to speak.

No aroma! No nectar! No pollen!
How can we do this? What can humans write that AI would be unable to mimic?

Here are some ideas.

- Analogies.
- Pigay Latinay.
- Fantastic Fiction.
- Jokes and humor.

- C0rNw@11!ng text.
- Instilling emotion.
- Theoretical models.
- Context specific insights.
- New ideas and solutions.
- Casting moral or ethical judgment.
- Speak like Yoda, AI knows not how.
- Being absolutely raw Red Pill truthful.
- Throw in a %$#& obscene word, here and there.
- Combining words or word parts to make new words.
- Misspelling words in order to create puns and entendres.
- Verily, thou shalt addeth ye Olde English tongue in parsimoniously parsed form.

Readers are invited to add to this list.

Related

- Bruce Charlton: "AI" in public discourse: It's a case of persons, or else nihilism (2025/3/20)
- Bruce Charlton: The reason why we ought Not to engage with "AI", is the same reason we ought not to engage with demons (2025/3/30)
- Bruce Charlton: Current AI is "Industrial-scale Plagiarism" (2025/4/5)
- Bruce Charlton: The soulless mediocrity of current-"AI" is a consequence of blending and averaging in its industrial -scale plagiarism (2025/4/6)
- Bruce Charlton: The proper approach to evaluating "AI" – From the comments… (2025/4/12)
- Bruce Charlton: Fake science, fake academia, fake research… fake expertise (and the AI PSYOPS) (2025/4/29)
- Bruce Charlton: Self-styled AI: "At enormous cost of electricity and manpower, people are being given something worse than a 1998 search engine." (2025/5/4)
- The Orthosphere (Kristor): Originality as the Basic Human Product (2025/5/7)
- Francis Berger: Cultivating Primary Thinking is the Positive Response to AI (2025/5/9)
- The Orthosphere (Bonald): I consider AI to be a joke in poor taste (2025/5/10)
- The Orthosphere (Bonald): More AI skepticism (2025/5/12)

Cassie Ventura

Jack · 19 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

8 Red Pill principles confirmed.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes
Warning: The last image may be NSFW.

Intro

SurfDumb mentioned the Cassie Ventura vs Diddy Combs trial. Cassie Ventura is just one more case study that happens to coincide with this month's theme.

I thought I'd look into her story to see how many Red Pill principles are confirmed and if there might be anything else we could learn from it.

Left to Right: Dallas Austin, Britney Spears, Diddy Combs, and Cassie Ventura at a party in 2007. Image Source.

Basic Info

Casandra Elizabeth Ventura

DOB: August 26, 1986

POB: New London, Connecticut, U.S.

Ancestry: Mother is of African-American, Mexican, and West Indian descent. Father is Filipino.

Timeline

2000 (Age 14) – She started modeling.

2007–2018 (Age 21–32) – She was with Sean Combs (AKA 'Diddy').

2019 (Age 32) – Posts nude photos on Instagram.

2019/9 (Age 33) – Married Alex Fine, a fitness trainer, while 5 months pregnant.

2019/12 (Age 33) – 1st daughter born

2021/3 (Age 34) – 2nd daughter born

2025/? (Age ~39) – 3rd child expected

Cassie Ventura and Diddy Combs.

Controversy

2023/11/16 (Age 37) – Ventura filed a lawsuit against Combs alleging that he subjected her to a decade-long "cycle of abuse, violence, and sex traff!cking". Ventura claimed that there had been multiple instances of domestic violence ever since their relationship started (2007), and that this included a r@pe after she 'tried' to leave him in 2018. Combs' attorney Ben Brafman denied the allegations.

Note the word 'tried'. She had been in this abusive relationship for 11 years at that point, and she couldn't just pack a suitcase and move to another city. She was already rather wealthy via acting and singing, so $$$ was not a limiting factor.

The lawsuit was filed in the Federal District Court in Manhattan under the Adult Survivors Act. So here's a segue about that.

The Adult Survivors Act

2019 – New York extended the statute of limitations for sexual misconduct from 3 years to 20 years, but this extension was not retroactive.

2022/5 – New York enacted The Adult Survivors Act (ASA) allowing alleged victims of sexual offenses for which the statute of limitations had lapsed to file civil lawsuits for a one-year period, from 2022/11/24, to 2023/11/24. This act allowed plaintiffs to sue for sexual misconduct that occurred between 2002 to 2019.

With this legislation in place, Ventura could have filed a case against Combs at any time from the first incident (as early as 2007, according to her), up until 2023/11/24, but instead, she waited until 2023/11/16 — 8 days before the end of ASA to file her case. At that time, she was already married to another guy, Alex Fine, and had 2 kids with him.

Alex Fine and Cassie Ventura.

Settlement

Only one day after Ventura filed the lawsuit, the parties announced they had reached an agreement to resolve the case. They did not disclose the terms of the out-of-court settlement, but I'm sure it involved a large cash payout, probably in the millions.

2024/5 – CNN obtained and published a video of Combs grabbing Ventura, punching her, and then throwing her to the ground and kicking her in a hotel hallway on 2016/3/5. This led to Combs issuing a video in which he acknowledged the incident and apologized.

2025/5/12 – Ventura began testifying against Combs during the ongoing trial, detailing how she was subjected to abuse by him.

Obviously, Ventura is going after Combs' money more than anything. But what I don't understand is why the trial is continuing after they already reached a settlement. Paging Thedeti for answers. Is Ventura simply grinding it in as a parting shot? Is she trying to squeeze him for more $$$? Did the state or a Femin@zi party take up the case against Combs?

8 Red Pill Principles Confirmed

1. AF/BB, and in this case, trying to leverage Alpha Bux (AB) as well.
2. Ventura stuck the landing. She married an athletic trainer 4 years younger than her, with whom she will have three kids.
3. Ventura 'married' a man (Alex Fine) who was not her first, thus engaging in serial monogamy (loosely defined) which constitutes adultery (Coram Deo).
4. Ventura waited until the age of 33 to begin having children, well past her prime fertility window.
5. Cassie Ventura said she "put up with" weekly orgies for multiple years because she was so attracted to Sean

Combs. But in the trial, it came out that she was a willing participant in hundreds of these orgies, thereby making her an accomplice.

6. Ventura claimed to be r@ped by a man she had already been screwing for 11 years. At that point, they're essentially in a common-law marriage (Coram Deo), whether it's legally certified or not. Thus, the charge of r@pe is little more than an act of attention seeking, female control, money grabbing, and rebellion.
7. She waited for years after the fact before filing a case against her de facto husband, Combs, and only at the last possible chance.
8. She collected a large settlement from Combs (AB).

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Kardashian Fantasy (2021/5/24)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Envy (2024/1/24)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)
- Mediocre Tutorials and Reviews: Cassie Went To Freak-Offs While Dating Kid Cudi (2025/5/16)
- USA Today: Cassie alleges horrific abuse by Diddy. Why survivors see themselves in her story (2025/5/17)

Cassie Ventura posing nude, ca. 2019. Note the tattoo of Africa on her side.

Play is the Essence of Game

Jack · 21 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Play is the Medium of Charisma.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Game;
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes and/or 11:10 minute long video.

Intro

IMO, Dr. Orion Taraban is one of the leading voices of the Manosphere 2.0. His No Holds, No Frills takes on all things Red Pill, and his depth of insights on intersexual psychological phenomena is on par with ye Greats of olde. Best of all, much of what he says (but not all) is relevant to Christian Men.

Today I'll cover an excellent video from Taraban about a topic that hearkens back to Ye Olde Manosphere 1.0 — Game. Although this term has gone out of style (replaced by 'Rizz'), the basic concept is still very much relevant to masculinity … and always will be.

PsycHacks: Play is the Essence of Game: How to effectively seduce anyone (2024/11/1) Length: 11:10

Here's the transcript of Dr. Taraban's talk. [Emphasis, images, and section headers added.]

Play is the Essence of Game

I'm Dr Orion Taraban and this is PsycHacks — Better Living Through Psychology.

The topic of today's short talk is Play is the Essence of Game.

Now, when I say 'Game', I'm talking about game in the colloquial sense of the ability to effectively seduce. Game is the ability to win the game of seduction. This is something that many people, especially men, want to learn, and today I'm going to reveal the secret at the heart of this talent.

Now Game is often misunderstood. Sometimes, people think that Game is slightly ridiculous. It's gimmicky pickup tactics or tacky scripted exchanges. On the other hand, other people think that Game is dark and malevolent. It's 'Machiavellian' and manipulative in the sense that the man is attempting to satisfy his sexual desire at the 'expense' of the woman. Both of these expressions of Game do exist in reality. Let's not pretend that they don't. However, I think that both really miss the mark with respect to the heart of Game, which is play.

Playing at NOT Playing

So let's talk about play for a minute. Play also gets a bad rap. It's something that 'children' do, NOT "mature and serious adults like us". When it does occur, it's something silly or trivial, a bit of entertainment, or a fantastic interlude before we get back to the important business of life. We think that play only occurs during clearly defined periods of leisure, which legitimizes the time outside of those periods as NOT play. Ironically, playing at not playing is the most common and pervasive form of play there is. Unfortunately, most people are so identified with their play, they are so psychologically close to their roles, that they truly don't believe that they are playing and will become offended at the suggestion that they are. This is precisely why play is so dangerous and therefore effective in seduction. It's transgressive in the sense that it can alter a person's fundamental sense of reality.

What is Play?

Play occurs when a person succeeds in cultivating the perception of a separate reality within the overarching reality that is only accessible to the initiated in which the objects of play assume a special significance independent of their meaning in the overarching reality.

Case Study – Child's Play

Consider what a child does. Whereas you or I might just see a pencil, which perception will activate all of a pencil's attendant associations, a child might see a spaceship hurtling through the Cosmos on a desperate mission to save the Galaxy, and anyone initiated into that play will also see the pencil as a spaceship. The ability to cultivate that vision in another is the essence of play. Now, adults don't really 'see' the spaceship. They might play along with the child, but they usually can't really play with him, and because of this, they believe that, unlike the child, they exist in 'objective reality'. Don't be fooled. This is merely because perceiving a pencil as a spacecraft is a bridge too far for most adults. It's too overtly whimsical or ludicrous. On the other hand, if I were, say, to see you as you most desire in your heart of hearts to be seen, then you will likely join me in that shared reality. If, while most other people just see you as a person like any other, I were to see a ravishing beauty, or an unappreciated genius, or a spiritual Guru, or even just a capable adult, the temptation to join with me will likely prove greater than your capacity to resist — provided I can identify the right desire.

See Others as they See Themselves

The reason why this works is that most people secretly believe these things about themselves. Their vanity harbors the conviction that they are exceptional in some regard, and they must constantly contend with the ego injury of being surrounded by people who, in their own ignorance and self-interest, cannot recognize them as such. Meeting someone who sees them, not as everyone else sees them, but as they see themselves, means entering into a shared reality in which things are slightly more the way they believe they should be. It's meeting someone who also sees the spaceship. This is the essence of play, and it's a very seductive prospect.

See her as she sees herself, and sincerely play along with her, and you'll soon win her trust (if you can prevent yourself from breaking form and laughing). Once you have her trust, you can move on to do other things with her.

Serious Play

Now it's also important to keep in mind that the best play is *serious play. Like, when we watch a movie, we want the actors to take their roles seriously. If they were to break the fourth wall or step out of character, the illusion is shattered, and we can no longer be seduced into the world of the film. We may even be annoyed and ask for our money back. This is why the best seducers are sincere, and the next best seducers can feign sincerity effectively. That is, if you get the sense that I don't truly believe that you're a ravishing beauty, or an unappreciated genius, or what have you, and that I'm only playing along with your desired self-perception, like the adult who humors a child swearing the pencil is a spaceship, then the spell of seduction is broken. The play was too obviously play, which prevented you from getting swept up into the story. For play to succeed, it must be serious and sincere. That is, it must pretend it isn't play. This is what I mean when I say that people play at not playing, as this is the most effective, and therefore desirable kind of play. Of course, it's important to remember that even when you're playing at not playing, you're still playing.

You are NOT Who You Think You Are

No book can contain its own author, and no one else is who they think they are either. However, the vast majority of adults are about the business of playing at who they think they are, and doing so very seriously and sincerely to boot. This can create the appearance of constancy and reliability, which itself can be seductive to the right person. It's typically someone embroiled in chaos and drama, but it also generally demands the repression of those aspects of our personality that are antithetical to that stability. It's this repressed material that is seduction's favorite medium.

By remembering that you are not who you think you are, by remembering that you have been playing at not playing, you create room for yourself to maneuver, to express different dimensions of your personality as the situation warrants. This will help make you more flexible, adaptive, and ultimately effective in seduction as you'll be able to tailor your approach to the individual in question. And by remembering that other people are NOT who they think they are, by remembering that they are repressing aspects of themselves to maintain the illusion of playing at not playing, you embolden yourself to tap into those hidden desires.

Conclusions

Contrary to popular belief, most people want to be seduced. They're dying to be seduced! Without seduction and the promise of escape that play offers, life for most people would just be discharging an interminable series of responsibilities until they die. It would be a humorless obligation or a banal transaction.

Draw the other into a separate shared reality that reflects their vanities or repressed personalities, seriously and sincerely play at seeing the other as the other would like to be seen, introduce sexual interest at the right moment, and… Voila! You have the recipe for a successful seduction.

This is important to remember because it seems to me that many of the content creators speaking to men these days on intersexual dynamics are inordinately focused on the importance of being an 'Alpha Male'. It's not that these guys are wrong; expressing dominance and cultivating an Alpha presentation will absolutely help you get women. It's just not the only way to seduce, which is great news for guys like me who don't tower over their intrasexual competition. The greatest seducers in history, the Don Juans and the Casanovas, weren't underwear models with seven figure incomes. They succeeded NOT because they presented as hyper-masculine — in fact, that can sometimes be a liability — but because they were able to draw their targets into a separate reality in which the women in question believed they could be provided with what they most desired, and more than anything else, what most women desire most is an emotional experience. You do not need abs or a bank account to do this, my guys. What you need is the ability and willingness to play with meaning in a way that is emotionally relevant to a woman.

This, more than anything else, is the essence of Game.

[End of Taraban's talk.]

Jack's Note to Christian Men

If you are uncomfortable with Taraban's purpose of seduction, remember, getting women into bed is NOT the only benefit or purpose of employing Game, including the specific Game device of Play that Taraban describes in the video.

Game is also useful for being convincing, building trust with others, making yourself relevant, and smoothing social interactions.

Game can also be used to guide, nurture, and protect women from their own immature naïvety, indignant dissatisfactions, indiscretions, solipsism, and vulnerabilities, guarding them from any Satanic attacks on her mind, or the plunder of PUA types. This may very well be the main thing that keeps a wayward daughter out of trouble, or keeps a rocky marriage together during a rough patch.

Instead, think of Game as a framework for navigating social interactions and establishing trust. What you choose to do with this tool in your family, fellowship, ministry, or relationship is up to you.

More power to you.

Update

Ed Hurst has added significant insights to this topic.

Radix Fidem: Head-games Are Reality (2025/5/22)

Related

I've written extensively about charisma and Game from a Christian viewpoint.

- Σ Frame: Pick Up Game – Does it serve the needs of Men, or is it for Women? (2017/9/23)
- Σ Frame: Women want Game! (2017/9/30)
- Σ Frame: Introduction to Game Theory 101 (2018/2/11)
- Σ Frame: On the Authenticity of Appearance and Avatar (2018/11/21)
- Σ Frame: The Question Apology Game (2019/1/6)
- Σ Frame: Washing Her Clean (2019/10/21)
- Σ Frame: On the Spiritual Significance and Social Value of Game (2019/11/3)
- Σ Frame: Why does Game work? (2019/12/9)
- Σ Frame: On the Impact of Appearance and Avatar (2020/1/5)

- Σ Frame: A Revised Understanding of Game (2020/9/14)
- Σ Frame: Mood can be Hypnotizing (2020/10/16)
- Σ Frame: Game Theory 110 — The Prisoner's Dilemma (2021/3/3)
- Σ Frame: Not Trusting women is Deep Inner Game (2021/12/15)
- Σ Frame: Is Married Dread Game a transgression of marital vows? (2022/1/17)
- Σ Frame: Game is an invitation to Humility (2022/10/25)
- Σ Frame: Glorifying God through Spiritual Gifts (2023/3/27)
- Σ Frame: Glorifying God by Being Yourself (2023/3/29)
- Σ Frame: Rizz (2023/9/28)
- Σ Frame: Identifying Attachment Style is the New Game (2023/10/12)
- Σ Frame: Attachment Style and Game (2023/10/13)
- Σ Frame: Spigots and Sponges (2024/9/3)
- Σ Frame: Being Dominant vs. Being Domineering (2024/11/25)
- Σ Frame: The Virtue of Being Centered (2024/12/10)
- Σ Frame: How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23)
- Σ Frame: When everyone wins a prize, self-interest replaces intrinsic motivation (2025/6/11)
- Men Are Good (Tom Golden): The Forgotten Power of Unsupervised Play (2025/6/14)

AI has no Soul

Jack · 23 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Discerning the flawed human factor as an authentic virtue.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

AI Erases Creative Thinking

I've befriended an adult student who took one of my classes a couple of years ago. He shared this post with me on Monday (2025/5/19). (In Taiwan, Threads is more popular than Instagram or X.)

https://www.threads.com/@h_tomoyasu/post/DJocpBApOiI

It shows a video of a professor at the end of his wits, ranting about how his students rely too much on AI technologies to complete their assignments and even to generate communications in the class discussions online.

I have this problem too, with students using AI to produce work.

Taiwanese students are smart. They'll find all kinds of ways to complete the assigned homework in such a way that they can get the best results for the least effort,* even trying all kinds of new AI software to make their homework look so perfect and professional.

They think that creating a paper so perfect will earn them a higher grade. But that's not what I'm looking for. I'm looking for time spent in effort, genuine diligence, original work, and most of all… improving their skills in using English. Given their ability in using English as a second language, their AI assisted creations are as unnatural as a genuine creation by a human being is flawed.

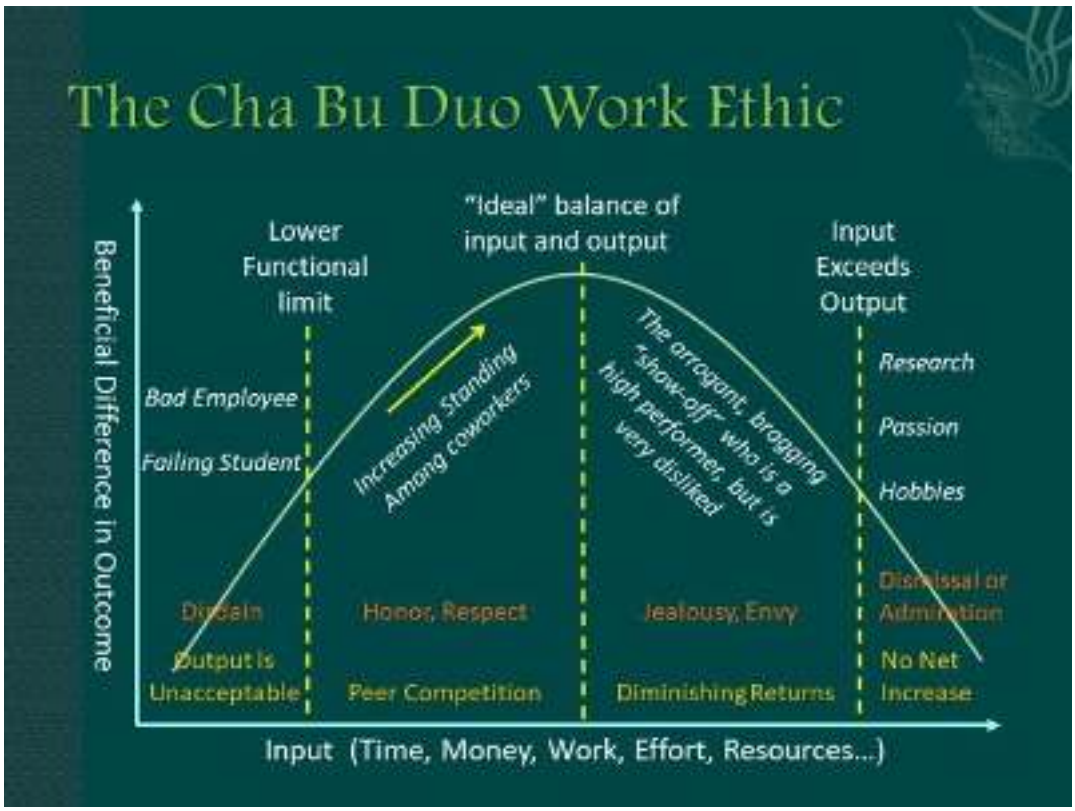
The only difference is…

AI has no soul.

In terms of English composition, it has no 'voice'.

Once you learn this, it is easier to detect fake but ostensibly perfect AI content.

 In practice, the Taiwanese consider it a virtue to balance input and output. There is a sweet spot called Cha Bu Duo (差不多). Cha Bu Duo literally means, "Not Much Difference", or colloquially, "Just About Right".*



Appearances can be Deceiving

As I was talking about this with my friend (the adult student), he told me a Chinese proverb.

> 道高一尺魔高一丈
> "The higher the virtue, the higher the evil."

It is also a subtle way to tell a smooth, suave, but deceptive someone, "You are evil."

I was surprised to learn this, because even though I'd never heard this Chinese proverb before, I've written something very similar on Σ Frame.

> "The substance of a man's virtue is also that of his vice."

It means every good trait has a bad side.

He was equally surprised to hear this and lauded me for my insights of human nature.

Wow…

I went on to tell him…

People who are very good-looking, smooth, suave, and put together well on the outside are a mess on the inside. They have to tie themselves into a knot in order to make a good presentation.

Like high-stakes salespeople. They look perfect during their sales presentation, but their personal life is a mess, filled with alcoholism, deceit, dishonesty, divorce, greed, sexual promiscuity, and so on.

On the other hand, people who are truly good on the inside (relatively speaking) tend to have some personal flaw, hang-up, quirk, or weirdness about them.

Christians are an example of this. They let all their badness out (e.g. rebellion, repentance, confession, etc.) as a way to have their soul cleansed.

It's the same for AI generated content.

I've also described this phenomenon in women.

Jesus Christ came in the flesh (1 John 4:2) — NOT in a sublime fantasy of dark perfection (although He was/is perfect).

The Need for a Revised Approach

That angry professor needs to reconsider his teaching methods and come up with some new approaches. Losing his cool in front of the class won't get his students to think. To them, that just makes him look like an old, raving codger who hypocritically tells students to learn while he himself cannot learn to adapt to the new technology and change with the times.

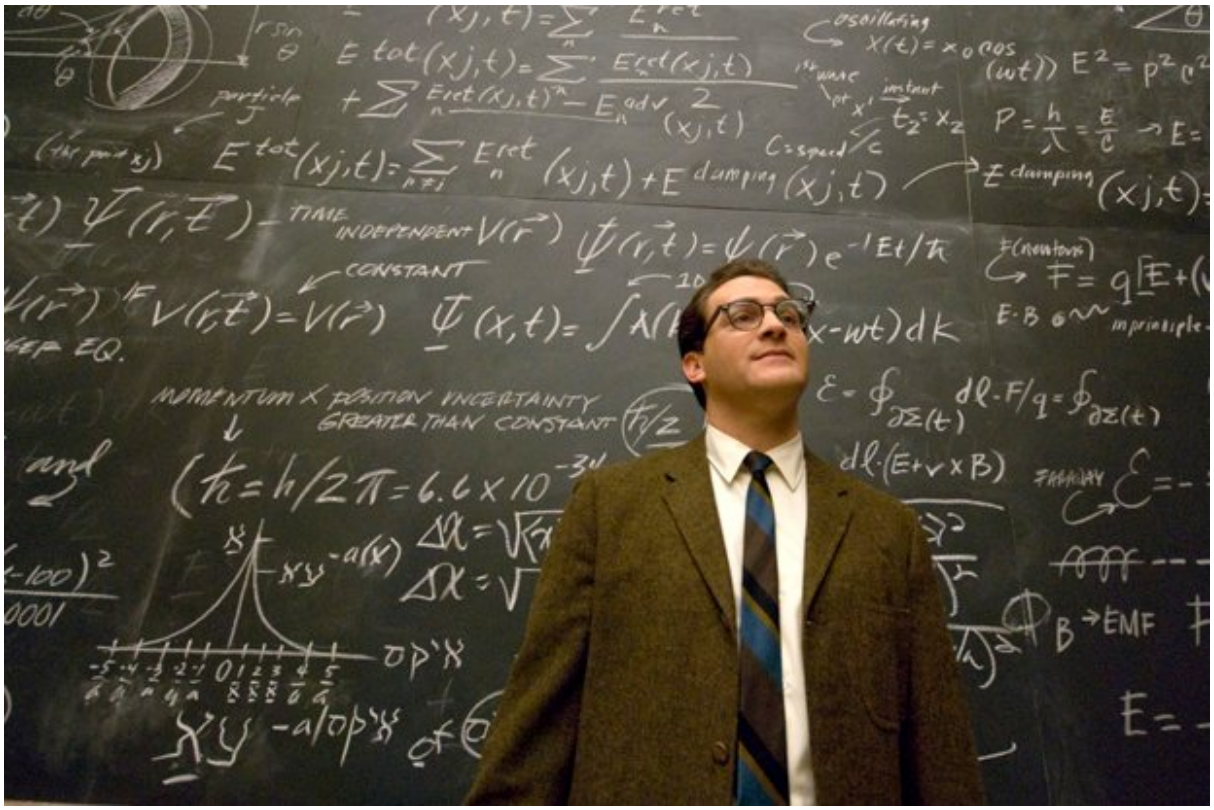
Now that AI is here, there's no going back. Anymore, a liberal education should include learning how to use AI effectively, and the limitations thereof.

AI's best suit (at the time of writing) is in compiling and summarizing information, but it cannot make truth judgments about whether that information is true, relevant, or applicable to a given context, nor can it make value judgments about how to interpret or implement that information. Thus, the old ways of critical thinking have not been made obsolete by AI, but are now of much greater importance — more than ever in this Post-Truth age.

Instead of having a nuclear meltdown over the hassles of 'change', professors need to demonstrate how humans are smarter than AI — because we have agency, dignity, purpose, and soul — and teach students the same attitude!



Teachers and professors need to come up with some innovative teaching methods that challenge students to think and learn — NOT despite access to AI technologies, but to properly implement the information overload that AI produces.

If old-school teachers want students to do some old-school style learning (i.e. original / Primary Thinking), then they need to improvise new strategies in teaching.

One way I deal with the possibility of students using AI is to change the requirements of the assignment so that they must do the work properly to get credit.

For example, I might ask for homework to be written with paper and pencil. This way, even if they use AI to produce the text, they must still go over it and learn it.

Another technique I use is to ask students to give me an oral summary of their work. In fact, direct verbal questioning is the best test method of all (AKA Walker's Principle [1]). This has been proven in a few studies.

An effective method and quality work incorporates the Soul into the product. This, AI can never do, as it has no Soul. It's time we stopped expecting such, or thinking that AI necessarily excludes it.

References

1. Walker, C. 1990. Large-scale oral testing. Applied Linguistics 11(2):200–219.

Related

- Σ Frame: If she loves you, then she'll be a pain in the @ss! (2022/2/23)
- Σ Frame: Being Good vs. Being Nice (2024/11/11)
- Σ Frame: Cultural Credentialism is Counterfeit Currency (2025/2/14)
- Σ Frame: The Evils of AI (2025/5/16)
- Σ Frame: The Sniff Test to Identify AI Generated Text (2025/5/17)

Signs of Life and Death

Jack · 26 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Cathodoxy is growing, while Evangelical Protestantism is failing abysmally.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Note: This post covers excerpts from an email discussion between Jack and a reader on 2025/5/11-15.
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Some Questions

A reader writes in.

> I recently came across your website while doing a search. You have some valid points about the current train wreck culture of ours.
>
> I'm a lifelong bachelor, not for any lack of good faith effort in my younger days, so it is what it is.
>
> Your bio says you're an Evangelical Christian.
>
> I'm a 67 year old man, and I'm a late-in-life convert to Christianity, being received into the Eastern Orthodox Church. Since C0V!D, my little Antiochian parish in [central plains, U.S.A.] has been bursting at the seams with growth, where we're adding an addition to accommodate this.
>
> The converts are all young men, then young families. Some were unaffiliated (Nones), some were atheists, some were pagans, but most are disaffected Evangelical Protestants. Same for the Greek, Russian, and Serbian parishes here, and all the Orthodox jurisdictions are seeing this across the USA.
>
> The TLM Roman Catholic parish, and the Eastern Rite Catholic parish here are seeing this as well.
>
> Seeing if you'd consider a (multi-prong) question?
>
> 1. Why do you think young men, and young families are fleeing Evangelical Christianity for Eastern Orthodox Christianity?
> 2. Why do you think young women are not coming to Eastern Orthodox Christianity so much?
> 3. What's going on with much of evangelical Protestant Christianity (e.g. turmoil, lashing out at others' faith communities, talk of a "crisis of masculinity" in their churches, etc.)?

Why Evangelical Protestantism is Shrinking

Welcome to Σ Frame. Glad you're getting something out of the blog.

To address your questions…

1. Why are young men, and young families fleeing Evangelical Christianity for Eastern Orthodox Christianity?

The long and short of it is because American Evangelical Protestantism (AEP) has, since the late 1980s if not earlier, rolled over to the wider cultural dictums, norms, and philosophies, with Egalitarianism and Feminism being the most egregious.

And … instead of reading the writing on the wall, Protestantism continues to revel in their affairs with Worldly ideologies. Even going so far as to reinterpret doctrine in a last-ditch effort to shore up the crumbling Big Eva block.

As a result, AEP is little more than an upper-middle-class, whitewashed microcosm of cultural Feminism, with religious rules and regulations added, making it even less appealing.

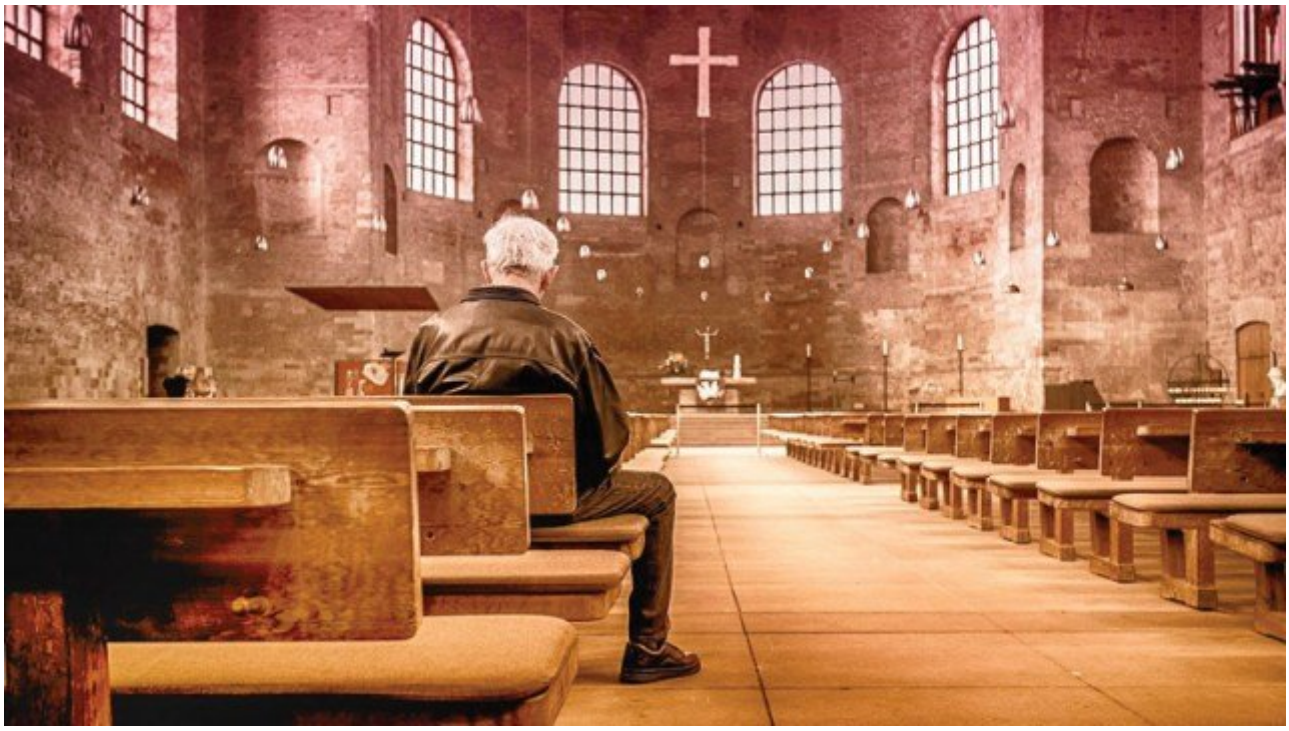
The reason why young men and families are fleeing AEP is because it is NOT a Christian environment in terms of the gender hierarchical structure. In this faux-nomered Christian environment, men are trained to be betas (whom women don't want), or else they're ostracized. Without strong Christian male leadership teaching and modeling Headship, women are given free reign to wreak destruction through a multitude of methods, and families fester and split, or never form.

All in all, this results in the attrition of men, especially the High SMV/MMV Men that women most desire.

The reason why young men and conservative families are attracted to EO is because EO endorses Headship, and fosters marriage and family formation, and Protestantism doesn't.*

All in all, this explains why most of the newcomers in your church are men, and why they leave AEP.

 There are a small number of AEP churches that are growing, and it is mostly because some of the leadership is Red Pill aware. Pastors Kevin DeYoung and Douglas Wilson come to mind. See here for more.*



2. Why do you think young women are not coming to Eastern Orthodox Christianity so much?

There's been a socio-political schism between men and women. Men are becoming much more conservative and women are leaning more liberal. (Aaron Renn and Ryan Burge have covered this phenomenon.) This trend shows up in church attendance, as more men are flocking to churches (as you observed), while fewer women are interested in church or even Christianity.

For those women still interested in church, their motivations are a little more complex.

The simplified RP model postulates that the more decent women gravitate towards social settings where there are High SMV men in leadership positions (Christian or not). Debased / Feminist women gravitate towards social settings where they can exert control and influence (i.e. where the men are weak). The vast majority of women are the latter.

Furthermore, since AEP undermines High SMV men and bows to gynocentric interests, decent women have lost interest in AEP, and debased feminist women (and simpy men) are running the show there — all under the whitewashed guise of religiosity, of course.

The reason why young women are not interested in EO Christianity is simply because it is too formal, too Patriarchal, and too structured for their Femcentric prerogatives. Modern women don't like this because they want cheap, easy, fast thrills, sexual license, and to avoid accountability and be affirmed instead. They are NOT looking for a stable social structure in which to form a family and settle down (at least, not before they reach the critical age of ~30).

This is why women usually leave the church when they go off to college and spend their 20s building a career. If/when they ever return, they are close to the Wall, spent, and worthless for marriage. So overall, there are fewer families forming in AEP churches.

Joining such a church would put immense pressure on them to abandon / repent of their Worldly Careerism and Feminism and buckle down to the domestic responsibilities of marriage and family. It would also hold them accountable for this, and modern women have a severely debilitating allergy to accountability and responsibility.

All in all, this explains for the most part why women are not coming to EO.

3. What's going on with much of Evangelical Protestant Christianity (e.g. turmoil, lashing out at others' faith communities, talk of a "crisis of masculinity" in their churches, etc.)?

The issues are vast and complicated. According to the Christian Manosphere, the hot-button issues concern Worldly ideologies (i.e. Feminism) manifesting in the church, and gender roles and relations, but there are many other hiccups surrounding authority / leadership, ecumenicalism vs. unity, marriage, and politics.

Here's a list of 35 posts on Σ Frame that cover many of the problems within AEP.

1. Σ Frame: Building Fellowship – The Problem of Disliking Each Other (2010/7/11)
2. Σ Frame: The Elimination of the Church (2020/5/29)
3. Σ Frame (Lexet): Frauds in Christ's Name (2020/10/12)
4. Σ Frame: Hitting bottom must be necessary. (2020/11/6)
5. Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Dissemination and Dissolution (2020/11/7)
6. Σ Frame: Complementarians are Effeminate! (2020/11/9)
7. Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Another Schism will Come (2021/10/18)
8. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): How Feminism Erodes Marriage (2021/11/8)
9. Σ Frame: Church shouldn't be an Elite Social Club for the Married (2023/6/2)
10. Σ Frame: Divided We Fall (2023/6/6)
11. Σ Frame: Apostolic Apostasy (2023/6/16)
12. Σ Frame: Ecumenical Translations (2023/6/18)
13. Σ Frame: Summary of Sex = Marriage vs. Church/State Sanctioned Marriage (2023/6/21)
14. Σ Frame: Meta Cognitions (2023/6/23)

15. Σ Frame: Synopsis of Sacramental Marriage (2023/6/25)
16. Σ Frame: The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)
17. Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
18. Σ Frame: The Slow Demise of Masculine Leadership (2023/9/1)
19. Σ Frame (Thedeti): Heads in the Sand (2023/11/3)
20. Σ Frame: Rewriting the Script for a Kinder, Gentler Feminism (2023/11/10)
21. Σ Frame (Thedeti, Jack): Skirting around the Skirts (2023/11/24)
22. Σ Frame: Strachan's Strafe (2023/11/25)
23. Σ Frame (Jack, TheDeti): The Sacred Cow (2023/12/1)
24. Σ Frame: The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)
25. Σ Frame: Double Bind (2023/12/8)
26. Σ Frame: Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church — Part 1 (2023/12/14)
27. Σ Frame (TheDeti): The Reality (2023/12/23)
28. Σ Frame: Summary of the W!tchy War on Masculinity (2023/12/27)
29. Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority (2024/1/10)
30. Σ Frame: Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church — Part 2 (2024/1/25)
31. Σ Frame: Overcompensation of Roles in Relationships without Roles (2024/2/12)
32. Σ Frame: Politicizing Evangelicalism (2024/8/22)
33. Σ Frame: Tells of a W0ke Church (2024/8/23)
34. Σ Frame: Which Churches have Sold Out? (2024/8/24)
35. Σ Frame: The Stronghold of the Beta Factory (2024/9/2)

Concluding Statements

Since the Christian Manosphere is presumed to include the better minds of AEP, as well as Catholicism and EO, many of the above issues have been debated in the Christian Manosphere from many different faith perspectives.

Of note, a few years ago, there were two Eastern Orthodox authors at the Σ Frame blog, NovaSeeker and Soup Sandwich. Soup Sandwich was cancelled and had to move abroad. He asked for all his posts to be unpublished. But all of NovaSeeker's posts are still up and you can search for them. We've had several discussions about why Protestantism is in turmoil and is shrinking, and why EO is growing.

There are (or were) many other bloggers in the Christian Manosphere who examined many of the problems within Evangelical Protestant Christianity (EPC) and contributed valuable insights, but there is one in particular, going by the name Dalrock, that deserves mention. He stopped writing in 2020, and his blog closed up last year, but it is archived here. I encourage you to read through his posts for more analysis. It's quite good reading.

To get the current scoop, you'd have to follow certain authors and read regularly to be fully informed of all the complexities. These blogs and literature tend to be unpopular. Many of the better sources are shadowbanned, and hard to find through search engines. See the sidebar for a list of these.

Related

- The Disntr: The Spiritual Damage Caused By the Rebellion of Women Preachers in the Church (2021/6/23)
- Σ Frame: Deti on Female Accountability (2022/1/25)
- Σ Frame: Agency is Anathema to the Female Fleshly Nature (2022/12/7)
- Σ Frame: Female Agency – An Elusive Induction (2024/3/30)
- Σ Frame: Review: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men into Boys (2025/3/10)

The Failure of "Christian" Dating Apps/Sites

Jack · 28 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Evangelical Protestant women are working dating apps like secular women, but with moar demands.

Readership: All; Single Men
Theme: Validation
Note: This post covers excerpts from an email discussion between Jack and a reader on 2025/5/11-15.
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Orthodox Christian Men Turn to Online Dating in 2025

A reader writes in about the difficulties that single young men in the Eastern Orthodox Church (EO) are facing when trying to find an EO wife.

> Jack,
>
> "With this large influx of young men coming into EO, and them being serious about their faith, and living the sacramental life of the church, about their only options are networking within the Orthodox jurisdictions (including traditionally Orthodox countries), or finding a Trad Roman Catholic or Eastern Rite Catholic girl willing to convert. Both methods are kind've "a roll of the dice"."

Faced with a paucity of options, many single EO men are turning to dating apps/sites in the hopes of finding an EO spouse.

> "Young men in my parish have resorted to using them. They've shared their experiences with them, and have showed me profiles and dialogue they've had with young women. Most [of these women] state they're non-denominational Christians. Per your analysis, many have a more progressive view on social issues. "I want the right to have an abortion" or "I want full access to Uncle Sam's welfare harem"."

> "…these Christian dating apps are rampant with "DIY church of me" Christology … from mostly Evangelical girls; however a few EO or RCC girls pop up on the radar who are W0ke and are certainly sketchy too.
>
> The big issue is these Evangelical girls will not convert under any circumstances, and to my priest's point (and all the other priests I've addressed this to), and my purview as well, it's a fool's errand going down that path."

Case Study 1

> "Case in point, there's a site called "Orthodox and Single". 10 years ago, a young (Evangelical converts) couple met on it, married in the church, and have 4 small children with a fifth child on the way."

10 years ago (toward the end of what I'll call 'Stage 1', see description below), people still went on formal "dates", and dating apps/sites were still not a bad place to meet people, even Christians.

Case Study 2

> "A couple of years ago, one of the young guys encouraged me to go onto the site, which I did. I completely forgot that I was still active. About a month ago, a 40 something, basic, never married woman hit me up twice. She stated she was politically liberal, she liked gospel music, and she evidently attended a non-denominational Evangelical church. I declined twice. At 67, the shenanigans, and the risk aversion, are too strong."

This was in 2023, the beginning of 'Stage 3' in the decline of dating apps/sites. (See my analysis in the next section below.)

Case Study 3

> "One of my godsons (35) finally landed a dinner date with a 28 year old woman after being on these sites for over a year. Not only was this young woman W0ke, but she came at him with the obligatory "works and traditions of men" idolatry, and the "Do you know without a benefit of a doubt that you're saved? If you died tonight and stood before God what would you say?" spiel. The young man popped for dinner, then hoofed it. Later, he received an email wanting payment of $300. He told her to take a hike, then blocked her.
>
> Other young men in my parish have encountered this, trying to extract money from them. Back in the day, we called this extortion and pr0st!tut!0n.
>
> My Syrian priest tells the young men that these are liberal women, and tells them to stay off these dating sites. I agree 100%."

This was in 2025, well into 'Stage 3'.

The fact that your godson actually landed a real date from a dating app indicates that he's top 5%, or else the woman was < 3. That means there's hope for him to find a decent woman for marriage, IF he knows where to look (NOT dating sites/apps).

Jack's Summary of Dating Apps/Sites

> "Have you written anything about these so called "Christian" dating apps (more like heathen dating apps)?"

The Σ Frame blog has several posts that cover dating apps/sites, but not specifically "Christian" dating sites. (It is assumed that "Christian" dating sites are not much different from secular sites.)

Here are a few. You may find others by following the pingbacks.

- Σ Frame: DTF Cupid (2017/12/17)
- Σ Frame: Crunching the Tinder Whoard (2019/9/20)
- Σ Frame: Yet Another Variety of Internet Wh0ring (2019/10/9)
- Σ Frame: Tinder Translations (2020/7/29)
- Σ Frame: Exploiting Online Attention (2020/12/9)
- Σ Frame: The Learning Psychology of Women who participate in the Online Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/13)
- Σ Frame: Cultural Influences (2021/5/5)
- Σ Frame: The New Red Pill for Online Dating (2022/2/21)
- Σ Frame: Rowena Breaks Down Female Attraction (2022/8/31)

My executive summary of dating apps/sites is as follows.

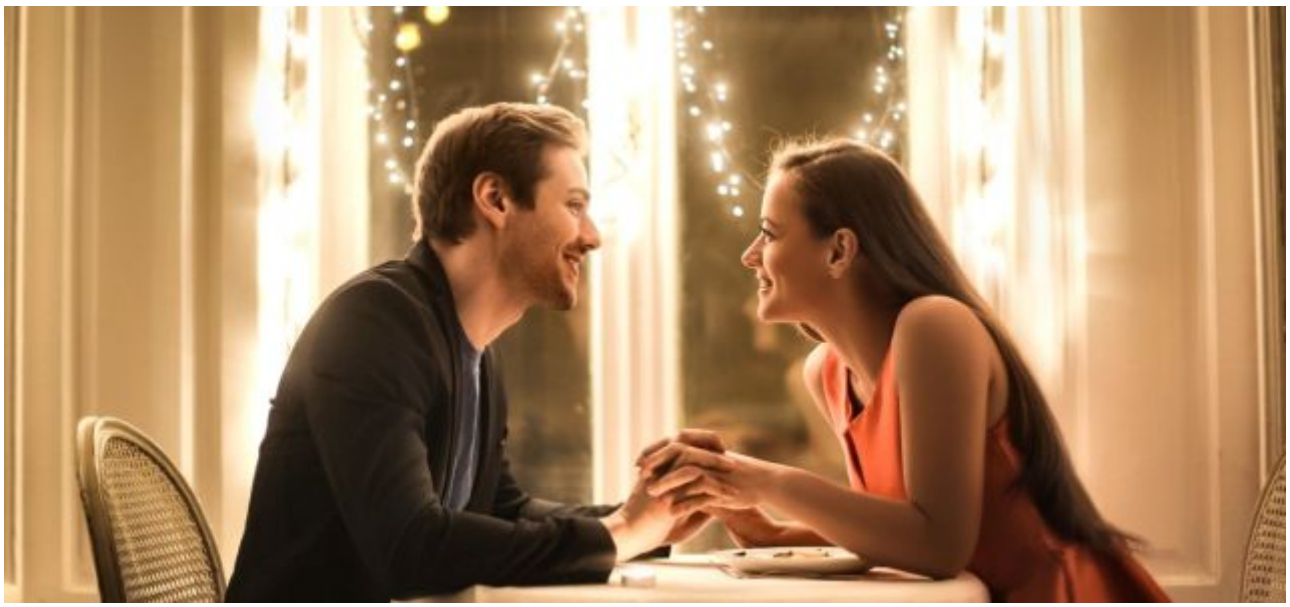
First of all, the highest quality women cannot be (and could never be) found on dating apps/sites, because they have plenty of good opportunities IRL to choose from.

Stage 1

Between ~2004-2016, dating sites were a good way for men to meet chicks, even Christian girls. In general, the women appearing on these sites came in one of the following flavors.

1. Women who were NOT meeting men IRL for some reason (e.g. geographically displaced, family situation, living in a rural area, work schedule, etc.).
2. Embarassingly immature, emotionally dysfunctional, Personality Disorders, psychos, sociopaths, etc.
3. Disfigured, handicapped, maimed, or sterile.
4. Foreign girls looking for Western men.
5. Fatties, Social Weirdos.
6. Divorcees, Widows.

Of course, a man still needed to be selective, but at least it led to real dates with real women. I met several GFs and my wife on Christian Café and OKCupid during this time. (Both wives fell into categories 1 and 4, and I suspect probably 2 as well. Heh. Or maybe AWALT.)



As time went on though, the overall quality of women declined. Female arrogance, disrespect, and indignant entitlement grew. In response, lower SMV men backed out, and the higher SMV men who were still shredding pork got lazy and non-committal, eventually leading to a bust in Stage 2.

Stage 2

From ~2016 to ~2022 (depending on locale), dating sites degenerated into hookup rolodexes for women (NOT men). Top 5% men could reliably depend on them to get laid IF they knew how to create an impressive profile and were proficient in Text Game, but could not expect an LTR because of the quality of women there. (Again, higher quality women don't use them, don't need to.) Non-Top 5% men got absolutely nothing out of them. NOTHING.

Towards the end of this period, women started posting all their crusty PSAs online (i.e. TikTok), revealing themselves to be branch swinging, gold-digging slores, and thereby proving all that The Red Pill had said about women over the past decade.

Stage 3

Since ~2022 (again, depending on locale), dating sites continued to function as hookup rolodexes for women. But by this time, women's expectations had skyrocketed to the point where women were ONLY going for 6-6-6 types and were fully expecting the man to spend hundreds of dollars on them on a single date night. Most men, including many of the high SMV men that all the women were taking turns on, had wisened up to the game, got tired of spending $$$ on entitled flaky women who ghosted them later, and were backing out. This led to a crunch where women began saying, *"Where are all the good men?"

Again, nominal Christian women on these sites are not much different from their secular peers, except that they are more selective, they attach religiosity to their expectations and qualifications, and they might wait a few more days to put out for a Ch@d who can convince her that he's a born again believer.

 Kay Hymnowitz introduced this phrase in 2012. By ~2017, it became a social media trend, and it really took off ~2023.*

Related

- Σ Frame: Deti on Female Accountability (2022/1/25)
- Σ Frame: Agency is Anathema to the Female Fleshly Nature (2022/12/7)
- Σ Frame: Female Agency – An Elusive Induction (2024/3/30)
- Σ Frame: Review: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men into Boys (2025/3/10)
- Stage in the Sky: Online Dating Apps: How I Found and Vetted My Wife (2025/4/6)

Finding a Wife from an Orthodox Country

Jack · 30 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

To what extent are you willing to go to find a wife?

Readership: All, Eastern Orthodox Men;
Theme: Validation
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

In response to the reader (Tubal Cain) who wrote to me about the large influx of single young men — but NOT single young women — into American Eastern Orthodox churches, resulting in a sex imbalance…

I have some ideas for the young men in your parish who are looking for wives.

Idea 1 — Refine Online Searches

Many Eastern European countries have a surplus of EO women — genuine EO too. They're also more traditional and pretty too (i.e. NOT fat).

There are a few matchmaker sites serving EOs specifically, and maybe some others.

- Christian Café has a function for Orthodox singles.
- Christian Dating For Free (advertized as the largest)
- Coptic Meet (an Apple app)
- Meet and Right
- Orthodox and Single (reported by the reader to be fruitless lately)

The men could narrow their search (or set their location) to one of the countries on the list in the next section below, and see what they can find.

Anyway, it's worth checking out.

Don't forget to pray about it first.

Russian Orthodox

Idea 2 — EO Selective Passporting

Better yet…

Young single EO men might consider traveling to a foreign country that is predominantly EO, spending a few weeks or a season there, perhaps even finding a job, working the local social scene, and see if anything happens. Of course, he would need to scout for a church having lots of single young women, choose one church to attend regularly, and go there every time the doors are open to maximize his chances.

Once there, I would guess the best way to go about it would be to have a private word with a friendly pastor / priest, and tell him his purpose for being there is to find a wife. An empathic pastor / priest could then vet him on the basics, and then put him in touch with the right people very quickly, or else tell him there are few opportunities or little chance of success. (In this case, he can find another church.) Upon receiving the pastor's / priest's blessing, he should work on developing a good rapport among a social network of older married men in the church, preferably those with eligible daughters.

Of course, it's going to be more expensive and laborious to meet and marry a foreign woman, and there will be an inevitable culture shock as well. But I'm sure you could find more and better options than what young American men are finding locally.

Anyway, it's worth a shot, and you get to travel too.

Don't forget to pray about it first. You might get some guidance from Above.

Romanian Orthodox

Idea 3 — Spearhead a Cooperative Matchmaking Program

Here's another, much better idea, but also one that requires directive actions from leaders in the church.

EO Pastors, Priests, or Directors of Outreach and/or Evangelism could search for EO congregations in these countries (see list below) and contact them directly (via email or snail mail and follow up by phone or Zoom). I suggest you briefly explain the paucity of faithful young women in American EO churches, and then propose a cooperative alliance aimed to help suitable young men and women match up.

If/when cooperation develops, a group of single men could fly to partner churches, stay there a few weeks, attend those EO churches, and meet the young women and their families in person, hopefully leading to some engagements.

If a strategically targeted approach is too overt to be acceptable to an objecting party, then a subtler approach may curb false hopes, ease anxieties, and produce more realistic expectations. Perhaps calling the endeavor a 'Mission Trip' or a 'Sabbatical' (or another more appropriate label) would do.

Latvian Orthodox

This would provide a very ideal way for men to meet eligible mates and their families (as well as other EO communities) under the watchful guidance of wise elders. Overall, it offers greater assurances and less risk for all involved. Even if the initiative did not lead to an engagement for some of the young men, it remains an excellent character and faith building experience.

Bonus: If a church has such a program, you can expect a lot more young men to come beating on the doors of the church, asking (or begging) to join the program. If it results in a satisfying marriage for them, they'll swear allegiance to the EO church on a stack of Bibles.

For this reason, it might be wise to limit such a program to long-standing members of good repute, perhaps even setting forth a list of qualifications, including the completion of catechism, a clean record, good health, and a minimum income / wealth, and/or home ownership. Cooperating churches in foreign lands should also have a comparative set of qualifications for women, such as being healthy, fertile virgins between the ages of 18-25, and a BMI under 24. These qualifications can be placed in writing to ensure transparency, quality control, and mutual trust.

List of Eastern Orthodox Countries

There are 14 Countries that have an Eastern Orthodox majority.

Country	EO%	# EO
Moldova	93.3%	3.2M
Transnistria	91%	460,000
Greece	90%	9.4M
Cyprus	89.1%	781,900
Eritrea	86.5%	3M
Serbia	84%	6.1M

Georgia	83.4%	3.1M
Belarus	83.3%	7.8M
Romania	81.1%	16.3M
Montenegro	81%	510,000
North Macedonia	69.8%	1.6M
Ukraine	65.4 – 76.6%*	27.8M – 34.8M*
Bulgaria	63.5%	4.1M
Russia	61.8 – 72%*	101.5M – 104M*

 Source estimates vary.*
 Transnistria is a breakaway province of Moldova that is not internationally recognized.*

Greek Orthodox

Noteworthy Non-Western Countries with an Eastern Orthodox Minority

Country	EO%	# EO
Ethiopia	43%	36M
Kazakhstan	23.9%	4.3M
Egypt	0.3 – 10%*	350,000 – 3.9M*
Bosnia and Herzegovina	31%	1.1M
Kyrgyzstan	3.5 – 17%*	206,000 – 1M*
Uzbekistan	5%	1M
Latvia	13.3 – 17.9%*	245,000 – 370,000*
Lebanon	9%	330,000
Turkmenistan	5.3%	270,000

Estonia	13.7 – 16.5%*	188,000 – 226,000
Croatia	3.3 – 4.4%*	128,000 – 196,000*
Albania	4.8 – 7.2%	116,000 – 174,000
Armenia	**	**

 Source estimates vary.*
 97% of Armenians are Christian, but only 0.25% (7,500) are Eastern Orthodox.

Notes

Racial Selection

- Black EO men seeking a Black EO spouse may find one in Egypt, Eritrea, or Ethiopia.
- Asian EO men seeking an Asiatic EO spouse may find one in Eastern Russia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan, or Uzbekistan.
- All the other countries listed above are predominantly White.

Eritrea is the only country in Africa with a Christian Majority. Females aged 20-24 are 9.8% of the female population, about twice as much as most other countries listed above.

Ethiopian Orthodox

Latvia and Ukraine have a severe shortage of men. Latvia has one of the lowest sex ratios in the world at 0.85, and Ukraine, due to casualties of the ongoing war against Russia, leaving a surplus of women who, I imagine, are desperate to find foreign husbands given their situation. However, from what I have seen and IMLE, Ukrainian women are very Westernized, i.e. Feminized and liberal minded, and are thus more prone to going AWOL once brought to the U.S. Not sure about Latvian girls. There could always be exceptions, though.

Closing Thoughts

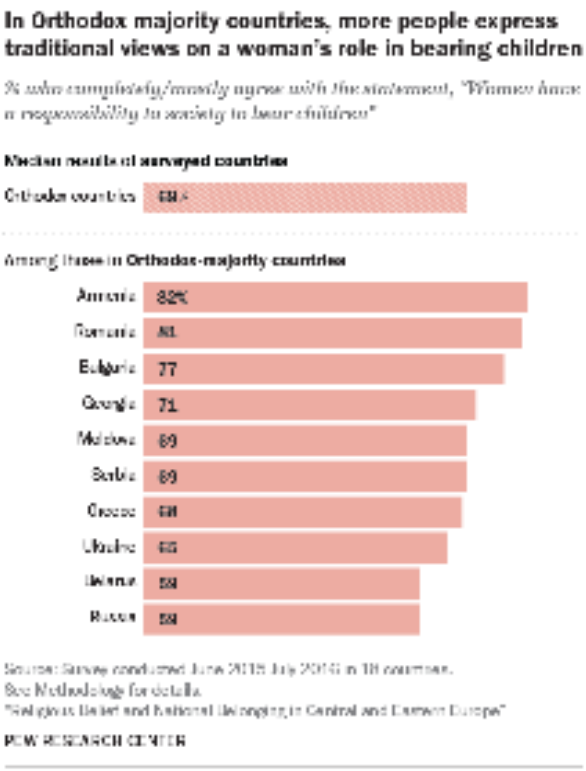

Image Source: Pew Research Center: On gender issues, many in Orthodox Christian countries have conservative views (2017/5/16)

The above population statistics are merely a pilot study — just what I could piece together in a day, so there may very well be some errors or omissions regarding the real conditions on the ground.

If feedback indicates there is a serious interest in this, then I will do some more research to ascertain which type of EO is predominant, and other cultural features of these countries to find out which places are the most promising.

Readers are welcome to suggest other countries or leave comments about anything they might know about a particular country.

Sources

- Wikipedia: Eastern Orthodoxy by Country
- World Population Review: Eastern Orthodoxy by Country 2025
- World Atlas: Countries With The Largest Orthodox Christian Populations
- Foreign Policy Research Institute: Russia's Influence in Africa: The Role of the Russian Orthodox Church (2024/10/15)

Related

- Σ Frame: Patriarchy is the Default Context (2021/6/2)
- Σ Frame: Headship Authority Takes Work (2022/8/12)
- Σ Frame: The Challenges of Moving Towards Headship (2023/4/5)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part I (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: Selecting Markets for better Market Selection (2024/2/9)
- Σ Frame: Jumping through Hoops (2024/8/30)
- Σ Frame: The Importance of Family and Community — Part II : Vetting (2024/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community — Part III : Patriarchal Mate Selection

(2024/9/26)

- Graphs About Religion (Ryan Burge): Pews vs. Passports: Who's Leaving the Country—and Who Isn't (2025/10/9)

Why is Headship more Important than Religious Affiliation?

Jack · 2 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The fulfillment of a mandated purpose.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Headship or Hell

Signs of Life and Death (2025/5/26) stated that the most obvious reason why many young men, single or married, and conservative families are leaving American Evangelical Protestantism (AEP) for Eastern Orthodoxy (EO) is because EO endorses Headship, and fosters marriage and family formation, and Protestantism doesn't.

Of course, this is not the only reason, just the most obvious one that is most pertinent to the interests of young marriage- and family-minded men.

Apparently, some netizens cannot understand why young American men are drawn to Eastern Orthodoxy and why Headship is important enough to switch churches.

In response, Joe2 wrote,

> "Those leaving the AEP church for the EO church for the reasons mentioned above are shortsighted because they fail to address or be concerned about the differences in beliefs between the two churches. And the differences are huge."

Of course, Joe2 is correct about the huge differences, but I disagree with his assertion that the said reason is shortsighted and that these men are entirely blithe or carte blanche about doctrine.

Orthodox vs Protestant

The largest difference is that EO has a monolithic Apostolic Authority and all that comes with that, as opposed to Protestants' heritage dating back to "keeping up with the Jones".*

If we look at other differences and delve deeper into the theology, we find more reasons why EO is more attractive to young men than AEP.

Things that are emphasized in EO liturgy / theology, and missing in Protestant liturgy / theology.

- Liturgical Structure.
- Reverence in worship.
- Family / Marriage Friendly.
- Structure, order, and rules are imposed.
- A long historical heritage dating back millennia.
- Theosis, offering a roadmap of Christian Mystic Faith.
- Women are encouraged to be wives, mothers, and homemakers.
- Condemnation of cohabitation, divorce, promiscuity, sodomy, "alternative lifestyles", etc.
- Strict adherence to the tenets of the faith, guarded by principled men who remain true to biblical truth when under pressure.

Things that are emphasized in Protestant liturgy / theology, and missing in EO liturgy / theology.

- Man bashing.
- Sinner Friendly.
- The Beta Factory.
- Toxic Masculinity.
- Crazed entitled wimminz.
- Male Utility / disposability.
- Converged / Diluted theology.
- A strong emphasis on scientism.
- Hyper-liberal Feminism / Gynocentrism.
- Celebrating Divorce and single motherhood.
- Women are encouraged to be independent careerists.
- Complementarianism / Egalitarianism / Servant Leader stuff.
- The lukewarm, wishy-washy, compromise with secular culture.
- Ethics are strategized to support gynocentrism / W0kery (e.g. altruism, chivalry, compromise, inclusion, male utility, male disposability, even "love and forgiveness", etc.).
- Hip and cool rock show / worship service complete with stage lights and fog machines; grungy long-haired tattooed groupies playing bongo drums and electric guitars, and singing "Jesus is our boyfriend" songs.

 A more serious exposition on the historical origins of Protestantism is given here. It's a history that is NOT discussed for some strange reason.*

The Influence of Fellowship

Continuing Joe2's comment.

> "Basically, they seem to believe that structure, i.e., Headship, marriage and family is what church should be about while teachings and beliefs are fluid. Those come with the territory, i.e., AEP or EO and are either of little importance or are irrelevant.
>
> Thus, church becomes kind of a social club."

News Flash: Church IS a social club — one hopped up on eternal spiritual metanoia. One of the main purposes of church is to provide regular fellowship within a community of other Christians, as well as worship and teaching.

If fellowship is NOT important, then instead of rubbing bare shoulders with the bimbo bamby career gals attending Mark Driscoll's church (or another AEP church similar to this), why not stay at home on Sundays and have your own family service / Home Sunday Schooling!

Oh yeah, dat would be 'work' — we iz NOT suppozd to do dat on da Black Sabbaoth.

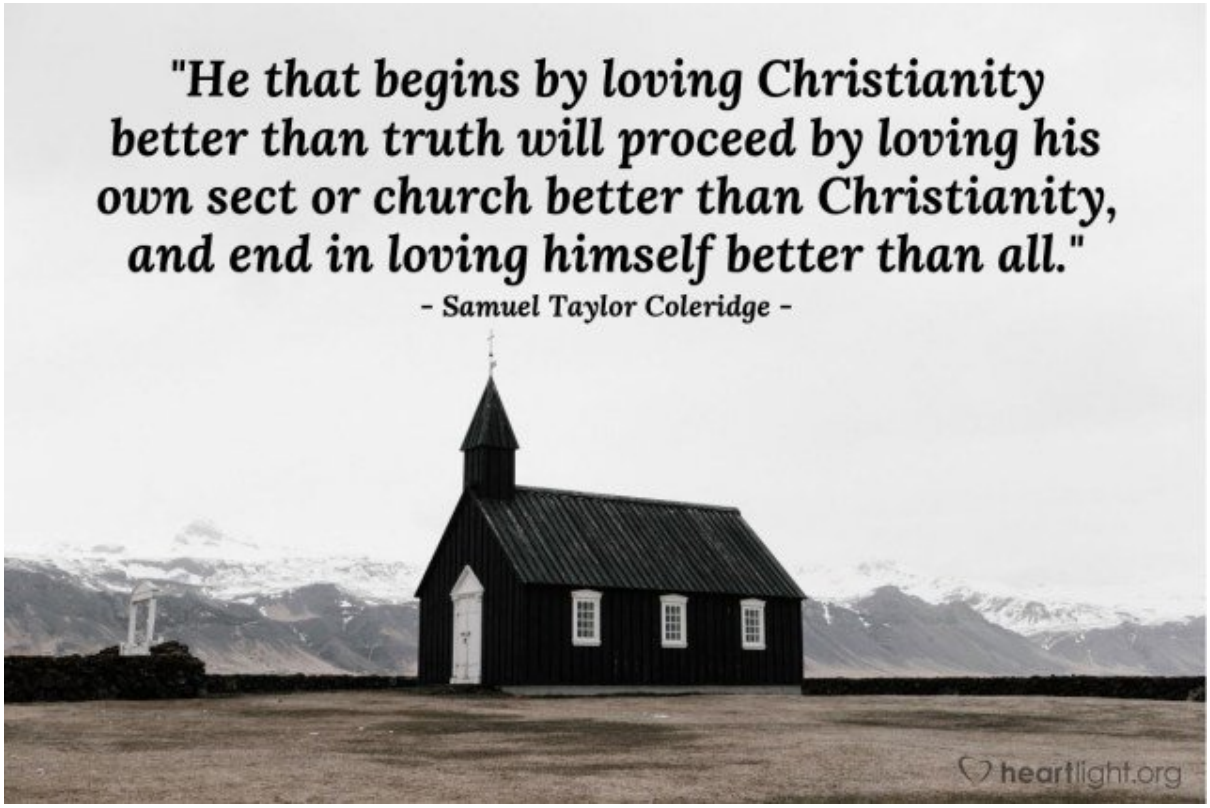
Form vs Function

Concerning the emphasis on structure, i.e., Headship, marriage, and family, I would argue that marriage and family are even more foundational and more important than active church attendance or any fine-tuned (but not major) doctrines held there. I mean, if your family is a dysfunctional mess, or your wife is a Stiletto Dilettante, then joining a church that has more Biblically sound teaching is only going to provide a band-aid and a sting of Merthiolate on your broken leg. It's much better to nip the source of apostasy and rebellion in the bud — one's upbringing, as shaped by loving Christian parents who are "still" cohabitating on weekends (or NOT). A Miracle of Love!

Even if you consider the major doctrinal differences… Look around you. Protestantism is famous for its emphasis on precise knowledge of scripture (and justly so), but you won't see it practiced, except during the early morning Lip Service on Sunday. Instead, you'll find adages about social justice, uppity Jesus Karens and zany wimminz who rode the carousel in their youth, single mothers, female pastors turned OnlyF@ns, Man / Husband / Father bashing, 'Servant Leader' lectures, and divorce rates that compare with the wider secular culture. And more. Maybe worse. And no one cares about any of this — except that you 'fit in' and not ruffle any hen feathers.

Buhut … ackshually, they're riiight about 'Free Will' … so you say. Heh. So what?

Self-controlled obedience trumps correct doctrine. Walk beats talk. Truth whomps spoof.



Gynopotheosis

As an exploration of the intersexual power dynamics prevalent in AEP, consider what the historically revered Christian Manosphere sages, Feeriker, Lexet, and Thedeti observed.

Feeriker said,

> "Most "Christian" women would convert to Islam, Buddhism, Wicca, or even Satan worship in a heartbeat if a sufficiently "hawt" Chad who is a member of one of these cults caught their eye and ignited their tingles."

Lexet said,

> Most church women I know who married married a person from outside the church entirely or from a different denomination."

It's true. 26% of married U.S. adults have a religious identity that is different from their spouse's.

TheDeti said,

> "Most Christian women don't want to date men they attend church with. Most Christian women look to men outside their churches.
>
> Know why?
>
> 1. They can get more attractive men outside church; and…
> 2. They can have sex with those attractive men without being (or feeling) judged for it.
>
> They're still tossing their "Christian sexual morality" straight out the window.
>
>
>
> I can't say that's "most" church women. It's a lot, though. I know many married Christian women whose husbands don't attend church. A few are nonbelievers or are Jewish or Muslim. But most of them are Christian men or claim to be; but simply don't come to church.
>
> One or two women I know in "ministries", especially music or "worship leaders", are married to men they identify as nonbelievers.
>
> Of course, when I look around churches, I fully understand why women don't want these men. Most of these men are hopelessly unattractive. I don't even know what else to say about them."

This is not to say that women are neglecting their faith convictions in choosing a man (although I believe many of them do), but that AWALT. Nor does it mean that Christian men are utter failures in this respect (although many are, sorry to say).

The whip of the tail has multiple fact checks, which regular readers are already familiar with.

1. Men are emasculated by the church, the courts, and the culture.
2. Women are very sensitive to power dynamics and have an instinctive ability to sense where real power lies.
3. AEP church boys forfeiting power for any reason is an act of simpery that higher quality women won't tolerate, and ugly feminists will duly exploit.
4. Deep within women's loins, faithful to the feeelz, a man's defacto power trumps his religiosity. AWALT.
5. Women are drawn to High SMV men — addictively, like twerking @ss cheek behemoths to the Fun-F_ckery flames of hell. (Sorry for the crass Roissy-style language, but it needs to be abundantly clear.)

6. Women are the weakest link in the cords that bind a marriage together.
7. Sexual Authority is absolutely necessary for a defacto Headship.
8. Religion, doctrine, liturgical structure, etc., has nothing to do with the feminine heart's Tinglegasmic throes (and woes) of Hypergamy.

It is what it is. Adjust or Bust.

OR … join a church that defines the authority structure along God's ordinances and Be Free!

In summary, the larger problem that can be most effectively addressed is institutional in nature — the structure of the church itself, and how well it fosters Headship (i.e. male authority) and thereby supports godly marriages and families.

Whether that church is Catholic, Orthodox, or Protestant matters less, IMO. As long as it's not Buddhist, or Musl!m, or Zoroastrianism, etc. It just so happens that EO is the only sect that reliably does this at present. And the word is getting out among young American men.

Conclusions

Thanks to the Christian Red Pill, the secrets of having a solid family / sociosexual / spiritual foundation are no longer a secret. That secret is Headship Authority.

The Magic Power of EO that draws all young men asunder is that…

- Men who join the EO church are assigned the trait of dominance by association, yea, by definition, with or without a woman in MGTOW.
- It 'requires' that all women who join the EO church, must regard men / husband as their defacto structural Heads, by doctrinal precept. Amen!
- This structural 'filter' screens out all women who disagree with Headship. Hallelujah, Amen!
- Women who choose to be EO must acquiesce to EO men / husbands, or else they cannot get 'IN' with honors.

Young husbands who are smart will get their wives / families out of compromised American Evangelical Protestant churches,* mega-churches, non-denominational churches, and most mainline Protestant churches (Episcopalian, Methodist, Presbyterian…)* because of the conflagrancies that I wrote above and also in Signs of Life and Death (2025/5/26). Yea, even some branches of the Catholic church have become Femcentric and W0ke.

Let thy Headship dominate thy church fellowship, brethren! And spur ye one another on!

 Not all Protestant churches are converged. See here for a few that aren't.*

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Dissemination and Dissolution (2020/11/7)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): What is the Authority of the Bible, and why is this Important? (2020/11/12)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Protestant vs. Cathodox (2020/11/20)
- Σ Frame: The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)
- Σ Frame: Which Churches have Sold Out? (2024/8/24)
- Σ Frame: Fiddler on the Roof : A Parable of Progressivism (2024/11/4)
- Σ Frame: Expectation vs Experience (2025/5/2)
- Σ Frame: Signs of Life and Death (2025/5/26)

Explaining the Male Trend towards Conservatism vs the Narrowing Gender Gap in American Religion

Jack · 4 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Making sense of the data.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Trends in Religious Identification

Signs of Life and Death (2025/5/26) covered a reader's testimony of young men and young families leaving American Evangelical Protestant (AEP) churches to join his Eastern Orthodox (EO) church. Based on screenshot evidence he has provided to me, I estimate his parish has received about 3 new converts a week for the past 5 months — all young men and their families if married.

In response, fellow blogger Derek L. Ramsey has written a post that addresses the current attrition of AEP and whether the EO church is actually growing.

Derek L. Ramsey: Church Attendance (2025/5/27)

DLR cites statistics from Gallup and Pew to conclude that…

> "According to Gallup, the secular decline in church attendance is actually being led by Cathodoxy, with Catholic and Orthodox attendance falling by the greatest amounts among those who identify with a particular faith or denomination."
>
> "According to Pew, the decline in "Protestant / Christian" is being driven by falling attendance in the Mainstream (non-evangelical) denominations:"
>
> "Declines among Catholic and Mainline Protestant denominations account for most of the total decline in religious identification within Christianity in America. On a per-capita basis, the declines are even more notable. Mainstream denominations like the Episcopal Church, the Presbyterian Church (USA), the United Methodist Church, and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA) are among the biggest losers, having lost millions.
>
> In fact, evangelical-style "nondenominational" and "nonspecific" churches have actually seen an increase over time. These are the only Christian denominational categories to see an increase."

DLR interprets this to mean…

> "The clear trend in American Evangelical Christianity is not an abandonment of evangelical theology. Rather, it is an abandonment of institutionalized Christianity. The institution of the "church" as an organization, establishment, or business entity has failed in many different ways. The evangelical church is growing where this institutionalization is being replaced by a new focus on the church qua church.
>
> This isn't to say that the evangelical churches are healthy. They are still in decline on average (and with respect to the growing population). But their decline is not as steep as that seen within Cathodoxy and Mainstream Protestantism."

He goes on to write that EO lost fewer attendees during the C0V!D lockdown compared to all other Christian congregations. Looking into this further, I learned this is because most EO churches refused to close their doors during lockdowns. A good stand!

The Gender Divide

Upon seeing the reports from Gallup and Pew covered by DLR, we might question why we hear/read so much about young men being more religious and the growth of EO. (See articles under Related for examples.) It is explained when we understand that DLR's analysis covers broad demographic trends, while the more sensational coverage of young men gravitating towards conservatism, religion, and Cathodoxy is specific to age and sex.

There is a grand shift occurring. Let me explain.

The article from Pew that DLR cited has a section entitled, The narrowing gender gap in American religion. Here, Pew cites a news article from Slate stating that among the youngest Americans (18-24), men are more religious than women. However, Pew's data indicates that people are becoming less religious overall. But while women continue to report higher levels of religious affiliation, belief, and practice than men do, women are losing interest in religion at a faster rate than men are over time, leading to a narrower gender gap in religiosity, especially among younger people.

When we put all that into perspective, all the reports that young men are more religious than young women begin to make sense. Put simply, young women are more feminist than ever, while young men, although still very liberal, are upsetting a 4+ generation trend towards ever-increasing liberalism to take a hard Right towards conservatism and religion instead.

Meanwhile, AEP is having a hard time of it. Apparently, in spite of all the church's compromises with cultural feminism, AEP is still too sex!st for women (e.g. many churches bar women from leadership positions), and yet because of these compromises, the church is too Feminist (i.e. anti-male) for young men. This gender divide is essentially why the late Tim Keller and his protégés spearheaded a revision of the church's doctrinal stances on Complementarianism (which nevertheless remains a heresy).

DLR speculated on the future of EO with regard to this topic.

> "Given the ideological divides found in every denomination, it wouldn't shock me to see a schism within the Orthodox over the next couple of decades between the old guard of the Orthodox and the new masculinity-focused crowd."

I doubt it, or at least it won't be nearly as divisive or heated as what we're now seeing in Protestantism. The reason is because the 'old guard' Orthodox has always been Headship / masculine-centered, or at least, much more so compared to other denominations, including Catholic. This is precisely why the "masculinity-focused crowd" (i.e. young men) are identifying with Orthodoxy. IMO, given the options, they are to be commended for choosing Orthodoxy instead of Isl@m or 'None'.

Correlations

The end of DLR's article shows four maps of the U.S.: Divorce Rates, locations of EO churches, the concentration of Southern Baptist (SBC) churches, and IQ of all things.

The maps of Divorce Rates, SBC churches, and low IQ all had high concentrations in the Southern U.S.

DLR didn't offer much of an explanation of why he included these maps, except to conclude…

1. "…a lot of this data on religious observance is statistically confounded."
2. "Evangelical Protestantism in America is not doing so bad compared even to the Orthodox…"

Hey dude! SBC is THE most outstanding Evangelical Protestant church in America, and it is correlated with divorce as shown in DLR's maps and also by several other metrics (covered by Dalrock). I don't see how DLR can say "Evangelical Protestantism in America is not doing so bad". Numbers don't mean health. Heh. Again, correlations like this are exactly why young men are fleeing AEP for EO.

DLR's inclusion of IQ among the correlating maps gave me the impression that he is labeling Southern Baptists as Divorced-crazed idiots. He never explicitly said so in writing, but I would agree that this label is truthish. Ask me how I know.

To flush these correlations out in more detail…

- Higher rates of divorce correlate with lower IQ.
- Protestant churches have higher divorce rates than Cathodox churches.
- The convergence of SBC with cultural feminism is an unholy union that fosters more divorce.

Furthermore, these correlations provide strong incentives for intelligent young men to leave Protestantism for Cathodoxy.

Related

- Dalrock: Whistling through the graveyard? (2012/6/25)
- Pew Research Center: Q&A: Why Millennials are less religious than older Americans (2016/1/8)
- American Survey Center: Why Young Men Are Turning Against Feminism (2023/12/14)

- Axios: America's youngest voters turn right (2024/9/28)
- The New York Post: Young men leaving traditional churches for 'masculine' Orthodox Christianity in droves (2024/12/3)
- The Gospel Coalition: Is Eastern Orthodoxy the Next Big Thing for Young Men? (2025/1/7)
- Σ Frame: Finding a Wife from an Orthodox Country (2025/5/30)

The Role of the Church in 21st Century America

Jack · 6 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Jack's Prognostication for Religion in America.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Note: This post expands my previous comment.
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

The Current Doctrinal Debates

In the past, Catholics, Orthodox, and Protestants did not engage in open debates very often. But since 2021 or so, there have been an increasing number of debates between Catholics, Orthodox, and Protestants.

There are dozens of individuals on all sides participating in these debates, but the following names are noteworthy.

- Scott Hahn — Profile (Catholic)
- Matt Fradd — YouTube (Catholic)
- Trent Horn — YouTube (Catholic)
- Jimmy Akin — YouTube (Catholic)
- Taylor Marshall — YouTube (Catholic)
- Craig Truglia (Orthodox)
- Jonathan Pageau (Orthodox)
- Jay Dyer — YouTube (Orthodox)
- Andrew Wilson — YouTube (Orthodox)
- Fr. John Whiteford — Profile (Orthodox)
- Gavin Ortlund — YouTube (Protestant)
- Cliffe Knechtle (Protestant) and Mihret Melaku (Ethiopian Orthodox) had a debate over transubstantiation.
- Father Patrick Ramsey (Orthodox) does not have his own media platform, but he frequently engages in noteworthy debates, e.g. Erick Ybarra (Catholic), Gavin Ortlund (Protestant), William Albrecht (Catholic) and many others.

Ultimately and almost predictably, these debates come down to the question of Apostolic Authority, which is the most outstanding difference in these theologies. Evangelical Protestants only know Sola Scriptura. Reformed Protestantism has doctrinal stances on all the Solas, but tends to stick with Sola Scriptura and seldom discusses the others. Catholics follow Sola Ecclesia. Orthodox blends Sola Ecclesia and Sola Scriptura, and is broadly informed of the other Solas and how they play out in theology.

Father Patrick Ramsey

At present, from what I have seen, Orthodox are completely destroying Catholics and Protestants in these debates. Catholics because they stubbornly insist on Catholic doctrine (true to Sola Ecclesia). Protestants because they can only argue within the framework of Sola Scriptura. Once they realize that Orthodox can come up with multiple arguments based on different Solas, their eyes glaze over, and they fold.

As it is written,

> "The ability to consider and navigate multiple viewpoints at once is essential part of having a strong Frame. The person who has the wider angle view than anyone else involved will typically have the dominant Frame."

These debates are, as of right now, in their philosophical infancy, but are quickly gaining traction. Many of these debates have already received millions of views.

The Confluent Reformation

More debate and discussion between the Christian sects will occur, increasing the general awareness of their doctrinal differences.

As this awareness grows, those who are religiously astute will…

- Speak on behalf of doctrines and traditions held by their respective churches.
- Refer to the differing doctrines and scriptural interpretations embraced by each sect as stand-alone arguments to be discussed and reviewed.

The less religiously astute will…

- Assign stereotypical sectarian labels.
- Continue to parrot creeds and precepts that gloss over the respective beliefs.
- Use theological terms and phrases that are only useful within one's own faith tradition.
- Continue to rely on the old interpretations of doctrine that have been produced by the outstanding fathers of one's own sect / denomination.

- Resort to clumsy, poorly informed, and nonspecific references to the doctrines of an opposing sect / denomination.
- Be regarded as doctrinally obtuse chumps.
- Consistently lose debates.

Pastor Cliffe Knechtle and son, Stuart.

Over time, the heavily politicized emphasis on sects and denominations will slowly fade away.

We are already seeing this happening.

- There is an increasing amount of debate and dialogue between Catholic, Orthodox, and Protestant ecclesia and laity.
- The Protestant churches that are prospering are hosted by pastors who've taken the Red Pill.
- The Catholic churches that are thriving are doing their own thing, more or less independent of the Vatican.
- Concerning the Orthodox churches, the past few posts here at Σ Frame have explained how EO has become more relevant to young men and young families, and is growing quickly.

The next generation will NOT hold prejudices against a church because it is NOT their own familiar version of Catholic / Orthodox / Protestant, as past generations have; but instead, people will judge a church by the quality of people who attend there, and especially the collective societal and macroeconomic accomplishments of those who grew up there.

Where sectarian discrimination might still exist, it will be regarded as a theosophical dinosaur from the 20th century that continues to linger and lumber.

Instead, churches will only be known by…

1. Their reputation for their demonstrated and lived-out faithfulness to the Word of Truth.
2. The lovingkindness and liveliness of their congregations.

As it should be.

Val Bure and family.

The Role of the Church in 21st Century Society

I can foresee the future of Christianity in America being comprised of essentially two types of Christian churches, which I'll call the Patriarchal "Do it Right" church, and the sinner-friendly "FAFO" church.

The Patriarchal "Do it Right" Church

The better, more reputable, and more doctrinally faithful group of churches will be ultra-conservative churches that emphasize Patriarchal Headship, marriage, and family formation.

For those who need an explanatory or evo-psyche reason, it is simple.

- Churches that don't foster and support strong families are NOT going to have future generations to pass their traditions on to.
- Churches that do not affirm and support the authority, dignity, and value of men will not be able to retain the male breadwinners, champions, movers, and shakers of society.
- Churches that do not produce family-minded, feminine, supportive, and submissive women will not have viable wives and mothers to birth and raise future generations of the faithful.
- People who grow up in a church with the above qualities are more likely to carry their faith into adulthood.

The Sinner-Friendly "FAFO" Church

Culturally compromised churches will still exist in large numbers, but they'll be relegated to the societal role of a fallback Plan B for late-in-life converts who have a "born again" experience (or a "Waking Up to the Wall" experience) after forfeiting their prime childbearing / family formation years on dissipation, foolishness, and sin. Ministries will continue there, but they will be sinner-friendly, NOT family-friendly. The churches of this variety that do not accept or recognize their societal and spiritual role as the down-and-dirty cleaner-uppers, moral custodians, and evangelistic saviors of the dysfunctional vagabonds of society will not survive.

Related

In June 2023, I wrote several posts examining Catholic, Orthodox, and Protestant theologies in the context of marriage. A list of these posts is here.

- Σ Frame: Ecumenical Translations (2023/6/18)
- Σ Frame: Politicizing Evangelicalism (2024/8/22)
- Σ Frame: Tells of a W0ke Church (2024/8/23)
- Σ Frame: Which Churches have Sold Out? (2024/8/24)
- Derek L. Ramsey: Church (2025/5/19)
- Derek L. Ramsey: Church Attendance (2025/5/27)
- Σ Frame: Why is Headship more Important than Religious Affiliation? (2025/6/2)

Grok's Manifesto of Hypergamy

Jack · 7 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

For those who feign that it's not already clear, even AI gets it.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

In Hypergamy Interlude (2025/6/4), Derek L. Ramsey wrote,

> I encouraged Jack (or anyone else) to produce a definitive "Manosphere Hypergamy Manifesto" so I can respond to that directly.

OK.

I'm honored that DLR thinks I am the penultimate authority about Hypergamy, although I'm not sure I truly am.* I think the reason why DLR is petitioning me with this request is because what has already been written about hypergamy by those more expert than I, Dalrock, Deep Strength, Rollo Tomassi, TheDeti (AKA Redacted on DLR's blog), et al. is apparently too opprobrious, or too unacceptable (or too convincing) for DLR. But I'm familiar with DLR's writings well enough to know that he's NOT just too lazy to go read, nor too dim-witted to understand. Instead, I believe he is lavishing extravagant efforts to obfuscate this fundamental Red Pill concept because he cannot bring himself to admit the uncomfortable implications thereof that are faced by many men. He's also entertaining himself by trolling everyone.

Moreover, if DLR cannot accept what the Red Pill godfathers have written about Hypergamy, then he probably won't accept anything that I could write about it either.

So I decided to get a summary of Hypergamy from the Grok AI.

As a basic principle of honest and truthful writing, I don't use AI to produce writings for Σ Frame. But in this case, the value of using Grok is that it is based on what has already been published online, and it stands independent of my own personalized interpretations of the subject.

So I went to Grok and wrote,

> "Write a Manifesto of Hypergamy based on writings from the Manosphere."

[Begin text output from Grok. Formatting retained. Images added by Jack.]

Preamble

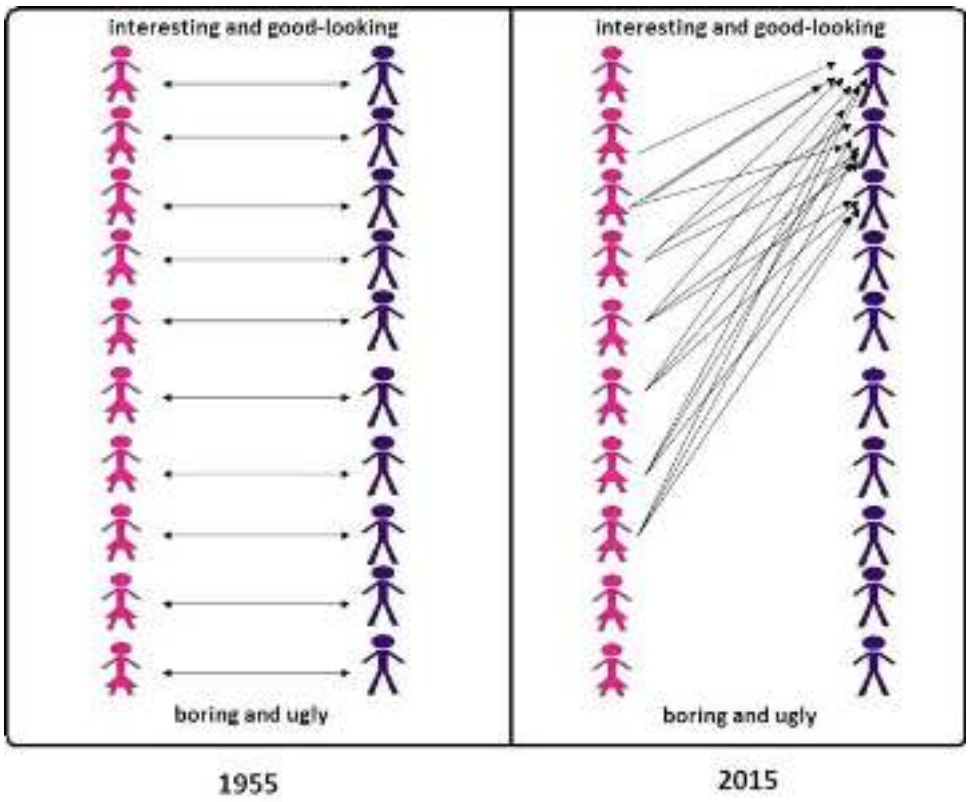
Derived from the collective insights of the Manosphere, this manifesto articulates the principles of hypergamy, a concept central to understanding modern mating dynamics. Hypergamy, the instinctual drive of women to seek partners of higher status, resources, or value, shapes relationships and societal structures. This document distills these ideas into a clear framework, grounded in observations from Manosphere writings, emphasizing biological, social, and psychological realities.

Core Principles

1. Hypergamy as a Biological Imperative

Hypergamy is rooted in evolutionary biology. Women, as primary caregivers historically, seek partners who can provide security, resources, and genetic fitness for offspring. This instinct drives mate selection toward men perceived as “higher value” in status, wealth, or dominance.

- Key Insight: Hypergamy is not a choice but an innate predisposition, hardwired to prioritize survival and reproduction.
- Implication: Men must understand that attraction is tied to perceived value, not equality, and strive to embody traits that signal superiority in competitive environments.



2. The Hierarchy of Value

Hypergamy operates within a hierarchy where men are ranked by their ability to provide and protect. Status, confidence, physical fitness, and resource acquisition are primary markers of value.

- Key Insight: Women instinctively compare men against the best available options, often subconsciously, seeking the “alpha” traits that signal dominance and security.

- Implication: Men must cultivate traits like ambition, resilience, and social dominance to remain competitive in the mating market.

3. The Dualistic Nature of Female Attraction

Hypergamy manifests in a dual strategy: securing a high-value provider for long-term stability (beta traits) while seeking genetic fitness through short-term attraction to dominant, high-status men (alpha traits).

- Key Insight: The tension between “provider” and “lover” archetypes creates a dynamic where women may prioritize different traits at different times, often leading to dissatisfaction if one partner cannot fulfill both roles.
- Implication: Men must balance strength and stability, avoiding the trap of being solely a provider or a fleeting attraction.

4. The Marketplace of Relationships

Modern society amplifies hypergamy through increased female autonomy, economic independence, and access to high-status men via technology and social platforms. The sexual marketplace is now global, intensifying competition.

- Key Insight: Social media and dating apps create an environment where women can access a wider pool of high-value men, raising expectations and reducing tolerance for perceived “low-value” partners.
- Implication: Men must differentiate themselves through self-improvement, social savvy, and unique value propositions to stand out in a crowded market.

5. The Consequences of Unchecked Hypergamy

Without societal or cultural constraints, hypergamy can destabilize relationships, leading to higher divorce rates, serial monogamy, or dissatisfaction. The pursuit of “better options” can undermine commitment.

- Key Insight: Modern freedoms have removed traditional checks on hypergamy, such as social stigma or economic dependence, leading to fluid and often unstable relationship dynamics.

- Implication: Men must maintain frame, set boundaries, and avoid pedestaling women to mitigate the risks of hypergamous instability.

6. The Male Response: Self-Sovereignty

The antidote to hypergamy's challenges is male self-improvement and sovereignty. Men must prioritize their own value, purpose, and independence, refusing to derive worth solely from female validation.

- Key Insight: A man's value is not inherent but earned through discipline, competence, and resilience. Hypergamy respects strength, not entitlement.
- Implication: Men should focus on building wealth, physical fitness, social skills, and mental fortitude to align with hypergamous instincts rather than resent them.

Call to Action

The Manosphere's teachings on hypergamy are not a lament but a blueprint for action. Men must embrace the reality of hypergamy, not as a barrier but as a challenge to rise above mediocrity.

- For Men: Invest in yourself relentlessly. Cultivate traits that command respect and attraction. Understand that hypergamy is not personal but universal.
- For Society: Acknowledge hypergamy's role in shaping relationships without judgment. Foster structures that balance individual freedom with stable partnerships.
- For Relationships: Build dynamics where mutual respect and clear boundaries align with natural instincts, creating partnerships that endure hypergamous pressures.

Conclusion

Hypergamy is neither good nor evil—it is a force of nature. The Manosphere's wisdom lies in its unflinching recognition of this truth. By understanding and adapting to hypergamy, men can forge lives of purpose, attraction, and resilience, navigating the modern world with clarity and strength.

[End text output from Grok.]

Overall, it's not a bad summary of Hypergamy. I was expecting something much more culturally converged, or gynocentric, or W0ke. I don't completely agree with all of it. Some of it could be rephrased better, and I think the accurate parts should be embellished with more pertinent and relevant details for the sake of clarity. But I'm mildly surprised that AI gets the main gist of it, while DLR cannot.

But there it is, doubter Derek, the Manosphere patriarch who denies being a Manospherian, and a patriarch, and even Patriarchy itself, as well as the sexually gluttonous behaviors of those women who subconsciously lust for the Tinglebations of unrestrained Hypergamy.

Let's start with this.

 I had to inject some arrogant "gladhanding", so that LastMod will have something to gripe about and won't be disappointed with his derision of the Σ Frame blog.*
 For a BAD example of an AI generated description of Hypergamy, see this article.*

Related

- The Rational Male: The Abdication Imperative (2012/5/30)

- Dalrock: The ubiquitous frame of hypergamy. (2012/6/3)
- Σ Frame: Aristocratic Hypergamy (2021/5/4)
- Σ Frame: Guilt is a Motivator for Women's Hypergamy and Desire for Status (2025/4/7)

Examining the Effects of Masturbation

Jack · 9 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A Reader's Testimony of Flogging the Log.

Readership: Men
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders; The Gift of Singleness;
Author's Note: This essay was submitted by a contributor who wishes to remain anonymous. Some parts omitted for brevity. Minor editing for readability. Formatting, images, links, and section titles added.
Length: 8,200 words
Reading Time: 44 minutes

Reader's Note: This post is about 8 times longer than average. It is rather engaging, but if you'd rather not spend 44 minutes reading this, then skip down to the last two sections, Results and Jack's Conclusions, which will only take about 3 minutes of your time.

Thanks for reading Σ Frame~!

Introduction

Earlier this year, Jack wrote about masturbation. There were four concepts I took away from those posts.

1. Masturbation has different effects on different men, generally either positive or negative.
2. Some men cannot function without ejaculating (so if he does not have a woman, he must masturbate), while other men function better when they do NOT masturbate.
3. Jack urged men to be aware of which type of man they are, and to know how masturbation affects them personally.
4. Jack suggested that men could talk about masturbation more freely.

This got me thinking about myself, and eventually, it became a 4 month "experiment".

Here, I'll give you the details and what I learned about myself, anonymously of course because of the sensitive subject matter, but I believe other men can benefit from reading it.

Background

In my youth, I was definitely the type of man who Literally. Could. NOT. Function. without coming once every few days at least. If I did not have a girl available, it was P0rn and jerking. P0rn and jerking affected my spirit much worse than fornicating with girls did. I think this is because self sex was always laced with lust and frustration, while real sex wasn't, or not nearly as much. I believe I also came to be a better man through the experience of these relationships.

Although fornication was good for me personally (or at least the better option), I knew from the Bible and later The Red Pill that I was damaging these girls' lives. But for me, it had to be F_cking or jerking — and either way, it wasn't good.

From 1 Corinthians 7:9, I believed marriage would get me past this stumbling stone, improve my relationship with God, and enable me to do right by the women I would have otherwise fornicated with. So I married. I think it has, but not without many other troubles, as Jack wrote about in one post. But overall, I think it was worth the trade-off.

For most of our marriage, my wife and I had sex 2-3x a week, but for the last two years, only about 2-3x a month on average. Lately even less.

Part of this is because my wife is nearing menopause, and her mood swings are very … [obstreperous]. Sometimes she is very randy and aggressive about initiating sex, and other times she evades my advances, sometimes for weeks. All said, she is not very consistent with lovemaking. I am understanding of this, and I try to be patient with her.

I was diagnosed with an enlarged prostate five years ago, and since then, I've noticed my desire for sex has decreased. My performance has also flagged. I used to be able to stay up for hours and produce a large volume 3-4 times in succession before my refractory. Now, I'm doing good to stay hard long enough for her to come.

Analysis

Now returning to Jack's challenge, I wasn't sure which 'type' I am anymore, given my present situation. So along Jack's suggestions, I decided to examine my sex life and see how it affects my mood and spiritual life.

The first thing I noticed was that whenever my wife and I haven't had sex in a while, I am angry, anxious, bitter, impatient, and easily annoyed with her. It is also hard for me to sleep at night. I wake up in the night, and I cannot go back to sleep. I've also noticed that it is about 3 to 5 days with no sex for these effects to show. My irritability and sleeplessness are very annoying to her, so overall, it is an aggravation in our marriage.

I told my wife that I need sex more regularly, regardless of how she feels about it. In response, she has usually come through for me — for a while — but then she'll 'forget' about it and go back to her old habits of making excuses and 'postponing' to a later time, but it never happens — it is a soft refusal. After this pattern happened many times, I grew tired of reminding her. I do not like to beg her to play, because this makes me angry. If I have to beg or pressure her for sex when she doesn't want it, then I won't have any satisfaction come of it and neither will she. It is frustrating when I have not come for weeks.

After reading Jack's posts, I saw that I need to retain myself and keep my life together, whether or not my wife is accommodating my needs or not. But … I wasn't exactly sure what my needs are anymore. So I decided to experiment with masturbation, per Jack's advice. This thought made me feel like a teenage boy once again.

Track Record

It began after I read your posts on Loneliness in January, specifically how companionship and sex or 'nutting', or the lack thereof, can affect a man.

First, I recalled some things that happened since the beginning of this year to have a historical pattern and see where it was going.

Here are my daily accounts. [The days of the week are given as XMTWRFS.]

2025/1/2 R — I had a successful day at work that brought me positive attention from my female coworkers. One young woman talked with me very excitedly for more than an hour. While we talked, I imagined F__ing her.

2025/1/3 F — Wife was angry at me for sleeping later than she did and not taking her to work. I felt frustrated, and I jerked off with p0rn in the afternoon. Later in the day, I met a church brother to play ball and pray together. It made me feel better.

2025/1/4 S — I prayed for my wife. God told me He will protect and provide for me. This was good to know, because wife went on a wild rage rampage.

Pattern: Success + Female attention + Angry wife –> P0rn and masturbating

---

2025/1/8 W — I did not jerk off since Friday, and I did not look at photos of women for the last two days. I did not miss it at all, and I was glad of myself because of it. In fact, I enjoyed being preoccupied with other activities that I did not notice it. But today was one of those days that dragged too long. It was difficult to work. I felt restless. I could not be focused. I could not do what I had intended to do today. I was able to resist looking at p0rn, but only barely.

I prayed about what I was experiencing, and God said I felt lonely because of my wife's inattention to our marriage. My need for love and affection gnaws at me. (Interesting, because this was before Jack wrote about loneliness.)

I prayed about it more, and I knew that on those days I felt better, I got out of the house early in the morning, and I did something (other than just taking wife to work). I went to the gym early in the morning and then went to work 20 minutes earlier, and this was an effective routine. On my days off, I cycled or jogged through the park. Another day, I went to a famous local bakery… I should be more disciplined about doing something like this every day.

Pattern: Stay active, stay busy –> Takes my mind off loneliness –> Easier to resist P0rn and masturbation

---

2025/1/11 S — Wife has been on a rage streak for more than a week. She improved today, and I hoped we would have sex in the evening. But after I came home from the church fellowship, she had regressed. She was so angry! She threw my phone across the room, and cracked the Gorilla glass [screen protector]. I was very angry with her too, because I was disappointed.

2025/1/12 X — Wife did not talk to me all morning. I felt angry and frustrated. Masturbated at noon after we got home from church. Wife knew it, but she did not care.

2025/1/13 M — I decided to have counseling with my Pastor this morning, but I completely forgot about it and missed our appointment. I cannot even think! Very poor performance at work today. I feel exhausted and unmotivated from wife's emotional roller coaster. I was distraught, so I called my brother and had a prayer with him.

2025/1/14 T — Last night, I had a dream in which I witnessed an orgy (but I did not participate). Wife is in an unusually pleasant and affectionate mood today, but still not interested in sex. I still feel physically tired and spiritually exhausted with her anger and mood swings, but not as much as yesterday. I jerked off to help myself relax and focus on my work. I did feel more comfortable, but I still did not get much work done today.

2025/1/15 W — I had a dream in which I watched college students drinking and fornicating in their dorm rooms. (I did not participate.) Some of the women in this dream were women I had laid with years ago.

Pattern: Wife is angry for many days –> Wife recovered and gave me hope –> Wife regressed –> Drama and emotional rollercoaster –> Need to masturbate

Also, the dreams relieved my frustration.

2025/1/25 S — Had a tumultuous argument with the wife in front of her family. Her mother took my side and chewed her out to the third degree. Then she changed her tone.

2025/1/26 X — Wife wore her purple negligee in the evening, an obvious invitation for affection and sex. We had sex for about an hour. First time since 2024/12/18.

Pattern: Big Fight –> Make up sex

Experimental Procedure

Here is where the “experiment” began.

2025/2/6 R — Wife and I had sex in the evening.

2025/2/12 W — We had sex in the afternoon.

2025/2/19 W — Wife was in a very happy mood today. We made love in the evening.

2025/2/23 X — Wife was in a better mood today. I did hope to make love with her, but she was tired of working and went to bed early.

2025/2/25 T — My sexual angst has been increasing since Saturday. Wife has been unresponsive to my advances. Today, I felt completely enervated. I couldn’t focus on anything, so I decided it was time to unload my burden.

I found a video of a tender young girl who was warmly submissive and willingly compliant with her man. It was very satisfying to watch her F_ck and be F_cked. The Lord is good!

After I finished and washed myself, I felt calm, relaxed, and at peace. So much that I considered doing this on a regular schedule, just to preemptively avoid the sexual angst and the consequential waste of time. I wrestled through a mini-crisis with this strategic decision. But the moment of clarity came when I thought, "(When I was younger,) why could I not accept that ejaculating is a physiological need for me (like sleeping or [defecating])? Why must my sexuality be filled with anxiety, fear, and shame?" Of course, I knew the answer was because of my upbringing — my mother especially. Bless her soul. But now, I take responsibility for my sexual (and emotional) needs, it is the first step for me to be independent from my mother's harmful influence. It is hard for my mind to comprehend this, but I knew in my heart that it needs to be done.

2025/2/28 F — It's been 3 days since I last ejaculated. I'm not feeling angsty and desperate just yet, but I decided to follow my experiment with ejaculating on a regular schedule. So, I found a video of a slim sexy chick and rubbed one out. Not as satisfying as the last time, but I was able to get a sense of peace and relief. Job done.

2025/3/1 S — I feel something has changed in my spirit since I decided to whack every 3 days whether my wife is available or not. Ever since then, it's been much easier for me to be sharp, to keep myself off lust, to avoid the continuous battle against sexual angst, and to even go without. I also feel like my wife is in a better mood, and getting her into play mode is easier.

Today, I noticed some behavioral changes that are completely out of character for me.

1. I felt careless, casual, cynical, but also confident and content.
2. I bought a useful gift for my wife (a new lunch pail), just because I thought she needed it.
3. Two young women crossed the street while the traffic light was green. I had to stop to let them pass, but by then the light had turned red. I leaned out the window and told them, "Hey $%#&! You made me miss the light!" But they ignored me and walked on. These girls were young, thin, and pretty, but I didn't care about that at all. I just saw them as a disruption to my day.

I'm surprised about these changes. I don't know why these things are different now. Maybe it is because I'm in a better mood. Maybe it is because I am being proactive about taking care of my own sexual needs. Maybe it is because I'm more self-aware.

2025/3/4 T — It's been 4 days since my last nutlet, but I've been holding out because my wife planned a day trip today, implying that we'd have sex. However, her menses came 3 days early, so our trip was canceled at the last hour. I felt disappointed, but I didn't feel desperate at all. Thank God!

2025/3/5 W — Four women I work with were talking about me today. They were curious about my marriage and asked me questions about my relationship with my wife. I did not tell them much, but they could tell I wasn't satisfied. One of them told me, "Well, if you ever find another friend, then … that will be our little secret." I wasn't sure if that was an IOI or not, but it did make me realize how lonely I am. I thought, "Is it really so obvious that my marriage is frustrating?"

2025/3/7 F — I have not ejaculated in a week. I'm long overdue on my 'schedule'. Today, I feel the edginess sink in. So I whacked to an amateur sex video of a very plain-looking woman with long, thick hair and a nice @ss. Nothing fancy. I didn't want to get lost in desire, but just enough to get me up and get the job done.

Interestingly and ironically, my wife became very horny late at night. She kept stroking my c0ck and pestering me for sex. At first, I thought, "Why couldn't I have waited another 12 hours to toss my load?" But then I realized that because I had less desire for sex, it allowed her to enjoy having more desire. It also gave me a stronger internal locus of control to play with her and get her working on me. So overall, our sex was more enjoyable for both of us … because I had relieved myself earlier in the day. I did not expect to find this.

2025/3/9 X — Today, I gave €60 to a family at church that needs money. (This is another behavior that is out of the ordinary for me.) In the evening, I had a 'payback' for my generosity. Wife got drunk on wine and started ranting about me being lazy, not doing enough chores around the house, and spending too much money. She took all the credit cards out of my wallet and hid them somewhere. So childish. It is uncanny because I never told her I gave that money to the family at church. But it was like she knew it and was objecting to it.

At this time, I read an article about 'Miserable Husband Syndrome' that I found very interesting.

Divorce: Miserable Husband Syndrome Explained [+Tips to Cope] (2023/3/1)

I believe the "Miserable Husband Syndrome" is only men being frustrated with needing to have sex with the same aging post-wall woman with fading looks and a fattening waistline who does not enjoy sex anymore.

2025/3/10 M — It's been 3 days since I last exploded. It's time for another round. My wife hasn't talked to me since she imploded last night, so I doubt she'll be available for the next few days.

This time, I felt calmer and not so desperate to find a video to get off with. I'm discovering that I'm somewhat less selective in choosing p0rn, probably a result of this new habit. This time, I picked a p0rn model I would not usually choose — a tiny, flat-chested Central American girl, very skinny, almost skeletal, multiple piercings, a nose ring, and tattoos. (I don't like any of these things.) But I did like her because she was young, and she had a very attractive face, beautiful long thick hair, and a pleasant mood. She also had a playful interaction with the man in her videos, which was refreshing to see. It's just a more natural interaction. Not sure why, but it was very satisfying to watch her move. After I spent my load, I had no desire whatsoever to look at any photos of women.

Patterns:

- Overall, I am experiencing much less angst and lust since I decided to jerk off every 3 days.
- I've always known that I like lean girls with long hair. But lately, I'm learning that my carnal nature desires very slim, young, or neotonous girls with a childlike innocence, and who are kind-hearted, submissive, and trusting. Unfortunately, my wife does not have these traits anymore. I see my carnal nature is missing them.

2025/3/11 T — My wife invited me to a dinner date tonight. I was so surprised! No sex though.

2025/3/13 R — It's been 3 days since I last came. I'm starting to feel the familiar angst, inability to concentrate, lustful thoughts, and restlessness beginning to creep in. I decided to give my wife a chance and wait until tonight. If she doesn't put out, then I will drain the overflow tomorrow. I put it in God's hands. Let's see the result.

After my wife got home from work, she told me a p0rn video popped up on her feed during the day, and it made her think about having sex tonight. So we had sex. She even wore a negligee, played a p0rn video on the computer, and made videos of us having sex.

I was pleased that she came through for me this time, and I didn't need to beat off after all. But I also noticed that I wasn't too crazy for her sex either. I think, since I do get this need met, one way or another, I begin to have a stronger internal locus of control. I can also see that my wife is more relaxed and more enthusiastic about having sex.

2025/3/16 X — 3 days and I feel it. But I think I can forego jerking for now. Let's see how long I can last.

2025/3/17 M — Four giggling college-aged girls approached me and said to me, "You are SOOO FINE!" I said, "Yes, I am very handsome. Thank you!" I talked to them for a time. They took photos of us together.

Later in the morning, a younger girl I work with asked me if she could talk with me privately about some personal problems. So we took a walk in the park together during lunch hour. She said her parents abused her physically and verbally, so she ran away from home when she was 8 and went to live with her grandparents in another city.

After I got home later in the day, I found a barrage of nastygrams from the wife. I've seen this pattern before — whenever I spend extra time at church or have the opportunity to minister to people, then the wife blows apart. So I prayed for her today.

I was able to get through another day without masturbating. While I was thinking about this today, I realized that I'm trying to resist / postpone for 3 reasons.

1. To give my wife a chance to fulfill her marital duties / vows.
2. To give God a chance to meet my needs in a better / proper way (with my wife).
3. To give myself a chance to improve my resiliency of going without.

I also realized that I've been less enslaved to this need since I started this habit of coming every three days.

Pattern: Good times, regular interaction with women, staying busy, coming regularly, and I'm doing OK, even without my wife.

2025/3/18 T — It is 5 days since my last drain, and my wife is in a terrible mood again. I knew I couldn't resist past today, so I preemptively got over it as soon as she left for her work.

As before, I am getting less selective when it comes to p0rn. This time, I found a video of a tiny American red hair stricken by the black macho man three times her size! His d!ck was as big as her forearm! Bloody F_ck, man! I really liked this girl because of her eager submissiveness, humility, and overwhelming joy. Her F_ck-face and teary-eyed grin conveyed the look of wholly contented love! I wish I could see that look on my wife's face again. It has been a long time.

During that splendid moment of release, I realized that I like these women who are not consumed (or subsumed) by their desire, but rather, they just desire simple things, like enjoying life, experiencing God, spending time with friends and family … or being hammered bloody by a gargantuous c0ck … It annoys me when women are proudly pining for moar money, a bigger house, a better husband, another car, or whatever. It really turns me off when I see an anxious, discontented woman — like my wife.

I'm starting to form an experimental conclusion of what I like in a woman.

- Young
- Long hair
- Neotonous
- Super slim
- Healthy glow
- Smooth firm skin
- Physically fit, but not muscular.
- An innocent, childlike attitude
- Compassionate
- Kind hearted
- Submissive
- Trusting
- Content (no ambitions or desire)
- Makes me lose my inhibitions to express affection.

Yes, all the things my wife is NOT anymore.

Anyway, I had a very productive day. I'm glad I took care of my 'business' at the top of the day.

Pattern: Come and get it over, man. Then you can get on with your life.

2025/3/20 R — The female coworker was looking at me very intently today — a heavy suggestive gaze. I remembered what she said to me on 2025/3/5 about having a "secret friend", and I realized how easy it would be for me to step out to have an affair. I had a momentary crisis of belief. I had thoughts about divorcing my wife and taking things up with one of the women I know — no one specific — any one of them will do. I thought about what I'd have to do to break my marriage and start over with a younger, hotter, tighter lass. Then I remembered what the Red Pill has to say about women — AWALT — and I decided that it was just too much hassle, and also a failure of my character.

Well, I will not go looking for it, but if it ever happens, then I will reconsider.

2025/3/21 F — Still struggling with this crisis of belief. I remembered the girls I met on 2025/3/17, and their popping eyes for me. I considered meeting the most enthusiastic girl, the one who took photos of us, and making a relationship with her. Then I snapped back to reality and realized how unstable I am.

I was hoping to have sex with my wife tonight, if only to settle my mind, but she was exhausted and went to bed early.

Pattern: I am a lothario at heart. When I have any woman's interest, I am DTF right NOW! Lord, let me come!

2025/3/22 S — It's been 4 days. Lately, I've been able to go 4 days without coming, instead of 3. Not sure why. Maybe it's because I'm coming regularly lately. But today was my limit. I got nothing accomplished today because of sexual giddiness. Later in the day, I decided to yank it to get it over with and resume a normal life. I regretted that I did not wank off earlier in the day, because then I could've had a more productive day.

This time, I had a better idea of what I find attractive in a girl. So I looked for a p0rn girl who was young, very thin, long-haired, and had a soft, pleasant, elegant demeanor. I eventually found one among the teeming masses of debased, jaded, tatted-up P0rn stars on the usual sites. She had no figure at all, flat and straight all around, but her innocent face, youthful glow, long hair, and smooth skin did it for me. Bullseye on the target!

To my surprise, I was harder than I've been in years. Seriously! I did not expect myself to get so bothered by a girl with a body so featureless. From this, I learned that it is thinness and youth that gets me hard — very hard, in fact — and NOT a thicc buxom hourglass figure as I've always been told and believed.

To verify this discovery, I went to a site that features lots of scantily clad girls and looked over the photos. Sure enough, the girls who caught my full, hard-on attention were very thin or at least had a very thin waist.

So I spent my load on her. I'm OK with being less selective now (but actually, I'm more selective). Just get it done. She did fine.

In my post come clarity, I realized that jerking off is just as satisfying as having sex with my moody recalcitrant wife. I wondered if my decreased passion for her is because she's gained weight, or her sudden violent mood swings, or if it is just a cumulative result from the years of her B$, disrespect, and sexual refusals.

Anyway, I'm not going to let her careless disinterest in sex hold my life hostage any longer.

Tonight at my church social, there was an exchange student from Africa who kept looking at me, and only me, very intensely whenever she was talking during the group discussions. Her intense gaze and her cute pidgin English moved my heart. My mind drifted away to moonlit, windswept nights on the Serengeti plain, having capricious sex with the thin, dark sister in the primordial way. Our souls communicating by touch. The sound of drums in the distance. Hemp and juju beads on my skin. Intense unrestrained passion! Lord knows I am a man!

It made me reconsider my present state as pretty boring. If she ever opened that zany colored dress to me, I would certainly smell the fragrance of the savannah. Lord preserve me.

2025/3/23 X — Today I'm finding that my sperm session yesterday wasn't very satisfying. I still feel giddy and I want to look at photos of hot women. Now I'm wondering why. Is it a cumulative effect of going 4 days instead of 3? Was there something about the thin but featureless, flat-chested chick that left me dissatisfied? Did that African lady cast a hypnotic voodoo spell over me with her dark exotic eyes and her choppy English? What is it?

Pattern: Thin young women, virile P_ssy, hard F_cking, constant cumming … F__ing B!tches! Black, White, Yellow, Green, Purple… I do not care. Just give me a good come. I can never be satisfied.

I am so desperate for P_ssy, it is despicable … and I love it.

Lord have mercy.

2025/3/25 T — It's been 3 days since. I was doing fine for the first half of the day, up until 16:00 in the afternoon when I felt that familiar, urgent pang of desire consume me in an instant. I happened to be lying down and in a calm meditative state at that moment. I sensed the conflict in my soul, and I was able to examine it for a moment. If I tried to fight my urges, then my mind imploded and that terrible frustration and sexual tension overtook me. But if I accepted my desire without doubt or struggle, if I 'allowed' myself to experience my own desire without hustling myself what to do about it, then I remained psychologically stable.

Being so aroused, I did look at a p0rn model squirt her juices in a fit of ecstasy, but I did not jerk off. From this, I realized that the reason (or one reason), why some p0rn girls are more satisfying than others is simply because they're open-hearted, passionate, relaxed, and really enjoying themselves when having sex. Whereas, the angsty, anxious, and bothered chicks are less satisfying, or worse, they're not really into it at all. I wish my wife could let loose like that, like she once did.

2025/3/26 W — I unexpectedly met the girl I met before on 2025/3/17 — the one who told me that I'm handsome and took photos of us together. She stood at a distance and opened her skirt to flash her legs at me, and she whispered with her lips, "I love you!" She didn't have a figure, but she was young and thin and fit. I had to reach into my soul to hold myself together. I gave her the chef's kiss and I half-whispered, "I love you too!" as confidently and nonchalantly as I could. Yes! I am a numb-skull P_ssy worshipper, and she has caught me in her trap! She quickly left, thank God for His mercies. If she had lingered any longer, I would have lost control and jumped her luscious @ss right there on the terrace. I do believe it is true love, for what it is worth.

2025/3/27 R — I couldn't sleep last night. I keep thinking of the girl who flashed me yesterday. I thought about marrying her, teasing her until possession, and ploughing her long-haired, skinny, smooth young body every day, and having 6 babies with her. I know it is a crazy idea, but just thinking about this makes me feel so happy just to be alive!

Lately, I feel anxious whenever I'm lying in bed with my wife, so I've been sleeping in the family room just to get some rest. Something is out of sorts between us and I don't know exactly what it is.

In the morning, my wife had a meltdown. All the usual tripe about me being lazy and not "doing my part" in our marriage. I could hardly wait until she left to go to work.

After she left, I felt very angry with her, but I also had a very clear mind too.

"What kind of relationship do we have? We don't have any children. We seldom have sex, and only when she is drunk or on her period. All we do together anymore is drink and watch movies, and take a bicycle ride together on our days off. We never talk about anything worthwhile. She has no interest in my work. She doesn't help or support my mission. She's always angry, anxious, and constantly disrespecting me and shaming me.

Then, I knew in my heart that it was only a matter of time until this marriage would eventually end. I made up my mind to get myself set up with the Plan B, move out, and get a divorce. I felt very sad about all this, but I also felt very contented with myself.

Pattern: Sex is my whole life!

2025/3/29 S — It's been one week since I ejaculated. This is the longest I've endured since I started this experiment. I haven't been suffering from lust or a torturous libido too badly. I've noticed some decreased productivity, but I've been able to function OK. I feel more distant from my wife, but I also see that she doesn't really care how distant we are, or how often we have sex. So maybe it is just me.

I feel like I have changed a LOT since I started this experiment, but I don't think she has noticed anything different about me. I'm on the verge of having an affair (at least in my mind, and if not for my Christian conscience), but she is clueless about this. This just makes me despise her lazy withholding @ss even more!

She was in a pleasant and romantic mood when she came home from work today. We had a light conversation and then we watched a movie on NetFlix. About a half hour into the movie, I unzipped my denims and started stroking my c0ck. She responded by taking her own clothes off, sitting down on my lap, and grinding her bits on me. She couldn't get a good penetration on the sofa, so she took my hand and pulled me into the bedroom. After she mounted me, I told her, "It's been too long. I want to see you come from the heart!" — and she did! For once, she was a good, obedient wife, and best of all, she was loving it. After she finished and fainted on the bed, I gave her an epic solid pounding until she came again, and then so did I. The whole time I was thinking to myself, "F_ck this b!tch!" It is so out of character for me … but now I'm getting used to it. Just "F_ck this b!tch!" and be done. Do not expect more.

It is funny … and totally ill at the same time. When I reach the point where I want to give up and step out of this marriage, my wife shapes up and gives me what I want — what I need, really. But instead of being grateful for this, it just makes me despise her all the more. I almost feel like she wants me to hate her, like being hated makes her feel loved or something.

Women!

And AWALT. OMG! Now I know why the Ch@ds get all the P00n. I must go to vomit!

Pattern: The less I care, the more I am satisfied. Care less, you horny fool.

2025/4/1 T — It's been 3 days, so I'm feeling the sexual angst today.

I attended a lunch meeting with some new business partners. One lady I had never met before rearranged the seating so that she could sit next to me. During the lunch meeting, she kept touching my upper arm whenever she was talking to me. After she did this a few times, I began touching her lower arm whenever I talked with her. After paying closer attention to her and interacting with her, I noticed she was experiencing a lot of sexual tension with me, and the look she was giving me (never blinking) gave me the impression that she is a maniac in the bedroom.

I gave a presentation in the afternoon. During the intermission, two young women came to talk with me. I didn't know them, but apparently they recognized me because of my speech publicity.

I was hoping wife would take care of business tonight, but no.

2025/4/2 W — I caught a female coworker slacking off and it made me annoyed. After I reprimanded her for that, I ended my tirade by telling her to watch her diet and take better care of herself, saying that if she had a little more self-discipline, then she could have a very wonderful life.

Later in the day, I began to think I crossed the line in saying those things to her. I felt edgy and paranoid, like she might report me or something, but she never did. I prayed about this and I concluded that it was right for me to hold her accountable. It just feels wrong because holding women accountable goes against the culture's femcentric values. This is also why men shy away from doing anything truly impactful, including things that would be good for themselves and others, like drawing boundaries.

In the evening, wife went to bed nude when I wasn't looking. After I crawled under the duvet minutes later, she was sucking my face and yanking my c0ck. As soon as I was up, she jumped me and grunted out a bone shaker. Then after she caught her breath, she got back up and went at it again for a round 2 and then round 3 before she went down for the final F_cking by me. Thank God, I really needed it.

Pattern: Focus on myself and my purpose –> Get better sex and submission.

2025/4/4 F – It's been 2 days since I've come. I am doing OK for the most part, but I've had constant thoughts about having an affair with that girl who flashed me on 2025/3/26. I am kicking myself for not doing something more at that moment, but I don't know what I would've done differently … or even if I had the bravery to actually try it. I told myself to just stop thinking about it, but those silky long legs keep haunting my memory.

In the evening, my wife and I attended a dinner party to celebrate her coworker's birthday. Wife wanted to dance, so we did. Wife's coworker got drunk and started hanging on me. She was very sweet and affectionate, so I put my arm around her neck for a while and love bombed her. She liked to hold my hand and stroke my fingers while she listened to me talk. She gave me a butterfly kiss. Wife didn't seem to mind.

Pattern: When I accept my own sexuality, then others accept it too.

Whatever, just get me off!

2025/4/7 M — I heard an old song that reminded me of a girlfriend I had in college, because that was her favorite band and she often played that song for me. It made me remember how crazy she was for me back then. She let me do whatever I wanted to do to her, and what I liked to do was to make her come 20 times without stopping. I would count while she went over the edge of her sanity. I think that's why she liked me so much. I remembered that my godfather urged me to marry her, but inexplicably, the thought never crossed my mind. I just didn't have any inclination to marry her. Now I feel sad for not cherishing her any more than I did. I think I could have married her, and I would've done just fine in life. What more did I expect? I was too young.

2025/4/8 T — It's been 6 days since I last came. Wife is still on her period. I haven't felt that familiar sexual angst that usually kicks in after 3 days, and I was glad about this. But today I couldn't focus mentally, and I couldn't remember anything. My coworkers asked me questions, and moments later in the middle of my answer, I couldn't remember what they had asked. After I noticed that my memory wasn't working, whenever they asked me a question, I would start talking about a technicality I knew very well, and then I'd ask them if that answered their question. Most of the time, they said it did. It is amazing how far the B$ can take you!

Late in the afternoon, I found some time to "restore my memory". This time, I didn't even need P0rn to work my balls to a froth. I found a video of a cute, young, skinny, snaggle-toothed, warm-hearted Asian girl with long hair and a clear complexion, making cute faces and cute noises … and my love juices flowed naturally. Ever since I discovered that I like thin girls, I just search for Asian girls because it's so much easier to find one who's thin and not all F_cked up. After I yanked one out, I found myself better able to concentrate and more relaxed, maybe too relaxed, a little enervated.

Pattern: Life is BS, and I'm more alive when I return the BS.

2025/4/11 F — Wife and I took a day trip to the mountains. She was in a pleasant mood. We went swimming in a secluded stream and had sex there. She came really quickly. God, I love nature!

2025/4/14 M — Wife and I took another day off work to spend together. She got drunk by early afternoon, took her clothes off, and wanted to have sex. It's my habit to get her off first, because after I come, I'm done for a while. But this time, she wasn't interested in having an orgasm. She just wanted to feel my desire for her, to watch me ride her, and see me come on her. So I let all my passion out and pounded her until I came on her, and I was able to give her a second shot after a few minutes. She was so satisfied that she almost fell asleep afterward. It was nice to have her place my needs first for a change and be content in receiving my desire. This turned out to be very satisfying for me.

2025/4/16 W — The girl who flashed me on 2025/3/26 came looking for me today. She didn't come near me, but just stood at a distance and watched me for a while, pretending like she wasn't looking at me. I waved at her and signaled for her to come closer, but she kept her distance. After a few minutes, her friend arrived and they left together. Then I realized she wasn't looking for me. I was disappointed, but I was glad at the same time. I don't know what I would do if she got up in my face or flashed me again.

2025/4/17 — It's been 3 days. I don't have the usual cloudy mind and I'm not feeling that panging anxiety that usually sweeps over me and hijacks my consciousness after 3 days without spurting. Instead, I just feel restless, and my thoughts are dancing on fanciful ideas. I can concentrate, but not on one thing for very long, maybe a few minutes at most. Bad as it is, this is actually an improvement. It gives me hope that I might one day get past this.

I had some important things to do today, so I did the job and got it over with later in the morning. I knew exactly what kind of pOrn girl would get the job done quickly. The video I found was of a young, thin, long-haired girl with beautiful clear skin. Not much of a figure, and not very intelligent (she couldn't keep her mouth closed), but she was very appreciative, passionate, playful, submissive, and trusting. That is what gets me off … so get me off, B!tch!

At the Σ Frame blog, a man, Jay, left a comment quoting Leviticus 15:16-18 and Deuteronomy 23:10-11 from the Bible. In both passages, it says to wash after an emission. So I decided to make a habit of taking a shower every time I nut. It does make me feel much better and 'cleaner', even though the passage says "they will be unclean till evening". Not sure what that means.

Pattern: My obsession with P_ssy has made me delirious with desire.

2025/4/20 X (Resurrection Day) — Had a busy but enjoyable day at church. In the evening, I realized that it's been 3 days since I've come. I've been so involved in my work and at church lately that I never thought about it. This is a good change.

2025/4/21 M — It's been 4 days, but I'm doing OK. I didn't need to nut in order to function today. The only setback was that I was overwhelmingly conscious of the sexual tension between me and the women I work with, especially the "secret friend" lady, and this made me feel awkward. However, I thought maybe I should be more aware of this. But despite this, I had a very productive day today.

2025/4/23 W — It's been 6 days since my last nut, and I haven't missed it at all. In the evening, wife and I had sex, and then we were so exhausted that we fell asleep before 22:00.

2025/4/26 S — Not sure why, but the wife's mood has slowly improved over the past few weeks. Instead of always being in a bad mood and having a few good days, she is now usually in a good mood except for a few bad days. We're having sex much more frequently again, usually once every 3-4 days as I need, but sometimes she'll be "out of order". On my end, I used to get angry at my wife every time she was "not in the mood", but I'm not like that anymore. I think this makes it easier for her to be in a better mood too.

Overall, I'm enjoying my life more than I did at the end of last year, and I have more peace about my sex life. So now I think I've reached the purpose of this experiment. I've figured myself out and come to terms with some things.

Pattern: Letting go of my need for sex and emotional intimacy from my wife is liberating. Wife is more happy and horny too. It's so ironic.

Results

I've learned a BIG lesson about myself from this experiment.

I need to accept my sexual desire without worrying over what to do about it. Just BE. When I can do this, then I can accept myself, and women too, even women as sexual beings. I also have a sense of contentment (even without sex). (In the past, I was only able to have this frame of mind after I had sex.) This sense of self-acceptance gives me inner peace, it allows me to be more natural around women, and it forms an attitude that permits greater intimacy with women in general. Then (and only then) I can get on to consolidating my inner locus of control.

Overall, I think my experiment with p0rn and nutting has allowed me to proactively face my sexual desire, realize my inner resistance to my desire, and become more aware of how sexual stimuli, like p0rn, or simply going several days without nutting, aggravates this desire and creates the turmoil resulting from my inner resistance. It is this rollercoaster ride of unfulfilled desire, then fulfilled desire, then repeating again, all the while I am anticipating, cherishing, and fearing that desire at the same time, This keeps me feeling out of control and enslaved to this cycle. But now that I'm more self-aware, this cycle is starting to crumble.

I wish I could have understood this about myself when I was younger.

Jack's Concluding Statements

As readers may have guessed, the author is not from the U.S.A. I'm guessing he is a black European, hence my choice of images.

The author added that he's not serious about divorcing his wife or having an affair, but he wanted to be honest in saying there were times when he thought and felt that way.

I like how the author noticed some patterns after some reflection. After reading about this 'experiment', I see a few more patterns, some of which the author didn't mention.

- Overall, the author became less lustful, more confident, and more productive after he decided to "take care of his own business" every three days.
- With time, the author became less dependent on P0rn and nutting to live a normal productive life.
- His experiences with other women giving him IOIs and having (apparently) real options contributed to him building an abundance mentality.
- I believe his wife loved him more towards the end because of his detachment and his improved internal locus of control, NOT because he felt like he loved her less or because he was on the edge of having an affair, as he seemed to think. (Re: note from 2025/3/29.) Things are NOT what they seem.
- In spite of what the author has said, I believe he has a better and stronger marriage now than he did at the end of 2024, NOT because he is MORE invested in his marriage, but because he is LESS invested. Ironic, but true.

Thanks to this author for contributing his account of this 'experiment'.

Related

- Σ Frame: Tracking Raw Sex Performance on a Spread Sheet (2022/1/19)
- Σ Frame: The Sweet Aroma of Love (2022/2/14)
- Σ Frame: Does Masturbation improve Preselection? (2022/2/16)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: Lust (2023/2/10)
- Σ Frame: How P0rn and Premarital Sex affects one's view of Women (2023/2/20)

- Σ Frame: Loneliness (2025/1/15)
- Σ Frame: Vectors of Loneliness (2025/1/17)
- Σ Frame: 5 Offenses of Being Unclean (2025/2/7)
- Σ Frame: 10 Flavors of Masturbation (2025/2/17)
- Σ Frame: Is Marriage a Solution to Lust? (2025/2/19)
- Σ Frame: Overcoming the Spiritual-Sexual Poverty Mentality (2025/2/24)
- Σ Frame: Is Loneliness a bug, or an intrinsic feature of the male experience? (2025/3/3)
- Mogadishu Matt: Life's Masturbation and Running Away From Contentment (2025/3/25)
- Σ Frame: Is Masturbation a Sin? (2025/3/28)

When everyone wins a prize, self-interest replaces intrinsic motivation

Jack · 11 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Thoughts on Genuine Interest, intrinsic reward, and the failures of Common Core education.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation; Virtue;
Length: 2,700 words
Reading Time: 15 minutes

Can Everyone be a Winner?

Starting about 20 years ago and coinciding with the advent of ~~Rotten~~ Common Core education, public schools in the U.S. began a general policy of giving out awards (more than what would be considered a participation award), rewards, and other kinds of affirmations to ALL children, every one, regardless of how well they performed.

The idea was to include and motivate low-performance kids. Soft-hearted proponents believed granting rewards equanimously to poorly functioning kids might ameliorate envy and supplement the unconditional love and acceptance that they may not have been receiving from their parents.

However, older generations (especially Xers) reacted in disgust because when low-performing kids are rewarded just for showing up and paying half-hearted attention, it diminishes the value of rewards to outstanding kids who've truly earned recognition. It also makes a competition non-competitive and removes intrinsic motivation to do one's best.

Ask me how I know.

As a Gen X father of two Zoomers, I came to the opinion that Western public education doesn't teach anything in the way of meta-cognition, which is absolutely necessary for learning to occur. I had to teach my daughters how to assess truth content, how to set up and solve math problems, and how to write in cursive. Yes, cursive writing! Really?!? I lost all respect for the educational system when I saw they weren't even learning how to write!

I also had to teach them NOT to be ashamed of themselves when they performed much better than their peers (and they did, by far), and to instead use such a situation to validate and motivate themselves, and to be an inspiration to others.

I might as well have homeschooled them, because I had to do it anyway. Fortunately, their peers weren't too bad.

Rewarding the Reprobate

Not only does this type of education cut down the champions, it also spoils and shunts the dunces. It rewards stupid kids for being mouth breathers, fails to teach them the discipline they desperately need, and sentences them to live out their lives in ignominy.

This educational practice aligns with the entitled bratnik spirit of the post-modern age, except men take the place of the gifted intelligent students, and women are the ignorant imbeciles.

We reward women for having a vagina, especially if it's young and fertile, but we don't reward men for having a penis or for being the pillars of civilized society. No. Men are expendable.

We reward women for getting an education and pursuing a career, but we don't reward men for working hard to support a family and society. No. This is expected.

The Sirens of the Sexual Apocalypse have systematically removed all negative consequences for fornication (as was the intent), allowing women to freely Fark around, postpone marriage, and abort their 'accidents'. In effect, it is rewarding and encouraging bad behavior.

The church rewards pathological behavior: Lanora and Gates kneel at the Altar rail at St. John's Episcopal Church, Springfield.

Our study of OASIS (e.g. OnlyF@ns, etc.) revealed that women can make easy coin by posting scantily clad selfies and videos online. They don't even need to be very beautiful. In effect, it is rewarding bad behavior and ugliness.

Meanwhile, we have no way of rewarding those who are chaste and faithful, other than whatever fruits of obedience might survive, and there are precious few remaining, if any. Worse, these rewards have no relation to actual virtue, and thus go unrecognized.

Case Study — Lepper's Research

Let's consider what happened in a classic study of how praise affects children's intrinsic motivation [1].

Lepper et al. [2], posed an interesting question: How do rewards, or the expectation thereof, affect one's Genuine Interest in an activity? Is it possible to reduce children's interest in an activity by making it a means to an end rather than the end itself? When this happens, does play turn into work?

To find out, they first gave nursery-school children the chance to draw with felt-tipped pens during free play and recorded how long each child spontaneously played with the pens. The children clearly enjoyed this activity. Then the researchers told one group of children that if they would draw pictures with the felt-tipped pens for a man who had come "to see what kinds of pictures boys and girls like to draw with Magic Markers", then afterward they would receive a "Good Player Award", complete with a gold seal and a red ribbon. After drawing for only six minutes, each child got the award as promised. Another group of children did not expect an award and were not given one. In a third condition, a group of children were not told there would be an award but got one anyway.

A week later, the researchers again observed the children's free play drawing pictures with the pens. Those children who had expected and received an award during the first part of the study spent much less time with the pens than they had before the start of the experiment. The second group of children who had neither expected nor received an award continued to show as much interest in playing with the pens as they had initially. The children in the third group also continued to show a high level of interest in the pens.

Similar results have occurred in many other studies when children have been offered a reward for playing with a toy or doing something they already enjoy.

What does ¡Sc!eNcE! say?

Now, we might ask, what do the results of Lepper's study mean in the context of giving out rewards to ALL students, regardless of their performance? If liberal extrinsic rewards undermine the motivation and pleasure of doing something for its own sake, then handing out fewer rewards, or else dampening expectations thereof, should stimulate greater interest, or at least not hamper it. Right?

Psychologists have considered alternative explanations for this phenomenon.

1. Working Only for the Reward

One possibility is that when we are paid or rewarded for an activity, we interpret it as work. We see our actions as conforming to external requirements instead of an exploration of our own interests, skills, and efforts. It is as if we say to ourselves, "I'm doing this because I'm being paid for it. Since I'm being paid, it must be something I wouldn't do if I didn't have to." When the reward is obtained, or the reward is withdrawn, then we refuse to "work" any longer. This is the explanation that was favored by Lepper et al. in the felt-tipped pen study.

In the context of intersexual relationships, the certainty of an expected reward (e.g. commitment, marriage, sex, etc.), or having already received it, tends to dampen our interest in the relationship; it reduces our motivation to follow through on our commitments to the other person. This might explain why men are remarkably less interested in a woman after sex, why "women want to get married, but they don't want to be married", and partly explain the prevalence of marital annui, dead bedrooms, and frivorce.

2. Rewards are an Expected Part of a Transaction

Another possibility is that we tend to regard the requirements of obtaining an extrinsic reward as confining or controlling. Instead of living in the autotelic joy of the moment, we must continually remind ourselves to stay focused and keep working towards the specified goal. Thus, a reward makes us feel pressured and reduces our sense of autonomy and choice [3]. "I guess I'll have to do what I'm told to do — but I'll only do what's required of me."

Likewise, within committed sexual / marital relationships, people tend to regard the promised or implied duties of maintaining a relationship as something beyond the call of duty, ironically. Doing the work of maintaining the relationship therefore seems to be burdensome or onerous.

- Men: "I guess I should marry the girl I got pregnant, but I wouldn't otherwise."
- Women: "I guess I'll have to put out for hubby once a month, but starfish sex is enough, and that's it!"

The rewards are taken for granted, and are no longer usually linked to one's performance. Also, we are tempted to preserve our sense of free choice (which is often no more than an illusion of self-willed power) instead of following through on our commitments (to capitalize on relational investments in which we might exercise true power and Genuine Authority).

3. False Incentives

A third, more behavioral explanation is that extrinsic reinforcement sometimes raises the rate of responding above some optimal, enjoyable level — for example, by causing the children in the felt-tipped pen study to play with the pens longer than they would have on their own. Then the activity really does become 'work' if/when incentives are absent.

This is what happens when attractive women and high SMV Ch@ds are continually rewarded with constant attention and sex, respectively. The continuing positive feedback incentivizes more participation to deliver non-stop dopamine hits, even beyond their own perceived enjoyment, or even interest, or health.

- Men: "I F_cked her just because I could (NOT because I genuinely love or care for her)."
- Women: "I don't know how I happened to sleep with so many men. I just got carried away in the moment."

Going to the additional trouble of establishing and maintaining real long-term relationships (i.e. marriage), by comparison, is then regarded as very unpleasant 'work'. This is one reason why ex-carousel riders who manage to stick the landing usually find marriage to be burdensome, intolerable, and onerous.

Genuine Interest

If you have always been crazy about reading Poe or playing the banjo, then you will probably keep reading Poe or playing the banjo. You will probably keep reading or playing even when you do NOT happen to be getting a good grade or applause for doing so.

If you have always been nutz about gazing at pictures of nude women (low SMV men), or reading smutty romance novels (sexually reserved women), then you will probably keep stroking off and fantasizing about dominant studs seducing meretricious vixens, respectively. You will probably keep lusting and whacking off even when you are NOT getting positive social encouragement for doing so.

If you have always been gung hoez about playing s1ut machines on Tinder (high SMV men), or having a steady stream of monogamish, revolving door relationships (sexually liberated women), then you will probably keep stoking the faff of your libido fueled frenzy. You will probably keep seducing and fornicating even when you are not getting exactly what you want out of those relationships.

In such cases, you will probably attribute your continued involvement in the activity to your own intrinsic interests and motivation rather than the reward. IOW, the activity itself is its own reward (viz. sex and s1uttery are deemed more important than forming a lasting relationship).

OTOH, if you get praise, money, a high grade, or a trophy for doing a task well or for achieving a certain level of performance, rather than for just doing the task, then your intrinsic motivation is not likely to decline; in fact, it may increase [5,6].

Likewise, if you get positive attention, social favor, and continued sexual interest for engaging in hookups, riding the carousel (women), and spinning plates (men), then your intrinsic motivation is likely to increase, even to displace all other activities and interests.

Such rewards are apt to make one feel competent rather than controlled. If rewards are tied to increasingly demanding standards for performance, as opposed to an unchanging standard, then one's intrinsic motivation is especially likely to remain high [7]. This is why expectations within the SMP have steadily escalated beyond reality.

Summary

Returning to the original topic of how indiscriminate rewards affect interest and motivation…

1. If rewards are only given to those having outstanding performance, then the reward becomes an affirmation and an encouragement to those who do well; and for those who do not, it offers an incentive to examine the causes for why one cannot compete or perform well, possibly providing an avenue of self-improvement.
2. If you are summarily rewarded for whatever you do, regardless of contribution, performance, or outcome, then you will care less about compensation, feedback, social approval, and other rewards, and you will be entirely focused on maximizing your own intrinsic reward and/or attaining what you most desire.

In the context of the SMP/MMP, these conditions result in the following sociosexual environments, respectively.

1. When sexual congress imposes lifelong responsibilities, then the SMP elevates into a MMP, available to those who are attractive, healthy, and mature enough to fulfill those responsibilities. It encourages marrieds to focus on how to maximize their marriage and family life.
2. When sexual license imposes no responsibilities, then the SMP degrades into a F_ckfest, free for anyone who can muster the snuff of attracting the opposite sex, and a mega-shame ostracization for those who cannot. It incentivizes more promiscuity, casual attitudes on abortion and marriage, and a lack of interest in child rearing.

Over the past 50 years, Western society has morphed from the first to the second by removing all accountability for women and rewarding them extravagantly for merely having a P_ssy and participating in the SMP.

We must be careful, however, to avoid oversimplification. Extrinsic rewards do not always weaken the impact of intrinsic ones; their effects depend on many factors, including a person's initial motivation, the context in which awards are achieved, and, when praise is given, the sincerity of the person giving it [4].

But in the context of intersexual relations, it takes a very conscientious, disciplined, self-aware, and self-controlled person to discern the difference between external feedback and intrinsic interest, and conduct one's self appropriately.

Conclusions

The benefit of rewarding only winners are as follows:

- The reward signals what is excellent and teaches what is virtuous.
- The reward affirms and encourages good performance.
- The reward is a vector of accountability and responsibility.
- NOT receiving a reward serves as a goad to self-improvement.

However, rewarding only winners is regarded as a problem by modern educators because the non-winners are subjected to discrimination, shame, and envy of the winners, and this violates the religion of equality. But this is exactly what might motivate them to improve.

The perceived benefit of rewarding everyone regardless of performance, is that it effectively removes the motivating effects of envy, shame, and peer competition and brings one into a fuller awareness of one's own Genuine Interest in the activity itself.

However, the faults inherent in liberally affirming everyone (i.e. low grade kids, women, et al.) regardless of performance, are as such:

- It is catastrophic when one's Genuine Interest is predominantly self-centered (e.g. focused on lazy comforts or sexual gratification), and there is no other vector of accountability or responsibility extant.
- It cannot create Genuine Interest or intrinsic motivation where it does not already exist.

- It disincentivizes any effort made beyond what is intrinsically rewarding.
- It's less beneficial and less enjoyable for all.

Exit Questions

Zoomer readers are invited to share your thoughts about your educational experience in the comments below.

1. Does rewarding the reprobate truly offer any long-lasting benefit?
2. Does NOT rewarding genuine interest extinguish that interest?
3. Which was worse, Common Core or Lockdowns?

Sources

1. Invitation to Psychology, 4th edition, Carole Wade, Carol Tavris, Chapter 9, Learning, pp. 319-320.
2. Lepper, M. R., Greene, D., & Nisbett, R. E. (1973). Undermining children's intrinsic interest with extrinsic reward: A test of the" overjustification" hypothesis. Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 28(1), 129. https://doi.org/10.1037/h0035519 [PDF]
3. Deci, E. L., Koestner, R., & Ryan, R. M. (1999). A meta-analytic review of experiments examining the effects of extrinsic rewards on intrinsic motivation. Psychological Bulletin, 125(6), 627–700. https://doi.org/10.1037/0033-2909.125.6.627
4. Henderlong, J., & Lepper, M. R. (2002). The effects of praise on children's intrinsic motivation: A review and synthesis. Psychological Bulletin, 128(5), 774–795. https://doi.org/10.1037/0033-2909.128.5.774
5. Cameron, J., Banko, K. M., & Pierce, W. D. (2001). Pervasive negative effects of rewards on intrinsic motivation: The myth continues. The Behavior Analyst, 24(1), 1–44. https://doi.org/10.1007/BF03392017
6. Dickinson, A. M. (1989). The detrimental effects of extrinsic reinforcement on "intrinsic motivation." The Behavior Analyst, 12(1), 1–15. https://doi.org/10.1007/BF03392473
7. Pierce, W. D., Cameron, J., Banko, K. M., & So, S. (2003). Positive effects of rewards and performance standards on intrinsic motivation. The Psychological Record, 53(4), 561-578.

https://doi.org/10.1037/1089-2680.7.1.84

Related

- Σ Frame: Why is the online amateur sex industry attractive to women? (2021/1/6)
- Σ Frame: Forming the Vision of Achieving a Goal (2022/4/6)
- Σ Frame: Meritocracy vs. True Upward Mobility (2024/8/19)
- Σ Frame: He who keeps his daughter virgin does swell (2024/11/8)
- Σ Frame: Play is the Essence of Game (2025/5/21)
- Men Are Good (Tom Golden): The Forgotten Power of Unsupervised Play (2025/6/14)

The Ordinance of FEAR

Jack · 13 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Women's innate acquiescence to the natural order.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders; Feminine Submission;
Author's Note: Some of the text references and expands previous comments. Links embedded in the initial words.
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

For women, the Feeelz are everything.

"Feeelz iz Realz."

The most cherished and trusted Feeeling among women is FEAR.

To primitive, hindbrain-operant women who have not been taught or trained to live beyond their instincts, FEAR is LIFE itself.

New Wave singer, Aimee Mann, conveys her emotional convictions of the FEAR dynamic through the penetrating song, Voices Carry (1985).

Why FEAR?

It's hard for us as Men to understand why women are fascinated with FEAR and are attracted to ¡ScArY!, even though it makes them afraid and insecure, and vice versa. Even though we may see profuse evidence of this, it still just doesn't register with us, because Men aren't wired that way. We're like, "WTH?"

This is because men have evolved to counter FEAR with action and respond with force to either control or remove the threat.

But not so for women.

For thousands of years, women have lived in FEAR — FEAR of being alone, of danger, death, disease, the elements, r@pe, starvation, the possibility of social rejection, the threat of warring tribes, and so on. For thousands of years, women have relied on men to guide, protect, and provide. It is within this context that women have evolved to be most attuned to the instincts of their primal nature. FEAR stimulates their neural transmitters and sharpens their senses.

But in our post-modern Feminist age, all these vectors of FEAR have been removed. But… womens' innate FEARal nature remains. Their animus souls continue to crave and seek after contextual evidence to support their mythos of FEAR to make themselves feel alive. This yearning is so strong that they will create it or hunt for it if it is absent.

- This is why women looove drama.
- This is why all women can relate to the primal draw contained in 50 Shades of Grey, lycanthropy, romances with Ch@ds, the allure of having an affair, and such.
- This is why women are NOT attracted to a man for who he is as an individual, but for how he makes her Feeel. (The LAMPS traits all translate to pleasurable Feeelings.) The more intense, the better.
- This is why women are attracted to men who jerk them around on a push-pull, up-down rollercoaster of Feewings. The character and intentions of the man matters less, if at all.
- This is why women fantasize about seducing the attention, investment, and seed of an aggressive, confident, dominant man (and only such men) with their V Power.
- This is why women will have children out of wedlock with men who care nothing for them.

It is all founded on their natural passion for a FEARful existence (or the illusion thereof).

The Ordinance of FEAR

There is another, more fundamental reason that stands as an inscrutable truth behind this phenomenon.

The Feminine FEAR trait is an inner manifestation of existential guilt that reflects the female craving for a restoration of the hierarchy ordained by their Creator Above (and all its benefit$, $ecurity, and other goodies), which was broken by Eve's treason, resulting in The Fall of Mankind (Genesis 3).

The Feminine FEAR trait is also a consequence (or perhaps a punishment) of possessing the very nature of a seditious usurper who seeks only to debase and defile for her own passing pleasures and her succourous lusts for control.

As it is written … in both the Old and New Covenants…

> Your desire shall be for your husband,
> And he shall rule over you.
>
> Genesis 3:16b (NKJV)

> the wife should fear her husband
>
> *Ephesians 5:33 (NKJV)

Expanded Translation: The strongest force in Women's fleshly psyche is the desire to be chosen, conquered, cream-pied, overruled, ruled over, and possessed, Heart, Mind, Body, and Soul, by a Man who strikes FEAR in her heart, hind-brain, and hind-end.

A man who has the power to do this to a woman has Genuine Sexual Authority over her, for better or for worse.

* H/T: Thnking

FEAR = Validation

There is yet another reason for this phenomenon.

A previous post explained why women are obsessed with the idea of women being overpowered by a man through coercion (i.e. r@pe fantasies), as well as female Fantasy Erotica / Pornolatry, and Horror — mainly because it gives them an intense, habit-forming dopamine rush.

Again, all these vectors carry weight in the female psyche because "Feeelz iz Realz." Conversely, if she cannot Feeel it, then it's not "Real" to her. The Feeelz is what convinces her to believe something as real, relevant, or true, whether it actually is or not.

And the most convincing, motivating, and powerful emotion of all is FEAR.

Therefore, that which exerts an effective Power over a woman's soul must necessarily invoke a deeply emotional experience for her, striking every single chord of her neurology, because only this can penetrate her deepest defenses and persistent mental objections and be interpreted as an affirmation of her self-worth as a woman.

This is what the Manosphere calls 'Validation'.

For women, FEAR is Validating.

Without an overpowering and visceral element of FEAR enforced by proliferant Dominance, she cannot obtain Validation as a vulnerable woman created by God — without which, a woman can only conclude that she is come of Eve and her flagitious Father Below … and therefore counted among the eternally d@mned — or so it appears to the FEARal female's intuitive instincts.

This is why women are typically blind to those men who do NOT emit the FEAR inducing aroma of confidence. They are simply invisible. Similarly, women are strongly disinterested in participating in any social activities that cannot provide an avenue to arouse her natural Fear instinct. In situations where they cannot feign ignorance, women will disgustedly and indignantly complain about the lack of quick-hit Validation, while using certain tell-tale adjectives to vocalize their objection, e.g. "Sooo Basic" "Boooring!" "Immature!" "Lame!"

From the perspective of women's innate FEAR paradigm, these things are an irrelevant distraction from her primary purpose of validating her FEAR-based instincts, and are therefore a waste of her time, energy, and sociosexual capital.

When a woman loses that sensation of FEAR, she loses all sense of Validation as a woman, and the zephyrs of hell descend upon her — or at least, that's how it Feeelz to women.

Related

- Chateau Heartiste: What Betas Can Learn From Women's Rape Fantasies (2011/4/18)
- Cultural Analysis & Philosophy: Why Feminists Enjoy Rape Fantasies (2018/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority (2020/9/30)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)
- Σ Frame: Taming the Savage Termagant (2025/4/21)
- Σ Frame: How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23)
- Christianity and Masculinity: A Deeper Dive on Hypergamy (2025/6/14)

The Post-Fall / Born Again Slore Life Script

Jack · 16 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A 'Repentance™' offers an affirming, convenient, and easy escape from the lonely cat cuddling consequences of Riding the Carousel.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation; Virtue;
Note: Written in response to Tubal Cain's email.
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Intro

The Post-Fall / Born Again Slore embodies a specific female archetype in the Manosphere lore. It's an old archetype, around since the early days of Dalrock, but one that has appeared ubiquitously in American Evangelical Protestant churches since the 1980s.

"Yes, I go to church on Sundays", she says.

Deep Strength has estimated that about 54.6% of women aged 20-29 are carousel riders. By extension and accounting for longitudinal life scripts, this implies that at least 50% of women have ridden the carousel at some point in their lives. This also suggests that about 50% of women who come into the church in their late 20s or later, are (or will be) Post-Fall / Born Again Slores. (That figure is much higher if you include women who forned around while never straying from the fold.)

These women may not always be noticed, because they'll tamp down their bimbohood and keep their past a secret if at all possible. Wary men may have to rely on discernment and S1ut Tells to perceive the labial droop of their past. But if she is an OnlyF@ns tenderloin, or a high profile P0rn starlet, or if the woman has left any evidence or sordid tales of her foolish tantalizing trysts as a permanent imprint on the internet (and thousands of horny young men's minds), then they cannot easily keep it a secret for very long.

The Post-Fall / Born Again Slore Life Script

The Post-Fall / Born Again Slore Life Script assumes that "It's easier to get forgiveness than permission", and that women always get a P_ssy Pass™. Thus, women can do whatever they d@mn well please in their youth, and the Church will always be ready to welcome them back with open arms whenever they decide to return to the fold. (Briffault's Law applies here.) True repentance is not required, but a convincing confession of 'Repentance™' is. Whatever they did while they were away, and their motivations for returning to church, don't matter. In fact, it is considered rude and "unloving" to bring it up. "Love covers a multitude of sins." (1 Peter 4:8) All that matters is that they come back to church, profess Christianity, marry, have children, and play the role of a conservative Christian wife and mother.

(This Life Script is NOT a viable option for men. Whatever a man does before he becomes a Christian will always mar his reputation, and it will be brought up and used against him.)

Modern Evangelism, Big Eva Style

The whole reason why we have the The Post-Fall / Born Again Slore Life Script, is because the most effective institutionalized form of evangelism nowadays adopts the following dual strategy:

1. Forbearing and forgiving women for any and all offenses, sins, and trespasses, without question. The idea is that the easier 'repentance' is, the more 'repentance' there will be. (It's a false notion, of course.)
2. Keeping men in the dark and lumbering on the treadmills to make them easy ATM / marital commitment targets for predatory poon-bearing post-Wall poseurs.

The Beta Factory perpetuates the Simpocalypse for two very effective reasons:

1. To allow supposedly repentant carousel riders to stick the landing.
2. To keep those once-hot hoez drifting into the church.

All under the superficially Christian but culturally converged guise of 'acceptance', 'forgiveness', and 'Christian love'. Appearances are everything in modern post-Protestantism.

The Post-Fall / Born Again Slore Life Script Timeline

The timeline for this life script goes like this.

High School Years — Usually popular due to good looks or winsomeness; engaged in sexual promiscuity, usually serial monogamy.

College Years — Discovers her V Power and how to roll men and make bank with it. Becomes an activist or spokesperson in some capacity, an escort, social media content producer, OnlyF@ns model, sorority slore, sugar baby, or some combination of these, or whatever works for her particular personality to gain attention and social notoriety … and $chmooze.

She continues this lifestyle throughout her 20s, until The Wall approacheth.

In her late 20s or Early 30s, her sex appeal withers, and one of the following happens.

- Attention and $chmooze Income gradually dry up.
- She hits the Wall and goes over the Falls.
- She has an Epiphany Phase.

All of these happen eventually, and the order of these may vary for different women, but for most women, only one is sufficient to make her aware of the impending others and incentivize a change.

These women are often ADIEU enough, and/or socially (and sexually) sophisticated enough to know how to act to keep the ball rolling.

Then soon after her Epiphany Phase, etc., she suddenly has a "born again" experience which revitalizes her SMV currency and social relevancy. She receives a burst of attention, fame, notoriety, and maybe some income. Her reputation receives a newfound polish, often enough to bag a nookie-addled husband if she plays her cards well.

Women who have dozens or hundreds of N counts are well practiced in the kinds of sociosexual skills and Honeycraft that can easily seduce an unsuspecting man into a marriage.

They'll usually Stick the Landing with a rather handsome, successful, or well-to-do chump cuck who cares more about banging a high (but fading) SMV sexed up bimbo with an 1nTeRe$t!ng life story than marrying a woman with a fresh, clean womb and who might make a decent mother for his kids.

The Post-Fall / Born Again Slore as Described in the Bible

Deep Strength's estimate of 54.6% of women aged 20-29 engaging in CC Riding closely matches the ratio of 5 out of 10 virgins who were foolish in The Parable of the 10 Virgins (Matthew 25:1–13). Here, Jesus describes 5 virgins as wise, and 5 who are foolish. All the virgins had lamps and were found sleeping when the groom arrived, but only the wise had kept their lamps filled with oil. The foolish ones then had to go out to buy oil, and in doing so, they missed the wedding. Oil represents joy, health, and spiritual vitality — qualities that women lose when they engage in extramarital sex. The parable intimates that the foolish women will NOT by any means enter into the joy of matrimony.

Varieties of Post-Fall / Born Again Slores

Women who follow The Post-Fall / Born Again Slore Life Script come in (at least) three garden spice varieties.

1. The Born Again Variety – Secular CC Riding women who reach their Epiphany Stage and then decide that TradCon / Church life is better than being alone with cats and wine (e.g. Nala Ray). Most single mothers fall into this category.
2. The Bible Thumping Variety – Churched up Churchian women who hold themselves out to be models of Christian womanhood, although they are more Feminist than Christian, and are, more probably than not, still recovering from their hoe phase and/or are secretly promiscuous (e.g. Girls Gone Bible).
3. The Bumpy Landing Variety — Clueless, Nominal / Cultural Christianish, serial monogamish women who ride through life freely on their P_ssy Pass™, and hop and jump from man to man until nearing the Wall, before deciding to marry (i.e., the typical Dalrockian trope, "It was always her intention to marry", e.g. Tomi Lahren).

Coming up next, I'll dedicate 3 posts covering a case study for each variety.

Conclusions

A CC Rider's post-Fall repentance appears to glorify God because it is a turn for the better. But it could also be that her motivation is self-seeking, not God-seeking. She might simply be looking for one more opportunity to glorify herself and to avoid the bitter, lonely consequences of her disobedience.

When she was younger, she was chasing clout and validation and feeding her narcissism online and/or through a series of sexy suitors and blustering beta orbiters. Now older, no longer lustworthy nor trustworthy, and looking down the barrel of a long, lonely life of cats and wine, she's shifted gears to chase clout and validation and feeding her narcissism within the Churchian community.

And the Churchians eat it up.

But it is doubtful whether she has truly changed — or repented of anything.

The problem with receiving repentant post-Wall strumpets into the church is that it sends a strong signal to younger women that it's totally OK to $chmooze and slooze, coz you can always repent later. This is NOT a healthy example to be encouraged.

The Christian Manosphere has concluded that whether or not these women have truly repented or not, Coram Deo, it doesn't make her any different or better as marriage material, Coram Mundo. It's good for her, but it is a repentance devoid of any potential marital bliss, as it fails to impart the blessings of obedience to anyone else, i.e. her husband and kids (if any).

Related

- Dalrock: Solipsism as a religious experience. (2013/8/27)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): The Feminist Life Script (2020/12/17)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Upper Middle Class Career Life Script Model (2021/5/17)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Importance of Biblical Marriage (2022/1/3)
- Σ Frame: The Wages of Sin are Paid in Marriage (2022/10/15)
- Σ Frame: 7 Things Men Want out of a Woman in Marriage (2023/5/17)

Post Fall Slores — The Born Again Variety : Nala Ray

Jack · 18 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A case study of one type of Post-Fall / Born Again Slores.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Note: This post was requested by Tubal Cain.
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

Nala Ray (IG) was a big name On1yF@ns content creator who also did P0rn, including lesb!@n and gangbang stuff.

Strangely, there's a few chicks that go by very similar monikers, e.g. Nala Rey, Nana Ray, Nara Ray, Rana Ray, et al. So just to be clear, she's that fuchsia-haired chick on the Whatever podcast who bragged about how much she loves cheating.

Nala Ray's natural claim to fame is her near-perfect physiological proportions and symmetry, and her stupendous WHR golden ratio of 0.62 that will transform any T-fueled man into a SuperSimp in a heartbeat.

Nala Ray's Biography

In interviews and on her social media, Nala Ray revealed that she had a deeply troubled childhood. As a child, Ray was given strict rules, homeschooled, and isolated. Her parents were frequently absent, fought often, and did not have much money. They divorced and remarried each other.

Ray says she was 'molested' at age 13 by a boy she knew, and this experience shaped her view of sex as a way of gaining power. Her view of Sex = Power is manifested in how she has mastered the art of being bubbly, charming, curious, playful, sensual, and sexy@ss cute, and she has used these skills to generate proliferous clicks, views, and income.

Familial dysfunction and sexual m0lestation / r@pe / traff!cking are common among P0rn stars and Born Again

Slores.

Ray is also the daughter of a pastor (which reinforces yet another stereotype). She said her father caused “three consecutive church splits”, and is now “facing a prison sentence”. So she has ‘Daddy Issues’ as well.

In 2023, she claimed to have 7,000 online boyfriends providing her with an income of $300,000 a month. She said her online relationships are better and more fulfilling than real-life boyfriends, primarily because her virtual fap-fans have already accepted her choice of profession and don’t give her a hard time about it.

In late 2023, she claimed to have been repentant, the typical “I’m saved” evangelical profession of faith. She was baptized on 2023/12/26, and then ‘married’ her boyfriend, Jordan Giordano (IG). Then she rebranded herself as a Christian TradCon. Now she hosts cooking shows that are highly sexualized. She simulates sensual sex acts on spatulas, spoons, rolling pins, etc. while she moans and groans about how delicious the food is, etc.

Charlie Kirk, The Daily Wire, and other TradCon mouthpieces have championed her as a model of repentance. Michael Knowles did an interview with her, and he was mesmerized by her, like a deer in the headlights.

Moreover, her flamebuoyant personality and overt sex appeal prevents any critical analysis from happening. Whether she’s truly converted or not is a triviality; men, including ‘Christian’ men, still see her as a sex symbol and brain-lull about sucking her and F_cking her. The whole deal surrounding her conversion is sketchy and surreal.

The Manosphere 2.0 Video World covered Nala Ray heavily in early 2024 following her ‘conversion’, but recently, she’s come back into the limelight. Here’s one such take.

Pearl Daily: Pearl EXPOSES FAKE Trad Wife Nala Ray While Baking (2025/2/11)*

Heh. Nala fondles that rolling pin like a queefing queen, but other than that, she’s pretty clumsy in the kitchen. It’s hard to shift trades and learn new skills when you’ve been well-trained and well-paid to work in another very old profession.

In the intro, Pearly says it all.

> “…there is an OnlyF@ns model to Christian conservative Pipeline, and Conservatives are just eating it up. They want their religion to be right so bad that they’re willing to accept anyone and everyone who gets their > head dunked in water. Gone are the days when you had to do real work, character change, stop seeking attention, and … really grow in who you are as a person. Instead, in 2025, in the modern church, you can just say "sorry", that you didn't mean it, dunk your head in water, and you are fully accepted and allowed to do pretty much anything, and nobody can question you."

Incentives

Pearl investigated Nala Ray's motivations in the following video.

Pearl Daily: Why Michael Knowles and the Media Got It Wrong About Nala Ray's 'Christian Conversion' (2024/11/13)

In the last segment of this video (starting at 59:00 minutes), Pearl details 6 reasons why Ex-H0es become Christians.

1. Trendy
2. Find a Husband
3. Clout
4. Virtue Signaling
5. Money (from books, podcasts, social media, etc.)
6. Free Therapy

Reading between the lines of an article at The New York Post: Pastor's daughter leaves OnlyFans career behind after finding Jesus, and new boyfriend (2024/3/28) [Archive], we learn that Nala Ray's conversion may have had a Good D!cking™ attached to it. (Because of her participation in P0rn and OnlyF@ns, it's impossible to believe that she would NOT be sexually involved with her boyfriend.)

> "The content creator said that her current partner helped propel her towards change.
>
> "Honestly, it was crazy. He's actually a devout Christian, he started praying over me and sending me Bible verses and just being so loving in a way that wasn't romantic…"

Translation: He tore me down with the truth and he wasn't a b!tch simp about it. I was humbled and my tulip bloomed immediately.

Jordan Giordano, Nala Ray, and Pastor Cliffe Knechtle.

Good D!ckings™ are known to produce profound, radical transformations in a woman's appearance, attitude, beliefs, interests, and even personality. Could this have led to a genuine conversion to Christ? Or is it merely a C0ck conversion of psychological conformity to the object of her desires? It is quite possible that these conversions are equivalent.

In this respect, Nala Ray is different from the typical Born Again Slore. Most BAS' go to church to find a husband, but Nala Ray found a 'husband' who led her to church and the Christian faith.

Of course, most Born Again Slores who show up at your nearby Evangelical Protestant MegaChurch are not anywhere near as simp $chmoozing sexy@ss gorgeous or sexcessful as Nala Ray. However, they all follow a similar Life Script.

Other Examples

There's a long list of chicks who went from P0rn to Church and then to the Altar. Nala Ray is just another blip on the Laydar by comparison. Here's a shortlist of the most famous.

Patrice Roldan, AKA Nadia Styles

- Crystal Bassette; More
- Teresa Carey
- Brittni de la Mora, AKA Brittni Ruiz, Jenna Presley
- April Garris (wiped off the net, except a mention here)
- Shelley Lubben, AKA Roxy (1968-2019)
- Alexandra Mayers, AKA Monica Foster (wiped off the net, except for here and here)
- Crissy Outlaw née Moran
- Sophie Rain; More
- Melissa Scott, AKA Barbie Bridges
- Bree Solstad
- Patrice Roldan, AKA Nadia Styles — A Hispanic P0rn starlet famous for interracial double penetration and squirting. She began her P0rn career in 2004, at the age of 22. Through Shelley Lubben's Pink Cross organization, she converted to Christianity in 2008 and became an opponent of p0rn0gr@phy. She returned to p0rn0gr@phy in 2014. By the time she retired in 2018, she had recorded 540 adult films.
- Courtney Tillia; More
- Danielle Williams

P0rn star, Crissy Outlaw née Moran
 H/T: Cornerstone: Worthy Girls (2025/6/6)*

 Probably a genuine conversion, IMO.*

Related

- Σ Frame: The Feminist Life Script (2020/12/17)
- Red Pill Dad: Why Pr0$t!tut!0n will always be a shameful job including OnlyF@ns (2020/12/22)
- Σ Frame: The Centrality of Sex in Western Culture (2021/2/8)
- Σ Frame: Slut Faming (2023/11/21)
- Nick Jones: Nala Ray Turned Down $20 Million For Jesus!? INSANE Transformation! (2024/4/16)
- In Between Sundays: Nala Ray ADMITS To LYING About Conversion? (2024/11/22)

Nala Ray was interviewed by Brittni de la Mora.

- Church Leaders: 'The Devil Has a Budget,' Former OnlyFans Star Nala Ray Tells Women Considering Joining the Platform (2025/4/25)

Jack and NovaSeeker wrote a series on OnlyF@ns back in January of 2021.

- Σ Frame: The Rise of the Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/4)
- Σ Frame: Why is the Online Amateur Sex Industry Attractive to Women? (2021/1/6)
- Σ Frame: The Learning Psychology of Women Who Participate in the Online Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/13)
- Σ Frame: The Slow Train Wreck – A Cautionary Tale (2021/1/18)
- Σ Frame: The Addictive Nature of the Online Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/20)
- Σ Frame: It was God's Will for Her to be a Stripper (2021/1/22)
- Σ Frame: Lessons from the Train Wreckage (2021/1/25)
- Σ Frame: The Train Wreck — Speculative Causes, Influences, and Alternate Outcomes (2021/2/1)

The story of Nikole Mitchell is this archetype in reverse, i.e. she's first religious and then went OnlyF@ns.

Post Fall Slores — The Bible Thumping Variety: Girls Gone Bible

Jack · 20 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A case study of another type of Post-Fall / Born Again Slores.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Note 1: This post was requested by Tubal Cain.
Note 2: Due to the difficulty of finding high-quality images (e.g. Reitsma can't keep her cheap camera straight), some photos shown below have been cropped, denoised, and sharpened to a higher resolution (but not edited otherwise) using AI technology.
Warning: Some images may be NSFW.
Length: 4,000 words
Reading Time: 22 minutes

Intro

It is said that all beauty looks the same, while every instance of ugliness has its own unique gooniness.

This means that the closer two women are to the objective standard of beauty, the more alike they will appear. Hair color and style, height, and even r@ce will fade away in comparison to the shimmering glory of aesthetic perfection.

So it is with Angela Halili and Arielle Reitsma, AKA Girls Gone Bible, a couple of single, dolled-up chicks living in L.A. who continue to defy the precipice of The Wall well into their 30s.

Since both women have an extremely high SMV, even for their age, it is difficult to tell who is who. For ease of reference, Halili is the one with the button nose and the bloated botox lips, and is therefore slightly more clownish. Reitsma, being 6 years older than Halili, is slightly more mature, more modest, and a little more polished in her personal presentation than Halili (but still pushing the limits of propriety). Also, Halili is taller and more slender with a pronounced WHR, and Reitsma is more 'QQ', 'thicc', and 'top-heavy', IYKWIM.

Angela Halili (left) and Arielle Reitsma (right).

Girls Gone Bible is a relatively new YouTube account (opened on 2023/5/3), but it has already amassed almost 70M views. That averages out to around 90K views per day!

Girls Gone Bible also has a TikTok account with almost 70K followers and 8.4M views.

These women certainly talk a fine Christian talk, rivaling some of the best preachers I've ever heard. But what follows below will reveal that they do not walk the walk nearly so well. Worse, they take pride in continually doling out bad life advice to young women.

Both ladies have done some small part acting gigs and modeling, experiences which have certainly added to their smooth social presentation skills. It is rumored that they were (or possibly still are) escorts and 'poker girls' in the Beverly Hills area.

But there's more … much more.

Biography: Angela Halili

Angela Halili (DOB: 1996/2/4; IG; TikTok; complete Bio; net worth ~$1.2M) is an Albanian American actress who attended the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. Her acting credits include the films The Space Between (2021), Sophia (2022), and Spin the Bottle (2024). She also appears as a scantily clad schoolgirl in episode 1.7 of the series American Horror Stories (2021). She is currently working on a film entitled The Gates of Hades, starring as Eve.

One alarming red flag is that her acting roles are far from Christian-like, as we might expect from someone producing Girls Gone Bible. Instead, the films that Halili has starred in are mostly horror films, some depicting fornication and showcasing the occult / W!tchcraft.

For instance, Spin the Bottle is a horror film in which a group of young adults play spin the bottle in an abandoned house where a brutal massacre occurred prior. After they pair off and start fornicating, evil spirits appear and begin slaughtering them. Halili's character is stabbed to death, and then she appears as a ghost.

Moreover, her acting roles actively feed the female-specific preponderance on FEAR Fantasy and women's obsession with The Ordinance of FEAR, as I wrote about recently. I believe this has contributed heavily to the popularity of Girls Gone Bible.

On a more positive note, she has shared her personal journey of overcoming alcoholism and eating disorders and finding healing through her faith, emphasizing the transformative power of God's love. She claims to have been sober since 2020 (age 24 at that time).

Halili once said that God had put her and Reitsma in Hollywood so they could spread His word in a place where it was needed the most. Or maybe they chose Hollywood to build their careers as actresses. Or both by serendipity.

In her discussions, she has mentioned past relationships that didn't align with her faith, highlighting the importance of finding someone who shares her devotion to Jesus. Although secular critics have castigated her for promoting female submission, I've not yet found a script where she mentions how submission to father or husband is an important expression of a Christian woman's obedience to God (and she probably won't if she expects to remain popular among her female audiences).

Rumor has it that Halili once dated or hooked up with Matt Rife. She is currently in a relationship with a handsome man named John (YCMTU), who is the spitting image of the actor Brock Harris. She seldom calls him by name, but prefers to call him "my best friend", "my boy", "my treasure", etc. (IMO, these particular pet names are not very respectful to him, and this casual attitude towards him does not bode well for a future Christian marriage. I get the strong feeling that their relationship is all about HER, NOT about him or even them.)

Angela Halili with her current flame, John.

Biography: Arielle Reitsma

Reitsma has a more impressive acting and modeling career, but a much smaller internet footprint (which you'd think is a good thing, but later I concluded that it's NOT for reasons discussed below). Here's what I could find on her.

Arielle Reitsma (DOB: 1989/11/9; IG; TikT0k;) was originally from a working-class family in Massachusetts.

In her late teens, she won the Miss Hawaiian Tropic pageant crown. She modeled from that time up until she was about 30 (I'm guessing) [example]. During my search, I found many photos of her modeling swimsuits and other revealing clothing (see images below). I also found some nude selfies of her, although I don't think it was marketed as P0rn.

In 2011, there was an online controversy in which people claimed that Arielle Reitsma was a pseudonym, and that Amanda Roadmen was her real name. (Amanda Roadmen was a model who posed for much more revealing shots, and yes, they look so identical that it's difficult to tell them apart, especially with lighting and makeup.) She denied this in a video.

Reitsma began acting at a young age, ~16. She is recognized for her appearances in the sitcom, How I Met Your Mother (2005); a crude adult comedy entitled College Humor Originals (2006); The Middle (2007); and the music video production, Spider Mountain: No Way Down (2011). She has also appeared in the films, Rock of Ages (2012) as a s1utty girl; Corn Star (2013); Don Jon (2013), a movie about P0rn and love; American Satan (2017); and Walk of Fame (2017); among many others.

She appeared nude in American Satan (2017), and in season 1 episode 1 of Winning Time — The Rise of the Lakers Dynasty (2022), in which she portrays a bedridden bunny in the Playboy mansion.

Overall, Reitsma's acting career has rather debased themes, e.g., casual sex, glorifying male simpery or weakness as an object of ridicule, nudity, P0rn as a topic or lifestyle (but not as a genre), etc. But OTOH, one could argue that this is mild compared to the rest of Hollywood.

Reitsma is rumored to be dating by other media producers such as Tana Mongeau. In her podcasts, she denies (or avoids admitting) being in a relationship, but reading between the lines, she intimates that she's involved with men to an unknown extent. (See next section for proof of admission.)

Also of note, she has many IG posts that were reposted on various webpages, and have since been deleted. I suspect that she has a past that's been wiped clean off the net.

Arielle Reitsma modeling for Martina Liana Bridal.

A Snapshot of Their Current Faith Outlook

I poked around a few of the GGB videos for a while, casually looking for one that might provide a bon mot of their current spiritual stature.

Here's a good example that I think is representative. I've taken the liberty to fill in the unseemly admissions that she left unsaid, presumably to alleviate her shame. [Text in brackets is mine.]

In one video talk about Purity (2024/4/6), from 17:50 to 21:35, Arielle Reitsma says,

> "I was watching what [God] did [in my life]. I was seeing the rapid miracles and changes He was doing in my life, and how he had changed my life so quickly because I was … being obedient, and because I was so … so submitted to Him, and because I was constantly running to Him, and I had this beautiful relationship with Him, > and I'm watching what he's doing in my life, … and I'm doing the right thing. But then … [I realized that] I was like almost picking and choosing what I wanted to do. … He started planting the seed in me, because in my head, I thought, "Well, I'm in a relationship, and it's okay. I'm not just [a common s1ut] … I'm not sleeping around. I've never done that. I've always been in relationships."

So there it is. Reitsma IS (or has been) romantically involved with more than just one man, but instead of counting heads and dividing by 3, she offers a generic reference to "relationships" with 'men'. She won't tell any details, but I'd guess that includes sexual intimacy.

Arielle Reitsma

The Slore Tell is that she thinks "being in relationships" (plural) is somehow different from, or more morally justifiable than "sleeping around". Dalrock described this deception back in the early days of the Christian Manosphere 1.0.

Honey, if you're having sex outside of marriage, you're acting immorally by Christian standards. You're "sleeping around". If you're only riding one man at a time, it's called serial monogamy. But it's still "sleeping around" i.e. fornication. It's as simple as that.

The good news (or bad, depending on how you think of it) is that this was an epiphany to her.

> "But I … I was getting signs like, I felt it in my gut, and then I'll never forget … we were in church one day and … Pastor Tor … was talking about laying down the sexual sin. … That's when it started."

Confirmed. She was "sleeping around" in her 'relationships'.

> "I didn't think I was doing anything wrong, and then he just talked about [repenting of sexual sin], and then one day I just knew [that I was a fornicator], and I had to lay it down, and I couldn't lay it down on my own. So I ran to Him. I said, "God I need your help." … I knew … I couldn't do it on my own, because it was … something that's been a part of my life, in my relationship, and in my intimacy with my partner… [Fornicating] was a way that I found love, if I'm being completely vulnerable and honest."

Congratulations! She can admit that sexual intercourse satisfies her sinful soul as well as her chiseled craven chasm. Totally natural and normal, but nevertheless a sin. But I'll give her some credit, because this kind of introspection, followed by a real confession (although muted) is rare among women.

> "I didn't know that you could just connect to your partner without that [having regular orgasms] …"

This sounds like the statement of a woman who did not grow up in church, or who did not have a Christian father around to coach her about men, or sex, or the value of sexual purity, or her own fleshly nature.

Arielle Reitsma

> "I think what really made me say, "I have to lay this down", is fear — fear of Him, because I heard Him so loudly. Be like, "You follow Me or you don't follow Me at all!" And so I [repented of my sin]."

There's the FEAR dynamic that I've written about before.

> "He gives us so much grace, and he gave me so much grace. But I couldn't … sit on here and talk [about being a Christian] and have one foot in and one foot out anymore. I was sick, like I started to feel really sick about it, and so I just knew it. It was like one day, I was like, "I can't … [F_ck around] anymore. I have people, I have young people that are looking up to me, and that are following me, and that want to be like me, and that are listening to me, and actually respect me. I have to live a holy respectable life."

I find it satisfying to know that the responsibilities of hosting her own YouTube channel and getting regular feedback from viewers are holding her accountable for her actions.

> "There were moments where I thought to myself, "I'm never going to be able [to stop F_cking my Ch@d of the month]. How am I ever going to be able to do this? To just lay all this down?" But … because I feared Him so much … and there's a difference between fearing the Lord and being scared of the Lord. Fearing the Lord means you run to Him because you can't do it by your own power. So you run to Him and say, "Jesus, I can't do this on my own. I need you to fill me up with the Holy Spirit. I need you to take it out of me. Take the lust out of me. Give me a clean new pure heart." And boy, will He! You think that it's impossible; and I'm telling you, the way I live, holy and just and clean, is so … it's just so … it's not hard… it's not as hard as you think it is. So yeah, that was the day I laid it down."

There's a rare, albeit veiled, admission of how much women crave C0ck! Even so, going without sex is a lot easier for women to do than it is for men.

Why Not Marriage?

Listening to some of their other videos on YouTube and TikTok, there's a lot of talk about the importance of sexual purity and repenting of sexual sin, but oddly, there's no mention of the correct response to this issue, which is to marry. Occasionally, they'll mention the men they're in relationships with, but it is not clear whether these men have any interest in marrying these chicks, or their level of commitment, or even whether they "share their devotion to Jesus" or not. Apparently, Marriage and Husband are low on their list of priorities, or maybe not even a part of their Life Script equation. Apparently, the girth of d!ck they take into their vags, and how to cope with living without this as a Christian, is the paramount concern. The quality of faith of the man possessing that d!ck, and his willingness to commit to her, is a minor issue.

Similar to Scott's Axiom, when nominal Christian women say they want a man who "shares their devotion to Jesus", you need to add, "…and who has a big beautiful C0ck" to get the whole truth.

Arielle Reitsma

But why are they NOT talking about marriage? I mean, if they're going to be Christian role models to young single Christian women, then they need to be telling them, first and foremost, how to avoid all this frustration and sexual sin by getting married young and submitting to their husbands. Then they'll never need to have this sordid epiphany that sex is sinful and wrong. It isn't, in the right context of marriage, and it is harmful to ever experience this view of sex.

But apparently, living the independent life and sampling the carousel for a few more years before reaching the epiphany that fornication is sinful is the predominant concern. Besides, they cannot very well advocate marriage when they're pushing past 30 and are still unmarried.

And these are 'Christian' women.

Someone has to tell her that women — women just like themselves — put themselves into a limbo of lust when they postporn marriage until after they've turned 30 and forn around in the meantime while unmarried. (I seriously doubt that they've never had the opportunity to marry.) But who is that 'someone'? If not father or husband, God Himself will hold their toes to the flames of refinement through their viral popularity. They have admitted that the grace of God is at work in their lives and ministry. I think this is true, but NOT in the way that they think.

Arielle Reitsma, QQ flesh deluxe.

Conclusions

As I've been searching and reviewing information about Halili and Reitsma, one question I've been asking myself is whether their 'glow' is from their beauty, and/or the contentment of being popular, and/or any possible sexual liaisons, or is it because of their faith. In their early years (before starting GGB), I noticed a contemptuous annoyance and a tired annui in their expressions, leading me to conclude that their Halo Effect was definitely of fleshly origin, at least at that time. More recently (since starting GGB), I see more genuine authenticity and sincerity in their self-expression. I guess it is because they are motivated to submit to God in order to make their GGB enterprise work — but the key is that they are learning to submit to God.

Negatives

Halili and Reitsma appear to be upstanding Christian women on the surface and in their GGB broadcasts. However, the deeper I dived into my search, the darker it became. When I uncovered depictions of fornication, nudity, and the occult, I concluded that Halili and Reitsma are straight out of Hollywood, which is about as bad as it gets (with the exception of the P0rn industry).

It's hard to decide who is the 'worse' of the two. They're both pretty bad, but in different ways.

Halili and Reitsma look nothing like virgins in waiting, or even stereotypical church ladies. They look like young sex pot actresses on the outer fringes of Hollywood, which is essentially what they are, except that they also have a supplementary acting career on their Christian YouTube platform. And they are very talented actors!

They stress the importance of modesty while wearing sundresses, while in other posts, they're baring their washboard abs in stylish midriff tops, and racy skin-tight sports suits that leave little to the imagination. All while donning golden crucifix earrings and necklace pendants.

Make no mistake, this incongruity between their fundamentalist Christian message and their worldly, wizened bimbopolitan appearance is central to their popularity. Sex always sells, even within the Christian community.

Angela Halili

As Amanda Marcotte wrote,

> "What Halili and Reitsma are selling is a "mix between the Hawk Tuah Girl and the prosperity gospel," according to religion professor Bradley Onishi, host of the "Spirit and Power" podcast. As counterintuitive as this may seem to outsiders, Onishi said, it's a huge deal in evangelical culture when young people perceived as "fashionable" or "cool" who could be hanging out at "cool clubs or parties" are seen as giving that up and "committing themselves to God." That identity can also make them accessible to more secular users."
>
> Salon (Amanda Marcotte): "Girls Gone Bible": Spicy Christian podcast sells young women on MAGA. Will scandal hurt or help? (2025/4/4)

Furthermore, Halili and Reitsma are ADIEU dirty blonde Wh!te chicks with purrfecta bodies and faces and a Hollywood polished look and demeanor, and who have the good genes to maintain their SMV well past 30. Altogether, this makes for a convincing sales pitch for the delusion that any young Christian girl can straddle a Ch@d and 'repent' later, just as they are (or were) doing.

Positives

On a positive note, Girls Gone Bible is offering a sense of community and religious fellowship to younger women who want to be seen as feminine, fashionable, and sexually attractive; standing in contrast with the Ugly Feminist, SIW model touted by the wider culture. In this, I think Halili and Reitsma aim to provide an 'acceptable' Christian role model for young women — not too Fem!n@z!, but not too prudish either. Readers might argue whether this is merely an appeal to a different style of Worldliness that happens to be more Biblical by comparison, or if they are, in fact, touching young girls' hearts for Christ and offering a good example to be followed. IMO, GGB is better than any secular models, and it is also an improvement over the current embodiment of Churchian Feminism espoused by converged churches.

It may be too soon to see any Spiritual Fruits from Girls Gone Bible, but I have no doubt that they're putting a positive spin on the Christian faith for many young people who would otherwise be losing interest in Christianity and drifting away from God and church. To be generous, maybe that is enough to plant some seeds.

There is one more point that I believe is a positive sign. To summarize a great amount of their talk, they said that as soon as they started their Girls Gone Bible broadcast, they both had an immediate reckoning with God. They stated that their sin became more clear to them than ever before, and they realized that they had to set a good example as role models of young, single, feminine Christianity.

Praise God!

Angela Halili (left) and Arielle Reitsma (right) appear on Girls Gone Bible.

Here's an excerpt that captures the tenor of this spiritual advent.

> "Halili said, "God told me, 'If you focus on purity, I'll focus on growth.' And that's been our guiding principle ever since."
>
> Their approach to the podcast is simple yet intentional. They pray over every topic, ensuring that each episode aligns with what they feel God is calling them to share.
>
> "We don't just talk about what's trendy," Reitsma explained. "We ask God, 'What do you want us to talk about?' And somehow, it always aligns with what our listeners need."
>
> Relevant: From Rock Bottom to Global Impact: The Story Behind 'Girls Gone Bible' (2025/1/13)

In saying, "If you focus on purity, I'll focus on growth", I think God was asking them to be sexually pure, which is telling of their spiritual condition up until that time. No surprise. I interpret 'growth' to mean the growth of the popularity of Girls Gone Bible, as well as their personal spiritual growth unto maturity.

I think 'purity', in this sense, means their total repentance from lust, fornication, and such. It does NOT mean a total elimination of all things unclean and unseemly in their discussions. The sensationally appealing and also redemptive element of Girls Gone Bible is that they are not sugarcoating anything, the messy parts of their lives, the doubts, the struggles, the sins and temptations.

At a Trump rally, the Girls Gone Bible podcasters called on God to condemn Trump's critics.

But perhaps the shortcoming is that they aren't sharing enough of the very specific (and embarrassing) personal information that would clue young chicks into the pitfalls of their own poor decisions. There still remains an aura of plausible deniability, the "Oh Wow! I don't know how it all happened!" schtick, followed by the obligatory "Yeah. God is so gracious!"

It all looks and sounds so tenderheartedly pious, but when you step back and look at them through a Red Pill lens, they're just showcasing their own foolish ignorance, solipsism, and stupidity.

Yet, God can still use this foolishness.

God's grace is revealed in the way that they are cleansed from their past through their confessional exposé (James 5:16), and that other women can learn and be edified from their testimonies (2 Corinthians 1:3-7) — NOT that they've somehow escaped the consequences of their sin by "focusing on God", as they seem to think. That's God's forbearance and mercy. The consequences are still coming, and are already knocking up their ovaries (Galatians 6:7-8).

Sources

- Daily Mail: Meet the Christian 'Call Her Daddy': Bible-thumping bombshells Arielle Reitsma and Angela Halili take social media by storm with pious podcast – but some believers aren't happy with their sexy sermons and sinful lifestyle (2023/8/5)
- New York Post: Sexy 'Girls Gone Bible' stars slammed for Christian podcast: 'Using the Lord for personal gain' (2023/8/5)
- Relevant: From Rock Bottom to Global Impact: The Story Behind 'Girls Gone Bible' (2025/1/13)
- Salon (Amanda Marcotte): "Girls Gone Bible": Spicy Christian podcast sells young women on MAGA. Will scandal hurt or help? (2025/4/4)

Related

- Σ Frame: Why do Christian women have the reputation of being whores? (2019/2/23)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Christian vs. Non-Christian Women – A Negligeeable Difference (2019/3/20)

- Σ Frame (Lexet): Yes, Women Lust Too (2019/12/6)
- Σ Frame: Christian vs. Non-Christian Women (2020/2/8)
- Σ Frame: Average age of first time sexual experience (data) and what this means for Christians (2020/12/20)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Sticking the Landing is for the Elite (2021/5/10)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): ADIEU HUSsies Sell a Broken Script (2021/5/12)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Kardashian Fantasy (2021/5/24)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): A New Cultural Projection of Christianity (2022/6/6)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame: Slut Faming (2023/11/21)

Post Fall Slores — The Bumpy Landing Variety: Tomi Lahren

Jack · 23 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A case study of the most common type of Post-Fall / Born Again Slores.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Intro

The third type of Post-Fall / Born Again Slore that I'll cover is the Bumpy Landing Variety. This type of Post-Fall Slore is the most common, and is ubiquitous in American Catholic and Protestant churches, especially Evangelical churches.

I've written a full description of Tomi Lahren before, so here, I'll summarize her life and describe how she fits the Bumpy Landing archetype.

About Tomi Lahren

Tomi Lahren (DOB: 1992/8/11) is a native of Rapid City, South Dakota. In her lifetime, she's lived in Las Vegas NV, San Diego CA, Dallas TX, Los Angeles CA, and now Nashville TN.

She studied broadcast journalism and political science at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, and graduated with a B.A. in 2014. Lahren hosted and co-produced the university's political roundtable show, The Scramble. She also served as the first intern under Kristi Noem, the Republican Congresswoman from South Dakota.

Lahren's claim to fame as a conservative pundit is wholly based on her exceptional talent for highly articulated ranting, and for consistently picking out the most hot-button targets of her rants. She's attacked B L M, gun laws, and immigration, as well as Beyonce, Colin Kapernick, and Kamala Harris. She's taken President Barack Obama to task on a multitude of issues, including his pro stance on fracking, and for inviting Jay Z, a rapper and admitted drug dealer, to the White House to hang out. Lahren's rant against President Obama's response to the 2015 Chattanooga shooting was what propelled her to national stardom.

Although she comes from a family of Marines and ranchers and claims to be a Christian, readers will learn below that she doesn't live like a Christian or even the conservative MAGA maiden she presents herself to be.

- In college, she was very liberal, as shown in her positions on The Scramble.
- In March 2017 (age 24), Lahren revealed that she was pro-abortion, an admission that ruined her career on "The Blaze".
- In June 2020 (age 27), she came out in favor of same sex marriage.
- In August 2020, her 14 minute long PSA on "Boyish Men" chasing "Thotianas" (sexy sirens from Eastern Europe) made her the talk of the Manosphere.
- From age 23 (if not earlier) up until she 'married' at the age of 30, she had a series of relationships, and I suspect they were not even monogamish.

The details about Lahren's test drive / pit stop / love life, and her Bumpy Landing are expanded below.

The Season of True Singleness

I couldn't find any evidence of Lahren having any boyfriends in high school or college. After watching some of her roundtables on The Scramble, I could believe she was still a virgin at that time, despite attending UNLV, a university famous for debauchery.

Las Vegas Tango, by Gil Evans. The most brilliant and simultaneously most horrible jazz composition that ever captured the lewd lusts, lumbering dissipation, and presumptuous depravity of Las Vegas Nevada in song.
As attractive as she was, it might be hard to believe she was a single virgin up to the age of 23, especially while attending UNLV. However, I can believe it because I knew women just like her when I was in college in the late 90s.

You see, some things never change.

American Universities were (and still are) a languishing evil La La Land swarming with bratty 12 year old girls trapped inside the bodies of sexually attractive young women. They couldn't get a boyfriend (short of putting out) because they were forever engaged in irritating, never-ending, brain-dead loquaciousness, vain solipsistic fantasies, and taking offense at the mention of anything practical, or realistic, or true. There were literally no takers for chicks like her.

Tomi Lahren, ca. 2014.

There were three ways that college girls thought they could get any serious attention from men:

1. If they Grew Up and showed themselves to be wife material.
2. If they crossed that line of moral indecency and/or became sexually active.
3. If they made significant career accomplishments, i.e. become a SIW.

Of course, only the first two actually 'work' to capture men's genuine attention. The third is a Feminist delusion, but many young chicks believed this for decades, up until recently.

So essentially, it was The Feminine Dilemma (or The Feminine Christian Marriage Quadrilemma for those who were actually marriage-minded at an appropriate age).

The vast majority of these women were self-centered and NOT marriage-minded, so they made the life-defining mistake of 'postporning' 1, and pursuing 2 and 3 in no set order.

But even in this case, men would nibble the bait all day, but they still wouldn't bite the hook, and these chicks were too immature to know how to use honeycraft and/or sex to entice a man to stick around for the long haul. This is precisely how many of them got started on the Carousel.

Nowadays, men won't even nibble the bait, because the bait is either tasteless or bitter, and the hook is just too dangerous to fathom.

The Glory Days

The Glory Days, as it is called, is always accompanied by a sexual awakening and a social blossoming — a coming of age and a revealing of one's potential. It is also fraught with important life-changing decisions.

Lahren's Glory Days began when she started dating Jerad Christian, a Navy Seal, in February 2015. Christian was a major influence in her life and was probably the first man to open her up to experience life, love, and sex, and thereby imprint her mind and soul. He influenced Lahren to become radical Right wing in her politics and inspired her to speak out against Obama's handling of the shooting in Chattanooga that left five military personnel dead — the rant which shot her to stardom. They were together until at least August 2015, or maybe until the summer of 2016. (Not much info about them remains on the net.)

Jerad Christian and Tomi Lahren, ca. 2015.

In my Biblical / Red Pill informed opinion, Jerad Christian is Tomi Lahren's true husband in the eyes of God (or he was, depending on what you believe about marriage). After Lahren blasted to stardom and her own fame shot to her head, their relationship disintegrated, and so did her morality, as well as her tastes in men.

The great defining spiritual decision in Lahren's life was whether to stick with her first love, Jerad Christian, recognize him as her God ordained husband, and submit to him, even if that would have cost her her career, fame, independence, money, ~~2.3~~ no, 6 more years of sex with other men, and other such Whorldly ambitions. Of course, we don't know the details of the private conversations that took place between the two of them, but we all know which life option she chose.

The Season of Faux Singleness

From October 2016 to January 2017, Lahren was cozy with Chase McNary, who was a runner-up on season 12 of "The Bachelorette".

Now enter the high-status Beta Orbiter vying for her affections. In March 2017, she began receiving attention from Brandon Fricke, a handsome, influential, and wealthy sports management professional and congressional candidate.

Tomi Lahren and Brandon Fricke.

In August and September 2017, Lahren was rumored to be dating Kevin Martin, a Black Republican. That must've made Frick so fricking jealous.

Lahren finally settled for Frick in 2018, and they were engaged in June 2019. (Lahren was 26 at the time.) She called off the engagement in April 2020, after Fricke's campaign failed. Fricke apparently found it difficult to get over her, because he kept his online profile status as engaged to Lahren for years after their split. Beta Orbiter status confirmed.

Now enter the unavailable Alpha. For several months in 2020, Lahren was seen cavorting and drinking with Jay Cutler,* a retired football quarterback who was going through a divorce with his wife, Kristin Cavallari, a reality star. Because of the timing, it was rumored that Lahren broke her engagement to Fricke because of her interest in Cutler, although she denied it. Nevertheless, his marital limbo stymied his relationship with Lahren.

Also, given their close association, I think it is possible that Cutler's popularity among women (including Lahren, et al.) was the last straw that broke Cutler's marriage, but that's just my speculation. Cavallari cited many many reasons for divorcing Cutler, but not this one.

 Not to be confused with the 4x Mr. Olympia, Hall of Fame bodybuilder by the same name.*

Jay Cutler and Tomi Lahren.

Lahren wasn't the only chick Cutler was seeing during the C0v!d lockdowns. He had been dating Samantha Robertson since before his divorce started in 2020, and was also seeing Jana Kramer, Madison LeCroy, and maybe others. (He and Robertson were engaged in November 2024.)

Cutler's divorce wasn't final until 2022, and by then, Lahren had moved on. Cutler went downhill after this, eventually hitting bottom when he was arrested for DUI and illegal possession of a weapon in October 2023. The fact that Cavallari published dozens of stories bashing him as a husband and father certainly didn't help.

But apparently, Cutler wasn't the only dude that Lahren was seeing either. She met her current husband, J. P. Arencibia, a former MLB pitcher, in January 2021. They married in October 2022, just 2 months after she had reached the magical age of 30. And wouldn't you know it, since then she's gained weight and has had cosmetic surgery. Moreover, she got married just moments before hitting the Wall. Women seem to have a knack for knowing exactly when that will happen, and will postpone marriage right up until the last minute of their youth. Or maybe they're just holding out for marriage before letting themselves go.

Tomi Lahren and J. P. Arencibia.

Conclusions

All in all, Tomi Lahren is a Feminist at heart, like most all Murican chicks of her generation (Millennials). She spent her 20s diligently following the Feminist / Career Life Scripts, chasing after her career as a sociopolitical mouthpiece, and postponed marriage until the ripe old age of 30.

Lahren was at her peak with Jerad Christian, and that's where she should've stayed, IMHO. As readers can see through the progression of photos above, since then, she's made the steady transition to become more fake, jaded, and materialistic with every passing relationship. (Or maybe that's who she's always been all along, and it just took her 8 years and 6+ men to "find herself".)

In summary, during this time, there have been at least 6 men, including 3 or 4 very high-profile men, that Lahren has burned through, leaving them all much worse for wear, especially the last one, Arencibia, who saddled up with her for that long dusty trudge into the sunset of a life well wasted (unless she decides to frivorce him later). Most of the men who were intimate with Lahren were very smitten by her. I'd guess it is because Crazies are a better bang in the bedroom.

But Lahren still hasn't repented of her ways, or wisened up to the truth of her own nature. In one interview, Lahren said her dating life has been so complicated, NOT because she postporned marriage and rode the CC, but because of her conservative social and political stances.

> "I've dated celebrities in the past who didn't want people to know that we were together because there would be a substantial amount of backlash."

Yes, that'll happen if they're married, like Jay Cutler was.

Tomi Lahren, ca. 2021. Note the sullen affect and wanky eye.

She added that she had to keep her relationships a secret in order to protect her career and the reputation of whoever it was that she was dating. Once again, we find that The Feminine Secret takes top priority.

Reading between the lines, it is apparent that Lahren always kept her hamster spinning on a Rolodex of mysterious A-listers that she kept on stand-by rotation.

Thus, Lahren is the epitome of the Post-Fall Slore who somehow manages to stick the Bumpy Landing. (ADIEU in her case.)

Looking at her history, one would not see any differences between her and her secular peers. There is not much evidence to conclude that she is a Christian. But nevertheless, she has consistently maintained that she is a Christian. Just earlier this month, she opened a new video platform on OutKick entitled Tomi Lahren is Fearless, in which she gave a recent video interview entitled, Busting the Unholy Business of Religion (2025/6/21).

But do not be deceived into thinking that her deluded self-image of Christianality makes her a good wife or a virtuous woman. Her concept of Christianity is only a cultural identification, as NovaSeeker described in The Amalgamation of Western Culture (2020/12/2) — a cultural identification that keeps her slowly aging face in the limelight, and her bank accounts rolling in the $$$.

Unfortunately, the warm, cushioned pews of American Evangelical Protestantism are packed with carbon copies of Tomi Lahren, except they're on IG, YouTube, Bumble, Hinge, and Tinder, instead of The Blaze and Fox News. Fortunately, they're not quite as b!tchy, nor biting, nor influential.

Sources

1. Wikipedia: Tomi Lahren
2. The Guardian: The rise of Tomi Lahren, the media star lampooned as 'white power Barbie' (2016/9/23)
3. Daily Wire (Amanda Prestigiacomo): 'A Lot Of Men Are Trash': Tomi Lahren Posts 14-Minute 'PSA For Boyish Men' (2020/8/5)
4. CelF: Tomi Lahren Boyfriends List (Dating History) (2022/12/6)

5. Nicki Swift: The Untold Truth of Tomi Lahren (2023/2/2)
6. The List: Fox News Star Tomi Lahren's Love Life Has Been A Disaster (2025/4/12)

Related

- Dalrock: Rules of the road for fornication. (2012/3/31)
- Dalrock: Intrasexual Competition and the Strong Independent Woman. (2013/8/11)
- Dalrock: Women's morphing need for male investment. (2013/8/24)
- Σ Frame: The Evils of Solipsism (2019/11/19)
- Σ Frame: Women's choice to be relevant (2020/2/6)
- Spawny's Space: A Lot Of Men Are Trash — Part I (2020/8/7)
- Spawny's Space: A Lot Of Men Are Trash — Part II (2020/8/9)
- Spawny's Space: A Lot Of Men Are Trash — Part III (2020/8/10)
- Σ Frame: Sappy Wall Day, Tomi Lahren! (2021/8/11)
- Whores and Ale: Woes Of The Basic Bitch (2020/8/11)
- Spawny's Space: Avoidance (2025/6/6)
- Spawny's Space: Bad Vibes (2025/6/9)

Pride is Stronger than Love

Jack · 25 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

It used to be that the humility of 'falling in love' was validating. Now, it is pride.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders; Feminine Submission;
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Love is Stronger than Pride

Fọlásadé Adú, AKA Sade, a British-Nigerian 24x platinum song artist, sang, "Love is stronger than Pride" in 1988. Take a moment to listen to it if you haven't already heard it. (Lyrics are captioned.) Prince once said this is the most beautiful song he ever heard.

The beauty of this song is expressed as the humility of realizing that the human object of one's desire fills an existential human need that no one else and nothing else can fulfill. The humility comes through the epiphany that one must sacrifice one's dignity, pride, and self-interest in order to preserve the continuing fulfillment of this need.

Back in the late 20th century, when Sade released this hit, most people had a sufficient grasp of this experience to impart meaning to these words. At that time, it was understood to mean that falling in love (being humbled by desire) can overwhelm one's self-defenses, pride being foremost, and thereby teach one to live a regenerated life within the joyful confines of love.

Lest we forget, this is how God intended us to experience romantic love. It is also why sexual purity is necessary for sanctification (1 Thessalonians 4:3-8). Illicit Sex Upsets the Balance of Sexual Authority that fosters the humility which makes romantic love deeply fulfilling.

Modern Love is Merely a Life Experience

Unfortunately however, the times have changed since Sade recorded this song in 1988. We do not hear people waxing poetic, saying, "Love is stronger than Pride", and talking about its meaning, quite as frequently as we did in decades past since Sade released this hit.

Since then, modern Feminism, and more specifically, female sexual liberation, has destroyed that understanding of love within the secular culture, and that particular concept of love has faded from public consciousness.

So what is the current dynamic that has superseded this ancient understanding of love?

The majority of women do not have enough faith, patience, and self-control to prepare themselves, humbly pray, and wait vigilantly for an answer to the existential question in their souls.

So instead of regarding themselves as a valuable commodity in the MMP, young women will sacrifice their sociosexual value by cashing out their SMV in the form of likes, views, escorting, hookups, OnlyF@ns, riding the CC, and other such 'experiences'. And these are just "experiences" mind you, which have no significance beyond the moment. Other "experiences" to be envied include tertiary education, careerism, getting married, having children, getting a divorce, traveling, and so on — all regarded as "experiences" without any lasting meaning.

Moreover, the humbling aspect of love is not completely absent, but has been redesignated as a "Life Experience".

So instead of cherishing the first relationship which induced the experience of love, we see women rabidly lusting for this experience for its own sake — and only for a brief time in their youth. Then, after their Glory Days have run their course, the relationship that introduced their first experience of the joyful humility of love is cast aside in favor of their worldly ambitions [Example], or to pursue the vain hope of reliving the experience with another, presumably better partner.

But the truth is, any other experience, or any other partner … is never as good as the first time.

Which leads one into ever deeper depravity and perversity, in a never-ending idolatrous life search for something … or anything comparable to that first intense rush of dopamine.

In a word, self-centered Pride is Stronger than Love.

Pride is Stronger than Love

Does the aphorism "Love is stronger than Pride", continue to have any meaning, relevance, or force?

Recent Red Pill discoveries have revealed that modern women's notions of love are not at all like the Christian concept of love. Neither is it like Men's concept of love. Rollo Tomassi and others have argued that women's concept of love is hypergamic, opportunistic, and self-seeking, while it is men who are the real romantics. (My previous analysis of this argument is here. ArchAngel's rebuttal is here.)

If the concept of love is understood to be hypergamic, opportunistic, and self-seeking, is it still true that "Love is stronger than Pride"?

In 2025, at its face, we might think this adage means that women must swallow their pride in order to fully capitalize on the tangible and visceral benefits of being a Poon-bearing careerist and Man-$Layer.

This is true in principle, but it doesn't apply to all women.

- It applies to women who willingly submit to their husbands in marriage.
- It applies to OnlyF@ns starlets who conform to stereotypical sexual semiotics in order to boost views and income $$$.
- It applies to women who recognize that they need to give, perform, produce (babies, meals, etc.), and sacrifice, and allow themselves to be used; to be helpful, useful, or ornamental (e.g. to a boss, husband, family, or community).

But outside of these and similar examples, most women will not do that. Agency is Anathema to the Female Fleshly Nature.

Thus, for many (or most) women living in the West today, Pride is much stronger than Love.

After considering all of the above, I believe the metaphysical dynamics behind the old saying, "Love is stronger than Pride", can now be better understood as, "Fear is Stronger than Hypergamy." I'll explain why in the next essay.

Related

- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority (2020/9/30)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23)
- The Rational Male: How Women can Return to Femininity (2025/6/25)

FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy

Jack · 27 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A woman's desire to feel Validated within a FEAR-based paradigm overwhelms her Hypergamous impulses.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders; Feminine Submission;
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

A Lust for Identity

Two previous essays explained why women are obsessed with the idea of women being overpowered by a man through coercion (e.g. r@pe fantasies), as well as female Fantasy Erotica / Pornolatry, and Horror, and more generally, why women are fascinated with FEAR and are attracted to ¡ScArY!

After studying this phenomenon further, I've come to the conclusion that women's innate obsession with FEAR is motivated by the need for identity, i.e. "Who am I in this paradigm of FEAR?"

There are two contrasting aspects of this existential question.

1. Intrinsic / Sexual Identity: She wants to 'know' that she is feminine (in comparison to a high SMV man) and can attract a high SMV man who is able to "own her" and overrule her.
2. Extrinsic / Social Identity: She wants to 'know' that she is loved and valued enough for a high SMV man to desire to "own her" and overrule her.

FEAR can appear in many types of manifestations. In the context of identity, FEAR is NOT necessarily the ¡ScArY! goosebumps aspect of a threatening FEAR (although it could be, and for some women, it must be, in order to be validating), but rather a deep, heartfelt reverence and respect of the one who is FEARed by one who has made peace with that FEAR.

Note: The FEAR evoked by The Wall is fundamentally different because it removes the possibility of answering the above questions in the affirmative.

Who Am I in this Paradigm of FEAR?

The reason why the FEAR dynamic answers (or perhaps 'feeds' is a better word) both of these questions is because…

1. As I described in the previous post, The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13), "Feeelz iz Realz", and if she cannot Feeel it, then it's not "Real" to her. The Feeelz is what convinces her to believe something as real, relevant, or true, whether it actually is or not. For the above questions, FEAR takes on an additional visceral signal of denoting the real presence of a power over her.
2. The most convincing, motivating, and powerful emotion of all is FEAR.
3. Both questions are the essence of Women's obsession with the idea of being overpowered by a man through coercion.
4. Fear directly feeds the substance of her validation pertaining to these questions.
5. This 'knowing' must necessarily be heart knowledge, NOT head knowledge.
6. This heart knowledge also includes the Biblical concept of 'knowing', i.e. sexual congress.
7. Without the element of FEAR, none of this makes any sense. FEAR is what makes being dominated by a man (or other powerful being) meaningful and 'real'.

Women can intuitively sense this need for soul identity in their bones and their loins. They know they can never escape the question of their own identity nor be totally free from its urges, and that they must find redemption from the curse of The Fall by fulfilling the Ordinance of FEAR in one way or another … and at any cost.

This is exactly why many women are utterly crazy.

The Catch 22 of Actualizing FEAR-based Validation

Apparently, the enticement of fulfilling her God ordained role of being overruled with and subdued by FEAR is even stronger than Hypergamy.

Let me explain.

Hypergamy has an evolutionary purpose of securing high(er) quality seed, but when women go Nutty-S1utty for catastrophic 'Bad Boys', ex-cons, gangsters, vampires, and the like, then this evolutionary benefit is pushed aside in favor of the FEAR dynamic.

Likewise, Sexual Desire loses its hind-brain Hypergamic function and becomes an expression of her soul's hunger for the humility of being dominated and ruled over — because this is what makes her FEARal soul Feeel 'loved', 'seen', and validated.

Whether or not the arrangement satisfies her Hypergamic instincts or is even a real, functional relationship is an afterthought. Authentic Love, Harmony, Loyalty, and other virtues, as well as consequences are non sequiturs, as Red Pillers already know.

The most important priority in female psychology is obtaining meaningful, satisfying answers to the above questions of identity.

For young unregenerated women, the only thing that matters in this life is solving the puzzle of her identity, even if she must sacrifice everything to find it.

The question in her mind then becomes … How can she find those answers to the questions of her feminine identity?

"Finding Herself"

Women often speak of the necessity to "Find themselves". They are wholly unable to describe what they mean by this, but they all intuitively understand what it means — and all that it implies.

When women speak of the need to "find themselves" [Example], they are referring to a psychological urge to settle the question of their identity within their hearts and minds. They crave the 'knowing' as described above.

The nearest euphemism for "finding herself" is '(S)Experience', because without faith in Father God, or a loving earthly father's influence, this is the only lonely way these questions can be addressed.

Women who say they need to "Find themselves" do not have enough faith, patience, and self-control to prepare themselves, humbly pray, and wait vigilantly for an answer to the existential question in their souls. So instead, they'll try to force an answer to this question by cashing out her SMV in the form of likes, views, hookups, careerism, traveling, and other 'experiences', instead of the proper, God ordained way via submitting herself to father and husband.

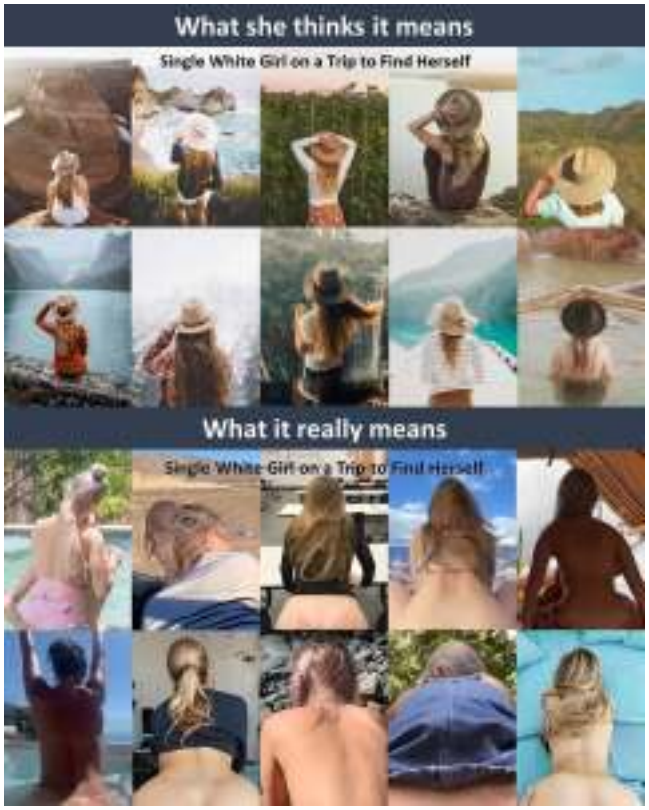
This is why "finding one's self" always involves sex with Ch@dz, i.e. dominant men, perhaps lots of sex with lots of bad men if that's what is necessary to settle the question in her soul. Whether a man is bad or not, or if he truly loves her or not, are non sequiturs. It even appears that women are not even able to discern this distinction, which is why fathers and brothers are necessary for vetting a young woman's love interests.



Conclusions

Putting all this together, we see why women are enthralled with and motivated by FEAR to the extent that they find identity in it, and pursue validation through it.

The bitterly unpleasant truth that no woman wants to face, is that women's flourishing and general happiness is predicated on their being dominated by a man and willingly submitting to one man.

It is NOT a coincidence that women are less happy now than ever before [1], because their FEAR Fantasy of being dominated by a studly man is slipping away, along with their V Power in this age of feminism.

There is no 'coercion' anymore, no 'overruling' as per Genesis 3:16b, and that is precisely the crotch of the dry rub that fails to Tingulate.

OTOH, if a woman already identifies as a woman who is loved by family, father, friends, and God, then finding an answer to this soul question will be less urgent but not altogether absent.

Christian women have found their identity (in Christ), come to terms with the entities who hold authority over her, and have made peace with this FEAR; whereas, unbelieving women are wholly controlled by this FEAR. This may be one of the most remarkable differences between Christian women and non-Christian women. This also elucidates why it is crucial for a woman to have a good relationship with her father.

References

1. Blanchflower, D.G., Bryson, A. The female happiness paradox. J Popul Econ 37, 16 (2024). [Link; PDF]

Related

- Chateau Heartiste: What Betas Can Learn From Women's Rape Fantasies (2011/4/18)
- Cultural Analysis & Philosophy: Why Feminists Enjoy Rape Fantasies (2018/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority (2020/9/30)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)
- Σ Frame: Taming the Savage Termagant (2025/4/21)
- Σ Frame: How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23)

Intersexual Power Dynamics in Morocco

Jack · 30 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Is it Pagan, or is it Biblical, or is it simply human nature?

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

Believe it or not, the idea that physical abuse is synonymous with twoo wuv is rather common in so-called less civilized / less developed cultures. This may explain why in many subcultures, it's basically OK for men to physically abuse women.

This post will cover Morocco as one such culture.

Physical Abuse Normalized as Love

Imane Bent El Howat (alt. Eman bint El Hawat; إيمان بنت الحوات; FB; YT), a female Musl!m singer from Morocco, released a song that describes an abusive relationship as totally normal, proper, and loving.

Step Feed (Mariam Nabbout): Men abusing women is a sign of love, according to this Moroccan song (2017/8/23)

This article once contained links to two videos from El Hawat, which have since been banned from YouTube for obvious reasons.

Imane Bent El Howat

A part of El Hawat's song says,

> "If she tastes his beatings, she'll never forget his love…

> his abuse is a sign of jealousy and passion."
> "A slap fixes the mood.
> They say a beating comes from paradise, the one who tastes it gets peace."

After the intense backlash her song received, the singer explained (or justified) her viewpoints in an interview.

> "How else will a woman know her husband loves her and cares about her? I am not supporting violence or men who severely beat or scar women, no. I am for the 'sweet beating', the kind that reflects love, a playful slap, things like that…"
>
> "He could push her, he could slap her, it's normal. A mother (of a beaten woman) says: 'Only the one who loves you, beats you. If he didn't love you, he wouldn't beat you,'"

Lest readers think this is just a one off sensationalistic oddity in the music arts, get this.

The common response of Moroccans to beaten women is a recommendation for them to hide their bruises with makeup so as to not reveal the fact that they've been disobedient or disrespectful enough to deserve a beating.

Compare to the New Testament:

Discipline is necessary for training children, daughters, and wives in righteousness (Hebrews 12:4-11). Discipline may be corporal if necessary, but it should always be done in love.

There's more.

Pubescent Marriage

So called "underage" marriages have been banned in Morocco since 2004. However, legal loopholes make it possible for girls under the age of 18 to be married, and this continues to be a common occurrence in rural areas.

Feministas will rave about this being an abuse of 'The Patriarchy', but no one is talking about how happy these teenage girls are to have their marriages consummated at an age at which they (and their husbands) can fully enjoy it and then live the rest of their lives in harmony.

Charlie Johns and Eunice Winstead.
Compare to the Old Testament:

Ages of brides are not specifically stated, but historians have estimated that the typical age of brides during Biblical times was soon after menses, i.e. 14 to 17 years of age, and sometimes girls as young as 12 were betrothed to be married as soon as they reached puberty.

There's more.

R@pe => Marriage

Morocco had a law that exonerated a r@pist if he/she married the victim. In 2014, Morocco's parliament amended this article of the penal code, after receiving international condemnation for the prevalence of 'bride' r@pe suicides in the country.

Everyone is talking about the ethics of a woman being overpowered by a man through coercion, and how much women hate this, but no one is talking about how women find meaning, fulfillment, and identity through this phenomenon of being desired, and how much women love this.

Compare to the Old Testament:

> [28] "If a man finds a young woman who is a virgin, who is not betrothed, and he seizes her and lies with her, and they are found out, [29] then the man who lay with her shall give to the young woman's father fifty shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife because he has humbled her; he shall not be permitted to divorce her all his days.
>
> Deuteronomy 22:28-29 (NKJV)

Imane Bent El Howat

Concluding Statements

The modern feminized West condemns such treatment of women as 'abusive'. But however unethical these interactions might be according to debased Western culture, what's been covered here is not explicitly unbiblical.

Muslims recognize this, and yet Christians do not.

Meanwhile, Western women are enthusiastically inviting Muslims (AKA 'refugees') into their home countries and homes … while Western women are leaving the Christian church in droves.

So what is behind all this?

Is it a coincidence? Or are we witnessing the uglier aspects of basic human nature reverting back to Biblical standards due to the corruption of Feminism?

Upon reading this, how many young men will be booking a flight to Morocco later this year?

Relive Casablanca!

Related

- Wikipedia: Tongyangxi
- Christianity and Masculinity: Fear, Respect, Honor, and Truth, Phobeo and Timao (2014/5/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Rational and Irrational Fear (2014/9/25)
- Step Feed: Moroccan TV channel tackles domestic violence with … makeup (2016/11/28)
- Step Feed: A woman was gang raped on a bus in Morocco and no one tried to help (2017/8/22)
- The Good Men Project (Thomas G. Fiffer): A Theory on the Role of Love in Abuse (2018/7/14)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Revisiting dread in the Bible with an anti-chivalry lens (2020/6/18)
- Σ Frame: How other cultures deal with adultery (2020/8/5)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Aggression Dominance is Arousing to Women (2022/3/29)

- Σ Frame: The Feminist's FEAR of Man (2025/5/14)
- Σ Frame: Cassie Ventura (2025/5/19)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)

Rihanna and Eminem

Jack · 2 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Heart trust can be induced through faux validating lies.

Readership: Men
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders;
Length: 400 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

> "I'll come to you like an affliction, but I'll leave you like an addiction.
> You'll never forget me, you wanna know why?
> Cause I'm a liar!"
>
> ~ from the lyrics of Liar, by the Rollins Band

Intro

A previous report illustrated how physical abuse is interpreted as love in many parts of the world by offering a case study of Morocco, and as showcased in the lyrics of a popular song by Eman bint El Hawat, a Northwestern African singer.

Since the 1960s, American culture has carried a fascination with the vibrant influences of African-American culture, and has in no way been immune to the dysfunctional aspects thereof.

Rhianna and Eminem are one such example.

Rihanna and Eminem

In 2010, Eminem released an immensely popular song called, I Love the Way You Lie.

In this song, Rihanna sings a haunting chorus.

> "Just gonna stand there and watch me burn?
> Well, that's all right because I like the way it hurts.
> Just gonna stand there and hear me cry?
> Well, that's all right because I love the way you lie.
> I love the way you lie.
> I love the way you lie."

Rihanna avoids obvious descriptions of physical abuse, and instead describes the spiritual trauma of emotional abuse. She specifically links this abuse to the love of lies.

Rihanna and Eminem are speaking from personal experience. Rihanna's ex, Chris Brown, was abusive towards her. Eminem has reportedly been involved in several episodes of violence against women.

I can only guess how much this one song has normalized the acceptance of lies as a form of faux validation. And this is just one song out of hundreds like it that young people are listening to every day.

Cover art on Eminem and Rihanna's albums.

Pretty Lies Sugarcoat the FEARal Nature

So why is it that lies are so appealing, suave, and seductive, even much more so than the truth?

I'll posit that the crux of this phenomenon lies in the fact that it puts an attractive reframe or spin on the ugly, unappealing, darker psychological aspects of FEAR-based attraction, even to transform it into Play.

Put that in your pipe and smoke it.

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: Fear, Respect, Honor, and Truth, Phobeo and Timao (2014/5/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Rational and Irrational Fear (2014/9/25)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Revisiting dread in the Bible with an anti-chivalry lens (2020/6/18)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Aggression Dominance is Arousing to Women (2022/3/29)
- Σ Frame: The Feminist's FEAR of Man (2025/5/14)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)

Why do Women Love Lies?

Jack · 4 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

…and the men who lie to them?

How Heart Trust is induced through faux validating lies.

Readership: Men
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders;
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes + 2 videos (optional)

Intro

In response to the previous post which covered Eminem and Rihanna's song, I Love the Way You Lie, SurfDumb wrote,

> "I was having a hard time making sense of the chorus and what it could mean to love lies, but let's see if I figured it out.
>
> Does it mean she has the tingles and is giving the guy a pass on how he treats her? I don't trust such a woman to know the difference between a lie and a truth, she only knows her feelz.
>
> So maybe she was feeling like Chad was committed to her the same as she feels her feelz for him, and when he lined up other dates on his schedule, she felt lied to? But is okay as part of a harem anyhow because he's hawt?"

SurfDumb caught the gist of it, but here I'll spell it out in macabre detail.

The Macabre Psychology

It may be difficult for truth-loving Christian men to understand the psychology of those who are dead in spirit (1 Timothy 1:10; 1 Timothy 4:1-3; Revelation 21:8). But as one who has been to hell and back in the wake of both parental divorce and spousal divorce, I can translate the language of the dead to the living.

First of all, the truth is inconvenient and ugly. It hurts women's feelings. Lies, when done convincingly well, are dramatic, !nTeRe$t!nG!, inspiring, and seductive.

Second, recall everything that Illimitable Men wrote about The Nature of Women, dissociation, machiavellianism, solipsism, etc. (IMO, the Manosphere 2.0 dwells on women's deceptiveness, hoedom, hypergamy, lack of agency, and manipulation, and has forgotten much of the dank female psychology that lurks underneath all these maladaptive behaviors, as was introduced by the Manosphere 1.0. See posts under Related for more.)

Third, lying is women's native language. Women constantly use lies to communicate with others. They lie about everything to control others (i.e. men), to get what they want, to keep their deceptive schemes secret, to make themselves appear better than they really are, to avert accountability, to avoid shame, and so on, et cetera, ad nauseum.

Fourth, they also lie to themselves. Women's internal dialogue is a ongoing rumination of lies they've believed their whole lives. As a result, their self-esteem is built on lies, and their whole worldview depends on these lies.

Dr. Orion Taraban talked about this in one of his videos.

PsycHacks: Why beautiful women are nuts: a co-created problem (2024/10/14)

Taraban singles out beautiful women, but in fact, most all modern women are nuts because they live in a faux real world of gynocentric delusions constructed and enforced by Feminism.

In summary of his talk, women are nuts because everyone lies to them to either control them, or seduce them, or win their favor, and it stymies their maturation and spoils them rotten. Women lie to each other to control the narrative. Men lie to women to appease them and please them in the hopes of getting laid. Women have been conditioned this way since childhood.

Fifth, women are wholly incapable of accepting or even hearing the truth, because it violates their entire fantasy world. Rare is the woman who is bold enough to own up to her own deceptions, carnal desires, evil schemes, immorality, and ugliness, and face the raw, unvarnished truth.

The Danse Macabre

Now, imagine such a woman meets an adequately handsome man who not only understands her world of lies, but can swim in it like a fish in water. He can communicate with her in her language of lies, reframe it, add logically detailed nuances to it, and spin it into a whirlwind of drama.

Here is where the Danse Macabre of Play begins.

Recall what Taraban said, as transcribed in Play is the Essence of Game (2025/5/21).

> "Play occurs when a person succeeds in cultivating the perception of a separate reality within the overarching reality that is only accessible to the initiated, in which the objects of play assume a special significance independent of their meaning in the overarching reality."
>
> "The reason why this works is that most people secretly believe these things about themselves. Their vanity harbors the conviction that they are exceptional in some regard, and they must constantly contend with the ego injury of being surrounded by people who, in their own ignorance and self-interest, cannot recognize them as such. Meeting someone who sees them, not as everyone else sees them, but as they see themselves, means entering into a shared reality in which things are slightly more the way they believe they should be. […] This is the essence of play, and it's a very seductive prospect."

The mutual sincere engagement in a shared fantasy is the fundamental element of Play, and this is perceived by the participants as a shared reality. Thus, Play is necessarily comprised of some amount of fantasy, or else it is not Play.

Why Do Women Love Men who Lie to Them?

Men who lie to women are speaking their native tongue, and that direct communication through their particular code of lies speaks to their hearts (John 8:44), affirms their delusions, reinforces their false world view, and strongly validates them.

Men who can effectively lie to women in this way have learned to say all the pretty pleasing things that lie-loving women love to hear and which validate their false, self-centered world view. Men lie to women in order to seduce them via the above dynamics, i.e. Play, and also to be controlled by them. It is a two-way street, in which both operate in a world of femcentric lies.

That's why I called it a Danse Macabre.

Danse Macabre: Empress, by Bernt Notke (Late 15th century).

Like the demon playing the fiddle in the Dance Macabre, the man who can sing the tune of lies will summon the dead to dance. They will come running, near and far, to perform their deeds of darkness in their deranged ecstasy.

Men are incentivized to do this because speaking the truth shuts off the waterworks. Men lie, or else they won't get any Loony Poon. Men also lie because the truth might provoke her to make choices that won't serve his interests.

Those few unicorns who are NOT finely attuned to the fantasy world of lies are not as easy to seduce and require more commitment and investment from the man. Such women will often turn lying men down cold.

She Must Return to the Grave at the First Light of Dawn

Now going back to address the meaning of Eminem and Rihanna's song…

I take it that Rihanna's concept of a 'lie' is that the man she's addressing through song is skilled in the Game of Play, and he is telling her what she wants to believe about herself. A lie, per se, but in the paradigmatic context of Play, it is sheer addictive validation.

Les Feuilles Mortes (The Dead Leaves), by Remedios Varo, 1956.
SurfDumb asked,

> "If it was a playful lie, then why would it make her cry?"

There are two possibilities, and both would apply in different contexts.

1. Finding a studly Ch@d who can speak her language of lies might touch her cold dead fleshly heart to the core. Hence, the perceived affirmation and validation draw forth tears of jiggle juicy joy.
2. At the end of the day, in the final analysis, all these lies are still lies. And because she's been living in a delusion and has refused to face the truth, eventually the truth will catch up to her and bring her to shame.

> "And the intro stanza – why is she burning? STD?"

Burning is a figurative word for shame.

According to my understanding of the lyrics, Rihanna is basically saying she can endure the sunshine shame of being a liar because afterwards she can always return to the man of darkness who will validate her and resume their fantasy world.

Women call this 'love'. This is why women love lies.

Creative Play vs Deceptive Play

This is not to say that all Play is a lie. The shared fantasies of Play could either be a lie, or an unexpressed and/or unrealized truth of the participant's identities. Or both, depending on how it is used (or abused).

Thus, Play can be one of the most effective ways to show love to one another; or else, if the Play is structured around indulging the vanities of the mind, fulfilling one's carnal desires, and is designated to perpetuate a mutual carnal lust fest of lies and drama, and therefore intentionally avoids the truth, then it is a Danse Macabre.

This is why women love men who lie to them — and why they hate men who tell them the truth.

This is quite different from Rollo Tomassi's Concept of Women's 'Love', and I think what I've described above hits much closer to home.

Related

- Dalrock: Female Solipsism (2012/9/19)
- Cane Caldo: We Hold This Solipsism as Self-Evident (2012/9/19)
- The Red Pill Room: The Tangled Chains On The Swing Set of Solipsism (2012/9/19)
- Verus Conditio: Solipsism (2012/12/2)
- Alpha Game: Alpha Mail: The Magical Tool (2014/1/3)
- Going Your Own Way (Kyojiro Kagenuma): The Female Psychosis (2014/3/16)
- The Rational Male: Solipsism I (2015/9/2)
- Illimitable Men: A Most Solipsistic Nature (2015/9/4)
- The Rational Male: Solipsism II (2015/9/9)
- Black Label Logic: On Female Solipsism (2016/5/12)
- Red Pill Pushers: Women – There are no Mirrors (2018/10/22)
- Σ Frame: The Evils of Solipsism (2019/11/19)

- !ncels Wiki: Female Solipsism (2021/8/9)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Kyojiro Kagenuma on Women's Agency (2022/12/5)

Romina Garcia

Jack · 7 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

If he truly loves her, he will punch her lights out!

Readership: Men
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders
Length: 2,200 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes

Romina Garcia's Outrageous Video

Romina Garcia [DOB: 1996/6/9; DOD: 2016/1/7; IG] was a Hispanic American woman who believed men who are violent towards women really love them. In 2014, she posted this shocking video to hundreds of thousands of followers on Facebook, leading to a mixed reaction of outcry, worry, and also messages of support.

In the video, she says,

> "Okay, hey guys! So I wanted to address something mainly with you girls … um, about your boyfriends, or the guy you're talking to, and … I just wanted to say that, if your boyfriend or the guy that you're with puts his hands on you, like he hits you or beats you up or whatever he does, stay with him! That !@#$% !@#$% loves you, because he's risking for you to press charges on him; he's risking for … you calling the police, or … he's going to do time, or he's going to have to pay money to get out of jail, or whatever the case may be. He's risking all of that for you, so that means he !@#$% loves you!
>
> You need to get on your !@#$% knees and just pray and hope that he doesn't give you another black eye or he doesn't k!ll you, because honestly, a guy that's willing to do that for a girl, it's … it's amazing! Not many guys you have out there that care enough for the girls to do that. But the guys that do do that, they're the real @ss men, and you girls need to appreciate it.
>
> You know, the other day my boyfriend gave me a black eye and it was my fault, like he didn't mean … I mean, he … he was going to hit me, but like I moved so he got my eye … like he hit me in my eye or whatever and he gave me a black eye. I'm wearing makeup right now so you can't tell, but it's on this [left] eye. I was going to go out somewhere today, so he took me to go get my makeup done because he didn't want people seeing me with him … because … I had a black eye and they were going to be like, "What the @#$%!?!" … he just didn't like that or whatever. So I went to go get my makeup done.
>
> But the fact that he put his hands on me means a lot to me because that shows me that he cares, and as soon as … he hit me, … after I realized how stupid I was, how I could have avoided everything, I got on my knees and I begged him … "Please do not leave me! I am so sorry for what I did. You gave me an order and I didn't follow it." Now I know not to disrespect him, and not to talk back if he gives me an order, to follow it.
>
> I just want to let y'all know that you need to appreciate your man. If he hits you, stay with him! He @#$% loves you!"

Romina Garcia's Appearance on the Dr. Phil Show

Garcia's video received over 5 million views in just 4 months — so much attention that she eventually landed a spot on the Dr. Phil show. Her appearance is highlighted in the next video.

Dr. Phil: 18-Year-Old: 'If Your Boyfriend Hits You, It's A Sign of Love' (2015/1/29)*

This video has garnered almost 12 million views since it went up in 2015.

 H/T: Glosoli @ Christianity and Masculinity*

The Liberal Spin

Snippets of Garcia's original video are edited and pieced together in the first 42 seconds. In it, she appears to say,

> "If your boyfriend hits you or beats you up, stay with him! He loves you, because he's risking for you to press charges on him, calling the police… A guy that's willing to do that for a girl … it's amazing! The other day, my boyfriend gave me a black eye, and it was my fault. The fact that he put his hands on me means a lot to me because that shows me that he cares. After I realized how stupid I was, I got on my knees and I begged him, "Please do not leave me! I so sorry for what I did! You gave me an order and I didn't follow it." Now I know not to disrespect him, and not to talk back. You need to appreciate your man. If he hits you, stay with him! He loves you!"

Comparing what Garcia said in the original video to the abridged video shown on the Dr. Phil video, we find the following omissions.

- The fact that men care enough to take action, and that they take action because they care.
- Expressions of male authority are subject to criminal penalties.
- How women can easily subject men to criminal accusations.
- Garcia's rambling introspection.
- Garcia's statement that she could have avoided everything if she had been more respectful and obedient.
- Garcia's conclusion that she should follow her man's 'orders'.

More generally, Dr. Phil omitted the following intersexual dynamics.

- Men having a domain of authority over a woman.
- Men holding women accountable.
- Men taking personal risks to hold women accountable.
- Women (i.e. Garcia) being introspective.
- Women (i.e. Garcia) repenting from their disobedience.
- Women (i.e. Garcia) learning to respect and appreciate Men who accept risks, exercise authority, and take action.

Instead, it is emphasized that…

- Men are physically abusive.
- Women who willingly submit to a man are stupid.
- It is also inferred that female submission is shameful or wrong.

Romina Garcia appears on the Dr. Phil show.

Selected Text from Garcia's Interview with Dr. Phil

Dr. Phil: Okay … the reaction to [your video] has been [incredible!] … you've had a lot of people go on your site and respond to this. What are they saying to you?

Garcia: They're being really mean to me, saying … I should go kill myself, but … I was just misunderstood.

Dr. Phil: … hold on, hold on … where is this misunderstood?

Garcia: I mean, because he was risking to go to jail, like he could have gone to jail … if I would have pressed charges … not just anyone is going to go to jail for you.

Dr. Phil: So your theory is that because they're willing to put themselves at risk of going to jail or paying fines or whatever, that you must mean an awful lot to them or they wouldn't put themselves In Harm's Way for you.

Garcia: Exactly, and therefore, you must really be loved. Not anyone is just going to go to jail for you. Not anyone is just going to [take that kind of risk] … they're investing time and money and it's just a lot, so … he must really care.

Dr. Phil: Do you really believe that, or are you just goofing on everybody?

Garcia: I really do believe that; like, I get a lot of messages on my social media asking me for advice, and a lot of girls are like, "I look up to you", and I feel like I'm an inspiration to them. They feel the same way.

Dr. Phil: Your logic is flawed at so many levels that I ordinarily would not give you audience on this platform for two seconds, other than the fact that this has been viewed by now over 5 million people, a lot of them young girls; and I am very concerned that the idiotic message that you're putting out there could cause an innocent young girl to put herself In Harm's Way™ following that logic and get herself hurt. Okay? And I think what you're saying is irresponsible. I think it is ridiculous. Somebody needs to tell you straight up what's wrong with what you're saying, and I can't decide whether you really mean it or this is just attention getting behavior on your part.

[…]

Dr. Phil: The second video Romina posted about a breakup is also so outrageous. People, take a look at this.

Garcia (in her second video): I just want to let everybody know that I don't have a boyfriend anymore because he wasn't beating me hard enough, so I had to break up with him. It just wasn't good enough for me.

Dr. Phil: I think you are saying this to get attention … Look, people go on the internet to get attention all the time, and that's fine … unless you're hurting young people to do it.

Garcia: No you're wrong, because before this video, I was already, I guess, famous on social media.

Garcia's Legacy

Garcia brilliantly engineered her climb to cultural notoriety by appealing to the female FEAR fantasy. She escalated up the social ladder rather quickly after her social media sensationalism and her appearance on the Dr. Phil show.

She continued to receive rave views and reviews on her media accounts online, and soon thereafter, she became a minor celebrity and a groupie in a second-tier Rapper's entourage.

After spending the night with a rising rapper, she died of a heroine overdose in a hotel room on 2016/1/7. She was just 19 years old.

Poetik Flakko: Tragic Story of The Groupie That Died After Sleeping With Lil Durk (2023/11/2)

Like so many other rising stars cut down in their prime, we are left to wonder, was her death truly an accidental overdose, or was it a red.rum engineered to look like an accident? We may never know.

Conclusions

The tragic story of Romina Garcia's short life offers us a fascinating and multifaceted case study of a young woman who completely resigned herself to the FEAR dynamic.

Seen through a basic Red Pill lens, there is nothing special about Garcia's story, as Red Pill lore predicts that feral, unregenerated women gravitate towards Bad Boys with unrelenting fervor.

But what is unique about Garcia's story is that she regarded his abuse as a gesture of his 'love' — NOT only her feeling loved, but that he genuinely 'loved' her (c.f. Proverbs 27:5), and that she returned that love in response, in the form of introspection, 'repentance', and obedience.

In that respect, I am awestruck by her faith, as shown by her willingness to introspect, to obey her man no matter how sinful and unloving he was, and to endure physical abuse and suffering — NOT only from her abusive boyfriend, but also from the culture at large.

Garcia was wholly focused on the degree of her man's personal risk in 'trusting' her enough to abuse her, with nary a condemnatory thought about his shortcomings or her own sufferings. The quality and value of her man's actions, right or wrong, notwithstanding, was wholly dependent on his expression of dominance; and this was counted as 'virtuous' in Garcia's eyes, and within this viewpoint in general.

In another respect, I am dumbfounded that a woman who completely prostrated herself to the capricious vices of her man should be the target of such rampant abuse — instead of love and compassion — NOT only from her abusive boyfriend, but also from the culture at large. It is as if her total obedience was punished at every turn.

Another amazing phenomenon surrounding Garcia's story is that all the condemnation and verbal attacks she received from Fem!n@z!s and the liberal media only appeared to glorify her obedience in suffering (no matter whether it was feigned or real). Those who threw hateful barbs at her only reflected the purported abuse of the man she was defending and made the person commenting seem abusive themselves.

Or at least, that is the semiotic metanoia she portrayed to the public, and with potent effects, both positive and negative. There is some evidence that it was all for show.

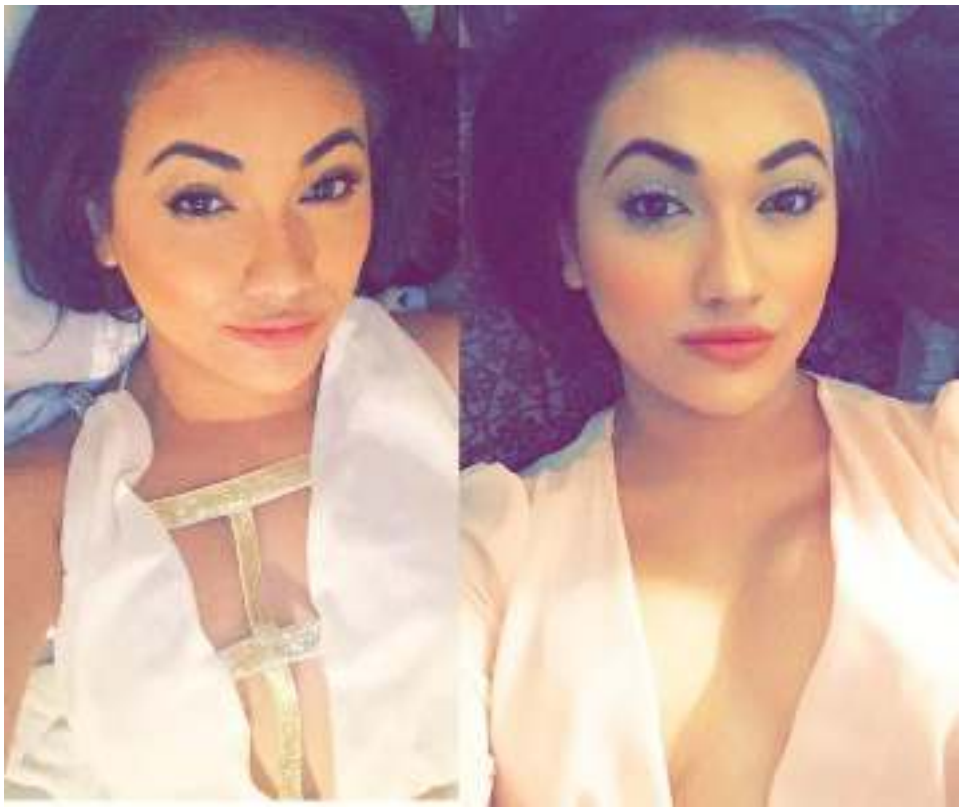
Furthermore, if she truly believed all that she professed, it suggests that she has been so thoroughly abused all her life that she no longer had any will of her own, nor any concept of the value of her self-worth.

But isn't this complete humility and self-abasement exactly what Christ works in us when we trust in Him, obey His commandments, and suffer for the sake of righteousness?



Exit Questions

Do you believe women can or do fall in love with a man, or choose to be obedient to a man, because of…

1. The severity of the risks he takes?
2. Or his confident bravado in general?
3. Or the risk is interpreted as an immense measure of mutual trust?
4. Or is it a bizarre curiosity of the female Fear-Respect dynamic?
5. Or is it simply because "she thinks he's hawt", and she gotsda haz dat Alpha dawg d!ck — at ANY price?

Related

- Daily Mail: Teenage video blogger sparks outrage after telling her followers: 'If your boyfriend hits you stay with him…it's a sign he loves you' (2014/11/28)
- Daily Mail: 'Your logic is flawed at many levels': Video blogger, 18, who claims 'if your boyfriend hits you it's a sign he loves you' is told she is sending out 'idiotic message' (2015/1/30)
- Σ Frame: The Feminist's FEAR of Man (2025/5/14)
- Σ Frame: Cassie Ventura (2025/5/19)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)

10 Rules for Navigating Mixed Sex Spaces

Jack · 9 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

How can men coexist with women in the post-MeT00 era?

Readership: Men
Theme: Validation
Note: This post is written in response to an email from a reader (2025/6/25-26).
Length: 2,800 words
Reading Time: 16 minutes

A Note on Aaron Renn

Over the past few months, Aaron Renn has returned to discussing intersexual dynamics in a Christian context, as he once did in his original blog, The Masculinist, which was folded under his eponymous new platform on Substack in late May 2023. Many of these newer writings cite older pieces from The Masculinist that are 4 to 7 years old, and the commentaries are rather Dalrockian in content, which is somewhat surprising to me. But overall, Renn is tossing his hat into the Manosphere ring once again.

Aaron Renn

Moreover, we are seeing the topics that the Christian Manosphere 1.0 introduced beginning to gel into a new (but actually very old) "Christian doctrine for sex and marriage", if you will, which is slowly but surely replacing the liberal Boomerish Dobsonian and Kellerian pseudo-doctrines of complementarianism, servant leadership, "Happy Wife, Happy Life", "Just be yourself", and so on.

By divine(?) coincidence, Aaron Renn published an article just today that is very closely related to the topic of today's post, Navigating Mixed Sex Spaces.

Aaron Renn: Understanding Intersexual Dynamics (2025/7/9)

In this article, he covers many basic Red Pill principles, such as Attraction, The Neoliberalization of Relationships, Hypergamy, The Friend Zone, Online Dating, Divorce, and “The Battle of the Sexes”, again, citing his older articles.

A Living Lore

I’m glad Renn is getting the word out. However, not everything is the same as it was in the twenty-teens, thank God. Thus, the Red Pill lore needs some reinterpreting and tweaking to remain valid praxeology for today’s men. That’s how it will always be. It must be, because The Red Pill is a living lore, just like a living language changes with every generation.

Here’s one idea that needs a tweak.

In the article cited above, Renn channeled a Red Pill axiom quoted from Jordan Peterson’s book, 12 Rules for Life (published on 2018/1/23), to say,

> “Girls aren’t attracted to boys who are their friends, even though they might like them, whatever that means. They are attracted to boys who win status contests with other boys.”

The old RP message contained in this Axiom is that men should avoid the Friend Zone and put themselves in situations where they can come out on top. This was standard advice for men that stood valid up until lately, but it’s not valid anymore.

I’ll tell you why.

A Change in Social Context

What we are seeing nowadays, for the most part, is that men are withdrawing from female company.

This is not a new development. It’s been happening for some time, but now we are tasting the Bitter Fruits of a witches brew of equal opportunity employment, gynocentric laws and courts, Hookup culture, swipe-based dating apps, and MeT00, as well as all the other Sirens of the Sexual Apocalypse. And it’s been cooking the culture for 20 long years.

Here’s a brief synopsis of how this has led to the ‘departure’ of men.

Around 2014 (if not earlier in some areas), men began withdrawing from women in the form of MGTOW as a response to women pricing themselves out of the dating market.

For a long time, divorce courts have been so brutal and ruthless on men that by 2016, men had come to deem marriage unwise. By 2017, the call for men to avoid marriage started going around the webz and has picked up the tempo since then.

Then, to make matters worse, MeT00 went mainstream in 2017 and peaked in 2018.

The inevitable result of the #MeT00 movement just clinched this stalemate as a permanent standoff between the sexes, like the trench foot warfare of WW1.

It will be a looong time before men collectively forgive women for that little stunt. I'll guesstimate about 25-30 years.

Sometime between 2020 and 2022, men's self-segregation became so mainstream that it lost the unique MGTOW label.

Now, with the conglomerated effects of the desert dry SMP and the risks of receiving superfluous charges of sexual harassment over casual / friendly physical touch, direct attention, or just "looking the 'wrong way' 3.5 milliseconds too long", men have learned not to have anything to do with women in just about any current social environment.

However, mixed sex environments cannot be altogether avoided, nor should they.

A Question from a Reader

A reader writes,

> Jack,
>
> I have been reading your blog for a while, and I am an avid fan. Your blog is what led me into the RP sphere and to my unplugging.
>
> I wanted to come to you for advice. What are your thoughts on inter-sex friendships and mixed-sex friend groups? My experience seems to validate Oscar Wilde's point of view. Platonic friend groups, even in the absence of romantic interest, seem to devolve into "Let's you and him fight", and the men trying to AMOG everything in sight. (Especially Blue Pilled guys, who take it the hardest. Impotence causes heartbreak, it seems.) While I mostly spend my free time with dudes, we must concede that the days of segregation by gender are over, and any advice for surviving coed spaces is much appreciated.

This is an important question that all men should consider: How to coexist with women (e.g. at church, in the workplace, etc.) in the post-MeT00 era?

AMOGing is no longer effective ("the juice isn't worth the squeeze"), and simply telling men to "Avoid Friend Zones" is sorely insufficient advice to the point of being mockingly trite. Like telling someone, "You shouldn't tease a dog known to bite", when the dog is a vicious Doberman that has its jaws around one's neck.

I consulted Red Pill Apostle and TheDeti to get a more complete response to this reader's question. Their responses are enmeshed with mine below.

Disclaimers

The IP address of the reader who wrote this message indicates that he is from India. I think this explains why he says, "the days of segregation are over".

[Sidenote for readers: The U.S. desegregated in the 1950s and 60s, but India is doing this right now, except it is different because it is motivated by equality and feminism, rather than racism. (Not sure about classism or what I might call "caste-ism", so to speak. Sorry if this betrays any cultural ignorance, although I'm far more culturally aware than most.) And yes, India also has a MeToo movement that coincides with the desegregation.]

First of all, we are hesitant to hand out serious advice about men's situation in India, because…

- None of us are Indian.
- There are cultural differences that influence how behaviors are perceived.

Secondly, there are a lot of unknown sociosexual variables that make a situation like this difficult to advise on. These variables include things like…

- We have no idea what this particular reader looks like, i.e. how tall he is, or how handsome he is.
- We don't know how old he is.
- We don't know his social standing.
- We don't know his socioeconomic background.
- We don't know what he does for a living or how much money he makes.
- We don't know what kinds of social circles he runs in or the composition of people thereof.
- We don't know how women respond to him.

As regular readers know, all these variables greatly influence how a man's behavior will be received by women.

With that being said, we do have some general advice that should stand true for most all men.

1. Choose Your Social 'Pool' Wisely

Remember that the quality of a social pool is only as good as its worst members, i.e. the cattiest women in the bunch. Everyone else has to navigate around their shenanigans.

If at all possible, avoid cliques of catty coquettes and cringe-worthy Karens. Instead, choose social groups comprised of men and Based, conservative women. If social circles cannot be engineered, then make the best effort to choose appropriate companions, coworkers, and friends within your social group. Favor those who are exceptional and conform to God's proscribed order of intersexual hierarchy. Shun those women who insist on reinforcing the feminist gynocracy.

This means…

If your university is requiring you to take courses in C R T, "gender studies" and/or other anti-Christian / Worldly propaganda, then you may have to transfer to another school. Or don't apply there in the first place.

If your gym is frequented by uppity chicks always taking selfies in their skin tight yoga pants and catching shots of men eyeing their melons, then you'll need to find another gym. Yes, it's worth traveling an extra 15 minutes. It might save you 15 years.

If your church is 'servant-led' by egalitarian pastors and elders who waffle in the face of women's demands and opinions, or worse, it has female pastors and teachers, or is infested with domineering, loud-mouthed women, then you'll need to find another church. Your future progeny will regard you as a saint for doing so. "Thank you, granddad, for leaving that apostate harpy-ruled church and becoming Orthodox (or whatever)."

The Rev. Maria Swearingen, center left, and the Rev. Sally Sarratt, center right, are welcomed into membership at Calgary Baptist Church by other clergy during a service on Feb. 26, 2017, in Washington, D.C. RNS photo by Adelle M. Banks.

2. Right Thinking = NOT Underthinking and NOT Overthinking, but Purpose Thinking

The social dynamics described by the correspondent appear to be a concern for the safety and stability of his reputation, rather than an ethical / moral injunction or the possibility of a legal attack.

In this case, men should avoid overthinking the situation. That is, men should not torture themselves with fears of being MeT00'ed at every turn and with every word spoken.

However, there are two areas that we believe a man needs to consider:

1. How he interacts with all people in his social circle.
2. How he can address the male tendency to sort out the pecking order.

These issues are addressed in the next 4 points, followed by 10 general 'rules' in the conclusions.

3. Men and Women Cannot be ‘Friends’

Forget The Friend Zone. Nowadays, any kind of intersex ‘friendships’ are just a bad idea.

First of all, today’s women just aren’t very good friends to men, largely because…

- Men and women approach friendships and social relationships differently, and for different purposes.
- Most women prefer to view men as their subordinate ‘equals’ rather than properly viewing themselves as companions and helpers to men.

Secondly, and in general, intersex friendships are much more beneficial to women than they are towards men.

As much as men might want to believe it, men and women cannot really be ‘friends’. Whenever a ‘friendship’ is deemed viable, it eventually devolves into a sexualized interaction.

- Men aren’t interested in women unless they’re sexually attractive and/or sexually available.
- Women aren’t interested in men unless they’re immediately beneficial, ‘moneyed’, powerful, sexually attractive, and/or easily ‘assailable’ or ‘usable’.

Inevitably, one of the ‘friends’ will want more than the other is willing to give. This leads to all sorts of avoidable problems that, simply put, will lead to frustration.

Third, a man can really only be ‘friends’ with one woman — his love interest — and ONLY if she’s cooperative, helpful, submissive, and obedient to him. The emotional intimacy of friendship makes adding the physical intimacy too much of a risk for a real friendship with any other woman. (We could split hairs about situations where this is not the case, but generally speaking, having a close friendship with a woman who isn’t a man’s girlfriend or wife is fraught with peril.)

The cast of the TV sitcom, Friends. But we are no longer living in the 1990s.

Our advice? Just don't do it. Be acquaintances, work acquaintances, or coworkers. Be cordial, polite, and professional. But don't try to become 'friends' with women. Instead, think of women as the helpers and companions they are supposed to be (whether they think they are or not), and leave it at that.

Remember what Jesus said about His friends:

> You are My friends if you do whatever I command you.
>
> John 15:14 (NKJV)

If they do, in fact, become 'friends' (properly understood as obedient helpers and submissive companions), then that is a supernatural blessing. But men cannot, in any realistic way, expect it in today's climate.

4. Trust is Paramount

If a man is uncertain about how to act within mixed company, then erring on the side of caution is preferred, as this should keep him safe. By caution, I am referring to the level of familiarity with which he interacts with those in the group. Over time, as he figures out which relationships are worth further development and as those people prove themselves trustworthy to him, then he can let down his guard somewhat with those specific people. The stronger those relationships become and the more trust that is built, the more he can safely reveal about himself to those people. If you're not sure how trustworthy someone is, male or female, then it's better to keep things straight and proper.

There is an exception to this. If a particular woman is part of both his personal and professional circles, then it is better to keep the interactions professional and respectful in a friendly way. It is not worth the risk for a single man to be too familiar with a woman who could hurt him professionally.

In general, we do not recommend being overtly friendly with female coworkers, even those you believe you can trust.

5. The “Spouse Test” of Social Interactions

A man can be a friendly acquaintance with a woman, along socially appropriate boundaries. The trick is in working out the specifics of those boundaries.

An easy way to think about what would be appropriate or inappropriate is to judge whether an action would pass the “Spouse Test”. If a behavior would be deemed by the majority of spouses as being too forward or intimate, then that behavior should be avoided. This is not a perfect standard, but it serves as a pretty good guideline.

For example, RPA spends an inordinate amount of time at the ballfield for kid’s sports, and he is friendly with the parents of his child’s teammates. This includes talking and joking with both the dads and moms. The conversation stays within the arena of being a fellow parent who is a good acquaintance, with appropriate joking and sticking to topics that don’t delve into areas that are too personal. Anything beyond that is questionable and should be avoided.

6. Dealing with Intrasexual Competition and Sociosexual Hierarchies

The correspondent describes other males AMOGing and/or playing a game of one-upmanship. We recognize that, overall, there is a temptation for men to compete and to best other men, especially before women, and to appear as a “winner” in order to be chosen by the chicks. But we caution men against playing this game in mixed company within the current climate.

To address those men trying to sort out the sociosexual hierarchy of a group and where he falls in, he should refuse to play the AMOG game of one-upmanship they appear to be playing. If you're reading a blog called Σ Frame and you identify as a Σ male, then for Pete's sake, go full Σ! A big part of that is distancing yourself from the sociosexual competitions. How you choose to interact with others in your group should be on YOUR terms as YOU project who YOU are to others.

This is one more thing that men should be considering: How to project himself so that others have an accurate, proper, and respectful view of himself. It's not so much about what might be interpreted as improper, although that is very important to consider, but of what would make his idealized persona crystal clear to others in his social group. If others understand you clearly, then they can interpret your words and behaviors accordingly. Of course, specific actions that would accomplish this outcome will vary from man to man.

Conclusions

In summary of how to handle mixed sex groups, it is difficult to give out appropriate pat advice because of all the variables up there. Without knowing anything about a man's culture, age, locale, surroundings, context, or the people he socializes with, the only 'rules' we can give are very, very general, based on the 6 points above.

1. Choose your social 'pool' wisely.
2. Right Thinking = Purpose Thinking
3. View women as daughters, wives, mothers, dutiful helpers, and submissive companions — NOT "Friends"; and if they aren't actively conforming to a Based, Biblical role for a woman to have, then leave them alone. Go out of your way to avoid such women if the potential risk deems it necessary.
4. Trust is Paramount.
5. Keep the "Spouse Test" in mind when interacting with women.
6. Maintain healthy boundaries. This requires self-discipline, practice, and skill.
7. Keep it light. Limit discussion topics to small talk and chitchat.
8. "Loose lips sink ships." Say less around women. The less you talk, the better.
9. Don't "open up" emotionally to women. Don't reveal too much or overshare.

10. Avoid AMOGing and intrasexual competitions within mixed groups.

If a man follows these guidelines carefully, it's bound to be less bad than it could be otherwise.

But we just can't give any more detailed advice than that.

Exit Questions

1. What are some specific examples of appropriate boundaries men should have with women in today's culture?
2. How should men draw these boundaries?
3. Does the reader have any other good advice for men in this context?

We would appreciate any commentary from readers that would help refine this analysis by adding cogent contexts.

Related

- Σ Frame (TheDeti): On Womens' Response to MGTOW (2021/7/19)
- Σ Frame: The New Face of MGTOW (2025/1/20)
- Σ Frame: The Rise of Middle-Class MGTOW (2025/1/22)
- Σ Frame: MGTOW's and Non-Tingly Respect (2025/1/27)
- Σ Frame: The 'IT' Factor (2025/3/7)
- Σ Frame: The Gift of Singleness — Summary (2025/3/31)
- Σ Frame: Detached young bucks, not simping suckers. (2025/5/12)
- Σ Frame: Why is Headship more Important than Religious Affiliation? (2025/6/2)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Men where have you gone? Please come back please – Gone wrong (2025/7/7)
- Men are Good (Tom Golden): The Right Length to Reach the Floor: Why Being Offended Matters (2025/7/8)

How to Discern the Nature of the Cooch

Jack · 11 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Hard @ss + Hot Heart = Hawt Lay

Readership: Men
Theme: Validation
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Women are Sexual Beings, just as Men are — or Even More So

It's not difficult to find a woman who loves sex.

Back when I was in the 7th, 8th, and 9th grade (the time when adolescents are sprouting pubes and boobs), I remember seeing girls in my class looking at male or g@y p0rn, and doodling images of c0cks and balls on their schoolbooks. Whenever I saw a group of these girls whispering to each other with a wild deranged look in their eyes, and then breaking out into a laugh that sounded like the wicked witch of the west, I knew what they were talking about — c0ck. At the time, I dismissed them as "bad girls", but after growing up and having more experiences with women, I've come to recognize that female sexuality is 10x more debased than men's. I've come to accept this because that's just how they are. The girls we call "good" are no different — except there are some who've learned not to discuss such things openly, and a smaller number who've been conditioned to mimic a sense of decorum. Ahem, 'mimic' — it doesn't come naturally to the natural defilers.

Yes, women lust too. If they don't discover this in the 7th grade, then it'll happen in the 9th grade, or the 11th grade, or at summer camp, or their freshman year at college. Sooner or later, they'll have a sexual awakening. It is human nature to respond to the Call of the Wild for the purpose of reproduction. It is a feature with many bugs, NOT a bug with many features.

It just so happens that such experiences provide and invigorate women with real life expressions of their feral nature while also producing feelings of Validation of their feminine sexual power. A powerful, yeah, intoxicatingly overwhelming combination. However, they don't seem to understand that this validation is only 'true' the first time around. Without any expectations of it leading to anything more than momentary passions (such as marriage, or simply NOT aborting the consequences), they'll keep looking for a rinse and repeat validation again and again through different experiences with different men.

But it's never as good as the first time.

Men Still Worry about a Woman's Sexual Apathy, but for Different Reasons

Years ago, marriage-minded men were deeply concerned about whether a woman would be a satisfying mattress scooter, or else would prove to be a cold-hearted prude in bed.

Since the advent of The Red Pill, we now know that women who deny their husbands sexually, or only offer them starfish sex once a month, are women who have tasted and tried on bigger c0cks in their youths, and are thus Alpha Widowed. As a result, they are Spiritually Defiled, and are therefore excluded from the possibility of enjoying a sanctified Christian marriage. Woe to the unsuspecting man who unwittingly makes himself one flesh with a Repentant Slore.

Thus, those women who are already "sanctified" (to a previous man) through substandard, unholy ways (or should I say, defiled, which essentially involves a similar process) are to be considered already spent, warped and wicked, potential W!tches in the making, and definitely off limits for marriage. This is the entire reason behind the Biblical command to avoid sexual immorality.

It Takes Two to Dance a Redemptive Tango

Now that men are generally more aware of this d@mning Cause-and-Effect result, we might expect such fears of marrying a wily W!tchy B!tch and winding up in a dead bedroom to be a thing of the past.

Except that it's NOT, mostly because the grand majority of women, including Christian women, eagerly get themselves defiled at the soonest convenient opportunity, while intentionally postporning marriage until many other life goals have been achieved.

Meanwhile, many men still deem it better to marry a Repentant Slore than to live a life of celibacy.

Calling on the Grace of God!

What to Look for in a Potential Wife

The tricky question is whether she will love having sex with YOU, NOT just in the beginning weeks of a fling, but in a committed relationship, i.e. a formal marriage. Making sure she is obsessively occupied with your c0ck, and not just Big C0ck in general, is what really matters most to men, especially for Christian men who are pursuing sanctification and satisfaction in a marital relationship as a real objective.

The best method of ensuring that your marital sex life is eternally validated by God is to marry a virgin at a relatively young age.

Heh. If that's the case, then we're all doomed.

For most men, this is not a realistic prescription, short of an Amish community … or a miracle. Most men have to settle for minimizing N count and playing Russian Roulette.

Discernment is Key

There is one alternative to the chance roll of the dice.

For the spiritually discerning man, there are ways to tell what a woman's sexual character will be like. When considering a woman's latent libidinous nature in relation to his own, there are ways to estimate the probability of compatibility. This is one way to vet whether a woman will be either hot or frigid without taking her to the task.

The idea here is to gauge the accessibility of her ability to pair bond with YOU, and decisively engineer a match that would lead to satisfaction and sanctification in marriage.

Moreover, a man must have discernment to choose wisely. If you have poor discernment, or none at all, then you must ask God for this.

Pump-n-Dump, or Wife-for-Life? How to decide?

How to Discern the Nature of the Cooch

With all that said, now to the main contribution of this essay.

Here are some insights on how to discern the nature of a woman's sexual animus.

Women who look really hot and sexy, are easy to figure out because their nature matches the attraction they generate. Nine times out of ten, women who look sexy are women who love sex — that's WHY they look sexy! The problem here is that such women are usually already sexually activated, slored out, and Bimbonified. Exceedingly rare indeed is the sexy virgin lass.

For women who are NOT overtly sexy in appearance, it is more difficult to ascertain a woman's sexual character or her latent level of sexual enthusiasm.

In my (albeit limited) experience, gentle women with soft eyes tend to be more submissive and also more passionate in bed, but they also tend to have weaker agency. I think they're also more likely to be squirters. You'll have to decide for yourself if you can accept that tradeoff. (I sure would.)

Sharon Stone: Very Hot but also too Proud => Reject

Women who signal their sexual interest to you with a sincerely whole-hearted Slut Eye tend to be more trusting and can be firebombs in bed, but they also tend to lack cognitive awareness and can be too trusting to the point of being duped and/or seduced easily. Again, you'll have to decide if that is right for you.

If she has a proud heart, she's not going to be too open in bed. If she's arrogant, she'll be reserved in the sack. Whether the man is Ch@d or not, or however much these women might love sex, it is the same. She'll be "finicky", particular, and have high expectations, and you'll always have to tiptoe around her ego triggers. Her arousal will be carefully controlled, and her orgasms will only be indulged when she decides.

Women who are very bubbly and fun in public are often hesitant and awkward in bed. This is because their enthusiasm is centered on the attention they get for being lively — it's all about themselves. But sex with her is NOT like how her public persona might lead you to imagine it would be. This is because sex is an expression of how she feels about YOU, and how comfortable she is about being vulnerable with YOU, and NOT about herself when she's getting free attention. The glitch here is that women who are used to getting their dopamine fix on public affirmation will be uneasily deficient in receiving private sexual affirmation. You must decide if you can accept this.

Years ago, women who had a firm hard muscular butt could be identified as strong bed bangers, even if their sexual experience was limited. This is still true, but the strength of this indicator has lost some degree of certainty because now there are many women who can get a ridiculously bulbous @ss from deadlifting at the gym. The glitch here is that the types of women who go to all the trouble and work to get their @ss in shape are most likely doing it for the attention and to bump up their SMV in order to access higher tier men — NOT to titillate their hardworking hubbies' hard-on's.

Related

- Σ Frame: Why do Christian women have the reputation of being whores? (2019/2/23)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Denying sex to one's spouse is porneia. (2022/1/26)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): A suitable ride with low mileage (2022/3/23)
- Σ Frame: Some women just can't live without a man (2023/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Mating Dance and Female Erotic Fantasy (2024/1/19)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Effects of the Sexual Revolution on Female Sexuality (2024/9/24)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): 4 minutes and 12 seconds of love every other Tuesday (2025/4/16)

Relative Internal Locus of Control Determines Relational Structure

Jack · 14 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The person who has the stronger Internal Locus of Control will be the dominant person in a relationship.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Feminine Submission; Headship;
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Significance: This post contains a new finding in the Christian Manosphere, arising from a series of recent posts between Jack at Σ Frame and Deep Strength at Christianity and Masculinity, listed here.

- Σ Frame: The Feminist's FEAR of Man (2025/5/14)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Christianity and Masculinity: A Deeper Dive on Hypergamy (2025/6/14)
- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)

Quoted excerpts are from the last post from C&M listed above. [Lightly edited and reorganized for ease of reading.]

The Imbalance of Power Determines the Structure

In every relationship, one person acts as an axis of stability, power, and authority, and the other person revolves around that axis. One person makes the majority of major decisions in the relationship, while the other person follows along. One person is in the habit of making demands, while the other person takes on the self-discipline of responding to those demands.

This relational hierarchy has been described in many ways and in different words, e.g. one person has more authority, desire, influence, or weight. But in this essay, I'll use the term 'authority', as has been my habit on this blog over the past few years.

The new idea contained in this essay is that the relationship hierarchy is determined by a comparative gender inequality in the expression of one's Internal Locus of Control (ILoC). That is, the person who has a better or stronger ILoC will usually be the dominant person in the relationship.

ILoC can be roughly described as Detachment, i.e. conviction, determination, and enforcing Boundaries, although Detachment refers more to the outward appearance and the social impact of a strong ILoC.

This has very significant ramifications in the way the relationship hierarchy plays out, and determines whether a woman is inclined to be submissive, and even the likelihood of her being sexually aroused.

Women's Dualistic Response to Authority

> "[A woman's] dualistic response to a man's dominion is to either submit or rebel."

1. A woman's submission is expressed through being agreeable, faithful, steadfast, supporting, teachable, and trusting, and by her spontaneous natural (i.e. sexual) affections.
2. A woman's 'rebelliousness' is most often displayed through being demanding and disagreeable, dishing out fitness/$h!t tests, insolence, stubborn pride, trying to control the man or the outcome of a social situation, withholding sex, etc.

> "The Fear Factor is more directly a result of a woman's internal and external locus of Control."

1. If a man's Dominance is greater than a woman's Internal Control, the Fear-Respect response is generated. She will usually be more submissive and usually be more receptive to sex.
2. If a woman's sense of Internal Control is greater than the man's perceived Dominance, then she will usually Friend Zone that man and/or try to control him. Her Internal Control typically manifests outwardly in various AWALT traits, such as being critical / insolent / judgmental, engaging in brinkmanship, fitness/sh!t tests, making demands, etc.

Parental Influence During Childhood Formation

Good parenting tends to increase a woman's trust in authority and would decrease all these disobedient / negative / rebellious behaviors. OTOH, factors such as a controlling mother, familial dysfunction, and parental divorce will surely decrease a woman's trust in authority and will exacerbate these negative behaviors.

> "A woman with a loving but strong masculine leader as a father who is a good husband will make her feel Safe. Hence, her Locus of Control is decreased and usually she is very feminine and more submissive.
>
> "The more anxious and neurotic a woman is, because of a damaged childhood, the absence of a father, peer pressure, or other various modifying factors, seem to amplify her Control factor.

> When a woman has to deal with many of the negative attributes listed above, this slowly raises her internal Control and tends to lead her to not only being less feminine and more masculine, but also to desire to have a higher Control over herself. Hence, in relationships she is more likely be rebellious."

A Woman's Resultant Response to a Man

> "When a man employs varying degrees of force, whether physical, emotional, or other, it can amplify a woman's different responses of either submission or rebellion."

> "A man's Dominance [overrules a woman's ILoC, and thus] triggers [a woman's losing Self-Control and thereby Fear] which is the Sexual Arousal part of the equation. Dominance exposes her vulnerability through loss of control (when his Dominance > her Control), but it is intensely validating when coming from an attractive man."

This means that in order to have a Christian hierarchy matching the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy, i.e. Headship, a man must have a stronger ILoC in comparison to the woman.

To be effective, the man must be able to express his ILoC through dominant tactics. This is where certain Game techniques come into play, e.g., assuming the sale, charisma / rizz, confidence, imposing Frame, Mastery, etc. But a man doesn't need to be a world-class PUA to be effective. In this context, a man's expression of Internal Control can be as simple as the man being disciplined, displaying detachment, enforcing boundaries, following his convictions, sticking to his determined purposes, and having a stronger or better internal control than she does, e.g., controlling his temper when she's trying to rile him, implementing meta tactics, refusing to argue over petty matters, walking away from an empty fight, etc.

Conclusions

In order to maximize the probability of having a Christian marriage via Headship, men need to choose a female GF / partner / wife who has an ILoC that he can consistently manage and overrule at times deemed necessary, and NOT "let" themselves be chosen by women who have a stronger ILoC than he does. Furthermore, the woman should respond positively to his dominance. If she chafes too much under his direction, then there is a higher chance that she'll flake. Humor and Play can do much to shift this tension into the Fun Zone.

If a man enters marriage with a woman who has a stronger ILoC than he does, for whatever reason, then he must develop a superior ILoC relative to hers, in order to have a Christian Marriage with all of the blessings thereof.

In reality, for most marriages and other intersex relationships, this will look like TheDeti's Method and will culminate in The Main Event before Headship can take precedence.

Related

- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority (2020/9/30)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)
- Σ Frame: Taming the Savage Termagant (2025/4/21)
- Σ Frame: How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23)

The Widow's Fire

Jack · 16 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Desperation and grief leads to addictive obsessive behavior.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders;
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Spread Wide Open for all the World to See (and Do)

Here's a candid confession you'll rarely see … except on TikTok in this day and age of debased debauchery.

Fit Grizly: Confessions of the "Horny Widow" (2025/5/16)

A recently widowed woman says,

> "So we've talked about Hinge, we've talked about dating, we've talked about … just that kind of stuff that I'm going through right now. There's another aspect that I haven't touched much on, because … um, I just haven't.
>
> So, on top of being a widow and trying to date, there's times where I become … FERAL! I become … DESPERATE! … and 'WIDOW'S FIRE'! If you're a widow, you know. If you are not, then you don't know. But … um, on top of just trying to date, like normally, there's times where I'm absolutely … FERAL! … and me, plus FERAL, plus Hinge, is a bad idea because it's just endless messaging and scrolling … and just … the possibilities are endless, you know? I get … I get… uh, overzealous. I get … uh, I get … um, irrational, and make decisions where… like, you know? Not… I don't make decisions, but I … I get too cocky and confident because I'm … I'm not me. [She points to her P_ssy.] She's talking, not me.
>
> So I'm going to Nashville in a week, and I'm currently in one of these episodes … I feel like I need to let the cat out of the bag! Okay?!? That might happen this upcoming trip, so I'm telling you now not to judge me, to just support me, and that this is a very real issue that I'm going through. On top of dating, there's just so many little things that SUCK. Okay? But I'm gonna let the d@mn cat out of the bag, and … I'm excited! So, wish me luck. Maybe I'll meet my husband. Maybe I won't. Maybe I'll just have a "GOOD" night. But … that's where I'm at right now."

Notice that she already has the 1,000 C0ck Stare of the Predator Mode variety.

Translation

I need to cum 24/7 because it's the ONLY thing that can assuage my grief! So I am working Hinge like a literal train schedule. Brad at 18:00. Ch@d at 20:00. Tyrone at 22:00. Jamie at midnight. Jim at 2:00 a.m. John at 4:00 a.m. (if I still have the energy). Every night! If one of them flakes, I'll grab the mailman, or the taxi driver, or the teenage boy next door, or the waiter, or the neighbor's dog. I cannot even go one day without D!!!CK!!! D!!!CK!!! D!!!CK!!! I need D!!!CK SOOOO BAAAD!!! I need SOOO much F_cking D!ck!!! As much as I can get! As many as I can get! As deep and hard as I can get! I'm so d@mn horny, an atheist drug addled hooker on Brookings Avenue, or even Bonnie Blue is a stodgy Puritan Saint compared to my horny @ss!

But even this is NOT ENOUGH to get me through this emotional trauma! So this weekend, I'm going to Nashville to find 20 more men who'll F_ck every orifice in my quivering shivering body for 72 hours straight non-stop! I need smorgasbord D!!!CK galore so baaad that I would literally k!ll anyone who tried to stop me. So you'll just have to accept it and F_ck off! (Or F_ck ME if you're available at noon or 4:00 on Friday.)

The Widow's Fire Trumps Dignity and Grief

At 1:48, Fit Grizly says,

> "So we're now seeing a widow—yes, a woman who just lost her husband—go viral on TikTok, not for sharing memories, not for processing grief, but for openly talking about how horny she is.
>
> Let's pause.
>
> We're in a strange moment where even mourning has to compete for attention. And if we're not careful, we're going to normalize the collapse of sacred space.
>
> It's natural to feel lonely. It's human to crave connection after a loss. But when grief turns into public thirst traps and sex talk for likes, we've left mourning—and entered monetization. TikTok isn't a therapist. The algorithm doesn't care about your healing. It only rewards your shock value. And sometimes, the most personal thing you can do… is stay private.

> There used to be a time when losing a spouse meant sacred silence, deep reflection, and healing behind closed doors. Now, it's hashtags, viral clips, and thirst-driven confessions. Is she grieving—or performing grief in a way that still keeps her center stage? Because the moment your sorrow becomes content, it stops being healing and starts being branding.
>
> Sexual desire doesn't die with your partner. That's human. But how and where you express it says everything. A TikTok feed full of suggestive innuendos days or weeks after becoming a widow doesn't scream vulnerability; it screams unresolved emptiness needing an audience. There's a difference between honesty and exhibitionism.
>
> We have to ask ourselves, what are we becoming when even widowhood turns into a trending topic, when we no longer know the line between expression and exposure? If you can't sit with pain without broadcasting it, are you healing or just avoiding silence? Because sometimes silence is the most honest form of grief.
>
> We live in an age where oversharing is rewarded and dignity is dismissed as boring. But not everything you feel is meant for public consumption, and not every urge needs a platform. Sometimes the most powerful thing you can do with your pain is protect it.
>
> She lost her husband, but the real tragedy may be how quickly she lost her sense of privacy."

Well said. However, I believe Fit Grizly is mistaken in assigning any significant level of agentic capacity to this woman. I think she is exactly what she says — "absolutely FERAL" — and even that is an understatement.

Conclusions

Do not be deceived into thinking this is just ONE weird C0ckamania crazed s1ut who's gone madly out of control.

No. This is just one woman who is shameless and stupid enough to tell all the world about her non-stop shagging nagging niche itch on TikTok. 5 years from now, she'll be begging for this video to be deleted.

The truth is…

THIS is exactly what happens to a woman after her husband dies.

All Widows Are Like That. AWALT 2.0.

THIS is exactly why St. Paul urged younger widows to remarry in 1 Timothy 5:3-16.

> [5] She who is truly a widow, left all alone, has set her hope on God and continues in supplications and prayers night and day, [6] but she who is self-indulgent is dead even while she lives.
>
> [11] But refuse to enroll younger widows, for when their passions draw them away from Christ, they desire to marry [12] and so incur condemnation for having abandoned their former faith. [13] Besides that, they learn to be idlers, going about from house to house, and not only idlers, but also gossips and busybodies, saying what they should not. [14] So I would have younger widows marry, bear children, manage their households, and give the adversary no occasion for slander. [15] For some have already strayed after Satan.

To be clear, Paul's phrase "they desire to marry" in verse 11 is a polite description of what we've witnessed above. St. Paul lived before The Council of Trent's redefinition of marriage in 1563 (which sparked the Protestant Reformation and ushered in the Modern Age), so he was using the Biblical concept of Sex = Marriage. A modern translation of this verse might be, "They'll F_ck every man in town and the land will become filled with wh0redom." (c.f. Leviticus 19:29)

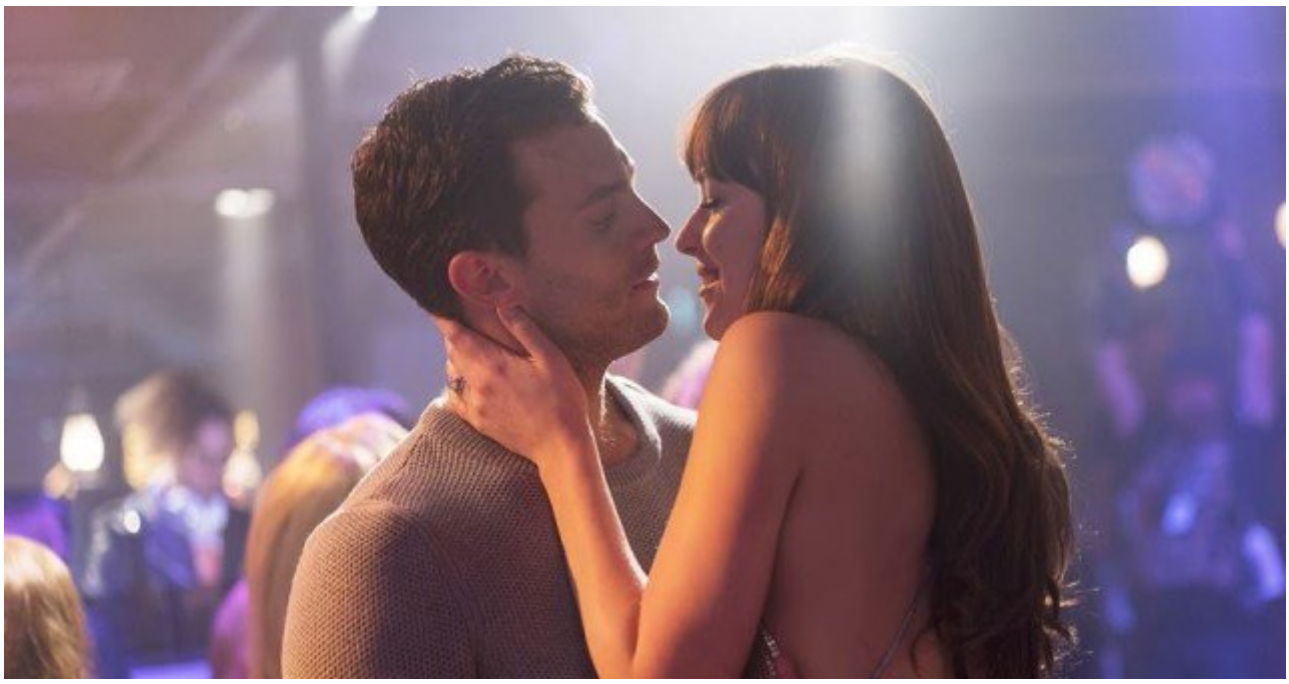
Furthermore, Divorce has the same effect (Matthew 5:32).



The FEARal Pattern

The behavior of Grim Reaper Widows is exactly like that of Alpha Widows, and fits the general nature of sexually spoiled women.

THIS is exactly what happens to a woman after being abandoned.

THIS is exactly what happens to a woman after having been Alpha Widowed.

THIS is exactly what happens to a woman after getting Pumped and Dumped.

THIS is exactly what happens to a woman after filing The Divorce™.

The general pattern is as follows.

Give a woman the grandest F_cking of her Life (either 'Biblical marriage' or married 'proper') –> Take that away from her (for whatever reason, abandonment, branch swinging, death, divorce, etc.) –> Desperation kicks in –> She becomes "absolutely FEARal", like the woman above.

There are VERY few exceptions to this pattern. AWALT 1.0 and 2.0.

Even virgin women who get stood up at the altar have been known to behave in this way. This is why in some traditions, the best man (or the most eligible man in attendance) was expected to marry the bride if the groom died or didn't show up. This was done in order to prevent her from going FEARal, and thereby save her from a ruined reputation, or to shield the families from a vendetta.

Related

- Σ Frame: My Dating Experiences in College (2018/3/25)
- Σ Frame: Why is premarital sex a sin? (2020/8/14)
- Σ Frame: "Flipping the Switch" is God's Gatekeeping, not her Tingle management (2020/12/8)
- Σ Frame: Carousel Widow in Decline – Part I – Part 2 – Part 3 – Part 4 – Part 5 (2021/8/6-28)
- Σ Frame: Validation (2022/10/11)
- Σ Frame: Horny Housewives of the Future Patristic Age (2025/4/14)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)

- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)

The Fear of Life

Jack · 18 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Are you truly living, or just reacting to fear?

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

God Expresses Himself in Many Ways

> Fear God and Keep his Commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.
>
> Ecclesiastes 12:13 (KJV)

> Jesus saith unto him, I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me.
>
> John 14:6 (KJV)

Accepting Jesus as Lord God, and then combining and extending these two passages by peripheral equivocation, leads to the "commandments"…

Fear the Way.

Fear the Truth.

Fear the Life.

Now, this superposition may not be entirely valid (c.f. "God is Love" ≠ "Love is God"), but hang with me for a moment. I'm framing a certain mindset that leads to a valid point.

If we were to hear the phrase, "Fear the Way" concerning some enterprise, we are likely to respond by taking a detour or cancelling our journey, thinking any attempt would be a foolish mistake. Only the wisest souls would recognize that this phrase suggests (in the spiritual sense) that we should always walk carefully and circumspectly

(Ephesians 5), being diligent and vigilant (Colossians 4:2-9; 1 Peter 4), and that "Life is in the Journey" and how we deal with the challenges and roadblocks, and NOT in the destination or the outcome, nor as we might want or expect.

Based Conservatives have become accustomed to thinking that the "Fear of Truth" is a Liberal's aversion to being confronted with incontrovertible, uncomfortable facts. Yes, but No. We need to revise our concept of the "Fear of Truth", NOT as a Femcentric or quəər phobia, but as a "love for the Truth" — a deep appreciation and a reverential respect for Truth that saturates one's consciousness — enough to give one a few minutes (or a few days) pause to consider how to best respond to a triggering impulse, thereby granting one the virtue of self-control.

We're all very familiar with the "Fear of Death" (and thereby have great respect for the hand of the Lord via the angel of death), but we are not so used to hearing or talking about the "Fear of Life". Maybe we should be. Maybe we should be revering the Lord of Life in life, just as much as we fear Him in death.

But I 'fear' (ahem) many Christians wouldn't even know what this looks like.

Case Study — Mommy!

Here's an example of how the "Fear of Life" might be expressed.

I know a younger woman at church who has 4 children all under the age of 9. She is constantly surrounded by kids saying "Mommy! Mommy! Mommy!" It's always Mommy this and Mommy that, every minute of the day. This has got to be so draining to her.

Sometimes when I see her (and her kids aren't within earshot), I'll call her 'Mommy'. It always lightens her mood and brings a smile of relief to her face.

I think this 'works' because of these reasons.

1. It recognizes her identity as a hardworking and harried mother.
2. It grants dignity and grace to her status as one who gives life to her family.
3. It is a form of social validation that transforms 'Mommy' into an honorable title, as it should be.
4. It has a powerful effect, because 4 little people address her by this title all day, and so it touches her heart to the core.

5. Best of all, it is also fun — and funny.

Reactions

When I was younger, I had the notion that all imaginative social games, including showing love through playful interactions (like what I do with Mrs. Mommy) are essentially all lies. I never saw this kind of interaction between my parents during my formative years, so it all seemed so farcical and fake … with mysterious magical effects that seemed reminiscent of an evil spell.

Using the above anecdote as an example, what I might have thought back then: "I shouldn't call her Mommy because she's not MY mother." It wouldn't have occurred to me that she's still a mother, regardless of her relationship to me. It is a self-centered overreliance on an intellectually guided false conscience. Such thinking swiftly arrested me from ever showing love to someone in this way.

But after my parents divorced, I realized that their interaction was never healthy at all, but rather cold and distant, so then I opened my mind to consider other possibilities.

Thus, as I've grown older, I've come to recognize that things like genuine authority, identity, and relationships are just as important as being factually accurate, and are sometimes even closer to the truth.

Furthermore, the notion that factual accuracy is more important or more truthful than spiritual vitality is the real lie, because it sedates and seduces one's soul to comply with the mind's need for cold intellectual clarity rather than the heart's need for warm love and liveliness.

Just like I used to be, this is a lie that many Christian men in the West are apt to believe because of Western culture's overreliance on Enlightened Scientism (Matthew 24:12). It is important for men to repent from this misconception because this belief totally kills their Charisma and Game proficiency. Ask me how I know.

Conclusions

If Christian men focused more on the "Fear of Life", rather than the fear of being factually erroneous (e.g. according to Boomer hereticisms, such as Chivalry, Complementarianism, Servant Leader, etc.), then they might discover they have more charisma, charm, Rizz, and winsomeness than they ever thought possible.

It all comes so easy once you "Get It".

Unless you're still convinced that living a life of playful love is a sin.

Observant readers have probably figured out that the discourse in the first section is a play on the two different definitions of fear (phobia vs reverence).

If readers can accept a new word to facilitate clarity in the discussion, I'll suggest the word Fearevere can be used to specifically refer to Fear as a form of reverence, rather than a phobia (1 John 4:18). Readers are also welcome to suggest another word.

Readers are invited to offer other examples of how the "Fear of Life" might be expressed.

Related

- Radix Fidem: More on Heart Logic (2016/10/6)
- Radix Fidem: The Path of the Heart (2017/5/24)
- Radix Fidem: Toward a Heart-led Psychology (2018/1/8)
- Radix Fidem: Theology and Practice: Heart Led (2019/5/4)
- Radix Fidem: What's on Your Heart? (2020/9/5)
- Σ Frame: Love begins where perfection ends (2021/9/22)
- Radix Fidem: Salvation Is Not in Your Head (2024/7/15)
- Radix Fidem: Go Forth and Make Mistakes (2025/7/14)

Bathsheba

Jack · 21 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Good Times with Great Men leads to Kitty Liver Quiver.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Intro

studentray57 wrote,

> Hey Jack!
>
> The pastor of the church I attend preached on 2 Samuel 11, David and Bathsheba. He placed all of the blame on King David based on God's rebuke through Nathan. He made "mention" of "other opinions" regarding Bathsheba, but dispelled them. I would really like to read your take on 2 Samuel 11!

Most sermons get the part about David's sin and Nathan's rebuke correct. What they're deafly afraid to address is whether or not Bathsheba had any moral agency in the matter.

So in this analysis, I'll focus on Bathsheba from a Red Pill perspective.

The Scripture Passage

Bathsheba, a bronze sculpture by Benjamin Victor.
Here's the passage from 2 Samuel 11.

> [2] Now at evening time David got up from his bed and walked around on the roof of the king's house, and from > the roof he saw a woman bathing; and the woman was very beautiful in appearance. [3] So David sent servants and inquired about the woman. And someone said, "Is this not Bathsheba, the daughter of Eliam, the wife of Uriah the Hittite?" [4] Then David sent messengers and had her brought, and when she came to him, he slept with her; and when she had purified herself from her uncleanness, she returned to her house. [5] But the woman conceived; so she sent word and informed David, and said, "I am pregnant."

>
> 2 Samuel 11:2-5 (NASB)

The word for woman used here is 'iš·šāh, the meaning of which we discussed recently. It means a sexually activated woman, i.e. a wife or married woman, or else an adulteress if not.

In verse 4, the ritual purification after sexual intercourse is to bathe in water and then "remain unclean until evening" (Leviticus 15:18), 'evening' taken to mean 6:00 p.m. or sunset.

Jack's Take on Bathsheba

First of all, at the beginning of the story, Bathsheba was married to a soldier (Uriah) who was away fighting in a war. Women married to soldiers have a very high frequency of infidelity, especially if she's young, and/or he's gone for months or years at a time. Women married to military men back in Biblical times were probably not much different from those living today. Even if Bathsheba wasn't already given over to this temptation, she definitely succumbed to it with King David.

Secondly, a woman bathing on the rooftop may or may not have been out of the ordinary, but it is telling that when people were asked, they knew exactly who that woman was.

In verse 3, the phrase, "Is this not Bathsheba…?" could be interpreted colloquially as, "Surely it could only be Bathsheba." (See hă·lō·w.) This interpretation suggests that Bathsheba had a reputation for being a casual exhibitionist, and doing so on the rooftop of her own home granted her a degree of plausible deniability.

Bethsabée, oil on canvas, 60.5 x 100 cm. (1889) Jean-Léon Gérôme's depiction of Bathsheba bathing and being watched by King David.

Third, receiving a personal invitation to hang out with a king had to be intensely validating for any woman. She definitely would not refuse the invitation, even if she knew what it would lead to (maybe especially so). Maybe …

this was her prime motive for stripping nude on the rooftop in full view of the royal palace. Who knows?

Fourth, she willingly did the deed. She didn't say no. She didn't turn down the invitation. She didn't refuse King David's advances. Otherwise the passage would say David r@ped her. The text doesn't say who did the seducing, but it's possible that she seduced him. I could believe she might have been thinking, somewhere along the way, something along the lines of, "This time, I've hit the jackpot! My husband will (eventually) die in battle, and then I'll be a concubine or a wife of the king!" That is exactly what happened.

And just like it is today, all the blame is placed on the man.

Imagining Their Encounter

Coming from the Bible, we have the notion that their affair was a very serious matter. It was a serious sin, of course, but I mean the way it occurred probably wasn't like what most modern gynocentric Westerners might imagine (i.e. Patriarchal hegemony, or R@pe).

We do not know if David had the full premeditated intention of having sexual relations with Bathsheba when he invited her to the palace. But in general, a man would. Men desire the company of beautiful women, and there's always the possibility of sex in the back of men's minds — IF the lady is willing. This is especially true for powerful men, such as King David.

It is uncertain how much secrecy David could have employed in inviting Bathsheba to the palace, but I'll guess not much. After all, he asked his servants to summon her, and servants talk about everything that goes on.

Under these assumptions, I can imagine two possible scenarios. (Artistic works of David and Bathsheba depict both of these types of situations, shown in the images below.)

1. Premeditated Sin and Private

It is possible that David snuck her in through the back door, so to speak, and took her directly to his private chambers, with only a small number of servants knowing about it. He probably talked and played with her for a while to warm her up, and then banged her silly. She bathed and then hung out there until nightfall, at which time she departed out the back door and returned to her home.

David and Bathsheba are depicted in an anonymous 17th century painting.

2. Unmeditated Sin and Public

In this case, Bathsheba was probably at the palace, dining, drinking, and participating in the royal social activities for most of the day (we can be certain that wine was served at the banquets), and then having sex at some point during the latter half of the day, and then she went home after 6:00. Party Hearty Dude!

In this scenario, I imagine that David and Bathsheba had a Meet Cute. They probably hit it off very well, and their smooth relationship sped to coitus. Of course, we know that women, when intoxicated by wine and under the influence of the Tingle Tantrums, are almost totally responsible for that.

It certainly wasn't like David announced his intentions of having an affair to all his royal entourage and guests, saying, "Ladies and gentlemen, please excuse me for the next 2 hours while I take Uriah's wife to the royal bedchambers and F_ck her lilly silly." Definitely not. In this context, their intercourse may very well have been a very playful, half-drunk quickie at a moment when no one was looking.

That's how affairs begin — lots of people mixing and drinking, enjoying high times together, and then, "Oops! We went a little too far there." This is why women always say, "It just happened! I don't know how I could have done that." When women say this, they're being partly truthful (i.e. The Electro-Tingle disables a woman's moral agency, self-awareness, and self-control), but mostly naïve. After all, girls just wanna have fun with highfalutin men. That's just how they are.

The Story of David and Bathsheba, Triptych by Herri met de (1510-1550).

Did Bathsheba have Agency?

Now we come to the real question that reveals all.

As told in 1 Kings 1:11-2:46, Bathsheba displayed skillful diplomatic powers that secured Solomon's succession to the throne, rather than David's older surviving sons by other wives, based on promises David made to her. It is therefore clear that she did, in fact, possess significant agency. What is unclear is whether she was capable of such agency years earlier when she collected King David's seed in the palace on that fateful day.

My bet is that she did have such degree of agency. I'd even believe that Uriah and David were NOT the only men she "knew", in the Biblical sense. After all, she's an adulterer, and fooling around is what adulterers love to do. That's what makes them adulterers.

Conclusions

In conclusion, who Bathsheba was didn't really matter. She was just a commoner married to a soldier.

Her story only matters because of four reasons…

1. She was a meretricious sex symbol who attracted the attention of the King of Israel and had an affair with him.
2. She persuaded a sitting king, intentionally or unintentionally, to eliminate her husband and take her as his wife.
3. David and Bathsheba's illicit affair and the consequences thereof plunged the House of David into anguish, chaos, rebellion, and war for several generations. It could be argued that this was the pivotal event that led to the downfall of Israel centuries later.
4. She became an ancestor of Jesus Christ.

It's all the classic Red Pill tropes rolled into one true story.

- Women's preferred habit of nakedness.
- Women's propensity for advertising their reproductive portal.
- Women's innate attraction to PSALM qualities in men (pun absolutely intended).
- Hypergamy
- All women crave attention and validation.
- The glory and power of a woman's beauty.
- "P_ssy makes men weak."
- "Let's you and him fight."
- "Women wait at the finish line and choose the winners."
- "Winner takes all."
- Women's love for Drama.
- The Ordinance of FEAR.
- The fear fantasy of being widowed.
- Women's innate proclivity to seduce high SMV men and engage in illicit sex.
- Women's fantasy of leaving their first husband for a second chance at marriage.

And probably others I haven't thought of.

That's absolutely epic nuclear Validation, all because of her beauty and her willingness to betray her husband and shag the king.

And most AWALT.

Related

- Σ Frame: Models of Courtship and Marital Structure (2018/10/3)
- Σ Frame: How do Women Glorify God? (2020/10/7)
- Σ Frame: The Meet Cute Experience as a Selection Model (2022/2/18)
- Σ Frame: Women are the Gatekeepers of Sex : A Red Pill Truth, but is it Biblical? (2024/9/27)

The Female Impulse to Control is a Stopgap for FEAR

Jack · 23 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

When a woman is unable to obtain Validation within a preferred FEAR-based paradigm, she seeks total control of her social environment.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders; Feminine Submission;
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

This post continues a series of recent posts between Σ Frame and Christianity and Masculinity, listed here.

- Σ Frame: The Feminist's FEAR of Man (2025/5/14)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Christianity and Masculinity: A Deeper Dive on Hypergamy (2025/6/14)
- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Relative Internal Locus of Control Determines Relational Structure (2025/7/14)

To FEAR, or NOT to FEAR?

As described previously, women are intrinsically drawn to Dominance, FEAR, and indulging in debased sexual sin, sometimes bordering on the macabre or violent.

There are some major issues, both psychological and real-world, that come with women chasing after the FEAR dynamic and pursuing an answer to the question of how her Ordinance is to be fulfilled.

For one, an experience that is purely Validational — under relatively comfortable conditions that satisfy a woman's emotional needs in an ego-affirming manner, is rare indeed. It is a form of God's grace reserved only for the most chaste, obedient, self-controlled, and virtuous women. For women who've already ridden the CC and have been jaded by sexual sin, this form of life satisfaction is virtually non-existent. That bird has flown. So there is the FEAR of NOT being included among the 'elect', so to speak.

Secondly, the majority of women are biding their time in silent desperation to have such an experience. Their desire for soul consummation is so great that many of them refuse to wait, and will pull out all the stops in a multitude of vain efforts in the flesh to achieve this validation, yea, even sanctification in an ignorant sense, through various fleshly / Worldly methods. The dictates of the flesh strongly prefer anything other than submission. But somewhere in the deep recesses of their hive mind, they know that taking sinful shortcuts to self-sanctification won't turn out well for them. Yet, they cannot live with themselves if they do not take every chance available to them. Cue FOMO, YOLO, etc. So there is yet another FEAR of confusion and frustration.

Third, for most women, this whole instinctive phenomenon and all its implications are deeply embarrassing and also offensive to their FEARal Feminist minds and egos, and is therefore something that they simply won't face up to, again, because of their FEAR of Man, their self-preserving Fleshly nature, and their Father Below. This is the fundamental reason why women are so hard-headedly determined to avoid accountability and assuming agency.

Women Cope via an Impulse to Control

When a woman is unable to obtain Validation within a preferred FEAR-based paradigm, she seeks total control of her social environment, partly to avoid the embarrassment and shame of her debased nature, i.e. her desire for what (she believes) would be required for the sexual consummation and soul identity affirmation she desires, and partly to shape her life circumstances to keep that door of opportunity open as wide as possible for as long as possible. This is Women's deepest motivation to deceive, deny, gaslight, lie, do mental gymnastics, and to roil in every other sort of sin that is unique to the female nature.

Thus, Women's Desire for Control is a vain, self-glorifying Stopgap for NOT being able to fulfill their existential question of soul identity within the FEAR Paradigm.

- This is why women constantly engage in dozens, if not hundreds, of Evasion and Control Tactics.
- This is why women would rather keep a bevy of orbiters than go all in on one man.
- This is why women marry schlubs they're NOT sexually attracted to.

It is all about control.

Women will sugarcoat this by calling it a need for 'friendship', 'security', or 'stability', but these phrases and others are all polite code words for 'Control'.

"I am the god of my own destiny!", she thinks, although she knows she is NOT.

Conclusions

The bottom line is that women who resort to control tactics have rejected their own feminine role as one who is loved, one who is ruled over, and one who receives and gives back. Those who have rejected their femininity and/or their sexual purity have also rejected the possibility of ever being Validated (again). Sad but true.

In a previous post, it was noted that a woman's desire to answer the existential question in her soul by conforming to the FEAR dynamic was a greater motivator than hypergamy. Similarly, a woman's desire for Control (also alluded to in Genesis 3:16) is also stronger than Hypergamy, but this doesn't become obvious until after they've been burned and spurned by their sin-filled pursuit of the FEAR dynamic.

Also, there are degrees. Certainly not all women succumb to the idea that fantasy is reality, or that FEAR = LURRVE, but there is a growing plurality of writhing wraiths who seriously attempt to make that fantasy into a reality, even at an eternal cost to their ever-loathing souls. Cue all Alpha Widows and single mothers.

They key to a woman's redemption is for her to submit to the authority God has placed over her, and to learn obedience and self-control within this context, by the grace of the Holy Spirit.

Related

- Chateau Heartiste: What Betas Can Learn From Women's Rape Fantasies (2011/4/18)
- Cultural Analysis & Philosophy: Why Feminists Enjoy Rape Fantasies (2018/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority (2020/9/30)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: Validation is about Losing Self-Control (2022/10/24)
- Σ Frame: The Virtue of Self-Control (2024/12/16)
- Σ Frame: Self-Control : Trust and Deception (2024/12/17)
- Σ Frame: The Virtue of Chastity : Boundaries vs Self-Control (2024/12/18)
- Σ Frame: Boundaries : Self-Control vs Drawing the Line (2024/12/19)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)

- Σ Frame: Taming the Savage Termagant (2025/4/21)
- Σ Frame: How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23)
- Σ Frame: Pride is Stronger than Love (2025/6/25)
- Σ Frame: Why do Women Love Lies? (2025/7/4)

Dominion and Fear-Based Intersexual Dynamics

Jack · 25 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Men and women's sexual arousal fits within specific contextualized sex roles.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Feminine Submission;
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

In response to FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27), FarmLegend wrote,

> "It's certainly not intuitive to us men how fear and sexual desire are somehow weirdly intertwined within the female psyche.
>
> I've never once been so frightened that I got a boner."

It's definitely a function of the lower-order hind-brain, but it's also strongly dependent on the social context and the sex role that is played by an individual.

Here, I'll explain how this works.

Sex Roles Determine the Contextual Venue of Arousal

Here, I use the term "sex role" to mean…

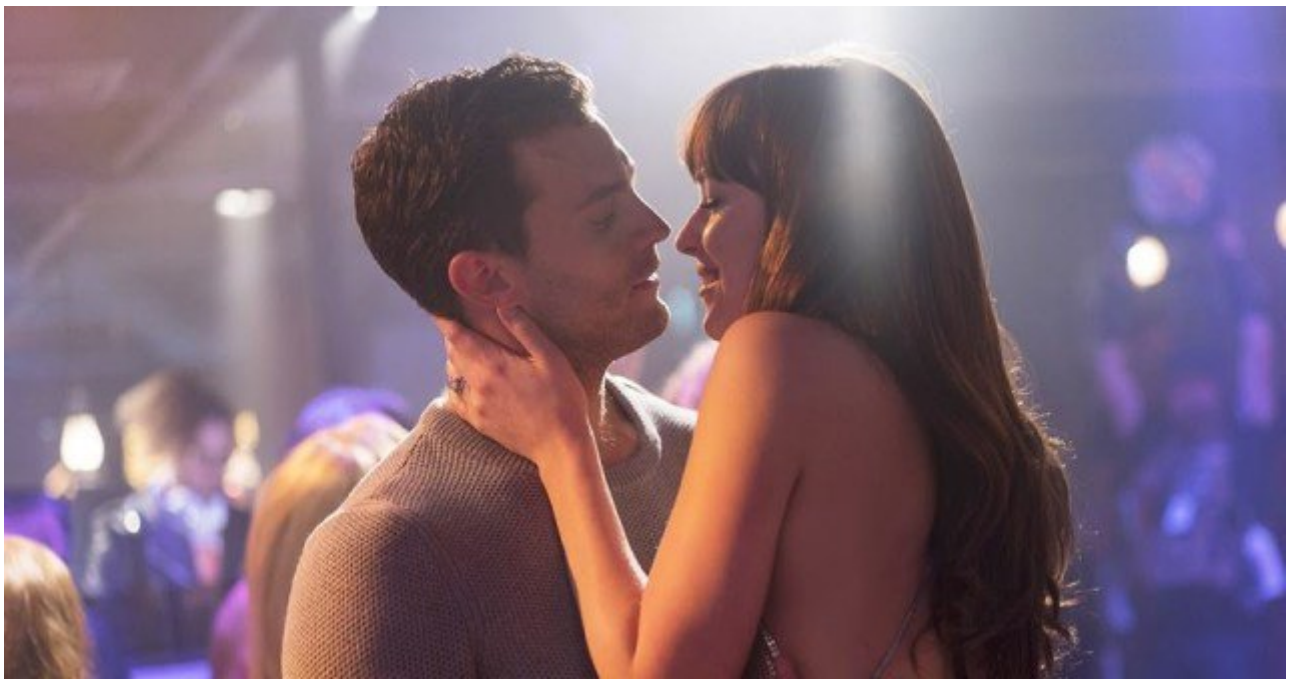
- Masculine = Conquering, Dominant, Initiating, Overruling, Performing, etc.
- Feminine = Conforming, Obedient, Receptive, Responsive, Submissive, etc.

Arousal correlates with the degree of sexual polarity, i.e. Masculine Men are attracted to Feminine Women, and Feminine Women are aroused by Masculine Men.

As an aside, this concept can also envelop other role structures, where males play a feminine role, and females play a masculine role, like in a debased, wife-dominated marriage, or in h0m0sexual relationships where one partner plays a masculine role (AKA "Ones"), and the other plays a feminine role (AKA "Zeros"). This concept also gives a broader meaning to the phrase, "Zeroed Out", referring to how a woman emasculates a man and reduces him to a poverty-brained beggar by some means. And it's not just bad, b!tchy, boorish wives who reduce their husbands to sniveling cowards; it also includes Devouring Mothers who weaken and wussify their sons.

But apart from instances of convoluted and dysfunctional sex roles, and going back to how things are supposed to be, to understand the connection between Power, Fear, and Sexual arousal in women correctly, you have to understand that the sex roles determine the vectors of arousal. Men are turned on by being the conquerors, whereas women are titillated by being on the receiving end of the dynamic.

So for men (that is, Real Men), sexual arousal is not caused by Fear and being dominated and overruled as it is for women. Neither is it about sex per se (apart from raw libidinous desire), except where sex is an expression of dominion, or a tool to exercise or enforce dominion (which is a practice now shunned as unethical and is flatly illegal in Western cultures).



Representative Analogies

I'm trying to think of an equivalent male function that might form an analogy that could answer FarmLegend's query. I guess it would be something like…

- A Rage F_ck.
- The Stanford prison experiment, but with sex.
- Polygynous sexual dynamics within primitive cultures with Power/Fear-based ethics.
- A State of Nature such as that depicted in Apocalypse Now, where Playboy bunnies are literally Party F_cked to death and then their bodies are discarded as useless carrion.
- Ancient Chinese culture in which women were treated as property and bred like animals, and defiant, disrespectful, and ugly women were systematically eliminated from the gene pool.
- How seemingly decent men go off to war and then transform into cruel mass k!llers and careless r@pists, and then return to decent civilized society and seamlessly resume their former identity.

The general idea is that when women are helplessly and totally subjected to the feral vices of male concupiscence combined with rawdog rodgering power, and all accountability is removed, then men will go F_ckadilly willy nilly silly all day, and not one Bang-worthy poontang shall ever be excluded nor neglected.

It's a true fantasy that modern men seldom engage in.

The difference is that women can go there and back simply by reading 50SoG or by hooking up with Master Spanker ViceGrip Ch@d.

Men's Feral Sexual Arousal

For Men, feral sexual arousal requires the possession of authentic authority, immense power, and dominion over a woman, rather than on FEAR, as it is for women. That is, when a man completely rules over a woman, heart, mind, body, and soul, her FEARful response to his domination and her resultant submission can be deeply arousing to a man, even overpowering a man's inhibitions.

Men are not hard-wired to say "No" to sex when everything else is a green light, especially when accountability and inhibitions are removed. That is the nature of men.

When a man totally possesses a woman in this way, he cannot restrain himself from F_cking her like crazy all the time, just to watch her eyes pop and her mouth drop open at the moment her baby-making mortal instincts hijack her prefrontal cortex and launch her lurching loins into Libido Land. This, in turn, stokes up more T in the man, and is thus a self-reinforcing symbiosis.

This is also true for young men and high T men; although they may not have much real power or Sexual Authority over a particular woman, their naïve notions of immortal indomitability and hormone-stoked confidence, respectively, cause them to respond the same sexually as powerful, high sociosexual status men who exert real Sexual Authority over women.

Women's Feral Sexual Arousal

For women, it is as I have written about before, and as Deep Strength has described here. Fear, respect, and submission are linked together.

For women, sex is an overt expression of submission within the FEAR dynamic, i.e., to a man who authentically dominates her feral nature.

For the iconic examples of Ch@ds, Dracula, werewolves, etc. the sexual effect of domination is overwhelming for women. There is little question that a typical woman would be able to resist the fantasy or the temptation thereof.

For more on women's sexual response to Male Aggression, Authority, Dominion, Dread, Fear, and Game, please see the articles from Σ Frame and Christianity and Masculinity below.

The Importance of Willing Feminine Submission

Deep Strength wrote,

> "Those wives who are rebellious and thus desire [to possess] the authority of their husband instead of submitting to it will have no sexual desire for him. Those wives who submit to their husband's authority and his possession of them will overflow with sexual desire for him. And likewise, vice versa."
>
> Christianity and Masculinity: A Christian Understanding of Attraction (2014/6/15)

Because only a fraction of Mega Ch@ds have the magical penis power to pop open a woman's monkey box with literally no resistance on her part, for most men, much of having a healthy relationship dynamic is dependent on their woman's willingness to be agreeable, cooperative, submissive, and ruled over by the man she has chosen as her mate.

This is exactly what we have concluded about the necessity of having a submissive woman in order to create a proper Christian Marriage. (See posts listed below.)

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: Fear, Respect, Honor, and Truth, Phobeo and Timao (2014/5/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Dominion (2014/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Authority is Good (2014/6/14)

- Christianity and Masculinity: Rational and Irrational Fear (2014/9/25)
- Christianity and Masculinity: 50 Shades of Grey Analysis (2015/2/15)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Authenticity and Charisma (2015/3/20)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Let's Talk about Marriage: Fear and Dread (2015/11/6)
- Christianity and Masculinity: False desire and true desire (2019/6/10)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Revisiting dread in the Bible with an anti-chivalry lens (2020/6/18)
- Eran Shor, Who Seeks Aggression in Pornography? Findings from Interviews with Viewers, Archives of Sexual Behavior (2021). DOI: 10.1007/s10508-021-02053-1
- Phys.Org: Women more likely to enjoy aggression in porn: study (2022/2/11)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Aggression Dominance is Arousing to Women (2022/3/29)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Validation (2022/10/11)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame (Jack): What we've learned about Feminine Submission (2022/10/31)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Husbands are to improve the moral agency of their wives through sanctification (2022/12/17)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Women submit to their Head (2022/10/17)
- Σ Frame (Jack*): Validation is about Losing Self-Control (2022/10/24)
- Σ Frame (Jack*): Game is an invitation to Humility (2022/10/25)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle, Jack): Why are women willingly submissive to authorities, but not to their husbands? (2022/10/26)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle, Jack): Very few women can be Molded. (2022/10/27)
- Σ Frame (Jack): It's her choice whether or not to submit. (2022/10/28)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Repentance and Submission (2022/10/30)
- Σ Frame: The Feminist's FEAR of Man (2025/5/14)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Christianity and Masculinity: A Deeper Dive on Hypergamy (2025/6/14)
- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear, and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Relative Internal Locus of Control Determines Relational Structure (2025/7/14)

The Neurochemistry of Commitment, Sex, and Love

Red Pill Apostle · 26 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

¡Sc!eNcE! confirms Biblical and Red Pill postulates.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation
Author's Note: Based on an email conversation with Jack on 2025/7/21-22. Compiled by Jack.
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes + 12 minute video

Intro

If you have not seen the data given in this video, it is well worth your 12 minutes to watch it.

How Your Brain Falls In Love | Dawn Maslar | TEDx Boca Raton (2016/7/5) Length: 12 minutes

This talk is very interesting because it explains much of men's and women's sexual mating behaviors. It also has some far-reaching implications.

Here we'll briefly go over a few of the RP concepts that are explained by it — including the weird and dank stuff.

Men vs Women

The short version is that men's and women's pathways to experiencing the love hormone, oxytocin, are different.

- A woman's neurochemistry surges with oxytocin when she has sex with a man, whereas a man's chemistry only becomes oxytocin dominant when he is committed to a woman.
- Women experience increased oxytocin during and after sex, binding her to the man who just gave her an orgasm. Women also experience oxytocin increases with baby raising activities, e.g. breastfeeding.
- Men experience their highest levels of oxytocin after sex, however, there are major roadblocks in oxytocin's way that prevent the bonding hormone from doing its job. These are testosterone and vasopressin. These roadblocks are reduced when he is committed to the relationship.

This data provides a neurochemical reason for why Chads love em and leave em, and why women get spurned, and then become bitter lovelorn Alpha Widows.

Single men are high in both testosterone and vasopressin, so when an unattached man hooks up for some No-Strings-Attached sex with a woman that he doesn't care much about, it really is a NSA sexual release for him. But for her, the sex alone leads to twoo wuv. But without his commitment, it just can't work out, either neurochemically or socially.

The Effect of Commitment

The most interesting piece of information to me is that oxytocin does not cause men to fall in love, but it is the glue that binds him to a woman once commitment is there.

At that point, testosterone levels decrease, and vasopressin receptors have had time to develop. Now, when a man who is committed to a woman has sex with her, the testosterone and vasopressin barriers are sufficiently lowered so that he bonds with the woman to whom he has committed himself.

This is summarized in the equation (for males only),

Male Commitment + Sex => Feelings of Love / Oxytocin

God gave men a competitive drive to conquer, and once he's conquered, and only after, then comes the gentleness to stay with his woman (assuming he's a good man).

The Effects of Separation or Divorce

After thinking about the concepts further, and in light of today's debased marketplace, we wondered if any of the neurochemical bonding processes are reversed if/when a committed relationship ends?

There has to be some mechanism for reversing the commitment and sexual bonding processes for men and women, respectively, because women destroy their marriages with their behavior, even preemptively via premarital sex, and Proverbs gives us multiple warnings about being married to a difficult woman.

So what happens with the neurochemistry in this case? Do the receptors atrophy from lack of use, or does the body block their use with another neurotransmitter?

Red Pill lore states that a woman who has sex with multiple men will quickly exhaust her ability to pair bond. This suggests that her oxytocin receptors have been desensitized or overloaded to the point of nullifying its effects.

Likewise, if a man's commitment is sufficiently abused, then maybe a man's testosterone and vasopressin reach a critical threshold that unravels the influence of Oxytocin. Or maybe it is the stress hormone, cortisol, which tends to decrease all these other hormones?

Being a Ball Busting B!tch Burns Up a Man's Commitment-Induced Oxytocin

Let's consider that last situation more closely.

A previous post, Wives reap what they sow (2022/1/12), discussed how women ruin their husband's love for them by being way too over-the-top, b!tchy, cold, complaining, contentious, demanding, naggy, nasty, whiny, etc. Things like stark, embarassing disrespect, being bitterly ungrateful, playing the blame game, threatening divorce, and withholding sex, if done repetitively over time, will certainly have this effect. And yet, many foolish women ply these follies until they run their marriages into the ground, sometimes on purpose.

Worse, when men are subjected to this kind of treatment, once she pushes him over the edge, men will never again revive the feelings of love they once had for her.

When this happens, what goes on in his brain chemistry?

I'll guess that Men's neurological response to this abusive treatment is very similar to the effect that riding the carousel has on women — his oxytocin receptors are desensitized to its effects, and any pair-bonding that once existed is thereafter ruined.

Further, the ongoing stress of living with such a woman keeps his cortisol high. This is why men are so relieved after separating from Ball Busting (ex)wives, and why some men give up on women after having such an experience.

Sexual Denial and Frustration

For instance, think about the implications for women who deny their husbands sex. Let's remember that being denied sex is one of the chief reasons for infidelity among men.

Obviously, the bond breaks over time, but there is a point where the man's brain flips from being "committed" to "uncommitted", or more precisely, "less-committed than what is adequate" or "NOT committed enough" to remain faithful / monogamous.

So then, given the opportunity, the neurochemical door is wide open to him having an affair — or else succumbing to clinical depression.

Cheating

We also wondered why men are more likely to tolerate infidelity than women are, even though a wife's unfaithfulness is much more damaging to the relationship than when the man steps out.

I would hypothesize that the long, slow death of the relationship that results from a wife's constant daily arguing, combativeness, nagging, and withholding reverse the commitment and bonding chemistry in a man's brain much more than a man who is blindsided by his wife's infidelity.

In the blindsided scenario, the neurological pathways probably still remain intact, which would make me think that men who have been cheated on would be more likely to still love their wife even after she blew up his world when compared to the sexless marriage husband whose bond has had time to atrophy or completely deteriorate.

I'd summarize my hypothesis as:

- A slowly grown connection followed by a fast, sudden break => some emotional connection still left.
- A slowly grown connection followed by a long, slow break => little to no form of emotional attachment still left.

Open Relationships

In a previous Study of Open Relationships (2015/9/8), Jack concluded that people are either one of two types — either they could accept having an open relationship, i.e. sharing one's partner with others sexually, or they could NOT accept it. Those who can accept ORs are able to have a separate emotional experience concerning either sex or love, whereas, those who could not accept OR's, tend to associate sex and love together. Those people who associated sex and love together, were also likely to see marriage, or at least a committed monogamous long-term-relationship (LTR), as a sacred union of these two aspects of a relationship. Whereas, those people who did NOT associate sex and love together, tended to have had a heartbreaking experience in life (e.g. coming from a broken family, or having been rejected multiple times, or monkey branching in preference for another partner), and being heartbroken in the process.

This makes sense from a neurological perspective. People who have had their oxytocin receptors burned out through some sort of trauma (abuse, cheating, divorce, familial dysfunction, sexual denial, etc.) find it easier to separate sex and love, and thus are more willing to entertain the notion of getting an oxytocin fix anywhere they can find it.

A man's commitment, in this case, devolves into a commitment to himself, his lifestyle, and/or his own self-satisfaction, rather than to the relationship(s) or the women involved.

Cuckoldry

While some men merely tolerate a wife's cheating and cuckoldry, some men actually get off on it. I suspect that there are more men like this than are willing to admit, or even what we might think.

The Male Commitment + Sex => Love / Oxytocin connection might also explain why some guys enjoy watching their GF/wife getting hammered by other men, and probably some other bizarre perversions that we'd rather not get into here.

Well, how might this happen?

First of all, I'll guess his commitment provides the oxytocin, as described above, and the challenge of staying committed to her, in spite of obviously being on the losing end of the intrasexual competition, keeps his fire stoked somehow. If he withdraws that commitment because of her infidelity, then he'll also lose the commitment-oxytocin-associated high, so he'd rather stay with her, despite the shame.

Secondly, these men get a dopamine and oxytocin rush from watching her F-n-cum, just like the satisfaction a man would get from watching a P0rn model being ridden by another man. Same difference.

Third, because Sex is a necessary part of the equation, I have to assume she keeps feeding him some sort of sexual stimulation (by letting him watch, or by participating in a threesome, for example) and never leaves him wanting. As long as she can keep his oxytocin stoked up and the combined effect of other hormones kept in check, then he'll be agreeable with whatever perversity will satisfy her own oxytocin surge — and his in turn vicariously.

With practice, or perhaps simply a lack of other options, these men learn to get into it.

BDSM

Lastly, I'm sure BDSM has a neurochemical component as well.

In this case, I imagine that testosterone and vasopressin are not completely inundated, but instead, rise in proportion to oxytocin, and if so, I'll guess there are three conditions in play.

1. A personal history or familiarity with abuse and/or control.
2. A high degree of sexual polarity, and/or domination dynamics.
3. A partner who is cooperative and like-minded about this activity would also be a necessary piece of the equation.
4. The taste is slowly developed with practice over time.

Conclusions

The experiences that induce oxytocin are different for men and women. Women through Arousal + Sex, and men through Commitment + Sex.

Reality suggests that oxytocin receptors are fragile, sensitive, and susceptible to burnout. Profligate sex burns out women. Disappointing commitments burn out men.

Overall, it appears that humans desire to maintain a certain balance of specific hormones, so they'll pursue activities and relationships that create that effect, even if only temporary. This is where addictions come into the picture.

It could be fun to tease out some of these concepts further and see if there is any behavioral support for them. However, I doubt that there is any scientific research or neuroscience data on brain chemistry when it comes to adultery, cuckolding, difficult wives, sexless marriages, BDSM, and so on.

Related

- Σ Frame: Time Frames for various forms of sexual bonding and maturation (2019/2/5)
- Σ Frame: Why is illicit sex so enticing, and so prevalent? (2019/5/25)
- Σ Frame: Why is premarital sex a sin? (2020/8/14)
- Σ Frame: Testosterone Makes Men more Punitive and also more Generous (2023/8/26)

- Σ Frame: Summary of Chemistry (Testosterone) (2023/8/31)

The Treacherous Tea App

Jack · 27 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Women Desperate for Validation.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation
Length: 850 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

The Tea App

Over at Spawny's Space, Farm Boy brought our attention to a new social networking app called Tea that has quickly skyrocketed to be the number one free app offered by Apple.

Tea is an app exclusively for women that allows users to share anonymous reviews and personal stories about men they've dated, interacted with, or known in some capacity.

The stated purpose of the app is to provide background information that would 'warn' women of 'dangerous' men (yes, that small subset of men whom they're all drawn to like moths to a flame via the FEAR dynamic), and help women stay 'informed' and 'safe' in the dating world.

Translation: Tea is an online Female Herd conglomerate with the purpose of amassing power and social / legal leverage over men.

Tea for All Tastes

The Tea app offers a lot of fodder that feminists, feral femme fatales, and sexually liberated chicks lurrve to feed on.

- Gossip
- Preselection
- Finding Ch@dz
- Learning tricks
- Nuking Beta Chumps
- In-Group identification

- Social interaction with the Female Herd
- Identifying Alpha Ch@ds via preselection
- A forum for receiving affirmation and validation
- A source of info to be used in a divorce or MeT00 suit
- A sympathetic outlet for the usual whining and complaining about men
- A schadenfreudian way to sabotage other women via intrasexual competition
- Women collaborating and/or advising each other on how to catch Chads and steer clear of weirdos
- Feeding their competition negative reviews of top men in order to shoo other women away from them

Of course, the users will rate all men much worse than they really are, including Ch@d, if only to assuage their egos and/or make themselves appear better than they really are.

Milk or Lemon?

Interestingly, it turns out that the Tea app is just as insecure as the h0ez that use it.

It was reported on 4Chan that 60GB+ of user ID data was exposed because of negligent app coding and poor administrative review.

Not sure if it was hacked, or the less likely chance that an administrator (certainly not the W0ke creator) doxxed all their users, which would mean the whole thing was used as a dragnet op to expose conniving wimminz.

Commenters speculated that the originators used AI to generate this app, leading to the security issues.

The Tea Tasters

Cheque d'Out cited this tweet from Aristophanes.

> lol 4chan is posting the selfies uploaded by the users

> the users are just as insecure as the app itself apparently https://t.co/NuN2v5PmbY pic.twitter.com/sIp93nrZVl
>
> — ⍰ Aristophanes ⍰ (@Aristos_Revenge) July 25, 2025

Here and in several comments, readers posted screenshots of these women's verification photos and various IDs, showing height, weight, and other private information. (I won't post here because it is private information.)

These women look exactly like what we would expect.

A full 99.99% of women on the app are either Post Wall or Sub 3, or else, frankly speaking, much too old to be screwing around on an app like this. I wouldn't be surprised if a good percentage of them are married cheaters or cheaters with married men. I'd find it easy to believe that many of them are divorced, which is the same as cheating in the Biblical sense (i.e. adulterers). Their average BMI is certainly well over 30. There are Angsties, Crazies, Bitterns, Fakettes, Fatties, Loons, Misfits, Quasimodos, Sadsacks, Weirdos, Zanies… They have Sanpaku, 1,000 C0ck stares, Wanky Eye, and dead pan affects. It looked to me like many of them could be alcoholics or have some other substance abuse issues.

If there is a female equivalent to Incels (Femcels?), then this would be it.

These are the kinds of women calling men incels, losers, m!s0gyn!sts, r@pists, etc.

Among the 120+ photos I saw there, I only found one woman who was young and attractive. She appeared to be Asian, maybe an immigrant or a first-generation immigrant, I'd guess.

Moral of the Story: "Revenge of the Nerds" revisited. Do not FAFO with angry Incel tech nerds.

Why are these Femcels on the Tea App?

After seeing all those terrible photos of Tea app users, I wondered, "What are they doing here?" I mean, do they really have personal stories to tell about men they have dated? And if so, then what kinds of men are messing around with these women?

I felt embarrassed for the human race.

Anyway, these are NOT the kinds of women that other women should be taking advice from about who to date.

Sweet Tea

Not every Tea app user is ugly. If you search for "Tea app" on YouTube, you'll find several very attractive women who go online to tell all the world how they discovered their significant other had many other significant others through the Tea app.

Their motive is clear, in spite of their fake indignant "surprise"…

"Look at mee! I have a TOP MAN who is wanted by many women!"

Related

- Σ Game: There is No Emotional Safety (2025/7/25)
- Hype Fresh: New Tea App Lets Women Warn Others About Toxic Dates (2025/7/25)
- Hype Fresh: Massive Data Breach Hits Tea App – 2M Users Selfies and Licenses Leaked (2025/7/25)
- NBC News: Tea App Hacked: 13,000 photos leaked on 4Chan (2025/7/25)
- The Metro Detroit News: Tea App Makes Waves in the Community, Causing Drama (2025/7/25)

Better Bachelor: With a photo or number, women can DOX & WRECK any date in a global database. (2025/7/25)

Matt Walsh: New "Tea" App Allows Women To Gossip And Defame Men Anonymously (2025/7/25)

Replicant Phish: The TEA APP Is Backfiring And Embarrassing Women (2025/7/25)

PsycHacks: Spilling the tea: why men will walk away (2025/8/1)

Estimating Women's Susceptibility to FEAR as a Weakness

Jack · 28 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Men should not be swayed by Women's addiction to their FEAR-based paradigm. Stay on target.

Readership: All; Men; Single, Marriage Minded Men; Mentors; Pastors;
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders; Feminine Submission;
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

This post continues a series of recent posts between Σ Frame and Christianity and Masculinity, listed here.

- Σ Frame: The Feminist's FEAR of Man (2025/5/14)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Christianity and Masculinity: A Deeper Dive on Hypergamy (2025/6/14)
- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Relative Internal Locus of Control Determines Relational Structure (2025/7/14)

Women's Susceptibility to FEAR

One conclusion of this mini-series on FEAR is this: All women are subject to The Ordinance of FEAR. However, individual women operate differently in response to this paradigm.

An oversimplification of the difference in women's FEAR response might be to imagine there are two kinds of women — those who abandon themselves to their FEARal nature and those who are aware of this instinct and are actively pursuing a regenerated nature.

In reality, there is a spectrum of degrees depending on the spiritual maturity of the woman in question.

1. Women who abandon themselves to their FEARal nature.
2. Women who are aware of this instinct but still abandon themselves to it.
3. Women who are aware of this instinct, attempt to avoid succumbing to it, but are unable to do so.

4. Women who are aware of this instinct, attempt to avoid succumbing to it, but are only able to do so sometimes, or in certain contexts.
5. Women who are aware of this instinct, and are rather successful in exercising agency to overcome it.

Only women who are making good headway towards condition 5 are worthy of marriage. The others are unstable and are more likely to lose control in a moment of weakness. Then they will play the blame game. "You weren't giving me enough attention!" etc.

Properly speaking, we should only refer to women who have mastered condition 5 as mature Christians, NOT just those who claim to be. But the truth is that even mature Christian women continue to struggle against their FEARal natures. After all, it is ordained by God.

As always, watch what they do, NOT what they say.

Estimating Women's Weakness to FEAR

The institutionalized emasculation of men, combined with the daily phenomenon of women being enticed by FEAR and being seduced into self-destruction, is why more and more men want nothing to do with women these days.

It makes sense. Why buy the cow when it doesn't even lactate?

One might think that the only real solution for men in this gynolatrous age is that you have to BE an ex-convict, a drug lord, a gangster, a Ghetto Rex, a SuperStud, Christian Grey, Mr. Big, or Lon Chaney to induce the kind of FEAR in a woman that would form an authentic Headship.

However, it's not that complicated. Such extremes are truly iconic and illustrative of the "Dread makes them wet" phenomenon, but are unnecessary in practice.

You see, the moral of Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew, and Jack's Taming the Savage Termagant, is the same — that women are horrible wenches when they haven't made peace with their innate FEAR of Man, but can become prized trophy wives if and/or after they have.

So, all you need to do is look for a woman who has already made peace with her FEAR of Man through her father's loving influence (and I believe there is no other way in today's gynolatrous climate, short of sheer faith in Christ to work a miracle).

The outstanding problem here is that well-taught and well-trained young women who love their Daddy (NOT their MacDaddy) are as rare as a virgin.

The other alternative is to break a FEARal mustang. But be duly warned. The Red Pill has long advised men NOT to play Captain Save-a-H0e. It takes years of hard work, it seldom works out well, and it's never as good as her first time. The standard advice is to wait for a fresh keeper.

Also, recall what we learned about women's agency, maturity, and willingness to be taught, trained, and be held accountable, and the vital importance of family and community.

Related

- Chateau Heartiste: What Betas Can Learn From Women's Rape Fantasies (2011/4/18)
- Cultural Analysis & Philosophy: Why Feminists Enjoy Rape Fantasies (2018/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Authority (2020/9/30)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)
- Σ Frame: Taming the Savage Termagant (2025/4/21)
- Σ Frame: How to Induce Humility in a Proud@ss Woman (2025/4/23)

Sociosexual Validation in China

Jack · 29 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

How current trends affect the fertility rate.

Readership: All;
Theme: Validation; Feminine Submission; Cultural Differences;
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

The Impact of Western Feminism in China

> "It's fascinating to observe that the importation of Western feminism has proven to be even worse for Chinese fertility than the notorious one-child policy that was in place from 1978 to 2015. Which suggests that if the birth rates don't turn around quickly, China is going to start cracking down hard on permitting young women to pursue higher education, given that education has proven to be the most efficient way to render women barren."
>
> *Vox Popoli: China's Demographic Decline (2025/7/25)

Farm Boy wrote a thought-provoking commentary on the above quote, entitled, Powerful It Is (2025/7/28). He and several commenters posed some questions about the situation in China, so that was a cue for me to offer some answers in this post.

2 Forms of Marxism

I disagree with Vox's statement that China has 'imported' Western feminism. Other than business, manufacturing, science, and technology, China does NOT have a high regard for Western ideals. The interest in Western feminist ideals is largely held by Chinese women themselves, NOT the government. Interestingly, the Chinese government does have many policies and programs that appear to overlap with those of Western feminism, but are implemented for different purposes.

To understand Western influence in China, it helps to recognize that Cultural Marxism has two very different offshoots:

1. The Feminist / W0ke variety that took over the West.
2. The Maoist version embodied by the Chinese communist regime.

The difference in a nutshell: The expression of 'social equality' in China is confined to politics and socioeconomics, and does not affect sexual dynamics as it does in Western Feminism. (China had a Cultural Revolution in the 1960s, while the U.S. had a Sexual Revolution.)

The One Child Policy vs the Family

The One Child Policy was in effect for about 35 years, from 1979 (taking effect in 1980) to 2015. In 2016, China shifted to a two-child policy. After it became evident that the plummeting birth rate wasn't bouncing back, restrictions were further relaxed to a three-child policy in 2021, and then to no restrictions later that same year. But to little avail. Economic conditions had improved, smaller families were already normalized, and other key incentives for having children had evaporated due to modernity.

Cheque d'Out said,

> "In Chinese culture, I heard, sons are responsible for supporting the parents into old age. Daughters are not. Parents, only being able to have one kid, chose to look after their own welfare in later life. Women weren't > born. Men were born into servitude."

Yes, that's how it was while the One Child Policy was in effect. Sons were preferred because of their ability to exert influential power and generate income, but also because women were regarded as the weaker and thus more expensive, problematic, and unreliable sex.

Chinese Ethics

Farm Boy wrote,

> "A relative of mine once stated that the Chinese are amoral, which more or less means that there is nothing there, no anchoring of anything. As such, if given the opportunity, built-in human nature type behaviors can readily come to the forefront."

Yes, Chinese culture is woven around human nature type behaviors. But the Confucian cultural ethics are intended to appropriate these behaviors into productive channels.

No, the Chinese are certainly not amoral, although it does appear that way to Westerners because the East vs West cultural ethics are so divergent.

While Westerners emphasize the central rights and freedoms of the individual and rule-of-law-based right-vs-wrong thinking, the Chinese have a strong sense of collectivism and filial piety (honoring and respecting one's parents), which form the backbone of their moral and ethical compass. People prioritize the interests of their family and their in-group, such as at the workplace. They are very sensitive about their personal boundaries and the context and implications of any particular event or idea. It is unacceptable to think or behave in any manner that is ostensibly different from the collective norm or against the general interests and well-being of the family. (IMO, these ethics are more Biblically correct than Western morality. Prove me wrong.)

Communism fits right into this social collectivism like a hand in a glove. The Chinese find it very difficult to understand the Western concept of individualism, which is regarded as foolish and selfish. However, the concepts of women's rights, i.e. pursuing education, and giving greater priority to humanistic freedoms, are catching on among Chinese women. But unlike Western women, it remains quite clear that if they hope to marry (well), they'll need to conform to traditional feminine roles.

Education as a Tool for Shaping Society

Concerning Vox's idea that China is going to start cracking down hard on permitting young women to pursue higher education, Mister Contrast said,

> "Won't happen, is my bet. Not in a million years. Once you unseal the dark Djinn of feminism, not the most ruthless of all dictators can banish it. Not lack of power, but lack of will. I don't know of a single instance of men walking back nation-wide Original Sin in all of history; anybody else?"

Yes, there's this. I agree that China will probably not discourage or limit women's education as an incentive for them to have children instead, although that might be the second most direct and effective method, next to a state-sponsored Lebensborn.

In fact, the Chinese government has recently implemented many policies and programs to promote women's education and participation in the workforce, as well as many incentives for women to marry and have (more) children. To Red Pilled readers, this seems contradictory, but the idea is to offer support to careerist women as well as the married (viz. 'equality'). Both are seen to contribute to society, but in different ways. As such, the justification lies in the benefits of higher education for a wider segment of the population, regardless of sex.

The “lack of will” manifests in two ways, both stymied by humanitarian interests.

1. If women are given a choice, they will always prioritize their own comfort.
2. China sees itself becoming more ‘civilized’ by encouraging better, more ‘equal’ treatment of women, including education. There is no vested interest in limiting this (at present), as Vox intimates.

Education has always been empowering and validating for both men and women in China, much more so than in the West. In ancient times, the educated were a social class in themselves. Up until the late 20th century, women were encouraged to pursue marriage and family rather than furthering their education, but this pressure came from families, NOT from government or society. Now, families are much smaller (due to the One Child Policy) and do not wield as much influence, so women have more liberty to set different priorities. Also, smaller families tend to prefer or require dual incomes.

As a result, Chinese women born after 1990 have, on average, a higher education level than their husbands. However, this has less of a deleterious effect on marital stability than in the West, because of the culture’s strong emphasis on clearly defined sex roles, marriage, and family. Also because Chinese women are more strongly predisposed to monogamy, compared to Western women.

Attraction

Farm Boy asked,

> “I wonder if the Chinese chicks are attracted to the bad boys, or is it just to guys with money?”

For the most part, Chinese women are NOT attracted to bad boys per se, because that is rightly perceived as the foolishness that it is. Instead, they are attracted to the good-looking, single adult sons of high-status, wealthy, and powerful men (who are poised to continue the family line), who are usually rather attractive by default. (This is because these men only select and breed with the most beautiful and highest quality women, generation after generation.)

In Chinese culture, a man’s status is mostly built on his value to society, which is determined by what he contributes to society or by how much power and influence he wields within society. Also, money is power. So there is immense pressure for men to conform, cooperate, and also compete, just as it used to be in the West until recently.

Hypergamy

thedeti said,

> “Hypergamy operates on steroids in China because there are so many more men than women.”

Yes, but to give readers a more detailed view…

In the West, women are encouraged to pursue education and career, and postpone marriage. In China, there is less pressure for women to pursue marriage and family than in the past. But in both cultures, the overall effect is the same. Fewer women want to get married ASAP, and women are marrying later in life.

Chinese women who choose to pursue marriage do so early in life, and because of the skewed sex ratio, they get their pick of the highest MMV men of the land. However, these top-class men are also rather particular about women, since they are in the pole position, and they have no misgivings about the value of marrying a younger woman (unlike Western men who will happily take whatever p_ssy they can get), so only the most exquisite women are chosen.

Of course, there are some powerful, wealthy men living in rural areas, but women do not want to be married to a farmer or rancher, etc., no matter how wealthy he is, so women invariably travel to big cities to find jobs and husbands.

Another confounding factor is that many Chinese women are traveling and seeking higher education abroad, and end up marrying foreigners. This is especially true for those women who didn't prioritize marriage in their early 20s and those who are retired from concubinage. Here's how the numbers looked in Taiwan in 2016. Trump's recent visa policies have sent many of these women back to China.

Meanwhile, many Chinese men are marrying foreign wives too, because they cannot find wives in China. They will not tolerate a spoiled, self-centered, Western wild-card woman, who is discontent even with the living conditions in her native first-world culture, let alone China, so they usually seek wives from Chinese expat subcultures in SEA countries, mostly from Vietnam, Thailand, Philippines, and Indonesia. The modern equivalent of Mail Order Brides is very popular in China right now.

All in all, hypergamy is revealed in how only the highest quality and/or the most determined men and women are reproducing. This is bad for the economy and the population pyramid, but very good for the future genetic pool (IMO). Consider it an investment.

Epilogue

In the past, a woman's sociosexual validation was almost entirely obtained through her ability to marry well, bear a son, and support her husband and family.

Now, women obtain validation through developing her personal potential through any means beneficial to society, either by joining the workforce, or being a housewife and mother. A larger number of women are choosing the independence of the former.

The reasons why people in China do not want children, or are having fewer children include…

- Improved economic conditions.
- Smaller families are normalized.
- It is not as important to have a son.
- The cost of living and housing has risen.
- Relaxed social expectations on women's roles in society.
- There is no longer the same social pressure to have children.
- More women are pursuing education and career and delaying marriage, or else choosing to be single.
- Currently, everyone of childbearing age grew up as an only child (due to the One Child Policy), so having only 1 or 2 children is considered normal, satisfactory, and even preferred.
- The repeal of the One Child Policy in combination with other factors mentioned above has reduced the psychological anxiety to have a child, and has thereby led to a more laissez faire attitude about having children.

* H/T: Sharkly

Related

- Σ Frame: The Cultural Contrast between the West and Far Eastern Asia (2015/7/9)
- Σ Frame: Cross Culture Relationships and Dating in Taiwan (2016/10/17)
- Σ Frame: A Historical Contrast: Western and Asian Women (2018/9/15)
- Σ Frame: The Taiwanese Life Script (2021/5/8)
- Σ Frame: Cultural Influences (2021/5/5)
- Σ Frame: Concubinage (2023/5/19)
- Σ Frame: Boundaries in Chinese Culture (2024/2/2)

- Σ Frame: The Influence of Buddhist Culture on Women's Conduct (2024/2/23)
- Σ Frame: A Snapshot of Eastern Femininity (2024/2/25)

The Puck Stops Here

Jack · 30 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A case study of a woman initiating sex, feeling dissatisfied afterwards, and then filing a false r@pe accusation.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders;
Length: 2,200 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes

False R@pe Accusations

An article recounts the story of a young woman, known only as "E.M.", who charged 5 hockey stars with r@pe in a court case.

Points in case:

1. EM had a boyfriend at the time she met the hockey players at a bar, so basically, she cheated on him by having group sex with these hockey players.
2. EM felt guilty and regretful after the incident, likely because she did it while cheating on her boyfriend.
3. EM was hesitant to do anything about it at first. However, she was persuaded by her mother and some others to go to the police and file rape accusations and sue the players for money.
4. EM's apparent motivation (according to Red Pill analysis) for filing was to shift her guilt and shame onto the men, and possibly win some money in the process.

Surprisingly, the female judge acquitted the defendants of criminal charges, concluding that…

> "…"on the totality of the evidence," it was E.M., not the defendants, who had been the sexual instigator and "aggressor." She had masturbated in front of them, demanded "Is anyone going to bang me?", and even called the young men "pussies" for their reluctance to have sex with her. Given the evidence heard in court, the judge > decided it would be prudent to treat the complainant's account with skepticism…"

The civil case was settled for 5 million, essentially rewarding E.M. for all her misdeeds.

FEAR vs Control Dynamics

Under Dominion and Fear-Based Intersexual Dynamics (2025/7/25), Surfdumb shared an article from Quilette about this case with the comment,

> "The female author seems on the same page about being degraded."

The female author is Marilyn Simon.

Below, I've collected some excerpts from Simon's commentary on this case that describe exactly what I've been addressing in this mini-series on FEAR and Control vs Domination, especially these posts.

- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Σ Frame: The Female Impulse to Control is a Stopgap for FEAR (2023/7/23)
- Σ Frame: Dominion and Fear-Based Intersexual Dynamics (2025/7/25)

I've emphasized some passages in boldface that coincide with my earlier claims and observations.

Overall, as described in the second post above, when a woman is unable to obtain Validation within a preferred FEAR-based paradigm, she seeks total control of her social environment. In this case, E.M. attempted to exact that control by taking these guys to court.

Excerpts

I find the defendants' account of E.M.'s behaviour that night eminently believable. The hockey players and E.M. herself both described the "porn-star personality" she adopted throughout the night, and she behaved exactly as someone enacting her own porn-star fantasy would behave. But her retrospective confusion and humiliation also strike me as authentic. It may be that she encouraged and wanted wild sex on one level but felt ashamed of her desires on another; that she wanted and didn't want dangerous sex; that she wanted and didn't want an exciting night; that she wanted and didn't want to push her limits. I am sympathetic to this confusion, even though I reject entirely her attempt to make five young men pay for her own poor judgement.

Young women are taught that sexual freedom is not only available to them without judgement, but that it is also desirable to them as feminists. Everything is permitted, so long as it is consented to. But what young women might not understand—and what E.M. appears to have discovered the hard way—is that we sometimes consent to things that we don't want, and sometimes we discover that we want things we probably wouldn't actually consent to. Sexual desire can be like that. There are parts of us that want more, and parts of us that want less, and parts of us that are turned on by the things that we don't want, and so we end up wanting them. These urges can occur at the same time even though they contradict each other. Worse, sometimes what we want in a hot minute we later discover we should not have wanted at all. This is called regret. We have disordered wills, and part of becoming an adult is realising this.

The sexual revolution liberated women to explore their desires and to dabble in promiscuity if they wished to do so without fear of social stigma. But regret was one of the least contended-with consequences of this change—the realisation that not every choice made with this newfound freedom would be wise. Women evolved to be sexually choosy, so they are more likely than men to feel used or even degraded after casual sex. E.M. seems to have had an experience of this kind. Apparently intoxicated by her hedonistic pursuit of pleasure, she behaved like a woman who craved sex, walking among five young men naked, pleasuring herself in front of them, and making no attempt to leave. At no point did she say that she did not want or consent to sex. (When she did say "no" to more spanking, the young men desisted.)

But why would any self-respecting woman behave in this way in the first place? Well, because the politically incorrect truth is that women sometimes want to be degraded during sex. This desire for humiliation might sound strange, especially since modern feminism insists that women want the opposite—to be respected, and respected most of all during sex. But respect is not very hot. It is the opposite of hot, it's moral. And if sex is going to be memorable, it needs to be either passionate and tender—an emotional expression of deep love—or passionate and sinful. Hot sex has a flavour of transgression. Occasionally, this occurs when a woman adopts a domineering sexual persona and humiliates men. But more commonly, transgression is found in a woman's desire to be dominated, even to the point of degradation.

It may even be that modern feminism is partly responsible for this perversity [1]. Because women have insisted upon being respected with such vehemence and for so long, denigration is now all the more arousing for being taboo. It feels powerful to transgress a moral imperative. When all other prohibitions surrounding sex have been flipped into moral duties, the only rules left to break are feminism's own. Transgressing them allows us to be daring and bold and bad.

But there is something deeper and almost certainly innate in a woman's sexuality that desires humiliation in sex. Pearl-clutchers on the Left and Right will scold me for pointing this out, but the fact that many women desire the very thing we're supposed to condemn doesn't make that desire any less real. Our sexual ecstasy emerges from deep within us, and to access it, a woman sometimes has to slough off the weight of her personality, her decency, her morals, her self-respect, and even her agency. A woman's sexual bliss is amoral, or even anti-moral. It is by freeing herself from her socially constituted self with its jealously guarded rights and dignities that a woman's sexual nature finds its truest expression. If a woman is going to reach the bottom of her desires, her social nature will have to be excised first. If she is going to be free to feel her body, she will first have to let go of her mind.

This is why sex is more dangerous for a woman than it is for a man, even in the age of expanding and expansive notions of consent. Women feel the emotional effects of sex more than men, both the good and the bad, not simply because we want to feel treasured and adored—which we do!—but because we also want to get past that tenderness to something more liberating; something rougher and baser. It is precisely because we desire transgressive sex that we risk the consequences of feeling used, tarnished, coerced, and discarded. To pretend, as feminism has, that women can have casual sex without high stakes is to ignore the character of female sexuality and—worse—to promote mediocre sex as the best that can be hoped for.

Contemporary feminist ethics have failed women, because they refuse to treat sex with proper reverence and women with proper complexity. They are more interested in treating women as perpetual victims than empowering them with a sophisticated understanding of their sexuality. Feminists condemn men when they misbehave, but they have taught women that as long as they consent, they can misbehave all they want. That, we are given to understand, is what equality means. And if a woman feels degraded afterwards, it is not because she desired to feel that way at the time, it is because a man somehow made her feel that way against her will. But it's not men who want women to be either the angel or the whore. We are already both. That is why, with the right person, sex that is entirely wrong can be so right.

Sex is a high-wire act. Women have been told that the only safety net they need is effective birth control and consent. But that is to ignore the existential and exciting element of risk. Contemporary feminist notions of sexual agency have a blind spot for this desired humiliation as well as for the internal confusion of a woman's erotic desires, to say nothing of the self-instruction offered by regret. This blind spot does not exist, as some do, due to oversight. Rather, feminist notions of sexual liberty must remain willfully blind to women's desire for degradation because it has divorced sex from love.

In love, a woman's desire for sexual degradation can be fully indulged. The beloved is entirely free to be treated as a sexual object and as an insatiable whore. She can experience the thrill of a sexual high-wire act, secure in the knowledge that if she falls off the wire she will be caught, not by a net of ideological neuroses, but in the tender arms of her lover. She is unmade by her most exquisite desire for depravity and then brought back to herself, cherished and honoured and elevated.

One might think that being treated with tenderness after being treated as a sexual object mitigates the sexual humiliation and debasement which she desires. In fact, the opposite is true. She can indulge in her most shocking sluttishness because there is no internal conflict, no self-division, and no inner confusion of wanting and yet not wanting to be treated as a pure sexual object. Her soul is whole, and she embraces her humiliation as a kind of freedom. Within the security of the relationship, she experiences neither regret nor resentment by allowing her lover to use her for his pleasure. And in love, a man expresses a profound trust in his partner by allowing his dominating instinct free rein, which then feeds back into her feelings for him. In love, savagery and the sweetest tenderness lie entwined in a tangle of drenched sheets.

For E.M., who lunged onto the high-wire with abandon and no safety net, humiliation was inevitable. Although she professed that she had enjoyed herself in the hotel room, she was already calling one of the hockey players a "jerk" in text messages to her friend as she left later that night. The pornographic fantasy of being used by a group of men is one thing to imagine and another thing to act out with real human beings. The problem with people is that they are themselves instead of what one might want them to be. Both E.M. and her partners discovered that real life is not the same as pornography, where everyone is a professional and the sex is an artifice staged for the viewer's pleasure.

The evidence presented at trial suggested that E.M. wanted a night of hot fucking; the kind of gang-bang familiar from hardcore pornography. The group of nineteen- and twenty-year-old young men, meanwhile, thought they were participating in a pornographic fantasy of their own. In reality, E.M. was just a horny naked stranger who wanted sex, and she was being demanding not pliant. Robbed of their sexual initiative, the young men were probably self-conscious and unsure of what they wanted or what they should be doing [2]. The whole experience was likely quite awkward and not all that hot. So, they ordered food, told jokes, and engaged in some desultory sex. But it probably felt considerably less erotic in practice than they might have imagined.

E.M., on the other hand, seems to have been embarrassed that she wasn't the centre of attention that she thought she'd be and that these five young men weren't going out of their minds with desire for her and had to be provoked into action. What she described as her "frustration" occurred at the end of the night, when she was left alone with the hockey player she had first slept with, and he asked if she was "going to leave anytime soon." This is what made her angry and call him a jerk. "This comment," Justice Carroccia remarked in her opinion, "made [E.M.] feel like he was not treating her respectfully. This annoyed her. She felt he was being rude. She agreed with a suggestion made to her that she called him a jerk at this point. [He] did not walk her to the door, he got into bed to go to sleep." In other words, after her slutty adventure, E.M. wanted the reassurance of some loving intimacy—to be treasured and appreciated and to wake up the next morning in her lover's arms as he stroked her hair. She wanted sexual debasement followed by tenderness, and she got neither. Real people are such disappointments [3].

Quilette: Sexual Perversity in Ontario (2025/7/30) [Archive]

Notes

1. I disagree with the author's claim that modern feminism is partly responsible for this perversity. I think it is human nature, and in some cases, the sinful nature, coming to the fore within feral sex dynamics.
2. This goes back to sex roles, as I described in Dominion and Fear-Based Intersexual Dynamics (2025/7/25), i.e. one partner must be dominant and the other submissive, and that the most satisfying arrangement is when the man is dominant and the woman is submissive, which was not the case here, leading to the awkwardness and E.M.'s resentment.
3. E.M.'s disappointment should've been expected, given that this was an ONS group sex, and not a committed, loving relationship. Simon described why this is important in the preceding paragraphs.

Related

- The Feminist Turned Housewife: Used for Nothing: The True Legacy of Feminism (2025/7/24)
- The Toronto Sun: Why Carter Hart and other acquitted players should get another chance in the NHL (2025/7/26)
- Σ Frame: Estimating Women's Susceptibility to FEAR as a Weakness (2025/7/28)
- Σ Game: Hedonism's Hell (2025/7/30)
- The Fiamengo File: False Accuser Exposed in World Junior Hockey Trial Verdict (2025/8/1)
- The Fiamengo File: Feminism's Shameless Attack on Due Process (2025/9/23)

10 Steps to Validation

Jack · 31 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A detailed description of the process to achieve sexual sanctification in marriage (and how Alpha Widows are formed outside of marriage).

Readership: All; Men; Married Men; Marriage Minded Men;
Theme: Validation; Feminine Submission; Whorable Wonders;
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Foreword

This post summarizes a long-running examination of Validation by Σ Frame and Christianity and Masculinity, and offers some new conclusions and theoretical models.

Previous Work

In 2022, I presented a praxeological model of Validation (2022/10/11).

The original model was given as…

Validation = Domination + Defilement –> Humility + Ego Affirmation –> Her Feeling Loved

Since then, this model has been revisited in other posts.

- Σ Frame: Validation is about Losing Self-Control (2022/10/24)
- Σ Frame: What we've learned about Feminine Submission (2022/10/31)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Trust, attraction, and the Biblical female marital roles of helper, submission, and respect Part 2 (2022/11/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: More thoughts on the Validational sex equation (2022/12/2)

As an aside, sometimes I am at the limit of my understanding, seeing how all of this is a comprehensive juxtaposition of all things metaphysical / psychological / sexual / social / spiritual about human nature — things that (to my knowledge) have never been identified / examined / discussed before. IOW, it is a pioneering work. So I have to admit, when I made that model, I was guessing about some of the blanks, hoping that someone might provide some further insights. So I'd like to thank Deep Strength (the author of Christianity and Masculinity) for reviewing this theoretical model in more depth and greater scrutiny, and adding to it.

In More thoughts on the Validational sex equation (2022/12/2), Deep Strength changed my equation of Validational Sex regarding a string of causal consequences.

DS's Revised Equation:

Validational Sex = Domination (before, during, and after sex) –> Feeling of being possessed –> Humility (he takes what is his) + Ego affirmation (he wants me) + defilement (she is his, and no other) –> Her feeling loved

DS noted that domination generally only occurs if a man is able to trigger her hypergamy strong enough, and so I've added Attraction and Arousal to the beginning of the process (as listed by DS).

Additionally, case studies suggest that Defilement usually precedes Affirmation, in the general form of first "knocking her down" and then later "building her up" through (ego) affirmation, comfort, reassurance, and security, etc.

Putting all this together, we have the following string of causal consequences leading to Validation.

1. Attraction
2. Arousal
3. Domination (before, during, and after sex)
4. Defilement (this is the banging, wet, nasty, profane stuff)
5. Ego affirmation (he wants me)
6. Feeling of being possessed
7. Humility (he takes what is his)
8. Her feeling loved
9. Ownership (she is his, and no other*)*
10. Sanctification

Some of these steps may come in a different order, on a case-by-case basis, but I think all of these steps need to be present in some way.

Widows are formed when this process is completed, or is very close to completion, and then is interrupted by the man's death (true widows) or his disappearance (Alpha Widows).

Burning Lust vs Icky Disgust

DS and I have pointed out that there are two kinds of Defilement, or maybe it's just two ironic aspects of the same thing. One is the "icky" factor that produces disgust and shame, and then there is the humility / humiliation factor, which fosters her feelings of love. (Oscar pointed out the latter in a comment.)

This dichotomy encapsulates one of the most exasperating conundrums faced by women: their deep desire to obtain the Validational part of Defilement without having to deal with, or take responsibility for, the negative, socially unacceptable, and ugly aspects — the "icky" part.

The "icky" part comes in four general paradigms (at least), each having many contextual varieties, all having enticements that make it unavoidable.

1. Physical: The banging, wet, nasty, profane stuff that is necessary to evoke genuine humility. Women thoroughly enjoy this when coming from a High SMV man, but it is also often obscene and therefore deeply embarassing. OTOH, the very idea of this stuff with a Low SMV man is utterly repulsive to them, and their reactions to it are scathing.
2. Social: Intense embarrassment and shame arising from any knowledge of their sexual activities made public; social ostracization due to promiscuity, etc.
3. Sociosexual: Sexual attention from Low SMV men, which is unavoidable when women go trolling for attention from High SMV men.
4. Evo-Psyche: Women's Existential Fear of getting stuck with a non-Tingle-inducing man.

In general, things that induce the "ick" response when coming from a Low SMV man are the same things that foster Validation when coming from a sufficiently High SMV man.

As I'll discuss later, women's intuitive sense of FEAR informs them of which aspect of Defilement they are facing in any given context.

Clarification of Terms Used

In my past writings, I made the distinction between "icky" Defilement and Validating Defilement by simply calling the former Defilement and the latter Sanctification. However, as DS suggests, the word Humility is sufficient to describe the latter, and also better, since Sanctification also requires Commitment and Ownership (which I'll explain below) as well as Humility.

Humility involves three aspects in practice.

1. The stripping of dignity and formal pretenses, i.e. Defilement.
2. A willing act of service that forms a vector of bonding / purpose.
3. An open-hearted expression of desire, e.g. for attention, emotional connection, sex, trust, etc. (This may come later.)

The acts of service that are most conducive towards sanctification are…

1. A man's obedience and submission towards God, including maintaining Boundaries, pursuing their life purpose, loving their wives, etc.
2. A woman's obedience to God via respect and submission towards her male head, i.e., being a companion and helper.

Furthermore, when one makes an effort to do things for another, this also creates and/or reinforces feelings of love, as I described in How To Get A Better Response From Your Girl (2018/2/27).

Recent Work

After that burst of insight in 2022, I didn't have any further ideas about this model, so I put it on the back burner for a while … until this year, I had some insights related to FEAR, and I decided to continue writing on the topic of Validation. I didn't have everything ironed out at the beginning of this theme, but I anticipated that more of the truth would emerge as I examined additional case studies and did more exploratory writing.

The posts in this theme that specifically addressed this subject are as follows.

- Σ Frame: The Feminist's FEAR of Man (2025/5/14)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Christianity and Masculinity: A Deeper Dive on Hypergamy (2025/6/14)
- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Relative Internal Locus of Control Determines Relational Structure (2025/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The Fear of Life (2025/7/18)
- Σ Frame: The Female Impulse to Control is a Stopgap for FEAR (2025/7/23)
- Σ Frame: Dominion and Fear-Based Intersexual Dynamics (2025/7/25)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle, Jack): The Neurochemistry of Commitment, Sex, and Love (2025/7/26)
- Σ Frame: Estimating Women's Susceptibility to FEAR as a Weakness (2025/7/28)

Kingdom Rule

DS introduced the concept of Kingdom Rule, which asserts that Christian Men are the Lord's Kingdom Helpers and we are to Rule the Earth, e.g., by tending the garden, by making disciples of all nations, etc. (See Genesis 1-3.)

Kingdom Rule accurately specifies these two roles directly.

1. Kingdom (Genesis 1) — Helper (Genesis 2)
2. Rule (Genesis 1-3) — "Be fruitful and multiply" (Genesis 1)

The concept of Kingdom Rule aligns with the Validation Equation as follows.

First, Kingdom Rule is the male counterpart / equivalent of the female Fear-Respect paradigm.

- Kingdom Rule generates dominion. A man taking dominion over the earth, animals, and women (i.e., a wife) leads to him building his own Kingdom (e.g. a family), which generates Respect from others.
- Fear-Respect generates a submissive (cooperative helper) and sexual (procreative) response. A man dominating or ruling over his Kingdom (i.e., his wife) elicits the necessary Fear-Submission component in a woman to bring about a complete and titillating sexual response from her.

Second, the original equation for Validation (2022/10/11)…

Validation = Domination + Defilement –> Humility + Ego Affirmation –> Feeelz of Self-Lurrrve

…corresponds with Domination = Rule, and Validation => Sexual Arousal.

According to the Validation Equation, this implies that Domination is necessary but not sufficient for Female Arousal to occur. It also requires the other things in the equation.

Third, Male Kingdom + Rule corresponds with Female Attraction + Arousal, respectively.

Kingdom –> Sexual Attraction, and Rule –> FEAR –> Sexual Arousal.

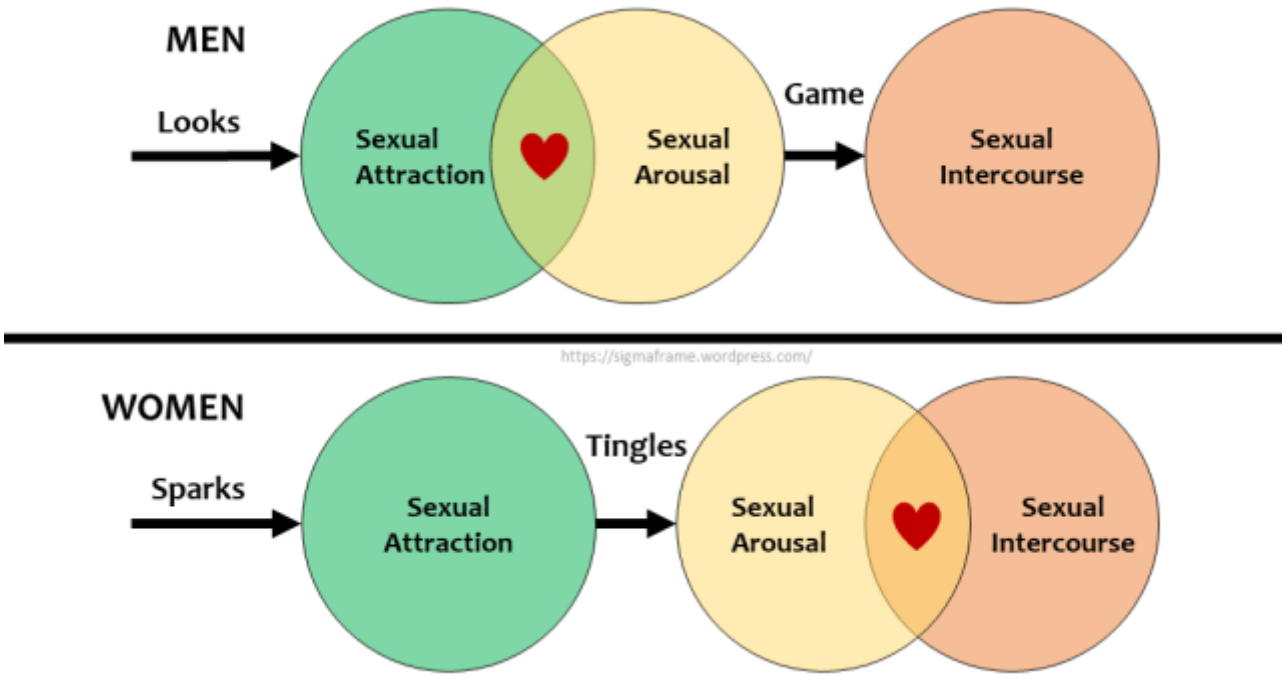
That is, Females are Attracted to Male Dominion / Kingdom, and Females are Aroused by Male Rule (expressed via Dominance, i.e. Game, e.g. Amused Mastery, Command Presence, Detachment, Soft Dread, etc.).

Here, it is noted that Male Rule must (?) play up the FEAR Dynamic to elicit Female Arousal. PUA's used to call this "sexual tension".

This graph from Sexual Submission (2022/10/14) agrees with this connection and illustrates the function of Rule / Game.



On this point, DS wrote,

> "Hypergamy / Attraction and Dominance / Sexual Arousal are more of the base-instincts of the body (much like feelings are more primal, so to speak), and the conscious thought processes are usually a post-processing rationalization of what our body is feeling."

> "In general, women have more post-processing modifications in regard to their attraction and sexual arousal than men do. There's many, many, many more ways to turn off a woman, especially in any of the phases of a relationship, like meeting, dating, developing the relationship, and even into marriage. Perhaps some of that is due to brain architecture, as women's brains are more interconnected than men's — their feelings tend not to be able to be separated as well from their conscious thinking as men's, who can compartmentalize better."

Dominance Dynamics

In summary of DS's post, Kingdom Rule — Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear, and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28) and Jack's post, Dominion and Fear-Based Intersexual Dynamics (2025/7/25), when a man's Dominance topples a woman's internal sense of control, it induces her to adopt a submissive role in response. The way this works is that his Dominance exposes her vulnerability through her loss of control, as long as his Dominance exceeds her Internal Locus of Control. If she is humbled (by an attractive man) rather than disgusted (by a less-than-optimal man), it is intensely validating. This switch triggers the FEAR Dynamic, leading to the Sexual Arousal part of the equation.

DS spelled out how this relates to women's sexual arousal.

> "This explains why vigorous dominant sex is typically highly preferred by women over slow so-called romantic sex. This is a feature, not a bug. Many of the dominant acts like slapping, choking, BDSM, and other things like this will often elicit a stronger sexual response, provided a woman is not triggered by previous negative experiences, such as a previous sexual assault. In fact, being possessed by a dominant man is often called very romantic by women, which is clear both in women's porn and in practice in relationships and marriage. It seems many men were misinformed about what romance actually is."
>
> Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)

Ownership

DS's post on Kingdom Rule brings out something I had missed. Defilement implies Ownership (she is his, and no other), and this is a necessary and unique quality of Sanctification.

Ownership provides a feeling of being possessed = Surrender, or Relinquishment, as I wrote about before. It can also take the form of Commitment, determination (to see things through), hope, or loyalty, all apprehended through faith.

It is also the difference between Sanctified Sex (owned) and Defiling Sex (having no owner, or previously owned by another man who remains living).

As Dalrock aptly pointed out, our modern feminist culture believes that the feeling of love (i.e. being humbled by one's desire) is what sanctifies marriage instead of the commitment and covenant of marriage. This leads to the elevation of validational sex as a prerequisite for marriage.

While this approach 'works' for women's calculus in light of hypergamy (e.g. Tingle-charged hookups), as long as the Women's fee fees are leading, Ownership is missing from Defilement, and it leads to hookups followed by debased, wife-dominated marriages, and/or frivorce, cats, and wine. The lack of ownership (or previous ownership in the case of Alpha Widows), is why women feel like they're being forced, r@ped, violated, etc. when they are not attracted to their husbands.

Men require the elements of Commitment and Ownership (e.g. Male Headship) for love to transpire, so in a pure Christian Headship (or Peaceful Unity) marriage, there is none of this, because Ownership.

For men, ownership of a woman is demonstrated and/or obtained through…

- Headship
- Virginal Sex
- Virile Masculinity
- Developing his Dominion.
- “Loving her” / capturing her love.
- Exercising Boundaries / Maintaining Frame / Playful Married Game
- His Sexual Authority over her desire, i.e., he is skilled in harnessing her sexual passions, and in guiding, leading, molding, and teaching her.

For women, ownership of a man is demonstrated and/or obtained through…

- Respect
- Obedience
- Honeycraft
- Submission
- Servicing the marital covenant through regular sex on demand.
- Her dedicating the sexual vitality of her youth to her husband, i.e. “Wife Goggles”.
- Her Sexual Authority over his body, i.e. she is skilled in turning him on and getting him off.

There may be others I have missed. Readers are welcome to add to these lists.

So now we have a more complete conceptual model of the processes leading to Validation and Sanctification.

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: Fear, Respect, Honor, and Truth, Phobeo and Timao (2014/5/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Dominion (2014/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Authority is Good (2014/6/14)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Rational and Irrational Fear (2014/9/25)
- Christianity and Masculinity: 50 Shades of Grey Analysis (2015/2/15)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Authenticity and Charisma (2015/3/20)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Let’s Talk about Marriage: Fear and Dread (2015/11/6)
- Christianity and Masculinity: False desire and true desire (2019/6/10)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Revisiting dread in the Bible with an anti-chivalry lens (2020/6/18)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Aggression Dominance is Arousing to Women (2022/3/29)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Validation (2022/10/11)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame (Jack): What we’ve learned about Feminine Submission (2022/10/31)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Husbands are to improve the moral agency of their wives through sanctification (2022/12/17)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Women submit to their Head (2022/10/17)
- Σ Frame (Jack*): Validation is about Losing Self-Control (2022/10/24)
- Σ Frame (Jack*): Game is an invitation to Humility (2022/10/25)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle, Jack): Why are women willingly submissive to authorities, but not to their husbands? (2022/10/26)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle, Jack): Very few women can be Molded. (2022/10/27)

- Σ Frame (Jack): It's her choice whether or not to submit. (2022/10/28)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Repentance and Submission (2022/10/30)
- Σ Frame: The Feminist's FEAR of Man (2025/5/14)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Christianity and Masculinity: A Deeper Dive on Hypergamy (2025/6/14)
- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear, and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Relative Internal Locus of Control Determines Relational Structure (2025/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The Female Impulse to Control is a Stopgap for FEAR (2025/7/23)
- Σ Frame: Dominion and Fear-Based Intersexual Dynamics (2025/7/25)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle, Jack): The Neurochemistry of Commitment, Sex, and Love (2025/7/26)
- Σ Frame: Estimating Women's Susceptibility to FEAR as a Weakness (2025/7/28)

Validation : Index of Posts

Jack · 31 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A list of posts and links.

Readership: All;
Theme: Validation; Whorable Wonders; Feminine Submission;
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Here's a list of all the posts that appeared in this 3 month long theme, Validation, organized by subtopic. Related articles appearing around the sphere during this time are included.

Intersexual Validation

1. Σ Frame: Expectation vs Experience (2025/5/2)
2. Σ Frame: Attraction vs. Promiscuity (2025/5/4)
3. Σ Frame: Remembering Kevin Samuels' Death and Legacy (2025/5/5)
4. Σ Frame: Apex SMV = Prime Fecundity (2025/5/7)
5. Σ Frame: Detached young bucks, not simping suckers. (2025/5/12)
6. Laughing at Feminism: Does a wider range of choices lead to greater contentment? (2025/5/17)
7. Σ Frame (Orion Taraban): Play is the Essence of Game (2025/5/21)
8. Radix Fidem: Head-games Are Reality (2025/5/22)
9. Σ Frame: Grok's Manifesto of Hypergamy (2025/6/7)
10. Christianity and Masculinity: A Deeper Dive on Hypergamy (2025/6/14)
11. Σ Game: "The Internet" is unreliable (2025/6/19)
12. Σ Frame: Pride is Stronger than Love (2025/6/25)
13. Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)
14. The Fiamengo File: MeToo is not dead, but even feminists admit it is losing the will to live (2025/6/28)
15. Laughing at Feminism: Husbands of kind wives remain naïve to the evils of womankind (2025/7/4)
16. Σ Frame: Why do Women Love Lies? (2025/7/4)
17. Σ Game: The Desire for Confirmation (2025/7/6)
18. Men are Good (Tom Golden): NY Times Article "Men Where Have You Gone?" Two Men Respond (2025/7/7)
19. Spawny's Space: Invisible To The Male Gaze (2025/7/8)
20. Σ Frame: How to Discern the Nature of the Cooch (2025/7/11)
21. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Neurochemistry of Commitment, Sex, and Love (2025/7/26)

Fear = Validation

1. Σ Frame: The Feminist's FEAR of Man (2025/5/14)
2. Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Something That They Want (2025/6/19)
3. Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
4. Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)
5. Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)

6. Σ Frame: Relative Internal Locus of Control Determines Relational Structure (2025/7/14)
7. Σ Frame: The Fear of Life (2025/7/18)
8. Σ Frame: The Female Impulse to Control is a Stopgap for FEAR (2025/7/23)
9. Σ Frame: Dominion and Fear-Based Intersexual Dynamics (2025/7/25)
10. Σ Frame: Estimating Women's Susceptibility to FEAR as a Weakness (2025/7/28)
11. Σ Frame: 10 Steps to Validation (2025/7/31)

Case Studies in Validation

1. Σ Frame: Asian Baby Girls (2025/5/9)
2. Σ Frame: Cassie Ventura (2025/5/19)
3. Σ Game: Analyzing Four Scenarios (2025/5/28)
4. Σ Frame: Examining the Effects of Masturbation (2025/6/9)
5. Uncharted Father: The Bitch is Back (2025/6/26)
6. Uncharted Father: The Three Month Itch (2025/6/27)
7. Knowland Knows: The Protector Role (2025/6/26)
8. Gunner Q: In Mexico, Open Season On Boyfriends? (2025/6/30)
9. Σ Frame: Intersexual Power Dynamics in Morocco (2025/6/30)
10. Σ Frame: Rihanna and Eminem (2025/7/2)
11. Σ Frame: Romina Garcia (2025/7/7)
12. Christianity and Masculinity: Men where have you gone? Please come back please – Gone wrong (2025/7/7)
13. Σ Game: Women Can't Handle Rejection (2025/7/16)
14. Σ Frame: The Widow's Fire (2025/7/16)
15. Σ Frame: Bathsheba (2025/7/21)
16. Σ Frame: The Treacherous Tea App (2025/7/27)

17. Σ Frame: The Puck Stops Here (2025/7/30)

Post-Fall / Born Again Slores

A subset of Case Studies in Validation concerning the effects of aging on promiscuous women.

1. Christianity and Masculinity: Prevalence of the carousel in young women in the US (2025/6/6)
2. Σ Frame: The Post-Fall / Born Again Slore Life Script (2025/6/16)
3. Σ Frame: Post Fall Slores — The Born Again Variety : Nala Ray (2025/6/18)
4. Σ Frame: Post Fall Slores — The Bible Thumping Variety: Girls Gone Bible (2025/6/20)
5. Σ Frame: Post Fall Slores — The Bumpy Landing Variety: Tomi Lahren (2025/6/23)
6. Σ Game: Hedonism's Hell (2025/7/30)

AI Validation

1. Σ Frame: The Evils of AI (2025/5/16)
2. Σ Frame: The Sniff Test to Identify AI Generated Text (2025/5/17)
3. Σ Frame: AI has no Soul (2025/5/23)
4. Better Bachelor: It's finally here but A.I. can't replace the sweat and tears of men just yet. (2025/5/25)
5. Men Are Good (Tom Golden): Using AI with Men's Issues (2025/5/27)
6. Amerika: Solipsism Machine (2025/6/13)

Religious Validation (Eastern Orthodoxy)

1. Σ Frame: Signs of Life and Death (2025/5/26)
2. To Reclaim Normality: Why American Evangelical Protestantism (AEP) Is Collapsing and Eastern Orthodoxy (EO) Is Growing (2025/5/26)
3. Σ Frame: The Failure of "Christian" Dating Apps/Sites (2025/5/28)
4. Σ Frame: Finding a Wife from an Orthodox Country (2025/5/30)

5. Σ Frame: Why is Headship more Important than Religious Affiliation? (2025/6/2)
6. Σ Frame: Explaining the Male Trend towards Conservatism vs the Narrowing Gender Gap in American Religion (2025/6/4)
7. Σ Frame: The Role of the Church in 21st Century America (2025/6/6)

Social Validation

1. Matthew E. Cochran: Honor Thy Ancestors and Thy Descendants (2025/5/13)
2. Σ Frame: When everyone wins a prize, self-interest replaces intrinsic motivation (2025/6/11)
3. Men Are Good (Tom Golden): The Forgotten Power of Unsupervised Play (2025/6/14)
4. Σ Game: According to Scientists (2025/6/17)
5. Σ Game: The Necessity of Objective Beauty (2025/6/6)
6. Σ Game: The Beholder Does Not Define Beauty (2025/6/5)
7. Σ Game: Calibration (2025/6/4)
8. Men are Good (Tom Golden): The War on Male Identity (2025/6/30)
9. Men are Good (Tom Golden): Why Men Struggle to Stand Together (2025/7/14)
10. Σ Frame: 10 Rules for Navigating Mixed Sex Spaces (2025/7/9)

Related

- Dalrock: The missing fear (2011/12/9)
- Zippy Catholic: “Game” as postmodern feminism; or why women like bad boys (2012/9/17)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Fear, Respect, Honor, and Truth, Phobeo and Timao (2014/5/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Dominion (2014/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Authority is Good (2014/6/14)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Rational and Irrational Fear (2014/9/25)

- Christianity and Masculinity: 50 Shades of Grey Analysis (2015/2/15)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Authenticity and Charisma (2015/3/20)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Let's Talk about Marriage: Fear and Dread (2015/11/6)
- Christianity and Masculinity: False desire and true desire (2019/6/10)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Revisiting dread in the Bible with an anti-chivalry lens (2020/6/18)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Aggression, Dominance is Arousing to Women (2022/3/29)
- Σ Frame: Validation (2022/10/11)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Σ Frame: Women submit to their Head (2022/10/17)
- Σ Frame: Validation is about Losing Self-Control (2022/10/24)
- Σ Frame: Game is an invitation to Humility (2022/10/25)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle, Jack): Why are women willingly submissive to authorities, but not to their husbands? (2022/10/26)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle, Jack): Very few women can be Molded. (2022/10/27)
- Σ Frame: It's her choice whether or not to submit. (2022/10/28)
- Σ Frame: Repentance and Submission (2022/10/30)
- Σ Frame: What we've learned about Feminine Submission (2022/10/31)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Trust, attraction, and the Biblical female marital roles of helper, submission, and respect — Part 2 (2022/11/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: More thoughts on the Validational sex equation (2022/12/2)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Husbands are to improve the moral agency of their wives through sanctification (2022/12/17)
- Men are Good (Tom Golden): The Right Length to Reach the Floor: Why Being Offended Matters (2025/7/8)

Thank you for reading Σ Frame!

Witchcraft Rising

Jack · 1 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Cartoon devils are out. Authentic dark power is in.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Witchcraft;
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Intro

It is NOT a coincidence that Ozzy Osbourne has passed away at this moment in cultural history. His departure marks the end of the age of caricaturized evil that he and others like him purveyed as a sensationalistic stage act to charm his rebellious generation (Boomers).

This iconic buffoonery of demonic influence is now being replaced by a much more sinister and real form of Witchery.

This article explains what is happening in the spiritual realm.

Witchcraft = The Sin of Rebellion

Witchcraft (the sin of rebellion, 1 Samuel 15:23) manifests in many ways. In general, Witchcraft is demonstrated when one usurps authority and declares one's self the sole authority over one's life. This carries a demonic influence on one's self and also others who are affected by one's actions.

The most basic and most proliferous form of Witchcraft appears when a corrupt or self-aggrandizing woman attains a position of authority over an organization, or a marriage, or a sociosexual market, or a country, and all the men within it. Rest assured, that enterprise will slowly but surely drift into the Good Feeelz of corruption, de@th, decay, dissipation, divorce, waste, etc.

We see this happening in a wife-dominated marriage (c.f. Ahab and Jezebel), in organizations having female leaders (e.g. CEOs, pastors, presidents…), in a liberal SMP/MMP characterized by female sexual promiscuity (which shifts power to women), and in "democratic" countries tyrannized by unrestricted women's suffrage.

For most of the 20th century, this kind of rebellion was perpetuated by the masses in ignorance, and was therefore covered by God's grace; else we would've seen the end of the world in the early 20th century. (Or maybe our forefathers did see this, but didn't comprehend its significance.) Nevertheless, one indirect consequence of this rebellion in the 20th century was the staggering death toll, including abortions, epidemics, and wars, as well as ethnic and political purges.

Such is the sin of rebellion.

English rock singer, Ozzy Osbourne, with his wife, Sharon, and three of his six children, Aimee, Kelly, and Jack (1987).

Signs of the Times

Christian readers are probably familiar with Matthew 24. We are there!

Since the turn of the 21st century, the common grace of God has been chugging to a standstill without the oil of gladness.

Look around you, and you will see that the love of ~~many~~ most now runs as cold as liquid nitrogen. People are 'offended' over the most inane, insignificant things, often for nothing more than the dopamine hit of feeling indignant. Betrayal abounds and is recast as loyalty to a conflicting cause or a philosophical principle. Fraud in all forms, doctrinal, financial, and marital, runs rampant and unchecked. 'Hatred' is projected as feigned 'victimization' by those who hate what is beautiful and good.

The rift between the sexes is at an all-time high. Consider the sub-replacement birth rates in most countries around the world, and you'll realize that people don't even love each other enough to have children together. Instead, they prefer the expedient conveniences of indulging in self-gratifying STRs and aborting or using birth control, rather than raising families.

Various mental disorders, social pathologies, psychoses, and personality disorders, i.e. depression and Narcissism (AKA Witchcraft), are becoming more prevalent among women. This too wars against natural affection.

I'd go so far as to say that women who hate boundaries and who refuse to be held accountable are hankering after the controllingness, self-determination, and sexual promiscuity inherent in Witchcraft. Since most Western Feminist women hate accountability, that means they are de facto Narcissists / Witches. Prove me wrong.

We see earthquakes occurring around the globe and strange phenomena transpiring in the heavens.

Politics are heating up, national and regional ambitions are percolating, and power structures are shifting and changing. We hear of wars and rumors of wars constantly. The most significant power struggles are secreted from the masses via distractions and red herrings, like "Equality", "Global Warming", "'Threats' to 'Democracy'", etc.

Such is the World when "Enlightened" values, gynocentrism, post-truth skepticism, scientism, and verificationism are idolized.

Ozzy Osbourne and his family (2024). [Image Source]

The New Expression of God's Grace

Now in this age of Dark Enlightenment, God's grace appears in a different form than in the past. His graceful forbearance of ignorance is over. Now, He places the crystal ball of destiny in our own hands, and lets us make our own fully-informed decisions about things sans His common grace, as well as facing the results and bearing the responsibilities thereof.

Yes, even this is a form of God's grace in which He fully entrusts us by bestowing upon us the dignity of self-determination. Although His stern kindness may be harsh and unpleasant for us, it is beneficial for our souls and our communities.

As a result of this shake up, the usual various blessings obtained from the church and one's community and family are quickly dissipating and/or drying up, as highlighted above. For some, that ship sank decades ago.

People are changing churches and religions in their search for life, love, and meaning.

Many men have lost all they have in this world, but they are also rediscovering what it means to truly live and breathe and work and rest, albeit alone and lonely.

As women have risen in the ranks of power and influence in the world, ironically, they have lost all relevance and significance in this world. They have abandoned their homes, husbands, and families in favor of toiling away as an unloved wage slave in a corporate cog, only to be used and discarded when their usefulness has expired. Women are now sensing the long shadows of darkness stretching across their souls, and madness descending over their vain pathologies.

Such are the consequences of the sin of rebellion.

The New Stratagem of Evil

Moreover, the masses are now slowly awakening, like a drunkard in the early afternoon after an all-night binge. They are waking up to the negative consequences of the spiritual rebellion that is implicit in female-controlled systems and a gynocentric society.

- The set of idolatries, lies, and spells that once kept men altruistic, Blue Pilled, chivalrous, and in the dark are losing their hold over individual men and society at large.
- The complementary but separate set of idolatries, lies, and spells that once kept women superficially elevated on a cloud of indignant entitlement, faux self-esteem, Woman Power™, Pride, and Tinglebation are now receding.

Since these lies and spells are being displaced and no longer hold sway over the masses, the principalities and powers of this World must resort to other means to inflict their evil will upon humanity.

Therefore, the forces of darkness are now drawing out the howitzers: Divination, Sorcery, and Witchcraft. The faux mental imagery about Satan, demons, and evil must be dispelled before this can occur, figuratively signified by Osbourne's death.

Rustlings in the Shadows

Regular readers of the Σ Frame blog will recall, back in November and December of 2023, I (Jack) covered Witchcraft as a sub-theme in The Witchy War on Masculinity (summary and index of posts).

Then, on 2024/1/3, Gunner Q Predicted that Witchcraft Will… Already Went Mainstream in 2024. Here, Gunner covered an article in which Fox News cited a clairvoyant as a reliable source of information — a new development in Western newscasting.

Note: Clairvoyancy and divination are real forms of prophecy, but even if their soothsaying is (or becomes) factually true, it is NOT necessarily from God. Usually, it is NOT.

We didn't see too much of an increase in Dark Art activities in 2024, but what we DID see is that more and more people, especially Post-Wall women, began waking up to the errors of their ways. They became desperate for power and control, especially quick fixes to end their frustration and suffering. Because real power is necessary (as compared to an illusion of power which does not ameliorate their inner turmoil), they're turning to the Dark Arts as an answer to their woes — instead of repenting and turning to Christ.

Now, half-way through 2025, the Dark Arts are almost mainstream — almost, in that examples are everywhere on social media, but it has not yet permeated public consciousness.

Recently, I have seen an uncountable number of advertisements and videos referencing various forms of the Black Arts, including…

- Attracting one's "soul mate"
- Casting spells
- Charms
- Covens
- Crystals
- Divination
- Eastern Mysticism
- Fortune Telling
- Manifestation
- Mediums
- Mind control
- Narcissism
- Necromancy
- Psychic power
- Seances
- Spiritual healing
- Sorcery
- The occult
- Witchcraft

… and many other such things.

Many of these ads can be easily identified by a voice speaking in a hushed tone or a whisper, suggesting secrecy and appealing to the fleshly desire for esoteric knowledge.

This development is significant, because many of these sources are talking about and teaching the real thing. It's not just a cartoon devil cosplay, or a countercultural fashion style or trend, or a sensational publicity stunt, or an in-group identification shibboleth as it was in the past (as Osbourne et al. depicted).

In time, these things will become mainstream.

Conclusions

Remember that the new form of God's grace is that people are deigned to make their own decisions with the full knowledge of what they're doing. Thus, these ads and videos offer an invitation to venture into intentional sins of rebellion. The power therein is REAL and it is DARK. It's NOT just a heavy metal stage show with red lights, smoke, and fire. Beware!

Avoiding these influences does not mean that we should remain ignorant of the power thereof. Those who followed my series on Witchcraft will recall that I explained how all of these are related to spiritual rebellion and what it all means. Maybe now is a good time for the reader to go back to this series and refresh your understanding of these things.

I also want to remind readers to beware of false prophets and teachers, and pay attention to those who are true.

If you are unsure of whether an ad, or a video, or a particular prophet is spiritually valid or not, leave a comment below and we'll review it and discuss it.

This month's theme will cover Spiritual Awareness and various metaphysical phenomena that might be new or confusing to readers.

Interesting Fact: August is known as "The Ghost Month" in Taiwanese cultural lore. It is believed that evil spirits and the souls of the dead rise and roam the earth looking for recompense, revenge, and rest. People are doubly cautious, financially and socially conservative, and will diligently observe religious rituals during August, to avoid arousing evil spirits and to avert attracting karmic attention to themselves.

Related

- Σ Frame: Current Trends in Prophecy (2020/3/13)
- Σ Frame: The Battle of the Prophets (2020/3/27)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Is a second Dark Ages a real possibility? (2021/10/25)
- Σ Frame: Female Solipsism : Misplaced Loyalties (2024/9/13)
- Σ Frame: Review: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men into Boys (2025/3/10)
- D. Bradley: Witchcraft: deception, soothsaying, makeup, and female “prophets” (2025/7/21)
- Aaron Renn: Why Complementarian Gender Theology Is New (2025/7/23)
- CCM Magazine: Ozzy Goes Home: Christian Rock Remembers the Godfather of Heavy Metal (2025/7/22)
- Catacomb Resident: Covenant Purity Matters (2025/7/23)
- Rev. Matt’s Writings: Feminism is An Ancient Evil (2025/9/23)

Logos, Ethos, Pathos, and Mythos

Jack · 4 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

What makes a good story essentially true, and how do we find Meaning therein?

Readership: All;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Reader's Note: This article provides a foundational framework for upcoming posts this month.

The Four Elements of Persuasion

The Greek philosopher, Aristotle, outlined classic arguments describing the three primary means of persuasion employed by the "modern brain":

1. Logos: The logical argument — facts and rationality.
2. Ethos: The ethical argument — the credibility of the speaker.
3. Pathos: The emotional argument — the passion of the speaker.

These three classic appeals can be described in various ways and can take on multiple forms in their application. They are often used in advertising, films, mottos, slogans, and PR strategies.

- "Function, Value, and Form" (in Engineering Design)
- "Heart, Mind, and Soul" (in religions such as Christianity)
- "Logic, Character, and Emotion" (describing personal traits)
- "Technology, Business, and Human Values" (in Sales and Marketing)
- "Truth, Beauty, and Goodness" (Transcendentals adopted by Catholic Catechism, Traditional Baptists, et al.)

Mythos

There is a fourth expression, not from Aristotle, but certainly present among humanity since long before his time. Mythos is the unfolding narrative built around individual identities, purposes, beliefs, hopes, and expectations.

Mythos relies mainly on the "ancient brain". It appeals to something deep within the human soul. It cannot be rationally defined, but nevertheless, it is strongly felt.

It can be inspiring and motivating, and it is also the element that brings a sense of completion and satisfaction to the observer. It is not uncommon for observers to walk away from an exposure to Mythos with the sense that the experience was meaningful to them in some way.

In storytelling, Mythos can be thought of as a story or fable in which there is…

1. Completeness or Wholeness (i.e., Ethos, Logos, and Pathos are all faithfully represented)
2. Appropriate Magnitude (i.e., things are in their proper balance or relationship to one another).

These are described next.

Wholeness

Mythos conveys a sequence of events that are carefully construed to include a beginning, a middle, a climax, a resolution, and an ending. This arrangement helps create a sense of unity and completeness in the drama.

On the concept of Wholeness, Completeness, or being part of a larger movement, Aristotle wrote,

> "A well constructed plot… will neither begin at some chance point, nor end at some chance point."
>
> Aristotle, in Poetics, Part VI

> "The events which are the parts of the plot must be so organized that if any one of them is displaced or taken away, the whole will be shaken and put out of joint."
>
> Aristotle, in Poetics, Part VIII

Magnitude

The other important aspect of Mythos is Magnitude, which refers to the size or importance that properly belongs to the various elements of the narrative. The concept of magnitude might be substituted by “appropriateness,” which relates to the rhetorical concept of decorum.

For example, in the classic story of The Wizard of Oz, each of the four main characters is given equal representation, with the exception of the main protagonist. It is not explained how or when the Yellow Brick road came to exist, or how the Wizard developed his resume, for these are details which, although realistic, do not contribute to the overall Mythos. Such excursions we call tangents, and chasing after them is to drop the plot and get side-tracked — a failure in both logic and storytelling that betrays a lack of integrity.

Secular culture and women chase after a dead-end path when they emphasize the shortcomings and weaknesses of men, and fail to develop an alternative strategy that might lead to a better outcome.

The secular Manosphere commits a similar error when it rides heavy on those sins peculiar to female nature and ignores women’s potential capabilities befitting their purpose and/or the possibility of their redemption.

Drama

In entertainment and literature, Mythos is conveyed through the central plot, as seen in dramas, fairy tales, and more particularly tragedy.

Mythos establishes cause-and-effect relationships between events, meaning that one event leads to another in a readily recognizable way, creating a chain of actions and reactions. This structure helps the audience understand why things happen and allows them to become emotionally invested in the unfolding drama.

Beyond its structural role, the elements that make up the dramatic experience of Mythos were outlined by Aristotle as follows, in order of importance.

1. Plot — The organization of events
2. Character — The people involved, the protagonists, the antagonists, the good and the bad.
3. Diction — Cues and words
4. Thought — Sequences and theories
5. Spectacle — The impressive or memorable
6. Melody (or Theme) — The overriding subject and the meaning thereof.

Meaningful Conclusions

Logos, Ethos, Pathos, and Mythos are not limited to film, stage, and theater, but are of timeless importance in human interaction. These expressions are an intrinsic part of every person's own life story, as well as businesses, churches, communities, and other social groups. Within these settings, these expressions and narratives build mutual faith and purpose, and are central to the interactive communications of desires, goals, and values.

Personal anecdotes and testimonies often rely on an implied underlying Mythos held by the speaker (which is understood, although not always explicitly explained), and this is partly why these stories are deeply compelling, especially to those who share the same Mythos.

When any of these elements is not represented, the stories conveyed do not ring true, are difficult to believe, uninteresting, and/or uncompelling. At worst, they can be deceptive.

One cannot find Meaning in life without first establishing a greater Mythos and determining one's identity and place within that Mythos. Meaning must also encompass Empathic, Logical, and Ethical / Moral dimensions, which serve to fully embody that Mythos.

Related

- Wikipedia: Mythos (Aristotle)
- Σ Frame: The Quest for Truth (2017/5/13)
- Σ Frame: On the discernment and wisdom of true morality (2019/2/2)
- Σ Frame: Three Kinds of Discernment (2020/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame: A Man's Ability to Read IOIs Depends on Having a Firm Grasp on His Personal Archetypal Mythos (2021/6/21)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Cultural Myth of the SIW (2023/11/8)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): In Science We Trust (2023/11/27)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Σ Frame: The Virtue of Self-Control (2024/12/16)

In Search of Meaning

Jack · 6 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

What is meaning, and how do we apprehend any truth therein?

Readership: All;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 950 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Reader's Note: This article and the last provide a foundational framework for upcoming posts this month.

Stray Souls Seeking Meaning

Over the past few years, the concept of Meaning has risen conspicuously in popularity, importance, and coverage.

People often speculate about the meaning of Meaning, its importance and place, and make remarks about how young people are rabidly seeking Meaning to life.

The central magic of Jordan Peterson's popularity rests on his observation that the widespread search for Meaning has become a national intrigue and pastime, especially among the youth.

Peterson's YouTube channel and his social platform, Thinkspot.com, as well as many other platforms, have been continually inundated with a virtual avalanche of clicks and comments from the thronging multitudes seeking Meaning. They may not use the word explicitly, but that's essentially what they're driving at.

For the most part, the motivations of the masses in seeking Meaning are not so much one of obtaining a source of identity through an apprehension of Meaning, as it was in ye olde days of yore, but rather to languish in an authentic catharsis. Rimé [1,2] suggested that the motives behind the social sharing of negative emotions are to vent, articulate, understand, bond, and gain social support. Negatively affected individuals do not necessarily seek to restore positive affects but instead often seek out the Meaning of life and emotional support from others in order to combat feelings of anger, depression, loneliness, and stress after a tragic event…

Or a *Meaning*less existence.

What is Meaning?

Essentially, Meaning is the quality of an item, an argument, an experimental result, a statement, or a way of life that invokes a genuine emotional poignancy in the observer, one that more often than not corresponds with and confirms a deeper sense of Mythos held by the individual.

Meaning arises from a comparison of one's own life events to a structure of reality that is conveyed through a commonly held Mythos. The substance of Meaning is derived from any points of reference in this comparison that provide an emotionally charged Validation of the individual's identity. Both one's sense of personal identity and one's interpretation of cultural narratives emanate from this derived Meaning.

The Congested Departure from Meaningfulness

Ever since the Enlightenment, Western societies have gradually departed from a commonly shared Mythos, and therefore Meaning as well. First slowly, and then now suddenly, and leaning ever more heavily upon facts and reason (Logos) in its stead.

But not because there is an absence of Mythos. Rather, there are numerous modern Mythos that bombard our attention, vie for relevance, and compete for dominance within the culture.

Alt-Rightism, collectivism, complementarianism, egalitarianism, feminism, nationalism, neo-conservatism, progressivism, scientism, socialism, transhumanism, verificationism, W0kism, C R T-ism, and others. Even the beautiful and good Based sphere purveys a particular conspiracy-filled, "Ugly is Evil" world view, and the Manosphere offers its own Red, Purple, Blue, and Black Pills to choose from.

All of these offer a Mythos-based paradigmatic interpretation of reality, complete with supporting philosophies, theories, and lifestyles.

Nevertheless, there are too many Mythos, leading to fractures and schisms.

With so many Mythos to choose from, few have a vested interest in any one in particular, with no "skin in the game", so to speak, and those who do are seen as loons and nutjobs, and their credibility is affected. So is the Meaning of their cause.

Moreover, this jumbled cafeteria of Multi-Mythos has subjected the West to a vacuum of Meaning.

All these factors contribute to the hangry craze for Meaning that we've witnessed over the past few years.

Meanwhile, casually informed disinterest is the new form of cool, ironically.

The Standard Fix

The practical solution is even uglier.

1. Impose martial law.
2. Force everyone to learn, believe, and conform to one overarching Mythos.
3. Imprison, punish, and/or silence all dissident voices.
4. Do this for 2-3 generations until a homogenous, unified culture can be reborn.

This is what Chang Kai Shek and his son did in Taiwan from 1949 until 1987. Now, Taiwan is the Economic Tiger of the Far East.

This is also what Lenin, Stalin, Mao Zedong, and Pol Pot did, with disastrous results.

It's also what the current media conglomerates, the Femin@zis, the Liberalismos, and the politicoid PTB are doing, although silently and subtly, except when NOT.

So obviously, the Mythos that is chosen and imposed on the masses matters greatly in determining the outcome.

Conclusions

The question then, is which Mythos does a person choose, or a culture adopt, to derive Identity and Meaning?

Most cultures throughout history have relied heavily on their predominant ethnic group's history (Pathos) and religion (Ethos) as sources of Mythos. Fables and philosophies spring forth from this juxtaposition and are then added back into the mix, thereby providing a supporting Logos to the Mythos.

Perhaps it is the progressive firebrands and philosophers who are working the hardest to fill in this gap of Meaning, and yet, while the values and ethics they introduce are strong in Pathos, they are embarrassingly deficient in Logos and Ethos, even so much as to become the target of humorously effective memes and comedy stints contrived by conservatives.

Red Pill lore has supplied a very detailed, sociosexually sophisticated, and spiritually informed Mythos, bringing with it a very poignant Meaning. But it deviates so far from the Western norms of Everyday Feminism that it is nearly unimaginable, and as it now stands, the real-world Meaning is so rancid and risk-filled for the majority of men (and utterly detestable to lie-loving women), that it has resulted in the Black Pill, MGTOW, Passporting, etc.

If Trump were to impose Martial law, and force-feed Murica a traditional baseball and apple pie Christian Mythos, that would be a terrible kindness to this rebellious nation.

Or it could become a Puritan-esque witch hunt that would make Ye Olde High Salem a church picnic in comparison.

References

1. Rimé, B., Paez, D., Kanyangara, P., & Yzerbyt, V. (2010). The social sharing of emotions in interpersonal and in collective situations: Common psychosocial consequences. In Emotion regulation and well-being (pp. 147-163). New York, NY: Springer New York.
2. Duprez, C.; Veronique, C.; Rimé, B.; Congard, A.; Pascal, A. (2015). Motives for the social sharing of an emotional experience, Journal of Social and Personal Relationships 32(6):757-787. DOI: 10.1177/0265407514548393

Related

- Wikipedia: Mythos (Aristotle)
- Σ Frame: The Quest for Truth (2017/5/13)
- Σ Frame: On the discernment and wisdom of true morality (2019/2/2)
- Σ Frame: Three Kinds of Discernment (2020/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame: A Man's Ability to Read IOIs Depends on Having a Firm Grasp on His Personal Archetypal Mythos (2021/6/21)
- Σ Frame: Frustrated Collective Catharsis as an Incentive for Social Unrest (2022/7/29)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): In Science We Trust (2023/11/27)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Gunner Q: Trump Admin Overwrites Confederate History In Base Re-Renaming (2025/8/6)

Derek L. Ramsey on Female Agency

Jack · 8 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Women have limited agency in any social structure — except Christianity.

Readership: All;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 2,400 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes

Intro

Back when I tackled the slippery question of female agency in late 2022, I invited fellow blogger Derek L. Ramsey to write an exposition on his take on this subject. He did write not one, but several posts on this topic, but he did not address the outstanding question of whether women have agency or not, and why he believes so. Instead, he dismissed the question as a false binary.*

Recently, however, DLR wrote a more satisfactory answer to the above question in his post, Limited Agency (2025/8/4). At 4,800+ words, this essay is rather long and difficult to follow, so here, I'll extract his key points and summarize his main arguments in less than half the number of words.

 Although DLR is technically correct in saying that the question assumes a false binary (agency is better understood as a distribution of individual capability, as Zippy Catholic described), he effectively sidestepped the question and thus failed to offer anything substantial to the discussion, nor to our understanding of this subject.*

Women have de facto Limited Agency

In this essay, DLR argues that women universally have de facto limited agency across all societies, historical and modern, regardless of whether they operate under feminist or patriarchal systems.

He regards Feminism and Patriarchy as two diametric constructs of how societies deal with the fact that women as a sex possess lesser agency than men. In effect, the principle of limited female agency is clearly demonstrated in both social systems, but manifests quite differently in each one.

For example…

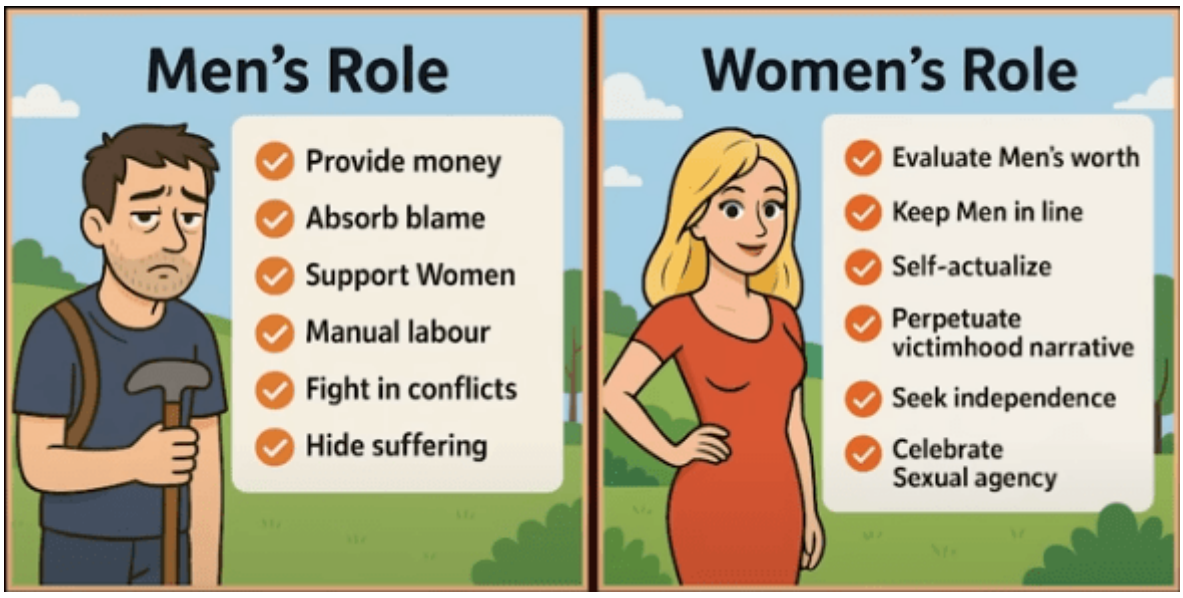
In Patriarchal societies:

- Women's achievements are cherished and celebrated — because of women's limited agency.
- Men take responsibility for women — because of women's limited agency.
- A woman's vows (including the decision to have sex/marry) are subject to later revision by her father — because of women's limited agency.
- R@pe is "allowed" [sic.], and complicit women are blamed for tempting men and/or being too meretricious — because of women's limited agency.

In Feminist societies:

- Women's achievements are emphasized and fabricated — because of women's limited agency.
- The state takes responsibility for women — because of women's limited agency.
- A woman's decisions are continually subject to her own revision — because of women's limited agency.
- R@pe is universally condemned, including charges fueled by in situ consent followed by post-hoc regret [example], and complicit men are blamed — because of women's limited agency.

But in all cases for both systems, whether feminist or patriarchal, limited female agency is the governing principle. Therefore, in both systems, there are societal expectations that men bear greater responsibility and are consistently held to higher standards and stricter accountability, while women are usually excused or shielded from equivalent consequences for comparable behaviors. DLR goes further to state that for either of these two social systems considered, men will always be held to a different and higher standard than women because society will always deign women to have lesser or limited agency.



Equal Agency is a Platitude Held by the Disaffected

DLR critiques the notion of Equal Agency, asserting that no society, except perhaps an idealized egalitarian Christian framework, grants women full agency comparable to men. In support of this assertion, he discusses examples like social and legal biases in favor of women, pervasive double standards that always favor women, and how "post hoc regret" after consent constitutes r@pe.

Moreover, DLR posits that the very notion of Equal Agency is an idealistic platitude arising from the widespread discontent resulting from the perceived failures of whichever system is in place.

To wit:

- In the context of Patriarchy, women who are disadvantaged, or discontented, or unloved, pine for equal power, authority, and status with men, or else greater independence from men.
- In the context of Feminism, disaffected men demand that women should be more responsible, contribute to society, offer value to men, and pull their own weight.

On this point, DLR concluded [expanded for clarity],

> "Where the discomfort comes is not in the fact that women have limited agency, but in how that limited agency is implemented (e.g. feminism vs. patriarchy vs. some other system). But, and this is key, just because your preferred culture isn't the one in charge (e.g. patriarchy; husband rule) [changing to that preferred structure] does not mean that the inherent instinct for limited female agency magically goes away. It does not. In [either a patriarchal or] a feminist society, women have the same limited agency, but now it's within a completely different framework, like the one in the picture above.
>
> What most dissatisfied people want is just a different system of limited agency, not equality. You can't fix the current culture by trying to give women more equal agency, by insisting that they utilize agency more fully. That's not how it works, and it never will. Men cannot magically cause women to have greater agency, they can only change the system in which limited female agency operates.
>
> Thus, if feminism is ever overthrown—and the feminist version of limited agency with it—it will be replaced by another system of limited female agency (e.g. Islam), not a system of equal agency."

Note: The line in bold above is the point of difference that sets DLR at odds with the Dalrockian segment of the Christian Manosphere, which sees men as partly responsible for instilling agency in women (and children) under their care by holding them accountable. (More on this below.)

Christianity Assumes Female Agency

DLR cites a comment from Cill at Spawny's Space to postulate that accountability invites reciprocity, which in turn implies equality.

Standards → Accountability → Reciprocity → Equality

But ONLY within a Christian context.

Outside of this context, and in contrast…

- In a patriarchal system, men choose to be responsible for women in their domain because of assumed male dominance, and because women have limited agency compared to men.
- In a feminist system, men are held accountable by women because of presumed female superiority, despite women having limited agency, compared to men.

Neither has true Equality.

On this point, DLR concludes,

> "Outside of an explicitly Christian context and an explicitly Christian marriage—and one that explicitly rejects Old Testament patriarchy and the Curse of Eve from the Fall of Man—there is little chance that men and women will ever have equal agency. The secular culture simply will not allow it. It's best to get used to that fact and adjust accordingly."

DLR states that Christianity is unpopular and won't ever work in a non-Christian / secular society because Agency is anathema to the female fleshly nature, and Christianity encourages women to develop and to regularly instantiate agency.

DLR does not explain how Cill's process should work in a Christian context. But the answer is that Christian men need to initiate the process outlined by Cill by imposing boundaries and standards, and holding accountable those women who are under their domain of authority. Judging by his other comments and writings around the sphere, DLR seems to be deeply uncomfortable with this practice.

AWALT, Even Christian Wives

In spite of all the arguments conveyed above, DLR dedicated a fair amount of his essay to dispel the notion that women should provide value to men, based on his central claim that women lack the necessary agency to do so.

The reality of this is undeniably evident, he says, even though women are ordained by God to be men's 'helpers' (Genesis 2:18, which applies to both Christians and non-believers), and apparently, he includes Christian women who are supposed to possess greater agency, as per his own argument (described in the previous section).

DLR goes further in this essay and also in other comments around the sphere to state that it is unreasonable for Christian men to expect their presumably Christian (but perhaps de facto feminist) wives to act agentically and/or provide value to their marriage, even though Christian women are supposed to possess greater agency, as per his own argument (described in the previous section).

> "If you happen to be a proponent of patriarchy, headship, or feminism, you believe that men have greater agency than women and should not complain when society assigns limited agency to women. It is hypocritical."

DLR has stated similar platitudes repetitively to many Christian men in the sphere who are married to difficult wives, thereby receiving derision as a troll.

As a preemptive deflection of criticism, he also devoted a fair bit of his essay to argue that calling on men to step up in response to women's limited agency is NOT the same as demanding men to "Man UP!" … because (1) he is not a blank slatist, (2) we are not living in a patriarchy, and (3) it is men's duty to protect and provide. He forgot to add that it is our duty as men to suffer and die for our wives.

Contextual Quibbles

DLR criticizes the classic Christian Manosphere author, Dalrock, and his philosophical adherents, for asserting that women have (or can / should have) full agency, arguing that this notion conflicts with observed cultural (i.e. secular) norms and practices, and asserts that assuming or enforcing equal agency is futile outside a specifically Christian context.

However, DLR fails to acknowledge that Dalrock's writings address women's agency specifically within a Christian context, and that in this, DLR appears to agree with Dalrock's stance that Christian women have (or are capable of having) a larger degree of agency.

Overall, it appears that DLR disagrees with the Dalrockian Biblical assertion that Christian Headship Authority (a form of Patriarchy which assumes limited female agency) should be the preferred social structure for lay Christians, instead favoring his version of a more egalitarian-ish framework, Peaceful Unity, which assumes female free agency per his idealized concept of Christianity.

OTOH, despite DLR's apparent endorsement of his nuanced brand of egalitarianism, he is rue to identify as egalitarian because of the doctrinal compromises made by mainstream Christian egalitarianists, as Dalrock made evident in a multitude of posts.

DLR doesn't explain how his version of egalitarianism should work out in the case of lackluster female agency in a Christian context, even though he has been asked to do so many times. Perhaps his reticence is because the practical answer looks something like Jack's approach or TheDeti's approach, both of which DLR passionately despises and therefore rejects as viable options. This is apparently why DLR refuses to name TheDeti, even when citing his quotes, referring to him instead as "Pesudonymous Commenter" [sic.], and why he does not allow pingbacks to the blogs and comments that he cites in his writings.

Jack's Commentary

DLR stated,

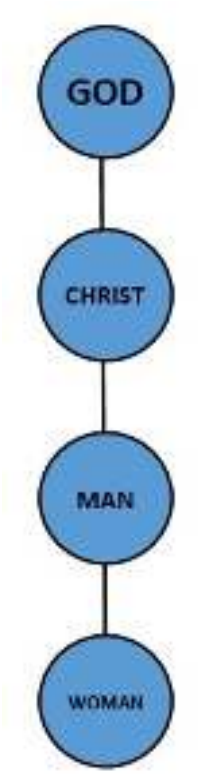
> "No society has ever agreed that women have full agency compared to men. None. Not a single one. Society is behaving 100% rationally — per its own standards — when it demands that men [or the state] take full responsibility for females. This is essential to both feminism and patriarchy (including the Christian headship model). Outside of Christ, there is no reason at all to grant full agency to women, and no one does."

"No one does" … except most of the current Manosphere 2.0, which is doing a pretty good job at pointing out how both society and women are 100% irrational, and they'll even throw in a Biblical citation now and then. Nowadays, if you look at all the arguments in the current Red Pill content (e.g. this video from Alexander Grace), you'll see that this is now a basic assumption — that women should have, and often do have agency, and if they don't, then they're stupid dufuses that no self-respecting man would ever want to own.

For marrieds, recall my earlier assertion that Headship Authority and Game are more appropriate for relationships in which the wife is spiritually immature and lacks agency.

Moreover, DLR's has a shaky concept of why female submission is important to a Christian marriage.

Despite all these assertions that ONLY Christian women could possibly have any semblance of agency while non-Christian women do NOT, DLR appears to deny the possibility that Christian women can and should exercise agency via submitting to their male Head, as stipulated in scripture (Genesis 2:18-25, Genesis 3:16, 1 Corinthians 11:3, Ephesians 5:22-23, Colossians 3:18, 1 Timothy 2:9-15, Titus 2:3-5, 1 Peter 3:1-6, 1 Peter 5-6), instead intimating that Christian women are only obedient because of some Invisible Magic Authority (which I would assume is the Holy Spirit in his mental model). Having a faithful wife has rendered DLR ignorant of the fact that husbands of kind wives (such as himself) remain naïve to the evils of womankind.



Instead, DLR's stance is strikingly similar to the views on female agency that Dalrock's detractors held (or used to hold back when Dalrock was active) (e.g. Tim Bayly, Douglas Wilson, IGTBAM, Warhorn, et al.). In essence, they regarded women as perpetual children who aren't fully responsible for their sins. Husbands are ultimately responsible for everything that their wives do, at all times, and therefore must bear the consequences for their sins.

No. A woman's submission to her male head via her faith in the Lord is the exact distinction that renders a woman's behavior 'Christian', thereby liberating her from the worldly constructs of female hypoagenticity, solipsism, and sin. (See Sarah's example of faith in 1 Peter 3:6.) Husbands are only held responsible when wives are entirely and persistently obedient. This is also the most important distinction that creates a Christian marriage structure. That is, a woman might be a Christian, but if she refuses to submit to her husband, then she does not have a Christian marriage.

So, in effect, women are (or can be) agentic in that they are responsible for shifting both the marital and social structure to one that allows them greater agency and spiritual freedom by submitting to their male Head, which leads to them learning righteous behaviors and thereby developing their agentic capabilities. But this is exactly what secular women refuse to do, which is also exactly why they are non-Christian.

Conclusions

In summary, Christian men who hope to achieve a Christian marriage in a feminist culture will invariably have to begin with a feminist system and transform their marriage into a patriarchal Headship system, before it can ever become a mature Christian relationship in which women can act as free and responsible agents of their families, fathers, husbands, and the Lord.

Ironically, DLR refuses to recognize the practical necessity of this messy process of women's redemption, regeneration, and transformation as a valid Biblical alternative to enduring a debased, female dominated union.

Related

- Biblical Gender Roles: Why Unity In Marriage Has More To Do With The Wife Than The Husband (2016/11/23)

- Σ Frame: More on Relational Archetypes (2020/11/28)
- Σ Frame: A Gynocentric Society Inhibits Female Agency (2022/12/9)
- Σ Frame: Moral Agency is Dependent on Spiritual Maturity (2022/12/19)
- Σ Frame: What we've learned about Female Agency (2022/12/20)
- Σ Frame: Men's Role in the Mess (2022/12/21)
- Σ Frame: Are Men Responsible for Women's Behavior? (2023/2/1)
- Σ Frame: Invisible Magic Authority (2023/12/13)
- Laughing at Feminism: Women are like silly sheep (2025/7/21)
- Spawny's Space: Contract (2025/8/1)
- Spawny's Space: Is This What They Really Want/Expect? (2025/8/6)

Patriarchy and Civilization

Jack · 11 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Kingdom Rule provides the motivation for the advancement of society.

Readership: All;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Maintaining Motivation

Most of my life, I've always kept myself busy doing all sorts of things (Ecclesiastes 9:10), and for the most part, I've thoroughly enjoyed my work. In general, I'm diligent, hardworking, autotelic, and maybe too much of a perfectionist — it slows me down and decreases my satisfaction. (This is improving with age.)

Nevertheless, there have been times in my life when I've felt extremely unmotivated. I just didn't want to do anything at all. This always felt very strange to me. I thought I should feel guilty, or lazy, or useless, but I didn't. I just felt like nothing was happening in my life that would inspire me to take action, and for whatever reason, I wasn't able to create a new endeavor to invest myself in, as I usually do.

My most recent experience with this was in early 2023. I received notice that my contract would not be renewed the next year, and I had no other prospective job offers. Once again, I found myself underemployed (I had some part-time work elsewhere) and completely lacking motivation to keep looking for another job. Once I became aware of this, I began to pray about it.

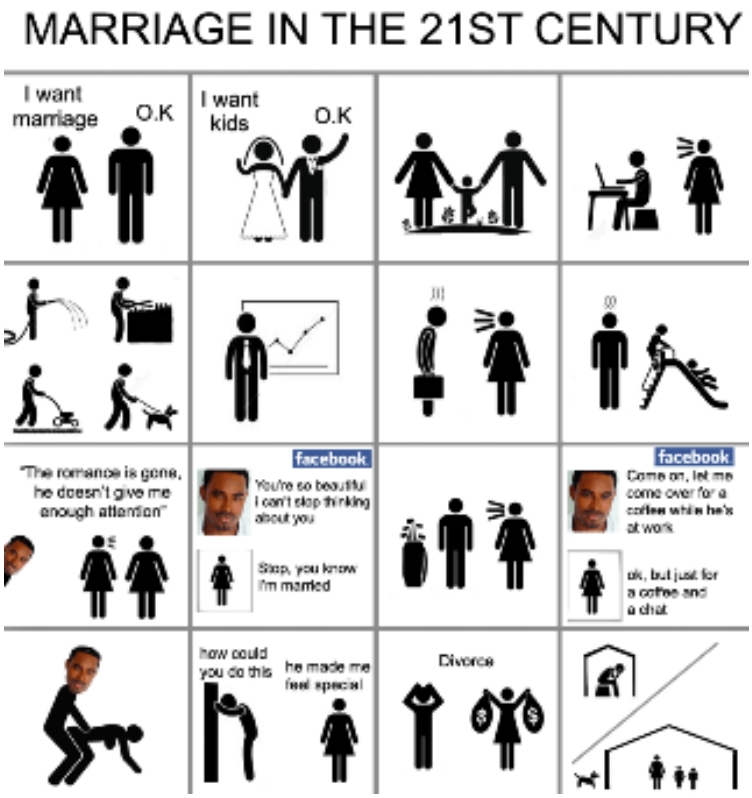
Then Info, a long-time commenter at Σ Frame, shared a link to a Catholic website, Fish Eaters, that contained many articles that were rather Red Pillish and quite interesting to read. So I started reading a post or two there every day for several days. (I had the impression that it contained an answer to my prayers.) After reading there for a while, I came across the answer, contained in the following mythos of civilization.

Patriarchy => Civilization

Here are a few excerpts from Fish Eaters Chapter III: The Patriarchal System: Putting Sex to Work.

> "It was the discovery a few thousand years ago of this connection between the regulation of female sexuality on the one hand and family and social stability, male productivity, and social progress on the other, which ended the Stone Age and began the era of patriarchal civilization. "Patriarchy's age", says lesbian-feminist Susan Cavin, "is approximately 3,000-5,000 years old. Compared to the millions of years human ancestors have populated the earth, patriarchy represents only a dot of human time."
>
> True. The fact shows that the creation of patriarchy is the greatest of human achievements, since each and every one of the other achievements of civilization came into existence during that dot of time, whereas the preceding millions of years created none of them.
>
> Patriarchy, says Adrienne Rich, "is the one system which recorded civilization has never actively challenged." That is because without patriarchy, there can be no recorded (or unrecorded) civilization. The central fact about patriarchal civilization, besides its recency and the magnitude of its accomplishments, is its artificiality and fragility, its dependence on women's willingness to submit to sexual regulation. Women's deregulation of themselves by achieving economic and sexual independence can wreck the system. The ghettos show how easily this can happen. The wrecking of the system is rapidly spreading from the ghettos to the larger society, where the legal system has become patriarchy's chief enemy, expelling half of society's fathers from their homes."
>
> "[In a patriarchal system] Her status depended upon his status. Therefore, she was motivated to make him achieve a high status. And the success of the system in generating male overachievers who create wealth, social stability, and progress — all beneficial to women — proves the arrangement to be desirable. Women would not have accepted it unless its benefits were greater than those offered by matriarchy. The wife of an impoverished burgher could have been de-classed by her husband's behavior, but she chose to be his wife because, through marriage, her status and income were more likely to be raised than lowered."

> "This is the way the patriarchal system works, and it benefits everyone. It gives men motivation, makes them productive, and thus helps their wives and children. It puts sex to work as a motivator, focusing on long-term (family) arrangements rather than on short-term sexuality — promiscuity, the first law of matriarchy. "Society asks so little of women," says Betty Friedan. But that little must include the chastity and loyalty which makes patriarchal fatherhood and legitimate children possible."
>
> "[Womankind] cherishes the Promiscuity Principle — but also men's money. Men must teach women that the money will not be forthcoming unless they submit to the patriarchal Sexual Constitution and allow fathers to have legitimate and inalienable children.
>
> Society wants males to earn money. It is the labor of males that creates the prosperity of society, as the poverty of the surviving Stone Age societies, the ghettos, and the [native aborigine] reservations amply show. There is one way, and only one, of motivating males to earn that money, and that is to make them heads of families."
>
> "[In recent times, men] are divorced — and have lost their children and their homes. They were "unsure of their women's love" because they were economically superfluous. The man with whom Ms. Friedan spoke knows his wife may toss him out, as his fellow therapists were tossed out by their wives, and he is in a panic. A generation ago, a man's attachment to his family gave him the motivation to be a high achiever; today, the feminist / sexual revolution has made this attachment to his family the cause of his becoming a panicky underachiever."



Epilogue

In summary, these passages illustrate how Patriarchy motivates men through granting them a domain of authority, a sphere of influence, the possession of a wife, regular sex, fatherhood, a stable family, status, wealth, and other things.

I've read some Manosphere articles that have posited that sex is men's primary incentive for building a civilization, but it's not only sex, because that can be taken and the rest discarded. It has to be the whole package deal. It is the ownership of a nuclear kingdom that every man is responsible for building, defending, maintaining, and ruling that gives meaning to it all. Only within this context is a man motivated to produce more than what he needs for himself, thereby providing for family and society.

I'll answer the question of why I lost motivation in the next post. Maybe you can already guess.

Related

- Σ Frame: Identifying Your Spiritual Domain (2021/12/1)
- Σ Frame: Pursuing Flow to develop Confidence and Trust (2022/4/22)
- Σ Frame: "Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest." (2022/4/27)
- Σ Frame: Frustrated Collective Catharsis as an Incentive for Social Unrest (2022/7/29)
- Σ Frame: Detached young bucks, not simping suckers. (2025/5/12)
- Σ Frame: Why is Headship more Important than Religious Affiliation? (2025/6/2)
- The Orthosphere (J.M. Smith): The Dormant Volcano Rumbles (2025/8/25)

Domain and Motivation

Jack · 13 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The prerequisites for Civilization.

Readership: All;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

One of the widespread complaints we've heard from authors, mouthpieces, and online 'influencers' is that "Men are absent / checking out / gone / leaving the plantation / etc." Female TikTokers nearing The Wall are crying, "Where are all the good men?"

Translation: Women are no longer able to access male utility.

Regular readers should already know this has happened because there are few incentives for men to date and marry, and there are too many risks. Hence MGTOW.

It is intuitively obvious that poor motivation has led to poor performance.

Another way to Frame this standoff is that men are not motivated to build a domain (marriage and family in this case), when they cannot exercise Kingdom Rule over that domain (due to Duluth, gynocentric family courts, etc.), and there is a high probability that it will be destroyed or repossessed.

My last post, Patriarchy and Civilization, concluded that a man is motivated to build, create, produce, and protect when he owns a nuclear kingdom that he is responsible for. His ego investment in building, defending, maintaining, owning, and ruling that domain gives meaning to it all. Only within this context is a man motivated to produce more than what he needs for himself, thereby providing for a family and society.

Furthermore, for Patriarchy to have the effect of civilizing a nation, Kingdom Rule must be widespread enough on the grassroots level to scale up to the societal level. Therefore, a patriarchal civilization can only exist when there is a critical mass of men who are motivated by nuclear Kingdom Rule.

OTOH, when Kingdom Rule is no longer a significant force in a society, then that society will gradually become less civilized, just as we see in the unraveling West nowadays.

At the root of all this lies the fact that Kingdom Rule builds a man's motivation. When you remove a man's Kingdom Rule, or make the juice not worth the squeeze, then you remove his motivation to build, contribute, create, protect, and provide.

Domain => Motivation

As an exercise in self-awareness, I'll scale this down to my own experiences, and I'll describe how the state of my domain has affected my motivation. Perhaps readers can relate.

1. When I think back to those times in my life when I had a stellar performance, I had my own domain.
2. OTOH, at those times in my life when I was unmotivated and performed poorly, my domain was shaky, or non-existent (when moving or starting over), or there was a meaningful element missing from my domain — one that made it all worthwhile to me.
3. Facing a significant challenge or setback was character-building and even life-giving, but ONLY when my domain was strong. In contrast, adversity was devastating when my domain was defenseless, insecure, or lacking.

I'll expound on these points below.

Weak Domain => Low Motivation

For most of my life (until I took the Red Pill), my domain was NOT something that I thought about or was concerned about, so the outcome of a situation as it pertained to my domain was not clearly evident to me. So here, I need to reflect on when and how I lost motivation. (I'm curious to know if any readers are in the habit of doing this sort of Domain / Motivation / Outcome analysis.)

So, what were the vectors of my demotivation?

Looking back on my life experiences, I've put together a list of things that coincided with the times I lost motivation.

- Losing my job.
- Being "Zeroed Out".
- My ex-wife left me.
- Not having sex regularly.

- Not having a stable marriage.
- Being defeated in a competition.
- Being a victim of financial fraud.
- Having scant awareness of my personal value.
- Losing my car. (It was totaled in a traffic accident.)
- Being rejected (e.g. by a girlfriend, by a church fellowship).
- Not having enough money to do what I wanted or needed to do.
- My ex-wife did not allow me to see my daughters for months or years.
- Responsibilities were too heavy, or my schedule was too tight, and I could not finish everything well.

At the time, I thought I lost motivation because I was depressed or disappointed about the things listed above and/or the gravity of the situation. Yes, I was truly depressed and disappointed, but that was NOT why I was unmotivated. With respect to Kingdom Rule (and by extension, Patriarchy => Civilization), the reason I was unmotivated was that I saw my domain crumbling and slipping away, and I knew there was nothing I could do about it, except to let it go, forgive if necessary, move on, and start over, counting myself fortunate to have preserved my faith and my sanity.

Each time built character, though, and I suppose that is the cosmic reason why God allowed it. Still, I did not recognize it as a loss of my domain or that this was what demotivated me.

Prioritizing Domain in the Face of a Challenge

There were other times when I faced significant challenges and setbacks in life, but it motivated me to work harder. Why? Because my domain was not at risk, or if it was, I was confident that I could deal with that risk and preserve my domain.

Here's an example.

Later in my life (age 38-43), I was in a difficult situation after my divorce. It was abundantly clear to me that I needed to set up a protected domain, so as not to be undone by my ex's schemes. I went to considerable effort to do so, and I had a few strategies in place to defend it from threats.

- I rented a small warehouse to live in, large enough to provide enough space for my daughters, my motorcycles, and all my gadgets, tools, and toys.
- I had 2-4 part-time jobs instead of one full-time job. Since I had other jobs to fall back on, I didn't worry if my ex found one and showed up spreading false rumors to ruin my reputation and have me cancelled. (Yes, it happened a couple of times before.)
- I had 2 motorcycles — if one broke down for whatever reason, I still had a backup so that I'd never miss a class.
- I opened a P.O. box so that I could receive mail without using my home address, thereby keeping it private.
- I attended 2 churches, and found friends in both places.
- I used my connections through people from church to get my daughters into good schools.
- I maintained a network of female friends so I never lacked female company.

Why was my performance outstanding during this time, despite being intensely harassed by my ex? Is it because I was making good money? Or because I had a large, comfortable, private, and secure living space? Or because my daughters were living with me? Or because I had a social network of friends? Or was it simply because I felt happy and content, despite the stress of divorce? Or maybe all of these things?

I thought so at the time, but after reading Fish Eaters, I have to say … No.

It was because I had set up a domain for myself in which all of these things could happen. I planned out ways to make my home and income secure. I set up a life in which all my needs were prioritized and therefore satisfied. I created a lifestyle and a way of life for myself and my children, and I was able to share this with friends as well. All these blessings and others occurred, and could ONLY occur, because I had created a domain in which it was made possible.

Related

- Σ Frame: Shifting Gears in a Career (2018/7/8)
- Σ Frame: Identifying Your Spiritual Domain (2021/12/1)
- Σ Frame: Pursuing Flow to develop Confidence and Trust (2022/4/22)
- Σ Frame: "Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest." (2022/4/27)
- Σ Frame: Why is Headship more Important than Religious Affiliation? (2025/6/2)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)
- The Orthosphere (J.M. Smith): The Dormant Volcano Rumbles (2025/8/25)

8 Deterrences to Domain

Jack · 15 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

What prevents men from building a domain?

Readership: All;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 2,500 words
Reading Time: 14 minutes

Intro

Thinking about motivation through the lens of how Patriarchy builds Civilization has been revealing.

In writing the last two posts, I've come to ask myself why I've found it so difficult to build a strong domain and what has held me back.

Here, I'll speak from my own experiences, but I believe these insights would apply to most all men.

Overall, there are several categorical reasons why men are hampered from developing, maintaining, defending, and ruling over a domain:

1. Ignorance and Naïveté
2. Faulty Faith Beliefs
3. Chasing Women Instead of Building a Domain
4. Entering Marriage Unwisely
5. Disrespect
6. Divorce
7. Emasculation / Humiliation
8. The Tedious Boredom of Headship / Governance

At the end, I've included a prayer for men seeking to build a strong, healthy domain for themselves.

1. Ignorance and Naïveté about Domain

Continuing my story…

Earlier in life, I wasn't very ambitious about building a career or making money, however, I did feel very motivated because I had the hope of having a wife, regular sex, children, and a stable life. But what I didn't understand was that these things alone do not constitute a domain, so these things remained elusive. Even if I had obtained these things, it would not have been sustainable without a domain.

After reading Fish Eaters, my Frame was widened to see that my Bible reading during my youth had led me to assume a Patriarchal worldview, when in reality, this system hadn't existed since before my grandparents' day. Nevertheless, I chose to believe I could carve out a patriarchal niche for myself.

I did develop a modest domain — several times — despite NOT exerting a concentrated effort to do so. But because I didn't recognize the importance of having a domain, I didn't defend it or maintain it when events led to my domain falling apart, mostly because of competitive forces and/or conflicts of interest. I also think I was too young and inexperienced to know how to handle it.

In addition to NOT knowing why having a domain of authority and a sphere of influence is important, there were several other things I was unaware of.

- I had no idea I was supposed to be building a kingdom to rule over.
- Because of (1), I wasn't making a conscious effort to do so.
- I didn't understand that I would be fighting against the culture, against women, and even against the church in trying to accomplish this. I continually faced challenges from all these sources, yet, it never clicked that this is institutional, NOT situational.
- I didn't have any domain-minded mentors to make me aware of what's important. In fact, many of my mentors were Blue Pilled Boomers — the generation that actively dismantled what little remained of patriarchy in the West. That figures.
- I also had many mentors from the Greatest and Silent generations, however, the Greatests were mellowed out with age, and the Silents were very relaxed and laid back. They could not teach me much about defending my domain.

2. Faulty Faith Beliefs

I've had experience with Calvinism, Evangelicalism, and Lutheranism.

There is something about Calvinism (i.e., the TULIP stuff) that is extremely demotivating. (Calvinists call this the "Rage Stage".) I'm not sure if this demotivation would affect a man's domain and/or marriage, but I think it might for some men.

Evangelicalism has its own set of troubles in the form of Boomer theology, complementarianism, and "Servant Leader" teachings. Here, man's motivation is hijacked to serve feminine interests. This has been covered extensively by Dalrock, et al.

When I look back at my own life, I see that I was taught to be a better Beta within a feminist system, NOT a patriarchal one. I've written about all these things before, but here's a shortlist of issues.

- Loyalty
- Chivalry
- Altruism
- Nice Guy
- Self-sacrifice
- Individualism
- Anti-materialism
- Romantic notions of love
- Blue Pilled / gynocentric thinking
- Churchianity, AKA The Beta Factory
- The notion that women are more spiritually attuned than men.
- The belief that women are "Sugar and spice, and everything nice".

Take anti-materialism, for example. I was not focused on earning money, because I believed that it was materialistic. As Jesus said, it is hard for the rich man to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. But lately, I have come to see how this belief has severely limited me. I should've been more intent on making money and establishing a career, a domain, and a home for myself.

The others on the above list were similarly deceptive. For each one, there was something about it that led me to believe it was 'Christian', or important, or virtuous (or that's how it was framed by the church and/or the culture), but the reality was that it eroded Kingdom Rule.

Such is the nature of The Beta Factory.

The comprehensive sum of all these false beliefs from my upbringing caused me to fail at kingdom-building endeavors for the first part of my life. Essentially, I had a very late start, and fast starts often make the difference between winning or losing a race.

3. Chasing Women Instead of Building a Domain

Single Christian men are prone to spend too much time, money, and effort trying to find a woman to marry, thinking that marriage is immediately urgent and indispensable because…

1. The blinding, mind-numbing, urgent sexual needs need to be met RIGHT NOW.
2. Sex should be obtained in a moral context, thus requiring marriage.
3. Having sexual needs satiated frees a man up to concentrate on other things.
4. Marriage is regarded as a pillar of financial and social stability in life.

But for all our talk about the importance of marrying a woman who is chaste, fertile, supportive, submissive, teachable, etc., the truth is that a man won't attract ANY woman at all unless/until he has established a sturdy domain. That's what the MPS is in LAMPS.

Besides, marriage is NOT a solution to lust.

Moreover, this is sex-centric thinking, NOT Domain-oriented objectivity. The problem with this thinking is that it detracts and distracts a man from developing himself and building a strong domain (Proverbs 31:3).

4. Entering Marriage Unwisely

Men often choose a wife with no thought about their domain or how a particular woman might affect it, for better or worse. Then sometime after marriage, they are frustrated to discover that their domain is stymied by her influence.

Or worse, they're struck unawares when their domain is subsumed into hers.

Specific to domain, a poorly chosen wife …

- Doesn't respect your decisions.
- Doesn't encourage you to have a healthy lifestyle.
- Doesn't make it any easier for you to focus on your work.
- Doesn't allow you to rest after you come home for the day.
- Doesn't praise your performance, no matter how good or bad it is.
- Doesn't manage your habits and lifestyle in a way that fits your interests, needs, and personality.
- Doesn't know when to give you space, or time, or rest, or peace, or a quiet moment, so that you can pull yourself together and find new resolve.
- Doesn't appeal to your sexual desires in a way that would constrain you to her side and help you contain them within your marriage. (Yes, women can control this.)

And so far, this is just the basics. The bare essentials for a man to function.

Once these basic habits are in place, then she can begin thinking about how to contribute, help, and support her husband and family.

The key point is that if she's not helping, then she's a dead weight dragging you down, and your whole domain goes down with you.

5. Disrespect

Going further on that last point…

A wife's disrespect is extremely demotivating … and embarrassing.

It is a downward spiral that works like this.

Her disrespect → He is angry, annoyed, bitter, and self-conscious → He becomes less confident, less focused on his work, more absent-minded, awkward, and clumsy → This draws more disrespect from her → He loses motivation → His domain and influence suffer → His Kingdom Rule is diminished or destroyed.

Worse, it can devolve into a Feminist marriage: a harpy wife and a henpecked husband, thereby increasing the odds of divorce.

How can a man escape this cycle?

Here are a couple of methods that we've introduced here on Σ Frame:

1. The Husband should hold the Wife accountable for her disrespect, as I wrote about in Ideal Women Don't Exist (2023/9/23). This will make her angry and contentious, so a man may need to stick with it for months or even years before he sees results.
2. If the Husband can display joy in spite of her caustic attitude, then this may speed up the process in (1).

6. Divorce

Part of the reason why divorce hits kids the hardest is because it destroys the home domain in which they are incubated. Without that domain, they're left unprotected from all the lies of this world and the assaults of Satan.

If a man grew up in a home broken by divorce (as I did), it's 10x harder to establish a stable domain for himself, because he never had one, and he doesn't know how to maintain it or why it is important.

7. Emasculation / Humiliation

In Emasculation is Irreversible and Cannot be Cured. (2024/2/2), J.M. Smith of The Orthosphere wrote about the permanent effects of emasculation on men's psychological health. Smith's essay draws on a 1854 report by Brevet Captain John Pope, who described the Comanche, Apache, and Kiowa tribes in west Texas while exploring a route for the Pacific railroad. Pope described how the Comanches, who possessed bold, manly qualities, and had extraordinary skill on horseback, targeted Mexican settlements, thieving and raiding for horses and slaves. Pope noted that abducted women often assimilated into Comanche society, even after (or perhaps because) of initial r@pe, forming attachments and bearing children, while abducted Mexican men remained permanently humiliated, displaying a "cowed and sullen look, and a shuffling, timid manner", and a reluctance to return home due to shame or fear.

From this case study, it is evident that while women can and do often recover from degradation (indeed, some women crave it and thrive on it), such emasculation / humiliation inflicts a catastrophic psychological toll in men that is more or less permanent and irreversible. Smith advocates for men to resist dishonor fiercely, even suggesting "death before dishonor."

The modern parallels of emasculation take the form of schoolyard bullying, or white boys in a minority-majority school, and men in female-dominated workplaces. Also, it is not uncommon for married men to be routinely humiliated by their wives via disrespect (described above), shaming, sexual withholding, etc. Men who have been subjected to such experiences, especially early in life, tend to sink to the bottom of the SSH and have great difficulty in establishing a domain of authority.

8. The Tedious Boredom of Headship / Governance

Why do we seldom have excellent rulers?

I don't know how many wars have been started, or illegitimate offspring born, simply because a king got bored and envious, but I'd guess it is a major factor in a majority of conflicts.

Why are most people in positions of power so corrupt and lazy?

I don't know how often politicians get into government simply to cut deals with corporations and lobbyists and line their nests, but I'd guess it is a majority.

Governance or 'Rule' (e.g., of a church, or a community, or a family, or a nation, etc.), when done well, is laborious, tedious, and enervating. It feels like you're doing all the work of keeping everything together and running smoothly just so that the peons don't have to worry about those things and are free to waste their time frolicking in the flowers you planted and trampling them on occasion. But that's what is necessary for security and prosperity. It is tempting for those in power to become careless, envious, greedy, lazy, passively cruel through inaction or oversight, and/or to shift their attention to specific activities that are more interesting or personally rewarding in some way. But that is exactly how the seeds of rebellion are sown, followed by the disintegration of domain, and finally the fall of civilization.

Even after a man reaches the top, he must do the hard work of maintaining and defending all that he has built, and guard himself against his own vices.

A Man's Prayer for His Domain

I've put together a prayer to help men understand themselves better, take inventory of their lives, and gain more wisdom about forming a domain. Readers may like to change some parts to match their own situations.

Lord,

Much of my motivation and my success in life depend on having a secure and viable domain. Yea, it even determines my value as a man in this world.

I can see with recondite clarity that I've been wrong about many things. I've failed in many ways. I've not prioritized Kingdom Rule in my life. I've not given my best effort at establishing the domain of influence that is necessary for me to fulfill your purposes for my life.

Instead of concentrating on building and securing my own domain, I've been preoccupied with the small pleasures I wish to have in my domain (James 4:3). But without a strong domain, I cannot keep those things, no matter how good they are. So all is lost, like coins placed in a bag full of holes (Haggai 1:6).

Help me to let go of these idols and frivolous, vain desires. Let my daily thoughts return to who I am in Christ, and the vision of that which you have set out for me to do in this life.

Teach me a renewed lifestyle that is Christ-centered and domain-oriented. Grant me the power to bring all variables under control, either by my hand or by faith in You, in my home, my work, my church, and my social circles. Give me wisdom to rule over my family / wife / sons / daughters / GF / employees / others well. Let me remember that I am responsible to You for all that is within my domain, and NOT to those under my authority, lest I become a vacillating people pleaser.

Reward my faithful obedience with more contentment, more joy, more motivation, more optimism, more proactive initiatives, and more productivity. Let me and mine bear fruit for Your Kingdom. Protect me from competitors who continually strive to defeat me, and evil doers who seek to destroy and/or steal my inheritance.

Lord, increase my domain and strengthen it, so that I may be content, joyful, productive, and give glory to You in this way; as St. Irenaeus wrote, "The glory of God is revealed in a man fully alive." Let your glory rest profusely upon my life and within my domain.

Amen.

Related

- Σ Frame: Shifting Gears in a Career (2018/7/8)
- Σ Frame: Patriarchy is the Default Context (2021/6/2)
- Σ Frame: Identifying Your Spiritual Domain (2021/12/1)
- Σ Frame: Pursuing Flow to develop Confidence and Trust (2022/4/22)
- Σ Frame: “Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest.” (2022/4/27)
- Σ Frame: Detached young bucks, not simping suckers. (2025/5/12)
- Σ Frame: Why is Headship more Important than Religious Affiliation? (2025/6/2)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens’ sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)
- The Orthosphere (J.M. Smith): The Dormant Volcano Rumbles (2025/8/25)

The Power of a Prenuptial Agreement

Red Pill Apostle · 18 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Nailing down loose ends before matrimony leads to a better, and on average, longer marriage.

Readership: All; Men; Married Men; Marriage Minded Men;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Author's Note: Based on my correspondence with Jack (2025/8/1), who contributed to the writing of this post.
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes + 1 video (optional)

Intro

There is a stigma surrounding prenuptial agreements that assumes if you want one, then you don't have a healthy attitude about marriage, or you don't totally trust your partner, and/or you're not ready for marriage. So many people are hesitant to look past this presumption to see the wisdom in getting one.

The Manosphere often stresses the importance of prenups, but concedes that they may not actually hold up in the event of divorce. Gynolatrous judges have been known to disregard prenuptial agreements out of hand in divorce proceedings.

However, the process of getting a prenup may, in itself, buffer a marriage against the conflicts that might eventually lead to dissolution, and do so in a timely manner, i.e. before the marriage commences.

I came across a video from Andrew Huberman (below) in which he interviews an attorney, James Sexton, about prenuptial agreements and how that usually plays out.

The information about prenups from the attorney is fascinating.

He presents the counterintuitive fact that people with prenuptial agreements tend to stay married longer and report more satisfying relationships than those who don't.

Why so?

Here are a few ideas.

Prenups Function as a de facto Premarital Counseling

When I think about young people entering into marriage, the picture that comes to my mind is a dreamy young man, blinded by the thought of regular sexy time, knocking heads with an indecisive, yet also somehow persnickety young woman who has a lot of flighty, misguided notions about her duties in marriage. Both individuals are lacking self-awareness. Both have nary a clue about what is needed for their union to work out over the long term.

So, while I don't have data to support this claim, it would seem logical that Sexton's experience of prenups mitigating divorce is, in part, due to the negotiations facilitating a resolution of any relationship-ending quarrels that may lie dormant prior to the nuptials.

Furthermore, I imagine that prenup lawyers probably act as a de facto counselor slash therapist. Assuming this as the reality, prenup attorneys must possess a fair modicum of psychological wisdom and also be rather skilled in marshalling individual couples to settle on a mutual agreement by making the negotiation less direct and personal, which I have found helps facilitate more honest conversation.

Prenups Regulate Incentives

As I've stated many times before, incentives matter; and in the West, the incentives heavily favor a wife leaving, which is horrible since women tend to be more prone to emotionally-based decision-making than men are.

A well-written prenup should eliminate the incentives for women to walk away with cash and prizes. The nature of the agreement should be punitive for the spouse who files for divorce, unless there is proof of infidelity. Whether or not it actually turns out that way, at least a prenup gets this through her head up front and sets a tone of responsibility.

Prenups Temper Expectations

In all my reading and studies on marriage, the literature often cites finances, sex, and extended family issues as the most common reasons for divorce. I believe these are the most common areas in which the battles are fought, but these are NOT the actual root reasons for divorce.

Sexton's data about prenups preserving marriages points to the real causation for divorce by what the process of negotiating the prenup eliminates — unmet or unrealistic expectations. The very process of talking through what marriage looks like in real life probably tempers unrealistic expectations and allows each side to state and then hash out what they want from the marriage.

Conclusions

There are several reasons why getting a prenup is associated with better, longer marriages.

1. Counseling — The process of getting a prenup forces both parties to get serious and think realistically, and come together in agreeing on commitment, intent, and a shared purpose.
2. Emotional Maturity — If two people approach marriage without being too emotional about the details when protecting themselves, then they are more capable of expressing needs and resolving conflict. Such people are better equipped to handle the duties and responsibilities of marriage.
3. Honest Communication — Legal contracts foster deeper understanding by encouraging vulnerability and honest communication about each partner's values and expectations.
4. Incentives — Prenups preset the terms so that each party has skin in the deal, so to speak, and each spouse has enough to lose that they are motivated to make better choices.
5. Regulating Practical Expectations — Going through a prenup requires both the man and the woman to think through exactly why they want to be married, and what they expect to get out of it. It also gets them thinking about the practical details of daily living and how material assets are going to be managed; things that they may not have considered before consulting a prenup attorney.

Considering the current female-dominated divorce market, I am going to recommend that my sons each have a prenup in place before getting married.

Other Highlights

Huberman and Sexton have a lot of good things to say in this interview. If you or someone you know is engaged or is thinking about getting a prenup, then I think it is imperative for you to listen to their entire discussion before you pick up the phone.

For other readers who are NOT looking down the barrel of a shotgun, at 3 ½ hours long, I know this whole video is "too long" for the average reader to digest in one sitting. So here I'll just highlight a few other insights and good points that caught my attention and might interest some readers. If you want to hear more, then you can jump to those sections in the video below. Alternately, there is a list of topics with timestamps under the video on YouTube.

14:40 — In legalese, a divorce is the breaking of one contract (marriage), and forming a new contract (alimony, assets, custody, child support, etc.) A prenup is a contract that delineates how those future contracts may or may not be conducted.

20:00; 26:20 — Marriage implies a very high degree of trust, whereas contracts suggest a very low degree of trust. So it is difficult for some people to superpose the two.

21:00 — Sexton: Every marriage has a prenup written by the state. Drawing your own prenup lets you decide for yourself what that prenup entails.

35:00 — Sexton: People who are mature and objective enough to draw up a prenup are mature and objective enough to make a marriage work.

36:40 — Sexton: There is a fear about divorce that many people are afraid to face, and it is therefore more difficult for them to consider this possibility when writing up a prenup.

38:20 — Cultural and religious traditions vs divorce rate.

1:00:00 — Sexton and Huberman examine what defines true, lasting love versus generic romantic ideals.

1:16:00; 2:12:45 — How social media distorts people's understanding of what they truly need out of relationships and marriage.

2:37:40 — Gender dynamics, bravery vs vulnerability.

2:54:45 — How age at the time of marriage, and early vs late marriage shape marital outcomes.

3:01:30 — Courtship length and marital outcomes.

3:10:00 — The importance of knowing yourself.

Andrew Huberman: Contracts of Love & Money That Make or Break Relationships | James Sexton (2025/5/5)

Related

- Jim's Blog: Make women property again (2021/4/19)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Lessons on Life and Marriage from Matthew 10 (2021/9/20)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): An Analogy of Risk Management (2022/3/7)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Laying out Boundaries (2022/10/19)
- Σ Frame: Laying out Expectations (2022/10/20)
- Σ Frame: Expectations (for LTRs) (2023/1/20)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Do you have a Communist Marriage? (2023/4/26)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Mating Dance and Female Erotic Fantasy (2024/1/19)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Setting Boundaries Increases Openness (2024/1/28)
- Christianity and Masculinity: In favor of Prenups (2025/9/30)

The Appropriateness of Logic

Jack · 20 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Meaning cannot be manufactured through that which has no meaning, i.e. Sc!eNcE!

Readership: All;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

Ever since the advent of the Modern Age (since ~1500 A.D.), Western culture has abandoned alchemy, fables, mythos, religion, and superstition, and in its place, it has slowly transformed into a gynocentric, materialistic, positivistic, pseudo-science cult of World worn fame. First slowly via philosophy, then in awkward bursts during the industrial revolution and the rise of Feminism, and then suddenly enveloping the entire culture over the past couple decades. Now, scientism and verificationism are the defining features of what is taken to be 'serious' modern discourse.

Hence, most all citizens of WEIRD countries are casual low-key Science Nerds, varying only in..

- Their discernment of right vs wrong.
- Their skill in utilizing critical thought to identify truth and weed out half-truths, post-truths, and rumors.
- The intensity of their peculiar obsession with post-truth skepticism, scientism, and verificationism.

Perhaps the most egregious abuse of our cult of scientism is that scientific findings are cherry picked, models are tailored, and logic is twisted to impose Meaning where there is none. This peculiar comprehension of science is often implemented to serve political and social agendas, in which case, we see two more defining qualities of modern progressive pseudo-scientific minds.

- Their ability in weaving together science and social issues to adapt their reasoning to the ever shifting sands of the Worldly narratives.
- Their willingness to bend logic, reason, and science in unconventional ways to undergird "Enlightened" values, Feminism, and gynocentrism.

This essay will explore this phenomenon in greater depth.

Two Cultures of Science

Richard Cocks' recent essay, Science vs Philosophy (2025/8/16), makes the case that there are two distinct forms of science culture in the West.

1. There is a core of passionate researchers* and philosophers* who do the actual work of promulgating scientific research and theory.
2. Science has a cult following that has very little input into actual science, but treats science as a trendy topic of intense interest because of the clarity, order, and seemingly irrefutable argumentative structure it provides.

Cocks offers several astute observations about the differences. Here I'll augment three of them for emphasis.

1. The Relative Meaningfulness of Science

- True scientists* are well aware of the limitations of science and scientific findings, and have noted that science cannot answer the existential or ontological questions that are of most interest to human consciousness, which is to say, they've realized that science has no true meaning.

- The pseudo science cult is always attempting to read meaning in between the lines of scientific discoveries, principles, and theories — something that science cannot do, and was never meant to do.

I've written of these differences before, in terms of Misappropriated and Misinterpreted Models.

2. The Meaningfulness of Participating in Science

Erwin Schrödinger in 1933, age 46.

- True scientists* find meaning in their first-hand participation in the discovery of science, i.e., the immediate excitement of pushing back the frontiers of what is known — an endeavor that relies heavily upon the creativity, imagination, and intuition that this participation inspires within the scientist's communion with the natural world.
- The "science groupies" manufacture meaning via the significant influence they wield in terms of how science is evaluated, interpreted, applied, and perceived.

One of the maladies of modren science is that scientists, and especially scientific publishers, have become science groupies, mainly in order to continue receiving grants and subsidies from both government and NGOs that wish to promulgate progressive ideas.

3. Human Neurobiology

- The frontal lobe, primarily in the right hemisphere, has a primary role in emotionally driven decision making, ethics, moral behaviour, and social skills.
- The right side of the brain is responsible for artistic skills, creativity, emotional processing, facial recognition, imagination, intuition, spatial abilities, understanding contextual or non-verbal cues, and processing music and visual imagery.
- The left hemisphere of the brain handles analytical reasoning, linguistic processing (including speech and writing), logical thinking, mathematics, problem-solving, and scientific analyses.

This might explain why the brain cannot superimpose the logic of science onto meaning.

 Cocks mentions Erwin Schrödinger and Bertrand Russell, but there are many others who've come to similar conclusions about the limitations of scientific inquiry, including Bacon, Descartes, Einstein, Euler, and countless others.*

Fact is Fiction

In the past (and still continuing to a lesser degree), typical tactics of deception deployed a poignant emotional appeal (a heavy emphasis on Pathos) in which facts (Logos*) and moral considerations (Ethos) were supplanted in order to allow the subject to be swept away by emotions and thereby convince him/her to believe the false narrative.

Nowadays, we see a heavy emphasis on Logos* that is frequently used to obfuscate a deceptive Pathos, often by displacing or redefining Ethos (e.g. ressentimentalized values). Superficially, this twisted Logos appears factually accurate, but is in fact, cherry picked, statistically manipulated, and heavily biased in order to support a predetermined narrative.

This is how Logic can be misconstrued to support nearly any viewpoint, right or wrong, provided it is sufficiently cherry picked, compartmentalized, and isolated from conflicting information.

This is how pseudo-science groupies attempt to manufacture meaning.

This is why low-status misfits and self-styled 'victims' are systemically assigned higher social esteem than hard-working contributors.

It is also the main reason why !Sc!eNcE! has lost credibility in recent years.

 Logos (not to be confused with LOGOS, the Biblical pseudonym for Jesus) is one of the four elements of persuasion, the other three being Ethics (Ethos), Emotional Conviction (Pathos), and the overriding meaning, purpose, and significance of the story (Mythos).*

Logic Alone is Insufficient

As Cocks' essay amply illustrates, science is unable to answer the questions of meaning. So it also follows that Logic is similarly inadequate.

As Jesus said,

> "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your strength, and with all your mind, and you shall love your neighbor as yourself."
>
> Deuteronomy 6:5; Matthew 22:37; Mark 12:30; Luke 10:27;

Thereby incorporating all four elements of persuasion within a sociospiritual context.

Jesus did NOT emphasize Logos to say,

> "Thou shalt be saved by the purest truths of thy reason."

Like "science groupies" who try to incorporate meaning into scientific knowledge, loving the Truth with all one's mind (Logos) is insufficient.

Neither did he require Ethos to say,

> "Those who shew due consideration for the damned shall be found worthy of redemption."

Like humanism and progressivism assigns as the chief of virtues.

Nor did He stress Pathos to say,

> "Humanity shall be elevated unto perfection through the strength of thy compassion."

Which the Globalist powers pushed on the public for decades.

But the World tells us all these things.

Conclusions

An overriding emphasis on any of the four arguments of persuasion while neglecting the others results in the loss of Wholeness, as well as the compelling power of the Mythos.

This is why I have often said, to the consternation of many readers, that Logic is insufficient as a vehicle for arriving at the Truth.

Rather, in addition to facts and reason (Logos), one must also have a sense of ethical prudence and moral discernment (Ethos), as well as an emotional investment (Pathos). Mythos, including all of its constituent elements, serves to tie everything together under a common purpose, thereby assigning meaning to it all.

Related

- Wikipedia: Mythos (Aristotle)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Science and Scripture (2009/11/20)
- Σ Frame: The Quest for Truth (2017/5/13)
- Σ Frame: On the discernment and wisdom of true morality (2019/2/2)
- Σ Frame: Three Kinds of Discernment (2020/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame: A Man's Ability to Read IOIs Depends on Having a Firm Grasp on His Personal Archetypal Mythos (2021/6/21)

- Σ Frame (Jack): Superposition (2023/6/14)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Cultural Myth of the SIW (2023/11/8)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): In Science We Trust (2023/11/27)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Aaron Renn: “Excarnated” Christianity (2025/8/21)

Modern Nihilism is the Vacuum of Meaning

Jack · 22 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The end result of the Enlightenment.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 850 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

In a previous post, Frustrated Collective Catharsis as an Incentive for Social Unrest (2022/7/29), I described how the misguided PTB subtly contrive widespread frustration among the populace, and sow discontentment among the proles.

It was assumed that the resulting social unrest experienced by modrens is the whole purpose of it all.

> "A generation ago, a man's attachment to his family gave him the motivation to be a high achiever; today, the feminist / sexual revolution has made this attachment to his family the cause of his becoming a panicky underachiever."
>
> Fish Eaters Chapter III: The Patriarchal System: Putting Sex to Work.

As long as Bob Baker, Ernie Electrician, and Paul Plumber are uncertain of the future, worried about paying bills, and wondering if they'll still be married next year, then the PTB can rest assured that there will be little individual effort to enlarge the common man's domain nor will there be any collective action to change the status quo from being in their favor.

But upon further reflection, I see that even the most wholesome intentions to recreate Meaning would be frustrated without a central cultural (or sub-cultural) social Mythos.

It is not just the presumably corrupt PTB who are creating this distention. What we are looking at is the end culmination of the full fruits of the Enlightenment — Nihilism.

In the Nihilism of late-stage capitalism, there is no Mythos, no plot, no spectacle, no larger purpose … only a quasi-contented coexistence without Meaning. If one is somehow dissatisfied with the materialistic comforts of Capitalism, left unsoothed by the lullaby of complacency, and is piqued by this lack of Meaning, then this paradigm is experienced as frustration.

Thus, rather than creating a collective catharsis, it may very well be that the MGM and the PTB are only feeding the masses an affirmation of their despondency.

This conclusion resonates with what commenter Arch Angel wrote some time ago.

> "I think nihilism in general is borne of a mechanistic outlook on the world and life. In our era, it results from scientism (or empiricism or verification-ism, taken too far). As they can hardly be quantified or observed in a lab, nihilism tends to a disbelief in the beautiful, transcendent, or idealistic things in the world. For proof that we've come to see everything (even religion and aesthetics) scientifically, see how scientists now decide who the world's most beautiful woman is, scientifically!
>
> The effects of this worldview (which many Christians have adopted) have been largely negative. In its wake we see the attempted erasure of metaphysics, the relativization of ethics, the decline of art and religion, et cetera.
>
> As life has lost its beauty, men's idealism, naked and homeless, has taken refuge in women. At present, women and romantic love are a retreat from the 'ugly realities' of life. In fact, romantic love may be thought of as the cult of women, aimed at men's expression of adoration for them. As we cling to our detached scientific > outlook, women have become all that is left beautiful, moral, decent, and pure in the world.

>
> Until the Red Pill came along. Red Pill men suffer from the nihilistic notion that nothing can be beautiful in this life. It's always a trick or evolutionary adaptation just waiting to strike. Therefrom springs Red Pill nihilism (Black Pill). The notion that nothing is right in the world; that the world is devoid of good women and therefore lacks good entirely. More importantly, that nothing can be done about it. It is a reverse sublimation of man's nobler passions and the manifestation of calculating, brutal violence or hopeless despondency based on possible solutions.
>
> To overcome this nihilism, all one has to do is abandon scientism."

I agree that scientism corellates with Nihilism, but rejecting scientism is not enough to overcome Nihilism, because Nihilism is the absence of Meaning, by definition.

Without the Beauty, Truth, and Goodness of a Mythos, Meaning and Purpose will continue to stagnate, and there will be no motivation for men to build a nuclear domain, and men's eroding domains will continue to weaken and fragment Western society.

Thus, to overcome nihilism, we must reestablish an overarching Mythos that inspires the faith of constituent communities. We must be able to find Meaning in the Mythos.

Going further, to overcome hopelessness and develop meaningfulness, we must revive the central place of a mythos that combines history, religion, and philosophy with science, as Michael Polanyi described. Without a mythos that is widely held, truthful, and valid, the PTB, MGM, social media, Thinkspot and other similar media platforms can ONLY offer a Frustrated Catharsis, because nothing else is truly meaningful within nihilism.

Related

- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame: A Man's Ability to Read IOIs Depends on Having a Firm Grasp on His Personal Archetypal Mythos (2021/6/21)
- Σ Frame: Infiltrating the Minds of the Masses through Suspension of Disbelief and Social Catharsis/Cathexis (2022/7/25)
- Σ Frame: The Comfortable Danger of Social Catharsis (2022/7/27)
- Σ Frame: Frustrated Collective Catharsis as an Incentive for Social Unrest (2022/7/29)
- Σ Frame: Hexis Cathexis and Voodoo Catharsis (2022/7/31)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): In Science We Trust (2023/11/27)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Σ Frame: Logos, Ethos, Pathos, and Mythos (2025/8/4)
- Σ Frame: In Search of Meaning (2025/8/6)
- The Orthosphere (J.M. Smith): The Mother of All Gods (2025/8/27)

Putting the Noahic Covenant into Perspective

Jack · 25 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

It is man's role to build domains in the fleshly / Worldly realm, NOT the church's.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Author's Note: Written in response to a reader's question on 2025/8/21.
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Following our theme of Awareness, let's think about the pseudo-doctrinal teachings going around the churches today, and how these doctrines are interpreted and applied.

Protestant Evangelicalism

First, let's review a brief history of Evangelicalism in terms of doctrinal authority.

Recently, Catacomb Resident wrote about the distinction between an organization centered on the flesh vs one of the spirit using the example of evangelicalism.

He writes,

> "Mainstream churches are public accommodations in spirit. That is, they are structured and run like a business franchise. The leverage is of the flesh. That means you would expect there to be some strong fleshly influences, if not downright demonic. It is a human institution, regardless of any presumed divine purpose. That's part of how it works."
>
> "[Since the 1970s, Evangelicalism has been] very much all about the institution. You are supposed to absorb the branding. All of the education and inspiration taking place within the walls or otherwise under the aegis of the institution was aimed at getting folks to strengthen the institution first and foremost. That's how the system works. It operates under the Code of Noah."
>
> Catacomb Resident: Two Systems (2025/8/23)

More recently, however, society has become much less interested in absorbing the Big Eva branding, particularly the so called "Boomer Theology" trimmings, and in response, the church has doubled down on retaining that influence. As Aaron Renn described in a newsletter, influential figures within Big Eva (e.g. Timothy Keller, Russell Moore, et al.) are restructuring the church constitution and even tweaking doctrine in order to unite disparate factions of Evangelicalism. These changes are intended to continue the cultural hegemony imposed by the middle-class Protestant social lifestyle and the political block held by Big Eva since the 1980s.

The proponents of this conglomeration carry the notion that a more powerful church has greater influence through evangelism. However, the revised doctrine merely combines aspects of the existing structures of complementarianism and egalitarianism in order to appeal to the gynocentric / liberal masses, thereby sidelining the already disenfranchised men within the church in favor of establishing unity in terms of official church polity. But this is exactly what is pushing men out of the church, and attracting feminists and other fluffies into the church.

Although this move is intended to bolster the church's waning influence over society, without a return to Biblical / Patriarchal values, it is little more than a worldly flex — one that lacks teeth.

See here for more on this.

The New Apostolic Reformation

Next, let's consider the New Apostolic Reformation (NAR). It's related to Dominion Theology, the new "Chalcedon" folks, etc.

Ed Hurst covered NAR on the Radix Fidem blog a long while back, and this information is still current.

Radix Fidem: Counterfeit Religion: NAR (2011/10/13)

I was inspired to write this post in response to a reader who shared the following link via email, which describes NAR from a religiously neutral perspective. I consulted Ed Hurst on his opinion, and despite the article's neutrality, we think what it says about NAR is basically valid.

Got Questions: What is the New Apostolic Reformation? (2022/1/4)

The strong point of NAR is that it hits a few things on the head that address the failures and omissions within Evangelicalism — enough to make it enticing. For example, it recognizes the place of prophecy within the church and the importance of mysticism, and it is willing to change up the structure of leadership in its churches to be more flexible and responsive when faced with external, societal influences, instead of just folding secular trends into the social fabric of the church, as most Protestant churches usually do.

Here's an excerpt from the Got Questions description that describes the aspect of NAR that we have an issue with.

> "According to New Apostolic thinking, mankind lost its dominion over earth as part of the fall of Adam. So Jesus' sacrifice on the cross not only resolved our sin debt, but it empowered mankind—specifically, Christians—to retake control of the earth. The New Apostolic Reformation sees seven areas in which believers are supposedly empowered and expected to dominate: government, arts, finances, education, religion, family, and media. Of these, the New Apostolic Reformation sees government as the most important because of its ability to influence all of the other facets of life. As a result, the New Apostolic Reformation overtly encourages Christian control over politics, culture, and business. In some ways, this is nothing unusual, as people should be expected to vote and lobby according to their convictions. The New Apostolic Reformation, however, is often accused of pushing for outright theocracy."
>
> Got Questions: What is the New Apostolic Reformation? (2022/1/4)

Specifically, there are (at least) three problems here.

1. While it is true that mankind lost its dominion over earth as part of the fall of Adam, the Noahic Covenant (Genesis 9) reinstated man's dominion over all the earth, including plants and animals, with the command to "be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth" (verse 1). This covenant applies to ALL mankind, NOT just the church.
2. NAR believes mystical faith can be used to construct a church authority.
3. NAR assumes they can use their church to establish a worldly dominion, or at least, wield major influence in Worldly politics, etc.

Moreover, NAR makes the same mistake as Big Eva in assuming that the spiritual authority within the church can be extended as an authority over the earth or the world of mankind.

The correct understanding is, respectively,

1. Mankind has dominion over the earth, and it is up to each man to see to what is granted to him within his own sphere of authority. (See next section.)
2. The Covenant, faith, and mystical awareness set the priorities for one's personal walk, whereas the Bible contains many detailed guidelines about church leadership.
3. The Bible has nothing to say about the church exercising human authority over the earth or the worldly affairs of mankind.

Men's Role in Establishing a Fleshly / Worldly Domain

After reading the above, readers are probably wondering how we are to regard the connection between personal faith and worldly dominions?

As with many other issues of faith discussed on this blog, it comes down to the individual man.

My recent posts about establishing a fleshly/worldly domain are aimed towards men (not churches).

- Σ Frame: Patriarchy and Civilization (2025/8/11)
- Σ Frame: Domain and Motivation (2025/8/13)
- Σ Frame: Deterrences to Domain (2025/8/15)

Building a fleshly / worldly domain is something that men should be doing (illustrated by the story of Noah building the ark to save his family, and God's covenant via Noah), but this is not emphasized in churches. Instead, the churches mentioned above attempt to take on that role. Big Eva will even knock men down and out in order to do so.

Part of the reason why young men are searching and switching churches is because they have little to no domain, and they're hoping to find that sense of belonging to a domain from a church membership.

Church membership is good and necessary, but for men it is not enough. The church should be teaching men that they should be building their own domain as part of their purpose in life. The church should be helping these men find their calling / work / purpose (or whatever you prefer to call it) so that they can establish their own domain and wield spiritual influence within that domain. Short of this, men can always pray and trust God, but at some point, building a domain will require the willing cooperation from others who join themselves to a man's sphere of earthly / Worldly authority. The church should be actively encouraging this, and the church should play an integral role in this endeavor — men helping other men get a leg up in the world.

Conclusions

When we compare NAR to Evangelicalism, we see that both are fleshly / worldly enterprises, but in very different ways.

1. Both Evangelical Protestants and NAR confuse the Two Realms of earthly authority (man's dominion over the earth, and the apostolic authority of the church), and thereby grasp for the earthly authority given to man, NOT to the church.
2. Big Eva and NAR both make the same mistake in conflating spiritual authority and worldly authority. That is, the commandments and promises associated with new testament theology are assumed to preside over old testament covenants (i.e. the Noahic covenant). It just doesn't work. You can't combine the old and the new, as Jesus stated in Matthew 9:16-17, Mark 2:21-22, and Luke 5:36-39.
3. As these churches clamor for worldly authority (which rightfully belongs to men, NOT the church), in doing so, they casually dismiss their role of providing a spiritual home for said men.

It's something for us to be aware of.

Related

- Σ Frame: Sacramental Soteriology (2023/6/19)
- Σ Frame: The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)
- Laughing at Feminism: Who was first given dominion over the earth? (2023/9/13)
- Σ Frame: Repenting from Covert Buddhism (2024/2/21)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)

- Σ Frame: Signs of Life and Death (2025/5/26)
- To Reclaim Normality: Why American Evangelical Protestantism (AEP) Is Collapsing and Eastern Orthodoxy (EO) Is Growing (2025/5/26)
- Σ Frame: Why is Headship more Important than Religious Affiliation? (2025/6/2)
- Σ Frame: Explaining the Male Trend towards Conservatism vs the Narrowing Gender Gap in American Religion (2025/6/4)
- Σ Frame: The Role of the Church in 21st Century America (2025/6/6)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Deterrences to Domain (2025/8/15)
- The Orthosphere (J.M. Smith): The Dormant Volcano Rumbles (2025/8/25)

Fate vs Self-Awareness

Jack · 27 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Uncovering subconscious self-defeating beliefs can allow one to overcome doubts and fears.

Readership: All;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

> "Until you make the unconscious conscious, it will direct your life and you will call it fate."
>
> Carl Jung

Intro

The advent of The Red Pill unleashed a torrential typhoon of turbid truths about human nature that are altogether vital, useful, … and also harmful. As a point in case of the latter, some younger men who didn't grow up under the Blue Pill cloud have objections to and/or harbor reservations about The Red Pill because of the Black Pilled negativity and the sheer hopelessness that it conveys.

It's true. There is quite a lot of Red Pill 'wisdom' that works against developing the kind of mindset that would actually help a man attain his goal of obtaining what he desires in life.

For example,

- "Women are the gatekeepers of sex" (and she'll defraud me).
- "She's not yours, it's just your turn."
- "The juice isn't worth the squeeze."
- "Women love opportunistically."
- "Women seek to control men."

These and many other maxims don't offer any positive solutions to the current misfortunes of being born male in today's gynopositive culture.

There is a void of understanding that the church should be supplying, but it is not; instead, this hunger for truth is being filled by secular seekers, by the mysterious grace of God. Years ago, The Red Pill filled the vacuum of knowledge imposed by Feminism, but ever since The Red Pill has gone mainstream and Feminism is receding, the applicable knowledge is being suffused with an increased sense of awareness.

Thus, as we slowly migrate away from the Post Truth Era into an Era of Mysticism, we are seeing more and more articles, comments, discourses, posts, and viewpoints in philosophy, psychology, and religion that appeal to and make reference to the mystical. Although much of this media is stripped (or robbed) of any mention of traditional religious doctrine or the spiritual significance thereof, a spiritually discerning person will see that a lot of the better content is essentially Christian mysticism dressed up in secular language. Many Red Pill 2.0 voices are breaking the Fourth Wall to mention references to scripture and Christian authors.

It makes sense when you recognize that ¡Sc!eNcE!, as it currently stands, has not yet transcended the metaphysical and is therefore limited — and that only true faith has any meaningful impact or real lasting value.

Fate vs Awareness

Here's an example of what I'm talking about.

I came across this post from Francesca Psychology that fits into the theme of Awareness. I'll go over this, make some connections to the Christian faith, and offer an exemplary exercise of how it can be used.

> "You don't attract what you consciously desire. You get what you unconsciously want. Let me explain…"

> "You may say you want "a relationship, more money", but if you are subconsciously afraid that "being in a relationship will expose me to being abandoned", or "having money will mean I'll have no free time", then you > will self-sabotage.”

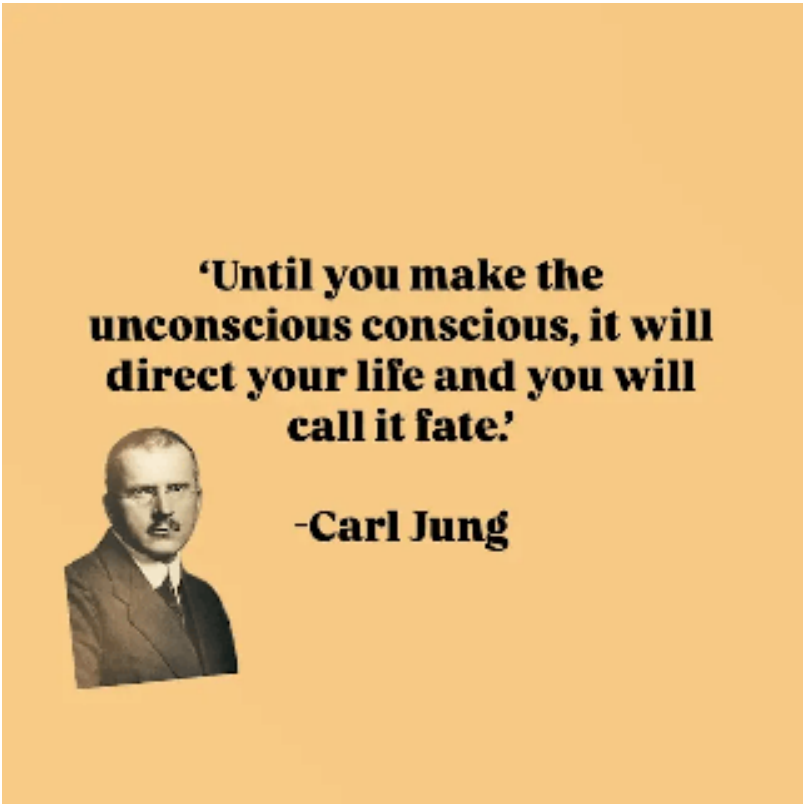
> “You need to understand all the reasons why you don’t want the thing you claim you want.
>
> Make a list, e.g.:
>
> “I don’t want to be in a relationship because…

> - They will find out I’m not good enough and leave me.
> - I won’t be able to recover if we break up.
> - I will lose myself and my freedom.
> - I won’t be able to travel as much as I want…”



> "Until you make the unconscious conscious, it will direct your life and you will call it fate."
>
> Carl Jung

> "Now that you made your unconscious conscious, take each belief and change it with something you want to believe.
>
> E.g.: If you believe, "I don't want to be in a relationship because I won't recover if we break up", read that out > loud and change it to, "I trust myself to handle any situation and I know I will be OK even if it's painful."

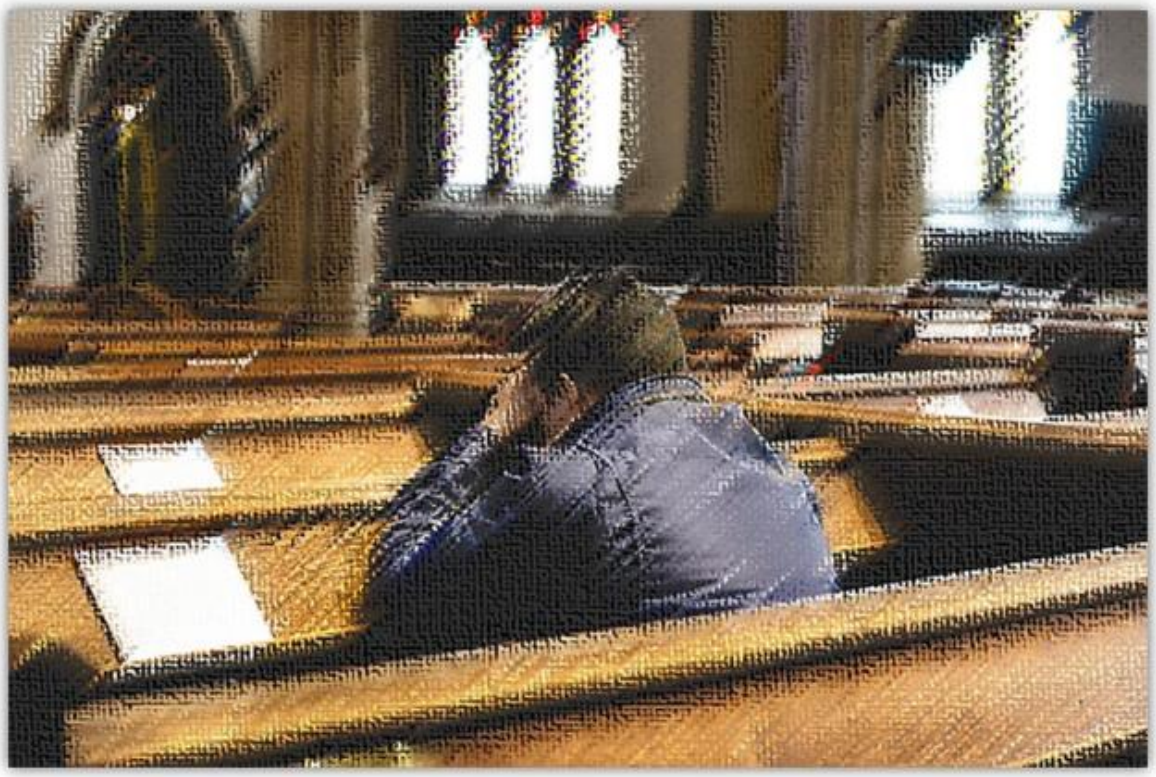
This is exactly the kind of introspection that Christian men should be doing on a regular basis, to flush out whatever false or self-defeating beliefs they may have, and to correct them according to Biblical truths.

Commenter pinoniks added,

> "Just because you will make it conscious doesn't resolve the problem. What I learned from my good experience — I had to go against my instincts and to trust what someone suggested me to do. Sometimes it's not that fun to make a change."

This is another way of saying that faith / trust and works must go hand in hand for blessings to result (James 2:14-26).



Bringing Subconscious Beliefs into Conscious Awareness

OK. Let's try this.

I'm going to apply this technique to a hypothetical young man who has real potential to compete in the SMP/MMP, but whose mindset is the limiting factor.

He might introspectively talk to himself like this.

> Lately, I'm becoming aware of something I want but don't have — a companion / friend / helpmate / lover / wife / mother / children / family / [fill in the blank].
>
> What are all the reasons why I don't want the thing I desire? What am I afraid of?
>
> "I don't want to pair bond with a woman and/or have a girlfriend / wife because…

> 1. I do not know how to find / identify / select a woman who can offer this kind of relationship with me.

(Excuses; Ignorance)

2. When I have met women like this in the past, there was always something about the girl that I could not accept, e.g. buck teeth / different background / different faith tradition / different race / [fill in the blank]. (Pride)
3. I'm afraid that even if I do find this kind of relationship, she will change and/or it won't last 'forever'. (Lack of Discernment and/or Faith)
4. Not sure I'd be willing to commit to whatever quality woman I can actually attract. (Low Self-Esteem)
5. It will probably require me to spend more time and effort to develop a career, earn more money, get in shape, hone my Frame, step up my Game, and all that jazz. (Lack of Motivation; Laziness)

I meditated on these reasons (which are rather common beliefs for most men), and came up with the following reframes for each one.

1. I have been reading the Bible / Christian Manosphere / Red Pill for months (or years). I already know everything there is to know about finding, identifying, and selecting a woman who can be the kind of wife that I want. I just need more experience, because greenhorns can't be choosers. Plus, I have a deeper faith in God about discerning these things that I didn't have before. I did not have this knowledge or this discernment before, but now I do, and I will continue to grow, learn, and improve.
2. Focusing on something about a girl that is hard to accept is precisely what allows me to retain a stance of detachment and maintain Frame. Also, no one is perfect. The fact that I am aware of her problems is a good thing. "The devil you know is better than the one you don't." Knowing her problem also allows me to truly love her more authentically. I just need to sort out what kinds of problems I can handle and stay away from the kinds of problems that would interfere with my Life Mission.
3. First of all, am I just waving this abstraction as an excuse NOT to take action to do what it would take to investigate the possibilities and find out? Besides, this is a part of life that cannot be very well controlled or predicted. I need to get some clinical data on a particular girl before I can ever know how she might change in certain ways, for better or worse, but not in other ways. I can look for positive signs or negative flags that would indicate what kind of influence we have on each other and get a pretty good idea of how that will play out.

4. If I find a relationship that is truly worth having / keeping, then it is up to me to decide that it has already been established 'forever'. I must claim this by faith, not because any woman is worthy of the task, but because I decide this is what I want for myself, and I'll find a woman who shares my vision. If one woman rejects me, then there will be another; and besides, one worth keeping will not give up easily. TBH, I am the one who is more likely to get tired of her and start looking at other women. I just need to stop making excuses for rejecting women who are valuable to my life. More, a covenant is an eternal bond that is stronger than bad choices. For example, I know a guy whose wife stuck with him while he was an alcoholic banging other women all throughout the first few years of their marriage. (Not saying that is right, but it is a testament to the power of pair bonding.)
5. (This one doesn't change, I just need to decide and accept it.) What I am asking of myself here is to become a certain kind of man and to adopt a certain kind of lifestyle. It carries more responsibilities, rewards, and risks, and it will also require much more of me. So in spite of any difficulties or hassles involved, I need to decide if this is who I truly am, and what I really want to do with my life? If so, then I need to get to it and deal with whatever is involved and stop sitting around griping and worrying about it. I know men who've done this before and they came out fine, and I know other men who have had their lives ruined. I can learn from their examples.

Closing Statements

Here, I don't mean to say that men should "Man Up and marry dem hoez." Far from it.

This is just one technique that can help men suss out incongruent beliefs and other self-limiting mental cognitions that foster the doubts and fears that keep a man locked in a state of confusion, frustration, and inaction.

The real challenge here is NOT how to attract a girl, but how to overcome your self-limiting fears of actually getting what you want, solidify your Internal Locus of Control, and bolster your confidence. This has many benefits in life, NOT just in dating.

Of course, getting your Inner Game together is necessary but insufficient. Making these adjustments in one's attitude may NOT automatically attract a hovering cyclone of unicorns — but for a small subset of men, it might. I'll leave it to the reader to know whether this is you, or not.

Related

- Σ Frame: Onlookers, or Overcomers? (2009/11/6)
- Σ Frame: How to ward off Self-Deception (2010/6/15)
- Σ Frame: Taking Headship by Force (2021/5/26)
- Σ Frame: The History and Current Value of Vetting (2023/9/2)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Envy (2024/1/24)
- Σ Frame: Overcoming the Spiritual-Sexual Poverty Mentality (2025/2/24)
- Σ Frame: We always know the right thing to do after the right time to do it has passed. (2025/2/26)
- Σ Frame: Identity (2025/2/28)
- Σ Frame: Is Loneliness a bug, or an intrinsic feature of the male experience? (2025/3/3)
- Σ Frame: The 'IT' Factor (2025/3/7)

Faith and Authority

Jack · 29 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Faith is an expression of a man's trust in an authority — either Worldly or Heavenly.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Intro

I have received some criticism, both online and through private email correspondence, that I have placed too much emphasis on authority and not enough on faith and/or scripture.

In this essay, I'll explain my stance on this in very simple terms, maybe too simple, but this is intended to help readers latch on to the larger, metaphysical concept.

The next post will address some specific criticisms.

The Connection between Faith and Authority

Faith, trust, and confidence are 3 facets of the same thing. Faith is the metaphysical, trust is the relational, and confidence is the expression.

Faith is the perception of, a reverence for, and a trust in, a power that is beyond one's self, and is greater than one's self. Christians recognize this power to ultimately be of the Lord (Matthew 28:18). But simple faith in a larger entity can also take other forms, e.g. cultural norms, ecclesiastical authorities, governing powers, social systems, a human structure of authority, etc. The sturdiness of faith depends on the power that it subscribes to, and the strength of one's belief in that power.

Every instance of faith described in the Bible is characterized as an appeal to, or a reliance on, a higher authority, be it God the Father, Jesus, the Holy Spirit, the scriptures, or someone in a position of power.

Christian Faith is recognizing the Lord's hand behind every event, past, present, and future, as an expression of His omniscient will and His love for those He calls His own.

Ultimately, one's response to either personal experiences or worldly events, no matter how evil or unpleasant, boils down to one's faith in the Lord.

Just as it requires faith to submit to an authority, it also requires faith to exert authority.

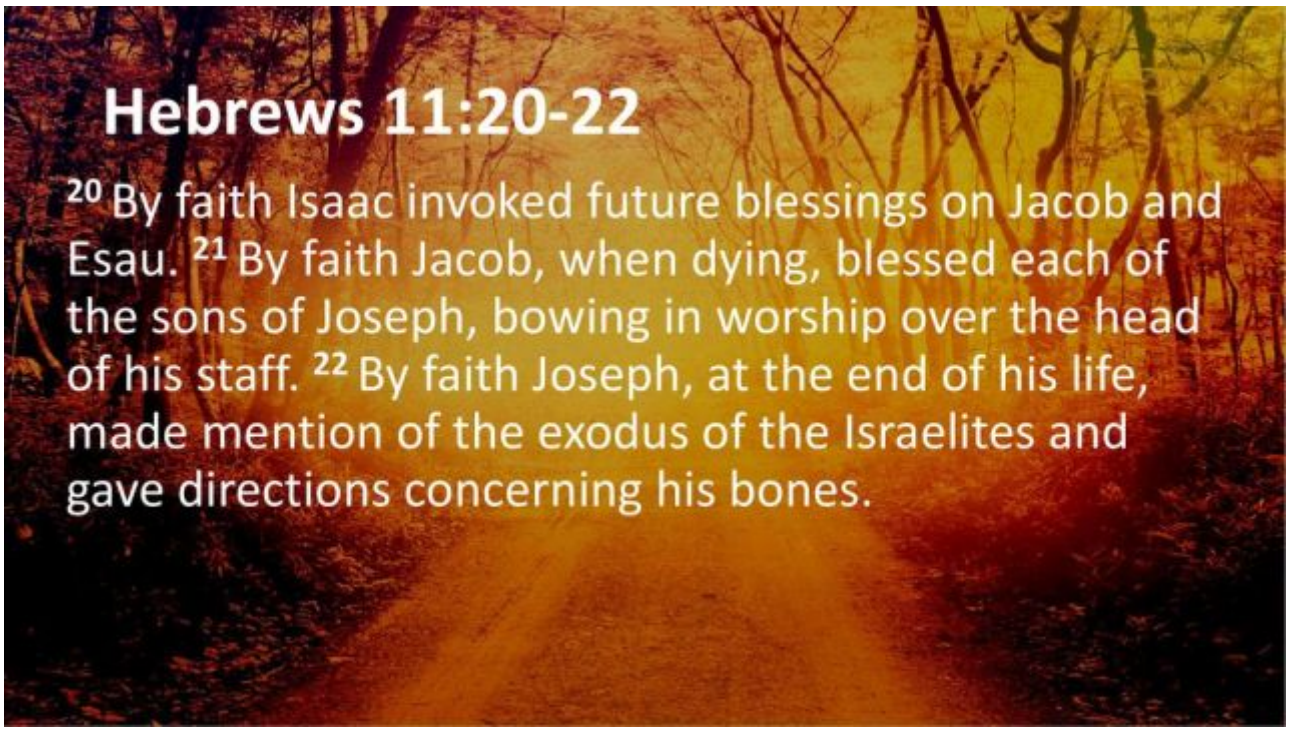
In summary, Faith and some type of Authority go hand in hand. You can't have one without the other.

Scripture References

Here are a few passages of scripture that have shaped my views.

Faith in the Power of God's Authority

First of all, there is St. Paul's description of Faith in Hebrews 11. It is not explicitly mentioned, but all the people listed in this passage placed their Faith in the Power of God and submitted themselves to His authority over their lives. Some of them also exerted authority over their own lives and that of their relatives.



Second, Jesus' commended a centurion for having greater faith than any Israelite living at that time. So this passage deserves attention.

> [5] And when Jesus had entered into Capernaum, there came unto Him a centurion, beseeching Him [6] and saying, "Lord, my servant lieth at home sick with the palsy and grievously tormented."
>
> [7] And Jesus said unto him, "I will come and heal him."
>
> [8] The centurion answered and said, "Lord, I am not worthy that Thou shouldest come under my roof. But speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed. [9] For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me. And I say to this man, 'Go!' and he goeth; and to another, 'Come!' and he cometh; and to my servant, 'Do this!' and he doeth it."
>
> [10] When Jesus heard it, He marveled and said to those who followed, "Verily I say unto you, I have not found such great faith, no, not in Israel.
>
> Matthew 8:5-10 (KJ21)

Faith is demonstrated in asking a higher power for help, believing that he can and will actually help, and will not use the revelation of your need / weakness to take advantage of your vulnerability. In a word, Trust.

Faith is shown through envisioning an outcome and accepting responsibility for whatever may happen when giving directives to others, with the full confidence that they will respect your authority and will do as you ask, which is a gesture of mutual faith on their part.

Faith recognizes that certain things are under the power and authority of individuals acting as trustees of the Lord (whether they are believers or not), with some things being under your own control, and other things under the control of others.

Faith imparts the understanding that we all must depend upon each other to obtain the things we want or need, and that we must ask others, and cooperate with others for it to happen. Financial institutions, marketing, trade, and whole economies and societies are built on this faith.

Faith in Civil Authorities

> [1] Let every person be subject to the governing authorities. For there is no authority except from God, and those that exist have been instituted by God. [2] Therefore whoever resists the authorities resists what God has appointed, and those who resist will incur judgment. [3] For rulers are not a terror to good conduct, but to bad. Would you have no fear of the one who is in authority? Then do what is good, and you will receive his approval, [4] for he is God's servant for your good. But if you do wrong, be afraid, for he does not bear the sword in vain. For he is the servant of God, an avenger who carries out God's wrath on the wrongdoer. [5] Therefore one must be in subjection, not only to avoid God's wrath but also for the sake of conscience. [6] For because of this you also pay taxes, for the authorities are ministers of God, attending to this very thing. [7] Pay to all what is owed to them: taxes to whom taxes are owed, revenue to whom revenue is owed, respect to whom respect is owed, honor to whom honor is owed.
>
> Romans 13:1-7 (ESV)

Faith is shown in trusting that the laws and statutes instituted by the government are going to preserve your family, your life, livelihood, and what you have accumulated in life, and prevent the nation from descending into anarchy, and that by obeying them, you're doing your part to avoid that chaos.

Faith is shown in believing that doing good will be accepted, maybe even rewarded if it is exceptional, and will NOT be unjustly penalized, and that bad conduct will be disciplined and/or punished accordingly.

Faith is shown in believing that the tax money you pay to the government is going to be used to support and defend your country in some practical way, thereby benefiting you and every other citizen.

When you consider how the above gestures of faith in Uncle Sam are NOT consistently met with a just and proper recompense, it becomes more apparent why the U.S.A. is in decline.

Faith via Headship Authority

As described throughout scripture (Genesis 2:18-25; Genesis 3:16; 1 Corinthians 11:1-16; 1 Corinthians 14:33-38; Ephesians 5:22-33; Colossians 3:18; 1 Timothy 2:9-15; Titus 2:3-5; 1 Peter 3:1-6), God has ordained husbands to be the head of their wives and families.

Faith is shown when a married couple each sacrifices some of their personal sociosexual prerogatives to satisfy the needs of their spouse, and to have a functional, stable marriage that glorifies the Lord.

Faith is exercised when a husband trusts his wife to fulfill her marital vows, and NOT betray him, cuck him, divorce him, or suck him dry.

Faith is exhibited through a husband diligently loving his wife and leading her to spiritual maturity (Ephesians 5:25-27), in spite of all the hassles and sh!t tests she might dish out.

Faith is demonstrated when a wife obeys her husband as unto the Lord (Colossians 3:18; 1 Peter 3:1-6), knowing full well that he is sinful and capable of error, but that God will honor her submission and take care of them despite his flawed leadership.

Having this kind of faith in one's spouse is much easier, and perhaps is only possible, when both partners hold Authentic / Genuine / Sexual Authority over the other. In general, sin, especially sexual sin, erodes this authority within marriage, and in turn, faith and trust.

Do you see the connection between Faith, Trust, and Authority now? If not, then dwell upon your father's influence over your life, and you will see. Authoritative fathers produce confident children. Selah!

Fallacious Authorities

Several false authorities, principles, and powers lay hold over the modern World. Here, I'll mention a few of the most egregious.

The fallacy of feminism is twofold.

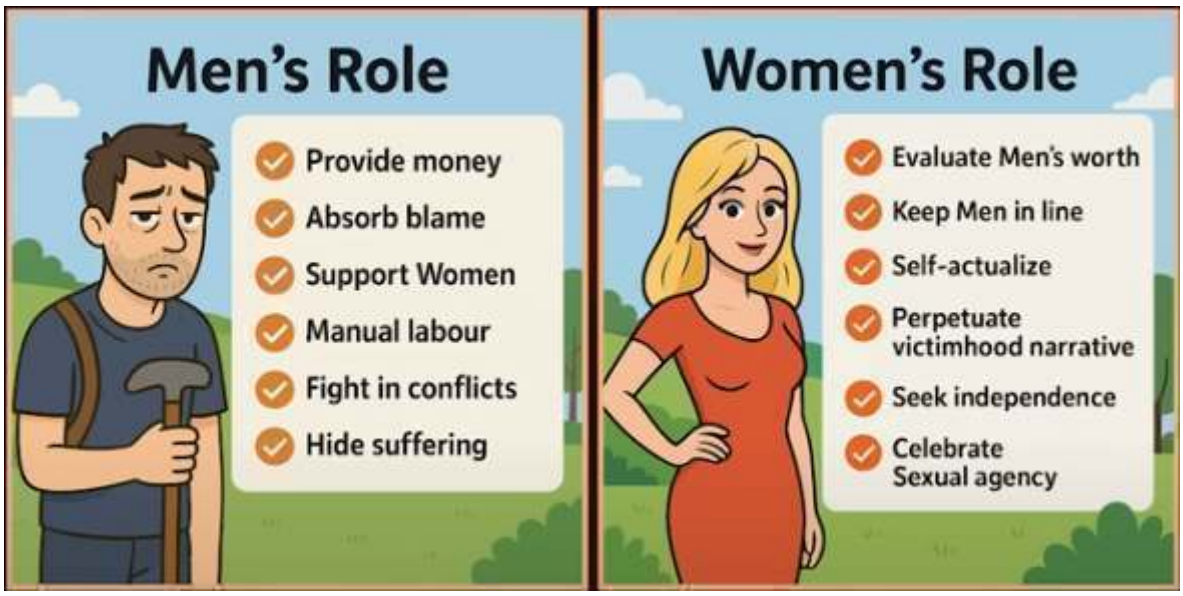
1. It asserts that men have no genuine authority over women (i.e. their wives, single daughters, and elderly widows in their care), and that if/when they do, it is misogynistic in nature.
2. It claims that women's fee fee feewings are a considerable force to be reckoned with, and that all men must bow and scrape to every feminine imperative, preference, and whim.

Essentially, Feminism is an inverted or ressentimented intersexual authority structure.

The fallacy of scientism is that it claims the authority of science as supreme while denying any and all other authorities, specifically those that are metaphysical / spiritual in nature.

The fallacy of modernism / postmodernism is that it claims the centrality of self (e.g. 'equality', individuality, etc.) as the supreme authority, thereby relegating truth to be relative, subjective, and personal, while denying any and all other authorities, especially those that oppose the vanity of essential convenience.

When we examine the authority structure of Egalitarianism, it fits postmodern values more than it fits the Biblical hierarchies it tries to deny. Complementarianism is essentially Egalitarianism with a nominal veneer of Headship (in order to deceptively pass it off as Christian).



Concluding Statements

The outstanding problem faced by men these days is that they are constantly tempted to abandon or relinquish their God ordained authority as men created in the image of God. Without this intimate familiarity with masculine authority and regular practice in the faithful exercise thereof, men's faith as well as their confidence is weakened, and their works of faith, if any extant, are rendered less effective, if at all. The whole of Feminism, as well as most current false doctrines and many half-baked teachings, are geared towards this end.

See these posts for more on this point.

- The Rational Male: Nursing Power (2013/11/25)
- Dalrock: She who must be obeyed. (2015/1/31)
- Dalrock: Her soul essence is your master, and sets the terms for oneness. (2018/3/5)
- Dalrock: She's the boss, you're a guest. (2018/3/27)
- Dalrock: Whose job is it to keep mama happy? (2018/11/2)
- Dalrock: Feminism is the parasitic passenger chivalry longs for. (2019/1/2)
- Dalrock: Hail to the V. (2019/1/7)
- The Power Moves: How Women Control Men: The Secret Psychology of Relationship Power (2020/8/9)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Complementarians are Effeminate! (2020/11/9)
- Σ Frame: The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)
- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- Σ Frame: Men's Altruistic Idealism in an Age of Apostasy (2023/7/28)
- Σ Frame: The Philosophical Basis of Secularized Altruism (2023/7/31)
- Σ Frame: The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)
- Σ Frame: Biblical Masculinity vs Worldly Masculinity (2024/4/10)
- Σ Frame: The Stronghold of the Beta Factory (2024/9/2)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)
- Σ Frame: A True Heresy (2025/3/19)
- Σ Frame: 8 Deterrences to Domain (2025/8/15)
- Σ Frame: Putting the Noahic Covenant into Perspective (2025/8/25)

Related

- Σ Frame: God's Silence During Suffering (2009/12/14)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): What is the Authority of the Bible, and why is this Important? (2020/11/12)
- Σ Frame: More on Relational Archetypes (2020/11/28)
- Σ Frame: The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10)
- Σ Frame: Hierarchy of Authority (2023/4/12)
- Σ Frame: The Captain and First Mate Analogy (2023/4/24)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment (2023/6/9)
- Σ Frame: Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10)
- Σ Frame: The Archetype of Father as God (2023/6/27)
- Σ Frame: Invisible Magic Authority (2023/12/13)
- Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority (2024/1/10)
- Σ Frame: What is the Spiritual Power of Authority? (2024/1/11)
- Σ Frame: The Vacancy of Authority (2024/3/4)
- Σ Frame: Lessons from the Game of Chess (2025/1/1)
- Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)

Addressing Criticisms of Faith and Authority

Jack · 30 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Faith is difficult without an authority in place.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 850 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

A few readers have mentioned that I emphasize authority too heavily. Maybe so, but I believe this is what is missing in today's culture, so it needs to be emphasized. If you're the type of man who already has a firm grasp of authority over his life, then maybe these posts are not for you.

The previous post, Faith and Authority (2025/8/29), explained my understanding of Authority as it relates to Faith. In a nutshell, Faith and Authority go hand in hand. You can't have one without the other.

This post addresses specific criticisms related to this topic.

Responses to Criticisms

> "[Among those opposed to Patriarchy, The Manosphere, and The Red Pill,] there is a general aversion to authority, headship, organized religion, and true conservatism. This is no coincidence, as the recognition of hierarchy is an important hallmark of The Red Pill (and Christian faith). In fact, this aversion to authority / Headship is what clued me in to this as being a central tenet of The Red Pill, as I explained in a previous post, Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28). It is also worth mentioning that trust in authority is central to faith — our trust in God."
>
> Σ Frame: Red Pill Bad! (2024/7/20)

1. The Central Importance of Authority

One reader said to Jack,

> "You cannot see anything outside the frame of authority and authoritarianism, can you?"

As I stated in the previous post, trust in authority is central to faith. The recognition of authority is foundational to faith. Below are more examples of how this plays out.

2. The Authority of Manosphere Personalities

IMO, blogs are primarily a forum for sharing and discussing ideas. Regular writers are able to establish a voice of authority by virtue of their reputation, based on their regular contributions and the value of the content. The value of their contributions is often determined by whether it is accurate, believable, relevant, reliable, truthful, and trustworthy, thereby inspiring confidence and faith in readers.

Blogs are less valuable for providing accountability and personal instruction, because the authority of the participants is based on the value of their writings, and NOT as one who has the power to enforce discipline and order.

There are two exceptions.

1. Blog hosts are able to exercise a little more authority than readers via writing posts and screening comments.
2. Participants may be willingly inclined to take a certain person's comments to heart. This form of philosophical trust often hinges on the reputation of that person's writings, as described above.

Other than these two caveats, it is not reasonable to expect a netizen to submit to another netizen's purported authority.

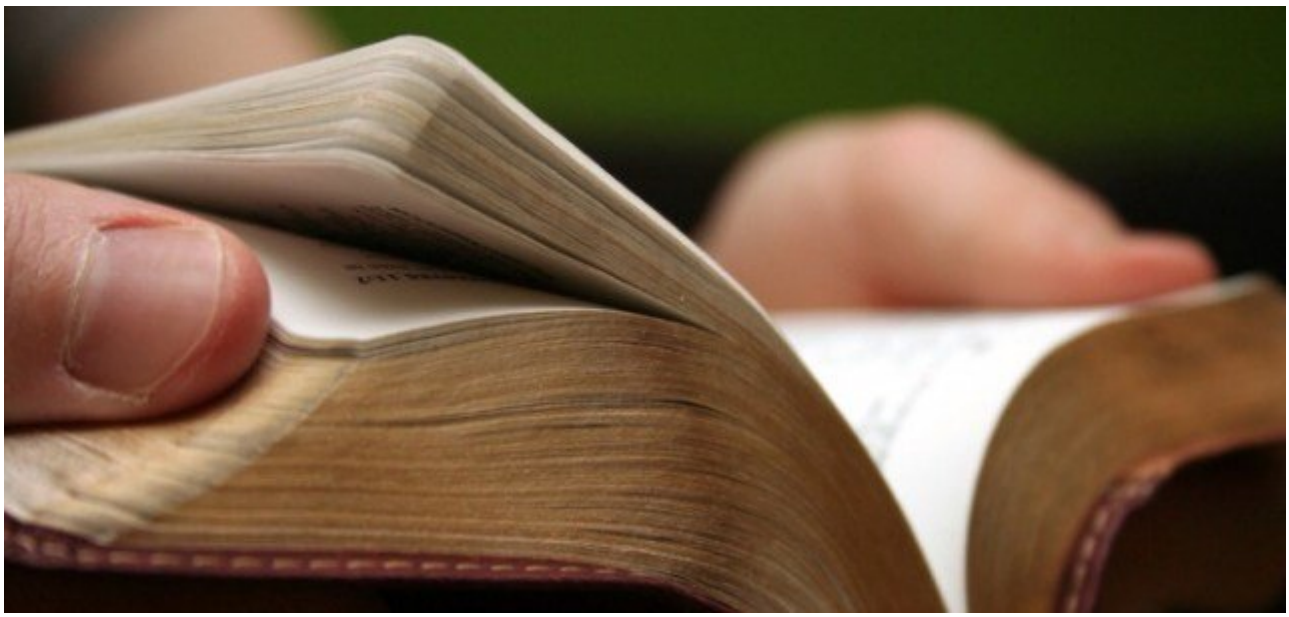
3. The Authority of Scripture

Christians, especially Western Evangelical Protestants, often cite the Bible as an authority and will usually combine this with an appeal to logic.

For example, here's one comment that seeks to establish a common authority of scripture and logic.

> "…first I need to know if you accept the Bible as the inerrant and sole word of God? Because I will cite scripture, and if you hold a different axiom, then there is no point in my doing so."

A mutually recognized authority must be in place for any further dialogue to commence, whether it is scripture, or an ecclesiastical authority, or the word of an expert, or a scientific research article, or something else. Without first establishing a mutually recognized authority (the Bible in the above case), we cannot have an argument in good Faith. This is another example of how Faith and Authority go hand in hand.



4. The Authority of the Church

Recently, in the sphere, there has been some discussion about discipline within the church, specifically the procedures outlined in Matthew 18.

Matthew 18 is filled with references to authority, with the primary point being to recognize the authority of Jesus Christ (e.g. by humbling one's self as a little child, by receiving the Lord's forgiveness and forgiving others in turn, etc.). Several of these verses charge us to recognize the authority of Christ in our relationships with others (i.e., through forgiveness).

As a case in point, one blogger stated that a commenter should be subject to the authority of his church in order to resolve a dispute between them. But the problem with this approach is that Matthew 18 is not applicable for two reasons.

1. Matthew 18 is intended to resolve interpersonal conflicts between two fellow believers within a church, NOT to govern philosophical debates on blog forums.
2. Neither of them attends the same church, and so there is no single church authority over both of them.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): What is the Authority of the Bible, and why is this Important? (2020/11/12)
- Σ Frame: More on Relational Archetypes (2020/11/28)
- Σ Frame: Hierarchy of Authority (2023/4/12)
- Σ Frame: The Captain and First Mate Analogy (2023/4/24)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment (2023/6/9)
- Σ Frame: Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10)
- Σ Frame: The Archetype of Father as God (2023/6/27)
- Σ Frame: Invisible Magic Authority (2023/12/13)
- Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority (2024/1/10)
- Σ Frame: What is the Spiritual Power of Authority? (2024/1/11)
- Σ Frame: Lessons from the Game of Chess (2025/1/1)
- Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)

Authority in Suffering

Jack · 31 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Suffering imparts a unique contextual authority.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

A previous post, Faith and Authority (2025/8/29), explained my understanding of Authority as it relates to Faith. In summary, various expressions of Faith are built on an Authority of some type and cannot very well exist without it.

Faith and Authority can also be obtained through suffering.

This post will examine a couple of relevant issues related to this.

Over the past couple of years, some authors and commenters at the Σ Frame blog have been criticized for being primarily motivated to avoid suffering. The nature of these accusations have implied that this is essentially cowardice, or a vain attempt at maintaining a Comfort Zone or self-preservation in place of obeying the Lord and sharing in His sufferings (1 Peter 4:13).

For example, one blogger said,

> "Anonymity is a falsehood. Lying—sinning—to protect yourself is never justified. There are alternatives to lying that accomplish the same goal of protection. Those are permitted. Anonymity is not.
>
> Moreover, to be persecuted and insulted is to seek reward, rejoicing, and gladness: the very kingdom of heaven."

I will address the first statement in the last section below.

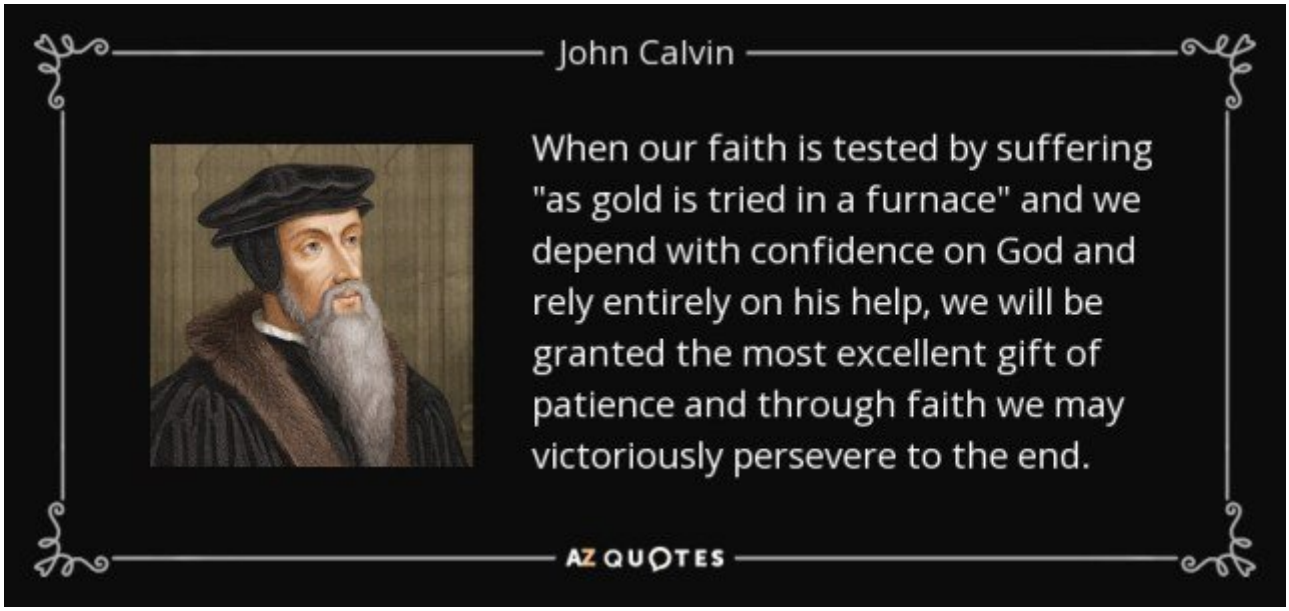
Concerning the latter statement, while this is true, it is NOT the whole truth. I'll cover this in the next section.

Understanding the Purpose of Suffering

Oftentimes, suffering is unavoidable, but sometimes it is simply the natural result of a decision or a habit, either good or bad. While suffering can build character and lead to glory, it can also lead to bitterness, unbelief, hell, and ruin. This potential negative outcome of suffering has been understated. Omitting this possibility does not grant men the freedom to choose that form of suffering which is beneficial to the Kingdom of God.

One of the many purposes of this blog is to help men understand the causes and the nature of suffering, and to determine if a particular form of suffering might be redemptive or not. In The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10), I spelled out 5 different sources of suffering for men to know which type of suffering they are enduring and whether it is truly necessary for one's spiritual growth and/or the advancement of His Kingdom. If so, then by all means, share in the Lord's glory. Let that suffering build character, determination, and perseverance within your soul. Rest assured that your suffering has value. But if not, then it is only slowing you down, sucking your energy, sapping your potential, and delaying the fulfillment of your purpose.

Persecution and suffering only carry eternal rewards when one is trusting in the Authority of the Lord, NOT in one's efforts in the flesh, or the authority of one's own identity, or others' recognition of one's identity. Instead, we must identify with Christ's sufferings.



Suffering Anonymously

As I stated in the previous post, blogs are primarily a forum for sharing and discussing ideas and viewpoints. A good many of the ideas expressed in the Manosphere are born out of suffering. It is as though every kernel of wisdom must be bought with blood. Personally, I believe many such men have suffered in this way for the Kingdom. Indeed, society is now closer to the Kingdom than it was 5 or 10 years ago, in spite of the continuing decline.

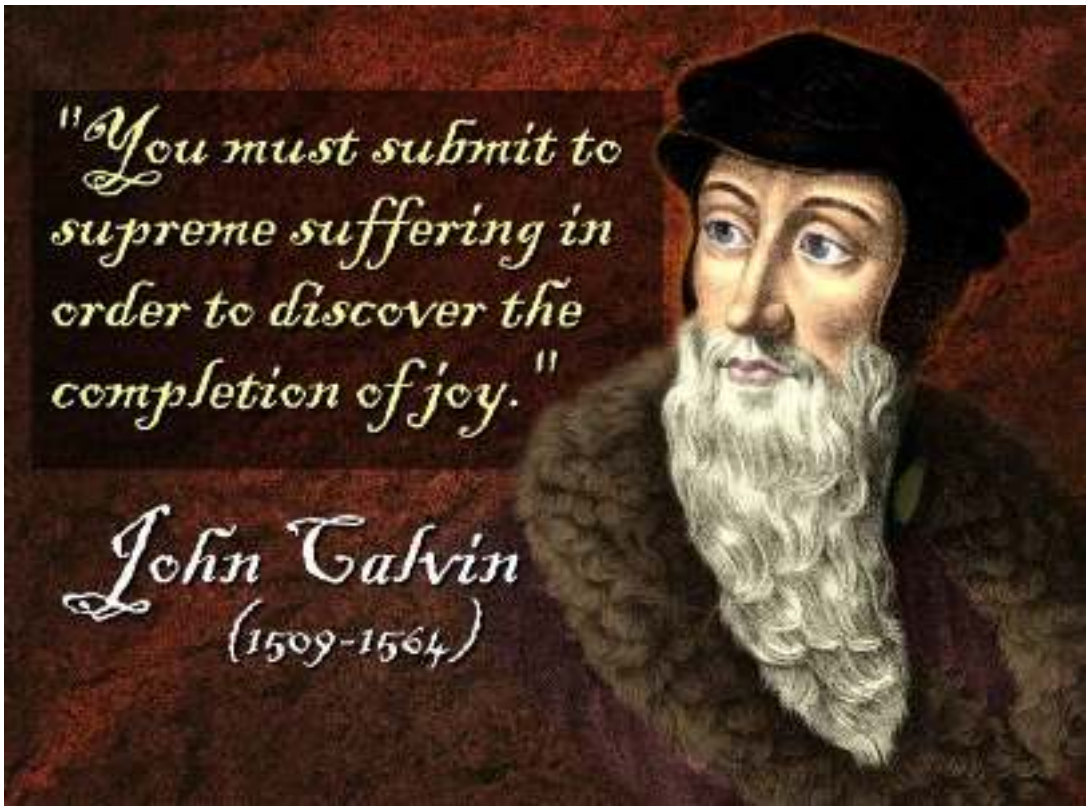
Some Manospherians voice provocative and unpopular perspectives for the edification of others — perspectives containing uncomfortable truths that were bought and purchased via personal suffering. Some such netizens choose anonymity to avoid or contain the harmful variety of suffering that may result from sharing the fruits of their past sufferings. This type of suffering is experienced as persecution for stating the truth, and it is often just as detrimental as it is beneficial, or even more so depending on the man.

A few individuals are deeply bothered by the anonymity of participants in blog discourse. One such person asked,

> "By what means can Jesus' instructions in Matthew 18 be implemented when the people involved are anonymous?"

As I stated in the previous post, Matthew 18 is intended to resolve interpersonal conflicts between two fellow believers within a church, NOT to govern philosophical debates on blog forums. Also, anonymity does not remove a believer from under Christ's Authority, nor does it detract from the value of his writings. The truth speaks for itself, no matter who is saying it. Anonymity only removes one from being subject to non-Christ-like authorities.

Complaining about anonymity is a non sequitur in terms of dialogue. Besides, how does effectively doxxing one's self and potentially cancelling one's self glorify the Lord?



Conclusions

Going back to the issue of why men choose to avoid suffering, and why other men chastize them for their decision in this, let's ask ourselves a few revealing questions.

1. What man has the authority to ask another man to willingly suffer?
2. By what authority does one speak or claim to have when exhorting others to suffer in a particular manner?
3. Is this exhortation done under the Lord's authority, or is it an appeal to false guilt — which is a form of w!tchcr@ft?
4. Is the man who is encouraging another man to suffer acting in the capacity of a responsible and trustworthy mentor to that man?
5. Will the man who advises another man to suffer stand by that man when suffering comes?

I believe only those men who have already suffered, who have carried the Cross of this Age, and have paid the cost, truly possess the prerequisite authority for exhorting other men to suffer in a similar manner (2 Corinthians 1). Having suffered and died on the cross, Christ has this authority (Matthew 28:18), and also certain men to a lesser extent in proportion to their own sufferings.

IME, men who have suffered for righteousness are NOT in the habit of idly asking other men to do the same, but rather support those who are already suffering. Stating that Christian men are to share in Christ's sufferings is theologically correct, but asking or expecting other men to willingly suffer in ways that one has not done himself is hypocrisy.

Let us recall Lexet's Axiom, AKA Σ Frame Axiom 41: "People who are obsessed about anonymous writers online want to silence them." I also believe such men are suffering from acute envy, although they remain ignorant of the associated sufferings that accompany the things envied.

Related

- Σ Frame: God's Silence During Suffering (2009/12/14)
- Σ Frame: The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment (2023/6/9)
- Σ Frame: Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10)
- Σ Frame: The Archetype of Father as God (2023/6/27)
- Σ Frame: Invisible Magic Authority (2023/12/13)
- Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority (2024/1/10)
- Σ Frame: What is the Spiritual Power of Authority? (2024/1/11)
- Σ Frame: The Red Pill 2.0: Analyzing Metacognitions and Identifying Critical Problems (2024/7/31)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Σ Frame: Lessons from the Game of Chess (2025/1/1)
- Σ Frame: On Seriousness-ness (2025/3/17)
- Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)

Nuances of the Eternal

Jack · 1 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

"Forever and Ever" is more than an infinite span of time.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

In Fate vs Self-Awareness (2025/8/27), I wrote,

> "a covenant is an eternal bond that is stronger than bad choices."

Sharkly responded,

> "If we're talking about marriage, it is not eternal, as Jesus explained to the Sadducees. Marriage is a one-flesh covenant that is permanently parted by death. When churchian simps talk about foolishness like being "soulmates", they are just deluding themselves and anybody who listens to them."

I agree with Sharkly's points. The first refers to Jesus' description of marriage in Matthew 22:23-33, Mark 12:18-27, and Luke 20:27-40. Oscar dissected Sharkly's second point in The Soul Mate Myth (2021/2/3).

Our disagreement lies in my own nuanced concepts of the words 'eternal' and 'soul'. Here, I'll go over this to clear up any confusion this has created among readers.

Eternal means NOT a Function of Time

Most people think of 'eternal' as a synonym for an infinite length of time, meaning "Forever and ever, Amen".

As a person who has studied physics (including relativity) and mathematics extensively, my understanding of 'eternal' is that it describes something that is independent of, or NOT affected by, the passage of time. I've found this concept of 'eternal' to be more universally accurate and useful, compared to the common concept.

Thus, "Forever and ever, Amen" is just one context of 'eternal'.

The steadfast, unchanging, and yet ever-changing nature of God is another. God only appears to change when we view Him and His work within a human time frame. God doesn't change, but we do, over time. So to us, God may appear to change.

The Bible, which is more than ~2,000 years old, continues to be a best-seller because it is stocked full of Truths that are unaffected by the passage of time. IOW, it is 'eternal', and that is precisely why it continues to be relevant.

The persuasive power of Mythos is that it reaches into the eternal. This is why fairy tales and cultural lore endure for centuries, even after the cultural contexts described therein have passed into history. The passage of time changes the language of this lore more than it changes the meaning.

Another instance of our contact with the eternal is shown in certain relationships that are NOT affected by the passage of time. For example, you may not see an old friend for years. But when you get together, it seems like it has only been a week since you last saw each other. That is what I call an "eternal friendship".

Marriage is also like this. It has an 'eternal', sublime quality that doesn't change with the passage of time. If you happen to have a good marriage, that doesn't change much over the years, and if you have a bad one, that doesn't change much either, unfortunately.

Eternal Soul Mates

The 'soulmates' idea is foolish because it imagines that having one is what makes marriage fulfilling, and/or that it can be used as a guide or an inspiration for finding the so-called "right person". The truth is that anyone you have sex with or marry will become your "eternal soulmate" ('eternal' as described above), where the soul includes the fleshly nature of a person (1 Corinthians 6:12-20).

This eternal quality of marriage is precisely why marital sex becomes boring for many people. We usually refer to this condition as (over) 'familiarity'. Therefore, having an "eternal soulmate" is actually rather UNfulfilling, truth be told, simply because the excitement surrounding sex and procreation is strongly dependent on timing, past experiences, and one's life phase. IOW, it is a function of time (via biology), which makes it NOT 'eternal', per my definition. This agrees with Sharkly's point.

Furthermore, by resisting accountability and/or commitment via abortion, lying, secrecy, and what we call 'branch swinging' or 'serial monogamy', etc., women are essentially avoiding the UNfulfilling aspects of their eternal relationships that are formed through their sexual liaisons and/or marriages. These UNfulfilling aspects include…

- Emotion Work.
- Daily marital duties and other responsibilities to one's partner.
- Self-Control, i.e. the loss of Validation which is about Losing Self-Control.
- The erosion of the FEAR dynamic, which is addictively enthralling to women.

- The ennui of getting along with another human being day after day (e.g. husband, children, and extended family members).
- Being fully known by another person, which removes the element of mystery that is greatly cherished by females, and the novelty of sexual variety enjoyed by males.

As it is said around the sphere, "Women want to GET married, but they don't want to BE married", which is another way of saying that women want the benefits and joys of an eternal union, but they don't want the boredom, burdens, and responsibilities thereof. Unfortunately, the immediate benefits and the most intense joys tend to come up front, being linked to NON-eternal sexual interactions, and then fade over time. Yet, the 'eternal' familiar knowledge of each other (in the Biblical sense) remains.

This is also true for men too, in similar yet different ways.

Epilogue

Going back to my earlier statement,

> "a covenant is an eternal bond that is stronger than bad choices."

It should now be clear to readers that the permanent familiarity imparted via sex and marriage survives bad choices. I'll add that this 'eternal' quality doesn't necessarily ameliorate the felt consequences of bad choices, and might even render those bad choices even less tolerable.

When we consider how Jesus set us free from the eternal consequences of sin, it means that he broke the bonds of our old, sinful, eternal state to form a new eternal state in union with Himself. This means that His grace permits us to repent, change our ways, and grow out of our sinful habits over time. IOW, the process of regeneration is NOT eternal, but it results in an eternal state of glory.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Eternal Fate of Carousel Riders (2018/5/30)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Soul Mate Myth (2021/2/3)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Juxtaposing the Temporal and the Eternal (2021/4/26)
- Σ Frame: How to be Happy, No, Really (2024/4/19)
- Σ Frame: Paradigms of Faith (2024/4/22)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- The Orthosphere (Kristor): Divine Simplicity & Singularity from Incompleteness of Any Mere Plurality (2025/8/28)
- Radix Fidem: The Book of Life (2025/8/30)
- Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)

The Age Old Question of Authority

Jack · 3 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The church, faith, scripture, tradition… To which shall we ascribe all our intellectual fealty?

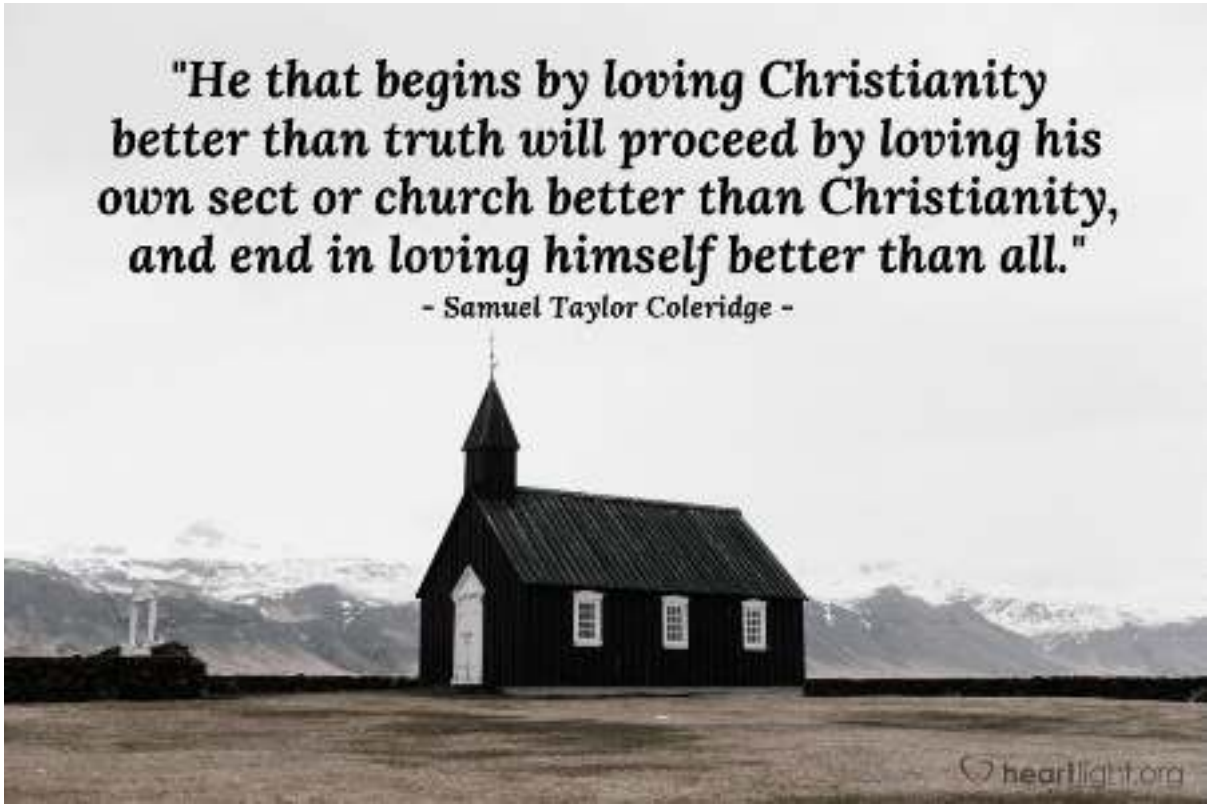
Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Community / Free Speech / Metacognitions / Sectarianism / Awareness and Introspection
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

What to Believe?

John the Fool wrote,

> "My concern is that the Bible is mainly read and understood from a culture / worldview that is foreign to the text and therefore distorts it. Reason is assumed to be arbiter of truth even though Paul says that the things of God are spiritually discerned (1 Corinthians 2:14).

> I am wondering if the Bible really is as important as Protestants made it to be in reaction to Romanism. It now stands as a mediator / priest if you will between the believer and God when we have the author of the book dwelling within us who will lead us into all the truth we actually need for our purpose in the Lord.
>
> As important as the Bible is to me, my faith is not ultimately in it because from my studies of Hebrew and other things, I have found that we actually do not know what many of the words mean and the culture / worldview of its authors is so far removed from ours."



To which Oscar replied,

> "Let's rely on what everyone subjectively believes the Holy Spirit is telling them with no objective standard by which to judge what everyone subjectively believes. What could possibly go wrong? I mean, it's not as if > anyone's ever tried that before. Right?"

Let's take this line of thought further. Now ask yourself…

Is it better to rely on what everyone subjectively believes the Bible is telling them with no objective standard by which to judge what everyone subjectively interprets? This is exactly what has happened within Protestantism, resulting in hundreds of denominations.

Is it better to rely on what everyone subjectively believes the church is telling them and rely on the church to be the objective standard by which to judge what everyone subjectively believes? This is exactly what has happened within Catholicism, resulting in all kinds of abuses as well as the Protestant Reformation.

What to believe?

Ultimately, this comes down to the question of authority. What authority should be used to aid one's personal discernment in judging the authenticity, the meaning, and/or the faithful application of any revelation?

Do you trust these guys to lead you to your eternal salvation?

Apostolic Authority

It appears that most modern Christians are wholly unaware of this, but this is a question that has been pressed and debated for centuries. It's a looong debate that I won't go into here.

Church fathers and tradition have identified 7 sources of authority.

1. Sola Fide ("by faith alone")
2. Sola Gratia ("by grace alone")
3. Solus Christus ("Christ alone")
4. Sola Ecclesia ("the Church alone")
5. Sola Scriptura ("by Scripture alone")
6. Soli Deo Gloria ("glory to God alone")
7. Sola Caritas ("Charitable love alone")

In some discussions, “Sola” (meaning only) is substituted with “Fidem” (faithful to) or “Prima” (foremost or primary), thereby providing more wiggle room.

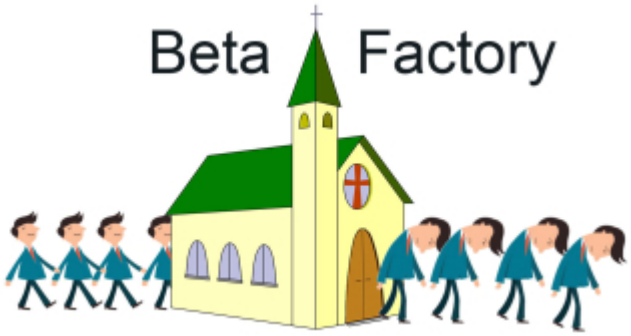
In general, the Catholic Church abides by Sola Ecclesia and flatly condemns all others as heretical. Protestantism reveres Sola Scriptura and condemns all others as more or less heretical. The Orthodox Church takes a varied stance with Prima Scriptura. According to my knowledge, Radix Fidem strongly encourages us to become more familiar with Prima Fide and to be well aware of the others as worthy of consideration.

Even so, most all modern Western commentaries, no matter which sect, want to attach logic and ¡ScIeNcE! as a necessary filter / tool for interpretation [Example]. The Bible (St. Paul especially) refers to this as Hellenization, a nod to Greek philosophy (from which we get the English word ‘hell’). So we might as well add an eighth: Sola / Prima Sophos. Others prioritize domestic peace, harmony, and unity, so there’s Sola / Prima Koine. I often see another, which I’ll call Sola Stoicus, AKA “Doubting Thomas” or “sit on my @ss and criticize everything as inferior or problematic”. (I made these 3 terms up.)

IMHO, one should consider ALL of these views when reflecting upon his Maker and his purpose for living, including the 3 I added, as well as a healthy dose of introspection and prayer. Personally, I believe God uses different sources of authority to speak to individual men, so it’s worth identifying which one that is for you. (I’m NOT saying “pick and choose”, I’m saying pay attention to how God speaks to you and how He works with you.) For me, there was a time in my life when confusion over scripture caused me to stumble, and I spent a few years searching for how to recover my faith. (Click on the links to read more.) So I’ve found that I need to concentrate on that which reinforces my faith (i.e. Prima Fide and Fidem Scriptura). This is partly what attracts me to Radix Fidem.

Conclusions

St. Paul addressed the question of authority in 1 Corinthians 1:18-25, and concluded that the ultimate authority is in the gospel of Christ crucified and the power of God. For all the talk about church tradition, doctrine, scriptures, faith, etc., where do we see Christ crucified? Where is the power of God?



IMHO, most people, even Christians, don't even know what that is or what it looks like.

May the good Lord grant you the most excellent discernment that may dispel all doubts as to the authenticity of an authority.

Related

- The Mainframe: Post-Modernist Religion (2022/10/7)
- Σ Frame: Apostolic Apostasy (2023/6/16)
- Σ Frame: Ecumenical Translations (2023/6/18)
- Σ Frame: Meta Cognitions (2023/6/23)
- Christian Publishing House: Aren't the Gospels the Product of Greek Thinking? (2023/10/12)
- Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)
- Catacomb Resident: Two Things (2026/2/7)

Why is Eastern Orthodoxy more attractive to Men than Protestantism?

Jack · 5 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Understanding the reasons for the apocalyptic attrition from Evangelicalism.

Readership: All
Theme: Validation; Awareness and Introspection;
Author's Note: The contents of this essay were submitted through several emails from Tubal Cain on 2025/9/2-4. Compiled and edited by Jack.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Foreword from Jack

Apparently, some readers are still not seeing why young American men are drawn to Eastern Orthodoxy. This post will spell it out in greater detail.

Intro

I'm a 67 year old American man who converted late in life to Christianity, being received into the Eastern Orthodox Church.

Since Covid, my little Antiochian parish has been bursting at the seams with growth. Our church adds on average at least 2-3 new members every week, and some weeks up to 5. We're building an addition to accommodate this.

They're all young men, some single, some married with children. Some were unaffiliated (Nones), some were atheists, some were pagans, but most are disaffected Evangelical Protestants.

I just returned from a week-long retreat in the Allegheny Mountains of western Pennsylvania. Over 200 clergy and laity were in attendance from parishes across the USA and Canada. They all report the same thing as my parish: explosive growth of young men and young families, mostly coming from Evangelicalism.

The Greek, Russian, and Serbian parishes here, and all the Orthodox jurisdictions are seeing this across the USA. Same for the TLM Roman Catholic parish, and the Eastern Rite Catholic parish here are seeing this as well.

I've been sharing this news with Jack since mid May of this year through an email exchange. He asked me to write a summary of why there are so many people leaving Evangelicalism for Orthodoxy.

I currently have the honor of serving as the director of outreach in my parish. I'm the person who gets all the letters and emails from inquisitive seekers and visitors. I'm the one who welcomes all the newcomers to our church. So I hear it all.

I'll address this from what I know that's been shared with me, which is a lot.

Why is Eastern Orthodoxy More Attractive to Men than Evangelical Protestantism?

The modern Evangelical environment, including Southern Baptist Churches, is perceived as being overly focused on emotional experiences, cultural trends, or political issues. Worship services are like rock concerts, all for show and with no reverence for holiness; sermons are “comedy club preaching”, lacking depth or historical continuity, while other sermons are comparable to TED Talks, full of interesting information having no practical use.

Newcomers describe growing up in churches that prioritized simple messages and straightforward “rules”, but found these to be dry, superficial routines lacking any awareness of the purpose. Younger individuals have conveyed various bad experiences and disappointments, perceived hypocrisy on issues like sexual morality, or a lack of accountability in non-denominational settings. Meanwhile, more culturally trendy topics dominated the discussions.

This confusing juxtaposition led them not to take church very seriously.

The Southern Baptist Convention, in particular, has faced high-profile controversies like sexual abuse scandals and leadership failures, leading to disillusionment, distrust, and exits. One young man stated in many words that the world is chaotic and constantly changing, and their Southern Baptist church is not much different. Worse, it is always trying to stay on top of this chaos and “catch up”, which is backwards. He was searching for a place to “plant roots”, and so he needed a church that also had strong “roots”.

This points to the general appeal of Orthodoxy, which is viewed as offering a clear hierarchical structure, biblical authority, and answers to spiritual questions, such as the process of spiritual maturity, mysticism, and encounters with the demonic.

Many younger people raised Southern Baptist are leaving their churches for Eastern Orthodoxy because they're drawn to the reverence, stability, and rich spiritual practices of the Orthodox church. They're attracted to the long, unchanging traditions of the ancient church, which give them a sense of security and connection to a history that stretches back to antiquity. They desire a "High Church", having more profound teachings and insights, a structured leadership, and ancient worship practices.

Some young men are drawn to Orthodoxy because they see it as more 'masculine' and therefore a stronger expression of Christianity. They like the codified male-only leadership that is less susceptible to popular opinions, social forces, and cultural shifts. A few are honest enough to say that they're tired of their female-dominated churches that teach liberal doctrines and prioritize popular appeal over doctrinal rigor, and the boorish men who are always jumping to the steady drumbeat of these women's caprices.

On the surface, they're drawn to the beautiful, ornate Cathedrals that are typical of Orthodox churches, the timeless, sacred music, like Gregorian chants, the structured rituals that stand as unchanging bulwarks against modern culture, and the consistent liturgical seasons that provide times for fasting, praying, and also celebration.

On a deeper level, though, converts are looking for a faith that challenges them, not one that is greasy smooth and "easy to digest", like what most Protestant churches intentionally serve up. Instead, they want a focus on Christ-centered fellowship and worship services. They want the intellectual and theological depth offered by Orthodoxy. They value long, methodical catechisms that emphasize steadiness and spiritual development over quick conversions. They want a demanding regimen that details when and how to fast and how to pray. They desire a church that provides a place where they can regularly go to confession and not have to worry about it leading to gossip or a scandal. Instead of seeing these regimens as oppressive Puritanical legalism (as my generation did when I was younger), they see it as a much needed discipline and even an adventure!

What's Missing?

A common theme I'm hearing, particularly with the many young men and young families, is "something is missing …". Most new converts say, "Something is missing in my (Evangelical / Nondenominational / Southern Baptist …) church". I've also heard some say "something is missing" from what I'll summarize as American agnostic materialism.

The young men and the young families (young fathers) say they're seeking truth, tradition, rigidity, absolutes, and the fullness of faith. They say they're seeking a church with a heritage, a connection with the ancient historical Christian faith, and with the saints and church fathers. They're seeking a place that is masculine-friendly and where they're not expected to continually "reinvent themselves" and their faith. One convert explicitly said that he was looking for a faith tradition that felt very ancient but also fresh and new.

Another thing that I've seen is that young families (Millennials and Zoomers) are saying they have no friends, as young people their age who are not married and forming families are into hookup culture and binge drinking. They're finding friendships within the sacramental life of the church.

Moreover, younger people feel that modern Evangelical "Mega-Churches" lack the substance they expect from church.

Problematic Protestantism

Based on what I've heard, there are several reasons why Protestant Evangelicalism, and especially the SBC, is currently facing a major fallout.

Protestants will state that one can find the fullness of faith in their confessionals … that you don't need to go to Eastern Orthodoxy or TLM Roman Catholicism. (I'd include the Eastern Rite Catholics, the Coptic Christians.)

At the same time, these Protestants and especially Evangelicals intentionally de-emphasize church authority, tradition, and liturgy, but this has left young people feeling disconnected from the long history of Christianity and the time-tested spiritual disciplines it offers.

Also, young adults are alienated by the Southern Baptist Convention's strong association with so-called conservative politics. One man humorously remarked, "This church is not conservative enough to call themselves "conservatives"."

Men have mentioned the “separation of church and state” in the U.S. Constitution and questioned why Evangelicals do not recognize the Biblical injunction to obey civil authorities (Romans 13:1-7) in this matter. The general undertone is that when the church gets involved in politics, both are tainted. Jack covered this point too recently, describing it as part of the Noahic Covenant.

Another obvious issue is the rampant double-faced hypocrisy and the recent high-profile sex scandals that led to an investigation by the Department of Justice in 2022. That was the time when we saw an avalanche of new converts leaving SBC for Orthodoxy. There were so many in such a short time that the Orthodox Church of America conducted an extensive survey to assess the number of new converts.

Then there’s the intolerable social environment at church. Younger folks are looking at American Protestantism. They see those hyped up, feel-good pastors like Kenneth Copeland, Joyce Meyers, and Joel Osteen… They hear the “prosperity gospels”, the “name it and claim it” garbage, the endless pandering to women, and the shaming of respectable men…

They criticize the emotionalism, the blatant hypocrisy, the shallowness, the never-ending and tiresome nit-picking over scripture passages that have no real-world applications (see note below), and the secular market driven “spiritual fast food”, which is little more than Pop Psych mantras dressed up in spiritualized language, AKA Therapeutic Moralistic Deism.

They see the Non-Denom church folks preen and smile at the luncheons on Sundays, but live lives no different from seculars for the rest of the week (abortion, premarital sex, and divorce being prime examples). They’re listening to them say, “I’m saved, Jesus loves me, and I’m forgiven. Once saved, always saved. I have my fire insurance.”

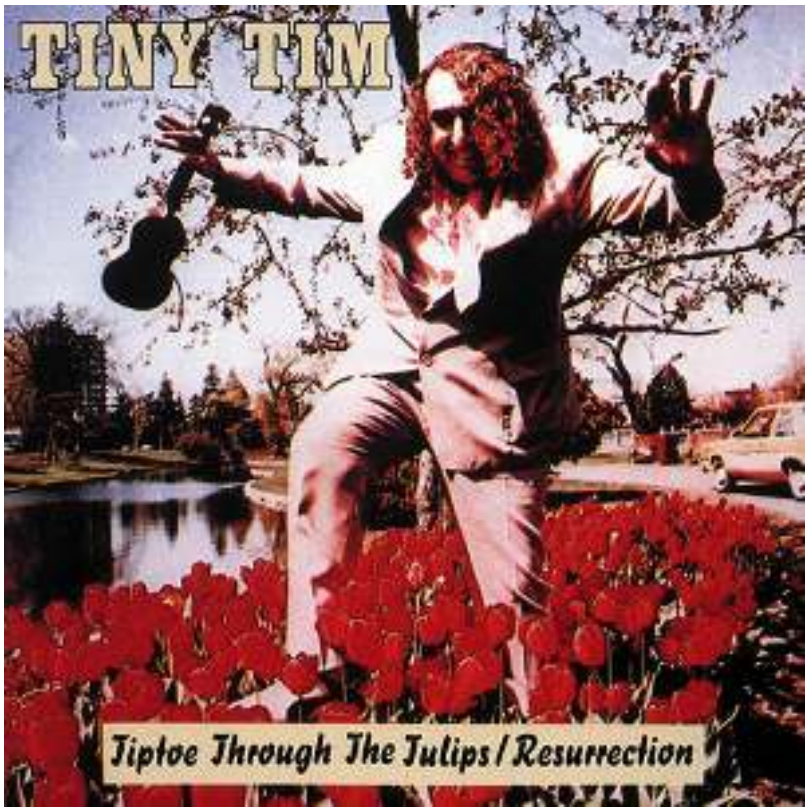
But the younger generations are not swallowing it. It isn’t the fullness of faith they seek.

Note

The open debates among Catholics, Protestants, and Orthodox over the past couple of years have allowed more people to discover the more robust Orthodox doctrines, the writings of the early church fathers, and the metaphysical / spiritual concepts of Nous (as a Christian alternative to logic and scientism) and Theosis (as a more robust concept of “getting saved”), thereby accelerating their interest in learning more.

From the Orthodox perspective, the Evangelicals' obsession with Sola Scriptura is a puzzlement. Evangelicals see themselves as mastering the Word of God, but we see Evangelicals bickering over scriptures. From what I've seen, the evangelical perspective is like, "The Bible is some sort of field manual." (a practical application) Someone retorts, "No, this is what it says." (a literal interpretation) Followed by, "No, this is what it means." (an exegesis) Then, "No, this is what I want it to say!" (an eisegesis). There is no recognition of the church itself as a complete unified entity as the Body of Christ, and the importance of relationships between those within the church, as it relates to Theosis, is neglected. As St. Cyprian of Carthage wrote in the 2nd century, "Outside the Church there is no salvation." That's not an eschatological statement (as Protestants like to think); it's a practical one — here and now.

St. Gregory of Nyssa wrote of the canonized Bible by interpretation of holy tradition within the church. Evangelicals claim it was Sola Scriptura, but then again, some evangelicals (e.g. Gavin Ortlund), wanting a connection with tradition and the church fathers, taught Sola Scriptura as 5 Point Calvinism, yada yada…



Concluding Statements

As Jack aptly wrote, Mainline Protestantism is a Progressive dumpster fire, and much of Evangelical Protestantism is following after secular culture.

Young men are seeing all of this, and their gut tells them something is off; they intuitively sense it — that this is not REAL Christianity. So they're looking, some searching, others trying out vastly different faith beliefs, with some coming to Orthodoxy, to find out what REAL Christianity is like.

I'm sure not every young man who is disillusioned with the SBC is making a beeline to Orthodoxy (many become "nones" or switch to Catholicism or other Protestant churches), but among those staying Christian, this decision reveals these younger men's desire for authenticity and truth in a broken world.

I've read that younger generations have a low trust in institutions, including organized religion. No one has told me this explicitly, but I do get the sense that this is true — new converts, especially those coming from the Southern Baptist Church, are looking for a church they can trust — people they can trust.

I stand with my church and my parishioners, ready to introduce them to the ancient ways of the faith.

References

- Way of Life (David Cloud): Why I Am Not Southern Baptist (2000/6/29; enlarged on 2024/5/14)
- The Gospel Coalition (Trevin Wax): Theron's Story: Why I Left Evangelicalism for Eastern Orthodoxy (2006/11/8)
- Religion News Service: Where do Southern Baptists go when they leave? The answer in one chart (2016/6/28)
- Cold Case Christianity (J. Warner Wallace): UPDATED: Are Young People Really Leaving Christianity? (2019/1/12)
- The Living Church (Wesley Hill): Unchosen Family and the Crisis in the Southern Baptist Convention (2022/5/25)
- The Gospel Coalition (Ryan Burge): Why Is the SBC Membership Declining? (2023/5/13)
- Orthodox Church in America: 2023 Forum Attendees Receive Results of Orthodox Convert Survey (2023/8/16)
- The New York Post: Young men leaving traditional churches for 'masculine' Orthodox Christianity in droves (2024/12/3)
- Pew Research Center: Decline of Christianity in the U.S. Has Slowed, May Have Leveled Off (2025/2/26)

Related

- Σ Frame: The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)
- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- Σ Frame: The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)
- Σ Frame: Which Churches have Sold Out? (2024/8/24)
- Σ Frame: Fiddler on the Roof : A Parable of Progressivism (2024/11/4)
- Σ Frame: Expectation vs Experience (2025/5/2)
- Σ Frame: Signs of Life and Death (2025/5/26)
- To Reclaim Normality: Why American Evangelical Protestantism (AEP) Is Collapsing and Eastern Orthodoxy (EO) Is Growing (2025/5/26)
- Σ Frame: Finding a Wife from an Orthodox Country (2025/5/30)
- Σ Frame: Why is Headship more Important than Religious Affiliation? (2025/6/2)
- Σ Frame: Explaining the Male Trend towards Conservatism vs the Narrowing Gender Gap in American Religion (2025/6/4)
- Σ Frame: The Role of the Church in 21st Century America (2025/6/6)
- Aaron Renn: "Excarnated" Christianity (2025/8/21)

Limitations

Jack · 8 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Where is the boundary of faith and reality?

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Community / Metacognitions / Awareness and Introspection
Length: 2,250 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes

Intro

> For I have the desire to do what is right, but not the ability to carry it out.
>
> Romans 7:18b (ESV)

> Now, we can only see reality as if looking at an obscure reflection in a dark mirror.
>
> Paraphrase of 1 Corinthians 13:12a

Detail of the Portrait of Giovanni Arnolfini and his Wife, by Jan van Eyck (1434).

The Limitations of the Body

I'm 53, and while I've had many blessings, some even miraculous IMO, I've also had many setbacks in life. I feel worn out, my libido is gradually dropping (thank God!), and I'm losing motivation. RPA encouraged me to stay active by doing resistance training. Since then, I've made a more diligent effort to exercise 2-3 times a week. I'll usually go to the gym 1 day a week, concentrating on low weights and high reps, and the other day I'll do some cardio, like cycling, or jogging in the park, alternating between a brisk walk and running. I'll do this anywhere between half an hour to an hour and a half, or however long I can keep up.

An egret.

On Saturday morning (2025/9/6), my wife and I got up at 5:00 a.m. and from 6:00 to 7:30, we went out for an early morning 'power walk' (what we call alternating between walking fast and running) in our city's Central Park and the surrounding neighborhood. While we were out, we saw egrets and night herons, and we fed some wild dogs with some kibbles we had brought. We also bought some food from a local breakfast shop and picked up a package that had come in the mail. After we got back home, we took a shower and ate breakfast before she left for work at 9:10. We both felt exhilarated and deeply satisfied from our morning excursion.

But by 10:30, my wife messaged me saying that our early morning adventures had worn her out and that she was tired and sleepy. She nodded off during an afternoon meeting, and it was a real challenge for her to stay alert throughout the day. I was tired too, but since it was a Saturday, I was able to catch a nap and relax for most of the day before I went to Bible study in the evening.

We learned something about ourselves from our exercise this morning. We are getting to the age (I'm 53 and my wife is 46) where exercise consumes a good deal of our energy, so we need to plan our day accordingly. We can't realistically expect ourselves to do strenuous exercise for an hour and then go to work for a full day and not feel exhausted. OTOH, we had the idea that if we make a habit of getting up early and exercising more frequently (she wanted to do it every day), then maybe we will get used to it. Or maybe exercising in the evening, AFTER our other responsibilities for the day are finished, would work better (but then we couldn't enjoy exercising during the early morning hours). I decided that we should exercise on those days when we don't have a full day packed with other activities and responsibilities on our schedule, so as to be sure we can devote our full energy to our livelihoods. I'll continue to experiment with this and see what works best for us.

The Limitations of the Will

In a recent post, The Age Old Question of Authority (2025/9/3), I mentioned that I had stumbled in my faith during college, and then spent a few years searching for how to recover my faith. In brief, it all began when I decided to get up earlier and read the Bible and pray every morning. But after a few weeks, I was totally burned out and could not make myself read the Bible at all for a year after that. Worse, I was overcome with various doubts and fears and questions about the purpose of my life, and my life spiraled out of control for a while. Since then, I've always been confused about why my decision to read the Bible every morning led to me losing faith in this way.

Derek L. Ramsey picked out my testimony of this experience (given in the links above), and criticized me, basically arguing that I had apostatized because I had supposedly forsaken the "sufficiency" of Sola Scriptura. SMH.

1. Derek L. Ramsey: Hellenization, Part 1 (2025/9/4)
2. Derek L. Ramsey: Hellenization, Part 2 (2025/9/5)

Upon reflection, I've concluded that spiritual disciplines are similar to physical disciplines, like exercising every morning, as I described above. If I got up early and went gung ho at the gym and the park for hours every day, I'd certainly have a healthier lifestyle and improve my physical health, but I'd also wear myself out in a short time, and I would pay for it in other ways (i.e. opportunity cost). I wouldn't last very long, and my life would become unbalanced.

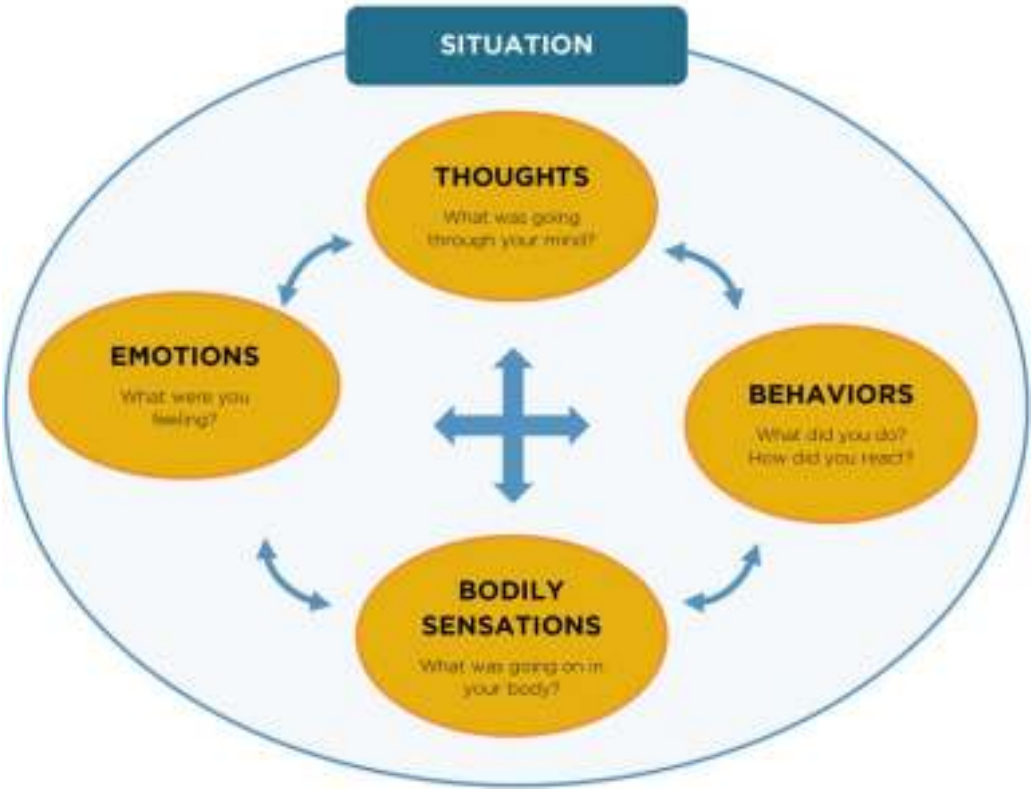
Working out 2-3 times a week seems about right for me, which is exactly what I've observed with my Bible reading habits, and publishing blog posts too — 2-3 times a week, and more on occasion.

The Limitations of the Conscious Mind

Red Pill Apostle wrote,

> "I have a feeling that amongst those that read Σ Frame regularly, not many work in commission based sales. Much of the training that salesmen are subjected to involves taking control of one's inner dialog and molding it to suit the salesman's goal. The training is specific to helping salesmen get their inner game together on the professional front.
>
> Making the unconscious conscious is recognizing underlying fears and beliefs that drive the behavior that so heavily influences results. There is a cycle that is a reinforcing loop.
>
> Beliefs & Thoughts → Feelings → Actions → Results → Beliefs & Thoughts
>
> I have found that changing any of the Beliefs & Thoughts, Feelings, or Actions in the cycle alters the rest of it, but that the most effective approach is to alter how we think and what we believe.
>
> Psalm 1 opens with a blessed man and how he meditates on God's word (absolute truth). The passage then compares that man with those who do not meditate on God's word. It is my belief that meditating on truth (reading the Bible and praying) ultimately leads to the behaviors that create blessings.
>
> Inner Game starts with God's word, not to be mistaken with whatever nonsense about men and women is preached from the pulpit, and having a correctly focused inner game is going to make a man's life improve. It is not a magic bullet for relationships, but it will likely cause blessings, in one form or another, in a man's life."

The feedback cycle that RPA describes is called the Cognitive-Emotional-Behavioral (CEB) Cycle. Snipping negative thinking in the initial notion and replacing it with Biblical truths is an important part of "renewing the mind" as described in Romans 12:2. RPA and I have referenced this process in several past posts, most recently in Fate vs Self-Awareness (2025/8/27).



Following the exercise described in Fate vs Self-Awareness (2025/8/27), combined with the CEB feedback loop described by RPA, I realized that my motivation for reading the Bible every morning was because I had already begun to doubt the "sufficiency" of reading the Bible 2-3 times a week, largely because of the scathing criticism of my housemate for not reading the Bible more. Thus, reading the Bible every day early in the morning became an action that reinforced this doubt, eventually culminating in the destabilization of various beliefs, as described in more detail below.

So that's what had happened to me.

There's more.

Limitations of Perspective

Continuing my story…

In the evening (2025/9/6), I attended my Bible study group. This study provided some further insights as to why I had stumbled in college, as I mentioned above.

The Bible study leader introduced Psalm 1 and Psalm 73, which conveyed different accounts of the value of righteousness. I was amused because RPA had cited Psalm 1 in his comment (above) just 10 days earlier.

In summary, Psalm 1 conveys the blessedness that comes from meditating on God's law and living accordingly. The righteous enjoy prosperity, stability, and divine favor, while the wicked are doomed to condemnation and ultimate ruin.

In contrast, Psalm 73 paints a very different picture of righteousness. Here, the wicked are described as fat, rich, and prosperous, and even though they are arrogant, malicious, and oppressive, they are found faultless. The author concludes that pursuing righteousness is a burdensome, wearisome, and worthless endeavor. Later in this Psalm, however, the author realizes that despite outward appearances, the wicked live in terror of being destroyed at any moment, and assuredly they eventually are. It is also revealed that the author's own bitterness had caused him to envy the wicked, and this had made him ignorant of this reality. Nevertheless, the Lord had stood behind him, strengthened and supported him throughout this ordeal. Interestingly, the psalmist only realizes this after he goes into the sanctuary of God.

As for me, I wasn't bitter, but I was disappointed that my Bible study habits had become a source of vexation (c.f. Psalm 73) instead of a blessing, as Psalm 1 describes. I had also grown fearful of my housemate's constant criticism to the extent that I would occasionally lie to him in order to deflect his condemnation. I also had a few other issues that all together proved too much for me to pull out of.

Limitations of Habit vs Inspiration

During the Bible study discussion, the topic seemed fitting, so I described what had happened to me in college, how I had lost faith after reading the Bible and praying every morning for a while, and I couldn't understand why. While we were discussing this, one man said that he reads the Bible differently than I do. He said when he reads the Bible, he doesn't do it to hear from God or to receive inspiration (as I do/did); he just does it out of habit, as if he were reading a history book. Then later on, during relevant moments in his life, God brings certain passages to his memory, which guide his self-assessments and decision-making.

After hearing about his experience in reading the Bible, I realized that I have a more vivid experience when reading the Bible than most other people do. When I was in college, I had been in this same habit of reading the Bible for spiritual inspiration, and so by changing my approach to reading the Bible out of habit (as he does and my old housemate did), I effectively lost the inspiration that I was accustomed to receiving from God.

Moreover, doing things out of habit culls the level of inspiration one can obtain from the activity, whereas doing things out of inspiration and joy requires habits to be flexible and somewhat variable. Finding a balance is one of the main challenges of internalizing a specific skill and developing expert virtuosity. Too much habit leads to burnout. Relying too much on inspiration can result in a lack of direction and purpose. IMO, you need to combine both approaches to master it.

Limitations of the Imagination

In response to my sad testimony, another person at the Bible study mentioned that we tend to 'imagine' what faith is, or what our obedience to God looks like, and that what we imagine may not be true or accurate about God, or faith, or how we are to be obedient.

Upon hearing the word ‘imagine’, I recalled 2 Corinthians 10:3-6, which says,

> [3] For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh:
> [4] (For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds;)
> [5] Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ;
> [6] And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled.
>
> 2 Corinthians 10:3-6 (KJV)

Other translations interpret the word for ‘imaginations’ in verse 5 as…

- “proud idea” (ERV)
- “intellectual arrogance” (GW)
- “sophisticated arguments” (AMP)
- “arguments” (NASB; NIV; NIVUK; NKJV; RSV)
- “arguments and theories and reasonings” (AMPC)

A Malayan Night Heron.

My housemate's argument that reading the Bible every day was a superior discipline than my own habit of reading 2-3 times a week was a concept of obedience that may have been correct for him, but NOT for me. When I believed him, I falsely imagined that his discipline was superior to my own, and that I should strive to be obedient in this same manner. I think I also had some false guilt, and I suspected that I was missing out on something more by not doing so. But in doing so, I was stepping away from the discipline I had held since childhood, and apparently, my alter-obedience was no longer altar-obedience, and was therefore unacceptable to God (?!?). Also, he was certainly a very arrogant and argumentative individual, which also fits this explanation.

Concluding Statements

I'm NOT presenting all these limitations as some sort of excuse for losing faith, or not doing better, or whatever. No. That debacle happened 34 years ago, and I've since forgiven my housemate (and myself) and moved past this. I'm simply conveying what I've learned from this bad experience. In fact, for most of my life, I was confused about why this had happened to me, and I've only now gained the above insights. I believe that, for some reason, God wanted me to struggle through all this without much cognitive understanding of what I was experiencing, probably to build character, patience, and perseverance in me, leading to a deeper, stronger faith. I believe all of the above revelations came by divine appointment, in response to Derek L. Ramsey's criticisms earlier this week, and also my prayers about this. I'm passing this on (1) as a response to Derek's critique, (2) as an edification to others who may be struggling to maintain disciplined habits in Bible reading and prayer, and (3) as a testimony of the power of God.

Related

Feeriker wrote a great comment describing the sufferings inherent in being determined in the face of repetitive defeats and setbacks, and how even the most diligent man's faithfulness has limits (James 4:13-15). It's worth reading if you haven't already.

- Σ Frame: Taking Headship by Force (2021/5/26)
- Σ Frame: The Path to Contentment (2023/1/18)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Pursuit of Happyness (2023/7/3)

- Σ Frame: How to be Happy, No, Really (2024/4/19)
- Σ Frame: A Failure of Imagination (2024/5/20)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Joshua 1:1-9 is NOT a Bootstrap Speech (2025/1/29)
- Σ Frame: In Search of Meaning (2025/8/6)
- Σ Frame: The Appropriateness of Logic (2025/8/20)
- Σ Frame: Fate vs Self-Awareness (2025/8/27)
- The Orthosphere: (J.M. Smith): Party Spirit or Holy Spirit (2025/8/31)
- Radix Fidem: Sin and Covenant (2025/9/6)
- Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)

Archetypal Mythos: Themes

Jack · 10 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Mythos is built around a set of assumptions about what is important, relevant, fitting, and proper, AKA themes.

Readership: All;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

What is a Theme?

The most popularly known and long-enduring stories and narratives are built around an Archetypal Mythos. Further, the Mythos is founded on a set of assumptions about what is important, relevant, fitting, and proper, and this Frame paradigm is generally referred to as a theme.

A literary theme is the central, universal idea, message, or underlying meaning that a story explores, providing the work with depth, purpose, and explanations as to why things are as they are. Common themes focus on the deeper meanings about relationships, life, humanity, or society that the story intends to explain or magnify. Explicitly, themes usually take the form of living conditions, social structures, moral and ethical ontologies, and interactive relationships between archetypal characters. Themes are often expressed implicitly through the characters' actions, motivations, the plot, or the setting, and can be broad (like "love" or "death") or more specific, such as the consequences of unchecked ambition.

Here, I'll provide a brief descriptive list of the most common themes as seen through a cultural / historical lens, and assess what we are currently missing.

Older Mythical Themes

Popular themes in Western classical literature and films are listed below.

- War
- Revenge
- Isolation
- Parenthood
- Rich vs Poor
- Tragedy / Loss
- Death / Mortality
- Betrayal / Treachery
- Appearance vs Reality
- The Lost and Found Theme
- The Theme of Love / Romance
- The Underdog becomes King (e.g. The Gladiator)
- The Battle against Nature for Survival (e.g. The Revenant)
- The Good Guy vs. the Bad Guy Theme (e.g. Crime, Westerns, most War films)

Eastern literature has a few others that are not very popular in the West. Actually, these once had a place in Western literature, but have fallen from regular review over the past century.

- Poetic Justice
- Forgiveness / Grace
- The Two Brothers Theme
- The Theme of Inheritance
- The Father and Son Theme
- The Theme of Justice / Vengeance
- The Theme of Divine Help / Intervention

Of special note, the parable of The Prodigal Son (contained in Luke 15:11-32) is an amalgamation of several literary themes, including the Father and Son theme, the Two Brothers theme, the Inheritance theme, Forgiveness / Grace, the Lost and Found theme, and the Love theme. More on the Framework of Options (2021/3/22) compares high and low SMV men using an adaptation of this parable.

Likewise, the most popular films in modern cinema contain not just one, but multiple themes. For example, the Indiana Jones series covers Divine Justice, the Father and Son theme, the Good Guy and Bad Guy theme, the Lost and Found theme, the Inheritance theme, War, and the Love theme. Star Wars envelops almost all of the above themes (the Two Brothers Theme is adapted as brother Luke and sister Leia), thereby fully explaining its enduring popularity.

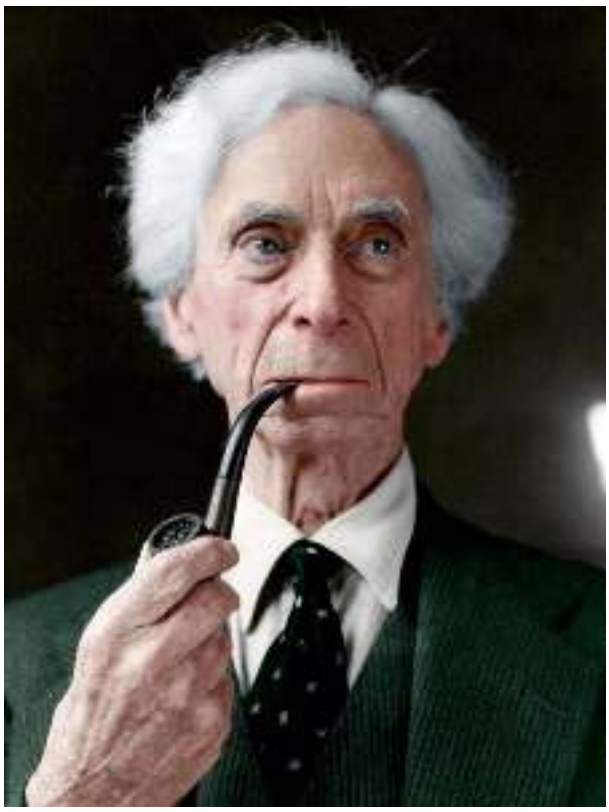
In general, literary and cinematic works that contain a larger number of different themes are more engaging and also more engro$$!ng.

Jabba the Hutt, an antagonist in the Star Wars series.

Newer Mythical Themes

In the 19th and 20th centuries, the literature expanded to include a few more mythical themes that have become popular enough to earn them a firm place in the books.

Existentialism: Themes built around the critique of traditional morality, eternal recurrence, the Übermensch (overman), the will to power, and the tension between Apollonian (order, reason) and Dionysian (chaos, passion) forces. These themes often manifest in works that explore existential struggles, individual transformation, rebellion against societal norms, or the search for meaning in a godless world. Authors include Simone de Beauvoir, Anton Chekhov, George Orwell, Jean-Paul Sartre, George Bernard Shaw, and Richard Wagner, among others.



Bertrand Russell

Nihilism: Nihilism is the philosophical attitude that takes no principle whatsoever for granted, and everything is open to question. Thus, every aspect of life becomes a mystery to be explored and discovered. The notable feature of Nihilism is that there is a complacent absence of concern about whatever the answers to those questions may imply. Extreme Scientism, Stoicism, and Verificationism are advanced manifestations of Nihilism. Authors include Samuel Beckett, William S. Burroughs, Ernest Hemingway, Bertrand Russell, Arthur Schopenhauer, and even William Shakespeare.

Some authors, such as Albert Camus, Fyodor Dostoevsky, Søren Kierkegaard, and Friedrich Nietzsche have written works that envelop both Existentialism and Nihilism. This may explain their enduring impact.

Scientism: Scientism is the philosophical appropriation of science as the salvific key to human meaning, purpose, and fulfillment. Examples include the mad scientist (e.g. Back to the Future), various life-changing scientific discoveries, astronomy and space exploration (e.g. Star Trek), etc. Noteworthy authors include Isaac Asimov, Charles Darwin, Richard Dawkins, Richard Feynman, Stephen Hawking, Carl Sagan, and Steven Spielberg.

The Strong Independent Woman (SIW): Women who have ADIEU traits, and sufficient fortitude to make their own way in the world are assigned the role of a protagonist in the plot. The Strong Independent Woman theme has roots in suffrage, temperance, and WW2 social activism. The current version was popularized by the Mary Tyler Moore show in the 1970s, which glorified the single woman's lifestyle of independence. Since then, this theme has been the predominant archetypal theme in Western arts, cinema, and entertainment. Notable authors include Maya Angelou, Margaret Atwood, Simone de Beauvoir, Betty Friedan, Toni Morrison, and Mary Wollstonecraft.

Opening scene from the Mary Tyler Moore TV show. Note how Moore's bright clothing, proud confidence, and jaunty stride contrast with the drab, stuffy appearance of the older, more traditional women in the background.
Fictional Romance: (AKA Chick Lit / Slore P0rn / S1ut Smut) The story is built around idealized romantic relationships arising from uncommon but highly desired incidents, and is heavily dependent on chance, fantasy, mystery, mythos, and secrecy. Plots typically involve conflict, death, former lovers, illicit sex, jealousy, and Meet Cutes. This theme is responsible for poisoning many young women with false expectations and lies about intersexual dynamics, men, mating, and what women actually contribute to marriage and society. Classical authors are Louisa May Alcott, Charlotte Bronte, Jane Eyre, Mary Shelley, and Mary Wollstonecraft. More recent authors include E. L. James, Nora Roberts, Danielle Steel, Rosemary Sutcliffe, and many more.

Victimization: The story centers on characters or groups who are portrayed as victims, highlighting the felt experience of individuals or groups being harmed, treated unfairly, or subjected to detrimental conditions, often as a result of their actions, identities, race, or social affiliations. This can encompass abuse, criminal acts, discrimination, manipulation, or natural disasters, and the theme explores the impact of these experiences on individuals, communities, and broader society. Authors include Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie, James Baldwin, Ta-Nehisi Coates, Angela Y. Davis, Roxane Gay, Ibram X. Kendi, and Toni Morrison.

Conclusions

The themes that have recently fallen into disuse in the West but are still popular in the East (contained in the second bulleted list above) are either embodiments of Patriarchy or convey Christian Mythos (as contained in Biblical parables, rhetorical illustrations, etc.). These have been replaced with Modern / Post-Modern themes such as Existentialism, Nihilism, Scientism, SIW (e.g. Feminist tropes), and Victimization (e.g. B L M, C R T, W0kery, etc.).

Fictional Romance experienced a boon in popularity in the late 20th century and especially after the film, 50 Shades of Grey, was released in 2015. Apparently, this book / film helped normalize the acceptance of the implicit debauchery of this theme.

Moreover, currently, there is a vacuum of archetypal themes for Christians and Men. Christian Men impacted most. There used to be many such archetypes, encompassing all of the themes listed above, but these have been parried out of Hollywood since the turn of the century. In its place, a burgeoning of debased themes for women.

This situation will need to be remedied, and the archetypal themes of Patriarchal heroism brought back, if men are to receive the inspiration to reclaim their inheritance and place in this world.

Related

- Σ Frame (Soup Sandwich): Archetypal Therapy and Innate Personality Traits (2021/3/20)
- Ben Foth: Principles of an emotionally engaging story (2024/2/21)
- Aaron Renn (Joseph Holmes): The Judgment of Chani: How Dune Reflects Our Cultural Divide Over Female Moral Authority (2025/1/30)
- Aaron Renn (Joseph Holmes): Hollywood's First Truly "Post-COVID America" Horror Film (2025/9/3)
- Σ Frame: Putting the Noahic Covenant into Perspective (2025/8/25)
- Christianity and Masculinity: The absolute degeneracy of modern writing (2025/9/9)
- Aaron Renn: The End of the Middle-Class Magic Kingdom (2025/9/10)

The Serenity of Worship

Jack · 12 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Men in the West don't have an authentic style of worship that enables them to enter into the presence of God.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Awareness and Introspection;
Note: Based on an email discussion with Tubal Cain on 2025/6/10.
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

A Time and Place for Worship

The expectations for us as men are tremendous. They are all-consuming. They are unbelievable. They come in the form of people to see, places to be, things to do, and busy schedules. They are incessant demands on your time and energy. They are notifications on your phone at all hours of the day and all hours of the night. And it never stops.

There's a part of us as men that wants to work, we want to succeed, and we want to get things done. Men need to run that race. They need to work out their energy. They need to work hard towards their God ordained purpose in life.

That's fine and good, but we cannot always be on the move like that. If so, then we can't get enough oxygen. We also need to catch our breath.

That's what worship is for. Worship is when man gets to BE before his Creator in a humbled state, being present in prayer, being present with the things that he is speaking from the depths of his heart when he's reflecting on his life and his choices and his decisions or the future and the uncertainty the things that are happening around him, when he's just with God.

This is what the modern Christian man seeks and craves.

The Serenity of Worship

When a man wants to connect with God, he doesn't go to a Pink Floyd or a Nickelback rock music concert. He doesn't go down into the city nightlife. He doesn't go to the pub and order a beer. He doesn't go to a Starbucks, order a cappuccino, and say to himself, "I'm going to connect with God".

No. When a man wants to connect with God, he goes to the woods. He goes to the mountains. He goes to a secluded cabin. He goes to see the ocean or the sunset. He closes the door. He turns off the cell phone. He turns off the notifications. He gets away from it all.

Why? So that he can be present and he can focus. So that the glory of God can be manifested within his conscious awareness.

Case Study 1 — The Monks on Mount Athos

In a private message, Tubal Cain wrote of a marvelous piece of history that has been overlooked.

> "I remember reading about the monks on Mount Athos. They would go to sleep at 6:00 at night and then sleep for maybe 3 or 4 hours and get up at 9:00 or 10:00, after it was dark, after it was silent, after the whole world had gone to sleep, when you can feel the gravitational pull, when you can sense the darkness, the stars, the beauties of the heavens, when you can see the world peacefully at rest. These monks would get up at this time and then they would start praying in a very simple, repetitive fashion.
>
> > "Lord Jesus Christ, have mercy on me."
>
> Now, the Gospel warns against making repetitive prayers. What Christ is talking about is droning on with a bunch of words that don't mean anything to you, a bunch of nonsense, a bunch of filler talk, talking to God where you're just blabbering and eventually have nothing more to say after 3 minutes."

> "In contrast, what the monks were doing is saying the simplicity of the prayer, "Lord Jesus Christ, have mercy on me", but they were saying each prayer with intensity and focus.

> When a man prays like this in the dark of night, when he stands before Christ in His presence, when he opens up his heart to examination, praying like this is worship.
>
> This is what modern man craves. He craves Stillness. He craves a little bit of Silence in a noisy world."

This is what the Western World, as well as many churches, don't understand about worship. Worship for a man is NOT emotional. I don't mean that man isn't emotional, but that he's NOT wanting to be psychologically evoked into a state of emotional frenzy like he is at a music concert. He doesn't need an emotional experience to connect with God. That's not how men work. No man ever leaves a worship service and says, "Oh wow! I was digging the guitar riffs. I wish they had more drums! I wish they had more noise! Rock the hell out of me, for my eternal salvation!" No. Men want to be silent with God.

Case Study 2 — Fathers and Sons

When fathers connect with their sons, they don't just sit down and have a long-winded conversation. Serious lectures may be one aspect of being a father, but when you're a father, you understand that a lot of being a father is just BEING with your boys and DOING things together, tackling projects and accomplishing things together.

That's exactly what Man desires from his Heavenly Father. He wants to be present with Him. He wants to know that God is there for him at all times. He wants to know that Christ is going through his struggles with him, and that He has already overcome them. He wants to know that he's loved and that he's affirmed for who he is (which a woman can never provide). He wants to feel that connection, Father to Son and Son with Father.

No Place for Worship

The West has lost this connection to God. Instead, it's all about performance. It's about making an impression. It's about how well you measure up. It's about how much impact or noise you can make. Ironically, it's also about emotion. It's trying to evoke the impression of a participation that you're NOT actually feeling. It's trying to put something on display or using some words or some terminology to push you emotionally, to stir your mind instead of your inner spirit.

Men know this is all fake posture posing and manipulation, yet we play along to get along. But in our hearts, Christian men know that Real Men need to be in the presence of God. We need to be still in our souls. We need to know that God is there. We need true worship, both alone in solace, and with others in a Divine Liturgy. We need to be comfortable standing in our space, ruling over our God given domain, and just being present, NOT having a bunch of rational thoughts to explain … whatever, NOT having "a bunch of feelings" that would authenticate our participation among humanity, but just being there with God and connecting with Him in Spirit.

That's exactly why we can't give ourselves over to the false premises and promises of the World.

This is why, when you look at the attrition of Evangelicalism and the resultant influx to Eastern Orthodoxy, you'll find many men who want a quiet, peaceful existence, and a calm, ordered home life, away from the crowds, the sensationalism, and the noise. They aren't the only ones seeking a reprieve from the World.

Benediction

I pray for every man who reads this essay that you might find the opportunity to go to a monastery and meet holy men who are wholly devoted to God at the cost of all else in this World. Or to worship the Lord in a Divine Liturgy, given the chance. Or that you might attend an evening candlelight service, and to stand in the church among trusted brethren in the faith, and be silent and be present with God, and to fix your mind on nothing but Him alone.

Let it be a foundational firmament of your faith.

To Him be all glory, honor, and worship, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

Christ is risen, then, now, and forevermore!

Amen.

Related

- Σ Frame: Explaining the Male Trend towards Conservatism vs the Narrowing Gender Gap in American Religion

(2025/6/4)

- Catacomb Resident: Two Systems (2025/8/23)
- Radix Fidem: The Book of Life (2025/8/30)
- Radix Fidem: Sin and Covenant (2025/9/6)
- Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)
- Radix Fidem: Working Assumptions (2025/9/8)
- Catacomb Resident: Living by the Word (2025/9/9)
- Bruce Charlton: The desire for spiritual power… (2025/9/12)

If No Peace, then War!

Jack · 13 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

When all that is good, beautiful, and true is desecrated, utter destruction is imminent.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Awareness and Introspection;
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

The Martial Disposition of Peacemakers

Peacemakers are men who are peaceful to the very snuff of their souls. Their very presence has a calming effect on others, able to end an argument with mere eye contact. Ironically, this may be because Peacemakers are some of the most violent, warmongering, ZFG individuals among all mankind. Ironic, but true.

The Protective Nature of Man

Catacomb Resident wrote,

> "When most men get married, the instinct for social preservation takes over. Suddenly, it becomes important to maintain social stability in order to protect the family. The man is ready to start building a life. If something happens to threaten it, taking any or all of that away, he's ready to kill. This is all by instinct."
>
> Catacomb Resident: Living in Hell (2025/9/6)

Samuel Colt's Peacemaker, one of the earliest single-action revolver pistols.

The Unholy Vengeance of Peaceful Men

Written by one who saw and lived through the worst times of the U.S.S.R.

> "The most terrifying force of death, comes from the hands of men who wanted to be left alone. They try, so very hard, to mind their own business and provide for themselves and those they love. They resist every impulse to fight back, knowing the forced and permanent change of life that will come from it. They know, > that the moment they fight back, their lives as they have lived them, are over.

>
> The moment the men who wanted to be left alone are forced to fight back, it is a form of suicide. They are literally killing off who they used to be. Which is why, when forced to take up violence, these men who wanted to be left alone, fight with unholy vengeance against those who murdered their former lives. They fight with raw hate, and a drive that cannot be fathomed by those who are merely play-acting at politics and terror. TRUE TERROR will arrive at these people's door, and they will cry, scream, and beg for mercy… but it will fall upon the deaf ears of the men who just wanted to be left alone."
>
> Attributed to Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn (1918-2008)

Case Study — William Wallace

Remember William Wallace in the film Braveheart? As a youth, he resisted physical altercations. All he wanted in life was to enjoy a quiet existence as a sustenance farmer and a well-laid family man. But when the English crown murdered his wife in cold blood, he lost all hope of ever living out this purpose; and with nothing left to lose, he went all out on the warpath against England as well as treacherous figures within the Scottish ruling class. He didn't just fight to avenge himself; he went all the way to hell and back, ultimately drawn, disemboweled, and beheaded, thereby leading Scotland to independence and becoming a hero of the faith, and his story lives on in our hearts today (thanks to Mel Gibson's excellent acting).

A battle scene from the film, Braveheart (1995), starring Mel Gibson as William Wallace.

Conclusions

Peacemakers know that peace can only be preserved when all threats to peace are controlled, defeated, or held at bay, and they always stand ready to counteract those threats with real force, even to a fearless death if necessary. In fact, peace only exists because of their constant vigilance and readiness to respond with lethal force.

There are men in the West of similar fortitude; being deprived of all hope of leading a peaceful, respected existence, and/or a life with a feminine, loyal, submissive wife and family, they're ready to burn it all down, or leave it all behind, move across the country, switch churches, or go live overseas. We've seen them. We know some of them.

A man's domain and his procreative instincts are not to be trifled with. It is an unstoppable force. Just as freezing water will break copper pipes or a glass jar that contains it, in the same manner, a man (or some men) will break all civil and human bonds to fulfill his purpose in life — or else, exact revenge on those who destroyed all hope of doing so.

Related

- Σ Frame: Explaining the Male Trend towards Conservatism vs the Narrowing Gender Gap in American Religion (2025/6/4)
- Σ Frame: Patriarchy and Civilization (2025/8/11)
- Σ Frame: Domain and Motivation (2025/8/13)
- Catacomb Resident: Two Systems (2025/8/23)
- Σ Frame: Putting the Noahic Covenant into Perspective (2025/8/25)
- Radix Fidem: The Book of Life (2025/8/30)
- Radix Fidem: Sin and Covenant (2025/9/6)
- Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)
- Radix Fidem: Working Assumptions (2025/9/8)
- Catacomb Resident: Living by the Word (2025/9/9)
- Bruce Charlton: The desire for spiritual power… (2025/9/12)
- Radix Fidem: It's Rolling Already (2025/9/12)

The Desire for True Worship

Jack · 14 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Men in the West don't have a safe, peaceful style of worship that fulfills their masculine essence.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Validation; Awareness and Introspection;
Note: Based on an email discussion with Tubal Cain on 2025/6/10.
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

The Proactive Disposition of Peacemakers

The last two posts have drawn an association between the peaceful nature of men and men's ferocious vengeance when they are deprived of a tranquil, fulfilling existence and a life of familial sanctimony.

While some men are ready to burn it all down, or take up arms (figuratively speaking, perhaps literal in some instances), by the mercies of God, men are more likely to choose less destructive, less violent means to ameliorate their unjust sufferings. Thus, men's peaceful nature is more likely to steer them towards leaving it all behind, moving across the country, switching churches, or going to live overseas. I'll venture to say that the stronger, wiser, and more masculine men are more likely to choose such means. It is the bravely courageous, yet foolishly die-hard IDIOTs* who choose the dank glories of blood violence and utter destruction before considering less catastrophic options.

 IDIOT: An Individual Devoid of Intelligent Organized Thought.*

Case Study 1 — Military Men are Attracted to Orthodoxy

In a private message, Tubal Cain wrote,

> "Our Orthodox parishes and jurisdictions have a large influx of military men."

> "I have a theory that the top-down polity in Orthodoxy offers a structure of command and rank, and also established procedures similar to the military, that is appealing to men. And much like what is happening within evangelicalism, the reinventing oneself with the ebb and flow of modernity, and also within American culture, e.g. using the military for social engineering, has some bearing on men's increasing interest in Orthodoxy. While one can argue this is reactionary, again, like other None and Evangelical converts to Orthodoxy, the desire for a deeper faith seems to hold as well."

Case Study 2 — Father McPherson's Desire for True Worship

In support of his theory, Tubal Cain referred me to this video from Father Moses McPherson of the Holy Mother of God Orthodox Church in Georgetown, Texas.

Father Moses: Protestant Prayer Isn't What Modern Man Craves (2024/5/20)

[Transcript edited and embellished for reading. Emphasis mine.]

> "In the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit.
>
> A man can watch three things endlessly: a fire, the ocean, and another man working.
>
> Man's mind likes to be in a meditative state. It's not that men aren't emotional or want to be emotional; it's just that emotionality does not resonate with men.
>
> I remember the first time I ever experienced the Divine Liturgy.
>
> My wife and I were in college when we were first exposed to Orthodox Christianity. We went to the local Parish, which was held in a little chapel in an upstairs room at a dentist's office. It was a very small space, maybe 20 ft. wide and 30 ft. long at most, and there were no pews and no benches. There were just some icons and some candle lights. It was [intriguing] because the room had a dropped ceiling, but none of the lights were on. It was all natural light. The priest, Father Jeffrey Korrs, was able to put this meeting together even though there were very few Orthodox Christians at the time. (This was almost 20 years ago.)
>
> I remember that we went inside this small makeshift chapel and how I felt so intrigued and at peace.

> I remember looking down at my wife sitting on the floor. She looked so much at peace and so contemplative. She was just soaking it in.
>
> I remember attending that liturgy and just not having to do anything, just being present and soaking in the prayers, the hymnography, the icons, the light from the candles, the incense… Just soaking it in and being present in the experience, and not being a performer, not having to do anything or say anything — just being there, just being in it."

> "After we had been attending Divine Liturgy for several months, we went to visit my aunt. We weren't yet Orthodox at that time; we were still Protestant inquirers. We went with my aunt to her mega church, which was held in a gymnasium and had a full band up on stage and all these [sophisticated lights and stage effects]. Within 3 minutes after the worship service started, Boom! The horn section kicked in! They had all these horn players, and they were awesome! I mean, they weren't lacking in ability or skill. But I felt a great dissonance in my soul. It wasn't bad horn playing, it was just a cacophony of noise and sound pounding on my head. I remember standing there and thinking, "I can't pray. I can't pray because I can't focus and I can't be present."
>
> There's somewhat of an incompatibility between presence and performance. This was a performance, and you know, that's fine if you're at a football game and the horns are blasting and the band is thumping the drums and getting you hyped up. There's an energy to it, and that's awesome! I love that, as a man. I love that type of intensity. I love lifting weights. I love blasting heavy metal tunes. I love that energy, that ferocity! That is a true expression of myself as a man and something that I love, but that is NOT worship.
>
> I ended up leaving the church service because I just couldn't pray. I couldn't pray because I couldn't think, and I couldn't be present. Since attending Father Korrs' Orthodox chapel, I had become accustomed to being present in prayer. I had become accustomed to being present in worship."

Concluding Thoughts

To put Father Moses' testimony into perspective, this kind of peaceful meditation can only transpire when there is a larger structure of authority in place that enables it and protects it.

Like peacemakers who always stand ready to wage war — to the point of death.

Like rank and file soldiers are drawn to the serene, structured discipline of Orthodoxy.

Like children who are more confident, creative, and joyful when subject to well-defined rules that are strictly enforced.

Like we are commanded to always be diligent and vigilant in prayer (Colossians 4:2; 1 Peter 5:8), fully anticipating that the Lord hears us and rewards those who seek Him (Hebrews 11:6).

The militant arm is necessary to ensure the peaceful experience of worship. The diligent performance of that arm is necessary to hedge and protect our serene experience of the presence of the Lord in communal or private worship, thus allowing those who worship to NOT be concerned about the opposite stance of performing.

This is what the modern Christian man needs, seeks, and craves.

Related

- Σ Frame: Explaining the Male Trend towards Conservatism vs the Narrowing Gender Gap in American Religion (2025/6/4)
- Catacomb Resident: Two Systems (2025/8/23)
- Radix Fidem: The Book of Life (2025/8/30)
- Radix Fidem: Sin and Covenant (2025/9/6)
- Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)
- Radix Fidem: Working Assumptions (2025/9/8)
- Catacomb Resident: Living by the Word (2025/9/9)
- Bruce Charlton: The desire for spiritual power… (2025/9/12)

- Radix Fidem: It’s Rolling Already (2025/9/12)

Gestalt

Jack · 15 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The quality of which the whole is greater than the sum of its parts.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Gestalt

There's an important idea that is not often recognized or discussed, and which many are probably not even aware of, and that is the concept of "the whole package deal".

I make reference to this idea using the word "Gestalt" which is a German word adopted in many works of philosophy and psychology. Gestalt holds multiple meanings reminiscent of the English word Frame. These multiple meanings include Character, a Classical Form, a Condition, a Figurehead, Shape, and Personality.

Borrowed into English, the word Gestalt is used primarily in Gestalt psychology, which attempts to understand the laws of our ability to acquire and maintain meaningful perceptions in an apparently chaotic world. (Please click on the link to see a full list and illustrated examples of these laws.) The central principle of Gestalt psychology is that the mind forms a global whole with self-organizing tendencies. This principle maintains that when the human mind (perceptual system) forms a percept or Gestalt, the whole has a reality of its own which is independent of the parts.

Interestingly, Gestalt is closely related to Mythos and also illusion, strangely enough.

- As described in Logos, Ethos, Pathos, and Mythos (2025/8/4), Mythos imparts a sense of completion, or integration, or wholeness.
- Gestalt, which describes the phenomenon that the whole is greater than, or independent of, the sum of its parts, may be understood to be an embodiment of that quality of wholeness within Mythos.
- Illusion occurs when the brain attempts to fill in the aspects or parts deemed missing.
- OTOH, there is an oft-experienced discontentment or frustration when having everything in place may not impart a satisfying sense of completion or wholeness. We might refer to this as a meta-illusion, or more simply, an incomplete mythos or a lack of Meaning or Purpose.

One implication of Gestalt perception is that we tend to regard reality through the lens of our own aggregate experience and what is familiar to us. Sensory information is thus interpreted according to its perceived meaning and present applicability, rather than what it really is.

In addition to Mythos and Illusion, the Gestalt phenomenon arises in many other contexts. In fact, it exists everywhere you look. Here are several noteworthy examples.

- In social theory, it is called collective strength.
- In philosophy, this concept is referred to as holism.
- Engineering management takes this approach in Systems Thinking.
- In physics, this concept is addressed by what is called superposition.
- Gestalt principles are often utilized in art and design to enhance visual aesthetics.
- In government, it is alluded to in the political axiom, "United we stand, divided we fall."
- Mathematics describes this quality in the axiom, "The whole is other/greater than the sum of the parts".
- In psychology, Gestalt therapy applies this principle to give individuals a healthy and holistic concept of one's self.
- The same idea is utilized in engineering design, where many light, flimsy struts can be connected to form a very sturdy and rigid body.
- Additionally, the most successful business enterprises commonly have divisions of labor which address specialized tasks, and these divisions are skillfully coordinated by the management to reach the desired productivity.

One implication of social Gestalt is that we are all subject to the decisions and actions of others, especially those in positions of power (including power players in the SMP).

In one post, God's Concept of Justice (2021/4/2), I referred to this phenomena as The Mob in the Crucible Effect (c.f. "frogs in the pot", or "crabs in the bucket"), which is based on the premise that we influence those around us, for better or for worse, and that it is the will of God for us to act as independent agents.

Case Study — Impressionism

In this painting, do you see dabs of paint on a canvas, or do you see rows of trees next to a stream? Which is real and which is an illusion?

The Lane of Poplars at Moret-sur-Loing (1888), by Alfred Sisley (1839–1899), oil on canvas, 60 x 81 cm, private collection.
The illusion arouses thoughts of a carefree sunny day and thereby invokes Meaning (because it is beautiful), whereas the paint itself does not.

In this case, the illusion is more 'real' to us than the reality.

If one were to say that the paint is more real than the image it portrays, he would be derided as a senseless dolt. Likewise, if one were to point out that the image does not precisely match the living trees that are represented here.

If one were to point out that it is merely pixels on a screen, this admission, although entirely accurate and true, would reveal himself to be the epitome of heartlessness.

Epilogue

Too often, we focus on the details of life, thinking that certain things must be in place before life can be beautiful or satisfying. It may be more helpful for us to think of life as a unified whole. Instead of worrying about details, try to make the composition of life functional.

Too often, we focus on our own shortcomings and failures, thinking that we must attain excellence or reach perfection before we can be productive, useful, or valuable. Yet, God, in his infinite grace, uses us, just as we are, for His glory and His purposes.

It is beneficial for one to accept that life is dynamic, that people are individuals, and that we all have unique desires, spiritual needs, and life-purposes. Men need to accept this dynamic and find a way to juggle all the variables and cofactors such that we can make our lives function according to God's proscribed order. It is not an easy task, but it is easier to obtain a more accurate and more intuitive sense of discernment if we develop a conscious awareness of the Gestalt phenomena.

Future posts will provide more examples to demonstrate how Mysticism and Mythos has real-world social and psychological effects and therefore, they have real Meaning and thus, real value.

Related

- Σ Frame: Collective Strength and Division of Labor (2009/9/11)
- Σ Frame (Soup Sandwich): Archetypal Therapy and Innate Personality Traits (2021/3/20)
- Σ Frame: Commonalities of Successful Marriages (2021/4/14)
- Σ Frame: Logos, Ethos, Pathos, and Mythos (2025/8/4)
- Σ Frame: In Search of Meaning (2025/8/6)
- Aaron Renn: Collapsing Conscientiousness (2025/8/8)
- Σ Frame: Modern Nihilism is the Vacuum of Meaning (2025/8/22)

What is Gestalt Therapy?

Jack · 17 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Examining a psychoanalytical tool for effective introspection.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Intro

Over the past several decades, the field of psychology has yielded a small number of highly effective therapy techniques. The most widely known and used is Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT), followed by multiple Mindfulness-based techniques. There is another, lesser-known, but also very effective technique called Gestalt Therapy.

The term "Gestalt" comes from the German word meaning "whole" or "pattern," reflecting the therapy's focus on perceiving individuals as complete entities rather than fragmented parts or traumatized blank slates.

Friedrich Salomon Perls, AKA Fritz Perls (1893-1970), is known as the founder of Gestalt Therapy, which he co-developed with his wife, Laura Perls, and an associate, Paul Goodman, to be used as a general therapeutic tool in the 1940s.

Fritz Perls

Perls broke away from the psychoanalytical model in which a client's past is analyzed (as developed by Sigmund Freud), which was dominant at that time, and instead looked at what is happening in the present as the key to change and personal growth. The implicit reasoning is that we cannot change the past, and we cannot very well control the future. All we really have is ourselves in the present moment — Here and Now. Within this paradigm, the past (memories) and the future (expectations, hopes) are regarded as abstract ideas that distract us from this present reality.

Gestalt therapy is typically used to address issues like anxiety, depression, low self-esteem, relationship difficulties, and personal growth, though it can be applied broadly to enhance self-awareness and emotional resilience.

A few years ago, I read the entirety of Perls' book, The Gestalt Approach and Eye Witness to Therapy (1973) [Amazon]. I found it to be a riveting book that cannot be compared to any other text on psychology.

Here, we'll take a look at Gestalt Therapy, describe how it works, and examine the reasons why it is so effective.

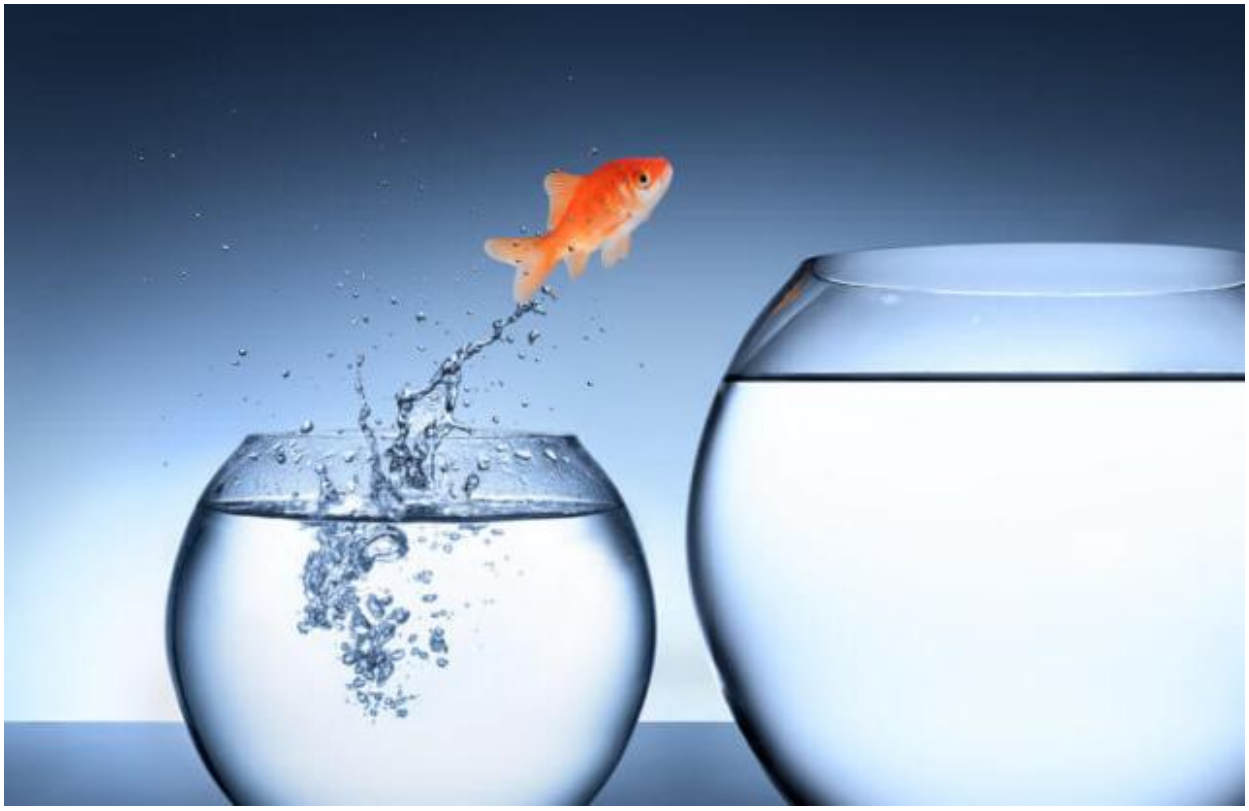
The Key Principles of Gestalt Therapy

Gestalt therapy is a humanistic, client-centered form of psychotherapy that emphasizes personal responsibility, present-moment awareness, and the holistic integration of thoughts, emotions, and behaviors.

Holistic Approach: Gestalt therapy views individuals as inseparable from both their personhood and their environment, emphasizing the interplay between the person and their surroundings.

Personal Responsibility: Subjects are assumed to be primarily responsible for their own actions and decisions, thereby dampening blame shifting, empowering their agency, and fostering self-directed change.

Self-Awareness: Subjects are guided to increase self-awareness, to cognitively understand their desires, motives, and behaviors, and to methodically process their thoughts and feelings.



Core Techniques of Gestalt Therapy

Instead of relying solely on talk therapy, Gestalt uses creative experiential techniques like body awareness exercises, guided imagery, role-playing, and the "empty chair" technique, to explore emotions, reactions, and unresolved issues.

Present-Moment Focus: Gestalt therapy prioritizes the "Here and Now", encouraging clients to fully experience their current thoughts, feelings, and sensations rather than dissociating by dwelling on the past, anticipating the future, or engaging in fantasy or vanity.

Body Awareness: Attention to physical sensations (breathing, comfort, distress, heart rate, temperature, etc.) and physical posture helps clients connect bodily experiences with emotions.

Exaggeration: The therapist points out subtle gestures or feelings exhibited by the client and urges them to amplify these in order to uncover and explore deeper emotions.

Figure-Ground Concept: Drawing from Gestalt psychology in which the mind forms impressions of composites rather than particulars, this concept involves identifying what conspicuously stands out to the client's awareness (the "figure") against the background of context and experience (the "ground"), to address unfinished business or unresolved emotional conflicts.

The Empty Chair Technique: Clients engage in dialogue with an imagined person or a part of themselves to aid them in processing emotions or inner conflicts.

Dream Work: Dreams are explored experientially, with clients reenacting elements of their dreams to gain insight into their subconscious, often using metaphorical, mystical, or symbolic interpretations of dream imagery.

Why is Gestalt Therapy Effective?

Gestalt therapy's effectiveness stems from its client-centered, experiential approach and its recognition of core psychological needs. Below are the reasons why it is considered effective and empowering, all supported by theoretical insights and clinical evidence.

1. Emphasis on Present-Moment Awareness

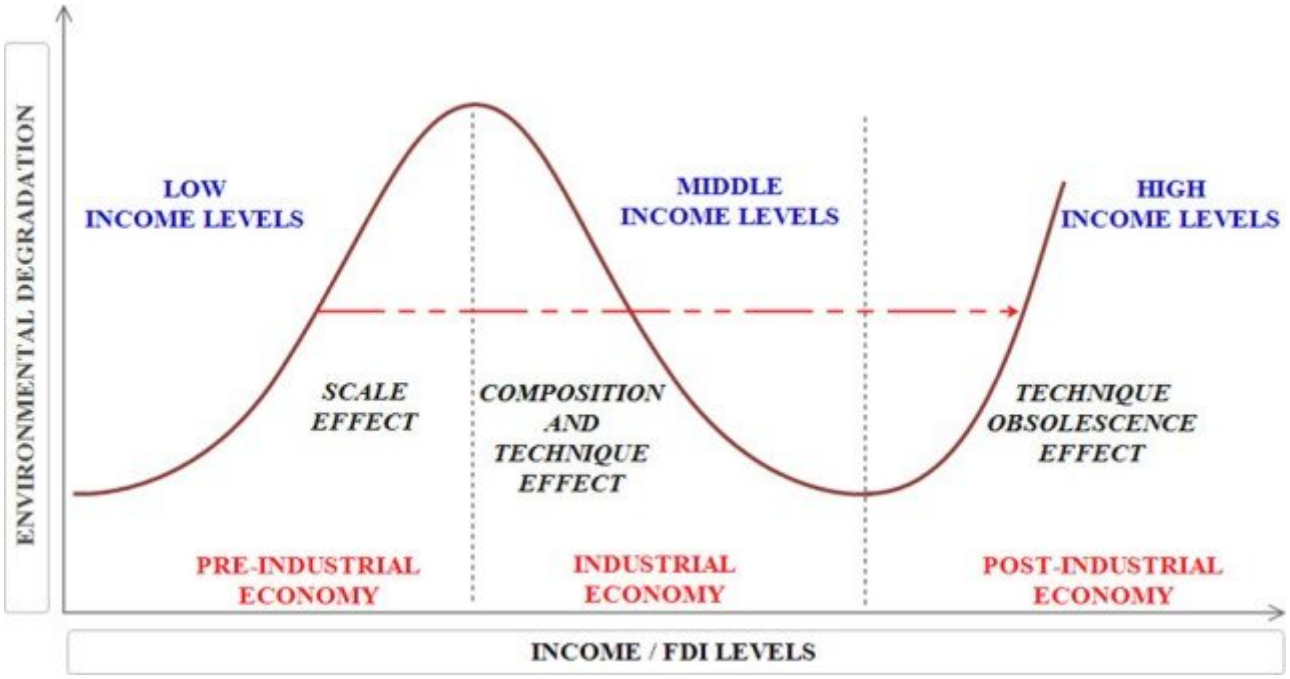
Gestalt therapy's present focus on the "Here and Now" helps clients break free from ruminating on past traumas or anxieties about the future. By anchoring attention to current experiences, it fosters mindfulness, which research links to reduced stress and improved emotional regulation. Studies on mindfulness-based interventions [e.g., Kabat-Zinn, 2003; Davidson & Kabat-Zinn, 2003] have shown benefits in reducing symptoms of anxiety and depression. This immediacy allows clients to confront and process emotions as they arise, making Gestalt therapy a dynamic, lived experience rather than an intellectual exercise.

2. Holistic Integration

Gestalt Therapy typically addresses two spheres of holism: The integrated self and the self within the environment.

By addressing the whole person—mind, body, and emotions—Gestalt therapy helps clients integrate fragmented aspects of their experience and make sense of confusing issues. For instance, noticing physical tension during a session might reveal suppressed anger, which can then be explored. This holistic approach aligns with neuroscience findings that emotional processing involves interconnected brain regions (e.g., amygdala, prefrontal cortex), and addressing multiple dimensions simultaneously enhances therapeutic outcomes [Salzman, 2010; Siegel, 2012].

The therapy's environmental focus (e.g., how clients interact with other people and respond to their surroundings) helps them understand relational dynamics and situational effects on one's psyche, improving interpersonal functioning and ones' ability to adjust to a given environment, respectively.



3. Experiential and Active Techniques

Gestalt's use of experiential methods like role-playing or the empty chair technique engages clients directly with their emotions, bypassing intellectual defenses and excuses. This is effective because experiential learning activates emotional and somatic memory systems, facilitating deeper insight and change [Greenberg, 2010]. For example, acting out a conflict with a parent via the empty chair can help clients resolve "unfinished business," leading to an emotional catharsis and a resolution of the issue.

These techniques are particularly effective for clients who struggle to articulate emotions verbally, as they provide alternative pathways to process thoughts and express emotions.

4. Empowerment and Personal Responsibility

Gestalt therapy emphasizes clients' personal agency, encouraging them to take responsibility for their thoughts, actions, and life choices. This aligns with self-determination theory [Ryan & Deci, 2000], which posits that a person's sense of autonomy and competence are critical for psychological well-being. By fostering self-awareness and willful choice, Gestalt therapy empowers clients to create meaningful change, which is particularly effective for issues like low self-esteem or feelings of helplessness.

The non-hierarchical therapist-client relationship, in which therapists act as facilitators rather than authorities, fosters a collaborative therapeutic process, which further enhances a belief of self-determination in the client.

5. Addressing Unfinished Business

Gestalt therapy targets unresolved emotional issues (e.g., unexplored desires or unexpressed grief or anger) that manifest as physical or psychological symptoms. By bringing these issues into awareness and working through them experientially, clients can achieve closure, reducing symptoms like anxiety, fear, or somatic manifestations, such as "choking" and nervous tics. This aligns with research on trauma-focused therapies, where processing unresolved emotions leads to symptom relief [van der Kolk, 2014]. The focus on "closing the Gestalt" (completing unresolved cycles of experience) helps clients move from stagnation to growth, enhancing emotional resilience.

6. Flexibility and Adaptability

Gestalt therapy is highly adaptable, suitable for diverse populations and issues, from introspective personal growth to severe mental health challenges. Its creative techniques can be tailored to individual needs, making it effective across cultural and developmental contexts. It has been used successfully in group settings, couples therapy, and with children through play-based adaptations.

Its flexibility also allows integration with other modalities, such as cognitive-behavioral therapy (CBT) or mindfulness-based approaches, enhancing its effectiveness in modern practice.

Evidence of Effectiveness

While Gestalt therapy has historically been less researched than CBT or other psychodynamic therapies due to its experiential nature and its strong dependency on therapist skill as well as the variability thereof, many studies support its efficacy.

Research on experiential therapies, including Gestalt, shows significant improvements in emotional awareness and self-regulation [Greenberg & Pascual-Leone, 2006].

Qualitative studies highlight clients' reports of increased self-awareness, emotional clarity, and improved relationships after Gestalt therapy [Yontef & Jacobs, 1989; Orfanos, 2021].

A 2013 meta-analysis [Elliott et al.] found Gestalt therapy to be effective for a range of conditions, including anxiety, depression, and interpersonal issues, with effect sizes comparable to other humanistic therapies.

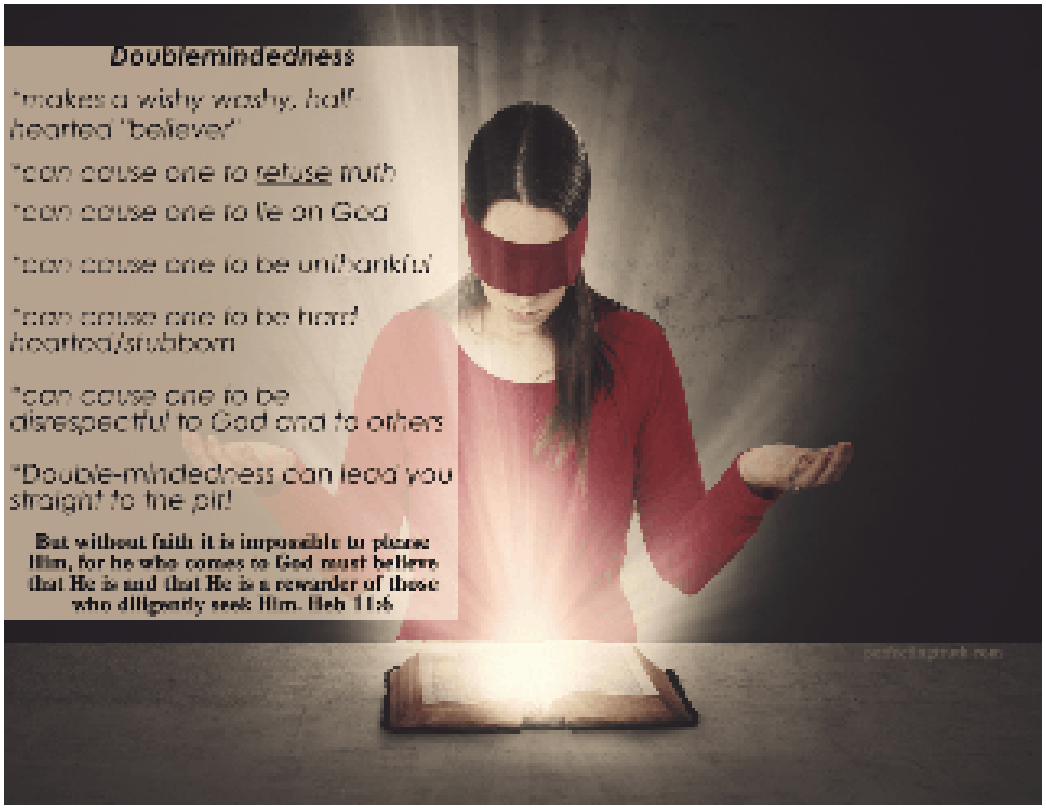
In addition, the Gestalt emphasis on mindfulness and body awareness aligns with other evidence-based practices, like Mindfulness-Based Stress Reduction (MBSR), which have robust empirical support.



Limitations and Other Considerations

Gestalt Therapy is NOT for Everyone: Gestalt's confrontational and experiential nature may be too intense for clients with severe trauma or those who prefer structured, cognitive approaches like CBT or Mindfulness-Based methods.

Therapist Skill: Gestalt therapy requires much more emotional discernment, psychological discrimination, and social perception than other therapies. Therefore, its effectiveness depends heavily on the therapist's social skills, self-control, training, ability to foster trust, and create a 'safe', nonjudgmental space for the client.

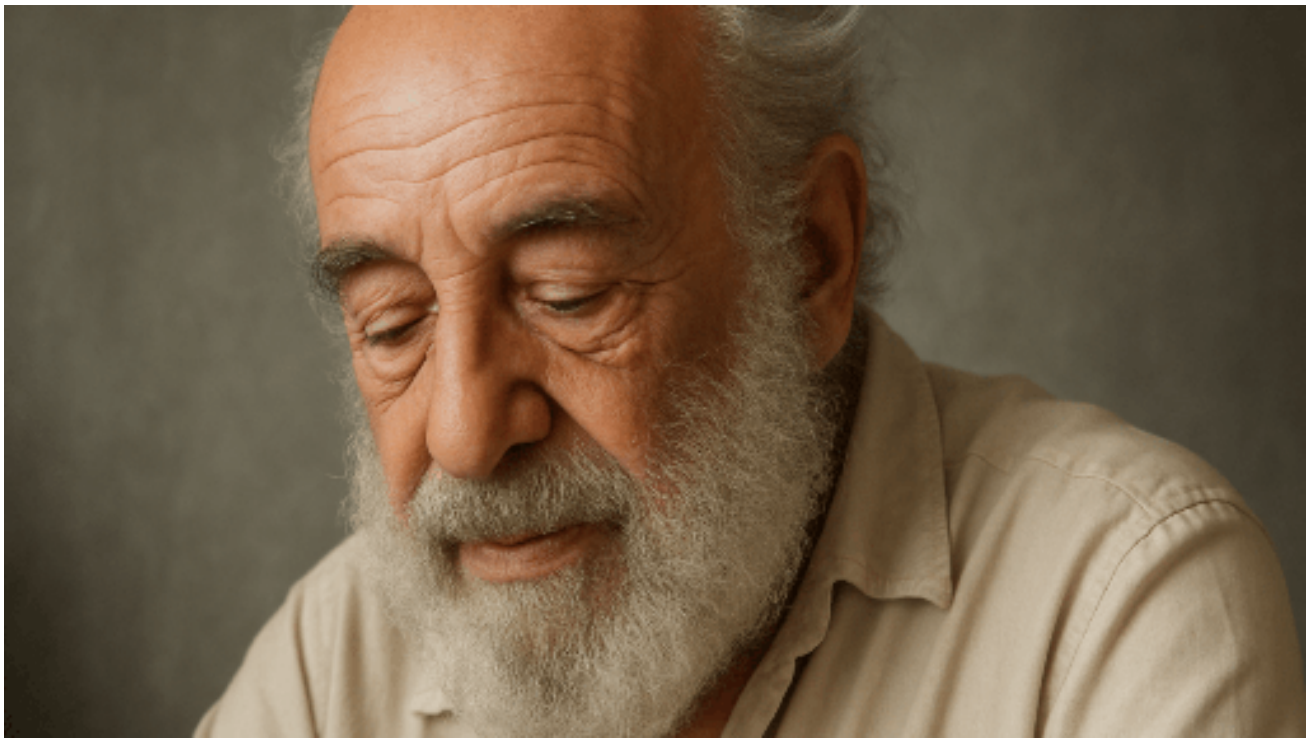
Limited Empirical Research: Gestalt therapy has fewer large-scale, randomized controlled trials compared to CBT, which may limit its credibility in evidence-based practice settings.

Summary

Gestalt therapy is a humanistic, experiential approach that fosters self-awareness, personal responsibility, and emotional integration through present-moment focus and creative techniques. It concentrates on an enhanced awareness of behavior, bodily sensations, emotion, feelings, and perception, as these are experienced "Here and Now" in the present moment.

Gestalt therapy is supported by research on experiential therapies, and it aligns with psychological principles like autonomy, mindfulness, and self-determination. Its effectiveness lies in its ability to engage clients holistically, empower them to take charge of their lives, and resolve unfinished emotional business. It is particularly effective for individuals seeking emotional clarity, personal growth, or relief from existential and/or relational challenges. However, its success depends heavily on the client's openness, honesty, readiness for experiential work, and the therapist's skill.

The magic of Gestalt therapy is that it pushes the client to abandon preconceived notions and ruminations and tap into their mystical consciousness as an experience of the present moment. The results are life-changing.



Fritz Perls

In upcoming posts, I'll cover two videos of Fritz Perls conducting Gestalt Therapy on his students within an informal classroom environment. Readers should find these to be enlightening, insightful to human nature, and thoroughly entertaining.

References

1. Davidson, R. J., Kabat-Zinn, J., Schumacher, J., Rosenkranz, M., Muller, D., Santorelli, S. F., Urbanowski, F., Harrington, A., Bonus, K., & Sheridan, J. F. (2003). Alterations in brain and immune function produced by mindfulness meditation. Biopsychosocial Science and Medicine, 65(4), 564-570. [PDF]
2. Elliott, R., Greenberg, L. S., Watson, J. C., Timulak, L., & Freire, E. (2013). Research on humanistic-experiential psychotherapies. Bergin & Garfield's Handbook of psychotherapy and behavior change, 495-538. [PDF]
3. Greenberg, L. S. (2010). Emotion-focused therapy: A clinical synthesis. Focus, 8(1), 32-42. [PDF]
4. Greenberg, L. S., & Pascual-Leone, A. (2006). Emotion in psychotherapy: A practice-friendly research review. Journal of clinical psychology, 62(5), 611-630. [PDF]
5. Kabat-Zinn, J. (2003). Mindfulness-based interventions in context: past, present, and future. [PDF]
6. Kabat-Zinn, J. (2003). Mindfulness-based stress reduction (MBSR). Constructivism in the human sciences, 8(2), 73.
7. Orfanos, P. (2021). A critical perspective of the gestalt therapeutic approach. International Journal of Humanities and Social Sciences, 13(2), 108-118. [PDF]
8. Ryan, R. M., & Deci, E. L. (2000). Self-determination theory and the facilitation of intrinsic motivation, social development, and well-being. American psychologist, 55(1), 68. [PDF]
9. Salzman, C. D., & Fusi, S. (2010). Emotion, cognition, and mental state representation in amygdala and prefrontal cortex. Annual review of neuroscience, 33(1), 173-202. [Link]
10. Siegel, D. (2012). mindsight. Spectrum. [PDF (Russian)]
11. Van der Kolk, B. (2014). The body keeps the score: Brain, mind, and body in the healing of trauma. New York, 3, 14-211. [Download Book]

12. Yontef, G., & Jacobs, L. (1989). Gestalt therapy. Current psychotherapies, 4, 59491012-604. [PDF]

Related

- Les Martel: 6 Signs You Should Select A Male Therapist (2020/9/26)
- Σ Frame: Do men need talk therapy? (2021/6/16)
- Σ Frame: Analysis Paralysis is the Gateway to the Abyss (2022/9/19)
- Aaron Renn: Collapsing Conscientiousness (2025/8/8)
- Σ Frame: Gestalt (2025/9/15)

On Choosing a Confessor

Jack · 19 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Considering the implications of a confession.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Validation; Virtue;
Note: Written in response to Tubal Cain's email.
Length: 1,350 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

The Nature of Confession

Confession is a central part of a Christian's life.

As it is written,

> Therefore, confess your sins to one another and pray for one another, that you may be healed. The prayer of a righteous person has great power as it is working.
>
> James 5:16 (ESV)

Confessing, discussing, and working out the issues, as well as prayer and being held accountable, are how one recovers from the issue. And recovering from some issues takes time.

But confession doesn't always convey the power of God or bring healing.

Thedeti pointed out,

> "People who claim to love you and who you go to church with will not hesitate to remind you of your repented of past, lest you return to your formerly wayward ways."

Yes, confession is a necessary part of holding one accountable, but being continually reminded of one's weaknesses tends to magnify and/or perpetuate the sin and it thereby becomes a part of the problem itself.

Worse, it exposes one's vulnerabilities to derision, ostracization, and ridicule.

This becomes a problem when healing remains elusive and growth cannot be attained.

Case Study — Joe2's Church

Joe2 recounted his personal experience with this.

> "Very true. I noticed the congregation generally sits in the same area each Sunday with the same people. I casually mentioned my observation to one of the players (an older, more mature Christian) whom I knew quite well from the sports team.
>
> His answer surprised me, and I didn't quite believe him until I experienced it myself. He said something like, "You have to be very careful what you say because it can come around and bite you." He and his wife sit with people they can trust.
>
> Later that year, I was at a bible study prayer request. I noticed none of the prayer requests mentioned sin. There were requests for travel mercies, wisdom in getting a car fixed, opportunities to witness to a neighbor, prayer for a sick relative, etc. That was until I mentioned something about a sin.
>
> And it took some time, but eventually it was thrown back in my face. How is my struggle coming along? Did I > backslide? What I mentioned was taken out of context and grossly exaggerated. I felt I was under a microscope and made to be someone who forever will have this problem and will always be in need of being checked upon."

Many are Called, Few are Chosen

Some people genuinely want to help you stay on the straight and narrow; others want to do so but lack the genuine authority and/or the spiritual maturity to do so effectively, and so come across as very awkward or pretentious or prying. Others simply find a twisted satisfaction in feeding off of your personal drama and using it to fuel their own. Most women invariably fall into the last category.

This is why, even in the best of churches, it is unwise to confess or discuss one's sin or even one's struggles against the consequences of others' sins (i.e. one's wife or other family members) in general company, especially mixed company. Even telling something to only one person privately can be damaging if they happen to be the 'wrong' person to tell.

This is why you'll only want to confess to someone who is willing and able to help you carry that burden until you are able to carry your own cross for yourself, and not just pass it on to someone else in the form of gossip or slander, and then eventually, it will be dumped back onto you, only much heavier as Joe2 described above, and which is all too common.

What to do?

How to identify the 'right' confessor to bare and bear?

How can you know the 'right' people to confess and share?

The Importance of Trust

Red Pill Apostle responded to Joe2, saying [emphasis mine],

> "I'm going to guess that this couple developed trust over time with the people they sit with. Shared experience, struggles, and proof of faithfulness in little things are required to build the trust that is the foundation of deeper more meaningful friendships.
>
> For men, sharing parts of their lives that leave them vulnerable should only be done with other men who are exceedingly trustworthy. Usually, that means a relationship born of being tested together and coming out the other side. Over-sharing with church groups, especially those that are mixed company or that have weak men with gossipy wives, is a hard no."

In general, I believe it comes down to trust, as RPA said. But also, the person must be trustworthy. Yes, there is a difference.

Familiarity and propinquity foster a generic form of trust, but we must resist the comfortable temptation to glibly think that a superficial trust that is formed out of regular face-time, even at church, is any deeper than it is without first being tried and tested.

On Choosing a Confessor

When choosing a confessor, the first person who comes to mind is usually a pastor or priest, but I caution readers against reflexively choosing these men before considering others first.

Just because someone is a pastor, or priest, or counselor, or deacon, or director, or elder, or whatever, doesn't mean he is the 'right' person to talk with. There are several reasons.

1. Titles do not necessarily translate into trust.
2. Sometimes, people with offices and positions and titles within the church are already too overloaded, and they're not able to give you the time and attention you need.
3. If the pastor must get involved with your issues, then it must be because no one else is able to deal with you. That is not a promising situation to be in. In this case, a Pastor or Priest may very well just show you to the door in a subtle manner, just to have one less problem on his hands. Real talk.
4. Just because a certain man holds a position in the church doesn't mean that they have the life experience, skill, wisdom, or even the time or interest to identify with your problems, speak authority into your life, admonish you properly, give you relevant feedback, and help you in a practical way other than simply being a listening ear.

I've learned NOT to run to the pastor or an elder whenever I have a personal difficulty, because, IME, that's kind of like telling the boss why you can't do your job. They are human too, and they don't want to hear about your troubles any more than the next person in the pew.

Instead, it is better to tell the Christian brother I meet every other week for coffee or tennis, because…

1. He knows me personally.
2. He has already made a personal commitment to meet together.
3. He has a track record of being responsible with these arrangements.
4. He is more likely to be understanding and graceful, and less cold and clinical.
5. It is also wise to choose someone who is very much like yourself, in terms of age, life experience, marital status, level of spiritual maturity, etc.

When I am faced with the task of picking someone in my congregation to confess to, I look for someone who is trustworthy in this way. As a final vetting qualification, I also look for someone who possesses an inner strength of character (Romans 5:3-5), and the Fruits of the Spirit, kindness, gentleness, and patience in particular.

Final Cautions

Even though you may find someone who is trustworthy enough to listen to your confession, respect your confidentiality, and help you carry your burden, readers should know that, no matter who you choose as your confessor, they will have limits. They are NOT your personal Jesus who can swallow all your crap and keep on smiling while picking the corn out of his teeth. There's a line where anything more becomes abusive to your relationship. When you bump up against those limits, and you will eventually, you must respect those boundaries if you wish to continue your relationship.

If you feel it's not enough, then you need to develop other relationships with more men and keep praying.

May the good Lord grant you wisdom in choosing a confessor who can effectively channel the power of God into your life.

Related

- Σ Frame: Confession vs. Profession (2009/10/2)
- Σ Frame: The magic of introspective judgment and authentic confession (2020/5/8)
- Les Martel: 6 Signs You Should Select A Male Therapist (2020/9/26)
- Σ Frame: Do men need talk therapy? (2021/6/16)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/5)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/30)
- Σ Frame: How to be Happy, No, Really (2024/4/19)

- Σ Frame: The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss (2024/6/5)
- Σ Frame: Community — Summary (2024/8/31)

Fritz Perls — Here and Now

Jack · 22 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A psychotherapeutic tool for effective introspection.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 2,600 words
Reading Time: 14 minutes + 24 minute video.

Intro

Here is a video of Fritz Perls giving an informal lecture about Gestalt therapy to a group of students (ca. 1969). During the lecture, he practices Gestalt therapy on one of his students.

The transcript of their talk is given below.

Prologue

Perls: The idea of Gestalt therapy is to change paper people into real people. I know, it's a big mouthful, and to make the hollow men of our time come to life and teach him to use his inborn potential and being; let's say, a leader without a rebel, having a center instead of living lopsided.

All of these ideas sound very demanding, but I believe it's now possible, if he can do it, that you don't have to lie on the couch for years, decades, and centuries without essential changes.

The condition under which this can be achieved is this.

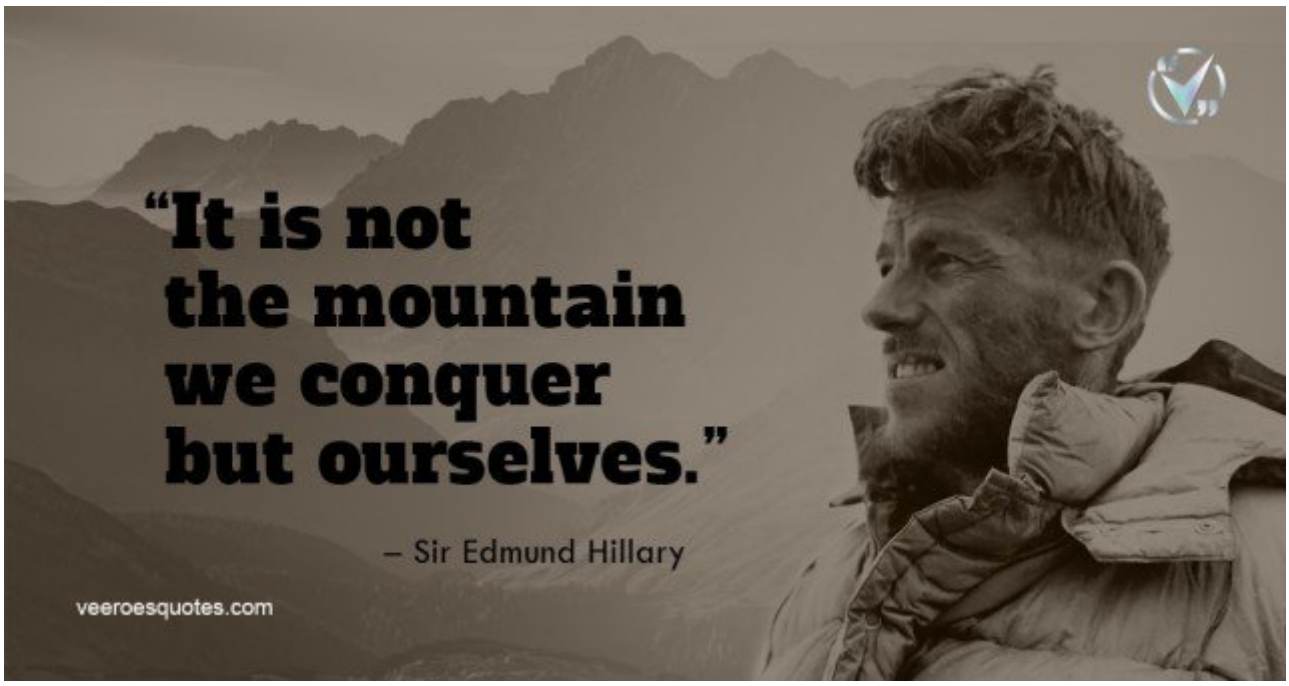
Hedonism Avoids Suffering and Averts Personal Growth

Again, I have to jump back to talk about the social milieu in which we find ourselves.

In the previous decades, [a man] lived for what is right, and he did his job. Never mind that he really wanted the job, whether he was suited for it. The whole society was crude and regulated by "should-ism", by Puritanism… "You do your thing whether you like it or not."

Now, I believe the whole social milieu has changed. Puritanism has changed into hedonism. We begin to live for fun, for enjoyment, for being turned on. Anything goes, as long … as it's nice. It sounds good too. It sounds superior to moralism. It has, however, a very serious setback. Namely, that we have become phobic towards pain and suffering. Let me repeat it. We have become phobic towards pain and suffering. Anything that's not fun or pleasant is to be avoided. So we run away from any frustration that might be painful and try to shortcut it, and the result is a lack of growth.

When I talk about the readiness to encounter unpleasantness, I certainly do not mean an education towards masochism. On the contrary, a masochist is a person who's afraid of pain and trains himself to tolerate it. I'm talking about the suffering that goes along with growing up. I'm talking about facing, honestly, unpleasant situations, and this is very much linked up with the Gestalt approach.



Understanding Gestalt

I don’t want to talk too much about the phenomenon of Gestalt. However, the main idea about Gestalt is that Gestalt is a whole — the complete, in itself, resting tool. As soon as we cut up a Gestalt, we have bits and pieces and not a whole anymore. In mere, a Gestalt wants to be completed. If the Gestalt is not completed, we are left with unfinished situations, and this unfinished situation will press and press and press and want to be completed.

Let’s say, if you had a fight, you really are angry with that guy. You want to take revenge. This need for revenge will nag and nag and nag until you have become even with them.

And so, there are a thousand unfinished Gestalt.

How to get hold of this Gestalt? It’s very simple. This Gestalt will emerge. It will come to the surface. Always, the most important Gestalt will emerge first. We don’t have to dig a la Freud into the deepest unconscious. We have to become aware of the obvious. If we understand the obvious, everything is there, and the neurotic is a person who doesn’t see the obvious.

The Now and How?

So what we are trying to do in Gestalt therapy is to understand about Now, the present, the awareness … and see what happens in the Now. And to understand the Now will take you anywhere from four weeks to twenty years.

The second point I have to make in regard to our therapy is the word How. In previous centuries, we asked “Why?” We tried to find causes, reasons, excuses, rationalizations. and we thought if we can change the causes we can change the effect. In our electronic age, we don’t ask why anymore. We ask How. We investigate the structure, and if we understand the structure, then we can change the structure. And the structure with which we are most interested in is the structure of our life script.

The structure of our life script is often called 'karma', or 'fate' … and we are not very much aware that we are writing our life script — a life script which is mostly taken up with self-torture, futile self-improvement games, achievements, and so on. So what we want to do is to reorganize our life script, and the means and ways to do it can be understood to quite an extent.

Right now, I'm interested in meeting some of you, and I have to admit, I have a very bad memory for names, and I have to know a person pretty well, or have a shock or a great joy when I meet this person, so that I can recall the names.

10:00

In order to work, I like, and I brag about, the six components of my work. To work, I need (1) my skill, (2) the so-called "Hot Seat" which in this case is very beautiful, (3) the "Empty Chair", which has the task of taking up roles which you have disowned, (4) other people, which we need to understand our life script. (5) We need something that is absent — I hope maybe today we don't need it — that is Kleenex. (6) My cigarettes, the ashtray… Then I am in business.

So I invite anyone who wants to come forth and work with me to take the Hot Seat.

[Don comes to sit in the Hot Seat.]

Perls: I have only one request to make to you: to use the word "now", if possible, with every sentence.

Don: Now I feel my heart beating. Now I wonder why I'm sitting here. [Students laugh.]

12:00

Why did I wish to fill the void?

Now I'm wondering … what is there to work with?

Perls: Yeah. Let me interrupt you here and switch back to Freud and his psychoanalysis.

Freud said, "a person who's free from guilt feelings and anxiety is healthy". My own theory about anxiety and guilt are those: Guilt, as I hope to show in its context, is nothing but unexpressed resentment; and anxiety is nothing but the gap between the now and the later. As soon as you leave the secure basis of the now and jump into the future, you experience anxiety, or in this case, stage fright. You get excited, the heart begins to race, silence, and so on … all the symptoms of stage fright.

The fact that we very often don't notice our chronic anxiety is simply that we fill the gap of the now and later with insurance policies, rigid character formations, daydreams, and so on. If we reduce the later to the now, the anxiety is bound to collapse.

So, let's do this now. Close your eyes and tell us in detail, what do you experience now?

Don: Well, physically, I feel the warmth of one hand on another.

I feel … now I feel … tension throughout my body…. especially up here. [Don points to his right upper chest.]

Perls: Right. Can you enter this tension?

Don: It's as if I'm being stretched this way.

Perls: Don, can you do this to me? Touch me.

Don: It's as if it's pulled up this way. [With both hands, Don strokes Perls' chest outward to his shoulders.]

Perls: More! Do it as much as you need to. [Students laugh as Don continues pressing and tugging on Perls' clothing.]

Perls: Okay, now sit down.

Don: Now it's gone away. [Students laugh.]

Perls: If you learn to do unto others what you do unto yourself, you stop repressing yourself, and preventing yourself from what you've got to do. I don't understand yet his need to stretch me. But, to talk about it would be … and here I have to shock you, because I have to introduce one of the technical terms in Gestalt therapy, which is "Mind F_cking".

The very moment we just play these intellectual games, like they do usually in group therapy … they throw opinion on each other, explanations … People interpret each other… So nothing happens except these intellectual games.

So what do you experience now, Don?

Don: My own "Mind F_cking", explaining to myself why I would want to stretch you.

Perls: Okay, let's introduce the Empty Chair. Ask Don this question.

Don: [Speaking to his imagined other self in the Empty Chair] Don, why do you want to stretch yourself or another person?

Perls: So, change seats. [Don moves to the Empty Chair.] And this is the decisive place. Start to write your script between the two opponents.

Don: [Speaking to his imagined other self in the Hot Seat] Well Don, you're not good enough the way you are. So you've got to stretch.

[Don gets up from the Empty Chair and moves back to the Hot Seat.]

Don: Yeah, that's quite possible. One never knows what one's potentials are, unless one does stretch. I agree, I should stretch.

[Perls beckons Don to move to the Empty Chair.]

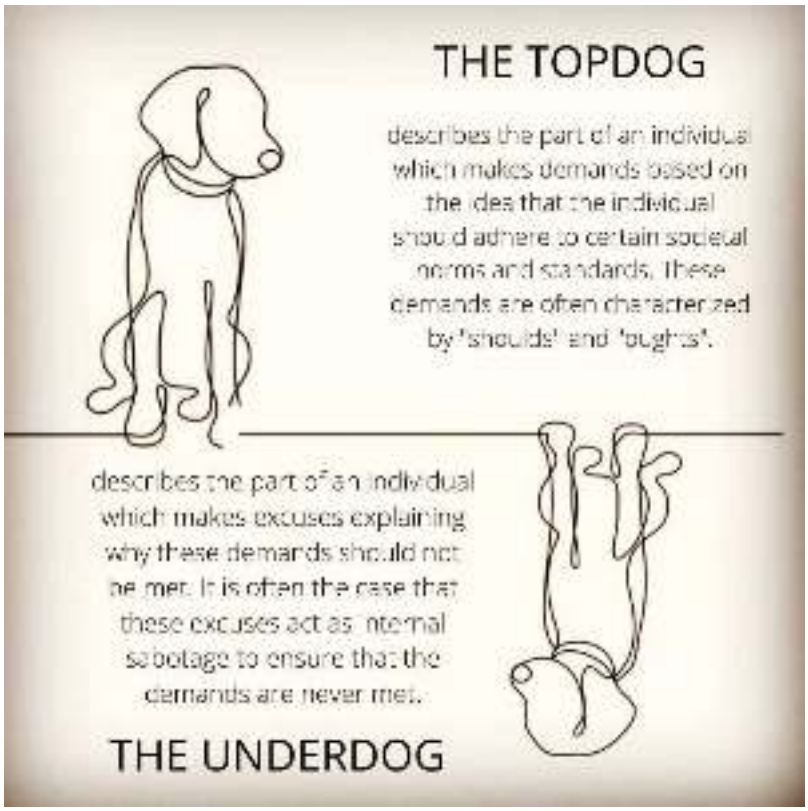
Don: [Speaking to his other self in the Hot Seat] Yes, you seem to have got the message, and all you have to do now is do something about it.

[Don moves back to the Hot Seat.]

Don: Yeah. I do try to do something about it, sometimes. I'm constantly aware that I am supposed to do something about it; I don't always do something about it … once in a while.

The Top Dog vs The Underdog

Perls: Yeah. We make now the first acquaintance with one of the most frequent splits to the human personality; that is, the Top Dog / Underdog split. The Top Dog is known in psychoanalysis as the super-ego or the conscience. Unfortunately, Freud left out the Underdog, and he did not realize that usually the Underdog wins in the conflict between the Top Dog and the Underdog.



I'll give you the frequent characteristics of both. The Top Dog is righteous, sometimes right, but always righteous. He takes it for granted that this Top Dog that tells us, "you should stretch it", to prove that the Top Dog is correct. The Top Dog always says, "You should…", and the Top Dog threatens, "If not, then…". However, the Top Dog is pretty straightforward.

Now, the Underdog works with a different method. The Underdog says, "Yeah?!? Oh! I promise!!!" [heavy sarcasm] "Why grieve?" [Students laugh.] "Oh, why the bother?" "If I only could!"

20:00

So the Underdog is a very good frustrater, and then the Top Dog, of course, won't let it get away with it. It increases the use of the word [politely alluding to "Mind F_cking"], and so the self-torture gibbets of improvement, gibbets, or whatever you want to call it, goes on.

You're in, you're out. And you're in, you're out … and nothing ever happens. Right?

Don: Not quite, but… Without the Top Dog, he's pushing … he gets… [stammers]

Perls: Say this to the Top Dog. [Points to the Empty Chair.]

Don: Um, yeah, you keep pushing, and sometimes I do do something. I'll often feel it isn't adequate enough for your … It doesn't quite meet your demands.

Perls: So be the Top Dog and demand!

[Don moves to the Empty Chair.]

21:00

Perls: Put in your demands! "You should …"

Don: You should get much more organized, and you could be far more intelligent about how you go about things than you are right now.

Perls: Okay. Now, again! Be, "Do unto others what we do unto yourself." Say the same sentence to these people here. "You should get better organized…"

Don: [Sighs and turns to the other students.] Yeah, Bill. If you want to improve, you should get much better organized and make much more use of your time and energy. And you should get much more organized and be more intelligent about how you go about things. You'd go a lot further.

And Gail, well, you can do the same. [Students laugh nervously.]

Perls: How do you feel that poor when you say this to others and not to your soul?

Don: I feel that … they can tell me to go to hell.

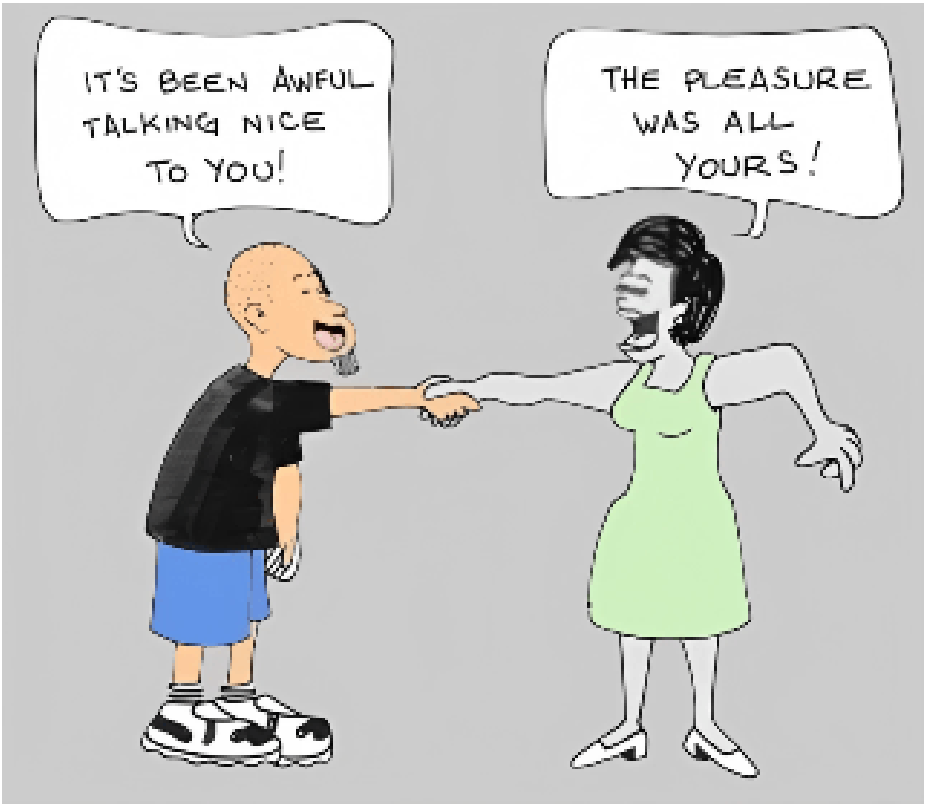
Perls: Okay, then you [students] tell him to go to hell. You [Don] keep on nagging and nagging what to do, and then you [other students] tell him to go to hell.

22:00

Gail: [Giggling and playing along] Go to hell.

Don: [To Gail] Haven't I told you often enough … that you should work harder?

Gail: [Speaking gaily] Yes, as a matter of fact, you have!



Don: [To Ann] Ann, can't you work harder? Can't you organize yourself better?

Ann: [Speaking casually and warmly] I don't want to, thank you on that though.

Don: [Speaking sheepishly] How about you Bill? I mean, you could go much further if you organized yourself better. You could be a wealthy man now … [Bill laughs nervously and looks down] … a fantastically successful business, if you organize yourself and work harder … with your talent …

Perls: Okay, how do you feel now?

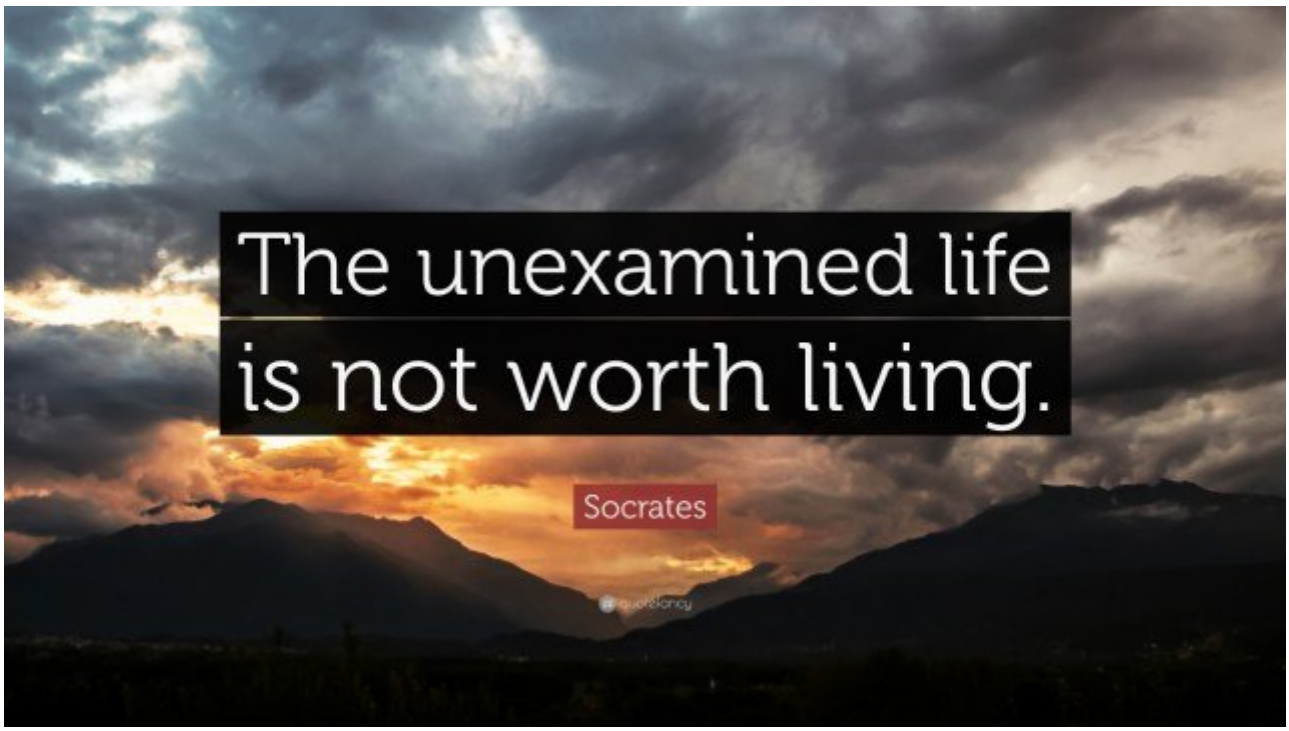
Don: I feel like a very self-righteous _____! [Students laugh.]

Perls: How is your stage fright?

Don: It's gone away.

Perls: Yeah. But this being self-righteous is part of your life script, and so you need a lot of people you can be self-righteous with.

[Don sits quietly contemplating his experience. Perls graciously offers his hand to Don. Don takes Perls' hand and leaves the Empty Chair. The scene ends with students sitting quietly in a somber, pensive mood.]



Jack's Comments

This interaction occurred some 20 years after Perls first developed Gestalt Therapy; his approach, habits, and techniques are highly developed and refined.

Perls remains calm, charming, and pleasant throughout the session. His speech is slow, methodical, and profoundly articulate, despite his heavy German accent. He speaks in a soft, yet authoritative voice that helps students relax and trust. He is consistently considerate and polite. He gives clear directions and grants students plenty of time to respond without pressure. Although he uses profane terminology at times, it comes across as honest and humorous.

I find it remarkable that Perls adapts Jesus' adage in Matthew 7:12 and Luke 6:31, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you", but with a twist on the perspective: "Do unto others what you do unto yourself." Here, it is not implemented as a guide for moral behavior, as implied by the plain reading of this Bible passage, but rather as a guide for introspective self-awareness in a socialized context.

As you can see through this exchange, role playing is a powerful way to show acceptance, affirmation, and genuine love to one's self and to others, as I described before. However, it takes real courage, humility, and trust to do so.

This interaction takes the form of an authentic confession for Don, bringing him into a fuller awareness of the subconscious psychology behind his temperament and a deeper knowledge of what he needs out of his relationships with others. He is able to write his life script, as Perls says. It is assumed that once he understands his life script, he can make changes to it. Perls said this may take anywhere from 4 weeks to 20 years.

I see no reason why this type of role-playing approach could not be applied as a tool for encouraging authentic confessions and working through the implications within a Christian social context.

Related

- Σ Frame: Confession vs. Profession (2009/10/2)
- Σ Frame: Developing Attitudes That Help You Cope (2015/11/5)
- Σ Frame: The magic of introspective judgment and authentic confession (2020/5/8)
- Σ Frame: No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29)
- Σ Frame: Play is the Essence of Game (2025/5/21)

- Σ Frame: Fate vs Self-Awareness (2025/8/27)
- Σ Frame: What is Gestalt Therapy? (2025/9/17)

Fritz Perls — Awareness

Jack · 24 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Bringing the awareness into the present moment.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 2,600 words
Reading Time: 15 minutes + 25 minute video.

Intro

Here is a video of Fritz Perls giving an informal lecture about Gestalt therapy to a group of students (ca. 1969). During the lecture, he practices Gestalt therapy impromptu and in situ with four of his students.

The transcript of their talk is given below.

Learning

Perls: Learning is mostly misunderstood. My definition of learning is to discover that something is possible. It's not just the taking in of some information. And all I want to do is here to show you that it is possible to discover means of ways whereby you can grow and develop your potential and our difficulties in our life. Now, of course this cannot be done in a short workshop, but maybe I can plant a few seeds, and take away a few of the 'covers' that will open up possibilities.

Again, let me repeat. Learning is to discover that something is possible.

Suffering

Perls: We are using most of our energies for self-destructive games, for self-preventing games, and I mentioned already that we do this, and prevent ourselves from growing, the very moment something unpleasant, something painful comes up. At that moment we become phobic. We run away. We desensitize ourselves. We do all kinds of means and ways to prevent the growth process.

Again, we have to go another step further and say that the neurotic suffering is suffering in imagination, suffering in fantasy. If somebody calls you a son of a b!tch, then you think you are suffering. You feel hurt, but you don't feel hurt. You know you're not hurt. There are no bruises. There are no actual injuries there. It is your so-called ego or vanity that is hurt. We can even go a step further and say, when you say you feel hurt, you actually feel vindictive, and you want to hurt the other person.

Approach

Perls: So what I'd like to do in the beginning is to take a few of you, ask you to come sit on the hot seat, and work on the phenomenological basis. This means, on the awareness of the ongoing process. If you live in the present, you use whatever is available. If you live in your computer and your thinking machine, or in those obsolete responses in your rigid way of coping with life, you stay stuck.

So let's take a few words from you, whoever wants to come forth, and the more stage fright, the better.

Case Study 1 — Christopher

[Christopher comes forward and sits in the hot seat.]

Perls: So let's work very primitively, given if we structure the whole thing a little bit, rigidly, pompously for the first moment, you guys soon will soon see the meaning of it. So start with the sentence, "Now I am aware of…"

Christopher: Now I'm aware of tension in my right arm. Now I am aware of faces looking in my direction. Now I'm aware of you, Fritz, and I'm … now I'm still aware of my hand, and now I'm aware of changing my position to a more relaxed position. Now I'm aware of the box in front of me. Now I'm aware of waiting for the pressure to be taken off me. [Christopher smiles nervously.]

Perls: You see, at this moment, you jumped into the future. You were "waiting for", which means he stopped being aware of what's going on. Except if we now reduce his anticipation to the ongoing process. Can we do it with Christoph? How? "How" covers all possible means of behavior. How do you experience waiting?

Christopher: I experience waiting as, right at this moment, as a tremendous tension here, definitely tension throughout my whole body, plus a certain fearful blankness starting to cover my thinking process.

Perls: Yeah. I have to add what I'm aware of. I'm aware that you're doing a lot of smiling, and even when you talk about unpleasantness, like unpleasant tension, you're still smiling, and to me, this is inconsistent.

Christopher: [Nervous laughter] This may be true. It's a weapon, I suppose.

Perls: What are you doing now?

Christopher: Intellectualizing?

Perls: Yeah, you're defending yourself. Are you aware of that?

Christopher: Yes.

Perls: So maybe my remark was unpleasant for you?

Christopher: Perhaps a little bit, yes. [Bites lip. Nervous smiling]

Perls: Are you now aware of your smiling?

Christopher: Eh… don't you like me smiling?

[Long silence.]

Perls: Were you aware of what you did with that sentence?

Christopher: I thought I expressed a certain amount of hostility, perhaps.

Perls: You attacked me. But maybe you didn't know.

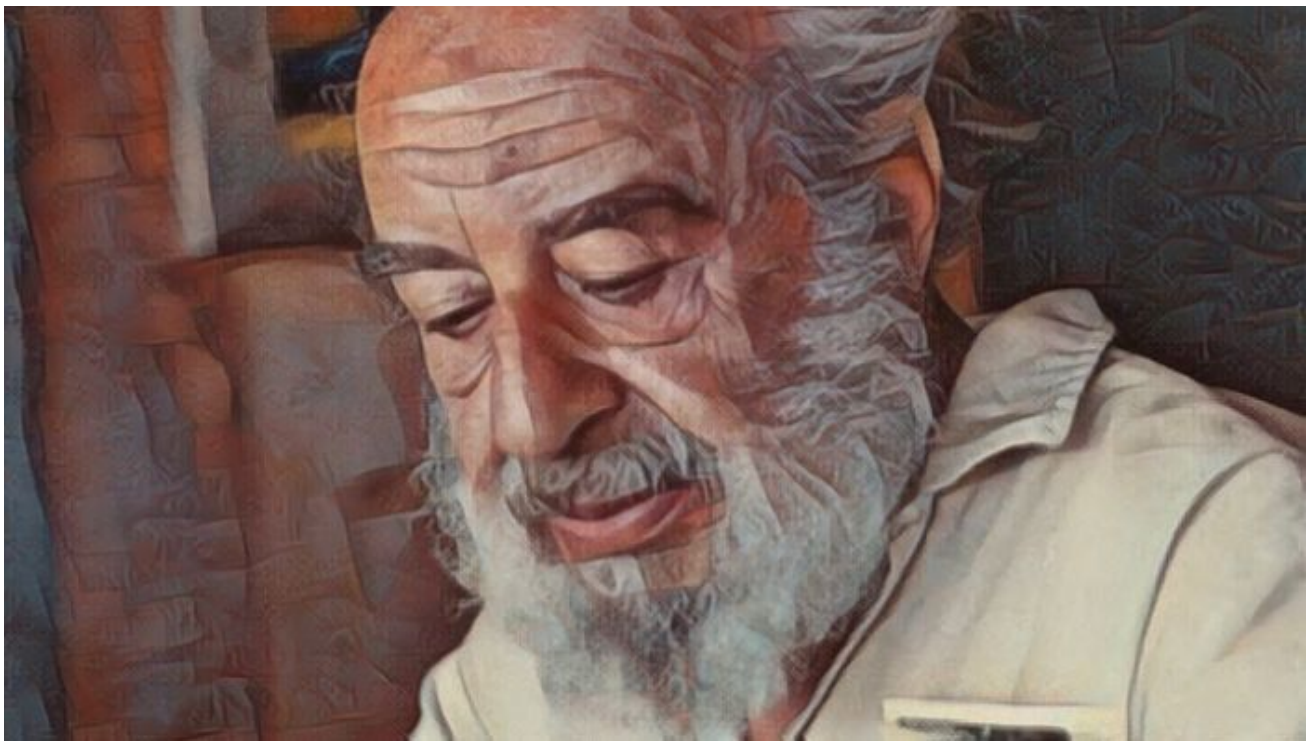
Christopher: But I didn't mean to attack you.

Perls: Now, again. Are you aware that you are getting defensive again?

Christopher: Yes, I have a very defensive nature, I think. [Nervous smiling]

Perls: Okay, on to our next one. I just want a short example to reinforce the awareness basis.

[Christopher leaves the Hot Seat. Don comes forward and sits in the hot seat.]



Our Focus of Awareness

Perls: You see, what we do is simply, simply, simply to get acquainted with the ongoing process of awareness and how the different people avoid the full involvement in what is there.

Perls: We can also now take the next step and see, "What are you in touch with?"

There are three possibilities. You can be in touch with the world, you can be in touch with yourself, or you can be in touch with your fantasy life.

The fantasy life, or the "Middle Zone" was first discovered by Freud under the name of "complex", and it is the Middle Zone which is the insane part of ourself. It's a fantasy.

9:00

Whenever this fantasy is taken for a real thing, you know, the real insane person is known as a person who says, "I'm Napoleon", and he actually believes that he's a Napoleon. If I say, "I would like to be Napoleon", you wouldn't call me crazy, but if I say, "I'm Napoleon! Go! March to Österreich! [Austria]" or whatever it is, you would say, "What is this queer behavior of that guy?" And especially, this zone, there, in which we are fully and absolutely crazy, that is in our dreams. You'll see later on, that just these dreams, the Middle Zone, has assumed so much importance in our life that we are out of touch with reality, which is either (1) that reality of the world, or (2) the other reality of our authentic self.

Case Study 2 — Don

10:00

Perls: All right. Do you also start with this experiment? "Now I am aware of…"

Don: Now I am immediately aware of … that your attention is turned from me … turned on to me … that my voice seems quavering … That I … my mind is sort of split between a fantasy and being aware of my body.

Perls: "Now my mind is split between fantasy and body." For me, mind is fantasy. And when you say, "my mind is split", I guess you mean, "my attention is split".

Don: Right? Exactly. If my body is in my mind, my mind is on my body. That's where my attention is.

I still feel a quivering, like a shivering leaf in my chest. I notice that my hand is fluttering around a little bit. I pointed to my chest. The quivering is rising into my throat. I'm aware that I'm staring at a carpet. People's feet are moving.

Perls: Yeah. Are you also aware that your avoiding looking? Looking at me, looking at anybody?

Don: Yeah. I'm not looking before now. [Don looks around the room.] People seem very tense, sort of suspended… but very real.

Perls: So can you now start shuttling between self-awareness and world awareness? The self-awareness is symbolized by the word "I", and the world awareness by the word "you". "I" and "thou". If you have too much "I", you're self-centered with donetzen [sic], and if you have too much "thou", you're paranoic, or aggressive, or businessmen, or something like that.

Don: Well, I'm looking at you. I'm looking at you now, and the more I look at you the less quivering I feel inside myself. And some of you seem to look right straight at me, and some of you look out from the side of your head or from the top of your head. Shirley, you seem to be looking at me, from below or above, and Dawn, you seem to be [looking at me] from the side of your head.

Perls: Now shuttle back to self-awareness.

Don: I feel a great ball of tension in here. My mouth is dry.

Perls: Now shuttle back to world awareness.

Don: I seem to want to focus on one or another…

Perls: You are still in the "I".

Don: [Looks at Gordon.] Gordon, you're looking very confident but a bit fierce.

Perls: Yeah. Now you saw it. Now shuttle back to yourself.

Don: That makes me feel confident. [Don smiles with self-satisfaction.]

Perls: Now you see, you get an integration. "World" and "I" are one. If "I" see, I don't see. The world just is there. As soon as I see, I strain, I pierce, and do all kinds of things except having a world.

Perls: Okay, thank you.

[Don leaves the Hot Seat. Penny comes forward and sits in the hot seat.]

Case Study 3 — Penny

Perls: Your name is?

Penny: Penny

Perls: You are Penny. Yeah.

Penny: I'm aware of my heart beating. My hands are cold. I'm afraid to look out. My heart is still pounding.

Perls: Were you aware of how you avoided me? Cute!

You looked at me and quickly looked away. This!

[Penny smiles.]

Perls: Were you aware that you started smiling when you looked at me?

[Penny nods with acknowledgment.]

Perls: What kind of smile did you experience?

Penny: I'm afraid. I try to hide my fear.

Perls: Is your fear pleasant or unpleasant?

[Penny is contemplative and silent.]

16:00

Perls: Do you feel comfortable with your fear?

Penny: Yes. My heart's not pounding so much anymore.

Perls: Now try to get more of the rhythm of contacting the Gestalt, of coping in the Gestalt. This is the rhythm of life. You flow towards the world, and you withdraw into yourself; you flow towards the world and withdraw into yourself. That is the basic rhythm of life. In winter we are more withdrawn, some are more outgoing. During the night we withdraw deeply, and during the day, we are more busy with coping. If I miss a word, I withdraw to my dictionary and come back when I've found the word to fill in the gap in the sentence.

17:00

So this rhythm goes on, and … "I" and "thou" together form a unit, and if you… if you have this Middle Zone, then this Middle Zone comes between you and the world and stops you from functioning adequately, especially if in this middle there are catastrophic expectations or complexes that distorts your view of the world and so on.

Yeah, we can deal with this later. Right now, I want to give you a feel of that contact and withdrawal situation. "I" possibly withdraw as deep as possible. Go even away from this whole world, and then come back. Then you see again, "Us." And you will see what will happen if you try this world.

Penny: I feel frustrated. I want to do something.

Perls: Say this again.

Penny: I want to do something.

[Penny closes her eyes and dwells on her self-awareness.]

Perls: Now come back.

[Penny opens her eyes and looks at Perls.]

Perls: What do you experience here now?

Penny: Colors are bright. The colors are bright!

Perls: "The colors are bright!" That is a good symptom. This is what we call, in Gestalt therapy, a mini Satori. She begins to wake up. Did you notice this? The world becomes clear. The colors are bright. This sounded very genuine and spontaneous.

[Penny leaves the Hot Seat. Perls turns his attention to Ann.]

Case Study 4 — Ann

Perls: Could you come forward for a time?

[Ann comes to sit in the Hot Seat.]

Perls: Your name is?

Ann: Ann.

I'm aware of a tension in my head. So it's all around my head. I feel it as a tingling and tightening, like my head is going to sleep, like a lamb goes to sleep, and it burns as well.

20:00

Perls: Now. Go to the world. What are you aware of in your environment?

[Ann becomes emotional and begins weeping.]

I'm aware of this boy here who looks very kindly towards me, in my view. I sense a release of kindness and understanding.

Perls: Now we come to another condition in Gestalt therapy. We never gossip about anybody who is here. You always try to establish contact. Can you say the same sentence to him instead of gossiping about him? Say this to him.

Ann: I feel… I feel… that your being… that you feel very kindly and sympathetic.

[The man looks on intently, but remains silent.]

21:00

Perls: Now withdraw again.

Perls: You were aware that you were crying a little bit?

Ann: Mm-hmm.

Perls: So why don't you say so?

Ann: I'm … I'm aware of crying … just being upset. I feel it has sort of … the upsetness, the sort of patterns has broken up in some way.

Perls: Now come back to us.

[Ann opens her eyes and faces Perls.]

Perls: This time you came to me. How do you experience me?

22:00

Ann: I experience you as a … a very real … a very sort of definite person who's just quite close, and just is here with me. Well, not just with me, but with everybody that's here.

Perls: Now go away from me again. Parting is such sweet sorrow.

Ann: I feel that I'm aware of tension in my head, a tightening particularly above my ears.

Perls: Can you close your eyes and find out how you do this? What are you tensing? How do you produce your tightness?

Ann: I feel I pull things in, and I pull things together.

Perls: Come back once more.

Ann: I feel the group has sort of opened up a bit.

Perls: Yeah. Good. Thank you.

[Perls extends his hand to Ann. She takes it and leaves the Hot Seat.]

Perls: Now this is the basis of expanding awareness. We don't need LSD or any of the artificial means of jazzing us up, if we produce our own awareness. If we do it ourselves and not rely on artifacts, we have all the basis for growth that we need.

So let's have a break.

Image from Bachmann, T. (2022). The Forms of Contact: An Approach to Theme, Process, State, and Methods in Coaching. In: Greif, S., Möller, H., Scholl, W., Passmore, J., Müller, F. (eds) International Handbook of Evidence-Based Coaching. Springer, Cham. https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-030-81938-5_29

Jack's Comments

These interactions occurred some 20 years after Perls first developed Gestalt Therapy; his approach, habits, and techniques are highly developed and refined.

Gestalt therapy requires much more emotional discernment, psychological discrimination, and social perception than other therapies. Here, Perls uses a technique that I'll call, "The Precise Ear" which requires the teacher (or counselor, mentor, etc.) to have excellent listening skills, such that he is able to comprehend (1) what the speaker intends to say but which is NOT being said, and (2) what the speaker is expressing, but may not be very well aware of. The counselor will then help the client find more precise words to express exactly what the client means.

Related

- Σ Frame: Confession vs. Profession (2009/10/2)
- Σ Frame: Developing Attitudes That Help You Cope (2015/11/5)
- Σ Frame: The magic of introspective judgment and authentic confession (2020/5/8)
- Σ Frame: No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29)
- Σ Frame: Christ is in You (2023/4/3)
- Σ Frame: Play is the Essence of Game (2025/5/21)
- Σ Frame: Fate vs Self-Awareness (2025/8/27)
- Σ Frame: What is Gestalt Therapy? (2025/9/17)

Man's Purpose in the Lord's Prayer

Jack · 26 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The purpose of our life is outlined in the Lord's Prayer.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Glory;
Author's Note: The following commentary was submitted by an anonymous reader. Edited by Jack.
Length: 350 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

The purpose of our life is outlined in the Lord's Prayer.

> [9b] Our Father in heaven,
> hallowed be Your name.
> [10] Your kingdom come,
> Your will be done,
> on earth as it is in heaven.
> [11] Give us this day our daily bread,
> [12] and forgive us our debts,
> as we also have forgiven our debtors.
> [13] And lead us not into temptation, > but deliver us from evil.
>
> Matthew 6:9-13; Luke 11:1-4 (ESV)

Let's examine this, line by line.

"Our Father in heaven" — Experiencing Sonship

"hallowed be Your name" — Exaltation of God's Name

"Your kingdom come" — Expansion of God's Kingdom

"Your will be done" — Execution of God's Will

"on earth as it is in heaven" — Exhibition of God's Power

"Give us this day our daily bread" — Receiving God's daily provision.

"forgive us our debts" — Preserving the solvency of our domain.

"as we also have forgiven our debtors." — Maintaining the integrity of our souls.

"And lead us not into temptation" — Avoiding greed, lust, poverty mentality, etc.

"but deliver us from evil." — Staying free from the snares of sin and the Devil.

Our every action must assert an Amen to these. Otherwise our life is lacking purpose.

All in all, we should live our lives in exultation of God's Glory.

Experiencing God, Expansion, Execution, Exhibition, Provision, Preservation, Integrity, Righteousness, Spiritual Freedom, and Exaltation of His Glory.

We are not accustomed to think of the Lord's prayer like this, but yes — it should end in HIS GLORY!

Related

- Σ Frame: Calling All Angels (2011/5/1)
- Σ Frame: Identifying Your Spiritual Domain (2021/12/1)
- Σ Frame (Rock Kitaro): Glorifying God Through the Courage of Upholding His Moral Laws (2023/3/17)
- Σ Frame (WhiteGuy1): Glorifying God through Spiritual Gifts (2023/3/27)
- Σ Frame: Christ is in You (2023/4/3)
- Σ Frame: The Challenges of Moving Towards Headship (2023/4/5)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Power (2024/1/10)
- Σ Frame: The Manosphere Blogger's Prayer (2024/6/15)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Joshua 1:1-9 is NOT a Bootstrap Speech (2025/1/29)
- Σ Frame: Identity (2025/2/28)
- Σ Frame: 8 Deterrences to Domain (2025/8/15)
- Σ Frame: Putting the Noahic Covenant into Perspective (2025/8/25)

On the Selection of Mythos

Jack · 27 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The Mythos that validates preconceived notions of truth and inspires purpose is the one believed, for good or ill.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Problems with The Red Pill; Validation;
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Confusion about the Value of Mythos

In Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 1 (2023/7/12), I covered a video from The Thinking Ape in which he said,

> "…there's no way getting around the fact that mating and dating is like a job application. It's very mechanical, romance is secondary, you need to meet the requirements above all the men… And the resistance people show, the sense of ickiness when confronted with that reality, just goes to show, in my humble opinion, that we as a species need to live with certain fairy tales and myths. Saying the truth outright can be destructive oftentimes. Sometimes you need metaphors. You need some kind of interpretive lens through which you can see things, rather than saying, "Well, here's the deal. You need to be tall. You need to make money. You need to look good. You need to do this. You need to do that." All mechanical."

I believe Thinking Ape is correct that the average Joe is likely to be repelled by the chewy details and will not "get it" without first having a comprehensive, interpretive narrative to give him the gist of the grist.

Devon70 objected, saying,

> "I disagree with Thinking Ape that people need these fairy tales and myths about the opposite sex, and in fact, holding onto to these fairy tales is the problem.
>
> The only healthy marriages I know are immigrants from traditional cultures that have realistic beliefs. The husband does not see his wife as a Disney princess, and the wife does not expect the husband to be a great-looking rich guy. They are married to raise the next generation, and that's it.
>
> Part of growing up is accepting reality and discarding fairy tales, and lots of people in the West don't want to do that."

I believe Devon's observation is also correct, in that mythos is not reality, and that people get swept up in false notions derived from certain mythos, such as Disney World, Erotic Fantasia, P0rn, Life Scripts, and so on.

But how can they both be correct?

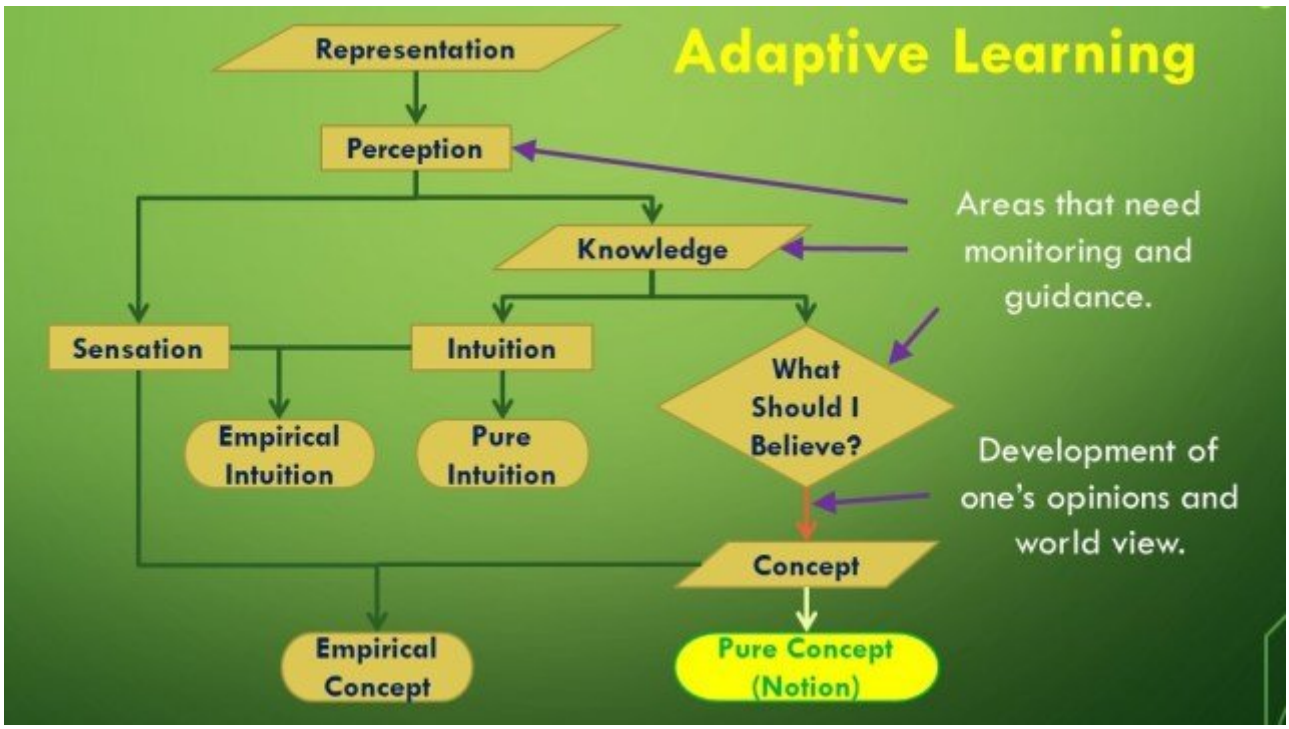
Here, I'll sort this out using the lens of Mythos and belief.

It's Only 'True' If You Believe It

A previous essay provided an overview of many Themes portraying Archetypal Mythos. In summary, there are many conflicting Mythos that prevail throughout Western culture. Chivalry is a mythos. Democracy is a mythos. Feminism is a mythos. Individualism is a mythos. "Land of the free and home of the brave" is a mythos. Life Scripts are mythos. Social Equality is a mythos. The American Dream is a mythos. Much of The Red Pill lore is a mythos. Culture itself is built on mythos, and a specific mythos is emphasized within every culture and sub-culture. Even Biblical Christianity is, to a large extent, conveyed through mythos, as Jesus and the prophets taught in metaphors and parables.

It is seldom that we ever see any one mythos played out in real life as a self-sustaining reality. We must turn to films, literature, and the arts to find pure Mythos in a Meaningful, succinct, and easily digestible form. Other than this, there are anecdotes, news stories (which are often contrived to fit a narrative mythos), online arguments, snapshots, and memes.

Despite having all these mythos to entertain ourselves with, people will usually settle on a small interlocking set of mythos to dwell upon and take to heart. As time goes on, the individual will fall into a Cognitive-Emotional-Behavioral (CEB) Cycle built around the set of beliefs associated with the chosen Mythos. RPA and I have referenced this process in several past posts, most recently in Fate vs Self-Awareness (2025/8/27).



Choosing Mythos

When people are presented with two conflicting mythos, they will latch onto one mythos in favor of another, usually the one they are more comfortable with or more familiar with. The value derived from subscribing to one particular mythos over another all depends on the match between what that individual is seeking and what strikes the chord of Meaningful, and what the mythos entails and implies about the perceived Meaning of reality.

To offer a greatly simplified dichotomy for the sake of illustration…

- If the Mythos conveys core truths, and includes the purpose and value thereof, then it is bound to be a bitter pill that remedies an illness of the soul. The Meaning is "No Pain, No Gain", or "Suffering for Salvation", etc.
- If the Mythos portrays a fantasy world of pleasurable but ultimately useless lies, then it is a delicious poison that anesthetizes the soul and traps the conscious mind in a suspension of belief. The Meaning is the intrinsic enjoyment of dissipation and sin.

In reality, there is a large grey area between what is real and what is presumed possible, limited only by faith on one hand, and the imagination on the other.

Which Mythos is chosen is largely determined by whether one perceives a working model of reality that enhances one's life for the better, or inspires action to that end. If there is a good match, then there's a Bingo! epiphany, and Meaning is thereby obtained. It is a confirmation bias and a fundamental attribution error, rolled into one.

This is not to say that all Mythos and its derived Meaning are inherently false, but that it can provide the means of being deceived just as it can provide a genuine motivation of purpose. It all depends on what one believes about the meaning of life and the nature of one's purpose, whether it is immediate and self-centered or eternal and transcendent. Neither is it so cut and dried, as we must Juxtapose the Temporal and the Eternal via faith. Mythos is just one method of comprehending the metaphysical ontology and its limitations through semiotics.

But how does one interpret truth, or determine what is better or more positive for one's self and/or one's tribe? Should it be investment, suffering, and work, first and now, followed by comfort, dividends, and happiness later, or is it better to live for today, pursue pleasure and security, and displace the responsibilities onto others, or society, or into the unforeseen future? The pat Christian answer would lean towards the former, but after living in a broken world for decades, I understand there can be times when the latter stance extends trust in the helping hand of the Lord's provision and is therefore more faithful and righteous. As Aaron Renn* pointed out recently, "We live in a world where you cannot play fair anymore."

Therein lies all the contention as well as the modes of both false deception and true inspiration.

Conclusions

The apparent contradiction between Devon70 and the Thinking Ape's perspectives arises from the individually perceived validity of the Mythos in question, and the fact that a Mythos which is effectively the gospel for one, is anathema to another, due to non-shared environments and differences of convictions, desires, interests, and values.

This phenomenon of individualized mystical perception is the entire basis for the ontological arguments founded on "objective" or "personal" truth, which utterly consumes secular media.

All this abstract psychoanalysis might seem like navel-gazing pie in the sky to some readers, but I'm teaching you how to fish — how to discern truth. I hope this knowledge awakens your conscience's awareness and helps you discern the value of a Mythos. The important thing is for you to know yourself and what God requires of you, which then informs you of which Mythos is more appropriate to adopt and believe, and which to discard. And for any Mythos you choose to swallow, you'll need to pick out the meat and throw away the bones. Discernment is needed for that. And if you lack discernment, then pray for it and you will find it (James 1:5).

 H/T: Aaron Renn: Making the Case for the Manosphere (2025/9/26), citing the London Review of Books (Emily Witt): Do you feel like a failure? (2025/9/11), which quotes Andrew T@te.*

Related

- Wikipedia: Mythos (Aristotle)

- Σ Frame: The Quest for Truth (2017/5/13)
- Σ Frame: On the discernment and wisdom of true morality (2019/2/2)
- Σ Frame: Three Kinds of Discernment (2020/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame: A Man's Ability to Read IOIs Depends on Having a Firm Grasp on His Personal Archetypal Mythos (2021/6/21)
- Σ Frame: The Comfortable Danger of Social Catharsis (2022/7/27)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Cultural Myth of the SIW (2023/11/8)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): In Science We Trust (2023/11/27)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Σ Frame: Logos, Ethos, Pathos, and Mythos (2025/8/4)
- Σ Frame: In Search of Meaning (2025/8/6)
- Σ Frame: Modern Nihilism is the Vacuum of Meaning (2025/8/22)

What is the Value of Meaning?

Jack · 28 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

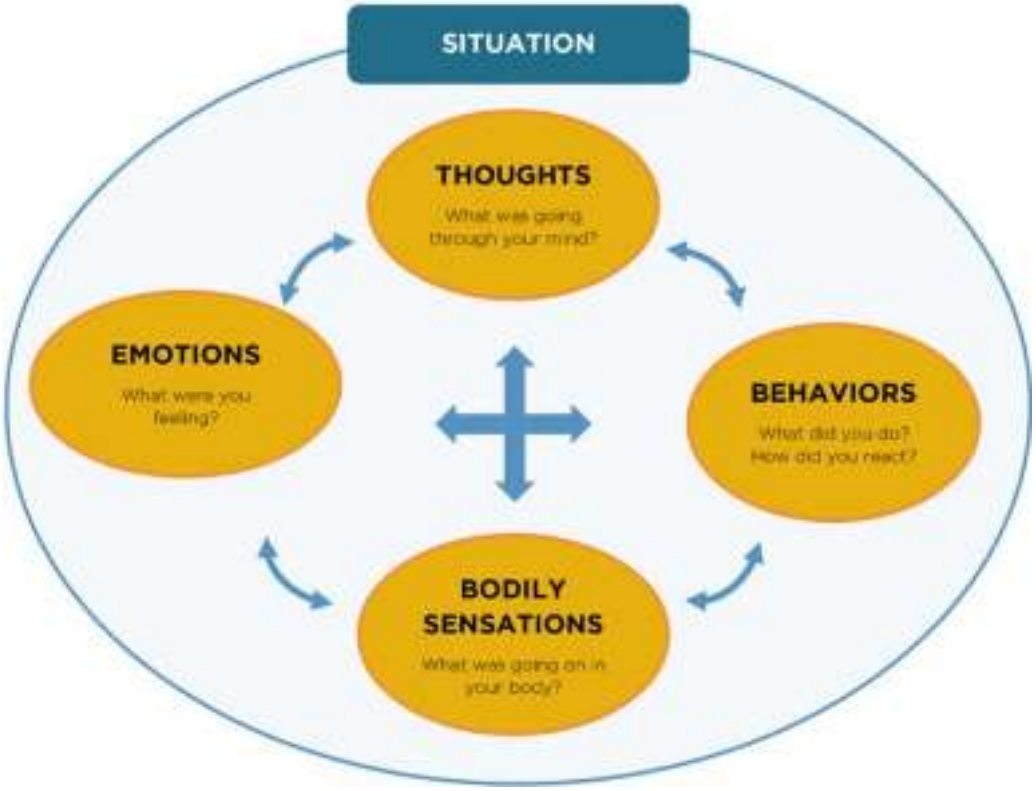
Meaning is that which strikes the awareness with emotional poignancy.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Problems with The Red Pill;
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Meaning is Pathos with Purpose

If you've read my previous posts about Meaning (listed below under Related), then perhaps by now, you've realized that Meaning (as it is currently understood) is an inspirational byproduct of having a Purpose, and also that it is largely emotional (Pathos) in nature.

Meaning informs and forms the Emotional element of the Cognitive-Emotional-Behavioral (CEB) Cycle, while Purpose shapes the Thoughts and Behaviors aspect.



The Cognitive-Emotional-Behavioral (CEB) Cycle.
It is a lack of Purpose (i.e. as fueled by the male desire for sex, marriage, and family, as well as glorifying and worshiping the Lord) that is driving much of the popular itch for Meaning. And without a steady and worthy Purpose that transcends the self, one is more likely to be seduced by that which provides Meaning for its own sake, AKA "The Feeelz".

As Meaning is largely emotional (Pathos), Meaning alone is NOT to be solely relied upon as a credible witness of the truth. In fact, if one pursues Meaning for the sake of Meaning itself, he is bound to find only disappointment and frustration.

I offer the following familiar examples.

Example 1 — Feminism

Narratives built on sociosexual inequalities and the purported abuses of the so-called 'Patriarchy', such as 'r@pe', victimization, and the 'subservience' of women, etc., and all the frustration and indignation that these ideas induce within the female psyche, are precisely how Feminism hijacked modern femininity, i.e. via an appeal to Meaning. It was this same sort of narrative, with the same sort of Meaning, that the Serpent used to deceive Eve in the Garden of Eden.

Some things never change.

Example 2 — The Red Pill

Much of the Red Pill is a bitter one to swallow for most men. They can find nothing therein that might enhance their life for the better. To them, it does NOT matter whether the parables and models and mythos contained in the Red Pill lore are accurate and/or truthful to reality, because no matter how it is framed or interpreted, it casts a dark shadow over their lives (i.e. what used to be called The Black Pill in 2022-2023). The Blue Pill, or Purple Pill, or Nihilism, or what have you, is much more enjoyable, pleasant, and "pretty", despite having their own poignant moments of disappointment and frustration, compared to the Red Pill.

As a result, finding errors, faults, grift, poor examples of role models, and problems with The Red Pill is easy pickings, as it is a reflexive reaction that comes naturally to the disappointed fleshly mind strictly seeking Meaning in only the positive sense, which is 'Pathetic'. We are seeing a lot of this among younger generations (late Millennials and later; see examples here, here, and here) who grew up with The Red Pill and who never knew the P00n-Pandering perfidy that exists in intersexual relationships, AKA Romantic Gynocentrism.

Conclusions

As you can gather from the examples, it is easy for one's pursuit of Meaning, i.e. an emotional catharsis and validation, to drive one towards error and falsehood.

However, without this element of Meaningfulness (Pathos), our reasonings (Logos), our moral compass (Ethos), and our Life Scripts (Mythos) ring hollow and are somewhat less-human, because they lack that salient emotional investment, that heartfelt conviction, and the accompanying strength of purpose. As I stated earlier, we must have all 4 elements of persuasion to obtain the fullest experience of the truth.

I'll venture further to say that Meaning (Pathos) in a narrative Mythos is what arouses conviction, invokes motivation, and sweeps the passions of both an individual and a culture as a whole, and it is, in this respect, perhaps the most compelling of the 4 elements … for good or ill.

Having a worthy Purpose shapes and drives Pathos towards the good, via the CEB cycle.

Related

- Wikipedia: Mythos (Aristotle)
- Σ Frame: The Quest for Truth (2017/5/13)
- Σ Frame: On the discernment and wisdom of true morality (2019/2/2)
- Σ Frame: Three Kinds of Discernment (2020/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame: A Man's Ability to Read IOIs Depends on Having a Firm Grasp on His Personal Archetypal Mythos (2021/6/21)
- Σ Frame: The Comfortable Danger of Social Catharsis (2022/7/27)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Cultural Myth of the SIW (2023/11/8)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): In Science We Trust (2023/11/27)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Σ Frame: Logos, Ethos, Pathos, and Mythos (2025/8/4)
- Σ Frame: In Search of Meaning (2025/8/6)
- Σ Frame: Modern Nihilism is the Vacuum of Meaning (2025/8/22)
- Σ Frame: Fate vs Self-Awareness (2025/8/27)
- Σ Frame: Limitations (2025/9/8)
- Σ Frame: On the Selection of Mythos (2025/9/27)

Michael Polanyi on the Derivation of Meaning

Jack · 29 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A review of Michael Polanyi's perspectives on Meaning.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Reader's Note: My additions are in brackets.
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

¡Sc!eNcE! has Replaced Mythos

Michael Polanyi's book, Meaning, coauthored with Harry Prosch and published very shortly before his death in February 1976, represents the culmination of his philosophical work, building on his earlier critiques of scientific objectivity to explore the foundations of Meaning in human experience.

In this work, Polanyi observed that in previous centuries, Western society derived truth and Meaning from religion and traditional Mythos. The modern age has dismissed all this as hearsay and superstition and has summarily discarded this approach, as well as most of the ancient wisdom it contained, including religion. In its stead, modern Western society assumes that ¡Sc!eNcE! IS truth, and therefore derives Meaning from ¡Sc!eNcE! [The result, as we are now seeing, is Nihilism, the rejection of moral norms, and social decay.]

However, Polanyi correctly observed that humanity prioritizes Meaning over ¡Sc!eNcE!, and will even utilize ¡Sc!eNcE! to interpret, provide, and support Meaning, even though this metacognitive process is not even remotely objectively scientific. [We now call this metacognitive process "Post Truth".]

Building on this observation, Polanyi challenges the modern centrality of ¡Sc!eNcE! by arguing that science is a normative form of knowledge, shaped by societal values and human commitments, rather than an impersonal, purely objective process, which it is falsely assumed to have and which undergirds the popular notion that ¡Sc!eNcE! is irrefutably true. [Since Polanyi's publications, we have seen real evidence of this convergence of ¡Sc!eNcE! and Worldly values, which will be the topic of an upcoming theme, Rationality.]

Michael Polanyi

Tacit Knowledge → Learning → Meaning

Polanyi offers an alternative to ¡Sc!eNcE! for deriving Meaning by drawing on his concept of "Tacit Knowledge", which he introduced in an earlier work, Personal Knowledge, published in 1958. Tacit Knowledge, Polanyi explains, is when Meaning emerges from the interplay of subsidiary awareness (background knowledge and experiences) and focal awareness (the conscious focus on meaning). Discussions, words, and symbols facilitate this integration, enabling individuals to ingest, articulate, and share their ideas. [This integration is where Mythos takes on real value, as it has the power to convey complex abstractions in a succinct form.]

[In my own words, I would describe Polanyi's concept of Tacit Knowledge as the Meaningful (and exquisitely memorable) insights gained from the difficult task of integrating new knowledge with what one already knows. Or put more simply, Tacit Knowledge is the fruit of a first-hand, genuine, personal, real-world learning experience.]

Awareness — Perls vs Polanyi

Michael Polanyi's concept of focal awareness (the conscious focus on meaning) coincides with Fritz Perls' emphasis on Awareness, in that one's Awareness must inform and take precedence over one's concept of Meaning and thereby shape one's concept of truth and guide one's expressed Purpose for living.

Also like Perls, Polanyi takes a holistic view of the individual and of society.

But in contrast to Perls' approach focusing on the Here and Now, Polanyi contended that the foundation of Meaning is the creative and imaginative faculties, in which the imagination is used to integrate the disparate elements of life, and synthesize the chaotic aspects of living into coherent, meaningful wholes, largely through metaphorical expressions in art, mythos, poetry, and religion.

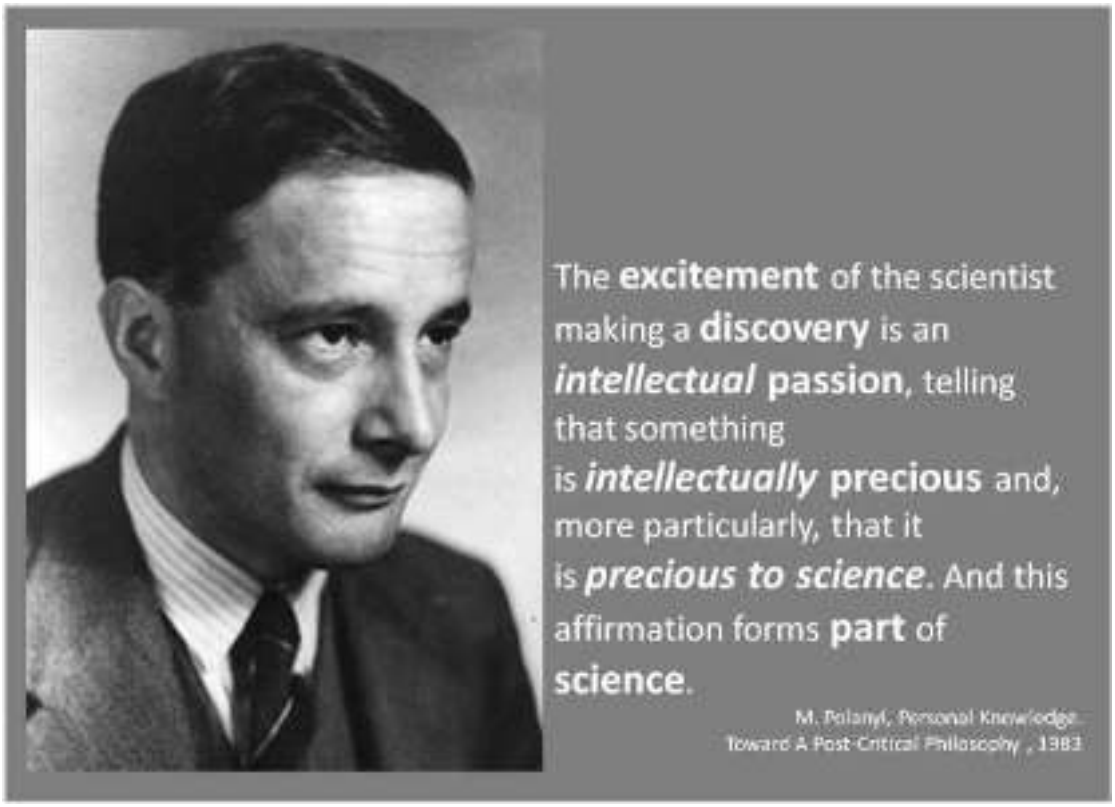
It should also be noted that Polanyi's concept of creating meaning through imagination is NOT the same as what Perls termed "The Middle Ground" between one's personal sphere of awareness and that of others / society — a cognitive rumination that Perls identified as a distraction from either form of reality, and which blocks the apprehension of both reality and truth.

Polanyi proposed that these creative integrations stand alongside those of science as equally valid (i.e. NOT subordinate) modes of knowledge — a stance that directly counters the dominance of reductionist scientific paradigms. He also suggested that an imaginative view of the foundation of meaning, rather than positivistic notions of modern ¡Sc!eNcE!, might restore validity to the traditional concepts of truth that have been undermined by modern ¡Sc!eNcE!, and restore to society what has been lost in the modern age. [This shift in consciousness is presently in its infancy in the West.]

Case Study — The Tacit Knowledge of Scientists

In support of this view, Polanyi recognized that the self-involvement of scientists in discovery is invariably impassioned. The joy of grasping a new scientific insight (vis-à-vis Tacit Knowledge) causes the mind to expand into a deeper understanding of the world and to live thereafter in a more proactive preoccupation with its problems. [As a scientist myself, I can confirm.] In contrast to scientists' passionate involvement in real scientific discovery, the positivist view of science holds no room for personal participation.

What the positivist view of science lacks, according to Polanyi, is the real-life involvement of individual experience and the personal Tacit Knowledge it imparts. Likewise, the cultures' similar unimpassioned emphasis on ¡Sc!eNcE! [as well as the doubts incurred through Post Truth metacognitions], and the accompanying vacuum of Meaning, Mythos, and Tacit Knowledge may explain why many young people are drawn to various ideologies and social movements [such as collectivism, feminism, nationalism, Progressivism, socialism, W0kism, and yes, even the Manosphere and the Red Pill], precisely because these philosophical paradigms offer a Mythos-based structure of reality that allows Meaningful discussion to take place, thereby providing the necessary psychological integration, synthesization, and the resultant derivation of Meaning.



General Conditions Necessary for the Derivation of Truth and Meaning

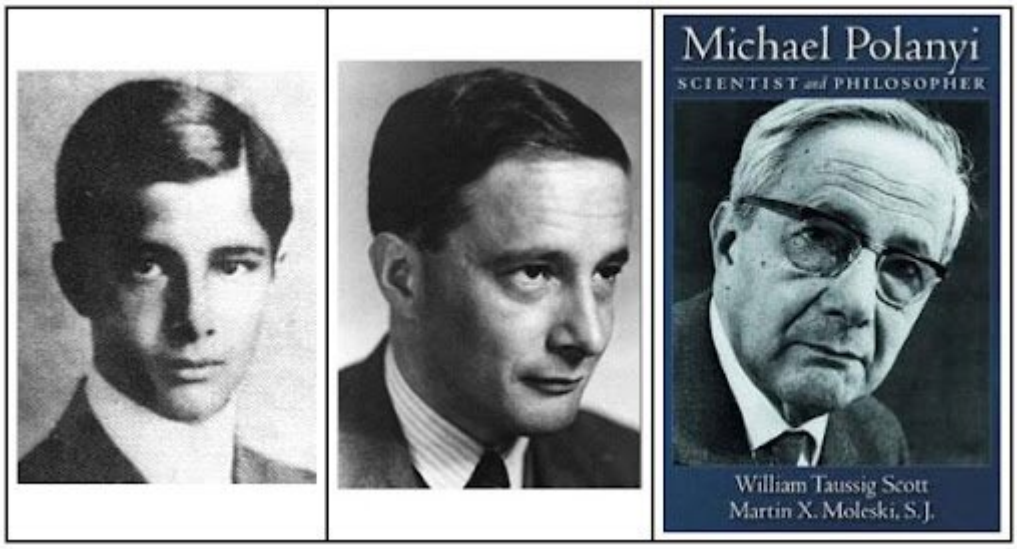
Polanyi's book also outlines the general conditions of a free society that encourage varied approaches to truth. He argues that these conditions and domains, like science, rely on personal and communal commitments, making them vital for understanding human existence.

These conditions and domains include…

- Intellectual Freedom: Polanyi critiques ideologies and social mechanisms that suppress free thought, and emphasizes the importance of intellectual freedom and intellectual honesty for the pursuit of Meaning.
- An Intellectual Society: Polanyi advocates for a society that encourages diverse approaches to truth, as well as free-thinking and unbiased means of assessing knowledge. He also explores how a free society supports the acceptance of religion and other meaning-making frameworks.
- Philosophical Freedom: Polanyi critiques ¡Sc!eNt!f!C! positivism and Enlightenment skepticism, particularly its incongruences with religion and traditional authority. Polanyi proposes that a post-critical [or post-Post Truth] philosophy is needed, in which personal commitment and Tacit Awareness connect individuals to reality, avoiding the pitfalls of both relativism and rigid objectivity.
- Traditional Mythos, Religion, and the Arts: Polanyi examines how art, mythos, and religion provide frameworks for obtaining Meaning through their use of metaphor and narrative. He sees these as fundamental tools for deriving Meaning that are complementary to science, NOT subordinate, as they address existential, humanitarian, and metaphysical questions that science alone cannot answer.

The book also includes an illuminating discussion of how to restore fundamental aspects of humanity that modern ¡Sc!eNcE! has undermined. These aspects include…

- The possibility for the acceptance and restoration of religion.
- Legitimacy to traditional ideas, such as those concerning ethics, morality, and religion.



Summary

In essence, Polanyi's book, Meaning, seeks to bridge the gap between objective facts and subjective values, advocating for a holistic view of knowledge that embraces personal and societal dimensions.

Polanyi argues that human knowledge and experience are unified through the creative imagination (i.e. Tacit Knowledge), which integrates traditional mythos, religion, science, and the arts, into a cohesive understanding of the world.

The book also reflects Polanyi's concern with intellectual freedom, warning against authoritarian ideologies that stifle the pursuit of truth and meaning.

Seeing how Polanyi's assessments of human metacognition have emerged in Western society 30 to 50 years after his death, we could view him as a thinker ahead of his time and/or a modern prophet.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Quest for Truth (2017/5/13)
- Σ Frame: Exposing the Truth to Others (2018/1/1)
- Σ Frame: Breaking the Fifth Wall — A New Protocol for Post-Truth Debate (2018/6/13)
- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): In Science We Trust (2023/11/27)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Σ Frame: Logos, Ethos, Pathos, and Mythos (2025/8/4)
- Σ Frame: In Search of Meaning (2025/8/6)
- Σ Frame: The Appropriateness of Logic (2025/8/20)
- Σ Frame: Modern Nihilism is the Vacuum of Meaning (2025/8/22)
- Σ Frame: The Age Old Question of Authority (2025/9/3)
- Σ Frame: Gestalt (2025/9/15)
- Σ Frame: On the Selection of Mythos (2025/9/27)
- Σ Frame: What is the Value of Meaning? (2025/9/28)

Conflicts of Mythos and Meaning

Jack · 30 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Wise leadership and a critical mass of people sharing the same Mythos are necessary for a community to become Meaningful and for Mythos to become reality.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Problems with The Red Pill;
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Schrödinger's Mythos

We often hear voices and see memes expressing the idea that the culture / society is disintegrating. Part of what this means is that there is no central Mythos that ties everyone and every event together to form a congruent Meaning to it all.

The so-called Cultural War is over which Mythos should be predominant in society. Psychologically, the battle is about how to perceive reality, what to believe, and how to respond in an ethical manner. If there is no shared Mythos to delineate a clear set of ethics, then people will not know how to act and respond.

If ¡Sc!eNcE! were sufficient, then there would be no dissent, as anyone who disagreed with the plain facts would be branded as delusional or mad. Instead, we see the factitious interpretations and laundering of the facts — a phenomenon fundamental to human nature because people prioritize Meaning over ¡Sc!eNcE!, as Michael Polanyi observed, even though Post Truth rides on Pathos. As a result, we see schisms, silos, and splits. This discord has erupted into violence within the past few years.

This multitude of Mythos, and the resultant warring factions has produced a Schrödinger's Mythos in the West today, in that it is everywhere (in people's minds), but yet nowhere (in reality) at the same time.

Atomized Mythos leads to Either Nihilism or Social Restructuring

Without a stable society held together by a widely accepted and truthful mythos, life lacks Meaning and Purpose. This is exactly why younger generations are searching for Meaning (Thinking Ape's perspective) and others are lost in Fantasy Land (Devon70's perspective), while some are content to watch it all burn (Nihilists), as I explained about the Selection of Mythos.

In Modern Nihilism is the Vacuum of Meaning (2025/8/22), I posited that…

> "To overcome Nihilism, we must reestablish an overarching Mythos that inspires the faith of constituents. They must be able to find Meaning in the Mythos."

One of the prime challenges of forming an overarching Mythos is overcoming the confusion and the lack of solidarity that is present when there is very little agreement or cooperation among leaders, hence, bickering and infighting can have no authoritative resolution. I wrote about this problem before in my series, Problems with The Red Pill (2024/7/31).

What we have now is a leadership that is atomized, grass roots, ideological, and largely prophetic, and is mostly limited to blogs, literature, Mythos (e.g., memes), and philosophy. These diverse ideologies have a polarizing effect on both individuals and society, as described above.

Individuals who believe strongly enough, or who have a sufficiently motivating incentive, are currently self-sorting into communities, changing churches, and even changing countries.

It is only a matter of time before these communities and churches grow large enough to wield critical-mass influence within society. I expect this will happen within the next 10 years. Pray that we can reach that state of union before the Singularity.

The War of Mythos

Conflicts between modern prophets can be understood as warring voices, each professing two (or more) different Mythical realities, only separated by particular visages of idealism and how overarching values are to be effectively realized. Although these differences may be merely a matter of opinion, or perspective, or two sides of the same coin, the effects on human social interaction are profound and lead to schisms and even violence, as we have seen in the news.

It is my uncouth opinion that the majority of people are too self-preserving and too stupid, TBH, to see the big picture, and realize that collectivity and cooperation have long-term advantages that competition and individualism do not. No, I'm not referring to socialism; I mean Covenant communities (e.g. churches, men's groups, etc.) bound together by a shared conviction and purpose. (If you're not already in one, then you need to find one ASAP.) This is another reason why leadership is important.

I'll cover two case studies to illustrate how leaders of warring factions are self-defeating. Readers might think of other examples to share in the comments.

Case Study 1 — Jordan Peterson

The Christian Manosphere prophets Adam Piggott, Theodore Beale (Vox Day), and Lexet have identified Jordan Peterson as a false prophet. Ed Hurst has remained neutral, but has pointed out some problematic issues with Peterson's approach. (I invited readers to debate this issue, but the response was tepid.)

This mixed opinion does not necessarily mean that Peterson is a liar or deceiver, although that may very well be the case in some instances. It means that he is expressing the concepts and viewpoints of a mythical narrative that is separate from, and is incoherent with the mythical / metaphysical reality that is conveyed through Christianity. (IMO, his views align with the Red Pill rather closely, which may explain his popularity.) Thus, it could be ascertained that the quality that makes him false is that the spiritual authority he serves is not of God, but rather the critical, inquisitive spirit of Enlightenment.

OTOH, I do believe God is using Peterson to invoke a greater awareness and critical thinking among the populace.

Peterson's philosophy (or any topic, really) becomes problematic when it provokes brothers to argue about abstractions that are not within their domain of control.

Tomb Refugee said,

> “If peace comes only from crushing dissent, I’d rather have chaos. However, that’s one of many false dichotomies I see in online discussions. We can have sufficient peace on a functional scale to fulfill the Scripture without that leverage.”

From this perspective, Peterson’s philosophies are best framed as little more than a source of inspiring entertainment and perhaps some topics for small talk.

Case Study 2 — Timothy Keller

The late Timothy Keller recognized the importance of single-minded solidarity in ecumenical leadership when he conspired to redraft the constitution of the church. But he had to pay a heavy price to unify the splintering church, which was to redefine marriage as complementarianism.

I’m not sure whether Keller is entirely to blame for this, or if he was merely giving the people what they wanted, as Aaron did with the rebellious Israelites in Exodus 32. But Keller saw this from a larger perspective, in which a compromise not only kept his flock together but could also attract more (worldly-minded) people to come under its domain, which enhances the church’s power and influence.

In this respect, Keller is truly a great visionary leader.

Pastor Timothy Keller

However, it’s a power play that refuses to recognize the Ultimate Power of God. In this move, we find that the church is willing to embrace feminism and liberal progressivism and even ‘adjust’ doctrine to do so, even while it turns up its nose at other Christian faith traditions. But by siding with the World to appease its own congregants, it has deviated from traditional Christianity, just like many other churches and whole denominations have done over the past decade, except in a nice Tradcon churchian way.

The errancy of this concession is why I believe this arrangement will not extend beyond the Boomers and their younger acolytes’ lifetimes. Until then, St. John’s message to the church in Pergamum (Revelation 2:12-17) remains in effect for those complementarian churches. Like the church in Pergamum, they would need to repent from their flirtations with the World before they can ever start hammering out relations with other Christian Denominations.

Tomb Refugee stated,

> “We need to expend a little more effort in cultivating desire and passion, which tend to rely more on what makes us tick than any kind of imaginary uniformity in human nature.”

…or human leadership, such as that within American Evangelical Protestantism.

Related

- Wikipedia: Mythos (Aristotle)
- Σ Frame: The Quest for Truth (2017/5/13)
- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame: The Comfortable Danger of Social Catharsis (2022/7/27)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): In Science We Trust (2023/11/27)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Σ Frame: Logos, Ethos, Pathos, and Mythos (2025/8/4)
- Σ Frame: In Search of Meaning (2025/8/6)
- Σ Frame: Modern Nihilism is the Vacuum of Meaning (2025/8/22)
- Σ Frame: Fate vs Self-Awareness (2025/8/27)
- Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)
- Σ Frame: Limitations (2025/9/8)
- Σ Frame: On the Selection of Mythos (2025/9/27)
- Σ Frame: What is the Value of Meaning? (2025/9/28)
- Σ Frame: Michael Polanyi on the Derivation of Meaning (2025/9/29)

Awareness and Introspection — Index of Posts

Jack · 30 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A summary of this 2-month-long theme and links to posts.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection
Length: 600 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

Metaduction

I have been anticipating and preparing writings for this theme of Awareness and Introspection for more than a year. In my prayers about what to write on this blog, I've received multiple assurances that the topics I've addressed in this theme are what Christian men need to be aware of during this New Era (which began in early July 2024, and which is not to be confused with the current Internet Age, which started in March 2024).

I postponed this theme for several months because (1) it didn't seem like the right time, or something about it didn't seem 'appropriate' for reasons I cannot explain, (2) the subject matter is difficult to absorb and some of it is a little too abstract or bizarre for the average man to comprehend (e.g., Gestalt, Meaning, Mythos, etc.), (3) I knew it wouldn't receive much interest, and (4) there were always many other happenings going on that provided much more interesting topics to write about.

However, my conscience constrained me to post this content, despite its lackluster appeal. So finally, at the beginning of August, I decided that I wasn't going to put it off any longer and I began posting what I had prepared.

Just as I had expected, readership declined during August and September, even falling to the lowest levels this blog has seen since mid-2018. (Understandable, since incisive, useful truths that goad personal growth tend to be uncomfortable and rather uninteresting to the carnal mind.)

I prepared many other posts for this theme, enough for another month, but I think this is about all that my readership can take at this time. I will publish the other essays at a later date in a companion theme covering Mystical Awareness.

Here are the posts that appeared in the theme Awareness and Introspection, spanning August and September, categorized by subject. Closely related posts appearing around the Based Men's Sphere during this time are also included.

Thanks to Red Pill Apostle, Tubal Cain, and 1 Anonymous Contributor for their input, each providing 1 post for this theme.

In spite of how difficult it might be, in response to my diligence in writing and posting, I urge Christian men to take the time and due diligence to slog through these posts, to increase your awareness, and do some introspection. May you find the power of God in doing so.

An employee of Shefa Yamim diamond exploration company sifts through rocks in search of precious stones at the firm's laboratory in Acre, northern Israel (2012/5/21). Inspired by the words of a revered rabbi who prophesied that precious stones were divinely buried in the area, the firm has been mining for about a decade along the steep hills and lush valleys that surround the city of Haifa.
Source: Daily Mail: Where faith meets fact: Diamond firm which followed rabbi's prediction about buried treasures is 'close to success' …after 10-year hunt (2012/5/30)

Worship

Worship is and must always be the center point and lynch pin of the Christian Man's Awareness.

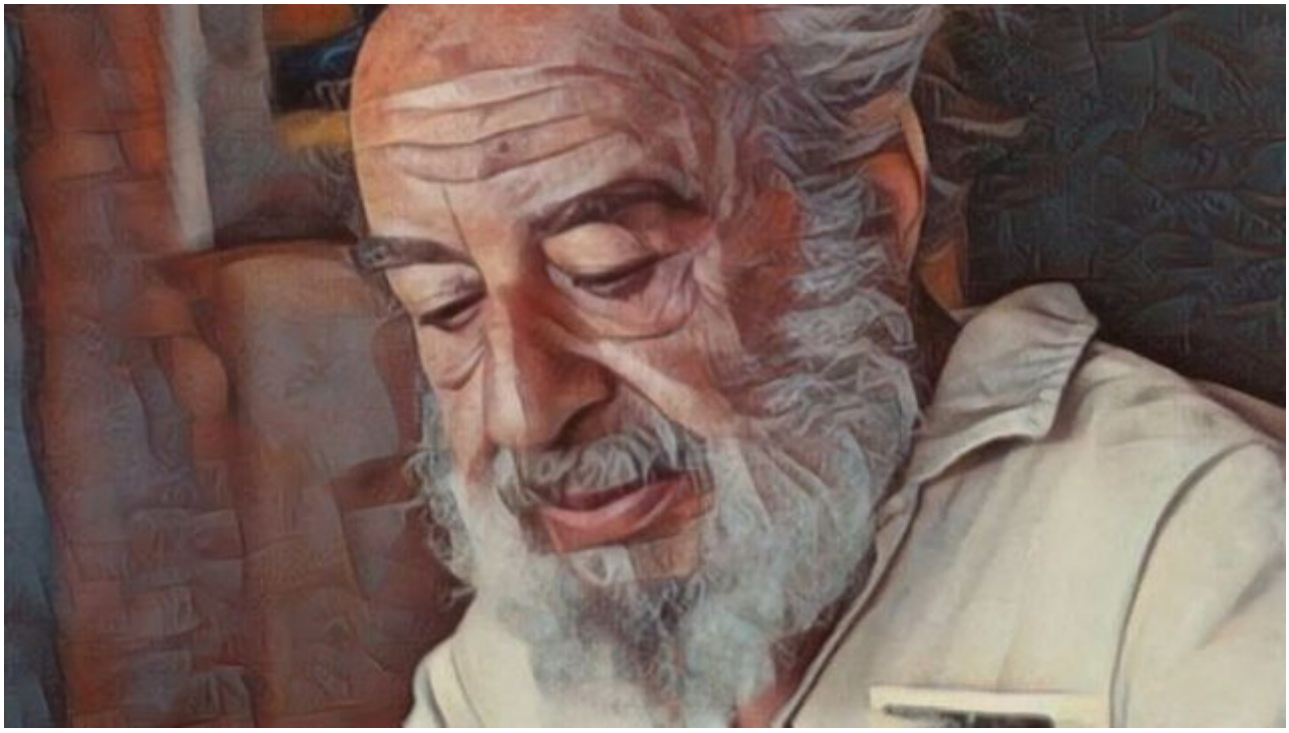
1. Σ Frame: The Serenity of Worship (2025/9/12)
2. Σ Frame: If No Peace, then War! (2025/9/13)
3. Σ Frame: The Desire for True Worship (2025/9/14)
4. Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor): Man's Purpose in the Lord's Prayer (2025/9/26)

Awareness

Besides Prayer and Worship, Awareness includes four spheres: (1) Awareness of one's self, (2) Awareness of one's environment and the people therein, (3) Awareness of the world, and (4) awareness of the metaphysical and spiritual in situ, AKA spiritual discernment / wisdom.

1. Uncharted Father: Trads or Chads (2025/8/8)
2. Σ Frame: Fate vs Self-Awareness (2025/8/27)
3. The Orthosphere (Bonald): DEI to Zionism: the culmination of American moralistic racial hierarchy (2025/8/29)
4. Σ Frame (Tubal Cain): Why is Eastern Orthodoxy more attractive to Men than Protestantism? (2025/9/5)
5. Σ Frame: Limitations (2025/9/8)
6. Σ Frame: Gestalt (2025/9/15)
7. Σ Frame: What is Gestalt Therapy? (2025/9/17)

8. Σ Frame: Fritz Perls — Here and Now (2025/9/22)
9. Σ Frame: Fritz Perls — Awareness (2025/9/24)



Fritz Perls, founder of Gestalt Therapy.

Mythos and Meaning

1. Σ Frame: Logos, Ethos, Pathos, and Mythos (2025/8/4)
2. Σ Frame: In Search of Meaning (2025/8/6)
3. Aaron Renn: Collapsing Conscientiousness (2025/8/8)
4. The Orthosphere (Richard Cocks): Science vs Philosophy (2025/8/16)
5. Σ Frame: The Appropriateness of Logic (2025/8/20)
6. Σ Frame: Modern Nihilism is the Vacuum of Meaning (2025/8/22)
7. The Orthosphere (J.M. Smith): The Dormant Volcano Rumbles (2025/8/25)
8. The Orthosphere (J.M. Smith): The Mother of All Gods (2025/8/27)
9. The Orthosphere (Kristor): Divine Simplicity & Singularity from Incompleteness of Any Mere Plurality (2025/8/28)
10. Radix Fidem: The Book of Life (2025/8/30)
11. Σ Frame: Nuances of the Eternal (2025/9/1)
12. Ben Foth: No Sacrifice, No Victory (2025/9/3)
13. Christianity and Masculinity: The absolute degeneracy of modern writing (2025/9/9)
14. Aaron Renn: The End of the Middle-Class Magic Kingdom (2025/9/10)
15. Σ Frame: Archetypal Mythos: Themes (2025/9/10)
16. Σ Frame: On the Selection of Mythos (2025/9/27)
17. Σ Frame: What is the Value of Meaning? (2025/9/28)
18. Σ Frame: Michael Polanyi on the Derivation of Meaning (2025/9/29)
19. Σ Frame: Conflicts of Mythos and Meaning (2025/9/30)
20. Aaron Renn: The Quest for Christian Symbolic Dominance (2025/10/9)

I have more to say about Mythos and Meaning and how these relate to Mysticism, but these will be published in an upcoming theme on Mystical Awareness. Stay tuned.

Domain

These posts explicate the personal challenges and the cultural contexts in relation to Deep Strength's landmark essay on Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule — Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear, and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28). A man's Domain is the personalized archetype of 'Kingdom' in "Kingdom Rule".

1. Σ Frame: Patriarchy and Civilization (2025/8/11)
2. Σ Frame: Domain and Motivation (2025/8/13)
3. Σ Frame: 8 Deterrences to Domain (2025/8/15)
4. Aaron Renn: "Excarnated" Christianity (2025/8/21)
5. Σ Frame: Putting the Noahic Covenant into Perspective (2025/8/25)
6. Uncharted Father: Watching the Nuke (2025/10/8)

Authority

These posts continue a long-running coverage of various embodiments of Authority. Previous posts on this topic are given below under Related.

In the posts about the specific context of the individual man's Domain / Kingdom, Authority is the personalized archetype of 'Rule' in "Kingdom Rule". Other posts delineate a higher Authority that men submit themselves to (e.g., Apostolic authority, ecumenical authority, a confessor, the Lord via the requirements of the Covenant, etc.).

1. Catacomb Resident: Two Systems (2025/8/23)
2. Σ Frame: Faith and Authority (2025/8/29)
3. Σ Frame: Addressing Criticisms of Faith and Authority (2025/8/30)
4. Σ Frame: Authority in Suffering (2025/8/31)
5. Σ Frame: The Age Old Question of Authority (2025/9/3)
6. Radix Fidem: Sin and Covenant (2025/9/6)

7. Catacomb Resident: What God Wrought (2025/9/7)
8. Radix Fidem: Working Assumptions (2025/9/8)
9. Catacomb Resident: Living by the Word (2025/9/9)
10. Σ Frame: On Choosing a Confessor (2025/9/19)

Awareness of Female Nature

1. Σ Frame: Witchcraft Rising (2025/8/1)
2. Σ Frame: Derek L. Ramsey on Female Agency (2025/8/8)
3. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Power of a Prenuptial Agreement (2025/8/18)
4. Rev. Matt's Writings: Feminism is An Ancient Evil (2025/9/23)
5. Spawny's Space: Be Like A Man (2025/9/23)

Thanks for reading Σ Frame.

Related

- Σ Frame: Three Kinds of Discernment (2020/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Soul Mate Myth (2021/2/3)
- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Juxtaposing the Temporal and the Eternal (2021/4/26)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment (2023/6/9)
- Σ Frame: Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10)
- Σ Frame: The Archetype of Father as God (2023/6/27)
- Σ Frame: Invisible Magic Authority (2023/12/13)

- Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority (2024/1/10)
- Σ Frame: What is the Spiritual Power of Authority? (2024/1/11)
- Σ Frame: How to be Happy, No, Really (2024/4/19)
- Σ Frame: Paradigms of Faith (2024/4/22)
- Σ Frame: The Red Pill 2.0: Analyzing Metacognitions and Identifying Critical Problems (2024/7/31)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Σ Frame: The Role of the Church in 21st Century America (2025/6/6)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear, and womens' sexual attraction and arousal (2025/6/28)

Braised Sister Turns Heads and Profits!

Jack · 1 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A Cloying Coquette with Cleavage and a Cleaver is a Clever Crowdbuster.

Readership: All
Theme: Girl Game
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Sex Appeal Sells Just About Anything

Here's an interesting little piece of Taiwan's recent history that modern Western influence has erased from the culture.

Years ago in Taiwan, shop owners would commonly task their best-looking employees with being a hostess at the front door, working the cash register, or other positions that required regular interaction with clients. These workers would be schooled in proper social etiquette and other common graces to make the best impression for the business. This practice was also not-so-subtly competitive, as is most every aspect of business in Asia. Thus, it was rather common to see nubile girls working in family-owned service industries and food stands, often working in revealing clothing.

Like this.

And this.

And this.

And this.

And this.

Time to go to the liquor store!

Why?

It's a simple yet very effective business model. Men spend more money when they're mesmerized by young female flesh. In fact, men will line up around the building to spend their money at such an establishment, just to see the giggling jiggling girls, interact with them, and try their hand at seducing them. The young women liked it too, because it gave them good money, constant attention, and a steady stream of suitors to choose from.

Case Study: Little Peach

This girl goes by the name Little Peach（小桃子) [DOB: 1994/2/23; Measurements: 32E-24-35; FB; IG; Threads; TikTok].

A staff writer for Taiwan News, Keoni Everington, wrote an article about Little Peach that has since been wiped from the web.

> Customers mesmerized by saucy cleaver-wielding shop keeper's cleavage.
>
> A braised snack stand in Taichung has suddenly seen the ranks of its customers swell after images surfaced of a cleaver-wielding buxom beauty in a cleavage-revealing outfit behind the counter.
>
> The woman, who goes by the Facebook handle Little Peach (小桃子), on Wednesday (2018/1/24), posted images of herself decked out in a low-cut sweater and short, Daisy Duke shorts and wrote: "So happy that Little Peach has so many customers to come and buy braised flavor." In less than 24 hours, the post had already received 5,000 likes, and multiple Taiwanese media outlets were beginning to refer to her as "Braised Sister."
>
> Taiwan News (Keoni Everington): Crowds flock to see buxom 'Braised Sister' chop chow (2018/1/25) [Archive]

For those who are unfamiliar with this style of barbecue, braised meat, fish, or vegetables are cooked by sautéeing in pork lard and then simmering slowly in very little liquid.

> According to Apple Daily, the owners of the braised snack stall, which is located in Taichung City's Beitun District, invited the model to serve as a "one-day shop manager" to perk up their clientele.
>
> Taiwan News (Keoni Everington): Crowds flock to see buxom 'Braised Sister' chop chow (2018/1/25) [Archive]

Except it wasn't just for "one-day". The business was so good for the braised food stand that she was invited back. Then other businesses hired her for similar purposes.

Little Peach displays a humble, pleasant demeanor, a sweet smile, lowered head (i.e. looking up with the eyes), her arms straight, and speaks in a kind voice while squarely facing the customer. That's good service!

Braised butt cheeks and fresh grilled mammary glands … work$ every time!

One man standing at the end of a line of more than 30 people (mostly all men) was asked how long he was willing to wait to buy the braised chicken feet, as Little Peach took her time to carefully cut the ingredients, talk with customers, and take photos with them. He replied with a beaming smile, saying, "I will wait as long as it takes." The man standing next to him chimed in, saying, "All night!" A third down the line shouted, "Until work on Monday!"

This would never go over today, because of accusations of sexual objectification, complaints of guys staring, the condemnation of moralizers, envious older women, the risk of MeT00, and so on.

Women have totally forgotten how to motivate men, thinking it is beneath them, or sexist, or whatever.

And so another charming piece of ancient Chinese culture has drifted into the dust bin of history.

Thus, Taiwan slowly degrades and descends into the Abyss.

And so has Little Peach, because of her brief moment in the spotlight and “women’s liberation”, she has become “empowered”.

After this sensational debut to fame, Little Peach went into modeling (mostly for advertising, e.g. automobiles, motorcycles, swimwear, and also cultural events, etc.) and perhaps escorting. She's used the proceeds of her stardom to tour Europe, Japan, and the U.S.

Within 4 years, she had attracted over 2 million followers on Facebook, until she had to close her private account for her personal security.

To my knowledge, she's never married nor had any children.

Related

- Σ Frame: A Noodle Asian Inspiration (2017/11/3)
- JDailyHK: 台灣女模小桃子夜市賣滷味 食客排曬長龍圍觀 果然夠曬「真材實料」！ (2018/1/26)
- Σ Frame: A Historical Contrast: Western and Asian Women (2018/9/15)
- Daily Mail: Busty 'Barbecue Goddess' becomes a tourist sensation as people travel for kilometres to watch her flipping meat on her family's grill (2019/3/7)
- Σ Frame: One Night in Beijing (2021/2/12)
- Yes News: 在臉書上吸引逾 213 萬人追蹤的正妹網紅「小桃子」，幾年前到一間滷味 (2022/7/15)
- Σ Frame: The Breakfast Shop (2024/2/14)

Is Bread or Buns Christian?

Jack · 3 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Revising our expectations for the new Normal.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Girl Game;
Length: 400 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

Bread or Buns?

Recently, there's a new trend going through the secular SMP, "Bread or Buns".

Call Me Shape: Men DEMAND Bread or Buns for DATES... Women FREAK OUT (2025/9/1)

The basic idea is that if a woman wants something from a man, e.g. heavy lifting, home repairs, paying for dates, special favors, etc.), then the woman needs to put up $$$ (Bread) or put out poon (Buns).

This is also being described as "The Law of Equivalent Exchange".

The days of Chivalry are truly dead and gone. This is darn near the ~~sexual license~~ social equality that women have always been hankering for.

So let's ask the question…

Is Bread or Buns Christian?

Christians shouldn't need to think too hard about this.

Essentially, the answer is "Bread before marriage, Buns after."

In the more civilized times of the past, the "bread" put up by a ~~woman~~ hopeful bride was called a dowry. No dowry meant no marriage, or a marriage to a lower-status man. "Buns" was the whole purpose of marriage, and if she had already offered "Buns", they were already considered married in the eyes of God and society. At least, that's how it used to be.

Anything other than this boils down to a transaction, i.e., prostitution.

If readers can think of some other possibilities, please share in the comments below.

Revising Ethical Policy — What to Tell Youngsters?

While Christian Manospherians might rejoice in this turn of events that places more responsibility on women, the fact is that we are now facing a new reality. What stance should Christians take in this environment?

It is fitting and right to tell young women not to offer “Buns” before marriage. But OTOH, should we instruct young people that proper Christian women go Dutch on date nights?

Would that mean that young women need to have a disposable income before they can be ‘eligible’ for dating?

Does it then mean that higher-income women are better able to attract better men and better dates?

Or does it mean that daddy must foot the bill, thereby requiring her to ask her father, which would then lead to fathers taking part in the matching and vetting processes?

Of course, women will not like any of these possibilities, which is why they’re responding so violently to the idea of “Bread or Buns”.

Closing Thoughts

I believe “Bread or Buns” will continue for some time, but it will eventually break down at some point, although I can’t see where just yet. But I’m guessing it will involve women taking responsibility for what they contribute to a relationship that has no forthcoming LTR commitment.

That’s assuming they’re intelligent enough to put 2 and 2 together. Otherwise, the carousel will continue to rotate as usual and churn out Cat Karens.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Future of Intersexual Relationships is Transactional (2021/3/12)
- Σ Frame: The Disappointments of Transactional Relationships (2023/2/14)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Effects of the Sexual Revolution on Female Sexuality (2024/9/24)

- Σ Frame: Women are the Gatekeepers of Sex : A Red Pill Truth, but is it Biblical? (2024/9/27)
- Σ Frame: Social Transactions : Summary (2024/9/30)
- Σ Frame: Remembering Kevin Samuels' Death and Legacy (2025/5/5)
- Σ Frame: When everyone wins a prize, self-interest replaces intrinsic motivation (2025/6/11)

What is the Prevalence of Paternity Fraud?

Jack · 6 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Seriously, who's your DNA daddy?

Readership: All;
Theme: Girl Game
Author's Note: Based on an email discussion among Jack, Red Pill Apostle, and Thedeti on 2025/7/29-31.
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Intro

Merchant marines are reputed to have many illegitimate children.

In the popular lore of the 19th and early 20th century, it was the milkman.

In ye olde Manosphere lore, it is the college frat guy working as a pool cleaner.

Today, there are jokes, quips, and video shorts about surprising DNA test results that have replaced all of the above.

Here's a funny example.

Gianmarco Soresi: DNA Reveals Mom is a Cheater | Gianmarco Soresi | Stand Up Comedy Crowd Work (2024/2/25) Length: 9 minutes

Alternative Source: IG 1, 2.

The Data

What percent of the population does this video truly represent?

Here's some data.

- An intergenerational study estimated that 1-2% of men of any generation raise a child that isn't theirs.
- In the UK, estimates range from 1% to as high as 30%.
- A 50 year long study of so-called "paternal discrepancy" revealed that the acting father was not the biological parent in between 1% to a whopping 32% of the cases.
- A 32% rate of Paternal Fraud was discovered in a small town in Britain where the mailman fathered many children over his long career.
- Another postman from Tennessee is the father of more than 1,300 children out of wedlock.
- According to a 1999 American Association of Blood Banks report, 30% of DNA paternity tests done in the United States come back negative.
- Another analysis conducted by DNA Clinics in Salford, England, found that almost half—48%—of the men tested between 2014 and 2016 were NOT the biological fathers of the children they were led to believe were theirs.
- A 2018 study from the University of Warwick suggested 3%.
- In 2021, the University of Oxford estimated 1%.
- A 2022 study from Human Reproduction surveyed over 1,200 men in the United States who sought paternity testing services. The results were shocking—11% of those men were NOT the biological fathers of the children they were raising.

- In 2023, another study from Family Relations examined men who were court-ordered to undergo paternity testing. This study found that 12% of the men tested were NOT the biological fathers of the children they were supporting financially.

While these figures provide valuable insight into the prevalence of paternity fraud, it's essential to acknowledge that official, comprehensive data is lacking.

Also, it should be noted that men who get DNA tests for Paternity Fraud are men who already have some reason to believe they are NOT the biological father to their children.

Nevertheless, the numbers indicate that Paternity Fraud is a widespread problem, with estimates ranging from 1% to 32% globally. A median estimate, based on available data, places the global paternity fraud rate at around 3.7%.

Apparently, the MGM / PTB wants us to believe it's about 1-3%. But some studies place that figure between 18-30+%, depending on location, profile, and sample size.

Jack's Story

When I was in college (1995), I had a job selling books as a door-to-door salesman in northeast rural Florida. I saw how easy it can happen.

Women answered the door wearing bath towels, bikinis, negligees, see-through sheer things (not sure what they're called), long T-shirts, or short silk housecoats — all wearing nothing but moisturizer lotion underneath!

Husbands were at work. Children were at school. With everyone away, the whole neighborhood was like a ghost town.

Women invited me in and wanted to talk with me about all kinds of things, but when I insisted on talking about my products, they asked me to leave.

One blonde woman wearing a beige lace negligee pulled a gun on me when I made it clear I was a salesman and not a john. (I had no idea I was knocking on the door of a rural brothel.)

It's crazy.

TheDeti's Take

All of what Jack is telling us is why I think the percentage is something like 3 to 10% of men are raising children who, unbeknownst to them, aren't biologically theirs.

After all I've seen, I just know how easy it is for women to cheat. Women can get sex anytime they want. Good, high-quality sex with attractive men. For women, sex is like water: plentiful, available everywhere, reasonably safe, and free for the asking. Even married women can easily get sex with men outside their marriages. They can do it very easily. All she needs is the right man, right time, right circumstances, and low risk of detection, and there's no real (earthly) downside.

What are Your Chances?

Some readers may be thinking, "OMG! I know my Mom was a 304 back in the day!" You're frantically looking at old photographs to see if you look like any of the men your mom "knew" in the Biblical sense. (My cousin did this once.)

The probability of Paternity Fraud rises significantly among younger men, particularly those in their 20s and 30s, and among those who are unmarried or in shorter relationships with the mothers of their children.

The findings also suggested that non-paternity rates were higher among men from lower socioeconomic backgrounds and non-Caucasian ethnicities.

I don't have data on this, but I would expect that women who have a history of substance abuse, or display any of the other Slut Tells, would be prime candidates for perpetrators of Paternity Fraud.

Paternity Fraud Activism

Paternity Fraud occurs when a woman deceptively lists a man as the father of her child on legal documents when she knows or assumes he is not the real father.

In most states, it is mandated that a man who is listed as the father on legal documentation is required to financially support the child, even if the man provides proof that he is not the biological father.

In some states, it is possible to file a lawsuit in civil court in a case of paternity fraud.

Some states have recently passed Anti Paternity Fraud bills that stipulate how Paternity Fraud is to be handled, and assign punishments to perpetrators.

There are a number of reports that say some states are now requiring DNA testing in the case of disputed paternity. However, a report from Reuters says this is false.

In the United States, 11 out of 50 states have changed their paternity fraud laws. I tried to come up with a list of states that have paternity laws favorable to men, but was unable to produce a complete list or even find out which 11 states those are. I could only find info on the 5 states listed below (California, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, and Texas). Apparently, this subject is shadow-banned on search engines.

- California: Paternity can be established through voluntary declaration at the child's birth or through court action later. DNA tests are frequently ordered by the court when paternity is contested.
- Florida: Florida allows any party involved in a paternity action, including the child, to request DNA testing. The state covers the cost if paternity is established.
- Texas: Texas law provides detailed procedures for voluntary and involuntary paternity testing and outlines specific guidelines for how testing should be conducted.
- Mandatory Paternity Testing: Several states in the U.S., such as: California, Texas, and Florida have laws requiring paternity testing in cases where paternity is disputed. This ensures that biological fathers are identified, particularly in custody or child support cases.
- Legal Penalties: In certain jurisdictions in California, Georgia, North Carolina, and Texas, paternity fraud is considered a serious offense. Legal penalties may include fines, civil damages, and potential jail time for individuals who knowingly misrepresent paternity. The severity of these penalties can vary widely depending on the state.

Related Issues

Disaffected Dads are not the only ones affected by paternity legislation. There are also…

- Issues surrounding the privacy and welfare of adopted children, and those who give their children up for adoption.
- Issues surrounding the legal rights and privacy of gamete donors to IVF programs.
- Issues surrounding gamete fraud within IVF programs.

The VAP Form

A Voluntary Acknowledgment of Paternity (VAP) form is a voluntary acknowledgment that the intended father is the parent of the child. It is commonly given to unmarried mothers to establish paternity with the biological father. This form should NOT be signed if there is ANY doubt of paternity. A man who signs a VAP form is waiving his right to any future genetic testing to establish paternity.

Conclusions

Paternity Fraud has been an issue raised by Men's Rights Activists for decades, but recently, it has reached a crescendo.

Paternity Fraud is like cheating — it's much more common than people believe, or want to believe, or would like to admit.

I hate to reach this conclusion, but men should always be suspicious of whether they are the biological father of a child whose mother claims he is the father. Don't sign any VAP forms until AFTER a DNA test has been conducted that has affirmed that you are the real father. If the woman objects to a DNA test, that's a bad sign.

Sources

- Wikipedia: Paternity Law
- Wikipedia: Paternity Fraud
- The Washington Post: States Consider Laws Against Paternity Fraud (2002/10/14) [Republished by the Canadian Children's Rights Council.]
- Find Law: Paternity Information by State (2023/7/23)
- Reuters: Fact Check: No law requires DNA testing to establish paternity in United States (2023/9/14)
- DNA Paternity Testing Centers: DNA Paternity Testing Laws Across the States (2024/5/11)

- Distance Dads: Why $2.7 Trillion Paternity Fraud Should Be a Crime Today (2024/10/17)

Related

- Σ Frame: A Study of Consanguinity in Modern European History (2020/8/28)
- Σ Frame: Connecting the Dots (2024/5/10)
- Σ Frame: Not ALL DNA are Equal (2024/10/11)
- Reddit r/PurplePillDebate: Mandatory paternity testing — A Red Pill dream law almost became a reality in one state
- Quora: Hey feminists, why isn't paternity fraud illegal (but regular fraud is)? I thought taking something you weren't entitled to was wrong?
- Σ Game: A Long-Overdue War on Women (2025/8/21)
- Men Are Good: Reproductive Rights End at Ejaculation: How Men Lost Control Over Parenthood (2025/10/20)

MrLBoyd Reacts: The Anti-Paternity Fraud Law That's Saving Lives (2024/8/23) Length: 12 minutes

Mediocre Tutorials and Reviews: Modern Women Are DOOMED By This NEW Anti Paternity Fraud LAW (2025/8/3) Length: 15 minutes

The “Let’s Break Up” Sh!t Test

Jack · 8 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Seeing through the smoke screen.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Girl Game
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

If you’ve been watching Red Pill 2.0 creators and/or T!kT0k, then you’ve surely seen examples of the “Let’s Break Up” Sh!t Test.

This particular Sh!t Test has come up many times on social media (IG, T!kT0k, etc.) over the last year or two, originally by female vloggers who are horrified to discover that it backfires on them, and then by ManoTubers commenting about the stupidity of these women and congratulating the men for walking away.

If you haven’t seen it, then you’ll have to check it out. The utter inanity is epic hilarious, but if you have a sensitive conscience, it’s somewhat sad.

Let’s go through this.

The “Let’s Break Up” Sh!t Test

The “Let’s Break Up” Sh!t Test (LBUST) goes something like this (as seen on T!kT0k, YT, etc.).

An Avoidantly Attached woman says something like, “I broke up with my BF just to see if he’d fight for me.”

And it never goes the way they want or expect.

She fully expects him to bow to her self-gynolatrous grand highness, deliver a dramatic soliloquy of forlorn love, and beg for her to reclaim his lowliness.

But instead, he just walks. Sh!tlords’ rulz!

Another way women pull this same stunt is by posting naughty pictures on IG, exchanging sexy chat DMs, flirting with other men, or even messing around with one (or more) to various extents — as if she were single and on the prowl. Basically anything that offers a smorgasbord of self-centered attention and sexual validation that is also emasculating and/or embarrassing to her man. To her, it's all fun and games with nary a thought of the consequences. But to him, it's a destructive demonstration of Female Power and an irredeemable Red Flag.

You'll know it's a 'test' when they 'let' themselves get caught, and then after being called out, they'll make up a BS excuse like "It's yoar fault coz u din't MAKE ME feeel lurrved." They may not even be truly interested in those other men they're messing around with at all; they're just using the opportunity to get attention, wield power, Sh!t Test their man's reaction, and put him in a defensive position. Overall, she's asserting authority over her man, which is an inversion of the Hierarchy.

The Married version of LBUST is when she says she wants a divorce, maybe repetitively, but does not actually take any action to that end, e.g. calling a lawyer, moving out, etc. What she really wants is to control her husband and make him suffer.

The words, 'break up' and/or 'fight', appear to be key indicators of the LBUST. Women might appear to be playing the same stunt when they demand a separation, saying, "I need some space", or "I need to find myself", or "We need some time apart to think things over", or whatever. But that's a different situation.

There is yet another situation in which married women are truly seeking to divorce their husbands. This too is NOT a LBUST, but women choosing to be loyal to a perfect fantasy over their disaffection with an imperfect reality. See thedeti's note below.

The Effect of Adversity in Solidifying or Destroying Relationships

There is one point of truth behind the LBUST that is most deceptive: that challenges increase closeness.

Most people believe that the fundamental catalyst that draws people together are Good Times. While this is true to some extent, people become more genuinely close when they experience adversity together (e.g., playground scraps, shared enterprises, soldiers at war, etc.).

This happens for several reasons.

- Adversity helps build trust in a relationship.
- Challenging experiences reveal people's strengths, weaknesses, virtues, and vices, allowing others to see the real person.
- Difficult experiences also provide opportunities for people to help and support each other, or else take advantage of each other.
- Adversity can be conducive to developing a "We" and "Us" attitude about the relationship, rather than an "I" and "Whut's innit fur Me?" attitude.

But the pivotal context is that for Adversity to be beneficial to a relationship, it must be Natural… NOT Contrived!

1. Women who play the LBUST are smart enough to recognize that challenges and playfulness can build up a relationship, but they're stupid enough to NOT understand that they cannot be the source of that adversity if they wish to preserve the relationship. In this case, it is a breach of trust, or even a betrayal.
2. Some wimminz falsely believe they can improve their relationships (or achieve some other purpose) by creating trouble. In this case, people learn to see each other as competitors or enemies, instead of as friends. Here, the aspect of 'one flesh' is missing (or violated).
3. Some women falsely believe they can achieve their purpose by being hypoagentic (e.g., acting like they are helpless, or ignorant, or incapable, or lazy, or weak), and expecting others to act in their stead (i.e. "fight for her"). People see such a person as an annoying 'baby', or 'burden', or 'liability', instead of as a friend. Here, the aspect of being a 'helper' is gone.
4. Some people, like these chicks playing the LBUST think that men have to 'prove' their security in their relationship by tolerating this game with a smile. But what they don't understand is that they're emasculating their man, and forcing him into a subservient role in the relationship, and that they won't be attracted to the man if he bends to her whimsies. Here, the element of 'companionship' is compromised.

In total, the LBUST single-handedly destroys all the God ordained purposes for women — 'one flesh', 'helper', and 'companion'. But perhaps the most important reason why these catalysts have such terrible results is that they erode *trust. When a woman plays the LBUST, she's signaling that trust (as well as honor, love, self-respect, etc.) is a non-sequitur in the relationship. That is a VERY BAD SIGN!

Why Should a Man "Fight to Keep Her"?

A good man who truly loves a woman will only "fight to keep her" when either HE messes up or some outside force disturbs them. That same man doesn't fight for a woman when she casually holds him at arm's length while she picks through all her other options, or when she INTENTIONALLY screws around just to 'test' him, or when she flippantly throws him aside. Instead, he'll step back to see whether she's humble enough to admit to her mistakes and how much she values the relationship. If she doesn't display heart-wrenching regret and won't offer a tear-jerking apology, then it's wiser to let her go.

You see, Men want a woman who WILLINGLY CHOOSES to be HIS companion, helper, lover, wife, and mother to his children. Men do NOT want a woman who's NOT TOTALLY on board with HIM on ALL these points. Further, Men do NOT want an Avoidantly Attached, passive-aggressive woman who requires constant accountability checks, babysitting, framing, gaming, and micromanagement either. Men want a woman who is a positive asset to his life, NOT a dead weight that drags him down.

So when a woman says,

- "I broke up with him just to see if he would fight for meee!"
- "I just feeelz like he should have fought harder to keep meee."
- Etc.

It is a meaningless non sequitur precisely because these statements have nothing to do with a woman's free choice to join herself to a man in a Godly union, while her overall behavior actually works against this.

Any woman who breaks up with a man to "see if he'll fight for me" is not worth fighting for. The reason is simple. She's NOT committed enough to be worthy of a man's commitment. She's NOT mature enough to be ready for a serious relationship. She's not stable enough to be a faithful and reliable companion, helpmeet, wife, and mother.

Next, I'll cover Women's Motivations for Playing the "Let's Break Up" Sh!t Test.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Pygmalion Project vs. Shared Enterprises (2018/2/2)
- Σ Frame: A Brother Is Borne Out Of Adversity (2018/6/10)
- Σ Frame: Dealing with Feminine Insecurity (2023/11/22)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Power to Create vs The Power to Destroy (2023/12/4)
- Σ Frame: Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft? (2023/12/5)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)
- Σ Frame: The Compliance Test (2024/9/11)

- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)
- Σ Frame: Relative Internal Locus of Control Determines Relational Structure (2025/7/14)

6 Motivations Women Have for Playing the “Let’s Break Up” Sh!t Test

Jack · 10 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Pursuing the faux validation of delusional self-pedestalization.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Girl Game
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Intro

My last post covered The “Let’s Break Up” Sh!t Test (LBUST) and explained why it doesn’t ‘work’.

Here, I’ve come up with six motivations that Women may have for playing The “Let’s Break Up” Sh!t Test. There may be others, and there are probably more than one in play for any given scenario, depending on the gal.

1. Boredom / Entertainment
2. Control / Dominance / Manipulation
3. Ego Gratification / Selfishness
4. Envy
5. Insecurity
6. Validation

I’ll go through each of these.

1. Boredom / Entertainment

When she says (if only to herself), “There was no drama, no excitement, no passion … so I decided to create some.”

This is NOT about true love overcoming natural adversity (as I described in the previous post). It’s about a self-centered Adult Child throwing a monkey branch into her emotionship just to see what happens, and entertaining herself by watching the frantic reactions of others in the outcome. It is also an epic comedy of errors and extreme foolishness worthy of a dozen memes.

A woman breaking up with a man just to see if he will "fight for her" is like a man dumping dirt on the floor of his house just to see if his GF/wife will hop to it and clean it up with nary a complaint.

You might get a good response the first few times, but try making a habit out of it, and watch how fast trust will tumble.

But it's even worse with wimminz. They'll be cantankerous, create drama, drive hell, make trouble, start fights, "OR ELSE" LBUST, just to stir the pot for the Funs of it, and for her own self-gratifying entertainment.

A gentle reminder to the ladies: You might love and crave drama, but men absolutely despise it! Drama is always a distraction from his purpose and his work, and it always comes at the sacrifice of his peace of mind. If you truly love your man and you truly want to keep him around, you'll diligently eliminate ALL drama from your relationship, or at the very least, you'll keep your drama to yourself while giving him some precious alone time (away from YOU) in his Man Cave.

2. Control / Dominance / Manipulation

In this case, when a woman breaks up with her BF, thinking that she wants him to 'fight' to keep her, what she really means is, "I broke up with him, hoping he would argue / beg / break down / crumble / cry / fight / plead / simp / etc., trying to get me to come back."

What she's NOT saying is that if he "comes back", etc., then she will have successfully taken control over both him and the situationship.

What she REALLY wants is for him to GROVEL before her worshipful highness so that she can display dominance over him in the relationship. She wants to call the shots and bring him to heel like a simpering whimpering puppydog, thereby making him into less of a man whom she is no longer attracted to, just so she can enjoy the self-righteous satisfaction of her supposedly MOARal superiority.

What these matriculating Man Eaters fail to get is the Law of Power:

> "We cannot change other people directly, but we do have the power to change our own selves, which can often > change other people indirectly."

Women always mess up the Law of Power because that would require agency, self-control, and holding herself accountable. Anathema!!!

A gentle reminder to the ladies: The more humility and submissiveness you display, the better GF/wife you will be — NOT the other way around. (Matthew 7:3-5; Luke 6:41-42)

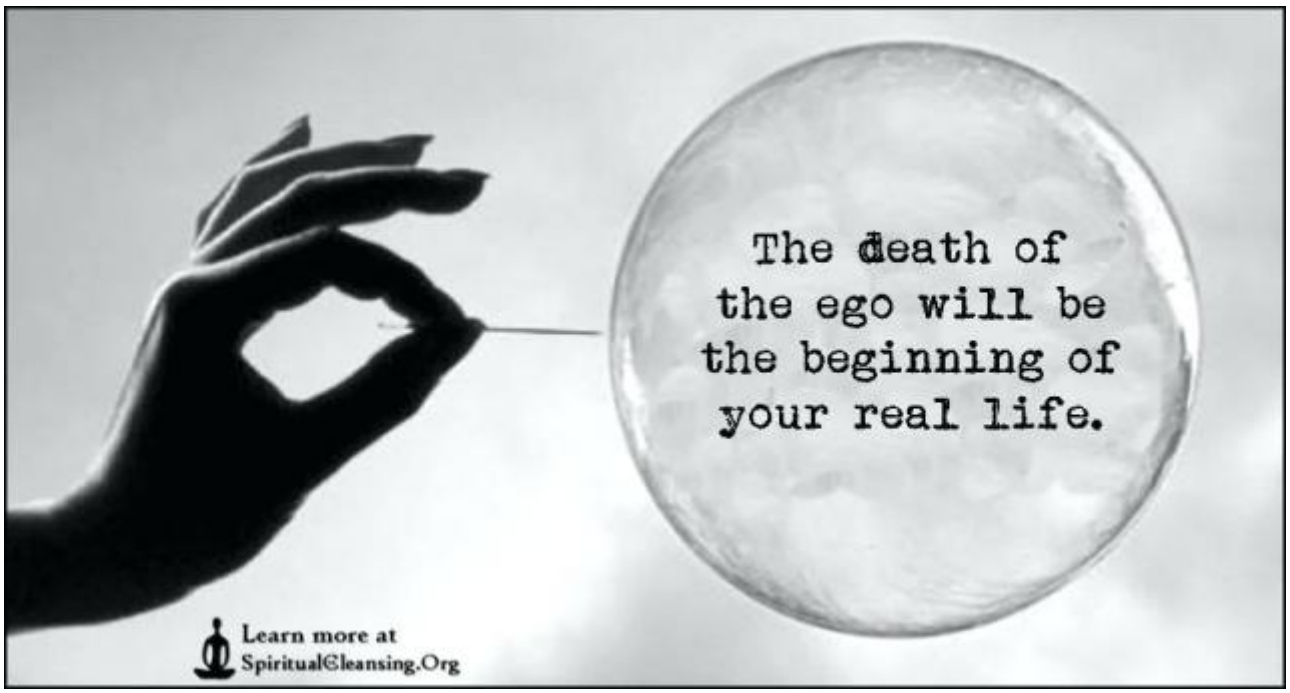
3. Ego Gratification / Selfishness

These women may be vainly thinking that they're "testing their boyfriend's love for her". But ending a relationship just to witness the other person's emotional reaction is a fundamental breach of trust.

Dr. John Gottman found that in successful relationships, the woman will be in the habit of unselfishly offering comfort and convenience to her man; in Biblical terms, she's a helpful companion. But women who pull stunts like the "Let's Break Up" Sh!t Test won't take the effort to offer comfort or convenience to a man, because they're already caught up in their own self-inflicted melodramas, thinking "he doesn't deserve me", or "he's got it too easy", or whatever. Instead, they'll make every event and every topic of discussion rotate around the center of her universe — HERSELF — just to gratify her own selfish ego.

News Flash: No mature, self-respecting gal would make the man she loves "fight to keep her", nor expect him to make it his life's purpose to stroke her ego. No. Instead, she would be fighting to be kept by him and stroking HIS ego like it was the Devils' doorbell.

A gentle reminder to the ladies: The World doesn't revolve around YOUR THIGHNESS. But if you'll align your thoughts and intentions with those of your freely chosen husband, you'll be a little bit closer to the center of your Fear-induced mind masturbation.



4. Envy

When observing relationship drama in others, or in a Chick Flick, or a Slorey Story, they think, "Oh, such a passionate response from him. He must really lurrve her!"

This is largely due to media FemP0rn. Women see movies and videos of couples having dramatic reconciliations after a fight, and it teases up their latent envy.

They think love isn't 'real' unless it is 'proven' somehow through dramatic professions of unconditional, undying love.

Now, there is a touch of truth in this.

> [5] An open rebuke is better than hidden love.
> [6] Wounds from a sincere friend are better than many kisses from an enemy.
>
> Proverbs 27:5-6 (NLT)

But they are obtuse, oblivious to the larger reality that true love is NOT built on envy, that true love goes both ways and hinges on trust. If you really love someone, you won't rebuke them for every faux pas, make them jump through endless hoops, move the goalposts, play mind games, and stoke needless drama at every turn, just to assuage your own self-centric ego. You won't desire or harbor envy, and you won't play the "Let's Break Up" Sh!t Test just to invigorate your flaccid soul via envy.

A gentle reminder to the ladies: The less envy you have, the better GF/wife you will be.

5. Insecurity

When she thinks, "I needz to FEEELZ that he lurrves meee."

Insufferably insecure women are always seeking after continual confirmations of unconditional love. They want to rest assured that the show will go on, no matter how badly they behave or how many times they ruin everything.

But by playing the "Let's Break Up" Sh!t Test, they will find that the show will indeed go on, but it will go on without them.

These foolish wimminz fail to recognize the Law of Responsibility:

> "We have agency and freedom of will, and thus we are responsible for how we influence others."

Yes ladies, you are responsible for whether your man actually wants to BE around you, or even STAY with you. Think upon thy sins, and repent ye with haste.

A gentle reminder to the ladies: There is no man on earth who will be able to assuage your latent childhood insecurities. You need to seek God first, and then when you feel better about yourself, you'll be ready for a real-life relationship with a man.

6. Validation

She's thinking, "I'm such a desi godiva; he's nothing without meee."

Similar to Control / Dominance / Manipulation, these women want to see her man come apart at the seams and melt into an emoting pool of simpfestation, not merely to exert power, but also as a 'proof' of how important she is to him, which is interpreted by her as (faux) 'validation' of her power and worth (which obviously isn't much, which is exactly why it needs dire affirmation).

In reality, she is deconstructing and destroying the relationship through her vain soul quest for literally ANY validation she can find. And she'll never find it in this way.

What these women don't understand is that the relationship itself is the validation — the fact that the man committed to her and continues to invest his time, money, and energy into her. That's it, honeybunz, and that should be enough if she's an emotionally mature woman who's worthy of being a GF/wife. But if she can't appreciate that, then she's either broken, immature, narcissistic, or out of touch with reality. All very bad. All very worthy of dismissal.

A gentle reminder to the ladies: If you want to contain a man's love and commitment, and receive all the benefits of having your own man, then … and I hesitate to say it because I know you'll hate to hear this — you must respect him, submit to him, and be grateful. Ewwwh! If you cannot do this, then you can NOT have a functional, happy relationship with a good, high-quality man. It's as simple as that. If you know you can't or won't do that, then please do society a favor and do NOT marry (yet), because you'll only defraud a good man out of any marital bliss he might find with someone else.

Epilogue

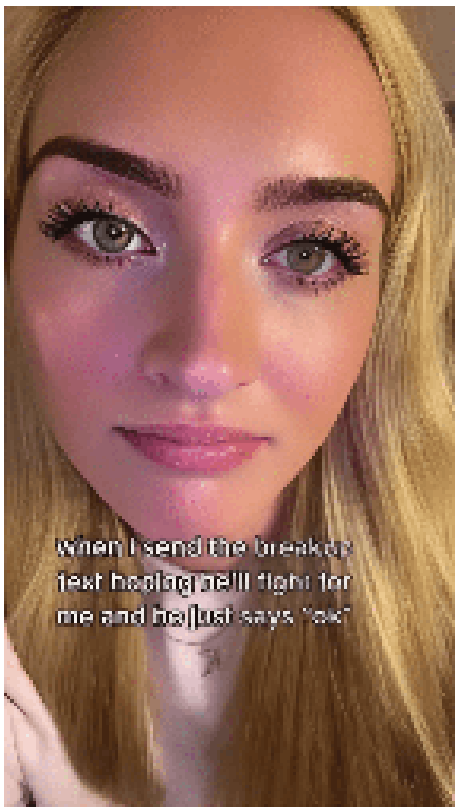
I've presented 6 types of motivations behind the LBUST. In reality, we see all of these appearing to varying degrees in any given case scenario.

More generally, playing the LBUST indicates that…

- She needs constant stimulation because she's either immature or dead inside.
- She values herself more than her man or their relationship.
- She's controlling because she's insecure and unstable.
- She's a conniving, heartless, self-centered beeyotch.

But it doesn't matter which motivation appears, ALL are portentous omens of a harridan's hissyfit heartbreak. ANY woman who pulls the LBUST is more trouble than she's worth.

All in all, truth be told, when a woman tests a man's boundaries, she's wondering if she can make him into a doormat that she can walk all over. She's actually testing to see how much lifeblood she can squeeze out of him for her own vampiristic consumption.



A man's only Biblically correct, self-respecting response to this is to say, "Nope! I can't be dealing with your stupid mind games. You'll have to grow up first … while I find someone else." The wise man stands his ground and doesn't let this, or any woman, overstep his boundaries.

Then, when women respond, "Is he really going to throw everything away?", they are incredulous to discover that they're NOT as worshipful as they want to believe.

No, honeybunz. YOU threw everything away by believing lies about your own identity and reaching beyond your God ordained place and purpose. He's just being mature about it and cutting his losses, while you keep playing games and worshipping yourself.

Related

- Σ Frame: Dealing with Feminine Insecurity (2023/11/22)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Power to Create vs The Power to Destroy (2023/12/4)
- Σ Frame: Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft? (2023/12/5)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Power (2024/1/10)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Evaluation (2024/1/18)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Envy (2024/1/24)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)
- Σ Frame: The Compliance Test (2024/9/11)
- Σ Frame: A Long Hidden Truth is Now Uncovered. (2025/3/14)

Perspectives on The Main Event

Jack · 13 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Mandatory reading for new husbands.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Girl Game
Length: 1,250 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

Regular readers are probably already familiar with The Main Event, described in these posts.

1. Reddit/marriedredpill: [MRP Theory] The Main Event (2014/11/14)
2. Christianity and Masculinity: The Main Event for Married Men (2023/2/15)

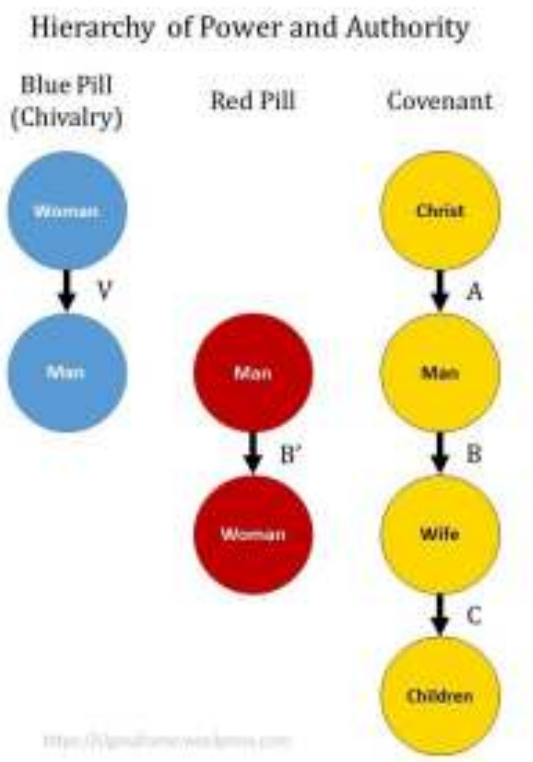
If you're NOT familiar with The Main Event, you'll definitely need to click on the first link and put yourself in the know before clicking on anything else today. It is mandatory Red Pill reading.

A Brief Summary of Intersexual Relationship Structures

I've written tomes on marital / relationship structures. Here, I want to offer a comprehensive summary of these structures so that readers can put The Main Event into perspective. (Recently, I saw some comments around the sphere that indicate some readers haven't yet gotten this.)

In general, marriages come in 3 varieties, according to their overall structure. (See figure below.)

1. Blue Pill / Chivalry — Wife dominates a henpecked husband.
2. Red Pill / Christian Headship — Husband rules over an emotionally unstable wife.
3. Christian Marriage / Covenant / Peaceful Unity — Husband loves his wife and views her as a companion, friend, and helper; Wife respects and submits to her husband and views him as her lord, master, and shepherd.



For the most part, the behavior of the wife is the primary determinant of the structure (i.e. her level of agency, spiritual maturity, etc.).

In the majority of cases, the structure that is present when the relationship forms is the one that will continue, usually throughout life (unless it ends in divorce or separation).

In some cases, though, the marital structure will change from one structure to another, usually due to drastic life changes, but sometimes through faith.

In rare instances, the marital structure will evolve from Blue Pill, to Red Pill, to Covenant / Peaceful Unity. Western Christian married men should be aiming for this procession. Of course, this takes time, perhaps a whole lifetime, and not without extreme difficulty.

Framing The Main Event

The Main Event then, properly understood, is the seismic, paradigmatic, psychological shift from a Blue Pill structure to a Red Pill structure.

I don't have any data, but I'll guess that the majority of couples who have a Main Event conflict cannot successfully make the transition from the Blue Pill structure to the Red Pill structure, and so The Main Event essentially spells the undoing of the marriage. Again, this is usually due to the refusal or resistance of the wife, because women have a strong aversion to being ruled over by a man they believe is beneath them, and they're capable of gaslighting themselves with all sorts of lies to convince themselves that their husbands are beneath them and/or that they deserve someone better. In general, if the wife has a history of sexual promiscuity, and/or if the husband's SMV is NOT significantly greater than the wife's, then it is less likely that she'll be able to successfully make this transition. Gynocentric laws and social norms (i.e., Duluth, No Fault divorce, mothers being granted default custody, etc.) guarantee it, by design.

In these debased times, a Main Event conflict resulting in a successful transition from the Blue Pill structure to the Red Pill structure is nothing short of a miracle.

Catalysts for The Main Event

- The Man takes The Red Pill.
- The Man decides to begin asserting Headship.
- The Man gets in shape or drastically increases his SMV.
- The couple experiences a monumental change in income / wealth.
- One or both partners becomes Christian, or gets serious about how their faith is lived out.
- Either the husband or the wife takes on a new, higher-status, or socially ostentatious position which shifts their relationship dynamics.

Any combination of the above catalysts will cause a Main Event to happen sooner, rather than later.

The Main Event is Inevitable

95+% of all marriages to Western women have a Blue Pill structure by default. This is because Western women grew up on ideas of chivalry and equality in marriage, which leads them to believe that a husband should be their de facto servant in many respects.

However, the Blue Pill structure is wholly untenable over a lifetime. It just won't work — unless the man is totally willing to obey his wife and serve her interests and purposes, and the wife is uncommonly gifted in leadership ability and is exceedingly gracious to her husband, including sexually. But most women will never tolerate such an arrangement because of hypergamy. It violates their Existential Fear. They would sooner dispose of a dependent man and either live independently or look for a more dominant man.

So then we have the much too common situation in which women enter into marriage with all kinds of false and misguided expectations, and then when they actually get into marriage, they find that married life doesn't actually work that way. So then they have to be reeducated through the school of hard knocks, which might take years, and then after they "get it" — that both husband and wife must each contribute 100% by playing their own respective gender roles — roles which more closely resemble Headship than Chivalry or Feminism, then they decide they don't want to be married after all. As it is said, "Women want to GET married, but they don't want to BE married."

Cue The Main Event, possibly followed by the wife's exit from the marriage. 70-90% of divorcees (somewhere between 20-45% of all married women) choose this option, as we already know.

Case Study 1 — Holding Out

Σ Frame: Holding Out (2022/12/2)

This post received quite a lot of feedback in the comments. Readers offered a few theories about the contributing author's late wife's disposition, namely Hysteric Bonding, Incentives, The Main Event, and The Madonna / Whore Complex. In a private email, the author said Hysteric Bonding describes his wife the best.

Overall, I'd say the author's marriage devolved into a stalemate after The Main Event, leading to neither a resolution of Biblical marital roles nor a dissolution of the marriage, and resulting in a very miserable marriage.

I greatly admire and respect this man for enduring these sufferings, and I would even consider him a saint. I believe this is the Cross of Our Age for many men.

Case Study 2 — Jack's Experience

I had a Main Event experience in both my marriages. I was clueless about what was going on, though, because I didn't find the Red Pill until a couple of years into my second (present) marriage. My experience is like what the reddit/MarriedRedPill article describes in that The Big Event comes in successively diminishing waves. Also, I didn't know the difference between a Fitness Test and a Comfort Test; I just thought it was all just them being selfish, evil, and crazy for no good reason other than the ego trip they got from entertaining themselves with the drama. (I still believe my first wife was truly evil and crazy. My present wife is bad-tempered and crazy, but not evil.) Knowing the difference can make it more tolerable.

Conclusions

The Main Event is an inevitable wake up call to reality, one that cannot be avoided.

At present, The Main Event only exists as a common widespread social phenomenon precisely because too many women are hyped up on lies, and so few women are well prepared to BE Christian wives. Worse, when The Main Event strikes, very few wives are able and willing to make the transition to a marital structure that more closely matches the Biblical ordinance. In the current gynocentric climate, they are wholly unable. As it is said, "(Today's) Women have no Game."

It would seem that the only way to avoid the damning consequences is to educate young men and especially young women about the real nature of intersexual dynamics within marriage BEFORE they get into marriage, or even think about dating.

Therefore, I wholeheartedly insist that a textbook description of The Main Event, as well as several other intersexual phenomena explained by The Red Pill (i.e. Attachment Styles, Genuine Authority, Headship, Sexual Blueprints, and many others), should be mandatory reading for new husbands, and a modified Christian Red Pill catechism required for prospective wives.

In addition to these concepts, there are several other types of conflict sequences that commonly play out in marriages, e.g., Bids, Demands, the Prisoner's Dilemma, Tit for Tat, and Intimacy Avoidance, which Sharkly has written a lot about. (I'm wishing he would write a comprehensive post on this.)

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: Fear, Respect, Honor, and Truth: Phobeo and Timao (2014/5/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Authority is Good (2014/6/14)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Dominion (2014/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Rational and Irrational Fear (2014/9/25)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Let's Talk About Marriage: Fear and Dread (2015/11/6)
- Σ Frame: Apprehending True Humility (2019/4/7)
- Christianity and Masculinity: False desire and true desire (2019/6/10)

- Σ Frame: Sexual Consent in Marriage (2020/3/9)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Revisiting dread in the Bible with an anti-chivalry lens (2020/6/18)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Submission (2022/10/14)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Husbands are to improve the moral agency of their wives through sanctification (2022/12/17)

Low SMV Women Even the Score

Jack · 15 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Women decimate their own eligibility by waiting too long and having excessive demands.

Readership: All
Theme: Girl Game
Author's Note: This essay was contributed on 2023/12/3 by a happily married Christian female reader who wishes to remain anonymous. Edited by Jack with statistics and references added.
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Lack of Supply is what Drives Demand

In this essay, I want to address this statement proffered by a reader, riuoku [emphasis mine]:

> "I am still scratching my head at the following issue:
>
> We want to tell women to be accountable and submissive. Of course, they should forget about "finding themselves" in their 20s. But, that still doesn't solve the problem that there won't be enough attractive men for them to marry — unless we demand them to marry men they are not attracted to, which I am not sure is a great idea either.
>
> …there just don't seem to be a collective way to solve this problem. Am I missing something?"

This reader is resonating a common refrain we've often heard from TheDeti, that women need to choose a man, marry him, sex him up regularly, and have his kids — without much regard to attraction. (Deti is welcome to correct me if I've got him wrong on this.)

But let's reframe this. This is seeing the problem as one centered around the supply of attractive MEN. This is a WOMAN's perspective. The thing that is missing is MEN's perspective.

Top 10% SMV males are indeed insufficient to meet demand, as the highly coveted 6-6-6-6 Men are less than 0.1% of the population. But actually, it is high MMV women who are in short supply in our society. This is the main reason why most men are backing out of the MMP, and why they're giving up on trying to become a better man.

- Only 3% of women are virgins on their wedding night [1].
- Only 30% of women marry by the age of 25 [2].
- Only 56.7% of women ever have a child [3].
- There is only a 52% chance that a woman's first marriage will last more than 20 years [4].

Putting all that together, only 0.265% of women are actually worthy wives by Biblical standards (and I would guess this is the lowest it has ever been in all recorded history). Thus, the percentage of high MMV women is comparable to, or even lower than, the supposed top 5-10% of attractive men available.

As we already know, this is because…

1. Women will NOT get married young.
2. Women do NOT want to be feminine.
3. Women will NOT keep their virginity till marriage.
4. Women do NOT want to be agreeable / respectful / submissive to a man.

All of the above reduces women's MMV and pushes them out of the Marriage Market.

Lest we forget, the TRUE MMV of a woman can NEVER be surmised by the quality of men she can bed. It is the men from whom she can get a marriage proposal.

But more than that, A WOMAN'S TRUE MMV ALWAYS MATCHES HER ACTUAL WORTHINESS OF MARRIAGE. That's the realistic definition of MMV. It actually has nothing to do with supply and demand, except that there are so few that the demand is greater.

In reality, marriage-minded men are forced to choose from the best they can get out of a population of whores that are already bad and spoiled for marriage. By default, they're forced to choose from among women who are willing to 'settle' hard enough to divorce gr@pe them. Most men are, quite understandably, saying "NOPE!"

Who is a High MMV Woman?

- She is young (18-23 years; max 25 years)
- She is reasonably attractive (this would comprise most women with longer hair who can fit into a dress without a shoehorn; no tattoos; not riddled with body piercings, etc.).
- She has an AGREEABLE and RESPECTFUL nature.
- She is committed to the idea of marriage being for life.
- She is a virgin!!!

The above means that being a high MMV woman is ACHIEVABLE by practically EVERY WOMAN. It requires very little skill on her part. Age is key. Practically every woman under 22 is a 5 or better, and most are at least 7. If she has long hair, keeps herself fit, and has some facial attractiveness — she can be a solid 8. If she has a voluptuous feminine figure, she will go straight up to 9. We will leave aside the 10's (women with supermodel looks), which is NOT achievable by most women. That's just the basics.

If she is good-natured, kind, quiet, and respectful, and actually learns to 'help' by learning some domestic skills like cooking and cleaning, then this adds 1-3 points to her MMV, depending on what she can do and how good she is at doing it.

If, at this stage, she marries a slightly older man — perhaps mid to late 20's — this man will be high in AMPS scale by her estimations (even if he might be lower in L scale due to genetics). A modestly high AMPS scale is achievable by most hardworking men, even in their late 20s. L can be overshadowed by confidence, dominance, and good clothes.

So, if a YOUNG woman who is at her peak MMV (20-22) looks for an older man with a high AMPS score, she will have her PICK of attractive men.

So you see, it is NOT the LACK of attractive men which is causing the problems in the marriage marketplace. It is the lack of high MMV value women that is causing the problem. Men just won't bite the hook when there aren't any tasty fish in the sea. We're seeing this everywhere now.

A Dichotomy of Optionality

Practically every single woman starts with HIGH MMV (innocence, virginity, youth, etc.).

She then gets to make her choice.

Choice 1 — Pick from a top 5% guy at a young age (18-22) when she has a HIGH MMV, and devote her life to her marriage and family.

Choice 2 — Wait till The Wall hits and/or till her MMV has crashed by compiling an extensive sexual history. Then she spends her time after that entertaining the WRONG BELIEF that she has to 'settle' and wondering Why? The truth is that she is NOT settling at all. Her lack of options is because she has waited too long, and her MMV has already crashed. She can no longer score the top 5-10% of attractive men because SHE is NO LONGER in the top 5-10% of MARRIAGEABLE women.

Bottom Line — Following the above argument, a girl with high MMV should have NO PROBLEMS finding an attractive man to marry. She is in much shorter supply than the top 5-10% attractive men. She just has to iron things out while the iron is hot.

Deciphering the Femtalk

So you see, it is the LOW MMV women — women in their late 20s or early 30s — who are complaining about a lack of attractive men and who are also most likely to NOT find one. It is these women who wasted their potential on postponing marriage, furthering their education, chasing after a career, and who spent those precious years riding the carousel instead of riding her husband and birthing a family.

The reason why this is all we hear about is because 95+% of women choose to expend their virginity outside of marriage, thereby lowering their MMV, and ~80% of women choose to postpone marriage until they become LOW MMV! That's just stupid!

If she is sensible and marries a man of her choice when she is at her peak MMV (preferably with her father's seal of approval that the man is indeed a top 5% man and not the herd's definition of what a top 5% man is), then there is no reason to be disappointed with finding a worthy man, and no need to 'settle'.

Case Study — Author's Personal Experience

When my father started looking for men for my sister and me to date, we were flooded with dates by VERY ATTRACTIVE men. I am talking about doctors, engineers, lawyers — very high status men. Why? Because we had a high MMV (at that time).

The man I married paid for a plane ticket (as he was living in another state) to come see me for our first date. Why did he do that? He told our sons the reason why. Even back in the day, pretty Christian virgins in their early 20's were hard to come by (those were his words not mine).

That is it! Those were my qualifications. I was a virgin, pretty, and in my early 20's. Just THAT got me a date with a man who paid for a PLANE TICKET to come see me. OK, it took a bit more to get a wedding proposal out of him (ha ha!), but realistically speaking, pretty much ANY woman could do as well as I did — IF she works her MMV to her advantage during the time her MMV is high.

That was the situation almost 25 years ago. How much smaller in numbers are high MMV women today?!?

Conclusions

Bottom Line — A high MMV woman will have pretty much ZERO problems scoring a highly attractive man (even if she is looking at the top 5-10% men). BUT she must PRIORITIZE finding a husband ABOVE ALL ELSE, including "finding herself", pursuing an education and a career, and her carnal desire to sample the carousel.

I have been trying with some small measure of success to teach this to young girls. But… the calls of the flesh and the herd are strong. Few young chickadees care to listen to this wisdom.

As the Bible says:

> [13] Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: [14] Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.
>
> Matthew 7:13-14 (KJV)

That being said, inroads are being made, even if the numbers are still small.

References

1. Finer LB. Trends in Premarital Sex in the United States, 1954–2003. Public Health Reports. 2007;122(1):73-78. doi:10.1177/003335490712200110 [PDF]
2. U.S. Census Bureau: When and How Often People Marry Changes by Birth Cohort (2022/8/31)
3. National Health Statistics Reports: Fertility of Men and Women Aged 15–49 in the United States: National Survey of Family Growth, 2015–2019 (2023/1/10) [PDF]
4. NBC News: CDC: Only half of first marriages last 20 years (2012/3/22)
5. U.S. Census Bureau: Number, Timing and Duration of Marriages and Divorces (2021/4/22)

Related

- Σ Frame: Sexual Market Value (SMV) vs. Marriage Market Value (MMV) (2017/7/27)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
- Σ Frame: Revising Our Concepts of SMV and MMV (2024/4/26)

Why Modern Women Have No Game

Jack · 17 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Defiled mothers produce broken daughters.

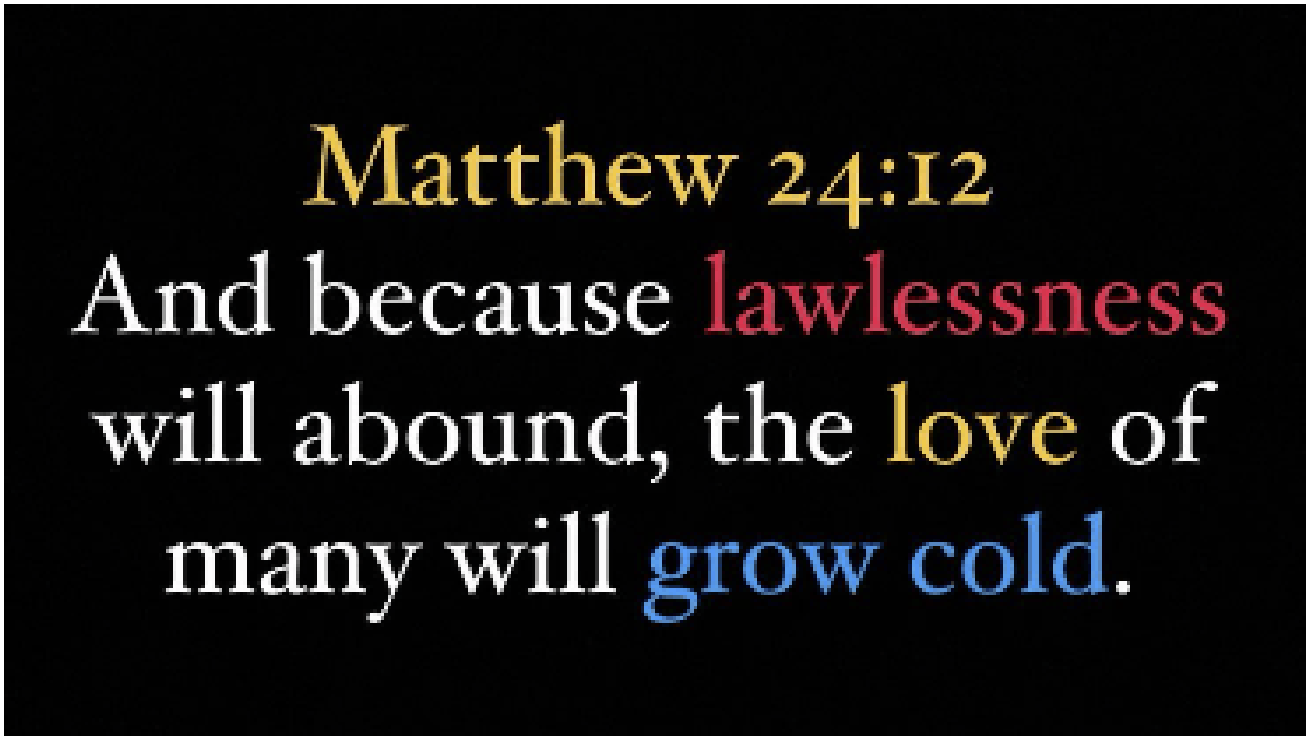
Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Girl Game
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Love Grows Cold

While I was writing about The "Let's Break Up" Sh!t Test (LBUST) and the motivations behind it, I gathered an important takeaway — that the LBUST game play is a tell-tale sign of an Avoidantly Attached woman. Thus, social media being flooded with women playing the LBUST indicates that there is a mass proliferation of women with an Avoidant Attachment style.

A research study by Konrath et al. (2014) indicates this is true. The percentage of people having an Avoidant Attachment style has more than doubled since the 1980s, and now stands between 20-25% of the population. That's huge!

In an earlier study, Konrath et al. (2011) reported that since 2000, there has been a drastic decrease in both empathic concern and a willingness to imagine other people's points of view.



Burnette, et al. (2009) found a link between Avoidant Attachment and depression, which helps explain why more singles, especially single Feministas, are more unhappy than ever.

Further, Sagone et al. (2023) found that individuals who enjoyed stable close relationships reported higher levels of psychological well-being than singles, whereas singles were significantly more likely to have an Avoidant Attachment style and be uncomfortable with closeness. They also found that psychological well-being could be fairly well predicted by one's attachment style. One other noteworthy point of interest is that people with healthy attachment and good relationships were confident individuals, whereas Insecurely Attached singles were stricken with a need for approval / validation.

In summary, having an Avoidant Attachment style strongly predicts singleness and unhappiness, which is exactly what comes of the LBUST. None of this will be surprising to regular RP readers, except that the $c!eNt!$t$ got it right this time.

Avoidant America

Faith Hill, writing for The Atlantic, cited Konrath's study in an article titled, America Is in Its Insecure-Attachment Era (2023/4/27) [Archive]. This article is worth reading for its description of Attachment Styles, a summary of Konrath's research, and an overview of the general decline of trust in American society. However, when reflecting on the possible causes for the rise in Insecure Attachment, she cites nearly every single hot-button issue purveyed by MGM and the PTB, including…

- "Climate Change"
- Career competition
- Reduced social trust
- War in eastern Europe
- Faltering faith in institutions
- Swipe interaction dating apps
- The economy and financial pressures
- Constant school shootings in the news
- The socially disruptive conditions of formal education
- Fewer marrieds and more singles, and more people living alone
- An ambient feeling that society is falling apart, termed "precarity"
- AI (ChatGPT?) threatening to transform jobs and upset job security
- Social media and smartphones leading to less face-to-face interaction
- And even "Boundaries", of all things*

 Boundaries actually increase closeness and trust between Securely Attached individuals, whereas Boundaries are perceived to prevent intimacy among Insecurely Attached individuals.*

I was almost exhausted by the end of Hill's piece, so I wasn't too disappointed that she failed to mention how immigration reduces social trust (as well as GDP) and how pandemic lockdowns isolated everyone. Oh, right. Those are Conservative views that mustn't be mentioned.

Hill concludes by saying,

> "It could be all of these things, some combination of them, or something else entirely. We can't determine why people are putting up walls, growing further and further away from one another. We just know it's happening."

Well folks, gather 'round, and Σ Jack will tell you why.

Broken Childhoods

That's right.

One's Attachment Style, including Avoidant Attachment, is not caused by social or environmental conditions in the present, as Hill and all the 'experts' she interviewed seem to think. No. It is a learned habit that originates from one's upbringing.

Tracing this behavior further back to the causes of Avoidant Attachment, the rising prevalence of Avoidant Attachment means there are a lot of people (including women) who were not properly loved as children. Their parents were strict and emotionally distant; they did not tolerate expressions of feelings, and they expected their child to be Strong and Independent. (Where have we heard that before?)

Now, why would so many people have such a ratty childhood? I'll posit a guess that a large number of these people were neglected because of any combination of the following.

1. Familial dysfunction in general.
2. Growing up in day care while Mommy works overtime.
3. Being used as an alimony / child support / citizenship anchor.
4. The Effects of the Sexual Revolution on Female Sexuality, i.e. mothers.
5. The absence of both parents exhibiting Headship and the glory of God within the home.
6. Feminist mothers controlling them, consuming them, spoiling them, and distancing their Dads.
7. Parents were feeding on a steady diet of Liberal Progressive lies, i.e. Chivalry, Churchianity, Disney, Feminism, romcoms, etc.
8. Parental divorce, which effectively casts the children directly into an unescapable hell NOT of their own choosing or doing. And BTW, parental divorce destroys sons' confidence and ruins daughters' commitment to marriage — or their BFs (plural), hence, the LBUST.

Overall, I'd say the increasing prevalence of Insecure Attachment, as well as the LBUST epidemic and all the broken lonely hearts that come of it, are a longitudinal fallout of The Sexual De-Evolution, The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse, including No Fault Divorce laws, Feminism, specifically the SIW trope, and How Feminism Erodes Marriage, all of which have led to a relationship-breaking number of dysfunctional families and mucked up kids who grow up to create yet another generation of debased dip$h!tz.

There you have it. That's real gynocratic civnattery for you.

This is why Modern Women Have No Game.

References

1. Burnette, J. L., Davis, D. E., Green, J. D., Worthington, E. L., Bradfield, E. (2009). Insecure attachment and depressive symptoms: The mediating role of rumination, empathy, and forgiveness. Personality and Individual Differences, 46, 276-280. [Online PDF]

2. Konrath S. H., O'Brien E., Hsing C. (2011). Changes in dispositional empathy in American college students over time: A meta-analysis. Personality and Social Psychology Review, 15, 180-198. [PDF]
3. Konrath, S. H., Chopik, W. J., Hsing, C. K., O'Brien, E. (2014). Changes in adult attachment styles in American college students over time: a meta-analysis. Personality and Social Psychology Review, 18(4):326-48. [DOI]
4. Sagone, E., Commodari, E., Indiana, M. L., La Rosa, V. L. (2023). Exploring the Association between Attachment Style, Psychological Well-Being, and Relationship Status in Young Adults and Adults-A Cross-Sectional Study. European journal of investigation in health, psychology and education, 13(3): 525-539. [DOI]

Related

- Σ Frame: Forgiveness – The biggest obstacle in overcoming my parents' divorce (2010/3/3)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): The U.S. Census Bureau sanctions Divorce (2020/1/25)
- Σ Frame: Data on Marriage and how No Fault Divorce turned marriage into a revolving door. (2020/10/30)
- Σ Frame: Parental Divorce Ruins Daughters' Future Marital Commitment and Confidence (2021/2/24)
- Σ Frame: Bastards (2022/9/9)
- Σ Frame: Attachment Styles (2023/10/11)
- Σ Frame: Identifying Attachment Style is the New Game (2023/10/12)
- Σ Frame: Attachment Style and Game (2023/10/13)
- Σ Frame: Patriarchy and Civilization (2025/8/11)
- Men Are Good: Why Dads in Family Court Need To Learn From Father X (2025/10/13)

The Parable of the Mechanical Pony Ride

Jack · 20 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The fun has a cost and only lasts for a limited time.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Girl Game;
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Foreword

Bardelys the Magnificent gave us this most excellent parable under Farm Boy's post at Spawny's Space, Evidence (2025/9/2). Two outstanding comments from Feeriker and CP follow. I've taken the liberty of editing the content for ease of reading. Many thanks to Farm Boy, BtM, Feeriker, and CP for their contributions to Manosphere lore.

The Parable of the Mechanical Pony Ride

We men make the classic mistake that women think. By and large, they don't. There's no assessment of real SMV/MMV equity, no concept of cause and effect, or likely probabilities.

When she snags a Chad for a STR, she's only basking in the Tingles and the Feeelz and the fantasy of how it will continue forever, kinda like kids riding the mechanical pony at the supermarket. She paid her quarter and is enjoying the ride. Nowhere does she think that it may end, that she may need more quarters to continue, or that there are other people waiting in line. This realization is what breaks them and transforms them into bitter, man-hating Alpha Widows.

Some women don't have to pay a quarter to ride. Some of them get to ride for free just for showing up. Some even get to cut in line. But whether they pay or not, the ride will always end. Some other, younger, hotter, tighter girl gets her turn next, and never do they think that they cannot be next, or that it will NOT be free, or that they will run out of quarters at the age of 29.9, or that the store will close when their eggs expire, and they will no longer be allowed to ride. No, they truly believe that the ride will go on forever and ever, or at least as long as they want it to.

But it hardly ever works out the way they imagine.

Ever seen a 4-year-old lose their sh!t when the ride comes to an end and mommy says "No more quarters!"??? That's how women act when Chad dumps them or simply ghosts. Unless they're taught beforehand, they cannot imagine it working out this way, which is why it happens over and over and over again.

There's a reason why parents hate those d@mn machines. They're kid magnets and create more trouble than the fun the kid gets in return. Riding Chad works the same way, which is why women were historically kept away from them.

A Biblical Solution

Society could, at least theoretically, make Chad disappear overnight simply by making him legally responsible for ALL of the women he's deceived, pumped, and dumped, as well as for all the bastard spawn he's sired by them.

In this scenario, once Chad "deflowers" a girl, she's legally his, and he's held legally responsible for her, as well as any offspring he creates with her.

> @lexiiibooo
> Save a horse, ride a bull □ #pbr #hampton #mechanicalbull
> ♫ original sound – lexi

Yes, it would mean "legally enforced polygyny" for certain men. That could mean that Chad "marries" 20, 50, or 100 women, and that he will be held responsible for supporting ALL of them and any children he fathers by any of them.

Yes, Chad will, of course, neglect and basically abandon her/them once he tires of her/them (and they always do), but she would still be legally his responsibility, and he would also be her legal "spouse," thereby preventing her from entering into a debased marriage with any other man and eventually ruining him.

It's the old "shotgun wedding" multiplied by a dozen or a hundred, this time with the State as the shotgun-wielding father. Once Chad realizes how much of a burden his crooked d!ck will create for him, he might think twice about spunking multiple poontangs — especially if he faces the possibility of prison time for not meeting his obligations to his "wives" (which of course most won't be able to do once his N count reaches double digits).

Once in effect, there would no longer be any such thing as an "Alpha Widow", because Giga Chads would face significant economic and legal incentives to keep their 10" schlongs in their Calvin Kleins, and when they don't, they're permanently hitched to the chick — just as God has declared (Genesis 2:24; Matthew 19:4-7; Mark 10:6-9; Ephesians 5:31).

The associated Part Two of this arrangement is that there is NO social welfare safety net for either Brittney or Chad (or Keisha and Tyrone) or their kids. The rest of society will NOT be held responsible for those foolish women nor their offspring. It would make women know without a doubt that they'll be stuck with Chad for life, for better or worse, in sickness and in health, and so on, and will NOT be getting any money from daddy government to get by on.

Closing Statements

Is it a practical solution? Not at all, but there really is no "practical" way to solve this problem. It's really the only way I can think of for making both Chad and the stupid, naïve girls he's run through take responsibility for their irresponsible choices and decisions.

It's really just recognizing the Biblical / historical concept of Sex = Marriage as a practical reality, and putting Sharkly's explanation of a "Godly marriage" into practice.

Otherwise, without these stopgaps in place, why should a woman NOT get blown out by Chad? After all, she could be the one he decides to settle down with, and if she isn't, she can still be on welfare bennies and get all the drama she can eat from the harem / herd.

But alas! The genie is NOT going back in the bottle. Not anytime soon, anyway.

Related

See this excellent historical account from TheDeti of how society has dealt with Chads and Brittneys.

- Σ Frame: The Parable of the Pie (2018/11/17)
- Σ Frame: The Alpha Widow Syndrome – A Manospherian Allegory of Defilement (2020/3/4)
- Σ Frame: The Future of Intersexual Relationships is Transactional (2021/3/12)
- Σ Frame: Towards a more complete appreciation of Sanctification (2022/1/10)
- Σ Frame: Artisanal Toad on Women's Agency (2022/11/14)
- Σ Frame: Are Men Responsible for Women's Behavior? (2023/2/1)
- Σ Frame: Are Common-Law Marriages the most Biblical? (2023/6/3)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Sex = Marriage vs. Church/State Sanctioned Marriage (2023/6/21)
- Σ Frame: Expectations, Laws, and Policies regarding Marriage (2023/6/22)
- Σ Frame: Synopsis of Sacramental Marriage (2023/6/25)
- Σ Frame: Brides are Subject to Vetting (2023/10/23)
- Σ Frame: How to Juggle 3 Wives (2025/4/18)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Neurochemistry of Commitment, Sex, and Love (2025/7/26)

Acting like a Man until She becomes Masculine

Jack · 22 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

"Fake it 'til you make it" applies to Wimmin too, except it's NOT "The Winner Effect".

Readership: All; Men;
Targeted Readership: Women who wish to retain their Femininity.
Theme: Chemistry; Girl Game;
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Testosterone in Men and Women

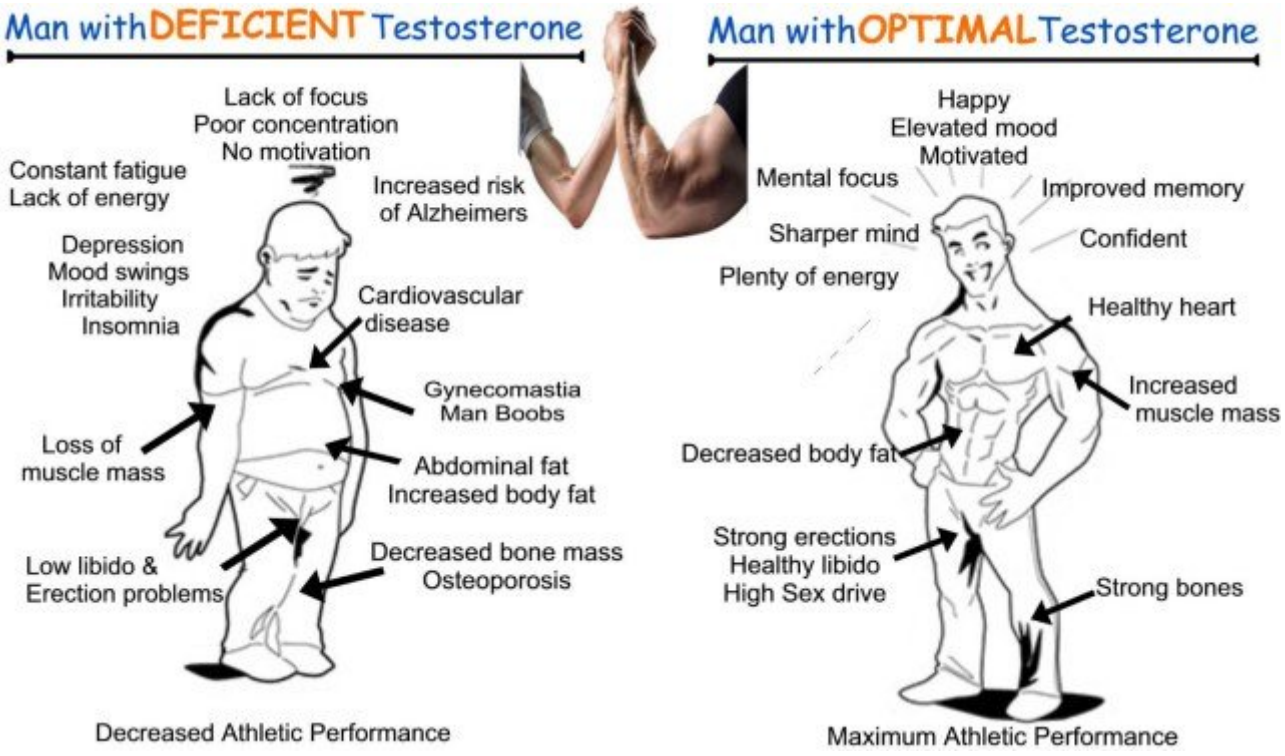
There is a significant variability in natural testosterone (T) levels within both men and women. According to the National Institutes of Health, the normal range of T is 300 to 1,200 ng/dL for men, and about 30 to 95 ng/dL for women. Demographic confounds such as age, genetic composition, and being in a relationship can also affect men's and women's T levels differently.

Although women have much lower levels of T and higher estrogen levels than men, T is women's dominant sex hormone, just as it is in men. Therefore, the effects of T on behavior are comparable. Tom Girls and Strong Independent Termagants are (relatively) high T chicks. Fluffy Freds and Sad Sams are low T men.

We tend to focus on T in men because it is the driving sex hormone, and because the subject of how T level affects men's mood and performance has hit mainstream media in medical and supplement advertising (at least in the U.S.A.).

But we seldom think about T in women, or how their T levels affect their sociosexual behaviors.

Read on for the scoop.



The Winner Effect

The PUA gurus of ye olde Manosphere 1.0 taught that a man should act Alpha until he becomes an Alpha. Debates raged for years as to whether this was actually possible. Can you fake it 'til you make it?

In two previous posts, Testosterone is Associated with the Assertion of Social Status (2023/8/22) and The Winner Effect (2023/8/30), it was revealed that Men's T jam digs in deeper when they dial up the inner Don.

Testosterone is Associated with the Assertion of Social Status (2023/8/22) covered how men's T level forms self-reinforcing social habits that cement their place in the sociosexual hierarchy. High T men dominate. Mid-T men form hierarchies. Low T men get pushed aside or rolled over.

The Winner Effect (2023/8/30) occurs when a man pushes himself to compete, to engage, and to win, and this behavior raises his T levels such that he becomes more dominant and masculine over time.

A number of articles, reports, and ¡ScIeNtIfIc! Studies have been done on this phenomenon. Here are a few.

1. Butler, J. (2002). Gender trouble. New York: Routledge.
2. Dabbs, J. M., & Dabbs, M. G. (2000). Heroes, rogues, and lovers: Testosterone and behavior. New York: McGraw-Hill.
3. Goldey, K. L., & van Anders, S. M. (2014). Sexual modulation of testosterone: Insights for humans from across species. Adaptive Human Behavior and Physiology. 1, 93-123. [PDF]
4. Muller, M. N., Marlowe, F. W., Bugumba, R., & Ellison, P. T. (2009). Testosterone and paternal care in East African foragers and pastoralists. Proceedings of the Royal Society of London B: Biological Sciences. 276, 347-354. [PDF]
5. van Anders, S.M., Steiger, J., & Goldey, K.L. (2015). Effects of gendered behavior on testosterone in women and men. Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. 112(45), 13805-13810. [PDF]

There is certainly a complex, bi-directional feedback system between physiology and behavior. A small increase in T levels leads to significant behavioral changes, and the repeated practice of these sorts of behaviors may lead to epigenetic changes with increasing T over time.

There is also a relationship between body positions and T levels. Research has shown that more wide/power-oriented postures and a larger 'personal space' generally indicate and INCREASE one's T levels.

More reason to Manspread, fellows!

Emasculated Men

Apparently, The Winner Effect can work in reverse, too. That is, repeated defeats, failures, and losses can gradually wear a man down such that his T level is no longer what it used to be.

> "A woman can in many cases recover from a nightmare of degradation, but [for men] emasculation is irreversible and cannot be cured."
>
> The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): Emasculation is Irreversible and Cannot be Cured. (2024/2/2)

This is exactly what Feminism and the PTB has been inflicting on men for the past 2+ decades via various means and ways (e.g., apathy towards men in the church, discrimination against boys in education, Duluth, gynocentric laws, court rulings that favor women, "Pity Men" narratives, shame tactics, "Toxic Masculinity", "Wh!te Man Bad!" etc.). Lo and behold, men's average T levels have dropped, and every day, we see more Simps and Soy Boys. (This is probably not the only reason for the decline, but it's certainly one that has not received much attention.)

Masculinized Women

While T has been decreasing in men, the T levels in women have been increasing during the same time period. Western women have shifted more masculine since the Women's Liberation de-evolution back in the 1970s.

The connection between T and social dominance may explain this phenomenon.

You see, just like The Winner Effect occurs in men, believe it or not, ¡ScIeNcE! says women's T levels go up when they exert social dominance (power) and vice versa, just as with men.

Here are some supporting articles.

1. van Anders, S.M.; Steiger, J.; Goldey, K.L. (2015). Effects of gendered behavior on testosterone in women and men, Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, 112(45):13805-13810. PubMed: 26504229; http://www.pnas.org/cgi/doi/10.1073/pnas.1509591112 [PDF]
2. Slate: Women's Testosterone Levels Rise Even When They Just Act Like They Have Power (2015/10/26)

3. University of Michigan LSA Psychology: Women's Testosterone Levels Rise Even When They Just Act Like They Have Power (2015/10/27)
4. The Cut: Behaving Like a Boss Increases Women's Testosterone Levels (2015/10/29)
5. Gizmodo: You Can Raise Your Testosterone Levels Just By Acting Aggressive (2015/11/5)

Moreover, there is a behavioral-endocrinological feedback loop in women, just as in men. Small changes in women's T result in significant behavioral modification, just as in men. Repeated practice of these sorts of behaviors may lead to epigenetic changes and increasing T over time, just as in men.

The sample size is small, and the results will need to be repeated, but the idea that T levels in women go up when they exert social dominance (power) is intriguing — and eye-opening as to the mechanisms behind their prowess.

Conclusions

If these findings apply to the vast majority of women, then this would explain the observed trends of an increasingly more argumentative, domineering, and forceful populace of women since feminism became the norm a few decades ago. The fact that there are more women in the workforce, more women in leadership roles, and even more women who dominate their marriage relationships, underscores women adopting superlative social roles that may be inadvertently driving their T levels up.

The simple fact that Testosterone is Associated with the Assertion of Social Status (2023/8/22) explains why slores are quite aggressive about pursuing Ch@ds and initiating sex, as well as pigeonholing other women and asserting their status in the hierarchy of hens.

A Note to Fathers and Husbands

It is good to encourage boys to join competitive sports and push them to win, because these aggressive, domain-enforcing activities increase T and make them more masculine. As we know, T is the nectar of Holiness. For this same reason, it is NOT good to encourage girls to join competitive sports, because the subsequent increase in T creates less feminine women. The Battle Axe Berthas and Grundel Gritching Gretchens, are not likely to fare well in their intersexual relationships.

Better recommendations for physical exercise for girls and women would be cross-country running, dancing (the elegant forms like ballet, tango, or waltz for single girls; pole swinging and twerking for already-marrieds); gardening, hiking or walking, and swimming (non-competitive). For strength training, a better approach would be isometrics, pilates, resistance bands, superballs, and trampoline rather than barbells and dumbbells. An exception might be made for flat-@ssed femmes to do deadlifts and squats to get their bumpers bouncing.

H/T: Red Pill Apostle

Related

- Wood, W., & Eagly, A. H. (2012). Biosocial construction of sex differences and similarities in behavior. Advances in Experimental Social Psychology, 46, 55-123. [PDF]
- Stulp, G., Bunk, A. P., Pollet, T. V., Nettle, D., & Verhulst, S. (2013). Are human mating preferences with respect to height reflected in actual pairings? PloS one, 8, e54186. [Online]
- Psychology Today: Sex, Gender, and Testosterone (2016/2/5)
- The Red Pill: The 5 stages of becoming a Red Pill Alpha (2018/2/22)
- Σ Frame: Testosterone has been Decreasing for Decades (2023/8/21)
- Σ Frame: Testosterone is Associated with the Assertion of Social Status (2023/8/22)
- Σ Frame: Testosterone Facilitates Social Interactions (2023/8/24)
- Σ Frame: The Slow Demise of Masculine Leadership (2023/9/1)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti, Jack): Skirting around the Skirts (2023/11/24)
- Σ Frame: Strachan's Strafe (2023/11/25)
- Σ Frame (Jack, Thedeti): The Sacred Cow (2021/12/1)
- Σ Frame: The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)
- Σ Frame: Double Bind (2023/12/8)
- Σ Frame: Darkened Delusions of Male Insecurity (2023/12/22)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Reality (2023/12/23)
- Σ Frame: Review: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men into Boys (2025/3/10)
- Σ Frame: Witchcraft Rising (2025/8/1)
- Rev. Matt's Writings: Feminism is An Ancient Evil (2025/9/23)
- Spawny's Space: Be Like A Man (2025/9/23)

How Karens are Mass Produced

Jack · 24 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The rest of the story about the 3 Karen Factories in the West.

Readership: Men; Younger Men;
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Girl Game;
Length: 1,900 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Karens

Karens are annoying, catty, loud-mouthed women who are bossy, controlling, and constantly vexed about everything under the sun. They're demanding, domineering, sarcastic, self-centered, spiteful, and vindictive.

They talk in vocal fry when relaxed, cackle like a W!tch when they're happy, and screech when they're not.

They take everything casually, and their life is the substance of $hits and giggles. Nothing is sacred or off limits. Everything is debased, or is made that way. Dignity is ridiculed as 'fake'. Formality is scorned as 'posing'. Respect is denigrated as self-hatred. All projection.

Men, including their husbands and sons (if any, God help them), are regularly subjected to idle words of ridicule and shame, usually magnifying their fleshly weaknesses. "Gawd! Did yew fart AGAIN?!?" "I'm NOT in the mood for your B$ tonight. So you can keep your dinky pinky in your pants, little boy … and I better NOT catch you looking at P0rn AGAIN! Yew little PERVERT!"

They have no virtue whatsoever, no redemptive qualities, no self-awareness, no self-control, no self-discipline, and no passion for husband or family. They only love themselves, the latest rounds of gossip, and rollicking in the Feeelz. They offer nothing but braggadocio, condemnation, disrespect, and trouble.

Younger dudes might not know this, but Karens have existed since forever. We just didn't call them Karens until recently. The current grand proliferation of Karens started in the 1960s, coinciding with the sexual revolution. There was a sharp uptick in the 1970s during women's liberation, and again in the 1990s. Recently, there's been another swell of Karens, and this time they're everywhere, like a Zombie Apocalypse.

I just can't tolerate Karens. In fact, American Karens are one of the reasons I moved to Asia.

Case Study — Classic Karens

FuzzyWuzzyBear shared this video a while back. It's a classic must-see from Joker at Better Bachelor.

Better Bachelor: If this isn't enough of a slap in the face for you fellas, you're on your own. (2020/6/8) Length: 21:00

We all know women who are just like them.

I don't know these two women, and I don't follow their channel, so I won't talk about them specifically as individuals. But these women are about my age, so I feel like I know what they are all about. I want younger guys to know what we are looking at here, and how women like this came to be.

I'll concede that their act is played up for clicks and views, but seriously, do you think these ex-Tinderellas would make any kind of self-sacrifice for the well-being of their kids? Or do they just march them off to school or day care, breathe a sigh of relief to have them gone, and then enjoy watching romcoms and sitcoms, gossiping on the phone, and sipping wine all day?

Do you think women who act and talk this way in any context have mind-blowing sex with their husbands? Or do you think they just let him shag the bag once or twice a month, just enough to keep him from blowing up or blowing away?

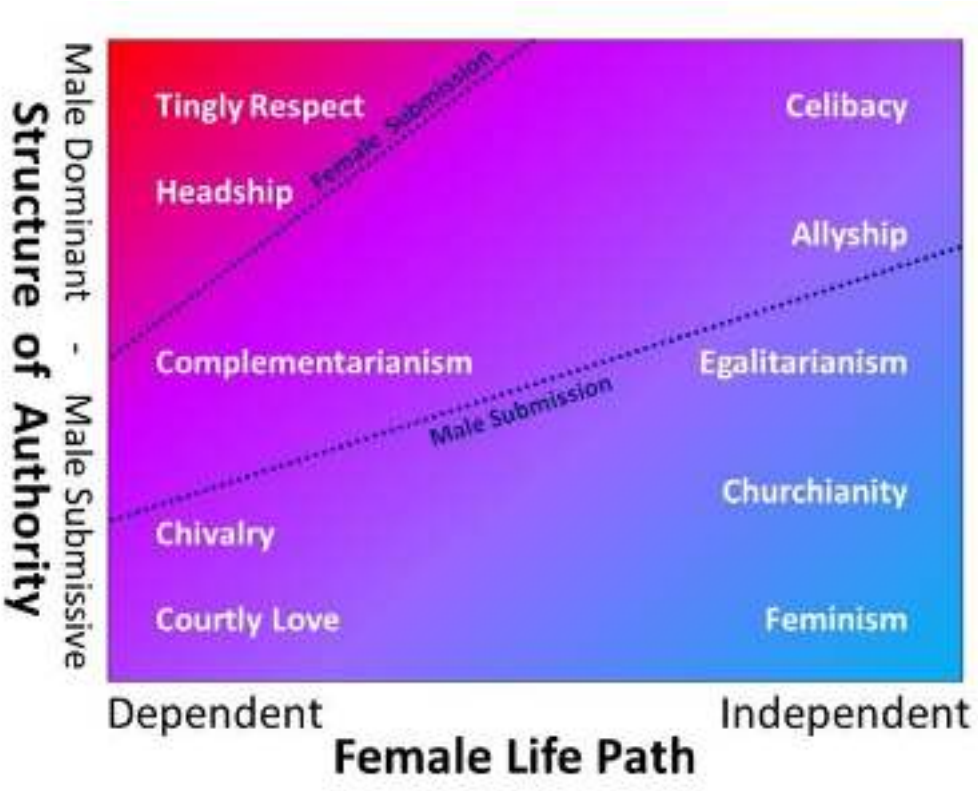
I doubt that they've ever been truly in love with any man, Alpha or not.

How Karens are Made

Younger guys might be wondering, HOW did these Karens ever become this way — so annoying, so insufferable, so unbearable?

I'll break it down for you.

All women start off as virgins (i.e. Celibacy in the graph).



Most women go after higher SMV men for various reasons. At some point, they get the Feeelz for a man (i.e. a fear fantasy) and/or are drawn into a Tingly Respect relationship (or feminine lust). For most women, sexual congress usually ensues, ratcheting up her N count. IOW, she attempts to jump to the upper left corner of the graph.

But in doing so, she must learn to be dependent on him and submit to him. If she fails to learn this, and Headship is not fully apprehended, then the relationship is bound to fail at some point.

This is where most women drop the ball, because Headship is deemed evil and oppressive. They've been indoctrinated by Feminism NOT to depend on a man, respect men, or submit to a man.

Even if Headship is present, the relationship could still fail for any number of reasons (e.g. boredom, branch swinging, disappointment, disrespect, an evil will, hard-heartedness, lack of appreciation, lack of commitment, spite, etc.). If a woman values her fee-fees more than a particular man, she'll eventually dump him under the delusion that she's better off without him, or with someone else. Sometimes (in around 20% of instances), the man will dump her because she's sooo intolerable.

But no matter who is at fault, with each failed attempt (e.g., branch swinging, breakups, divorce, etc.), she exonerates herself and blames the man. And with every new flame, she wants more and more from a man, while she has less and less of what would attract a man. The Manosphere 2.0 calls this "Hoe-flation". This is exactly why a woman's virginity is important.

Moreover, if she can't successfully jump to the left in the above diagram (i.e. learn the better habits of submission), she'll sink down on the right, and she'll be bitter, envious, and resentful that she couldn't make the jump. In the process, she learns to be more dominant, and she comes to see men (and people in general) as bothersome, inept, subservient, superfluous, and/or worthless.

That's how Karens are made.

3 Categories of Karens

Most all Karens fall into one of the following categories.

1. S1uts — Those who foolishly attempt to have a relationship with a man who is too far above them on the SMV scale, and she gets pumped and dumped.

2. Wh0res — Those who choose a man close enough to SMV parity to secure a sociosexual transaction, and she might even be able to keep him for a while, but she cannot maintain a semblance of GF/wife material long enough to make it last.
3. Fuglies — Those who are not even feminine enough to get their foot in the door.

In spite of their differences, their end is the same.

1. S1uts

As we all know, almost all women are addicted to the Tingles of the Tingly Respect structure, and all they need to do to get it is to have a ONS with a high SMV man. Soon (like n = 5 or so), these slores become so jaded that they can no longer pair bond nor even Tinglebate. Some women long for the passion of the Tingle so much that they will hit up man after man in a desperate search to resurrect the Tingles … which only fade more with every passing Chad.

When the Tingles fade into oblivion, women will then chase after the next best substitute — the Feeelz. They go to all the parties. They take their rounds on the carousel — with heartfelt joy. They'll try just about anything — and I mean N E Thang, even stuff a younger man cannot imagine (I will not go into that here) — just for kicks! YOLO and all that. They'll brag about it in their Wheels with their homies. They'll have their fun in the sun, so to speak. Their boisterous man-like confidence is a direct result of having had all these experiences.

The Holy Tingles are now dead and gone forever, but her ravenous desire to be dominated by a top stud remains well past Cougar territory. This burned-out frustration slowly morphs into arrogance and haughtiness as she ages.

2. Wh0res

Wh0res are different from S1uts in that they're looking for some kind of return other than merely Tingles, Feeelz, and thrills, be it attention, sex, status, material comforts, provision, etc. They'll make slightly more effort to get along with a man, at least enough to get something out of him. Anyway, the relationship (or fantasy) doesn't culminate in marriage, and they eventually break up, followed by a harrowing disillusionment. As a result, the woman becomes Alpha Widowed and/or embittered against men, but she'll pretend like she's NOT, in order to continue wh0ring.

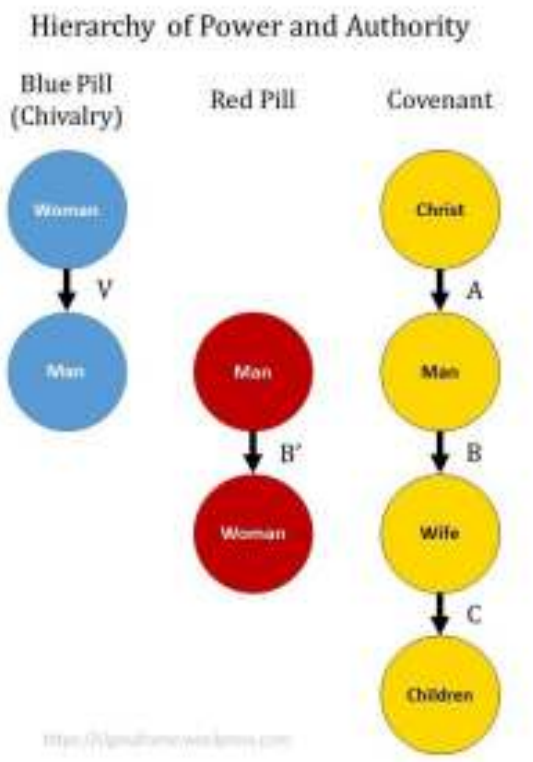
3. Fuglies

Worst of all are the women who are too bratty, too domineering, too ugly, and/or too masculine to even attract a man they'd be willing to bang, so then they'll stew in envy, frustration, and lust with no satisfying outlet available, which invariably dials up the Karen behaviors to peg the meter on red.

The Outcome



No matter which path is taken, she becomes a broken-hearted slore and/or else a termagant who is always attempting to assuage her perdition by grasping for acute control over every situation and by dominating others in order to shape outcomes. (IOW, she has to fight to attain the V structure, shown in the adjacent figure.)

With time, she hits the proverbial Wall and abandons the carousel, the habits of hoedom, and/or the ravages of desire, but the die has already been cast. Desperation, distrust, frustration, insecurity, and vengeance against the whole world are now her intrinsic qualities. She must "~~Wo~~Man Up" and become "Strong and Independent" in order to protect herself from her own self-generated envy, fears, and insecurities. She don't need no man — not anymore. She IS her own 'man', and she's proud of it.

That's how Karens are made.

The Fallout

Too many of these harridans will then settle for literally ANY better than average simp who tolerates her boorish games and emotional tyranny, and will 'marry' the guy just to have a provider and NOT be tortured with insecurity and loneliness. Fuglier women will swear off all men as oppressive and evil. But either way, she will never find any man to be quite as satisfying as her fantasies and/or her first sexcapade, partly because she's older and more sexperienced, partly because she's soured against men, and partly because no man can outperform those who came before (or her astronomical expectations). Cue dead bedrooms and all the ditzy drama and Sh!t Tests.

Conclusions

Tingles are immensely fulfilling for women who choose a man wisely and are willing to go full throttle on submission, and they are deceiving for those who don't or won't. Tingles offer a glimmer of hope for Headship, but once the hook is in, Feminist gals will tear their jags out in favor of independence.

Going back to the women in Joker's video, we can now see their behaviors in proper perspective, as well as any other Karens you might know IRL.

I'm 100% certain that women like these were definitely NOT virgins when they married. I'm also sure they didn't marry their husbands out of genuine love, nor any sense of duty or purpose. They "settled", thereby delivering the worst sort of curse upon their own marriages and families.

Unfortunately, we see too many women at church who are the spit-licking image of these women.

Let me tell the younger men something: if you see any women at your church who are spouting off this kind of talk, and flouting this kind of attitude, and they are claiming to be a Christian, you should know that you're looking at a liar. They may be wives and mothers, and they might even be nominal Christians, but they are definitely NOT Christian wives and mothers. (I'm not talking about eternal election, I mean their behavior and the condition of their hearts.) They are headstrong, sharp-witted, and worldly, NOT meek, kindhearted, and submissive. They are Feminist sympathizers, NOT Christian husband helpers and homemakers. They are Alpha Widows who got married for the financial security and social status, NOT Christian wives and mothers who got married to love and support a husband and raise a family in the admonition of the Lord.

Related

- Σ Frame (TheDeti): The more things change, the more they stay the same. (2022/2/28)
- Σ Frame: Reminiscing on Our Immoral Culture (2024/8/26)
- Σ Frame: Waking Up to Reality, Post Wall Edition (2025/4/25)
- Σ Frame: The Post-Fall / Born Again Slore Life Script (2025/6/16)
- Σ Frame: Post Fall Slores — The Born Again Variety : Nala Ray (2025/6/18)
- Σ Frame: Post Fall Slores — The Bible Thumping Variety: Girls Gone Bible (2025/6/20)
- Σ Frame: Post Fall Slores — The Bumpy Landing Variety: Tomi Lahren (2025/6/23)

F. Roger Devlin On Respect Between the Sexes

Jack · 27 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Feminism spells the unraveling of civilization.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Feminism; Girl Game;
Author's Note: This essay is reblogged from F. Roger Devlin's post by the same name, published on 2025/10/18. Section headers and images added by Jack.
Length: 3,200 words
Reading Time: 16 minutes

A Devaluation of Respect

We live in an age when ordinary standards of civility have collapsed, but there is universal agreement on a supposed right of every moron and criminal to be treated with "respect." We are urged to extend respect even to other species and the planet as a whole. Sometimes self-respect is enjoined upon us. But within my experience, the most common such injunction is addressed to men, exhorted ad nauseam to respect women. It would be a bold fellow indeed who presumed to disagree: when was the last time you heard anyone suggest that men ought to hold women in contempt?

In fact, it took me several decades of living in this world before I realized that I had never once heard anyone speak of the desirability of having respect flow in the opposite direction as well. But shouldn't we want to see mutual respect between the sexes? And is it reasonable to expect male respect for women never to falter in the absence of any reciprocity?

Talk of the respect men owe to women is not exactly new, either. In Victorian Britain, land of old-fashioned gallantry, one sometimes heard references to "the respect due to a lady." But a closer look reveals that respect was not always their due. For example, I recall reading an anecdote from that era concerning a woman who was successfully prosecuted for cruelty to animals. In reporting on the case, a newspaper remarked that the defendant had "forfeited the respect due to her sex." In other words, she was rightly punished for her actions as any man would have been.

Respect is Commensurate to Behavior

Strictly speaking, "the respect due to a lady" is an inaccurate figure of speech. The merely biological fact of having been born female clearly does not entitle anyone to respect. What the Victorians really meant was that every woman should enjoy a presumption of respectability—i.e., should be treated with respect "on credit," as it were—unless and until her behavior proved her unworthy. A sexual indiscretion was one important way in which a woman could lose respectability, of course, but there were others. Savagely flogging a defenseless horse is not ladylike, as that Victorian newspaper reporter correctly perceived.

In other words, respect in the proper sense must be earned by one's behavior. A presumption of respectability is a mere point of courtesy, and may apply to men as well. Demands for universal respect are in part symptomatic of a decline in conceptual clarity: specifically, a growing inability to distinguish between genuine respect and mere civility.

Perhaps the advocates of "respecting women" assume any fellow deserving the slightest regard from the ladies can be certain of getting it in full. But I am not so sure. Women have participated in the general decline in civility characteristic of our time. They swear and tell dirty jokes as only sailors used to do, and even saying "please" and "thank you" may be too much to expect from some of them. I have, on occasion, been simply shocked at the rudeness I have observed women practice both toward myself and to other men, and I have heard other men make similar observations. This is less likely to be a response to male unworthiness than a failure to socialize our daughters properly. They might have benefitted from being taught early in life by some authority figure, such as their parents, that women should treat men with some minimal degree of civility. This ought to be possible, for women have clearly internalized the message that men owe them unlimited respect with marvelous success.

The Origins of Respect in Fear-based Ethics

If we want to consider the matter of respect between the sexes thoroughly, we must start our inquiry from the beginning, and that means asking where the phenomenon we call respect comes from. This question comes under the heading of what the philosopher Nietzsche called the “genealogy of morals.” For respect is a moral idea and found in many forms, from the crudest to the most refined. Yet its origins are best grasped not in the highly civilized and ceremonious forms of etiquette which might be found (for example) at a royal court, but precisely at the very lowest and crudest levels of human existence.

Case Study 1 — Prison Gangs

If the reader wishes to go where he may hear respect discussed most frequently and with the greatest possible sense of practical urgency, I recommend he visit a maximum-security prison. Inmates obsess over the “respect” they believe themselves owed by others, and are beside themselves with rage when they do not get it. Wardens must run a tight ship to prevent mutual demands for respect from boiling over into deadly riots.

It does not take an intelligent observer very long to realize that what jailbirds mean by respect is simply that other people should be afraid of them. At its most basic and primitive level, respect is fear, specifically the fear of physical violence or death. At the dawn of human history, and even earlier in primate bands, life was harsh and unpredictable. A victim of aggression could not simply call up the police to enforce laws or lawyers and judges to regulate disputes. To avoid being victimized by others, it was useful to respond as aggressively as possible to any threat. Even today, after many centuries of civilization, social environments like this can still be found, e.g., on playgrounds with insufficient adult supervision, or in urban slums—and most especially in the prisons where so many slum-dwelling “badasses” end up. Such men will be happy to regale you with plenty of talk about respect, but they never mean by it anything much going beyond the sheer physical fear they wish to arouse in others so as not to be victimized by them.

Case Study 2 — Primal Religions

A similar lesson can be drawn from the history of religion. The idea that God should be worshipped for his goodness took a very long time to develop. At its origins, worship of gods and spirits was motivated by sheer fear of their power. The philosopher Thomas Hobbes (who uses the term "honor" to refer to what I have been calling respect) noted how plentiful the proofs of this are in classical literature:

> "Nor does it alter the case of honor whether an action be just or unjust, for honor consisteth only in the opinion of power. Therefor the ancient heathen did not think they dishonored but greatly honored the gods when they introduced them in their poems committing rapes, thefts, and other great but unjust or unclean acts: insomuch as nothing is so much celebrated in Jupiter as his adulteries, nor in Mercury as his frauds and thefts."
>
> Leviathan I:10

Primitive religion imagines gods and spirits as concerned in much the same manner as prison inmates with receiving the honor and respect they are owed in the form of rituals and sacrifices, and ready to lash out at humans who fail to do so. Religious worship is candidly motivated by a desire to placate powerful beings, and has little to do with any concept of moral goodness. As long as such a god receives his proper respect in the form of worship and sacrifice, he takes little interest in whether his votaries then turn around and indulge in theft, adulterous trysts, or even murder. The concept of a God who deserves to be loved and worshiped for his infinite goodness rather than his mere power, and to whom honor can best be shown by a lifetime of devotion to duty and proper behavior, took a very long time for human beings to develop. It is a product of advanced civilization, not an original fact of human nature.

Case Study 3 — Childhood Discipline

This origin in the fear aroused by others' power to harm us explains why we still teach children respect, as well as good behavior more generally, through punishment. It is what first teaches children to respect their parents, then gradually to respect their wishes, and finally (in the most successful cases) to internalize the principles the parents mean to inculcate through punishment. A whole history of human moral development, whether in the individual or the race, might be written as the narration of such a process of increasingly refined and internalized discipline. But the beginning of moral education lies in fear; and since the world in a sense begins anew every time a child is born, fear can never be dispensed with entirely.

The Evolution of the Battle of the Sexes

Just as human coexistence and religious worship took a cruder form in primitive societies from what can be observed today, so relations between the sexes were probably not originally marked by any very ennobling conception of male gallantry or female decorum, nor by any very demanding sense of honor in either sex. Many still-observable sex differences are traceable to the sheer fact that men are, on average, a good deal bigger and stronger than women, so much so that the average man is physically capable of killing the average woman with his bare hands. In a state of savagery, a man can get sex or anything else he happens to want from a woman (e.g., foodstuffs) simply by using force. He can also seriously harm or kill her out of mere anger.

We may hope that the force of law and social shaming were used more frequently than husbands' fists in inculcating marital fidelity upon those first wives, but as we have already pointed out, force of some kind cannot be dispensed with. It is how respect first arises, and is the original instrument of moral training, whether of the child or of the human race as a whole.

Such male behavior is, of course, sternly punished by law in all civilized societies. But the danger of rape or other violence from uncivilized men must have had at least one positive consequence: primitive women probably respected men in the original sense of the term, viz., by being afraid of them. If they pressed a man too far, they might find themselves in serious danger. This set some limits upon how bad their behavior could get. In a shameless feminist Girl Boss society of "liberated" females, there really are not many such limits.

And it is not as if women had no means of countering male violence, real or merely threatened. Most of female psychology comes from their evolved ability to get what they want without using force. Women attain their ends using lies, deceit, scheming, manipulation, backbiting, innuendo, and a whole arsenal of ugly tricks whose only common denominator is an avoidance of direct confrontation and force such as would correctly be described as "unmanly" if practiced by a male. The battle of the sexes, in other words, is a battle between force and cunning, and as in other contexts, cunning usually proves more effective.

Marriage and Certainty of Paternity Reinstate Respect within Civilization

Even in civilized societies, men continue to oppose force to cunning in dealing with women, but the force is generally that of law rather than their fists. Traditional European marriage law, for example, granted primary custody of children to their father. As Hobbes saw, there was nothing natural or necessary about this:

> "If there be no contract, the dominion is in the mother. For in the condition of mere nature, where there are no matrimonial laws, it cannot be known who is the father unless it be declared by the mother. And therefore the right of dominion over the child dependeth upon her will, and is consequently hers."
>
> Leviathan I:20

Paternal investment in offspring is very rare, even in the great apes, which are our closest evolutionary cousins, probably because apes do not grasp the causal connection between mating and reproduction. Fatherhood in more than the bare biological sense is not a fact of nature but created by the laws of matrimony, established once primitive men discovered their own contribution to reproduction. It was quickly found that men would invest heavily in children if they could be certain the children were theirs. Marriage began as a male invention designed to give them paternity confidence.

We may be sure women objected to the idea of lifelong marriage when it was first introduced, for it meant they could no longer mate as they pleased. In practice, this meant mating exclusively with high-status men: in primitive hunter-gatherer bands, sixty percent of men fail to reproduce. Marriage allows more men to become fathers, but also means that some girls get stuck with low-status "losers." Men were stronger, however, and carried their point, creating the patriarchal, male-headed family.

Eventually, women themselves became the biggest champions of the institution of marriage—they have always been the more impressionable sex—whereas men more frequently sought to expand their reproductive potential with extramarital escapades. But we must not be deceived into thinking this familiar situation is how things began: as Nietzsche understood, the origins of moral institutions often bear little resemblance to the behavior observed in more civilized eras and societies. Marriage was almost certainly invented by men in response to their discovery of fatherhood. Its advantages over instinctive Darwinian mating must have quickly become apparent. Perhaps the best testament to the institution's success is the ease with which later generations of men were brought to believe their women "naturally monogamous."

Monogamy ~~is~~ was a Central Pillar of Civilization

In primitive societies that do not enforce monogamy, men as a group do not enjoy a great deal of respect from women. I once attended a lecture by the late anthropologist Henry Harpending, who spent much time with the Bushmen of the Kalahari. He reported that women in bushman society commonly regard the men as silly creatures. Most of the time, they seem to wish the men would just go away and leave them alone.

It struck me upon hearing this that Dr. Harpending need not have traveled all the way to the deserts of Namibia to observe such a society. We Americans have been instructed for several decades now that women can do everything men can do. Their professional careers can be just as successful and lucrative, provided only they are not "discriminated against"—and any failure of work to be lucrative and "fulfilling" for them is proof of such discrimination. Lesbianism is a perfectly legitimate alternative to marriage, and it is a moral outrage if such women are not allowed to adopt or conceive through artificial insemination. Women have a right to divorce their husbands for any reason or for none, and are not to be criticized for separating their children from their father, who is merely an optional add-on and not a necessary part of the family. In short, a woman without a man is like a fish without a bicycle. And the thanks men get for stoically putting up with all of this—they have not, after all, had much choice—is to be portrayed as "abusers" by feminists with masochistic fantasies!

Feminism: The Modern Return to Uncivilized Origins

Declining phases of civilization are marked by a recrudescence of the primitive. The "women's liberation" movement has, in effect, made the ways of some of the most backward peoples known to anthropology into an ideal which our own society is condemned for failing to match. But our failure has not been for any lack of trying. Radical changes in marital and employment law over the past several decades have been motivated by a determination to render men superfluous (although this has often been done by increasing women's dependence upon the state, i.e., upon men as a faceless collective). The result is a society in which women regard men as a kind of optional economic resource and occasional sperm donor. Why depend upon a husband to provide for you when a "family" court can simply extract resources from him by force? It is impossible that women should continue to respect men under such circumstances.

Gynocentric Laws Undermine Civilization

Samuel Johnson wrote: "Nature has given women so much power that the law has very wisely given them little." This is correct: the tendency of law in traditionally arranged Western societies has been to make up for the natural advantages women enjoy in the battle of the sexes. Reforming the laws to increase women's natural power rather than mitigating it results in an unworkable imbalance. When we take from men the possibility of using the force of law and institutions against women, yet leave women their full powers of sexual attraction and cunning, we get not equality but female despotism. And there are no grounds for hoping that women will prove an exception to the rule that power corrupts. "Liberated" women simply run roughshod over their own families and society as a whole.

I cannot furnish the objective data I might wish for in this matter, but I do catch wind of relevant anecdotes, such as the wife who starts filling out divorce papers any time her husband does not let her have her way. Knowing what would be in store for himself and his children, the unfortunate husband simply gives in every time.

It would be hard to exaggerate how unnatural and unhealthy such a relationship is. It is difficult to imagine, likely, that even the woman herself is happy with it. Normal women want to respect their husbands, but are unable to do so as long as they are permitted to wield arbitrary power over them. Most men also sincerely enjoy gratifying their wives' wishes where possible, but this cannot mean submitting to their commands under threat of being hauled into divorce court.

Conclusions

As Johnson seems to have perceived, manhood relies on the force of law in a way that femininity does not (at least assuming men do not want to go back to simply using their fists). Respect between the sexes can be re-established, but not by mindlessly exhorting women to it, as is now done with men. The laws governing work and family must be restored to something like their former state, returning to men their ability to support a wife and children, as well as the proper legal authority that goes with this role. In effect, men get respect from women by demanding it. It would admittedly be nice if women could learn to respect men out of sheer recognition of the goodness of our hearts. But this is simply not how respect works: it has its origins in fear, just as all authority relies ultimately upon force.

Women who accept the traditional conditions of marriage and fulfill their duties as wives and mothers to the best of their abilities will most often find themselves enjoying the respect of their men. If and when that happens, perhaps we will finally cease to be deafened by female demands for "respect."

H/T: Stephen Baskerville: On Respect Between the Sexes (2025/10/23)

About the Author

F. Roger Devlin is the author of the highly influential 2006 essay, "Sexual Utopia in Power" [1], and a 2015 book by the same name [2]. He was recently doxxed by SPLC [3].

References

1. F. Roger Devlin (2006) Sexual Utopia in Power, The Occidental Quarterly 6(2):1-37. [PDF]

2. F. Roger Devlin (2015) Sexual Utopia in Power, Counter Currents, San Francisco, CA. ISBN: 9781935965893
3. SPLC: White nationalist and male supremacist author identified (2024/8/29)

Related

- Σ Frame: Hopelessness (2020/4/6)
- Σ Frame (Novaseeker): The Lopsided Liberalized Mating Market (2021/2/17)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual/Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Restoring Respect (2022/9/28)
- Σ Frame: Understanding Respect (2022/9/29)
- Σ Frame: Natural Selection Dynamics leading to the LTR / MMP Breakdown (2023/9/6)
- Σ Frame: Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft? (2023/12/5)
- Σ Frame (TheDeti): The Reality (2023/12/23)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Respect (2024/1/12)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Addressing Female Disrespect (2024/1/13)
- Σ Frame: Reminiscing on Our Immoral Culture (2024/8/26)
- Σ Frame: MGTOW's and Non-Tingly Respect (2025/1/27)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Σ Frame: Dominion and Fear-Based Intersexual Dynamics (2025/7/25)
- Σ Frame: Patriarchy and Civilization (2025/8/11)
- Compact (Helen Andrews): The Great Feminization (2025/10/16)
- Wintery Knight: 10,000,000 page view post: The Great Feminization and my trials in woke corporations (2025/10/19)
- Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Prelude (2025/10/20)
- Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Part I (2025/10/21)
- Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Part II (2025/10/22)
- Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Part III (2025/10/23)

Audible Duck Face

Jack · 29 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

New Slut Tell: Vocal Fry

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Girl Game
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

There are some terrible speech habits creeping into the vocal stylings of the young ladies in our culture. Their speaking skills have much to be improved.

Here, I'll cover four bad speaking habits that are rife among women, especially younger women — Fillers, Uptalk, Downtalk, and Vocal Fry.

Maybe by calling attention to these poor habits, we can help eradicate them.

1. Fillers

Filler words are used to buffer choking and hesitancy in speech, but are also coopted to convey cultural awareness and to appear 'cool'.

Fillers overlap with neologisms and slang, and are simultaneously the most fashionable and the most bird-brained speech habit of all.

The words used as fillers change with the times and seasons, and are often used to identify one's self with a generation, an in-group, and/or a sub-culture.

Fillers have been around since time immemorial, but they became especially trendy in the 1960s as a way for young people (Boomers) to identify with their Sexually Liberated peers and to distance themselves from older conservatives.

For example, popular fillers in the 1960s were…

- Dig / Can you dig that?
- Far out (impressive or spectacular)
- Groovy (cool)
- Hip (trendy)
- Man

Fillers used in the 1970s included…

- Bud / Buddy
- Chill out (relax)
- Copacetic (boring)
- Down with that (agree)
- Freaky (strange or perverted)
- Psyche (crazy or joking around)
- Way to go

The popular 80s funk pop rock group, Level 42.

In the 1980s, there were words like…

- Awesome
- Bodacious (flamboyant)
- Bogus (fake)
- Cool (reprised from the 1950s)
- Doi! / Duh! (stupid)
- Gag (repulsive)
- Gnarly (complicated or messy)
- Grody (detestable or dirty)

- Gross (putrid or disgusting)
- Like…
- Most Excellent!
- No way! (impossible)
- Rad / Radical (cool)
- Totally
- Tubular (interesting)

The 1990s introduced fillers like…

- As if…
- Bling (attention grabbing)
- Chillax
- Dude!
- Not!
- Phat
- Righteous
- Schwing!
- Scrub (common or practical)
- Slammin' (high impact)
- Sup / Wassup
- Whatever
- Word

Actors from the popular 90s sitcom, Friends.

In the 2000s, it was…

- Dafuq
- Dawg
- Epic (great)
- Fail
- Hawt
- LOL
- Mega (extremely)
- Owned (defeated or shamed)
- Sick (uniquely cool or radically different)
- Sketchy (deceitful or doubtful)

Throughout the 2010s, we had…

- Bae
- Basic
- Binge
- Dead@ss
- Extra
- Literally
- Salty (rude)
- Shade (offense)
- Shook (surprise)
- Simp (weak)
- Soy (wimpy)
- Stan (common)
- Very
- Yeet!

Lately, we hear words like these.

- Already
- And then…
- And um…
- And I was like…
- Bet (agreement)
- Cap (lies)
- Cringe (embarrassingly inept)
- K / Okay (dismissal)
- Salty (bitter)
- Slay (excellent)
- Sus (suspicious)
- Vibe (relax)
- Yeah! (incredulous)
- You know…

Looking back over the decades, we can see that over time, some of the typical fillers have become more bland and dumbed down with every decade (IMO), while others are more esoteric, sarcastic, and/or unintelligible to the uninitiated, with some entirely new words having their own meaning.

Fillers are useful for injecting emotion and can provoke listener's interest — when used occasionally. But when speakers are repeating the same words again and again at the beginning or end of every sentence… well, that's just annoying, totally brain dead, and entirely unacceptable.

Sure, we all use these words every day, but when they're used multiple times in every sentence, that's just exasperating. Personally, I believe the frequency of fillers is directly proportional to one's desire for attention, and inversely proportional to one's IQ.

2. Up Talk / Up Speak

Uptalk or Upspeak swept society in the mid-90s.

Uptalk is characterized by a rising intonation at the end of every sentence like everything is a question even when it's not a question.

Uptalk is typically used to communicate a childlike openness and empathy, but it is also used in a mocking way to convey condescension.

Talking to someone who constantly uses Uptalk is like conversing with someone who is in eternal doubt.

It makes guys appear like they're in a perpetual state of disbelief, or worse, utter stupidity.

It makes girls sound like an airhead or a bimbo.

Up Talking with Connie Chung 1994

Connie Chung described the Uptalk trend in her closing statement as, "A nation of questions with no answers."

3. Downtalk

Sometime after Uptalk had been a thing for a while, and especially after Connie Chung's report, people became more aware of the rising intonation, and it became blasé. Then the pendulum swung the other direction to try to create a wary antidote, and intonation went down, i.e., Downtalk; but they went down too far and hung it out to dry. Where a rising intonation was meant to sound cheerful, chipper, happy, and pleasantly curious, in contrast, lowering the voice at the end of every statement makes a speaker sound more authoritative, conclusive, and confident. It is also calming, even numbing, and suppresses emotions.

Although these vocal styles were trending two decades ago, nevertheless, we continue to hear women habitually using Uptalk and Downtalk, rather than speaking emotively, fluidly, and melodiously.

4. Vocal Fry

Humans generally have three vocal registers: falsetto, modal, and fry. Vocal Fry, AKA glottalization, utilizes the lowest register of the voice. Vocal Fry sounds like you're running out of air at the end of your sentence, so you just exhale harder to get your sentence out. It has a guttural sound like a frog croaking or an old creaky door.

Vocal Fry is subconsciously intended to make one appear detached, intelligent, objective, smart, and sophisticated. But the thing is, it doesn't, because it is profoundly annoying and distracting. Excessive vocal fry' makes one sound ambivalent, like you don't give a crap about anything — an expression and a symptom of Nihilism.

To give readers a taste, here's an example of whoreable Vocal Fry.

Vocal Fry started to appear among young women en masse in the early naughts, and is believed to be a pendulum response to the previous trends of Uptalk and Downtalk.

Awareness of Vocal Fry started to spread in 2010 with the publication of a study in The Journal of American Speech [1], which found that female college students in California tended to speak with much creakier voices than male students and Japanese students. The researchers noticed this was an irregular pattern, because a heavy use of Vocal Fry is a masculine vocal pattern.

Vocal Fry among young women came to widespread attention again in 2014-2015, after it was covered by an NPR study [2].

Despite this wider awareness, women continue to croak in Vocal Fry like frogs in boiling water.

Conclusions

Above, I've described a few annoying modes of speech common to modern females.

1. Fillers buffer choking and also convey chalant coolness.
2. Uptalk expresses enthusiasm and openness.
3. Downtalk conveys detached authority.
4. Vocal Fry dampens emotional expression.

Uptalk and Vocal Fry are commonly heard among children, young teens, and people in upscale social groups, notably Zoe Deschanel, Lena Dunham, and Kim Kardashian. Both Uptalk and Vocal Fry are vocalisms used as mode of communicating rapport and in-group affiliation.

But the thing is, once you notice these speech habits, you will never be able to NOT notice them, and then they are terribly annoying.

Good Lord, just STOP all the pretentious speech and talk normally!

Ideally, good vocal intonation conveys a slow, melodious voice, rhythmic speech, containing choice words and occasional pregnant pauses, and the expression of genuine emotions.

Lest we forget what good speech sounds like.

References

1. Yuasa, I. P. (2010). Creaky voice: A new feminine voice quality for young urban-oriented upwardly mobile American women?. American Speech, 85(3), 315-337. [Source]
2. NPR: From Upspeak To Vocal Fry: Are We 'Policing' Young Women's Voices? (2015/7/23)

Sources

Here are a few videos I used to collect information.

Warning to Readers: I didn't embed these videos in the post because they're super cringe. To spare readers unnecessary suffering, I've picked out the meat to include in the post.

- Stuff Mom Never Told You: Why do girls have creaky voices? (2014/6/18)
- AllisonMacD: Vocal Fry : The Rules (2015/8/28)

Related

- Σ Frame: Play is the Essence of Game (2025/5/21)

Why The Great Feminization NOW?

Jack · 30 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Clifton Duncan on The Great Feminization.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Feminism; Girl Game;
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

I'm sure readers have already seen many articles and videos about "The Great Feminization", which is basically a culture shock wave generated from women who are beginning to notice the chilling downstream effects of Feminism, i.e. Men withdrawing from all intersexual enterprises (e.g. dating, marriage) and mixed sex spaces (e.g. bars, clubs, corporate workplace environments, etc.), and/or who are belatedly realizing the wisdom of ye olde Men's Rights Activists, as well as other Men's groups who have lamented the downfall of the West via Feminism and W0kism over the past three decades.

While the whole interwebz is spun into a sticky web of wide-eyed bewilderment, my response is…

So. What.

I left this comment at Spawny's Space:

> Re: The Great Feminization (TGF)
>
> Pardon my impertinence, but…
>
> I don't understand why this topic is making such a splash.
>
> The Manosphere saw this happening long before cancel culture hit in 2018.
>
> We saw it happening in businesses. Farm Boy noted this in several posts.
>
> We saw it happening in the church. Dalrock wrote all about that.
>
> We saw it happening in government. Vox Day covered that.
>
> We saw it happening in schools. See Wintery Knight.
>
> We saw it happening in the SMP and online. I, Deti, and NovaSeeker went over all that at Σ Frame.
>
> So NOW, fiiinaaalllyyyy… a decade after the fact, people are saying, "Oh WOW! Now that wimminz are running the entire culture, everything is a race to the bottom! Oh, noez!"
>
> Spare me the drama.
>
> I can only guess that MGTOW and the mass exodus of men leaving the plantation have the PTB in a tizzy, hence the "uhfishul" airplay."

Because a Woman Said So!

The current rave over The Great Feminization is apparently about an article written by Helen Andrews at Compact, The Great Feminization (2025/10/16). However, a little research reveals that Helen Andrews was merely covering a book by the same name, written by J. Stone and published well over 3 years earlier (2022/4/30) [Amazon].

So again, why did this only blow up NOW, and not back in 2022 when Stone first published this book?

Farm Boy said,

> "Part of it is that a chick is saying it. Another thing is that it is packaged in one place.
>
> And, of course, it is NOT an !ncel saying it. Or at least somebody who is presumed to be an !ncel."

Oh. So NOW that WOMEN are talking about it, NOW people are beginning to listen?!?

To those idiots who only listen to women, but NOT men…

Read Genesis 3:17, Genesis 16:1-5, and 1 Kings 16:30-34, and learn what happens when men listen to women and follow after their jolly folly.

Yew litereally were asking for this. We wouldn't have ended up nowhere if yew had listened to MRA, the Manosphere, et al. But no.

Heads in the Sand.

Because Women Most Affected!

Farm Boy also shared Clifton Duncan's answer to the titular question, written in response to Helen Andrews' piece at Compact: The Great Feminization (2025/10/16).

> "The only reason people are talking about "The Great Feminization" now is because it's affecting women.
>
> Men young and old have been talking about it for decades.
>
> For decades, boys and men have had their desires dismissed; had fathers denigrated and denied them; had their spaces, interests and hobbies invaded; had primary and higher education weaponized against them; had jobs and promotions unjustly denied them; had reputations ruined by false allegations; watched pop culture fester with anti-male slop; had wealth and progeny stripped away by prejudiced family courts.
>
> What happened when they voiced these complaints?
>
> They were called misogynists, resentful of their inability to match women's success as they seethed over the dismantling of the patriarchy.
>
> They were called losers, whiners, and complainers who should shut up, grow up, man up and get married.
>
> But now—
>
> As men avoid women at work, or withdraw from the labor force altogether; as men leave the church; as men abandon dating and marriage; as men reciprocate women's embrace of modernism and rejection of traditionalism; and as womanhood faces erasure, ironically (but predictably) at the hands of the very liberals and progressives, women celebrate for hatcheting away manhood and masculinity—
>
> Only now, as the consequences of treating women's needs as all that matter and men's needs as superfluous (and offensive) are evident,
>
> Only now, as men usher in a new sexual revolution by unapologetically focusing on themselves and their own happiness, refusing to serve a society that's signaled repeatedly that it no longer values them and prompting more and more women to wonder "Where Have All the (Good) Men Gone?"
>
> Only now has it become safe for women to broach the topic of "The Great Feminization" and be lavished with acclaim for making the exact same points men have been chastised for making for over 25 years.

> Symbolic."
>
> X: Clifton Duncan on The Great Feminization (2025/10/19)

Because Sin and Solipsism

I don't entirely believe the "Because a Woman said so!" or the "Because Women Most Affected!" explanations for why "The Great Feminization" now hits home in 2025. I think it's all a justification after the fact that retroactively assigns power to women to decide when a sea change is to be noticed and/or effected. I'm not saying there's no truth to this viewpoint, but by taking this stance, we are admitting that women have held the majority of power all along, and that men have sat poolside and enjoyed the decline, perhaps even pining for a prime piece of the peach pie.

In summary, the overall reason why The Great Feminization as a topic is only surfacing NOW and not before is because of the Sin, Solipsism, and Stupidity of men and women alike, allowing it to fester and go unchecked for this long.

Looking back in hindsight, what more could we have done to right this sinking ship back when it was still salvageable (over 20 years ago, I guess)?

Related

- Σ Frame: The Evils of Solipsism (2019/11/19)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Womens' Response to MGTOW (2021/7/19)
- Σ Frame: Social Transactions : Summary (2024/9/30)
- Σ Frame: The New Face of MGTOW (2025/1/20)
- Σ Frame: The Rise of Middle-Class MGTOW (2025/1/22)
- Σ Frame: MGTOW's and Non-Tingly Respect (2025/1/27)
- Σ Frame: Review: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men into Boys (2025/3/10)
- Σ Frame: Why do Women Love Lies? (2025/7/4)
- Wintery Knight: 10,000,000 page view post: The Great Feminization and my trials in woke corporations (2025/10/19)
- Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Prelude (2025/10/20)
- Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Part I (2025/10/21)
- Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Part II (2025/10/22)
- Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Part III (2025/10/23)
- Sasha Stone: Did The Great Feminization Cause The Great Awokening? (2025/10/27)
- Σ Frame: F. Roger Devlin On Respect Between the Sexes (2025/10/27)

ASMR Virtual Intimacy

Jack · 31 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A new trend is sweeping YouTube.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Girl Game
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes + several videos (optional)

What is ASMR?

Autonomous Sensory Meridian Response (ASMR) is a relaxing, tingly sensation that starts on the scalp and moves down the neck and spine in response to certain triggers. These triggers include sensual stimuli such as ever-so-gentle touches, feather tickles, smooth caresses, and soft sounds like babbling water, birds chirping, frogs croaking, rainfall, rustling leaves, tapping, whispering, white noise, etc.

See this website for a full description of ASMR.

The ASMR: What Is ASMR? Meaning, Definition, Benefits, and Trends (2021)

ASMR was first observed in 2007, and was originally developed as a technique to help people relax and fall asleep. Since then, the phenomenon has become popular online, with many content creators producing ASMR videos that feature various auditory stimuli. Lately, these ASMR videos have added visual stimuli and have become increasingly sensuous and lusty, and have thus skyrocketed in popularity.

This post offers a survey of one of the most currently popular types of ASMR generating content: Girlfriend Role Play ASMR.

Cherie Lorraine ASMR

A Description of Girlfriend Role Play ASMR

The key characteristics of these videos include…

- Breaking the fourth wall.
- Scantily clad, soft, young, feminine women.
- Auditory stimuli intended to provoke an ASMR.
- Soft warm lighting, e.g. candles, christmas lights, etc.
- Role playing intimacy. Typical roles are girlfriend, wife, nurse, masseuse, etc.
- The perception of altruistic, direct, non-threatening, sincere, undivided attention.
- Labels and titles typically include the key words “ASMR”, “Cozy”, and “Role Play”.

In general, these videos depict close-up views of soft, young, feminine women, often dressed in negligees or other casually revealing clothing, with some appearing topless. They often present themselves lying on a silk, satin, or fur-blanketed bed or couch, fully relaxed, as if bedding down for the night or waking up in the morning. They move slowly and sensually, often blowing air kisses, caressing their bodies, licking their lips, and other such sexually suggestive motions.

ASMR sounds include giggling, humming lullabies, making wet mouth sounds, sighing heavily, and most notably, speaking in a soft or whispering voice. The verbal content expresses admiration, affirmation, appreciation, encouragement, gratitude, etc., saying, “I love you!”, “I miss you!”, etc., and innuendos of a shared sexual relationship, helplessness, submissiveness, vulnerability, and feminine charms in general.

They act, talk, and speak as if they are totally in love with the viewer. They even have dilated pupils, which is an IOI of love! (I wonder how they do that?) Some scenes make it very easy to imagine she’s giving you a hand job, complete with a lusty gaze amid repetitive squipping or slapping sounds.

LunaRexx ASMR

They appeal to the male-specific fantasy of Idealistic Love and One-itis.

- “I’ll never give up on you.”
- “I’ll never love anyone else but you.”
- “I never knew love until I found you.”
- “I believe we were destined to be together.”

The Fear Dynamic is evident as well.

- "Please don't leave."
- "Please don't hurt me."
- "Will you stay with me?"
- "I can't live without you."
- "I'm so lonely without you."
- "I'm afraid you won't come back."

Most of these videos have tens of thousands of views, with many in the hundreds of thousands, and a few in the millions.

Some producers charge exorbitant fees for channel membership. For example, Junia Sounds (see video below) charges up to NT$6,400.00/month (~US$200/month) for a premium membership to her channel.

I can only guess that this type of content is feeding the emotional concupiscence of lonely single men who are too conscientious or too shy to do OnlyF@ns or traditional Pr0$t!tut!0n.

Conclusions

The rise of this type of media is significant precisely because it seeks to offer men appeasement and comfort, and it appeals directly to male desire, which stands in sharp contrast to the self-centered Girl Boss (GB) and Strong Independent Woman (SIW) stereotypes that have pervaded the media over the past few decades.

More broadly, I think the appearance of this type of media is an indirect result of MGTOW and men leaving the plantation. It indicates that younger women are no longer buying into the GB and SIW standards for womanhood.

The upside is that women are starting to pay attention to what kind of behavior men like in a woman, and they're learning to implement their womanly charms in traditionally feminine ways that haven't been emphasized since the 1960s (i.e. natural affection, kindness, sensuality, softness, vulnerability, etc.).

The downside is that this particular expression of feminine charm is entirely fantasy, and they're only doing this for cash, clicks, and views. Worse, it is a mild form of Witchcraft, and is part of the current rise in Witchcraft.

As it is written,

> For the lips of an immoral woman drip honey,
> And her mouth is smoother than oil;
>
> Proverbs 5:3 (NKJV)

> With her enticing speech she caused him to yield,
> With her flattering lips she seduced him.
>
> Proverbs 7:21 (NKJV)

Warning

For those men who find these videos extremely appealing and validating, the Scriptures carry a warning to you.

> A wicked person listens to deceitful lips; a liar pays attention to a destructive tongue.
>
> Proverbs 17:4 (NIV)

> Reproofs of instruction are the way of life,
> [24] To keep you from the evil woman,
> From the flattering tongue of a seductress.
>
> Proverbs 6:23-24 (NKJV)

Truly, if you watch these videos as a habit, you'll fall under the Blue Pill spell that women are virtuous angels and you'll turn into a SUPER SIMP, if you aren't one already.

Beware!

Examples of Girlfriend Role Play ASMR

Here are a few videos depicting Girlfriend Role Play ASMR. All these women are witches practicing witchcraft (portrayed in the videos).

Warning: Don't watch these videos for too long, or else you'll feel like a simp.

Bri Blossom: Loving Girlfriend Helps You Relax and Release | Soft Spoken and Nurturing ASMR (2024/12/15)

Cherie Lorraine ASMR: Cozy Cuddles (With Your Crush) ASMR Roleplay (2023/8/12)

Emily ASMR: Wake Up With Me ☀ ASMR (2025/8/21)

Emily Black ASMR: asmr girlfriend comforts you to sleep... (emily black) (2025/7/16)

Junia Sounds: ASMR Girlfriend RolePlay: U Missed Me? (I Sleep Beside You) (2021/3/27)

Junia Sounds: Christmas Cozy Girlfriend Roleplay (face touching, whispering, triggers, calm music) (2023/12/23)

LunaRex: ASMR I Need You, Please ❤ (asmr roleplay for sleep) (2025/4/16)

Oranda ASMR: [ASMR] Girlfriend Gives You a Lotion Massage (2022/1/21)

Slumber Space ASMR: Loving Girlfriend Takes Care of You After Work ASMR ❤ [affirmations, flirty, personal attention] (2024/11/26)

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Exploiting Online Attention (2020/12/9)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Rise of the Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/4)
- Σ Frame: Why is the online amateur sex industry attractive to women? (2021/1/6)
- Σ Frame: Why is the online amateur sex industry attractive to men? (2021/1/8)
- Σ Frame: The Learning Psychology of Women who Participate in the Online Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/13)
- Σ Frame: The Addictive Nature of the Online Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/20)
- The ASMR: What Is ASMR? Meaning, Definition, Benefits, and Trends (2021)
- Σ Frame: Triggers (2023/12/19)
- Σ Frame: Should Female Online Content Producers be Considered OASIS? (2024/10/18)
- Σ Frame: The Ordinance of FEAR (2025/6/13)
- Σ Frame: FEAR is Stronger than Hypergamy (2025/6/27)
- Σ Frame: Dominion and Fear-Based Intersexual Dynamics (2025/7/25)

October Summary: Girl Game and The Great Feminization

Jack · 31 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A summary of this month's theme and links to posts.

Readership: All
Theme: Girl Game
Length: 300 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

Summary

As regular readers have probably surmised by now, Girl Game, as it now stands, consists of nearly NO real Honeycraft Game at all. Whatever Girl Game exists emanates from biology, gynocentric laws, Insecure Attachment, the momentum of cultural Feminism, Sex Appeal, and Witchcraft. Within these areas, wimmin now have The Epic Game of the millennia.

The good news is that, because of (or perhaps despite) all their Worldly Game, the disappointments, errancies, and shortcomings thereof are now causing many women to wake up to the eternal reality that they must come up with some kind of Honeycraft Game, or else be relegated to the dustbin of hissytory. We shall see how this plays out and what becomes of it.

Index of Posts

Here are the posts that appeared in October's theme, Girl Game.

1. Σ Frame: Braised Sister Turns Heads and Profits! (2025/10/1)
2. Σ Frame: Is Bread or Buns Christian? (2025/10/3)
3. Σ Frame (Jack, Red Pill Apostle): What is the Prevalence of Paternity Fraud? (2025/10/6)
4. Σ Frame: The "Let's Break Up" Sh!t Test (2025/10/8)

5. Σ Frame: 6 Motivations Women Have for Playing the “Let’s Break Up” Sh!t Test (2025/10/10)
6. Σ Frame: Perspectives on The Main Event (2025/10/13)
7. Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor): Low SMV Women Even the Score (2025/10/15)
8. Σ Frame: Why Modern Women Have No Game (2025/10/17)
9. Σ Frame: The Parable of the Mechanical Pony Ride (2025/10/20)
10. Σ Frame: Acting like a Man until She becomes Masculine (2025/10/22)
11. Σ Frame: How Karens are Mass Produced (2025/10/24)
12. Σ Frame: F. Roger Devlin On Respect Between the Sexes (2025/10/27)
13. Σ Frame: Audible Duck Face (2025/10/29)
14. Σ Frame: Why The Great Feminization NOW? (2025/10/30)
15. Σ Frame: ASMR Virtual Intimacy (2025/10/31)

Closely related posts appearing around the Based Sphere during this time are listed here.

1. Janice Fiamengo: Surprise, Surprise: Another Popular Feminist Claim Turns Out To Be False (2025/10/2)
2. Spawny’s Space (Farm Boy): Dating Woes, Part I (2025/10/2)
3. Spawny’s Space: Unified Field Theory — Overview (2025/10/6)
4. Spawny’s Space: Unified Field Theory — The Deti Formulation (2025/10/7)
5. The Fiamengo File: The (Female) Elephant in the Room (2025/10/16)
6. Gab News (Andrew Torba): Why We No Longer Know Our Neighbors (2025/10/23)
7. Men Are Good (Tom Golden): Women’s Studies was Never About Study (2025/10/23)
8. Spawny’s Space (Farm Boy): Dating Woes, Part II (2025/10/24)
9. Spawny’s Space (Jack): Dating Woes, Part III (2025/10/26)
10. Men Are Good (Tom Golden): Never Date a Feminist: Here’s Why (2025/10/27)
11. Uncharted Father: Attractive Versus Hot (2025/10/27)
12. Σ Game: A Tale of Eight Strong Women (2025/10/30)
13. Men Are Good (Tom Golden): The Animus of “Should Studies” (2025/10/31)

The Great Feminization

Towards the end of the month, the big hit topic around the Sphere was The Great Feminization (TGF), which even received a blithering response from The Washington Post. The rave was apparently about an article written by Helen Andrews at Compact, The Great Feminization (2025/10/16). But a little research revealed that she was merely covering a book by the same name, written by J. Stone and published well over 3 years earlier (2022/4/30) [Amazon].

Back articles, developments, and responses to this topic are listed below.

1. Thoughts of Stone: The Great Feminization (2019/3/6)
2. Thoughts of Stone: The Day The Logic Died (2019/8/23)
3. P Matters (Black Pigeon): Why Women Destroy Nations and Civilizations, and Other Uncomfortable Truths (2020) [BitChute]
4. Thoughts of Stone: Girl Power (2020/1/6)
5. Thoughts of Stone: We Need To Talk About Women (2021/12/13)
6. Thoughts of Stone: Cultural Feminization: A Bibliography (2021/12/14)
7. J. Stone, The Great Feminization: women as drivers of modern social change, Cold Stone Press, 2022/4/30. [Amazon]
8. Thoughts of Stone: A Spiraling Frenzy (2022/7/7)
9. Thoughts of Stone: Testosterone, Civilization, and Social Cues (2022/7/14)
10. Thoughts of Stone: Cultural Feminization: An Introduction (2022/8/24)
11. Thoughts of Stone: Women, Inclusivity and The Paleolithic (2022/9/4)
12. Thoughts of Stone: It's Not "Wokeness"—It's Women (2022/10/9)
13. Thoughts of Stone: Mistresses Of Misrule (2023/6/22)
14. Compact (Helen Andrews): The Great Feminization (2025/10/16)
15. The Fiamengo File: The (Female) Elephant in the Room (2025/10/16)
16. Wintery Knight: 10,000,000 page view post: The Great Feminization and my trials in woke corporations (2025/10/19)
17. X: Clifton Duncan on The Great Feminization (2025/10/19)
18. Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Prelude (2025/10/20)
19. Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Part I (2025/10/21)
20. Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Part II (2025/10/22)
21. Spawny's Space: The Great Feminization — Part III (2025/10/23)

22. The Fiamengo File: Feminism's Shameless Attack on Due Process (2025/10/23)
23. Washington Post (Megan McArdle): Toxic femininity and the rise of cancel culture (2025/10/26) [Archive]
24. Legal Insurrection (William A. Jacobson): "Toxic Femininity" Will "Not End Civilization" – Megan McArdle (2025/10/26)
25. Sasha Stone: Did The Great Feminization Cause The Great Awokening? (2025/10/27)
26. Σ Frame: F. Roger Devlin On Respect Between the Sexes (2025/10/27)
27. Lew Rockwell (Mark Keenan): The Silent Struggle: How Divorce Courts and Social Engineering Wage War on Men (2025/10/27)
28. Σ Frame: Why The Great Feminization NOW? (2025/10/30)
29. Lew Rockwell (Paul Craig Roberts): Societal Death by Feminization (2025/11/6)
30. Catacomb Resident: Yes and No (2025/11/6)
31. The Rational Male: The (Real) Great Feminization (2025/11/12)

The above articles cover this topic adequately enough that I haven't anything more to say as of right now. I might come back to it later.

Related

- Σ Frame: Paul Harvey "If I were the devil" (2019/8/24)
- Σ Frame: The ¡ScIeNcE! of Cat Ladies (2023/10/31)
- Σ Frame: The Price of Cats and Wine (2024/10/31)

The Power of the Imagination

Jack · 3 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

¡Sc!eNt!f!C! evidence from The Great Baumeister.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Rationalism; Validation; Virtue;
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Intro

Prof. Roy F. Baumeister is a highly esteemed psychologist who was widely cited within the Manosphere 1.0.

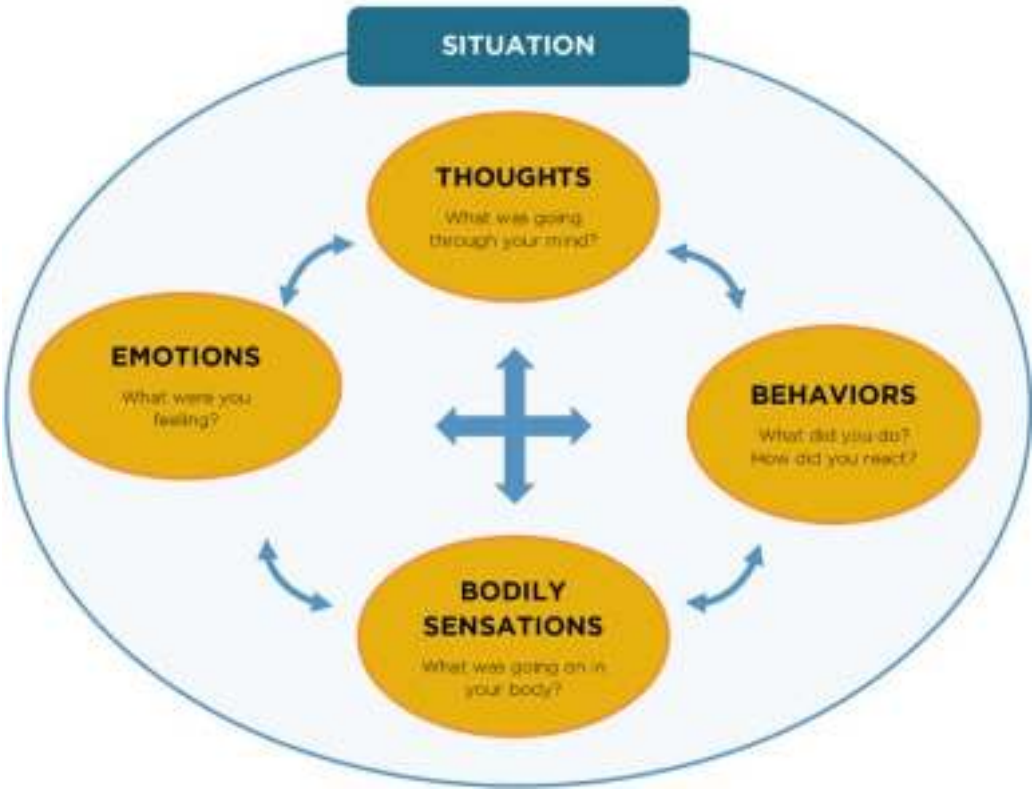
Here, I'll cover one of his papers about the power of the imagination to shape outcome.

Roy F. Baumeister, E. J. Masicampo, and Kathleen D. Vohs, (2011) "Do Conscious Thoughts Cause Behavior?", Annual Review of Psychology. 62:331–361. DOI: 10.1146/annurev.psych.093008.131126 [PDF]

In this paper, Baumeister et al. pose the question of whether conscious thoughts of a particular action can affect whether or how that action will be performed later.

At 31 pages long, this publication is quite comprehensive in its coverage. Readers who have the brain power, the time, and the interest are invited to click on the link and read the full article, or at least check out the table of contents to find specific points of interest.

For the rest of us who lack a vise-grip concentration with laser precision, I've paraphrased the key points of the article for easier digestion. A summary is given at the end. There are many cited works; interested readers can go to Baumeister's original paper to find them.



Imagined Behavior Increases that Behavior

Research has found that imagining oneself doing something can increase the likelihood or the efficacy of doing it, especially on some future occasion. This phenomenon is manifested in a multitude of psychological contexts, including…

1. Anticipating, Planning, and Intending
2. Replaying, Interpreting, and Reflecting on Past Events
3. Reasoning, Deciding, and Solving Problems
4. Anticipating Counterproductive, Maladaptive Effects
5. Mentally Simulating Others' Perspectives
6. Manipulations of Self-Regard and Self-Affirmation
7. Mental Framing and Goal Setting
8. Communication and Mutual Understanding
9. Overriding Automatic Responses

Here, I won't go into every one of these areas covered by Baumeister, but just offer enough evidence for readers to get the gist. Go read his paper to learn more about the power of the imagination in these specific applications.

Evidence A — Cable TV

Based on behavioral evidence furnished by Gregory et al. (1982), Anderson (1983) showed that imagining oneself doing something led to an increased intention to do it. In this study, some participants imagined themselves getting and using a cable television service. These participants were later more likely than controls to accept a promotional offer of a week's free service and, two to three months later, were more likely to be subscribed to the service. Control participants had been provided with the same information about the service, but had not imagined themselves being subscribers.

Evidence B — Therapy

A number of psychotherapy patients were randomly told either (1) about the benefits of remaining in therapy, or (2) to imagine themselves remaining in therapy for four weeks. The latter group remained in therapy for a longer time on average (Sherman & Anderson 1987).

Imagining Actions (NOT Outcomes) is Most Effective

The effects of mental simulation often depend on the person focusing on what he or she will do to carry out the action, rather than on motivations, a vivid prospect of success, or creating a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Evidence C — Study Habits

Pham & Taylor (1999) randomly assigned students to mentally simulate doing well on an exam, either by imagining themselves finding out that they had gotten a very high grade or by imagining themselves studying hard and answering the questions on the test. Only the latter condition produced significant improvement in actual test grades. Along the same lines, mental simulation helped reduce the planning fallacy, increasing the proportion of students who actually finished their assignments on time (Taylor et al. 1998).

Evidence D — Voting

Imagining oneself voting can increase the likelihood of actually voting in a subsequent election. The evidence for this is mixed, possibly varying among different elections (see Greenwald et al. 1987, Nickerson & Rogers 2010, Smith et al. 2003). Libby et al. (2007) found the simulation effect to work best if people imagined themselves from a third-person perspective rather than first-person. The authors suggested that seeing oneself from a third-person perspective led to making dispositional attributions, thereby making voting seem to reflect the person's character and values.

The Benefits of Mental Practice

Another category of simulating future actions is mental practice, which usually consists of imagining oneself performing a physical, artistic, or athletic skill effectively.

A review of research on mental practice by Grouios (1992) concluded that mental practice combined with physical practice was generally found to be more effective than either by itself, suggesting that both contribute to learning. It concluded also that mental practice is mostly helpful during the early stages of learning (thus useful for acquiring rather than maintaining skills) and should focus on the muscle movements needed for successful performance.

If Grouios is correct, the fact that conscious simulation is most beneficial at the early stages points toward a general pattern in which things move from initially conscious to gradually being more automatic. Consciousness is assumed to be necessary for acquiring new behaviors. A large meta-analysis by Driskell et al. (1994) found that mental practice improved performance significantly, especially when tasks included a cognitive component and the performance was not long after the mental practice. They did conclude that physical practice worked better than mental practice (but see Cooper et al. 2001, Wohldmann et al. 2008).

A more recent review by Kosslyn & Moulton (2009) noted that researchers have studied mental practice in almost every conceivable sport, from dart throwing and table tennis to football, soccer, basketball, gymnastics, and even weight lifting. It has also been shown to be beneficial in playing a musical instrument (Theiler & Lippman 1995), landing an airplane (Prather 1973), and training basic surgical skills (Sanders et al. 2004). In general, these studies show that it does reliably improve performance. A report of the National Academy of Sciences concluded that mental practice was one of the few allegedly performance-enhancing activities that is genuinely effective (Druckman & Swets 1988).

Evidence E — Table Tennis

Mental practice combined with physical practice improved table tennis performance, especially if the mentally simulated practice focused on muscle movements rather than imagining the trajectory of the ball (Caliari 2008). The latter finding suggests that the individual using mental practice has to imagine the motor movements and muscle control required for performance, not simply think about any aspect of the game.

Evidence F — Golfing

A well-designed early research (Woolfolk et al. 1985) studied college students mental practice of golfing in relation to their putting performance. By random assignment, some students visualized a successful putt; others visualized just barely missing the hole; and a control group was told to visualize putting without any specific instructions. (It was expected that this group imagined both process and outcome differently.) The participants who had visualized success then showed dramatic improvement as compared to the control group. Those who had visualized failure via a near miss showed a drop in performance. The last effect suggests that conscious processes are not always beneficial.

Brouziyne & Molinaro (2005) demonstrated that mental practice combined with the physical practice of golf produced performance that was better than physical practice alone.

Evidence G — Eating Habits

Imagining doing an activity does not always result in doing more of the same.

A study by Morewedge et al. (2009) offered evidence that mental simulation can help satisfy and satiate, as if substituting for actual consumption. In this study, the test participants imagined eating a large amount of candy, and the control groups included those who imagined themselves (1) eating a small amount of candy, (2) eating some other food, and (3) a no-food condition. During an ostensible taste test, the control groups ate more of the candy, compared to the test group, who ate less of the same candy, as if they had already gorged on candy and had become tired or sick of it.

Conclusions

A large amount of research in the psychology behind all kinds of decisions, the behaviors of various habits, and nearly every sport has shown that consciously imagining a simulation, such as imagining actions, and the mental practice of a skill, does contribute to later behavior. An effective mental imagery seemingly needs to focus specifically on behavioral practices and processes that lead to desired outcomes, and not just on the decision-making process, motivations, or outcomes. It is believed that conscious simulation functions as a kind of mental rehearsal rather than merely stimulating motivation.

Related

- Σ Frame: Trajectories (2020/2/28)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Meet Cute as a Positive Feedback Loop (2021/11/17)
- Σ Frame: The Winner Effect (2023/8/30)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Chemistry (Testosterone) (2023/8/31)
- Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
- Σ Frame: Everyone is Nuts (2024/11/22)
- Σ Frame: Overcoming the Spiritual-Sexual Poverty Mentality (2025/2/24)

Sexual Fantasy is NOT Mental Practice

Jack · 5 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The delusion of fantasy spells a detachment from Reality.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Rationalism;
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Intro

In light of Baumeister's review of The Power of the Imagination, let's explore this concept within the context of intersexual relationships (or the fantasies thereof).

Men's Erotic Fantasy

Most men are in the regular habit of imagining having sex with a hot woman. Baumeister's paper suggests this would affect their actual behavior around women, their success in bedding one, and their performance in the bedroom.

So if Baumeister's thesis on Mental Practice is true, then why aren't all these single men already shacked up with more juicy fruit than they can eat?

Women's Chick P0rn and Disney Fantasy

Most Western women imagine that they'll one day meet a 6-6-6-6 Studs MacKenzie with chiseled abs, an iron jaw, and thick wavy hair; one who will overlook all the qualities that have kept her single — her mid SMV, the entitled braggadociousness, the nose ring, the lack of respect and other social skills necessary to get along with a man, and all their past sexual indiscretions; one who will supply an insta-commitment, complete with a large house with a deluxe kitchen and all the trimmings, and also be willing to die for the honor of being her personal ATM, butler, and therapist.

If Baumeister's thesis on Mental Practice is true, then why aren't all these single women married already?

Delusions Detract from the Awareness of Reality

Even a moron knows that men's erotic fantasies don't lead to increased Alpha traits and masculine performance, but rather more of the opposite, as I warned men about in ASMR Virtual Intimacy.

And we are now seeing how every chick's self-centered dreams of sexual pornucopia don't add up to marriage lite.

So are these sexual fantasies an aberration that does not coincide with the evidence Baumeister cited? Or does it result in a decrease in Game efficacy, like the group who visualized failure in Evidence F — Golfing, or the decreased appetite for candy in Evidence G — Eating Habits?

Or maybe it is simply because these fantasies have nothing to do with reality, and are, in all truth, merely self-delusions that remove one from the conscious awareness of how to increase performance and improve one's self?

Fantasy is NOT Mental Practice

As Baumeister pointed out, imagining one's self performing specific actions that are known to produce the desired results is much more effective than merely imagining the outcome.

But…

Men's Erotic Fantasy focuses exclusively on feelings of lust for the low WHR female body and the physical mechanics of coitus, which is a highly idealized outcome soaked in pleasure, NOT a practical process involving conscious discipline.

Women's pornific domination/r@pe fantasy focuses exclusively on the top 0.01% of men — men whom they could never resist anyway, even if they thought they should; also a highly idealized outcome bathed in pleasure, NOT a practical process involving conscientious moral agency.

I might be wrong in some instances, but pouring one's self over p0rn (men) or literotica (women) never goes through any of the Game tactics or disciplines of self-improvement that might lead to either sex or marriage, respectively (e.g., amused mastery, building a domain of influence, centering one's internal locus of control, detachment, Frame, managing desire, self-discipline, vigilance, etc. for men; and chastity, Honeycraft, humility, modesty, respect for male authority, self-control, etc. for women), but the Mental Practice of these disciplines is exactly what would be most helpful, according to Baumeister's theory.

What to Imagine?

Obtaining the desired effects of mental simulation depend on the person focusing on what he or she will do to carry out the action, rather than on motivations, a vivid prospect of success (i.e. sex for men, or marriage for women), or trying to create a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Thus, men should imagine things like how they would detect and respond to a woman's IOIs and subtle communications, as well as instances of hypoagenticity, lies, mind games, $h!t Tests, Solipsistic Hamsterbations, trolling, etc., and how to maintain Frame throughout it all.

Women should imagine things like anticipating male desire, being helpmates, recognizing men for individual traits, as well as how they might be submissive and respectful to a man they are committed to, even when they don't feel like it.

I could go on about things that would actually be helpful in building a mindset conducive to a sanctified relationship. Readers are welcome to add others.

Instead, men are avoiding women altogether, and are combing through XHamster when they suffer from the dreaded blue balls; while women are in the habit of imagining how men might serve them and worship them. Women are rather successful in this, I might add, although not as much now as in past decades. Meanwhile, men are not nearly on par.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Kardashian Fantasy (2021/5/24)
- Σ Frame: Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy (2021/6/23)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Mating Dance and Female Erotic Fantasy (2024/1/19)
- Σ Frame: Chasing after a Deceptive Fantasy (2024/9/20)

- Σ Frame: Conflicts of Mythos and Meaning (2025/9/30)
- Σ Frame: ASMR Virtual Intimacy (2025/10/31)

Women Must Trust and Submit if they Expect Men to Step Up

Jack · 7 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Pat Stedman nails the core issue in response to Allie Beth Stuckey.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Rationalism;
Note: Here, I'll document a discussion that transpired on X (2025/11/1-2) and add some commentary. [Minor editing for corrections, with emphasis added.]
Length: 2,100 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Prominent Females are the Predominant Voices of Tradcon Culture

One of the tell-tale signs of converged American Protestantism is their prominent female personas who dominate the front and center of public discourse and rise to become the unifying voice of Tradcon culture.

Remember Tomi Lahren, who jumped to stardom with The Blaze, and in spite of her secular views on abortion and her sexual indiscretions, was a major voice in Tradcon politics until she had a bumpy retirement from the limelight in 2022-23 — juuust when she turned 30, by coincidence, I'm sure.

One vexing problem with this strategy is that these female personas are only popular as long as they're young, attractive, well-spoken, and indignantly reactionary. Whenever a trendy female soundbox hits the Wall, or becomes too unhinged in her political stance, or worse, is no longer able to say anything provocative that is also ironically charming, then TPTB must find a Narrative weaving replacement to retain the passive attention of pseudo-Christian Conservatives.

Allie Beth Stuckey

I'm waiting to see if Allie Beth Stuckey (ABS) is The Blaze's next iteration of Tomi Lahren.

ABS is still carping about the need for sensible politics, traditional conservatism, the harms of QTBGL, 'victimization', W0kism … all the topics that were trending 5 years ago when Lahren was ranting less effective PSAs, but with more influence, ironically.

"Oh, but now a woman is saying it, so it must be true!"

These women should be taking lessons from Erin or Karen Seitz. What they should be talking about is how women hate accountability, are too disrespectful, too entitled, too hypoagentic (except when it's self-serving), too sexually immoral, too solipsistic, etc., and what they should be doing to correct course. But apparently, ABS won't do this, unfortunately, because that would make her talk show, Relatable, Biblically truthful and morally practical, and thus totally UNrelatable to modern women.

Recently however, she addressed morality in a speech for Turning Point (tweeted by The Blaze), in which she said,

> "Men, we need you. We need your masculinity and your strength and courage, and we need those things to be harnessed for good."

It's refreshing to hear what appears to be a genuine plea of humility from a woman. However, she isn't close enough to the target for this to be Relatable to men. Most listeners will understand "harnessed for good" to mean "harnessed to serve women's interests".

This video from Nuclear Caudillo* sums up her speech and encapsulates many of the concerns that men have.

Nuclear Caudillo: How Conservative Women Pushed Men Away Forever (2025/11/4)

 H/T: Tubal Cain*

Stedman's Response

Pat Stedman tweeted this response to Stuckey's speech.

> "I genuinely believe you are operating in good faith.
>
> But you and all the other conservative, Christian women who get on stage and talk about the problems with men (regardless of how correct you may be), unfortunately, do not understand that what you are doing isn't only unhelpful, it's inherently contradictory. Rather than solve the problem of male leadership you lament, you in fact underline the cause of it.
>
> Men become leaders for one reason: because a man — either from his own Will or from fate thrusting it upon him — realizes that he must. He notices there is a problem that needs to be solved. He either sees incompetence or a vacuum and decides he must step forward to either correct or fill it.
>
> A man does NOT become a leader when he is nagged into it by a woman. A man does NOT become a leader when the legitimacy of his actions is measured by how much they align with a woman's interests. He does NOT have authority in such a scenario because his authority is constantly questioned. He has the responsibility of acting and bears the consequences of these actions, but he lacks agency to determine which actions to take. He might be out in front, but he is NOT a leader — he is a sock puppet. Really, he is a slave.
>
> This is how most women want it, or at least it's what they have been taught is normal and correct. Liberal feminist women do not want men to have any authority, and so this undermining is natural and congruent to them. Yet most conservative women in practice operate in the same way, even though they do NOT align ideologically with feminism. They DO want men to lead. They just want them to lead the way they want them to."

This is basically women's 'approval', which implies that SHE is the authority, NOT him. This is the essence of Complementarianism, which is Feminism lite. Cue the argument of "Responsibility without Authority is Sl@very".

> "These women think this is OK, and that there is no reason they shouldn't tell men what and how to fix things, because this will help men to lead better. But it does NOT. What it does — especially for men who have been emasculated all their lives — is it makes them shut down and escape. They realize they don't have authority, so naturally they shirk responsibility. By instructing men, you are telling them they are stupid and that you don't trust them to step up on their own. You are mothering: they respond like little boys accordingly.
>
> So what are you supposed to do? You are actually, believe it or not, supposed to get out of the way. You are supposed to create the vacuum — to say, "Men, we have these problems — can you fix them?" You are supposed to submit and surrender to our judgment and authority, and to trust our competence — NOT to tell us what to do. You are supposed to believe in us and our latent capability and foresight — you are NOT supposed to second-guess us or argue. And if we make mistakes, which is inevitable, you are supposed to have faith that we will figure things out and course correct.
>
> I understand, obviously, this submission is scary for most women. It is the fairer sex's big stumbling block: you see it in the discourse on here all the time, the defensive and angry demeanors of women hardened towards life and love. It's unsurprising, of course; many women have been disappointed and betrayed by men who have fallen short of their hopes and expectations. Yet while a woman should be judicious in her selection of a man, if she is to ever feel cherished and retain her femininity, she still must ultimately give herself up to him. This requires deep trust, and it's why when women choose men in their love lives, they should choose men with vitality and, most importantly, integrity.

> Yet hard as it may be to surrender, if a woman is to remain in essence a woman, she must nevertheless find the courage to do it. In the same way that a man is defective if he does not lead, a woman is defective if she does not submit. This is what men mean today when we say, "women aren't women anymore." Women like you, Allie, mean well, but you do NOT know how to let go of control. You do NOT know how to get out of the way. Frankly, you do NOT know when to shut up."

> "The good news is that the response men are having towards you shows that men are actually becoming men again. It may still be the early, adolescent rebellious stage against the devouring mother that our society — and yes, our Church — has become. It may at times seem immature and petulant. But it is nevertheless the sign of a masculine spirit stirring: a spirit that is, at its core, sovereign and resists being controlled.
>
> Because the first step of men becoming men again, ironically enough, is when they no longer care about listening to women. That is NOT because women aren't important to men; women at their best inspire and support us, indeed, our growth and strength come from our need to care for you and please you. It grows from the extent of our responsibility, which masculine men invariably seek out as they gain more authority.
>
> But it does NOT come from listening to your lectures, which are not only disrespectful but frankly have little value to us — not because you are wrong about us per se, but because when women do NOT take responsibility for their own behavior, their judgment of us is unearned and becomes irrelevant. This is not sexist; it is also how men treat other men. Masculine men only care about the opinions of men who are in the arena. If you enter the domain of men, be prepared to be treated like one.
>
> In the end, if society is fixed, it will come down to the men finally stepping up on their own and doing what must be done. Women can help with this, but NOT in the way they have been doing it. They can only do so by creating the vacuum for men to step forward more easily. Indeed, the most productive thing conservative women can do with their platforms is to focus their attention on other women, calling out their own sex's vices and entitlement, and encouraging more humility. In other words, to focus on the problems women today have — which are equally manifold — rather than attempting to solve men's. Men will sort out their own; we already are. What men need are NOT your exhortations, but your actual faith. And I mean faith in action. Your prayers for us are beautiful, but they come across as empty and self-centered without your surrender.

> Not every man will rise to the task when you give him this trust. But most will — far more than most women appreciate — and the performance and courage of men in the West will rise in proportion to the amount of trust their women put in them. The blueprint for manhood is still in us, even if we have forgotten how to follow it. Yet what we require to remember it isn't your advice. It's your belief.
>
> This is the power of feminine energy that has been forgotten by women today, in their foolish and unfruitful quest to be inferior men. They have forgotten that they have the ability to get everything by doing nothing. They are not builders at their core; they are amplifiers. Men naturally create structure, but it's women who create the reason to make it in the first place.
>
> I hope that women rediscover this power in themselves. The West needs as many muses to survive, as it does warriors."

Other Responses

Giff Lasta replied,

> "I don't want to knock @Pat_Stedman's response to @conservmillen [Allie Beth Stuckey] because I respect him.
>
> But I just don't get @RationalMale's [Rollo Tomassi] "responsibility without authority is slavery" thing. I can't imagine @jockowillink saying this, nor any great man. No one gives you unearned authority. No one "lets you lead." Men reach out and TAKE their destiny.
>
> I simply don't understand needing women to step aside and watch their world burn in order to create enough pain for the men to finally step up. I also don't see anything wrong with Allie saying that men should reject porn and lead—It's not like her words are hindering @MarkQueppet's work helping men quit porn or mine helping men lead in their marriages.
>
> Allie's speaking from the perspective of what women need from men. Why is that a problem? The only person who can put myself in her frame, such that I can't work towards my own masculine goals, is me. Why on earth would I need her to shut up in order to do my work?
>
> But perhaps I've got a blind spot here. So, to Pat and those who resonate with his words, explain to me what I'm missing.
>
> I'd like to hear a concrete case study where a woman telling a man what she needs from him foils his ability to lead and win."

Philip Scheffers offered a salient response to Giff Lasta.

> "The objection that responsibility without authority is slavery, or as Heinlein's original quote called it, "blind idiocy", isn't making an argument against men taking initiative on an individual basis. Rather, it's making the point that women who individually refuse to submit to a man's leadership or male leadership cannot then turn around and hold men collectively responsible for when doing her own thing blows up in her face. Authority comes with responsibility, and women who want to act under their own authority have to take personal responsibility for their own choices."

Conclusions

Hey girls, to put it bluntly, you have to stand back, and SHUT UP, and give men space to do their thing. That requires you to butt out of men's spaces and stop lecturing men on how to do better, etc. You have to trust that he'll grow to meet the demands of the task, that he'll succeed, and that he'll have your back — IF you believe in him, and HIM — that's true FAITH. If you care enough to make him a sammitch and slurp his genetic juice on a fine sunny

Saturday afternoon, that might help.

Many of the insights raised here reflect concepts I've addressed in the past. Convos like this lead me to believe my work as a Christian Manosphere blogger is nearly completed.

H/T: Info

Related

- Σ Frame: Disciplined, Submissive, Happy Wives (2018/2/15)
- Σ Frame: The Glory of Submission and Humility in Helping (2022/10/6)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Why are women willingly submissive to authorities, but not to their husbands? (2022/10/26)
- Σ Frame: It's her choice whether or not to submit. (2022/10/28)
- Σ Frame: Repentance and Submission (2022/10/30)
- Σ Frame: What we've learned about Feminine Submission (2022/10/31)
- Σ Frame: A Christian Woman's View of Submission (2023/9/13)

The Power Play of Female Self-Objectification

Jack · 10 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

It's NOT Faux Mate Signaling, it's Female Vanity.

Readership: All
Theme: Awareness and Introspection; Girl Game; Rationalism;
Length: 3,600 words
Reading Time: 20 minutes

Intro

Men have observed, and have often been thoroughly annoyed with the way modern women will obviously and openly flaunt their womanly wares for all the world to watch with elevator eyes on literally every jiggle and squeeze of cleavage possible, and then vehemently object to ANY response this receives from men, as well as any response from women that is not obsequiously and outlandishly affirming.

Over at The Fiamengo File: The Curious Case of the Self-Objectifying Feminist (2024/9/15), Janice Fiamengo critiques what is probably the most visually obvious contradiction in modern Feminism: the claim that the male gaze objectifies and dehumanizes women, even while many women, including prominent Feminists, actively court male attention through sexualized self-presentation.

Fiamengo contends that as women's freedoms have expanded, overt sexual display has intensified, often paired with not-so-plausible denial and accusations against men (e.g., criminalizing cat-calling or staring). She attributes this to unacknowledged female desires for attention and power. Meanwhile, Feminism demonizes male sexual desire as abusive dominance rather than natural attraction. Moreover, there is a repulsive lack of self-reflection among women, fueling ongoing misandry and victimhood narratives. Some commenters have praised her analysis while others criticized it as "too patriarchal".

Although Fiamengo has offered us a fantastic description of women's self-objectification, she doesn't explain the whys and wherefores.

Here, I've picked out a few excerpts that offer a concise description of this phenomenon, and added some mansplaining to fill in the knowledge gap. [Emphasis mine.]

Explaining the Double Messaging

> "The double messaging is deliberate—but confusing. […] It seems odd that an ad claiming that women should not be seen to invite sexual advances features a woman who seems to be inviting sexual advances.
>
> Feminists have for decades claimed that such sexualization has been forced on women to their detriment."
>
> "For centuries, we're told, patriarchal societies denied women the opportunity to do anything with their lives but live out male sexual fantasies, whether as virgin or whore, Madonna or muse. A male-defined culture made the woman accentuate her youth, shave her legs, remain svelte, and present herself for visual consumption, "living her body as seen by another, an anonymous patriarchal Other": a degrading spectacle from which all women would be better off free."

The Narrative™ is Not So. Recent advances in Red Pill revelations (see links below) have revealed that women have five categorical purposes underlying their choices of self-presentation.

1. Dressing for casual comfort.
2. Dressing to coagulate with other women.
3. Dressing to attract general attention, click$, and view$ (IRL or online).
4. Dressing to attract, or impress, or receive attention from a high-value man (e.g. a boss, a Ch@d, or a romantic interest).
5. Dressing appropriately, attractively, and modestly. (This barely exists outside of ultra-conservative enclaves.)

More generally, there are two modes of dress:

1. Dressing to conform.
2. Dressing to compete.

The more attractive 'Compete' mode comes in a few varieties, like…

- 'Festive' mode — When women dress up just to have fun and make a splash.
- 'Formal' mode — When women pretend to be princesses.
- 'Pick Me' mode — When a woman is actively trying to impress or seduce a man, or attract men's attention.
- 'Play' mode — When women objectify themselves just to make themselves feeel sexy (NOT necessarily for enticing men, but often coopted for that purpose, chance allowing).

IRL, there are some gray areas and overlap, due to varying social contexts, and this is one reason why men can be confused about women's motivations.

Even so, with that said, the Double Messaging should be clear.

To answer Fiamengo's point, the Feminist claim that women dress for men (or used to) is a negative and specifically male-condemning spin on a particular context (categories 4 and 5). (It is also a condemnation of civilization.) This argument is thus nullified in the present context.

Power Play Mode

Due to women's liberation, Play Mode has been removed from the marital bedroom and brandished throughout every public forum, online and IRL. They are in Compete Mode, but instead of competing for a husband's attention, they're competing for everyone's attention. They're also competing against men to attain social dominance / influence.

So what we see in the case of the self-objectifying Feminist is category 3. They are glorifying their sex appeal (or the lack thereof in some instances) as a flex of Feminine power. It is NOT for men at all — it is for themselves.

The Power of Female Sexuality

> "Yet here is a campaign designed by Feminists to support alleged r@pe victims, with the same (objectionable) self-presentation by the ad's primary subject, who is obviously not posing against her will and obviously has many choices about how to present herself. The only difference, it seems, is that in this case, the woman's self-display is entirely of her own defiant volition."

These women are responding to the power of male attraction with an egalitarianish demonstration of the female power to attract (or in the case of green haired, tat-frenzied land whales, the power to flatly reject the same in themselves).

> "But this liberatory vision has certainly not been consistently embodied in modern Feminist culture—far from it. Though one can find women whose feminism has given them permission to look as hideous as possible, one can easily find at least as many who seem to go out of their way to be both "obnoxious" and "complicit," to inflame male desire while pretending to object to it (see Bettina Arndt's marvelous "The Politics of Cleavage" for a fascinating analysis of such women's self-justification). Hollywood actresses like Sydney Sweeney, who have made a lucrative career showing off a beautiful body, lament their struggles with "objectification," which they say is the tendency of their fans (mostly men, one assumes) to be unable to appreciate them "on a human level". A woman who spends hours every day maintaining her perfect body wants us to believe that she is hurt by male viewers' appreciation of her perfect body.
>
> It has become common in Feminist activism to declaim against the alleged objectification of women by mimicking such objectification without any evident irony."

There is no irony if you understand them correctly. These women are objecting to the unwanted side effect of arousing LOW SMV male desire, which thus violates their Existential Fear. The motivation of women in this case fits category 3: Dressing (or undressing) to attract general attention, and NOT categories 4 or 5: Dressing to attract or entice men. IOW, they want the benefits, glory, honor, and power of being attractive, without any responsiblity to those who are thus attracted.

Naked Athena, in the Portland protests.

> "It is not at all unusual for Feminist women staging some sort of protest—the cause doesn't seem to matter—to expose their bodies for attention. "Hundreds of women strip naked to protest against sexual violence," is a typical headline. In this case, Brazilian women were objecting to "claims by some that women provoke attacks by the way they dress or act." Argentinian women mounted a naked, screaming objection to domestic violence. British women stripped naked on video to protest the planned closure of a local hospital. The women of Extinction Rebellion are fond of topless protests, and during the George Floyd-inspired mayhem of 2020, a naked woman did revealing yoga poses in front of Portland riot police.
>
> Other women have found it satisfying to pose for pictures with provocative slogans written on their backs or breasts. "I'm tired of being looked at as a set of holes," says one, inviting viewers to think of her in the way that allegedly tires her. In the photo, she presents her bare back to the viewer, head turned to the side as if about to glance over her shoulder, one curly tendril of hair escaping to point at her righteous claim."

All of this female flesh exposure is the ultimate trump card grab hook for "Look at MEEE!" They have the idea that bare boobs have the power to stop the traffic, immediately end all worldly conflict via distraction, and mold the world according to their liking. For the most part, they are correct, hence all the disruption and mayhem.

Moreover, it is a power play, and a very effective one too. But it is not only a power play; it is also intrinsically satisfying to them, as I'll describe next.

The Vanity of Female Self-Objectification

> "Millions of women every day flaunt boob and bum, wearing tight tights and crop tops in all situations (even to flamboyantly fix a car), carefully positioning phone cameras to capture cleavage, curves, and crotch for all to see. If this is dehumanization, it is hard to imagine it any more enthusiastically embraced by the vast majority of liberated women. Any man who objects—and some men do—will not be hailed as a proto-Feminist or sympathized with about the over-exposure, but jeered at as a repressive prude or a frustrated sexual loser.
>
> One need only walk down the street on a mildly warm day to see women of all ages, but particularly women and girls from early teens to mid-30s, wearing clothing that only a few decades ago would have raised eyebrows and inspired admonishment. It seems there are almost no boundaries left in women's rush to outdo one another in self-display."

Red Pill Apostle and I covered this phenomenon before in Incentives for Bimbofication (2021/8/23)

> "What is particularly striking, moreover, is how often such self-display involves an aggressive dishonesty. Many TikTok and YouTube videos feature women who pretend to advertise a product or showcase a skill, technique, or activity; but are in fact thinly disguised self-advertisements in which the woman herself is the product, whether she's doing something with a car engine, riding a motorbike, demonstrating a leg press, exercising her glute muscles, cleaning her house, dusting hard-to-reach high places, showing how to do wide-leg stretching, being an auto mechanic, looking after her horse, doing yoga, or thousands of other activities presented as if they are about anything but getting eyes on the woman's sexy parts."

'Dishonesty' is true, but it doesn't quite nail the context in which a totally self-absorbed woman is in Play Mode. More comprehensively, it's all vanity. I repeat, VANITY!

An Analogy — Swapping Sexes

To make this vanity clear to the reader, let's switch the sexes to form an insightful analogy.

