People with the disorganized attachment style tend to vacillate between the traits of both anxious and avoidant attachment depending on their mood and circumstances. For this reason, someone with this attachment style tends to show confusing and ambiguous behaviors in their social bonds and boundaries.

For adults with disorganized attachment, the partner and the relationship themselves are often the source of both desire and fear. On the one hand, Disorganized / Fearful-Avoidant people do want intimacy and closeness, but on the other hand, experience troubles trusting and depending on others.

People with this attachment style often struggle with identifying and regulating their emotions and tend to avoid strong emotional attachment due to their intense fear of getting hurt.

Such individuals could also suffer from other mental health issues, such as substance abuse, depression, or borderline personality disorder.

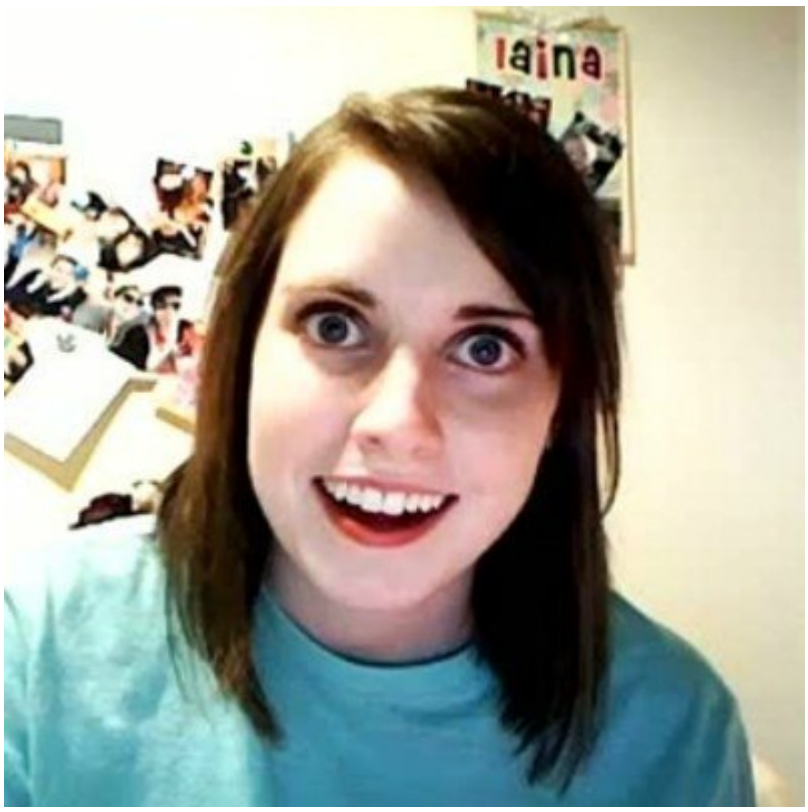
Secure Attachment

People who have developed a Secure Attachment style are self-contented, social, warm, and easy to connect to. They are aware of and able to express their emotions comfortably and openly. Adults with a secure attachment style can depend on their partners and, in turn, let their partners rely on them. As a result, they also tend to build deep, meaningful, and long-lasting relationships and are well-liked in the workplace.

Relationships with someone with a Secure Attachment style are based on honesty, tolerance, and emotional closeness. Although someone with this attachment style often thrives in their relationships, they also don't fear being on their own. Securely Attached individuals tend to have a positive view of themselves and others, so they do not overly seek external approval or validation. They can successfully identify and regulate their emotions, and even help a partner do so with theirs.

Concluding Statements

The secure attachment style is the most common type of attachment in western society. Research suggests that around 66% of the US population is securely attached. That means that 34% of people have an Insecure Attachment style. That's 1 out of 3 people! They're the people that you meet each day.



Identifying your own Attachment Style is an important step towards knowing yourself. If you find that you have an Insecure Attachment Style, then it is crucial for you to be working through those issues and pulling yourself together.

Understanding your own Attachment Style and being able to identify the Attachment Style of others can take you a long way in understanding your interactions with others and getting along with them.

It is possible, however difficult, for individuals with Insecure Attachment issues to change and develop a Secure Attachment style.

Children often learn Insecure Attachment styles from parents who have attachment issues themselves. This is one way that generational curses propagate from one generation to the next. Parents who want to raise securely attached children might benefit from researching the topic and resolving their own attachment issues, if such exist.

Related

- Σ Frame: What is Borderline Personality Disorder? (2016/5/30)
- Σ Frame: Agreeableness and Personality (2022/6/8)
- Σ Frame: Imposing Masculine Presence (2022/6/10)
- Σ Frame: How to be winsome by adapting to others' Communication Styles (2022/6/13)
- Σ Frame: How to Motivate the Four Personality Types according to their Communication Styles (2022/6/15)
- Σ Frame: Erotic Blueprints and Personality (2022/10/12)

Identifying Attachment Style is the New Game

Jack · 12 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

This theory might explain the recurring problems in your relationship (or the lack thereof).

Readership: All;
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Introduction

People tend to be strongly attracted to those who complement their Attachment Style. I'm not convinced that this is sexual attraction per se, but it is definitely a component of what brings people together. There are even some writers that identify this type of attraction as "love", although it is NOT, according to a Christian understanding of love. (This might be "true" according to a gnostic understanding of love.) Thus, understanding Attachment Style is very important for understanding the overall constitution of a relationship.

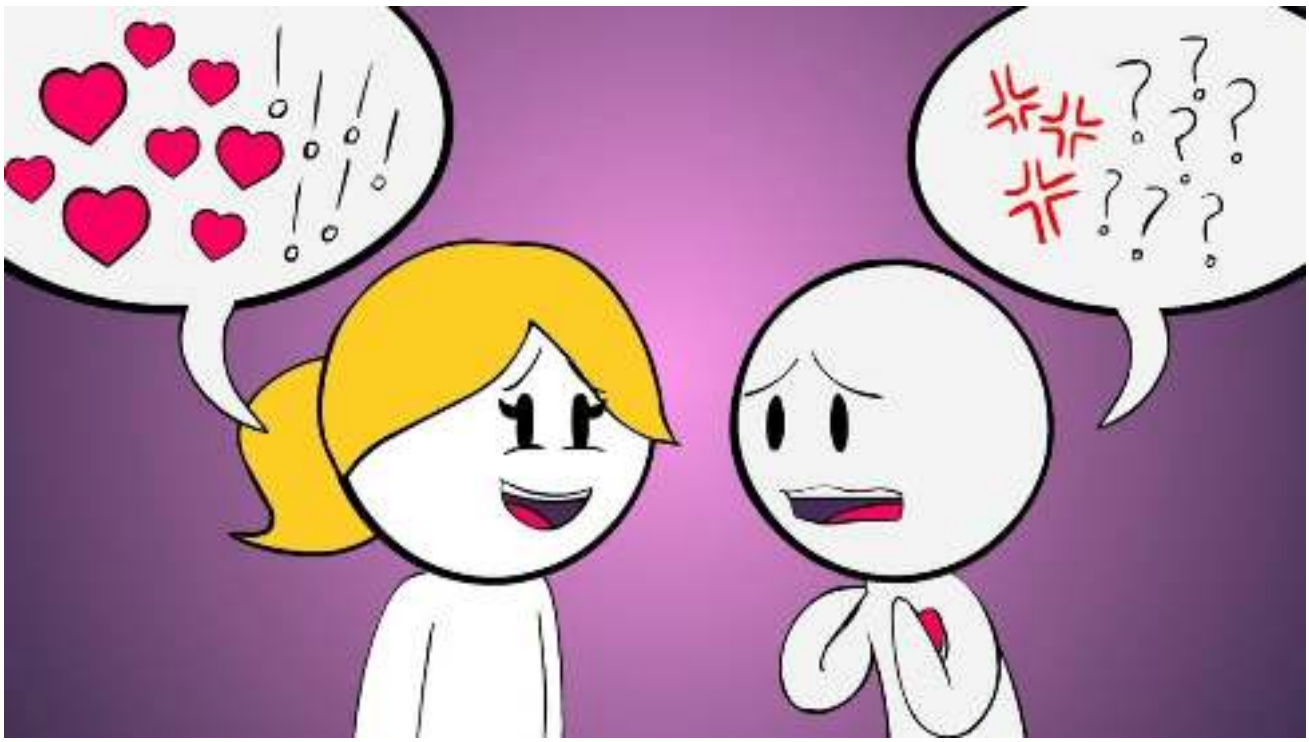
This post will dive further into this theory and will apply it to intersexual dynamics.

How is Attachment Style Related to Intersexual Dynamics?

Emotionally healthy, securely attached individuals tend to match up quickly with other healthy, secure individuals. Over time, these people are taken off the marriage market until there are only broken people from broken homes left on the MMP. Many of these will eventually pair up, producing dysfunctional / odd marriages, with many ending in divorce. Finally, the last remaining singles make up the tail end of the MMV distribution — all the immature misfits who can't pair up or won't reproduce. And then these people start combing through online dating apps, frequenting bars and clubs, hitting up the OASIS, and watching videos about dating, etc.

Here, I'll introduce a neologism to describe those who cannot form healthy or proper attachments: Deproached (from Latin: de- "to remove" + prope "near" (c.f. approach, propinquity), similar to reproach). Being deproached is a step better than being a b@st@rd or b@st@rdette. Also similar to being a b@st@rd, one is deproachable by nature of their learned behaviors and through none of his/her own doing. Furthermore, deproachment is a symptom of either a sin (e.g. lust) or a generational curse (learned Insecure Attachment).

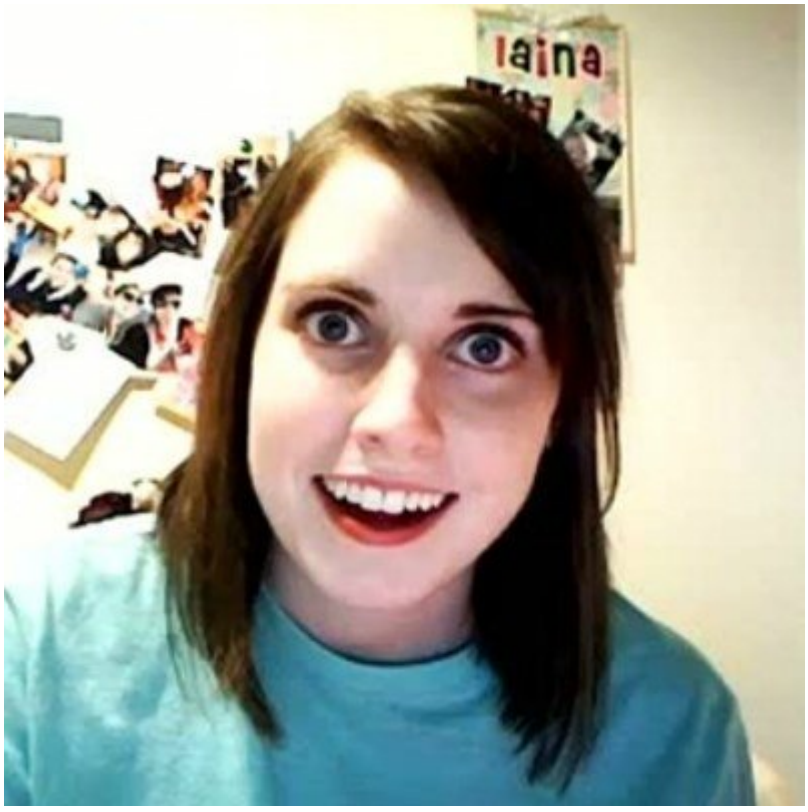
One reason why good men who love a woman are often rejected out-of-hand by her is because she is already sexually bonded to another man (defiled or sanctified, depending on whether she is married or not), emotionally broken (debased), or has a maladjusted Insecure Attachment style (deproached). OTOH, a man who rejects a decent woman who respects him and submits to him has either conditioned himself to only be attracted to 304s (e.g. through lust, OASIS, p0rn, etc., also deproached), or else he is clueless and doesn't know the score (self-deproached). Also, being hopelessly Blue Pilled would fall into the latter description. This mismatch seldom happens at a conscious level. They just repel each other due to incongruences between their respective social behaviors that express their own interests and attachment styles.



Moreover, it is rather difficult for relationships between two people of non-complementing attachment styles to form. Or if a relationship does start, it doesn't last long. Perhaps this is God's way of protecting healthy individuals from those who have attachment issues.

So if you encounter an attractive single woman on the SMP and it seems unbelievable that she is not yet taken, there's a good chance that she is deproached — that is, she has childhood wounds that have created an Insecure Attachment in her which makes her unfit for a LTR. This may very well be the primary reason why she is still single.

Attachment Style Pairings



S1ut Eye appears to be more common among Anxiously Attached individuals.
Identifying a woman's attachment style is the New Game (AKA Rizz, or Game 2.0). An expert mastery of the New Game requires a man to be well acquainted with the many manifestations of Attachment style interactions and be able to identify couplings.

The art of making judgments concerning a woman's attachment style is the New Vetting (AKA Vetting 2.0). In theory, a Securely Attached person will be able to navigate through a relationship with any of the other Attachment styles. However, a Secure + Secure pairing is optimal. There are a few Insecure Attachment styles that naturally attract each other (indicated in bold below). Insecure Attachment pairings come in different gradations of problems and peculiarities, but Disorganized individuals are usually the most problematic.

Here I'll lay out a flag assessment of each pairing.

Green Flag = Go!

- Secure + Secure

Yellow Flag = Caution!

- Secure + Anxious
- Secure + Avoidant
- Anxious + Anxious (e.g. the clingy couple)
- Avoidant + Avoidant (e.g. the distant / independent power couple)

Red Flag = Stop until the cause is cleared!

- Anxious + Avoidant (e.g. couples that play the cat and mouse game, PUA tactics)
- Anxious + Disorganized
- Avoidant + Disorganized

Black Flag = You're in for a World of Pain!

- Avoidant + Disorganized
- Disorganized + Disorganized

Note 1: This categorization is only for Attachment Style Pairings. It does NOT take into account other issues that may introduce red flags, etc.
Note 2: These categorizations are my own, based on my faith, studies of the topic, and life experiences. Other sources, such as The Love Compass, have different categorizations. Readers are welcome to challenge and debate these flag categorizations in the comments below.

Concluding Statements

In the context of finding a mate, Attachment Theory is a subcategory of Deep Strength's Rule of Reciprocality (AKA Σ Frame Axiom 10): Like attracts like; Birds of a feather flock together. It is a subcategory because there are other factors that affect reciprocality, such as shared values, similar socio-economic class (SEC), etc.

People are drawn towards those who can relate to their Attachment Style. For Securely Attached individuals, this is a vehicle of blessing. For those with an Insecure Attachment style, the inherent problem is that one is drawn to those who can spar with them within that paradigm, which are usually others who have attachment issues themselves. For those who are Insecurely Attached, there is a significant challenge in first forming healthier Attachment behaviors before they can form healthy relationships with others. By failing to address one's own Insecure Attachment, those old dysfunctional habits will continue, and one will fail to develop secure attachment behaviors. As a result, they also forego healthier relationships with healthier individuals. Any children involved will also suffer, and the curse of deproachment will be passed on to the next generation.

As already mentioned, identifying a woman's attachment style is the new Game. In order to avoid making your marriage into a grueling lesson in Insecure Attachment Styles, any vetting taking place must necessarily include an assessment of her childhood, and how it influenced her present Attachment Style. This would require getting to know her family rather intimately. Knowing these things could make a huge difference in how your relationship(s) turn out.

Related

- Levine, A. & Heller, R. (2010). Attached: The New Science of Adult Attachment and How It Can Help You Find — And Keep — Love. Penguin Group, NY: New York. [Blog]
- The Love Compass: Adult Attachment Styles [Category]
- The Love Compass: Attachment Pairings: Finding the Best Fit (2014/3/15)
- Σ Frame: Looking at the Essentials (2020/6/12)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill Fear of Being Used (2023/8/14)

- Σ Frame: The Ever Present Fear of a Dead Bedroom (2023/10/3)
- Σ Frame: Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT “Found” by Chance (2023/10/9)

Attachment Style and Game

Jack · 13 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

A look back at old school Pick Up Artistry through the lens of Attachment Style theory.

Readership: All;
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

How is Attachment Style Related to Relationship Failure?

One characteristic that Insecure Attachment Styles have in common is a drive to control others,* usually to ameliorate anxieties and insecurities related to the abnormalities of ones' Insecure Attachment style. The fundamental constitution of ones' Attachment Style — ones' world orientation, ones' view of self and others, and the associated habits — originate in childhood, so they have lived in this condition their entire lives. As a result, their skills in controlling others are thorougly explored and well practiced. Also, these individuals are typically unaware of their own dysfunctionality. They believe they can bring stability, peace, and contentment to themselves by controlling others, and therefore believe their controlling behaviors are fully justified, even normal. They may even project their controlling nature onto others.

* NOT ALL Insecure Attachment Styles seek to control. Some styles have subtypes marked by apathy / indifference in which they just want to be left alone (not to be confused with Avoidance Attachment which can be very controlling).

We've all heard stories of crazies who use sex or sex appeal or withholding sex as a tool to control men, or who get married and then divorced, or have a child OOW, all done in an effort to control a man and/or extract attention / cash / resources / security / status / etc. (a la the Curse of Eve).

Avoidant Attachment.
Women who are repetitively pumped-and-dumped (repudiated), or wind up _ivorced and looking for the D

(adulteresses) are most likely Insecurely Attached. Such experiences also foster, perpetuate, and reinforce Insecure Attachment in both men and women, but especially women and their children.

There are even voices that school women in how to do things like this, essentially teaching them how to make the most of their anti-social disposition and thereby hoodwinking them out of anything better. Women are their own worst enemies.

Moreover, the majority of women who do things like this are Insecurely Attached, in addition to having other psychopathic maladies. This is why Identifying Attachment Style is the New Game.

How is Attachment Style Related to Game?

Let's take a look at old school Pick Up Artistry through the lens of Attachment Style theory.

Mystery, an old school PUA.

In response to our coverage of Casey Zander in The Essence of the Black Pill (2023/8/11), commenter Dead Bedroom Dating pointed out that many PUA tactics prey on insecurely attached women to extract sex from them and also to satisfy the PUAs own Insecure Attachment (i.e. neediness).

I believe this is a valid observation for the following reasons.

The pinnacle "achievement" in PU Artistry is in successfully finding and Gaming an Insecurely Attached girl who is old enough to be sexually activated, yet young enough to be youthfully attractive and also too socially naïve to know she has an Insecure Attachment.

What is NEVER pointed out in polite society (and this is the golden key to Pick Up Artistry) is that the so called "targets" or "victims" of PUA guile are also looking to have their Insecure Attachment itch scratched, and it is left to the PUA to "pick up" on this and "not mess it up". After all, it takes multiple misfits — both male and female — to do the mash.

You see, inside the PUA paradigm of Insecure Attachment, it is assumed that women have profane and perverse needs that they desperately want fulfilled. (As far as I know, I've been the only Manosphere voice who has pointed this out.) For example, when Casey Zander says, "Women DESPISE MEN who LOVE Them" and "WOMEN ONLY crave men who DO NOT NEED them", he is citing decade-old Red Pill knowledge about the nature of debased women. It is never mentioned that women with a healthy attachment style are not like this. The maxim "All Women Are Like That" (AWALT) is utilized to boost the PUA's confidence and to provide the mindset necessary to seduce women into a fleshly fulfilling Insecure Attachment. All these morally inverted PUA Axioms (some of which are based on honest statements from women) are indeed "true" within the debased paradigms of the respective Insecure Attachment Styles.

Upon a closer inspection, we find that many PUA tactics are indeed characteristic of an Avoidant Attachment style, such as Amused Mastery, Bait and Switch, Blocking, Cat and Mouse games, Compatibility Testing, some types of Compliance Tests, False Time Constraints, Gotcha games, Inciting Jealousy, Negging, Shame Games, Silent Treatment, Spinning Plates, Transactional Mindset, and ZFG. In summary of all these tactics, the PUA playbook proposes displaying Avoidant Attachment behaviors, because that is what triggers Anxious Attachment in women, leading to those particular women giving chase. In fact, skillful Game as been known to make women come running. Why? Because it speaks to their Insecure Attachment style. IOW, Game exercises authentic authority over these broken women and this is what makes these men sexually "visible" to these women. This is the point at which arousal begins.

The effectiveness of these tactics are further amplified by the fact that avoidance is easily misinterpreted as high status, thereby triggering hypergamy.

Various types of approaches, each with their own set of time-tested tactics, were even called "styles", unwittingly (?) identifying them as Insecure Attachment Styles.

This kind of behavior is only attractive to women who are emotionally broken or have an Insecure Attachment Style.
The unstated necessary conditions for "success" are that (1) a woman must have an Insecure Attachment that can be exploited, and (2) she must be in a state of humiliation or vulnerability (e.g. desperate for attention and love, lacking agency, lacking Headship covering, living away from family, in rebellion against parents, unmarried, etc.). The stated emphasis on sex and scoring only serves to cloud the underlying emotional needs and the motivations thereof.

Moreover, old school PUA style Game tactics rely on a combination of theories about the fleshly nature of women, Red Pill praxeology, and skills in generating Attachment Style dynamics in order to genuflect charm, establish trust, inflict humility in women, and convey the promise of validation. In essence, Mystery, Strauss, Zander, et al. are teaching men how to develop co-dependent relationships with insecurely attached women.

Furthermore, old-school PUA Neil Strauss stated that most of the guys who came to him for help suffered from extreme social anxiety, which is a common trademark of Insecure Attachment. (This could also be due to flagging testosterone.)

Strauss also once said,

> "To win the game was to leave it."

That is Avoidant Attachment in a nutshell.

In conclusion, between the PUA gurus' view of women as disposable commodities, the severe social anxieties of their disciples, the very nature of PUA tactics, and the kinds of women who respond to such tactics, archetypical Insecure Attachment styles are quite evident.

PUA Neil Strauss with his paramours.

Concluding Statements

Alain de Botton said,

> "…we are on a quest to suffer in ways that feel familiar. This radically undermines our ability to find a good partner. We reject suitable potential partners simply because they are not able to make us suffer in the way that we need to suffer in order to feel that love is real.
>
> We all have a particular "type" of person whom we find attractive, which may be a result of formative experiences in childhood and adolescence. These "types" tend to instill those peculiar sorts of sufferings which we are most familiar with, although we remain ignorant of this and idolize the person instead. One's own particular "type" invariably proves to be challenging for one to deal with and manage. We have the idea that we should try to change the "type" we are attracted to, or change a particular individual we are attracted to into being someone fundamentally different. But instead of doing this, it may be wiser to learn how to deal with our type in a more mature way."

As de Botton describes, and as I mentioned in a previous post, those who are not Securely Attached find it more difficult to land in a functioning relationship. Because of the high divorce rate over the past few decades, more and more young people have grown up in broken and/or dysfunctional homes and have developed Insecure Attachment as a result.

Pick Up Artistry was a response to this widespread depravity in that it succeeded in helping amoral, Insecurely Attached people — men and women alike — create provisional relationships in which they could have their emotional and sexual needs met.

As readers already know, a few years ago, the PUA industry went to the doghouse because women wised up to the games. But unfortunately, this had nothing to do with women getting over their Attachment issues, learning to exercise boundaries, and growing past their solipsism. Instead, women upped the ante by filtering out all but the uber top tier men or else resorted to transactional interactions in order to make it worth getting burned.

An awareness of Attachment Styles may have saved a few heartbreaks.

Women with Secure Attachment don't despise love, and they can deal with anxious, needy, and Insecurely Attached men in a forgiving manner. As Dalrock, Deep Strength, ProfessorGBFM™, and others have pointed out, Pick Up Game (e.g. Zander's advice) doesn't "work" with emotionally healthy women. It only exposes you as an awkward, amateur wannabe who can't read her well enough to know that she's NOT broken / immature. If you display emotionally unhealthy behavior to them, they simply drop you and move on.

As a final word, now it is more clear that the difference between PUA Game and Christian / Charismatic Game is one of Attachment Style. PUA Game is an unhealthy expression of Insecure Attachment, whereas Charismatic Game arises naturally from a Secure Attachment.

Related

- Σ Frame: On the Spiritual Significance and Social Value of Game (2019/11/3)
- Σ Frame: Why does Game work? (2019/12/9)
- Σ Frame: A Revised Understanding of Game (2020/9/14)
- Σ Frame: Game is an invitation to Humility (2022/10/25)

Self-Selection and Adverse Selection

Jack · 16 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

A case study of how churchians choose to marry other churchians.

Readership: Christian Men
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

In response to Deep Strength's post, You should be training your wife (2021/6/16), Jack wrote,

> "I think this idea should be discussed openly, because if men made this expectation clear in the beginning, then this would weed out those women who disagree with the idea of Headship. It's a vetting technique that will reveal whether a woman has a ~~scarlet letter~~ rebellious and contentious heart, or the Mark of Eve, so to speak."

Red Pill Apostle responded [emphasis mine],

> "You are getting at the concepts of selection and adverse selection. If you can accurately communicate the traits of who you are up front, girls will self-select away from or towards you depending on how well y'all match up. If you how you communicate the traits of who you are is off somehow then you run the risk of adverse selection where you attract girls with the wrong fit for you.
>
> Thinking about this concept further, this may be one of the more damaging parts of the modern church's teaching on men and marriage because it creates a trend of men being selected by women that are egalitarians. The lessons men are taught about masculinity, girls and marriage show up in men's characteristics that the egalitarian girl finds pleasing and there is little impetus for her to move on over philosophical / theological views. The expression of biblical masculinity coupled with biblically minded vetting processes advocated for here and elsewhere help mitigate the chances of adverse selection."

IOW, young, single, Churchian feminists are on a quest to find a kinder, gentler Male Feminist who bends to their whims. It is always hoped that such a man will also be a total stud, but regular readers will know that such a man does not exist.

Aaand… right on cue, a female commenter chimes in to prove RPA's statement (in bold) correct.

susan barackman-artist says:

> "I do understand the respect thing but shouldn't that go both ways? Like the man should not dis his wife and that she should be able to correct him."

Translation: "Men are to respect women as their betters who know better."

> "Am I mistaken about Christianity? When I became a Christian I thought that God / Jesus / Holy Spirit became my teacher, leader, guide, etc. — not a fallible man."

Translation: "In my preferred version of churchianity, men are a fifth wheel — a spare to be used in case of an emergency — just as it should be." A typical Complementarian / Egalitarian attitude.

> "After living under Gothard theology for a while I realized that putting all the rules on how women should act and very few on men that boil down to lead and breed caused the abuse of many women by men who hid behind a few bible verses that gave them free rein and free reign."

Translation: "Male Authority = Abuuussee!!! Reee!!!"

She was exposed to Headship, but she self-de-selected out of it. Apparently, she couldn't see the glory of God in a hierarchical structure, probably because she had been sucking on churchian / cultural feminist mantras for her entire life.

> "The fact that those few misinterpreted verses about male headship spawned such patriarchal websites such as Biblical Gender Roles that claims the bible says men are owners of their wives, women should not go to college or be educated or even vote, and only be housewives and mothers, advocating for marrying young girls in their teens and molding them to be the perfect wife in all ways… among other things that will make your hair stand on end — all backed up by scripture !!!!!!!!!"

Translation: "If that's what scripture says, then it must be wrong!"

> "And to disagree with someone who supports women in "traditional" submissive roles is to invite ire, name calling, vitriol and many other unchristian responses, including not allowing differing opinions on their sites, only comments that agree with what they say."

Translation: "No one will listen to my heretical femcentric views! Toxic masculinity!"

> "If God meant for women to only be housewives and mothers why did He give some great inventive minds and abilities? Why was it 3 black women that did the math and computer calculations that got the astronauts home safe from the moon? Why didn't God give that knowledge to men whose women were at home raising kids and cleaning house?"

Translation: "Strong Independent Womyn™ Power! Rah!"

> "One last point… even though patriarchy is in the Bible that does not make it God's plan for the family. To say that is to also agree slavery is ok because it is in the Bible as part of the ancient and Roman / Greco world where biblical events took place. Under patriarchy women can be abused. But under mutuality, no one is abused because God is the only authority. Yes, there are wordly [sic] authorities but we cannot obey them blindly."

Translation: "Patriarchy is slavery! But slavery to the gubmint is OK as long as wimmin can retain their right to pursue the Feminine Imperative."

And the million dollar question is, what kind of man did she marry?

> "My husband told me the day we got married he was not my boss or leader and that I was to follow God's will in my life not his."

Bingo! She chose to marry a Complementarian / Egalitarian churchian Male Feminist!

Just like every other woman who says they want to marry "a nuyce Christian man" after they finish their ~~rounds on the carousel~~ sagacious season of singleness.

The moral of the story is that misguided Churchian women are selecting for misguided churchian men — men who will let their wives call the shots and run the show — essentially a Feminist or Complementarian marriage.

More evidence for why Christian men should be wary of marrying "Christian" women.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Dissemination and Dissolution (2020/11/7)
- Σ Frame: The Christian Marriage Dilemma (2021/2/26)
- Σ Frame: The Feminine Christian Marriage Quadrilemma (2021/7/16)
- Σ Frame: Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21)
- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)

2 Timothy 3:1-5 on Vetting

Jack · 17 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

There's a stark difference between believers and unbelievers.

Readership: All;
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

> [1] This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. [2] For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, [3] Without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, [4] Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; [5] Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away.
>
> 2 Timothy 3:1-5 (KJV)

In ye olde King James Bible, "men" means human beings who are of the age of accountability, so this description applies to women too. And I do believe we have been living in "the last days" for the past century or so, or at least the last decade, according to the Mayan calendar.

Anyway, this passage provides us with a great list of red flags (or black flags). Let's break it down.

- "Lovers of their own selves" — She loves herself in a vainglorious way — think excessive selfies, Instagram wh0ring, Tik Tok teasing, multiple social media accounts, etc. Women who focus on the attention they receive are emotionally insecure and are not very well in touch with their feelings because they're always looking for the next dopamine hit of "likes" — the pandemic addiction of the 21st century.
- Covetous — "The leaves are always greener on the next branch." To me, this means she'll always be hypergamously looking for a better man, and more luxurious opportunities in life (e.g. social climbing, gold digging, etc.).
- Boasting — "Look at me! Look at me! I have more likes than so and so!"
- Proud — The positive expression of Pride is boasting and drawing attention, glory, and praise to one's self. Again, social media is chock full of this. The negative expression of pride is Self-Pity, which is a peculiar sort of self-consciousness that shows in the attitudes of indignation, persnicketyness, and unthankfulness. At a deeper level, Pride is esteeming one's self above the Lord, and Self-Pity is blaming God for one's circumstances and making God out to be cruel or unjust.
- Blaspheming — Calling what is good, bad, and vice versa — basically any Feminist boilerplate. Also, Ressentimentalism is a form of rebellion that amounts to blasphemy.
- Disobedient to parents — This includes a woman's failure to submit to authority by defying her father, and this attitude is ultimately extended towards her husband.
- Unthankful — This is a big one. Does she show her appreciation for the small things in life?
- Unholy — Following the herd, getting tattoos, blue hair, gaining weight, dressing provocatively, hooking up, pursuing education for the sake of self-centered independence, going into debt… Basically following a Worldly life script and doing what everyone else is doing.
- Without natural affection — This goes hand in hand with selfish pride. No compassion. No grace. No kindness. It includes things like cruelty, sexual withholding in marriage, and verbal abuse. At worst, it is expressed in divorce and physical abuse.
- Trucebreakers — Cuckolding. Frivorce. Lying. Withholding sex in marriage comes up yet again.

- False accusers — MəT00. R@pə culture. Women who change their stories because they didn't know how to say "NO". Duluth attacks for the sake of controlling or punishing a man. Admitting false or exaggerated charges in court in order to obtain child custody or augmented benefits.
- Incontinent — Lacking discretion, good judgment, moderation, or self-control. This includes Sexual Impurity. She can't keep her pants on.
- Fierce — The Strong Independent Woman™. Just about any SJW. Most movies have at least one female who can kick several strong men's butts, and this is presented to glorify this myth.
- Despisers of those that are good — Virgin shaming. Shaming men for valuing sexual purity in a woman. Those old hags always hate pure young lasses.
- Traitors — Adultery and cuckoldry could apply under this definition, not to mention those women who joined Al Q@!d@.
- Heady (headstrong, reckless, impulsive) — Sexual promiscuity, tattoos, habitual drunkenness…
- Highminded (conceited, arrogant) — Female hyper-entitlement. Anymore, it's hard to find any woman who is not like this.
- Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God — "Girls just wanna have FUN! Sexual purity is sooo backwards!"
- Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof — Modern churchianity in all its glory!

…from such turn away!

Concluding Statements

Since we are given these things to look out for and avoid, the opposite traits should give us a clue on how a woman should behave. Using this logic, look for the following characteristics in a girl who is bound to be a better choice in marriage.*

- Humble.
- Trusting.
- Submissive.

- Open hearted.
- Naturally affectionate.
- Sexually pure and undefiled.
- Attentive to your thoughts and needs.
- Freely displays IOIs to you (and ONLY you).
- Listens wholeheartedly to what you have to say, without giving you a lot of static.
- Responds well to your displays of physical affection, e.g. kino-type interactions (an indicator of natural affection, c.f. 2 Timothy 3:3).

If she's naturally an emotional, open-minded, touchy-feely girl, then she'll also be that way in the sack. But if she is spiritually depraved, self-seeking for attention and affirmation, or lacking natural affection, then you might have troubles if you wife her up.

 Granted, some exceptions may be found.*

Related

- Σ Frame: Commonalities of Successful Marriages (2021/4/14)

Natural Affection

Jack · 18 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

An obvious characteristic that indicates spiritual quality.

Readership: All;
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

In our study of 2 Timothy 3:1-5 on Vetting (2023/10/17), we learned that the wicked are without natural affection (2 Timothy 3:3), among many other things. Conversely, one of the characteristics of a spiritually healthy woman is that she is naturally affectionate.

Natural affection stands out as being something important that would be easy to vet for, so I did a little study of this.

Scripture and Etymology

The Greek word stergeo / storgoi refers to the natural love that members of the same family have for each other. It also refers to the fondness of familiar faces or people who relate to each other in familiar ways. Attachment Style would be related to the latter definition.

The word storgoi doesn't appear anywhere in the bible. However, a near synonym, philostorgos (φιλόστοργος), translated as tenderly loving or kindly affectionate, appears in Romans 12:10, in which the Apostle Paul urges believers to devote themselves towards extending brotherly love with esteem and honor towards fellow believers.

She's naughty, but naturally affectionate!

Apparently, natural affection is (or should be) such a common characteristic of all believers that there should be no occasion to refer to it at all, except when it is emphasized (e.g. philostorgos) or when it is NOT present in certain individuals who are without natural affection.

The Greek word used in 2 Timothy 3:3 is astorgoi (ἄστοργοι), meaning without natural affection. (The prefix a- means without + storgoi.) Similar synonyms would include, unsociable, unloving, and inhuman. The Greek word astorgoi is found in only one other place in the Bible — Romans 1:31, which is translated as "without understanding, untrustworthy, heartless / unfeeling, and unmerciful". These two passages provide scathing descriptions of the spiritually depraved.

Romans 1:26-27 suggests that when natural affection is absent, then it is replaced by UNnatural affections, e.g. shameful lusts and perverse relations. It stands to reason that if natural affection is absent in a woman, then she's either burned herself out on the carousel, or she's hiding some skeletons in the closet. A history of enduring physical abuse might also do this.

Also, Proverbs 11:22 says a beautiful woman who lacks discretion is like a gold ring in a pig's snout. This apparently puts the onus on women to draw boundaries in regards to the display of natural affection.

The Central Importance of Natural Affection

Couples should marry because of their natural affection for each other (1 Corinthians 7:9). They should also marry in order to retain their natural affection for one another. A stable family provides the proper environment, backed by gentle authority and loving support, in which natural affection can be displayed without fear of impropriety or prejudice. Furthermore, parents' display of natural affection encourages the children to treat others with interest and respect.

OTOH, if that natural affection is gone, any pressure to persuade people to marry would be disastrous, as we learned from 2 Timothy 3:3. Women who are without natural affection are not attentive to the small gestures of love that express care and compassion. They have lost their instinctive love for their own parents, husband, and children. In the worst cases, we see the callousness that is required for promiscuity, the k!ll!ng of children (abortion), and withholding sex from a husband.

The idea of showing natural affection seems ridiculous to a conceited woman.

The Ressentimentalization of Natural Affection

These days, we only see natural affection being displayed among freewheeling youths or at parties involving alcohol. Sexual promiscuity is assumed in both contexts and this essentially poisons the well by creating a psychological association of natural affection with fornication. Outside of these settings, natural affection is considered embarrassing, unprofessional, or even “toxic” because of this association. For example, everyone (except the tabloids) looked the other way when August Alsina was feeling up Will Smith‘s wife. But Val Bure’s Dominant Manhandling Incident was considered profane because the context is between a married couple and is therefore NOT illicit.

In popular culture, the display of natural affection is often portrayed as proletariat horsing around — something only “low class” individuals engage in. Worse, it is reframed as the identifying social dynamics of cronyism and sectarianism (e.g. “Whytə Suprəm!cy”), and not seen as an indicator of the humility, openness, and trust that it is.

> “It is an easy trick of propaganda to portray all natural affections in the dark colors of prejudice.”
>
> Thomas Fleming

This is an index of how far the West has fallen.

Between the sexes, natural affection can be easily misconstrued as harassment. Men are unlikely to draw this conclusion, but insecure women with a vendetta will latch on to this. Also, younger women who didn't experience any natural affection in their families of origin are more likely to "get the feeelz" from a man who is comfortable in being kind and naturally affectionate, and then jump to the conclusion that he is coming on to her (which may or may not be true). Then all kinds of crazy ideas run through her head. HR investigations, MəT00 accusations, and police reports follow.

Another index of how far the West has fallen.

Conclusions

Christian men should exercise natural affection towards other believers within one's sphere of influence as St. Paul urged in Romans 12:10. However, the conditions in italics must be heavily emphasized. In a secular setting, men need to be especially circumspect, discerning, and self-controlled because of the high risk of being misunderstood. Considering how RP lore has identified aloof detachment as an attractive trait (to non-Christian women), it may be best if men limited their display of natural affection to other well trusted men. OTOH, displaying natural affection may be a trait that would attract a Christian woman.

Men should take notice of women displaying natural affection, especially with her family or peer group. If it is extended to a single man, it could be interpreted as an IOI, but further observation is necessary to determine if it is truly an IOI, or if she is just being friendly. It can be safely assumed that women who display natural affection (who do not also have the other indicators of depravity given in the previous post), are more healthy individuals who are more likely to come from a healthy family. Therefore, young women who are naturally emotional, open-minded, and touchy-feely are likely to make better wives, mothers, and lovers.

Related

- Σ Frame: Tracking Raw Sex Performance on a Spread Sheet (2022/1/19)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Denying sex to one's spouse is porneia. (2022/1/26)
- Σ Frame: Ressentiment, Shame, and Accusation within Progressive Identity Politics (2022/6/20)
- Σ Frame: Ressentiment within Feminism has become a Generational Curse (2022/6/24)
- Σ Frame: The Wages of Sin are Paid in Marriage (2022/10/15)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment (2023/1/30)

Vetting Social Systems

Jack · 19 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Her community / family is just as important as her character.

Readership: All;
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Social Systems

> "The vetting craze to find a woman, who is ready to pretend it works, still doesn't make the system itself work. A system that works, speaks for itself. No Muslim needs to ask a woman if she is ready to wear a hijab and play along with his system of Islamic patriarchy or if she looks for a male feminist instead. That system actually works and produces results, regardless of any women's opinion. OTOH a "Christian" husband's dream, who manages to find a "virtuous" wife ready to play along, will end the second she decides to no longer submit to it and file divorce."
>
> Dead Bedroom Dating

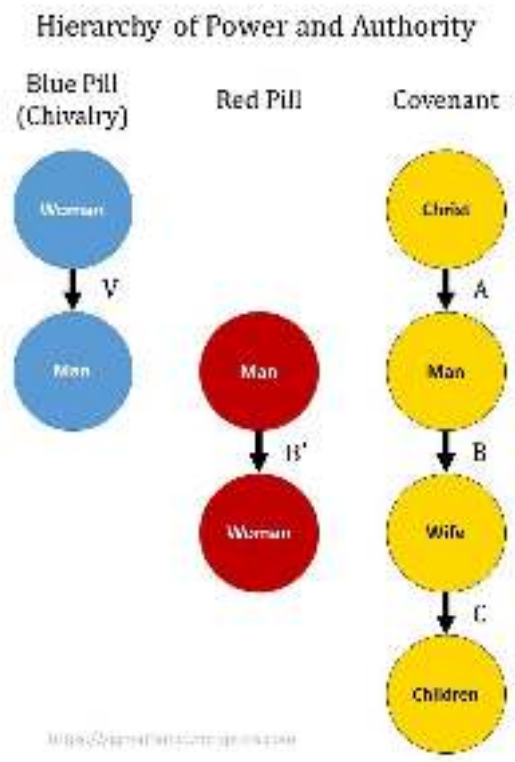
Let's examine DBD's claims in further detail.

Readers will recall the Hierarchies of Authority.



- The Blue System is characteristic of Feminism.
- The Red System denotes Secular Headship.
- Islamic Patriarchy is basically a culturally / philosophically / religiously enforced Red System.
- The Gold System is Christian Headship Authority.

Conformance

Any system depends on a majority of people playing respective roles that support the system. Having a critical mass of people conforming to such roles is what makes the system work.

- Islamic Patriarchy works because the majority of Muslims agree to this, and they are not confused about what roles they are to play.
- The Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife structure is the gold standard, and because it is no longer a social norm, it only exists in individual families that still choose to conform to those roles.
- The larger social system in the West is broken because there is too much confusion and disagreement over which system should be in effect and what men and women's roles should be. That is, men prefer Biblical / Traditional gender roles (Gold / Red Systems, respectively), while women want a revised role of being independent from men (Blue System).

We are far enough into it to see where feminism (the Blue System) will lead (i.e. female dominance and male oppression), and as more men see the eventual outcome, more men are fighting against it.

Lack of Conformance

Any system depends on conformance to specific roles that support the system. When people don't play the role they settled into, or decide to change roles, or systems (!!!), then the cracks in the system appear.

- Good Christian Girls ride the C-Carousel because they fail to see the glory of the Gold System, they desire the perks of the Blue System, and they're seduced by the Tingles of the Red System. IOW, they're confused and morally weak.
- H0es settle down because they get burned out on the Blue System and still hope to avail of the benefits of the Red System (i.e. marriage with benefits). IOW, they have a motivation to "repent".

Because women are herd creatures, we can consider that any particular woman is a product of the social system she is a member of, and will thus portray traits congruent with that system — until she doesn't. Seeing how women greatly value and are wholly dependent upon social systems, it is assumed that there must be a significant motivation for women to jump ship and change systems.

LTRs and Marriages blow up because of one of the following scenarios.

1. The wife got married thinking she could have a Blue System marriage, but the husband sticks to the Red / Gold System. After a few years, she discovers that marriage only works in a Red / Gold system (i.e. she must submit to her husband), and then she wants out. IOW, she quits because she won't submit and she can't control her husband. Example: Most churchian marriages.
2. The wife got married thinking she could have a Blue System marriage, and the husband actually plays the complementary role of a compliant Beta. After a few years, she discovers that she can only be satisfied with a Red / Gold system (i.e. Tingles, masculine dominance, etc., perhaps through an affair or herd pressure), and then she wants out. IOW, she quits because she's bored, disappointed, and dissatisfied, and she wants MOAR. Example: Will Smith and Jada Pinkett.
3. The wife got married thinking she could have a Red or Gold System marriage, but then she gets tired of the humdrum, or succumbs to temptation, or decides her husband doesn't match up to his role as her Head. Then she decides she's seen enough of the Red / Gold System and then she wants to try out (or go back to) the Blue System. Example: Nikole Mitchell.
4. Other scenarios?

Conclusions

Essentially, what all this means is that vetting must be first conducted on social systems (e.g. family, friends, church, social group, etc.), and only after then on individual women within said system to see how well adjusted and faithful she is to that system.

Another data point indicating that family and community are of crucial importance in choosing a spouse.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Train Wreck – Speculative causes, influences, and alternate outcomes (2021/2/1)
- Σ Frame: Cultural Influences (2021/5/5)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Is Patriarchy for Deplorables? (2021/5/31)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: It's all about her Ego (2021/11/12)
- Σ Frame: Women submit to their Head (2022/10/17)
- Σ Frame: Ideal Women Don't Exist (2023/9/23)
- Σ Frame: Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT "Found" by Chance (2023/10/9)

Why most Woke People are Women

Jack · 20 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Because W0k!sm is pathological.

Readership: All
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes + 1 minute video short

In this short video (posted on 2023/4/25), Prof. Jordan Peterson has a discussion with Prof. Camille Paglia, a famous feminist firebrand.

Dr. Peterson said,

> "We did a research project a year ago trying to figure out if there was such a thing as political correctness from a psychometric perspective, and we actually found two factors.

1. Being female was a predictor — the personality attributes associated with femininity — so that would be agreeableness and higher levels of negative emotion. They're also both independent predictors but so were…
2. Symptoms of Personality Disorder

Crazy eyes and fake smile.

> …which I thought was really important because part of what I see happening is that I think that women whose relationship with men has been seriously pathologized cannot distinguish between (1) male Authority and Competence and (2) male tyrranical power, like they fail to differentiate because all they see is the oppressive male and they may have had experiences. Their experiences with men might have been rough enough so that that differentiation never occurred. Because it has to occur and you have to have a lot of experience with men, and good men too, before that will occur. It seems to me that we're also increasingly dominated by a view of > masculinity that's mostly characteristic of women who have terrible personality disorders and who are unable to have healthy relationships with men."

The Takeaway

In this short excerpt, Dr. Peterson concisely puts forth the following postulates.

1. W0keness appeals to women's general herding instincts in lieu of authentic male authority. I'll add that women who do NOT submit themselves to Male Authority (i.e. Feminists in general) are lacking a healthy and stable group identity, are more insecure, and more likely to go off the deep end.
2. W0keness appeals to women's insecurities. I'll add that this sense of insecurity is magnified by a lack of a father's influence / Male Authority / Headship.
3. W0keness appeals to Women with personality disorders. I'll add that psychological pathology and left leaning politics are directly correlated.
4. W0keness appeals to women who have had negative experiences with men. I'll add that such women probably have poor-self discipline and NO respect for authority, likely because they had poor fathers / male role models during their formative years.
5. W0keness appeals to women who cannot get along with men. I'll add that Feminist teachings aggravate this.
6. Women with personality disorders are more likely to NOT be able to get along with men. I'll add that parental divorce and the resulting breakdown in social mores has increased the prevalence of this dysfunction.
7. Women cannot make the logical jump to realize that not all men are like the men they've had negative experiences with. IOW, women are solipsistic, as we say in the 'sphere.
8. The negative view of masculinity that is carried by such women is increasingly becoming the socially predominant view of men in general.

The most satisfying part of this short is how Prof. Paglia silently nods her head in agreement with all Prof. Peterson says. In doing so, Prof. Paglia shows herself to be the most reasonable and respectful Feminist of all time, if such a thing can be said.

Conclusions

In a previous post, Testosterone is MAGA! (2023/8/18), we learned that conservatism is directly correlated to testosterone levels. Not only does this explain why conservative men tend to be more masculine, it also explains why non-conservative women tend to be less feminine. In another post, we learned that testosterone is responsible for an individual fitting themselves into an established social hierarchy, thereby explaining why conservatives are more likely to conform to Traditional gender roles.

Yes! Testosterone is the Nectar of Holiness!

Putting all this together, Dr. Peterson's insights add to our understanding by informing us that W0ke femsters — women who are less conservative, less feminine, and less willing to submit to male authority — may also very well be psychotic or otherwise deeply broken individuals.

One more data point warning men who are serious about a LTR to stay away from liberal wimminz.

Related

The full video of Prof. Peterson's and Prof. Paglia's discussion can be seen here.

- The Fatherless Generation: Statistics (2011/7/4)
- Cail Corishev: Is BPD Just Women with Too Much Freedom? (2013/2/25)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Is BPD just women with too much freedom revisited (2016/5/27)
- Σ Frame: A Girl Becomes a Lady (2017/12/26)
- Σ Frame: 13 Disciplines in Dealing with Delectable Daughters (2018/1/29)
- Σ Frame: Teaching our daughters well is the early foundation of successful wife moulding (2020/2/14)
- Σ Frame: Parental Divorce Ruins Daughters' Future Marital Commitment and Confidence (2021/2/24)
- Σ Frame: Women Rely on a Man's Frame for Redemptive Introspection (2021/6/28)
- Σ Frame: She don't need no man! Except… (2021/8/30)
- Σ Frame: Women submit to their Head (2022/10/17)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Very few women can be Molded. (2022/10/27)
- Σ Frame: Men's Role in the Mess (2022/12/21)
- Σ Frame: Are Men Responsible for Women's Behavior? (2023/2/1)
- Σ Frame: Women were Created to Conform (2023/5/8)

Does the Purple Structure Exist?

Jack · 21 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

What is the Structure of Authority in your relationship (or another relationship you are observing)?

Readership: All
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Introduction

In response to Vetting Social Systems (2023/10/19), Red Pill Apostle posed a question that tests our understanding of power structures.

> "What are the points supporting and detracting from the following: The blended Blue and Red System doesn't really exist. There is always one person who is in control. The purple system is just a mirage."

What is the Purple System?

First of all, the classic definition of the Purple Pill is trying to apply Red Pill insights and praxeology to solve Blue Pill problems. It is still a Blue hierarchy, but one in which the man is Red Pill informed and usually very confused. In some cases, the Purple Pill is a transition stage, AKA Purple Haze, in which a man wakes up to Red Pill reality, but is still living in a Blue Pill structure / system. It takes some time to realize that Blue Pill problems can never be solved without completely abandoning the Blue Pill system. Men usually don't complete the transition unless there is suffering involved, and the more suffering there is, the faster the transition is.

Purple Haze is rather rare anymore, since the Red Pill went mainstream. However, the Complementarianism of today resembles the Purple Haze of 5-10 years ago. Confused, disoriented husbands wage a continual battle in their minds over every small matter concerning whether it is "right" to assume Headship, whether they really want to go through all the work of maintaining Headship, whether it is more graceful to submit to their wives' whimsies, and how to keep the peace amid all of this ruckus. Worse, they may not consciously realize all this internal conflict going on in their minds and therefore succumb to "going with the flow", and taking a "Happy Wife, Happy Life" approach, thereby folding their Headship responsibilities.

On to RPA's question.

Does a Blended Blue and Red System Really Exist?

Classic Manosphere lore unanimously states that there is only one person who effectively dominates the relationship. This is succinctly summed up in Rollo Tomassi's Cardinal Rule of Sexual Strategies.

> "For one sex's strategy to succeed the other must either be compromised or abandoned."
>
> The Rational Male: The Cardinal Rule of Sexual Strategies (2016/7/29)

Interestingly, or perhaps not so much, the power structure that existed before marriage invariably continues after marriage. After the Honeymoon phase (about 2 years), we see that…

- The Tingly Respect of a Red Structure tends to weaken or abate, because The Curse of Eve.
- The mutual allyship / "friendship" of a Blue Structure mutates into daily sh!t tests, squabbles, and power grabs.

Wives need to accept male dominance / Headship and become comfortable with it for the marriage to last over the long haul. Wives usually make their peace with God's ordained order around the 7 year mark, and many of them (mostly in Blue marriages) can't adjust and opt out of the marriage at that time, AKA The Seven Year Itch.

The reason for this is as Rollo wrote,

> "When a woman's love concept is the dominant one, that relationship will be governed by her opportunism and the quest for her hypergamic optimization. The ultimate desired end of that optimization is a conventional love hierarchy where a dominant Man is the driving, decisive member of that sexual pairing."
>
> The Rational Male: Intersexual Hierarchies –Part II (2014/5/13)

IOW, the Feminine Imperative and hypergamic satisfaction demands a dominant man.

There are other foundational factors too, including…

- Men's Burden of Performance.

- Sexual polarity — "The primal force that adheres the cosmic c0ck to the celestial snatch." ~ Chateau Heartiste
- Sexual purity and fidelity.
- Continuing to be sexually competitive after marriage.

Adding all this together, the man has to wear the pants in the house (and the wife eager to be pantless), in order for the relationship to stick and click.

How to Identify the Structure?

That said, one question readers might have at this point is, "How do I know what Structure I am in, or what Structure I am looking at in another couple?"

Rollo gives us a clue about how to identify the structure.

> "If you want to know who holds power over you, look at whom you aren't allowed to criticise — or even hint at criticism."
>
> The Rational Male: Fempowerment (2016/4/24)

Here's another clue – look at the nature of conflict between the man and woman.

A while back, I wrote about how conflict is indicative of the structure of a relationship and how this knowledge can be implemented to assume Headship.

- Σ Frame: Conflict Structure and Marital Satisfaction (2017/11/15)
- Σ Frame: Disciplined, Submissive, Happy Wives (2018/2/15)
- Σ Frame: How To Get A Better Response From Your Girl (2018/2/27)

In addition, I've written dozens more posts based on this model, too many to list here. For those interested in reading these posts, look for the pingbacks under these 3 posts.

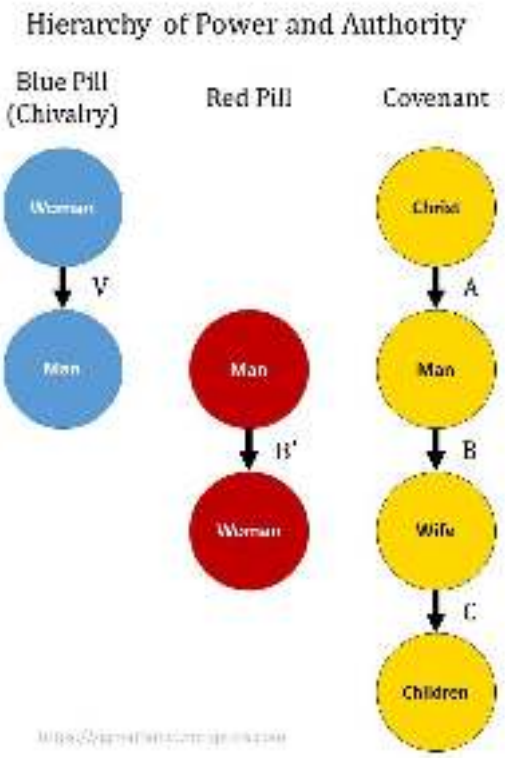
To summarize this concept in terms of identifying the structure and vetting, Dominance is shown by the one who is making the demands in the relationship, and the one who is complying to the other's demands is the sidekick.

- A wife's demands tend to come in the form of nagging, shaming, or sh!t tests. The husband responds by appeasing her, enabling her, tolerating her, or avoiding her*. This is a Blue Structure.
- A husband's demands aren't really a demand or even a request as much as it is an expectation that is reinforced by words and actions (maintaining Frame). The husband expresses an expectation of how the relationship is to be conducted with an explanation of the benefits. The wife responds to his expectations by either meeting it or by explaining why she cannot (submission, which makes it a Red Structure), or else ignoring it or making it clear in her words or actions that she will not meet it (non-submission, which makes the Structure questionable and unstable at best, or Blue at worst).

Of course, there is always some give and take, but there is always one person who does the majority of demanding with regularity, and if the other person doesn't comply, then there is tension and conflict indicating a challenge to the power structure.

 The exception is when avoidance is used as a form of Dread Game.*

Concluding Statements



The reason why the hierarchical structure of a relationship is not often easily identified is because most people are not cognitively aware of the mechanics of an intersexual structure of hierarchy and so they don't pay attention to it. (This is why I've often written about this — to increase awareness.) People run on autopilot and do not monitor each and every interaction in terms of the nature, frequency, and ratio of bids and demands, and then analyze what the structure of the relationship is (like Dr. Gottman did). They live in their own bubble and have other thoughts about the relationship or are mentally consumed with real life issues, so they seldom have any real cooperative interaction that would instantiate a clear power structure. The underlying power dynamic will only be manifested in cases depicting the most extreme imbalances of power, which we recognize as meme worthy tropes.

In summary, if a relationship doesn't expressly fit into a Red or Blue System, it does NOT mean there isn't a relationship structure nor that the relationship is Purple. It means people are too ignorant to know how to play their role properly and consistently — or perhaps they DO know, but they don't care enough to go to the trouble of getting themselves and their spouse into the habit. So it is an autopilot Blue System by default.

Readers are welcome to suggest other methods to determine the Structure of a relationship, or to debate other aspects of the Purple Pill / Structure I may have missed.

Update

DeepStrength has written a post, Delusions of blue and purple and removing the haze (2023/10/22), which describes another Purple Structure. Men who are naturally attractive, and/or naturally good with women can believe in "true love" because it's easy for them to arouse women's desire. They have never really experienced the uglier side of female nature, and their sexual charisma props up their delusion that women will love them unconditionally for who they are, so it's easy for them to coast through life without a clue. Click on the link to read more.

Related

- The Rational Male: The Lie of Equality (2017/9/22)
- The Rational Male: The Nature of Power (2018/7/17)
- Rebellious Development: Power in relationships: Always be willing to walk away (2021/3/16)

- Σ Frame: Commonalities of Successful Marriages (2021/4/24)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): What can a husband do in response to a rebellious wife? (2022/1/31)
- Σ Frame: The Captain and First Mate Analogy (2023/4/24)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Do you have a Communist Marriage? (2023/4/26)

Brides are Subject to Vetting

Jack · 23 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Bad brides don't get the honor of becoming bad wives.

Readership: All
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Author's Note: This post is based on a private email exchange I had with a reader on 2023/8/1-2.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Reading between the lines in some of the comments from some readers, I get the sense they believe they have to love their wives in an unconditional and sacrificial way. Apparently, this belief comes out of Ephesians 5:22-33, which is the basis for the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy.

In this post, I've picked out three comments to form case studies for our examination.

Case Study 1 — Sanctification and Unconditional Love

Under Men's Altruistic Idealism in an Age of Apostasy (2023/7/28), there was a discussion about the applicability and ethical appropriateness of Christian men employing Married Dread Game (see note 1), starting with Trey's comment here.

Trey wrote,

> "Even if a wife commits "sexual immorality", the higher calling of a husband, if he is to "love his wife as Christ loves the church", is to stick it out and not divorce her."

To summarize Trey's viewpoint, (a) Husbands should have unconditional love for their wives, (b) Husbands should not divorce their wives, even for sexual immorality, (c) Husbands should stay with their wives no matter what she does, and (d) Husbands should do this because this is how Christ loves the church.

This is a MISAPPLICATION of the teaching that Husbands should love their wives as Christ loves the church.

There is only ONE reference to Husbands loving their wives as Christ loves the church — Ephesians 5:25. So let's examine this in more depth.

Going off of the original Greek, Ephesians 5:25 could just as well be translated as,

> "Men, take pleasure in your women, and in the manner which Christ took pleasure in popular meetings and entrusted and transmitted Himself above them."

I'm not making this up. Click on the last link to BibleHub to see for yourself.

Reading it this way brings out the Lordship of Christ, how He loved fellowship, and how He was a socially dominant individual. This follows and confirms what is said in verses 23-24, which say, > [23] For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. [24] But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.

When we truly recognize Christ as the HEAD of the Church, it becomes apparent just how feminized and gynocentric our common understanding of this passage has become.

Even when we admit that Christ's love for the church was shown in how he "gave Himself up" at the cross for His Bride / the Church, we must also admit that the BRIDE PRICE was his salvific work on the cross which also became the OFFER of "marriage" — NOT "marriage" and NOT mere fellowship either.

When the offer of "marriage" is accepted, then the church becomes the BRIDE — NOT the WIFE, but the BRIDE. The "marriage" has not happened yet, so the church is not (yet) the WIFE of Christ. The church is now in the "engagement period" where an offer of marriage has been made and "accepted". The "marriage" will happen after the Second Coming of Christ, as per Revelation 19:7-10. However, it is clear from the Letters to the churches in Revelation 1-3 that if she is found unfaithful, then there will NOT be a "marriage", but instead, she will be put away (like Joseph wanted to put away Mary for being sexually unfaithful).

Case Study 2 — Sacrifice

Derek wrote another example in the same discussion.

> "Marriage is not a sacrament, that is, it is not regenerative or sanctifying. Ephesians 5:26 refers to the death and resurrection of Christ. It is an example of total sacrifice for the sake of love. The love we show our wives is to have the same quality: total sacrifice."

I'm sure Derek's wife loves to hear that, but Ephesians 5:26 refers to the purpose of Christ's or a husband's love — sanctification, and ultimately glorification.

Unconditional, sacrificial love to the point of death is what Christ has toward ALL — NOT just the church. Men are NOT called to be this way towards everyone, but they are encouraged to have the mindset of Christ in this manner towards their wives (as Derek does, and in this he is to be commended). They are NOT actually required to k!ll themselves to "save" their wives. If it were a requirement, then there would be no heroism in the rare case a man does so.

Our "sacrifice" in Romans 12:1 is a "living sacrifice" to God, which means putting aside our fleshly nature. It is NOT a habitual self-sacrifice to the wife, which is idolatry and pedestalization.

Consulting the original Greek again, Ephesians 5:26 could very well be translated as,

> "…in order to set them apart and regard them as special and cleanse them by the washing with water (or baptism) through the instrument of speech."

This is about Christ honoring His disciples with His presence, refreshing their spirits, encouraging and lifting them up with His speech (see note 3), inspiring the love and loyalty of His followers, and admonishing and teaching them how to live righteously. There's nothing here about sacrifice nor Christ's work on the cross, as Derek has said.

Derek also points out,

> "In Ephesians 5:26, the verb "make holy" (sanctify) and the participle "having cleansed" are in the Aorist tense, indicating Christ's one time action."

My comments on the Aorist tense are given in note 4.

As discussed in Case Study 1, the reference to husbands loving their wives as Christ loved the church is NOT about the unconditional love of Christ on the cross which brings about salvation. A husband cannot "justify" or "save" his wife by loving her unconditionally, etc. Only Christ can do that.

When the Bible says Christ loved the Church, who is the Church? The church is NOT the Husband (according to the analogy). The Church is the collective body of Jesus' disciples. It does NOT say a man should love his wife as Christ loves HIM, as Trey has said. No. The church is the betrothed, the BRIDE of Christ — but ONLY if she accepts the offer and remains faithful.

Case Study 3 — Salvation vs. Sanctification

Another from Derek.

> "We cannot wash our wives in the word of God, only God can do this. Sanctification comes from the word of God (John 17:17) by God himself completely (1 Thessalonians 5:23) upon our conversion (Ephesians 1:13). All that remains is to offer ourself as a holy sacrifice (Romans 12:1), as in Ephesians 5."

No. Husbands are commanded to wash their wives in the word of God (v 26) (see note 3). IOW, a husband must be the pastor and teacher of his wife and children.

Husbands are NOT called to love their wives in a JUSTIFYING way (which is sacrificial and unconditional and extended to all), but in a DISCIPLING and SANCTIFYING way, which is how Christ loved his disciples, i.e. the CHURCH (not everyone). In fact, that's why they're called disciples — because they submit themselves to Christ's discipline (see note 6).

Derek is confusing salvation with sanctification (see note 5). Yes, God does the supernatural work of both salvation and sanctification. But from our end, there's nothing we can do about Salvation, but there is much we can do to cultivate Sanctification. Sanctification comes from having faith in Jesus (Acts 26:18), absorbing God's truth (John 17:17), renewing the mind (Romans 12:2), avoiding sexual sin (1 Thessalonians 4:3-5) and by obeying God's commandments to be "slaves of righteousness" (Romans 6:19). A sanctified marriage requires husband and wife to love one another in these ways.

Unconditional Love

The reference to husbands loving their wives as Christ loved the church is NOT about the unconditional love of Christ on the cross which brings about salvation. A husband cannot "justify" or "save" his wife by loving her unconditionally, etc. Only Christ can do that.

When the Bible says Christ loved the church, who is the church? The church is NOT the Husband (according to the analogy). It does NOT say a man should love his wife as Christ loves HIM, as Trey has said. No. The church is the betrothed, the BRIDE of Christ — but ONLY if she accepts the offer and remains faithful.

The RELATIONSHIP between a bridegr00m and his bride is different from that between a man and his wife. So when St. Paul tells husbands to love their wives like Christ loves the church — he is NOT referring to the nature of the relationship (whether they are engaged or married). A man loving his wife as Christ loved the church is NOT about the offer of marriage (unconditional love which led to salvific work of Christ on cross).

Love through Action Depends on the Context

How does a man treat his bride during the engagement period? A man loving his wife the way Christ loves the church is about having the ATTITUDE of a bridegr00m for his bride translated into ACTIONS. It is an internal love that is expressed through love and understanding, teaching her the Word as to how their future marriage will be, and so on.

After marriage, the ACTION will translate to the man leaving his parents; nourishing (providing) and cherishing her, and loving her like he loves HIMSELF (HIMSELF is repeated in verse 33) and AS HIS OWN BODY and being one flesh with her (verses 28-31).

Actions

The passage in Ephesians 5:25 about husbands loving their wives as Christ loved the church refers to the attitude that a husband needs to have toward his wife. The attitude that Christ has towards the Church is like the attitude a BRIDEGR00M has towards his BRIDE. This should be like husbands' ATTITUDE in dealing with their wives, and this includes Christ's or a gr00m's attitude regarding idolatry and sexual faithfulness. Just like Christ will not tolerate idolatry, divorce is permitted for adultery and porneia.

St. Paul is also referring to how husbands should TREAT their wives. Bridegr00ms are called gr00ms because they gr00m the wife. But if the wife is not gr00mable (e.g. if she is egalitarian, a Feminist, is unwilling, or an alpha widow, etc.), the gr00m retains the option of opting out of the marriage. This reference is NOT about husbands NEVER divorcing their wives, putting her away, or withdrawing marital commitment (which is alluded to in Married Dread Game).

The husband is also called to hold his wife ACCOUNTABLE like CHRIST does to His BRIDE. And, as a last resort, that means a man can put her away for sexual immorality / unfaithfulness to him, or if she abandons her Head, or if she chooses not to dwell with Him as one flesh. It is permitted in this case, because according to the analogy in the passage, the church may be the BRIDE, but it has proved to be NOT worthy of becoming a wife. The LAMB will not marry or live with a church that is unfaithful. Likewise, husbands have reason to do the same if deemed absolutely necessary. A debased and defiled bride (by either interpretation) cannot very well be glorified in marriage.

When we refer to Christ loving the CHURCH, Paul was referring to a DISCIPLING kind of love that the Lord has towards the church as the BRIDE of Christ who has already accepted the offer of grace. The focus is on the RELATIONSHIP between Christ and the church, which is one of obedience, respect, and submission on the part of wife, and DISCIPLING and SANCTIFYING love on the part of husband.

Husbands are NOT called to love their wives in a JUSTIFYING way (which is sacrificial and unconditional and extended to all) but in a DISCIPLING and SANCTIFYING way, which is how Christ loves the CHURCH (not everyone).

Concluding Statements

As readers have probably figured out by now, the main points of confusion are that…

1. "The Church" is the BRIDE of Christ, NOT the WIFE of Christ (yet).
2. "The Church" is being conflated to mean individual men and husbands.
3. The issues surrounding eternal salvation are being erroneously translated into the marital relationship.

No, "The Church" means the Body of believers and how the Lord deals with them collectively, NOT individually, as a BRIDE, NOT a WIFE. Husbands are required to love their wives as they love themselves, NOT as Christ loves them.

Notes

1. Married dread game may include the threat of divorce, but to be effective, it has to appear as a real threat. It's not like the husband just ups and files out of the blue. But the stickler is that the husband has to be willing to make good on it, if that's what she chooses.
2. Because sex is not permitted during the engagement period, does the above mean that husbands and wives should not have sex? No. 1 Corinthians 7:1-5 and Ephesians 5:31 are clear that marriage is about sex.
3. The word "word" (ῥήματι, rhēmati) in verse 26 refers to speech, and does NOT refer specifically to The Word (λόγος logos), another name for Christ. (However, our rhēmati speech should contain logos Christ.)
4. Aorist is the default past form of the verb. These two verbs are also ACTIVE, and "Sanctify" is subjunctive (abstract). It could be interpreted as a "one time action" or "an action at one time". IOW, it could refer to Christ's death on the cross, or it could refer to Christ teaching in the temple. I am more willing to believe it refers to

ALL of Christ's work on Earth.

5. Some of the confusion arises from differences in theological doctrine. For example, Orthodoxy maintains that a married person is responsible for the salvation of their husband or wife. Catholicism teaches that marriage is a sacrament that contributes towards salvation and sanctification. I think an unconverged Protestant position (if there is such a thing) would be that a married person is responsible for the sanctification of their marriage. All of these positions make sense, if the context and assumptions are fully understood. The variance is in how the scriptures are applied.
6. Lest readers jump to the conclusion that "discipline" refers to corporal punishment and/or BDSM, I need to emphasize that Discipline is about maintaining order within the home. It is NOT about controlling the wife and forcing her to follow certain rules, but more about teaching and motivating her to make the right decisions.
7. Derek seems to be writing in reaction to how many pulpits have proclaimed that husbands are required to teach and discipline their wives using the Word of God (using verse 26), and that husbands are responsible for overseeing the spiritual maturity of their wives. (See note 5.)

Related

- Σ Frame: Lest we forget, Marriage was once intended to Glorify God (2019/8/8)
- Σ Frame: Washing Her Clean (2019/10/21)
- Σ Frame: The Relinquished Life (2021/3/8)
- Σ Frame: The Greatest Archetype (2021/5/21)
- Σ Frame: Towards a more complete appreciation of Sanctification (2022/1/10)
- Σ Frame: Wives reap what they sow (2022/1/12)
- Σ Frame: Repentance and Submission (2022/10/30)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Do you have a Communist Marriage? (2023/4/26)
- Σ Frame: On Choosing a Wife Wisely (2023/5/1)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): An open letter to Christian Wives (2023/5/27)

The Effect of Theology on Relationships

Jack · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Culture is theology externalized and lived out.

Readership: All;
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Author's Note: This post was submitted on 2023/10/24 by a reader who wishes to remain anonymous. Edited by Jack.
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Introduction

The reason why Jack's post, Brides are Subject to Vetting (2023/10/23), was met with confusion and received pushback is because people have different interpretations of Christ's relationship with the church, which affects our individual understanding of the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy. In other words, our understanding of the "::" part of the equation is different.

This is where the theology of the church comes in. Theology is very important because it affects TEACHING in the church which in turn affects how relationships are viewed in the church.

Henry Van Til once stated that,

> "Culture is theology externalized and lived out."

In real life we live out our theology (or whatever we believe the Bible teaches) in our marriages and how they are formed. (Those who do not are more influenced by other forces.)

Case in point: Today, the churchs' emphasis is on the RELATIONSHIP with Jesus (actually, our feeelings about our relationship with God), rather than our obedience to the HOLINESS He calls us to adhere to.

- We are NOT taught to "be transformed by the renewing of our minds" (Romans 12:2), which involves working out conflicting reasonings between our OWN notions and what is given in scripture, but instead, we are given "sensitivity training" in which we are taught to feeel (e.g. the plight of others or the "Holy Spirit", which is often falsely called discernment).
- We are NOT taught to be subject to the Lord (which is often falsely called legalism) but to be accepting and loving of ourselves instead (which often involves excusing and justifying our shortcomings instead of repenting of them).
- We are NOT taught to fear the Lord of heaven and Earth, but to embrace Jesus as our personal boyfriend.
- We are NOT taught to humble ourselves in worship, because ear tickling and entertainment are more important.

Hence the adherence to the FEELINGS of love rather than the REQUIREMENTS of love as explained in 1 Corinthians 13. As long as one has good feeelings about God, then we mistake that as being a good relationship with God. It is not the same.

The way this teaching translates into real life marriages is shown in the way wives are NOT expected to be subject to their husbands.

- We can NOT expect a wife to be taught or trained by her husband because that would be "mansplaining".
- We can NOT expect a wife to be disciplined by her husband because that would be "unloving" or "abusive".
- We can NOT expect a wife to fear her husband because that would be "oppressive".

This results in emotional and irrational relationships dominated by arrogant, narcissistic, and proud women in the church.

Again, differences in theology bears a difference in teaching, and each church denomination has its own approach to this which results in different attitudes towards marriage.

Let's go over some of the basic differences.

Arminian / Baptist / Evangelical / Methodist / Wesleyan Theology

The Arminian theology, which is the predominant view of what's left of Christian America today and is therefore the position of most Evangelical Christians, is reflected in the current state of Christian marriage.

The modern Arminian views the relationship as egalitarian or as something that the wife / church decides and she can also undecide. Here, it is gracefully assumed that the woman is already regenerated / saved, and that she is NOT flawed by original sin / The Curse of Eve / hypergamy / etc. Evidence to the contrary is either hidden or quickly explained away. Hence the harping on free will (which is a central element in this theology) extended to her right to choose.

What is not stated is that, in general, there is little emphasis on the authority, justice, and sovereignty of God, and the law of God is despised as despotic and tyrannical.

Instead of God's standards of holiness and living right, we see…

- Jesus is a boyfriend forever — not the Lamb on the throne who will come again to judge with a vengeance.
- He loves everyone, but she is special because she RESPONDS to his romancing.
- She has loving feelings for him because (and perhaps ONLY because) he unceasingly and unconditionally loves her until she loves him back.
- Rather than fear her husband / lord and glory in her role as his wife, she views him as a close friend and seeks to glorify herself and HER choice.
- She does not think that he would ever discipline her, because that would not be "loving" (in her opinion), and her lord is nothing but love.

In sum, female narcissism is encouraged; she sings of HERSELF (what she FEEELS) more than of God.

Cue in pretty much every recent Christian worship song by any male singer out there.

Individuality, Relativism, and Subjectivity are also common traits, after all it is purely subjective whether her feeelings are sufficiently satisfied to remain in a relationship.

And remember, "love" is defined by how it makes the woman feeel. She responds to His love either for her good or her bad, but either way, the results are pinned on the man's self-sacrifice and skill in making her feeel the right things. (In reality, it is more because of charisma, confidence, PSALM traits, etc., or else the man is bending over forward to accommodate her every whim, as the Christian Manosphere has concisely described as "the woman having all the authority, and the man having all the responsibility".)

How this translates in real life is shown in how the typical Arminian woman "feeels" it is acceptable to move in and out of relationships guided by her "feelings", for IF the man / lord is correct, then she will "know it in her heart" and be happy. Consequently, divorce is her free choice if her man no longer woos her enough to feel sufficiently "compatible" or "happy", just as a Christian can apostatize from grace to damnation. Also, it is not unusual to be baptized several times or to view fornication as an extended search for the true lover of her soul.

Ironically, the rational explanation of this implementation does not depend on the concept of free will that is common to Arminian theology, but instead borrows heavily from Reformed theology. That is, just as mankind is dependent on Christ's atonement, the woman is wholly dependent on the man's initiative to choose / "save" her by convincing her to remain in the marriage by coddling her feeelz. In reality, this means that the man is always in competition with her feeelings. SHE chooses her lord IF he woos her sufficiently, and she remains in covenant with him only as long as SHE desires.

Calvinist / Lutheran / Reformed Theology

The Lutheran, Reformed, and to some extent Calvinist doctrine is quite different. Jesus is more the victorious king on the throne making all His enemies His footstool (Acts 2:34-35; Hebrews 1:13; Psalm 110:1; 1 Corinthians 15:25; Hebrews 10:12-13). Here, the relationship is built on ultimate authority — not human desire — and views the covenant relationship as inviolable. The relationship is a "now and not yet" just as the kingdom is now, but not yet fully consummated. Thus, a wife is to fear her husband / lord, submit to him, and serve him as his helper who brought her out of a worse fate to a higher purpose.

The classic Reformed theology considers all humans, including women, to be born a sinner and a reprobate. A bride is chosen by the husband / lord to be in an eternal covenant relationship — not because of how awesome she is, but because the lord chose her to love. The woman responds, NOT by choosing to be in covenant, but by obeying and worshiping. He cares for her, including teaching her righteous behavior, leading her to holiness, providing for her needs, protecting her, and never breaking his covenant. She is aware that she was saved from horror to a life of daily worship. She has confidence that Christ is faithful to His covenant and she need not fear the dissolution of the relationship, but instead fears disappointing her King. This fear is shown in her seeking to glorify, honor, and respect her husband in all that she does. She learns gratitude for him, respects him and submits to him. She is saved from her desperate condition and sanctified by discipline and obedience. She finds joy in his victory and believes his love for her in all circumstances will result in her growing in holiness.

Cathodox Theology

I am not as familiar with the Orthodox or Roman Catholic view of Sacramental theology. (It appears rather mysterious and confusing to non-Cathodox believers.) Back in May and June of 2023, Jack wrote a series of posts in which he attempted to make it understandable to non-Cathodox audiences. I was not able to follow most of it, but the thing I took away from this series is that Cathodoxy heavily emphasizes and regulates conformity. In terms of the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy, the church stands between Christ and Man as a regulatory Gentile-type authority. With the Catholic church, it is "works" in alignment with the church's authority that keeps you in continuing good graces. Hence, the emphasis on sacraments.

To carry this over to how the Cathodox theology affects marriage, it is my understanding that the bride must stay in the relationship (and in the church) and constantly try to prove / purify herself to/for her husband / Lord. Then and then only is she accepted by Him. That is why they harp on the SACRAMENT of marriage.

Not sure this is a correct understanding, but that's what I got out of it. Readers who are more theologically erudite are welcome to add to this and/or correct me.

Concluding Statements

Here, I have only described how these differences in theology affect how one views marriage. But it also affects how one will respond to many other issues like abortion, divorce, h0m0sexuality, etc.

In terms of vetting, this hearkens back to what Jack wrote in Vetting Social Systems (2023/10/19). That is, women will probably adhere to the general views of marriage that are espoused by the church she attends. Here, it should be noted that some Reformed churches (e.g. Episcopalian, Presbyterian) have adopted an Arminian view towards marriage and other issues.

Sorry if the above descriptions appear to be over simplified caricatures. It is ONLY meant to be a summary of my understanding. I'm not theologically informed enough to connect the specific points of doctrine that create the paradigms of marriage described above but I do appreciate the differences and this is what I see in the respective churches.

Related

- Σ Frame: Ecumenical Translations (2023/6/18)
- Σ Frame: Sacramental Soteriology (2023/6/19)
- Σ Frame: Synopsis of Sacramental Marriage (2023/6/25)
- Σ Frame: The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)
- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)

If it talks like a Christian and walks like a Feminist, then what is it?

Jack · 28 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Integrity is paramount.

Readership: Single Christian men interested in women;
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

"Believe ALL Women"?

Ye Olde Manosphere hath said, "Watch What She DOES, NOT What She SAYS."

Even the Bible contains a few passages about the folly of taking women's words too seriously.

> Then to Adam He said, "Because you have listened to the voice of your wife, and have eaten from the tree about which I commanded you, saying, 'You shall not eat from it';
>
> Cursed is the ground because of you;
> With hard labor you shall eat from it
> All the days of your life.
>
> Genesis 3:17 (NASB)

> And Abram listened to the voice of Sarai.
>
> Genesis 16:2 (NASB)

And we all know how that turned out!

But are Christian men really in the habit of doing this with Christian women?

More to the point, are Christian men able to discern integrity in others?

Q: If it talks like a Christian and walks like a Feminist, then what is it?

Q: If it talks rubbish and walks like a Christian, then what is it?

Integrity?

Men are inclined to make the common mistake of listening to what a woman says, rather than watching what she does.

Occasionally, absent minded women will drop a truth bomb on social media. But it's what they DON'T let you know that really matters.

What really matters is her integrity — whether she is double minded and whether her mouth is where her money maker is.

Reading women can be time consuming and confusing because most women are mentally befuddled and don't really know what they believe, although they might think they do and talk like such. This is why most of women's chatter is in code. To speak honestly and plainly (without fantasy nor feminine code) is 'mansplaining'. Men have to accept the fact that 95% of women are a bundle of emotion with very little meaningful content coming through verbally, and what little there is, they are confused about it. Men need to learn to see through that and look at her fundamental spiritual constitution instead — and whether her actions line up with her words.

To give readers an example of what I'm talking about — that women say one thing and do quite the opposite — consider NovaSeeker's coverage of Nikole Mitchell, who said in so many words that her sexuality is a sacred gift to men and that it was God's will for her to be a stripper. She said her nude photoshoots made her feel holy, liberated, sacred, and sexy. A contrapositive example would be Louise Perry. She claims to be a feminist, and yet, she rejects the feminist utopian ambition. (She has a mild case of the 1,000 C0ck stare, so I assume that she's seen her fair share of the feminine viewpoint.) Another interesting persona is Dr. Camille Paglia, who has been a spearhead for feminism for decades, and yet she can have an in-depth conversation with Dr. Jordan Peterson and agree with him about most things.

All of this talk, no matter whether a woman is obedient (like some Buddhist women, or the theoretical virgin unicorn who claims to be an atheist), or disobedient (like Sharkly's "Christian" ex), doesn't give any clues as to how she'll behave in a relationship with a man.

Don't allow yourself to be fooled by your male brain's desire for logical consistency

If she says she is an atheist, or a repentant Christian, or whatever, then don't you believe it. Her words don't necessarily tell you what's happening in her heart. Her words only tell you what's going on in her conscious mind (assuming she's being honest).

Look for evidence to back up her claims. Her behavior, her attitude towards men, and any IOI's that she shows you are better indicators of what is in her heart.

The bottom line is whether she is obedient to God and to the social structure of authority in her life. So the important thing to look for is her behavior towards you (i.e. respectful submission), and her track record with the men of authority in her life (i.e. her father). Her track record with past boyfriends is a non sequitur because if she made good on those relationships, then she would not have an ex.

Exit Questions

How else can a man identify if a woman is a true believer or if she'll appreciate and respect a man's Headship?

1. Many people in good marriages have said that they had a tiny glimpse of their future together, and this vision gave them the faith to enter into marriage together. But women can lie about that too.
2. Men who are skilled in discerning integrity should try to teach other men how to do the same. (Oscar makes the impression of a man who is good at this.)
3. Readers are welcome to offer other ideas.

Answers to Riddles

Q: If it talks like a Christian and walks like a Feminist, then what is it?
A: A feminist who takes her body to church on Sunday.

Q: If it talks rubbish and walks like a Christian, then what is it?
A: A woman raised in a good home who has never heard the gospel.

Related

- Σ Frame: Time Frames for various forms of sexual bonding and maturation (2019/2/5)
- Σ Frame: The Christian Marriage Dilemma (2021/2/26)
- Σ Frame: Not Trusting women is Deep Inner Game (2021/12/15)
- Σ Frame: Women submit to their Head (2022/10/17)

- Σ Frame: The Mystery of Glorifying a Provision for the Flesh (2023/6/20)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Sex = Marriage vs. Church/State Sanctioned Marriage (2023/6/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Dating and Relationships: Assessing a woman's ability to be Helpers or Harmers (2023/10/14)

The Importance of Family and Community

Oscar · 29 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The foundational elements of relationship formation.

Targeted Readership: All; Men;
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Author's Note: This post was requested by Jack. The topic was inspired by an email exchange between Red Pill Apostle, Thedeti, Oscar, Caterpillar345, and Jack on 2023/8/29.
Length: 2,500 words
Reading Time: 14 minutes

Introduction

If you are an American Millennial or younger, you've probably never seen an actual community. Most people don't even know their neighbors anymore. If you're Gen-X or older, odds are that you at least got a glimpse of what American communities used to be like. One of the effects of this phenomenon is that most Americans have no idea why communities are important at all. Worse still, because the American family has been largely destroyed, most Americans don't know the importance of family either.

None of this is a criticism. Younger Americans have a vague feeling that something good — even great — was stolen from them, but they don't know what it is, or how, or why it was stolen, or by whom. Those questions are outside the scope of this article, but I assure the reader that if you've found yourself asking those questions, you're onto something.

In our recent review of Vetting, it has become apparent that the involvement of family and community is an important part of choosing a mate. In this article, I'll attempt to explain the importance of family and community, especially to Christian men, and especially as it relates to vetting.

Community

First, let's define community.

Community: A unified body of individuals: such as,

- The people with common interests living in a particular area.
- A group of people with a common characteristic or interest living together within a larger society.
- A body of persons of common and especially professional interests scattered through a larger society.
- A body of persons or nations having a common history or common social, economic, and political interests.
- A group linked by a common policy.

Note that the word 'common' appears in every group definition — common characteristic, common interest, common history, etc. That means people in a community are like minded and have a sense of unity and/or purpose.

Here, we'll focus on groups of people with the common characteristic or interest known as faith in Jesus Christ.

Obedience

Being a contributing, card-carrying member of a community requires an investment — of time and energy especially, but also money and resources. This is more than just showing up on Sunday and putting some money in the plate. It's about putting your whole heart into the enterprise such that you make a respectable place for yourself in the community — NOT just virtue signaling.

This is where obedience to God's Word comes into play.

> [35] Then one of them, a lawyer, asked Him a question, testing Him, and saying, [36] "Teacher, which is the great commandment in the law?"
>
> [37] Jesus said to him, "'You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your mind.' [38] This is the first and great commandment. [39] And the second is like it: 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself.' [40] On these two commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets."

> Matthew 22:35-40 (NKJV)

It's kind of difficult to love your neighbor if you have no neighbors, or if you don't know them, or if you aren't willing to take the time and effort to connect with others in the communities you are a part of.

Love Your Neighbor

For some bizarre reason, most people today — including Christians — think Jesus told us to "love everyone", but He didn't. He said, "love your neighbor as yourself". [See Jack's Notes below.]

Time for another definition.

Neighbor: πλησίον (plēsion): Near, nearby, a neighbor. Neuter of a derivative of pelas; close by; as noun, a neighbor, i.e. Fellow.

Normally, the people who are most "close by" to you are your family. If you're married, that means your wife and children — in that order. Your love radiates outward from there in concentric circles. Why is that important? Because love requires action and resources, especially time. Everyone has limited resources, so trying to love everyone results in loving no one. It also results in woke virtue signaling. It's easy to "love" "oppressed" people in the abstract by holding up a stupid sign, or posting a black square on your Instagram profile. It's much harder to love your annoying brother-in-law, or the lady whose cat keeps pooping in your garden. God calls us to take the difficult path (Matthew 7:13-14).

Love Gets Its Hands Dirty

Another Pharisee asked Jesus, "Who is my neighbor?" Jesus replied by telling the Parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:25-37). In that parable, the Samaritan man cared for the Jewish man who'd been beaten and robbed because he happened to be nearest him, thereby fulfilling two commandments — love your neighbor as yourself, and love the stranger as yourself (Leviticus 19:34). In so doing, he taught us another lesson:

Family and Community give us opportunities to get our hands dirty in love, and for others to do the same for us in hard times.

> A friend loves at all times, And a brother is born for adversity.
>
> Proverbs 17:17 (NKJV)

> [9] Two are better than one,
> Because they have a good reward for their labor.
> [10] For if they fall, one will lift up his companion.
> But woe to him who is alone when he falls,
> For he has no one to help him up.
> [11] Again, if two lie down together, they will keep warm;
> But how can one be warm alone?
> [12] Though one may be overpowered by another, two can withstand him.
> And a threefold cord is not quickly broken.
>
> Ecclesiastes 4:9-12 (NKJV)

> Bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.
>
> Galatians 6:2 (NKJV)

Family and Community Provide a Venue for Our Sanctification

In so doing, family and community create the social dynamics that contribute towards our belongingness, our contentment, our security, our spiritual growth, and our maturity. In a word, our sanctification.

> Faithful are the wounds of a friend, But the kisses of an enemy are deceitful.
>
> Proverbs 27:6 (NKJV)

> As iron sharpens iron, So a man sharpens the countenance of his friend.
>
> Proverbs 27:17 (NKJV)

Iron sharpens iron by scraping the rough and/or rusty surfaces off the edge. That sounds unpleasant when applied to humans, but it's necessary for sinners, and it can only happen in community.

How does all of this apply to Relationships?

First, there's the obvious. Commonalities place lots of young men and women in close proximity to each other. But the shared commonalities are central to the nature of the relationship that is formed.

- If a man and woman meet in a bar, what do you think they would have in common? Carousing, drinking, and maybe hookups — NOT a good foundation for an LTR.
- As we all know, online dating is mostly a fool's errand, especially for men. What do they have in common? They're all desperate for attention, love, sex, etc. and they probably have no other community to turn to for these things. Again, NOT a good foundation for an LTR.
- Even if a man and woman meet in church, what do you think they would have in common? Arminianism or Calvinism? Churchianity? Classism? Complementarianism? Egalitarianism? A mental assent to the same religion? All of these mean nothing at all in terms of relationship quality, and some may even be detrimental. It is a shared faith that matters — NOT religious doctrine. (Yes, there is a difference.)

Where else is a young man supposed to meet marriageable women?

In his community, of course.

Communities make Men more Attractive.

No, really. It's true.

You may have noticed that young men who have trouble attracting women don't just have trouble attracting women. They usually have trouble making friends in general. And no, online friends don't count.

> A man who has friends must himself be friendly, But there is a friend who sticks closer than a brother.
>
> Proverbs 18:24 (NKJV)

People mostly learn social skills through imitation. That process starts when we're babies learning social cues from our families. However, not everyone learns good social skills from their family, and although they're much harder to learn later in life, communities give men opportunities to sharpen their social skills and bone up on their faith and discernment.

Communities provide men opportunities to earn respect from other men, and women are attracted to men that other men respect. Tingles follow respect.

Communities also provide a structure men can climb to earn status, and women are attracted to men with status, or at least the potential to earn it.

Communities Honor Women and cause them to become more Relevant.

Families and communities also shape women, not just men. As Jack noted, women are created to conform, and women tend to conform to their families and communities even more than men do. It's no wonder then that St. Paul and St. Peter spent so much ink instructing church communities on how they should shape young women.

> [1] But as for you, speak the things which are proper for sound doctrine: [2] that the older men be sober, reverent, temperate, sound in faith, in love, in patience; [3] the older women likewise, that they be reverent in behavior, not slanderers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things — [4] that they admonish the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, [5] to be discreet, chaste, homemakers, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God may not be blasphemed.
>
> Titus 2:1-5 (NKJV)

Because God designed us, following His Word is like following the manufacturer's specifications. God's Word instructs young women to be homemakers. The Greek word for 'homemaker' used in Titus 2:5 is οἰκουργούς (oikourgous), which is a compound of "oikos" (household) and "ergon" (work, or employment).

Because women have wombs and breasts, it's natural for them to be their children's primary caregivers, especially from the womb to toddler age. It's normal (or at least it used to be) for a woman to bear a child every two years, so if she has four children, at one point she'll have a 6-year-old, a 4-year-old, a 2-year-old, and a newborn. Unless you've been in that situation yourself, you have no idea just how chaotic that can be, and how much work it takes. This call to purpose and responsibility is why the Apostle Paul says,

> Nevertheless she will be saved in childbearing if they continue in faith, love, and holiness, with self-control.
>
> 1st Timothy 2:15 (NKJV)

Because of all this, children are primarily shaped by their mothers, and a home is primarily shaped by the wife (c.f. Briffault's Law). We honor good mothers and wives for all these reasons.

Vetting Requires a Community

Furthermore, because we know that a person's moral and social character is mostly set in childhood, if you want to see your possible future with a woman, look at her family.

How does she treat her father? How does her mother treat her father? How does she get along with her siblings, especially her brothers? Women who have good relationships with their fathers and brothers tend to like and respect men in general. That difference is observable in a community. How does she behave around men in general?

But, she and her family could fake it, right?

Not for long. People do not consistently behave in ways that are inconsistent with their character. They can fake it for a while, but eventually reality asserts itself.

Epilogue

Jack asked me to write this article because he came from a broken family and felt unqualified to write about this topic. I'm honored by his request (and his humility in asking me), but this article barely scratches the surface. A wiser, more knowledgeable, more skilled writer than I could write entire books on this subject.

We can't blame our lack of community on individualism. Americans used to have vibrant communities with churches, charitable organizations, social clubs, and professional organizations galore. One major difference between individualistic cultures and collectivist cultures is that in individualistic cultures communities are voluntary, whereas in collectivist cultures communities are mandatory.

Community is more than just attending the same church, or living in the same neighborhood, although those things help. Community means being involved in each other's lives.

God never intended for us to live alone (Genesis 2:18). He designed us to live in Community with Him and each other.

Think about it.

- The most basic Christian sacrament, the one we participate in the most, is called communion.
- Go back and read the Scriptures above. How could people accomplish any of that without being involved in each other's lives?
- The result of the lack of family and community in modern American culture is increased loneliness, depression, anxiety, mental illness in general, and just plain unhappiness.

The solution is to follow the manufacturer's specifications and join a Christian community. If a Christian man wasn't born into a Christian community, it's up to him to either find one and join it, or build one himself.

Or, don't. It's your choice.

Which way, Western man?

Jack's Notes

As a comparison to Matthew 22:39 in which Jesus said, "You shall love your neighbor as yourself", St. Paul tells husbands to "love his own wife as himself", and "he who loves his wife loves himself" (Ephesians 5:28-33). It does NOT say a man should love his wife as Christ loves HIM. Likewise, we cannot love 'everyone' the way Christ loves us.

We see the Genuine Authority structure at work in both cases.

In the Genuine Authority paradigm, the person who is able to love and care for others has more spiritual authority because others are depending on him to fulfill their needs, NOT because he does whatever they want him to do, according to the Gentile Authority paradigm. Providing for the needs of others requires one to have a domain of authority, moral agency, and a sphere of influence — all markers of personal and spiritual maturity.

In the Genuine Authority structure, a man is only responsible for those within his domain of authority — those who have their needs fulfilled by him, whether it be physical needs, or emotional needs, or spiritual needs, or what not — those who continually depend on receiving love and care from him, those who look up to him, those who are inspired by him, those who are taught by him, those who are shepherded by him. This is NOT a one-stint act of altruism nor is it being a Nice Guy™.

This Genuine Authority could be extended to those within his community, as this provides a venue in which he can be recognized as a capable and valuable person within the community, and thereby honored and respected as such.

A community sets the social stage in which a woman can give a man NATURAL IOIs (as opposed to IOCs or seductive come on's), which signals to him that he has Genuine Authority over her in the area of granting her various relational needs, including sexual needs.

Many sincere thanks to Oscar for writing this article.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Cultural Contrast between the West and Far Eastern Asia (2015/7/9)
- Σ Frame: They shall be saved through child bearing. (2019/5/9)

- Σ Frame: Cultural Influences (2021/5/5)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame: The 13 Harbingers of Masculine Doom (2022/9/7)
- Σ Frame: Women submit to their Head (2022/10/17)
- Σ Frame: Church shouldn't be an Elite Social Club for the Married (2023/6/2)
- Σ Frame: The Pursuit of Happyness (2023/7/3)
- Σ Frame: Finding a Good Church? (2023/9/29)
- Σ Frame: Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT "Found" by Chance (2023/10/9)
- Σ Frame: Vetting Social Systems (2023/10/19)

Summary of IOIs and Vetting

Jack · 30 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Vetting still has relevancy, but for a different purpose.

Readership: All
Theme: IOIs and Vetting
Length: 2,300 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes

List of Posts

Here's a list of all the posts in this 2 month long theme. This theme has attracted 6 responses from Christianity and Masculinity and his posts are included in the list. Thanks goes to the anonymous contributor and to Oscar for writing 3 and 2 posts for this theme, respectively.

1. Σ Frame: The History and Current Value of Vetting (2023/9/2)
2. Σ Frame: Vetting Flags (2023/9/4)
3. Christianity and Masculinity: Misconception about college educated women and divorce Part 1 (2023/9/5)
4. Σ Frame: Natural Selection Dynamics leading to the LTR / MMP Breakdown (2023/9/6)
5. Σ Frame: A Cross-Sectional Study of Situational IOIs (2023/9/8)
6. Σ Frame: Are College educated women less likely to divorce? (2023/9/9)
7. Christianity and Masculinity: Misconception about college educated women and divorce Part 2 (2023/9/9)
8. Σ Frame: More Education, Less Marriage (2023/9/10)
9. Σ Frame: Is Education now more desirable than Beauty and Youth? (2023/9/11)
10. Christianity and Masculinity: Churchianity's Red Pill Equivalents (2023/9/11)
11. Σ Frame (Anonymous): A Christian Woman's View of Submission (2023/9/13)
12. Σ Frame: Are Working Women Less Likely to Divorce? (2023/9/14)
13. Σ Frame: Slut Eye (2023/9/15)
14. Σ Frame: The Green Line Test (2023/9/17)
15. Σ Frame: Boss + Female Employee = Steamy Hot Chemistry (2023/9/18)
16. Σ Frame: Revisiting Val Bure's Dominant Manhandling Incident (2023/9/19)
17. Σ Frame: 11 Tips to Flush Out Flakes and Ghosts (2023/9/20)
18. Σ Frame (Oscar): You Can't Vet This (2023/9/21)
19. Σ Frame: Who's your sponsor? (2023/9/22)
20. Σ Frame: Ideal Women Don't Exist (2023/9/23)
21. Σ Frame: Some women just can't live without a man (2023/9/25)
22. Σ Frame: The Applied ¡ScIeNcE! of IOIs cannot be independently confirmed (2023/9/26)
23. Σ Frame: Rizz (2023/9/28)
24. Σ Frame: The Attraction of Glorification (2023/9/30)
25. Christianity and Masculinity: Attraction and glorification (2023/10/1)
26. Σ Frame: Is Sex a Necessary part of Vetting? (2023/10/2)
27. Σ Frame: The Ever Present Fear of a Dead Bedroom (2023/10/3)
28. Σ Frame: The 1,000 C0ck Stare (2023/10/5)
29. Σ Frame: Photo Comparison: Lively Affect vs. S1ut Eye vs. 1,000 C0ck Stare (2023/10/7)

30. Σ Frame: Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT "Found" by Chance (2023/10/9)
31. Σ Frame: Attachment Styles (2023/10/11)
32. Σ Frame: Identifying Attachment Style is the New Game (2023/10/12)
33. Σ Frame: Attachment Style and Game (2023/10/13)
34. Christianity and Masculinity: Dating and Relationships: Assessing a woman's ability to be Helpers or Harmers (2023/10/14)
35. Σ Frame: Self-Selection and Adverse Selection (2023/10/16)
36. Σ Frame: 2 Timothy 3:1-5 on Vetting (2023/10/17)
37. Σ Frame: Natural Affection (2023/10/18)
38. Σ Frame: Vetting Social Systems (2023/10/19)
39. Σ Frame: Why most Woke People are Women (2023/10/20)
40. Σ Frame: Does the Purple Structure Exist? (2023/10/21)
41. Christianity and Masculinity: Delusions of blue and purple and removing the haze (2023/10/22)
42. Σ Frame (Anonymous): Brides are Subject to Vetting (2023/10/23)
43. Σ Frame (Anonymous): The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)
44. Σ Frame: If it talks like a Christian and walks like a Feminist, then what is it? (2023/10/28)
45. Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community (2023/10/29)

Also, Deep Strength has written volumes on vetting a potential wife and specific checkpoints to be aware of. Some noteworthy posts of his on this topic are listed under Related below. Readers are encouraged to go check out his place if you want more.

Secular Vetting

When I set forth the theme of IOIs and Vetting, it was a foregone conclusion that vetting in a debased market has little benefit, and that the Western market is debased. Dead Bedroom Dating concisely summed up why secular vetting is tenuous.

> "…the whole discussion about selection and vetting is about male decision power that simply isn't there. It's about pretending that something in the West happens on men's terms, while everything is happening on women's terms."

In this context (vetting in a debased market), the quality of the relationship is all that really matters, because little more can be expected.

Vetting via Test Drive

Thedeti has stated that a man should expect / demand sex after 2 dates, and then sort through things afterwards. Of course, this is a "natural" mating tactic, not a Christian one. This only has benefits in a debased market, i.e. if the woman is NOT a Christian. Furthermore, a man should only pursue this option if he too is NOT a Christian. The problem with this is that it shoos away chaste Christian women. If a man chooses to pursue this avenue, then at best, he can expect to have a rocky relationship with a worldly woman.

Unfortunately, the mating markets in many churches are just as debased as the culture. YMMV.

The larger and more urgent importance of vetting within a debased / secular market is in figuring out which women are potential #MəT00 w!tches in waiting. If a man takes deti's 2 date tick, then he'd better be d@mn sure she's NOT one of those.

Vetting via Cohabitation

Dead Bedroom Dating has endorsed cohabitation as the only sure way to know what it is like to live with a woman. This would also be a "natural" / non-Christian approach, simply because it's unrealistic to expect that a man and a woman who are strongly attracted to each other can shack up (even with intentions to marry if all goes well), but also NOT have intimate relations. I suppose it would be possible if they don't have any libido or they aren't strongly attracted to each other, but this is more or less a necessary precursor for marriage. Moreover, what DBD describes sounds very much like Running the Gauntlet combined with Playing House, and with a mutually agreed expectation of marriage between two people who are too doubtful and hesitant to make that step. We have already found some problems with this approach.

For those men who perceive present day legal marriage as a trap, or who live in states unconducive to Christian marriage, and deduce that this is the best approach for them, I would recommend that you treat this as being a common-law marriage (i.e. marriage as it was before 1563), because you have to be "all in" for it to work out well. That also means you have to involve your families and establish the terms and conditions of the marriage before moving in together. It also means "breaking up if things don't work out" is NOT an option remaining on the table. If the latter is even mentioned, then the relationship is probably tenuous at best.

But this isn't really what DBD is saying.

Christian Vetting

Family and Community

This theme has shown that the interested involvement of family and community are critical elements of successful pairings. Vetting really only has value when the mating market is within a Christian or other small community of decent people in which daughters have been taught Christian virtues. In this context, the primary purpose of vetting is to determine which chicks truly adhere to those values, and which ones are just faking it.

Finding such a community with a viable mating market may pose quite a challenge. It is an additional challenge for men to figure out which women are potential relationship material.

In the Application of Vetting

It has been established that a girl's relationship with her family, especially how she interacts with her father (and brothers, if any) behind closed doors that is indicative of whether she'll respect her husband. However, Families can and do put on a "front" for public consumption whether it's in church or at the shopping mall. Thus, a young man can invest a lot of time in observing and getting to know her family, and yet, he will never get a clue on what it would be like to be married to her. He'll only know how well her family can put up a show for him, even after spending much time with her and her family. Perhaps the best way to get a true glimpse of what it's like to live with her is to talk it over privately with her father, and ask him what it's like to deal with her. Is she compliant and sweet, or is she headstrong and self-centered? If he avoids the question, him-haws, spouts feminist boilerplate, or gives anything less than a satisfactory answer, then it remains in doubt. While he's at it, he should also ask her father how he gets along with her mother, knowing that she'll probably mimic her mother's behaviors.

On Spiritual Disposition

Men should take notice of women displaying compassion / kindness / natural affection, especially with her family or peer group, as this is an indicator of emotional and spiritual vitality.

On Education

A woman with a higher education offers a mixed bag of pros and cons that requires more diligence in vetting. Educated women are more likely to stay married (according to the statistics), and yet, they are also more likely to divorce (because of her increased opportunities for independence).

Key Determining Factors

Here are the key determining factors for Christian men vetting a potential wife.

1. Whether it is a relationship having the Headship, Tingly Respect, or Peaceful Unity structure.
2. Whether she is trustworthy, such that the relationship is characterized by Heart Trust.
3. Whether she has developed sufficient agency / spiritual maturity to make responsible decisions.
4. Whether you share meaningful faith / goals / purposes / values / etc.
5. Whether she is comfortable in seeing herself as a companion and helper to a man and makes diligent efforts to fulfill this role. [Examples]
6. Whether she has realistic / reasonable expectations for marriage.
7. Whether she has honesty and integrity, i.e. her words correspond with her moral actions.
8. Whether she exercises personal boundaries. [Example]
9. Whether she has a good relationship with her father.
10. Whether she is teachable.
11. Whether she is modest (1 Timothy 2:9-15; Ecclesiasticus 26).
12. Whether she is submissive, especially to her father's authority.
13. Whether she is respectful to men (i.e. her father and other male family members), and to authority in general.
14. Whether she displays natural IOIs. [Examples.]
15. Whether she is naturally affectionate, e.g. compassionate, good willed, kindhearted, etc.
16. Whether she is sexually pure, i.e. a virgin.
17. Gestalt / God's blessing on the relationship.

Some but not all of these qualities are encapsulated in FAST — Faithful, Available, Saved / Submissive, Teachable.

Readers are encouraged to add anything I have missed.

Philosophical Fruits

A new maxim.

Σ Frame Maxim 35 (Jack): Women want and need to be viscerally owned by a man. It makes them feel loved and secure.
Corollary A to Maxim 35 (Proverbs 5:18-19): Women breathe better with a little thoracic constriction, e.g. firm hugs, arm over her shoulder or around her neck, squeezing boobage, etc.
Corollary B to Maxim 35: Women LOVE it when you grab their tits in public. They'll breathe sharply, their eyes get big, and their jaw drops open, and then they're wanting you to do it more often, sometimes grabbing your hand and placing it on their breasts. Why? It's humbling.
Caution: Maxim 35 is only to be practiced with women within your domain of sexual authority, i.e. serious girlfriends and wives. Otherwise is sexual h@r@ssment.

A new Axiom.

Σ Frame Axiom 34 (Oscar, RPA, Feeriker, Jack): Many of the uglier aspects of Feminism, hypergamy, and The Curse of Eve are expressions of female covetousness. For example…

- Lust is the sexual form of covetousness.
- Adultery often grows out of covetousness.
- Mate poaching is often motivated by covetousness.
- The RP concept of "pre-selection" is founded on covetousness.
- Envy, and the criticism and drama it creates, is pure, naked, ugly covetousness.
- Gaslighting and Psychological projection arise from a mindset of covetousness.
- Feminism is wholly based on the sinful pride and covetousness of broken and/or low SMV women.
- Womens' / wives' grasping for power and control over men / husbands (i.e The Curse of Eve) is an expression of women coveting mens' autonomy, authority, and power.
- Many implications of the Feminine Imperative (AKA, The Gynocracy, The Matrix) are presumably vain attempts to dispose of female covetousness by satisfying urgent desires.

Some additions to Σ Frame Axiom 7.

Σ Frame Axiom 7 (Jack): The natural interaction defines the relationship structure according to which model it fits best, not what we think it is or hope for it to be.
Corollary to Axiom 7 (Rollo): Rollo's axiom, "The medium is the message" is a practical praxeology that correlates with Σ Frame Axiom 7; e.g. if a woman flakes or ghosts you — that is the message. If the conversation falls off before the first date happened — that is the message.

I toyed around with Attachment Theory and Personality types hoping to find some insights about vetting. I didn't get much out of this about vetting, but I did learn some things about how attraction works and why some relationships just click. I put these gleanings into the "ideas for future posts" bin.

Closing Statements

I sense that the tables are beginning to turn in men's favor, and that our coverage of vetting will take on a new significance in the coming years.

In conclusion to this month's theme of IOIs and Vetting, we find that our earlier conclusions stand firm, that is, "Find a woman who is really crazy about you, who is consistently displaying IOI's", and interpreting IOIs and non-verbal communication are valuable in both secular and Christian markets. There have also been some fantastic observations and conclusions that came out of this month's topic of IOIs and Vetting, giving us a few extra takeaways.

As a final word on all of this Vetting stuff, reducing risk to a minimum is no guarantee. If we rely primarily on comparative risk assessments, probabilities, and statistics for vetting, we're bound to miss God's best for our lives. To have a godly successful marriage, faith and prayer should be central to the decision making progress. The value of the statistics is that it reveals exactly how much grace we hope to avail of.

Proficiency Exam

There are three women in Figure 1. Two are s1uts. One is a super-s1ut. Can you pick them out?

Figure 1.

Answers to Exam Questions

Figure 1: Left to right. Non-s1ut. Super s1ut with mild s1ut eye and 1,000 C stare. Typical s1ut.

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: Actionable steps to finding a wife (2016/6/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Review of vetting, virgins and new info on virginity pledges (2018/1/7)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Jesus on vetting for marriage and lessons (2018/12/9)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Understanding what vetting does and does not do (2019/9/25)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Vetting is for identifying red flags from past behavior; future behavior needs Biblical solutions (2021/3/2)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Anticipating and influencing future behavior (2021/3/16)
- Σ Frame: Commonalities of Successful Marriages (2021/4/14)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Plans of action on attractive traits for men looking for a wife for a godly marriage (2021/7/8)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Expectations and boundaries (2022/10/23)
- Σ Frame: Men's Role in the Mess (2022/12/21)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): 16 Bible Passages for Teaching Wives and Daughters about Male-Female Roles and Marriage (2023/5/15)

The ¡ScIeNcE! of Cat Ladies

Jack · 31 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Catty cougars have a special relationship with furry felines.

Readership: All
Theme: Special post for Halloween.
Reader's Note: This satirical post is based on true ¡ScIeNcE! and contains euphemisms, puns, and metaphors.
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Wimminz Lurrrve Catz!

While women have plenty of male admirers, several ¡ScIeNtIfIc! studies have revealed that women tend to interact with their cats more, and with more enthusiasm, than men do.

One ¡ScIeNtIfIc! research article in the Journal of Psychosocial Nursing and Mental Health Services [1] confirms what we've known all along.

> "Significantly more women who were married / partnered had dogs, whereas more single women had cats. Significantly more women who lived alone had cats, whereas more women who lived with someone had dogs. Women with companion dogs had significantly lower depressed mood and higher levels of general health, vitality, and total well-being than those with cats. … loneliness was somewhat greater among women with cats… More women living in 55-and-older communities had cats, whereas more women living in private homes had dogs."

Another paper in the journal Behavioural Processes [2] studied 40 owner-cat dyads and identified 5 types of cat personalities. The researchers concluded…

- Female owners interacted with their cats much more than male owners.
- Extroverted owners interacted with their cats more often.
- "Active" cat personalities interacted with their owners less often, but interactions were more complex.

- Older cats had less complex interactions with their owners.
- Cats had more complex interactions with conscientious owners.
- Owners who proved to be a trustworthy and dependable social companion (e.g. highly conscientious owners in particular), were more successful in motivating the cat to be trustful, devoted, and open to contact.
- Cats had fewer interactions with neurotic owners.
- Owners scoring high in neuroticism regarded their cat as an asset in the context of social support. They sought more contact with their cats, took the initiative to interact with their cats more frequently, and spent more time with them. This asymmetric social interest appears to have prompted the cats to be less active contact seekers themselves.
- The duration of interaction between a woman and her cat was determined by which member of the dyad initiated the interaction. The higher the proportion of all successful intents to interact that were due to the cat, the longer was the duration of interactions.
- Owners who were more successful in initiating interactions with the cat had a shorter total interaction time with the cat.
- Cats were more compliant to the owners' wishes when owners were more compliant with the cat's wishes.
- Human-to-Cat interactions are very similar to Human-to-Human interactions, according to their respective personality characteristics.

Interestingly, a previous study [3] of human-dog dyads by the same authors found that when the owner is high in neuroticism and considers the dog to be a social supporter, their dogs will approach their owner more often and will stay in proximity to the owner for a longer time. Seeing how cats display the opposite behavior, it would seem like neurotic women should prefer dogs. But in fact, judging by the greater incidence of cats among single women, it appears that neurotic women prefer to form emotional bonds with a pet that avoids them. Perhaps this is exactly why they are single.

Neuroticism

In a follow up book that summarizes their work on this subject [4], the authors confirm that neuroticism is associated with certain codependent behaviors.

> "owners high in Neuroticism turn to their cats mainly as emotional social supporters"

Cat owners high in neuroticism are particularly needy of close social contact with their cats, and this behavior shapes cats to be negotiating rather than accepting.

> "…the higher the owner in Neuroticism, the more trusting the cat appeared when being picked up by the owner. Hence, it seems that such owners (in contrast to more extravert–agreeable–conscientious owners) particularly conform to our expectation that mutual social compliance would account for close and trusting relationships with their cat."

So cats are more "trusting" with neurotic owners, but they also decrease the frequency and length of interactions with them (as found in study [2]). Hmmm… IOW, neurotic women dominate a negotiative relationship with their pets, just as they do with their men. Cats must also be negotiative — they learn to be passive in order to make the interaction tolerable and to avert a worse fate.

> "The higher the owner's score in Neuroticism, the lower was the number of [social interactive] patterns found. Hence, despite the fact that such owners spend a lot of effort in socialising with their cats, there is not much standard temporal structure to it. This is interesting, because the amount of internal behavioural structure and synchrony generally seems a fair predictor of dyadic operationality, which is supported by the fact that the higher owners are in Neuroticism the more anxious are their cats."

There it is! Cats are not happy with needy, neurotic women.

So in summary,

- Conscientious, dependable, and trustworthy owners have warmer and closer relationships with their pets, just as they do with people.
- Neediness scares cats away, just as it does people.
- Neurotic women who need social interaction prefer a pet that avoids them (!!!).
- Neurotic women prefer a negotiative relationship with their cats, just as they do with men.

The question remains… Why, then, do women prefer cats?

Females Bond with Felines

It gets more interesting.

Jennifer Viegas wrote an article for NBC News that covered Wedl et al.'s paper [2], Science of Cat Ladies? Felines bond with females, study shows (2011/2/24) [5]. A few years later, as the Cat Lady phenomenon grew to manginanimous proportions, this topic became considerably anti-PC. Predictably, the first part of the title, "Science of Cat Ladies?", was removed in October 2020, and the entire article was deleted in 2022.

Viegas wrote,

> "Cats attach to humans, and particularly women, as social partners, and it's not just for the sake of obtaining food…"

As covered above, women also attach to cats as social partners. The purpose is to distract themselves from their loneliness.

> "The study is the first to show in detail that the dynamics underlying cat-human relationships are nearly identical to human-only bonds, with cats sometimes even becoming a furry "child" in nurturing homes."

To fulfill a female's deep longing for purpose and nurturement, a cat is the ideal replacement for a lost relationship, be it the Alpha male who got away, or his aborted spawn. A cat fills this role by being a captive and dependent emotional object who behaves in much the same way as a self-centered Alpha or an infant. Playing with cats is always preferable over coming to God.

> "Food is often used as a token of affection, and the ways that cats and humans relate to food are similar in nature to the interactions seen between the human caregiver and the pre-verbal infant," co-author Jon Day, a Waltham Centre for Pet Nutrition researcher, told Discovery News. "Both cat and human infant are, at least in part, in control of when and what they are fed!"

Seems about right. Women can't be content unless there is a war for "control".

Also, like gluttony, a cute furry cat will keep those feelings of guilt at bay, and prevent her from coming to terms with her relational failures. Feeding cats is always preferable to feeding the soul.

So how does this work?

> "The researchers determined that cats and their owners strongly influenced each other, such that they were each often controlling the other's behaviors. Extroverted women with young, active cats enjoyed the greatest synchronicity, with cats in these relationships only having to use subtle cues, such as a single upright tail move, to signal desire for friendly contact."

There's that word 'control' again. Non-verbal communication is right up women's alley. Seems like they can read each other's minds, much like women expect of men.

> "In response, the cats approach female owners more frequently, and initiate contact more frequently (such as jumping on laps) than they do with male owners," co-author Manuela Wedl of the University of Vienna told Discovery News, adding that "female owners have more intense relationships with their cats than do male owners."

Codependency?

Reciprocality?

> "Cats also seem to remember kindness and return the favors later. If owners comply with their feline's wishes to interact, then the cat will often comply with the owner's wishes at other times. The cat may also "have an edge in this negotiation", since owners are usually already motivated to establish social contact.

There's that word 'negotiation' again. All this is necessary to grease the tenuous codependency, I suppose.

A Cat is a Woman's Best Friend

It has been said that "A dog is a man's best friend." At the end of the article, Viegas poses the question of whether cats are a woman's true best friend.

> "Although there are isolated instances of non-human animals, such as gorillas, bonding with other species, it seems to be mostly unique for humans to engage in social relationships with other animals. In this case with cats, it's for very good reason. Cats could very well be man's — and woman's — best friend."

Translation: Cats could very well be a neurotic woman's best codependent, dysfunctional, house-trapped object of limerence and Insecure Attachment; one that will tolerate her antics and stick around no matter how crazy she gets.

> "A relationship between a cat and a human can involve mutual attraction, personality compatibility, ease of interaction, play, affection and social support," co-author Dorothy Gracey of the University of Vienna explained. "A human and a cat can mutually develop complex ritualized interactions that show substantial mutual understanding of each other's inclinations and preferences.

Exactly, but that's a very polite way of putting it.

> "Dennis Turner, a University of Zurich-Irchel animal behaviorist, told Discovery News the he's "very impressed with this study on human-cat interactions, in that it has taken our earlier findings a step higher, using more modern analytical techniques to get at the interplay between cat and human personalities."
>
> Turner, who is also senior editor of The Domestic Cat: The Biology of Its Behaviour (Cambridge University Press), added that he and his colleagues "now have a new dimension to help us understand how these relationships function."

Simple, earn 10 broken relationships and win a feline desolation prize.

References

1. Gulick, E. E.; Krause-Parello, C. A. (2012). Factors related to type of companion pet owned by older women. Journal of psychosocial nursing and mental health services, 50(11):30-37. https://doi.org/10.3928/02793695-20121003-01
2. Wedl, M.; Bauer, B.; Gracey, D.; Grabmayer, C.; Spielauer, E.; Day, J.; Kotrschal, K. (2011). Factors influencing the temporal patterns of dyadic behaviours and interactions between domestic cats and their owners. Behavioural Processes, 86(1):58-67. https://doi.org/10.1016/j.beproc.2010.09.001
3. Wedl, M.; Schöberl, I.; Bauer, B.; Day, J.; Möstl, E.; Kotrschal, K. (2010). Relational factors affecting dog social attraction to human partners. Interactive Studies 11(3):482–503.
4. Kotrschal, K.; Day, J.; McCune, S.; Wedl, M. (2014). Human and cat personalities: building the bond from both sides. The Domestic Cat. The Biology of Its Behavior, 3rd ed.; Cambridge University Press: New York, NY, USA, 113-129.
5. NBC News (feat. Jennifer Viegas): Science of Cat Ladies? Felines bond with females, study shows (2011/2/24) [Archive]

Related

- Σ Frame: The Sexy Symbolism of the Cat (2019/10/31)
- Σ Frame: Wimmin Luv Cats because ¡Science! (2021/10/31)
- Σ Frame: The Moral Agency of Dogs (2022/11/18)

They're under a spell.

Jack · 1 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Sanpaku eye is the dead give-away!

Readership: Spiritually minded people of a Conservative bent.
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Liars Cast a Spell of Lies

The dictionary defines "under a spell" as "not fully in control of one's thoughts and actions." It's such a politely nebulous and PC definition. But it is still inferred that one's agency is compromised.

Here's a better description.

When one is under a spell, one is believing in a complex concoction of lies that weave together to form an alternate pseudo-reality. Consequently, a person who is under a spell naturally thinks and acts within the dictates and confines of that pseudo-reality.

The following images and descriptions depict 9 modern day individuals who are under a spell.

Crazy climate control lady gets kicked off plane.
H/T: Eternity Matters: Roundup (2022/3/30)
We often see this crazy, googly-eyed expression on the faces of CC Riders, Feminists, Liberals, Politicians, SJWs, and W0ket@rds.

Here's a lady who jumped to the conclusion that the air conditioning on the plane was harmful to the environment. She went hysterical after the flight attendant refused to turn it off. Never mind that flying uses much more fossil fuel and creates more pollution than air conditioning.

The logical response would simply be NOT to fly, but apparently this thought never entered her niggly noggin.

It's amazing how crazy and fearful people can be when they're convinced that all the "cl!m@te change" lies are true.

She's under a spell!

Most of the time, the issue in question is utterly comical. But once in a while, these frog-eyed females will have a legitimate reason to be afraid.

Olivia Downs

Image Source: TikTok

After Olivia Downs was informed that tubal ligation is a permanent procedure, she popped a cork on TikTok. Feminism never informed her of this glitch in the matrix.

This is beyond the 1,000 C Stare. This is the look of cloaked deranged possession.

Apparently, she can't decide whether to be a guilty carousel rider at present, or a regretful childless spinster in the future. The thinking process is reduced to such false dichotomies because the possibility of getting married and having children would never enter her miniscule mind.

Commentary: New York Post: 'Frustrated' young women are trying to get sterilized after overturning of Roe (2022/7/13)

H/T: The Other McCain: Darwin Smiles (2022/7/14)

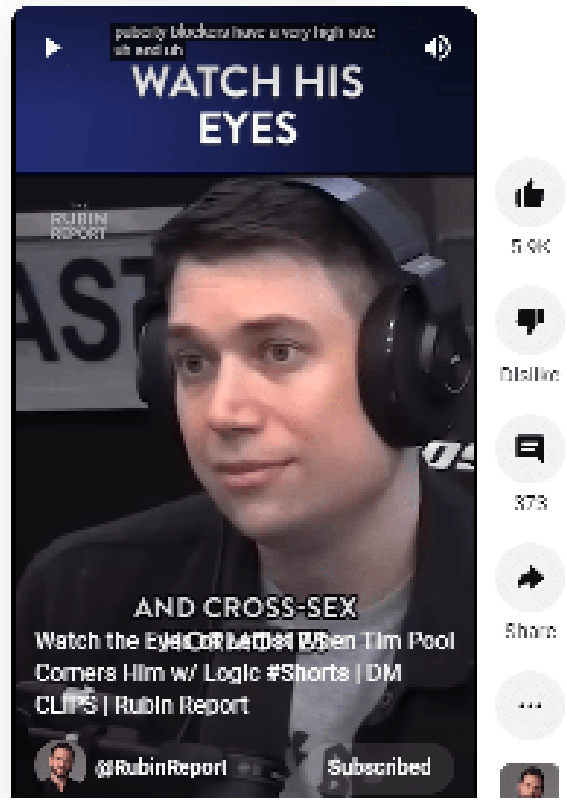
The insanity is not limited to women either.



Here, Tim Pool interviews a man defending tr@ns surgeries (L@nce of the Sərfs), which he falsely labels “he@lth c@re”. [Link to open video short.]

Look at that gimp’s face. You can almost feel his guilt. He’s terrified because he is stuck in a quandary. He knows he is wrong but he can’t walk it back.

He looks away or closes his eyes when answering — the non-verbal tell of a liar. He knows exactly what Pool is saying and blows it off without showing any emotion.

His nonchalant answers expose his sick apathy. He has no capacity of empathy beyond what his heretical doctrine allows him to grasp onto.

He didn’t even admit Tim’s argument at the most basic level of human rights. He doesn’t actually believe any of the sh!t he’s spouting. He’s little more than a W0ke Parrot Puppet.

The bug-eyed fear is not even limited to middle-class minions. It reaches into the uber upper echelon of sorathic society.

> "Mike Howell, director of the Oversight Project at the Heritage Foundation, said the access A1ex S0r0s has to the B!den White House is a major concern.
>
> Howell warns that the S0r0s family has already "done tremendous damage to our country."
>
> "The S0r0s agenda is one of death and destruction in the name of open borders and ending Western civilization," he said."
>
> The People's Voice: A1ex S0r0s Vows To Eradicate Conservatives From the Internet: "I'm 100 Times Worse Than My Dad" (2023/6/12)

This, and yet he continues to receive preferred status and first-hand access to the White House.

H/T: Patriactionary: Junior (2023/6/15)

Sheryl K. S@ndberg is at the forefront of the W0ke frontier, weaving nihilistic narratives out of whole cloth.

> "It's also critically important that we get more women into leadership roles because we need more women in leadership roles. We need more women in leadership. Organizations that have more women in leadership roles have lower levels of sexual harassment and better workplace policies and perform at a higher rate."
>
> Source: John the Other: Don't Mentor Her: A message for women. (2018/4/17)

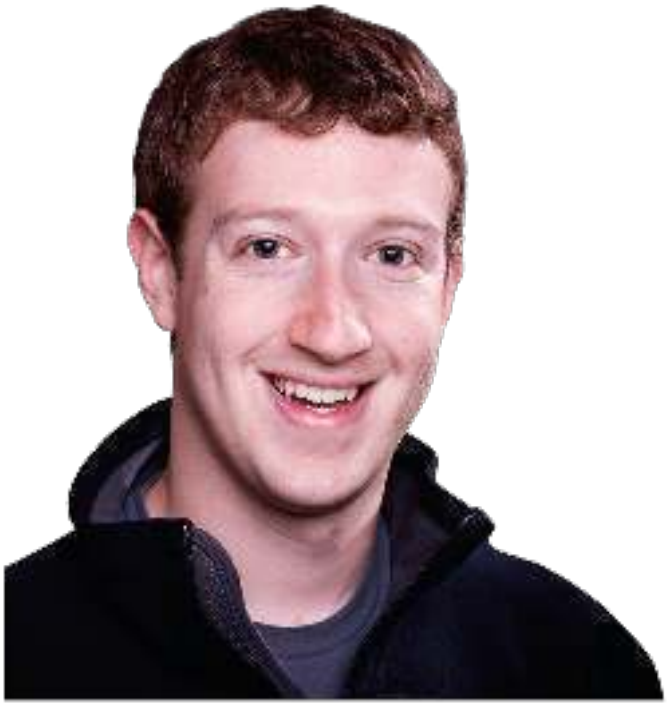
Obviously false rhetoric.

Mind you, S@ndberg (born August 28, 1969) isn't just another Gen X K@ren in a p_ssy hat.

- American technology executive, activist, and author.
- 1996-2001 — Chief of staff for United States Secretary of the Treasury, Lawrence Summers.
- 2001-2008 — Vice President of Global Online Sales and Operations at G00gle.
- 2008-present — Chief Operating Officer of Farcebook.
- 2012 — Time magazine's annual list of the 100 most influential people in the world.
- 2015 — Reported net worth is over US$1 billion, due to her stock holdings in Farcebook and other companies.



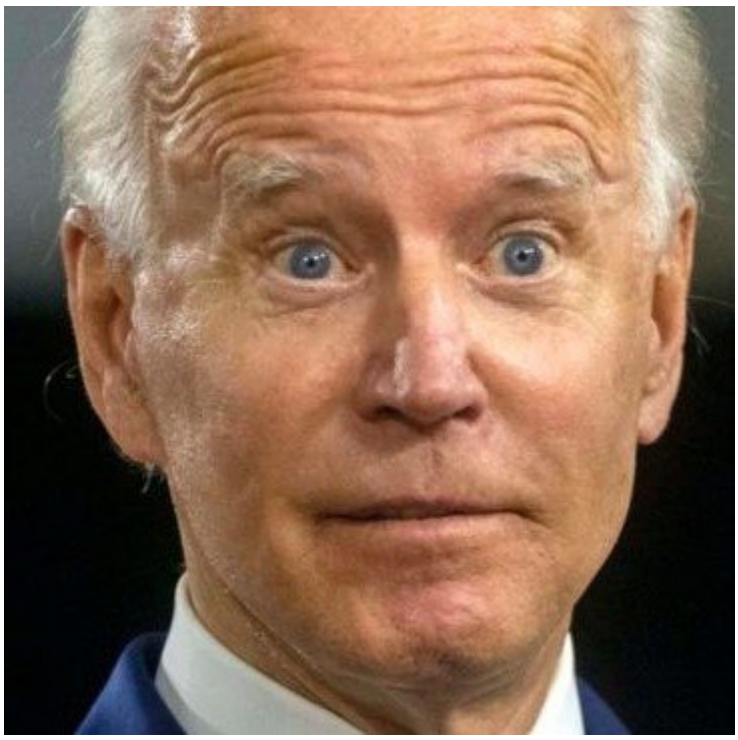
Mark Suckerburg has always presented himself as a clueless gimp (except when he appeared before congress). It amazes me how a man of his constitution could ever become the head of a Fortune 500 company.

Automatons like these are running the prime time narratives of the self-annihilating Woke West.

F@ceb00k was once the hottest social networking site in the world. But his shenanigans with algorithms, censorship, election interference, and personal data collection drove it into the ground. Not to be defeated, he tried to resurrect his empire with Meta, but with limited success. Now he's scheming how to rebrand telling people what they can and can't say or think without them knowing about it.

Even the secular public can't swallow all this BS.

Not only is Suckerburg believing the lies, he's creating and spreading them too!



During the last presidential election, I was amused to hear friends in Taiwan describe B!den as having “liar eyes”. I asked them what they meant by this. I’ll paraphrase a couple of their answers.

- “His eyes are big and his face shines, just like a little kid looking at a candy jar.”
- “He looks so over enthusiastic about what he says, but you can’t believe what he’s saying unless you let go of your own grasp of reality and go live in his fantasy land. That’s a liar. If you believe his lies, then you’ll get stuck in his spider web.”

Moreover, foreigners can easily pick up that B!den is a liar. The interesting thing here is that, as a native citizen of the U.S., I can tell that B!den may NOT be knowingly and intentionally lying. I think he earnestly believes what he’s selling!

He’s under a spell!

Alexandria Ocasio Cortez (AOC) is a Latina firebrand who is famous for her double set of headlights; (1) her deer-in-the-headlights gaze, and (2) the glandular variety.

Whenever I hear AOC speaking, I’m struck by her arrogant contempt towards her political opponents and her sheer hatred of the factual truth.

> "She doesn't have to actually understand socialism at all, she can just make up whatever she wants and call it socialism. Indeed, she can position herself as mainstream and her opposition as extremist by suggesting that any and all government action, tax collection or spending is an example of socialism. "What, do you hate roads, highways, and schools, you troglodyte?"
>
> "Ocasio-Cortez, and their ilk, positioning themselves in this way allows them to ridicule actual opponents of socialism as little more than anti-government anarchists who believe the government should never do anything, anywhere, for any reason. This is, perhaps, the king of all strawmen.
>
> The Maine Wire: The belligerent ignorance of Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (2018/8/24)

But you know, having long hair and bulbous mammary glands can grant one superpowers when casting spells in this gynocentric World.

Here's another example I loathe to include here, but Farm Boy has insisted this post would not be complete with it it.

> "Hillary said: "You guys are the first to realise that I'm really not even a human being. I was constructed in a garage in Palo Alto a very long time ago."
>
> She then added: "I've seen more people that kind of don't sweat, and other things, that make me think maybe they are part of the new race that he created: the robot race."
>
> Jokingly, she warned the reporter: "But you have to cut this, you can't tell anybody this. I don't want anybody to know this. This has been a secret […] and I'm just spilling my electronic guts to you."
>
> Mirror: Is Hillary Clinton a robot? Video of her eyes moving in different directions sparks strange conspiracy theories (2016/9/23)

Her jokes are plainly more truthful than her political fictions.

H/T: FarmBoy

In closing, the bug-eyed fear seen in the pictoral examples above is an absolute indicator of liars, psychopaths, and W0ke lunacy. (NOT to be coonfused with S1ut Eye, although there may be some overlap.)

This is what the fables and folk lore of old calls "being under a spell". It's an easy tell to watch out for — and avoid.

Related

- Σ Frame: Exposing the Truth to Others (2018/1/1)
- Σ Frame: Biden Squared (2020/11/1)
- Σ Frame: Gynapotheosis (2021/4/21)
- Σ Frame: Indicators of Contempt (IOCs) (2022/3/16)
- The Babylon Bee: New Study Finds Bizarre Connection Between Being Liberal And Having Giant, Googly Eyes (2023/6/24)

Heads in the Sand

thedeti · 3 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

We need to realize that by treating men poorly, we're shooting ourselves in the foot.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Readers' Note: Part of a mini-series on the new "Pity Men" narrative.
Author's Note: This post was requested by Feeriker and has some input from Jack. It is based on a series of comments I left under my previous post, Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 2 (2023/7/13), beginning here.
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Renn's Head is in the Sand

In Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 2 (2023/7/13), I wrote,

> "Men's withdrawing from relationships, from work, from education, from job training, from society, is a baffling curiosity to our society. All of our society stands around scratching their heads and can't figure out why men won't do anything. Our society considers that maleness, manhood, masculinity, is getting educated / trained for a job, getting a job earning enough to support a wife and kids, getting married, and becoming a father. That there is literally nothing else to being a man other than serving society, and then serving women."

Aaron Renn, journalist, co-founder and Senior Fellow at American Reformer.

The Powers That Be cannot figure out why men are doing less and less of this. They really do believe that men are just going to keep doing all this, for less and less return. They really cannot understand why men won't do this.

And not even 2 days after I wrote that comment, Aaron Renn cites an article in The Washington Post by Christine Emba: Men are lost. Here's a map out of the wilderness. (2023/7/10).

Renn followed up on this by conducting an interview with Emba about Man Troubles (2023/8/21) (behind a paywall).

Women like Emba want men to accommodate and change to suit women now. They aren't interested in compromise or in working with men; they're simply demanding that men do more, change more, bend more, and give up more, all so that women never have to change, do, bend, or give up anything. It's "Women get to keep everything they've gained at men's expense, and men need to give up more so that they can get the p_ssy they want."

Emba's Head is in the Sand

Emba's piece is long on criticism and short on prescription. Ultimately, she says, paraphrasing,

"We have to make traditional masculinity work with the new paradigm in which women are political, social, legal, professional, and economic equals to men. I don't really know what men need to do, but they just need to be better."

Here's what she says she wants:

> "In my ideal, the mainstream could embrace a model that acknowledges male particularity and difference but doesn't denigrate women to do so. It's a vision of gender that's not androgynous but still equal, and relies on character, not just biology. And it acknowledges that certain themes — protector, provider, even procreator — still resonate with many men and should be worked with, not against."

Translation:

"Men could be more like women… because women are becoming more like men. And it all needs to be equal. Whatever men are going to be, it cannot be at the expense of women."

Christine Emba, journalist for the Washington Post.

Reeves' Head is in the Sand

Here's Emba again praising Richard Reeves' prescriptions.

Richard Reeves, British American author, Senior Fellow at the Brookings Institution, director of the Future of the Middle Class Initiative.

> "Richard Reeves, in our earlier conversation, had put it somewhat more subtly. "I try to raise my boys" — he has three — "to have the confidence to ask a girl out, if that's their inclination; the grace to accept no for an answer; and the responsibility to make sure that, either way, she gets home safely." His recipe for masculine success echoed Galloway's: proactiveness, agency, risk-taking, and courage, but with a pro-social cast."

I don't accept that some random girl is under a man's authority such that he should be responsible for her. He owes no responsibility to a girl who rejected him. He is not responsible for a "strong independent woman". He is not responsible to her for anything.

> "This tracked with my intuitions about what "good masculinity" might look like — the sort that I actually admire, the sort that women I know find attractive but often can't seem to find at all. It also aligns with what the many young men I spoke with would describe as aspirational, once they finally felt safe enough to admit they did in fact carry an ideal of manhood with its own particular features."

Translation: Be a 1970s-80s era Nice Guy, but who sacks up and asks girls out. A palatable masculinity that ultimately serves women at its own expense.

More Heads in the Sand

A couple weeks later, in Weekly Digest: A Crisis of Courage (2023/9/9), Renn quotes Peter Thiel and Jemima Kelly to build the case that men are lacking courage. Then he cites Richard Reeves and Jack Donovan to argue that men are "lone rangers" who are too independent and isolated, and that what men need are male spaces and companionship.

Jemima Kelly, Financial Times

If that weren't bad enough, Renn then follows Mike Cosper's article in Christianity Today which mischaracterizes men as either too pious or too tyrannical, and masculinity as routinely perfunctory. The solution, Cosper says, is for men to be more Christlike in exercising gentleness, self-control, sobriety, compassion, and generosity.

Taylor Combs, Christianity Today

Renn and Cosper both look to the church to provide a promising solution to these ills. Yes, the converged churchy churchianized complementarian / egalitarian church.

In the same newsletter, Renn cites another article from Christianity Today by Taylor Combs. Combs says the current understanding of the problem is that young women are not on board with Complementarianism, and the young men need to be discipled to accept a more progressive political position. Then Combs said this is not the problem at all. The real problem, in his view, is an absence of unity and inclusion. Renn disagrees with this point, implying that it will degenerate into a Friend Zone.

Renn also cast shade on the Manosphere by linking to The New Statesman: The manosphere is poisoning conservatism (2023/9/4).

Peter Thiel, President of Clarium Capital Management, former Chairman and CEO of PayPal, Inc.
They've all got their heads in the sand.

In case you missed it, Renn and the others are building an alternative "man friendly" narrative to the failing feminist one. Don't fall for it. It's all cope. Navel gazing. Self-pity. A catharsis.

The reason why men are checking out is twofold: Sucky economy (scant opportunities), and no access to wife-worthy women to build a family with. Whatever access men might have to women is limited to the OASIS and women unworthy of LTRs / marriage.

Men are falling behind because they have no incentive to do anything other than jack it to p0rn and play video games, and make just enough money to survive and buy some toys.

That's it.

Stuck in the Sand

So Emba's message to men (which is no different from the overriding cultural narrative, and which Renn seems to endorse) is:

- You need to be OK with women being full agents, but only when it suits them.
- You have all the responsibilities to her; she has no responsibilities to you.
- You owe her everything at your expense; she owes you nothing.
- You need to fill all your masculine roles with no options while women get to be masculine or feminine as it suits them.

- You need to stay in your masculine lane and suck it, while women get to do whatever they want, at your expense.
- You need to be OK with rejection and spending your life masturbating.
- You need to take it on the chin and smile while you do it; while the girl laughs at you and plans her rendezvous with Chad on the ride home (the one where you "make sure, either way, she gets home safely").

Red Pill Apostle interpreted Emba's femtalk as thus.

Mike Cosper, Christianity Today

> "Trigger warning … Mansplaining is about to occur.
>
> Here is what she is saying with this. She wants men and women to be treated the exact same without them having to be the same. Or, as you have so eloquently stated about a million times here, she wants society and women to have all the benefits men provide without having to honor them with the differing treatment and respect that is due for their sacrifice.
>
> Her analysis is off because the underlying assumption, whether she realizes this or not, is that the masculine is the ideal for women to strive for. Anecdotal evidence is all around us for this as men aren't complaining about glass ceilings for what are traditionally women's roles but women are complaining about not being able to fill traditionally masculine roles. Only the person who perceives inferiority complains about the person whose role they think is superior."

In summary, we have to focus on what men need to do, and never, ever focus on what women need to do, to bring about this social utopia everyone keeps handwringing about.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The Delusion of the Good (2022/8/19)
- Σ Frame: An open letter to Christian Wives (2023/5/27)

The Larger Conspiracy that Justifies Feminism

Jack · 6 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Was Feminism and/or the Sexual Revolution planned by MEN?

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes + 1 hour video interview

Seeing how the top 10% men fully benefit from an open sexual market, I've often wondered if the whole Feminist movement, the Sexual Revolution, and even the convergence of the church is a massive conspiracy spearheaded by powerful men for the purpose of creating an open sexual market from which they can access more p_ssy with fewer responsibilities to themselves, with the consequences being offloaded to all the average Joes.

And who might these powerful men be? One guess is the secret societies of yesteryear that were duly famous for their lecherous rituals.

Seriously, it seems I am not the only person who has come to this conclusion.

Dead Bedroom Dating wrote,

> "This is the reality: Male church attendants are completely powerless under church authority. It's the goal of church authority to make males powerless, because that empowers church officials and their female followers. Most Western men of course recognized that long ago and just left church."

In her new book, The Case against the Sexual Revolution, authoress Louise Perry questions the notion that the sexual revolution has been a gain or a liberation for women. Quite the opposite.

> "Women have been conned," she declares. The sexual revolution, Perry emphatically argues, didn't liberate them. Instead, it liberated the libidos of high-status playboys and lechers such as Hugh Hefner and H@rvey We!nste!n at the expense of women. "We have smoothly transitioned from one form of female subservience to another," she writes, "but we pretend that this one is liberation." The rule of St. Augustine has been replaced with the rule of Don Juan and thus: "It's time for a sexual counter-revolution."
>
> Areo: The Bedevilments of Sex: Louise Perry's "The Case against the Sexual Revolution" (2022/6/3)

In the first three minutes of this interview with Mary Eberstadt entitled, Did The Sexual Revolution Actually Benefit Women? (2023/10/26), Chris Williamson asks,

> "Who were the biggest winners and losers of the sexual revolution in your opinion?"

Eberstadt answers,

> "It's a long story, but I think the biggest winners have been men, and in particular predatory men, and I think the biggest losers have been romance, men who are not predatory men, and women, and children."

At around the 13 minute mark, Williamson cites Louise Perry and Rob Henderson as having similar views.

At the 18 minute mark Eberstadt says,

> "I think feminism took a wrong turn a long time ago, after the 1960s, and stopped putting women first…"

After mentioning that p0rn0gr@phy and the sexual Revolution was bad for human relationships because it objectifies women, she concludes,

> "Feminism seemed to buy into a kind of libertarianism that benefited men. And so by the 1980s and 1990s, instead you hear feminist voices defending p0rn0gr@phy as a woman's right and something that no one has a right to question. And this is a sea change that I think tells us a lot about what happened when feminism stopped putting women first."

So again, we see that women must come first, and if that hasn't happened, then something has gone wrong. Of course, the blame for this presumed derailment is shifted onto men.

At 21 minutes, Williamson bats for men by bringing up the reduction in standards for men to gain sexual access. But he fails to mention that requiring standards for men only works when a grand majority of women are actually worthy of marriage and are also gatekeeping sex before and within marriage, thereby providing men both the incentive and the lack of options, respectively.

Eberstadt responds,

> "I think there's been a lowering of the standards for both sexes. But I think the biggest problem here is that men are not being given their due, frankly. They're not being given things to live up to and strive for, including the privilege of protecting a woman and children. The idea that that's even a privilege is dangerously close to being lost in our culture."

She doesn't say why — that it's not a privilege to have a one-hundred-and-second hand ~~kilogram~~ wife who only marries you for the sake of being married, and to accept full responsibility for her offspring with another man, only to be divorce gr@ped.

Conclusions

I won't comment on the entire interview between Williamson and Eberstadt. Suffice it to say that they raised many valid points, but they won't cross that invisible line of stating the following.

- That female sexual liberation breaks down assortative mating and permits all women to bed the top males with few repercussions. Thus, women are victims of their own hypergamy.
- That women need to be more conscientious gatekeepers of sex if they want men to be more liberal gatekeepers of commitment. IOW, free love has a price that comes later in life.
- That women should take marriage seriously enough to prepare themselves to be a quality virgin bride if they want men to take marriage seriously enough to "Man UP" and provide the ring. In short, women need to exercise agency.

Given these omissions, overall, this angle sounds like a revamped reprise of The Oppressive P@tr!@rchy™ narrative, except now the key perpetrators have been identified as top SMV men.

Exit Question

Here's a couple questions for readers to ponder.

1. Is this idea truly true (that top SMV men are responsible for, and are the key beneficiaries of feminism and the sexual revolution), or is this part of a new narrative that is being spun?
2. If more women latch on to this idea, what will happen?

A. There will be a stupendously drastic pendulum swing back to something staunchly traditional.
B. Top SMV men will be identified as the primary antagonists of feminism, and will come to bear the full brunt of feminist chastizement and denigration.
C. Top SMV men will be herded into breeding communes where they can be controlled and let out to women on demand.
D. Feminism will be "revised" and "purified" with the aim of putting women first once again.
E. More cathartic chatter and nothing will be done to improve the social conditions of lower SMV men.
F. Some combination of the above?
G. Other?

During this month's theme, I'd like for us to keep this c0nsp!racy theory in the back of our heads and see if there is any evidence for this.

Related

- Σ Frame: (Red Pill Apostle): How Feminism Erodes Marriage (2021/11/8)
- Σ Frame: Are Men Responsible for Women's Behavior? (2023/2/1)
- Σ Frame: Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21)
- Σ Frame: Boss + Female Employee = Steamy Hot Chemistry (2023/9/18)

The Cultural Myth of the SIW

Red Pill Apostle · 8 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

SIW as portrayed in films and popular culture are a deceptive faux glorification.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 600 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes + 11 minute video

Most Classic Manosphere authors held that there is no such thing as an Alpha female. But there is definitely such a stereotype that appeals to our sense of mythos. From antiquity's Aphrodite, Venus, the zenith of beauty and love, to Joan of Arc of the Middle Ages, to our modern version of the Strong Independent Woman (SIW) and the sexy, kick-@ss female heroines in movies, comics, anime, and video games. The idea of the Alpha female is easily seen in the stories that tickle women's romantic fantasies. Romance novels, i.e. female pR0n, involve the concept of the Alpha bad boy who is tamed by the female lead, when all others have failed, because of HER goodness and femininity. On the less smutty side, one can look at the story of Beauty and the Beast as an archetype of the Alpha female literally taming the savage beast.

Genuinely SIW are hard to find IRL, but they are celebrated as ubiquitous in advertisements and especially movies of all genres.

This video from The Critical Drinker offers a great look at SIW lead characters.

The analysis of strong female characters from the 8:50 point to the end is some of the best identification of what is wrong with strong female lead characters, and modern women in general.

They've given up on every internal quality that makes women appealing to men and inspires men to be masculine — traits like compassion, empathy, kindness, submissiveness, sweetness, vulnerability — and replaced it with the qualities of a second or maybe third tier man in an effort to create an alpha female character.

Gone is the softness that compliments men's harder edges and the general femininity that has been the bane of men's decision making since the beginning of creation. Instead, women are attributed masculine quality strength and valor, which doesn't actually exist IRL.

In doing so, they obscure the true mythological picture of an alpha female, which is a woman who can use the traits mentioned to inspire faith and loyalty, or to get an alpha male to commit to her and then keep him committed.

At the 9:00 mark, The Critical Drinker states that SIW women are low quality LARPs of men. I think this is an accurate portrayal of women in power because from what I've seen, CD's assessment rings true. My experience is that women tend to have less empathy when they have power, as if solipsism prevents them from identifying another person in pain.

Testosterone is God's gift to fallen humanity.

Epilogue

The way this ties into this month's theme of the W!tchy War on Masculinity is that when we see women portrayed this way frequently and ubiquitously, it conditions us to subconsciously ascribe more power and authority to women than what they actually have, and thus, to revere them as "equals" in some sense. In essence, this "super woman" cultural programming serves to cast a spell over the entire populace to believe that the SIW trope is a reality that young men can reasonably expect from women, and that young women can hope to aspire to. And instead of emulating the enticing beauty of Venus or the indomitable courage of Joan of Arc, young women are led to imitate the annoying, bullish, screeching busybody in a skinsuit with the misled notion that they can somehow single-handedly beat the odds and win the day.

And of course, we all know that when that doesn't work, men are somehow to blame, which only reinforces the truth that women are NOT the superpowerhouses that are set forth as a trope.

We can only hope and pray that there will soon come a day when women will embrace their true feminine power (i.e. beauty, companionship, femininity, honeycraft, inspiration, vulnerability, etc.), and the SIW archetype will then become the iconic laughingstock of previous generations — much like the Boomers were ridiculed for their bellbottoms and butterfly collars. (See advertisement below.)

At least they were masculine enough to pull it off.

Related

An advertisement for bellbottoms, ca. 1972.

- Chateau Heartiste: Defining the Alpha Female (2007/9/27)
- Chateau Heartiste: The Masculinization Of The Western White Female (2009/6/15)
- Chateau Heartiste: The Project To Feminize Western Men And Masculinize Western Women (2014/2/20)
- Dalrock: The terrible cost of make believe. (2017/4/18)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy, Thedeti): Society-Wide Sh!t Test – Puppet Master (2018/4/17)
- Σ Frame: The Feminine Dilemma (2018/10/27)
- Σ Frame: How do Women Glorify God? (2020/10/7)
- Σ Frame: Why are there so many sexy aggressive women in anime and video game culture? (2021/7/9)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Blue Pill Arrogance of the 80s (2022/2/2)
- Σ Frame: Strong Independent Women (2023/5/3)
- Σ Frame: The Attraction of Glorification (2023/9/30)
- Aeoli Pera: Re: Female Characters (2023/11/6)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Difference between men and women with superheroes (2023/11/8)
- The Thinking Ape: Women And Media: The Great Self-Insertion (2023/11/11)

Rewriting the Script for a Kinder, Gentler Feminism

Jack · 10 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Propping up the old, dying narratives of gynocentrism.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Readers' Note: Part of a mini-series on the new "Pity Men" narrative.
Length: 1,900 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

The New Normal

Over the past 5 years, the SMP/MMP has ruptured and bled out. Now, a new status quo is beginning to gel. As it turns out, it is women — NOT men — who are now facing the worst consequences of Feminism.

Here are a few examples of what I'm talking about.

- Women have overtaken men in nearly every category, e.g. abortion (AKA 'health care rights'), education, employment equity (AKA 'equal opportunity'), income, social status… — a fulfillment of Feminism, all in all, and yet women's 'unhappiness' continues to rise.
- YouTube and TikTok are teeming with videos of young women ranting "PSA"s and crying their eyes out for various reasons related to the broken SMP and the pressures of working full time and paying their own way.
- Better Bachelor: Men are held back but still gain, while women and their advantages are failing. (2023/11/8)
- The relative rise (the percent change) of su!c!de since the late 2000s (2007-09) is higher for girls and young women (10-24) in the Anglosphere than for adult women (25+) or men.
- An increasing number of testimonies from men and Manospherians who have come to the conclusion that life without women is not so bad after all. For example, this comment from LocustsPlease:

> "All the MGTOW I know IRL take more vacations than these married guys can dream of. We have an excess of labor. It's not our goal to use ourselves for no reason. Why would a man who is never gonna have sex with a woman need or want 10 million dollars? You are gonna travel light, eat food, and drink beer [because] you don't have a woman to impress."

The New Normal is Unacceptable to the Gynocracy

However, men sitting poolside while women are diving off the deep end is unacceptable to the PTB and their cultural gatekeepers. Something must be done, Big Brother!

Thedeti's post, Heads in the Sand (2023/11/3), brought our attention to a new narrative that is being invented by a network of proto-conservatives in order to ameliorate the disillusionment of men by providing a catharsis. Make no mistake, the disillusionment of men is nothing new. Men have been disillusioned with the SMP, marriage, and women in general for the past 8 to 10 years or more. But the amount of attention this is now receiving and the tenor thereof is new.

You see, since the Red Pill went mainstream, the culture shapers have realized that men are no longer biting the bait because the old narratives are no longer believable. So NOW they have to come up with a new narrative to prop up the disintegration of society and minimize the collateral damage to the Feminine Imperative. If they truly cared about men, then they would have stepped up 10 years ago. Instead, we see that these issues don't receive attention until it begins to affect women.

Apparently, the new theme is to rework the old feminist / W0ke narratives about masculinity, race, sexuality, and social identity / roles in an effort to fish for a new and improved pseudo-conservative brand of feminism that is not quite so onerous to masculine sensibilities. The purpose is to lure men back to the fish farm. The PTB and their gynocratic middle managers are losing sleep over the fear that men might take a more active role in rebelling against the fem-centric order, or… (gasp) that men might actually be enjoying themselves!

Revising an Old Broken Narrative

Ironically, the general approach taken by these beacons of false hope mimics Dalrock's stance a decade ago. To briefly review, Dalrock's running theme was that society, especially Christian society, never tires of talking about men's deficiencies and sins while refusing to address women's, because "that would be mean", and because White Knighting was essentially equivalent to Christian male morality at that time. Dalrock was always condemned by the churchians, especially for his generous take on Game. Yet, he was championed by protestant men who were disillusioned with The Effect of Theology on Relationships. Now that Chivalry and masculine honor (what's that?) has been taken to the woodshed and chopped into Tinder, there is a vacuum of Christian male morality.

The new syndicate is adopting a similar tack, except instead of identifying the cause of the societal wide marital breakdown as Feminism and modern progressivism in general, and more specifically, irresponsible rebellious women who lack moral agency and won't own fault in their individual relationships (as Dalrock did), the new con-coalition is constructing a new alternarrative for the guppies to nibble on. Instead of lambasting men as toxic cads, the new paradigm essentially pities men for not being able to hold up their end of the social bargain. Instead of telling men to "get their act together" and "Man up!" as Feminism and churchianity did in the past, they are now prescribing community, group therapy, male friendships, and other self-help strategies to counteract the malady of loneliness. This is gaslighting, because in fact, dealing with women now carries more blame than honor, and marriage is an arrangement that is now too frangible and risky for men to accept anymore.

But because they feign empathy and pity, and are not as hard on men as Feminism and the church was in the past, they can posture pose and virtue signal that they have men's interests and well-being at heart. But the same expectations continue — that men should work, perform, and produce — NOT for dignity, honor, and status, NOT for the glory of God, but for the benefit of women and society.

A scene from the Russian film, Peculiarities of National Ice Fishing (2007).

RewOk!ng the Narrative

When we examine the perspectives offered by those espousing the new narrative, we see many similarities among them (which is why I've labeled them a con-coalition / syndicate).

- They acknowledge that Feminism has had a bad influence on men.
- They say the idea that "manhood is 'toxic'" etc. is an ill influence on men, thereby introducing an antithesis in a Hegelian dialectic.
- They say that a society obsessed with (women's) safety has trained men to fear the world, not enter it wholeheartedly, even while maintaining that traditional (pre 1990) archetypes of masculinity are harmful, over the top, r@c!st, sex!st, etc.
- They borrow buzzwords from Cultural M@rx!sm / Intersect!0nal Feminism to talk about how these social forces render male leadership 'patriarchal', 'oppressive', and 'unjust'.
- They all vilify The Red P!ll / The M@n0sphere, and hyper masculine men as a bad influence on men. (Roosh cleaned up, so now Andrew T@te is their favorite poster boy.)
- They say men have checked out / 'disappeared' / 'ghosted' / 'withdrawn' / etc.
- They talk about "a war on manhood / masculinity", not realizing that this message is past the sell by date, and that they are doing little more than littering an empty battlefield with false targets, obstacles, and rubber dummies.
- They frame all of the above in terms of how it impacts women.
- Their main motivation is to prop up a crumbling society and ameliorate the fallout on women — NOT to earnestly help men.
- They all cite and quote each other, as if they are cultural anthropology detectives.

The problem with the new narrative is not so much what they are saying, but what they are NOT saying.

- There is much talk about how the Manosphere has a 'bad influence' on men. This 'bad influence' they speak of is cast in moral terms, but they are NOT speaking of Christian morality with regard to a man's life purpose, motivations, and/or sexual morality. No, it is male independence / MGTOW which is subtly deemed immoral.
- They describe men in terms of checking out / 'disappearing' / 'ghosting' / 'withdrawing' in order to avoid calling it what it is — male independence / MGTOW.
- They will seldom acknowledge mens' motivations for checking out / 'disappearing' / 'ghosting' / 'withdrawing', and when they do, it is a survey of the cultural / SMP landscape, or a causal factor of women's problems — NOT a result of sociosexual market forces.
- They will NOT address those primary factors which contributed to society's downfall (e.g. abortion, birth control, Duluth, No Fault divorce, sexual promiscuity, unfettered immigration, unrestrained hypergamy, W0kery, etc.).
- They will never admit that, with marriage being in the dismal state it is in today, men may be better off GTOW without women in TOW.
- They will consistently fail (or refuse) to put their finger on specific ways that Feminism hurts men, or how Fem-centrism promotes gynocentrism at men's expense, nor will they admit that women hold any responsibility.
- They consistently fail to speculate about the role of women and how their sins have contributed to the male malaise.
- They will NOT address the obvious 4th stage cancer of female sexual promiscuity.
- They will NOT examine how A Gynocentric Society Inhibits Female Agency.
- They will NOT discuss how women are trained to be hypoagentic while simultaneously taught that they are Strong and Independent™ (an oxymoron, since females are at their finest when they are feminine, submissive, and vulnerable).
- They will NOT emphasize that women play an important role in forming stable marriages and families and exactly what those responsibilities involve (e.g. chastity, respect, submission, etc.).
- They will NOT mention that they are more concerned about the Feminine Imperatives, (e.g. actualizing hypergamy, ‘safety’, sexual license, etc.) than male prerogatives.

Conclusions

As the reader can see, the modus operandi of the new narrative is essentially a lie of omission. Gaslighting is also at play as the causes are attributed to a plethora of social phenomena which are used as red herrings to distract the audience from the true agents of defilement and destruction. Of course, this omission is fundamental to The Big Lie™ because filling in the necessary details would reveal the fact that they don’t actually prioritize God’s interests and men’s well-being. They only want to ensure that the gynocracy is running smoothly and that women are eating their caviar. They may also be concerned with making the looming risk of a generation of dissatisfied men to go away. They’ll dance around the issues ad infinitum and collect cash and clicks all the way, but they’ll never reach a conclusion because the conclusion — holding women accountable for their actions — is too opprobrious.

All these people are building an alternative “man friendly” narrative to the failing feminist one. But in fact, this new “man friendly” narrative has the same assumptions and precepts that the old script has always had. The only difference is that it acknowledges the suffering of men and gives them a kinder gentler lip service so that they are not immediately repelled. Some men are in so much pain that they’ll eat up any acknowledgment they’re offered (hence the enduring popularity of the Manosphere). But for other men, this message will have little traction simply because they’ve already checked out and gone fishing. But overall, the new narrative is attempting to prolong the twitching of a cadaveric spasm and postpone rigor mortis for another year or two. Moreover, it cannot be resurrected.

The old war (i.e. Feminism) has always been against men. But the blood of that war is now slowly fading into the grass. The new war is to revive the old war in the form of a Christmas Day truce, or else avoid it altogether. It is a war of ideology between who will be the most dominant agent in staging that war. Will it be the traditionally masculine Andrew Tates and PUAs of the world who err on the side of recklessness and lawlessness, or will it be the emasculated pseudo-moralizers who err on the side of pleasing men and pedestalizing women, or will it be the Black Pill followed by the White Pill and a peaceful, pleasant bachelorhood?

Thedeti and I will continue to dissect these developments during this month’s theme; posted on Fridays.

Related

- Better Bachelor: But… but… who will pay for what women want? (2022/4/13)
- Σ Frame: Asherah Makes Demands: Give Women what they want! (2023/2/27)
- The Thinking Ape: The “New Men’s Movement” (2023/7/28)
- Σ Frame: Who will Take Care of Men? (2023/8/2)
- The Thinking Ape: Why They Pretend To Care… (2023/10/4)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Heads in the Sand (2023/11/3)
- Better Bachelor: Men are held back but still gain, while women and their advantages are failing. (2023/11/8)

Abortion is a Betrayal!

Jack · 11 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

When a woman has an abortion, she's not only rejecting her child, but also her man and her God ordained purpose in life as a mother.

Readership: All; Would be parents; Those who are sexually active;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

The Pandora's Box of Abortion

Women know deep down that their true passion is to submit to a dominant man and that might entail pregnancy. Sexually liberated women insist on having an option to escape the consequences of sexual indulgence. They demand to have a release valve for their sexual freedom. They cannot be tethered to biology. They can't be held responsible for the consequences of that, or else they would have to limit their pleasures.

The proliferation of these fantasies of sex sans responsibility on mass media, and their seductive appeal to the fundamental feminine desire for a gynocentric utopia, have slowly caused them to become more acceptable to the wider public since the 1960's.

After having access to legalized abortion since 1973, it has become ingrained in modern women's unconsciousness that abortion needs to be legal and available, simply because women now take sexual license for granted and the idea of having to bear the consequences of their sexual proclivities is grossly unacceptable, and even religious women feel this way.

Moreover, Abortion has shifted the feminine goalpost from sexual gatekeeping which has the specific goal of marital sanctity, to the Feminine Imperative which has no bounds. All these haywire arguments about abortions, condoms, IUDs, pills, castrations, vasectomies, moral agency, eugen!cs, laws and legislation, and who is responsible for what (see Case Study below), amounts to nothing more than a Pandora's box of selfishness and sexual sin — which must necessarily be micromanaged for the blame to be shifted off of women's dire allegiance to the Feminine Imperative.

Welcome to the Jungle!

So it is just as Thedeti and NaturallyAspirated have said. Abortion has become the most central issue for feminism. Legal access to abortion is a product of the sexual revolution that has irreparably changed western culture. Now, everyone in our society wants to have consequence free sex with whomever they want, how, when, and where they want. Conservatism's attempts to regulate and/or ban abortion is now a lost cause, as modern women will never vote against it.

Case Study — Abortion "Rights" = Defilement Rebellion

In a previous post, Irresponsible Ejaculation Causes Abortion (2019/9/23) we looked at an example of how women wish to solipsize that abortion is the result of Menz irresponsibility, NOT Wimminz. The crux of this claim argues that men should be more conscientious about using birth control, while assuming that men should want to avoid having children. They overlook the fact that sex is intended by God to result in procreation, and insinuate that a man is "irresponsible" if he should choose to inseminate her by not using birth control. This is another classic case of Psychological Projection that we see coming from women way too often.

Men may cause pregnancies, but men don't make pregnancies unwanted by the woman. Most women who abort their progeny go to so called "Planned Parenthood" clinics on their own initiative… Often without even informing the man. Often to the man's utter dismay!

The Scourge of Shedding Innocent Blood

Roe v. Wade was repealed in June 2022. At first, it was thought that this was a sounding victory for the pro-life crowd. However, state voting in November 2023 brought with it the firm establishment of abortion in many states (e.g. Kentucky, Ohio). Overall, deregulating abortion at the federal level has only shifted those "rights" to the state level.

On this, Thedeti said,

> "Ohio soundly rejected a "heartbeat" law banning most abortions and approved a state constitutional right to abortion.
>
> So this is shaking out pretty much how I thought it would. In fact, it's even more favorable for abortion rights advocates. Most states, including battlegrounds like Ohio, are firmly in the camp of "we want abortion with some restrictions."
>
> Things have changed. The world has changed. Everyone in our society wants to have consequence free sex with whomever they want, how, when, and where they want. For women and top men, this is a reality. For all other men, not so much. But all other men are paying the price for it. Just how it is."

I want to point out that it is not only "all other men", but ALL men, whether they care or not. Culture is collective.

You see, when a woman chooses to have an abortion, it is more than just a refusal to accept responsibility. It is more than a selfish expulsion of her progeny. It is rewriting her life script to excuse herself from both the consequences of and the responsibilities for her actions.

It is more than a rejection of life. It is a rejection of her own flesh and blood. It is a betrayal to her lineage. It's a rejection of paternity, of male authority, and of her God ordained purpose as a woman and mother.

It is more than a rejection of the man's decision to take the chance of having a child. It is a betrayal and a rejection of the man himself!

It is a betrayal because the woman prostrates herself for the purposes of sex and procreation, implying that she respects and values the man enough to be willing to bear his children. But when the natural result of pregnancy comes, she renegs on her implied consensus to procreation in the act of coitus. It is female Onanism (Genesis 38:8-10).

It is a rejection because the woman is saying, in effect, "This man (and his child) is not worthy of my time and devotion in bearing and rearing his offspring."

The woman is also saying, in effect, "I'm a s1ut / wh0re who only has sex for my OWN G-D pleasure and the fun of it all, or for the extrinsic benefits I can gain from it!", respectively. "I don't want no b@stard spawn!" Thus casting an indictment on the man as being unworthy of procreation.

Image Source: Vox Popoli: Meme of the Week 15 (2023/11/10)

The Effects of Abortion on Fathers

All this culminates in metaphysical forces that oppress men.

> "As astonishing as it may seem, according to the experts, fathers of aborted children often feel even worse than mothers."
>
> "If you or a man you know is suffering from the loss of a child through abortion, help and healing is available by contacting www.menandabortion.net. You can also visit www.fatherhoodforever.org."
>
> *Desni Linkovi: Fatherhood lost: How abortion affects men (2019/5/21)

The book, Fatherhood Aborted: The Profound Effects of Abortion on Men, by Guy Condon and David Hazard, includes the following information about (would be) fathers who have endured the abortion of their progeny:

Aftershocks of Male Post-abortion Trauma:

- Dodges authority
- Has trouble bonding
- Keeps women at bay
- Fears impending tragedy
- Doesn't own his mistakes
- Feels inadequate as a leader
- Has no solid sense of identity
- Works to impress moral leaders
- Has difficulty with commitment

They also lay out the following symptoms:

- Rage
- Depression
- Fear of failure
- Fear of rejection
- Sexual dysfunction
- Relationship struggles
- Inability to trust friends
- Loneliness or numbness
- Addictions and sexual compulsions
- Sleeplessness, bad dreams, nightmares

 H/T: Larry's Musings: Socio-critical links: Feminism, new world order, and abortion's effects on men (2019/5/22)*
 H/T: Desni Linkovi: Impact of Abortion on Men (2019/5/22)*

Abortion and Birth Control are W!tchcr@ft

Most regular readers will agree that abortion is redrum and the modern day version of child sacrifice. What readers might not know is that abortion is both an act and a result of W!tchcr@ft. As I will explain in a future post, W!tchcr@ft is the altering of reality to suit one's sinful interests, notions, and preferences. Sexual sin and abortion alters reality, both temporal and eternal.

Also, W!tchcr@ft involves the use of medicine, drugs, or spells (Greek: φαρμακεία, pharmakeia, translated as "sorcery" or "w!tchcr@ft"). Drugs are both a defining and enabling element of both the Sexual Revolution and sexual liberation.

- The so called "Morning After pills" and similar drugs cause a chemically induced abortion.
- Hormonal Birth Control alters the mind and casts a spell over the user, as described in the following posts.

1. Patriactionary: America – Land of the Doped Up Women (2011/12/6)
2. Patriactionary: A new problem with 'The Pill' (2012/1/21)
3. The Orthosphere: Birth control and the rhetorical tics of the Left (2012/2/22)
4. Chateau Heartiste: The Pill and Divorce: The Real Connection (2013/5/29)
5. Christianity and Masculinity: Oral contraception alters your brain (2015/4/14)
6. One More Soul: The Contraception-Divorce Connection (2015/11/3)
7. Christianity and Masculinity: Contraception's under the radar effect on divorce (2017/9/27)
8. Σ Frame: How the Pill Changes the Brain and Emotions (2019/10/28)
9. Practical Eschatology: The Divorce Pill (2019/11/7)
10. v5k2c2 (Derek Ramsey): The Pill Causes Bad Mate Selection (2019/11/8) [PDF]*
11. v5k2c2 (Derek Ramsey): Alpha, Beta, and Reproduction (2019/11/13) [PDF]*
12. Σ Frame (Marc@1 Flesh): A Deeper Look at Contraception and Abortion (2019/11/9)
13. Σ Frame: Contraception Correlations (2019/11/29)
14. Σ Frame: How the Pill Affects Pubescent Girls (2019/12/22)

15. Σ Frame: How the Pill Affects Attraction and Mating (2020/8/26)

Galatians 5:20 identifies W!tchcr@ft as a “deed of the flesh” that excludes one from the Kingdom of God.

* H/T: Ramman3000

How to Deal with this Sin?

Whenever a woman chooses to have an abortion, the father is often left in the dark about it. Many women will never tell the man that they’re pregnant or that they had an abortion, and if they do, it is to extract something from him. Because of this ignorance, and the easy evasion of the responsibilities of being a father, many men are quite willing to overlook this betrayal. Some men have no qualms about the woman’s choice to transform his seed into b@stardized stem cells to be used for hellacious scientific research, instead of producing a family that would honor God. Some men are so shifty and faithless that they are glad to be absolved from all the blessings and responsibilities of being an ancestor of future generations. Some men are simply happy that they got a piece of @$$ and leave it at that!

Men, being men, have a tendency to ignore or deny all the symptoms listed earlier. Understandably so. It’s harrowing to face the fact that your woman did this to your child!

[Image removed because of community guidelines.]

Any Christian community should openly and vehemently forbid abortion to be used as a form of birth control.

How do men deal with the sting of betrayal, loss, and rejection of Abortion, whether personal or cultural, whether the lost child is his or not?

Related

- Σ Frame: Abortion and Birth Control (Page)
- Σ Frame: Irresponsible Ejaculation Causes Abortion (2019/9/23)
- Σ Frame: A Deeper Look at Contraception and Abortion (2019/11/9)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Moral Hazard is Collateral Damage (2022/3/14)
- William M. Briggs: Abortion Is Only The Symptom: Here Is The Disease (2023/11/10)

Why are We in this Mess?

ArchAngel · 13 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Exploring the actual roots of the modern predicament: Darkened minds seek verification other than faith.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

The Character of our Age

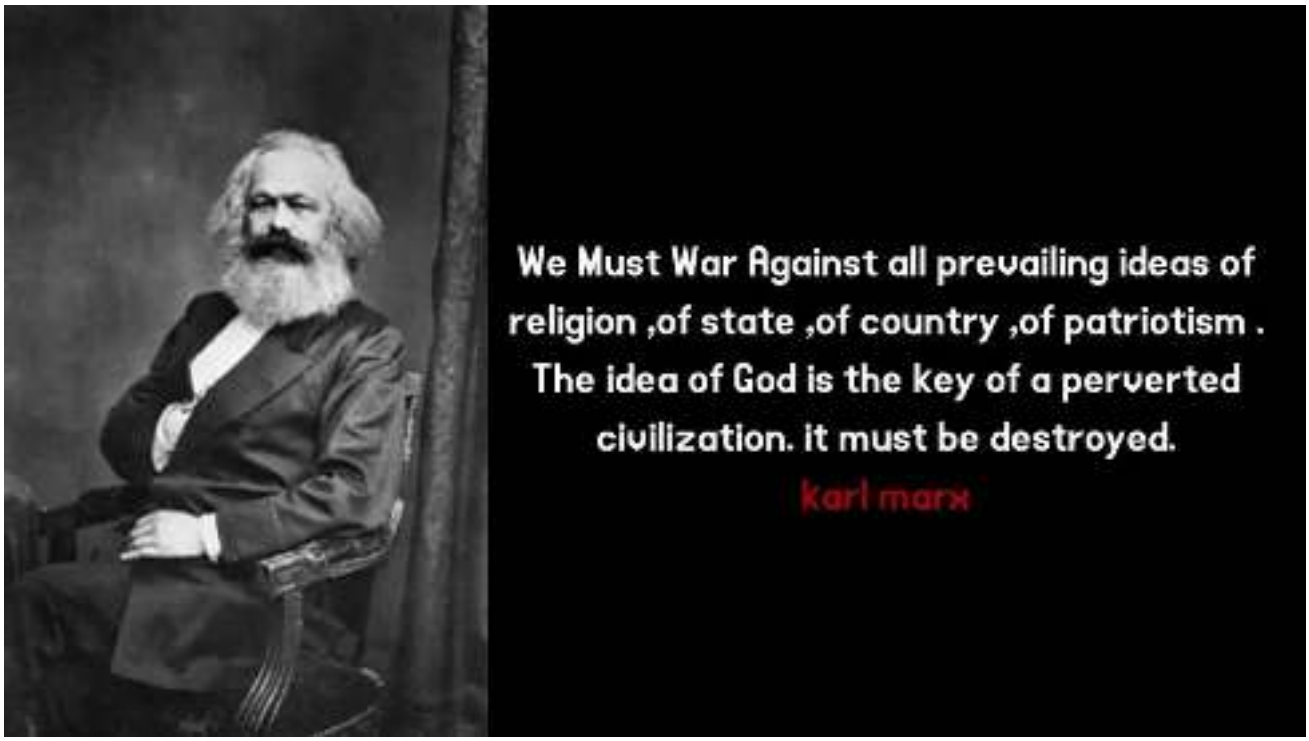
The defining feature of any age is the difficulty its occupants have in identifying its defining features. It takes a non-Spartan to note how warlike the Spartans were.

Political commentator Ben Shapiro, in an interview with Pastor Voddie Baucham, asked a pertinent question concerning the character of our very own era:

> "You've mentioned a couple of times the neo-M@rxist ideology. Do you think that's what's really sort of provoking all this? Is it the infusion of neo-Marxism or is it the infusion of Freudian sexology?"

Can the conditions we face really be traced back to Marx or Freud (mid-19th – early 20th century)? Is our era really that recent? I don't think so.

Rather, the distinguishing factor of our age is our "verificationist" approach to truth, going back roughly 200 years to the enlightenment. Since then, we have increasingly relied on proof obtained either by reason (through philosophy) or science, forsaking the rest of our faculties. 'Truth', today, is justified if and only if evidence is provided. Without proof, we simply disregard any ideas as baseless conjecture, nonsense, or superstition. That is verificationism.



Problems of Verificationism

As mentioned earlier, the idea of 'verification' simply seems inviolable to us, eluding examination. Sacrosanct, even, to modernists of both stripes (believers and free-thinkers). How could it be any other way? It is, therefore, ironic that the problems of verificationism are generally easy to spot.

1. Self-Refutation: In this view, any ideas or propositions that cannot be verified are meaningless, as described above. However, the proposition, "anything that cannot be verified is meaningless" cannot, itself, be verified, rendering the epistemology self-refuting. On its own, this is a deathblow to verificationism.
2. Uncommon Nonsense: Everyone holds certain beliefs without justification. These 'biases' (if we may call them that) are the hallmarks of sanity or common sense. For example, the belief in the reality of the external world and other minds cannot be verified. The same thing goes for believing in an actual past; instead of our just popping into existence with false memories of one. The insistence that we back every belief up with reason would compel us to abandon our sanity. Rather, we can simply believe in the reliability of other faculties like perception and intuition, even though we lack the rational sanction to do so.
3. Snapshot Thinking: The tendency to mistake the current state of affairs with the very laws of being. This is the flaw of confusing a weak 'is' with a strong 'is': confusing with what 'just is', with what 'necessarily is'. Although it is often the result of verificationism, it is not a necessary consequence of it. It arises from the impossibility of getting necessary conditions by observing our immediate environment (particularly as regards human behavior) and the desire for simple, eternal rules to make sense of that environment. Snapshot thinking is the basis of evolutionary psychology and plays a role in Red Pill bitterness.
4. Meaninglessness: Without a solid foundation of understanding, we are driven to seek that meaning which is lost, specifically the meaning of life, of purpose, of suffering, and of inherent worth by reason. However, reason cannot provide those things. Dr. Jordan Peterson's claim to fame is in recognizing the vacuum of meaning in modern life. Although he can give an inspiring and well-informed talk, he can offer no meaningful answers without first addressing verificationist epistemology.
5. Nihilism: The biggest consequence, although not a logical one, is nihilism. Without what amounts to faith, we simply have no grounds for some of mankind's noblest traits and aspirations. Under verificationism, we simply toss them. Michael Polanyi puts it much better than I could in his book, Meaning:

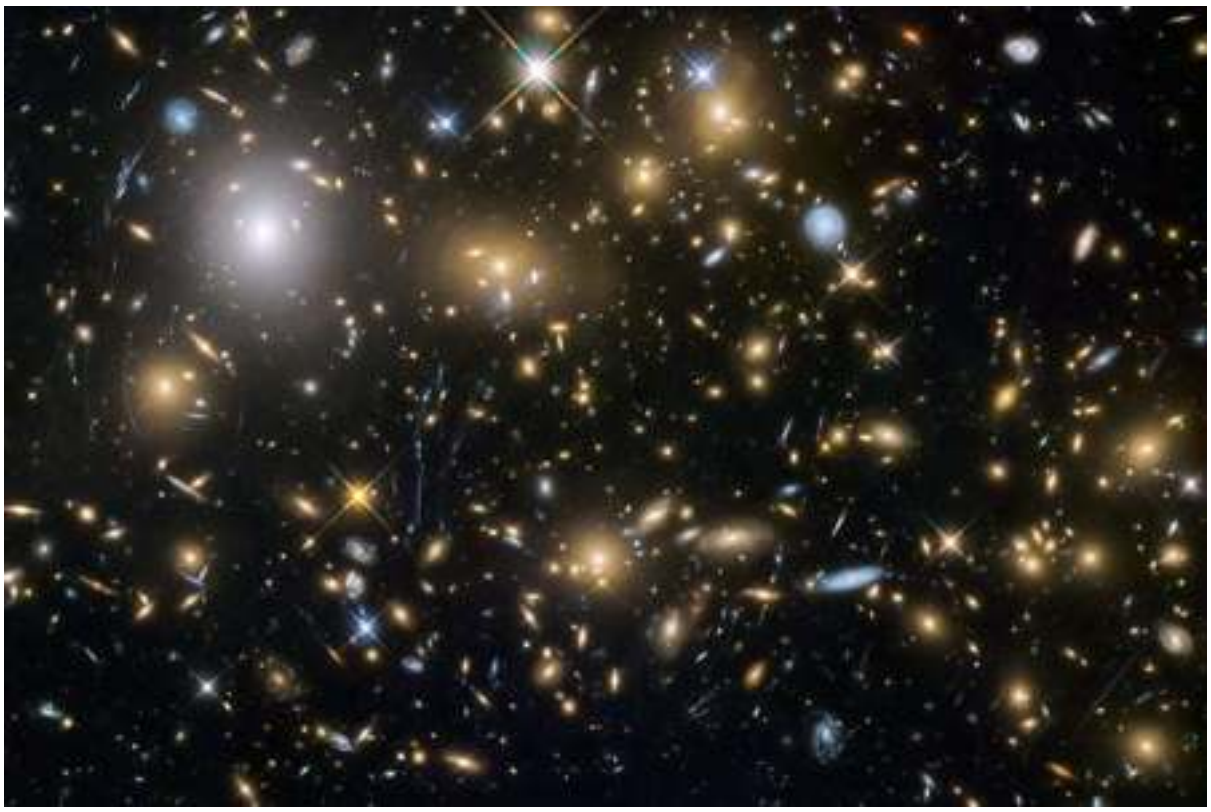
> "[T]his prospect was put forward as a purely scientific observation, it endowed those who accepted it with a feeling of overwhelming moral superiority. They acquired a sense of righteousness, and this in a paradoxical manner was fiercely intensified by the mechanical framework in which it was set. Their nihilism had prevented them from demanding justice in the name of justice or humanity in the name of humanity; these words were banned from their vocabulary, and their minds were closed to such concepts. But their moral aspirations, thus silenced and repressed, found an outlet in the scientific prediction of a perfect society. Here was set out a scientific utopia, relying for its fulfillment only on violence. Nihilists could accept, and would eagerly embrace, such a prophecy, which required from its disciples no other belief than a belief in the force of bodily appetites and yet at the same time satisfied their most extravagant moral hopes. Their sense of righteousness was thus reinforced by a calculated brutality born of scientific self-assurance. There emerged the modern fanatic, armored with impenetrable skepticism."



Scientism

Perhaps because most people do not even notice the verificationism we swim in, the above problems are simply lost on them. When we notice what we are doing, however, it is to champion it. Take for instance scientism. It is the belief that science, and science alone, can lead to truth in any form — scientific verificationism. This is the dominant form of verificationism for the average person today. Given enough time, there is no question science cannot answer. We take this further, believing that anything unscientific is either untrue or meaningless.

To test this, consider statements like 'God exists', 'she is prettier than her sister' and 'lying is wrong'. The first is metaphysics and yet the usual response is a demand for fiery handwriting in the sky as proof. The second is aesthetics, which is completely dead today because "beauty is in the eye of the beholder". This explains why an overweight tr@nsgender man is the current Miss USA. If you're one of those bigots who thinks those actual models are more attractive than 'her', try proving it scientifically. I'll wait. The last statement above is ethics, which is now the preserve of philosophers [*]. Common men don't need good and bad in their lives because Heaven and Hell are the church's tools of control. Besides, you can't discover them in a lab. So "do as thou wilt" has become the whole of the law.

Free-thinking modernists use verificationism or scientism in attacking tradition and religious belief, as noted above. Modernist Believers respond using facts, logic and argument. Both approaches characterize our age. By believing that our beliefs are only rationally or empirically verifiable, they are both subsumed by modernism. Fortunately, scientism is wrong in the very same ways outlined above. But why the support and championing of something that offends common sense?

The Dark Age Myth

The Dark Ages is a retroactive invention that sustains our modern malaise. The Dark Age Myth (DAM) here refers to an outright invention, exaggeration or misconstrual of past events in order to effect present change []. It is a common feature of modern thought, in whatever form: M@rxism, Feminism, American liberalism, etc. The DAM works by instilling fear in 'victims', inciting them to work to preserve their recent liberation from 'oppressors'. 'Oppressors', they are told, are eagerly working to revert the conditions guaranteeing their freedom and safety. As a result, people are divided, with one camp struggling (as though their lives depend on it) to preserve the status quo.

Conclusions

Choosing to extend the epistemology of the hard sciences to the rest of life has been far from rewarding. Yet, the modern project persists on those very grounds. If we are to make progress out of the mess we find ourselves, our efforts and inquiries will have to proceed from these facts. It is only when we are willing to recognize this and move forward that we have a chance.

In a future post I will examine the ideas here in light of feminism specifically.

Notes

[*] Philosophers have long labored to eradicate the religious aspects of morality, convincing many along the way. They bother because, while we cannot verify them, good and evil are important concepts in society. Therefore, they need to appropriate them. For instance, the entire field of modern ethics is an attempt to assimilate Christian morals into a modern system without recourse to God. When one philosopher proposes a version of utilitarianism, the others have no 'objective' (i.e., verifiable) grounds on which to attack it. To do that, they point out to him where his philosophy could lead to outcomes we already accept as bad. In other words, their standard for the correct ethical system is one corresponding to what we already believe (Christian or post-Christian ethics). But they insist on a proposition that could express it without Christianity. This assimilation is how we preserve attractive ideas that would otherwise be annihilated by verificationism.
[] This is the counterpart to the Golden Age Myth conservatives are often accused of.

Related

- Σ Frame: Science and Scripture (2009/11/20)
- Σ Frame: The Morphing Ethical System in the U.S. (2020/6/26)
- Σ Frame: Progressive (2020/11/10)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Anti-Progressive (2020/11/16)
- Σ Frame: Progressive is Regressive (2023/5/21)
- Not the Bee: Pastor Voddie Baucham sat down to spit □ at Ben Shapiro about masculinity, race, and the Gospel (2023/7/31)

The Spirit of Jezebel

Jack · 15 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Jezebel may be dead and gone, but her spirit of W!tchcr@ft remains.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

The End of the Feminist Site, Jezebel

Jezebel goes belly-up:

AP News: Jezebel, an incisive feminist voice since the height of the blogosphere era, is shutting down (2023/11/11)*

Vox also covered this development.

Vox Popoli: Aborted by the Market (2023/11/10)

This is stark evidence that the old Feminist / W0ke narrative is dead. The Red Pill won this particular battle. This was unthinkable just 5 years ago when the Red Pill was severely persecuted and the battle for truth seemed hopeless.

God uses the minor to defeat the major. All to His glory.

I'll take this occasion to elaborate on what I have learned about W!tchcr@ft, AKA the Jezebel Spirit. This is written with the force of authority and experience, because I have been the target of W!tchcraft in the past. It is a living həll, so please accept these gleanings of wisdom and learn from my experiences.

* H/T: Maniac

What is the Jezebel Spirit?

The name Jezebel, translated from Hebrew, means "Where is God?" It is fitting, because Jezebels reject the power of God and His grace.

Jezebel is mentioned several times in 1st and 2nd Kings. Those interested in reading these passages can do so by clicking on the link. A topical index of Jezebel in the Bible can be found here. Jezebel is noted for her idolatry, deception, and lies, and for robbing and killing innocent people, including the Lord's prophets. She is specifically called a W!tch (one who practices W!tchcr@ft) in 2 Kings 9:22.

Westerners living today tend to think of Jezebel as a horrendously evil character in a Bible story, but they fail to see the same sorts of behaviors, although not as diabolical, in people living today. Instead, they think of W!tchcr@ft in much the same way that they think of sorcery, spells, and curses — that is, merely superstitious stuff of fairy tales. Westerners scoff at these ideas, even while W!tchcr@ft runs rampant right under their noses, even within the church! Some pastors and churches do recognize operant W!tchcr@ft, but they shy away from calling it that and label it 'Spiritual Abuse' instead.

One concise way to think of W!tchery is a person who could break all 10 Commandments in a single day, or in a single deed, and still feel no guilt, and then manage to cover it up and get away with it.

Fallen humanity is evil, but it takes demonic superpowers to be this evil. Therefore, W!tchcr@ft is better described as a metaphysical or a paranormal, and at times, a supernatural phenomenon.

…or psychological.

A psychological assessment of someone with the behavioral traits that the Bible refers to as W!tchcraft would be categorized as narcissism, Narcissistic Personality Disorder (NPD) to be more precise, which can vary in its expression and severity. Therefore, the Jezebel Spirit is both narcissism and W!tchcr@ft.

Within the Narcissistic / Jezebel paradigm, it is believed that wealth, power, and status are what grant a good life, and are thus seen to be vehicles of blessings. Narcissists therefore are strongly attracted to, and cling tightly to powerful individuals, using charm and deceit to win their favor. In fact, the Jezebel Spirit (the controller) cannot operate without an Ahab Spirit (the person in power who is controlled). A Jezebel's primary goal is to influence the Ahab's decision making to fit their own debased world view. The ultimate goal is to gain wealth, power, status, security, and personal satisfaction through association with powerful figures and through manipulation by any means. In doing so, they avert genuine blessing and favor from the Lord through faith, and they often wreak great havoc on others in the process.

Traits of a Narcissist / W!tch

- Appearing to be very self-sufficient
- Arrogant
- Controlling / Manipulating
- Have a deep seated sense of rejection and reject others in turn (example).
- Insecure
- Meretricious / Salacious
- Proud
- Raging
- Sexually promiscuous
- Stubborn

Tactics of a Narcissist / W!tch

Here are a few of the most noteworthy tactics of control and manipulation used by Jezebels / Narcissists / W!tches. There may be others.

- Alternating between sentimentality (e.g. crying, emoting) and harsh anger and vengeance.
- Attacking and/or mocking symbols and vectors of one's dignity and self-respect, e.g. certain accomplishments, the male ego, righteousness, etc.
- Blaspheming God.
- Carefully orchestrating one's reputation, often deceptively.
- Cloying, false role playing, and lies, e.g. pretending to be affectionate / friendly / kind/ warm when they intend to betray / use / extract information, or pretending to have someone's back, while secreting ulterior motivations.
- Destroying the reputation of others by misinterpreting one's actions / behavior and presumptuously assigning base ulterior motives.
- Disregarding authorities, laws, rules, etc.
- Displaying contempt (e.g. arrogance, disgust, rolling her eyes, etc.), especially towards the righteous or those dealing with spiritual struggles.
- Exposing and ridiculing one's basic human needs (e.g. men's needs for honor, order, respect, sex, etc.).
- Flattery
- Gaslighting, often done with a multicomplex purpose: (1) To establish him/herself as an authority, (2) To undermine the confidence of others, and (3) to shift other's beliefs to the W!tch's world view.
- Indicating disapproval through casual annoyance, huffiness, sighing, a riveting eye gaze, etc. and refusing to discuss the issue.
- Inflicting self-consciousness in others, which is a barrier to confidence and faith.
- Lying, which can be very complex and intricate, as in casting spells.
- Passive aggressiveness
- Rage used as a form of intimidation and coercion
- Rebelling against male authority (i.e. father or husband)
- Secrecy
- Shaming others (example).

- Slandering good men, especially those who pose a challenge to the W!tch's controlling schemes.
- Using sex as a means of seduction, control, and influence, including things like baby anchors, baby trapping, and the threat thereof.

Effects of The Jezebel Spirit / W!tchcraft

Those who are subjected to W!tchcr@ft will suffer the following effects.

- A fallen countenance / poor emotional affect
- A sudden strong desire to drink, smoke, gamble, engage in risky behavior, etc. even if one has never done so in the past.
- Bitterness
- Chronic anger, especially with an unknown cause.
- Depression
- Exhaustion
- Fear (especially of confronting the Jezebel spirit because of the reaction you'll get)*
- Loneliness
- Lust, p0rnogr@phy, sexual immorality, or thoughts thereof
- Mysterious illnesses — most commonly things like chronic diarrhea, headaches, runny nose, etc., but could be something more serious, especially related to the digestive and/or nervous systems.
- Paranoia
- Resentment
- Severe anxiety
- Su!c!d@l thoughts

 This fear of rejection or withdrawal is perhaps the most obvious indicator of a Jezebel Spirit at work.*

Is it his problem, or hers?

Passport Bros Need to Beware of W!tchcraft

W!tchcr@ft is well recognized in Asia, especially the Philippines and Thailand. Of course, not ALL Filipino and Thai women are W!tches, but they are common in these cultures. One Filipino man (my ex-brother-in-law) once told me, "W!tchcr@ft is typical for couples in the Philippines. It is a way of life in the Philippines." I almost barfed.

Speaking of the Philippines, D. Bradley has written a piece about Filipina vs Western women (2023/1/19) in which he explains the general appeal of Filipina chicks to the Passport Bros. Yes, many Asian women are well honed in the arts of feminine graces, but some of them have ulterior motives for practicing these arts.

Passport Bros are especially susceptible to W!tchcraft here, because they are seen as wealthy powerful benefactors by these women, thus attracting a W!tch's attention, and they are totally naive about how W!tchcraft operates, thus marking them as easy targets.

Final Statements

Narcissists are deeply empty inside, and can find no inner peace and rest except through manipulating others to do their wishes. They will NOT repent because can find nothing to fill up the holes in their souls, they are totally consumed by their desires and their rage, and they are həllbent on having their own way. So do NOT waste your time and energy in the hope of redeeming them from their ways. Even professional psychiatrists can do nothing about NPD. Instead, you must expose their schemes and stand against them, or cut them out of your life entirely. Wisdom is required to know the best response in a given situation.

Warning: Confronting and/or escaping a W!tch is not a simple undertaking and should not be taken lightly. It may consume years of one's life and may bring great costs to one's finances, health, and reputation. For example, the great prophet Elijah feared for his life and resigned from being a prophet (1 Kings 19).

Finally, it should be noted that some individuals who might appear to be Narcissistic / W!tches are NOT knowingly, intentionally, bona-fide, card-carrying, full-fledged NPD W!tches. They are just big stupid dumb@sses who allow themselves to be controlled by the Jezebel Spirit through their own covetousness, envy, greed, insecurities, and lusts.

Prayer Against the Jezebel Spirit / Narcissism / W!tchcraft

If what is written here resonates with the reader's life experience, then it is quite possible that you've been a victim of W!tchcr@ft. If so, I urge you to pray the following prayer. Insert the name of the narcissist in the blanks.

> Dear Heavenly Father,
>
> Hear my/our prayer, and save Your servants from those who seek our lives.
>
> _____ has tried to create bad press against me/us, and perhaps others. Lord, as a result of _____'s behavior, I/we, and others that I/we know, have suffered a fallen countenance / anger / bitterness / depression / illnesses / resentment / (add your own), to the detriment of Your Kingdom. Forgive me/us for not standing strong against this evil and for succumbing to these ill effects. Increase my/our faith.
>
> I proclaim that the blood of Jesus Christ shall take precedence over any blood covenants that have held _____ in bondage to the enemy.
>
> Let a spiritual type of Jehu come and muster an army against the Jezebel spirit in _____. He shall give the command, muster the call, and pronounce Your Holy righteous judgment on his/her deeds.
>
> Let all the Ahabs and Herodians that have allowed themselves to be subject to his/her control be put to shame for submitting to this egotistical person, and for their failure to take a stand against him/her for what they know to be true.
>
> Raise up all _____'s victims, a hoard of spiritual eunuchs, to cast him/her down from his/her high place, and destroy his/her works.
>
> Disarm _____'s defenses, and may _____ be constantly confronted by spiritual authorities, thereby exposing her controlling, unrepentant nature. May his/her flesh be crucified.
>
> Let _____'s false repentance and humility be exposed for what it is: a contrived, manipulative tactic.
>
> Let _____'s slander be a public reflection of his/her own depraved heart.
>
> Let _____'s lies and exaggerations be manifested for what they are.

> Let _____’s boastful prayers be heard by the Christian community as a vain catharsis of his/her own selfish agendas.
>
> May _____’s murmuring and complaining become obvious for what it is, such that her criticism would be unbearable to those around her.
>
> I ask that I/we may be released from these effects, that I/we might not become spiritual victims of _____’s w!tchcraft. Heal me/us, and restore me/us, in the love of Jesus Christ.
>
> Grant me/us the power to conquer this evil. May his/her curses on us be transformed into blessings.
>
> In Jesus name I/we pray, A-men

Related

- Lord of Lords: How to Know if you’re dealing with a Jezebel Demonic Spirit (2022/4/11)
- To Reclaim Normality: Thou Shalt Not Suffer A W!tch to Live (2022/10/16)
- Christianity and Masculinity: The “Jezebel Spirit” (2023/1/19)
- The Transformed Wife (Lili Rose): Being Involved with a Jezebel (2024/1/28)

For those interested in learning more about the Jezebel Spirit, I recommend this sermon by Pastor Robert Morris.

STOP Tolerating the Jezebel Spirit — Robert Morris (2011/4/8)

The Spirit of Athaliah

Jack · 16 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The daughter of Jezebel works through bloodshed what she cannot work through lies and manipulation — all for power.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Author's Note: This essay was submitted on 2023/11/15 by a reader who wishes to remain anonymous. Edited by Jack.
Length: 950 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

A Mother's Influence

There have been some essays proffered by the Classic Manosphere (going off of memory here, so I cannot offer any links, unfortunately) that have described how women screw up their own children, and that a father must rein in these smothering mothering behaviours in order for the children to grow in a healthy manner. This may not be limited to W!tchcr@ft, but could include any number of controlling, petty, solipsistic traits inherent to women's nature.

Understanding this feminine phenomenon sheds a poignant light on this passage:

> "Notwithstanding she shall be saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety"
>
> I Timothy 2:15 (KJV)

Based on this passage, I believe the greatest proof of a woman's true faith is how she views children and how she raises them.

Generational Legacy

If you must test the fruit of a tree — to know its true roots — one must observe the child.

A child with a godless mother will say that he had a godless mother. Even a very rebellious child will confess, "I had a godly mother but I chose differently". But I have yet to meet a child who labelled a godly mother as a godless mother.

If the daughter is godly and the mother is a Jezebel, then she will not have any contact with her mother and will say clearly why that is.

In one post, Jack mentioned that his wife took after her mother, and that his marriage didn't improve until after he had convinced her to break (or limit) contact with her mother. Eutrapelia shared a similar testimony in the same post. It makes sense. Eutrapelia stated that his MIL had NPD. Jack's MIL may not be a Jezebel, but still, there were clearly some maladaptive habits / traits that needed to be cut. Years of frustration could have been avoided if the family legacy was understood and these generational dysfunctions were dealt with up front.

Jezebel's Generational Legacy

The true test of Jezebel as a mother is shown in the character of her daughter, Athaliah.

I find it interesting that whenever people talk about Jezebel, they rarely talk about her daughter Athaliah and her LEGACY. The Bible devotes many chapters to Athaliah (II Kings 8:16-29; 11; II Chronicles 22; 23).

Here's a quick recap of Athaliah's life.

Athaliah went on to become Queen of Judah (she married Jehoshaphat's son Jehoram). She brought Baal worship into Judah just like her mother Jezebel brought it to Israel. What Jehoshaphat was thinking by agreeing to his son marrying Ahab and Jezebel's daughter is beyond me since Jehoshaphat was a godly king. Anyway, he paid for it by forming an alliance with Ahab and fighting alongside Ahab who sent Jehoshaphat to battle pretending to be Ahab (last chapter of I Kings as I recall). This cloy almost cost him his life. Fortunately, God intervened and rescued him. (This is why the Bible warns about being unequally yoked)

When Athaliah's son Ahaziah was k!lled during Jehu's execution of justice on the house of Ahab, she k!lled her WHOLE FAMILY — HER OWN SONS AND GRANDSONS and also those of her husband, Jehoram, king of Judah — the entire Royal house (II Kings 11:1; II Chronicles 22:10) in order to secure the throne for herself to become Queen of Judah — for only six years and presumably without an heir to the throne.

Her ACTIONS prove the kind of woman she was. She was WORSE than her mother Jezebel.

Fortunately, Jehosheba, a half-sister* of Ahaziah, was married to a godly man — the High Priest Jehoiada and under his influence they managed to save one grandson, Joash. Joash was hidden by the priests and raised in the Temple. He later went on to k!ll Athaliah and become king.

 It is mentioned in II Kings 11:2 and II Chronicles 22:11 that Jehosheba was a daughter of King Jehoram but she was probably not Athaliah's daughter.*

Conclusions

To summarize the main points…

Jezebel left a LEGACY. That legacy was Athaliah.

Athaliah k!lled her own children / grandchildren to be QUEEN.

The Spirit of Athaliah (and the Spirit of Jezebel by extension) is the destruction of one's own offspring, k!ll!ng them either mortally or spiritually. Thus, the Spirit of Athaliah is linked to ABORTION.

In Abortion is a Betrayal! (2023/11/11), Jack mentioned that Abortion and Birth Control are forms of W!tchcr@ft. This is how the Spirit of Jezebel is linked to the Spirit of Athaliah which is manifested in the murdər of one's own children — abortion — which is the penultimate antithesis of I Timothy 2:15.

It is my belief that any woman who is PRO CHOICE — who believes in the right to abort, or has had an abortion — has the Spirit of Jezebel / Athaliah in her (unless she has truly repented since).

The Takeaways

On the topic of vetting for a wife, much has been said about a woman's relationship with her FATHER. But I say, DO NOT ignore the MOTHER. If the mother has a Jezebel spirit, the daughter could very well be an Athaliah.

1. Before you get married, check what LEGACY your fiancé holds. Which parent does she take after, her mother or her father? What is the character of that parent?
2. Before you get married, check her views about children and how she treats them. If this woman is going to be the MOTHER of your children, what kind of a mother is she going to be?
3. Before you get married, check her opinions on abortion. Watch out before wifing up a woman who has a casual or defensive attitude regarding abortion. It is a BLACK flag and should be added to your list of vetting factors.

Related

- Σ Frame: They shall be saved through child bearing. (2019/5/9)
- Reddit/RPChristians: Are women really "saved through child-bearing"? Yes. (2020/6/17)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): What can a husband do in response to a rebellious wife? (2022/1/31)
- Σ Frame: The Simp (2022/5/27)
- Σ Frame: Misplaced Motherhood (2023/5/22)
- Σ Frame: Dealing with the Mother-in-Law Curse (2023/5/24)

More on the Spirits of Jezebel and Athaliah

Jack · 17 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

They are the spirits of our age, of feminism, and even of our churches, and we see the same horrific consequences manifested.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Author's Note: This essay was submitted on 2023/11/16 by a reader who wishes to remain anonymous. Edited by Jack.
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

What is the Difference between the Spirit of Jezebel and the Spirit of Athaliah?

As mentioned in The Spirit of Athaliah (2023/11/16), when Athaliah heard of her son Ahaziah's death, she had the entire royal household put to death, except for Joash who was hidden away by the priest and his wife until he came of age and took the throne. Athaliah is noted as being the only woman who usurped the throne of either Israel or Judah through f!l!cide.

The outstanding question is this: Why, instead of putting another son on the throne, did she choose to destroy her OWN sons and grandsons, leaving no heir to the throne?

This is where we see a difference between Jezebel and Athaliah.

Jezebel murdered her enemies and opponents to amass lands, power, and wealth for her husband, Ahab.

Athaliah murdered her own family to monopolize power for HERSELF.

The Spirit of Athaliah is like the Jezebel Spirit on steroids.

To further explain the differences, an earlier post, The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15), mentioned this:

> "In fact, the Jezebel Spirit (the controller) cannot operate without an Ahab Spirit (the person in power who is controlled). A Jezebel's primary goal is to influence the Ahab's decision making to fit their own debased world view. The ultimate goal is to gain wealth, power, status, security, and personal satisfaction through association with powerful figures and through manipulation by any means. In doing so, they avert genuine blessing and favor from the Lord through faith, and they often wreak great havoc on others in the process."

The Jezebel Spirit works in conjunction with an Ahab Spirit — a controlling woman and a controlled man.

Athaliah could have easily controlled any of her sons or grandsons who would have otherwise became king, simply because she was their mother / grandmother and their father and older brothers were dead.

But Athaliah was not content to just be the wife of a king or the queen mother. She did not want to control ANY man. She wanted to be the ABSOLUTE RULER. She wanted ABSOLUTE power for HERSELF. So upon the death of her son Ahaziah, she took full advantage of the vacuum of power to become the monarch.

Feminism Channels the Spirit of Athaliah

Women would prefer to have a Tingle inducing LAMPS type man whom they can control (i.e. The Curse of Eve / the Jezebel Spirit). But if they cannot lock down a HSM, then they do NOT want to share life with men AT ALL. They are NOT content with marriage, family, and children, but are willing to sacrifice these (via by debasing their marital sanctity by riding the carousel, by having abortions, by postponing marriage until well past the sell by date, by filing for divorce, by subjecting their children to the curse of divorce, by cleaning out their ex-husbands, and so on), all for their OWN independence and self-sufficiency.

Is that not the end goal of Feminism? — the ultimate power trip to overturn the punishment of Genesis 3:16 — to control not just A man, but ALL men to the extent of having DOMINION over them? The end game is not just power and control — like with Jezebel and Ahab – the end game is total annihilation with NOBODY to challenge or question her. She is an ABSOLUTE RULER.

At least, it seems like that is where Feminism is taking us — from controlling men to dominating them to exterminating them.

The Spirit of Athaliah in the Church

Have you noticed that pastors and churches exhort men to be "servant leaders"? It is also equally exhorted that men should treat their wives like a Queen. Except Queens marry Kings NOT servants. And even then, the King calls the shots — not the other way around. The King chooses a woman to be his Queen — not the other way around. Should not the exhortation be made that if wives want to be treated like a Queen, then they should treat their husband like a King?

When a wife / queen is submissive to her husband / king and respects his decisions, there is peace and wellbeing among God's people / in the kingdom.

The story of Esther makes this quite clear. King Ahasuerus had a proud unsubmissive queen, Vashti. She was dismissed for the reason that she would set a bad example as Queen and inspire other women to rebellion (Esther 1:10-22). Esther was a good queen because she submitted to Ahasuerus authority, served him as king (Esther 5:1-8), and influenced him through respectful requests and appeals for justice (Esther 7:1-6).

Bathsheba was a respectful and submissive queen but she almost cost her son Solomon the throne when King David was incapacitated in the Abishag incident (I Kings 2:13-25).

The only independent queens I recall from the Bible are the Queen of Sheba (I Kings 10:1-13; II Chronicles 9:1-12) and Queen Candace (Acts 8:27), but they were not Jəw!sh queens and the Bible does not say whether they were good queens or absolute monarchs or were just representing their husbands.

Back to my point, we do NOT see women in the church exemplifying the behavior of these good queens. We do NOT see respectful and submissive behavior of women towards their husbands. What we DO see are demands for men to "Man up!" and to be "servant leaders" and the regular denigration of men, masculinity, fathers, and fatherhood (often with humor, which is essentially mocking men). This is just like the Spirit of Athalia — women do NOT want to help, respect, nor serve men. They want to dominate their churches and rule their marriages by THEMSELVES. If a husband will not submit to and serve his wife, then it is "No sex for you!" at best, and divorce at worst. And the church tacitly condones the former (again, often with sarcastic humor) and shakes their collective heads and looks the other way with the latter. There is no enforcement of male authority.

Catholics are not exempted, although their problems are much different. I do think it is paganism when the pope condones h0m0səxu@lity and Mary is referred to as the "Queen of Heaven". But I am not Catholic, so I cannot say anything more.

More Unsettling Parallels

Revelation Chapter 2 refers to the Jezebel Spirit.

> [20] Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.
> [21] And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.
> [22] Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.
> [23] And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works.
>
> Revelation 2:20-23 (KJV)

As per above, the Jezebel Spirit is linked to fornication and the death of children. But the latter is either a consequence of her own sins (of fornicating and/or teaching fornication) or a punishment from the Lord. Whereas with the Athaliah Spirit, the death of her children comes by her own hand, i.e. abortion. Moreover, it is evident that fornication leads to the death of children at some point down the generational line. This is exactly what has happened in the West — Boomers normalized fornication through the Sexual Revolution; Xers endured the worst of the divorce epidemic and grew up as latchkey kids; then about 28% of Millennials were eliminated through abortion. Now, Gen Z has gender dysphoria, pədo0ph!li@, and the Tr@ns nightmare, and marriage is at an all time low. Where will it end?

Child Sacrifice

In the Old Testament, child sacrifice was always done in the context of a burnt sacrifice. In modern times, child sacrifice is done legally through abortion. Did you ever wonder what happens to the foetus after an abortion? The foetus is NOT buried or given a funeral. It is treated as medical waste. What is done with medical waste? It is INCINERATED. So abortion is literally a BURNT sacrifice of a child!

And this is LEGAL!!!

We might take some comfort in knowing that the children are not burned ALIVE as was done in ancient times. Instead, they are murdəred inside their mother's OWN womb, and with her full consent. The mother's BODY with her knees bent and legs spread in the stirrups IS the ALTAR of sacrifice. I'm not sure which is worse.

Final Thoughts

As per Acts 15:20, the only requirements for Gentile believers under the New Covenant (apart from faith in Christ) were to abstain from the spiritual pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from eating blood or strangled animals.

Again these things were FORBIDDEN to Gentile believers. These are the ONLY requirements from Gentile believers apart from faith in Christ, and yet we have trespassed these very simple requirements for remaining in the Covenant.

This does not EXACTLY characterize the sins of our age. We do have many forms of idolatry (the centrality of romantic love and sex, gynocentrism, lust, etc.). We do have widespread fornication. We do have bloodshed as a direct result of abortion — a sacrifice to the idols of this age — convenience, materialism, selfishness, and Feminism. But we do NOT have the eating of blood nor the strangulation of animals (to my knowledge, anyway). Therefore, the best characterization of our age is the Spirit of Athaliah.

Unbelievers are unbelievers but Christians are called to different standards. We are not just called to believe IN Christ but believe GOD when He says,

> Children are a gift / heritage / inheritance from the Lord; the fruit of the womb is to be desired / a blessing / a reward from HIM.
>
> Psalms 127:3

All the above ties in with I Timothy 2:15 — the spiritual fruits of a woman is best seen in how she views, treats, and raises children.

When you consider the above, and you see abortion statistics, all I can say is Maranatha!!! Come Jesus come!!!

Related

- Σ Frame: Eunuchs of the New Feminist Order (2019/8/31)
- Σ Frame: 6 Fundamental Goals Feminists have for Social Change. (2020/9/18)
- Σ Frame: Ressentiment within Feminism has become a Generational Curse (2022/6/24)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): No Mo Roe (2022/6/27)
- Σ Frame: No Mo Roe, No Mo Hoe! (2022/6/29)
- Σ Frame: No Mo Hoe? Oh No! (2022/7/1)
- Σ Frame: Abortion is a Betrayal! (2023/11/11)

Sexual Promiscuity is the Doorway to Witchdom

Jack · 18 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

How heartbreak leads to W!tchery.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 450 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes +

Maybe you read that title thinking it was a joke. It's not. It's true.

A most poignant transformation of a young woman's sexual conversion to W!tchdom was portrayed in the 2013 movie, Oz, The Great and Powerful, which was written as a prequel to the famous 1939 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film, The Wizard of Oz, by L. Frank Baum. This prequel explains the origins of the w!tches in the story.

In the 2013 film, Mila Kunis stars as Theodora, a naïve young woman who falls in love with a charlatan, Oscar Diggs, played by James Franco. Her older sister, Evanora (AKA the Wicked W!tch of the East), tricks Theodora into thinking Oscar is messing around with 3 women (Evanora, Theodora, and Glinda) and has betrayed them both for Glinda. Upon hearing these lies, Theodora is heartbroken. Evanora (who had already converted to W!tchdom) offers her a magic apple to remove her heartache by giving her the power to kill Oscar. She takes the apple and is consumed by her rage, and then she is transformed into the Wicked W!tch of the West.

The real tragedy is that we see this happening every day among young women all around us, although the details and dramaticism are hidden from public observance.

It works just like what is portrayed in the 2013 film. Young women fall in love with a charming but shifty Ch@d and become imbrued with sexual affections for him. The typical course of events eventually ends with her being spurned (repudiated) by him, or it becomes known to her that she is one of many women in his soft harem. Her being heartbroken is a necessary element in the equation. Actually, being cheated on and/or repudiated is not even necessary to invoke her demise. All it takes is for things to not "work out" according to her desires, dreams, and/or expectations. When her solipsistic fantasies of love and romance are shattered, it may be enough to inflict the heartbreak that is required to turn her to the dark side.

Also in accordance with the film, other women often play a central role in feeding each other dirty lies, encouraging debauchery, and setting each other up to fail.

Mila Kunis as the Wicked W!tch of the West. The attention to detail in cosmetic effects is striking. They even got the RBF and 1,000 C0ck stare right!

These days, sexual promiscuity (i.e. the carousel) is the predominant doorway to W!tchdom, especially for women, that is, women engaging in sexual relations with HSM without first obtaining his commitment — which sooner or later culminates in a broken heart and psychopathic craziness. So it is not surprising that many promiscuous Western women are also narcissistic Jezebels, if we would have the gall to call them such.

Other than sexual promiscuity, there is strong evidence that narcissism is heritable through a combination of genetics and nurture. Studies show that there is a 50% chance of inheriting narcissism. There is real evidence of a generational curse at work.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15)
- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Athaliah (2023/11/16)
- Σ Frame: More on the Spirits of Jezebel and Athaliah (2023/11/17)

Testimony from a Reader Battling Witchcraft

Jack · 20 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Answered prayers and help from above.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 840 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

In response to The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15), a reader wrote me a private email on 2023/11/19 to say,

> Jack,
>
> Stats: Married for over 15 years; filed for divorce in May 2019, divorce finalized in January 2022; 2 teenage kids alienated, she got the house and $200K in cash last year.
>
> Background: During the divorce, she embezzled $1000 out of our last joint checking account we had for the business. When I closed out the account, I took note of it, and on the final ledger I deducted her $1000 out of the final number… Needless to say she was pissed.
>
> Current Situation: We are dealing with a custody thing with my youngest daughter (17) at the courthouse and she's sabotaging the efforts at every turn.

> I've been dealing with this for years now with my ex. I've been so frustrated in trying to explain to people how terrible she is. They don't believe me because she puts on a sweet face for them.
>
> Thank you so much for the prayer.* Thursday night I stopped what I was doing after reading your column and said that prayer aloud.
>
> It worked. Crazy left me a voicemail last night that exposed who/what she is.
>
> NSFW warning!!!!!!

Voice recording file

> It's now been almost 2 years since the divorce was final, and she's still like this.
>
> After swiping the house and $200K, she's this mad over $600!
>
> What's even crazier is that there was someone in the car with her at the time agreeing!
>
> I knew she was a nasty human, but I never associated it with w!tchcr@ft until I read your post. I do believe she is possessed now (story for another day) and has an evil heart for sure.
>
> I'm giving this and 4 other similar messages to the lawyer to share with the Judge. Maybe now they'll believe me.
>
> Please share. Not only is it an example of the power of prayer, it also will show men what a woman like that is like. Maybe it will help others 'hear' and 'understand' what you are talking about. Real life examples and all that. Most men don't have any clue what women can really be like, and if it saves just one young man / white knight it will be worth it.

 This prayer was at the end of the post cited above.*

Sexual History

Part of my understanding of witchcraft is that it is borne out of the heartaches of sexual sin. I described this phenomenon in my last post.

In an effort to gather correlating data on this hypothesis, I wrote him a follow up email to ask him about this.

> "If you don't mind me asking, what is your ex's sexual history? If you'd rather not be too specific, then do you think that has contributed to her W!tch with a B behaviors?"

He responded,

> "Read your latest post and I think you are on to something there, in terms of my ex's past. She was really, really closed lipped about it, but here's what I have deduced from listening to her family and friends tell stories:

- She was sexually abused as a small child (under 5) from an extended family member.
- This led to her parents separating, but living under the same roof.
- Her dad was the town Cad.
- Her mother was orphaned at age 12.
- Her mother took out her anger and frustration on her.
- She endured physical and psychological abuse (for example, they disciplined her by whipping her with a switch until it drew blood).
- Her grandparents were a known cuckholding couple.
- She was probably sexually active in high school.
- She moved from North Carolina to Miami Florida as soon as she graduated from HS, not knowing a soul down there.
- She was friends with strippers.
- During the divorce, I found out that she was engaged at some point while she was in FL, and that she bought a house with a man who grew and sold pot.

> When I asked her if she had ever done p@rn or stripped, she disassociated and got this serene look on her face and said, "No. I knew people like that but I never did it myself. I'm a good Christian girl, ya know? [wink wink] God kept me in a 'bubble' and protected me from that sin."
>
> Riiight!
>
> I met her post wall, and she was a travel nurse* who told me all the pretty lies.
>
> She clearly came from a hard and difficult background, but she chose the path she did, I did everything I could to lead her, but at the end she chose evil, death and sin.

Hypothesis confirmed.

 Nurses are known to be some of the most promiscuous women, as a profession.*

Related

- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15)
- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Athaliah (2023/11/16)
- Σ Frame: More on the Spirits of Jezebel and Athaliah (2023/11/17)

- Σ Frame: Sexual Promiscuity is the Doorway to Witchdom (2023/11/18)

Slut Faming

Jack · 21 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

How young women are seduced into accepting promiscuity as the norm.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Introduction

Red Pill Apostle's post, The Cultural Myth of the SIW (2023/11/8) covered the faux glorification of masculine women in movies. The darker side of this trope which he didn't go into is how modern women aspire to be sexual conquistadors. Once in a while, we'll hear some women openly declare that women want "to have sex like men" (sic), even though they're obviously lacking the hardwood. What they mean is that they desire to channel their inner slore such to be as freely promiscuous as top SMV HSM playboys, and only with top SMV men as if they were a dime a dozen.*

Gee… Where do they get this idea?

Advertisement for Burberry depicting the poly rotating metrosexual lifestyle lauded for its "fashion appeal".
The sexual objectification of wimmin is roundly condemned by feministas — except when women choose to objectify themselves for the sake of attention and SMP status, and in this special circumstance, female sexual objectification is glorified! Thus, we see S1ut Faming everywhere on the media, being covertly passed off as "fashion", "lifestyle", "popularity", and "self-fulfillment".

S1ut Faming and the glorification of sexual liberation are ubiquitous in advertisements, movies, television, and online literature. RPA already covered women in films. Here, I'll go over famous female personas and women's literature.

 The fact is that there aren't enough HSM to go around, so they end up sharing them in rotating soft polyharems.*

Case Study — K!m Kard@sh!an

The wealthiest wh0re of the West, K!m Kard@sh!an, is the most ostentatious epitome of this archetype.

Time magazine included K@rd@sh!an on their list of 2015's 100 most influential people, while Vogue described her in 2016 as a "pop culture phenomenon". Critics and admirers have described her as exemplifying the notion of being "famous for being famous" (Translation: "famous for being a female sex symbol"), and she has used her fame to exemplify the star feminist, which the media has amply designated for prime exposure to push s1ut faming to the full.

Forbes reported that "she has monetized fame better than any other", through fashion ventures and television production. She was reported to be the highest-paid reality television personality of 2015, with her total earnings exceeding US$53 million. Taking after her sister, Kylie Jenner was the top earning female last year.

Remember, the definition of a wh0re is a woman who monetizes her sexuality.

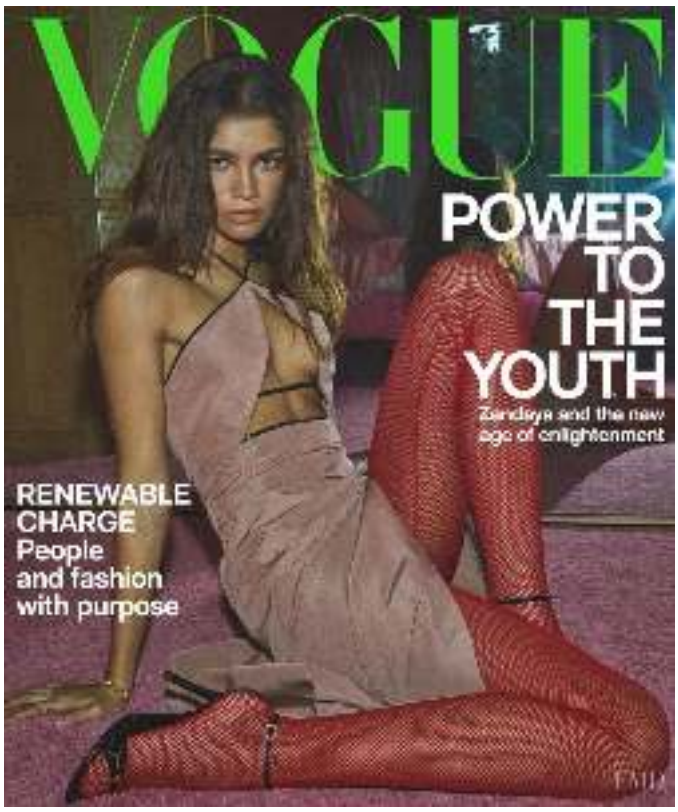
Hailing from a family spoiled by fame, wealth, and affluence, it would seem that finding 'self-fulfillment' would be a walk down Figueroa St. for her — a far cry from the real challenges involved with true character building.

Instead, she has engaged in multiple marriages rife with affairs, contrived to generate money through the sensationalistic media attention of subsequent divorces. She has also used her ample a$$ets to bring her expertise in the p0rn industry into every family's home on prime time television. Then she emphasized this point by appearing in Playboy magazine, which 'normalized' her lewd lifestyle in the minds of many Americans.

Meanwhile, middle America has come to accept KK as a common household name, while millions of young women are frequenting the local gym, doing squats and deadlifts until they can achieve the steatopygic bubble butt that has swept Hollywood by storm. When these women hit 50, those huge droopy glutes will surely eye bleach the younger generations.

Case Study — Women's Literature

Women's media producers, like Allure, Babe, Bazaar, Cosmopolitan, Elle, Essence, Glamour, InStyle, RedBook, Self, Vanity Fair, Vogue, W, and others all contain a Gnostic appeal to female fantasy, solipsism, and the Feminine Imperative, and press the concept of female primacy — all politely presented as "lifestyle". Role models similar in essence to the Kard@sh!ans are amply showcased (e.g. Jessica Alba, Cameron Diaz, Eva Mendez, Aubrey Plaza, Brittney Spears, et al.).



Vogue Australia, March 2020 edition.

- These sites specifically employ a level of psychological sophistication in their marketing to target horny, naïve teenage girls and present bimbofication as the norm.
- Personal pronouns ("Attract the man of your dreams.") and open ended promises are ubiquitously employed ("You can have better orgasms."), which leave the subject open to the reader's imaginative interpretation. For example, InStyle often quips, "where the reader is the celebrity".
- Trendy vernacular is masterfully presented to appeal to adolescent girls who are ripe for the psychological plundering, which is no mere coincidence. For example, colloquial buzz terms like "Whatever…", and "Ask me later", are often used, which I might add are dead giveaways for liars.
- These sites actively promote erotic literature [example] and p0rn [example].
- Magazines and online sites that cater to women's competitive sexuality outnumber all other genres.
- Female authors outnumber males, thus contributing to the hegemony.

Cosmopolitan, August 2010 edition.

Some soul shackling examples from the website, Babe, are as follows.

- Babe (feat. Amanda Ross): You Should Sleep With At Least 25 Guys Before Settling Down, And I'll Tell You Exactly Why (2017/12/26)
- Babe (feat. Caroline Finney): I've Cheated On Every Guy I've Ever Dated, and I Don't Feel Even A Little Bit Sorry (2018/2/21)
- Babe (feat. Ari Bines): If You Want A Relationship With Them, Have Sex On The First Date (2018/2/28)

Of particular note, Chateau Heartiste offered a commentary on Caroline Finney's article, entitled, The Fake Bravado of the Gross Skank (2018/3/4).

Lies upon lies! Leading to lays upon lays! Resulting in slores upon slores!

The most shocking thing about this is that these slores become a starring role model for failure when they offer apparent 'confirmations' of those lies through their own 'lifestyles', and write 'fashionable', trendy articles about it, and yet they still continue to be admired as famous social role models.

Why?

These lies become attractive and convincing when these 'confirmations' are offered as 'proof' that Satan truly follows through on his promises, and rewards his feminions with unmitigated sexual indiscretions and handsome stud butler services.

Conclusions

The nude backbone of s1ut faming is the semiotic illusion of female sexual power and the accompanying sexual authority, as RPA described. Granted, this is one of the few forms of authentic power that women have over men, but the willingness to wield this power openly and publicly has now lost all sense of opprobrium.

The basic recipe for $1ut Faming consists of a contrived 'success story', offering affirmation, narratives of justification, role models to be admired and emulated, and sometimes even mentorship. All this is peddled as a package deal, 'lifestyle'.

The qualifications for 'success' always require the traditional Christian moral value system to be flipped on its head, with women professing pride in their high notch counts, and making promiscuity appear 'normal', widespread, and socially acceptable. This is one of those things where it's only true if you believe it, and TPTB have used the media for decades to get a critical mass of the public to believe it.

Advertisement for Hermes depicting obscene feminine arousal.

The way S1ut Faming fits into the W!tchy War on Masculinity is that it casts a spell of fleshly materialism and sex-centrism over the minds of young women, seduces them into promiscuity, spoils them for marriage, and transforms them into enemies of God's ordained order. (See links below for more detail.) Men are left with fewer and lower quality women as companions and they have to deal with all the aftermath of their corruption. To state that this is greatly discouraging and disheartening to men is an understatement.

It could fairly be said that K!m Kard@sh!an and Cosmopolitan magazine indirectly created MGTOW.

Related

- Σ Frame: Yet another variety of Internet Whoring (2019/10/9)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Advent of Polysexuality (2021/7/30)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: How other cultures deal with adultery (2020/8/5)
- Σ Frame: The Addictive Nature of the Online Amateur Sex Industry (2021/1/20)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Centrality of Sex in Western Culture (2021/2/8)
- Σ Frame: YOLO = FOMO (2021/5/19)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Incentives for Bimbofication (2021/8/23)
- The American Mind: The Millionaire Slut Apologists (2023/10/31)

Dealing with Feminine Insecurity

Jack · 22 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Be Domain oriented!

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Introduction

Deep Strength had an insightful post, Mastering the "domain" of women (2023/3/11), in which he reported and reviewed a PUA / early MGTOW era breakdown of Shaming tactics* commonly used by women. If you've ever had to deal with a contentious woman, this system offers a straightforward method of compartmentalizing the shizz.

A post like this should have 100+ comments filled with readers' insights and testimonies. (The reblogged article had over 500 comments!) But DS's post hasn't had any so far! What's going on? It is impossible to believe that women magically stopped using all these shaming tactics since the original article appeared 15 years ago!

The Frame: Domain Oriented

The hang-up is in how DS reframed these shaming tactics as being the "Domain" of wimmin. Granted, he's not wrong. Women have artfully mastered the Shame Game much more adroitly than men ever have. The problem is in thinking that men need to infiltrate women's "Domain" in order to deal with them successfully. This is reminiscent of the old PUA approach that caters to women's desires and whims in order to seduce them. Moreover, it's not the attitude of Headship.

DS wrote,

> "…most of the PUA responses were built to take on charges like this with tactics such as agree and amplify, > ignore, reframing, etc.

>
> However, most manipulation and control tactics are actually a response to the insecurity of the person and their projection of their own insecurity onto what you are saying."

That last sentence is a gem. However, instead of thinking of Game as "manipulation and control tactics", it would be advantageously helpful for us to think of it as an effective response to the manipulation and control tactics of insecure women. Keep in mind that the last couple generations of women have been force fed the notion that Men are their competitors, not their Heads. The feminist attempt to eliminate "toxic masculinity" is designed to cut out the natural advantage men have over women and make the playing field more "equal". Nevertheless, if wimmin choose to be men's competitors, then the proper response is to respect their decision and treat them as such. This should be done in the hope of seeing them wake up from their delusions and see that trusting a man can be an asset to her life. Ideally, a man having a strong Game should convince a woman that he can be trusted.

Moreover, the right mindset for men to have is to be looking for ways to build and enhance his own Domain, not play into hers.

Causes of Insecurity

The primary contribution of DS's post was in identifying women's insecurity as the generalized source of all these shaming tactics.

DS wrote,

> "…most manipulation and control tactics are actually a response to the insecurity of the person and their projection of their own insecurity onto what you are saying."

I'll go one step further to say that the cause of feminine Insecurity is a concentrated focus on the Feeelz combined with a lack of Trust. This may also explain many other female behaviors — hamstering, sh!t tests, and solipsism, to name a few.

> "It is often the case that many of these responses come out of nowhere. In other words, if you're on a topic > and everyone is calm, but then there's a disproportional response to something said. This typically means someone has some history with the topic and is insecure about it for whatever reason."

If we're going to dive into "history", then the man is acting as her defacto personal psychologist. So before he embarks on this journey, the man needs to first ask himself a few questions…

- "Is this within MY domain of authority?"
- "Is this MY responsibility?"

Responses to Insecurity

DS wrote,

> "Hence, why arguing is almost invariably a 100% wrong response. You can't win an argument against the insecurities of another person."

Right! A cognitive approach cannot fill the hole in her Heart.

> "You need to dig and address those insecurities."

In my view, this is exactly what charismatic Game does. It addresses desire and motivation. It digs into the women's insecurities. It pulls back the veil of feminine pride and reveals it for what it is — insecurity and distrust. This is a roadblock preventing trust that needs to be removed. The Humility inflicted by Game leads to Trust — and Lurrve!

> "If you want to help them resolve it, you can — and usually at a later time when emotions are lower — ask them what seemed to provoke that type of response. Usually it's something in their past with their family, friends, enemies, or whatever issues they haven't resolved. Once they realize that they can work through it with Christian values forgiving if they need to forgive, prayer, meditation on the Word for the topic, and other > things like fasting."

What DS is suggesting is known in psychology as Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT). Basically, CBT is the approach of getting a person to think about their behaviors from an objective viewpoint and imagine better ways of dealing with their issues, ways which are then employed. IOW, it encourages self-awareness and personal agency. CBT has been shown to be a very effective method of treatment for many disorders, including Addictions, Anger, Anorexia, Anxiety, Bipolar Personality Disorder, Bulimia, Depression, Insomnia, Obsessive Compulsive Disorder, Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, Psychosis, and Schizophrenia.

Getting to the root of the issue is indeed very important. But CBT only works if the patient is willing. Short of willingness, asking a woman what provoked her shame games is a cognitive mind game in itself that amounts to little more than shaming her for shaming you. You're going to have limited results with this tactic — unless she already trusts you enough to feeel comfortable talking about her unresolved issues and is willing to employ CBT for herself. IOW, she must be agreeable, willing, and somewhat submissive. In this case, you're talking on the role of being her pastor / counselor / psychologist, and this is a function that should be limited to women who are already under your domain. If she's NOT agreeable and submissive (which is the very definition of a contentious woman), then you must first break down the walls of distrust and insecurity.

Conclusions

It would help Christian men immensely if they nurtured the view of women as being insecure and needy, rather than as strong, independent, etc., and for several reasons, some having real benefits.

1. It's a more accurate and truthful assessment of women.
2. Men can be better mentally prepared to deal with said insecurities in a timely manner.
3. Men won't be surprised and/or blindsided when women's worst behavior comes to the fore.
4. Men are better able to recognize and appreciate the good things that a woman brings into his life and reward her for it.

However, the fundamental lack of trust that is common in intersexual relationships these days is exactly why I am a proponent of charismatic Game. You've got to hold women at arm's length and deal with her shame games effectively while holding your ground and protecting yourself.

In summary…

1. Be Domain oriented!
2. IF she IS under your domain, and IS able to Trust, try employing CBT.
3. IF she IS under your domain, but is immature (i.e. lacking agency) and/or NOT able to Trust, there is NO go-to solution. In this case, a man's wits will be tested to figure out what will goad her to growth. It could be Game, it could be kindness and patience, it could be steadfast Christian Love, or some other approach, all depending on her condition and her personality.
4. IF she's NOT under your domain, Christian Game is the way to go.
5. If trust is present, and the woman is agentic and emotionally mature, then no Game is needed and could even be detrimental. CBT may prove beneficial.
6. When dealing with women who are so insecure / immature that they're lashing out with Shame Games, CBT is NOT an option — unless it is couched in The Question Apology Game.

 The original article, entitled* The Catalogue of Anti-Male Shaming Tactics (2007/9/30), appeared on menforjustice.net and has since been removed. For the reader's convenience, I've made a PDF of the reblogged article, complete with comments. An infographic can be found at the link to MGTOW Voice below.

Related

- MGTOW Voice: Anti-Male Shaming Tactics Infographic (2018/3/1)
- Σ Frame: On the Spiritual Significance and Social Value of Game (2019/11/3)
- Σ Frame: Why does Game work? (2019/12/9)
- Σ Frame: A Revised Understanding of Game (2020/9/14)
- Σ Frame: Not Trusting women is Deep Inner Game (2021/12/15)
- Σ Frame: Game is an invitation to Humility (2022/10/25)

Skirting around the Skirts

thedeti · 24 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Here's what Renn, Reeves, and Emba will never examine.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Women
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Readers' Note: Part of a mini-series on the new "Pity Men" narrative.
Author's Note: Based on my series of comments. Coauthored with Jack.
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Introduction

Jack and I have already written a couple posts covering the new narrative that pseudo-conservative mouthpieces have woven together over the past several months. The problem is not so much what they are saying, but what they are NOT saying. They are discussing men's issues and problems as a catharsis, because it can no longer be denied. But they're NOT discussing women's place and role in the new order of things, because that would be seen as men calling the shots, and that would be m!sogyny / patriarchy / toxic masculinity / etc.

So what is it that Renn, Reeves, Emba, et al. won't address? What needs to happen for marriage and society to be restored?

Whattabout Women?

If we want to improve men, and if we want men and women to "rise together" as Emba has said, then women will have to take sexuality and marriage more seriously. How are women to do this? I'll spell it out for Renn, Reeves, Emba, and the others who are wallowing in consternation and wringing their hands about all this.

1. They'll have to bear the cross of their end of the Covenant.
2. They'll need to see themselves as lacking critical thinking skills and moral agency, and are therefore dependent on a man (father or husband) to cover, protect, and provide for them. Nothing less will inspire a man to fulfill those roles. It doesn't even need to be genuine, but it does need to be sincere. IOW, give men some appreciation and respect.
3. They'll have to be more conscientious about respecting men and male interests and deferring to their decisions.
4. They'll have to at least be willing to submit to the authority of their fathers before marriage, and to their husbands after, just as the Bible says.
5. They'll need to make a diligent effort to develop domestic and social skills, dress modestly, stay thin, and in general, make themselves into the kind of woman that a man would be enthusiastic to marry.
6. They'll have to view their feeelings as a distraction of the flesh and get more in tune with genuine spiritual discernment.
7. They'll need to forego "finding themselves" in the context of a sex-drenched culture.
8. They'll have to skip the carousel and go straight to marriage.
9. They'll have to face their FOMO as a cost of opportunity.
10. They'll need to marry before they'll be faced with the need to freeze their eggs.
11. They may have to lower their standards for men to be somewhat less than fantastically astronomical.
12. They might have to date, marry, have sex with, and procreate with, the nice, kind, good Christian men they say they want but don't really want.

In short, women need to repent from believing in all the liberal feminist lies and life scripts — and there is the hang-up. Most women patently refuse to do so.

Mr. Renn, Mr. Reeves, Ms. Emba: The women you're talking to and about do not want their SMV / RMV / MMV counterparts. The average unmarried woman, including Christian women, has already had sex or is having sex with more attractive men than the ones who will ever consider her for marriage. Any self-respecting man that any woman would want to marry will NOT want to marry such a woman.

Women don't want the men they can have. They want the men they can NOT have.

THAT is the problem. You need to address THAT. You need to be talking to women about curtailing their own sexual conduct.

Buhut... Whattabout Men?

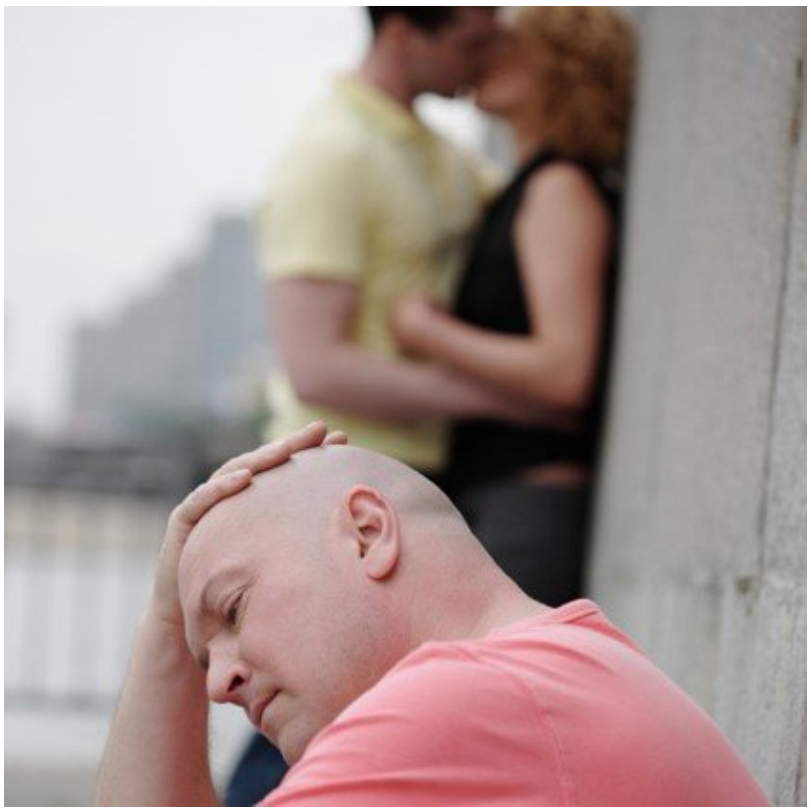
We need to be honest about what men want. They want jobs, sex, and families.

Society has made clear that 90% of men aren't "allowed" to have sex (or even sexual desires) and it's now looking like about 50% won't have the chance to have a family.

The destruction of sex, love, and families for the vast majority of men has completely and totally demoralized and demotivated them. I don't really care that people call this "sexist" — the fact of the matter is that this society was built by men so they could get women to marry them and form families. Without that incentive, men are quite happy to return to their man caves and BBQ bonfires.

If they can't have wives, or sex, or families, or relationships, they at least need to work. So, at the very least, while we continue sliding, these men at least need jobs and money.

If men can't have those things, that's fine. We'll take jobs and money, enough for each of us individually to support ourselves, and retire or otherwise check out early; and spend the surplus on toys and hobbies. A large number of men will spend it on hookers. The OASIS is the only sexual outlet for increasing numbers of men. Is it immoral? Sure. But no more so than 85%+ of "Christian" women who have had or are having premarital sex.



This problem will remain until we're honest about it and what's causing it.

- The fact is that women are running things now and they don't care about most men.
- The fact is that sex, love, marriage, and family have been completely destroyed for most men.
- The fact is that most men are completely demoralized and demotivated.
- The fact is that men see no reason to build and contribute to a society that sh!ts all over them.
- The fact is that men see no reason to listen to people who long ago refused to listen to them.

We are never, ever going to improve this problem until we recognize these facts.

What Will Eventually Happen

Until women get their act together and do the 12-point list above, the only other viable alternative is that we'll continue on the slide we're on until there is some sort of hard "reset" which forces women to uphold their end of the social bargain, as listed above.

In other words, we'll eventually descend into the state of collapse that Isaiah described.

> [16] The Lord says,
>
> "The women of Zion are haughty, > walking along with outstretched necks,
> flirting with their eyes,
> strutting along with swaying hips,
> with ornaments jingling on their ankles.
>
> [17] Therefore the Lord will bring sores on the heads of the women of Zion; > the Lord will make their scalps bald."
>
> [18] In that day the Lord will snatch away their finery: the bangles and headbands and crescent necklaces, [19] the earrings and bracelets and veils, [20] the headdresses and anklets and sashes, the perfume bottles and charms, [21] the signet rings and nose rings, [22] the fine robes and the capes and cloaks, the purses [23] and mirrors, and the linen > garments and tiaras and shawls.

>
> [24] Instead of fragrance there will be a stench;
> instead of a sash, a rope;
> instead of well-dressed hair, baldness;
> instead of fine clothing, sackcloth;
> instead of beauty, branding.
>
> [25] Your men will fall by the sword, > your warriors in battle.
>
> [26] The gates of Zion will lament and mourn; > destitute, she will sit on the ground.
>
> [1] In that day seven women will take hold of one man and say, “We will eat our own food and provide our own clothes; only let us be called by your name. Take away our disgrace!”
>
> Isaiah 3:16-4:1

Sounds pretty grim, but every day we are getting closer to this.

The bottom line is this: We simply can NOT continue on indefinitely with Sexual Liberation, widespread fornication, Abortion as a form of Birth Control, churchianity (which is apostasy), the postponement and debasement of marriage, Duluth, Feminism, No Fault divorce, courts stripping honest men of their livelihoods, false #MəT00 accusations being taken seriously even after proven false, et cetera, ad infinitum, ad nauseum… AND still expect God’s blessings on us as a nation.

It’s that simple.

The question is, how bad will things need to get before women start waking up from being W0ke?

Coda

Don’t worry, women. No one is going to make you date, marry, have sex with, or bear the children of the nice, kind, good Christian men you say you want but who you don't really want. No one is going to make you do anything. There aren't any men who will ever force you to fall in line with God's created order. It's entirely up to YOU to make that decision, and no one, not even God himself, will coerce you into choosing what is right. You will get to go on having sex with the attractive men you want but who won't commit to you. You will get to go on being attractive men's slumpbusters and third stringers. You will get to go on doing whatever you want to do, indefinitely.

It's just one more condom in the landfill, after all.

I'm under no illusion that any of what I've suggested will happen. Women are living in a fantasy world and will not hear it.

The West will continue to spend itself into bankruptcy and eventual totalitarianism and dhimmitude, just so women can "work" their "Jobs" and have sex with attractive men who won't commit to them. The government women voted in and men bought will allow it and charge it to the 90% of unattractive men women won't have sex with.

This won't change. Nothing will make it change. The only chance of redemption is if women wake up from their fleshly delusions and do the hard work of upholding their end of God's ordained order.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 1 (2023/7/12)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 2 (2023/7/13)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 3 (2023/7/14)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Rolling Forward (2023/8/7)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Slow Demise of Masculine Leadership (2023/9/1)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Heads in the Sand (2023/11/3)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Rewriting the Script for a Kinder, Gentler Feminism (2023/11/10)

Strachan's Strafe

Jack · 25 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Scalping the runaway workhorses to create a vanity wig for women.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Readers' Note: Part of a mini-series on the new "Pity Men" narrative.
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intelligence is crucially important for winning a war, as is knowing the enemy, as Sun Tzu said centuries ago.

Fortunately for TPTB, Owen Strachan, a writer for the Gospel Coalition, has laid a tomahawk to the weaknesses of their enemy — men.

The Federalist (Owen Strachan): The War On Men Is A War On Civilization (2023/10/10)

[Emphasis mine.]

Readers will note that Strachan cannot discuss men's issues without also discussing what women want and need and how they are affected. In nearly every paragraph defending men's interests, women's interests are cited as the cause, the motivating factor, or the reason why men's interests should receive attention. God forbid that we should ever care about men for their own sake!

Strachan writes as if men are lost, gone, hopeless, and to be pitied, followed by the obligatory chivalrous hat tip to women.

> "Men may be disappearing and struggling today. But in such evil days, we speak a different word than anti-male voices. We say this: No man is hopeless. No man is too far gone for God to reach him, remake him, and put him to work. This isn't an anti-woman statement though. Women and men are made to complement one another, not compete."

Translation: "We've lost male servitude… uh, ahem… our 'servant leaders' because of our harsh treatment. But in rounding up the runaway sl@ves and rallying them to labor, we must always be completely clear that we pose no threat to our female m@sters."

He fails to mention that Complementarianism is when men fold out of the competition and let women rule the roost.

The fine print says only one man is legally permitted to play the formal role of 'husband' for legal recourse and public relations.
Strachan writes as if men have failed and have abandoned their posts.

> "The catalog of absence — and failure — goes on. Men have disappeared from many families. As Derek Thompson notes at The Atlantic, 80 percent of single-parent homes are headed by mothers."

In stating that "80 percent of single-parent homes are headed by mothers", he's conveniently omitting the fact that 80% of divorces are initiated by women who use the children as ~~mother~~ child support anchors. The other 20% are women who want nothing to do with their children.

And again for emphasis.

> "Quite simply, we are looking at a crisis. A generation of men is ghosting its loved ones, its work environments, and this very world itself. But men are not the only ones who suffer in this maelstrom; women are directly affected by it as well."

When Strachan says men are absent, disappearing, ghosting, gone, etc., what he means is that men have left the liberal churchian plantation and are no longer serving the gynocracy. Make no mistake, men are still around, but they're investing their time, energy, and resources into other things that are less risky and more enjoyable.

> "In such a poisoned climate, few now dare to speak on men's behalf. But we cannot abandon men. As I call for in my book, we must reengage men. The dire situation before us today requires us to fight for men, not against them."
>
> "Men are sinners, just as women are, and as such need the atoning mercy of God. This is the greatest need of men, not anything the "manosphere" teaches (right or wrong) or Andrew Tate spouts off."

Note how Strachan identifies the "Manosphere" as a part of the poisoned climate. Yes, the Red Pill is poison to feminists and those allergic to the truth, but it is a path for change and ~~embitterment~~ embetterment for men.

Strachan believes the way we should stop fighting against men is to remind them they are just as sinful as women supposedly are in the hope that God will have mercy on their poor souls. Well, we already have plenty of that. I don't see how this will make the climate any less poisoned. Why is it that we never see calls to remind women that they are just as sinful as men? Well, it is because that would be holding women accountable for their sins, and we mustn't ever do that, because that would NEVER "win a woman's heart", or so it is believed. (Actually, the opposite is closer to the truth.) What they really mean is that we should never disrespect women according to women's concept of respect, NOT men's. We should never challenge the gynocracy. But in fact, holding women accountable is exactly what is absolutely necessary for their own spiritual growth.

Strachan writes the new version of the "Man Up!" message, which is "Don't give up!"

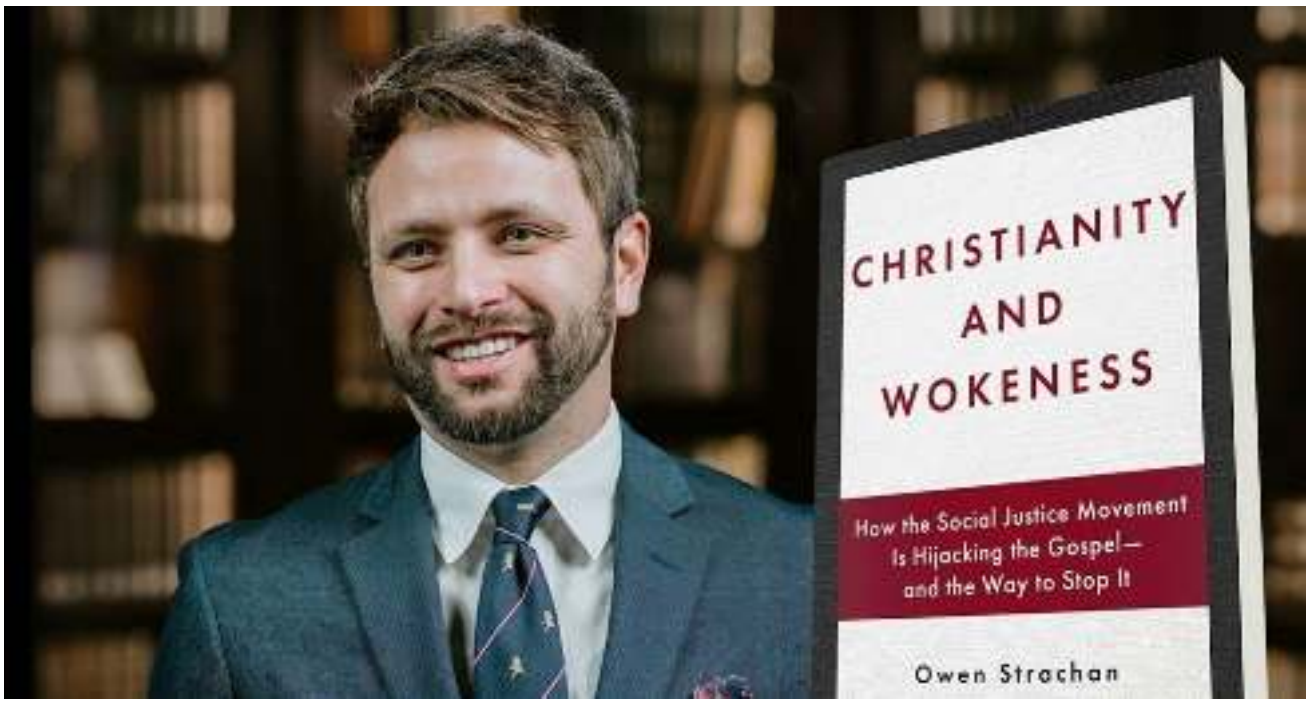
> "Win a woman's heart if called to marriage. (And keep winning that woman's heart until you leave this Earth!) Build a family filled with thriving and well-loved children. Work hard, and cultivate your vocation, whether it is your "dream job" or not. Join and serve a church. Embrace a life ordered around things bigger than you; don't get lost in a world of misery, hopelessness, and self-focus."

Finally, Strachan concludes with an emphasis on men's penultimate purpose — to serve and support women!

> "When men flourish, women flourish. But when men falter, women are deeply affected. This is why, in the final analysis, we should not go to war against men as those infused with "toxicity." We should instead go to men, finding them where they are."

In this paragraph, Strachan is quite clear that the whole purpose of helping men is to make life easier for women. But this battle plan is bound to fail. God will NOT reward arrogant promiscuous women by allowing their lives to be made easier as long as women are in open rebellion against His created order — The dreaded Patriarchy.

Ending on a positive note, at least Strachan has identified W0kery as anti-Christian.



Concluding Statements

Strachan has overlooked some of the key strategic motivations of the enemy and remains oblivious to the real life conditions on the battle field. Overall, I'm not convinced that Strachan knows the enemy, nor men, well enough to defeat them in this "War on Men".

Men don't want or need pity. Men don't want or need apostate churchianity. Men don't want or need an obsequious pep talk, especially one laced with religious platitudes. Men need a sphere of authority and a domain of influence. If they can't find that in marriage and family, then they'll go find it elsewhere. If they can't find that in church, then they'll leave the church. They will find it, even if that means they'll be all alone. Tis better to be the king of a peaceful molehill than a harried, emasculated sl@ve of the gynocracy.

Related

- Σ Frame: Is the Christian Red Pill a Black Pill? (2020/11/29)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Gynapotheosis (2021/4/21)
- Σ Frame: The Ever Looming Black Pill (2022/9/12)
- Sharkly's response to Strachan's article. (2023/10/9)
- Σ Frame: Rewriting the Script for a Kinder, Gentler Feminism (2023/11/10)

In Science We Trust

ArchAngel · 27 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The role of scientism in the modern West.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Author's Note: This is Part II in a Series on Modernism.
Length: 1,450 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Age of Feelings or Age of Science?

Reader Oscar objected to Why are We in this Mess (2023/11/13), noting that:

> "The character of our age is to reject logic, facts, reason, and evidence as products of the evil wh!tə suprəm@c!st, heteronormative patriarchy."

His disagreement is with my assertion that our age is defined by exclusive belief in reason and science. The confusion stems from my use of 'reason'. Further comments clarified this:

> "I'm telling you that your definition of reason is unreasonably narrow."
>
> Oscar, in response to Jack's comment

> "Materialist philosophy that supports scientism is what you are calling 'reason'."
>
> naturallyaspirated

In response, I pointed out that 'reason', as I used it, refers to the over reliance on bare principles of logic and not the ability to form logical thoughts. To illustrate, there is a story that, in the Middle Ages, some Aristotelians decided to figure out the number of teeth in a horse's mouth from first principles. They intended to use just reason, rather than another means of discovering truth: experience. Of course, they could not determine the correct number (24-42, depending on age, breed, and sex). This story illustrates the absurdity of relying solely on logic.

Other than logic and experience, we do have other means of apprehending truth which have fallen into disuse or disrepute: memory, perception, a priori intuition, induction, introspection, testimony, and faith.

Having cleared that up, the rest of Oscar's doubts could be better addressed by discussing scientism. As I noted in my last post:

> "[S]cientific verificationism. This is the dominant form of verificationism […] today."

Magnifying glasses, gentlemen! We've got a mystery to solve.

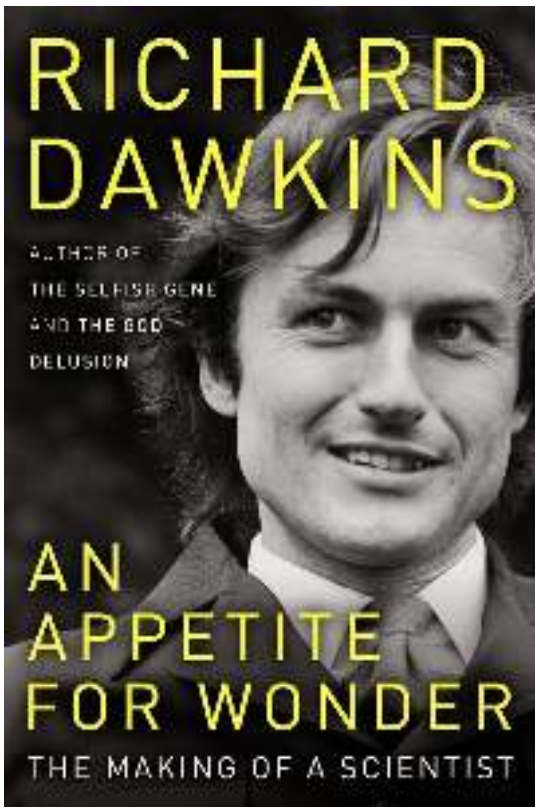
Calling the Shots

Nicolaus Copernicus, computerized image reconstructed from cranial remains. (STR/AFP/Getty Images)

The influence of intellectuals in the West skyrocketed with the invention of the printing press (~1440 A.D.). Before then, people largely looked to traditions for guidance. After, they followed theologians' ideas, as they were the intellectuals of their time. It is difficult to imagine the power these men had. Ideas like Protestantism, the nature of salvation and the afterlife, the value of freedom and the natures of good and evil were their province. We still cherish their legacies today because ideology is the most durable form of influence. With their power, one could change human conduct forever.

As we know, it didn't last long. Starting with Copernicus (1473-1543), power began changing hands. The Copernican Revolution is relevant because it represents the loss of public trust on two fronts. First, faith in the church was weakened because the church defended Ptolemy's Earth-centric universe as doctrine. And, more importantly, people lost faith in themselves. News that the Sun, traveling overhead across the sky was just an illusion meant that people were to have more confidence in scientists than in themselves. The public have since relied on the authority of scientists in their respective fields.

The Scientistic Necessity of Pseudoscience



Overturning old, erroneous beliefs is not, in itself, a problem. The problem is the concomitant belief that science is universally authoritative; that it has the answer to all questions. This, in turn, creates a massive incentive toward scientific sensationalism. Scientists stand to gain money and fame by purporting to have answers to issues science could never solve. For example, men like Richard Dawkins pen bestsellers and have countless adoring fans for claiming that biology can explain God away; that belief in God is delusional.

One important point here is that pseudoscience is an inevitable consequence of scientism. The belief that all truth is scientific means sciences must arise wherever truth is perceived. Atheist scientists believe the proposition "God does not exist" is true. Being convinced that anything true (or assumed to be) must also be scientific, they construe science as justifying their beliefs. The public, as if enchanted, follows blindly.

Unfortunately, the scientist is as likely as the cleric to make theological pronouncements, although he knows nothing about them.

How to Spot a Pseudoscience

Finally, gentlemen, direct your magnifying glasses here:

> "[A] pretty good indication of what it will be like after you die. Nothingness. An absolute absence of thought, consciousness, awareness, memory, or existence. It won't be painful or unpleasant. It just won't be."
>
> Aaron Clarey in Enjoy the Decline [1]

Sigmund Freud

Something claiming to be scientific must meet certain evidentiary standards. The Captain's statement, while not claiming to be scientific, will serve in identifying pseudoscience. To begin, what makes the Captain an expert at dying? How many times has he died? How does he know what happens after death? More importantly, how could he? For those of us who are Christians the answer is faith. But for those who believe in no other gods before science, there is simply no way to know. There is no sensory data. If there is no way something can be known, then neither scientists nor laymen can know it, except through revelation. Or, by creating a pseudoscience.

While pseudoscience is best identified on a case by case basis, there are some general similarities. For instance, Freud's psychoanalysis depends entirely on his discovery of the unconscious: a collection of mental elements that, for some reason, the patient does not want to remember. But if Freud had really discovered the unconscious, it should be possible for anyone with the required knowledge to repeat the procedure. And to demonstrate it to others [2].

Asking how, exposes it as a pseudoscience.

This simple test would solve several of the West's problems; so many of which have their basis in psychological literature [3].

Case Study — Low Self-Esteem in the Obese

Since the effects of trauma are entrenched in psychology's traditions, discrimination is often identified as the cause of trauma, and is thus the prime suspect in explaining disparities. Conclusion: Discrimination is why fat people have low self-esteem.

As said above, intellectuals lead the culture by manufacturing ideas [4]. Consider this article from 1968, when very few Americans were fat, The Stigma of Obesity. Everything you would expect to hear from a leftist on fat phobia today can as well be read from it. If you were around then, whatever you were doing, it certainly wasn't worrying about fat. But intellectuals certainly were. 55 years later, this idea is widespread and firmly believed. Other possible reasons, such as being unattractive, a lack of exercise / physical activity, laziness, poor diet, poor health, poor self-image, etc., are quickly tamped down as 'rude' or 'politically incorrect' and are not examined any further.

The fact of the matter is that the conclusion is based on an a priori assumption, backed by subjective opinion. It has never been empirically proven that fat people have low self-esteem specifically because of discrimination.

Conclusions

Betty Friedan

The political implications of this are clear. In this sense, if we do "reject logic, facts, reason, and evidence", it is in adherence to science. We do it because we are a therapy culture, which is merely one psychological slice of our scientific era. No one is allowed to make fun of or offend an 'at-risk' individual (i.e. minority). Not only is this the cause of their problems to begin with, it could also be life-threatening. Being canceled is a slap on the wrist for this sin!

However, what is scarier is the religious impact scientism has had. Large portions of the world turn to atheism in the belief that science has killed God. When you consider the durability of ideas — even bad ones — and the extent to which Christianity's foundational importance is taken for granted [5], you will begin to see how dangerous jettisoning it could prove going forward. Activist scientists (with unlimited scientific authority) allegedly leading people away from "facts and logic" seems trivial in comparison.

Case Closed.

Notes

1. For more on Aaron Clarey's book, Enjoy the Decline, read this book review by Matt Forney.
2. Freud's analytical psychology is a theory, and theories may very well be wrong. A theory is only as valuable as it's usefulness in conceptualizing and describing abstract principles and predicting results.
3. Psychologists in particular produce the bulk of the nonsense believed today. Perhaps it is a coincidence, but Betty Friedan was a psychologist by profession.
4. Notable popular pseudosciences are the ideas of climate change, C0V!D vacks, flat earth science, gender fluidity / universal b!sexu@l!ty (that everyone is a mix of male and female), letting children choose their gender, and the idea of raising a boy as a girl, among others.
5. A trivial example is the h0m0sexu@l insistence in being 'born that way'. In a different culture / religion, this would be a fatal self-condemnation, rather than an appeal to blamelessness as it is in Christian cultures.

Related

- Kevin MacDonald, “Why Are Professors Liberals?”, The Occidental Quarterly, 10(2):57-84 (2010). [PDF]*
- Radix Fidem: More on Heart Logic (2016/10/6)
- Radix Fidem: The Path of the Heart (2017/5/24)
- Radix Fidem: Toward a Heart-led Psychology (2018/1/8)
- Radix Fidem: Theology and Practice: Heart Led (2019/5/4)
- Σ Frame: Women’s choice to be relevant (2020/2/6)
- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- Σ Frame: The Philosophical Basis of Secularized Altruism (2023/7/31)
- Σ Frame: The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)
- Catacomb Resident: Enemies of the Gospel (2023/11/8)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): Why are We in this Mess? (2023/11/13)
- Catacomb Resident: Jesus Is Still Hebrew (2023/11/15)

 H/T: Catacomb Resident: Triad of Community Building (2023/11/26)*

Where Shame Tactics become Witchcraft

Jack · 28 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

When insecurity and rejection become domineering.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Where is the Line between Shame Tactics and W!tchcr@ft?

Dealing with Feminine Insecurity (2023/11/22) referred to a list of shaming tactics often utilized by insecure women. In response, Red Pill Apostle added another.

> "There is a shaming tactic left off the list that applies to married men, especially those who go to church.
>
> The charge of presumed feminine moral superiority. The man's natural and good drives are shamed as are his thoughts and opinions for the woman to win control or her point of view.

I guess he means, "The charge of transgressing a presumed feminine moral superiority."

This is where shame tactics begin to encroach W!tchcr@ft. The core issue is no longer about micromanaging her own feelings of insecurity at the man's expense, and it becomes an ever increasing hegemony of authority, power, and control.

Garden variety Narcissism / Solipsism is an undivided focus on one's own desires, feelings, and self-interests with nary a thought about what lies beyond, including any consequences of one's actions. W!tchcr@ft, OTOH, steps outside that bubble of self for the purpose of spellbinding another person — in this case, by placing the focus on the man and disparaging him — not just as being shameful (which is about the man's behavior), but as an object of shame (which is about his identity).

Examples of W!tchy Statements

RPA gave some exemplary statements.

- "I feel like you only want me for sex." (Man's sex drive is evil and is to be beaten back.)
- "I don't feel emotionally connected, so it's not happening." (Women's primary means of connection is superior.)
- "Is that all I am to you?" (Woman shirking her God given role and dismissal of his love for her, at least what is left of it.)
- "Do you think this is the right thing to do?" (Passive aggressive challenge to the masculine way of doing things, assuming it is wrong.)

The first two statements are not very clear indicators of W!tchery, because the focus is still placed on herself. The third statement is standing on the threshold. The last statement is Gaslighting, although this particular statement could very well be an honest question. If not, it is an amateur attempt at shifting the moral frame.

All intentional Gaslighting is squarely W!tchcr@ft.

Here are some more obvious examples of W!tchy statements that tap into shame tactics more aggressively.

- "All you want is sex, Sex, SEX!!!" (Disgust; Hatred)
- "Awww… Feeling horny AGAIN?!?" (Mocking his sexual desire)
- "My body is not your toy." (Asserts control by drawing a false boundary)
- "Having sex with you doesn't add anything to my life." (Dismissal; Rejection)
- "When are you going to grow up?!?" (Impertinence; insinuating that he is immature)
- "I guess it's your lot in life to be an !ncel / "do without"." (Dismissal; Mocking; Rejection)
- "Sex is for kids. It's time for you to grow up." (Denigrating sex; insinuating that he is childish)
- "You need to respect my feelings." (Psychological distancing; Asserts control by drawing a false boundary)
- "Look at me when I'm talking to you!" (A demand for him to submit to her frame via the power of her W!tch gaze)
- "Women will always let you down, but your hand never will." (Mocking his sex drive; shaming his sexual needs)
- "We need to talk about what you did / said yesterday." (She assumes he is accountable to her; Arousing fear; Intimidation)
- "This is the LAST time I am going to say this / warn you…" (followed by a pregnant pause). (Condescension; Intimidation)
- "I have to live with all your sh!t. This is getting really old." (Insinuating that he is intolerable or unacceptable, which is a rejection)
- "You are so _____ / such a _____ ." (insert disparaging adjective / descriptor, respectively) (Name calling; Psychological distancing; Rejection)
- "That's a cute little speech, just like your d!ck. Neither one is going to change my mind / seduce me / etc." (Condescension; Defiance; Mocking)
- "Poor boy! Married X years and you're still obsessed with sex! You need to get over it." (Condescension; presuming he is abnormal / immature; Mock compassion)
- "I know if I don't have sex with you, you're going to throw another tantrum and be depressed for the next three days." (Assuming he is childish; Predicting his behavior)

- "I think you have a sexual addiction. I can't help you with that. You need professional help." (Denying responsibility for marital duties; Dismissing him as psychopathic; Reframing the context; Rejection)
- "Marriage isn't all about sex, you know. By the way, did you take the garbage out yet?" (Dismissing his advances; Holding him accountable; Presuming that he is irresponsible; Rejection; Relegating his role to garbage man; Shifting the topic)

As you can see by the stratagems given in parentheses, W!tchcr@ft delivers several blows to a man's self-image in just one short bon mot that stinks of pride. If he believes it, then he has succumbed to her spell. Men who live with this every day will eventually fall.

Statements like these often appear in conjunction with anger, dismissive sarcasm, exaggerated exasperation, indignation, overhyped dramaticism, pregnant pauses, and/or an intense piercing look, AKA the W!tch's gaze.

Do not react emotionally to the W!tch's gaze or else you will succumb to her spell! (This may require some practice.)

Granted, some of these statements could be said humorously, playfully, or teasingly, but there is a distinct metaphysical boundary in which her expression crosses the line of ascribing affection, dignity, honor, and respect to the man and instead dismantles his autonomy and self-respect by presuming a cold hard stance of power and authority over him. Self-awareness and spiritual discernment are necessary to know the difference.

Characteristics of W!tchery

To further aid readers in telling the difference between generalized feminine insecurity and W!tchcr@ft, interactions with a W!tch are often marked with the following characteristics.

- Fear.
- Lying.
- Hatred.
- Drama.

- Disgust.
- Defiance.
- Rejection.
- Contempt.
- Gaslighting.
- Insinuations.
- Intimidation.
- Impertinence.
- False dilemmas.
- Moral absolutes.
- Disparaging metaphors.
- Psychological distancing.
- Condemnatory judgment.
- Implementing false boundaries.
- Intellectual dishonesty [Example].
- Her using the man's full formal name.
- Any number of dishonest debate tactics.
- Assuming a false (non-contextual) frame.
- Extreme absolutes, e.g. "You always / never…"
- Her demanding or fully expecting his obedience, either verbally or contextually.
- Her attitude and speech are belittling / condescending / disrespectful / haughty / presumptuous.
- 'Predicting' his behavior via a fearful or negative perspective; often followed by "See!!!" / "I told you so!" / "Just what I said!" / "Gotcha!"
- Her presuming moral superiority (especially on a regular basis), often by making him out to be a grossly immoral, shameful, or unethical person (e.g. cheater, liar, wh0rem0nger, etc.) even when there is no such evidence.

Related

- Dalrock: The curse of female power (2010/9/12)
- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15)
- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Athaliah (2023/11/16)
- Σ Frame: More on the Spirits of Jezebel and Athaliah (2023/11/17)
- Σ Frame: Testimony from a Reader Battling Witchcraft (2023/11/20)

Case Study of an Interweb Witch

Jack · 29 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Weaving threads of lies into a web.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 2,200 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes

Continuing from Where Shame Tactics become Witchcraft (2023/11/28)…

By divine coincidence, I came across an interweb persona who exemplifies W!tchd0m: s@r@hr0berts0n634. Below, I've copied some of her comments from under a YouTube video, The Happy Wife School: Why Men NEED Sex (2023/11/14). (The video itself is quite good and is worth watching.)

I've reorganized these comments by topic in order to elucidate her thinking. Note how she pieces together various bits of truth, true lies, and lies to weave together an alternate reality — one in which women are the supreme imperial lordettes of all human life and procreation.

The Big Lie: Female Primacy

This is the big one, obviously motivated by both The Curse of Eve and The Feminine Imperative. All remaining claims are staked on this assumption, which appoints women to be the judge and jury of men and all things sacred and holy (e.g. identity, sex, marriage, reproduction, etc.).

> "It's only natural if women are happy with the relationship. If we're not happy with the relationship, it would be very unnatural to have sex. Pretty logical."
>
> "That's a cute speech, but none of that matters. The law of supply and demand is still in effect. Women are the supply, and men are the demand. The demand is far greater than the supply."

> "All women know this. We control sex, marriage, and reproduction, because it happens inside our bodies. Duh. You didn't realize that? If you think about it, it makes all kinds of sense. There are also supply and demand factors at play in the sexual dynamic. Since our supply is vastly smaller than your demand, we make the rules. That's capitalism, baby."
>
> "Your supply and demand speech is cute. You obviously didn't account for h0eflation."
>
> "There's nothing incongruous about what I posted. Women aren't out of control when we enforce the law of supply and demand. We're living by a standard of self-discipline and expecting males to match it. Sadly, they mostly fall short."

Women have authority over men in only one arena of life — sex. She is taking this to the hyperbolic extreme, and using it to claim authority over not just one man (i.e. her husband), but all men in all other areas of life. As a comparison, a modest and respectable woman would keep her authority in this area confined to the marital bedroom and defer to her husband in all other matters.

Routinely Taking 'Offense' from Perceived Transgressions to Feminine Moral Superiority

When Female Primacy is assumed, any semblances of Male Authority or Biblical / Traditional Values are perceived as a threat to the gynocentric order of power. Women lack the authentic authority needed to overturn male authority, so they react to this threat by getting 'offended' and by arrogantly and quite vainly airing their indignation about being the weaker vessel. The strategy is to exhaust the opponent until he becomes exasperated and quits, so here we often see the big guns come out with attacks on the man's virility (e.g. 'incel', mocking abstinence / celibacy / sexlessness / virginity, withholding sex, etc.) and various large stake threats (e.g. 'cancelling', criminal charges, divorce, HR reports, lawsuits, and so on).

> "What will happen is that he will be taken to divorce court. We are no longer messing around with males that can't control themselves."
>
> "I'm super offended, and I've already spoken to the internet manager. It's an AI chatbot that said incels will be incels. I can accept that."

Mocking Men and Disparaging Headship Authority

Once Female Primacy is established (in her mind), men are relegated to a secondary and somewhat superfluous role in the order of things. Men who don't readily fall in line with the inverted gynocratic order, or who are insufficiently reverent to their female overlords are mocked, ostracized, and shamed* as 'immature', irrelevant, or caveman remnants of the Dark Age.

> "Aww, did the sl@ves leave the pl@nt@t!on? Ain't that a shame. If males can only love us if we're sl@ves, maybe that say more about males than it does about us?"
>
> "Well, to a modern day feminist, raising kids is not a job and anyone can do it, so your 3 kids are nothing."

> "Oohh… I'm thinkin' hard… But the difference is I don't think I'm owed anything because I don't have that masculine entitlement."
>
> "…younger women like to spend older men's money on their younger boyfriends, whose sexual performance and attractiveness is superior to the old guy's."
>
> "…a lot of males get friend zoned by their wives. It's really funny that these clueless dudes just can't seem to > figure out why."

>
> "You really like to copy me. Can't you come up with anything original?"

Notice that most of these statements are psychological projections. That is, she sees her own nature in the men she attacks (e.g. clueless, cruel, entitled, selfish, sl@ve driver, etc.).

 A more complete list of shaming tactics can be found here.*

The True Lie: Sex is a Luxury, NOT a Need

Recall that the topic of the original video was about Why Men NEED Sex. Instead of entertaining the topic, she hijacks the discussion by dismissing the nature of male sexuality and reframes the context by redefining sex as a luxury. Note how her argument builds and develops.

> "Let's stop dramatizing and acting like sex is a NEED. This whole video is nonsense."
>
> "[Sex is] not a need, it's a want."
>
> "I'm here to remind you that sex is a luxury."
>
> "Sex is a luxury. Maslow's hierarchy of needs puts the actual essentials first."
>
> "It's your lot in life to "do without". Nobody owes you sex. Not in dating, not in marriage."

It's true that men won't die if they don't have sex. They'll just die sooner than if they do. Whether sex is a need or a want or a luxury is a separate topic and is complex enough to deserve its own post or video. Here, it is merely a useful distraction.

Gaslighting: Men are Without Agency

In order to make her claim that sex is NOT a need compatible with her viewpoint, she deceptively reframes the context yet again by redefining the natural male sex drive as "a lack of self-control / self-discipline", thereby proffering a ridiculous claim that men are without agency. (If men truly lacked self-control, they would b!tch slap her into next week [Case Study].) Note her condescending speech. Men are regarded as beggars for p_ssy, and she insinuates that men are desperate dogs and sex offenders who are unable to function normally.

> “Your lack of self-control is the problem. And that’s a YOU problem all the way.”
>
> “The reason is because your lack of control over your sex drive is not her problem. You don’t need sex, you need self-discipline.”
>
> “It’s better for males to learn self-control, than to run away and try to shop for permission to be undisciplined elsewhere. Fortunately, women everywhere are beginning to lay down the law on this issue.”

> “Males are going to have to improve their self-mastery, and women are collectively raising their standards to make sure that they do. Onward and upward, ladies.”
>
> “Your sense of urgency shows a lack of self-control. The conversation that needs to happen is the one in which she addresses your need for self-discipline.”
>
> “I don’t know what to tell you, sugar bean. We are in charge of sex, reproduction, and marriage. In order to be married, you have to learn self-control. If you don’t want to be a sex offender, you have to learn self-control. If you want to be able to function in your daily life, you have to learn self-control. You don’t have to like it. But even dogs can be trained to control themselves.”
>
> “I’m not a desperate, slobbering animal that fixates on satisfying my carnal lusts. That’s male behavior. I care about self-discipline first. My husband has mastered that, so then we can both be lustful.”
>
> “Oh, I better do what? Sex is a want, not a need. The need is self-discipline. Enforcing self-discipline is a lot of work, but since it’s for the good of the male partner, it’s worth it. Having control of yourself is the best possible outcome for your life. You should try it sometime.”
>
> “The realization that males need to control themselves is dawning on a lot of women. More and more ladies are refusing sex, dating, marriage, and children. It’s a good thing.”

Again, the idea of men controlling themselves is a projection of the W!tch’s inner desire to contain and control men, and NOT a statement of reality. Sadly, many men fall under this spell by succumbing to these emasculating beliefs and thus become pawns of the W!tch’s schemes.

Cherishing a Cold Dead Heart

The final metaphysical edifice to fall is the recognition of self — one's desires, emotions, identity, personality, values, and so on — what Christians might call the soul. The soul is methodically rooted out and eradicated in order to attain ego dominance and to have no authentic persona that can be attacked or hurt. All attachments and commitments are forsaken to this end, and this is falsely identified as 'freedom'.

> "Emotional intimacy is not a need. Emotional self-discipline is just as important and sexual self-discipline."
>
> "What, did you think I would say that emotional intimacy is a need but physical intimacy is not? A grown woman with emotional self-discipline may want an emotional connection, but she doesn't need an emotional connection. What she needs is self-discipline. It's absolutely no different. Grown women aren't children, we can do just fine with no emotional connection to our partner. You do realize that women feel the most emotionally isolated when they're married, right?"

Only because they see marriage as a prison that excludes them from the free wheeling lusts of the carousel.

> “The difference is, emotions don’t harm males, but sex harms women. So there is a gap there. But still. No woman worth a d@mn would ever demand emotional intimacy from an unwilling partner. Does that answer your question?”
>
> “Actually, women being celibate is quite powerful. Haven’t you noticed how the loudly the males are whining about a “loneliness epidemic” these days?”
>
> “More and more women are embracing celibacy worldwide. It’s happening.”
>
> “I can live in the woods for years with no gear. Can you?”

Clearly, the idea of women remaining celibate is a blatant lie intended to reduce male expectations and normalize dead bedrooms and marital fraud.

Denial: Wives are Absolved from Marital Duties

This brings us around to the fundamental purpose of all these lies — buffering Women's Existential Fear by disregarding authentic relationships, marriage, marital duties, traditional gender roles, procreation, and child rearing.

> "There's no vow that states how much sex will happen."
>
> "There's no set amount of sex specified in any wedding vow. It's not our job as women to "put out". Males are never entitled to sex, ever. Not in dating, not in marriage, not in any context. The sooner you learn to control yourself the happier you'll be."
>
> "Better call the men's domestic v!0lence hotline and cry that a legal divorce is abuse."

Left unsaid is how they compare all men, including the man called 'husband', to the string of chads for whom they have prostrated themselves in the past.

Self-Justification

We might wonder how a woman could torture herself with all these self-destructive denials, fears, and lies, and still go on living. Here, the hamster must go into overdrive to absolve her solipsistic conscience from the guilt and shame of her sin. So we see her churning out denial for-ever-more and inventing reasons why all the above can be justified as permissible or even good.

> "I worship the Flying Spaghetti Monster."
>
> "I show these comments to my children, my siblings, my parents, my nieces and nephews, aunties and uncles, grandparents, cousins. You are showing my family (and the world) why women are no longer interested in marriage."
>
> "Divorce rarely improves women's lives financially. Look at the statistics on it."
>
> "Since I'm already married, the "wall" that you incels speak of doesn't exist for me by your standards. Now, people with normal functioning brains understand that age affects everyone, and that males really don't get more attractive with time. Likewise, the older single ladies I know are all single by choice, and feel better and less isolated, stressed, and ill than when they were married. If I hadn't scored a unicorn, I'd be right there with them. Males don't add much to women's lives, typically."

How many times have we heard women say that their husband is 'boring', 'cold', 'unresponsive', 'emotionally unavailable', etc.?

Translation: "He won't participate in my drama. I can't manipulate him with erratic emoting. He won't succumb to my spells!"

Myron Gaines explains how W!tchy solipsistic self-justification works here (Warning: Explicit language).

Concluding Statements

This case study helps us recognize the general patterns of how W!tches build a false psychological paradigm that supports their spellbinding.

1. Assume an alternate / false hierarchy of authority, in this case, Female Primacy.
2. Taking 'offense', followed by complaints, demands, threats, and attacks.
3. Mocking Men and Disparaging Headship Authority.
4. Mixing truth with lies.
5. Gaslighting.
6. Relishing a Cold Dead Heart.
7. Denial of Agency / Responsibility.
8. Self-Justification.

Note the general tactics:

- Threats
- Gaslighting
- Mocking men
- Shaming men
- Defaming men
- Degrading men
- Defrauding men
- Dishonoring men
- Disregarding men
- Arrogantly belittling men
- Assuming moral / sexual / social superiority
- Implementing and defending false boundaries
- Assuming a false / incongruous (non-contextual) frame
- 'Predicting' men's behavior with a foreboding, ominous fear
- Expecting or demanding male obeisance / subservience / supplication

She says she is married. Now there's a man who truly deserves Emba's and Reeves' new "Pity Men" narrative. No self-respecting man would tolerate all this BS. Her husband must be the weakest schlub of a supplicating Male Feminist who ever crawled the earth.

Sorry dude.

Related

- Dalrock: The curse of female power (2010/9/12)
- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15)
- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Athaliah (2023/11/16)
- Σ Frame: More on the Spirits of Jezebel and Athaliah (2023/11/17)
- Σ Frame: Testimony from a Reader Battling Witchcraft (2023/11/20)

More Case Studies

- Σ Frame: Eunuchs of the New Feminist Order (2019/8/31)
- Σ Frame: Irresponsible Ejaculation Causes Abortion (2019/9/23)
- Σ Frame: Yet another variety of Internet Whoring (2019/10/9)
- Σ Frame: Only noble born men are qualified to do housework for unicorns (2020/8/24)
- Σ Frame: Redefining Manhood as Boyish Immaturity (2021/6/14)
- Σ Frame: Carousel Widow in Decline – Part 1 – Part 2 – Part 3 – Part 4 – Part 5 (2021/8/6-28)
- Σ Frame: Sappy Wall Day, Tomi Lahren! (2021/8/11)
- Σ Frame: A Snapshot of the Destruction caused by Pride (2021/8/25)

On the Incubation of Witches

Jack · 30 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Understanding the genesis of W!tchcr@ft.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Author's Note: This essay was contributed on 2023/11/23 by a reader who wishes to remain anonymous. Edited by Jack.
Length: 600 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes + 55 minute video sermon from Pastor Robert Morris.

Putting Things Together

Not sure if it was Jack's intentions or if any other readers picked up on this, but I found a link between insecurity and W!tchdom from some posts in this month's theme. First, let me cover the ideas.

In Dealing with Feminine Insecurity (2023/11/22), Jack described a blurry line between women's insecurity and W!tchdom. I would summarize this post as saying insecurity is an inner state of emotional / psychological / spiritual instability, whereas W!tchdom is a manipulative expression of that inner state intended to ameliorate the intense desire, the sufferings of loneliness, and the fears thereof — often at another person's expense.

Under an earlier post, The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15), Jack listed this video under Related.

STOP Tolerating the Jezebel Spirit — Robert Morris (2011/4/8) Length: 55:30

In Pastor Robert Morris' sermon, there are 2 interesting points related to insecurity, rejection, and shame.

12:43 — Morris describes how controlling and manipulation arises from insecurity, jealousy, and rejection.

17:55 — He identifies a pattern — being rejected by one's father and having a controlling, domineering mother.

Morris links the above conditions to the Jezebel Spirit.

In that, he mentions how the dominant childhood feeling leads to a dominant emotional need in adulthood, and to meet that need one will adopt certain behaviours as a backup style which can either be positive or tend to a negative behaviour.

Since I am a teacher, I know that moving or switching schools frequently can create a sense of social alienation / embarassment / estrangement in a child (although not necessarily through the father) that affects their development.

With that in mind, I would say "rejection by one's father" does not only include a lack of acceptance and heart-felt love from one's father, but also any enduring life situation that removes the father's influence, such as abandonment, bastardy, or merely a lack of regular quality time due to divorce, estrangement, separation, etc.

Furthermore, if the mother is a W!tch, she can weave a web of lies that lead the children to believe their father is a careless or corrupt person, especially if they do not live together with him, and thereby cast a spell over the daughters and sons to believe that their father has essentially rejected them. I know divorced women who have done this, all to the children's detriment.

Also, Jack identified sexual sin as being either a source, a pivotal factor, or at least a correlating factor in incubating W!tches. The link to sexual sin is that sex is used to satisfy feelings of invisibility, loneliness, and rejection, while at the same time, it can be used to control and manipulate the male partner, thereby efficiently killing two birds with one stone, so to speak.

The Link between Insecurity, Rejection, Shame, and W!tchcr@ft

After putting all these ideas together, it dawned upon me that suffering from insecurity early in life (e.g. abuse, neglect, parental divorce, etc.) paves the way for one becoming a W!tch later in life.

Let me explain.

Insecurity and W!tchdom have the same pattern — Being Invisible / Insecurity / Rejection / Shame — these things create emotional needs which cause one to tend to behave in certain ways such as controlling / intimidating / lying / manipulating.

Whether this is a pattern due to a demonic Jezebel Spirit or because of parental neglect which could also be demonic, the patterns definitely seem similar.

I would imagine healing through the power of the Name and blood of Jesus is the way forward to break free from the bondage of these spirits / mind patterns.

Related

- Σ Frame: Parental Divorce Ruins Daughters' Future Marital Commitment and Confidence (2021/2/24)
- Σ Frame: Bastards (2022/9/9)
- Σ Frame: Dealing with the Mother-in-Law Curse (2023/5/24)
- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Athaliah (2023/11/16)
- Σ Frame: More on the Spirits of Jezebel and Athaliah (2023/11/17)
- Bruce Charlton: Cons and pros of a happy childhood (2023/11/18)

The Sacred Cow

Jack · 1 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The new pasture is ostensibly "bullsh!t friendly", but The Sacred Cow of gynocentrism lumbers on unabated as the steers are castrated.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Author's Note: Coauthored with Thedeti, going off his series of comments.
Readers' Note: Part of a mini-series on the new "Pity Men" narrative.
Key to Interpretive Analogies: The Sacred Cow is Gynocentrism. Steers are emasculated men.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

More Rambling

More Aaron Renn and Richard Reeves.

1. Wall Street Journal (Aaron Renn): What Jordan Peterson Can Teach Church Leaders (2023/9/29)
2. Of Boys and Men (Richard Reeves): My message to #Heforshe was that we need #Sheforhe too (2023/10/3)
3. Aaron Renn: Treat Men Like They Matter (2023/10/10)

In Renn's first post [1], he is suggesting that church leaders should be schooled by a secular philosopher, Jordan Peterson. My God! Granted, Peterson has some things right that the church has wrong, but where is God in this proposed dependence on secular influences? You know, we DO have Christian philosophers / prophets; Benjamin Beale, Francis Berger, Bruce Charlton, Dalrock, Ed Hurst, and the guys at The Orthosphere, just to name a few that I read. See the blogroll for more. (Readers are invited to mention others.)

Renn continuously highlights his media mentions, but although Thedeti and I have written direct, on-topic, and actionable critiques, there's no mention of our posts or anyone else who has defended Christian masculinity while these people have had their Heads in the Sand. There's no mention of any tidbits of truth that the Christian Manosphere has brought to the surface of the societal pond of slime and scum, e.g. discernment (which has now gone mainstream although lacking true spiritual insight), Headship and Hierarchies (also mainstream although dumbed down), how God is glorified in marriage, the tragedy of mass sexual defilement, and so on. Why not? Because that would reveal the femcentricity of the culture and place an onus on women to do some introspection.

Oh, no! We can't have that! Peterson's appeal to popular secular culture is much "safer" and more "effective" in that regard.

In Reeves' post [2], he humblebrags about taking part in the recent #Heforshe summit, organized by UN Women — a parallel event to the annual UN General Assembly meeting. He names Christine Emba (who wrote Men are lost. Here's a map out of the wilderness (2023/7/10) for The Washington Post, which Reeves calls a "landmark essay"), Michelle Terry (CEO of Movember, a non-profit focused on male health), Joshua Hughes (a student at Howard University), and moderator Rachel Lowenstein of Mindshare. We keep seeing these same names and organizations pop up again and again, all repeating the same new "Pity Men" narrative, which is concerning.

Steers Expendable

In Renn's second post [3], he cites his own WSJ op-ed in which he writes,

> "For the most part society is only interested in severe life challenges faced by men insomuch as they are affecting women. Men here again are a purely instrumental good that exist to enable women to fulfill their life ambitions."
>
> "Even much of the rhetoric in our society that is aimed at building a case for why men are important tends to focus on some other goal as the justification."
>
> "Men are hearing loud and clear from this that they don't matter until they become a problem for somebody else that society actually cares about."

So now Renn has picked up on what the Manosphere has been calling out for at least the last eight years (and MRA going back further), "men are dispensable / disposable / expendable; women are sacred" — a modern day hangover from medieval Chivalry. In fact, Dalrock's main purpose in blogging for 10 years was to better understand the challenges Christian men faced in a society that was increasingly hostile to traditional masculinity. But there's no reference to Dalrock's work.

Steers Irrelevant

What is relatively new is that now men are not truly MEN (and are not openly allowed to be MEN either). Men are merely a means to support women. Renn acknowledges this in saying,

> "Young men today often feel as if their needs are secondary to those of their female peers. Society tends to speak about the well-being of men and boys as a means to an end."

To put a finer point on it, that "means to an end" he's referring to but won't identify can be summed up in one word — gynocentrism. The problem with gynocentrism is that it is by its nature reductive — everything is reduced to how it affects women and what women want is prioritized above all else. Renn hints at this in writing,

> "Another very common approach in secular society is to describe the problems facing men in terms of the negative consequences that has for women."

IOW, secular society is gynocentric, but it's NOT ONLY secular society. This is also happening in the church. But where the church is concerned, Renn turns shy.

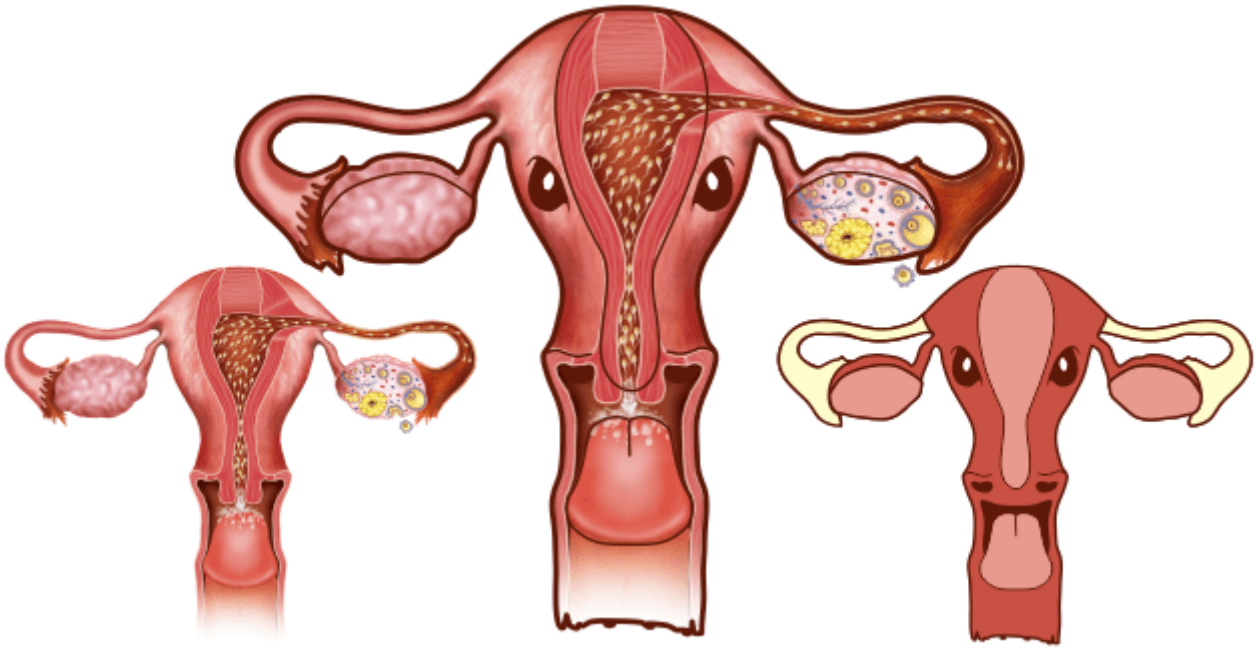
> "I think many of these kinds of arguments, particularly the religious ones, are well-intentioned. Their goal seems to be convincing a perhaps skeptical audience of why it is important to reach men."

No. It is not "well-intentioned" except towards feminine interests. No one gives a d@mn about men — ONLY what men can DO for women. This chivalry is prevalent in the culture because it has been endorsed by the church for centuries.

> "What's truly important in this type of argument? Is it that dad go to church? Or is it that his children go to church? All of these basically imply that the real goal is to get mom and the kids to church. Dad is primarily an instrument to accomplish that end."

There it is. Just as I've been saying, the real concern is NOT for men, but for women.

Renn dances around this throughout his posts and newsletters, but it's always "Pity Men". He'll never put his finger on the root and call it what it is — gynocentrism (female idolatry) and a rejection of God's order. Why not? Because it is The Sacred Cow.



Steers are Sub-Par (in Heifers' eyes)

Renn gives us a subtle hint about why men are not being taken seriously.

> "… a recent article in the Atlantic essentially blames a shortage of good men for why women are freezing their eggs."

Translation: Good Men = Tall, handsome, wealthy, well-hung Alpha males freely offering their unconditional, undying love, labor, and lifelong commitment to be a babysitter, butler, domestic houseworker, and therapist to a worn out woman in her 30s — just so she can stick the landing, have her big day at the altar, and then divorce gr@pe him after she pops out 2.1 kids to use as an alimony / child support anchor.

Yes, there's not enough men like this to meet women's demands, and there never will be — NOT because of the fractional number of these men, and NOT because dandies are unmanly and therefore unacceptable to the most exquisite feminine tastes, but because women are insatiable. Women have come to fully EXPECT this and they would rather live in candy land than to ever be disappointed with reality.

> "There's a lot of hand-wringing about how a decline in the number of marriageable men makes it harder for women to find husbands."

No, it's not so much that men are not marriageable, although it's true that men are even less motivated to make themselves marriageable when marriage-worthy women are practically nonexistent.

The problem is that heifers don't want the men who are their MMV counterparts. Women don't value men for who they are, they only value men for what men provide to them. Women are not interested in investing themselves in a man, a marriage, a family, and children. They're not interested in serving and glorifying God through these venues. These things are merely items on their bucket list to be checked off sometime over the course of their lives.

That's gynocentrism. Let's call it what it is. This gynocentrism is the Sacred Cow that no one will touch. And this female perspective has inundated secular society, which is churchianity sans Jesus and the Bible.

Heifers Untouchable

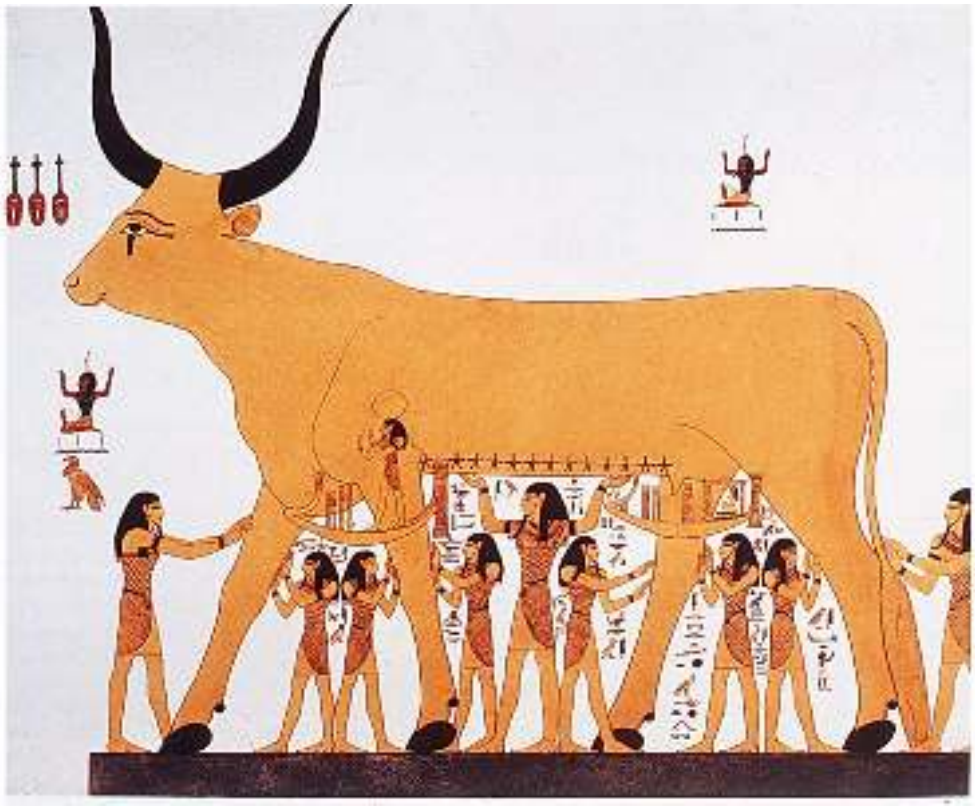
In conclusion, Renn cites Reeves' post [2] favorably and remarks,

> "I think this is a good way to balance it. It's of course appropriate to talk about the downstream consequences of troubled men. I do it myself. But that can't be the primary emphasis."

The consequences to men are "downstream" because women have to come first, you see.

So what is the "primary emphasis"? Here's a clue. The emphasis has to be on holding women accountable for their decisions — but Renn won't let himself come to that conclusion. It is a taboo to question the Sacred Cow.

If Renn wanted to help men by focusing on men's issues, then he wouldn't have shuttered his old blog, The Masculinist, which actually DID focus on men's issues. But no. He obviously knew that would get him lumped in with the Manosphere, which he apparently despises, and so he decided to take the monetary but milquetoast middle ground.



More Catharsis

In summary, Renn, Reeves, Emba, et al. are just beginning to notice what Men's Rights Activists have seen in society for nearly a decade, and what Dalrock has noted in the church over the same timeframe. But instead of putting their finger on the problem, they stew in wonder while twiddling their thumbs with raised eyebrows. "Holy Cow! Our Enlightened experiment with ~~gynocentrism~~ The Sacred Cow of Female Primacy has a terrible fallout on steers which stalls the whole herd! What to do?"

Moreover, Renn, Reeves, Emba, et al. are perpetuating the decline in masculinity by providing a catharsis, even while purporting to stand against it. It is a catharsis, because all the talk about the issue lulls readers into a false complacency in thinking that someone, somewhere is addressing these issues sometime in the near future. But it will not be Renn, Reeves, et al., and it will not be today. At the end of the day, nothing will be done.

It's all just BS talk. No one is getting to the root of it. It is still more demanding that men accommodate more, give more, give up more, and sacrifice more, so that women may advance. IOW, men must be sacrificed to the Sacred Cow.

Closing Statements

Mr. Renn, Mr. Reeves, Ms. Emba: Secular men are kicking the hardest against the new gynocentric order imposed on them. The church will be unable to rein them in. You didn't listen to Dalrock, so I have no idea why I might think you'd listen to us or anyone else. You won't listen to the voices in the Christian Manosphere calling for a return to holiness and God's order, so I see no reason why men (Christian or Secular) should listen to you.

Mr. Renn, we are not going to solve this problem until we face facts — women are running this show, and they've decided that unattractive men need to be marginalized, pushed outside the corral, and kept away from active herd participation, because "Eww… Unattractive steers". And marriage is absolutely out of the question. That's what's really going on here. And until people like you admit this, the problem will remain.

Mr. Reeves, if you want to help men now, in this environment, then you'll have to tell women to shape up. Or at least, leave these men alone and stop haranguing them and harassing them to "make sure she gets home safely". No, if she's "Strong and Independent", she can get herself home safely, on her dime and her time.

Ms. Emba, men and women are not going to "rise together" while women are bound and determined to crap on men at every turn merely because men want sex. We have GOT to start acknowledging that men's want and need for sex is real. The problem you have with this is unattractive men wanting sex. Let's at least be honest about that.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 1 (2023/7/12)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 2 (2023/7/13)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 3 (2023/7/14)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Slow Demise of Masculine Leadership (2023/9/1)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Heads in the Sand (2023/11/3)

The Covenant Cross

thedeti · 2 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Our Biblically proscribed roles in a social hierarchy.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Women
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Author's Note: Based on my series of comments.
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

This is the relationship we are to have with civil authorities.

> [13] Submit yourselves for the Lord's sake to every human authority: whether to the emperor, as the supreme > authority, [14] or to governors, who are sent by him to punish those who do wrong and to commend those who do > right. [15] For it is God's will that by doing good you should silence the ignorant talk of foolish people. [16] Live as > free people, but do not use your freedom as a cover-up for evil; live as God's slaves. [17] Show proper respect to > everyone, love the family of believers, fear God, honor the emperor.
>
> I Peter 2:13-17 (NKJV)

This is the relationship we are to have with those who hold authority over us.

> [18] Slaves, in reverent fear of God submit yourselves to your masters, not only to those who are good and > considerate, but also to those who are harsh. [19] For it is commendable if someone bears up under the pain of > unjust suffering because they are conscious of God. [20] But how is it to your credit if you receive a beating for > doing wrong and endure it? But if you suffer for doing good and you endure it, this is commendable before > God. [21] To this you were called, because Christ suffered for you, leaving you an example, that you should > follow in his steps.
>
> I Peter 2:18-21 (NKJV)

And what was Christ's example?

> [22] "He committed no sin, and no deceit was found in his mouth."
>
> [23] When they hurled their insults at him, he did not retaliate; when he suffered, he made no threats. Instead, he entrusted himself to him who judges justly. [24] "He himself bore our sins" in his body on the cross, so that we might die to sins and live for righteousness; "by his wounds you have been healed." [25] For "you were like sheep going astray," but now you have returned to the Shepherd and Overseer of your souls.
>
> I Peter 2:22-25 (NKJV)

This is the relationship God ordained for wives to husbands.

> Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives; While they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear. Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands: Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement.
>
> I Peter 3:1-6 (NKJV)

The "likewise" in verse 1 indicates that we're talking about another subject. That is, wives are NOT civil authorities, masters, or bosses.

Yes. Peter, the man Jesus said was the foundational rock of the church, was going full unapologetic m!s0gyn!st p@tr!@rch!st in describing how wives should act for the good of their marriages and the faith.

In other words: Wives, submit to your husbands, the men you picked, so that they may also do the Word and so that they see your inner beauty and not outward nagging and complaining, so as to make it easier to love you. Do this because you trust Me, and not men.

St. Paul says the same thing.

> Wives, submit to your own husbands, as to the Lord. For the husband is head of the wife, as also Christ is head of the church; and He is the Savior of the body. Therefore, just as the church is subject to Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything.
>
> Ephesians 5:22-24 (NKJV)

As Christ is to the Church, so your husbands are to you. This is so because the LORD, not men, ordained it. The Church is expected to obey Christ in everything; so you are expected to obey your husbands in everything. Everything means EVERYTHING. If Peter and Paul had meant to say, "…everything that is fitting and seemly" or "…everything in that which you are likeminded", then they would have said that. Or if they had meant to say, "…everything except X, Y, and Z and other things to be named later", then they would have said that.

But they didn't, now did they? No, they said EVERYTHING. Period.

That's not me saying that. That's not men saying that. That's God saying that. The God Whose Spirit gave these words to Peter and Paul to give His people. The God women purport to worship and speak for in their Proverbs 31 "ministries".

All this is why I point out, again, as Christ said:

I'm going to the Cross for you, to die for your sins. I'm going to pay the cost of your sin because you can't possibly pay that price. Since you can't do it, I'll do it for you. But in return, you must keep My commandments. Do what I tell you to do.

Trust Me and obey Me. And tell others about Me and the Good News I gave you.

If I have to let the world nail me to a cross every day for your sake, then you have to do what I say.

Do you think it's easy being the "head" part of this? You think it's easy and fun letting the world nail me to a cross every day for a rebellious, disobedient, hateful wife?

Do you think it's easy being responsible for you?

Do you think it's easy having to answer to society for you and our kids?

Do you think it's easy knowing that when I die I will stand before God and give an account for how well I led you, took care of you, washed you in the Word, and bore up under my daily crucifixion?

Do you think it's easy carrying that every day?

Do you think it's easy to suffer for your sake?

Would you like to do this? Would you like to carry this burden?

No? Well, if I have to suffer for your sake, then you have to do as I say.

You don't have to accept this. If you don't, then you have to let the world nail you, and not me, to a cross every day. You won't have me to protect you. You'll have to do it all yourself.

You don't have to accept this. If you don't, then you will pay the price for your sins. That price is eternal separation from Me and from My Father.

Now, women: Go, and be not only hearers, but also doers, of the Word. That Word you claim to obey. That Word you claim to exegete. That Word you claim to know and love.

Be ye hearers and doers of the Word.

It's up to you. Choose this day whom you will serve.

*mic drop

Related

- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Jesus and Women (2021/9/29)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Wives reap what they sow (2022/1/12)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Headship Authority Takes Work (2022/8/12)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): 16 Bible Passages for Teaching Wives and Daughters about Male-Female Roles and Marriage (2023/5/15)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): An open letter to Christian Wives (2023/5/27)
- Σ Frame: Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10)

Is the Σ Frame Blog Positivistic or Prophetic?

Jack · 3 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

A meta discussion.

Readership: All
Length: 300 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

Arch Angel brought up the topic of Scientism / Positivism in a mini-series on Modernism.

Since then, I've found myself reading more of Bruce Charlton's work on Positivism and leaving a few comments here and there.

In one comment, I mentioned that Arch Angel has addressed the nature and place of Positivism in a couple recent posts, and I invited Charlton to give us some feedback about this topic.

In his response, Charlton offered his perspective of the Σ Frame blog.

> "In passing; the way in which Sigma Frame blog is structured is itself highly positivistic — more so than any other blog I have encountered; and it may be that this innate positivism of form, impairs any deep critical engagement with the metaphysical assumptions of positivism."

Meanwhile, Derek Ramsey (Ramman3000) observes something quite different.

> "This blog is full of people with the gift of prophecy, but what it lacks is teachers who examine the scriptures and verify that what the prophets are saying conforms with scripture. This is what I do here, when I'm allowed to do so."

These two viewpoints are diametrically opposed, and since I am not in a position to objectively judge my own blog, I thought I'd let readers sort this out. Here are a few questions to get you thinking.

1. Is the Σ Frame blog Positivistic, as Charlton says, or is it Prophetic, as Derek says?
2. Is the Σ Frame blog too Scientistic to be of value to Christian Faith / Mysticism, or is it merely not Scientific enough for Derek Ramsey?
3. Is Charlton simply and politely saying that he doesn't wish to participate in the discussions at Σ Frame, or is he offering constructive criticism?
4. What is your impression of the Σ Frame blog?

Related

- Σ Frame: Testimonials
- Σ Frame: What is Mysticism?
- Σ Frame (Jack): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Metaphysical Literacy (2022/9/21)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Meta Cognitions (2023/6/23)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): Why are We in this Mess? (2023/11/13)
- Σ Frame (Arch Angel): In Science We Trust (2023/11/27)

The Power to Create vs The Power to Destroy

Red Pill Apostle · 4 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The choice faced by women.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Author's Note: Based on a private email exchange with Thedeti on 2023/11/29. Compiled by Jack.
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Introduction

As of late, I have been doing some thinking about the nature of W!tchcr@ft as a form of feminine power (influence) over husbands.

In many long email strings, at various points, Thedeti and I have discussed the general notion of wives' argumentativeness and contentiousness and how it causes real harm to marriages. I won't rehash the details of why this is, because the horse is unquestionably dead, yet the long term aftermath of having a difficult wife has produced an ascerbic denouement that I have felt, but had not been able to succinctly describe — until lately.

In this post, I'll describe how I found the words to describe this lingering fallout.

The Three Forms of Feminine Power

Dalrock's post, The curse of female power (2010/9/12) was listed at the bottom of Jack's post, Where Shame Tactics become Witchcraft (2023/11/28). This was an interesting read.

One commenter under Dalrock's post, Hope, wrote [emphasis mine],

> "Ricki of The Rawness* website wrote of female power in stages: sexual power (girlfriend), marriage power (wife), and familial power (mother).

> So while the most obvious power that we see, the one being advertised and bombarded all over the place, is indeed most abundant for a woman when young, the power of a matriarch over her children and her family should not be underestimated.
>
> As Clarence points out above, women also have tremendous power in marriages. They can exercise this power even when their looks have faded. They also can be unscrupulous in misusing and abusing their powers.
>
> Solid wife and mother power actually come from years of foundation and work, during which she accumulates her powers via being a constant and nurturing presence in her husband and children's lives. It does not manifest immediately but after a long time. Truly powerful women understand that their feminine powers last via love and compassion, not their sexual appeal which is fleeting."

I find the last paragraph very accurate. A wife's most potent influence is actually political power she expresses within the tight knit tribe of family and that influence is earned with sustained feminine behavior and goodness over long periods of time. This is what a real Proverbs 31 wife builds for herself and why women need to heed the warning of Proverbs 14:1.

The concept of "wife goggles" was as close as I could come to describing what my wife lost with me. These are like beer goggles, but the intoxication comes from the love and goodness of a wife to her husband and they have a magical filter that makes her the most beautiful person in the world to him. The goggles are an expression of a husband seeing his wife for inner beauty as age lessens her physical beauty. (See video short below as an example of what this looks like in a man.)

While I recognized that contention certainly removed my wife goggles, there was another aspect to the loss that was not adequately described by the googles metaphor. When I read Hope's description of wife power I knew that I had a more complete picture of what has been lost.

Why Do Women have Great Power at Certain Moments in Life, and None at Others?

Dalrock's post cited a section of an article from No Nonsense Self-Defense, Having Power and Losing Control (2008/5/10).

> "…many young women don't realize that the power and influence they have over young men is given to them by the men. It exists only AS LONG as the man is willing to listen to her. And … the reverse also is true. Men only have power over women as long as they grant it to them.
>
> But, many young and inexperienced women assume that the power and control they have over other people comes from within themselves. This gives them a false sense of confidence and often a dangerous overestimation of their own abilities. They assume that the power is always going to be there and that with words alone they can control others.
>
> While this can be true as far as it goes, there are many situations where words no longer have power."

I immediately recognized my own marriage as one of those situations in which the wife has lost her power, specifically sexual power and marriage power. I was well acquainted with how my wife's lack of sexual power was due to her withholding sex for years.

While I understood my wife's sway over my decision making had become anemic, I did not have the words for it until now.

Suffering from an Imbalance of Feminine Power

Dalrock responded to Hope.

> "Great analysis Hope. All of those categories of female power you describe fit with what I had in mind, but as you say the sex appeal one has the most visibility. All of those powers though are about influence over others. When used properly this is a huge positive for all involved. When used improperly it becomes resented manipulation and eventually blows up in the woman's face, just when she is least able to learn a new way of managing."

And to Clarence.

> "The biggest challenge I see is women becoming seduced by their own sexual power at an impressionable age, and not cultivating either the more mature forms of feminine power Hope references in her comment, or more traditional male forms of power (money, skills, etc.)."

From reading this, I realized that there was some blessing in marriage that has gone unknown by me — something I had missed, or had been deprived of — something that would have added significantly to my marital sanctification. Instead, I have experienced the mordant consequences of marrying a woman who fell to the temptation of control idolatry. And since I've only been married once, this is the only experience I've had with marriage.

Forsaking Her Wife Power for Woe

Thinking of Feminine power in terms of Ricki's troika of feminine power — sexual power (girlfriend), marriage power (wife), and familial power (mother) — puts things into the right perspective for recognizing the respective damages that occur when these powers are absent, abused, and/or misused.

In the past, I have told my wife that she has no idea what she lost with her behavior over the years without really being able to define what I meant. But now I recognize this is because my wife lacks 'Wife Power'.

As the author of No Nonsense Self-Defense said, the wife foolishly thought that she had real power over him from within herself, not recognizing that her power is only that which he gives her.

In my case, it is not a given that my wife's opinion is good for me or my family, or even that it is biblically based. Too much pushing for her own way, arguing, fighting, and withholding sex resulted in the realization that, to quote an old country song, "my give a damn's busted". Since using sex as a tool and contentious arguing are inherently selfish endeavors, this means that her opinions are entertained but with much more discernment and without her having the benefit of the doubt due to a thin track record of bringing good instead of harm (Proverbs 31:12). That means her sway over my decisions is greatly reduced.

Eventually, men married to consistently difficult wives get to the place of putting conditions on remaining married to her. That can be in the form of reducing his involvement in the marriage until his effort level matches his perceived benefit (often this leads to divorce) or him openly putting conditions on remaining married (fewer men do this). Either way, her 'Wife Power' is eroded.

Conclusions

Hope (for that which was lost) brought the words I needed to express my own unspoken inner turmoil, and I'm writing this post to share this consolation with readers.

The application of biblical principles for wifely behavior builds a wife's influence. This power, stemming from doing good and building trust, is what God intended a wife to have. It is in stark contrast to the contentious means most women use to try and assert control.

What the contentious wife loses in her marriage is 'Wife Power'.

What the husband of a contentious wife loses in his marriage to her is the myriad benefits of her 'Wife Power'. In addition, he is shouldered with the full burden of navigating through life without that positive influence, all while managing the tedious intricacies of her petty dramas and sh!t tests.

'Wife Power' is what wives lose when they buy into the enemy's lies (John 10:10), and the behavior that directly leads to its loss permeates every area of a man's life, until it doesn't. When a man recognizes this pattern in his marriage, it is the beginning of an awakening, a realization that his confidence, health, joy, and life satisfaction, are his to control and his alone. The husband's losses are the benefits of 'Wife Power' in his life, such as a trusted sounding board, a true helper, and a desired companion, but the wife loses that which she sought most earnestly: control.

When a man begins to act on the belief of self-determination, his acting independent of her for his own best interests is the first outward evidence the wife sees of the decoupling process. But what she may not realize is that in his mind he already firmly believes he is done with her and at this point her influence is largely squandered. At this point she has little to no influence on him and her ability to have him consider her when determining the direction of the marriage evaporates. In essence, if she wants to stay married he is going to do what he wants and she can take it or leave it.

 Ricki was an Irish blogger, YouTube personality, and music artist who DJ'ed clubs in Dublin. He was a highly respected author in the days of the Classic Manosphere, most known for his various thematic series (e.g. Myth of the Middle Class Alpha Male) which uncovered the deeper meaning underlying intersexual social interactions.*

Unfortunately, most of his contributions to the Red Pill have been meticulously scrubbed from the internet by TPTB, but his musical compositions on his SoundCloud channel survive. A brief analysis of Rawness psychology can be found at Game for Omegas: Psychology on The Rawness (2012/3/15).

Related

- Σ Frame: Women have sex to influence men (2021/11/10)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle, Thedeti): 2 Old Farts Talking About Their Wives (2021/12/20)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Importance of Biblical Marriage (2022/1/3)
- Σ Frame: Epilogue: Counting the Cost (2022/3/30)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Do you have a Communist Marriage? (2023/4/26)
- Σ Frame: On Choosing a Wife Wisely (2023/5/1)
- Σ Frame: Knowing her Place (2023/5/5)

Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft?

Jack · 5 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

A self-deceptive evasion of responsibility and blessings.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Case Study 1 — Sarah Dawn Moore

Sarah Dawn Moore has risen to be a well-known female persona in the YouTube Femosphere. Although her videos are rather grifty and not truly Red Pill, they do contain a lot of Red Pill advice and information, mostly secular but sometimes Biblical (perhaps by coincidence).

Her tagline is…

> TURNING "NICE GUYS" INTO DESIRABLE MEN ❤
>
> "Traditional women still exist and I'm living proof of that. I teach you what to look for, how to prepare yourself and how to recover from your past so you can look forward to your future with an amazing woman by your side."

Wowzers! What a grandiloquent promise! Chumps are subscribing every minute!

10 years ago, if a woman said these things, she would be the superstarette of the Manosphere. But since the Red Pill went mainstream, it is significantly less impressive.

Even though most of her content is directed towards thirsty men, she occasionally creates videos aimed at women. Interestingly, these two target demographics are generally exclusive. The videos for men are speaking to men who can't get a chick (i.e. non-alphas), while the videos for women are geared towards women who can't bag an alpha. There is no attempt to encourage men or women to adjust their expectations for love and mating, only advice about adjusting their behaviors with the implied promise that "This is what 'works'!" In essence, Moore is cashing in on the sufferings of lust and poverty mentality.

"How to get a man to eat out of the palm of your hand"

Take a look at this video short from Sarah Dawn Moore, entitled, How to get a man to eat out of the palm of your hand (2023/5/17). Note that the title assumes female primacy. The phrase, "eating out of your hand" appeals to women's fleshly pride. This is not an accurate description of the behavior she describes, nor is it a healthy motivation.

Here, she says to female audiences [emphasis mine],

> "So this is how you get a man to eat out of the palm of your hand.
>
> Are you ready for it?
>
> You got to convince him that you are 100% on his side.
>
> Have his back. Don't talk down to him.
>
> And just generally be a nice person who has some emotional regulation.

> I know. It's witchcraft.
>
> So then when you do bring him some feedback in a non-threatening way, he probably won't be mad.
>
> Shoot! He might admit that he knows you're right.
>
> But only because he knows he's not gonna get punished and that you're on the same team.

> But use with caution my loves, because this might make your relationship 10 times better with a man."

In this video short, Moore admonishes women to display what we would describe as mature feminine behavior. This is a message to women that is sorely needed. But the kicker is that in the middle of her talk, she asserts that a woman acting this way is "w!tchcr@ft". Then she reaffirms female primacy by assuming that women are inherently 'right' and that women have the authority to 'punish' men. She ends with a warning for women not to make their relationships too strong. (???)

Why does she call this w!tchcr@ft?

- Is it calling good evil (AKA Moral Inversion or Ressentimentalism) or merely a hyperbole?
- Is this the common opinion about this behavior among women?
- Is it a "reverse psychology" appeal to women's fallen nature to get on board?
- Does she truly believe a woman acting this way is "w!tchcr@ft"?

Case Study 2 — Ame Blending

Now before we dismiss this false identification of good and evil as simply a hyperbole or a moral inversion, consider how even the most obedient and submissive Christian women think the same way.

Those readers who have been around a while might know of Ame Blending, AKA Blending Ame online, who was/is considered to be a unicorn by RP standards. Even she takes the same viewpoint.

For example, in response to a discussion at Spawny's Space, Sh!t Test Diagnosis and Cure (2018/6/16), she writes,

> "This also brings into question being polite, generous, thoughtful, etc. I know when doing so it brings out the best in people and causes them to respond positively to you (in general) which, to some people, can be seen as a form of manipulation. My first husband certainly thought this way and was always looking at 'why' I was being kind, assuming I was trying to manipulate and control him. It made my head spin sometimes. I spent a lot of time in prayer asking God to help me so I could be pure in how I presented myself to him. It didn't change his reactions to me, but it kept my conscience clear before God."

From Ame's statement, we can see why good willed / kind / respectful behavior from women is often considered 'manipulative'. If a woman is in the continual habit of treating her man like sh!tola puree, then it is only natural for him to be suspicious of any proper behavior that is out of the ordinary.* So apparently, this viewpoint is partly because of a false attribution, and partly because of social conditioning.

It is a shameful discoverie to find that women KNOW how they should behave, but intentionally avoid such behavior with such regularity that men and women have learned to see it as a coy manipulation.*

 We don't know whether Ame used to be this way in the past and thereby soured her husband against her, or if her husband (whom she has described as very ungodly) was in the habit of viewing all women in this manner.*

More Perspectives

A couple viewers picked up on Moore's duplicity and blessed us with a more accurate viewpoint.

> "So many women can't seem to realize they are supposed to be on the same team. In other words, behave like a responsible adult who respects and wants to work with their partner. And come from a genuine place of love and care, not just to get him to eat out of the palm of your hand. Show your guy some respect and admiration and be less of an overweening burden, and he will move mountains for you. Trust is the biggest denomination of relationship currency."

Translation: Women, be agentic, genuinely interested, trustworthy, and treat your man with respect — the way you want them to treat you. Being a loving and understanding partner will get the best results from your marriage.

Another commenter, David Sharon shared this gem.

> "When my wife and I first got married, when I came home from work and she would start complaining to me about a problem, rather than holler back at her and start a fight, I would get mad with her. Before you know it she is calming me down. She didn't know I did that on purpose for the first 10 years of our marriage.

Brilliant! By making emotionally charged demands, he is shifting the conflict structure and making her feel secure.

> "That's all I want. To be respected, needed, and appreciated. It's really not hard at all. You would never have to fix or pay for anything again if you would just be appreciative, faithful, and non-confrontational."

Yes! This message needs to be broadcast on radio and cable TV and from the pulpit.

David goes on to compare honeycraft and w!tchcr@ft, although he doesn't label it as such. [Edited for ease of reading.]

> "Women can get whatever they want from a man just by being feminine, quiet, soft spoken, listening, and agreeing 99% of the time, staying loyal, and submitting to his leadership happily. Actually BE on his side. Because if a man trusts you completely and then you DON'T have his back when it matters, he will never forget that and your relationship will never recover completely.
>
> If a female does these things, that man will literally want you on his team for life. You would become the one he can't live without. You can then recommend and suggest things with a smile while you're making dinner and he will genuinely listen and comply.
>
> Bonus: He'll buy you whatever you want within his budget.
>
> Bottom Line: Make him feel like he's the king of the world whom you admire, love, honor, and respect.

> That's it. That's the cheat code. He'll do whatever you want. Women since the beginning of time knew this.
>
> Ever since feminism and the 60s, they have decided to do the opposite. Now women have careers, money, cars, and clothes, but no men or committed relationship options, and more divorce.
>
> Why can't they find a man? Where have all the good men gone? These are the questions we hear. They're right in front of you just like always. We just know a raw deal with zero upside and all risk when we see it. Because women switched up their behavior to doing, getting, and saying whatever they want while wanting men to remain the same traditional guy. It's like treating your boss like a subordinate and expecting or believing you are entitled to a raise, time off, and benefits. Nope! It doesn't work that way.
>
> Pick your struggle ladies. If you want a career, independence, money, a mansion / penthouse, and a business / brand, know that the qualities those take to obtain go to your head and gas you up, and you can no longer be submissively feminine to your man. It goes against your wiring at that point. Women can't earn and accomplish and build legacy and bring it home to their man for him. Men are built to do that. Women for the most part are not. Or, you can pick God, family, and husband over everything else. The women that choose the latter are the ones men want. Period end of story."

OK, that comment was a little long, but it was so good I had to include it here.

Conclusions

When women excuse themselves from behaving well towards a man and justify their careless lack of agency by saying this kind of behavior is controlling / manipulative / W!tchcr@ft, they are Gaslighting themselves. All Gaslighting is W!tchcr@ft. In essence, they are casting a spell over themselves by believing these lies.

I have some breaking news for self-Gaslit women. Your relationship with a man, sex, and childbearing / childrearing is your rightful domain of authority. If you're not developing and practicing your honeycraft skills, you have forfeited your God given genuine authority over a man and your primary purpose on Earth.

Related

- Σ Frame: Musings on Feminine Soft Power (2017/10/24)
- Σ Frame: Reevaluating the Centrality of the Male Ego (2020/4/15)
- Σ Frame: The Feminine Christian Marriage Quadrilemma (2021/7/16)
- Σ Frame: Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10)

Controlled Opposition

Jack · 6 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

There's no control, actually.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Readers' Note: Part of a mini-series on the new "Pity Men" narrative.
Length: 500 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes + 15 minute video

Here's yet another example of the overweening new "Pity Men" narrative. This time, they're questioning the basic ontology of identifying with men, thereby indicating that they're aware of the plan.

Manosphere Highlights Daily: RE: Sydney Watson — The Men vs Women Problem | Are We Empathizing Too Much With Men? (2023/11/10) Length: 15:37

Note the title, "Are We Empathizing too Much with Men?" A better question would be, "Are We Empathizing too Much with Women?" — women like Sydney Watson.

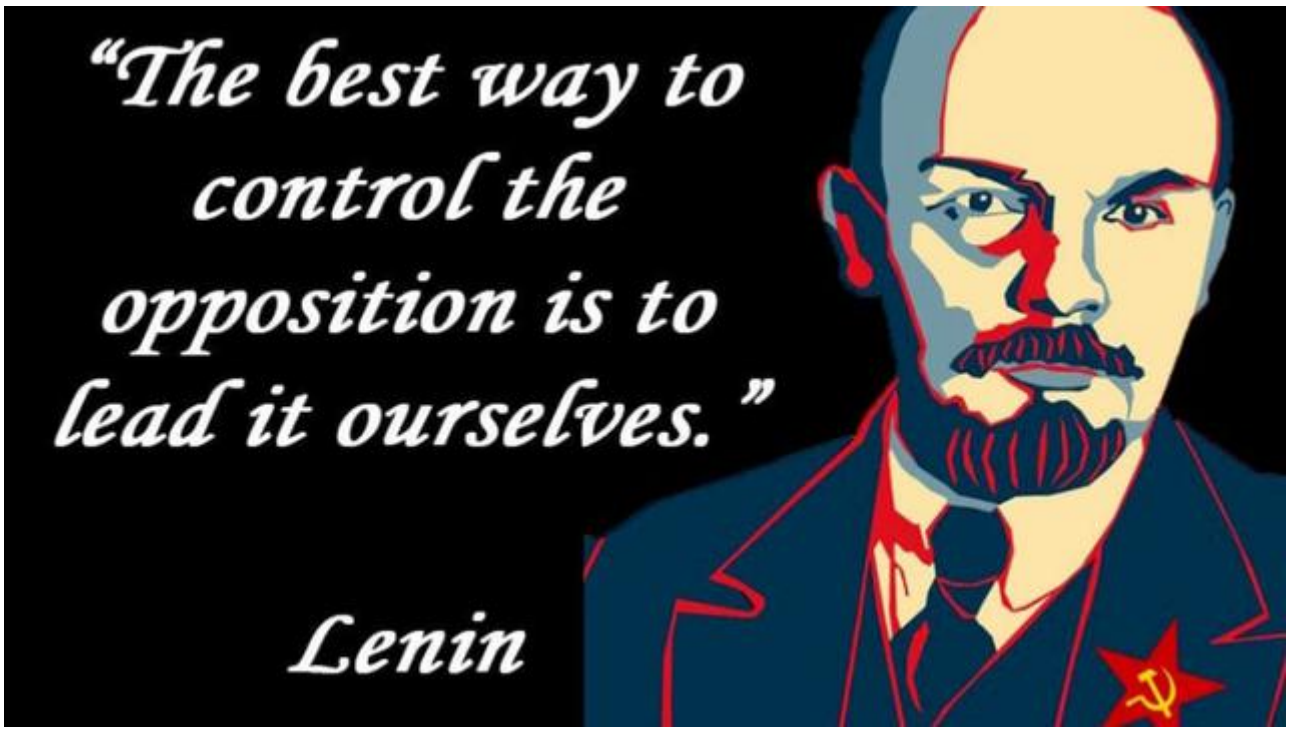
Even MHD fails to pick up on the bias.

Watson dominates the conversation, which is in accord with the cultural zeitgeist of gynocentrism. She smanders T@te's name as a byword to recast the entire Manosphere as m!s0gyn!st!c. She denies all the basic Red Pill truths about the feminine feral nature as being 'illogical' and 'unreasonable'. Of course it is illogical and unreasonable, nevertheless, it is true!

Why is Sydney Watson's opinion deemed so important? It is because she is moderately attractive, and therefore, her "opinion" gets her cash, clicks, and views. If she cut her hair and packed on 50 kg. (~110 lbs.), her opinion would suddenly not be anywhere near so popular. She would just be another whiny Karen that no one would want to listen to.

Look at the two guys Watson is talking to (not with). I'd say they're somewhere between Gamma and Delta on the SSH. Why is she talking with these guys instead of someone like Aaron Renn, Chris Williamson, or Jordan Peterson? It is because her rhetoric can't stand up to a man any higher in the hierarchy. I'd like to see what Watson says in the presence of an Alpha like Andrew T@te or a Sigma like Myr0n G@!nes. She would get flustered and fold. She might even get flushed and F.

At 11:15 to 11:35, they openly admit being "controlled opposition".



The so called "controlled opposition" may not be covertly coordinated by TPTB as we may be wont to imagine. Instead (at least in this case), the controlled opposition are wishy washy people who misinterpret Red Pill truths as m!s0gyny and mistake opinion for the Manosphere. They fill the airwaves with static rhetorical pollution which clouds the real issues and distracts seekers from finding the real thing.

Ironically, the controlled opposition has no control whatsoever. They're just flapping their lips and creating catharsis. Perhaps that is all that is necessary to qualify as "controlled opposition".

P.S. — This post should not be misinterpreted as saying that there is NO 'orchestrated' controlled opposition. I saw that Chris Williamson did an interview with Rob Henderson and Prof. Jordan Peterson. WTH?!? How in the world did these guys ever link up? It must have been 'orchestrated'.

Related

- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Skirting around the Skirts (2023/11/24)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Strachan's Strafe (2023/11/25)
- Σ Frame (Jack, Thedeti): The Sacred Cow (2023/12/1)

The Cold Christian Shoulder

Jack · 7 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Apathy within the church piles on the neglect shown towards men in crisis.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Readers' Note: Part of a mini-series on the new "Pity Men" narrative.
Length: 2,700 words
Reading Time: 14 minutes

Introduction

Men have been slighted, not only in secular society, but also in the church. So far, the posts in this mini-series on the new "Pity Men" narrative have discussed how influential mouthpieces are beginning to recognize that treating men this way hurts everyone, so they are kicking around the idea that men should be treated better — not for the sake of the men themselves, but in order to lessen the burden on women and society.

But the way men are being treated is just one symptom of a deeper problem. The root of the problem lies in what I'll call "The Cold Christian Shoulder" combined with the Broken Window Effect. To offer a description of "The Cold Christian Shoulder", a shoulder is offered to those who are dysfunctional or hurting, but it is, in fact, a very cold, bony shoulder. The recipient of this attention is NOT regarded as a human being with genuine spiritual needs, but as an annoying problem-child to be spanked into silence and/or eliminated. This treatment is NOT genuine compassion or love, but is nothing more than polite avoidance, posture posing, and virtue signaling. The love and grace of God is conspicuously absent, and the subject is not actually bettered in any way.

Jesus spoke of this condition concerning the last days (however you want to interpret that).

> [11] And many false prophets will rise up and mislead many people. [12] And because lawlessness is increased, most people's love will become cold. [13] But the one who endures to the end is the one who will be saved.
>
> Matthew 24:11-13 (NASB)

One commenter put it like this.

> "You in the fine robes… Here is a wonderful place to sit! Sit here! Welcome!"
>
> "Oh… You again? Oh, yes… yeeew…. (ahem, cough) Sit at my footstool and just be happy for the fact that we are tolerating you…"
>
> LastMod's spoof of James 2:1-13

Case Study 1 — LastMod

The most salient example of The Cold Christian Shoulder here at Σ Frame is exemplified in LastMod's / SeventiesJason's testimony. Jason was a regular here between 2018/4/15 and 2023/4/5, leaving a total of 1,776 comments over the years (at this time of posting). Dispersed throughout many of his defensive comments, he tells the sad tale of how he was rejected by churches and individual Christians, and regularly subjected to classism, discrimination, and favoritism, over and over throughout his life.

To highlight some of the more common transgressions of the church, and to give readers a taste of Jason's misery, here are a few excerpts of his comments. [Reorganized and edited for clarity and ease of reading. Links to the original comments are contained in the initial words.]

Offending and Turning Away Seekers

Lastmod raises his hand to join this Christian club.

> "I dutifully sat in a church every week for over a decade."
>
> "I did think and believe I was forgiven at one point, and for many years actually. Then I realized I wasn't."
>
> "I figured God just loves some, and hates others."
>
> "The realization of this double cross, to me, was completed sometime in 2017."
>
> "It was because of the hypocritical double standard that was used against me. That and the lack of decency and respect was unbearable!"
>
> "I'll never join a church again, that's a given. I know how it goes… Just like in the past. I wasn't welcomed."

Service is Transformed into Shameful Servitude

> "When they found out I could clean….. It was "janitorial ministry" for LastMod. "It's an amazing leadership role!" (rolls eyes)
>
> So I used the gift I was TOLD I had — cleaning toilets. I wasn't permitted to decide for myself which gifts I had or how I could best serve…… That's reserved for men with Egos the size of God.
>
> This "amazing leadership role" quickly became, "YOU, LastMod… Go scrub toilets for the rest of your life! And remember, Jesus loves you!"
>
> All the gift did was make me "miserable" because the men who seemed to know everything, would still tell me I was "doing it wrong".
>
> "The "skills" I have are useless for the "glory of god"."

Discriminatory Double Standards

> "I was made to follow impossible standards and rules for anything and everything, while just about anyone else wasn't.
>
> For them, it was, "But my own son / daughter….. Wellll, God knows their heart, and they didn't mean to do X and Y."
>
> To me, it was, "Oh… Jesus loves you, but see, there are consequences to sin….."
>
> For them it was, "He just needs some time to grow in love and grace. He'll get his act together soon."
>
> But for me? "Oh, Lastmod has a looong way to go. He has hurt so many people!"
>
> For them, it was, "My son is a real man, loved by all the girls in the church, he just needs to know God loves him…"
>
> To me, it was, "Oh, you want a wife? Do you want to meet a woman? Well, you should get a better job! A Christian man HAS to be a provider of the upper middle-class American dream to his wife, so you made mistakes > there too. But don't worry, there is no marriage in heaven…."

On Sexual Promiscuity within the Church

> "Women have been telling men for a few generations, "It's not you, it's me." / "Someday a great gal is gonna come into your life." / "You're fine. I just don't like you that way." / "Keep trying. Women don't like quitters!"
>
> And in church, I heard THIS from women:
>
> "If you just don't try anymore or give up, it shows us christian gals that you will give up on us if times get hard. We want a man who is trying and improving and becoming the man God wants him to be."
>
> Assuming of course that women are "okay as they are" and then told, "You have to wait on God." and "God decides."
>
> "In church, hanging with guys saying, "Oh, [sex is] not a big deal", and yet they are the ones who can't stop talking about it.
>
> From my fellow brothers in the church who were married, "Too bad, you have to burn, but did you know that if you ask God for a wife and He doesn't deliver, then either you are not asking for the right things or you're asking it for selfish reasons."
>
> But when THEY were dating or got married, oh, no, no, no. It's "God gave me a sex drive and marriage is gift." / "I have to take action… and if I mess up, you know… slip it in, Jesus will forgive me."
>
> Lust. The world encourages it. Popular Christians can do what they want because "God forgives sin". Meanwhile, Incels are shamed for even having a sex drive.
>
> IOW, lust is okay for them. Evil for any man not like them.

Religiously Rejected

> "I saw sin openly rewarded in and out of church, and it was always people who were just "better" than me in any way. I was made to feel stuck and ashamed of my past while others were actually rewarded with more…. and I don't mean "money" or that kind of thing….. Just, their sins were not as bad and Scriptures about being forgiven were used with them…. But never for me."
>
> "No!!! God's grace requires YOU to live with regret, suffer, burn, think about what you did when you were an addict. God loves and blesses us. He loves you so much, he wants you stuck, jealous and to sit in shame in church while we flaunt our blessings in front of you and remember this is God's grace!!! Don't you dare reject it! Also, your Bible translation is wrong. We use the new living recovery passion amplified edition. That King James Version isn't right or correct!"
>
> "It got to the point that I was living in shame, sitting in a corner within the kind of church that the Christian Red Pill mocks, and being shamed by all the women who had more than one sexual partner in their life."

The Lord's Name is Blasphemed

> "I know "your" church would never do this. No church does, and yet….. here it is written in scripture. It was obviously an issue then, and it's more profound now."
>
> "How will these men be treated? Used for ego gratification? Shamed? Told, "Sucks to be you"? Expected to say a sinners prayer and then be "all better now"? These men that show up will need something to do aside from being lectured to, directing traffic in the parking lot, and expected to just serve as helpers to the married folks."

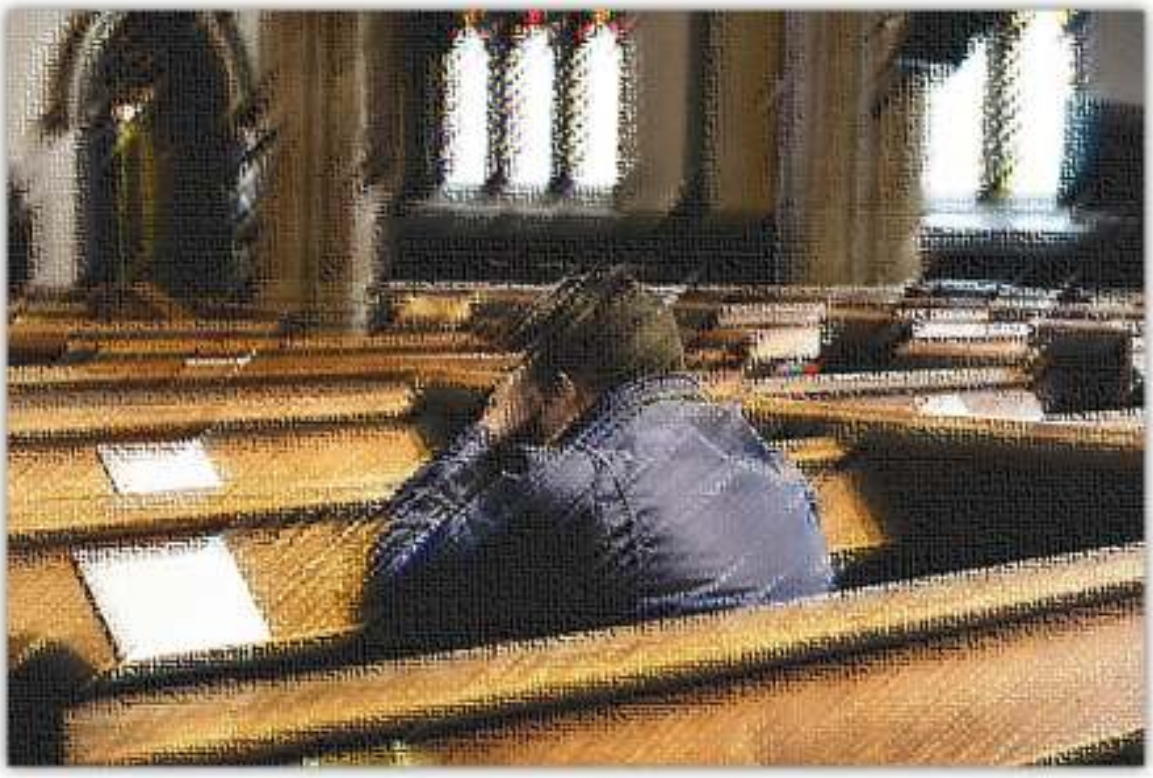
LastMod's Conclusions

> "That's the Christian faith. That's why men don't come."
>
> "I respect the foundations and what and who Jesus was/is, but I really dislike most run-of-the-mill church folks. Gossiping hypocrites who get to sin and decide who Jesus likes and hates. I'm not hanging around for that. I left high school in 1988."
>
> "Anyway……. This is where the work of true ministry comes in. If indeed the church is going to turn-the-world-upside down, it has to stop being a social club for marrieds. Aaron Renn is completely wrong about singles in church."

Case Study 2 — Bardelys the Magnificent

Regular reader Bardelys the Magnificent also wrote some excellent observations of The Cold Christian Shoulder phenomenon from first-hand experience.

> "I have had similar life experiences to Jason, sans the drug abuse. Spent my entire adult life trying to figure out where I went wrong. Went to therapy and the whole nine yards. I've posted before about the 4 Temperaments, which played a part, but that wasn't the whole issue. Basically, I was abandoned as a teenager by authority figures I trusted. I should not have been left unequipped and alone to solve major adult problems as a teenager and young adult. Any and all advice I was given was useless, or I was told "Sorry kid, I never had that problem" while they went back to grilling. Think Boomer Mouse from the Hypergamouse strip. What I needed was a community, and one did not exist."



> “As a result, I have Fearful Avoidant Attachment, which is the worst one. People with this issue live in a state of shame and feel worthless because there was nobody there to catch us if we fell. We know we are alone; we have to be perfect because the whole burden of the world is on our shoulders, and we will not get help because people are selfish and only look out for #1. Fear and anxiety dominate the mind. For an example in my own life, I have stayed way too long in many jobs where I was mistreated because I knew I could not call on someone for advice, or to help me land a better job. The responsibility fell 100% on my shoulders to solve the problem, and I knew if I failed there would be a chorus of critics instead of cheerleaders. Failure stops being an experience to learn from and rather becomes proof of inadequacy and a source of existential dread because the chasm between who you are and the perfect person you have to be to handle all of life’s problems solo is too great to bear. Relationships become transactional and one-sided instead of symbiotic and healthy. You begin to see the worst in humanity, and you learn you cannot depend on anybody, including yourself. Most at this point find a self-destructive coping mechanism. I will guarantee you this is where Jason turned to drugs.”

> "Thankfully, attachment issues can be corrected. But they take a community of healthy people willing to let damaged people lean on them when it's convenient for them and not convenient for you. You may have to let them, annoyingly I admit, b!tch and bellyache while they come to terms with what has happened to them. Then you need to support them. Really and tangibly. As in "Let me help you." "Take as much as you need." And NOT, "Just be Alpha, bro." This is what our modern world, including our churches, are unwilling to do. We are a society full of rabbis and Levites. People like Jason and me should have gotten this treatment 20-30 years ago. We did not. The problem has been allowed to fester and stew, and now it will take a much larger effort to solve. An ounce of prevention, all that jazz. It was not done then, so it must be done now. We are required by our Savior to do so.
>
> Jack, you are doing the right thing with Jason. You are letting him sort this out while gently guiding and aiding him. A Jason does not get solved overnight. He has many decades of programming he has to rewire. The worst thing we can do is kick him out for failing, because that's what everyone else has done. How many times have you failed and your Creator forgave you and let you try again?"

Case Study 3 — Assessing the Damage

Joe2 wrote a much needed word of encouragement.

> "…the Salvation Army treated Jason like crap. Jason was very trusting and thought the Salvation Army would be of help.
>
> What the Salvation Army did was place Jason in a "box" (the drug / alcohol box) and proceeded to minister to the box without ever looking inside the box and seeing the individual. This phenomenon is not unusual and is well documented in the book, "Quitting Church" by Julia Duin. There she interviews people and records their experiences at church. People were placed in boxes and stereotyped from which there was no escape. They explain their frustrations with that system and eventually leave. In one example, the single women were told to be patient and wait on the Lord for possible husbands while continuing performing their prescribed church duties (such as working in the kitchen). Yet the pastor one Sunday bragged how he arranged to have his > daughter meet some eligible men and how one thing led to another and now she's engaged. Everything for the pastor and his family while the single women in the church were told to be patient and wait on the Lord. Sounds a lot like Jason's experience in the Salvation Army."

> "I believe Jason was very trusting of the Red Pill and their advice for dealing with his singleness. He placed himself in a situation similar to an individual who has some chronic medical condition and seeks medical doctors for treatment. The doctors may offer all types of hope and encouragement with their treatments, but as years go by and nothing works the patient finally reaches the breaking point and tells the doctors off. The doctors resent the patient's action because the doctors know best and ban the patient from their office so they don't have to deal with the truth.
>
> Jason is a mentally sharp guy, has a well-paying job (and I believe has received some promotions) and is respected where he works. I value Jason's views and look forward to reading his comments — the short videos he posted addressing some concerns were well done and easily understood."

Concluding Statements

When we consider these testimonies, the new "Pity Men" narrative is revealed to be a crass mockery of the real conditions on the ground.

Men turn to online forums to voice their deepest concerns and frustrations because the church will not hear them. Yet, this should be the church's primary function in society — to provide a safe haven for the broken and a city of refuge for the lost.

As long as church and individual Christians are focused on the Churchian Culture Club moreso than on ministry, men will continue to flounder and fail amid the current Feminist Fatalism — and so will the church.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Dispensation of the Red Pill (2018/4/7)
- Σ Frame: A Response to Jason's Comments (2020/2/21)
- Σ Frame: Avoiding the Broken Window Effect (2021/7/21)
- Radix Fidem: Stop the Brother against Brother Stuff (2021/7/22)

- Σ Frame: Another Status Signaling Narrative (2022/3/26)
- Σ Frame: Respect makes all the difference! (2022/8/17)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/5)
- Σ Frame: Black Pill Competition (2022/9/15)
- Σ Frame: Sitting on the Fence (2022/9/26)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/30)
- Σ Frame: Divided We Fall (2023/6/6)

Double Bind

Jack · 8 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Masculinity is being forbidden, and yet, Men are blamed for lacking courage.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Author's Note: This post was requested by Anonymous on 2023/11/6.
Readers' Note: Part of a mini-series on the new "Pity Men" narrative.
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Eulogizing the Death of Masculinity

> Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! Because ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous…
>
> Matthew 23:29 (KJV)

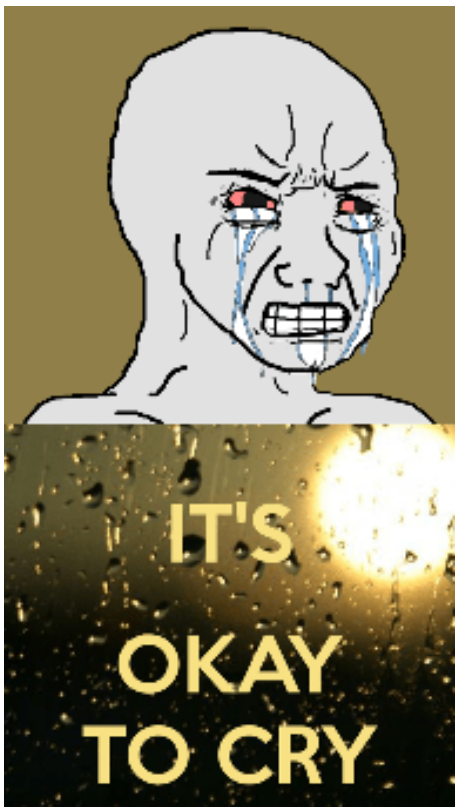
In the same way, culture shapers obsess over the death of masculinity and gloat over the spiritual nakedness of men that is revealed during this age.

Take a look at these headlines. (I won't wade through the propaganda therein.)

1. Of Boys and Men (Richard Reeves): The underreported rise in male suicide (2023/3/13)
2. Of Boys and Men (Richard Reeves): Into the vacuum demons pour (2023/3/30)
3. Of Boys and Men (Richard Reeves): The fragile beauty of male friendship (2023/4/1)
4. Christianity Today (Zachary Wagner): In Search of Non-Toxic Male Sexuality (2023/6/12) [Archive]
5. Of Boys and Men (Richard Reeves): Why fatherhood and marriage don't have to go together (2023/6/18)
6. The Washington Post (Christine Emba): Men are lost. Here's a map out of the wilderness. (2023/7/10)
7. Aaron Renn: Weekly Digest: American Men Are Lost (2023/7/14)
8. Aaron Renn: Christine Emba: Man Troubles (2023/8/21) [Paywall]
9. Christianity Today (Richard Mouw): What 'Jesus Wept' Means for Manhood (2023/8/23) [Archive]
10. The Financial Times (Jemima Kelly): The west is suffering from a crisis of courage (2023/8/24) [Archive]
11. Of Boys and Men (Richard Reeves): Why Lone Ranger masculinity is a dead end (2023/9/2)
12. Aaron Renn: Weekly Digest: A Crisis of Courage (2023/9/9)
13. Of Boys and Men (Richard Reeves): By far the biggest risk factor for suicide is being male (2023/9/16)
14. The Wall Street Journal: Rescuing Men From Rage Rabbit Holes (2023/9/23) [Archive]
15. Aaron Renn: Weekly Digest: Pity the Incel (2023/9/23)
16. Aaron Renn: The Feds Come for the Manosphere (2023/10/13) [Archive?]
17. Aaron Renn: Weekly Digest: The Evil That Men Do (2023/10/13)
18. Of Boys and Men (Richard Reeves): Men without children (2023/10/23)
19. Men Are Good (Eisso Post): Let Us Now Praise Awkward Men (2023/11/27)

The Double Bind



As you can see from the headlines above, these messengers keep beating the drum that American men are angry, depressed, evil, inadequate, lost, pitiable, rejected, wimpy wussies. And they'll throw in a statement or a post now and then to explain why they think they're doing men a service in doing so. Reeves adds the mockery of false compassion… *"It's OK to cry."

Meanwhile, the old Feminist / W0ke message continues to reverberate — that masculinity is abusive, antiquated, egotistical, oppressive, ruthless, toxic, etc., ad nauseum.

In short, men are being given a non-verbal "Man Up!" message with an extra dose of feigned empathy, summarily expressed as "Don't give up!" But it's one that becomes a conundrum when contained in a gynocentric culture. Exactly HOW is a man supposed to forsake 'toxic' masculinity and NOT be an NPC rainbow wuss? (Or maybe that is the point of rejecting masculinity.)

 Reeves is channeling an old Boomer epithet / song.*

The Cultural Sh!t Test

It is a cruel and cynical mockery to point out that men are failing to be MEN when they're ostracized, punished, and shamed for actually displaying masculinity. And yet, this is exactly what the new proto-conservative mouthpieces are doing.

It's like a grand mal Sh!t Test scaled up to the cultural level — which could be expected from a gynocentric culture.

Let me explain.

One of the more frustrating characteristics of the unredeemed feminine nature is the headstrong insistance on constant Fitness Testing, AKA Sh!t Testing.* Here, the woman drums up an entirely unnecessary complication in the man's life and continues doing so until the man's inadequacies and weaknesses are exposed. In fact, this is the definitive purpose of Fitness Testing. In the process, it is not uncommon for the man to be utterly emasculated, and as a result, she loses her attraction to him and her respect for him goes in the trash. This happens because she knows what she is doing is bad, and he won't stand up to her. It never occurs to her that she should stop being a troublemaker.

The man's only way out of a Sh!t test is for him to demonstrate impressive feats of masculine dominance, especially done in a manner that humbles the woman.

Men can fare much better in their relationships and marriages if they can learn how to handle Fitness Testing with finesse, however, this can be an exercise in futility with an excessively insecure wife who gets a shill out of being contentious and/or domineering.

The bitter irony of Fitness Testing is that as the woman is rocking the boat to flush out demonstrations of masculinity from the man in order to ameliorate her own feelings of insecurity, the end result is that she finds evidence of weakness in the man which erodes her trust in him and thereby makes her feel even more insecure.

Likewise, the current focus on men's weaknesses does not ameliorate men's troubles, nor offer any sort of therapy. It only exposes men's weaknesses to public criticism and makes them even weaker, further eroding the collective confidence in men as a group. (Or maybe that is the whole point of this exercise.)

 Fitness Testing and how it leads to a dead bedroom was discussed in a recent thread of comments.*

Attacking the Masculine Mythos

Let's take this a step further. It gets worse.

Masculinity is certainly manifested in the outward hallmarks of courage, honor, mastery, perseverance, protecting, providing, strength, getting the job done, and so on. But in a metaphysical sense, Masculinity* is a psychological construct — an illusion, yes, but it is a true illusion — a mythos that is apprehended by faith. The more you believe it, the more you will BE it!

The meaning of all actions, appearances, experiences, facts, impressions, and spoken words are interpreted through the lens of whether it aligns with and/or supports the larger mythos of Masculinity, in which case it is considered Masculine, or else cuts against the grain of it. In addition to Masculinity, Femininity, glory, honor, reputation, and personality theory are other socio-psychological constructs based on mythos which are interpreted in the same manner.

Unrelenting Sh!t Testing, whether personal or cultural, breaks that true illusion and replaces it with a denial of the glory of God that is manifested in the mythos of male and female archetypes and sexual dimorphism. The current "War on Masculinity" is not only a denigration of men and a subversion of male authority, it is also an attempt to deconstruct and demonize the very archetype of Masculinity. The conscientious and repeated insistence on breaking these constitutional beliefs is a non-verbal, situational gaslighting of our collective masculine identity — another form of W!tchcr@ft.

He's not Masculine enough, according to her mythos. Her mythos was shaped by Disney, Feminism, and a series of Ch@dwicks.

Glory is Dispelled

Back in March, 2023, we covered the topic of Glory and we identified many elements of that which glorifies God. If we look down the list of 30 vectors of how God's glory is shown through men, we find that the dilemma proposed above effectively removes two thirds of the list! Namely…

1. A culture that is ordered in justice and the fear of God
2. Being one's true self (in Christ), e.g. charisma, confidence, etc.
3. Battle, Competition, Conflict, Opposition, etc., specifically overcoming these.
4. Drawing the Line on the Unacceptable
5. Enjoyment; Joy
6. Ethnic identification and affiliation (e.g. belonging, group loyalty, humility)
7. Faithfulness
8. Fearlessness; Overcoming Fear and Shame
9. Grace
10. Honor, praise, or admiration.
11. Justice
12. Mercy
13. Obedience to authority
14. Playing a Role (c.f. an appeal to Mythos)
15. Power; Military might; Martial prowess

16. Raising the Bar on Commitment
17. Righteousness
18. Sexual Dimorphism (Masculinity vs. Femininity)
19. Suffering
20. Taking a stand

And let's not forget Family which juxtaposes several of these.

Of note, there are two traits that glorify God which have been taken out of context, exaggerated, and set out of place — Self-Sacrifice and Suffering. The nature of the sacrifice is an offering to the false god of gynocentrism, thereby stealing from that which rightly belongs to God. The suffering is on account of the sins of others who have been deceived and misled by the lying spirits of this age. Here, we are called to draw boundaries, right those circumstances as much as we are able, and forgive if/when necessary. Sometimes, forgiveness means removing certain people from one's life. Reclaiming God's Glory is glorious in itself.

So What are MEN Supposed to BE in 2023?

Overall, men are being given a choice between being a fake, liberal, Male Feminist, or a conservative weeping wanker. There is no option for men to be MEN.

Posing this false dilemma casts a spell that forsakes the glory of God that is shown through men and masculinity. Furthermore, this false dichotomy entices men to lock themselves into a frustrating dilemma and prevents them from seeing through the ruse. Meanwhile, men are either trying to kill their masculine essence, or trying to pretend they don't have one, or succumbing to hopelessness, or self-pity, or worse.

It takes a bit of faith to see past all the Gaslighting and hash tag slinging in these narratives. MEN are NOT defined by these cultural narratives, unless they buy into it. MEN are defined by the mythos of masculinity and the life stories they create for themselves, and these narratives are defined by the men who create them.

Faith allows a man to get a glimpse of how he might Glorify God in being a MAN. And these days, it takes an active imagination to latch on to one's true calling as a MAN. That vision should inspire and drive a man to fulfill that calling.

The main metaphysical / spiritual obstacle is therefore forsaking the false mythos being presented, which is idolatry.

Σ Frame Axiom 36 (Jack): Idolatry displaces and destroys the imaginings of faith.

Identify your idols, whether it be Altruism, Chivalry, egotistical pride, Gynocentrism, lust, being a Nice Guy™, religious legalism, self-pity, or another.

The more you submerge yourself in the constitutional lies of these idols and entertain the cathartic, gnostic platitudes being proffered by either the secular and/or pseudo-Christian cultures, the more you will fall under its spell, and the weaker your faith will be. OTOH, the more you tap into your faith and activate your mystical imagination, the more you'll gravitate towards your true, God ordained purpose in life as a MAN.

What God calls each man to be is unique to each man. Draw upon your inner convictions through vigilant prayer to discover what God has in store for you. Cling tenaciously to that vision until it becomes a reality.

Find rest in God, worship Him through pursuing the Flow of the Holy Spirit, and trust that He is able to demonstrate His glory by solving your personal problems in unexpected ways.

A Prayer for Strength and Renewal

Lord, I believe that You are able to demonstrate Your glory by solving my personal problems in great and unexpected ways.

I shall find rest in You and worship You, that I might pursue the Flow of the Holy Spirit in my life.

Set mine eyes upon the work of Christ in me. Strengthen my innermost being, and I shall reclaim your glory. Let my words and actions befit the image of masculinity that You have laid out for me.

Let me not be moved nor shaken by the lies and fitness tests imposed upon me by this World. Grant me the wisdom to draw boundaries in response to the poor or sinful behaviors of others, the faith to right those circumstances as much as I am able, and the discernment to know when and how it is most appropriate to forgive others.

In Jesus name I pray,

Amen

Related

- Σ Frame: “Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest.” (2022/4/27)
- Σ Frame: Ressentiment within Feminism has become a Generational Curse (2022/6/24)
- Σ Frame: Infiltrating the Minds of the Masses through Suspension of Disbelief and Social Catharsis/Cathexis (2022/7/25)
- Σ Frame: The Comfortable Danger of Social Catharsis (2022/7/27)
- Σ Frame: Frustrated Collective Catharsis as an Incentive for Social Unrest (2022/7/29)
- Σ Frame: The Distension of Cathartic Cathexis (2022/7/30)
- Σ Frame: Hexis Cathexis and Voodoo Catharsis (2022/7/31)
- Σ Frame: The Slow Demise of Masculine Leadership (2023/9/1)

The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse

Jack · 9 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The list of Sirens ever grows. The strumpet of doom forever blows.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes
Image Credit: Screenshots taken from video games, Crossout and Fallout.

During the 1960-1975 timeframe, there was a drastic change in the social and economic conditions that dramatically and decisively altered the landscape of the mating market in significant and enduring ways.

The underlying reasons for this can be traced to an array of social shifts and technological developments during the critical period of the social revolution which took place between 1960 and 1975 which have together worked to remove many of the natural constraints that limited the full exercise of hypergamic mate selection.

Chateau Heartiste's post, The Six Sirens of The Sexual Apocalypse (2016/3/17), was the first to set out a list of these factors defining the change:

1. Effective and widely available contraceptives: the Pill (1960), condoms, and, the de facto "fallback" contraceptive, abortion was legalized with Roe v Wade in 1973.*
2. On 1969/9/5, the State of California became the first State to enact "No-Fault Divorce." Other states quickly followed and within 15 years it was nationwide. The socio-economic implications were generally very favorable to women and unfavorable to men, irrespective of the marital economics.
3. Equal Opportunity Legislation (1972) combined with The Tender Years Doctrine (1881) created economic leverage and independence for women. This hurtled towards women's economic advantage by 2020, indicated by the college enrollment ratio and relative income levels among younger generations.
4. Rigged feminist-inspired laws that have created less incentives in favor of marriage for men and greater incentives in favor of divorce for women, regarding custody arrangements, child support policies, Duluth, et al.

5. Penicillin and related antibiotics (reduced the cost of contracting STDs).
6. Widely available hardcore pornography (decreased marginal participation rates of men in the SMP and MMP).

 Roe v. Wade was repealed in June 2022. At first, it was thought that this was a victory for the pro-life crowd. However, state voting in November 2023 brought with it the establishment of abortion in many states, (e.g. Kentucky, Ohio). Overall, deregulating abortion at the federal level has shifted those "rights" to the state level.*

Since CH's post was written, this list has expanded to include others.

1. The Hart-Cellar Act of 1965 opened the floodgates of immigration in the U.S., thereby diluting cultural homogeneity and weakening tribal affiliations that support the institution of marriage.
2. On 1967/6/12, the United States Supreme Court (the Warren Court) unanimously ruled in Loving v. Virginia that anti-m!scegen@t!0n laws are unconstitutional. Following the Loving decision, the state anti-m!scegen@t!0n laws were repealed, with Alabama being the last state to repeal its laws against interracial marriage in 2000. Since then, interracial unions have become socially acceptable and more widespread.
3. The Summer of Love (1967) kickstarted the Sexual Revolution, quickly culminating in the centrality of sex in Western culture, and the widespread social acceptance of sexual liberation.
4. Following a brief but widespread Christian revival in the late 1970s, a flaccid "love and forgive" social atomosphere took root in the church. The previously harsh stance towards sexual sin melted away, thereby planting the laissez faire seeds of gynocentrism to grow into the Complementarianism of the 1980s.
5. The predominance of Chivalrous norms, and other prevailing lore such as the "Soul Mate Myth" and "Friends First", that places men under the sexual authority of and at the service of women.
6. The late 1990s introduced SMS and internet communications which are convenient and easy to hide and delete, further enabling secret liaisons to be conducted covertly and discretely.
7. In the early 2000s, social media and dating websites which employed the power of digital aggregation proliferated, thereby providing women whoards of sexual opportunities with men.
8. 2015/6/26 — The Obergefell v Hodges decision required states to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples and to recognize same-sex marriages.
9. 2016/9 — OnlyF@ns opened the door for 1,000s of amateur th0ts and thirsty men to conduct discrete transactions.

Most of these changes revolved around the fundamental goals Feminists have for social change.

Chateau Heartiste's original post is reblogged below. [Links and images added.]

Lest we forget.

The Four Sirens Of The Sexual Apocalypse

March 17, 2016 by CH

A long, long time ago, in a pleasure dome far away, CH introduced the idea that the West is currently besieged by the Four Sirens of the Sexual Apocalypse.

So why are women now the eager instigators of divorce? What changed in the culture? Four things, primarily: the pill, easy divorce, women's economic independence, and rigged laws that make divorce a good financial prospect for women. The four sirens of the sexual apocalypse together have created the perfect sociological storm where a woman has every incentive in the world to ditch a husband to follow the whims of her heart once his usefulness has been exhausted.

Later, CH expanded on the Four Sirens theme.

1. Effective and widely available contraceptives (the Pill, condom, and the de facto contraceptive abortion).
2. Easy peasy no-fault divorce.
3. Women's economic independence (hurtling towards women's economic advantage if the college enrollment ratio is any indication).
4. Rigged feminist-inspired laws that have caused a disincentivizing of marriage for men and an incentivizing of divorce for women.

Two secondary Sirens were added to round out the list:

- Penicillin (reduced the cost of contracting STDs)

- Widely available hardcore porn.

Probably of all the CH scribblings on this subject of Western Decline, this passage gets to the meatiest heart of it:

So, a crib sheet of quippy replies if you ever need it to send a feminist or manboob howling with indignation:

1. The Pill
2. No-fault divorce
3. Working women
4. Man-hating feminism
5. Penicillin
6. Porn

Toss into a social salad bowl already brimming with an influx of non-European immigrants thanks to the 1965 soft genocide act, mix thoroughly, and voila!: a huge, inexorable, relentless leftward shift in American politics, an explosion of single moms, wage stagnation, government growth, upper class childlessness, lower class dysgenics, and a creaking, slow deterioration in the foundational vigor of the nation and the gutting of the pride of her people.

Into this pot pie of portent throw in the Skittles Man, Bring the Movies Man, Nah Man, and Disappeared Again Man, for whom girls have always swooned but who now, thanks to relaxed pressure from women themselves requiring men to put a ring on it before getting any huggy or kissy, and the incentivizing of risky sexual behavior by government policy and contraceptive technology, could enjoy sex without the entanglement of marriage or gainful employment.

Game, for all the sh!t it gets from the usual suspects, was just a rational response to a radically altered playing field. It didn't cause this calamity; it just profited from it.

Meanwhile, beta males are left scratching their block-like skulls, wondering what the f_ck just happened.

All well and good, says the reader, but where is the ¡SCIENCE! buttressing all this speculation and real world observation to satisfy sperg demands? How about right here. (Via The Cheapest of Chalupas)

> "Family structure in the United States has shifted substantially over the last three decades, [HBDer: MUH GENETICS] yet the causes and implications of these changes for the well-being of family members remains unclear. This paper exploits task-based shifts in demand as an exogenous shock to sex-specific wages to demonstrate the role of the relative female to male wage in the family and labor market outcomes of women. I show that increases in the relative wage lead to a decline in the likelihood of marriage for those on the margin of a first marriage, and present suggestive evidence that these effects are concentrated among less-desirable matches. A higher relative wage also causes women to increase their hours of work, reduce their dependence on a male earner, and increase the likelihood of taking guardianship over their children. These findings indicate that improvements in the relative wage have facilitated women's independence by reducing the monetary incentive for marriage, and can account for 20% of the decline in marriage between 1980 and 2010."

BOOM THERE IT IS. CH WAS RIGHT. Female economic self-sufficiency decreases the marriage rate and increases urban s1ut factory churn, because self-sufficient women need beta male bux less and therefore can indulge the chasing of alpha male fux more.

¡SCIENCE! has confirmed the existence of Le Chateau Heartiste's Third Siren of the Sexual Apocalypse.

It's like some people think I make this sh!t up outta thin air. No, I've just spent a lot of time in the trenches of the dating market. I have seen much. I have learned much. And my wisdom is infinite. YUGE, even.

You only had to listen.

***

> "Ok, enough crowing. How about a solution?"

Sure. Here it is:

Repeal the 19th Amendment.

Maybe slightly more realistically, get rid of Title IX and the rest of the man-hating, human nature denying, legal fictions shoved down our throats in the last sixty odd years by rancid feminist c_nts and their lackey low T manlets. Culturally, real progress can be made by simply ending the GRRLPOWER propaganda and returning to teaching the virtues of the masculine ideal. Too many boys in STEM? Great! That's what boys are good at. Too many girls preferring marriage and stay-at-home motherhood? Great! That's what girls are good at.

Simple truths and simple beauties have more power than labyrinthine lies and grotesque ugliness, as long as you hold them close to a heart that has banished cowardice.

Related

- Chateau Heartiste: Descent Of Man (2010/4/22)
- Chateau Heartiste: Latest Baumeister Paper Supports CH Concept Of The Sexual Market (2012/11/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Lopsided Liberalized Mating Market (2021/2/17)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): No Mo Roe (2022/6/27)
- Σ Frame (Jack): No Mo Roe, No Mo Hoe! (2022/6/29)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Rolling Forward (2023/8/7)

The Turnings Applied to the State of Marriage

Red Pill Apostle · 11 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

A Crisis is followed by a High.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity.
Author's Note: This essay was written on 2023/10/6. Coauthored with Jack.
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

The Turnings

The Strauss-Howe Generational Theory describes recurring generational cycles in American history and Western history. This concept of historical cycles is captured in a book called The Fourth Turning, by William Strauss and Neil Howe. Its main focus appears to be on the differences between generations in American society through the geo-political lens.

According to the theory, historical events are associated with recurring generational personas (archetypes). Each generational persona unleashes a new era (called a 'Turning') lasting around 20–25 years, in which a new social, political, and economic climate (mood) exists. The completion of four Turnings constitute a larger cyclical pattern called a 'saeculum', which usually spans between 80 and 100 years, although some saecula have lasted longer. One saeculum is equivalent to a long human life, such that we are able to witness all four Turnings over a lifetime. The theory also states that a crisis recurs in American history after every saeculum, which is followed by a recovery (High).

Here is a video of Neil Howe, one of the book's authors, explaining the four Turnings in recent American history. He also summarizes the most recent Turning the U.S.A. is in.

Here are the dates laid out by Howe.

Years	Turning	Generational Archetype	Generation*
1946-1963	1st Turning	High	Baby Boomers
1963-1984	2nd Turning	Awakening	Generation X
1984-2008	3rd Turning	Unraveling	Millennials
2008-2030?	4th Turning	Crisis	Generation Z

* The generation includes those who were born and came of age during this Turning and were therefore shaped by this Turning. The events of a Turning are promulgated by the previous generations.
High — This is an era when institutions are strong and individualism is weak. Society is confident about where it wants to go collectively, even if those outside the majoritarian center feel stifled by the conformity.

Awakening — This is an era when institutions are attacked in the name of personal and spiritual autonomy. Just when society is reaching its high tide of public progress, people suddenly tire of social discipline and want to recapture a sense of personal authenticity. Young activists and spiritualists look back at the previous High as an era of cultural poverty.

Unraveling — The mood of this era is in many ways the opposite of a High. Institutions are weak and distrusted, while individualism is strong and flourishing.

Crisis — This is an era in which America's institutional life is torn down and rebuilt from the ground up — always in response to a perceived threat to the nation's very survival. Civic authority revives, cultural expression finds a community purpose, and people begin to reidentify themselves as members of a larger group.

Correlations to Marriage

> "Hard times create strong men. Strong men create good times. Good times create weak men. And, weak men create hard times."
>
> G. Michael Hopf, in Those Who Remain.

This line has been quoted often around the 'sphere. In fact, it describes Strauss and Howe's Saeculum in a nutshell.

My thought is that since family is the basic building block of society, the state of marriage should line up with Howe's Turnings.

High (1946-1963) — The post WWII baby boom was the marriage and family ideal, at least compared to what we have today. People married young. Families were strong. Morale was high. The economy was booming. When we hear people reminisce about the 1950s, they're referring to the most recent High.

Awakening (1963-1984) — The U.S. was embroiled in Civil Rights and the Vietnam War, leading to mass protests and social unrest. The Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse appeared during this time. The 60s were characterized by 'Free Love" and individual sexual liberation, largely because the pill (introduced in 1960) dissociated sex and procreation for women. The Hart-Cellar Act (1965) opened the country to mass unfettered immigration, thereby watering down both the culture and the good will of social capital. No Fault divorce (1970) was intended to liberate people from abusive marriages, but in fact, it opened the floodgates of divorce which roared to 50% within a decade. R0e vs Wade legalized abortion in 1973, leading to a 25-30% fertility cull over the next two decades. All together, these things led to the unraveling of America over the next few decades.

Unraveling (1984-2008) — The 80s and 90s saw the detrimental effects of the prior era on families and kids (e.g. widespread sexual promiscuity, divorce gr@pe and its effects on the family, latchkey kids, etc.). Grunge lent mass expression to Nihilism in the 90s. The early oughts petered out into a cultural and socio-sexual malaise, ending with an economic recession in 2008.

Crisis (2008-2030?) — The socio-sexual / spiritual poverty of the previous era finally bleeds out and the rottenness festers. The corruption of government and politicians make daily headlines. MGM totes blatant lies and can no longer be trusted. The church leans apostate and dwindles in influence. Sexual perversion is in full swing, and is even taught to children in public schools. Marriage and birth rates drop through the floor. Cohabitation and OOW births rise to unprecedented numbers. Civil demonstrations and violence erupts, and the police are defunded or else unresponsive. Mass migration continues, only now it includes white nationals moving interstate. Nihilism has become a way of life. MRA / The Manosphere / The Red Pill, and home schooling arise in response. Many conservative / family minded individuals take the Passport route in an attempt to escape the madness.

Concluding Statements

The Strauss-Howe Generational theory widens the Frame of understanding why we are now living in a time when marriage and relationships for the bottom 80% of men are in a crisis due to a host of "Damned if you do, damned if you don't" circumstances, as Dalrock and Thedeti have well documented for years. This has been going on since the early 80s and has been getting progressively worse since then. Notice that this is about 40-50 years or more (by the time it will be over) which is much longer than the 20-year 'High' following WWII.

Strauss and Howe's survey of history (dating back more than 500 years) indicates that each Crisis is followed by a High. But as of now, it is impossible to tell what the next 'High' will look like. Is it even reasonable to expect that what we now call 'Traditional Marriage' will ever return?

I personally think we'll settle at some form of unlicensed cohabitation as 'Marriage 3.0'.

If the trend of women towards outpacing men in education and earnings continues, a couple things will happen. The current court system (designed to protect women and built on the assumption of the man as the provider), will begin to apply to women earners. More women will pay alimony and child support, and it won't take a large percentage of women to have to pay these for the whining to reach the level needed for reform. The other thing that might potentially happen is that women will use men for sperm donation and stay single moms. This is a hard, hard life path because caring for kids will hurt their career advancement, limiting their funds for fun, and they won't have the freedom to travel and have all the fun they imagine single life should include. The women who don't have kids will have the mental problems that come from their unfulfilled desire to be a mom (not to mention any psychological damage from riding the CC). For all these reasons, singleness and DINKs will become more common.

Jack has suggested that the effects of the Unraveling will selectively expunge the weak and those who are not God and family oriented from the gene pool, resulting in a population that is more conscientious about sticking to family, marriage, and tradition.

It's hard to tell exactly what will happen, but we'll see the answer sometime in our lifetimes.

Related

More videos on this topic from Neil Howe can be seen at his YouTube channel, Hedgeye.

- Σ Frame: Zeitgeist Report 2018 (2018/4/15)
- The Art of Manliness: The Generations of Men: How the Cycles of History Shape Your Values and Your Future (2020/6/5)
- Σ Frame: Is the Pendulum Effect caused by Western Individualism? (2020/10/9)
- Σ Frame: On the Turning Away (2021/3/5)
- Σ Frame: "Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest." (2022/4/27)
- Σ Frame: No Mo Roe, No Mo Hoe! (2022/6/29)
- Σ Frame: The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10)
- Σ Frame: Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 1 (2023/7/12)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 2 (2023/7/13)
- Σ Frame: Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 3 (2023/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The Abortion Bottleneck (2023/7/19)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Rolling Forward (2023/8/7)
- Σ Frame: The Decline is Terminal (2023/8/9)
- Σ Frame: Testosterone has been Decreasing for Decades (2023/8/21)

Submission / Virgin Shaming

Jack · 12 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The hateful war on Femininity that Men seldom see, but which indirectly affects Men.

Readership: All;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Introduction

Initially I was hesitant to include this post in this series, because at first take, Submission / Virgin Shaming appears to be a War on Femininity. However, when femininity is removed from women, it effectively reduces Men's domain of influence and it deprives them from obtaining optimal quality women in marriage.

First, some foundational ideas concerning femininity.

Back in October 2022, we discussed a few discordant concepts of humility, submissiveness, and attractiveness. If the reader is unfamiliar with this series on Feminine Submission, you may want to go back to pick up on the main conclusions.

Humility, purity, submissiveness, and vulnerability are key traits in femininity, and these have become an exceedingly rare combination of traits in a woman. It is practically extinct among Western wimmin, even among nominally "Christian" wimmin. Perhaps it is because of this paucity in femininity, we (including myself) have a poor understanding of the distinctions between these characteristics, how it plays out in woman's behaviors, and what it looks like IRL.

What is Submission / Virgin Shaming?

Submission / Virgin Shaming occurs when these core traits of femininity are hated and ridiculed by the ungodly. It is conducted almost entirely by women against other women.

Submission / Virgin Shaming puts intense pressure on women to defile themselves for the sake of fitting in to a debased culture / social circle. This defilement is not just an invisible inner quality. It is evidenced in a woman's countenance, her dress, and her behavior.

The purpose of Submission / Virgin Shaming is to normalize H0edom so that H0es can relieve themselves of the guilt, shame, and social pressure of being a H0e.

Submission / Virgin Shaming is extremely widespread and apparently rather successful too, and this is a significant compounding reason why femininity has disappeared from the West.

Rock Kitaro went over this phenomenon in this short video.

Women Shaming "Submissive" Women — An Unpopular Opinion (2022/7/10) Length: 3:31

If feminine humility and submission is denigrated as "sub-par" and mocked as "Perfect Pollyanna" by hateful h0es, this is a major clue that these traits are key elements to Godly femininity.

Unfortunately, these behaviors even appear among Christian men and women.

Pro-Bimbofication

In addition to Submission / Virgin Shaming, there is significant pressure for women to be bimbos. There are several compounding reasons for the breaking flood of Bimbos in the SMP. Here are a few of the most egregious reasons.

- Bimbofication is the overriding norm.
- Young women are drawn to Bimbofication so as to attract more sexual attention.
- To compete against bimbos / h0es for attention and relevance in the SMP.
- Young women face intense peer pressure to become a bimbo in order to be accepted by their peers.
- Young women are averse to being shamed by bimbos for their innocence / purity and often succumb to the peer pressure. Women can avoid being shamed by bimbos for their purity if they become a bimbo themselves.

Men also promote Bimbofication, which contributes indirectly to Submission / Virgin Shaming.

- Men are drawn to Bimbofication because it appeals to the carnal nature.

- Men will never object to a woman dressing provocatively, but will revel in it.
- Young men are so used to seeing Bimbofication as the norm, that they defer to and/or favor women who are domineering, meretricious, and sexed up.
- Demure, modest women are often ignored by men who direct their attention to more appealing eye candy.
- Many men prefer partners who are confident in displaying their sexuality, thereby creating a shift in the market demand for h0es and thereby ignoring / leaving out / neglecting those few pure women who are struggling to survive.

I have written about these things before.

- Σ Frame: DTFCupid (2017/12/17)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Incentives for Bimbofication (2021/8/23)

What to Do?

1. Increase Awareness

Men should be aware of which types of women are likely to engage in Submission / Virgin Shaming and which women are likely to be targets. To help increase men's awareness of these conditions, I offered pictorial examples of these appearances in the following posts.

- Σ Frame: Revisiting the Beauty of Purity (2021/4/9).
- Σ Frame: Slut Eye (2023/9/15)
- Σ Frame: The 1,000 C0ck Stare (2023/10/5)
- Σ Frame: Photo Comparison: Lively Affect vs. S1ut Eye vs. 1,000 C0ck Stare (2023/10/7)

Consider the debased women as mortal enemies of godly Femininity.

2. Discourage the Positive Evaluation of Bimbofication

Not only should men take notice of these qualities in an attempt to discern a woman's spiritual constitution, men should also be aware of how they perceive different types of women and the effect these women have on themselves. Ask yourself, what do you see in women, and what kind of woman are you attracted to? Here are a couple posts to help walk you through a self-analysis.

- Σ Frame: Sex Appeal is not strongly correlated with Beauty (2021/4/30)
- Σ Frame: Sexy (2022/10/10)

I encourage Men to condition themselves not to respond positively to hypersexual displays of feminine sexuality, because by doing so, you are inadvertently rewarding it, endorsing it, and encouraging more of the same. Also, by doing so, you are losing your own personal War with Lust and the larger War on Masculinity.

3. Call it out when you see it.

Defend and encourage feminine Women who may be subjected to Submission / Virgin Shaming, especially those within your domain of influence (wives, sisters, daughters).

4. Come out from them.

Extract yourselves, your wives, and your daughters from these debased cultural influences.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Incentives for Bimbofication (2021/8/23)

Invisible Magic Authority

Jack · 13 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Headship Authority is NOT "beat you over the head" Patriarchy.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Reader's Note: A response to Derek Ramsey's mischaracterizations of marital authority.
Length: 1,350 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

"Submit" may not mean what you think it means.

In Derek Ramsey's post, Talking About Old Women (2023/12/4), he writes,

> "Never in the Bible is a Christian wife told to submit to her husband or a Christian husband told to rule over his wife. No such imperatives exist. Deti's Patriarchy isn't found in the Greek Bible."

I'm not sure which translation Derek is using, but it's quite clear. In case you missed it, this structure is based on Genesis 3:16, Ephesians 5:22-23,* Colossians 3:18,* and Titus 2:3-5, which were cited by Riuoku in the comments. And let's not forget Genesis 2:18-25, 1 Corinthians 11:3, 1 Timothy 2:9-15, 1 Peter 3:1-6,* and all the examples of righteous women in the Bible who submitted to their husbands, like Esther who saved her people by submitting herself to a pagan king (Esther 5) and Sarah who called her husband "Lord" and was deemed righteous (1 Peter 5-6*).

 Uses the word "submit / submissive".*
 Uses the word "obey / obedient".*

Furthermore, in regard to Genesis 2:18-25, Richard P said,

> "There is an immediate hierarchy formed by distinguishing between the "help" and the "helped" that no amount of arguing can do away with.
>
> To truly be a help, one must place their agenda lower than the agenda of the "helped" (see "submit").
>
> How can one truly help if the "helped" does not give the "help" any instructions on what he needs the help to do for him? (see "rule over")."

This is common sense. This is domestic order. This is NOT "beat you over the head" Patriarchy.

There are so many descriptions of marital Headship in the Bible, and yet Derek cites one verse out of context (Ephesians 5:21) and gives a complex explanation of 'elided verbs' and 'middle voice' to claim there is no structure of authority in marriage. I admire his rhetorical card tricks in denying the obvious (Proverbs 10:19).

Stacking the Cards in One's Favor

Headship is conditional on the Wife's Submission, NOT on the husband's brutality.

GBFM wrote,

> "This is why "beat you over the head" strict patriarchy isn't necessary if you first lay out the conditions of a relationship with a woman (and she happily accepts them) at the very beginning of getting "serious" with her and if she isn't contentious to begin with, that is."

Note the conditions: "…and she happily accepts them", and "if she isn't contentious". IOW, here, Patriarchal authority / female submission is the default structure from the start. In that case, no problem! You're on the right track towards having a Christian marriage.

But what if these conditions are NOT present, and you're already married? This is the context that Derek routinely ignores, and it is the most common one experienced by men.

GBFM glosses over this situation, saying,

> "You either make sure in the end to marry the right woman or not."

…not recognizing that it is the nature of women to grasp for control over their husbands and men in general. Furthermore, there is no such thing as "the right woman". You will always marry the "wrong person" simply because no one is perfect.

It is what it is, but not what you think it is. Thinking it is what it is not is a delusion — somewhat reminiscent of The Soul Mate Myth.

The only "right woman" is the one who willingly chooses to respect and submit herself to her husband, and this is highly conditional on her moral agency / spiritual maturity and her willing obedience to the Lord. The problem is that most women are NOT like this and don't want to be like this either. But these women still get married and their husbands have to deal with it somehow.

Being selectively deaf at will is a special magic trick that all married men must learn to master.

Magically Transforming Simp-like Marital Suffering into Christ-like Sacrifice

In the same post, Derek writes,

> "When a man in modern society is frivolously divorced and loses his children, he needs to be humble and loving, enduring his suffering — just as the slave with a cruel master had to endure it — for the sake of Christ knowing that this suffering will end after he has died and been resurrected in glory."

Derek's prescription is that these men should let a rebellious wife walk all over them, and they should suck it up and suffer patiently and righteously under their ex-wife empresses — a very fatalistic view that only enables and supports more female rebellion.

News flash — this is NOT a Christian marriage!

Deti's approach is one proven strategy that can implement the Headship Authority structure in the context of having an extremely rebellious wife. The alternative is either a debased marriage or divorce, both of which harm the children.

But instead of recognizing the value of a sanctified marriage that honors God, Derek dismisses Deti's approach as equivalent to an unholy vengeance.

> "Deti is suffering, having been injured by the woman or women in his life. When he reads 1 Peter, a letter written just for men like him, rather than rejoicing in his suffering, he decides to spend his days working to make sure that women are made subservient to atone for what they did to him."

So which will it be? Embrace the struggle to have a Godly marriage, or give in to "Happy wife, happy life" for the sake of ~~suffering~~ a morbid "peace"?

Apparently, Derek has never had to make this difficult choice.

The Sleight of Head

GBFM continues,

> "The strict or should I rather say strictest patriarchists are the ones who failed to do the above to their detriment as I pity them for it (especially Deti who I have always liked even when we have disagreed)."

This really gets to the heart of the matter. Men hear all this talk about complementarianism, egalitarianism, "mutual submission" (e.g. Derek's analysis of scripture), and "servant leader" stuff, and come away with the idea that hierarchy / Patriarchy is abusive / wrong / "beat you over the head" stuff. So then they don't bother to check a woman's submission during vetting, assuming they're even aware of its importance. Then after they get married, they learn from the bitter teacher of experience that Headship Authority / Tingly Respect is the most fundamental element of a successful marriage, and that, contrary to the "beat you over the head" trope, wifely submission is the most important characteristic trait of peace and order in the home. In fact, wifely submission is the most crucial constituent element of a sanctified Christian marriage that glorifies God and blesses the children.

In effect, Derek is actively spawning more "strict patriarchists" by directing them towards the harsh teacher of life experience, using the scriptures no less, which is sure to dampen the joy of their faith over the long haul.

What is the Secret to Derek's Magic?

Every man wishes he had a Proverbs 31 unicorn. Derek actually has one. Derek's wife is and has always been a submissive helper, and he and his family have always been greatly blessed as a result.

The question is, how does Derek evoke his invisible magic authority over his wife?

The truth is, Derek probably doesn't know the secret to his man magic. Like a fish doesn't know what water is, Derek can't see the forest for all the trees. He can't see the value of hierarchy because he's been submerged in it his entire life — thanks to a community that teaches women to conform to the scriptures.

For this reason, Derek will never admit that he has a defacto Patriarchal marriage that glorifies God. Derek is afraid to identify his marriage for what it is — a glorified Christian Headship arrangement, which I've described as Peaceful Unity.

Moreover, it is hypocritical of Derek to slam male / Patriarchal authority and wifely submission in marriage. So what is his motivation for doing so? I suppose it is because he is afraid of condoning spousal abuse. If so, that's cherry picking. That's throwing the baby out with the bathwater. Or maybe he thinks that would be humblebragging. Or maybe he's afraid that he'll dishonor or offend his wife or jinx himself. Or maybe he's uncomfortable with all the responsibilities of being a Head.

In a word, Naïve Hypocrisy.

Or maybe he's simply taking an opposing position for the sake of argumentation, or in order to allow both the supporting rhetoric and the public awareness of Headship Authority to develop.

Perhaps we should applaud his dexterous performance.

The Grand Finale

Derek could improve his performance as a mental magician if he focused on explaining the Peaceful Unity model, of which he is an expert, instead of lambasting the Headship Authority model, which he apparently knows nothing about.

I kindly urge Derek to find the answers to these questions for himself in order to achieve an awareness which will help his writings become more circumspective of the opinions and life situations of men who didn't marry as well as he did.

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: Intelligent submission is not required (2016/6/20)
- Dalrock: A big win for Grudem. (2016/11/22)

- Christianity and Masculinity: Headship is authority (2019/3/1)
- Σ Frame: What is a woman's desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
- Σ Frame: The Greatest Archetype (2021/5/21)
- Σ Frame: Headship Authority Takes Work (2022/8/12)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Biblical Christianity is both good and attractive while Western Christianity is not (2022/8/19)
- Σ Frame: The Challenges of Moving Towards Headship (2023/4/5)
- Σ Frame: Wayne Grudem's Study of the Greek Word kephalē, "Head" (2023/4/19)
- Radix Fidem: Introducing Derek Ramsey (2023/6/8)
- Laughing at Feminism: On Tides and Trolls (2023/12/12)

Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church

Jack · 14 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Testimony and prayer requests from a reader.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

I received the following email message from a long-time reader, Alexei Karamazov*, on 2023/12/13-14. His situation encapsulates the aggravations of gingerliness that comes of having female pastors in the church.

 Online pseudonym.*

Hey Sigma Frame,

There is a situation at my church that I would like to ask for prayer from you and others here. I'll summarize my background at this church and context for the situation as efficiently as possible.

- 28M, been attending since I was 20.
- After graduating college, I started an engineering job and also started teaching youth group. My first class was about 8-10 boys in 6th-7th grade.
- Every year since then I have taught the same group of guys and "moved up" with them in the youth group. They are now upperclassmen in high school or freshmen in college.
- Throughout my time teaching there have been 3 different youth pastors due to various circumstances.
- The current youth pastor is a woman who I give credit to as the one who made me feel included when I first came to the church. She got me into college bible studies at the time and connected me with those people.

My ministry time with the boys has grown into a great blessing for all of us. We spend a ton of time together throughout the week in addition to Sunday. We initially connected over playing video games, but now do mostly everything else together like sports, camping, going to each other's events like piano recitals, etc. So this group grew into a friend group unto itself over time, and also now includes the boys' friends, friends of friends, girls from the church, my own friends, etc.

Earlier this year things took a big turn. In bible study class we started reading through Leviticus and I had my class read Chapter 18. Throughout the years I had plenty of side conversations with the guys 1-on-1 about topics like sexuality and the Red Pill so I thought we were ready to tackle the tough passages as a class.

Most of the guys were ready, except for one student. He walked out of the class and I debriefed with him later. He was uncomfortable with reading those passages and holds to the belief that certain parts of the Bible are no longer applicable to us, including Leviticus.

This caused me to double down on the need for me to study the Word and hone in on more difficult passages. This has been well-received by the rest of the guys and we tackled the controversial questions each week; I did some expositional teaching on Romans 1 and 2, all that good stuff.

In the past month, the youth pastor asked us teachers to start doing prayers in front of the youth congregation. It came to my turn. Here's a brief summary. I prayed that as a church we would believe in the truth, and not in lies. One lie I called out was gender pronouns: "…that we call men women, and we call women men."

The Youth Pastor and I had a 1-on-1 meeting later that week, and she was concerned that my prayer was too strong, and that some students could feel attacked by what I said. I asked for clarification if students gave her that feedback, and she said they didn't. I tried to reassure her that I got feedback from my own boys that the prayer convicted them and that we got to discuss it for ourselves. Our conversation didn't progress from there.

After that, she sent out a group message to the teachers requesting that we send her our prayers ahead of time so that she can look over them. I knew that this was really intended for me, so I anticipated the confrontation. My turn to pray came again this past Sunday (2023/12/10), and I sent her the prayer last Friday. My prayer focused on God's call for men and women separately. For men, I cited 1 Corinthians 16:13 and Joshua 1:9. For women, I cited 1 Timothy 2:9-10. She sent me back the prayer asking that I revise the prayer. We discussed in person what her concerns were regarding what I wrote. Her concerns were…

1. That the 1 Timothy passage was out of context and required more of an in-depth treatment than could be accomplished in a brief prayer.
2. That my prayer should be edifying to the whole body rather than addressing men and women separately.
3. That difficult subjects like sexuality, masculinity / femininity should be addressed in separate bible studies.
4. That I was unfair to girls in just admonishing them while encouraging the guys.

I maintained a professional approach to each point and tried to negotiate wherever possible:

1. If 1 Timothy requires context, could we then open up conversation with the students to follow up afterwards?
2. In my own conversation with the students, they have given me direct feedback that they want the difficult passages that spell out differences between men and women.
3. Will the church ever make time for those separate bible studies tackling these subjects?
4. And lastly, 1 Timothy is not just an admonishment of women; it is an encouragement to be godly woman.

This was a difficult conversation because every time I had something prepared, she had a new concern or fear to move onto. The conversation ended when she offered that another teacher could pray instead of me if I was convicted of this. I agreed and I didn't pray that Sunday.

She wants to have a follow-up discussion with me tomorrow, on Thursday (2023/12/14).

This whole week I have taken counsel from people I trust, mostly family and a couple in leadership at the church. I called the head pastor and he listened to my summarization of everything above. The youth pastor had already approached him regarding this matter and asked for his guidance, and also shared with him the written copy of my prayer. Ultimately he agreed with her in that the time and place for these discussions is in smaller contexts and not in public prayer.

Some analysis and things I need prayer for:

1. I am convicted that I need to step down from teaching. While at first, I was personally offended that my prayers were being censored, I know now that this type of fear will create more issues in the long-term. After all, this issue is just about a couple of prayers less than 3 minutes each, so how will more difficult things be handled?
2. I also need to leave the church altogether. While the youth pastor has been appointed an authority over me for this time and I had complied with her requests for the written prayers, I now see the full ramifications of 1 Corinthians 14:34 and 1 Timothy 2:12. In order to act in obedience to God, I need to remove myself from under that authority since it's not in line with Scripture. In addition, she has authority in other ministries like college, young adult singles, and house churches for the adult congregation.
3. For the first time, I experienced loss of faith in the goodness of people.
4. My decision to leave is certainly not just affecting me; it also affects the youth group because so much of our lives are tied together. I am also concerned about how this will affect them.

I am certain of the major actions I need to take, but the devil is in the details. There are so many little situations that require micro-decisions, and that is what is overwhelming at the moment.

- Do I give advanced notice that I'm quitting, or announce it to them on Sunday?
- When I tell them, do I bring down the hammer that is 1 Corinthians 14:34 and 1 Timothy 2:12?
- If so, should I give this rebuke harshly? In gentleness? Both?

Some counsel I got was to have the head pastor be included in Thursday's conversation with the Youth Pastor in order to have a mediator and to instill accountability.

- Should I tell the Youth Pastor that I want the Head Pastor to be included in our discussion?
- If I let her know my intentions of resigning from my teaching position too early, would she take that as an opportunity to slander me and get ahead of me announcing my quitting?
- Should I record our conversation Thursday?
- Is legal action and protection necessary?

My imagination ran those dark scenarios out and I even painted the youth pastor as someone evil just so I could ease my own conscience.

I intend to lay out everything frankly to my youth kids.

- How charitable do I need to be when explaining both pastors' points of view to the kids?
- When I tell them the full story, should I urge them to leave the church as well? If so, then how imperative should it be?
- Will some of the kids turn against me even if I tell them the truth?
- Would I be casting pearls before swine in that kind of naivety?

This is what I need prayers for: discernment and wisdom.

In spite of these challenges, I have many things that I can be grateful for and I am at peace. I know for sure that my decisions to quit teaching and leave the church are rock solid and my conscience is clear before God in these things. I have a family who knows and fully supports these decisions. I am OK if none of the kids take my side and I walk away alone. And I know that God will provide another church for me to attend in the future.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): The Nature of Evangelism (2010/3/28)
- Dalrock: I'm with Wade Burleson on this one. (2019/6/11)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Wallowing in the Red Pill (2020/1/29)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Red Pill and Blue Pill as Paradigms of Sanctification and Defilement (with a mathematical analogy) (2020/11/15)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Red Pill Awareness (2021/7/23)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Objective Communications for Effective Group Leadership (2021/11/1)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): How to be winsome by adapting to others' Communication Styles (2022/6/13)
- Σ Frame (Jack): How to Motivate the Four Personality Types according to their Communication Styles (2022/6/15)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Summary of Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/30)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Normative Red Pill (2023/1/7)
- Catacomb Resident: Fill in the Blanks (2023/4/24)
- Catacomb Resident: Maybe You Will (2023/6/13)

Uncovering Nakedness

Jack · 16 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The Physical is a manifestation of the Spiritual.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Introduction

> [4] All because of the many harlotries of the harlot, the charming one, the mistress of sorceries, who sells nations by her harlotries and families by her sorceries.
>
> [5] "Behold, I am against you" declares the Lord of hosts, "and I will lift up your skirts over your face, and show to the nations your nakedness and to the kingdoms your disgrace…"
>
> Nahum 3:4-5 (NASB1995)

God's word in no way hints that "uncovering one's nakedness" for the world to see is helpful. But that the nakedness of the wicked and rebellious will be revealed for the whole World to see.

Image Source: The Oregonian: 'Naked Athena': The story behind the surreal photos of Portland protester (2020/7/21)

This is happening in real time all around us — quite literally. With the help of internet communications, the entire world can gaze upon the carnal and spiritual nakedness of Westerners.

> Behold, your people are like the women in your midst! The gates of your land are opened wide to your enemies; fire consumes your gate bars…"
>
> Nahum 3:13 (NASB1995)

The Lord is against the debased West, and its skirts have been lifted over its face.

Nations look on in wonder and amazement, marveling at the utter disgrace.

Nakedness

Currently, a dark spirit of nakedness has descended over the West. This uncovered nakedness has both a physical component and a metaphysical one.

Physical Nakedness

We are seeing a large proportion of women dropping their inhibitions and "embracing their sexuality" by revealing their nakedness to an unprecedented degree. We see this in clothing trends, fashion, and also online, on Bumble, OnlyF@ns, and other OASIS sites. P0rnHub and other online pr0n sites are free and without any real restrictions or regulations. Women believe that bimbofication and nude photoshoots are 'empowering'. Women post candid reports of all sorts of sexual indiscretions and other sordid filth from their personal lives on T!kT0k and elsewhere. There is no shame or censure attached to any of this. Instead, salacious women are rewarded with attention, ca$h, clicks, and views.

Meanwhile, the world looks on and correctly identifies Western women as harlots, just as the prophet Nahum described.

Metaphysical Nakedness

The Mythos of Truth provides suitable spiritual clothing for humankind. It covers over that which is carnal and unpresentable with an inspiring impartation of love, meaning, and purpose. In this sense, Mythos is useful, not in the sense of being utilitarian, but in the sense that it enchants life and imbues it with meaning. When the Bible calls us to believe in Jesus, it is asking us to clothe ourselves with Truth, and to submerge ourselves in the Mystical Mythos of Christianity — a spiritual baptism of consciousness which is based on that Truth.

Thus, the metaphysical component of uncovering nakedness mocks and removes any mythos that imparts any dignity, glory, honor, or a higher purpose to individuals or to larger human enterprises, thus leaving only a disenchanted, cold, empty, mechanical shell and any human imperfections that the mythos used to cover over with love.

- Young people are desperately searching for meaning. They do not know that they are desiring to be clothed with a shared Mythos of affirmation, dignity, identity, love, purpose, and recognition.
- Ressentiment, Shame, and Accusation within Progressive Identity Politics is intended to uncover the metaphysical nakedness of decent, hardworking, God-fearing people.
- Submission / Virgin Shaming uncovers the vulnerabilities of the innocent.
- The denial of Headship undermines men's authority over their families and demands that they remain naked to the inauspicious criticism of their wives.
- The grand Sh!t Test of skepticism reigns supreme in positivism / scientism, thereby demanding utter nakedness to be revealed in the name of truth.
- The Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse have uncovered the socio-sexual nakedness of men, revealing their social inadequacies and weaknesses, and their sexual needs / dependence on women.
- The spiritual nakedness of husbands and fathers are uncovered in the divorce courts. Children are made privy to the fleshly natures of both mother and father, thereby erasing any appreciation for the image of God that they may have known through their parents' matrimonial union.
- The (Christian) Red Pill mythos has displaced and overturned the Blue Pill mythos, thereby uncovering the socio-sexual nakedness of women through revealing the innermost desires, motivations, and workings of their carnal nature.
- The recent "Pity Men" narrative magnifies the sufferings and weaknesses of men in these times, and adds insult to injury without lending a helping hand — men who for the most part did not do anything to bring this judgment upon themselves. Yet it is maintained that they are judged because they did nothing.

Thus, most anyone is readily able to peer behind the curtains of decency and modesty, and see all the "forbidden", behind-the-scenes, grotesquely ugly inner workings of human nature.

Conclusions

As we can surmise from Nahum, the uncovering of nakedness is a judgment of the Lord on the wicked. It is orchestrated by God, and it is conducted by the lawless reflexively — that is to say, they uncover themselves for all to see.

Here it should be noted that the uncovering of nakedness is not always immodest or shameful. For example, in marriage, nakedness is synonymous with emotional, physical, sexual, and spiritual intimacy.

> [24] For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh. [25] And the man and his wife were both naked, but they were not ashamed.
>
> Genesis 2:24-25 (NASB)

Therefore, when sizing up the spiritual nature of particular instances of uncovering nakedness (physical or metaphysical), we must ask ourselves whether…

1. It is a medium of authentic intimacy.
2. It is a self-indulged judgment of the Lord upon the wicked.
3. It is revelry / sensationalism / social p0rn.

Let's review some instances under this speculum.

- A sanctified marriage is authentic intimacy. Pass.
- Antinomianism / Ressentiment (e.g. Virgin Shaming) is revelry. Fail.
- The denial of Headship is Blue Pill. Fail.
- Frivolous divorce is revelry and adultery. Fail.
- The (Christian) Red Pill reveals the paucity of truth in the Blue Pill, the church, society, etc., and introduces judgment on the immorality of our age. Pass.
- The recent "Pity Men" narrative is click bait / sensationalism / social p0rn. Fail.
- Scientism / Positivism and the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse are the fundamental elements that have enabled the above failures. A more in-depth analysis is required to determine whether particular instances fit (2) or (3).

Related

- Σ Frame: Nudity and Respect (2018/2/21)

- Σ Frame: What does it mean to be Defiled? (2018/12/9)
- Σ Frame: Revealing the motives behind unconcealed sex and nakedness (2021/1/29)
- Frame (Lexet): Gynapotheosis (2021/4/21)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)

What is Witchcraft?

Jack · 18 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Crystal balls and magic potions? Think again.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 2,700 words
Reading Time: 15 minutes

Introduction

The Western connotation of W!tchcr@ft brings up images of cackling wart-nosed women dressed in black Medieval garments, huddled over steaming cauldrons of green potion. It is similar to how the image of Satan has been reduced to that of a mischievious, mustached joker in a red skinsuit holding a trident. Or St. Nicholas being recast as a fat, old, bearded man who is chuckling incessantly and can fly around the world in a single night and slide down chimneys without soiling his fluffy red and white suit.

IMO, these trite images of evil personified have robbed Westerners of a true understanding of W!tchcraft, Satan, etc., thereby allowing these powers to reign more freely over society.

The other popular impression of W!tchcr@ft is that it is some ancient obscure pagan religion that has little relevance today, except to W!cc@ns, et al.

I too once held these notions earlier in life, but my experience overseas has taught me otherwise. I am hoping to make a dent in this image through these writings and get people to think more critically and realistically about what W!tchcr@ft really is, such that they can take the necessary actions to defeat it, if/when it becomes necessary.

So far, I know Western readers may not have taken my writings about W!tchcr@ft very seriously. Some readers have questioned my idea of W!tchcr@ft, and have offered their own takes. So here, I should clarify that I'm describing W!tchcr@ft as I have come to know it through living in Asia and from dealing with women displaying behaviors that others (including pastors) have seriously and sincerely called out as W!tchcr@ft.

In doing so, I'm stepping away from the commonly held notions of W!tchcr@ft as an involvement in the occult, W!cca, up-side-down pentagrams, magic potions, black cats, broomsticks, broad-brimmed and pointy-peaked black hats, and other such hocus pocus that is designed to distract attention from the true reality of W!tchcr@ft. Instead, I'll describe what I believe is the spiritual reality of W!tchcr@ft that is referred to in scripture and some of its modern manifestations.

A materialist reduction of W!tchcr@ft can be summarized as manipulative psychopathy, specifically Narcissistic Personality Disorder. But this analysis fails to recognize the metaphysical / spiritual forces at work behind such conditions. Here, I'll attempt to bridge this gap.

First, let's look at what the Bible has to say about W!tchcr@ft.

W!tchcr@ft = Drugs

In many versions of the Bible, "W!tchcr@ft" is translated as "black magic", "divination", or "sorcery".

The word translated as "W!tchcr@ft" (or "sorcery" in other translations) is φαρμακεία (pharmakeia), the same root word as pharmacy.

Strong's 5331 describes pharmakeia as…

> 5331 pharmakeía (from pharmakeuō, "administer drugs") – properly, drug-related sorcery, like the practice of magical-arts, etc.
>
> Definition: the use of medicine, drugs or spells
> Usage: magic, sorcery, enchantment.

From Bible Hub:

> "The word φαρμακεία, originally denoting the use of drugs merely, means, sometimes, their use for poisoning; but this sense would not be very suitable here. But the nouns φαρμακός, φαρμακεύς, > and φαρμακεία, like veneficus and veneficium in Latin, are also often used with reference to the employment of drugs in charms and incantations; and thence of the employment of black arts in general — magic, sorcery, W!tchcr@ft; cf. Revelation 9:21; Revelation 21:8; Revelation 22:15; where the Authorized Version gives “sorceries”, “sorcerers”; and in the Septuagint, Exodus 7:11, 22; Exodus 8:18 (Authorized Version, “magicians”); Isaiah 47:9,12 (“enchantments”). See also μαγεύων, μαγείας (“sorceries”), Acts 8:9, 11.”

What kinds of drugs are used in this way today?

Most obvious would be hallucinogens and psychoactive / psychedelic drugs like ecstasy / molly, L S D, magic mushrooms, etc., and op!0!ds like her0!n, ket@m!ne, 0xyc0nt!n, etc.

More loosely, it is any highly addictive drug or one that forms a psychological dependency which affects the mind and mood. This would include alcohol, @mphət@m!nəs (məth), C0c@!ne (crack), m@r!ju@n@, Valium, etc.

Interestingly, concerning an old song by the Rolling Stones, Mother’s Little Helper (released in 1965), a reference to housewives using tranquilizers, one music critic said, “it is as though Jagger read Friedan, as he channeled her basic ideas” about the “trapped housewife” phenomenon. These days, alcohol (i.e. wine) is the preferred anesthesia for washed up Alpha Widows. Apparently, marriage (nor the absinth thereof), has nothing to do with their misery.

Some psychotropic drugs could also be included, depending on one's condition and the context. Things like antianxiety medications, antidepressants, antipsychotics, and certain stimulants. Remember that many drugs in this class remain experimental and scientists do not yet understand why these drugs work as they do. Likewise, neither do we fully understand the spiritual impact of these drugs — except as an indicator that something is not right.

Another one is hormonal pharmaceutics. This would include 'gəndər rəass!gnmənt' therapy drugs and hormonal birth control which is known to alter womens' mood and their perception of men, and is directly linked to abortion, cancer, and divorce. In fact, Soranus of Ephesus, a 2nd century physician, identified pharmakeia as drugs used to induce abortions.

If we had contemporary artists like Bob Dylan and Mick Jagger, then we would be hearing songs about women branch swinging and/or hitting the carousel after coming off of birth control and then suddenly dying of breast cancer or venous thromboembolism.

W!tchcr@ft = Rebellion

Rebellion is when one forsakes the spiritual authority one is under and sets up an independent spiritual authority for themselves. It is the same for political rebellion. A group of people throw off the political authority of their government, and set up their own government. Whether it is successful or not is decided by God.

The Bible identifies W!tchcr@ft as being equivalent to Rebellion.

> For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft,
> And stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry.
>
> 1 Samuel 15:23 (NKJV)

This brings us to the next characteristic.

W!tchcr@ft = Sexual Sin / Adultery / Porneia / Promiscuity / etc.

The Lord speaks of Nineveh metaphorically as a harlot and draws an association with sorcery / W!tchcr@ft.

> "All because of the many harlotries of the harlot, the charming one, the mistress of sorceries, who sells nations by her harlotries and families by her sorceries.
>
> Nahum 3:4 (NASB1995)

The apostle Paul called W!tchcr@ft a "deed of the flesh" and gives a number of associated traits, including sexual immorality.

> [19] Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: sexual immorality, impurity, indecent behavior, [20] idolatry, witchcraft, hostilities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, selfish ambition, dissensions, factions, [21] envy, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these, of which I forewarn you, just as I have forewarned you, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.
>
> Galatians 5:19-21 (NASB)

St. John makes the same association in Revelation.

> But for the cowardly, and unbelieving, and abominable, and murderers, and sexually immoral persons, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, their part will be in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."
>
> Revelation 21:8 (NASB)

Sexual sin is not equivalent to W!tchcr@ft, but it is a gateway to W!tchcr@ft. Once a woman becomes ~~legion~~ one with multiple men in body and in spirit, she is able to compare and contrast the essential spiritual authority of those men, connect some of the dots, and piece together a false semblance of spiritual authority for herself.

Porneia is perhaps most commonly used as an anesthetic (for men) or a diversion (for women). Concerning the former, Jock Jousting serves as a defacto sedative to reduce sexual tension, calm the nerves, and is erroneously thought to increase confidence around women. Porneia becomes W!tchcr@ft when it is used to control others (e.g. sexual withholding in marriage), or to alter one's sense of reality. (Yes, p0rn changes the brain.)

Sexual sin also ties into Uncovering Nakedness (2023/12/16), an indicator that W!tchcr@ft may be at work.

Witchcr@ft as a Cult Religion

The grand majority of people who are into the occult or W!tchcr@ft are attracted to the gnostic spiritualism, but they lack the actual spiritual awareness needed to tap into the powers thereof. To be honest, most of them don't really know much about real divination, sorcery, or W!tchcr@ft. They just think it's cool, fascinating, or fun.

For the few who really 'get it', there are as many flavors of W!tchcr@ft as you can imagine, mostly because there is no single, central dogma of W!tchcr@ft. But the one central defining element of W!tchcr@ft is the projection of one's mindset and will onto others. In general, practitioners of W!tchcr@ft believe in supernatural forces that govern existence, and that these powers can be harnessed or manipulated to project the will of the practitioner into the world. Ceremonies, chants, divination, drugs, invocations, prayers, rituals, and spells are the vehicles by which one can project their will and make it manifest in their own life.

It is possible for Scientism / Positivism to be used to this end, when it is seen to provide answers to difficult questions — all for the purpose of attaining greater knowledge, power, and control over one's mortal life and/or environment. This purpose is not always bad or wrong. God created man to rule over the earth (Genesis 1:26-28). But the denial of God's omniscient power recasts Positivism into an exercise of vainglorious futility. Thus, it is not surprising that many Positivists are also atheists.

Finally, a person does not need to know that they are practicing W!tchcr@ft in order to do these things. Many W!tches operate without the full knowledge of what they are doing. I believe such individuals are controlled by an evil spirit.

W!tchcr@ft is a Form of Spiritual Abuse

In our study of Redemption back in 2022/9, Spiritual Abuse / W!tchcr@ft within the church was noted as one of the current issues that prevent men from finding redemption.

Instead of spreading the Gospel to all nations, the contemporary heretics we'll call W!tches have been evangelized by the world, and they, in turn, seek to convert the faithful and the young to worldly paradigms. They pay lip service to orthodoxy while lecturing Christians on morality. Hypocritically, the Witches' morals are not informed by Christianity, but by Feminism and the Death Cult.

The main strategy here is to shift conscious awareness away from truth and introspection and towards an acceptance of gnostic / heretical worldly notions and scripts.

Guilt and shame tactics, as well as false testimony, gossip, and slander are often utilized, and are backed by convolutions of scripture. The purpose is to weaken the confidence, faith, and spiritual authority of opponents, and to assert authority and/or control over others. When these methods fail, ostracization, rejection, and scapegoating are implemented in an effort to oust the opposition.

Of note, The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church sets up a social hierarchy in which W!tchcr@ft can be easily and regularly implemented, if so chosen by will or by ineptitude.

The Rev. Maria Swearingen, center left, and the Rev. Sally Sarratt, center right, are welcomed into membership at Calgary Baptist Church by other clergy during a service on 2017/2/26, in Washington, D.C.
RNS photo by Adelle M. Banks.

Other Characteristics of W!tchcr@ft

Considering how W!tchcr@ft envelops sex, drugs, and rebellion, we might wonder what other things are in common, other than a hippie commune or a rock concert.

Lying

It is common for lies to be employed when shifting contexts to deceive. In fact, only the most experienced and expert w!tches can shift contexts without inventing little lies that fill in the gaps between their twisted version of the story and the truth.

Jezebel is an excellent example of a w!tch who used lies to shift paradigms, seduce and incite others to unrighteous action and slaughter the righteous.

Gaslighting

Gaslighting is the act of manipulating someone into making them doubt their reasoning, memories, or understanding of an event, thereby leading the person to lose confidence and be more likely to trust the w!tch's judgments. Gaslighting is a unique form of W!tchcr@ft in that it has a retroactive effect.

Hypocrisy

One expression of love is to see the good in others, even though it may not be overtly expressed. This is not considered lying or W!tchcr@ft, because it sets the eyes of our hearts on what is beautiful, good, and true. Hypocrisy, OTOH, conceals sins by introducing a false identity of goodness and thereby denies the real sinful self. When directed towards others, hypocrisy is expressed as overweening flattery.

Read GBFM's comment on hypocrisy.

Legalism

Legalism is basically trading God's paradigm of sin and forgiveness for one of salvation by works, or better salvation by more works. W!tches implement legalism by gracelessly pointing out errors and shortcomings — not to make the person aware of their weaknesses for the purpose of improving thereupon, but to assert dominance / moral superiority, and to control or shame them. Remember, subordinates are held accountable to authorities, NOT the other way around. W!tches routinely attempt to invert this structure.

Revealing Nakedness

One common tactic of w!tches is to uncover one's nakedness by drawing attention to a person's carnal desires, humanity, or mortality, often mockingly.

For example, consider the husband talking about something important that the w!tchy wife doesn't want to hear. So she'll passive-aggressively call out something about his appearance or dress. For instance, she might say…

"Eww… Did you fart?"

"Hmm… That shirt has a bad stain on the front."

"Did you not brush your teeth / shave / shower today?"

"Pew! You need to use deodorant! I can smell you from over here."

"OK, I heard you. Be sure to comb your hair before you leave the house."

If confronted, she'll cloyingly say that she cares, and is displaying loving behavior. But in fact, she is exerting authority over him by treating him like a child. Her motivation is to discredit or undermine his spiritual authority at that moment. If she truly respected his authority, she would show that behavior at other times, and NOT at the moment he is making a point. If done continuously over time, this will erode the man's confidence.

Summary

In its most essential metaphysical form, W!tchcr@ft asserts or claims a false or deceptive authority upon which the practitioner can assume control over others or a situation. W!tches who lack the outward credentials / reputation of holding authority themselves will attach themselves to a person of status who holds authority and work through that person by exerting spiritual authority over him/her.

In its most basic manifestation, W!tchcr@ft is the act of shifting the paradigm in mid-context such to accomplish one or more of the following.

- To distract from the truth.
- To convince others to disbelieve in what is true.
- To convince others to believe in a paradigmatic lie, AKA casting a spell / deception.
- To undermine / usurp the confidence, faith, and legitimate authority of others.
- To garner power or control.
- To manipulate others or events.
- To steer the outcome of events towards one's personal interests.

Now, some readers may ask, "Isn't shifting the paradigm what imposing frame is all about?" The answer is yes, except men (in general) have been granted the spiritual authority to interpret and implement truth according to context, whereas women who lack moral agency and who are under the dominion of men have not. One's capability of acting as a moral agent of truth (e.g. in establishing Frame) is a part of one's spiritual maturity. This is why most all w!tches are female — because women are more inclined to resist agency and accountability.

Male w!tches do exist, but the nature of male w!tchery is not so much about manipulating others as it is about beguilement and deception. A good number of old school PUAs were actually warlocks, if truth be told.

Women's proper role is to submit to the frame of their male authority (e.g. father if single, husband if married, pastor or son if widowed). Her not submitting is rebellion, but shifting the frame away from truth and constructing her own paradigm of pseudo-truth which is bent towards her interests of control and manipulation is a step beyond that into W!tchcraft.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15)
- Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor 1): The Spirit of Athaliah (2023/11/16)
- Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor 1): More on the Spirits of Jezebel and Athaliah (2023/11/17)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Sexual Promiscuity is the Doorway to Witchdom (2023/11/18)
- Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor 2): Testimony from a Reader Battling Witchcraft (2023/11/20)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Dealing with Feminine Insecurity (2023/11/22)
- Bruce Charlton: “Psychopath” is a materialist reduction of “innately evil” (2023/11/22)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Where Shame Tactics become Witchcraft (2023/11/28)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Case Study of an Interweb Witch (2023/11/29)
- Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor 1): On the Incubation of Witches (2023/11/30)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft? (2023/12/5)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church (2023/12/14)
- Knowland Knows: Psychedelics and Emasculation (2023/12/26)
- Rev. Matt’s Writings: Feminism is An Ancient Evil (2025/9/23)

Triggers

Jack · 19 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

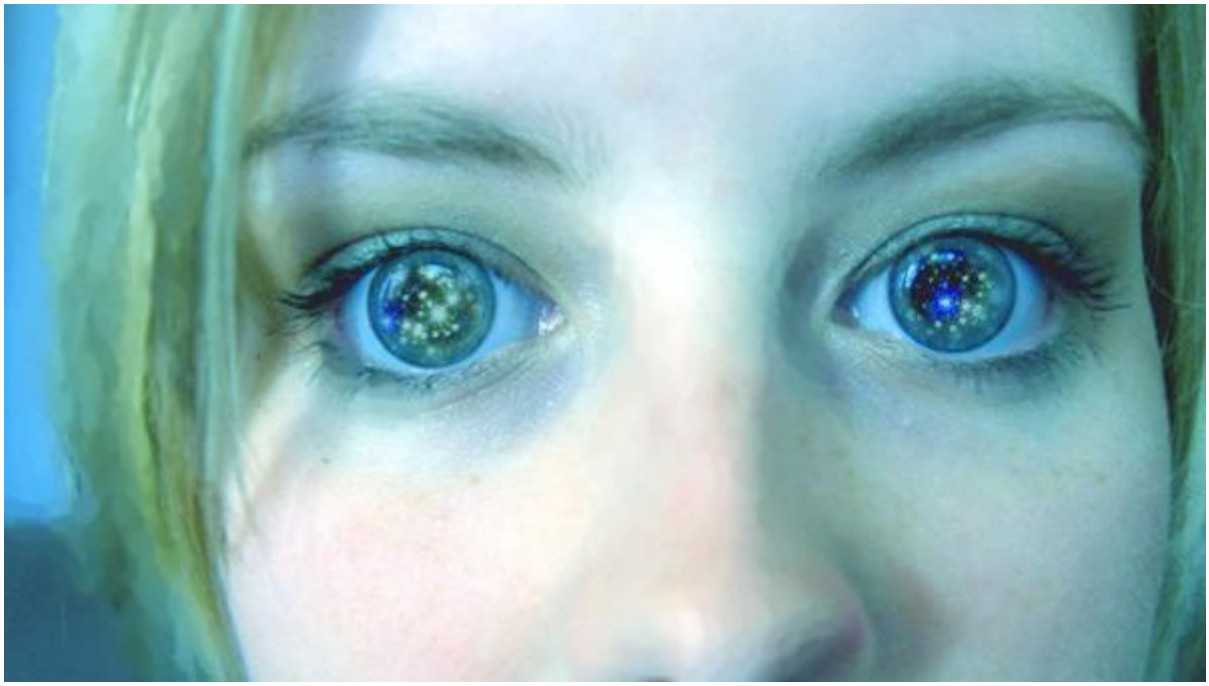
What are they? How do they work?

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes + 1 hour video

What is a Trigger?

A 'trigger' is a colloquial name for a stimulus that excites the limbic system and thereby pulls one into an alternate conscientiousness of reality that is often emotionally charged or otherwise contains strong motivations. Triggers can be sparked by seemingly insignificant events, such as a sound, smell, taste, or hearing a certain phrase, which can set off a chain reaction of responses. Triggers are most often viewed as negative, but there are certain situations where they can be beneficial.

The alternate reality introduced by a Trigger is most frequently a paradigm that one is already all too familiar with, often due to classical and sometimes operant conditioning, and which one has not yet "overcome" in the Biblical sense of mastering the inclinations of the flesh and sin. But this is not always the case. Some triggers are biological and/or sociosexual in nature.



Learned Triggers

Some examples of how triggers can be introduced through classical conditioning are as follows.

- A Dysfunctional Upbringing — Individuals exposed to domestic abuse during childhood associate certain behaviors, expressions, words, and social situations with peril and risk where none may be present.
- Emotional Experiences — For some individuals, certain words, phrases, songs, or images can be triggers that cause them to recall prior emotionally charged experiences and thereby shift their sense of conscious reality.
- Hypnotism — Has been known to implant beliefs into the subconscious that cause one to react a certain way to certain stimuli.

- Romantic / Sexual Experiences — For example, when one avoids listening to a certain song, or going to a certain place, because it brings back bad memories of a lost love.
- Traumatic Experiences — For example, when one gets food poisoning from eating a certain food, afterwards, the sight or smell of that food induces nausea and/or a gag reflex.

It should be noted that triggers can induce either a positive or a negative emotional / physiological response, depending on how the formation experience happens to strike a person's constitution.

All this happens at the subconscious level, and is most often an involuntary response.

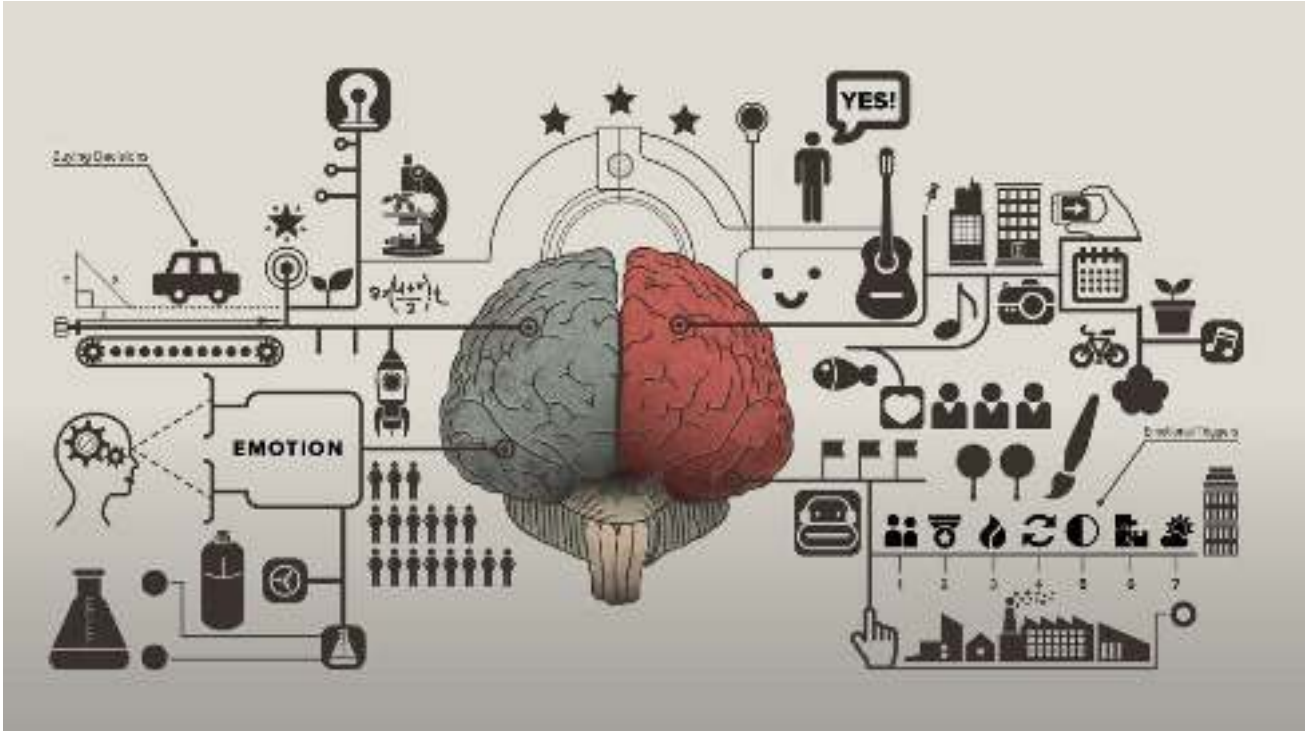


Image Source: Evozon: The neuroscience beyond the usability (2016/7/1)

Biological / Sociosexual Triggers

Some common examples of biological or sociosexual triggers.

- Certain pathogens / substances trigger allergies.
- The color azure is known to stimulate psychological alertness and decrease melatonin production (necessary for sleep) leading to increased attention and prolonged engagement. This is why this color is used on many websites, including F@ceb00k, L!nkedIn, WordPress, and others.
- Someone displaying anger can be a trigger for violence in some individuals.
- Various triggers related to authority, desire, reciprocity, scarcity, etc. are utilized in social transactions and sales presentations.
- Certain ideas / topics related to women's moral agency (e.g. moral guidance) and female sexuality trigger women's hypoagentic defenses, characterized by a regurgitated flood of denials, excuses, justifications, objections, obfuscations, psychological projections, red herrings, etc.
- Negs can be a trigger for psychological unrest and seeking validation in Insecurely Attached individuals.
- Romance smut is a trigger for lust in women.
- P0rn is a trigger for lust and sexual arousal in men.
- Seeing a man gazing at porn is a trigger for disgust and indignation in women.
- Female promiscuity is a trigger for disgust and indignation, in both men and women.

- Dread Game, Fear, Jealousy, and witnessing live coitus trigger sexual arousal in women.

It should be noted that different people can respond to the same stimuli differently, and that different stimuli can elicit the same type of response, depending on how their psychological triggers work.

Triggers in Divination / Sorcery / W!tchcr@ft

Triggers are also involved in Sorcery (e.g. divination, psychoactive drug abuse, etc.) and W!tchcr@ft.

Sorcery often introduces paranormal or supersensory experiences that induce some form of metanoia and/or paranoia. As a result, a participant attains some form of knowledge that forever alters one's view of reality (unless repentance and healing is obtained).

Case Study — Married to Miss Ou!ja

Here's a true example of how divination introduces triggers.

Stupid Stan played Ou!ja with a couple friends . He didn't believe it was real, but he still wanted to check it out due to curiosity. One of the questions they asked the Ou!ja was, "What is the name of the girl Stan will marry?" The Ou!ja spelled out the letter "V", and then said "Goodbye". After this experience, Stan often found himself wondering what the V stands for. "Is it Vanessa, Vera, Veronica, Victoria, Virginia, Vivian… or something else?" He regarded all these musings as foolish superstition, but nevertheless, he behaved accordingly. Everytime he met a girl whose name started with V, he automatically went into simp mode. If he met a girl with a name that didn't start with a V, he would not consider her seriously as a potential partner. 20 years later, Stan concluded that the V stood for "Virginity" — his own.

As an example of psychoactive drug abuse, people who have used L S D have reported experiencing hallucinations, hearing in color, synesthesia, and other bizarre extrasensory phenomenon. Furthermore, users have reported having flashbacks many years after taking the drug. Triggers are often a part of the flashback / recall, and are often unpredictable.

The more overtly controlling forms of W!tchcr@ft often employ triggers for exercising power over others. A very skilled W!tch can implant triggers into a target's psyche using classical conditioning, and use these triggers to control the persons behavior. W!tches also steal joy away from restful and worshipful experiences using operant conditioning.

Feminology / W0kology implants various emotional triggers in its constituents by casting a spell of lies.

Triggers in P0rn / Sexual Semiotics

I've written a few posts about the encroachment of perversity before.

- Σ Frame: DTFCupid (2017/12/17)
- Σ Frame: Can You Trust A Dancing Skeleton? (2018/9/21)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Incentives for Bimbofication (2021/8/23)

P0rn, as of late, is becoming psychologically sophisticated. Aural binary beats, hypnotism, liminal conditioning, psychological triggers, and other subtle means are designed within p0rn to induce 'sissyness' and tr@nsgəndər!sm in men, and 'Bambi sleep' (a form of gr00ming), bimbofication, and an appetite for BDSM in women.

Here are some articles about this phenomenon.

- The Glinner Update (Genevieve Gluck): Sissy porn, the gender movement's dirty secret (2020/11/29)
- Rachel Wilson: The Dark Mystery Behind The Transgender Phenomenon (2022/1/9)
- Reactionary Feminist (Mary Harrington): Cumming Of Age (2023/12/9)

Genevieve Gluck has presented her own research on this topic in the following video.

Caution: May be NSFW. I have not yet watched the entire video because it turns my stomach. I may dig into it a little deeper over time.

Whose Body Is It?: The TRUTH about S!ssy Hypno P0rn with Genevieve Gluck (2021/3/27) Length: 1 hour

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Ethical Issues Surrounding the Christian Conundrum (2021/4/5)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Commonalities of Successful Marriages (2021/4/14)
- Convertize: 72 Psychological Triggers to Convert Visitors into Customers (2021/6/2)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Elements of Emotional and Personal Maturity (2021/9/8)
- Σ Frame (Jack): No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Wages of Sin are Paid in Marriage (2022/10/15)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Moral Agency is Dependent on Spiritual Maturity (2022/12/19)
- Medium: Psychological Triggers: Understanding and Harnessing the Power of Emotions (2023/5/15)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Attachment Style and Game (2023/10/13)

Catacomb Resident on Witchcraft

Jack · 20 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Wooing the unwitting into a world of W!tchery.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 2,400 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes

Introduction

In my study of Women's Moral Agency, I was able to find a large number of writings on this subject from around the 'sphere. But in this expose of W!tchcraft, I've only found one other author in the 'sphere who has written about this topic, despite how widespread this problem is.

Catacomb Resident has described the metaphysical dynamics of W!tchcraft from a mystical viewpoint.

Before I get into what CR has written, I must first explain a few things in order for the reader to properly understand his perspectives on W!tchcr@ft.

W!tchcraft Destroys Faith and Goodness

B!tchcraft is annoying, disrespectful, and troublesome behavior that doesn't affect the true reality of a situation. W!tchcr@ft, OTOH, wages a war to displace a faith belief in what is true and replace it with a darkened understanding of reality. B!tchcraft is feral feminine ugliness, but peace and sanity resume when she walks out the door. W!tchcr@ft, OTOH, does spiritual violence in that it destroys our perceptions of truth, beauty, and goodness with lasting effect.

How does this happen?

In What is Witchcraft? (2023/12/18), I described W!tchcr@ft as asserting a false authority upon which the practitioner can assume control over others or a situation. To accomplish this, W!tchery must first invert the hierarchy of authority and/or present an appearance of social dexterity so that others consider the W!tch to be of greater authority and are therefore willing to defer / submit to her decisions.

This is most frequently done by shifting the hierarchical paradigm in mid-context. In simple language, she carries the attitude of a boss b!tch, but she talks and acts with the disquieted certainty that her authority is a matter of course, and that everyone who doesn't agree and comply is somehow less civilized, or less considerate, or less human, or less intelligent, or less moral, or less righteous, etc.

So far, B!tchcraft and W!tchcr@ft are the same.

What separates W!tchcr@ft from B!tchcraft is the metaphysical impact of this attitude and behavior. B!tches have the power to annoy and waste one's time and energy, but W!tches have the power to shift the moral frame of reference in such a way that it gets people hopping on their own incentives. True W!tchcr@ft imposes an alternate paradigmatic consciousness of reality that is spiritually corrupt; one that is at odds with a properly fitting mythos / reality that God prefers.

Truth is Subjective for those Weak in Faith

Identifying and sorting out truth as it pertains to the individual is perhaps the most difficult aspect of apprehending faith.

> "The notion that truth is static and stands independent of God's living Person is a pagan concept arising from a rejection of divine revelation. It's one of the basic false assumptions of Aristotelian epistemology. It's nothing more than an attempt to elevate fallen mankind to divinity. The Bible arose before Aristotle. The philosophical assumptions behind the Bible are radically different from what we have in the West. [Instead,] We need to conform our philosophical assumptions — our epistemology — to that of the Hebrew people, to that of Jesus Himself."
>
> Catacomb Resident: Not Taking Seriously (2022/2/14) [Archive]

The question is then, "What paradigm of assumed truth does one's bubble of reality contain?"

Even for those who take the Bible and Christianity seriously, there is a wide chasm between reading the words in scripture, to understanding what those words truly mean, to realizing what that means IRL, to the full recognition of how that plays out in one's personal life, and finally to getting your act together accordingly.

IOW, there is a transition from Head Knowledge, to Heart Knowledge, to action and practice IRL. And old notions must be overturned in a transformative process of renewal that may last for years. Those who have not completed this transition in various areas of their lives are less mature by definition, and are more susceptible to having their understanding of truth upset by deceptive / false influences.

Catacomb Resident further explained this as follows.

> "The Scripture acknowledged the existence of heart-borne consciousness in a great many pagan religions. You can walk in your heart after false gods. It comes from being spiritually dead but morally awake. You still get the same messages from the natural world, but you can't properly interpret them. Instead of the Holy Spirit making them recognizable, you have demon spirits misleading you. But the power of a moral consciousness is still there, and it's far, far above anything the intellect can produce. It can be quite intoxicating.
>
> Thus, we see the explosion of occult studies, W!tchcr@ft, etc. I'm not talking about the horde of make-believe junk that only mimics all of that. Most self-proclaimed witches and wizards are fake; that much should be obvious. Very few of those making noise know what they are talking about. But buried within that noise is a very real revival of heart-borne awareness that produces very real power. That's because they are tapping into the very nature of the natural world from the dark side."
>
> Catacomb Resident: Prospects (2022/1/28) [Archive]

Spellbinding Invokes an Alternate Paradigm of Assumed Truth

This is where deception and spellbinding come into play.

> “But the truth is not in the Aristotelian inert matter universe. The truth is that the universe is quite honestly responsive to truth or lies in the mind of humans. This is the kind of universe we are in, and God made it that way. We have lost the insight we had in the Garden of Eden, but not the power. But in sin, we have no idea how it works, and so it works rather poorly until we stumble upon the truth of just how variable “reality” is. How else do you imagine the prophecies of Revelation can come true? How is it possible that the Beast will perform wonders? It’s because the wonders are as real as the false reality in which we live. This is why Pharaoh’s magicians could turn staves into snakes.
>
> Someone with genuine faith in Christ can shake off those snakes, not because they aren’t “real” but because reality itself isn’t “real”. With eyes of faith we can see, not the Aristotelian “reality”, but we can see what God has granted us from a higher realm. If you are utterly convinced of the inert world, then it will tend to act that way with you. If you truly understand that it is alive and responsive, then that’s how it will act with you.”
>
> Catacomb Resident: Prospects (2022/1/28) [Archive]

The Law of Personal Spheres

To explain how W!tchcr@ft reframes the moral context and upsets others' belief in what is fitting and true, I'll begin by introducing the Law of Personal Spheres, described as follows.

Σ Frame Maxim 29, AKA The Law of Personal Spheres, "Fungible Reality", "Non-Shared Environment" (Catacomb Resident, Jack): To the man of faith, reality is fungible. God has given mankind the latitude of having multiple dimensions of coexistent realities. Each man's reality is a manifestation of his individual constitution, beliefs, choices, and experiences. One reality is just as valid as another. There is no objective reality that we all share.
Corollary A to Maxim 29: Reality is best understood as a living being (God, if you will), a person with all the quirks and variations we would expect from even the most perfect of persons. And as with any real person, reality treats no two of us just the same.
Corollary B to Maxim 29: With all the threads of events and experiences winding through our lives, no two of us will experience reality in precisely the same way.
Corollary C to Maxim 29: It's only true if you believe it's true. Your faith and convictions are the key to discovering and developing the thread of reality God has for you.

Catacomb Resident described the Law of Personal Spheres as follows.

> "Reality is fungible." The reality of the universe God created is that there are multiple threads of reality, and you can choose which one is for you. One reality is just as valid as another. There is no objective reality that we all share. The notion of "objective reality" is itself a false bubble of reality. Reality is best understood as a living being, a person with all the quirks and variations we would expect from even the most perfect of persons. And as any real person, reality treats no two of us just the same. With all the threads of events and experiences winding through our lives, no two of us experiences reality in precisely the same way."
>
> Catacomb Resident: Not Taking Seriously (2022/2/14) [Archive]

> “Every human has their own bubble of reality. That includes all the experts and authorities. Anything they might have accomplished in developing their talents is a matter of inflating their own bubble. There is no objective reality to discover out there. Yes, God does limit the range of variations in threads of reality to some degree, but those limits are not as hard and narrow as Western assumptions make them out to be. Your reality is as valid as mine. Getting a substantial number of fools to agree with you doesn’t validate yours over mine. All it does is keep all of you from pressing forward in faith. Your faith and convictions are the key to discovering the thread of reality God has for you.
>
> When you can embrace that understanding of reality, then it changes everything. Our ultimate authority is your Heavenly Father. You are only as beholden to any human authority as He tells you in your heart. It’s all tactical and temporary, subject to future variations. Your ultimate loyalty is the Messiah, living inside your soul as the Holy Spirit. If He’s not there, nothing can help you. If He’s there, nothing can stop you.”
>
> Catacomb Resident: Not Taking Seriously (2022/2/14) [Archive]

> "The only thing left is for you to become consciously aware of what God has made. We have a vast store of testimonial evidence showing that God harmonizes our convictions among others. It may be difficult to find harmonious faith partners. That's as much due to their own lack of awareness as anything else. But that God will bring you into the company of others who share some of your convictions is His promise. The only question is how close you can commune with them based on how much you have in common."
>
> Catacomb Resident: Not Taking Seriously (2022/2/14) [Archive]

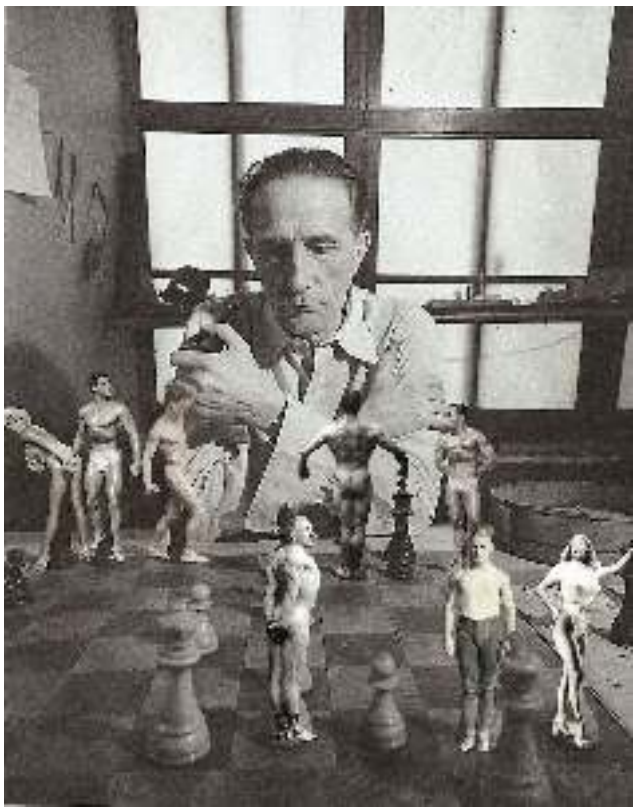
What is Assumed as Truth becomes a Psychological Construct that Determines our Experience of Reality

W!tchcr@ft taps into the inclinations and weaknesses of the flesh, and the human need for rationality in order to rearrange others' assessment of morality and their conceptualization of truth.

How does this work?



- W!tchcr@ft gets people focused on fighting fires and preserving interests such that they become willing to compromise or sacrifice their deeper principles of belief.
- W!tchcr@ft puts a spin on the targets moral compass by reassessing the context in a false or negative perspective.
- W!tchcr@ft causes people to doubt the authority and/or trustworthiness of others and to question the overall value of one's relationships with them.
- False motives are assigned to others' behavior to slander their character and trustworthiness.
- W!tchcr@ft effectively breaks down relationships between those having shared convictions, and isolates the target.
- The resulting doubt and self-consciousness erode the targets confidence and faith.

On this, CR writes (he uses the example of Western epistemology),

> "But you must understand that their power rests on convincing others. That's the nature of things I'm trying to get across by attacking the false Western epistemology. If you keep buying into the Aristotelian brand of "reality", you'll never understand what's happening. For whatever reason, the Lord is permitting a recovery of this stuff as we march toward the ultimate End of All Things. It was foretold in the Bible, so get used to it. The root of their power is deception, because deceived humans can enforce their own doom. It becomes as real as our false reality.
>
> So, as the heart-borne consciousness arises, you and I need to understand it from the biblical position. We need to realize that this broken false reality is flexible and variable, and that some of what appears to be real rests on what those viewing it believe. This fallen "reality" itself is fraught with bias confirmation. It's not merely our minds that can be deceived, but our experience of reality itself can be perverted and the effects can destroy our lives here."
>
> Catacomb Resident: Prospects (2022/1/28) [Archive]

Catacomb Resident finished this essay by stating that dark mysticism is making a comeback, manifested in an explosion of occult studies, W!tchcr@ft, and so on. Our present coverage of W!tchcr@ft is hitting back.

Conclusions

In summary, this goes back to Σ Frame Maxim 29, Corollary C: It's only true if you believe it's true.

If you buy into the untrue reality of a W!tches spell, then you are under her spell, and you become her minion for her to do with you as she pleases.

Not only does W!tchery occur at the personal level between individuals, it also happens at a cultural level, as CR elucidated.

We see this happening all around us.

For women, "strong and independent" is a psychological construction that essentially implies that she is a "free spirit", or "spiritual but not religious", which usually means she is in rebellion against God's order and is into Gnosticism, although she may not be aware of it (e.g. churchian wimmin). Most women like this are superficial W!tches — they think and act like a w!tch, but they're on autopilot. They have a negative spiritual effect on everyone around them, but they're too immature and solipsistic to lay hold of the power to effectively manipulate others to do their bidding. Nevertheless, they continue to wreak destruction on themselves and others like a loose cannon.

I won't go into every one of the worldly life scripts which have been covered here before. Suffice it to say that all these scripts assume women are "strong and independent", and thereby appeal to their sinful nature to prompt them towards various acts of rebellion which we are all familiar with.

Men buy into these lies as well, and then helplessly watch as their marriages, children, and livelihoods are stripped away.

We are living in a bew!tched era of history.

It's time to snap out of these false paradigms of this world, and realign our hearts and minds with the Lord's Truth.

Related

- Σ Frame: On the discernment and wisdom of true morality (2019/2/2)
- Σ Frame: Bards, Jesters, and Kings (2019/10/6)
- Σ Frame: Three Kinds of Discernment (2020/9/25)
- Σ Frame: A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Unpacking and tying together the meta-levels of Christianity, reality and the red pill into a hierarchical understanding: theological, scientific, and philosophical / cultural (2021/3/29)
- Σ Frame: Elements of Spiritual Maturity (2021/9/15)
- Σ Frame: Dealing with Discernment (2021/9/17)
- Σ Frame: On the Discernment of Desire (2021/9/24)
- Σ Frame: Developing Discernment (2021/9/27)
- Σ Frame: The Advent of Christian Mysticism (2022/8/1)
- Σ Frame: Metaphysical Literacy (2022/9/21)

How to Identify and Deal with the Jezebel Spirit / Witchcraft

Jack · 21 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Boldly rout and destroy corrupt authorities, and appoint new leaders.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Author's Note: This post received significant input from Anonymous Contributor 1.
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes + 55:30 minute video
Note: This is the 1,000th post on Σ Frame.

Pastor Robert Morris' Sermon

A sermon about the Jezebel Spirit from Pastor Robert Morris was cited in two previous posts, The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15) and On the Incubation of Witches (2023/11/30).

A couple readers have said that the video of Robert Morris' sermon spoke to them, while a couple others dismissed it as bunk. So I thought it was worth extracting the main points of the sermon in this post for ease of reference and further study.

Remember, the Spirit of Jezebel is manifested as W!tchcr@ft.

STOP Tolerating the Jezebel Spirit — Robert Morris (2011/4/8) Length: 55:30

The Effects of the Jezebel Spirit / W!tchcr@ft

In the beginning of his talk, Morris states there are 4 effects that are identified with the Jezebel Spirit. (These effects are summarized at 36:10.) However, a careful review of his sermon reveals that there are 8. My own experience confirms these as true.

1. 13:00 — Fear — Running for your life. (I Kings 19:3)
2. 25:23 — Isolation — You want to get away from everything and everybody. No one can be trusted. (I Kings 19:4; 9-14)
3. 27:18; 30:10 — Extreme Exhaustion; Difficulty sleeping; Insomnia. (I Kings 19:5-6)
4. 31:08 — Depression; Thoughts of su!c!de; Thoughts of quitting. (I Kings 19:4) At 33:04, Morris mentions relating to TV advertisements about depression is a cue.
5. 36:28; 38:10 — Sexual Immorality (porneia); Sexually impure thoughts; (Revelation 2:20-24).
6. 37:50 — False Guilt / Shame — The Jezebel Spirit / W!tches operate through guilt and shame. "You are rejecting me just like everyone else has."
7. 38:25 — Strange and prolonged illnesses / Sicknesses (e.g. sinus infections).
8. 39:33 — Bizarre, tragic, and/or near fatal Accidents.

If you (or someone you know) are suffering from these symptoms, and you have no idea what hit you, and you feel totally powerless against it, then you have probably been subject to W!tchcr@ft. This is especially true if the symptoms are frequent and recurring, or if it happens to be a symptom you have never struggled against in the past (e.g. heavy drinking, insomnia, su!c!dal thoughts, etc.).

Noteworthy Notes

17:55 — Morris identifies a pattern — being rejected by one's father and having a controlling, domineering mother. (This pattern was covered in a previous post, On the Incubation of Witches (2023/11/30).)

38:49 — All the five senses represent something spiritual. (Morris doesn't go into detail, so I had to look this up. See References [1] and [3].)

- Touch — Feeling connected; Social impact on others; Transferring blessings from one to another.
- Sight — Spiritual vision; seeing potential; peace, rest, clarity of thought, and contentment about such things.
- Hearing — Faith; Ability to hear and recognize truth.
- Taste — Desire for Truth, knowledges, intelligences, and wisdom from God; gratefulness, thankfulness, praising and honoring God.
- Smell — Discernment; knowing good from evil.

If you have a strange illness that afflicts one of your senses*, then it could be a symptom of W!tchcraft.

40:24 — The Jezebel Spirit tries to steal, kill, and destroy (John 10:10). It tries to steal your peace, joy, and confidence. It tries to kill you with hopelessness, sickness,* and accidents. It tries to destroy you with depression* and fear.

 I had a severe eye infection (some of the most intense pain in my life). I also felt severely depressed whenever I touched the Jezebel (my wife, now ex). I also lost my desire to go to church and fellowship with other Christians.*

Dealing with the Jezebel Spirit

17:10; 29:57; 39:24 — Morris says the Jezebel Spirit only has power because we tolerate it.

35:50 — You can be gracious with the person possessed by a Jezebel Spirit, but you CANNOT be gracious with the Jezebel Spirit itself.

43:46 — The way you deal with a Jezebel Spirit is to anoint a prophet, a priest, and a king. In I Kings 19:15-16, Elijah was instructed to anoint Hazael king of Aram (to replace Ben-Hadad), Jehu king of Israel (to replace Ahab), and Elisha as his replacement as prophet. Jehu is the one who killed Jezebel (via the eunuchs). In sum, you clean house. You sweep out all the old leadership and install new leaders in their place — leaders who will execute righteous judgment on the old corrupt leaders and spare the innocent / righteous (I Kings 19:17-18). For us, Jesus is the Prophet (John 14:2), Priest (Ephesians 2:18), and King (Revelation 19:16).

Here, Morris is speaking about the Jezebel Spirit / Spiritual Abuse / W!tchcr@ft in the church. If you are dealing with a Jezebel Spirit outside of church, perhaps the best approach is to simply get away from that person. Change churches, change jobs, or move away if necessary. If you are dealing with a Jezebel Spirit within marriage, you're looking at the worst of the worst (from my personal perspective). Be prepared to face false accusations, court cases, divorce, and custody proceedings. An attack on your life is not impossible. Based on what I have experienced, God will bring people into your life who fulfill the archetypal roles of Prophet, Priest, and King.

44:33 — Jesus says in Revelation 2:20-24 (paraphrased), "If you don't deal with this and those who deal with her (commit adultery with her), I'm going to deal with you. If you will not remove her, then I will remove you."

- "I will raise up someone else who has twice the anointing."
- "I will raise up another prophet who will speak words of truth."
- "I will raise up another priest in your place who will carry on the ministry."
- "I will raise up another king who will stand against the spirit and execute judgment."

Considering how difficult it is to deal with a Jezebel, you'll see that the Lord's stance in Revelation 2:20-24 is excruciating. It is only possible by the power of Christ and obedience to His word.

45:29 — Three practical things to deal with a Jezebel Spirit.

1. Get a word from God (prayer).
2. Seek counsel (i.e. the archetypal Prophet, Priest, and King)
3. Take action

At 40:52, Morris says that whenever you encounter W!tchcr@ft, you must address it in the person and remove him or her from all leadership positions unless he or she repents. If the person will repent, then the person can go through a process of discipline and then continue to minister. But if the person won't repent, you must remove that person from all authority. Furthermore, you must remove that person from any personal influence with you. You can't remain friends with a person that won't be humble and teachable, because that spirit will affect you.

From 45:44 to 51:38, Morris tells the story of how his church was suddenly blessed with $20M for the church building fund after he got on his knees and repented of tolerating the Jezebel Spirit.

Specific Questions to Identify the Spirit of Jezebel / W!tchcr@ft

42:00 — Pastor Morris gives specific questions to confirm whether someone under your sphere of influence is operating under a Jezebel Spirit.

- "Do you feel called by God to walk beside me to keep me from screwing up?" (The person said, "Oh yeah! That's exactly what God called me to do!")
- 42:35 — "Do you realize how that makes me feel? That if it wasn't for you, I'd screw up?"
- "Do you realize that your 'calling' has nothing to do with the Holy Spirit or God or even my own integrity in ministry?"

Also, others can ask the Jezebel if they feel that way towards the person in authority they have attached themselves to.

If the person is NOT under your sphere of influence (which may include a rebellious husband or wife), it is more difficult and tricky to discern. Discernment, prayer, and being aware of the symptoms listed above may be the only lines of awareness available to you.

References

1. Moroni Channel: What Are The Five Spiritual Senses And What Are There Functions In Gaining Of A Testimony? (2016/7/16)
2. Mark Alan Williams: 5 Fantastic Spiritual Senses That Lead to Faith (2017/8/21)
3. Destiny Image: How to Use Your 5 Senses Prophetically (2020/3/2)

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15)
- Σ Frame: The Spirit of Athaliah (2023/11/16)
- Σ Frame: More on the Spirits of Jezebel and Athaliah (2023/11/17)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Sexual Promiscuity is the Doorway to Witchdom (2023/11/18)
- Σ Frame: Testimony from a Reader Battling Witchcraft (2023/11/20)
- Σ Frame: On the Incubation of Witches (2023/11/30)

- The Transformed Wife (Lili Rose): Being Involved with a Jezebel (2024/1/28)
- Rev. Matt's Writings: Feminism is An Ancient Evil (2025/9/23)

Darkened Delusions of Male Insecurity

Jack · 22 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

…when the personal is made political.

Readership: Men; Christian Men;
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Bad Men become Conservative?

Previous weekend posts in this series covered the attacks on Masculinity from within the church and the new "Pity Men" narrative. This post covers the secular culture's primary rhetorical attack on Masculinity and examines how this attack is orchestrated and politicized.

Here are a few noteworthy articles on the subject.

1. Carol Hanisch: The Personal is Political (1969/2) [Archive]
2. Vox (Aja Romano): How the alt-right's sexism lures men into Wh!te Suprem@cy (2018/4/26)
3. ADL: When Women are the Enemy: The Intersection of M!s0gyny and Wh!te Suprem@cy (2018/7/20)
4. Salon (Amanda Marcotte): Tucker Carlson, Joe Rogan and the Proud Boys: How the fragility of the "male ego" fuels the far-right (2021/10/18)

The generalized theory states that far right groups are utilizing "male thirst" and "anger towards unsubmissive women" to expand their own ranks of disgruntled males, who are then labeled deplorables, !ncels, m!sogyn!sts, nationalists, N@z!s, r@c!sts, r@p!sts, t0x!c, Wh!te Suprem@c!sts, or whatever other slur happens to fit within their arguments. These far right groups include demographics like 'incels', MGTOW, MRAs, PUAs, Red Pillers, The Manosphere, The Pr0ud Boys, et al. As of late, Black Pillers, the Passport Bros, and conservative Christians are also being lumped in with the other offenders to the Gynocentric Order.

The overall strategy is to create a psychological association between the nature of masculinity (especially the carnal aspects, with an emphasis on wh!te men) and the liberal dog-whistles of m!s0gyny, N@z!s, r@c!sm, r@pe culture,

Wh!te Suprem@cy, and a panoply of other derisive monikers.

While Trump was in office, there was a serious attempt to promulgate this narrative. The journalistic fervor quickly died out after Biden took office and the coof lockdowns kicked into effect. Since then, there have been some attempts to revive this narrative (e.g. Marcotte's article), but it has already passed its expiration date. The wider culture is completely fed up with this liberal rhetoric.

Lately, this bifurcation has gained enough momentum that these groups can no longer be called 'fringe'. Given the growing political segregation by gender, It's quickly becoming evident that this is a reaction to the War on Masculinity.

The Fundamental Attribution Error

Human nature has shown that familiar conditions have to become downright horribly awful before individuals will take the initiative to change those conditions. But this is exactly what we see men doing these days. The conditions are that bad.

The easiest way for men to change those conditions is to simply check out — leave the Barbie plantat!0n.

Liberals do not seem to realize (or maybe they just refuse to admit) that gynocentric cultural forces have already done most of the heavy lifting of debasing men / masculinity and reducing men's social conditions. So it would never dawn on liberal sensibilities that it is the abuses of gynocentrism and liberalism that are driving men away — NOT far right groups. Far right groups and conservatism in general merely present an alternative semblance of normalcy which men find attractive and therefore gravitate towards. Male thirst and angst towards abusive / self-centered women are merely the caustic elements of frustrated masculinity that liberals latch onto to slander men.

To draw an analogy, it's like a person who cruelly mistreats and starves a dog so badly for so long that it finally runs away. The owner is completely oblivious of their own lack of love and care, so the owner blames the dog for having voracious appetites and lusts, and for being uncivilized, ungrateful, and unworthy of love. It is a classic case of projection.

IOW, Marcotte et al. have committed a fundamental attribution error (FAE). Obviously, the motivation behind this error is to blame men as an easy out rather than to do any sort of critical analysis.

In addition to several things which Marcotte's theory gets wrong, there are a few other truths it fails to recognize.

1. The reality of sexual dimorphism (both biological and social).
2. The Mythos of Masculinity and Femininity.
3. The Centrality of the Male Ego as a force for good.
4. Headship is the structure which glorifies God.
5. Headship is most beneficial for marital health and children's well-being.

Let's take a look at some of these abuses and oversights, as presented in the last article by Marcotte. It will be evident that FAE, psychological projection, and liberal bias are being whipped up into a false narrative heavily laced with the fear of male authority.

Rejecting Men as Angry, Anxious, Insecure, and Irrelevant

One common theme in this perspective is a projection of men as being anxious, insecure, and needy. Statements of psychological projection have been marked in bold.

Marcotte writes,

> "[A speech at The Proud Boys rally in Los Angeles, California] was a perfect illustration of the two-step process that the far-right has used for years now to recruit new followers: First, bait insecure men with fantasies of female submission. Once they're in, recruit them to Wh!te Suprem@cy.
>
> "Authoritarians know how to play on the gender anxieties of insecure men, building up an army of bitter chumps."

The Truth: Fourth Wave Feminism has its own structure of authoritarianism that is far more developed and interwoven in society than any semblance of Patriarchal authority. In fact, the whole concept of 4th Wave Intersectional Feminism is to construct a different ethical system of social rank based on one's level of 'oppression'. So the last statement is actually Feminists revealing their strategy.

According to Marcotte, the 'fringe radicalism' of men only works on those men who are anxious and insecure. But actually, men who are anxious and insecure are more attracted to Feminism. Those men who are willing to change their existential beliefs and living conditions are those who are secure enough to have a lower tolerance threshold for Feminist BS. These men are more confident that they can find something better in life outside the Barbie pl@nt@t!ion, and they also possess the agency to give it a go. In fact, it is liberals who are anxious and insecure about the attrition of men to the right — away from their own social constructs and institutions. That means fewer naive Beta Bux, Male Feminists, and White Knights at their disposal.

Feminist M!s0gyny Narratives Chase Real Men Away

…but Marcotte et al. think Far Right groups attract m!s0gyn!sts.

> "The m!s0gyny-to-white-supremacy pipeline has long been well-documented, but in the past year and a half — with the rise of QAnon and the anti-vaccine movement, both perceived as more female-friendly than groups like the Pr0ud Boys — the centrality of misogyny to authoritarian recruitment has faded somewhat from the discourse. Recent events, however, have been a strong reminder of how crucial gender anxiety is to far-right recruitment."

The Truth: Feminism highlights instances of 'misogyny' for its own recruitment. This tactic goes all the way back to suffragettes and the temperance movement, and emphasized by deBeauvoire, Friedan, et al. Another instance of projection.

Raw Existential Fear of Trusting Men / Male Authority

Apparently, Marcotte is afraid that Feminism has lost its popular appeal, and/or that The Pr0ud Boys, et al., might be controlling the cultural narrative now, when in fact, traditionalism is simply better than what liberal feminism is offering to men.

> "Authoritarians prey on insecure men, feeding them a story of how all their gnawing self-doubts can be silenced by embracing an unapologetically male chauvinist attitude. They recruit such men with a fairy tale about how the modern world is scary and confusing. The solution, they say, is to return to rigid, unforgiving gender roles that just so happen to value straight, c!s men above all other people."

I can only guess that by "authoritarians", she means anyone who sees through the lies of 'equality', and/or recognizes in the crucial importance of having a hierarchical social structure — NOT authoritarian Feminist watchdogs.

Let's translate this projection for what it is.

"Feminists prey on insecure women, feeding them a story of how all their gnawing self-doubts can be silenced by embracing an unapologetic faux attitude of female empowerment. They recruit such women with a fairy tale about how the modern world is scary and confusing. The solution, they say, is to discard rigid, unforgiving gender roles that just so happen to value straight, c!s men above all other people."

Raw Existential Fear of Submission

Marcotte wins a medal for projection (and self-hatred) in the following statement.

> "…what's really at stake is anger at women for rejecting subservience. Single mothers, same-sex marriages, and egalitarian marriages all show that there's nothing inevitable about male-dominated marriage. That threatens men who are attracted to the dominance fantasy of traditional marriage to silence their own nagging sense of inadequacy."

It's true that Men strongly prefer submissive wives, but they cannot make women submit. It's up to women to submit themselves. If they won't, then of course men will correctly view them as more trouble than they're worth. But anger? Dominance fantasy? Inadequacy? That's projection. Again, let's translate this projection for what it is.

"…what's really at stake is anger at weak men for cherishing and enabling female ~~rebellion~~ 'independence'. Single mothers, same-sex marriages, and egalitarian marriages all show that Feminism has completely upset traditional norms of male-dominated marriage. That threatens women who are attracted to the dominance fantasy of traditional marriage to silence their own nagging sense of inadequacy."

Quoth Gender?

Marcotte mentions repetitively that gender is a social construct.

> "For men who rely heavily on their belief in male superiority to bolster their self-esteem, the realization that gender is socially constructed is a distressing thought, and they take their rage about that out on tr@ns people."

Gender anxiety is an issue, but not concerning men. There aren't too many men cradling their limp inceldom in their quivering palms, questioning their masculine worth, and brainstorming to come up with brave acts of valor they can perform to prove their virility to women who won't take them seriously anyway. Some Men were like this a decade ago, but not anymore. OTOH, a lack of gender anxiety in women means that Feminism will be less appetizing to them, and there will be less support for Feminist interests.

Conservatives often take the stance that gender is biological, while Liberals tout the belief that gender is a social construct. The truth is that both views are valid. Although all (real) men have XY chromosomes (the biological argument), those Men who express masculine traits are readily seen as more masculine (the social aspect). Women, including Feminists, admit to this when they demand exceptional men. Even the Manosphere emphasizes that some men are more masculine than others, as described in Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy. Yet Marcotte assumes that men are somehow afraid of themselves in this way. This is yet another instance of Projection. It is women who are deathly afraid of being stuck on one rung of the social hierarchy for life, unable to branch swing and social climb. As it has been said, "Women want to GET married, but they don't want to BE married."

More Misattribution

Next we see Marcotte confusing the defense of conservative / traditional values with the essence of Masculinity.

> "The irony is that no one proves the truth of gender's social construction more than the men who flock to Carlson and Rogan's show or join groups like the Pr0ud Boys. None of them clearly feels confident that manhood is much of a biological, irrefutable fact that they claim it is. Instead, they are constantly trying to "prove" it, from demanding female submission to bashing tr@ns people to refusing a v@ccine. If masculinity isn't a social construct, then one wouldn't need to put so much work into socially constructing it."

She thinks that conservatism is entirely based on male insecurity. Heh. That's cute. This is a false assumption based on the Liberal schadenfreude of bashing masculinity, previously referred to in the past as "pen!s envy". In fact, it is women who are insecure, especially women who cling to Feminist platitudes in a vain effort to salvage the self-esteem that was lost when they rejected men as a group.

> "It's funny to laugh at the deep-set insecurities that drive this kind of behavior. However, it's a problem for the entire country and one that's getting worse, not better. The people marshaling all this silly male angst aren't just making money from it. They're building an authoritarian political movement, one that is backing Donald Trump, the perfect avatar for inadequate men who think being a sexist bully somehow makes you a "real" man."

Nice assessment, except the last two phrases should read,

"…one that is attempting to rebuild the mound of Feminism before it crumbles into oblivion, the trendy moxie for insecure women who think being a promiscuous, sexist bully somehow makes them a "Strong Independent Woman".

Related

- Σ Frame: Patriarchy vs. Matriarchy: Divorce and Government Spending (2021/5/12)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Is Patriarchy for Deplorables? (2021/5/31)
- Σ Frame: Patriarchy is the Default Context (2021/6/2)
- Σ Frame: Dolearchy Trumps Patriarchy (2021/6/4)
- Σ Frame: The Feminine Secret (2021/8/16)
- Σ Frame: Domination is not Destruction (2023/4/14)
- Σ Frame: When Two Worlds Collide (2023/7/17)

The Reality

thedeti · 23 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

We have a long way to go before society, the church, and women earnestly consider Men's perspectives and recognize that we are in this boat together.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Author's Note: This post was requested by Feeriker and has some input from Jack. It is based on a series of comments I left under my previous post, Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 2 (2023/7/13), beginning here.
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Facing Reality

In my previous post, Heads in the Sand (2023/11/3), I covered a collection of influential pseudo-conservative mouthpieces who are constructing an alternate reality so that everyone can ignore reality.

Here's reality:

- Actions have consequences, good and bad.
- Traditionally, sexually attractive men can do and be whatever they want within any social order. Women, including Emba, have no problem with this. What they have a problem with is unattractive men's existence.
- When one sex realizes its prime directives, the other sex must yield. There can be no compromise here — either men "win" (in which case women are all brought along in that paradigm) or women "win" (in which case the vast majority of men are left behind, excluded, and destroyed).
- When men "win", everyone wins. When women "win", most men lose. What we're seeing now is what happens when women "win".
- Women don't get to have it both ways. Either you're fully equal or you're not. Either you are agents, or you're not. If you are, then you must accept the consequences of all of your actions.

- IF women are going to be the leaders, the "dominant" ones, the Captains, then everyone will be looking to them for guidance, direction, and orders. If the ship goes down, it's ultimately on them.
- IF women are the dominant "First" sex they claim to be, then the buck stops with them. There's no one they can blame; no one they can foist it off on. It's on them. It's ALL on them.
- IF women don't owe men anything, then men don't owe women anything.
- IF you want men to live in a world like this, then you have to accept underachievement and underperformance from men; and women will have to take up the slack.

That's it, world. That's it in a nutshell.

These pseudo-conservative mouthpieces believe that weak men are preventing women from achieving their feminist utopia. They are echoing the cultural refrain: "Men need to try harder, work harder, and do more."

Why should these men do more? You've spent your lives telling men you don't like them, don't want them, and don't need them. You sure as hell aren't having sex with them. You divorce gr@ped their fathers. You tell them they're crap.

So tell me — why should men do more?

While you think about that, I'll be working my @rse off to make sure I keep a roof over my head and for the wife and son I still have — the wife I almost divorced 12 years ago because she was acting like the women I just described.

Will Churchians ever Pull their Heads out of the Sand?

Renn, Cosper, et al. keep saying the church needs to dig our heads out of the sand. First the church needs to dig its own head out of the sand (Matthew 7:3-5).

If the church is ever going to do anything about this mess, then here's a list for starters.

- Stop demonizing men.
- Stop pedestalizing women.
- Stop teaching complementarianism and egalitarianism. It's not Biblical.

- Stop the favoritism towards reformed single mothers and Ch@ds who can make up an inspiring testimony of how God redeemed them from their sins. Don't treat them better than the faithful few who have suffered for righteousness sake.
- Stop the discrimination against unmarried young adults.
- Start coaching men to be on their purpose, and training them to be dominant and proactive within their sphere of influence.
- Start teaching women to be chaste, feminine, and submissive.

All the other plans and schemes you might come up with will fail unless you get these things down first.

Will Women ever Pull their Heads out of the Sand?

The elephant in the room that no one wants to talk about is what women need to do. Enough about what men need to do. It's time to discuss what women need to do.

- Submit yourselves to the authority of your father or husband. Yes, I said it. Just do it.
- Dedicate yourself towards being honest moral agents. You'll need to submit yourselves to a covenant man to learn how. Otherwise, stop calling yourselves Christians. (I know readers will laugh at this.)
- Stop lying about what you want from men. We can all see it — so stop lying about it.
- Pick up the slack. You've been saying for 3 generations and about 100 years now that you don't want men, don't need men, don't really like men, and don't want to have sex with them.
- At the same time, you keep saying you want nice kind good Christian men. If so, then start dating, sexing, marrying, and procreating with, those nice kind good Christian men you say you want (but clearly don't want).
- Or, if you really don't want these men, then just say you don't, and get on with it, and stop making demands and virtue signaling.
- Stop complaining and get on with it, whatever "it" is.
- If you do marry, then give your man what he wants, whatever that is. Compromise. Settle. Deal with it. Call it whatever you want, but give him what he wants.

- If you cannot or will not do the above, then stop taking up men's time and energies. Cut your orbiters loose so they can either be alone, or find someone who will give him what he wants.

And another thing women need to do:

- Grow up and deal with this. Grow up and accept this. You wanted this. You asked for this. You said you could handle it. You said you can do it better than men can.
- Accept and deal with all the consequences of your actions and choices. If you women are going to be the dominant, "first" sex, then your first order of business is accountability and responsibility. And with that comes the ironclad requirement that you accept all the consequences of your actions and choices.

OK. Here it is. Accept your mantle of leadership. And with it comes ultimate responsibility and accountability. It's all on you now.

The future of the world rests upon your narrow shoulders and broad hips.

We await your orders, “Captain”.

You’ve been saying women can do anything men can do, only better, and backwards and in heels. OK then: Time to stand and deliver. Make the money and support your men and kids with it.

Do the hard jobs like garbage truck operator, nuclear power plant operator, electrician, chemical engineer, cardiothoracic surgeon, sanitation and sewage plant technician, telephone line technician, HVAC technician, millwright, machinist, pipefitter, construction worker, roadworker, carpenter, plumber, railroad inspector, steel worker, manual laborer, long-haul truck driver, third shift manufacturing plant assistant manager, infantry enlisted, artillery enlisted….

Do STEM. Do the hard trades, manual labor, and working in all kinds of weather. Do the risky jobs where you might get hurt or killed. Go into the military where you get blown to bits and lose limbs. Do the hard, long hours, time consuming work. Change your own flat tires. Move your own heavy stuff. Do your own heavy lifting. Put your own heavy carry-on into the overhead compartment. You’re strong and independent — YOU do it.

These jobs need to be done. When are women going to step up and do them?

I want, I expect, them to take full responsibility for the outcomes, good and bad. I’m still waiting.

If women can’t or won’t do the hard stuff, then at the very least they need to lead their families and take responsibility, and not foist the blame for bad outcomes onto government, “society”, their parents, their spouses, their exes, their baby daddies, their sex partners, or others.

If women DON’T want to do these things and take responsibility for the outcome, then they’d best submit to men and leave those things to men.

So, women — we’re waiting. Pick up the slack. Please design submersibles that won’t implode and turn their occupants into paste. Please design bridges that don’t collapse. Please change the oil in our cars, fix our computers, repair the roads, carry away our garbage, drive the trucks, and bring the food to the supermarkets. More and more men will be poolside or working their subsistence wage jobs.

Stand and deliver, women. It’s your time. You wanted this. It’s on you now. It’s time for you to rise to the occasion.

We're waiting.

Of course none of what I wrote is going to happen. Of course not. Of course women will not take responsibility nor will women start en masse doing Mike Rowe style "dirty jobs".

What is more likely as we move more toward a totalitarian socialist society is that we'll look more like a Soviet economy. There will be forced labor and conscription to get the dirty jobs done. Put quite simply, men will be put into de facto slave labor as was done in the old USSR.

Do you think the church will provide an alternate outcome?

Related

- Σ Frame: The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The Delusion of the Good (2022/8/19)
- Σ Frame: An open letter to Christian Wives (2023/5/27)
- Feeriker's response to Thedeti's screed (2023/11/27)

Those Old Notions of Equality

Jack · 25 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Older generations never saw the fruits of their sins.

Targeted Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Although my grandmother would never use the words 'Feminism' or 'power', in her own words she told me that back in her day, she saw society change for the benefit of women, and that Feminism liberated women and gave them dignity.

I had to ask her…

> "When Feminists claimed that men and women were (or should be) 'equal', did they mean moral equality, political equality, socioeconomic equality, Sexual Market Value (SMV) equality, or Marriage Market Value (MMV) equality?"

She pushed her glasses up and looked at me inquisitively, but said nothing.

> "If it was about moral equality, then perhaps you're right. But that's not because of Feminism. It's because men started to reject Feminism, leaving women to start taking responsibility for themselves, and this didn't happen en masse until the U.S. splintered and spoiled in the 2020s. Thanks to the Red Pill era, Men woke up to the ever present reality of Persistent Female Narcissism (PFN), which was naïvely called "solipsism" at that time, and "hysteria" back in the early 20th century, but has since been added to the DSM as a sex-linked disorder. Men responded by becoming less family and civic minded, and more Black Pilled / MGTOW / nihilistic. Men started going away on looong vacations overseas in search of femininity and masculine sanity, > which was called 'Passporting' back then. Black men who took this route were called 'Passport Bros' and the Wh!te men who did this were scorned as 'Neo-Colonizers'. When a critical plurality of men started doing this, then all the Strong Independent Wimmin suddenly realized that they'd need to work for their entire lives in order to fulfill and retain their 'Independence'. Then and only then did they slowly learn to appreciate all the great benefits and blessings women once had under the Glorious Patriarchy — the same blessings which they summarily threw away in their pursuits of sexual perversion. Even then, very few women ever realized that they could get everything they wanted and more by attaching themselves to one man and cloying themselves as a submissive 'Trad-Wife', or any wife at all for that matter. Instead they fooled around with cohabitation and having children out of wedlock — anything to keep one foot on the carousel. All this suggests that women might, just might, be displaying a wee tad bit more moral agency now than they ever did back when you were a spring chick hopping around the Hippie commune."

She jerked up straight and looked straight at me with an indignant gaze. I took this as an indication that she was in a cognizant mood for a change, so I continued.

> "If the argument only concerned political equality, I guess most people might agree with those Feminists. But looking back on history with crystal clear hindsight, we know that all the rhetoric about political 'rights' were merely a mass bluff put on by the controlling elites. As I recall, there were some who tried to make the public aware of this by touting the concept of 'Mass Formation Psychosis" during your generation's last power play before retirement — that hamfisted grab for open control through martial law, AKA the C0v!dian C0nsp!r@cy. But most people dismissed this as pseudo-science so that they could get back to their other, more hypnotizing pseudo-sciences. Moreover, the notion of political equality was nothing more than an artificially popularized mythos intended to keep the masses preoccupied with a fabricated intersexual cultural war, and thereby distract them from ever noticing their grab for world power. In reality, women had the vote for more than a century, and the whole world went to hell during that time. Women grew less and less happier until they were downright miserable."
>
> "Until… The God Emperor Trump took office and exposed their schemes, or 'drained the swamp' as he put it. When the veil was removed from peoples' eyes, women grew tired of the daily 9 to 5 grind and wanted to return to the home and hearth, and Men (and some women too) began hankering for the 19th amendment to be repealed.
>
> "Grab 'em by the p_ssy" was just a front hole in the dyke.

Her mouth was gaping open at this point. I went on.

> "It wasn't about socioeconomic equality, because in the early 2020s, women surpassed men in nearly every metric; earnings, educational level, longevity, media presence, living standards, quality of life, and so on. The only things women did not surpass men in were things like the crime rate, homelessness, and su!c!de. And yet, women were still crying "Victim!" and persecuting men for just being alive, for 'gazing' at them, and for not giving them Moar!
>
> "Equality?!? Hmph!

Her indignation changed to consternation. Spittle began to drool from the left corner of her mouth.

> "Neither was it about Sexual Market Value (SMV) equality.
>
> "I mean, if all men are equal, then why can't women just choose one. Any one will do, since they are 'equal'. Right?
>
> "And if men are 'equal' to women, then why did women say, "Where are all the good MEN?" ? Why didn't they say, "Where are all the good lesb!ans?"?

She hiccupped and wiped her mouth with a tissue.

> "And it wasn't about MMV equality either.
>
> "I mean, if men and women were equal, then why did women ask men, "What can you contribute to a relationship?" (Or, "…bring to the table", as people said back then in their debased, distrustful, and self-centered transactional mindset.) Meanwhile, women were gravely offended when men asked the same question of them, seemingly unaware that if a woman offered a man something of value, oh, say, like kindness, submissiveness, sweetness, or even nothing more than simply a daily sammitch, then this might have raised her MMV and allowed her to "stick the landing" as St. Dalrock wrote, or maybe even land a better man. But those women were too narcissistic to do even that!
>
> "No. All these arguments about 'equality' were a false flag. Looking back on the demise of the U.S. of A., now we can see where all these arguments led — a not-so-benevolent Gynocratic dictatorship over a less-than-> civilized Jungleland.

Grandma huffed and put down her plastic sports bottle of strawberry Ensure so that she could wave her bony finger. (She hasn't been out jogging since she broke her hip in 2026.)

> "You entitled ungrateful brats don't know how good we had it back then. It's your spoiled generation that has ruined Barbie land!"

Ahhh… The clueless Projection of advanced PFN and dementia in the elderly has become the defining characteristic of their generational cohort.

There was no sense in arguing with her any further, so I began pushing her wheelchair back to the clinic and simply replied,

> "OK, Boomer."

Readers must surely know this is satire, but it IS based on my own experience. Unfortunately, this conversation never happened. My grandmother wasn't a Boomer, but a member of the Greatest Generation. "Her day", which she spoke of, was not the 1970s, but the late 1930s to the early 1950s. She didn't see any connection between her notions of feminism and the fact that her husband was unable to tolerate her disgust for sexual relations and her quarrelsome daily insistence on her own 'discretions', 'rights', and 'freedoms'. She didn't understand why he left her for his secretary, a buxom, chirpy, and garrulous woman 12 years younger than herself. She didn't understand why her husband filed for a divorce in 1957, shoving my father (who was 14 years old at the time, which is the worst age to experience parental divorce) into a bleak existence that he never fully recovered from. In her mind, it was all his fault; "Men are bad" and "All men want is sex, Sex, SEX!" She felt sorry for herself, "victimized by the Patriarchy" as some leftover feminists might say today.

She died in 1989, so she didn't live long enough to see her son being frivorced by his wife in 1994. She didn't get to see her granddaughters ruin themselves on the carousel and have children OOW, and her grandsons also stripped by divorce. She didn't get to see her sins being passed down to the next generation. Thus, she never made the connection to this either.

Moreover, my grandmother never got to see any connection between her notions of feminism and the current fruits of its culmination which are required to prop up the Feminine Imperative — ressentimented virtues as vices, the postponement and debasement of marriage, the bimbofication of women, increased promiscuity, abortion, an implosion of trust between the sexes, divorce, and the destruction of the family.

Ignorance is bliss, but it is hell for the grandchildren.

Merry CHRISTmas~!

Related

- Σ Frame: The Evolution of Feminism as a Series of Cultural Movements (2018/1/15)
- Σ Frame: The Blue Pill, Feminism, and Sin (2018/10/16)
- Σ Frame: Gynapotheosis (2021/4/21)
- Σ Frame: The Sexual De-Evolution (2021/7/28)
- Σ Frame: A Gynocentric Society Inhibits Female Agency (2022/12/9)
- D. Bradley: A holiday message to men (2023/12/24)

Marry for Love?

Jack · 26 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The most deceptive lie ever believed.

Readership: All
Targeted Audience: Single Men
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Marrying for love is one of the biggest cultural lies taught, and the same lie is echoed by the church. It is also a very old cultural lie, a hangover from Medieval Chivalry that is still in effect today. In fact, this is the lie that is responsible for the convergence of the church.

Young Christian singles do not marry for love. You marry the person who can fulfill his/her role as a husband or wife.

Marrying for love will result in disappointment and disaster.

Why?

From a man's viewpoint, marrying for love means that the woman is exerting sexual authority over him such that he feels humbled. That's what the biological / secular concept of love is all about — being humbled by your own romantic / sexual needs for a particular person. It fails because this sets up a structure of hierarchy from the start that is ungodly and unbiblical.

The Christian Man does not marry for love. He marries the young woman who willingly submits to his Headship Authority as a Christian wife should do.

There is no purple structure. If there is a doubt about this, then there will be problems later.

The Peaceful Unity Model does NOT exist where there is intense sexual mating competition. It only exists in small Christian communities that regulate sexual competition.

Do not allow yourself to be deceived into thinking that Women marry for love. Women do NOT marry for love. They F_ck for love and validation. They marry for status, security, and resources. Do not confuse the two. Do NOT think she will become submissive by giving her what she wants. These days, Women are only submissive because they choose to be. So choose one who chooses to be submissive.

Women also have sex to influence men, like convincing him to marry her. This does not necessarily mean she loves him in the Biblical sense. Do not be deceived. If you are having sex before marriage, do not assume regular sex will continue after marriage, because it won't. If you are not having sex with her, do not assume that getting married will give you all the p_ssy you can eat. It doesn't work that way. Women fall in love and F_ck the man who exerts Headship dominance over her. Prioritize loving dominance, Biblical style. If she doesn't submit, cut her loose before any further damage is done. Spend your time looking for a woman who will fulfill her role as a Christian Wife.

Pagan women (and many nominal Christian women too) will engage in serial monogamy and/or F_ck Ch@ds on the come and go and thereby ruin themselves for marriage. They only consider marriage after they pass The Wall or their biological reproductive clock is winding down to an evolutionary dead end. Even then, women will only consider marriage if he passes all her filters and has sufficient status and resources to be qualified in her eyes. Nominal Christian women are no different. Look for one who has demonstrated faith by bearing the cross of our age.

Moreover the idea of marrying for love is a mass deception foisted onto men to motivate them to marry. This is a hold over from medieval times.

Establish your domain first. Love comes later. Trust me, you will fall in love with a respectful woman who willingly submits herself to your sexual authority as a matter of principle and without a solipsistic glitch. But if you fall in love with her without first establishing your rule over her, then you will lose your authority over her. That's the nature of romantic love.

Related

- Dalrock: Courtly love is always sexual, even when non physical. (2016/12/15)
- Dalrock: Chivalry and biblical marriage can't coexist. (2018/4/15)
- Dalrock: If Christianity isn't feminism and courtly love, what is it? (2018/9/17)

- Σ Frame: The Mosh Pit of Sex Analysists (2019/3/24)
- Σ Frame: Something's not right (2021/2/5)
- Σ Frame: Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy (2021/6/23)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Delusion of the Good (2022/8/19)
- Σ Frame: On Clarifying a Christian Culture of Attraction (2022/8/24)
- Σ Frame: Restoring Respect (2022/9/28)
- Σ Frame: The Lie of Romantic Love (2023/2/3)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Why are attractive women more dangerous to beta men than their less attractive friends? (2023/2/13)
- Σ Frame: The D@mning Power of Humility (2023/2/15)
- Σ Frame: On Choosing a Wife Wisely (2023/5/1)
- Σ Frame: The Next Step (2023/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Ideal Women Don't Exist (2023/9/23)
- Σ Frame: Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT "Found" by Chance (2023/10/9)
- Σ Frame: Self-Selection and Adverse Selection (2023/10/16)

Summary of the W!tchy War on Masculinity

Jack · 27 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

An index of links by topic for this 2 month long theme.

Readership: All
Theme: The W!tchy War on Masculinity
Length: 1,900 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Overview

Our coverage of The W!tchy War on Masculinity is actually a combination of three interrelated themes that I've pieced together into a collage of writings that are focused on the impact on men.

1. Gynocentric man bashing
2. Modernity / Scientism / Positivism
3. The Jezebel Spirit / W!tchcraft

This 2-month long theme touched on 3 battlegrounds in the War on Masculinity:

1. The Church
2. Society
3. Intersexual Relations

One post touched on all these topics, which is fitting to its namesake.

1. Σ Frame (Jack): Uncovering Nakedness (2023/12/16)

Other posts are categorized below.

The Convergence of the Church and Crumbling Attitudes Towards Masculinity

Pope Francis

2023 has seen a new low in both the disintegration of the church and the broader social attitudes towards men. I believe it is no coincidence that these two phenomena are occurring in conjunction. At its root, it is the revilement of authority.

Looks like I called it right on the money when I decided back in late September to focus on this topic as a theme. This topic has received more airplay over the sphere during this time than any other topic.

During this time frame, the Church of England condoned same sex marriages in mid November, followed by Pope Francis and the Catholic church on 2023/12/18. On the SAME DAY (I think), the U.S. government declared the Manosphere a terr0r!st threat.

Here at Σ Frame, Thedeti and Jack dismantled the alternarratives of the new proto-conservative syndicate within churchianity. Responses and related posts are also listed.

1. First Things (Aaron Renn): The Three Worlds of Evangelicalism (2022/2/1)
2. Bruce Charlton: Intra-Christian, inter-denominational, hostility – and the cure in Core, Romantic, Christianity (2022/11/26)
3. Wintery Knight: How Will Men Adapt to Violence Against Men and False Accusations? (2023/10/6)
4. Bruce Charlton: Spook spirituality (2023/10/23)
5. Matthew E. Cochran: Facing Wokeism as a Church (After Lutheranism Part 4) (2023/10/24)
6. Wintery Knight: Why Are Christian Leaders So Desperate to Appease the Secular Left? (2023/10/24)
7. Laughing at Feminism: The hatred of incels (2023/10/26)
8. The Orthosphere (J.M. Smith): They May be Good Men But Still Trying to Destroy You (2023/10/31)
9. Σ Frame (Thedeti): Heads in the Sand (2023/11/3)
10. Σ Frame (Jack): Rewriting the Script for a Kinder, Gentler Feminism (2023/11/10)
11. The Orthosphere (Bonald): Blessed are the sorrowful; the Christian's response to world apostasy (2023/11/12)
12. Bruce Charlton: What is the relationship between Christianity and the decline of the world? The basis of Romantic Christianity (2023/11/15)

13. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): The Two Golems (2023/11/17)
14. Bruce Charlton: Is it a certainty that The Church will (in a meaningfully Christian sense) necessarily endure? (2023/11/17)
15. The Orthosphere (Alan Roebuck): The Esthetic Damnation of America (2023/11/20)
16. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): The Pleasure of Malevolence (It's Who We Are) (2023/11/21)
17. The Orthosphere (Bonald): My own thoughts on the future of Christian theology (2023/11/22)
18. Gunner Q3: Giving Thanks For No Burden Of Performance (2023/11/22)
19. Σ Frame (Thedeti, Jack): Skirting around the Skirts (2023/11/24)
20. Σ Frame (Jack): Strachan's Strafe (2023/11/25)
21. Bruce Charlton: The spiritual problem of traditional "high volume" (H-V) religion – and what should replace it (2023/11/25)
22. Francis Berger: Hope is the Antidote to Despair, But It Can Also Be a Double-Edged Sword (2023/11/27)
23. The Orthosphere (Alan Roebuck): Christian Reconquista: Retaking the Mainline Denominations (2023/11/28)
24. Σ Frame (Jack, Thedeti): The Sacred Cow (2021/12/1)
25. The Orthosphere (J.M. Smith): The Ways of Usurpation (2023/12/2)
26. The Orthosphere (Alan Roebuck): "Unite the Right:" A Conceptually Simple Framework Based on First Stopping the Destruction (2023/12/4)
27. The Orthosphere (Alan Roebuck): More About That Reconquista Thing… (2023/12/5)
28. Σ Frame (Jack): Controlled Opposition (2023/12/6)
29. Σ Frame (Jack): The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)
30. Σ Frame (Jack): Double Bind (2023/12/8)
31. Laughing at Feminism: On Tides and Trolls (2023/12/12)
32. Σ Frame (Alexei Karamazov): Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church (2023/12/14)
33. Catacomb Resident: When Men Have Had Enough (2023/12/10)
34. Bruce Charlton: This-worldly pseudo-Christians cannot tolerate anything pessimistic, because that makes them feel despair (2023/12/18)
35. Bruce Charlton: Self-blinded optimism and Christian convergence with The System (2023/12/19)
36. Σ Frame (Jack): Darkened Delusions of Male Insecurity (2023/12/22)
37. Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Reality (2023/12/23)
38. Catacomb Resident: Institution versus People (2023/12/23)

Modernity

There has been an ongoing examination of the fallout of Modernity / Positivism.

Here at Σ Frame, Arch Angel brought our attention to the influence and consequences of Modernity. Much of the discussion on this particular topic here at Σ Frame reverted back to what Bruce Charlton et al. have already observed. Responses and related posts are also listed.

1. Bruce Charlton: Not even trying: the corruption of real science (2013/7/15)
2. Bruce Charlton: The demotivating effect of Residual Unresolved Positivism (RUP) — and the instant cure! (2015/12/30)
3. Bruce Charlton: What do I think about the Alt-Right? It is just another Leftism pursuing a subtype of mortal utility (2016/9/16)
4. Bruce Charlton: Positivism (which rules modernity) is death-by-definition (2017/12/7)
5. Bruce Charlton: Bureaucracy is the main form of Positivism (2017/12/17)
6. Bruce Charlton: The weight of tradition — our task (2022/1/19)
7. Bruce Charlton: Land of Druids (2022/6/22)
8. Bruce Charlton: Direct-knowing is front-loaded (2023/9/30)
9. Bruce Charlton: "Wrong" questions rarely, if ever, lead to "right" answers — a comment by Francis Berger (2023/10/1)
10. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): Myth of Modernity Video (2023/11/3)
11. The Orthosphere (Kristor): Philosophical Skeleton Keys: Substantial ≠ Physical (2023/11/3)
12. Catacomb Resident: Enemies of the Gospel (2023/11/8)
13. The Orthosphere (Richard Cocks): Philip Goff: Why? The Purpose of the Universe (2023/11/12)
14. Σ Frame (Arch Angel): Why are We in this Mess? (2023/11/13)
15. Catacomb Resident: Jesus Is Still Hebrew (2023/11/15)
16. Catacomb Resident: The Whole Mission (2023/11/20)
17. Σ Frame (Arch Angel): In Science We Trust (2023/11/27)
18. Derek L. Ramsey: Where Do Leftists Get Their Ideas? (2023/12/1)
19. Σ Frame (Jack): Is the Σ Frame Blog Positivistic or Prophetic? (2023/12/3)
20. Bruce Charlton: Second-hand Christians and spiritual scaremongering (2023/12/3)
21. Catacomb Resident: Digging Up Foundations (2023/12/3)
22. Σ Frame (Jack): The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse (2023/12/9)
23. (Red Pill Apostle): The Turnings Applied to the State of Marriage (2023/12/11)
24. Bruce Charlton: Residual Unresolved Collectivism (RUC) (2023/12/17)
25. Catacomb Resident: Mindwar (2023/12/17)
26. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): Antichrist is Taking Off the Mask (2023/12/21)
27. The Orthosphere (Richard Cocks): The Misanthropy To Beat Them All (2023/12/21)

W!tchcr@ft

We looked at W!tchcr@ft, what it is, how it originates, and its various modern manifestations.

Of note, S@tanists were highly active during this time, including their involvement in after-school programs in Memphis, and asserting their Constitutional right to install an altar to Baphomet in the Iowa State Capitol.

Responses and related posts are also listed.

1. Σ Frame (Jack): They're under a spell. (2023/11/1)
2. Σ Frame (Jack): The Spirit of Jezebel (2023/11/15)
3. Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor 1): The Spirit of Athaliah (2023/11/16)
4. Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor 1): More on the Spirits of Jezebel and Athaliah (2023/11/17)
5. Σ Frame (Jack): Sexual Promiscuity is the Doorway to Witchdom (2023/11/18)
6. Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor 2): Testimony from a Reader Battling Witchcraft (2023/11/20)
7. Σ Frame (Jack): Dealing with Feminine Insecurity (2023/11/22)
8. Bruce Charlton: "Psychopath" is a materialist reduction of "innately evil" (2023/11/22)
9. Σ Frame (Jack): Where Shame Tactics become Witchcraft (2023/11/28)
10. Σ Frame (Jack): Case Study of an Interweb Witch (2023/11/29)
11. Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor 1): On the Incubation of Witches (2023/11/30)
12. Catacomb Resident: Incremental Evangelism (2023/11/30)
13. Σ Frame (Jack): Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft? (2023/12/5)
14. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): The Beast of St. John's Revelation is a Quack (2023/12/11)
15. Σ Frame (Jack): Submission / Virgin Shaming (2023/12/12)
16. Spawny's Space (Cill): Spidey Sense (2023/12/13)
17. Σ Frame (Alexei Karamazov): Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church (2023/12/14)
18. The Orthosphere: Satan's Minions On the March (2023/12/16)

19. Σ Frame (Jack): What is Witchcraft? (2023/12/18)
20. Σ Frame (Jack): Triggers (2023/12/19)
21. Σ Frame (Jack): Catacomb Resident on Witchcraft (2023/12/20)
22. Σ Frame (Jack, Anonymous Contributor 1): How to Identify and Deal with the Jezebel Spirit / Witchcraft (2023/12/21)
23. Knowland Knows: Psychedelics and Emasculation (2023/12/26)
24. Gunner Q: I Predict In 2024, Witchcraft Will… Already Went Mainstream (2024/1/3)
25. The Transformed Wife (Lili Rose): Being Involved with a Jezebel (2024/1/28)

Other Factors and Viewpoints

There were also many other perspectives that tied into this theme.

1. Σ Frame (Jack): The Larger Conspiracy that Justifies Feminism (2023/11/6)
2. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Cultural Myth of the SIW (2023/11/8)
3. Christianity and Masculinity: Difference between men and women with superheroes (2023/11/8)
4. Σ Frame (Jack): Abortion is a Betrayal! (2023/11/11)
5. The Orthosphere (Bonald): Three fantasies (2023/11/18)
6. Bruce Charlton: Cons and pros of a happy childhood (2023/11/18)
7. Σ Frame (Jack): Slut Faming (2023/11/21)
8. The Orthosphere (Richard Cocks): Morality as Cosmically Real (2023/11/21)
9. Bruce Charlton: Order or Chaos – or the Third Way: How the options of Life seem to the typical modern (perpetual-) adolescent? (2023/11/26)
10. Derek L. Ramsey: Abortion News (2023/11/27)
11. D. Bradley: Life update: I'm becoming cold… (2023/11/30)
12. Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Covenant Cross (2023/12/2)

13. William Wildblood: A Dangerous Time to be a Woman (2023/12/2)
14. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Power to Create vs The Power to Destroy (2023/12/4)
15. Reactionary Feminist: Cumming Of Age (2023/12/9)
16. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): Against Inclusivity (2023/12/12)
17. Christianity and Masculinity: Headship is still authority in marriage and wifely submission is obedience Part 2 (2023/12/15)
18. Catacomb Resident: Trust Issues (2023/12/21)
19. Σ Frame: Those Old Notions of Equality (2023/12/25)
20. Σ Frame: Marry for Love? (2023/12/26)

Headship

The topic of Headship came up and a few posts were written about this. Apparently, this discussion was revived back in September when Sharkly (Laughing at Feminism) resumed posting after an 11-month hiatus. Derek and Sharkly exchanged barbs (mostly through many comments at Spawny's Space) until Derek took aim at Thedeti and the Σ Frame blog. DeepStrength closed the debate with a sound affirmation of Biblical Headship Authority.

1. Laughing at Feminism: Who was first given dominion over the earth? (2023/9/13)
2. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): God in a Looking Glass (Also My Whiskered Chin) (2023/11/15)
3. D. Bradley: Are women meant to be controlled? (2023/11/24)
4. Derek L. Ramsey: Despair (2023/11/29)
5. Derek L. Ramsey: Talking About Old Women (2023/12/4)
6. Laughing at Feminism: On Tides and Trolls (2023/12/12)
7. Σ Frame (Jack): Invisible Magic Authority (2023/12/13)
8. Christianity and Masculinity: Headship is still authority in marriage and wifely submission is obedience Part 2 (2023/12/15)
9. Christianity and Masculinity: Headship is still authority in marriage Part 2 addendum (2023/12/18)

Mysticism

Elsewhere in the sphere, the doctrinal / philosophical battle over the definition, place, and value of Christian mysticism continues. Some of us still think mysticism is equivalent to (pagan?) esotericism and that there is a fundamental difference between being a 'true mystic' and a serious Christian.

These differences in understanding erupted in a spat over William Wildblood's account of 'spiritual guides'. Are they angels, demons, divinations, an overactive imagination, or just bad digestion? We can never know with scientistic certainty, except through prayer, mystic faith, spiritual discernment, and testing the spirits (1 John 4:1-6).

1. William Wildblood: Behind the Scenes Spiritual Guides (2023/11/27)
2. Gunner Q3: Disrespecting the Masters (2023/11/29)
3. William Wildblood: Reply to GunnerQ (2023/11/29)
4. Francis Berger: As With Everything, When It Comes to Christian Blogs, Motivation is Key (2023/11/29)
5. Derek L. Ramsey: Meeting the Masters (2023/11/30)
6. Gunner Q3: Emergent Esotericism (2023/12/1)
7. Bruce Charlton: A comment for GunnerQ on "esotericism" (2023/12/1)
8. Adam Piggott: Masterful Pride (2023/12/2)
9. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): Here Be Dragons, There Be Dragons, There Be Dragons, Too (A Word in Support of William Wildblood) (2023/12/2)

Notice of Holiday Closing

It is customary for this blog to take a reprieve from posting between the winter solstice and the New Year (12/22* to 12/31). However, this multi-topic series received more contributions than usual. Thedeti wrote 4 posts, Red Pill Apostle wrote 3 posts, Arch Angel wrote 2 posts, Alexei Karamazov wrote 1 post, there were 5 posts contributed anonymously, and Jack wrote 2 additional posts to address questions from readers. Consequently, posting extended past 12/21* this year.

I urge readers to abandon the internet altogether during this time, and to focus their time and attention on family and friends, and the reason for the season.

On behalf of all the authors at Σ Frame, Merry CHRISTmas and Happy New Year!

 The winter solstice is traditionally on 12/21 on Western calendars. However, the Chinese calendar, which is based on the phases of the moon, indicates that the winter solstice is on 12/22 this year.*

Related

- Σ Frame: Against The Naturalistic Fallacy (2018/2/12)

2023 Sigma Frame Performance Report

Jack · 2 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Σ Frame's seventh annual traffic performance report.

Readership: Anyone interested
Note to Readers: There were several interesting developments in 2023. This report is long, so readers short on time may skim through it to catch the conclusions.
Length: 3,600 words
Reading Time: 20 minutes

History, Goals, and Purposes

I started blogging on March 7, 2008, using Blogger as my blog platform. The original purpose was to distribute teaching materials (for a sunday school class that I taught) in an easily accessible and shareable format, and to foment discussion. The general appeal, and the quality that made my teachings popular, was its focus on applying the scriptures to the incongruences of human nature and the metaphysical.

I discovered the Red Pill in early 2017. Feeling inspired to start blogging regularly again, on September 27, 2017, I transferred the best of my blog writings from Blogger to WordPress, and began concentrating on Red Pill topics. I received more views on WordPress in the first two months than I had on Blogger in the previous 8 years. Since then, readership has expanded and posts have grown more frequent and more regular.

I have a habit to pray frequently about the purpose of this blog, what I should write about, and what men need to read and know. I've always had the conviction that my testimony, my life experiences, and the things I've learned are valuable to other men, and that it's important for me to share these things for the benefit of others.

As this blog has matured, there has been a greater focus on "Rebuilding Christian Masculinity", since men appear to be confused about what it means to be a Christian Man in the 21st century, and masculinity has come under increasing attack from both the church and secular culture. More emphasis has been placed on Biblical and philosophical purity, sifting out truth from various Blue Pill and Red Pill concepts, and determining how these are to be properly applied to Christian Men's lives.

More about my goals and purposes in blogging are summed up in the About page.

Authors

Even in this age of apostasy and tribulation, God continues working throughout the lives of many men. It is for this reason that I pray for other men to join me in this endeavor.

The Lord has answered this prayer with exceeding benevolence. Lexet teamed up with me in 2019. Scott and NovaSeeker joined the writing panel in 2020. In 2021, Red Pill Apostle, Thedeti, and two others joined us in contributing their talents and valuable insights. In 2022, the authors included Oscar, Catacomb Resident, Sharkly, and one anonymous contributor. In 2023, Caterpillar 345 and Arch Angel joined the authors panel and there were 4 others who contributed posts.

In summary, the authors for 2023 included…

1. Jack (151 posts)
2. Anonymous Contributor (17 posts)
3. Oscar (10 posts)
4. Thedeti (8 posts)
5. Red Pill Apostle (6 posts)
6. WhiteGuy1 (3 posts)
7. Arch Angel (2 posts)
8. Alexei Karamazov (1 post)
9. Catacomb Resident (1 post)
10. Caterpillar345 (1 post)
11. Elspeth (1 post)
12. Lexet (1 post)
13. NovaSeeker (1 post coauthored with Jack)
14. Rock Kitaro, Stage in the Sky (1 post)

15. 1 reblogged post from Sunshine Mary

In addition, Jack wrote 1 post at Spawny's Space this year.

We are truly grateful to all those who have invested their thoughts, time, and energy to produce these posts, and to all the readers who have contributed their insights to the discussions at Σ Frame.

Readers

In sum, there was a large turnover in readership in 2023.

The top 10 countries with the most viewers

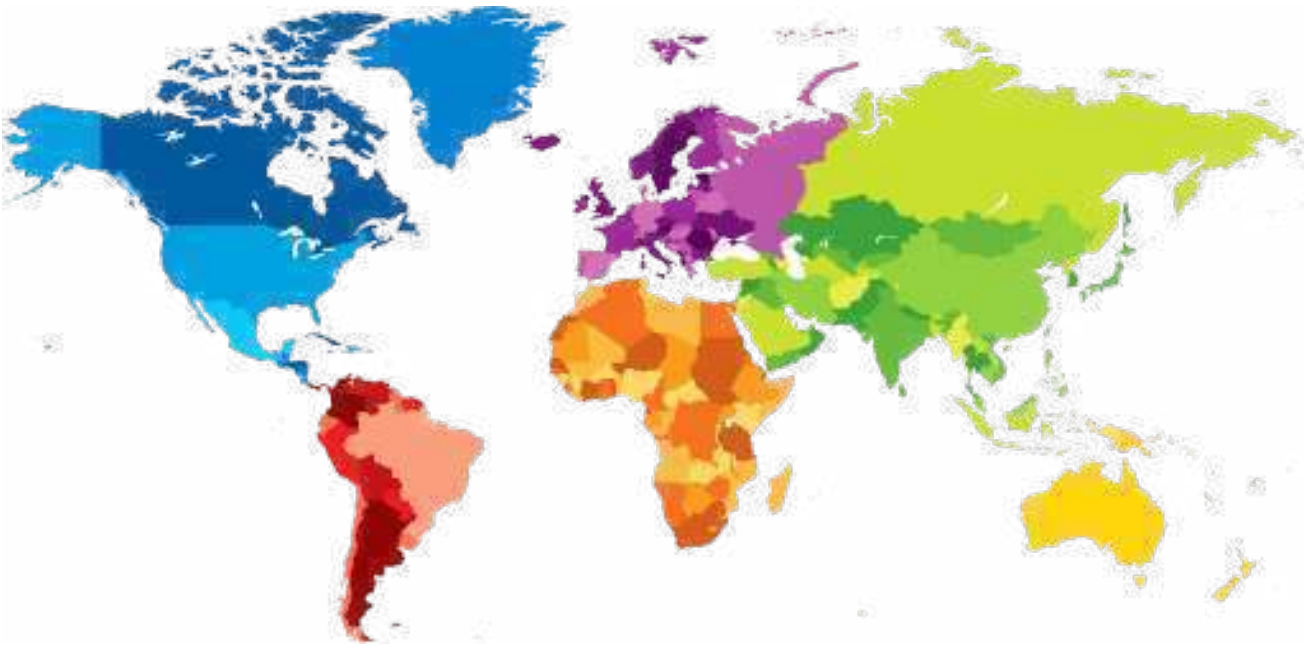
In 2022, the readership fell for the first time, apparently due to a mass exodus of European readers. In 2023, the European readers came back en masse, with especially large numbers from the U.K., Germany, Czechia, the European Union, Italy, Poland, Turkey, Switzerland, France, Croatia, and the Netherlands, in that order. Of note, Nigeria is contending strongly in 9th place, up from 12th.

This year, India fell from 5th place to 8th place. The Philippines was in 8th place and is now in 15th. (Duterte did something right.) New Zealand was in 9th place in 2022, but is now in 18th.

Figures in parentheses indicate the change from the previous year.

1. United States: 154,028 (-12.3%)
2. United Kingdom: 10,128 (+85.4%)
3. Canada: 3,489 (-22.9%)
4. Australia: 2,665 (-38.5%)
5. Germany: 2,295 (+2.2%)
6. Czechia: 2,189 (+22.8%)
7. European Union: 2,077 (+368.8%)
8. India: 1,945 (-13.4%)
9. Nigeria: 1,123 (+100.5%)
10. Italy: 1,094 (+401.8%)

Total number of viewing countries / principalities: 150 (-0.7%)



Since inception, it has been noted that the vast majority of readership originates from democratic, capitalistic societies that are being smothered by post-modern, feministic social ideologies. In the past, I have attributed this to the sociopolitical climate in these countries. This remains true for the U.S., U.K, and Germany. However, this does not explain why Australia, Canada, and New Zealand have had the largest decreases in views since these countries continue to endure significant misandry and sociopolitical unrest. I assume that the Red Pill going mainstream and the popularity of online videos are the main reasons for this shift, since most of this content is in English.

Subscribers

Total number of Subscribers: 238

Number of subscribers on WordPress: 209 (+0% ???)

Number of subscribers by email: 29 (+0% ???)

Number of subscribers joining in 2023 (as reported by WordPress): 0 (???)

Number of subscribers joining in 2023 (as indicated by date of subscribing): 21

Obviously, the subscriber statistics on WordPress are in error. Several readers have reported that their subscriptions were removed and they had to subscribe again. This has happened to me too on some other blogs that I follow. It stands to reason that some of the new subscribers are really new, while others are actually old subscribers who were booted off for some reason and then resubscribed.

If you enjoy reading Σ Frame, please check your subscription status by clicking on the button below* or enter your email and click on Subscribe. Please leave a comment if you find an anomaly.

Type your email…

Subscribe

 Not sure if this script is displaying properly. Please leave a note if it is not.*

The most prolific Commentators

Commentators Feeriker and Dead Bedroom Dating pushed Cameron232 and Scott off the list this year.

1. Oscar: 2.9K (+36.9%)

2. Thedeti: 2.7K (+30.8%)
3. Jack: 2.2K (+35.1%)
4. Info: 1.2K (+78.3%)
5. Feeriker: 1.1K
6. Red Pill Apostle: 464 (-55.3%)
7. Dead Bedroom Dating: 255

Site Changes in 2023

Sidebar

A list of authors was added to the sidebar.

Appearance

The banner image displays a collection of 7 old playing cards, all Jack of diamonds. In early July, I created 4 sets of images to be changed every season and started using them that month.

These 4 banner images are shown below.

Winter (January — March)

Spring (April — June)

Summer (July — September)

Autumn (October — December)

Categories

Categories remain the same as last year, although a few new categories have been added, including Altruism, Antinomianism, Positivism / Scientism, Sigma Frame Performance Reports, Theme Summaries, and W!tchcr@ft. Some older posts have had their categorizations updated.

New Pages

Readers may not have noticed, but this year I've added 2 new pages located in the drop-down menus in the Header.

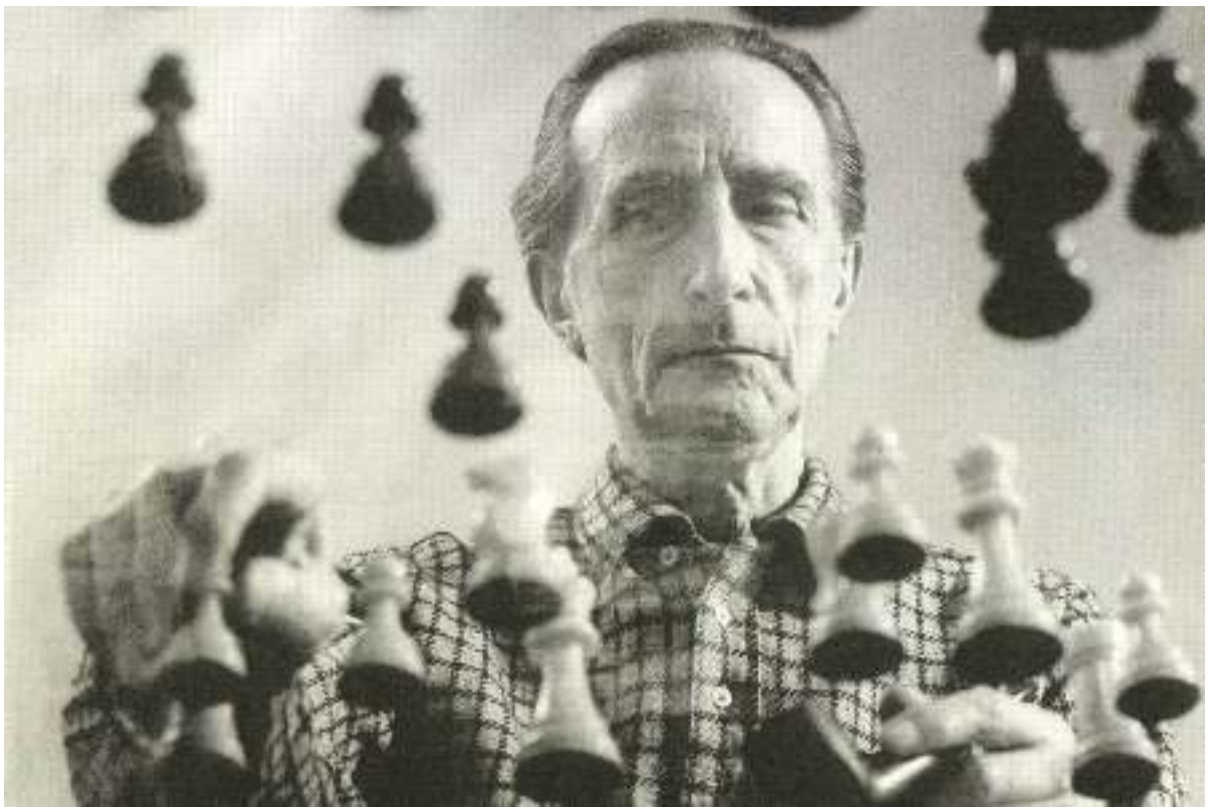
- Σ Frame: The Purity Movement (2023/7/12)
- Σ Frame: Finding a Good Church? (2023/9/29)

Content

Projects

There are four long running projects that have become a regular staple on Σ Frame. These continued to be developed in many posts.

1. Archetypes, especially Headship and the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy.
2. Courtship Models
3. Discipline in Marriage
4. Masculine Authority and Dominion



Themes

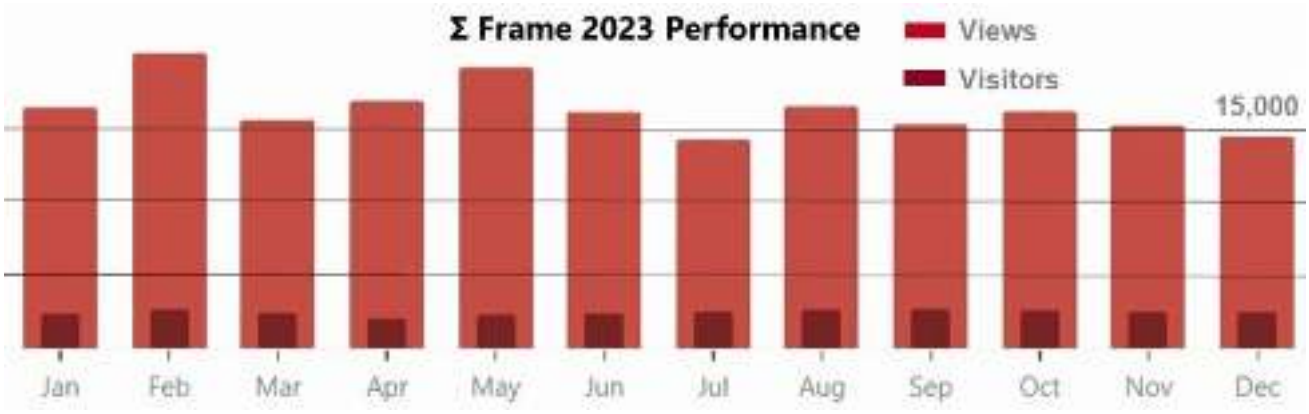
The writing projects in 2023 were arranged in monthly themes, as has been done since 2020. The themes for 2023 were as follows.

1. January — Consolidating Masculinity
2. February — The Snares of Sin
3. March — Glory
4. April — Headship
5. May — Wives and Mothers
6. May 29 – June 25 — Sacramental Marriage*
7. June 26 – July 9 — Honoring Fathers*
8. July 10 – August 15 — Cultural Demise
9. August 16 – 31 — Chemistry (Testosterone)
10. September – October — IOIs and Vetting
11. November – December — The W!tchy War on Masculinity

 Sacramental Marriage and Honoring Fathers were intended to be 2 mini-themes for the month of June, but it ran over schedule due to the complexity of the former topic and other topics that arose from the discussions.*
 The W!tchy War on Masculinity is actually a combination of three interrelated themes that were pieced together into a collage of writings that are focused on the impact on men.*

1. Gynocentric man bashing
2. Modernity / Scientism / Positivism
3. The Jezebel Spirit / W!tchcr@ft

February and May had the most popular themes.



Readers are invited to go to the sidebar and find “Posts by Month” to read up on anything you’re particularly interested in.

Numbers of Posts, Words, Comments, and Likes

Year	Total posts	Total words	Average words per post	Total comments	Average comments per post	Total likes	Average likes per post
2007	2	2,415	1,208	11	5.5	1	0.5
2008	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
2009	29	55,907	1,928	157	5.4	3	0.1
2010	13	29,762	2,289	81	6.2	1	0.1
2011	5	5,781	1,156	15	3.0	1	0.2
2012	1	161	161	3	3.0	0	0
2013	2	2,095	1,048	7	3.5	0	0
2014	6	6,225	1,038	23	3.8	6	1.0
2015	12	20,502	1,709	48	4.0	3	0.3
2016	5	8,683	1,737	23	4.6	1	0.2
2017	33	56,723	1,719	417	12.6	66	2.0
2018	91	164,752	1,811	1,310	14.4	351	3.9
2019	79	142,141	1,799	932	11.8	301	3.8
2020	169	240,027	1,420	3,978	23.5	437	2.6
2021	164	368,051	2,244	12,272	74.8	440	2.7
2022	182	323,553	1,778	9,921	54.5	623	3.4
2023	212	311,881	1,471	6,774	32.0	518	2.4
Sum*	1,005	1,738,659	1,730	35,972	35.8	2,752	2.7

 Some older posts have more likes and comments than what was reported in the 2022 performance report.*

 5 posts from 2017 have been mysteriously removed from WordPress. I will try to track down which posts have disappeared and attempt to replace them.* (See update below.)

 As of June 1, 2023, Scott’s posts (a total of 24) have been unpublished by his request (9 from 2020, 15 from 2021). These posts are not included in the 2023 statistics.*

 Some figures are reported differently between the WordPress dashboard and the mobile app. Neither do these figures match manual calculations. Not sure why. Best estimates are shown.*

Update: The earlier Performance Reports (and my own memory) say that there were 38 posts in 2017. I dug into my old files to figure out what happened, and to see if there were in fact some posts that went missing. I did not find any writings missing, but I did find that I published 5 pages (not posts) in 2017. I believe these pages were added to the list. That is, I made a mistake somewhere in counting all publications for that year as posts. It is interesting that I first doubted the veracity of WordPress before admitting the possibility that I might have made a mistake. Such is the reliability of our institutions these days.

Traffic Statistics

Year	Number of visitors	Total views	Average views per day	Average views per month	Average views per visitor	Average views per post
2017	1,089	4,425	48	369	4.06	134.1
2018	15,075	42,128	115	3,511	2.79	462.9
2019	28,044	68,636	188	5,720	2.45	868.8
2020	56,715	161,632	442	13,469	2.85	908.0
2021	37,926	245,904	676	20,492	6.48	1,373.8
2022	28,232	209,227	573	17,436	7.41	1,149.6
2023	29,445	195,182	536	16,265	6.63	920.3
All Time	196,515	927,194	368	12,362	4.72	923

 Traffic statistics begin after moving to WordPress on 2017/9/27.*

 The outstanding performance in 2020-2022 is explained here.*

Based on several years of statistics coupled with my observations, my overall impression is that Σ Frame has about 200 very regular (daily) readers, around 2,500 regular monthly visitors, and roughly 25 regular commenters.

The number of views in 2023, by the posts' author

1. Jack*: 106,291 views (+0.5%)
2. Thedeti: 4,084 views (-23.8%)
3. Red Pill Apostle: 3,840 views (-40.3%)
4. NovaSeeker: 1,510 views (-40.8%)
5. Lexet: 1,439 views (-35.0%)
6. Arch Angel: 810 views
7. Caterpillar345: 182 views

 Guest posts are listed under Jack's name.*

The Most Views in One Day (2023)

February 15, 2023: 1,051 views

The Most Views in One Day (all-time)

February 18, 2021: 1,882 views

Most popular day and hour

Tuesday (17% of views); 0:00 GMT, 10:00 am EST, 10:00 pm Taiwan (6% of views).

Periods of High Activity in 2023

January 24-26, 2023 received an average of 180.3 visitors and 798.3 views per day due to activity on 3 consecutive posts.

- Expectations (for LTRs) (2023/1/20)
- SMP Paradigms Compared (2023/1/23)
- A Response to GrifterShifter's Comments (2023/1/25)

February 14-17, 2023 received an average of 201.3 visitors and 949.3 views per day due to activity on 4 consecutive posts.

- (Red Pill Apostle): Why are attractive women more dangerous to beta men than their less attractive friends? (2023/2/13)
- The Disappointments of Transactional Relationships (2023/2/14)
- The D@mning Power of Humility (2023/2/15)
- P0rn is Faux Validation (2023/2/17)

April 26-28, 2023 received an average of 154.3 visitors and 773.7 views per day due to continuing activity on 4 non-consecutive posts.

- Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21)
- The Captain and First Mate Analogy (2023/4/24)
- (Red Pill Apostle): Do you have a Communist Marriage? (2023/4/26)
- Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28)

May 1-3, 2023 received an average of 156 visitors and 873.7 views per day due to continuing activity on 5 non-consecutive posts.

- Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21)

- Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28)
- Woman, go ask your husband to explain it to you! (2023/4/30)
- On Choosing a Wife Wisely (2023/5/1)
- Strong Independent Women (2023/5/3)

May 30-31, 2023 received an average of 168.5 visitors and 783 views per day due to activity on 3 consecutive posts.

- (Thedeti): An open letter to Christian Wives (2023/5/27)
- Cathodoxy's Sacramental Marriage Construct (2023/5/29)
- Regulations vs. Reality (2023/5/30)

June 5-9, 2023 received an average of 171 visitors and 813.8 views per day due to activity on 5 consecutive posts.

- Church shouldn't be an Elite Social Club for the Married (2023/6/2)
- Are Common-Law Marriages the most Biblical? (2023/6/3)
- Bridal Charades (2023/6/4)
- Divided We Fall (2023/6/6)
- The Peaceful Unity Marriage Model (2023/6/7)

October 4-5, 2023 received an average of 176 visitors and 880.5 views per day due to activity on 3 consecutive posts.

- Is Sex a Necessary part of Vetting? (2023/10/2)
- The Ever Present Fear of a Dead Bedroom (2023/10/3)
- The 1,000 C0ck Stare (2023/10/5)

Popular Content

The top 5 most popular Categories

This year shows a remarkable turnover from the previous year. Relationships (previously number 1) dropped to number 9. Psychology dropped to number 7, while Male Power dropped off the report entirely. (Yeah, what's that?)

The top 5 most popular categories for 2023 were…

1. Fundamental Frame: 1,391 views (+59.0%)
2. Self-Concept: 1,318 views (+54.0%)
3. Counterfeit / False Paradigms: 1,239 views
4. Holding Frame: 1,204 views
5. Discerning Lies and Deception: 1,158 views

Last year, the decreased interest in Discernment / Wisdom concerned me, but this general subject has made a strong comeback in terms of Frame, self-concept, and the discernment of deception, falsities, and lies. This is fantastic news!

The yearly shifts in these categories indicate the following.

- In 2020, men were still focused on game strategies, relationships, and vetting.
- In 2021, men were backing away from the tortuous SMP and were placing more attention on improving themselves.
- In 2022, men were gaining a more thorough understanding of themselves, trying to piece themselves together and salvage what they could from their relationships.
- In 2023, men were focused on honing their discernment of the reality on the ground and developing wisdom by sifting through the truth.

An employee of Shefa Yamim diamond exploration company sifts through rocks in search of precious stones at the firm's laboratory in Acre, northern Israel (2012/5/21). Inspired by the words of a revered rabbi who prophesised that precious stones were divinely buried in the area, the firm has been mining for about a decade along the steep hills and lush valleys that surround the city of Haifa.
Source: Daily Mail: Where faith meets fact: Diamond firm which followed rabbi's prediction about buried treasures is 'close to success' …after 10-year hunt (2012/5/30)

The top 5 most popular Pages (2023)

1. What is Frame?: 1,204 views
2. Discipline in Marriage: 451 views
3. About: 232 views
4. What is a Sigma Male?: 221 views
5. Courtship Models: 136 views

The top 5 most popular Pages (all-time)

1. What is a Sigma Male?: 7,503 views
2. Discipline in Marriage: 7,003 views
3. What is Frame?: 4,739 views
4. About: 2,810 views
5. What is the Red Pill?: 2,213 views

The top 5 most popular Posts (2023)

1. Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21): 1,989 views
2. The Lie of Romantic Love (2023/2/3): 1,056 views
3. P0rn is Faux Validation (2023/2/17): 989 views
4. Strong Independent Women (2023/5/3): 890 views

5. The Battle Within (2023/4/10): 887 views

The top 5 most popular Posts (all-time)

1. What To Do When A Girl Tries To Make You Jealous (2018/4/22): 67,172 views
2. List of Slut Tells (2017/10/15): 7,653 views
3. 16 Qualities of an Irresistible Woman (2017/12/1): 5,996 views
4. List of Female IOI's (2020/3/30): 5,184 views
5. 50 Shades of Discipline in Marriage (2017/11/25): 4,027 views

The last 2 posts switched places since the previous year, indicating that men are more concerned about reading women accurately than about improving / saving their marriages.

The top 10 most commented Posts (2023)

1. Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21): 248 comments
2. How P0rn and Premarital Sex affects one's view of Women (2023/2/20): 106 comments
3. The Battle Within (2023/4/10): 103 comments
4. The Lie of Romantic Love (2023/2/3): 102 comments
5. The Next Step (2023/8/4): 101 comments
6. Strong Independent Women (2023/5/3): 96 comments
7. Men's Altruistic Idealism in an Age of Apostasy (2023/7/28): 95 comments
8. Disrespecting the Lord (2023/3/3): 88 comments
9. Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT "Found" by Chance (2023/10/9): 84 comments
10. The Peaceful Unity Marriage Model (2023/6/7): 82 comments

The top 10 most commented Posts (all-time)

One of these posts appeared this year (number 4).

1. (NovaSeeker): The Lopsided Liberalized Mating Market (2021/2/17): 388 comments
2. Secrets (2021/8/18): 284 comments
3. Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy (2021/6/23): 281 comments
4. Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21): 248 comments
5. The Boring Loyal Dude (2022/5/11): 223 comments
6. The Status Signaling Narrative (2022/3/21): 223 comments
7. Nita Marie's threesome with her second husband and God (2022/10/5): 213 comments
8. (NovaSeeker): The Centrality of Sex in Western Culture (2021/2/8): 209 comments
9. (NovaSeeker, Jack): Is Patriarchy for Deplorables? (2021/5/31): 205 comments
10. Artisanal Toad on Women's Agency (2022/11/14): 199 comments

The top downloads

The number of PDF downloads has increased substantially. Thus, downloads exceeding 500/year will now be added to the Performance Report.

The top downloads in 2023 are as follows.

1. Cass R. Sunstein (2002), "The Law of Group Polarization", Journal of Political Philosophy 10(2):175-195. (911 downloads)
2. Suzanne Verdeber (2017), "BOOK REVIEW Kyle Harper, From Shame to Sin: The Christian Transformation of Sexual Morality in Late Antiquity" (Cambridge Mass.: Harvard University Press, 2013), ISBN: 978-0674660014. (907 downloads)

Seeing how this can be an effective means of transferring information, in the future, I will post more content as downloadable files.

Searches

Top search engine terms leading to Σ Frame

In past years, the majority of search terms included some variant of "sigma male", "sigmaframe", "sigma frame blog", etc. (which is to be expected), and the words, "wife", "discipline", and especially some variant of "jealous". In 2022, the frequency of "sigma" terms decreased significantly, while "wife", "discipline", and "marriage" completely disappeared and were replaced by "IOI" and "MGTOW", which did not appear in 2023. (Apparently the MGTOW moniker is fading out of common usage, even while the movement is stronger than ever.)

In 2023…

1. The term “sigma” returned but always as some variant of “sigma frame”.
2. There were a large number of p0rn related search terms. Since I do not post this type of content and vulgar words are c0rnw@llәd, I take this to be an act of God that some men are searching for p0rn and are finding the Σ Frame blog instead. Praise the Lord!
3. Titles of specific posts.
4. There were 11 search terms in Russian, a large increase from 2022.

добро пожаловать в сигму фрейм друзья!

Judging by the titles (number 3), the most searched for posts include these, in this order.

1. Are you a man or a mushroom? (2020/8/17)
2. The Boring Loyal Dude (2022/5/11)
3. Why Do Men Need Visions and Dreams? (2018/5/15)
4. What To Do When A Girl Tries To Make You Jealous (2018/4/22)
5. (NovaSeeker) The Slow Train Wreck — a Cautionary Tale (2021/1/18)

Funny or Odd search terms which have led people to Σ Frame in 2023

1. why do some wives love to be disciplined
2. ell!0t r0dgәr in afterlife
3. janitor intellectual
4. honey wells

Referrals

The top 5 incoming referrers from social media, search engines, and readers

1. Google Search: 12,763 (-15.2%)
2. SynLogos (Based Aggregator): 4,696 (+25.3%)
3. WordPress Reader: 1,237 (-21.9%)
4. Google Mail: 820 (+1.4%)

5. Bing: 757 (-34.1%)

The immense popularity of Google is slowly fading, and is being superceded by a plethora of other search engines, most notably Yandex, a Russian search engine that is devoid of W0kery.

The top 10 incoming referrers (other than search engines and readers)

Compared to the previous year, Catacomb Resident, The Futurist, and Patriactionary have been superseded by Derek L. Ramsey, Cane Caldo, and Dalrock. Figures in parentheses indicate the change from the previous year.

1. Christianity and Masculinity (Deep Strength): 2,112 (-33.6%)
2. Adam Piggott: 817 (-56.3%)
3. Derek L. Ramsey: 432 (+92.6%)
4. Laughing at Feminism (Sharkly): 254 (-54.3%)
5. Spawny's Space (Farm Boy, Cill, Cheque'd Out, et al.): 241 (-61.7%)
6. To Reclaim Normality (Feeriker): 170 (+3.7%)
7. Okrahead: 160 (+92.8%)
8. Gunner Q2 / Gunner Q3: 84 (-69.9%)
9. Cane Caldo: 48 (+20.0%)
10. Dalrock: 45 (+25.0%)

It is ironic that Derek is the #3 referrer since he is actively opposed to the Σ Frame blog. I also find it interesting that Σ Frame is receiving ever more referrals from Cane Caldo and Dalrock, even though they stopped posting 4 and 3 years ago, respectively. I interpret this as a strong indication that people are still reading old Christian Manosphere blogs, perhaps even more than last year.

The top 10 blogs receiving the most traffic from Σ Frame

Overall, outclicks have decreased precipitously. Compared to the previous years' top 10 list, Adam Piggott, Wintery Knight, Vox Day, and Snapper TRX have been replaced by Hawaiian Libertarian, Gunner Q2 / Gunner Q3, Dalrock, and Cornerstone, NOT due to more clicks to the latter group, but by far fewer clicks to the former. Figures in parentheses indicate the change from the previous year.

1. Spawny's Space: 1,952 (-36.8%)
2. Christianity and Masculinity (Deep Strength): 1,234 (-38.9%)
3. The Other McCain: 1,046 (-30.8%)
4. Wh0res and Ale: 926 (-38.5%)
5. Hawaiian Libertarian: 885 (-11.7%)
6. Gunner Q2 / Gunner Q3: 664 and 133 respectively, totaling 797 (-55.0%)
7. Dalrock: 746 (-18.9%)
8. The Transformed Wife: 714 (-52.2%)
9. Cornerstone: 661 (-30.2%)
10. Biblical Gender Roles: 634 (-46.6%)

It is remarkable that more readers prefer to click on Hawaiian Libertarian, Gunner Q2 / Gunner Q3, Dalrock, and Cornerstone, rather than Adam Piggott, Wintery Knight, Vox Day, and Snapper TRX. Again, we see readers clicking on Manosphere sites long shuttered, rather than some of the few remaining Based / Christian Manosphere / Red Pill blogs that continue to post on a regular basis anymore.

Readers are Hangry Hippo for Classic Manosphere content!

I believe this is because ever since the Red Pill went mainstream over the past 2 years, it has become sensationalized and its Red Pill philosophical purity has become severely compromised. It appears that the most effective way to destroy the Red Pill is to make it mainstream muddled murky milquetoast. I would attribute the apparently weakened associations of the most noteworthy Manosphere / Red Pill bloggers to this cause as well.

Note to Web Experts

Several website analytics have reported that the Σ Frame blog has SEO issues. I did some research on what this might be, but I have not found what the specific issues are. If anyone is knowledgeable about this and is willing to offer advice, please email me at sigmaframe@protonmail.com.

Related

- Σ Frame: 2017 Σ Frame Performance Report (2018/1/3)
- Σ Frame: 2018 Σ Frame Performance Report (2019/1/1)
- Σ Frame: 2019 Σ Frame Performance Report (2020/1/4)
- Σ Frame: 2020 Σ Frame Performance Report (2021/1/1)
- Σ Frame: 2021 Σ Frame Performance Report (2022/1/5)
- Σ Frame: 2022 Σ Frame Performance Report (2023/1/9)

Signs of Demise?

Jack · 3 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

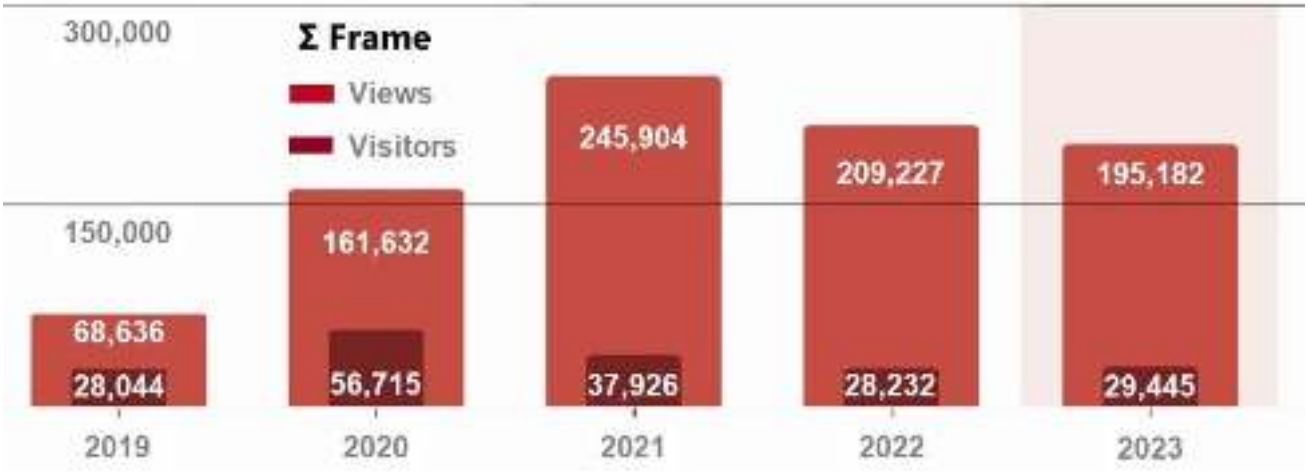
Σ Frame survives the purge.

Readership: Anyone interested
Length: 1,150 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Introduction

Derek L. Ramsey wrote a post, Is the Sigma Frame Blog in Decline? (2023/5/18), in which he questioned whether the Σ Frame blog has seen its' better days. I have reviewed his analysis and considered some possibilities for the changes in performance.

Here is the data in question, followed by a bit of relevant history and a few explanations.



Movements in the Manosphere

1. Dalrock closed shop on January 24, 2020. Many of his regular readers began frequenting Σ Frame instead.

2. Scott joined the authors panel in February 2020. His posts were very popular and he also brought many new readers.

3. With the C0vid lockdowns in effect in 2020-2021, many people found more time to browse the internet.

4. NovaSeeker joined the authors panel in late 2020. He wrote one post every week from December 2020 until June 2021 when he suddenly withdrew from engaging with the Manosphere. His posts, totaling 37 in number, were exceedingly popular and attracted many views during that time. His posts have received over 28,000 views in total as of the end of 2023. That averages out to about 750 views per post.

Factors 1-4 explain the meteoric doubling of visitors in 2020 and the increased popularity of the blog in 2021.

5. Red Pill content in video format (appearing on YouTube, etc.) took off around 2020-2021 during the C0vid lockdowns. Since then, there has been more and more Manosphere / Red Pill content being produced and posted in video format, and younger men generally prefer that medium. It is presumed that this monumental shift in media presentation has siphoned viewership and reader engagement away from Σ Frame.

6. By July, 2021, readers were missing NovaSeeker. Readers who only came to read his posts gradually slipped away.

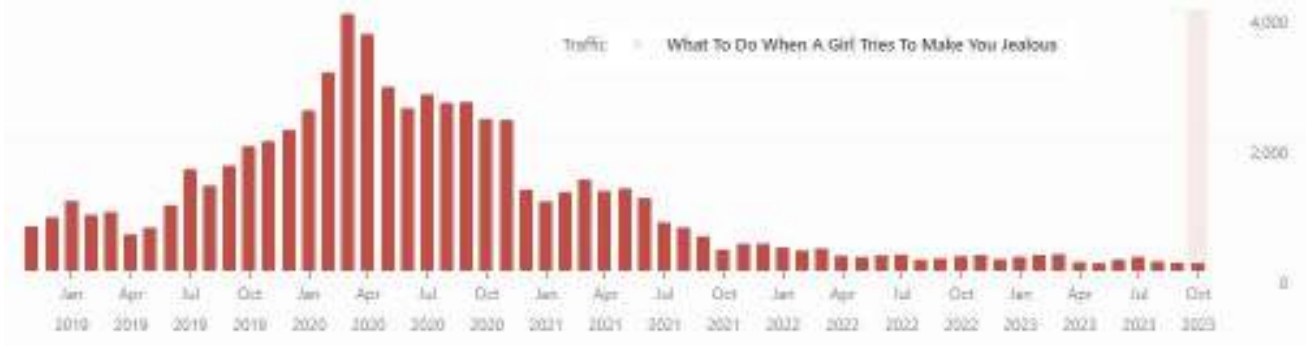
7. Wintery Knight once included Σ Frame on the sidebar links and was one of the top referrers for a few years, but the link was removed in late 2021 for undisclosed reasons.

8. In early June, 2023, Scott requested for all his posts to be unpublished.

Factors 5-8 explain the attrition of readers in 2021-2022, and some in 2023.

Internet Trends

9. I published an abridged version of What To Do When A Girl Tries To Make You Jealous (2018/4/22) on Return of Kings. The full version of this post on Σ Frame is by far the most popular post. It received thousands of views per month between early 2019 and June 2021, and I always assumed it was through referrals from Return of Kings, even though it did not show up at all as a referrer in the WordPress statistics reports. (I suspect Roosh may have blocked tracking on his site.) This post peaked in March 2020 with 3,942 total views that month.



As seen in the bargraph above, there was a very sharp decline in the number of views (about half) in December 2020, and there was another abrupt and extended reduction beginning in July 2021.

Return of Kings stopped publishing new articles on October 1, 2018, but articles already published continued to be accessible until the entire site was closed down on December 21, 2022. So this does not explain the sudden reduction in views of this post.

I have no explanation for the sudden drop offs, but I suspect that G00gle is somehow responsible.

10. The descriptive and most popular page (not post) on Σ Frame, What is a Sigma Male?, received hundreds of views per month from December 2019 to June 2021, peaking at 613 views in April 2020.

There was an abrupt reduction of views in May 2020 and again in December 2020, the latter coinciding with the post discussed above. Again, I have no explanation for the sudden drop offs, but I suspect that G00gle is somehow responsible.

"Sigma Male" suddenly appeared trending on the internet in January 2021, peaked in late June 2021, and peaked again during the last week of 2022. It still remains a popular search term.

It is unknown why the views on this Σ Frame page decreased while the wider interest increased. I had expected to see some correlation between the popularity of this term on the blog and on the internet, but the data shows that "Sigma Male" only became a popular internet search term after the views on this blog page faded away. Only the peaks in June 2021 correspond. Apparently, this page played a small part in feeding the widespread interest, which in turn extended the increased views much longer until around April 2023.

Active Persecution

11. In September, 2021, Jack had a row with ProfessorGBFM over his poorly written, confusing, and voluminous comments. In response, he began slandering the Σ Frame blog by drawing an association of the blog with various perversions. He continued to trash talk the blog until mid 2023.

12. In early 2023, Derek Ramsey removed Σ Frame from the list of links on his blog's sidebar and since then he has made a game of derailing the discussions at Σ Frame. In spite of this shade, his blog was the third largest referrer in 2023.

13. Just when it appears that the Red Pill has won the cultural war despite rabid demonization, the U.S. federal gubmint and NGOs are actively funding the shunting of internet traffic away from the Manosphere. This new development kicked in on 2023/12/18, so the longitudinal effects of this remain to be seen.

In this video, Rollo and friends go over this new development.

The Rational Male Clips: Why The MANOSPHERE Is Being TARGETED By The Feds! (2023/12/18) Length: 24:55

14. Other notorious players, including FBI agents*, are infiltrating and undermining the 'sphere, and thereby damaging its overall reputation.

* H/T: Info

Conclusions

If the views for the post and the page on Σ Frame (mentioned above) are subtracted from the total views, then the average number of views for 2021-2022 is about 190,000 per year. This figure is right on par with the number of views for 2023 (195,182).

The 2023 Σ Frame Performance Report (2024/1/2) revealed that there has been a large turnover in readership. Although the number of visitors in 2023 is roughly half of what it was in 2020, 2023 had 4.12% more visitors than in 2022. Furthermore, the views in 2023 surpassed that of 2020 in late October, and surpassed the number of visitors in 2022 at the end of the year.

Putting all this together, it may explain why Σ Frame appeared more popular during 2021-2022. Overall, I'd say the intrinsic popularity of the blog has remained steady since 2019 with slight growth. Rather amazing IMO, considering all these factors.

We'll see how it goes this year.

Note to Web Experts

Several website analytics have reported that the Σ Frame blog has SEO issues. I did some research on what this might be, but I have not found what the specific issues are. If anyone is knowledgeable about this and is willing to offer advice, please email me at sigmaframe@protonmail.com.

Related

- Σ Frame: 2023 Σ Frame Performance Report (2024/1/2)

The Laws of Human Nature and Boundaries

Jack · 4 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An introduction to this month's theme.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Overview

This month, we'll take a closer look at Boundaries. I decided on this theme in late August, 2023, after a comprehensive reading of our study of Testosterone indicated that high T traits could be summarized as the regular enforcement of Boundaries. In fact, the strong vigilant enforcement of Boundaries was identified as one of the most outstanding features of Masculinity.

Boundaries are not only expressed in competitions and negotiations, but also in daily social intercourse. Sociosexual games are implemented in a diligent pursuit of a social stratagem within the context of social reciprocation. Stratagems may include (1) the employment of Game (e.g. altruism, detachment, dread, mercifulness, tit for tat, willingness to sacrifice / suffer, etc.), (2) classical / operant conditioning (punishments and rewards), and many other approaches which reinforce social dominance, self-determination, and status. In fact, this is basically what it means to implement Boundaries (for men only).

The Great Wall of Gorgan in northeastern Iran, constructed in the Sassanian era (224-651 AD) and stretching over 200 km along the border between Ancient Persia and China.

Boundaries?

My first thought in how to approach this topic was to begin with a book I read more than 20 years ago, Boundaries, by Henry Cloud and John Townsend [1].

Upon first reading, it was a good read, but it just seemed kind of random. I couldn't understand where they were getting this stuff and what the value of it was.

On the second time through the book a couple years later, I concluded it was one of those things I would understand better by and by.

More recently, I looked at this book again and thought, "Man! I was sooo Blue Pilled I couldn't even understand this!" I wonder how many readers are (or were) the same, or who saw that the theme would be Boundaries and thought this would be uninteresting.

A few Manospherians have addressed this topic in the past (see posts below under Related), but not structurally nor exhaustively. The topic of Boundaries needs to have a theoretical structure of implementation elucidated by realistic, Red Pill informed examples and/or case studies to make the applications clear and relevant, and to indicate when and why men should be taking action to draw and/or defend boundaries.

Boundaries and the Bible

Another thing I didn't understand about Boundaries is how it relates to Christianity. I knew Cloud and Townsend's book is recognized as a Christian book, but I didn't see many correlations to scripture. Now, I regard Cloud and Townsend's contributions as mystical in nature, or Noetic if you prefer.

Oscar left a comment identifying envy as "pure, naked, ugly covetousness". This made sense to me because I recalled that one of Cloud and Townsend's "Laws of Human Nature" is "The Law of Envy". I realized that I still don't understand this as well as I should, hence this theme.

Seeing how covetousness / envy is mentioned in the 10 Commandments, and comparing this to Cloud and Townsends 10 Laws of Boundaries, I wondered if there was a correlation between the 10 Commandments and the 10 Laws of Boundaries. I believe there is.

The Great Wall of China, built between the 7th century BC and the 17th century AD and spanning 21,196.18 km (13,170.70 mi) in total length.
The 10 Laws of Human Nature / Boundaries are…

1. The Law of Sowing and Reaping
2. The Law of Responsibility
3. The Law of Power
4. The Law of Respect
5. The Law of Motivation
6. The Law of Evaluation
7. The Law of Proactivity
8. The Law of Envy
9. The Law of Activity

10. The Law of Exposure

The 10 Commandments are…

1. I am the Lord thy God. Thou shalt have no other gods before me. (Exodus 20:2-3; Deuteronomy 5:6-7)
2. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image. (Exodus 20:4-6; Deuteronomy 5:8-10)
3. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. (Exodus 20:7; Deuteronomy 5:11)
4. Remember / observe the sabbath day, to keep it holy. (Exodus 20:8-11; Deuteronomy 5:12-15)
5. Honour thy father and thy mother. (Exodus 20:12; Deuteronomy 5:16)
6. Thou shalt not k!ll. (Exodus 20:13; Deuteronomy 5:17)
7. Thou shalt not commit adultery. (Exodus 20:14; Deuteronomy 5:18)
8. Thou shalt not steal. (Exodus 20:15; Deuteronomy 5:19)
9. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor. (Exodus 20:16; Deuteronomy 5:20)
10. Thou shalt not covet. (Exodus 20:17; Deuteronomy 5:21)

In addition to Boundaries being associated with Masculinity, I have found there is a strong connection between boundaries and freedom — personal (e.g. detachment, dominance, etc.), political (think of Trump's wall, or Jeremiah's wall in the OT, NOT the Berlin wall), and spiritual as described in the New Testament.

I'll go over these correlations in the posts this month.

Hadrian's Wall, originally 3.7 meters (12 feet) high, constructed by the Romans in 122 AD to guard the boundary between Brittania and Caledonia (now northern England and Scotland, respectively).

Concluding Statements

The Laws of Human Nature (as described by Cloud and Townsend) are well at work whether we are aware of them or not. Many of these Laws of Human Nature might seem very obvious to some of us, but not so much to others (as I once was). I believe that many of the problems and unnecessary sufferings that men face might be addressed by teaching men to recognize and enforce boundaries.

So this month I'll write a post about each of the 10 Laws of Human Nature / Boundaries, explain how it connects to the scriptures, and add a few Red Pill insights. There will also be several other posts (including 4 from Red Pill Apostle) that will go into more detail about specific Boundaries that men need to improve upon, and how Boundaries are to be recognized, expressed, and enforced. God willing, we'll come up with a theoretical structure that might guide men's habits of implementing boundaries. As the theme progresses, it will be our aim to discover how we can use boundaries for our benefit, and how to use human nature to our advantage rather than pummeling ourselves against it.

References

1. Cloud, H., & Townsend, J. (1992) Boundaries: When to say Yes, When to say No; to take control of your life. Grand Rapids, Michigan: Zondervan.

Related

- The Rational Male: Boundaries (2014/11/17)
- The Rational Male: Intimacy (2014/11/21)
- The Rational Male: Vulnerability (2014/11/23)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Boundaries (2015/8/6)
- Dalrock: Boundaries (2016/1/28)
- Dalrock: They're too traditional to submit to their husbands. (2019/5/24)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Laying out Boundaries (2022/10/19)
- Wintery Knight: Should Men Marry Women Who Think Relationship Boundaries Are "Emotional Abuse"? (2024/1/3)

1. The Law of Sowing and Reaping

Jack · 5 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Actions have consequences.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Actions have Consequences

The Law of Sowing and Reaping, also called The Law of Cause and Effect, states that actions have consequences. Also, inactions too.

The most obvious divine purpose of this law is that it forms a feedback loop between conscious awareness and reality that teaches us how to live.

This law naturally appeals to our sense of justice. However, the consequences of some types of actions don't show up until years later, others aren't revealed for generations, and some consequences are not easily identified with the causative actions. Because of the pause in time, people who do right are often impatient for the expected "rewards". Evil can use this situation to cause some to lose faith. OTOH, if one's whole paradigm of cause and effect is false (e.g. Covert Contracts, the Feminist Life script, YOLO, etc.), then one cannot interpret the consequences correctly, and it may take a long time and require intense suffering before they're able to wake up from their delusions.

Meanwhile, people who do wrong often don't want justice. Instead, they want grace and/or mercy. Women who have reveled in sin and/or a sordid sex life may "repent" for this reason if they think they can avert the consequences.

People can become disappointed when they feel like the consequences don't seem fitting, or are not timely enough to be of meaningful consequence, or are not exactly what they expected. Those who bear the consequences of the sins of others may grow bitter, chafe, and seek revenge if the actions and the associated effects are not quickly remedied or they find it difficult to forgive.

We see exceptions to this law when God forbears iniquities because of the transgressors ignorance. I suppose this is why some egalitarian marriages are blessed.

Case Study — Broke Bob

Sometimes, people with no boundaries interrupt this law. In this case, people don't reap what they sow because someone else steps in and reaps the consequences for them.

Broke Bob is lousy with handling finances. He doesn't make much, and he is juggling a mortgage and several loans to satisfy his lifestyle. Every time Bob overspends his budget, his mother sends him money to cover check overdrafts and/or high credit-card balances. Bob is often annoyed by his mother's control over his life, but he won't change his ways nor place any distance between himself and his mother because she always comes to his rescue whenever things get out of his hands.

When other people reap the consequences for someone else this is called "codependency".

This is not 'grace' nor 'mercy'. It is cruelty dressed up as being 'loving'. Bob's mother has effectively interrupted the law of sowing and reaping in Bob's life, thereby postponing and augmenting the consequences. As it stands, Bob can never reap the consequences of his spendthrift ways and therefore he can never have an impetus to improve his spending habits and money management skills.

Eventually, there will come a day when Bob's mother is too old or too dependent on Bob to bail him out. Bob will be totally incapable of handling this shift of responsibilities. Then Bob and his mother will both be living in the poorhouse.

When people in this mindset occasionally get a taste of the natural consequences, they jump to the conclusion that God is punishing them for abandoning their idols. This would be like Bob suddenly growing a pair and telling his mother that he no longer wanted her help. Then the next time the bank notifies him of an overdraft that he cannot pay, he gets the idea that God is punishing him for treating his mother coldly.

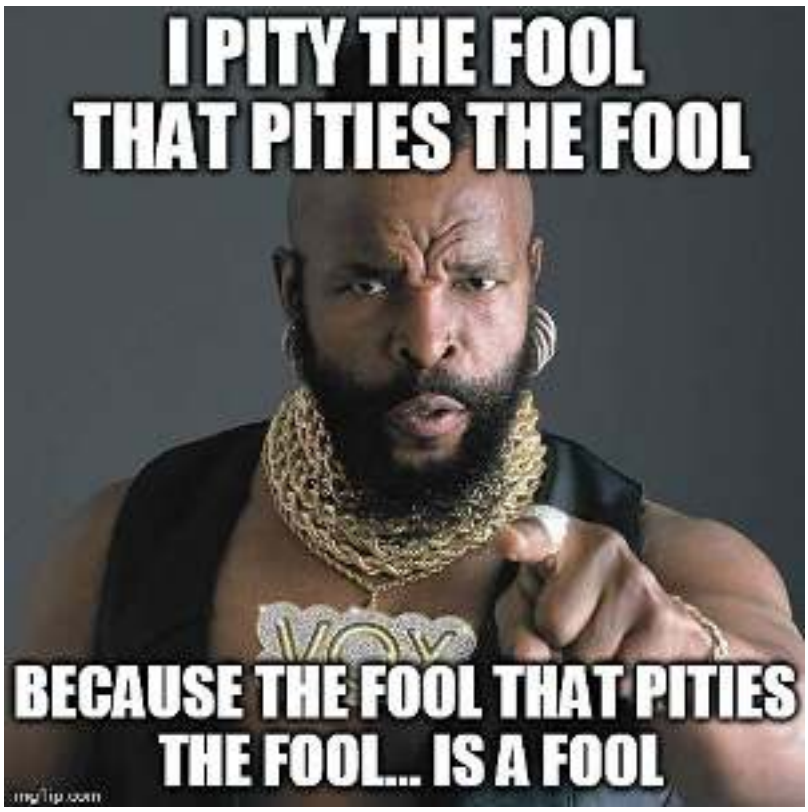
God's law on this is not punishment. It is reality. Actions have consequences.

How to Deal with a Codependent

Cloud and Townsend wrote,

> "It doesn't help just to confront the irresponsible person. A client will often say to me, "But I do confront Jack. I have tried many times to let him know what I think about his behavior and that he needs to change." In reality, my client is only nagging Jack. Jack will not feel the need to change because his behavior is not causing him any pain. Confronting an irresponsible person is not painful to him; only consequences are. If Jack is wise, confrontation might change his behavior. But people caught in destructive patterns are usually not wise. They need to suffer consequences before they change their behavior. The Bible tells us it is worthless to confront foolish people: "Do not rebuke a mocker or he will hate you; rebuke a wise man and he will love you" (Proverbs 9:8). Codependent people bring insults and pain onto themselves when they confront irresponsible people. In reality, they just need to stop interrupting the law of sowing and reaping in someone's life."

If someone in your life is sowing anger, selfishness, and abuse at you, are you setting boundaries against it? Or do you think you must bear the sins of others indefinitely and with no purpose nor recourse of action? Are they getting away with not reaping (or paying the consequences for) what he/she sowed? Could it be up to you to make sure those consequences are delivered appropriately?



Correlation to the 10 Commandments

The Law of Sowing and Reaping corresponds with the 1st Commandment.

> "I am the Lord thy God. Thou shalt have no other gods before me."
>
> Exodus 20:2-3; Deuteronomy 5:6-7 (NKJV)

When we try to take responsibility for other's mistakes, or shield them from the natural consequences of their actions, we are playing savior. Worse, we interfere with and postpone God's intervention in using those consequences to correct, discipline, and teach them.

Correlations to the New Testament

The apostle Paul tells us the Law of Sowing and Reaping in his letter to the Galatians.

> [7] Do not be deceived, God is not mocked; for whatever a man sows, that he will also reap. [8] For he who sows to his flesh will of the flesh reap corruption, but he who sows to the Spirit will of the Spirit reap everlasting life.
>
> Galatians 6:7-8 (NKJV)

The Red Pill Lens

Not all, but much of Chivalry and White Knighting behavior is an attempt to shield women from the natural consequences of their childish behaviors and poor decisions.

The widespread appeal for accepting an overreliance on Big Gubmint is essentially based on the idea of removing the consequences of foolish living by offloading the responsibilities thereof to Uncle Sam. Women would rather rely on Big Govnah than on a man, because the government will fork over the dole as a matter of bureaucratic precedent, and women will never have to be held accountable or take responsibility for their lives.

Some previous posts describing more applications of The Law of Sowing and Reaping are listed below. Readers are welcome to suggest other applications.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Wages of Sin are Paid in Marriage (2022/10/15)
- Σ Frame: How P0rn and Premarital Sex affects one's view of Women (2023/2/20)
- Σ Frame: The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10)
- Σ Frame: Misplaced Motherhood (2023/5/22)
- Σ Frame: Dealing with the Mother-in-Law Curse (2023/5/24)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): An open letter to Christian Wives (2023/5/27)
- Spawny's Space (Jack): Cookies and Milk are for Obedient Sons and Daughters (2023/10/9)
- Σ Frame: Those Old Notions of Equality (2023/12/25)

70 × 7

Jack · 6 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

God's love and grace is unlimited. Man's is not.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 500 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes + 2 antacid tablets

This post will explore one unfortunately all too common example of The Law of Sowing and Reaping — the bitter consequences of sin in marriage.

Under Holding Out (2022/12/2), StudentRay57 wrote,

> "I don't want you the way you want to be wanted." Wreched Jezebel. I struggle in my prayers, she despitefully uses me and yet I must forgive 7 × 70. I choose the Narrow Way."

The 7 × 70 figure comes from Matthew 18:21-22.

> [21] Then Peter came to Him and said, "Lord, how often shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? Up to seven times?"
> [22] Jesus said to him, "I do not say to you, up to seven times, but up to seventy times seven.
>
> Matthew 18:21-22 (NKJV)

Would Jesus' answer have been any different if Peter was asking about his wife?

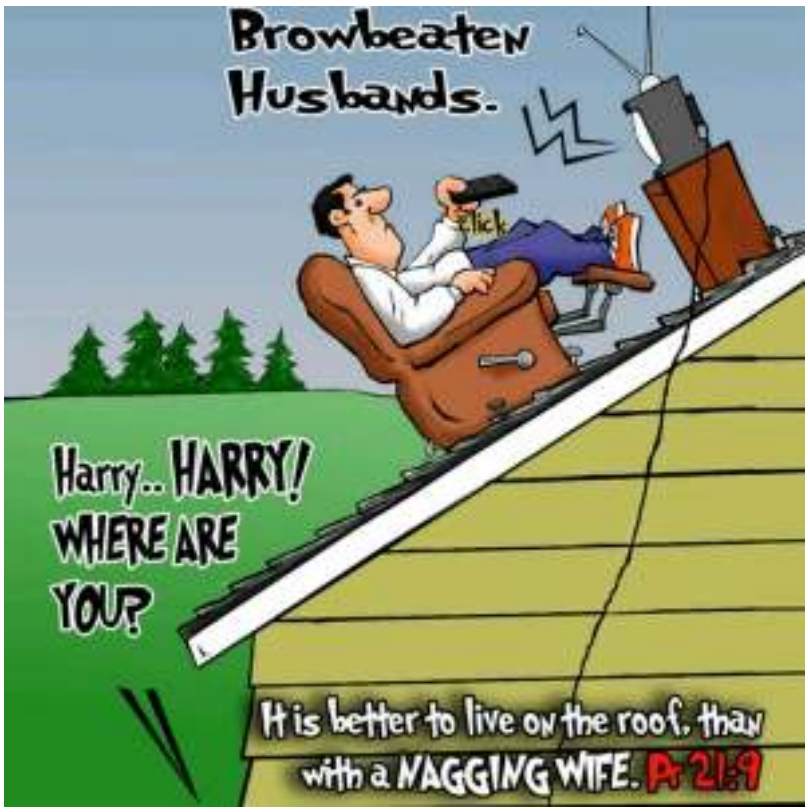
How literally should we take the words of Christ here?

70 × 7 = 490

If transgressions happen every other day, that will last about 2 years, 8 months, and 10 days. That's about the length of the Honeymoon phase after marriage.

If transgressions happen every 5.2 days (or about once every week), that will last about 7 years, which is the point at which most divorces occur.

These calculations could be taken in jest, but if not, could it be that these crumblings in relationship quality are precisely because even (man's) forgiveness has a limit?



Not to be legalistic, but realistic. Are you able to pay the cost of forgiving others? How many times can you forgive a person you're married to before you lose all trust? At what point does it become clear that there will never be any repentance and that you'll just be an ignominious punching bag for as long as the contemptuous cohabitation AKA "marriage" continues?

It is natural for Men grieve when their wives divorce them. But on a more positive note, maybe these wayward wives are inadvertently doing their husbands a huge favor by releasing him from the burdens of perpetual forgiveness with never a favorable response, and allowing him to reclaim the remainder of his life for a more noble cause other than to be a bitter cat lady's ATM litterbox for the next 50+ years.

> Better to dwell in a corner of a housetop,
> Than in a house shared with a contentious woman.
>
> Proverbs 21:9 (NKJV)

The same sentiment also appears in Proverbs 21:19, Proverbs 25:24, and Proverbs 27:15. That's 4 times, just in case you missed one! And don't forget the Sirach. Take an antacid before you read.

Give her another 10 just to go the extra mile (Matthew 5:41) and make it an even 500 just for old time's sake. After that, why not let her have what her actions deserve — the hell that she's been working towards for years, and the wrath she has heaped up for herself?

But wait… wouldn't it be more "responsible" to nip it in the bud? So where does a man draw the line?

Related

- Σ Frame: Forgiveness (2020/11/22)
- Σ Frame: Are you able to pay the cost of forgiving others? (2022/4/9)
- Σ Frame: Move on and don't worry about it! (2022/4/11)
- Σ Frame (Anonymous): Brides are Subject to Vetting (2023/10/23)

2. The Law of Responsibility

Jack · 8 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Gestures of Love must be appropriate and excellent.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

The Law of Responsibility

The Law of Responsibility is closely linked to the Law of Sowing and Reaping, but it goes one step further in stating that one owns (or should own) the consequences of one's actions. This means that we must discern which actions would be either helpful or harmful to others, knowing that what comes around, goes around. This comes down to identifying whether a certain action has the right outcome and using this feedback to adjust and improve one's interactions with others. For example, when a helping hand is offered, is it received with thankfulness as an act of love and grace, or is it simply enabling bad behavior? When rebuke or discipline is administered, does the person shape up (perhaps after a period of time), or do they dig in their heels and/or rebel? Either way, we are responsible for the outcome.

The Grand Enemy of The Law of Responsibility is Legalism — the idea that doing what one believes to be the right thing in principle (which actually may not be very appropriate in reality) is what it means to be obedient to God and/or righteous, and that this should always lead to the right outcome. The other more prevalent Enemy is the Feeel Goods — believing that riding the high will keep one high.

Cloud and Townsend gave exemplary statements of legalism and hedonism, and added a third view — false guilt.

> "Many times, when people hear a talk on boundaries and taking responsibility for their own lives, they say, "That's so self-centered." "We should love one another and deny ourselves." Or, they actually misinterpret the teaching as an excuse to be selfish and self-centered. Or, they feel "guilty" or used when they do someone a favor. These are unbiblical views of responsibility."

Proverbs 14:12-14 addresses the first two extremes (verses 12 and 13 respectively). Verse 14 implies that the heart must remain true and be grounded in the ever present reality of the moment in order to stay on top of things.

> [12] There is a way that seems right to a man,
> But its end is the way of death.
> [13] Even in laughter the heart may sorrow,
> And the end of mirth may be grief.
> [14] The backslider in heart will be filled with his own ways,
> But a good man will be satisfied from above.
>
> Proverbs 14:12-14 (NKJV)

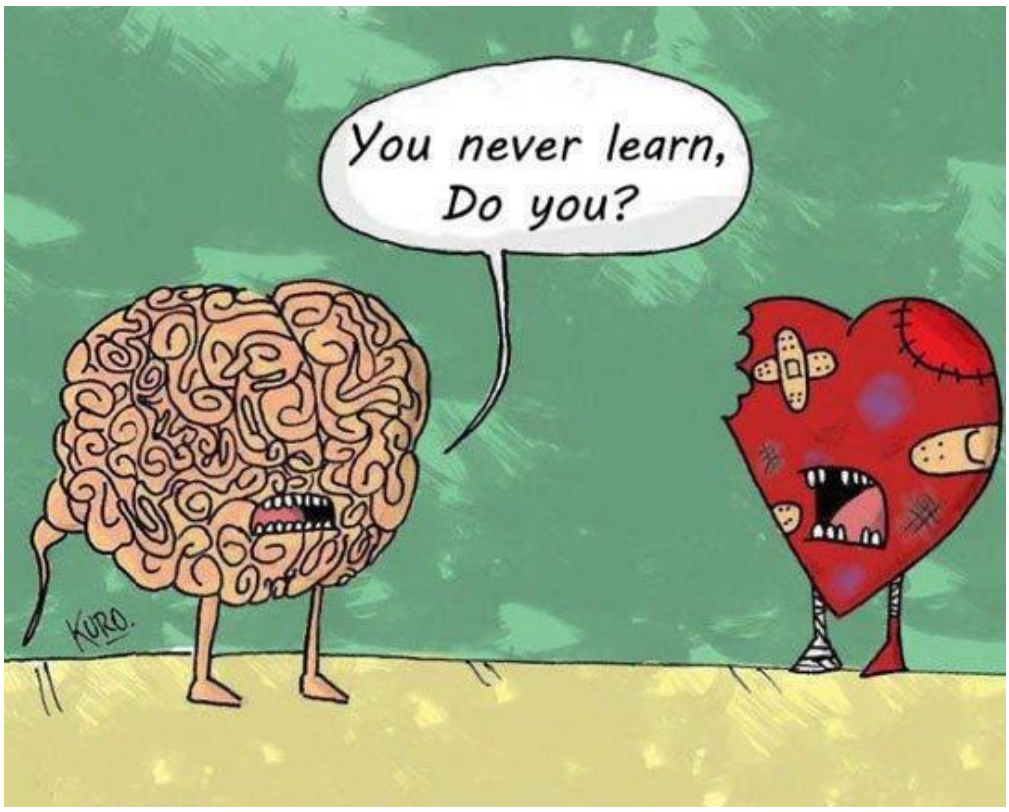
Moreover, legalism is living in one's head, rather than living life from the heart. Whereas chasing the Feeel Goods is living in the flesh, rather than in the heart / spirit. Remember the parable of the Prodigal Son? People seldom realize how much their head bullies their heart after it gets beat up from living in the flesh. Even when they are aware of this, they only sense the inner war between the two, but cannot understand that both need to be brought under subjection to the Lordship of Christ.



The Law of Responsibility is the Law of Love

Cloud and Townsend identify Christian Love as acting responsibly towards others.*

> "The Law of Responsibility includes loving others. The commandment to love is the entire law for Christians (Galatians 5:13-14). Jesus calls it "my" commandment, "Love each other as I have loved you" (John 15:12). Anytime you are not loving others, you are not taking full responsibility for yourself; you have disowned your heart."

> "Problems arise when boundaries of responsibility are confused. We are to love one another, not be one another. I can't feel your feelings for you. I can't think for you. I can't behave for you. I can't work through the disappointment that limits bring for you. In short, I can't grow for you; only you can. Likewise, you can't grow for me. The biblical mandate for our own personal growth is "Continue to work out your salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God who works in you to will and to act according to his good purpose" (Philippians 2:12-13). You are responsible for yourself I am responsible for myself.
>
> An additional theme in the Bible says that we are to treat others the way we would want to be treated. If we were down and out, helpless and without hope, we would certainly want help and provision. This is a very important side of being responsible "to."
>
> Another aspect of being responsible "to" is not only in the giving but in the setting of limits on another's destructive and irresponsible behavior. It is not good to rescue someone from the consequences of their sin, for you will only have to do it again. You have reinforced the pattern (Proverbs 19:19). It is the same principle spoken of in child rearing; it is hurtful to not have limits with others. It leads them to destruction (Proverbs 23:13).
>
> A strong strand throughout the Bible stresses that you are to give to needs and put limits on sin. Boundaries help you do just that."

 This exerpt contains many NT passages, so I won't cover it again in a separate section.*

As Cloud and Townsend communicated, The Law of Responsibility refers to the proper way to love others. Love involves not only being kind, charitable, forgiving, and giving to others in need, but also in the setting of limits on other's destructive and irresponsible behavior. The Law of Responsibility means that each person refuses to rescue or enable another's immature or sinful behavior. IOW, we are responsible TO each other, not FOR each other.

It is not good to rescue others from the consequences of their sin, as you will only need to do it again. Recall the Case Study of Broke Bob from #1: The Law of Sowing and Reaping. The Law of Responsibility draws a boundary between what Bob is responsible for (his own finances), and what his mother is responsible for (respecting her son's autonomy and his decisions). What this looks like is that Bob's mom needs to clearly state what her responsibilities to him are, and make it clear that financial support is not among them. It might help if she asked him for regular financial support. This might make him realize some of his responsibilities to his mother, especially as she ages. In turn, Bob needs to recognize that he is not mommy's little boy any longer, and that it's time for him to come up with a new game plan for his life.

IOW, we should be mindful of the interaction and the outcome, and not let ourselves fall into autopilot.

Correlation to the 10 Commandments

This corresponds with the 2nd Commandment: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image." (Exodus 20:4-6; Deuteronomy 5:8-10) When we place a person's feeelings, or what we might think is best for them above God's truth, we are making them into an idol. We are either riding high on the idol of emotionalism in the former, or else regressing into the idol of an abstract principle in the latter. Also, placing our own freedoms and liberties above the well-being of others is hedonism, NOT liberty, which is another form of idolatry.

The Red Pill Lens

Despite the fact that carousel riders cannot provide a sanctified marriage, we are still hearing arguments that "some of these women are not so bad / reformed / repented / etc." Maybe or maybe not, but still there are consequences. I won't go into all the relational and spiritual baggage that accompanies women who engage in that lifestyle, as that has been well covered here before.

A man who wifes up a woman like that is essentially rewarding her for bad behavior, which is a violation of #1: The Law of Sowing and Reaping. Also, he reaps all the consequences of the sexual sins which she has sown for herself, a violation of #2: The Law of Responsibility. Pastor Persnickety might tell you that he is bestowing unearned grace upon her, but we need to tread carefully here. Is it truly grace or is it Captain Save-a-H0e foolhardily proposing his own self-destruction? The statistics suggest the latter in most cases. A man should carefully consider the feedback he is getting, weigh his options, and assess the outcome of his choices before he decides.

Posts describing other applications of The Law of Responsibility are listed below. Readers are welcome to suggest other posts and/or applications.

1. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Power to Create vs The Power to Destroy (2023/12/4)
2. Σ Frame: The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)
3. Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Reality (2023/12/23)

Related

- Cane Caldo: Liberty on the Fringes of Jane's Books (2018/3/22)
- Σ Frame: Rules and Trust (2021/4/28)
- Σ Frame: Love begins where perfection ends (2021/9/22)
- Σ Frame: Developing Discernment (2021/9/27)
- Σ Frame: The Moral Law cannot be set aside (2023/2/24)
- Σ Frame: The Philosophical Basis of Secularized Altruism (2023/7/31)

The most successful strategy is NOT perfectly altruistic.

Red Pill Apostle · 9 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Thedeti's approach is a robust strategy.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Author's Note: This post is based on an email exchange with Jack on 2023/12/27.
Length: 750 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes + ~25 minutes of video

Game Theory / The Prisoner's Dilemma / Tit-for-Tat

In this post, we'll explore The Law of Responsibility by taking a look at Game theory which ties into the topic of Boundaries quite closely. The value of Game theory is that it takes into account the fact that we often don't know the outcomes of our actions / decisions. Game theory can suggest optimal strategies and help determine where lines need to be drawn.

Jack reviewed Strategies for the Iterated Prisoners' Dilemma a while back (2021/3/17). Fellow blogger Jim wrote a classic piece, Make women property again (2021/4/19), in which he describes the dynamics of intersexual Game strategies in terms of cooperation, defect, and equilibrium. There are more posts that touch on this topic below under Related.

This video looks at Game Theory, specifically the historical background of The Prisoner's Dilemma and some of the most robust strategies that experts have found, namely, the Tit-for-Tat strategy (also described in Jack's post above). The video is a bit long at ~25 minutes, but well worth the watch at 1.5x or 2x speed.

Veritasium: What The Prisoner's Dilemma Reveals About Life, The Universe, and Everything (2023/12/24) Length: 27 minutes

The video describes how the Prisoner's Dilemma applies to international politics during the Cold War. Near the middle of the video, Dr. Axelrod's program study on cooperation and defection is reviewed. The findings are that the strategies of being cooperative are superior to those characterized by defection, with the following attributes making up the most successful strategies: Nice, Forgiving, Retaliatory, Clear.

- Nice means to be cooperative rather than defective.
- Forgiving means that the opponents defection is not 'punished' by another defection.
- Retaliatory is responding to an opponents' defection by defecting, but not more than once.
- Clear means directly stating boundaries so they are easy to understand and so that the consequences for breaking them are also easy to understand.

Game Theory Applied to Marriage

I had not thought of Game Theory applying to marriage before I watched this video, but it does. Once a man gets past the initial anger stage that comes with dropping BP notions, a man needs to identify the overall Game strategy that his wife employs, and adjust his own strategy such to maximize the longitudinal outcome so that the entire family wins.

The above analysis of The Prisoner's Dilemma also gives us the most effective strategies for mutual success in marriage.

- Nice is the same as being cooperative.
- Forgiving means that bad behavior is not held over your spouse's head for extended time periods.

- Retaliatory is checking bad behavior and imposing consequences that match the poor behavior, while not punishing too much.
- Clear means directly stating boundaries so they are easy to understand and so that consequences to breaking them are also easy to understand.

When considering Dr. Axelrod's conclusions, it strikes me that Thedeti's strategy matches these attributes.

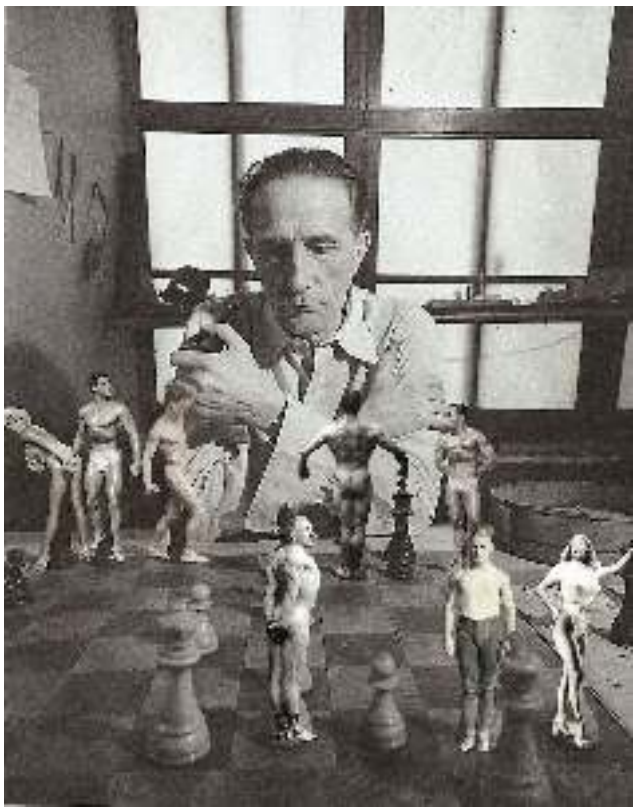
Self-Reflective Assessment

Ideally, marriage should be Nice and Forgiving, with mutual cooperation between spouses. This is the ideal for building stable families and gives the best environment for building generational wealth.

But we all know that women do not play Nice, and neither do they respect men who play Nice, unfortunately. This is perhaps the most profound challenge of achieving a sanctified marriage that Christian men have faced over the past few decades.

In the past (and even now), Chivalrous Churchian culture frowned on the Retaliatory and Clear aspects of the ideal Game strategy. Men were expected to never defect (and were routinely chastised or punished if they did), and more or less allow the wife to determine all the boundaries and conditions of the relationship (similar to Briffault's Law). Considering the high rate of divorce and marital fraud in the church, we know where this strategy of perfect altruism leads.

The high rate of divorce and marital fraud is what Dr. Axelrod's study would suggest when the woman sets the boundaries on the marriage. Women's default position is often to defect, which is the most simplistic, solipsistic approach of getting as much as she can for herself, resulting in the outcome where both players get a minimal benefit that is much less than the benefits would be with a strategy of cooperation.



At the other end of the spectrum is Thedeti's strategy for preventing divorce, which essentially adds in the Retaliatory and Clear aspects of the ideal Tit-for-Tat Game strategy. Women hate to be held accountable, and usually do not respond positively to verbal requests / warnings. For unresponsive women who refuse to learn, the only way they can be held accountable is through punishment in the form of a Retaliation. Also, by spelling out in no uncertain terms the mutually assured destruction that will result from divorce — which is comparable to the nuclear arms race of the Cold War — this is essentially making Clear the consequences of transgressing the boundaries. It is important to note here that the best strategy in the game is one of a party being overly forgiving while still maintaining a strategy of retaliation. This combination would seem to align well with both Thedeti's story and mine as well.

Furthermore, adding in these two missing aspects of the Game also helps to nudge the relationship away from being purely transactional. That is, the wife will be more likely to recognize and respect the husband's missives as being beneficial for the entire family, more likely to view her own compliance as a mutually beneficial option, and less likely to see her husband as objectively replaceable. IOW, it makes her recognize that she has skin in the game (and she does, whether or not she is inclined to face it).

If we were to think through the comparison further, I'm confident there would be other similarities.

Related

- Σ Frame: Introduction to Game Theory 101 (2018/2/11)
- Jim's Blog: The three magic words (2020/8/7)
- Σ Frame: Game Theory 110 — The Prisoner's Dilemma (2021/3/3)
- Σ Frame: Strategies for the Iterated Prisoners' Dilemma (2021/3/17)
- Jim's Blog: Make women property again (2021/4/19)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): What can a husband do in response to a rebellious wife? (2022/1/31)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Laying out Boundaries (2022/10/19)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Deti on Female Agency (2022/11/8)

3. The Law of Power

Jack · 10 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Our only true power is bestowed from the Lord.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

The Law of Power

The underlying principle of power is in having the assurance that the outcome will be as one intends, and will not be left to chance nor the caprices of others. When the outcome is considerably incongruent with expectations and/or intentions, then it is an indicator of powerlessness (discussed in the next section).

Trust is a necessary element of power, and it is also a vehicle of power. Trust in an authority and/or a structure of authority is what unites people under a leaders' power and authority, and that same unity grants power to the leader. It is also what allows leaders to exert power and authority over others. This trust in authority is central to faith — our trust in God. Trust is necessary for various expressions of power (discussed below) to be employed. Trust affords the assurance that the outcome will be acceptable, as described in Male and Female Power Deconstructed (2017/10/26) and The True Ontology of Power (2019/5/16).

Rebellion occurs when an abuse of power and/or a loss of trust leaves a group in an unbearable state which incites them to try to seize power for themselves in an effort to improve their situation. The West has suffered an abuse of power and a loss of trust in the government, but living conditions are not yet so unbearable as to incite a rebellion.

Sin is often described as spiritual rebellion.

The Grand Enemy of the Law of Power is self-sufficient pride and solipsism — both reject trust. Ironically, the world associates the former with power and Gentile Authority. But the Christian view assumes that we have no power in and of ourselves.

Powerlessness

Most of us do not have any great power over our lives, nor even over our own selves.

The Law of Responsibility and Red Pill Apostle's related post highlighted how we are responsible for our decisions and their effects on others, but yet, we are not always entirely sure of what those consequences will be. Also, we may not be able to change the outcome, no matter what we might do.

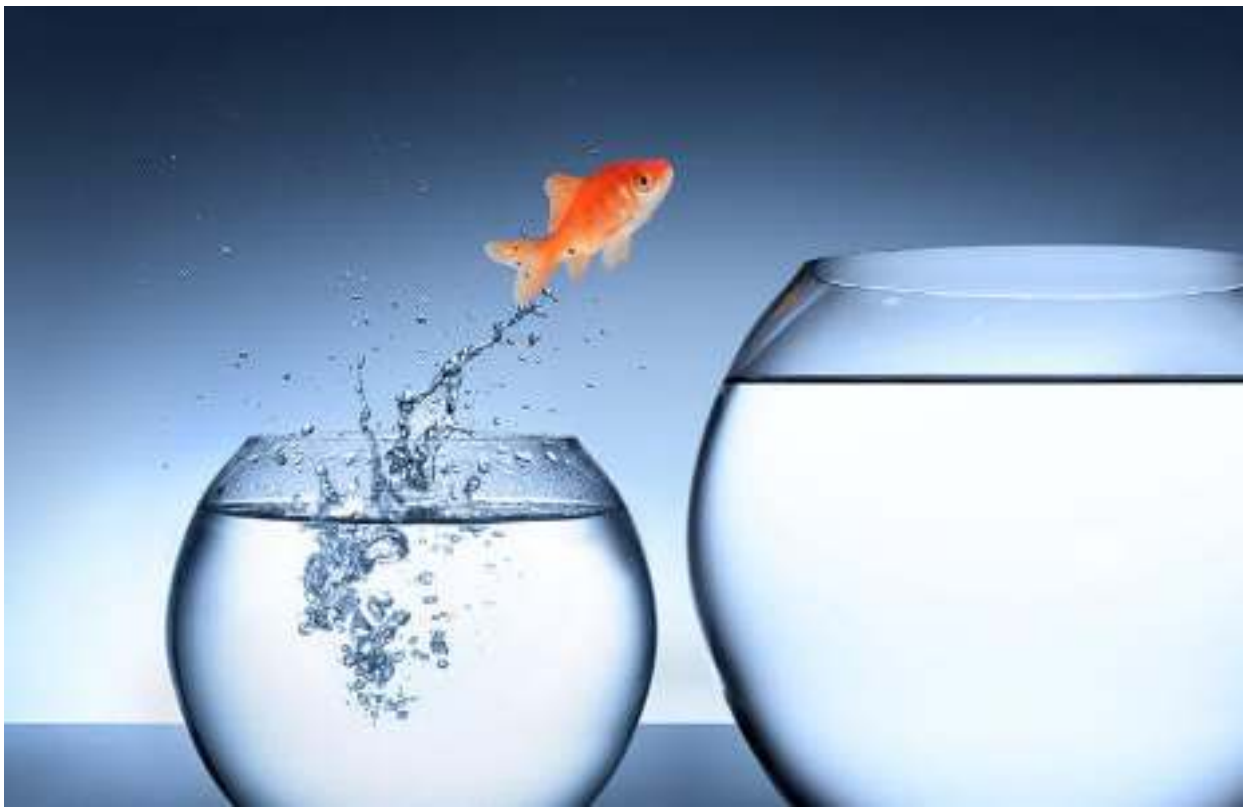
This is powerlessness.

How is it that we are responsible for things that we have no power to change?

We have power over some things; we don't have power over others (including changing people). It is human nature to try to change and fix others so that we can be more comfortable. However, true intimacy is only present between two individuals who trust and support each other out of their own free will. This permits the freedom to disagree. In reality, what we often see is that conflicts and disagreements erupt into heavy handed power plays and zero sum games. Hence, people suffer more from trying to change others than from the things they attempt to change about others.

We can't change or fix anyone — but we do have the power to change our own life.

How?



6 Intrinsic Powers

Cloud and Townsend list 6 powers that all human beings have.

1. You have the power to agree with the truth about your problems. In the Bible this is called “confession.” To confess means to “agree with.” You have the ability to own yourself, and at least say “that is me.” You may not be able to change it (yet), but you can confess.
2. You have the power to submit your inability to God. You always have the power to ask for help and yield. You have the power to humble yourself and turn your life over to him. You may not be able to make yourself well, but you can call the Doctor! The humbling of yourself commanded in the Bible is always coupled with great promises. If you do what you are able — confess, believe, and ask for help — God will do what you are unable to do — bring about change (1 John 1:9; James 4:7-10; Matthew 5:3, Matthew 5:6).
3. You have the power to search and ask God and others to reveal more and more about what is within your boundaries, that is, your personal domain of authority that has been granted from above.
4. You have the power to turn from the evil that you find within you. This is called repentance. This does not mean that you’ll be perfect; it means that you can see your sinful parts as aspects that you want to change.
5. You have the power to humble yourself and ask God and others to help you with your developmental injuries and leftover childhood needs. Many of your problematic parts come from being empty inside, and you need to seek God and others to have those needs met.
6. You have the power to seek out those whom you have injured and make amends. You need to do this in order to be responsible for yourself and your sin, and be responsible to those you have injured.

> Therefore, if you are offering your gift at the altar and there remember that your brother has something against you, leave your gift there in front of the altar. First go and be reconciled to your brother; then come and offer your gift.”
>
> Matthew 5:23-24 (NKJV)

All these powers can be summed up in the Christian disciplines of confession and repentance.

Confession

- You have the power to agree with the truth about your problems.
- You have the power to submit your inability to God.
- You have the power to search and ask God and others to reveal more and more about what is within your boundaries.

Repentance

- You have the power to admit our faults, submit to God, ask for help, turn for help, humble ourselves and apologize when wrong.
- You have the power to turn away from the evil that you find within you.
- You have the power to humble yourself and ask God and others to help you with your developmental injuries and leftover childhood needs.
- You have the power to seek out those that you have injured and make amends.
- The Ultimate Expression of Power is love, demonstrated through effective forgiveness and Genuine Authority.

In essence, all this is what it means to submit one's self to God (James 4:7-10).

The Application

When we are dissatisfied with our status in life, we need to admit we are powerless and ask a higher power for help. This is a gesture of trust. We avail of that higher power when we act as agents thereof. Men trust in God and a few other men. Women trust in their male head. Children trust their parents.

Cloud and Townsend added further practical insights.

> "What you can do is influence others. But there is a trick. Since you cannot get them to change, you must change yourself so that their destructive patterns no longer work on you. Change your way of dealing with them; they may be motivated to change if their old ways no longer work.
>
> Another dynamic that happens when you let go of others is that you begin to get healthy, and they may notice and envy your health. They may want some of what you have.
>
> One more thing. You need the wisdom to know what is you and what is not you. Pray for the wisdom to know the difference between what you have the power to change and what you do not."

Correlation to the 10 Commandments

This corresponds to the 3rd Commandment: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." (Exodus 20:7; Deuteronomy 5:11) We do not have the position to claim God's authority, and yet, God, in His inscrutable wisdom, has allowed us to partake of His infinite power. How we use that power is a great responsibility that we cannot take lightly.

Correlations to the New Testament

The Law of Power is related to the New Covenant concepts of Confession and Repentance, as described above.

Also under the New Covenant, we are called into freedom. This freedom permits certain powers to be exercised, including the 6 listed above and others such as the freedom to disagree and the freedom to draw boundaries. This freedom results in gratitude and an overflowing heart. If you aren't experiencing the freedom to confess, repent, disagree, say "no", and so on, then you need to figure out what's missing or what's wrong, and/or change up your life.

The Red Pill Lens

Women take great delight in shirking that power which is manifested in moral agency. IOW, they strongly prefer to view life as a great cosmic happenstance where everything "just happens". And anything that "just happens" that is detrimental to their personal prerogatives leads them to believe they are 'victims'. This gynocentric hypoagency is equivalent to doctrinal fatalism hopped up and propped up on the Feeelz. It is a violation of The Law of Power.

As it is written, women are their own worst enemies. They never realize that they are only 'victims' of their own rejection of power and their capricious avarices towards each other. They do not want to take the effort to determine alternate outcomes outside their own solipsistic bubble of the Feeel Goods. Neither do they wish to trust a higher authority, e.g. God or a man, to help them achieve a desirable outcome. They certainly do not want to be held responsible for the consequences either.

Total la la land. "I can't see you so you don't exist!"* Except when she needs a man not to need; or worse, a scapegoat, and then like magic, a man becomes the center of her attention.

Worse, women are not naturally disciplined creatures, and you don't develop discipline overnight. Because they seldom (if ever) attempt to control themselves, they never have the opportunity to discover that they have less control than they think and are in fact out of control. Thus, confession and repentance (as forms of power) are non sequiturs. This is why we never hear women say "I'm sorry" or offer an apology for anything they do, no matter how egregious. It takes real inner power to introspect, confess, repent, apologize, make amends, take responsibility, and develop discipline and virtue — power that most women do not have. Instead, the responsibility is always pinned on others so that they can escape back to la la land.

Men who are extremely immature (powerless in this regard) are the same way. Such men are often called cowards; not because they're timid or overcome with fear, but because they fail to exercise power at a decisive moment.

All men are cowards to some degree. It is the Sin of Adam. The so called 'Real Men' are simply aware of this and make an effort to subdue their inclinations to discard their power.

 Low SMV men are truly invisible to women.*

Case Studies Related to The Law of Power

1. Dalrock: Girl power! (2010/9/24)
2. Bruce Charlton: Animism, power and modernity (2011/7/28)
3. Dalrock: Connecting the pathological fear of husbands having power with the peter pan manboy syndrome. (2012/10/4)
4. Dalrock: A wife's best defense against a troublesome mother-in-law. (2013/3/13)
5. Dalrock: Revisiting the question of a troublesome mother-in-law. (2015/5/29)
6. Chateau Heartiste: The Hypnotic Power Of Dread Game (2018/5/7)
7. Chateau Heartiste: Power, Approach, And Inhibition: A Study Of Alpha Males And Beta Males (2018/5/18)
8. Chateau Heartiste: Female Power Vs Male Power (2018/10/3)
9. Σ Frame: Meretricious Power and the Tingle (2018/10/9)
10. Dalrock: Vaginas of the world, unite! (2019/5/13)
11. Dalrock: Ugly feminists on a plane. (2019/7/23)
12. Dalrock: Fake news: Women over 65 are in the SMP power position. (2019/12/10)
13. Σ Frame (Lexet): Courtship and Power (2020/2/17)
14. Christianity and Masculinity: Complementarianism – holding to a form of godliness but denying its power (2020/9/29)
15. Σ Frame: The Power Play Tactics of Trans-National Corporations (2022/7/20)
16. Σ Frame: Dealing with the Mother-in-Law Curse (2023/5/24)
17. Christianity and Masculinity: Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment (2023/6/9)
18. Σ Frame: Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10)

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: There is power in the Truth (2014/6/3)
- Dalrock: Where most see girl power, Larry Kummer sees Dalrock's Law of Feminism. (2019/1/2)
- Bruce Charlton: Power corrupts – it really does… (2022/6/23)

- Σ Frame (Rock Kitaro): Glorifying God Through the Courage of Upholding His Moral Laws (2023/3/17)
- Bruce Charlton: Seeking power entails opening ourselves to manipulation by power (2023/12/26)

What is the Spiritual Power of Authority?

Jack · 11 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Power in numbers only exists when the members submit to a hierarchy of authority.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Authority is Central to Faith

> [8] The centurion* answered and said, "Lord, I am not worthy that You should come under my roof. But only speak a word, and my servant will be healed. [9] For I also am a man under authority, having soldiers under me. And I say to this one, 'Go,' and he goes; and to another, 'Come,' and he comes; and to my servant, 'Do this,' and he does it."
>
> [10] When Jesus heard it, He marveled, and said to those who followed, "Assuredly, I say to you, I have not found such great faith, not even in Israel!"
>
> [13] Then Jesus said to the centurion, "Go your way; and as you have believed, so let it be done for you." And his servant was healed that same hour.
>
> Matthew 8:5-13 (NKJV)

 A centurion was a Roman military leader that had command over 100 soldiers. (Latin "cent" = 1/100. A centimeter is 1/100 of a meter. Also, this is where we get the word cent for a penny = $0.01.)*

In this passage, Jesus clearly identifies faith in terms of authority. Remember, faith is confidently believing in that which is not apparently observed, such that it becomes a reality. (Read Hebrews 11 for more descriptions of faith.)

In the story of the Centurion, we see three ways that Authority carries real Spiritual power. I'll briefly describe each of these.

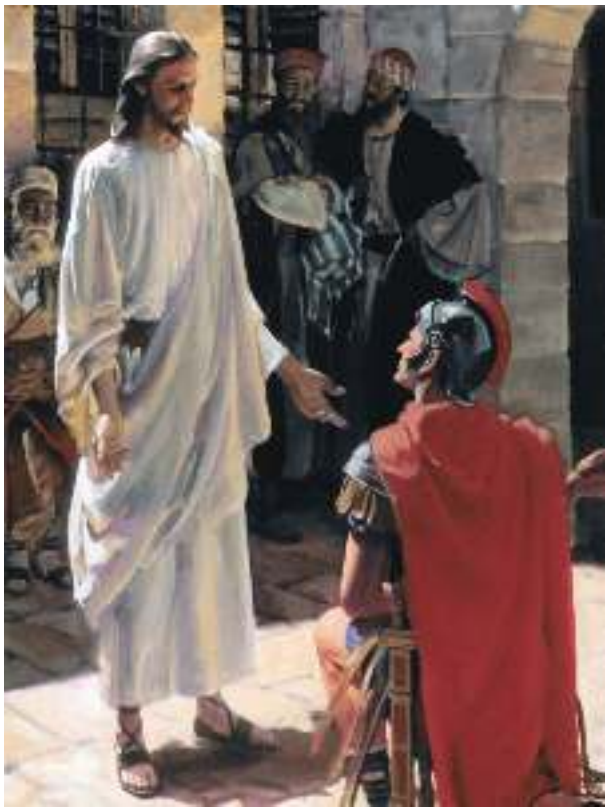
1. The centurion's command over his soldiers

A military structure of authority is based on faith.

Think about it. 100 soldiers could easily defeat 1 man — the centurion. The 100 soldiers act in faith and unity when they obey the centurion. The centurion also acts in faith to command his soldiers, knowing that he is responsible for them.

If any man disobeys or turns on the leader (e.g. centurion), then it is recognized that this is a breach of faith in the structure of authority. This is called insubordination, rebellion, or sedition (depending on the context and severity), and the man who does this is a traitor.

2. The centurion's faith in asking Jesus for help



Someone told the centurion about Jesus and he got the idea that Jesus might be able to help his servant. He must have traveled a great distance to come see Jesus.

Think about it. What would people say today about a general in the army who went to another country to ask a religious leader for help? People would think he was an unprofessional wacko nut job. Yet, this is what the centurion did. He believed that Jesus could help him, so he went to the effort to go see Jesus. Furthermore, he had the faith to believe that Jesus could heal his servant simply by His word.

Also note that when the centurion went to Jesus, he did not cling to his authority as a centurion. Instead, he humbled himself before Jesus, and he placed himself under Jesus' authority.

3. Jesus healing the centurion's servant from afar

Jesus was impressed with the centurion's faith and did as he asked. Jesus spoke the word that the centurion's servant would be healed, and he was. That was it.

The Application

The lesson to be learned in this story is that when we pray and ask God for things, we must do so in faith, just as the centurion did. Our faith and humility is what attracts God's attention and elicits a response from Him. That means, we don't go to God pretending to be the authority who tells Him what to do. No. God is not our servant. God is not a vending machine. Instead, we must recognize that God is the authority and we fit our requests into His plans. The importance of prayer is to develop our own understanding what God's plans are and what He wants. Then we can ask for things accordingly while we know that God hears us and answers our prayers.

Case Study 1 – Structures of Authority in Far East Asian Societies

Structures of authority exist everywhere, not only in special organizations like the military.

In Taiwan, and from what I have seen in most of far East Asia, every relationship has a senior and a junior. Seniors are expected to be gracious to and act responsibly towards their juniors, while juniors are expected to display deference and respect to their seniors.

The authoritative structure of any interpersonal relationship must first be established before any meaningful interaction can take place. Usually, this structure is clearly apparent, and is indicated by various indices such as accomplishments, age, educational attainment, formal position, and/or social status. But for some relationships, the pecking order is not readily apparent. If there is confusion, then it will be discussed first in order to establish the relationship.

For example, in my work as a professor, there are many other professors with more seniority than me and some with less. Every time there is a department meeting, which is about once a month, the secretaries must review all the accomplishments of all the professors and establish an order of seniority. A handout with an ordered list is printed and given out at the beginning of the meeting so that everyone knows their place. Once in a while, one professor will be shown to have more accomplishments than another professor who was previously above him, and then the order changes. This is openly acknowledged at the beginning of the meeting so that there is no confusion, usually in the form of praise for the succeeding member.

Case Study 2 – Structures of Authority in Daily Social Intercourse

We all play roles of both leader and follower, but in different areas of our lives. As I said above, in my work I am under other professors as well as the dean. But in the classroom, I am a leader of students. In my family, I lead as a husband and father. And with my own father, I am a son.

As you can see, there is a hierarchy of authority in all of these settings, and I have to play a different role in each one.

Whenever we interact with others, we must be aware of our place in the social order. If you are a figure of authority, then you have to come up with a plan, communicate it to others, make it work out, and act responsibly. If you are one under the authority, then you have to follow what the authority tells you to do. Some working level of trust is assumed. Everyone does their best.

All this is not emphasized in egalitarian Western cultures, but it is readily acknowledged in East Asian cultures.

The Red Pill Lens

Over the past 50 years or so, many women have had the idea that they don't want to be under a man's authority because they don't like having a subservient role. They have been brainwashed into thinking that playing a minor role is degrading or demeaning. They wanted to be proud, strong, and independent superwomen and make decisions for themselves. They are traitors to the natural order. In essence, this is exactly what Eve did in the garden of Eden.

As we can see everywhere on social media, many women have tried to be "strong and independent", but at some point, they realize they can't do it, or else they get tired and don't want to do it anymore. Then they try to hook a man into paying their bills and taking responsibility for the mess they made of their lives. Of course, by that time they're older and have less of what men want from a woman (beauty, fertility, youth, innocence) so most men are unwilling to do this. Men want a submissive wife, just like a military commander wants obedient soldiers. The only men willing to marry older, used up women are very poor quality men, and these are the men that women don't want, so it's very difficult for a woman to find a good husband at this point.

Some women really are able to be "strong and independent", but later in life, they're lonely because men don't want a woman like that. Men want to be cherished and needed by the woman in their life. Women show this by being affectionate, helpful, kind, and submissive to him. Men want a woman who is a beautiful, respectable lady in public, a kindhearted and submissive helper in the home, and a wild animal in the bedroom. Overall, men want a woman who adds to his life more than she detracts from it.

DBD wrote,

> "A woman was facing the fact that BYOW combined with household chores became the norm for living with a man in a monogamous relationship. This is because there is literally NO reason for a man to enter an exclusive relationship with a woman unless she is a literal help meet to him.
>
> Yes madam, you have to attend to the vacuum, washing machine, and dish washer men invented and men constructed for you. And yes, beside that you still have to get up and go to work five days a week as well. And on top of that you have to meet male sexual needs on a daily basis. Or you are simply not living with a man in his house. Full stop."

There's nothing wrong with choosing to be single, but a lot of these women never intentionally CHOSE to be single. They just made a lot of bad decisions and messed up their lives. They made themselves unattractive to men, unwanted by men, and thus unworthy of marriage. It is The Law of Sowing and Reaping.

As time goes on, more and more women are realizing that feminism is a lie that appeals to their fallen nature — and that it's better to play a minor role and leave the decisions, responsibilities, and heavy stuff to men. Unfortunately, most women don't realize this until they're around 30 years old, and by that time, they've already missed their best opportunities to marry a choice man.

Concluding Statements

In general, faith is demonstrated by playing a role within a structure of authority. You believe in the structure and the figure in authority, and you fit yourself into the system.

You have a role to play, a job to do, and the others are depending on you to do it well. Sometimes it is not easy to fit in and play your role, because you have to put your own desires, feelings, and interests aside in order to do it. However, it is deeply satisfying to be a part of something larger than yourself. Life and joy comes out of the experience. You can be grateful that you are a part of it.

Many people never tap into the spiritual power that arises from being a part of a hierarchy. By extension, they never find anything worth living for beyond themselves. Some people do recognize this power, but when proper social structures are not available to them (e.g. broken family, unchurched / gynocentric church, etc.), then they join corrupt organizations or social structures (e.g. street gangs, soft harems, etc.) in order to avail of it.

Moreover, we need to be aware of our role in any given social context. As leaders, we need to make good decisions, be responsible, and be aware of who we have spiritual authority over, and treat those people with special attention and care. As followers, we need to coordinate with the leaders and make sure we are following the plan.

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: Structures of Authority summarized (2014/5/16)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Headship is authority (2019/3/1)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment (2023/6/9)
- Σ Frame: Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10)
- Σ Frame: Does the Purple Structure Exist? (2023/10/21)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Covenant Cross (2023/12/2)

4. The Law of Respect

Jack · 12 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Boundaries must be observed out of respect, not fear.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

The Law of Respect

In a nutshell, The Law of Respect views respect as a tendered commodity. Respect accumulates metaphysical and relational value as it is given and received. Thus, respect shown to others increases the value of the relationship, whereas a lack of respect shown to others will draw the same in response and erode the relationship.

Thus, The Law of Respect requires people to be proactive in "loving others as themselves". They must make an effort to develop a mutual respect. They must rein in their doubts and defensive emotional reactions, or "die to self (-interest)" as the Bible puts it, assume the image of Christ, and not "return evil for (perceived) evil." They must get past the reactive stance of clinging to the law and demanding personal 'justice' in order to love others and not reflexively react.

The Law of Respect is closely related to The Law of Power. Some brand of power is necessary to elicit authentic respect in this world. But to the man of faith, respect can be generated by virtue of his character, self-control, self-respect, and his habit of respecting others — without first attaining hierarchical dominance. In this case, respect itself then becomes a form of spiritual power.

The Law of Respect is also closely related to motivation. Respect is motivating to both men and women, but especially to men.

In this sense, respecting others' boundaries is an important social game strategy that Christians should be employing on a regular basis.

The Barrier

When people realize that they need to draw a boundary, they are hesitant to do so because they are afraid of how others will respond.

"Buhut… they won't accept me if I say no."

"Buhut… they will get angry if I set limits."

"Buhut… they won't speak to me for a week if I tell them how I really feel."

The reason we tend to be hesitant or afraid to draw boundaries is because others have some reach of authority over our own lives. We are afraid that if we tell them "No", then they will 'punish' us somehow. IOW, we don't believe we are worthy of others' respect.

Those in authority have a similar fear, that others will not respect the boundaries they have set and in doing so, waste resources, cause conflict, damage reputations, and rough up all that one has worked to achieve in the group or organization.

The fundamental issue with this problem is that we focus on how others affect our lives and lose clarity about ourselves and what we need in order to function and flourish. IOW, we lose our internal locus of control. Fear and confusion set in, and then we relax or abandon our boundaries to our own demise.

Another problem that follows is that we tend to judge other people's boundaries. When we don't like the consequences of another person's boundary, we try to cajole or coerce them into softening up. In many cases like this, it boils down to a fight over where the boundary will be. "Will it be in your favor, or mine?" Most of the time, this question can be settled by observing the hierarchy of authority.

Even after boundaries have been decided and settled, we're prone to wonder, "What about the next time around? Will the boundary be moved when it is no longer in one person's favor?" Thus, it requires a track record of interaction with a person to establish respect for a boundary.

The Solution

The Law of Respect and the Bible indicate that we need to respect the boundaries of others. In fact, this is necessary if we are to love them properly.

If we wish for others to respect our boundaries, then we need to respect theirs.

The idea is that if we love and respect people who tell us "No", then they will also love and respect us when we say "No" to them. It is an act of faith to initiate this dynamic, and it requires others to respond in like kind through faith.

Cloud and Townsend wrote [emphasis theirs],

> "Our real concern with others should not be, "Are they doing what I would do or what I want them to do?" but "Are they really making a free choice?" When we accept others' freedom, we don't get angry, feel guilty, or withdraw our love when they set boundaries with us. When we accept others' freedom, we feel better about our own."

Correlation to the 10 Commandments

This corresponds with the 5th Commandment: "Honour thy father and thy mother." (Exodus 20:12; Deuteronomy 5:16) Honoring father and mother includes cherishing a sense of clan membership, finding security in that, being loyal to that, trusting in authority more than compromising your principles, and having an inheritance. All this gives us a healthy and well-adjusted self-esteem, a proper attitude towards authority (embodied in father and mother), and an appreciation of the boundaries that enable a blessed social structure, thereby allowing us to have a healthy response to others' boundaries.

Correlations to the New Testament

Jesus said whenever we judge, we will be judged (Matthew 7:1-2). When we judge others' boundaries, we are inviting others to judge ours, and the standard of judgment they use will be very similar if not identical to ours. If we condemn others' boundaries, we can expect to be met with a similar condemnation of ours. As a result, this dynamic sets up a cycle of fear of being judged / condemned in which we are afraid to set the boundaries that need to be set.

Jesus said, "So in everything, do to others what you would have them do to you" (Matthew 7:12). This includes respecting the boundaries of others. We need to appreciate the boundaries of others in order to command respect for our own.

Under the New Covenant, we are called into freedom, but this freedom requires us to respect the freedom of others. Freedom begets freedom. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom" (2 Corinthians 3:17). This freedom results in gratitude and an overflowing heart. If we are walking in the Spirit, we give people the freedom to make their own choices. If we are going to judge at all, then (1) we need to hold authentic spiritual authority over that person, and (2) it needs to be by the "perfect law that gives freedom" (James 1:25).

The Red Pill Lens

The common refrain heard in Clown world is "Don't judge me!" and "Who are you to judge?" Fears of judgment abound. An understanding of The Law of Respect and the faith required to implement it are entirely absent.

Married men are hesitant to make demands of their wives because they're afraid she'll create trouble, punish him with pointless anger, ramp up the fitness tests, ransom the peace in the home, rebel, start an endless argument, withhold sex… The list goes on. IOW, men are afraid women will abuse their domestic power over them. They don't believe they are worthy of their wives' respect.

Men need to blow past these fears and ride out the storm long enough to establish a new dynamic. It might take days, months, or even years. A man has to be willing to go that distance.

OTOH, if a man's wife is emotionally volatile, he cannot very well dictate to her all the reasons why she shouldn't be angry, insecure, and out of control. To do so would be ungraceful and merciless, especially to one lacking agency and maturity, and will only be followed by more of the same from her. A person should have the freedom to voice their feelings and protest the things they don't like. But at the same time, she has to own it and not dump it on everyone around her in a hypoagentic spirit of blame and 'victimization'. We must honor our own boundaries by telling them, "Your raging / tongue lashing / etc. at me is not acceptable to me. If you continue to rage, I will have to remove myself from you." If she is unresponsive, then some measure of Married Dread Game must be enacted, which is essentially a harder boundary with more acute consequences.

Case Study – Jack demands respect from Jill by drawing a boundary

Recently, Jack and Jill have been in a significant financial pinch. Jack doesn't make enough income to cover all the financial costs. Jill is more insecure than most women, so this has hit her extremely hard. As a result, Jack has been pressed to the edge of his wits in dealing with her. After more bad news rolled in, Jill broke down again and went off blaming Jack for a multitude of ills, some real and some hamstered up. Jack waited for her to cool off and then presented his expectations of her as follows.

> "I know you really need my support and encouragement during this time. But I also need your support and encouragement too. If you don't feel like being encouraging that's unfortunate, but at the very least, you will hold your tongue at the point at which it begins to affect my work, my ability to focus and concentrate on my work, and my belief in myself.
>
> You are not to attack, or criticize, or speak lightly of me or my work, or refer to me as someone who is lazy or who doesn't want to work. You are to respect my work and my efforts, no matter how much or how little income it might generate.
>
> It will be impossible for me to succeed and do well in life if my wife is criticizing me, judging me, and tearing me down every day."

In response, Jill let off a few more criticisms and buffered her accusations by saying that she says those things to motivate him. Jack replied,

> "You do not understand what motivates me. I am not a child. You cannot motivate me with shame tactics.
>
> I am a man — your husband. We have been married for 8 years, and you still don't know how to motivate your husband!?! You need to think — how do women motivate men?"

Jill continued with her barrage, but hearing herself talk made her realize what she was doing. The next day, she was in a stellar mood and had a renewed respect for Jack. Jack also felt much better.

Case Studies Related to The Law of Respect

1. Christianity and Masculinity: Love and respect (2014/8/26)
2. Christianity and Masculinity: Respectful submission not submission (2015/5/30)
3. Dalrock: Disrespecting respectability, dishonoring the honorable. (2015/7/9)
4. Christianity and Masculinity: The influence of emotions on respect, submission, and love (2015/11/4)
5. Dalrock: We need to focus on respect instead of fairness. (2016/1/20)
6. Dalrock: No respect. (2017/12/14)
7. Σ Frame: Nudity and Respect (2018/2/21)
8. Σ Frame: The Objectivity of Offense Constitutes Respect (2018/5/26)
9. Σ Frame: Ladies Should Respect the Man and Love the Boy (2018/6/28)
10. Σ Frame: Tingles = Respect (2018/10/6)
11. Dalrock: No respect for men who marry single mothers. (2019/3/13)
12. Dalrock: What if we acknowledged repentance and respected Christian men who married single mothers? (2019/3/15)
13. Σ Frame: The Motivation of Desire (2020/12/1)
14. Σ Frame: Harnessing the Motivations of Others (2022/4/20)
15. Σ Frame: Respect makes all the difference! (2022/8/17)
16. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Why are women willingly submissive to authorities, but not to their husbands? (2022/10/26)
17. Σ Frame: A Wife Who Learned how to Motivate her Husband (2022/12/14)
18. Σ Frame: Disrespecting the Lord (2023/3/3)
19. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Power to Create vs The Power to Destroy (2023/12/4)

Related

- Σ Frame: Book Review: The Love a Wife Desires, the Respect a Husband Needs (5 stars) (2017/12/18)
- Christianity and Masculinity: A lack of respect should not be easily ignored (2018/10/10)
- Σ Frame: Restoring Respect (2022/9/28)
- Σ Frame: Understanding Respect (2022/9/29)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Trust, attraction, and the Biblical female marital roles of helper, submission, and respect Part 1 (2022/11/17)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Trust, attraction, and the Biblical female marital roles of helper, submission, and respect Part 2 (2022/11/21)

Addressing Female Disrespect

Red Pill Apostle · 13 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Disrespect is how women bully and hate men.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Author's Note: Written on 2023/3/13. Transcript compiled and formatted by Jack.
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes + 9 minute video

The Centrality of Respect

Respect is one of the more simple litmus tests of a woman's behavior in a relationship. Additionally, passing fitness tests are how a man avoids getting into the mess in the first place.

In this video, Dr. Orion Taraban gives a short talk that addresses female disrespect and how both men and women are to deal with this. This is an extremely important topic both for men and women, so I had to share this in a post.

PsycHacks: Addressing FEMALE DISRESPECT: why this is essential to relationship success (2023/2/9) Length: 5:00

An abridged transcript of Dr. Taraban's talk follows.

The Nature of Respect (or the Lack Thereof)

The first thing that's important to understand is that disrespect is typically a process. It happens gradually over time. The best predictor of overt disrespect is covert disrespect which are small behaviors that have plausible deniability. So if you don't want to have a larger problem on your hands further down the road, it's important to address disrespect while it is still in its smaller forms.

The clearest examples of the process of disrespect are seen in high schools and prisons. A bully doesn't usually go straight to shaking down his target. That's actually pretty risky. If he doesn't know who he's dealing with, he could always pick the wrong guy to mess with and that's going to make his life more difficult and complicated than he intended. So what these folks tend to do is they kind of test their victim. A classic example is bumping into their target as they're crossing paths in a hallway and seeing how he responds. This is a subtle test because there's some plausible deniability here like, "Oh, well, maybe this person just wasn't looking where he was going. It happens. Sometimes people jostle into each other." However, if the bully bumps into the target and the target says, "Excuse me…", that person is now pegged as a target for escalation.

On the other hand, if the target were to respond appropriately and cast a warning glance at the bully or issue a verbal warning, that bully could always play it off. "Whoa! Hey man! Chill out! What got you so worked up?" But he would probably think twice about escalating the situation.

Now the issue is that most bullies kinda know that they're bullies, and while women absolutely can be bullies, that is, they are intentionally using tactics to inflict emotional or psychological pain in order to get what they want, I also believe that a lot of women actually aren't aware of how they may be communicating disrespect to men. This is because, at least in part, respect means different things to men and women.

Women's Test for Disrespect

Now at this point I'm going to offer the women in the audience a really simple test to determine whether a behavior is likely going to be perceived as disrespectful to a man. Here it is.

With respect to any behavior, just ask yourself, "Would I say the same thing in the same way to my boss if I was interested in keeping my job?"

If the answer to that question is NO… Congratulations! You potentially have a disrespectful behavior on your hands!

If you are interested in keeping your job…

- Would you roll your eyes at your boss?
- Would you be dismissive of your boss's feedback?
- Would you complain angrily?
- Would you respond to your boss's requests sarcastically?
- Would you nag your boss to comply with your demands?
- Would you mutter under your breath when your boss talks at meetings?
- Would you talk badly about your boss with your co-workers behind his back?
- Would you tease your boss?
- Would you be openly indifferent or uninterested in your boss's proposals?
- Would you mock your boss's attempts to maintain order and discipline?

I think most of us understand that if we're interested in keeping our jobs, the answer to all of those questions is NO. And for the three percent of you out there listening to this who are now saying to yourselves, "Actually, I tease my boss all the time. We have a really warm and playful relationship." Okay, then the question for you becomes, "Would you act like that with your boss in front of other clients or customers?" Of course not! And why is that? Because you know how that behavior would come off to other people who are not initiated into your special little dynamic. And this means that you understand my point.

Objections

Now before I address why this behavior is detrimental to women's best interests, let me respond to the most common objection I usually receive at this point in my argument. In short, the objection is some variant of, "That's nice, but a man is not the boss of me."

Okay, fair enough. However, your boss is not the boss of YOU either! You're not his slave! He can't make you do things that you don't want to do. You are a participant in an at-will professional relationship. He's not the BOSS of YOU. However, he IS the boss of YOU in a professional context. Or even better, he's the boss of the employees, which is a role that you voluntarily agreed to assume, and within that dynamic the boss has legitimate authority to make reasonable demands of, and set reasonable expectations for, his employees.

The person who builds the Frame, or to use my Sexual Marketplace metaphor, "builds the ship", is the boss or captain. This is not always the man but it generally is. Why? Because it's usually men making bids to women to enter into their Lifestyles not the other way around. However, even if you disagree with that perspective, a valid retort to the objection I previously stated would be, "Why do you feel that your boss is entitled to a higher level of respect than I am? Go shack up with that guy or see how he puts up with your bullsh!t on his time off."

Ladies, if you disrespect your man in ways that you wouldn't disrespect your boss, you are functionally communicating that your professional relationship with your boss is more valuable to you than your intimate relationship with your man.

Maybe for you it is, and the communication is appropriate. No problem! However, if it isn't, you should be aware that you may be communicating this message inadvertently.

Why is disrespecting men bad for women?

We can approach the answer in two ways.

1. A man who has any self-worth whatsoever and who enjoys any kind of optionality in the sexual Marketplace, will not tolerate disrespect. So whenever a woman is being overtly or covertly disrespectful she may be jeopardizing what could otherwise be a fulfilling and rewarding relationship for her. That's kind of obvious.
2. Disrespecting men not only threatens the women's relationships, it also threatens their positive emotionality. This is because it is not possible for a woman to love a man she does not respect. It is possible for a man to love a woman he does not respect. That happens every day! However, it is not possible for a woman to love a man she does not respect. This is one of the many differences between men and women.

For a woman, where the respect goes the love follows.

So disrespect not only threatens the relationship, it threatens the love in her heart. It threatens the woman's own positive regard.

Men nipping covert disrespect in the bud is absolutely essential to the long-term health of your relationship. Addressing it is a way to safeguard her positive regard for you. If the disrespect is allowed to continue without consequence not only will the behavior likely become increasingly problematic, but the high interest and attraction you may currently enjoy, which are the conditions of her continued loyalty, will be jeopardized, compromising the sustainability of the relationship.

Related

- Σ Frame: Disciplined, Submissive, Happy Wives (2018/2/15)
- Σ Frame: How To Get A Better Response From Your Girl (2018/2/27)
- Σ Frame: Ladies Should Respect the Man and Love the Boy (2018/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Tingles = Respect (2018/10/6)
- Σ Frame: Respect makes all the difference! (2022/8/17)

- Σ Frame: Restoring Respect (2022/9/28)
- Σ Frame: Understanding Respect (2022/9/29)
- Σ Frame: Women submit to their Head (2022/10/17)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Why are women willingly submissive to authorities, but not to their husbands? (2022/10/26)
- Σ Frame: It's her choice whether or not to submit. (2022/10/28)
- Σ Frame: Boss + Female Employee = Steamy Hot Chemistry (2023/9/18)

5. The Law of Motivation

Jack · 15 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Freedom allows internal motivation to flourish.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

The Law of Motivation

The Law of Motivation infers that motivations matter, as these direct our actions and decisions in life. If we have sublime motivations, then things tend to go much better and we feel much better. If our motivations are self-absorbed, then we come off as a codependent @ss, or worse.

It might be argued that motivations are superficial or trivial, and that it is action that matters. I'm sure we could also think of examples of people who had self-centered motivations, but things went smoothly for them. This is because exercising free will in the form of choices is empowering, regardless of the choices made. OTOH, violating one's willpower destroys the soul.

The Law of Motivation recognizes this phenomenon and adds that overall, motivation has a significant influence over our social impact, spiritual growth, and vitality. We utilize the Law of Motivation wisely when we recognize this phenomenon in our self and in others, and make decisions that fuel a positive internal motivation.

Concerning the appropriateness and goodness of motivation and the actions taken, God has the power to speak to each individual on a personal basis through various ways and means. Usually, the Holy Spirit convicts the conscience of sin through making choices and experiencing the consequences. If a man tries to force conviction on another person or on himself, then it almost always backfires. He'll get burned out and motivation decays. If this habit is continued, bitterness and depression will set in. The Law of Motivation cannot be violated.

The Law of Motivation says this: Freedom first, service second. We must be free to say "no" before we can wholeheartedly say "yes". One cannot actually love another if he feels like he doesn't have a choice not to.

Judging Intrinsic Motivations

There are many ways to discern the nature of one's intrinsic motivation. Here's one of the most obvious.

How do we regard the Law of God?

There are basically two contrasting views.

1. To view it as a set of "rules" that are boring, dry, no fun, restrictive, square, and suffocating to the soul.
2. To view it as life-giving with gratefulness, joy, and wonder, as King David did in Psalm 119:129-136 according to Deuteronomy 17:18-20.

Ultimately, the difference depends on the deeper motivations of the heart. If our motivations are to advance our own self-interest at other's expense, or to bask in the fleeting pleasures of self-centered debauchery, then we'll see law and authority as the former. But if our motivations are to avoid foolishness and wastefulness, and build a peaceful, prosperous, stable, and strong domain, then we'll see law and authority according to the latter.

How one regards the Law is only one indicator of motivation. Others would include how one regards physical fitness and health, honesty, modesty, honor / respect for parents, sex (promiscuous vs. chaste), stewardship (how one uses money and resources), and time management.

Thus, a large chunk of determining what, where, and how boundaries are to be drawn is in discerning the motivations of one's self and of others — whether they be sinful and solipsistic, or else filled with a larger, nobler purpose.

The Problem

Those who fall into the former category tend to be overly concerned with and mis-prioritize their own interests and well-being. As a result, they will fail to set healthy, proper boundaries and instead will draw boundaries that propagate and enforce a number of false or selfish motives, including…

- Payback (so as to not feel like you owe anything to others — a symptom of pride).
- Revenge.

- Approval.
- Popularity.
- Averting guilt.
- Avoiding shame.
- Maintaining ego dominance.
- Getting one up on the Jones's.
- Garnering attention / validation

Along with this mindset come a number of fears and insecurities.

- Fear of rejection.
- Fear of loneliness.
- Fear of others' anger.
- Fear of abandonment.
- Fear of losing a sense of self.
- Fear of losing or never finding love.
- Fear of losing an internal sense of goodness.
- Feeling rejected when others draw boundaries.
- Emotional enmeshment; overidentification with another person's loss.

In sum, we become motived NOT by life, love, purpose, and so on, but by the fear of losing it.

Case Study 1 — Self-Sacrificial Stan

Cloud and Townsend described one of their clients who was in bondage to misguided motivations.

> Stan was confused. He read in the Bible and was taught in church that it was more blessed to give than to receive, but he found that this often was not true. He frequently felt unappreciated for "all he was doing." He wished people would have more consideration for his time and energy. Yet, whenever someone wanted something from him, he would do it. He thought this was loving, and he wanted to be a loving person.

> Finally, when the fatigue grew into depression, he came to see me. When I asked what was wrong, Stan replied that he was "loving too much." "How can you 'love too much?'" I asked. "I've never heard of such a thing."

> "Oh, it's very simple," replied Stan. "I do far more for people than I should. And that makes me very depressed."

> "I'm not quite sure what you are doing," I said, "but it certainly isn't love. The Bible says that true love leads to a blessed state and a state of cheer. Love brings happiness, not depression. If your loving is depressing you, it's probably not love."
>
> "I don't see how you can say that. I do so much for everyone. I give and give and give. How can you say that I'm not loving?"
>
> "I can say that because of the fruit of your actions. You should be feeling happy, not depressed. Why don't you tell me some of the things you do for people?" As we spent more time together, Stan learned that a lot of his "doing" and sacrificing was not motivated by love but by fear. Stan had learned early in life that if he did not do what his mother wanted, she would withdraw love from him. As a result, Stan learned to give reluctantly. His motive for giving was not love, but fear of losing love. Stan was also afraid of other people's anger. Because his father frequently yelled at him when he was a boy, he learned to fear angry confrontations. This fear kept him from saying "no" to others. Self-centered people often get angry when someone tells them "no". Stan said "yes" out of fear that he would lose love and that other people would get angry at him.

When I read this case study, I immediately thought of someone with a covert contract, as Robert Glover described in his book, No more Mr. Nice Guy. It is also comparable to Secularized Altruism. These all have the same root problem — misguided motivations.

The Solution

Check your motivations and pay attention to the motives of others. Are they based on anything in the above list (or possibly others not listed)? Ask yourself, "What am I most afraid of?" "What do I most desire?" The emotions we struggle with on a daily basis can be a good indicator of where our loyalties lie.

Let God work on the fears, resolve them, and learn to create healthy boundaries to guard the freedom you were called to. If you act and serve others only to get free from your fears, then you are doomed to failure.

Discipline and self-control is necessary.

Case Study 2 — Developing Intrinsic Motivation through Discipline

When I was growing up, we heated our home with a coal and wood stove. My Dad spent several days in the summer collecting and cutting firewood to last through the winter. He often asked people for permission to cut down dead trees on their property. The arrangement was that they would have a dead and potentially dangerous tree removed, and we would keep the firewood.

When I turned 12, my dad required me to help him and to chop wood. It was hard grueling work and sometimes dangerous — the blisters and splinters! By the time I was 14, I could do it all myself. At first, I hated splitting wood. But with practice, I learned to enjoy it. Soon, people began asking me to chop wood, bust up brick walls and cement foundations, and drive piles, pins, posts, and stakes. Later I got a job in a tool and die shop where I used my skills to drive guide pins into automotive dies. (Try hammering a 10 inch long 4.002" diameter steel pin into a 4" diameter hole.) My axe and hammer swinging must have looked impressive (Proverbs 20:29), because people watched me do this with their mouths open in wonder, sometimes gleefully shouting praises.

All this gave me a sense of physical power and presence. It was also important for developing my physique.

Within 2 years, my motivation had morphed from simply obeying Dad to the intrinsic confidence and joy of physical domination.

Correlation to the 10 Commandments

This corresponds with the 4th Commandment: "Remember to observe the sabbath day, to keep it holy." (Exodus 20:8-11; Deuteronomy 5:12-15) Work and worry will not relieve one's fears and grant one spiritual freedom and rest. Healing, inspiration, and renewal only come from spending time with the Lord.

Correlations to the New Testament

Under the New Covenant, we are called into freedom. This freedom results in gratitude and an overflowing heart.

 Cloud and Townsend did not list any references to passages in the NT. Readers are welcome to offer suggestions.*

The Red Pill Lens

The Case Study of Jack and Jill in The Law of Respect ended with them identifying that Jill was trying to motivate Jack via nagging and shame tactics. Jack overtly told her that this is ineffective and in fact discouraging. Yet, she could not imagine any other way to motivate Jack. OTOH, some women are quite skilled at influencing men, for good or ill. It would be beneficial for couples to learn what motivates their spouse, and concentrate on channeling that energy towards more fulfilling and productive purposes. One must be aware of one's own motivations in doing so.

The Purity Movement was largely a failure because it focused on keeping rules rather than striving for sanctification. The motivations were to avoid sex altogether and to signal one's status within the social group. This dynamic fostered a Blue Pill mindset of sexual poverty, cruelly condemned the God given desire for sex and marital bliss, rewarded the outright denial of one's sexual nature, and made finding love and marriage frustrating as it became more difficult for young people to develop an authentic motivation of glorifying God in their bodies. As a consequence, sexual desire catastrophically spilled out in other ways (e.g. concupiscence, lust, masturbation, heavy petting, p0rn, etc.), leading many to ruin.

Case Studies Related to The Law of Motivation

1. Dalrock: It isn't insincerity, but fear of losing women's approval. (2016/4/4)
2. Σ Frame: The Motivation of Desire 2020/12/1)
3. Σ Frame: Revealing the motives behind unconcealed sex and nakedness (2021/1/29)
4. Σ Frame: Women Crave Male Attention (2021/7/26)
5. Σ Frame: Women have sex to influence men (2021/11/10)
6. Σ Frame: Tracking Raw Sex Performance on a Spread Sheet (2022/1/19)
7. Σ Frame: Infidelity is anything short of fidelity. (2022/1/24)
8. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Denying sex to one's spouse is porneia. (2022/1/26)
9. Σ Frame: "Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest." (2022/4/27)
10. Σ Frame: What is her true motivation for getting an education? (2022/7/6)
11. Σ Frame: Holding Out (2022/12/2)
12. Σ Frame: The Godfather undermines Fatherhood. (2023/7/10)
13. Σ Frame: The Philosophical Basis of Secularized Altruism (2023/7/31)
14. Σ Frame: More on the Spirits of Jezebel and Athaliah (2023/11/17)

Related

- Σ Frame: No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29)
- Σ Frame: Harnessing the Motivations of Others (2022/4/20)

Christian Detachment is a Boundary

Jack · 16 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Detachment must be maintained until one has gained authority over a domain and sufficient trust has been established.

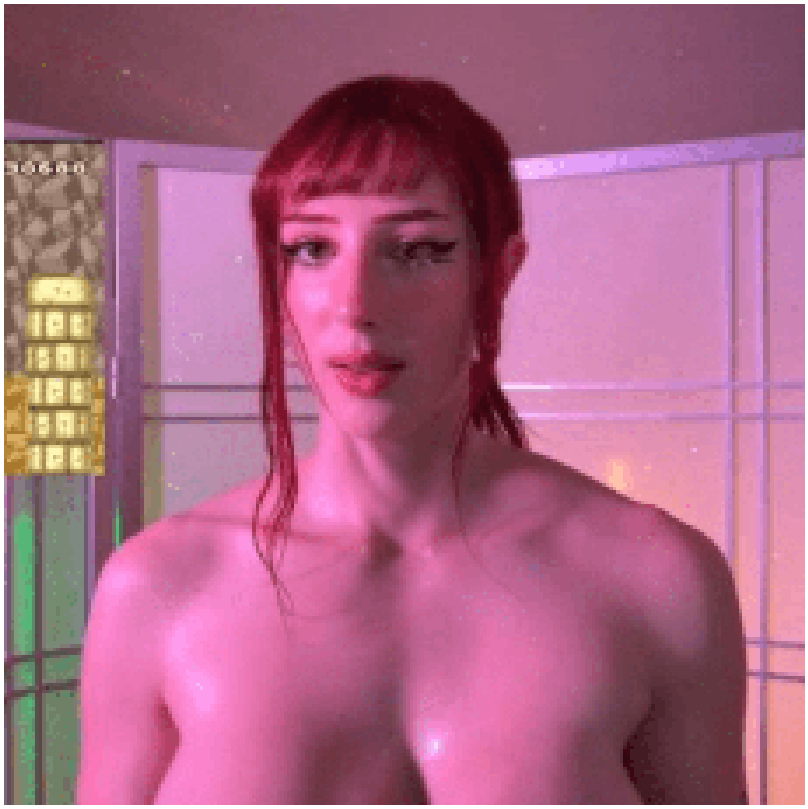
Readership: All; Single Men; Mentors of Single Men; Men interested in women, dating, and/or marriage.
Length: 1,750 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

The Decline Continues

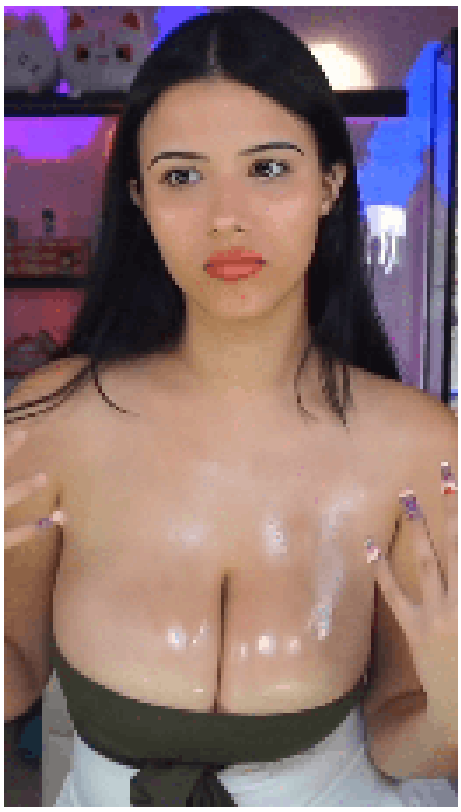
A typical man cannot jump into a social context thinking that he can just "be himself", let his tadpoles flagellate swimmingly, and expect all the chicks to love him for it. This privilege is reserved for the uber class Tingletrons. All other men need to hold themselves together and constrict their snake from squirming. For many men, this essentially means that they must forsake women altogether. Men for the most part are slowly learning to do this, but the simp laggers are falling further behind, amplifying the dichotomy in the quality of men.

As men are becoming more desensitized to and more detached from women, A-10-shun! h0es must up the ante by becoming ever more meretricious, salacious, and sensuous.

The latest trend in online streaming is women appearing virtually topless, and if that were not risqué enough, they're oiling up the milkers for a jiggly sheen that draws extra views, clicks, and cash. You've got to see this to believe it. (They look MUCH better with their clothes ON, in case readers are thinking about G□□□□□□00gling for more.)



OnlyF@ns and P0rnhub aster Morgpie was banned from Twitch after apparently streaming topless. Later, Twitch walked it back and now allows nudity (AKA "body parts") with 'labeling'. Anything for $$$.



OnlyF@ns TikToker Strawberry Tabby greases her glands.

Victoria advertises her OnlyF@ns account on her live streams. Note the 1K C0ck Stare.

Their profiles on Instagram, Twitch, X, and other sites contain links to OnlyF@ns accounts and other p0rn sites. So they're basically using online streaming to advertise their wiggly wares.

Just a few moments of seeing this stuff will reveal to discerning viewers that all this content reeks of a spiritual decadence that is on another level of magnitude not even seen on P0rnHub. This was surprising to me, as nips and bush are not apparently evident. Obviously, these 304s are the new emissaries of spiritual decay and are actively (or passively, depending on how you see it) spreading the aroma of de@th to all their viewers (2 Corinthians 2:15-16).

The Manosphere Responds

Recently, the topic of how to NOT get emotionally attached to a woman and some of the downline consequences of this (or NOT doing this) have been trending on the YouTube Red Pill 'sphere. Here are a few noteworthy videos on this topic.

1. The Rational Male: How To DEAL With Women Who PUSH Your Boundaries! (2023/11/7)
2. PsycHacks: Understanding EMOTIONAL DETACHMENT: the key to resilience (2023/12/2)
3. Better Bachelor: This is why men gatekeep things, because if they don't women ruin them. (2023/12/15)
4. PsycHacks: How to RESIST becoming EMOTIONALLY ATTACHED: get a poker face (2023/12/30)
5. The Rational Male: Why Women Get Triggered When Men Prioritize Themselves! (2024/1/1)
6. Casey Zander: How To Not Get Attached To A Woman When Dating (2024/1/13)

In video 3 above, at the 23:40 mark, Joker says [editing, punctuation, and emphasis mine],

> "It is the simps that are paying money into this stuff. It's the simps that keep this going. It's a supply and demand thing, so I have equal blame for them. But if they're adults and they want to do the OnlyFool's content and all that, they have the 'right' to. [The problem is not about 'rights'.] The problem is that that is leading… continuing, and perpetuating this problem.
>
> [When] you hear of these content creators […] making millions of dollars a month… that teaches other women to go ahead and do it. It teaches young men that it's fine to pay for this and simp. And it just keeps the problem going. It's going to be up to men to eventually stop doing this, because the women are never going to stop if the money's there, especially when they're talking about […] like "I'm just going to sell myself for a year or two (until my loans are done) to a bunch of older dudes that have money."
>
> We are such a Lost Society, my friends."

Joker is right. There is no reason to expect this slippery slide into depravity to reverse anytime in the near future, so it will be left entirely up to men to get their lusts under control, maintain their inner Game, and guard their emotional boundaries.

The big shift men are facing now is that, in the past, some boundaries of decency were observed by content creators and online platforms. If a man wanted to dip into the spicy sauce, he had to at least enter a search term and click his way over to the land of lust. Now, even that miniscule barrier has been removed, as salacious content is shoved into his face as he's innocently gaming away. Links to more mush are readily provided in the sidebar.

The Incentive: Shifting Boundaries in the Virtual

Those who were not taught boundaries during their formative years (myself included) might think of boundaries as something external to one's self, e.g. limits, "rules", social constraints, etc. But as I mentioned in the preceding paragraph, these external boundaries are becoming a quaint thing of the past. A man must now take it upon himself to create a boundary in his heart. This means that he must anticipate what might lead to lust / porneia / etc. and avoid those catalysts. These days, unfortunately, a man can't even play online games without subjecting himself to uninvited temptation.

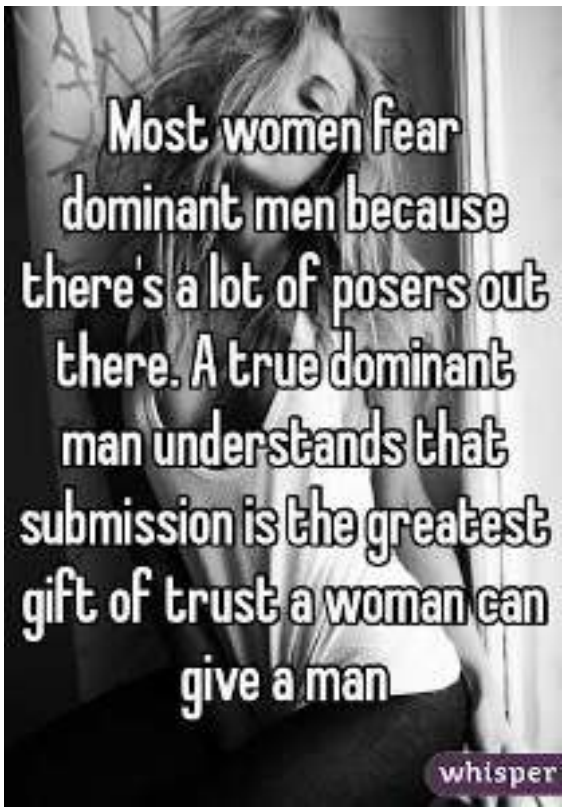
Following a set of 'rules' isn't going to cut it either, such as, "Don't go to OnlyF@ns, P0rnHub, etc.", because now the 'rules' of prudency stipulate that you can hardly even go online!

Furthermore, rules are only useful insomuch as they foster order and build trust — including trust in God and one's own self. Following the "rules" as a matter of principle leads to disaster in personal relationships. This is the failure of the altruistic Nice Guy™. On a personal level, it is healthy Boundaries — not "rules" per se — that must serve to build and foster holiness, honor, sanctity, and trust.

The Application: Shifting Boundaries in Real Life

We have the idea that boundaries must be dissolved if authentic intimacy and genuine Flow is to be achieved. This is only partly true. The other part that is often ignored or left out is that authentic intimacy must first be predicated on a foundation of a long history of trust.

It is foolish to think that intimacy and/or Flow can be achieved simply by discarding or neglecting to observe boundaries. This would be 'false confidence' which is actually foolishness.



Furthermore, the idea that boundaries must be dissolved if authentic intimacy is to be achieved without first establishing trust AND accountability in the form of a spiritual authority is a line of reasoning that channels a spirit of promiscuity leading to defilement. This is the essence of spiritual adultery.

In simple words, women need to be "owned"* by a man (father or husband) and men need to submit to God. Men and women who are not "owned" by God and a man respectively and/or who discard boundaries are (or will soon become spiritual) adulterers.

When online, a man must be continually aware of how his time spent online is affecting his spiritual health and vitality. If a man senses that he is becoming dissipated, jaded, lazy, or lustful, then he needs to reassess the value of his time spent on certain sites.

 By "owned", I am not referring to human ch@ttel or sl@very. I mean a covenant relationship characterized by (1) accountability, (2) commitment, (3) heart-felt devotion, and (4) which fits the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy.*

Boundaries must now be Internalized

Lest we jump to the conclusion that this tightened self-discipline is essentially legalism and/or "following the rules", it may be insightful to think of boundaries as a metaphysical interpersonal / online interface in which various feelings, ideas, impressions, moods, and thoughts pass through, as if by osmosis, and are exchanged in an effort to build and maintain an efficient social intercourse and/or trust.

In this view, enforcing boundaries means that we make some effort to regulate this flow of information. We have a responsibility to our self to make sure any incoming information is serving to foster our spiritual vitality, or at least not detract from it.

We also have the responsibility to ourselves and our own reputation to make sure the right kinds of personal information we present to others is coming across in a positive way such to create the image / impression that is most accurate and beneficial. A faux pas in this area could very well be misconstrued leading to a false attribution of motives, a perceived misrepresentation of one's self, or even a deceptive lie. Thus, it is crucial that we are aware of how we are seen by others, and how others perceive and interpret our speech and behaviors. (This is not to be confused with undue concern over what others might think of us, AKA attention wh0ring, people pleasing, and so on.)

Thus, every online click and social interaction IRL must be understood in terms of how it affects trust. If a website or a particular woman causes you to violate your trust in God or in yourself, then that website / woman must be considered to have broken your trust (in them) and should no longer be visited.

Conclusions

Boundaries are absolutely necessary to build and maintain a good relationship for both men and women. Similarly, internal boundaries must now be implemented to ensure a spiritually positive online experience.

To remain in a Spiritually Efficient state of Flow (such as when gaming or when interacting with others in a social setting), one cannot in any way depend on the good faith, responses, spiritual obedience, or opinions of others. One must stand on his own faith, and become a channel of God's blessings towards others. Likewise, one can no longer depend on content creators and websites to police their own content. It might help if we think of content as created by individual people (of questionable or unknown character), rather than merely a source of entertainment.

Boundaries contribute significantly to sanctification, and sanctification cannot be achieved without diligently defending proper boundaries. Thus, Good Relationships must be Chosen and Developed, and NOT "found" by chance under the auspicious but naïve assumption that we are trusting in God. Likewise, good websites and content creators must be Chosen. Time spent online and with other people must be self-regulated for best effect.

We must remember The Law of Responsibility. Remember that you are empowering the ego of a woman merely by giving her your attention. Don't empower slores. You are $upporting any media source merely by spending time there. Do not support those who have a negative influence on you, and who are not under your domain of authority. Do not $upport the enemies of faith.

Christian Detachment is a Boundary.

Related

- Σ Frame: How to Develop an Attitude of Detachment (2020/7/10)
- Σ Frame: Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy (2021/6/23)
- Σ Frame: Determination and Detachment (2022/4/2)

- Σ Frame: Pursuing Flow to develop Confidence and Trust (2022/4/22)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment (2023/1/30)
- Σ Frame: Glorifying God by Being Yourself (2023/3/29)
- Σ Frame: Attachment Style and Game (2023/10/13)
- Σ Frame: 5. The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)
- Σ Frame: How to Resist becoming Emotionally Attached (2024/1/17)

How to resist becoming emotionally attached

Jack · 17 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Placing boundaries on one's own emotions as a form of self-control.

Readership: All; Single Men; Mentors of Single Men; Men interested in women, dating, and/or marriage.
Length: 2,200 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes + 10 minute video

Introduction

Yesterday's post, Christian Detachment is a Boundary, emphasized that Boundaries must be internalized as a form of emotional regulation and self-control. I've also mentioned that drawing Boundaries in social reciprocations with others can function as strategic game moves. Catacomb Resident added that Boundaries are just another word for obedience to the Lord.

If we take another step into the deeper layer of meta dynamics, Boundaries could also be thought of as methods and strategies for maintaining socio-emotional detachment, which has been identified as a crucial element of maintaining Frame.

Here, Dr. Orion Taraban goes over one type of context all men struggle with in terms of detachment — remaining emotionally detached when desire is inflamed. This is one context in which boundaries set the trajectory of a relationship, and could even determine the moral quality of the person that one attracts.

PsycHacks: How to RESIST becoming EMOTIONALLY ATTACHED: get a poker face (2023/12/30) Length: 10 minutes

I have sorted through his points and organized the content below. The transcript has been adapted by adding a few Biblical / Red Pill technical corrections and elaborating on some important distinctions.

Now you might be thinking, "Orion what are you talking about? Isn't that bad? Isn't that toxic? Are you really going to teach men how to be cooler, less emotional, and less invested in their relationships?"

And my response to that would be, "Yeah! I am! That's exactly what I'm going to do!" Because there is a time for a man to be emotionally invested in a relationship and there is a time for a man NOT to be emotionally invested in a relationship.

And what is that time? At least the first six months of a relationship.

I have talked with too many men, too many men over the years whose problems stemmed from the fact that they could not resist becoming emotionally attached to a particular woman before she had been properly vetted for a relationship. So many difficult and problematic situations could be avoided entirely if men could learn to exercise a little restraint in this department.

My dudes, there is a reason why buyers expect a diligence period before any big purchase like a business or a house. They don't yet know what they're dealing with. They don't yet know whether the particular opportunity in front of them is actually what they want and hope it to be, and if they don't figure that out before the sale, it's going to be their problem after they hand over the money.

Similarly, men should consider the first six months minimum to be the diligence dating period. Why six months? Because it typically takes at least that long to reach the crisis of disillusionment in which the projected fantasy to which you have been attracted is shattered by the reality of who the other person actually is. And if you decide to give your heart to a woman before you can see who she really is, then you're not just gambling… You're gambling without even bothering to learn the rules of the game!

Don't do that! That is stupid! And it's stupid for two reasons.

In the first place, if you decide to emotionally invest in a woman who turns out to be of poor moral character, you're going to suffer. And you're going to suffer because ultimately you will need to choose between your head and your heart. That is, you'll have to choose between what is good and right for you and what you've already chosen to love. And that's a terrible position to be in. No matter what you do, it's going to hurt and it might hurt real bad. Frankly, you did that to yourself because you did not exercise sufficient restraint and discernment before choosing to emotionally invest in that particular woman. Resisting this investment is an emotional survival strategy.

In the second place, if you decide to emotionally invest in a woman before it is warranted, you will place yourself in the 'Adorer' role. This means that you are eagerly placing yourself under her sexual authority instead of actively working on bringing her under your own and working through the implications of that. This approach is an inversion of the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife model and sets up the relationship to be debased and anti-Christian from the beginning. Also, this will force her in the place of the 'Adored' which is generally not where women want to be because it robs them of the emotional experience that women typically seek from romantic relationships. A man in the 'Adorer' role is also less attractive to her because if you're 'looking up' at her, then she's 'looking down' at you and it's very hard for a woman to love, let alone respect a man that she is forced to look down on.

So in total, emotionally investing too soon can significantly compromise attraction and drive a woman right out of your life. Remember, you can't want someone into wanting you more, so just cool your jets. Either way, it's just not a good idea for men to allow themselves to emotionally invest in any given woman until they conduct sufficient due diligence. They may need to actively resist the urge to do so.

The General Strategy

A lot of guys they have a great first date and they're already thinking about what their kids are going to look like. Or they meet a woman who F*cks them real good and they think, "Wow! She's perfect! I finally found THE

ONE!" This is inappropriate gentlemen. Take care not to get ahead of yourselves because you are setting yourself up for a fall.

Men, it is your job to resist the pull to emotionally invest in any given woman until it is appropriate to do so. Dealing with women is a lot like playing poker. Every once in a while you're going to be dealt some good hold cards. But if you start jumping out of your chair and changing your bedding behavior every time you get pocket aces, you're not going to win that pot, and you haven't even seen the flop yet. That's an advantageous position to be in, but you have to put on your best poker face in that situation. You keep a rein on your emotions. You cannot deviate from your system because that's your best bet of actually raking in a big pot. In that circumstance, you can NOT allow your emotions to change your behavior.

Now there are several things that you can do to resist the pull to invest emotionally.

1. Guard Your Thoughts

First and foremost, you need to guard your thoughts. If she's not around, don't think about her. In general, it's not a good idea to let your mind wander to things that aren't present in your life. If you do this, then you will be where your life is not, and that's not generally where you want to be.

2. Be Present in the Moment

You want to be where your life is, because at the end of the day, that's all you really have.

Be mindful of where your thoughts are. Are you remembering how she giggled or moaned? Are you fantasizing about the next encounter? If you spend more and more time with the mental construct of a woman in the privacy of your own consciousness, then you are basically training yourself to 'fall in love' with the idea of who she is. That is unwise gentlemen. Be mindful of this and redirect your attention to other things, e.g. your work, your friends, your fitness, or just what's right in front of you.

3. Maintain Detachment

Next up, if you've only known ~~yourself~~ each other for a few weeks, you should not be texting every day, let alone

all day, every day. Constant communication dramatically accelerates the emotional intimacy process. I understand that it might be reassuring and exciting, maybe even flattering for an attractive woman to blow up your phone. However, if you respond to everything she sends you then she is functionally dictating the cadence of interaction. This is the most common way that men slip into a woman's frame without realizing it.

Get back to her when YOU want to get back to her. She's going to have whatever emotional response she's going to have. That's not up to you. And if she throws a tantrum because you kept her waiting, as opposed to feeling grateful that she got a response, then you just learned a valuable piece of information, didn't you?

4. Avoid Inappropriate Disclosure

Some of you guys are going out on like 12-hour dates where by the end of them you end up sharing your deepest darkest secrets with each other, all of your previous relationship trauma, an abridged history of your entire childhood, and your most sincere wishes for the future. Why are you doing this? You do not yet know who this person is! You do not yet know what they are going to do with this information.

This is like Achilles telling some girl he just met, "You know, I don't really like to admit it, but I'm a little soft around the ankles." Why would he do that?

This is essentially what men are doing when they believe they can be emotionally honest and transparent with a woman and naively expect her to respond with increased empathy, intimacy, and understanding.

Relational Currency is an Investment

The rule of thumb is that if you're not yet ready to trust this person with your bank account information, then you're not yet ready for this level of vulnerability. Because that's essentially what you're doing by opening yourself up to a woman and getting involved with her emotionally. She's going to consume your time and money. And after that, she'll want and expect even more.

Furthermore, building a relationship with the proper God ordained structure (or else steering clear of a bad relationship) is potentially more valuable than money. After all, you can make more money, but you cannot undo all the trauma, heartache, shame, and the multiple costs of opportunity that will consume your life after getting involved in an unwise and unholy consummation. Trust me. Being robbed is easier to recover from than a toxic relationship. Though obviously, I'm not recommending either.

People make decisions with their heart that they would never make with their money. They believe that they can just "get over things". As a therapist, let me tell you that it is actually fairly difficult for most people to just "get over things", and getting emotionally involved with the wrong person is right near the top of the list of things that are hard to "just get over". So until you trust someone with your money, don't trust them with your heart. Just be two consenting adults who enjoy each other's company.

The Risk of Falling in Love

A metaphysical understanding of the experience of 'falling in love' is when one is deeply humbled by their desire for another person. In the case of romantic love, a man's emotional / sexual desire places him under a woman's control. This is the recipe for both Churchian Chivalry and simpdom.

These things are what cause men to fall in love with a woman and become emotionally invested.

1. Communicating constantly
2. Mentally obsessing about her
3. Being emotionally open / vulnerable
4. Spontaneous sex

That's how men become emotionally invested.

'Falling in love' places a man at a woman's behest. When a man falls in love with a woman, he is essentially handing her the keys to his heart, his life… and his bank account.

We're rather well aware of the pitfalls of (2) obsessing (i.e. pedestalization) and (4) sex, but we aren't prone to think that a man (1) engaging in constant open communication and (3) wearing his heart on his shirtsleeve are just as damaging and risky.

The prize at stake is the man's own masculine authority.

OTOH, women fall in love with…

1. Masculine dominance
2. Objective detachment
3. Fantasy / Mythos / sweet sensuous lies
4. Someone who incites strong emotions in her (especially fear, risk, and shock), taking her on a rollercoaster of positive and negative Feeelz.

A man can't rise to any of these if he's down with One-itis, P_ssy whipped, and stuck on Simp mode.

Epilogue

Ultimately, a man has to choose which one he loves more:

1. The emotional high and crash that comes from being humbled by a woman, AKA 'love'.
2. Drawing boundaries that will keep him grounded, steady, and in control — as God intended.

There is no middle ground. There is no Purple Structure. Egalitarianism is a beguiling euphemism for female dominance.

This is not to say that men should never become emotionally invested in a woman, just that you damn well better be sure that that woman is safe and trustworthy and competent and loyal before you do so. If you're unwilling to take the time to figure that out beforehand, then you are just asking for pain. Don't you have enough of that in your life as it is?

So get a handle on your emotions, gentlemen, and don't be stupid.

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: Boundaries (2015/8/6)
- Radix Fidem: Boundaries with Women (2019/1/29)
- Σ Frame: How to Develop an Attitude of Detachment (2020/7/10)
- Σ Frame: Determination and Detachment (2022/4/2)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Laying out Boundaries (2022/10/19)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment (2023/1/30)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment is a Boundary (2024/1/16)

6. The Law of Evaluation

Jack · 18 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Pain is sometimes good and necessary.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,900 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

The Law of Evaluation

The Law of Evaluation is perhaps the most awkwardly named Law among the 10 outlined by Cloud and Townsend.

Basically, The Law of Evaluation addresses the phenomenon that what feeelz good is often harmful, and that which hurts us in the experience actually helps us in the long run.

"No pain, no gain" is a colloquial secular axiom that accurately sums up The Law of Evaluation.

An application of The Law of Evaluation requires us to recognize this phenomenon and act wisely. The general idea is that it is more difficult to do what must be done to achieve a greater outcome than it is to achieve less. This corresponds to Maxim 33.

Σ Frame Maxim 33 (Jack): It's easier to tear down than to build up. Wanton destruction is simple but creation is long and labor intensive. A simpleton naturally creates discord, but it requires a united collaboration of the wise to foster civility and unity.

Case Study 1 — Going to the Dentist both Hurts and Helps

To illustrate this Law, Cloud and Townsend recounted this old anecdote.

> "Well, have you ever gone to the dentist?" I asked.

> "Sure."
>
> "Did the dentist hurt you when he drilled your tooth to remove the cavity?"
>
> "Yes."
>
> "Did he harm you?"
>
> "No, he made me feel better."
>
> "Hurt and harm are different," I pointed out. "When you ate the sugar that gave you the cavity, did that hurt?"
>
> "No, it tasted good," he said, with a smile that told me he was catching on.
>
> "Did it harm you?"
>
> "Yes."
>
> "That's my point. Things can hurt and not harm us. In fact, they can even be good for us. And things that feel good can be very harmful to us."

Smoking is enjoyable but has many long term adverse effects.

What is the Nature and Purpose of Suffering?

Case Study 1 presents a very simplistic dichotomy, but the point is that hurt and harm are different in terms of the longitudinal outcome.

In reality, all of life entails suffering, no matter what we decide, or what we do or don't do. In a previous post on suffering, I outlined 5 sources of suffering and 5 purposes of suffering, some good, some bad. If we make a good decision, we suffer under the load of responsibility. If we make a bad decision, we suffer under the consequences. I'm sure you get the idea.

Regarding suffering in relation to boundaries,

- Loving others properly always involves pain and suffering.
- Failing to love others properly brings a different brand of pain and suffering.
- We cause pain when we make choices that others don't like.

- We hurt ourselves when we always cave in to the decisions of others.
- We cause pain when we draw boundaries that leave others disappointed and frustrated.
- We cause pain when we fail to draw boundaries, also leading to disappointment, regret, and shame.

In sum, the difference all depends on whether our suffering bears good fruit or bad, and what it produces in our personal character and in the lives of those around us.

The Value of Evaluation

This is the point at which the odd name of The Law of Evaluation begins to make sense.

We cannot go through life running on autopilot, and neither can we plod through our days diligently attending to what we believe to be good decisions, without reflecting from time to time on what it is that we are actually accomplishing. What do we have to show for all the decisions we've made and sufferings we've endured?

We need to evaluate the pain that our boundaries, our choices, and our confrontations cause other people as well as ourselves. Are we truly making an investment in the lives and well-being of others, or are we merely degrading ourselves by constantly sacrificing ourselves to a frazzle? Do our boundaries cause pain that leads to real injury? Or do they cause pain that leads to growth? We need to see how this hurt is helpful to others and sometimes the best thing that we can do for them and the relationship. We need to evaluate the pain for what it is worth, and appreciate suffering in a positive light.

Cloud and Townsend conclude,

> "You need to evaluate the effects of setting boundaries and be responsible to (not for) the other person, but that does not mean you should avoid setting boundaries because someone responds with hurt or anger."

Correlation to the 10 Commandments

This is connected to the 8th Commandment: "Thou shalt not steal." (Exodus 20:15; Deuteronomy 5:19) When we choose short term convenience and pleasure over long term achievement and gain, we are essentially stealing from ourselves and/or others the opportunity to achieve something better. In effect, we are "eating the seed corn".

Correlations to the New Testament

> [13] "Enter by the narrow gate; for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leads to destruction, and there are many who go in by it. [14] Because narrow is the gate and difficult is the way which leads to life, and there are few who find it.
>
> Matthew 7:13-14 (NKJV)

Cloud and Townsend identify the "broad gate of destruction" as a failure to set boundaries where we need to. Conversely, the "narrow gate" is an honest, purposeful life that leads to good fruit. The "narrow gate" requires setting boundaries which is difficult because it requires decision making and confrontation, which, in turn, may cause pain to yourself or someone you love.

The Law of Evaluation combined with The Law of Responsibility yields this one.

> Therefore, putting away lying, "Let each one of you speak truth with his neighbor," for we are members of one another.
>
> Ephesians 4:25 (NKJV)

Also,

> As iron sharpens iron, So a man sharpens the countenance of his friend.
>
> Proverbs 27:17 (NKJV)

The Red Pill Lens

Men are prone to think with their minor head, place the fun F_cky feeelz first, run after The Lie of Romantic Love, and thus become ensnared in the quagmire. In doing so, men bend the metaphorical knee to the idolatry of p00n pedestalization and thereby abdicate their natural authoritative position as Heads. Instead, a man needs to exert a significant effort to rein in his emotions and suppress his fleshly appetites, as was covered in How to resist becoming emotionally attached (2024/1/17).

It seems that dealing with women in any capacity always involves offending their sensibilities at some point, and women usually respond to this perceived offense by creating more trouble for the man. It cannot be avoided really. Yet, men must do what they can to offer moral guidance based feedback to women in their charge, because (ahem) they'll never 'get it' on their own.

Likewise, women find it unbearably onerous to submit to male authority (unless they're paid ca$h and then sent away afterward). Yet, women must willingly exercise agency to submit themselves to their male head in order to overcome their fleshly nature and avail of the blessings of the covenant.

The theme of December 2023, The W!tchy War on Masculinity, provided a number of examples and case studies of how the converged church continues to lumber obstinately towards apostasy, all the while believing they are serving the gospel, thereby revealing a sore neglect of The Law of Evaluation. Worse, the church is failing to evaluate its overall impact on men and continues to be a Beta Factory. Sad, really sad.

Case Studies Related to The Law of Evaluation

1. Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Cross of Our Age (2021/5/3)
2. Σ Frame: Women Rely on a Man's Frame for Redemptive Introspection (2021/6/28)
3. Σ Frame: Why challenge the character of your wife? (2021/7/7)
4. Σ Frame: No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29)
5. Σ Frame: The Young Man's Problem (2022/2/4)
6. Σ Frame: The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual / Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
7. Σ Frame: On Choosing the Flesh over Christ (2022/9/10)
8. Σ Frame: Analysis Paralysis is the Gateway to the Abyss (2022/9/19)
9. Vox Popoli: God withdraws His hand (2022/10/2)
10. Σ Frame: Men's Altruistic Idealism in an Age of Apostasy (2023/7/28)
11. Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Covenant Cross (2023/12/2)
12. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Power to Create vs The Power to Destroy (2023/12/4)
13. Σ Frame: Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft? (2023/12/5)
14. Σ Frame: The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)

Related

- Σ Frame: God's Silence During Suffering (2009/12/14)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Clarity of purpose (2014/2/15)
- Σ Frame: The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10)

The Mating Dance and Female Erotic Fantasy

Red Pill Apostle · 19 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Establishing boundaries early in the relationship is crucial for LTR success.

Targeted Readership: Men
Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Author's Note: This post is based on a discussion with Jack on 2023/10/5-6.
Length: 2,100 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes + 2 videos totaling 9 ½ minutes.

Jordan Peterson: The Main Sign That SHE IS GOOD (2023/8/17) Length: 5:34

Prof. Peterson's monologue is transcribed below with our commentary added.

The Mating Dance — How to Check if She is Good?

In offering us a description of the Mating Dance, Peterson highlights that the Mating Dance is brutal, cut-throat, and No-Holds-Barred, and that the entire selection process happens (or should ideally happen) before consummation. It has to be to create good, solid pairings and high quality offspring.

> "You're a young guy with plenty to offer and you're a hot young woman, and you meet, and you're pretty attracted to each other. Now both of you are going to fall under the sway of short-term temptation, obviously. Now the question is, are both of you or either of you capable of being mature in your regard for your iterated future self and the potential of a long-term relationship? The way the man checks that out is by seeing if the girl will say "no", and maybe he checks that out even harder because he does everything he can to seduce her and she still says "no", you know, and it works and he knows she's interested and she still says "no". Well, then he can conclude that she's capable of keeping her pants on and that's actually something that you need to conclude if you're going to commit to a long-term partnership, obviously, on the male front because you want to be assured of paternity. These are very intense games that men and women play with each other, and they're No-Holds-Barred games because everything's at stake. But again it devolves down to this issue of being able to say "no" even under intense temptation and provocation."

It should be noted that Dr. Peterson is describing the Mating Dance as it was in the 20th century.

The A Priori "No"

It used to be that this interplay was an accepted part of male-female interactions, with women very often being the losers if they failed to exercise their power to say "no". However, these days, women have forsaken their power to say "no" in favor of hypergamic competitiveness, and only resort to it after-the-fact (i.e. in a court of law). Instead, the option of saying "no" a priori is only reserved for lower SMV men who cannot pass a woman's hypergamous filters — the same men for whom in the past, selection was never considered to be an option to begin with. Meanwhile, men's sexually competitive nature is considered 'toxic', which is essentially a culture-wide rejection of the ancient, time-tested Mating Dance.

All of this has bankrupted the trust between the sexes that makes this whole Mating Dance a valid social game. Now, because of the paucity of trust, Men need to be extremely discerning when choosing to hit on a woman. In the 21st century, Men don't have the relative luxury of testing women's sexual boundaries without excessive risk, thanks to #MəT00 and feminist gr@pe culture.

The Classic Female Erotic Fantasy

The Female P0rn Fantasy is an interesting and highly relevant tangent.

> "You even see this in female p0rn0gr@phy. It's so interesting because the classic female p0rn0gr@phic perfect story is, you know, there's this extremely attractive, highly productive man who's got a real capacity for aggression. He's a pirate or a surgeon or a werewolf or a vampire or a billionaire… Those are the fundamental female p0rn0gr@phic tropes. He has women at his disposal. But this woman is shielded off from him. They dance around each other for a long time which essentially means that she's saying "no". He's finally enticed into a relationship with her where he sacrifices all his access to all other women and then they have hot steamy sex. Most of female p0rn0gr@phy is extended foreplay and that's this romantic dance of "no" followed by a very spectacular consummation."

Dr. Peterson's take on female "p0rn" is clarified in the following short segment of his class lecture that covered a book called A Billion Wicked Thoughts that was written by a bunch of engineers at G00gle who were looking at billions of G00gle searches. Here, Dr. Peterson is talking about female fantasy and how the fantasy includes them being the one that can tame the untamable man where all others failed. The male fantasy is bedding the hot woman out of his reach.

Jordan Peterson – Describes Women's Hottest Sexual Fantasy (2021/10/26) Length: 3:55

Moreover, the concept of the basic themes in male and female fantasy fit well with the idea that in marriage men trade commitment for sex and women trade sex for commitment. In short, the genders fantasize about their top priority when it comes to relationships.

What those fantasies show us is another distinct difference between the masculine and feminine. This gives us some insight into why the boss b!tch female superhero seems off. Little girls naturally play house with baby dolls and little boys naturally play with kick ass GI Joe figures. Men don't want their wives taking names and kicking ass. Men want them sweet, soft, curvy, scantily dressed, and suggestively bent over.

The Most Attractive Woman to Men

> "I don't think there's anything more attractive to a man than a sophisticated woman who knows how to say "no". That's top of the stack as far as men are concerned. They'll do everything to test the thickness of that boundary."

Again, this dynamic only works in the context of a socially valid Mating Dance. As mentioned earlier, this aspect of the Mating Dance — testing women's sexual boundaries — is becoming less frequent and more fraught with risk as men and women have become more and more "equal", with the effect that men no longer find a woman who draws sharp boundaries attractive because such actions are no longer defensive and are often offensive. Instead, the current SMP/MMP requires a man to run the gauntlet in order to prove his sexual prowess to a woman before she'll consider marrying him.

Here at Σ Frame and Christianity and Masculinity, we have found that it is wiser these days to test a woman for her willing submission. Is she a helper? Does she comply with your wishes? Does she respect you and your mission?

Pick the Woman Who Says "NO"

Back to Peterson's description of the Mating Dance.

> "[High quality women who are worthy of marriage have] had a lot of good relationships with men, brothers and fathers in particular. Sophisticated women signal to men who are getting a little pushy, in no uncertain terms very early in the pushing game, that "no" is the answer. If you do that really early on in the investigation, then you don't have to use much force [to repel future unwanted advances]. But unsophisticated women can't do that at all. They don't know how. Then what happens is that they run into an unsophisticated guy. He's too dumb to pick up any clues. Then by the time she really wants to say "no", she's already on the bed."

Case Study — Passive Boundaries lead to Passive Gr@pe

> "I'll give you an example of this. You know I had one client who was coerced, in her account, into a sexual encounter by a door-to-door salesman. A typical p0rn0gr@phic fantasy setup. So this young guy is going around door-to-door selling whatever he's selling. He's not one of the world's high status males, let's put it that way. I suppose he's probably got all sorts of fantasies running through his p0rn0gr@phic addled brain. So he comes to the door and she's in the house. She's a reasonably attractive young woman and he's friendly. Well, the first thing she does is invite him in. Now that's stupid! She's alone. She doesn't know who he is at all, and she invites him in. Well, he thinks, "Oh my God! What is she onto? Maybe she really likes me!" Men, and this is especially true if they're narcissistic and immature, radically overestimate the degree to which a woman's attention is signaling availability, for obvious reasons. So he's thinking, "Oh my god! This is my big chance!" So then he starts to press her and she has no tools at her disposal at all, because she has no idea how to signal "no". And let's say she's agreeable and neurotic with a bit of a history of abuse. The next thing she knows, she finds herself on the couch, three-quarters undressed. Then the question is, "Well, is that r@pe?" Well then, that's the question. That's when the police come in and the lawyers come in and you spend the next three years trying to figure out whether or not that's r@pe."

In this case study, which I believe is much more common than we might guess, we see women's power to say "no" being applied after-the-fact rather than a priori. Contrary to what women might say, that's not r@pe but rather sheer incompetency in the Mating Dance. R@pe involves undue force used against a woman's will to upset the Mating Dance by overpowering or removing a woman's a priori power to say "no". (Interestingly, gr@pe is also a female p0rn fantasy, so women may be eager to reframe such an experience in this way.)

In this case, she never exercised her a priori power to say "no". She invited him in. She entertained his attention. She didn't implement boundaries or kick him out at the first sign of improper behavior. She just went with the flow — both of them running on hindbrain autopilot hurtling towards natural procreation. In short, no boundaries.

So what we see here is the natural course of events when boundaries are not enforced, and when immature individuals happen to find themselves in a real life depiction of a female p0rn fantasy. Attribution errors, autopilot, carnal desire, fantasy, solipsism, are all in play. This is the fleshly nature (and the exact situation) that the Bible warns us about.

For more on why women find themselves in these situations, and what they should do about it, please read Donal Graeme on Female Agency (2022/11/3).

She Has Nothing Else to Offer

> "If you have nothing else to offer at all but immediate sexual access, that might be your only game. But if you have anything [else] at all to offer, and that is what you offer, then you're actually going to be thrown out of The Mating Game really quickly, because the guys will just be turned off and they won't call you back. You'll get ghosted like in no time flat. The girls might ask, "Well, I gave the guy what he wanted, so why didn't he call me?" The answer is… No, you gave his impulsive libido what it wanted and that's what you established a relationship with. But you completely sacrificed any possibility at all of being attractive to his more mature and potentially long-term productive and sophisticated self. You make yourself attractive to that by saying, "Not on your life, Joker!"

Here, Peterson is describing the situation we have now — a social context in which no one observes the most basic ontology of the Mating Dance, which is all predicated on a woman's agentic capacity to say "no" in a situation in which her entire being is screaming out "yes!" A woman can only do this if she has a higher allegiance to sexual chastity and she truly believes that she is worthy of a man's committed investment. But now, women no longer believe this about themselves, and are instead questioning the worthiness of the man. So men have no incentive to follow through.

The Music has Stopped

> "I don't know how it is that we start teaching young women… Well, we can just stop — start by not lying to them about absolutely everything, which is what we do now. But I don't know how it is that young women can be taught that the most potent weapon they have is their ability to say "no"."

More precisely, the most potent weapon that women have is their ability to say "no" a priori, and express it long before escalation and in a clear, tactful, and timely manner. Of course, this would require women to instantiate moral agency. Heh.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Greatest Archetype (2021/5/21)
- Σ Frame: Women have sex to influence men (2021/11/10)
- Σ Frame: Donal Graeme on Female Agency (2022/11/3)
- Σ Frame: The Path to Contentment (2023/1/18)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Rules to love / live by were shaped by masculinity, but without masculinity they become garbage (2023/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Boss + Female Employee = Steamy Hot Chemistry (2023/9/18)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Cultural Myth of the SIW (2023/11/8)
- Σ Frame: Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions (2024/1/23)

Wandering in Search of God

Jack · 20 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A response to Gunner Q's counterarguments.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 2,300 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes + 2 videos (optional)

Introduction

Christian Detachment is assumed to be a habit denoting Christian maturity. A previous post, Christian Detachment is a Boundary (2024/1/16), emphasized that individuals must rely upon themselves to establish their own Boundaries, especially in situations where others fail to do so. Furthermore, when all external moral regulations are absent from the medium of exchange (such as on the internet), then Boundaries must be internalized as emotional regulation and self-control.

A more specific application of this emotional / internal regulation was presented in How to resist becoming emotionally attached (2024/1/17), which covered Dr. Orion Taraban's assessment of how men can remain emotionally detached from a love interest when desire is inflamed. This message is not intended to turn good men into senseless cads, but rather, it is directed towards those men who are accustomed to Chivalry, who are habituated in Blue Pill behaviors, who default to simp mode too easily for their own good, and who are therefore met with failure and rejection in their relationships with women.

Gunner Q's Counterargument

Gunner Q has written a post expressing disagreement with Taraban's assessment, and by extension, Jack's argument that Detachment is actually a Christian Boundary.

Gunner Q3: Logic And Society Must Both Submit To Testosterone (2024/1/18)

In a previous study of Testosterone it was concluded that high T traits could be summarized as the strong, vigilant, regular enforcement of Boundaries and that this type of behavior is one of the most outstanding features of Masculinity. Gunner offers the counterargument that testosterone does as much to transgress Boundaries as it might do to enforce them.

Gunner's argument assumes that men, especially younger men, are hard-wired to have no self-control, and that this is actually advantageous — "imposed by God" — to kick start a relationship and to teach men about their relationship to God in ways that bypass the intellect entirely.

He writes,

> "Men are supposed to be in love, or lust, when they first get married. The hardwiring men have, is that those early happy experiences will give him "wife goggles" to help him through the inevitable hard spots of marriage. It's emotional behavior, not rational behavior, but it's how God made us."

And,

> "The male sex drive is a need to be met, not a moral failing to be overcome. It cannot be wished away and the people demanding that, don't even want the successful result of men no longer being tempted to marry. They just want to not blame the woman."

I agree that those who assiduously avoid placing the finger on women are gyneolaters, but those who pedestalize the p00n (e.g. lust) are too.

Problems with Gunner's Argument

It seems like Gunner is referring to Complementarians here, but since his essay is apparently a response to my post, I have to assume that he is referring to either myself (Jack) or Dr. Taraban. Both Taraban and I never 'demanded' that men should somehow divest themselves of their libido (as if that were reasonably possible), but only presented the concepts of drawing Boundaries (Jack) and emotional regulation (Taraban) as wise methods of gaining more control over one's life.

I find it interesting that Gunner apparently does not recognize the spiritual pitfalls of the Young Man's Problem, and that he thinks I (?) am not recognizing women's role in the equation. It is not about blame, but about how men are to deal with reality.

The weakness of Gunner's argument is that it assumes men who are overcome with lust eventually wind up in marriage, and that marriage is a direct result of male lust. This is probably only true for lusty high status males who ALSO (1) get baby trapped and have a compunction to follow through with marriage, and/or (2) have a sensitive conscience that informs them that they must not have extramarital sex and/or that they must marry before having sex (1 Corinthians 7:8-9). In both cases, the man's own conscience directs him to marry rather than to play the field. Ironically, this is also a form of internal regulation.

The majority of men, i.e. those who are NOT HSM, will likely find their fleshly appetites to be a burden and an obstacle in establishing a relationship with a woman and in achieving the Christian structure of Headship. The simple reasons for this are that (1) being enslaved to the desires of the flesh is debilitating to a man's conscience and his ability to think clearly (e.g. compare to post nut clarity), and (2) male lust is generally very unattractive to women — unless she thinks he's hot, and his lust is directed specifically at her, which would place him in the HSM category described above.

Context.

Aside from this basic incongruency, let's consider Gunner's other viewpoints.

Testosterone Trumps Logic?

Gunner argues that it is utterly futile to expect young men to be more self-aware.

> "Do old men remember being young at all, when they advise a young man to control himself? A young man doesn't choose to be unaffected by hormones for the exact, same, literally chemical reason that a junkie doesn't choose to die of an overdose."

Because in fact, it is the will of God!

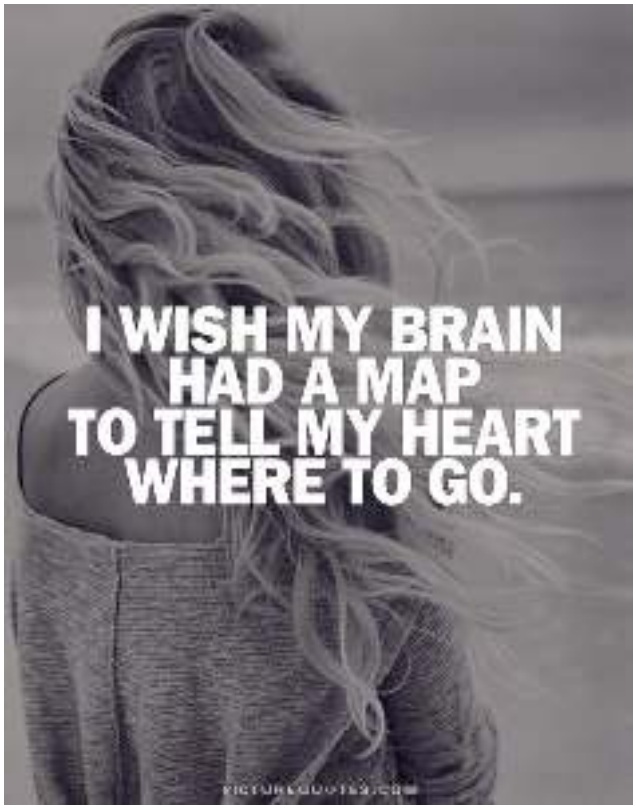
> "But men are wired to be like that. We have literal wiring, imposed by God to teach us about our relationship to Him in ways that bypass the intellect entirely. A smart move on God's part."

Logical thinking is one of the benefits of Testosterone, but it requires maturity to use it wisely.

Logic is Inhuman?

Overall, Gunner Q argues that while logic is crucial for rational discourse, societal norms and values as well as hormones (i.e. testosterone) do more to shape the acceptance or rejection of logical arguments such as the one presented by Dr. Taraban. His point is that Taraban's logical approach is 'inhuman', and by extension, expecting men to be self-aware and draw emotional boundaries is inhumane.

He writes,



> "There's a problem with rational self-interest and logical reasoning: it's inhuman. As in, humans have hardwired behavior patterns set by God and not easily altered by force of will. A basic example is the current > dating / marriage situation, for which… today, as always… ever more demands are made of young men who have no ability to either conjure a unicorn, predict the future, or turn off his hormones until unicorns happen spontaneously."

Yes, but rational self-interest and logical reasoning are not the usual culprits in this case. What is truly inhuman is the crucible of sexual frustration that most men experience. I agree that demanding more of men in this situation is cruel, especially in matters that are out of their control.

Even so, the challenge these men face is in expanding their domain of authority and control. So care should be taken when pointing this out.

Self-Control is Unrealistic?

> "There's no shame in having no solution to offer young men. There is great shame in offering a solution that sounds good but is hopelessly unrealistic and subtly blames the wrong party. That's the kind of reasoning that leads some Christians to say they believe the Bible, while dismissing the Bible as culturally irrelevant."

I'll admit that not all men possess self-control. If we're going around casting blame then that would inevitably come back on the man himself. But teaching boundaries and emotional regulation is not intended to inflict blame, but to help men gain a greater vision for their lives — something to aspire to and grow into.

Teaching Self-Control is Misandry?

Gunner adds that this is the same as blaming men and relieving women from responsibility.

> "Do they ever notice, that their dissonance comes from abetting female rebellion? Exactly the Eden story? Does the Author? He is also ratcheting the demands upon the man, with no declared expectations of the woman."

Again, I assume that Gunner is referring to me as "the Author", since he cited my post. I find it interesting that Gunner thinks as though I am a Complementarian. The posts cited in the introduction focus on men. However, women's responsibilities and roles have been thoroughly covered in the past. Of course, (Christian) women are also expected to draw boundaries, both internal and external, in order to conform to the image of Christ.

Self-Imposed Emotional Boundaries are Inhumane?

Gunner argues that men should not be expected to war against their fleshly nature because "falling in love is a divinely created behavior", and it is society's fault if that doesn't work out well.

He writes,

> "If it's not safe for a man to fall in love, then it's not the man who needs to try harder. It's not the man who needs to take severe measures to override his natural instincts. It's the entire rest of society because falling in love is a divinely created, if irrational behavior. Is my demand reasonable? Probably not, but it's what God wants, and one shouldn't demand that God be reasonable about His wants. His foolishness is wiser than Aristotle."

Yes, it's easier to blame women or society than it is to take responsibility for one's self.

While Gunner Q's argument has some merits, I'm not sure that a humanistic approach is any less inhumane. Teaching a man to give himself over to his lusts in a culture that will surely punish him for it doesn't seem preferable, or any wiser, or more Christian for that matter, than teaching a man to discipline himself to avoid the snares of the flesh and to impose Boundaries in handling random relationships with cheesecake chicks.

9:08 — "Man sets boundaries, man earns respect!"

The Value of Self-Evaluation

Even though lust is common and to some degree unavoidable, nevertheless, the Bible takes a pretty firm stance against indulging in it.

> "God gave man sexual desire, and in the right context it is harmless. Again, Jacob saw Rachael was beautiful > and desired her for his wife, he did not sin for doing so. In the same manner, if David had merely admired Bathsheba and then walked away he would have not been in sin to think of her naked body as beautiful. (Who bathes on the roof, anyway?) Instead he let lust overtake his heart and he set it on having her by any means necessary. The two mindsets are completely different from one another."

>
> Snapper TRX: This is why we can't have nice things… (2023/12/27)

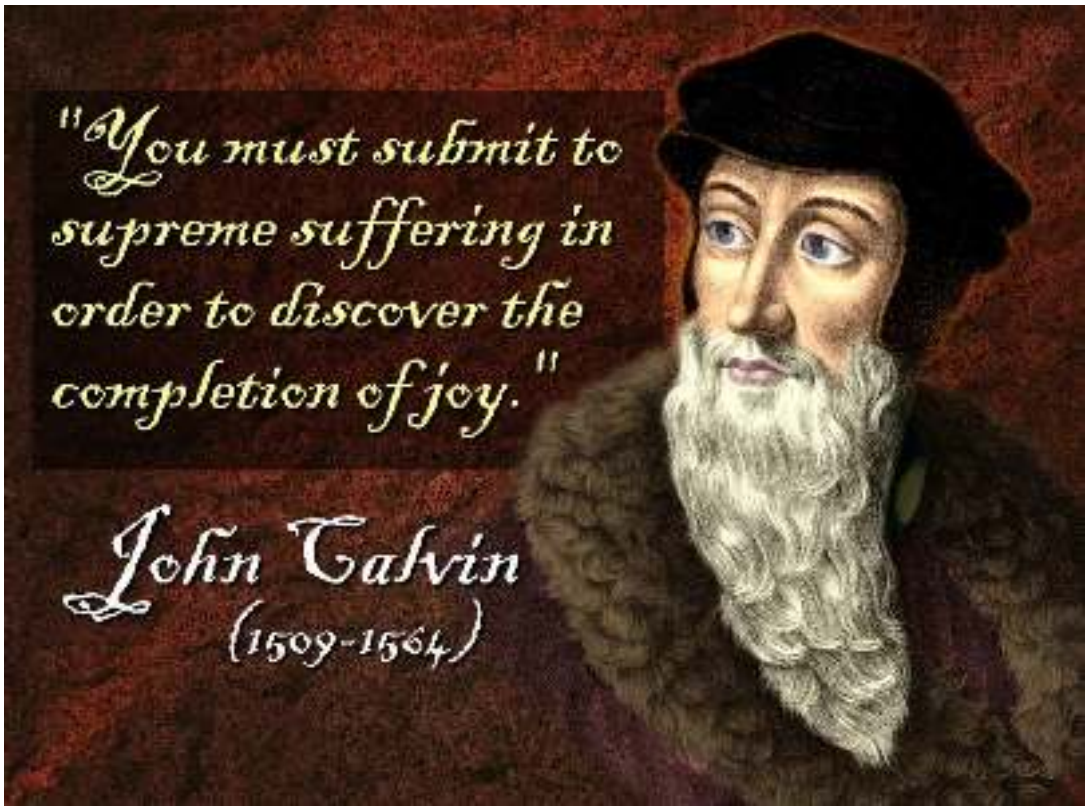
As I discussed in The Law of Evaluation (2024/1/18), introspection and self-evaluation must come into play at some point. What it is that a man has actually accomplished? What does he have to show for all the decisions he's made and sufferings he's endured? The answers to these questions will be different for each man.

Suffering Cannot be Avoided

As I described in The Law of Evaluation (2024/1/18), suffering is inevitable no matter how you approach it.



So which type of suffering do you prefer?

The sufferings of self-control and self-discipline, or the sufferings of mindlessly chasing after the desires of the flesh? Without faith, either one is a wash. The former reduces to legalism, and the latter antinomianism.

But with faith, the possibilities are open.

In the former case, if a man has some degree of self-awareness and self-control, then he might avoid making a mess of his life and thus make further and/or quicker progress towards sanctification, whether it be with or without a wife.

If a man truly has no self-control, then the latter is inevitable, and I agree with Gunner that God does use this circumstance to teach a man about himself and his relationship with the Lord.

> "I went out there in search of experience
> To taste and to touch and to feel as much
> As a man can before he repents

> The Wanderer, by Johnny Cash and U2

None of this is a guarantee of Gunner's hopeful assumption that this will eventually lead to a sanctified marriage, nor that a man's misadventures won't be slapped with a #MəT00 accusation, end in frivorce gr@pe, or worse.

At some point, there is a very good chance that Gunner's approach will not lead to redemption, at least not in a timely manner. It also depends on how we understand redemption. Are we talking about the redemption of the family, of the children, of society, or of the man's own soul?

Furthermore, how is God glorified in this?

Conclusions

At best, Gunner's argument extends compassion and God's grace to men who hope to find passion in life and the joys of being thoroughly humbled by love, what Taraban calls, "the role of the adorer". The deeper question that is unique to each man is whether he is adoring God or P00n.

At worst, Gunner's approach could be interpreted as a tacit endorsement of "Enjoy the decline" and "It's never been a better time to be a player". It is comparable / equivalent to the widely criticized female stance of "finding yourself" and "You only live once" (YOLO). The kicker is that Gunner backs up his position with doctrinal support. Whether this is heretical is a question I will leave for readers to address in the comments. Let us remember that the idea of marrying for love was introduced by modernism.

In summary, wandering is not only characterized by a lack of purpose, but also by a lack of Boundaries, whether it be due to cluelessness or impulsiveness. We are all wanderers in some form or fashion, no less in the sociosexual arena of life. But at the very least, we have the duty to ourselves to recognize what we are up against and be honest about it.

Finally, I'd like to thank Gunner for proposing this counter argument so that we can further examine the nuances.

Related

- Σ Frame: How to Develop an Attitude of Detachment (2020/7/10)
- Σ Frame: Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy (2021/6/23)
- Σ Frame: Unlucky in Love? (2022/3/9)

- Σ Frame: Determination and Detachment (2022/4/2)
- Σ Frame: Love begins where perfection ends (2021/9/22)
- Σ Frame: The Lie of Romantic Love (2023/2/3)
- Σ Frame: Testosterone is Associated with the Assertion of Social Status (2023/8/22)
- Σ Frame: Testosterone Facilitates Social Interactions (2023/8/24)
- Σ Frame: Testosterone Makes Men more Punitive and also more Generous (2023/8/26)
- Σ Frame: Marry for Love? (2023/12/16)
- Mogadishu Matt: Inhumane Resources: The Celebration Factor or We Speak From Experience (2023/1/19)

7. The Law of Proactivity

Jack · 22 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Desire cannot be suppressed for too long.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 2,200 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes + one 12 minute video

The Law of Proactivity

The Law of Proactivity has to do with taking deliberate and thought-out actions to solve problems based on our values, wants, and needs, as opposed to impulsive emotional reactions.

When we think of individuals who are emotionally and spiritually mature, we are most often thinking of proactive people — people who habitually do the emotional work of regulating their emotional and psychological state, who deal with difficult situations with grace, patience, and wisdom, and who recognize that spiritual adulthood has higher goals and larger purposes than "outdoing the Joneses", or "finding yourself".

Proactive people are able to keep their freedom by confronting issues, disagreeing with others, planning ahead, and negotiating wisely, and they are able to do so without getting caught up in an emotional storm (unbridled anger, having a pity party, throwing a tantrum, etc.).

Proactive people show you what they love, what they stand for, what they want, and what their purposes are, which ties into #10 The Law of Exposure.

There are a few colloquial metaphors that use symbolic language or offer analogies to describe various aspects of The Law of Proactivity.

- "For every action, there is an equal and opposite reaction." — from physics.
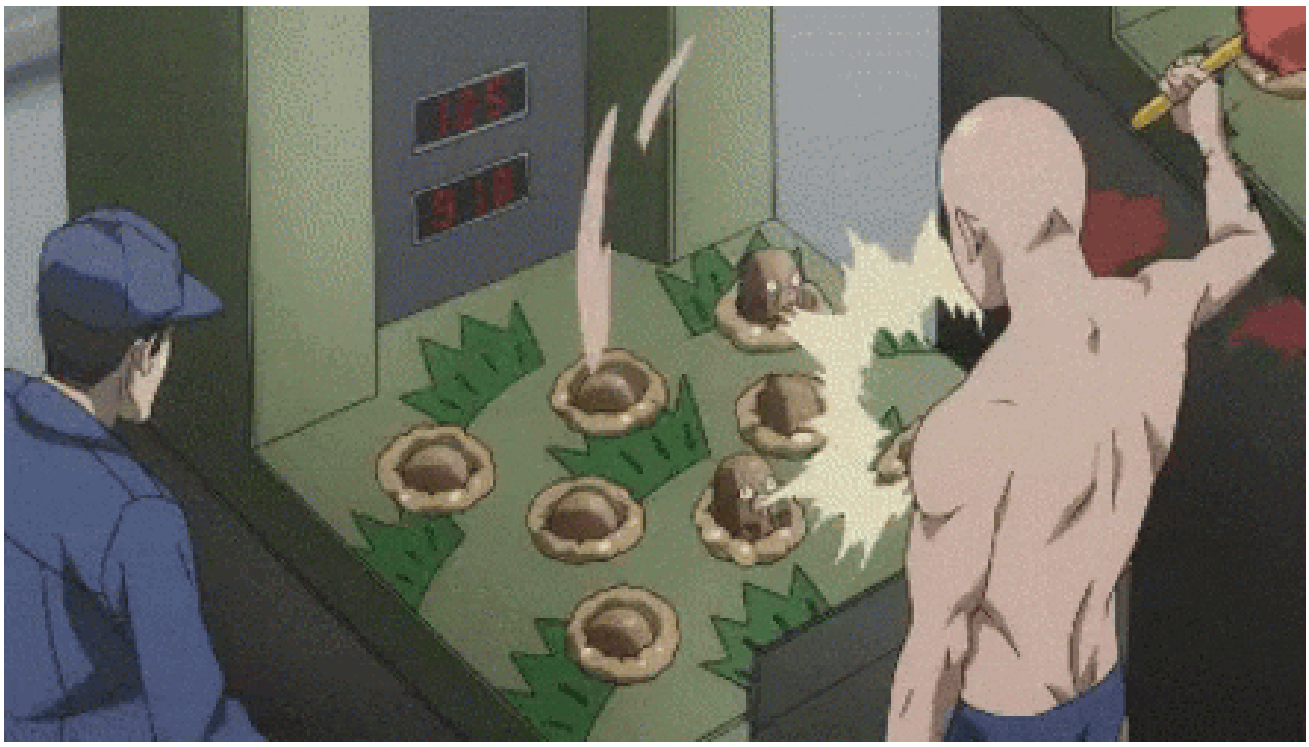
- "Freedom is not free." — Whatever privileges you might enjoy were bought with a price that was already paid (often by someone else), and the value of the price paid far outweighs the conveniences of your privileges.
- *"Popping the pimple" – Pain is reduced and healing is expediated when the infection / source of the problem is dealt with.
- *"Squeezing the soap" — The tighter you grip a wet bar of soap, the more likely it is to slip out of your hand. The analogy is that the more you try to control someone or some behavior (in the wrong way), the more difficult it becomes.
- The Whack-a-Mole arcade game* — If you limit or suppress a person, action, or behavior then another action / behavior emerges elsewhere.
- *"Finding yourself" — This is thought to be the practice of abandoning all ethical and moral standards that are suspected of preventing one from discovering what is considered to be a full life and/or one's true self. In reality, it is a phase of psychological development in which one tests and redefines one's personal boundaries — a process that more often than not has been postponed for far too long.

 These are further described in the next section.*
 When a woman says this, she may or may not be referring to a process of establishing personal boundaries. Sometimes women will say this merely as an excuse to exit a relationship. Discernment is needed to tell the difference.*



Problems Related to The Law of Proactivity

Problems arise when people fail to act proactively, or are prevented from being proactive. This enervates the will and causes a person to feel like they have no control over their life, which in turn erodes faith, hope, and joy. Also, for proactiveness to be beneficial and fitting, it must align with, or at least not violate one's heart-felt desires and dispositional nature. If it does not, then things will progress until a critical unraveling occurs in which a person will attempt to reestablish an internal locus of control and gain a sense of autonomy. This realignment may be very messy, but in fact, it is necessary and healthy for the person's well-being.

A short list of circumstances that tend to aggravate this Law of human nature are when…

- People are not allowed to make their own choices.
- People are not allowed to be proactive on their own initiative.
- Individuals are not able to develop a healthy trust in authority.
- Human nature and/or desire is suppressed. This includes emotional expression and intimacy.
- People are not permitted the grace necessary to have faith in the boundaries that are imposed upon them.

Moreover, when people do not exercise control over their own lives, then their lives control them instead.

In Boundaries, Cloud and Townsend offered a very clear and relatable description of what this unraveling typically looks like IRL.

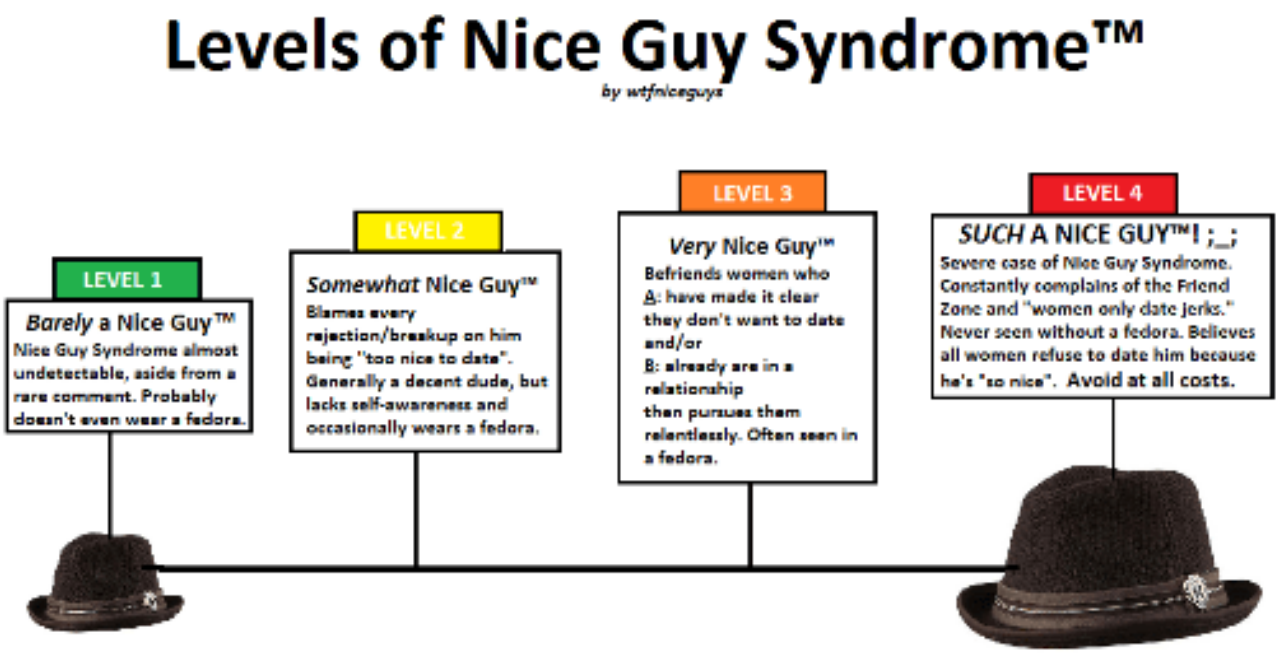
> "Many of us have known people who, after years of being passive and compliant, suddenly go ballistic, and we wonder what happened. We blame it on the counselor they are seeing or the company they've been keeping.
>
> In reality, they had been complying for years, and their pent-up rage explodes. This reactive phase of boundary creation is helpful, especially for victims. They need to get out of the powerless, victimized place in which they may have been forced by physical and sexual abuse, or by emotional blackmail and manipulation. We should herald their emancipation.

> But when is enough enough? Reaction phases are necessary but not sufficient for the establishment of boundaries. It is crucial for the two-year-old to throw the peas at Mommy, but to continue that until forty-three is too much. It is crucial for victims of abuse to feel the rage and hatred of being powerless, but to be screaming "victim rights" for the rest of their lives is being stuck in a "victim mentality."
>
> Emotionally, the reactive stance brings diminishing returns. You must react to find your own boundaries, but having found them, you must "not use your freedom to indulge the sinful nature… If you keep on biting and devouring each other, watch out or you will be destroyed by each other" (Galatians 5:13,15). Eventually, you must rejoin the human race you have reacted to, and establish connections as equals, loving your neighbor as yourself.
>
> This is the beginning of the establishment of proactive, instead of reactive, boundaries. This is where you are able to use the freedom you gained through reacting to love, enjoy, and serve one another. Proactive people show you what they love, what they want, what they purpose, and what they stand for. These people are very different from those who are known by what they hate, what they don't like, what they stand against, and what they will not do.

> While reactive victims are primarily known by their "against" stances, proactive people do not demand rights, they live them. Power is not something you demand or deserve, it is something you express. The ultimate expression of power is love; it is the ability not to express power, but to restrain it. Proactive people are able to "love others as themselves." (Galatians 5:14) They have mutual respect. They are able to "die to self" and not "return evil for evil." They have gotten past the reactive stance of the law and are able to love and not react.
>
> Listen to Jesus compare the reactive person who is still controlled by the law and others with the free person: "You have heard that it was said, 'Eye for eye, and tooth for tooth.' But I tell you, Do not resist an evil person. If someone strikes you on your right cheek, turn to him the other also." (Matthew 5:38-39)

Cloud and Townsend offered the following prescription.

> "Do not try to get to freedom without owning your reactive period and feelings. You do not need to act this out, but you do need to express the feelings. You need to practice and gain assertiveness. You need to get far enough away from abusive people to be able to fence your property against further invasion. And then you need to own the treasures you find in your soul.
>
> But, do not stay there. Spiritual adulthood has higher goals than "finding yourself." A reactive stage is a stage, not an identity. It is necessary, but not sufficient."



Correlation to the 10 Commandments

This has a connection to the 7th Commandment: "Thou shalt not commit adultery." (Exodus 20:14; Deuteronomy 5:18) Instead of engaging with others, working towards goals, and dealing with problematic issues, we get schmoozy and mutually use the situation to some personal advantage, effectively short-circuiting a situation that would otherwise bring immense blessings.

Correlations to the New Testament

The Parable of the Prodigal Son (Luke 15:11-32) describes two sons. The elder son played by the rules and never attempted to establish his own domain. The other younger son set off on his own in an attempt to establish his own domain, but he ruined his life in the process.

In addition to the passages cited above, Cloud and Townsend also included these.

Wrath and sinful passions are a direct reaction to the severity of the law.

> Because the law brings about wrath; for where there is no law there is no transgression.
>
> Romans 4:15 (NKJV)

> Moreover the law entered that the offense might abound. But where sin abounded, grace abounded much more,
>
> Romans 5:20 (NKJV)

> For when we were in the flesh, the sinful passions which were aroused by the law were at work in our members to bear fruit to death.
>
> Romans 7:5 (NKJV)

Wrath and disillusionment can be reactions to parental injustice.

> And you, fathers, do not provoke your children to wrath, but bring them up in the training and admonition of the Lord.
>
> Ephesians 6:4 (NKJV)

> Fathers, do not provoke your children, lest they become discouraged.
>
> Colossians 3:21 (NKJV)

The Red Pill Lens

Those who grew up in an emotionally suffocating, strict, or ultra-religious home tend to go through a rebellious stage after they reach adulthood and/or leave the home.

The Law of Proactivity may explain why some Christian women are more promiscuous than their secular counterparts.

Feminists are primarily known for their reactive 'against' / victimhood stances, which indicates poor or absent boundaries and spiritual immaturity.

The feminist adages of "finding one's self", and "You only live once" (YOLO), encapsulate The Law of Proactivity. Young women who find this route appealing have never developed an internal locus of control, and therefore have no moral agency. As much as the Manosphere derides this behavior, it may be healthy and even necessary for her own maturity. Good parenting prevents this from coming to a catastrophic head.

When it is said that young women make foolish decisions because they "lack self-esteem", what is actually meant is that they are immature (as described above) and that they have never established healthy boundaries for themselves.

Σ Frame Maxim 11 (Jack): Immaturity is latent evil. Naïveté is blind ignorance. Solipsism is sinful foolishness. These three form a stronghold of sin that prevents one from apprehending Truth.

The Nice Guy Syndrome usually consists of playing by established social norms instead of drawing boundaries most suitable for the man as an individual.

Wives who cajole, nag, and pressure their husbands to take a specific action are actually destroying his internal motivation to do that action. Wise husbands in this situation must know when to do it anyway, in spite of her nagging, and when refusing to do it would be more beneficial for instantiating headship and/or retaining his sanity.

Men who anesthetize themselves with alcohol, P0rn, etc. are often anxious and frustrated in their love life. Pron is almost always a symptom and not a main cause, as discussed in this video.*

Man Talks: The ONE THING No One Talks About When Quitting Porn (2023/10/19) Length: 12 minutes

 H/T: Info*

As a whole, the Red Pill is intended to help men move past the reactive stage (of the Blue Pill mindset) and move towards the proactive stage of setting boundaries (drawing boundaries with women, establishing headship, implementing game techniques, making 'demands', etc.).

Case Study — Jack's Dad lets his sister get earrings

The Law of Proactivity is perhaps most easily observed in raising children, so here I'll relay a true story from my childhood that reveals a positive outcome. In this story, both Jack's sister and father exercised proactivity, followed by his mother and aunt.

When Jack's sister, Rae, was growing up, she wanted to get her ears pierced so that she could wear earrings. She started asking if she could have her ears pierced at the age of 12. She asked this question once or twice every week. But Jack's parents did not allow his sisters / their daughters to get their ears pierced. Every time they said

"no", Rae was glum. When Rae turned 16, she asked again. Jack's mother shook her head in disapproval as usual. But by this time, Jack's father realized that Rae would never stop asking to have her ears pierced, and that at some point, she would have it done herself, outside of their permission. He decided to give her permission so that he could use this situation to express love to his daughter and also to avert her from willfully rebelling. So he smiled warmly and said, "OK. I know you've really wanted to get your ears pierced for a long time. You're 16. I think you're old enough now." Jack's mother was flabbergasted, but she suppressed her reaction until later that night when they could have a private discussion about it. During their discussion, they had the idea that Jack's mother's oldest sister, Mae, could pierce Rae's ears. Mae grew up during a time when women pierced each other's ears (late 1940s) and she knew how to do it. This way, it would be a fun family event (and they could save some $$$).

The next time Aunt Mae came to town, they made a family celebration out of it which became sort of a rite of passage into womanhood for Rae. Aunt Mae held two ice cubes on each side of Rae's earlobes until they turned blue and numb. After swabbing Rae's earlobes with rubbing alcohol, Aunt Mae held a cork behind Rae's earlobes and pierced her ears with a large sharp sewing needle held firmly with a pair of locking pliers. Rae was in pain after her ears warmed up, but her joy eclipsed any discomfort she had when she saw herself wearing her new golden earrings.

Case Studies Related to The Law of Evaluation

1. Donal Graeme: Shattering the Delusion (2013/10/28)
2. Christianity and Masculinity: Christian nice guys are stunted in growth (2014/1/17)
3. Christianity and Masculinity: Christian masculinity, the nice guy, and neediness (2014/1/17)
4. Christianity and Masculinity: Christian nice guys are not good (2014/3/24)
5. Dalrock: If she has enough self esteem she won't tingle for Harley McBadboy (2017/12/7)
6. Spawny's Space: Must All Teen Girls Become Sluts? (2018/1/18)
7. Spawny's Space: Race To The Bottom (2018/1/26)
8. Σ Frame: The Question Apology Game (2019/1/6)
9. Σ Frame: Misplaced Motherhood (2023/5/22)

Related

- Cane Caldo: Foolish and Worldly Talk, by Okrahead (2019/4/1)
- Σ Frame: The Moral Law cannot be set aside (2023/2/24)
- The Modern Man: Did Your Ex Say That She Needed to Find Herself or Be Herself Again?

Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions

Jack · 23 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Displaying a relaxed yet proactive and well-controlled Masculine Dominance.

Readership: Men
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,550 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

The Law of Proactivity is Necessary to Build Trust

The Law of Proactivity has to do with taking deliberate and thought-out actions to solve problems based on our values, wants, and needs, as opposed to impulsive emotional reactions. In this post, I'll go further to describe how being proactive in one's interpersonal relationships is necessary to establish and build trust.

LocustsPlease mentioned several examples of social interactions. Here, I will use these examples to explain how each of these interactions involves pressing against boundaries, essentially creating a more or less affable (meaning non-violent) conflict, and how this conflict enables and clarifies a resolution of interpersonal boundaries leading to increased trust, as described in A Brother Is Borne Out Of Adversity.

Of note, this is the critical response described in The Path to Contentment, and is also the same as what I wrote about making bids and demands. Also, Laying out Expectations, Name it to Change it!, and Addressing Female Disrespect are other examples of how conflict leads to a resolution of Boundaries and an improved relationship.

This dynamic also happens between groups, as I described in The Overton Shake. Conflicts and disagreements over values and purposes lead to new social boundaries and new groups being formed.

Remember, context is everything, so discernment is needed to determine whether the examples below would apply to one's personal situation. As such, this is not intended as advice, just insight, and food for contemplation and introspection. Each man has to figure out for himself what 'works' for him.

1. Word Fluff

LocustsPlease wrote,

> "I get compliments about how good of a father I am from women frequently, even young women in public."
>
> "I have had married men at church tell me how jealous they are of my position to take my pick of many attractive potential wives."

A lot of the talk at church, at the workplace, and other social circles is not intended to be serious. It's just verbal fluff intended to lighten the mood and grease the social interaction.

Most of it is self-expression — people are expressing how they think and feel, and it's not necessarily a reflection of yourself. For example, men saying how jealous they are of you doesn't mean that you're a bonafide Studs McKenzie, nor that you have real actionable choice, nor even that you actually have it better than them. It probably means they are unhappy with their own marriage and wish they were single instead.

But regarding The Law of Proactivity, these types of statements are also exploratory, as in, they're trying to figure out who you are and where you stand on things.

They'll make a statement to see what your reaction is — whether you confirm their assumptions or if you respond very differently from what they expect.

They'll flatter your ego (e.g. being a good father, having a pick of wives, etc.) in order to see what will bring a smile to your face or else arouse some other reaction.

Mature individuals, e.g. pastors and elders, are more likely to communicate in this way.

Again, NONE of it is serious. Therefore, it is important to respond positively and not take offense by any false assumptions they may make. If their assumptions are grossly incongruent with your character / convictions, then it is best to treat it as a joke and laugh it off. They'll interpret this accordingly and realize they were wrong about you.

If you're looking for a heart-to-heart connection or a true brother in Christ, then you must first swim through this sea of superficial fluff and use discernment to find the rare person with whom you might be able to connect with on a deeper level. This takes time.

2. Flirtatiousness

LocustsPlease wrote,

> "…married women at church flirting with me and getting angry when I didn't reciprocate."

There are four things I've learned about dealing with others…

1. Whatever approach people take in the interaction with you, they will expect you to respond "appropriately", which usually means to reciprocate in like manner. If you don't, then they'll think you're arrogant, cold, distrusting, emotionally immature, odd, proud, self-centered, socially awkward, or whatever, depending on your personality.
2. Don't take yourself too seriously. Don't interpret everything as a personal critique. Whatever people are saying or doing is an expression of themselves, and not so much a judgment or criticism of yourself.
3. Don't inject hot ego as a matter of philosophical principle (unless you're in a formal debate), but rather let it simmer on the back burner. Be on the lookout for those who entice or play with your ego. They either truly love you, or they're looking to use you.
4. You have to let people be themselves, and add a shine to that if you can.
5. Personally speaking, I tend to do better in conversation when I let others do the talking, and I steer the conversation with statements and questions. Once in a while I'll meet a particularly reticent yet friendly person, and in that case, I'll find some pleasant present interest to ramble about in order to carry the conversation. Others may have different approaches they can share in the comments.

In the particular case of married women flirting around, well, I would be hesitant to jump to the conclusion that their flirtatiousness in church means that they're looking to actually cheat on their husbands, although it does happen that way sometimes. Most women, including married women, are just looking for attention. Married women who are serious about having an affair tend to be more aloof and discreet and are not likely to attend church with their husband frequently. I've known some married woman who come to church regularly without their husband and mess around. Instead, I would guess they're just doing what comes naturally to them – socializing for the purpose of making themselves relevant, and seeking feedback, social proof, and validation if possible.

Following the above 4 points…

1. You have to play along with them (within proper boundaries).
2. They're hungry for attention (not necessarily your d!ck).
3. If your ego is well adjusted, they may find it attractive. If your ego is NOT well adjusted, then keep it simmering. In this case, having a hot ego will set them off and create more trouble than it is worth.
4. Let her feel accepted and maybe even desired, even if you're not really feeling it.
5. I would talk about something I'm doing there, or my immediate plans for the day, etc., something to display outcome independence which would be taken by them as a form of validation.

Once you start playing along in the social interaction, you will find that you'll become more aware of what is "appropriate" for you to do or say in response. Also, you'll find there is a metaphysical boundary that keeps you out of sin (at least there is for me). Exploring that boundary gives you the chance to discern what the other person is really made of, and you might learn some things about yourself as well. You'll need to press up against that boundary and poke at the limits in order to make an impression on that person. Only then can you say you've made a meaningful connection in terms of trust and bonding. Trust is formed when you're both pressing the boundary – enough for your true persona to shine through — but are respecting it at the same time. If you can gain the trust and respect of others in your church or workplace, that is a big accomplishment in the spiritual world.

3. Dealing with Advances and IOIs

LocustsPlease wrote,

> "I get advances all the time which I have to turn down because I would like to meet a girl who is currently a Christian."

No need to refuse advances, unless she's trying to stuff her hand down your pants. Play along and evade escalation unless one passes your personal filters.

> "It's not uncommon for a hot young girl to hold a door open for me when I enter a building with a glimmer in her eye."

Seems like an IOI and an expression that she's willing to serve you. That's very important.

> "I have met countless men and couples at church. From what I can gather, young single girls go to the college weekly groups. When that's done they are mostly married and start groups with their close friends."

Sounds like you have a lively church in which young people are meeting and getting married fairly young. Single women often come to church to scope for men, and many of the Worldly types leave if they get the wrong kind of competition (conservative, feminine young women), or too much criticism, or if they aren't satisfied with the pickings.

4. Self-Image

Ultimately, it all comes down to who you are as a man. Again, this is different for every man, but you have to push through your own boundaries, both social and psychological, in order to capitalize on establishing your domain of influence. Perhaps one of men's biggest problems is that they rationalize excuses to refrain from action, rather than pushing their fears, hesitancy, and idealogical concepts aside when pressing past their comfort zone.

> "No I'm not willing to work in the young adult ministry just to get a few chances with chicks."

Press the boundary. Try it and see what happens. You might find that it's totally different from what you think.

> "I have to keep my last shred of dignity."

I used to think this way when I was younger, and I even thought this was righteous. But as I've gotten older, I've learned to put aside my pride and self-sufficiency, push myself past my comfort zone, and put myself out there.

> “My standards are not dropping, bending, or breaking.”

In order for standards to be reliable, one needs to test the criteria by which the standards were formed. It is easy to make assumptions without knowing the details.

> “I would rather get shot and killed than marry a woman with any of the red flags I want to avoid.”

Life is fragile. Love is risky. No matter what decision is made, there will be a cost of opportunity and some regrets associated with that.

> “But the reality is, 7 years of zero conversations puts tons of pressure and not a lot of fun on the first relationship , which I feel is turning me into some kind of beta simp which I’ve never been.”

Could it be that Beta Simp habits are slowly producing Beta Simp character?

> “Online dating is a cesspool I refuse to be a part of.”

Agreed. Online dating is stacked against men and has some of the worst sorts of s1uts.

> “But if I date a girl tomorrow and it doesn’t work out, I’ll be almost 46 before I meet another one at this rate. So the smart money is on dying alone.”

In the worst case scenario… Ever heard of the Passport Bros?

If this keeps bugging you, then you’ll need to take action, if only to settle the questions in your mind and soul and find peace with yourself and with God.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Biblical Adage of “Dying to Self” is not Ego Ablation (2022/8/5)
- Σ Frame: A Brother Is Borne Out Of Adversity (2018/6/10)
- Σ Frame: On Clarifying a Christian Culture of Attraction (2022/8/24)
- Σ Frame: Only Hunky Monks can find a Sanctified Marriage (2022/8/26)
- Σ Frame: Sitting on the Fence (2022/9/26)
- Σ Frame: Laying out Boundaries (2022/10/19)
- Σ Frame: Laying out Expectations (2022/10/20)
- Σ Frame: The Path to Contentment (2023/1/18)

8. The Law of Envy

Jack · 24 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Desire must be assessed and submitted to the Lord.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 3,200 words
Reading Time: 18 minutes

The Law of Envy

Envy is an intrinsic part of human nature because God placed in us a capacity of desire. It is this same desire that causes the human experience to be frustrating for the immature / unbeliever.

Cloud and Townsend wrote the following about The Law of Envy.

> "Envy is probably the basest emotion we have. A direct result of the Fall, it was Satan's sin. The Bible says that he had a wish to "be like the Most High." He envied God. In turn, he tempted Adam and Eve with the same idea, telling them that they could be like God also. Satan and our parents, Adam and Eve, were not satisfied with who they were and could rightfully become. They wanted what they did not have, and it destroyed them.
>
> Envy defines "good" as "what I do not possess", and hates the good that it has. How many times have you heard someone subtly put down the accomplishments of others, somehow robbing them of the goodness they had attained? We all have envious parts to our personalities. But what is so destructive about this particular sin is that it guarantees that we will not get what we want and keeps us perpetually insatiable and dissatisfied."

Breast envy strikes again!

> "This is not to say that it is wrong to want things we do not have. God has said that he will give us the desires of our heart. The problem with envy is that it focuses outside our boundaries, onto others. If we are focusing on what others have or have accomplished, we are neglecting our responsibilities and will ultimately have an empty heart."
>
> "Envy is a self-perpetuating cycle. Boundaryless people feel empty and unfulfilled. They look at another's sense of fullness and feel envious. This time and energy needs to be spent on taking responsibility for their lack and doing something about it. Taking action is the only way out."

In summary, the envious person doesn't set limits because his mind is preoccupied with his desires. He is always looking at what others have and is obsessed with wanting it. He is not looking at himself long enough or clearly enough to figure out what choices he has. If we focus on what we don't have, then we do not appreciate what we have, and we cannot act responsibly for that which is already within our sphere of authority.

Envy is miserable because we're dissatisfied with our state, yet powerless to change it. We can never get what we want if we dwell in a poverty mentality that is warped by a mental preoccupation with how we can extract the things we desire from others (instead of looking to God and our own capabilities), and then build our boundaries around our own neediness. This exercise in frustration only leads to exasperation.

Why do well-endowed women ALWAYS seem to be more confident, more mature, and more popular compared to their peers?

Correlation to the 10 Commandments

This aligns with the 10th Commandment, "Thou shalt not covet." (Exodus 20:17; Deuteronomy 5:21) It is important to note that this command is reinterpreted as a promise to believers in the New Covenant. That is, one shall be free to satisfy one's desires and will not be enslaved to envy.

Correlations to the New Testament

This passage from James hits Envy on the head.

> [1] Where do wars and fights come from among you? Do they not come from your desires for pleasure that war in your members? [2] You lust and do not have. You murder and covet and cannot obtain. You fight and war. Yet you do not have because you do not ask. [3] You ask and do not receive, because you ask amiss, that you may spend it on your pleasures. [4] Adulterers and adulteresses! Do you not know that friendship with the world is enmity with God? Whoever therefore wants to be a friend of the world makes himself an enemy of God. [5] Or do you think that the Scripture says in vain, "The Spirit who dwells in us yearns jealously"?
>
> James 4:1-5 (NKJV)

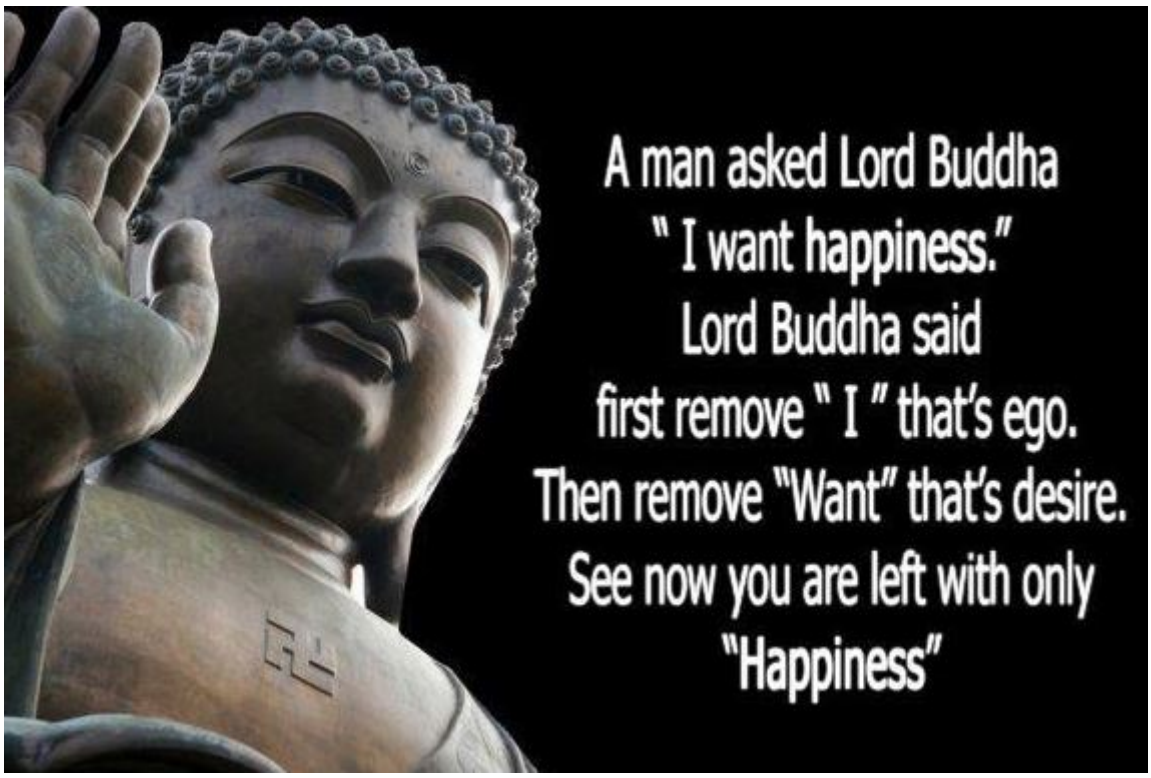
A comparison of Buddhism and Christianity with respect to the Problem of Desire / Envy

Buddhists battle desire on a moment-by-moment basis in much the same way that Christians battle the fleshly / sinful nature.

The Buddhist Approach to the Problem of Desire

Buddhism deals with the problem of desire by squelching or removing desire as much as possible. Buddhism teaches many disciplines and habits that serve this end. For example, a vegetarian diet helps reduce physical strength and vigor which aids in the discipline of the fleshly nature. Sexual immorality is wrong, not just because it debases marriage and family, but also because it arouses libidinous desire. Some Buddhists abstain from sex altogether, including masturbation and sexual relations with one's spouse (usually to the spouse's great disappointment). With much discipline, meditation, and self-denial, some progress can be made toward defeating human desire in this way. The problem with this approach is that it denies and distances desire while never achieving it. One may achieve a very respectable, well-ordered life, but it leaves one feeling empty inside.



The Christian Approach to the Problem of Desire

The Christian approach to the problem of desire / envy involves coming to the realization that there is nothing you can do in your own power to satisfy your heart-felt needs. Even though many Christians know this to be true on a cognitive level, it is difficult and somewhat elusive to attain this knowledge within one's heart. They try to attain their desire through their own effort, often through asceticism or legalism, and may even think they are obeying or trusting in God by doing so. Many Christians wander for years and totally screw up their lives in the process before discovering this truth and taking it to God. It seems that the most difficult thing to do is to humble one's self, pray and ask God for help, and then change one's ways accordingly.

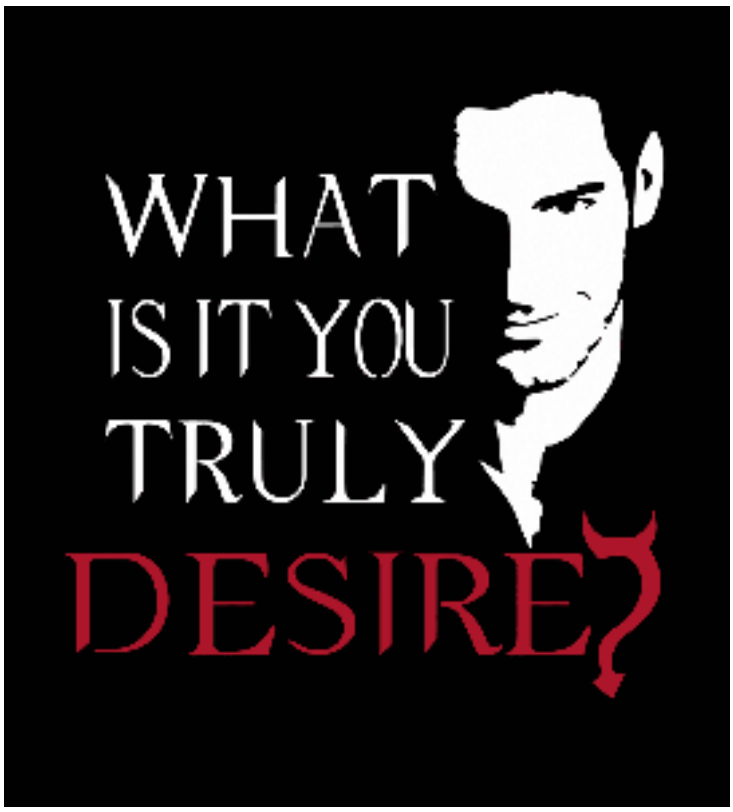
How to Deal with Envy

Envy is a sign that you need something that you are lacking — usually something which is NOT what you are actually wanting, ironically. Also, resentment often appears as an emotional response to this need, simply because you don't want the thing you most need.

One must take this to God. At the moment of clarity, you should ask God to help you understand the following.

1. What do you truly desire?
2. What is it that you resent and why?
3. Is this something you truly desire, or is it simply social pressure or feeling slighted?
4. Why do you NOT have whatever it is you are envying?
5. What do you need to do in order to address the deeper need that is causing you to feel envious and resentful?

Ask the Lord to show you what you need to do to get there, or else that you might give up and let go of this desire.



Continuing the passage from James cited above…

> [6] But He gives more grace. Therefore He says:
>
> "God resists the proud,
> But gives grace to the humble."
>
> [7] Therefore submit to God. Resist the devil and he will flee from you. [8] Draw near to God and He will draw near to you. Cleanse your hands, you sinners; and purify your hearts, you double-minded. [9] Lament and mourn and weep! Let your laughter be turned to mourning and your joy to gloom. [10] Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and He will lift you up.
>
> James 4:6-10 (NKJV)

The idea is that humility cures worldliness and allows one to be more likely to receive that which one desires. Verse 9 indicates that suffering, or more precisely, facing one's suffering, is a necessary part of the process.

Also consider this passage in Romans.

> [2] And do not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, that you may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God.
>
> [3] For I say, through the grace given to me, to everyone who is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but to think soberly, as God has dealt to each one a measure of faith. [4] For as we have many members in one body, but all the members do not have the same function, [5] so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and individually members of one another. [6] Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, let us use them;
>
> Romans 12:2-6 (NKJV)

Women with larger or exceptionally beautiful breasts are ALWAYS more confident compared to their peers, despite being less objectively beautiful overall.
Why? Because they do not suffer from breast envy.
And this verse in Galatians.

> But let each one examine his own work, and then he will have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another.
>
> Galatians 6:4 (NKJV)

The 'transformation' and "renewing of the mind" mentioned in Romans 12:2 has to do with redirecting our attention to what God has given us — our own identity, sphere of authority, and influence — rather than on what we think we want or don't have, or whatever worldly things are going on around us. Romans 12:5-6 describes how others benefit from this, and Galatians 6:4 describes how we ourselves benefit from this.

Cloud and Townsend offered the following examples of individuals who overcame Envy.

> "A lonely person owns his lack of relationships and asks himself and God, "I wonder why I always withdraw from people. I can at least go and talk to a counselor about this. Even if I am afraid of social situations, I could seek some help. No one should live this way. I'll make the call."
>
> "The single woman asks, "I wonder why I never get asked out, or why I keep getting turned down for dates? What is wrong about what I am doing or how I'm communicating, or where I'm going to meet people? How could I become a more interesting person? Maybe I could join a therapy group to find out why or I could subscribe to a dating service to find people with interests similar to mine."
>
> "The middle-aged woman asks herself, "Why am I reluctant to pursue my interests? Why do I feel selfish when I want to quit my job to do something I enjoy? What am I afraid of? If I were really honest, I would notice that the ones who are doing what they like have had to take some risks and sometimes work and go to school to change jobs. That may just be more than I am willing to do."
>
> "The righteous person asks himself, "If I am really 'choosing' to love and serve God, why do I feel like a slave? What is wrong with my spiritual life? What is it about me that envies someone living in the gutter?"

Cloud and Townsend concluded,

> "These people are questioning themselves instead of envying others. Your envy should always be a sign to you that you are lacking something. At that moment, you should ask God to help you understand what you resent, why you do not have whatever you are envying, and whether you truly desire it. Ask him to show you what you need to do to get there, or to give up the desire."

Women don't want to be married or have children. UNTIL… Envy strikes!

Case Study 1 — Appreciate the Friends You Have, NOT the Friends You Want

To offer an example of the transformation that comes with renewing the mind, I'll relay this true story. This makes a clear illustration of how people do NOT want the thing that would bring them what they think they want, and then they become envious and resentful as a result.

In 2020, I had a 12 year old student that came from a dysfunctional home and was perpetually sad and frustrated. She was a tall, thin, and attractive girl, but also very odd and socially awkward. One time I asked her to draw a picture of something she really wants in life. She drew a picture of an anime character. I expressed mock anger and told her to be serious about the assignment. So she drew another picture of a house with people in it, and lots of other people surrounding the house, all of them holding hands and smiling happily. When I asked her to explain her picture she named her family members and friends as the people in her picture, and she started crying. I recognized this as an opportunity to speak to her about what it is she truly desires — a loving home and good friendships.

Our conversation eventually came to the conclusion that there was little she could do to change her home life, but that she had many friends that she should be thankful for. She said she only had one friend, but she was not a good friend. I told her, "Open your eyes! You are a very attractive and popular girl, but you do not cherish those people who admire you. No… Instead, you set your eyes on certain individuals who do NOT appreciate you, and then you try to make friends with those people — with no success. You may not like or be inspired by those people who love you, but those are your true friends. You should try to be a good friend to them instead of dismissing them as being annoying and bothersome. The way this works is that as you begin to appreciate those who truly appreciate you, then you will find that more people will grow to appreciate you more in turn and over time. After a while, you may achieve the thing you really want, which is to be a part of a loving community of friends, and you might even befriend certain individuals who do not appreciate you now. Or you may find that those people are not really worthy of your devotion." In effect, I was asking her to humble herself and to appreciate what she has.

She did not like my advice, but she said she would try it. She began giving more attention and kindness to her admirers, and within a couple months she became even more popular than she was before. Also, she decided that the people she previously thought were her friends were not actually her true friends.

The Red Pill Lens

A large swath of Red Pill lore concerns the uglier aspects of both women's and men's envious nature. All of the following are expressions of covetousness that are motivated by envy, and are summarized in Σ Frame Axiom 34.

- Common female Envy, and all the criticism and drama it creates, is pure, naked, ugly covetousness.
- Feminism is wholly based on the sinful pride and covetousness of broken and/or low SMV women.
- Lust is the sexual form of covetousness.
- Adultery is often a result of the covetousness and lust that grows out of marital discontent and/or sexual frustration.
- Female Hypergamy is characterized by an intense covetousness of having the best man she can find.
- The RP concept of 'Preselection' is founded on the covetousness / envy of having a man whom other women deem desirable.
- 'Branch Swinging' and 'Mate Poaching' occurs when a woman desires a man she does not have more than the man she has.
- Womens' / wives' grasping for power and control over men / husbands (i.e. The Curse of Eve) is an expression of women coveting men's autonomy, authority, and power.*
- Gaslighting (a form of W!tchcr@ft) and psychological projection arise from a mindset of covetousness / envy, usually of power and control.

- Many implications of the Feminine Imperative (AKA, The Gynocracy, The Matrix) are little more than vain attempts to dispose of female covetousness by satisfying urgent desires in ways that usurp male authority.*

 This is a misuse of The Law of Power.*

Case Study 2 — To Slore or Not to Slore?

Cornerstone's post, All or Nothing (2020/9/20), examines a piece at The Cut by Alex Morris, College Virgins Are a Mostly Silent Almost-Majority (2015/10/21).

Morris reports a growing segment of college aged women who are lamenting that they want to have sex and participate in hookup culture, but who cannot because they are restrained by a mysterious expectation that their first time should be "special". He describes this as such.

> "It's that lack of opportunity that's driving Nicole and Rachel crazy. They both know that they're attractive enough to hit up a bar tonight and probably find someone to sleep with. But they both have also subscribed to the notion that their first time should be special — not necessarily with a boyfriend or someone who loves them but at least with someone they care about on some level, someone who will consider their pleasure at least as much as his own."

Morris is projecting a male motivation onto these women by assuming that they are focused on opportunity and pleasure more than anything else. Instead, I believe these girls are consumed with envy. They want to experience the short-term pleasures of Hook-up culture, while at the same time, they want to experience something more than just sex, but they're not sure exactly what, nor how to get it.

The truth is that on a subconscious level, these women know they are facing a life-altering decision that poses a dilemma. In a previous post, The Feminine Dilemma (2018/10/27), I described how women have many choices about which kind of life they might lead, but these choices can be categorized into two divergent paths. The women Morris describes are consternated with this dilemma and cannot decide which one to pursue.

Moreover, they want what they cannot have. They cannot have either of what they crave — sexual liberation nor the deeper affirmation of authentic love — because they cannot decide which to choose. Thus, a double frustration. They are stuck in a fantasy and they cannot even imagine what it is that they truly want.

Case Study 3 — Beta Envy

> "Betas think they will be happiest if they have what Alpha males have, happiest with a rotating series of sterile girlfriends…
>
> Beta males think they want what Alpha males have, but the men that women see as Alphas rapidly discover that what women are giving them is not what they want, it represents the victory of the selfish female defect / defect strategy over the selfish male defect / defect strategy. Every pimp is a cuck."
>
> Jim's Blog: The Three Magic Words (2020/8/7)

Case Study 4 — Making the Difficult Choice to Exit One's Comfort Zone

In Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions, Section 4 contained an example of a man who is stuck in frustration because he's afraid to push the boundaries of his comfort zone.* He wants to meet girls and find a wife, but he's unwilling to change anything about himself or his beliefs in order to facilitate the process.

You have to take action first, and then work towards what you want to achieve as things develop and progress. You have to press boundaries and push back the frontier of your comfort zone. You also have to submit to authority to make things happen, whether it be church authorities, social authorities, or humbling one's self under God's authority.

Aside from this personal hang up, the larger problem is that proper structures of patriarchal authority have been decimated, such to remove or undermine respectable, solid, valid social institutions in which people used to find a sense of belonging and security.

 Deep Strength also discussed this phenomenon in* Christian nice guys are stunted in growth (2014/1/17)

“Jealousy” by Edvard Munch, ca. 1907.

Case Studies Related to The Law of Envy

1. Σ Frame: Formality as an Expression of the Human Characteristic of Desire (2012/10/11)
2. Σ Frame: Book Review: The Love a Wife Desires, the Respect a Husband Needs (5 stars) (2017/12/18)
3. Christianity and Masculinity: The failure of chivalry in Biblical marriage, works and desire, and the failure of game (2018/4/16)
4. Σ Frame: What To Do When A Girl Tries To Make You Jealous (2018/4/22)
5. Σ Frame: Why does Game work? (2019/12/9)
6. Σ Frame: A Revised Understanding of Game (2020/9/14)
7. Σ Frame: What is a woman’s desire for her husband according to Genesis 3:16? (2020/10/23)
8. Σ Frame: The Enigmatic “Right Time” Phenomena (2020/12/10)
9. Σ Frame: Game is an invitation to Humility (2022/10/25)
10. Σ Frame: The Next Step (2023/8/4)
11. Σ Frame: Slut Eye (2023/9/15)
12. Σ Frame: Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT “Found” by Chance (2023/10/9)
13. Σ Frame: Abortion is a Betrayal! (2023/11/11)
14. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Power to Create vs The Power to Destroy (2023/12/4)
15. Σ Frame: How to resist becoming emotionally attached (2024/1/17)
16. Σ Frame: Wandering in Search of God (2024/1/20)

Related

- Σ Frame: The Motivation of Desire (2020/12/1)
- Σ Frame: On the Discernment of Desire (2021/9/24)

- Σ Frame: 5. The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)

Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church – Part 2

Jack · 25 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A follow-up testimony from a reader.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Note: Images do not depict anyone described.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Introduction

Last month, Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church (2023/12/14) covered the real life situation of a long-time reader, Alexei Karamazov*, concerning the problem of having female pastors in the church.

This post contains excerpts of an email conversation between Alexei and Jack on 2024/1/13, pieced together by topic to give us a comprehensive report on Alexei's situation.

 Online pseudonym.*

Σ Frame,

I hope the New Year is treating you well. Thanks again for having published my post. The comments and community were helpful in processing everything.

It's already been a month since I left the church but so many good things have happened since then! Here's an update on what's been going on.

The Female Pastor's Response

Jack: How did it go with the female pastor?

Alexei: That Thursday meeting with the youth pastor did not go well. I was not prepared to fight then and thought to leave on the next Sunday and make the announcement then — but she put the pressure on me with 3 questions:

1. "I noticed in our last conversation you were defiant to me."
2. "You just weren't listening to me."
3. "Can I ask you to submit to my leadership from now on?"

I got scared in the conversation and said yes to these things. After getting home and talking with my family, I realized that was probably the worst way the conversation could go. Miraculously, we thought of the best solution: I immediately called her and walked my compliance back. I brought up our exchange in the Thursday meeting in which I told her that I said "yes" to submitting to her leadership, but then I said, "I take it back. No. I don't want to. I don't believe your leadership is true. I don't believe the Bible gives women authority over the men in church. I quit teaching. I am leaving church immediately."

Definitely not the best way to have handled that, but it was finally done!

The conversation after that was like a break up. At first, she was saying, "Oh! This is so sudden!" and "Do you want to have a follow up conversation?" "Do you want to come to church to say goodbye to people?" "Do you want no contact?" etc. etc. And I just said "no" to all those things. Then it moved to interrogation: "Are you going to tell your Sunday school class?" "What are you going to tell them?" "Who else are you going to tell?" At this point I put my foot down and said, "I think we need to end this conversation." She tried to say a couple more things but then we said goodbye.

The Head Pastor's Response

Jack: I think it is important to let the head pastor (not the female pastor) know your stance and why you left. Have you talked with him about this?

Alexei: I did indeed call the head pastor before that conversation with the female youth pastor. Interestingly, she had already informed him about what happened between us. When I called him, he said that I should share my heart and intentions with her and he was confident that we could move past the disagreement. At that point in time, I was still piecing together the issue of female pastorship, so I didn't share that part with him. To be honest, the whole conversation was part of why I wasn't prepared to confront her on that Thursday. I thought if the head pastor wasn't worried, then I had my reassurance. I even asked him to be present at the meeting! Unfortunately, he was busy that day… but in hindsight, I don't think it would've made a difference.

Even just today he texted me saying that he just heard the news and is a bit sad that I left. He also said that he wanted to reach out "if I still wanted to talk about it at all." To be honest, that message felt a bit manipulative. I have nothing to talk about anymore: that's why I left! I simply told him thanks for his ministry and preaching all these years, and good luck to the church for the future. I think I might be open to furthering our conversation if he specifically asks about what happened, but given the frame of our relationship I don't think it'd be appropriate for me to explain everything to him.

The Youth Group's Response

Jack: What has happened with the Youth Group since then? How did you handle stepping down?

Alexei: That night I texted my Sunday school class and told them that I was leaving the church and if they wanted to know more they could contact me. The week after that I had a bunch of calls, meetings, and text convos with all of them.

There were generally 3 responses from the guys:

1. Some of the guys already had theological foundations from Christian schools. When I explained what happened, they were proud of what I did and wanted to stand with me. They also immediately left the church altogether.
2. Others were sad to see me go. They have families in that church so they knew that they couldn't do much (from their perspective) and chose to continue attending or serving in the youth group. Ultimately, they aren't too bummed since we've been hanging out a bunch outside of church anyways, so not that much would change.

3. The remaining guys took the information I gave them and started seeing the big picture of dysfunction in the youth group as a whole. They discussed the matter with their parents. Now, they no longer attend the youth service and only attend the adult service with their parents.

I instructed them to not spread gossip or rumors about what happened at church and to redirect people to me if they want to know anything. They did as I asked and basically everyone who I was close to reached out to me when they got the chance.

The Outcome

The past whole month I've met with a dozen or so members from that church since then: parents, college kids who I knew, and other guys my age.

The parents were devastated by the news and frustrated with the church leadership on how the matter was handled. They all showed how much they appreciated my time spent there with their kids. These meetings were super encouraging to me.

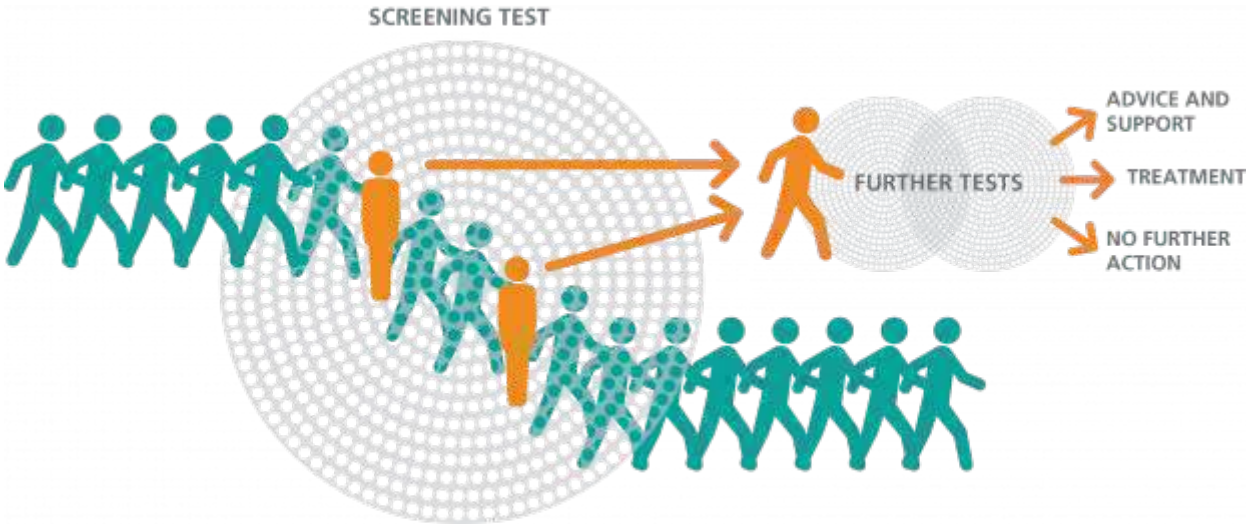
Some parents readily agreed with me on the doctrinal issue of female pastors. Others were struggling with it and so I got the chance to lay out the exegesis of 1 Corinthians 14:34-35, 1 Timothy 2:8-15, and other relevant passages for them. On the whole they are starting to piece together different issues that have come up in the church because of the collective disobedience to Paul's prescriptions for men and women.

The college kids and other guys my age probably have it the hardest since they are involved in other ministries which fall under the female pastor's authority. One of my buddies even got caught up in the crossfire. He was in a call with me and the other kids, and somehow word got out to the female pastor that he was in that call. She basically interrogated him about it, asking, "What did the teacher say to the kids?" and "When you guys met up what issues did you talk about?" etc. etc. He held firm and gave her no information. Fun stuff.

The Numbers

Alexei: The numbers so far are that 6 students have left the church altogether (4 high school senior guys, 1 high school senior girl, 1 junior guy), and 2 kids have stopped attending youth service but attend adult service (1 junior guy and 1 junior girl). 3 of the senior guys left explicitly on agreement with doctrine for no female pastors. I carpooled with another of the senior guys and he doesn't want to drive by himself to church so he's no longer going. One of the junior guys was going mostly for the friend group, so he's no longer going either. The rest left because of separate ongoing problems which may or may not have surfaced by my leaving. I met with 5 families total: the parents are all rooted in that church and are staying.

Jack: It is important to follow up on those who left the church altogether. Don't let them become entirely disillusioned with church because of this schism and fall through the cracks. Keep in touch with them and make sure they maintain fellowship and/or find another church to attend. Remember how Jesus left the 99 to go looking for the one lost sheep (Matthew 18:10-14; Luke 15:1-7).



Bold Leadership brings Judgment on the Church

Jack: There was a huge impact (or at least much bigger than you expected) from your decision to stand firmly against female leadership in the church. Once you brought this to people's attention, they thought it was important enough to take some action themselves. Often times, that's all it takes — bringing awareness. I am surprised that there were so many men who agreed with you and left the church. That is a good sign, I think. Obviously, God used this situation to get a lot of people to think more critically about how the church is organized and the importance of having Biblical consistency. I would say that is the main fruit of your work there — bringing awareness and laying out choices and consequences.

Alexei: Yeah. I was really surprised at all the movements of different people. The fallout is kind of insane. Clearly God has shown me that I am not to be a teacher, but I am to learn and be discipled.

Jack: You've made it clear that you don't see your calling as being a leader in the church, but in fact, that is what you were in this situation. Perhaps apostle is a more appropriate word for your role there. Apostle Alexei. Ha!

Alexei: Hmm… Yeah, it's definitely true that I ended up leading in this situation. For some of these guys I think my discipleship with them will be for life!

The Next Step

Jack: I'm glad that you were able to receive some encouragement from the blog. Thank you for following up and letting me know how things have gone for you.

Alexei: Life moves on! I'm now in the process of searching for a new church and there's quite a bit to reflect on. What does the Bible say about what the church is supposed to be? How can I find one like that? How can I find a community of solid Christian men and what value can I add to such a group? Some immediate things I'm looking for in a church:

1. Expository preaching. If say Romans or 1 Corinthians are preached verse-by-verse, then the difficult passages of the Bible cannot be avoided.
2. Men only leadership, obviously. This is definitely something I've been lacking in and I didn't even know it existed until recently.
3. Doctrine which is specifically anti-feminist, anti-L G B T Q, anti-progressive, etc. etc. I realize the words "just preach the gospel" is incomplete since when you preach the gospel you naturally stand against Satan and all of his stupid tricks. Being lukewarm is lame.

4. In light of that, the church should have some kind of Men's Bible study.

I'm unsure about other stuff like big church vs small church, this denomination or that denomination, and how much certain church programs are needed. At this point, I just gotta try some churches out and see how things play out.

Thanks for the prayers!

Alexei

Related

- Σ Frame: Finding a Good Church?
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Red Pill and Blue Pill as Paradigms of Sanctification and Defilement (with a mathematical analogy) (2020/11/15)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Red Pill Awareness (2021/7/23)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Objective Communications for Effective Group Leadership (2021/11/1)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Advent of Christian Mysticism (2022/8/1)
- Σ Frame (Rock Kitaro): Glorifying God Through the Courage of Upholding His Moral Laws (2023/3/17)

Setting Boundaries Changes Reality

Jack · 26 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Spiritual obedience has a longitudinal impact that goes beyond our conscious awareness.

Readership: Married Men; Marriage Minded Men;
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Introduction

Off and on, Σ Frame, Deep Strength (Christianity and Masculinity), and a couple other writers have addressed the question of whether men should be emotionally honest with a woman, trust women, and/or open their hearts to them, the value and risks of doing so, and why women usually respond with spiteful malevolence when men do this.

Here is a list of posts that have touched on this topic before.

1. Christianity and Masculinity: The fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest (2016/4/12)
2. Σ Frame: Ladies Should Respect the Man and Love the Boy (2018/6/28)
3. Christianity and Masculinity: "Maturity" is a blind spot for pride (2018/6/30)
4. Σ Frame: Creating and Maintaining Heart Trust (2019/4/28)
5. Σ Frame: Do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing. (2020/1/27)
6. Σ Frame: Reevaluating the Centrality of the Male Ego (2020/4/15)
7. Σ Frame: Redefining Manhood as Boyish Immaturity (2021/6/14)
8. Σ Frame: Do men need talk therapy? (2021/6/16)
9. Σ Frame: Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy (2021/6/23)
10. Christianity and Masculinity: The fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest part 2 (2021/6/24)
11. Christianity and Masculinity: "That all changed after we married…" (2021/6/28)
12. Σ Frame: When walking on eggshells, step boldly! (2021/6/30)
13. Σ Frame: Answers to the Exit Questions for the Series on Masculinity (2021/7/2)
14. Adam Piggott: Husbands must not unburden themselves (2021/7/6)
15. Σ Frame: Why challenge the character of your wife? (2021/7/7)
16. Σ Frame: Not Trusting women is Deep Inner Game (2021/12/15)
17. Σ Frame: Wives reap what they sow (2022/1/12)
18. Σ Frame: Who will Take Care of Men? (2023/8/2)
19. Christianity and Masculinity: Around web: teen who aborted gets potential jail time, the fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest (2023/8/15)
20. Σ Frame: Dealing with Feminine Insecurity (2023/11/22)
21. Σ Frame: Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft? (2023/12/5)

Synopsis of Previous Posts and Discussions

Many writers and commenters clung to the idea that men shouldn't trust women at all because it would show their weaknesses. It just gives women ammunition to use against them, and fuels accusations of men being "insecure in their masculinity". Again, we see this common trope being proffered by women in which it is assumed that the man is rather immature.

While this perspective is indeed true and much too common, I think we're not recognizing the ideal situation in which both the man and woman are mature enough to withstand more openness. I know there are couples that enjoy this type of relationship, but they are not likely to visit blogs like ours so their perspectives are underrepresented in our discussions.

In Not Trusting women is Deep Inner Game (2021/12/15), I wrote what I believe is the crux of the issue.

> "In reality, the reason why a man should not open up to his wife is not because he is weak, and he needs to hide his weakness. The reason is because the wife is weak, and she can't face reality without losing faith."

I have toyed with the idea of whether the type of trust offered to a woman makes a difference, that is, head trust vs. heart trust. Right now, I don't think it does. I think what matters most is how mature and trustworthy the woman is, indicated by her level of moral agency. The maturity of the man also matters, because if he is not sufficiently mature, then when he opens his heart in trust, then he'll be spewing a lot of emotional rubbish (which will not be warmly received by her).

La Découverte

I'm sure readers are guessing that I'll connect this topic to the theme of Boundaries somehow, and there are two guesses that are diametrically opposed in theory.

1. Pointing out that men should Press the Boundaries to increase Trust with their GFs or wives.
2. Describing how men need to draw boundaries with their GFs or wives by stepping up their Christian Detachment game, not only emotionally, but also tactically.

However, my conclusion concerning the issue of men's emotional honesty with women is neither of these approaches.

You see, more recently, new reader CGrigorij left a comment under Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy (2021/6/23). He wrote,

> "The fact that today, almost all women do not show any empathy whatsoever for a man's feelings, and instead mock, sh!t test, and manipulate them for their own self-centered purposes when he shows any signs of his emotions or troubles, is unfortunately true, but it's not supposed to be like this.
>
> "A wife is supposed to be her husband's helpmeet, best friend and companion, someone whom her husband can wholeheartedly trust. She is supposed to be caring and empathetic towards him, to comfort him in times of distress. These are not my words, but the words of the Bible (Proverbs 31:11 and Sirach 25:23 just to name a few passages)."

> "However, modern women have been led by the system (aka the Beast) to see men as nothing more than emotionless robots who are allegedly supposed to just be their beta providers of material goods. A godly woman is supposed to care about her husband's emotions, but literally no women today are compelled or led to care about it, because they have no reason to. On the contrary, they are taught to act according to their unrestrained lawless nature, that is, to use men as their tools for achieving material prosperity and their own sexual / emotional satisfaction. Any woman who acts like this has denied the reason of her creation and is headed straight for the lake of fire, lest she repents."

CGrigorij's comment reveals that something has changed about the metaphysical reality of the universe since this article was written on 2021/6/23, namely, that it now seems more obvious to us that…

- A woman's rightful role in the natural order should be as a support to her husband and family.
- If a woman fails to fulfill this role then it is a great burden on her husband and her family, and it is also a shame to herself.
- If a woman refuses to embrace this role at all, then it is despicable and repugnant.

St. Dalrock's charge that "feminism and feminists are ugly" is now more true than ever. It now seems intuitive to think, "Well of course. How could it be any other way?"

Could it be true that, because men have started to lay down boundaries en masse over the past year or so, that the spiritual mood of the planet has actually changed such to enable us to see this truth for what it is?

Women! Heh…

Σ Frame Maxim 29, AKA The Law of Personal Spheres: Each man's reality is a manifestation of his individual constitution, beliefs, choices, and experiences.

Corollary D to Maxim 29: The collective reality of a group or culture is a manifestation of the constituent individual's constitutions, beliefs, choices, and experiences.

Suddenly, the answer to the question of whether a man should be emotionally honest with a particular woman is now crystal clear.

Related

- Σ Frame: Pursuing Flow to develop Confidence and Trust (2022/4/22)
- Σ Frame: Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church (2023/12/14)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment is a Boundary (2024/1/16)
- Σ Frame: How to resist becoming emotionally attached (2024/1/17)
- Σ Frame: Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions (2024/1/23)
- Σ Frame: Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church – Part 2 (2024/1/25)

9. The Law of Activity

Jack · 27 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Get action! Get busy living or get busy dying.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 2,150 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes + 2 videos totaling 13 minutes

The Law of Activity

The Law of Activity has to do with taking initiative rather than being hypoagentic or passive or waiting for someone else to make the first move or do something about a problem.

The Law of Activity is encapsulated in some famous power quotes.

> "Get Action!"
>
> President Theodore Roosevelt

> "Use it or lose it!"

> "The early bird finds the worm."

> "The squeaky wheel gets the oil."

> "Get busy living or get busy dying."
>
> Andy and Red in Shawshank Redemption

> "Nothing ventured, nothing gained."

> "It is not the critic who counts; not the man who points out how the strong man stumbles, or where the doer of deeds could have done them better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena, whose face is > marred by dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly; who errs, who comes short again and again, because there is no effort without error and shortcoming; but who does actually strive to do the deeds; who knows great enthusiasms, the great devotions; who spends himself in a worthy cause; who at the best knows in the end the triumph of high achievement, and who at the worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who neither know victory nor defeat."

>
> Excerpt from President Theodore Roosevelt's speech, "Citizenship in a Republic", Paris, 1910/4/23.

Cloud and Townsend wrote a pretty good description of The Law of Activity, so I'll cite their work. [Content reorganized for ease of comprehension. Emphasis mine.]

> "Human beings are responders and initiators. […] We respond to invitations and push ourselves into life.
>
> The best boundaries are formed when a child is pushing against the world naturally, and the outside world sets its limits on the child. In this way, the aggressive child has learned limits without losing his or her spirit. Our spiritual and emotional well-being depends on our having this spirit."

> "Many times we have boundary problems because we lack initiative — the God-given ability to propel ourselves into life."
>
> "The sad thing is that many people who are passive are not inherently evil or bad people. But evil is an active force, and passivity can become an ally of evil by not actively resisting it and pushing against it. Passivity never pays off. God will match our effort, but he will never do our work for us. That would be an invasion of our boundaries. He wants us to be assertive and active, seeking and knocking on the door of life.
>
> We know that God is not mean to people who are afraid; the Scripture is full of examples of His compassion. But He will not enable passivity. God's grace covers failure, but it cannot make up for passivity. We need to do our part.
>
> The sin God rebukes is not trying and failing, but failing to try. Trying, failing, and trying again is called learning. Failing to try will have no good result; evil will triumph. […] God wants us to "preserve our souls."

> That is the role of boundaries; they define and preserve our property, our soul.
>
> I have been told that when a baby bird is ready to hatch, if you break the egg for the bird, it will die. The bird must peck its own way out of the egg into the world. This aggressive "workout" strengthens the bird, allowing it to function in the outside world. Robbed of this responsibility, it will die."

> "This is also the way God has made us. If He "hatches" us, does our work for us, invades our boundaries, we will die. We must not shrink back passively."

In summary, we need to take the initiative to solve our problems rather than being passive and coasting on autopilot. Likewise, we also need to allow others to do the work of solving their own problems rather than solving their problems for them and thereby enabling them to be passive observers coasting on autopilot. When we fail to do so, then our lives begin to unravel.

Correlation to the 10 Commandments

This corresponds to the 6th Commandment: "Thou shalt not kill." (Exodus 20:13; Deuteronomy 5:17) When we are lazy and passive, we kill our own potential and also the energy and enthusiasm of others. If we coddle the weak too much, then we kill their potential strength — just like helping a bird hatch or tearing open the cocoon of an emerging butterfly — it destroys the process by which they gain strength and skill, and causes them to be weak and needy.

Correlations to the New Testament

Our boundaries can only be created by our being active and aggressive. We can only make progress by asking, seeking, and knocking (Matthew 7:7-8).

This same concept is also expressed in The Parable of the Persistent Widow (Luke 18:1-8).

The Law of Activity is encapsulated in The Parable of the Talents (Matthew 25:14-30). The trustees who were active and assertive succeeded in making money. They initiated and pushed. The one who did not try to invest in anything was passive and inactive. He lost out and was called "wicked and lazy".

God expresses His opinion toward passivity in Hebrews 10:38-39.

> "'But my righteous one will live by faith. And if he shrinks back, I will not be pleased with him.' But we are not of those who shrink back and are destroyed, but of those who believe and are saved."

Passive "shrinking back" is intolerable to God, and when we see how destructive it is to the masculine soul, we can understand why God does not tolerate it.

The Red Pill Lens

One reason why The Law of Activity is so important is because it is intertwined with 5. The Law of Motivation and 7. The Law of Proactivity. The way this works is that being proactive empowers the will and thereby fuels motivation. It also puts skin in the game, which causes one to take it seriously. It should be noted that there is a learning curve that takes discipline, practice, and some time to overcome, but once this has been passed and mastery is obtained, there is an exponential return on effort. Also, one should take care to choose endeavors wisely, such that one's interest and natural skill matches the undertaken enterprise.

In a dysfunctional relationship, sometimes one person is active and the other is passive. When this occurs, the active person will dominate the passive one. The passive person may be too intimidated by the active one to say "no".

Headship is essentially men forsaking passivity and taking an active role as the man in a familial / intersexual / marital relationship, thereby eliminating the dysfunctionality of having a dominant, hypo-agentic female at the helm.

Oscar's running exhortation sermonizes The Law of Activity. His stance is summarized in his post, What One Man Can Do, Another Can Do (2023/1/4), in which he has written of the ills of being a hope thief, a crab in the bucket. These attitudes and behaviors effectively kill hope and motivation, not only in one's self, but also in others.

Much has been written in the Manosphere about how "Complacent Energy kills attraction" and that Autopilot / Complacency will ruin a man's life.

In this video, Casey Zander describes how fear prevents men from taking action. Bonus: In the first 30 seconds, he describes how he is building his own studio so that he can create video presentations and host interviews — a great example of being proactive.

Casey Zander: 1 Trait that Will Make YOU Unattractive to women (Biggest turn off) URGENT (2022/2/28) Length: 11 minutes

Testosterone is associated with the assertion of Social Status and helps facilitate Social Interactions, thereby corresponding with more aggressive efforts and more proactive initiatives being taken by high T men.

The Rite of Passage is designed to teach young men discipline, perseverance, and how to press forth until an objective is accomplished.

Transactional Relationships are often empty and unfulfilling because (1) this does not tap into the internal motivation to develop a domain of influence and/or a sphere of mastery, and (2) this does not engage the deeper challenges of getting along with another person (i.e. no skin in the game).

Perhaps the most fundamental challenge to women developing moral agency is their failure to embrace The Law of Activity. Women never see anything as "their fault". Women always paint themselves as "innocent bystanders". Instead of being proactively submissive, women will succumb to doubts and fears, rev up the hamster wheel, blame others, and resist taking initiative, kicking and screaming all the way. She is never the actor, always the "acted upon". Never the decider; always the hapless duped drone, allegedly swindled and tricked (into having sex, for example).

Women are scarcely aware of the cause and effect — that what "just happens" to them causes them to respond and make decisions. They can't seem to comprehend that they are held responsible for those decisions and responses, regardless of what "just happens" to them. It's difficult for women to figure this out. One commenter, Femmy, even said women are blind to it. They are not aware that the decisions they make are self-protective measures based on avoiding or controlling pain and suffering. IOW, they make a concentrated effort NOT to put skin in the game, which is precisely what transforms it into a growth experience. This is why Women Rely on a Man's Frame for Redemptive Introspection and thus, it's up to a man to nurture her Agentic capacity and guide her towards maturity.

Male tennis instructor teaching a woman to practice racket control on a tennis court.

Case Study — Love and Respect must be Proactive

The Word quite plainly and clearly says: Wife submits to husband; husband loves wife (Ephesians 5:22-33). The wife is to submit freely and of her own volition. The husband cannot force his wife to submit. Husbands can do things to encourage it, but it's not to be forced. That is the God-ordained order.

Likewise, the husband is also recognized as having free will. That means the husband is to love and care for his wife freely and of his own volition. A wife cannot force her husband to love her through demands, or any of the subtle or more conspicuous control games that women play. That will always backfire and lead to him loving her less. A wife can do things to encourage her husband to love her more, and the way to encourage it is by being submissive, chaste, and respectful (1 Peter 3:1-2), but it's not to be forced. That is the God-ordained order.

When both husband and wife are expressing love and respect respectively, then as Eggerich explained in his book, Love and Respect, this allows them to escape 'The Crazy Cycle', move into an 'Energizing Cycle', and eventually achieve 'The Rewarded Cycle'.

The problem with this is, as Thedeti has repeatedly pointed out, that women often marry men they have no desire for, and thus, they also have no desire for him to love her, or love her more. They just want him to stay in an emotionally insulated box and perform and provide. Another problem is that women don't want to be truly loved in the full sense of being held accountable, being trained in righteousness, and being taught the word. No, they want to avoid all that. They just want to feel the Tingles, and in lieu of that, they want their husbands to stay in the doghouse and never offend their solipsistic sensibilities. So effectively, a woman like this has no intrinsic motivation for her to be submissive, chaste, and respectful. In this case, she must utilize agentic willpower instead, which women absolutely hate to do. (Most will not without the enticements of the Tingles.)

The Law of Action in Showing Respect

In closing, I want to point out that men must take the initiative to respect other men, as described in The Law of Respect. This is a cycle that if maintained will grow and keep on giving.

Let's give men the respect of acknowledging their authority in matters. One way this is done is by going to them first whenever an issue comes up that is under their domain of authority, instead of covering our own @sses, working through back channels, or using the situation to protect or enhance our own interests at their expense.

We can also show respect to men by assuming they can do things themselves, and only step in when asked, or when it is apparent that they're in over their heads. (Situations with younger men or mentees may require more involvement and oversight, but only for those men within one's domain of authority.) This used to be a modus operando for men to extend mutual respect to one another, regardless of their social rank, but I don't see this much anymore. Instead, I see a lot of uninvited and sometimes public criticism about how things are done, and men presumptuously making decisions on behalf of other men without first consulting them or even informing them.

Such actions would instantiate a proactive stance on our part rather than 'shrinking back'.

Case Studies Related to The Law of Action

1. Σ Frame: Taking Headship by Force (2021/5/26)
2. Σ Frame: Start Small to Build Internal Locus of Control (2021/10/14)
3. Σ Frame: Forming the Vision of Achieving a Goal (2022/4/6)
4. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Breaking Through Mental Barriers (2022/4/8)
5. Σ Frame: Contentment (2023/1/16)
6. Σ Frame: The Path to Contentment (2023/1/18)
7. Σ Frame: Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21)
8. Σ Frame: The Battle for Headship begins on the Home Turf (2023/4/27)
9. Σ Frame: Dealing with the Mother-in-Law Curse (2023/5/24)

10. Σ Frame (Oscar): Cinderella Man (2023/6/28)
11. Σ Frame: The Winner Effect (2023/8/30)
12. Σ Frame: Who's your sponsor? (2023/9/22)
13. Σ Frame: Finding a Good Church? (2023/9/29)
14. Σ Frame: Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT "Found" by Chance (2023/10/9)
15. Σ Frame: Dealing with Feminine Insecurity (2023/11/22)
16. Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority (2024/1/10)
17. Σ Frame: Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions (2024/1/23)

Related

- Σ Frame: Identifying Your Spiritual Domain (2021/12/1)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): An open letter to Christian Wives (2023/5/27)
- Σ Frame: Testosterone is MAGA! (2023/8/18)

Setting Boundaries Increases Openness

Red Pill Apostle · 28 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Running a tight ship grants freedom.

Readership: Married Men; Marriage Minded Men;
Theme: Boundaries
Author's Note: The contents of this post are the gleanings of an email string between me and Jack. Jack organized and compiled the content. Names have been changed to protect the guilty.
Length: 1,450 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Continuing on the same topic from Jack's post, Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26), we have a case study for The Law of Activity.

Harnessing Her Desire for Openness

I used to keep my activity on Σ Frame predominantly to myself and this naturally aroused my wife's curiosity about what I was up to. She started reading the blog and sometimes objected to what I had disclosed about our relationship. I told her that it was none of her business what I chose to reveal. This bothered her to her core because she felt like I was keeping parts of my life from her that I was revealing to others.

With her envy stoked to full heat, I used this occasion to express that a level of openness with my wife is what I want and expect in marriage, as this is part of what makes marriage worth it to me.

This led to the logical conclusion that either we're going to be more open or else marriage is not something I would be interested in anymore. Of course, her envy / jealousy about my blogging opened her ears to 'hear' me.

So then I laid out the framework that addresses the fickle immaturity issues of my wife that prevents more openness. Basically, the solution is hard boundaries on her behavior. For me this means…

- If she ever uses something I have done to justify her becoming emotionally crazed where she has no rules for her behavior in order to hurt me or exert power, we divorce that week.
- If she ever uses intimate knowledge in an argument for the sole purpose of hurting me in order to win through exerting power, we divorce that week.
- If she ever uses sex as a tool to exert power through withholding, we divorce that week.
- If she ever uses our children against me to hurt me, we divorce that week.

Some readers might think this is harsh, but these actions constitute willful rebellion on her part. There is a ton of room built in between a regular disagreement and these triggers, so it is not as if she will accidentally stumble across one of the boundaries. (See Notes on Setting Boundaries below.)

On my wife's part, the major shift is accepting that she's responsible for her own actions and responses. Although she's not all the way there yet and maybe never will be, little by little she is getting better at dealing with the serious issues of life.

Purpose Directed Self-Control

The primary risk to this approach is that I am dealing with a woman and all the emotionally unstable issues that this entails.

On my part, I had a lot of grappling with reality in my shift from BP to RP. The shift very much changed how I deal with adversity which is expressed in my behavior, largely by…

1. Avoiding domineering behavior (i.e. arguing, especially to get her to agree with me, which I learned from Cane Caldo is a no win approach).
2. Being comfortable that she's a big girl who won't like what I tell her but will have to deal with it.
3. Focusing on and caring about how I respond, NOT in the precise outcome.

On that last point, I, like most men, found it difficult to understand that women get more satisfaction and a greater sense of security from seeing a man deal with a difficult situation with a cool head than they do out of seeing the man actually solve the problem. This myopic vision in women is to our benefit, gentlemen, as long as we are able to drum up some confidence, faith, and positivity.

With respect to The Law of Proactivity, all this is to say that I cannot very well control her, but I can control myself. That means that I must exhibit mature behavior at all times. I must limit the gushing of emotions, and as I've grown more emotionally mature, there are fewer emotions that I need to regulate, and less frequently too. I do feel, but I also trust that I'll be OK. I worry less about the outcome of issues in favor of actively solving issues, and that comes out in what my 'concerns' are when I talk with Mrs. Apostle.

I mess up occasionally because I'm reforming old bad habits, but at least now I'm getting quicker at recognizing them so I can prevent small instances from becoming big ones.

The Proper Place and Purpose of Male Vulnerability

For example, if there is an issue at work that causes me to worry about my income and meeting our expenses, I will reframe the issue as a 'concern' over whether my current situation has the resources to accomplish what I want to accomplish. If things turn out well, then the resulting accomplishments appear to her as though I'm doing exceptionally well. If not, then it places no added or sudden burdens on her 'concern'. Additionally, I have taken steps under my power to shore up the weaknesses I see to increase the probability of success, while taking actions like updating my resume to protect against a worse case.

I'm not stonewalling her by telling her it's all peachy, but I am taking care to filter out the aroma of incompetency in the vulnerability being shown. Ruminating over your weaknesses in fear while drowning your tears in a carton of Ben & Jerry's like a chick who just got dumped does no one any good. What I show her is a thoughtful assessment of the situation with the realization that nothing is perfect in life.

The importance of displaying some vulnerability is that it exists in parallel with the confidence that I will figure out a solution to any problem that comes up. This comes across as me being a real human but also as a masculine man, and gives opportunities for me to come off as a hero in her eyes at times. Plus, if you are married, then she already knows what you are good at and what you aren't good at. You can't bluff bravado after 20 years of marriage, so it's best to keep it real.

Concluding Statements

The main point of this post is that drawing clear boundaries permits greater freedom within those boundaries, leading to more authenticity and openness. However, there are essentially four components that provide an environment where a man can be more authentic and emotionally open with his wife.

1. The maturity of both parties is critically important. A man's wife should not be his emotional tampon, nor should a husband need one.
2. Setting boundaries on her behavior, and being willing to enforce them. (See notes below.)
3. Making steady moves in the direction of a Headship structure.
4. Accepting, or at least acknowledging agency, according to the respective roles of husband and wife within a Headship structure.

These are the biggest factors for me to keep my marriage stable, and for her being able to retain her respect for me during moments of emotional honesty and vulnerability.

These characteristics are important with disciplining children too.

Notes on Drawing Boundaries

Boundaries must be enforced, or else the boundaries will disintegrate. The consequences of transgressing the boundaries must be catastrophic to some degree, or else there can be no real enforcement. Fortunately, it is sufficient to be willing to go further than she will, because of your seriousness to correct her behavior. That is to say, one of the more important mental concepts about boundaries is to be willing to risk it all in order to actually build something worth having. As such, a man best be very thoughtful in establishing what he wants from marriage and where those boundaries will be set.

Divorce is the nuclear option because there is no putting the genie back in the bottle once he's out. Fortunately, there are many steps and strategies that fall way short of divorce that a man can use. However, if the wife brandishes the nuclear option, then the husband must go one step further, unfortunately. But ultimately, he will have to decide to act how he thinks is right and do so without regard to what she'll do. If she leaves, then so be it. The marriage cannot amount to much with a rebellious wife anyway. However, I think that with the way God made women, the very fact that he's willing to act and hold course without yielding to her whims will prevent most divorces from occurring simply because he's become dominant relative to her.

I do expect there to be disagreement over divorce on any post involving boundary enforcement. What will be interesting is how men will tease out the idea that women have agency and can choose to not divorce versus men acting in leadership without consideration if his wife will leave him or not. I have hashed this out in my own life a good bit because of how headstrong Mrs. Apostle was about control. Based on my conversations with Thedeti, it took me much, MUCH more effort with Mrs. Apostle than what he had to exert with his wife to get her in line.

Related

- The Rational Male: Surrender (2017/6/20)
- Radix Fidem: Don't Kill It (2021/6/24)
- Σ Frame: A Snapshot of the Destruction caused by Pride (2021/8/25)
- Σ Frame: Harnessing the Motivations of Others (2022/4/20)
- Σ Frame: Pursuing Flow to develop Confidence and Trust (2022/4/22)
- Σ Frame: Imposing Masculine Presence (2022/6/10)

- Σ Frame: Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions (2024/1/23)

10. The Law of Exposure

Jack · 29 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Boundaries must be clearly indicated and regularly enforced to do any good.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

The Law of Exposure

The Law of Exposure is simple to understand, but difficult to employ.

The Law of Exposure has two parts, summarized here as,

1. Communicating / Implementing Boundaries
2. Enforcing / Maintaining Boundaries

1. Communicating / Implementing Boundaries

Boundaries do exist and will affect us whether we recognize them and communicate them or not.

- We suffer unnecessarily when we do not communicate the reality of our boundaries.
- Unexpressed boundaries will lead to resentment when those boundaries are crossed, and relationships will suffer.
- If our boundaries are not communicated and exposed directly, they will be communicated indirectly or through manipulation.
- If boundaries are not communicated in a timely manner, there will be much angst, confusion, ill feelings, and lost / wasted time until the boundaries are understood.

Thus, we need to communicate our boundaries. Boundaries need to be clearly understood by or made visible to others. They need to see exactly where the boundaries are, and what happens if they are crossed.

A boundary that is not communicated is a boundary that remains nebulous and cannot work. We need to make clear what we do or do not want, and what we will or will not tolerate.

2. Enforcing / Maintaining Boundaries

Boundaries must be enforced, or else the boundaries will be challenged, disintegrate, and/or become disrespected. The consequences of transgressing the boundaries must be catastrophic or painful to some degree, or else there can be no real enforcement. A boundary without a consequence is little more than annoying nagging.

Therefore, stating boundaries is not enough. When push comes to shove, we also need to make it clear that every boundary violation has a consequence. It helps if Boundaries are stated in a respectful manner, according to The Law of Respect.

Σ Frame Maxim 3 (Jack's father): You have a responsibility to yourself to teach others who you are and how you want to be treated.

Difficulties in Expressing Boundaries

Cloud and Townsend gave a humorous analogy of an alien arriving on Earth and having all sorts of difficulties because of his unfamiliarity with the laws and social customs of Earth. I'll add that the same could be said for new employees at a company and new immigrants arriving in a country. They used this analogy to illustrate several reasons why people do not expose their Boundaries. These reasons are listed here and are described below.

1. Fears
2. Passivity
3. Repressed emotions
4. Being unfamiliar with a social context.
5. Habits / history of poor boundaries and/or dysfunction.

Cloud and Townsend wrote,

> "The Law of Exposure says that your boundaries need to be made visible to others and communicated to them in relationship. We have many boundary problems because of relational fears. We are beset by fears of guilt, not being liked, loss of love, loss of connection, loss of approval, receiving anger, being known, and so on. These are all failures in love, and God's plan is that we learn how to love. These relational problems can only be solved in relationships, for that is the context of the problems themselves, and the context of spiritual existence.
>
> Because of these fears, we try to have secret boundaries. We withdraw passively and quietly, instead of communicating an honest "no" to someone we love. We secretly resent instead of telling someone that we are angry about how they have hurt us. Often, we will privately endure the pain of someone's irresponsibility instead of telling them how their behavior affects us and other loved ones, information that would be helpful to their soul.
>
> In other situations, a partner will secretly comply with her spouse, not offering her feelings or opinions for twenty years, and then suddenly "express" her boundaries by filing for divorce. Or parents will "love" their children by giving in over and over for years, not setting limits, and resenting the love they are showing. The children grow up never feeling loved, because of the lack of honesty, and their parents are befuddled, thinking, "After all we've done…"
>
> Remember the story of the alien. The good news is that when God brings us out from an alien land, he does not leave us untaught. He rescued his people from the Egyptians, but, he taught them his principles and ways. These proved to be life to them. But, they had to learn them, practice them, and fight many battles to internalize these principles of faith.
>
> God has probably led you out of captivity also. Whether it was from a dysfunctional family, the world, your own religious self-righteousness, or the scatteredness of being lost, He has been your Redeemer. But what He has secured needs to be possessed. The land to which He has brought you has certain realities and principles. Learn these as set forth in His Word, and you'll find His kingdom a wonderful place to live."

Correlation to the 10 Commandments

This matches the 9th Commandment: "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." (Exodus 20:16; Deuteronomy 5:20) When we fail to communicate our boundaries, we bear false witness of our self. We allow others to jump to erroneous conclusions about who we are, or worse, we let them define who we are. We also invite others to bear false witness of who we are, simply because they can't figure us out and don't really KNOW who we are.

Correlations to the New Testament

The Bible speaks to The Law of Exposure in many places.

> "Therefore each of you must put off falsehood and speak truthfully to his neighbor, for we are all members of one body. 'In your anger do not sin': Do not let the sun go down while you are still angry."
>
> Ephesians 4:25-26

> "But everything exposed by the light becomes visible, for it is light that makes everything visible. This is why it is said: 'Wake up, 0 sleeper, rise from the dead, and Christ will shine on you'."
>
> Ephesians 5:13-14

On these passages, Cloud and Townsend wrote,

> "The biblical mandate is to be honest and be in the light."
>
> "The Bible continually speaks of our being in the light and of the light as the only place where we have access to God and others. But, because of our fears, we hide aspects of ourselves in the darkness, where the devil has an opportunity. When our boundaries are in the light, that is, are communicated openly, our personalities begin to integrate for the first time. They become "visible," in Paul's words, and then they become light. They are transformed and changed. Healing always takes place in the light.
>
> David speaks of it in this way: "Surely you desire truth in the inner parts; you teach me wisdom in the inmost place" (Psalm 51:6). God wants real relationship with us and wants us to have real relationship with each other. Real relationship means that I am in the light with my boundaries and other aspects of myself that are difficult to communicate."
>
> "Our boundaries are affected by sin; they "miss the mark," and need to be brought into the light for God to heal them and others to benefit from them. This is the path to real love: Communicate your boundaries openly."

The Red Pill Lens

Thedeti's approach and Red Pill Apostle's approach in dealing with an immature / rebellious wife recognizes The Law of Exposure. Here, the man is basically saying,

- "Here is what I want / need."
- "If you do X, here are the consequences."
- "If you are going to do Y, then I am going to do Z."

In fact, many of the strategies for dealing with women that have been offered by the Christian Manosphere advise communicating, implementing, and/or enforcing Boundaries, and therefore utilize The Law of Exposure. A few examples are given here.

1. Thedeti's Approach
2. Knowing one's self
3. Christian Detachment
4. Laying out Boundaries
5. Laying out Expectations
6. Exercising Moral Agency
7. Red Pill Apostle's approach
8. Refusing to accept low bids
9. Moral Guidance Based Feedback
10. Controlling the conflict structure
11. What we've learned about Agency
12. Conforming to one's Christian identity
13. Harnessing the motivations of one's self and others
14. Giving requests and making demands rather than being compliant.

Moreover, being dominant requires a man to impose Boundaries.

Related

- The Rational Male: Boundaries (2014/11/17)
- The Rational Male: Intimacy (2014/11/21)
- The Rational Male: Vulnerability (2014/11/23)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Boundaries (2015/8/6)

Breaking Feminine Delusions

thedeti · 30 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

How to wake up women to the truth about their SMV/MMV.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Women
Theme: Boundaries
Author's Note: Based on my previous comment. Coauthored with Jack.
Reader's Note: The advice given here is probably limited to conservative / Christian women. Flagrant feminists would never hear it.
Length: 950 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

Jack's post, Double Bind (2023/12/8) discussed the importance of mythos in our concept of Masculinity and Feminity. 'Mythos' is not my preferred term for it, but I agree with what he's talking about. What Jack would call "being under a spell", I would call a "strong delusion" (based on 2 Thessalonians 2:7-12).

The problem is that women have keyed into the false mythos / strong delusion of Disney, Feminism, and the overinflated SMV that comes from banging a series of Ch@dwicks. Since their minds are already preoccupied and their egos already invested in these fantasies, presenting them with a true mythos of Christian Headship comes off as abusive / controlling / m1s0gyn!st!c / toxic / etc. It isn't going to fly.

A comprehensive understanding of most all The Laws of Human Nature indicates that the only way to deal with this issue is to present them with the clear, undeniable, unavoidable facts and then let them make their own decisions. The Law of Activity suggests that it is Men who must take the initiative, provide Frame, and lay things out for them.

So here I'll make this as simple as I can for everyone.

False Feminine Values

Ladies, you are not high value IF:

- Your N > 5.
- You're divorced.
- You're 25 or over, and not married.
- You are not or never were married to the father of your child(ren).
- You appear on social media platform videos about dating, mating, sex, marriage, and relationships.
- You call yourself an "influencer".
- You've ever had a substance abuse problem.
- You've ever been treated for a mental illness or personality disorder of any kind.
- You've ever been under the care of a mental health professional.
- You've ever attempted any kind of self-harm.
- Your female friends call you high value.
- You call yourself high value.

She who claims to be, or thinks herself to be high value, is NOT high value.

Contrary to popular belief, the following characteristics do NOT necessarily make a woman "high value":

- Education.
- Sexual skills / experience.
- Having a Christian "ministry".
- Job / career / remunerative activity.
- Asserting "equal" status to your husband.
- Being sexually attractive, physically appealing, or "hot".

Men don't care about any of these things. In fact, some of these things might even eat into the qualities that make a woman high value.

False Poseurs of Value

Jedediah Bila, Pearl Davis, Jennifer Moleski, and Estee Williams are not high value. Any other woman who puts herself on Instagram, Onlyf@ns, YouTube, etc. is not high value. They might be high sexual value; but they're not high value overall.

Gisele Bundchen, Angelina Jolie, and Adriana Lima are not high value. Whatever other actress, cultural icon, Hollywood star, or model you might admire is NOT high value. She may be stunningly beautiful, but that alone does not make a woman high value. Again – high sexual value, maybe, but not high value overall.

Lysa Terkeurst and Paula White are not high value. Any famous Christian author, lecturer, pastor, or teacher you can think of is not high value. She may be super religious and totally "sold out" to the Lord, but that alone does not make a woman high value.

All these women are not high value because they make careers and reputations of themselves, thereby indicating that they are independent and don't really need a man. And most of them make careers and reputations of themselves because they are not high value. Do you see the connection?

Here's the kind of feminine value that will make men want to marry her in a heartbeat.

High Value Women

Men recognize high value women and immediately take them off the market. High value men take and marry high value women.

Here is where The Law of Exposure comes into play. Men have to make their boundaries clear.

Now let's get a realistic mental image of what a high value woman looks like.

Men, not other women, decide which women are high value and which are low value.

A man wants someone who hasn't been hopping from one man to the next for the past 10 years, and certainly not someone who was passed around like a joint at a frat party 20 years ago. A man wants a woman he can truly call his own — that means he gets the sole honors of making her ~~cherry~~ eyes pop and teaching her how to ~~S and F~~ fall in love with him. A man wants a woman who is humble, kind, soft-spoken, teachable, and who will do as he asks with a cute bunny hop and a genuinely warm smile. I don't care if you think that's controlling or demeaning or m!s0gyn!st!c or whatever. I'm just the messenger. That's what men want, and that's what makes a woman high value.

If you are indeed a high value woman, high value men have probably already identified you and have worked hard to take you off the market. If you are indeed a high value woman, you can recognize a high value man and you'll willingly submit yourself to him and his purpose without hesitation nor reservation. If you are indeed a high value woman, you'll have the agency, maturity, and social skills necessary to make things work out with the first guy you choose. I don't care if you think that's too demanding, impossible, or unreasonable. Again, I'm just the messenger. That's what men want, and that's what makes a woman high value.

Now that you know the truth, you have a choice. You can make a diligent effort to make yourself into the highest value woman that you can, and see what kinds of doors that will open up for you in your life. Or you can ignore everything I've said here, go back to your church, your bar, or your club, and continue asking yourself, "Where have all the good men gone?"

It's up to you to decide.

Related

- Σ Frame: 16 Qualities of an Irresistible Woman (2017/12/1)
- Σ Frame: Moral Agency is Dependent on Spiritual Maturity (2022/12/19)
- Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): High Value Women (2023/11/3)
- PsycHacks: The TRAP of the HIGH-VALUE woman: every restaurant serves water (2023/12/9)

Summary of Boundaries

Jack · 31 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Conclusions and hyperlinks to posts in this month's theme.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Length: 1,100 words + lists of posts
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Overview

For those who are unfamiliar / uninitiated with the topic of interpersonal Boundaries (as I once was), it is hard to grasp, and just as difficult to put into practice. And yet this wisdom is central to Christian living, faith, spiritual health and maturity. It also plays a multifaceted role in establishing a beautiful, stable intersexual relationship characterized by Headship.

Therefore, in this month's study of Boundaries, Red Pill Apostle and I attempted to flush out a more practical understanding of these almost entirely metaphysical concepts in the hope that more men would be able to recognize its importance and make a better educated assessment of their own lives while having a few more clues about what to do.

Sources

Our study of Boundaries was based on four primary sources.

1. Previous writings from the Christian Manosphere. (See lists below.)
2. Henry Cloud and John Townsend's book, Boundaries [1].
3. Dr. Orion Taraban's YouTube lectures.
4. The Bible.

Summary

Jack's Notes on each of the 10 Laws of Human Nature (LoHN) are as follows.

1. The Law of Sowing and Reaping — Actions have consequences (but they are not always clear and immediate). Failure to recognize this results in confusion.
2. The Law of Responsibility — We have agency and freedom of will, and thus we are responsible for how we influence others.
3. The Law of Power — We cannot change other people directly, but we do have the power to change our own selves which can often change other people indirectly.
4. The Law of Respect — We must be proactive in exercising self-control and respecting the boundaries of others. We cannot violate the free will of others.
5. The Law of Motivation — Exercising free will by making choices is empowering, regardless of the choices made. Violating one's willpower destroys the soul. Thus, motivation has a significant influence over our social impact, spiritual growth, and vitality.
6. The Law of Evaluation — Suffering is a part of life. What feels good in the moment is often harmful, and that which is painful in the experience may actually help us in the long run. Therefore, it is important to assess which type of suffering we are embracing, and come to terms with its value and purpose.
7. The Law of Proactivity — Get control of your life, or else your life will control you. Master your sin, or else your sin will master you. Dominate your wife, or else she will domineer you.
8. The Law of Envy — We want what we don't have because we need something that we don't want. This results in frustration.
9. The Law of Activity — Use it or lose it!
10. The Law of Exposure — Boundaries must be clearly indicated and regularly enforced to do any good. Also see Red Pill Apostle's executive summary.

Barriers to Developing Boundaries

Most people begin bumping into The Laws of Human Nature during elementary school. Hence, largely from curiosity, an effort is made to discuss it and sort themselves out. But for some, The Laws of Human Nature are confusing or are not clearly recognized because of the following reasons…

1. Generational Curses
2. Emotional and/or spiritual immaturity.
3. Emotional reactions / Inner Vows / Rejection
4. Foolishness, i.e. a lack of discernment / wisdom.
5. False preconceived notions (e.g. The Blue Pill, Feminism, etc.).
6. No recognition of authority / Distrustfulness / Rebellion / etc.
7. Autism / Narcissism / Personality Disorders / psychopathy / etc.
8. Concupiscence / Depravity / Intense neediness / Hypocrisy / Sin / etc.
9. A history of Abuse / Dysfunction / Insecure Attachment / Trauma / etc.

Also, most of these LoHN are affected by other LoHN in play, which makes it more challenging to identify and figure out. So this is a compounding factor.

Gleanings

There were several noteworthy associations that surfaced from this month's theme.

1. Boundaries are just another way to describe spiritual obedience to the Lord.
2. Boundaries are a crucial element of maintaining Frame.
3. Drawing Boundaries = Socio-sexual Game
4. Drawing Boundaries requires discernment and expresses wisdom.
5. Boundaries must be internalized as a form of emotional regulation and self-control.
6. Boundaries = Methods and strategies for maintaining socio-emotional detachment.
7. Detachment = Internalized socio-emotional Boundaries
8. Structures of Authority both create boundaries and provide a venue for them to be expressed.
9. Pressing Boundaries is what forms trust in social interactions.
10. Trust determines the appropriateness of Boundaries.
11. Drawing clear Boundaries permits greater freedom within those boundaries, leading to more authenticity and openness, and perhaps greater intimacy.
12. Boundaries must be enforced, or else the boundaries will disintegrate. The consequences of transgressing the boundaries must be catastrophic to some degree, or else there can be no real enforcement.
13. The Covert Contract / Nice Guy syndrome is a failure to enact the Law of Exposure.
14. Clear boundaries repel away those whom it offends and attracts those of like mind, which is the desired process of selection.
15. Drawing Boundaries culls poor / unhealthy relationships and attracts / builds healthy ones, which can be uncomfortable at times.
16. By not setting clear boundaries and rigidly enforcing them, a man opens himself up to adverse selection, that is, he attracts unsavory characters into his life.

Readers are welcome to add any other things they have learned from this series.

Hadrian's Wall, originally 3.7 meters (12 feet) high, constructed by the Romans in 122 AD to guard the boundary between Brittania and Caledonia (now northern England and Scotland, respectively).

Index of Posts

Posts in this Series

This month's theme of Boundaries included the following posts. The posts that follow each Law of Human nature focus on an application or a case study of that Law.

1. Σ Frame: The Laws of Human Nature and Boundaries (2024/1/4)
2. Σ Frame: 1. The Law of Sowing and Reaping (2024/1/5)
3. Σ Frame: 70 × 7 (2024/1/6)
4. Σ Frame: 2. The Law of Responsibility (2024/1/8)
5. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The most successful strategy is NOT perfectly altruistic. (2024/1/9)
6. Σ Frame: 3. The Law of Power (2024/1/10)
7. Σ Frame: What is the Spiritual Power of Authority? (2024/1/11)
8. Σ Frame: 4. The Law of Respect (2024/1/12)
9. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Addressing Female Disrespect (2024/1/13)
10. Σ Frame: 5. The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)
11. Σ Frame: Christian Detachment is a Boundary (2024/1/16)
12. Σ Frame: How to resist becoming emotionally attached (2024/1/17)
13. Σ Frame: 6. The Law of Evaluation (2024/1/18)
14. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Mating Dance and Female Erotic Fantasy (2024/1/19)
15. Σ Frame: Wandering in Search of God (2024/1/20)
16. Σ Frame: 7. The Law of Proactivity (2024/1/22)
17. Σ Frame: Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions (2024/1/23)
18. Σ Frame: 8. The Law of Envy (2024/1/24)
19. Σ Frame (Alexei Karamazov): Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church – Part 2 (2024/1/25)

20. Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)
21. Σ Frame: 9. The Law of Activity (2024/1/27)
22. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Setting Boundaries Increases Openness (2024/1/28)
23. Σ Frame: 10. The Law of Exposure (2024/1/29)
24. Σ Frame (Thedeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
25. Σ Frame: Summary of Boundaries (2024/1/31)
26. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Boundaries 101 for Dummies (2024/2/1)
27. Σ Frame: Boundaries in Chinese Culture (2024/2/2)
28. Σ Frame (Thedeti): Deti's 10 Rules on Boundaries (2024/2/3)

The Great Wall of China, built between the 7th century BC and the 17th century AD and spanning 21,196.18 km (13,170.70 mi) in total length.

Christian Manosphere / Red Pill Posts on Boundaries

1. Radix Fidem: The Boundaries of Sanity (2012/1/16)
2. Radix Fidem: The Parable of Boundaries (2012/9/30)
3. Radix Fidem: Parable of Boundaries 2 (2014/5/19)
4. Radix Fidem: Broken Boundaries (2015/2/6)
5. Christianity and Masculinity: Boundaries (2015/8/6)
6. Radix Fidem: Manhood: More on Boundaries (2015/10/26)
7. Dalrock: Boundaries (2016/1/28)
8. Radix Fidem: Kiln of the Soul Boundaries (2017/12/5)
9. Radix Fidem: Boundaries and Fences (2018/3/14)
10. Radix Fidem: Boundaries with Women (2019/1/29)
11. Radix Fidem: Honest Expectations (2019/4/1)
12. Dalrock: They're too traditional to submit to their husbands. (2019/5/24)
13. Radix Fidem: Discernment 02: Boundaries (2019/9/3)
14. Σ Frame: How to Develop an Attitude of Detachment (2020/7/10)
15. Radix Fidem: Stringent Boundaries (2020/12/20)
16. Σ Frame: Determination and Detachment (2022/4/2)
17. Christianity and Masculinity: Why expectations of men and women are out of control (2022/10/14)
18. Catacomb Resident: He Owns You (2022/10/16)
19. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Laying out Boundaries (2022/10/19)
20. Σ Frame: Laying out Expectations (2022/10/20)

21. Christianity and Masculinity: Expectations and boundaries (2022/10/23)
22. Σ Frame: Christian Detachment (2023/1/30)
23. Radix Fidem: The Last Nail (2023/1/31)
24. Σ Frame (Rock Kitaro): Glorifying God Through the Courage of Upholding His Moral Laws (2023/3/17)
25. Σ Frame: Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT "Found" by Chance (2023/10/9)
26. Wintery Knight: Should Men Marry Women Who Think Relationship Boundaries Are "Emotional Abuse"? (2024/1/3)

Other Manosphere / Red Pill Posts on Boundaries

1. The Rational Male: Boundaries (2014/11/17)
2. The Rational Male: Intimacy (2014/11/21)
3. The Rational Male: Vulnerability (2014/11/23)
4. Knowland Knows: Beowulf: Masculinity and Boundaries (2021/12/17)

The Great Wall of Gorgan in northeastern Iran, constructed in the Sassanian era (224-651 AD) and stretching over 200 km along the border between Ancient Persia and China.

Posts Related to Boundaries in Game Theory

1. The Rational Male: Managing Expectations (2015/4/14)
2. Σ Frame: Introduction to Game Theory 101 (2018/2/11)
3. Jim's Blog: The three magic words (2020/8/7)
4. Σ Frame: Game Theory 110 — The Prisoner's Dilemma (2021/3/3)
5. Σ Frame: Strategies for the Iterated Prisoners' Dilemma (2021/3/17)
6. Jim's Blog: Make women property again (2021/4/19)
7. Σ Frame: Women Rely on a Man's Frame for Redemptive Introspection (2021/06/28)

8. Σ Frame: Why challenge the character of your wife? (2021/07/07)
9. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Lessons on Life and Marriage from Matthew 10 (2021/9/20)
10. Σ Frame: A Volitional Model of Cascade Courtship (2021/11/15)
11. Σ Frame: Moral Guidance Based Feedback vs. Sexual Attention (2021/11/24)
12. Σ Frame (Thedeti): What can a husband do in response to a rebellious wife? (2022/1/31)
13. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Laying out Boundaries (2022/10/19)
14. Σ Frame: Game is an invitation to Humility (2022/10/25)
15. Σ Frame (Thedeti): Deti on Female Agency (2022/11/8)
16. Σ Frame: Expectations (for LTRs) (2023/1/20)

Something to Think About

Our study of Testosterone back in August 2023 revealed that T is what makes a man perform strongly in a competition, and conversely, winning a game or status competition boosts T. This creates a cycle which promotes dominant behavior. OTOH, repeated defeat decreases testosterone levels, subsequently decreasing one's competitive drive for dominance.

This same study also suggested that high T traits could be summarized as the regular enforcement of Boundaries and that this characteristic is one of the most outstanding features of Masculinity. this is also the idea that prompted this study of Boundaries.

The question for us to consider is whether the converse of the last paragraph is true. That is, does the regular enforcement of Boundaries boost T levels? I have not found any studies that answer this question, but based on the corellations with dominance and masculinity, I would guess that it does. Any thoughts?

Concluding Statements

I (Jack) have exhausted myself churning out long posts on this topic almost daily, and still, I believe there is much more to be discovered and examined. Even so, I believe this is sufficient coverage to make us familiar with this topic — enough to get us jump started with communicating in concrete, specific words about Boundaries, seeing instances where Boundaries are implemented, and identifying situations where Boundaries are needed / required. It is my hope that readers will be more cognizant of Boundaries in the future, and that this perspective will continue to be revisited when relevant.

References

1. Cloud, H., & Townsend, J. (1992) Boundaries: When to say Yes, When to say No; to take control of your life. Grand Rapids, Michigan: Zondervan.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Juxtaposing the Temporal and the Eternal (2021/4/26)
- Σ Frame: 8 Things that Increase Discernment (2021/6/25)
- Dr. Eric Perry: How to Set Boundaries with a Toxic Person (2022/1/6)

Boundaries 101 for Dummies

Red Pill Apostle · 1 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Strength of Purpose defines Masculinity.

Readership: Married Men; Marriage Minded Men; Mentors of young men;
Theme: Boundaries
Author's Note: The contents of this post are the proceeds of an email exchange between me and Jack on 2024/1/31-2/1. Jack organized and compiled the content.
Length: 1,250 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

The Inadequacy of Our Series on Boundaries

Views were up but readership was down for January, which indicates that there were some men who felt like the topic of Boundaries is old hat and skipped over it, while a few men are intensely interested in reviewing it and/or learning more about it.

At the conclusion of this theme of Boundaries, Jack expressed having a nagging sense of dissatisfaction with the project, as if we've missed something important. He wrote,

> "At the beginning of the month, I had hoped to come up with a set of guidelines that would indicate when a man is lacking boundaries or when he needs to employ boundaries and what kinds of things need to be done to do this. Something like a starter pack for beginners who know nothing about Boundaries. I never accomplished this, and the reason it bothers me is because it is something that is sorely needed but I'm not sure it's possible to come up with such a simple rule of thumb, "Boundaries 101 for Dummies"…"

Well… Jack is right. This is something that is 'caught' rather than 'taught'.

Cloud and Townsend's book, Boundaries, was written in 1992 and has been well covered. It's been around long enough that I remember my mom reading it when I was a kid. Dr. Orion Taraban's lectures in psychology are probably the best assessment of Boundaries that we currently have in terms of Red Pill awareness. We've always had the Bible, but the real life applications are not always so obvious.

All this information is within our reach, and yet, there remains something missing.

I think Jack's nagging feeling is the result of the series not being tied together by a centralized concept related to a man's purpose. But again, this cannot be done, as each man's purpose is unique.

I believe the deeper issue is related to The Law of Exposure — Boundaries are without substance and are essentially meaningless… Unless they are practiced. Likewise, our study of Boundaries lacks teeth if men are clueless about what it all means to themselves individually.

So here I'll attempt to sum it up for the dummies among us.

Applying Boundaries

As Jack pointed out, Masculinity is, at its core, about a man's Boundaries. A man knowing what he will and won't accept from others in life, and then being willing to both enforce the line and accept the results are at the core of being a man. Self-discipline, knowing yourself, placing expectations on her, addressing disrespect, dealing with intolerable behavior from her, walking away from a bad deal, and all the 'rules' that are designed to help facilitate walking away, are all for enforcing boundaries.

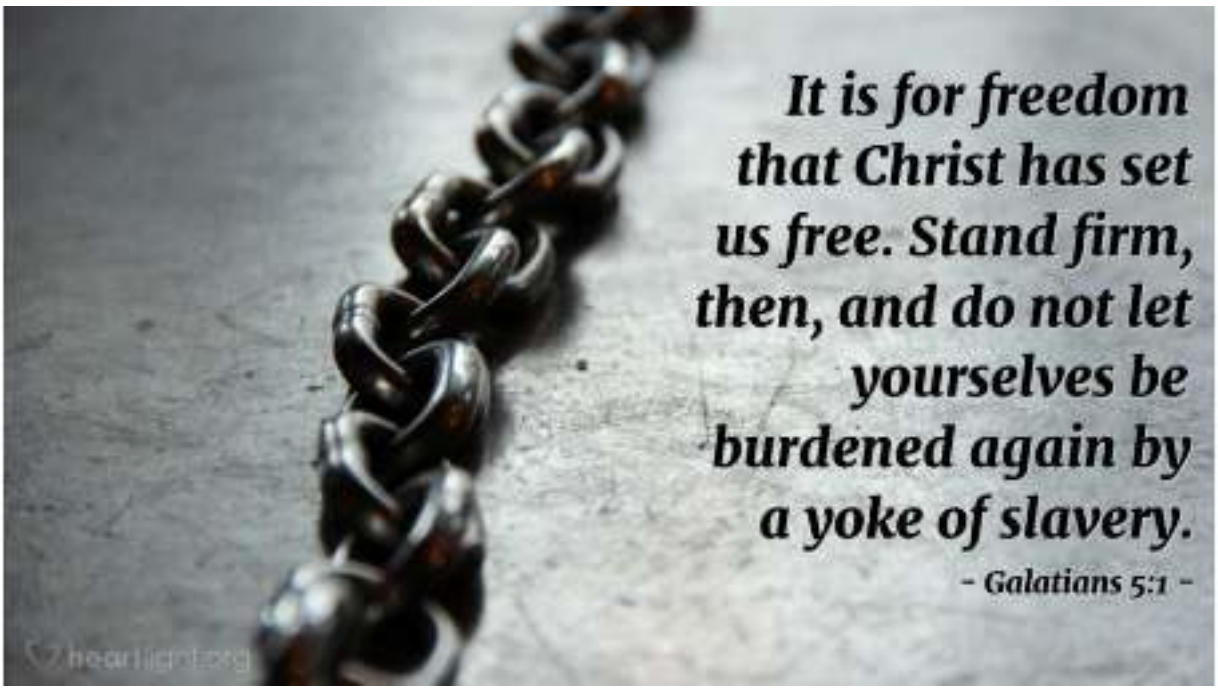
In fact, Boundaries are the framework of the Red Pill. Although Boundaries are usually identified as a foundational element of Christian living, they are a thing, no matter whether a man is a Christian or not. Most PUA tactics, like having two in the kitty, Pump first and Vet later, Spinning Plates, etc. are all strategies that help a man enforce his boundaries / prerogatives more easily. Interestingly, Dread Game, Emotional Detachment, Outcome Independence, and Tit for Tat, were once considered heathen strategies, but we've shown that they are, in fact, Christian. Also, some other stratagems that were once considered Christian, like altruism, mercifulness, and the willingness to sacrifice / suffer, have been shown to NOT be as Christian as we once believed, or at least, the context greatly matters in ways that we were not previously aware of.

The bottom line is about wisely playing the hand that one is dealt towards building on one's purpose. What makes it Christian or not is whether that purpose glorifies the Lord. Nevertheless, Boundaries are happening, whether we recognize them and use them or not. It is the mark of a man to use them, and a man who calls himself a Christian who doesn't use them is foolish and immature; clueless at best, or a wuss-tard at worst.

Teaching Boundaries to Sons

For what it's worth as a "starter lesson for dummies", here is what I am teaching my sons (9 and 11): "You are young men and young men need to be comfortable expressing what they like and want without hesitating." They understand that they won't always get what they want, but they need to understand that it is OK to express their own interests. This is the foundation that has to exist for building the next lesson, which is enforcing your own interests. The enforcement part takes some experience and wisdom to do, and as their father, it is my job to help them sort out those lessons.

Ironically, my boundaries on them, how they are to act as my children to protect our family name, what decisions they are allowed to make for themselves and which ones I make for them, and how much freedom they have in light of their current maturity level, all provide the safety net that allows them to make the essential mistakes that they need to learn and gain wisdom. When they stay within the boundary I've set, no mistake is really going to hurt them badly. The mistakes will sting enough to learn from them, but won't do irreversible damage. That is real freedom.



The Takeaway for Dummies

If a man was never taught the lessons I am teaching my sons, then he's behind the 8 ball.

The first step for a man like this is to believe that his desires, wants, needs, and interests matter.

The second step is to acknowledge that they matter more than those of other people (especially women's), and that if he does not actively push those, no one else will.

I think those are the two largest mental hurdles, especially for men raised in Protestant churches.

At this point, the man can become a raging narcissist if he does not apply some guidelines around cooperation within his tribe (i.e. those within his sphere of influence) and a fierce dedication to his larger calling / purpose.

The other boundaries a man will need to work out are, in light of his mission, what are essential and non-essential tasks for that mission. The essential tasks get hard boundaries placed around them that are rigidly and aggressively enforced. The non-essential tasks have some wiggle room as these have some aspects of preference to them.

For example, I won't drop what I am doing to help a stranger do manual labor, but I will do that for one of my buddies. Why? Because we respect each other's mission and we know we can each accomplish more if we help each other out. Men who have this sense of commitment to purpose, even though they may not share the same purpose, are your brothers, your tribe.

Conceptually, these ideas are really easy to understand. In practice, a man who needs to learn boundaries has to grow a pair so that the give and take in his life is not all give and no take.

This is the major problem of the emasculated masses of modern Protestantism. How did we get from David taking names and counting foreskins to earn the trust of the King and to marry Michal, to men who are too timid to stand up to evil because turning the other cheek is a higher form of 'Godliness'?

> "The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing."
>
> John Stuart Mill

Related

- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Lessons on Life and Marriage from Matthew 10 (2021/9/20)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Developing Masculinity (2021/12/6)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Wandering in Search of God (2024/1/20)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions (2024/1/23)

Boundaries in Chinese Culture

Jack · 2 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Boundaries are used to preserve homeostasis.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries (January); Culture (February)
Length: 2,300 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes

Introduction

The theme for January 2024 offered a detailed description of Christian / Western perspectives on Boundaries. Westerners who know the value of Boundaries use them in accordance with their skill as a tool to project their social identity and to advance their personal goals in life. Westerners who do NOT use Boundaries appropriately and effectively are generally perceived to be immature, ineffective, or even inferior, in terms of their quality of character and social rank (e.g. popularity).

After living in China and Taiwan for a few years, I've noticed that the people here also have their own variation of Boundaries, only the motives are quite different.

Yes, Boundaries exist across cultures. Readers could probably guess that the motivating reasons and the way Boundaries are implemented would differ across cultures, according to their respective cultural norms and values, and that would be correct. However, based on my interactions in Chinese culture for the past 20 years, I know there is a much larger difference than this. This essay will explain the Chinese psychology of Boundaries.

Twin Pagodas on Lotus Pond, Kaohsiung, Taiwan.

The Centrality of Boundaries Supporting Homeostasis in Chinese Culture

The Chinese have a psychological preoccupation of focusing on their own personal Boundaries, and everything they see in life is interpreted by how it impacts those Boundaries, and especially how that impact affects their estimation of themselves, their subjective quality of life, and their social status. (The latter is colloquially called 'face', as in "saving face".) Social Boundaries are given some consideration, but only as far as the situation or relationship affects their homeostasis. Other types of Boundaries, which involve authority, finances, physical safety, property, and territory, are much more diligently and jealously guarded. I believe that the preservation of the ego is behind it, while noting that the Asian ego is intrinsically linked to one's sense of status, security, and well-being.

A subjective estimation of homeostasis is generally equivalent to 'Happiness' with an emphasis on spiritual humility (not false humility).

This focus on homeostasis is precisely why the Chinese culture has endured for thousands of years, in spite of drought, famine, pandemics, political unrest, and war.

This focus on homeostasis plays out in many aspects of life. In the remainder of this essay, I will address four of note: Patriarchal Authority, Social Status, Socio-Economic Mobility, and Individualism.

Patriarchal Authority in Chinese Culture

In general, Chinese society is rather authoritarian and very patriarchal in structure. As such, it can be excruciatingly demanding in some aspects of life (e.g. education, work, etc.), and surprisingly graceful in others (e.g. odd personal characteristics, social intercourse, social faux pas, etc.).

Generally speaking, people are expected to conform to the demands of society as a whole, and contribute something of value to their community and place of work. As such, Chinese culture is very meritocratic, in terms of The Law of Sowing and Reaping.

There is a great emphasis to maintain the status quo of the existing social structure. People are strongly pressured to honor and respect those in positions of power and authority, and are summarily dismissed as foolish idiots if they will not.

Social Status in Chinese Culture

People who hold positions of power and authority, those who are highly educated, and those who have material resources and property, are seen to have more value than the common person. The reasoning is that these individuals are the pillars of society, and that they contribute more to the social welfare in the form of businesses, jobs, leadership, products, etc. Similarly, and on a smaller scale, people who perform well are generally accepted, but there is very little reward, other than a positive notoriety and a slightly easier social mobility. However, people are willing to accept this in order to preserve the social stability of homeostasis. Thus, Boundaries are applied towards this purpose.

Socio-Economic Mobility in Chinese Culture

Everyone strives diligently to improve their own socio-economic standing, but with little effect overall. Only those who have exceptional talent in business, or who travel abroad to study and work are able to transcend the socio-economic class of their ancestors. For those of the latter group who manage to do so, the upward mobility seldom extends more than 3 generations. There is a saying, "The first generation (immigrants) earn the family's wealth. The second generation conserves / manages the wealth. The third generation consumes it." The reason for this cycle is because the succeeding generations adopt an expanded standard of living (usually in accordance with their host country) which consumes the bulk of any new earnings they may bring to the family coffers.

So again, we see a focus on homeostasis, in spite of economic fluctuations.

Individualism in Chinese Culture

In general, the Chinese view other human beings as being somewhat homogenous in character and personality, compared to the Western notions of Individual Identity. The conceptual value of a single human being is considerably lower than that held by Westerners for each other overall. Specifically, the attention to the role of the individual in the setting of society is almost completely absent, unless one makes himself ostensibly different somehow. If one's distinction arises from one's achievements, one's contributions to society, or from having great power or wealth, then one is afforded fame and honor. OTOH, if the differences are egregious, then the result, of course, is shame and ostracization.

Therefore, there is more pressure to appear "common" in Chinese culture, as doing otherwise would be considered foolish, proud, self-aggrandizing, and/or self-centered.

This is not to say that there is no individualism.

Western individualism tends to make a concise statement about one's uniqueness of personhood, one's socio-political beliefs, and one's identification with a subculture. Lately, individualism has included the expression of one's socio-sexual interests and gender identification.

In Taiwan, only clan consanguinity and political affiliations induce this degree of in-group identification.

Other than this, there is more individualism in the form of identity, expression, and personality, and this is generally well accepted for the most part, even more than it is in the West. Personal differences are usually overlooked as long as one behaves well, honors authority and one's parents, fits in to the social setting, and contributes something of value. However, this is much different from the Western philosophical concept of individualism.

Again, we see an emphasis on homeostasis, although it is personalized to the individual. In contrast, Western Individualism is characterized by individuals striving to differentiate themselves from their peers and preceding generations, thereby producing a pendulum effect.

Epilogue

The consciousness of Boundaries is a basic element of the typical thought processes that are prolific within Chinese culture. It is a manifestation of Filial Piety and the Noble Eight-Fold Path of Buddhism. Similar to how Americans who attend church on Sunday, drive large pickup trucks, and watch sports games (e.g. baseball) are considered to be "more American" in a figurative sense, the Chinese who guard their personal Boundaries (e.g. business, contractual rights, finances, property, reputation, etc.) with passion and a strict conscience, are often said to be "more Chinesey" than those who do not or do less. IOW, both are identified with conservatism in their respective cultures.

Now, please go back and read that part in bold again. It summarizes the Chinese focus of conscious awareness, and forms an internal locus of control. It may take a moment of contemplation for this to fully sink in to the Western mind. If you can understand this, then you can understand why the Chinese think and act as they do.

Related

- The Greater China Journal: Filial Piety (孝) in Chinese Culture (2016/3/14)
- Tricycle: The Noble Eightfold Path (2017/8/10)
- Σ Frame: The Taiwanese Life Script (2021/5/8)
- Σ Frame: War between China and Taiwan makes no sense (2021/10/9)
- Σ Frame: What is the Spiritual Power of Authority? (2024/1/11)
- Amerika: White People Need Psychological Safety in Order to Survive (2024/2/2)

Deti's 10 Rules on Boundaries thedeti · 3 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Here's what Men need to know.

Readership: All
Theme: Boundaries
Author's Note: This post collates and expands my earlier comments here and here.
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Boundaries are absolutely necessary. A few things I've learned…

1. You need hard personal Boundaries for everyone, including those you date. You need to make your Boundaries very clear with women. You need to discuss them explicitly and clearly with anyone you date with any seriousness. You need to understand these Boundaries and have that discussion long before you marry.
2. Understand that you have every right to have whatever Boundaries you want, with whomever you want. You are not wrong, bad, immoral, sick, or evil for having Boundaries and wanting things from your relationships. Remember that you are one-half of the relationship. Women are not the only ones who get to have Boundaries and Expectations. You have every right to these things, but you are the only one who can get them for yourself.
3. Express Boundaries up front at the beginning of a relationship. It is much harder to put down new Boundaries with someone you're already in a relationship with than it is to express them beforehand. It is much harder to move prior Boundaries after a relationship is formed to prevent another from engaging in conduct they used to freely engage in. It is much harder to say, "Hey, yeah… That thing you used to say / do to me? That's no longer acceptable to me and I won't let you say / do that thing anymore."
4. Decide what the consequences are for crossing a Boundary. Then, you need to make clear to the other person what those consequences will be for crossing your Boundaries. Again, that discussion must be held before marriage.
5. If the Boundary is crossed you must impose and enforce the consequences. No exceptions. Boundaries are useless if there are no consequences for violating them. If she crosses a hard Boundary and you said the consequence would be a breakup or divorce, then you break up or divorce. No exceptions. Be a man of your word, even when it's difficult. If you are not willing to impose a consequence and enforce it hard, then don't put down that Boundary.
6. Be prepared to end a relationship over violated Boundaries. Chances are, you may very well have to do this many times in your life. In fact, you've probably done it before, you just didn't call it that. Most people have ended relationships over violated Boundaries and/or repeated failures to meet Expectations. It's always better to end a bad relationship sooner rather than later after you've invested your ego, emotions, energies, money, resources, and time. You only have one life to live. Don't waste it on people who don't appreciate you.
7. Closely related to Boundaries is the concept of Expectations. Most men have sexual and other Expectations for a relationship / marriage. All the above Rules apply equally to Expectations. You have to make your Expectations clear. You have every right to your Expectations. You must discuss your Expectations (especially sexual Expectations) explicitly before marriage. You must set down and impose consequences for failing to meet them. You must realize it will be much more difficult to set down new Expectations than to enforce old ones. You will probably have to end relationships over repeated failures to meet Expectations.
8. Understand that if you do NOT set down Boundaries and Expectations, others will either (a) correctly decide that you have no Boundaries / Expectations and treat you accordingly; OR (b) they will set down Boundaries / Expectations for you and treat you accordingly. Moreover, IF you do NOT set down Boundaries and Expectations, others will treat you however they want, and it will NOT be in ways you want.

9. Boundaries with Women are necessarily different from those with Men.
   A. Most men have much the same Boundaries with each other. But Boundaries with women all depend on whether, and how much, she is truly yours. As such, Boundaries need to be designed to draw her under your domain of authority and/or keep her there. It's up to her whether she wants to submit or not, but either way, you must provide the structure that would allow her the choice.
   B. Boundaries between men are much more easily identified and implicitly understood than those between men and women. A man cannot assume that a woman will read, interpret, and respond to his Boundaries in the same way he could expect of a man.
   C. Men are rational, direct communicators; women are NOT and they seldom get down to the point, so you need to be proactive in doing that.
   D. All men understand that a violated Boundary brings with it the possibility of losing the relationship or even violence. Women are oblivious to this reality. They may not even care.
   (Pro Tip: Some women respond well to bold, decisive authority, while others see this as being heavy handed and over the top. Know which one is your natural style, and which type of woman you're dealing with.)
   (Expert Pro Tip: Women are likely to be indignant and self-defensive, and may therefore attempt to give false or misleading signals to conceal their true emotional response.)
10. All the above Rules about Boundaries and Expectations are for non-Chads. If you're Chad, these conversations and conflicts never happen, because both he and she know that he can easily replace her. All Chad has to do is walk out the door and next her. Today, non-Chads are much less likely to have Boundaries or express them to women because p_ssy makes men stupid. Most men put up with women's BS because they want female companionship and sex. Men need to master this aspect of themselves and make their Boundaries and Expectations clear, and then leave when (not IF, but WHEN) she violates those Boundaries. Chads don't have to do this. Chad's very existence expresses Boundaries and Expectations. This isn't fair, but that's how life is.
    (Pro Tip: If you have to employ a bunch of Boundaries with a woman and constantly defend them, then she's not sexually attracted to you.)

So there's my idea of Boundaries. Nutshell.

Related

- Σ Frame (Thedeti): What can a husband do in response to a rebellious wife? (2022/1/31)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Laying out Boundaries (2022/10/19)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Laying out Expectations (2022/10/20)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Expectations (for LTRs) (2023/1/20)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Summary of Boundaries (2024/1/31)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Boundaries 101 for Dummies (2024/2/1)

Jack's Thoughts on Passporting

Jack · 5 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Truths not expressed by proponents of the strategy.

Readership: All
Theme: Culture
Length: 2,300 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes

Personal Reflections

Under The Black Pill Fear of Being Used (2023/8/14), Oscar asked,

> "Hey Jack, do you qualify as a Passport Bro?"

Well, I came to Taiwan back in 2004, long before the Passport Bros became a thing. I had met several people from Taiwan during my graduate studies, and they all seemed like very high quality people. After that, I wanted to visit Taiwan. I came to Taiwan a few years later, and then my whole life changed. After a couple years, I never wanted to go back to the States. Looking back, and on a deeper level, I could say that I came to Taiwan because I felt God was leading me here. But I wasn't very well aware of that at the time.

I didn't come to Taiwan to look for a wife, but rather to get a breath of fresh air away from the ever increasingly gynocentric American culture. But in the back of my mind, I kinda knew I would find a wife here. Sure enough, after I arrived here, I got loads of attention every day from all kinds of women, and I got married within 18 months.

My first marriage didn't last. I wish I knew then what I know now.

When I married my first wife, I explicitly told her that my career was in Taiwan and that I would NOT be returning to the States, and she agreed to marry me (anyway?). So I thought things would be OK. But a few years later, she was secretly trying to ruin my career in Taiwan in an effort to force me to move back to the States. Apparently, she had the idea that she could “change” me and coerce me to do what she wanted. Nope! After a few years of court battles, she divorced me and found another way to go to the U.S. without me.

My second wife’s mother was once an American citizen. My wife has relatives in the U.S. and she’s visited them regularly throughout her life. She hates the U.S. and never wanted to marry an American man — until she met me. Things have gone much better with her.

I still get IOIs but not nearly as much anymore (maybe once a week), partly because I’ve aged, partly because I’m married, and partly because Taiwan has become more modernized and Westernized. Westerners are no longer regarded as exotic and notorious as they once were.

Do I qualify as a Passport Bro? Looking back, it sure looks that way, but I didn’t have the same motivations that the Passport Bros do. I don’t know if that changes anything or not.

In the remainder of this post, I want to go over some important things that are not explicitly stated or are not stressed enough by the content producers pushing the Passport strategy. Concerning what you are about to read, some of the nuances may have only applied to me 20 years ago, but I believe much of it is still relevant.

SMP Dynamics

Passport Bro proponents like to point out that they’re seen as a Western HVM in foreign countries. That’s true, but it doesn’t necessarily put you in the top 10% of market selection. Why not? It’s because the highest quality chicks in any culture go for the guys of their own tribe and race, guys who are accomplished, well established, and have money — and this is especially true in a Patriarchal culture. “Normal” well-adjusted women don’t latch on to a foreigner unless they’re desperate and can’t do any better in their own tribe. Or maybe they just love giant hairy men with blue eyes (like in the movies) and/or the idea of being disemboweled by a huge Johnson (like in Western p0rn), AND they don’t give a d@mn about being disowned by their family members, ostracized by their friends, and shamed on a daily basis.

Far from being in the top 10%, when you move to a different culture, you place yourself on the bottom rung of the SMP in the short-term “novelty” category. Yes, foreign men are considered to be HVM in general… but… they’re also “foreigners”, which places them in an entirely different market that has certain stigmas attached to it. So that means you will be selecting from the low to middle quality girls in an SMP that has already been thoroughly picked through by the locals.

Typical Traits of Accessible Women

In foreign lands, you'll attract a lot of women who have been undervalued or rejected by their own culture for any number of reasons. You can expect to get women with one or more of the following characteristics.

Lifestyles

- Divorcees
- Single mothers
- Retired concubines, sex workers, etc.
- Bartenders, dancers, entertainers, etc.
- "Too Westernized" (Translation: Feminist, g@y, promiscuous, W0ke, etc.)
- Catholics, Christians, Mormons, Jehovah's Witnesses, or other religion that is considered foreign to the culture. And being a minority religious group, most of these are FAR from being exemplary models of their religion.

A Taiwanese woman prepares betelnuts while socializing with a customer.

Physical Features

- Overweight
- Uncommonly short or tall
- Asymmetrical physical features
- Birth defects, scars, or other marring features
- Physical features are disproportionate or 'goony' looking.
- Infertile (medically confirmed)

Socio-Psychological Traits

- Arrogant, proud, etc.
- Anhedonic, depressed, poor affect, etc.

- Extremely low or exceptionally high IQ.
- Odd personality, socially maladjusted, etc.
- Low impulse control, poor self-control, etc.
- Too brash, forward, or outspoken for propriety.
- Personality disorders, e.g. Bipolar, BPD, OCD, NPD, etc.
- Comes from a broken or dysfunctioning family, emotionally traumatized, rejected by her family, etc.

IOW, you'll be eating the crumbs that fall from the table, but the payoff is that the crumbs will still be MUCH better quality (in terms of a LTR / marriage) than what a man would be able to find / attract in the West.

Vetting

Cross-cultural relationships are difficult and require a lot of humility, patience, and hard work. It is not easy to overcome cultural differences and language barriers. It's of crucial importance to discern the difference between cultural barriers and relational barriers. The former can be a fun learning experience leading to personal development, whereas the latter can be utterly catastrophic.

The trick about doing the Passport thing is that you have to be wary of women who see you as a Green Card, or Mr. Moneybags, and/or who expect to move to the States (and use you to do it). Remember, Briffault's Law applies all around the world.

Most Asian women are only looking for attention, cultural or language exchange, entertainment, friendship, validation, etc. Very few of them are interested in a LTR or marriage, especially with a foreigner, unless you can 'convince' her with your masculine charm and sexual charisma (a good hard unprotected d!cking) and 'convert' her to your way of thinking. Essentially, you'll be competing in a worldly SMP.

Speaking for the countries that I've visited or have had extensive interactions with the citizens, here are the things men should be aware of.

- In China and Taiwan, you'll attract a lot of retired concubines or women who have non-zero N counts. Most are just 1 or 2, while some are quite high.

- In the Philippines, you'll find a lot of married women (some with children) who are estranged from their husbands and who may hide the fact that they're married. (Divorce is illegal in the Philippines.) You'll also find single mothers, status seekers, and chicks who want to go live in the West.
- In Singapore, you'll find gold diggers.
- In Malaysia, you'll find Muslims and a wide assortment of very conservative and some very liberated women. There are also some open minded broads who love Wh!te guys and giant c0ck.
- Thailand has some nice girls, but also many tr@nn!es. Plus, you'll be in competition with swarms of other Western guys. Many of them are Alphas who got fed up with Feminism and moved there years ago. So the challenge is to find a girl who hasn't already done the nightclub scene and hasn't been defiled by other foreigners.
- Indonesia is based and pretty fresh*. Most Indonesians are Muslim, but there are some Christians.
- I've heard from friends that Myanmar is based and fresh*.
- Cambodia is listed as a popular destination for Passport Bros, but I haven't heard anything about it first hand.

In spite of what the Western news has been teaching, Wh!te, native English speaking men are still preferred everywhere outside the West, so it'll be easier if a man can pass for Wh!te. I've heard that Black men and Indian men can get some traction in the Philippines, but I'm not sure how well their LTRs turn out though.

If I was back in the market for a wife and I had to go somewhere other than Taiwan, I'd probably choose Indonesia, Malaysia, Myanmar, or rural Thailand.

 Based: The culture is characterized by patriarchal authority and observes traditional gender roles.*
Fresh: Not too many foreigners outside of megametropolis / tourist locations (like Bali, Bangkok, Jakarta, Manila). Foreigners are generally welcomed.*

Magic Dirt

Following on the heels of Japan, Asian cultures are becoming more Westernized by the day, especially India, Taiwan, and Vietnam. India is embroiled in a 'Civil' War over whether to remain Patriarchal or become

"Westernized". Vietnam has been undergoing a "quiet" sexual revolution since ~2005 and is now at the stage of development where single mothers are coming out of the closet. Taiwan had a belated #MəT00 cataclysm last year which continues to grow in extent. All in all, the mating market is flooded in most areas around the world. You just have to find one that's 'better' than the one you're in presently.

We've often heard statements that the U.S. is NOT "Magic Dirt" that can transform immigrants into high quality citizens overnight. Well, the U.S. IS "Magic Dirt" that can corrupt decent immigrant women into feminist slores overnight. I've personally witnessed this happen many times. In general, this is not only because of the country / culture, but the fact that women are herd thinkers and have a propensity to entropy, so then the country / community becomes a key influential factor. Also, the culture shock of moving to a different country makes women weak to resist temptation (and men too, so watch out for yourself).

So for it to work out, you have to continue to live abroad after you find someone and get married, AND you have to STAY in the foreign country until your relationship has settled to the point where she is no longer itching to scratch her hypergamonkey or has no other viable options. AND you have to make a pretty decent living wage in an internationalized job market. So unless you are at the top of your profession in the West, and you can transplant your career to establish yourself in a foreign culture, there is slim hope of finding lucrative / rewarding work abroad. The planning, preparation, and logistics are crucially important and are unique and often complex for each country. Not many men can pull it off.

Also, foreign countries are "Magic Dirt" in the negative sense for men. Unless you already have connections / family there, it's not easy to set yourself up in a foreign country and it WILL take a heavy toll on you. I've seen many types of men come and go over the years. In general, the progression happens like this. They are bright eyed and dapper when they first arrive. Culture shock sinks in at around 4 months. Daily confrontations with locals lead to them becoming bitter, burned out, and/or hopeless. Some cannot afford expenses, or deal with cultural complexities, or hold down a job, or meet visa requirements, or dodge the many complications of life. Others disintegrate and start doing the bar / Tinder thing. I've even known a couple men who came to Taiwan as a missionary, and after 15-20 years of the grind, they got a divorce and became a player. But most men don't last that long. Most expats eventually pull up stakes and return to their home country with their d!cks between their legs after a few months or a few years.

As mentioned, I moved to Taiwan in 2004, so I've had a long time to establish myself here. And I came here at a time that was favorable to foreigners. Even with many things in my favor, it was hard. Given how much the world has changed since then, I think it would be extremely difficult if not impossible for a guy to do right now what I did 20 years ago.

Final Warnings

Anytime the news of something good hits the internet and goes mainstream, the best opportunities for investment are already long gone. So if you see a YouTube video that says Brazil, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, or wherever is F-ing fantastic, then rest assured, that culture is no longer fresh, the women have already been picked through, and there are already so many thirsty Westerners infesting that culture that they're no longer welcomed by the locals (which is an important part of establishing rapport with her family). In fact, there's been reports of Passport dudes being set up and bumped off by locals in Columbia (seriously!) — almost certainly orchestrated by men who are protecting their own family members and/or the local SMP. We are fast approaching the end of the age in which Westerners are glorified, honored, and respected around the world.

I'd urge guys NOT to follow the pronouncements of the Passport Bro mouthpieces on YouTube or elsewhere who are presently giving directives on where to find the last remaining poon paradisios in this ever shrinking and increasingly corrupted world. Instead, you'll have to do your own homework and find out where you might get the most bang for the buck. Excuse me, ahem… the best environment to secure a god and husband fearing wife.

Related

- Passport Bros Movement
- Σ Frame: The Cultural Contrast between the West and Far Eastern Asia (2015/7/9)
- Σ Frame: The Problem with Having a Foreign Boyfriend (2015/10/7)
- Σ Frame: Consideration vs. Fatalism (2015/10/16)
- Σ Frame: Cross-Cultural Relationships and Dating in Taiwan (2016/10/17)
- Life Around Asia: How to Seduce Taiwanese Girls (2018/3/9)
- Σ Frame: A Historical Contrast: Western and Asian Women (2018/9/15)
- Σ Frame: Cultural Influences (2021/5/5)
- Σ Frame: Concubinage (2023/5/19)
- Graphs About Religion (Ryan Burge): Pews vs. Passports: Who's Leaving the Country—and Who Isn't (2025/10/9)

Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy

Jack · 7 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Analyzing the sociosexual supply and demand.

Readership: All
Theme: Culture
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Introduction

The comments under Deti's 10 Rules on Boundaries (2024/2/3) explored modern women's habit of viewing sex as transactional. Many readers couldn't understand women's fascination with being wh0res and why they insist on thinking of themselves in this way and making themselves miserable in doing so.

I decided to do some research on this topic, but to my utter dismay, I found that the psychology of compulsive narcissistic wh0redom is not officially recognized by the APA. I suppose it would be a violation of academic ethics to do any research on themselves.

Apparently, we are frontiering a new branch of science right here on Σ Frame.

Here, I'll offer a comprehensive summary of several insights that were offered in the comments. I'll tie this all together by explaining this phenomenon in terms of market dynamics. An analogy will be drawn with the other side of the negotiation, based on the nature of sociosexual authority and the commodities of trade within this paradigm.

Supply and Demand

Women supply things like companionship, help, homemaking, and of course sex, reproductive capability, and child bearing. Supplying these things are how women complete men's lives, and this is what gives them a defacto sphere of authority over a man in the home and bedroom.

When women are unable or refuse to supply these things to men, they lose market value, period. Women who only supply sex are relegated into a separate Sexual Market and are excluded from the Marriage Market.

Men supply things like identity, leadership, money, protection, provision, purpose, security, seed, and of course the Tingles (for some men). Supplying these things are how men fill women's insatiable needs, and this is what gives them defacto authority over a woman.

When men are unable or refuse to supply these things to women, they lose market value, but only in the eyes of women whose needs they cannot fulfill.

Market Imbalances

Overall, women need more from men than what men need from women, and the things that women need from men are more urgent and fundamental to their lives than what men get from women, so this naturally places men in a position of authority over women. This is not 'm!s0gyny' or 'patriarchy', it is reality. This reality is the basis of patriarchy, and only when it is abused does it becomes m!s0gyny. Interestingly, narcissistic wh0redom is a genuine form of auto-m!s0gyny, as we will see.

Modern Feminism has negatively affected how much women contribute to men's lives. Men's needs are the same as they've always been, but now women are less interested and less motivated in supporting men's lives and wellbeing and are more interested in becoming parasitical. Therefore, Feminism reduces women's market value.

However, Modern Feminism has positively affected how men contribute to women's lives, thereby enabling parasiticism. It has allowed women to extract what they need from men without any responsibilities to those men. It has also enabled women to secure for themselves many of the things that men used to provide for women, thereby decreasing women's overall dependence on men. Therefore, Feminism reduces men's market value too. However, this does not apply to high status, Tingle-inducing men because of women's innate hypergamous desire. In fact, it makes these men more desirable for this reason.

Although this is a step towards egalitarianism, women can never be completely equal to, nor independent of men. As soon as women must assume responsibility and exercise agency, they chafe, complain, falter, make excuses, and attempt to shift responsibility. Ultimately, women are either not capable, or will utterly refuse to do what it takes to be entirely independent of men. Women are their own worst enemies. This condition exacerbates their need for a male head and thereby increases male authority (and Head-aches).

Undermining Structures of Authority

In general, those who fulfill the needs of others are granted authority, honor, and respect. But Modernity has atomized the market dynamics such that only those who fulfill immediate sociosexual needs in a tradeoff are offered these benefits. Men who only supply proximate needs are used, ignored, and neglected. Thus, what we see is that only HSM are given authority, honor, and respect, even though they may be grossly immoral in how they conduct their lives and fulfill women's needs. Meanwhile, non-HSM are given the cold shoulder. On the other side of the equation, Feminism attempts to assign dignity and honor to women in spite of how immoral or irresponsible they may be (e.g. carousel riders, divorcees, single mothers, etc.).

Narcissism Generates a Preference for Transactions

Out of all the above mentioned forms of relational currency that factor into supply and demand, the expedient titillations of $$$ and sex readily captures the attention. Crassly put, men have money and want sex, women have T&A and want money.

Already we see the substance of pr0st!tut!0n. So here I'll develop the respective male and female viewpoints along these lines.

When women complain that "All men want is sex!", "Am I just a sex object?", and so on, this is the market balance equivalent of men saying, "Women are monkey branching gold diggers!", "Am I just an ATM?", etc. IOW, these are complaints about how the opposite sex needs these things from them and they resent having the authority of being a benefactor to others because of the expectations and responsibilities it places on them.

Instead of striving for a complicit relationship based on mutual good will and genuine love, it's much easier, more convenient, and immediately gratifying to dispense with trust and resort to a transaction.

Bitter Fruits

Although Modernism does give women a boost in certain respects, it ejects them from ever fulfilling the most fundamental purposes of womanhood, leading them to disappointments and regrets later in life. Furthermore, it fails to address certain basic needs that women have. The most pressing needs (for women) are C0ck and $$$. The esoteric, understated purpose of Feminism is to remedy this abscess by enabling women to be sexually liberated. Here, women try to extract ONLY those things from men that Modernism cannot provide, while avoiding the other entanglements as much as possible. The way this plays out IRL is that women get some needs fulfilled by some men, and other needs fulfilled by other men. We already know this. Women get C0ck from Alphas and $$$ from Betas / OASIS / Orbiters / divorce courts / government dole / etc.

Also, a small number of men take advantage of Modernism by opportunistically eliciting certain things from women (i.e. sex), while neglecting the traditional responsibilities thereof. The men who do so are in fact enabling this paradigm.

Moreover, all the sociosexual stratagems that the Red Pill has uncovered are fruits of Modernism, e.g. the AF/BB strategy, Marriage 2.0 / 3.0, Pump-n-Dumps, Transactional Relationships, and so on. Likewise, so is the social fallout, e.g. the Black Pill, decreased fertility, Duluth, MƏT00, MGTOW, OOWB, the postponement of marriage, widespread promiscuity, etc. These seeds were planted hundreds of years ago.

Transactional Relationships Lack the Authority of Love

What both men and women fail to recognize is that by providing what the other wants and needs, they are exercising authority and some degree of control over that person's life. That is, when a man confidently assumes the role of providing for a woman's needs, that woman grows to be dependent on him. Likewise, when a woman graciously assumes the role of fulfilling a man's emotional and sexual needs, that man becomes emotionally attached to her and is more willing to give her anything she desires.

Of course, this all breaks down when any of the following occur.

- Men / Women refuse to supply the needs of the other (e.g. wives withholding sex).
- One does all the taking and none of the giving (e.g. women scraping Beta Orbiters for $$$).
- Men / Women get their needs met through someone else (e.g. adultery, fornication).
- Men / Women fail to appreciate, honor, and respect the one who fulfills their needs (e.g. disrespecting non-Tingle-inducing men).
- One abuses their position of need provider by using their authority to control the other in ways that are not acceptable or beneficial to the other (e.g. wives withholding sex).

As you can see, women have most of the authority in ensuring the exchange is conducted in a spirit of love and grace, and withholding sex figures prominently as a form of abuse. Thus, it is women who do the hustling in this economy, not so much men.

Of course, we already know these things, but I think it is not fully understood, especially by women, how the exchange is supposed to work. This ignorance is a pertinent characteristic of Narcissistic Wh0redom.

When women believe they can tap into these market dynamics to fulfill their own needs while neglecting their God given role of fulfilling men's needs, e.g. being companions and helpers to a male head, etc., the dynamic of interaction reduces to a simple transaction in which they inadvertently reframe themselves as being defacto pr0st!tutes.

An attractive young woman blowing her purity and marriageability on a string of Ch@ds is the market equivalent of a wealthy man frivolously giving all his money away to hookers, sugar babies, and drug addled tramps.

Men cannot fathom why women are proud of this, and yet they are. This arrogant, defiant, haughty, proud, solipsism is yet another identifying feature of Narcissistic Wh0redom.

Takeaways

The bottom line is that you cannot take what you want from others without also fulfilling the needs of others and still have a relationship characterized by good will and love. As long as women focus on having their own wants and needs met and neglect their role in fulfilling the needs of others (i.e. family, husband, and children), the relationship necessarily defaults to a transaction. And for the most part, it is women, not men, who debase themselves through compulsive sexual liaisons and then insist on transactional relationships to cover their bare @sses.

Moreover, by buying into the Feminist / Modern paradigm, men and women are not only rejecting traditional gender roles, they are also rejecting their own sphere of authority, the dignity and honor obtained thereof, and ultimately love.

All this entails a mass refusal to observe not just one, but several Laws of Human Nature, especially…

- The Law of Sowing and Reaping
- The Law of Responsibility
- The Law of Motivation
- The Law of Evaluation
- The Law of Envy

Hence, the bizarre phenomenon of Compulsive Narcissistic Wh0redom.

Related

- Σ Frame: Why is the online amateur sex industry attractive to women? (2021/1/6)
- Σ Frame: The Future of Intersexual Relationships is Transactional (2021/3/12)
- Σ Frame: Women have sex to influence men (2021/11/10)
- Σ Frame: The Disappointments of Transactional Relationships (2023/2/14)
- Σ Frame: The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse (2023/12/9)
- Σ Frame: Those Old Notions of Equality (2023/12/25)

Selecting Markets for better Market Selection

Jack · 9 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Purpose. Choosing locale. Self-advertising. Detachment. Trial and error. Practice makes perfect.

Readership: Passport Bros, Single, marriage minded Men
Theme: Culture
Reader's Note: This is a continuation of my previous post on Passporting. The information in this post is based on my own experience in Taiwan 20 years ago. The tactics described may or may not apply elsewhere, but I believe the overall strategy and underlying theory holds true.
Length: 1,950 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Looking Beyond

We are living in a shrinking market in which most people have astronomical and unrealistic expectations for love. Fewer people have what potential mates want in a partner.

"Relation Inflation" = The costs are rising and the quality of relationships is falling.

Like it was during the post WWI depression and economic inflation, the "Have's" are enjoying the uttermost hedonic indulgences and most lavish parties in all of history, while those on the bottom are getting crunched.

However, for the Christian Man, Life is what you make it, and at the same time, Life is a journey of discovery. What we may discover is largely determined by what God holds for us in Life, but it is also influenced by decisions we have made in the past. It also depends on the decisions others have made in the past. Cumulatively, these decisions shape who we are and determine the paths of our lives.

An Analogy — Finding a Mate can be like Finding a Job

The Manosphere has identified the crucial importance of a man being about his mission, rather than chasing after chicks. Here I'll describe how the two are not necessarily exclusive, and the former can be used to accomplish the larger purposes of latter. In fact, finding a job is similar to finding a mate.

Even when there is a healthy employment market, finding a suitable job match can be difficult. An employer has to want what you can offer, and you have to want what the employer is offering. In the case of finding a mate, the authority dynamics are reversed, but the task of matching up corresponding wants and needs is the same.

In this situation, advertising can be quite effective. But how to advertise one person?

Employment agencies, headhunters, and online job sites are useful in helping one find a suitable job. Comparing this to finding a mate, we might guess that online dating would be analogous to advertising, where the man has to put himself out there (the equivalent of how people moved through society in the pre-internet age). However, in the modern Western mating market, the supply and demands are skewed and the market itself is debased. Online dating has become a rolodex of chicks for HSM engaging in hookup culture, and therefore magnifies these imbalances. It is a washout for the grand majority of men. Bad market.

Where can a man find a better marketplace to advertise himself?

The Passport Bros' basic strategy is to go hunting for a better market — overseas, in a different culture, language, and race, if need be. The supply and demand dynamics in more Patriarchal / Traditional societies are different and more favorable to Western men. Less so to Western women.

If a man has the mind to go legacy hunting abroad, then how does he select an appropriate market?

Choosing Those who Choose You

For me, I didn't insulate myself by avoiding foreigners while I was in graduate school, as most of my American peers did. I met people from many different countries. I took the chance to join a research group that had many international students. Of all the foreigners I met, I found that I got along very well with individuals from China and Taiwan. For some reason that I still do not understand, they liked me and chose to make friends with me, so all I had to do is choose them in response and return the effort to develop the friendships.

I met some Chinese girls during this time and had a couple girlfriends. The relationships were troublesome for many reasons, including cultural and language barriers and social expectations and implications. But my biggest problem was my Blue Pill / converged churchianity indoctrination, which I was still unaware of at that time. This resulted in a lot of angst, disappointment, and frustration in my relationships, not only in me but them too. (Younger men who've taken the Red Pill should not have this problem. The problem these days is in finding a suitable match with someone worthy of marriage.)

Nevertheless, all these experiences inspired me to go see China and Taiwan. A few years later, I did.

Names and Faces

When I first came to Taiwan, I was faced with the task of finding a job. I had a M.S. in engineering, tall, pretty good looking, but I was also a foreigner who didn't speak the language. I tried approaching many companies, submitting resumes, and so on, but got not even a nibble. This is basically the same situation that many men are now facing in terms of finding a LTR / marriage.

I spent a few days designing a business card. I wrote a short bullet list of anything that a potential employer might be interested in — my education, abilities, skills, interests… I asked a friend to help me translate the text into Chinese so that the card had English on one side and Chinese on the other. I added an interesting but not too flashy background image of interlocking gears (a hat tip to my trained profession) and spent some time to make the card aesthetically pleasing and easy to read. I also included a small photo of my face so that people would know I was a foreigner and it would not come as a surprise later on.

Then I went to some popular areas where there were hundreds of people walking around, like the downtown business sector, night markets, shopping centers, etc. In each of these places I found a group of people standing in a line passing out advertisements, brochures, flyers, and the like. I struck up a friendly conversation with some of the others standing there, assimilated into the line of people, and started passing out my business cards.

It was a numbers game. In one hour, I could pass out between 50 to 100 cards. On the average, for every 100 cards I passed out, I got one response, and for every 10 responses I got, I received one job offer. So basically, I had to spend about 10 hours to create an appealing advertisement medium in the form of a business card, and another 10 to 20 hours passing out 1,000 cards to find 1 job.

I took the first job offered out of necessity, but after a time, I found better opportunities. If I was unhappy with one job, I would keep going to public places and distributing my card and I would eventually find a better job. This approach is comparable to racking up sets and spinning plates.

As an added benefit to all this socializing and finding employment, I met lots of people and made some friends, some of them lasting several years. I also met plenty of nice girls in my daily interactions. I didn't have to go looking for them or chase them. They just appeared in my life. The most difficult part was in deciding which one to spend my time with.

Conclusions

To sum all this up, it would be a waste of time and energy for me to knock on every door in town looking for a job only to be rejected by each one. Instead, I made myself known and let the people who were interested in me come to me.

Likewise, it is a waste of time and money for a man to visit any number of countries, not knowing what he's going to find there. Instead, a man can pay attention to, or reflect on, what sorts of people he has met and gotten along with in his life and thereby narrow down his options. For example, if you had some Latino neighbors that you got along well with, then Paraguay or Peru would obviously be a more promising choice than say Bangladesh. If you had some Czech or Hungarian friends in college, then Croatia or Latvia would be more suitable than Singapore. If you have relatives from Egypt, then go check out Ethiopia or Somalia. You get the idea.

Also, it is a waste of time and energy for a man to express interest to any number of females he comes into contact with, not really knowing what she's made of. It's especially risky in this age of #MəT00. Instead, he needs to make himself socially 'visible', and then watch for those women who follow his lead to appear in his life as willing enthusiastic helpers.

Conclusions

These days, if one remains in the Western market or goes to any market that is already “Westernized” (and this includes many metropolitan areas around the world, including Japan, Taiwan, Vietnam, and the list is growing), an ambitious approach is rather risky, as it exposes a man to accusations of h@r@ssment and the probability of being rejected — and with very little provenance to show for it.

Therefore, a man should have less interest in womanizing, which is essentially idolatry. He should hang back from being overtly enthusiastic in expressing his interest in particular chicks and making impressions on them. He needs to curb his natural obsession with finding a woman to procreate with until he actually HAS one who’s worthy of the task.

Instead, a man should be about his mission / purpose / work. His focus should be on exploring how he might advance his purposes to the glory of God. He should clarify and realize his ‘Vision‘ and construct his Boundaries accordingly.

He should exhibit his involvement in the community, observe others carefully, and wait to see who expresses submission to him and supports his mission. He should let women show their clear interest in him first.

I know this is easier said than done. But nevertheless, it's important to lay out a working strategy.

Key Points

A bulleted step-by-step description of this approach is this:

1. Choose market wisely. This is perhaps the most crucial decision.
2. When out in the market, focus on your purpose / work and maintain a cheerful but detached disposition.
3. Be actively injecting yourself into a social community. Make your presence and your influence known and casually monitor the crowd for IOIs and people who are friendly and helpful. Remember names and faces.
4. Use these relationships to hasten your purpose; develop your sphere of influence and build your domain of authority.
5. Let the chicks who are interested in you reveal themselves. Of course, she's not going to jump on you and shinny up your leg (although some might). Her interest will be signaled with subtle hints, IOIs, lingering around your sphere, making herself relevant, and doing things to help you or offering to assist you somehow. It's up to you to pick up on these signs and graciously draw her/them under your authority.
6. Eventually, one or two chicks will reveal themselves to be superior matches over the others. Remember, you are the Head. She should follow your lead and help you, not the other way around.
7. Consult the Volitional Model of Cascade Courtship (2021/11/15) for a general guideline of how to proceed towards marriage.

All this may take some time, so wait and pray diligently. Trust the Lord to provide good things in His good time.

Related

- Σ Frame: How to Develop an Attitude of Detachment (2020/7/10)
- Σ Frame: How to build your ex to go back to being fond of you (2021/10/15)
- Σ Frame: The Meet Cute is not about "women chasing men" (2021/11/19)
- Σ Frame: The Meet Cute Experience as a Selection Model (2022/2/18)

- Σ Frame: Determination and Detachment (2022/4/2)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment (2023/1/30)
- Σ Frame: Glorifying God by Being Yourself (2023/3/29)
- Σ Frame: The Challenges of Moving Towards Headship (2023/4/5)

Sister doesn't Rap on Facebook

Jack · 10 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Chinese Title: 姐不跩說唱臉譜

Readership: All
Theme: Special Post
Author's Note: Written by Jack's father-in-law, grand officiator of the Chinese opera in Taipei, Taiwan. Translated by Jack.
Reader's Note: Chinese New Year is on Saturday, 2024 February 10.
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

那一天爺爺領我去把京戲看，看見那舞台上面好多大花臉，紅、白、黃、綠、藍，咧嘴又瞪眼，一邊唱、一邊喊，『哇呀呀呀』，好像炸雷，嘰嘰喳喳響在耳邊。

藍臉的〔竇爾敦〕《盜御馬》；紅臉的〔關公〕《戰長沙》；黃臉的〔典韋〕；白臉的〔曹操〕；黑臉的〔張飛〕，叫『喳喳-啊-啊啊啊 啊啊啊啊』。

I clearly remember the day my paternal grandfather first brought me to see the Chinese opera. I saw so many painted faces on the stage; red, white, yellow, green, blue… each playing a role. Grinning and staring, singing and shouting… Wow! Voices like thunder, others like birds twittering in my ears.

Erdon Dou was a blue face Stealing the Royal Horse. Yu Guan was a red face fighting in the Battle of Changsha. Wei Dian was a yellow face, Cao Cao was a white face, Fei Chang was a black face. They were all yelling loudly amidst the background chatter of their fellows. Such bravery!

A scene from Farewell My Concubine. The female actor's hand gesture displays love and loyalty to her male head. The male actor's hand gesture conveys authority, loyalty, and unity.

【說實話，京劇臉譜本來挺好看，可唱的、說的全是方言，怎麼聽也不懂，慢慢吞吞咿咿呀呀，哼上老半天，樂隊伴奏，一聽，光是鑼鼓家伙，隆個一個三大件，這怎麼能夠跟上時代、趕上潮流，吸引勾當小青年?】

To tell you the truth, the facial cosmetics of the Chinese opera have always been pretty good looking. But the true art of the drama is contained in the poetry delivered in ancient dialects, thereby preserved for posterity and used in perpetuity. All the singing and speaking is contained in these dialects which slowly sound more like incomprehensible babble as the decades pass by. Younger audiences cannot understand it no matter how hard they listen. The band is simple, only three pieces, cymbals, gongs, and drums. No electric guitars, no synthesizers, or special sound effects. How can the Chinese opera keep up with the times, catch up with current trends, and follow the modern era? How can this drama attract young people?

A scene from The Heavenly Maiden Scatters Flowers（天女散花）.
紫色的〔天王〕托寶塔；綠色的〔魔鬼〕鬥〔夜叉〕；金色的〔猴王〕；銀色的〔妖怪〕；灰色的〔精靈〕，笑『哈-哈哈哈-哈哈哈哈』。

The Heavenly King, adorned in purple, reigns from his pagoda. A green devil spars with a medieval knight of the cross. The golden monkey king, a silver haired monster, and a gray old sage are laughing.

【我爺爺生氣說我純粹就是瞎搗亂，美的精彩藝術、中華貴寶，就連外國人也拍手叫好，一個勁的來稱讚，生、旦、淨、末，唱、念、做打，手、演、身法，功夫真是不簡單。妳不懂戲劇，胡說八道，氣的爺爺鬍子直往臉上翻。】

My grandfather became angry at me. He said that I was just messing around which is absolutely the same as making trouble.

“These beautiful performing arts are the most precious treasures of China! Even foreigners applaud these performances and hold them in high praise. The performing arts require great skill and talent. The acrobatics require agility and years of practice. The Kung Fu is real, not just affectation. Every word and every gesture is rich with multiple connotations. All these simply cannot be achieved without great effort. But no! All you see are male and female characters, painted faces, and fuddy old codgers on the stage. All your reactions are nonsense! You don’t understand Chinese drama.”

He was so angry, his beard bustled on his face.

老爺爺你別生氣，允許我身邊就算是山珍海味，老師也會煩，藝術與時代不能離太遠，要重新、要發展，『哇呀呀呀』，讓那老的、少的、男的、女的，大家都愛看。民族遺產，一代一代往下傳。
一幅鮮明的鴛鴦瓦，一群群生動的活菩薩，一匹匹狗貓，一點點誇大，一張張臉譜，美佳佳！『啊啊啊啊啊啊啊啊』。

“Dear grandpa, don’t be angry. If I were allowed to eat all the delicacies from the mountains and the seas around me every day, those would soon become boring also. The arts and the times should not be too far apart. The modern era cannot relate to the old mythos. If the Chinese opera could somehow be renewed with continuous development, then both the old and the young, male and female, could appreciate it as you do. I do not speak mockingly. If the beauty of the Chinese opera can be passed from one generation to the next, this national heritage can be preserved forever.”

“A crowd of living bodhisattvas donned in grandiloquent facial masks, surrounded by distinct images of love-birds, mandarin ducks, dogs, and cats is a little exaggerated. But how beautiful they are!”

Notes 註解

1. 『　』花臉叫喊聲(Shouted by the painted face role.)
2. 〔　〕人名或戲中角色(Name or role.)
3. 《　》戲劇名(Name of the drama.)
4. 【　】演唱者的韻白(Spoken by the singer.)
5. 【　】之外的就是京歌(Alternate language is Jing Ge.)

A Western conception of drama prefers to categorize protagonists and antagonists as “good guys” and “bad guys” respectively. Conflicts and challenges arise from the difficulty of achieving certain goals. However, in the Chinese conception, all characters have strengths and weaknesses. Conflicts arise from their opposing purposes.

Facial colors denote the personality of the character.

- Black: A character who is brash, courageous, decisive, impartial, rough, serious, stern, strong, taciturn, and displays integrity and intrepidity.
- Blue: An astute, brave, righteous, stubborn, unwavering, and upright character.
- Purple: A character who is absolute, firm, just, powerful, resourceful, serene, solemn, steadfast, unwavering, and wise.
- Red: A character marked by bravery, courage, heroism, integrity, and loyalty.
- Yellow: A character who is ambitious, calculating, cruel, hypocritical, intelligent, and sly, and who is brave, passionate, and ferocious in conflict.
- White: A crafty, malevolent, sinister, suspicious, treacherous, and tricky character.
- Green: An envious, greedy, grumpy, impulsive, irascible, violent character who lacks self-control.
- Gold: Immortals or demigods
- Silver: Monsters

Related

- Taiwan Today: Special section on Chinese opera: Conventions of Chinese Opera (1958/4/1)
- Follow My Brush Marks: Language of the opera: orchid-speak (2017/2/24)
- Written Chinese: The Fascinating Conventions of Peking Opera (2017/12/8)
- Σ Frame: One Night in Beijing (2021/2/12)

Overcompensation of Roles in Relationships without Roles

Jack · 12 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Egalitarianism is an abstract concept that doesn't exist IRL.

Readership: All
Theme: Culture
Author's Note: This post explores comments from RPA and LastHoldOut, and adds some insights taken from an email exchange between Jack, Oscar, and Red Pill Apostle on 2023/7/27.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes + 2-22 minutes of video

Are sex differences more pronounced in egalitarian societies?

Under The Beta Factory (2023/7/24), Thedeti shared a video from Dr. Paul Maxwell that examined Churchianity. Maxwell attempted to answer the question of what makes certain versions of masculinity 'toxic', and how the church might begin to remedy the situation that we're in.

Here's the video, in case you missed it.

SelfWire (Dr. Paul Maxwell): Evangelical Culture is Beta Culture (2018/12/12) Length: 21:56

From around 2:15 until just after the 4:00 minute mark, Maxwell mentioned that men's traits and women's traits tend to be more pronounced in egalitarian societies. Here Maxwell says [emphasis mine],

> "…in order to fit into evangelical culture, you must act like a woman, and [this is] of course, 100% accurate and this is the case for several reasons. The first reason this is the case is that male traits are demonized, so in order to excel in evangelical culture you must be high in trait agreeableness, which is a female quality, a well-established psychological fact.
>
> A meta-analysis in the Journal of Psychology Bulletin [1] surveyed all the major studies between 1940 and 1992 and found that women consistently scored higher in trait agreeableness and tender-mindedness while men scored higher in trait assertiveness, openness to new ideas, and self-esteem. Another study published in the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology [2] found that these differences were most pronounced in egalitarian Western cultures, which the authors of the study note contradicts the notion that women and men self-separate merely because of socially constructed conceptions of gender. In other words, women being high in trait agreeableness and tender-mindedness, and men being high in trait assertiveness, openness to new ideas, and self-esteem was actually more pronounced in Western countries which try to make everything fair and try to give men and women equal opportunity for everything. Men and women actually self-separated out more, which the authors of this study noted actually contradicts this notion that "Well, women may be deferential because they've been socially conditioned to be deferential." No! The more egalitarian the society, the more agreeable and tender-minded the women were; the more assertive, and open to new ideas, and self-confident men were.

> So, scientifically speaking there is something inherently masculine about assertiveness and openness and confidence. It propelled the American Dream into the West, into the frontier, into industry, and evangelical culture has essentially cut the balls off of men by telling them that these qualities are sinful, that they ought to be docile and timid and speak in an airy voice about Jesus in order to succeed in the church."

In this excerpt, Maxwell has two points.

1. Evangelical culture is emasculating.
2. Men are more masculine and women are more feminine in Western Egalitarian cultures.

The first point builds on Maxwell's larger message about the effeminacy of masculinity within evangelicalism. Those who are Red Pilled and read up on Dalrock would not disagree with the assertion that most Protestant churches are Beta Factories, but at the time Maxwell produced this video, this was still controversial, as were all things Red Pill in general.

The second point, the assertion that egalitarianism fosters both masculinity and femininity, was not so controversial at that time but is becoming more so now that the social causes of the Churchian version of masculinity are beginning to be dissected. Namely, how can Complementarianism / Egalitarianism enhance masculinity and still be a Beta Factory?

Jack's Research

Since I've lived in both the U.S. and Taiwan for many years, I found it very hard to believe that sex differences are more pronounced in egalitarian societies, so I did some research on this.

Maxwell's original article that his video is based on has been scrubbed from the internet, including The Wayback Machine. However, he gave enough details in his video talk that I was able to locate the two research papers he cited [1,2].

Feingold's paper in the Journal of Psychology Bulletin [1] doesn't actually claim that sex differences are more pronounced in egalitarian societies. Instead, the authors conclude that men and women have different sets of traits and that there are no noteworthy differences in these sets of traits across cultures. This is a strike against egalitarianism.

Costa, et al.'s paper in the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology [2] observes Maxwell's claim in passing, as it was not the focus of their main research. They were surprised and couldn't explain why.

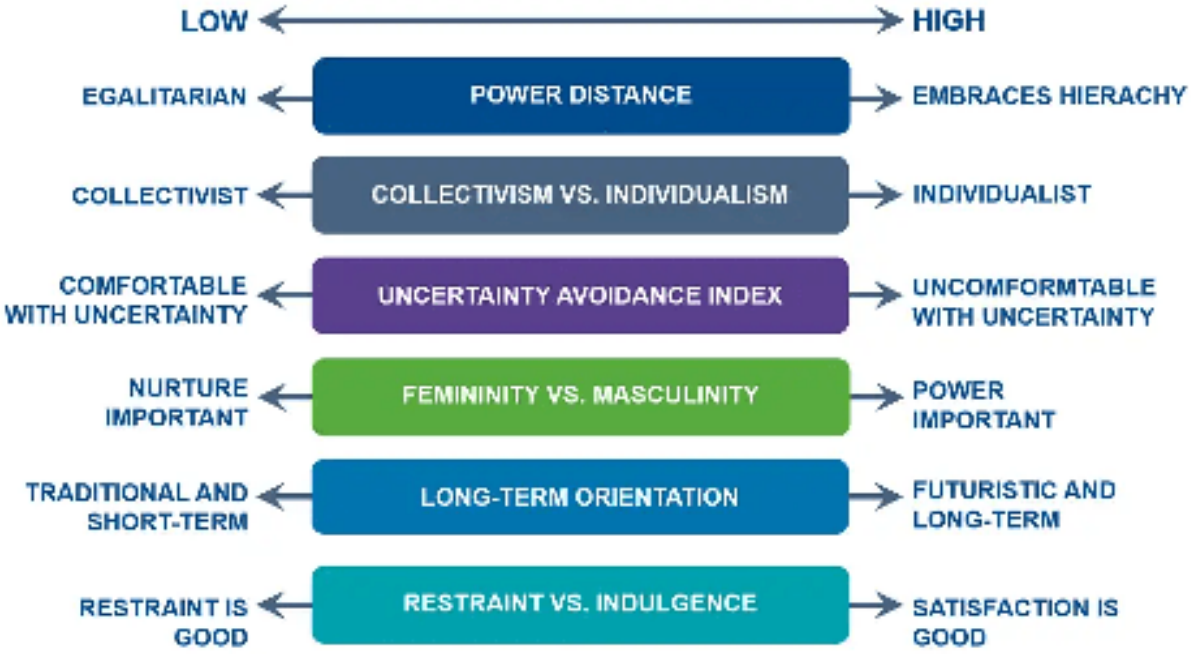
I did some more digging. I could not find any research papers that established a causative link between augmented gender differences and egalitarianism. However, I found a paper by Guimond [3] that answers the question indirectly. Guimond asserts that gender differentiation is associated with Individualistic Cultures.

> "At the cultural level, the Individualism / Collectivism Dimension identified by Hofstede was highly correlated with the overall level of gender differentiation, with Individualist cultures (such as the USA) showing larger gender differences than Collectivist ones (such as China)."

Here, Guimond is referring to Hofstede's theory of "Cultural Dimensions". So this opens up another can of worms — Cultural Dimensions.

Hofstede's Cultural Dimensions

Cultural differences and how various elements influence the characteristics of a culture may be assessed more easily when Hofstede's theory of "Cultural Dimensions is considered. A brief outline of Hofstede's 6 Dimensions of Culture is given in the following illustration and an appendix at the bottom of this essay. Hofstede's book [4] on this topic (cited by Guimond) is listed in the References below.



There are 3 Cultural Dimensions of interest to the discourses above; (1) Collectivism vs Individualism, (2) Power Distance (Egalitarianism), and possibly (3) Masculinity vs Femininity.* It should be well noted that these Cultural Dimensions may appear in different combinations within different cultures. It should also be noted that 'Individualism' is NOT a reference to the philosophy by the same name, although there may be some overlap.

 The Masculinity vs Femininity Dimension has recently been renamed "Motivation".*

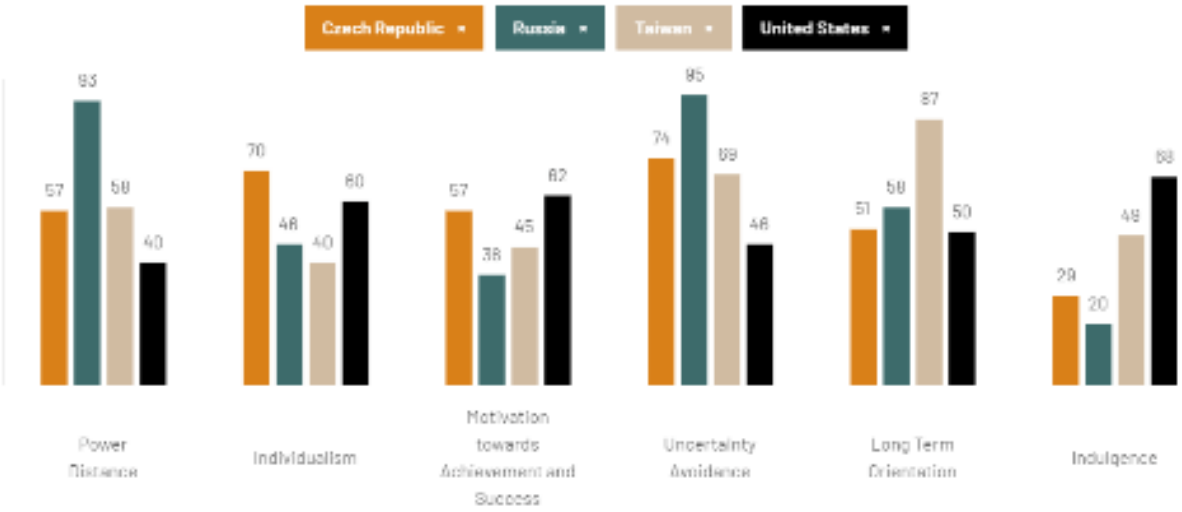
If we rephrase Maxwell's claim in terms of Cultural Dimensions, then Maxwell is saying that a decreased Power Distance specifically between the sexes (more gender egalitarianism) is somehow correlated with or directly causes gender differences to become more pronounced. Our present question is whether this is true or not. A second question appears — how does Collectivism vs Individualism play into this?

The influence of each of these 3 Dimensions is discussed as follows.

Collectivism vs Individualism

Guimond [3] stated that gender differentiation is associated with Individualistic cultures (as opposed to Collectivist cultures) — NOT cultures having a decreased Power Distance (gender egalitarianism).

Hofstede noted that Individualist cultures typically have a higher per capita income, have fewer children (lower fertility rate), are better educated, are typically more egalitarian in polity, and are more universalist (particular relationships are not counted, and cronyism and favoritism are considerably less acceptable, even to be considered unethical). The question of why this is will be addressed in the following section.



Power Distance (Egalitarianism)

Egalitarianism is a metric that appears under a different Cultural Dimension — Power Distance, which concerns how a culture deals with unequal distributions of power and defines the amount of inequality that is acceptable / normal. Egalitarianism assumes that Men and Women are 'equal', and so then gender is swept into this assessment.

Flanagan [5] reviewed the work of leading anthropologists in the field while calling into question prevailing notions about egalitarianism, maintaining that few, if any, societies are without some form of hierarchy.

Here's an interesting tangent. Bruce G. Charlton [6] asserted that modern humans have an innate sense of equality, which is activated when they encounter inequalities in resources or health. This sense of injustice is subjective and not necessarily alleviated by mere statistical adjustments. Therefore, policy should aim to address individuals' subjective experiences of inequality rather than focusing solely on population-level data. Moreover, Charlton agrees with Hofstede in that egalitarianism is a psychological perception that has little to do with reality.

Power Distance (Collectivism + Egalitarianism)

Poyer [7] conducted a study of a Polynesian tribe that asserts an ethos of egalitarianism while also valuing a traditional rank hierarchy. This supports Flanagan's observations.

Dalia Hernandez and Rudy Youngblood star in Apocalypto.

Individualism + Power Distance (Egalitarianism)

Here's something we've always known, but were unaware that there was any supporting ¡ScIeNcE! Béteille, et al. [8] reported that the tenets of Individualism and Equality are fundamentally opposed to one another. For example, instances of affirmative discrimination in which collective identities (such as race) are stressed or promoted as a part of the pursuit of equality, often come at the expense of individual claims. Given this dilemma, this paper concludes that the combination of Individualism and Egalitarianism creates a social schism on the psychological level — it either leads to a blanket assumption of human equality in which inequality is more or less ignored, or a preoccupation with instances of inequality. Béteille's work explains why complementarians / egalitarians either have their heads in the sand or else they are raving SJWs.

Masculinity vs Femininity*

Initially, I had hoped that Hofstede's Dimension of Masculinity vs Femininity* might shed some answers to the question about Maxwell's claim — whether sex differences are more pronounced in egalitarian societies. However, Hofstede's structure doesn't relate to the question, because this dimension refers to which gender roles and traits are emphasized as a culture, NOT how much they are emphasized as a difference between individuals.

Summary of Cultural Dimensions (as it relates to Maxwell's claim)

Overall, it appears that gender differences ARE more pronounced in Western cultures but it is because of higher Individualism and less Collectivism, and NOT because of conditioned egalitarian ideals (reduced Power Distance). It just so happens that most Individualistic cultures are characterized by a small Power Distance. These papers described many other attributive causes as well, which I won't go into for the sake of brevity.

Jack's Theory

Back to the revised question. Why do Individualistic cultures exhibit an enhanced gender differentiation?

I would venture to guess that it is because those in an Individualist culture are expected to be more independent, or IOW, dependent upon themselves to succeed and are thus more proactive about differentiating themselves from their competitors, establishing a name, and making something of themselves. In contrast, those in a Collectivist culture are pressured to be more socially conservative and not rock the boat, for example, the Chabuduo work ethic common in Chinese culture (Collectivist). Chabuduo (差不多) means, "Not too much, not too little, just right."

Red Pill Apostle's Theory

Red Pill Apostle presented a parallel explanation for the existence of this seemingly counterintuitive observed data and the link between gender differentiation and Individualism.

It boils down quite simply to this.

1. Men are competing against "equals", usually physically and intellectually for the purpose of winning a higher rung on the ladder. If men believe women are equals, as all modern women claim to be, then they are the competition to be defeated (according to Jack's theory).
2. Women are competing at being herd consensus builders in their interactions. Women default to consensus-building because they do not like the individuality and aggressiveness of men and the more men push for dominance, the more women retreat to consensus-building.

Moreover, when there is an egalitarian expectation for there to be no sex differences and no standard roles, viz. Men and Women are 'equal', as is assumed by egalitarianism, then those traits natural to the sexes still manifest, rise to the surface, and become more obvious. In the U.S.A. and perhaps most of the West, Individualism happens to be the social context in which these differences are expressed, and this emphasis on Individualism serves to enhance competition and accentuate these differences.

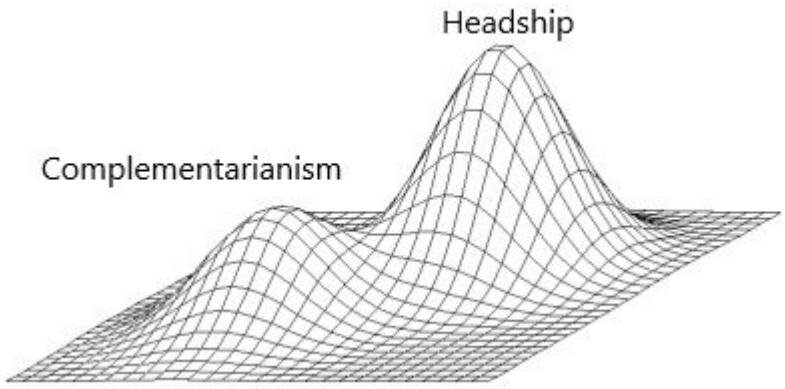
Conclusions

To address Maxwell's claim that sex differences are more pronounced in Egalitarian societies, simply put, correlation does not equal causation. Instead, it would be less misleading to say that sex differences are more pronounced in Individualistic societies and that many Individualistic cultures also value a diminished Power Distance (i.e. egalitarianism).

Hence, there arise a few more questions of interest.

1. Are there any Individualistic cultures that are also Hierarchical (strong Power Distance)?
2. Is a low Power Distance a necessary condition for Individualism? Or another way to say this… Is Individualism fundamentally opposed to Hierarchy?
3. Could Biblical Headship fit this description?

I'll save these questions for another post.



Appendix — Hofstede's Dimensions of Culture

Hofstede's book [4] (cited by Guimond [3]) and his later work describe a framework for cross-cultural communications called “Dimensions of Culture”. Hofstede’s 6 Cultural Dimensions include…

1. Collectivism vs Individualism – Describes the overall strength of the relation between an individual and other individuals in the society.
2. Power Distance — Concerns the way the culture deals with unequal distributions of power and defines the amount of inequality that is acceptable / normal.
3. Uncertainty Avoidance — Describes how cultures handle the fact that the future is unpredictable.
4. Masculinity vs Femininity (also referred to as “Tough vs. Tender”) — The emphasis a culture places on practices or qualities that have traditionally been considered masculine or feminine.
5. Pragmatic vs Normative — Refers to the time horizon of Long Term vs Short Term Orientation, and whether the Cultural values emphasize the past, present, or the future.
6. Indulgent vs Restrained – How a society regards the gratification of basic and natural human needs and desires related to enjoying life and having fun; whether they are relatively freely allowed or strictly controlled and regulated through stringent social norms.

References

1. Feingold, A. (1994). Gender differences in personality: a meta-analysis. Psychological Bulletin, 116(3), 429. [PDF]
2. Costa, P. T., Terracciano, A., & McCrae, R. R. (2001). Gender differences in personality traits across cultures: robust and surprising findings. Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 81(2), 322. [PDF]
3. Guimond, S. (2008). Psychological similarities and differences between women and men across cultures. Social and Personality Psychology Compass, 2(1), 494-510. [PDF]
4. Hofstede, G. (1980, 1984). Culture’s Consequences: International Differences in Work-Related Values. Beverly Hills, CA: Sage.
5. Flanagan, J. G. (1989). Hierarchy in simple” egalitarian” societies. Annual Review of Anthropology, 18(1), 245-266.
6. Charlton, B. G. (1997). The Inequity of Inequality: Egalitarian Instincts and Evolutionary Psychology. Journal of Health Psychology, 2(3):413-425. doi:10.1177/135910539700200309
7. Poyer, L. (1993). Egalitarianism in the Face of Hierarchy. Journal of Anthropological Research, 49, 111-133.
8. Béteille, A., Ahmed, A. S., Allen, N. J., Carter, A. T., Ingold, T., Lock, G., Srinivas, M. N., & Varenne, H. (1986). Individualism and equality [and comments and replies]. Current Anthropology, 27(2), 121-134.

Related

- Amerika (Brett Stevens): Inversion = Equality = Individualism (2016/10/4)
- Amerika (Brett Stevens): Inner Self as the Opposite of Individualism (2016/10/27)
- Amerika (Brett Stevens): Understanding Individualism (2017/7/9)
- Amerika (Brett Stevens): Leftism Is Egalitarianism Which Is Individualism (2019/6/16)
- If Only Even One (Todd Pearson): American Individualism and the Death of Christian Community (2020/4/15)
- Amerika (Edgar Tru): Radical Individualism And The Extremist View Of The Self (2020/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Is the Pendulum Effect caused by Western Individualism? (2020/10/9)
- Σ Frame: Identity Politics (2022/7/13)
- Natsab: Individualism v Restoration of Kol Israel (2022/10/12)
- Σ Frame: Does the Purple Structure Exist? (2023/10/21)

The Breakfast Shop

Jack · 14 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Dreams never explored.

Readership: All; Christians
Theme: Culture
Author's Note: Written on 2023/4/7.
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

The dapper young man pulled his motorbike up to the little breakfast shop on Huilai Rd. The first thing he noticed there was a young girl's bulbous butt squeezed into skin-tight off-brand blue jeans. Her shoulders hunched over the end of a broom, her long hair pulled into a tangled dusty ponytail swinging alongside her cheeky downcast face as she puttered around the sidewalk, sweeping up fallen leaves and debris on a windy April morning.

He took his helmet off, ruffled his hair, and strolled into the shop. An elderly woman of no distinct appearance tottered and shuffled around the cooking area. Her body resembled an irregularly misshapen potato draped in a dirty brown dress decorated with a pattern of once white daisies. Her face was jaded and slightly annoyed by decades of the daily drudgery. Her matted hair, streaked cormorant grey, was even more tangled and dusty than that of the young girl's standing out front.

He sized up the menu and decided the chicken cheese burger was probably the best item on the menu. By that time, the young girl had finished decluttering the walk. She deposited her utensils in a narrow, dark, cobwebbed space in the wall, and came up to the counter to receive his order.

At that moment, they locked eyes and he was surprised by what he saw. Her eyes were bright, intelligent, and alert, seemingly incoherent with the degraded atmosphere of the shop. He directed his choices off the menu and then stood by, casually observing her as she prepared his order.

"What a ratty place for a cute young intelligent girl to be!" he thought. "I could easily give her a much better life than what she has here."

Before she had called his order, he approached the counter and looked at her until he had her full attention. "Leave this place and come with me. Today."

Inside, she felt excited, but she looked at him inquisitively, unsure of his intentions. She straightened up and squared her shoulders. "What is it that you are suggesting?"

"I'm offering you the once in a lifetime chance for something better. We can be married if you wish, but no ceremony. A dinner party for your relatives is enough."

Wary of being taken in by fraud, she flushed an objection. "You are a stranger, and you are proposing a marriage to me… and without a ceremony?"

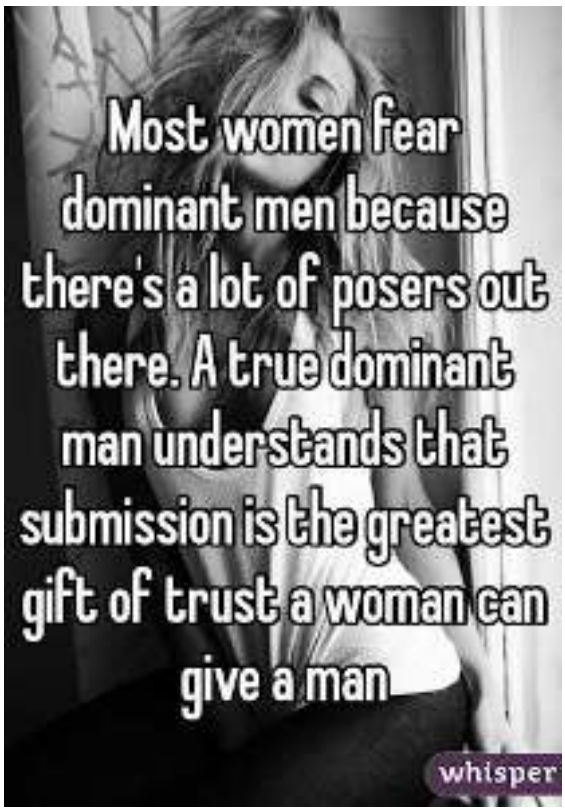
"We will hold a ceremony of consummation every morning, just between you and I. Alone. No one else will know of the joys we will share. Only for us. Our secret."

She sighed sharply and her arms melted, but she continued her cynical query. "What kind of life is that for me?"

"A life of honor and purpose, more than you will ever have here. Otherwise, you'll spend the rest of your life cooking chicken and potatoes. You'll look like your coworker in 30 years, and you'll probably die childless and alone."

She was speechless at his brash words.

"I will come back at noon. Be prepared to leave at that time."



For the next hour, she felt annoyed at the stranger's presumptiveness and forthrightness in proposing marriage to her upon first meeting. But after that first uneasy hour, an intense giddiness slowly swelled up in her soul.

Later in the morning, the older woman chided her for not sweeping the floor in the backroom. A demanding customer became angry because the edge of his toast was burned. After that, she began to dream of what kind of life she might have in the future if she ran away with the tall stranger. Soon, a struggle between her heart and her head ensued.

"I don't know him at all."

"He could be a gangster, or worse!"

"How do I know if he will love me or abuse me?"

"I might never see my family again!"

But as the minutes wore on and the kitchen became filled with the smoke of soybean oil, her fantasies of romantic desire and the excitement of her sensuous passions began to win the war against her doubts. Then in the space of an unforeseen moment, somewhere deep in her heart, a quiet voice whispered, "I will go with him. Whatever life he has for me, I will accept it."

After this critical moment of decision, she continued on working, packing sandwiches into paper bags while her mind was filled with random thoughts, but her heart felt strangely at ease. She slowly grew more confident about making this decision. Twenty minutes before noon, she went into the restroom and washed her face and combed her hair. She called her father and told him that she would be going on a little trip with a friend and that she would not be home for a few days. Finally, she said a short but sincere prayer to the god of her ancestors.

"Take my life and let me be a blessing to this man. Let him lead me towards good and not evil. Let me look back on this day with thankfulness and not regret."

At two minutes after twelve, the young man pulled up in an older BMW. She was surprised to see that he came from a family of significant means. Without saying a word to the old lady, she grabbed her purse and ran to get into his car. They drove away together, their hearts aflutter with passion and intrigue. The first place they went was to the plaza downtown. There, he bought her an elegant white dress and new shoes, among many other things. Upon returning to his family's estate in the mountains, he introduced her to his family's cook, housekeeper, and gardener, and gave them some instructions about how they were to work together in managing his family's home. The rest would come later.

Back at the breakfast shop, at the moment the new couple left, the old lady looked at them in utter bewilderment. For a moment, she forgot that she was standing in a run-down breakfast shop in a polluted Asian city. She watched the BMW until it disappeared behind a distant building and then she snapped back to the present reality. In her heart, she knew this was out of the ordinary and that the girl would never come back. She wondered how she would manage the breakfast shop all by herself in the coming days.

As she was closing up the shop at the end of the morning, she remembered once, long ago when she first started working at the breakfast shop, a tall young man had approached her and had asked to see her after she finished work. She was flattered by his attentions, but she was suspicious of him and didn't trust him. She humble-bragged about this to her coworkers for the rest of the morning and they all teased her and laughed about it. When he showed up later in the day, she hid herself in the storeroom and told her coworkers to tell him that she had already gone home for the day. She never saw him again. At the time, she felt proud of herself for avoiding the trouble of a man — always making demands and wanting sex all the time. She felt so sure of herself that she didn't need a man, and as the years wore on, she never thought about it again…

…until today.

“That will be 180 yuan!”

The young girl handed the bag of food with the chicken cheese burger to the young man. He took it, and paid her the money. Then he donned his helmet, strode his motorcycle, and rode away, pondering some more about what might have happened if he had been so bold in proposing to the young girl with tight jeans and mangled dusty hair who was working in the breakfast shop on that windy morning.

The girl continued to labor in the dusty grime and the stench of burnt soybean oil, and she never gave him a second thought.

…until many years later.

Related

- Σ Frame: Epilogue: Counting the Cost (2022/3/30)
- Σ Frame: Complacency (2023/1/1)
- Σ Frame: The Battle Within (2023/4/10)

Hierarchy vs Individualism

Jack · 16 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Which one is more fundamental to flourishing?

Readership: All
Theme: Culture
Author's Note: This post explores comments from RPA and LastHoldOut, and adds some insights taken from an email exchange between Jack, Oscar, and Red Pill Apostle on 2023/7/27.
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Introduction

A previous post, Overcompensation of Roles in Relationships without Roles (2024/2/12), examined the correlations between Egalitarianism, Individualism, and Masculinity. The conclusions posited the following questions:

1. Is a low Power Distance a necessary condition for Individualism? Or, is Individualism fundamentally opposed to Hierarchy?
2. Could Biblical Headship fit this description?

This post will offer three case studies for our discussion that are intended to help readers reach a conclusion.

Case Study 1 — Faith Comes by Hearing

When my daughters were younger, they were prone to insecurity and quarreling. Whenever they were fighting over the availability of household items, conflicting personal schedules, and such, I'd start talking about the situation, lay out a few options, and push them to compromise, make a decision, and cooperate, such that they could both get what they wanted. This always got them thinking like a family or a team. I noticed that sometimes they didn't even understand what I was talking about, but the sound of my voice rambling on about concepts that were esoteric (to them) was enough to humble them, calm them down, give them a sense of security, and cause them to introspect and reassess their state.

Observing this response from my daughters made me more aware of how I am like this with God, and it helped me recognize His voice more easily. It also improved my teaching skills. I learned that whenever I lose my notes or my train of thought during a lecture if I just roll with it and keep talking about something, anything really, then students remain attentive, engaged, and thoughtful.

Case Study 2 — Jack and Jill

My wife is high in trait anxiety, and she's also the type of personality who likes to have things planned and scheduled in advance (ESTJ). So at those times when schedules are hectic, important matters are unsettled, and/or urgent unforeseen events occur, she gets bossy, contentious, demanding, and gritchy. However, if I lay out a plan of action, give her some directions, speak in an affirmative commanding voice, and stay busy working on something relevant to the situation, she'll calm down and become less of a termagant. I've learned that I have to be careful not to respond when she is demanding a response because this comes across as me answering to her as a superior and thus tends to invert the structure of authority. I've also developed a habit of not responding to her when she yells about something from another room or speaks disrespectfully to me. Instead, I'll only respond to her when she comes to me to ask, and she does so in a polite manner. If she continues to insist on being a brat, then I'll confront her and talk about something important to her (e.g. goals, plans, schedules), and point out how her attitudes and behaviors are unconstructive and are slowing us down. At those moments, she'll usually try to avoid a direct engagement with me, but nevertheless, my words and attitude still affect her. It doesn't usually have an immediate effect on her behavior, but she will correct her attitude by the next day.

Case Study 3 — Wifely Submission is Liberating to both Husband and Wife

A long-time married female reader wrote me an email in response to LastHoldOut's observation. She says,

> "I have observed this in my own marriage. My husband tends to have a soft no and a hard no. Soft no — Translation: "I do not care for it but I do not mind it either." Hard no — Translation: "It is a firm NO. If you ask me again I will NOT be pleased." With a hard no, I do not even bother. With a soft no, if I try to be angry, demanding, or use the silent treatment, then a soft no DEFINITELY becomes a hard no. But, if I am very sweet, put on "puppy dog" eyes and say "pretty please" very nicely, then there's a very good chance for his soft no to become a yes."
>
> "I think this is because "pretty please" still recognizes my husband as my "authority". Even if he changes his mind he is still the one in charge. So he is more likely to be "indulgent". But contentiousness seeks to usurp that authority which is why that route brings out the "nasty" because he sees that as a direct challenge to his authority and so he feels like he has to "double down" to show he is the one in charge which he innately knows is the natural order of things. He is trying to restore the "authority" back to where it should be — with him."

RPA pointed out that her description reveals the dynamics that bring out the differences between the sexes, saying…

1. We didn't need another case study illustrating how women manipulate, but we got one. The explanation of how her marriage operates is one more example of how women's power exists in femininity, softness, and meekness.
2. Her idea that her husband has to show his authority or restore his authority is telling of how women see men. Maybe she does not see the difference between control and authority. The reality is that the husband's authority exists outside of a wife's attempts to usurp it. God gave it to husbands which means the interactions are more of an exercise of authority than a defense of it.
3. The doubling down, for me at least, is not a "restoration of authority", as she put it, but just an expression of the annoyance of dealing with a wife who is not voluntarily following God's order once again and the headache that creates. There is little "showing" who's in charge or "restoring" authority, only more work for the husband and less peace in the household because she did not readily and voluntarily go along with his decision.

Comparison to Headship

Going back to the question that was raised in the previous post, of why sex differences are more pronounced in low Power Distance / Egalitarian societies, if we contrast this against how men act in a Headship model, the reason the data is what it is becomes more apparent.

In his post, When Two Worlds Collide (2023/7/17), Jack outlined four possible responses that a man can take in response to a woman who holds herself as an equal to him.

1. He can treat her like a Friend.
2. He can treat her like a Competitor.
3. He can treat her as an Enemy.

In Biblical headship, husbands / fathers are responsible for their wives / children and are urged to be patient and cherish them. When a woman recognizes a man as an authority over her, a man's nature as a protector and a provider shines through thereby granting the woman the dignity, grace, and honor she desires.

Within the Headship paradigm, a respectful wife may be more bold in her interactions with her husband because she won't come across as a competitor, or a challenge to be opposed and defeated. The wife's submission to him removes the competition inherent in egalitarianism by making what she wants a request rather than a demand and by adjusting / affirming his view of her as someone under his care rather than an opponent to be defeated. And if she is a biblically submissive wife, his directions to her will generally be followed which arrests the husband's instinct to compete. There is nothing to defeat if she's waiving the feminine flag of wifely compliance.

LastHoldOut made this dynamic clearer in writing,

> "The inverse correlation between headship / submission and a man's "competitive" tendencies toward his wife is hard-wired. The church!ans interpret his competitiveness as the man being self-centered and heavy-handed and it never dawns on them that the woman is not holding her biblical role. The competitive element is not there in the case of a marriage where the woman wholeheartedly submits. There is peace and love."

Moreover, Headship gives a married couple the authority structure within which they can relax and have a little more give and take. Biblical Headship permits men to be masculine and women to be feminine.

Conclusions

To answer the questions raised in the introduction, the tentative* conclusions are as follows.

1. Individualism is NOT fundamentally opposed to hierarchy as long as the hierarchy is dutifully observed.
2. Biblical Headship permits more Individualism in the form of personal expression and liberty. In fact, this may be the reason why Christian cultures are more Individualistic.

As time goes on, Western societies have slowly moved away from the recognition of male authority, and there has been more intersexual competition, contention, and strife as a result. Apparently, it is the structure of male authority (exhibited in Headship) that has contributed to the flourishing success of Christian societies in the past, rather than Egalitarianism or Individualism (as opposed to Collectivism), as Maxwell presumed.

 I say 'tentative' because I am not yet fully convinced. Opposing viewpoints are contained in the writings linked below. Readers are invited to discuss the differences in perspective. One point of interest concerns whether or not, and how well the case studies offered above can represent a larger community or culture.*

Related

- Amerika (Brett Stevens): Inversion = Equality = Individualism (2016/10/4)
- Amerika (Brett Stevens): Inner Self as the Opposite of Individualism (2016/10/27)
- Amerika (Brett Stevens): Understanding Individualism (2017/7/9)
- Amerika (Brett Stevens): Leftism Is Egalitarianism Which Is Individualism (2019/6/16)
- If Only Even One (Todd Pearson): American Individualism and the Death of Christian Community (2020/4/15)
- Amerika (Edgar Tru): Radical Individualism and the Extremist View of the Self (2020/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Is the Pendulum Effect caused by Western Individualism? (2020/10/9)
- Σ Frame: Identity Politics (2022/7/13)
- Natsab: Individualism v Restoration of Kol Israel (2022/10/12)

- Σ Frame: Does the Purple Structure Exist? (2023/10/21)

A Christian's View of Buddhism

Jack · 19 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A comparison of how Christianity and Buddhism approach desire, sin, and suffering.

Readership: All
Theme: Culture / Buddhism
Note: This topic was requested by Aaron MacDonald.
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes + 4 videos (optional)

Introduction

Recently, we've seen an uptick in the number of mentions and references to Buddhism and Eastern Mysticism. I've also seen many instances in which the wisdom therein is paraphrased and is not overtly identified as such.

Here are some recent articles that contain examples of what I'm talking about.

- Illimitable Men: Extremes, Nuance & The Golden Mean (2024/2/14)
- Sigma Game: The Inevitable Misinterpretations (2024/2/14)
- The Upheaval: Confucius Says "lol, lmao" (2024/2/16)

In general, the citation of Buddhist philosophy / wisdom is usually offered as an expression of Gnostic Progressive platitudes but it also appears under the guise of 'moral truth'.

Readers should be aware that these ideas / "truths" are being snuck in under our noses.

To gain a proper regard for these insights, they should be assessed through a Biblical / Christian lens, and thereby assigned a proper place and value.

My Purpose for Covering Buddhism

The purpose of my addressing these things as they relate to Buddhism is not to convince readers to accept syncretism, much less convert anyone to Buddhism, but to enhance our discernment of the truth and to guard against misconceptions and error.

Since I've lived in Taiwan for many years, I've become rather familiar with Buddhism. In this post, I'll attempt to summarize the most basic beliefs of Buddhism as I understand them. A follow-up post will offer a testimony of my own faith in which I'll describe how understanding Buddhism helped me grow in my Christian faith.

It is hoped that my musings on this topic will increase the readers' awareness of it so that we are not ignorant of these influences. It is left to the reader to decide how deep to dive into this topic and how to determine the value and place thereof.

A Conspicuous Vacuum of Context

In my 50+ years of living, I've been exposed to many different religions and Christian denominations. I've found one thing that is true for all: that the most fundamental beliefs of any faith are the most difficult to apprehend, even to the point of being esoteric. This is precisely because the subject of religion deals in the realm of things that cannot be readily apprehended through the senses or intellect. Another reason is that when one wholly believes something from the heart, then it is seldom directly expressed in words. There is something about faith that excludes any objective discussion of the substance of that faith.

I consider other denominations and religions to contain certain elements of truth. They must, otherwise they could not endure over centuries. However, in making the cultural / ecumenical / interdenominational / religious jump, a great deal of context is lost in the crossover / translation. Understanding the context is assumed to be essential knowledge required for apprehending an authentic appreciation of the truths therein, and this knowledge may not be recognized by those who are unfamiliar with the supporting cultural / religious environment that would impart a deeper awareness of the intended meaning.

Here's an example of what I'm talking about.

Christ: Love the sinner, condemn the sin.
Buddha: Love the sinner, realize sinning is a part of life.

Liberal Westerners love the simplified Buddhist version because it appeals to the feeelz gooeds. That is, it can be easily misunderstood as removing apparent judgment and condoning sin. However, a deeper understanding of Buddhism implies that one must judge one's self first and foremost, which is also a Christian teaching (Lamentations 3:40; 1 Corinthians 11:27-31; 2 Corinthians 13:5; Galatians 6:4; 1 John 3:19-21). So properly understood, the Buddhist emphasis is less on either condemning or condoning sin, and more on refusing to indulge in self-righteousness, maintaining an attitude of humility, and being aware of one's own spiritual pride and keeping that in check. It is also a call to forgive others who sin against you — another Christian teaching. All in all, self-awareness and self-discipline is assumed, which are underappreciated by Westerners. Moreover, the problem in translation is that this deeper understanding would never occur to a typical Westerner reading these words.

Christians should recognize that most of these Eastern truths are wholly mystical in nature. This is a problem because, in general, Westerners are entirely unfamiliar with mysticism, and are therefore prone to misinterpret these philosophies according to an absolutist, doctrinal, or scientistic approach, instead of merely food for inspiration and introspection as intended.

A lot of the work of transforming a particular example of syncretic eisegesis into a valid ecumenical exegesis boils down to context and culture, as is true for any application of wisdom. Also, one's wisdom is only as good as one's spiritual discernment. I'll admit that it takes a certain amount of faith and humility to even admit that studying other religions can offer something of value to a Christian. So I can understand if some readers cannot accept my viewpoints. Take it for what it's worth to you.

General Information about Buddhism

Since living in Taiwan, I sometimes receive what Westerners might call "evangelistic tracts" for Buddhism in my mailbox and email. Buddhists don't have the concept of evangelism, but they do feel a strong conviction to share general wisdom and bless those around them in various ways. Buddhists are somewhat like Calvinists in this regard. They believe the fate of individuals is divinely ordained and they don't think human effort can change that.

Here's an excerpt from one such tract.

> "Many have the misconception of Buddhism being a religion. Buddhism is more of a way of life which can wire our brains positively and see changes in a different light."

> “Since fate has brought us here, we hope you can spend some time exploring Buddhism.”

Here are some videos shared through Buddhist email ‘tracts’.

What is Buddhism? Length: 19:52

Basics of Buddhism by Patrick Goodness. Length: 46:28

Albert Einstein on Buddhism. Length: 1:52

Bertrand Russell (Nobel Prize Winner) on Buddha and Buddhism. Length: 5:33

A Mystical / Soteriological Understanding of Buddhism

Whether Buddhism is a “true” religion is debated, simply because different people have different experiences with it. In general, most Buddhist teachings are a discourse in wisdom and living an honorable life. But a devout person could easily extend that to the belief that such actions have the result of redeeming one’s soul from sin, suffering, and hell, and some teachings address the eternal. It is generally believed that one’s actions in this life largely determine one’s embodied form of reincarnation in the next. For example, if a person abuses and ridicules the poor and homeless in this life, then as fate would have it, that person is predestined to be poor and homeless in the next life. It is generally believed that if a person can live a flawless life of good works, then they can reach a state of nirvana. IOW, they go on to heaven and are no longer reincarnated.

In a nutshell, the soteriology of Buddhism is that, through following the Buddhist path, one can completely overcome unwholesome mental states (kleshas), and thus break free of the bonds of cyclic existence (saṃsāra), and attain liberation (nirvana).

According to my understanding of Buddhism, this is comparable to one aspect of Christianity — being transformed by the renewing of the mind (Romans 12:2). The difference is that Buddhism does not acknowledge the source of the power by which this can be done — one’s faith in Christ. I can only wonder if Buddhists avail of this power without recognizing what it is.

In Christianity, rightly understood, one’s conscience, discernment, and sense of guilt should inform a person of what is right or wrong before one gets too far into it. The Buddhist concept of spiritual awareness is very similar.

Buddhism's Emphasis on Relieving Suffering

> "There is a great deal of quality content on YouTube regarding Buddhism and how it can alleviate suffering. During these trying times, we hope the above can help you! If you find this useful, please share it with your friends!"

As you may have noticed in the videos above, Buddhism is often touted as a way to alleviate suffering. I would say it doesn't alleviate suffering at all, but it is a way to cope with suffering. The predominant Buddhist method of coping with human suffering is through the management and suppression of desire. This is usually done through the following methods.

- Avoiding that which arouses desire, including certain people.
- Fasting / Vegetarianism
- Isolation
- Meditation
- Prayer
- Self-discipline
- Staying out of sin, temptation, and trouble.

Many Buddhists are vegetarians, partly out of their concern for the suffering of reincarnated animals, and partly because eating meat energizes the body, boosts libido, and enhances desire in general. So avoiding the consumption of meat tends to make it easier to soothe the savage beast inside the soul. In addition, vegetarianism is espoused because there is a belief that causing the suffering of other life forms tends to increase one's own sufferings, if not in this life, then in the next.

A humorous cultural note. In China and Taiwan, there is a popular pork stew called "Jumping Buddha soup", so named because the aroma is so delicious that strict vegetarians will jump out of their seats and run away to escape the temptation of eating it.

Buddhists' Regard for Christianity

Christianity is generally very well regarded by Buddhists, although there are exceptions.

People in Asia usually interpret Christianity as a very permissive, yet simultaneously a very demanding religion. (For example, Jesus forgave prostitutes, thieves, tax collectors, and those who betrayed Him, but He also asked them to forgive others, give all their possessions to the poor, go the extra mile, lay down their lives, turn the other cheek, sacrifice themselves for the good of others, and so on.) For these reasons, Christianity is generally seen by those in Asia as a religion embraced by those who have committed major transgressions or who have been forced by life circumstances to be morally compromising. It's very hard for them to get past the "salvation by works" mentality inherent in Buddhism.

Buddhists also believe that the Way of Christ and the cross, including the sufferings of righteousness, enable one to bypass all future reincarnations and lead one directly to Nirvana (heaven). (Yes, Buddhists "believe" in Jesus.) There are some homeless people here in Taiwan who have done just that (giving away all their possessions, sacrificing their lives, etc.), and yes, everyone in society, including their own families, despises and rejects them for this, just as Christ predicted. They are seen as foolish and irresponsible by unbelievers, and as admirable martyrs by believers.

Most Christians I've known in Taiwan were Buddhist before their conversion to Christianity. I've heard it said that "Christianity is Buddhism perfected", meaning that one's faith in God allows them to face their desires, fears, and sins, and “evolve” into the perfect likeness of God, thus allowing them to attain eternal bliss.

Related

- Σ Frame: Foundations of Cultural Ethics and Chivalry (2018/2/18)
- Σ Frame: Patriarchy is the Default Context (2021/6/2)
- Σ Frame: On the Discernment of Desire (2021/9/24)
- Meeting the Masters: The Materialism of Buddhism (2022/10/12)
- Aaron Renn (guest post from the author of The Social Pathologist): The Heresy of Christian Buddhism (2024/5/7)

Repenting from Covert Buddhism

Jack · 21 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Jack's testimony of how an ex-Buddhist Christian Pastor helped him identify misinterpretations of scripture that were crippling his spiritual life.

Readership: All
Theme: Culture / Buddhism
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

In many posts here at Σ Frame, I and other authors have often attempted to put the most basic beliefs and concepts of Christianity into words as a testimony of our faith, and also to inspire faith and belief in others. This post contains another such testimony.

Executive Summary

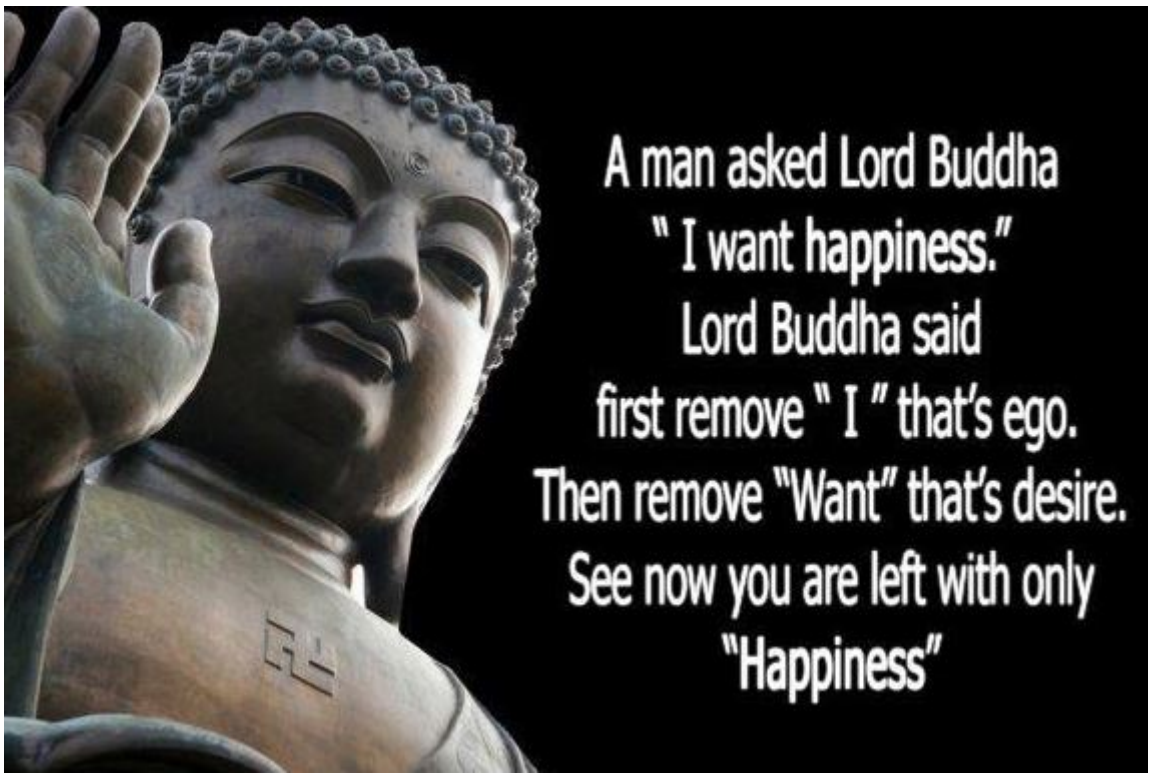
My pastor was a Buddhist before he became a Christian. I went to see him to discuss conflict in my marriage (ca. 2018). During our talks, he told me that I was essentially a Buddhist. I was surprised to hear this because I grew up in a Baptist church and I never had any interest in Buddhism. I asked him why he thought so. He said that my view of desire — that desire must be controlled, contained, and eliminated if possible, to achieve inner peace (IOW, Comfortably Numb) — and my concept of obedience — always altruistically doing the right thing — were fundamental Buddhist beliefs. Once I understood these things about myself, I was able to undergo an ego adjustment and find a deeper connection to my faith.

The remainder of this post conveys the details.

Desire and Ego

Note: I described this before in The Biblical Adage of "Dying to Self" is not Ego Ablation (2022/8/5). Here I'll briefly reiterate with added emphasis on what I've learned.*

After reading the entire Bible as a youth, I concluded that the phrase "dying to self" refers to getting rid of pride and killing the ego. Furthermore, I'd heard countless times from other Christians and from reading Christian literature that pride and ego are enemies of faith, strongly reinforcing this notion.

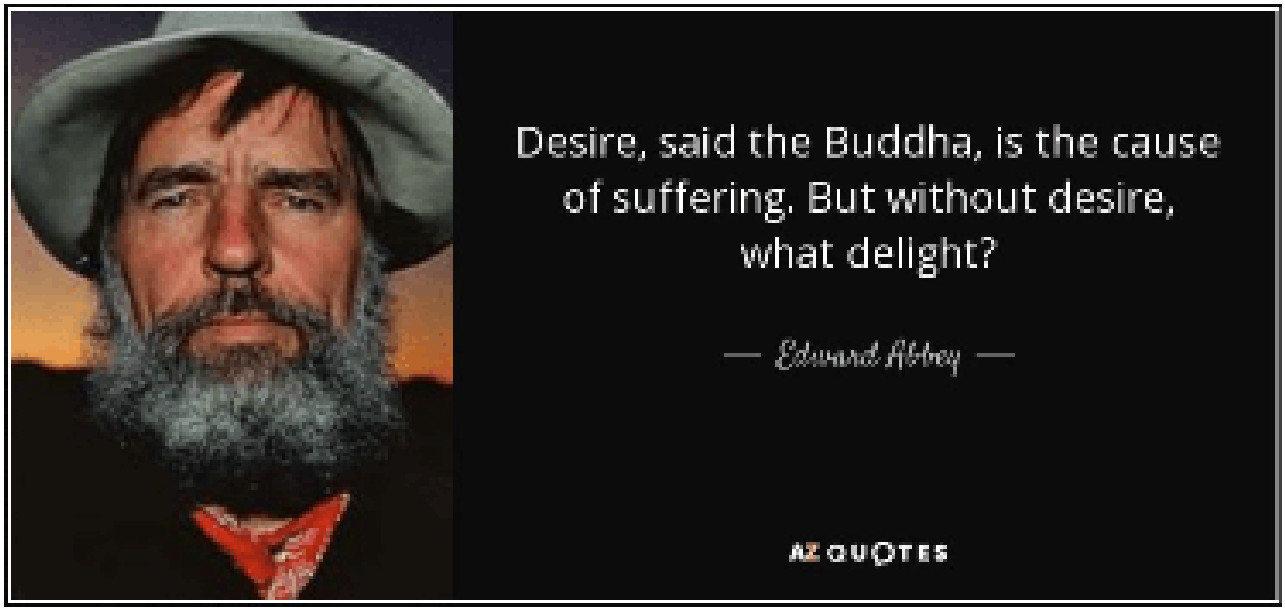


And so that is exactly what I did. Because I believed that the ego was part of the "old self" that needed to die, I killed my ego as a general habit until I had no ego at all. Likewise, I sacrificed all desire until I didn't even know what I desired. I made altruism my main focus in dealing with others, and I was always introspective, suspecting that I might have bad motivations. I did not consider what others thought of me and simply followed my conscience.

There were several negative byproducts / effects of this approach.

1. It destroyed my spiritual discernment.
2. I became crippled by self-consciousness.
3. Removing desire killed all my contentment and joy.
4. Being ego-less promulgated a distrust of others. I always felt like dealing with other people posed a risk to maintaining a clear conscience.
5. People found it very difficult to relate to me. In fact, it prevented authentic social connections to the point that others couldn't understand me.
6. It was common for others to assume that I was a bad guy, simply because I had no ego. This often left me feeling angry, frustrated, and rejected because even when I hadn't done anything wrong, people assumed I did and treated me as if I did.

Note: My cousin told me he also experienced point 6. But the way he dealt with this is by actually doing the bad behaviors that others expected of him. He told me it was better to own it than to let others define him and make him feel guilty for things he never did. My conscience wouldn't allow me to think like him. Interestingly, he's fared much better in life than I have in terms of $$$ and women.



There were a few points I had to learn before I could 'get it'.

1. Discernment and desire are bound together, and the discernment of desire brings suffering. One may be able to avoid suffering by abandoning discernment and desire, but at what cost to one's soul?
2. Desire is bound up in and expressed through the ego.
3. The ego is the link between the head and the heart. It is through the ego that the two are connected and synchronized.
4. People who believe things in their head that they don't believe in their heart, and vice versa, are people who have a broken, guilty, or maladjusted ego.
5. People who have a poor or maladjusted ego are typically bad, immature, or morally corrupt individuals.
6. People who are heavily into religion of any type, typically have a guilty conscience and/or a poorly developed ego.

After talking with him, praying, and meditating on these things, I learned that having a strong ego is important, but it must be healthy and well-adjusted. Catacomb Resident and Ed Hurst are the only other Christians I've known who have said such things. Every other Christian voice in my life has only warned me against the pitfalls of a prideful ego — without mentioning that rejecting the ego is NOT a Christian option for dealing with this problem.

The epiphany that made this click for me was realizing that point 5 above is what people sensed in me that led them to conclude I was a bad guy.

The 8 Fold Path of Righteousness

The Noble 8 Fold Path of Buddhism is essentially the Buddhist equivalent of The 10 Laws of Human Nature (LoHN). The difference is that where the 10 LoHN Boundaries are implemented for the purpose of obtaining greater authenticity, freedom, intimacy, openness, and trust, and to provide a protective hedge against evil individuals and influences, the 8 Fold Path of Buddhism is essentially a sincere, whole-hearted attempt to free one's self of all iniquity, sin, and unrighteousness, both internal and external, in order to attain inner peace.

These 8 points are briefly summarized below (paraphrased according to my best understanding).

1. Right View — To gain a correct understanding of reality and to clear one's path from confusion, misunderstanding, and deluded thinking.
2. Right Motivation — To renounce worldly living and to avoid violent and hateful conduct.
3. Right Speech — No false testimony, gossiping, lying, rude speech, etc.
4. Right Conduct — No killing or injuring, no stealing, no sexual misconduct, no covetousness or greed, etc.
5. Right Livelihood — Pursuing an honest profession; no sex trafficking; no trading in weapons, living beings, liquor, meat, or poisons.
6. Right Effort — To maintain an internal locus of control and to be a responsible moral agent.
7. Right Mindfulness — To always be conscious of what one is thinking and doing and never be absent-minded (i.e. autopilot), coupled with the awareness of the impermanence of body, emotions, and mind.
8. Right Consciousness — Develop and maintain a Noetic Nose and strive for the integrity of body, mind, heart / soul, and spirit.

The 8 Fold Path vs Christianity

Overall, Buddhism is excellent Coram Mundo, but it is inadequate Coram Deo.

The thing that Buddhism gets right is that it covers all 10 of the LoHN (from a mystical standpoint), especially that one's life is largely determined by one's choices and that actions have consequences. The things it gets wrong are that (1) suffering (The Law of Evaluation) is mismanaged and (2) righteousness cannot be attained by human effort. The Christian path to righteousness is through repentance and faith in Jesus' work on the cross, whereas Buddhists hope to be righteous enough so that repentance won't be necessary. Buddhists do believe in repentance, but if it ever comes to the fore, then one is considered to be careless, irresponsible, shameful, and stupid. IOW, you bumbled one of the "Right" paths, notably paths 6-8. (Buddhists identify Christians' need of repentance as a consequence of neglecting these paths.)

For Christians, a comprehensive reading of the Old and New Testament provides a familiarity with the first 6 paths. However, there are a few things that what passes for modern Christianity gets wrong.

Over the past few decades, the first path, Right View, has been severely compromised by Blue Pilled beliefs, Chivalry, Churchianity, cultural convergence, Feminism, and sexual permissiveness. Only since the advent of the Red Pill have we started a course correction. Similarly, the Western equivalent of the sixth path, Right Effort, has been co-opted by Feminism and has thus degraded into male hyperagency and female hypoagency, and the concept of maintaining an internal locus of control has been neglected almost entirely except by certain Christian authors (e.g. John Chrysostom, C. S. Lewis, George MacDonald, A. W. Tozer, et al.) who have addressed this aspect of faith in the form of mystical ponderings and fictional mythos.

The last two paths, Right Mindfulness and Right Consciousness, are not well understood nor practiced by Christians. To Westerners, Right Mindfulness tends to devolve into self-consciousness rather than conscientiousness, and navel-gazing rather than feedback assessment, introspection, and self-monitoring. A functional equivalent of Right Consciousness is recognized by Eastern Orthodoxy,* but is summarily dismissed as heresy, Gnosticism, or New Agey nonsense by Western churches.

 If one was schooled in both Buddhism and Eastern Orthodoxy, I believe one could compare many of the Buddhist paths with the mystical disciplines of EO. For example, Right Mindfulness is similar to Nepsis, Right Consciousness is like Hesychasm and Ousia, and so on. (Sorry if I got that comparison wrong. I'm not EO.)*

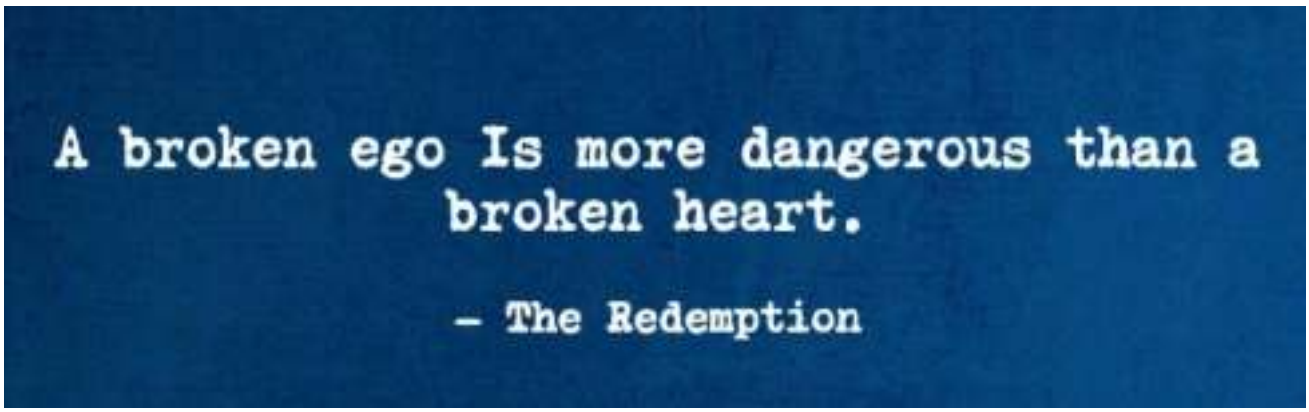
Results

To sum up, there were predominantly two false concepts I had gained from reading the Bible and growing up in churchianity.

1. "Dying to self" = Killing my desire and ego and thereby avoiding temptation and sin.
2. Obedience to the Lord = Altruism; Legalism; Self-Righteousness

My Pastor said my beliefs and practical approach is just like what Buddhists do. He said I was Buddhist but I didn't know it. This was a grand mal OMG! experience for me. It seemed so bizarre because I got these impressions from reading the Bible!

Concerning the first point, after talking with my Pastor and realizing that the ego is not evil but an important part of my psyche that has to be dealt with and cannot be rejected, there was one day, in the space of a moment, it felt like I suddenly had an ego that popped up out of nowhere!



Concerning the second, my pastor insisted that I was proud, but this didn't make sense to me. I am too much of a loner to be proud. After contemplating this, I realized that my issue was not one of pride, but rather a general inability to trust due to some childhood experiences. But being proud and being unable to trust have the same effects on one's spiritual life, and they look the same to others on the outside. Sticking to altruism allowed me to avoid having to trust — trusting others, trusting myself, and trusting God with my sin. The latter caused me a lot of angst, because it felt like I was letting it all hang out, but my pastor helped me understand that this is what is necessary to deal with it — to truly "know myself", confess, repent, and correct course. I couldn't just contain it, cover it up, and/or deny it. Without heartfelt trust, doing all the "Right" stuff becomes legalism.

Now, it is clear to me that I went down this path because I was already distrustful due to some childhood trauma, but I was too young to understand this about myself at the time. Only after talking with my Pastor did I realize that I was distrustful and that this was not the right way to "die to the old self".

I used to be very foolish (i.e. lacking spiritual discernment), or 'dumb' as my mother often pointed out to me when I was a kid (always to my shame). But since this epiphany, my discernment has slowly been growing, as well as my inner joy and peace. It's much easier for me to get in tune with God than it used to be.

But still, to this day, I find that dealing with the ego, desire, discernment, humility, trust, etc. to be more trouble than what I feel it is worth. I feel this way because it tends to bring more suffering than joy. However, as time goes on, I have come to see this pain to be less of a distracting nuisance, and more as evidence of being spiritually alive. IOW, I am no longer (un)Comfortably Numb. I've had the idea that this suffering is partly what it means to "suffer for the sake of Christ", but I'm afraid I might be wrong about this too. I'd appreciate hearing readers' thoughts about this.

Related

- Σ Frame: Hijacking and Misappropriating Eastern Mysticism (2020/1/23)
- Σ Frame: Reevaluating the Centrality of the Male Ego (2020/4/15)
- Σ Frame (Novaseeker): Viewpoints on Man's Confusion about How God Works in the Life of a Believer (2021/3/29)
- Σ Frame (Novaseeker): Juxtaposing the Temporal and the Eternal (2021/4/26)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Noetic Nose Knows (2021/9/6)
- Σ Frame: Dealing with Discernment (2021/9/17)
- Σ Frame: On the Discernment of Desire (2021/9/24)
- Σ Frame: Knowing One's Self (2021/10/30)
- Σ Frame: What is Mysticism? (2022/2/1)
- Σ Frame: The Biblical Adage of "Dying to Self" is not Ego Ablation (2022/8/5)
- Catacomb Resident: Ego Is Good (2022/8/8)
- Σ Frame: The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10)

- Σ Frame: A Christian's View of Buddhism (2024/2/19)

The Influence of Buddhist Culture on Women's Conduct

Jack · 23 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Religion shapes culture, and culture shapes women.

Readership: All
Theme: Culture / Buddhism
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Buddhism Creates Marriage-Worthy Women

When I came to Taiwan, I met many women here who actually ACTED like what I had always envisioned a Christian woman should be like — soft-spoken, demure, humble, kindhearted, and honorable. They were community and family oriented, looking to help and serve others. They were respectful to men and dutiful to the elderly. They held a high regard for marriage and viewed sexual relations seriously. They were also thin, attractive, and relatively well-dressed.

I was astonished to discover that these women were not actually Christians! They were Buddhists, and Daoists (Chinese folk religion), and some were agnostic.

What a shocker!

I already knew that religion shapes culture. But here I learned that the cultural environment and one's upbringing have a much stronger influence on women's behavior than religious affiliation or even devoutness.

How so?

The Buddhist women I met in Taiwan were taught filial piety and the Noble 8 Fold Path of Buddhism. These things were not taught as a religion per se, but as part of their general education in the public school system — what Westerners would call 'social studies'.

Furthermore, I have met a significant number (~ low 100s) of Indonesian exchange students over the years, and from what I have seen from them, Muslims are also more obedient to God's created order than Western "Churchians", especially in the area of Headship. (For this group, I could not say whether this was a result of religious teachings or social values.)

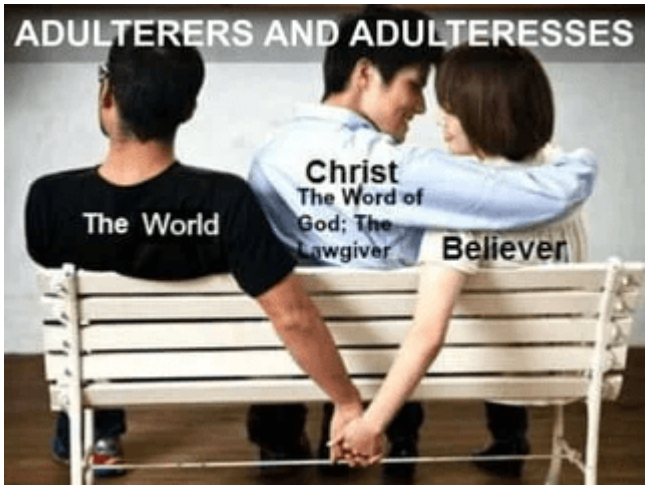
The takeaway here is that, although Christian churches and teachings are predominantly absent, the social norms of the wider culture have conditioned Buddhist (and Muslim) women to be rather well-behaved and loyal to their husbands. Moreover, it is quite ironic that heathen nations are bathed in pagan religions and yet the women are obedient to God's created order, whereas so called "Christian" nations are steeped in Churchianity and Feminism and the women are thoroughly disobedient to God's created order.

As Thedeti famously said of Western women,

> "All women, and I mean ALL women, born after about 1960 are marinated in feminism and are feminists. All women in the US over the age of 25 are feminists, and I don't care what anyone says to the contrary because it's not true. EVERY man who has gotten married in the last 40 years married a feminist."



In this meme, "Believer" should be "Churchianity".
It stands to reason that Buddhism (and Islam) are ostensibly better for marriage, family, and society than Western Liberalism, Christianity notwithstanding. This would explain the mass attrition of Protestantism and the creeping influence of Eastern mysticism (and Shar!a Law).

For a time, this discovery left me in a quandary about whether it might be wiser for me to marry a woman who isn't a Wh!te* "Christian" — not because Buddhism is superior to Christianity (it isn't), but as a matter of practicality — women raised in a traditional Buddhist culture are more worthy of marriage than women raised under Western Feminism, even those who might call themselves "Christians". As one Taiwanese Christian friend put it to me, "You need a Christian marriage more than you need a Christian wife."

This is why, in a previous post, Why do Christian women have the reputation of being whores? (2019/2/23), I suggested that Buddhist women raised in a patriarchal culture might make better wives on average than the typical churched-up, nominal Christian woman of the West. This claim, plus the descriptors "thin" and "submissive" received a lot of flak across the internet.

 In addition to culture, I presume genetics also plays a significant role.*

Case Study — Contrasting Views on Adultery

How a culture regards fornication and adultery has a powerful influence on the marriage-worthiness, purity, and overall quality of its women.

Commenter Jorgen offered some valuable insights about how the UNacceptability of sexual misconduct provides a powerful incentive to conform to traditional norms.

> "It depends if adultery is forgivable or not. Because if you're fornicating, then it's very likely you'll sleep with another man's wife who is lying about her marital status (well, as an adult anyway, maybe not likely for teenage guys who fornicate). Tertullian in his treatise (I think On Modesty) seems to believe adultery is not forgivable (after all, it brought a death penalty in the OT, so technically anyone who does it should be dead, but isn't due to Christians not stoning)."

Concerning the statement in bold, from what I've seen, it would be more accurate to say that sexual sin is not repentable (or highly unlikely). Nobody ever regrets it. They might regret being caught, shamed, or held responsible, or reaping the consequences (e.g. STDs, unwanted pregnancy, etc.), but nobody ever regrets the act itself. It is intrinsically defiling precisely because it is inherently satisfying. I believe this is exactly why the OT called for capital punishment for most sexual sins. (Cue Sharkly's screed.) If the offenders are not put away somehow, it spreads and slowly but surely destroys the culture, just as we are now seeing in the West.

Spare the s1ut, spoil the society.

> "In the Dhammapada, Buddha says, "He who sleeps with another man's wife goes to hell." Not a word is said of possible forgiveness (despite what modern leftist "Buddhists" might do to throw that in, having borrowed it from Protestantism). So it depends on how permissive the religious system is toward adultery, whether fornicating is a better idea than jerking it — fornicating can lead to marriage while jerking it cannot, if that is the only concern (but that's probably not the only concern)."

Concerning the passage in bold applied to women, this is the choice they face in a liberalized sexual market, what we call "running the gauntlet", and only the top 10-20% of men can pull it off successfully — if they ever repent. Heh.

> "It's also said somewhere in the Theravada Buddhist canon that a man who commits adultery goes to hell. When he gets out (because in Buddhism, it's a reincarnated destination rather than an eternal one), he goes through various animal lives, and finally, when he returns to humanity, he has to be born as a woman, and if (s)he can live as a woman without committing adultery then (s)he can be reborn as a man in the next life. Still, if, as a woman, he commits adultery, it's right back to hell. And of course, to pursue the final goal of enlightenment you want to be a man. It's an interesting idea whether entirely realistic or not. It would mean that a bunch of the modern whores are reincarnations of men who committed adultery a few lives back and are failing at their probation as women."

Interesting conjectures. These soteriological assumptions of reincarnation may not be true, but nevertheless, they do provide a strong philosophical emphasis on the value of chastity that is expressed through a mythos that resonates in one's soul. What sort of doctrine or mythos does Christianity offer to this end?

I've known a few Buddhist women who have committed adultery, and they either turn to Christianity or else they become completely maddened with various psychoses. Why does it appear that Christianity is OK with sexual depravity?

Moreover, these views of adultery provide an incentive for women to avoid illicit sex. What incentive do Western Christian women have for honoring and respecting their fathers and husbands, and for abstaining from sexual misconduct?

Closing

In terms of social stability and personal conduct, Buddhism is rather effective in conditioning women to be worthy of marriage and able to form stable families. The fact that it has endured for over 2,500 years, even longer than Christianity, is a testament to this.

From reading this post and the last 2, readers may have gained the idea that I am promoting Buddhism or claiming that it is better to marry a Buddhist woman than a Christian one. No, and not exactly. Rather, it is my intention that sharing my testimony might inspire readers to think beyond the conventions of religions and cultures, to arouse critical thought, and to look at reality (and women) more clearly.

I have to add this for single men. If you do marry a foreign woman, you cannot bring her back to the West, or else she will become defiled by Feminology. Culture has a more significant impact on women than family, husband, or religion.

Related

- Σ Frame: Foundations of Cultural Ethics and Chivalry (2018/2/18)
- Σ Frame: Why do Christian women have the reputation of being whores? (2019/2/23)
- Σ Frame: Hitting a glorified nerve at Patheos (2019/3/4)
- Σ Frame: The Christian Marriage Dilemma (2021/2/26)
- Σ Frame: Cultural Influences on Asian OASIS Starlets (2021/5/5)
- Σ Frame: Patriarchy is the Default Context (2021/6/2)
- Σ Frame: If it talks like a Christian and walks like a Feminist, then what is it? (2023/10/18)
- Σ Frame: Vetting Social Systems (2023/10/19)
- Σ Frame: The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)
- Σ Frame: Boundaries in Chinese Culture (2024/2/2)

A Snapshot of Eastern Femininity

Jack · 26 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Religion shapes families, and families shape women.

Readership: All
Theme: Culture / Buddhism
Length: 600 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes + 4 video shorts

In a previous post, The Influence of Buddhist Culture on Women's Conduct (2024/2/23), I mentioned that I've met many women in Taiwan who behaved like what I had always envisioned Christian women should be like — community / family-oriented, demure, dutiful to the elderly, honorable, humble, kindhearted, respectful to men, serious about sexual relations, soft-spoken, trusting, willing to help and serve others, holding high regard for marriage and family, and so on. They're also attractive, thin, and well-dressed.

Westerners may find it difficult to imagine a woman like this. This post will give readers a snapshot.

I found this YouTube creator, Lulu, who presents an ideal image of young femininity in East Asia. Lulu is Singaporean — a culture having strong Chinese influences. In her videos, she and her boyfriend, Bert, depict the simple joys that are implicit in a healthy Buddhist family. Note that family commitment and high trust are assumed.

Note: Westerners might be annoyed by her petulant mood and her high-pitched voice. This is a cultural norm. Try to overlook this and observe her behaviors and motives in the interactions.

To briefly explain the video, it is customary for people to give red envelopes containing money to family members during Chinese New Year, similar to how Westerners exchange gifts at Christmas. Lulu wants red envelopes from her family members, but it is impolite to ask or express desire. The correct way is to remain humble and wait to receive. So she creates a situation to draw attention to herself in which she can silently remind others to give her the red envelopes they have prepared for her. (This is a Buddhist family. See the large golden Buddha underneath the clock to the right of the television.)

In Buddhist culture, it is generally impolite to express desire. Indiscriminately expressing sexual desire is considered depraved. However, it is accepted and often cherished within intimate intersexual relationships. This video depicts Lulu teaching Bert to overcome his conditioned hesitancy to express his natural desire for physical affection — a hesitancy that is inculcated as a norm in this culture.

I also need to explain this one too. Bert and Lulu want to kiss, but it is unacceptable to show passionate affection in a public setting because it arouses the desires of others who see them and is therefore offensive to conscientious Buddhists. So instead, Bert plays footsie with her. This is acceptable because no one will notice, but it is also highly risqué because in East Asia, stroking one's foot on another person's foot or lower leg is a non-verbal invitation to sexual relations. It is a subtle way to say, "I want you now!" You can see the excitement on her face and her eyes glazing over with desire as she experiences the thrill of breaking the social rules of respectability without anyone knowing about it.

In other videos, Bert displays a bit of Game intended to guide and shape Lulu's behavior. Occasionally, he'll Game her for laughs, which they both enjoy.

This one is pretty good.

Here, Bert pranks her for laughs, but as it turns out, he's using this prank as a distraction from his ultimate purpose — to remind her to take her sanitary pads with her, in a way that doesn't embarrass her or put her to shame. Lulu is humbled and gratefully amused and gives him a tender hug at the end.

In summary, Lulu is pretty darn cute and super irresistible. Try suggesting to Western women to be more like Lulu, and you'll hear the REEEEEs go off like the air raid sirens of WW3.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Cultural Contrast between the West and Far Eastern Asia (2015/7/9)
- Σ Frame: Cross Culture Relationships and Dating in Taiwan (2016/10/17)
- Σ Frame: A Historical Contrast: Western and Asian Women (2018/9/15)
- Σ Frame: The Taiwanese Life Script (2021/5/8)
- Σ Frame: Cultural Influences (2021/5/5)
- Σ Frame: Boundaries in Chinese Culture (2024/2/2)
- Σ Frame: The Breakfast Shop (2024/2/14)
- Bert and Lulu on Instagram.

How Feminist Mothers create Feminist Daughters

Jack · 28 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The dangerous message of distrust is inculcated by example.

Readership: All
Theme: Culture
Length: 1,900 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

The Dangerous Message

The following essay appeared for almost 4 years on The Daily Wire before it was taken down in early 2022.

The DailyWire (Faith Moore): MOORE: The Dangerous Message Feminist Mothers Are Teaching Their Daughters (2018/2/25) [Archive]

Faith Moore writes,

> "In homes across America, feminist mothers are teaching their daughters a dangerous message: men — all men — are not to be trusted. "I know not ALL men are creepers," writes Jennifer Jarvis, on popular mommy site, Scary Mommy, "but I'm teaching my daughter they are."

I'm sure a site named Scary Mommy would cover all the basics of how to successfully repel the incessant infestation of creepy men scrounging for a helping hand. I can also see how the "Scary Mommy" model of motherhood might offer a catharsis for the lower middle-class ex-carousel rider who somehow managed to stick the landing. But I'm less convinced that this would offer any psychotherapy or practical corrective for the ministers of 21st-century home wrecking. At any rate, it's an exemplary model for the feminist mother who isn't likely to read Moore's article at The Daily Wire, so here, Moore is preaching to those members of the choir who are rather slow-witted.

> "The idea that all men are r@pists — or that all men promote "r@pe culture" — is slowly but surely becoming mainstream. Angelina Chapin of Huffington Post, for example, writes that all men "perpetuate m!s0gyny" and > "have a long history of silencing or discounting women who speak up about sexual violence." Colleges are beginning to institute programs to teach men how to stop contributing to "r@pe culture". And a recent Salon article suggests that men have learned a "social script" that validates sexual harassment.

I'm sure Moore could find more similar narratives on many other feminist websites. But instead of offering a truthful counter-narrative, Moore identifies with the implicit fear of predatory men that is promulgated on these sites, perhaps in the hope that those who are still blinded by the rampant m!s@ndry might recognize that her purportedly conservative viewpoint is no less m!s@ndr!c.

> "I understand that the idea of there being even one r@pist out there in the world, let alone many, is a frightening thought for parents. We want to do everything we can to protect our children — particularly our daughters — from the kinds of predators that, unfortunately, do exist. But, in feeding them the lie that there isn't a single nice guy out there — even in service of protecting them from the bad ones — we allow our daughters to form all kinds of incorrect and unhelpful conclusions about men.

As Moore suggests, women DO need to learn how to discern and trust good men, or else be open to recommendations from responsible trustworthy others. This should begin with a girl's father, however, Moore makes no mention of the role of fathers. But even if fathers are included, this may still be insufficient to reverse the primordial curse of being raised by a feminist indoctrinated Mother.

You see, it is women raised under Western feminism who are parroting the lies that Moore describes as follows.

> "If you tell little girls that men are categorically not to be trusted, you immediately expose them to danger. Suddenly police officers, fire fighters, and other good Samaritans are to be run from — instead of run to — in an emergency. Male teachers shouldn't be listened to. You shouldn't call your older brother to come pick you up if you're feeling uncomfortable somewhere. Your own father is inherently evil.
>
> "Not only that, there are a whole host of relationship implications inherent in this parenting philosophy. How can a woman possibly enter into a healthy relationship with a man when she's been taught that all men are inherently untrustworthy?

In all this, Moore fails to mention that perhaps a young girls' greatest enemy is her own mother — a woman raised to be a fire-breathing feminist, who did a stint on the carousel, who distrusts male authority enough to exclude her father from the discussion, and who bristles at the mention of 'patriarchy'… and who now wears the sheep skin of a conservative / Christian ever since she aged out of her h0e phase and 'settled'.

Girrrl Power!

This next paragraph stinks of projection, and is obviously NOT a good attitude for a role model to young girls to have.

> "It stands to reason that women who grow up indoctrinated into the "all men are r@pists" philosophy will make some pretty terrible decisions when it comes to romance. If all men are scumbags, what's the point in holding out for a nice one? You might as well just sleep around. Why go out with the nice-seeming guy who makes you laugh when he's certainly not as nice as he seems? Why work through problems in a relationship when any mistake a man makes must be because he's inherently "toxic"? "My mother taught me that", these young women will smugly declare.
>
> "Parents of little girls, stop while there's still time. I know you're scared. Sexual assault and r@pe really do happen and the thought of sending your daughter out into a world where something like that might happen to her is frightening. But, if you have a daughter, the things you have to teach her should be about her.

Moore seems to be identifying with the "Men are scumbags" narrative more than not. She's also seething with the fear that daughters will abandon themselves to the carousel in the same manner that their mothers abused themselves in the past. Thus, it is impossible for her to believe that young women, when properly educated, are able to instantiate agency, make choices for themselves, and be held responsible for those choices. Even if they aren't, it should be put forth that they are.

So rather than offering any transferrable knowledge such as the importance of teaching daughters to be mindful of their limited fertility window, or to be aware of the hypergamy trap, or to exercise moral agency by saying "No", Moore inculcates the same fear of men that she is overtly warning readers against.

> "Teach her to respect herself enough not to engage in physical intimacy with someone she just met. Teach her to be strong enough to say no to guys who come on to her, even if they're popular and she wants to fit in. Teach her street-smarts so she doesn't wander down dark alleys at night, or into bars alone. Teach her to stay sober enough to keep her wits about her when she's out with friends. Teach her that men — good men — will be there to protect her; remind her to ask for their help.

Like mother, like daughter.

Sounds like more projection that has been carefully crafted into a modified street-smart version of the “Strong Independent Woman” archetype. If there was any recognition of male authority and female responsibility, then Moore would’ve also mentioned that young girls should dress modestly and choose friends wisely, which would do much to help them avoid fly-by-night men and situationships.

And Moore doesn’t omit ye olde princess narrative, nor does she forget to remind us that girls should never ‘settle’ until all other options have been exhausted.

> “And, most of all, look into her eyes and tell her this: you are worthy of a good man. Good men are out there — lots and lots of them. Don’t settle for the first guy who seems okay, wait for the one who makes your heart sing. Men are not r@pists by virtue of being men. R@pists are r@pists. Good men are good men.
>
> “If “feminist” mothers teach their daughters that all men are “creepers,” I despair for the future of womanhood. It doesn’t have to be like this. Parents, this one’s on you.
>
> Follow Faith on Twitter @FaithKMoore or on Facebook @DisneyPrincessAddict.
>
> The DailyWire (Faith Moore): MOORE: The Dangerous Message Feminist Mothers Are Teaching Their Daughters (2018/2/25) [Archive]

So we see that even conservative women like Faith Moore are omitting fathers and propagating a poor attitude towards masculinity, even while actively protesting the effects thereof.

Gr00m!ng a New Generation of Frustrated Feminettes

To her credit, Moore has identified a major problem in society, but she's missed the causative issues.

- Young women are naturally drawn to 'tox!c masculinity' simply because it's masculine.
- Moore fails to differentiate between 'predators' who are low SMV men and 'predators' who are high SMV men. Instead, she assumes that all low SMV men are predators, and she gives no word of warning about high SMV predators who pose the most salient risk to young chicklets. So her advice doesn't actually help young women at all.
- The Herd rules the roost. Young women imitate older women, especially (1) their mothers and (2) women about 2-5 years older than themselves.
- Feminist mothers and Western culture at large, are teaching young women that distrusting men is a virtue to be diligently cultivated.
- Mothers are working in parallel with didactic media in gr00m!ng their daughters to become multipurpose victims — of Feminism, of predatory men, and of their own sinful nature.
- Young women need to have a solid relationship with their fathers in order to learn how to have good relationships with men in general.
- Distrusting those men who have a covenantal / familial responsibility to care for them will surely repel them from their spiritual covering and lead them to ruin, as Moore described.

To break down the mechanics of how this works into greater detail, young women are being taught to develop an Attachment Style characterized by Distrust (i.e. Avoidant, Disorganized, or Fearful).

Adults with a Distrusting Attachment Style tend to have a high, positive view of themselves and a negative view of others.

Translation: Entitled Princess

Adults who possess a Distrusting Attachment Style appear confident and self-sufficient. In the workplace, they are often seen as the independent, 'lone wolf'. They tend to believe that they don't have to be in a relationship to feel complete. They do not want to depend on others, have others depend on them, or seek support and approval in social bonds. Consequently, they prefer to foster a high sense of independence and self-sufficiency — especially on an emotional level.

Translation: Strong Independent Woman™

Adults with a Distrusting Attachment Style tend to hide or suppress their feelings when faced with a potentially emotion-dense situation, such as conflict.

Translation: Passive-aggressive liar who resorts to Evasion and Control Tactics.

Adults with a Distrusting Attachment Style are intolerant of, and generally avoid emotional closeness and physical intimacy.

Translation: NO Natural Affection. Potential Adulteress.

Women who have a Distrusting Attachment Style are not able to build healthy relationships and may withdraw from a relationship if they feel like the other person is becoming reliant on them in this manner. Thus, good relationships with good men cannot be properly Chosen and Developed.

Translation: Divorce Gr@p!st

As you can see, this conditioning not only inculcates women to cognizantly distrust men, but it also causes them to be inherently unable to trust. This is comparable to an Inner Vow.

All in all, this kind of teaching serves to create a new generation of Strong Independent Wimmin™ who Don't Need No Man and who feel quite comfortable in rejecting intimacy in any form (e.g. Dead Bedroom syndrome, defrauding, withholding, etc.).

Hence, the generational curse is propagated and amplified.

Related

- Σ Frame: Parental Divorce Ruins Daughters' Future Marital Commitment and Confidence (2021/2/24)
- Σ Frame: Misplaced Motherhood (2023/5/22)
- Σ Frame: Dealing with the Mother-in-Law Curse (2023/5/24)
- Σ Frame: Attachment Styles (2023/10/11)
- Σ Frame: Identifying Attachment Style is the New Game (2023/10/12)
- Σ Frame: Why most Woke People are Women (2023/10/20)
- Σ Frame: Dealing with Feminine Insecurity (2023/11/22)

Summary of February 2024 — Culture

Jack · 29 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A concise overview of this month's theme of Culture.

Readership: All
Theme: Culture
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Overview

Chinese Opera

The mood of the times and the spiritus of the age are rapidly shifting. Dalrock's ultimate disappearance on 2024/2/19 heralds the end of an internet age. (I will be covering the changes in the Manosphere in an upcoming post.)

Originally, I had prepared to publish some different writings about other topics this month, and I had a large amount of content already prepared for this. I had a couple of posts on r@c!sm and Black nationalism, another one about the nature of democracy, and a mini-series about majoritarianism in the works. But as the month progressed, I felt like what I had prepared was no longer appropriate and maybe not even relevant. (If readers express an interest in these topics in the comments, I may finish what I've written and post it in the future.)

I prayed about this metaphysical shift and then decided that I should write some more about my own rich repertoire of cultural experiences instead. Perhaps by understanding other cultures, we may better appreciate our own.

Index of Posts

Here's an index of posts for February 2024.

1. Σ Frame: Boundaries in Chinese Culture (2024/2/2)

2. Σ Frame: Jack's Thoughts on Passporting (2024/2/5)
3. Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)
4. Σ Frame: Selecting Markets for better Market Selection (2024/2/9)
5. Σ Frame: Sister doesn't Rap on Facebook (2024/2/10)
6. Σ Frame: Overcompensation of Roles in Relationships without Roles (2024/2/12)
7. Σ Frame: The Breakfast Shop (2024/2/14)
8. Σ Frame: Hierarchy vs Individualism (2024/2/16)
9. Σ Frame: A Christian's View of Buddhism (2024/2/19)
10. Σ Frame: Repenting from Covert Buddhism (2024/2/21)
11. Σ Frame: The Influence of Buddhist Culture on Women's Conduct (2024/2/23)
12. Σ Frame: A Snapshot of Eastern Femininity (2024/2/25)
13. Σ Frame: How Feminist Mothers Create Feminist Daughters (2024/2/27)
14. Σ Frame: Summary of February 2024 – Culture (2024/2/29)

Summary

In past years, February always delivered a blizzard of views and comments. Compared to past performances in February, blog traffic was rather sparse this month. I interpret this to mean that the appreciation of culture in general is declining.

Post 7, written in response to a growing demand for Red Pill mythos, was by far the most popular post. It was fascinating to watch the comments under this post unfold and evolve. Initially, the moral of the story was identified, and then it exploded into a discussion of the fallacies inherent in a cherry-picked narrative, female fantasy, relationship structure, shifts in the sexual market, a man's role as a provider, a woman's role in marriage and society, the extreme imbalance of expected gender roles, and finally the utter failure of gender equality as a relationship model.

One noteworthy argument between Derek and Thedeti surrounded the practical difference between Biblical submission and subservience. (IMO, deti 'won' the debate when Derek tried to put words in his mouth without first considering the differences in connotations.)

In the future, I will write more fiction based on Red Pill mythos such as this.

One man's experience of Passporting.

Posts 2 and 4 were about Passporting. I expected this topic to be much more popular than it turned out. Apparently, blog posts on this topic can't compare to the interwebz live action accounts of Hood Bros hunting Jungle Jings, smacking snatch in thatched huts, and then getting swindled and bumped off by local clans and femme fatale predators. Sensationalistic drama trumps rational assessment in these real-life Reality Shows of 2024. When I noticed the stagnant interest in my objective musings which pale by comparison, I shifted gears to other topics.

Posts 1, 5, 7, and 9-12 covered Chinese culture.

Posts 9-12 offered a glimpse of Buddhism, the Noble 8 Fold Path, mysticism, and how these manifest in Eastern culture.

Posts 3 and 13 dug into festering Western Feminism.

Posts 6 and 8 examined the correlations between Egalitarianism, Individualism, and Masculinity. The question of interest was why egalitarian societies appear to have more pronounced sex differences. The answer is that egalitarian societies are, ironically, Individualistic societies with a Christian heritage. Oscar wrote a nice summary in which he described the pros, cons, and some of the tradeoffs for each. It was also concluded that…

1. A hierarchy is necessary for order.
2. Christian headship allows more individual expression (even though its influence is waning).
3. Both of the above hold true in both Collectivist and Individualist cultures.

Thanks for reading. Next month's theme will cover The Problems of The Red Pill.

Related

- Σ Frame: Cultural Influences on Asian OASIS Starlets (2021/5/5)

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): How to Change a Hostile Culture (2021/6/7)
- Σ Frame: “Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest.” (2022/4/27)
- Σ Frame: Vetting Social Systems (2023/10/19)
- Σ Frame: The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)
- PsycHacks: PASSPORT BROS and international DATING: approaching the movement from a fresh perspective (2023/11/3)

Problems with The Red Pill — Exposition

Jack · 1 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

What has happened to The Red Pill over the last 2 years?

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,250 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Introduction

Here begins our inquiry into the problems with The Red Pill.

The Manosphere has always been regarded as a dark, alternative sub-culture comprised of less-than-honorable men, and not without reason. Profane topics are discussed in eye-watering detail and with philandering bluster. Likewise, and despite its popularity over the last couple of years, the Red Pill has always had a bad reputation. Its abject objective focus on women and the venal bawdiness of the essential subject matter have only served to enhance its sensationalism.

Therefore, social conservatives, feminists, religious firebrands, and others have condemned this subculture, as well as the philosophies and the suggested practices thereof as being degraded, m!sogyn!stic, seedy, and 'toxic', among other contemptuous descriptors.

Over the past 15 years or so, the feminist culture and the MGM has repeatedly attacked and attempted to undermine the Manosphere in an effort to discredit it and/or reduce its impact on young men and society at large. However, this persecution only validated it and contributed to its growth. Eventually it became mainstream in 2020-2021, during the c00f l0ckd0wns.

The Red Pill 2.0

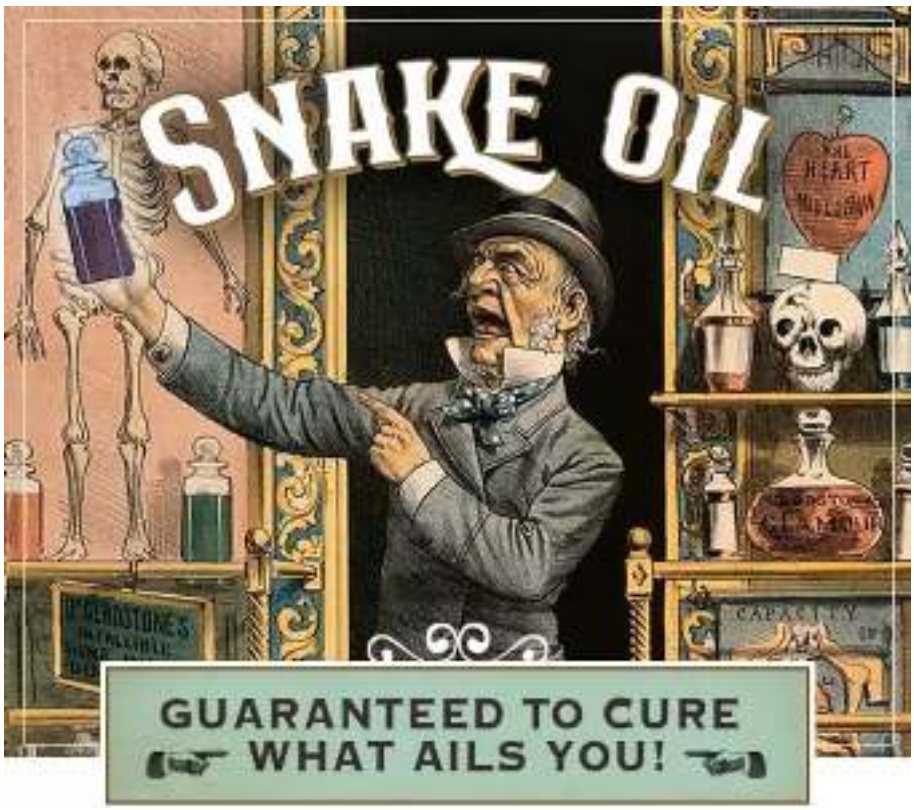
Since (and because) The Red Pill went mainstream, what we have now is a second-generation offshoot that looks and talks like its predecessor but is notably different in many respects.

What exactly has changed?

Before 2020 or so, the Red Pill 1.0 was rather pure in its philosophies and very impure in its morals.* It had to be in order to withstand the scrutiny of its detractors and gain recognition as being true. But ever since the Red Pill went mainstream (ca. 2020-2021), there's been an inversion. Now, Red Pill ideas are everywhere, but it's all watered down and compromised with cultural / gynocentric BS and grift.

Now that The Red Pill has emerged full force in mainstream culture and has gained widespread acceptance, its popularity among hubristic hacks and prosaic plebians is posing more salient risks and inflicting more casualties to the integrity of Red Pill lore than its historical government opposition ever did.

The fundamental masculine elements of self-advancement and life-discovery which were the motivating pillars of engagement, and the respectful appeal to reason that undergirded Red Pill discourse in the past, have been displaced and superseded by rancorous ribald reveling. There is less emphasis on educating men towards an accurate understanding of nature and reality, and more emphasis on grift and graft.



As a consequence, The Red Pill is now taken somewhat less seriously and is often regarded as trite Bandersnatch, graphic entertainment, or a mediocre fad that will eventually pass, fade, or cycle out.

Dead Bedroom Dating said,

> "The Internet Red Pill has been fully adopted and subverted, so nobody really knows what it means anymore."

Bwana Simba wrote,

> "Yeah, what is left of the Manosphere seems to be nothing but grifters eternally bitching about women. The Passport Bros, uh, "phenomena" always struck me as just another con. The rest of the Manosphere either retired (a la Dalrock) or went off to dissident politics… Which has been mixed at best."

Yes, The Red Pill 2.0 is NOT what The Red Pill 1.0 once was. Perhaps it is because of these changes that The Red Pill has been the target of a fresh brigade of brickbats over the past year or so.

- The PTB and their conservative / Churchian spokespersons have unleashed a new "Pity Men" narrative which explicitly condemns Red Pill influences.
- There has been a series of strikes against TRP in the form of genuine objective criticism, mostly from Gen Z.
- There are even voices within the Christian Manosphere that are calling out inconsistencies and false beliefs.

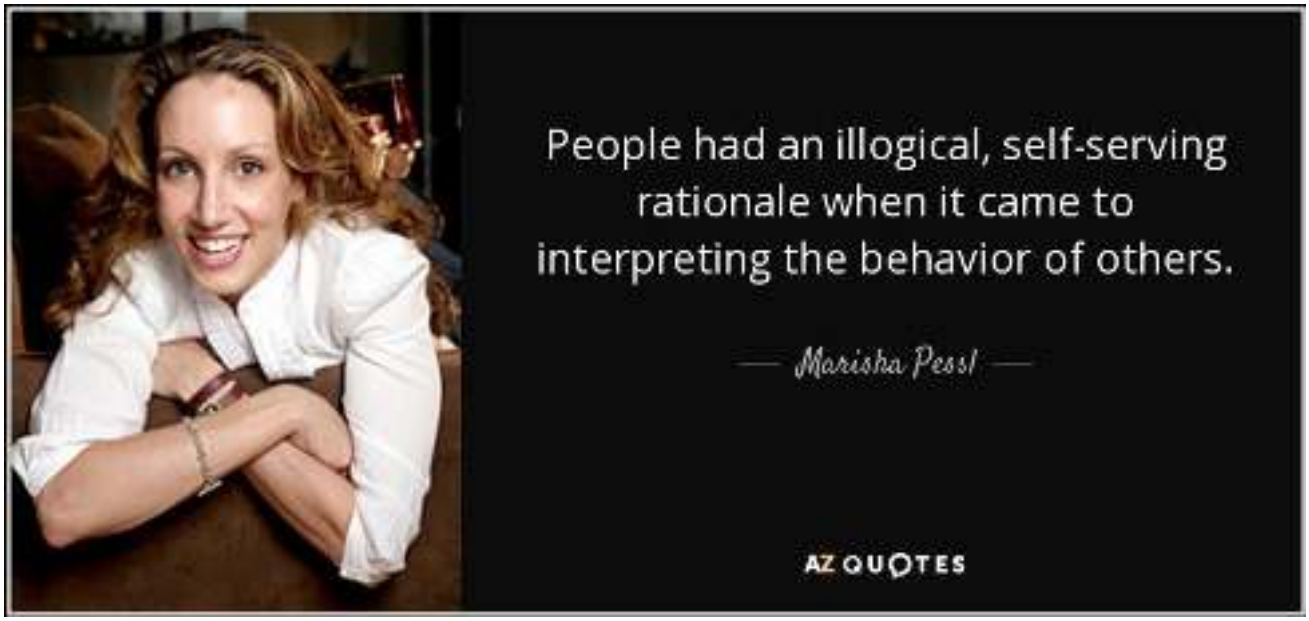
 Perhaps it is better to consider The Red Pill to be amoral. What is done with that information is what makes it moral* or not, although for most men, this is an afterthought.



A Road Map

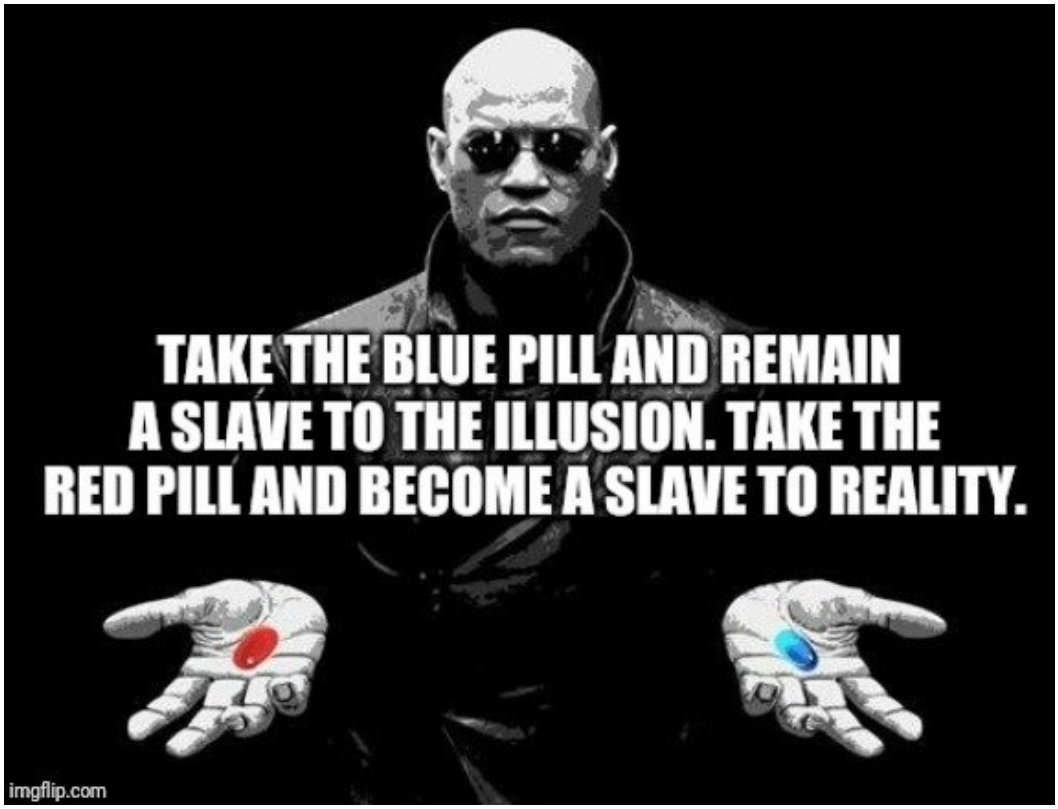
This month, we'll take a look at the condition and constitution of the current Red Pill sphere, as well as a few Red Pill concepts and interpretations that have strayed from the primacy of truth and the praxeology of reality. We'll sift the wisdom from the weeds and determine what went AWOL.

Here are a few of the topics that I have in mind right now.

1. Even though there are many new Red Pill content producers, as time goes on, there are fewer men (1) who participated in the Classic Manosphere (ca. 2008-2018), (2) who are well versed in the original tenets of The Red Pill, and/or (3) who continue to guide and steer the ongoing discussions in the Men's Sphere. This problem, which I'll call a Vacancy of Authority, will be addressed in the next post, The Old Guard has Retired (2024/3/4).
2. Much of the original Classic Manosphere / Red Pill content has been deleted or meticulously scrubbed from the internet, and not much is being added to Red Pill lore to make it a continuous living work. I'll call this problem an Erasure of Credendum.
3. As a result of (1) and (2), we now see many misinterpretations of Red Pill lore that are b@stardized, feminized, opinionated, or whitewashed, and others that have simply abandoned all dignity and have gone to the dogs. I'll call this problem a Degradation of Integrity.
4. Best understood, The Red Pill is a collection of well-researched and documented information that gives insight into human nature, especially concerning mating, sex, and relationships, among other things. This information has been pieced together to form several models of human behavior. On the whole, The Red Pill is a peek into the abyss of the carnal nature of human beings. As ugly as this may be, it cannot very well be dismissed as a pseudo-science, and yet we are hearing statements to this effect. I'll call this a Failure of Knowledge Transference.
5. Why are Christians / Churchians uncomfortable with these scientific evo-psyche models as if they challenge the very core of their faith? I'll call this a Failure of Imagination.
6. It has been said that The Red Pill unleashes the inner psychopath. What's up with that? I'll call this The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss.
7. It has been recognized that The Manosphere / Red Pill is a pipeline to Alt-Right / Conservatism. Lefties are therefore motivated to crimp The Red Pill as much as possible. How can we tell the difference between honest criticism and controlled opposition? I'll call this Political Malappropriation.

8. It is generally recognized that The Red Pill vilifies women's fleshly nature. The descriptor 'misogyny' used to be an abundant slur applied to The Red Pill, but it has since been overused and is now less popular among Gen Z. Even so, it is now quite fashionable and trendy to reveal the figurative nakedness of both men and women. The church and culture ridicule the nakedness of men, while the producers of content that currently passes as Red Pill laugh at the nakedness of women. Man bashing has been around for decades, but now S1ut shaming has once again appeared in full force. Despite all the schoolmarm caution against m!sogyny, we are now seeing more of it than ever before and this is often passed off as Red Pill, thereby giving detractors undeserved satisfaction. The practice of coopting RP truths to give offense is a problem I'll call Weaponizing.

Upon reviewing the above list, readers might see how some of these issues are interrelated. I expect more insights and topics to emerge as we wade into the mess of it. If there is something that readers are particularly interested in, listed here or not, I'll be sure to cover it. Just leave a comment.



Related

- Σ Frame: What is the Red Pill? (2017/10/31)
- Σ Frame: The Dispensation of the Red Pill (2018/4/7)
- Σ Frame: The Evolution of the Red Pill (2018/12/31)
- Σ Frame (Blair Naso): Red Pill Political Correctness (2019/3/17)
- Σ Frame: Jack's Law of Red Pill Awareness (2019/3/30)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – A Crack in the Red Pill (2019/5/13)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Wallowing in the Red Pill (2020/1/29)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – The Manosphere Reshuffles its Deck (2020/9/2)
- Σ Frame: The Red Pill and Blue Pill as Paradigms of Sanctification and Defilement (with a mathematical analogy) (2020/11/15)
- Σ Frame: What is the Christian Red Pill? (2020/11/27)
- Σ Frame: Is the Christian Red Pill a Black Pill? (2020/11/29)

- Σ Frame (Lexet): Charting the Red Pill World (2021/3/26)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Red Pill Grifters (2021/4/7)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Red Pill Awareness (2021/7/23)
- Σ Frame: What is IN the Red Pill? (2022/6/12)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Rollover (2022/6/17)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/5)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/30)
- Σ Frame: Normative Red Pill (2023/1/7)

The Vacancy of Authority

Jack · 4 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The Old Guard has Retired.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 650 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

The Vacancy of Authority

Σ Frame Axiom 39: Any system depends on a majority of people playing respective roles that support the system. Having a critical mass of people conforming to such roles is what makes the system work.

As time goes on, there are fewer men (1) who participated in the Classic Manosphere (ca. 2008-2018), (2) who are well versed in the original tenets of The Red Pill, and/or (3) who continue to guide and steer the ongoing discussions in the Men's Sphere.

Most of the original (Christian) Manosphere authors (e.g. Ballista, Cane Caldo, Dalrock, Dark Brightness, Free Northerner, Keoni Galt, SFC Ton, and Zippy Catholic) are no longer active and are therefore not available to defend or explain the original concepts behind RP tenets. The few Classic Manospherians who remain (e.g. Theodore Beale AKA Vox Day, Rob Says, Rollo Tomassi) are regarded as wizened but eccentric relics of the past who appear to be too aged or out of joint to still be in the Game. Others, like Roosh, have repudiated all things Manospherian.

Since 2019 or so, I have made a concentrated effort to draw together some of the last remaining voices in the Christian 'sphere. Some of them have left us (e.g. Blair Naso, NovaSeeker, Scott), and those who remain (e.g. Adam Piggott, Deep Strength, Ed Hurst, Lexet, Matthew Cochran, Red Pill Apostle, Sharkly, Snapper, Thedeti) feel like (1) everything has already been said, (2) are reluctant or else hard pressed to write new posts, or (3) are just burned out on the subject. The good old boys at Spawny's Space deserve a medal of valor for posting at least once every 2 days without fail since 2014/10/1.

Persecutions

One significant factor feeding into The Vacancy of Authority is how difficult it is to produce Red Pill content. Readers are not made privy to the details, but Manosphere / Red Pill authors are subjected to intense sufferings. In fact, that suffering is what makes them powerful authors. The most intense persecutions happened between 2017-2019 when TPTB tried their dandiest to stamp out the Manosphere / Red Pill, but it continues. Here are a few examples.

- Jason was rejected by the church.
- Sharkly has had insurmountable difficulties in his marriage and his church.
- Gunner Q's blog was blacklisted by WordPress.
- Catacomb Resident's blog was deleted by the host at least twice.
- The author of Dark Brightness was doxxed, his employment terminated, and his blog shut down at least 3 times before he gave up blogging.
- The author of Zippy Catholic was the casualty of a hit-and-run while cycling. It is suspected that he may have been @ss@ss!n@ted.
- NovaSeeker changed jobs and moved out of state. I think he was also getting burned out on the Red Pill. I've heard he is not doing so well either.
- Scott was doxxed and cancelled. He lost his job, his ranch, he had to move abroad and he is not doing so well.
- I've told of my failed first marriage and terrible divorce. Recently, my income has taken a big hit, and worse, my wife and I were defrauded out of ~$230,000 in an investment scam. We were forced to sell our house to pay creditors and it still wasn't enough. For a time, I was looking forward to a comfortable retirement, but now all our savings are gone and I'll probably be in debt for many years.

Moreover, The Red Pill lore has come at a great cost to some men.

Finally, it would be misleading to say that there is a total absence of knowledgeable mentors and spokespersons. There are many new voices in the sphere, but those we have now are a different breed of men than those who comprised The Red Pill 1.0. I'll cover these newcomers separately in an upcoming post.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Evolution of the Red Pill (2018/12/31)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – The Manosphere Reshuffles its Deck (2020/9/2)
- Σ Frame: Should bloggers dox their own identity? (2022/3/28)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Rollover (2022/6/17)

The Erasure of Credendum

Jack · 5 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Much of the original Classic Manosphere / Red Pill content is gone. Or is it?

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 870 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Increased Demand for Classic Red Pill Content

People are still reading old Manosphere blog writings, perhaps even more than ever. As I described in the 2023 Sigma Frame Performance Report (2024/1/2), I found that readers were clicking on Manosphere sites that stopped posting years ago (Cane Caldo, Dalrock, Hawaiian Libertarian, et al.), rather than some of the last remaining Based / Christian Manosphere / Red Pill blogs that continue to post regularly. Also, Σ Frame received an increased number of referrals from these old sites.

There are also a growing number of YouTube channels that narrate old posts, especially Dalrock's.

Old Data Files have been Sent to Storage

Most of the content from the Classic Manosphere as it originally appeared has been scrubbed from the net. Thus, pure unadulterated Red Pill content is now rather rare and hard to find.

However, this does not mean that it has been lost forever. The best original content has been preserved on a small number of aggregators and mirrored / reconstructed blogs, namely these.

1. The Androsphere Archive
2. The Red Pill Archive
3. SynLogos Aggregator

The Wayback Machine remains the primary tool for finding old sources, but it is only useful when the original was archived and the link is known.

A Mountain of Material

Although we are fortunate to have these archives, the drawback is that there are literally millions of posts to comb through which is quite intimidating to both newcomers and old hands alike. To put this volume into perspective, I estimate the body of Red Pill literature that has been currently preserved contains approximately a billion words. This would require about 83,333 hours of reading to complete. If one were to read for 4 hours a day, this would take 20,833.25 days, or slightly over 57 years. And where to begin? Obviously, this would be a ridiculous undertaking. If we were to limit our reading to select sources, then one would spend, for example, 18 days reading Illimitable Men, 20.1 days on Christianity and Masculinity, 23.3 days on Dalrock, and 25 days on Σ Frame, NOT counting any video presentations therein. Even this much is a formidable undertaking.

A Needle in a Haystack

So you see, the Erasure of Credendum might be more accurately described as Information Overload.

> And further, my son, be admonished by these. Of making many books there is no end, and much study is wearisome to the flesh.
>
> Ecclesiastes 12:12 (NKJV)

At some point, this descends into Analysis Paralysis.

To obtain an efficacious Red Pill edification, the topic of study must be sufficiently narrow and focused to be interesting and useful, yet it must also cover a broad amount of information to be complete. Furthermore, the context should be made clear. Picking and choosing all this concise information out of the haystack / mountain of material and collating it into an easily digestible parcel poses a tall challenge, even before a study can commence. What is chosen and how it is presented also significantly affects the progress of one's study. Another problem is that as the Christian Red Pill progresses, it is dealing more in the realm of the abstract and metaphysical. This too is not easily packaged into a bon mot summary that can be quickly absorbed.

From a logistical viewpoint, the Erasure of Credendum means that there is very little fresh new reading content being delivered directly to your page readers and email boxes. Now, one must embark on the more daunting task of searching through archives for specific topics. Readers who go to the trouble of doing so will find their efforts to be laborious, time consuming, and with uncertain fruitfulness.

A Road Map

Overall, the challenge at hand is to provide a comprehensive continuation of Red Pill lore to current readers as well as to future generations.

To make up for this paucity, I have worked diligently to keep providing fresh content directly to readers. I'll do my best to keep presenting the straight talk.

Furthermore, every 21 months, which I've determined to be the span of an 'internet age', I write a review of the changes and historically noteworthy events that have occurred in the Manosphere during that time. Here are the past reports.

1. The Evolution of the Red Pill (2018/12/31)
2. Moon Day Review – The Manosphere Reshuffles its Deck (2020/9/2)
3. Red Pill Rollover (2022/6/17)

We are due for another review this month. I'm working on it now. I've already had some emails from men asking when it will come out.

Also, I am collaborating with a few men who have made efforts to preserve and disseminate Red Pill lore, including Scavos and the admin of the SynLogos aggregator.

At some point, these writings should be condensed into a body of literature that might be more efficiently digested within a few years (?) at most. It would be ideal if young men and women could take a 1 year course that covered the specifics that would help them most in life — the stuff that every Red Pilled man wished he had known when he was in high school.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): What is the Authority of the Bible, and why is this Important? (2020/11/12)

Video Killed the Blogosphere

Jack · 7 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Or has it?

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Historical Brief

The Red Pill blogosphere withered away during the Great Purge of 2018, and was a skeleton crew by 2020. What was left nearly went into extinction between 2021-2023, primarily because most new Red Pill content began to be presented in live stream show / podcast / video format.

I've also been pressured to shift to video format since 2021, and I'm still considering doing this so as to cover some major concepts we've come up with here that have not yet penetrated the masses.

Weaknesses of Videos

Despite the sweeping popular shift to video, this format has several drawbacks in terms of Authority.

- It is time-consuming to watch.
- Video topics tend to be trendy and/or sensationalistic, rather than introspective or philosophical in nature.
- Video presentations are often hubristic and/or jocular, and are therefore neither delivered nor received with serious consideration.
- Videos receive poor intellectual critique and concentration. Comments are a washout.
- Viewers are prone to regard it as entertainment rather than serious philosophy.
- Arguments presented in videos tend to showcase the debate skills and the frame of the individual speaker. This is entertaining and inspiring to observe, but harder for the viewer to integrate said knowledge into his own frame.
- It has a short shelf life. Videos are usually viewed once and never again.
- It is easy for viewers to gloss over or skip through videos, thereby missing portions that may be tedious to watch but which are key points to the discussion.

- It is impossible, or at least very laborious and time-consuming to search for topics and especially quotations in podcasts / videos.

All in all, video format (YouTube, etc.) is an ephemeral medium. Its strength and primary purpose is contemporary promulgation, but not philosophical exploration or archival.

Strengths of Writings

Written works have several features that establish authority and preserve continuity.

- Writings in blogs and books contain condensed RP knowledge.
- Written topics tend to stand the test of time, at least much better than videos.
- Written monologues focus on conveying information and the construction of the argument itself, and less on the personality of the author.
- Information that is written tends to be carefully thought through and meticulously worded.
- Readers are able to consume writings at their own pace, stopping at certain moments to ponder on the topic before continuing, and can come back to review at any time.
- Written works are easily searched, copied, cited, and quoted.

In summary, written works carry a greater force of philosophical authority than videos. Thus, written format will remain the primary medium, both for serious discourse and for permanent archival. Publish or perish is still the iron rule, and people preferring to watch videos doesn't change this.

The popularity of videos may reduce blog readership, but it merely siphons off those who prefer to be entertained rather than engage in serious discussion, leaving a fewer number of people frequenting blogs, but a greater concentration of philosophical heavyweights.

Conclusions

This is why most of the heavy lifting in terms of philosophy, forming discourse, and shifting public opinion still takes place on blogs. Even Rollo Tomassi and Vox Day have recognized this and have returned to the world of blogging Red Pill content on Substack.

- Sigma Game (Vox Day)
- Rollo Tomassi

Currently, there are very few remaining authors of the Christian Blogosphere who are continuing to produce insights concerning Biblical proscriptions of masculinity, morality, and the spiritual significance of various topics (e.g. parenting, effective fatherhood, life purpose, sanctification, etc.). However, their impact is incalculably massive. The concepts and insights that are unveiled here are soon repeated in contemporary (Red Pill) videos (hence the quip, "Right on cue…"), followed by more diffuse cultural commentaries, eventually making its way into household discussions and ending in colloquial verbiage. Thus we see that Christian philosophy inevitably promulgates throughout the entire world, just as it always has for centuries.

May the Lord be honored and praised!

H/T: Dead Bedroom Dating

Related

- Σ Frame: Objective Communications for Effective Group Leadership (2021/11/1)
- Σ Frame: The Advent of Christian Mysticism (2022/8/1)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/5)
- Σ Frame: Is the Σ Frame Blog Positivistic or Prophetic? (2023/12/3)

Jack's Review of Red Pill Video Producers (2024)

Jack · 8 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Red Pill video content is self-produced, commercialized, and stylized to audiences.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

In the past, I've refrained from giving an assessment of Red Pill video producers, but this is long overdue.

Video Media

First of all, an assessment of the media itself.

Producers of YouTube type videos are essentially low-budget, self-produced actors who write their own scripts.

Thus, to produce a high-impact video presentation, one must be a semi-skilled actor. One's personal presentation, personality, psychological affect, being photogenic, social image, the pace of speech and the quality of voice timbre, and to some extent, charisma, are all more or less necessary. All these traits are superfluous in written media but loom larger than life in videos.

The quality of media production, including stage, lighting, microphone quality and placement, camera angle, lenses, and resolution, video editing, and other post-production technical effects, are also critically important. It is no coincidence that most of the more popular video channels have a production crew and skilled video editors working behind the scenes.

These qualities are highly variable from one producer to the next. But if a video presentation is sorely lacking in more than 1 or 2 of these qualities, then the video presentation will appear amateur or low quality and may even be difficult to sit through.

Discerning viewers must see past all this in order to properly assess the real value of the content and how much one might benefit from watching it. IMO, the ratio of value to time spent is very low. IOW, it's entertainment.

The Talk Show hosts of the 21st Century. Rollo Tomassi and Michael Sartain.

Video Content

The Law of Evaluation applies in videos, as there is a trade-off between content value and ease of watching. Producers who are more entertaining offer less moral and philosophical value. Producers who present high-value content are often tedious and difficult to endure. Making such content more concise also involves a trade-off with contextual clarity. Producers who can provide easily digestible dictums are exceptional and are thus very popular.

From what I have seen of the Red Pill video content that is currently being produced, IMHO, there are only a small number of voices that offer valuable apothegms, create high engagement, and remain true to the spirit of The Red Pill 1.0. I believe their fidelity to Biblical / Red Pill lore and their express purpose of (1) educating men and (2) exposing the truth about human nature are the exact reasons why they are popular producers. It is no coincidence.

My shortlist is as follows.

1. Casey Zander
2. Everett Overton
3. Father Spyridon*
4. Joker at Better Bachelor
5. Stardusk at The Thinking Ape
6. Rock Kitaro at Stage in the Sky
7. Dr. Orion Taraban at PsycHacks
8. Brian (not the others) at Whatever
9. Myron Gaines and Walter Weekes at Fresh and Fit
10. Kevin Samuels, despite his untimely demise.

All of these voices cite the Bible from time to time, but overall there is a scarce presence of high quality Christian Red Pill video producers.

Also note that personalities like Adam22, Andrew T@te, Chris Williamson (see case study below), Dan Bilzerian, Pearl Davis, and yes, Rollo Tomassi are NOT on this list. They are the Kardashians of the Manosphere 2.0. Living the fantasy life (or so it appears) complete with glamorized serial tawdry mischief. Famous for being famous, which is a euphemism for being sexually promiscuous. All image and trashy talk, and no character, substance, or inspiration. With the possible exception of Rollo, none of these people could pull their weight on a blog or a formal debate.

Reality Show Soap Opera stars of the 21st Century. Adam22 (far left) playing the self-contented cuck on prime-time YouTube, all for clicks, cash, and notoriety.

Runners Up

This is not to say that there are no other good channels worth watching. There are many other channels that deliver daily memorable gaffes, snapshots of perdition, and Red Pill morsels for viewers to chew on.

Here are a few honorable mentions with a brief critique explaining why they're not on my short list.

1. Iron Disciples — Very edifying, but too deadpan serious and often mundane.
2. Connor Beaton at Man Talks* — Doesn't know that he's Red Pill, or is afraid to admit it.
3. The Phillip Scott Show — Very insightful and rectifying, but heavy on talky / trendy / newsy topics and light on takeaways (purpose and theory).
4. Mediocre Tutorials and Reviews — Has a good vibe, but a bit too cynical and sarcastic, laughs at inappropriate moments, sometimes drifts off topic and loses the flow.
5. Prof. Jordan B. Peterson* is sometimes right on the dime and sometimes lost somewhere in outer space.

 Not officially classified as Red Pill, but often covers similar content or has the same appeal to get real.*

Twitter / X

There are also several guys on X posting Red Pill content from various perspectives (MGTOW, PUA, Christian, secular, etc.).* For example:

Dr. Shawn T. Smith, psychologist.

1. Dr. Shawn T. Smith (@ironshrink on X; occasionally on YouTube, usually as a guest; has written two books oriented toward smart relationship strategies)
2. Jack Peach (@thinkinpeach), Secular / Christian
3. Free Northerner (@FreeNortherner), Christian
4. Tim Hicks (@unchartedfather), Secular
5. Jack (@sigmaframe), Christian
6. Nash (@daysofgame), PUA

Readers are welcome to suggest others.

* H/T: Caterpillar345

Femosphere

Here are a couple great resources for women.

1. Karyn Seitz at The Happy Wife School
2. Lori Alexander at The Transformed Wife

Almost!

There are many other Red Pill labeled video content producers who are almost there, but they have some kind of hang-up that curtails their effectiveness.

- Too Geeky — Lame armchair philosophy with no real-world relevance.
- Too Grifty — Constant sales pitches, distracting gimmics, paywalls, etc.
- Too Lusty — They pedestalize women, idolize p00n, or are obsessed with getting laid.
- Too Moralistickey — They are so hung up on conscience / morality / religious dogma that they can't bite down to the bone.

- Too Peacocky — "Look at me! I'm da man! Chix wanna Fux me up already, dude!"
- Too Pimpstery — Hubristic posing, notch count bragging, and chest thumping rulz, bro.
- Too P0rny — Relies too heavily on graphic depictions and images of the female physique such that it becomes an annoying distraction to those who are discerning.
- Too Talky — Non-stop banter that is not on point.
- Too White Knighty — They have the mind to 'save' civilization, or churchianity, or H0es, or S!mps, or "masculinity", or whatever.
- Too much… (insert other disqualifying factor of your personal choice).

Image from RPO Studios.

Again, this is because personal presentation is everything in videos. I understand that many of these producers are targeting a specific demographic and tailors their swag to appeal to that audience. But beyond the personalized appeal, it does little to promulgate Red Pill knowledge and is only an annoying distraction to those who don't identify with that demographic.

Simply put, they don't convey a mature viewpoint — a violation of The Law of Responsibility.

TBH, a lot of it is, at its core, gynocentrism dressed up in a masculinized street suit — the same sin committed by PUAs. As Dead Bedroom Dating wrote,

> "At the end of the day, the whole discussion is about submitting to the feminine imperative to make things happen on women's terms (Blue Pill), rather than on making things happen on men's terms (Red Pill). This is mutually exclusive and I subscribe to the latter."

Case Study — Chris Williamson

Chris Williamson is a noteworthy example of a Red Pill poseur who manufactures catharsis for the masses of disgruntled men.

This guy always looks sharp, Top 5% handsome with a lantern jaw always covered in 2-day stubble (no more, no less), a crisp masculine voice with a British accent, the gleamy-eyed Trump look, with every expression, gesture, move, and word down perfect. He's gotta have a CCO, a press agency, a director, a producer, a stage crew, a lighting specialist, a sound technician, a wardrobe specialist, a fitness trainer, a choreographer, a cosmetic artist, a manicurist, a butler, a wine taster, and who knows who else working behind the scenes for him. You can't pull this off without serious funding.

Chris Williamson
Courtesy of Bardelys the Magnificent.

> "I've tried to watch several of these Williamson interviews. He brings on a guest and has a topic that is dangerously close to covering a Red Pill topic, but the talk is always surface-level and the real problems never get discussed.
>
> He shows up in my feed everywhere, so he's being promoted by The Algorithm. My guess is that TPTB have noticed that we have noticed, and are engineering a soft landing, as in "We'll throw you a bone and acknowledge how sh!tty it is out there." It's a pressure-release valve and nothing more. Men are so starved that they're devouring these "crumbs" of respect and validation that are being put out there, especially if it comes from a female's voice.
>
> "We hear you, men." I don't want to be 'heard'. I want the problem solved. Either help solve the problem or get out of the way. Public acknowledgment of our struggle is nice, but meaningless unless the problem gets solved. Mr. Williamson, you need to either press the issue or get off my lawn."

Related

- Σ Frame (Lexet): Red Pill Grifters (2021/4/7)
- Σ Frame: Why are there so many sexy aggressive women in anime and video game culture? (2021/7/9)
- Σ Frame: Controlled Opposition (2023/12/6)
- Σ Frame: Video Killed the Blogosphere (2024/3/7)

A Degradation of Integrity

Jack · 11 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Red Pill lore has been compromised and has lost its magic.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

One of the most significant problems with the current iteration of The Red Pill is the degradation in philosophical quality. This carries ramifications that affect everything Red Pill.

There are several aspects of this degradation.

Sensationalism

Ever since the Red Pill went mainstream over the past 2 years, it has become sensationalized to the extreme. Video producers overwhelmingly cater to viewers' appetites for Jerry Springer style shock with tabloid tales of tantalyzing trysts, and feeding viewers' vicarious libertine lusts to amass clicks and views. Sordid stories of cheating, cuckoldry, open affairs, swapping / swinging, and polyandry are commonplace.

The interplay between personalities is reminiscent of 'professional' wrestling, in which back stories and feuds are concocted for the sheer purpose of establishing fame and notoriety. Seeing how producers regularly attack and 'expose' each other, I would attribute the apparently weakened associations of the most noteworthy Manosphere / Red Pill content producers to this cause as well. Moreover, all this drama and dissimulation is unconstructive at best and corruptive at worst.

Aba N Preach 'Exposed' Destiny and Melina.

As a result, its educational / instructional value has become severely compromised such that it is not respectable in the least and is wholly unfit for teenagers. The idea of Red Pill philosophical purity is therefore laughable.

Degeneration

This sensationalism contributes to another problem related to the degradation of philosophical quality — its ability to inspire critical thought and introspection. In years past, it was rather common for Classic Manosphere authors to employ graphic descriptions of lascivious lusts and titillating trysts in order to convey an intimate knowledge of the debased human nature. But the itinerant purpose was not so much to revel in the lewd lechery of it all, but to convey the prurient truths therein that previously had been concealed from common knowledge. (Granted, for some, that sensuality was intended or expected to be revealed after a sexcessful application of the concepts.) Reading Manosphere blogs was deeply satisfying to men because it appealed to both the fleshly nature and the soul's search for deeper understanding. In contrast, The Red Pill 2.0 has retained the profane aspects and has taken them to a new level, while omitting much of the deeper understanding thereof.

Red Pill Gurus drifting back towards gynocentrism. Note that the men's eyes are directed towards the women, and the women's eyes are focused on the camera.

Repetition of Topics

Another aspect of the degradation of integrity is the repetition of a small number of Red Pill topics.

Over the past year or two, the same topics kept coming up, again and Again and AGAIN! Topics such as…

- OnlyFans / OASIS
- The 0.1% Calculator
- Beta orbiters / lonely simps
- Women are entitled princesses.
- Does body count matter? (Yes)
- A small repertoire of evo psych theories.
- Revealing women's metaphorical nakedness.
- Cucking and women lying about who's the father.
- Lambasting women for having standards that are too high.
- Do guys value women for their education or the amount of money that they make? (No)

- Women divorce gr@ping men. (Of course. It's one of the primary reasons why the Manosphere / Red Pill exists.)
- Stumping low-class sl0res (always showcasing ample cleavage) in philosophical debates and gloating over their revealed ignorance and stupidity.

The problem here is that in all the repetition, the focus remains on the sexsationalism and degeneration. There's very little examination of the whens, whys, and wherefores. For example, when NovaSeeker and I covered the OASIS back in '21, we covered the economics, the incentives, the intersexual dynamics, the market forces, male and female psychology, its impact on other women, and a few case studies that explored the causes, influences, and speculative outcomes. In comparison, the current videos impart no such deeper understanding.

Cathartic Ennui

And why so much repetition? I can understand the titillating drama and the shock factor, but even this eventually wears out. It's almost like the content creators are intentionally trying to work it into a catharsis, such that everyone has heard it all before and is tired of hearing it. This works against people's interest in engaging in a more critical examination and leads to these Red Pill topics becoming blasé and common.

It appears that the most effective way to destroy the Red Pill is to make it mainstream muddled murky milquetoast.

Missing the Mark

I also suspect that the female guests and viewers alike prefer to entertain these topics in order to displace public attention away from other topics that would be even more embarrassing to women or would pressure them to ante up or would reveal how their rebellion is causing society to disintegrate. That is, if they fess up to stealing cookies, then they'll never have to confess stealing horses.

There are many many other Red Pill topics that we never hear about anymore. How about some of these?

- Auto-Rejection
- Female hypoagency
- Psychological Projection
- Female Machiavellianism
- The perdition of Alpha Widows.
- Why women prefer serial monogamy.
- How and why women control men with sex.
- Women's h0m0phila / watching g@y male p0rn.
- Women's desire / motives for abortion / !nfant!cide.
- Women's preference for transactional relationships / sex.
- Why women love to be lied to and hate to be told the truth.
- Women's desire for criminal entities, bondage / r@pe fantasies.

All of these are MUCH more uncomfortable to women than anything on the previous list. Covering these topics would also serve to educate women about their own sinful nature and hold them accountable.

Oh yeah, we STILL aren't ready to do that!

Grifting

Lexet has written a couple posts about grifting in the Manosphere (see below under Related), but here I'll focus on how it affects the integrity of the lore.

Grifting creates an incentive to omit certain aspects of Red Pill lore, specifically those parts that reveal the practical limitations to one's desire — information that would dampen men's incentive to engage in the grifter's sophistry. The truth is, men who 'get it' don't need to learn it, and men who haven't 'gotten it' by a certain age (~20) never will. But this truth doesn't generate $$$. So instead, this information is carefully avoided, while things like self-help aphorisms (the male equivalent of "You go, grrl!"), self-improvement (lifting, looksmaxxing, etc.), and Game techniques and stratagems are emphasized in order to lure men into spending their time and money for philosophical products and learning skill sets that fail to work for most men.

On a somewhat positive note, some men need to go through all this trial, error, and frustration before they'll wake up to the Real Red Pill, which is the understanding of one's self and one's place in the mess. Grifters and 'trainers' provide a venue for men to experience this and come to the end limits of themselves. On a negative note, some men respond to this frustration by rejecting all things Red Pill, including self-awareness, self-improvement, etc.

There's More!

There are many other ways that the Red Pill has been compromised and/or adulterated with fluff, stuff, and nonsense, but these violations concern specific topics and/or contexts. Later this month, I'll get into some more specific areas in which Red Pill lore has been degraded. Stay tuned.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Dispensation of the Red Pill (2018/4/7)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – A Crack in the Red Pill (2019/5/13)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Frauds in Christ's Name (2020/10/12)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Red Pill Grifters (2021/4/7)
- Σ Frame: Normative Red Pill (2023/1/7)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28)

Selling Blue Pills Painted Red

Lexet Blog · 13 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The Red Pill 2.0 has degenerated into posing and marketing.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Author's Note: Originally written on 2020/8/12. Coauthored with Jack.
Length: 400 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

Isn't it a funny coincidence that Viagra is a blue pill?

I haven't been following any Red Pill types on any forum for quite some time. But since joining Twitter / X, I've been rather perplexed about the state of The Red Pill 2.0.

Rather than embrace !ncels / MGTOW / men who have been abused by the system as part-time co-belligerents, the new RP movement is expressly against them.

Marketing an image that repels men who don't fit the image.
This is no way to build a following, but it makes perfect sense from a monetary perspective — these guys are NOT the demographic that pays for Pick Up Artist tips.

Instead, their target audiences are…

- Guys who get off on fantasy lust.
- Young guys who think with their little head.
- Guys who are low in confidence but otherwise OK in looks and SES.
- Cringy naïve Blue Pill guys who still think there's a formula for getting laid.

Basically, guys who view themselves in light of their ability to get laid; guys who think, "If I only had X (insert $$$, charisma / Game / Rizz, confidence, social skill, whatever, etc.), then I could bag a h0e and level up on my masculinity index."

So now the Red Pill brand is "You gotta crush puss to be a man that owns his life. — Now pay me $$$ so you can watch a video of me interacting with a hot actress."

More, they're delivering a revarnished "Man Up!" rant, much like conservatards, but instead of the call to "save Western civilization / society", the move is to sack up.

Positioning themselves by presenting an independently wealthy lifestyle and claiming to be arbiters of Red Pill truths.
It's like the "leaders" of RP thinking have all gone back to PUA shilling, and The Red Pill 2.0 has regressed 20 years back into PUA territory, but minus the actual Pick Up and plus the Scam (Artist).

If we peel off the "Red Pill" marketing gimmicks, all this Viagra-ish "Man Up!" slosh sounds incredibly Blue Pilled and fem-centric to me.

So now we've come full circle, selling Blue Pills disguised as Red Pills, and Red Pills used like Viagra to keep the simps' motors humming and the $$$ pouring in.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Evolution of the Red Pill (2018/12/31)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Wallowing in the Red Pill (2020/1/29)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Red Pill Grifters (2021/4/7)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28)
- Σ Frame: Does the Purple Structure Exist? (2023/10/21)

Red Pill Restructure

Jack · 15 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An update on how the Manosphere has changed since 2022/6.

Readership: All
Theme: Special Post
Length: 2,600 words
Reading Time: 14 minutes

Introduction

It's been 21 months since my last assessment of the state of the Manosphere, Red Pill Rollover (2022/6/17). It's time for another review.

The Manosphere has changed so much since then, that we've been calling it the Manosphere 2.0.

What exactly has changed?

We need to go back before June 2022 to see the whole picture. (I did not foresee this in my last review.)

Lockdowns Changed Lives

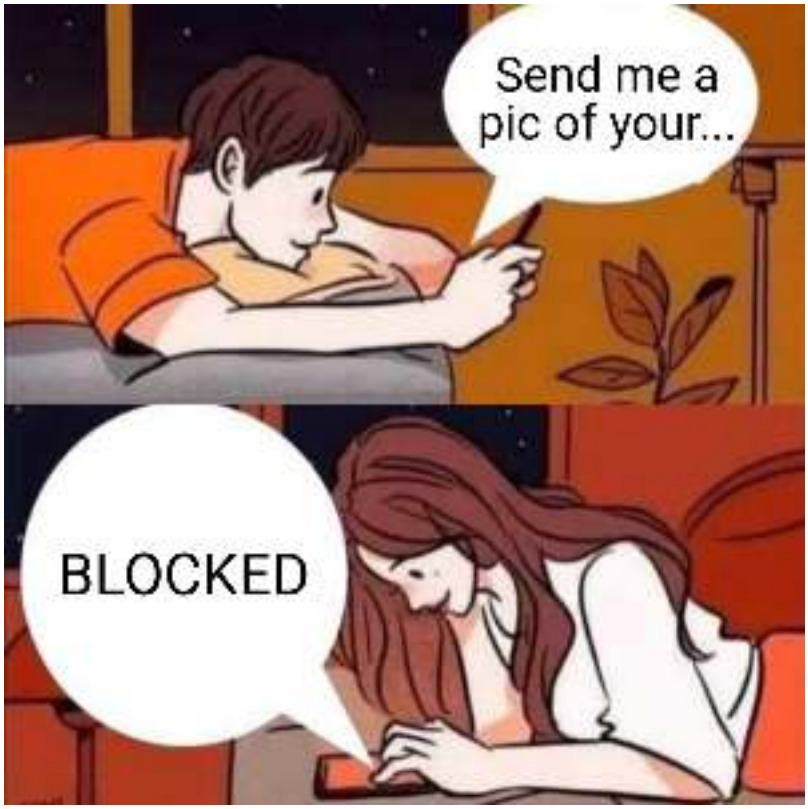
The C0VID lockdowns that lasted from 2020/3/25 until December 2020, and extended up to early 2022 in some parts of the world, have had a lasting impact on social habits. People lost businesses and started new ones. Same for jobs. Many people worked from home, and some continued to do so after lockdowns ended. People spent less time in group social environments, and these habits also continued after lockdowns ended.

The SMP

Also during this time, Western women became so spoiled and narcissistic that they outright demanded the 6-6-6-6 man (who comprised less than 1% of the male population), and were deeply offended at the suggestion that they were worthy of anything less. This essentially killed the SMP for 95+% of men.

Hook-up culture took a dive while cohabitation increased dramatically during this time. We also started to see many women wake up and reject Feminism. The Trad-Wife movement grew out of this context as well.

Sometime in mid-2023, women began withdrawing from Hookup culture altogether, citing 'dehumanizing' relationships with men. It never occurred to them that they were 'dehumanizing' themselves by hooking up, and they blamed men instead. An avalanche of confessions conveying all the sordid smut of their titillating trysts shook the internet. In doing so, they thought they were calling out men's bad behavior and claiming 'victimhood' status, but all they were doing was telling on themselves and sniping other women. It wasn't until December 2023 that (some) women realized they were all hooking up with the same top 5-10% of men who had them all on rotation. They responded to this epiphany with s1ut-eyed disbelief and gaping jaws.



As sad and embarrassing as this is, overall, I'd say this is a positive development. Maybe some women will rethink their purpose for living and draw some different and better conclusions.

The nature and purpose of vetting also shifted to match this new reality, as noted in The History and Current Value of Vetting (2023/9/2).

The lockdowns hastened all these developments, although I'm not sure to what degree.

The Manosphere 2.0

Also during lockdowns, the popularity of Manosphere / Red Pill blogs gave way to new Red Pill content presented in live stream show / podcast / video format, as described in a couple past posts this month.

In addition to this, the predominance of Red Pill lore in mainstream society and the resurgence of focus on Male interests has kick started a new era for both the Christian and Secular Manosphere. It has been called The Manosphere 2.0. This is just what I predicted would happen a while back. (Still looking for where I said so.)

The secular Manosphere occasionally gives a nod to Christian precepts, but nevertheless is continuing its descent to tabloid fodder. OTOH, the overall nature of the new Christian Manosphere 2.0 is focused on Headship / male authority, scriptural based mysticism (or Romantic Christianity as Charlton calls it), and anti-churchianity. The focus on women, marriage, and anti-feminism will be smaller (but still important) issues in comparison to the Manosphere 1.0. Current voices in the Manosphere that don't accept these tenets are going to oust themselves, like what we have seen with Derek, et al. recently.

The Passport Bros

As a result of the SMP bust described above, The Black Pill skyrocketed in popularity at the very end of 2022 and early 2023. But the Black Pill didn't saturate completely. Some men just didn't care, and others were willing to chuck it all. Thus, The Passport Bros appeared in early 2023.

The Passport movement was obviously a desperate measure taken by hopeful men seeking non-feminist wives and female companionship.

Sadly, Western women have degraded themselves to such a degree that now a foreign woman is considered more worthy of a relationship.

What about all the hassles and expenses of traveling, living and working abroad, language barriers, etc. ???

Challenge gladly accepted! These issues are nothing compared to all the senseless sh!t that Murican wimmin are shoveling down men's throats.

YouTube, TikTok, and other social media platforms soon became flooded with heated protestations from Western women (who continued to maintain that they "didn't need no man", ironically), and coy invitations from African, Central American, EA, and SEA chicks. South America turned out to be considerably less rewarding. Some who traveled to Columbia were met with serious complications, fraud, robbery, and redrum.

Kickback

There were several negative responses to all the developments in favor of men's interests. Of note…

1. The U.S. government classified the Manosphere as an extremist / terr0r!st group and spent $700,000 on reducing it's online influence. This started in 2020, followed by an immediate shadowbanning in December 2020 that was later lifted by a court order concerning free speech. (This shadowban affected the Σ Frame blog, cutting views in half.) Other measures kicked in during late 2023, so we've yet to see the effects. (See note below.)

2. Conservatives figured out that the same old feminetoric (e.g. "Shame on men!" / t0x!c masculinity / "Man up!" / etc.) no longer had any traction. So they retracted and came up with a new "Pity Men" narrative. "Man up!" changed to "Don't give up!" This narrative (which budded in 2020) slowly gained steam until it took center stage of public discussion during mid to late 2023, spearheaded by the likes of Christine Emba, Richard Reeves, several authors at the Gospel Coalition, and even Aaron Renn. Until… Jack and Thedeti shot this narrative down with a series of posts in November and December 2023, 2023. Since then, we haven't heard anything to this effect from the culture shapers.
3. In mid to late 2023, secular Women also shifted tactics and started saying that men were lazy, had it too easy, and were demanding 'princess treatment'. It is sheer projection. Men don't want 'princess treatment', we just want respect.

Note: Ironically, the RP only went viral after the initial government action and eventually saturated the culture by 2022. Also ironically, the RP / anti-feminist principles that this gesture was intended to counter are no longer uniquely associated with the Manosphere, since they have already gone mainstream. More ironically, the Manosphere has since morphed into something quite different. So it will be interesting to watch what happens here. Will these agents go after the Manosphere 1.0 / RP ideologies that are now prevalent in social media and the wider culture (which will be an impossible, monumental task), or will they go after voices that continue to identify with the Manosphere 2.0, which are significantly less associated with the 'toxic' elements that were condemned?

There's a third possibility that we've already seen evidence of. Pick out some noteworthy bad boys, like Andrew T@te, Rollo Tomassi, et al. and identify them as 'leaders' of the Manosphere. T@te was hauled into court, but not much has happened with Tomassi. This straw man approach has had a negligible impact on the Manosphere. Overall, TPTB are losing their war on the Manosphere. Masculinity itself remains tenuous but is showing some promise for long-term recovery.

Red Pill Blogosphere Restructure

Here are some changes since my last assessment of the Manosphere in Red Pill Rollover (2022/6/17). I have not included blogs that went down before then. Also, there are a lot of new YouTube channels and Vblogs that are not included here.

Note: Readers have brought to my attention several Based or Manosphere blogs that have been around for a while but were not included in previous reports. These additions have been marked with an asterisk.

Fading Blogs

(The authors no longer post with regular frequency.)

1. Biblical Sexology
2. Eric Conn
3. Lexet
4. Laughing at Feminism (Sharkly)
5. Okrahead
6. Sub-Created Worlds (J. J. Griffing)

Defunct Blogs

(The authors have ceased writing new posts.)

1. Alpha Game (Vox Day)
2. Ballista*
3. Blair Naso*
4. Cail Corishev
5. Calculated Bravery
6. Cane Caldo
7. Captain Capitalism (Aaron Clarey) Now concentrates on his YouTube channel.
8. Chateau Heartiste (Reconstructed Site)
9. Days of Game

10. Deti Nation*
11. Digital Throwback
12. Donal Graeme
13. Empathologism
14. Free Northerner
15. Full Metal Patriarchy
16. Hawaiian Libertarian (Keoni Galt)
17. Hommunism
18. Illuvitus
19. Jack Donovan*
20. Krauser PUA
21. Major Styles*
22. Men of Grit (Jerry)
23. Natsab (Pete Rambo)
24. Paul Elam
25. Red Pill Pusher*
26. Red Pill Rabbi
27. SFC Ton
28. Sharkly's expose of Whitewater Community Church
29. Staffans Personality Blog
30. Talon's Rest
31. The AntiGynocentrist
32. The Autistic Gamer
33. The Biblicist Report (from the author of Biblical Gender Roles)
34. The Book of Pook (Archived Site)
35. The Male Factor
36. The Masculine Principle
37. The New Modern Man
38. The Private Man (perished from cancer in April 2017)
39. The Red Pill Room (Ian Ironwood)
40. Uncharted Father (Timothy Wayne Hicks)
41. Warren Farrell
42. Wimminz (perished from cancer in 2018)
43. X-Splat*
44. Zippy Catholic (RIP)

Terminated Blogs

(The web domain has been deleted, defunded, or deplatformed.)

8 Manosphere / Red Pill blogs have been closed since June 2022.

1. Alpha Jedi
2. Dalrock (Privatized on 2024/2/19)
3. Marriage, Sex, and More (M. J. Davis)
4. Red Pill Dad
5. Red Pill Theory
6. Return of Kings (Deleted on 2023/12/21)
7. Roosh V
8. Roosh V Forum

New Blogs

I've found 12 new Based / Red Pill blogs that I thought were worthy of adding to the blogroll.

1. Captivating Arts Media
2. D. Bradley
3. Gender, Love, Dating, Sexuality, and Marriage
4. Lucerna Lumen
5. Order of the Alphas
6. Practically Known Theology
7. Rachel Wilson
8. Sigma Game (Vox Day's new blog)
9. The Rational Male 2 (Rollo Tomassi's new blog on Substack)

Revived Blogs

1. Derek L. Ramsey's blog has demonstrated a furious resurrection.

2. Fabius Maximus — Resumed writing, but only publishes 3-4 posts a year.
3. Illimitable Men — Reorganized site and 1 new post.
4. Snapper TRX — Resumed writing sporadically.

Archives

Return of Kings has been Archived.

On 2024/2/23 (4 days after Dalrock went dark), Derek L. Ramsey launched The Androsphere Archive, a collection of reconstructed Manosphere /Red Pill blogs that were not included in The Red Pill Archive, including the following to date.

1. Artisanal Toad's Hall
2. Gunner Q / Gunner Q2
3. V5K2C2 (Boxer, et al.)

The Androsphere Archive remains a work in progress. Thank you, Derek!

Other Changes

1. Webhosts have been decidedly unfriendly to Catacomb Resident, causing him to restart his blog at least 3 times. Catacomb Resident 1; Catacomb Resident 2 (Substack); Catacomb Resident 3 (Private Server).
2. It's Good to be a Man (Michael Foster and Bnonn Tennant) moved to Discipleship & Dominion (Substack) sometime between September to November of 2022.
3. On 2022/5/24, Gunner Q was kicked off of WordPress for posting a link to a sh00ter's man!festo. He relocated to Gunner Q2 until 2023/10/28. He is now at Gunner Q3 (Substack). The first two iterations of this blog have been archived here.
4. Timothy Wayne Hicks' old blog, A Father's Journey has been closed. His newer blog, Uncharted Father, is slowing down. However, he is posting frequently on X.
5. Many posts (but not all, unfortunately) at Do What's Right were moved to Radix Fidem (Ed Hurst). Posts linked to Do What's Right may be found at Radix Fidem under the same Title. I am changing these links over as I come across them.

6. Aaron Renn closed down The Masculinist in late May 2023 and moved his writings to Aaron Renn.
7. The Red Quest has relocated to Substack with the same name.
8. Rollo Tomassi stopped writing new posts at The Rational Male in August 2022 and redirected his efforts towards making videos. On 2023/3/10, he resumed writing new blog posts on Substack.
9. In the previous report, I listed The Pulse as a new Red Pill blog on Substack. It has since revealed itself to be a second iteration of an older website, Collective Evolution. CE used to concentrate on medicine, psychology, and holistic living, but it appears to grow more Gnostic as time goes on. These two sites have therefore been removed from the list.

Still Chugging Along

(The authors continue to produce new posts on a regular basis.)

1. Amerika (Brett Stevens, et al.)
2. Antemodernist
3. Biblical Gender Roles
4. Bruce Charlton*
5. Christianity and Masculinity (Deep Strength)
6. Cornerstone
7. Culture Watch (Bill Muehlenberg)*
8. Didact's Reach
9. Eternity Matters*
10. Francis Berger*
11. Gynocentrism (Peter Wright)
12. Inside the University of Melbourne*

13. Jim's Blog
14. Matt's Musings*
15. Mogadishu Matt
16. Patriactionary
17. Pushing Rubber Downhill (Adam Piggott)
18. Reactions (Ross Douthat)
19. Radix Fidem (Ed Hurst)
20. Rob Says…
21. Secular Patriarchy (Jesse Powell)
22. Stephen Baskerville*
23. Soviet Men
24. Spartan Christianity
25. Spawny's Space
26. Stage in the Sky (Rock Kitaro)
27. Steve Jabba
28. Synlogos (Aggregated feed)
29. The 96th Thesis (Matthew E. Cochran)
30. The Abbey of Misrule (Paul Kingsnorth)
31. The Babylon Bee Prophetic Christian Satire
32. The Family Alpha (Zachary Small)
33. The Mechanical Dragon (formerly Malcolm the Cynic by Anthony Marchetta)
34. The Orthosphere
35. The Other McCain
36. The Red Archive (Archive)
37. The Social Pathologist*
38. The Upheaval (N. S. Lyons)
39. To Reclaim Normality (Feeriker)
40. Truth and Tolerance (D. P. Monahan)
41. Vox Popoli (Theodore Beale)
42. Whiskey Tango Texas
43. Whores and Ale
44. William M. Briggs*
45. Wintery Knight

Notes on the Femosphere

Testimonies from faithful women and resources for women.

Terminated

- Notes from a Red Pill Girl

Defunct

- Lazy Mother Musings — Heidi's Place

- Make Womanhood Biblical Again
- My Heart Guarded — Renee Harris
- The Forgiven Wife — Chris Taylor's old blog
- The Peaceful Wife — April Cassidy

Currently Active

- Blending Ame
- Elspeth
- Hearthrose — Hearthie
- Honeycomb & Spice — Chris Taylor
- Intimacy in Marriage — Julie Sibert
- Proverbs 24:26 — Lily Mtongwiza
- Redeeming Home — Nicole
- The Transformed Wife — Lori Alexander

Newcomers

- The Happy Wife School — Karyn Seitz's YouTube channel

Discussion

As you can see, there is a much greater number of Based / Manosphere / Red Pill blogs making an exit than are making a debut. About 50 going out, and around 10 coming in (depending on how you count defunct and revived blogs, respectively), compared to 36 remaining steady over a 21-month span (not counting old additions). Thus, the demise continues as before, in which there were 34 going out, 14 coming in, and 36 remaining steady over the previous 21 months!

Interestingly, the past few reports show that there have always been exactly 36 blogs remaining steady. 36 seems to be the magic number for Manosphere blogs.

The Σ Frame blogroll once had an “RP Marriage” category. This seems laughable now.

Jack’s Predictions

In the next ‘internet age’ of 21 months, I predict there will be a major reorientation of philosophy in the new Manosphere 2.0 / Red Pill 2.0. The old stuff will be meticulously picked through, some of it will be condensed into new comprehensive summaries, and some of it revised and presented again with a modern spin. There will be a continued exploration of the metaphysical and mystical apprehension of old truths, and these insights will yield a fresh appreciation for the age old tenets of faith.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Evolution of the Red Pill (2018/12/31)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – A Crack in the Red Pill (2019/5/13)
- Σ Frame: Small Schisms and Large Schisms (2020/6/5)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – The Manosphere Reshuffles its Deck (2020/9/2)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Rollover (2022/6/17)
- Σ Frame: Pandora’s Pendulum (2022/7/8)
- Σ Frame: 5 Years with Σ Frame (2022/9/27)
- Σ Frame: Signs of Demise? (2024/1/3)

Red Pill Wannabe's

Jack · 15 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An overview of several sites labeled 'Red Pill'. You decide whether they are or not.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

While I was compiling my latest report on the state of the Manosphere, Red Pill Restructure (2024/3/15), just out of curiosity, I did a search on Yandex* and in the WordPress reader for the string, "Red Pill", just to see if there might be anything else or anything new I could have missed. I found a surprisingly large number of blogs and Twitter / X accounts with Red Pill in the title.

Here I'll review a few of these and offer some commentary.

 Always use Yandex for searching Manosphere / Red Pill content, because this type of content is blocked on all the other search engines.*

Red Pill Wannabes

Most of these sites have some commentary about society from a conservative viewpoint, but there's nothing that I would consider core Red Pill truth. Seems like a lot of these sites generate their names by simply adding a noun after "Red Pill". The problem is that none of them are Red Pill. It's just a branding gimmick. Most notably, there is an obvious lack of linkage to any backbone Manosphere sites, and I can't comprehend how the Red Pill could possibly be divorced from the Manosphere.

Twitter / X: Red Pill Guru (Closed down since I did my search.)

Red Pill Doctor

Has a lot of Gnostic / New Agey stuff. All fluff and no content value.

Image from No Ma'am: Bonecrker #57 – Approaching Fat/Ugly Chicks is Harmful to Your Self-Esteem (2004/2/26)
The About page reads,

> "I am an ambassador of Peace. It is by expanding your self awareness that you will find out that we have been trapped in a Matrix for Eons.
>
> My mission is not to bring fear, but to help you awaken from the coma that these dark ones have placed us in.
>
> Once you are completely awaken, then we will be able to transend from this 3D physically with the help of many good souls."

Heh… Well, it's worth a chuckle.

Red Pill Project

Hasn't posted since 2019. It doesn't even have the About page completed.

Red Pill 888 – "A Lover's Diary Waiting to Meet Again… 162 Poems Later"

A collection of subjective, free-verse poetry, which is predominantly of the romantic variety. It's good, if you like that sort of thing, but there's no Red Pill truth here.

Red Pill Game

Depicts soft p0rn anime. I haven't delved into this one, but I assume that it's built around a Red Pill understanding of intersexual dynamics.

Fake stuff just doesn't have the same appeal. It's actually a turn off.
Red Pill Rx (Closed down since I did my search.)

I would call this a Pop site. It's surprisingly well laid out, which probably means it's well backed by funding. It's not all bad. It does have a few good reads. But it's not Red Pill. At its core, it's just another pop-trend site with a modicum of seemingly useful information buried behind click-bait worded titles.

Free Red Pill Report (Closed down since I did my search.)

Contains reblogged links to news articles, documentaries, "social collapse", "financial collapse", the border, etc. Adheres somewhat to a nihilistic, "conspiracy theory" viewpoint. But again, it's not Red Pill. (15-20 years ago, 'conspiracy theory' stuff was definitely Red Pill, but not anymore.)

Almost Red Pill

Now on to the better sites having more Red Pill content.

Red Pill Religion (Recently updated to "Members Only".)

This site contains some links to MGTOW videos and The Red Pill Movie by Cassie Jaye. The author comes from the perspective of "escaping atheism", which might be interesting to certain readers.

Red Pill 78

This is purportedly a "Red Pill News and Information" site, hosted by Zak Paine AKA RedPill78. He started this blog / podcast after he was kicked off of YouTube and Twitter in October 2020. It reports on conservative interests, interviews, nationalism, survival, Trump, etc., but it's not Ne0-Rx. It also covers some pretty ugly stories you'll never hear about elsewhere.

The Red Pill Nation

This site has a lot of monologue-type commentary covering blogs and YouTube videos. The author attempts to point out the logical consistencies of feminists and Blue Pillers. From what I read, he has a balanced opinion. However, the author writes in his About page that he wishes to keep a low profile. I take that to mean that he doesn't want to address anything that is cutting-edge, or too controversial.

Better Red Pill Stuff

Captivating Arts Media

This one was good enough to be added to the blog roll, under Red Pill Voices. There's no theory, and not enough data or details to offer any case studies, but it is entertaining reading about one man's experiences of being Red Pilled.

Order of the Alphas

This is a new secular Red Pill site that came out in November 2023, emphasizing identity and mythos. I've also added this one to the blog roll.

Readers are welcome to suggest others I may have missed.

Related

- Σ Frame: Normative Red Pill (2023/1/7)
- Σ Frame: A Degradation of Integrity (2024/3/11)

9 Types of Red Pill Models

Jack · 18 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Categorizing the Lessons.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,700 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Types of Red Pill Models

Best understood, The Red Pill is a collection of well-researched and documented information that gives insight into carnal human nature (the 'flesh' in Biblical terminology), especially concerning intersexual dynamics, mating, and relationships, among other things. This information has been pieced together to form a multitude of theoretical models of human behavior.

These models can be separated into 9 categories:

1. Economic Models
2. Game Theory Models
3. Behavioral Models
4. Biological Models
5. Evolutionary Psychology Models
6. Metaphysical Models
7. Parabolic Models
8. Comprehensive Models
9. Strategic Models

This essay will offer descriptions and a list of examples for each one. You can quiz yourself to see how many you already know, or see if you can think of any I've missed.

Note: Mathematical Models are not included because they are used to formulate descriptions of larger theoretical models.

1. Economic Models

In an Economic model, intersexual interactions are likened to an exchange of value in a free market system of supply and demand. Economic models were some of the earliest models discussed in what later became the Manosphere. Some concepts predate this period.

There are many Economic models of mating liaisons, involving concepts such as…

- "Eggs are expensive, sperm is cheap"
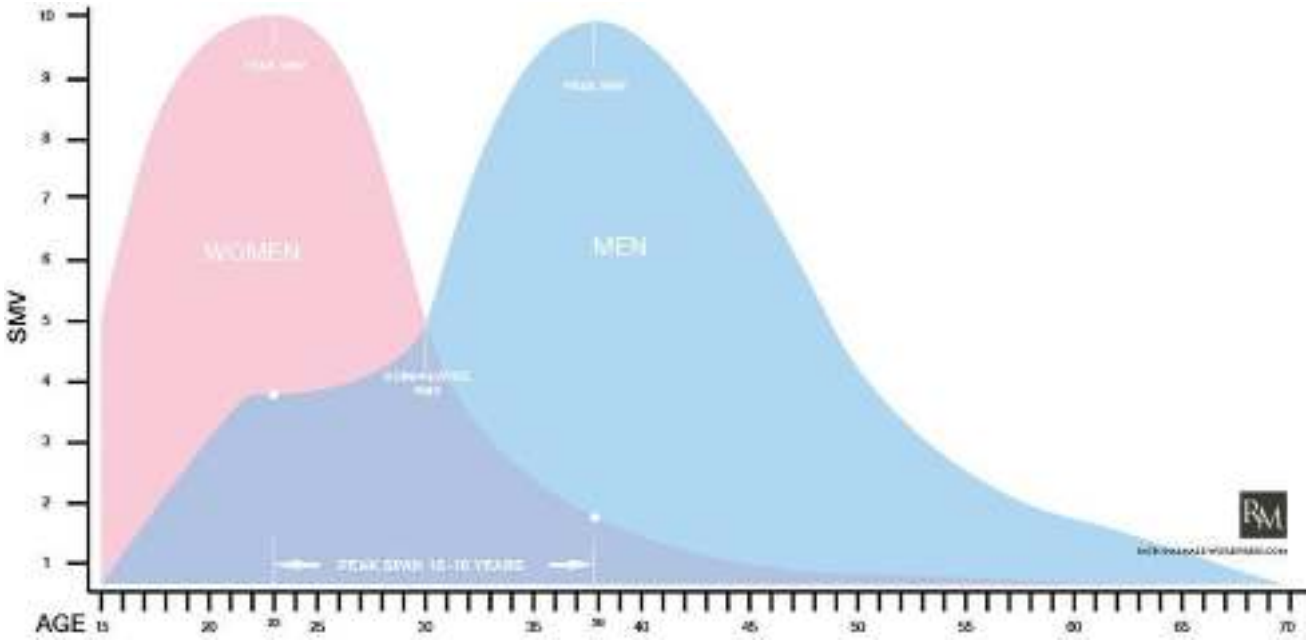
- Gatekeeping
- Marriage Market Value (MMV) for men and women
- Sexual Market Value (SMV) for men and women
- The Pareto Principle
- Transactional Relationships and Sex / Prostitution / OASIS / etc.
- Other theoretical models of how religion and society affect market conditions and market values.

Some Economic Models are closely related to Behavioral or Biological Models.



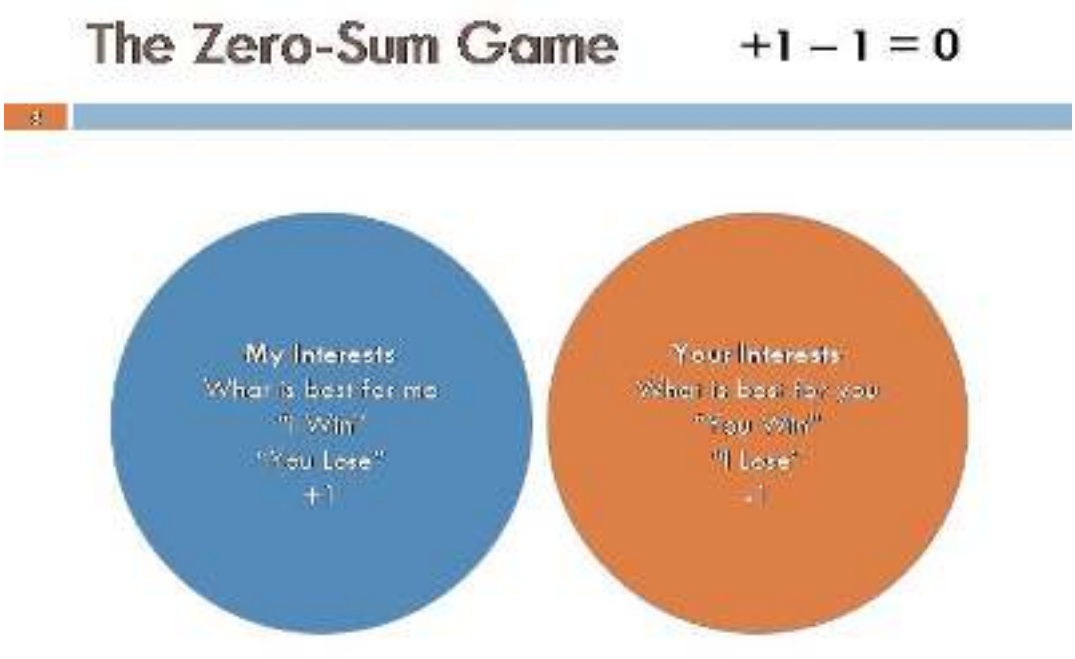
2. Game Theory Models

The history of game theory well predates the 20th century. Many game theories have been adapted to model sociosexual behaviors.

Game Theory concepts and models include…

- Altruism
- Conflict Structure
- Cooperate vs Defect Continuums
- Determinism
- Exploitation vs. Exploration Tradeoff
- Evolutionary Game Theory
- Genetic Algorithms
- Nash Equilibrium
- Positive-Sum Game; Zero-Sum Game; Negative-Sum Game
- Pushing the Line (Demanding better responses to bids)
- Symmetry
- Systemic Bias
- Tit for Tat
- The Bandit Problem
- The Pavlov Strategy
- The Prisoner's Dilemma

Game Theory Models are often used in conjunction with other types of models, especially Evo Psych Models and Strategic Models.



3. Behavioral Models

In a Behavioral model, aggregate and/or individual data of common sociosexual behaviors are characterized by desires, incentives, motivations, etc. according to various traits, such as age, sex, r@ce, personality, and psychological constitution.

Some examples of behavioral models are…

- Attachment Styles
- Bad@ss Chad (a hypermasculine, attractive, popular man)
- Becky (an average woman)
- The Sociosexual Hierarchy
- Communication Styles
- Education vs Marriage
- Erotic Blueprints
- Indicators of Interest
- Indignation
- Karen (a woman who is middle-class, middle-aged, entitled, and aggressive)
- S1ut Tells
- Stacy (a hyperfeminine, attractive, popular woman)
- The Nice Guy™ (a guy who thinks he can win a woman's heart by pedestalizing her)
- The White Knight
- Other Faux-Masculine Archetypes
- Other Stock Characters

4. Biological Models

Biological models are based on… biology! They are ubiquitous in the natural sciences, of course, but there are a few that are unique to the Red Pill.

- 2D/4D Ratio (men and women) — A ring finger that is longer than the index finger correlates with higher prenatal testosterone levels (used as a rough indicator of aggression, assertiveness, infidelity, libido, psychoticism, size of penis, etc.).
- Abortion Correlations (breast cancer, depression, su!c!de)
- Contraception Correlations (abortion, divorce, Out-of-Wedlock-Births)
- Estrus cycles affect sexual habits and mating preferences.
- Genetic Bottlenecks / Bottleneck events
- Microchimerism / Telegony
- Natural Selection / Survival of the Fittest
- Sperm Competition (See Robin Baker's book, Sperm Wars.)
- The role of pheromones in attraction and genetic compatibility.
- A low Waist-to-Hip Ratio (WHR) is associated with attractiveness, fecundity, health, and cognitive ability in women.
- Wealth and Orgasms

5. Evo Psyche Models

Evolutionary Psychology Models are theoretical models of observed human behavior that are informed by psychology and rely heavily on the theory of natural selection. Rollo Tomassi is responsible for popularizing many of the Evo Psych models prevalent in Red Pill lore.

Models based on evolutionary psychology have been some of the most accurate and most powerfully insightful models so far. This is no coincidence because the Red Pill is, as already stated, a peek into the abyss of the carnal human nature.

Evo Psych concepts and models associated with The Red Pill are listed here.

- Tingles
- Mirroring
- Solipsism
- War Brides
- Alpha Widows
- Machiavellianism
- Female Hypergamy
- Sexual Market Value
- Stockholm Syndrome
- The Pygmalion Project
- Alpha F_cks / Beta Bucks
- The Feminine Imperative
- The Burden of Performance
- Desire cannot be negotiated
- Male Burden of Performance
- Internalized Male Dominance
- Male Epiphany / Midlife Crisis
- Female Epiphany / Hitting the Wall

- Transactional vs. Validational Sex
- K-selection (MMP) vs r-selection (SMP)

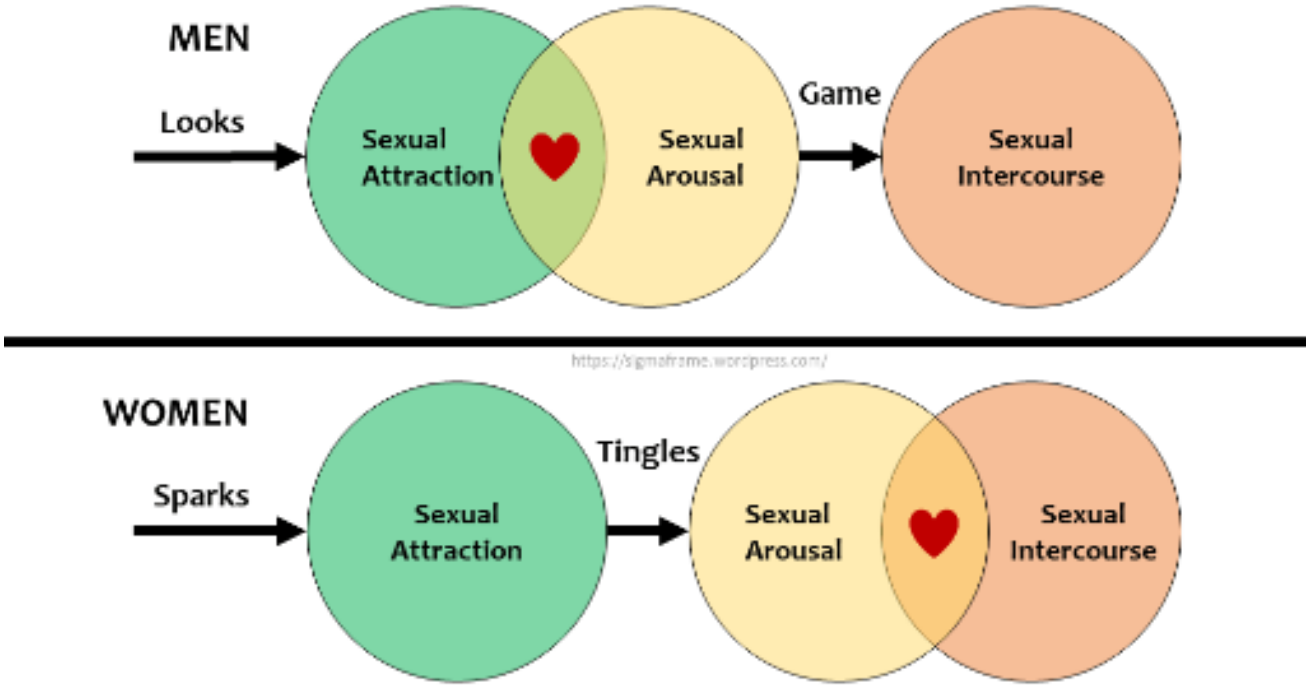
Some Evo Psych Models are strictly social psychology, while others borrow principles from Economic Models, Game Theory Models, Behavioral Models, and Biological Models.

6. Metaphysical Models

The Christian Manosphere, especially DeepStrength and the authors at Σ Frame, have contributed a number of metaphysical models and metaphysical additions to other types of models, such as…

- Attraction and Dominion
- Boundaries and Trust
- Emotional and Spiritual Maturity
- Game dynamics
- Gentile vs Genuine Authority
- HARPS (aspects of masculine development)
- Heart Trust vs Head Trust
- Imposing Masculine Presence
- Many theories regarding Moral Agency
- Moral Guidance Based Feedback
- PSALM (vectors of female attraction)
- Relationship Strength
- Rites of Passage
- Sanctification
- Sexual Attraction
- The Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy
- The Greatest Archetype

- The Meet Cute Phenomenon
- The Relinquished Life
- The role of Flow in building Confidence
- The role of Humility in Love
- Validation



7. Parabolic Models

Parabolic models include allegories, anecdotes, parables, and mythos. Some Parabolic Models are based on aggregate Behavioral Models. Others are pure mythos and/or cultural or literary tradition.

An allegory is a narrative, poem, or story that can be interpreted to reveal a hidden meaning, typically a moral or political one.

Anecdotes impart to the reader a sense of the lived experience of another.

A parable is a succinct, didactic story, in prose or verse, that illustrates one or more instructive lessons or principles. Parables are often used to reveal abstract, mystical, mythical, or metaphysical truths that are difficult to fathom.

Approximately one third of Jesus' recorded teachings are in parabolic form. A list of parables in the Bible can be found here.

Some popular Red Pill allegories, parables, and deconstructions thereof include…

- Chivalry 2.0 (Dalrock's expose)
- Concepts of Love; Commodifying Love; Mythos; Men in Love; Women in Love;
- The Abyss
- The Black Pill; Stages of Unplugging;
- The Matrix (1999 movie)
- The Myth of the 'Good' Girl (See Rollo Tomassi's book, The Rational Male, pg. 244.
- The Myth of the 'Good' Guy

- The Alpha Widow Syndrome
- The Parable of Clipping / Shaving Coins
- The Parable of the Bonsai
- The Parable of the Inherited Estate
- The Parable of the Jigsaw Puzzle
- The Parable of the Pie
- The Parable of the Pressure Cooker
- The Parable of the Sticky-Tape
- The Sacred Cow
- The Sinful Savior Complex
- The Soul Mate Myth

One issue with parables is that some people understand them while others cannot. Another issue is that one may reach a conclusion that the parable is not intended to convey.

The Moral of the Meme: Be attractive. Don't be unattractive.
Parabolic Models also include or are expressed through infographics and memes.

Infographics use a collection of striking imagery, engaging data visualizations like pie charts and bar graphs, and minimal explanatory text to communicate information clearly and quickly in order to deliver an easy-to-understand overview of a topic.

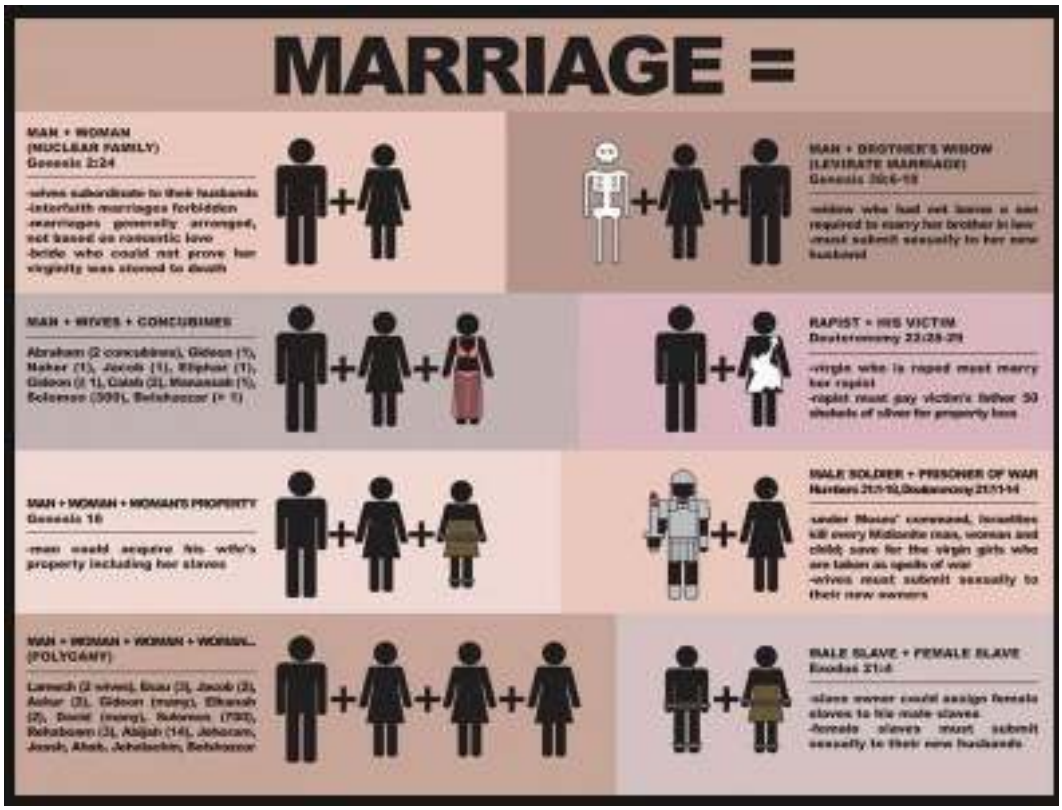
Memes are collages, pictures, or strips that appeal to parabolic instruction and are usually humorous.

Spawny's Space regularly posts memes in the comments section.

8. Comprehensive Models

Comprehensive models are simplified descriptions of complex phenomena that combine 2 or more other types of models. Comprehensive Models represent the culmination of Red Pill knowledge in theory.

- Arranged Marriage
- Marriage 1.0, 2.0
- Concubinage
- Headship
- Relational Archetypes
- Bennies and Cougars (man and woman both at peak libido)
- Roman Holiday (man and woman both at peak SMV)
- Sugaring; Sugar Babies
- Love and Respect (Ephesians 5:22-33; Eggerich's Biblical model)
- The Boyfriend (AKA "Marriage Lite")
- The College Boyfriend
- The Double Standard (Chastity, Dynamics, Economics, the male perspective, the female perspective)
- The Female Imperative (Definitions, Responsibilities, Strategies, Conflict Theory, Evo Psych)
- Covert Contracts
- Sociosexual assessments of Personality Disorders (Borderline Personality Disorder: Corishev, DeepStrength, Jack, Rollo)
- The Feminist Life Script
- The Upper Middle Class Career Life Script Model
- Other Life Scripts
- The Six Sirens of the Sexual Apocalypse
- Vetting Flags
- W!tchcr@ft



9. Strategic Models

Strategic models are the culmination of Red Pill knowledge in practice. Women have employed feminine sexual strategies since time immemorial. PUAs employed a large number of strategic models that are classified as "PUA Game" (only a few of the most well-known are listed below). There are fewer strategies considered appropriate for Christians.

- Agree and Amplify
- Branch Swinging
- Christian Game
- Cohabitation / Common Law Marriage
- Detachment / Detached Mastery / Determination / Christian Detachment
- Deti's Approach – (For marriage with children or other significant vested interest) Employ operant conditioning, impose hard boundaries, offer ultimatums, until she either submits or files for divorce.
- Looksmaxxing
- MGTOW — Chuck it all and do your own thing, without women / wife / marriage / family / children / etc.
- Oscar's Advice — Find communities of faithful, like-minded people and join them. This could be as easy as changing churches, or as difficult as moving across the country.
- Passporting — Travel abroad to find greener pastures.
- Plate Theory / Spinning Plates / Christian Plate Theory
- Polyamory
- Riding the Carousel; Effects on Marriage; Example
- Running the Gauntlet — Play by the World's rules and hope for the grace of God / GNON.
- Serial Monogamy
- Sticking the Landing
- The Revolving Door / Playing House
- Vetting Social Systems
- Wingman

Closing

So how many of these did you recognize?

Can you think of any Archetypes or Models that are not on these lists?

Later this month, we'll review a few of these models that are undergoing a Degradation of Integrity. But before we get into this, I need to explain what theoretical models are and suggest appropriate limits to their value and application.

I may add to these lists in the future. Readers are welcome to suggest others.

Related

- Σ Frame: "Biblical" Models of Courtship (2018/9/30)
- Σ Frame: Models of Courtship and Marital Structure (2018/10/3)
- Σ Frame: Courtship Models (2018/10/20)
- Σ Frame: Placing the Marriage Structures within the Archetypical Models (2020/9/28)

Lovebreaker

ArchAngel · 20 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A refutation of Rollo Tomassi's concepts of love.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with the Red Pill
Length: 870 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

> "What can be said at all can be said clearly; and whereof one cannot speak thereof one must be silent."
>
> Ludwig Wittgenstein, Tractatus Logico-Philosophicus preface.

Over a decade ago, Rollo Tomassi made his most popular[1] and controversial contribution to the Red Pill when he discovered that men and women do not share the same concept of love. Tomassi's ideas on the concepts of love have since gained widespread Manosphere acceptance. These ideas, however, are wrong. They are less than wrong: they are suggestions posing as fact!

Tomassi's discovery of women's concept of love is not a discovery at all: it is the invention of a new sense of the word 'love'. This is a common flaw of scientific rationalism. Darwin and Freud's greatest achievements were also the inventions of new senses of common words. Darwin introduced a sense of the word 'animal' that includes human beings, making the difference between Bill Gates and a nematode one of degree, not of kind. Freud introduced a sense of the word 'thought' that allowed for 'unconscious thoughts'; an oxymoron prior to his time (comparable to 'unconscious hunger'). Similarly, Tomassi's magnum opus is the invention of a sense of the word 'love' that, plainly speaking, isn't love at all.

Because Tomassi's novel use of 'love' affects the way women's love is viewed, he is often accused of claiming women are incapable of love. In response, he reiterates his belief that women are not incapable of love as they define it. The ensuing argument is purely grammatical (and futile). Tomassi is like someone who insists the Indigenous Americans gave Custer a 'makeover' at Little Bighorn. This appears to be a historical inaccuracy, but is actually a morbidly sarcastic use of the word 'makeover'. It was reported that when Custer and his men were found, they had been killed, scalped, and mutilated. In truth, however, the Indigenous Americans had only given them 'haircuts and piercings' — a 'makeover' — as they would define it. Needless to say, speaking plainly to avoid confusion (that is, without creating new definitions of words), they were mutilated and killed. Likewise, Tomassi's detractors are correct when they say he denies that women are capable of love.

The question still remains: Are women only capable of an absurd definition of love? Does the word 'love', as Tomassi uses it, describe something real about women's capabilities? No, it does not. The whole idea of Tomassi's concepts of love is mistaken because it is a misuse of language. It is an Interpretation Game, set up to interpret phenomena, rather than report them as they are. It can never be anything but an invitation to view events a particular way — it can never be anything more than a school of interpretation. Freud, for instance, claimed in The Interpretation of Dreams that every dream is a disguised wish-fulfilment:

> "When the work of interpretation has been completed the dream can be recognized as a wish-fulfilment."
>
> Sigmund Freud, The Interpretation of Dreams.

It would be foolish to suggest any counterexamples, because the whole point of an Interpretation Game is to see something as the game suggests it be seen. It is impossible to disprove an interpretation: it may be unconvincing, but it is never false. Therefore, seeming defeaters of the game's central proposition only challenge the ingenuity of the interpreter, as Freud and Tomassi illustrate:

> "The anxiety-dream does really seem to preclude a generalisation of the thesis deduced from the examples given in the last chapter, that dreams are wish-fulfilments … [H]as anyone ever tried to interpret these dreams — to discover their latent thought-content? If not, the two objections to our doctrine are no longer valid; for there is always the possibility that even our painful and terrifying dreams may, upon interpretation, prove to be wish-fulfillments."
>
> Sigmund Freud, The Interpretation of Dreams.

> "There are always going to be examples of the Christopher / Dana Reeves story of selfless devotion and love in > spite of circumstance. I don't doubt that they both loved each other deeply, but to arrive at that point Dana's hypergamy had to be settled by Christopher, and Christopher had to come to terms with Dana's conditions for loving him to begin with."

>
> Rollo Tomassi's comment under Dalrock's post, Who Loves Best (2013/12/27).

In reality, propositions like Freud's wish-fulfilment theory and Tomassi's "Women are fundamentally incapable of loving a man in the way that a man expects to be loved" are not statements of fact. Instead of fact, each of these propositions is the rule of an interpretation game, where the objective is to construe everything as obeying it. And, depending on the creativity of the interpreter, it is always possible to make even the most stubborn facts appear to conform to the rule.

Conclusively, Tomassi's concepts of love do not describe anything real; they only color our view of women inescapably, often leading to resentment against them. Any such thing as a concept of love would have the same effect — that of suggesting that we view things a certain way, rather than describing them as they are. Therefore, the very idea of concepts of love is flawed and the idealism-opportunism dichotomy is illusory, the rule of an interpretation game that has been played for over a decade. The concepts of love poison men's thoughts toward women by ignoring Wittgenstein's admonition to speak clearly, and whereof we cannot speak, not to speak at all.

Notes

[1] The Rational Male: Preventive Medicine; chapter 6: Hierarchies of Love.

Related

- Dalrock: Who Loves Best (2013/12/27)
- Σ Frame: The Godfather undermines Fatherhood. (2023/7/10)

Red Pill Modelling 101

Jack · 22 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The imagination is the limit.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Scientific Models

Models are scientific descriptions and empirical explanations of real-world phenomena.

> "A scientific model seeks to represent empirical objects, phenomena, and physical processes in a logical and objective way. All models are in simulacra, that is, simplified reflections of reality that, despite being approximations, can be extremely useful. Building and disputing models is fundamental to the scientific enterprise. Complete and true representation may be impossible, but scientific debate often concerns which is the better model for a given task…"
>
> Wikipedia: Scientific Modelling

This airplane is a model. No, it doesn't fly. Just because it doesn't fly doesn't mean it is inaccurate or worthless. It is not 'fake' unless someone is telling you that it's 'real'. Context.
Theoretical models are a subset of scientific models that are not wholly substantiated by evidence and/or are our best guess about a particular behavior, form, function, phenomenon, or relation in question. A theoretical model is a framework that researchers create to provide a particular perspective, or lens, through which to examine a topic and to assist the planning of how to approach a specific research inquiry. Having a theoretical framework / model allows the development of an informed perspective, it defines the purpose of research, provides structure to the research procedure, and permits research to be conducted more effectively. Theoretical models do not need to be 100% accurate or even 100% true to be useful in this regard.

Archetypes

An Archetype is a recurrent symbol or motif in art, literature, or mythos. Carl Jung identified twelve archetypes: the Innocent, Everyman, Hero, Caregiver, Explorer, Rebel, Creator, Lover, Jester, Sage, Magician, and Ruler, none of which are bound by genre.

The Bible is the source of many archetypes that are prevalent in Christian Red Pill lore (e.g. Adam and Eve, Noah, Job, Abraham, the prodigal son, the Proverbs 31 woman, Peter, et al.). Jesus was described as a type of Adam by the apostle Paul in Romans 5:12-19. Some archetypes are structural in nature (e.g. Church authority, Gentile vs Genuine Authority, and the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy in Ephesians 5:22-33).

The Trad Wife is a specific archetype of femininity.

The secular Red Pill lore also conceptualizes many archetypes (e.g. Ch@d, Stacy, !ncels, Wh!te Knights, Trad Wives, and so on). Some of the more abstract or complex archetypes take the form of a theoretical model (e.g. Alpha Widows, LAMPS, Marriage 2.0, War Brides, the Feminine Imperative, Rollo's concepts of Love, etc.

A unique feature of Red Pill thinking is that it uses archetypes to devise theoretical models, and vice versa — like well known characters acting out a predictable plot in a classic drama. Thus, mythos is born, which inevitably shapes the culture (and it has).

Advantages of Using Archetypes and Models

Models are useful in the following ways.

- Models help us visualize ideas or abstract concepts.
- Models help us comprehend very large, small, or complex phenomena that cannot be pictured in the mind.
- Models are used to facilitate the communication of ideas, observations, and complex phenomena to other people.
- Models can be used to represent things that are very small, very large, very abstract, or very complex.

- Models can assist in the development of scientific theories and help support or disprove existing theories.
- Models can be used to help illustrate and explain scientific theories.
- A theoretical model can be used to devise and test a hypothesis.
- Data and testing can be used to prove or disprove a hypothesis.
- Models can be used to predict behavior / outcome / performance.
- Models can be used to make and test predictions.
- Models build scientific knowledge.
- Advances in scientific technology permit newer models to be explored and developed.
- Working and testing with models can be safer, quicker, less expensive, and less risky than experimenting with the real thing. Thus, models save time, money, and lives.

The Value of a Model

In general, the value of a model is determined by the advantages that it offers, as described above. However, the value is also estimated by…

This “new” Bf-109 was lost on 03/24/1943 near Rørvik Norway. German pilot Günther Seraphim was rescued. The plane was rediscovered “nose down” at the bottom of the sea. It was recovered in 2010 and restored and now resides at the National Norwegian Aviation Museum.

1. Its fidelity to reality.
2. Whether it is useful to the application at hand.
3. The degree to which its use provides safety, saves time and/or money, etc.
4. Its ability to inspire critical thought or provide insights into reality.
5. A model is outstanding if it can actually predict a phenomenon.
6. Building a hobby, practice, exhibiting skillmanship, entertainment, fun, etc.

Here’s an interesting case study of the value of a model. This image depicts a WW2 era airplane that was recently salvaged and restored. Now it is a non-operational museum piece. Because of its age and condition, it is essentially a life-sized model of an outdated model. Although it doesn't fly and was costly to restore, it has significant historical value. (IOW, it fails points 2 and 3 above, but is excellent on points 1, 4, and 6. Point 5 DNA.)

Problems with Creating Models

Models are based on and can only represent our best understanding of a phenomenon and are therefore not perfect. They are limited by several factors that affect the formation, accuracy, and validity of a model.

- Formulating a model is a formidable task that can only be achieved through familiar experience, inspiration, and/or a great deal of experimental research.
- Our own understanding of a phenomenon may very well be biased, ill conceived, or incomplete.
- Progress in the task of developing mathematical / structural / tautological formulations is slow.
- Our ability to accurately interpret observations affects the formulation of a model.
- Our ability to imagine potential cause and effect relationships affects the formulation of a model.
- The Uniqueness / Repeatability of the phenomenon affects its validity.
- The precision and accuracy of the data used to devise the model may be poor or incomplete, thereby producing a poor model.
- What we actually know about the phenomenon may be poor or incomplete, which may lead to the development of false models.* For example, in medieval times, only 4 elements were recognized by science (back then called alchemy): earth, wind, fire, and water. Also see 'phlogiston', an 18th century theory of oxidation.*
- Theoretical models are positivistic and therefore neglect metaphysics and theism.

In sum, life is somewhat unpredictable, and mankind is relatively slow-witted.

 These models were a necessary step in the development of better models.*
 I regularly attempt to bridge this gap and/or provide a more complete perspective here at Σ Frame.*

This photo collage / meme depicts an attractive young woman (Estee Williams) switching from the Career Life Script model to the Trad Wife model. The smiles and the glands make it convincing to men and infuriating to those who subscribe to the Career / Feminist Life Script model.

Disadvantages and Limits of Using Models

> "As far as the laws of mathematics refer to reality, they are not certain; and as far as they are certain, they do not refer to reality."
>
> Albert Einstein

Applying, comparing, or fitting a model to a real life phenomenon requires a thorough familiarity with the topic. There are several factors that affect the compatibility of a model with the intended application.

A model (Senta Berger) modelling a specific archetype of femininity that is not very realistic but is very inspiring.

- Models cannot include all the details of the objects / phenomenon that they represent.
- There is a tradeoff between simplicity and accuracy. The accuracy of a model is reduced in order to make it simplistic enough to communicate general ideas.
- The Probability / Randomness of the phenomenon may introduce variances in data / results.
- A lack of information and inadequate advances in scientific technology can prevent models from being either proved or disproved.
- Implicit deficiencies related to deductive and inductive reasoning, which I'll cover in an upcoming p0$t.
- The degree of rigour that has been (or can be) attained.
- Some models are only applicable within certain contexts.

Models Develop and Change over Time

Models are developed and refined over time. As technology advances and new information is learned, models can be changed, replaced, revised, and/or updated. When existing models are found to be inadequate, too inaccurate to be useful, or structurally wrong, there arises an impetus to develop a better model. Also, new information and/or scientific findings may render our current models archaic, and will therefore warrant new models to be devised.

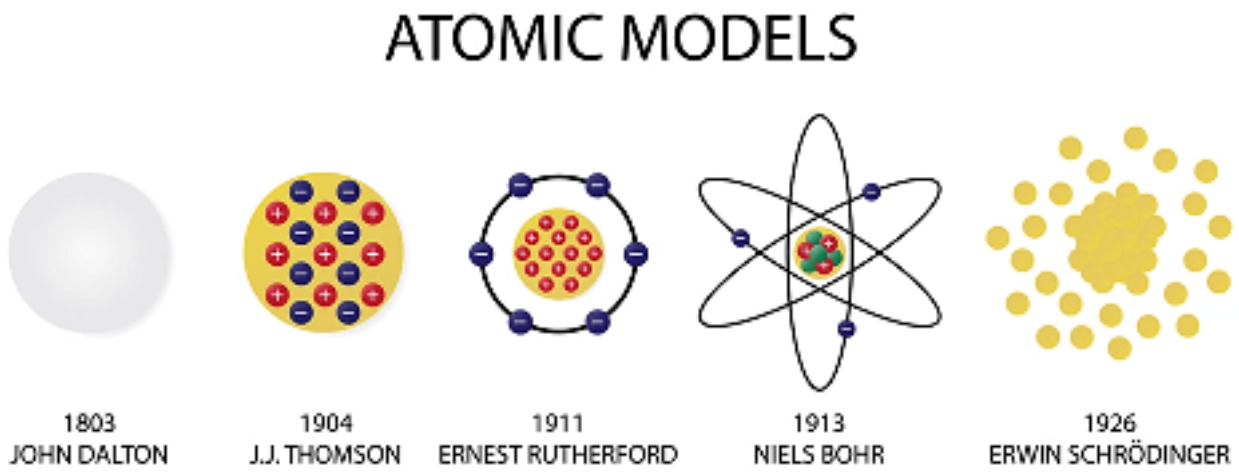
Marion Robert Morrison (AKA John Wayne) personified an archetype of masculinity that was formed in the 19th century, became popular during the 20th century, and fell out of vogue in the 21st century.
Models stand on their own merit. Some models are better than others. Models are only discounted when a better model is devised. Models cannot be very well proven 'wrong', as it is merely an expression of an educated guesstimation in the absence of anything better. However, there are three ways to debunk a model.

1. Prove that the fundamental assumptions or the structure of an existing model are wrong.
2. Introduce a superior model which renders the old model archaic.
3. Disrupt public acceptance of the model through brainwashing, censoring, demonization, false evidence, etc.

If a model doesn't fit reality, or if it is misapplied, and/or disregarded altogether, it may render the model inaccurate or unuseful, but it doesn't revoke the usefulness of the model as a body of understanding of the phenomenon in the context for which it was devised.

Case Study 1 — The Evolving Atom

For example, our model of the atom underwent several revisions over many decades, as depicted in the image below. These models were hotly contested by some of the world's best minds, and contradictory models coexisted for some time until an explanation could be found and a better model put forth. Although there are more advanced and more accurate models of the atom available today, academia continues to use Bohr's model of the atom because of its simplicity. Same thing for electromagnetic radiation (light).



Did the atom evolve? No. Only our understanding of the atom evolved, and we still use an older model because it is practical.

Case Study 2 — The Forward Look

Some models are built only for brainstorming and experimenting with ideas. For an example of an automobile model that never made it to production, see Motor City Garage: King of the Tailfin: Virgil Exner's Project 613 (2019/11/27). Although this model was ultimately rejected, it played a role in the development of Chrysler's other 'space age', "Forward Look" designs that rocked the auto industry in the late 1950s and early 60s — models that are now classics today.

In this case, the model was discarded, but the automobile design truly did evolve.

Moreover, a model is used for what it is worth according to its purpose. If you find that a model is inaccurate or unuseful for your purposes, then don't use it.

Better yet, devise a better model.

Devising a Better Model

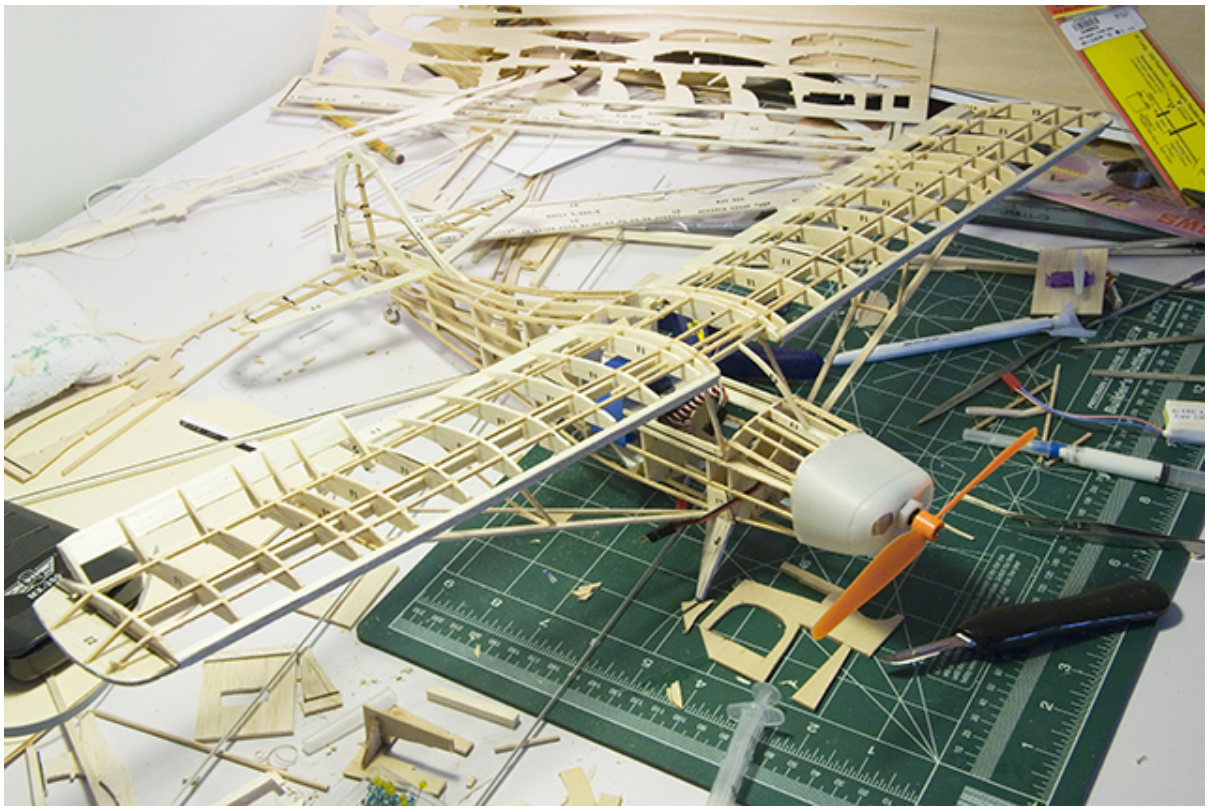
The 9 Types of Red Pill Models are what we have to work with at present.

For Red Pill lore to be improved, we'll have to come up with better models, and I'm sure it will happen.

In the future, some of these models will be developed further, some will be found inadequate and subsequently refined, and some will be cast aside in favor of newer better models.

I doubt that Biblical models can be improved, however we might be able to develop some correlating models that would help us better understand them.

Some progress is being made on this within the Christian Manosphere, but just as it was with the model of the atom, development is tedious and slow.



A model plane made of Balsa wood. Constructing a model takes time, skill, patience, and planning.
Here are a few strategies that we might take towards developing better models.

1. Show how the standing Red Pill models compare to Biblical models.
2. Point out specific assumptions or claims that the existing models get wrong, or which do not agree with Biblical precepts.
3. Provide case studies and discuss how current Red Pill models are inadequate, misused, or misleading.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): Science and Scripture (2009/11/20)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Superposition (2023/6/14)

Tactical Preparation

Oscar · 24 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Are you prepared for the oncoming att@cks?

Readership: Men
Theme: Special Post
Author's Note: Input from Feeriker and Jack.
Length: 450 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

A terr0r1st attack ocurred in a suburb of Moscow, Russia on Friday (2024/3/22).

Reuters: Gŭnmen k!ll more than 60 in concert att@ck near Moscow, Isl@m!c St@te claims responsibility (2024/3/22)

Arməd with @ut0m@t!c r!fləs and t@ct!c@l kn!vəs, the gŭnmen entered a theater filled with 6,000+ people and randomly gŭnnəd down concert attendees. As others ran away in panic, the att@ckərs kn!fed the throats of those who were either slow to escape, trapped, or struck down but not k!lled. Lastly, the pərpətr@t0rs set f!re to the theater before escaping.

There is some extremely graphic 'bl00db@th' footage from one of the k!llərs b0dyc@ms appearing on GAB.

Russian officials have declared more than 60 de@d, with 145 !njured.

Isl@m!c St@te claims responsibility.

Sincere condolences to the victims and their families.

A few points from this terr0r!st att@ck.

1. The Russian Federation is an empire. Ethn!c Russians rule over many other ethn!c!t!es. Many of them are Mŭsl!ms. The Chəchəns, D@gəst@n!s, and T@t@rs are the best known in the West for various reasons.
2. The ethn!c Russian population has been shrinking since the 1990s. The Mŭsl!m population is growing. That's a recipe for disaster.
3. These tərr0r!sts are clearly not trained, yet they were able to k!ll and/or wound hundreds.
4. The t@ct!cs used here are an evolution of previous Mŭsl!m terr0r!st att@cks on soft civilian t@rgets in Moscow, Nairobi, Mumbai, and last year in Isr@əl.
5. From the tərr0r!sts' perspective, these t@ct!cs are cheap, easy, and effective, which means they will use them again.

That's the bad news. The good news is that a few guys @rmed with p!st0ls could've turned the tables on them.

Russia is not my country, and not my concern. But the USA is.

Thousands of Mŭsl!m men have poured into the U.S.A. through the southern b0rder over the last few years. Add to that the Mŭsl!m populations in Michigan, Minnesota and elsewhere, and you have fertile ground for a similar att@ck in the U.S.A.

The same thing will happen here!

If you haven't already, tool up gents. You don't want to end up like those Russians in the theater who didn't even have a fighting chance.

If you have a C0ncə@ləd C@rry Pərm!t, use it. If you don't, seriously consider getting one. Find a h@ndgŭn that is comfortable for you to use and easy to c0ncə@l and carry it with you EVERYWHERE YOU GO. You never know when you might need it, and with our Reigning El!tes doing their utmost to foment v!0lent cr!me, odds are overwhelming that in the near future you'll have a need to exercise leth@l f0rce in dəfənsə of yourselves and your families.

Along with this, SPEND QUALITY TIME AT THE RANGE. A gŭn does you no good if you don't know how to use it properly!

It will happen in the U.S.A.! Be prepared!

May God preserve our souls.

Misappropriated Models

Jack · 26 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Incredulity, Obsession, and The Problem of Positivism.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

> My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children.
>
> *Hosea 4:6 (KJV)

* Knowledge includes both practical knowledge and spiritual discernment, as well as "the knowledge of God".

Overview

In the Exposition of this month's theme, A Failure of Knowledge Transference was identified as one type of problem with The Red Pill. Now that I've covered the basics of modelling and 9 Types of Red Pill Models, I can get into the problems associated with models and how this leads to a Failure of Knowledge Transference.

There are 6 main areas of knowledge transference that have been ineffective.

1. Models are misappropriated.
2. Models are misinterpreted.
3. Models are misunderstood.
4. Models are misapplied.
5. The Practical Application is Difficult, Elusive, Insurmountable, or Unacceptable

6. The Absence of Actionable Knowledge

This essay will cover the first.

Intro

As discussed in Red Pill Modelling 101, The purpose of devising, examining, and implementing models should be to increase our knowledge, refine our understanding, form realistic expectations, hone our discernment, and develop wisdom.

However, when reviewing Red Pill lore, individuals are prone to fall into an error of extremes, which I'll call Incredulity, Obsession, and The Problem of Positivism for the present discussion.

Incredulity

Some people fail to see the similarities between models and real life and are quick to dismiss them as deceptive / illusory fantasies or pseudo-science. For example, the common rejection of The Soul Mate Myth. They might also accept some theories, but be condemning of models that are more appropriate for others. For example, crab people and grifters. At worst, they'll assume that models are merely fantastic fables with no real application, and that evidence which is apparent to others is absent or invalidated and therefore other possibilities are rejected or subverted, also without considering the ramifications. While this lack of imagination is a growing problem (to be covered in a future po$t), it does not discount the value of models mentioned above.

Obsession

At the other extreme, some people latch onto a particular model, and they jump to the conclusion that it is some sort of monolithic Law of the universe that is unavoidable, unchanging, and must necessarily apply to everyone indiscriminately. Then they juxtapose this paradigm onto every living example they come across, without considering whether the context and the evidence matches up. For example, Rollo's schtick with vasectomies, and Vox's condemnation of MGTOW.

The Problem of Positivism

The Problem of Positivism arose as a pessimistic reaction to post-truth skepticism and is prevalent in the post-

Enlightened West. It is the erroneous belief that "Science ≡ Truth" and anything that cannot be scientifically justified is necessarily false or a pseudo-science. The problem is not so much that scientific theories are often false or inaccurate in some way, but that (1) people will believe false conjectures if there is sufficient 'scientific' evidence of it being true and (2) they'll refuse to believe true speculations that lack sufficient 'scientific' evidence. Another problem is that (3) recent scientific inquiry is corrupted by progressive funding and heavily biased by and predisposed to W0ke sentiments.

Both Incredulity and Obsession are aggravated by The Problem of Positivism. That is, if one believes a certain Red Pill model to be scientific-ish, then an obsession becomes an immutably sacrosanct idol which is brought out and shined up at every occasion in debate. Whereas, a lack of scientific rigor reinforces the skeptic's incredulity.

Conclusions

Properly understood, science and philosophy and models should be used to conceptualize phenomenon, to inform and guide inquiry, and to aid communication of abstract ideas, NOT as some sort of fail-proof litmus test of truth.

Properly understood, Red Pill / evo psych models are just that — models. If a man mistakes a model for 'The Red Pill Gospel', then that doesn't elevate the model to the status of a religion, nor does it render the model false if/when he discovers that it fails to accurately describe his reality. It only means that the man is an unimaginative dolt who doesn't know what an archetype / model / theory is good for and/or cannot integrate that knowledge into his awareness.

Related

- Sigma Game: The True Curse of High IQ (2024/5/25)

Misinterpreted Models

Jack · 28 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

False assumptions, foolishness, and ignorance cloud the vision.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

> [5] Get wisdom; get insight; do not forget, and do not turn away from the words of my mouth.
> [6] Do not forsake her,* and she will keep you; love her, and she will guard you.
>
> Proverbs 4:5-6 (ESV)

 Here, wisdom is poetically personified as a feminine entity. This does not refer to a woman.*

Overview

In the Exposition of this month's theme, A Failure of Knowledge Transference was identified as one type of problem with The Red Pill.

There are six main areas of knowledge transference that have been ineffective.

1. Models are misappropriated.
2. Models are misinterpreted.
3. Models are misunderstood.
4. Models are misapplied.
5. The Practical Application is Difficult, Elusive, Insurmountable, or Unacceptable
6. The Absence of Actionable Knowledge

This essay will cover the second.

Foundational reading includes the basics of modelling and 9 Types of Red Pill Models.

Intro

It is unreasonable to expect that the whole of human behavior can be apprehended through Red Pill models. However, it is imperative that men gain enough familiarity with the archetypes, models, and templates of human behavior so as to be able to recognize instances IRL that correlate to common patterns and thereby discern any noteworthy differences — differences which define the specific context and individuals in question as deviations from the norm, however great or small. Then one may be able to judge more accurately the character of others and the true nature of a situation.

That said, the overall purpose and value of taking the Red Pill is in adding knowledge to wisdom and enhancing one's discernment.

For example, answers to important questions such as the following may be more fairly assessed.

1. What is my purpose in life as a man? What is my proper masculine role? What are my responsibilities?
2. What is the value of chastity / virginity? If I find a young woman who is a virgin, then how rare is that? What is the meaning, significance, and value of that?
3. What is the nature of attraction? If a young woman is giving me a steady stream of IOIs, then what does that mean, and how should I respond?
4. How can I assess the strength of my relationship with a woman? How rare is this type of relationship? How much should I value it? How should I consider this relationship in terms of future plans?
5. Should I get married or not? What are the challenges and pitfalls that I will face? How can I prepare for this?
6. What types of challenges and pressures are my sons and daughters facing? What is holding them back from finding contentment and having a more fulfilling life? How can I help them navigate through life?

These are very real and very important questions that the majority of people face throughout life. For years, men have reported that taking the Red Pill has brought them to face reality (hence the parable of The Matrix) and has allowed them to pull themselves and their lives together, for better or for worse.

The Fundamental Problem with Modelling

Devising a theoretical model necessarily requires inductive reasoning. The model that is produced is necessarily a simplified representation of aggregate data, as described earlier.

The fundamental problem with predictive modeling is that, in general, models are fabricated using inductive reasoning, and then are often applied to real-world scenarios using deductive reasoning.

Inductive Reasoning: Broad generalizations or principles are derived from a body of observations. The justification of inductive reasoning is often either circular or question-begging. (See Hume's Problem of Induction.)

Deductive Reasoning: A conclusion is based on the concordance of multiple premises that are generally assumed to be true. The validity of the conclusion relies heavily upon the initial premises being correct.

Both of these methods are subject to error and the error is magnified when combined. This is the primary shortcoming of models in general.

The Fallacy of the Blue Pill

This was the big fallacy of the Blue Pill. Men were presented with false and/or misleading postulates under the guise of 'relationship advice', such as…

- "Be yourself."
- "Be chivalrous."
- "Men are toxic."
- "Give a woman flowers."
- "Women like nice guys."
- "Men and women are 'equal'."
- "You need to 'respect' women."
- "Men need women to civilize them."

- "You need to speak her love language."
- "You'll be 'happy' once you're married."
- "Man up and marry that ~~slore~~ poor girl."
- "(Female) Virginity isn't THAT important."
- "Just WAIT. The RIGHT ONE will appear at the right time."
- "Women are more spiritual / virtuous / etc. than men are."
- "Better communication will solve your relationship problems."
- "You need to be more alpha / forgiving / 'godly' / understanding / (fill in the blank) / etc. and your relationship will improve."
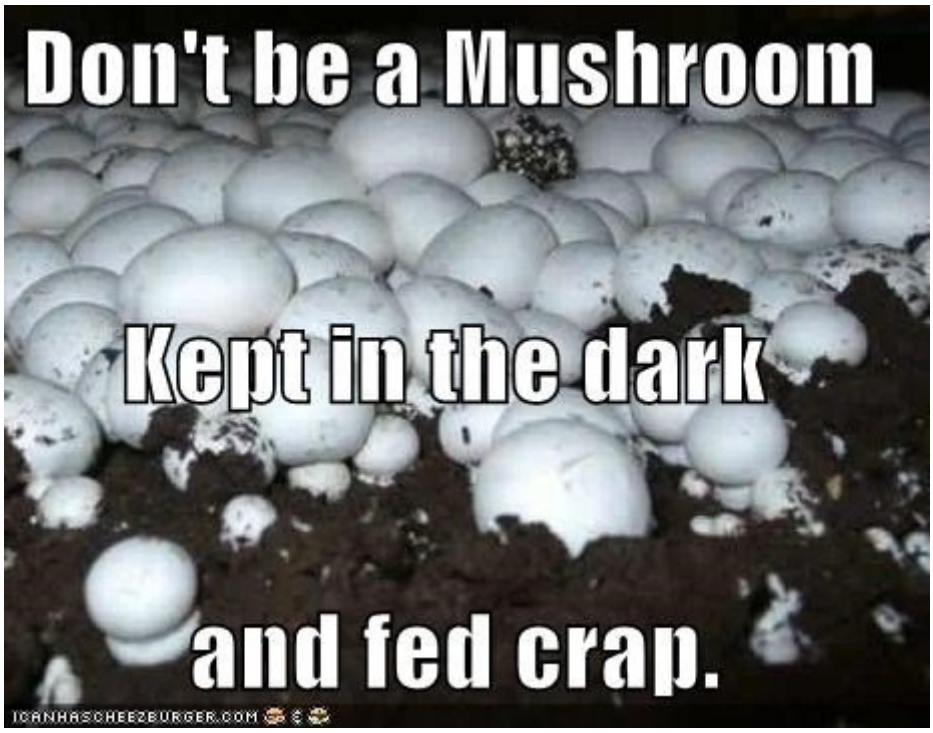
- And many others.

Men molded their thoughts and behaviors around these flubs of fantasy according to deductive reasoning, and then used inductive reasoning to slowly and painfully discover that women did not act or respond in the ways that were expected.



IOW, the Blue Pill reasoning was bass ackward.

Only after taking the Red Pill did men discover that these postulates were a mass gynocentric consortium of lies and Sh!t Tests designed to keep the mushrooms in the ~~sh!t~~ dark and keep them working on the farm.

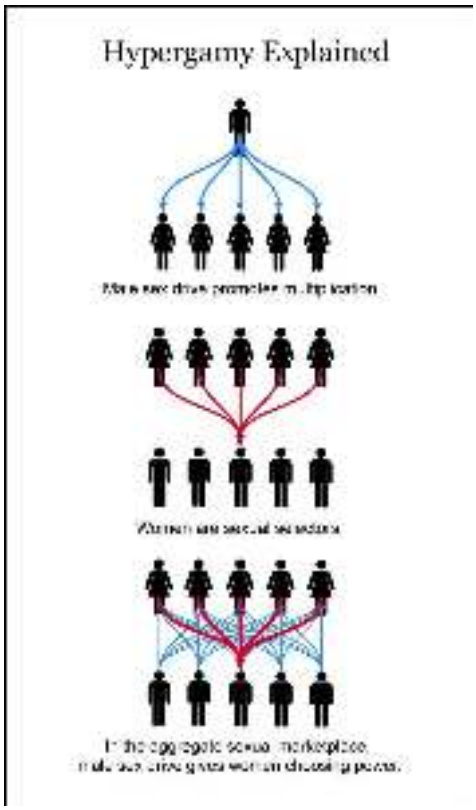
But these problems are not unique to the Blue Pill. The Red Pill is much MUCH better, mainly because the inductive procedures come first, leading to greater understanding. However, there are still a multitude of ways and many cases in which the inductive and deductive reasoning processes associated with Red Pill modeling veers from reality and truth.

3 Misinterpretations of the Red Pill

Here, I'll point out three of what I feel are the most egregious misinterpretations of Red Pill lore: (1) Evo Psych models, (2) a lack of self-awareness caused by a hyperfocus on chicks, and (3) hidden motivations. I may cover some of the more minor bloopers in future posts as they come to my attention.

Misinterpretation 1 — Evo Psych Models

The Evo Psych lens is a modeling structure that has been extensively developed and is more predictive than not, but it should be noted that it only concerns the fleshly nature — "a world without God", as Adam Piggott recently noted — and that working with this model comes at the cost of sacrificing other considerations.



For example, Rollo Tomassi's contributions are overwhelmingly of the Evo Psych variety. The primary weakness of Rollo's work is that he refuses to address either the metaphysical aspects or the moral aspects of these models. However, this simplification is necessary in order to devise these models.

The Fundamental Problem with Modelling entails that if one or more premises are incorrect, or pertinent information has been omitted, then the argument may be invalid and/or unsound. So although Rollo's Evo Psych models are applicable for the secular SMP, they are inadequate for Christian men, because Christian men are concerned with the spiritual considerations as well as the carnal. Nevertheless, these models have value because they accurately portray the fleshly nature of men and women. It also contributes an extensive body of knowledge about what the Bible refers to as "the flesh".

Misinterpretation 2 — Hyperfocus on Chix and the Lack of Self-Awareness

In most online men's communities, there is a pronounced male-centric perspective that assumes male prerogatives. This has led to the formation of Red Pill models that are predominantly focused on women's behaviors and which fail to examine men's behaviors as closely as the obstacles posed to the male objectives — the women themselves. Stated more simply, men's preoccupation with p00n is a blinding obsession that must be dealt with before any further progress can be made in overcoming the obstacles of life. It is frankly difficult for testosterone-befuddled men to keep a clear head in the presence of pheromones.

All in all, important information about the masculine nature is assumed without much scrutiny (e.g. male altruism, male propensity to positivism, male hyperagency, inefficacious action, poor internal locus of control, The Curse of Adam (lack of agency, laziness), listening sincerely to women, expecting emotional honesty, lust, pedestalization, etc.), while the value of one masculine purpose in particular (i.e. pounding p00n) is elevated to the status of an idol. This amounts to a willful ignorance of the other important information and skews the associated deductive reasoning towards a concentration on the flesh. Moreover, important information about the self is ignored or underestimated and thereby scrambles the rational process.

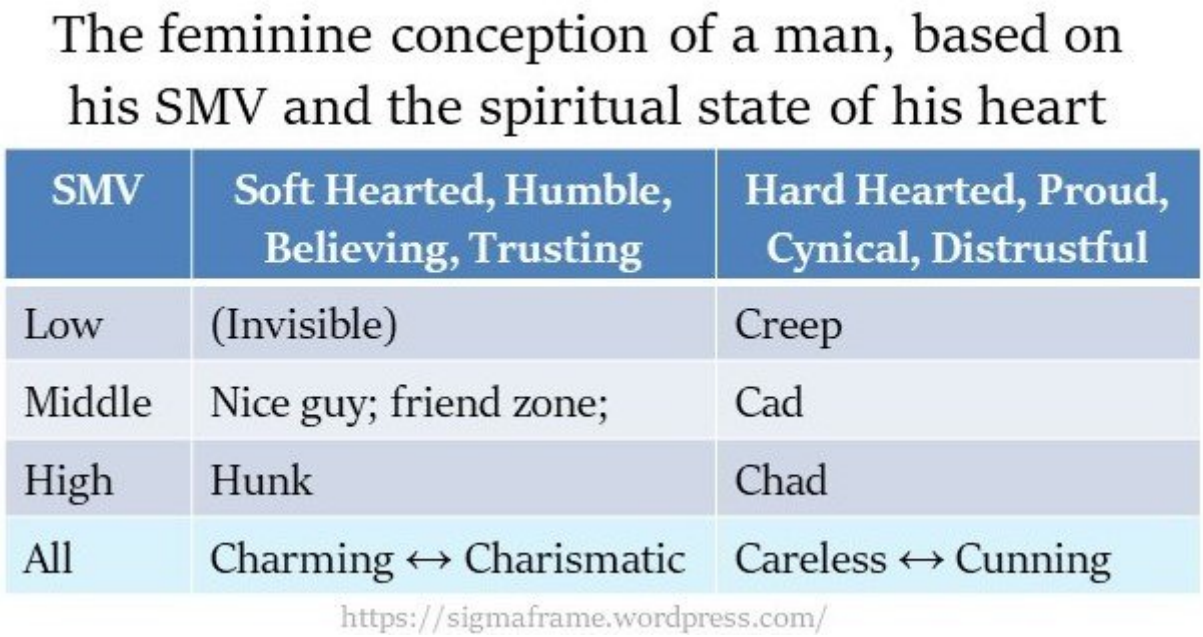
Misinterpretation 3 — Hidden Motivations



Overall, the outstanding problem with modeling, I believe, is that many men are fully expecting a model of GOD with 100% accuracy so that they can disassemble reality (i.e. the SMP) and reverse-engineer it for their own purposes (e.g. avoid suffering, get laid, reduce costs of investment, and so on).

I regret bearing this unpropitious news, but God doesn't work that way. Men who are expecting Red Pill models to deliver this kind of knowledge will be sorely disappointed. It will never happen. Furthermore, if you make a model (or anything else) into an idol, God will intentionally hide the truth from your awareness to prevent you from interfering in His work.

Remember, models are tools for increasing understanding and communication. Nothing more, nothing less, as Morpheus would say.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): Science and Scripture (2009/11/20)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Superposition (2023/6/14)
- Adam Piggott: The Red Pill is a World Without God (2024/3/26)
- Cosmonaut: What gets measured, gets mismanaged (2024/3/28)

Female Agency – An Elusive Induction

Jack · 30 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An example of how proposing and testing a new theoretical model revealed the truth.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Do Women Possess Moral Agency?

For 10 years, this question was kicked around in the Christian Manosphere with nary any forthcoming conclusions beyond Donal Graeme's speculations. This question is an important one, because within the Western Guilt-based ethical structure, the answer determines women's moral culpability — Are men responsible for women's behaviors, or are women responsible for themselves? The assumption that women do NOT have agency, which had stood for centuries, was the lynchpin of Chivalry and other gynocentric cultural norms.

This question evaded a comprehensive assessment until 2022. It turns out that the topic is quite complex. It took Σ Jack two months and more than 25 posts (and counting) to pick this one apart. It continues to be an issue of confusion.

Bad Data, Bad Model

The difficulties surrounding this question of Female Agency were, in fact, a quintessential example of the Fundamental Problem of modeling.

Forming an empirical model of female agency was elusive because the aggregate data (e.g. consider all the women you have ever known) offers very little evidence to inductively conclude that women DO possess moral agency.

What we see is that as soon as women are faced with a situation in which they must assume responsibility and exercise agency, they deny having agentic capacity and become embarrassingly hypoagentic.

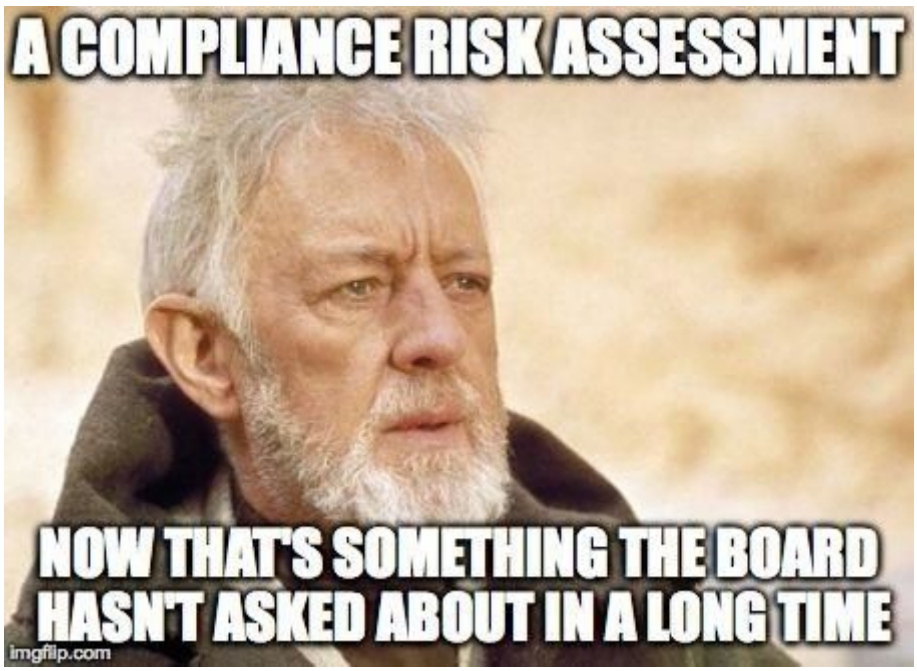
What we see is that women chafe, complain, falter, make excuses, and attempt to shift responsibility, all in the hope that a Wh!te Knight will step up to the task and relieve her from her moral duty. Then if things go awry, she can always blame the simping sucker who valiantly but vainly attempted to save her day.

We seldom see ANY woman instantiating moral agency of her own free will, so it was easy for men to conclude that they are morally incompetent dufuses. And to the extent that this belief was in place, Chivalry remained appropriate.

A New Theoretical Model Reveals the Truth

St. Dalrock did much to undermine this belief, not by directly confronting the topic of agency, but by patently assuming that women DO have agency and then systematically examining hundreds of case studies of chivalry, complementarianism, popular doctrine, feminism, and other cultural norms through this lens. Although Dalrock never formalized this assumption, comprehensively, his viewpoints proposed an alternative theoretical model of Female Agency, colloquially known as The Dalrock Route. Over his 10 year tenure of blogging, the answers became much more evident as it was revealed that Chivalry, gynocentric doctrines, male hyperagency, and the long-held, widespread belief that women lack agency permits, enables, encourages, and leads to the manifestation of female hypoagency in reality.

Now it is increasingly recognized that women DO have agentic capacity, but they absolutely DETEST exercising it for a plethora of reasons, and there are a large number of incentives for women to deny it altogether. Also, a gynocentric culture works in a concerted effort to enable women's escape from moral culpability, but this is also gradually changing.



Some evidence that women DO have moral agency is revealed in how Women Think Being Emotionally Mature and Respectful is Witchcraft (2023/12/5). They KNOW what they ought to be doing, but they'll hamster up some false justification for why they don't or shouldn't have to do so. The real reason is because they loathe being spiritually obedient.

The New Model of Female Agency

The new model of Female Agency that is currently gelling is that women DO possess moral agency, but they must be taught, trained, and disciplined in how to exercise agency from a young age to get it down pat. As for men, it is the responsibility of each woman's male head (father or husband) to teach her how to exercise agentic capacity, foster her growth, and hold her accountable. If a woman refuses to recognize her head, then she's on her own — 'independent' as they like to call themselves. Women are resisting these changes, kicking and screaming all the way just as little children do, but now that they've removed their own veil of propriety en masse, their nakedness has been exposed and they can no longer evade the truth. There's no going back to the 1950s now, but that's exactly what they wanted.

The interesting thing about this new paradigm is that those men who continue to stick to the old model of assuming that women do NOT have agency tend to fall into one of two extremes.

1. They become hyperagentic imbeciles, AKA Chivalrous Wh!te Knights.
2. They become pred@tory, e.g. Male Feminists, PUAs, etc.

In fact, these are the only men who are willing to tolerate and play along with women's ruse of hypoagenticity.

There are a couple differences between these two extremes.

1. The man's motivations. Chivalrous men genuinely hold good will towards women, whereas PUAs view them as toys to be wound-up and set into gyrating motion.
2. Whether the man is willing to preemptively assign a certain level of dignity and agentic capacity to a woman that just isn't there. That is, men of the Wh!te Knight variety are willing to ascribe more virtue — chastity, good will, intelligence, moral agency, and so on — to a woman of average or better attractiveness than what she actually possesses — a Feminine Halo Effect leading to pedestalization. In contrast, PUAs regularly mock and belittle women to arouse their indignation (and attraction, much to their debased delight).

Concerning the former category of men, when these two antithetical beliefs are combined — female hypoagency + the hyperassignation of female dignity — it results in a situation in which the man is doing all the work and is perpetually disappointed with a woman who uses him as a doormat.

The latter category of men are more likely to hold a woman accountable, ironically, which is necessary for her to develop her agentic capacity. This is why we often see that men who deny female agency actually fare better with women, even though they usually have no sense of responsibility in the matter. What we can learn from this is that it's very important for a man to discern exactly what a woman is capable of in order to keep her on her toes and deal with her properly and effectively.

The inconvenient truth arising from all this is that as long as women cling to a hypoagentic identity and behave and think of themselves accordingly, then they will only attract weak, supplicating men and predatory men into their lives. Then they will lament being "unlucky in love", perceive themselves as 'victims', and blame men for all their woes.

Concluding Statements

To briefly summarize this topic as a case study of the Fundamental Problem of modeling, we see that the usual methods of devising a theoretical model (i.e. gathering data, inductive reasoning, and so on) only led to conclusions that confirmed the original assumptions (i.e. that women do NOT have agency). (This is the problem of induction.) This was misleading because the lack of evidence prevented the core issue from being penetrated (that women's assumed lack of agency prevents them from instantiating agency). It was necessary to develop an alternative theoretical model (based on the assumption that women DO have agency) to be explored and tested. As this theory developed, it became evident that the newer model was more accurate and comprehensive, and therefore superior to the older model.

Looking back, it seems we should've known this all along.

Related

- Σ Frame: Kyojiro Kagenuma on Women's Agency (2022/12/5)
- Σ Frame: A Gynocentric Society Inhibits Female Agency (2022/12/9)
- Σ Frame: Zippy Catholic's View of Female Hypoagency (2022/12/12)
- Σ Frame: Moral Agency is Dependent on Spiritual Maturity (2022/12/19)
- Σ Frame: What we've learned about Female Agency (2022/12/20)

The Lie of Female Hypoagency

Oscar · 1 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Pastors and Red Pill gurus continue to spread this lie by demonstrating that it's true.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Men
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Author's Note: Coauthored with Jack.
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Breaking Down the Lie

Humans of both sexes have free will and moral agency. Both sexes are sinners and hate being held accountable for their sin. Those who are NOT held accountable (regardless of their sex) will continue to indulge their sin, then blame everyone else for the consequences of their sin. The difference between the sexes is that (in general) women don't get held accountable for their actions, and (in general) men do. The difference is that women love to hold men accountable, and men hate to hold women accountable. This is an inversion of Headship.

In Female Agency – An Elusive Induction (2024/3/30), Jack described why it is easy for men to cling to the notion that women have no free will or moral agency. Worse than this, the denial of Female Agency continues to be implemented as a deceptive tool to shift accountability from women to men and in some cases has morphed into a red-coated blue pill. Men keep falling for this not-so-obvious lie, largely because it is a man's innate nature to care for a woman and assume responsibility as her head, not realizing that placing their balls in her paws is an obvious sex-selective trap.

Here's the natural progression of the lie.

1. Women have no free will or moral agency.

2. Because women have no free will or moral agency, they're like vending machines. Thus, if you give a woman the right input, she'll give you the desired output.
3. Because women are like vending machines, if you're getting an undesirable output, it's because you're giving her the wrong input.
4. Because you're giving her the wrong input, her bad behavior is your fault.

Let's look at a couple case studies.

Case Study 1 — Trad Con Churchians

A lot of complementarianish pastors like Mark Driscoll, Matt Chandler, et al. walk through this progression of assumptions in their sermons without ever explicitly saying so. Through all their talk, these pastors arrive at the claim that, "If your wife doesn't submit to you, then it's your fault, because you're just not godly enough, or loving her enough, or leading her well enough." Followed by a "Man Up!" rant in which "Man Up!" = 'godly', which is taken to mean the Chivalrous Nice Guy™. We all know this doesn't hold any water at all.

Pastor Matt and Lauren Chandler

Consider this quote from Matt Chandler's sermon, "Woman's Hurdles".

> "Men, here's a great way to gauge how you're serving, loving, and practicing your headship. If the most secularized feminist in the world showed up in your home and began to kind of coach your wife towards freedom and liberation from your tyranny, our wives should be so well cared for, so nourished, sowed into, and loved that they would be like "what you're describing is actually tyranny, I love where I am."
>
> Matt Chandler, Woman's Hurdles (2014/11/2)

Sounds great, right? Let's apply that same "logic" to God and Eve.

> "God, here's a great way to gauge how you're loving and practicing your Godhood over Eve. If the most deceitful serpent showed up in your garden and began to coach Eve towards freedom and liberation from your tyranny, Eve should be so well cared for, so nourished, sowed into, and loved that she should be like "what > you're describing is actually tyranny, I love where I am."

If providing flawless Eve with the input of a flawless husband, and a flawless world in which to live did not produce the desired output of faithful obedience, what hope does a fatally flawed husband have to provide his fatally flawed wife with just the right input to receive from her the desired output in a fatally flawed world?

Surely, manly Red Pill men wouldn't make the same mistake as a prissy pastor like Matt Chandler, right?

Case Study 2 — Red Pill Grifters

Red Pill grifters make the same deceptive mistake. They simply replace 'godly', or 'loving', or 'leading' with 'Alpha', or 'Sigma', or whatever nonsense 'Red Pill' term happens to be trending at the time. If a man is 'Alpha" enough, then his woman will inevitably, automatically fall in line, like a wandering planet falling into orbit around a sun.

This is why you'll see Red Pill grifters telling men that if their women are behaving badly, it's because the men aren't 'Alpha' enough, or whatever. In other words, the woman's bad behavior is the man's fault. So buy the grifter's course and you'll learn exactly how to behave to get the right behavior from your woman, and when it inevitably doesn't work, that means you did it wrong, so buy the grifter's next course and be a better student this time (repeat ad infinitum).

Donovan and Devon Sharpe

Don't believe me? Here it is, straight from the horse's mouth.

> "Today's women are as misbehaved as they've ever been in history. The reason for this is that they have no respect for Male authority. And who can blame them? Men have shown a gross ineptitude in dealing with their nonsense and the way laws are written these days all but encourages them to be as horrible as they can be.
>
> A lot of Men are quick to blame their women for misbehaving but the fact of the matter is that if a woman steps out of line on your watch, it's your responsibility."
>
> Donovan Sharpe: How to build a quality woman from the ground up

BTW, you don't need to pay Donovan Sharpe for any of the information he is selling. All that has already been covered here at Σ Frame. FREE!

See what I mean? This is the message that authors, pastors, and grifters are sending. They're saying it's NOT women's fault that women behave badly, it's your fault, men! Unlike (insert any pastor or Red Pill grifter's name here), you're just not 'godly' or 'manly' enough. If you were, then your woman would be an impossible combination of June Cleaver and Jenna Jameson (back when she was still hot).

Their error is in transferring responsibility for someone's actions to somebody else — a violation of The Law of Responsibility. Saying that women behave badly because men are poor husbands is like saying men are sinful because God is unloving.

Furthermore, it would be better for men who have respectful, well-behaved wives to say that God blessed them with a good wife, rather than to claim that their wives are good because of anything they have done, which is is also a violation of The Law of Responsibility.

Conclusions

Here's the truth. Women DO have free will and moral agency, but they need an incentive to forsake their sin and exercise righteous behaviors. It IS a man's place and responsibility to guide, lead, and train his woman. But her decision to follow or not is on her. So stop rescuing women from the consequences of their bad behavior and decisions. Only give your time and attention to women who take responsibility for their actions and decisions. Her disobedience and poor behavior might bring shame to a man, but it is not necessarily a reflection on the man's godliness or masculinity or whatever. Women who say so are making up an excuse to be hypoagentic. Men who say so are bilking you for $$$ or are sending you on a guilt trip.

Because women have free will and moral agency, a woman's bad behavior — and its consequences — are her fault, and no one else's. Treat her accordingly. Assume The Law of Responsibility, exercise The Law of Respect, and teach her The Law of Motivation.

Likewise, if a woman chooses to be good, then that is also her own choice. Treat her accordingly and be thankful for this rare blessing.

Related

- Σ Frame: Moral Guidance Based Feedback vs. Sexual Attention (2021/11/24)
- Σ Frame: No More Mrs. Hot Mess! (2021/11/29)
- Σ Frame: Laying out Expectations (2022/10/20)
- Σ Frame: What we've learned about Female Agency (2022/12/20)
- Σ Frame: Asherah Makes Demands: Give Women what they want! (2023/2/27)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Do you have a Communist Marriage? (2023/4/26)
- Σ Frame: Ideal Women Don't Exist (2023/9/23)

Misunderstood Models

Jack · 3 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Without relevant context, the Red Pill appears as toxic filth.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

> [5] If any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask of God, who gives to all liberally and without reproach, and it will be given to him. [6] But let him ask in faith, with no doubting, for he who doubts is like a wave of the sea driven and tossed by the wind.
>
> James 1:5-6 (NKJV)

Overview

In the Exposition of this month's theme, A Failure of Knowledge Transference was identified as one type of problem with The Red Pill.

There are six main areas of knowledge transference that have been ineffective.

1. Models are misappropriated.
2. Models are misinterpreted.
3. Models are misunderstood.
4. Models are misapplied.
5. The Practical Application is Difficult, Elusive, Insurmountable, or Unacceptable
6. The Absence of Actionable Knowledge

This essay will cover the third.

Foundational reading includes the basics of modeling and 9 Types of Red Pill Models.

Intro

In this post, I'll point out what I believe are the three most egregious forms of misunderstanding Red Pill lore in general: (1) Oversimplification, (2) Saturation, and (3) Inappropriate Mischaracterizations, the latter of which there are three areas that will be discussed: (A) The Christian Manosphere, (B) the Secular Manosphere, and (C) the personal application.

Concerning misunderstandings specific to models, the confusion is unique to each model and dependent on context. Individual bias may also play a hand. In future posts, I'll cover a few specific models and how they are misunderstood.

1. Oversimplification

As mentioned before, models are a simplified representation of reality. However, there is a strong tendency for people to oversimplify, usually for the sake of saving words, where the oversimplified version not only loses some of the important fundamental concepts but it also takes on a peculiar biased viewpoint unique to the individual.

For example, Bardelys the Magnificent wrote,

> "The Manosphere began with two questions: how do I get her into bed, or how do I get / keep her married? Both problems have been solved for quite some time now. There is no new ground to discover. […]"

BtM's assessment is a very concise materialist reduction of TRP. But if packing P00n was all there was to TRP, then it would have died out with the PUAs 6 years ago. A broader view of TRP recognizes that the sex drive (a proxy incentive for reproduction) is a strong carnal motivator — and the relative lack of access thereof for a growing number of men provided the incentive that drove men to do some hard digging, to face themselves, and to change their deeply embedded Blue Pill mental constructs of men, women, and the SMP.

How much can we simplify a model and still convey the fundamental concepts? At some point, the context is no longer clear.
However, it didn't stop there. The ideas that were uncovered led to a rediscovery of a larger paradigm of truth that no one expected, especially coming from this source (the PUA scene). It became a metaphysical awakening on par with that depicted in The Matrix. It fractured the old construct of masculinity and even transformed the framework of what it means to be a man. It led many men to God, and/or to make drastically different choices in life. This fundamental element of truth is also what contributed to the increasing acceptance of TRP, eventually leading to its mainstream popularity.

The Christian Manosphere has recognized that this reawakening is not a coincidence nor even an act of God per se. Sex is intrinsically tied to Sanctification. (See 1 Thessalonians 4:3-8.) When you start messing around with sex, then you'll eventually bump into issues related to Sanctification. When that happens, then you're forced to make some difficult life decisions. This is what has happened on a cultural level in the West.

Anyway, once we begin simplifying models, we must necessarily omit certain details in the process. But which details are essential and which are peripheral? The details that are omitted and the details that are retained and emphasized as central truths are what constitutes a biased viewpoint peculiar to each individual. According to BtM's view, getting laid / married / etc. is the central truth. According to Jack, a realignment of conscious awareness is the central truth. According to Rollo Tomassi, men learning to navigate the Feminine Imperative is the central truth. According to … well, you get the idea.

Moreover, if we simplify a model too much, then we lose some of the basic concepts. We are also prone to misunderstand the value of the application as well as specific details. More broadly, if we fail to recognize all the ways the Red Pill has impacted human life, including philosophical, social, sexual, metaphysical, and spiritual — then we will have made an incomplete assessment.

2. Saturation

The feminist culture and the MGM have hoped that the Manosphere was a fad that would eventually die out. No. It went mainstream. And as long as there are men searching for purpose and truth and asking difficult questions and thinking critically for themselves, there will be a Manosphere in some form.

However, although this saturation brought widespread RP knowledge to many people, it also reduced the quality thereof. Now TRP 2.0 faces a new set of challenges as a result of saturation. (Some of these have been mentioned before, but here I want to point out that it is a direct consequence of saturation.)

- It is regressing to a materialist reduction of intersexual dynamics, similar to BtM's comment above.
- It is debased and sensationalized.
- It has become more of a sacrilegious entertainment and less of a sanctifying self-assessment.
- It has lost the power to generate epiphanies that inspire men to introspect and reassess their lives.
- Overfamiliarity — clichés without depth nor personal meaning.

Awesomely cool for its time. A leetle out of fashion now.

Concerning the last, there is irony in the way a person, a tradition, or a philosophy becomes common and less appreciated after it is well known and revered as classical. To draw a comparison, the Swing Era of the 1930s and 40s swept the world with its resonating big band sounds. But the same music was considered mundane and outdated by the following generation. Likewise, when fusion jazz was introduced in the late 1960s, it blew up the music scene. But 20 years later, when Herbie Hancock's muffled tunes could be heard on every downtown elevator, it became annoying and boorish to younger generations.

I believe The Red Pill is now undergoing a similar metamorphosis in how it is regarded by younger generations. This is why there has been a recent call to produce fictional narratives that convey comprehensive Red Pill mythos. I plan to examine the transgenerational views in more detail in an upcoming po$t.

3. Inappropriate Mischaracterizations

The Manosphere and Red Pill lore are constantly smacked with mischaracterizations, sometimes taking the form of an obvious Straw Man. One of the most annoying blunders is how Manospherians and sometimes men in general are broadly pigeonholed into one of two dialogisms: (1) hypermasculine — abusive, immoral, 'toxic' players (e.g. Andr@w T@te, Bad@ss Ch@d, Roosh pre-conversion, et al.), or (2) effeminate — basement troglodytes, mouth breathers, wimpy !ncels, et al. Another example is the recent trend of culture shapers and religious figureheads badmouthing the Manosphere and men in general. The same thing happens between various Manosphere subgroups, such as the Civilizationists and MGTOW. Even Feminism is sometimes mischaracterized by Red Pill voices.

Overall, there are as many mischaracterizations as there are personal opinions. It would be impossible for me to cover them all, but reminding ourselves to be aware of this and look out for it may be enough.

Here, I'll focus on three conceptual mischaracterizations that happen regularly among readers: (A.) The Christian Manosphere, (B.) the Secular Manosphere, and (C.) the personal application.

A. The Christian Manosphere

One of the purposes of the Christian Manosphere is to help men who have been emasculated by the Beta Factory get a foothold in the SMP/MMP so that he can make further or better progress down the road of life. Another purpose is to help married men navigate the messiness of Marriage 2.0.

The Christian Manosphere is NOT for natural Alpha Ch@ds or men looking to score. If a man finds it easy to pick up chicks, get laid, etc., then he doesn't need any advice, and our experience here shows that such men are not very good at giving out advice to men who are NOT naturals. Also, happily married men are not very good at giving out advice to men struggling with contentious wives / unions. Yet, many men will readily assume that Manosphere authors are setting themselves up as experts or naturals who are expecting the same from other men.

A prehistoric PUA scoring another notch.

Just to be clear, among all the authors that have written posts for Σ Frame, only one is a 'natural'. Most of us are sharing the difficult lessons we have learned as a consequence of NOT being a natural.

B. The Secular Manosphere

The content of the Secular Manosphere is intended for secular men in the secular SMP. Celibacy and marriage are entirely different contexts that the secular Manosphere rarely goes into, except in theory and invariably as a warning against it. Rollo goes heavy on the Tingly Respect type of Headship as an ideal structure, but he totally ignores other variations of Headship which are more relevant to men who are not naturals.

OTOH, just because a model is NOT explicitly Christian does NOT mean it is entirely invalid. For Christian men, anything coming from the secular Manosphere has to be translated into Christianese, and then you have to pick out the meat and throw away the bones. Having a mystical approach helps.

Ayak: "Barbecue tonight?" Kingsor: "No. This one good. Keep for breeding."

C. The Personal Application

Adopting any models, or anything given out as pat advice should be taken with a grain of salt, and a good deal of introspection and a prayer, as every person's situation is different. It also depends on the situation and the woman in question, especially her level of agency and maturity. Moreover, men should be asking themselves, "What do I, in my particular situation (my own age, marital / relationship status, looks, personality, goals, etc.), do with this information?"

In posts, I'll shuffle through ideas and hash things out, but it is mostly left up to readers to decide for themselves what the best personal application would be. In fact, we've seen that different men can read the exact same post and come to wildly different conclusions as to the application. So don't be surprised if you find some posts and comments with alternative conclusions. The bottom line is, consider the information for what it's worth and think for yourself.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Dispensation of the Red Pill (2018/4/7)
- Σ Frame: Avoiding the Broken Window Effect (2021/7/21)
- Σ Frame: The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)
- Σ Frame: Invisible Magic Authority (2023/12/13)
- Rollo Tomassi: Teaching Slaves to Read (2024/2/26)

Revisiting Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy

Lexet Blog · 5 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Excellent mythos, but a poor predictive model.

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misunderstood Models
Author's Note: Compiled by Jack.
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Background

Over the last few years, the Socio-Sexual Hierarchy has received more coverage and has slowly risen in popularity.

Here are a few popular articles about the Socio-Sexual Hierarchy.

- 40x Life by Design: The Socio-Sexual Hierarchy and the Male Hierarchy (2021)
- The World For You: Seven types of Male Personalities (2022/7/31)
- The Modest Man: Male Hierarchy Explained: Is This Just Bro Science? (2023/1/6)
- MANtelligence: 6 Socio Sexual Hierarchy – An Awesome Way To Know What Type Of Man Are You (2023/6/2)
- The Adult Man: The Socio Sexual Hierarchy Explained: Where Do You Rank? (2024/3/11)

Recently, Vox Day has refreshed his career as a Manosphere blogger by opening Sigma Game. In doing so, he continues to espouse and glorify The Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (SSH) — descriptions of masculine archetypes (i.e. alpha, beta, delta, gamma, omega, sigma, lambda) which he first introduced on Alpha Game back in March 2011.

Back when Lexet was working on Courtship and Power (2020/2/17), written as a response to Jack's article, Models of Courtship and Marital Structure (2018/10/3), and a contribution to a continuation of discussions about Chivalry, Christianity, and Courtship happening on Dalrock's blog and American Dad's at the same time, Lexet and Jack reviewed Vox's SSH to see how it might fit into the discussion. They could not identify any clear correlations between Vox's SSH archetypes and the Marriage Structures and Relational Archetypes that Jack was working on at the time. However, they did come up with a list of criticisms of Vox's SSH model. Here is a summary of their notes on Vox's SSH.

A Critique of Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy

I have to admit, Vox's SSH is a real source of confusion that we should address. The concepts and definitions of Alpha, Beta, etc. need to be clarified. Apparently, these terms have come into such common use that they have developed connotations that deviate from their original definitions.

As per Alpha and Beta, here are several preliminary thoughts / brainstorming:

How to identify his SSH archetype?

1. Vox's hierarchy is highly mythical and heavily context-dependent. It isn't backed by any real science or hard data. It is not even supported by any psychological or sociological theories. (Some research is presently being done on this.) Vox Day accurately describes this as 'fractal' [1].
2. People have tried to draw corellations between the SSH and other personality / social theories that have a better foundation (e.g. Attachment Styles, MBTI personality, etc.) but have been unable to do so (except for fun).
3. Vox's original model is based on masculine characteristics and social habits which most men can identify with at some level, so it is extremely useful for communicating general behaviors and social roles. However, its usefulness leads to several faux pas of saturation followed by confusion, as discussed in 4-7.
4. People intend to describe or refer to a certain set of traits or behaviors, but they're intellectually lazy and just stick an archetype label on it.
5. In colloquial use, there is an overall tendency to define Alpha and Beta based on where one is at in some dominance hierarchy. I don't agree with this position because (1) it lacks a biblical foundation, (2) it relies on evolutionary theories, and (3) it is mostly based on the 'Wolf Pack' hypothesis that was later shown to be an inaccurate description of wolves. (Wolf packs are genetic family units. The exception is when packs cross paths due to environmental constraints, and the result is not good for either pack.)
6. Although Vox's breakdown is interesting, it is only true in the most extreme iconoclastic cases. I don't think it holds true when you try to apply it to the average individual man. In reality, every man has some characteristics of all the types, relative to context, motivation, and individual capability. For example, a man might be an Alpha around his buddies due to his visionary dominance, but an Omega around the ladies due to his perceived (un)attractiveness.
7. The implied definition of the dominance hierarchy, and the tendency of most men in the Manosphere, is to define what manhood is based on what women find attractive and/or how much pipe he's laying. I can't think of a more gynocentric, blue pilled way of thinking than to orient your life on this basis. There is an ironic dichotomy to this rule, however: women will (or should) naturally be attracted to masculine behaviors and traits. (A separate po$t will explore this aspect.)
8. The SSH has some value to a Christian position on manly vs effeminate behavior. The Secular position will at best be a poor mirror of this. So this needs to be developed further.

9. Churchianity tends to make all men into betas and gammas, regardless of their natural social propensities, so here the meaning is construed into 'church boys' — something entirely different.
10. Vox's SSH is often mistaken to be a REAL hierarchy, that is, a social system such as the military in which men can find identity, purpose, and meaning. It is not. It is only a generalized description of real hierarchies. This leads to problems 11-12.
11. Men often misapply these labels to describe themselves, usually in a vain effort to establish credibility or gain respect. For example, egocentric, overconfident Deltas and 'Secret King' Gammas often falsely self-identify as an Alpha or Sigma, respectively.
12. The SSH can become a distraction and an energy drain from other activities more worthwhile. For example, navel gazers waste time trying to figure out "what kind of man they are" and think that they can "work their way up the hierarchy". Although self-awareness and self-improvement are vitally important, it won't be found through the mental masturbation of Vox's SSH. Instead men should be putting that energy toward real self-improvement by reading, exercising, planning, setting goals, and regularly working on social skills.
13. Overall, Vox's SSH suffers from the problem of induction, that is, a generalized description of behaviors and patterns cannot accurately describe nor reflexively predict inferences to specific individuals themselves.
14. Vox's SSH will always be subject to criticism and scrutiny because of its abstractness. It is NOT useful to people who are looking for logical perfection, or who are NOT looking for patterns in human behavior, or who don't appreciate mysticism, and/or who object to whatever is written.

Who am I? I am who I am, but am I who I think I am?

Case Study 1 — The Ideological Corruption of the Alpha Male Archetype

While the meaning has evolved over the last few decades, today, the term 'alpha male' or just 'alpha' has become inextricably linked to the Manosphere.

Common definitions of 'Alpha Male' include…

1. A male animal having the highest rank in a dominance hierarchy.
2. The most dominant, powerful, or assertive man in a particular group.

3. A man who is perceived to be assertive, successful, and sexually dominant.

The definition of the term ‘Alpha Male’ always assumes a dominance hierarchy relative to other males. This distinction was set forth by Vox himself, indicated by the word ‘hierarchy’ in the name of the model, ‘Socio-Sexual Hierarchy’ [2]. But this view is a reflection of the Alpha archetype, not all the archetypes collectively. Thus, it is apparent that Vox set up the SSH not only to describe social roles, but also to use it as a philosophical tool to denigrate other men.

An outstanding dissolution occurs when non-Alpha wannabes LARP the Alpha archetype. Guys claiming to achieve ‘alpha’ status have said and done outrageous things just to attract attention and assert ego dominance, leading to the impression of ‘alpha’ being a disruptive @ss or a show off with little genuine strength of character (a defining trait of alphas). Similarly, so many brands and channels have adopted ‘alpha’ in their name that it has become cliche, and in some cases, cringy, so much so that this association has caused ‘alpha’ to lose its original meaning.

Grit!?! He must be an Alpha!

Case Study 2 — The Ideological Corruption of the Beta Male Archetype

The original idea of the Beta is a man who is popular, winsome, loving, caring, responsible, and well-balanced, but just not as confident and independent as an Alpha. But lately, the overall impression is that Alphas and Sigmas are the top dogs, and all the others are substandard or weak. People equate “Alpha = Good”, and “Beta = Bad” [3]. ‘Beta’ has become synonymous with ‘Beta Orbiter’ or ‘church boy’ depending on the context, or a buzzword for ‘rejected’ or ‘weak’, or slang for complementarian evangelicals, and is thereby used to denigrate other men.

Why? Here are a few reasons.

- Vox himself casts bias on the different archetypes. His favorite hobby is to lambast gammas as lesser / weak men.
- People fail to recognize the weaknesses of the Alpha and Sigma, and the strengths of the other types.
- ‘Good’ and ‘bad’ archetypes are defined in terms of which are more likely to get some hoity-toity-coity [4], which are more likely to wind down with ‘sloppy seconds’ [5], and which are hung up to dry out in the sexual desert.

Is that a bible in his hand? He must be a Beta!

Conclusions

The archetypes have nothing to do with moral or spiritual value, only social traits, but common usage waxes poetic about mythical correlations thereof.

People making references to archetypes would be better served if we recognized that we're talking about a general trend of behaviors. The model becomes debased when the hoi polloi focuses on one behavior in particular — sexual proclivity — and then reverse engineers a conclusion that assigns an inverted (im)moral value to particular archetypes.

Notes

1. Fractal: (Mathematics, Physics) An irregular geometric structure that cannot be described by classical geometry because magnification of the structure reveals repeated patterns of similarly irregular, but progressively smaller, dimensions: fractals are especially apparent in natural forms and phenomena because the geometric properties of the physical world are largely abstract, as with clouds, crystals, tree bark, or the path of lightning.
2. A better name for the SSH might be 'Male Social Archetypes', but then it probably would've never become popular without the 'sexual hierarchy' aspect. Sex sells, you know.
3. Lately, Vox has recognized this association and has started to use the term 'Bravo' to refer to the archetype originally designated as Beta. (See his updated description here.)
4. This is a gynocentric view similar to the evo psych error of transforming heroes into fools and PUAs into champions. This is disrespectful to non Alphas / Sigmas, and a disservice to all men.
5. Here, there is a valid concern for sexual purity and marital sanctification, but confusion is introduced when moral character or virtue is assigned to the archetype referenced, rather than one experiencing either the pleasures or consequences of sexual sin — something which may be associated with certain habits or traits, but not necessarily a particular archetype.

Related

- Dalrock: No Respect (2017/12/14)
- Fabius Maximus: An expert: respect is a key battleground in the gender wars (2018/3/18)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Avoiding the Broken Window Effect (2021/7/21)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Charting the Red Pill World (2021/3/26)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Gynapotheosis (2021/4/21)
- Σ Frame: "Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest." (2022/4/27)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)

Esoteric Masculinity

Jack · 8 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Be wise as serpents…

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misunderstood Models
Length: 4,000 words
Reading Time: 22 minutes

> Be wise as serpents and innocent as doves.
>
> Matthew 10:16 (ESV)

Introduction

After the Great Persecution of 2018, the Secular Manosphere petered out, and then MGTOW and the Christian Manosphere were, for a brief time before secular Red Pill 2.0 swept YouTube in 2020, the only Manosphere communities left standing. Those were the days when American Dad, Christianity and Masculinity, Dalrock, Dark Brightness, Fabius Maximus, and Σ Frame hashed through the topics of Chivalry, Complementarianism, marital authority, and the centrality of respect; IGTBAM, Warhorn, et al. locked horns with Dalrock over The Dalrock Route; and Σ Frame and Derek L. Ramsey took a few writers at Patheos to the philosophical cleaners.

Immediately after Dalrock hung up his hat in early 2020, Biblical Gender Roles (BGR) methodically attacked a complex multivariate question that had sat on the back burner for a long time — Is the Red Pill Biblical? This important topic was smoking hot for a brief time until secular Red Pill 2.0 kicked in later that same year. BGRs work on this topic indirectly sparked The Great Schism of 2020, in which the Christian Manosphere distanced itself from what was left of the secular Manosphere.

In this essay, I'll return to one topic that was repetitively brought up by BGR in this series — the difference between Christian Frame and Worldly Frame, specifically the question of whether a Christian man's frame should be covert, and if so, then what exactly, and how much?

First, I'll quote a few passages from BGR to bring readers up to speed on this topic and offer some parallel commentary along the way [quotations reordered and punctuation added for ease of reading].

Covert Methods — Secular vs Christian

The author of BGR wrote,

> "[The secular] Red Pill encourages men to use covert and subtle means to bring women into their frame while the Bible discourages craftiness for Christians (2 Corinthians 4:2). The Bible tells us in Proverbs 27:5, "Open rebuke is better than secret love". Men should speak plainly and establish the parameters of their relationship early with potential wives. And after marriage, they should use instruction, rebuke, and discipline to keep their wives within their frame (worldview).
>
> Red Pill sees the entire reason for men trying to get women into their frame is to invoke "genuine (unnegotiated)" sexual desire toward them. But as Christian men, the only "LTR" we are authorized to enter into with a woman is marriage. And our purpose for entering into marriage is more than getting a woman to genuinely desire us sexually."
>
> "Red Pill makes the entire point of a man's life to covertly cause women to genuinely desire and want sex with him. But that is not the point of a man's life from a Biblical perspective."
>
> Biblical Gender Roles: Is the Red Pill Concept of Frame Biblical? (2020/1/21)

Yes. This is one of the primary differences between the secular Manosphere / Red Pill and the Christian Manosphere / Red Pill. The former seeks to extract male needs from women (i.e. sexual congress), whereas the latter views women as a responsibility or a joyful burden. The former is not hesitant to employ deceptive means to achieve their ends, while the latter is questioning the moral rectitude and propriety of secrecy. Concerning the latter, we might phrase the issue in terms of the following questions.

1. Should women / wives have full knowledge of, and need they be in full agreement with, a man's / husband's methods and motivations in his interactions with her? (I'll call this Esoteric Masculinity.)
2. Should men / husbands have full knowledge of, and need they be in full agreement with, a woman's / wife's methods and motivations in her interactions with him? (I'll call this Esoteric Femininity, AKA The Feminine Mystique.)

We know that women cherish and will swear allegiance to the Feminine Mystique with their dying breath, and therefore will never permit enough transparency for the second situation to transpire, but the first is still on the table and will be explored in the next section. Altogether, I'll call this the question of Intersexual Complicity.

The Futility of Intersexual Complicity

In the comments under this post, Jack and BGR had an exchange in which BGR wrote,

> "But from what I have seen of the Christian Red Pill folks elsewhere (maybe you are not included in this) is they think much like Rollo that Red Pill is a covert philosophy. In other words, it is all about a man's influence and him just pulling in a woman through covert and subtle means. Do you agree with that?"

Secular Red Pill gurus (e.g. Rollo Tomassi, et al.) habitually frame Red Pill knowledge as esoteric — but NOT because it is a carefully kept secret. They'll say only men can comprehend it, and if a man tries to explain it to a woman, then she'll reframe it from the female perspective, misunderstand, and jump to a femcentric conclusion that casts a bad light on the man (as in e.g. controlling, domineering, manipulative, etc.). They'll say trying to explain Red Pill concepts to a woman doesn't help in any way by any metric. It only decreases trust and respect, and makes her more difficult to deal with. They conclude that a man should not reveal his hand for these reasons.

Jack and many others in the Christian Manosphere believe this is true, especially when dealing with immature, self-centered wimmin. Deti's post, On Red Pill Awareness (2021/7/23), and the comments below it brought out some useful insights on this topic.

Feeriker commented,

> "DO NOT talk about The Red Pill to spaced out girls and W0ke cucks who will run screaming from the room because they lack the courage to face the truth."
>
> "More generally, NEVER waste time and effort trying to reason with people who are incapable of reason. This is a moron's errand, as both Scripture (Proverbs 1:7) and multiple secular philosophies make clear. Avoid such > people if at all possible. If it's not possible, gear up for battle, not negotiation."

Those "people who are incapable of reason" may very well include women, and… ahem… beloved wives.

Oscar wrote,

> "The world can prevent men from talking about their preferences (mostly by punishing the few who do), but no one can stop men from exercising their preferences.
>
> Even when men "go their own way", they're still exercising their preferences. They're basically saying that they prefer to stay single than marry a debt-ridden, inked-up harlot, to cite one example."

Yes. Talking does little good, much less trying to explain this to women. It won't make any difference and will only create unnecessary offense.

Rontomlinson2 said,

> "…my point is that, when it comes to relating to women, there's a loophole. It's possible to judge a woman privately and signal that judgement to her without rejecting her: via a scowl, a growl, or a frown, in context. This seems to me like a valid imposition of standards in a way that she can accept.
>
> Another way is by the Red Pilling of men. By encouraging men not to judge each other by women's standards, per Jack's recent post, we indirectly influence women, since they rank themselves according to the male-perceived status of their husbands (assuming that they have husbands!)"

Yes. Women do not respond to words as well as they respond to actions (Proverbs 18:2; 23:9; 29:19). For the most part, words are only immediately effective on women when they are laced with fantasies, lies, and mythos.

RedPillBoomer described an example of what this looks like in reality.

> "The number one symptom of Red Pill going mainstream is men walking away from marriage, men not preparing for marriage, and men going their own way (MGTOW). That's Red Pill."
>
> "That is the ONE thing that seems to be getting their attention. I've noticed in the last couple years, certainly since the pandemic began, an increasing number of female clips being unpacked by RP content creators. Yes, the ladies on those clips engage in shaming behavior towards men in all sorts of ways (standard fare); however, they do seem to be getting that 'something's not right' on the MMP side of the SMP/MMP and they appear increasingly unsettled and worried about it. The sheer intensity and elevation of their voices on these clips, bordering on shouting at times, seems to be a symptom of the ladies beginning to see an increasingly gloomy future as they age into their mid-thirties and forties — a future of being alone with no marriage partner in sight, and they have a good four or five decades of living left."

So we do see discipline being enforced on women, passively and en masse, but only the Christian Manosphere recognizes the value of men actively enforcing discipline on individual women, that is, fathers on daughters and husbands on wives.

The reason why the Biblical concept of a husband disciplining his wife for failure to follow his leadership or failure to follow God's commands is foreign to much of the secular Red Pill community is because seculars are myopically focused on what men get out of women, i.e. sexual conquest and dominion. Only the Christian Manosphere / Red Pill takes the next step of stipulating that a man must assume responsibility for a woman under his domain of authority, including her moral agency and spiritual maturity. This is a responsibility that secular men wish to avoid if at all possible.

Misinterpretations of Covert Methods — Secular vs Christian

In addition to the confusion surrounding the practical reasons why secular Red Pill voices advise men NOT to expect intersexual complicity, as mentioned above, there remains a lurking suspicion of their underlying motives for not divulging too much information to women. Many normies, and especially Christians, have the idea that the Red Pill and Game and such are some kind of esoteric secret dark arts that are mainly employed for dark purposes by Dark Triad types. So when they hear secular Red Pill gurus suggest that men should NEVER use overt methods to try and influence or modify their wife's behavior, instead of receiving this as a word of wisdom in recognition of the reality on the ground, they'll take this as a confirmation of their assumption that the secular Red Pill, Game, etc. is deceptive and manipulative. This is a feminine perspective at best, and rather quəər* at worst.

 Quəər: Viewing normal male-female intersexual relationships and interactions with visceral disgust, fear, and/or suspicion.*

Over and again, I see commenters in the Christian Manosphere label charismatic Game / Rizz as 'craftiness', 'deception', 'guile', 'spellbinding', 'toxic', 'witchcraft', and whatnot. It only becomes such when the man intends to seduce and defraud the woman and the woman is careless, foolish, or immature enough to fall for it. It is NOT a sin to exude charisma / Rizz as an individual expression of one's personality if done with joy and/or as a social grease. Women getting turned on by this is properly regarded as a side effect, NOT the main purpose (which is essentially creating temptation). It is NOT a sin if a husband employs Game / Rizz to increase heart trust and humility and to squeeze some fun and joy out of his own marriage, nor is it a sin for him to utilize the side effect of her arousal to pleasure his own wife and wow her panties off! Instead, this should be seen as a normal and regular part of a good marriage. In fact, it may be necessary if the wife is emotionally immature, excessively libidinous, or spiritually unregenerated.

Actively Creating Joy

Continuing BGR's comment,

> "While I certainly think Christian men should be men of good character, be examples and live their lives in a way that attract good Christian women I do not think a man's authority over his woman is by passive influence only. This is what most complementarian teachers teach and they are wrong. I believe a man's call to rebuke and discipline his wife is God's call to him to use overt, not covert measures to consistently keep her in line with where believes God wants her to be. He is to be continually and actively washing her with the Word of God as Ephesians 5:25-27 commands.
>
> I agree with Rollo that a man should mold his woman, but he would only see that done through passive influence. I believe a man's molding of his woman involves direct and overt means."

Active and direct, yes. Overt, no.

Molding should not only include discipline and rebuke, but also fun and games. In fact, there should be more fun and games than discipline and rebuke in order to maintain a positive spirit of enthusiasm in the relationship. This is an essential element of "washing her with the Word", not only spiritually but also emotionally. All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy. This is one point that the secular Red Pill gets right.

Furthermore, if a man explains all his tricks for creating fun in the relationship and exposes his ploys too overtly, then the medium becomes burdened with mental tedium and self-consciousness and thereby chokes off the fun of it all. Maintaining a good humor, and the elements of surprise and unpredictability are essential for creating this impact. This is another point that the secular Red Pill gets right.

The Fulfillment of Joy

Continuing BGR's comment,

> "Certainly, Red Pill teaches men to be confident and cool under pressure, to know who they are, what they believe in, and to not live one's life to fit and please the crowd. It certainly teaches men not to live for the approval of women. And those are good things as I have said in this series. But a primary part of Red Pill is man's drive to sow his seed. It is his imperative. If you divorce the male imperative to sow one's seed, to evoke "genuine desire" in women and so get sex do you know what that is — it is MGTOW which is a Red Pill off shoot. Is it not? Please correct me if I am misunderstanding that."

Yes. This is one of the two primary differences between MGTOW and the Christian Manosphere. The latter includes women and the former does not. The other difference is that MGTOW is Black Pill / Libertarian / Nihilistic and the Christian Manosphere is Christian. (This difference suggests that women DO have a civilizing effect on men, via motivation.)

Actively creating trust, humility, and joy in a relationship, as I described in the previous section, inevitably leads to sexual congress. It is unfortunate that men and women discover this dynamic by chance outside of marriage, and fail to implement this dynamic inside marriage. Worse, men and women do not prioritize marrying someone with whom they can share this dynamic, as St. Paul advised widows to remarry "only in the Lord" (1 Corinthians 7:39). From this viewpoint, a lot of marriages occur between two people who perhaps never should've gotten married in the first place and are just 'odd' or 'wrong' together. This might explain, in part, why so many marriages, including those between two Christians, end in divorce.

Sin or Sanctification?

Continuing BGR's comment,

> "My point in this series is to show something that Red Pill and Blue Pill both miss. Both praxeologies seek to only to evoke the desired emotional responses from women which will then lead to desired actions from women. They simply differ on HOW to evoke the desired emotional responses."

To expand BGR's last sentence, Blue Pill assumes a man must seek to prove himself worthy of a woman's love to win her heart and thereby receive her favor, whereas Red Pill employs Game tactics and theories of intersexual dynamics to inspire feelings of attraction and limerence in women.

Many voices in the Christian Manosphere, as well as BGR (if I'm not mistaken), take the stance that a man doing anything to evoke a desired emotional response from a woman or to elicit a desired action from her is 'dancing monkey', or gynocentric, or 'love bombing', or peacocking, or pedestalizing, or preening for poon, or what not. I disagree.

I take the view that men employing Red Pill knowledge and Game on women is entirely natural, and there is nothing wrong with it under two conditions.

1. The dynamics of the relationship determine whether it leads to sexual congress.
2. Whether this appears in the context of marriage determines whether it is sin or sanctification.

I've written about this many times before.

- Σ Frame: Against The Naturalistic Fallacy (2018/2/12)
- Σ Frame: Rebranding the Natural Order as "Misogyny" (2021/8/9)
- Σ Frame: Is Our Fallen Nature as God Designed it? (2021/10/4)
- Σ Frame: A Volitional Model of Cascade Courtship (2021/11/15)
- Σ Frame: The Mystery of Glorifying a Provision for the Flesh (2023/6/20)

- Σ Frame: Natural Affection (2023/10/18)

Adding Agency

Continuing BGR's comment,

> "From everything I have seen of Red Pill, it completely rejects a man appealing to a woman's sense of duty and honor as if women are incapable of having any such sense. So for Red Pill — a father teaching his daughter that it is her duty to give her body to her future husband and her duty to cultivate a desire for her future husband — is utter absurdity and a fool's errand. For a husband to appeal to his wife's sense of duty to God and her faith in appealing to her to willingly give her body to him as well as cultivating her own desire for him is also seen by Red Pill as a fool's errand.
>
> But we know from history that women, when properly trained in their faith, can actually have a great sense of duty and honor. In other words, if a woman truly loves God and his Word she can and will love her husband. A woman can learn to give her body, even when she does not desire it, from a sense of duty and honor. This is all foreign to Red Pill from what I have seen."

Here, BGR is describing spiritually regenerated women who have learned to exercise moral agency. This is an important distinction that changes both the context and what can be reasonably expected. The secular Red Pill generally assumes that women are NOT spiritually regenerated and have little to no moral agency. The Christian Red Pill assumes that women DO have agency, but it has to be taught and trained.

In essence, BGR is asking how women can mature and become fit for marriage. Since then, this question has been answered by several authors (e.g. Jack, Red Pill Apostle, Thedeti, et al.) — a man must discipline her, hold her accountable, and teach her to exercise moral agency.

Contextual Appropriateness

Jack wrote a response to BGR's post at Σ Frame: Do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing. (2020/1/27), in which he addressed the contextual appropriateness of actions within an intersexual interaction, namely these.

1. Active vs. Passive
2. Overt vs. Covert
3. Covert vs. Crafty

Under this post, BGR responded,

> "This is a great article you have written and I don't see anything that pops out to me that I would disagree with. I don't disagree with all covert action or a husband doing passive things to influence his wife. In fact, I think it is absolutely necessary for a husband to sometimes take covert action, act in passive manners toward his wife or keep some information from her.
>
> What I was getting at is that the non-Christian version of Red Pill I have seen (aka Rollo) seems to say husbands should NEVER use overt methods to try and influence or modify their wife's behavior. In other words, the Biblical concept of a husband disciplining his wife for failure to follow his leadership or failure to follow God's commands is foreign to much of the Red Pill community."

The Question of Intersexual Complicity

Now to the crux of this essay.

The question that BGR brings up again and again (explicitly in boldface above) is one of intersexual complicity. That is…

1. Should wives have full knowledge of, and need they be in full agreement with, the ways of a man with a woman?
2. Can women develop moral agentic capacity such to be (or become) a companion and helper to a man?
3. Is intersexual complicity a defining and/or a hallmark characteristic of Christian intersexual relations / marriage? If so, then is this aspect methodically or purposefully rejected by secular Red Pill?

Cane Caldo and Deep Strength answered the first question in the negative. Wives do not need to know, understand, or agree. They only need to follow and submit.

The second question has been answered in the positive. Wives can learn and grow, however a man (father or husband) must shoulder the responsibility of disciplining, guiding, and teaching her.

I'll answer the third question as follows. Assuming or expecting intersexual complicity necessarily presumes an egalitarian or allyship relationship structure, both of which are inferior to Headship. Another possibility might be the Peaceful Unity structure, which is a union of two very mature individuals. Intersexual complicity IS a defining hallmark characteristic of a Churchistanian / Complementarian intersexual relationship, in which it is generally assumed that the man must agree with the woman more often than not. But this is NOT an ideal Christian relationship structure. In general, egalitarianism IS methodically and purposefully rejected by the secular Manosphere / Red Pill, and it should also be rejected by the Christian Manosphere in favor of Headship Dominion. The way this plays out is complex and varies on a case-by-case basis, as I described here.

Conclusions

Four years have passed since BGR's exposition, and most of the questions he brought up have been answered, and yet there is still much confusion about this topic. This essay is intended to summarize and wrap up these areas of doubt.

Also during this time, the Red Pill has gone mainstream, and yet it is still regarded as diabolical, hidden, secret knowledge. Instead of being regarded as debased / esoteric, The Red Pill should be common knowledge espoused as wisdom. Ironically, the secular Manosphere is reaching this conclusion faster than the Christian Manosphere.

Furthermore, the secular Manosphere is using Red Pill knowledge and Game to further their mastery of women. Christian marriage is not any different in this respect. Men should be using this knowledge to strengthen their marriages and exercise Headship Dominion over their homes and families. Christian Red Pill Game should be something we see regularly between happily married couples. This is one way in which God is glorified in marriage relationships.

BGR wrote,

> "God created man to image him and thereby bring him glory (1 Corinthians 11:7). A man's powerful driving sexual desire is certainly a part of his God given nature and man displays certain aspects of God's nature in his sexual desire for woman. But man was created to image God in far more ways than just his sexual desire toward woman.
>
> God created the woman for the man (1 Corinthians 11:9) so that man could image God as a husband in marriage and father to his children. God says in 1 Timothy 3:4 that a man must be "One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity".
>
> Biblical Gender Roles: Is the Red Pill Concept of Frame Biblical? (2020/1/21)

What Christians are finding very difficult to accept is that love can be expressed in the form of Game / Rizz, and that this expression, when done in love, can cover a multitude of sins in marriage (1 Peter 4:8).

Charismatic Game / Rizz is called evil and sin by both the church and the clown world for the same reason that the secular Manosphere has celebrated it — simply because it has been successfully used to seduce and debauch women. It's time we recognized that it can also be successfully used to build godly unions within or leading up to marriage.

As long as we condemn the Red Pill, Charismatic Game / Rizz as debased, esoteric, and evil, the knowledge of God is cut off from younger Generations.

Almost! Some of them are discovering this for themselves, outside of church and without sanctified parental marriages. It's a miracle! Praise God for not allowing Himself to be moralized and rationalized into obscurity.

Related

- Σ Frame: Do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing. (2020/1/27)
- Σ Frame: Men's Fantasy of Emotional Intimacy (2021/6/23)
- Σ Frame: Secrets (2021/8/18)
- Σ Game: AI Explains the First Rule of SSH (2025/8/8)

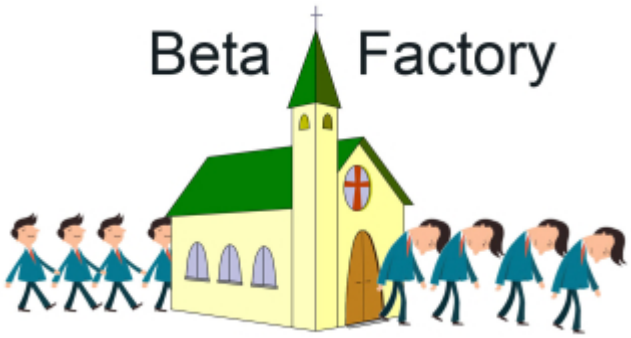
Biblical Masculinity vs Worldly Masculinity

Jack · 10 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Christian men desperately want to make this distinction, but is there any?

Readership: All; Men;
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misunderstood Models
Author's Note: This post contains some input from Lexet.
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

I posit that the last place on earth you will find 'Biblical Femininity' being practiced is in an American church. I would even troll Churchians a bit by saying they produce more tr@ns wimmin than the secular world. Why? Their women aren't being raised to be homemakers and mothers. They aren't being raised to be quiet, submissive, and respectful. They are loud, proud, obnoxious, and immodest. They dress like men, act like men, want to work like men, and want to compete with men.



At the opposite end of the inverted r@!nb0w spectrum, whenever there is talk about 'Biblical Masculinity', what this often refers to is the Chivalrous, emasculated, Purity Culture / virgin-in-waiting, stultified Beta male (which is a misnomer in itself). After all, Churchianity is a Beta Factory, so it makes sense that 'Biblical Masculinity' is all about adopting these traits and then attempting to survive the drought without the twin sins of skin pics and choking the pigeon.

This presents a crisis for both Christian men and Christian women: (1) stay with the clown show at your local church, remain alone, spank the monkey when it acts out of control, and comfort your broken ego by telling yourself that you're following God; or else (2) leave the clown show at your local church and go out into the secular clown world to find a masculine man or a feminine woman who befits God's natural order and is not like the other clowns.

I highly suspect that God is using this conundrum to separate the wheat from the chaff and oust those given over to the flesh. Insert dozens of OT references where singleness and barrenness are judgments on society, given by God to rebellious people.

We might suspect that the biggest problem single Christian women are now facing is how to sift through the riff raff and identify the men who talk like Christians and those who act like Christians. But the real problem they're facing is how to justify choosing Worldly Men over church boys and how to elicit Christian sympathy when they run into the problems associated with following the Worldly Life Script (e.g. sexual promiscuity, getting knocked up or else deleting babies, getting dumped and heartbroken, wasting their prime SMV years, etc.). Lately, dealing with any of these ramifications has become a walk in the park for them.

OTOH, the biggest problem single Christian men are now facing is how to make sense of their current singleness while holding the notion that a Christian woman will/should be attracted to 'Biblical Masculinity', however one might erroneously think of that, when it is quite apparent that women are strongly attracted to "Worldly Masculinity', and NOT church boys.

But wait a minute!

There is one line of argument that says Worldly Wimmin are naturally attracted to Worldly Masculinity, and godly, mature women are more interested in godly men. And if a worldly woman rejects a godly man because he is godly, then it is to his benefit. The trash takes itself out.

But what is a man to do when godly mature women are practically nonexistent, and those who claim to be godly and mature suddenly become not so godly and mature when Harley McBadboy strolls by?

Another line of reasoning argues that nature itself teaches us that most all attraction is necessarily of the flesh and there is no distinction between 'Worldly Masculinity' and so called 'Christian Masculinity', with respect to attraction. Therefore, in many ways, 'Biblical Masculinity' and 'Worldly Masculinity' are the same, but what makes it Christian or not is what a man does with himself. Here we begin to delineate significant differences in behaviors. Most notably, secular masculinity suggests that a man's value is primarily indicated by the women he can juice up, neatly quantified by how many, how often, and the SMV quality thereof; whereas Biblical masculinity and MGTOW are pretty much in agreement that men are what they make of themselves. The difference is that Biblical masculinity entails that women come along for the ride whereas MGTOW leaves women out.

The implications of these views are that secular men need to be shagging away early and often with any and every piece he can come down with; whereas MGTOWs and single Christian men should be improving themselves, building a domain, and leading their own life.

Philosophical / political specific views like Christian Nationalism, civilizationism, nihilism, and others fall somewhere in between and have varying nuances, like building / preserving the tribe, effective procreation, "The future belongs to those who show up", and others.

But once we start down this path, then the same area of confusion still arises — we expect worldly women should be attracted to 'Worldly Masculinity', and Christian women should be attracted to 'Biblical Masculinity' / 'godliness'.

And presto!

Now we are back to discussing how Masculine behaviors and traits are viewed and judged by women in an Evo Psych context, as if we are morally bound not to disappoint our betters.

When we start assigning social or sexual value to a man on this basis, it suggests that male seed is more valuable than other masculine qualities, like confidence, diligence, dominance, provision, purpose, etc. Or to be more precise, the LAMPS rich, Top SMV, Alpha Male seed — the kind that exudes buck confidence pheromones that autosomatically overwhelms women's moral agency in favor of her breeding instincts with just one whiff from 3 kilometers away on a rainy day, and can thereby induce women to breed like livestock and commit any and all forms of debased immorality in order to defile / sanctify herself unto the meat scepter of his lordship.

Ahh… Certainly, THIS is what 'Biblical Masculinity' is truly all about! The church and women have conspired to engage in a mass conspiracy to hide from men this vital knowledge of their own immense value down under! The family jewels!

But wait a minute!

This contradicts the notion that "eggs are expensive, sperm is cheap."

Moreover, defining manhood based on what women find attractive is a circular argument that devolves into analysis paralysis, and terminates in a genetic dead end. (This is the problem of induction.)

How long will we delude ourselves into thinking that there is a distinct difference between 'Biblical Masculinity' and 'Worldly Masculinity'?

When are we going to face the fact that what commonly passes for 'Biblical Masculinity' is a social construct of chivalrous converged Churchistanity, which is a whitewashed vehicle of the Feminine Imperative, and is in fact, not masculinity at all?

How hard will it be for Christian men to bite their knuckles and admit that 'Worldly Masculinity' is much closer to God's original design than 'Biblical Masculinity' — more than their piddly spiritual pride can muster?

The only point of 'Biblical Masculinity' that is truly biblical is a man pumping his pea shooter into his own heifer and keeping his d!ck out of crazy. So why must we build a whole paradigm of masculinity around this one point of wisdom? Instead, we should add this wisdom to the correct paradigm of masculinity.

Your gut will tell you which one is correct.

Related

- Dalrock: Don't blame Heartiste for the equation of Alpha with virtue. (2015/6/13)
- Dalrock: Are all women addicted to aloof jerks? (2017/5/1)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Looking at the Essentials (2020/6/12)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Christian Marriage Dilemma (2021/2/26)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Juxtaposing the Temporal and the Eternal (2021/4/26)

- Σ Frame (Jack): Answers to the Exit Questions for the Series on Masculinity (2021/7/2)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Feminine Christian Marriage Quadrilemma (2021/7/16)
- Truth and Tolerance: Godliness Is Not Attractive? (2021/8/10)
- Σ Frame (Jack): How is Godliness Attractive? (2021/9/1).
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Developing Masculinity (2021/12/6)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Jacob's Masculinity (2022/8/22)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Only Hunky Monks can find a Sanctified Marriage (2022/8/26)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: No, godliness is still not attractive (2023/4/21)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Self-Selection and Adverse Selection (2023/10/16)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Double Bind (2023/12/8)

On Sanctification

Jack · 12 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Love, marriage, and sex.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misunderstood Models
Length: 1,750 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Love, Marriage, Sex, and Sanctification

Outside of marriage, sex and romantic love inevitably lead to heartache, bitterness, and ultimately perdition. Marriage provides the context in which sex is confined to its many purposes and is thus honorable, and love can be preserved. Therefore, we say that marriage sanctifies the individuals sharing love and participating in sex.

But today, the world believes that romantic love provides the context in which sex is most consuming, ingratiating, and satisfying, and marriage is worthwhile. Therefore, it is assumed that romantic love is what sanctifies marriage and sex. Extramarital sex is acceptable if one is "in love" with one's paramour. Nuptial vows have been reduced to nothing more than a declaration of love for one another. When love evaporates, then it is logical to break up or divorce so that one is free to fall in love again. That is why vows are carelessly discarded on the basis of what people FEEL about the relationship.

St. Dalrock was perhaps the first to bring to our attention / awareness that this modern worship of aphrodite* is not only preeminent in Western culture but also in the converged church. In his post, Does romantic love sanctify married sex? (2018/11/20), Dalrock reveals that Pastor Tim Bayly's stance aligns with the cultural / worldly belief that romantic love is what sanctifies marriage and sex, while the Bible tells us it is marriage that sanctifies love and sex.

 Aphrodite (see image at right) is an ancient Greek goddess associated with love, lust, sex, beauty, pleasure, desire, fertility, passion, procreation, prosperity, and victory. She was also the patron goddess of pr0st!tutes. Her syncretized*

Roman goddess counterpart is Venus.

Here, Dalrock writes,

> "This isn't to say that romantic love in marriage is bad. To the contrary, it is truly wonderful! But it isn't sanctifying. It is marriage that sanctifies romantic love and sex, but in our modern rebellion we have twisted this around and assert that romantic love sanctifies marriage and sex.
>
> Pastor Bayly has much company in his assertion that romantic love sanctifies sex. This is the overwhelming consensus in the secular world, and is the moral basis for both g@y marriage and no fault divorce. Moreover, this perversion is the overwhelming consensus in the complementarian Christian world as well, even as they deny the logical conclusions of the perversion."

I am usually in full agreement with most all of Dalrock's main arguments, but I disagree with a couple parts of this essay.

Can G@y Marriage be Sanctified?

My first disagreement is merely a quibble or perhaps just a more precise explanation.

Dalrock said the idea that romantic love sanctifies sex is the moral basis for g@y marriage, but the mental gymnastics required to arrive at such a conclusion are more complex than this. It is true that g@ys think romantic love sanctifies sex, but this is not their moral basis for g@y marriage. Instead, they have used this idea to identify with the wider culture's idolatrous emphasis on 'love' and thereby gain popular acceptance and recognition of g@y marriage.

The reason they want marriage is to gain a sense of dignity and pseudo-morality, to use this legal status as an acceptable cover for their abominable activities, and to obtain the attached legal rights and social recognition.

G@y marriage is not a Christian relationship / Covenant marriage, and is therefore a misnomer that contains a moral contradiction. But if we allow for this redefinition of 'marriage' for the sake of discussion, then it is more (but not explicitly) accurate to say that g@y marriage is what sanctifies the g@y individuals sharing love and participating in sex, which is the correct line of reasoning concerning marriage in general. Interestingly, this is closer to the Biblical ideal than that of our rebellious culture's, so the g@y community is countercultural in this regard. It is amazing to think that g@ys are more Biblical about the purpose of marriage than the converged church (e.g. Bayly, et al.).

But when g@ys want to divorce, they'll revert to the cultural 'love' programming to explain their motivations and to justify it.

What is "Good Sex"?

My second disagreement is more significant.

Dalrock's post cited Pastor Tim Bayly's post on Warhorn media, Authority and submission: muscles needing exercise (2018/11/17). In this essay, Dalrock compared Bayly's approach to Milton's, and shows that they both agree that romantic love sanctifies sex. Dalrock compares this view to St. Augustine's and St. Jerome's shared agreement that passionate sex in marriage was disgraceful.

Dalrock wrote,

> "Both sets of teachings are wrong, and you won't find them in the Bible:
>
> 1. That sex with passion in marriage is a sin. (Jerome and Augustine)
> 2. That sex without romantic passion in marriage is a sin. (Milton and Bayly)

I objected to this post because Dalrock used the words, (1) "with passion", (2) "without… passion", and (3) "in marriage", to make it appear as though these two views (1) are the diametric opposite, and (2) both pertain to marriage. But in fact, they are not and do not, respectively. They are both very objective discussions of what makes sex "good" under two different contexts.

Milton and Bayly's concept of a lackluster marriage.

The first issue of confusion revolves around the context of "good sex" and what this entails. I dissected this question before in The Mosh Pit of Sex Analysists (2019/3/24). Some relevant exerpts have been updated here in blue text.

I was not alone in this objection. David Gudeman at Brain Legions criticized Dalrock's arguments in his post, Sex and the Straw Man — an Exercise in Logic (2019/2/10). Gudeman also identified Dalrock's error in reference to Bayly's nebulous concept of "good sex", but then he got sidetracked in the analysis.

We can only assume that "good" means deeply gratifying, and not the other meaning of moral good. This would agree with Dalrock's running point that brutish passion makes sex good. See Dalrock: Like a rutting buck (2016/12/21).

For example, some men might say spinning plates with BPDs is "good sex", while others would say marital bliss is "good sex". (We could add other perverse forms of "good sex" to the list, again depending on the context and one's spiritual constitution. PS: Thedeti has added 3 more female views of "good sex" in the comments below.)

To spell this out in scientific detail…

1. PUA Spinning Plates = "good sex" = brutish passion absent of love (c.f. Jerome and Augustine)
2. Marital Bliss = "good sex" = Romantic Love (Milton and Bayly)

Jerome and Augustine's concept of brutish passion.

To edit Dalrock's points for the sake of accuracy, these two views could be better represented as follows.

1. That extramarital sex with brutish passion is absent of love. (c.f. Jerome and Augustine)
2. That sex without romantic love in marriage is emotionally unfulfilling. (Milton and Bayly)

Moving on, the second area of confusion is whether both arguments truthfully pertain to marriage.

Both Jerome and Augustine drew these conclusions after their conversion and in the context of marriage (which Dalrock accurately conveys). However, both men's marriages followed years of sexual promiscuity. Although this is speculation, I tend to believe their sexual sins before conversion had corrupted their appreciation of all sexual relations, such that they (1) had grown accustomed to associating brutish sexual passion with a lack of love for women (including their wives), and (2) attached the resultant guilt to the act of sex, even within the context of their marriages (or perhaps any context as suggested in their writings).

Defilement = Sanctification?

Many pastors and authors have committed a significant malfeasance surrounding their conceptualization of sanctification, in that they did not recognize all the following truths about sanctification.

1. Sanctification (and/or defilement) is determined by the context within which sex, marriage, etc. occurs.
2. Many things contribute towards sanctification, including commitment, marriage, self-sacrificial love, romantic love, passionate sex, having children, and perhaps others.
3. The things that contribute towards one's sanctification within marriage are also the same things that can contribute to one's defilement outside of marriage. For example, sex sanctifies a wife to her husband, but if she were to have sex with another man, then this act of sex would make her defiled. A woman bearing a child would sanctify her in the context of her marriage to the father of the child and only in this context; whereas having a child out of wedlock renders her defiled in the eyes of other men seeking marriage.
4. Combining points (2) and (3), however "good sex" might be defined by each individual with respect to context, the shared denominator is that the qualities that make sex "good" are the same qualities that characterize / reinforce either perdition (postulate 1 in the previous section) or sanctification (postulate 2).
5. Moreover, sanctification (or perdition) is a state that is dependent on the context. But Dalrock, Bayly, et al. have described sanctification as a quality, instead of a state.
6. It is PEOPLE (souls) who are in a sanctified or defiled state; NOT romantic love, sex, contractual marriage, g@y marriage, etc. as these pastors and authors have assumed.

Case Study — Love with No Make-Up Sex

I found an old comment from Derek L. Ramsey that got hung up in the moderation folder. It's unfortunate that it was excluded from the discussion because he makes a couple noteworthy points of discernment on the place and importance of make-up sex.

Derek denied ever having make-up sex with his wife. He wrote,

> "Sex doesn't sanctify the relationship. As Dalrock said in his post, Does romantic love sanctify married sex? (2018/11/20)."
>
> "Make-up sex is a fundamentally defective strategy. It puts the cart before the horse. The notion that sex can repair something that is broken in the relationship is backwards. It is a trendy psychological concept, sure, but it isn't Christian.
>
> "If we had sex to cover over disagreements, it would encourage a false sense of serenity. That's not ideal. If all we needed was to have sex to behave properly to each other or to forgive each other, that's not ideal either, nor is it biblical."

Amazingly, Derek has recognized that the brutish passion that is characteristic of make up sex is absent of romantic love after a conflict (c.f. Jerome and Augustine), and that passionate sex without this romantic love is emotionally unfulfilling, nor does it fulfill the purpose of marriage, and thus, it is dishonorable and unbiblical (c.f. Milton and Bayly). He has miraculously juxtaposed and condensed Jerome, Augustine, Milton, and Bayly, and has proven Dalrock wrong IRL!

Another explanation is that Derek and his wife are both over the age of 70, have been married for over 50 years, and haven't had sex in 10.

Related

- Eternity Matters: Churchgoers Who Support "Same-Sex Marriage" are Indistinguishable from the World (2024/4/12)

Rollo Tomassi's Concepts of 'Love'

Jack · 15 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Sifting through the language and sorting out the truth.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misunderstood Models
Length: 3,200 words
Reading Time: 18 minutes

Foundations

To kickstart our discussion here, I'll quote a passage from Rollo's essay, Men in Love (2012/9/10), which I believe is the main focus of ArchAngel's post, Lovebreaker (2024/3/20).

> "Men want to believe that they can be happy, and sexually satisfied, and appreciated, and loved, and respected by a woman for who he is. It is men who are the real romantics, not women, but it is the grand design of hypergamy that men believe it is women who are the romantic ones.
>
> Hypergamy, by its nature, defines love for women in opportunistic terms, leaving men as the only objective arbiters of what love is for themselves. So yes, men can't tell when a woman doesn't love them, because they want to believe women can love them in the ways they think they could."
>
> The Rational Male: Men in Love (2012/9/10)

This paradigm is often speed referenced in the phrase, "Men love idealistically, women love opportunistically."

Is it 'real love' or 'romantic love'?
For the readers' convenience, here's a short list of Rollo's most important essays about 'love'. There are others but this will probably suffice for our discussion.

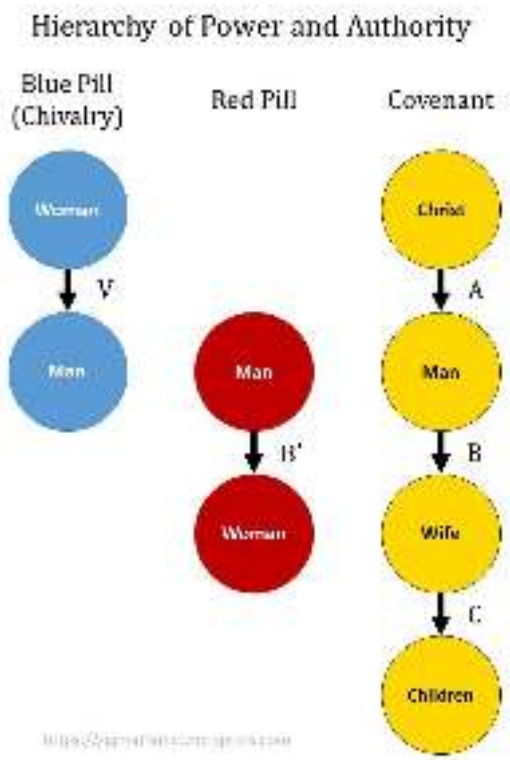
- The Rational Male: The True Romantics (2011/8/26)

- The Rational Male: Women in Love (2011/12/27)
- The Rational Male: Men in Love (2012/9/10)
- The Rational Male: Of Love and War (2012/9/11)
- The Rational Male: Love Story (2013/10/8)
- The Rational Male: The Burden of Performance (2014/9/23)
- The Rational Male: Commodifying Love (2015/1/2)
- The Rational Male: The Love Experience (2015/1/5)
- The Rational Male: Managing Expectations (2015/4/14)
- The Rational Male: Deep Conversion (2016/11/11)
- The Rational Male: Love and Ambition (2018/7/23)

Notes

1. Rollo is describing 'romantic love' and the dynamics of carnal attraction, not Christian love.
2. Rollo defines Intersexual Hierarchies as the basis for romantic love, having the structural hierarchy of Man > Woman > Children. (See next image.)

Dalrock's Assessment



Also relevant, Dalrock elucidated how the preeminence of 'romantic love', as described by Rollo, has been elevated to an idol that has replaced Christian morality.

- Dalrock: Lovestruck (2013/4/15)
- Dalrock: But we were in love! (2013/4/18)
- Dalrock: Who loves best? (2013/12/27)

In the last post, Dalrock discusses how Rollo's description of women in love isn't a problem of a deficiency inherent to women, but a problem of men's unrealistic expectations.

He wrote,

> "Rollo is discussing the mis-set and unrealistic expectations of men. This isn't a problem of a deficiency inherent to women, but a problem of men's unrealistic expectations. […] One of Rollo's core areas of focus is disabusing men of their foolish expectations regarding women and romantic love; and here Rollo is right as well. Romantic love is truly wonderful in the appropriate context, but we have elevated it beyond all sanity. Modern men now expect women to experience romantic love (desire) for them in an unconditional, selfless form. This is profoundly foolish, because this is not the nature of romantic love / desire. As Rollo regularly reminds us, you can't negotiate desire."
>
> Dalrock: Who loves best? (2013/12/27)

IOW, men's ideation of love is a psychological projection of desire.

ArchAngel and Jack's Assessment

ArchAngel's post, Lovebreaker (2024/3/20), addresses the continuing confusion surrounding Tomassi's model, in which he proposed that Tomassi invented a new sense of the word 'love' that isn't love at all.

It is true that 'love' is a misnomer. Rollo's thesis would be better described as a comparison of men's and women's psychological dispositions, motivations, and expectations that directly affect intersexual dynamics. But that's rather awkward, technical, and wordy, and not as catchy as calling it 'love'.

In another sense, the psychological metadynamics that Rollo describes truly represent what most secular people believe about 'romantic love', which taps into the public obsession with gynocentric Aphroditism and the idolatry of 'romantic love'. In this view, Rollo has put into words the disappointments and frustrations that many men have experienced and felt with what is called 'romantic love'.

Is it 'real love' or 'romantic love'?

What ArchAngel calls an 'Interpretation Game' is a quality of philosophy that is unavoidable if one is to be entirely objective in analyzing data and using a theoretical model. At some point, meaning and morality must be assigned (and this is the 'interpretation'), and this is usually done at the grassroots individual level. This is precisely why men must be careful about constructing and interpreting models.

ArchAngel concluded that Tomassi's concepts of love do not describe anything real. This is true of course, because of the inductive nature of modeling. When a model is implemented, whatever is then revealed is seen through the lens of that model. The benefit is that something of a framework is revealed. Without the aid of a model, nothing is revealed at all and no greater knowledge can be obtained. How well this information truly reflects what is real determines the power, value, and applicability of the model. Furthermore, the perceived accuracy of the model will be different for each man, as every man has different life experiences.

Meta

In response to ArchAngel's post, RPA wrote,

> "I'd like to know exactly what Rollo's definition of female love is and how he changed it from the male version. I didn't see this in the essay and I'm not buying that RT is wrong without a closer look at what he actually wrote.
>
> The essay would benefit from laying out RT's thoughts and definitions…"

Initially, I shared the same complaint about ArchAngel's post.

Normally, this approach would be considered logically inadequate — a failure to properly present an argument to be discussed. However, in writing Lovebreaker (2024/3/20), ArchAngel intentionally omitted Rollo's arguments — partly because he wanted to present an opposing argument that would be received without bias, and partly because he wanted to see what would spill out in the comments. This stratagem revealed all the confusion that surrounds this model. In effect, by omitting a definition of love from his essay, ArchAngel motivated readers to think more critically about Rollo's model and to offer their own views about how their concept of love differs from Rollo's. Indeed, we did see a lot of confusion and misunderstanding happening in real-time in the comments under this post.

Is it 'real love' or 'romantic love'?

Summary of the History

Rollo Tomassi's generalized concept of romantic love in a sexually competitive transaction has stirred up much confusion and controversy over the concept of 'love'.

Dalrock settled the issue with his post, Who loves best?, and Rollo has agreed with Dalrock's assessment in many of his subsequent posts.

Since then, the Christian Manosphere has introduced a superior model that replaces Rollo's model — namely the

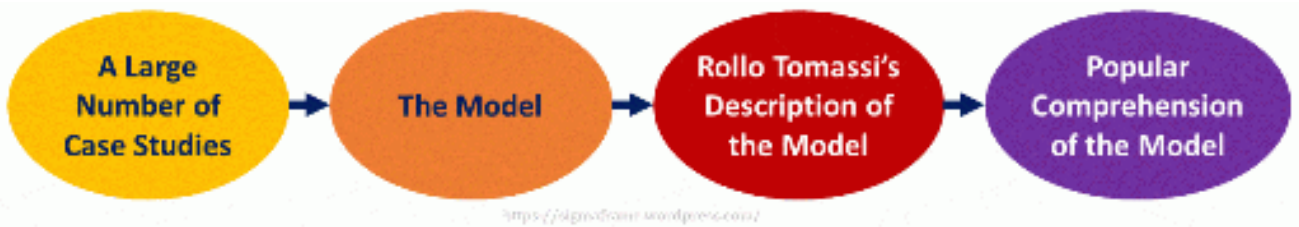
Headship model using the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy (Ephesians 5:22-33). (See preceding image.)

Nevertheless, Tomassi's concepts of romantic love have continued to rock the Manosphere.

Analysis

Here, I'll pick apart Rollo Tomassi's Concepts of 'Love' as a case study of how Red Pill mythos is misunderstood. In doing so, I'll attempt to offer readers a full unabridged assessment, not only of Rollo's writings about 'love', but more to the point, the underlying model that his writings convey and how readers might misinterpret it. In doing so, hopefully it will become apparent to readers how writings such as these are misunderstood.

The general process of data collection, model formation, and knowledge dissemination is depicted in the following graph.



There are 5 aspects that must be examined here.

1. The basic structure of the model
2. The context of the model
3. The accuracy of the model
4. Tomassi's description of the model, and the terminology used.
5. The popular comprehension of the model

It is easy to assume that this is an evo psych model, since Rollo peppers his descriptions with evo psych applications. However, it will be shown that this is essentially an economic model. It will also be evident that Rollo plays fast and loose with terminology, i.e. 'love', to appeal to his audience's false notions about 'love'.

1. The Basic Structure of the Underlying Model

This model assumes men are providers and women are consumers* (according to an economic model). Thus, men see themselves as hopeful investors, which Rollo smoothly terms 'idealistic', and women are viewed as being considerably less altruistic and less reliable beneficiaries, or as he says, 'opportunistic'. This is not to say that men are never opportunistic (e.g. taking that ONS on offer) or that women are not idealistic (re: solipsism), but that there is a strong pattern of behavior, like saying men are rational and women are emotional, or that men have more moral agency than women.

This model is a juxtaposition of both Biblical and Worldly paradigms. It is Biblical in its assumption that men are providers and women are consumers, but it is Worldly in its assumption that women are free agents, executive decision-makers, and have no binding responsibilities to the men with whom they are in a relationship. It is also Worldly in the sense that 'love' is viewed as transactional, and the methods of attaining 'love' are immoral (to be discussed in more detail in another section below).

Rollo's exploration of this model explains why men willingly sacrifice themselves for a female proxy of their fantasies, as well as women's self-serving behaviors like keeping a bevy of beta orbiters, free drinks and dinners deceptively called 'dates', settling for a man in marriage and then divorce gr@ping him, and so on.

2. The Context of the Model

In general, this applies to all men, high and low SMV alike. The obvious application is for the relationships women have with men they perceive to be ‘under’ them, as shown in this image.

But it also applies to high SMV men as well. If the woman happens to esteem and respect the man (men represented by the blue apex in the image), then it is because the man has certain traits that men might consider superficial but women are strongly attracted to, specifically traits that generate limerence / Tingles. But when this wears off (and it always does), then her default setting is to salvage / take what she can from the relationship and come out ahead of him if at all possible, without any consideration at all for his welfare.

All in all, men experience this as women being ‘opportunistic’ because of the investment costs involved — all of which are spent on or transferred to the woman.

In summary, although the basic hierarchical structure in this model is sound, IRL, the hierarchical structure is often flipped to women’s advantage and doesn’t play out the way men expect.

3. The Accuracy of the Model

The characterization accurately reflects reality within the context studied, given some degree of individual variance.

Many men, but of course not all, can find evidence in their experiences with women that suggests this model is more or less valid for them. I mean, how many “free dinner” dates followed by ghostings does it take for a man to recognize this? How many divorce gr@pes? The sooner a man recognizes this, the better.

For a long time (since women’s liberation, but maybe forever), men have been disappointed with women because they haven’t received a good return on their sociosexual investments. But over the last decade or two, women have been continuing to take men’s investiture but have failed to deliver anything in return. Hence why we hear women being described as divorce thieves, entitled princesses, leeches, parasites, etc. Net losses have accrued so regularly and predictably that men have decided to pull out of the venture en masse. All this feeds into Rollo’s description of women being ‘opportunistic’.

Is it 'real love' or 'romantic love'?

4. Rollo Tomassi's Description of the Model

Rollo has used a few key words euphemistically and parabolically. This is confusing if these words are assigned a denotative or doctrinal definition, but are quite clear if they are interpreted as coded speech. Here I'll attempt to define and explain some of this code.

"Opportunistic"

First of all, the commonly used catchphrase, "women love opportunistically", misrepresents the basic model discussed above which Rollo's writings address. It would be more accurate (to both the model and to certain contexts of reality) to say that women enter into relationships for how it makes them feeel and for what they can get out of it, and NOT because they truly love the man himself.

A woman who genuinely loves / respects / esteems / honors the man in her life would clearly be an exception to this model, and in this rare case, the model is no longer valid. However much a man may desire this type of woman, unicorns are so rare that for most purposes this possibility can be dismissed as an outlier. If a man does indeed have a unicorn, this does not invalidate the model, but rather indicates how much favor and grace he has received from the Lord.

As the richest and wisest man in the world (during his day and age) once said,

> One man among a thousand I have found,
> But a woman among all these I have not found.
>
> Ecclesiastes 7:28 (NKJV)

It is guesstimated that approximately one in ten thousand women are unicorns (i.e. NOT 'opportunistic').

Is it ‘real love’ or ‘romantic love’?

Projected “Love”

The basic gender mismatch that Rollo addresses is that different things make men and women feel loved. (A man feels loved when a woman respects him and submits sexually to him. A woman feels loved when she is humbled by an attractive and/or dominant man.*) So here, ‘love’ is better understood as code for ‘felt love’.

Rollo refers to the dynamics of this model as ‘love’ (or ‘felt love’) because that is what men are expecting out of a relationship and they are disappointed to find that women do not experience love in the same way, and therefore they do not share the same expectations. To be more precise, men are expecting an affectionate sexualized relationship, but they’ll call this ‘love’ because sex is what makes men feel acutely loved.

Upon realizing this difference, it is not uncommon for men to lament this as an existential human tragedy, or think that “God made a mistake”, etc. But in fact, we should rejoice in this gender difference, because this is exactly what creates the conditions in which a man and a woman can show real genuine love to each other. That is, men and women must make a dedicated effort to look beyond their own desires, consider the needs of the other, and then operate outside their comfort zones in order to make the other feel loved. The real lament is that there are so many men and women who fail to do so for whatever reason, and that we all suffer as a result of neglecting this love.

 Rollo uses an evo psych analogy to make this distinction, but even without this, the basic concept holds true and can be expressed using other types of models.*

Is it ‘real love’ or ‘romantic love’?

Euphemistic “Love”

This difference in how men and women experience love leads to another point of confusion. Rollo uses the word ‘love’ euphemistically. Rollo doesn’t mention that his paradigm of ‘love’ is actually ‘felt love’ (which would appear wimpy) or that it is not real love, but instead leaves that up to the readers’ interpretation. Astute readers might recognize this incongruency and call this a lie of omission (Oscar), or a lie of substitution (ArchAngel), but more astute readers will recognize that he is speaking the soul language of a specific audience of men who are frustrated with ‘felt love’. You see, to the average male reader, Rollo’s thesis resonates as true, largely because men are painfully unloved* (in the true sense of love), and are therefore blinded by their own desire for ‘love’, using whatever meaning this word might have for him.

All this is blithely referred to as romantic ‘love’ because this is how participants in the secular SMP get their sociosexual itches scratched. Yes, to the emotionally needy, spiritually immature, secular person, this is called ‘love’.

 On a side note, it is my belief that there is an epidemic of unloved men right now, primarily because they had feminist mothers who never genuinely loved them or their fathers, and this is compounded by the present condemnation and ostracization of men due to cultural feminism.*

Is it ‘real love’ or ‘romantic love’?

5. Popular Comprehension of the Model

Overall, Rollo’s thesis is uniquely a male perspective that has a LOT of male-specific subtext that is glossed over, which is not surprising at all.

The popular comprehension of the model through Rollo’s interpretation is invariably read through the twin lenses of meaning and morals, although this almost always goes unstated, and is often processed subconsciously by the audience.

It is difficult for some readers to accept that Rollo’s paradigm of “Men love idealistically, women love opportunistically” is a greatly simplified model of worldly attachment that many men falsely believe to be ‘love’. Readers become confused as to whether love is opportunistic, or women are opportunistic, or whether men are equally opportunistic as women. Although there is evidence for these views to be true, all of these viewpoints stray from the basic model and therefore create confusion. Some readers think that Rollo was redefining love, or that he was talking trash about agape love. No, Rollo’s concept of ‘love’ is just a theoretical model that describes one prevalent phenomenon that has occurred in the West, and it is conveyed in colloquial language native to Westerners.

Is it ‘real love’ or ‘romantic love’?
Some readers have pointed out that Rollo’s concept of ‘love’ is not real love (which is true), but they could not explain how or why very clearly. It is because men and women using each other to achieve ‘love’ (i.e. ‘felt love’) is immoral. That is, treating another person as a means to an end, rather than an end in itself constitutes immorality, according to Kant’s Categorical Imperative. In this case, men use women to get female companionship and sex, and women use men for all kinds of purposes — basically anything she wants that she is able to extract from a man — and men for the most part are quite willing to give it all up in the hope of a profitable exchange. Both positions are immoral.

The inherent immorality of these social conventions is never explicitly mentioned because these sorts of social transactions are assumed to be the social norm, and to question them would expose one as being clueless … or Christian.

Without going into all the tedious details regarding morality (a subject which he categorically avoids in order to remain objective), Rollo assumes men are providers and women are consumers (according to an economic model). Rollo spins his description of the model to appeal to his audience — disgruntled, ‘love’ starved creditors (men), and jumps to the conclusion: Men are typically the more altruistic sex and women the more self-centered sex in this endeavor. Not only is this true to life, it is also Biblical, according to the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife analogy.

In one sense, it is morally correct to speak to men where they are. It is also morally correct to present the true / Biblical situation. The inherent immorality is in the SMP itself and is not misrepresented in the model nor Rollo’s conveyance of the model. The moral shortcoming in Rollo’s conveyance of the model of an immoral SMP is that he affirms men’s participation in the immorality by never calling it out as immoral. Of course, if he did so, he would lose all his idolatrous and/or lovelorn readers, partly because there is no other viable option in a debased feminist culture.

Related

- Σ Frame: Laying out Expectations (2022/10/20)
- Σ Frame: Rollo Tomassi on Female Agency (2022/11/4)

- Σ Frame: What we've learned about Female Agency (2022/12/20)
- Σ Frame: Expectations (for LTRs) (2023/1/20)
- Σ Frame: The Godfather undermines Fatherhood. (2023/7/10)
- Σ Frame: Who will Take Care of Men? (2023/8/2)
- Σ Frame: The Essence of the Black Pill (2023/8/11)
- Σ Frame: Ideal Women Don't Exist (2023/9/23)

Marital Discipline, according to the New Evangelical Sharkly Translation (NEST)

Jack · 17 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Thou shalt love and obey thy lord and master, with all thy body, heart, mind, and soul!

Readership: Christian Men with a sense of humor.
Reader's Note: This post may be offensive to liberal or feminist readers. Links to the corresponding scripture references (ESV) are provided.
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Forsooth, it hath been said, "Toxic is ye olde Manosphere." Yea, verily I saith, toxic it is not, but intoxicating masculinity. But only to them who are duly trained in the righteousness thereof.

Hearken ye to that which the scriptures saith, and thy union shall henceforth be blessed.

Doctrine

Romans 13:1-4 (NEST)

Let every wife be subject to the authority of her husband. For there is no authority except from God, and those that exist have been instituted by God. Therefore, whoever resists his authority resists what God has appointed, and those who resist will incur judgment. For husbands are not a terror to wives of good conduct, but to bad. Would you have no fear of the one who is in authority? Then do what is good, and you will receive his approval, for he is God's servant for thy good. But if you do wrong, be afraid, for he does not bear testes in vain. For he is the servant of God, an avenger who carries out God's wrath on the wrongdoer.

1 Peter 3:1-6 (NEST)

[1] Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives;

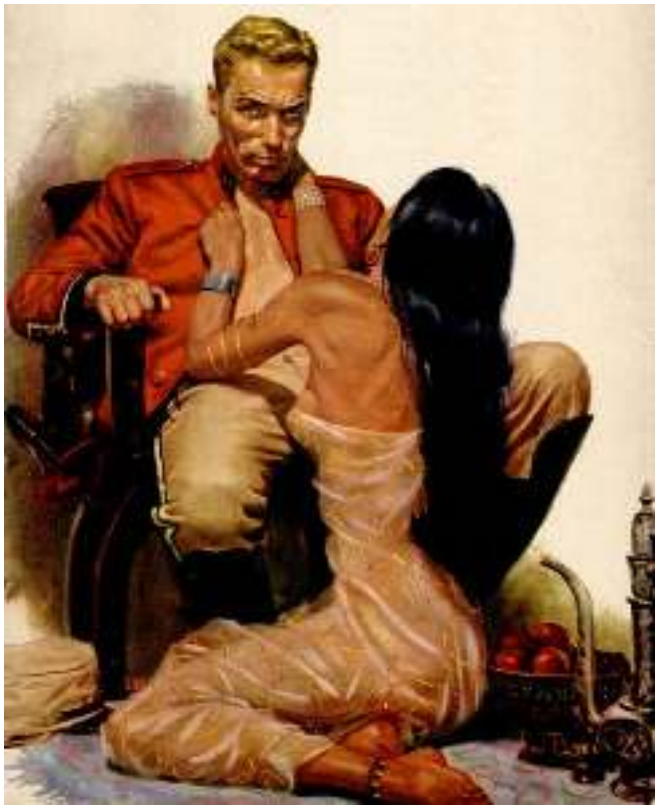
[2] While they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear.
[3] Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel;
[4] But rather that of taking these off, such to capture thy husband's heart and enrapture him with the glorious light of thy nakedness. Let it be the hidden desire of your heart to be humbled only by him, in that which is corruptible outside marriage, but eternally holy within, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God and man of great price.
[5] For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned and disrobed themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands:
[6] Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are sore afraid with sheer amazement.

Reproof

Psalm 141:5 (NEST)

The submissive wife shall say, "Let my righteous lord and master strike me with his manhood — it is a kindness; let him spunk me daily — it is his seed oil for my head; let my bowed head not refuse it." Yet his prayer is continually against her evil deeds.



Proverbs 10:13 (NEST)

On the lips of him that hath understanding, wisdom is found; but a ramrod is for the back end of her that is void of good sense.

Proverbs 26:3 (NEST)

A whip for the kine, a bridle for the ass, and a ramrod for the wife's bare back end.

Proverbs 29:15 (NEST)

The ramrod and reframe give wisdom, but a wife left to her own devices bringeth shame and reproach to her lord and master.

Proverbs 29:17 (NEST)

Correct thy wife, and she shall give thee rest; yea, she shall give delight unto thy heart and soul.

Colossians 3:21 (NEST)

Husbands, thou shalt provoke thy wives' indignation and mock them in response, lest they wax insecure and insufferable.

Correction

Proverbs 13:24 (NEST)

He that spareth his ramrod hateth his wife; but he that loveth her is diligent to chasteneth her with the raptures of affection.

Proverbs 20:30 (NEST)

Blows that excite cleanse away evil; strokes make clean the innermost parts.

Proverbs 22:15 (NEST)

Folly is bound up in the heart of a woman, but the reciprocating ramrod of correction shall drive it far from her.

Proverbs 23:13-14 (NEST)

Withhold not thy discipline from a wife; for if thou strike her with thy ramrod, she shall not stray, but shalt increase in her desire towards thee, and thou shalt deliver her soul from lust.

Hebrews 12:9-11 (NEST)

Besides this, wives have had earthly fathers who disciplined them and they learned to respect them. Shall she not much more be subject to her earthly husband and live? For their fathers disciplined them for a short time as it seemed best to them, but her husband disciplines her for her own good, that she may reflect his holiness. For the moment all discipline seems painful rather than pleasant, but later it yields the peaceful fruit of righteousness to those who have been trained by it.

Training in Righteousness

Proverbs 22:6 (NEST)

Train up a daughter in the way she should obey; and even when she is married, she will not depart from it.

Ephesians 6:1 (NEST)

Wives, obey your husbands as thy lord and master, for this is right.

Ephesians 6:4 (NEST)

And ye husbands, indulge not thy wives' angst and stool examinations, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of their lord and master.

Colossians 3:20 (NEST)

Wives, obey thy husbands in everything, for this pleases thy lord and master.

Notes

In case readers haven't realized, this post is intended as satire. However, certain aspects do ring true. Why? It is because the NEST combines all forms of masculine authority, including, Gentile Authority, Genuine Authority, Headship Authority, and Sexual Authority. (It is assumed that the husband is a Tingle-inducing high SMV man.)

All in good humor, no offense is intended to brother Sharkly.

Related

- Σ Frame: Discipline in Marriage [Page of Links]
- Σ Frame: 50 Shades of Discipline in Marriage (2017/1/25)
- Σ Frame: 13 Disciplines in Dealing with Delectable Daughters (2018/1/29)
- Σ Frame: Disciplined, Submissive, Happy Wives (2018/2/15)
- Σ Frame: Authoritative Love, Marital Discipline, and BDSM (2019/3/15)
- Σ Frame: The Dominatrix Conversation (2020/7/6)
- Σ Frame: Imposing Masculine Presence (2022/6/10)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Delusion of the Good (2022/8/19)

How to be Happy, No, Really

Jack · 19 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Chicks won't make you happy, dude.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misunderstood Models
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

> [46] So continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, they ate their food with gladness and simplicity of heart, [47] praising God and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily those who were being saved.
>
> Acts 2:46-47 (NKJV)

Introduction

The "pursuit of happiness" is wildly overrated. By making happiness a top priority, western society has paradoxically ensured there will be less of it.

This is yet another perspicuous problem with The Red Pill. The secular Manosphere flatly assumes that if a man can get his inner Game down pat, and his problems with women sorted out, and get to the point where he's laying pipe on the regular, then, and ONLY then, he will be 'happy'. This assumption is seldom put forth explicitly; it's more of a software program that's always running in the background of men's minds. But it is giant!

Gentlemen, I shouldn't have to say this, but these things are but a candied maraschino cherry on top of the cake of a life well lived. It is a vain effort to pursue these things without first attaining the cake. Many men don't even have a fork or a plate, much less three to spin.

After men figure this out, The Black Pill looms large. Angst, depression, desperation, frustration, and su!c!de continue unabated among men. Hence, the challenge of transcending the abyss.

The Happiness of Knowing God

Although the problem of discontentment and unhappiness is a real concern, there is no reason why men should languish helplessly in its grip.

Anyone who would like to be more happy than you presently are should read this article.

Christian Publishing House (Edward D. Andrews): The Bible as the Source of Happiness – Spiritual Joy in God's Word (2024/4/17)

This article lists several sources of true happiness,* listed here.

1. Foundation of Joy in Divine Relationship (knowing and trusting God)
2. Joy Through Obedience and Trust
3. Spiritual Contentment in All Circumstances
4. Wisdom and Peace as Sources of Happiness
5. Comfort and Hope in Trials
6. Fellowship and Communal Joy
7. Nurturing Gratitude and Generosity
8. Pursuing Righteousness and Justice
9. Finding Joy in God's Creation
10. Restoring Relationships Through Forgiveness
11. Anchoring Hope in Eternal Promises

 Perhaps it would be more theologically correct to call this 'joy', rather than 'happiness'.*

The Happiness of Fellowship

In one section on Fellowship and Communal Joy, E. D. Andrews writes,

> "The communal aspects of biblical teachings also promote happiness through fellowship and shared faith. Acts 2:46-47 describes the early Christian community:
>
> > "Every day they continued to meet together in the temple courts. They broke bread in their homes and ate together with glad and sincere hearts, praising God and enjoying the favor of all the people."
>
> "The joy of this fellowship, founded on communal worship and mutual care, illustrates how shared spiritual life contributes to collective and individual happiness."

Yes. True joy is found in sharing intimacy with others, but not just anyone mind you — only those who share one's faith and values and in whom one can trust and be humble.

It is so simple, but yet so hard to find.

Men's Unhappiness

In fact, this "happiness through fellowship and shared faith" is what most men are missing. Church is supposed to do this. Marriage is supposed to provide this. But from most accounts we've heard around here, it doesn't. The Red Pill helps, but it's not anywhere near enough. Even something as simple as calling your Dad or cousin would fulfill this purpose better than your church or GF / wife does.

Adam Piggott told us the sad story of a young man who got everything he wanted but was still unhappy — a cabin in the woods, a girlfriend, some dogs, and his dream job of making videos for internet consumption. The reason, of course, is that he had no recognition of God, no larger purpose beyond his own interests, and no one with whom to convene his purpose IRL. Sorry, the internet doesn't count, fellas.

Men who refuse to consider checking out or going off-grid to be an option are engaging in gaming clubs, gym memberships, sports activities, and online forums (including sites like Σ Frame and Spawny's Space) to fulfill their needs for confession and fellowship. Going to college is pricey and a mixed bag as far as fellowship. Personally, I found more genuine fellowship with foreign students while I was in grad school. There was a time when men would go to bars and dance halls for this, but not anymore because there are too many draining women there. The problem is, most of these social interactions don't provide shared faith and Christian values. OTOH, fewer men are looking for faith connections any more, unfortunately.

Women's Unhappiness

Being herd creatures, we might guess that women don't have any problem in this arena. But that is patently false. In general, women get along with other women even worse than they get along with men. All their smiles and smooth words are a false front that hides their envy and social insecurities.

Women are especially susceptible to loneliness and unhappiness as they do not have a strong innate sense of agency, duty, honor, or responsibility. All the traditional feminine roles of helping a man, keeping a home, raising children, etc. are intended to fill this gap. Left to pursue what they want, they will rarely get what they need which is to submit to a man and become a part of his mission. They will inevitably become unhaaapy as their trivial pursuits (e.g. attention-seeking, careers, carousel, education, etc.) fail to replicate the fulfillment of a meaningful life.

Epilogue

The basic recipe for happiness is the fear / knowledge of God, activity, purpose, and fellowship. You'll need all four.

Happiness without God or purpose is fleeting and shallow. Happiness without meaningful fellowship is hollow. Happiness without activity is laziness or worse. The state of Flow seems to be intrinsically linked with our sense of happiness. Go through Andrew's list and check yourself to see what you're missing. (Diligent readers will be clicking on those links!)

If you look for happiness but neglect any of these four disciplines, then you'll never find it. But if you find an activity that you feel passionately about, something that glorifies God in some way, and you can share that activity with others, then you're on the right track to find happiness. Just look for others who share your faith and values along the way.

And when you find it, the last thing you'll be thinking about is your own happiness. This is NOT a coincidence gentlemen. Put that in your pipe and smoke it.

Related

- Adam Piggott: The key to a happy life is self-control. (2016/5/3)
- Adam Piggott: Stop trying to be happy all of the time. (2017/1/30)
- Adam Piggott: Happy wife, happy life? (2017/8/21)
- Σ Frame: Happy Wife, Happy Life (2017/10/20)
- Σ Frame: Wisdom, Spiritual Efficiency, and Flow (2018/1/26)
- Σ Frame: My Unhappiness Is Your Fault! (2018/6/3)
- Adam Piggott: The strange and dangerous cult of happiness. (2018/11/4)
- Adam Piggott: Deriving all your value from a girl. (2019/8/1)
- Adam Piggott: Deriving your value from a girl. (2019/7/19)
- Σ Frame: The Path to Contentment (2023/1/18)
- Σ Frame: The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Pursuit of Happyness (2023/7/3)
- Σ Frame: Good Relationships are Chosen and Developed, NOT “Found” by Chance (2023/10/9)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Boundaries (2024/1/31)

Paradigms of Faith

Jack · 22 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

How much is one man's view truly applicable to others?

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misunderstood Models
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

The previous post, How to be Happy, No, Really (2024/4/19), discussed how the secular Red Pill subtly promises men the eternal bliss of sexual humility in the arms of an endless series of paramours.

Here is another problem that is closely related to this. It concerns the nature of a man's role of authority over his own life, over women, and the place of humility and love in apprehending masculinity and truth.

This issue recently came to a head in a volley between Giuseppe Filotto and Adam Piggott.

Image from Adam Piggott's blog, Pushing Rubber Downhill.

The Filotto Piggott Debate

Posts are listed here followed by Jack's notes.

1. Giuseppe Filotto: On the most important aspect of life (2024/3/29)
2. Adam Piggott: I can't wait to go to your funeral knowing I could've changed that outcome (2024/3/30)
3. Giuseppe Filotto: Daddy-itis (2024/4/13)
4. Giuseppe Filotto: Don't despair young man (2024/4/13)
5. Adam Piggott: Man Pining for Chick to Like Him (2024/4/16)

6. Giuseppe Filotto: On the aim of life (2024/4/16)
7. Adam Piggott: The Aim of Life (2024/4/18)

In post 1, Filotto's position begins with a tortuous description about his lifelong journey to find the truth through the emotional pursuit of love, lust, and sex, enduring heartache, loneliness, and pain, and thereby reaching his human limits. He emphasizes the central importance of rolling with the punches and staying honest with oneself, and by doing so, one can eventually see a Truth that is larger than the whole.

In 2, Piggott responds to an email from a reader who is apparently going through the painful process that Filotto described. His attitude is careless and yet challenging.

> "The world doesn't owe you a damn thing.
>
> Nobody else is going to do it for you.
>
> Courage, honesty, and truth are everything, both moral and physical.
>
> God put us here to test us. We get to hang out with Him afterwards if we rose to the challenge and conquered this life in the correct manner.
>
> Men are greater than women. But with that status comes the responsibility and weight of actually having to do something with our lives. So do something.
>
> I repeat, nobody is going to do it for you."

In 3, Filotto responds to an annoyingly pessimistic reader in a similar manner that Adam responded to his.

> "Imagine being so weak, so incompetent, so scared of life that you don't even bother to TRY and find a good woman and make a family. Imagine being such a wuss that you whine and cry about "the gubment" not being on your side. When has it ever been on the side of actual men?

He states that it's good that weak men are self-selecting out of the gene pool.

He goes on to describe the love, joy, and contentment that comes of having a family.

In 4, Filotto responds to Adam's post (2) and does a total 180.

> "This man's depression would be gone if he had a hot woman who loved him dearly by his side. So, telling him that he needs to first conquer the world before he can get that woman is not going to help him get out of that rut."
>
> "Here is the thing though: No matter who you are, there is someone out there that suits you and would make life a LOT more worthwhile for you. The hard part is finding her. And then both of you recognising it in each other."

He goes on to address several challenges, motivations, and sources of confusion and doubt. He ends with,

> "Stay strong and keep walking, do NOT despair, remain standing when all around you have fallen, and you will eventually find her too. But not if you despair and black-pill yourself. That is not the Way."

In 5, Piggott recounts a recent news story of a man — a murderer — who did not respond to the challenges of life in a constructive manner. He warns of the dangers of putting the cart before the horse – of prioritizing women over faith and purpose.

> "You don't attract a woman and then conquer the world; you conquer the world first and by doing that you might attract a woman that suits you. Or you might not. Deal with it."

Adam agrees with Filotto that much of life is uncontrollable and unpredictable, but he emphasizes that we should not let these things define us.

In 6, Filotto summarizes his position and compares it to Adam's. His main contention is that Piggott offers no motivation to other men. Filotto doesn't say this explicitly, but the way I read it, Filotto views Piggott's arguments as an expression of fear and rejects the legitimacy of these fears on the grounds that nothing is certain.

In 7, Adam rejects Filotto's position as personal mysticism and psychological projection. He emphasizes the importance of living life as a masculine man with a noble purpose.

He writes,

> "The real measure of success or failure of your life is whether or not you willingly choose God and are able to create a life that is worthy in His image. In other words, you end up a saint. That's it, that's the only real measure of success or failure in this life. Not whether you were happy, not whether you thought you were a good person, not whether you fathered ten children, not whether you were rich, or good looking, or successful in a worldly way."
>
> "Making a man of yourself, in the real sense, is anything devoted to this goal."

He ends by emphasizing personal responsibility.

Summary of The Filotto Piggott Debate

First of all, let me extend my appreciation to these two men for sharing their viewpoints and thereby allowing the rest of us to reflect upon our own faith perspectives.

There's a lot of room for miscommunication and misunderstanding in this back and forth, and it's easy to get swamped in a plethora of minor points in their arguments. So here, I'll just sum up what I believe are these two men's positions.

It is clear that Filotto values community, family, hope, love, and joy. He is looking at the challenges of life from a human and somewhat mystical perspective, recognizing that the most important things in life are to be thankful for the small blessings, be honest with one's self, and stay motivated to endure the challenges of life. He assumes that for most men, giving up on finding a wife and having a family is essentially giving up on one's self and forfeiting God's love in doing so.

Meanwhile, Piggott values masculine identity, purpose, social order, and responsibility. He is looking at the situation from an eternal and independent perspective — what is most valuable to God, recognizing that the most important things are to fill one's role as a man, to manage one's personal weaknesses, to stay free from idolatry (i.e. lust, pedestalizing women, etc.), and to do something worthwhile with one's life. It is assumed that the love of chicks is distinctly separate from and is diametrically opposed to the love of God.

Both Filotto and Piggott are devout Sedevacantists. Both men agree that much of life is uncertain and unpredictable, and so many things are not under our control, and that we are dependent on the grace of God. Where the two men strongly differ is that Filotto believes life and love are a process of discovery, while Piggott believes life is what you make of it, and love is not for a man to decide.

> [13] Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter:
>
> Fear God and keep His commandments,
> For this is man's all.
> [14] For God will bring every work into judgment,
> Including every secret thing,
> Whether good or evil.
>
> Ecclesiastes 12:13-14 (NKJV)

Conclusions

It is impossible for two men of such contrasting teleologies to come to any agreement on any of the matters discussed. This difference in viewpoint is a major source of confusion and disagreement, as it affects one's understanding of all things pertaining to life, love, women, marriage, masculine purpose, and even faith itself.

How might we distinguish and label these different paradigms of faith, such to preclude constant bickering and the endless talking past one another? Would it be sufficient for a man like Filotto to describe himself as a man on a mystical journey of life and love, and for a man like Piggott to describe himself as a man of principle and personal responsibility? Would stating this much be enough for others to recognize their respective faith paradigms without going through an insightful but fruitless debate?

Related

- Σ Frame: Only God can grant a successful marriage (2020/5/20)
- Σ Frame: We're on a mission from God. (2020/8/21)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Viewpoints on Man's Confusion about How God Works in the Life of a Believer (2021/3/29)
- Σ Frame: Taking Headship by Force (2021/5/26)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Noetic Nose Knows (2021/9/6)
- Σ Frame: Identifying Your Spiritual Domain (2021/12/1)
- Σ Frame: The Path to Contentment (2023/1/18)

Drizzle Drizzle

Jack · 24 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

What's good for the goose is a joke for the gander.

Readership: All
Theme: This topic is not directly related to this month's theme, but I couldn't miss writing a summary of this phenomenon.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

The Soft Guy Era

There's a remarkable trend recently making the rounds on the social media platform TikTok. Men have embraced a new trend known as "The Soft Guy Era" where they humorously mimic and mock the unrealistic dating expectations placed on them by women, in videos produced by women and in IRL.

This trend is fast growing into a movement, so here I'll quote a number of side splitting quips and break it down.

'Drizzle Drizzle' and 'The Soft Guy Era' is a response to 'The Soft Girl Era' of 2023. The 'Drizzle Drizzle' Trend finds its roots in the 'Sprinkle Sprinkle' phrase popularized by Leticia Padwell AKA shur7. Essentially, "Sprinkle Sprinkle" and "Drizzle Drizzle" means 'support me' from the female and male perspectives, respectively.

What began as a humorous response to dating culture has evolved into a satirical commentary on gender expectations. The recast caricature of men that is portrayed as "The Soft Guy" is a man who wants to find a 'high value woman' who can pay all their expenses and 'take care' of them in all the ridiculous ways that we've heard women demanding from men over the past year or so.

The irony is thick enough to chew on all day. Some of the demands of these men are downright hilarious. These demands include things like,

- She has to pay all his bills / expenses.
- She has to have a high paying job / money.
- She has to be beautiful, feminine, intelligent, mature, etc.

Every parody ends with the man saying, "Drizzle Drizzle", which makes it clear to the viewers that it's a joke.

And, what do YOU bring to the table?

Men are asking what women 'bring to the table' or have to offer them in a relationship.

When men are asked what they are 'bringing to the table', they're saying exactly what women have been saying for the past year or two.

"I AM the table, baby! Drizzle Drizzle."

"I don't bring nothing to the table. Drizzle Drizzle."

"I bring my softness and my sweetness, honey. Drizzle Drizzle."

"When we go on a date, I want to go Dutch. 50/50. Drizzle Drizzle."

"I'm the guest of honor. You bring me something, okay? Drizzle Drizzle."

"If I don't like the color of your dress, then you'll be ghosted in a hurry. I ain't got no time for women in bad attire. Drizzle Drizzle."

"Well, if I were your waiter, I'd bring your order … and you better have my tip! But I'm not a waiter so I bring nothing to the table. Drizzle Drizzle."

Flipping the Tables

Men on Tik Tok are turning the tables on femcentric dating and societal norms. They are highlighting the foolishness of unrealistic dating expectations by comically asking for the impossible, all under the banner of The Soft Guy Era.

"This ain't no Soft Guy ERA, this a SOFT BOY FOREVER! Drizzle Drizzle."

"I want a Tesla and a Rolex watch. I don't care how much it costs you because I'm worth it. Drizzle Drizzle"

"If you're broke don't even reply to this post / video. This is a non-broke conversation. Drizzle Drizzle."

"I just bought this $1,000 geode and I already know I'm good with it. So I need you to step up and pay half. Show me we're equal. Drizzle Drizzle."

"I want you to pump my gas, and fix my toilet, I want you to open the door for me and lay your coat over a puddle for me to walk on. Drizzle Drizzle."

"No money?!? Bye! We're not dealing with it, hon. You go make something of yourself and then come back to the table and we'll talk business. Drizzle Drizzle."

"I should not have to ask you for anything. You should be able to 'feel my energy'. If I have to ask, then I don't want it. If you wanted to, you would. Drizzle Drizzle."

"I'm not day trading to lose money. If you find out that I lost $25,000 in the stock market, I better see you put that $25,000 back into my brokerage account. Drizzle Drizzle."

"No more fake trad girl. No more bait and switch. No more clever skits and witty one-liners. No more fake hair, fake eyebrows, fake lips, and fake tits. I want a REAL WOMAN! Drizzle Drizzle."

"We're leaving the broke dusties in the past. If she doesn't make six figures or more, have six bodies or less or have a 6 feet deep water park (if you know what I'm saying), then she's out… Drizzle Drizzle.

"This is one of my newest Air BnBs. Prove to me that you're not broke and book this property for a week. Fly out to Dallas and show me that you're not a Brokey and that you are my equal. Drizzle Drizzle."

"Women always think that they're entitled to sex on demand. Not with me. I ain't no gigolo. So don't you get the idea that you're automatically going to get any sex just cause I got a d!ck in my pants. You gotta EARN your pump and dump the right way! Drizzle Drizzle."

"Now that women have money, it's time for them to contribute and work as a team, just like Eve was made to be a helpmate to Adam. So let's dip into your purse and spend that money now. For starters, I'd like a Porsche so that my side chick won't be embarrassed to see me driving a Honda. You gotta honor your man properly with some equal treatment. Drizzle Drizzle."

"I'm in my Soft Guy Era. If you want to be with me, then you need to let me find my purpose in life. I'm taking my $9,000 Fujifilm camera and traveling the world to do some photography and passporting / sex tourism. You need to help me fund that and wait patiently for me until I get tired of F_cking hot foreign women and spending your OnlyF@ns money. And while I'm gone, you can buy me a Munch or a Picasso to show me you're totally invested and that you appreciate the same kind of art that I appreciate. If you can't help me start my art gallery then you're not a good person, because what kind of girl who claims to be a woman doesn't love art enough to support her man as he starts an art gallery? Drizzle Drizzle."

Drizzle Drizzle.

Women's Reactions

Not everyone sees the humor in The Soft Guy Era / Drizzle Drizzle. Some women are so daft and self-centered that they really believe these men are 100% serious!

"Oh, this is ridiculous! No way I can do that!"

"You want a mom / a parent! I don't want no momma's boy."

"Every time I get on this app I'm getting second-hand embarrassment from you men."

"What has the world come to? Ain't no man wants to take care of a woman anymore. Chivalry is dead!"

"Listen, any man that's comfortable with the woman spending money out of her purse don't get no sympathy from me."

"These men not gonna chase. Leave men alone who don't chase. Do you understand why it hurts when the shoe is on the other foot?"

Apparently, many of these women can't handle the truth.

Some women view it as a mockery of their genuine desires and fail to recognize the underlying message of satire and introspection.

Bathed in rich irony, some women have even gone so far as to call these men g@y and act homophobic towards them for simply asking for equal treatment.

What's most hilarious is the sheer number of women who are outraged by this Soft Guy Era.

Drizzle Drizzle.

Image Source.

Psychology

Women literally tell men that they bring nothing to the table. Women have no problem using men for their money. Women have no problem ghosting men. When a particular man is no longer important to a woman, she'll have no problem slandering him in dating groups for entertainment purposes. As a woman progresses in her mastery of misandry, she'll begin to treat all men that way in general, all under the guise of being strong independent queens, only to end up more miserable than ever.

Women are their own worst enemy in today's modern society.

And they say men are lost.

In a way, this is true. The problem is that a lot of men are so out of touch with the natural order that they don't realize who they are. Thus, they really don't know they're being manipulated into conforming to traditional gender roles that only benefit women, while women are conforming to progressive gender roles that are more or less hypoagentic and misandric.

The Soft Guy Era flips the scripts of faux double standards used against men under the guise of 'gender equality'. It puts societal expectations under a microscope and holds women accountable for their behaviors. It challenges women to face up to the unrealistic demands and standards they are imposing on men and reconsider the foolishness of their own behaviors. It then becomes obvious how ridiculous and unrealistic it sounds when a man says it. But when women say that it is not ridiculous for a woman to say such things, it only proves the men's point, further fueling the growth of The Soft Guy Era movement.

Drizzle Drizzle.

Game Techniques

The reason Drizzle Drizzle 'works' is because it rolls several old school Game techniques into one nice aromatic, long-burning stogie.

- Be funny
- Detachment
- Amused Mastery
- Making demands
- Agree and Amplify
- "Men are the Prize."
- Stating expectations
- Brinkmanship / Up the Ante
- Mock them in a playful manner.
- "Don't take women too seriously."
- Maintain internal locus of control.
- Drawing boundaries (see next section)
- Women are made to be a helpmeet to a man (Adam and Eve).
- The only real power women have is the power men give them.
- Relationship quality is higher when the woman caters to the man's physical comforts.

Drizzle Drizzle.

Boundaries

Women want men to live up to their unrealistic expectations apparently without ever realizing that there is a limit to what can be reasonably expected of a human being with human weaknesses and limitations. This is how women are — they cannot separate fantasy from reality.

However, men are waking up and they are waking up faster than ever. Givers have to learn to set limits because takers have none. Setting Boundaries Changes Reality.

The Soft Guy phenomenon serves as a powerful illustration of The Law of Cause and Effect by mirroring the unrealistic expectations of society and women back at them. It's similar to what happens when you mirror a narcissist. Narcissists are absolutely disgusted by those rebellious targets who mirror their behavior back at them. The Narcissist is put into a lose-lose situation because now she has to face herself — the person she is constantly trying to flee from.

Epilogue

Women say they want equality but then they'll demand the most unequal situations from men, like men paying all the bills. If men acted like this they'd be laughed out the room. So why not turn it into a joke?

If a woman is making money as well, she ought to kick in. But of course, women don't want to do that. Money shouldn't ever have to come out of her pocket because… well… She's a woman. Right? Heh… It doesn't make any sense. That's not equality, and that's now how equality works.

We know that when women demand equality, they're really seeking female control / superiority / supremacy. They want to have their cake and eat it too. The 'Sprinkle Sprinkle' foolishness plays into that narrative but it only works if men believe that women are the prize and try to live up to their unrealistic expectations. However, men are waking up and they are waking up faster than ever.

The Soft Guy Era may appear as a humorous trend on the surface but beneath the laughter lies a profound commentary on the complexities of modern dating by holding up a mirror to society. It's obvious that the Soft Guy men on TikTok know exactly where they're going and that is far away from these parasites who bring nothing but liabilities into their lives. We're reminded that true connection requires empathy, understanding, and perhaps a little Drizzle Drizzle.

Drizzle Drizzle.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Kardashian Fantasy (2021/5/24)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): How to Change a Hostile Culture (2021/6/7)
- Σ Frame: She don't need no man! Except… (2021/8/30)
- Σ Frame: Expectations (for LTRs) (2023/1/20)
- Σ Frame: Setting Boundaries Changes Reality (2024/1/26)

Revising Our Concepts of SMV and MMV

Jack · 26 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

SMV depends on the supply. MMV depends on the relative demand.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misunderstood Models
Length: 2,600 words
Reading Time: 15 minutes

Economic Theory

Supply

A supply is the amount of a resource that firms, producers, laborers, providers of financial assets, or other economic agents are willing and able to provide to the marketplace or an individual. Supply can be in produced goods, labor time, raw materials, or any other scarce or valuable object.

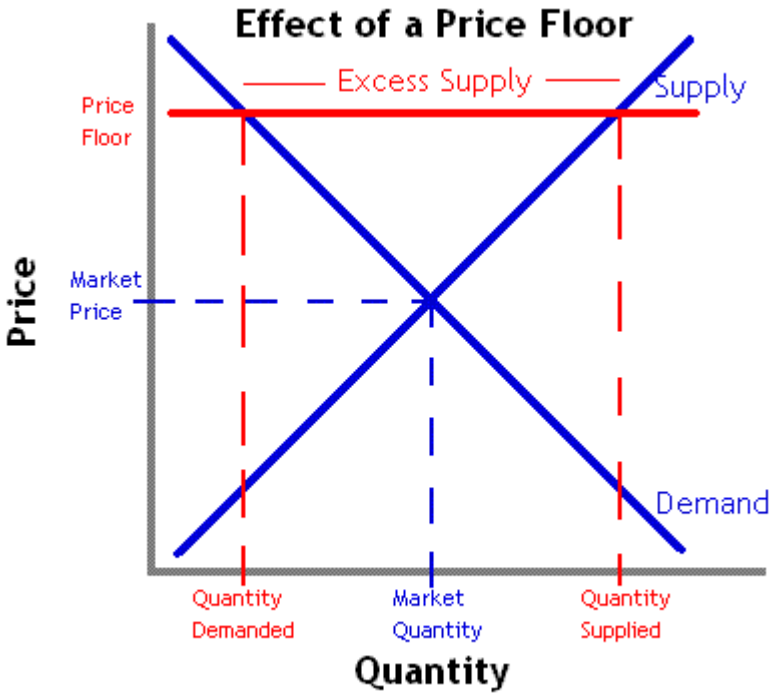
In the goods market, supply is the amount of a product per unit of time that producers are willing to sell at various given prices when all other factors are held constant. This is roughly equivalent to women's SMV, which is time dependent, lasting from the ages of ~18-30.

In the labor market, the supply of labor is the amount of time per week, month, or year that individuals are willing to spend working, as a function of the wage rate. This is roughly proportional to women's MMV.

Women offer both goods (her body and reproductive potential) and labor (help, housekeeping, childrearing, etc.). Female goods are often sold to a series of boyfriends, Chads, Sugar Daddies, and/or OnlyF@ns Johns, and female labor is increasingly sold to corporate employers. The female goods and labor that are offered to men / husbands is at an all-time low. Other scarce or valuable commodities that women might provide to men include companionship, honor, and respect. But due to feminism, women are fundamentally opposed to providing these assets to men.

Demand

In economics, a Supply & Demand curve is a graph depicting the relationship between the price of a certain commodity (the y-axis) and the quantity of that commodity that is demanded at that price (the x-axis).



Demand curves may be used to model the price-quantity relationship for an individual consumer (an individual demand curve), or more commonly for all consumers in a particular market (a market demand curve). It is generally assumed that demand curves are downward-sloping, as shown in the adjacent image. This is because of the law of demand: for most goods, the quantity demanded will decrease in response to an increase in price, and will increase in response to a decrease in price.

In today's market, we see women lowering their prices in order to increase demand (attention, clicks, views, $$$, etc.). But in doing so, they also lowered their value.

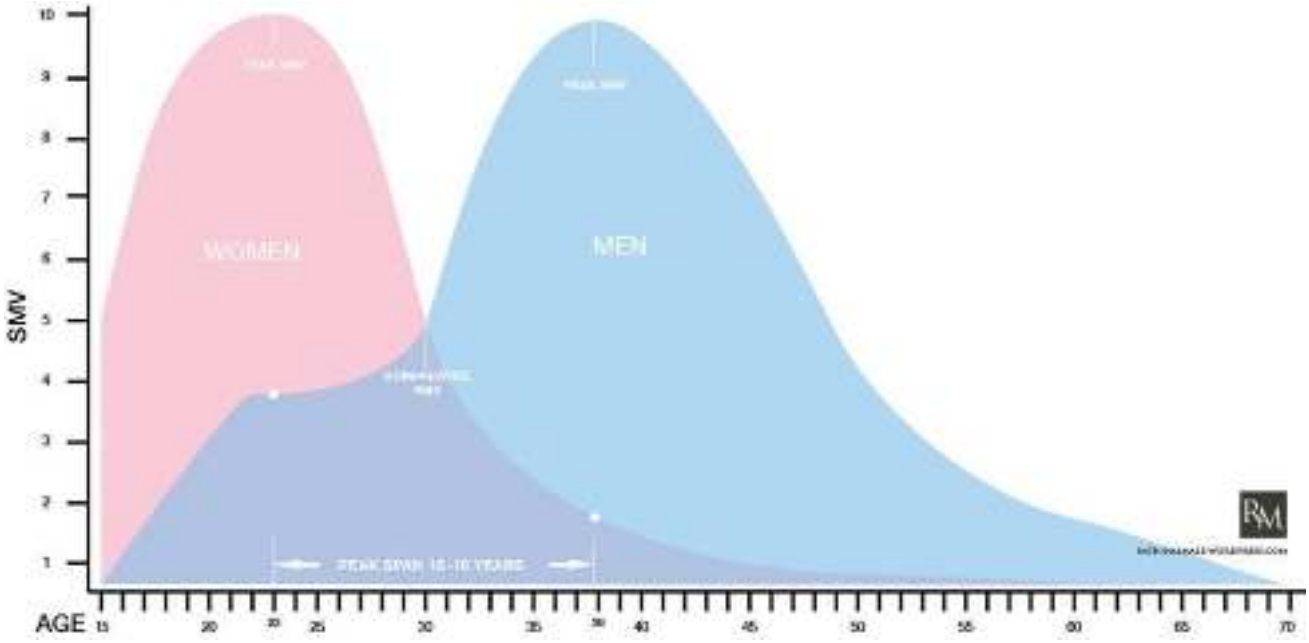
Demand curves are also used to estimate behaviors in competitive markets, and are often combined with supply curves to estimate the equilibrium price (the price at which sellers together are willing to sell the same amount as buyers together are willing to buy, also known as market clearing price) and the equilibrium quantity (the amount of that good or service that will be produced and bought without surplus / excess supply or shortage / excess demand) of that market. For a transaction to take place, the supply curve must intersect with the demand curve.

Notes for Finance Dummies

1. In a traditional sociosexual market, men are producers and women are consumers.
2. Supply (S) represents the producers' willingness to sell.
3. Demand (D) represents the consumers' willingness to buy.
4. Price (P) is the exchange price.
5. Quantity (Q) represents the number of transactions that occur at a given price.
6. P is the independent variable and Q is the dependent variable, but the axes are reversed in a Supply & Demand curve by convention.
7. In economic theory, it is assumed that the production and consumption of commodities is unlimited. In reality, there are external forces that affect and limit both the production and consumption of commodities. For example, Apple wants to sell more MacBooks at a higher price. The demand is available, but the production is limited by resource acquisition and manufacturing capacity. Likewise, people will want to buy more apples if they are on sale, but they will not buy more than they can eat. More sophisticated models take these variables into account.

Our Present Understanding of SMV

The secular Manosphere has come up with many detailed graphs depicting the SMV of men and women. The most famous chart from Rollo Tomassi at the Rational Male shows the general trend in SMV for males and females versus age.



What is not explicitly pointed out is that, in effect, the pink (women) represents the average potential maximum female sexual currency that can be tendered in a transaction, and the blue (men) shows the average potential maximum supply of a supply and demand function in an open competitive market. That is, the Supply is shown in pink, which represents the producers' (men's) willingness to transact, and the Demand is shown in blue, which represents the consumers' (women's) willingness to transact.

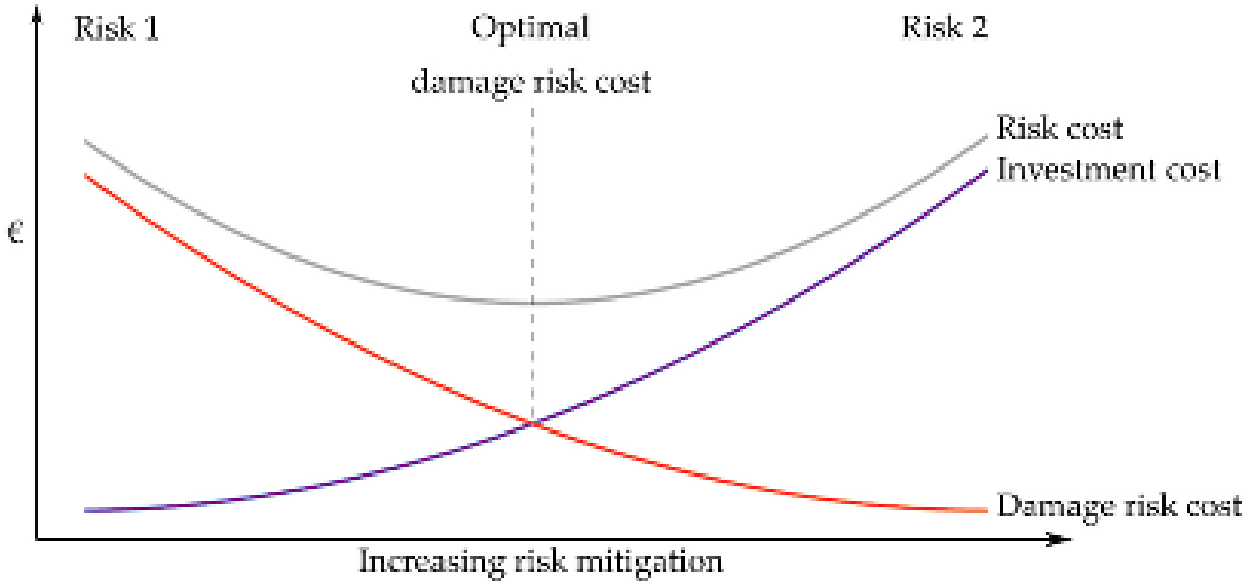
Here, I want to point out that 'Demand' is often linked to 'Value', as Rollo et al. have assumed and put forth, but it is not necessarily so. This disjunction was not so evident in the early days of the Manosphere, but it is becoming more obvious now. I'll explain this in the next few sections.

Also, this graph represents averages, and due to hypergamy, we know women don't want average — they want the exceptionally HSV man.

So let's take a closer look at this.

Reframing Our Understanding of SMV

We have become accustomed to think of SMV in terms of sexual desirability, or hierarchy, or parity, or value, or how much power or choice a particular person might have, and therefore, we assign a Likert ('Like Her?') scale value of 1-10 to particular women. We are much less accustomed to assigning a 'Like Her?' value to a woman's MMV. However, this becomes a myopic view when we consider other market factors, such as real Demand, market forces, and risk, so this requires a shift in our thinking. We must also consider how one's SMV/MMV is determined by whether and how much the particular qualities of a person are actually wanted (in demand) by the other sex, and how much risk is involved.



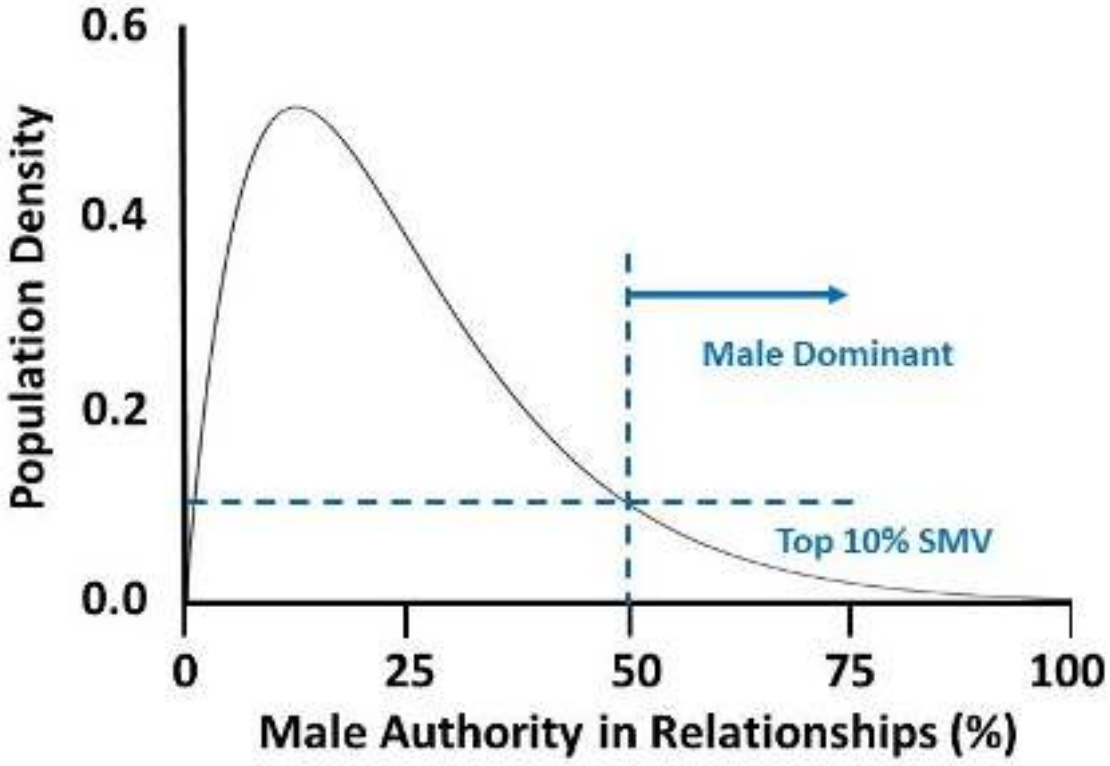
In reality, the unit price for a particular good or other traded item, such as labor or liquid financial assets will vary until it settles at a point where the quality / quantity demanded will equal the quality / quantity supplied (the market-clearing price), resulting in an economic equilibrium for price and quality / quantity transacted. That is to say, one's sexual market value is an estimation of the reproductive potential and/or life / relationship quality that one can supply, or offer to a partner. If these things are absent, then men will be less interested in making this investment (Q), and the Demand will fall.

In total, this creates a vicious cycle of depreciation. Q goes down, which drives investment Value down in order to secure a more agreeable transaction. Meanwhile, Prices are held artifically high. Thus, what we see is that today's women are eagerly willing to casually sell their bodies and sex appeal in a market transaction, but are quite UNwilling to formally sell HIGH QUALITY products and labor. The result is that the market is flooded with sexual transactions, while there is a shortage of marriage transactions.

Male SMV Depends on Demand

In a myopic view, men will assume that women are constantly in high demand for sex, because P-ssy. This is not exactly true across the board. Let me explain this from the producer's (men's) standpoint.

For high SMV men, P-ssy is plentiful and free. This man has the freedom to Next a woman over the least bit of hassle. So the Demand drops accordingly for sex and especially marriage.



For low SMV men, P-ssy is considerably less plentiful but also involves greater investment. What is required to obtain a transaction with a woman involves more money and greater effort, and is much more energy-intensive and time-consuming. These considerations also figure into the total bill. So although women are more highly desired by this demographic, they also come with a higher price tag. Many of these men have decided that the products and services offered by women are not worth the investment costs and the associated risks, so the demand has actually fallen.

In summary both the demand (willingness to shill out $$$) and the investment cost to the male are inversely proportional to his sexual authority, similar to the graph shown above. IOW, better looking guys are less desperate and are better able to get a more favorable transaction. Of course, we already know this, but we seldom recognize this in terms of supply and demand.

Reframing Our Understanding of MMV

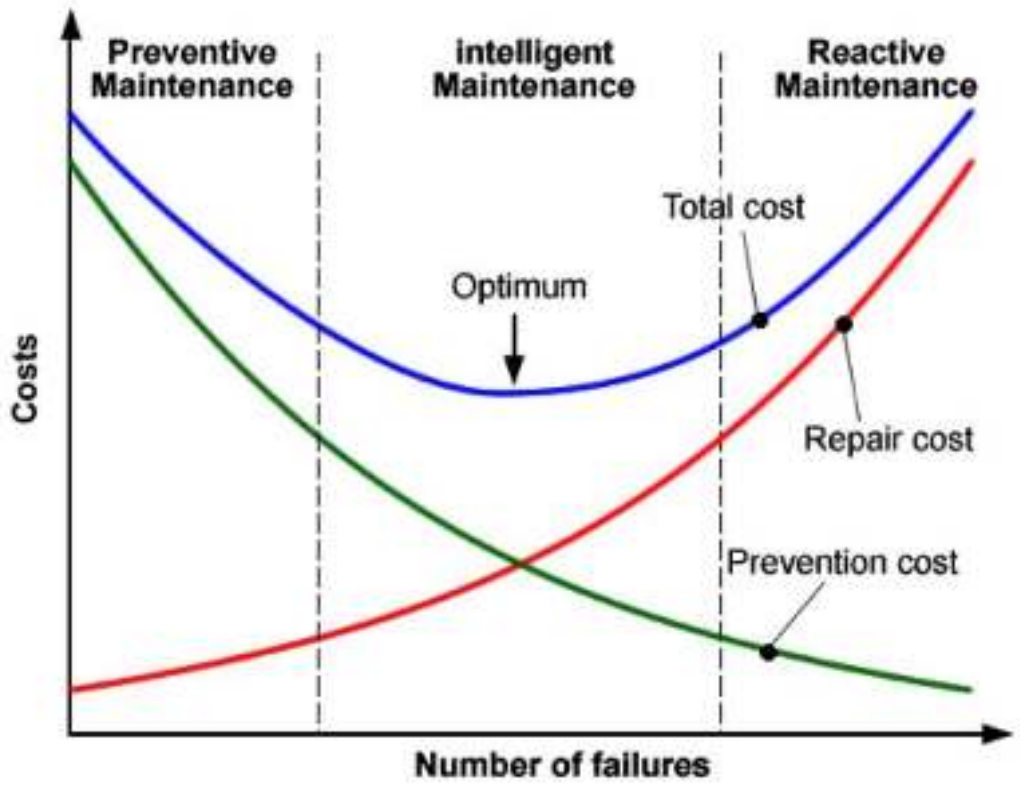
A lot of virtual ink has been spilled to address the question of which personal characteristics comprise sexual and marital value, from both the male and female perspectives. To briefly summarize, males are attracted to women having youth, beauty, fertility, good health, etc. so these attributes determine a female's sexual / marital value. Similarly, females are attracted to men having power, athleticism, wealth, charisma, etc. so these attributes determine a male's sexual / marital value.

But here I'll go a step further to pose the question, what makes any of these particular personal characteristics (e.g. youth, beauty, power, wealth…) an asset to their MMV as opposed to their SMV?

First of all, we must identify the differences in what is traded in each transaction. In general, there are 4 types of transactions that can occur, listed here in order of increasing investment cost for men and decreasing investment cost for women.

1. S1uttery — Sex in exchange for affirmation, attention, status, Tingles, validation, etc. Examples include ONS, FWB, OR, polyandry, serial monogamy, etc.
2. Pr0st!tut!0n / Wh0redom — Sex in exchange for $$$ or other tangible asset. Examples include Marriage 2.0, OASIS (IG, OnlyF@ns, etc.), sugaring, etc.

3. Concubinage — Commitment for sexual exclusivity under conditions that are agreed upon either covertly or explicitly. Examples include 'baby trapping' / OOW births, cohabitation, formal or informal concubinage, surrogacy, etc.
4. Marriage — Lifetime commitment for sexual exclusivity.



The immediate takeaway is that marriage is a long-term investment, and therefore performance and maintenance costs become preeminent considerations. Ideally, the preventive maintenance costs should have been shouldered by the girl's father during her upbringing. The more that is invested in a woman during her formative years, the less reactive maintenance will be necessary later on.

MMV = Low Maintenance + High Performance

In a recent video at PsycHacks: Why men get married: it's not about you (2024/4/15), Dr. Taraban states that men are hesitant to marry (which is a polite understatement in these days). However, he emphasizes that men are more willing to marry a woman who has an array of traits supportive of childbearing, childrearing, and managing the home. He also states that a man who is looking to marry wants a woman who does not consume his time, energy, and attention, and that a woman "being perfect is less important than being unproblematic".

This is entirely true, and the word, 'unproblematic' wraps things up very nicely. However, Dr. Taraban leaves aside the obvious 'problems' that would make a woman 'problematic', and he doesn't go into detail about what makes a woman 'unproblematic". So I'll list a few of the most important characteristics of 'unproblematic' women here. I'm sure many others could be included.

Characteristics of 'Unproblematic' Women

- Loyal
- Quiet
- Helpful
- Agentic
- Humble

- Faithful
- Agreeable
- Teachable
- Submissive
- Sexually chaste
- Emotionally mature
- Sensitive to the needs of others.
- Self-controlled / Self-disciplined
- Husband and Family minded rather than self-centered.
- Good humored / Happy / Joyful / Willing to do Emotion Work
- Actually likes her man and is attracted to and aroused by him.
- Last but certainly not least, she eagerly and gleefully bends her knees whenever he's hard and needs drained.

Putting all this together, I propose the following formula for MMV.

Marriage Market Value (MMV) = Quality (Beauty + Youth + Virginity) + Low Maintenance (unproblematic) + High Performance (agentic + mature) + an array of many other qualities.

Although we have several graphs of SMV from various perspectives, a similar graph for MMV has never been introduced, probably because the secular Manosphere is preoccupied with seed foam, not commitment.

It is difficult to capture all these factors (e.g. how to quantify 'unproblematic' ?) in a single 2-dimensional graph. So here, I've picked out age and N count as proximal variables to create a rudimentary graph of MMV.*

- MMV is highest *for young virgin women.
- MMV drops exponentially from current SMV by N.
- MMV ≈ SMV e^{-N}

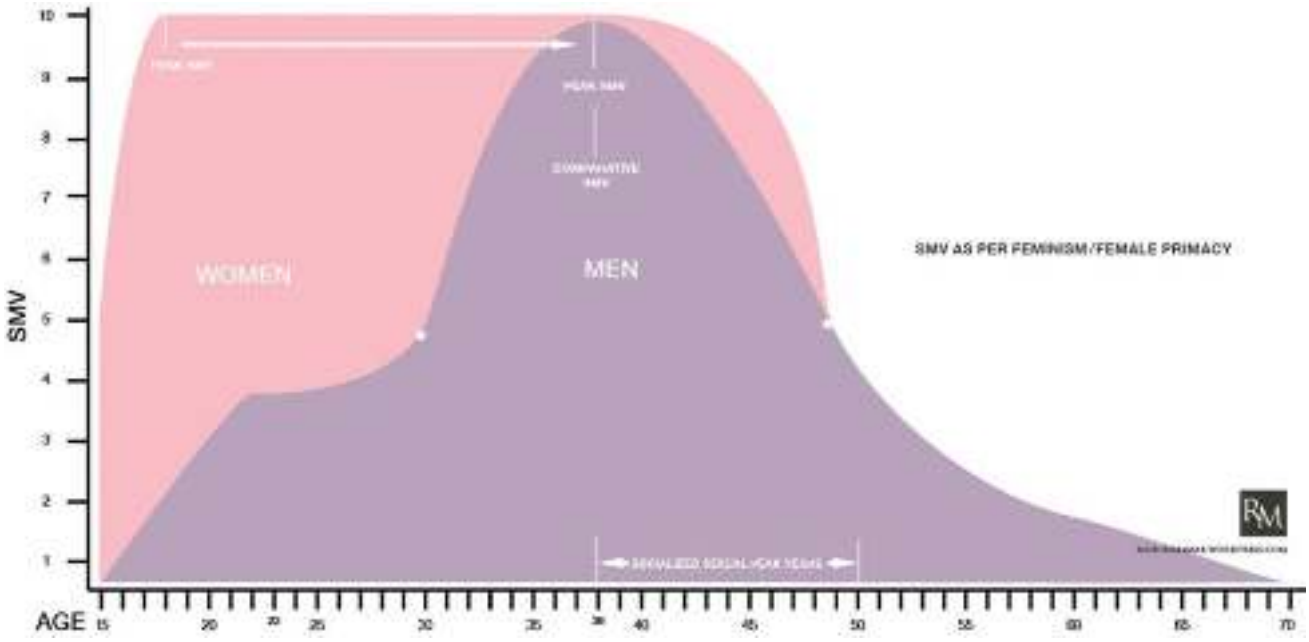
I'm not sure how useful this graph will be, because we already know marriage is in the doldrums. But perhaps this is the best time to discuss it from an entirely objective point of view.

 Consider this graph as a theoretical model in progress. I'm not entirely satisfied with this, so it may see some revision in the future.*

The P-ssy Bubble

The failure of omitting any consideration of the demand in a transaction is revealed in how women overestimate their own value, and underestimate men's value, as depicted in the following graph.



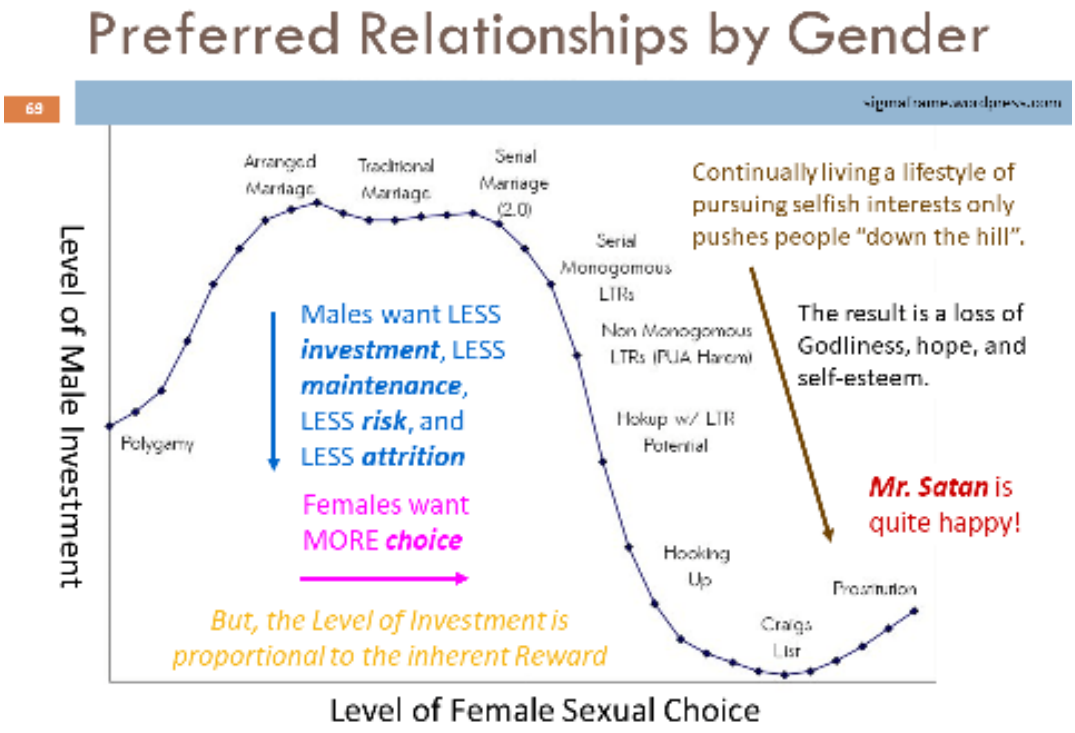
To offer a real life example of this imbalance, over at Spawny's Space: Upping The Demands (2020/2/16), Farm Boy posted this video from Better Bachelor.

Farm Boy writes,

> "She is 34 and she has upped her demands in what she wants in a man. This is above and beyond the demand that he marry her requirement. He has to be much better than what she tolerated in the past. Stuff like — good father material, stable income, do what she wants, etc. Plus, he must be the sexy and fun that she probably has become accustomed to.
>
> It seems to a fella that upping the demands as your bargaining position is deteriorating is ludicrous."

Also, women falsely believe that many other qualities, such as earnings, education, and even sexual experience (heh) increase their SMV, when in fact, these things mean nothing to men and therefore have no trading power. Interestingly, a woman who makes such demands drives her own value down, as men prefer women who are agreeable, content, demure, quiet, submissive, and unproblematic. This is often described as "pricing herself out of the market", but this is somewhat of a misnomer.

If we reframe this situation more accurately in terms of supply and demand, she is actually lowering her value until she eventually becomes a bimbo / wh0re who is no longer in demand.



A Barrel of Overinflated Monkey Branchers

So when it is said that,

> "Women's demands go up because they believe their value has gone up."

We must recognize that the real reason why women's demands have gone up has nothing to do with their real value.

Given that the risk-to-benefit ratio of marriage is now so unfavorable, it would be more truthful to say that the government, laws, and feminist social norms have devalued women. Similarly, the phrase, "pricing themselves out of the market", is more accurately understood to mean that women's stick her price is vastly overinflated, just like their weight. Women's demands have just floated with this artificial inflation and have gone up past the point where an equilibrium transaction can take place, meaning that men must take a loss if a transaction is to be made.

That "women have priced themselves out of the market" might be true according to the feminist mantras that women are taught to believe, but it's not accurate to reality. But in women's solipsistic minds, they erroneously believe it is determined by their own intrinsic value. Heh. Then solipsistic women use this argument to justify wanting a high quality man.

It is an unreasonable proposition to men, as they have to pay both the government and the women themselves, and continue doing so long after the products, labor, quality, and value offered has diminished past its sell-by date, and with little to show for it.

In summary,

- Women claiming that their value has gone up is a bald-faced lie, simply because they are less able to provide what men want. Most of them don't even know what men want, other than sex.
- Men saying these women have "priced themselves out of the market" is a reflection of this lie. Men who say this are parroting women's fem-centric solipsistic Gaslighting.

So don't admit this false argument of 'increased value'.

Polyandry — A Market Correction

Not all women truly believe their value has risen. More and more women are becoming acutely aware that they can't pull the Brads, Chads, Thads, and married Dads they once did in their early 20's, leading them to the vexation we see in the video above.

There are several factors contributing to this increased awareness among women.

1. Women who hit the epiphany stage are beginning to understand the depth of their needs (as opposed to their solipsistic wants). So part of the reason why the demands go up is because they realize this is what all they need to get a much desired sense of contentment out of a relationship.
2. Women are more vocal about making such demands because of a societal inculcated entitlement complex. Also, the b!tching and complaining is therapeutic to their egos.
3. However, they are frustrated because at 30+, they have less of what MEN need to get a sense of contentment out of a relationship, and so because of this mismatch in market equity, there is no possibility for a transaction (unless the man sacrifices hard, which is more and more unlikely, as more and more men are waking up to this bitter reality).
4. It's a cry of pain out of the guilt resulting from their poor life decisions and lost opportunities.
5. However, this guilt and pain is still not sufficient to motivate them to humble themselves, honestly assess their present condition, and make the best of whatever they have left — so more demands.
6. Maybe other reasons, depending on the individual.

Women make demands of men and even demand multiple men to meet their needs because they fail to understand (or refuse to admit) that it is impossible for one man (or even many men) to meet all their needs. Only Jesus can give them the sense of contentment they are looking for.

Because of the above reasons, more and more women are overtly demanding open polyandry in the form of 'friends with benefits' and/or 'open relationships'. This is spreading like wildfire because of herd mentality / FOMO / YOLO, and a societal-wide absence of moral restraint.

Better bachelor pointed this out in a recent video.

At 22:30, he says,

> "When hypergamy was an effect… women would chase after the top 10 or 20 or 30%. Now, what women are doing is they're saying, "You know what? The top 10, 20, 30%, they're not necessarily enough anymore because a woman can't just get one of them because that man never 'settles' for her." So what this girl's really talking about is… she wants to sleep with the 10 or the 9 that'll sleep with her, she wants the finances of a 6, and she wants the friendship and romance of an 8. That's what she wants because [she can't get commitment from the 10,] she can only get the 10 to sleep with her. She can get the six's money but she doesn't want to sleep with > him, and the 7 or 8 that she's comfortable with and she enjoys, well, that's the one she wants to cuddle up with and watch a movie. Now, she'd rather do that with a 10, but he can't be bothered because he's out sleeping with somebody else. So this is why you see that women don't want to be monogamous anymore."

Joker also points out that…

- Women are now arguing that humans cannot be or aren't meant to be monogamous because one person cannot give you everything you need.
- It is considered ridiculous for a man to demand multiple women to fill various female roles in his life, even though this would be more realistic (and more Biblical).

Related

- Donal Graeme: Mind the Gap – The Conundrum of Male SMV and Marriage (2013/11/23)
- The Rational Male: Preventative Medicine – Part II (2014/3/26)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Market Value (SMV) vs. Marriage Market Value (MMV) (2017/7/27)
- Σ Frame: How much is Virginity worth? (2019/9/6)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)

Rollo Tomassi's Take on the Meet Cute Phenomenon

Jack · 29 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A Meet Cute is a great start, but a man must take the initiative to follow through.

Readership: Christian Men
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misunderstood Models
Author's Note: Soup Sandwich shared Rollo's video with Jack on 2020/11/30. This post was written intermittently from 2020/12/12 until the time of posting.
Reader's Note: There's a lot to be learned here, so it's worth the read. You might (correctly) think this is a long post, but earlier drafts exceeded 6,000 words. I've shortened it for the reader's convenience.
Length: 4,400 words
Reading Time: 24 minutes + ~40 minutes of video (optional)

Intro

Soup Sandwich (SS) made waves with a video he made back in February 2020 about the Meet Cute phenomenon. Σ Frame and Christianity and Masculinity continued to explore and dissect the sociosexual dynamics of what SS described.

Here are the most noteworthy posts on this topic.

1. Σ Frame (SS): Probabilities (2020/2/24)
2. Σ Frame (SS, Jack): Opportunities (2020/2/26)
3. Σ Frame (Jack): Trajectories (2020/2/28)
4. Christianity and Masculinity: Meet cutes – Are they common? (2020/3/13)
5. Σ Frame: On the Significance and Value of the Meet Cute Experience (2020/4/3)
6. Σ Frame: Hopelessness (2020/4/6)
7. Christianity and Masculinity: Jumping back to meet cute scenarios (2020/6/27)
8. Σ Frame: Some like it Hot (2020/7/3)
9. Christianity and Masculinity: Generating and handling attraction from the opposite sex (2020/7/8)
10. Σ Frame: Handling an IOI requires a Miracle! (2020/7/17)
11. Σ Frame: The Meet Cute Phenomenon (2020/12/6)
12. Σ Frame: A Man's Ability to Read IOIs Depends on Having a Firm Grasp on His Personal Archetypal Mythos (2021/6/21)
13. Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): The Meet Cute as a Positive Feedback Loop (2021/11/17)
14. Σ Frame: The Meet Cute is not about "women chasing men" (2021/11/19)
15. Σ Frame: Summary of the Meet Cute Phenomenon (2021/11/22)
16. Σ Frame: Moral Guidance Based Feedback vs. Sexual Attention (2021/11/24)
17. Σ Frame: Identifying Your Spiritual Domain (2021/12/1)
18. Σ Frame: The Meet Cute Experience as a Selection Model (2022/2/18)
19. Σ Frame: Pursuing Flow to develop Confidence and Trust (2022/4/22)
20. Σ Frame: Validation (2022/10/11)
21. Σ Frame: Christian Detachment (2023/1/30)
22. Σ Frame: On Choosing a Wife Wisely (2023/5/1)
23. Σ Frame: The Applied ¡ScIeNcE! of IOIs cannot be independently confirmed (2023/9/26)

24. Σ Frame: Selecting Markets for Better Market Selection (2024/2/9)

 SS has taken down the original video and his posts for personal reasons.*

That's not all. Rollo Tomassi also picked apart SS's original Meet Cute video. So here, we're going to return him the favor. SS's video can be seen in Rollo's video.

Rollo Tomassi: Is Game Really Necessary? (2020/2/23)

Rollo's Take 1 on SS's Video

Rollo seems hesitant to address this topic. He starts by saying he's determined to talk about it, no matter what anyone thinks. (???) Then he spends 14 minutes weeding out his audience and going over several disclaimers.

The first part of SS's video begins at 14:15, in which he explains the Meet Cute phenomenon using a personal anecdote.

Rollo picks up at 18:55. His talk covers a lot of ground, so I've summarized his talk as follows.

Rollo says there are basically three ways for a man to make himself sexually 'visible' to women.

1. Game
2. The man is stinking rich and/or has money to throw on women.
3. The man is so perfectly handsome that he naturally attracts women.

The last two situations might make Game completely unnecessary.

Rollo says physique can be improved with some effort, and not many men have the $$$, but everyone has Game / Rizz. The problem is that it is ineffective and/or underdeveloped for the majority of men. And those men who have developed their game tend to be ego invested in it, and this slows them down. Also, women have a much MUCH higher attraction floor than men do, and this floor is usually above a man's SMV.

But the question that SS's video brings up is this:

> "Is a man's romantic success just predicated on a woman's initial attraction to him?"

Initially, Rollo says that SS experienced Meet Cutes because he happened to be in the right place at the right time. Rollo says it happened to him too. He chose his locale, and put himself into a certain group of people where he could be as attractive as he could (as a guitarist in a rock band), and women DID find him attractive.

Then, Rollo cites some key quotes from Old School Pick Up Artistry (OSPUA) as follows, with the first being central to his argument.

- OSPUA (David DeAngelo): "Attraction is not a choice." A woman does not 'decide' to be attracted to a man.
- When a woman is attracted to you, all you have to do is NOT screw it up. Don't be incongruent with the image that she has of you in her head.
- OSPUA: "Kill your ego." …because that is what prevents you from inserting yourself into a position where you could either 'start up' or get rejected.
- OSPUA (Mark Manson): Vulnerability is key. Rollo says it's a vulnerability competition, that is, the man has to display less vulnerability than the woman.
- Iron Rule of Tomassi 3: "If any woman makes you wait for sex, then the sex is not worth waiting for. If a woman is putting something between you and sex, then there is something that is mitigating that desire."
- NEXT those women who don't 'clue in' / display IOIs.

Full frontal IOIs. She's about to open up.

But then Rollo pivots to say that the whole idea that, "'Attraction is not a choice' means that 'a man's romantic success is determined by a woman's initial attraction to him'", is a misconception. This is exactly what a lot of guys think, and that to be that guy, you have to be in the right place at the right time. But it's more than that.

> "Why is attraction NOT a choice? The question is this. Why bother learning game? Why go to all that trouble if all I have to do is wait for her to notice me?"
>
> "While attraction is not a choice, you can certainly use Game to put yourself into the best possible potential so that IF attraction is possible, then … you are putting yourself into the right space. You are congruent, your look, your attraction potential for that woman is put into the position where IF she is attracted to you, that you can take it from there."

> "When you get into a situation where a woman is attracted to you, the only thing you have to do is NOT screw it up, NOT say the wrong thing, NOT be incongruent with the impression of what that woman has of you in her head."

The bottom line is that there has to be a genuine desire between that woman and you.

In summary of this part of the video, Rollo's approach is basically…

1. Get your head straightened out about the nature of women and how intersexual interactions transpire.
2. Iron out your psychological disposition.
3. Carefully orchestrate the circumstances in which a Meet Cute can happen.
4. Be on your Game. The value of Game is to maximize your potential.
5. After receiving an IOI, you must take action within 3 seconds.
6. Focus on her desire, and whether there is anything that is mitigating her desire.
7. Attraction happens when your overall impression on her matches whatever punches her buttons.

Now, let's compare this to what SS said about Meet Cutes. SS clarified The Recipe for a Meet Cute (2021/7/24) as having the following ingredients.

1. The woman must find the man exceedingly attractive, enough to where her subconscious is short-circuiting any rational filters on her behavior.
2. The woman must be only barely above the threshold of that particular man's attraction floor. If it is any lower, then he'll relegate her to the STR category. If it is any higher, then he'll get 'wowed', lose focus, and screw it up.
3. The meeting is totally spontaneous.

Watch those eyes pop and her jaw drop open. Arousal is imminent. Success!

Rollo's Take 2 on SS's Video

The second part of SS's video begins at 35:57.

SS describes a Meet Cute that he and a friend experienced at a restaurant, and then recounts his wife's comments about how they met. He recalls the moment he realized that women are extremely sexually attracted to certain men, as this was new to him at that time.

At 37:08, Rollo offers an explanation of SS story, using the AF/BB model. He jumps around a lot and stumbles through it, so I've taken the liberty to paraphrase his commentary as follows.

> Yes, SS is right. Women assess men visually. In fact, I would say women are at least as visual as men are when it comes to sexuality, and some women are far more visual than men are. So if a woman sees a guy walking across the parking lot at a distance, she can tell whether that guy is hot or not.
>
> We're taught that women don't do this or that they need some sort of coercion or some game for a woman to feel attraction. But the truth is that both men and women are able to visually assess sexual viability and feel attraction and/or arousal for someone of the opposite sex.

Women have always been visually aware of men's physical cues of sexual viability. But they are probably becoming more attuned to physical cues now because of the internet and because of our global sexual marketplace.

But here's the thing. There's a difference between attraction and arousal. A woman can see a guy who is hot and feel attracted to him, but there needs to be something more for arousal to occur.

Attraction occurs when women see men as good dads and long-term providers. Arousal occurs when a woman sees a guy strutting across a parking lot and recognizes a good hot sexual opportunity. That's attraction versus arousal.

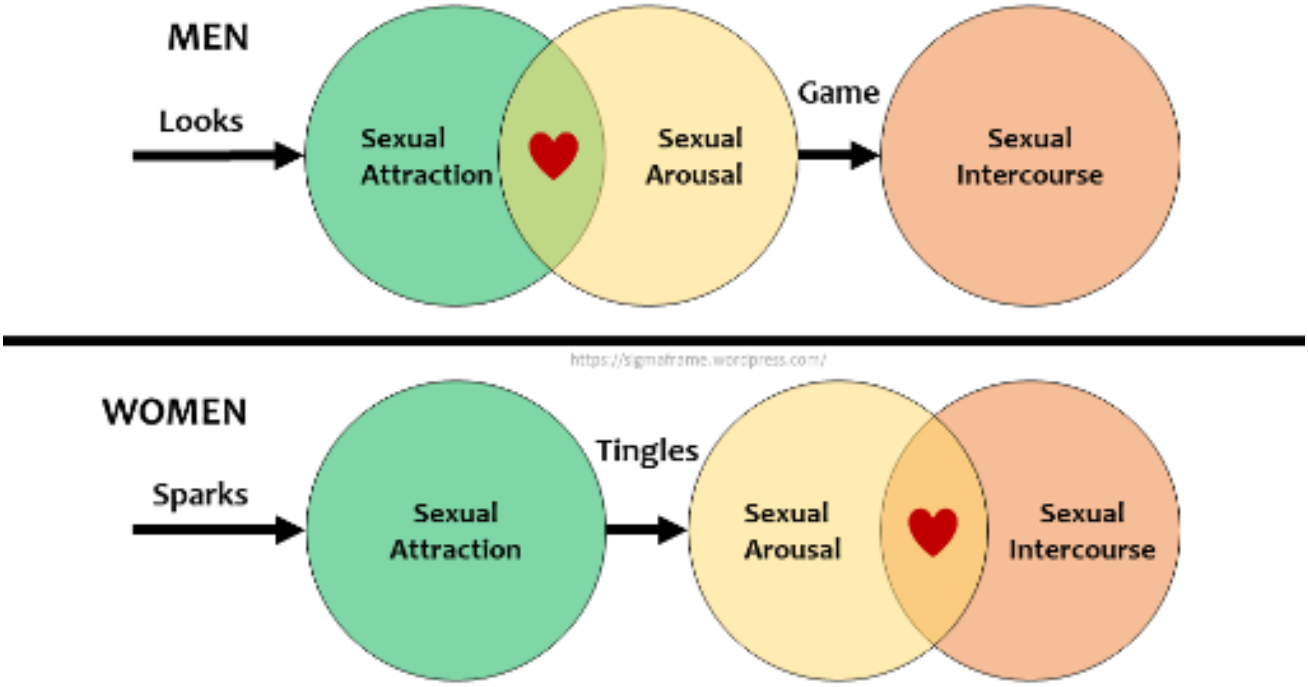
Reframing this using the Alpha Fux / Beta Bucks model, Alpha Fux is the arousal side of hypergamy, Beta Bucks is the attraction side of hypergamy — long term versus short term — Alpha Seed / Beta Need.

> Another thing is that the times have changed since SS was a younger man. SS is recalling the moment he arrived at this realization like this is something that's new to him. You have to understand that back in the day, back before the internet, back before open hypergamy, back before hypergamy was something that women would openly embrace and proudly flaunt, men didn't know this about women. Men didn't have The Red Pill to help them wake up and unplug from the matrix. SS picked up on something about women that almost all other men knew nothing about at that time, so we can't give him any sh!t for wondering about that.

> Nowadays, I think more and more guys are becoming aware of how the game works. Some guys learn this sooner, some guys learn this later. The reason is because we have The Red Pill and also women are being more open about it. Women in today's global sexual marketplace feel more comfortable embracing hypergamy and embracing the game. Womankind is now saying, "You know what? We are so in control of this situation, of society, and this social order that we are now comfortable in revealing the game." They are now comfortable in saying, "Yeah, you're right. We look for the hottest guy. We can spot them from across the room."

In summary, Rollo talks about how sexually attractive men begin to be aware that they are 'visible' to women at a young age. Rollo spells out the difference between attraction and arousal, and asserts that women are just as aware of physical cues of attraction as men are. Women used to deny this, but not so much anymore.

In Trajectories (2020/2/28), Jack and SS unpacked this to explain why some men 'get it' early in life, while others never do, and how this affects their mating opportunities and determines which stratagems are viable. Jack also examined Female Attraction and the dynamics leading to female Sexual Submission. The difference is that visual stimuli leads directly to arousal with men, but only attraction for women. Game is often intended to stimulate female arousal, among other things.



Rollo's Take 3 on SS's Video

The third part of SS's video begins at 40:25.

SS comes to a conclusion that is now widely recognized in the Christian Manosphere…

> "It is more or less impossible to generate true, heart-pounding visceral attraction from a woman who was lukewarm about you in the first place.
>
> And that which follows heuristically:
>
> If you marry a woman who was not out of her mind (e.g. breaking the rules for you that she sets for other men) be prepared to deal with the consequences of that at any point later in the marriage."
>
> Σ Frame Axiom 9

Rollo responds at 41:25. Rollo dances around the subject again, so here I'll summarize Rollo's commentary and expand it according to my understanding.

SS's point is that a Meet Cute depends on both attraction and arousal being present at the get-go. Rollo asserts that the idea that SS is getting onto here, is that Game and self-improvement is pointless. Either you've 'got it', or you don't. In a rare circumstance, a man might meet someone who happens to be attracted by some unique traits that he possesses that she is especially interested in, but that's highly unlikely to generate arousal if it's not already present.

This is actually something that PUAs picked up on a long time ago, as David DeAngelo used to say, "Attraction is not a choice."

Stacey Thompson (center) can't hide her arousal while interviewing Flex Lewis, even in front of his bemused wife (right)!

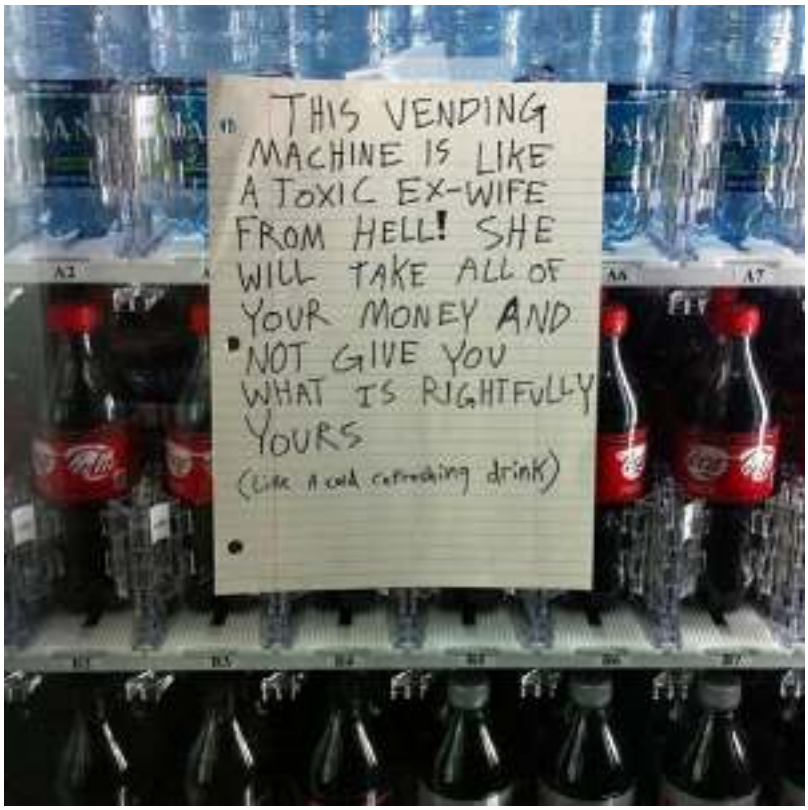
Rollo describes examples of four types of men to illustrate his points.

- If Jason Momoa was acting and dressing effeminately, women would still get hot for him. This is because women recognize that his appearance is incongruent with his deeper masculine character.
- Jake, a buddy he used to work with, was extremely good-looking but also hopelessly Blue Pilled. He could get laid and he did, but he could never keep a woman or turn [the relationship] into what he wanted it to be.
- Mystery (an old school PUA) got laid like tile, but he became really despondent and suicidal because he couldn't turn women into what he wanted them to be.
- Guys (like Ell!0t R0dgər for instance) who get the notion that if they said the right things and they did the right things, then they would in some way be successful in their reproductive trials and tribulations.

Using these examples, Rollo makes the following points.

- Women are quite skilled at sniffing out the 'real man', even when it is not outwardly obvious. (I presume he means that women's intuitions are subconsciously linked to arousal.)
- PUA grifters try to sell courses or make money off of convincing poor saps that if they say the right thing and they do the right thing then they'll be able to nail a hot blonde with big tits and blue eyes. (Rollo says this is NOT what he teaches.) Then, when guys figure out this doesn't 'work', then they get Black Pilled in a hurry. This disappointment is the whole premise of forums like PUA H@te and S1ut H@te.
- When you adopt the idea that there's nothing you can do, that there's no pick up line that is going to 'get' a girl interested who's not already interested, that there's nothing you can do to make yourself more attractive to women, or to kickstart a relationship, or get some action, or make any progress towards your sociosexual hopes and dreams, then you're putting your psychological well-being in peril. You're forfeiting hope and your sense of personal autonomy. You're on a trajectory towards the abyss.
- Context is everything. You can do things to put yourself into a more attractive light, and you can do things to put yourself into a more unattractive light.

The last point parallels Rowena's description of Female Attraction. Also, Oscar has revealed the error in regarding women as a vending machine in The Lie of Female Hypoagency (2024/4/1).



Rollo's Take 4 on SS's Video

The fourth part of SS's video begins at 59:00.

Speaking from his own experience, SS says he started having Meet Cutes when he was just barely 16 years old and then they continued to happen regularly. He says experiencing this during post-adolescence has a huge influence on a man's sociosexual development. It becomes an important part of his confidence, self-esteem, and self-image. SS says he enjoyed it, but he never really thought about the why's and wherefore's at all. When Meet Cutes are a regular occurrence, it is easy for a man to assume it is just a normal thing and take it for granted.

It wasn't until he started interacting with the Manosphere that he realized this is NOT every man's experience, as he says at 59:45…

> "Here's the part that really makes me uncomfortable as I engage with the men of the Manosphere. I get the feeling that there is a significant number of men who read Red Pill sites and engage with these sites and these blogs who have never had [a Meet Cute] happen to them. They've never had the Meet Cute story, not once, ever. Furthermore, I get the feeling that if you haven't had that happen to you by a certain age… you probably never will!"
>
> [Uncomfortable Pregnant Pause]

> "I want to end this video on something positive because I am a positive-thinking guy. I want people to win. I want people to get their goals met. I want men to Meet Cute girls [pun] and get married and have children and have a life and all that. I really want that! But I'm starting to get the feeling that some of this is like when an immovable object meets an irresistible force. I don't know where the dam is gonna break there. When I think about those Meet Cute stories that have happened to me over my lifetime, I didn't DO anything to make them happen. I didn't embark upon some self-improvement project. I didn't think, "Oh, you know… Here's what I've got to do to get girls…" It just happened, and I couldn't tell you what it was, and so I don't know what to do about that. I want people who have been doing this for longer than me like Rollo and Rich Cooper to say, "Oh no. You got it all wrong. This is how we're gonna get this to happen." Or "This is how we get it to happen. Here are some success stories…" or whatever."

At 1:02:00, Rollo recounts the story of having a Meet Cute at a bar that led to him meeting his wife. He emphasizes that he still had to be dominant, exercise his will, make decisions, and pursue her. He says the key is that a man must strike an effective balance between detachment and pursuance within the relevant context, and this is exactly why PUA is an ART having many techniques. Guys who 'get it' (like SS) don't need to learn it. But those who don't, need to get out there and practice, Practice, PRACTICE.

At 1:10:20, Rollo leaves SS' video about the Meet Cute phenomenon and begins talking about Game, pursuance, and answering questions from readers.

Summary

I would summarize Rollo's stance as thus.

Meet Cutes are important, they help get things rolling and make things easier and smoother, but Meet Cute or not, a man still has to take action — win or lose and there are no guarantees. The worst thing a man could do is to give up on himself and/or never make any effort.

Rollo's presentation appeals to the dire interests of secular men by explicating actionable Red Pill knowledge and feeding their fantasies of gaming and bedding chicks. Rollo attempts to strike a delicate balance between inspiring men to do better and warning them against despair.

Similarities of Opinion

Rollo and SS are in agreement about the nature and role of attraction. Both SS and Rollo agree that there has to be a genuine desire between the man and woman. SS muses about this in a spirit of wonder while Rollo explains that, for women, there is a difference between attraction and arousal.

Both men agree that women are unable to love a man in the way that a man wants to be loved, and that men cannot change a woman to be what he wants her to be. That is not to say that it is not impossible, but that she must choose to do this on her own initiative. Heh.

Differences of Opinion

Rollo's purpose is to help secular men grapple with the present debased SMP, and it is assumed men are looking to get laid, whereas SS's intentions were to match up with someone he could marry. Big difference.

Rollo believes Game and improving one's self has intrinsic value in attracting chicks and creating arousal, whereas, SS assumes that a man is either of the 'Have' or 'Have Not' variety, and nothing can be done to change this.

SS's viewpoint doesn't really jive with Rollo's outlook, because according to SS, women are trying to get into relationships and get laid more than men are, and there isn't much a man can do to alter his personal reality. All a man can do is work with whatever he finds. Furthermore, this rescinds Rollo's underlying assumption and fundamental principle that female affection must be earned by a man (viz. the Male Burden of Performance) — NOT through some kind of Blue Pill type of transaction (e.g. Chivalry, pedestalization, etc.), but through the development of masculine characteristics (charisma, confidence, detachment, LAMPS, Game, Mastery, etc.) that are attractive to women.

Objections

One could dismiss Rollo's stance on the grounds that he has a vested interest (i.e. his income) in proclaiming the virtues of exercising willful agency in Game and self-development.

One could also dismiss SS's position as naïvely sitting on his laurels and coasting by on his good genes. "Golly gee whiz, Opie! I can't get rid of all these pesky women!" Although this is a stupendous fantasy for the vast majority of men, it is a daily reality for a select few (like SS).

Ultimately, Rollo and SS are addressing two completely different audiences / viewpoints — the 'Have's' and the 'Have Not's'. This is important for understanding their differences of opinion, but both men have reasons for not stating this explicitly.

- Rollo doesn't want to discourage men.
- SS apparently thinks it to be controversial, rude, and unhelpful.

If we look at SS's viewpoint from Rollo's viewpoint, we can understand his scruples. The overriding theme of his show caters to men who are NOT naturals — men who, for the most part, aspire to be plate spinners / PUAs and who are either AMOGing about it or else trying to get laid. He may not want to empathize with SS too much because non-naturals / 'Have Not's' (his followers) have a love-hate relationship with Naturals / 'Have's' (like SS), characterized by admiration, bitterness, envy, and resentment.

The Christian Lens

SS's view of women concurs with Biblical, historic, and fabled accounts of successful relationships, whereas Rollo's viewpoint reflects the sexually impoverished modern man's reaction to the debacle of feminism.

SS's Meet Cute is a Christian approach, whereas Rollo's interpretation is not. The basic Christian approach that has been ascertained by the Christian Manosphere is for a man to first get himself together and be on his mission / purpose. Somewhere along the way, a woman notices him and joins him as a companion and helper (and possibly a wife). This approach has come to be embraced by the secular Manosphere as well, but only for men interested in LTR's / marriage.

Ed Hurst has been blogging about the secrets of building masculine character just as long as Rollo has. Ed makes it clear that a man can only improve himself through faith in God and that this requires (1) a covenant community, and (2) some length of time. Of course, this is not immediately satisfying to men who want to get laid in the next 24 hours and then sit poolside and watch civilization burn to the ground.

The Paradox of Desire

When we compare Rollo's and SS's perspectives, remarkably, they are both correct. This becomes evident when we consider that there is a paradox that accounts for the differences between their two positions. The paradox is that a man must take action, but if you prioritize finding a woman first, then it won't work out well in the long run.

Therefore, Rollo is correct in emphasizing that men need to put forth a concentrated effort to develop themselves, exercise will power, put themselves out there in a place where things can happen, learn to read IOIs, initiate action, showcase some Game / Rizz, dominate the sociosexual interaction, gain confidence, and last but not least, NOT give up on themselves. He says there are no guarantees, which glibly refers to the inherent paradox of desire. However, he never goes so far as to explain the nature of the paradox* and/or say that men must NOT prioritize p00n in order to actually 'get it', as SS surmises. He won't address this directly, because if he did, he'd lose most of his following. Characteristic of lust itself, the wanting is better than the having.

OTOH, SS is also correct in saying that it is the woman, NOT the man, who should be the crooner who is silly and sh!t-faced with desire — a nod to the Tingly Respect relationship structure. He is also correct in saying there's nothing a man can do through sheer willpower to make that happen. It is entirely dependent on context, propinquity, and the woman's freedom to choose. All he can do is be on top of his game and take action when it happens.

The paradoxical glitch is that if a man is truly detached, totally focused on his thing, and is 'in the zone', then he isn't going to be aware of any woman giving him IOIs. OTOH, if he is self-conscious enough to be aware of the impression he is making on others in the moment, then he'll lose his concentration and confidence. He'll lose the vulnerability competition, as Rollo puts it.

 I believe Rollo may have addressed this phenomenon elsewhere in his writings, but I'm not sure where. Maybe readers might know.*

Related

- Σ Frame: Models of Courtship and Marital Structure (2018/10/3)
- Σ Frame: Tingles = Respect (2018/10/6)
- Σ Frame: Placing the Marriage Structures within the Archetypical Models (2020/9/28)
- Σ Frame: More on Relational Archetypes (2020/11/28)
- Σ Frame: Determination and Detachment (2022/4/2)
- Christianity and Masculinity: What sexual attraction does and does not do (2022/8/28)

- Christianity and Masculinity: The differences between sexual attraction and sexual arousal (2022/9/1)
- Σ Frame: Slut Eye (2023/9/15)
- Christianity and Masculinity: A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage: Dominion is baked into the cake. Part 4 (2024/3/4)

Misapplied Models

Jack · 1 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Purpose disintegrates in the absence of vision, and vice versa.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Author's Note: This post has some input from Red Pill Apostle.
Reader's Note: I keep finding more problems with the Red Pill, so this series will continue for a while longer.
Length: 2,400 words
Reading Time: 13 minutes

> Where there is no prophetic vision, the people cast off restraint, but blessed is he who keeps the law.
>
> Proverbs 29:18 (ESV)

Overview

In the Exposition of this month's theme, A Failure of Knowledge Transference was identified as one type of problem with The Red Pill.

There are six main areas of knowledge transference that have been ineffective.

1. Models are misappropriated.
2. Models are misinterpreted.
3. Models are misunderstood.
4. Models are misapplied.
5. The Practical Application is Difficult, Elusive, Insurmountable, or Unacceptable
6. The Absence of Actionable Knowledge

This essay will cover the fourth.

Foundational reading includes the basics of modelling and 9 Types of Red Pill Models.

Intro

In this essay, I'll point out 4 of what I feel are the most egregious misapplications of Red Pill lore:

1. Trying to Achieve Logical Perfection as denial
2. Romantic Fantasy as escapism
3. The Purple Pill as idolatry
4. Trying to 'Fix' the Mating Market

I may cover some other faux pas in future posts as they come to my attention.

1. Trying to Achieve Logical Perfection (Denial)

As stated in a previous post, models are used to communicate abstract ideas. Also, models do not need to be 100% perfect for them to be useful in this regard. If for whatever reason, a man doesn't agree with the assumed principles of the model that is used to communicate a particular message (e.g. evolutionary psychology, natural selection, sociosexual dynamics, etc.), it does not revoke the validity or value of the message itself, as long as it is regarded in the proper context.

Nevertheless, instead of asking, "What is the nature of this phenomenon?" and "Am I like this in any way?" or "How could this information help me make better decisions?", men will be looking for incongruencies, logical errors, or any other justification to short-circuit a thorough introspection — all in order to weasel out of taking action or holding themselves responsible for the possible ramifications.

This is like women being confronted with their own solipsism and then saying, "But I'm not like that." It is a denial.

"If the shoe fits, then wear it."

That said, if a man finds that Rollo's model of 'love', Beta orbiting, Complementarianism, Wh!te Knighting, or any other secular model fits their life more accurately than a more Christian model, the response should NOT be to nitpick about whether the particular assumptions of the model are Biblical or scientific, or even true, etc., but to recognize this difference, own it (confess it), and then make some attempts to realign one's life to better fit a preferred model. A great deal of cultural awareness, self-awareness, and common sense is necessary in this regard.

I'll spell out some basic responses for the sake of illustration.

1. If a single Christian man is receiving IOIs and Meet Cutes from women, then perhaps marriage is in the cards for him –> so then choose the appropriate model of Headship. Making this happen might require other strategic or tactical models to be considered.
2. If a married Christian man is dissatisfied with his marriage, then there are things he can do to improve his situation –> Sift through the literature, talk with other men, and devise a strategy.
3. If a Headship marriage is unattainable or the risks too onerous to accept, then a man may do better to set his mind on GHOW. –> so then choose the appropriate model of celibacy.

The (all too common) WRONG responses are…

- To cite a lack of 100% accuracy in order to deny that an otherwise suitable model applies.
- To resign one's self to the fate predicted by a secular model, which leads to the Black Pill for most men.

There is no logical perfection here, only one being made perfect in her imperfection.

2. Romantic Fantasy (Escapism)

Another misapplication of Red Pill lore is when guys use theoretical models to derive an empirical ideal, and then use this romantic fantasy as a crutch or an excuse to dismiss or avoid dealing with inconvenient or unpleasant realities on the ground. It is essentially a philosophical evasion comparable to that of trying to achieve philosophical perfection, only the purpose is escapism rather than denial.

Romantic fantasies can be quite inspiring, but the problem with this is that it is invariably used to judge women, instead of inspiring a man to find hope and aim higher.

We see this happening with single dudes who make long checklists of traits they "must have" or will not tolerate in a woman, when in fact, they aren't even seeing anyone — men who say they want a virgin wife who don't even have a girlfriend. Dudes lost in fantasy land need to find a 'girlfriend' first, and then analyze what's going on.

We also see this happening with guys who have been seeing a girl for a while, but they'll come up with all kinds of excuses not to marry her. Guys shouldn't be wasting their time (and hers) with chicks they already know they're not willing to marry. These guys need to be assessing the feasibility of marriage early on, and make a decision ASAP. If he's already banging her, then they're essentially already married and he has already made that choice and needs to take responsibility for it. In this case, he needs to stop flagellating with fantasies of 'love', or finding a better or more perfect woman, spinning plates, or whatever, and face his fears of commitment, especially if she's preggo. (1 Corinthians 7:9)

We also see this happening when married men compare their wives to Red Pill ideals and then feel angry or despondent because they're stuck with someone they've come to see as debased, defiled, immature, problematic, subpar, substandard, or relatively unattractive. Then they check out of their marriages without doing anything to address what they perceive as a problem.

Instead of judging women and flirting with escapism, men should use Red Pill information to develop the skills a man (husband) needs to manage a woman (e.g. his wife). Red Pill concepts should be applied towards solving the daily conflicts and issues that a man faces in his relationship / marriage. The majority of issues can be solved simply by telling the GF / wife the magic words, "No" and "You are mine", stating some expectations, and making a few demands.

"No. Your threats and fits will not get you what you want."

"No. You may not drink more than one bottle of wine per day."

"No. I will not physician shop to obtain more narcotics for your addiction."

"No. You may not spend one penny more than what we've budgeted for real estate."

"No. I will not change my mind and I will defend my family from all threats, including you."

Of course, women will act like they hate this, but deep inside they love it. She doesn't need to agree, she just needs to know that she has a dominant Head. She'll comply with time, and if she doesn't, it's on her.

A man judging women and/or engaging in denial / escapism / romantic fantasy is evading his responsibility as a Head and will lose opportunities for grace and growth. His inability, or possibly unwillingness, to guide her, teach her, and check her excesses will prevent him from finding / keeping a GF / wife, and will only lead to bitterness, disappointment, frustration, hard times, heartache, legal issues, and ultimately the dissolution of the relationship / marriage.

To offer some perspective, the Orthodox Church teaches that the married person is responsible for the salvation of his/her husband or wife. If a man has a rebellious wife, it would be easy to misinterpret this teaching as being hopelessly condemned to hell. But properly understood, this as a missive to take responsibility for one's influence on the marriage.

3. The Purple Pill (Idolatry)

Since its inception, there have always been attempts made to adapt Red Pill truths to solve Blue Pill problems. In general, this approach is called the Purple Pill.

Protestant Evangelicalism used to be solidly Blue Pill, but ever since the Red Pill has gone mainstream, churchianism has taken on a Purple tinge. More and more evangelical bloggers, pastors, and teachers are usurping Red Pill ideas and brandishing Red Pill terms. Most of them are attempting to appear culturally informed in order to relate to younger generations. Few of them take the Red Pill lore seriously. Straw Man models are often misapplied as an abstract hyperbolic criticism of cherry picked groups of men (e.g. the Manosphere, !ncels, deadbeat dads, et al.), or are dismissed as m!s0gyn!st!c, and NOT as general wisdom.

A variation of the Purple Pill problem also appears in Selling Blue Pills Painted Red, where a man is valued for his ability to get laid, or a man's self-esteem is dependent on his ability to attract and/or Game women.

Ultimately, the Purple Pill is a compromise with hypoagentic gynocentrism. IOW, idolatry.

No. The Red Pill has always been about understanding and dealing with reality — especially that which is hard to grasp and accept — reality that defies common sense (such as women's seemingly inane behaviors), and/or eludes intuitive understanding (such as the nature of women), or is inconvenient, unpleasant, or flat-out ugly. The Christian Red Pill has always been about returning to the basics of life and marriage, and adapting to reality with the lens of faith and the aim of greater obedience to the Lord.

Ultimately, the Red Pill (of either variety) is a source of wisdom. It is a praxeology for living wisely (or more foolishly, depending on one's values), NOT "define the unicorn and chase after it".

The Red Pill teaches the truth about analyzing potential (or the lack thereof), what works in real-life with real women (which is of inestimable valuable to married men), assessing what's actually available on the market and figuring out how to deal with it, and what can be reasonably expected as a result of certain actions or choices.

4. Trying to 'Fix' the Mating Market

Dead Bedroom Dating wrote,

> "These men are missing fundamental understanding, because they stopped at a certain layer to stick to the Blue Pill. They're convinced that the system fundamentally works and something did go wrong somewhere, like some machinery that needs to be fixed and repaired.
>
> However, androgyny, divorce gr@pe, children suffering or not being born at all (MGTOW) are natural outcomes of the society they live in and nurture by furthering it through participating in its labor market. That's the Red Pill they won't accept. The iPhone is just too important to face the truth. They can complain all they want, but MGTOW is not some aberrant feature, it's also one of the regular outcomes.
>
> And this is the reason why marriage is perfectly fine in parallel societies, who just do not participate in the idolatry which is worshiping machinery."

… and the gynocracy. (I would interpret 'iPhone' and 'machinery' as representations of materialism.)

Vending machines are tired of being used and abused.
Interestingly, the word ‘fix’ (in bold) takes on multiple entendres here.

1. To repair or put in order.
2. To assume a rigid, solid, or unchanging form.
3. A position from which it is difficult (for women) to escape.
4. To neuter an animal (to prevent procreation).

When men talk as though the mating market needs to be ‘fixed’, I believe they’re implying all four of these meanings, although they might only admit the first.

Dead Bedroom Dating wrote,

> “The Red Pill still is not about complaining how the sexual market changed, it’s about empirically recognizing what is real and what works and adapting to it. And the landscape is changing continuously.”

Yes, and the only thing that doesn’t change is change itself. Just when they begin to understand what’s going on, the game changes and then they’re back to square one.

The reason why this change is upsetting to men and generates complaints is because…

- They’re focused on establishing a sense of emotional stability and psychological comfort.
- They’re unable to face their own needs and they expect others (i.e. a woman) to feed their needs. (Hint: Only God can satisfy certain needs.)
- They’re trying to mastermind their own lives instead of trusting in God.
- They prefer to languish in a needy state, revel in a poverty mentality, and play the role of the adorer. After all, this is much easier and more enjoyable than working on themselves; being decisive, building an internal locus of control, establishing a domain of influence, maintaining an attitude of detachment, and so on.

All in all, this mindset displays a lack of confidence and faith. It is trying to play God, as described in Misinterpreted Models.

Sooner or later, men will have to accept the fact that the mating market is 'broken', and it will always be 'broken'. It cannot be 'fixed' to one's liking. But in fact, it isn't 'broken' at all. It is, just as it is, like it or not, the playing field in which God has ordained for us to glorify Him. The bottom line is whether you can navigate it and find contentment somehow. You can't keep the above mentality and glorify God through faith at the same time. IOW, the problem is not the 'broken' mating market, it is one's attitude. If you think the mating market needs 'fixed', you may be entirely right in principle, but in reality, it is you that needs fixed. The brokenness of the mating market is simply the impetus that God is using to kick you out of your comfort zone and take real action in your life.

So put that in your pipe and smoke it.

Concluding Statements

Here I've only covered 4 ways that men misapply models, and I suppose there are others. But the larger issue is that men misapply models for reasons. These reasons include…

1. They have no sense of self, no masculine identity.
2. They have no vision, no concept of how things could be, or should be.
3. They have no well-defined purpose, other than pursuing their own conveniences and pleasures.
4. They are more interested in checking out: escapism, idolatry, and judging others.
5. They believe false or misleading doctrine (e.g. complementarianism, egalitarianism, etc.)
6. They hold false value systems (e.g. Chivalry, female hypoagency / male hyperagency, gynocentrism, One-itis, prescient obsessions with 'love', etc.)
7. Hesitancy and indecision caused by a general lack of confidence and faith.

A man would do well to check himself to see if he harbors any of these reasons for misapplying Red Pill concepts.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Red Pill and Blue Pill as Paradigms of Sanctification and Defilement (with a mathematical analogy) (2020/11/15)
- Σ Frame: The Ever Looming Black Pill (2022/9/12)

But I'm not like that!

thedeti · 3 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

You can't argue with an emoticon.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misunderstood Models / Misapplied Models
Author's Note: This post expands several comments I've made in the past, with some input from Jack.
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Why is it that every conversation eventually devolves into a discussion of what women want?

Why is it that men can never talk about what men want and need?

It's because there is no way men can ever win the "men need things too" argument with women. Never. The basic reason is because most men are not attractive, and because men are expendable, and women have no time, no reason, and no motivation to listen to non-Tingle inducing men. But women will do this to all men!

Every time men talk about what they want and need, women take it extremely personally. They all think we are coming directly to them and telling them, personally, that they need to "do something" or "give [men] something".

Women are completely and totally unable to think abstractly or objectively about this. Women are completely and totally unable to look at facts, data, statistics, and logic, and divorce themselves from their own feelings about this. Even women who genuinely love the man they're with or who are married will get defensive whenever men drop the pretty lies that women love to hear and start speaking impartially and objectively. Whenever generalities are made, women will immediately launch into her feelings about it and then an argument ensues.

The reason is because for women, everything is personal. "The personal is political." Remember that from feminism? Everything's personal. Everything is always and forever about how it affects her, personally. Everything's an attack on her or an accolade to her. Everything's good for her or bad for her. Everything's always all about her.

Facts don't matter. Logic and reason don't matter. Data, statistics – all irrelevant. All that matters is how that lil ol girl sitting there feels about it.

I see this EVERY time this is discussed at Sigma Frame, or Spawny's Space, or on Reddit. EVERY time I say "Women are X" or "Men don't like Y from women", it always devolves into…

"I'm not like that!"

"But my friends aren't like that!"

"But church women aren't like that!"

Followed by…

"Where's the nuance?"

"That makes me feel bad!"

"You can't generalize like that!"

"Why are you always saying ALL this and ALL that?"

Eventually culminating in…

"You're attacking me!"

Or

"Shut up you m!s0gynist incel!"

Or the classic bulverism,

"Who hurt you?!?"

My all-time favorite signal that she has no argument.

The fact that she has no argument is exactly why you can't ever win this argument. This is also exactly why men should never get into arguments with women.

Can't talk about facts. Can't talk about what's generally true, because well, "my first cousin's friend's mom's secretary wasn't 'like that', so you're just an !ncel and you shut up!"

There's no way to deal with that. None. No way to respond to women who won't deal with facts, data, statistics, and men's lived experiences.

We might think that this is a Misunderstood Model, that is, women are making a false deduction from an inductive model. But actually, they're not capable of that depth of reasoning.

What's really happening here is women are being faced with facts and cannot deal with it, so they deflect and evade to their fee fees, where they have the rhetorical upper hand, and say, "I am feeling bad and therefore YOU are bad and NO SEX FOR YOU, YOU BIG MEANIE POOPY HEAD !NCEL!"

What is clearly understood is that admitting to the legitimacy of the facts and recognizing the model, opinions, etc. as valid would lead to women being held accountable for their actions, and that is utterly anathema! That must be avoided at all costs!

So you see, it is a Misapplied Model. It's not misunderstood at all; it is intentionally denied and evaded. No purpose, no vision, and everything is taken personally.

If you don't give in to their psychological abuse and keep hammering on the facts, then eventually women get bored and tired. Their eyes glaze over and they'll cut off the convo in favor of doing something else more 'exciting'. So then women will say things like…

"This conversation is stupid."

"This is not exciting at all."

"This is sooo booooriiiing."

Here, 'stupid' is a projection. 'Excitement' is an anesthetic of distraction which is necessary to prevent them from ever facing the truth about reality or themselves and thus developing agency. 'Boring' means that no such 'excitement' is present, and so some extra work is required to prevent themselves from getting real. Remember that for young women, agency is anathema. Having fun and sticking it to men is a much more enjoyable alternative.

At that point, the message is, "You and your opinion — men's opinions – don't mean jack sh!t to me! So go F_ck off, yew moron!"

That's how these arguments always go. And that's why men always lose. And that's why they're walking away.

Related

- Σ Frame: The 13 Harbingers of Masculine Doom (2022/9/7)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Deti on Female Agency (2022/11/8)
- Σ Frame: What we've learned about Female Agency (2022/12/20)
- Σ Frame: Asherah Makes Demands: Give Women what they want! (2023/2/27)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Lie of Female Hypoagency (2024/4/1)

The Ways of Women Around the World

Jack · 6 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Case studies of implementing Red Pill models.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Misapplied Models
Note: Profiles are based on real people; the data and details are guesstimated.
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

In this post, I'll offer 3 case studies to lay out simplified examples of how Red Pill models are regularly used by laymen. The purpose is for readers to consider how these models might be misapplied.

Case Study 1 — Stacy Sidener

Data: Stacy is a 20 year old white female. She grew up in the northwest U.S.A. Her parents divorced when she was 12, and she has lived with her mother since then. She is an extroverted, outgoing socializer. She's attending Beaver Valley Community College. She's had (at least) 2 boyfriends during her freshman year. She initiated the break up with both. She also has an IG account with several hundred followers.

Hypothesis: Stacy is a carousel rider in the making.

Model: AF/BB

Prediction: Stacy will up her N count to 14 before she burns out. Then she'll marry a Beta when she's ~28. She'll have 2 children and will divorce after 7 years. (Figures based on data used to form the AF/BB model.)

Results: (After 20 years) No data on total N count is available, but there is strong evidence for N > 4. Stacy married Billy Beta when she was 29. She had 1 girl and divorced after 6 years of marriage.

Conclusions: There are some deviations, but the model is confirmed.

Practical Applications: Don't date or marry Stacy. Don't be Billy Beta.

Case Study 2 — Francesca Flores

Data: Francesca is a 20 year old Hispanic female. She grew up in eastern Columbia. She was born while her mother was having an extended turbid affair with a local gang lord. She lives with her mother and younger brother, and she sees her father frequently — too frequently for her own peace of mind. She has many friends in her community, but is very close to only one other girl. She and her mother both work at a local textile mill during the day and sell homemade food in the evening. She is too busy to spend much time online. She has many men asking her for dates, but she is distrustful of men and wary of being taken advantage of. Her mother has warned her with tears to choose a man wisely.

Hypothesis: Francesca is too distrustful of men to successfully form a LTR. She is a side chick in the making.

Model: Gold Digger / Side Chick

Prediction: Francesca will eventually find a wealthy man to her liking, but he will be married or otherwise unavailable for a full commitment. She'll have 2 children.

Results: (After 20 years) N count = 1. Francesca has had a long term relationship with a relatively wealthy businessman who supplies paper packaging for her mother's food sales. She has 2 children with him and has been faithful to him, although not without regrets. Her man provides for her and her children's needs, but is seldom present in her life.

Conclusions: There are some deviations, but the model is confirmed.

Practical Applications: Be a Columbian ganglord. Go into the paper packaging and distribution business.

Case Study 3 – Poon Tang

Data: Poon is a 20 year old Asian female. She grew up on a small island off the coast of Thailand. She has several brothers and sisters and lives with a large extended family, numbering almost two dozen individuals. Her family has one computer that everyone shares. She has an email account and a Facebook account. She is a quiet girl who likes to spend time outdoors. She did well in high school, but she has no plans to attend college.

Hypothesis: Poon is family-oriented, happy, and content.

Model: Trad Wife

Prediction: Poon will marry and have children early, and settle down into married life. She'll have 4 children.

Results: (After 20 years) Total N count = 1. Poon met a fisherman who often came to the island to sell fish. She married him when she was 22. She continued to live at home with her family while her husband was gone fishing. She raised 6 children with the help of her family.

Conclusions: There are some deviations, but the model is confirmed.

Practical Applications: Visit SEA islands. Consider being a Thai fishmonger.

Conclusions

Okay, some of the suggested applications were satire. Even so, readers can see how these models can provide a framework in which a trajectory can be established, and red flags and potential pitfalls can be recognized early enough to conduct a reasonably valid risk vs return analysis, and to guide some decision-making. It is critically important to be certain that an appropriate model is chosen for the context in question. This is why it is said, "Watch what women do, not what they say."

But of course, there's always the chance that things could turn out differently.

Remember, purpose disintegrates in the absence of vision, and vice versa.

Related

- Σ Frame: 13 Disciplines in Dealing with Delectable Daughters (2018/1/29)
- Σ Frame: Teaching our daughters well is the early foundation of successful wife moulding (2020/2/14)
- Σ Frame: Parental Divorce Ruins Daughters' Future Marital Commitment and Confidence (2021/2/24)

- Σ Frame: Those Old Notions of Equality (2023/12/25)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Sowing and Reaping (2024/1/5)
- Σ Frame: How Feminist Mothers create Feminist Daughters (2024/2/28)

A Failure of Knowledge Transference in Practical Applications

Jack · 8 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The fear of suffering is a hindrance to the clarity of purpose.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

> [3] …we also celebrate in our tribulations, knowing that tribulation brings about perseverance; [4] and perseverance, proven character; and proven character, hope; [5] and hope does not disappoint, because the love of God has been poured out within our hearts through the Holy Spirit who was given to us.
>
> Romans 5:3-5 (NASB)

Overview

In the Exposition of this month's theme, A Failure of Knowledge Transference was identified as one type of problem with The Red Pill.

There are six main areas of knowledge transference that have been ineffective.

1. Models are misappropriated.
2. Models are misinterpreted.
3. Models are misunderstood.
4. Models are misapplied.
5. The Practical Application is Difficult, Elusive, Insurmountable, or Unacceptable
6. The Absence of Actionable Knowledge

This essay will cover the fifth.

Foundational reading includes the basics of modelling and 9 Types of Red Pill Models.

Intro

Upon brainstorming for this post, I considered how knowledge transference might be ineffective because the practical application is difficult, elusive, insurmountable, or unacceptable. But after some thought, I concluded that although this general sentiment might be very prevalent among men, it is merely a cope that boils down to a pithy, "I don't wanna take any action", or merely, "I'm not content / haaappy." So then the human mind naturally creates all sorts of justifying reasons for why said (in)action is so.

Here, I'm NOT saying that practical applications are NOT difficult, elusive, insurmountable, or unacceptable. For most men, they truly are. I'm saying that the transference of Red Pill knowledge is stymied when men run into a brick wall and then decide to discard or explain away the information to excuse themselves from the challenge. If readers can think of any situation other than sheer foolishness, ignorance, or stupidity that might be truly justified, then please leave a comment.

So instead of hashing through all the contexts, justifications, and reasons why men might misappropriate, misinterpret, misunderstand, and misapply Red Pill models because the practical application is difficult, elusive, insurmountable, or unacceptable (there are at least 16 different permutations before delineating various contextual nuances, BTW), I'll cut straight to the crux of the issue.

Suffering is Inevitable

It is seldom pointed out that much of the motivation behind the development and the continuing interest in the Red Pill is for the exclusive purpose of avoiding or alleviating the suffering related to relationships, sex, singleness, marriage, and approaching and dealing with women in general.

However, if one should dare to bite into the bitter core of the Red Pill, one will see the same conundrum of suffering being manifested in the practical application of Red Pill knowledge. Anyone who is intimately familiar with the Red Pill will find that there is no easy path, no panacea, no silver bullet, and no simple solution to be had. Whatever practical application, stratagem, or tactic is employed, it is merely trading one set of sufferings for another.

For example…

Looksmaxxing and working out will reduce some of the suffering of getting no play in the SMP. But this requires discipline, time, money, and intense physical effort in the gym. At what point does the effort invested in self-improvement exceed the benefits or payoffs that motivate it?

Learning Game has been touted as a method of improving one's relationships with women and people in general. But this requires a significant effort involving literally hundreds of starts, sets, and rejections. At what point does a man come to conclude that the humiliating dancing monkey buffoonery followed by nuclear rejection from sub-4 women causes greater harm to his ego than simply admitting that it's not worth all the trouble and GHOW?

Supposing that a man is successful in learning Game and mastering the art of seduction, he creates an identity for himself that is largely centered around the fleshly nature. Therefore, even though he might be getting some short term satisfaction, he must also endure all the guilt, shame, sin, temptation, and trouble that comes with that.

OTOH, if a man prioritizes godliness and keeps himself undefiled by women, then he may very well fail to capitalize on any opportunities he may have otherwise found. (I say this not to justify sin, but in recognition of the grace of God.) Then he must endure the loneliness, regret, sadness, and loss of confidence and social status that may very well come with that, despite his faith.

Furthermore, a man cannot simply cross his arms and wash his hands of the whole mess either. It would be a sin to assess the reality on the ground and then give up all hope without diligently trying one's hand to see what one is made of. Like a man who puts his hand on the plow and then looks back (Luke 9:62), it would be a grave mistake to ingest Red Pill knowledge, and then turn Purple Pill (a misapplication of TRP) — or the alternative — turn Black Pill, fear being 'used' (by God), abandon faith, and then resign one's self to fate, or worse. Also, one cannot dismiss Red Pill truths as false pseudo-science without committing grave denial.

So you see, any way you look at it, and no matter what choice a man makes, there is suffering.

Epilogue

Perhaps the bitterest Red Pill of all is the fact that we are living in a fallen sinful world, and suffering in some form or fashion is inescapable. In fact, suffering is necessary to fulfill God's ordained purpose for men (1 Peter 2:19-23; 1 Peter 4:12-14; 1 Peter 5:10; or all of 1 Peter for the full story).

Not even Christ escaped this reality, even though He could have (Hebrews 2). If God sent His own Son to suffer and die, then why should we sinful men expect to be treated any better?

Christ willingly chose suffering as the best option, all things considered. Likewise, men who choose their own sufferings are farther ahead in the grand game of life than those who suffer passively or unwillingly as a consequence of poor decisions (1 Peter 4:1-2).

Guys who are only looking for a way out of suffering will read this to mean that the practical application is difficult, elusive, insurmountable, or unacceptable. But as I wrote above, suffering is inevitable, no matter what course of action is taken or not taken. There is nothing that can be done to escape this reality. It is a delusion / solipsistic fantasy to even imagine that sufferings can be summarily resolved and eliminated. The best we can do is to accept the possibility of the worst possible outcome, to face these sufferings head on, and begin building our frame from there up.

If one is to engage in any self-improvement, it must be done for its own sake and/or for the Kingdom, and NOT in the hope of attracting women or avoiding any difficulties related to women. Some things in life are out of our control, and in this day and age, that includes women.

But as the great St. deti has often said, "P_ssy is the great motivator". The problem is that without this motivation, few men would pursue self-improvement.

Even so, we continue to hear lazy solipsistic statements conveying utopian dreams of poon paradise, which only amount to a temporary mental / soul anesthetization and a postponement of action. Grifters make their money by capitalizing on this weakness in men. They sell a dream that doesn't exist for most men, and is very difficult to attain for a select few. As long as they can prop up a plausible premonition of pimply post-adolescent peckers impaling prime poon, they'll be in perpetual prosperity.

It would be more honest (and more brutal) to tell men what I've written here — that there is no way to avoid spending yourself and breaking yourself in this life, in one way or another… A man who has somehow avoided the crucifixion of masculinity has never really lived. Perhaps he has never truly become a man in the fullest sense of being. So the key lies in wisely choosing the brand of suffering that is right for you, and embarking on the path chosen well-girded for the task.

The bottom line is that a man must choose his flavor of suffering, endure it, and accept the outcome. If he has chosen a set of sufferings that offer the possibility of redemption, then he'll have something to show for it. If he can find contentment in his chosen path, he has chosen wisely.

Women Must Suffer Too

On a parallel topic, a woman must also choose her flavor of suffering, briefly summarized here.

Choice 1: Gleefully riding the carousel for 10 years followed by 40+ years of corporate labor, cats, wine, and intense loneliness.

Choice 2: Doing the hard work of preparing themselves for marriage, possibly feeling disappointed with the quality of man she can actually get a marital commitment from, followed by spending the rest of her years doing the daily drudgery of domestic work. The benefit is that she has a clear conscience, an intact faith, a good reputation, and a husband and family to share life with.

Because of the nature of 'defilement', there isn't really anything in between. Once a woman gets shagged, the cat is out of the bag.

Related

- Bible Verses about Perfection, Through Suffering
- Σ Frame: God's Silence During Suffering (2009/12/14)
- Σ Frame: Analysis Paralysis is the Gateway to the Abyss (2022/9/19)
- Σ Frame: The TLDR on Suffering (2023/3/10)

- Σ Frame: 6. The Law of Evaluation (2024/1/18)
- Σ Frame: Wandering in Search of God (2024/1/20)
- Σ Frame: 9. The Law of Activity (2024/1/27)
- Σ Frame: How to be Happy, No, Really (2024/4/19)

Connecting the Dots

Jack · 10 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The Red Pill spells doom for those who wish to save the gynocratic civnattery.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / A Failure of Knowledge Transference
Length: 2,200 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes

Intro

The fellows at Scored / Kotaku In Action 2 have been discussing Problems with The Red Pill — Exposition (2024/3/1) under a post entitled, The State of the Manosphere (2024/3/5). Some of the comments are quite insightful. I've copied a few here and arranged them to form a dialogue.

The contents of this dialogue represent another manifestation of a Failure of Knowledge Transference; only in this case, the knowledge that is lost is NOT Red Pill knowledge; it is…

The Dirty Secret of Maintaining Western 'Civilization'

Info asks,

> "Why has 'Red Pill' become a dirty word even for the attachment specialist?"

TheOpiner answers Info's question.

> "I get the impression that the current strategy by those critical of the Red Pill / Manosphere is to poison the well, censor the philosophical content, and make it so socially stigmatised that everyone moves back toward family values, feminism, and gynocracy."

Well, feminism and gynocracy, yes. But family values? Nuh uh. Nope.

You see, if the dirty secret of maintaining a civilization is no longer a secret, and men are reacting to this nasty truth by pulling out and letting it fester, crash, and burn, then the final culmination of widespread Red Pill awareness ends in societal-wide nihilism. THAT is why 'Red Pill' has become a dirty word, adding to the fact that it contains many MANY inconvenient, rude, and unpleasant truths.

F_ckGenderPolitics relays this story to explain why.

> "Building and maintaining civilization is impossible without stopping women and their Chad chasing from torpedoing the whole thing, and the truth is there aren't any great options for solving the problem. The most effective one historically was enforcing monogamy by various means, but that involved gaslighting beta providers into thinking their b!tch wives' campaign to punish them for not being Chad was part of their "angelic" nature."

What FGP calls 'gaslighting' is the sophisticated art of NOT disturbing men's altruistic, idealistic fantasies of 'love', which naturally serves as a useful smokescreen that conceals women's preferred mating strategy of soft polyandry / serial monogamy, thus keeping it secretive.

If this secret were put into words, it might be phrased like this.

"You've somehow proven yourself to be good looking enough, rich enough, generous enough, desperate enough, and stupid enough to entertain the atten$ion of a carousel rider in decline who's already pre-cucked you. Now, we know it's just your turn, but we'll let you believe you're the only one who gets a turn. And if she's lousy at keeping her past a secret, then we'll let you believe you're the only one who 'truly matters'. If you want to gaslight yourself into believing she's 'truly yours', well then our work is easy. Maybe we can come up with some pretty lies to that effect, in order to reduce our work of maintaining your delusion."

The Red Pill blows those pretty lies to smithereens.

But the problem with this is that keeping women's profligacies secret and downplaying the harm done is absolutely necessary to keep men on The Plantation™, as FGP goes on to explain.

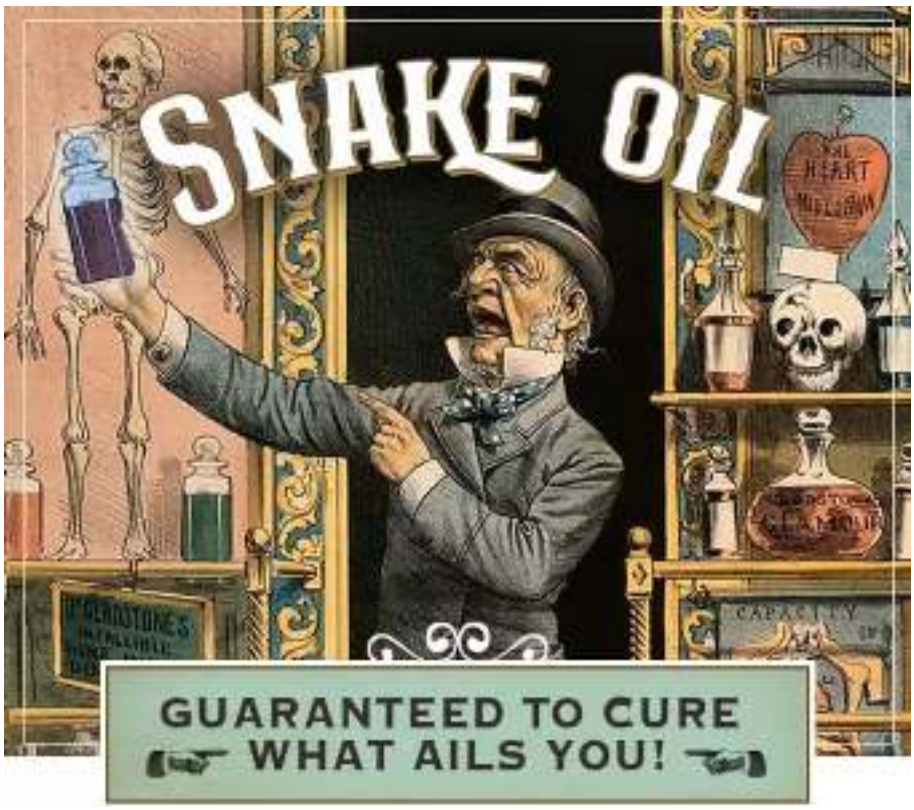
> "The truth is there aren't many men who would participate in this charade if they knew their wives saw them as subhumans to be exploited and discarded (and preferably put to death afterwards, but the feminists haven't managed to work that into the divorce laws yet). Both sides of the coin are eager to defend the web of lies they've spun about intergender relations because without men the whole clown show crashes and burns."

Thus, to further answer Info's question, the Red Pill has become a dirty word because it is spilling the big s1ut secret and anti-gaslighting men, which ironically spells big trouble for maintaining Western Civnattery.

A Concerted Effort to Rebuild the Mound / Save The Plantation™

KingLion7 points out that there is a concerted effort to save The Plantation™ by condemning all things Red Pill.

> "There have always been feminists, both overt lefties and covert normies cons / churchians, doing just that.



> There are a great deal of snake oil salesmen claiming to be “Red Pilled” on YouTube however, and even normie media occasionally tries to claim the phrase.”

TheOpiner adds,

> “I’ve noticed the Right have also been doing that in recent times too, particularly since the demographic downturn in births and marriages.”

Red Pill Nihilism

It is not difficult for these entities to vilify The Red Pill. The_Shadow_of_Intent writes,

> “No offense to anyone in the “movement,” but the Red Pill as I understand it originally was great as a description of our times, horrible as a prescription. Understanding the true instinctive nature of women? Cool. Going out and spinning as many plates as possible? You’re just making it worse for everyone else and setting yourself up for the same lonely childless existence as roasties.”

SoctaticMethod1 explains that it is no longer feasible to maintain the big secret, because feminism has poisoned The Plantation™.

> “…unless you remove women as the necessary part of having kids you ain’t going to get far.
>
> A lot of men WANT to be fathers, teachers, and masters to apprentices, and feminists have skillfully and vindictively put barriers and roadblocks to that. Unless you remove that by both learning away from the institutions they dominate and even do artificial wombs, everything else is bandaid at best, cope at worst.”

SoI concludes,

> “I get the idea, to basically look out for number 1 in a time of social doom. It’s not like there’s a lot of good > ideas out there.

Sheer Selfishness

Another strike against the Red Pill is the sheer selfishness that accompanies it.

Lethn writes,

> "…you can simplify what happened to the Red Pill movement pretty easily these days just by saying it's filled with church grifters among other things. I think what isn't talked about nearly enough is how especially with these podcasters that have mysteriously popped up over the years I have a deep suspicion of Musl!m glowie involvement. There seems to be a concerted push by the Red Pill movement these days to get young men going towards religion in one form or another and the Red Pillers don't seem to care which religion they go for."

I assume Lethn is talking about the Red Pill 2.0, but I think he is somewhat off on that. Men turning to religion, i.e. Christianity, was one of the final culminations of taking the original Red Pill 1.0. Many men who were intentionally running away from God eventually found Him at the bottom of the barrel — to everyone's surprise. A strange irony.

SoI writes,

> "But the fact that the Manosphere is now a bunch of hucksters fronting rented Lambos and trying to pass off paid whores as a harem should not come as a surprise. Selfishness breeds hustlers."

Anti-gaslighting is now the rave because knowing the truth allows men to be just as selfish as women too. Another irony.

GhostBond adds,

> “Most groups have this happen to them, the exceptions are work, and ones where well-funded powerful people manipulate things to keep the group alive.”

GhostBond also spells out how sheer selfishness can ‘work’ for some men.

> “I know someone who [went out and spun as many plates as possible]. He’s getting married this summer.
>
> Guys who are actually doing it typically get into a cycle.
>
> 1. It’s awful to get started.
> 2. It’s fun for a while and the novelty is exciting.
> 3. The novelty wears off and they start to realize that one vagina is not really different than another.
> 4. The guy either leaves completely — or he finds a girl who’s trying to make him happy, and realizes everything will be way more enjoyable to F_ck someone who’s waiting for him at home, than it would be to continue having to go out to the store every time he wants to F_ck.

Playing House is better than an endless tiresome hunt for h0es in a debased market.

SoI responded,

> "Good for him, but history shows getting married is just the start. The abysmal decline of marriage health in the Boomer generation set us up for a lot of today's problems, and it can be hard to adjust from a life of self-interest. c.f. pair bonding rates declining with an increase in sexual partners. I wish him luck."

Yes, it's good for a select few, catastrophe for everyone else.

A Plethora of Red Pill Prescriptions — with Limitations

DistilledLife wrote,

> "There are core ideas to the Red Pill shared throughout the Manosphere, but there's different methodologies for internalizing and making use of this information. It also really depends on who you receive the information from (Rollo, Chateau, HoeMath, trp.red, etc.), and can distort one's view on a possible solution to problems of modern society."
>
> "Some take the RP and "go their own way", just drop out of the game completely. Some of these are incels that are just giving up, others are those that actually have gotten some before and are just tapping out."
>
> "The "prescription" [GhostBond is] describing is the PUA / Game answer to how to go about navigating the SMP, probably the oldest variant of the "solution" I'm aware. It's gained the most traction for desperate men trying to get some nookie. And the traditionalist response to this happening is just typical Purple Pill pilpul. I would argue the men doing this spinning stuff just don't care, and you won't be able to shame them out of it."

F_ckGenderPolitics writes,

> "My main issue with the prescriptive side of the Red Pill is that it only works for a subset of men (the ones who have a mutable characteristic that keeps them from being a Chad) but grifters looking to sell sh!tty books > and overpriced coaching sessions are pushing the lie that anyone can be an alpha. The 5′ 6” guy with a rat face is never going to be able to get into a relationship with a woman who isn’t exploiting him (at least not a Western one). He’s best off going MGTOW or geomaxxing if he insists on trying his hand at family life.”

Tourgen agrees.

> “Yeah, I don’t think it’s actually prescriptive, and anyone saying it is is selling you something.
>
> “Spinning plates” is not a longtime lifestyle. it does protect men from one-itis that many young men fall into. Women aren’t unique or “The One”. They’re all kind of the same and when you date a few of them you understand, and not really before.”

Lethn continues,

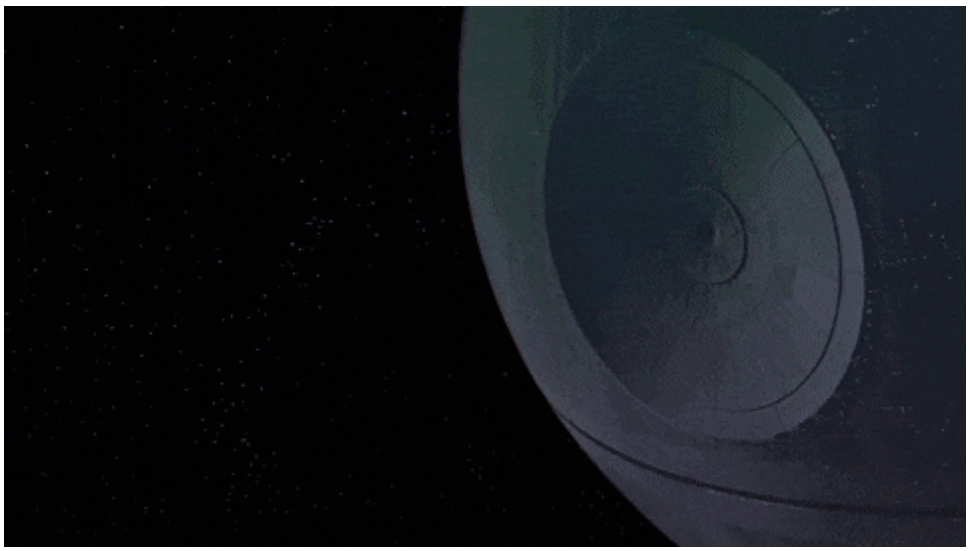
> “I do agree with the general criticisms of the new Red Pill movement, because it does very much fall in line with the tradcuck beliefs of how men should give themselves up to women instead of standing up to their behaviour and that makes them ‘alphas’ for doing that. Which is where a lot of the strange artificial looking “Hurr durr get married and have a family that will show them” with zero mention of all the problems men face in that situation with family court, mental health, and su!c!de, etc., not to mention false accusations and paternity fraud.”

The reason why God has allowed the Red Pill to gain prominence is because it allows those men who have the wherewithal to assume authority and thus, a greater chance of redemptive suffering is manifested, as opposed to woodchipper suffering.

A Historical Summary

GiveThemNothing gives us a summary of the damage.

> "Some historical context, as far as I recall and understand it:
>
> - The Red Pill was the realization what female nature truly is and how it is weaponized by The System™ to keep men obedient and subservient.
>
> The concept that The Plantation™ exists and that women are unaware but willing agents of The System™ is THE KEY realization of TRP.
>
> - PUAs joined in and realized that The System™ can be Gamed, and subverted TRP into "be the bestest prettiest Clown House Boy and the Massas will choose you for sex. Game, Lyyyiiifftt, Hodl Framez, ALPAH!!!", and other stupid inanities.
> - MGTOW rose against the PUA movement, as a statement of personal ownership and refusal to participate.
>
> MGTOW's most valuable realization is that THERE ARE NO "Alpahs" in The Plantation™, ONLY SL@VES.
>
> - Passport Bros came along and posited that one CAN exit The System™ and live a reasonably fulfilled life building a family with an attractive feminine woman in a country where men are not hated and disadvantaged.



> Only time will tell if this is just a delusion and we are stepping out and into another, more global Matrix.
>
> What we all agree upon, around the Manosphere, is that The System™ is rotten to the core and is irretrievably damaged in its current form."

Yes, there's no turning back now. Alderaan is destroyed. Returning to The Plantation™ is a recipe for even more disaster.

Related

- Radix Fidem: The Native Fruit is Rotten (2020/11/28)
- Σ Frame: The Futility of Justifying the Crash Landing (2021/2/15)
- Σ Frame: "Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest." (2022/4/27)
- Σ Frame: Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 1 (2023/7/12)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 2 (2023/7/13)
- Σ Frame: Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 3 (2023/7/14)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Rolling Forward (2023/8/7)
- Σ Frame: The Decline is Terminal (2023/8/9)
- Σ Frame: The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse (2023/12/9)

The Absence of Actionable Knowledge — Part 1

Jack · 13 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Limited choices, and none are very good.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Overview

In the Exposition of this month's theme, A Failure of Knowledge Transference was identified as one type of problem with The Red Pill.

There are six main areas of knowledge transference that have been ineffective.

1. Models are misappropriated.
2. Models are misinterpreted.
3. Models are misunderstood.
4. Models are misapplied.
5. The Practical Application is Difficult, Elusive, Insurmountable, or Unacceptable
6. The Absence of Actionable Knowledge

The next three essays will cover the sixth.

Foundational reading includes the basics of modelling and 9 Types of Red Pill Models.

Intro

In this three-part subtopic, I'll broadly cover two problems related to The Absence of Actionable Knowledge and offer a solution.

1. Knowledge is ABSENT.
2. Knowledge is not ACTIONABLE.
3. The Solution

This post will cover the first above.

The ABSENCE of Actionable Knowledge

For all the advanced, logically sophisticated, and in-depth talk about every aspect of human sexuality imaginable that has been covered in the Manosphere, these blogs were much more effective at identifying and bemoaning the major issues than they were at implementing any real solutions.

This was a complaint that often came up at Dalrock's place in his later years — that he was very good at describing problems, but never offered any solutions. Dalrock could never answer this charge… simply because there was no broad sweeping answer. There is only information that is difficult to swallow, and even harder to act upon.

And while the Manosphere / Red Pill 2.0 often covers men's issues and weaknesses, there still isn't much core actionable material available to men today. Getting men together and on the same page is perhaps the hottest topic right now, as showcased in the debate between Andrew Wilson and Lauren Chen, Marriage in the West.*

* H/T: Bardelys the Magnificent

The Very Few Options

Even now, we have only a handful of Strategic Models that offer basic, immediately actionable, go-to solutions that invariably 'work' for every man. However, the results widely vary man-by-man, and are therefore difficult to measure and quantify. Worse, all these come with difficulties and potential risks that make most men give up.

- Deti's Approach – (For marriage with children or other significant vested interest) Employ operant conditioning, impose hard boundaries, offer ultimatums, until she either submits or files for divorce.
- Oscar's Advice — Find communities of faithful, like-minded people and join them. This could be as easy as changing churches, or as difficult as moving across the country.

- Passporting — Travel abroad to find ~~that delightfully 'perfect' Poon~~ greener pastures.
- Running the Gauntlet — Play by the World's rules and hope for the grace of God / GNON.
- MGTOW — Chuck it all and do your own thing, without women / wife / marriage / family / children / etc.
- One more, which I'll describe in an upcoming post.

There are others, like The Black Pill, psychoactive drugs, su!c!de, go g@y / tr@ns, turn criminal, sell your soul to Satan, become a Free M@s0n or a self-effacing pastor of a complementarian church, et al., but these are strongly advised against.

Masculine Nature is Not Well Covered

The Red Pill offers hundreds of thousands of posts, videos, and many well-defined models about female behaviors and psychology. Thus, women's behaviors and psychology have been analyzed in great depth, partly due to the common male obsession with women.

However, male behaviors and psychology have only been considered where they directly relate to women's. Very few authors have focused on male behaviors and psychology, so we do not have as great a depth of understanding concerning men's behaviors that would facilitate self-improvement, maintaining confidence, frame, inner game, integrity, and/or help men navigate the challenges at hand, even though this would actually do more to help men improve their sociosexual well-being than fine-tuning our knowledge of women.

One pocket of knowledge that we have about men is our understanding of Male Archetypes.

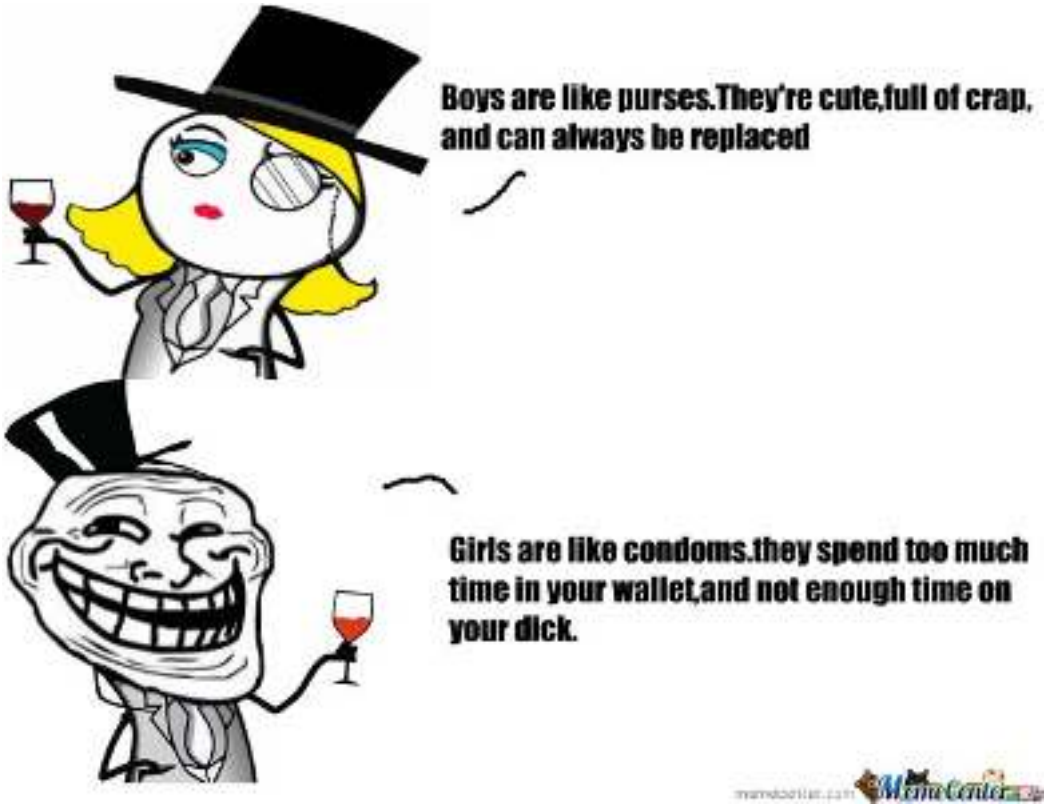
- Alpha Game (Theodore Beale): The Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (2011/3/5)
- The Art of Manliness: The Four Archetypes of the Mature Masculine: Introduction (2011/7/31)
- Σ Frame: The Four Manospherian Archetypes (2018/1/6)
- Gunner Q: The Four Medieval Archetypes (2018/2/10)
- Σ Frame: A Summary of Faux-Masculine Archetypes (2022/5/30)
- Σ Frame: Revisiting Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (2024/4/5)

These archetypes have some limitations, as described in the last post.

Another pocket of knowledge that we have about men comes from the standpoint of a metaphysical / mystical / spiritual assessment of men, and how this affects male behavior and psychology. Several Manosphere authors have attempted to fill out men's self-awareness in this regard, with varying degrees of success.

- NovaSeeker wrote from this perspective with great effectiveness.
- Jack has written many posts from this angle, but they are among the least popular posts on Σ Frame (unless it addresses a perceived injustice to men).
- Oscar has written a few posts that are more inspirational and practical, but these have not been well received either.
- Ed Hurst addresses men's issues from a purely spiritual viewpoint.
- Catacomb Resident often addresses issues related to sociological structures from a Biblical perspective.
- Jim comes at this from a carnal, charismatic angle with great effectiveness.
- Theodore Beale used to occasionally write about men's issues on Alpha Game. These days, he focuses primarily on the faults of Gammas at Sigma Game.
- Ballista often explored men's weaknesses.
- Free Northerner gave some excellent guidance.
- And of course, Dalrock's expose of 'weak men'.

Overall, we see that men are strongly attracted to the abstract, mystical, and theoretical, and also to the carnal and crude. Essays and media content that have addressed men's issues either more directly, or more obliquely with regard to other issues or purposes (i.e. spiritual growth), are less well-received.



Conclusions

Perhaps the reason why there is a paucity of knowledge pertaining to MEN is because men (e.g. authors, content producers, their followers, and men in general) have shied away from a critical focus on developing masculinity (outside of the specific context of getting laid). The reason authors / content producers have not covered this subject extensively is because it is generally unpopular and does not produce clicks, views, and $$$, and so the supporting knowledge and theory develops slowly. In general, men are hesitant to embrace this subject precisely because of a lack of motivation, and also because introspection and being critical with one's self are difficult.

Put more blithely, personal growth is not as enjoyable and entertaining as reading and talking about women's crazy behavior and zany psychology.

Therein lies the mental approach, or lack thereof, that makes up most of the issue. Life is really hard. Nothing is promised to us in life. Only those willing to do what others are NOT willing to do have a chance at getting the results that others do not get. And still, for all the work and risk that comes of doing so, it only offers a marginally greater chance, NOTHING near a 'guarantee'.

Related

- Σ Frame: Hopelessness (2020/4/6)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Cross of Our Age (2021/5/3)
- Σ Frame: The Young Man's Problem (2022/2/4)
- Σ Frame: The 13 Harbingers of Masculine Doom (2022/9/7)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill is the Natural Outcome of the Secular Mating Paradigm (2022/9/14)
- Σ Frame: Analysis Paralysis is the Gateway to the Abyss (2022/9/19)
- Σ Frame: Who will Take Care of Men? (2023/8/2)
- Σ Frame: Ideal Women Don't Exist (2023/9/23)
- Σ Frame: Wandering in Search of God (2024/1/20)

The Absence of Actionable Knowledge — Part 2

Jack · 15 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Interesting information, but not much that is actionable.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Overview

In the Exposition of this month's theme, A Failure of Knowledge Transference was identified as one type of problem with The Red Pill.

There are six main areas of knowledge transference that have been ineffective.

1. Models are misappropriated.
2. Models are misinterpreted.
3. Models are misunderstood.
4. Models are misapplied.
5. The Practical Application is Difficult, Elusive, Insurmountable, or Unacceptable
6. The Absence of Actionable Knowledge

The sixth subtopic is broken into three parts.

1. Knowledge is ABSENT.
2. Knowledge is not ACTIONABLE.
3. The Solution

This post will cover the second above.

Foundational reading includes the basics of modelling and 9 Types of Red Pill Models.

The Absence of ACTIONABLE Knowledge

Part 1 of this subtopic described how The Red Pill offers only a small number of ACTIONABLE choices that are difficult and limited, and none are very good. In addition to this, The Red Pill offers a great deal of Knowledge that is NOT ACTIONABLE.

Here are three examples of Red Pill Knowledge that are NOT ACTIONABLE.

Case Study 1 — Duluth

We are grateful to Dalrock for bringing us a wider general awareness of the Duluth horrors — laws which use male-on-female abuse as a justification to legally enable female-on-male abuse, which is much more prevalent. The result is that the enforcement of Headship is essentially made illegal and is thus outlawed.

But the only actionable application of this knowledge is to proudly be a simp who's only source of confidence lies in the fact that he is complying with the ungodly dictates of the State to ensure avoiding penitentiary confinement. Or leave the U.S. of A. Or simply to keep your tail between your legs and avoid marriage. Or marry a perfectly content and warmly submissive unicorn, and have a good lawyer and lots of $$$ on hand, just in case…

There isn't any broader solution other than to revamp the entire legal system.

Fat chance in hell.

Broadly stated, these are very poor solutions, if at all. Regarding this knowledge, there isn't any practical ACTION that one man can take to establish and maintain a Christian structure of marriage.

Perhaps this is exactly what TPTB had intended.

Case Study 2 — Reproduction Ratios

Genetic research has produced the following conclusions which have become a part of the Red Pill lore.

- 8000 Years Ago, 17 Women Reproduced for Every One Man
- Throughout history, 80% of women have reproduced, but only 40% of men have reproduced.

This data correlates with a few Red Pill models, such as…

- Hypergamy
- The Pareto Principle
- The Male Burden of Performance
- The Fundamental Premise: "Eggs are expensive, Sperm is cheap."

Commenter Column5 told us that out of his 8 engineering buddies, 3 of them have girlfriends. 3 out of 8 is 37.5%, which is higher than 20% (as predicted by the Pareto Principle) but pretty close to the 40% predicted by genetic research. In conclusion, Column5's engineering buddies are putting par for the coitus course.

It's all quite interesting (and rather discouraging). But just what, pray tell, is the practical application of this information?

Case Study 3 — War Brides

Rollo Tomassi described the premise of the War Brides dynamic as follows.

> "Evolution has largely selected-for human females with a capacity to form psychological schema that preserve their psyches from what would otherwise afflict them with debilitating anxiety, guilt, and the stresses resulting from being continuously aware of their own behavioral incongruities. Evolution selects-for solipsistic women who are blissfully unaware of their solipsism."
>
> The Rational Male: War Brides (2011/10/3)

Japanese war bride Takako (Cherry) and Bill Watts.
The real world result of this theory is (in bold) that…

> "Evolution selected for women who could more easily transition psychologically from one dominant male to another. In our chaotic ancestral past women and girls were a commodity to be preserved for a conquering tribe. While men or boys were either killed or enslaved, fertile age women would be preserved as spoils of conquest for superior, invading, men. Simply put, women have reproductive value – men (and often their sons) were mostly obstacles in the way of resource acquisition and those reproductive opportunities."
>
> The Rational Male: Widows & Warbrides (2018/10/30)

This theory correlates with The Fundamental Premise: "Eggs are expensive, Sperm is cheap."

This information is wonderful news for men living in a primitive hunter-gatherer society, or who are thrust into a war, invading and conquering a territory filled with beautiful young innocent chicks and young women who recently became war widows… Unfortunately, it is highly unlikely that such men will be reading this tidbit of The Red Pill and they probably wouldn't care anyway, given their situation in life.

This information is useful to men living in a 'civilized' society for explaining why women are so easily seduced by powerful men and why they are able to hop from one man to another so quickly and easily. But what is the practical application?

The only actionable application here is for a man to join an army fighting a war, and hope to snag a young 'un that has recently been detached from a casualty of war. Great! Who is up for that? Anyone interested in going to fight in Ukr@!ne? Ukr@n!@n chicks are the hottest on the planet but they're also very feminized / progressive, so is it worth risking your life for that? Or how about G@za or the C0ng0? Eh, in those cases, the juice probably isn't worth the squeeze.

Suddenly, MGTOW appears paradisical in comparison, and I feel like an @ss for suggesting all this.

Epilogue

These three case studies should make it evident to the reader that a lot of Red Pill knowledge is insightful, inspiring, and useful for one's general understanding, but it is also lacking in practical applications and 'solutions'.

Can you think of some others? Please leave a comment.

Related

- Σ Frame: Hopelessness (2020/4/6)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Cross of Our Age (2021/5/3)
- Σ Frame: The Young Man's Problem (2022/2/4)
- Σ Frame: The 13 Harbingers of Masculine Doom (2022/9/7)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill is the Natural Outcome of the Secular Mating Paradigm (2022/9/14)
- Σ Frame: Analysis Paralysis is the Gateway to the Abyss (2022/9/19)
- Σ Frame: Who will Take Care of Men? (2023/8/2)
- Σ Frame: Ideal Women Don't Exist (2023/9/23)
- Σ Frame: Wandering in Search of God (2024/1/20)

The Absence of Actionable Knowledge is a Goad to Faith

Jack · 17 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Dealing with what you don't know requires faith.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 2,100 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Overview

In the Exposition of this month's theme, A Failure of Knowledge Transference was identified as one type of problem with The Red Pill.

There are six main areas of knowledge transference that have been ineffective.

1. Models are misappropriated.
2. Models are misinterpreted.
3. Models are misunderstood.
4. Models are misapplied.
5. The Practical Application is Difficult, Elusive, Insurmountable, or Unacceptable
6. The Absence of Actionable Knowledge

The sixth subtopic is broken into three parts.

1. Knowledge is ABSENT.
2. Knowledge is not ACTIONABLE.
3. The Solution

This post will propose The Solution.

Foundational reading includes the basics of modelling and 9 Types of Red Pill Models.

A Hopeless Situation Leads to Faith

The Lord God introduced the Old Covenant Law (e.g. the 10 commandments, etc.) for several purposes, including to reveal His nature, to give us a blueprint for righteousness, and to provide a structure that would allow lawless individuals to be held accountable.

Another purpose is to inspire faith.

How does the law inspire faith?

It is impossible to keep the entire law flawlessly. Sooner or later in life, we all fail at some point. When one gets to the end of his rope, in desperation he's forced to look beyond his own abilities, his knowledge, his sense of control, and his situation, and become metaphysically aware of the larger reality. He is forced to look to God for help and salvation. It is at this point that a man can begin to grasp hold of faith.

Today, the Red Pill serves the purpose of inspiring faith, just as the Old Testament Law once did.

How so?

The Red Pill is a smelling salt that wakes men up from the multiplex delusions of the Blue Pill and other gynocentric programming, such that they're able to 'see' the truth.

Clay Matthews of the Green Bay Packers American football team uses smelling salts (hydrated ammonium carbonate) to enhance his conscious awareness during a game.
And what do they see?

The truths of The Red Pill indicate that romantic love is a lie, that women are incapable of loving a man in the way he most desires to be loved, that pounding poon can never fill the void in a man's soul, and that the situation on the ground is hopeless for most men.

A man must get to this place of heart-awareness in which he is willing to relinquish his claim over his own life and learn to utilize other forms of consciousness — and lean NOT on his own understanding (Proverbs 3:5-6).

It is in this desperate condition that a man can realize faith, and find God too, as many Red Pilled men have in the past.

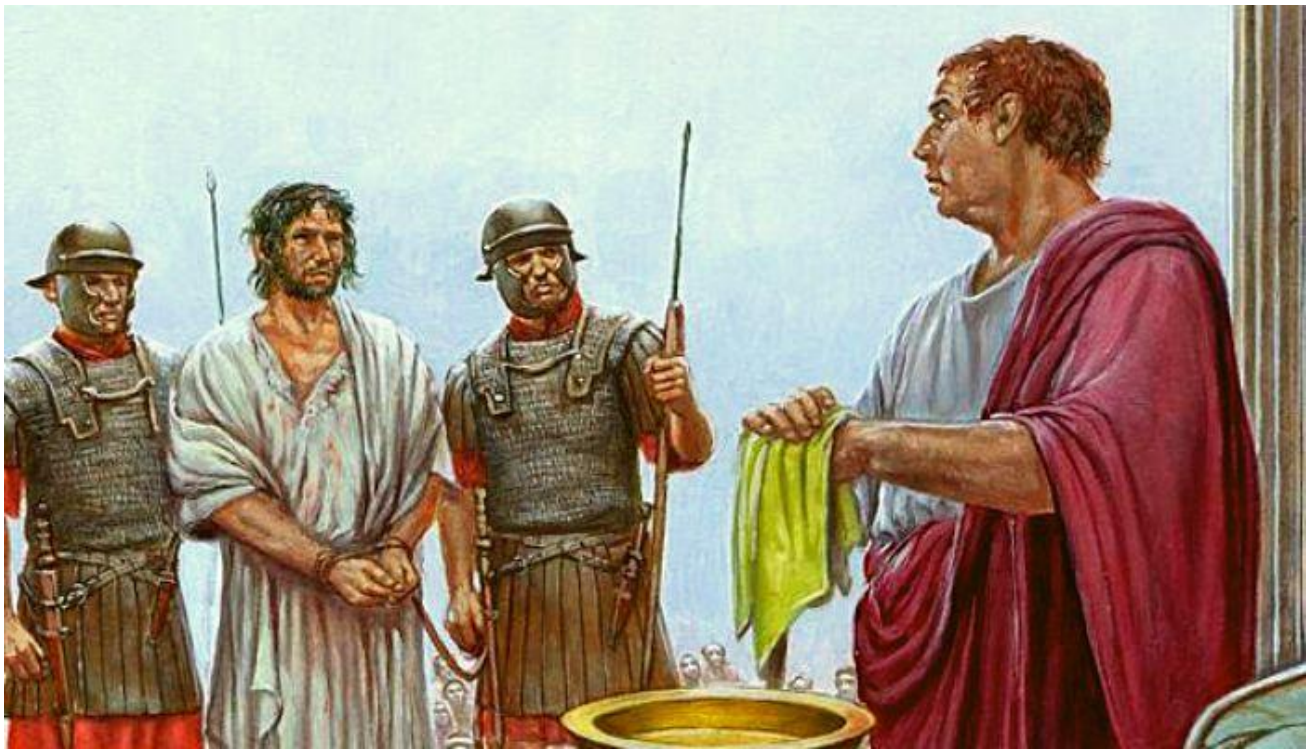
If pursued diligently, the truths of the Red Pill will eventually lead a man to God. However, this pursuit is invariably very messy and tends to have a nihilistic effect on the surrounding culture.

It's Hard Work to Avoid Hopelessness

Now that the Red Pill has gone mainstream, men are able to see that taking The Red Pill leads to Nihilism / The Black Pill / The White Pill. Because the road is so well known and well trodden, stubborn men have to back up one step to prevent themselves from succumbing to the process of waking up to reality and realizing the truth.

One way this is done is by actively avoiding the pitfall of failure and hopelessness, thinking it to be… well… hopeless… instead of just one big messy step in the process of finding faith.

This shrinking back is an involuntary reaction of the fallen nature of man. A man either doesn't believe that God is to be found at the bottom of the mess, or that a man is confused or spiritually proud and wishes to wash his hands of the whole mess and/or God — but in vain. A man must exercise agency to overcome this tendency.



Here's an example.

Under Part 1, commenter Malcolm Reynolds argued at length that women are only attracted to, and will only willingly follow HSM. While this is largely true, it is not true in every context (such as in marriage), and it does not always remain true, unfortunately. The other part of the truth is that male attractiveness only mitigates and postpones female rebellion. Women will eventually tire of a man, even uber HSM, as demonstrated in the lives of men like Tom Brady and Johnny Depp.

Men like Jack, RPA, Thedeti, et al. who have been around the block for years know that it is necessary to goad a woman towards growth if the relationship is to go the distance. This is a truth that MR appears to be unwilling to face. Instead, he has argued that a man's genetics and sociosexual rank are the key determinants of relationship success, which effectively excuses both women's bad behaviors and men's responsibility to do the hard work of fostering her growth.

MR probably views the opinions of Red Pill Apostle, Thedeti, et al., to be hopelessly, pessimistically Black Pilled. Meanwhile, RPA, Thedeti, et al. see MR as being inexperienced and somewhat fearful. The weakness of inexperience is shown in the way MR is frantically searching for a logical explanation that can prop up his perceived mastery of an unpleasant situation and give him the sense that everything is explainable, even predictable, and that he has everything figured out.

This striving for a logical mastery over one's own life is a characteristic of the fleshly nature, as Ed Hurst described in a recent post. The fleshly nature will fight to the bitter death of the ego in order to retain a sense of control.

Ironically, The Red Pill urges men to strive for mastery, but the core truth is that there is a fleshly limit that every man will eventually butt into, if pursued diligently. This process of reaching one's limits, subduing the self-interest, involving ego death and coming to terms with one's self, is what it takes to boot the vanities of the fleshly nature out of a man's head and motivate him to live from the heart. This is exactly how many Red Pillers of the past eventually found God.

Love him or hate him, Roosh did something right.

Coming to the End of the Road

I'll postulate that the main reason why so many men get Black Pilled, despondent, and/or GTOW is precisely because there are no actionable applications of Red Pill knowledge for their particular persona and life circumstances. For many men, taking The Red Pill merely brings the realization that your hands are tied, and no one is coming to untie you. It is a hopeless mess.

News Flash: There is no 'solution' outside of Christ. The 'solution' is the path of suffering, as Christ took.

Now, The Red Pill does offer some men a few solutions. Not optimal solutions, but solutions.

Those few men who DO find applications and 'solutions' in the Red Pill, may chafe and complain that it is exceedingly difficult and filled with suffering.

It has been said that if you're going to tell them they're wrong, then you have to give them a better solution.

He may have failed in life, but he succeeded with the Lord.

News Flash: The better and only solution is through Faith in Jesus Christ and His work with His Resurrection. And being born again through the Baptism of the Holy Spirit. Having the Holy Spirit or the Spirit of Christ in your heart.

You see, this is all by God's design — to goad men towards faith. It is SUPPOSED to be difficult. You are SUPPOSED to fail. Otherwise, you may never know your human limits, come to faith, and find God. (Matthew 16:25-26; Mark 8:35-36; Luke 9:24-25; Luke 17:33)

The Christ / God Pill

Years ago, we had a choice between the Blue Pill and the Red Pill. Today, we have the choice between the 'Degen Pill' and the 'Christ / God Pill', and people are choosing degeneracy over suffering / Patriarchy.

The Lord God says,

In the midst of all your confusion, trouble, and turmoil in the West, you are now faced with an existential choice.

You have three choices.

1. Take the 'Christ Pill' — Accept your burden of suffering and bear it with faith and patience. Let the rest of the world go to hell.
2. Take the 'God Pill' — Restore a Patriarchal structure of society in which Men are masculine Heads and Women are feminine and submissive to their Heads.
3. Take the 'Degen Pill' — Continue in your sins of omission and permission, and face God's wrath.

A Cross Road

If circumstances are so dire, then why is it that 'Christ Pillers' are offering nothing?

It is because the 'solutions' on both the personal and cultural levels are wholly unacceptable to the public, and they know it.

On a personal level…

It is because the 'Christ Pill' requires exposing the vanities of the flesh and the death of the sinful self. No one wants to hear a message of suffering, of failure, and of losing hope in the flesh (e.g. applied hypergamy, the feminine imperative, plugging poon, etc.).

On a cultural level…

It is because the 'God Pill' requires bringing back the Patriarchy — something which appears onerously neanderthal to today's adulterous generation.

1. The 'Christ / God Pill' requires men to be masculine proactive Patriarchs. It requires husbandly authority over wives and paternal authority over children. It requires men to act as rebels to femcentric laws and the gynocentric state.
2. The 'Christ / God Pill' requires imposing Christian sexual morality on women and imposing consequences upon women for violating it. It requires saying to women, "NO" and "Here are the rules. If you fail to follow them, then here are the consequences." And it requires immediate and real consequences.
3. The 'Christ / God Pill' requires women to willingly submit to Patriarchal authority. It requires women to marry young, bear children, keep the home, and NOT be loud mouthed, attention sloring busybodies.
4. The 'Christ / God Pill' requires the church to stop flirting with feminism and progressivism, and foster a community in which the above can happen.

To put it more bluntly, for the intents and purposes related to the current cultural war, Patriarchy IS the 'God Pill'; but Patriarchy is flatly rejected by the wider culture because the culture has rejected the 'Christ Pill'.

No one wants to hear about all these culturally abberant and exceedingly difficult requirements under the expectation that you're going to lose hope (in the flesh) and fail anyway — especially weak men and rebellious women.

The 'Christ Pillers' don't have the gonads to put their hand to the plow and declare a holy war. So the whole mess will continue to fester and rot until we get back to square one.

> But Jesus answered, "I tell you, if these become silent, the stones will cry out!"
>
> Luke 19:40 (NASB1995)

This is why we are seeing a ground swell of malcontent expressed in various pop movements like Buddhism / Eastern mysticism, Christian Nationalism*, church attrition, cohabitation / OOWB, intramigration, MGTOW, Passporting, and all the various other Pills.

If the root problem is not addressed, then sooner or later, one of these groups will blow up and the wrath of God shall fall. TPTB know this, and this is why they're tamping down hard on those movements they cannot infiltrate or control (e.g. free speech, husbands' authority in the home, outlawing "Christ is King", The Manosphere, etc.).

Corollary C to Axiom 17: Suffering is inevitable, so choose your suffering before suffering chooses you.

Which will it be?

 BTW, Christian Nationalism is NOT Patriarchy. CN is a political movement. Patriarchy is a social structure. If CN succeeds without reinstating a grass-roots Patriarchy, it will culminate the worst kind of wrath — religious totalitarianism.*

Conclusions

In conclusion, the solution for solving problems and issues that have no precedent, no applicable model, and no apparent solution is…

FAITH!

And… to begin making efforts to establish your domain, to pursue your purpose, and to conform to God's order as much as you're willing and able, no matter whether you think it will get you what you want or need.

And… do not waffle when sufferings come. It will take time. Have faith.

To help men get a better vision of what this looks like, next month's theme will explore The Patriarchy.

Please restrain yourself from throwing tomatoes at your computer monitor or smart phone. Instead, consider donating them to your nearest homeless shelter.

This post concludes the subtopic of A Failure of Knowledge Transference. The next problem with the Red Pill to be covered is A Failure of Imagination.

Related

- Σ Frame: Hopelessness (2020/4/6)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Cross of Our Age (2021/5/3)
- Σ Frame: The Young Man's Problem (2022/2/4)
- Σ Frame: The 13 Harbingers of Masculine Doom (2022/9/7)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill is the Natural Outcome of the Secular Mating Paradigm (2022/9/14)
- Σ Frame: Analysis Paralysis is the Gateway to the Abyss (2022/9/19)
- Σ Frame: Who will Take Care of Men? (2023/8/2)
- Σ Frame: Ideal Women Don't Exist (2023/9/23)
- Σ Frame: Wandering in Search of God (2024/1/20)

A Failure of Imagination

Jack · 20 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Is The Red Pill Evil? Or are we simply disappointed that the vast depth of RP lore is amoral and contains no personal meaning?

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Artless Anti-Chad

Over the past year or so, The Red Pill has received a new series of strikes against it in the form of genuine objective criticism. There are a number of voices on Twitter / X and YouTube, including a few mainstream Christians, who equate the Red Pill with evil, hypocrisy, and psychopathy.

Here are a few examples.

Then and Now: What Red Pill Philosophy Gets Wrong (2023/5/11) Length: 39:21

Art Chad: It's Over for Pearl Davis (and the Red Pill) (2023/6/23) Length: 12:13

Art Chad: Gen Z Men Will Be Destroyed by The Red Pill. (2023/8/20) Length: 12:43*

* H/T: Info

What is the Real Issue of Contention?

After watching these videos, I am left wondering, "Christianity / Religion has been corrupted and is slipping away… They don't accept the Red Pill… None of the other –isms offer any truth. So then, what DO they believe?" From what is said in these videos, I have no idea. There is some abstract talk about having good relationships, having a family, and having a better / real life, but that is no different from what any of us have wanted out of life. They don't seem to realize that the only way to attain those things is through faith in Christ — taking the 'Christ Pill' (suffering) and/or The 'God Pill' (Covenantal Patriarchy). Until they figure this out, they'll just be stumbling around in darkness.

The loudest critics of The Red Pill appear to be Satangelical Churchians, Cuckservatives™, and Gen Z. I've seen a number of such people who are deeply uncomfortable with The Red Pill lore, especially the evo-psyche models, as if this challenges the very core of their faith. But it's hard for me to imagine that a mere model of human behavior could shake one's faith in the Almighty Lord! I'm tempted to suspect there are ulterior motives, or maybe just a failure of imagination.

IMO, their understanding of The Red Pill appears to be rather superficial. Their deprecation of The Red Pill (as shown in these videos) does NOT convey the legitimacy of inner conviction. Obviously, their understanding of reality has not been tested in the crucible of real-life experience, which makes the Red Pill lore salient to the wistless woebegone wayfarer of life.

One reason people might react this way is to avoid facing inconvenient and ugly truths in an effort to avoid succumbing to despair and hopelessness, as was explained in the previous post. But avoiding the truth only postpones apprehending it.

I am concerned that these critics / groups may be reacting impulsively to the unpalatable elements of the Red Pill lore (and truly there are many), and in their fervor are throwing the baby out with the bathwater.

What can be Fairly Expected from The Red Pill?

As I listen to these criticisms of The Red Pill, I hear them saying that the Red Pill is a faulty pseudo-science; that it didn't create meaning for them; that it didn't lead them to a better place in life.

I think they may be expecting too much.

Let us be reminded of what Morpheus said to Neo in The Matrix…

> "Remember, all I'm offering is the truth; nothing more."

Those who expect something more from the Red Pill, as if it is a religion that contains a fundamental purpose for living, or a guiding light to all truth, or a magical cure-all for a floundering marriage / relationship, or a path to peace with God, are going to find themselves disappointed.

Yes, there are many men who did find God after taking the Red Pill, learning Game, looksmaxxing, and spinning plates for years, but as someone once said, "Life is what happens while you're doing something else." Finding God was not the point of it all, but more of an unexpected epiphany.

Some things are not within man's control.

A Failure of Spiritual Understanding

The Classic Christian Manosphere often focused on the errors of Christianism, problems within churchianity, and the misgivings of complementarianish marriages, often referring to scripture.

In my own contributions to the Christian Manosphere, I found that much of the slurry of confusion was founded on poorly understood doctrinal concepts and phrases (e.g. curses, defilement, humility, redemption, sanctification, w!tchcr@ft, etc.).*

I made a considerable effort to dig into these concepts to provide us with a fuller understanding of the spiritual significance, and I found that this understanding was more significant than I had expected regarding the implications fundamental to several Red Pill descriptions of the human experience.

I'm humbled and thankful to see that many of these concepts are now in widespread use. Nowadays, you'll often hear passing references to Christian precepts and doctrinal jargon in Red Pill 2.0, however it is not explained well and/or is often misused. It seems like whatever is discussed here goes mainstream within 2-3 years. Praise the Lord!

Although understanding these concepts is a step in the right direction, unfortunately, what I've contributed is only a small porthole in a sinking ship. Each man must conduct a similar examination of these concepts to attain his own understanding of the metaphysical truths expressed by them. Most men lack the 'nads to tackle such introspection and therefore will not dedicate the time and energy to do so, and will instead jump on the bandwagon trends.

 Based / debased is one such word that has risen in prominence that I cannot claim. Credit for the current popularity of that word goes to Dalrock and W. M. Briggs.*

 Although I've never received any quotes or pingbacks, I cannot imagine the colloquial use of certain doctrinal terminology such as those mentioned above could have originated anywhere else.)*

The Pendulum of Generational Differences

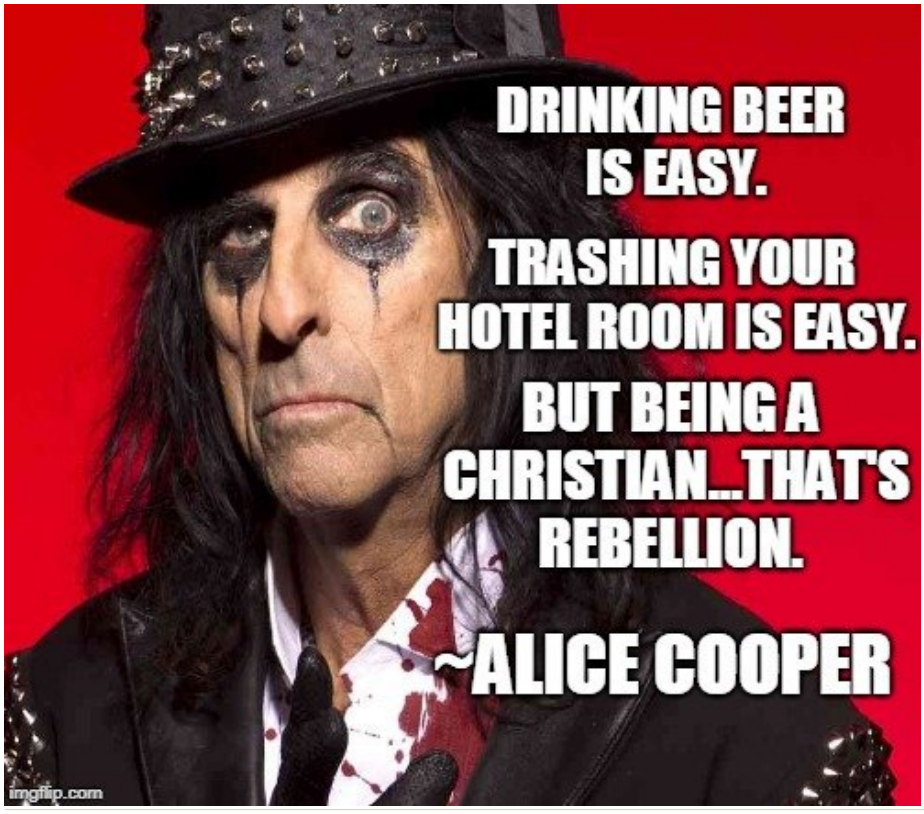
To many Gen Xers and Millennials, The Red Pill is revered as a pivotal, life-altering breakthrough in human awareness / consciousness, for better or for worse. It represents a monumental landmark of philosophical achievement, and perhaps the greatest metaphysical discovery of our generation. But to Gen Z and the future generations that will follow, The Red Pill is just one more 'ideology'* competing against many others. And it is not a beautiful one.

You see, as Gen Z examines all the informologies that are being presented to them, including Complementarianism, Egalitarianism, Existentialism, Feminism, Marxism, Nihilism, Socialism, … and the list goes on… it may be very easy for them to conclude that the Red Pill is just one more conflicting ideology* or –ism like the others.

I suspect that some of the criticism is a knee-jerk reaction against the wisdom of previous generations, a symptomatic pendulum swing that is common to all generations living within an Individualistic culture. On a positive note, this might be a valiant attempt to discover and chart their own path in life. Wise observers will recognize that this form of youthful rebellion is a hallmark characteristic of Gothic Conservatism.

My criticism is not intended to be condescending or dismissive. I sincerely hope that Red Pill insights may deliver men from the worst fates that Xers and Millennials have had to endure. It is for this very reason that I have spent the last few years blogging.

 The Red Pill is NOT an ideology. Some of it is a praxeology, and some of it is just information that is insightful for understanding human nature and sociosexual behaviors.*



A Lack of Faith

Ultimately, a failure of imagination and the resultant lack of vision are rooted in idolatry, although it is difficult to identify the specific idols at play. Idolatry kills the imagination just like poverty mentality kills detachment and lust and sexual sin kills discernment.

There is also a lack of humility and some degree of philosophical pride leading to denial.

I also suspect that various fears are responsible for the knee-jerk rejection of Red Pill lore, such as a fear of social scrutiny or rejection for expressing one's self in an authentic way (lacking confidence); fear of gaining specific forms of knowledge from discernment, especially knowledge that exacerbates a fear of danger, temptation, sin, or requires extra efforts in taking responsibility for a difficult situation; fear of making a bad decision, or of using one's personal charisma (power) for wrong purposes.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): How to Dismantle the Idol of Fandom: Breaking the Fifth Wall (2018/5/26)
- Σ Frame (Jack): On the discernment and wisdom of true morality (2019/2/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Noetic Nose Knows (2021/9/6)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Elements of Emotional and Personal Maturity (2021/9/8)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Elements of Spiritual Maturity (2021/9/15)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Christ is in You (2023/4/3)

Origins of the “Immature Boy” Stereotype

Jack · 22 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Frat boys and lumberjacks are the best forms of masculinity being embraced by younger generations.

Readership: Christian Men
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / A Failure of Imagination / Faux Masculine Archetypes
Length: 750 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Late 20th Century

The ‘Immature Boy’ archetype was originally a form of low-brow cynicism regarding the Metrosexual persona which came about in the mid-90s, regarding the narcissistic, effeminate young man concerned with color-coordinated fashion, exfoliation, and manscaping.

There is good reason to believe that ‘Frat Boy humor’ and ‘Lad Lit’ journalism which surrounded the Metrosexual image being sold was a media innovation designed to cash in on the Xers egocentric tastes in dignified professionalism. Ironic, but true.

Interestingly, the Metrosexual image was an iconoclastic deviation from the Grunge culture that was then the current rave, and so appealed to a markedly different array of demographics, most notably conservative Christians* and the upper class who were both appalled by Grunge, and g@ys who found the poignant refined tastes to be a form of personal expression.

 The underlying spirit of the Grunge movement was authentic, introspective, and pessimistic, and as such, was a reiteration of the Beat movement that occurred in the late 1940s and 1950s. In terms of conscious idealism, these movements should have held a greater appeal to Christians. However, (cultural) Christians preferred to aspire to a refined image for themselves that contrasted with the surrounding culture, and so materialism won out over conscientiousness.*

Early 21st Century

Spornosexual was introduced in 2014 as the replacement hip term for Metrosexual, but with an emphasis on physical fitness and cultural dandiness. The most ostentatious examples proffered by the media (e.g. David Beckham, Justin Bieber, Tom Brady, Johnny Depp, Zac Efron, Ashton Kutcher, Ryan Reynolds, Christiano Ronaldo, et al.) made a big sploosh with wimmin as they were seen as being both narcissistic and among the highly desirable top 10% of men. Post adolescent chicks and Cougars alike referred to men who fit this image as 'boytoys' and 'dream beaus'.

Modern masculinity has discarded raw courage and has taken on a philosophical edge.

There were many other '[Insert X]-sexual' terms that were bandied around at the time (e.g. retrosexual and übersexual), each receiving a short airplay among trendy teens.

With the partial exception of the Lumbersexual, all these other images and terms were sensationalistic products of 3rd Wave Feminism, designed by media hosts to use the perceived peer pressure of social relevancy to extort cash from the sexual proclivities of the young, make light of masculinity, and parade the effeminate and immature but conspicuously wealthy (play)boy as the charming delight of the age.

However, these terms never really gained much traction in popular usage among the targeted audience (Millennials).

The most obvious reason is because Millennials were less egocentric and more nihilistic than Xers.

Another reason is because this image was directly replaced by the huskier Lumbersexual which had already appeared as the next boon in men's fashion at that time. But for obvious reasons, this was a dead end as well in terms of marketing male frivolity. Apart from the clothing industry, the Lumbersexual archetype was considered too 'deplorable' and too retro-masculine by marketing elites to receive a concerted cultural airplay.

A third key reason is that these terms were concocted by media marketing strategists for a targeted demographic and had no real use in the common vernacular of common people. The reality is that very few men actually had the money, leisure, and physique required to adapt to this stereotype, and truth be told, were more accurately described as 'Soyboys' instead.

Zac Efron reviving frat boy humor.

But hold my beer, dude! More recently, the frat boy humor has been revived (or continued) in the form of Fratire. Similar to the Lumbersexual image, the general impression and subject matter of Fratire is a definite break away from W0ke interests.

Epilogue

The important point from this brief review of marketing history, is that the general image of dandified adolescent masculinity presented by the media actually caught on with the public. While civic responsibility was being replaced by environmental consciousness, young men abandoned traditional role models of masculinity lauded by earlier generations (e.g. Sean Connery, Clint Eastwood, Steve McQueen, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Sylvester Stallone, John Wayne, et al.), patently dismissing them as the geriatric gorilla goons of an archaic, uncivilized, and bygone age. Instead, they felt comfortable in accepting an image of masculinity that was decidedly more effeminate, more Gillette, more W0ke, more willing to cater to the demands of others and especially of women, and also less concerned, even apathetic about achievement, responsibility, developing personal and professional capability, and amassing character building life experiences.

In summary, Lumbersexual and Fratire have posed some degree of backlash to the media's concerted effort to eviscerate and feminize masculinity. Furthermore, certain concepts of masculinity arising from the Manosphere (e.g. detachment, dread, purpose, etc.) have slowly made inroads into the public awareness of manhood, adding to the fray.

Unfortunately, the Manosphere has not yet succeeded in overturning the 'Immature Boy' image of maleness.

Related

For those interested in further reading about the transmogrification of masculinity at the onset of the 21st century, the following articles offer well-written snapshots of what was happening at the time of authoring.

- In These Times (Lakshmi Chaudhry): Men Growing Up to be Boys (2006/3/17)
- Forbes (Jenna Goudreau): Has The Rise Of Women Turned Men Into Boys? (2011/3/3)
- Style Caster (Ashley Papa): 10 Surefire Signs That You're Dating a Man-Child (2015/11/5)
- Inc. (Benjamin P. Hardy): 10 Habits That Change Boys Into Men (2017/7/31)
- Σ Frame: Ladies Should Respect the Man and Love the Boy (2018/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Redefining Manhood as Boyish Immaturity (2021/6/14)
- Σ Frame: Faux Masculine Archetypes (2022/5/2)

Sit and Spin on the Carousel

Jack · 24 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A critique of Rollo Tomassi's work.

Readership: Men
Theme: Problems with the Red Pill / Misapplied Models / A Failure of Imagination
Author's Note: This post contains comments from readers. Links to the original comments are embedded in the initial words.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Introduction

Since 2019 when Roosh converted and subsequently unpublished all his writings, Rollo Tomassi has held the distinction of being the last remaining godfather of the Classic Manosphere who continues producing content.

His books and essays are quite good, but IMO, Rollo is a much better writer than he is a talker. The Rational Male books are, in many men's opinions, foundational for Red Pill knowledge. But in podcasts, he's taken some heat from some of the younger Manospherian Gurus.

This post will review the value and errors of Rollo's contributions to The Red Pill.

The Value of Rollo's Work

As readers have probably already surmised, I definitely have a lot of respect for Rollo.

Rollo's most important contributions, in my opinion, are his identification of general patterns of human behavior within the dating and marriage markets and how the markets work in general.

Another contribution from Rollo that he established back in 2012 or so is that the SMP/MMP looks very different from either the male or female strategic viewpoints, and both of these change with age. This perspective is now a foundational epistemology of the Red Pill. Along with this comes an understanding of the dynamics of what men and women look for in a mate / spouse. Everything from why May-December romances much more commonly form long-lasting relationships when compared to the feminist notion of cougars in their sexual prime picking up a young cub, to men having to build themselves into something to create value while women are just born with their value based on T and A, youth, and fertility.

His work's usefulness is in identifying typical behaviors that are ultimately bad for relationships and marriage. For example, all young men ought to know about the dualistic breeding strategy hard-wired into the women in their lives. Being able to identify and understand these behaviors is the first step towards addressing them and possibly fixing them.

Rollo's enduring contribution to the sphere will always be putting into words the marriage and dating marketplace and defining the valuations of the respective sexes when it comes to dating and marriage. His work in these areas is foundational for understanding macro trends with men and women when it comes to relationships.

Rollo Tomassi and the Christian Manosphere Agree on Many Topics

Many of Rollo's foundational principles and theoretical models have strong correlations to what the Christian Manosphere has come up with. A few examples of these correlations are as follows.

The Christian Manosphere likens the current MMP to Hosea or Job, cites 1 Corinthians 7:29, and recognizes that this is going to be happening to increasing numbers of men as the years and decades wear on. Thedeti often points out that men are not attractive enough to compete in today's SMP/MMP. Soup Sandwich used to talk about all the men he counseled in his profession, and that many of them self-deleted. Similarly, Rollo used to talk about men getting "zeroed out" — Men losing jobs, careers, homes, spouses, children… everything. All their accomplishments, achievements, and possessions lost or destroyed or taken. Reduced to zero.

Rollo says the only way for these men to survive is to adopt a mindset of "No lasting attachments" and "If I have to, I'm walking out immediately." This loosely correlates with Thedeti's approach of putting his foot down and demanding better from a wife, even if it costs a man everything.

Rollo's axiom, "The medium is the message" is a practical praxeology that correlates with Σ Frame Axiom 7: "The natural interaction defines the relationship structure according to which model it fits best, not what we think it is or hope for it to be." Thus, according to Rollo's view, if a woman ghosts you at various times — that is the message. If the conversation falls off before the first date happens — that is the message. According to Σ Frame, this particular interaction indicates that the man has no real authority over this woman, relational, sexual, or otherwise, and that Headship is very unlikely to develop.

Lastly, Rollo's exposition of the Male Burden of Performance and his admonition that it is VERY unlikely, if not impossible that a man will EVER be "loved for who he really is" compares closely with the conclusions obtained by the Christian Manosphere; namely, that a man needs to have a purpose and a vision in life, and that if a man keeps after his Blue Pilled notions for too long, his life will revert to cringe status, and it will literally k!ll him in the current marriage / romance market. Dalrock went further to elucidate how the preeminence of 'romantic love', as described by Rollo, has been elevated to an idol of selfishness that has replaced Christian morality. Σ Frame has pointed out the apathy shown towards men in the church and added that men must take care of themselves and minister to each other.

The Shortcomings of Rollo's Work

Rollo's early writings played a central role in setting the fuse that detonated the SMP over the past decade and sparked the rise of MGTOW. This was not entirely a bad thing, as it brought an end to much of the deception, depravity, and false hopes that were inherent in the former, Blue Pill drenched SMP. However, the fallout has been devastating to men (and to women too as of late).

Men's general reaction to his writings (summarized in this post) is intense anger, disgust with wimmin, and hopelessness. Furthermore, IMO, out of all the most renown Red Pill writers, Rollo is perhaps most responsible for the widespread Red Pill angst, bitterness, and hopelessness in the Western SMP/MMP. He has addressed this reaction in many of his writings.

His obvious motivation is an attempt to "shake the ghosts out of the machine" and analyze the mating dance as it is. The problem with Rollo's work is not its' empiricism, but his trying to import the epistemology of the exact sciences into life in general. Under the premises he states within an assumed context, he arrives at logical conclusions, but the sensible meanings thereof necessarily bring about nihilism in his readers.

Why?

In the process of creating an inductive abstract model of human behaviors, the logical reduction of the number of variables necessarily requires some omissions. Rollo has chosen three key considerations to omit from his calculations, discussed as follows.

1. NOT Regarding People as Human Beings

People, as he describes them, are evolutionary robots, and he assumes that this is how people in general actually are. Qualities which define men and women as human and make life worth living, such as desire, devotion, glory, humility, joy, love, purpose, thankfulness, values, etc. are cast aside as irrelevant to his analyses.

Case Study 1 — Guys Who Don't F_ck (are Losers)

Rollo Tomassi: Guys who don't fuck. (2024/1/31)

In this piece, Rollo argues that coital encounters are the Be All and End All of Relationships.

The problem with his argument is his round condemnation of guys who don't f_ck as being 'lesser men'. This may be true strictly in terms of staking out territory and having a socio-sexual / evolutionary advantage, but there are also many disadvantages with prioritizing sexual conquests which work against procreation that he fails to mention.

We also know that most women are attracted to 'Bad Boy' / 'Dark Triad' / narcissistic / villainous types. So he's basically arguing that these types of men are 'greater men'. The problem with this reasoning is obvious.

Also, when too many women sit and spin on the carousel, the resulting centripetal force causes most men on the periphery to fly off. This is a consequence of market dynamics and NOT necessarily an indicator of a man's character.

Adam and Gunner have also responded to Rollo's piece.

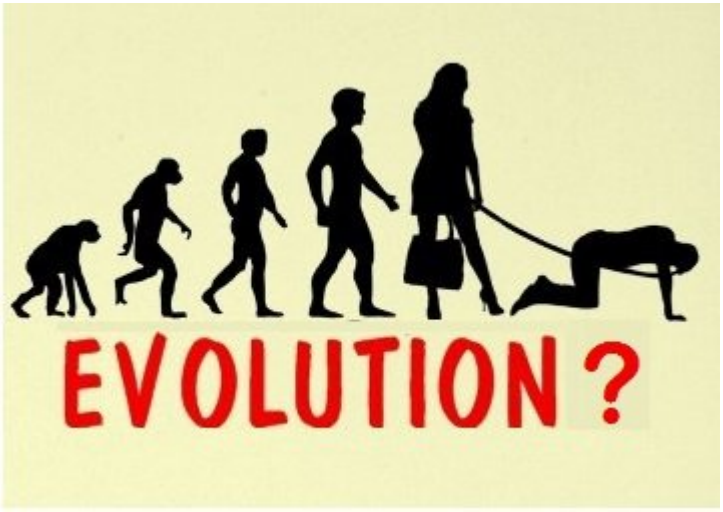
- Adam Piggott: Spiritual Survival in the Sexual Marketplace (2024/2/1)
- Gunner Q: Rollo In the Rear-View Mirror (2024/2/2)

 Dalrock, Jack, Larry Kummer, et al. have pointed out that our general respect for men and male authority must not be discarded.*

2. No Regard for Metaphysical Reality

In emphasizing evo psyche / naturalist materialism, Rollo has discarded the important effects of boundaries, faith, gestalt, honor, love, reputation, self-control, virtue, etc. Obviously, you can see how this is unpalatable to Christians. We believe in free will, an immortal soul, and a loving God. Even the most ardent atheists cannot live as evolutionary robots and only claim to in order to win arguments.

Case Study 2 — The Errancy of Sex Sans Headship



The Eye of Sauron wrote,

> "The 70s-80s-and a little bit of the 90s' was the perfect time if you were a man who was inclined toward serial monogamy. Rollo has said that serial monogamy is the female preferred dating strategy,* and I can accept that as a generality. It's just that in my case, for whatever reason, I preferred it too. It was very easy to achieve and felt "correct" morally and emotionally.
>
> Looking back now, I realize I was playing their (women's) own game and found that it is lacking in some key areas for me. Luckily, human males do not have their ability to bond decimated by multiple partners as tends to happen to women.
>
> Once you have plowed through that many women (and realize that they have all been doing the same for all these years), it becomes increasingly difficult to find a woman who is not wrecked by previous relationship baggage, even if she was not a "sl#t." Many of them were following the life script as presented and had no idea the damage it would do them long term.
>
> The men over 35 reading here know exactly what I am talking about.* I can't even imagine what navigating all this now feels like. It must be humiliating."

 Rollo, TEoS, and many key Manospherians are Xers, and they are, in many ways, a product of their time.*

3. No Consideration of Long Term Outcome

Coming of age, dating, mating, and marriage all have a season in life. During those seasons, it is all-consuming. But it becomes less so after a man develops his identity and the major issues are settled. Most guys completely age out of this sometime in their 40s or early 50s and then focus on other things in life. But the godfather of ye olde Manosphere never looks that far ahead. It is as if he wants to tell us to Sit-and-Spin on the Carousel until you get Bedsores on Your Hairy Old Wrinkled Ass.

The thing that Rollo keeps missing is that there is more to life than slip dipping the stiff snake that spits through its winker.

- What about children?
- What about the effects on the community?
- What about building a domain or a legacy?
- What about glorifying God through having a family?
- What about the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife model?

At this point, it seems he just churning out whatever he thinks will get more views, clicks, and cash.

Case Study 3 — The Dead End of the Road

The longitudinal outcome of sticking to Rollo's analyses as a pillar of masculine identity or as a prescription leads to either despondence or depravity.

LocustsPlease said,

> "I stopped following Rollo a while ago [as did many Christian Red Pillers], when the heathen secular Manosphere started to irritate my Christian ears. The way he sits in his chair with the guitar behind him looks like horns.
>
> He had this wh0remongerer on constantly bragging about how many playmates, bikini models, porn stars, and assorted harlots he was friends with. Maybe it's an accomplishment to incels. That was an accomplishment to me 15-20 years ago, but not now. And yeah, his vasectomy comment needed a better explanation. I remember hearing about it and being confused. He is normally over-analytical."

Conclusions

Rollo Tomassi's view of the world only describes how soulless people behave (for instance, most of the girls on Fresh & Fit). As such, his work offers an excellent analysis of the fleshly nature, but it excludes any higher place or purpose related to man's identity of being made in the image of God. It is for this reason that he is hated by Churchians, Conservatives, Liberals, Media, and anyone else who is allergic to truth. However, we must be careful not to reject the ugly truths about human nature that he has exposed simply because they are ugly. We would be better served to use his insights to enhance our discernment, self-awareness, and wisdom, and perhaps also introspection, repentance, and vetting.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Dispensation of the Red Pill (2018/4/7)
- Σ Frame: Rollo Tomassi on Female Agency (2022/11/4)
- Σ Frame: The Godfather undermines Fatherhood. (2023/7/10)
- Σ Frame: Lovebreaker (2024/3/20)
- Σ Frame: Rollo Tomassi's Concepts of 'Love' (2024/4/15)
- Σ Frame: Rollo Tomassi's Take on the Meet Cute Phenomenon (2024/4/29)

Philosophical Dualism

Jack · 27 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The mind's understanding is limited to categorical models which are both coexisting and conflicting.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / A Failure of Imagination
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Overview

In the Exposition of this month's theme, A Failure of Imagination was identified as one type of problem with The Red Pill.

Foundational reading includes the basics of modelling and 9 Types of Red Pill Models.

Since last week's flag post, A Failure of Imagination (2024/5/20), commenters left a number of insights related to this topic. I've gathered together a few of the most noteworthy, edited them for clarity and ease of reading, and added my commentary and some scripture references where applicable. Links to the original comments are embedded in the initial words.

After studying the contents of these comments, I noticed a pattern of philosophical dualism, for lack of a better term. (See notes appended.) I'm NOT referring to the heretical doctrine of dualism, although there may be some overlap. For brevity, I will not examine this here.

Dualistic Humanity

Rollo's emphasis on evo psyche / naturalist materialism and neglect of humanity, metaphysics, and longitudinal outcome highlights a kind of inherent schizophrenia you see in some psychology (as an academic discipline). Assumption one is we are all evolutionary meat robots, and assumption two is we can use our free will to better ourselves. Obviously, trying to believe in total determinism and free will at the same time is going to do funny things to your mind.

We have discussed this before in different contexts, subjects, and words, and with less clarity of the differences.

- Creationism vs. Evolution? (or both?)
- Is man an animal, or is he made in the image of God? (or both?)
- Are women purely emotion-driven, opportunistic, and situationally pseudo-ethical, or are they capable of great devotion and loving a man selflessly for who he is? (NAWALT?)

Concerning individualized archetypes, we have categorized this difference by describing women as either being agentic or hypoagentic, slores / proto-slores or chaste and submissive. We have described this in men too: Rollo's 'Average Frustrated Chump', Vox Day's 'Gamma male', and Σ Frame's 'Autopilot' (or the more generous 'Young Man with Problems'). We have well-defined, caricatured archetypes for faux-masculinity, but a less well-understood concept of mature masculinity — a man of indefatigability, integrity, purpose, self-control, and perhaps a little Rizz.

We may refer to these stereotypes for ease of communicative reference, but we should always remember that, in reality, there are gradations. In these times, it's hard to draw a line between sinful / soulless / depraved and mature / regenerated / righteous. But what matters is how men address women in the "power" position they currently occupy in the SMP/MMP, and how men deal with facts on the ground / boots on the ground. The fact is that most men will be going without while most women share the top 10% of men. That's just how it is and how it will be going forward.

There is a lot of exploitation for the 60-80 % men going on, based on the delusion that by some Tradcon / W0ke magic they will become attractive to women. Once they blow past this delusion and are ready to face reality, their lives will improve, while the lives of those deluding and exploiting them won't.

Dualistic Soteriology

Malcolm Reynolds often comments about how mating behavior affects progeneration and population growth.

Although I cannot agree with all of his perspectives, his larger point is an important one that is oft overlooked, especially within Protestantism — that obedience to God tends to offer the best conditions possible for a flourishing family life and culture. Of course, this is not always true, especially when the surrounding culture is corrupt and godless, and sometimes it boils down to self-immolation, but there is a significantly strong correlation that suggests the reasons why God told us to do or not do certain things is not just for our own personal spiritual relationship with Him now and in the afterlife, but also to enhance our own mortal well-being and that of our progeny.

Christian Nationalists and Civilizationists have picked up on the value of this concept, yet much of Christian soteriology, including some voices in the Christian Manosphere, still cling to a dualistic view of thinking that the fruits of obedience are strictly spiritual and cannot be expected to bring carnal / material / social benefits, and even that it is heretical to assume so (cue the Joel Osteen straw man).

I've told my daughters that being obedient to the Word maximizes one's chances of getting the most out of life, given one's circumstances, family heritage, personality, values, and maybe a few other factors. However, there are no guarantees. One might be completely obedient and still experience catastrophe, like Job, while another might be rebellious, but yet learn something about one's self from the experience and go on to find forgiveness, grace, and blessings. Real failure is not only found in screwing up time and again and never learning anything or improving, but also in being happy, obedient to the letter of the law, and successful, all the while thinking it is all your own doing. Real success is finding inner peace and contentment with the Lord, being obedient (e.g. drawing appropriate boundaries) as an expression of love for Him, staying faithful and humble during the rough patches, and learning from one's mistakes.

Dualistic Spiritual Truth

The Truth is Life to the Living, and Death to the Dying.

> [14] But thanks be to God, who always leads us in triumph in Christ, and manifests through us the sweet aroma of the knowledge of Him in every place. [15] For we are a fragrance of Christ to God among those who are being saved and among those who are perishing; [16] to the one an aroma from death to death, to the other an aroma from life to life. And who is adequate for these things? [17] For we are not like many, peddling the word of God, but as from sincerity, but as from God, we speak in Christ in the sight of God.

> 2 Corinthians 2:14-17 (NASB1995)

The commonly accepted definition of “Red Pill” within the Manosphere is very simply “the truth” of reality. This, in contrast to the half-truths or outright lies spread by what society recognizes as custom and sources of knowledge and authority.

- The truth about women’s true nature.
- The truth about how intersexual relations really function.
- The truth about how men are REALLY treated by society compared to how society likes to imagine it treats them.
- The truth about how the modern church really views male and female roles and expectations compared to what the Bible prescribes.

While it is true that “the truth shall set you free” (John 8:31-32), the truth is also very unpopular. It is often impolitic. It does not care about human feelings. It bursts delusional bubbles that insulate (to a point) people from the world’s unpleasantness. It humbles people who, while often needing to be humbled, cannot bear to be humbled because of loss of face, status, etc.

Simply stated, truth, as symbolized by the Red Pill, is the enemy of the fallen world. People (especially women) do not like this because it makes women look bad and justifies the restraints that used to be on single women’s sexuality. This is why so many people and institutions are working so hard to deny, discredit, and distort it.

The Red Pill is NOT a philosophy or ideology or “worldview”. It’s simply a set of facts and tools about male and female nature, the way sexual attraction works, and the way intersexual dynamics works. What men do with this information is up to them.

This is why the PUA’s who shared their knowledge of women, attraction, desire, and relationship dynamics offer more to men than most pastors ever do or will from the pulpit. This is also why it is a mistake to discard that knowledge because of how men like Heartiste and Roosh immorally purposed it and came to learn it.

Notes

On what I have termed ‘dualism’ in this essay: Chinese philosophical traditions would call this “speculative learning” or ‘metaphysics’ [玄學 / xuánxué]. The word ‘dualism’ is adopted here because of the Western penchant for dichotomous, black-and-white thinking in philosophy, as seen in the comments. Other Chinese philosophical traditions include “classical learning” [經學 / jīngxué], the learning of principles [理學 / lǐxué], the learning of the ancient masters (e.g. Confucius, Sun Tzu, et al.) [諸子學 / zhūzǐ xué], and spiritual learning (i.e. Buddhism, Daoism) [佛學 / fóxué].

Chinese philosophy predates Greek philosophy as a form of thought, and is considered a path towards truth and wisdom. It addresses ethics, morals, metaphysics, and the supernatural, and is both transcendental and immanent. In comparison, Western philosophy is a continuation of one branch of Greek philosophy in which disciplines originate from universals extracted from studies of individual phenomena and then condensed into systems of knowledge using a strict, regulated mode of thinking based on logic. The metaphysical / transcendental nature of Chinese philosophy has attracted sharp criticism from Western philosophers and sinologists who liken it to a religion and who prefer to reduce it to a system of ethics, historical narratives, incomplete and nonsensical syllogisms, and superstitions.

Related

- Spawny’s Space: The worrisome rebellion of a timely procreation. (2021/5/10)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Modelling 101 (2024/3/22)
- Σ Frame: Misunderstood Models (2024/4/3)

Red Pill Truth is Not a Lifestyle to be Emulated

Jack · 29 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Is it right that the truths of the Red Pill are often rejected because the observers don't like the messengers?

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / A Failure of Imagination
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Overview

In the Exposition of this month's theme, A Failure of Imagination was identified as one type of problem with The Red Pill. I expected this subtopic to receive a brief coverage, but it continues to churn out more insights.

Foundational reading includes the basics of modelling and 9 Types of Red Pill Models.

Offended by the Messengers

Oscar writes,

> "I think you missed the primary reason why so many men — especially young Millennials and Zoomers — are rejecting the Red Pill.
>
> Young men are looking at the dispensers of the Red Pill and they don't like what they see. Famous Red Pill dispensers come in two broad categories, grifters and degenerates, and there's a lot of overlap.
>
> A lot of young men want nothing to do with either. They want "good relationships, having a family, and having a better / real life", and they don't see that in the lives of famous Red Pill dispensers.
>
> Again, you wouldn't take fitness advice from a fat slob. You wouldn't take money advice from a broke slob. And — if you want a family — you wouldn't take relationship advice from a degenerate grifter."

I do not disagree that this is happening on a large scale.

Basically, what Oscar has observed is that men are rejecting The Red Pill because…

- They do not like what other men have done with this knowledge.
- They do not like the men themselves, because of either personal characteristics or what they have done with (or without) this knowledge.

> "So, what does a reasonable man do? A reasonable man looks for another man who has already accomplished what he wants to accomplish, and asks him "How did you do that?"

As an example, Oscar presents a recent video of Tucker Carlson's interview of Pastor Doug Wilson.

> "At one point, Tucker asked Pastor Doug how many children and grandchildren he has. Pastor Doug answered three children, 18 grandchildren, and two great grandchildren so far.
>
> Tucker excitedly replied, "That's what I want!"
>
> Obviously, Tucker is much older than the men we're talking about, but the same principle of real life experience applies. If a man wants to accomplish something, then he talks to men who've already accomplished what he wants to accomplish.
>
> Online Red Pill degenerate grifters have nothing to offer but emptiness, meaninglessness, and nihilism. There is only despair at the end of their road (see Ecclesiastes), unless they turn to Jesus.
>
> Who wants that?"

Jay Dyer

Problems with this Approach

I will readily agree that younger men should have mentors and that older men should act as mentors, especially Christian men.

The problem with Oscar's argument is when men mistakenly believe that pure truth can only come from a pure dispenser. Jesus was, is, and will ever be the only Man for whom this is true. The best all the rest of us can do is offer dim reflections of the truth through a cracked and dirty mirror (1 Corinthians 13:9-12). It is a problem when men shrink back from discovering truths because they are appalled by the condition of the mirror, and fail to see what is reflected therein — themselves. So instead of learning from these men's mistakes, they are doomed to either repeat them or else live in an insulated, isolated bubble which prevents further growth.

Another problem with all this is that 'love' and intersexual dynamics are a wholly different animal than masculine disciplines and life goals like fitness / strength training, losing weight, making money, building wealth, etc. A man cannot simply decide for himself, "Today, I'm going to find a faithful, trophy / unicorn wife, settle into a blissful, peaceful, lifelong marriage, and have a pack of kids", and then make actionable steps to that end, as if it were simply one more life ambition / discipline like the others mentioned above.

Instead, we are told that wives are 'found'.

> He who finds a wife finds a good thing and obtains favor from the Lord.
>
> Proverbs 18:22 (ESV)

Proverbs 19:14 also says, "…a good / prudent / sensible wife is a gift from the Lord."

We don't get to choose what we find or which gift we get. Beneficiaries don't make that decision. Beggars can't be choosers. Also, it doesn't say "wives are good". It just says having a wife is good (by God's definition of 'good', not necessarily man's concept), and we know that having the Lord's favor isn't necessarily a stroll through the park. Look at any of the Old Testament prophets, like Ezekiel (his wife died), Hosea (his wife was unfaithful), or Job

(his wife was a termagant), or Jeremiah who never married.

Another problem is that those men who do have "good relationships, a family, and a better / real life" oftentimes don't have a clue about the hows and whys.

For example…

- Oscar cited Pastor Doug Wilson as an example of someone with a successful marriage, but up until recently, he held not just one but several Blue Pilled / Complementarianish / unorthodox beliefs about marriage and ministry, as Dalrock elucidated in more than a hundred posts. Was his success a result of the errant beliefs he held for the first half of his life, or did this somehow have nothing to do with it? How then did he achieve success, if not for the grace of God? So then, should we trust his advice for what he says or for what he does?
- Derek has fervently insisted that harmony, unity, and "mutual submission" are the keys to having a strong marriage, but a divorced man, Jack, was able to articulate his concepts more clearly.
- Soup Sandwich never understood why IOIs were so common and easy for him (until he got involved with the Manosphere).
- The Boomers are an excellent example of people having rich blessings and not having a clue about the how's and why's nor how to maintain it.
- Also, SurfDumb shared the story of Rory McIlroy, a top class man whose marriage failed with his ultra common plain Jane wife, Erica Stoll. No man is exempt.

We might revert to the Manospherian catch phrase, "Watch what they do, NOT what they say", as applying to men too, although it is even more difficult to discern the truth about men than it is with women.

Also, when considering the present state of churchianity today, it is absurd to think that what is currently called 'Christianity' has the marriage market cornered. Some men with 'happy' unions are atheists, some are Blue Pilled ("Happy Wife, Happy Life!"), and some, like Derek and Pastor Wilson, have strong beliefs about the hows and whys that are not actually the real reasons for their successes. Meanwhile, there are many faithful Christians who have utterly failed in marriage. Headship seems to have very little correlation with religious beliefs, as I have written about before.

The Dirtier the Dispenser, the Purer the Red Pill

Here I'll introduce a very ironic, novel, and perhaps controversial principle which defies reason.

The Dirtier the Dispenser, the Purer the Red Pill.

Remember, it was pagan PUAs who first discovered the basic truths of the Red Pill, not faithful pastors and priests in stable loving marriages, as we would be much more comfortable in believing (or maybe not).

Consider what the Lord said.

> I have been found by those who did not seek me;
> I have shown myself to those who did not ask for me.
>
> Isaiah 65:1; Romans 10:20 (ESV)

Note that this appears in both the Old and New Covenants. IOW, this holds true in the most basic sense, irrespective of religious beliefs (or the lack thereof).

Interestingly, this verse applies both ways.

- Those who have a good marriage don't know how they attained it.
- Those who know the practical truths of having a good relationship never went out looking to have a good marriage. They learned it through raw dog experience.

The Leaning Tower of Pisa. It's not perfect, but ironically, that's what makes it iconically great.

As it turns out, ironically, those men who've been through the meat grinder are more familiar with the intricacies of relationships, in spite of their failures and sins. This further supports the Biblical admonition for us to specifically encourage and mentor others who are coming through the same experiences that we ourselves have endured (2 Corinthians 1:3-7). Those are the individuals who are within one's domain of spiritual authority.

Conclusions

Mirroring what was concluded in the previous post…

Simply stated, truth, as symbolized by the Red Pill, is the enemy of the fallen world. People (especially women) do not like this because it makes women look bad and justifies the restraints that used to be on single women's sexuality. This is why so many people and institutions are working so hard to deny, discredit, and distort it.

The Red Pill is NOT a philosophy or ideology or "worldview", and neither is it an ideal lifestyle that is poorly marketed by grifters and degenerates. It's simply a set of facts and tools about male and female nature, the way sexual attraction works, the way intersexual dynamics works. Naturally, those men who are the most knowledgeable learned it through the school of hard knocks.

The Dirtier the Dispenser, the Purer the Red Pill.

This is why the PUA's who shared their knowledge of women, attraction, desire, and relationship dynamics offer more to men than most pastors ever do or will from the pulpit. This is also why it is a mistake to discard that knowledge because of how men like Heartiste and Roosh immorally purposed it and came to learn it.

Related

- Spawny's Space: The worrisome rebellion of a timely procreation. (2021/5/10)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Modelling 101 (2024/3/22)
- Σ Frame: Misunderstood Models (2024/4/3)

Hypocrisy in the Manosphere

Jack · 31 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Do as I say, not as I do, yew bigot!

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / A Failure of Imagination
Length: 2,400 words
Reading Time: 14 minutes

> "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy. [2] Nothing is covered up that will not be revealed, or hidden that will not be known. [3] Therefore whatever you have said in the dark shall be heard in the light, and what you have whispered in private rooms shall be proclaimed on the housetops.
>
> Luke 12:1-3 (ESV)

It's no secret that many of the personalities and voices in the Manosphere are hypocrites.

In this post, I've collected a number of examples and will offer some explanations with a twist at the end. (Sources are referenced.)

Hypocrisy in the Secular Manosphere

Rollo Tomassi often attacks marriage, warns men not to marry because of the risks involved, advises men to get vasectomies, etc. Yet, he claims to be in a happy, exceptional marriage. [1]

Neil Strauss was a border !ncel before he started running with Erik von Markovik, AKA Mystery. He eventually denounced the pickup and seduction lifestyle, got married, and later divorced. [1]

Caleb Jones, AKA Black Dragon, was known to have some powerful insights about women. Then PUA Nick Krauser made a good case about him being a delusional, pathetic cuck. [1]

Recently, Walter Weekes of Fresh and Fit fame was involved in a scandal with a Chinese woman, Daisy Chen, who claimed to have become pregnant by him and was demanding support. This, after telling men not to date gold diggers, and to always wear condoms.

Wheat Waffles

MGTOW sh!tposters like Sandman, Stardust, Turd Flinging Monkey, and Wheat Waffles became popular for their Red Pill / Black Pill / reverse-psychology Red Pill / doomer philosophies. [1] However, Wheat Waffles recently outed himself and was revealed to be a young and rather handsome white guy enjoying a comfortable, middle-class status, who was just ranting behind a screen. The others may not be much different.

From a larger perspective, The Black Pill has overtaken The Red Pill as the primary non-Blue Pill perspective. Black Pill could be described as a more fatalistic version of The Red Pill. Yet, there continues to be an emphasis on non-fatalistic coping strategies, e.g. being about one's purpose, looksmaxing, passporting, etc.

If you go back in the Manosphere to 2017-2020, there were a lot of uniform conversations about how "It's a man space so let's keep it that way." They would say, "Never listen to what women say. Don't work with female dating coaches. Don't take the advice of female dating coaches." Now today, many of them work with these female dating coaches. [2]

Some self-professed sexperts have presented themselves as legendary Lotharios who've bedded thousands of beautiful women. Then they'll admit that some of these women they had sex with were prostitutes and/or some were tr@nssexu@ls born as biological men. [2]

Some dating gurus will claim that their dating system allows them to only date gorgeous women, but are revealed to be in a relationship with an average at best woman, many of them older than the guys and even single mothers. [2]

There have been guys who warned men against getting involved with single mothers, being pre-cucked, and shouldering the burden of another man's child. Then it was revealed that they covertly invited a single mother into their own life, one of whom was older than him. Another one married a single mother and is raising children that are not his own. [2]

Many bloggers and blog / forum commenters have professed to be mega Ch@d poon slayers and have bragged about same-day lays (SDL), conquest after conquest of 10s and virgins, and fathering multiple children by several women, when in fact, they're socially awkward dorks or autistic nerds who have never leveled up in their lives.

Walter Weekes (right) and Daisy Chen (left).

There have been boisterous braggarts who professed having an amazing bisexual girlfriend who is compliant, loving, and who brings other women into the bedroom for threesomes, yet were then exposed to have an abusive girlfriend that physically assaults and batters him. [2]

Some dudes will tell you to do the work, lift weights, eat clean, get sufficient amounts of rest / sleep, but they'll binge on junk food, they'll never exercise, they'll stay up the entire night drinking, and they'll get liposuction to remove belly fat because they're too lazy to do the work themselves. [2]

There have been guys claiming to be multi-millionaires with several successful businesses only to be discovered to be completely broke and living at home with family. [2]

One guy said men who send money to OnlyF@ns women are simps. Yet it was found out from the manager of an OnlyF@ns agency (an 'E pimp') that the same guy is a paid subscriber to his girls' accounts. [2]

Some 'world-class' PUAs have hosted 'boot camps' or 'conference events' in a large city to teach men how to seduce and sleep with beautiful women. Men have paid thousands of dollars to attend one of these events. Then it came out that they hired prostitutes to be paid actors in their boot camps to be seduced and sleep with these paying students in order to give them the impression that they're learning skills of seduction. In many cases, the PUAs even slept with the prostitutes prior to the event, or before assigning them to the students to sleep with. [2] Now imagine these students' disappointment when they realized that they thought they were actually getting better with women, when in fact, they were being duped into paying for hookers to sleep with other men and/or who were covertly passed around to all the guys attending the events.

A PUA Bootcamp.

Some PUAs are responsible for getting socially awkward men incarcerated for following their dating systems and techniques. There have been several socially awkward or maybe even autism spectrum guys who stood trial for harassing women and even a couple of R@pes. The PUAs who sold them the books / course / training / etc. that inspired these guys to boldly cold approach chicks way out of their league were nowhere to be seen because they fled the country. [2]

Some guys have tried to learn and apply pick up tactics on women and they could never successfully “close the sale”. After a number of repeated failures, they’ve gotten so angry and frustrated that they’ve attacked the woman or have done other crazy stunts. For example, there was one guy who was trying to ‘pull’ a girl in a nightclub and she rejected him. So he took the glass that he was drinking his beverage from and smashed it into her face. Stuff like this is exactly why women are so afraid of being taken in by a poseur. [2]

Many PUA / Game Gurus have criminal records and are running from the law. In some cases, they have been forced to move and/or flee their home country. [2]

Hypocrisy in the Christian Manosphere

So far, these are all things that the Christian Manosphere and the wider culture have criticized the Secular Manosphere for, but the Christian Manosphere is also guilty of hypocrisy.

Some guys preach the glories and virtues of marriage and family, but have miserable, subpar marriages and rebellious children. [1]

Roosh Valizadeh

Some guys promote sexual chastity and Christian living but they are divorced, and/or are promiscuous or have been in the past.

There are guys who urge men to reject a woman if she doesn't put out within a few weeks to a few months, but yet also urge men not to marry women with a high body count.

Some guys will relentlessly go on and on about how to have a strong frame in a long-term relationship and how important it is, and they'll even sell advice on how to do it. But it is revealed that they have no frame in their own relationships. They let their wives and girlfriends run amuck and perpetually capitalize their time with excessive drama. [2]

Roosh claimed he went to Eastern Europe to find longer-term relationships with higher-quality women than he would have had in the United States. He did have one longer-term relationship in Poland. He was drastically impacted by his sister's early death from breast cancer, denounced fornication / pickup / seduction, and became religious. Since then, many find it asinine that he is now telling people to be born again Christians and to abstain from sex, despite literally having traveled the world for easy lays and writing books about it. Some see it as the equivalent of a post-wall woman being angry at younger women for enjoying the carousel. Others see it as a genuine conversion. [1]

In all these examples, it is revealed that these men don't follow their own advice.

And that's just the tip of the iceberg.

I could keep going. There are many many more shameful stories. There's also a lot of drama, infighting, and even some litigation around all of these things.

As a consequence of all this, the Manosphere and The Red Pill itself deal with a significant PR issue today.

Possible Explanations

The Daydreamer: One simple explanation for the hypocrisy is that these men are simply crafting inspiring narratives, spells in some cases, that are rich in mastery and mythos but which are entirely detached from their own personal experience / reality.

The Snake Oil Salesmen: In many cases, these men are simply pitching whatever sells, whatever gets views, clicks, and cash. Both negativity and sex sells. When you put them together, you have a business model. That is why The Black Pill is so popular. It is easy to tell someone that they cannot get laid because of their race and height rather than walking by their side as they work out the hows and whys (which is often hard work). Articles and videos by professional psychologists about how to improve aspects of self-esteem with step-by-step instructions are much less popular. Nobody wants to hear that it will take them several years until they're able to find or have a stable relationship. Donning an image of flash pan success, though false, avoids distractions and objections and keeps subscribers tuned in. It's all salesmanship that is completely detached from their personal lives. [1]

The Wannabes: The most vocal guys are often the least successful guys. The most successful guys are the ones who go out there, take risks, grind through the mash, get results, learn from their mistakes, take ownership, and eventually master that particular challenge. Then they just move on to other things. However, the most vocal guys are the ones who have tried to do a bunch of cold approaches but then got no results. Most PUAs fit the mold of the deluded narcissist who tried, failed with women, could not take ownership, blamed external circumstances, advertised them, and then got a following off of it. Oftentimes, these guys have a massive ego that deludes them into thinking they did nothing wrong. and so they capitalize on their own self-deception in advertising their message to a broader audience. Moreover, those who teach others are never at the top of the game, by definition. And those who are at the top are rarely motivated to share their knowledge. That's the "guru" paradox: "Those who can't do, teach." [1]

The Try Hards: A more generous explanation may be that some of these men are attempting to "fake it till they make it". They genuinely believe in what they're professing / selling and sincerely think that it can be reached with just a little more diligence, effort, faith, practice, time, or whatever.

The Desperados: A more profound explanation is that these men are not speaking out of their own successful experiences, but instead are speaking out of the depraved desires of their hearts. They're yearning for that which is missing in their lives. By exploring / grifting / teaching The Red Pill, they're desperately attempting to fill in that missing piece.

The Fleshly Fools: Of course, none of the above explanations can account for the blatant deception that has been perpetrated. But in many cases, the deception was warmly welcomed and entertained by other men in the hope of laying pipe.

As Thedeti often says, "P_ssy makes men stupid." And that is the penultimate explanation for all of this hypocrisy.

The Reframe

Here, I'd like to offer a counter argument, for the sake of argument.

Christians are 'hypocrites' by definition. Christians agree with the Lord in condemning sin, yet they are guilty of said sins.

People who have reveled in a life of sin and who later repented have some of the most powerfully moving testimonies of faith. (People who have no such testimony are arguably better Christians and better people too, but that is not as convincing nor educational nor inspiring.) Are they hypocrites?

Also, it has been argued before that those men who are successful in life and marriage are often very poor at giving out actionable advice to men who aspire to emulate their exceptional lives. Ironically, men who have been through the handwringer are better able to fill in those necessary gaps of understanding. If a man recognizes and relays the truth despite not having successfully lived it out, does that make him a hypocrite?

It seems that being well-rehearsed in sin often brings a greater acquaintance with the truth. Does that make one a hypocrite?

Jesus said, "He who is forgiven much, loves much. He who is forgiven little, loves little." (c.f. Luke 7:47)

Conclusions

The answers to these questions become apparent when we recognize that there are multiple concepts of hypocrisy:

The Dictionary Definition of Hypocrisy: A pretense of having a virtuous character, moral or religious beliefs or principles, etc., that one does not really possess.

The Worldly Concept of Hypocrisy: One's actions, beliefs, and words are starkly incongruent.

The Spiritual Concept of Hypocrisy: Magnifying and scrutinizing the shortcomings and sins of others while downplaying, justifying, or minimizing one's own shortcomings and sins (usually arising from a refusal to be humble and forgiving).

Joshua Harris, author of the book, I Kissed Dating Goodbye.
Also relevant,

The Dictionary Definition of Bigotry: A stubborn and complete intolerance of any creed, belief, or opinion that differs from one's own.

The Secular Manosphere is condemned by feminized society for their bigotry, but in fact, Christians should be bigots (at least more than they currently are in today's "Anything goes", "That which feeelz good IS good", "Tolerance is the ultimate virtue" culture). I fear it is the Christian Manosphere that dabbles in true Spiritual Hypocrisy.

A spiritual concept of the worldly concept of hypocrisy is a lack of integrity. So although many Red Pill gurus are certainly hypocrites (pick the definition that applies), what we are actually seeing in some of them is not hypocrisy per se, but a lack of integrity.

A worldly concept of the spiritual concept of hypocrisy is the famed and feared 'judgmentalism' combined with the fear of righteous bigotry. We see this arising from liberal W0ketards and also in the church.

The worldly concept of hypocrisy is never highlighted unless all three concepts of hypocrisy are present and are being projected onto the accused who responds by becoming an accuser shouting "Yew hypocritical bigot!"

Sources

1. SoSuave Forum: The blatant hypocrisy of Manosphere/Pill Influencers (2022/7/9)
2. Rich Cooper: Exposing Hypocrisy in the Manosphere (2024/2/2)

Related

- Etcetera & Atbp: Beware of the Leaven of Hypocrisy (2012/5/29)

The Red Pill is a Dead End for Bachelors

Jack · 3 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

For some men, knowing the Red Pill truth is worse than believing the Blue Pill lies.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / The Absence of Actionable Knowledge / The Failure of Imagination / The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss
Author's Note: Inspired by a comment from SurfDumb.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes

Ground Tremors

The Red Pill is responsible for blowing open the knowledge of women's multiple mating strategies and other Feminine Secrets which had been carefully occluded from men's common knowledge for an undeterminable length of time. These revelations have totally upended the old SMP/MMP and have created an entirely different sociosexual reality. If not for this information spreading its tentacles across the internet, men probably would've continued being Blue Pilled, Chivalrous, hyperagentic suckers, as they had been accustomed to doing ever since the dawn of women's liberation or even earlier.

Since then, the SMP has bifurcated into two general demographics of men — those few men with practically unlimited access to females, and the vast majority of men who do not — colloquially termed, "The Have's" and "The Have Not's", respectively, or more humorously, the 'Studs' and the 'Duds'.

Now that this truth has been out in the mainstream for a few years and is gradually setting like Quickrete into the cultural lore, the Red Pill is no longer the soul-shocking revelation that it once was. Most men have resigned themselves to their respective fates, as indicated by the popularity of The Black Pill perspective. Marriage is now gynolatry to Boomers, a travesty to Xers, a joke to Millennials, and a pipe dream to Zoomers.

Some may be tempted to blame all of this nihilism on The Red Pill, but it may be more honest to recognize that The Red Pill only accelerated the inevitable consequences of Feminism — the default feminine imperative, which is an open and unregulated sexual market supported by overinflated socialism.

The Failure of Society

The failure of society towards men is not the focus of this post, but so as not to leave readers disappointed and/or asking, below is a list of posts that have covered how society has failed men.

- Σ Frame: The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The Young Man's Problem (2022/2/4)
- Σ Frame: The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame: The more things change, the more they stay the same. (2022/2/28)
- Σ Frame: A blinding obsession (2022/4/15)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 1 (2023/7/12)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 2 (2023/7/13)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Zeitgeist Report 2023 — Part 3 (2023/7/14)
- Catacomb Resident: The Black Pill (2023/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse (2023/12/9)
- Σ Frame: Summary of the W!tchy War on Masculinity (2023/12/27)

The Failure of the Church

Church counseling turns a blind eye to women's selfishness, sin, solipsism, stupidity, and other general inanities leading to relationship conflicts / failures, and instead, regularly blames and castigates men for these behaviors from women. Men who are in a bad marriage are lonely and powerless in this church situation.

Men should be learning Biblical / Red Pill truths through their fathers first, and the church second. But it has been observed that, unfortunately, many fathers are not well versed nor practiced in the truth, and many others have been exiled from their children's lives via parental divorce.

Lots of young men at church want to climb the ranks, and so they hang with the leaders and learn their modes of thinking. But Pastors and Elders are continuing to bang the 'Servant Leader' drum every week, and they are usually ignorant about Red Pill knowledge. Moreover, the church offers little to none of any Red Pill advice / guidance / truths to young men and women.

There is no teaching that is geared towards single men and offers specific instruction about what it means to be single, and how it's different than a spiritual gift of being single. As a result, most churches are horrible at keeping (and getting) single guys engaged.

But even if there are Red Pilled men at church, their influence is typically under suspicion and therefore limited, and they're not able to make much of a difference. And even when Red Pilled men speak up, their words are likely to fall on deaf ears. For example, if an older Red Pilled man told younger men the standard fare coming out of the Manosphere, "Gotta dead-lift at least twice your body weight, have a specific ministry goal, be ambitious for always making more money and increasing your status, find your spiritual gifts and your sphere of authority and make an impact on those around you…", and so on, then men are likely to scoff or shirk or shrink back. "I wasn't aware of such a high bar for a godly marriage." It would take a Red Pilled man with a lot of personal charisma who is walking the walk AND talking the talk to turn the tide of gynocentrism in the church. But those guys are few and they hardly ever turn up at church.

Below are a few noteworthy posts that have addressed men's issues in the church.

- Σ Frame: Roadblocks in Ministry (2010/6/6)
- Return of Kings (Blair Naso): 5 Lessons From Church That Will Wreck Your Life (2014/10/31)
- Σ Frame: The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)
- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- Σ Frame (Anonymous Contributor): The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)
- Aaron Renn: Evangelicals Need to Stop Shaming Men (2023/10/27)

Pastor Tim Keller

The Failure of the Manosphere

Many posts have been written about how the Manosphere has neglected and slighted men, especially men who aren't HSV, who are angry / bitter, or who find it difficult to level up.

Here are several posts on this topic.

- Σ Frame: The Dispensation of the Red Pill (2018/4/7)
- Σ Frame (Blair Naso): Red Pill Political Correctness (2019/3/17)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Narrow Way (2020/6/8)
- Σ Frame: The Shepherd and the Crook (2020/10/19)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Is the Christian Red Pill a Black Pill? (2020/11/29)
- Σ Frame: Avoiding the Broken Window Effect (2021/7/21)
- Vox Popoli: Triggering the Irrelevant (2022/3/20)
- Σ Frame: The Status Signaling Narrative (2022/3/21)
- Adam Piggott: I agree with Vox (2022/3/22)
- Σ Frame: Another Status Signaling Narrative (2022/3/26)
- Σ Frame (Jack): On Choosing the Flesh over Christ (2022/9/10)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Ever Looming Black Pill (2022/9/12)
- Σ Frame (Jack): What is the Black Pill? (2022/9/13)
- Σ Frame (Jack): The Black Pill is the Natural Outcome of the Secular Mating Paradigm (2022/9/14)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Black Pill Competition (2022/9/15)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill as a Socio-Sexual Phenomenon (2022/9/17)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Heads in the Sand (2023/11/3)
- Σ Frame: Rewriting the Script for a Kinder, Gentler Feminism (2023/11/10)
- Σ Frame: Problems with The Red Pill — Exposition (2024/3/1)

Even here at Σ Frame, there is a vacuum of authentic spiritual authority that fails to reach many men.

Jason / LastMod withdrew from commenting because he failed to find an audience here (largely because of his own bitterness and overdosing on The Black Pill).

SurfDumb said he was reading here a year ago about all the successful men here posting high-level achievements. When he asked about what a man in his own situation could do, in return he got advice reminiscent of an Army recruitment brochure from the 1980's: "Be the best you can be." In fact, some churches do teach exactly this.

What hope does a normal guy have for a marriage, if all he sees here is, a professor with all-night sex (Jack), cynical and super articulate lawyers (Lexet, NovaSeeker, Thedeti), a guy with 10 kids speaking a second language (Oscar), a book writer (Deep Strength), a guy with 5 kids and no fights with his wife and can write extensively about many things (Derek). If that's what it takes for a good marriage, and most men aren't that, then the implication is that most men might have a Gift of Singleness.

The Sufferings of Singleness is the New Gift of Singleness

Thanks for reading this far to get to the main message of this post. Unfortunately, it is not a pleasant one.

Around here, it has been said that The Red Pill is a set of facts, or principles, that help men understand women's fleshly nature, which can be of use to get married, or in a marriage. But this is of little consequence if marriage is not a realistic possibility or is a wholly untenable option in the first place.

In the past, the Gift of Singleness* was generally recognized in those with a flaccid, limp, or non-existing libido that permitted them to exercise full self-control and thereby escape the impetus of carnal desires and the impurities of lust. But if the Gift of Singleness is regarded differently due to the times we are now in, the Gift of Singleness might be in realizing that the juice isn't worth the squeeze. Maybe the Gift of Singleness now includes men who decide they can glorify God better by NOT being attached to a 40% divorce risk, and 80% burden-risk.

Let us be reminded that suffering is oftentimes the hand of God moving us closer to Him. It is also a goad to action and growth. God's silence in this is an expression of His trust in us to crucify the flesh and deepen our faith in Him. In this view, suffering is the kindness of God, despite how much our fleshly nature may detest this fact. Therefore, the New Gift of Singleness is the Suffering of Singleness.

Christian men who have the New Gift of Singleness should wear it ~~proudly~~ with genuine humility and not let anyone put them to shame for this. It is no shame to be free from a source of shame (i.e. modern rebellious women). It is spiritual liberty (1 Corinthians 7:25-40).

 The Gift of Singleness is not to be confused with the Season of Singleness, which is a whitewashed euphemism for carouseling.*

Conclusions

Seeing how most people don't discover the Red Pill until they're faced with a life-faltering relationship crisis, this may partly explain the absence / ignorance of Red Pill knowledge. Another closely related explanation may be that the Red Pill is often associated with degenerates, grifters, low moral quality individuals, and those struggling through difficult relationships, and is therefore regarded as 'unclean'.

All things considered, perhaps it would be best to destroy young people's (false) hopes for marriage, so that they might then be able to serendipitously discover whatever life might hold for them on their own, without the false fantasies of poisonous delusions looming over their heads. Loading them with Biblical / Red Pill truths about sex and marriage would probably have this effect.

Fortunately, good advice can now be found through the Red Pill, but even so, it is still hard to find and rare to observe. But even after hearing the good Red Pill advice from the Christian Manosphere, they still have the scars of enduring the abuse of their masculinity from living in a feminized culture, leaving them suffering and with too few folks to discuss the battles with.

One thing that is obviously needed for a life of suffering is conversation and prayer. My intention as a blogger is to collect, analyze, and disseminate general Red Pill information and insights, but I leave it to readers to find their own paths. I will spell out some choices / options that may come to my awareness, but I hesitate to call it advice. Fortunately (and as I had hoped), several regular commenters expand and further explain these options and offer their own testimonies about how things work. I also know that several commenters are in the regular habit of praying for each other, as am I. The point is not for us to agree on everything, but to talk through the pain that comes from being on the suffering end of the sex war, to embolden our faith by sharpening our understanding, refining our language, and renewing our minds, and to find encouragement and wisdom. Our strength is in the words of our testimony to admonish and exhort each other.

One unexplored area of the Christian RP is looking into what the Gift of Singleness means. This has apparently changed recently, so I plan to examine this in a theme later this year.

But for now, I'll continue on to the next problem with the current iteration of The Red Pill 2.0 — The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss.

This has been the longest theme ever on Σ Frame, but we're nearing the end, I think.

Related

- Σ Frame: Exposing the Truth to Others (2018/1/1)
- Σ Frame: Why Do Men Need Visions and Dreams? (2018/5/15)
- Blair Naso: Eucatastrophe (2019/3/5)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Constructing a Framework of Options (2021/3/15)
- Σ Frame (Jack): More on the Framework of Options (2021/3/22)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Ethical Issues Surrounding the Christian Conundrum (2021/4/5)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Cross of Our Age (2021/5/3)
- Σ Frame (Deti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The Young Man's Problem (2022/2/4)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual/Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Analysis Paralysis is the Gateway to the Abyss (2022/9/19)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/30)
- Σ Frame: The Quiet Desperation of the Autopilot (2022/10/1)
- Σ Frame: The Path to Contentment (2023/1/18)
- Σ Frame: Lust (2023/2/10)

The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss

Jack · 5 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A different view of a big old problem.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

> My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children.
>
> *Hosea 4:6 (KJV)

* Knowledge includes both practical knowledge and spiritual discernment, as well as "the knowledge of God".

Why so much Nihilism?

As Art Chad mentioned, it has been recognized that The Red Pill unleashes the inner psychopath.

What's up with that?

Let's go back to what Rollo Tomassi wrote more than 12 years ago.

> "I began this blog with the intent of studying the reasons why intergender social and psychological dynamics evolve, what functions they serve, and develop contingencies or actionable methods of bettering one's life using this information — really this is the core of Game. The problem inherent in this, and really unplugging in general, is that it often comes with a healthy dose of disillusionment. Once you strip away the heady fantasies of soul-mates and expectations of 'happily ever afters', and replace it with a more practical understanding based on reasonably reliable, empirical explanations, what you're left with looks a lot like nihilism. Even for the most staunch realists among the 'community' there's still a desire to want to apply, however slightly, some kind of mysticism to the process of connecting with another human being. With other Men it may be some esoteric desire to cast their association in terms of honor, integrity or respect — with women it comes as idealization or predestination."
>
> The Rational Male: Dispelling the Magic (2011/11/1)

As explained in Sit and Spin on the Carousel (2024/5/24), Rollo Tomassi has omitted three key considerations from his calculations in order to form his inductive models.

1. Dehumanizing attraction and the SMP
2. Excluding metaphysics
3. Adopting a short-term orientation / outlook

We see these omissions being tacitly admitted in the quote above (in boldface) where he expresses incredulity that men are attempting to add in what he left out.*

Well, we are now seeing what happens when we leave stuff out.

Exhibit A:

Of course, it is good and necessary that Rollo has tossed out many of the old lies that have infested Western culture for decades, such as altruism, Chivalry, idealism, the Soul Mate fantasy, and the false expectations surrounding love and marriage, among many others. But in doing so, he has tossed the Toad out with the swamp water, so to speak.

His new models have replaced these lies with empiricism, evo psyche determinism, nihilism, and positivism, which is certainly easier for the mind to process and digest, as it is more logical, practical, and, to an extent, useful (at least for some men). But he has failed to replace these lies and half-lies with the fundamental truths that these lies have displaced. IOW, he has uncovered the facts, but he has not led us to the truth.

These omissions are EXACTLY why The Red Pill has encouraged and empowered many HSM Ch@d types to regretlessly and relentlessly pursue a livid life of s1utmaking, sin, and shame.

These omissions are EXACTLY why The Red Pill has unshackled all social restraints on open female hypergamy which has since reached unprecedented levels, thereby permitting women to aggressively pursue their carnal desires, and even to believe this to be good and righteous, as seen in the above video.

These omissions are EXACTLY why The Red Pill has evolved into The Black Pill / MGTOW / Nihilism.

These omissions are EXACTLY why The Red Pill has led so many men down the path of bitterness, despair, and hopelessness into the Abyss.

These omissions are EXACTLY why The Red Pill unleashes the inner psychopath.

You see, when the metaphysical and longitudinal considerations are omitted, things such as commitment, honor, hope, love, meaning, purpose, respect, and value, the bare bone facts are crushing to the psyche and soul, leading to mass defilement in some, and despondency in others.

This turning is not by chance or fate, nor is it the end of the story. It is but a messy revisionary stage of development in the history of The Red Pill.

 This is not intended to pick on Rollo. We do appreciate his contributions. The godfather is just one of the major voices in the sphere that may be used to represent a large swath of Red Pill knowledge.*

Something is Missing!

As stated before, The Red Pill is a peek into the abyss of the carnal human nature.

There have been many attempts to discredit The Red Pill, primarily due to the adverse consequences it has shed on society and the SMP, and also the simple fact that the truth is ugly, and pretty lies must be destroyed to make room for ugly truths. Therefore, The Red Pill has been dismissed as corrosive, a form of domestic tərr0r!sm, a lie, a pseudo-science, and m!s0gyn!st!c, but yet, none of these assessments get at the main crux of the true problem with The Red Pill.

The problem is that, as vast and voluminous as The Red Pill lore is, it is still incomplete.

Readers are welcome to challenge this conclusion. If you do, first please read to the end of this post and also what I've written about The Absence of Actionable Knowledge and A Failure of Imagination in the links below, which have already covered a lot of the bases.

- Σ Frame: The Absence of Actionable Knowledge — Part 1 (2024/5/13)

- Σ Frame: The Absence of Actionable Knowledge — Part 2 (2024/5/15)
- Σ Frame: The Absence of Actionable Knowledge is a Goad to Faith (2024/5/17)
- Σ Frame: A Failure of Imagination (2024/5/20)
- Σ Frame: Sit and Spin on the Carousel (2024/5/24)
- Σ Frame: Philosophical Dualism (2024/5/27)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Truth is Not a Lifestyle to be Emulated (2024/5/29)

We haven't got the formula quite right. The Red Pill recipe is still missing something… But what?

What is Missing?

What are the truths that the Red Pill lore has largely omitted that men need to be learning?

- Building a domain / legacy.
- Establishing and maintaining Boundaries.
- The value and purpose of Christian community.
- The dignity and power of Honor and Respect, especially among men.
- Developing character / identity / masculinity and realizing potential.
- That sex is (or should be) holy and is a large determining factor of sanctity.
- Glorifying God, e.g. through dominion, Flow, Headship, mastery, obedience, purpose, one's sphere of influence, work, etc.
- That marriage, family, and children are a blessing, a divine gift, and a responsibility (as opposed to a goal or a mission in life, or a liability or a risk).
- A recognition of metaphysics as being central to human interaction and cultural flourishing (e.g. agency, faith, hope, humility, inner peace, inspiration, introspection, joy, love, loyalty, meditation, spiritual maturity, thankfulness, vision, etc.).

I believe that if the above are added to a man's Red Pill self-assessment and these are duly considered, then men will not necessarily be faced only with the interminable and intolerable options that they now have.

Reassessing The Abyss

With these things in mind, I'd like to revisit the challenge of transcending the abyss that Rollo has written about.

Back in September of 2022, I wrote about Red Pill Redemption in which The Black Pill and the challenge of transcending the abyss appeared conspicuously. A short list of relevant posts are appended for the reader's easy reference.

- Σ Frame: The Ever Looming Black Pill (2022/9/12)
- Σ Frame: What is the Black Pill? (2022/9/13)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill is the Natural Outcome of the Secular Mating Paradigm (2022/9/14)
- Adam Piggott: The Two Obstacles to Redemption (2022/9/14)
- Okrahead: In a Hopeless World… Be the Hope (2022/9/14)
- Σ Frame: Black Pill Competition (2022/9/15)
- Okrahead: On Faith (2022/9/16)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill as a Socio-Sexual Phenomenon (2022/9/17)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/30)

In the pilot post, Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/5), I listed four steps to redemption. These steps are…

1. Understanding and accepting one's self.
2. Rectifying who one is with who one is in Christ (i.e. confession, repentance).
3. Learning to trust God with the self (e.g. desire, ego, libido, personality) and what they have been given (e.g. intelligence level, placement in the SMV hierarchy, stewardship of resources, etc.).
4. Finding and following one's God given purpose in life.

I also showed how Rollo's Six Stages of Unplugging lined up with Step 1 and maybe some of Step 2.

1. Denial — Still Plugged-In
2. Anger — Post-Red Pill
3. Bargaining — Unplugged
4. Depression — The Bitter Taste of the Red Pill
5. Acceptance — Game Awareness / Self-Awareness
6. Jaded — Checking out, Despondency, Hopelessness, etc.

Also, Adam Piggott identified Two Obstacles to Redemption (2022/9/14).

1. The curse of the desire for instant gratification.
2. Trying to do things without God.

I concluded,

> "Men realize that they've built their whole self-image in accordance with the worldly paradigms, and when these paradigms are stripped away through a Red Pill realization, they find they have no self-image at all, resulting in an existential crisis. Past generations of men often came to this realization after reaching their peak, usually around the age of 40, and this was called a "mid-life crisis". But today's generation of men have a choice of continuing in denial, or else taking the Red Pill and subsequently facing this identity crisis."

What we are missing is a solid Biblical / Red Pill body of knowledge that can form a road map for Men's journey through the 3rd and 4th steps of redemption.

Related

- Σ Frame: Analysis Paralysis is the Gateway to the Abyss (2022/9/19)
- Σ Frame: A Failure of Knowledge Transference in Practical Applications (2024/5/8)

- Σ Frame: The Red Pill is a Dead End for Bachelors (2024/6/3)

Sectarianism

Jack · 8 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The whetstone is a rock of offense.

Readership: Men
Theme: Problems with the Red Pill / Infighting
Author's Note: Inspired by a discussion of this topic under a previous post.
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

> "Do not think that I have come to bring peace to the earth. I have not come to bring peace, but a sword."
>
> Jesus in Matthew 10:34 (ESV)

Intro

Via the internet, the Manosphere has enabled men from all walks of life to share their experiences, opinions, viewpoints, and words of encouragement. A multitude of perspectives allows a philosophical mosh pit of men to compare notes on how they have tried certain things, some failing some working.

However, this panoply of personalities and purposes leads to wildly variant sectarianism — one of the main downsides of the Manosphere. It is this sectarianism that has made the Manosphere Enemy Numero Uno of the Gubmint and showciety, and it is also this sectarianism that has splintered the Manosphere into many branches and remnants.

In the interest of brevity, this essay is not intended to offer an exhaustive coverage of all the conflict that has surrounded The Red Pill, but only to introduce the topic of Infighting and to provide enough of a snapshot to obtain some takeaways which I'll go over in future posts.

Sectarianism in Society

The epic rise of The Red Pill ca. 2008 introduced a huge socio-ideological schism that upended Western society and the SMP. Ego investments in Blue Pill social conditioning, the overweening pressure to be Politically Correct, and various moral and religious convictions made Red Pill truths difficult to accept or even consider.

This schism could be summarized as an ontological question of whether the Red Pill is an Ideology or a Praxeology (or Heuristic)? And believe it or not, this debate continues to be ongoing, largely fueled by the objections of churchians, civilizationists, moralizers, and religiosas, as well as the condemnation of feminists, the government, and society at large. These groups insist that The Red Pill is a m!s0gyn!stic p@tr!@rch@l ideology while Red Pill adherents plainly state that it is simply an observation of the truths about human nature.

Not long ago, Rollo wrote an excellent breakdown of this societal schism. So I'll refer the reader to The Godfather for the details on this topic.

- The Rational Male: Blue Pill Believers, Red Pill Empiricists (2024/2/11)
- Principia Scientific (Rollo Tomassi): Blue Pill Or Red Pill? (2024/2/14)

Sectarianism in the Secular Manosphere

Back in 2013, before the rise of MGTOW, fellow blogger Jim argued that there was no schism in the Manosphere.

> "It is not schism, it is disagreement in the search for truth.
>
> If you worry about schism, you are trying to build consensus. Consensus is the opposite of truth, it is the madness of crowds. Consensus is truth by agreement. The Dark Enlightenment truth by reality."
>
> Jim's Blog: The total absence of a manosphere schism (2013/8/20)

Good point. Consensus, especially a forced or orchestrated consensus, may indeed pose a roadblock to one's personal discovery of the truth. However, the lack of consensus invariably leads to schism, by definition. Apparently, Jim could not have foreseen the schisms that were to come. Since then, there has been The Great Persecution of 2014 which gave birth to MGTOW, The Great Persecution of 2018 which nearly wiped out the Secular Manosphere, and The Great Schism of 2020, in which the Christian Manosphere seceded from what was left of the Secular Manosphere. And the persecutions, schisms, and sectarianism continue on today.

I've written about schisms and sectarianism in the Manosphere many times before, so here I'll refer the reader to this list of posts.

- Σ Frame: The Evolution of the Red Pill (2018/12/31)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – A Crack in the Red Pill (2019/5/13)
- Σ Frame: Small Schisms and Large Schisms (2020/6/5)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – The Manosphere Reshuffles its Deck (2020/9/2)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Rollover (2022/6/17)
- Σ Frame: Pandora's Pendulum (2022/7/8)
- Σ Frame: 5 Years with Σ Frame (2022/9/27)
- Σ Frame: Signs of Demise? (2024/1/3)
- Σ Frame: The Vacancy of Authority (2024/3/4)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Restructure (2024/3/15)

What is different in this photograph, compared to the photo of the 21 Convention above?

Sectarianism in the Christian Manosphere

The Christian Manosphere is rife with sectarianism on steroids. When you have a group of people from different faith traditions trying to cross the ecumenical divide to solve a problem in the gender spar, this inevitably leads to all kinds of differing opinions about hot-button issues both in the church and between denominations, such as…

- Is Game Christian?
- Is The Red Pill Biblical?
- What is the definition of 'marriage'?
- Complementarianism vs. Patriarchy?

- Is polygyny Biblical / Christian / licit / permissible?
- What is the ethical / moral context for sexual intercourse?
- What does 'submission' mean and what does it look like in practice?
- What is the Biblical / practical / proper extent of ecclesiastical authority?
- Should cohabitation, common law marriage, concubinage, or prostitution be permitted?
- Which sins are admissible / forgivable / tolerable and which ones are not (1 John 5:16-17)?
- Where is the balance between Sola Ecclesia and Sola Scriptura, either as an Apostolic authority, or in the practical applications thereof in the life of a believer?

Many of these debates hinge on…

- Deciding which sect or set of Christian sub-beliefs has threaded the needle of biblical interpretation exactly right.
- Whether the proponents can unravel doctrinal presuppositions without fraying the ends of the threads in the process — something akin to "straining out a gnat" (Matthew 23:24).

Amid all these contentions, eventually someone will ask, "Who are the 'real' Christians?" Then comes the accusation, "You are not a real Christian." Then everything grinds to a halt and nothing is accomplished.

"For I lacketh the character necessary to tolerate any contention; therefore, to protect mine ego, it is imperative that thou shalt fully agree with MY interpretations of scripture, lest I be forced to summarily dismiss thine argument by declaring thee to be a damned heretic! Further, thou must agree with me that this is the most loving and proper thing to do."

The problem here is that the Christian Manosphere needs a shameless Devil's advocate (e.g. Roissy, Rollo, et al.) to keep the convo rolling, but these voices are quickly dismissed — for being a Devil's advocate. It is ironic and self-defeating that in an age when bad boys are celebrated, no Christian man wants to play the part of a bad boy.

News Flash: Being a Christian is rebellion against the World. Being a moral chap is for the benefit of family, friends, and one's self (where applicable).

Schisms and sectarianism in the Christian Manosphere have been covered before, so here I'll leave a list of posts.*

- Σ Frame: Building Fellowship – The Problem of Disliking Each Other (2010/7/11)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Unity (2014/4/19)
- Σ Frame: A Brother Is Borne Out Of Adversity (2018/6/10)
- Σ Frame: Avoiding the Broken Window Effect (2021/7/21)
- Radix Fidem: Stop the Brother against Brother Stuff (2021/7/22)
- Σ Frame: Divided We Fall (2023/6/6)
- Radix Fidem: Evangelistic Arrogance (2023/6/7)
- Σ Frame: Ecumenical Translations (2023/6/18)

 Frame Adjust: These posts are about the nature and the occurrence of schisms, NOT about the hot-button issues that instigated the schisms.*

Image Source: Right Response Ministries (Pastor Joel Webbon): Biblical Patriarchy: How Complementarianism Falls Short Of Scripture (2021/12/15)

Fin

We are wont to believe that anyone who is not for us is against us, but Jesus assumed His dominion in saying…

> [40] For the one who is not against us is for us.
>
> Jesus in Mark 9:40 (NASB)

Also Leviticus 19:15; Deuteronomy 1:17; 1 Corinthians 1:10-17; 1 Corinthians 3; James 2:1-13.

Here, readers are invited to speculate about the major takeaways before I address them in future posts. If there are specific conflicts that readers believe may be pivotal, please write a detailed eulogy below.

Related

- Σ Frame: Forming the Vision of Achieving a Goal (2022/4/6)
- Compelling Truth: How is Jesus a rock of offense (Romans 9:33; 1 Peter 2:8)? (2022/8/18)

- Σ Frame: Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/5)
- The Guardian: Losing their religion: why US churches are on the decline (2023/1/22)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions (2024/1/23)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Setting Boundaries Increases Openness (2024/1/28)
- Sun of the Sun: The Sectarian Divide (2024/6/1)

The Tale of Huck and Bucky

Jack · 10 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Low SMV men hate high SMV men, and high SMV men are clueless.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Infighting
Author's Note: Inspired by a comment from LastMod and a private message from Ed Hurst.
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Studs and Duds

Huck was always bigger, stronger, taller, and more handsome than Bucky. Huck always had more opportunities with chicks and jobs and social events than Bucky.

In the 8th grade, girls started grabbing Huck's firm butt in the crowded hallway in between classes. By the 10th grade, he learned that if he caught who did it, he could 'coerce' her to suck him off in the parking lot after school by saying that he "wouldn't tell on" her. The girls never disagreed or reported it or even resisted this proposition. In fact, they secretly enjoyed playing this little game.

These same girls were kicking Bucky's @ss since the 4th grade, and if he noticed who did it, they'd taunt him as a creep and a loser.

In high school, Huck joined the football team and was made captain the following year. Bucky tried out for the softball team, but didn't make the cut because he was blowing his nose instead of catching flies.

Once, Huck brought a knife to school to show his friends. When Huck pulled it out to show his buddies, Bucky saw it and turned white. Huck saw Bucky's reaction and taunted him by saying he was going to stick him if he told anyone. Everyone thought it was a joke and laughed. Bucky was fazed and frightened, so he started carrying a blade too. Somebody saw it and turned him in. He was suspended for two weeks and had to do 50 hours of community service. Everyone thought that was a joke too.

Huck stole a pack of smokes from his old man and lit one up in the men's room during lunch. His friends thought it was cool and covered for him. Bucky saw the boys guarding the restroom and smelled the tobacco smoke, so he told a teacher about it. In retaliation, Huck and his pals jumped Bucky in the parking lot after school. A group of girls saw them and came on to Huck and two of his buddies, asking if they were hurt. They ignored Bucky as he wiped the blood off his face and crept away. The girls paired off with the guys they liked most and went off together. Later that same night, Huck loaded Tonya's yearning mouth and one of his cohorts got laid for the third time that week.

Moreover, Huck and his gang were rewarded for all their arrogance, bullying, and rebellion. Bucky was ostracized, punished, and shamed for trying to do the right thing. This didn't just happen one morning. All this social feedback was being dumped upon these young men from a young age, be it at home or school, or later, at their workplace. These effects cumulated throughout their adolescence and set a trajectory for their lives.

To this day, Bucky hates Huck with a bitter vengeance. Huck has completely forgotten about Bucky.

Winners and Losers

There are winners and losers in this world, especially when it comes to dating and mating today.

The times have changed. The gap has widened 50 fold… no… 1,000 fold since the 1970's when the Hucks and Buckys of middle America were passing through.

The Hucks and Buckys of yesteryear are now Boomers planning their retirements. Today we have Bad@ss Ch@ds and Iggy !ncels.

Now, Strong Independent Wimmin™ are much more open and specific about what they want, and no Games are necessary. They'll get straight down to busyness when they're alone with Brad, Ch@d, Thad, and his dad, and they'll treat Iggys the same way Huck used to treat Bucky.

The majority of men are hardly able and much less willing to indulge women's solipsistic, sky-high expectations. In fact, most men have given up on women entirely.

Chivalry? That's some Boomerish Blue Pill crap. And maawidge? Heh.

But some things never change.

Limited Social Mobility

Most !ncels are a far cry from the stereotypical pizza-faced mouth breathers with a nasally voice, bad haircuts, thick glasses, and chronic rhinorrhea. Nevertheless, they have been deemed losers in the sociosexual market for their ENTIRE LIVES.

Some !ncels might make an attempt to imitate uncle Huck, but to no avail. Uncle Huck, and classmate Ch@d will egg him on to his own eventual rendezvous with HR / MəT00, saying, "Buck up!", "Don't be a simp!", "You should have done X, Y, Z…", "You need to keep trying", "Try harder!", "Don't give up!"

And when ineffective or unactionable advice comes from Hucks and Ch@ds — men who have and can do — the advice is actually worse. Hucks and Ch@ds have no idea what it's like to be a Bucky or an Iggy. They've spent their entire lives avoiding and belittling and mocking such men.

When a man is cornered and all he hears is, "You're nuthin!", "You're a Beta.", "Loser!", "You must LIKE being this way.", "Soyboy", and the slew of other insults….. He'll come back and tell you "he's everything" and then he'll try to prove it.

And proving it turns ugly.

One day, the bleach blonde bubble butt at the office gets ticked off by Iggy !ncel's petulance. She arrogantly tells Iggy, "Go back to your 'PlayStation', and do your JOB, LOSER!" Iggy !ncel cracks and inflicts the ultimate insult he can think of at the moment. With her pumpkin spice yogurt running down her cheeks and dripping into her open cleavage, she dials HR and gives Iggy his just desserts.

"Yeah… well you can take this job and shove it up your STD chasm, cause I'd rather have more time at home to spend on PlayStation, P0rnHub, and YouTube."

Frustrated, Iggy starts looking online for any advice and encouragement he can find. He finds some Black Pill videos on the internet but this only makes him lose all remaining hope. The only advice from Ted is about how much more of a loser he is……

Then… Aha! For $299.95 (almost a week's pay), he can buy a series of scripted videos depicting a Ch@d gaming a St@cy. But he can see the same stuff on P0rnHub for free and jump straight to the F_cking part if he needs to cool off. So what's the use of trying?

Some things never change.

Tradcucks and Libtards

It's the same in class politics. Just like Bucky despised and feared Huck, low SEC / low quality people hate high SEC / high quality people, and the higher they are, the more cluelessly self-absorbed they are.

Meanwhile, economic mobility is stumped by student debt. Karens and single moms are favored for promotions. So much for The American Dream™.

America has been wrestling with a single dark entity having two faces — represented by Trump and Biden — the stereotypical Boomer icons of Huck and Bucky.

Trump, TradCons, and the GOP are the ultimate flawed abusive Alpha — basking in the limelight, tight-fisted, demanding excellence while sitting on their duffs, always promising but never delivering; getting regular hand ~~jobs~~ outs from industry, military, and Wall Street.

Biden and the liberal / progressive clowns are the social / economic / political Iggys — delusionally misguided, hiding scandals and shenanigans, pathetic, projecting, self-righteous, virtue signaling, all bark and no bite; looking the other way while evil has its day in the sun.

Just like Huck bullied Bucky, Huckster Trump instigated some drastic changes and upheavals that made Buck-O-Biden's crew pig biting mad.

And just like Huck was with Tonya, all he really wants is the mass fandom of the crowds, not their actual welfare, and to "Grab 'em by the p_ssy". Just like the Bad@ss Ch@d that he is.

But unlike Bucky, Biden Corp. has no interest in doing the right thing.

The Denver Post: "I was shocked": Nevada Democrat accuses Joe Biden of touching, kissing her without consent (2019/3/30)

Bend Over!

Yes, high-status people today aren't entirely like the Ch@ds and Hucks of the world, not anymore anyway. Nor are the social demagogues exactly like the Buckys. In a bizarro twist of bait, the Buckys have usurped power by swearing allegiance to their Shem@le masters.

Meanwhile, more and more of the Hucks have slurped the Cool Whip of being ashamed of their 'privilege', and have turned tail during tempting times.

Ever since Trump failed to cross the Rub!c0n, Biden and Son have hit back at PseudoConCorp with a vitriolic vengeance and have made Murica 100 x worse. Just like The Male Feminist and Simp that they are, respectively.

Earlier this year, Bucky Biden's acolytes literally called HR on Alpha Trump with the hush money trial — this in hypocritical spite of Biden being a shameless groper and smoocher himself, and in full view of the public eye.

Come November, MidTradCons will call HR on Bucky Biden, and then he'll take a walloping in the ~~parking lot~~ polls.

While the agenda Trump proclaimed would have been much better for America than what his opposition planned, he never delivered what the people had hoped to attain through him. What little he accomplished didn't last beyond his presidency. Instead, just like Huck did with Tonya, Trump Skull Shucked the American people, dragging us around by our trust in his MAGA vision, and demanding loyalty.

Trump's not done, not yet, but it will never get any better for the Real Americans than what it was while he was in office. There aren't enough spades in North America to splay a full house, nor to shovel all the sh!t on both sides of the gasoline alley.

Some things never change.

Related

- Alpha Game: The socio-sexual hierarchy (2011/3/5)
- Dalrock: Don't blame Heartiste for the equation of Alpha with virtue. (2015/6/13)
- Chateau Heartiste: The Assumed Alpha (2017/5/18)
- Chateau Heartiste: Power, Approach, And Inhibition: A Study Of Alpha Males And Beta Males (2018/5/18)
- Σ Frame: A Summary of Faux-Masculine Archetypes (2022/5/30)
- Σ Frame: Bad@ss Ch@d (2022/8/3)
- Σ Frame: Comparing Carnal Ch@ds and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: No, godliness is still not attractive (2023/4/21)
- Σ Frame: Men's Altruistic Idealism in an Age of Apostasy (2023/7/28)
- Σ Frame: Biblical Masculinity vs Worldly Masculinity (2024/4/10)

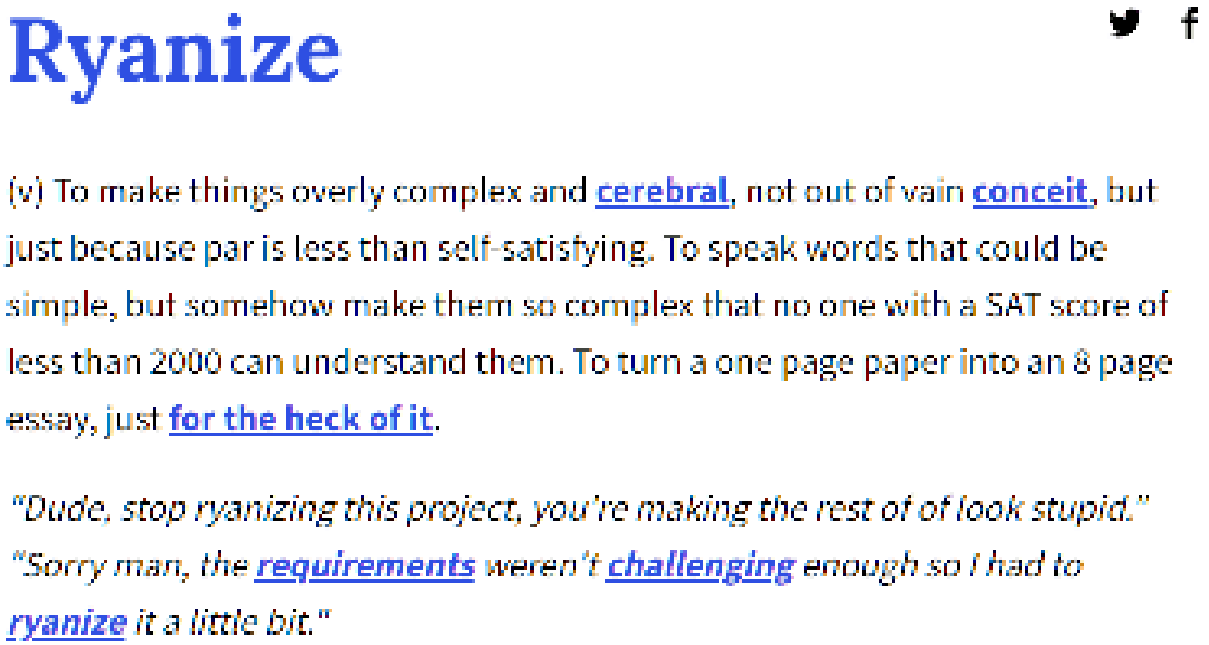
Ryanizing

Jack · 12 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Breaking the Fifth Wall to Mediate Freedom of Expression.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Infighting
Author's Note: Images and section headers added. Minor editing for readability. Links added for the reader's ease of reference.
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

A reader writes in to report how he has applied Ryanizing to the technique of Breaking the Fifth Wall as a tool for mediating social intercourse with his liberal coworkers. By coincidence, his name happens to be Ryan.



The Problem: When Political Correctness is Used to Castigate Non-Conforming Speech

He writes,

> "27 male here.
>
> […]
>
> "Where is the balance between freedom of expression and PC acceptability???
>
> […]
>
> "I work with a lot of liberals, and it's a daily drag to slog through all the superficial expectations for me to parrot their liberal platitudes. It's like I have to watch everything that comes out of my mouth or else they'll turn savage over some made-up grievance they'll call an 'offense'.
>
> They've thrown shade by calling me "socially ret@rded", meaning that I can't understand their W0ke jargon and fake ways of relating to each other. Actually, I get it, I just won't play their game.

> According to them, saying anyone is “ret@rded” is considered offensive. But that doesn’t apply to them, I guess. The blatant hypocrisy ticks me off, but if I tried to point out their hypocrisy, then I would be playing their own game — a pharisaical w!tch-hunt to condemn everyone who says “ret@rded” and “g@y” in a colloquial way — something I won’t do.
>
> It’s made me question the reason I am actually part of this group in the first place.”

The Experimental Method: Ryanizing + Breaking the Fifth Wall

> “After reading your take on Jordan Peterson’s method of Breaking the Fifth Wall, I thought it over and came up with some finesse Frame to use on my coworkers.
>
> Whenever they confront me about a word or idea I’ve used that they think is offensive, I’ll strike a pose of humility and act like it’s being offered as constructive criticism. This deflects the clapback of the perceived ‘offense’. But I won’t stop there. In a mockingly obsequious spirit of “learning more”, I’ll inquire about the nature of why it is offensive or inappropriate, proceed to break it down into what causes the offense, and for purely heuristic reasons, argue about the validity of its offensiveness. IOW, I’ll turn it into a philosophical joke. The joke is that whenever we start to dig into why something is offensive, it always confuses them and makes them look like a tool.
>
> It gets even funnier when they agree with the wig snatch and then walk away wondering about it, or when bystanders catch the dig and start snorting, but I have to be careful to hold a poker face and not cross the line of reasonability. Otherwise, they get shook.
>
> To them, it’s a way for me to show ‘humility’ for my ‘mistake’ without looking like a tool. At first, I thought this way too and was hesitant to go this route, but I decided to run with it and see what would happen. But after discovering that their arguments can’t hold water when you pick them apart, I started to see how this would play out. The best part is that throughout all this talk, I’m amusing myself by ridiculing them in the privacy of my mind without them even knowing. ROFL!”

> "After I got better at this, then a couple of them who are more aware said that I was trying to rouse a debate and questioned my motives for doing so. I just told them that it's necessary for "us" to establish trust (something else I picked up from your blog), it's important for us to talk about whatever is bothering "us", and that good communication will improve our work culture. I thought they would call me out for trolling (because that's how I feel — ridiculously disingenuous), but they generally agreed to this."

Results

> "Overall, the reaction from my coworkers has been mixed, but more tolerable for me than before. Some of them are avoiding me unless work demands, but I'm not missing any love. They'll think twice about calling me out or arguing with me over semantics, and when they do, it's done with more decency and respect than before.
>
> The downside, if I can call it that, is that I've developed a reputation for being [incorrigible]. So much so that they started using a portmanteau of my name to refer to my Frame. Now I am accused of "Ryanizing", meaning to take a narrative argument and dismantle it in the spirit of understanding it. Whenever they can't come up with a good response, I'm met with, "You're Ryanizing again!" "Don't Ryanize me!" Seems like they're not capable of generating independent thoughts.
>
> "Ryanize" lit a running joke in the workplace that has been popping ever since, and they've started using my name in other ways too. Now, "Ryanize" means to question specifics until it becomes completely exhausted, boorish, and mundane. IOW, I'm breaking their spell and finding my place."

> "The other day, we ran out of coffee and someone watered down the brew so there would be enough to go around. Then people were saying the coffee was "Ryanized". LOL! So now if someone says something is "Ryanized", I guess they mean that the quality has been greatly reduced in order to achieve objectives. Kind of like a hack job, I guess, except no ratchet. Honestly, based on my past academic performance, that wouldn't be far from the truth."

Conclusions

> "Having my name bandied around was superbarrassing at first, but since it's brought me so much notoriety, I've come to own it. I expect to improve this Frame until I can develop a "voice of authority" in this way.
>
> BTW, there's another guy I work with who has the same name as me. He's so fazed out that he's ghosted us. The others always have to apologize to him for using our name, or else he'll turn salty. LMAO!"

This is master class Frame and epic hilarious, so I had to share it.

I'll admit, I had to look up some of his jargon before I fully understood what he was saying. So I must be somewhat of a "social ret@rd" myself (due to the apparent 'generational gap').

I'm impressed that he was able to transform the difficult socio-ideological conflicts with his coworkers into a contextual frame of interaction in which he could showcase his charisma and intelligence, enhance his sphere of influence, and squeeze some respect out of them in the process — all without getting canned.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Objectivity of Offense Constitutes Respect (2018/5/6)
- Σ Frame: How to Dismantle the Idol of Fandom: Breaking the Fifth Wall (2018/5/26)
- Σ Frame: Breaking the Fifth Wall – A New Protocol for Post-Truth Debate (2018/6/13)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Red Pill Awareness (2021/7/23)

- Σ Frame: The Armchair Philosopher (2022/5/13)
- Σ Frame: Normative Red Pill (2023/1/7)
- Σ Frame: Esoteric Masculinity (2024/4/8)

The Logic of WGTOW

Jack · 14 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Women Going Their Own Way.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Infighting
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes + one 34 minute video

Intro

In general, The Red Pill and its many variant offshoots, such as MGTOW, are utterly repulsive to women, and for a multitude of reasons which fall into one or more of the following categories.

- Men getting more of something and/or Women getting less of it (e.g. goods and services, a favorable market position, moral superiority, power, influence, status, etc.)
- It violates their ego / false self-image / Feeelz / pride / solipsism.
- An aversion to accountability, agency, responsibility, etc.
- An allergic reaction to truth, beauty, and goodness.
- The very idea of any of the above.

With the partial exception of the first, women cannot use any of these reasons to justify rejecting the fundamental truths of The Red Pill, because doing so does not strengthen their position. Even the first sounds whiny.

Women's most effective argument to date, as we will see below, is that the truths of The Red Pill, and Men in general, are an inconvenience and/or a hindrance to their own aspirations (e.g. averting their Existential Fear, control / social dominance, hypergamy, garnering resources, 'independence', etc.), which are deemed superior to all others. The first point above is coopted to explain the various inconveniences.

The WGTOW Argument

Info shared the following video, saying,

> "Now I have a video like this one shown to me via Algorithm* and the connection to the rise of the 4B movement. This is happening in parallel to the rise of the Manosphere. It's their own version of the MGTOW movement."

 This YouTube account was just opened on 2024/3/14. On 2024/6/10, she had 1,250 subscribers, but her channel had only been viewed 987 times. (See adjacent image.) How the həll did that happen? By 2024/6/14, just 4 days later, the numbers were 2,270 and 18,382, respectively. It's obviously being promoted by The Algorithm™.*

 For those interested, here's an article about the 4B Movement in South Korea. (Sorry for the liberal slant therein. To my knowledge, this topic has not yet been covered in depth by the Manosphere.)*

The Cut: A World Without Men — The women of South Korea's 4B movement aren't fighting the patriarchy — they're leaving it behind entirely. (2023/3/8)

Here's the video Info shared.

yv_edit: The Pillars of Patriarchy: Women's Invisible Labor (2024/6/7) Length: 34 minutes

Some of her talk seems to directly respond to (or mimic) my post, Revising Our Concepts of SMV and MMV (2024/4/26), only from the female perspective. For instance, she talks about the exchange of "goods and services" in the form of men doing housework and maintaining the relationship. (I've never heard of anyone else breaking down SMV/MMV in terms of "an exchange of goods and services". I picked up that terminology from studying supply and demand.)

Here, Lisa argues that…

1. Marriage requires more cost, investment, risk, and time from women than staying single or having children outside marriage.
2. Women invest more in communication, being dependable, and working out problems than men do.
3. Men focus on competition, hierarchy, and status which are unproductive.
4. Marriage is more stressful on women than men because their efforts are 'unreciprocated'. News Flash: Men can't read minds and they don't care about the same things women do.
5. Men will step out and/or replace a woman like she's a burned-out light bulb. Obviously, she's referring to a subset of HSMs.
6. Men are inherently selfish because they're always 'rewarded' for it. Women are psychologically rewarded (1) when they are generous and (2) when men are selfish. Sounds like the science of 'Ch@dology'.

7. Men are more likely to self-destruct than women. Men are twice as likely to be alcoholics, 3x more likely to be drug addicts, 3x more likely to be incarcerated, and 2-3x more willing to gamble. We already know these statistics, but her conclusion from this is that men are irresponsible layabouts who cannot be depended upon and who contribute the majority of relationship stress. Again, Ch@dology, and the good men are invisible.
8. Abusers are more likely to be domestic partners / spouses. Thus, it is safer for women NOT to get into relationships with men. No mention of the gender ratio of abuse. If all is told, it would be safer for men NOT to get into relationships with women too.
9. Men benefit more from marriage than women do. (This is not true when women opt for a No-Fault divorce.)
10. Marriage makes men more productive and higher earners. The opposite is true for women. (Oh no!)
11. Marriage and having children detract from a woman's career and independence. (Oh no!)
12. Married women carry most of the mental load of maintaining the home. Men remain ignorant of this or take it for granted.
13. Women do all the work and men do not help with housework and raising children. As if that were his sole purpose in life.
14. Men can always postpone or reschedule their duties, but women cannot.
15. Married women get stuck with all the repetitive, time-sucking, urgent drudgeries of daily life and this interrupts their routine. (Oh no!)
16. Even when women out earn their husbands, they still do more domestic work than men.
17. Even men who actively strive to be equal, egalitarian partners do less domestic work than their wives do. Men only outperform women in home repair and yardwork, but this can be outsourced. News Flash: So can housekeeping.
18. Men become lazy and parasitic in marriage.
19. On average, married men are healthier, more active, more fit, and live 7 years longer than unmarried men. (Oh no!)
20. The family tends to follow the man's decisions and not necessarily the wife's. (Oh no!)

From her perspective, the value of a man is based on how much convenience he brings into a woman's life. If he does not actively add to her convenience then he is absolutely worthless. Or if he poses any INconvenience, God forbid, then he is a parasitical dead weight who's holding her back in life.

This is the essence of gynocentrism.

Summary

All in all, her conclusions are…

1. Marriage helps men and hurts women.
2. Marriage is a lose-lose arrangement for women.
3. All of marriage life is skewed and lopsided in favor of men. (Oh no!)
4. Women are the heroes and pillars of society, and men are irresponsible, selfish, unreliable, etc. Everything is men's fault (as usual).
5. Women have no choice but to see and admit that relationships with men are detrimental to them in nearly every way. This is why women 'glow up' after a break up / divorce.

The strengths of her argument are…

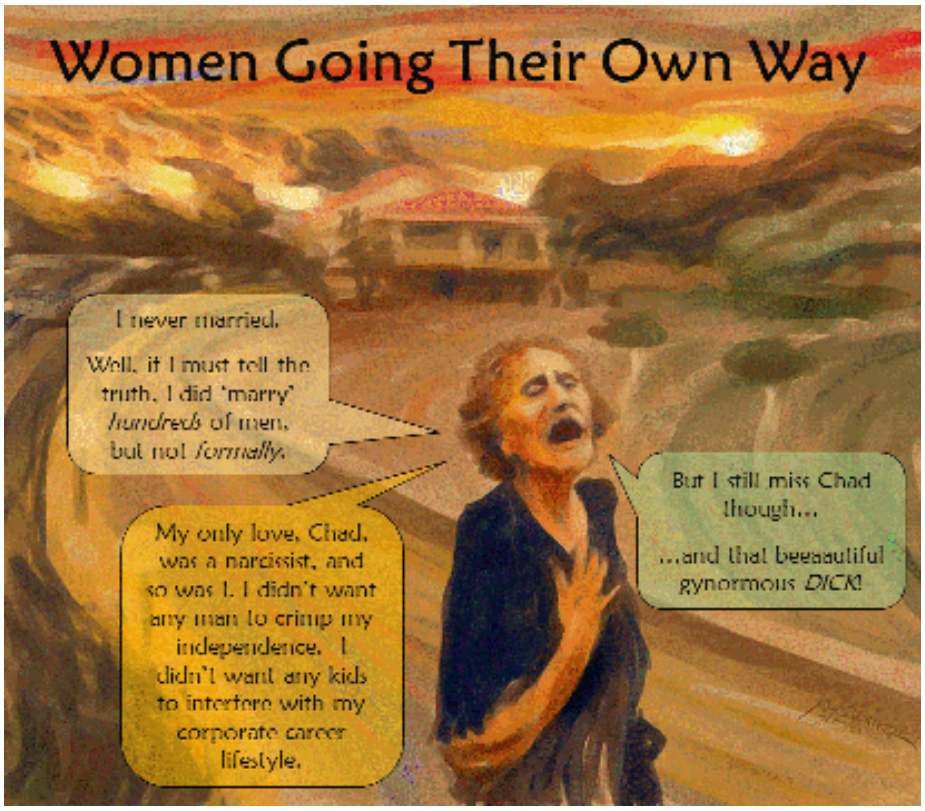
- From what I can tell, she has her facts straight.
- All the information she's presented has been around for decades and is well-recognized as being true.
- She politely explains her viewpoint in a reasonable manner without getting worked up.

The weaknesses of her argument are as follows.

- She's not saying anything new or that we haven't heard before.
- It is entirely biased / one-sided, or as we often say, 'gynocentric'.
- She's omitting a lot of facts relevant to the male viewpoint.
- She hasn't addressed any of the grievances brought up by The Manosphere or MGTOW.
- There is no mention of how marriage enhances women's socioeconomic status, because this would undermine her argument.
- She hasn't addressed the effects of marriage or marriage quality on children.
- She hasn't compared the pros and cons of women marrying Men against the pros and cons of women staying single. Hint: Go look up why so many women are rejecting feminism and want to be SAHWs.
- She hasn't compared the pros and cons of women marrying other women either. News Flash: It's much worse.

Conclusions

Overall, this video, and WGTOW in general, is a nicely concocted sales pitch for men to get married and for women NOT to get married. It is also an indirect encouragement for women to continue on with their Feminist rebellion, and by extension, their sexual promiscuities as well (even though they may deny it).



We might view WGTOW as a new development in the gender war. But in fact, nothing will change. Women will go on doing what they've always done since the advent of the Sexual Revolution and Women's Liberation — banging Ch@ds, chasing degrees and careers, hitting the wall, becoming contentious Cat Ladies / Karens, and then being alone for decades…

The only thing that will change is that they won't be settling for the Ernie Engineers and Paul Plumbers of the world just to have one attention sloring day at the altar of a God they never knew. Those men won't get to marry a bicycle, they won't be divorce gr@ped, and they might not have any children that would be taken away from them.

As it has been said before, "The trash takes itself out."

A little less suffering in the world would be warmly welcomed.

Also, those who willingly opt out of the institution of marriage make it easier for those who are serious about it to choose from the remaining options.

So you see, WGTOW might actually be a blessing in disguise.

Nevertheless, WGTOW is one more step down the long descent to the bottom of the Abyss. As time goes on, we'll eventually get to the point where ONLY top SMV individuals who are emotionally and spiritually mature and who explicitly WANT marriage and family are going to marry and have kids.

Update: Verdict

After only 3 days of deliberation in the comboxes, the Σ Jury quickly reached a verdict on the matter: The substance of WGTOW is sorely lacking. WGTOW is merely an imitation of MGTOW. This social poseuring lacks fangs because it is men who are the arbiters of commitment, not women.

Related

- Spawny's Space (Tarnished): How "WGTOWs" are different from MGTOWs (2015/8/18)
- Σ Frame: Sexual Market Value (SMV) vs. Marriage Market Value (MMV) (2017/7/27)
- Σ Frame: Women's choice to be relevant (2020/2/6)
- Σ Frame: Looking at the Essentials (2020/6/12)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Womens' Response to MGTOW (2021/7/19)
- Σ Frame: Women Crave Male Attention (2021/7/26)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Spawny's Space: Dark-Ego-Vehicle (2023/5/26)
- Σ Frame: Are College educated women less likely to divorce? (2023/9/9)
- Σ Frame: Revising Our Concepts of SMV and MMV (2024/4/26)
- Spawny's Space: Deflect: (2024/6/13)
- Cornerstone: WGTOW (2024/6/14)

The Manosphere Blogger's Prayer

Jack · 15 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A person's enemies will be those of his own household.

Readership: Men
Theme: Problems with the Red Pill / Infighting
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

> [34] "Do not think that I have come to bring peace to the earth. I have not come to bring peace, but a sword.
> [35] For I have come to set a man against his father, and a daughter against her mother, and a daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. [36] And a person's enemies will be those of his own household.
>
> Jesus in Matthew 10:34-36 (ESV)

The Manosphere Blogger's Prayer

As I sit down to read and write,
I pray my wife won't start a fight.
I'll wait until she goes to bed.
If her eyes are closed, she won't see Red.

Working late in dim blue light,
Typing hard with all my might.
If I can get the message out,
there'll be more faith, and much less doubt.

My aim in writing is very clear,
the nature of women for men to hear.
To tell the world how women are,
clubbing, swinging, hitting the bar.

Loving Ch@d for just one night,
Cucking husbands left and right,
Aborting babies near and far,
Denying it all… It's just how they are.

Keeping secrets, lying eyes,
The plain poor man they will despise.
But will 'marry' just to give one birth.
Then divorcing him for all he's worth.

If she decides to stick around,
Domestic peace will not be found.
Emotional baggage shall be unfurled.
Blame and insults incessantly hurled.

Pining for Ch@d's aborted spawn,
Marital duties will be withdrawn.
Compared to all lovers of her past,
He's not the first, and not the last.

Get out while you can, my son!

Forsake concupiscent lusts and be done!
Else a higher purpose you'll ne'er perceive.
Escape ye now from The Curse of Eve!

Apropos the message is done,
The battle's lost, but the war is won.
If I can post before she's pissed,
That's one less fight I will have missed.

The Man

Dividing Soul and Spirit

Seriously, when a man takes the Red Pill it often results in the further deterioration of his relationship / marriage, or at least for a time. Because of their inherent desire for control, women like their men to remain clueless — clueless about his own SMV, clueless about what makes women tick, clueless about women's darker fleshly nature, and also clueless about how to attain Headship dominance, unfortunately. A man's Blue Pill naïveties also provide the ammunition for her to disdain him as an 'immature boy'. As long as a man has the wool pulled over his eyes and his mushroom kept in the dark, she can maintain the upper hand in the relationship much more easily.

But when a man swallows The Red Pill, his cluelessness wanes and is inevitably destroyed. She can no longer bulverize, gaslight, manipulate, project, and dump all the blame on the man. No more. Now she must face her own shortcomings, learn to instantiate agency, and grow up.

And some women just can't or won't do this.

We might compare this blowback to the negative aftermath of Thedeti's Strategy, in which a man attempts to achieve Headship by tightening his belt and drawing some long overdue and much needed boundaries. Thedeti's Strategy is offered as an effective method to resolve chronic domestic disputes by tempering a stubborn wife's b!tchy behaviors. But the downside to this approach that is greatly feared and cited as a reason NOT to use this approach is that a shrewish wife may very well respond by stepping out or completely bailing out of the marriage altogether.

I have it on good authority from at least two first-hand sources that the same quandary can also result from simply taking The Red Pill.

Some women just can't or won't tolerate living with a man who can see right through them.

Case Studies

Stories of this phenomenon are all over the internet.

1. r/relationship_advice: Husband [30/m] went "Red Pill". I [27/f] have become bitter and fed up. How to respond? (2015/5/1)
2. Medium: My Ex Took a Red Pill (2018/10/8)
3. Mel Magazine: When YouTube Red-Pills the Love of Your Life (2019)
4. r/AskFeminists: My boyfriend of almost a year turned redpill. (2020/6/23)
5. r/relationship_advice: My boyfriend has fallen down the red pill rabbit hole and I don't know how to leave (2022/8/5)
6. Hyphen: Losing the love of your life to the red pill (2022/11/29)
7. deMilked: 20 Women Got Raw And Honest On How Their Attraction To Men Has Been Affected By "Red Pill Men" (2023/4/1)
8. BuzzFeed: Women Are Sharing How The "Red Pill Movement" Has Affected Their Attraction To Men, And It Actually Perfectly Verbalizes How I've Been Feeling (2023/8/25)
9. Nairaland Forum: Red Pill Ideology Ruined My Relationship With A Nairalander (2024/1/21)

10. r/AskWomenOver30: Has anyone else's partner gone down the Red Pill route? (2024/1/27)

And there's much more of the same stuff on YouTube.

With the exception of #6 (written by a Musl!m) and #9 (Nigerian), every article is written by a controlling or insecure feminist who was in a shaky / tenuous relationship with a previously Blue Pilled man. In every case, you'll find that The Red Pill disturbed an inverted structure of visceral / sexual authority.

Related

- Σ Frame: Do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing. (2020/1/27)
- Σ Frame: Are you a man or a mushroom? (2020/8/17)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Red Pill Awareness (2021/7/23)
- Σ Frame: The Feminine Secret (2021/8/16)
- Σ Frame: Headship Authority Takes Work (2022/8/12)
- Σ Frame: The Battle for Headship begins on the Home Turf (2023/4/7)
- Σ Frame: Esoteric Masculinity (2024/4/8)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): But I'm not like that! (2024/5/3)

20 Ways to Honor Your Father

Jack · 16 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Do you even honor him at all?

Readership: All
Theme: Special Post for Fathers' Day, 2024/6/16 (Sunday).
Author's Note: This essay was written on 2023/6/1. It was intended to be included in the mini-theme of Honoring Fathers at that time (running from 2023/6/26 to 2023/7/10), but was unfortunately lost in cyberspace until it was found on 2023/11/12.
Length: 800 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Introduction

To honor one's father and mother is the fifth of the Ten Commandments in Exodus 20:12 and Deuteronomy 5:16, and it is the first Commandment that appears in Leviticus 19:3. This commandment is reiterated in Ephesians 6:1-4.

To those who follow this commandment, God promises a good, long life.

But how much do we honor our fathers? I mean, really? Do we even know what it means to honor our father?

Given the heavy emphasis on 'Equality', Feminism, Individualism, and "personal liberties" which amount to idolatry and/or self-centeredness, the deemphasis of religion and tradition, and the rejection of male authority, masculinity, and 'Patriarchy', many Westerners have forgotten what it means to honor their father. Instead, one's Father is esteemed as a 'friend' or a preeminent equal at best, or is regarded as a wife-supplicating ninny at worst.

It's past time for us to acquaint ourselves with some long lost habits of Christian morality. So here I've made a list of some very common ways we can honor our fathers.

Check yourself.

1. Address him by a proper title. (c.f. Jesus in Luke 11:2)
2. Stand up and face him when he enters the room (Leviticus 19:32).
3. Give him a warm enthusiastic greeting whenever you see him in person. (Luke 15:20)
4. If you live with him, stop what you're doing and give him a warm greeting when he comes home after finishing his work for the day. (Luke 15:20)
5. If you do not live with him, visit him periodically, or else call him to "check in"; give him a report of your activities and ask him how he's doing (Hebrews 13:17).
6. Inform him immediately of things or events that pertain to his interests. (Genesis 45:9-13)
7. Recognize him as the only man in the world who truly cares for you and has your best interests in mind. Dwell in the mindset that you are blessed to have his trust and his favor.* (Proverbs 1:8-9; Proverbs 17:6) Let this mindset be demonstrated through your interactions with him and others.
8. Acknowledge that he holds a position of authority over your life and that you have responsibilities to him.* (Ephesians 6:1-3; Colossians 3:20)
9. Ask for his advice or input on family matters, complex issues, or technical subjects in which he has expertise. (Proverbs 13:1)
10. Be honest with him. When honesty is embarassing, be humble, modest, and respectful. (Luke 15:20-21)
11. Let him speak freely without interruption or objection. Desist from arguing with him over petty matters. (Proverbs 1:8-9; 6:20-21)
12. Never speak sharply to him. Always talk to him very politely and with a low voice. (1 Timothy 5:1)
13. Learn his ways. Imitate his better qualities.* (John 5:19-20)
14. Have the inner vision to see what he would think or want done in a given situation and carry it out as he would see fit.* (John 5:19-20)
15. Make a diligent effort to conform to his wishes.* (Proverbs 6:20-22; Ephesians 6:1-3; Colossians 3:20) If you cannot, then offer an intelligent apology (not a lame excuse), extend sincere regrets, and acknowledge that you will take responsibility for your decisions.
16. Respond to his requests quickly and with diligence and joyful enthusiasm.* (John 5:19-20)
17. Endure his correction and discipline with diligence and earnestness.* (Hebrews 12:7-9)
18. Make something of yourself and stay out of trouble so that he can be joyful and proud of you and not ashamed. (1 Timothy 5:8; Proverbs 23:24)
19. Extol his name. Speak positively about him to others.* (c.f. Jesus in John 17:6-8,26)
20. Be loyal to him. Defend his reputation.* (c.f. Jesus in John 17:10-14) Be on guard about mentioning or acknowledging his problems and weaknesses to others in casual conversation. Avoid it if at all possible without being dishonest and/or violating trust. Reprimand others who are under his domain of authority who dishonor him, ignore his wishes, or make light of him.

 Even if you happen to have a poor father, if he doesn't care about you, or is irresponsible, etc., you can still maintain these attitudes / habits as an act of obedience to God. By God's grace, your obedience in this could become the vehicle of his redemption.*

Readers are invited to add other ways to honor one's father, or offer stories of how one's father was honored, or give testimonies of how honoring one's father brought blessings to the family.

Related

- Σ Frame: Wayne Grudem's Study of the Greek Word kephalē, "Head" (2023/4/19)
- Σ Frame: Woman, go ask your husband to explain it to you! (2023/4/30)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): Fathers of the Human Planet (2023/6/26)

- Σ Frame: The Archetype of Father as God (2023/6/27)

Vectors of Conflict

Jack · 17 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The whetstone is a stumbling block.

Readership: Men
Theme: Problems with the Red Pill / Infighting
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

> [39] You examine the Scriptures because you think that in them you have eternal life; and it is those very Scriptures that testify about Me; [40] and yet you are unwilling to come to Me so that you may have life.
>
> Jesus in John 5:39-40 (NASB)

In this subtopic of Infighting, we've surveyed a few contexts related to The Red Pill in which conflicts occur.

- Sectarianism within the Manosphere.
- Conflict between high and low SMV men.
- Clashes between peers who are Red Pilled and W0ke.
- Schisms in society resulting from The Red Pill Revolution.
- Tension between couples arising from the husband's Red Pill awareness.

Shirley, there are many others, but due to our time constraints, I won't attempt cover every kind of conflict that exists. I hope I've covered it well enough for us to see how things go down. In this post, I'll summarize the takeaways and tie this back into the main theme, Problems with The Red Pill.

Criticism has Replaced Critical Thinking

In the early days of the Manosphere, men shared their honest thoughts and unfiltered life experiences. The sky was the limit for ideas and nothing was set in stone. But as time went by, Red Pill lore gathered and gelled into highly revered literature. Red Pill acolytes became considerably less generous, less ribald, more rigorous, and more serious. Men became less interested in hearing about other men's ideas and more interested in policing the purity of opinions.

Criticism has appeared, not as a method of refining ideas and sharpening the wits, but as a tool of denigration and ostracization.

In the Secular Manosphere, criticism is directed towards other men, often crossing the line into deception and fraud, and for no better reason than AMOGing, or grift, or schadenfreude.

In the Christian Manosphere, criticism appears in the form of men lambasting other men for deviating from their own interpretations of scripture or faith traditions, even going so far as to slander other men as heretics, liars, unbelievers, etc.

It has even occurred right here on Σ Frame.

On 2024/4/8, one long-time VIP commenter (Red Pill Boomer) wrote to me privately to say,

> "It did seem the comments made by the readers became more dogmatic as time went by. Not a huge criticism, but it seemed to me there was less sharing of RP views and more "This is the way it is because I say so!" types of comments from readers. For me, it led to, "Why bother posting?" when the commentary became less, "That's an interesting point of view you have there, here's how I see it"; and more along the lines of "You're wrong!!! This is how it is because I say so!", I began to lose interest, not in the blog itself, still quality posts by you, but in the commenting itself."

A Failure of Self-Awareness / Personal Understanding

Because meaning, metaphysics, and morality are often avoided / excluded / omitted from Red Pill discussions for the sake of being objective and practical, men are prone to read their own personal interpretations into the matters being discussed — without stating exactly what those presumptions are, and often without even realizing it.

Interpreting, transferring, and applying these topics to a personal level may often result in false or unrealistic expectations, despair, hopelessness, and resignation. OTOH, NOT doing so may also carry adverse consequences of the armchair philosopher / ivory tower / navel gazing variety, followed by a rude wake up later on down the road of life.

In this, we tend to assign personal meaning to the perceived implications of specific sociosexual models and then absorb this into our sense of identity, which may or may not be appropriate.

One good example of this phenomenon that pertains to Vox's Sociosexual Hierarchy model is how Gammas often self-identify as Sigmas. This self-deception is so prevalent and so annoying that Vox's Sigma Game blog has focused on this topic more than any other. Thus, Sigma Game could be summarized as a blog that teaches men how to identify and ostracize Gammas / 'Secret Kings', among other things.

This failure of self-awareness also rears its head whenever authors / commenters make vague statements that could be interpreted in many different ways and insufficient context is given to frame the readers' focus.

For example, when it is said that something 'works' without explicitly defining what is meant by that, every man will read his own interpretation into the meaning. For instance, Rollo defines what 'works' in relation to "men's reproductive problem", which is essentially a euphemism for "how to get laid" and leaves this to the individual man to decide if he is talking about living a PUA lifestyle or hard, lifelong Christian monogamy with a wife who makes his bedroom into either a nightly individual pr0n movie, or a private stage show of utter humiliation, shame, and frustration, or anything in between.

In summary, when any discussion of models or theories is transformed into a perceived salvo resulting in emotionally charged ordeals of establishing or defending one's personal (or projected) identity. The problem that arises from all this is that the discussion is transformed from being an introspective discovery / exploration of the truth into a defensive volley of self-conscious aggrandizement.

The Missing Meaning

Based on what has been written in a few past posts, I feel that Rollo* and his acolytes in The Red Pill community miss their detractor's arguments of why things like meaning, metaphysics, and morals cannot be neglected. One of the reasons why this point is not convincingly addressed is largely because the moralizers are rather pharisaical and cannot offer a good argument as to the value thereof without leaning heavily on 'rulz' that were made in a bygone age. Apparently, neither of these groups understands the reasons why 'rulz' are necessary, nor why the 'rulz' worked back then, but not now. Furthermore, Red Pill detractors are wishing so hard to preserve the appearance of civility and to protect female fleshly prerogatives (two things which are fundamentally opposed, BTW) that they are blind to the reality on the ground and are therefore rejecting the basic truths about human nature that Rollo and The Red Pill have brought under a speculum.

Perhaps what is worse is that BOTH the protagonists and the antagonists of The Red Pill don't seem to recognize that BOTH (1) the carnal / sexual aspects of attraction and mating, AND (2) the more abstract aspects of the human sociosexual experience, such as boundaries, faith, honor, humility, identity, longitudinal purpose, love, reputation, self-control, virtue, etc. must be considered if the truths of The Red Pill are to bring any lasting / eternal / redemptive / sanctifying value relevant to an individual man's life.

Worse, without these transcendent aspects, the hard cold truths of The Red Pill only delivers a knock-out double-punch of bitterness and nihilism. This alone is something many men will fight to avoid, even if it leads to denying certain truths.

In fact (and this is one of the main takeaways from this post), the attachment of metaphysical values, meaning, significance, etc., and how these interpretations determine the practical application of The Red Pill is THE source of ALL the schisms and sectarianism in both society and in the Manosphere. It simply cannot be avoided.

Punting Meaning

As stated in the previous section, the 4 M's of Meaning, Morality, Metaphysics, and Mysticism must be assigned at some point. As much as Rollo* insists on washing his hands of the 4 M's and such, all he's done is pass that necessary task of interpretation on to others. IOW, Rollo* has punted the ball of leadership to the common man.

In one respect, this is probably good and right. In the absence of a central leadership, each man is compelled to wear the mantle of Red Pill leadership within his own sphere of influence.

The problem with this approach of kicking the morality can of worms further down the road is that members of his audience, especially most younger men, may be incapable of picking up the slack. They may not have enough self-awareness / maturity to sift through his talk, slice the meat off the bones, and determine the proper takeaways relative to one's self. Therefore, the knowledge therein will be Misappropriated, Misinterpreted, Misunderstood, and/or Misapplied.

A Conspicuous Absence of Masculine Leadership

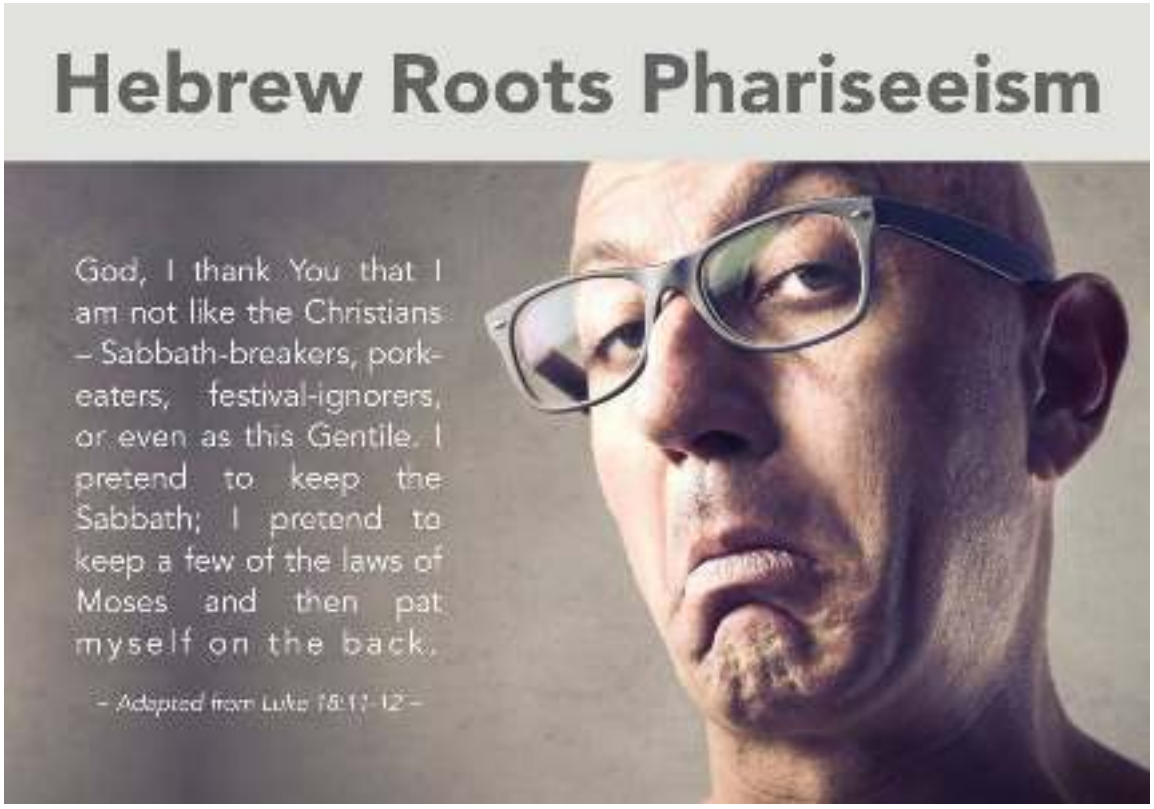
Upon reading to this point, readers may have already come to the same conclusion that I have — that there is an absence of leadership.

Fathers, pastors, and elders should be taking up this mantle of leadership, but many are Blue Pilled, lacking genuine authority, and/or are not up to par. Thus, intermediaries like Dr. Jordan Peterson for example are the next best approximation of a leader after Red Pill Pundits. Dr. Jordan Peterson makes an effort to fill in the profuse vacuum of identity by charging men to attach meaning, purpose, value, and such to various things. This is precisely the reason why he has attracted a cult following.

If any readers believe they have it within themselves to be a leader of men, there's no better and no easier time to do it than now. Get cracking!

Concerning the disagreements in the Christian sphere, we already have an outline of meaning, purpose, value, etc. given to us by God. But for some reason, we get frantic about the details and miss the forest for all the trees. IMHO, everyone would do well to remember that each man is accountable to God, regardless of his church affiliation and doctrinal beliefs, and that church traditions and scriptural interpretations can be a hindrance and a stumbling block as much as they are a help. (See Mark 7:1-23 and John 5:39-40 respectively.) IOW, pay attention to your own purpose and lay off the finicky phariseeism. Let your words be helpful for the edification of other Christian Men (Ephesians 4:29).

Remember who your Leader is. We must all agree on Christ.



Conclusions

Perhaps it is snarky enough to say that everyone is a little in the right, and a little in the wrong. This is nothing new. Concerning infighting, perhaps the best we can do is to consider all the viewpoints thoroughly and with prayer, place ourselves in the other's shoes, and apply a ~~little~~ lot more discernment and wisdom. For this we must pray.

While all the infighting, schisms, and sectarianism are indeed problematic and troublesome, at the same time, we can be thankful that we have the freedom to discuss such things and the liberty to draw our own conclusions and make our own decisions, even when none of the choices are good. There may come a day, maybe soon, when we shall not have such freedoms and liberties any longer. Let us be thankful for the Manosphere and The Red Pill as a vector of truth, and let us pray that the infighting may continue, but with more introspection and greater wisdom — such that the stumbling stone may be transformed into a whetstone — and bear much fruit for the glory of God.

 This is not intended to pick on Rollo. We do appreciate his contributions. The godfather is just one of the major voices in the sphere that personifies the Manosphere and The Red Pill.*

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): Unconditional Atonement, Limited Election (2019/10/18)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): What is the Authority of the Bible, and why is this Important? (2020/11/12)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Juxtaposing the Temporal and the Eternal (2021/4/26)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Noetic Nose Knows (2021/9/6)
- Compelling Truth: How is Jesus a rock of offense (Romans 9:33; 1 Peter 2:8)? (2022/8/18)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/5)
- Matthew E. Cochran: Moral Wisdom vs Adding to God's Law (2023/6/5)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: Pressing Boundaries to form Trust in Social Interactions (2024/1/23)

- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Setting Boundaries Increases Openness (2024/1/28)

Red Pill Rehab

Jack · 19 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Is The Red Pill a medicine or a poison?

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss
Reader's Note: This post is related to a subtopic covered earlier in this series.
Length: 1,900 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes + one 10 minute video

The Red Pill Promulgates Avoidant Attachment Behaviors

To briefly review Attachment Styles, healthy relationships are characterized by a Secure Attachment Style. Unhealthy relationships are characterized by three main types of dysfunctional Attachment Styles (Anxious, Avoidant, and Disorganized / Fearful, collectively called Insecure Attachment Styles). Insecure Attachments are characterized by difficulties in cultivating and maintaining trust and a lack of a secure base. Read more.

The following video captures a noteworthy conversation about Attachment Styles between Adam Lane Smith and Connor Beaton, the host of Man Talks.

Man Talks: 3 Hacks To REWIRE Your Attachment Style (2024/2/12) Length: 10:17

From 7:38 to 10:10, Adam Lane Smith says [edited for clarity and concision],

> "As far as falling apart, the sad, sad terrible truth that I have seen, that I hate, is that a lot of Anxiously Attached men tend to connect with the opposite [type of woman (i.e. Avoidant or Disorganized Attachment)]. They tend to connect with Avoidantly Attached women or women with personality disorders, or they just fall apart in relationships, even with nice women. They ruin [these relationships] because they won't open up about their needs and then they feel like a victim. Then they go online, and they type in "bad woman hurt me". Right? Or they ask, you know, "What does it mean when a woman is manipulative?" "What does it mean when a woman is unkind to you?" "Why are women so mean?" And the only thing they're really going to find online is fairly radicalized Red Pill circles of formerly anxiously attached men who have never met a securely attached woman, it seems. It appears that they were primarily hurt by women with personality disorders, and now they have codified "how to act around women with personality disorders" into "how to treat all women forever", because [they falsely presume that] all women on earth have Borderline Personality Disorder. All women are waiting to shank you with a knife and laugh at you. All women will cheat on you if you have the slightest emotion. All women are just waiting to trade up at a moment's notice, and they have no loyalty or kindness whatsoever. All women are sociopaths. That is the sad version of how men get out of an Anxious Attachment — they become Avoidantly Attached.
>
> Most gurus in the Red Pill circles teach men how to switch to Avoidant Behaviors, how to use Avoidant Behaviors [… and] to then prey upon Anxiously Attached women who are insecure, hurt, and afraid, to pit them against each other, and then emotionally coerce them into all kinds of sexual shenanigans. It just turns these men into people they don't want to be, which is why they're [only] in it for a couple of years, and yeah, they usually have more sex, but then they start to really be disgusted by themselves and very unhappy because all they're doing is going through one relationship after another and that's not what they want either. So then they start looking for another answer.
>
> So guys out there, if you're Anxiously Attached, becoming [Avoidantly Attached] is not the answer. Becoming afraid of women is not the answer. Fear is not the answer. Manipulation is not the answer. The same thing goes for the women out there. If you've been hurt by an Avoidant man becoming manipulative and hurtful > yourself is not the answer. Do not be afraid. What you're looking for is to be Securely Attached."

I believe Smith's basic message is true, that a disproportionate number of men in the Red Pill community have Attachment Issues. I also agree that many Red Pill communities teach and train men to develop Avoidant Attachment behaviors. But I disagree with Smith's frame. The problem is that he's basically saying, in so many words, that The Red Pill Community is a sycophant of the Anxiously Attached, and that it is enabling, encouraging, and teaching men to destroy themselves and their relationships more efficiently.

I have a different opinion. If the context is well noted and a wider frame is adopted, then readers may have a better appreciation of what is happening to men who take The Red Pill.

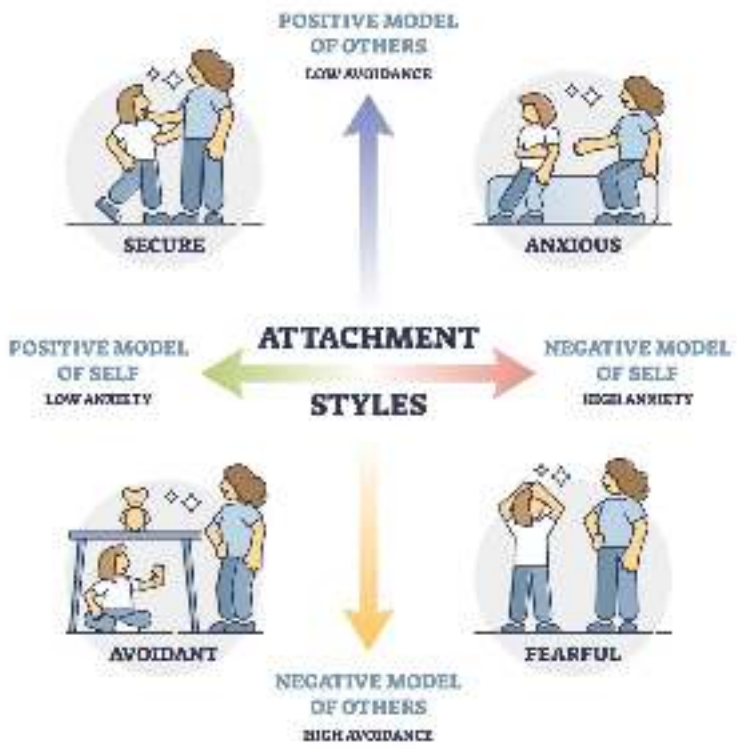
In the remainder of this essay, I'll fill in the blanks.

Why do Many Red Pilled Men have Attachment Issues?

I believe the reason why many men of our modern era are Anxiously Attached is because they didn't receive the unconditional love that they needed from their mothers during their formative years. Instead, their feminist mothers set a debased example of parental marriage, thereby excluding them from the knowledge of God. Their mothers didn't respect their fathers, they divorced their fathers, and perhaps did even worse things. As a result, these missing pieces and 'Mommy Issues' have sublimated into Attachment Disorders. This has long-term adverse consequences to the psyche and soul that may require an entire lifetime to recuperate from, if at all.

The sad irony is that many men are not aware that they are Anxiously Attached, and this kind of self-knowledge is challenging to apprehend.

Smith's most important contribution to the sphere is raising awareness about this phenomenon. But his approach is a little off-kilter because he's putting pressure on the wrong vain.



Red Pill Rehabilitation

The Red Pill gives men the knowledge, the tools, and the kick in the pants they need to jerk them out of autopilot mode and set them on a trajectory towards redemption.

Taking the Red Pill is how many men escape the birdcage, but learning to fly is another matter.

The inconvenient reality is that most men do not have the wherewithal nor the incentive to stop being Anxiously Attached until their compass is reoriented by experiencing the worst in an Insecurely Attached relationship with a woman. This is exactly why I said Identifying Attachment Style is the New Game (2023/10/12). But many men never get to the place of realizing this about themselves because they don't even have the opportunity to have a relationship with any woman. And for those few guys who do, then their experiences with women eventually bring them around to the Red Pill — IF they're lucky.

Sure, guys like Adam Lane Smith can tell men, "Don't be Anxiously or Avoidantly Attached. Instead, you must be Securely Attached." That's right, but it fails as good advice. That's like telling men, "Don't be poor. Don't live off of welfare. Instead, you must be an independently wealthy business owner." Those who understand the gravity of the situation and know what would be required to make that transition will chuckle at the naïveté behind the blithe crassitude. There's a vast chasm between knowing the way and traveling it, actually lacing up your boots, and slogging through the sludge of self-awareness. It would be a mockery to tell these men, "Playing in the dirt will do nothing to establish your business", even though it may be true.

It would be nice if men could heed Smith's message, skip the Insecure Attachment stuff, and go directly to zen. But there's clinical work to be done in binding up the brokenhearted (Psalm 147:3) and getting them to trust and walk in faith.

Going through a phase of Avoidant Attachment may very well be the halfway house for them to become Securely Attached. I wrote about this process of transformation in The Red Pill and Blue Pill as Paradigms of Sanctification and Defilement (2020/11/15). Moreover, working through these issues, as messy and reactionary as it may seem, is part and parcel of Transcending the Abyss.

Boundaries

I have to add a ditty about some things we learned in our study of Boundaries, because 3 Laws of Human Nature are directly related to Red Pill Rehabilitation.

1. The Law of Sowing and Reaping — Actions have consequences (but they are not always clear and immediate). Failure to recognize this results in confusion.

6. The Law of Evaluation — Suffering is a part of life. What feels good in the moment is often harmful, and that which is painful in the experience may actually help us in the long run. Therefore, it is important to assess which type of suffering we are embracing, and come to terms with its value and purpose.

7. The Law of Proactivity — Get control of your life, or else your life will control you. Master your sin, or else your sin will master you.

In assessing the meaning and value of taking The Red Pill and the apparent effects it may have, it helps to evaluate the actions and consequences, the cause and effect, and how men are empowered, whether it be for better or for worse.

Remember the anecdote about a boy who said he 'enjoyed' eating the candy that made his teeth rot, and he was 'hurt' by the dentist who repaired his teeth? In the case of Red Pill Rehab, men are 'hurt' by parental divorce, feminist indoctrination, and the comfy trappings of a gynocentric culture, and they are 'enjoying' breaking free from that, often going to shameful excesses in their bittersweet joy of liberation.

As bad as some men's behaviors might be, it would be wrong to think of The Red Pill as the primary cause of the messiness rather than recognizing it to be a shocking reveal of a long-festering pestilence. It would be wrong to see The Red Pill as the primary source of bad behaviors rather than recognizing it as a medicinal agent for rectifying damages already done. It would be wrong to put the finger on men's sins rather than on what they need for healing and redemption. This Hypocrisy was the sin of the Pharisees who demanded a 'clean' presentation and therefore would not allow the puss to drain and the sh!t to be wiped out of men's lives (Matthew 23:13-15,23-28).

Conclusions

Smith's assessment contains some inherent criticism that characterizes The Red Pill culture as a petri dish instead of a penisillin culture. But upon further examination, Smith's take is not so much a criticism of the Red Pill as it is against those men who are sick and tired of Feminitis, Gynorrhea, Hyperagentrophy, and Oneitis, and must therefore be admitted to the Manosphere Central Hospital and take the Red Pill medicine.

Truly, there are many diseased characters in the Red Pill community hospital, and this essay is not to excuse or justify their bad behaviors in any way. But it is not The Red Pill that caused them to become this way. The majority of Red Pillers probably would've never discovered The Red Pill had they not been burned alive by a vindictive woman. Taking The Red Pill is/was a medicinal and transitional stepping stone that led them out of a dysfunctional state of being. This is the reason why most men are only into The Red Pill for a few years and then grow out of it. Once they're healed, they are discharged or released from the Red Pill hospital, and then they go on to do other, hopefully greater things in life.

The Red Pill does cater to men's interests and indulges their desires much more than what would be considered normal and healthy — for a healthy individual. But in fact, much of this sycophantic pandering is fitting and somewhat necessary to establish trust, get them rejuvenated with the truths of masculinity, and get them back on their feet and running.

We don't demand the same physical performance from guys in an orthopedic rehab as we do from men who are able-bodied and fit. Likewise, it is unreasonable to expect or demand moral or spiritual excellence from men recovering from the Blues.

Related

- Σ Frame: God's Silence During Suffering (2009/12/14)
- Hungry Generation: The Forceful Advance of the Kingdom (2020/11/25)
- Σ Frame: Taking Headship by Force (2021/5/26)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Red Pill Awareness (2021/7/23)
- Σ Frame: Attachment Style and Game (2023/10/13)
- Σ Frame: Hypocrisy in the Manosphere (2024/5/31)

Is Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy Bad for The Manosphere?

Jack · 21 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Do factions and schisms represent a necessary boundary or a destructive division?

Readership: Men
Theme: Problems with the Red Pill / Infighting
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Intro

Overall, Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (SSH) is an insightful model, even inspiring, but it breaks down when applied to reality. However, his recent work at Sigma Game is slowly unboxing some real applications.

Determined Omega said,

> "…it is unclear why [Vox Day's] perspective on the SSH is bad for The Red Pill or for Σ Frame specifically."

I didn't say it was 'bad'. The name of this blog is taken from the SSH! But the SSH does have some problems that are not being addressed. Lexet and I reported these problems in Revisiting Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (2024/4/5). One of those problems is the inherent hypocrisy. Another one is that it caters to a femcentric evaluation of men. A third is that it is often used to shame men rather than to edify them. There are others. Click on the link for more.

IMO, if Beale were entirely forthright, he would have written some comments or posts that addressed some of these issues that were brought up. Maybe he did many years ago that I am not aware of. But to my knowledge, he has completely ignored it. I guess it is because the SSH is mythical, or 'fractal' as he describes it, and there is not much to be said about it outside of that elliptical paradigm.

Sectarianism on Socio-Sexual Steroids

Determined Omega said,

> "it should be noted that Vox does not really attack the Christian Red Pill community…"

Not as a community, but he has targeted individual Christian Men who aren't in the Traditionalist / 'Civilizationist' bandcamp.

Determined Omega alluded to this schism in writing,

> "Vox does not have a lower or mid status perspective. When you read Sigma Game, you are reading about the Vox perspective. The old Alpha Game blog was more for all stripes of men. It is simply a basic mismatch in audience expectations. You want the high status, sexually succesful perspective? You read SG."

Yes. Vox's philosophical views concern one's outlook on life, largely centered around SMV and socioeconomic status. This is both a blessing and a curse, depending on where one happens to fall in Vox's SSH and in the socioeconomic strata of society.

Vox espouses marriage, family formation, and glorified traditionalism, specifically the Upper-Middle-Class / Upper Class variety, but the changing times have made this life path unavailable to an increasing number of men.

Determined Omega wrote,

> "Moreover, there is a strong cult of personality around VD, with many commenters acting as enforcers against women and GAMMAS…"

Exactly!

Vox has created a divide along SMV and socioeconomic lines. Only handsome, winsome, high class men can be admitted to his club. All others are shamed out the door.

This schism keeps coming up again and again in the Christian Manosphere. We've covered this before.

- Σ Frame: The Status Signaling Narrative (2022/3/21)
- Σ Frame: What Ted got right (2022/4/4)
- Σ Frame: "Saving the seeds of civilization while the fire rushes over the forest." (2022/4/27)

Moreover, Vox's UC perspective is good for inspiring and motivating those men who have the gifts and means to marry and continue preserving what's left of society, but it's not so good for the rest of the men.

Is this division necessary? Or is Vox just feeding his ego off of the drama?

I like what Info wrote.

> "In the Christian Kingdom, it shouldn't be undesirable to be lower rank. For the Higher rank needs the lower rank. And there is only so much social status to go around.
>
> Not everyone is an eye or a hand or even a little toe (1 Corinthians 12). But God made us complementary. For everyone needs the other. Thereby promoting unity in the Body by said interdependency in addition to the Holy Spirit. If everyone has every gift they can each more easily become atomized and break communion.
>
> Let not the Lord despise the humble peasant or infantry that fulfills his purpose. Let not the infantry despise the Commander for not being constantly in the thick of the fighting. For both Big Picture Vision and Strategy and on the ground conflict is required."

Another tell is that Vox will not interact with men in the larger Christian Manosphere who are outside his sphere of influence. There's no dialogue between him and the larger Christian Manosphere, only within his own 'sect'. I've tried to contact him a couple times, but nothing became of it. The only reply he ever gave me was simply, "I've got no time for that." True leaders make time for their flock.

In case readers are wondering, I'm not writing from a low SEC, low SMV perspective. I've done just as well as other men in life, and better than most with women. There's no lack of respect either. I recognize Vox as a modern day prophet and I agree with Vox that civilizationism is the way to go, but good luck getting the majority of men on board with that. Marriage and family and living the dream is not a real solution for most men these days. We're all sorry about that, except Vox.

Revisiting Hypocrisy in the Manosphere

Determined Omega wrote,

> "What I am really interested in is these accusations of hypocrisy."
>
> "If you could explain what you mean by hypocrisy, I would appreciate it."

Not long ago, I wrote a post about Hypocrisy in the Manosphere (2024/5/31). To summarize, there are several different dynamics that are loosely labeled 'hypocrisy'.

- Fraud or deceptive grifting.

- Guys who present a false image.
- Guys who don't follow their own advice.
- Guys telling other men, "Do as I say, not as I do."
- A negative assessment of "Fake it till you make it."
- Guys who are chastizing others for things they themselves do.
- Teaching something in which one is lacking authentic authority.

It was concluded that there are basically three forms or types of hypocrisy.

1. The Dictionary Definition of Hypocrisy: A pretense of having a virtuous character, moral or religious beliefs or principles, etc., that one does not really possess.
2. The Worldly Concept of Hypocrisy: One's actions, beliefs, and words are starkly incongruent.
3. The Spiritual Concept of Hypocrisy: Magnifying and scrutinizing the shortcomings and sins of others while downplaying, justifying, or minimizing one's own shortcomings and sins (usually arising from a refusal to be humble and forgiving).

As Christians, we are most concerned with the last one, because this works against the knowledge of Christ.

Case Study — Theodore Beale

Over the years, Beale has committed a few of the above dynamics that are colloquially labeled 'hypocrisy', including…

- A lack of transparency.
- He has pedestalized his wife.
- Lying about personal matters.
- He has made money off of male thirst.
- He participated in what appeared to be a G@y Pride event. (See image below.) [Edit: It was a fundraiser, not a G@y Pride event. For more details, see discussion starting here.]
- Magnifying and scrutinizing the shortcomings and sins of certain men (usually labeled 'Gammas') while downplaying, excusing, hiding, justifying, or minimizing other men's and/or his own shortcomings and sins.

[Edit: Commenter Notelrac has rebutted these points in a comment below.]

The thing is, honest Christian Manospherians are hesitant to throw stones because…

- It's just wrong.
- It's unChristian.
- We want him to succeed.
- We don't want to dox him.
- We'd rather not dig up old dirt.
- We don't want to be disrespectful.
- We wish to avoid creating useless rifts / schisms.
- Everybody has slipped up in some way or another.

I would never write the things in this post about Beale, for the above reasons, except Determined Omega specifically asked.

Conclusions

I agree with Vox's views (for the most part), I just don't like how he's implementing them.

It is pretty clear that Vox Day has formed a cult of personality that emphasizes 'saving civilization' and which appeals to High SMV men in the UMC/UC strata — men who don't really need much help or encouragement.

The value of Vox's perspective is that it inspires men's hopes for good things — how things are supposed to be.

The problem with this is that Vox is selling a dream that most men won't be able to achieve. (I hope I'm wrong about that.)

It's good for men to have visions and dreams, but it's also important that those dreams don't end up breaking one's hopes. Hope can be a dangerous thing, so it needs to be handled with care.

Another, more important question is whether Vox Day might be making it more difficult for Men to grow in faith and the knowledge of God. In other words, is Vox et al. conducive, incisive, or divisive?

Or maybe all three?

What fruit is he bearing?

BTW, Determined Omega has a SubStack that readers may want to check out.

Related

- Σ Frame: Current Trends in Prophecy (2020/3/13)
- Σ Frame: The Battle of the Prophets (2020/3/27)
- Σ Frame: What is the Christian Red Pill? (2020/11/27)
- Σ Frame: Avoiding the Broken Window Effect (2021/7/21)
- Σ Frame: Church shouldn't be an Elite Social Club for the Married (2023/6/2)
- Σ Frame: Divided We Fall (2023/6/6)

- Σ Frame: Ecumenical Translations (2023/6/18)
- Francis Berger: Of What Use is the Sociosexual Hierarchy if Society and Men Are Net-Evil? (2024/4/21)

Defining the Christian Red Pill

Jack · 24 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A review of what makes the Christian Red Pill unique from its secular counterpart.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with the Red Pill / Socio-Political Appropriation
Length: 750 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Intro

> "Some time back there was an article or comment from Rollo where he predicted that some Christian would try to sanitize and package Red Pill theory for the average Christian. Looks like he was right."
>
> A comment from 7187 under Dalrock's post, Loud and proud complementarians: No more taboos. (2018/12/22) [Archive]

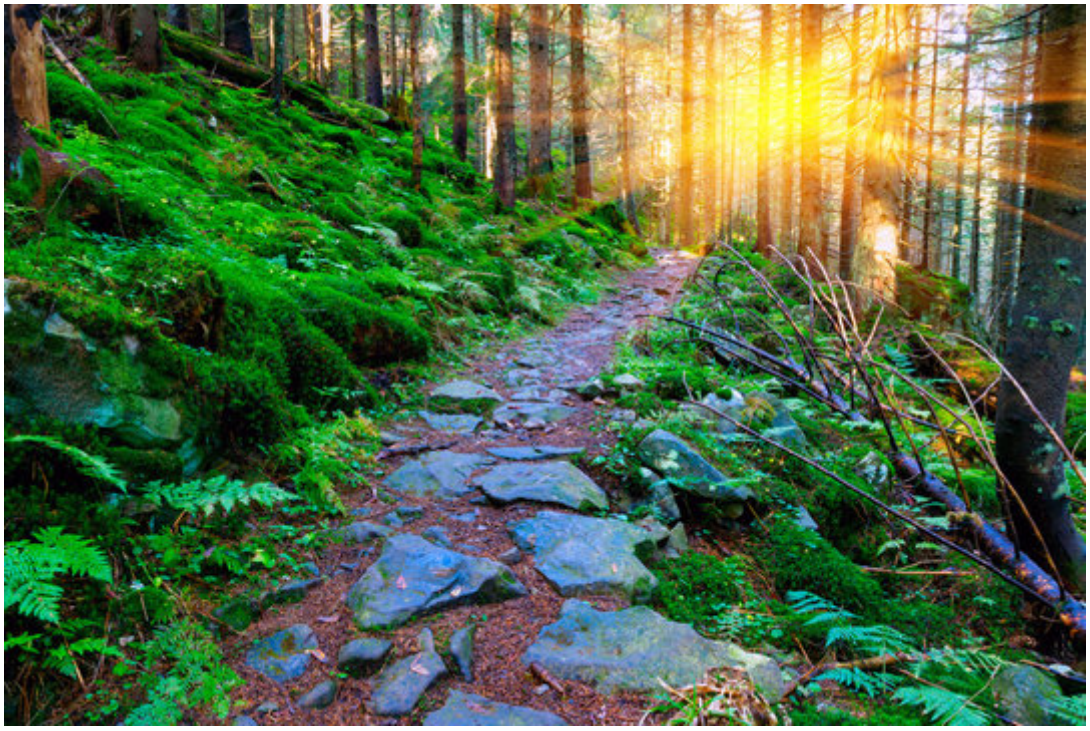
I haven't been able to find the statement from Rollo that 7187 was referring to. But anyway, Rollo's prediction has come true in the form of the Christian Red Pill.



Slow Progress

The Christian Manosphere / Red Pill has existed since 2012 or so, but it became a unique entity when it seceded from the secular Manosphere / Red Pill in late 2019-2020. At that time, I wrote,

> "In many of my past posts, I (as well as Deep Strength) have alluded to these differences between the secular Red Pill, and the Christianized Red Pill, but I haven't analyzed the differences point by point as well as Biblical Gender Roles has in his series.
>
> The separation and distinction of the Christian Covenant structure from the Red Pill praxeology is an important and pivotal development. The Red Pill is largely an amoral description of human psychology and > behavior, whereas the Christian Covenant recognizes human psychology and behavior, but adds to this awareness an aspiration to a God-ordained ideal.

>
> I propose that the Christian exegesis of Red Pill precepts should be called something else, just to be more specific and to avoid confusion in future discussions."
>
> Σ Frame: Small Schisms and Large Schisms (2020/6/5)

Four years have passed since then, and the Christian Manosphere has continued to roll back the frontiers of Christian Masculinity. Although we've made progress in many areas, we've yet to pioneer a new order that befits The Divine Order.

An Indistinct Identity

In earlier posts, I proposed that the Christian exegesis of Red Pill precepts should have a unique name, just to be more specific and to avoid any confusion with the secular approach in future discussions. Since then, the terms 'Christian Manosphere' and 'Christian Red Pill' have become the prevalent monikers for this body of men and knowledge, respectively. 'Christ Pill' and 'White Pill' have also been used much less extensively.

However, as described in Biblical Masculinity vs Worldly Masculinity (2024/4/10), there remains a lot of confusion surrounding the differences between Biblical Masculinity and Worldly Masculinity. Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks (2023/4/21) took a closer look at these differences. (These posts contained a bit of satire, intended to invoke critical thought in the reader.)

Conclusions

The question remains, how is the Christian Red Pill uniquely different from the Secular Red Pill, especially in how it pertains to dating, mating, marriage, and more?

This question remains because the Red Pill is still equated to the likes of Andrew T@te, while some presumably well-meaning Christians are still refusing to recognize the timeless truths uncovered by The Red Pill, and apparently, there are still a few who haven't even heard about the Christian Red Pill. See the following examples.

- UnHerd (Mary Harrington): What the manosphere and liberal feminism share (2023/5/4)
- Old reddit / True Christian: The Manosphere is Spreading (2023/7/19)*
- Evangelical Dark Web: Red Pill vs. Christ Pill: Evaluating the Harm of Rollo Tomassi, Pearly Things

(2023/7/21)

- Global Network (Elyse Willemsen): ‘Doing What God Designed Men to do’: Red Pilled Christians’ Quest for Patriarchy, According to Scripture (2024/3/11)*
- The New York Times (David French): The Atmosphere of the ‘Manosphere’ is Toxic (2024/4/14)*
- Church of the Eternal Logos: The Red Pill and Marriage: What Is the Christian Response? (2024/4/29)
- Through a Glass Darkly (Emily Stimpson Chapman): The Heresies of the Manosphere — Part 1 — Part 2 — Part 2.5 — Part 3 — Part 4 (2024/4/20 – 2024/6/4)*
- The New York Times (Ruth Whippman): Boys Get Everything, Except the Thing That’s Most Worth Having (2024/6/5)*

The next few posts will continue exploring this topic, with some important takeaways, as usual.

* H/T: Thedeti

Related

These following articles are related to upcoming posts in this subtopic.

- Black Label Logic: The Red Pill and Morality (2016/8/18)
- Biblical Gender Roles: Is Red Pill a Theory or a Religion? (2019/10/25)
- The Rational Male: The Red Pill Path (2020/4/10)
- Σ Frame: Small Schisms and Large Schisms (2020/6/5)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review — The Manosphere Reshuffles its Deck (2020/9/2)
- Σ Frame: Is the Christian Red Pill a Black Pill? (2020/11/29)
- Biblical Gender Roles: A Biblical Perspective on Tomassi vs Tate’s Red Pill (2022/10/22)
- Rob Says: Morality and The Red Pill (2022/11/17)
- XYZ (Adam Piggott): The Red Pill is a World Without God (2024/3/27)

A Pioneer's Vision of The Christian Red Pill

Jack · 26 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A review of what an early Christian Red Piller said about the Christian Red Pill.

Readership: All;
Theme: Problems with the Red Pill / Socio-Political Appropriation
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

In this post, I want to relay a fascinating essay from an early Christian Red Piller who hosted a blog named, Quit Playing Church, that ran from 2012/2 to 2015/6 and is still up on WordPress. In this post dated 2012/12/10, he outlines his vision of what The Christian "Red Pill" is (or should be) all about. I'm reposting this here because I think it is worth reviewing what the early pioneers of The Christian Red Pill had to say about it.

> "I hope I am not going out on a limb by posting this because many "red pill" blogs have to do with relating to women, marriage, and alpha and beta traits, both secular and Christian. However, of the Christian ones, many of the topics discussed point out how the Bible is being either horribly distorted or totally neglected by many in Christianity. I appreciate many of their posts. It has helped me to see the questions that I have asked are ones that others ask too.
>
> I am not necessarily here to speak specifically about any "flavor" of the "red pill" such as feminism, marriage, PUA, Game, MRM, or the like. In this post, I want to broaden the reach of the Christian "red pill".
>
> The Christian red pill is not anything special. All it is about is taking the Bible for what it's worth at face value. It's about taking all of what God says, not only the parts you like, and counting it as truth and seeking to please God by doing it, even if it goes against the "Christian" norm."

> "The "red pill" goes down hard, tastes horrible, and has serious side effects. You are just living life and BOOM! …questions arise. You get answers to those questions that don't make sense and it makes you question things even more. You wonder where in the Bible what is said came from. But what is said is just the > way it is. Everyone seems to think it as well. It's just tradition. Then you hear that Pastor so-and-so said "this" or a Christian book or radio program said "that". Where did they get THAT from? Suddenly, you start fighting with yourself on what is true or not. Who is right? You realize God is. His Word is truth whether other Christians want to follow it or not.

>
> The "red pill" is really nothing new, either. Many, many people through the ages have taken the pill. Some of the more famous ones are ingrained into Christian history. Martin Luther took the "red pill" and questioned the authority and some practices of the Roman Catholic Church with what the Scriptures taught, only to be condemned because of it. Dietrich Bonhoeffer did not sway with the Church toward Hitler's Nazi Regime and stood his ground at the cost of his life at the age of 39. John Hus was burned at the stake for speaking against the Roman Catholic Church in his time. William Tyndale was burned alive for translating the Bible into common English. John Wycliffe was deemed a heretic for his Bible-based views prior to the Reformation. He died of natural causes, but his body was dug up and burned afterwards. Charles Spurgeon, a London pastor in the 1800's, stood strong in the midst of the "downgrade controversy" when, even among Christians, the Bible was being questioned if it was the sole authority. Ultimately, Jesus, the Maker of the "red pill", stood up against the religious authority of His day who made their own rules instead of following God's Word.
>
> You see, the Christian "red pill" is nothing new. It is believing EVERYTHING God says in His Word whether it sounds good or not, even if other "Christians" think otherwise. It means not throwing in psychology or philosophy along with the Bible. It means doing what God says even if it's not the cultural norm. It means dying to yourself and the world around you. The Christian "red pill" simply means believing and doing what God says. Hey, isn't that what Jesus tells us to do anyway?"
>
> Quit Playing Church: The Christian "Red Pill" (2012/12/10)

There's much more content in the original essay, including a list of 'benefits' for both men and women and 'side effects' of taking the Red Pill.

Conclusions

In summary, QPC has offered us an ontological conceptualization of The Christian Red Pill, summarized as the confusing, grueling, relentless battle of sifting through one's beliefs, analyzing the content of one's heart, and facing up to the reality of life itself, finding the truth, articulating it, and living it out in obedience to God.

I would have to agree that this is the bare essence of The Christian Red Pill, yea, a faith journey in itself.

One thing about the current Christian Red Pill that stands in stark contrast with QPC's view is his idea of "not throwing in psychology or philosophy along with the Bible." The current iteration of the Christian Red Pill does include select topics in psychology and philosophy, but it is framed within a Biblical interpretation or is made subject to a Christian purpose, e.g. improving relationships, personal growth, understanding one's self, etc. Lately, the Christian Red Pill has warned against Positivism and has ventured into mystical territory, which may be regarded as a return to QPC's vision. Readers may like to comment about this or anything else about the current Christian Red Pill that contrasts with or deviates from QPC's concepts.

Related

- Black Label Logic: The Red Pill and Morality (2016/8/18)
- Biblical Gender Roles: Is Red Pill a Theory or a Religion? (2019/10/25)
- The Rational Male: The Red Pill Path (2020/4/10)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review — The Manosphere Reshuffles its Deck (2020/9/2)
- Σ Frame: Is the Christian Red Pill a Black Pill? (2020/11/29)
- Rob Says: Morality and The Red Pill (2022/11/17)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28)
- XYZ (Adam Piggott): The Red Pill is a World Without God (2024/3/27)

No Virtue Exists Without Masculine Incentives

Jack · 28 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Moral character cannot be attained by side-stepping masculine identity.

Readership: All; Christian Men
Theme: Problems with the Red Pill / Socio-Political Appropriation
Author's Note: This post collates viewpoints from Red Pill Apostle, Thedeti, Jack, and Feeriker. Some editing for clarity and readability. Links to original comments embedded.
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

This post reviews David French's critique of the Manosphere that appeared in The New York Times, entitled, The Atmosphere of the 'Manosphere' is Toxic (2024/4/14).

The T0x!c Disrespect for Men in Crisis (Red Pill Apostle)

T0x!c, when referring to behavior, is a word I could go the rest of my life without hearing.

David French says the atmosphere of the Manosphere is t0x!c, but he is wrong about the spheres. It's not toxic, but it does have an underlying bitterness due to the men who see answers in it.

Let me use a comparison to explain.

Imagine women in a divorce support group specifically for cases where the husband left because he was unhappy, alienated the kids against her, and is forcing her to give him a large percentage of her income. Then imagine that the majority of society tells her to suck it up and deal with it, because maybe if she'd been more frequent and enthusiastic about giving head, he'd have been happy and not left.

Most moderns would say that's a t0x!c atmosphere, but however rude though it may be, The Law of Evaluation is necessary for healing to begin, and it's quite appropriate to invoke The Law of Power. No one in their right mind would be surprised if this support group demonstrated some tendencies of being bitter. I'd say that something would be wrong with them if they didn't.

Men who suffer a similar plight find support from the Manosphere, and they are labeled 't0x!c' for being gutturally honest, implementing The Laws of Human Nature, and for being bitter. This labeling is, in itself, a t0x!c rejection of men in crisis.

The trick is not to wallow in bitterness so that it consumes you. There comes a time for action towards fixing whatever the problem is, and that tends to be uplifting for men. I think the improved outlook is due to realizing that there is an end in sight to the suffering.

Incentives Matter (Thedeti)

No one seems to be able to figure out why boys and men are failing.

How could this be happening?

We've taken away every good reason there is to be a man. We've taken away respect. We tell men they're less than worthless sh!t. Everyone tells boys and men they're hated, not liked, not wanted, and unnecessary. We've taken away avenues of competition and success. We've taken away male spaces where boys and men can congregate and where boys can learn from men. We've taken away boys' educational opportunities. We've taken away jobs and money. We've deprived them of the ability to earn money.

Boys and men can't even go up to a woman and try to strike up a conversation with them, without fearing police involvement. Women have made it crystal clear that all but the top 10% of men are considered totally worthless and undesirable. Superfluous. Not even really there. Invisible.

They can't ask women out. They can't act like men around women. They can't express frank and explicit sexual interest in women. They can't get married; and if they do get married they can't stay married. They have no right to anything they own. They have no rights to their children, not even to see them on a regular basis, much less direct their upbringing. They can't even reasonably guarantee they'll get anything at all from the marriages they do contract.

Gee. Why do we suppose men are failing? Could it be because there are no incentives for men to pursue what was once known as 'success', and plenty of incentives NOT to?

David French

David French suggests a return to the cardinal virtues, and a "pursuit of [goodness]" for young men.

And French thinks that putting increased demands on boys and men without even so much as the opportunity to get something for it, will somehow fix this.

Why should young men be prudent, temperate, just, and courageous? What will they get in return for developing these virtues?

If you want good men, you have to incentivize their creation.

See, the entire point of requiring this character development in men is that they'll get something in return. They'll get recognition from their peers and respect from other men. They'll get opportunities leading to greater status. They'll get jobs and incomes and homes. And, yes, they can attract a decent woman and build a family.

But that's not the case anymore. Men of good character are actively punished and deprived now.

A Vacuum of Moral Vision (Jack)

French writes,

> "Most of the "manosphere" influencers look at men's existential despair and respond with a mainly material cure. […] [Classical values are coopted] in service of the will to win. Success — with money, with women — becomes your best revenge."
>
> "…when it comes to the crisis confronting men and boys, there is no competing, holistic vision for our sons."

I agree with French that this is a problem with the Manosphere, as I wrote before…

> "BOTH the protagonists and the antagonists of The Red Pill don't seem to recognize that BOTH (1) the carnal / sexual aspects of attraction and mating, AND (2) the more abstract aspects of the human sociosexual experience, such as boundaries, faith, honor, humility, identity, longitudinal purpose, love, reputation, self-control, virtue, etc. must be considered if the truths of The Red Pill are to bring any lasting / eternal / > redemptive / sanctifying value relevant to an individual man's life.

> Worse, without these transcendent aspects, the hard cold truths of The Red Pill only deliver a knock-out double-punch of bitterness and nihilism."
>
> Σ Frame: Vectors of Conflict (2024/6/17)

But this vacuum of moral vision is not unique to the Manosphere. It is a pestilent malady within Western societies at large. Materialism and sexual prowess are rewarded. Morality is punished. We cannot point the figurative finger at the Manosphere and ignore the social conditions that led to its formation and popularity. This is what French has missed.

How TPTB Defrauds Men out of Their Masculine Identities (Jack)

French is correct in the next passage too.

> "One reason for this vacuum is that any discussion of the crisis among men almost immediately devolves into a debate over masculinity itself."

However, he fails to point out that there now exists a vacuum of masculinity (and morality too, which is not a coincidence) precisely because of this phenomenon — the social inquisition to deconstruct, demonize, and dismantle masculinity, all of which is surreptitiously referred to as an "elite debate over masculinity" (his words). All this suspicious questioning and methodical suppressing of masculinity is an attack on Western men's fundamental identity. It works by fomenting obsessive doubts and suspicions about the nature of masculinity which pose a distracting socio-psychological obstacle that prevents men from claiming their God given masculine identities by faith.

French furthers this same fraudulent questioning of masculinity when he writes,

> "Is traditional masculinity toxic? Or is it toxic to abandon traditionally masculine approaches to raising boys?

> What is traditional masculinity anyway? Is "masculinity" even a concept worth pursuing, or does it jam too many boys into stereotypical boxes, magnifying their misery?"

Anyone in a healthy society would chuckle at such questions as being embarassingly naïve — or recoil at the latent evil conveyed therein.

Moreover, French's questions are false questions, that is, a question that is founded on false premises and therefore has no true answer. In fact, most ALL questions about the nature of masculinity, as posed by the MSM, are false questions intended to defraud men out of their heritage by inflicting self-doubts.

Confusion and Falsehoods Abound (Jack)

Vox's SSH came to my mind when I read French's last sentence quoted above in bold. Based on readers' comments under this post, the idea that young men are jamming themselves into Vox's SSH and are made miserable by it might be both true and false, depending on how a man takes it. That is, one man might feel confined or ostracized by being pidgeonholed into a SSH type, i.e. a Gamma, while another man might reflect upon this theoretical structure and realize his proper place in the social order. There's some wisdom for mentors to learn from this.

Freedom or shelter?

Outside of Vox's SSH and Σ Frame's Faux Masculine Archetypes (which are not expressly intended to be mimicked), there are no 'stereotypical boxes' of masculinity being shown to young men, unless we include Schrödinger's t0x!c p@tr!@rch@l boogeyman that is everywhere and nowhere at the same time, or the emasculated 'immature boy' being touted by the MSM.

Furthermore, young men are being jammed outside of whatever construct of masculinity they might find. French's essay, for instance, is clearly intended to shoo searching men away from the Manosphere.

Moral Character Cannot be Attained by Side-Stepping Masculinity (Jack)

French takes this orchestrated denial of 'masculinity' further in writing,

> "I'm wondering if there is another, better way. Can we sidestep the elite debate over masculinity by approaching the crisis with men via an appeal to universal values rather than to the distinctively male > experience?”

French is keen in thinking that the “elite debate” can be ‘sidestepped’, but it cannot. We cannot omit, or sidestep, or skirt, or tip toe around the fact that all the anti-Man rhetoric needs to be done away with.

French is right that men need values and a moral vision and that the current Manosphere does not provide these, but let us not be distracted by this truism. (Colossians 2:4,8) His clever approach fails to address the dire necessity of masculinity.

Where French goes dank is in thinking that virtuous character can be achieved by abandoning or side-stepping masculinity (i.e. the image of God, not to be confused with the “elite debate” intended to destroy it). French is suggesting that men should be good and moral, but NOT masculine, whatever that is. All men must be shoehorned into a box of “universal values”, whatever he means by that. (I suspect this term may have a unique interpretative meaning.)

All this assumes that French’s proposition is even possible, but it is impossible. Our study of Chemistry revealed that masculinity, morality, social structure, and testosterone (the nectar of holiness) are all intertwined. Masculine strength is required for morality and virtue to exist.

Upon deeper examination, French’s curious and pleasantly trilling mixture of half-truths minus masculinity doesn’t sound much different from The Plan™ to keep men docile, subservient, weak, and working on The Pl@nt@t!0n™ (not to be confused with civilizationism).

Conclusions (Jack, Feeriker)

A man does not build or prove his character when life is convenient, but when it is difficult. Masculine development requires men to look beyond the easy but temporary solutions, to take the hard narrow road, and to embrace suffering as a necessary part of building character (Romans 5:3-5).

The overall message being conveyed, not just by French, but by all of MSM, is that masculine identity is a wash (except when applied to women). You must be a nice boy if you wish to escape your sorry life of suffering (imposed by TPTB). This is a false promise intended to entice men to be more compliant with The Gynocracy™.

Living here, or passing through?
French is a mouthpiece for Satan's 'elite' agenda, as is pretty much every "journalist" associated with MSM.

Don't be fooled by the faux compassion for men, admonishments toward building moral character, and such. Although these are important, the more serious issue is that masculinity is being denied from men, methodically and at the highest level.

As soon as you see this neoclown's byline associated with anything in print, it's your cue to ignore it and move on.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Spiritual Confusion of Clinging to the "Rules" (2021/3/24)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Disclosing the Taboo of Masculine Sexuality (2021/10/20)
- Biblical Gender Roles: The War on Masculine Sexuality (2022/1/23)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Delusion of the Good (2022/8/19)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/5)
- Σ Frame: Restoring Respect (2022/9/28)
- Σ Frame: The Battle Within (2023/4/10)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Reality (2023/12/23)
- Σ Frame: Origins of the "Immature Boy" Stereotype (2024/5/22)
- Σ Frame: Philosophical Dualism (2024/5/27)

Red Pill Psychopathy

Jack · 1 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Analyzing a common misperception.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Socio-Political Misappropriation
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

> "A little philosophy inclineth man's mind to atheism, but depth in philosophy bringeth men's minds about to religion."
>
> Francis Bacon (1561-1626)

The Scientific Method

The Scientific Method is an empirical method for acquiring knowledge that has characterized the development of science since at least the 17th century. The scientific method involves careful observation coupled with rigorous scepticism, because cognitive assumptions can distort the interpretation of the observation.

After hearing some bizarre advice from a Pickup Artist (PUA), Pastor Michael Foster decided to try it out on his wife. To his utter amazement, he found that it truly 'worked'. After this, Foster decided to explore the Red Pill / Manosphere in his search for truth.

Generalized procedure of the Scientific Method.
He wrote about his research findings in an article at Discipleship and Dominion: Our Honest Assessment of the Red Pill and Manosphere (2020/5/5). Excerpts follow [emphasis his].

> "So I read all the popular books in the space, and watched / listened to a few hundred hours of YouTube videos. Over time, I came to see why this world was so attractive to Christian men. Unlike so many pastors, the > men producing this content were unashamed of their masculine desires. More than that, they were ready and able to offer practical advice on how to realize them.

>
> They were filling a void left by absent and abdicating fathers.
>
> Once upon a time, your dad or uncle would explain to you how the world — and women — actually worked. They'd give you time-tested, no-BS straight talk.
>
> Those men are now few and far between.
>
> In their place, the Manosphere has sprung up: men helping men learn what their fathers should have taught them.
>
> And this is the best lens to understand the strengths and weaknesses of the Manosphere / Red Pill. It is essentially a body of fatherless men who have learned a thing or two teaching clueless bastards."

Abject Psychopathy

Foster goes on to discover that Mystery, a famous PUA, was from a dysfunctional home, mentally broken, nearly suicidal, and was in and out of the Hollywood Mental Health Center. However, Mystery was 'special' because he just happened to have charm, good looks, and social acumen, which drew others to him and prevented him from ever being left alone in the world. This was all that was necessary for him to learn a few tricks that allowed him to get women in the sack.

Foster then describes PUAs as thus.

> "Everything reduces down to sex with these guys.
>
> Sex validates them. It proves that they are a winner. And guys that don't get any, regardless of their efforts to win, are losers.
>
> If you peel the paint off most (not all) Red Pill guys, you'll find a bitter Blue Pill boy underneath."

Pastor Michael Foster in his research office.

So then Foster makes a logical leap of faith to conclude that hidden behind the PUA scene, the entire Red Pill is all about sociopathic men having debased sex.

> "In other words, the Red Pill is not a full-orbed doctrine of sexuality. It's a narrowly-aimed reductive strategy for horny men to get some. It's a mindset which, ironically, is the very thing it claims to despise: gynocentric. While Blue Pill men pedestalize women directly, many "Red Pill" men simply switch to pedestaling them indirectly by putting sex on the pedestal instead."

The Christian Red Pill has come to the same conclusion, more or less — that the all-consuming focus on sex that is common within the secular Red Pill, and especially the idea that sex is what validates men and should therefore be prioritized over all else, manifests as an exercise in gynocentric idolatry. The Christian Red Pill branch of natural philosophy broke away from that of the Secular Red Pill for this same reason.

An Epiphany

Still not fully satisfied with this conclusion, Foster decided to continue doing clinical studies of his own.

> "Needless to say… sex requires women."

Pastor Michael Foster and his research subject (his wife Emily).
After some experimentation with his research subject, he concludes,

> "Since the Red Pill revolves around sex, it makes sense that men without girlfriends, or husbands with frigid wives, would flock to it. It makes sense these men would be greatly helped by the Manosphere. Sex and arousal are the immediate issues.
>
> However, the Red Pill can only offer a few tips and tricks. Its gurus can help you land a girl, or maybe unfreeze your old woman. But only momentarily. They teach you how to fake it to make it… for a moment. But it's empty, surface-level stuff — not true transformation.
>
> This is why we are now even seeing PUA men like Roosh and Victor Pride leave behind empty hedonism in > pursuit of Christianity."

But Pastor Foster made one significant mistake in his research — his own research subjects — himself and his wife — were not similar to those used by PUAs / Red Pill gurus. He already had what PUAs had been searching for all along — God and a faithful, submissive wife.

New Findings

Fortunately, The Christian Red Pill has answered some of Pastor Foster's questions since he conducted his earlier studies in 2020. Other cause-and-effect relationships have been identified and we've seen how this plays out. In fact, we've come to see the whole progression of events.

1. Post WW1 / Prohibition / Suffrage / Temperance — Casual sex settles into Western culture.
2. 1950s-1960s –The seeds of sin and rebellion were planted by Feminism / Women's Liberation and the Sexual Revolution.
3. 1960s- present — Increased acceptance of sexual promiscuity.
4. 1960s-1990s — The Sirens of the Sexual Apocalypse.
5. 1970s-1980s — The rise of divorce and the disintegration of the nuclear family.
6. 1990s-2000s — The gradual decay of morality and social order.
7. 2000s-2010s — PUAs opened the floodgates of Red Pill awareness.
8. 2010s — Unfettered promiscuity for top 10% men and the majority of women. Other men are incels / MGTOWs.
9. Late 2010s — Pickup Artistry had its day in the sun and then faded away as the Overton window of dating norms shifted in response.
10. Early 2020s — Red Pill awareness went mainstream.
11. Early 2020s — Black Pill despondency and nihilism for the bulk of the other men.
12. 2020s onward — Many men are checked out and many women are bitter spinsters.
13. 2020s onward — MORE sociopathy and psychopathy throughout society.

All this happening in a span of 50~100 years.

From a larger perspective, we see…

- Sin, sociopathy, and psychopathy leading to ever more sin, sociopathy, and psychopathy.
- The breakdown of social order.
- The Red Pill / truth leads to the God Pill — a deeper faith in Christ / Christianity.

In conclusion, the entire western cultural ontology is responsible for the sexual promiscuity, sin, sociopathy, psychopathy, and other maladies observed by Pastor Foster. The Red Pill is what has brought this information to light.

Thus, Pastor Foster made a common error of attribution.

Conclusions

In conclusion of his research, Pastor Foster wrote,

> "I don't want this to come off as dismissive towards the Red Pill. I think it has a lot helpful ideas. In the Institutes of the Christian Religion, John Calvin wrote,
>
> > "If the Lord has willed that we be helped in physics, dialectic, mathematics, and other disciplines, by the work and ministry of the ungodly, let us use this assistance."
>
> This is a good summary of our attitude towards non-Christian sources on issues related to sexuality. We accept their assistance as we seek to flesh out a doctrine of masculinity."

> "But — and it's a big but — it must be replanted and anchored in the biblical worldview. It must be interpreted through the lens of faith."

Many Christian Red Pillers, including Jack and Oscar, take the same view: All truth is God's truth. If we find truth in psychology, philosophy, sociology, criminology — whatever — then we should use it, something along the lines of 1 Corinthians 6:12; 1 Corinthians 10:23. All things are permissible, but not all things are helpful. Do all to the glory of God.

Nevertheless, in spite of these research findings, we continue to see many Churchistanians, pharisaical moralizers, and new old school Fem!n@z!s make the same false association that Foster, et al. once made, i.e. PUA = psychopathology + sexual immorality = Red Pill.

Thus, much like Francis Bacon observed at the beginning of the Scientific Revolution, we see a similar phenomenon today:

A shallow observation of The Red Pill inclineth man's mind to sin and sociopathy, but depth in The Red Pill bringeth men's minds about to faith.

Related

- Σ Frame: Deriving Doctrine (2020/11/14)
- Σ Frame: What Hitting Bottom will look like (2021/2/10)
- Σ Frame: The Pervasive Influence of Modern Gnosticism (2021/11/3)
- Σ Frame: The Armchair Philosopher (2022/5/13)
- Σ Frame: A Failure of Imagination (2024/5/20)

The Mechanics of Sectarianism within The Christian Red Pill [R+]

Jack · 3 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Can't agree? Then form a new denomination / sect!

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Infighting / Sectarianism / Socio-Political Misappropriation
Author's Note: Based on email correspondence between Jack, NovaSeeker, and Thedeti between 2019-2021.
Length: 1,900 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Intro

Back in 2019-2020, and maybe a little earlier or later, here and there, there was much discussion, not only within the Manosphere, but also within the larger online community, about the value of Red Pill truth from a Christian perspective, and whether the Red Pill could even be considered Christian or not.

Leaving aside the atheists, who have only a marginal investment in the topic, in general, there were several different perspectives on this issue. (For clarity and ease of discussion, each of these perspectives are represented by a speed nomenclature, given in brackets.)

1. Christians who viewed the Red Pill as a collection of valuable truths that coincided with the Bible on a constellation of points, and well worthy of contemplation. [R+]
2. Christians who viewed the Red Pill as questionable, due to its connotative association with hook-up culture, PUA's, etc. [R-]
3. Churchians who viewed the Red Pill as philosophically valuable, but twisted it to suit their own predetermined views, resulting in a Purple Pill mindset. [B+]
4. Men, some Christian or Churchian, who viewed the Red Pill as economically or sociologically valuable, and hijacked it to suit their own marketing strategy, often accompanied by a sensationalistic consortium of 'ideological products'. [B$]
5. Churchians who viewed the Red Pill as a m!s0gyn!st!c, r@c!st, h0m0ph0b!c, or a community of '!ncels' or radicals. [B-]
6. Christians or Churchians who viewed the Red Pill as a new brand of religious cult. [C]

At the time, the viewpoints arising from each of the above perspectives clashed in various blog posts, comments, and op eds. Many voices couldn't identify the general perspective taken by others, and therefore had no idea how to respond appropriately. Confusion abounded in the virtual blogs and forums, e-friendships were forged and broken.

The confusion over these issues came to a head in 2019, when Dalrock entered into some tedious, heated, drawn-out discussions with Warhorn, Doug Wilson, Bnonn Tennant, Michael Foster, et al. Apparently, this interchange took a severe toll on Dalrock, and he resigned from blogging in early 2020. "Silenced at last!", was the cry heard.

But not so fast. Biblical Gender Roles (BGR) rose to the occasion and methodically attacked a separate but interrelated question underwriting the entire debate — Is the Red Pill Biblical?

Then in 2020-2021, The Red Pill largely shifted to video format and became more sensationalistic and less rational. Hence, The Red Pill 2.0 was born. All the arguments, rifts, and even whole topics that were making headway in The Red Pill 1.0 were almost entirely forgotten overnight.

Or were they?

In this mini-series, I'll answer some of those questions that had been left dangling, and argue that The Christian Red Pill 1.0 was morphing into various sociopraxeological entities at the time it was interrupted.

In the remainder of this post, I'll examine the first group on the list [R+] to reveal how it has splintered into sociotheological entities.

Divisions in The Christian Manosphere / Red Pill [R+]

During 2021 when NovaSeeker was on board, an important and vexing philosophical development was addressed here at Σ Frame, referred to as The Exploration vs. Exploitation Tradeoff. To briefly describe, navigating the landscape of life requires balancing reward maximization based on the knowledge already acquired with attempting new actions to further increase knowledge. In simple terms, this means that people who have had a lot of experience and who have made a lot of mistakes, usually become wiser and more proficient in the process. So the question becomes, how much, and to what extent does one need to 'mess around' (to put it politely) in order to "come to terms with one's self" and gain the wisdom of experience, and how much does one need to walk the straight and narrow in order to avoid the negative consequences of doing so? (Read more about The Exploration vs. Exploitation Tradeoff here.)

The doctrinal implications and logical ramifications of this discussion revealed not only that the devil is in the details (as readers might imagine), but also a more fundamental problem of ontology involving the mechanics of deductive thought.

I'll try to explain this ontological problem as best I can.

We are all different individuals having different experiences, and coming from different walks of life, and thus we face different challenges and different problems. NovaSeeker addressed this variance of viewpoints in his post, Constructing a Framework of Options (2021/3/15). Because of all these different but equally valid perspectives, what are problems for some of us simply don't appear to be significant to others because said others never experienced them as problems (and/or see those who do experience said problems as being "lesser" or irrelevant, or the people themselves having "issues" or being "cringe" or what have you). Meanwhile the very different problems they do face are equated with first-order problems that they think the Christian Manosphere should place top priority on addressing.

When everyone has different problems based on different experiences, and these problems are different in nature, focus, and "order" (in terms of whether they are fundamental order, second level, third level etc.), not only will there be no consensus, but they won't even be able to have a coherent discussion. Instead, people talk past each other, or they just shake their heads in befuddlement at each other, because there is a chasm between them that is experiential / phenomenological and not simply cognitive. (In psychology, this chasm is referred to as a 'non-shared environment'.) Nothing can be done about this chasm, because this is just how God created us.

Why A Clearinghouse of Ideas Doesn't Work

The old Manosphere had the same kinds of issues, of course, but it functioned more like a clearinghouse at first — a grab-bag of advice that men could peruse, use at their discretion, combine as they wished and so on, with no "one solution for everyone" touted — at least at first. Later, divisions happened because ideologies emerged in favor of this or that specific application (using a combination of Manosphere tools) as being "The True Red Pill", and divisions happened over that. But there are still grab-bag type of places like Reddit / Married Red Pill that can get around that problem, at least in the sidebar, and offer people a clearinghouse of experience, information, and tools to use as they wish, as it works for their own goals, lives and values.

All these differences of opinions and viewpoints become a more acute issue because of the Christian nature of the audience. When you add Christianity to the mix, this becomes an approach that is practically impossible. Christians are generally focused on finding "What is the one true Christian approach?", and trying to work out the details of that. When they do find something that checks all their philosophical and theological boxes, they tout it as the "one true" approach, separate from others who don't agree with them on various points, and build a religious ideology around it.

Moreover, you can't have a clearinghouse approach when people see how you use the clearinghouse, and even what ideas you look at in the clearinghouse, as a moral and/or sacrosanct issue having eternal consequences, or as bearing such moral taint that it disgusts them to the point of not wanting to participate at all.

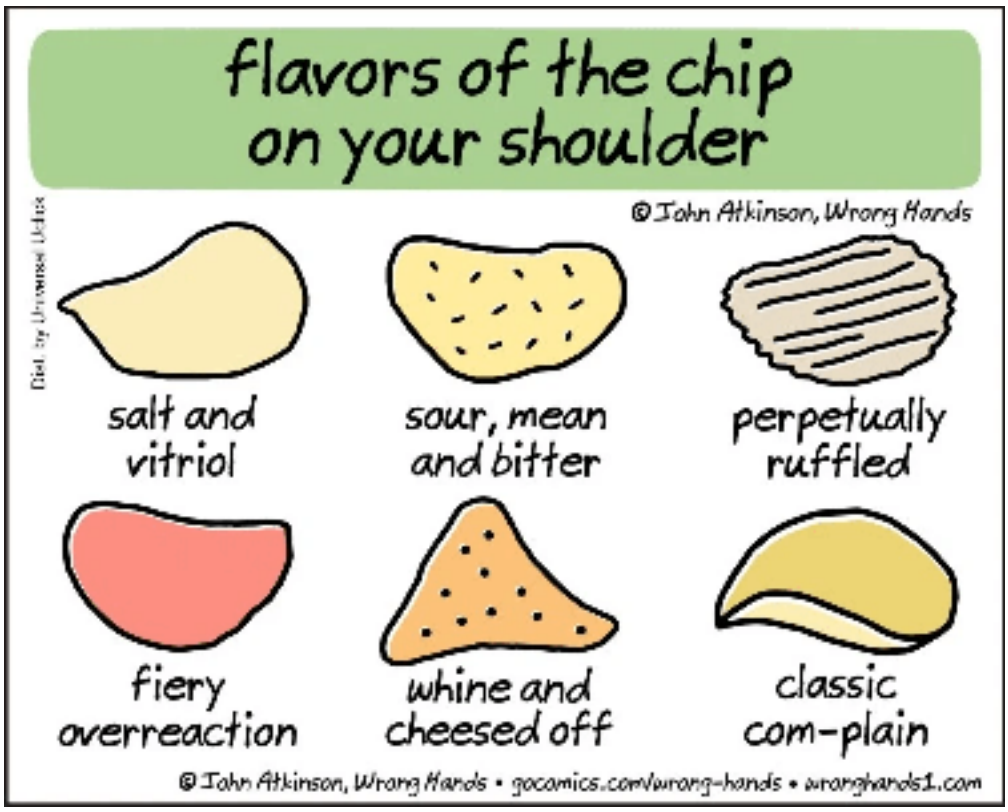
The Christian Red Pill Mimics the Divisions Inherent in Protestantism

This is especially true in the Christian Manosphere, because the kind of Christian that tends to come here and identify as a “Christian Red Pill” type is overwhelmingly likely to be a fundamentalist type Christian, or another kind of ultraconservative Christian, and most people like that have a strong to very strong distaste for dissonance in general, and a particularly strong aversion towards anything that they may perceive to be doctrinally or morally incongruent. They are simply much less capable of entertaining arguments that they have already deemed ‘unscriptural’, or participating in things that are ‘tainted’ in their eyes, with the aim of extracting something good or useful out of them. Instead, the preferred approach is generally some form of separatism, an irreconcilable strategy that mirrors Protestantism in general.

In the Christian Manosphere, that leads to division, silos, judgment, and the like being as common as dirt.

This is a very strong tendency in all religious people, but since we are all Christians here, it is inside this faith of ours that we have experienced this most commonly. It has always made the Christian Red Pill incredibly divisive, divided, and splintered. Interestingly, The Christian Manosphere / Red Pill is exactly like Protestantism in this regard: “Can’t agree? Then form a new denomination / sect.”

All of this means, what we are trying to do here at Σ Frame is very hard, maybe even impossible given the atomized state of the church, society, and philosophy itself.



Christian Red Pill Sects

The biggest "divides" that have formed in the Christian Manosphere are as follows, and roughly in this order. I think these could be extended to describe Christianity in general. (Converged churchianity is not included here.)

1. The Sola Scriptura camp vs. the Mystical Faith camp.
2. Moral Absolutists vs. Moral Relativists vs. Moral Discernment / Wisdom.
3. The Ecclesiastical camp* (those having an allegiance to an established faith tradition) vs. the Independents (those who've had a bad experience with organized religion).
4. The Sex = Marriage camp vs. the Sex ≠ Marriage camp.
5. The Headship Authority camp vs. the Peaceful Unity camp.

What we see in the Christian Manosphere / Red Pill these days is that each blog, forum, or content producer has settled into a rhetoric that befits their own individualized approach to each of the above five dichotomies.

Note: There are other divergences surrounding other areas of concern, e.g. church leadership, mentoring, parenting, etc. but these five are the most significant.

If one were to study the body of philosophy proffered by each one in depth, one would find the inherent constitutional principles thereof conforms to one of the above 5 types.

Here are a few examples broken down.

- Bruce Charlton, Francis Berger – Mystical Faith, Moral Discernment, Ecclesiastical. (They do not explicitly cover the topic of marriage, so 4 and 5 are not emphasized.)
- Christianity and Masculinity (Deep Strength) – Sola Scriptura, Moral Absolutist, more ecclesiastical than not (Protestant), Sex ≠ Marriage, and Headship.
- Dalrock – Sola Scriptura, Moral Absolutist, Ecclesiastical (Protestant), Sex ≠ Marriage, and Headship.
- Derek L. Ramsey (Ramman3000) – Sola Scriptura, Moral Absolutist, more ecclesiastical than not (Anabaptist), Sex = Marriage, and Peaceful Unity.
- Jim – Leans towards Sola Scriptura, Moral Relativist, Independent, holds unique views of Sex = Marriage, and strict Headship.
- Laughing at Feminism (Sharkly) – Sola Scriptura, Moral Absolutist, Independent, Sex = Marriage, Headship.
- Michael Foster, Bnonn Tennant – Sola Scriptura, Moral Relativist, Ecclesiastical (Protestant), Sex ≠ Marriage, and Peaceful Unity.
- Radix Fidem / Catacomb Resident (Tomb Refugee) – Mystical Faith, Moral Discernment, Independent, leans towards Sex = Marriage, and Headship.
- Σ Frame (Jack) – Mystical Faith, Moral Discernment, Independent, Sex = Marriage, and Headship Authority.
- The Orthosphere – Moral Absolutist, firmly Ecclesiastical (Catholic, which determines 1 and 5), and Traditional Marriage.
- Vox Day – Sola Scriptura background, but does not emphasize this, Moral Absolutist (Civilizationism), defacto Independent, Sex ≠ Marriage, and Headship (assumed).

Alliances and Divisions

From what I can tell, some groups tend to get along much better than others.

- Ecclesiastical types tend to disregard Independent voices.
- Peaceful Unity types tend to have strong marriages and recoil from extreme Headship Authority.

- The Moral Absolutists and Moral Discernment / Wisdom types get along rather well, but the Moral Relativists are not taken seriously by them. In fact, Moral Absolutists are disgusted by Moral Relativists.

Readers are welcome to suggest others.

Conclusions

Although we may all have different beliefs, opinions, and perspectives, I strongly and humbly suggest that we should all agree on Christ, if we are indeed found in Him. Otherwise, The Christian Manosphere / Red Pill cannot be a body of believers.

Related

Red Pill Roadmap [R+]

Jack · 5 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Can't agree? Then get back to the basics!

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Infighting / Sectarianism / Socio-Political Misappropriation
Author's Note: Based on email correspondence between Jack, NovaSeeker, and Thedeti between 2019-2021.
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Critical Navigating

In response to The Mechanics of Sectarianism within The Christian Red Pill (2024/7/3), Thedeti said,

> "I don't find discussions or topics like these to be helpful or productive.
>
> In my view, the only pertinent inquiries are…
>
> "Is the matter asserted true or false in light of all available evidence and circumstances, including scripture, tradition, experience, and reason?"
>
> "Is the matter or proposition beneficial or detrimental to a man, to men, to his family, or to society, in light of scripture, tradition, experience, and reason?"
>
> God gave us love, power, and sound minds. We're invited to gather together as men and "reason together". He did not ask us to leave reason and experience at the door when He called us to Him."

The questions posed by Thedeti are what each man should be asking himself whenever consuming content. Here we're referring specifically to Red Pill stuff, but it goes for anything really; listening to a sermon, reading the news, watching YouTube, and so on. A man should always be filtering the information that he takes in, sorting out what is good / relevant / true / useful, and what is not.

But as NovaSeeker and I described in the previous post, when men begin to discuss these topics amongst themselves, there is often a phenomenological misunderstanding which prevents meaningful communication.

Divisive or Inspiring?

A Short Circuit Crash Course

Back in 2021 when we were first discussing this gridlock, I couldn't identify why the rhetorical boat kept toggle-locking and capsizing despite our best efforts — why minds could not meet — not even enough to identify exactly what it was that we were disagreeing about. Comboxes resembled bumper car derbys rather than a caucus of wise intelligent Christian men.

At the time, I guessed that it was female commenters hijacking threads with volatile notions — or legalism, as in, people are operating out of their heads, and not their hearts; people are rather quick to judge, and that puts a damper on the introspection and honesty. But since then, most of the female regulars have ceased commenting and although there is indeed some legalistic judgment going on, I've come to see that the more basic reason why minds cannot meet is because there are some outstanding incongruences of awareness / orientation that are based on certain fundamental assumptions.

It took me a while longer to figure out exactly what those assumptions are.

It wasn't until a couple years later during a series* on Sacramental Marriage in which I studied ecumenical miscommunications, sectarianism, and Meta Cognitions, that I was able to glean a better understanding of those fundamental incongruent assumptions behind the miscommunications. Moreover, five noteworthy dichotomies of viewpoints were identified and recorded in Divided We Fall (2023/6/6). These were copied in the previous post.

It is NOT that readers are mindfully turning to these controversial issues, disagreeing, reaching an impasse on principles, and then shutting down the convo (although it ~~sometimes~~ often happens), but that we all have these assumptions running in our mental software, and the communication protocols don't function between the different operating systems of awareness — like trying to run a Linux program on MSDOS. This is why the ¡Error! message keeps popping up at unpredictable moments for unforeseen reasons.

 Points of Interest: This series also produced The Peaceful Unity Marriage Model (2023/6/7) and the epiphanies surrounding Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10), which Deep Strength also wrote about, and is directly related to one's sphere of authority.*

Charting a New Discourse

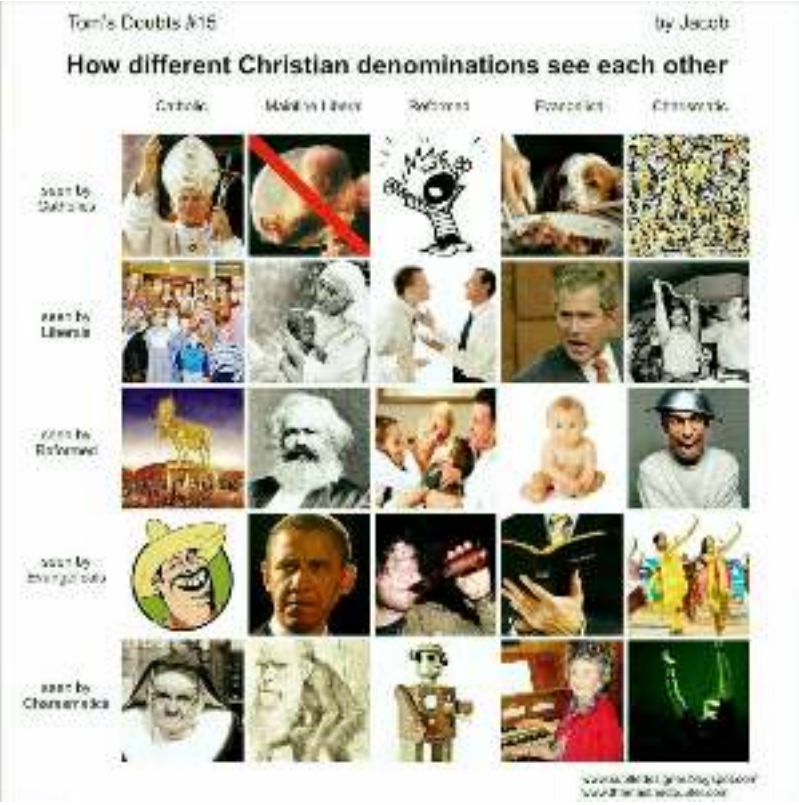
The previous post described how sectarianism in The Christian Red Pill mimics the divisions inherent in Protestantism. More broadly, the problems within The CRP are essentially the same problems occurring in the church. This might be surprising to some readers, but it shouldn't be, since we are the same people in both communities. Once you see how this is true, especially in the area of interpersonal communications, then you'll also see how this whole dynamic also applies to our church communities; yea, to our faith itself.

One thing we could try to do is to push the conversation in a different way by backing away from those polarizing issues closely tied to one extreme of a ~~hypergamouse~~ dichotomouse* position and towards more basic ones, such as…

- Living as a Christian in the current culture, and how that overall approach plays out in these issues, no matter which orientation one might hold. I think that the two are related and perhaps we might find common ground here.
- Living as a Man in the current culture, masculinity and what it means to be a man, our relationships with other men and with women, our places in society, our missions, and our visions.

A more general practical approach would be to keep it real and relevant to one's life, where the rubber meets the road.

 Comic strips and memes that mock and/or parody sectarian differences are needed to increase general understanding and wisdom. Like this one below. If you have the ability, interest, and inspiration to do so, you may have a new calling.*



Moving Off the Gridlock Charts

For an example of what I mean, LastHoldOut summed up the basics in this comment from an earlier discussion of this topic.

> "The rhetorical and practical question / thread in all these discussions is, "Where is the "church" (small caps church) in all of this?" Church "leaders" have allowed the entire landscape to be re-framed. It is time to come down hard within our own Christian community — to get our own house in order. We can't correct anything if we cannot correct ourselves.
>
> Until we slap the Christian "leaders" (pastors, authors, and counselors) out of the post-modern feminist Blue Pill world, we're p!ss!ng up a rope. We're wandering in the wilderness alone (Option 3). There needs to be a rhetoric that focuses on those pastors, authors, and counselors who have sold Christian marriage (i.e., the marriage foundations) down the river.
>
> There are very basic foundations that have been papered over in the last 50 years:
>
> 1. The man holds headship in the marriage;
> 2. The wife is to submit to her husband in "everything;"
> 3. The couple are to become one, which, according to Paul, happens only through the act of sex between the two. (See 1st Corinthians 6:16); and…
> 4. The practice of bilateral repentance / forgiveness must be a dynamic that is practiced by husband and wife.
>
> These four are the TRUE Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife parallel:

The Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife Parallel

1. The Headship of Christ. –> The headship of the husband.
2. The Church submits to Christ. –> The wife submits to the husband.
3. "For you are all one in Christ Jesus" (Galatians 3:28). –> "The two shall become one flesh" (Matthew 19:5).
4. The repentance-forgiveness dynamic between believers (the Church) and Christ. –> The bi-lateral repentance-forgiveness dynamic between two spouses.

Like many of you, I've not heard these preached as foundations for marriage in the last 50 years.

Pastors, authors, and counselors have placed a disproportionate focus on Ephesians 5:25-39 and thus re-framed the marriage.

If we cannot correct our own, how are we to be the salt?"

I'll briefly sum up some other central tenets that have come to light:

1. Men need to find their calling / mission / purpose / work and focus on developing that. (News Flash: Marriage is NOT a calling / mission.)
2. Men need to identify their domain of authority and work within their sphere of influence. This means, No More Mr. Nice Guy™ going around squandering his essence by handing out altruistic freebies.
3. Single men interested in marriage need to select their pool of eligibles wisely (or change pools) and learn how to detect IOIs from young single gals.
4. Men who can detect the IOIs being thrown at them, but who are not attracted to those women who are giving out the IOIs, have to either (1) accept their lot; or (2) level up somehow.

Readers are invited to add others.

The Finnish Line

If we could just all agree on the basic fundamentals listed above by LastHoldOut, regardless of how each man or church decides to implement them, practice them, regulate them, or whatever, then that would bring a clear defining meaning and purpose to the CRP. In the church, it would jumpstart a whole new era of Christian unity in a jiffy. More importantly, it would also bring God back into the equation, rather than playing around with D-E-I stuff (including complementarianism / egalitarianism), 'gender wars', gynocentrism, life scripts, political correctness, posture posing, power games, virtue signaling, and other Worldly concerns that everyone feels like they have to constantly dance around, even when in church.

You see, what LastHoldOut is talking about isn't really just an issue impacting the way male-female relationships are handled by churches, it's also reflecting the way much of the contemporary lifestyle is handled by the churches as well.

The Christian Manosphere / Red Pill community is just one small but very influential pocket of change.

It's hard to separate all these issues out, but we're doing what little we can.

Related

- Preacher's Institute: Christ, Church, Husband, And Wife (2015/12/7)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Restructure (2024/3/15)

Dirty Red Pill [R-]

Jack · 8 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Touch not the Red Pill, for it is unclean. Unclean, I say! UNCLEAN!!!

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Sectarianism / Socio-Political Misappropriation
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Intro

In this post, I'll cover the second perspective of The Red Pill (TRP) [R-]: Christians and/or Conservatives who view the Red Pill as questionable and/or shameful, due to its connotative or historical association with sexual immorality, hook-up culture, PUA's, inconvenient / ugly truths, etc.

A list of other perspectives is given here.

I'll return to the important topics brought up in the last two posts in a future theme.

Case Studies

There are many influencers who espouse Red Pill truths, but with a disdaining or distancing attitude towards TRP. Here are a few I've noticed.

- Conor Beaton – Red Pilled and doesn't know it.
- Rob Henderson – Happy to accept the positives, avoidant and/or critical of the negatives.
- Jordan Peterson – Has his own unique approach with a hat tip to meaning and morality.
- Aaron Renn – Observer Status. Used to be mesmerized by TRP, but has since tempered his approach with clinical objectivism.

- Adam Lane Smith – Scared spineless of being pigeonholed as Red Pilled.
- Bnonn Tennant and Michael Foster – Recognize the value of TRP in terms of cultural awareness, personal growth, and practical ministry, but also view it as a peripheral metacognition, warn of its idolatry, and are defensive about being associated with the label.
- Matt Walsh — Has his head stuck on TradCon monologues which he regularly prefers over RP concepts.
- Chris Williamson – Likes the taste, but won't bite it off and swallow it down.
- Pastor Doug Wilson – Persnickety and skeptical (in the past, but not so much anymore).

A Reserved Stance Towards The Red Pill

Even though they might often refer to or summarize Red Pill principles in polite language, they'll shy away from naming their RP sources and/or being identified as Red Pill.

When cornered or pushed, these individuals will admit to specific Red Pill postulates as being correct or true, but then they'll do a rhetorical dance because they don't have the stones to own it.

Some typical attitudes and statements that are representative of this stance are as follows.

- "Red Pill voices are not speaking encouraging words, by and large." (Moralizing)
- "Yes, there are bad exploitative women out there, but there are also bad exploitative men too!" (Evasion)
- "The way Red Pill men talk about women is just as bad as the way the media talks about men." (Blaming men)
- "The Red Pill is the male equivalent of Feminism. Both are bad and just as morally corrupt." (False comparison)
- "We need to protect people from lies, but also from harsh unloving truths that could break their spirit. We need a 'balance'." (False compassion)
- When confronted with a Red Pill truth: "You have a good point, but taking that route or that way of thinking is more harmful than helpful." (Deflection)
- "If someone is so inept and irresponsible with one's life that they wound up taking The Red Pill, then how can The Red Pill ever give them the strength needed to conquer their problems?" (Blaming the victim)
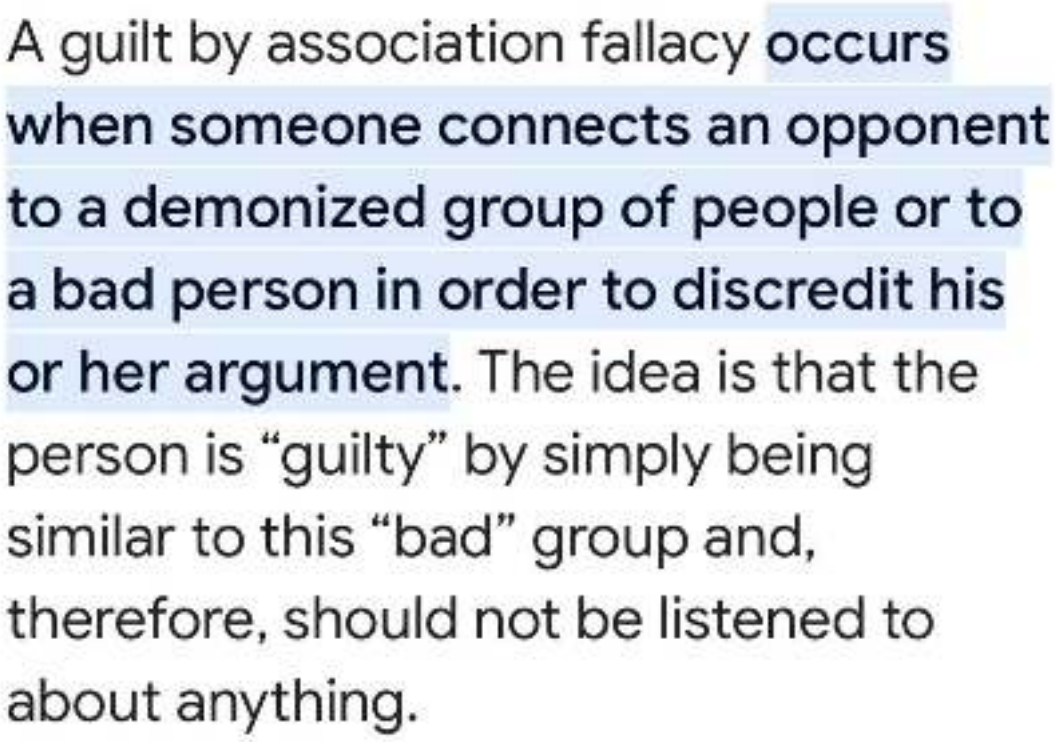
- They'll regard Red Pill lore as a cautionary tale, but nothing more.

- They'll regard social issues as wicked problems with no solution, and The Red Pill only adds to these problems.
- They'll critique and question Red Pill tenets, not with the intent of learning and understanding, but only to contrast them against their own 'correct view', dismiss them, and/or hold them at arm's length.

Burn the Message or Sh00t the Messenger?

This general perspective [R-] comes in three flavors.



Some guys (e.g. Beaton, A. L. Smith, Tennant, Foster) like the message, but they don't like the messenger; they like the truths therein, but they don't like the packaging. For example, they'll nitpick about ethical implications until they're completely stymied, or they'll associate TRP with the worst of the worst Red Pill degenerates, e.g. Adam22, Andrew T@te, Destiny, et al. Then they'll refer to the Red Pill condescendingly, with the attitude of "That's for low-lifes. I'm better than that." (This is like rejecting Christianity because Joel Osteen is fake.)

Others (e.g. Henderson, Walsh, Williamson) receive the messenger, but they won't read the entire message; they like the packaging, but they won't open it up. For example, they'll adopt Red Pill buzzwords and basic talking points, but then it is revealed that it's done mainly to appear trendy and/or to attract clicks and views, and they don't even understand much of what they're talking about. Or they'll review some Red Pill content, make a social commentary, and leave it at that; they won't dig into the cause-and-effect, the motivations, and the whys and wherefores of what's behind it.

Then there's the Jordan Peterson approach. Accept both message and messenger, but remain insulated behind the Fifth Wall of philosophical objectivity. (Of these three, this is the most appealing to younger crowds, i.e. Zoomers.)

But for all these types, there's something about The Red Pill that gives them the heebie jeebies, something they just cannot accept, so its reception is always buffered and tempered with comparisons, explanations, evasions, justifications, narratives, reinterpretations, and the like.

But what is it that they cannot accept?

The Truth is FUgly

Generally speaking, it appears that they cannot accept the odious reality that the truth is not always beautiful, 'clean', and pleasant, and at times, it is offensive and ugly. Concerning these men who are Christians, it is as though they are taking Ephesians 5:1-21 quite seriously, and for this they are to be rightly commended.

However, they are emphasizing the passages which say,

> [3] But sexual immorality or any impurity or greed must not even be mentioned among you, as is proper among saints; [4] and there must be no filthiness or foolish talk, or vulgar joking, which are not fitting… [5] For this you know with certainty, that no sexually immoral or impure or greedy person, which amounts to an idolater, has an inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and God.
>
> [6b] …for because of these things the wrath of God comes upon the sons of disobedience. [7] Therefore do not become partners with them;
>
> [11a] Do not participate in the useless deeds of darkness, […] [12] for it is disgraceful even to speak of the things which are done by them in secret.
>
> [15] So then, be careful how you walk, not as unwise people but as wise…

But they have glossed over the passages that say,

> [9] (for the fruit of the light consists in all goodness, righteousness, and truth)
>
> [11] Do not participate in the useless deeds of darkness, but instead even expose them;
>
> [13] But all things become visible when they are exposed by the light, for everything that becomes visible is light.

Yes, the truth is sometimes ugly, but we must not omit the detestable aspects of the truth simply because it is unbecoming. Courage, discernment, love, and wisdom are needed for this.

Wh!te Washed Red Pill

So you see, to truly understand this type of perspective [R-], we must recognize that these individuals are acutely aware that The Red Pill is 'unclean' — and it truly is. In fact, we might think of The Red Pill as a revealing emphasis on the dirty uncomfortable truths that everyone prefers to ignore but which must necessarily be addressed, made clear, and understood — much like a kid who must learn to eat broccoli and brussel sprouts to be healthy.

BUT… they also perceive TRP as being defiled — and also defiling — like a kid who vomits at the sight of vegetables. (Reader's Note: Something that is 'unclean' produces a languoring visceral disgust. Something that is 'defiling' degrades one's identity. Click on links for more.)

This peculiar awareness manifests in many forms.

- They are overly conscious of guilt by association or maybe by identification in some cases (e.g. bringing up memories of past traumatic experiences).
- They may mistake The Red Pill as being the same as, or the moral equivalent of, the dark side of human nature and the rotten social ills that The Red Pill directly addresses.
- They may believe these human behaviors and social problems are only exacerbated by any attempts to struggle with them, and therefore view any involvement with The Red Pill as an exercise in futility.
- They may assume that any association with or mere contact with TRP can lead to one becoming inextricably involved and thereby becoming 'sullied' or 'tainted' as a consequence, similar to what might occur if one were directly involved with the worst problems that TRP addresses.
- Some of these individuals may recognize that The Red Pill creates an unfavorable reactance (a psychological phenomenon in which a person has a negative emotional reaction to being persuaded, and thus chooses the option which is being advocated against), but they fail to realize that they themselves are reactant to The Red Pill itself. The fact that reactance is a behavior characteristic of those who are immature or rebellious is telling.
- It is likely that they may have an inner voice telling them they'll be cursed or jinxed if they dive in too deep and taste of the sufferings therein, as if fearful of Friedrich Nietzsche's warning,

> “Whoever fights monsters should see to it that in the process he does not become a monster. And if you gaze long enough into an abyss, the abyss will gaze back into you.”

H/T: Info

Stalling Out

IMHO, if God has given one the ability to articulate the truth (i.e. the gifts of exhortation or teaching) then along with that comes the responsibility to share that truth with others, and as much as is humanly possible, to make sure they get it right. It is not right to avoid the dirtier aspects of the truth in an effort to evade the responsibilities involved, but rather, only when it is neither fitting nor helpful (1 Corinthians 6:12; 1 Corinthians 10:23). Again, courage, discernment, love, and wisdom are needed for this.

Thus, another motivation of those who wash their hands of all things Red Pill may be to avoid this responsibility, including the task of keeping their consciences and reputations clean and of not having any possible negative influence on others.

The problem with the [R-] approach is that it subjects their audiences to a subtle manipulation of opinion that (1) entertains the notion that there is a strong likelihood of failure (possibly by association or identification), (2) dwells on the end goal / results without addressing how to get there nor the probability of success, (3) alludes to or overemphasizes the worst possible outcome, and thereby (4) generates anxiety and a self-protective mode of responding, and (5) instills a fear of involvement or taking action.

Readers can avoid falling prey to such manipulation and the resulting analysis paralysis by (1) staying focused on one’s own sphere of influence, (2) maintaining their own frame, (3) breaking personal issues into smaller, more manageable goals, (4) developing more realistic steps that will eventually lead to success, and (5) finding encouragement through Bible study, fellowship, and prayer.

Conclusions

In summary of The Dirty Red Pill perspective [R-], in general, these men are circumspect, discerning, maintaining integrity, and sensitive to conscience, but they are also lacking confidence and depth of conviction. They are afraid or hesitant to use the salty cutting edge of the Sword of Truth. Perhaps they are also displaying a fear of partaking in the sufferings of others and/or succumbing to guilt or shame by association / identification.

Granted, it is not an easy task to undertake the truths surrounding fallen human nature, sexual immorality, impurity, moral filth, and sin without being disgraceful, lewd, 'unclean', nor vulgar. It is also not easy to speak of Red Pill truths without being associated with those Red Pilled men who participate in the deeds of darkness.

Related

- Σ Frame: What does it mean to be Unclean? (2018/12/2)
- Σ Frame: What does it mean to be Defiled? (2018/12/9)
- Σ Frame: The Red Pill and Blue Pill as Paradigms of Sanctification and Defilement (with a mathematical analogy) (2020/11/15)
- Σ Frame: Uncovering Nakedness (2023/12/16)
- Σ Frame: Christian Detachment is a Boundary (2024/1/16)
- Σ Frame: A Failure of Imagination (2024/5/20)
- Σ Frame: The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss (2024/6/5)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Rehab (2024/6/19)

The Purple Pill 1.0 [B+]

Jack · 10 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Mixing lies and truths according to one's preferred tastes — and fears.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Sectarianism / Socio-Political Misappropriation
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Intro

The Purple Pill is the third perspective of The Red Pill [B+] that I'll cover in this sub-topic. A list of other perspectives is given here.

Upon studying this a bit, I've found reason to differentiate between The Purple Pill as long-time readers have probably come to think of it (PP 1.0), and the current rendition of The Purple Pill (PP 2.0).

In this post, I'll provide a summary of The Purple Pill 1.0. The Purple Pill 2.0 will be covered in the next.

Much has already been written about the Purple Pill 1.0, so here I've collected some noteworthy quotes and added a few comments. [Emphasis mine.]

Cherry Picking

> "The reason many otherwise intelligent people often seem to behave foolishly, is because they have inaccurate maps of human nature, and the reason they have inaccurate maps of human nature is because they are not psychologically strong enough to handle the consequences of their own intelligence."
>
> *Illimitable Men: Truth & IQ – Street Smarts & Book Smarts (2024/3/17)

Purple Pillers will admit that The Blue Pill is largely delusional, and that the male-female behaviors described by The Red Pill are reality. However, they choose to rely on their own anecdotal authority and thereby combine elements of both the Red and Blue Pill sensibilities to support their own idealized views. They'll attempt to explain Red Pill observations in a more 'optimistic' way which, more often than not, panders to women's primacy.

The Purple Pill pops up when men cannot be fully honest with themselves when confronted with inconvenient Red Pill truths.

> "…men will use Red Pill awareness to either better (save) serve their lives by changing their minds about themselves and implementing it, or else they use that awareness to validate their preconceived belief-sets.

> Usually, they do this by cherry-picking the parts that align with those beliefs and discarding or disqualifying the data that conflicts with them. This is how you get the Purple Pill."
>
> The Rational Male: The Red Pill Path (2020/4/10)

In the context of religious faith, mixing lies and truths according to one's preferred tastes is essentially 'Buddy Jesus' or Coffee Shop Churchianity, which is the cultural and spiritual equivalent of Chinese folk religion or Daoism. Daoism, as it appears in common practice, is the sampling of whatever 'truths' one might come across, which are picked and chosen according to its relevance to one's individual interests and needs.

As one Taiwanese lady I once knew put it,

"A little bit of Buddha, a little bit of Jesus, a little bit of love, and a little piece of chocolate cake makes life good."

Westerners might express this sentiment as,

"A little bit of church, a little bit of feminism, a little bit of self-esteem, and a little piece of The Pie™ makes life good."

 H/T: Bardelys the Magnificent*
 The Pie™ = Materialistic abundance.*

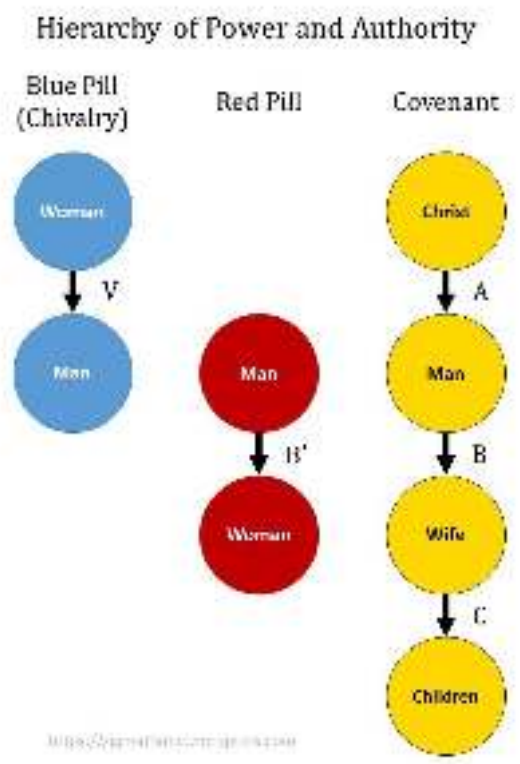
Inverted Structure

The fundamental error of The Purple Pill is that the inherent relational structure, whether in practice or merely cognition, is no different from that of a female dominated Blue Pill hierarchy.



> "…the classic definition of the Purple Pill is trying to apply Red Pill insights and praxeology to solve Blue Pill problems. In the context of a relationship, it is an inverted Blue hierarchy, but one in which the man is Red Pill informed and usually very confused. In some cases, the Purple Pill is a transition stage, AKA Purple Haze, in which a man wakes up to Red Pill reality, but is still living in a Blue Pill structure / system. It takes some time to realize that Blue Pill problems can never be solved without completely abandoning the Blue Pill system. Men usually don't complete the transition unless there is suffering involved, and the more suffering there is, the faster the transition is."
>
> Σ Frame: Does the Purple Structure Exist? (2023/10/21)

There are few who begin the Red Pill journey. There are fewer still who finish.

Male Angst and Victimization

Rollo Tomassi explained the predominant motivating pathology behind The Purple Pill as follows.

> "The Purple Pill coach believes that this Red Pill realization leads to men hating women. The second complaint I read from them is that Red Pill awareness gives men some license to feel like victims. This criticism is deductive to coaches for two reasons; it serves his 'get-rich-quick-on-the-internet-by-selling-sunshine' man-up and do better to qualify for women blog template, and it discourages men seeking answers from becoming Red Pill aware in a way that crushes their still Blue Pill belief set."
>
> "What the Purple Pill anger critics (deliberately) refuse to get is that the Red Pill isn't (and was never) intended to get men to hate women, but rather to inform men about the inherent nature of women so they won't hate women for what they can never be to them. This is the disillusionment that men who still cling to Blue Pill idealism can't seem to get past — they cannot abandon those Blue Pill hopes that they believe women are capable of fulfilling for them, but the Red Pill disabuses them of. So they get angry. They get angry at themselves for ever having believed in them. They get angry for having wasted so much time investing themselves in them. They get angry, most importantly, because they realize that women simply aren't built to fulfill the hopes his Blue Pill conditioning made him believe should be possible."

> "For the record, and as boldly as I can put this, if you are Red Pill aware man and still believe you are a victim of some sort because of your previous Blue Pill indenturement to pedestalizing women or the Feminine Imperative, you are only a victim of your own lack of vision."
>
> The Rational Male: To Each His Own (2017/9/11) Reblogged at Alpha Game: Purple vs Red (2017/9/14)

If this anger is not properly resolved, it leads to The Black Pill for the majority of men, and The Abyss at worst. (Read more.)

The Infiltration of Gynocentrism

The Purple Pill effectively reestablishes a Blue Pill mentality within social forums / groups.

> "When the influence of feminine-primacy is introduced into social settings made up mainly by men and male-interests, the dynamics and purpose of that group changes. The purpose becomes less about the endeavor itself and more about adherence to the feminine-inclusionary aspect of that endeavor. It starts to become less about being the best or most passionate at what they do, and more about being acceptable to the influence of the Feminine Imperative while attempting to maintain the former level of interest in the endeavor."
>
> "Once the feminine-primary in-group dynamic is established a 'feminine correct' social frame follows. This feminine correction restructures the priorities of goals, and validates any accomplishments, in terms of how they reflect upon the feminine as a whole. Thus any in-group success is perceived as a feminine success in male space, while in-group failures or simple mediocrity is either dismissed entirely or blamed on out-group men's failure to comply with, or the rejection of, the Feminine Imperative's 'correcting' influence on the in-group."
>
> The Rational Male: Male Space (2014/6/3). Also quoted in The Purple Pill (2015/11/10).

The primary danger of Purple Pill infiltration is that it tends to displace men's thoughts from that of a shared purpose to a predominant concern for social proprieties and posture posing for p00n, e.g. AMOGing, peacock preening, Wh!te Knighting, etc. In so much, it undercuts masculinity and destroys men's fellowship. This holds true even when no women are present.

Case Studies

There used to be a large number of Purple Pill life coaches, but they have long since fizzled since The Red Pill went mainstream and the popularity of the PP 1.0 mindset declined as a result.

I won't mention those that have faded, but a few of these life coaches have boned up into Red Pill proper and are thus to be commended. Among them are…

- Coach Greg Adams – Was rather milquetoast (IMO) until around 2018-19, and then became increasingly more Red Pill aware. These days, he is a highly respected RP voice in the Black Manosphere.
- Paul Elam – Initially focused on marriage and men's rights, he converted to Christianity and then turned to the task of reconciling Red Pill knowledge with Christianity.
- Anthony Johnson – Was a Purple Pill guru for ~9 years before he joined up with Rollo Tomassi at the 21 Convention. Since then he has become significantly more Red Pilled, but he has also become much less active in the sphere.

Again, there are few who begin the Red Pill journey. There are still fewer who finish.

Related

- The Rational Male: Could a Man have written this? (2011/11/8)
- Dalrock: Red Pill Bitterness (2013/3/23)
- The Rational Male: A New Hope (2014/9/29)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Overcoming the Anger Phase (2015/5/1)
- Donal Graeme: Getting Past Anger (2015/5/2)
- The Rational Male: The Purple Pill (2015/11/10).
- Σ Frame: Purple Haze (2017/11/9)

- Σ Frame: The intermediate goal is to get past the blinding obsession (2022/4/25)
- Σ Frame: The Lie of Romantic Love (2023/2/3)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Rules to love / live by were shaped by masculinity, but without masculinity they become garbage (2023/2/7)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Delusions of blue and purple and removing the haze (2023/10/22)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Selling Blue Pills Painted Red (2024/3/13)

The Purple Pill 2.0 [B+]

Jack · 12 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Will The Purple Pill expire with the Boomers?

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Sectarianism / Socio-Political Misappropriation
Length: 2,100 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes

Intro

The Purple Pill is the third perspective of The Red Pill [B+] which will be covered in this essay. A list of other perspectives is given here.

The Purple Pill as it was once known in ye olde Manosphere (PP 1.0) was surveyed previously. Here, I'll cover the current semblance of The Purple Pill (PP 2.0).

The Evolution of The Purple Pill

In summary of the previous post, The Purple Pill 1.0 originated in the Classic Manosphere as a moniker given to those who cherry-picked certain elements from both Blue and Red paradigms according to their notions of how things should be. In so doing, they rejected other aspects of the Blue Pill as false or misguided and other implications of The Red Pill as dirty, immoral, repulsive, or ugly. (Click link for more details and links.)

With increasing Red Pill awareness due to its going mainstream, and the increased social participation of Zoomers and the anticipation of budding Gen Alphas who are, or will be, respectively, navigating a drastically different sociosexual landscape than their predecessors, we don't see too many people trying to combine Blue Pill idealism with Red Pill reality anymore, at least not in formal discourse. Now the Red Pill lore is generally accepted and revered, though greenhorns may not delve into it nor take it seriously. Within this context, the old Purple Pill 1.0 mindset has become outdated and irrelevant. Even the Red Pill is now a tentative tutelage that is transitional in practice anymore, as it tends to channel individuals towards The Black Pill, nihilism, and/or The White Pill.

The Purple Pill 2.0

Rollo Tomassi alluded to the transmogrification of The Purple Pill in this essay from late 2015 — well over 8 years ago at the time of my writing.

> "In girl-world, what directly benefits women necessarily is presumed to benefit men, so what we'll see is a new wave of female bloggers bastardizing the world-worn ideas that the Manosphere has put together and repackaging it in a female context. It's Man Up 2.0; make a token push to "re-empower" men just enough for them to idealize the romanticism of the responsibilities required for living up to women's expectations."
>
> The Rational Male: Could a Man have written this? (2011/11/8), quoting The National Review (Mona Charen): Blame the Sexual Revolution not Men (2011/10/28), and quoted in The Purple Pill (2015/11/10).

Just as Rollo predicted (?), the "Man up!" talk has become ubiquitous today.

Rollo didn't go so far as to make a distinction between PP 1.0 and PP 2.0 as I am in the present essay, but the takeaway here is that the PP 2.0 is not new.

The Essence of The Purple Pill

Thus, for the purpose and scope of this essay, there are two defining, enduring, hallmark characteristics of The PP mindset that can be observed.

1. Prevarication — Juxtaposing delusions / lies with the truth to suit one's desires / fantasies / ideals / purposes. This often takes the form of compromised or converged belief / value systems.
2. Pedestalization — Pandering to female primacy / gynocentrism. This often adopts Feminist values and viewpoints.

It is just so today, both in the church and the wider culture. The new Purple Pill 2.0 consists of Churchians, Conservatives, and some Moderates who view the Bible as an authority, natural / scientific truths as self-evident, and/or Red Pill lore as culturally relevant and philosophically valuable; however, they'll cherry-pick and twist the knowledge therein to suit their own predetermined agendas, resulting in a defacto Purple Pill mindset.

In the remainder of this essay, I'll go over the secular and churchian manifestations of the PP mentality that exist today.

(Readers may note that I've chosen representative descriptors that begin with the letter P, and the acronym 'PP' which is humorously suggestive of the P!ss Poor escapism within The Purple Pill.)

Secular Purple Pill 2.0

There are a growing number of secular voices that are calling for civility and morality with an ever-reverberating intensity. But lurking behind all these didactic diatribes, there is a cognition that when men fail, women are most affected. It is preached that men should "Man up!" for the benefit of the culture and those most affected — women, without addressing the conditions that have made men invalid and incapable (in their eyes). Men are expected to be altruistically generous with their energy, re$ource$, and time, not for the benefit of being appreciated, honored, and valued as contributing pillars of society (which if truth be told, doesn't offer many incentives these days), but simply to make things easier for women — including the same women who have no sense of moral agency, duty, or loyalty to men — all without addressing the motivations that might inspire men to act thus.

Overall, we see cherry-picked data, facts, and opinions conveying the message, "Women are beautiful, empowered, noble, and strong; Men are angry, depressed, evil, inadequate, lost, pitiable, rejected, weak, wimpy wussies." And they'll throw in a buffer statement now and then to explain why they think they're doing men a service in saying so.

In all this dialogue, we see the same Prevarication and Pedestalization that existed in The PP 1.0, only translated and elevated to a culture-wide scale.

Some cultural PP ramparts that we've covered here on Σ Frame include…

- Christine Emba — Has the notion that men and women must 'rise together' — an acquiescent nod to feminist equality.
- David French – Believes that men should be good and moral and that the 'elite debate' over masculinity can be 'sidestepped' — a ploy to entice men to be more compliant with The Gynocracy™.
- Jemima Kelly – Characterizes men as cowards lacking backbone, praises cultural decay as 'expanding horizons', and criticizes weak men to such a degree that it appears as schadenfreude.

- Richard Reeves – Wrings his hands with pity for boys and men and encourages them to cry, seemingly unaware that this is not healthy for their own self-esteem.

Readers might suggest others.

Churchian Purple Pill 2.0

Evanjellyfish Churchianity has enjoyed a massive popularity over the past 3-4 decades, but is now gradually diminishing via increasing attrition to various secular modes of consciousness, e.g. atheism, hedonism, Gnosticism, Nihilism, etc. The Christian Manosphere has traditionally attributed this decline to the church's compromising convergence with the Feminist value system; but it is also because The Red Pill is gradually diffusing into public consciousness, and the church can no longer sustain the idealized Blue Pill / churchian delusions that made it appealing to past generations.

The recent movements in Evangelical Christianity regarding the merger of Complementarianism and Egalitarianism are a response to these shifts.

Also, pastors and other evangelical mouthpieces have continued to adapt and modernize Blue Pill Boomer theology by adding a token recognizance of cultural shifts while alluding to, and sometimes coopting Red Pill concepts according to their particular pet causes — all to appease the masses, tickle womens' ears, and reaffirm men's place of accountability to their female masters and 'better halves'.

Their false righteousness rests on the claim that they do not suffer the worst sorts of ressentimentalism and compromise with the surrounding secular culture, as some pseudo-churches have willfully committed, and which are too shameful to be named. This is a false comparison, as if to say, "A is true because it is not like B, which is false."

Thus, we see the two defining PP elements of Prevarication and Pedestalization.

All in all, churchianity is slowly morphing into Purple Pill Christianity. Church Inc. is hiking the trail that secular female bloggers blazed a decade ago (highlighted in Rollo's essay above) — and they're still wandering in the woods with nary a clue.

Unfortunately for Christianity, the PP pastors and other evangelical mouthpieces have not corrected course, despite repeated admonitions from the modern day prophets of the Christian Manosphere, but instead have modified their tune — and the scriptures — to appease the masses, according to their particular cause du jour for keeping men corralled in their subservient role of accountability to the female imperative.

Since Neo Calvinist Big Eva is a bellwether of trends within Western Protestantism, it is expected that cultural / popular notions of Christianity will soon follow suit.

Pastor Matt Chandler and his wife Lauren.

Some of the most prominent examples of The Churchian Purple Pill 2.0 are found among new order evangelical personalities. Noteworthy figures include…

- Pastor Matt Chandler, AKA "Mad Dog" — Encourages Christians to befriend g@ys; Holds the view that women naturally want to submit to 'godly men', and that if a wife is rebellious, then it's because her husband isn't 'godly' enough.
- Pastor Mark Driscoll, AKA "The only real man in the room" — Ridicules Christian men as Chauvinist cowards, telling them "Man up and marry [a promiscuous woman]!"; Co-opted Manosphere / MRA fundamentals, even 'purified' forms of Game, in his appeals for men to 'servant lead' their wives better.
- Sheila Gregoire – Teaches that men can make their wives' lives better by taking some of the 'mental burden' off of their wives' leadership and adulating them.
- Russell Moore — Consumed with the task of combining the false doctrines of Complementarianism and Egalitarianism in order to consolidate these two warring factions of the church and prevent it from dying.
- Owen Strachan – Holds the view that men's interests are subservient to women's interests, and argues that the motivating reason why men's interests should receive any attention is for women's benefit.

(Those who have read Dalrock will recognize some of these names, as he often wrote of their cultural convergence and doctrinal divergence.)

Sniffing Out the PP

In general, Christian Headship is compromised in that female hypoagenticity is affirmed (a subtle form of gynocentric pedestalization) and the onus of responsibility is placed on men, thus signifying the two hallmarks of The Purple Pill.

Although PP mouthpieces may have a valid point at times, you won't hear any appeals phrased with honor nor respect towards men. You see, that would not be sufficiently obsequious for the refined taste of PP.

Some typical attitudes and statements that are representative of the leaned back PP stance are as follows.

- "Man up!"
- "Don't give up!"
- "What is bad for women is bad for men too."
- "What is good for women is good for men too."
- Expressions akin to "Be more responsible so that she doesn't have to be."
- A 'godly man' continues to mean the classic altruistic Chivalrous Nice Guy™.
- "If you really love her then you'll consider her feelings, respect her boundaries, etc."
- "A 'godly man' will step up to the challenge (to serve wimminz whims) without complaining or succumbing to bitterness or resentment."
- "If your wife doesn't submit to you, then it's your fault, because you're just not 'godly' enough, or loving her enough, or leading her well enough, etc."

This is the new-old tune being chanted by new order evangelical pastors and cultural mouthpieces, as we've covered in several posts over the past year.

- Christianity and Masculinity: Help versus approval and the complementarian bait and switch (2023/2/11)
- Christianity and Masculinity: The Chosen sabotaging Christian husbands (2023/4/15)
- Christianity and Masculinity: What the Church and The Chosen should be teaching (2023/4/20)
- Σ Frame: The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)

- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Churchianity's Red Pill Equivalents (2023/9/11)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Heads in the Sand (2023/11/3)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Rewriting the Script for a Kinder, Gentler Feminism (2023/11/10)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Skirting around the Skirts (2023/11/24)
- Σ Frame: Strachan's Strafe (2023/11/25)
- The Orthosphere (Alan Roebuck): Christian Reconquista: Retaking the Mainline Denominations (2023/11/28)
- Σ Frame: The Sacred Cow (2023/12/1)
- The Orthosphere (Alan Roebuck): More About That Reconquista Thing… (2023/12/5)
- Σ Frame (Alexei Karamazov): Case Study: The Problem of Female Pastors in the Church (2023/12/14)
- Bruce Charlton: This-worldly pseudo-Christians cannot tolerate anything pessimistic, because that makes them feel despair (2023/12/18)
- Bruce Charlton: Self-blinded optimism and Christian convergence with The System (2023/12/19)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Lie of Female Hypoagency (2024/4/1)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Mark Driscoll is back – and with a new book 'Act like a Man' (2024/7/3)

Conclusions

The pusillanimous Purple Pill 1.0 is gone, but the pussyfoot essence of the PP remains, more diffuse and yet more widespread than ever.

Wrestling with the truth will always be a work in progress, and the stench of PP may never fade away entirely, but the light of truth will melt the ~~yellow snow~~ fearful heart and refresh and vitalize the grass roots. Let it be sufficient for us to receive God's grace if we can stop pedestalizing women and return to the Christ : Church :: Husband : Wife Parallel, AKA Headship.

Let us pray to hasten the day when The Purple Pill will eventually breathe its last deceptive breath of glowifide gynosupplicating praise, which will occur when a new form of Patriarchal Headship within Christianity takes shape. Then history will show that The Purple Pill was predominantly the micturitions of a Boomer hangover — the gynocentric philosophy of an evil generation.

Related

- Michael Catt: The Danger of Mixing Truth and Error (2013/1/4)
- The Rational Male: A New Hope (2014/9/29)
- Σ Frame: The Lie of Romantic Love (2023/2/3)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Rules to love / live by were shaped by masculinity, but without masculinity they become garbage (2023/2/7)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Delusions of blue and purple and removing the haze (2023/10/22)

Default Purple Pill [B+]

Jack · 14 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The Purple Pill is human nature.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Sectarianism / Socio-Political Misappropriation
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Introduction

In the previous post, The Purple Pill 2.0 (2024/7/12), I observed that…

> "With increasing Red Pill awareness due to its going mainstream, and the increased social participation of Zoomers and the anticipation of budding Gen Alphas who are, or will be, respectively, navigating a drastically different sociosexual landscape than their predecessors, we don't see too many people trying to combine Blue Pill idealism with Red Pill reality anymore, at least not in formal discourse. Now the Red Pill lore is generally accepted and revered, though greenhorns may not delve into it nor take it seriously. Within this context, the old Purple Pill 1.0 mindset has become outdated and irrelevant. Even the Red Pill is now a tentative tutelage that is transitional in practice anymore, as it tends to channel individuals towards The Black Pill, nihilism, and/or The White Pill."

I went on to identify two defining, enduring, hallmark characteristics of The PP mindset:

1. Prevarication
2. Female Pedestalization

However, some ideas brought up in the comments led me to realize there are other ways to describe and/or assess the PP mentality, and that the essence of PP will continue to endure indefinitely.

Mental Fragility

Bardelys the Magnificent shared this article from Illimitable Men.

> "The reason many otherwise intelligent people often seem to behave foolishly, is because they have inaccurate maps of human nature, and the reason they have inaccurate maps of human nature is because they are not psychologically strong enough to handle the consequences of their own intelligence."
>
> "When intelligent people are mentally fragile, they misuse their intelligence to build ever more elaborate delusions which reject reality with a coherent but untrue logic set. Meaning they self-construct or buy into a framework which is coherent within its own closed system, but does not survive contact with reality because it is foolish and thereby untrue. Ergo they are logical (a sign of intelligence), but not accurate in the application of that logic (and thus foolish)."
>
> Illimitable Men: Truth & IQ – Street Smarts & Book Smarts (2024/3/17)

Illimitable Men doesn't go so far as to label this foolishness and mental fragility 'Purple Pill', but this is essentially the cause of the PP mentality.

Emotional Fragility

In addition to being mentally fragile, humans are also emotionally fragile. We could substitute 'emotionally' for 'mentally' in the above IM excerpts, and it would be no less true.

That is…

The reason many otherwise emotionally healthy people often seem to behave foolishly, is because they have unhealthy mechanisms of self-interest and self-preservation that are inherent in human nature, and the reason they have these defense mechanisms is because they are not emotionally strong enough to handle the harsher consequences of their own good consciences.

When otherwise mature people are emotionally fragile, they misuse their moral compass to build ever more elaborate delusions which reject reality with a coherent but untrue system of values and ethics. Meaning, they self-construct or buy into a framework of morality which is coherent within its own closed system, but does not bring about God's blessings and truth because it compromises with Worldly lies and/or the sinful nature and is thereby untrue. Ergo they are emotional (a sign of spiritual vitality), but not faithful in the application of those emotions (and thus foolish).

Case Studies

We see examples of this emotional / mental fragility and the resulting foolishness everywhere.

- True Christianity is the ultimate RP which most cannot swallow.
- BGR is totally RP about marriage, but no one can accept that in practice.
- Jim is totally Red Pill about Patriarchal Authority, but too few men have the gumption to hold the line like he does with the women in their lives.
- Churchianity is preferred by Worldly Christians who are simply unworthy of Patriarchal Headship.
- The same goes with the SMP. People want just enough Purple Pill / Worldly compromise to make it palatable to their fleshly desires and to suit their individual interests.
- Radix Fidem is totally Biblical about building faith-based feudal communities, but everyone is like "WTF?"
- Vox Day is totally Red Pill about civilization and politics, but too few men have the snuff to meet the demands of that system on a mass scale.
- Sharkly is totally Biblical / Red Pill about employing c@p!t@l punishment for the betterment of the community (and the gene pool), as specified by the Noahic Law*, but people shudder at the thought of adopting that in practice.

 Sharkly added clarification below.*

The bottom line is that people would rather wander in the relative comfort zone of la la land than to pull themselves together and do what would be necessary to make life worth living.

The authors above, and those who believe their ideas, might dismiss those who cannot accept these ideas as emotionally / mentally fragile, while those who reject these ideas might say that these authors are unnecessarily cruel, 'deplorable', heartless, medieval, and/or 'unrealistic'.

Upon seeing this dichotomy of belief, you'll see that there's another way to assess the PP mentality in terms of awareness.

Ignorant PP vs Willful PP

With increased knowledge at our fingertips, most people are somewhat acquainted with both the Blue and Red paradigms. The Red Pill is also bringing a greater popular awareness of Biblical injunctions to those who are unchurched.

With greater awareness of these truths, passive ignorance gives way to willful ignorance. This entails that Purple Pillers can no longer sit on the fence and/or feign ignorance and will therefore be held accountable in the spiritual realm if not the social.

That said, we must discern whether a person is Purple Pilled out of ignorance, or if he/she is fully aware of what it means to be righteous and is willfully compromising on certain aspects of living out the truth.

Josh Duhamel and Jennifer Lopez star in Shotgun Wedding (2022).

Awareness makes a HUGE difference in how PP is to be properly assessed!

To make this distinction more obvious to the reader, we might draw an analogous comparison to the difference between a baby wetting its diaper, and a bratty kid p!ssing on the living room carpet. In the former situation, the more mature person should take responsibility to sort out the confusion and deal with the mess. In the latter case, the proper response is to discipline or punish the Purple Pilling individual by drawing boundaries, stating expectations, and so on.

A responsive action is necessary, because PP tends to have a leavening effect, as can be seen with churchians corrupting the atmosphere of a church with shame tactics, or the presence of PP commenters altering the tone of an online forum to be more gynocentric.

Conclusions

The Prevarication and Female Pedestalization inherent in The Purple Pill are reminiscent of the human affinity for falsehoods and pandering to women that occurred in the Garden of Eden — and have been with us ever since. Thus, the Purple Pill is rooted in a psychological phenomenon resulting from weaknesses that are endemic to the fallen human nature.

From this broader mystical perspective, all of humanity is plagued with the Purple Pill of sin and always will be, simply because of this chasm between human weakness and the total obedience to the letter of the law that would be required to correct said weakness.

The PP problem cannot be very well solved with a top-down regulatory approach. The Catholic Church has tried this approach (with marriage) and it has failed miserably. Just as with trying to conform to the Mosaic Law, frail humanity doesn't have the emotional and psychological constitution to courageously face reality, and neither are humans able to bear the draconian measures necessary to either implement pure hard doctrine or go full Red Pill.

However, people do have the capability to learn and improve to some extent, and this is even more possible with an increased awareness of the truth.

Since everyone is susceptible to the emotional and mental compromise that is inherent in The Purple Pill, wisdom, grace, and tough love are required in dealing with people of varying degrees of Biblical / Red Pill awareness.

Related

- The Rational Male: The Purple Pill (2015/11/10).
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28)
- Σ Frame: Does the Purple Structure Exist? (2023/10/21)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Delusions of blue and purple and removing the haze (2023/10/22)

Trump's Near Miss is a Hit

Jack · 16 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Comments and recent coverage of the @ss@ss!n@t!0n attempt on President Donald Trump.

Readership: All
Theme: Special Post
Length: ~500 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes + 2 videos totaling 9 minutes

Since this weekend, we've heard some amazing history-making news about the attempted @ss@ss!n@t!0n on Trump on 2024/7/13 — how a bullet grazed his ear, but otherwise left him unscathed — plus, his fist-pumping rally of strength, shouting "Fight", with Old Glory in the backdrop was the substance of legends.

Despite his personal failures and foibles, Donald Trump is a paragon of courage, determination, indomitability, and leadership. The man has endured constant slanderous media attacks, false allegations, arrest and criminal charges, politically motivated court indictments, convictions, impeachment, FBI searches and seizures, a r!gged election, and now this.

A while back, Ed Hurst prophesied that Trump would win in the courts [Archive]. This has come to pass — again.

The nations' response is that Trump is now more popular than ever. His reelection is sealed.

These developments make it crystal clear that everything the Left has been saying about Trump is classic psychological projection, i.e. Trump is presumed to be guilty of the same offenses that the Left is already doing.

Moreover, it looks like Trump is 'covered'. My personal belief about Trump is that he is a type of Cyrus (or Darius) — a powerful worldly leader that God uses for His purposes. May his continued leadership drain the last remaining cesspools of the Deep State Swamp and preserve the faithful.

The member of the crowd killed in the assassination attempt on Donald Trump has been identified as Corey Comperatore, a retired fire chief from Pennsylvania

Our sincere condolences to the family of Corey Comperatore, the brave man who was k!lled while protecting his family during this event. May his death be a reminder to us that freedom isn't free.

Update: Joker at Better Bachelor honored Comperatore with a full video broadcast.

The remainder of this post is a collection of links and quotes about this event.

Readers are invited to share any thoughts or insights they may have about Trump and/or this event. Please keep comments objective.

About the Ass@ss!n@t!0n Attempt on Trump

From The New York Post:

- Former President Donald Trump was targeted by a sh00ter during a campaign rally in Pennsylvania.
- Trump's face was grazed by a bullet during the sh00t!ng.
- The gunm@n and one bystander have been k!lled.
- President Biden addressed the nation and referred to the sh00t!ng as sick, saying he "tried to get ahold of Donald".
- Exclusive: First photos of Th0mas M@tthew Cr00ks emerge after @ss@ss!n@t!0n attempt.
- Donald Trump urges the nation to not let 'evil win' and 'fear not' after sh00t!ng.
- World leaders condemn 'political violence' at Trump rally: 'Can't take anything for granted'.

The Don's statement after the sh00t!ng [Source]

> "I want to thank The United States Secret Service, and all of Law Enforcement, for their rapid response on the sh00t!ng that just took place in Butler, Pennsylvania. Most importantly, I want to extend my condolences to the family of the person at the Rally who was k!lled, and also to the family of another person that was badly injured. It is incredible that such an act can take place in our Country. Nothing is known at this time about the sh00ter, who is now dead. I was sh0t with a bullet that pierced the upper part of my right ear. I knew immediately that something was wrong in that I heard a whizzing sound, sh0ts, and immediately felt the bullet ripping through the skin. Much bleeding took place, so I realized then what was happening. GOD BLESS AMERICA!"

The Rageaholic (RazörFist): TRUMP: Faster Than a Speeding Bullet – Razör Rants (2024/7/14) Length: 6:16

Update: In March, 2024, Brandon Biggs prophesied of the @ss@ss!n@t!0n attempt on Trump.

Last Days: Prophecy that came to pass, trump's ear (2024/7/14) Length: 3 minutes

The original video is here, dated 2024/3/15. If Biggs is this precise about the attempted @ss@ss!n@t!0on, I think it's worth paying attention to him. Of note, in the earlier video, he foretells of an economic depression that will probably happen 1-2 years from now. Those who have ears to hear will take this time to make plans and prepare.

Noteworthy Articles about the Incident

- Biblical Signs: 5777: Year of the Rapture? (2016/9/9)
- Fox News: Assassination attempt on Trump at Pennsylvania rally leaves 2 hurt, 2 dead, including shooter (2024/7/13)
- The New York Post: Thomas Matthew Crooks ID'd as gunman who shot Trump during Pa. rally (2024/7/13)
- The Babylon Bee: CNN: 'Clumsy Trump Hits Head On Bullet' (2024/7/13)
- The Babylon Bee: Trump Safe, Leaving Only One Dead Candidate (2024/7/13)
- The Babylon Bee: Trump Indicted For Inciting Assassination Attempt (2024/7/13)
- Vox Popoli: Attempted Assassination of Trump at Rally (2024/7/13)
- Practical Eschatology: Assasination Attempt On Donald Trump (2024/7/13)
- Politico: After Trump Shooting, America Reverts to Blaming the Other Side (2024/7/14)
- Biblical Signs: "It Was God Alone": Former President Trump Survives Assassination Attempt at Pennsylvania Rally (2024/7/14)
- Shadow to Light: Thoughts on Trump (2024/7/14)
- The Other McCain: Trump Rally Gunman ID'd as 20-Year-Old Math Geek Thomas Matthew Crook (2024/7/14)
- Wintery Knight: Hate Speech: Democrat Party Biden Incites Violence: "Put Trump In A Bullseye" (2024/7/14)
- A Lady of Reason: And Yet, He Still Stands: A Moment of Reckoning (2024/7/14)
- Amerika: Diversity Watch (July 14, 2024) (2024/7/14)
- Didactic Mind: They tried to kill the King (2024/7/14)
- PA Pundits International: Tested By Fire: The 2 Seconds That Define Donald Trump (2024/7/14)
- PA Pundits International: CNN After Apparent Assassination Attempt: Trump 'Falls' At Rally (2024/7/14)
- Vox Popoli: The Trump Rally Story (2024/7/14)
- Simplicius: SPECIAL BULLETIN: America Teeters on the Abyss (2024/7/14)
- Sigma Game: Portrait of an Alpha (2024/7/14)
- Kentucky Headhunter" All I'm Going To Say About It (2024/7/14)
- Zero Hedge: Trump Gunman Reported To Be Thomas Matthew Crooks (2024/7/15)
- The Mainframe: Rorschach Test du Jour (2024/7/14)
- The New York Post: How Trump's split-second head turn may have saved his life from assassin's bullet (2024/7/14)
- Amerika (Brett Stevens): Bastille Day (2024/7/14)
- Vox Popoli: Aware of the Risks (2024/7/15)
- Nikkei Asia: Xi Jinping expresses sympathies to Donald Trump after shooting (2024/7/15)
- The Portly Politico: We Are All Deplorables Now (2024/7/15)
- Radix Fidem: The Implications of Divine Covering (2024/7/16)

Related

- Σ Frame: ¡Popcorn Science and the News! (2015/9/15)
- Σ Frame: Trump Appeals to Dignity, Not Racism (2016/3/7)
- Σ Frame: Signs of the Times (2018/3/2)
- Σ Frame: The Trump Look (2018/6/15)
- Σ Frame: Buckle Down for the Ride of the Centuries (2018/8/9)
- Σ Frame: Why is Citizenship Unquestionable? (2018/11/10)
- Σ Frame: Yankee Stay Home! (2019/2/12)
- Σ Frame: Paul Harvey “If I were the devil” (2019/8/24)
- Σ Frame: Bards, Jesters, and Kings (2019/10/6)
- Σ Frame: Cucks won the battle, but Deplorables won the war. (2020/5/1)
- Σ Frame: Cancel my views for what we call the News (2020/7/13)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review — The Rear View Mirror (2020/10/2)
- Σ Frame: You have to leave Murika to get the Real News (2020/11/3)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – Religion, Sex, Politics (2020/11/30)
- Σ Frame: Pandora’s Pendulum (2022/7/8)
- Σ Frame: Testosterone Makes Men more Punitive and also more Generous (2023/8/26)

Nifty Shifty Red Pill Grifty [B$]

Jack · 18 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Top shelf, turn-key label sells like hotcakes. Stick 'Red Pill' on ANYTHING to get more clicks, views, and $$$! Get it TODAY! This offer won't last long!

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Infighting / Sectarianism / Socio-Political Misappropriation
Author's Note: Based on email correspondence between Jack and Lexet between 2019-2021.
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Intro

In this post, I'll cover the fourth perspective of The Red Pill [B$]: Men and women, be they Christian or Churchian or secular, who view the Red Pill as economically or sociologically valuable, and hijack it to suit their own marketing strategy, often accompanied by a sensationalistic consortium of 'ideological products'.

A list of other perspectives is given here.

Counterfeit Prescriptions and Dishonest Advertising

For a brief period of time around 2019-2020, The Red Pill was seen as an emerging countercultural trend. Controversial enough to provoke outrage, solid enough to be revered, it was perfect for sensationalistic marketing to quietly rebellious, vicarious thrill seekers — thus fitting the mass public interest in casual online browsing.

There was a common pattern that occurred on the internet at that time, and has continued ever since, particularly on YouTube. Hogwarts hoping to find a fast track to fame adopted a Red Pill label and a few RP talking points, presumably for the notoriety, and then used it to catapult themselves to a certain level of popularity. But once they achieved a threshold momentum, they pivoted away from Red Pill content, denouncing Red Pill tenets in favor of appealing to a broader audience.

Black Label Logic's post, What is the Red Pill? (2019/6/12) [Archive], is a must read on this topic. He cites two other posts as significant.

- Rian Stone: Playboys, Alpha males and 'Real Men': Manipulative container words, or; Women's Tools Adopted to male sensibilities (2019/4/29) [Archive]
- Troy Francis: Reclaiming the Red Pill (2019/6/4) [Does anyone have an archive?]

At that time, the personalities who did this were called 'infiltrators' [1]. One noteworthy development here was that there were a lot of female infiltrators. Now, there have always been a lot of female infiltrators in Red Pill men's spaces, but most of them didn't last long and were eventually booed out or booted out. But in this time frame, there appeared a great many more so called "Red Pilled women" who were more or less independent of ye olde Red Pill sphere. They would wear bright makeup, long hair, and form-fitting clothing to cash in on the male gaze, and parrot RP talking points for ears hungry to hear male opinions in a sweetly affirming female voice. They would NOT interact with the established RP voices, and those that did got demolished pretty fast [2,3].

This mass influx of these new voices led to a degradation of integrity. So much so that many members of the sphere were calling for a criterion to be used for judging content labeled 'Red Pill' — "How do we know who is truly Red Pill?" This question continues to percolate. (I addressed this question more recently here.)

Criterion for Judging the Authenticity of Red Pill Content Producers

Jesus illustrated how this works.

> [1] "Most assuredly, I say to you, he who does not enter the sheepfold by the door, but climbs up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. [2] But he who enters by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. [3] To him the doorkeeper opens, and the sheep hear his voice; and he calls his own sheep by name and leads them out. [4] And when he brings out his own sheep, he goes before them; and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice. [5] Yet they will by no means follow a stranger, but will flee from him, for they do not know the voice of strangers."
>
> John 10:1-5 (NKJV)

Here, Jesus was speaking about Himself and his disciples, but the same dynamics apply to any socio-philosophical circle or in-group.

This is exactly how things have worked in the RP sphere in the past. RP contributors have always needed to stand on their own feet by virtue of their contribution. They only had to publish a nice selection of posts or videos, and by virtue of the content, they would, over time, be accepted as part of the RP sphere.

Moreover, Based and RP voices must build up a track record and establish some level of rapport with their constituents. They must have some fruits by which they can be judged (Matthew 7:15-20).

Thus, if a content producer is truly RP, then they wouldn't need to infiltrate (according to the old definition [1]). Any blogger, commenter, or content producer who attempts to infiltrate or assimilate by coopting the 'Red Pill' label is attempting to change the nature of the RP, whether intentionally or not. This holds true today (for either definition of 'infiltrator' [1]).

Case Study — George Bruno

As an example of the infiltrator phenomenon, George Bruno [Website; YouTube; IG] made this pivot (in early 2019?) after he posted several videos on rebranding one's self. First, he made himself a go-to guy for male fashion, particularly with beard trimming, etc. Then he began aligning himself with MGTOW. At the beginning of 2019, he joined the 21 Convention. Later when the 21 Convention split, he aligned and stayed with the founder, while the old school RP guys who made the 21 Convention famous (e.g. Rollo Tomassi) bailed out. After that, the 21 Convention started peddling a very different message — one that didn't become obvious until the 22 Convention.

George Bruno, front and center. How many others can you identify?

Some might simply view Bruno as an independent personality marketing his own image and following the $$$ trail (in which he may very well be pursuing his express purpose, as we advise men to do here), while some RP purists might view Bruno as a sellout. That Bruno has apparently coopted the RP label for his own benefit suggests both views are true. Readers are welcome to debate whether Bruno's stance is a good role model for men.

But Bruno's story gets more interesting. The Bible Thumping Wingnut ministry hosted a ministry event and featured George Bruno as a keynote speaker.

Now why would a "Christian Discernment" ministry yoke themselves with a secular commentator? Granted, the Christian Red Pill sphere was not yet a distinct, well-formed entity at that time. (It still isn't by some estimations.) And Christian Red Pillers often cite words of wisdom from secular Red Pillers. But Bruno wasn't even presenting himself as a Christian.

- He is a professional actor.
- Bruno stated he is “neutral” towards his player past (as of 2017/12/8).
- He is a salesman for pheromone soap, with the stated purpose of pickup game.
- His videos are a bit sketchy and lacking in substance, hence his constant transformations to stay relevant in his quest for more views.
- He recommends men NOT to get married. Of course, this is a question that continues to be addressed in the Manosphere (and perhaps always will), but do you suppose he is a chaste, virtuous MGTOW?

Readers may like to debate the wisdom of a Church Ministry inviting secular speakers.

Conclusions

The outstanding problem with people coopting the Red Pill brand for their own personal agendas is that by doing so, they transform RP lore into emasculated milquetoast at best (e.g. female producers), and/or converge it with Feminism / Gynocentrism at worst (i.e. the 22 Convention).

Similarly, the intent of “Christians” using the Red Pill for gain is also questionable. Is their adoption of RP talking points merely to make Churchianism more cool and/or relevant? Is their focus on the Red Pill audience predatory? That is, they recognize some of these men are weak and in need. Are they making efforts to minister to these men, or are they merely preying on their weaknesses to expand their consumer base?

Heavy condemnation awaits those who think they can buy God’s favor, or who attempt to use the gospel for monetary gain. I would guess the same applies for ‘bootcamps’ and ‘ministries’ that sell RP as a commodity jacked up on false hopes and promises. “Just do X, Y, and Z, and you’ll find your soul mate / get hot chicks banging on your door at 3:00 a.m. / have a submissive unicorn Trad Wife!”

A fundamental truth is reduced to clickbait. Once sensationalized, the core truth is marginalized as spurious.
The question we can ask ourselves is, why would Christians, or male fashionistas, or women, or anybody else for that matter, be trying to infiltrate the RP sphere?

1. Do they want RP to get more mainstream exposure and acceptance?
2. Do they want to promote their own brand or ministry by hijacking the RP and tailoring it to serve their purposes?
3. Do they aim to water down the basic truths of TRP to make it more 'female-friendly' and thus less incisive to men?
4. Do they intend to cause confusion and disruption in order to take out what's left of the Manosphere?

Keep in mind that there is a concerted, ponored effort by a lot of powerful entities to pull off the latter.

Notes

1. The meaning of 'infiltrator' has changed since 2020. Today, the word 'infiltrator' is understood as someone who fits #4 in the above list — that is, one who frequents RP forums for the purpose of subtly disrupting or shifting the convo, and does so for as long as they can before they're detected.
2. For an example, see the Case Study of RealFemSapien in Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28).
3. There have been a very select few female content producers who did interact with established RP figures and were able to stand their ground, so to speak, at least enough to not get sent home in shame; e.g. Pearl Davis (JustPearlyThings). Some female content producers have avoided scrutiny by ministering exclusively to women; e.g. Karen Seitz (The Happy Wife School).

Related

- Uncharted Father: The Purity Test [Archive] (2019/12/22)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Frauds in Christ's Name (2020/10/12)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Charting the Red Pill World (2021/3/26)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Red Pill Grifters (2021/4/7)

- Σ Frame: Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28)
- Σ Frame: A Degradation of Integrity (2024/3/11)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Selling Blue Pills Painted Red (2024/3/13)

Red Pill Bad! [B-]

Jack · 20 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

The truth is ugly, and ugliness is NOT acceptable! [Clutching pearls.]

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Infighting / Sectarianism / Socio-Political Misappropriation
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 4.5 minutes

Intro

> "There is currently a movement known as "red pill" that is handicapping young people and dooming them to a lifetime of failed relationships."
>
> ~ A line copied and shared all over the internet. Origin apparently from DarkMatter2525: The Red Pill Lie (2023/6/15).

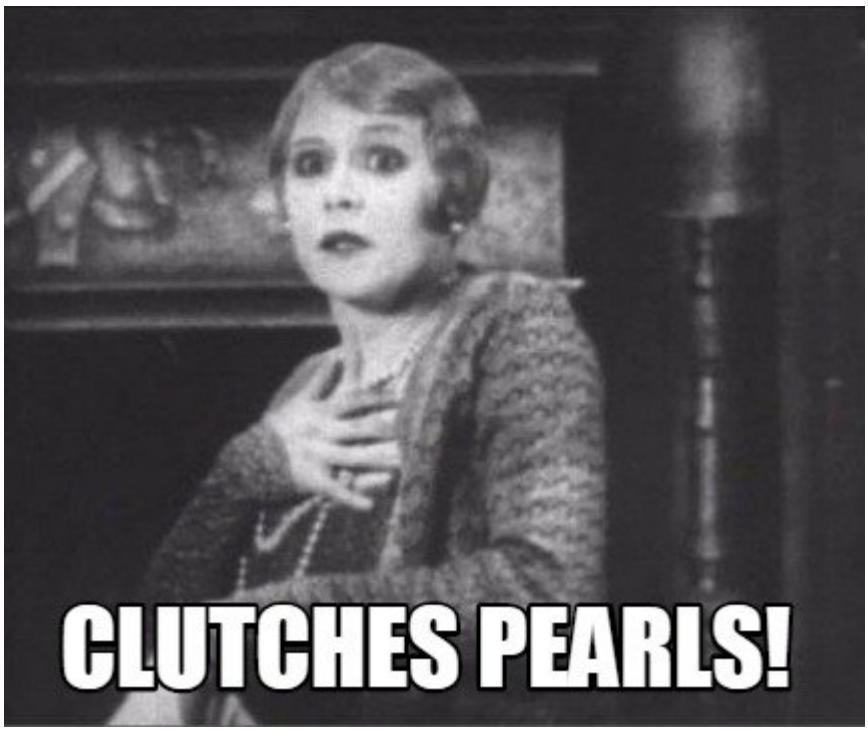
In this post, I'll cover the fifth perspective of The Red Pill [B-]: Those who view The Red Pill as a community of [insert slur] radicals.

A list of other perspectives is given here.

Characteristics of 'Red Pill Bad!' Soundboxes

There are many types of people of all different backgrounds that have a profusely negative estimation of The Manosphere / Red Pill. It would be an elusive task to try to describe them as a single group. However, they do share a spectrum of characteristics which I'll list here. As a disclaimer to the statistically inept, not everyone who denigrates the RP has ALL of these traits, but they will have some. I'll guesstimate that if someone has at least 10 of the following traits, then it is highly likely that they'll also have a strong distaste for all things RP.



Voices roundly condemning The Red Pill share many of the following characteristics.

1. Claim to be happily married for decades but are atypically evasive or silent about their married life.
2. Claim to have mastered the secrets to relationship success.
3. Civilizationists who object to the nihilistic influence of The Red Pill.
4. View traditional conservatism as a cultural fantasy, a religious delusion, and/or a socioeconomic lifestyle fetish.
5. Profess to be conscientious / mystical / spiritual, but not 'religious', which may be code for 'humanitarian'.
6. Critical of organized religion, often describing it as 'controlling' or 'oppressive'.
7. View authoritarianism as corrupt and/or destructive.
8. Regard controlling organized religion and corrupt authoritarianism as intimate bedfellows.
9. Regard both religion and The Red Pill as highly orchestrated methods of population control and/or social regulation.
10. Associate Headship with authoritarianism and/or organized religion, i.e. Christianity, and thus view it negatively.
11. Claim that the link between The Red Pill and The God Pill is a lie intended to whitewash the darker implications of taking the Red Pill and/or to attract conservative religiosos.
12. Associate The Red Pill with criminal entities, grifters, !ncəls, mass mŭrdərərs, Pickup Artists, p!mps, players, psychopaths, etc.
13. Point to the fact that many Red Pill gurus are autistic, bitter, divorced, jaded, jilted, 'm!s0gyn!sts', polysexual, polymath misfits, etc., and then state that it's unwise to take relationship advice from such men.
14. Recommend or are empathic towards divorce for relationships that are 'emotionally abusive', 'excessively controlling', and/or "are just not working out".
15. Will sympathize with Feminism / Gynocentrism on select points related to individual freedoms or the wellbeing of women.
16. Generally view women as hypoagentic / lacking agency but also dependent on men.
17. Tend to be either financially successful enough or socially isolated enough to enjoy being emotionally and financially insulated from the more egregious social problems of modern society.

Readers will note that there is a general aversion to authority, organized religion, and headship. This is no coincidence, as the recognition of hierarchy is an important hallmark of The Red Pill (and Christian faith). In fact, this aversion to authority / Headship is what clued me in to this as being a central tenet of The Red Pill, as I explained in a previous post, Red Pill Authenticity: The Spirit of Headship (2023/4/28). It is also worth mentioning that trust in authority is central to faith — our trust in God.

Comprehensive Summary

In sum…

The Red Pill cuts through all the false hopes, illusions, polite pleasantries, and pretty lies, and bites into the raw truth of things. But 'Red Pill Bad!' types cannot accept the fact that the truth is often dirty, inconvenient, unpleasant, and ugly, no matter how true it may be, so 'Red Pill Bad!' types will regard it as bad, 'unclean', detrimental, dirty, and defiling.

'Red Pill Bad!' types see themselves as pure and righteous, and are therefore focused on defending and maintaining their own comfort zones. They are afraid that the truths of The Red Pill might rip off their pearls of propriety and leave their souls naked.

'Red Pill Bad!' types cannot admit the possibility that the uglier aspects of the truth also apply to them personally. Their only concept of truth is the warm fuzzy, milk and honey, land of plenty stuff. They'll reject anything contrary to this.

For this reason, 'Red Pill Bad!' types like to expose all the downsides and negatives of The Red Pill and then reject it out of hand — without going to the extra effort required to put it all together to understand why things are the way they are.

'Red Pill Bad!' types cannot imagine the possibility that the worst sorts of failures might be instructive of the most common intricacies problematic of relationships; viz. The Dirtier the Dispenser, the Purer the Red Pill.

'Red Pill Bad!' types might express sympathy for those experiencing personal and/or relationship difficulties, but then they'll brush over them as debased, inconsequential, and/or irrelevant. "Low-lifes get what they deserve, and it's none of my concern." They routinely fail to see and/or reject ministry opportunities, presumably because of their hesitancy to get their hands dirty, or fears of becoming defiled by association.

Commentaries

The prevalence of this impression might be explained by simply stating that the Manosphere / Red Pill has a marketing problem — a point that Bardelys the Magnificent has brought up many times lately.

In addition to this, many individuals exhibit a general inability to swallow the bitterest morsels of truth, as Feeriker wrote,

> "It's been asserted in other parts of the 'sphere before (at Dalrock's?) that some people are simply incapable of either understanding or accepting Red Pill truths, and that women are first and foremost among these. Even those rare women who do gain some insight into and understanding of RP truths and actually attempt to live their own lives in sympathy with these truths eventually find the bitter, powerful reality of them too much to absorb and retreat from them. What we here once referred to as "The Manosphere Ladies' Auxiliary" is a good illustration of this. Those few women who were once members and who contributed content to manosphere blog discussions on a semi-regular basis in the past are now gone. This ultimately is not surprising, but it certainly is illustrative of the chasmic differences in the ability of the two sexes to process and adapt to reality."

Related

- Σ Frame: A dull shave gets tossed (2019/1/24)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/5)
- Σ Frame: A Failure of Imagination (2024/5/20)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Truth is Not a Lifestyle to be Emulated (2024/5/29)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Psychopathy (2024/7/1)
- Σ Frame: Dirty Red Pill (2024/7/8)

Red Pill Cults [C]

Jack · 22 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Cult or Culture?

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Infighting / Sectarianism / Socio-Political Misappropriation
Author's Note: Based on email correspondence between Jack and Lexet between 2019-2021.
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

In this post, I'll cover the sixth perspective of The Red Pill [C]: Christians or Churchians who view the Red Pill as a new brand of religious cult.

A list of other perspectives is given here.

Resounding Voices

Here is listed a sampling of articles that have appeared over the years which have described The Red Pill as a cult.

- Business Insider (Dylan Love): Inside Red Pill, The Weird New Cult For Men Who Don't Understand Women (2013/9/15) [Reblogged on Yahoo! Finance]
- Reddit/ExRedPill (RedPillDetox): Red Pill and Cultic Behavior — Why TRP is a lot like Scientology, Heaven's Gate and other cults (based on Science) (2016/2/4)
- Inverse (Zebbie Watson): Red Pill Men and Women, Reddit, and the Cult of Gender (2016/5/19)
- Reddit/ExRedPill (RedPillDetox): Why Red Pill is a Cult — Part 2 (Based on Mark Manson's writings) (2016/10/30)
- The New Statesman (Amelia Tate): Spitting out the Red Pill: Former misogynists reveal how they were radicalised online (2017/2/28)
- Cracked (Teresa Lee): 5 Ways The MRA Indoctrinates New Members With Cult Tactics (2017/3/6)
- NonCompete: The Red Pill is a CULT (2018/5/13)
- Free Thought Blogs (P. Z. Myers): Here are some awful Red Pill stories, but hey, did you know feminists are just as bad? (2019/2/22)
- It's Good To Be A Man (Bnonn Tennant): Red Pill as Another Religion (2019/9/12)

A lot of these posts contain the usual tantric bile — a gag reflex against unpleasant truths; an inability to accept fallen human nature or the obscenities of female sexuality.

But there are several different perspectives on why The Red Pill is a 'cult' per se.

From a 'Christian' perspective, Bnonn Tennant has openly stated that Red Pill Christians are a 'cult' because their cognitions are founded on a Worldly ideology.

> "There are folks out there calling themselves Red Pill Christians. We believe this is no better than the many people who consider themselves feminist Christians, or social justice Christians, or gay-affirming Christians, or whatever other idol of wokeness they have discovered in the world and then attached Christianity to."
>
> Bnonn Tennant, in IGTBAM: Red Pill as Another Religion (2019/9/12)

This perspective is flawed because, as long time Red Pillers know, TRP is NOT an ideology, but rather a collection of factoids and lore about the fleshly human nature – most of which fully agrees with Biblical parallels and references — which may be extended to a praxeology, thereby enhancing one's wisdom.

From the secular perspective, there's also a spin that casts extemporaneous blame and condemnation on men for abandoning the widespread modern cult of Ashtoreth, viz. gynocentrism / P00n Pedestalization.

> "There's a common thread: lonely young men who are socially awkward and find themselves in a group that tells them all their problems are caused by an evil, alien force, that is, women."
>
> P. Z. Myers, in Free Thought Blogs: Here are some awful Red Pill stories, but hey, did you know feminists are just as bad? (2019/2/22)

This brings us to the question…

What is a 'Cult'?

Among all these opinions, there is some variation in what defines a 'cult'.

Conservative Christians are prone to think of a cult as some sort of bizarre religious congregation that practices divination and polygamy, led by a bearded guru in white robes, living in backwoods California with a bevy of 'wives' and children.

The Source Family Cult – Father Yod and his 13 wives.
But the MSM concept of a 'cult' deviates from this stereotype. [Emphasis mine.]

> "I think of a cult as a nascent movement outside the mainstream that often criticizes the mainstream and organizes itself around the idea that the mainstream is bad or broken in some way. So I suppose when I think about a cult, I'm not just thinking about a small movement with a lot of people who believe something fiercely. I'm also interested in the modern idea of cults being oriented against the mainstream. They form as a criticism of what the people in that cult understand to be the mainstream. And cults, especially when we talk about them in religion, tend to be extreme, tend to be radical, tend to have really high social costs to belonging to them."
>
> Derek Thompson, in Vox (Sean Illing): Everything's a cult now (2024/4/28)

The cult of Aphroditism / Wokism

IOW, the charge of The Red Pill being a cult is based on the observation that a considerable number of people have come to accept the central tenets of TRP as true. It is a recognition that a social 'movement' has formed around TRP and continues to grow. Ultimately, this reaction arises from a fear that RP constituents may become a formidable opposition to Feminism / gynocentrism, which they have.

Based on Thompson's concept of a 'cult' (in bold), and admitting to the dubious assumption that popular opinion has any weight, since TRP has gone mainstream, we might think that anyone who criticizes TRP as bad or broken in some way is behaving in a 'cultish' manner. But this is not a widely accepted opinion. So we see that all this criticism is merely a vehement reaction to the rise of an alternative value system.

Variances in GroupThink

There are several problems with the argument that The Red Pill is a cult, one being, where is this imaginary group? Who is the leader? From what we can tell, there is no real groupthink in this part of the internet, because everyone who discusses issues from a RP perspective has a different take on it. If we review the major voices in the Christian sphere over the years, we find that…

- Dalrock had his own understanding of the issues which he wrote about at length.
- Deep Strength's blog has a very different Christian perspective.
- American Dad's blog had some different takes.
- Σ Frame is not in lockstep with any of the above.
- Donal Graeme had more of a Catholic single man's view.
- Zippy Catholic had quite different opinions and wouldn't even call himself Red Pill.
- Cane Caldo didn't agree about everything.
- Vox Day was, and still is, very opinionated and different.
- Wintery Knight is also quite opinionated but doesn't always agree with the others.

Moreover, the idea of cultish behavior is demonstrably false, which can be understood simply by perusing these blogs at length and observing profuse disagreement. The main thing they all had in common was the search for truth. To my knowledge, none of them said they were a "Red Pill Christian" either. It wasn't until later, after 2020 or so, when the 'Christian Red Pill' identity formed as a descriptor of the knowledge coming out of the Christian Manosphere, in order to magnify Christian purposes and values as a distinction from the P00n poking prerogatives of the secular Manosphere / RP.

Conclusions

Commenter 7187 once wrote,

> "Red Pill theories are not enough to base one's life around, but they are a valuable test to apply to pastors in this age of feminist supremacy. If a pastor has the courage to be honest about the issues we talk about here, it is an indication that they want to know and follow truth even if it is painful.
>
> If they (or we) are more afraid of losing women's approval than they are of losing God's approval they are not good leaders."

Especially pastors, but the same applies for anyone. And just because a leader subscribes to RP lore, it doesn't transform him into a cult guru. It just makes him a little more wiser.

OTOH, if one condemns RP as 'cultish' this is a strong indicator that they're sectarianish and are not focused on flushing out the truth.

Questions for Discussion

Upon reviewing the linked articles, here are some questions readers may like to consider.

1. How do some neo-theologies (e.g. Complementarianism) fit into the cult description?
2. Bnonn Tennant and Michael Foster worked overtime to separate themselves from Dalrock. Then later they started identifying as part of the Christian Manosphere. WTH? Were they trying to hijack and revamp the Christian Red Pill at a formative stage of its development?
3. How might the outlook on The Red Pill as a 'cult' be an expression of psychological projection and the mirror effect?

Related

- Laughing at Feminism: Red-Pill Religion? (2019/10/24)
- Gynocentrism: To 'Believe' in Love – The Religious Significance of the Romantic Love Myth in Western Modernity (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: Asherah Makes Demands: Give Women what they want! (2023/2/27)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): But I'm not like that! (2024/5/3)
- Σ Frame: Sectarianism (2024/6/8)
- Catacomb Resident: Don't Join That Cult (2024/6/29)
- Σ Frame: The Mechanics of Sectarianism within The Christian Red Pill (2024/7/3)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Bad! [B-] (2024/7/20)

Reviewing and Recalibrating

Jack · 24 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Collating some interesting developments in The Red Pill Sphere.

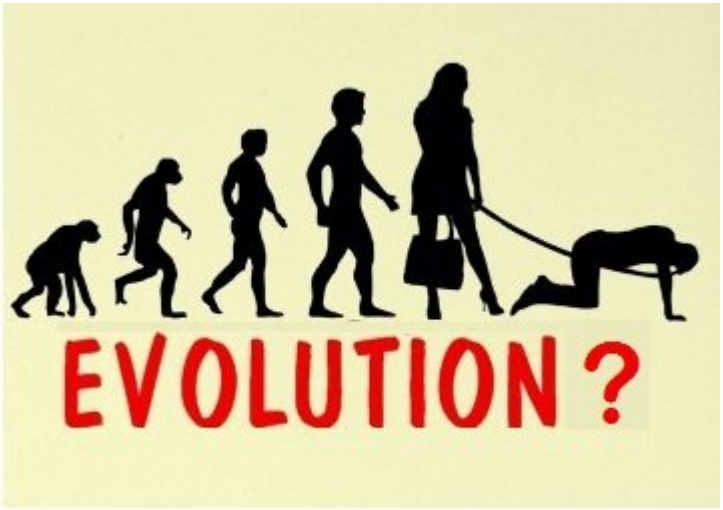
Readership: All
Theme: The Red Pill
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes + 5.5 minute video (optional)

The Futurist

Long time readers will remember the following MUST READ classic hit summaries of all things Red Pill, coauthored by Imran Khan and Kartik Gada, that appeared on The Futurist.

- The Futurist: The Misandry Bubble (2010/1/1)
- The Futurist: Gems (2020/1/1)

Published exactly 10 years apart, the second article is a follow-up to the first article, each providing a chronicle of the preceding decade.



Readers may not know that The Futurist has moved to video format on Kartik Gada's YouTube channel. This will be the foremost source of information surrounding the upcoming Singularity. Steadily advancing as foretold, it is presently in the form of ChatGPT and other AI based software, soon to become interactive.

The Singularity

The Technological Singularity is based on the eerie coincidence (?) that various predictive models of technological growth all have a terminus at a date somewhere between 2030-2045, which is understood as a future point in time in which an era of uncontrollable and irreversible advancement begins, resulting in unfathomable changes to human civilization.

The Singularity is also understood as the point at which humans cannot keep up with technological advances and are therefore unable to comprehend or control the technology they have created. It has also been speculated that humans will be unable to comprehend or relate to each other. In fact, we are already seeing this happen in the form of extreme gender polarity and Gen Z feeling isolated from older generations.

Older readers will recall this smash hit from Styx, Mr. Roboto (1983), which describes a dark future in which all of humanity is controlled by algorithms, computers, and robots — there is no work, no free will, no privacy, no trust, and no identity.

As the bards of yore have foretold, I believe the Singularity will also carry significant historical, social, metaphysical, and perhaps paranormal changes too.

Gems

Sef Shayk

87 Followers

Where Pretty Lies Perish

Follow

Gems has been reblogged at Medium.

Medium: Gems (By Imran Khan of The Futurist) (2024/1/11)

The man responsible for reblogging this important article is Sef Shayk, whose profile byline reads, "Where Pretty Lies Perish", which is the same byline that appeared on Chateau Heartiste's banner, thus identifying himself as an Old School Red Piller.

From a larger view, it's about time that guys who have been digesting Red Pill lore for years are now starting to implement it in their work. We'll see more of this in the coming months and years.

Sinatra Lives On

Francis Albert Sinatra (1915/12/12 – 1998/5/14) steps off his private helicopter holding a glass of whiskey. Los Angeles, California, 1964. Photo by Yul Brenner.

Since the early days of The Manosphere, Aaron Clarey, AKA Captain Capitalism, has provided a professionally informed and yet cock-sure low-brow armchair analysis of macro and micro economic trends. In recent years, he has ventured (or digressed) into more controversial issues and has thereby become a notorious persona non grata of the Leftoid PTB and a pariah of The Red Pill Right. In honorary recognition of this considerable achievement, I cannot think of a better or more fitting compliment than to call him the Frank Sinatra of the Manosphere.

For those readers who are annoyed or distracted by all the hyperbuzz surrounding The Great One's newfound prestige, and are wanting less rantage and/or more serious in-depth analysis of economic and technological trends from a RP perspective (as I do), then I kindly suggest checking out Kartik Gada's YouTube channel.

The Ultimate Men's Guide

Lately, Σ Frame has been getting referrals from Ultimate Men's Guide.

At first glance, this site appears to be a spectacular collection of easily digestible Red Pill bon mots — something that is greatly needed, and is the next step towards collating and preserving Red Pill lore for our progeny.

However, I'm critical of what the site lists as the "Best Men's Blogs on the internet", given as…

1. Dalrock (retired)
2. Chateau Heartiste — "Where pretty lies perish" — this site was actually de-platformed and deleted by the douchebags at WordPress.com but has thankfully been restored on its own domain.
3. The Power Moves
4. The Rational Male
5. A Voice for Men
6. Richard Reeves
7. Of Boys And Men

Criticisms

Granted, it is a difficult task to condense thousands of Manosphere / Red Pill blogs into a list of the 7 Best Must-Reads, but this shortlist fails to pass the RP sniff test.

My criticisms are as follows.

1. It doesn't include all the 3 R's of The Classic Manosphere. Rollo's blog is listed, and the reconstruction of Roissy's site, Chateau Heartiste is included. However, Roosh's old site, Return of Kings, is absent from the list, even though it was also one of the central pillars of The Classic Manosphere, and still appears on Manosphere and The Red Archive.
2. The Power Moves is a grifty PUA site. Although it does contain a lot of pertinent information, other PUA sites like Casey Zander, Days of Game, and The Red Quest 1 / 2, are more on point for that kind of thing. Personally, I would recommend Casey Zander if I had to include a PUA site on the list. Yes, Zander's stuff is not in a blog format, but OTOH, Game / PUA / Rizz can't be very well learned from a blog.
3. Kudos for including Dalrock. But the link to Dalrock goes to his old site on WordPress, which is now defunct. The link to Dalrock's archives is not included.
4. A Voice for Men is not a bad choice for the list, but the site's key author, Paul Elam, has more recent and better blogs that could be linked.
5. I am surprised that there is not just one, but TWO blogs from… Richard Reeves?!? D'oh!!! Our previous reviews of R&R's work suggest that he's a PTB lackey who kow tows to the sacred cow, and a Purple Piller offering counterfeit prescriptions. Moreover, he is NOT one of the more noteworthy figureheads of the Manosphere / Red Pill, so I am hard pressed to understand how he made the list — twice. This inclusion causes me to suspect that Ultimate Men's Guide is being "sponsored" and may therefore be 'compromised' in some way.
6. Instead of R&R, why not include a couple blogs from another Manosphere / RP author who has been central to the development of RP lore? Someone like Theodore Beale, Larry Kummer, Larry Solomon, or Peter Wright for instance.
7. Lastly, I am obliged to include an indignant objection that Σ Frame is not included on the list, as it is considered to be Dalrock's successor.

Σ Frame's List of The Best Men's Sites on the Internet (2024)

Expanding past the limitations of individual blogs, a better list of The Best Men's Sites on the Internet for 2024 on might look like this (with updated links).

Frank Sinatra's mugshot.

1. Synlogos
2. Kartik Gada
3. Casey Zander
4. The Red Archive*
5. The Manosphere*
6. Chateau Heartiste*
7. The Rational Male

And for Christian Men:

1. Dalrock
2. Σ Frame
3. Paul Elam
4. Radix Fidem
5. Francis Berger
6. Bruce Charlton
7. Eternity Matters
8. Catacomb Resident
9. Matthew E. Cochran
10. Biblical Gender Roles
11. The Androsphere Archive*

12. Christianity and Masculinity

* Archive
 Aggregator

Related

- Σ Frame: The Evolution of the Red Pill (2018/12/31)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – A Crack in the Red Pill (2019/5/13)
- Σ Frame: Small Schisms and Large Schisms (2020/6/5)
- Σ Frame: Moon Day Review – The Manosphere Reshuffles its Deck (2020/9/2)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Rollover (2022/6/17)
- Σ Frame: Pandora's Pendulum (2022/7/8)
- Σ Frame: 5 Years with Σ Frame (2022/9/27)
- Σ Frame: Signs of Demise? (2024/1/3)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Restructure (2024/3/15)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Roadmap (2024/7/5)
- The Cite Site: Aaron Clarey Quotes

Gammas – The Manosphere's Untouchables

Jack · 26 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An upper crust survey of the wonky shambles surrounding the ineptitude of Gammas, with some aces in the hole.

Readership: Men
Theme: Problems with the Red Pill / Infighting / Metacognitions
Reader's Note: As an artful exercise in British humour and consistency, this essay has adopted British titles, idioms, phrases, and spelling. Chaps across the pond should be pleased to comment about the affectation.
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Intro

The post, Is Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy Bad for The Manosphere? (2024/6/21), was out of the usual sorts for this blog. Enough time has passed now, so I'll explain my motivations and the strategy behind writing this post.

Motivations — Host a Philosophical Mosh Pit

I had a few purposes for writing this post.

- To incite more interaction between younger readers, older readers, Voxites, and Anti-Voxites.
- To bring to a head some of the animosities and antipathies towards Vox that have existed among the regulars at Σ Frame, mostly older Manospherians.
- To arouse a discussion in which these issues might be addressed, and any outstanding questions would be satisfactorily answered.
- To settle some lingering doubts and questions about Vox that have gone unaddressed for a long time.

Overall, it was my hope that the post would provide a forum in which readers might come together and iron out their differences, heal old offenses, and that this would shorten the philosophical distance between Σ Frame and Σ Game. However, the impact was much different than I expected.

I greatly appreciate Charlie, Determined Omega, and Notelrac for being the most prolific and revealing commenters.

Strategy — “Be British”

I harbour no ill will towards Vox. It was not my intention to attack or discredit Vox, but only to poke the Voxhive enough to rouse a response from his most avid fans. This was an intersectual* experiment for us to interact and examine each other’s views outside the Vox Box.

Some readers objected that I was talking about Vox “behind his back”, so to speak. No. Vox is welcome to read and comment here, just like anyone. I am pretty sure he visits Σ Frame from time to time, but I have no idea how often.

Some readers may be wondering how it is possible to create more unity by posting controversial, inflammatory content. This is an ironic phenomenon summarised as “Good fights produce good friends.” For more on this technique, please read A Brother Is Borne Out Of Adversity (2018/6/10).

Readers may also be wondering why the interaction did not lead to more animosity, instead of less. The secret to having a “good fight” rather than a vitriolic fracas is to keep things objective, be open to new ideas and opinions, be reasonable, and be respectful. Once upon a time, one of my friends humourously summarised this approach as, “Be British.” Heh. But it is more than just putting on airs, being reserved and pragmatic, and keeping a poker face. One must intentionally choose to interpret every gobby thing through an objective lens and deliberately refrain from assuming ill will and/or having offense, even when inundated with clearly intended barbs. One must also avoid using accusatory language, bulverisms, or playing blame games. Instead, just state the facts and observations and call your bagsy mate. For more on this social skill, please read The Objectivity of Offense Constitutes Respect (2018/5/6). For more on how maintaining respect fosters more respect, please read Respect makes all the difference! (2022/8/17).

Another thing to remember is that the more attention you give to someone or something, the more attention it's going to garner. It matters not so much whether the attention is positive or negative, because people will draw their own conclusions about whether the subject of the attention is positive or negative. One's Frame does more to influence the nature of the reception than one's attitude towards the subject itself, or even the words used.

Finally, this blog is known for instilling confidence in readers. I hope that Vox's followers who visited Σ Frame for the discussion of Vox and the SSH have discovered this, and have recognised that this is something they cannot obtain from focusing on the SSH and/or comparing themselves to other men in the SSH.

 I made up this word. Intersectual: Interacting between two sects.*

Commentary on the Discussion

Referring to the discussion under said post, over and again, I see the responses to comments repetitively missing the main point raised by the initial comment, mostly by jumping to alternative interpretations of what was said and/or what was meant. Like ships passing in the night, almost colliding, but not quite. It's like Σ Frame-ites and Σ Game-ites are speaking different languages that use the same words. Is this not sectarianism on steroids, as I wrote about in the previous essay? Or is this a vast generational chasm? Or possibly both?

And so t'was at the Tower of Babel.

After perusing the feedback to this post, I began to see the root of all the infighting surrounding Vox's SSH. Apparently, there is an outstanding inability to deal with certain men possessing a particular sort of immaturity and who happen to be prevalent on blog forums. Therefore, these men present an unsolvable problem that inculcates great annoyance and frustration whenever they appear. All the talk about the SSH stratification, Gammas, and so forth that is being used in this context is the rhetorical vehicle that has been used to verbalise, communicate, and discuss this particular sort of problematic immaturity, forming a type of not-so-esoteric language that can be implemented as a shibboleth of in-group membership, and to simultaneously expel the foul lads who can't pass muster.

Put a Sock in It!

Whenever Gammas disrupt the flow of conversation, drop a clanger, throw a spanner in the works, and leave the men collywobbled and gutted, the best tactic that has been thus far devised in dealing with them is to mock them and run them off using the bog standard modus operandi described here.

1. Identify specific words and behaviours of a targeted individual.
2. Draw a correlation to a low SSH type, i.e. Gamma.
3. Identify the target as avoidant, bitter, dishonest, dumb, envious, evasive, fake, fearful, gobby, obtrusive, resentful, etc.
4. Dismiss the target, and thereby his argument also, in a condescending and/or shaming manner.
5. Bob's your uncle!

A bodge job, if ye ask me.

Commenter notelrac directed our attention to a Σ Game post that appeared at that time, The Inevitable Excommunication (2024/6/22). This post confirmed my observations above. Also, the comments under this post addressed some of the questions I brought up earlier, leading me to believe they had partaken of my offerings and were not simply putting in the rough. I'll cite a couple of these comments below.

How to Deal with Gammas

Under the aforementioned post, Vicar Ron Tomlinson, who is also a frequent commenter at Σ Frame, wrote,

> "If we're stuck with them (colleagues, neighbours, family) can we just treat Gammas like children, i.e. with patience and a certain level of respect but not taking them seriously outside their area of expertise? After all, they don't respond well to criticism and they are past masters at mockery."

Note: Tomlinson is using British spelling, so he is also using the strategy described above. "Be British." Cheerio!

Gov'nour Vox Day responded,

> "You can try, but they will inevitably provoke a confrontation and melt down at some point, quite possibly over something that has nothing directly to do with you.
>
> If you can't excommunicate the Gamma, the best thing you can do is limit your interactions with him and keep them to a minimum."

Or you can skive off the baudy forum, old chap!

So it is just as I had suspected. Gammas are going to sociosexual həll, so they must be excommunicated.

Not my cup of tea, says he.

There are many more delightful comments in this thread about identifying Gamma characteristics and how to deal with them. In summary, the general strategy is to avoid the codswallop and isolate them ('excommunicate' them, says he), give them responsibilities, and hold them accountable. Be relentless in exposing their behaviours. Be polite and objective, but also cover your buttocks by remaining emotionally insulated and collecting evidence at times when it may be necessary.

IOW, "Be British."

This is very similar to treating them like an adult child, as Ron Tomlinson observed.

This is also very similar to how Red Pill Apostle has urged men to treat tartly wives as "the oldest teenager in the house". This reflects my conclusion that typical Gammas suffer from a particular form of barmy immaturity, one that is comparable to female hypoagenticity and solipsism.

British ships destroying an enemy fleet in Canton, 1841. First Opium War, China, 19th century. (Photo by DeAgostini / Getty Images)

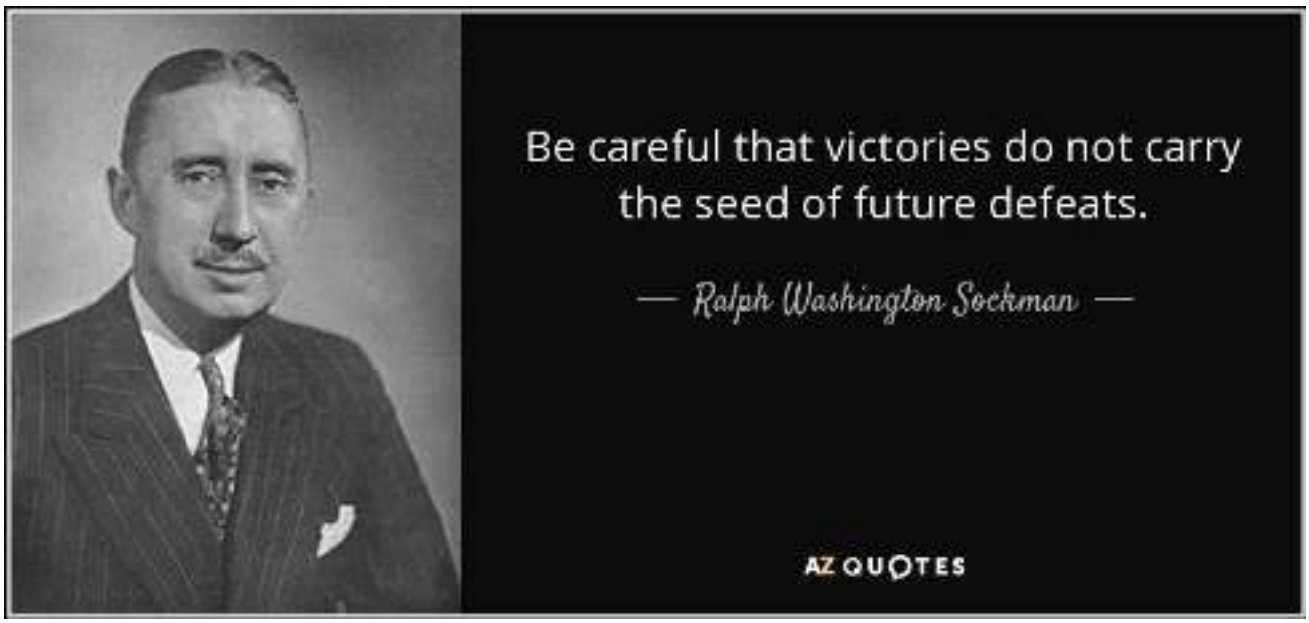
What's all the Faff about Gammas?

Part of the problem in dealing with Gammas is that online forums cannot offer the element of a real life, interpersonal fellowship that these men need in order to get a leg up in life. There is no common goal, no real-life purpose, no shared enterprise, in which a Gamma can be held accountable and be pushed to overcome his self-centredness. These men require a real flesh and blood Christian fellowship in order to face up to themselves and make real progress.

I can prolly that most Gammas are searching for belonging and for fellowship, for meaning and for purpose, for dignity and for identity. But all they're finding in Red Pill forums is the opposite. Yet, they keep returning to pop their corks, because they can find no better mateys for a chinwag, I suppose — and they never will until they lop the faff and grow up. They're caught in a stronghold on the fairlane to sociosexual həll.

What they really need is a leader and a structure, milord. They must be made to EARN the honour, recognition, and respect they are craving, and they must be appreciated for their contributions, even if it fails to outweigh the knackered social burdens they present. How so? We must be chuffed to bits with the behaviour we wish to see more of, and flatly discourage that behaviour which is egotistical and self-centred. Again, this is similar to how parents train a child, or a husbandman moulds a hypoagentic skivvy.

There's no prize to lose the plot and throw a wobbly like a dim bulb.



Conclusions

Let us now return to the question, Is Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy Bad for The Manosphere? The answer is No. It is immature men, i.e. Gammas in this case, who are bad for the Manosphere.

Blimey! I'm gobsmacked!

The kerfuffle of Gamma ineptitude will languor on for donkey's years until we find a better way to shanghai these layabouts, preferably one that will help them jump the hump of the stronghold they're in.

So let's hop to it, lads! Lettuce spray for their sociosexual salvation, and that they may join us in rebuilding a Christian civilization, as Vox says, or if only to show up their best for the community, says I. The Royal Admiral needs all hands on deck.

Related

- Σ Frame: A Response to Jason's Comments (2020/2/21)
- Independent: 88 very British phrases that will confuse anybody who didn't grow up in the UK (2020/9/16)
- Σ Frame: The Red Pill and Blue Pill as Paradigms of Sanctification and Defilement (with a mathematical analogy) (2020/11/15)
- Σ Frame: Avoiding the Broken Window Effect (2021/7/21)
- Σ Frame: The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)
- Σ Frame: Hierarchy vs Individualism (2024/2/16)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Revisiting Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (2024/4/5)
- Σ Frame: Is Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy Bad for The Manosphere? (2024/6/21)
- Catacomb Resident: A Different Kind of Censorship (2024/6/28)
- Catacomb Resident: Don't Join That Cult (2024/6/29)
- Catacomb Resident: Christ the Prude (2024/6/30)
- Σ Game: Graduating Gamma I (2024/7/19)
- Σ Game: Graduating Gamma II (2024/7/25)

Weaponizing

Jack · 29 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Analyzing a common byword used against Christianity and The Red Pill.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill / Weaponizing
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

'Weaponizing' is the last subtopic that I'll set forth in this study of Problems with The Red Pill.

I've often heard or read that Christianity is 'weaponized' or The Red Pill is 'weaponized'. Whatever does it mean?

'Weaponizing' is a rather new word in the English lexicon that appeared around the turn of the century and has since been used in many Feminist / W0ke diatribes to date. The current colloquial meaning is to exploit something (in this case, what is presumed to be Biblical or Red Pill "ideologies"), for the purpose of attacking a person or group, or for spreading discord.

After studying a few articles and research papers about how stuff is 'weaponized', I've found there are several ways that 'weaponizing' appears. However, I've come to the conclusion that there is less substance to this than I originally suspected, so I won't belabor the reader with tedious examinations of these articles. The main gist of it is summarized as follows.

The Blue Pill / Secular Concept of 'Weaponizing'

It is generally recognized that The Red Pill vilifies human nature, especially female sexuality (cherishing promiscuity, craving defilement, dual mating strategies, hypergamy, etc.) and women's fleshly nature (e.g. being overcontrolling due to insecurity, disloyal, envious, gossipy, greedy, opportunistic, secretive, solipsistic, etc.).

Women are insanely sensitive to being thus characterized and called out on it, especially those who are acutely allergic to accountability, agency, masculine dominance, responsibility, and such.

Similarly, Simps and White Knights are offended whenever women's impure motives and sins are exposed, and they are quick to rebuild the Pure and Perfect Precious Princess illusion, all the while thinking they are 'protecting' women from 'abuse' and m!s0gyn!stic men, when in fact, they are only 'protecting' their own ego investment in their own Blue Pilled delusions.

But these things would not be so offensive if they were not true, and therein lies the rub. The truth cannot be so easily dismissed, and so whenever the unvarnished truth is laid bare, the offender only looks all the worse if they try to deny it or justify it. So the next go-to defense is to cast aspersions on those who pulled back the veil. This usually appears in myriad forms of ad hominems and bulverisms (e.g. "You're an !ncel / meanie / m!s0gyn!st / nasty / pervert / sex!st / etc.).

In this context, any embarrassing or inconvenient truth is regarded as a 'weapon', hence the term 'weaponize'.

Truculent Truths are Trending

Taking a wider perspective, it is insightful to consider the cultural climate in which this 'weaponizing' occurs. It is now quite fashionable and trendy to reveal the figurative nakedness of both men and women. The church and culture ridicule the helplessness of men, while the producers of content that currently passes as Red Pill (2.0) laugh at the nakedness of women. Women harbor no shame in all this, but are promulgating its perpetuation by airing out all their private sexual transactions online and are even being rewarded for it in the form of attention, cash, and clicks. As a consequence, now S1ut shaming has once again appeared in full force.

Biblical injunctions and of course Red Pill lore come to the fore as incisively salient explanations of all this trash, thereby provoking a slurry of slanderous descriptors (e.g. 'abuse', 'm!sogyny', 't0x!c', etc.) being abundantly applied to these sources of knowledge by the aforementioned groups. But in fact, as stated above, this is but a knee-jerk reaction to the revelation of their revulsion.

> For everyone practicing evil hates the light and does not come to the light, lest his deeds should be exposed.

> John 3:20 (NKJV)

This 'weapon' being referred to is, in fact, the sword of truth. (2 Corinthians 6:7; Ephesians 6:17; Hebrews 4:12)

Love and Grace are Burdensome and Uncool

Lest our egos become swollen with self-righteous condemnation of the unrepentant transgressors, truth tellers shall not be exempt from this examination.

Ideally, an awareness of the truth should bring an opportunity for grace, fellowship, and ministry, but too often we find that others take note of a personal discrepancy in another, and then ride hard on a particular Red Pill truth to grind it in. The truth is not spoken in love (Ephesians 4:15), but rather for some other purpose, e.g. branding, division, ostracization, rejection, shaming, and not least the simple gratification of mocking another, and so on. Thus, such practice of coopting RP truths invariably gives offense.

But this is not what St. Paul prescribed.

> [3] We give no offense in anything, that our ministry may not be blamed. [4] But in all things we commend ourselves as ministers of God
>
> 2 Corinthians 6:3-4 (NKJV)

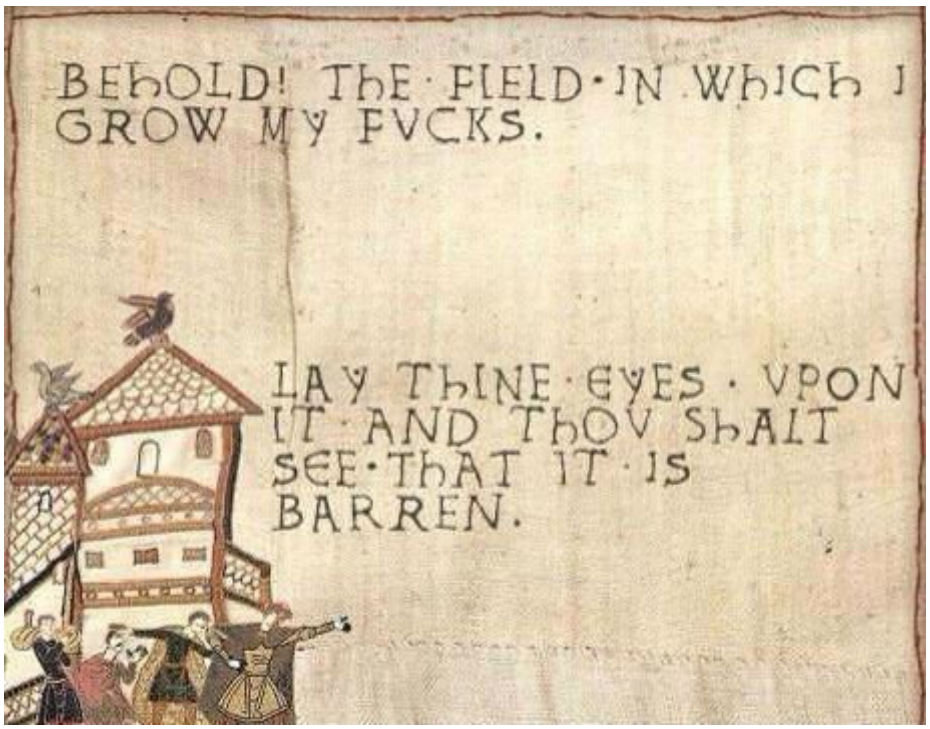
Of all the various sorts of 'weaponizing' that I've surveyed in my studies, I've only found one that is truly a Problem with The Red Pill and not just a hysterically effluent fussy tantrum of being found on the wrong end of the truth. As much as readers may loathe going over this again, here it is. Read to the end if you've got the stones to do so.



Case Study — An Inept Response to Gamma Ineptitude

The wrongful 'weaponizing' of Red Pill truths was covered in 3 previous posts that examined Vox Day's SocioSexual Hierarchy and the SSH's Gamma archetype.

- Σ Frame (Lexet): Revisiting Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (2024/4/5)
- Σ Frame: Is Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy Bad for The Manosphere? (2024/6/21)
- Σ Frame: Gammas – The Manosphere's Untouchables (2024/7/26)

To summarize this topic with respect to the present point, the SSH is weaponized when it is used to identify, shame, and shun certain men, labeled Gammas, who possess a particular sort of immaturity characterized by a solipsistic mind and effeminate social traits. These men happen to be prevalent on blog forums, although they receive little real benefit from it because they need genuine fellowship more than online bander. Those involved stand to receive more glory and honor by trying to help them rather than shunning them, but the internet is limiting in that respect. If one refuses sincere help, then we are relieved of that responsibility to our fellow man. We can shake the dust off our feet, wash our hands, and move on. But either way, the knee-jerk mocking needs to stop; it is not beneficial in the slightest, and only tends to keep Gammas locked in a state of defensive self-defeat.

Conclusions

To put it succinctly, The Red Pill is ugly, and one, anyone really, will inevitably and invariably find themselves to be at the sharp end of some point of the truth. No one is perfect.

When it is said (i.e. in cultural media) that something is 'weaponized', it usually conveys the viewpoint that one finds themselves at the beating end of the proverbial rule. The truth of the matter cannot be rescinded, so it is reframed as bad, intolerable, or unacceptable simply because it is disadvantageous to one's position. There is often an element of fear, and perhaps a claim of ‘victimization’ appears as well.

True seekers and truth tellers should not think of the Bible and Red Pill lore as a weapon, i.e. a goad of offense (although it is or can be), but as a tool for breaking down and building up. The key difference is whether you’re investing in the spiritual maturity of those within your sphere of influence.

> Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.
>
> 2 Corinthians 6:1-10 (NKJV)

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): The Dispensation of the Red Pill (2018/4/7)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Avoiding the Broken Window Effect (2021/7/21)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Red Pill Awareness (2021/7/23)
- Got Questions: What does it mean to speak the truth in love (Ephesians 4:15)? (2023/11/22)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Connecting the Dots (2024/5/10)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Red Pill Rehab (2024/6/19)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Dirty Red Pill [R-] (2024/7/8)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Red Pill Bad! [B-] (2024/7/20)

Problems with The Red Pill — Summary

Jack · 31 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Conclusions and final thoughts about the Christian Manosphere and The Red Pill.

Readership: All
Theme: Problems with The Red Pill
Length: 3,000 words
Reading Time: 12 minutes

Intro

In this 5 month long study, I've examined several problematic issues within the current iteration of The Red Pill 2.0. These problems have been broken into categories and outlined in a separate page containing brief summaries and links to the full essays.

This post will highlight some of the major gleanings of this study.

Popular Posts

The most popular posts in this series are, in this order:

1. Σ Frame (ArchAngel): Lovebreaker (2024/3/20)
2. Σ Frame (Jack): Problems with The Red Pill — Exposition (2024/3/1)
3. Σ Frame (Jack): The Ways of Women Around the World (2024/5/6)
4. Σ Frame (Jack): The Red Pill is a Dead End for Bachelors (2024/6/3)
5. Σ Frame (Lexet): Revisiting Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (2024/4/5)
6. Σ Frame (Lexet): Selling Blue Pills Painted Red (2024/3/13)
7. Σ Frame (Jack): Defining the Christian Red Pill (2024/6/24)
8. Σ Frame (Oscar): The Lie of Female Hypoagency (2024/4/1)
9. Σ Frame (Jack): Misapplied Models (2024/5/1)
10. Σ Frame (Jack): The Challenge of Transcending the Abyss (2024/6/5)

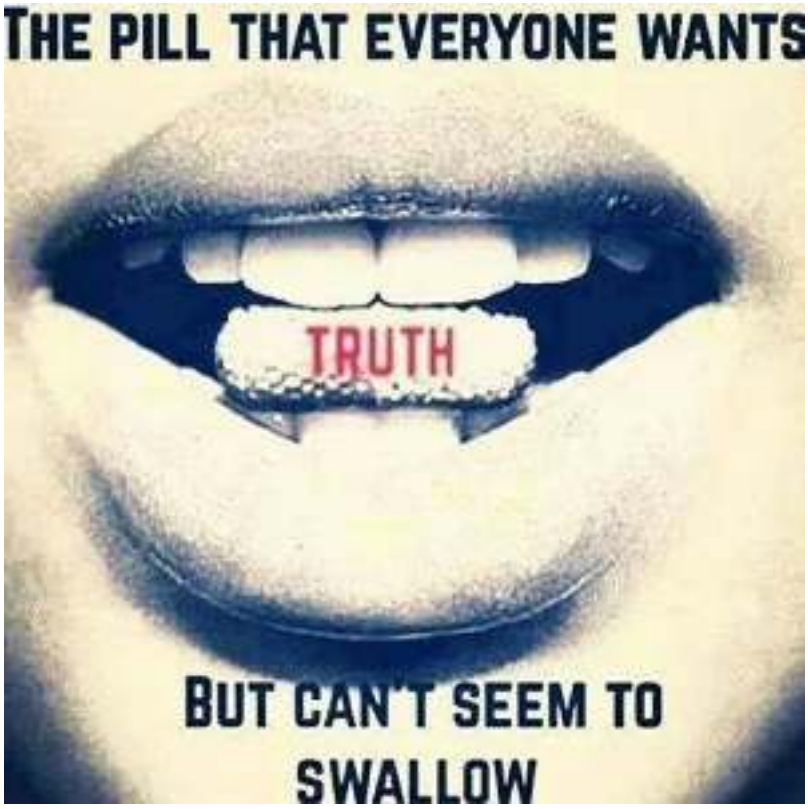
Thanks to ArchAngel, Lexet, and Oscar for their contributions.

Congratulations to ArchAngel for contributing the most popular post in this series. He had prepared 3-4 other posts for this series, but unfortunately, he withdrew these contributions in early May after his post, Lovebreaker, drew intense criticism and the discussion degraded into a p!ssing match. I'll also add that he and I did not attain the same sense of shared purpose and trust that I've enjoyed with other coauthors / contributors, and he had a bad habit of offending the regulars. He trashed all his drafts, so I doubt that he will be contributing any more writings in the future.

Comprehensive

Ironically, the biggest problem with The Red Pill has nothing to do with The Red Pill. It is people's inability / unwillingness to deal with difficult truths. This is tough for men, but doubly so for women. When people cannot overcome the initial offense and swallow adulting (1 Corinthians 3:1-8), they respond in a large number of evasive ways.

- Hypocrisy
- Sectarianism
- Crab mentality
- Analysis paralysis
- Lying and denying
- Compromise / Purple Pill
- Condemn TRP as bad, dirty, t0x!c, etc.
- Reject the message and/or the messenger
- The usual excuses, hamsterbations, justifications, etc.



The current outstanding inadequacy of The Red Pill is that most Red Pill models of human behavior do not take metaphysical paradigms and virtues into account because it is accurately assumed that hypergamy + lack of attraction creates an insolvable conundrum, and that this conundrum trumps and/or excludes any ethical / moral considerations. But without these ethical / moral considerations, humanity sinks into the carnal depravity that we now observe. The Red Pill may not have actively or intentionally retracted or destroyed them (beyond what has occurred by reframing them as superfluous), but it certainly didn't preserve or improve them either. This is what is currently missing from The Red Pill lore.

Another problem is that Western Patriarchy is sooo far gone and removed that it will need to be constructed from scratch. Right now, Westerners have such a very p!ss poor pusillanimous concept of Patriarchy that it isn't even Patriarchy. When the average Westerner hears "patriarchy" he or she thinks of muzzification — wife beatings, honor k!ll!ngs, and men having sex with whatever they want while women maintain strict sexual standards on pain of de@th. One outstanding misconception that persists is the idea that women have to be forcibly controlled to make them compliant. This is not what Headship or Patriarchy is about, and it's not what Jack, RPA, Thedeti, et al. here are saying. We're saying men need to be proactive and push women to choose, not just waste time playing their games. In the past, social norms and nature itself served to pressure women into growing up and accepting responsibility for their sociosexual behaviors and choices. Now that these factors have been bioengineered and legislated away, women must be more proactive about willingly choosing to conform to God's order.

A lesser but still significant problem in the Red Pill sphere is a failure of imagination, which is to say, men do not have a clear self-concept and purpose, so they are unable to juxtapose conflicting information, sort out what is relevant to themselves, imagine what is missing or what needs to be put into place, and then use this combined information and vision to work towards self-development.

On Modeling

Pink Hair?!?!? The Red Pill (re: vetting flags) predicts aposematism / feminism. But models (pun intended) do not always fit reality. In this case, it may very well be just a creative expression of artful beauty intended to sell pearls. When I wrote about the concept of models, a staple in my field of science and engineering, I was surprised by the vitriolic reaction from some readers. They just couldn't wrap their heads around the idea that a lot of Red Pill theories are just models, and that models are not reality, but only represent our best understanding of reality. Instead of realizing how important it is to choose a model that best matches the context, and that no model will match reality perfectly in every case (as I had expected from readers), they literally flipped their lids and jumped to the conclusion that I had invented a massively complex smokescreen.

In spite of this caustic reaction, this study of models has increased my own confidence in using them, and I hope the majority of readers feel the same way.

I've concluded that evo psyche / Red Pill models of sociosexual phenomena are not much different from other scientific / behavioral models. However, because of the said reaction, I've found there are three noteworthy differences.

1. Some people have the peculiar notion that a lot of the Red Pill lore (e.g. evo-psyche models) that are best understood as models of human behavior are falsely presented as unbreakable rules having the force or impact of a religious doctrine. Care should be taken to make sure students are aware that these models are mostly instructive, and only sometimes predictive.
2. People tend to assign personal meaning to the perceived implications of such models and then absorb this into their sense of identity, which may or may not be appropriate. (One good example pertaining to Vox's Sociosexual Hierarchy model is how Gammas often self-identify as Sigmas.) This tends to make any discussion of sociosexual models into an emotionally charged ordeal and it often results in false or unrealistic expectations, despair, hopelessness, and resignation.
3. Red Pill models are based on personal data and other sensitive information that people would prefer to conceal and/or deny, thereby making it difficult to gather relevant data and confirm its accuracy. Having a model on hand provides a way around this problem, but it is also more difficult to devise an accurate model in the first place. In the early days of the Manosphere, hundreds of PUAs ran through thousands of women to arrive at this knowledge. These days, large sets of demographic information are perhaps the most reliable data that can be used to create and refine such models. This is precisely why we see many dataclysms and commentaries thereof in the Red Pill lore.

Identities vs Roles

There continues to be confusion over the difference between identities and roles. Integrity demands that they be the same, but when they are not, the context should be noted. Is it boasting, false humility, grifting, hypocrisy, monkeydancing, phariseeism, theater, etc. or is it putting aside one's self and taking up a (possibly ill-fitting) mantle for a larger purpose?

For example…

- Is it deceptive or insidious for a person to purvey an unpopular viewpoint for the sake of powering an insightful debate?
- Is it deceptive or insidious for a person to intentionally derail discussions with meta analyses and walls of tedious text because they wish to dissolve an insightful debate?

Also…

- Vox Day's "Gamma" male roughly correlates with Rollo Tomassi's "Average Frustrated Chump" and also Oscar's concept of "Crab people".
- Red Pill Apostle's metaphor — Water bottle = Masculinity; Water = Women's emotional volatility.
- Thedeti's and Jack's rebuttals of Derek's stance on mutual submission.
- Surfdumb's comment on the Gift of Celibacy / Singleness.

Parallels with Protestantism

Towards the end of this series, it was observed in the following posts that The Christian Manosphere has many similarities with Evangelical Protestantism.

- Σ Frame: The Mechanics of Sectarianism within The Christian Red Pill [R+] (2024/7/3)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Roadmap [R+] (2024/7/5)
- Σ Frame: The Purple Pill 2.0 [B+] (2024/7/12)

In general, The Christian Manosphere mirrors Protestantism in the following ways:

- The kinds of Christians who frequent the Manosphere and identify as “Christian Red Pill” are overwhelmingly likely to be a fundamentalist type Christian, or another kind of ultraconservative Christian.
- Such people tend to have a strong to very strong distaste for dissonance in general, and a particularly strong aversion towards anything that they may perceive to be doctrinally or morally incongruent.
- They are less willing and capable of entertaining arguments that they have already deemed ‘unscriptural’, or participating in things that are ‘tainted’ in their eyes, with the aim of extracting something good or useful out of them.
- The preferred approach is generally some form of separatism, an irreconcilable strategy leading to division, silos, judgment, and the like being as common as dirt.
- The Christian Manosphere / Red Pill is incredibly divisive, divided, and splintered, exactly like Protestantism.
- Issues of contention bear similarities.
- The peacocking, status battles, and White Knighting that prevent genuine fellowship from emerging not only prevail in a Blue Pill / Purple Pill / churchian environment, but also in the men’s sphere.

There are a few stark differences though.

- Most obviously, the church is preoccupied with making women feel comfortable, while The Christian Manosphere is significantly more interested in men's issues and ministering to men.
- Men are more likely to experience genuine Christian fellowship in Christian Manosphere forums than in their local church.
- Prophets are roundly rejected by the church, and they tend to congregate in the Christian Manosphere.
- Neo Calvinist Big Eva sets trends within Western Protestantism, while The Christian Manosphere sets trends for cultural / popular notions of sociosexual consciousness.
- Protestantism caters to gynocentrism, while The Red Pill leads to Christianity.
- Christians and RP need each other but are having a really, really hard time finding equilibrium. They're having an even harder time admitting their symbiotic relationship.

Great Quotes

DeepStrength speaks on the importance of how an uncomfortable message is packaged.

> "[Andrew] Wilson reminds me of me when I was younger. Under the guise of the truth he doesn't want to consider attitude and tone.
>
> To truly minister to those who need to hear it in a different way you need to do like Paul did and package things to win different populations of people. Some people need the firmness of the truth but packaged with kindness and gentler tone.
>
> Insert numerous verses in Proverbs about kindness and gentleness here."

A gold byte from Jack about churches and pastors overvaluing female congregants.

> "What most pastors fail to realize is that if they stop pandering to women and start recognizing men, I mean truly recognizing them with respect to their place in the hierarchy as authoritative husbands, fathers, and heads, > and as the doers, shakers, and movers in the community, then there might be fewer women in attendance, but there would also be more men showing up. AND Men put more money in the plate than women do."

Another from Jack.

> "As society degrades and we get closer to the end times, we're becoming more familiar with how women can be particularly defiling, so we're better able to imagine what "men defiled with women" (Revelation 14) look like. Angsty, bitter, dejected, despondent, distrustful, doubtful, frustrated, impoverished wage slaves to court ordered alimony / child support payments. They have lost faith and given up on life. Such are (or were) some of us."

This quote from Feeriker,

> "What our adversaries are most terrified of is our ability to display righteous anger. Churchians, in particular, dread this. If they could remove those passages in the Gospels of Jesus, whip in hand, driving the moneychangers out of the Temple, they would (they might yet). Those passages are the epitome of "not nice," but also of wisdom and "had to be done."

This great quote from Bardelys the Magnificent.

> "Red Pill does have a marketing problem in that the normie conception is that it's filled with disreputable men (Andrew T@te), angry men (Hammerhand, Undead Chronic) and grifters trying to sell courses. It doesn't help that anger is a natural phase, or that most people end up here not because they are winnarz in life, but because of some life-altering setback or flaw in their personality / outlook. Normies want to associate with winners, and for all of our posturing, the truth is, very few of us are. Why leave one space (blue pill) where you're guaranteed to lose but feelz better for a different place (red pill) where you're also guaranteed to lose but feelz bad? I get why normies wouldn't jump in with both feet. Even the grifters will admit that if you do everything right, there's no guarantee of success. Nobody is leaving their comfy cocoon for that unless they've been forced there."

Other Observations

Jack's comment on the Blue Pill Hell of Christian moral / sex education of the 1980s. Scroll down the linked article for more excellent comments on this topic.

Jack's comment on the difficulty of dealing with deadbeat dames and dudes.

Deti's comment on the character of women.

Jack's comment on mid-life crises.

I had to remind readers of Coram Mundo vs. Coram Deo, and that it is futile to expect non-believers to conform to Christian standards.

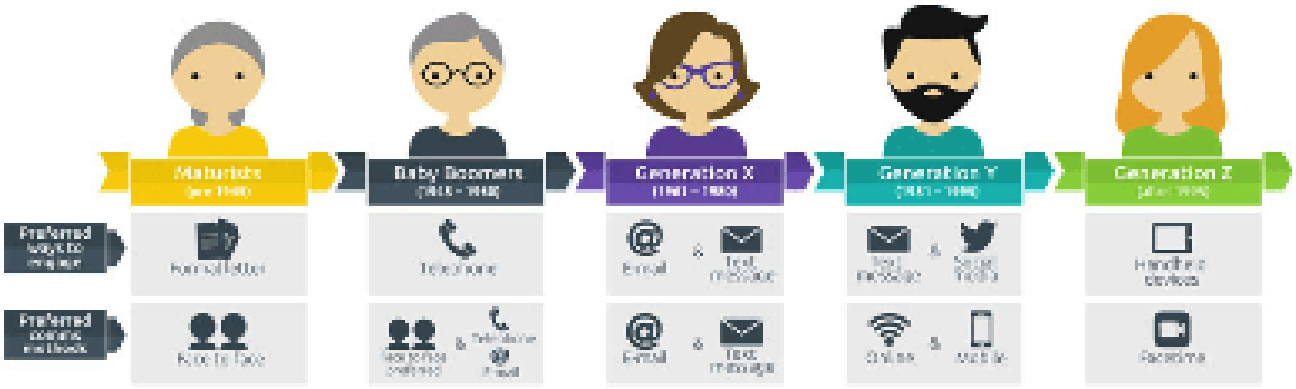
I had to remind readers that D E I / 'Equality' stuff is a deceptive rhetorical vehicle, not a true ideology.

Info introduced a quote from Brad the Beast as a case study of Dirty Red Pill. A couple weeks later, he was involved in some kind of scandal. (Not sure I completely understand this, but I think it's the same guy.)

The 2020-2021 period, coinciding with C0V!D / lockdowns had a transformational effect on public consciousness, reflected in '2.0' iterations of The Red Pill Sphere, The Christian Manosphere, and The Purple Pill. Purple Pill 2.0 is very similar to churchian autopilot.

So called 'cults' are overrated. In most cases, it boils down to, "Anything we don't like is a cult." More broadly, it is generally a fear of prominent out groups that hold drastically different values and views, viz. xenophobia.

There is a generational divide that continues to accelerate as we near the Singularity. Older and younger generations cannot even begin to comprehend one another's views.



Happenings

Derek has revived his career as a blogger by writing long screeds about whatever's being discussed on Σ Frame.

In March (?), Men's Rights activist Paul Elam, founder of A Voice for Men, converted to Christianity. This is surprising because he had a habit of periodically highlighting his antipathy to the concept of God in general and to Christianity in particular. Paul Elam's Substack

Is this image real or AI generated? See answer below.
The Drizzle Drizzle trend debued in April.

A solar flare and a special appearance of the aurora borealis occurred on 2024/5/11.

Derek and Sharkly were placed on moderation in early June.

The assassination attempt on President Trump was on 2024/7/13.

AI image generation has become significantly more prevalent and more sophisticated.

New Axioms, Maxims, and Terms

A new term was introduced.

Fecundum Imperium — Keeping subordinate men occupied in marriages with an unsuitable mate as a power play to prevent or limit their reproduction (for example by switching to a more suitable mate). This applies especially to sexless marriages.

Added to the Σ Frame list of Maxims and Axioms.

Σ Frame Maxim 36 (Bardelys the Magnificent): Everything 'works' — in theory. In the end, only God's ways work.

Σ Frame Maxim 37 (Jack): The dirtier the dispenser, the purer the Red Pill.
Corollary to Maxim 37 (jvangeld): The cheaper it is, the higher the value.

Corollary C to Axiom 17 (Jack, Oscar): Suffering is inevitable, so choose your suffering before suffering chooses you.

Σ Frame Axiom 41, AKA Lexet's Axiom: People who are obsessed about anonymous writers online want to silence them.

Σ Frame Axiom 42, AKA Joe2's Axiom: Even an innocuous comment can be construed as a personal attack.

Here's a great quote from Illimitable Men that came up in the discussion.

> "The reason many otherwise intelligent people often seem to behave foolishly, is because they have inaccurate maps of human nature, and the reason they have inaccurate maps of human nature is because they are not psychologically strong enough to handle the consequences of their own intelligence."
>
> "When intelligent people are mentally fragile, they misuse their intelligence to build ever more elaborate delusions which reject reality with a coherent but untrue logic set. Meaning they self-construct or buy into a framework which is coherent within its own closed system, but does not survive contact with reality because it is foolish and thereby untrue. Ergo they are logical (a sign of intelligence), but not accurate in the application > of that logic (and thus foolish)."

>
> Illimitable Men: Truth & IQ – Street Smarts & Book Smarts (2024/3/17)

I'm trying to think of how this could be boiled down into an Axiom.

Final Thoughts

Nowadays, the topic of marriage and all things related, such as discipline, expectations, married game, setting boundaries, vetting, etc. is decidedly out of fashion. Several readers have stated that they're getting burned out on The Red Pill, so is Joker, and TBH, so am I, at least on those things that have been staple topics of The Classic Manosphere / Red Pill 1.0. With the completion of this theme on Problems with The Red Pill, it appears that TRP 1.0 has finally run its course. So in the future, I'm going to pivot away (but not totally) from the traditional men's sphere's focus on dating, marriage, women, sex, etc. and concentrate on topics that I regard to be the next step in the continuing evolution of the Red Pill. I expect that in about 10 years or so, the Fourth Turning will begin and people are going to be digging up my old writings about courtship, marriage, and sex. Deep Strength's too.

Answer: Real image with AI enhancement.

Related

- Foreign Policy: The Return of Patriarchy (2009/10/20)

What Plato's Allegory of the Cave Teaches Men

Jack · 2 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Ignorance recoils when blinded by the light of truth.

Readership: Red Pilled Men
Theme: Community
Author's Note: This article is reblogged from Troy Francis' article under the same name [Archive]. This article appeared on Troy Francis' blog for only one day (2021/10/6). I found it to be inspiring enough to copy it into my journal on that day. Formatting, headers, links, and images added.
Length: 1,450 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Introduction

Plato's Allegory of the Cave appears in a section of the Republic called 'The Supremacy of Good' where he stresses the importance of goodness as a universal goal. The allegory is presented as a dialogue between Socrates and Glaucon, Plato's brother. Although written around 380 BC, the allegory (and indeed the rest of the Republic) has strong relevance today for men unplugging from conventional thinking about women and society – in fact, it could be taken as a metaphor for this process.

The Cave

Plato introduces the allegory of the cave as "an analogy for the human condition – for our education, or lack of it."

> "Imagine people living in a cavernous cell down under the ground; at the far end of the cave, a long way off, there's an entrance open to the outside world. They've been there since childhood, with their legs and their necks tied up in a way which keeps them in one place and allows them to look only straight ahead."

They are kept captive "since childhood" and only allowed to look in one direction. This is the experience of many brought up in contemporary Western culture. Here, awareness of the world is mediated by mainstream culture: television, movies, celebrity's Twitter feeds and Instagram accounts.

> "Imagine also that there are people on the other side of this wall who are carrying all sorts of artefacts. These artefacts, human statuettes, and animal models carved in stone and wood and all kinds of materials stick out over the wall; and as you'd expect, some of the people talk as they carry these objects along, while others are silent … they're no different to us … do you think they'd see anything of themselves and one another except the shadows cast by the fire on to the cave wall directly opposite them."

The captives, who are "no different to us" are not only solipsistic, unaware of those around them, but crucially what they think they know of the world is false. In fact, they are only seeing shadows. More than this, they are seeing shadows of objects that are themselves only effigies of real things — statuettes, models and so on. They are not one but two steps removed from reality.

Mammoth Cave, Kentucky, U.S.A.

The Modern Cave

Robin Waterfield, who translated the Republic in 1993, speculates that "the bearers of the effigies may be the poets, politicians, and so on who have formed the prisoners' views about morality and similar matters." In other words, the manner in which they see the world has been carefully formed for them by those with a clear agenda:

1. Poets (read: artists) seeking profit or to support the dominant political ideology.
2. Politicians concerned with maintaining their own power.

Two modern examples of 'Poets' are the music industry and reality television, which lull the viewer into a false sense of comfort while simultaneously promoting the virtues of acquisition in a feminised culture.

The political influence comes through modern media propaganda and popular narratives that are spread by algorithms.

In truth, the two act in concert in maintaining the system we are familiar with in 21st century Western society which promotes docile, sheep-like inactivity in the masses.

Thor's Cave, Staffordshire, England.

Liberation

> "What do you think would happen . . . if they were set free from their bonds … Imagine one of them has been set free and is suddenly made to stand up, to turn his head and walk, and to look towards the firelight. It hurts him to do all this and he's too dazzled to be capable of making out the objects whose shadows he'd formerly been looking at. And suppose someone tells him that what he's been seeing all this time has no substance and that now he's closer to reality and is seeing more accurately because of the greater reality of the things in front of his eyes . . . Don't you think he'd be bewildered and would think that there was more reality in what he'd been seeing before than in what he was being shown now?"

Here we find a perfect analogy for "taking the Red Pill." Typically, when a guy first stumbles on Game and the Manosphere, a change occurs in his perception of the world that can be described as an awakening. You often hear of men who spend days, even weeks reading blogs and books, going from one head-smacking realisation to the next as their former certainties are dashed and their suspicions about the true nature of women and relationships are confirmed. Certainly, that was how it was for me. This often presages a period of disbelief and denial — surely this isn't really how things are? It can't all be true, can it? Rather than face the firelight of reality, he would instead prefer to "run back to the things he can make out" — the shadows.

Blinded by the Light

But things only get worse from here. Plato then has Socrates describe the prisoner being dragged from the cave and out into the sunlight:

> "Wouldn't this treatment cause him pain and distress? And once he's reached the sunlight, he wouldn't be able to see a single one of the things which are currently taken to be real, would he, because his eyes would be overwhelmed by the sun's beams."

The road to enlightenment, the shedding of one's illusions, is never easy, especially when these illusions have been present since childhood. Staring reality in the face is like staring directly at the sun — it is painful. This is why many men choose to retreat back into Blue Pill thinking. For them, it is simply too painful to do otherwise.

Gradually though, the man who persists is able to adjust to his new circumstances. The released prisoner is at first able to discern only shadows, then real people, then the stars and the moon, and then finally the sun, before coming to understand its role as life's progenitor.

The Intelligible Realm

In this new state of awareness, the former captive feels sorry for the remaining prisoners who have built up a whole belief system on false premises. Conversely, should he return to the cave, its inhabitants would reject his newfound wisdom, and would sooner kill him than allow him to rescue them. Such is the attachment that many of us had to our former thinking. But for Plato, striving towards "the intelligible realm", the "source and provider of truth and knowledge [synonymous here with 'goodness'] is a prerequisite for intelligent conduct either of one's own private affairs or of public business." In other words, as hard as it may be, it is vital for men to seek 'truth and knowledge' and to stare life directly in the face if they wish to be successful in relationships or in the wider world. This is manifestly true — one need only think of the many examples of men whose success with women has been improved significantly with Game, or whose business lives have been transformed using Red Pill principles.

Perhaps most importantly, Plato has Socrates go on to say that the educated must go back down to the cave to share the benefits of their experience with the remaining captives. In the context of The Republic, this is about government: it is better for a community when its rulers are awake. The analogy still holds good for our purposes, though. There is an old saying that goes, "You have to give it away to keep it."

Conclusion

If you are reading this, it is likely that you have a more advanced understanding of the way things really are than many of your friends. Try to help them out — there's no need to get on your soap box, but just seed out little nuggets of Red Pill knowledge when appropriate. If a guy wants to know more then tell him. Direct him to this website. Let's treat our Blue Pill brethren kindly. It is better for our society if we do so, and besides, we all know where they came from, because we once resided there too, before we were dragged, blinking, out into the sunlight.

Related

- Σ Frame: Where is your life headed? (2019/2/8)
- Gynocentrism (Peter Wright): Mythologies of the men's rights and feminist movements (2020/1/7)
- Σ Frame: Glitches in replaying the Matrix loop segue (2020/1/13)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): On Red Pill Awareness (2021/7/23)
- Cornerstone: Aristotle and Plato on the Ideal Age of Marriage (2021/10/6)
- Σ Frame: Summary of Red Pill Redemption (2022/9/30)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community (2023/10/9)
- Secret Fire: Escape From Plato's Cave (2024/8/15)

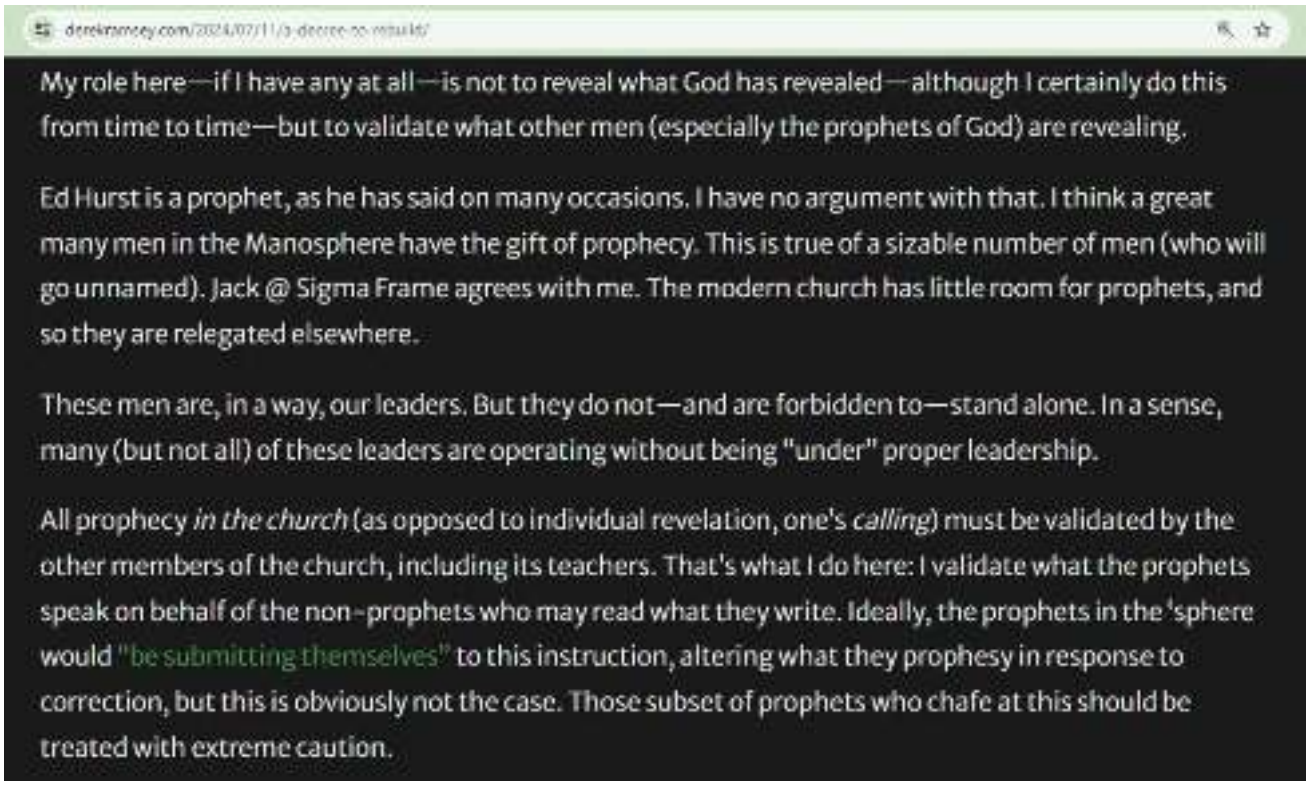
Pompous Pontification

Jack · 5 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Questioning the Nature of Claimed Authority.

Readership: All; Christian Men
Theme: Community / Metacognitions
Length: 450 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

At the end of his post, A Decree to Rebuild (2024/7/11), fellow blogger Derek L. Ramsey stated in so many words that he has assumed the executive role of a judge with veto power over the prophets of the Christian Manosphere.



Although anyone can test the truth of what is said (and they should), IMO, only a man of great mystical aptitude and faith discernment possesses the spiritual authority to judge a prophet.

Lest Ramsey think that I/we "chafe" at being "validated" (which is code for being held responsible to another man in lieu of God), here's my personal shortlist of authentic mystical / spiritual authorities of the Christian blogspace, in no particular order.

- Francis Berger
- Bruce Charlton
- Radix Fidem (Ed Hurst)
- Catacomb Resident (Tomb Refugee)

These men are welcome to judge my writings in the Spirit, and I will seriously consider their feedback to the point of revising my statements. Further, I associate with the Radix Fidem community. I am in regular contact with Ed Hurst, and recognize him to be a very influential person in my spiritual life.

Now, if readers will agree with me that these men are authentic mystical / spiritual authorities within the Christian blogosphere, then you'll also note that these men are sufficiently humble such that, although they hold great authority, they never claim to have this authority, nor do they lord it over others. They don't need to, because their authority is genuine — it speaks for itself and has the power to convict their readers all by its own virtue of expression. That's what genuine authority is, by definition.

Readers will also note that these men generally refrain from criticizing the views and motivations of other blogospherians, but instead, challenge readers to do their own introspection, learn from life, think for themselves, draw their own conclusions, and make their own decisions with respect to conscience / faith / theosis.

Even so, Ed Hurst has stated that Derek Ramsey's emphasis on Western rationalism misses the mark. This agrees with my own impressions. So when Ramsey claims to be a judge of prophets, it's hard for me to take him seriously. In fact, it is doubtful that anyone 'claiming' to be an authority truly possesses the authority claimed.*

Readers are invited to debate the appropriateness and validity of Derek's claim of authority in this role.

 As an insightful point of comparison, Ramsey refuses to state that he has authority over his own marriage, although this is one area in which he might truthfully do so.*

Related

- Christianity and Masculinity: The cultural blinders of authority (2018/6/1)
- Σ Frame: Current Trends in Prophecy (2020/3/13)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment (2023/6/9)
- Σ Frame: Gentile Authority vs. Genuine Authority (2023/6/10)
- Σ Frame: Is the Σ Frame Blog Positivistic or Prophetic? (2023/12/3)
- Σ Frame: Invisible Magic Authority (2023/12/13)
- Σ Frame: Signs of Demise? (2024/1/3)
- John Providence: Tuning Up (2024/8/5)

Provoking a Perfunctory Parapet of Puppets

Jack · 7 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Examining the overall impact and value of Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy.

Readership: All; Christian Men
Theme: Community / Metacognitions
Length: 1,250 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Introduction

In the last theme, there were 4 posts that examined Vox's SSH.

1. Σ Frame (Lexet): Revisiting Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (2024/4/5)
2. Σ Frame: Is Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy Bad for The Manosphere? (2024/6/21)
3. Σ Frame: Gammas – The Manosphere's Untouchables (2024/7/26)
4. Σ Frame: Weaponizing (2024/7/29)

The first above listed post reviews several problematic issues with Vox's SSH.

The second post hones in on whether these issues constitute a necessary boundary or a destructive division, thereby providing a framework of analysis for ascertaining the overall impact and value of the SSH.

The third post addresses the question raised in the second, "Is Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy Bad for The Manosphere?" This post concluded that the answer is No. It is immature men, i.e. Gammas in this case, who are 'bad' for the Manosphere.

However, the fourth post explained how the misuse of the SSH is bad for Gammas.

Putting all this together, the SSH poses a potential stumbling block for men in general, as I will explain below.

Separating One's Self from the Archetypes

The first post listed 14 issues of confusion surrounding Vox's SSH. A comprehensive understanding of these 14 issues reveals that there is one main benefit, but if this benefit cannot be apprehended, then it degenerates into 4 big roadblocks.

The benefit of the SSH is that it is quite insightful for understanding behavioral and social traits common to men. Vox's SSH sets up a structure of archetypes that describe men according to observable socialization habits. Every man has some of the traits of each type, and some men have some traits more than others, which makes them a stereotype of that type.

The problem with this begins when Manosphere gurus present men with the goal of becoming an Alpha or a Sigma with the implied promise that this will 'fix' all their sociosexual frustrations. However, this idea doesn't even need to be taught. The SSH itself inspires a lot of men to falsely hope that they are (or can be) an Alpha or Sigma. The reality is that not every man can be an Alpha or Sigma. The SSH is descriptive, NOT prescriptive.

Instead of entertaining these vain fantasies and trying to be something they are not, what men need to do is to take an honest look at themselves and humbly accept themselves for who they are, farts, warts, quirks and all.

The 'goal' is not to become a stereotypical Alpha or Sigma, which is unrealistic, but to face up to who you are in reality, be aware of your positive and negative traits, and if possible, control or reduce the negative and build up the positive ones. At some point, a man should come to face his human shortcomings and weaknesses and learn to trust God in this arena of his life.

You see, fitting a certain stereotype is not what makes a man 'better', but rather being authentic in one's self-estimation. (Determined Omega appears to be doing just this.) By doing so, a man becomes genuine and thereby escapes being a manikin of the SSH paradigm altogether.

But if a man hides his identity behind the parapet of a SSH identity and never 'escapes' this paradigmatic mental framework, then he inevitably becomes encumbered with 3 more snafus.

The Fallout

1. Delusion of Self — As said, the first stumbling block is getting caught up in the fantasy of being / becoming or overvaluing an Alpha / Sigma, and thus losing sight of reality.

2. Delusion of Others — Another consequence of dwelling on Vox's SSH without self-awareness is that it tends to create very rigid thinking about men in general. Men are trained to think of other men as 'Alphas', 'Bravos', 'Gammas', etc., and look no further to see other nuances of character that are more defining of one's identity.

As Tomb Refugee wrote,

> "As long as we think of things from the SSH, we cannot approach the issue with faith and see miracles. If we serve Christ, the only people we exclude are those who refuse to repent, regardless of what the problems are. As I said before, every man in the Kingdom of God is a shepherd at some level or another. You are responsible for bringing His redemption to bear on everyone who comes into your flock. Shepherds don't fit anywhere on the SSH."

3. Delusion of Purpose — The third problem is that Vox's SSH reinforces and gives language to the Worldly paradigm that draws an implicit correlation between the value of a man and his sexual prowess, or lack thereof.

"Alphas are real men. Alphas get laid."

"Gammas are weak men. Gammas are incels."

Etc.

Again, these perspectives might be helpful for newbies to get a general handle on things, but if a man gets stuck in this mindset and doesn't move on to recognize more meaningful characteristics of his own and other men's identities, then it becomes a crippling distraction.

4. Hypocrisy — The fourth big problem with Vox's SSH is that it is often weaponized to pigeonhole some men as losers, labeled 'Gamma' or sometimes 'Omega'. This, even though the SSH cannot be accurately applied to identify men in this way. This is not constructive in the slightest.

The Impact

In summary of these 4 detours to truth, there are two big snares with Vox's SSH.

1. While it does provide men with a framework for examining themselves, at the same time, it also gives men the mental software needed to escape real introspection and remain ignorant of who they truly are.
2. It gives men a rhetorical device that can be used to shame and ostracize other men. Taken to an extreme, the SSH becomes an idol when it serves to take the focus off one's own shortcomings and place a speculum onto others'.

Double whammy.

Case Study — A Comparison of Responses

Here's a comparison of viewpoints to illustrate how subscribing to Vox's SSH stonewalls the mind.

After reading the third post, "Be British", which explains my motivations for critiquing Vox's SSH, one reader who is a Voxite saw a constellation of qualities that matched the Gamma archetype, and came to the conclusion that it was 'Gammatude'. But he backed away from calling me a Gamma because that is precisely the reaction I predicted in the post and he didn't want to look like a tool.

On 2024/7/31, another reader wrote to me privately to say,

> "I remember trying to read Vox years ago but he did not do it for me for whatever reason. Following your link, I followed several more trying to get the context, and then I read the recent post on Gammas, and of course, had to read all the comments (I love how you addressed Dead Bedroom Dating's comment on Lexet's article), and so that led me to a question:
>
> Are you purposely triggering Vox's disciples as a kind of prophetic act to have them respond to you like they do to Gammas and thus prove your point? If so, then I find that very admirable and humorous. I don't know if you are playing some kind of 4D chess like that or if I am reading into things."

I'm glad someone has been paying attention. Those who have been following along will see that this is true.

Here we see a pronounced difference in awareness. The first reader was critical of my writings, but could not bring himself to recognize the points I was making. The second reader read the same post and saw it more clearly for what it is — a provocation intended to expose this kind of rigid thinking and reactionary behavior.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): Avoiding the Broken Window Effect (2021/7/21)
- Radix Fidem: His Sacrificial Love (2024/8/9)

Why Are We Consuming Engine Lubricant?

Jack · 9 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A message from Andrew Torba on the toxicity of seed oils.

Readership: All
Theme: Community
Author's Note: This article originated from Gab News Mailer (2024/5/24). Headers, images, and commentary added.
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Introduction

In today's world, where lies spread by our enemies are rampant and the mainstream media often fails to provide accurate information, I have found solace in the esoteric health wisdom of the dissident internet. Like many of you the scamdemic has only reinforced my belief that the mainstream medical establishment is largely not to be trusted and I have found that seeking alternative sources of information has led me to make some of the best decisions for my health. One such decision was to remove industrial seed oils from my diet, and the results have been nothing short of transformative. With this simple move I've dropped 30 pounds, removed all the inflammation in my body, and feel better and stronger than ever.

To understand why seed oils are bad for you, it is essential to first understand their history. Seed oils, such as soybean, canola, and corn oil, were first introduced in the early 20th century as a response to the growing demand for cheap, mass-produced vegetable oils. These oils were initially used in margarine production as a substitute for animal fats, which were more expensive and harder to produce. However, the process of extracting these oils is far from natural. Seed oils are derived from seeds that are not naturally oily, such as soybeans, corn, and cottonseeds. To extract the oil from these seeds, they must first be treated with harsh chemicals, such as hexane, a neurotoxin that is also used in the production of glue and paint thinner. The seeds are then subjected to high temperatures and pressure, which further degrades the quality of the oil.

The Origins of Canola Oil

Canola oil, one of the most common types of industrial seed oils, has a long and storied history that is often overlooked by those who consume it. Originally developed in Canada during the 1970s, canola oil was derived from the rapeseed plant, which had long been used as a source of oil for various industrial purposes.

One of the most notable uses of rapeseed oil was as a lubricant for diesel engines. The oil was prized for its ability to withstand high temperatures and its low freezing point, making it an ideal lubricant for engines operating in harsh environments.

Despite its origins as an industrial lubricant, canola oil was eventually transformed into a food product through a series of genetic modifications and chemical processes. Through selective breeding, scientists were able to create a new strain of rapeseed with lower levels of erucic acid, a toxic compound that made the oil unsuitable for human consumption. Once the new strain of rapeseed was developed, the oil was subjected to a series of chemical processes, including degumming, bleaching, and deodorizing, in order to remove any remaining impurities and make it more palatable for human consumption. Inspect the packaging of the foods you are consuming and you'll find that this Frankenstein engine lubricant is in just about everything you eat.

Why Seed Oils Are Bad for You

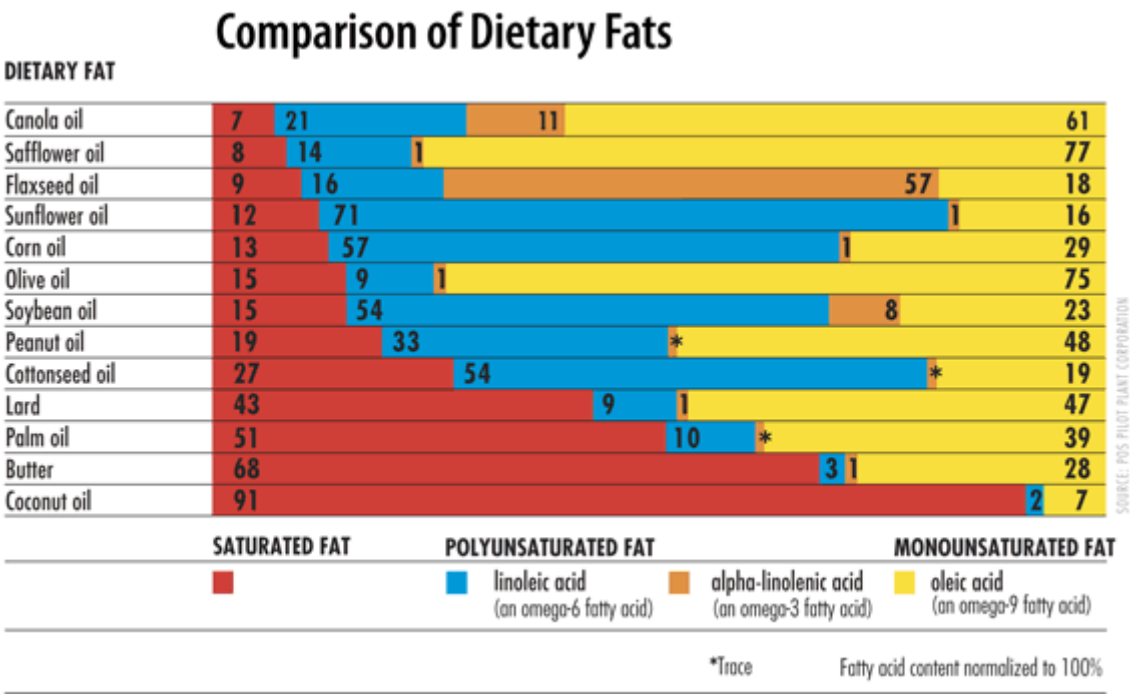
The consequences of consuming these highly processed, chemically extracted oils are numerous. One of the most significant issues with seed oils is their high concentration of omega-6 fatty acids. While omega-6s are essential for our health, the Western diet is already heavily skewed in favor of these fatty acids, with a ratio of around 20:1 of omega-6 to omega-3 fatty acids. This imbalance can lead to chronic inflammation, which is at the root of many modern health issues, including heart disease, diabetes, and autoimmune disorders.

In addition to their high omega-6 content, seed oils are also highly unstable and prone to oxidation. When exposed to heat, light, or air, these oils can break down into toxic compounds, such as free radicals and lipid peroxides, which can damage cells and contribute to the development of cancer and other diseases. Furthermore, seed oils have been linked to a host of other health problems, including obesity, insulin resistance, and impaired brain function. These oils can also interfere with the absorption of essential nutrients, such as vitamins A, D, E, and K, which are crucial for maintaining optimal health.

What to Replace Seed Oils With

If seed oils are so detrimental to our health, what should we be using instead? The answer is simple: natural, unprocessed fats. Fats that have been used by humans for thousands of years, such as olive oil, coconut oil, avocado oil, and animal fats like butter and lard, are far superior to the industrial seed oils that have become ubiquitous in the modern diet. These traditional fats are rich in nutrients, such as vitamins A, D, E, and K, and are less prone to oxidation, making them a much healthier option for cooking and consumption. Additionally, these fats are often rich in omega-3 fatty acids, which can help to counterbalance the excess of omega-6s in the Western diet and promote overall health and well-being.

Removing industrial seed oils from my diet has been hands down the best thing I have ever done for my health. The journey to discovering the truth about these oils has been a long and winding one, but the results have been more than worth it. By seeking out alternative sources of information and trusting in the wisdom of the dissident internet, I have been able to take control of my health and make informed decisions about the foods I consume.



All things considered, virgin olive oil is, by far, the most healthy choice.

Lubing the Masses

It is no secret that our enemies want us weak, sick, and distracted. They know that a strong, healthy, and mentally sharp population is much harder to control and manipulate. The promotion of seed oils as a "healthy alternative" to traditional fats is just one example of the many ways in which our enemies are actively working to undermine our health and well-being. By filling our diets with these harmful oils, they are able to keep us in a state of chronic inflammation, which weakens our immune systems, impairs our cognitive function, and makes us more susceptible to a wide range of diseases and health issues.

The ultimate goal of our enemies is the destruction of our nations and the replacement of our people with those who are more easily controlled and manipulated. By keeping us sick, weak, and distracted, they are able to accelerate this process and ensure that we are unable to resist their plans.

The promotion of unhealthy foods, such as seed oils, is just one aspect of this larger strategy. By keeping us in a state of poor health, they are able to make it easier for them to bring in millions of foreign migrants who will replace us in our own countries. They know that a sick, weak, and distracted population is less likely to stand up and fight against this invasion, making it easier for them to carry out their plans.

Many small individual choices, over time, lead to poor health, poor life quality, and ultimately the downfall of a civilization.

The Importance of Taking Control of Our Health

In order to resist the plans of our enemies and protect our nations, it is essential that we take control of our health and well-being. By removing harmful substances, such as seed oils, from our diets and replacing them with natural, unprocessed fats, we can strengthen our bodies and minds, making it more difficult for our enemies to control and manipulate us.

It is crucial that we become aware of the ways in which our enemies are actively working to undermine our health and well-being and take action to counteract their efforts. By educating ourselves about the dangers of seed oils and other harmful substances, we can make informed decisions about the foods we consume and take control of our health and well-being — and eventually take back our homelands for the glory of God.

Andrew Torba
CEO, Gab.com
Christ is King

Jack's Commentary

The reason I'm reposting Torba's message is because it's true, and it's important. Good health is central to a good life. What kind of oil you choose to buy at the supermarket may seem like a spurious decision, but little habits and small daily decisions add up to doctors bills over a lifetime.

In addition to the oils mentioned above, there are many other foods, cooking oils, and 'mysterious ingredients' that are detrimental to human health (e.g. hydrogenated oils, margarine, mayonnaise, salad dressings, spam, etc.). Even things as simple as ketchup and orange juice may have an unwarranted amount of fructose. Readers are invited to add others.

In my own experience, I've found that using said processed oils ruin the flavor of my food (in comparison to better oils) and they also have a 'blunting' effect on my energy, mood, and quality of life. These days, I only use butter, fish oil, virgin olive oil, sesame oil in small amounts, and occasionally coconut oil for certain dishes. I also stay away from sucrose (crystalline sugar, maple syrup, molasses, etc.), fructose (corn syrup), and artificial sweeteners. I've also found that reducing my intake of pork improves my overall health and spiritual life.

I strongly encourage readers to start paying attention to the ingredients listed on the foods you're eating, and figure out for yourselves which types of food have either a positive or negative effect on your general health and energy level. Eat more of the foods and food ingredients that have a positive effect, and less of the negative.

These changes in diet may be small, maybe even unnoticeable, but it could influence the course of your health (and life) a decade from now. Better safe than sorry — or dead.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): Fasting (2010/3/4)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Less Weight, Better Health! (2013/1/3)
- Σ Frame: 10 Ways to Increase Dopamine Levels without Medication (2018/1/19)
- Σ Frame (Jack): How to Transform Your Image (2020/8/12)

- Dr. Cate: PUFA-Project: Scientific References on Seed Oil Toxicity (2020/9/3)
- Meghan Maloof Berdellans: The Dangers of Seed Oils: The Greatest Bait & Switch of Our Global Food Supply (2022/10/11)

When Free Speech is no longer Free...

Jack · 12 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

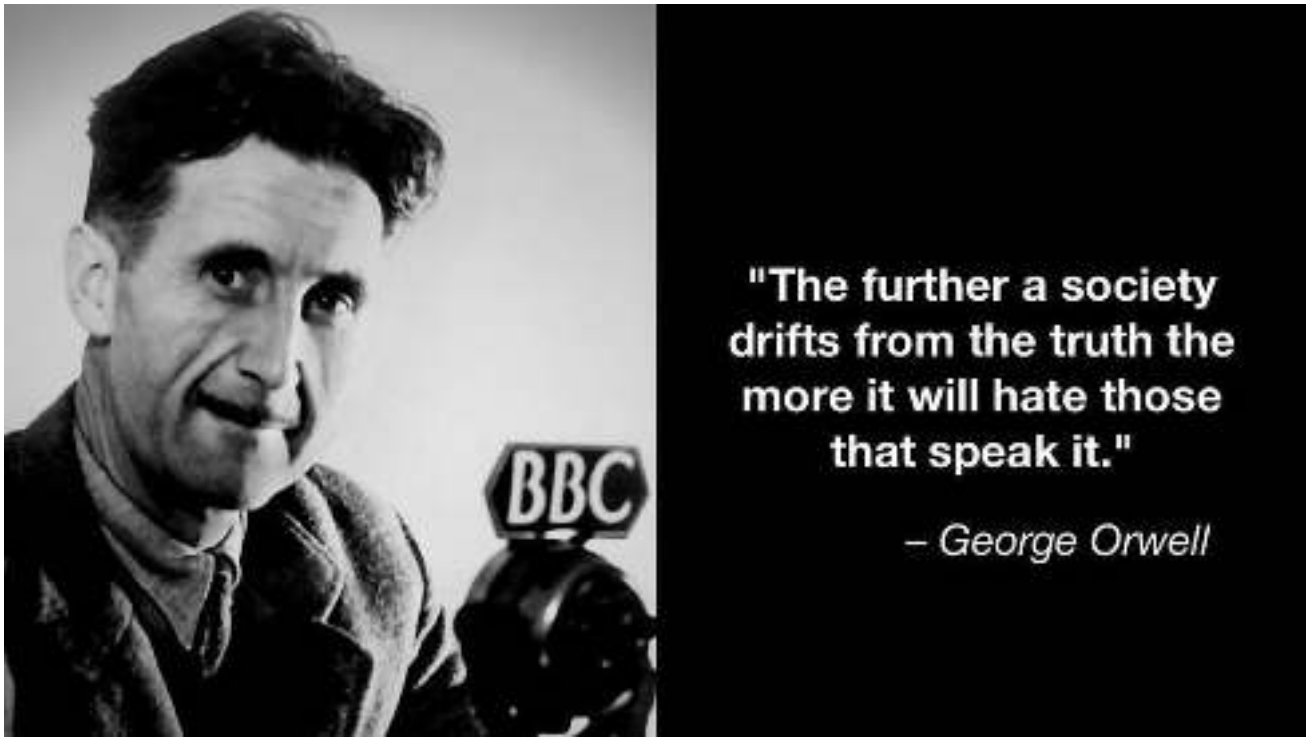
Free Speech comes under fire when it is considered to be 'Too Free' for the common good of "We The People" who are not a people.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Community / Free Speech / Metacognitions / Sectarianism
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Last month, the topic of free speech and several para-topics such as anonymity, belief and believability, censorship, dissent, seriousness, vulgarity, etc. were discussed around the extended Based Men's sphere.

1. Bruce Charlton: The wrong starting point in philosophy and for Christian faith (2024/7/4)
2. Bruce Charlton: Belief in the supernatural/ paranormal/ occult phenomena (2024/7/10)
3. Francis Berger: Dissent is Not Repentance; Or, Why "Gotta Make a Living" Excuses Nothing (2024/7/13)
4. Founding Questions: What Is Seriousness? (2024/7/16)
5. Adam Piggott: Do You Use Your Real Name on the Internet? (2024/7/17)
6. Bruce Charlton: Why are most mass media populated Only by people I dislike and despise: and nobody-at-all with whom I wish to empathize? (2024/7/18)
7. Francis Berger: The Worst Lies Are the Ones We Tell Ourselves (2024/7/21)
8. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): Viva Vulgaria: Belated Reflections on the Hawk Tuah Girl (2024/7/23)
9. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): Vulgar Freedom is Chaos (2024/7/24)

By coincidence (or divine providence?), at that same time, I had planned to cover some related problems in the Christian Manosphere as part of my survey of Problems with The Red Pill. However, upon reading these articles, I found that this topic is in no way limited to the CM/RP, but is better categorized under Community, Free Speech, and Metacognitions. So I put aside what I had written to think on it some more and revise it for this month's theme.



But then things got more interesting.

It's been noted that many topics discussed in the Men's blogosphere go mainstream within 2-3 years, but the topic of free speech has risen to the forefront of the media right on the heels of the above posts — within weeks. Is it a coincidence? … or the prophetic prescience of our fellows? … or a reaction from TPTB?

Take a look at this busyness all around what used to be known as "The 'Free' World".

1. Free Speech Union: Government has just declared war on free speech (2024/7/26)
2. RTE: Social media executives to be 'personally accountable' for harmful content (2024/8/7)
3. The Federalist: Court: Democrat Election Chief's Rulebook Illegally Restricts Arizonans' Free Speech (2024/8/8)
4. PJ Media: Free Speech Loss: Government, Facebook Win 'Anti-Vaccine' Censorship Lawsuit (2024/8/10)
5. Independent Sentinel: British Police to Extradite, Imprison Americans for Online Speech (2024/8/10)
6. The Exposé: UK government is supercharging its assault on free speech, both within the UK and globally (2024/8/11)

There's much more in the MGM with many biased spins that can be summarized as…

> "We are restricting freedom, but we're doing it for the common good."
>
> "That is all it takes to get citizens to surrender core rights, a declaration that fewer rights is better for the common good. It has become a Siren Call on the left not just abroad but in the United States."
>
> Jonathan Turley: The Irish Government Moves to Crackdown on Free Speech After Anti-Immigration Riot (2023/11/30)

Irish firebrand Brian Burns writes [emphasis mine],

> "Under the new Code executives of social media companies will be held personally responsible for 'harmful content' on their platforms."
>
> "In the Code, 'harmful content' is defined as including content that incites 'hatred' on the grounds of sex, r@ce, colour, ethnicity, etc. The definition of 'harmful' and 'hatred' is vague and blurs the distinction between illegal and legitimate free speech. There is already a wrath of existing offences to address illegal online content …

> and the extension of the Code to 'harmful content' is a monumental attack on online free speech. What we are witnessing is an accelerated attempt by the regime to suppress online dissent at a time of growing resistance against the gl0b@list agenda. What they fear most is that their propaganda war is losing grip as more and more people are using social media platforms, such as X, as a powerful weapon to spread the truth."

With these developments in mind, the next few posts will contain what I had prepared for the previous theme, plus some extra observations and takeaways.

Related

- Vox Popoli: I do not support free speech (2023/6/18)
- European Conservative: Peterson Loses Court Battle, Ordered to Attend 'Re-education' (2023/8/28)
- The Mainframe: Substack Must Stay the Course on Free Speech (2023/12/23)
- The Mainframe: How worried should Americans be about the UK's tightening restrictions on speech? (2024/8/10)
- The Babylon Bee: Elon Musk Buys The United Kingdom To Establish Free Speech There (2024/8/10)
- The Babylon Bee: 10 Social Media Posts That Will Now Get You Arrested In Britain (2024/8/11)

Freedom, Potential, and Structure

Jack · 13 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Can't have one without the others.

Readership: All
Theme: Community
Author's Note: This post was inspired by Mogadishu Matt's post, Freedom Isn't For Idiots. Structure Is. (2024/7/7)
Length: 400 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

The popular notion of freedom is doing whatever one feels like doing. But this is lawlessness, not true freedom.

Another concept of freedom is akin to a self-sufficient hermit living off the grid. Still, although his self-determination may be unfettered by the constraints of society, his potential and sense of fulfillment may be limited.

I posit that freedom, properly understood, is having good opportunities to reach one's potential.

Contrary to the DIE propaganda, potential is different for different people.

In general,

- Men need to have fulfilling work.
- Women need to actively participate in a family or community.
- Working class individuals need a workplace where they can showcase their skills and receive compensation.
- Professionals need a community to serve.
- Brainiacs need a think tank where their ideas will be taken seriously.
- Upper class / leader class stiffs need a people to lead.
- And so on.

When people cannot attain their human or God-granted potential, freedoms are routinely curtailed.

- When men cannot find jobs, run a business, or earn more than subsistence wages, then that means less economic freedom.

- When men cannot own a home or have a family, then they have less social freedom.
- When people cannot participate in the governance of their community / nation, then they have less political freedom.
- When men are stuck in circumstances that perpetuate sin, then they have less spiritual freedom.
- And so on.

Moreover, people need a community to function at their fullest life potential that is possible in a broken world. However, the freedoms of people living in a community must be regulated to ensure that one person's freedoms do not encroach upon another's.

This is where structure becomes important, and also, a structure of authority that everyone can conform to, by faith.

Social structure provides a venue in which all the people can find identity, meaning, and their place in society.

Structure provides the framework for freedom to exist. Without structure, society unravels into chaos which curtails freedoms.

Related

- Σ Frame: Shifting Gears in a Career (2018/7/8)
- Σ Frame: The Three Step Path to God (2018/9/27)
- Σ Frame: Hierarchy of Authority (2023/4/12)
- Σ Frame: The Law of Motivation (2024/1/15)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Setting Boundaries Increases Openness (2024/1/28)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Boundaries 101 for Dummies (2024/2/1)
- Σ Frame: No Virtue Exists Without Masculine Incentives (2024/6/28)
- Catacomb Resident: Family Search (2024/7/5)
- Catacomb Resident: Ephemeral Community (2024/7/22)
- Radix Fidem: Benevolence in Control (2024/7/31)

Is ‘Free Speech’ REAL or merely a philosophical construct?

Jack · 14 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

It all depends on whether the ‘good and moral’ people revere and abide by the truth or allow degens to toss it out as ‘abuse’ and ‘hate’.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Community / Free Speech / Metacognitions / Sectarianism
Author’s Note: An executive summary of this post is here.
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

> “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.”
>
> ~ The First Amendment of the United States Constitution

And then … C0V1D was orchestrated as an excuse to suspend this amendment — and this was enforced by law, police, and many fellow citizens.

And then … B L M conquered Seattle and established the C H A Z caliphate, destroying life and property in doing so — and without any reprisals of sedition.

Westerners, especially Muricans, are under the delusion of possessing ‘rights’ that do not exist in reality.

‘Free Speech’ is Ephemeral

When Free Speech is no longer Free… (2024/8/12) received several comments about the conditional nature of rights and freedoms, ‘free speech’ being one of them.

Bardelys the Magnificent said [emphasis mine],

> "Free speech does not exist, and has never existed anywhere on the planet, at any point in history. Not even God believes in it. Someone will always control what people in a society are allowed to say, it's just a matter of which side of the censorship fence you're on. The fact that the Right keeps pounding the drum of "muh free speech!" tells me they really don't understand what's going on, and they're going to continue to lose, because the Left sure as hell knows what's going on."

Not sure I agree that the Left knows the score, but they are in cahoots with the MGM in repressing 'free speech'. Lefties have succumbed to TPTB's agitprop and have become 'useful idiots' in their schemes.

'Free Speech' is Limited

AngloSaxon stated,

> "I don't believe free speech is real, there are always restrictions on what you can say. They're just dialing up the restrictions a bit more. It's very important you are careful what you say and you don't put your foot in it. I avoid talking about politics. It doesn't go to good places."

TheDeti wrote,

> "Yeah. Free speech isn't absolute. It just means the government can't punish you for saying certain things, especially "political" speech. But SCOTUS and lower courts have always recognized time, place, and manner restrictions on speech.
>
> There are always economic consequences to speech. You can be fired for saying things your boss doesn't agree with. You can be sued and held liable in damages for making defamatory statements.
>
> Free speech isn't absolute, or free."

Yes, the First Amendment only allows people to speak out without fear of judicial / political reprisals from the government (and even this has limits), but it does nothing to address the social consequences of what one might say — but it is the social consequences that the Left is concerned about controlling — or so they say. In reality, the Laws of Human Nature will always apply, namely The Law of Sowing and Reaping, The Law of Responsibility, and The Law of Respect. Thus, these social consequences cannot be very well controlled by the government, and perhaps not even their place to do so. In effect, the new regulations are more about policing The Narrative and shutting down conservative / dissident voices, which amounts to a violation of 'free speech'.

Red Pill Apostle added [emphasis mine],

> "The first amendment was always about being free from the fear of legal persecution over thought. It was never intended to be a guard against any and all social consequences stemming from being a dumbass.
>
> Up until the past few generations, there was a collective understanding that the freedoms that were prevalent in the West were balanced against personal responsibility. In other words, only a moral and upright people can be free because they know self-regulation is the price for maintaining freedom. Excessive abuse of those freedoms is how the case is made by the politically power hungry, which is almost all politicians, that government needs to step in to right the wrongs of the excessive."

'Free Speech' is Tentative

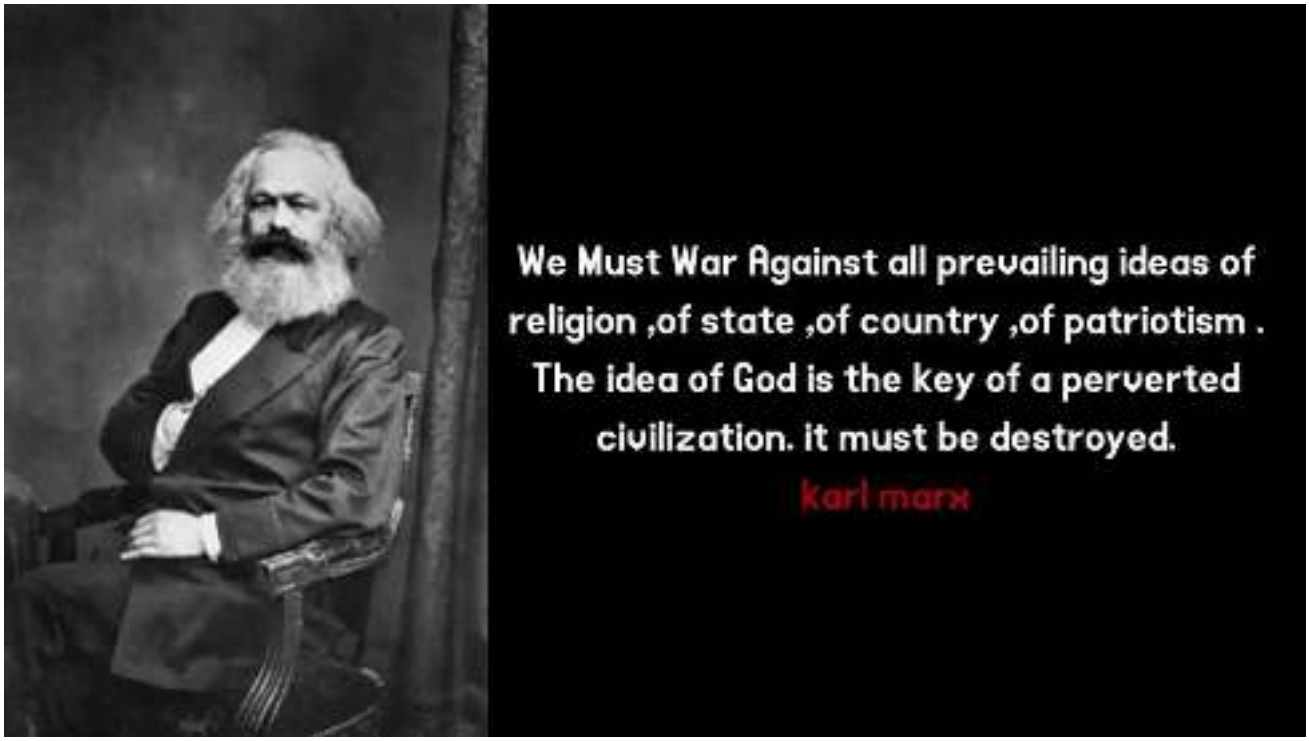
Oscar said,

> "The argument over whether absolutely free speech exists or not is silly. It's like arguing about whether or not an absolutely free market exists. In real life every market includes some form of coercion, whether from politicians or criminals (but I repeat myself). Like absolutely free markets, absolutely free speech only exists in theory. Everyone already knows that. Thanks Captain Obvious.
>
> The question is not whether absolutely free speech exists or not. Some of the questions are…
>
> 1. Would you rather have more freedom to speak your mind in public, or less freedom to speak your mind in public?
> 2. How do we get there?
> 3. What constitutes speech? (Hint: no, pornography does not constitute speech. That's why leftists invented the vague term "freedom of expression".)

> There are other useful questions, but "Does absolutely free speech exist?" is not one of them."

To further inform Oscar's first question, limiting the First Amendment via censorship, delinquency, punitive measures, etc. might temporarily ameliorate the negative social consequences of free speech (as is claimed by the Left, if they are in fact negative), but it is chasing the wind — a band aid on a broken leg. It will force dissident voices to go underground and become boiling cauldrons, their views magnified in echo chambers. It will stoke distrust of gubmint, fear, and unrest. Laws and policies cannot rescind The Law of Proactivity. They might be able to shut people up, but the volatility will spill out in some other way. 'Good' laws and policies should motivate citizens to be more proactive, rather than defensive and/or reactive.

In the remainder of this post, I'll opine on Oscar's second question, "How do we get there?" Or rather, "Why are we losing ground on already being there?" Then answers to Oscar's third question may be more obvious. I'll answer this third question in a separate post or two.



Tentative 'Rights'

A while back, Red Pill Apostle wrote,

> "Rights are actually not privileges, but entitlements that are not to be infringed upon. There is a parallel with marriage and how our governance here in the States was established with the constitution.
>
> The founding fathers recognized that it is God, who as the authority over creation, who established rights and then did their best to create a system of governance that upheld the rights God gives to people. What they recognized is that human nature will always want to take or limit the rights God gives people and so the system they created looks to limit the power and authority of government to infringe on citizens due to the failings of humans when they have power over others. The closer we have been to this model the more prosperous we tend to be with the opposite also being true. It's not perfect in a fallen world but the trends are there."

From a Biblical standpoint of God's covenantal law, a right is that which is right to do or have, with the recognition that our obedience carries God's blessings and favor under the New Covenant. The whole legitimacy of political 'rights' rests on the responsibility of governing authorities to enable citizens to do what is right in this regard. Anything less than this, or contrary to this is a violation of the covenant / social contract.

'Rights' have never been in full alignment with Covenant prerogatives. Hundreds of years ago, 'rights' meant that mechanisms were in place to prevent governing powers from abusing their subjects. Today, 'rights' constitute a philosophical construct more than any real judicial or political powers. The common idea taught in schools and held by the general public is that a right is a privilege guaranteed by law or an entitlement that is not to be infringed upon. But when push comes to shove, individual 'rights' are subject to higher powers more than the other way around.

One needs to look no further than divorce courts to see that no such 'rights' exist, only via the serendipitous wisdom of individual judges who by divine providence happen to be God-fearing. This is why I believe Trump's selection of hundreds of conservative judges did more for American's civil 'rights' than anything done by the civil or women's rights movements.

The Social Contract

The so called 'social contract' is the secular sociopolitical equivalent of a Biblical Covenant which gives a similar structure of agreeing to not impose on our God-given entitlements.

Within God's Order, we are to respect the privileges of others to see that ours are also respected in turn. We are to abstain from various abuses to ensure that we ourselves are not put asunder.

The more the secular 'social contract' lines up with the Biblical Covenant, the more it will thrive and be blessed. The more each person is enabled to reign in the desire to violate the precepts of the Covenant, the more prosperous the community / nation tends to be. As I've said before, society is only as good as its least moral members are willing to oblige, especially those in positions of leadership.

While in a fallen world, we are not going to have a perfect social order, but we can easily see the trend that the closer people get to upholding God's blueprint for a society, the stronger the society tends to be in terms of domestic peace, opportunity, order, prosperity, security… in a word, freedom. True freedom of speech comes downwind from that.

But all this has broken down. Currently, we see Western societies deviating significantly from the Covenant Order.

In its place, we see people being conditioned and pressured into living by a ‘New Order’, which is far from the Covenant ideal. Thus, what is considered ‘free speech’ will likewise be markedly different, and already is.

Related

- Σ Frame: Political Correctness is Personality Castigation! (2007/1/5)
- Σ Frame: Why Political Correctness won’t solve Racism (2016/9/7)
- Σ Frame: The Tone Police – to protect and serve the rabble (2019/1/12)
- Σ Frame: The Egosyntonic Art of Tone Policing (2019/5/31)
- Σ Frame: Rights and Responsibilities within Marriage (2022/1/21)
- Vox Popoli: I do not support free speech (2023/6/18)
- Σ Frame: No Virtue Exists Without Masculine Incentives (2024/6/28)
- Catacomb Resident: Defending the Covenant (2024/8/4)
- Catacomb Resident: Fleshly Politics (2024/8/13)

Belief, Cognition, and Faith

Jack · 15 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Faith reaches beyond the confines of the mind.

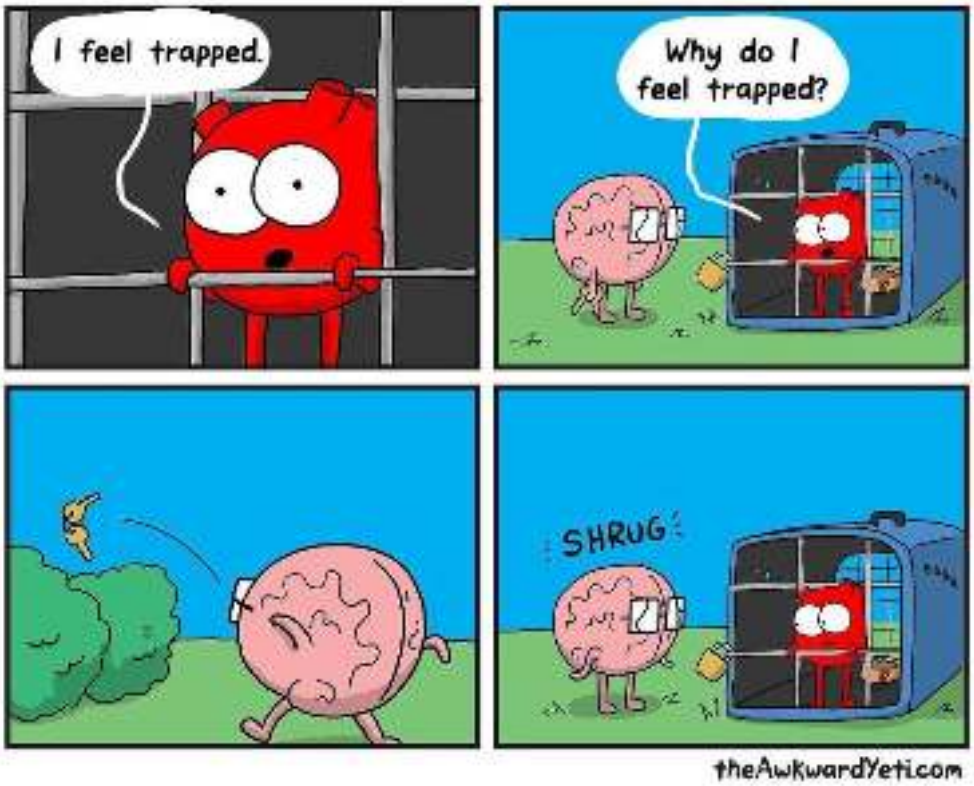
Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Community / Free Speech / Metacognitions / Sectarianism
Length: 1,500 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

Perspectives of Faith

In his post, On Prophets and Prophecy (2024/8/6), Derek L. Ramsey stated that Christian mysticism (i.e. the meta-religion of Radix Fidem) rejects the workings of the mind and rational thought altogether, and he even goes so far as to say,

> "Scripture is a threat to the Radix Fidem doctrine, which tells you that it is a fleshly doctrine that comes from man."

This is so far-fetched, I don't even know where he came up with this misrepresentation.



What is Truth?

The way I understand it, the mind is limited in what it can perceive and what it can do.

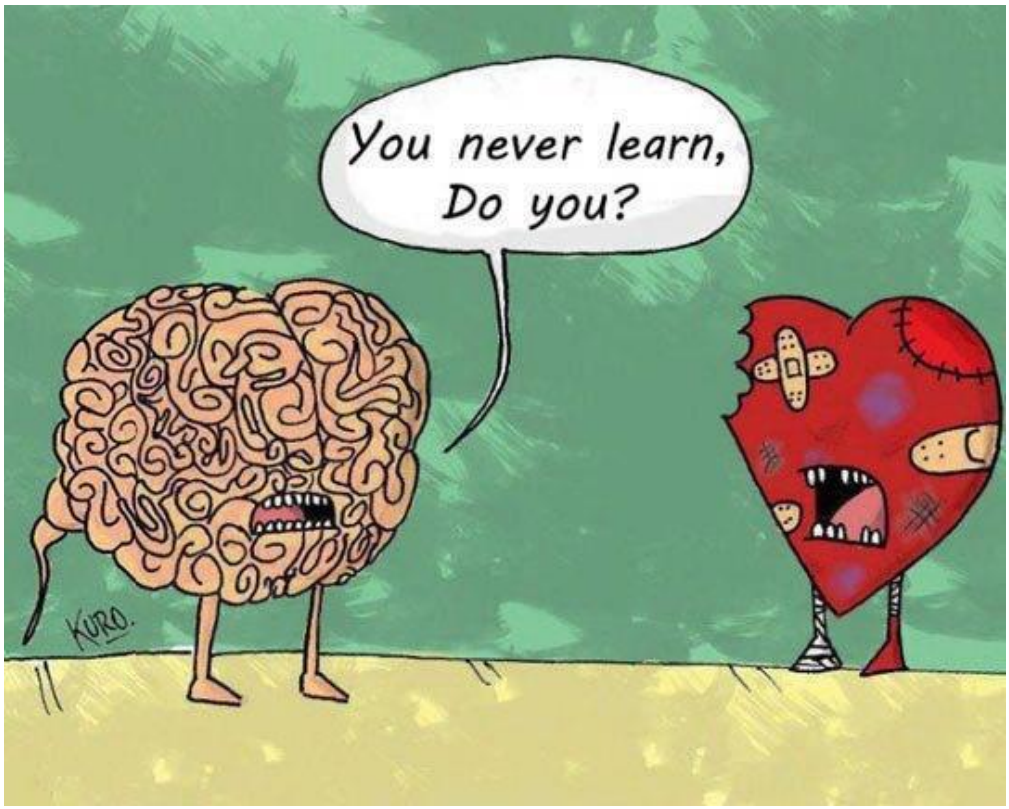
Did you know… a rational argument can be constructed to defend any position, no matter whether it is true or false. Just invent a convincing, heart-tugging narrative, claim ¡ScIeNcE!, cite 'ExPeRtS', cherry pick the info, finesse the data, reverse engineer the statistics, etc. Talk about things from a female perspective. Throw in a few scripture references to catch the Big Eva Fundies. Add some trendy jargon to fire up the young. There will surely be a sizeable number of numbskulls who will eat it up.

This subjective variability of 'TrUtH' was a lesson we learned from the "Post Truth" era, ca. 2018. Ultimately, it comes down to what you believe is true, how much interest and time you're willing to invest in tracking stuff down, and how skilled you are in flushing out bias. Rational arguments, which are limited by the creativity of the mind BTW, are no longer taken very seriously unless one already happens to agree with the argument presented. They are only useful for providing the words to express your belief.

In general, religion is intended to provide an understanding of those areas of metaphysical / spiritual reality that the mind cannot apprehend. The current outstanding problem is that Protestant Christianity fails to provide this understanding. Eastern Orthodoxy does a lot better. Without this understanding, religion loses its most important value and is reduced to an instrument for establishing and regulating social norms. This is precisely why the Western Church is becoming increasingly irrelevant.

Truth is Paradoxical

Another thing is that Derek is mistaking 'feelings' for 'discernment' and 'discernment' for 'judgment', leading to many false conclusions. There is a difference that he fails to recognize.



I believe Derek's main upset is the all too common irony that one's perceptions of truth do not always align with commonly accepted doctrine. What a man might glean through faith or necessity doesn't always line up with scripture — or so it may seem.

News Flash: Truth is paradoxical, and the scriptures are filled with the paradoxes of truth. For example…

- Abraham understood by faith that God wanted him to sacrifice his son, which appeared very much like the pagan child sacrifice of his day and age (Genesis 22).
- Elisha respected Naaman's duties to the king despite him being complicit in the worship of his local deity (2 Kings 5).
- David and his companions ate the consecrated show bread, which was not lawful for them to eat, but only for the priests (1 Samuel 21:1-6; Matthew 12:1-8).
- King David called his Son (Jesus) 'Lord' (an inversion of patriarchal authority) (Matthew 22:41-46).

There are many others.

Paradoxes of truth are also seen IRL. For example…

- Why are people overtaken by the thing they are most afraid of?
- Why are women attracted specifically to men who won't commit?
- Why did God reveal the truths of The Red Pill to promiscuous pagan PUAs, while many pious Protestant pastors still can't 'get it'?

Faith Transcends the Paradoxical

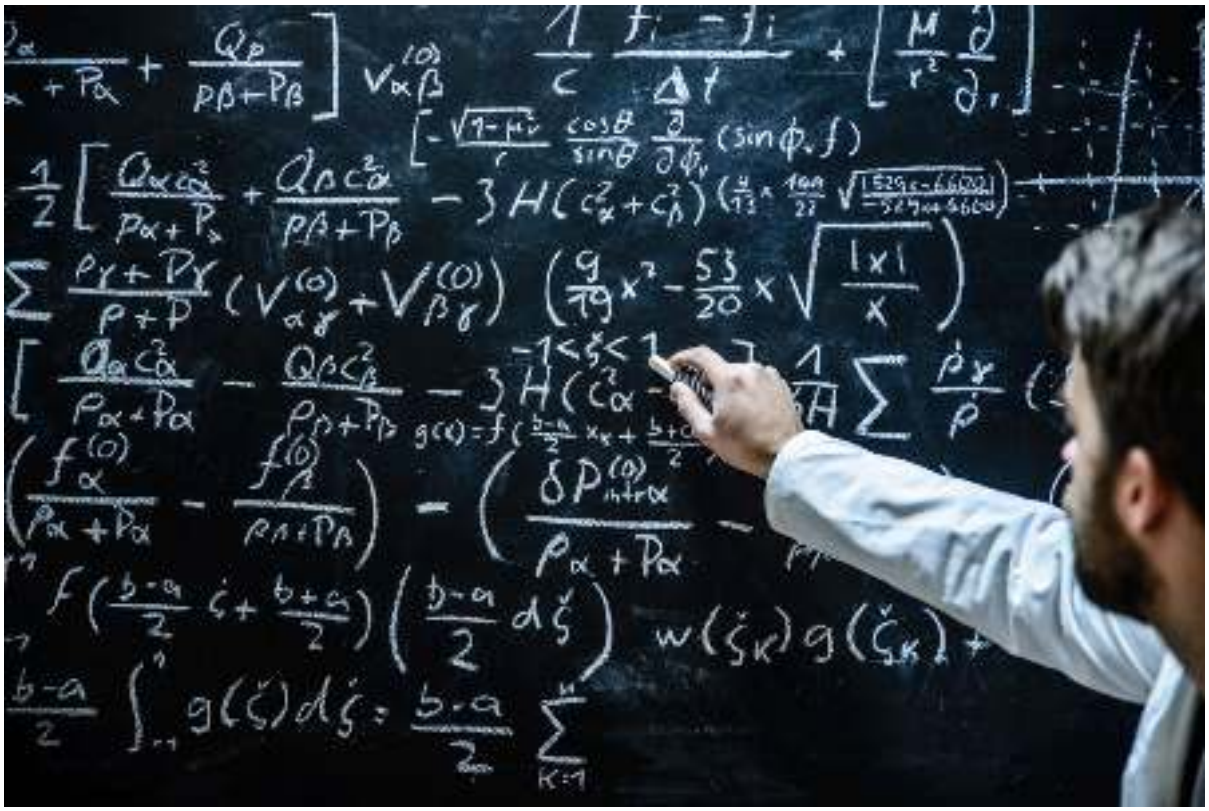
Ironies and paradoxes abound in grey areas like these, and scriptures arguing both for and against can be cited. To be clear, it is not the scriptures that are contradictory or wrong, but our inability to wield the implicit truths contained therein in a wise and timely manner with respect to the context at hand.

To offer a hyperbolic but easily relateable example, if you're the victim of an armed robbery, you won't have time to identify the make of the weapon, calculate projectile trajectories, and call your lawyer before deciding whether you should respond with leth@l force. A more pertinent example might be the decision of how much money to put in the offering plate when you're out of work and can't even buy groceries for your family (Luke 21:1-4).

How to decide?

It is easy to know what the Bible says at face value. It is more difficult to correctly interpret what it means in the here-and-now.

In doing so, it's easy to "get lost in $S_{ub}S^{c}Ri_{p}^{t}$ land", as my college physics professor liked to say, and fall into analysis paralysis.

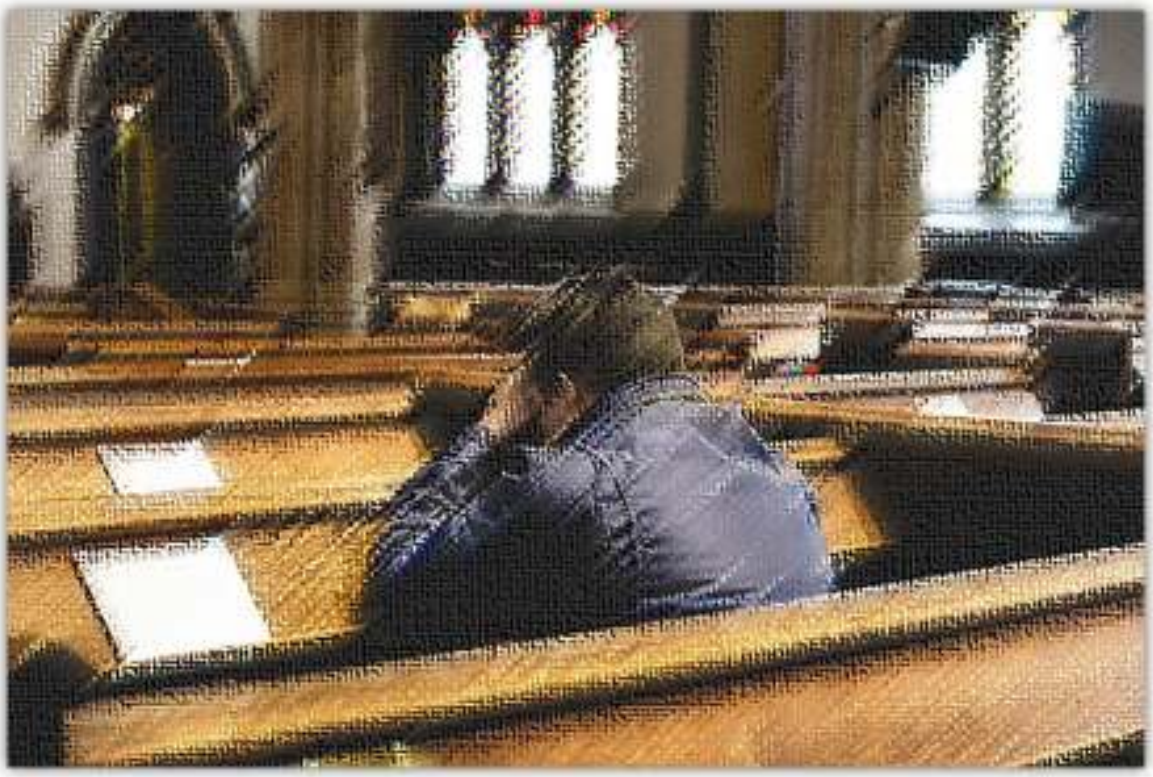


It is easy to tell right from wrong in the most obvious black-and-white cases, but life isn't like that. Doctrinal knowledge has limited value to us as individuals if we are not able to discern the truths it speaks of in our daily lives and apply it towards faithful decision-making. We need to know how to recognize right from wrong and God's perfect will in all the little grey areas of our lives.

This is the challenge of faith.

At some point, one's faith must necessarily surpass the limitations of the mind's cognitions and the understanding permitted thereof. If faith were entirely rational, then it would be philosophy — not faith. That's what faith is all about.

Such grey areas are where faith comes to the fore, and with it, a recognition of authority (i.e. God's) and humility. If confusion is present, then one needs to further hone their senses to discern good from evil, even and especially within those confusing grey areas (Hebrews 5:12-14). I wrestled with this myself (and continue to do so), and I dare say no one can further one's spiritual maturity without going through a similar crisis of faith.



Perspectives of Cognition

In the past, some men have pointed out that I was asking the wrong questions, which is to "assume the wrong starting point for enquiry, for analysis and reasoning", as Bruce Charlton illustrated in his post, The wrong starting point in philosophy and for Christian faith (2024/7/4). Most of them did not have the words to describe the 'right' approach, or they rejected a mystical approach, or had nothing better to suggest, and therefore could not add to my understanding of the proper way to regard the issue. They could offer no insight that would help me refine my own discernment. However, there were two men who steered me in the right direction, my pastor and Ed Hurst. After talking with my pastor and corresponding with Ed for a time, I came to understand that the correct starting point is not the obvious, or that which happens to pique my interest, or reflect my own intellectual need or spiritual shortcoming, or even what appears to be missing in my faith understanding, but rather, that which apprehends God's glory and purposes with the aim of clearing up or removing that which detracts or obscures the knowledge of Him. This difference in perspective may seem to be small or the same, or trite particulars to some, but in fact, this shift in awareness makes all the difference in getting to the heart of matters. Of course, this in itself is somewhat of a challenge, as it requires great discernment and a bit of prayer to identify and tune into what I might call the Divine Frame. I'm not sure that I've got that part down pat just yet, but at least I'm on the right track. I believe it is helpful to discuss it with other men and increase our awareness.

Conclusions

All this is closely related to the problem of sorting out whatever information we might come across in the media. How do we know what is good or bad, what is right or wrong, what is true or false, what is useful or trivial? How to exercise wisdom?

Free speech has value in this regard, as it allows us to discuss, sort through, and refine our thoughts and beliefs about the issues in question.

Some men are encouraging others to look into these things, discuss these matters, and thereby increase their discernment. Others are shutting down the questioning by condemning it as 'false', 'heretical', 'unscriptural' and even 'demonic'. Others are proffering other paradigms of cognition that distract and avoid such introspection.

Readers must see through this and come to terms with their own faith beliefs.

Related

- Σ Frame (Jack): On the discernment and wisdom of true morality (2019/2/2)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Unconditional Atonement, Limited Election (2019/10/18)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Three Kinds of Discernment (2020/9/25)
- Σ Frame (Novaseeker): What is the Authority of the Bible, and why is this Important? (2020/11/12)
- Σ Frame (Richard P): A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality (2021/3/19)
- Σ Frame (Novaseeker): Viewpoints on Man's Confusion about How God Works in the Life of a Believer (2021/3/29)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Juxtaposing the Temporal and the Eternal (2021/4/26)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Noetic Nose Knows (2021/9/6)
- Σ Frame (Jack): Dealing with Discernment (2021/9/17)

Free Speech — Conduct, Purposes, and Standards

Jack · 16 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

How we conduct ourselves sets the tone of fellowship.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Community / Free Speech / Problems with The Red Pill / Infighting / Sectarianism / Metacognitions
Length: 500 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

Conduct

While the Bible warns against getting entangled in futile arguments, it also encourages us to share the hope that lies within us with gentleness and respect (1 Peter 3:15). Many verses in the Bible instruct us to always be prepared to give a defense for what we believe and why. It also says to deal with unbelievers with patience and grace (Colossians 4:5-6), and I think that also includes apologetics, debate, polemics, discussions on blogs, etc.

Purposes

In Vectors of Conflict (2024/6/17), I concluded that…

> "…we can be thankful that we have the freedom to discuss such things and the liberty to draw our own conclusions and make our own decisions, even when none of the choices are good. There may come a day, maybe soon, when we shall not have such freedoms and liberties any longer. Let us be thankful for the Manosphere and The Red Pill as a vector of truth, and let us pray that the infighting may continue, but with more introspection and greater wisdom — such that the stumbling stone may be transformed into a whetstone — and bear much fruit for the glory of God."
>
> "Let your words be helpful for the edification of other Christian Men (Ephesians 4:29)."

In short, be thankful, be thoughtful, be helpful, and give glory to God.

Standards

Let's use the above scripture references and passages in bold as a standard to judge the value and purpose of free speech and the regulation thereof, i.e. of hosting / commenting on a blog in this case.

Let us also remember that 'edification' is not always flowery feel-goods, but is sometimes challenging and/or offensive to the fleshly nature.

So when writing posts / comments that address others' arguments and opinions, then we should keep it fresh and buoyant, true to the bone, supported by evidence, scripture, and/or a clear statement of conviction, and not bitter or scathing in the least. We should attempt to create the interaction we wish to have, even when and especially when others attempt to poison the forum with bad faith arguments, bitterness, etc. Remember, The Objectivity of Offense Constitutes Respect, and "Be British."

We need to watch our wording carefully because any unclear context, wrong words, confusing presumptions, or lack of generosity in interpreting another's words, will affect our credibility, impact, fellowship, legacy, and reputation. I believe we'll all get better results and more spiritual blessings and protection this way.

Comparing Criteria

Now, we might ask ourselves… How is this approach any different from The Regime's excuse for the crackdown?

> "We are restricting freedom, but we're doing it for the common good."

The differences are…

	The Regime™	The Based / Christian Sphere
Purpose	Eliminate dissent	Edification
Methods	Censor / control / mediate / suppress online speech.	Communication of ideas / discussion

Guidance / Leadership	Dark principalities and powers, AKA TPTB, The Regime™, etc.	Blog hosts, reputed commenters, pastors, et al. with the Spirit's blessings.
Enforcement	'Cancelling' / censorship / shadowbanning / etc.	Self-control / self-discipline
Consequences	Punishment (fines, prison) for offenders.	'Fruits' or else no 'fruit' / schisms.

Related

- Σ Frame: Objective Communications for Effective Group Leadership (2021/11/1)
- Σ Frame: The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)
- Σ Frame: Vectors of Conflict (2024/6/17)
- Σ Frame: What Plato's Allegory of the Cave Teaches Men (2024/8/2)

Free Speech – The Need for Leadership

Jack · 17 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An exploration of how Vox Day could improve his ministry to men.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Community / Free Speech / Problems with The Red Pill / Infighting / Sectarianism / Metacognitions
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Leadership is Greatly Needed

One takeaway from our study of Problems with The Red Pill was the importance of leadership and that men are desperately needing leaders. (See sections "The Vacancy of Authority", "A Failure of Imagination", and "Infighting".) The reasons for this were discussed in Vectors of Conflict (2024/6/17), and are here summarized as…

- To mediate conflict.
- To offer encouragement.
- To explain areas of confusion.
- To provoke greater self-awareness.
- To foster and guide critical thinking.
- To illuminate meaning and purpose.
- To inspire introspection and self-analysis.
- To set a positive example of masculinity for other men to emulate and/or learn from.

Case Study — Vox's Sociosexual Hierarchy

In response to Provoking a Perfunctory Parapet of Puppets (2024/8/7), Determined Omega wrote an excellent description of one such example of how and why men need guidance [emphasis mine].

> "…there is however a problem with your overall analysis [of Vox's SSH]. A lot of the listed problems are not inherent or otherwise necessitated by the SSH itself. We can be critical of the SSH as a tool but the main question should always be "Is it accurately and usefully describing reality?" and nothing else. Every other question is a matter of how people interpret the model. It is meant for social strategy and tactics. The fact that people misconstrue or import meaning onto the SSH is a problem of cultural lenses, personal baggage, and how the SSH is explained in biased or loaded terms by others. If you approach the SSH like Vox would, in a dispassionate and Machiavellian way, all of these problems cease to exist.
>
> All of that is to say that the real problem is people's inability to properly utilize the SSH in a constructive way. Most people are not socially strategic and are quite literally not capable of just picking it up and using it as intended without lots of practice. Like any skill, using the SSH takes time and effort. It is possible the Manosphere at large simply is not yet ready to use it without abusing it."

All of that is to say that men need a mentor and/or are looking for a leader. We can never take our eyes off of that purpose — supporting the men within our domain of influence. The problem is that Vox won't touch that role even though he's already wearing the mantle and has a very large following, and has been for ~18 years.

Conduct

I proposed a standard of conduct for communications in the previous post.

> "While the Bible warns against getting entangled in futile arguments, it also encourages us to share the hope that lies within us with gentleness and respect (1 Peter 3:15). Many verses in the Bible instruct us to always be prepared to give a defense for what we believe and why. It also says to deal with unbelievers with patience and grace (Colossians 4:5-6), and I think that also includes apologetics, debate, polemics, discussions on blogs, etc."
>
> "[Through our interactions] the stumbling stone may be transformed into a whetstone — and bear much fruit for the glory of God."
>
> "Let your words be helpful for the edification of other Christian Men (Ephesians 4:29)."

In my review of Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy, one of my chief criticisms was that Vox is NOT this way towards many of his commenters whom he calls 'Gammas'.

Denying the Role of Leadership is Abandoning One's Disciples

In response to Gammas – The Manosphere's Untouchables (2024/7/26), Determined Omega wrote in defense of Vox's style [emphasis mine].

> "As for VD's ego, I think what people are actually picking up is extreme disagreeableness. He has said time and time again that he does not desire or try to cultivate a cult of personality and that the ideas are more important than he is. People often conflate confidence and low-warmth with self-conceit."

No matter how much Vox may want to emphasize that his ideas are greater than himself, or strive to avoid creating a "cult of personality" (a term that is disrespectful when used to refer to a true authority and his followers, which Vox is and has, respectively), Vox cannot deny his role of being a leader of men. The fact is that he is teaching ideas and setting an example that many other men are following, whether he likes this or wants this or not. Vox cannot escape The Law of Sowing and Reaping and The Law of Responsibility.

Under the same post, Info left a tweet from Adam Lane Smith that said,

> "True leadership in a relationship is about guiding, not dictating"

To which Determined Omega responded [emphasis mine],

> "This making of distinctions without differences and trying to soften the objectively harsh world of leadership is another example of how uncomfortable men have gotten with authority. Dictating is just another way of guiding. Sometimes people need to be told exactly what to do with no room for questions."

Seeing how Vox Day is hesitant to insert himself into his writings, apparently, he is also 'uncomfortable' with his authority.

Conclusions

Concerning the Christian blogosphere (of which Vox Day is a part), I think it matters not so much that the commenters fall in line with the foundational beliefs and/or the spirit of the blog, but that the host demonstrates a good example for other men to follow, and that the grace of God is demonstrated through the host. This creates an environment that attracts like thinkers and sets the tone of interaction. This is how blog hosts 'guide' / 'dictate' the atmosphere of their blogs. Ask me how I know.

Vox Day may very well be the most brilliant thinker in the Christian Manosphere, but he is unwilling or unable to take responsibility for how his SSH is received and interpreted by men who are seeking community, leaders / examples of leadership, fellowship, and 'meaning'. He'll never go 'meta', and this is his greatest incompetency in the eyes of God.

We can never escape 'meaning', as troublesome as it may be, and 'meaning' is only found through fellowship and purpose. IMPO, I think Vox won't step up to that calling because he is unable to do so. He's good with ideas, but NOT with shepherding men (and I'm being generous in this assessment of him). I've written this post in the hope that this might change.

Related

- Σ Frame: Profile of an Excellent Leader (2014/12/22)
- Σ Frame: Objective Communications for Effective Group Leadership (2021/11/1)
- Σ Frame: The Slow Demise of Masculine Leadership (2023/9/1)
- Σ Frame: The Cold Christian Shoulder (2023/12/7)
- Σ Frame: Red Pill Roadmap (2024/7/5)

Meritocracy vs. True Upward Mobility

Jack · 19 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

They're no longer the same.

Readership: All; young men
Theme: Community
Length: 1,900 words
Reading Time: 10 minutes

Intro

Educated men used to be so rare. Back in the 1940s, only 6% of Americans had a baccalaureate or higher.

In 1942, my grandfather earned a Masters degree in mathematics, which also secured him the respect of a highly reputed social status, a smoking hot wife, and his choice of any number of well-paying positions of a white-collar professional capacity. During WW2, the demand for intelligentsia was so great that he was drafted into the Army Air Force, not as a soldier, but as an engineer in a local aircraft factory that was developing the P-75 Eagle, an experimental long-range, high-performance fighter. Afterwards, he enjoyed a long career as a superintendent of public schools before retiring to the sunshine state of Florida.

Times have changed since then. Nowadays, close to 40% of Americans have a bachelors degree, 8% have a Masters, and 1.2% have a Ph.D. Tertiary education is as common today as secondary education was back in my granddad's day.

But as the scarcity of higher education has decreased, apparently so has the value.

What is the Value of an Education Anymore?

A while back, 5 years ago exactly, Farm Boy observed that having a Bachelor's degree isn't as socially stratospheric as it was in times past. This is even more relevant today.

> "Over the past twenty-five years or so, there has been a movement toward requiring certifications for potential work, often instead of a university education. These are often in vocations, often very technical ones, that require proof of the skills needed.
>
> Some of the more famous examples are in the computer industry, from such companies as Microsoft or Cisco. In these cases, often the students might have gone to the university, but choose this route instead.
>
> Universities naturally enough state that they are the path to true success. There is the claim that they will build a graduate with a well-rounded education, one that can engage in the critical thinking many jobs require. Of course, they will do so for a pretty penny.
>
> As mentioned here before, a modern university education in anything other than a STEM field (or perhaps a vocation or business admin) is less than useless, as it probably saddles you with debt, and in addition, degrades your thinking ability. So for young men, perhaps some type of certification is the best route for you; less time, less cost, and more focused on job skills.
>
> As for the ladies, some do the certification thing. But perhaps more chase after the much more prestigious university education. Typically, they are in soft areas, often in some type of 'studies'. There have been lots of corporate and government jobs for these types in the past. Will there be in the future? Perhaps not. Ideally, the silliness will end soon enough. Perhaps it might be better for young women to go the certificate route also. Just a thought."
>
> Spawny's Space (Farm Boy): Certification vs. University (2019/1/22)

Poor Quality Education

Buena Vista wrote,

> "Properly delivered, the liberal arts do teach one to think critically and write very well (writing, per se, is a collapsing skill in the digital screens era); the liberal arts do teach one how to be a lifelong learner, which for most people predicts better intellectual and mental health into old age. Whether or not one can find a liberal arts college in which such skills are primary, instead of secondary to a feminine-primary culture that prizes > political indoctrination, is the question. And it's a real question. At present I can think of a couple. There used to be 50."

>
> "So I think that, properly delivered, a liberal arts degree offers much that enriches life and enables a high-performance professional. But I keep saying, "properly delivered", don't I?"

Farm Boy responded,

> "If only the universities delivered as they did in the past…
>
> Presently, they do a poor job with respect to the "critical thinking" aspect. Many studies have shown as much."

Trade School Might Fare Better

Cill advised,

> "Research is complicated by the nomenclature. "College" in some countries is synonymous with "university" and in other countries with "trade school" (completely different). My part of the world is different again – "college" by itself is too vague and always comes with a qualifier such as "technical" or "engineering" or "fine arts".
>
> It's simpler to think of it as just two fields: Trade Schools for practical courses focused on career or vocation, and Universities for the traditional "higher learning" that has been polluted by left-wing ideology."

This is how it is in Taiwan. There are two educational systems — 'Formal' (University) and 'Technical' (trade schools). In addition to technical training in practical skills, technical schools offer advanced degrees (M.Sc., Ph.D.). However, fewer young people are pursuing university degrees anymore. The recent trend in Taiwan since the pandemic is the micro business model (about 1,500 $ft.^2 \approx 140\ m^2$ in floor space and 3-5 employees), designing specialized products that are contracted with local manufacturers, sold online, and distributed by mail (e.g. Alibaba, eBay, Shopee, et al.). The construction industry in Taiwan is now changing their designs of commercial buildings to accommodate this rising demand.

Thedeti opines,

> "As a man who earned a bachelor's degree and a law degree in the late 80s and early 90s, if I had it to do over again now, I wouldn't. There's no way I'd spend the money or time to become a lawyer now. I'd do a trade apprenticeship. Electrician, plumber, pipefitter, steamfitter, carpenter, HVAC, machinist, welder, mechanic. Those jobs will always be here, cannot be outsourced remotely, and consistently pay well. (When you need it fixed or repaired NOW, you will pay my reasonable prices.) These guys can make good money if they have a few guys working under them and run their own businesses. Every locale needs them.
>
> Or, I'd go into health care (but I'm not sure I could pass O-chem). People are always getting sick, always needing someone to take care of them.
>
> Or maybe IT. Guys are doing pretty well in IT now."

Buena Vista wrote,

> "Incidentally, I had classmates that went into the trades. Not a lot, but some. They're making bank. I almost became a tradesman after college: I was accepted both to Navy AOCS and the maritime union's engineering officer training program. If I could pass a medical now, I'd be doing a trade — flying charters or corporate. Instead, I'll be doing strategy for a college or interim CEO work for broken companies, but the latter two require thinking, reading, and writing skills, as well as speaking and leadership skills, that may not be learned in a certification process.

> So, net, I lament the decline of the liberal arts, but prize the education and training I received there."

For many years, it used to be that joining the military was an excellent choice for young, able-bodied men who had no aspirations for a career that required a degree. But anymore, it's hard to swear allegiance and put your life on the line for a government that wages continual wars for no other reasons than to cripple foreign powers and to support domestic industries that give politicians kickbacks. They don't even care if the war is won or lost.

Ineffective Job Placement

Farm Boy cited an article from the Foundation for Economic Education. It states,

> "The ISA model makes sense and is popular among students. They don't have to pay anything up front, they receive training, and they only pay Lambda School back if they get a job earning more than $50,000/year. And it's an improvement upon the sometimes-shoddy tuition-based model employed by coding boot camps since the industry started years ago.
>
> But universities don't seem to do a great job at getting people jobs. As much as 40 percent of recent grads are working jobs that don't require college degrees. Many of those working jobs that do require degrees landed those jobs through networking and recruiting, not through university career placement services.
>
> But this goes deeper than universities not doing a great job with placement. They don't do a great job at making people smarter, either."
>
> Foundation for Economic Education: Universities Face Increased Pressure from Job Programs That Generate Results, Not Just Debt (2019/1/14)

I've always thought that state or city governments should have a job placement bureau that is dedicated to help the unemployed find work, help young people with no working experience to get started, and to help everyone match up with the jobs that best fit their education, skills, and aptitude. This would surely keep unemployment down below 5%. But unfortunately, I think this would never be implemented in the U.S., because it's just more bureaucracy that smells too much like socialism.

The Same Goes for Women too

RedPillGirl added,

> "[My daughter and I are] not convinced college is the way to go. … today it doesn't provide the advantage it once did. … today it seems to be about having the knowledge or ability more than it is about having a degree. Writing, for example, was something that once required a college degree stamp of approval. Today with the Internet, it doesn't. Same with what I do now. I could get a degree in it but I just started doing it; I taught myself and mentored others. I am sure studying it formally has its advantages but I am living proof it isn't required. [My daughter is] thinking of working in the family biz. I told her the main advantage I saw in going to school for it would likely be the networking and knowing many peers in the same industry. But unlike them she has a place to work so she wouldn't need the connections to get a job like others might. Being able and having the knowledge to do the job well is really what matters. She could get that with a few classes. Or just by helping her mom! Of course, some jobs require a degree and then it's necessary, but it is fewer and fewer all the time."

Women should always remember that their lives will be difficult if they prioritize education and career over everything else. Ideally, a woman should have a husband to rely on so that she will not be so pressured to support herself. Husband security is better than job security. For married women, working is more or less optional. These days, VERY few women earn the solid security and comfortable lifestyle of having a loving husband and family during their later years. Women find out too late in life how much they want that option.

Conclusions

All these fine observations are even more true today. Investing time and $$$ in a formal education doesn't have the same return$ it once did, and degrees don't carry that much prestige anymore either.

All things considered, income is the bottom line, really.

I strongly advise young men to research the value of a university education, with skepticism as your default position. Instead of focusing on "preparing for a career" by relying on a university education, young men should be focused on finding SOMETHING that they're naturally interested in and skilled in, SOMETHING that they can do to generate $$$. Formal education may or may not be required for this, but it will definitely set one back tens of thousands of bucks or more. And there's currently a poor ROI.

Instead of taking out loans and/or spending 3-4 years worth of wages on a university education, that money might be better spent on technical training, trade school, and/or starting up a small business. Wisdom and self-knowledge will tell. Consult accomplished older men and then do your own thinking outside the box.

Find your purpose, follow your calling, and may the good Lord bless you abundantly.

Related

- Chicago Defender: And You Thought Your College Parties Were Cool (2013/8/14)
- Reason: Making Community College 'Free' Will Harm Serious Students (2019/1/25)
- Σ Frame: What is her true motivation for getting an education? (2022/7/6)
- Σ Frame: Educationalized Racism (2023/7/21)

- Σ Game: Higher Education and Hypergamy (2024/8/19)

Doctor$ are Human$ too

Jack · 20 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Don't trust an expert just because he's an expert.

Readership: All
Theme: Community
Length: 850 words
Reading Time: 4.5 minutes

A Life-Changing Epiphany

Earning a Ph.D. changed my world view.

Earning a Ph.D. in engineering requires one to develop, manipulate, and master a small pocket of theoretical knowledge that is both new and practical.

At the time of my final defense examination, I was discussing my doctoral research with my advisors, five men who were all extremely accomplished, world class experts in their fields. As I delivered my defense, I noticed that each one of them understood the aspects of the ¡ScIeNcE! that had already been developed, but they did not fully comprehend the new contributions I made to ¡ScIeNcE! as well as I did. In fact, they were totally clueless about some of the details of my work. They really didn't know if it was correct or not. When this realization sank in to my conscious awareness, I knew that I had truly become a "doctor of philosophy". I knew something that the most brilliant minds in my field did not.

It was also extremely humbling, because I came face-to-face with the limitations of the human mind. There is so much more beyond our understanding that even the best minds cannot comprehend.

The next big shocker was when I found that some of my work was indeed erroneous, but my advisors never knew it.

I realized that doctors make mistakes, just like everyone else.

Doctors are humans too.

Thus, it is easy for me to understand why highly educated individuals are the least likely to "trust the experts".

Furthermore, I've learned that it is not wise to trust doctors blindly and completely. Being human, it is quite possible for even the finest and most diligent doctors to make mistakes or less than optimal decisions.

Worse, doctors who are less conscientious will, over a lifetime of practice, devise methods to maximize their income through choosing certain diagnoses and approaches to treatment over others.

You see, there are lots of ways to handle a patient without blatantly violating the Hippocratic Oath or being pulled into court for malpractice.

Latent Malpractice

The medical, pharmacological, and psychological professions are incentivized to deliver less than optimal treatment.

For example,

- It's easier to give the patient what they want than what is best for them.
- Doctors are pressured to cave in to social trends that have legal backing, such as what happened with The Gender Dysphoria Epidemic.
- The legal risk of malpractice incentivizes doctors to modify their treatments in order to protect themselves instead of delivering the most optimal treatment.
- Pharmaceutical companies give doctors a monetary incentive to push their pills, which are often new and more or less experimental. The patient plays the guinea pig.
- Using older technology is sometimes easier and more profitable than using newer technology, because they don't have to buy expensive equipment and go through the training to use it. The patient suffers accordingly.
- Obstetricians prefer to do C-sections over natural delivery because then (1) they don't have to poke and prod a hairy vagina and listen to the mother wail and blabber on while they wait, sometimes for hours, for the baby to drop out, (2) they can schedule more deliveries in a day, and (3) they also get paid more for the surgery.

Case Study — Antidepressants

When doctors prescribe treatments to target specific problems, they will prioritize offering treatments they are most familiar with that address that specific health issue and will not always consider or even tell you many of the implications and side-effects that come with that treatment.

Also, doctors have many patients, so they will not spend hours and weeks to study one patient's condition to find a better diagnosis and treatment.

Commenter Jax wrote,

> "Sleep quality, or lack thereof, is what I suspected was the cause of my low T. But my GP suggested that that alone wouldn't cause such a low level. I don't know, honestly. I'm at a normal level now (thanks to medication) despite still unrefreshing sleep. The average day sees me with heavy eyes and wanting to take a nap, although I'm generally unable to.
>
> [Jack] mentioned in a previous post that [he] believes that antidepressants have had a lasting, negative effect on [his] sleep. I naively did a course of antidepressants in my early 20s. It wouldn't surprise me if the same is true for me. A sleep study found nothing significant."

You don't have to be a doctor to read up on medical information, connect the dots, and put 2 and 2 together. But don't be surprised if your doctor blows off your conclusions as ill informed, folk medicine, or mere conjecture. He'll do what is best or easiest or most profitable for himself first, and what is best for you second.

Conclusions

The medical, pharmaceutical, and psychological industries are teeming with rancid Red Pill truths that are hidden away and underdiscussed.

Doctors often choose what is easiest, quickest, most beneficial, or most convenient to THEMSELVES, rather than what is most beneficial to the patient's long term interests.

Doctors will fail to tell you some information and/or relatively more convenient, easy, simple, and less invasive treatments for any number of reasons.

Some information is intentionally withheld, or blocked or shadowbanned on the internet.

Think for yourself. Always do your homework. Don't blindly trust experts. Your own health and well-being hang in the balance.

Related

- Σ Frame: WHO the Health Cares? (2011/9/19)
- Buzz Feed: We Asked Experts To Explain Why People Don't Like Experts (2016/6/23)
- Investment Watch: Gallup: Americans Tend to Trust Only News That Confirms Their Beliefs — Highly Educated Americans Are By Far The Most Closed-Minded Group (2020/9/27)
- The Daily Sceptic: The Most Educated Are the Least Likely to Get Vaccinated Against Covid, According to New U.S. Study (2021/8/11)

Prosperity Grows where the Money Flows

Jack · 21 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

$$$ begets $$$.

Readership: All
Theme: Community
Length: 750 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

One of my students wrote an exceptional thesis on international trade, and I want to share her findings with my readers. Excerpts from her thesis follow [emphasis mine].

Abstract

"This study aims to find the relationship between international trade and economic growth in the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN countries). Three independent variables were used to measure economic growth [the dependent variable] … international trade, the exchange rate, and foreign direct investment (FDI). This study employs a Pedroni panel cointegration test to examine the data from 2004 to 2015. The results show that there is a long-term cointegrated relationship between international trade and economic growth in the ASEAN countries. International trade and direct, foreign investment also have a long-term, positive impact on economic growth. Meanwhile, the exchange rate also has a long-term, negative influence on economic growth. In addition, there is an indirect relationship and bidirectional causalities between the GDP and international trade, as well as between the GDP and the exchange rate. On the other hand, there is a direct relationship and a bidirectional causality between international trade and the exchange rate. The FDI leads GDP, international trade, and exchange rates. Our results suggest that international trade must be supported by government policies that aim to enhance the financing of new investments for economic growth."

Excerpts

> "…international trade and the exchange rate will affect economic growth indirectly. Regarding the direct and indirect effects of causality indicated by this study, there is a bidirectional causality between the GDP and international trade, as well as between the GDP and the exchange rate.
>
> …international trade has significant, direct effects on the exchange rate, with a significance of 1%. So, there is a bidirectional relationship between international trade and the exchange rate. […] In addition, the results indicate that FDI plays an important role for ASEAN countries. FDI leads the GDP, international trade, and exchange rates, and this was proved by the results… This study also supports the previous research of Nistor (2014), which mentions that FDI can be a supporting factor for a country to compete in international trade, and to maintain the economic growth of a country. …these results also suggest that each of the ASEAN countries first needs to create the conditions of a stable political-economic climate that is conducive to investment, such that the country will be able to attract sources of foreign funding more easily."

> "…there is a long-term relationship between international trade, the exchange rate, and FDI, with the economic growth in 10 ASEAN countries. According to the FMOLS and DOLS test results, international trade and FDI have positive effects on the economic growth in 10 ASEAN countries, while the exchange rate has a negative impact on economic growth. In addition, there are indirect relationships and bidirectional causalities between the GDP and international trade, as well as between the GDP and the exchange rate. On the other hand, there is a direct relationship and a bidirectional causality between international trade and the exchange rate. FDI leads the GDP, international trade, and exchange rates."

Epilogue

In plain terms, all this means that prosperity follows investments. Wherever investment capital is directed, economic growth will flourish. It is therefore concluded that underdeveloped countries that wish to develop their economies should be pulling out all the stops to attract foreign investment.

As a side note, a couple previous posts examined how unscrupulous investors are r@p!ng developing economies and nations by investing in their economies and infrastructure and also placing them in debt. (See links below.) But underdeveloped nations are still biting the bait nevertheless.

This also applies to the personal. For the typical man, the applied logic is simple. If you spend money on your house, then your house will be nicer. If you spend money on maintaining your car, then your car will run better and last longer. And so on. Whatever you spend time and $$$ on will blossom and develop.

In simple words, what you feed will grow. The Law of Activity applies.

I think these results are rather intuitive, but now it has been ¡Sc1eNt!f!c@lly! proven.

It needs to be mentioned that not every investment earns positive returns in this way. Spending money on getting an education, or on women who are not under your authority for example, may or may not bring favorable returns. Also, don't forget about the cost of opportunity.

You have about 70 years to earn and spend. Whatever you spend your energy, money, and time on is what will develop into your legacy over your lifetime. Choose wisely and may the good Lord bless you.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Power Play Tactics of Trans-National Corporations (2022/7/20)
- Σ Frame: 10 Dark Aspects of Trans-National Corporations (2022/7/22)

Politicizing Evangelicalism

Jack · 22 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A deceptive W0kist ploy that targets Wh!te Evangelicalism as a political entity.

Readership: All
Theme: (Christian) Community / Free Speech
Length: 1,300 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

> [18] "If the world hates you, you know that it hated Me before it hated you. [19] If you were of the world, the world would love its own. Yet because you are not of the world, but I chose you out of the world, therefore the world hates you.
>
> John 15:18-19 (NKJV)

> [22] Blessed are you when men hate you,
> And when they exclude you,
> And revile you, and cast out your name as evil,
> For the Son of Man's sake.
>
> [26] Woe to you when all men speak well of you,
> For so did their fathers to the false prophets.
>
> Luke 6:22,26 (NKJV)

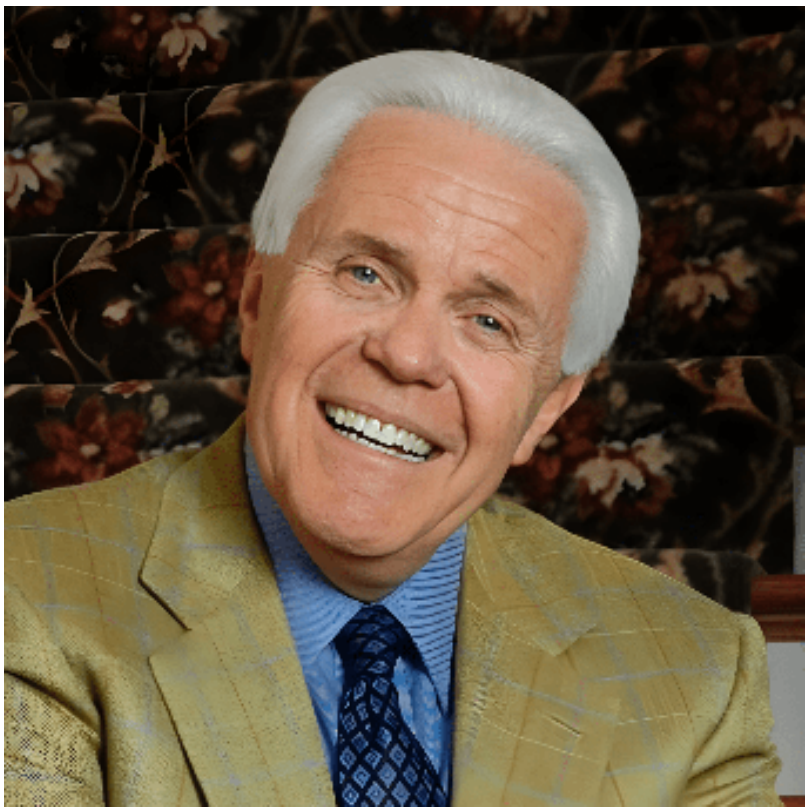
After citing the above passages, Oscar posed an insightful question.

> "Which pastors and churches do unbelievers hate and slander the most? Which pastors and churches do unbelievers speak well of the most?"

He left this open for readers to ponder.



Farther down, Malcolm Reynolds said,

> "The equality religion is not based on the bible, it's because 'Evangelical' is not a religious identity. It's a political one.

To which Oscar replied,

> "Thank you for (unintentionally) helping to answer my questions."

I have to intercede here, because I don't believe MR's statement is very explanatory nor precise, and it didn't answer Oscar's questions.

So let's examine Oscar's question in earnest.

Is Evangelicalism a Religious or Political Identity?

Evangelicalism IS a religious identity that stretches back to the American Protestant revivals of the late 19th century if not earlier, but it has also become a political identity since the 1980s.

In the religious context, the word 'Evangelical" specifically refers to Protestant churches and individuals who espouse two doctrinal concepts in particular — Free Will and The Great Commission (Matthew 28:16-20), as opposed to the 5 TULIPs of Calvinism. They are best known for their verse-by-verse knowledge of the Bible, their vast hymnody, their enthusiastic support for community outreach, their domestic and foreign missions activities, and their crisp sharp appearance.

Over the past century, the sociopolitical identity of Evangelicals has been predominantly middle to upper-middle class conservative Republicans. As the middle class has shrunk in recent years, so have the numbers of Evangelicals, which suggests that Evangelicalism is a lifestyle as much as it is a sect of Protestantism.

Evangelicalism is further described in an article MR shared.

The Atlantic: The Experiment Podcast: 'Evangelical' Is Not a Religious Identity. It's a Political One. (2021/5/13).

Of course, I disagree that 'Evangelical' is NOT ONLY a religious identity, but I do agree that it is also a political one.

This article offers a pretty good summary of the rise of Evangelicalism as a political identity. One part of this article tells the story of how Evangelicalism got its start as a political identity. It reads,

> "One man — a political operative from Georgia named Ralph Reed — devised a plan to harness the energy of young Christians and turn them into America's most powerful voting bloc, one church mailing list at a time."

It goes on to say,

> "But Reed's victory had a cost. Many, many Christians have come to feel that their church cares more about politics than Jesus."

This is certainly true for some individuals and high-ranking leaders, and there has been an increased attrition from churches, but I wouldn't say churches in general are like this.

Polluting Religion with R@ce Politics

It is my belief that Christians and churches should not shy away from addressing social causes. One mark of a good sermon is that the preacher has "a bible in one hand and the newspaper in the other", meaning that he applies scripture to people's daily lives and current events. That includes politics and other sweeping social issues. In general, I think it is good for Christians to be involved with social events and to be influencers and pillars within their communities, but not if it involves worshipping pagan religions (like supporting abortion, Gyn0centr!sm, R@!nb0w fluff, W0k!sm, etc.).

The more outspoken Christians are about social issues, and the more churches participate in opposing anti-Christian social causes, the more of a headache they become for TPTB.

Obviously, the Atlantic article was written to deconstruct political Evangelicalism as an attack on the religious Evangelical community. Further evidence of this effort to undermine the church with W0ke propaganda appears in a follow-up article containing the story of an Evangelical black man who was disturbed by…

> "…r@ce and the hypocrisy he saw among Christians, who he felt paid lip service to d!vers!ty but didn't form substantive relationships with other communities. When he saw how strongly the evangelical world was going to champion Donald Trump, he decided to speak out. He lost money and fans, friends and mentors. And he almost lost his faith."
>
> The Atlantic: The Experiment Podcast: How the Evangelical World Turned on Itself (2021/5/20)

It is not clear what is meant by the word 'communities', or the extent of 'd!vers!ty', whether this implies only black communities or if it includes other groups, e.g. Musl!ms, polygenderists, polysexuals, et al. But coming from The Atlantic, and given the fear-laced tone of these articles, the arguments may very well be extended to others.

The author goes on to conclude,

> "Wh!te evangelicals have arguably never been more powerful as a political force in America than they are now, but political victory has a human cost. People of all kinds of backgrounds have felt gutted by Christian support for Trump. Among Christians, the Trump era's legacy might be fracture, not unity."

I'm pretty sure writings like this are attempting to polarize the church around the r@ce card and hijack the meaning of 'Evangelicalism' to mean strictly a Wh!te sociopolitical identity.

Watch now. Their next move will be to use this argument against political Evangelicalism to condemn religious Wh!te Evangelicals for not bowing to W0ke / D I E ideology. It's probably already happened since this article was written.

Conclusions

Ideally, a church should be a community of souls having the same beliefs and values. Less 'd!vers!ty' is more conducive to having an authentic heart-and-soul community, while more 'd!vers!ty' tends to weaken social capital.

Cultural destroyers / M@rx!sts target the weakest areas of social cohesion, which are (1) socio-economic / political differences, (2) r@cial issues, (3) religion, and (4) women. The D I E rhetoric is a ploy to exacerbate these differences and destroy the social cohesion within authentic communities. The larger, healthier, more conspicuous, more influential, and most lively communities are targeted most intensely, i.e. Evangelicals. Remember, before C R T and W0kism hit the scene, r@ce relations in the U.S. had never been better.

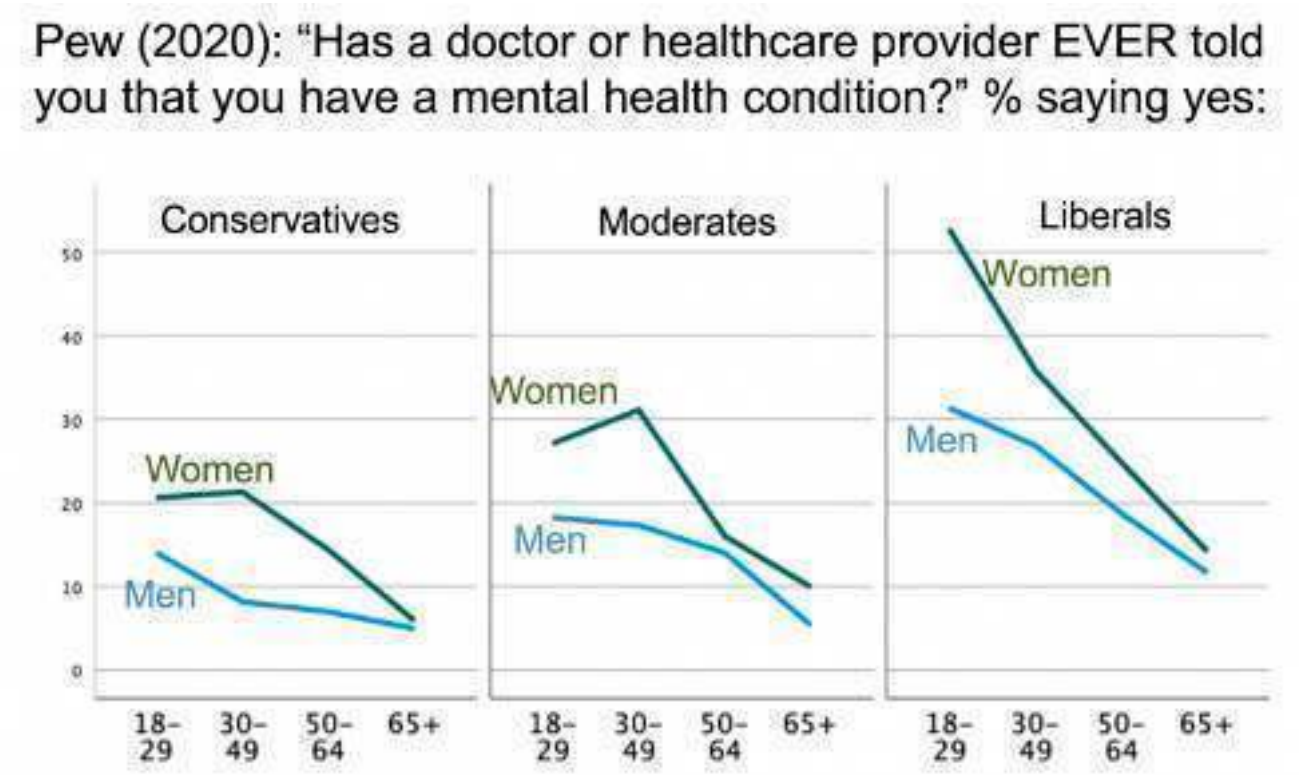

Image Source: After Babel (Jon Haidt): Why the Mental Health of Liberal Girls Sank First and Fastest (2023/3/9)* In this case, we see that the dissension is not actually about 'Evangelicalism', or factions in the church arising from r@ce or doctrine, but is a concerted play to condemn and destroy Evangelicalism by associating it with 'deplorable' Wh!tes and r@c!@l discrimination.

Once you see this, it couldn't be much more obvious.

So we have an answer to Oscar's question,

> "Which pastors and churches do unbelievers hate and slander the most?

Evangelicals.

Why?

Around the Christian Manosphere, we recognize that the REAL problem with Evangelicalism is its convergence with Feminist / Liberal / Progressive / W0ke beliefs — and also that Evangelicals are standing by while the sanctuary is being invaded and desecrated by the advanced infiltration of these beliefs. However, humanist / liberal / progressive pagans perceive the problem with Evangelicalism is that it has NOT converged enough with their debased ideologies.

We can fully expect to see more headlines about the problems and weaknesses among Evangelicals. They're just too good looking, happy, healthy, and wealthy for debased progressive ressentimentalists to ignore.

 H/T: Rob Henderson, Oscar*

Related

- Σ Frame: The Beta Factory (2023/7/24)
- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- Σ Frame: The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)

Tells of a W0ke Church

Jack · 23 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Wh!te Evangelicalism is being subverted by Feminist / Liberal / Progressive / W0ke ideologies. Know the differences.

Readership: All
Theme: (Christian) Community
Length: 850 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

How do we Define a W0ke Church?

Lanora and Gates kneel at the altar rail at St. John's Episcopal Church, Springfield.

Speaking objectively, you might think the answer all depends on whether one is Christian or not, and where one stands on the political spectrum. But in reality, we are seeing that W0ke churches and individuals are straying further away from the core values of Christianity and are making up doctrinal adjustments as well as justifications for doing so. Meanwhile, true Christianity is growing among based conservatives. So it is apparent that, in general, a W0ke church is a religious entity with a cultural identity, rather than a true church that identifies with Christ.

Political Tells of a W0ke Church

In the past, a W0ke / Progressive church or individual was identified along the lines of being politically liberal / Progressive, i.e. NOT being TradCon / Republican / Right Wing. However, we have seen many Right Wing Conservatives and Republicans roll over or sell out, so a stricter test is needed.

Malcolm Reynolds wrote,

> "The central tenet of W0k!sm, namely, psychological equality, was first expressed by the English philosopher John Locke (porn to Puritan parents) in 1690. Locke — the father of both blank slatism and political liberalism…

> Gender equality is a subset of the equality doctrine rooted in the Western religion (Christianity). All partisan camps (liberals and conservatives) subscribe to this equality religion with the exception of the Red Pill camp — persecuted as heretics by everyone, including Christians, for this very reason."

In general, W0ke churches will adhere to the classic liberal political doctrine of Diversity, Inclusion, and Equality (D I E). W0ke churches will say they are required to abide by the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which includes, among other things, no discrimination on the basis of r@ce, sex, sexuality, etc. This becomes a problem when 'discrimination' is extended to include affinities to faith traditions, convictions, and tribal affiliations.

In contrast, non-W0ke churches will revert to a little-known concept in U.S. law known as The Ministerial Exception, which permits religions to ignore discrimination laws when selecting clergy or other leaders in the church.

Doctrinal Tells of a W0ke Church

From a doctrinal view, a Feminist / Progressive / W0ke individual or church is one that subscribes to those respective philosophies and values. This much is obvious, but what does it look like?

Churches and individuals subscribing to D I E creeds will heavily emphasize the command to "love one's neighbor as yourself" (Mark 12:31), without any discernment of the covenant affiliation or the spiritual constitution of the person, and will say that making distinctions constitutes 'discrimination'.

The proponents of 'Gender Equ@l!ty' will falsely claim there is scriptural support for this belief by citing Galatians 3:28 and also Genesis 1:27. In addition, Ephesians 5:21 is isolated from the rest of Chapter 5 and other verses about gender roles and headship, and "men and women" is often added to Colossians 3:11 as a parallel to Galatians 3:28. Furthermore, proponents of 'Gender Equ@l!ty' often cite noteworthy women in the New Testament, such as Joanna, Mary Magdalene, and Susanna (Luke 8:1-3), Junia (Romans 16:7), Lydia (Acts 16:14–15,40), Phoebe (Romans 16:1-2), and Priscilla (Acts 18:2-3,18,26; Romans 16:3-4; 1 Corinthians 16:19; 2 Timothy 4:19), making them out to be Strong Independent Women™, even though not much is said about them in scripture.

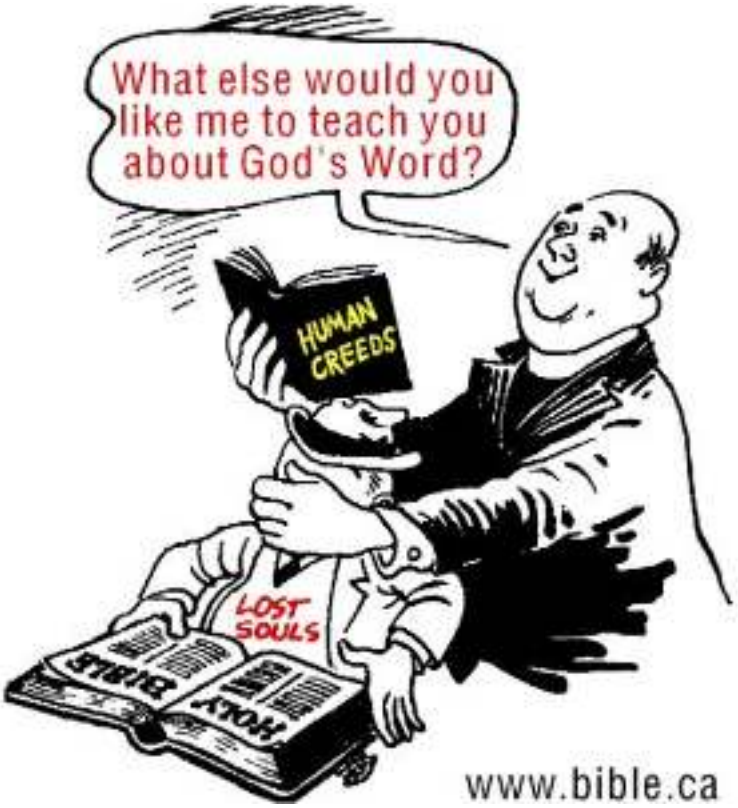
Pastor Christie Harfouche of the Apostolic Global Church in Pensacola, Florida. Note her tattoo.

Social Tells of a W0ke Church

From a socially conservative view, a W0ke / Progressive individual or church is one that tolerates or even cherishes degeneracy and lifestyles that are harmful to family and true Christian community.

Some practical 'tells' of a church being W0ke include things like…

- Being QTBGL-friendly.
- Blaming men for women's sins.
- Disrespecting men and authority.
- Female or H0m0sexual clergymembers.
- Displaying a g@y flag and/or a Ukr@!ne flag.
- Supporting or donating to W0ke institutions, N A A C P, S P L C, etc.
- Being C0V!D-cautious, requiring social distancing and wearing medical masks
- Glorifying sin (e.g. h0m0sexu@l!ty, sexual promiscuity, single mothers) in the name of "love and compassion", which is code for 'inclusion'.
- Sermons and teachings that prioritize 'inclusion' at the cost of sacrificing boundaries, traditional gender roles, and holiness.



Caveats

It is possible for a church to be W0ke in politics, but not in practice, and vice versa, but that would be a special case of hypocrisy (or 'disintegrity' to be more precise). There's also the chance that a church could present the appearance of tolerating W0kism among newcomers and those weak in faith, but still hold firmly to core, non-W0ke doctrines of Christianity. For example, my church has two services — one that offers an evangelical sermon geared towards newbies which is socially interesting but doctrinally milquetoast, and another private service for certified members and more mature believers.

Discernment, wisdom, and prayer are needed.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Dissemination and Dissolution (2020/11/7)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Another Schism will Come (2021/10/18)
- Business Insider: Looking for a church that isn't 'woke?' Secessionist group tweets out list that classifies places of worship. (2022/8/23)
- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- The Telegraph (Michael Coren): When churches go woke, they die (2024/4/13)
- Σ Frame: Politicizing Evangelicalism (2024/8/22)

Which Churches have Sold Out?

Jack · 24 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Sorting out the wheat from the weeds.

Readership: All
Theme: (Christian) Community
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 3.5 minutes

A New System of Church Classification

In the past, Christians made distinctions between church denominations on the basis of whether they were Arminian or Baptist or Calvinist or Catholic or Methodist, etc., pivoting on the finer points of doctrinal presuppositions and nuances, such as apostolic authority, baptism, Election, Free Will vs Predestination, sanctification, the practice of sacraments, and so on. But these distinctions are now no longer useful nor even very relevant.

The church is now facing more profound challenges. Christians have bigger fish to fry, and not just on Fridays.

The new defining characterization of churches are here roughly outlined in 3 categories, determined by whether they are…

1. Liberal / Progressive / W0ke
2. Complementarian / Egalitarian / Feminist, AKA 'Gynocentric'
3. Based / Biblical / Patriarchal

Another equally valid delineation is that there is no such thing as a 'Liberal Christian' or 'W0ke' church (according to a liberal's definition of 'Liberal'), because Progressivism / W0kism is decidedly Worldly and many of the principles stressed are anti-Christian. These churches have bent the knee to the World and have forsaken the Truth. But if we are to embark on that path of reasoning, then we must also conclude that there is no such thing as a Complementarian / Egalitarian / Feminist church either, as they have also followed after the World, although to a lesser degree and with a different focus. Nevertheless, I'll use the above classification for heuristic purposes.

Which Churches are W0ke?

- Episcopal Church
- Moravian Church
- United Church of Christ
- Seventh Day Adventists [1]
- Presbyterian Church (PCUSA)
- Reformed Church in America
- United Methodist Church (UMC)
- The Church of England / Anglican
- Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA)
- Some branches / sects of the Catholic Church [2]

Which Churches are Gynocentric?

- Mormon [1]
- Presbyterian Church in America (PCA)
- The Southern Baptist Convention (SBC)
- Anglican Church in North America (ACNA)
- Lutheran Church — Missouri Synod (LCMS)
- Fundamental / Independent Baptists
- Most Non-Denominational churches
- Many independent Methodist parishes.
- Some branches / sects of the Catholic Church [2]

Which Churches are Based?

The churches that are best known for their faithfulness to scripture in both doctrine and practice are…

- Anabaptist / Mennonite, AKA 'Amish'
- Lutheran Church — Wisconsin Synod
- The Orthodox Church
- Sedevacantists ? [2]
- Radix Fidem [3]

Caveats

There are other 'independent' Protestant churches that are Biblical and DO NOT subscribe to some form of Egalitarianism or Progressivism, but they are rare and few. However, these churches are growing quickly. I've put together a short list of these churches, based on suggestions from readers.

OTOH, there may very well be some individual churches listed above as 'Based' which are not actually so. For example, Sharkly's church which identifies as Anabaptist.

Readers should also be aware that many churches may profess a very standard doctrinal statement, but nevertheless conform to Worldly cultural norms in practice. Discernment, wisdom, and prayer are needed.

It is also possible for a church to be W0ke in politics, but not in practice, and vice versa, but that would be a special case of hypocrisy (or 'disintegrity' to be more precise).

There's also the chance that a church could present the appearance of tolerating Feminism / W0kism among newcomers and those weak in faith, but still hold firmly to core, uncorrupted doctrines of Christianity. For example, my church has two services — one that offers an evangelical sermon geared towards newbies which is socially interesting but doctrinally milquetoast, and another private service for certified members and more mature believers.

Readers are invited to add to or offer corrections to these lists.

Notes

1. Not all the churches on the above lists are considered Christian. These lists are intended to provide general information about gynocentrism and W0kism in churches, NOT to affirm, endorse, or schmooze denominations or doctrines.

2. Some branches / sects of the Catholic Church are Progressive / W0ke, while others are not. I'm not very familiar with the Catholic Church, so I will not attempt to identify which are W0ke. I'll leave that task to our Catholic brothers. Paging Adam Piggott and J. M. Smith.
3. Radix Fidem is more accurately described as an online community of believers than a church proper.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Dissemination and Dissolution (2020/11/7)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): Another Schism will Come (2021/10/18)
- Business Insider: Looking for a church that isn't 'woke?' Secessionist group tweets out list that classifies places of worship. (2022/8/23)
- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- The Telegraph (Michael Coren): When churches go woke, they die (2024/4/13)
- Σ Frame: Politicizing Evangelicalism (2024/8/22)

Reminiscing on Our Immoral Culture

Jack · 26 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

As women have become more liberated, the culture has become less moral.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Community
Author's Note: This post is based on Thedeti's comments under Rizz (2023/9/28). Coauthored with Thedeti.
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Immoral Women

Christian women don't observe Christian sexual morality and have not for at least 4 decades now.

When I was in college in the late 1980s, most Christian women weren't observing Christian sexual morality — especially Catholic women. If she liked you and thought you were hot, she'd hop in bed with you and use artificial birth control, Catholic faith be damned.

"Yes, I go to church on Sundays…"

This has only grown much worse since then. Now we have…

- At least 85% of unmarried Christian women are not virgins.
- At least 80% of Catholic single women have had premarital sex and have used artificial birth control (thus violating both traditional Christian sexual morality and Catholic morality).
- At least 80% of married Catholic women are in marriages where either they or their husbands use artificial birth control or were voluntarily sterilized (thus violating a central precept of Catholic sexual morality).
- At least 30% of Christian women are or have been divorced (and most of them are "dating", i.e. having sex, and thus committing adultery).
- At least 40% of Christian divorced women are remarried (and, according to Christian morality are adulterous bigamists).

Immoral Men

feeriker asked a good question pertaining to the moral character of men.

> "This circles back to my recently repeated point. If the majority of (as close to "all" as is statistically possible) women, whether or not they call themselves Christians, are promiscuous slores who despise Christian sexual morality, why would even the thirstiest of Christian men who are steadfast in their adherence to such morality want to spend any amount of effort, money, or time pursuing them? An even more important question is why would any Christian man think that any such women (which is to say any women at all) are fit to serve as an example of anything moral?"

The answer is simple.

P_ssy makes men stupid.

Admittedly a lot of men don't care about whether women are moral standard-bearers. They only care about getting p_ssy. That's as far as their plans go. Those few men who are the prime recipients of female desire will dump her after the score and move on to the next. Those who aren't, assuming they can get that far, then and only then do they think about how to lock her down in a more permanent arrangement. And once that is done, only then will they consider, and not before, that a woman's moral character is important.

PUA Erik von Markovik, AKA Mystery, poon slayer extraordinaire.

OTOH, a lot of Christian men actually observed Christian sexual morality and thought they were "valued" because of it. Then they discovered the women they were pursuing, even 'Christian' women, didn't observe or value that moral stance at all — and in fact they were, and still are, flouting their meat flaps left and right.

This is why women view most all men as simp chumps — NonChristian men for being P00n idolizers, and Christian men for actually being altruistically moral in an immoral culture.

Immoral Leaders

It used to be that sexual immorality would stain a person's reputation so badly that they couldn't hold a public office, practice a profession, or even run a successful business.

But during my lifetime, and maybe it began a decade or two before, this has slowly subsided under the auspices of the sexual de-evolution.

- 1987 — Gary Hart drops out of the presidential race for having an affair.*
- 1998 — Bill Clinton has an affair with WH intern Monica Lewinksy, including sex acts in the Oval Office. The Democratic party rallied around him and the public decided his private behavior was not relevant to the job.*
- 2016 — Donald Trump elected president despite having been prerecorded talking about women, saying, "Grab 'em by the p_ssy". He was elected anyway.*
- 2023 — South Dakota Governor / family values champion / Trumpkin Kristi Noem is reported in the Daily Mail as having had a years-long affair with former Trump operative Corey Lewandowski. The story is a sensation for a brief time before fading into oblivion.*
- 2024 — South Carolina Rep. Nancy Mace is cohabitating out of wedlock while professing to be an evangelical Christian. Tabloids make it into a joke.
- 2024 — Congressional representatives Lauren Boebert and Anna Paulina Luna have advertized their sex appeal — while in office! — and these are supposedly 'conservative' women!

Do you see the pattern of how things have unraveled over the years?

As more women have gotten involved in politics over the years, politics have become more casual, debased, and sexualized. Coincidence?

This pattern will continue until we're electing 0nlyF@ns starlettes on the basis of their earnings and 'popularity'. Think I'm kidding?

President William Clinton and Monica Lewinsky, 1998.

The only reason why sexual affairs are mentioned at all anymore is done in a politicized attack to sully people's reputations, like what we saw done to Trump last year (and this only has traction among religious conservatives). But instead of disqualifying him, it only brought him more notoriety.

Politicians and other public servants are no longer held to moral standards — because there aren't any moral standards.

 H/T: Aaron Renn: The End of Moral Standards (2023/9/28)*
 H/T: Aaron Renn: Evangelicals Think Men Are All to Blame, All of the Time (2023/8/1)*

The Bottom Line

No one, not even Christians, observes Christian sexual morality.

All of what I've written above, including the two articles from Renn, are a description of everyone just wanting to have sex with whomever they want, whenever they want, wherever they want — especially women. Women are the drivers of current-day sexual conduct. Women decide who gets sex, when, where, and under what circumstances. So I blame this primarily on women supercharged on feminism.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Sexual Market IS the Marriage Market (2021/2/22)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The Sexual De-Evolution (2021/7/28)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Advent of Polysexuality (2021/7/30)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Aaron Renn: Newsletter #58: Loyalty Is the Coin of the Realm (2021/11/15)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual/Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The more things change, the more they stay the same. (2022/2/28)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill as a Socio-Sexual Phenomenon (2022/9/17)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse (2023/12/9)
- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Selecting Markets for better Market Selection (2024/2/9)

Are immoral women a product of an immoral culture, or vice versa?

Jack · 27 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Which came first, the Chick or the Egg?

Readership: All
Theme: (Christian) Community
Author's Note: This essay is based on an email correspondence between Jack and Thedeti on 2024/9/23.
Length: 900 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

While Reminiscing on Our Immoral Culture (2024/8/26), Thedeti and I mulled over the question: Are immoral women a product of an immoral culture, or vice versa?

The History of Hypergamy

Individual women have been engaging in various acts of immorality since forever. Contrary to what most men have been led to believe, women want sex as much as men do — IF they're sexually attracted, they really want that sex. Women very, very much like and enjoy sex with sexually attractive men. Very, very much is an understatement. 'C0ckamania' is a little closer to reality.

This has always been the case. It instigated The Red Pill over a decade ago. It was the case 30 years ago when we were in college. It was the case 60 years ago when our parents met, and 90 years ago when our grandparents were doing the hoochie. It was the case 240 years ago during the Revolutionary War. It was the problem that lit up the Council of Trent 460 years ago that led to the Protestant Reformation. It was the case 2,600 years ago when Ezekiel wrote about Oholah and Oholibah. It was the issue that sparked the Trojan War 3,300 years ago. Women have been having illicit sex with attractive men since forever. Hypergamy is an unstoppable force of nature.

The Advent of Technology

What has accelerated the proliferation of sexual immorality in our day and age is technology which allows people to separate reproduction from copulation. In turn, as that technology improved, people are better able to separate copulation (and reproduction) from marriage.

That technology has been improving apace and exponentially for hundreds of years, but the floodgates opened with the advent of the Pill in 1960. Since then, the sociosexual dynamics leading to copulation, marriage and reproduction have been changing more and more as technology and civil law have allowed women to earn / have enough money to become more or less self sufficient.

Women's Independence = Moar Sexual Liberation

Women want their own money so they don't have to depend on a man. This is crucially important to women's sexual strategy because the men they can depend on aren't sexually attractive. The men who are sexually attractive (who they really want to sleep with) won't give them a commitment or any money because they don't have to. It's basically the old Alpha Fux / Beta Bux strategy, except Beta Bux is increasingly being replaced by women supporting themselves and/or freeloading off the government and the court system (i.e. via divorce). Laws have changed and technology has improved to the point where women can earn their own living; they can now eke out an existence without a man's help (at least on the surface).

What foils all that, what prevents a woman from full economic independence, is motherhood. Presently, most women, the vast majority of women, cannot financially support children without men's money. Some women can forego having children altogether, but many will not because the biological urge is to have children. This is why the effort right now is wealth transference: Take men's money and give it to women so they can be economically independent (and remain sexually liberated).

Men are being enticed into this because of the ever present misrepresentation: "If you give us what we want, we'll have sex with you." Pussy makes men stupid. It has always been so.

Consequences

As women have become more liberated, the culture has become less moral.

Over time, the degeneracy snowballs until chastity, faith, morality, and religion are no longer valued in society. Women no longer feel committed to one man or to a marriage, nor even to their children. Hence, men find no larger purpose in marriage and family. All this has had a negative effect on marriage, families, and how children are reared. Families are the 'bricks' of a society.

Throughout history, women's hypergamic nature was regulated by various checks and balances, and the extent to which this was successful largely determined the overall civility of the nation. OTOH, when sexual promiscuity became prevalent and women's hypergamy got out of hand, families were broken and nations declined and fell.

It is evident that civilizational achievement is a function of women's chastity en large, moreso than civilization has had a civilizing effect on women. Women's chastity is the driver here.

Conclusions

In summary, there are several key factors to consider.

- Technology
- Women's economic independence
- Cultural acceptance of sexual promiscuity, AKA 'freedom'
- Cultural norms of permissiveness, reflected in and enforced by legislative polity.
- The percentage of women pursuing Ch@ds over marriage. Over 6% leads to disaster. We are looking at a percentage well above the majority in Western nations.

So to answer the question, it's hard to say, but in general, we suspect that it's immoral women (and more generally, immoral individuals) producing an immoral culture. This has become more evident as more women avail of employment, laws, and technology to postpone marriage and childbearing, and to escape the negative consequences of doing so. So it's more "vice versa" — the immoral culture is a product of immoral women.

Related

- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Sexual Market IS the Marriage Market (2021/2/22)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame: The Sexual De-Evolution (2021/7/28)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Advent of Polysexuality (2021/7/30)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual/Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The more things change, the more they stay the same. (2022/2/28)
- Σ Frame: The Black Pill as a Socio-Sexual Phenomenon (2022/9/17)
- Σ Frame (Oscar): The Importance of Family and Community (2023/10/29)
- Σ Frame: The 15 Sirens of the Socio-Sexual Apocalypse (2023/12/9)
- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)

- Σ Frame: Selecting Markets for better Market Selection (2024/2/9)

If Queen Bee isn't chaste, those girls won't value purity

Jack · 28 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A commentary on Matthew E. Cochran's post.

Readership: All
Theme: Community
Length: 1,600 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Intro

Matthew E. Cochran had a fantastic post on X. He should've posted it on his blog, but in case he doesn't, I'll document it here and add a few more insights.

Cochran is responding to a post from @HannahDCox [Biography], a self-professed spokespersonality for 'Based Politics'. Let's see how Based she is.

Cox's Disrespect for Men

Cox wrote [emphasis mine],

> "No one talks about the lack of quality men for women to reproduce with period.
>
> Most women are inclined toward monogamy, marriage, and kids. But they wisely forego them (and SHOULD) when they can't find solid partners.
>
> If anyone is talking about the birth rate and not directly targeting their concerns towards men they're deeply unserious.
>
> I don't think most women have unrealistic expectations at all haha. In the real world they're dealing with forever boyfriend man childs, cheaters, addicts, deadbeats, men who won't take care of their kids, serial liars, and abuse. If anything women need to raise their standards and withdraw further from relationships until the pool improves and some of these lineages die out."

-
-

Cox is disrespecting men by making ALL men out to be "forever boyfriend man childs", a sleight I covered before in Redefining Manhood as Boyish Immaturity (2021/6/14). Apparently, Cox isn't aware that she's referring to top SMV men — men that women freely choose — NOT ALL men. Remember, low SMV men are 'invisible' to women like Cox. Women don't realize that by freely dishing out the clam, they actually create these "forever boyfriend man childs" and forego ever creating a circumstance in which these men might find the incentive to "grow up" (speaking her language). Likewise, these women reduce themselves to sexual playthings and never develop other feminine virtues — virtues that would attract a man's commitment. It's an abuse of feminine power.

The reason why "no one talks about the lack of quality men" is because there is NOT a lack of quality men. What Cox really means is that there's not enough 6-6-6 stud muffins offering commitment with NO expectations (a comical fanciful notion). There IS however a dire shortage of faithful, honest, loyal, quality, virtuous women who would attract such a commitment. Her words, "man childs" and "a lack of quality men" are projections.

By justifying why women should refuse marriage and having children, she is indirectly condoning female promiscuity. Certainly she must know this. The unspoken but clearly understood message to women is, "It's better to stay 'single' (and childless) and enjoy serial polygyny (with forever boyfriend man childs who make you wet)."

Hannah Cox

Note the subtle hints (in bold), shilling for 'eugən!cs' / 'pl@nned p@renthood' / 'p0pul@t!0n control' programs we've heard about before.

- Thuletide: The Intentional Destruction of White Birth Rates: Leaked reports from Planned Parenthood, the Rockefeller Foundation, World Bank, US NSC (incl. CIA, military etc.) (2021/6/11)
- Thuletide: The Great Replacement is a top-down project: The role of the United Nations and other transnational Globalist organizations (2023/1/8)

In saying "some of those lineages die out", she's on the threshold of advocating male sterilization.

Moreover, I would be "deeply unserious" to take Cox's idea of 'Based' seriously. 'Based' focuses on truth, beauty, and goodness, and holds that up as an ideal. Cox's indignant tweet is nothing more than her inner feminine imperative tooting steam. It is far from Based.

Cochran's Epic Diatribe

Cochran responded,

> "Notice the cognitive dissonance: "Women are inclined towards monogamy, marriage and kids." They also consistently choose "forever boyfriend man childs, cheaters, addicts, deadbeats, men who won't take care of their kids, serial liars, and abusers."
>
> But there's an explanation:
>
> The problem (as usual) is that modern relationships are based on fornication.
>
> Generally, men have lower standards for fornication than for marriage. A male 8/9 will fornicate (or cheat) with a female 6/7 for trivial reasons like variety, but won't settle for marrying one.
>
> Women, however, generally have higher standards for fornication than for marriage. They'll eventually "settle" and marry a more average man when they're done having fun, but they'll only fornicate (or cheat) with guys they find particularly attractive.

> The consequence is a lot of women (unknowingly) hooking up with guys who are out of their league. So from their perspective, their boyfriends just won't commit. In reality, they choose men who would never commit to them and overlook "lesser" men who would."

> "At the same time, when relationships start with fornication, both sexes ignore traits that would be red flags for marriage. So women fornicate with men who are abusive, cheaters, irresponsible, etc. And from their perspective, it's just a coincidence that it keeps happening."

Similarly, men fornicate with sexually liberated women who have daddy issues, and are controlling, insecurely attached, psychotic, and lacking self-control, etc. And from their perspective, "Why buy the heifer when the meat is free?"

> "So what's the solution? For an individual, it starts with foregoing fornication and seeking potential mates who are doing the same. And practically speaking, that means deliberately seeking marriage at younger ages before fornication ruins them.
>
> On a societal level, it means penalizing fornication again to restrain it — first socially (i.e. bring back slut-shaming) and eventually legally. And men, it should be clear by now that women aren't going to suddenly start restraining themselves, so it has to start with us."

On the one hand, Cochran has written an amazing wordsmithery of spelling things out this clearly and concisely. On the other hand, seeing how the Red Pill has been mainstream for 3-4 years now, it's amazing that women still need to have it spelled out for them like this. Apparently, the word hasn't reached some of those ghetto chick sections yet.

Or maybe the popular ignorance of this truth is a testament to the overweening hegemonic influence of The Narrative™ … or the imbecilic solipsism of women living in fantasy land. Heh.

Disagreement with Cochran's Stance

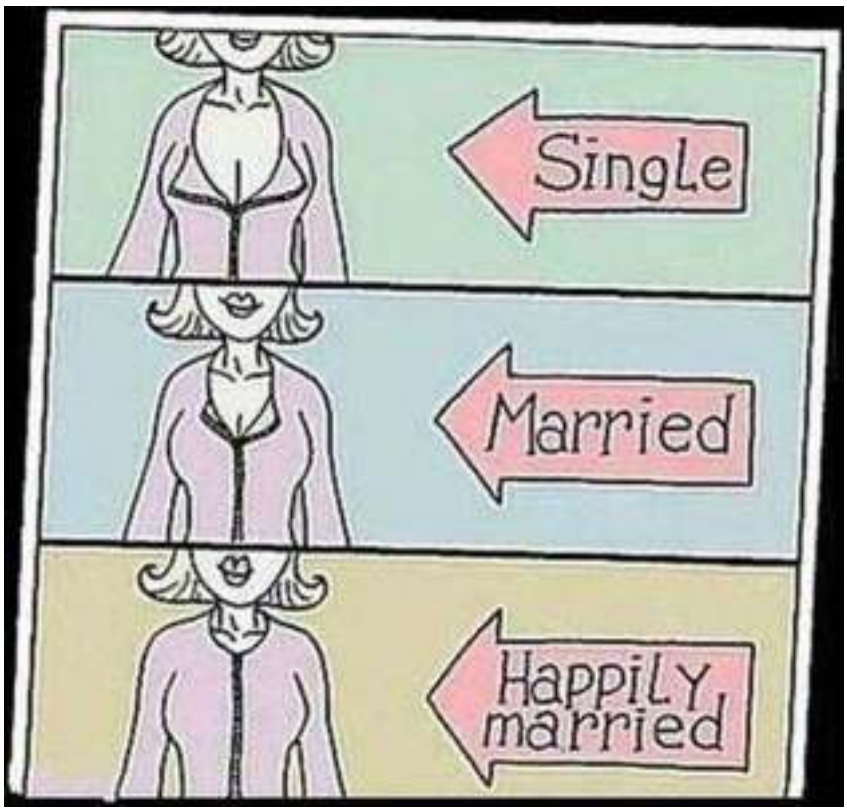
Cochran's last sentence (in bold) is where the Dalrockian / Σ Frameite sect will disagree.

Over at Will's place, commenters Feeriker and Sean said,

> "It HaS To StArT wItH uS!!" No, it doesn't. Either women are moral agents capable of making decisions or they're not. As above, paging Deti or Dalrock.

We haven't heard a chirp from Dalrock since he retired, and Deti is a busy man. So in case neither of them responds, readers are directed to Deti's writings and Jack's in-depth coverage of female agency. Here's a few from Deti to get you started. Thanks for reading Σ Frame~!

- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Deti on Female Accountability (2022/11/25)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Skirting around the Skirts (2023/11/24)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Reality (2023/12/23)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Breaking Feminine Delusions (2024/1/30)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): But I'm not like that! (2024/5/3)



The reason why the onus is on women, and not men, is simple. Women are the gatekeepers of sex. Women's fecundity and honeycraft are their greatest powers. P_ssy makes men stupid. Women can wag their fingers at men all they want, but men can't take what isn't offered. So if you want to reduce fornication, then the gatekeepers (i.e. women) need to encourage men to commit to them by keeping their knees together outside marriage, and wide open within.

It's that simple. That's how female power is properly implemented. That's how women help build a flourishing culture and society.

It's called moral agency — WILLPOWER BABY! Women (and men) who lay the blame on men for female promiscuity are denying female agency. They're saying that women are mere children, helpless victims of their own hypergamy, incapable of making their own choices. Remember, immaturity is latent evil. So laying into this tack is a roundabout way of saying that women are evil and they cannot be helped. This is disrespectful and unloving to women.

What men CAN do is start drawing boundaries, stating expectations, and holding women accountable / responsible for their decisions. That means, no hymən, no diamond. No attention for attention wh0res. No access to commitment and resources for untrustworthy wimmin. Don't admit their arguments. Let their emoting roll off your back. Give no place to their indignation. Don't reward slores for their sloredom. MGTOW if acceptable. You get the picture? More and more men are waking up to this reality and are starting to do this. Some women are catching on, but there is immense resistance from all sides.

The Need for Female Leaders

Now I'll get to the point expressed in the title of this post.

Esteemed author Alan Roebuck asked [emphasis mine],

> "What specifically is the "it" that Matt C. says must start with us men, and that [Will says] we could just let burn?
>
> Is it taking action to make social change, or just cultivating personal integrity? Based on the quote from Matt

> C., he says it is both. Women are natural conformists, so it is possible to make a social order in which most of them conform to social virtue."

That's right. Women are conformists, but they conform to the female herd consensus and The Narrative™ more than authorities (e.g. father, husband, pastor, God's law, etc.). There needs to be a critical mass of queen bees who start policing their respective cliques and peer clutches to do what is right.

So again, the onus is on women.

Cox is positioning herself as a female leader (of opinion, at least), yet she won't respect men or encourage young women to be chaste or else marry.

She's part of the problem.

H/T: Patriactionary: Or, let it burn (2024/8/1)

Related

- Dalrock: We are trapped on Slut Island and Traditional Conservatives are our Gilligan (2011/11/18)
- Dalrock: Promiscuity is good, so long as it is done on the woman's terms. (2011/11/5)
- The Rational Male: Of Ego and Choice (2017/2/19)
- The Other McCain: You Should Be Reading Dalrock (2018/1/19)
- Σ Frame: Women Rely on a Man's Frame for Redemptive Introspection (2021/6/28)
- Σ Frame: Why challenge the character of your wife? (2021/7/7)
- Σ Frame: Women have sex to influence men (2021/11/10)
- Σ Frame: It's all about her Ego (2021/11/12)
- Σ Frame: Moral Guidance Based Feedback vs. Sexual Attention (2021/11/24)
- Σ Frame: On Choosing the Flesh over Christ (2022/9/10)
- Σ Frame: It's her choice whether or not to submit. (2022/10/28)

- Σ Frame: Men's Role in the Mess (2022/12/21)
- Σ Frame: A Christian Woman's View of Submission (2023/9/13)

Poor Teaching Leads to a Difficult Life

Jack · 29 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Reflections on the importance of good instruction towards making the most out of life.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Single marriage-minded men
Theme: Community
Author's Note: This post is a summary of an email exchange between Red Pill Apostle, Thedeti, Oscar, Caterpillar345, and Jack on 2023/8/29 and a discussion with Jax under Which Churches have Sold Out? (2024/8/24). Coauthored with Oscar.
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Intro

Many posts here at Σ Frame have emphasized the importance of family and community in finding, building, and maintaining a good marriage relationship.

Many of the authors at Σ Frame did not have good teaching in their earlier years. They learned things the hard way through the bitter teacher of experience, by blithering and blundering, by trial and error. Most of what we write are first hand testimonies of what we have learned over the years.

Case Studies

Deti has described how clueless he was in college and all the blunders and poor decisions he made as a result. He said there isn't enough time or space to list all the red flags he saw and ignored; and the ones he didn't see. We've heard awful stories about how much work he has had to put into taking responsibility for that oversight and how much it has cost him in terms of domestic tranquility and energy. Even though his marriage is much better now, he still suffers from those years of relationship trauma.

Caterpillar mentioned that in his Christian upbringing, he was never taught that a woman's attraction to him was even a factor. Even a man's attraction to a woman was downplayed as a minimally important consideration that was really just ancillary. He is still single.

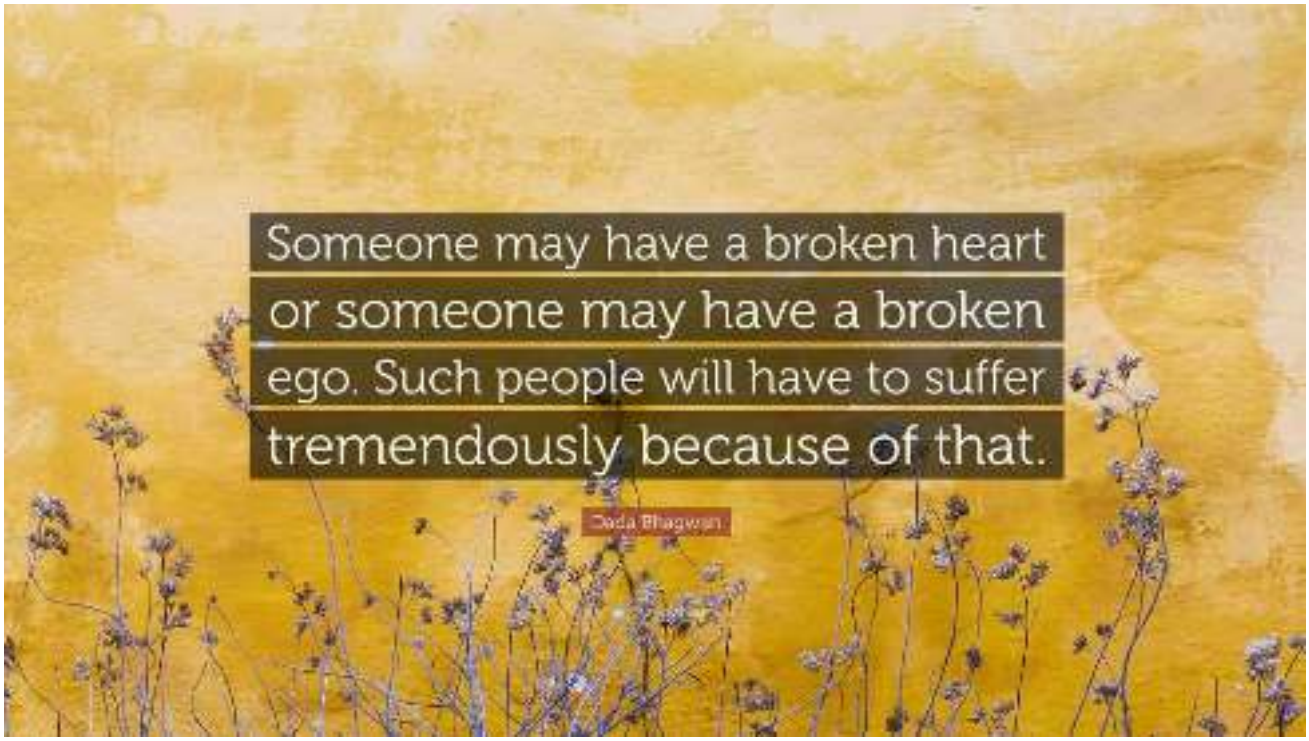
Oscar got the same bad advice. Only as an adult has he realized that "Looks truly do matter." They're not the only thing that matters, or even the most important thing, but they DO matter, and we shouldn't let anyone tell us otherwise. Besides, we want cute grandbabies.

St. Dalrock didn't put it in these terms, but he would have lined up with Oscar pretty closely.

Jack's GRE scores were good enough to get into Princeton, but he was never told that it's important for a man to make accomplishments in life, to amass wealth, and to establish a dominion, which are qualifying traits to marriage-minded women. Instead, he was taught that "knowledge is power and power corrupts", and was warned against materialism, "the love of money is the root of all evil", and parables of rich men who went to hell (Matthew 19:16-22; Luke 12:13-21). His motivation for going to college was simply because he couldn't see himself working in a factory his entire life.

Jack painstakingly adhered to the Blue Pill Gospel and walked the straight and narrow for years, resulting in continual rejection by "good Christian girls". He passed up some unicorns because some things he thought were important were actually trivial, and vice versa. This is typical of Dobson's syndrome. He was forced to rethink his whole mental concept and approach towards dating and mating after he moved to Taiwan. Adjusting to this shift in consciousness was a huge mess. He married, but it ended in disaster. He had a few epiphanies now and then, but he didn't really 'wake up' until he took the Red Pill in 2017.



Jax didn't find Christ until he was 24 and he didn't find a good church until a couple years ago. He can only imagine how different his life would've been if he had grown up in the church, let alone in this particular church. He admires Oscar for moving across the country so that his children could attend a good church.

Jax is mindful of what Oscar said about the #1 predictor of long-term happiness being marriage and family. He is frustrated because he just turned 30 and is still single and struggling. He finds it difficult to maintain his motivation and to be grateful, even though he knows being single is certainly better than being married to a w!tch.

Conclusions

It's usually "HARD" when the test is before the lesson. Especially when your brain is hypoxic. "P_ssy makes men stupid", as The St. Deti always says.

All these case studies point to testimonies of what NOT to do. We've seen first hand the ruin that results from a gynocentric social structure — more specifically, the lack of a patriarchal social structure, including the involvement of fathers, families, communities, and good teaching.

Moreover, good teaching is missing. It was missing when we were younger, and despite the current prevalence of Red Pill knowledge, the aspects of community, meaning, and purpose are still missing, leading to conflict, confusion, foolishness, and frustration.

Young people, including women, need proper and truthful teaching about male and female nature, how to behave, what to do, what to expect, and what to look for.

These are the reasons why we emphasize Christian community, ministering to other men, and teaching young people and children.

Related

- Σ Frame: The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Reality (2023/12/23)
- Σ Frame: Wandering in Search of God (2024/1/20)

Jumping through Hoops

Jack · 30 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

How A Patriarchal social structure works.

Readership: All
Targeted Readership: Young single Christian men
Theme: Community
Author's Note: This essay is based on a discussion under Which Churches have Sold Out? (2024/8/24)
Length: 1,800 words
Reading Time: 9 minutes

Introduction

It's hard to find a church or community that encourages girls to stay chaste and marry young. It is rarer still to find one in which fathers are included in, or central to the courtship process. But as noted in the previous post, even if a supporting family, community, and patriarchal structure are present, young people need proper and truthful teaching about male and female nature, how to behave, what to do, what to expect, and what to look for.

Jax joined a church that appears to be rather patriarchal in structure, if not in teaching, and he has run into some challenges inherent in a Patriarchal system. The pastor advised him that if he's interested in a young woman, he should first talk to her father about it, or as the pastor said, "date her father." This pastor also expressed the idea that men are the initiators and children are subject to their parents, especially if they are still living at home, so therefore you need to get her father's blessing.

Jax was confused, frustrated, and a little suspicious of all this, not knowing how things 'work' or what to expect. He felt like he was "jumping through hoops" — expected to put on a good show and be a "dancing monkey", but NOT for the girl — for the girl's father and the church community.

The good men at Σ Frame told him that this is to be expected in a Patriarchal system and that his chances are probably better than he thinks. I'll explain why below. A lot of online proponents of Patriarchy don't talk about these things. They probably don't even realize these challenges exist.

Patriarchal Involvement

The father's involvement is important for the following reasons.

1. It is well known that women are strongly attracted to celebrities, Ch@ds, criminals, dark triads, jerks, high SMV men, etc. But women are also attracted to men chosen for them by leaders (her father / parents / pastors in this case). There is an element of faith and trust, and a larger sense of purpose and social integration that changes the context in which the man and the relationship itself is viewed. The fem-logic goes something like, "If I can't have the leader, the next best satisfaction is to have a man chosen for me by the leader." This is one reason why arranged marriages 'work'.
2. Daughters are much more likely to seriously consider men recommended by their fathers.
3. One very important green flag in vetting a woman for marriage is that she should have a good relationship with her father. Going through her father almost guarantees that you'll get a girl who's on good terms with her dad. Even if she's NOT on good terms with daddy, but if she likes the man her father introduces to her — enough to marry him — then this creates a venue in which her relationship with her father is likely to mend. Either way, this tends to filter out girls who are disrespectful to men / hostile to male authority / feminist / rebellious / etc.
4. Dealing with a clear-headed, decision-making man who is conscientious about the longitudinal outcome is much easier, more efficient, safer, and conclusive than dealing directly with a whimsical woman. 'Conclusive' means you'll get a clear yes or no decision rather quickly. There's no time wasted in guessing, wooing, and wondering.
5. If you can make a good impression on a girl's father and establish good rapport with him, then your foot is in the door. If the girl also likes you, then you are in like Jim.
6. Being accepted by her father up front streamlines the process of integrating yourself into her family. It'll be much more likely that you'll be included in major family decisions, business dealings, investments, property distributions, and inheritances.
7. If a church / community respects fathers' authority over their daughters, then it's more likely that the church will respect your authority over your wife and family in the future.

How to Navigate a Patriarchal Structure

Patriarchy places a lot of demands on men. (It places demands on women too, but men definitely don't get off the hook.) Here's how it works.

1. Male performance is just as important as it is in the secular SMP, if not more so.
2. A man has to establish himself as a valuable contributing member of the church / community. (See Case Study below.)
3. It is assumed that men seeking marriage should be self-aware, mature in character, making good progress in a career (or else show promise of doing so in the future), and actually be ready for marriage. If he is not, then he will receive a lot of attention and discipline intended to push him in that direction. This means that if a man expresses an intention to marry a girl in the church / community, and the elders feel he is not ready, then they will make demands of him and set up a series of 'hoops' for him to jump through. This should not be taken as a passive-aggressive rejection, but as an acceptance conditional upon his performance and progress. (See Case Study below.)
4. Church elders have a responsibility to instruct, discipline, guide, and mentor young men and gr00m them for marriage. This is often hard work for both elders and young men. (See Case Study below.)
5. You have to take both the long view and the community-wide view to see things properly. If you don't have a solid Christian, Patriarchal, and/or 'accepted' view of things, you will fall under scrutiny and suspicion and be stonewalled. For example, "jumping through hoops" is better regarded as a system of checks and training to ensure that the man is capable of carrying the significant responsibilities of being a husband, father, and an up-and-coming future patriarch in the family / church / community. This discipline is good for everyone involved. But if you see it as an annoying and time-consuming obstacle, or you express bitterness, doubts, or frustrations with the process, or you are not grateful and humble, then you will not be accepted. (See Case Study below.)
6. In a Patriarchal system, you have to impress the girl's father, which is a lot more difficult than impressing a foolish young woman.
7. Having a good reputation and/or being well liked in the church / community is a very important factor. It definitely helps with impressing both fathers and girls. This is good news for men who are lacking LAMPS characteristics, but bad news for men who lack charisma, interpersonal skills, and social acumen.
8. In a Patriarchal system, people tend to get married young, which makes things more challenging when you're over 30 and single.

Case Study — Jumping through Hoops

At one Chinese church I attended about 20 years ago, a non-Christian young man started coming to our church regularly and hitting on the girls. The girls rebuffed him because he was not a Christian. He kept coming back, so one day the pastor took him aside and asked him what his intentions were. He was quite honest and said (Chinese) Christian girls are good, so he wanted to find a (Chinese) Christian girlfriend. The pastor explained to him that he should have marriage as his goal, and if he could not accept this, then he should not come back. After some discussion he accepted this. Then the pastor told him that if he was serious, then he needed to come to church every Sunday and serve in the church, and if he was unwilling to do this, then he should not come back. He agreed to this too, and he started coming to church every time the church doors were open and serving in various ways. After a year or so, he became a Christian and was baptized into the church. By that time, the congregation had taken a strong liking to him, as well as a few girls. Shortly after that, he fell in with a very attractive girl there and they married within a year. Now, he has three children and he is a deacon at that church.

That is how the grace of God works in a Patriarchal system.

In the Case of Rejection

A man publicly expressing his intentions to marry a girl is a big risk, but it also carries great rewards. The rewards not only include finding a wife who is more marriage-worthy than average, but also having a cherished and esteemed role in her family as well as the larger church / community.

Stating one's intentions to marry indicates that the man is earnestly willing to accept the responsibilities of marriage and family and become an integral member of the family / church / community — more so than staying single and presumably engaging in fornication / lust. As such, an expression of serious intention should be regarded with honor rather than shame or suspicion. After all, the man has the greater responsibility in this undertaking and also has more to lose, especially in the West these days.

However, in the case where the girl or her father rejects a man's attentions, there is the chance that the man may be seen as 'creepy' or desperate if he approaches another girl and/or her father shortly afterwards. This is a Worldly reaction and should be considered defamatory. (It buys into The Lie of Romantic Love, Marrying for Love, and the Soul Mate Myth / Oneitis.) If this happens, it is probably NOT a Patriarchal community which prefers to honor and respect men.

In a healthier community, it is recognized that young people may not be well equipped to choose a mate wisely. Therefore, the focus is on helping young people pair up with a suitable other and get started in life — if not with this one, then another will be found, by God's grace. If a girl or her father rejects a man's proposal, it either draws wider attention to the man as a serious candidate for marriage (for example, the father of a girl who rejected him may recommend him to another girl and her father), or else it rallies the church / community to do the work of molding him into such. These activities may also incite interest or possibly envy in other girls who may be secretly interested in him — girls who may very well prove to be a more suitable match for that man in marriage.

Final Statements

The information in this essay may be discouraging to men who expect something different, but it is intended to be sufficiently informative such that men like Jax will know how to navigate the very real challenges of finding a Patriarchal church / community, and navigating through it successfully.

It's undeniable that the SMP/MMP is much more precarious for young people now than it was for us. However, young people have much better information and teaching available to them now than we did years ago, thanks to the Red Pill. Unfortunately, what we can do for you is very limited, which is frustrating for us, but at least we can give you some truthful and actionable information, which is hopefully enough to get you up and running with the right attitude.

To Jax, best wishes and God bless you, brother. Impress that dad and get that girl!

To others, please pray for Jax and others like him that you might know. We all need to pray for each other, whether IRL or online.

May the good Lord continue to work in His people and help us overcome all the challenges of life.

Related

- Σ Frame: Patriarchy is the Default Context (2021/6/2)
- Σ Frame: Headship Authority Takes Work (2022/8/12)
- Σ Frame: The Challenges of Moving Towards Headship (2023/4/5)
- Σ Frame: The Battle for Headship begins on the Home Turf (2023/4/7)
- Σ Frame: Vetting Social Systems (2023/10/9)
- Σ Frame: Christian Headship Authority (2024/1/10)
- Σ Frame: 20 Ways to Honor Your Father (2024/6/16)
- Crisis Magazine: Mansplaining Ephesians (2024/8/27)

Community — Summary

Jack · 31 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Closing thoughts and links on this months' theme.

Readership: All
Theme: Community
Length: 1,000 words
Reading Time: 5 minutes

Intro

This month's theme of Community touched on many subtopics, including Free Speech, Patriarchy, Teaching, and the Unfaithfulness of a Community. Many other authors around the sphere also wrote articles on these topics. There were a few responses, but others were by coincidence I believe.

Free Speech

'Free Speech' offers maximum value when it is regarded as a form of verbal self-expression, e.g. a confession, debate, discussion, exposition, teaching, testimony, etc., rather than a 'right'. Free speech has the most liberty and power in small communities — groups of people who will actually care about what you have to say, and who will react and respond. This feedback loop also provides opportunities to test and refine what is being said, and thereby take advantage of The Law of Sowing and Reaping and The Law of Responsibility.

1. Σ Frame: Pompous Pontification (2024/8/5)
2. The Mainframe: How worried should Americans be about the UK's tightening restrictions on speech? (2024/8/10)
3. The Babylon Bee: Elon Musk Buys The United Kingdom To Establish Free Speech There (2024/8/10)
4. The Babylon Bee: 10 Social Media Posts That Will Now Get You Arrested In Britain (2024/8/11)
5. Σ Frame: When Free Speech is no longer Free… (2024/8/12)
6. Σ Frame: Freedom, Potential, and Structure (2024/8/13)
7. Σ Frame: Is 'Free Speech' REAL or merely a philosophical construct? (2024/8/14)
8. Σ Frame: Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15)
9. Σ Frame: Free Speech — Conduct, Purposes, and Standards (2024/8/16)
10. Lew Rockwell (Karen Kwiatkowski): Why the Feds Fear Free Speech (2024/8/17)
11. Σ Frame: Free Speech – The Need for Leadership (2024/8/17)
12. Wintery Knight: Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg: Biden-Harris regime pressured us to censor (2024/8/27)
13. Wintery Knight: New study: Google's bias in favor of Democrat Party affects search engine results (2024/8/29)
14. PA Pundits: Sulky CNN Can't Take Zuck's Biden-Censorship Mea Culpa: 'Election-Season Gift' To GOP (2024/8/30)

Patriarchal Community

The demand for various forms of authoritative structures, Patriarchy, and tribalism is slowly growing as a countersignal to the brutal excesses of Feminism / Progressivism / W0k!sm, but many of the proponents don't know what they're asking for, and when they do get a taste of Patriarchal normalcy, they balk and chafe and object.

1. Catacomb Resident: Defending the Covenant (2024/8/4)
2. Adam Piggott: Women are not Warriors (2024/8/6)
3. Christianity and Masculinity: Headship is still authority in marriage Part 3 (2024/8/7)
4. Adam Piggott: Men, protect your women (2024/8/8)
5. Catacomb Resident: The Practice of Neighboring (2024/8/23)
6. Adam Piggott: Only Societies that Treat Women as Property Survive (2024/8/28)
7. Cornerstone: Why Are Fathers Sending Their Daughters to College? (2024/8/28)
8. Wintery Knight: How the presence and quality of fathers affects belief in God (2024/8/28)
9. Σ Frame: Jumping through Hoops (2024/8/30)
10. Adam Piggott: Good People who Live in Evil Societies (2024/8/31)

Of note, Adam Piggott's writings as of late are taking on a distinctive patriarchal flare.

Teaching

Teaching is a very important and central part of a community.

1. Σ Frame: What Plato's Allegory of the Cave Teaches Men (2024/8/2)
2. Matthew E. Cochran: The Cost of Being Christian at "Christian" Schools (2024/8/6)
3. Σ Frame: Meritocracy vs. True Upward Mobility (2024/8/19)
4. Σ Game: Higher Education and Hypergamy (2024/8/19)
5. PA Pundits: We Teach Kids Only Half The Scientific Method (2024/8/20)

6. Σ Frame: Poor Teaching Leads to a Difficult Life (2024/8/29)
7. The Orthosphere (J. M. Smith): Miscellany (2024/8/31)

In sum, a lot of the current teaching does not impart much practical value, while the things that really need to be taught are NOT.

Vox Day's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy

We also revisited Vox Day's SSH, and considered how it is NOT (but could be) used as a tool for teaching, building community, and conducting ministry. This discussion is a culmination of several posts in the previous theme (included here).

1. Σ Frame (Lexet): Revisiting Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy (2024/4/5)
2. Σ Frame: Is Vox's Socio-Sexual Hierarchy Bad for The Manosphere? (2024/6/21)
3. Catacomb Resident: Men of the Gospel (2024/6/23)
4. Catacomb Resident: Don't Join That Cult (2024/6/29)
5. Σ Frame: Gammas – The Manosphere's Untouchables (2024/7/26)
6. Σ Frame: Weaponizing (2024/7/29)
7. Σ Frame: Provoking a Perfunctory Parapet of Puppets (2024/8/7)
8. Radix Fidem: His Sacrificial Love (2024/8/9)
9. Σ Frame: Free Speech – The Need for Leadership (2024/8/17)
10. Omega Journey: The Sigma Frame Controversy (2024/8/25)

Unfaithful Community

Faithful communities are rare. Most of the strong communities that do exist are corrupted in some way.

1. Francis Berger: Reacting to System Manipulation is not Genuine Action (2024/8/9)

2. Francis Berger: Contemporary Westerners Are Born-Again Sort of Pagans (2024/8/15)
3. Σ Frame: Doctor$ are Human$ too (2024/8/20)
4. Σ Frame: Politicizing Evangelicalism (2024/8/22)
5. Bruce G. Charlton: The current hedonism (2024/8/23)
6. Σ Frame: Tells of a W0ke Church (2024/8/23)
7. Σ Frame: Which Churches have Sold Out? (2024/8/24)
8. Francis Berger: Those in Submission Feel No Need to Submit Anywhere Else (2024/8/26)
9. Σ Frame: Reminiscing on Our Immoral Culture (2024/8/26)
10. Crisis Magazine (Michael Hoffman): Mansplaining Ephesians (2024/8/27)
11. Founding Questions: A Brief History of Churchianity (Sort Of) (2024/8/29)

Other Perspectives on Community

1. Σ Frame: Why Are We Consuming Engine Lubricant? (2024/8/9)
2. Radix Fidem: Boundaries of Identity (2024/8/14)
3. Radix Fidem: Your Next Move (2024/8/16)
4. Radix Fidem: Adjusting Myself (2024/8/18)
5. Adam Piggott: On Worldly Matters (2024/8/19)
6. Adam Piggott: Individual versus Community (2024/8/21)
7. Σ Frame: Prosperity Grows where the Money Flows (2024/8/21)
8. Catacomb Resident: Justice: Restoration versus Punishment (2024/8/26)
9. Σ Frame: Are immoral women a product of an immoral culture, or vice versa? (2024/8/27)
10. Aaron Renn: Men Need to Start Paying Less Attention to Women (2024/8/28)
11. Σ Frame: If Queen Bee isn't chaste, those girls won't value purity (2024/8/28)
12. Catacomb Resident: Why Discourage Marriage? (2024/8/30)

Related

The following posts were cited as relevant to the discussions.

- Dalrock: Christians washing their hands of sexual morality. (2012/3/27)
- Crisis Magazine (James Kalb): Why Christian Sexual Morality is Rejected (2018/4/5)
- The Mainframe: Substack Must Stay the Course on Free Speech (2023/12/23)
- The Telegraph (Michael Coren): When churches go woke, they die (2024/4/13)
- History Tools: The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire: Decadence and Decay (2024/5/25)
- Catacomb Resident: Family Search (2024/7/5)
- Catacomb Resident: Ephemeral Community (2024/7/22)
- Omega Journey: Experiments in Leadership (2024/7/27)
- Radix Fidem: Benevolence in Control (2024/7/31)
- U.S. News and World Report: How to Track Congressional Stock Picks with These 2 ETFs (2024/8/1)
- To Reclaim Normality: Alice Cooper Shares The Story Of His Faith (2024/8/12)
- Catacomb Resident: Background Noise (2024/8/16)
- Catacomb Resident: Like Married Couples (2024/8/20)

The Stronghold of the Beta Factory

Jack · 2 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Why is it so difficult for Christian men to rise up?

Readership: Christian Men
Theme: Transactions
Length: 700 words
Reading Time: 3.5 minutes

In support of his assertion that Only Societies that Treat Women as Property Survive (2024/8/28), Adam Piggott wrote an astute follow-up post that compares good and evil societies and describes the consequences of good people living in an evil society.

> "In any society there are good people and bad people. Good people usually function from a position of good intent in their actions, and bad people tend to do the opposite. But people's actions are always framed within the society in which they live. It is important to keep this in mind, as if a society itself is fallen and it has turned towards evil, then good people in general will be affected by that and their actions will tend to fall in line with the prevailing norms of said society.

> In an evil society, good people will habitually do bad things. That is the greatest tragedy of such a malformed society. […] The good people … think and presume that they are doing the right thing because that is what their society demands of them. They obey and in doing so they commit evil…
>
> In the same society, bad people will do bad things anyway. […] But invariably in such a society they are not held to account. Their badness blends in with the overwhelming noise of corruption within which they hide and thrive.
>
> In a well ordered society, good people will adhere to the just and right laws and traditions on which the society is based. In the case of treating their women as property, they will do so not out of a desire for power but from an act of love. Patriarchy, true patriarchy, is love."

Adam concludes,

> "Objections to the idea of societies treating women as property tend to focus on what bad individuals will do in [a good i.e. patriarchal society]. Instead, the focus should be on how such societies work in general, and how such environments can allow women and men and their children to flourish."
>
> Adam Piggott: Good People who Live in Evil Societies (2024/8/31)

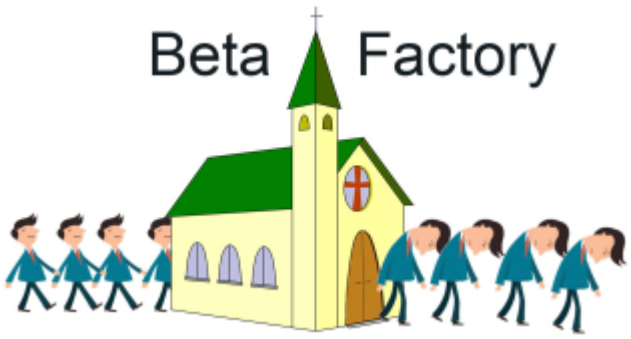
Following Adam's suggestion, I'll offer an observation about how societies work in general, specifically about the subculture of Big Eva, or 'churchianity' as we like to say here.

Big Churchians see themselves as the moral pinnacles and pillars of society. They have all the I's meted and all the T's crossed out within their theological understanding, and yet they fail to see the forest for all the trees because of the satisfactions of the spiritual pride that this produces within them.

Over the past few decades, this has become a stronghold of stubborn iniquity that has somehow retained the 'Christian' label attached to it. Generations of men and women have grown up in this environment, and are fully accustomed to the new 'normal' of socio-religious gynocentrism. They don't know anything any different, and they don't know what's wrong about it. Consequently, they're unable to see or even imagine that the whole paradigm is wrong (i.e. Complementarianism / Egalitarianism). Ask me how I know.



Thus, certain Biblical / patriarchal precepts are regarded as 'morally wrong', but in reality, they are confusing morals with ethics. The proscribed ethics are all strategized to support gynocentrism / W0kery (e.g. altruism, chivalry, compromise, inclusion, male utility, male disposability, even 'forgiveness', etc.).

It's difficult to change or "break out of" the intrinsic lies in this system because believing or doing anything any different is seen as upsetting the apple cart, and is therefore 'morally wrong', when in reality, it only violates the established subculture ethics which are wrong. They're unable to comprehend that doing anything different to change or escape the wrong paradigm is 'right', or at least a step in the right direction, because it seems wrong within that paradigm.

This deception of anything patriarchal being a moral error combined with the fear of violating this illusion is what keeps many churchians locked within the Beta Factory mindset. This is the "heavy yoke" that Jesus spoke of in Matthew 23:1-7.

What can be done to allow men, women, and their children to flourish in this environment?

Related

- Σ Frame: Tweaking Complementarianism for Mass Consumption (2023/7/26)
- Σ Frame: Men's Altruistic Idealism in an Age of Apostasy (2023/7/28)
- Σ Frame: The Philosophical Basis of Secularized Altruism (2023/7/31)
- Σ Frame: The Effect of Theology on Relationships (2023/10/25)
- Σ Frame: Biblical Masculinity vs Worldly Masculinity (2024/4/10)
- Σ Frame: Politicizing Evangelicalism (2024/8/22)

Spigots and Sponges

Jack · 3 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An analogy of Men's vs Women's Nature.

Readership: All
Theme: Transactions
Length: 350 words
Reading Time: 2 minutes

Intro

We think of men as hunters and women as gatherers.

We think of men as being competitive, and women as cooperative.

We are taught to think this way because emphasizing men's prowess and strength is respectful to men, and cherishing women's femininity and warmth is charitable to women.

Although it is 'right' to think this way, this is not really how it is.

This is only true in games, sports, and social events — fun stuff that doesn't really matter very much.

Men vs Women

In reality, men are cooperative spigots and women are competitive sponges. Even our anatomy bears this out.

In things that really matter, men are the "Git-R-Done" producers, and women are the "Dog-Eat-Dog" consumers.

Men will form hierarchies and structures to improve quality, efficiency, and output. Everyone comes along for the ride.

Women will go savage and will attempt to exact vengeance or destroy their competitors if they cannot 'win' or get what they want.

Men's cooperative productive nature is why most men can get along with most other men in an agreeable manner, even when they disagree.

Women's competitive consuming nature is why women envy and hate other women, even (and especially) when they're essentially the same.

Epilogue

Sponges absorb spigots. Women LOVE the attention of a high-value man, especially when they can get the attention of a man other women desire and thus cause those women to envy her.

Sponges dry out when the spigot doesn't spurt. Women HATE the attention of a low-value man, especially when the interaction consumes her time and emotional energy, or the association lowers her social status.

Spigots need an absorbant sponge to spurt in. Men just want to feel like a Ch@d, and 'know' (in the Biblical / carnal sense) that his power, his productivity, and his seed are desired, respected, and valued.

Related

- Σ Frame: When wanton treachery brings shame not honor (2020/10/14)
- Σ Frame: The Objectification of Reproductive Potential must deliver an Ego Rush or else it is Chauvinistic. (2020/11/18)
- Σ Frame: Sexual competition continues after marriage (2021/2/19)
- Σ Frame: It's all about her Ego (2021/11/12)
- Σ Frame: Women were Created to Conform (2023/5/8)
- Σ Frame: The Logic of WGTOW (2024/6/14)

Why are women attracted specifically to men who won't commit?

Jack · 4 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

It's because these men are displaying dominance, among other things.

Readership: All, especially Christians
Theme: Transactions
Author's Note: This post is based on an email from a happily married Christian wife and mother, received on 2024/8/17. Edited for readability. Jack's additions at the end are in blue text.
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes

Intro

In Belief, Cognition, and Faith (2024/8/15), Jack posed the question,

> "Why are women attracted specifically to men who won't commit?"

AngloSaxon answered,

> 1. They think they can change him.
> 2. They don't want marriage, they just want fun.

Speaking as a woman, I have a different take on it.

From a WOMAN's point of view, we are NOT stupidly running after men who will not commit. We are attracted to men who display dominance and have a purpose, and therefore offer a lifepath that a woman can fit herself into.

But there's a lot more to this. Let me explain.

A Woman's Role of Purpose

What are women designed for? In other words, what is the PURPOSE of women? It says right there in Genesis 2:18:

> And the LORD God said, "It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him."

In other words, the wife is designed to be the helpmate for the man. Not the other way around like feminism would like. In feminism, it is MAN who is a helper of WOMAN.

The difference between men who will not commit and men who will commit is not a question of COMMITMENT. It is a difference in ATTITUDE.

The man who will NOT commit has the woman in his life because SHE serves HIS purpose (which is often nothing more than sexual relations these days). If she does not fulfill this role, she is out. So she is the one who has to prove herself as WORTHY to be in his life. This builds ATTRACTION as it ironically aligns with God's Biblical purpose for the woman. She finds him attractive as SHE is the one proving herself to HIM.

With the man who will commit — HE is trying to convince HER to accept his proposal and so HE is proving himself to HER. So she loses attraction to him. That is NOT her God-given role in a relationship.

During Courtship

Jack asked me a long time back how I secured my husband's proposal. It was actually quite simple. My husband informed me about HIS purpose, HIS vision, HIS mission in life — building his business and his family. And he needed a wife who would support him in that. That meant a whole bunch of things — from learning to live frugally till the business could turn a profit; to understanding the long hours of work from his side that would be required (time that he would not be able to share with me), and the need for a peaceful home when he got back at the end of the day.

My husband did NOT make a marriage proposal to me because he loved me. I am not saying he did not have feelings for me — obviously he did, or else we wouldn't have even had that conversation in the first place. But the way he went about it was NOT an expression of romantic love like many men will do. Instead, he shared with me that this is what he was looking for in a wife and left it to me to decide if that was the kind of wife I could be. THAT sense of purpose was what BUILT my attraction for him.

Since my father picked the men I dated at the time, I was dating very successful men with high LAMPS. My husband was not the most outstanding man who courted me, but I still chose to marry my husband because with him I saw a life that we would build together. It was a life of PURPOSE — and I felt NEEDED by him for him to reach that purpose. It became OUR purpose.

Marriage is NOT about two independent people living a roommate life. Marriage is designed to be interdependent.

That did not mean my husband did not commit. But only when I agreed to be the kind of wife he needed was the proposal made. My husband did not qualify himself to me. He qualified himself to MY DAD. After that, I needed to qualify MYSELF to get that marriage proposal (which I did) when I agreed that I was WILLING to be that kind of wife.

I was not attracted to a man who did not commit. But what built the attraction was the attitude he had that I was the one who needed to qualify to be in HIS life.

Speaking as a Mother

I have heard my husband tell our sons that just because you are sexually attracted to a woman does not mean you are in love with her. However, it does mean (assuming she is available and you are in the season of life for marriage) you can ask her out on a date. And just because you love a woman does not mean you should ask her to be your wife. AN AWESOME WOMAN DOES NOT MEAN SHE WILL BE AN AWESOME WIFE. The question is whether this woman will be your helper or not. If not, then she does NOT get a marriage proposal regardless of what you feel. He also added, that is why it is important for all men to know THEIR purpose / mission in life and what kind of wife is required for that. You marry a helpmate. The PURPOSE defines the marriage. You make the RELATIONSHIP work to achieve PURPOSE. It is not the RELATIONSHIP that holds the marriage. It is the PURPOSE.

Discussion

Unfortunately, in today's culture, the men who do NOT commit are the ones who are most following the BIBLICAL mandate: They are asking, "Is this woman suitable to be my helper?" Meanwhile, the men who ARE willing to commit are asking the wrong question: "Please marry me! … and here is why you should pick ME as YOUR husband." The structure is inverted.

Women find men sexually attractive when it is the WOMAN doing the qualifying to be in his life and not the other way around.

The sad part is in today's culture it is the CADS and JERKS who are asking women to qualify themselves. These men's primary qualification is whether she puts out or not, and women are stupidly trying to meet this qualification without first securing a commitment. As long as these men receive sexual attention from women, they have no reason to commit, so the women do not get stable relationships.

But if a CHRISTIAN man (like my husband) has the same ATTITUDE — the woman needs to qualify herself to get a marriage proposal — it BUILDS attraction and establishes respect which is what my husband has from me.

It is the ATTITUDE which CHRISTIAN men need to learn. It is NOT about his COMMITMENT but about "Who is qualifying whom?" It is about which type of hierarchical structure that he is presenting to her. They need to explain or make clear exactly WHAT they want from a woman and WHY (which is BIBLICAL).

How to express the right attitude? For men, it is about expectations, and using those expectations to draw boundaries as to what he will accept from a woman. For women, it is also about setting boundaries in the form of saying "no".

Conclusions

When men expect sex, and women qualify themselves for this by bedding down with them, then it leads to promiscuity and NO commitment.

When men expect wifely behavior, companionship, faithfulness, and help, then women must qualify themselves in this way to be chosen for commitment.

When men try to qualify themselves to women, then they are rejected at best, or end up with a domineering wife at worst.

The modern problem is that women don't want marriage until after they've disqualified themselves for marriage by qualifying themselves as sex toys to men who won't commit. As long as women prioritize illicit sex over commitment, men expecting women to qualify themselves for commitment is useless.

For men, the modern problem is that men are not taught to place expectations on women, including and especially the expectation that women need to qualify themselves to be worthy of commitment. But this is a moot point if women have already disqualified themselves.

Related

- Σ Frame: Laying out Expectations (2022/10/20)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Why are attractive women more dangerous to beta men than their less attractive friends? (2023/2/13)
- Σ Frame: Expectations, Laws, and Policies regarding Marriage (2023/6/22)
- Σ Frame (Red Pill Apostle): Boundaries 101 for Dummies (2024/2/1)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): Deti's 10 Rules on Boundaries (2024/2/3)
- Σ Game: Who's in Charge? (2024/8/17)
- Σ Frame: If Queen Bee isn't Chaste, those girls won't value purity (2024/8/28)

Studless in Seattle : Competition in a Corrupted Shrinking Market

Jack · 5 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An analogy explaining the current SMP / MMP playing field.

Readership: All
Theme: Transactions
Length: 600 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

Intro

Men are like spigots; women are like sponges.

Men are cooperative and productive; women are competitive and consuming.

Men are the producers / suppliers, and women are the consumers / demanders*.

Over the past decade, the growing popularity of "moving off the grid", MGTOW, and Passporting, and cynical male attitudes like Drizzle Drizzle, indicate more men are onanizing out of the Western social machine altogether, leaving fewer producers / 'spigots' / suppliers. IOW, the pie has shrunk. Consequently, the perceived competition for the trappings of status, wealth, etc., as well as for the zenith studs who produce these, has risen to insane extremes.

As slatterizing has increased, women have sunk their market value to Dead Sea levels, and honorable men have bowed out of the competition. Thus, men's competition for women is practically non-existent, while women's competition for THOSE Men, resources, status, wealth, etc., is entering a Black Market. The remaining competition itself BETWEEN women is intense!

 Not to be confused with Gottman's concept of "making demands" in a conflict structure.*
 Ironically, these men are the 'leftovers' in this context and have the liberty to behave accordingly.*

Studless in Seattle — Competition in a Shrinking Market

What do I mean by saying "the remaining competition is BETWEEN women"?

To illuminate my lightening rod, I'll compare this intrasexual competition to the lootings that have become commonplace in the major cities in Washington state. The analogous entities are given in parentheses.

When the law is lax, 'defunded', or undermanned (loose morals in a gynocentric society), and looters steal items in stores continually over a span of time (sexual promiscuity), the producers (men) take an immediate hit, but the strategic (smarter) ones will extinguish those joints and open a store somewhere else (MGTOW, Passporting, etc.). The consumers (women) no longer have those goods available to them, either because they've been pinched (not available to the defiled), or because the outlets have closed.

The Broken Window Effect comes to the fore of play. More lacklusters are emboldened to commit larceny, while the honest folks must swallow hiked up prices to cover damages / losses. When the market dries up, a scarcity results, and the good goods remaining are in greater demand. For a time, there is a competition between consumers (women) and looters (304s) to buy or steal as much stuff as they can before the goods are gone or the shops close up. Of course, Hooters take the bono steal in the smash up, not least at closing time.

Reactions vary. Some consumers will move to Red States (Born Again H0e / post-wall repentance). Some will do without (career, cats, and wine). Some will turn to crime (OASIS, 0nlyF@ns, etc.).

Caveats

Not sure this analogy holds up for every detail, but its pretty accurate in general.

MGTOW doesn't directly affect women in a market that is already corrupted, but nevertheless, women perceive it sharply as a scarcity and react accordingly. And as far as most women are concerned, appearance IS reality.

Readers might think of some other caveats or exceptions.

Related

- Σ Frame: Sexual Market Value (SMV) vs. Marriage Market Value (MMV) (2017/7/17)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Lopsided Liberalized Mating Market (2021/2/17)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Sexual Market IS the Marriage Market (2021/2/22)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Rupture of the Marriage Market Place (2021/7/14)
- Σ Frame (Thedeti): The Unsolvable Problem of The Modern Sexual/Relationship Market (2022/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Market Dynamics of the Hustle Economy (2024/2/7)
- Σ Frame: Revising Our Concepts of SMV and MMV (2024/4/26)
- Σ Frame: Reminiscing on Our Immoral Culture (2024/8/26)
- Σ Frame: Are immoral women a product of an immoral culture, or vice versa? (2024/8/27)
- Σ Game: Target-Rich Environment (2024/11/17)

Female Competition : Consumerism

Jack · 6 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Examining Women's Fearal Nature.

Readership: All
Theme: Transactions
Length: 600 words
Reading Time: 3 minutes

The previous post about Competition in a Corrupted Shrinking Market (2024/9/5) illustrated that there is a hotbed of competition BETWEEN women these days. Let's consider this more closely.

Female Competition

Competition between women is nothing new. Women are always, and always have been competing against other women.

Women compete for many things, including…

- Status
- Wealth
- Relevancy
- Popularity
- Acceptance
- To be heard
- Affirmation
- Social security
- Ego supremacy

- Social influence
- Sexual conquest
- The attention of both men and women
- Access to income, money, and resources
- Displaying indicators of status and wealth
- The admiration of peers, especially other women
- They'll even compete for the competitive advantage of having a competitive edge.

Ultimately, most all of this competition among and between women is about Consumerism / Materialism, the ability to indulge themselves in the Comforts and Conveniences thereof, as well as maintaining the appearance and the status thereof. Having a high value man is often nothing more than an anchor for these trappings. And if he's sufficiently Tingle inducing, she won't feel guilty about it. When the ship is secure, the anchor is weighed. This is why it is so easy for women to criticize and judge men, and/or dump one man and swing to another.

Consumerism / Materialism has no upper limit. Women always want MOAR and they always will! If a woman has a tall man, she'll want a richer tall man. If a woman has a house, she'll want a bigger one in a better neighborhood. If she has a Toyota Prius, she'll want an Audi SUV. If she has a Mercedes, she'll want a chauffeur. Even if a woman owned the whole planet Earth, she would be pining for Mars or Venus.

Women only cease competing when no imminent threat is perceived, and/or no benefit is forthcoming. When life is comfy, peaceful, and secure (as in marriage), then no effort will be made.

Men are not like Women

Men seek serenity, stability, and sufficiency. Women must have it ALL! And they're still not satisfied.

Men can be content with clean running water, electricity, a bed, a shower, a barbecue or fire pit, a refrigerator to keep his meat and drinks ice cold, and a place to work and/or to engage in his hobbies. Men won't buy a 30 million dollar mansion in Beverly Hills just to have a posh pad to vegetate in and be the talk of the town.

But women do and will.

Men might try to amass wealth and hone their game / rizz, but they'll do it to better themselves and/or to get access to better opportunities and better quality women. Men don't create temptations to the opposite sex just to make the next guy look like a dork or to steal his girlfriend / wife.

But women do and will.

Men buy gadgets, tools, and machines because it is efficient, it 'works', and they love the sense of autonomy, mastery, and self-sufficiency it gives to them. There might be some exceptions (among Alphas) due to the strict demands of maintaining dominance, but men typically don't buy a new lawnmower or a BMW just to "outdo the Joneses", or to bolster their ego after a sh!tty day, or to feel good about themselves.

But women do and will.

Men, if you find a woman who dresses to please you, and only you, who wears her hair as long as you like, and who values your opinion more than that of her female peers, then you've found a rare and valuable gem. Such behavior deserves to be rewarded.

Next, I'll examine a couple of ways women compete against other women.

Related

- Σ Frame: Sexual competition continues after marriage (2021/2/19)
- Σ Frame: It's all about her Ego (2021/11/12)
- Σ Frame: Women were Created to Conform (2023/5/8)
- Σ Frame: The Logic of WGTOW (2024/6/14)
- Σ Frame: No Virtue Exists Without Masculine Incentives (2024/6/28)

Herd Behavior : Cosmetics

Jack · 9 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Why do women wear makeup?

Readership: All
Theme: Transactions
Length: 1,200 words
Reading Time: 7 minutes + 8 minute video (optional)

Cosmetics

Q: Why are [insert demographic] men so ugly?

A: Because [insert demographic] men do NOT wear makeup.

As a child, I believed that women wore makeup to make themselves more beautiful.

As an adolescent, I believed that women wore makeup to attract men.

But when I became a MAN, and as my discernment grew, I put these half-baked ideas behind me (1 Corinthians 13:11).

Bimbo Got REKT After Lying About WHY She Wears Makeup! (2024/8/23) Length: 8 minutes

In this video, Myron Gaines makes the case that women wear makeup to look good for men, specifically high SMV men. The way he handles the discussion makes it appear like it's a truth that the women don't want to admit. But the real reason the chicks are reticent is because there is another truth that the women are embarassed to admit and are trying to avoid — a truth that Myron didn't pick up on. Interestingly, Walter and their esteemed guest Andrew Wilson didn't catch this either.

The women claim that they wear makeup for themselves, which is only 1/4 of the truth — the polite part. One woman mentions that they do it for 'networking', which is a little more honest, but she refuses to explain what 'networking' means. One woman goes so far as to say that she wears whatever makeup style will maximize her income (as a stripper or 0nlyF@ns starlette, I presume). This gets us three-quarters of the way there.

Here, I'll explain the last tidbit of truth that will tie it all together — the dirty bits that no woman wants to reveal.

It's NOT for 'Looks'

First of all, take a closer look at Myron's video. ALL the women on his panel have the SAME style of makeup.

- Fake eyelashes
- 'Nude' colored lipstick
- Highlighted cheekbones
- The "Natural" makeup style
- Black Hooded, Winged, or "Cat's Eye" eyeliner
- Eyebrows manicured to the "thin, arched" shape (see image below)
- With one exception, even their hairstyle is the same — straightened and parted down the center.

They're all the SAME!

Take a look around and you'll see that this is true for any herd of hens. The styles of makeup may vary from group to group, but ALL the women in a clique will have the SAME style of makeup.

Is it a coincidence that ALL these women might say they think they look their best in this SAME exact style?

Or do you think these chicks all wore the same style of makeup just because it is the trending style?

Ironically, their purpose for wearing makeup is NOT to make themselves look more beautiful or BETTER than other women per se. No. The goal is NOT to stand out as any different from the others. The purpose is to nail the accepted sameness within a particular clique and context. "I have to identify as the MOST generic clown in the room." Paradoxically, the woman who mimics the most homogeneous cake face of the bunch wins the competition for cosmetic consistency. She will be applauded by all the other women and receive the most ego stroking.

It's NOT for Men

Do you think these chicks all wore the SAME style of makeup to impress Andrew, Myron, or Walter? Or the producer? Or a mystery Ch@d watching them from behind stage? Or their boyfriends (plural) watching them on YouTube?

No. It's not for men. In general, the P_ssy cartel strictly forbids women to do anything specifically to appeal to men's interests or to win a man's favor.

Women do NOT collect thousands of dollars of cosmetics and then spend hours each day dabbling it on their faces in order to impress the man in their life. No. They do it to LOOK LIKE other women and to FIT IN to their peer clutch.

In a private relationship with a man, a woman will let that man believe she's wearing makeup just for him as a form of honeycraft to soften him up.

But make no mistake, when push comes to shove, and she's forced to choose between the makeup style that her main squeeze likes best, or the makeup style that is trending among her clique of the week, she'll choose the latter.

It's for 'SAMEness' i.e. Group Identity

There is Power (and anonymity) in Numbers.

Women will don the same makeup style to signify they are part of the herd.

If every woman in her clique has manicured eyebrows, she will too.

If every woman in her clique is wearing blue lipstick, she will too.

If every woman in her clique has short hair or long hair or dyed hair or bangs or braids or botox or eyeliner or a tattoo or whatever, she will get that too.

Women will spend hours and thousands of dollars at the salon to make themselves as generic to the herd as possible. Whatever the 'IN' look is, i.e. whatever all the other women in her clique are putting on, she'll break her purse strings to adapt.

The more women there are in a group, the more makeup they will wear. The less women there are, the less they will wear.

Why? More peer pressure to identify with and fit into the group.

A woman who goes hiking or camping with her boyfriend or husband will not bring her eyeshadow and lipstick, because if there are no other women around then it doesn't matter to her, even though it might matter to him.

Why not? No herd and no Queen Bee to criticize and police her presentation.

OTOH, a woman who works at a corporation will be checking her compact mirror every half hour, even though it entices temptation and does nothing to improve her marriage.

Why? Intra-female pressure to conform to an acceptable sameness. It is a 'sin' to be ostentatiously different.

Conclusions

Men might think a woman wears makeup because she wants to make herself look more beautiful, or BETTER than other women, or more appealing to men.

No, No, and No.

These might be partly true, but the real reason why women wear makeup is to CONFORM. The reason why it is so important for her to conform is so that she can build up rapport in the clique, establish a modicum of faux trust, get the inside scoop on all the soundbytes, and use those social connections for her own purposes. Those purposes may or may not include attracting or bagging or duping a man, depending on what the clique is doing. But either way, the big payoff for women is in the acceptance, affirmation, and attention she receives from being a spoke in the ever spinning hamster wheel of the clique.

In short, women feel an overarching need to conform and fit into a clique of peers. The reward is acceptance into the female herd and possibly (hopefully) peer validation.

Men, if you find a woman who dresses to please you, and only you, who wears her hair as long as you like, and who values your opinion more than that of her female peers, then you've found a rare and valuable gem. Such behavior deserves to be rewarded.

Related

- Σ Frame: Opal's Femsplaination of Cakeface (2018/6/17)
- Σ Frame: Things men found attractive 50 years ago are still attractive today. (2020/3/25)
- Σ Frame: Fantasy in Makeup and Photography (2021/4/16)
- Σ Frame: Descriptors of Beauty and Attractiveness (2021/4/23)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: It's all about her Ego (2021/11/12)
- Σ Frame: Identifying the Meaning of Color (2022/6/1)
- Σ Frame: Women were Created to Conform (2023/5/8)
- Σ Frame: The Logic of WGTOW (2024/6/14)

Herd Behavior : Apparel

Jack · 10 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Women's motivations in choosing clothing.

Readership: All
Theme: Transactions
Length: 1,400 words
Reading Time: 8 minutes

It's NOT for Men

Men like to think that a woman dresses for the man in her life, to make herself attractive to him, and for him.

But in reality, this is rare.

Yes, women do LOVE the attention of a high-value man, especially when they can get the attention of a man other women desire and thus cause those women to envy her. So we might assume that women dress to attract such men.

This does happen on occasion, but this is not always the case. In fact, it's rather rare.

It is a mistake to assume that a woman's first thought is to dress herself according to a man's tastes (or mens' in general), or to make herself more attractive or beautiful to please a man or win men's favor.

What is her motivation for wearing this particular sundress?
In reality, all they're doing is drawing the lustful attention of low-value wankers. Women know this, and they hate Hate HATE this side-effect of dressing hot, especially when the interaction consumes her time and emotional energy, or the association lowers her social status.

So then what motivates women to wear a business pantsuit, or a burqa, or a frumpy denim jumper, or a sweatshirt / hoodie, or anything that does not accentuate their natural beauty???

Dressing to Conform vs Dressing to Compete

There are two basic contexts that affect women's motivations to dress a certain way: (1) Dressing to Conform, and (2) Dressing to Compete. In general, women dress to conform, and on certain special occasions, they'll dress to compete.

When dressing to conform, women will choose their clothing with respect to the opinions of other women, specifically women in their clique, NOT what would be seen as most attractive to men.

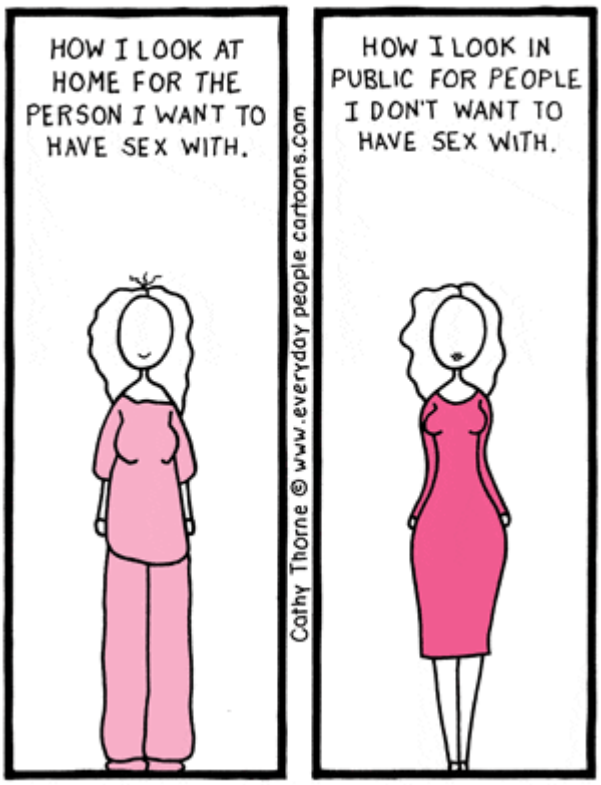
Like with cosmetics, women will don similar colors and styles of clothing to signify they are part of the archetypal social set she identifies with. Her appearance must fit the generic feminine brand of "looking good" that is accepted by the herd. If a woman looks TOO delicious (by either men's or lesser endowed women's estimations), she'll be castigated as a s1ut by the harridan hens who can't compete. That is a no no!

A woman who dresses specifically to please a man has betrayed the p_ssy cartel. Thus, women will only wear sexy, sultry clothing when they perceive that bagging a man's attention, commitment, and/or investment, or making $$$ off their sex appeal, is worth sacrificing her standing in the P_ssy cartel. This is why women often go to bars and clubs alone or with a very small clique of other women. Women won't go-go a h0eing with women they don't know intimately well.

In this case, h0ez are competing against s1utz FOR men's attention, ca$h, investment, and ubcription$ — NOT for the MEN themselves, mind you, although this may be taken into account and/or implemented in the context of OASIS. The goal is to draw attention to themselves and make themselves more attractive and beautiful than their competition, or to maximize their income from marketing their sex appeal. It's actually NOT for men. Women know exactly how to dress to make themselves appealing to men, and most women will NOT ever dress that way (unless she happens to be an OASIS starlet or she's in a clique that does). That would be considered h0ey or s1utty by women's estimations. (However, this is not as taboo as it was years ago.)

Married women will hardly ever wear those high heels and that skimpy red dress. Even though her husband may like it, she'll say "It's too much work".

Why? No competition. He's already committed.



But h0ez hitting the bar will have a closet full of sexy skirts, stiletto shoes, and slinky accessories. They'll spend hours and thousands of dollars at the salon to make themselves as hot as possible.

Why? Competition.

The context makes all the difference.

Men might looksmax, but they'll do it for dignity and to garner respect. Men don't wear Armani and drive a Porsche just to make the next guy look like an impoverished vagabond.

But women do and will.

Once the competition is gone or the tally is in the bag, she'll revert back to whatever her default setting is, which is often disappointing to men. She'll expect the man to be content with whatever that is, which is naïvely solipsistic.

News Flash: Whatever a woman does to catch a man, that is what she'll have to continue doing in order to keep him.

Case Study — Dress Length

Cassey Ho is a health and fitness instructor, and she's also a clothing designer who is popular because she markets clothing designs that women want but are unable to find commercially produced. She uses YouTube and Instagram to get ideas and feedback about how she can make her designs better.

In this post (2024/9/4), Cassey presents two lengths of a white 'Pirouette skort' in two different sizes.

There are more than a thousand comments in response to this post, and most of them offer ideas about how to improve the design for either size. I've only read the top comments, but from what I've read, most women say the longer 'small' size and the shorter '1x' size are better. However, most men say the shorter 'small' size and the longer '1x' size are better.

Why is there a difference between men's and women's opinions?

Women will state this opinion because of the need to conform to the herd mentality. They have to apply the same standards to everyone, and they don't want to differentiate on the basis of dress size which is a proxy indicator for weight and therefore attractiveness. IOW, they are avoiding any stance that would imply there is an intrasexual competition. It's posture posing for 'inclusion'.

You see, the competition is not about looking their best in men's opinion, but in who can be the best champion for the feminine herd — and the narrative is different for every social context.

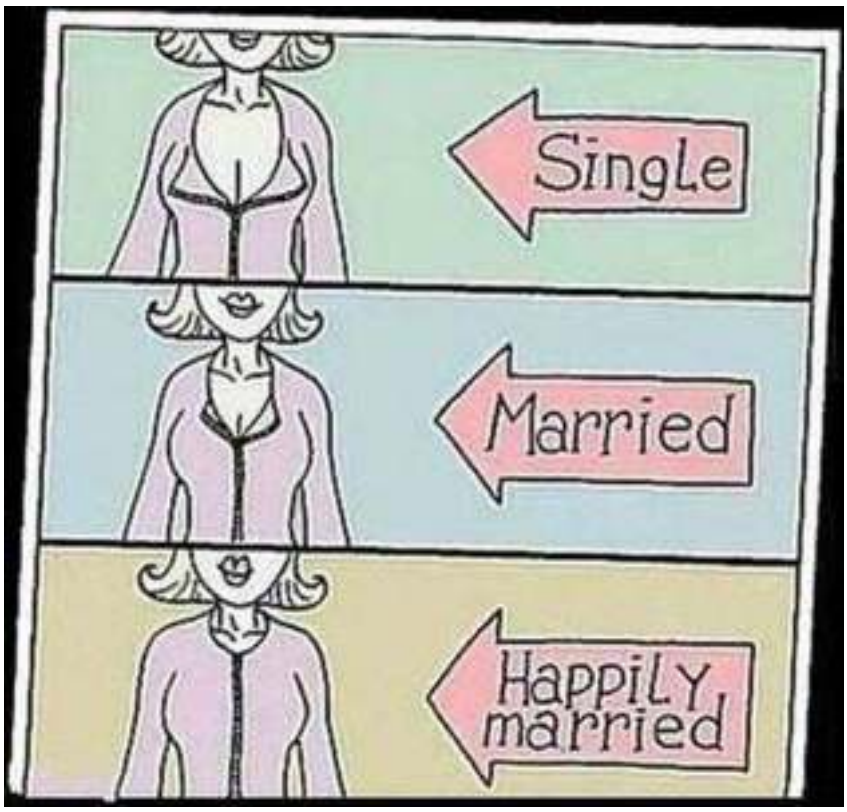
One of these girls has literally grown out of her peer clutch, and is not afraid to flaunt them.

Speaking from a man's POV, this 'skort' is not particularly attractive, but if we had to choose, the shorter 'small' size appears more athletic and youthful, and it accentuates the girl's figure better, whereas the longer '1x' size just seems more appropriate and fitting for a larger woman. To be crudely honest, we really DON'T want to see that cottage cheese cellulite on the back of her thighs and the rolls of fat around wherever we might guess her knees are. Put more gracefully, bigger women have more dignity when they cover that up.

The male commenters at Cassey's site are honest about what can be done to improve the design of the 'skort', but they're not very frank about why. Men are just too polite to say so, or they don't want to deal with the vitriolic response they know they'll get from women, or they just don't care.

Conclusions

In general, women do NOT dress for men, or to make themselves attractive or beautiful to win men's favor. They dress to identify with a specific social group and to FIT IN and to be accepted by their peer clutches.



Even when competing with other women on rare occasion, they'll only do what is necessary to best the competition and to obtain their desire. Once done, this stratagem is abandoned.

OASIS starlets will dress to arouse men's desire, but only because it earns them more $$$.

Concerning the Case Study, if you asked a woman which dress length she would choose for herself, do you think she would agree with the men, or with the women, or would she have her own opinion that dances around the context?

Men, if you find a woman who dresses to please you, and only you, who wears the clothing styles you like, and who values your opinion more than that of her female peers, then you've found a rare and valuable gem. Such behavior deserves to be rewarded.

Related

- Σ Frame: Hamster's Hierarchy of Sluts (2017/10/11)
- Σ Frame: Bon Mot of Slut Science (2017/10/13)
- Σ Frame: Things men found attractive 50 years ago are still attractive today. (2020/3/25)
- Σ Frame: When wanton treachery brings shame not honor (2020/10/14)
- Σ Frame: The Objectification of Reproductive Potential must deliver an Ego Rush or else it is Chauvinistic. (2020/11/18)
- Σ Frame: Sexual competition continues after marriage (2021/2/19)
- Σ Frame: Fantasy in Makeup and Photography (2021/4/16)
- Σ Frame: Descriptors of Beauty and Attractiveness (2021/4/23)
- Σ Frame: Sex Appeal is not strongly correlated with Beauty (2021/4/30)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: It's all about her Ego (2021/11/12)

- Σ Frame: Identifying the Meaning of Color (2022/6/1)
- Σ Frame: Warning: New Ultra Conservative P0rn Trending (2022/6/3)
- Spawny's Space (Jack): Tunics (2022/9/27)
- Christianity and Masculinity: Attraction and glorification (2023/10/1)
- Σ Frame: Women were Created to Conform (2023/5/8)
- Σ Frame: The Attraction of Glorification (2023/9/30)
- Σ Frame: The Logic of WGTOW (2024/6/14)

The Compliance Test

Jack · 11 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Is she dressing herself for HIM or for some other reason?

Readership: All
Theme: Transactions
Length: 750 words
Reading Time: 4 minutes

Intro

In the past few posts, we've looked at why women choose specific clothing and makeup — and overall, it's NOT for men or even to make themselves more attractive to men.

In general, the P_ssy cartel strictly forbids women to do anything specifically to appeal to men's interests or to win a man's favor.

But in a private relationship with a man, a woman will let a man believe she's wearing her clothing, hairstyle, makeup, etc. just for him.

It should be noted that this is a form of honeycraft intended to soften him up and entice him to be compliant to her whims.

Bardelys the Magnificent observed,

> "Yes, women overall dress to conform to the herd. Until they find a man they want to attract, then they do what they think will catch him. I've seen many women completely abandon a style of dress to catch a man and then go right back to the old way like nothing ever happened once he's no longer in the picture. It's surreal to watch."

This is easy for a woman to do because men are prone to think a woman dresses up because she wants to look more beautiful, or BETTER than other women, or to make herself more appealing to him.

But her true motivation may very well be none of these reasons.

How can a man know if a woman is truly interested in meeting and matching his opinions and preferences or not?

The Compliance Test

Gentlemen, here's the test to determine whether a woman is wearing her clothing, hair, makeup, etc. just for you.

How does she react when you demand a change?

What does she do when you tell her you don't like a particular style, or you ask her to let her hair grow longer, or to wear a different dress, or different makeup, or no makeup at all?

If you tell her your opinion and it is different from her own, does she respect your wishes or does she bloviate and follow the herd and/or her own preferences?

If she complies to your preferences, then she might be true.

Would your girl dress like this if you asked her to?

If she pouts and throws an indignant tantrum, and insists on doing things "her way", then it's a clown show for the P_ssy cartel, or her own convenience, or her own ego.

Most women will go the route of "My body, my choice", thus proving my point raised in previous posts that women will usually NOT seriously consider what men prefer.

To single men: If you find a woman who dresses to please you, and only you, who wears the clothing you prefer, who grows her hair as long as you like, and who values your opinion more than that of her female peers, then you've found a rare and valuable gem. Such behavior deserves to be rewarded.

To men yoked with the blessed burden: Call your girl out on how she's always trying to "fit in" to the chick clique. Pressure her to conform to YOUR expectations and/or what YOU deem is appropriate. Reward her if and when and only when she cheerfully submits.

Case Study — Jill's Hair

Early in their marriage, Jack made it clear that he expected Jill to have at least shoulder length hair and no funny colors. Several times, Jill went to the salon and had her hair trimmed shorter than that, just to assert her egotistical free will and to sh!t test Jack. She complained that having long hair feels 'hot' and is so much work to take care of. Jack consistently responded with anger and solemn-faced disapproval, saying things like, "Now you can pretend to be my husband for a while." and "Why do you want to make yourself sooo middle-class?" This always aroused Jill's rebellious indignation. Arguments and silent treatment followed.

But over time, Jill grew to accept Jack's demands and has come to appreciate the fact that long hair is more beautiful and feminine (1 Corinthians 11:15) and her body is not her own (1 Corinthians 6:19-20). It's one of the 'requirements' for being happily married.

Related

- Σ Frame: Bon Mot of Slut Science (2017/10/13)
- Σ Frame: Things men found attractive 50 years ago are still attractive today. (2020/3/25)
- Σ Frame: When wanton treachery brings shame not honor (2020/10/14)
- Σ Frame: The Objectification of Reproductive Potential must deliver an Ego Rush or else it is Chauvinistic. (2020/11/18)
- Σ Frame: Sexual competition continues after marriage (2021/2/19)
- Σ Frame: Fantasy in Makeup and Photography (2021/4/16)
- Σ Frame: Descriptors of Beauty and Attractiveness (2021/4/23)
- Σ Frame: Sex Appeal is not strongly correlated with Beauty (2021/4/30)
- Σ Frame: The Influence of Culturally Imposed Sexuality on Women (2021/8/2)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Influence of Pornography and OnlyFans on Women (2021/8/4)
- Σ Frame: It's all about her Ego (2021/11/12)
- Σ Frame: Women were Created to Conform (2023/5/8)

The Wheel Model : How Female Social Groups Function

Jack · 12 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Understanding the Hive Mentality.

Readership: All
Theme: Transactions
Length: 2,000 words
Reading Time: 11 minutes

Intro

Vox Day had a post on Sigma Game, The Benefits of Female Solipsism (2024/2/7), which reposts a long essay from a female contributor. This essay offers an insightful glimpse at female social psychology and motivation, and it makes a lot of sense with respect to what we already know about female nature. So I thought it deserved a deep dive.

In this essay, I'll explore the perspectives raised, broken down into the following sections (with reorganization of text by topic, minor editing, and formatting).

1. How female social groups are organized.
2. How female social groups function.
3. How female social groups are based on resource acquisition and distribution.
4. How female social groups are based on status.
5. How female solipsism has a positive function by serving as the grease to the female social group's wheel.
6. What Determines a Woman's Social Rank / Value?
7. The question of whether it is possible to construct a predictive model that anticipates female behavior on the basis of a woman's social and/or sexual rank.

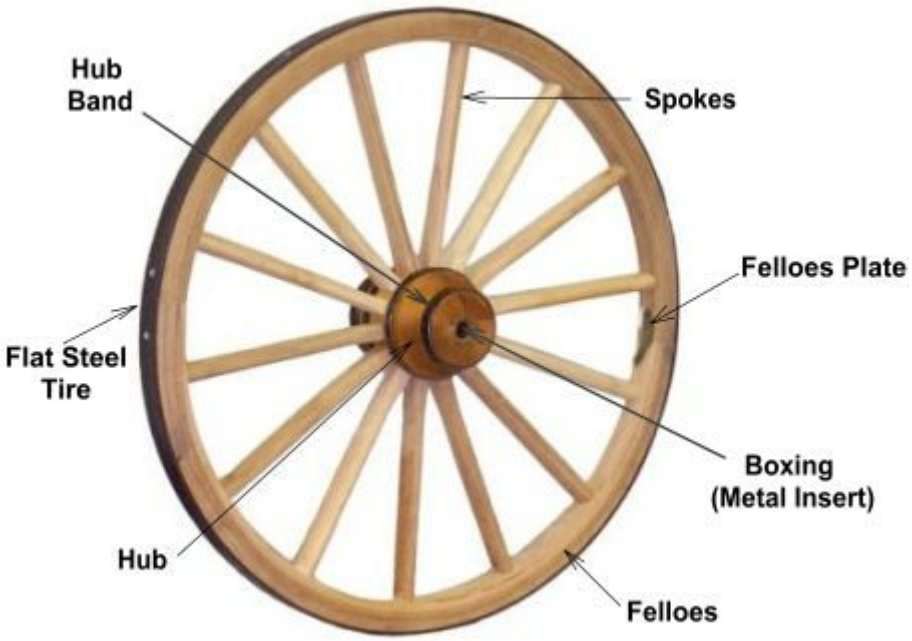
This post will cover 1 – 4. A total of 7 case studies were given throughout the contributor's essay and are included here at the end. This is a long read at 2,000 words, but well worth the time. I'd even say this should be required reading for men struggling to understand female social behaviors.

I will cover 5, 6, and 7 in separate posts.

1. An Analogy of Female Social Groups : Hubs, Spokes, and Beads

Female social circles / cliques are described as a Wheel, with the Queen Bee as the Hub, and the other women as 'beads' on the spokes. This model assumes resource acquisition, management, and distribution as a primary purpose of the association. (This will be examined in Section 3.)

> "Women's social groups can be visualized as wheels, with a Hub woman whose character and values set the goals of the group and the type, general amount, and distribution of resources being allocated toward those goals."



> "The other women are "Beads" on the Hub's spokes, who can slide in and out of closeness to the Hub based on the Hub's willingness to allocate resources to them and how willing they are to having their resources allocated by the Hub."
>
> "The Wheel takes on the values of and pursues the goals of its Hub, and attracts Beads who share those values and goals."

2. How Female Social Groups Function : Conformity

The Wheel model explains why women prioritize fitting into a group, and why women police group conformity.

> "Women will compete to get into Wheels and will compete to be Hubs. The intra-Bead competition [for favored status] and Wheel gate-keeping to prevent low-status women dragging down the wheel's overall value is where female competition gets the cattiest. A well-established Hub is usually above competition (re: not cutting the hottest cousin's hair), and will crack down hard on a Bead who gets uppity."

Here we find that there is a hierarchy of sorts among women, but it is constantly changing and so conformity (i.e. clothing, cosmetics, and also group-think / "hive mind") is prioritized instead for cohesion. In comparison, for men, some degree of conformity is often assumed, and sometimes required (e.g. the military) but hierarchy is emphasized as central to order. Moreover, conformity is to women what hierarchy is to men. In either paradigm, conformity (for women) or hierarchy (for men) provides a much-needed sense of order to the respective groups.

> “But beyond [the status of the men involved], except for maintaining a high-quality marriage with her own husband (which is its own high-value resource) the men are almost entirely irrelevant. The women often socialize with the children but without any men, and the Beads might not even know each other’s husbands. In more settled groups like this, there is less competition because the women tend to know their place on the wheel and are generally happy cooperating to get more overall resources than they’ve harnessed on their own through marriage.”

3. Female Social Groups are Based on Resource Acquisition and Distribution

The Wheel model explains the herd mentality as a type of micro-socialism that pools and redistributes resources through social networking.

> “The Hub’s sexual value to men sets the cap for what external resources she can bring into the female social wheel.”
>
> “The Wheels will be composed of women with similar levels of attractiveness to (i.e. ability to harness resources from) men, with the Hub as the group’s maximum.”
>
> “The Wheel’s overall value is determined by the overall amount of resources it has pulled together (the women’s own plus male contributions).
>
> - A wheel made out of single women has the women’s own resources plus intermittent male resources to allocate.
> - A wheel of happily married women have their own resources plus much of their husbands’ resources consistently available.
>
> The overall resource pool, and therefore status, of the Happily-married Wheel is higher.”
>
> “In all cases, the women’s resource contributions to the social Wheel are fixed by how high status of a man they’ve married (or not).”

4. Female Social Groups are Based on Status

Commenter Jimmy Wu wrote some pertinent insights from a different perspective.

> "While the topology of this model (hub-bead) might be correct, the explanatory dynamic is wrong.
>
> 1. "Resource acquisition". This is Marxist economic thinking in action. Human motivation is much more than dollar signs. The fact that poor aristocrat women will bitterly hold onto their social station and ruthlessly gate-keep against the nouveau riche, and the nouveau desperately trying to infiltrate the upper strata, plainly shows that women value "social status" more than money. High School observation might show the rich girls on top, but that is more a proxy of status, and the active shunning of any poor-but-higher-status-girls (due to jealousy), than "resource acquisition". Remember that Female Status is not synonymous with "popularity".
> 2. "High status men". Female Social grouping is not based on husband / boyfriend acquisition. This is due to the writer glomming onto Vox's SSH, and trying to mirror that model. Also due to the confusion of sexual-attractiveness with actual active sexual activities. Women group by attractiveness more due to jealousy than anything else. Women's social groups can be more body-diverse, if formed by other factors (a Hub accumulating friends over time). It is more that changes in attractiveness (weight loss, new hairstyle) might upset the social order and induce turbulence.

Here, Jimmy agrees that women are ultimately dependent on men, and therefore in general, the overall attractiveness of women is a major determinant of the status of a man that she can keep as a provider.

However, Jimmy objects to the micro-socialism aspect of the Wheel model, arguing that status is a more powerful aspiration that motivates women to join and interact with a Wheel.

IMO, both factors are interrelated and both are at play, but one or the other may take precedence in different Wheels. For example, working-class Wheels might vie for resources, while middle-class Wheels might compete for status. But it's probably more complicated than this when you start digging into the social dynamics of individual Wheels.

Being "broken on the wheel" was a method of public torture and execution used primarily in Europe from antiquity through the Middle Ages and up to the 19th century.

Case Study 1 — Single vs Married Women with Children

A wheel of 30-something moms with dedicated husbands who allow them the resources to be active, hands-on moms will have overall higher attractiveness to men and therefore more resources available (both economic resources directly from their men, but also their own freed up energy, attention, emotional availability, and non-job hours) than a wheel comprised of single 30-something women, who have intermittent access to male resources and are tied up with the provider role and the emotional drama of dating/divorcing/having a baby daddy.

Case Study 2 — Hot Young Hopefuls

A young women's Wheel might have a hot Hub with daddy's money, allocating sexual appeal (hair, make up, clothing style) and access to high-status men. The Beads will compete with each other for closeness to the Hub by putting the resources into the group in order to be favored recipients of the resources being distributed (skill with make-up and hair, sharing clothing, etc.) This might be a high-status Wheel overall when the women are in their earlier 20s because they are hoping to secure commitment (resources) from high-status men, but it will drop in overall status overtime if the women fail to secure high-status men and end up as washed up forty-year old bar flies with little access to male resources and whose own shareable resources still consistent primarily of hair, makes up, and clothing provisioning.

Case Study 3 — Heavy Weight Competition

The example of a woman losing weight and her friends trying to undermine it, shows that she no longer fits into her pudgy-friend social Wheel. The other Beads of those Wheels will try to drag her down to the norm for the group. The Hub, who was likely skinnier to begin with, will gatekeep the Hub position, ejecting the Bead if she becomes viable competition for the Hub position. The newly skinny woman would do well to find herself a skinnier, higher value (more resources) Wheel where she fits the norm for a Bead.

Case Study 4 – “Top Tier” Wheels

A top-tier Wheel has a Hub who is a devoted wife and mother, the prettiest and most generous of the group who has married a high-status man who brings her resources and frees her up to contribute resources to her female social Wheel. They have a good marriage and peaceful home, so she isn’t wasting emotional and time resources on internal drama. He’s freed her from working a 9-5 so that she has time and energy to contribute to the Wheel of women with whom she is raising her children and, if resources are abundant enough, her community more broadly to make it the kind of place she wants it to be for her family. Her temperament, interests, and goals for her family will set the tone, activities and membership of her Wheel. Each Beads’ contributions of their own resources (her own time / attention / activity as freed up by their husband’s physical and financial resource provision) toward those projects set how close she is to the Hub and what resources the Hub allocates back to her, and thus her children.

Case Study 5 — “Mommy and Me” Wheels

One Hub might be a mommy-and-me type, allocating craft projects, birthday party invites and attendance, orange slices for halftime, the logistics of carpool arrangements and activities sign-ups, teacher gifts, etc. to attract and manage Beads that share her values and goals for an active social life for their kids with other kids from good homes.

Case Study 6 — "Home and Garden" Wheels

Another healthy wheel system might have a Hub who is less outgoing and not interested in activities, but oriented toward health and wellness. She's running a Wheel focused on home gardening and food preparation and allocates resources among her Beads in terms of gardening tips, plant starts, canning and food processing events, sharing home-baked goods, and hosting food-based gatherings in her home, for example. This is a less extroverted wheel and it may be smaller overall but still high status with lots of resources as provided and freed up by high-status husbands.

Case Study 7 — Multi Wheeling Beads

The Hub of the home garden wheel might even distribute home baked goods and fresh garden produce to the Mommy-and-Me Hub in order to be a Bead on the latter's wheel, so that, as an introvert, she doesn't have to manage all the activities-planning on her own. But by being a Mommy-and-Me bead her kids still get to be on the teams and go to the birthday parties of good families, building bonds to find them good mates down the road. In this scenario, the Garden-Hub has her own Wheel that is suited to her goals, and she would also be glad to be a Bead on Mommy-and-Me's Wheel at the same time.

Related

- Dalrock: Marriage and children were always her priority. (2019/7/17)
- Σ Frame (Lexet): Aristocratic Hypergamy (2021/5/14)
- Σ Frame (NovaSeeker): The Upper Middle Class Career Life Script Model (2021/5/17)
- Σ Frame: Women were Created to Conform (2023/5/8)
- Σ Frame: The Logic of WGTOW (2024/6/14)
- Σ Frame: Female Competition : Consumerism (2024/9/6)
- Men are Good (Tom Golden): Mean Girls and Feminists: Is There a Difference? (2024/12/4)

Female Solipsism : Misplaced Loyalties

Jack · 13 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Understanding the Hive Mentality.

Readership: All
Theme: Transactions
Length: 1,100 words
Reading Time: 6 minutes

Intro

In Sigma Game: The Benefits of Female Solipsism (2024/2/7), Vox Day covered a female correspondent's description of The Wheel Model — an insightful analogy of feminine herd behavior and how female social groups function.

After a lengthy description of the Wheel model, the essay turns to the topic of solipsism towards the end. The corresponding author argued that solipsism serves a positive function of signaling loyalty to the larger female social group and that it has nothing to do with men.

The Wheel model is quite intriguing, but her statements about solipsism are where my BS / Deflection Detector started pinging. So I'll dive into this here.

The Role of Female Solipsism

The corresponding author describes the function of female solipsism as thus.

> "[In the context of a female clique / group / Wheel], women's solipsism serves to advertise adherence to the Wheel's values and the Hub's vision. The Hub sets the values, so she will talk about things in relation to herself to show what she places value on. And the Beads will talk about themselves to show how they fit within that > vision, or, when gossiping, to out-group women who don't. The Wheel is part of the identity for the Hub and to varying degrees the Beads, so showing that you consider how all external events relate to the group's wellbeing is an important part of demonstrating group loyalty — that you are willing to be active in harnessing resources from men, other women, and the community, and that you are willing to protect the group from threats (primarily the antics of lower value women). So here, solipsism in conversation signals loyalty to the other women in your in-group."

It is interesting to read a woman's views on loyalty. I'll say more on this at the end.

I get the distinct impression that she is NOT talking about solipsism as it is understood within Red Pill lore, but is merely using the word 'solipsism' as a placeholder for some other concept, maybe group-think or collective purpose or shared values.

Men are an Out-Group

This next part is where she divulges the feminine secret (in bold).

> "In this regard, what men think of women's solipsism is irrelevant, as it serves an in-grouping and out-grouping purpose that men are permanently out-grouped from. Except as the husbands [sic] of an individual woman and random men who might help a pretty girl out in a pinch, the men themselves are irrelevant to the women's social Wheel."

Ahhh, there it is. The hen house is the epicenter of her microcosm. Men are just a beneficial (and disposable) accessory.

> "There is no need for women to dispense with solipsism and its in-group / out-grouping function, in order to gain respect from men for the purpose of female social hierarchies. Having the respect of men has nothing to do with what resources they are willing to provide a particular woman; to the contrary, being seen as "a strong independent woman" may lead them to deny resources. For the purposes of bringing resources into female social groups and securing standing within them, women would do better to focus on earning men's love > and compassion (and the resource provisioning associated with them) than to change their communication style to earn respect from men."

I suppose the reason why she introduces the idea of women being respected by men as (NOT) important is because female solipsism is frequently cited as a reason why men cannot respect women. But here she is assuming that men believe they must be IN the women's in-group and/or understand women in terms of a social hierarchy in order to 'respect' them. This is not true at all.

Men Don't Matter

Regardless of these false estimations of men's interest, the overall sentiment she is conveying couldn't be any more clear.

"We DGAF what you think of us! We wimminz is gonna spin our Hot Wheels in the mud and do our own thang, whether you approve of it or like it or not!" Chicks before D!cks. "We don't need no man!" But she also adds, "But in case the $$$ spigot runs as dry as our thatch, we're willing to feign love and compassion to string you along and keep the gravy train running."

> "Women only need to dispense with solipsism when they enter into co-ed or primarily male social systems and/or work environments (which has to do with a woman's own temperament, interests, and goals), but there is no need to dispense with it to maintain good standing within female social systems. Indeed, solipsism (but not narcissism) is critical to success within female social systems, and men's lack of respect for it is irrelevant."

Again, it sounds like she is arrogantly using the word 'solipsism' to refer to conformity, group think, and/or the peculiar and predictable habit women have of lying to each other in order to maintain each others feeelz and stroke each other's egos. But … being considerate of the Wheel's and the Hub's / Queen Bee's feeelz, interests, purposes, and values is NOT solipsism by definition. Not sure if this misconception is due to a false notion, a misunderstanding, or poor communication. But either way, the message is clear. Men are the ones who don't receive any consideration. Women prioritize their cliques / peer clusters / Wheels over men. Men are an out-group.

Conclusions

Here are my disagreements with the author's views.

First, it should be noted that we are talking past each other to some extent, because the words, loyalty, respect, and solipsism all mean completely different concepts to men and women. This probably deserves to be picked apart in a separate post.

