Mensactivism

ARCHIVE

www.TheRedArchive.com

ABOUT THIS ARCHIVE

An archive of the blog Mensactivism, as held by TheRedArchive: 29,255 posts published between May 2000 and August 2026.

About Mensactivism. Mensactivism.org, the Men's Activism News Network, is a men's rights news site founded in May 2000 — the longest continuously running publication in this archive. Readers submit news stories, each posted as a headline, a link to the source and an excerpt, and the site has covered family courts and custody, false rape accusations, domestic violence against men, circumcision, education and the gender gap in schooling, and the treatment of men in the media for more than two decades.

About TheRedArchive. TheRedArchive is a free, public archive of the Red Pill community, built so that none of this writing can quietly disappear. It holds 1,738,222 posts and 40,093,004 comments from 45 subreddits and 58 blogs. Much of it survives nowhere else — the accounts deleted, the subreddits banned, the websites long offline. All of it is free to read, search and download, and always will be, at www.TheRedArchive.com.

Support the mission. This Red Pill archive is free — no paywall, no account — but keeping it online isn't. I pay for the servers, the storage and the bandwidth myself, so that this valuable knowledge stays online. If you want to support the mission and archive, become one of the people who help keep it online at www.TheRedArchive.com/#help.

Share this file freely, and keep a copy of your own. What sits on one server can be taken down; what sits on a thousand hard drives cannot.

Best regards,

/u/dream-hunter

Founder of TheRedArchive
August 22, 2026

Are Men Really That Bad?

Scott · 26 May 2000 · Archived copy · Original

So, what's this all about anyway? Could it be true that men are discriminated against, have few choices in life, and aren't as happy as they seem? Are men really the oppressive tyrants they are portrayed as in the media and by radical feminists? Well, The Men's Activism News Network is here to fight anti-male bias and portrayal in the media, provide a forum for men to speak out in, and organize men's groups on a national level.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/02/047245.shtml

Detroit Free Press and Boys' Education

Scott · 26 May 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "Desiree Cooper wrote an interesting editorial about boys in early education, and how their needs are not being met." A surprising article, coming from DFP.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/02/048236.shtml

Hoff-Sommers: The War Against Boys

Scott · 27 May 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Christina Hoff-Sommers has released a part of her upcoming book: The War Against Boys in the May issue of The Atlantic Monthly. In it she is very critical of Carol Gilligan, who replied to the article, and was then rebuffed by Sommers again. You can read their dialogue here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/1732239.shtml

A Research Paper on Choice for Men

Scott · 29 May 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I guess I'll post this to see how the C4M icon looks. I wrote a research paper on Men's Reproductive Rights which is on-line. I am considering expanding/re-writing the paper as a feature article for a magazine, if I ever find the time to get to it this summer.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/1733232.shtml

Sex Crime Cases to be Reviewed by Women's Advocates

Scott · 30 May 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Philadelphia Associated Press printed a story today reporting that women's advocates will be reviewing previously "unfounded" sex crime cases, in the hopes of re-opening many of these cases, and convicting more criminals. While the idea sounds interesting at first (it is mentioned that homicide experts are often called in on murder cases which are difficult to solve), I am not so sure that most women's advocates are objective 'experts' on sexual assault. Can you say witchhunt?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/1734244.shtml

A Living Nightmare: One Man Tells His Story of Domestic Violence and Betrayal

Scott · 1 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

krob4399 submitted his personal account of being abused by his wife and the brainwashing done to him when he was forcefully committed to a mental institution. Apparently, they tried to make him think the abuse happened in his childhood rather than in his marriage. A chilling account of a worst-case scenario of domestic violence. Click below to read his story...krob4399 writes "I have not been able to say what I needed to say because of my emotional pain. No one ever listened to me when I was able to say it and they did not believe me when I blurted something out. This seems to be a place where I can say what I have needed to say. Dr. Lemuel O. Granada, his subordinate - Phyllis Denton, Judge Fred T. Hensley - all of Clovis, NM and Dr. Samir Roy (now disbarred) of Albuquerque, NM should have protected me from the predatory family (my therapist, Dr.
Eastin's term) when they tortured me. Instead, Dr. Granada, Phyllis Denton, Judge Hensley and Dr. Roy aided and abetted the predatory family in their torture of me by refusing to hear my side of the story from my sisters, friends and me.

I was forced under an illegally issued court order and by them administering illegally prescribed psychotropic medicines and street drugs to me, to be brainwashed into believing that I am insane and the abuse took place in my childhood instead of in my marriage. A nurse who knew these same people and also knew that they had done this to other men, came to my rescue after Dr. Roy was disbarred for other crimes. This nurse is the woman I had been engaged to be married to when I was forced to marry my ex-wife. I was forced to marry because I was studying to become a gospel minister and her family wanted the prestige of having a preacher in their family. In addition, the predatory family claims to be friends with Judge Hensley and it is true that he and his father who was also a judge signed all the orders to commit the other men and me to various institutions to be brainwashed as I described above. We all grew up together in Portales, NM so it is very likely they were friends with the judge. In most cases, the same doctors were used to accomplish this brainwashing. My symptoms of the fatigue and pain from post polio syndrome (PPS) were given as symptoms of three different "mental illnesses" in order to "legalize" the commitment. Test results that were ordered by Dr. Roy show that I did not have a mental illness and my present doctors who have permanently discharged me from all mental health treatment are repulsed that Dr. Roy never released me from that treatment when the test results came in. According to the court order that prescribed a minimum of thirty days in the hospital, Dr. Roy could not have released me, but my doctors say he was ethically obligated to release me upon seeing the test results. New Mexico laws specify that a person must be a danger to himself and/or others in order to be committed. I could not have been dangerous because at the time I was committed, I was recovering from emergency major surgery that I'm sure was the result of the last beating I got from the predatory family. Further, it is believed that a PPS patient cannot panic or go berserk because of the damage that polio does to our brain activation center.

My wife divorced me immediately after she committed me and she was able to keep all I had, which was over one million dollars in assets, rental income, and the earnings from the job I lost as a result. She then married her boss. I never found an attorney willing to discuss this with me except that two of them told me it is a feminist thing and I would never win so they could not afford to take it on a contingency. They went on to explain that if the same thing had happened to a woman, it would be international news. That is NOT equal protection under the law. For several generations, the predatory family has chosen one male out of its generation to torture, commit to an institution and plunder his property when they, not a doctor, declared the men to be insane. One of my doctors said that the men are committed in order to discredit their character and word so that no one will believe them if the truth comes out about the torture. By my observation, the predatory family is becoming increasingly brutal, savage and they are committing more men. They are mentally and emotionally abusive to all men and they consider the abuse to be beneficial to our masculinity. I was constantly abused, tortured, harassed and belittled after I made the decision that I could not preach and be in that marriage. I knew they would murder me if I left her and Dr. Eastin believes they will anyway if this gets out about the men they have tortured. It must get out though because the abuse of all men must be stopped. Most of this happened during the time my(?) sons were growing up. Now that they are grown, they hate me with a bitter hatred and neither has had anything to do with me for some time.

I am a male victim of spousal abuse but society does not accept that. As a result, the system also battered me after my wife got finished with me. For the sake of my grandchildren who are being taught to do this to other men, and for the sake of future generations, please help to get this torture stopped. Thank you for hearing my side of the story just as the judge and doctors should have."

Kenneth Robertson

http://www.geocities.com/krob4399/index.html

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/1735258.shtml

Saving the Boys From the Gender Benders

Scott · 2 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Matthew Fitzgerald submitted a story from the Britain Sunday Times by Andrew Sullivan which touches upon the many ways boys and young men are being implicitly told that masculinity is bad and dangerous. A good article from someone who 'gets it'. Please send The Sunday Times some positive feedback on this one.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/1736258.shtml

NCFM Book Review: Sex-Ploytation

Scott · 3 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

mfitzgerald asked that I post a review of his work Sex-ploytation: How Women Use Their Bodies To Extort Money From Men. The review initially appeared in NCFM's journal Transitions, and I've received permission to re-print it on this site. Click below to read on...

SEX-Ploytation, How Women Use Their Bodies To Extort Money From Men

by Matthew Fitzgerald

April House Publishing

Web site link

E-mail: aprilhouse@yahoo.com

reviewed by

Jason Leatherman

This review was re-printed from the March/April 2000 issue of Transitions: The Journal of Men's Perspectives, a publication of the National Coalition of Free Men. Copyrights are held by National Coalition of Free Men as the publisher - http://www.ncfm.org. Reprinted with permission from the publisher.

In Sex-Ploytation, Matt Fitzgerald continues where Esther Vilar left off with The Manipulated Man. While he doesn't develop as rich and detailed a painting of modern life as Vilar did, he offers something that Vilar did not: hope for change. After reading The Manipulated Man, I just felt depressed. After reading Sex-Ploytation, I felt stirred up. This book is a tool of great importance to the men's movement.

The book is divided into seven chapters, and three sections of anecdotes called "Man on the Street." The first two chapters were an overview of women's sexual power, and how they use it to coldly manipulate men. This is a worthwhile message, and one which every male should read. The younger they are when they read it, the better. Like Vilar, however, Fitzgerald does not quantify the word "women" in his statements. All women are stereotyped as prostitutes, who extort money from men by careful use of their bodies. This will work well on men who have been used by women. It won't work on men who have sisters they respect. So, in a way, the book is a gamble. Some men will be hooked, others alienated. That said, the material is good to know - things to watch for in dealing with women, and ammunition in no-holds barred arguments with feminists.

It's in the chapters on feminist history that Sex-Ploytation really begins to shine. Human relationships are complex, and when someone gives a lucid insight into social construct like feminism, it's refreshing. With the first chapters as a backdrop, Fitzgerald describes how feminism began, with the idealism of young liberals in the 60's. When these people graduated and got out into the real world, however, they soon reverted back into their usual roles. True equality without paying for it. They wanted to have their cake and eat it, too.

Chapters five and six contain straight-talking to-do lists for men and women. This is where Fitzgerald leaves Vilar behind. There's hope! For men and women to change! The recommendations boil down to: Stop the money-for-sex business! To suggest such a drastic changes in men's behavior towards women may seem unrealistic, but no matter how much a reader decides to act upon suggestions here, he will be changed for the better.

And in his closing chapter, Fitzgerald puts responsibility for this change where it belongs: on men. This is why men have to wake up.

Sex-Ploytation took me on a journey from anger to hope, from bashing women for what they have done, to being informed and taking responsibility for relationships with women in the future. Though this isn't the sort of book that a politician can quote in a speech, it's a great tool for the message out on a individual basis. Use this book by handing out copies to your friends-especially those you know who are pissed off at women. After they read this and get hooked into men's issues, reel them in with one of Warren Farrell's works.

Since the book has potential for growing the men's movement, I think it should have contained contact information for some men's groups. It doesn't, but a few are listed by name. Unfortunately, the list is in the "Female To Do List" section.

Sex-Ploytation is 120 pages, and a pretty easy read. You can purchase it at Amazon or www.sexploy.com where you can read some excerpts.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/1738222.shtml

Important Court Breakthrough for Reproductive Rights

Scott · 3 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

ABCnews ran a story about an embryo custody court battle, where a woman's right to decline maternity was upheld. It was made clear during the case that this was a decision about forcing someone into parenthood, and that the woman "had a constitutional right not to have children, if she so chose." The case is headed for The Supreme Court on Monday. These precedents are very useful for supporters of Choice for Men, who can make use of them in a Constitutional equal protection argument. This is good news!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/1739203.shtml

Mensactivism.org Feature: The Falsehoods of the Sisterhood

Scott · 5 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Mike Spaniola composed an insightful essay that examines the politics of domestic violence and looks at why men take so much abuse with so little protest. Read on for Mensactivism.org's first feature article submission...

The Falsehoods of the Sisterhood

by Mike Spaniola

The first case of domestic abuse occurred when a prehistoric man was forced by his "significant other" from the safety of their cave with the command: "Get out there and kill something to eat, and don't come back empty-handed!" Ever since, a reliance on and the exploitation of male brawn and brain has evolved, from the cornerstone of exploration and invention, to the blood, sweat and tears of the industrial age.

Even in recent times, men have had to labor under comparatively harsh conditions, enduring 30 to 40 years of "forced service" to meet the male obligation of supporting one's family. Toiling in the filth and suffocating confines of underground mines, men have endured such trauma as the threat of imminent death or have lost their souls to the numbing netherworld of the assembly line or to the blast furnace infernos of the foundry.

Today, this age-old abuse of men has gained political sanction in yet another form: "feminism." Far from the oppression that some women claim at the hands of men, today's social hysteria simply extends a savage coercion of the millennia: that men must risk life and limb to protect and to provide for women and children (and, today, social torment in the name of chivalry and sisterhood). One could say that had society thought to treat men with more concern, compassion and justice throughout the ages, more men may have felt compelled to return it.

Quite possibly, the reason that men have accepted male-bashing for so long is that men are accustomed to acquiescing to women, such as staying on a sinking boat to face a certain death so that women and children can seek safety first (or being "nice" to your sister and her friends simply because they are "girls"). If you think about that in the context of today's society, (i.e., a majority of men letting women abuse them physically, psychologically and politically) then you can begin to understand why groups such as the National Organization for Women (NOW) have gained such a stranglehold over the legislative and judicial processes in this country. NOW recently panned the Fox Network, and one could surmise that "fair and balanced reporting" runs contrary to the promotion of NOW's often surreptitious agenda.

Nothing in the current domestic violence laws is so pernicious as the mass destruction of families caused by the growing and nearly unbridled use of restraining orders by judges and prosecutors of the "Fourth Reich." Such orders drive men from their homes and into the streets with nothing but the shirts on their backs, with no hearing, and these men are guilty until they can prove themselves innocent.

Women can perpetrate "flash point" anger reactions in men through long-term emotional and verbal abuse of men. Despite that, today's domestic violence laws permit any such abusive woman to go from the crime's perpetrator (or in the least, its accomplice) to its victim. This legislative and judicial bias extends even to murder, if you're a woman, as the courts routinely sanction the "battered woman syndrome" as an ameliorating defense for having murdered one's spouse.

Domestic violence is on a course similar to the emerging days of stricter drinking-and-driving laws, when removing chronic alcoholics from the roads came to the forefront of the social agenda. Granted, at that time, the court system had been lax on repeat offenders. Still, the numbers of these offenders were relatively few. Nonetheless, support for "get tough" drinking-and-driving measures reached overzealous proportions and quickly became an expedient way to attain and hold political office. Now, with the domestic violence issue, feminists have broadened the definition beyond what is rational and moral, and such laws obviously no longer serve to protect women so much as they serve to persecute men.

One could compare this to broadening the definition of an earthquake. Conceivably, authorities could lower the vibration threshold needed to register an earthquake to a level that would now include a heavy truck rumbling past your home. Biased sources who wanted to pervert and exploit this new definition could create an advertisement depicting the aftermath of the San Francisco earthquake in 1909 and claim that "an earthquake occurs in this country every 10 seconds," implying that such widespread devastation occurs very frequently when, in fact, it is very rare. But, according to the new definition of an earthquake, the "every 10 seconds" would be true, though only to the letter of the word. This sleight of the facts pervades public perception on domestic violence and on many feminist issues in general (consider, too, that as with the zealous enforcement of tougher drinking-and-driving laws, the middle and under classes have had to bear the brunt of the political theatrics. As it was once noted, a judge is simply a politician in a Halloween costume).

Feminism has much less to do with its public relation image of social justice than it does with politics as usual. Under the guise of "social justice," politicians beholden to feminists fan the flames of fear and ignorance to create the polarization needed to assure campaign contributions. This has created a neo-McCarthyism and makes Ayn Rand's Atlas Shrugged seem ever the more prophetic. Rand states that eventually society's "producers" grow weary of the "takers" and withdraw; only then will the takers begin to appreciate and see the value in the producers.

Until then, men will be trivialized, taunted and tormented even in polite company. Men, though, are the products of a society that has demanded that they protect and provide, and men have done well at this subjugation for generations. Still, men, especially white men, are portrayed as insensitive and dull-witted. In a recent TV ad for a brokerage firm, a young man uses a Ouija-type message ball to answer investment questions. Would today's politically correct society cast a 20-something girl in that role? By watching that commercial, one would hardly guess which gender has excelled at technological ingenuity in recent decades. This male-debasing trend was noticeable years ago when a TV ad cast a middle-age white man as a car thief in a commercial advocating use of the "The Club," a steering-wheel locking device. Statistics clearly show that this demographic (middle-age white men) are seldom arrested for or convicted of such a crime, but who will protest (or defend) the use of a balding, white man as a common thief, even when it is so undeserved?

Neo-McCarthyism has come so far today that our current presidential administration fully endorses this type of social distortion. Men have become so vulnerable to such manipulation as to defy reality itself. Although innovative and honest, the majority of men are nonetheless insulted by a political climate that holds men responsible for inferiorities contrived as impossibly unique to anyone else. Boys in school learn at the expense of the girls, we are told. But it is boys who have worked in the garages of America in their spare time to develop better cars and engines and, most recently, computers and software. How is society served then, when feminist teachers tell boys not to "monopolize" school computers so that girls can sit at the screen and gossip electronically? How will promising "boys of tech" hone developing computer skills? For having been industrious, men are now portrayed as shiftless; for having been innovative, men are shown as domineering; for having been sensitive and honest, men are now manipulated and degraded. In short, today's special-interest social groups dictate that the successes of men be made evil so as to excuse those who did not directly participate in the achievements of men.

Professor Ruth Wisse of Harvard is quoted as saying, in 1998, that "... women's liberation, if not the most extreme then certainly the most influential neo-Marxist movement in America, has done to the American home what communism did to the Russian economy, and most of the ruin is irreversible. By defining men and women in terms of power and competition instead of reciprocity and cooperation, the movement tore apart the most basic and fragile contract in human society, the unit from which all other social institutions draw their strength."

NOW president Patricia Ireland last spring made vicious remarks about the recent defeat of a case by the U.S. Supreme Court concerning the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). Her remarks clearly show that NOW is, at best, a special-interest social group, and, at worst, the latest version of a hate group. In her comments, she encouraged voting for Al Gore, saying that the next president will appoint three Supreme Court justices. One can only guess that feminist control of legislative bodies at the state and federal levels along with military policymakers, the majority of the media and, increasingly, the police is not enough.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/1740254.shtml

Faking Hate Crimes on College Campuses

Scott · 6 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

John Leo, a columnist for US News and World Report, wrote a recent article exposing several hate crimes at universities which were faked. As a university student myself, I can tell you that colleges are places where you can find the highest sensitivity for victims of any kind, and also the ones most likely to enact draconian rules to 'empower victims' and persecute 'opressors'. Leo's articles are consistently of high quality, and this one is no exception.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/182212.shtml

Carl Friedan, Battered Husband?

Scott · 8 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Carl Friedan, former husband of Betty Friedan, has created a web site to speak out against the "misleading allegations of spousal abuse made by my ex-wife", which were made in Betty Friedan's recent book Life So Far. According to Mr. Friedan, the claims made in Life So Far are misleading at best, and he paints a much more complex description of their marriage. Particularly relevant is the "Living with Insanity" section of his site. Note also that in a recent Washington Post article, Betty Friedan is quoted as saying "I almost wish I hadn't even written about it, because it's been sensationalized out of context...My husband was no wife-beater, and I was no passive victim of a wife-beater. We fought a lot, and he was bigger than me", which sounds much like a weak admission that things weren't quite as she made them out to be.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/183248.shtml

Wage Gap Disputed in Congressional Testimony

Scott · 10 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This AP news article reports that the alleged gender "pay gap" that feminists are often quick to promote is being challenged in a Congressional Testimony where at least two female economists denied that the gap was due to discrimination. Shameless plug: I might add that recently I did some research on the pay gap and printed my results here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/184231.shtml

Article on Paternity Tests

Scott · 11 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In America, 250,000 paternity tests are done each year (15,000 per year in Britain). The Sunday Times printed an article about the rise of DNA paternity tests, and some of the issues surrounding them. The question of men's reproductive rights and custody issues is briefly mentioned, but the article in general is of interest to men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/185212.shtml

British College Bans Offensive Words

Scott · 12 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

More news from Britain: Stockport College, of Greater Manchester, has recently decided to ban the use of a few dozen "offensive" words, according to this Telegraph story. And we're not talking terms such as "nigger" or "bitch", but rather "lady", "history", and references to "the blind", among others. More shocking news on the censorship front.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/185245.shtml

Maternal Chauvanism

Scott · 12 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Salon magazine has printed a few articles on Fathers, and a particularly good one written by Cathy Young on the topic of "Maternal Chauvanism", the idea that women consciously or subconsciously try to sabotage fathers from being as good parents as mothers. There's lots of insight in this article, and good food for thought.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/186219.shtml

Fred's Advice: Don't Get Married

Scott · 13 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Fred Reed, a conservative writer, wrote this piece which is a sort of review of the book From Courtship to Courtroom by Jed Abraham. He talks about the dark side of marriage - divorce. And with statistics as they are, it is becoming less cynical to dispense this type of advice. I was hesitant to post this, but the facts must be known. It can and does happen.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/187208.shtml

Paternity Test Ban In PA Might Be Repealed

Scott · 13 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An unlikely source for this kind of news, Wired magazine posted this article about new legislation that would repeal the Pennsylvania law which prohibits men from requesting paternity tests on children born during their marriage. Obviously, knowing whether you are the true father or not is very important in deciding child support and custody issues, and it's appalling that men don't have this right in PA.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/187244.shtml

National Men's Health Week

Scott · 15 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This week is National Men's Health Week, and ABCnews is running a series of on-line chat sessions with health experts and doctors on various topics related to men's health. You can read the transcripts to the already completed ones at the address linked to above.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/188226.shtml

Cathy Young: Dad's Day Has Come

Scott · 15 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Joe submitted this story from the June issue of the American Spectator. It's an article that discusses the ways fathers are demonized and marginalized by both political parties, and also examines several myths about fathers. It seems that dads can't win no matter what they do, and Young asks that fathers be given more respect by the media.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/188259.shtml

Happy Father's Day!

Scott · 18 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I just wanted to wish everyone a happy Father's Day from the Men's Activism News Network. Fathers Day 2000 has its own web site, with information about a march in Washington, D.C. in support of fathers and father's rights. I wish all fathers the best and I hope the march gets some attention from the mainstream press.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/189234.shtml

Excerpts From The War Against Boys

Scott · 19 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Britain Sunday Times printed some excerpts from Christina Hoff-Sommers' new book, The War Against Boys. It is followed by a short article by someone who is apparently trying to downplay the importance of the book. Nevertheless, the book excerpts make a much stronger statement.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2025200.shtml

DV Brochures Rejected Because They Ignored Violence Against Men

Scott · 19 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Ottawa Citizen printed this story that the Alberta Human Rights Commission has publicly decried a domestic violence brochure printed by a counselling center which ignores family violence against men. It's uplifting to see this issue get some much-deserved attention and action; the brochures being attacked were retracted by the counselling center.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2025234.shtml

The Men's Health Act of 2000

Scott · 20 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Congressman Duke Cunningham of California has introduced new legislation that would establish an Office of Men's Health at the Department of Health and Human Services. The bill is H.R. 4653, and you can download the bill in Adobe .PDF format here. Cunningham's press release can be found here. If you're from California, or even if not, please send Cunningham a note of support!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2026210.shtml

From Cause to Cure: Men and Cancer

Scott · 20 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

More news on men's health: there was a special insert in last Sunday's New York Times which had the cover story: Men and Cancer. You can read it on-line. It has lots of information about cancer, cancer testing methods, and resources for those who want to learn more. How much to you know about cancer? What is a PSA test? Read it and find out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2026245.shtml

Violent Parent Access Ban Proposed in England

Scott · 22 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

There is a political group in England pushing for a child access ban for parents accused of domestic violence. Look here for the BBC news report. Of course, it's obvious on the surface that this is a good idea, and that children shouldn't be put in the hands of violent parents. But the sad truth is that, at least in the U.S, false allegations of domestic and sexual violence often arise in divorce settlements, and this could be used to leverage more control from women who are willing to make false accusations. Where should the balance lie?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2027218.shtml

We're Moving To A New Server!

Scott · 22 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I'm happy to announce that I've found a permanent location to host the Men's Activism News Network, and I'm planning on moving the site to the new server late next week. Click below to read more...It hasn't been easy to find a place to host this site, as it requires a very customized setup of the operating system and web server software, so I would have required a "dedicated" or "colocated" server to run the site. Prices for these dedicated services started at about $150/month, and it was very hard going to find a way to keep this site up and running. Fortunately, I have been resourceful and found a solution that costs much less.

I've registered the domain name www.mensactivism.org, and the DNS change is propagating its way around the internet (it's already working at my ISP's DNS servers, and should be everywhere by Friday at the latest). Give it a try: www.mensactivism.org should redirect to the corn.unh.edu address, and in the future will redirect to any address I keep the site hosted on.

I'll give more details about the move as it gets closer. In the meantime, keep checking out the site, and prepare for a big fanfare once the site is permanently located and tested...

Scott Garman

MANNW Administrator

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2028207.shtml

Career Day for Our Sons

Scott · 23 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Today is official "Career Day for Our Sons", a day dedicated to helping young men think about careers. It's the male counterpart to "Take Our Daughters to Work Day", and in many places, girls are not excluded from Career Day for Our Sons. CDFOS was started by The National Coalition of Free Men, and is supported by many men's organizations.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2028257.shtml

Upcoming Movie About Domestic Violence Against Men

Scott · 25 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Phil Penningroth has been commissioned by the USA cable TV channel to write a movie on the topic of domestic violence against men by women. He is looking for people to contact him and tell him their stories, so he can base the movie on a composite of men's true stories. If you are a man who is willing to tell your story of domestic violence, please contact Dr. Charles E. Corry and he will give you more information. You can remain an anonymous contributer if you wish. And be sure to keep an eye out for this movie - I will look for more info and post it when it nears completion. Dr. Corry's phone number and snail mail address can be found below by clicking on "Read More..."Charles E. Corry, Ph.D., FGSA

455 Bear Creek Road

Colorado Springs, CO 80906-5820

Telephone: (719) 520-1089 or (800) 874-8670

Facsimile: (719) 328-1588

E-mail: ccorry@pcisys.net

Home page: http://boulder.earthnet.net/~ccorry

Domestic Violence Against Men: http://www.dvmen.org

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2029250.shtml

Men and Doctor Visits

Scott · 27 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

USA Today had an article urging men to visit their doctor on a regular basis, with several anecdotes about men who had close calls because of their distant relationships with their doctors. There are a couple of annoying lines in the article (such as, "Most men are more powerful than women at every level of social and economic class"), but nevertheless the article still gives some very good and pertinent advice for men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2031200.shtml

Cathy Young Reviews The War Against Boys

Scott · 27 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

You can find an excellent review of Christina Hoff Sommer's new book The War Against Boys here. Cathy Young, another great campaigner of equity feminism, gives an in depth and insightful review of the book in Salon magazine. She is sometimes critical of Sommer's claims, but that's what makes a good review - to hear the good and the bad about the work (and certainly there is always both).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2120216.shtml

Legalizing Baby Abandonment

Scott · 27 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

WorldNetDaily featured a story today that outlined information on proposed "baby abandonment" laws presented to the North Carolina General Assembly, House Bill 1616 and Senate Bill 1257. From the article, it seems that the wording of the bills is gender neutral, and there is also a brief mention of father's rights in regard to women abandoning babies without informing them. Whether you agree with the idea of voluntary baby abandonment or not, it would be wrong to make these laws only applicable to the mother, as it would end up pushing men's reproductive rights even further behind than they already are.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2121206.shtml

Interesting Child Custody Compromise

Scott · 29 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Joe submitted this interesting article from The Boston Globe in which a unique compromise was made for child custody between two divorcing parents: one parent will have the child on weekdays, the other on weekends, and this arrangement will be reversed every year for each parent. Could this be a reasonable compromise for child custody disputes?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2122231.shtml

Finally: Elian Goes Home

Scott · 29 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

As you may know, Elian Gonzalez has permanently returned to Cuba with his father. The saga has come to and end. Here are several news reports on the event and the Supreme Court decision: CNN, ABCnews, Reuters, and Associated Press. Rather than write my own comments on this story, I've received permission to re-print Ed Bartlett's e-mail, The Mirror of Elian Gonzalez, which I feel sums up this ordeal very well.

The Mirror Of Elian Gonzalez

As I write this message, Elian Gonzalez and his family are approaching the territorial limits of Cuba.

My initial reaction to the news of their return to Cuba was relief and elation. Then I was overcome with a wave of uncontrollable sadness.

A father learns a lot about his humanity and his masculinity when he has a son. I was blessed with 3 sons, with whom I have strong, ever-evolving relationships. And I know the feelings that Juan Gonzalez felt towards his son.

I know that if the father had snatched Elian from his homeland, and drowned en route, little Elian would have been bundled up and put on the first plane back to Cuba. All the stories in the media would have glorified the reunion of a child, victim of an international kidnapping, with his tearful mother.

Instead, we were informed that his "surrogate" mother-cousin, who had a history of multiple admissions to psychiatric hospitals, was claiming to exercise parental rights. Persons began to question the devotion of Juan Gonzalez. There was speculation about potential abuse. And all of a sudden, Juan Gonzalez was no longer a loving father, he was a defendant who had to "prove" his parental fitness.

Eventually, the US government was forced to spend an enormous sum of money to return Elian and his family to Cuba.

Many American fathers identify closely with the saga of Elian and Juan. Fathers look at this story, and wonder why the US government doesn't devote nearly a fraction of this effort to helping American fathers who have been forcibly separated from their children. Apparently, a Cuban father has more rights in the US than an American father.

Thank you, Elian Gonzalez, for holding up a mirror to America, and revealing, for all to see, the double standard.

Ed Bartlett

Note: Ed Bartlett is the senior policy advisor for Men's Health America, which does research, education, and advocacy on behalf of men's health.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2123258.shtml

Kathleen Parker On The Central Park Rampage

Scott · 29 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

There is an article in the Orlando Sentinel by Kathleen Parker about the recent attacks on women in Central Park. Parker tries to defuse the gender blame-game that's going on right now, and look at it not as any norm of male behavior but as the despicable event that it is, independent of gender.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2124235.shtml

Reproductive Rights News From Maryland

Scott · 30 June 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Some very encouraging news on men's reproductive rights: Maryland's highest court ruled that men have the right to modify or nullify their paternity agreement if a DNA test proves they are not the father of the child(ren) they are raising. Read this article from The Nando Times. In most states, a father is still required to pay child support for children that are not his if he doesn't challenge his paternity status within a certain time period from the child's birth. This situation unfairly benefits women who fraudulently deceive men into becoming parents, and is not a rare phenomenon. It's good to hear that unknowingly enslaved men have some way out of such an unfair situation, at least in Maryland now. Update: There's another article from The Washington Post here. It adds several details to the story, including the fact that men will not be allowed to demand repayment of past child support payments.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2125217.shtml

Can Circumcision Help Prevent the Spread of HIV?

Scott · 1 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Salon magazine has printed a controversial article which looks into the possibility that circumcision can help prevent the spread AIDS. The evidence mentioned in the article does not prove the relationship 100%, but does suggest that more research be done to examine the effect that circumcision has on the transmission or contraction of AIDS.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2324206.shtml

Cathy Young On The Central Park Rampage

Scott · 1 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

First we had Kathleen Parker's commentary on Central Park, and now Cathy Young has written this story in the Jewish World Review. More insightful views on the way gender has been superimposed upon the event by the powers-that-be (in particular, NOW).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2324244.shtml

Australian Police Refuse Giving DNA Samples

Scott · 2 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In Australia, thousands of police officers have been asked to offer samples of their DNA to rule them out as suspects in crimes. But many of them are refusing for the specific reason that they don't want the genetic information used against them in paternity suits! Apparently the police are well aware of the immense power that child support agencies have, and are frightened for good reason about it. The article was found in The Daily Express Micro Edition, and can be found here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2325220.shtml

Manhattan Schools Adopt Strict Sexual Harassment Rules

Scott · 3 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The New York Post reports that schools in the Chelsea neighborhood of Manhattan have adopted outrageous guidelines regarding sexual harassment - which apply all the way down to preschool-aged children. Actions that can be identified and treated as sexual harassment under these rules include sexual jokes and teasing. Certainly sexual harassment can be a legitimate issue in high school and even middle school, but I think in the context of 4-6 year olds an "unwanted kiss" shouldn't be identified as "sexual harassment". The article can be read here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2326215.shtml

Male Teacher Shortages in Early Education

Scott · 3 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Many people are unaware of the incredibly low percentage of male teachers in early childhood, elementary, and middle school education. This Associated Press article discusses the issue and talks about the importance of male teachers as role models for young children, especially boys.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2327201.shtml

Where Are the Male Intellectuals?

Scott · 4 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Andrew Sullivan laments the lack of intellectualism among men today, and asks what needs to be done for masculinity to be seen as something more than what is printed in "men's magazines". His ideas: the revival of all-male institutions and for men to meet together regularly and form strong relationships with one another. I believe this article has some good thoughts on issues that successful men's organizations are addressing. An occasional reference to men being more powerful than women is outweighed by the relevance of the article to men's issues. The New Republic printed the article here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/04/2327235.shtml

Truth About The Gender "Wage Gap" Begins To Surface

Scott · 5 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This article from The Washington Post gives a mixed message with regard to the gender "wage gap". Several fields are mentioned where women make more than men, but the author is quick to say that women still earn less than men in many jobs. It looks to me like this author is on the fence - and it would be a great opportunity to write to The Washington Post and give them some well researched facts. (Such as these, for instance?)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/06/002241.shtml

NCFM E-Zine Gazette, Vol 14

Scott · 5 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Click on "Read More..." to view the National Coalition of Free Men's e-mail newsletter, the NCFM E-Zine. The National Coalition of Free Men (NCFM) is a non-profit educational organization that examines the way sex discrimination affects men. It also tries to raise public consciousness about little known, but important, topics dealing with the male experience. Their web site can be found at http://www.ncfm.org.Note: If you'd like to get the NCFM E-Zine sent to your e-mail address monthly, subscription information is at the end of the newsletter.

NCFM E-Zine Gazette

Editor Richard Kroeger

July 2000, Vol 14, No. 1

Welcome to the NCFM E-Zine Gazette.

We are the monthly email newsletter of the National Coalition of Free Men (NCFM).

Visit: http://www.ncfm.org/

This month's issue contains:

1. FATHER'S DAY MARCH DRAWS CROWD FROM THROUGHOUT COUNTRY TO DC

2. ELIAN GOES HOME WITH HIS FATHER

3. U.N. WOMENS CONFERENCE REACHES AGREEMENT

4. AFFIRMATIVE ACTION FOR BOYS?

5. GERMANY CURTAILS VISITATION RIGHTS

6. GORE TARGETS DEADBEAT DADS

7. AUTO MAKERS EXTEND BENEFITS TO HOMOSEXUAL DOMESTIC PARTNERS

8. SUPREME COURT MAKES DISCRIMINATION SUITS EASIER

9. SENATE REACHES AGREEMENT TO EXTEND VAWA

10. OUTLAWED WORDS AT ENGLISH COLLEGE

Special Features:

1. TO BE A BOY IN AMERICA

2. GAZETTE COMMENTARY: FLIRTING

Public Service

 The News **

FATHER'S DAY MARCH DRAWS CROWD FROM THROUGHOUT COUNTRY TO DC

Nearly 100 men and their families participated in this years Father's Day rally in Washington DC. The rally began at 11:00 on the White House Ellipse, followed by a march down Pennsylvania Avenue to the steps of the Capitol. Many bystanders were supportive, honked their horns, and waived at the Marchers. March organizers were pleased with the turnout, stating that the event is growing each year and have ambitious plans for next year, including inviting celebrities and scheduling more activities.

The Post reported, Ken Yolman came from the Virgin Islands seeking words of comfort. Heather Smiler drove from Brooklyn to support her brother who says he hasn't seen his daughter in 10 months. Richard Brooke, from Chicago, said he just wanted to talk with other fathers who have struggled to see their children after a messy divorce.

The marchers carried signs declaring, "I am not a paycheck," and "Dead beat or dead broke." Dean Tong of Tampa Florida said, "there are too many instances where men are denied due process when they are unfairly prevented from seeing their children." Co-organizer Greg Romeo of Nashville Tennessee was quoted, "We are tired of not being treated right by family court judges and caseworkers and being deprived of our rights to help raise our children."

The NCFM EZine Gazette

19 June 2000, The Washington Post

ELIAN GOES HOME WITH HIS FATHER

After being held in the United States for seven months against his father's wishes, Elian Gonzolez returned to his home in Cuba on June 28 with his father, Juan Miguel Gonzolez, after all court appeals to keep him in this country were denied.

U.N. WOMENS CONFERENCE REACHES AGREEMENT

Prostitution has become a stumbling block at the United Nations Women's Conference held in New York. At issue is whether prostitution, now considered criminal by the United Nations, should be sanctioned as a form of women's labor. President Clinton has stated, "... we are opposed to prostitution in all its forms. We would not become a party to any treaty that weakened laws against prostitution." However, U.S. negotiators along with other Western countries have tried to clarify international sanctions to cover only "forced" prostitution, thus legalizing all prostitution that is not coerced. The controversial move was in conflict with the Philippine delegation, which sought to broaden the law. Several feminist groups such as Equality NOW are angered that the Clinton administration appears to have compromised his earlier hard-line stand against all forms of prostitution.

Other areas of international disagreements in the conference are provisions to expand homosexual rights, introduce new "sexual rights" for children at age 10, and require abortion training for health workers throughout the world. Poor countries and countries supportive of the Vatican are generally opposed to these provisions, while they are supportive of stronger prohibitions against prostitution.

By June 10, 189 nations reached agreement on a 150-page platform, which set "women's equality" as a goal. The document is described as tougher than the one adopted 5 years ago at the Beijing Conference, including tougher measures targeting domestic violence, sex trafficking, and the effect of HIV on women. The next meeting will be in 2005.

6 and 7 June 2000, The Washington Times

12 June 2000, The Washington Post

Related story: Women's advocates honored Hillary Rodham Clinton at the United Nations by singing the civil rights hymn, "We Shall Overcome." Approximately 10,000 women from 180 governments were gathered to discuss progress and activism following the Fourth World Conference on Women held in Beijing five years ago. Clinton and women's advocates focused on problems faced by women, and atrocities committed against women throughout the world, and in particular in poor, tribal, Arabic, and Indian cultures.

6 June 2000, The Washington Post

Editor's commentary: Ms. Clinton referred to such practices as burning women because their dowries were too small in her speech. Such acts are an objectionable and primitive practice that we should protest. However, discussion of perspective of these crimes is rarely presented. In a broader context, it is clear that both men and women can be victims in these cultures. Who really is worse off, and why is the discussion only about women and the issues that they face? The horrible crime described by Ms. Clinton is comparatively rare and is already illegal in almost all countries. The decision to feature the burning of women to define the problem of violence against women was made because it has a lot of emotional impact, but ultimately it is little more than a political tactic that distorts our perspective and understanding of the true scope and nature of the problem.

Somehow lost in politicization of world gender violence are that both Hutu men and women slaughtered nearly a million Tutsis, mostly men, in Uganda in 1994. Today the Tutsi tribe is 70% female. Or that AIDS will claim the life of almost 50% of children by the age of 15 in the worst hit parts of Africa -- mostly boys. As victims of gender violence, the victimization of men and boys are well in the lead with no close second. Those who seek to make gender violence an issue before the U.N., focus strictly on issues that concern women. There is no corresponding agency or constituency to address the issues of gender violence against non-women. Selective U.N. intervention in military conflicts should not be confused with opposition to violence against men. In every case, U.N. action can be traced to some other international interest.

This is a complex subject. The NCFM EZine Gazette invites reader commentary. Commentary will be linked to our archive editions.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION FOR BOYS?

Colleges are looking for a few good men. Colleges have recently begun giving preferences to male applicants in order to balance campuses that are now dominated by women. This policy is drawing fire from some officials who worry that qualified girls are being treated unfairly, and justify the imbalance in college based on their perception of male advantages elsewhere in society. Women have outnumbered men in American colleges since the 1970s. Margaret Miller, president of the American Association of Higher Education, notes what she describes as "irony" that the predominance of women has caused such a reaction. Presumably the irony is because the predominance of men in colleges over a generation before was the basis for many similar programs giving women preferences. Miller also notes that no one seemed particularly concerned about the situation for decades. Men now make up about 43% of the college enrollment -- and dropping.

Some officials contend that we should focus on the underlying problem of the dwindling number of boys, and avoid admissions preferences altogether. They say that the causes are still being sorted out, but suggest boy's behavior problems, and the lure of lucrative careers in high-tech fields that don't require a college degree are part of the problem.

4 June 2000, Chicago Tribune

Editors note: the gender gap in college was already large in 1990 (45% men/55% women), when high-tech computer jobs were not a factor in post high-school employment. There is a strong correlation between level of education and salary. Education is also correlated with health, and longevity.

///--Sponsor Message--\\\

YOU CAN USE THIS SPACE TO ADVERTISE YOU WEB SITE OR SERVICE

\\\--End of Sponsor Message--///

GERMANY CURTAILS VISITATION RIGHTS

Three weeks after German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder promised to help arrange visitation for American parents embroiled in international custody disputes, local authorities have canceled visiting rights of one highly publicized case, apparently in because the American family had spoke with the press. German officials stated, the "media uproar" had confused and unsteadied the children who are held in foster care in the south of Germany against their father's wishes. The U.S. State Department calls the ruling absurd and points out that the German action is clearly intended to be punitive because of the publicity that the case has generated. The father, Joseph Cooke, lives in Flushing N.Y. Joseph lost his children six years ago when his then-wife, Christiane, turned their children Michelle and Daniel over to German youth authorities without his knowledge. She then checked herself into a mental institution. The children's grandmother, Patricia Cooke, is the only U.S. relative with visitation rights. Joseph could be jailed if he went to Germany for failure to pay child support.

A German social worker urged Patricia Cooke to cancel her visit of her Grandchildren in June, and warned that if she did visit, it would have to be on neutral territory and accompanied by a psychological professional. A follow-up letter informed her that her hours would be reduced and threatened that future visits would depend on her behavior. Patricia Cooke does not understand why a psychologist should be present at all, and said "I would like to do the normal things a grandmother does, like take them for ice cream."

22 June 2000, The Washington Post
see also, EZine Gazette, Vol. 13.1, June 2000.

GORE TARGETS DEADBEAT DADS

Presidential candidate Al Gore described absent fathers as "the No. 1 cause of child poverty in America" at a conference on fatherhood in Washington this month. "As president, I will launch a second generation of welfare reform to require all fathers who owe child support to pay up or be required to go to work ... We've been requiring that of the mothers; let's require it of the fathers." Gore would help two-parent families stay together by proposed changes in the tax code that would eliminate the "marriage penalty" for families that use the standard deduction.

Steven Baskerville of Howard University, writing for a news letter to be published by the Women's Freedom Network, charges Gore's campaign with promoting the incarceration of more fathers.

Republican Presidential candidate, George W. Bush, spoke in more general terms, calling instead for mutual "friendship and respect" to encourage marriage and to address the problems of fatherlessness. The Republicans are also proposing tax reform which they claim will eliminate the marriage penalty for all tax payers.

2 June 2000, Seattle Post Intelligencer

AUTO MAKERS EXTEND BENEFITS TO HOMOSEXUAL DOMESTIC PARTNERS

Ford Motor Co., GM, and DaimlerChrysler Corps. jointly announced that they will offer full health benefits to same-sex domestic partners for their nearly 500,000 U.S. employees. The United Auto Workers union pushed for the change a year ago in contract negotiations. Explicitly excluded, however, unmarried heterosexual couples will not get similar benefits.

9 June 2000, The Washington Post

///--Sponsor Message--\\\

Go to: http://www.iGive.com/html/ssi.cfm?cid=1109

Cut and paste this URL into your browser. It belongs to iGive and you will land on a page that has our name, NCFM. Join and click on a few ad banners. We earn money if you do this. And --- you don't have to buy anything.

\\\--End of Sponsor Message--///

SUPREME COURT MAKES DISCRIMINATION SUITS EASIER

The Supreme Court made it easier for an employee to get an on-the-job discrimination claim heard before a jury. Employees can win such lawsuits without direct evidence of an employer's illegal intent. A Mississippi man who said he was the victim of age discrimination brought the suit. The decision is likely to extend into all other forms of employment-bias lawsuits.

Employees must still prove that there was discrimination. However, they do not need to prove intent or motive on the part of the employer.

12 June 2000, CNN.com

SENATE REACHES AGREEMENT TO EXTEND VAWA

Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.) will introduce a compromise bill worked out with Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), calling for an expansion of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). The legislation, if adopted by the House, will authorize spending $645 million a year over the next five years, up from $266 million a year that is being spent now. The expanded bill will create several new initiatives, including transitional housing for victims, a program to reduce violence during children's visitations, and to aid disabled and immigrant women.

27 June 2000, The Washington Post

OUTLAWED WORDS AT ENGLISH COLLEGE

Stockpot College in Manchester England has a new policy that bans 39 terms on campus, including: "gentleman," "history," "chairman," "manmade," "Mrs.," "normal couple," and "postman." These have been deemed "unacceptable language" for the 15,000 students and employees, and can result in expulsion or termination should any of these offensive blasphemies be used. "Gentleman" was banned because it had unwanted class implications, and other words such as "crazy," "mad," or "manic" have been banned too because they could be offensive to someone with mental health problems. The college offers vocational classes in business, tourism, child care, as well as "floristy." It was noted that the campus is located in Man-chester, a point that is not currently in dispute.

The political correctness does not end at the campus door, however. The British National Employment Service banned the words "hard-working," "enthusiastic" and "reliable" from a newspaper ad, stating that they compromised the 1999 Disability Discrimination Act. The ban was later repealed by David Blunkett, England's education and employment secretary, noting that is was insulting to suggest that the disabled person cannot be reliable, hard-working and enthusiastic.

13 June 2000, The Washington Times

 Special Feature **

TO BE A BOY IN AMERICA

A plug for Chirstina Hoff-Sommers new book, "The War Against Boys." We read it in the Washington Post (11 June 2000), a paper where most gender-related stories are presented with a decidedly feminist point of view, often crossing into overt advocacy! At least that is how the editor of this newsletter sees it. They deserve credit, however, when they let an objective article sneak through. Here is what the Post provides as a "sampling" from her new book:

* Girls attempt suicide more often, but boys are far more successful. "In a typical year (1997), there were 4,493 suicides of young people between the ages of five and twenty-four: 701 females, 3,792 males.

* The typical boy is a year-and-a-half behind the average girl in reading and writing skills. Girls' scores still lag behind boys' in national science and math tests, but only slightly.

* The majority of college students are women, and the gap is expected to grow. By the year 2007, the Department of Education estimates that there will be 9.2 million women in college and 6.9 million men.

* Boys were as likely as girls to complain that they had experienced "unwanted and unwelcomed sexual behavior that interferes with their lives," according to a 1993 study conducted by the American Association of University Women. A follow-up study by researchers at the University of Michigan found that the "majority of both genders (53 percent) described themselves as having been both victim and perpetrator of harassment."

GAZETTE COMMENTARY: FLIRTING

Washington Post staff reporter Roxanne Roberts laments (6 June 2000, The Washington Post), "Flirting, the delicious art of saying nothing and everything, is disappearing." Republicans do it, Democrats do it, but as far as office flirting, "don't go there." Ms. Roberts is quick to point out that, here in Washington at least, no one is ever truly away from the office. Perhaps the most revealing quote, however, is from the president of the National Organization of Women (NOW), Patricia Ireland, "Flirting is not necessarily a sexist sin. But just as I would not wear clothes to the office that are appropriate for dancing at a club, I wouldn't bring the same kinds of interactions to my office that I would have at a party." She admits, flirting "is not a good idea because it's too easy to be misinterpreted," and concludes with "flirting only crosses the line to harassment if the attention is unwelcome."

In summary, Ms. Roberts and many she interviewed, long for the fun and charm of the ancient ritual of flirtation. The subtext, be wary as it comes with certain risks. Take it from Ms. Ireland, a leading feminist who has been instrumental in making innocent flirtation such as "unwanted looks" into illegal harassment. Consider this in the context that it is even easier today to bring a discrimination suit against an employer without the need to prove intent (see story "SUPREME COURT MAKES DISCRIMINATION SUITS EASIER"). It should be no surprise, therefore, that the delicious art of flirting is indeed disappearing. Perhaps flirting is like the canary in a mineshaft. It seems we're running out of air.

 Public Service **

Are you sponsoring a public speaker, gathering or news event? The NCFM EZine Gazette would like to help you spread the word. Our direct circulation is over 380 and growing. Many more visit our archives.

We will run a plug for your event for no charge, provided the event is free to the public. Otherwise, please contact us and consider taking out an ad at our low rates.

We are here to help you. Your participation helps us grow.

SEND US YOUR STORIES

The E-Zine Gazette is compiling a list of stories that document double standards in the American justice system. We plan to compile these stories into a concise and open-minded analysis to help illustrate the problem, and to provide you with the information you need to understand it.

Please send clipping to the NCFM address given below, along with which paper and the date that it appeared. Alternately, please send the complete text and reference to:

NCFM-gazette@ncfm-dc.org

Please note -- most newspapers charge a small fee to use their archives. Please send us the original text if possible rather than a link to where the article first appeared.

Thank you for your help!

This concludes this month's installment of the NCFM E-Zine Gazette. Thank you for your time! If you have a moment, please forward this newsletter on to one of your friends or co-workers who may be interested.

See you again next month!

Richard Kroeger, Editor

Advertise in the NCFM E-Zine Gazette: ncfm@ncfm.org

Send suggestions and comments to:
Editor
Please email us news articles from your local papers, or mail newspaper clippings to:
NCFM E-Zine Gazette, PO Box 129, Manhasset, NY 11030
it is important to include a complete reference to all contributed material.

Online Archives of the NCFM E-Zine Gazette are available at
http://ncfm-dc.org/ezine/

Our subscription list is composed of those who have contacted the NCFM or have otherwise subscribed directly to this newsletter. You can have yourself added or removed from our subscription list by following the simple instructions below. We apologize if you have received this message in error and do not wish to subscribe.

To subscribe, send email to and put "subscribe" in the subject field and nothing else.
Please leave the body of the email message blank.

To unsubscribe, send email to and put "unsubscribe" in the subject field and nothing else.
Please leave the body of the email message blank.

The NCFM E-Zine Gazette is (c) 1999 National Coalition of Free Men. All Rights Reserved. No part of this newsletter may be reproduced in whole or in part without proper credit to this publication including the URL: http://www.ncfm.org.

NCFM Electronic Network

National Coalition of Free Men

E-Mail: ncfm@ncfm.org

World Wide Web: http://www.ncfm.org

Office: (516) 482-6378

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/05/2042237.shtml

Inspiring Op-Ed on Choice for Men

Scott · 6 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Thomas Lynch wrote a terrific op-ed piece in The New York Times about male reproductive rights. The essay is well thought out and he covers all of the issues surrounding choice for men, including the concept that forced paternity affects a man's body just as much as pregnancy affects a woman's body. This, I feel, is the crux of the argument for reproductive rights for men. Free registration with NYT is required to read the article.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/06/0014250.shtml

Welcome to Our New Server!

Scott · 6 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

As you can see, The Men's Activism News Network is on a new server, and I've given the site a facelift. There is only one problem I've run into, and that's the URL you're seeing at the top of your web browser. It's supposed to say, "www.mensactivism.org", but it's showing my real IP address, which changes frequently!. So don't try to bookmark the site, because it won't work for long. I'll stick some Javascript link to automatically insert a correct bookmark at some point this evening. Thanks for your patience... Update: I haven't found a solution to this yet, and will be doing more research on it tomorrow. Another update: I have a solution to the problem, but it's going to take a few days to implement it. The site will be down at various times this weekend while I work on it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/06/014221.shtml

False Rape Accusation Thrown Out of UK Court

Scott · 7 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The UK Times reports that a man who was accused of rape had the charges thrown out of court after producing tapes of phone conversations with his accuser where she pleaded for him to renew their relationship. Read the article here. The details of the investigation are disturbing - the police expressed no interest in hearing the tapes, and when they finally did so, continued to prosecute him. He also lost his job because of the accusation.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/06/2232233.shtml

Fred Lane Killed By His Wife - No Charges Filed

Scott · 7 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Indianapolis Colts running back Fred Lane has been fatally shot by his wife in a domestic dispute. Despite the fact that police have indeed determined that it was Deidra Lane who shot him, they have not as of this posting pressed charges. Anyone who cares about domestic violence against men should be up in arms, and writing letters to their local newspaper. You can read the Associated Press story here. News submitted by c4m.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/07/1826256.shtml

Should Reducing The Divorce Rate Be A National Goal?

Scott · 8 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Washington Times printed this article a few days ago, which reports that some researchers on divorce and family issues recommend that a reduction of the divorce rate should be addressed as a national issue. With suggestions on how to reduce divorce, they list many benefits to society that may result. It's hard to deny that divorce today in the U.S. is often done too readily, and particularly without regard to the effects on children. An interesting read.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/08/1713234.shtml

Female Father's Rights Advocates

Scott · 9 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This Salon article by Cathy Young covers an interesting topic - women who are actively fighting for father's rights. Young tells stories about second wives, mothers who feel children should have the right to spend more time with their fathers, and other women who are interested in obtaining equality for fathers in family court. Kind of long, but full of interesting info about how some women are fighting for father's rights.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/09/0249234.shtml

"Men Deserve to Live" Action Plan

Scott · 9 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Edward Bartlett from Men's Health America has drawn up an action plan to get Rep. Randy Cunningham's Men's Health Act of 2000 passed. Click "Read More..." below to read the action plan and find out how to sign up to receive action updates via e-mail. As Ed puts it, *It's incredibly important that we get this bill passed, for one simple reason: Men Deserve to Live.*Two weeks ago, Rep. Randy Cunningham proposed a bill to establish an Office of Men's Health. This Office will jump-start the whole men's health movement.

It's incredibly important that we get this bill passed, for one simple reason: Men Deserve to Live.

We have established a group of 18 local men's/fatherhood organizations who will be spearheading this effort at the local level (if your group isn't involved yet, let me know, and I'll add you to the list).

Every week between now and Oct. 6 (the projected adjournment of Congress), I will be sending you an Action Alert. I'm listing the Action Plan below.

So let's get cranked up to make the Office of Men's Health a reality! And if you have any other suggestions how to move this forward, feel free to e-mail me at eba@intr.net.

Ed

Men Deserve to Live - Action Plan:

July:

Week 1: Read the bill and become familiar with men's health issues; get names, addresses, phone numbers, faxes of elected officials and health legislative assistant.

Week 2: Write letters of support - Representative and Senators.

Week 3: Fax letter of support.

Week 4: Contact local media.

August:

Week 1: MHA on vacation.

Week 2: Call to schedule meeting during the upcoming Congressional.

Summer District Work Period, July 31-Sept. 5.

Week 3: Make phone calls to Legislative Aides of elected officials.

Week 4: Contact the persons running for office in your district - ask about the candidate's position on men's health, and ask for their support of the Men's Health Bill.

September:
Week 1: Summer District Work Period - meet with your Representative or Senator in their home office.

Week 2: Contact friends, family, and co-workers who are interested in health or men's/fatherhood issues - ask for their support.

Week 3: Attend a campaign rally - ask about the candidate's position on men's health.

Week 4: Distribute flyer on men's health to local libraries and clinics.

October:

Final push - Whatever it takes to get the job done.

Ed Bartlett is the senior policy advisor for Men's Health America, which does research, education, and advocacy on behalf of men's health.

To subscribe to Ed's e-mail list, mensheath, create an account at egroups.com and subscribe to the menshealth list. Ed will be sending out his action alerts via the list, which is very low traffic.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/09/1355238.shtml

Female Student Harasses Germaine Greer

Scott · 9 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In a bizarre bit of news, a female student has admitted in court to holding Germaine Greer (a well-known feminist) captive in Greer's home and harassing her. The punishment? Two years of probation. I don't think I need to raise the obvious question: what would have happened if the student were male? I'll leave that to your own imagination. An ABCnews report of the court verdict can be found here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/09/2135214.shtml

President Clinton Commutes 4 Women's Drug Sentences

Scott · 10 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

According to this Associated Press story, President Clinton has commuted the sentences of 4 women convicted and doing time for drug crimes. The reason for doing so: the women received much harsher sentences than the men which were also involved. Now, it does seem to be true that in this case these women were given unfair sentences (by comparison to the men's sentences), but you can almost feel an uprising of a new feminist myth: that women receive harsher punishment than men for the same crimes. Please do what you can to head off this myth as soon as possible; efforts made now will make a much bigger impact than if we let it slide for awhile.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/10/1225203.shtml

More On Fred Lane

Scott · 10 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Sportserver printed this article which says that Fred Lane's wife, who fatally shot him just a few days ago, had also fired a gun in their home two weeks before the incident, and that Lane's father told him to "get the hell out of there now". The article also discusses other disputes that Lane and his wife had been having. This is certainly a tragedy that sheds light on the complexity of domestic violence.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/10/139204.shtml

French Government Revokes "Rape Me" Movie

Scott · 11 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The State Council of France has revoked the license required for the new movie "Rape Me" to be shown in French theaters. The plot is described as "a kind of hard-core 'Thelma and Louise' in which two young women very graphically sleep and murder their way across France." The decision to revoke the film's license was made after family-values campaigners lobbied the State Council and complained that the film was inappropriate for minors 16-18, while the film was only rated for children over 16. ABCnews has the report here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/11/1154226.shtml

What Do Women Want?

Scott · 11 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

No, this article has nothing to do with relationship or sex tips for men. It's an intro to a USA Today article by Gregg Zoroya, which looks at male roles in some recent movies that have received positive responses from women. It talks about what women find admirable and attractive in these portrayals of masculinity. It sounds to me like women want some pretty idealistic and selfless men. Could they perhaps be expecting more of men than of themselves?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/11/1421239.shtml

Mensactivism.org Feature: Civil Rights for All

Scott · 11 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I'm proud to announce the second feature article posted to The Men's Activism News Network (really the first since my major public announcement). Ronald Burke has written an excellent essay on the topic of male reproductive rights, focusing on the Constitutional issue of equal protection. Click "Read More..." below to read the entire essay. And feel free to send me any essays you've written for future features!

Civil Rights for All: Choice for Men

By: Ronald D. Burke

ron888@hotmail.com

Introduction

I am not, to the best of my knowledge, on any list of deadbeat Dads, nor am I in any immediate danger of becoming an unwilling Parent. My interest in this subject is from the perspective of an American citizen who is actively concerned with the issue of civil rights. It is my most sincere desire to live in an America that has rights for people, all people, instead of just certain classes of people.

Problem: Choice for Men

When the Supreme Court ruled in 1973 that women have a fundamental right to control their reproduction, men became a separate and inferior class-A class denied the right to choose. In 1992, the Supreme Court reaffirmed the Roe v Wade decision. The opinion of the court was "The ability of women to participate equally in the economic and social life of the nation has been facilitated by their ability to control their reproductive lives"(ACLU). The problem is that the ability of men to participate equally in the economic and social life of the nation has been hindered by their inability to control their reproductive lives. Currently, the law dictates that a woman is free to choose an abortion, and the father has no right to intervene. If, on the other hand, the woman chooses not to have an abortion, then the father is obligated to eighteen to twenty one years of child support with no choice in the matter.

In 1963, President Kennedy presented a stirring public speech on the state of civil rights in Alabama. In that speech he said, "It ought to be possible, in short, for every American to enjoy the privileges of being American without regard to his race or his color"(Kennedy). The same American privilege ought to exist without regard to sex. Equality, by definition, can never be achieved unless it is for everybody. Choice for Men is about giving all men and women the same rights and responsibilities.

History

The thirteenth amendment to the Constitution provides that involuntary servitude shall not exist within the United States (United States, "Constitution"). In 1909, the NAACP was founded to achieve equal rights for all Americans. In June 1963, President Kennedy committed the presidency to the cause of equal rights, and he referred to racial discrimination as a "moral crisis" (Rubin). In a public speech regarding the subject, President Kennedy said, "This nation was founded by men of many nations and backgrounds. It was founded on the principle that all men are created equal and the rights of every man are diminished when the rights of one man are threatened" (Kennedy). The 1973 Roe v Wade decision gave women the rights to control their parental responsibilities, but men have been excluded from this right. Throughout our history, equality has been evasive, often due to poor word choice. How much better would it have been if President Kennedy had said "people" instead of "men," or if the supreme court had said "people" instead of "women"?
It is well worth noting the wisdom and foresight the founders of the NAACP had when they sought equality for all Americans.

Extent

In 1991, a Kansas State Court ruled that a seventeen-year-old babysitter was guilty of statutory rape when she had sex with the thirteen-year-old boy she was caring for. The absurd thing is that the Kansas Courts also ruled that the thirteen-year-old rape victim was required to pay child support for the baby that resulted from his rape. The appeals court affirmed the decision of the lower court and ordered the young boy to pay the portion of the child support that the lower court had forgiven (State of Kansas). The baby sitter could have chosen an abortion, but the victim of rape has no choice if he is a male. This is not an isolated case; in fact, this ruling has become a precedent for many similar cases.

In Indiana, a man agreed to help a female coworker have a baby. They had a written agreement that he would not be liable for any support, but the courts ruled that fathers must support any child that a mother chooses to give birth to-fathers have no choice (Lambert). According to the Friends of Choice for Men, government figures indicate that each year 500,000 unwed fathers are ordered to pay child support. It is mind boggling to realize that at the equivalent rate of nearly one per minute, men are forced-without choice-into two decades of financial responsibility because of a woman's constitutional right to choose ("Keep Your Pants On").

Causes: Class Structure

America has had a long history of talking about equal rights, unfortunately equal rights have usually been for a particular group instead of being for all people. When the Supreme Court handed down the Roe v Wade decision, they created a separate right for a separate class-women. With knowledge of the entire world history of class struggle, America's highest court still creates classes of people with separate rights.

Separate Rights

The current U.S. abortion laws represent a despicable example of separate and unequal rights. In a futile plea for justice in a North Carolina Court, an attorney points out that women have the right to choose either to be or not to be a parent. Men have the right to be a parent (State of North Carolina).

Perpetuation

In the years following the civil war, southern states enacted a series of laws and regulations to perpetuate the superiority of whites over blacks. These draconian, separate but equal, laws were vigilantly enforced and were quite harsh, overwhelming, and unconstitutional. The current legal structure of paternal responsibilities is being built up in much the same manner; laws are being passed for the sole purpose of perpetuating a system that flies in the face of constitutional liberty.

According to current law, when a mother says that a man is the father of her child, the man is guilty as charged until he is proven innocent. If the man chooses to go to court, the case is declared a civil matter, denying the man the right to counsel if he can not afford it, even though the woman is given free representation by the state attorneys. After the court rules on paternal responsibility, the case becomes a criminal action and the man is subject to criminal prosecution for non-payment (State of North Carolina).

Paternity laws are enforced by their own police forces with special police powers similar to those of the IRS. The special police force, Child Support Enforcement Offices, is present in every state of the nation and is staffed with tax-supported attorneys and enforcement officers. These special officers are empowered to demand all personal and financial records from the defendant and any member of the defendant's household. In addition, these special officers can require a defendant to make periodic personal appearances before the court, and require the payment of a cash deposit or performance bond. Noncompliance can result in imprisonment for contempt (State of North Carolina).

Effects: Unequal Rights

In much the same way as minority groups have been treated through much of our less than ideal history, men have become victims of inequality. Historically, unequal rights have allowed one segment of the population an unjust domination over another segment. Unequal rights often result in un-American systems such as slavery, no voting rights for women, and no choice for men.

Slavery

The thirteenth amendment to the United States Constitution is the antislavery amendment. It reads, "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction" (United States, "Constitution"). The pro-choice people hold that sex is not a crime, and that it would be involuntary servitude to force a woman to have an unwanted child. However, in today's-no Choice for Men-world, men are held in involuntary servitude to the product of a woman's free choice.

Productivity

As many as one half million men per year are being subjected to the Child Support Enforcement Offices. Since they are facing seizure of assets, garnishment of wages, loss of professional and driving licenses, unemployment, extradition, and imprisonment, it would be an understatement to say that national productivity is being diminished.

Solution: Restoration of Equal Rights

According to Lawrence Ehlenberger, a psychiatrist and men's rights activist, Choice for Men would involve the man being served with papers when the woman learned she was pregnant. He could relinquish parenthood, losing all rights to visit the child as well as obligations to pay child support, or he could accept paternity, and have all rights and obligations of fatherhood. Either way the decision would be irrevocable and give men the same freedom of choice that women enjoy (Sine).

Materials: People

The success of the Civil Rights Movement was due, in no small part, to the efforts of a few good people. A few good people the caliber of Rosa Parks, Roy Wilkins, Bayard Rustin, and Martin Luther King, Jr., could form the vital leadership of Choice for Men. The only other necessary material is more people. The people in the street, the outraged indignant protesters, the freedom fighters, the letter writers, and the people who talk to people are essential ingredients for success. If not for the efforts of concerned people, America would be a British colony, slavery would still be legal, and women would not be allowed to vote or own property.

Procedure: Activism

When it comes to initiating societal changes, the tireless efforts of activists like Patricia Ireland, the president of NOW, provide an example of excellence. In a high school textbook Ms. Ireland writes:

Without a constitutional guarantee of women's equality, even favorable rulings and good laws on women's rights can be ignored, revoked or overruled. Feminist activists have not given up on women's equality amendment. We know that to get women into the Constitution we will have to elect a lot more people who support that idea. We look to the young women and men who are addressing issues of equality and Justice in high schools across the country. We are confident that this "third wave" will soon be ready to except the baton. (Ireland)

I must admit that I have a high degree of respect and admiration for Ms. Patricia Ireland. Her dedication to the cause of equal rights for women is exemplary. Although I cannot say that I always agree with her, I will always appreciate her dedication. I hope that we can be on the same side, working towards equal rights for all people-women and men alike. Choice for Men will need a good activist like Ms. Ireland.

Awareness

No sweeping change in public policy can occur without public awareness. Choice for Men needs the involvement of every concerned citizen. We need people in every city and town to write letters in the newspapers, call in to radio talk shows, and discuss the issues with everyone who will listen. In order for a change to occur, the general population needs to be made aware of the desperate nature of the problem.

Alliance

Enlisting the aid and support of media outlets and political organizations is another function that virtually every concerned person can help with. If enough people were to contact the ACLU regarding their position on the subject of Choice for Men, the ACLU might consider Choice for Men and equal rights for all people to be a subject worthy of their attention.

Time Frame

I wish that I could say that this will be an easy fight, but it will not be. It is a lengthy and time-consuming process to defeat government bureaucracies and negative public images. It took ninety years to abolish slavery and one hundred years after that to achieve Civil Rights for Black Americans. I hope that our fight is not as lengthy, but it could be.

Obstacles

There is a false public perception that Choice for Men is just a bunch of Deadbeat Dads who are trying to get out of their child support obligations. This kind of public image could be difficult to overcome; we must always point out that the real issue is equality for all people-women and men alike.

Both the ACLU and the Planned Parenthood Federation are dedicated to preserving and enhancing women's rights including their right to choose parenthood. Much to their shame, these organizations have not supported the same rights for men. These two organizations have tremendous influence in American politics, and could present a formidable opposition, but it may be possible to shame them into supporting equal rights for all people instead of just certain groups.

Checks

We should all be diligent in watching the positions and actions of our lawmakers. Anytime there is a piece of equality legislation in the works it would be in the best interest of everyone to insure that it is equality for all people. Any legislation that encourages equality for one group will actually encourage inequality. I believe that our great nation would be far better off today if it had been founded on the principle-All People are Created Equal.

Conclusion: Freedom

According to Planned Parenthood,

The abortion issue is not really about abortion. It is about the value of women in society. Should women make their own decisions about family, career, and how to live their lives? Or should government do that for them? Do women have the option of deciding when and whether to have children? Or is that a government decision? ("9 Reasons")

The people of Planned Parenthood make it sound as though freedom only exists if women can choose whether to have children. It is my belief that Planned Parenthood is half-right. Freedom only exists if both women and men can choose whether to have children.

Reasonable

Over one hundred and fifty years ago, the first Women's Rights Convention was held in Seneca Falls, New York. At that convention the idea that "All men and women are created equal, and are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights?" was adopted (Rynder). This ideal, although considered radical at the time, was reasonable then and now. If men and women were equal under the law, Choice for Men would be unnecessary.

Practical

According to Richard Sine, "It is hoped that men's choice would force men and women to give serious and mutual consideration as to whether they can make a long-term commitment to a child before they attempt to raise it." It seems obvious to me that having both parents willingly committed to their child would be the most practical way to assure the support of children.

Effective

Equality is at the very core of the democratic system of government, the most effective system of government ever devised. Equal rights, equal choices, and equal pay, equal responsibility, equal whatever, presents a far more effective system of government than inequality ever could.

Works Cited

ACLU. Briefing Paper, Number 15. The Right to Choose: A Fundamental Liberty. Winter 1999. 10 June 2000 <www.aclu.org/library/right_to_choos e.pdf>.

Ireland, Patricia. "Women's less than full equality Under the U.S. Constitution." Online Posting. National Organization for Women. 11 June 2000 <www.now.org/issues/economic/cea /ireland.html>.

"Keep Your Pants On! (On All Day, On All Night)." 1994-1995. Online Posting. Friends of Choice for Men. 10 June 2000 <www.nas.com/c4m/humor_me.html>.

Kennedy, John Fitzgerald. "Radio and Television Report to the American People on Civil Rights." 11 June 1963. Online Posting. John Fitzgerald Kennedy Library. 11 June 2000 <www.cs.umb.edu/jfklibrary/j061163.htm>.

Lambert, Wade. "Child Support:." Wall Street Journal 5 January 1994:B8.

"9 Reasons Why Abortions are Legal." March 1989. Online Posting. Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc. 10 June 2000 <www.plannedparenthood.org/ab ortion/9reasons.htm>.

Rubin, Sam. "Civil Rights Leaders and the President." Online Posting. John Fitzgerald Kennedy Library. 11 June 2000 <www.cs.umb.edu/jfklibrary/civil_rights _documents_index.html>.

Rynder, Constance. "All Men & Women are created Equal." American History April 1999. 11 June 2000 <www.the historynet.com/americanhistory/articles/1999/04992_text.html>.

Sine, Richard. "Revenge of the Deadbeat Dads." Metro 14-20 November 1996. 5 June 2000 <www.metroactive.com/papers/metro/11.14.96/cover/dads-9646.html>.

State of Kansas. Supreme Court of Kansas. Colleen Hermesmann, appellee, Vs. Shane Seyer, a minor, and Dan and Mary Seyer, his parents, Appellants No. 67,978. 5 March 1993. The National Center for Men. 10 June 2000 <www.nas.com/c4m/rape_case.html >.

State of North Carolina. County of Sampson. Zella C. Shumaker vs. James G. Hamilton, M. D. File Number: 86CVD690. 9 January 1998. 10 June 2000 <http://members.aol.com/dnaand14ca/Ncbriefs/Nccase1/jhamnote.html>.

United States. "Constitution for the United States of America." Online Posting. USConstitution.net. 10 June 2000 <www.usconstitution.net/const.txt>.

Copyright © 2000 Ronald Duane Burke

Ron888@hotmail.com

Ronald Burke is a 48 year old hippy, farmhand, bus driver, business owner, entrepreneur, and student. After a disabling injury in 1997, he returned to school through the state vocational rehabilitation program. His goals are to sharpen his writing skills and fine tune his business knowledge.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/11/1310251.shtml

Social Worker Has Sex With Boy Of 15, Then Accuses Him Of Rape

Scott · 12 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

ninemsn news from Australia printed this story that a female social worker, 46, had sex with one of her 15 year old clients, and when they were caught on one occasion, later filed a false claim of sexual assault. Kind of a sick irony, considering it was the boy who was raped by definition in this circumstance.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/11/1756218.shtml

John Leo And The Boy Crisis

Scott · 12 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

US News has another great column by John Leo, where he talks about the crisis we face regarding young boys and education. He makes references to the research in Christina Hoff-Sommers' latest book, The War Against Boys, and talks about recent events such as the new sexual harassment guidelines set up in the Manhattan Chelsea school district, which apply to kids as young as 4. As usual, Leo puts out another great pro-male article.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/12/1330211.shtml

Mother Gives Away Son Because Of Behavioral Problems

Scott · 13 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

A woman from California gave her 10 year old son to someone she met on the internet because she "could no longer cope with his misbehavior." A police officer involved in the case is quoted as saying that the problems were "really typical 10-year-old stuff." Now that normal behavior of boys is becoming inconvenient for modern parents, and drugs like Ritalin are so popular to tranquilize them with, should it be a surprise that some people are just not willing to deal with boys at all? Click here for the Associated Press story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/13/1216244.shtml

Child Custody Tightly Linked To Divorce Prevalence

Scott · 13 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This New York Times article talks about the reasons that people divorce. It shatters misconceptions such as men initiating divorce most often or women leaving primarily to escape abusive relationships, and reveals the deepest link: child custody laws. The author discovered that women initiate divorce more often than men do because they don't fear they will lose their children in the divorce.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/13/1648222.shtml

Cathy Young Reviews The War Against Boys For JWR

Scott · 14 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Cathy Young has written another, shorter review of Christina Hoff Sommers' book The War Against Boys for Jewish World Review. Read the article here. The other, longer review that I made reference to above is the Salon review, which can still be found here. I like the fact that Cathy Young is somewhat critical of the book but still recognizes its importance.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/14/1143256.shtml

Domestic Violence Study Released

Scott · 14 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Today The Nando Times printed this story which outlines a domestic violence research survey done by a Justice Department agency and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Their numbers suggest that 25% of women and 7% of men are raped or assaulted by an intimate partner. Despite the fact that these findings are not in line with family studies findings (ie, Straus, et al), there is an important acknowledgement in the report that "Violence among intimates involves relationships and factors that are too complex to be captured by a single research approach," and that men under-report DV more so than women.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/14/178200.shtml

Women To Be Assessed For Combat Roles In England

Scott · 14 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The UK Times reports that the Defence Ministry in England is preparing field trials for mixed-gender infantry units to determine whether women should be allowed in combat positions in the military. Read the article here. The main reason this is being done is to give women better opportunities to compete for senior positions in the military, but this would also help to balance the rights and responsibilities women have in the armed forces. Considering this is a controversial topic, why not discuss it in our comment boards? Click "Read More" to enter the comment board for this article, and read our tutorial if you need help posting comments. What do you think, would this be a step forward or backward for the men's movement?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/14/1833241.shtml

Alimony To Be Paid Even After Death Of Ex-wife

Scott · 16 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Florida's Supreme Court decided last Thursday that a man must pay more than a year's worth of alimony to the estate of his dead ex-wife. Apparently the woman died after the divorce was finalized but at the time both parties were appealing parts of the final judgment. Since the man had not paid the alimony between the time the divorce was finalized and his ex-wife's death (due to the appeal), he argued that since she was now dead he shouldn't have to pay her the money. The court disagreed, in its time-honored trend of sticking with legal technicalities rather than common sense. ABCnews has the article here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/16/0250238.shtml

Man Still Forced To Pay Child Support For Child That Isn't His

Scott · 16 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch reports in this article that a man has lost a second court battle to have his child support obligation removed from a child which DNA tests have proven is not his. He argued that the last 10 years he has been paying child support was the result of his being defrauded by the mother of the child, but the judge would not amend the paternity suit. Isn't it great that DNA tests can be used to force men into unwanted paternity while they often mean nothing when absolving men of it? Update: I've fixed the link to the story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/16/1533230.shtml

Clinical Trials Of Male BC Pill Show Good Promise

Scott · 17 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Clinical trials are being performed for a birth control pill that can be taken by men. So far there have been good results, and common side effects such as acne and high blood pressure are not showing up in this particular drug. No word on when it might become available, but this is good news nonetheless. The BBC news article can be read here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/16/1929214.shtml

Were Friedan's Accusations Meant To Boost Sales Of Her Book?

Scott · 17 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Brill's Content printed this story on Betty Friedan and her accusations of domestic abuse by her former husband Carl Friedan. Ms. Friedan has made several attempts to downplay her comments about abuse in her newest book Life So Far, and Kimberly Conniff, the author of this article, suggests that it may have been done to create some controversy around the book to boost its sales. The article also goes into the generally poor journalism surrounding the issue, where Mr. Friedan was not given the chance to comment on the accusations before most book reviews were put in print.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/17/0312251.shtml

Bush Promotes "Paternity Registry" Law

Scott · 18 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

George W. Bush is promoting a "Paternity Registry" law that would deny fathers the ability to stop adoption proceedings taken by the mother if they did not register as the father within 30 days of the child's birth. Click here for the ABCnews article. Bush is quoted as saying, "Our child welfare system...must do more to encourage fathers to care for their families or, failing that, to expedite adoption when that is the mother's wish or the mandate of the state." Note: The Men's Activism News Network does not officially endorse any political candidates.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/17/2253226.shtml

Canadian Government Looks Into Changing Divorce Laws

Scott · 18 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The National Post printed this story that the Canadian government has commissioned a study which has determined that most Canadians want changes to the Divorce Act that would be more child friendly and encourage shared parenting. Anne McLellan, the Justice Minister, accepted the report but told the committee that it would take three years for the changes to go into effect. According to the article, this wait is neither necessary nor has it made many people happy.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/18/1252206.shtml

Men Deserve To Live - Round 3

Scott · 18 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America has distributed the announcement for "Round 3" of the action plan to get the Men's Health Act of 2000 passed by Congress. Please click "Read More..." below to see what you can do this week for the cause of men's health in America.

MEN DESERVE TO LIVE - Round 3

Last week we asked you to write a letter to your Representative to become a co-sponsor to Men's Health Act of 2000, H.R. 4653. (If you didn't get to it yet, please send it now. Address: US House of Representatives, Washington, DC 20515)

Last week, we were heard. THIS WEEK, WE WILL BE REMEMBERED. This is the plan:

1. Get your Representative's phone number. If you don't have their number, call the Congressional switchboard at 202-224-3121, and they will give it to you.

2. Call your Representative's office and ask for the name of the Health Legislative Aide (LA). LAs are hard-working folks who try to make themselves accessible to constituents (after all, this is an election year!).

3. Request to speak with the Health LA. The purpose of your call is to follow-up on your letter, and to again ask the Representative's support to co-sponsor Rep. Cunningham's bill.

4. Be unfailingly courteous and helpful. Near the end of your conversation, you may want to politely say, "Thousands of elections in November will be decided by the male vote, and you hope the Representative will show their concern about the fact that men die 6 years sooner than women." Thank the LA for his/her assistance.

5. Make a note of this person's name, because you will be in contact with this person the week of Aug. 7.

OK, go for it!

Ed Bartlett

Men's Health America

www.egroups.com/group/menshealth/

A Reminder - Our Game Plan:

JULY

July 3: Read the bill, which can be found at www.house.gov/cunningham/images/hr4653.PDF

July 10: Write letters of support to your Representative and Senators

July 14: Make follow-up phone call

July 24: Contact local media

AUGUST

August 1: Continue efforts with local media

August 7: Call to schedule meeting during the upcoming Congressional Summer District Work Period, July 31-Sept. 5

August 14: Make phone calls to Legislative Aides of elected officials

August 21: Contact the persons running for office in your district - ask about the candidate's position on men's health, and ask for their support of the Men's Health Bill

July 28: Summer District Work Period (July 31-Sept. 5) - meet with your Representative or Senator in their home office

SEPTEMBER

September 4: Write a second letter to your elected officials

September 11: Contact friends, family, and co-workers and ask for their support

September 18: Attend a campaign rally - ask about the candidate's position on men's health

September 25: Distribute flyer on men's health to local libraries, community centers, and clinics

OCTOBER

Final push - whatever it takes to get the job done

October 6: Target adjournment of Congress

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/18/1845217.shtml

Deadbeat Dads Who Aren't

Scott · 19 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Orange County Register printed this news story about bureaucratic errors in the child support collection system - and men who are labeled 'deadbeats' when they are really current with their payments. One man is suing a District Attorney's Office to compensate for damages he suffered while he challenged child support debts he never owed. It should be no surprise that more accountability needs to be built-in to this system to allow errors to be corrected.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/19/1758245.shtml

Double Child Support Ruling Challenged

Scott · 19 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

More news from Canada: The National Post reported on a story about both the bio father and stepfather being forced to pay child support for a child, referred to as 'double dipping' (since the child/mother gets twice the support). The ruling is being challenged in the Canadian court system. An outline of the situation is kind of complicated, so I won't summarize it here. One thought occurred to me, though: the boy who is the recipient of child support from both men has a sister, and does anyone really think the boy should be financially supported better than her? It's an absurd concept, to say the least.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/19/191250.shtml

Remembering Dad

Scott · 20 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Tony Kornheiser of the LA Times recently experienced the loss of his father. He decided to write his usual column as a tribute to his father, talking about their relationship and his dad's love, humor, and the quirks that made him who he was. I thought the article was moving and written in a very masculine mode of writing. Although the article is about loss, I see it as an important positive thing to think about fathers and what they mean in this way. You can read the article here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/20/0425207.shtml

Rod Smith Convicted Of DV Despite Recant Of Accusation

Scott · 20 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Rod Smith, a wide receiver for the Denver Broncos, was sentenced to two years probation and more than half a year of counseling for domestic violence. This was despite the fact that his accuser, the mother of his two children, recanted her story. From the details of the alleged abuse, one might think that there would be physical evidence, but no mention of this is made. It looks like another case of believing a woman only when she claims victimhood, and disregarding her words otherwise. Sportserver has the article here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/20/0442247.shtml

Choice For Men Demonstration On Capitol Hill in August

Scott · 20 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Kim writes "On August 26, 2000 a group of choice for men supporters will be demonstrating on Capitol Hill, Washington, D.C. We will be located in the West Front of the Capitol building from 11:30am to 5:30pm. You are invited to come and join us. We need you and you need us!
We will be holding up signs advocating equal reproductive choice for men. What you put on your sign is up to you, however you should try to be respectful. Ideally, your slogan should be kept to 8 words or less and should be written with big dark letters on a light background. We will have a table for pamphlets and bumperstickers.
We all look forward to seeing you there! Sincerely, Kim" Please contact Kim if you have any further questions about the demonstration or are interested in attending.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/20/1656211.shtml

Shaky Rape Allegations Made Against University Student

Scott · 21 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

A student at Aberystwyth, a university in Britain, has accused a male undergraduate of raping her two years ago. No physical evidence exists, and from her own quotes it is not clear that she even made her intentions clear to the young man. She said in court, "I was willing at first but it got a bit uncomfortable." I feel a bit of sympathy for the young man who is going to be vilified for this, knowing that these accusations can have a profound effect regardless of whether you know you're innocent. The UK Telegraph has the story here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/20/1717208.shtml

Sexual Harassment Bias In The U.S. Army

Scott · 21 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Washington Times printed this piece on the existence of bias against men in sexual harassment investigations in the U.S. Army. It discusses how a military career can be destroyed with a simple accusation in which men are generally assumed guilty until proven innocent, and in particular examines the 1996 incident involving Lt. General Claudia Kennedy. As bad as real sexual harassment is, the sensationalism and hypersensitivity surrounding it without regard to physical or verifiable evidence is undoubtedly doing an equal amount of damage.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/21/0238220.shtml

John O'Sullivan Laments For 'Manly Men'

Scott · 21 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

John O'Sullivan recently wrote an article for Canada's National Post, Lament for the Days of Manly Men. In it, he criticizes the way men's roles have changed, their current lack of authority, and the decline of courage, duty, and chivalry. He also believes that men are by nature immoral and irresponsible, and that they need to be socialized for these qualities, which the traditional male role did quite well. I have some mixed feelings on this article, but I thought it would be of interest to the readership because of its somewhat controversial nature. Feel free to share your thoughts on it through our comment boards!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/21/1443219.shtml

Men Are Pigs

Scott · 21 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous Hero submitted this link. It's an excellent WorldNetDaily article by J.R. Nyquist which challenges the notion of patriarchy and male dominance that feminists often use to silence men. He discusses this in the context of the common "men are pigs" comment which few people bother to object to, but should. This is one of those topics that hits close to the center of the men's movement, and should be read by all.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/21/2047200.shtml

Teen Boys As 'Slackers'

Scott · 22 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In an article which is pretty demeaning to young men, Maggie Gallagher criticizes teen boys for not being eager to join the rat race, er, get summer jobs when they're young. She seems to think that educational summer camps and getting involved in the Arts is inappropriate for young men, and that they should all be slaving away at summer jobs instead. Why?: "Boys who can't be bothered to earn enough money for movies and some hot dogs haven't shown enough oomph to deserve your [daughter's] company." This is another of those not-so-subtle ways in which men are reduced to wallets and providers, starting from an early age.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/21/216258.shtml

The Myth Of Women's Moral Superiority

Scott · 23 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert submitted this story from The Age, an Australian media outlet. It discusses the recent statutory rape of a 15 year-old boy in a detention center by his 46 year-old female social worker. The verdict in the trail has been released: the woman was found not guilty. The author of the article talks about the "cult of the moral mother", and the myths about women as morally superior to men which probably influenced the judge's decision. She throws out some misleading DV statistics, but confronts the sexual abuse of children by women, even though she downplays the effects that female abuse of children have vs. men's abuse of children. Definitely not a pro-male article, but this is also a topic that few feminists would touch.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/23/0445210.shtml

Woman Accuses University Of Favoring Black Men

Scott · 23 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

A female professor from Florida A&M University is suing the school for discrimination, saying that black men are favored in faculty promotions. You can read the MSNBC article here. I found this interesting because affirmative action programs were originally intended to help minorities, and women were more or less added to the programs at the last minute. And it is women (typically white, middle-upper class women) who have benefited the most from AA programs, not minority men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/23/054239.shtml

The Male BC Pill In Five Years

Scott · 24 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

More news on the male birth control pill: it could be here in 5 years, according to this article, by The New Zealand Herald. The article gives more info about the pill and the researchers working on it, and takes a few jabs at men as liars. Apparently it's believed that most women won't trust a man who says he's "on the pill". Perhaps it's because deep down they know how often women have defrauded men into paternity by lying about birth control usage?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/24/0246242.shtml

Australian Prisons Overflowing With Women

Scott · 24 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Some more Aussie news: The Sydney Morning Herald reports in this article that New South Wales women's prisons are overflowing with women, and some Parliament members are calling for measures to be taken to stop women from being sent to prison. Fortunately, the government is not looking favorably on these suggestions, and is opposed to compromising justice standards. With a forty percent increase in female prisoners over the past six years, something's got to be done, but siphoning female criminals through hostel programs is certainly not fair to society. It's surprising to see how sympathetic the plight of women in this situation is portrayed, and contrast it to, for example, the situation of black men in American prisons.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/23/2054255.shtml

Boston Globe On The Rise Of DNA Paternity Testing

Scott · 24 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Boston Globe printed this article about the rise in DNA paternity testing and its social effects. The tone of the article is almost alarmist, suggesting that thousands of children are going to end up in poverty if men are given the choice to decline parenthood to children that aren't theirs. I think most women know who the real father of their child is or could be, so what's the problem? If mothers are dishonest about naming the father of the child, it should be they who are seen as responsible for ruining support for the child.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/24/1732234.shtml

Two Men Cleared Of Rape Charges; Evidence Doctored

Scott · 25 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Two men have been cleared of rape charges in a Massachusetts trial where it was discovered that tape recordings presented during the trial were fabricated. One of the 'vindicated' men was quoted as saying, "These allegations cost me my job and damaged my reputation. I have no faith in the legal system when an innocent guy can be put through all this." Welcome to the United States, where one is guilty until proven innocent, especially in cases such as this. The Taunton Daily Gazette printed the story here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/24/2249233.shtml

The Priorities Of Modern Fathers

Scott · 25 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Toronto Star printed a fairly pro-male story recently, redefining fatherhood. It talks about how fathers want to and are getting more involved in their children's lives, and how little support there is for fathers, particularly in social services. Mention is made of the positive effects that involved dads have on their children's lives, and quotes are included from father's groups in Canada and the U.S. It's a good read.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/25/0010246.shtml

Men Deserve To Live - Round 4

Scott · 26 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Yet another round of Ed Bartlett's "Men Deserve to Live" action alerts has been released from Men's Health America. Please join us in promoting men's health by working to get the Men's Health Act of 2000 passed. Click "Read More..." to learn more. THIS WEEK, WE'RE GONNA HIT THE MEDIA

OK, this is the week that I'd like you to call your local newspaper and suggest they run a story on men's health. (If you haven't written your letter yet, I am including a copy of the letter that Bill Fetzner of Wisconsin just wrote to his Representative. Feel free to adapt it your situation.)

So here's the secret to working with the media:

1. Pull together your thoughts and come up with a story idea on health. The best story idea is timely and has a local angle. If you can't think of a story, try this: the fact that the federal and state governments have loads of programs for women's health, but none for men's health.

2. Put together your "pitch." The pitch is what you're going to say to the reporter to convince him or her to do a story. The pitch should be concise, factual, and above all, interesting. Check out our Special Reports if you want to brush up on your facts.

3. Call your local newspaper. Ask the receptionist for the name of the health reporter. Speak to the reporter and give your pitch.

To help you out, we've put together a Press Kit. The Kit contains copies of men's articles that have run in the New York Times, USA Today, Washington Times, and elsewhere. The Press Kit is free, but you need to send us a flat envelope with 77 cents postage (that's three first class stamps). Send your SASE to:

Men's Health America

PO Box1404

Rockville, MD 20849

OK, let's rock!!!

Ed

Sample letter:

Hon. Tammy Baldwin

1020 Longworth House Office Bldg

Washington, DC 20515-4902

Re: HR4653, A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish an Office of Men's Health

Dear Rep. Baldwin:

According to your website and running through many of your public statements, you have a strong, abiding desire to be a strong proponent of health care for all. I trust, therefore, that if you were alerted to the fact that a major segment of our population is unnecessarily going without needed health care services, you would make a determined effort to do something about it.

There is a serious health care problem in our midst that a few are trying to resolve. This is a problem for men (and for the women in their lives), because too many men resist participating in their own health care for reasons that could be connected to false concepts of manliness, worries about costs, repressed fears, or something else. Why men trifle with their health we're not quite sure, but we are absolutely sure that such trifling translates into much higher death rates from cancer, heart disease and stroke for men compared to women. There is no reason that men should go on dying six years earlier than women in this country if men and women both used the health care system with the same diligence and frequency.

Government can help, and is being asked to help with a bill proposed by Rep. Duke Cunningham, that would set up an Office of Men's Health within DHHS. This modest measure would not take over for men or treat them as victims, which most men couldn't accept, but rather offer men new ways to act on their own behalf.

It's a made-to-order concept for ordinarily self-reliant men who would be inclined to take the right course if they had timely, reliable information and coordinated services. Can't you just hear the hallelujahs of women if the men in their lives were motivated to take better care of themselves?

And that's where you come in. As a woman and a recognized crusader for better health care for all our citizens, who would be a better person to co-sponsor a bill to protect men's lives? And in an election year when the male vote is now being watched with the same intensity as the female vote was a few years ago, stepping up to the plate for men would not be a bad thing. Bashing men is out of style; helping men help themselves is a solution that both sexes admire. What better way to walk the walk on health care than to back HR4653?

Please give it your deepest consideration. I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Bill Fetzner

Ed Bartlett is the senior policy advisor for Men's Health America, which does research, education, and advocacy on behalf of men's health.

To subscribe to Ed's e-mail list, mensheath, create an account at egroups.com and subscribe to the menshealth list. Ed will be sending out his action alerts via the list, which is very low traffic.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/25/133201.shtml

Fred Drop-Kicks Feminism

Scott · 26 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Fred comes out with guns blazing in his recent column from FredOnEverything. He gives a pretty scathing critique of feminism and the notion that boys are "dumber" than girls. To do the latter, he looks at the highest acheivers on standardized tests and finds that they are overwhelmingly male. This is indeed true, but I hope it won't overshadow the fact that the average boy (that is, most of them) is in need of a lot of help in school. His writing is pretty brazen, and I was a bit hesitant to post it to this site. However, I'm sure it will be of interest to some readers, but be warned: Fred is very conservative philosophically and politically.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/25/194217.shtml

Leo Takes On Anti-Male Bias

Scott · 26 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Imo Bethere submitted this link to John Leo's latest Town Hall column, and writes, "Please read this entire article. The anti male stuff is such an ingrained part of our culture that few seem to question it. Good to see a conservative columnist exposing this travesty." I agree. Leo's a great asset to the men's movement, despite the fact that he doesn't seem keen on men's rights groups. He introduces a lot of people to the issues we work on, many who might not receive exposure to them otherwise. Update: an anonymous user sent in this link, from a 1998 issue of USNews. It's the exact same article. Interesting...

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/25/1842249.shtml

Statistics Canada Releases DV Report

Scott · 27 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

A new study done by Statistics Canada was released yesterday, showing that men and women were abused at about equal rates for several kinds of violence. Canadian women's groups are up in arms about this, of course, and The Toronto Star printed this article which outlines the study's findings and the complaints of many feminists who obviously feel threatened to let go of any part of their "victim status". The report shows violence against women has been declining significantly, at a much higher rate than violence against men has been declining. Peter Dudley submitted the primary source for the study here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/27/0153237.shtml

Censorship Of Men's Issues At Univ. Of New South Wales

Scott · 27 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An anonymous reader sent in the following media release from the Student Guild Council at the University of New South Wales, Australia. It outlines a proposal for a 'men's issue' of the magazine Tharunka, and outlines in explicit detail that "white, heterosexual male" perspectives are not considered legitimate for the publication. Read on for more details... Update: I have received a response and have updated information on the comment board.On Tuesday the 18th July 2000, the Student Guild Council passed the following motion, banning Tharunka from producing an up coming "men's issue" that would have dealt with the issues of men in present society, including health, suicides rates, imprisonment rates and men's attitudes to feminism:

"Guild Council condemns any proposal to produce a men's edition or "white heterosexual male" edition of Tharunka. Accordingly Guild Council directs the Media Directors/Tharunka Editors not to produce any such editions or publish material which contravenes general Guild policy (eg K9.4), or Anti Discrimination Legislation, or, which undermines the purpose of women's, lesbian/gay, indigenous or ethnic students' departments."

The edition was planned as a male version of the "Blue Stocking (Women's) Edition" but the Women's Department of the Guild and other council members felt that an edition of Tharunka dealing specifically with men's issue would be considered discriminatory. However, Council also passed a motion at that same meeting which enforces the publication of a Women's Edition of Tharunka.
Voting editor Marta Jary was unable to attend the council meeting due to illness and thus Tharunka itself did not have the opportunity to enter a vote in the decision.

Note: the information printed here previously was incorrect. If you want to contact the people responsible for this decision, please e-mail the Contact Officer for the Student Guild Council of the University of NSW: contactlo@guild.unsw.edu.au The staff of Tharunka is in support of the men's edition, but is being threatened by the Student Guild Council.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/24/129226.shtml

Opinion Article On 'Deadbeat Dads'

Scott · 27 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Although a bit old, this opinion article from the Denver Post makes some good points about the way the 'deadbeat dad' frenzy has little basis in fact. He refers to the recent Massachusetts child custody ruling that alternates the custody schedule for each parent every year, and mentions something I was unaware of - that hunting and fishing licenses are now being revoked for being in arrears on child support in some states.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/27/0430255.shtml

Changes To British Rape Laws

Scott · 27 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ace submitted this link to a UK Times article outlining changes to UK rape laws. The most disturbing change is that by default any woman who is intoxicated would not be able to give consent. I think there is a big difference between forcing a person to have sex and having a few drinks with someone and then mutually deciding to have sex. In fact, the latter is quite a popular past time among both men and women! But here's a thought: if both parties are intoxicated and the woman files a rape charge, why shouldn't the man be able to as well?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/27/154253.shtml

Interview With Christina Hoff-Sommers

Scott · 28 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

BookPage is featuring an interview with Christina Hoff-Sommers, author of the new book The War Against Boys. It's not a strict Q+A format, but the interviewer includes several direct quotes from a phone conversation she had with Sommers. It includes suggestions to how to be an advocate for your son(s) in school and I particularly liked the quote: "If you are a mother of sons, as I am, you know that one of the more agreeable facts of life is that boys will be boys."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/27/0438224.shtml

Aberystwyth Rape Trial Over: Not Guilty

Scott · 28 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Last week I reported on the shaky rape allegations made against a former student of Aberystwyth University in Britain. His trial is now over, and he was found not guilty after the jury deliberated for 41 minutes. This UK Telegraph article (courtesy of IHF) gives details of the acquittal and the disturbances that this young man had to deal with by being accused of such a serious crime.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/28/1628225.shtml

No News This Weekend

Scott · 29 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I'm going away for the weekend, and I wasn't able to find any stories to queue up to have posted over this weekend, so this site will remain as it is until Sunday afternoon/evening. See you then!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/29/1537213.shtml

The Horror Of Being Falsely Accused

Scott · 30 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

krob4399 writes "A man in his mid-forties sent this to me and consented to submit this horror story without revealing his identity since, at this time he has not been charged with any crime. I know the man very well and I am sure he is falsely accused." Click Read More for the story. It's truly a nightmare situation.To give some background on the situation, my ex is from the Philippines. She and my son were evacuated out of there when the volcano erupted in 1991. After being in the US for a little over a year, I was sent on temporary duty to Kenya for 90 days. Later I found out that she had a lover. That lasted until about a year and a half after we divorced. About six months after returning from Kenya, I was sent to Saudi Arabia. I found out that she had moved her lover into our house, and he stayed there until the day I returned. In November 1994, the divorce was granted and in the settlement, I was awarded custody of my children, a boy, age ten and a girl, age eight.

Before the divorce, my ex was into drugs. The OSI in Abilene brought her in for questioning concerning her involvement in drugs. Her lover's first Sargent informed me that her lover was considered an alcoholic, and he was denied reenlistment in the Air Force. He got out of the military, and after the divorce, my ex joined him. At the time, I had eleven months until my retirement. About 5 months later, I let my ex have my daughter until the end of the summer with my son joining them when school was out. Before school started, my ex returned the children and I found out that they had been living in a transient hotel in a single room. They had told both kids to call her lover, "Daddy". Later, I allowed her to move back in because the kids, especially my daughter begged me to. After she moved in with me, she got a job as a topless dancer, saying she wanted to catch up on her child support. I lost all feelings that I ever had for her. She never paid a dime and as of this month, I believe she owes over $14,000. She only pays $200 a month. Several months after I let her move back the last time, I began to get many calls and when I answered they would hang up. My son and babysitter started telling me she was going to eat lunch with her lovers and taking my daughter with her. My babysitter also told me my daughter had told her that her mother had told her to lie to me about where they were going. I finally started taping my phone lines and found out that she was going over to a man's house after work. I listened to the tape early one Saturday morning and then began packing her belongings. I had her out of the house by noon that day. I had told her when she moved in that I would not put up with her seeing other men or for her using drugs. I found out that she was using cocaine and grass which I believe she obtained from the women she worked with. She moved into a transient hotel and then into an apartment.

About six months after leaving, she moved in with still another man. The last I heard she was to be married in July 2000. After my kids were moved to New Mexico by my parents, they have told me things that the children told them. Some of them were that my daughter slept with her Mom and her lovers, and when they would go shopping, my ex would tell my little girl to watch guys when they walked by so she could see them checking her butt out. My ex has also told my son that she would do anything to get her children back. My parents and I agreed that we would hide nothing from the children, so when I was arrested, the kids were told. My dad was so scared that my son was going to have a nervous break down because my son started shaking and crying hysterically and my daughter said in a very calm voice, "Well, mommy will not have to pay her child support now".

Since the divorce, I have not dated much. The main reason is that both kids would become very upset if they thought I was going out on or going on a date but they do not mind their mother dating. The only time I would go out was when the ex would have the children.

I have made the kids my whole life. Both kids have a feeling that if I go somewhere that I will not come back and that I will abandon them like their mother practically has done. I may not have been the model father but I am a good father to them. I did no drinking in front of the kids. Our street is only one block long and the kids were allowed to play on either side of the street but were not allowed in other peoples houses and their friends were not allowed in ours. They could not go into their friends' back yards unless they came and asked me first. Until this started, I thought I was my children's best friend. They would tell me their dreams, what they had done that day, and would draw pictures for me all the time. They did not tell me a lot that happened at their mothers house since they were afraid I would not let them see her because of what they said she was doing. There was no set visitation in the divorce decree; it only said was that visitation would have to be agreed on by the both of us. The judge did this to give me a little control of the situation so the kids would not get hurt. Since the divorce, my ex has repeatedly said that I stole her children even though she never took the trouble to show up for the divorce court.

I need to say one thing about my daughter. It is that with her mother coming and going in her life, she craves attention from all adult women. Until she was in first grade, she would call all women that paid her attention, 'mommy', whether it was a teacher, babysitter, or even her grandmother. On 2 April 2000, I had to go to Lackland AFB,

Texas for a class in hazardous cargo training that lasted two weeks. I asked my mother if she would come to town and watch the children while I was away. When I got back to the Dallas/ Ft. Worth area on 14 April 2000, I took a taxi home from the airport and my father met me at home.
He informed me that three days after I left, my daughter had told my mother who was baby sitting her, that I had been having full sexual intercourse vaginally, anally, and orally with her. She took my mother into my room and showed her a nylon briefcase that had some sex toys in it. One of them was a dildo that was bought for my wife as a joke. It was 8 inches by 2 inch big and it was lying on the closet floor in front of the door. The bag was setting just inside of the open door. The last time I had seen it was a year and a half to two years before. I threw the case in the closet in the corner on some boxes and later set some bags on top of it and that was the last time I saw it. My dad came to town a few days later and they talked about this and they decided to take my daughter to the family doctor. They did not tell the doctor anything, except that they thought she was having female problems. He sent them to a gynecologist who walked in, saw her, turned around and told them she was too young to be checked. Dad got upset took her to the emergency room and my daughter told the doctor the story so the doctor called the police and they, in turn, called the Child Protection Services (CPS).

When I got home that night, dad told me that they had just gotten home from Cooks Children's Hospital where my daughter was examined. I was told that she had no cuts, tears, scaring, and her hymen was still intact. The female doctor that made the examination said there was no physical signs that my daughter was assaulted. The doctor, who is 30 something years old, also said my daughter knew more about sex than she does. Dad then told me that the police wanted me to make an appointment with the CPS first thing Monday morning 17 April 2000 or they would put a warrant out for my arrest. All weekend I had less than 2 hours sleep. Monday morning I made an appointment for ten AM where the lady that interviewed me, informed me about the accusations against me. She asked me a few questions. Some that I remember is, did I have cable or a satellite TV. I told her no but I think their mother did. Did I let the kids on the web, I said yes but I monitor where they went on it. My son was on sites where he could play games, and my daughter was on the Barbie sites. When I said I had never touched my daughter inappropriately at any time, the CPS lady called me a liar and told me to tell the truth, admit it and not drag my daughter through this. She then tried to tell me that my son confirmed it, saying that whenever I went into her room at night she would sometimes cry. I told her yes, sometimes she did, but the reason was that my ex wife would promise to pick them up from school and then, too late, she would call at 5-6 in the afternoon and cancel. I told the CPS lady that my daughter would cry after the call, but sometimes she would hold it back and would cry after she went to bed. I would go into her room and console her. Sometimes she would not start crying until after I came in to kiss her good night and to ask her if she was ok. I told the CPS lady that I would lay down beside my daughter, and try to calm her. Sometimes it would get late and since I could not hear the alarm clock from her room I would take her to my room because I was afraid I would go to sleep and be late for work. I have surely forgotten most of the questions that I was asked because I was so tired at that time. I told the CPS lady that I had taken care of both children ever since we got back to the US and that when I changed diapers, I was very uncomfortable in doing it. That was because in cleaning the girl after she soiled her diapers, it made me feel like I was abusing her. I told her that most men that I had talked to felt the same way. When my daughter she was sick and had to be given a suppository for throwing up, I had to go get the baby sitter to do it because I could not do it. I told the CPS lady she should check with the baby sitter and see how I treated my daughter. I told the CPS lady that I had gone through the same basic thing with my son.

I told the CPS lady that the only time that I had seen my daughter without any panties on since then was last year. I had been working on the computer after work and the kids were in the front yard. My daughter came in crying that she had fallen and hurt her lower belly. I pulled her in to my lap, held her, hugged her and kissed her. She stopped crying, jumped down and went out and played. Later, after she took a bath I sent her to bed. I had changed into some gym shorts to wear to the bathroom and when I went past her room she was crying. I opened the door and asked if she was ok. She was holding the upper part of her crotch and cried that it hurt. I walked over, removed her hand and she had a large red spot on her lower belly, about half an inch above her crotch. I left the room and went to the kitchen to fill a towel with ice to place on the bruise. I then went to the living room and watched TV for a half-hour or so, then went and checked on her. She had pulled the ice pack away because she said it was cold. I made her put it back and went back to the living room. After another half-hour, I removed the ice pack and asked her how she felt. She said "All better daddy" so I dried her off, kissed her goodnight, then took my own bath. The next morning she acted like it never happened and she never complained about it again.

The CPS lady then asked why any father would require his daughter to not wear panties. I explained that several months later my parents were visiting and my daughter developed a high fever. It was on a weekend so we took here to the emergency room. After the examination the doctor said she had a kidney infection and bladder infection. The doctor thought it was because she was not keeping herself clean enough. After they broke her fever they released her to go home. The doctor recommended that we watch her more carefully and said that we might keep her from wearing panties at night to let her breath and help keep the bacteria down. After we got home we sent her in to take a bath and grand ma went to check on her while she dressed for bed. When my mother walked in, she caught my daughter putting on her old panties, so after we got her to bed we talked it over and decided to take the doctors advice. I never thought about it after because it seemed to work and she did not develop any more infections. All the CPS lady did was sniff and asked if I was sure my mother was there when I made the decision, I told her she was just out side the door and she could ask her but she just ignored me. I told the CPS lady that my baby sitter was in my house at all different times of the day and night and if I had been doing any thing with my daughter she would have caught me. I told her that the baby sitter was the type of person that your house was her house and hers was yours. I told her I was not in the habit of locking my doors and the baby sitter would walk right in, and when the baby sitter was having marriage trouble, she would walk right in at any time of the day and night. I told her I had nothing to admit to and that I was innocent.

She asked if my daughter looked like her mother and I told her that her mother was oriental and my daughter was half. I said "Yes, but she looked like me too". The CPS lady told me she did not believe me and that I was still in love with my ex-wife and was projecting her on to my daughter. I told her that I was not, that I knew the difference between a 28-year-old and an 8-year-old. She then told me to go to the waiting room because she had to go talk to her supervisor about putting the kids in foster homes. About thirty minutes later she came back and said I had two choices: let her put the kids in foster care or let my parents take them to New Mexico, so I sent them home with my parents. I signed a statement giving my parents temporary custody, for medical reasons and for school. To say goodbye to the children, I had to go back to the Child Protective Services. After saying goodbye, the police wanted to interview me. I was introduced to a female officer who conducted the interview. I told them the same basic story, that I did nothing to my daughter and that I agreed with them that she had too much knowledge of sex for a child her age but the knowledge did not come from me or from my home. I also told them that I had no way of proving this, and I did not keep a twenty-four hour a day, seven days a week video of what happened in my house. The officer said that I seemed to be a nice man and a good father, but every one makes mistakes and I needed to admit mine so she could get me help. I told her that I had done nothing to admit and I had done nothing, but love my kids. The female police officer asked me if I would take a lie detector test. At first I said yes but when she asked me again if I was willing, I told her I would like to ask a lawyer about it first. She said I could go but not to leave the area. I contacted a lawyer and asked him about the lie detector and he said that it was my decision, but if I took it and failed it I would be arrested. If I took it and it came up inconclusive I would be arrested. If I declined it I was going to be arrested, and if I passed it, I would be arrested. So if I was going to be arrested anyway, why give them any ammunition to hurt me with. So I declined taking it. They waited until the eighth day of June to arrest me. I was told that my case would be going to a grand jury within four to six weeks and it is now the twenty-sixth of July and I am still waiting. Since the interview with Child Protection Services and the police, neither has contacted my babysitter, my neighbors or anyone that has had any contact with my children other than family and me.

Child Protection Services and the police only took statements from my parents, my ex wife, and me. When my parents first got the children to their home in New Mexico, they took them to the local Physicians Assistant (PA) since no doctor practices there, to make sure they were in good health. My daughter told the PA the same story that I had been abusing her. Three weeks ago my mother had to take my daughter in for a bladder infection and the PA asked her twice in different forms of the same question if any one had ever touched my daughter down there. In both cases Mother said NO without hesitation. Can you imagine the mental turmoil and depression all this has unnecessarily caused me?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/30/1934243.shtml

British Government Pushes For More Rape Convictions

Scott · 30 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF highlighted a Guardian Observer story about the current status of rape convictions in Britain. Last year close to 8,500 rape cases were reported, but only 634 were carried through to conviction. From the article: "The Home Office has now demanded action from the Crown Prosecution Service and the police to push up the low figure. Campaigning groups say Britain should learn from America, where the use of special advocates who support women through the courts has pushed conviction rates above 50 per cent in Washington and New York states." If Britain is going to "learn from America" with rape procsecution, what that really means is that they're going to start securing convictions without evidence and making people guilty until proven innocent. This is disturbing news.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/30/1927235.shtml

NCFM E-Zine Gazette, Vol 15

Scott · 31 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The National Coalition of Free Men recently sent out its latest E-Zine, and you can read it by clicking on "Read More". E-mail subscription info to the E-Zine is also included. NCFM is a non-profit educational organization that examines the way sex discrimination affects men. It also tries to raise public consciousness about little known, but important, topics dealing with the male experience.

NCFM E-Zine Gazette

Editor Richard Kroeger

August 2000, Vol 15, No. 1

Welcome to the NCFM E-Zine Gazette.

We are the monthly email newsletter of the National Coalition of Free Men (NCFM).

Visit: http://www.ncfm.org/

This month's issue contains:

1. FATHER TO BE ALLOWED TO VISIT CHILDREN HELD IN GERMANY

2. BREAST CANCER STAMP MAY LOSE APPROVAL

3. CALIFORNIA INMATES TO BE OFFERED DNA TESTS

4. VIRGINA MAN TO GET DNA TESTING AFTER 17 YEARS BEHIND BARS

5. SUPREME COURT RULING COULD SWAMP COURTS WITH SENTENCING APPEALS

6. SEXUAL HARASMENT AWARD UPHELD FOLLOWING APPEAL

7. GENDER PAY GAP SHRINKS

8. QUEEN ELIZABETH SLIPS TO 19TH RICHEST WOMEN

9. CHICAGO SCHOOLS BAR SEXUAL ABSTINENCE ADVOCACY GROUP

Special Feature

1. THE REALITIES OF DIVORCE

Public Service

 The News **

FATHER TO BE ALLOWED TO VISIT CHILDREN HELD IN GERMANY

Reversing an earlier decision, German officials are arranging for an American father to visit with his children. Joseph Cooke's children were taken to Germany six years ago by his ex-wife, Christiane, on what was supposed to be a 2-week vacation. Christiane turned the children over to German authorities before checking herself into a mental hospital, who, in turn, placed the children in foster care without Joseph's knowledge (NCFM EZine Gazette, Vol. 14, July 2000). Joseph has not been able to visit Germany because, under German law, he has failed to pay child support to the foster family. The children's grandmother, Patricia Cooke was recently denied visitation because the family had spoke with the press concerning their situation. This case has become a source of friction between U.S. and German leaders, and was subject of discussion between President Clinton and Chancellor Schroeder last May.

German authorities are providing counseling to prepare the children for their father's visit. It is not clear when or if Joseph will be able to take his children back to the U.S. The only statement reported from German authorities is, "Mr. Cooke has the right of access." Another official also noted "Nothing concerning access and custody is ever final."

27 July 2000, The Washington Post

BREAST CANCER STAMP MAY LOSE APPROVAL

Reauthorization of a special postage stamp known as the "semipostal," is in jeopardy because of a congressional dispute over what causes the government should use the mail to endorse. The special stamp includes a voluntary 7-cent surcharge over the normal first class mail rate, which is donated to breast cancer research. The semipostal has already raised $15 million. Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-NJ, wants to introduce a semipostal for fundraising to support a World War II memorial on the Washington Mall. Women's activists such as Betsy Mullen, founder of the Women's Information Network Against Breast Cancer, are upset that the dispute is jeopardizing one source of funding for breast cancer research. Currently, there is no discussion in Congress concerning other causes such as prostate cancer research that the semipostal could also be used to support.

25 July 2000, USA Today

///--Sponsor Message--\\\

I'd like to announce a new web site devoted to tracking news on men's issues, The Men's Activism News Network. Check it out at:

http://www.mensactivism.org

It's updated daily with news stories related to men's rights issues, and also includes feature articles, book reviews, and interviews with important figures in the men's movement. Please stop by and see what it's all about - I hope it will be a useful resource to men's rights activists worldwide.
- Thanks! Scott Garman, Site Admin: sgarman@iname.com

\\\--End of Sponsor Message--///

CALIFORNIA INMATES TO BE OFFERED DNA TESTS

Prosecutors plan to take the unprecedented step of offering free DNA tests to some inmates in San Diego and some other Southern California counties. The tests results may potentially overturn convictions, a prospect that most prosecutors and judges traditionally avoid. Most states have rules that block the introduction of new evidence shortly after a conviction is handed down (21 days in Virginia). Some prosecutors in California are now open to the idea, in part because they say the tests will disprove many claims of wrongful prosecution. San Diego officials are reviewing the cases of 560 inmates convicted before 1992 to determine which might qualify for this program. Officials have reviewed more than 40 cases so far and have found none that qualify. Part of the problem is that old evidence from sex crimes has been destroyed as a matter of routine police procedure. The tests cost $5000 to conduct (the cost of incarcerating a prisoner for a year is about 10 times higher).

26 July 2000, USA Today

Editors note: Wait until the outcome of this program is completed before praising it. It is important that everyone who has a reasonable case for exoneration should be permitted to participate. Nothing has happened so far.

VIRGINA MAN TO GET DNA TESTING AFTER 17 YEARS BEHIND BARS

Virginia Gov. James Gilmore III ordered DNA tests to determine whether a retarded man who was sent to prison in 1983 had committed rape and murder. Earl Washington Jr. was sentenced to death for a 1982 rape and murder of Rebecca Williams after he confessed, but then Gov. Douglas Wilder commuted his sentence to life in prison amid doubts about his guilt. DNA testing of fluids from Williams body in 1993 (10 years later) found DNA that did not belong to either Washington or Williams' husband.

Virginia officials generally fight against post-conviction DNA tests, going so far as to destroy evidence after the conviction is made. This was the case for Joseph Roger O'Dell who was executed in 1997 for capital murder. O'Dell's supporters seek to prove posthumously that he was also innocent.

2 June 2000, The Washington Post

SUPREME COURT RULING COULD SWAMP COURTS WITH SENTENCING APPEALS

The U.S. Supreme Court struck down a New Jersey hate crimes law that increased prison time for conduct, even though a jury did not consider that conduct. The U.S. appeals court ruled on 26 June that applies to thousands of federal drug cases, and that dozens of other state and federal statutes may be unconstitutional. The court ruled that the Sixth Amendment bars judges from going above the statutory maximum sentence by using extra evidence, such as motive, weapon used, or volume of drugs sold, unless these facts were part of the criminal indictment and were voted on by a jury.

23 July 2000, The Washington Post

Editors note: presumably this might impact sentencing for other federal crimes.

///--Sponsor Message--\\\

YOU CAN USE THIS SPACE TO ADVERTISE YOUR WEB SITE OR SERVICE

\\\--End of Sponsor Message--///

SEXUAL HARASMENT AWARD UPHELD FOLLOWING APPEAL

Maryland's highest court ruled that a Prince George's County man who allegedly promised a co-worker a job promotion in exchange for sex, was soliciting prostitution. The woman was later fired, reportedly for cursing a client of the company where they worked. The decision upholds a $22,240 judgment for the victim, but more significantly, provides an alternative legal route for filing a workplace discrimination lawsuit. Prior to this ruling, plaintiff had to file a federal discrimination claim. Under the new ruling, a wrongful termination suit can be a valid alternative to filing a claim with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). The case was appealed to the Maryland high court because it was "a back door attempt to circumvent the legitimate process" according to Insignia, the company where they both worked.

In general terms, workers who are fired for refusing to commit a crime, in this case prostitution, should be able to file suit, even if federal anti-discrimination laws also apply to the case. Judge Dale R. Cathell of the high court expressed a dissenting opinion to the ruling. He argued that his colleagues had stretched the definition of prostitution so far that "a person requesting sexual activity, promising marriage, or any number of other things in return, is soliciting prostitution."

25 July 2000, The Washington Post

///--Sponsor Message--\\\

Go to: http://www.iGive.com/html/ssi.cfm?cid=1109

Cut and paste this URL into your browser. It belongs to iGive and you will land on a page that has our name, NCFM. Join and click on a few ad banners. We earn money if you do this. And --- you don't have to buy anything.

\\\--End of Sponsor Message--///

GENDER PAY GAP SHRINKS

The salary gap is closing in academia, science, and advertising, according to Working Woman magazine. The statistic used is generally a simple average of all people in a field or profession. Female instructors at the doctoral level earn 94 cents to the dollar, compared to their male counterparts. Female media directors earn 90 cents to the dollar. Women chief executives of mid-size ad firms earn $10,000 more than their male counterparts. Women run 9.1 million companies in the U.S., employ 27 million people, and earn $3.6 trillion in sales per year, according to the National Foundation for Women Business Owners.

24 July 2000, Christian Science Monitor

But... female anchors earn 28% less than male anchors on local TV in Los Angeles, according to the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists. The disparity is greater on the radio, where 15 of 19 local radio stations have a single male anchor in the drive-time slots when most commuters are tuning in. Research on television news viewing habits suggests that gender plays no significant role in building an audience according to David L. Smith, president of a survey research firm, with most stations concluding that a male/female co-anchor team works best.

1 June 2000, Los Angles Times

Editors note: local stations in the DC area are increasingly using two female anchors. It is common for the weather and sports reporters to also be female. There are no stations in this area with a single male anchor, or with two male anchors. The NCFM EZine Gazette would be interested in knowing what the situation is like in your city. Take notes and tell us what is happening.

QUEEN ELIZABETH SLIPS TO 19TH RICHEST WOMEN

The world's richest woman is Helen Walton, the 81-year-old wife of Sam Walton who founded Wal-Mart. Her fortune is estimated at $40 billion. Number two falls to France's Liliane Betancourt, 74, who's father founded L'Oreal cosmetics. She is worth $14 billion. According to EuroBusiness magazine, 38 percent of all businesses in the U.S. are owned by women, compared to 60 to 65 percent in Germany.

Queen Elizabeth's fortune is estimated at just under $3 billion. Of course, the Queen doesn't actually own Windsor castle, nor does she pay for its upkeep. The queenship still has its perks.

10 July 2000, CNN.com

Editors comment: it is not clear what "a business is owned by women" actually means. Most large companies such as ATT or Exxon are owned by stock holders. It is not obvious that the statistic "38 percent of U.S. businesses are owned by women" implies that the other 62 percent are owned by men. The NCFM EZine Gazette invites reader comments to expand on this question.

CHICAGO SCHOOLS BAR SEXUAL ABSTINENCE ADVOCACY GROUP

A group advocating sexual abstinence has been barred from Chicago public schools after administrators found the group had presented a controversial curriculum in sex education classrooms without proper approval. The group, Pure Love Alliance (PLA), says it has presented its abstinence program in 61 Chicago schools, as well as schools in Miami, Los Angeles, and Alabama. Rev. Jesse L. Jackson's Rainbow/PUSH Coalition have criticized the program as being based on an unsound curriculum, and targeting black communities with a message of "fear and shame." The PLA is affiliated with the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church. Reasons given for baring the group range from separation of church and state, to statements by the American Medical Association (AMA) and the World Health Organization (WHO) that claim programs founded on abstinence-only are of limited value.

21 July 2000, The Washington Post

Editors comment: in short, the Chicago school board has chosen to shield its children from competing ideas, even when those ideas are easily defended and in line with the wishes of most parents. The idea that children can and will decide for themselves seems to escape the AMA and the WHO. It is not at all clear that this makes our children stronger or smarter when faced with making a sexual decision.

 Special Feature **

THE REALITIES OF DIVORCE

Synopsizing a story by John Tierney: Which sex is mostly to blame for divorce? Conservative preachers and liberal feminists are united in their disdain for philandering men who abandon their children. Journalists and politicians (self) righteously condemn "deadbeat dads." The fact remains -- women initiate two thirds of divorce actions. Why?

Domestic violence is a cause, but only 6 percent of divorces in Virginia cited this as the reason. Husbands and wives were cited for adultery in approximately equal numbers. Dr. Margaret Brinig of the University of Iowa states that less than 20 percent of the cases are because women feel they've been exploited.

The answer appears to be child custody. Women are much more willing to split up because -- unlike men -- have no fear of losing custody of the children. Instead, a divorce enables them to gain control over the children. Dr. Brinig asserts, "Children are the most important asset in a marriage, and the partner who expects to get sole custody is by far the most likely to file for divorce."

Most states usually grant sole custody to the mother if she wants it. A few states (e.g. West Virginia) have recently begun to make joint custody the presumptive norm. Dr. Brinig observes that this change seems to be keeping more couples together. She also notes that when couples do divorce, fathers who share custody are less likely to renege on their child-support payments.

West Virginia typically awards each parent a share of custody according to how much time that parent spent with the child during the marriage. Dr Brinig suggests, "Custody is now a way for women to achieve a real show of force over men. If you remove that distortion, it's apt to change the way men and women relate to each other and to their kids. Fathers are likely to spend more time with kids if they can expect to still see them if the marriage doesn't work out. Women will be more likely to see men as parenting partners, and less likely to use divorce as a power play."

11 July 2000, The New York Times

 Public Service **

Are you sponsoring a public speaker, gathering or news event? The NCFM EZine Gazette would like to help you spread the word. Our direct circulation is over 380 and growing. Many more visit our archives.

We will run a plug for your event for no charge, provided the event is free to the public. Otherwise, please contact us and consider taking out an ad at our low rates.

We are here to help you. Your participation helps us grow.

SEND US YOUR STORIES

The E-Zine Gazette is compiling a list of stories that document double standards in the American justice system. We plan to compile these stories into a concise and open-minded analysis to help illustrate the problem, and to provide you with the information you need to understand it.

Please send clipping to the NCFM address given below, along with which paper and the date that it appeared. Alternately, please send the complete text and reference to:

NCFM-gazette@ncfm-dc.org

Please note -- most newspapers charge a small fee to use their archives. Please send us the original text if possible rather than a link to where the article first appeared.

Thank you for your help!

This concludes this month's installment of the NCFM E-Zine Gazette. Thank you for your time! If you have a moment, please forward this newsletter on to one of your friends or co-workers who may be interested.

See you again next month!

Richard Kroeger, Editor

Advertise in the NCFM E-Zine Gazette: ncfm@ncfm.org

Send suggestions and comments to:

Editor

Please email us news articles from your local papers, or mail newspaper clippings to:

NCFM E-Zine Gazette, PO Box 129, Manhasset, NY 11030

it is important to include a complete reference to all contributed material.

Online Archives of the NCFM E-Zine Gazette are available at

http://ncfm-dc.org/ezine/

Our subscription list is composed of those who have contacted the NCFM or have otherwise subscribed directly to this newsletter. You can have yourself added or removed from our subscription list by following the simple instructions below. We apologize if you have received this message in error and do not wish to subscribe.

To subscribe, send email to and
put "subscribe" in the subject field and nothing else.

Please leave the body of the email message blank.

To unsubscribe, send email to and
put "unsubscribe" in the subject field and nothing else.
Please leave the body of the email message blank.

The NCFM E-Zine Gazette is (c) 1999 National Coalition of Free Men. All Rights Reserved. No part of this newsletter may be reproduced in whole or in part without proper credit to this publication including the URL: http://www.ncfm.org.

NCFM Electronic Network

National Coalition of Free Men

E-Mail: ncfm@ncfm.org

World Wide Web: http://www.ncfm.org

Office: (516) 482-6378

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/31/132207.shtml

National Post Interview With William Pollack

Scott · 31 July 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The National Post printed this story which is an interview with William Pollack, author of Real Boys. I haven't heard much about Pollack lately, and this interview isn't exactly flattering toward him. I think this quote kind of sums up his views: "Women have the right to be angry...and it may still be a man's world. But it's not a boy's world, and it never was one." I have mixed feelings about this, but still wholeheartedly support Pollack for getting the media interested in boy's issues.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/31/188239.shtml

News From Readers

Scott · 1 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I have received a few requests from readers to post information here, so here they are:

Joe Dunbar is doing some work to help fathers in the Massachusetts court system. If you're from that area and have ever been treated unfairly by attorney and GAL Vicki L. Shemin or Judge Judith N. Dilday, please contact Joe at joewdunbar@hotmail.com. Documented cases of fee disputes or irrational custody recommendations by Shemin would be of particular interest.

Rich Zubaty wrote in to announce a new pro-male book he's about to release, What Men Know That Women Don't. He has a pre-publication edition which is downloadable from this site for a cost of $4. This rate will increase to $24 once the print edition is released, so you might want to check it out now.

Dr. Charles Corry also wanted to warn readers that there are plans to change domestic violence laws in California and Oregon so that both parties are arrested when a 911 call for domestic violence is made. This is not really good news; click Read More below to read his notice and find out why.
E-mail Notice From Dr. Charles E. Corry:

I have heard now from men in both California and Oregon that there are plans to amend the domestic violence laws requiring mandatory arrest to include both parties when 911 is called.
I would presume this idea is in response to the obvious injustice perpetrated by "primary aggressor" laws that virtually mandate arresting the male in family violence situations. One suspects a hidden agenda as well.

My sources relate that this idea is being put forth by the local shelters for abused women in their areas. It seems unlikely then that such a proposal has sprouted independently. I have not yet confirmed that this idea has spread to Colorado but it seems likely.

If both parties are arrested then it is evident that any children present will be taken into foster care. It is worth noting that in El Paso County, Colorado, once children are taken into foster care by DHS the parents have a roughly 25% chance of ever getting their children back. Other counties in Colorado probably have similar numbers.

The radical feminist agenda has long advocated the destruction of families in order to free women (see "Why feminists and N.O.W. concern us" at http://www.dvmen.org/dv-13.htm#pgfId-1054798). For example, the statement by Dr. Mary Jo Bane (feminist and assistant professor of education at Wellesley College, and assoc. dir. of the school's Center for Res. on Woman) that: "In order to raise children with equality, we must take them away from families and communally raise them." Or, if you have a strong stomach, read the S.C.U.M. (Soc. for Cutting Up Men) manifesto by Valerie Solanas posted on a Sweet Briar College site at http://gos.sbc.edu/s/solanas.html Many other references are available but it appears certain that the idea of arresting both parties in a domestic dispute is in line with the radical feminist agenda for the destruction of families.

The booming foster care industry in Colorado, and likely elsewhere, would also be enthusiastic supporters of such law.

I do not presently know whether the idea of arresting both parties has crept into VAWA II at the Federal level. Some feedback there would be helpful.

While I strongly advocate the modification of the current domestic violence and abuse laws in order to fix the problem not the blame, the idea of arresting both parties in a family dispute will only hasten the destruction of families and tear more children away from both parents.

The further destruction of families is not an objective any civilized person should favor.

Chuck Corry

You can reach Dr. Corry at the following e-mail address: ccorry@pcisys.net

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/01/1234241.shtml

Pro-Boy Article In CS Monitor

Scott · 1 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

There was a good article in today's Christian Science Monitor which raises awareness of the needs of young boys in education. Both William Pollack and Christina Hoff-Sommers were quoted, and the article was in-depth and informative. It can be found by clicking here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/01/1458233.shtml

Exposing Double Standards In DV Awareness

Scott · 2 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ever wonder why when you bring up the high prevalence of domestic violence perpetrated against men, you get shrugged off? The National Post printed this article that exposes the double standards that work against men when trying to get recognition about domestic violence. A superb analogy is made with the issue of suicide, one that I'll remember for quite some time. Read it for some good strategies to show how callous and selfish it is for someone to say, "violence against women is more severe and prevalent, so violence against men isn't as important."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/02/1410254.shtml

Pardon Requested For Rape Convict Based On New Evidence

Scott · 2 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

ABCnews reported in this story that a Texas man who has already served 10 years of a 99 year sentence for the rape of a sixteen year old girl may be pardoned based on new DNA evidence. His conviction was based primarily on witness testimony, and the prosecution team has changed their views on the case and have submitted a request for pardon to the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/02/2155255.shtml

Proof Of Male "Biological Clock"

Scott · 3 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Now for some men's health news: new research has proven for the first time that men's ability to procreate decreases as they age. This has been postulated for some time but conclusive evidence has been hard to come by. ABCnews has the report here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/03/011243.shtml

Men As Killers, Rapists, And Abusers

Scott · 3 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In an article which turned my stomach, Maclean's is featuring as its cover story in their latest issue a tirade against male violence. Just about every sentence is directed at demonizing males and masculinity, and the word misandrist barely begins to describe it. Please give yourself some time before writing a response to Maclean's - I'm personally going to need about 24 hours before I can compose a reasonable reply.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/03/1341233.shtml

Changes In Irish Abortion Laws Could Promote False Rape Accusations

Scott · 3 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This ABCnews article discusses how proposed changes in Ireland's abortion laws (which currently outlaw abortion except to save a mother's life) could increase the number of false accusations of rape against men. The reasoning is once women are allowed to have abortions in cases of rape, some women will stoop to making a false accusation in order to get an abortion. This is a significant controversy, but I think it's especially notable that people are at least concerned about false accusations in Ireland and there is a dialogue going on about it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/02/223236.shtml

Man Kills Himself Over CSA Stress; He's Not The Only One

Scott · 4 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF submitted this link to a UK Times article which talks about men who have killed themselves due to the stress placed on them from the Child Support Agency. This is shocking news: "Mr Brett's suicide brings to 55 the number of deaths linked to the CSA. The agency has admitted the possibility of potential connections with two deaths. The campaign group NACSA (National Association for Child Support Action) has documented 42 suicides and eight murders that it believes can be laid at the agency's door." What's it going to take to put some reason into paternity laws?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/03/1653203.shtml

Man Goes To Court For Custody Of Unborn Child

Scott · 5 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

A Virginia man is asking the court to obtain custody of his partner's unborn child, as he believes he would be a much better parent than the mother. Salon ran the story in this article. The main legal confusion right now is how to determine custody of a child that hasn't been born yet. This may be the first child custody case of its kind, and raises some interesting questions.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/05/012216.shtml

Send In Your Views On The US Presidential Candidates

Scott · 5 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I'm looking for for papers and essays on the topic of men's rights and men's issues to feature on this site. Right now I am particularly interested in receiving people's opinions of the US presidential candidates and where they stand on various men's issues. In order to avoid bias as much as possible, I'm asking my readers to submit their perspectives so I can compile the results and encourage further discussion on the matter. Note: The Men's Activism News Network does not officially endorse any presidential candidates. Read on to find out the type of info I'm looking for and where to send your submissions.Disclaimer: The Men's Activism News Network does not officially endorse a particular presidential candidate. I'm doing this to help inform and empower my readers in as unbiased a way as possible.

The Men's Activism News Network, www.mensactivism.org, is looking for papers and essays on the topic of men's rights and men's issues. Right now I am particularly interested in receiving people's opinions of the US presidential candidates and where they stand on various men's issues. Some of these issues might be:

- Male reproductive rights

- Child custody

- Violence against men

- Men's health

- Men of color

- Men's roles in the family

- Boys and education

- The gender"pay gap"

- Men in the military

...as well as many others. My goal with this is to provide men with information so that they can make their decision to vote based on how "male friendly" a particular candidate is, and where each candidate stands on the issues most important to them. To try to be as unbiased about this as possible, I need as many politically aware readers as possible to send in their assessment of the candidates. I will then post a compilation of the responses on the site, and allow there to be further discussion on the issues on the message board.

The Men's Activism News Network makes no claims to copyright on its user's submissions, so you're free to submit your writings elsewhere in addition to mensactivism.org. Please e-mail me at: scott@mensactivism.org if you have a paper/essay/candidate assessment to submit or plan to start writing one for submission.

Thanks for reading this and I hope all of mensactivism.org's readers will make use of the site for positive change!

Scott Garman - scott@mensactivism.org

Site Administrator

The Men's Activism News Network: http://www.mensactivism.org

Daily News & Info on Men's Rights Issues

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/05/019206.shtml

Is Feminism To Blame For Increase In Male Suicide Rate?

Scott · 5 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Australian Associated Press printed this piece which discusses the 70% increase in suicides over the past twenty years for men aged 20-39. Mention is made of the increasing attacks on masculinity and men's roles in Australian society, as well as the significance of male shame. The article doesn't present much in the way of evidence for this theory, but I have little doubt there is some truth to it, and it is very noteworthy that this idea could get some media attention.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/05/0343223.shtml

The Importance Of Fathers

Scott · 6 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Age printed a very pro-father article on the importance and positive effects fathers have on their children. The active nature of parenting by dads and how fathers influence the child's conception of masculinity and sexual identity is talked about in a positive light. It's definitely a good read.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/05/2319223.shtml

Male Bashing In Chicago - Help Put An End To It

Scott · 6 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I received an e-mail from Les Farkas who wants to get the word out on a male bashing campaign he'd like to end. A retail store called The Alley in Chicago is posting degrading signs about boys which have said, "BOYS SUCK" and "BOYS CHEAT", among other things. Also included with these anti male signs is a "GIRLS RULE" sign. This is obviously very immature behavior, and on top of that they are promoting male bashing. This is a very busy storefront and thousands of people walk by it each day. Click Read More below to read Les' request for help and what you can do to help put an end to this trash. Hello! I need help and reinforcements here in Chicago! There is a store called The Alley, on 858 W. Belmont, that on it's Clark St.
side has a window display that carries multiple messages like: "BOYS SUCK", "BOYS CHEAT" and "GIRLS RULE". There are other derogatory messages as well.

When I see such a thing, especially on a daily basis as I walk by, I get irritated because I realize that only men, as a group could be so insulted in modern day America. I feel it is partly due to the fact that we are not good at speaking out against such mean stereotypes as other groups. I therefore ask that any men in the Chicago area give them a call if they agree with me - their number is 773-525-3180. The owner is unavailable; ask for "Adriana" (a man) or managers Mike Howdyshell or Paul Robinson. I think that if they hear from enough of us and get enough static, they will think twice before trying such a window display again!

The staff seemed quite conscious of this as a current, hip cultural trend. They are right in that, it is so part of the current cultural climate. Again, I think we men let so much of this go by us, and really we shouldn't. In this case what's at stake is the self-esteem of growing boys and the lousiness of attitude that we are permitting in young women. I like to point out to women that this sort of thing makes American women look bad, like bitchy man haters! It also makes young women arrogant, abusive and bigoted towards guys.

Please let me know how I can get this message out.

Les - lfarkas@enteract.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/06/003201.shtml

Dad Saves Family From Airplane Crash

Scott · 7 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is a neat story that I thought I'd post here: A father and his wife and three sons went on a flight in a single-engine airplane when suddenly the pilot passed out. Having never flown before, the father took control of the plane, and with assistance from ground control, safely landed the plane at an airport. CNN ran this story of heroism at this link. This was a brave man indeed.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/07/040255.shtml

Are Youth Sports Getting Too Competitive?

Scott · 7 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

ABCnews ran this article on youth sports, and what may be the increasing amount of violence and bad sportsmanship among participants (and their parents). Considering the pressure that young men are under today, becoming obsessed with winning in sports is not something that's going to help the way they view themselves. Being active and having a healthy competitiveness in sport is undoubtedly the best lifestyle we should encourage in our young men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/07/0415253.shtml

Even More New UK Rape Laws

Scott · 8 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Submitted by IHF: A new British law will ban defendants in rape and sex crimes from cross-examining their accusers in court. This will only apply when the accused is defending himself, and will force him to use a lawyer (court appointed or chosen by him) to do the cross-examination. The UK Independent has the story here. It seems every day that we move further away from fairness toward men in court systems around the world.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/08/1058253.shtml

Parents Can Be Court-Ordered To Give Their Children Ritalin

Scott · 8 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

USAToday reported here that a New York court has ordered a 7 year-old boy's parents to put their son back on Ritalin, after the parents decided to stop giving it to the boy because of side effects the child was experiencing. The article talks about how it could now be construed as child abuse to refuse to administer drugs like Ritalin to your child. Any parent of a young boy should be very concerned about this. Even though ADD and ADHD do exist, tranquilizers like Ritalin are being prescribed in epidemic proportions. Many psychiatrists and parents believe that what was once "normal" behavior for boys is now being treated as a psychological disorder - the idea of masculinity as toxic taken to the extreme.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/08/1745212.shtml

Audio Interview With Christina Hoff-Sommers

Scott · 9 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is a bit old, but I thought very interesting. WBUR featured Christina Hoff-Sommers on The Connection with Christopher Lydon. There is a home page for this program and you can listen to it using Real Audio here. Most of the callers to the program gave some excellent examples anti-male and anti-boy bias, and it was interesting to hear Sommers in action.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/09/0218209.shtml

Men Deserve to Live

Scott · 9 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett of Men's Health America released another action item in his Men Deserve to Live campaign. All you need to do this week is take two minutes to write a letter to your Senator in support of the Men's Health Act of 2000. By clicking on Read More, you can view Ed's message and a sample form letter to submit to your Senator's office.
As I mentioned in last week's posting, Sen. Strom Thurmond introduced the companion Men's Health Act in the Senate. It is bill number S. 2925.

So this week, let's make it real simple: Cut and paste this letter on your letterhead, make whatever changes you want, and send it off to your Senator.

That's it for now!

The Honorable [name of senator]

United States Senate

Washington, DC 20510

RE: Support Men's Health Act - S. 2925

Dear Senator _____,

Men die 6 years sooner than women. That means that every year, 40,000 men die unnecessarily in the United States. Most of these men are in their 20s, 30s, and 40s. This means that when a man dies prematurely, he leaves behind a widow and children who will grow up without their daddy.

In January of this year, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services approved Healthy People 2010, a plan to eliminate all health disparities by the year 2010. But unfortunately the DHHS has not taken any concrete steps to implement this plan in order to solve the problem of premature male mortality.

Recently, Senator Strom Thurmond introduced the Men's Health Act, S. 2925. The purpose of the act is to establish an Office of Men's Health in the DHHS.

This November, the male vote will decide the outcome of hundreds, if not thousands of elections.

Please become a co-sponsor of S. 2925. All your constituents---men, women, and children---are counting on you.

Sincerely,

Your Name Here

Ed Bartlett is the senior policy advisor for Men's Health America, which does research, education, and advocacy on behalf of men's health.

To subscribe to Ed's e-mail list, mensheath, create an account at egroups.com and subscribe to the menshealth list. Ed will be sending out his action alerts via the list, which is very low traffic.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/09/1456251.shtml

Ask Warren Farrell Anything!

Scott · 9 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a fun way to get people involved more with Mensactivism.org: post a comment to the message board for this story and ask Warren Farrell a question or two! If you've never posted comments to this site before, I'd highly recommend reading the site tutorial, and then come back here and click on "Read More" at the bottom of this blurb to read what the rules are and how this will work. You can also check out Dr. Farrell's web site if you're not already familiar with his work. Update: I have submitted the interview questions to Dr. Farrell. You can see which ones were selected by clicking here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/07/31/1335249.shtml

Woman Who Made Many False Accusations Gets Convicted

Scott · 10 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In Vanier, Canada, Cathy Fordham was convicted of "public mischief" for fabricating an assault accusation made against a member of a community recovery home she directed. There several more alleged examples of false accusations she has made against various men on sexual assault charges, and one man has even finished a prison sentence for rape based on one of her accusations, which a lawyer said had no other evidence but Fordman's testimony. The Ottawa Citizen has the story here. This woman is obviously very manipulative and pathologically apathetic to the consequences of what she has done.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/10/0133251.shtml

More Reports On Child Support Errors

Scott · 10 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's an article by the Christian Science Monitor that investigates the problems of billing errors in the U.S. child support system. Here are some sobering facts from the article: "In a study released Aug. 8 by the [ACFC], 55 percent of child-support payers say they have experienced billing errors by a child-support agency. Among those who tried to get the agency to fix the error, 61 percent were unsuccessful. In 43 percent of cases, the payer had been subjected to punitive measures as a result of a billing error, such as having cars booted or assets seized."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/10/0116220.shtml

A Struggle With Testicular Cancer

Scott · 11 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

George submitted this link to a CNN men's health article. It's an account of one young man's struggle with testicular cancer, and I hope everyone will read it. Early detection is the most critical thing, and after reading the story, I went looking for some info on how to do a testicular self-examination. Perhaps you'll find this information useful, or pass it along to someone you know?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/10/0257257.shtml

Why Do Women Live Longer Than Men?

Scott · 11 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Aceman writes, "Here are some ideas why it's not certain but it makes you think." Thanks for the link Aceman! The article discusses several of the factors of which affect the gender "death gap", and how they change as a person ages. Take a look.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/11/0052232.shtml

Discrimination Against Men In The Military

Scott · 11 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

NewsMax featured this story on how the military is becoming increasingly hostile toward men, with the hypersensitivty surrounding sexual harassment accusations and the lowering of standards to push women ahead into senior positions. The infamous Claudia Kennedy case is discussed, as well as some examples of serious threats to military effectiveness posed by letting women off with less training. A good variety of information here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/11/161226.shtml

Challenging The Notion of No-Fault Divorce

Scott · 12 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I found this interesting article from the Denver Post. It's about an attorney who is challenging no-fault divorce law, and is trying to bring the case to the Supreme Court. The theory is quite interesting: a marriage is a contract, and only in no-fault divorce can either party break the terms of the contract without a penalty. Therefore the legality of no fault divorce undermines contract law, and also ruins the legal meaning of marriage. These are things I never considered before, and perhaps it should be the case that if a spouse wants to end a marriage when the other doesn't, that he or she should pay a penalty.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/11/194251.shtml

Online Chat Transcript About Ritalin

Scott · 12 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Aceman writes "This is an ABCnews online chat with Dr. Peter Breggin, author of Talking Back to Ritalin and Reclaiming Our Children: The Healing Solution for a Nation in Crisis." Dr. Breggin is also a medical consultant to plaintiffs in a class-action lawsuit against the company that makes Ritalin for over promoting the drug, so you can be sure that his views aren't positive toward Ritalin. I hope many of the disturbing facts discussed in the transcript will continue the dialogue on this controversial drug and the way it's being (mis)used.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/12/1644252.shtml

Fresno Child Support Demonstration

Scott · 13 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Fresnobee.com had a recent story on a small demonstration in the city against unfair child support practices. The article mentions the standard inequalities and errors that the child support collection system creates, and it's good to see a local newspaper give attention to the issue.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/13/0243222.shtml

School Teacher Rapes 12 YO Boy

Scott · 13 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

A middle school teacher from Sligo Middle School in the DC area has been charged with having sex with a 12 year-old boy whom she met while teaching summer school. The boy says they have had sex several times since mid-July, and that she would have the boy sneak out of his house at night and pick him up at a street corner to drive him to her home. I will keep an eye on this case and see how it turns out. The Washington Post printed the article here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/13/1322233.shtml

If Men Have All The Power, How Come Women Make The Rules?

Scott · 13 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Jack Kammer wrote in to ask that I post info about his book, titled If Men Have All The Power How Come Women Make The Rules? I have read this book myself and have found it to be an incredible tool in making friends aware of men's issues, which is almost a miracle in itself. The book is not long and consists of many short aphorisms, which seems to appeal to men. Best of all, the book is free (since Jack couldn't find a publisher), and all he asks is that you write to him and let him know that you've read it and any feedback you could offer him. I'm not the only one with glowing praise for this work, here are comments from other readers as well. And finally, click here to go to his site to download the book (again, it's free - please take a moment to check it out).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/12/176201.shtml

Anti-Male Attitudes In American Universities

Scott · 14 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Jim Castelli and an Anonymous User wrote in about this link to a front page Boston Globe article on colleges that are unfriendly to men. Men's Health recently did the survey of colleges and universities and picked the most anti-male schools in the country. I can't find a link to the MH article on-line, but to any young men considering college - find this issue of the magazine and check it out! I'd love to see more assessments of universities based on these criteria.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/14/176237.shtml

"Male Bias" Cheats Women Of First-Class Degrees

Scott · 15 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Brian O'Higgins writes "According to a "study" by two genderists at Oxford, women are being denied equality in first-class degrees awarded, because the assessment system is geared towards a male style of argumentation. You can read about it at this UK Sunday Times link. Note that in the same breath as these genderists denounce the alleged sexism of this state of affairs, they shamelessly indulge in some very real sexism of their own, blatantly claiming that women consider arguments in a more careful and balanced way than men, exposing once again - for those who have yet to notice - the crypto-racist thinking that underlies much of feminist ideology." Great submission Brian! I couldn't have said it better myself.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/14/225258.shtml

Trashing British Boys

Scott · 15 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF pointed me to this story from the UK Telegraph, "So, are British boys really that bad?" It's based on the comments of the daughter of the US Ambassador about British boys around the age of 15, including "British boys really suck." We're obviously dealing with some high-intellect journalism here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/15/0223203.shtml

Choice For Men Demonstration Update

Scott · 15 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I received a press release for the Choice for Men demonstration which is planned for Saturday, August 26, 2000, on Capitol Hill. Click "Read More" to read the press release. Mensactivism.org will be tracking the demonstration and I will provide updates on this site of how the demonstration progresses.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Washington, DC - On August 26, 2000 a few hundred Americans will assemble at the West Front of the Capitol Building demonstrating for equal reproductive rights for men. From 12 noon to 5:00 p.m, demonstrators will be displaying signs, disseminating information, and giving away bumper stickers trying to create public awareness about men's lack of reproductive choice.

Roe v Wade has given women the choice to opt out of the rights and responsibilities of parenthood since 1973. Abortion usurps a man's choice to be a father.

On the other hand, many men do not want to be fathers and are forced to subsidize a woman's decision to be a mother with 18 years of support.

The US Constitution grants equal protection to all US citizens under the 14th Amendment. Many state constitutions also have an equal protection clause which guarantees state citizens equal rights without discriminating based on gender. Demonstrators from across the nation will be assembling to fight for men's reproductive rights, which should naturally be their constitutional right.

Please contact Scott Garman, scott@mensactivism.org, if you need more info about this event.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/15/1213241.shtml

John Leo Reports On PC Absurdities

Scott · 15 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

John Leo's latest article in US News is a series of "politically correct" absurdities, such as banning the children's game "musical chairs" because it encourages aggression, or having men sit down to urinate because it would make them equal with women. Some of the anecdotes were silly, others were more disturbing.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/15/1223240.shtml

Man Falsely Convicted Of Rape Goes Free After 10 Years

Scott · 16 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "CONROE, Texas - Three years after DNA evidence first suggested he was innocent, a logger serving a 99-year sentence for a rape that he always denied went free Tuesday morning." I didn't receive a link with this, but found an ABCnews story on it here. Note that Mensactivism.org reported on this story back when the pardon was first suggested. Update: Our anonymous friend just sent in this link to a Dallas Morning News article which is really good.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/16/130208.shtml

Men's Studies Professor Purged At Dawson College

Scott · 17 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Rand and an Anonymous User both submitted this link to some disturbing news. Prof. Jeffrey Asher from Dawson College (in Canada) had his men's studies classes cancelled by the administration and was told that he could no longer teach on this subject. Prof. Asher then left his job, and is publicly denouncing the decision as a political move to silence his views. Please read this article, and ask yourself, "am I going to keep silent about this?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/17/1159255.shtml

Teacher Acquitted Of Sexually Abusing Schoolgirl

Scott · 17 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Mailman writes "David Leland Stevens, science teacher of 32 years, sums it up after the trial: 'I love my job. I love my kids and I love what I do. This is the beginning of the beginning again.'" It's yet another story of a man being falsely accused. The Washington Post has the link here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/17/119242.shtml

Al Knight On Family Court Issues

Scott · 17 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Denver Post had a great editorial column by Al Knight, which covers a wide range of issues related to men in family court. In it, he discusses bias in custody determination, challenges the "deadbeat dad epidemic" myth, and false accusations. Long, but a good read.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/17/1219210.shtml

Montel Williams Looking For Alienated NCPs

Scott · 18 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I received an e-mail forward concerning an upcoming Montel Williams talk show which will be on the topic of non-custodial parents who have been alienated from their children (by the other parent). If you'd like to info on how to get on the show, click "Read More" to see the instructions and contact info. Note that the deadline for being considered as a guest is August 23, so act now if you're interested!
Hello,

The Montel Show is doing a show on ncp parents who have been denied a relationship with their children due to visitation interference or parental alienation.

If you meet the following criteria, please contact the producers (names and phone numbers below):

1. You know where your children live.

2. You are estranged from your children due to interference or alienation on the part of the custodial parent.

3. You want to re-establish a relationship with your children.

4. You are willing and able to present your side of the story on national television.

The producers are especially interested in those who have older children from whom they are currently estranged due to interference and with whom you would like to be reconciled.

The show is tentatively scheduled to be taped the week of August 28, 2000
Deadline for contacting the Montel Show to be considered as a guest:
August 23,

2000

Contact: Missy: 1-800-987-5446 (ext. 358)

Lenora 1-800-987-5446 (ext. 381)

If you meet the criteria outlined above, or if you know someone who does, I urge you to contact the producers as soon as possible. If chosen for the show, you would be flown to NY and be given expenses and a hotel.

Also, I implore you to forward this announcement to all other newsletters to which you are subscribed. It is important that this issue get the attention it deserves. It is a marvelous opportunity to let America know just how big a problem interference with visitation and custody really is.

Wishing you the best,

Lowell * (Last name withheld)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/18/1324211.shtml

Series Of False Accusation News

Scott · 18 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I've received a few reports about false accusations that I decided to consolidate into this story. A young woman from the UK received 7,500 pounds by making a false rape charge and was discovered (UK Telegraph). Another teacher was vindicated of sexual harassment charges, whose jury deliberation took less than 30 minutes (UK Telegraph). And a policeman from London received 300,000 pounds for being falsely accused of indecently assaulting a female co-worker (Again, from the UK Telegraph). Credit goes to IHF for submitting these stories.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/18/1653208.shtml

The Head Of The Medusa

Scott · 19 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Aceman wrote in to tell me about a book entitled: The Head of the Medusa: The Rise and Fall of Western Civilization at the Hands of Radical Feminism by Perseus. The book is free to read on-line. Would anyone like to submit a review of this book that I could post to this site (how about you, Aceman)? If so please send your submissions to scott@mensactivism.org and I'll be glad to post them.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/19/1533227.shtml

A Great Example Of Bashing Men

Scott · 19 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Diane Carman really knows the feminist party line well. She uses it profusely in her Denver Post opinion article which is critical of the recent Men's Health assessment of male-friendly colleges. It's entitled, "A College Guide for Jerks" and refers to men as Neanderthals and stereotypes college men as "frat boy[s] [looking to] get drunk with a worshipful nymphomaniac." What kind of trash is this? Please take a moment to let her know your opinion about this article.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/19/181223.shtml

Promoting Achievement-Oriented Education For Boys

Scott · 19 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

More news courtesy of IHF: The UK Telegraph reported in this story that the British government is recommending that steps be taken to encourage boys to succeed in academics, to make it "cool to succeed." Mention was made of the different ways boys and girls learn, and that boys respond well to male teachers that mentor and provide examples of good leadership qualities. It was even suggested that all-male classrooms might be a good idea to try. Do you hear this America? Britain actually cares about the the sorry state that young men are in today. Why can't we follow their example?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/19/1523228.shtml

Double Standards In Family Murders

Scott · 20 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The National Post had an insightful article about the recent tragedy of the baby that was thrown in front of a subway train as the mother commit suicide. The questions raised are: who is the baby, and why doesn't anyone know his last name? The reason, the author points out, is that we subconsciously accept that a baby is the property of its mother, and so when women commit murders such as this, we don't see it in the same light as we do the recent spouse killings by men that have received press. There are double standards concerning who we sympathize with, and a lack of anger where it is deserved.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/19/2118207.shtml

Working Wives Reduce Men's Health?

Scott · 20 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

USAToday printed this story about research which shows that a man with a wife who works full time has a 25% greater chance of being in worse health than a husband whose wife doesn't work full-time. The amount that men work, however, does not affect his wife's health, unless he is unemployed. I posted this story not to encourage women to "stay at home", but for men to realize how dependent we are on women for maintaining our own health. It's something to think about.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/19/216246.shtml

Choice For Men Bumper Stickers And Buttons!

Scott · 20 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Jason Hanson has made up some bumper stickers and buttons for the Choice for Men demonstration that will be happening on August 26. If you'd like to show your support for men's reproductive rights, even if you won't be attending the demonstration, please contact Jason for information on how to order a button or bumper sticker. You can see a picture of what they look like at this link. Update: Jason has told me that buttons are $1 each and bumper stickers are $2 each, which includes shipping. Jason's address can be found by clicking on "Read More..." below, but I'd still recommend e-mailing him first to check for availability. Contact info for Jason Hanson is:

Jason Hanson

612 111th Ave N.E.

Blaine, MN 55434

e-mail: atlas107@juno.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/19/2141233.shtml

More News About Prof. Asher

Scott · 20 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Rand submitted this Toronto News story about Prof. Asher, the Men's Studies professor who was forced out of his job due to political pressures from school administration at Dawson College. I've heard from at least one other men's issues teacher at a college that this action has already had a chilling effect on him. I would like to see this become a major case to expose to what degree higher academia is against intellectual freedom and honesty.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/20/1537241.shtml

Two Stories On The Ritalin Ruling

Scott · 20 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I found two interesting stories that analyze the recent New York court ruling that parents had to administer the drug Ritalin to their son despite their claims that the boy was suffering side effects. The first story from the New York Law Journal and looks at it from a legal perspective, i.e. how the rights of parents to raise their children as they see fit is affected by this. The second is from The Liberator and examines how the epidemic of Ritalin use is encouraged by schools and why it should be stopped.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/19/2058206.shtml

Want To Lower The Divorce Rate? Promote Joint Custody

Scott · 21 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham wrote in to tell me about this story from the Australian newspaper SMH. It discusses the reasons that women initiate divorce more, and talks about increasing the use of joint custody as a way to lower the divorce rate. From the article: "Susan Holmes has spent 18 years working with separating couples and believes there are some who can be helped to put their marriages back on track. She finds that when couples are presented with the notion of shared parenting, rather than sole custody, power battles are reduced and there are more opportunities for talk and possible reconciliation." It's a good news report with some very useful statistical data.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/20/1624225.shtml

How To Handle Anti-Male Jokes In Public

Scott · 21 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Charles Walbridge wrote in with some good strategies to deal with anti-male jokes in the workplace and elsewhere. I like his ideas, and I think this would be a great topic to start a message board discussion on. How have you dealt with male bashing jokes in public? Take a moment to let everyone know on the message board for this story. Click "Read More..." to read Charles' submission and post your own comments.

Handling Anti-male Jokes in the Workplace

Let's say you hear, or overhear, a coworker, "Mary," tell a joke you find offensive.

Try one or both of these strategies;

A. "Oh, good, now we can tell gender jokes. I have a whole bunch of women jokes, blond jokes, lesbian jokes, menstruation jokes...."
Then don't. Walk away. Period.

B. If you need to raise her sensitivity further: Quote her to your fellow employees. Without additional comment:

"Mary said...."

"Mary told a joke...."

"Mary's joke yesterday was...."

"Mary's joke last week was...."

"That reminds me of Mary's joke...."

If somebody asks, "Do you think that's funny?" You reply, without emphasis, "She did."

(Though I dare say that eventually she won't.)

To be truly methodical keep a list of who you repeated which joke to.

At no point have you criticized Mary's sense of humor. Nor have you retaliated in kind. You have risen above that level.

If Mary or any other woman should be so obtuse as to complain of any joke she interprets as sexist, people might remember, because you quoted her so often; she opened the door to this. (But don't count on it.)

Victim feminists seem to enjoy shooting themselves in the foot. We would be less than gentlemen if we didn't help them.

Remember: We are nice -- but relentless.

Charles Walbridge

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/20/1757239.shtml

Warren Farrell Responds!

Scott · 22 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

You asked for it, you got it - Dr. Warren Farrell has responded to the interview questions, and I would like to apologize for the delay - there was a bit of a mix-up in getting Warren's e-mail, and it's not his fault that it took so long. So, without further ado, click on "Read More..." to see his responses to the questions that were selected for the interview.

Submitted by John Curtis - "Questions for Dr. Farrell":

Dr. Farrell,

Thank you very much for your continuing efforts to support fairness and equality between the sexes. Your work has had a great impact on our society and on me personally.

As men are not organizing themselves well yet, certainly not as well as feminists have organized, do you see any positive effort that men as individuals can make to help men, women, families, and children? The men's movement does not have any widely recognized leaders, (other than yourself) do you see anyone that men can organize behind or assist? And, what do you feel would be the best area for men to work in, to help achieve fairness in our government and legal systems?

Thanks very much, and please keep up the good work.

John Curtis

Ojai, CA

Dear John Curtis,

Good questions. The main barrier to the men's movement making progress is the hundreds of thousands of years of evolution that have developed in men a protector instinct toward females, and have led to females choosing men who are protectors. It is difficult to lead a movement confronting those you are supposed to protect, especially when you are dependent on them for love, affection, respect, approval, and sex.

The first solution is decreasing our dependence -- learning to also receive love, affection, respect, and approval from men. More information on this in Women Can't Hear What Men Don't Say.

The second is working on issues related to boys and sons, since women have a protector instinct toward children. Check out Christina Hoff Sommers' The War Against Boys and Michael Gurian's The Wonder of Boys.

The third solution is focusing on father's issues, since that also benefits children and there is a critical mass of men, families, etc., that can identify personally with those issues. This is the reason my next book will be called Father and Child Reunion.

One of the most productive issues we can focus on is a men's birth control pill. I outline the reasons for that, and the current status of the research, in Father and Child Reunion.

Submitted by an Anonymous User:

There seems to be a growing ground swell of anger among men today aimed at feminism and the inequities that men suffer both under the law and as practiced by society at large. Do you forsee any kind of increased backlash against feminism and or women in general?

Dear Anonymous User,

Often the word 'backlash' is used to prevent ourselves from hearing what is being said. It helps to look at what men are saying as men trying to be included in the process of gender transition rather than excluded. The feminist movement has become gender politics' one-party system, and the reason all one-party systems become corrupt is because they don't have to listen to feedback. Do a careful read of Why Men Are The Way They Are and Women Can't Hear What Men Don't Say and then let me know if you have a different perspective.

Submitted by Skippy:

I have been trying to buy another copy of The Myth of Male Power, and I have been having trouble finding one. If there is one book that feminists (and a lot of other women) don't want men to read, this is the one. Is the book still in print? If not, what can we do to get this book back on the market again?

Dear Skippy,

You said you couldn't get hold of The Myth of Male Power and asked if it is still in print. Yes, you are correct -- it is the book that has the most impact. The bad news is that it is out of print. The good news is that it is supposed to be back in print in January. If you would like a copy before January, I have some left. You may send me a check for $14.95 to:

Dr. Warren Farrell

PMB 222

315 S. Coast Hwy 101, Suite U

Encinitas, CA 92024-3555

It would also be helpful if you logged onto the Putnam/Berkley site and asked about when the book is coming back into print. They are at www.penguinputnam.com; then just click on the Contact Us option down the left side menu and email them.

Submitted by Kyle Knutson:

Although I was wise enough not to have purchased Michael Kimmel's book, "Manhood in America", I have taken the time to read substantial portions of it at my local library. I will also say that I've read some of his other writings and I did see him once on the Phil Donahue show several years ago. To be blunt, Mr. Kimmel seems to suffer from a severe attitude problem -- sexist and misandrist to the core. Perhaps he's just trying to ingratiate himself with all manner of feminists to whatever extent possible, with all regard for truth, honesty, and objectivity cast aside. In any event, he strikes me as a very sad man indeed.

Be that as it may, what is or was your reaction to his above mentioned title, specifically the chapter where he calls you such things as 'whiner' and 'chameleon'? Have you ever been able to engage Mr. Kimmel in a serious discussion about men's issues and the myriad prejudices and discriminations that men face? Or does he just go ballistic at any suggestion that the world out there is something other than the never-ending domination and oppression of innocent, wonderful women by evil, brutish men?

In a society and culture filled with far, far too many Michael Kimmel types, I cannot say enough in praise of the Warren Farrells of the world.

Kyle Knutson

National Coalition of Free Men

Twin Cities Chapter

Dear Kyle,

Thank you for your positive responses to my work and for your questions about Michael Kimmel.

I have had a half dozen or so contacts with Michael. My one-to-one discussions have been fairly positive, but as soon as he gets in public, especially on TV, he becomes verbally abusive and takes a hard-line stand that men are the oppressors and therefore anything that happens to men is their fault, created by their rules. I have learned slowly over the years to not focus my attention on the idealogue, or on his or her motives, but to say what I feel is right, listen to where I may be wrong, make changes, and then put it out there and take what comes.

Submitted by The Mule - "Where Are Men's Reproductive Rights?":

Dr. Farrell, you have had your attention focused on various ways which men are discriminated against, and spoken and written at length about your findings and thoughts. As there is a growing consciousness about discrimination against men as to reproductive rights, it becomes obvious that this particular inequality gives rise to some of the most widespread and egregious atrocities visited upon men. Why has there been little to no coverage in this area by you or others in the media?

Dear 'the Mule,'

You are correct that until now I have given minimal attention to men's reproductive rights. For the past 13 years I have been working on research and writing drafts of my thinking in this area. It will be published next January as Father and Child Reunion (Tarcher/Putnam/Penguin). In Father and Child Reunion, I outline Men's ABC Rights, or, more precisely, Men's and Women's ABC Rights and Responsibilities for decision-making in the areas of Abortion, Birth control, and Care of child.

Submitted by Michael Osterbuhr, mdo9318@labs.tamu.edu - "Uniting Men's Groups":

Dr. Farrell,

What do you see as the potential for a political unification of the various and sundry branches of the "men's movement"? :)

- Michael Osterbuhr

mdo9318@labs.tamu.edu

Dear Michael,

I think it is helpful to have conferences and conventions that create unifying themes, and help us join forces where that can be useful. But unity often leads to bureaucracy, political correctness, and the suppression of diversity. That, in turn, undermines the initiative of individuals with different ideas or newcomers. Over time, if we become a force in the social consciousness, we will receive funding which will lead to unifying organizations and conferences. I look forward to that time as long as we keep attention simultaneously focused on encouraging diversity.

In Canada, David Shackleton is doing a Unity Trek to bring some unity to their diverse men's and fathers' groups.

Submitted by an Anonymous User - "Keeping books in print.":

I notice a lot of books on men's rights disappear after a very short time, and as an author yourself, do you have any ideas or suggestions on how to keep books on men's issues in print? Any really male-friendly publishing companies you'd recommend that don't have high sales quotas to keep a book on the shelves?

Dear Anonymous User II ('Keeping books in print'),

Yes, men's issues books disappear quickly, and only a small fraction of those written appear at all.

The real solution is buying ones that are printed. Once publishers see a men's book is selling well, they will jump on the band wagon to publish more, and few publishers drop something from print that is making them money.

Tarcher/Putnam is quite male-friendly.

Submitted by sean beeson:

Dr. Farrell, who if anyone do you still have contact with from your days with NOW and are they at all sympathetic to men's issues?

-:)))s sean beeson

Dear Sean Beeson,

I still have contact with Karen DeCrow, a former president of NOW, who has become quite sympathetic to equality in the area of fathering. Unfortunately, though, she is the exception.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/21/2251224.shtml

ACFC Child Support Survey

Scott · 22 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The American Coalition for Fathers and Children recently did a survey on people paying child support. The statistics they found were eye-opening, to say the least. Read on for the results of the survey, soon to be published through the University of California at Berkeley.
ACFC Child Support Survey Results

The simple results of the ACFC child support survey are listed below. A full report including the numerical basis, variance, and meaning of each result is in progress in conjunction with the University of California, Berkeley and will be published in the near future.

1. According to the survey, 13.1 % of child support payers (child support payers) are custodial fathers, .6 % custodial mothers, 80.5 % noncustodial fathers, 1.2 % noncustodial mothers, and 4.6 % other.

2. 9.5 % of child support payers are satisfied with the amount of time they spend with their children, 90.5 % are not satisfied.

3. 82.0 % of child support payers have experienced access and visitation denial; 18.0 % have not.

4. Of the 82.0 % that have experienced access and visitation denial, in 17.7 % of cases, the court did something to enforce visitation; in 82.3 % of cases, the court did not do anything to enforce visitation.

5. Of those that spent time in court concerning visitation rights, 25.4 % spent under $1000; 24.1 % spent $1001- 5000; 27.7 % spent $5001-20,000; 7.9 % spent $20,001- 50,000; and 3.8 % spent $50,001-100,000 on court and attorney fees; and in 11.3 % of cases there was no billing error.

6. In 41.2 % of states where children live, there are social service agencies that assist in resolving visitation problems; 20.5 % of states did not possess these agencies and 38.3 % of people responding were not sure whether or not these programs exist.

7. 6.5 % of people surveyed received effective assistance in resolving these problems; 43.1 % did not receive effective assistance; 8.4% claimed that their state has no such program; 9.5 % have not had visitation problems; 32.4 % have not contacted agencies for help.

8. 54.5 % of people surveyed have experienced billing error by the child support agency; 45.5 % have not.

9. Of those experiencing a billing error, 7.9 % have overpaid and 92.1 % have underpaid.

10. Of those experiencing a billing error, 45.1% spent under $1000; 31.4 % spent $1001- $5000; 17.9 % spent $5001- $20,000; 4.9 % spent $20,001- $50,000; and .7% spent $50,000-$100,000.

11. In 90.8 % of cases, the child support payer tried to get the child support agency to fix the error; in 9.2% of cases, s/he did not.

12. In those cases where the child support payer tried to get the child support agency to fix the error, the child support payer was successful 38.5 % of the time and unsuccessful 61.5 % of the time.

13. To fix billing errors, the child support agency took 1 week in 27.8 % of cases, 1 month in 21.0 % of cases, 1 year in 21.2 % of cases, 2 years in 3.4 % of cases, 3-5 years in 5.4 % of cases, and over 5 years in 21.2 % of cases.

14. Regarding a billing error, the number of calls made to a child support enforcement case worker was 1-5 calls in 44.0 % of cases, 6-10 in 23.3 % of cases, 11-20 in 10.9 % of cases, and over 20 calls in 21.8 % of cases.

15. In 29.7 % of cases, the case worker was courteous and responsive to the call; in 70.3% of cases, s/he was not.

16. Concerning errors of the child support agency, 20.7 % of errors were mathematical errors, 16.5 % were the child support agency's failure to record payments made by the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER, 4.1 % regarded the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER being charged for welfare reimbursement when the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER was not aware his/her child was on welfare, 1.7 % were failure to stop child support obligation when child reached the age of emancipation, 3.9 % were because the parent receiving child support incorrectly reported that the other parent owed money, 13.8 % of errors were the failure of the child support agency to update a child support order with a downward or upward modification or later court ruling, and 29.8 % of errors were for a reason other than those listed.

17. While paying the custodial parent directly, 22.9 % of child support payers have been billed by a child support agency for child support already paid (and can be proven paid) because the child was on welfare without the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER being notified; this is not a problem in 77.1 % of cases.

18. If the above was a problem, the agency honored the receipts and presented the correct claim of the amount owed 33.8 % of the time; the agency did not do this 66.2 % of the time.

19. Child support is paid directly to the custodial parent in 28.1 % of cases; it is not paid directly in 71.9 % of cases.

20. When child support is paid directly to the custodial parent, 32.4 % child support payers have been billed by the agency claiming they owe money to the child support agency; 67.6 % of child support payers have not been billed by the agency.

21. In 43.0 % of cases, the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER has been subjected to punitive measures as a result of a billing error; in 57.0 % of cases, s/he has not.

22. These punitive measures are as follows: lien on property (19.5 %), wage garnishment (26.7 %), loss of driver's license (1.5 %), income tax refund interception (15.9 %), negative credit report (6.7 %), seizure of bank accounts or other assets (3.1 %) and other (26.7 %).

23. 22.4 % of child support payers feel the child support amount is reasonable; 77.6 % do not feel it is set at a reasonable amount.

24. 47.1 % of child support payers have had problems getting credit or buying a home because of incorrect information on their credit report; 52.9 % have not had this problem.

25. Of the child support payers that have wage garnishments, 8.3 % are because they were behind in child support and the court ordered it, 39.1 % because wage garnishments are automatic in the child support payer's state, 24.1 % because the custodial parent requested it, 6.3 % because the custodial parent is/was on welfare, and 22.3 % because of other reasons.

26. 22.0 % of child support payers pay by cash, 33.7 % by check, 5.2 % by money order, 50.7 % by garnishment, and 8.2 % by voluntary pay allotment.

28. 9.4 % of child support payers have received notices and/or demands for payment from more than one state for the same child support claim; 90.6 % have not.

30. Reasons that child support payers are behind in payment are 9.7 % because the monthly amount is set too high, .6 % because of penalties and interest, 12.0 % because of loss of job, 4.6 % because of billing error, .6 % because of welfare reimbursement, 1.0 % because of illness, 2.9 % because of disability, 21.0 % because of other reasons, and this question is not applicable to 47.7 % of those surveyed.

31. 9.0 % of child support payers have been jailed due to child support issues; 91.0 % have not.

33. Of those jailed due to child support issues, the person who posted bail was the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER in 8.0 % of cases, parents of CHILD SUPPORT PAYER in 17.3 % of cases, spouse in 14.7 % of cases, significant other in 1.3 % of cases, friend in 10.7 % of cases, and other in 48.0 % of cases.

34. Of those jailed due to child support issues, the person who finally paid the amount claimed as owed was the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER in 42.0 % of cases, parents of CHILD SUPPORT PAYER in 8.0 % of cases, spouse in 8.0 % of cases, significant other in 3.4 % of cases, friend in 3.4 % of cases, and other in 35.2 % of cases.

35. 33.6 % of child support payers have been denied access to their children because they were behind in child support payments; 66.4 % have not.

36. 20.4 % of child support payers have reduced contact with their children or abandoned their child/ parent contact altogether as a result of a conflict with the custodial parent over a child support billing error; 79.6 % have not.

37. 4.8 % of child support payers are paying child support for a child who was proven by DNA testing to not be their child; 95.2 % are not.

38. 60.1 % of child support payers have a second family that s/he is supporting; 39.9 % do not.

39. Of the child support payers with a second family, 61.0 % have suffered hardship due to a child support billing error; 39.0 % have not.

40. 29.9 % of child support payers with a second family are also supporting a child from the new spouse who doesn't get child support from their ex; 70.1 % are not.

41. 22.6 % of child support payers have had a tax refund intercepted as a result of a billing error when they were actually current in their child support; 77.4% have not.

42. Of the child support payers that have had their tax refund intercepted, 29.0 % got their money back while 71.0 % did not.

43. 16.3 % of child support payers have filed for bankruptcy as a result of money being spent for child support billing errors, punitive child support collections, or other child support or custody related issues; 83.7 % have not.

44. When unable to resolve a child support billing error on their own, 24.4 % of child support payers could afford an attorney to represent them while 75.6 % could not afford an attorney.

45. When unable to afford an attorney, 10.0 % of child support payers were able to get free assistance while 90.0 % could not.

46. 12.1 % of child support payers could find an attorney willing to sue the child support agency to recover civil damages as a result of grossly negligent child support billing error that the state agency knew or should have known was false; 87.9 % could not.

47. 3.2 % of child support payers have filed criminal charges against a child support agency for civil rights violations, false certification, or mail fraud as a result of a grossly negligent child support billing error that the state agency knew or should have known was false; 96.8 % have not.

48. Of those who filed charges, in 18.4 % of cases, the U.S. Attorneys an/or Postal Inspectors took appropriate action to correct misconduct on the part of the child support agencies; in 44.8 % they did not, and in 36.8 % of cases, it is not known if appropriate action was taken.

49. The mean amount spent by the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER on attorney fees since the divorce is $12,016.21.

50. In 40.4 % of cases, someone has helped the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER pay attorney or court fees; in 59.4 % the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER has received no help and the question is not applicable in .2 % of cases.

52. If the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER has received assistance in paying fees, the mean amount was $6,308.56.

53. 42.2% of Child support payers have received a notice from the child support agency stating that they are behind in their child support when in reality the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER was current in child support payments; 57.8 % of Child support payers have not received a notice with this claim.

54. In the cases where the CHILD SUPPORT PAYER did receive this type of notice, the mean amount of the child support billing error was $6,625.21.

56. 3.7 % of child support payers feel that the performance of the child support agencies was very good, 4.4 % feel it was good, 19.3 % feel it was fair, 24.0 % feel it was poor, and 48.6 % feel it was very poor.

57. 3.7 % of child support payers feel that the performance of the courts in dealing with custody and visitation issues was very good, 1.6 % feel it was good, 7.4 % feel it was fair, 19.5 % feel it was poor, and 69.6 % feel it was very poor.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/22/0048226.shtml

Suicide Myths Exposed

Scott · 22 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Canoe printed an interesting story by a woman who confronts the double standards of when men and women kill. Her main example is the recent murder-suicide of Suzanne Killinger-Johnson and her infant son. From the article: "We're more willing to blame him and exonerate her because of another myth: that when women kill, they have a "good" reason, even if we don't understand it. The corollary is that when men kill, they're just being selfish jerks." Thanks to Rand for submitting this news article.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/22/015204.shtml

Fair Treatment For Boys: An Editorial By Christina...

Scott · 23 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

George writes "I found this editorial by Christina Hoff-Sommers at the Washington Post site. It was apparently sparked by an op-ed piece done by David Sadker criticizing her book The War Against Boys. A lot of the information she includes in this article comes straight from her book. She talks about the reality of boys' underachievement in schools in the US and the efforts of 'gender experts' like Sadker and organizations such as NOW to oppose any initiative to remedy this growing imbalance. She expresses hope that increased social awareness of the fallacies promoted by 'die-hard girl partisans' will begin to reverse this unfortunate trend. It's encouraging to see that major news media sources seem to be giving her a fair share of the airtime. Click here for the link."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/23/0311222.shtml

Women Who Want It All And The Men That Can't Deliver It

Scott · 23 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a woman who certainly has some insight into the situation the men are in today: Heather Roscoe. In her recent article for SpinTech magazine, she outlines the catch-22 situation that men are in today, the contradictory expectations of men in modern society, and the fact that many women aren't entirely happy with taking on their new freedoms when they have to deal with the responsibilities which accompany them.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/23/0319208.shtml

You're Going To The Choice For Men Demonstration, Right?

Scott · 23 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

What? You haven't heard? There's going to be a public demonstration in support of male reproductive rights on Capitol Hill this Saturday. So pack a lunch, bring a sign or two, and head out to D.C.! For more details click here. Mensactivism.org will be reporting live updates from the event, so if you absolutely can't make it, check this site frequently on Saturday the 26th!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/23/0418258.shtml

Fred's Common Sense Educational Advice

Scott · 23 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Fredoneverything had a good opinion article on the current state of education - and, as you could guess, Fred's got a bone to pick with it. His recommendations are great common sense observations, though he seems to think that women are the ones fit to be teachers (but fathers, he also says, should offer assistance and guidance from home). Fred's generally a very pro-male commentator, so I felt this was appropriate to post considering the awareness of the educational problems boys face.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/23/0349202.shtml

Newsday On Battered Men

Scott · 24 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This article from Newsday attempts to dispel myths about battered men. I almost sense a tone of restraint from the article's message, but perhaps it will be more effective in that people might be more willing to accept the message. Any recognition of DV against men is worthwhile. Here's a good quote: "In many ways, it is much more difficult for the male victim of domestic violence because of the special stigma that attaches to being a battered man...Abused men also find it difficult to get out of violent relationships because they fear losing custody or even visitation with their children...they must often deal with ridicule as well as lack of understanding."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/24/2141217.shtml

British CSA To Pay More For Mistakes?

Scott · 25 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I have no idea if this is intended to help women receiving money from the Child Support Agency, or men paying the organization, but this UK Times article (courtesy of IHF) reports that the compensation amount paid to victims of clerical mistakes made by the CSA should be increased from 250 to 1,000 pounds. This sounds like some sort of accountability system, but is it? I'm not sure, but it seems like interesting news.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/24/2329214.shtml

Vote For Choice For Men!

Scott · 25 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Vote.com is doing a legal poll on whether men should have the right to abortion. The results of the poll will be sent to Patricia Ireland of NOW and Sidney Siller, Esq. of the National Organization for Men. Click here to cast your vote and show your support of male reproductive rights! Update: The poll is now over. You can view the results by clicking here. Better luck next time, I guess. :(

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/25/1638208.shtml

More On Men In Higher Education

Scott · 26 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Denver Post printed this fact-filled story on the status of men in higher education. It includes a lot of statistical info and charts, and focuses primarily on Colorado's college system, but includes data on the national situation too. I've actually been pleasantly surprised that this topic has received so much attention from the media. I just hope something is done about it, too.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/26/1648233.shtml

Enter The Mind Of A Modern Woman

Scott · 26 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Okay, I don't think this is true for all women, but quite a few. The National Post printed this story on how women essentially use men for their money, and feel no guilt about it. Why? "When men hand you money, you're just being treated as you deserve to be treated...It's the new feminism to say, 'I'm expensive. I need lots of attention. I need men to bend over backwards for me'" If men would fully realize this and stop playing into this trap, we would be so much further ahead. Be sure to send this article to every man you know and observe his reaction. Thanks to Peter Dudley for submitting this news story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/26/1639234.shtml

Live! From The Choice For Men Demonstration

Scott · 26 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I received a phone call from Kim, who's with the group demonstrating at the West Front of the Capitol Building to promote men's reproductive rights. They're picketing, handing out flyers, and informing passers-by about choice for men. They'll be there until 5 PM. I've called the Washington Post, but if anyone in the DC area knows anyone else to call to try to get some reporters down there, please do so! Thanks!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/26/1926241.shtml

Baskerville On Divorce Law

Scott · 27 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Stephen Baskerville wrote an excellent article for DadsDivorce.com, entitled, "What We (Should) Want". In it, he discusses his theory on what divorce law should be, with the primary premise that "No one has the right to separate a child from a parent without compelling evidence of wrongdoing." His ideas go further than mandatory joint custody and the "best interests of the child", which is practically meaningless the way it is applied today. It's a good, thoughtful read.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/26/1741241.shtml

Prosecutor Argues Wife of Fred Lane Planned Slaying

Scott · 27 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

George writes "This is the most recent development in the shotgun death of NFL running back Fred Lane. The wife, Deidra Lane, appears to be the major suspect. All of the facts are not yet clear, but this may be one to keep an eye on to observe how 'gender-neutrally' the case is handled. The judge has already granted a bond release despite the strong argument of the prosecutor. Click here to read the story"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/27/0529250.shtml

Was Lane Killed To Collect Insurance Money?

Scott · 27 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's some more news on Fred Lane, who was shot by his wife early in July. Was he killed so his wife could collect $5 million from an insurance policy that was recently taken out for him? "'Fred Lane had no value to Deidra Lane while he was alive,' [the prosecuting attorney] said. 'The state contends this was first-degree murder. She laid in wait to kill him.'" Lane's wife could face the death penalty, so why was she jailed on only $100k bond? This is appalling. ESPN.com ran the story here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/26/1815222.shtml

New Book: Sex, Lies & Feminism

Scott · 27 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Peter Zohrab writes "My book, "Sex, Lies & Feminism" is now on sale at:

this site
in electronic (PDF/Acrobat) format.

It will later appear in hard-copy (paper) format. For updates, see:

http://www.backlash.com" Thanks for the news, Peter! Anyone want to do a book review to post here?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/27/0332255.shtml

'Climate of Fear' Sweeps Europe Over Pedophilia

Scott · 27 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is disturbing news: the media and feminist activists have been joining forces recently in Europe to portray men as sexual predators of young children. This was sparked the the recent "naming and shaming" campaign which lists convicted sex offenders in local newspapers in the UK. Read the National Post story. I've followed much of this news from IHF, but have not bothered to post any of it here until now. This has been building up for some time, and one can only hope that it won't spread to the U.S.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/26/1828220.shtml

Sperm Donors Can Be Forced To Testify In Court

Scott · 28 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is interesting: the Supreme Court of California recently ruled that sperm donors do not have an unlimited right to privacy, and can be forced to testify in court when a compelling state interest is at stake. This could also have profound affects on the privacy of couples who choose to give up a baby for adoption. FindLaw has the Associated Press story here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/28/0237224.shtml

The "Feminisation Of The Teaching Profession"

Scott · 28 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Australian Sunday Telegraph printed this story on the imbalance of female teachers in primary schools, which is acknowledged to have a negative effect on boys. It refers to a federal study which shows that Australian boys are 5% behind girls in academics, and suggests that the gap may be much larger (15-22%) than this.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/28/0254230.shtml

New Men's Rights Group At NC State Univ.

Scott · 29 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Chuck Jones from North Carolina State University will be starting a men's group on campus. News of this is already causing a stir, and you can tune in to the college radio station at this link to hear Chuck on the radio on Tuesday, Aug. 29, at 6:00 PM Eastern Time. Way to go Chuck!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/29/032214.shtml

Photos From The Choice For Men Demonstration

Scott · 29 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Okay, I've now got some pictures from the male reproductive rights demonstration held in Washington, D.C. on August 26, 2000. You can check them out here. Congratulations to all of the protesters and thanks for getting the ball rolling!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/29/145218.shtml

New Info On The Suicide Gap

Scott · 30 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An anonymous reader sent in this link to a short UK Times article on male suicide - in an interesting context. Apparently it is the case that power line workers and people (generally men) who work with large electrical machinery are more likely to kill themselves. The reason for this is that exposure to high magnetic fields affects the levels of melatonin in the brain. Perhaps this should call for suicide prevention programs at these types of workplaces?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/30/1553212.shtml

Deidra Lane Says She Shot In Self Defense

Scott · 31 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's some new news on the Lane domestic violence tragedy: Deidra Lane told the 911 operator that her husband had hit and choked her before she shot and killed him. ABCnews has the story here. Want to see something interesting? Observe how little attention this case got up until this point, and then see how much attention it will be given from this point on. It was not stated in the article if there was any physical evidence, ie, a physician's report, that would validate her claims of being abused.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/31/0146248.shtml

Good News On Prostate Cancer Funding

Scott · 31 August 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America announced, "Many persons may not be aware that a great deal of medical research is done by the Department of Defense. Much of this research addresses cancer. On August 9, President Clinton signed into law a bill that will increase the DOD prostate cancer research budget from $75 million to $100 million for Fiscal Year 2000. Congratulations to those who worked long and hard to make this increase in the prostate research budget a reality."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/08/31/1512201.shtml

Child Custody Data For Madison County, AL

Scott · 1 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Men's rights news seems kind of slow lately...but I recently found this article from the Huntsville Times that outlines a child custody study done by a local father's rights group in Madison County, Alabama. The findings shouldn't be a big surprise to any of my readers (there was extreme bias against giving custody to the father), but it's interesting that there is data in this level of detail for a local community. It might be useful to keep for future reference.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/01/0423233.shtml

Obsolete Feminism

Scott · 1 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Sean writes "Well, you can't teach old dogs new tricks, but some young women can think on their own. In a breath of fresh air, a twenty one year-old woman pronounces "Feminism: obsolete" in a response to an article in the Seattle Weekly. It is the last letter to the editor, of course. It made my day. I thought it was worth sharing...here's the link."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/01/1920202.shtml

Prostate Cancer Awareness Week Is Coming Up

Scott · 3 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is to let everyone know that Prostate Cancer Awareness Week is Sept. 18-24, 2000. There's a web page, www.pcaw.com, which has a list of free or low-cost screenings around the country you can attend if you are over the age of 50 or a "high risk" (if it's in your family medical history or you're an African American) male over the age of 35. Click on "Read More" to read a general announcement about PCAW, and please do something to promote awareness of it - write a letter to your local newspaper about it, or buy some prostate cancer awareness US postage stamps.

12th Annual Prostate Cancer Awareness Week: September 18-24, 2000

Prostate Cancer Awareness Week is the nation's largest cancer screening program having attracted over 3 million participants. It was developed because of the alarming percentage of men presenting advanced, incurable prostate cancer. The Prostate Tests/Screening have reduced mortality from the disease as much as 42%. And yet, it is estimated that over 31,000 will die this year because they didn't get an examination soon enough.

If you are a man over 50, or are an African American man over 35 or have a history of prostate cancer in your family, let this be your reminder to arrange a free or low cost appointment now to get tested. For the location nearest you, see http://www.pcaw.com. If you want a free reminder next year, sign-up for the free reminder service at http://www.menstuff.org/feedback/feedbackProstate.html

The national chairmen of this campaign are General Norman Schwartzkopf, who has served as since 1994. In 1996, actor Danny Glover joined as co-chairman in order to help recruit African American men, who have a

223% greater incidence of prostate cancer and over 30% greater chance of dying from prostate cancer than other men. This year, legendary golfer Arnold Palmer has joined in the fight.

This is a national education, service and research program. The first year of the program (1989), there were fewer than 100 screening centers in the United States. Today, this number has increased to over 300 locations providing free or low-cost prostate cancer screening with digital rectal examination (DRE) and prostate-specific antigen (PSA) testing during Prostate Cancer Awareness Week.

This public awareness and education program was conceived and instituted by the Prostate Cancer Education Council (PCEC) which represents urology, oncology, patient advocacy, minorities, clinical and behavioral research.
The PCED was formed in 1988 to promote awareness, screening and early detection of prostate cancer.

If you are a man 15-34, you may be at risk of developing and dying from testicular cancer. To find out more, see www.menstuff.org/issues/byissue/testicular.html. If you would like to sign-up for our free monthly self-exam reminder, you can do that at http://www.menstuff.org/feedback/feedbackTesticules.html.

Please pass this information on to all of the men you know, and to those who care about men. And, please put it on your listserv, if you have one. Yours in good health.

Gordon Clay, Executive Director

The National Men's Resource Center

Working since 1982 to end men's isolation

www.menstuff.org menstuff@menstuff.org

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/03/0044201.shtml

Gender Equity Bites Back

Scott · 3 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Rand wrote in to tell me about this link from the Washington Times. It's an editorial piece by a woman who is exposing unfairness in the way that Title IX is implemented - and gives examples of how it also works in the reverse, to work against women's sports. It seems to me that sports must be one area were the physical differences between men and women cannot be ignored, and she makes this point well.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/03/1354253.shtml

Experts Debate Whether Boys Or Girls Are In Crisis

Scott · 3 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

George writes "I found this article in the Seattle Times. Despite the title, it's more of a collection of views from prominent people in the field on the difficulties faced by boys compared to those faced by girls than it is about scholarly debates, although it does mention The War Against Boys as a catalyst of the discussion. The article seems to convey a positive message in that all children are worthy of our best efforts to raise them well even though that may mean using different approaches to addressing boys' and girls' problems." Great submission George - thanks!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/03/1716205.shtml

Is Jealousy A Feminine Trait?

Scott · 5 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Daily Record printed a short article on jealousy and revenge, quoting a psychologist who claims that women are more likely to have jealous feelings and take revenge on others. I'm sure any man who has initiated a divorce knows exactly how true this is! I'm not trying to present this as a sound scientific study, but something that's perhaps worth further investigation...

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/05/0210259.shtml

British Teachers Assoc. Asks For Presumption Of Innocence

Scott · 5 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF submitted this link to a UK Times story on false accusations. A UK teacher's association is asking for changes to be made to school policy in cases of student accusations - including not suspending teachers and maintaining as much anonymity as possible until a conviction is made. This proposal was prompted by a female teacher who went through a false abuse accusation recently.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/04/2147207.shtml

Blind Justice? Not Even Close

Scott · 5 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is definitely something to think about: The Washington Post printed this story on a carefully built study which shows with great accuracy how race and gender play a role in sentencing. Here are the results: in a typical drunk driving vehicular homicide, if a man is a victim the sentence is 56 percent shorter than if a woman is killed, and if the victim is black the sentence is 53 percent shorter than if a white person was killed. This is some very strong evidence of how men's lives (both black and white) are devalued compared to women's. And we are paying a very real price for this injustice.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/04/2148213.shtml

The Effects Of Divorce On Children

Scott · 5 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Hartford Courant had a very informative article on Divorce and its effects on children. The results are are somewhat surprising, and very politically incorrect. You can read the article here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/05/0244200.shtml

Taking A Second Look At Sex Accusations

Scott · 6 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Detroit News had an excellent editorial by Martha Churchill, on the subject of trials on sex crimes. She reasonably examines the hysteria surrounding these cases, and suggests that many of them are not fair trials, using examples to prove her point. No doubt we need more writers such as Churchill to help expose this problem. You can read the article at this link.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/06/0140244.shtml

Some More News On The Male Pill

Scott · 6 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Still waiting for the "male pill"? So am I, but according to this CNN article, it's still a long way off. And there are side effects to consider too. Nevertheless, the drug may have a rough beginning but be refined as time goes on, so time will tell how effective an option this will be for men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/06/0145201.shtml

Reader Submission: Sociology Findings

Scott · 6 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl submitted a short writing on the sociology of the Nayar Indian culture, to demonstrate how men have also been marginalized in various world cultures throughout history (to contrast with the feminist party line that only men dominate and oppress). This is an interesting topic that doesn't get much attention today. Click "Read More..." to read his short essay. The media does it's darndest to tell us about cultures and societies around the world where women appear to get the short end of the stick (that is, if you just take a superficial look at that particular society's customs). But they never tell us about society's in which the customs are such that men appear to get a raw deal. The Nayar people of India are a good example. According to "The Encyclopedia of World Cultures (South Asia edition)," in Nayar culture, "Traditional inheritance was in the matriline only. Any property a man possessed went to his sisters and their children. As men took to modern, Western professions and started accumulating personal wealth as opposed to family property, they began passing it on to their own biological children. As a result, there are today slightly different laws regulating inherited and acquired wealth. However, even today it is customary for a man to put his self-acquired property in his wife's name so that it can then be inherited matrilineally. Furthermore, a man feels greater responsibility for his sister's children than for his brothers children. Even men living away from Kerala (the Nayar's home state) in Delhi or New York are more likely to sponsor a sister's son or daughter than a brother's."

To add, the Nayar people also have complex marriage customs in which, at least as of the turn of the century in subgroups of the Nayar, it was acceptable for a wife to have more than one husband, in a sense. Again from the book mention above: "Sambandan involved a man having a "visiting husband" relationship with a woman. While such relationships were considered to be marriages by the woman's family, especially when they occurred with males of higher subcastses or castes, the males tended to view the relationships as concubinage. Traditionally Nayar women were allowed to have more than one "visiting husband" either simultaneously or serially."

This is the kind of stuff you'll never see in "Time" or on "The Today Show". As a former ESL (English as a Second Language) teacher, I've met many women from cultures that are supposed to be oppressive to women. When I've asked these women about their lot in life, none of them have suggested for a moment that they would prefer to trade places with men in their culture.

Bill Kuhl

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/06/0123229.shtml

Trials For A Prostate Cancer Cure

Scott · 6 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Aceman wrote in about a link to this MSNBC story on a potential prostate cancer vaccine. It includes interviews with three men who are participating in preliminary trials of the vaccine, and is a very thought provoking article.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/06/1642255.shtml

The XY Files: Real Sexes, Real Differences

Scott · 6 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Independent Women's Forum, whose membership includes Christina Hoff Sommers and Cathy Young, will be hosting a forum on sex differences entitled "The XY Files: The Truth is Out There. . .About the Differences between Boys and Girls": Building on our reputation as an organization that engages in 'myth-busting,' IWF will host an important panel discussion, "The XY Files: The Truth is out There. . .About the Differences between Boys and Girls " on September 15 at the National Press Club from 12:00 - 2:00 pm in the Holeman Lounge. Click here for more info about this event, which promises to take a realistic look at gender differences.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/06/0150250.shtml

Catholic Bishops Steeped In DV Politics

Scott · 7 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I think this may be my first story under the religion topic: The Irish Times printed this story about a proposal to edit scripture to recognize the reality of domestic violence. The "reality", of course, is what is being debated. There is apparently one sentence that acknowledges that women can be violent toward men, but the rest of the proposal is full of feminist-inspired doctrine on DV. The article itself is pro-male and sympathetic to male survivors of DV.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/07/1416219.shtml

Mother Kills Baby Son; No Jail Time Required

Scott · 7 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Australia's Daily Telegraph printed a shocking story: A mother killed her 15 month old son because she was depressed that her strict family forced her to give the child up for adoption since she was single. The judge felt the circumstances were so extereme that he is not requiring her to do any jail time. Read the article and see just how extereme these circumstances are - she was simply depressed! She also stabbed the baby 5 times. This outcome would not happen to a man in a similar situation.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/07/1424230.shtml

Reader Debunks "Shortchanged Girl" Studies

Scott · 8 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "Mike Spiniola published this letter to the editor in the Denver Post. I just flew to Denver from Los Angeles for a couple weeks to work on a state growth initiative and I read this at a bus stop. Put a smile on my day."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/08/1226233.shtml

Effective Article On Divorce Reform

Scott · 8 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham submitted this link to an article by Jed Abraham in The Washington Times. It's very well written and articulate, and Abraham examines why it is that joint custody has such a positive effect on the well-being of children and reduces the divorce rate. It's an extremely effective article that isn't excessively confrontational, and I think it's something that I would give to a person to demonstrate the pluses of joint custody. Check it out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/08/214232.shtml

Feminist Logic: Gloria Steinem Gets Married

Scott · 9 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Yup, this is for real. Gloria "a a woman without a man is like a fish without a bicycle" Steinem has married at the ripe age of 66. The irony of this is incredible. Yahoo! News has the Reuters story here. Considering all the inconsistencies and irrationality of feminst theory, this can't be too much of a surprise.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/08/2211207.shtml

Aussie Interview With CHS

Scott · 9 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham also wrote in to let me know of this link, which is a transcript of a news show which featured an interview with Christina Hoff-Sommers (you've seen the name often enough, I can abbreviate it CHS, right?). It's good to see this issue is getting international attention, and mention was made that the Australian Parliament was looking into the crisis boys are in when it comes to education.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/08/2120211.shtml

Colorado News Media Ignores DV Against Men

Scott · 10 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Dr. Charles Corry has done an investigation of Colorado's leading newspaper, The Denver Post, and found some very biased reporting on domestic violence. Dr. Corry runs the DV Against Men - CO web site, and recently became a site sponsor. Read on to take a look at his findings and see an example of how to bring a media outlet to task for ignoring critical men's issues.

As of August, 2000, Colorado's leading newspaper has run some fifty (50) stories on domestic violence against women, lesbians, and gays since July, 1999 http://www.denverpost.com/news/violence/violence.htm Incredibly, not one story covers intimate violence against or abuse of heterosexual men by women.

Is this what passes in Colorado for fair and balanced reporting?

None of the stories such as the one of the U.S. Attorney who ran over her boyfriend twice, the FBI agent who hit her husband in the face with a snow shovel, or any of the rest of the many news stories the Denver Post covered on domestic violence against men are included or referenced in your coverage of family violence.

Conversely, many vignettes describing violence by Colorado women against their intimate partners can be found in the Violent Women chapter of Domestic Violence Against Men - Colorado at http://www.dvmen.org/dv-70.htm

Some of the many murders of husbands and lovers by women in Colorado are covered in the Women Who Kill section at http://www.dvmen.org/dv-72.htm

I will admit that the idea that heterosexual men should have equal rights with women and homosexuals is radical in these enlightened times. However, heterosexual men are people too.

Note also that seven resources are given in Colorado for gay and lesbian help with domestic violence http://www.dvmen.org/dv-87.htm while only two can be found for heterosexual men http://www.dvmen.org/dv-81.htm and those two are very limited.

I don't think fewer services should be provided women or homosexuals who are victims of intimate violence. But there is no known reason that established shelters cannot help ALL victims of abuse and violence regardless of sex or sexual orientation.

At present, however, I wouldn't suggest any abused man call up the local shelter and expect help. Perhaps that can be changed?

--

Charles E. Corry, Ph.D., F.G.S.A.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/10/0318248.shtml

The Women's Vote And Society

Scott · 10 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Aceman writes "This is a superb article on how women vote and some of the gender differences in voting and best of all it's written by a woman. it's a week or two old but it's well worth reading." This is a very thought provoking article - check it out!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/10/0323253.shtml

Betsy Hart Takes On The Wage Gap

Scott · 10 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Betsy Hart from Jewish World Review wrote this essay on the recent news that Al Gore is going to give women "equal pay for equal work", which as most of us know already exists. Her debunking of the wage gap myth is quite simple, and shows just how political and irrational the topic is. Anyone interested in researching this topic further might also be interested in some resources I collected together at this web site.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/10/1848200.shtml

More On The Effects Of Divorce On Children

Scott · 11 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The National Post printed a story on new research on the effects of divorce on children in their adult lives, and the findings are again disturbing. A greater likelihood to divorce and to use drugs are only two of the findings, and the psychological effects also last into adulthood, making it harder for adults of divorced parents to form intimate relationships. Details on how the study was done suggests that this is going to have a profound effect on the way sociologists view divorce.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/10/1856210.shtml

Commentary On Steinem's Wedding Bells

Scott · 11 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An anonymous reader sent in this link to Kathleen Parker's latest column, where she shares some thoughts on the recent marriage of Gloria Steinem. Her conclusions on Steinem's philosophy: "Choice is always good, as long as it's a woman's." I couldn't have summed it up better myself.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/11/0115211.shtml

The Struggles Of Single Dads

Scott · 12 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I think this article from The Denver Post will speak to a lot of single dads out there. It talks about the lack of recognition that many women do walk out on families, and the lack of organizations to lobby for single father's needs. It also speaks of the chaos that is created when many of these women come back a few years later and regain custody of the children, destroying what stability was rebuilt by the father after the abandonment.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/10/192211.shtml

Gender Issues In The Election

Scott · 12 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Adam H submitted this link to an LA Times article on gender preferences in the US presidential election. It's an interesting analysis of voting dynamics in this election and what influences them. Note: The Men's Activism News Network does not officially endorse any presidential candidates.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/12/1235219.shtml

Paternity Leave In The UK

Scott · 13 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF submitted this story from the UK Telegraph. It's on fathers in Britain asking for paternity leave, and includes statistics supporting the need for paternity leave. The bottom line: men want paternity leave and many will make use of it. So why continue the discrimination? Here is a slightly older link to a story on the proposed government plan for paternity leave, which would allow two week's paid leave for fathers immediately after the child is born.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/13/0243253.shtml

Youth Suicide On The Rise

Scott · 13 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

And more news from IHF: this UK Telegraph article looks at the suicide rates for British college students and found a disturbing rise in the rate over the past several years. Thankfully, the article acknowledges the prevalence of male suicide, stating that the male suicide rate is about three times higher than women. Yet the two examples of suicides they mention were of young women. We have the data, but when are people going to realize: men aren't killing themselves because they've made their patriarchal societies so great for themselves - they have valid problems and issues and they need to be addressed.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/13/0255233.shtml

GAO Confirms Lack Of Men's Health Research

Scott · 13 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I received this from the Men's Health America mailing list: the General Accounting Office released a report which outlines the research inequities between men's and women's health, showing exactly how under funded and underrepresented men's heath is. Click below to read the press release. September 13, 2000

Press Release---For Immediate Release

Information: Edward E. Bartlett, 301-670-1964

GAO REPORT REVEALS IMBALANCE IN GENDER-SPECIFIC RESEARCH

The General Accounting Office has recently released a report revealing that men's health research is underfunded and men are underrepresented in medical research, compared to women's health.

According to the GAO report (1), the percentage of NIH expenditures allotted to men's health research in FY 99 was 6.4%, compared to 15.5% for women's health research. And males represented only 37.1% of all participants in extramural research, compared to 61.9% female. The GAO also reported that the NIH has 740 female-only studies in progress, compared to only 244 male-studies at the present time.

Men's Health America has conducted additional analyses, and has concluded this disparity in gender-specific funding cannot be explained by historical imbalances that unfairly favored men's health research.

This conclusion is especially true in light of men's higher mortality risk. For example, in the area of cancer research:

- A 1991 report revealed that only 43% of Phase II and III enrollees in the Clinical Trials Cooperative Program were male (2).

- A 1999 analysis of the Southwest Oncology Group trials reported a 42% male enrollment (3).

- Prostate cancer research has lagged breast cancer research by a 1:4 margin (4), even though similar numbers of persons are diagnosed with these conditions each year.

- A review of the Medline database reveals from 1966-1999, there were 33% more published studies of cancer in women than in men (5).

The NIH Revitalization Act of 1993 (PL 103-43) mandates equal gender representation in medical research.

References:

1. General Accounting Office: Women's Health. GAO/HEHS-00-96, May 2000.

2. Ungerleider RS, Friedman MA. Sex, trials, and datatapes. J Natl Cancer Institute 1991; 83: 16-17.

3. Hutchins LF, Unger JM, Crowley JJ et al. Underrepresentation of patients 65 years of age or older in cancer-treatment trials. New Engl J Med 1999; 341: 2061-2067.

4. Research Dollars by Various Cancers. www.nci.nih.gov/public/factbk97/varican.htm

5. Descriptors: Malignancy, United States, Human, Clinical trials

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/13/0316239.shtml

Cathy Young Applauds MH College Article

Scott · 14 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham wrote in to tell me about this Detroit News story by Cathy Young (an incredible asset of ours). She addresses the criticisms of the recent Men's Health article on anti-male colleges, and gives some good examples of instances where men are demeaned and also censored when they question facts or challenge generalizations in Women's Studies classes.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/14/1215238.shtml

The Lone Fathers Assocation

Scott · 14 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham also wanted to bring attention to the Lone Fathers Association of Australia, which is an organization devoted to helping fathers regain custody of their children and promote equal protection of fathers in family court. Aussie dads will definitely want to check it out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/14/1220213.shtml

Prostate Cancer Research Receives $20M Personal Grant

Scott · 14 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Men's Health America list reported that the University of Virginia School of Medicine received a $20M grant to be used for prostate cancer research funding. The grant was from the estate of the late Paul Mellon. You can read a news report on the donation here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/14/171232.shtml

Prisons Teaching Fatherhood

Scott · 15 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

George writes "I found this article about programs being started in several states of the U.S. to help fathers in prison have more interaction with their children. It's perhaps a bit different from the typical article on fathers, but it's kind of encouraging in that these men may now be better able to fulfill at least somewhat the role of father in their children's lives. The new programs reportedly are already promoting better behavior among participating inmates."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/15/1314224.shtml

For Divorced Dads Seking Equal Time

Scott · 15 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham has submitted another story (way to go Robert!) on father's issues. It's from The Philadelphia Inquirer, and can be read here. It focuses a lot on the organization Fathers' and Children's Equality (FACE), and the ways they are helping divorced fathers out in a very biased family law system.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/15/179207.shtml

Ralph Nader Not Interested In "Gonadal Politics"

Scott · 16 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous Reader writes: "I know you're not trying to advocate presidential candidates with your site, but I thought this was relevant: Ralph Nader was recently attacked by Patricia Ireland for not being outspoken on women's rights. The SF Gate printed this story on it, then the next day printed this one where Nader rebukes Ireland, saying NOW has not focused on many of his consumer issues which are very relevant to women. BUT, here's what I find most interesting: he's not willing to stoop to the level where he panders to feminists on issues like domestic violence and eating disorders. It seems like he's implicitly saying that he knows it's a load of BS." Note: The Men's Activism News Network does not officially endorse any presidential candidates.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/16/0232245.shtml

Culture Conflict: Latinos And Statutory Rape

Scott · 16 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Stephen Jacobs submitted this article on a surprising finding: an overwhelming majority of statutory rape convictions are made against Latino men, including those who are successfully married and raising a family. The convictions often tear families apart, and it seems that in Latino culture, having young girls married at an early age is commonplace. There is considerable contempt for men in the article: "'Sure, there are those cases where there's a baby and the father is sticking around and paying the bills and nobody wishes he was reported,' [Santa Clara District Attorney] said. `But you don't know how long he will be there.'"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/16/2129252.shtml

Fathers Still Expected To Pay Child Support While In Prison

Scott · 17 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An anonymous reader sent in this link to a maddening news story. Apparently if a man is convicted of a crime and paying child support, he is still responsible for paying it while serving his prison sentence. This of course causes these men to become "deadbeat dads" by the time they are freed, and in some cases fathers have been thrown back in jail shortly after being freed because of delinquency on child support!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/16/2354235.shtml

Healthcare Agencies Unfriendly To Young Men

Scott · 17 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Yahoo! News printed this article which discusses some of the reasons that men don't feel comfortable going to the doctor or entering the healthcare field: they are often shunned at healthcare agencies when younger, and doctors and nurses often have negative stereotypes of teen boys as irresponsible and untrustworthy. One example from the story was a young man who went with his girlfriend to learn how to use a diaphragm, and was told by clinic staff that men were not welcome in the waiting room!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/16/224236.shtml

News On Prostate Cancer

Scott · 17 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Adam H writes "I've found two men's health articles, the first on the lesser known Prostatitis disorder at this link and also an article on the side effects of prostate cancer treatment at this link. Cheers." Thanks for the links, Adam H! They are very informative articles.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/17/004232.shtml

Examining Victimology

Scott · 18 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham submitted another thought provoking piece by Cathy Young in The Boston Globe. It is on the topic of sex crime cases, and how we have come to accept that questioning the alleged victim is generally unacceptable and "revictimizes" the person. But at the same time, the presumption of innocence cannot be upheld in this mindset. She uses as an example a recent sex crime case in Massachusetts involving a 12 year-old boy.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/18/1232253.shtml

Prenatal Classes For Men Only

Scott · 18 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert_Cunningham wrote in about another great story, this one on a man from Canada who has created prenatal parenting classes just for new dads. The National Post article can be read here. The story talks about the importance dads play in the development of children, and recognizes that mothers are often "gatekeepers" affecting how involved dads can be with their kids. It's good to see that programs like this are being started, and I'd like to see them catch on.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/18/1245217.shtml

Supreme Court Rules That Police Can Be Held Accountable In False Accusation Cases

Scott · 19 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I found this story in the Seattle P-I. It announces that the Supreme Court of Washington State has ruled that police involved in child abuse cases which turn out to be unfounded can be sued if they are guilty of negligence in handling the case. Hopefully this will put a damper on the "witch hunt" style abuse cases similar to the one Washington had five years ago that are based solely on the accusations of a minor.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/19/1051227.shtml

Women In Science

Scott · 19 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Bilal writes "This L.A. Times article says that hostility against women in the workplace is the reason for the low numbers of women in science, but shows little evidence for that. It says nothing about gender expectations on men to be primary breadwinners or the choices professional women often make to stay home and raise children. This one deserves as many responses as it can get."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/19/2110242.shtml

Deidra Lane Held Without Bail - For Bank Robbery

Scott · 20 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Fred Lane domestic violence saga continues, as I was notified by Steve Hoffman about this ABCnews article. It appears that Fred may have been killed to keep him from revealing that his wife robbed a bank, and she has now been formally charged for the crime and is being held without bail. Can anyone not be outraged that she had been held on $100k bond for the murder charges, but only now is being held without bail?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/20/0223201.shtml

Time Article On Divorce

Scott · 20 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Time magazine printed this feature story on divorce and its effects on children. It seems that people are finally starting to wake up to what should be a common sense notion: that divorce can and does affect children for the rest of their lives. And, as un-PC as this may be, barring abuse or addictions, staying together in a bad marriage is generally better for the children than splitting up. I noticed several implicit references to men being the ones to leave or break up families in the article, but overall it is pretty good and well-balanced.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/20/134229.shtml

Fatherlessness And Black Boys' Self Esteem

Scott · 20 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Related to the previous divorce article from Time, a reader submitted this Yahoo! news story on the self esteem of fatherless black boys. The study demonstrated a significant difference in self-esteem between African-Americans with and without fathers, but no such gap for black girls. And without father figures in their lives, many young black men turn to gangs for affirming their masculinity.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/20/1312204.shtml

Betrayal Of The Child

Scott · 20 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Lots of news today on divorce and family issues... An anonymous user sent in this link to excerpts of an upcoming book Betrayal of the Child, which is on family law issues and how they are destroying families and harming children. There is a good focus on the issue of fathers being shut out of their children's lives (except as a paycheck) and a call for more shared parenting/joint custody rulings in divorce cases.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/20/1319238.shtml

Cathy Young Debunks Women's Health Negligence

Scott · 21 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This piece from Salon.com is on the hype and misperceptions surrounding the supposed lack of funding for women's health issues. It's written by Cathy Young, and in her typical style, she does a very thorough job, though she dismisses the gender "death gap" as a simple fact of biology rather than social factors (such as men's roles and lack of concern for men's health issues). Nevertheless, there are lots of good facts to be found in this article.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/21/1442256.shtml

Girl Scout Discrimination

Scott · 21 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

James Bohne writes "We all know that men discriminate and women are fair-minded victims, don't we? Not according to Joseph Picca, a graphic designer for the Girl Scouts of the U.S.A. This article published in the Salt Lake Tribune claims Mr. Picca has been passed over repeatedly in favor of less experienced female designers for art director and other managerial positions. He is exercising his right to seek civil compensation from the Girl Scout's for employment discrimination."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/21/172225.shtml

Great Men's Health Site

Scott · 22 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An anonymous reader wrote in to tell me about a great health site with many sound reports on men's health. Check out DrMirkin.com and the numerous reports in the men's health section.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/21/2120223.shtml

Young People Still Affected By Gender Steretypes

Scott · 22 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF submitted a link to this UK Guardian story on how young people perceive gender roles and their behavior. It should be little surprise that there are tons of mixed messages out there and still a great tendency to play out the roles of one's parents. The story examines issues facing both boys and girls, and concludes: "At different times in the past decades public anxiety has focused on one or more of the genders, but it needs to be recognised that both young women and men may be vulnerable in different ways."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/22/0021227.shtml

The UN Promotes Gender Fallacies

Scott · 22 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

James Bohne writes "Using tried and true fallacies and half-truths feminist/supremacist causes are being exported by none other than the United Nations. This article featured in the Salt Lake Tribune repeats many of the claims and finger pointing promoting gender polarity and misandry in America over the last 30 years. Typical of good political propagandizing, it is sprinkled with enough truth to create an appearance of credibility to their scapegoating. The fact that both men and women are affected by poverty is ignored. It isn't enough men in third world countries bare the burden of protecting and providing for women and children under the most difficult conditions, they must now bare the social burden of being blamed for the social conditions keeping them and their families impoverished, and the guilt for not protecting women from conditions beyond their control."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/22/125212.shtml

Lazio Lashes Out At Debate Critics

Scott · 22 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

You may have heard of the recent political debate between New York Senator candidates Rick Lazio and Hillary Clinton. Toward the end of the debate, Lazio walked over to Clinton, demanding that she sign a contract to promise not to use soft money in the campaign. Critics of Lazio's "confrontational" tactics were accused of being "sexist" by Lazio recently, and I think it's really good that he is exposing this double standard of gender. Lazio has also spoken bluntly on the issue of gender in the political race. You can read the article from the NY Times here (Free registration with the NYT may be required to view the article).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/22/0031204.shtml

Critical News On Ritalin

Scott · 22 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This story is on the use and abuse of Ritalin, the notorious drug used for the treatment of hyperactivity and attention defecit disorders. It confirms that Ritalin is an addictive drug when abused, and suggests that children taking the drug who have been misdiagnosed should be considered "abusers" of the drug, and taken off of it. I often wonder: would I have been put on Ritalin as a child if I were born in this day, and how would it have influenced my life?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/22/0049229.shtml

Feminist Lies & Misinformation

Scott · 23 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham wrote in about the recent Cathy Young article about gender issues in medical research, and also to alert me to this Australian opinion piece by a woman who is attacking the September Men's Health feature article on colleges that are pro/anti-male. She quickly reduces the article to: "At the core of his argument is the assertion that anything pro-women is anti-male." and that the "implicit, and now explicit, anti-women agenda that Men's Health [magazine]...sprouts" has been revealed. Interesting that even Aussie feminists are getting upset up about this article.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/23/195223.shtml

Women Equally Bullies In The Workplace

Scott · 23 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Rand wrote in with a very interesting story from the National Post. It's on "workplace bullies", and it was found that women bullied their co-workers and subordinates as often as men did. Very interesting findings. And here's a very thought provoking article: "'As a man, I'm surprised by those figures,' said Dr. Namie, 'but I'm surrounded by women who say, "What's the big surprise?"'" That's something to think about for a bit. You can read the story at this link.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/23/1832222.shtml

Great Interview with CHS.

Scott · 24 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham writes "Here is a sizeable interview of Christina Hoff Sommers, where she persuasively argues why the special needs of boys are ignored at school. The plight of these boys is not helped when two sociopaths [The Columbine Killers] are presented by educators as symbols of the American maleness. Their plight is also not helped when these educators are silent about the role of fathers and their importance." I thought CHS did a great job in this interview. She was obviously well prepared for it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/23/233230.shtml

On-line Divorce Guide For Fathers

Scott · 24 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Craig Ventimiglia, Manager of DadsDivorce.com writes "The following is an excerpt from our online divorce guide written by Joseph Cordell. This portion deals with the steps to take and issues to consider when a custody dispute looms on the horizon..." Click "Read More..." to read the excerpt or click here to go directly to the DadsDivorce site to read the entire guide.

Custody Issues before Filing: Positioning Yourself Early

An excerpt from "Dad's Guide to Custody"

By Joseph Cordell

Filing a petition is the step that formally launches a dissolution action and triggers the panoply of laws governing divorce. Among these laws are provisions regarding interim custody of children (i.e., laws that spell out who has what custody rights before a court issues an order). These provisions are intended to prevent ugly scrambles before a court has the opportunity to issue a temporary order, which stays in effect until the final order in the divorce proceeding.

It should be noted, however that some states have statutes that address the prefiling period. For example, Missouri recently passed a law that states the following:

> §452.310.3 Upon the filing of the petition in a proceeding for dissolution of marriage or legal separation, each child shall immediately be subject to the jurisdiction of the court in which the proceeding is commenced, unless a proceeding involving allegations of abuse or neglect of the child is pending in juvenile court. Until permitted by order of the court, neither parent shall remove any child from the jurisdiction of the court or from any parent with whom the child has primarily resided for the sixty days immediately preceding the filing of a petition for dissolution of marriage or legal separation.

This clearly restricts the range of options otherwise available before filing. In the absence of such a statute, you can make a decision as to whether you will file with or without children in your care. In some jurisdictions this can be a key decision. Many courts refuse to try a custody dispute twice. As a practical matter, what that means is that the court will not hear a full-blown trial over custody at the temporary hearing and then suffer through what would presumably be the same or similar evidence at the final hearing.

Therefore judges have a tendency (absent a Missouri-style statute to the contrary) to maintain the status quo at the temporary hearing and reserve to the final hearing the various issues relating to custody.

Depending on the waiting period for a trial, the interim custodial arrangement could substantially advance or reduce your chances of victory at the final hearing. Often a case remains pending in excess of 1 year before it actually goes to trial. This affords an opportunity to the interim custodial parent to create a record of exemplary parenting, and indeed for some, it is a necessary period to rehabilitate their image as a parent.

Additionally, the interim parent benefits by creating a somewhat settled status quo going into trial. A judge will likely be substantially influenced by the fact that the child at trial is established in a home, a neighborhood, and a school, assuming, of course, that the child is thriving in that environment.

It should be noted that for dads in particular, there is often a need to prove their ability to be a primary care giver. Moms will often allege that dad did not in fact provide much assistance during the marriage. I have found this to be true, even when both parents' work schedules during the marriage are comparable.

Obviously even in those jurisdictions that permit it, it is not always practical for dad to obtain interim primary care.

The reasons are varied: (1) mom may file first, in which case she determines the status quo at the date of filing; (2) there may be no appropriate place for dad to reside with the children, whereas mom is still in the home; and (3) dad's present work schedule in relation to mom's militates against interim primary custody for dad.

Keep in mind that the pendency period provides as much opportunity for loss as for gain. Regardless of the interim custodial arrangement, the parties' conduct during this period will be scrutinized. This will be discussed further below.

If, for logistical or other reasons, you conclude that you cannot obtain interim primary custody, your fallback position must be joint custody (i.e., at least a 50/50 arrangement). Unless the parties can reach an interim agreement as to a 50/50 schedule, which at this stage would be exceptional, the optimum arrangement is for dad to continue living in the marital home throughout the pendency of the case. Furthermore, dad must seize every opportunity for nurturing his children, and he must document everything.

However, a caveat is in order here if dad decides to continue living in the home. Virtually every state has its own version of an adult abuse order. This subject is discussed more fully elsewhere. Suffice it to say that these devices are intended to protect the victims of domestic violence. The unfortunate reality, however, is that they are often used as tools for women in divorce. Although nominally gender neutral, the truth on the ground is that men have a heavier burden than women in trying to get such an order issued.

These legal devices consist of two stages. The first is the ex parte order, which issues on the applicant's word alone without the opposing party being given an opportunity to be heard. If an ex parte order is granted, the defendant is ejected from his home with only his personal effects. He is forbidden to return to his home or anywhere else that his wife may be. He also will be deprived of custody of his children, and his access will be narrowly restricted, if not eliminated entirely. He must live this way until stage two, which is the full order hearing. This hearing typically occurs 10 to 15 days (and sometimes up to 30 days) after the ex parte order is issued.

The full order hearing provides this process with a cloak of constitutionality in that it is the theatrical point at which a citizen is afforded his "due process." However, as any experienced lawyer will tell you, the cold reality is that in the vast majority of courts, the hearing is summary in nature, with a presumption against the defendant. The good legislative intentions and the vigilance of constitutional theory are of little assistance to the accused, as he stands in a crowded courtroom in rural Missouri before a judge determined to err on the side of caution. Despite law to the contrary, the reality is that ex parte orders and full orders of protection are casually granted to women in many, if not most, courtrooms across America.

With that in mind, any dad choosing to reside in the marital home with his wife while a case is pending assumes some risk. Naturally, the degree of risk varies from case to case. I probably do not need to tell you that having an order of protection issued against you does not help your custody case. Furthermore, in many jurisdictions, it is held against you by statute in matters affecting custody.

In summary, when weighing the option of trying to stay in the marital home, you have to perform a balancing act. On the one hand, consider the opportunities it affords you to continue parenting during the pendency of the case (as discussed above). On the other hand, consider the risk associated with that strategy, as well as your accompanying misery index.

If you opt to attempt to stay in the home with your wife, you must walk on eggshells, bite your lip when baited, and refuse to be drawn into any confrontation. This is easier said than done. I cannot count the number of occasions that clients have vowed to me that they would not be drawn into direct conflict and yet have been. Grand strategy dims in the heat of an argument at 1:00 a.m. Saturday morning. I hear about it when I get to the office Monday morning, and immediately, my client is on the defensive.

If you think you are significantly vulnerable to such manipulation and/or fabrication, I recommend that you consider a strategic retreat. It may make more sense to move from the house voluntarily, taking what property you want and yet aggressively continuing to parent.

From a more panoramic perspective, consider whether a delay in filing your petition is to your benefit or detriment. This, of course, assumes that your wife has not already filed and that you do not anticipate her filing soon. In considering a delay in filing, you have to consider your and your wife's relative positions given the criteria discussed earlier. Then, consider whether an additional 6 months, for example, would enable you to improve your relative position as a parent, or on the other hand, whether time is your enemy irrespective of your interim efforts. It is possible that a delay could provide a period during which you are aware of what lies around the corner while your wife is not, which may afford you an opportunity to solidify your position as the primary nurturer, as well as to gather information and evidence. Obviously these opportunities do not exist to the same extent once your wife has been served with a summons. Typically, she will quickly circle the wagons and prepare for battle.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/24/0234240.shtml

Gender Bias Bill In California Legislature

Scott · 24 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc writes "This bill (click the 9/12/00 Assembly Analysis version) in the California Legislature, sponsored by Mazzoni, requires the government to study prisoners with children, but it only focuses of female prisoners and ignores males. This could possibly be an equal protection violation. Californians should write to their assemblypersons and to Mazzoni about this, if not the Department of Justice."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/24/155222.shtml

Commentary On Lazio-Clinton Debate

Scott · 25 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Washington Times printed this interesting opinion article by a woman who examines the recent Lazio-Clinton debate and is disgusted by the tactics Hillary and her supporters are using to rebuke Lazio for his explicit challenge to her campaign. She also brings up the idea that many people are voting for her as an expression of sympathy for having an unfaithful husband in office and for dealing with Lazio's aggressiveness. It's a well written piece. Thanks to IHF for submitting it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/25/1643243.shtml

How Title IX Is Harming US Olympic And International Sports Teams

Scott · 26 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl submitted this article from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch about Title IX, and how it's affecting US competitiveness in olympic and international sports. It turns out that the decimation of less popular men's sports (such as gymnastics) to meet the quota system of Title IX (whether it was meant this way or not, that's how it's being implemented) is providing fewer and fewer qualified candidates for US men's teams. Meanwhile, other countries that haven't passed such draconian measures are at a significant advantage against the US. I guess "nice guys finish last" rings true here, eh?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/25/1944201.shtml

L.A. Times Letter

Scott · 26 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "I submitted this short letter to the L.A. Times (in my roommate Bilal's name) disputing a columnist's claim that male hostility explains the shortage of women in science. It's my first one in a major paper." Way to go Marc! We need more like you.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/26/032212.shtml

Online Book: The Case For Father Custody

Scott · 26 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Adam Hartney writes "Here's an online link to The Case for Father Custody by Daniel Amneus. It takes a few minutes to load but is well worth it." Reviews, anyone? I can offer you eternal fame and fortune for submitting one (well, maybe not, unless you have a humble idea of "fame and fortune". And "eternal", too). :)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/26/036256.shtml

British Woman Goes To Jail For False Rape Accusation

Scott · 27 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF submitted this link to a UK Telegraph article on a woman who has been sentenced six months jail time for making a false rape accusation and wasting police time and resources. She had made the false claim because she was in debt, and originally received 7,500 pounds for "victim compensation". Note that Mensactivism.org reported on this story earlier when it was first discovered that the accusation was false.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/27/1440244.shtml

Genders Well Divided On Candidates

Scott · 27 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Adam Hartney writes "Here's an update on the election and the gender gap from the LA Times." This seems like a strong indication of a backlash against liberal feminism. It looks like we are coming toward a struggle of "boys versus girls" in politics. Perhaps this is what is needed to get men to organize and act on gender issues? Note: The Men's Activism News Network does not officially endorse any political candidates.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/27/1631245.shtml

Director Of Women's Studies: "We Prohibit Any Course That Says We Restrict Free Speech!"

Scott · 28 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

That title line is a direct quote from this article found at Town Hall news. It's about a professor of sociology, Dr. Richard Zeller, who wanted to teach a course on political correctness (with plenty of student support for the course) and was denied the opportunity to teach it by the department. He resigned in protest. First Prof. Asher is ousted, now Zeller. Does anyone still believe that higher education is a place were free thinking is encouraged?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/28/1634211.shtml

John Leo On New Divorce Research

Scott · 29 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

John Leo's latest column in Jewish World Review is on the effects of divorce on children, as described in the new book The Unexpected Legacy of Divorce. This book is based on new research which shows that divorce does have a definite negative affect on children's lives, and lasts well into adulthood.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/29/0128228.shtml

Eye-Opening Article On Our Modern PC Age

Scott · 29 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Paul Craig Roberts wrote a disturbing article for The Washington Times, which can be read here. In it, he makes analogies between the political climate which gave rise to the Nazi party in Germany and how our media and academic environments are similar. Likewise, the instability of families, facilitated by the government, is being done along the same lines as the Nazis did so. There are just too many coincidences that he writes about to ignore. Hopefully it will knock some people out of the complacency that they're in.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/29/1649236.shtml

Feminism And Party Politics

Scott · 30 September 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Adam Hartney writes "I found this at worldnetdaily, it's written by Linda Bowles about the gender gap in political parties and feminism; well worth a read. Click here." The conclusion to the article is great: "And then, perhaps as an omen, Gloria Steinem, a feminist icon who spent an entire lifetime demeaning men and marriage, delivered a stunning message to her sisters. She got married for the first time, at age 66. The message she delivered is this: It's never too late to grow up."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/09/30/2159220.shtml

What Would You Do If Falsely Accused?

Scott · 1 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

ABCnews chose false accusations as a recent topic for their "Working Wounded" column. You can read it at this link. It includes a story by someone who was unfairly ousted from his job after having been accused of sexual harassment, and in the end he concludes that the had no rights at all. It's quite bold of ABCnews to post something like this, so encouraging letter writing is strongly suggested.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/01/004236.shtml

MA Schoolteacher Falsely Accused?

Scott · 1 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Jim Castelli writes, "This Boston Globe article is about a male teacher who stands accused by two female students for sexual harassment in the classroom. The accuser, and another female student, testified that their accusations came after they participated in a health class on sexual harassment. Despite contradictions in their testimony, the prosecution is proceeding in its case. After 26 years of teaching science at a school in Cambridge with no previous accusations, Louis Silva finds his career, his reputation, and his freedom, on the line in a Cambridge Courtroom. School officials would not comment on the case, abandoning Mr Silva to face his accusers alone. Where are Mr Silva's fellow teachers (both men and women) in his hour of need? Has the tyranny of male-bashing-feminism rendered his collegues too afraid to speak up on behalf of Mr Silva and other men who are the targets of this modern day McCarthyism?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/01/1339231.shtml

NIH Distributing False Information

Scott · 2 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I know it's a shocking headline, but it appears to be the case. According to documents from NIH, health research has been biased against women due to unequal representation of women in health research. But the fact is, men are represented less than women in the health studies which were referred to! Don't believe it? Click "Read More" to view the message from Men's Health America, which includes citations.

NIH IS PLAYING FAST AND LOOSE WITH THE TRUTH

We've been reviewing some of the official documents from the National Institutes of Health, and compared these statements with the actual facts.

What we found shocked even me. I've included full references at the end for persons who want to see them.

Ed

What NIH Is Saying:

1. The Women's Health Initiative was established to "address many of the inequities in women's health research," such as the areas of heart disease, cancer, and osteoporosis. (WHI Backgrounder, www.nhlbi.nih.gov/whi)

2. The Office of Research on Women's Health (ORWH) was established "in response to a report by the U.S. General Accounting Office...that women were routinely excluded from medical research supported by NIH."

(Vivian Pinn, NIH News and Features, Fall 1997, p. 3)

3. "Historically, research studies were conducted only with men."
(National Institute of Mental Health: Women Hold up Half the Sky. Publication No. 99-4607)

What Our Research Reveals:

Our research demonstrates that these three statements are not merely exaggerated or one-sided; they are simply false. These are the facts:

CANCER

Cancer research has always favored women:

* An analysis of 1989 enrollees in NCI research reported only 43% male participation (1).

* A report from the Southwest Oncology Group revealed only 42% were males (2).

* The recent GAO report stated that men now compose only 29% of participants in NCI research (3).

* A Medline search under the term "malignancy" for the years 1966-1990 reveals 139 clinical trials for men and 191 for women.

* Sex-specific funding patterns reveal that prostate cancer has lagged behind breast cancer research by a 4:1 margin (4).

HEART DISEASE

A. 55% of participants in the early Framingham Heart Study were female (5).

B. An analysis of major hypertension studies conducted in the 1970s and 1980s found that women made up nearly half of these studies (6).

C. A search of the Medline database for Heart Disease clinical trials during the period 1966-1990 turns up 137 studies on men, and 78 studies with women(7). In 1980, men's risk of dying from heart disease was 280.4/100,000, while women's risk was only 140.3/100,000 (8). Men were at twice the risk of heart disease mortality, and represented the high-risk population.

When we consider that men have historically faced twice the risk of death from heart disease, there is no evidence that overall, women have been underrepresented in heart disease research. As the Institute of Medicine put it, "The literature is inconclusive about whether women have been excluded or importantly underrepresented in clinical trials" (9).

OSTEOPOROSIS

According to the Medline database, there were 18 female clinical trials on osteoporosis published 1966-1999, compared to only 7 studies for men (7). This represents more than a 2:1 disparity in women's favor.

MENTAL HEALTH
Mental health research sponsored by the NIH has long included women. During the period 1966-1990, the number of clinical trials with women has approximated the number of clinical trials with men (7).

The Underrepresentation of Men in NIH Research:

As documented above, men have been and continue to be underrepresented in cancer research. Three other areas with substantial inequities affecting men's health are reproductive health, contraception, and sex hormones.

An analysis of the NIH sex-specific budget 1988-1990 reveals that women's health research received twice the funding of men's health research (10), which further discredits the argument that women have been shortchanged by medical research.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/02/0136219.shtml

Another Gender Gap?

Scott · 2 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Adam Hartney writes "A new gender gap has evolved when the Danes vetoed the Euro [a common currency for all European countries]. What's interesting is women were 60% against the Euro, and one of the reasons women vetoed it is because it would diminish state welfare. Perhaps that explains why women typically vote democrat in the US, as we all know what gender takes a lot of welfare, don't we? I found this in a Washington Times article."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/02/0144202.shtml

Sign A Petition To Include Men In VAWA Funding

Scott · 2 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I'm sorry that I haven't been able to report on VAWA II recently, but unfortunately it looks like the bill is going to pass. As many of you know, the Violence Against Women Act is supposed to provide around 4 BILLION dollars to combat domestic violence - and is politically aimed to provide support for women specifically. There is no explicit provision in VAWA to acknowledge and fund programs for male victims of DV, and many believe that men can be explicitly discriminated against with this law. Please sign this petition to support the amendment of the bill to include men in recognition and funding for DV prevention programs and shelters. Thanks to an anonymous reader for forwarding this to me.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/02/0154232.shtml

New Mail-Order DNA Tests Can Be Done Secretly

Scott · 2 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is a very serious civil liberties issue....I hope there will be a lot of outrage and dissent against it. The Daily Express reported in this article that an internet based company is offering DNA kits that can be completed with a sample of hair from the child and "father," and in two weeks can return DNA test results that will determine the paternity status of the man. The cost? 195 pounds (about $288 USD). The company has no ethical qualms about performing the test without consent from the parties involved.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/02/0210223.shtml

CNN Flaunts The Superiority Of Women

Scott · 3 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

CNN printed this recent story on the rise of female managers, who currently outnumber men in the 20-30 year age bracket, in significant numbers. It's a telling sign that when women have the advantage, the discrimination stories are replaced by elitism and even more blatant sexism.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/03/1726229.shtml

Letter On Gore Campaign And Fathers

Scott · 4 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Montgomery Advertiser printed this letter to the editor in which the writer clearly outlined the negative image of fathers that Al Gore is promoting in his presidential campaign. It would be nice if some day political candidates were as afraid of insulting male voters as they are female voters. Note: The Men's Activism News Network does not officially endorse any political candidates.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/04/170239.shtml

When Will Men Stand Up For Themselves?

Scott · 5 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Walter Williams from Jewish World Review wrote his latest column on the trash that men are putting up with in the media and elsewhere, and his belief that it is time for men to stop being cowards and stand up for themselves. Although I recall most of the material he refers to from John Leo's article (which he gives credit to), it is good to hear another voice calling out to encourage men to do something.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/04/2313236.shtml

Take A Gender Health Test

Scott · 6 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Adam Hartney writes "This is a bit of an odd one - it's a health exam where you test your knowledge in gender health discrepancies. It turns out men are more likely to die at any age*, which makes me ask: why is nature so biased against men?"* Good question, Adam. No matter how you slice it, men's health is in danger for many reasons, including biological, material, and cultural reasons. We need to do our part by taking care of ourselves, but also to promote attention to men's health in general too.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/06/0140223.shtml

Bisexuals Immune From Harassment Charges?

Scott · 6 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Washington Post printed this article which reports that the Supreme Court has ruled that "equal opportunity" harassers - bisexuals who treat both men and women inappropriately - cannot be sued for sexual harassment. This is very odd, and certainly unfair. It also makes me wonder if this could create a serious loophole in harassment law. Accused of sexual harassment? Simply have someone of the same sex as you accuse you of similar behavior, and claim to be bisexual. Does anyone know if this is what this ruling means?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/06/0130249.shtml

Columbia University's New Sexual Misconduct Policy

Scott · 6 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User writes "Any man at this University needs to run away, and fast! This is an unbelievable, disgusting policy on sexual misconduct. Click here for the scoop" I actually felt sick as well after reading details of the new policy. If something like this spreads to other Universities and beyond it could be the biggest blow to men's civil rights ever unleashed (even more so than the paternity testing issue I mentioned a few stories previously).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/06/0146208.shtml

More On The Ritalin Controversy

Scott · 8 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "The controversy over Ritalin is the subject of a front page article in Friday's edition of The Christian Science Monitor. Read the story, 'Among parents, backlash builds to Ritalin.'" The story's centerpiece is a young boy whose parents were charged with neglect after taking him off of Ritalin, and also discusses the rights of parents and schools in this type of scenario. Good article.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/08/184255.shtml

Child Support In Oz

Scott · 9 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original bernee writes "As we all know, child support laws are a contentious issue. They have remained unchanged here (in Australia) for around 15 years and have caused much grief (and still do). But, change could slowly be happening: read this story.

It will be interesting to see if their is any backlash to the proposed changes." These proposals would allow NCPs who have second families to save more money for the second family - this is the first acknowledgment of this unfair problem I've seen yet.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/08/1812258.shtml

Columbia Prof. Violates New Sex Code With Exam Question

Scott · 9 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

FIRE, the same group that's going to challenge Columbia's new sexual misconduct policy on the basis of civil liberties violations, is now reporting that a Professor of Law at Columbia has violated the policy with an exam question that raises a hypothetical situation where violence against a woman creates "a beneficial unintended consequence." From the article: "'Columbia is out of control,' [the President of FIRE] said. 'What happened to George Fletcher demonstrates the criminalization within the university of academic content via harassment codes and is a terrible assault against academic freedom.'" The news story includes e-mail addresses for various Columbia University administrators - please make use of them and let them know of your outrage!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/08/2343231.shtml

Gender Violence In The Media

Scott · 9 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The L.A. Weekly wrote this piece in its Off Beat News section that draws attention to a web site where you can slap an animated caricature of Hillary Clinton. The author criticizes the political right for their claim to civility by asking "where were they when [David Horowitz] put up a web site called SlapHillary.com?" I'd like to ask, where was the L.A. Weekly when Spin City did a commercial in which Heather Lochlear repeatedly slapped Michael J. Fox for comedy, or when Hillary reportedly threw furniture at Bill years ago? The L.A. Weekly has never denounced the media bombardment of assaults on male genitals as humor, but one rare site like this comes up on the web, and they're all over it. Let's write the L.A. Weekly at letters@laweekly.com about this. The more letters, the more likely they'll print some."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/09/1429220.shtml

Watch The Montel Show Tomorrow! (Thursday)

Scott · 9 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I had meant to post this with greater notice, but tomorrow, October 10, the Montel Williams show will be on the topic, "Confronting Deadbeat Parents." Reportedly, there will be a choice for men supporter interviewed on the show. It should be an interesting program. Update: Apparently they switched their schedule at the last minute, and the program will be on Thursday, Oct. 12

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/09/1926232.shtml

The State of Women's Studies

Scott · 10 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "The October 6th edition of The Chronicle of Higher Education carried an essay/book review by Daphne Patai about the current state of Women's Studies programs in academia - click here. Following the appearance of this essay was an even more interesting online debate between Patai and her critics - click here." This is some really interesting stuff, sure to provoke a lot of thought and even some outrage. Check these links out!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/10/1315220.shtml

The Portrayal Of Men At UNH

Scott · 10 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Hopefully this won't seem egocentric, but I'm posting a letter I wrote to the Univ. of New Hampshire school newspaper. Recently the newspaper ran a section on "men's health and masculinity," (not in the web edition, unfortunately) which took a fairly negative look at masculinity as the driving force behind oppression and suffering in the world. The authors, which included male counselors from UNH, all concluded that a "new masculinity" be created. I wrote this letter in response to the articles, challenging readers to think about the positive attributes of masculinity instead of focusing on the negative. Here's my letter in case the link doesn't work. I'm actually quite concerned about this issue because it makes it look as if men are getting attention from the university community, but in reality all that's happening is that they're being shamed for being male. This isn't right, and I was inspiried to speak out and address this.

Portraying Men in a Positive Light

Scott Garman

Senior

I read with great interest last Tuesday's section on men's health and masculinity. The authors of these articles should be applauded for the time they spent addressing a very neglected issue in today's politicized gender climate: the needs of men and the issues that we face.

However, without challenging any of the articles that were written, I'd like to address a more subtle issue that I noticed from the viewpoints presented, and from much of the dialogue going on about gender these days. It seems that in an attempt to open a wider range of roles and opportunities for men, we often portray masculinity as something inherently flawed, or out of balance. It is almost as if we are saying that men need to be "less masculine," which isn't something that most men are going to respond or relate to.

In my experiences with men as a "men's rights activist," I find that more than anything, men need to be offered respect and dignity for being male, instead of continually being blamed for social problems such as violence and oppression, or portraying them as mass killers, abusers, and rapists. Part of SHARPP's mission statement for the Men's Discussion Group on Stopping Rape reads, "We as men realize that certain ways of being male perpetuate a rape-prone society." These methods of "reaching out" to men, while well-intentioned, often don't work because they alienate men from thinking of themselves as whole human beings, and are subconsciously degrading.

In our culture, particularly in this academic environment, men and their roles are regularly stereotyped and deconstructed into oppressive patriarchs and selfish tyrants. To successfully reach out to men, we need to do so in a positive way that affirms and empowers men for being who they are, themselves.

Too often, we focus on the negative side of masculinity, as unfortunately the media is eager to sensationalize school shootings and brutal rapes, but I hope most people still realize that the vast majority of men are neither killers nor rapists, nor do most individual men hold power and influence over large numbers of people.

I think that if we want to encourage new opportunities for men to live and express themselves, then we need to acknowledge the positive attributes of masculinity. We need to recognize the distinctly masculine energy and focus that creates good in the world, such as Michaelangelo's divine art, the dedication to rationality and truth seeking that Socrates and Plato embodied, the musical genius of Ludwig van Beethoven and John Coltrane. And not only should we respect the greatness of high-achieving men, but the everyday selfless dedication of fathers, of male teachers and mentors, and for the countless men that gave and risked their lives for others in war.

When we have a society that honors men and the masculine, and allows men to make choices that enable them to lead fulfilling lives, men will have, as Peter Welch put it, "a healthy masculinity that will allow us to be unabashedly human." To that I would add, "and unabashedly male."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/10/1658217.shtml

Status Of The "Men Deserve To Live" Campaign

Scott · 10 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America has sent out a notice about the "Men Deserve To Live" campaign, and there is bad news and good news. The bad news is, the bill isn't going to pass in this session of Congress. The good news is, there is plenty of support for the bill and it will be re-introduced immediately once Congress begins again. Click "Read More" to view the announcement from Ed. And thanks to everyone who took part in this letter writing and activism campaign!MEN DESERVE TO LIVE - What We Have Accomplished

It looks like the Men's Health Act will not pass this session.
Part of the problem was the Health Aide in Sen. Thurmond's office quit a few weeks ago, so things didn't move as quickly as expected on the Senate side.

I have been reassured by the Aide in Rep. Cunningham's office that the Act will be re-introduced first thing in the upcoming session.

BUT I CAN ASSURE YOU THAT THIS BILL HAS ALREADY HAD A MAJOR IMPACT ON DHHS.

The DHHS bureaucrats now know that men's health can no longer be ignored. They know that influential politicians care about this issue. And that opens doors for us when we ask to meet with these people.

Don't worry this bill didn't make it the first time around.
Our time is coming.

But do this, please. Whatever you did on behalf of the Men's Health Act the past four months, give yourself a pat on the back.
Whether you wrote letters, made a phone call, got involved in the political process, or just did something to improve your own health, take the credit.

Because we won't be shamed into silence.

Ed

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/10/1745244.shtml

New Poll

Scott · 11 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Note that I just added a new poll - thanks to everyone that participated in the previous one!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/11/1352248.shtml

What We Can Look Forward To With VAWA2

Scott · 11 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy wrote a brutally honest article on VAWA2 and what the bill will actually accomplish. It's not a pretty picture, and the last I heard is that it was stalled in the Senate but could be passed very soon. Her conclusions are: "There is nothing noble or righteous about the VAWA. The Act is a money grab to back an agenda. In the wake of its political turbulence, it is women who will be battered (as well as men) by having to live with the burden of gender apartheid."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/11/1253243.shtml

UK Government Pushing For Father Access After Divorce

Scott · 11 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF submitted this UK Telegraph story that the British government has officially adopted the position that "The distress and damage done to children when parents separate can be reduced if they retain strong and loving bonds with both parents." Although it is not law, this position is sure to have a positive effect on fathers going through the family courts in the near future.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/11/1427218.shtml

Cancer Support Groups For Men

Scott · 12 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett writes, "There are now two national support groups available to help men (and their partners) diagnosed with prostate cancer: Man to Man, sponsored by the American Cancer Society: http://www.cancer.org/m2m/m2m.html, and US Too: http://www.ustoo.com/. These sites provide great information for both the newly-diagnosed patient and the long-term survivor."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/12/213214.shtml

Action Alert: Write To Barnes & Noble!

Scott · 13 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci has informed me of an activism project to establish a Men's Studies book section at the major bookseller Barnes & Noble. One of their major competitors, Borders, already has a Men's Studies section, so if we make some noise and express interest in it, B&N is likely to comply. Check out the Mensactivism.org activism projects page for full details and a sample letter Marc wrote up. It will only take a minute of your time!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/13/0028242.shtml

More Commentary On Columbia's Sex Misconduct Code

Scott · 13 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Washington Times printed this article a few days ago which comments on the recently enacted sexual misconduct policy at Columbia University. Paul Craig Roberts comes straight out and confronts the issue of false accusations, and I'm sure this article will stir up a lot of controversy. Please help keep a dialogue going about this, and don't let it fade away from the media's attention - we can't afford to let this take root in our society.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/12/2119254.shtml

Women's Issues Columnist Shifts Gears, Supports Men's Issues

Scott · 14 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "After years of feminist lies in the UCLA Daily Bruin, a respected women's issues columnist came out supporting men's issues. In this article, she addresses male body image as a less controversial men's issue. But then she mentions false accusations, harassment and discrimination as legitimate men's issues, and pointedly says that courts are unfairly stacked against men. She's been my e-mail buddy for a while now, which I think shows that calm dialogue with certain feminists - sincere ones - can sometimes be effective. This is just a pinhole in the "lace curtain." But with unity and perserverence, we can shred it." Way to go Marc! This is encouraging to hear.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/14/1255238.shtml

Standing While Urinating Represents Contempt For Women

Scott · 16 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I kid you not. According to this UK Sunday Times article, submitted by Rand, it is becoming established in Sweden that allowing men to stand while urinating (even at urinals) constitutes contempt for women, and men are encouraged to sit instead. I suppose there really is no limit to the humiliation and shame men are willing to accept for being male. This is ridiculous.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/16/1248258.shtml

Cathy Young Addresses The Causes Of Domestic Violence

Scott · 16 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Rand submitted another article, this one from the Boston Globe and written by Cathy Young. She discusses the issue of domestic violence, (Oct. is DV awareness month) and debunks the idea that DV is rooted in the patriarchal power of men over women. Young always has some good statistics and facts in her articles, in this one she cites a dating violence study done by a feminist who withheld her findings because it showed women as more violent than men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/16/1257249.shtml

Mensactivism.org Feature: Domestic Violence Knows No Gender

Scott · 17 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

It's been a while since I've received a feature submission, and I now have a couple queued up for the upcoming weeks. The first one, by James Castelli, is on domestic violence. In his essay, Jim confronts the political nature of domestic violence as portrayed by "male bashing feminists," and calls for an end to the gender warfare going on which is doing nothing to truly prevent domestic violence. Click the "Read More..." link below to view his submission...

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE KNOWS NO GENDER

by James Castelli - jvcastelli@hobbyist.com

"Domestic Violence Awareness Month" should be a time, as well as a phrase, that addresses the problems of all who are impacted by violence in society. Yet, rather than seeking to heal the wounds that afflict society as a whole, the term "Domestic Violence" has become a political wedge that has been driven between men and women by groups who seek to benefit from gender warfare. A woman or man who seeks true equality between the sexes will get no argument from me. Yet, feminists who allegedly began their campaign seeking equality between men and women have chosen to broaden the divide between the sexes. In the political vitriol of the moment, "male bashing feminists" have succeeded in rendering Domestic Violence synonymous with men. I make the distinction between all feminists and "male bashing feminists" for the simple reason that there is a distinction to be made. According to the politics of this group, Domestic Violence is not a problem of society, it is a problem of the men in society. It is a problem they "perceive and promote" as resulting from the uncontrolled violent nature of men which preys upon the innocent and benign nature of women and children.

However, that faction of feminism which I have defined as "male bashing feminists" suffer from a syndrome which is best described as a type of "cafeteria feminism." They walk through the "feminist cafeteria of life" and pick and choose what they like. They demand that women be able to become generals in the military, yet do not insist that women, like young men, accept the responsibility of registering for the draft. They demand that women have exclusive control over reproductive rights which they call "choice", yet insist men be held responsible for choices over which they, (men) have no control.

Likewise, in the area of domestic violence if women demand to be treated as equals, they need to take responsibility for their acts. They can no longer deny a woman's capacity for aggression as well as violence. They can no longer deny that women batter their husbands, or that statistics show that children in America are battered mostly by women. They cannot excuse female murderers by the convenient defense of "battered wives syndrome." They can no longer deny that women as well as men are capable of acts of evil.

In Massachusetts, Kristen Gilbert is presently on trial for killing numbers of helpless men who relied on her as their caregiver in a Veterans Hospital. Louise Woodward shook an infant to death and received probation from the court. In South Carolina Susan Smith murdered her two sons by drowning them in a lake.

In 431 B.C. Euripedes wrote the play "Medea". It is a play about a mother who out of revenge against her husband chooses to slaughter her two young sons. The Greeks over two thousand years ago were willing to recognize the capacity of women for violence. Is America willing to recognize that capacity today? Is America willing to begin to recognize the more subtle forms of female violence and aggression? Or, as would be the preference of "male bashing feminists", will we continue to define Domestic Violence as a syndrome inherent in a flawed male psychology. To heal an illness requires a recognition of all the symptoms that are part of the sickness. If we as a society are sincere in our desire to eliminate the disease of Domestic Violence, we cannot ignore all components of the illness despite the political objectives of those who want to fan the flames of gender war.

James Castelli is a freelance writer with seventeen years of experience analyzing the legal impact of issues presently confronting society.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/17/0123227.shtml

Male Teachers Afraid Of Touching Students

Scott · 17 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The UK Independent ran this story on the lack of male schoolteachers for primary (elementary) schools. It brings up a reason I had never even considered before: that men are afraid of entering this field due to the likelihood of false accusations of sexual harassment from students. Testimony is included from male teachers who left their careers due to their inability to touch children, comfort them if hurt, or break up fights because of the potential of being accused. And can you blame them? What can be done about this?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/17/0224231.shtml

American Bar Association And DV Stats

Scott · 18 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "I'm glad there's been some domestic violence postings here lately, because the American Bar Association Journal, which has a circulation of 400,000 nationwide, just printed this article on domestic violence that opens with 'about 90 percent of victims are women.' How about we send them some mail, even just a quick e-mail message (abajournal@abanet.org), so they might print some of it?" Read on for Marc's explanation of the statistics that will be useful in your letters...As most of us know, the "90 percent" figure comes from DOJ crime reports and archival data (based on reported incidents), which are way underinclusive for male victims because men are about ten times less likely to report it due to the lack of services, fear of arrest or losing custody of children, ridicule, etc. The vast majority of random survey data, which is far more accurate, shows women and men batter each other at equal rates, for the same reasons, and usually not in self defense:

http://www.safe4all.org/resources.html

http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm

Of course, we also know from reading Philip Cook's Abused Men that feminists have used their influence in the DV industry to suppress this data for three decades so they can protect their theory that DV stems from "patriarchy." So men like my friend, who's drunk wife battered him for years with a knife or broken glass, are barred from shelters so that feminists can further their political agenda.

Marc Angelucci

Angelucc@2000.law.ucla.edu

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/17/2025249.shtml

Online Book: The Garbage Generation

Adam · 18 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Hi everybody, I'm Adam and one of the new co-administrators on Mensactivism.org. I'll be posting articles from time to time, and here's the first one. It's an online book: The Garbarge Generation by Daniel Amneus and you can read it here. Thanks :)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/18/0034234.shtml

The Silent Marjoity: DV Against Men And Boys

Scott · 18 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

TGB writes "The following article is taken from a pamphlet just added to the FRTC Media Pack. Articles related to this topic at FRTC include:

1. Child Abuse and Neglect Study
2. Divorce and Fatherhood Statistics
3. Justice Department Violence-Related Injuries Report
4. Fathers - Prejudice and Policy
5. Sexual Abuse Allegations in Divorce
6. Parental Alienation Information Archive
7. Personality Characteristics of Falsely Accusing Parents in Divorce
8. Domestic Abuse and False Accusation Links Page

Read on for this excellent flyer. Thanks for the submission, TGB!

Domestic Abuse of men and children, the silent majority!

"Women must share responsibility for their behavior and contributions to domestic violence."

-psychologist Judith Shervin

Domestic violence and abuse are not committed only by men as is popularly believed. In fact, men and women abuse each other with almost equal frequency.[1] You've probably heard the statistic that claims a woman is abused by her spouse every 15 seconds. What you may not know is that the same study also found that a man is abused by his spouse every 14 seconds.[2]

Surprising Facts on Domestic Violence and Child Abuse

Until society recognizes and accepts the fact that women can and do commit domestic violence, the problem of domestic violence will never be addressed and a "solution" will never be found. Domestic violence is a societal phenomenon that is not gender-specific. To deny this fact is unrealistic, biased, and shortsighted.

Facts You Probably Haven't Heard:

More than half of all 'severe' domestic violence is committed by women against their husbands or boyfriends. [1]

Extrapolating from a 1985 survey of more than six thousand couples, the authors estimate that 1.8 million females are the victims of severe domestic violence each year (with injuries suffered by one in ten), but so were about 2.1 million men. [2]

A random survey of 2,143 American homes uncovered the fact that severe abuse was committed equally by men and women. [3]

One study of inner city child abuse found that 49% of all child abuse is committed by single parent mothers. [4]

Natural mothers are the perpetrators of:

- 93% of physical neglect of children
- 86% of educational neglect
- 78% of emotional neglect
- 60% of physical abuse, and
- 55% of emotional abuse [5]

A Bureau of Justice report found that Mothers (55%) are more likely than fathers (45%) to murder their children. [6]

According to the government's own figures, females kill 31 times as many children as natural fathers. [7]

Females comprise 78% of the perpetrators of fatal child abuse (child murder). [8]

As disturbing as these statistics are, even more disturbing is the fact that they are virtually unknown. Only recently has any attention at all been focused on the issue of female batterers.

As psychologist Judith Shervin writes, "Women must share responsibility for their behavior and contributions to domestic violence."

These contributions are far bigger than feminists and the media are willing to admit.

Dr. Martin Fiebert, (1997) professor of Psychology at the California State University of Long Beach, listed 94 empirical studies that support the position that men and women are assaulting their intimate partners at nearly the same rate. When all the evidence is weighed, the only reasonable conclusion is that men and women commit spousal abuse against each other at nearly equal rates. [9]

Are you a victim?

Some indications that you are the victim of abuse include:

- A feeling that you are walking on eggshells trying not to anger the spouse.
- Constant put-downs in public and private.
- Expecting the worst of you and/or the children: "You are so stupid!"; "I told you so!"; "Why don't you ever...?"; "Why do you always...?". Destructive criticism.
- Put-downs that extend to your family and those you love. Attempts to separate you from your family and any emotional support they provide.
- The use of "guilt trips" to shame you and the children into doing what she wants, even though you have not done or intended anything wrong.

- She tries to control your circle of friends and acquaintances. She does not allow you to have your own friends or activities, or discourages attendance at activities with your side of the family.

- She places demands on your time that interfere with work, church, charity service, or other activities outside the home.

- She threatens to leave and take the children if you do not comply with her demands.

- She constantly demands more money, a larger home, more expensive car, or other status symbols, regardless of your ability to afford them. Controls finances, either directly or by unrestricted spending without mutual decision making (e.g. opening large credit accounts without telling you).

- She Insists that her income is hers, sometimes even extending to refusing to share information about her finances, and expecting you to cover all community expenses out of your income.

- Frequent accusations of affairs.

- False accusations of abuse.

- Tries to influence children to "take sides" (see the articles on Parental Alienation Syndrome in the PAS Archive).

  If you or someone you know is a victim of domestic abuse, there are steps you can take:

- Call the police and file a report if your spouse or partner assaults you. Men should use extreme caution, however, because the police often assume the man is the aggressor, and you may well find yourself under arrest. Make sure there is solid evidence that you are not the aggressor before calling the police.

- Take pictures of any visible injuries you receive, and make copies of any injury reports.

- Contact local Fathers' Rights groups in your area for support, advice, and assistance.

- If your wife or partner becomes abusive or violent, leave and seek help. Do not accept domestic violence.

- Make sure the children are safe -- if necessary take the children and stay at a motel or with a friend.

- Do not blame yourself for your wife or partner's behavior. Nothing justifies her violence.

- Free online assistance can be found at the FRTC Web site, at: www.deltabravo.net/

Above all, SPEAK OUT! Let someone else know that your partner is abusive. Don't hide it.

References:

1. Research by M. Strauss & R. Gelles as reported in "Women Are Responsible Too", Judith Shervin, Ph.D. & Jim Sniechowski, Ph.D., LA Times. 6/21/94.

2. From the National Family Violence Survey (1975, 1985, 1992) developed by M. Strauss & R. Gelles, and funded by the National Institute of Mental Health.

3. 1980 study by Murray Straus, Richard Gelles, and Suzanne Steinmetz.

4. A study of child abuse in Lansing, Michigan. Joan Ditson and Sharon Shay in Child Abuse and Neglect, Volume 8. 1984.

5. Data from the Third National Incidence Study of Child Abuse and Neglect (NIS-3) from DHHS, and also from the Bureau of Justice Statistics report entitled "Child Victimizers and Their Victims".

6. Bureau of Justice, "Murder in Families", NCJ-143498.

7. (From item 5, the Third National Incidence Study of Child Abuse and Neglect (NIS-3)

8. Ibid.

9. Martin S. Fiebert, Cal State Univ., http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.h tm

Copyright FRTC 2000. All Rights Reserved.

May be freely copied and used provided the FRTC attribution line is kept intact and the FRTC link is included.
NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/17/2144230.shtml

Family Violence Report 2000 Released

Scott · 18 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Bunny Sewell writes "We publish a report on the Internet that contains a family violence bibliography, which clearly demonstrates that gender advocates have severely distorted this issue. [This includes the Fiebert Bibliography] The year 2000 edition of the Family Violence Report from Family Resources and Research has been released. It may be quoted, linked and copied without further permission. The internet version is available at:

http://www.naplesfl.net/~bestself/Family-Violence.htm. Also included is an article written by Sally L. Satel, M.D., about the dangers of present family violence policy." I've received a lot of good DV articles recently. Keep 'em coming, folks!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/18/1350203.shtml

Sign A Petition To End Forced Fatherhood

Scott · 19 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ron Burke has created a web site with his essay (which was featured on Mensactivism.org) on male reproductive rights and has an area where you can sign a petition to put an end to forced fatherhood. Please take a moment to head over to the site and sign the petition. Thanks to Mark Cimini for sending this in.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/17/200242.shtml

Making Divorce Even Worse For Men

Adam · 19 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

According to this news story, on December 1st in the UK, any wife who files for divorce will get half of her ex-husband's pension without needing to show any material evidence at all, and she still gets the standard maintenance payments and a large cut of his assets.You can read it here. It's hard to think of it this way now, but once upon a time it was a good thing for a man to be a good breadwinner. Now it's almost no longer in his self-interest!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/19/0058252.shtml

False Accusations Make The News

Scott · 19 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

James Bohne writes "It takes considerable courage to print an article on false accusations during domestic violence month. Mike Vigh of the Salt Lake Tribune has the right stuff. The facts are watered down quite a bit, but that doesn't detract much from the significance of the topic being published during the same month both houses passed VAWA. You know the Trib is going to get flak for this, and they probably do also. My guess is this is a feeler to see how much support they will get." Which of course means we should write in and show support for taking these risks. Anything, even a short note of support will help out!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/19/0145240.shtml

Long Choice For Men Article In Salon

Scott · 19 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Salon magazine printed this feature length article on male reproductive rights. It's written by Cathy Young, who takes a conservative pro-male view in most of her writings. This one, however, I feel a bit mixed about. She seems sympathetic to men and understands some of the double standards and injustice of the situation, but more or less dismisses current challenges to law or solutions to the problem. But it certainly is a thoughtful and engaging article, and more press for the issue. Thanks to Alan from the new Choice4Men list for submitting it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/19/1316209.shtml

A Monograph on Feminism: Gender Bias In Employment

Scott · 19 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Glenn Burger submitted an interesting editorial piece on the topic of gender bias in employment. He raised some issues that I had never considered before, and so I thought it would be of interest to others. If anyone has any personal stories about this topic, feel free to discuss them on the message board to this story. Click "Read More..." below to view his Glenn's writings. A Monograph on Feminism

By Glenn R. Burger

For the past 30 years, the mainstay of feminism has been gender bias in employment. According to the feminists, women have been denied employment opportunities, pushed aside and just generally treated badly in the job market because of their sex. Indeed, during the most influential years of feminism in North America in the 1960's, the feminists claimed that women were "the last hired and the first fired". Women were victims of gender bias.

I can cast serious doubts on this notion of gender bias victimizing women with two simple, straight forward facts and a conclusion.

Fact: In 1939, 65% of the banking staff in Canada was male. True. Two out of three employees were male. And what was 1939? 1939 was the start of the Second World War.

Fact: By 1943 (the worst of the war years) the banks in Canada had closed almost half of the banking system due to "lack of staff". The banking text book which inadvertently made me aware of this banking system closure didn't indicate what caused this lack of staff but - considering the dates involved - it is obvious what it was: military requirement for the war effort.

Conclusion: At the end of the war, to prevent any possible future loss of staff expertise to the military in the event of yet another war (which seemed highly possible at that time) the banks and many large business offices, oil company head offices and other labor intensive white collar corporations in both Canada and the United States implemented hiring policies which demanded the exclusive hiring of women for the skills acquiring, upwardly mobile white collar clerical and supervisory sectors of their organizations because women were not vulnerable to military requirements in the event of war. At the present time, Canadian banking white collar staff is 95% female and this high percentage of female employees is true of most other business offices in both Canada and the US.

It is for this reason that bank and business office staff in North America is almost exclusively female. It has nothing to do with poor wages, or superior female abilities, or female competitiveness or "discrimination" against women forcing them into so called pink collar ghettos. Enter banks or business offices in Asia, Europe or Australia and you will find substantial numbers of male employees. Not so in North America, because in North America many employers hire only women because they aren't wanted for possible military duty.

So, how's that for "gender bias"?

Note: It should be pointed out that men created these hiring policies, not women. The policies, unquestionably, came from the most senior executive level and, as the feminists have been pointing out for years, that level is almost exclusively male. If those executive males had not created the hiring policies, women would not have had exclusive access to the white collar jobs and, thus, they would not have become the spoiled, demanding individuals that they presently are. Feminism was little more than a power grab for the executive suites. Women had all of the white collar jobs and saw no reason why they shouldn't have all of the executive suites too and a movement was created mostly for that end. The movement was called feminism and it is my sincere belief that feminism would not have happened if the hiring policies hadn't been created.

(The thought also occurs that both American and Canadian multinational corporations could export their anti-male hiring policies to other countries in Europe, Asia and Australia without those countries realizing what was happening. Any given office staffed exclusively by women would look as though the all female staff had occurred by chance when, in fact, it was caused by stupid anti-male hiring policies imported from North America, but I digress).

Also, if you find this view of gender bias in employment to be of interest, I encourage you to copy this single page and "pass it around", especially to feminists. Feminists can be remarkably verbal about their views and you might be surprised how fast they go silent when they read this view. Try it. You'll see.

Further, what would be the possibility of beginning a class action law suit against the big banks and other white collar employers in North America in response to these anti-male hiring policies? Would there be a place for this single page on the Internet, say on a web site?

Contact me at: glennrburger@hotmail.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/19/1754222.shtml

LA Weekly Prints Letter On Gender Bashing

Scott · 20 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The L.A. Weekly printed my letter about the SlapHillary.com web site. Thank you to all who also wrote to them. I'm sure it helped." Great work everyone!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/20/015220.shtml

The Politics Of Victimhood Feminism

Scott · 20 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Rand submitted this article from the National Post on a recent Canadian protest march for "women's rights." The author points out that some of the demands are overblown and reflect the political nature of the issues involved. She states that what we have is essentially a bunch of "quasi-Marxists" who "have figured out it's easier to get government hand-outs if they claim to be championing women rather than the overthrow of capitalism."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/20/0232205.shtml

A Struggle For Recognition: Battered Men In New Zealand

Scott · 20 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This news story from NZ Stuff News discusses the struggle for recognition that men's groups are fighting for to establish that men are also victims of domestic violence. There's good information here about a massive study done by Auckland University that followed men and women from birth into their 20s, and found that women were at least as violent as men in relationships, with women even self-reporting initiation violence more than men. Aussie DV advocates, check this out!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/20/1834254.shtml

Male Breast Cancer Linked To Hormone Levels - And Orgasms?

Scott · 21 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Huh? Let me explain: 1 - Men can and do get breast cancer, in fairly small numbers. 2 - Men who get breast cancer have an extremely high mortality rate from it. 3 - According to this BBC Health News article, the likelihood of a man having breast cancer increases if a man has fewer than six orgasms per month, which would indicate abnormal hormonal levels. This is kind of odd news, somewhat humorous, but also serious at the same time.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/21/0017219.shtml

High Schoolers Create DV Advertisements

Scott · 21 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's something I found pretty disturbing, mainly because I think it represents the indoctrination of our students by perspectives based on misleading, politically motivated research. This story from the NY Daily News describes a contest where high school students created advertisements for domestic violence awareness. The winning entries...photos of young women in "high school portrait" style with captions such as, Most Likely to Be Killed by Her Boyfriend, Most Excuses for a Black Eye, and Most Likely to Marry Her Abuser. Does anyone think that an ad portraying violence against men would have won?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/21/0026205.shtml

UK Women Putting Off Divorce For Pensions

Scott · 22 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Tim Randles submitted this link to a This Is Money story on the new divorce law in Britain that will give women half of their husband's pension money in a divorce settlement by default. Although the law is technically gender-neutral, (the "breadwinner" of the family is the one whose pension is cut) it's obviously going to adversely affect men in the majority of divorces. But don't worry, there's good news too: "Some solicitors say the new law may also be beneficial to men because they could avoid maintenance payments by paying off their wife with a slice of their pension." At least these lawmakers have our convenience in mind. (!)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/21/2233202.shtml

DNA Testing Kits A Hit In Australia

Scott · 22 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC and Imo Bethere submitted this story from The Sydney Morning Herald. Apparently there is a DNA testing company in Melbourne that has begun marketing their DNA kits on television, and have received an "astonishing response." It is noted that women have made almost two-thirds of the inquiries about the services since the TV ads began. The story ends with a plea from a privacy advocate that "DNA testing industry needed better regulation, including laws which required written consent from all parties involved in testing."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/22/1738250.shtml

Some Facts On Child Support Collection

Scott · 23 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Orlando Sentinel ran this story by Kathleen Parker on new information released on child support collection, and the different ways that it has been presented in the media. One interesting fact that Kathleen dug up (which wasn't reported on in the news articles she read) was that there are more "deadbeat moms" than "deadbeat dads," with custodial fathers receiving only 48% of their child support, while custodial mothers received 60% of their payments on average. Another set of interesting facts: "83 percent of divorced parents who have joint custody and regular contact with their children paid their support in full. By comparison, only 36 percent of parents with neither visitation nor joint custody paid any child support. Can anyone say 'Bingo?'"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/22/2325233.shtml

What Is The Lace Curtain?

Adam · 23 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In this preview of Warren Farrell's book Women Can't Hear What Men Don't Say, Farrell explains the concept of the "lace curtain" (the lack of coverage of men's issues in the media) and his own journey through it. And you can read it at this link.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/23/1824250.shtml

Divorce Makes Men Richer; Women Poorer?

Scott · 24 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's an interesting article from the UK Observer which states that men's financial status tends to improve after divorce, while women's worsens. "Divorce is a complete mess for women...The odds of getting a fair divorce settlement are quite simply stacked against women." It does make sense when you think of it this way - women are often a drain on the man's generally higher income, so even if she takes a piece of it when she leaves, she's going to be worse off financially in the long run, while he can often recover. Still, I know of too many men that have been decimated in divorce settlements, and struggle through a lot of emotional pain that interferes with their ability to advance their careers. Where is the sympathy for them? IHF submitted this story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/24/0450255.shtml

The Adonis Complex: Male Body Image

Scott · 24 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl submitted this link to an older article on male body image. This I believe is an issue that needs more attention. From the article: '"This is a disorder that affects as many men as women, yet people assume this is just a woman's problem. Men die from these various forms of Adonis,' Phillips says. She cites steroid abuse, eating disorders and suicide. 'This is not to minimize the suffering that women experience, but to say that men can suffer just as much."'

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/24/2023241.shtml

Male Suicide In Australia

Scott · 25 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Australian Institute of Health and Welfare released a report this year which shows that more Australian men die by suicide than by road crashes. You can read the report here. Why are these men killing themselves in such high numbers? 8 out of 10 suicides in Australia are by men, and the numbers have been increasing while female suicides have remained constant. This is very sobering news.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/24/2121214.shtml

Mensactivism.org Feature: Role Models for Boys

Scott · 25 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Our latest feature is from Dr. Karl Glasson, the owner of the IHF (ihatefeminism.com) web site. In his essay, Karl looks at the role models boys are looking up to today and isolates this as a very serious issue of our time. The media, Karl vehemently argues, portrays men so negatively these days because anti-male feminists dominate the media and don't want anything positive said about them. Read on for an extremely engaging and controversial essay!

Entire Human Race Faces Extinction from Meteor Impact - Thanks to Feminism

by Dr. Karl Glasson, ihatefeminism@yahoo.com

http://www.ihatefeminism.com

You think that I'm joking, don't you? Not at all.

There cannot be a person in the country who is not aware of the long-term damaging effects of failing to bring up our boys properly. And one of the things that boys really do need in order to develop as citizens fit for society are strong, good, well-adjusted male role models.

'Role models'. The term doesn't have much impact, does it? And yet, without them, where, into what, through what channels, are boys to develop? Where are they supposed to 'go'. Into what are they supposed to 'grow'? How are they supposed to 'know' what to grow into? Who's directing them?

Their morality, their attitudes, their behaviour, their knowledge, their expertise doesn't come from the air - and they aren't built-in at birth. They come from what they see around them as they grow up. And they come from society teaching them, and indoctrinating them, with values that will benefit us all. They come from infusing young boys with a positive attitude towards doing things from which all of society will benefit. That's how societies are formed, that's how they progress, and that's how they better themselves.

Now, hundreds of thousands of our boys simply do not have any decent role models. Even if the fathers are at home (and for so many, they aren't) where are the others? Where do boys encounter men who are going to steer their growth, directly or indirectly?

Well, for many boys, the only available men (or, rather, older boys) are the ones out on the streets or in the clubs. They're the ones sleeping around, taking drugs, doing badly at high school, drinking, stealing cars, shoplifting, and, well, generally behaving badly, because there's nothing much else for them to do.

And then there's the TV.

Now, you really don't think that our young lads are watching the News or Songs of Praise every week, do you? So from where, exactly, are they getting their moral training? They don't even watch programmes like BBC's Question Time. They don't see the scientists on Equinox or Horizon. They don't watch programmes that make them think about their futures or about their roles in life. Some do, but the vast majority don't.

By and large, they're watching crap! And that includes the popular soaps like Eastenders, and the Hollywood films, where, in both cases, boys can relate to rapists, fraudsters, gangsters, drug pushers, abusers, child molesters, wife beaters, absent dads, adulterers, harassers, stalkers, burglars, murderers, serial killers, traitors, arsonists. These are the 'heroes'. These are the ones who push at the boundaries.

And then there are the footballers, who are adored by hundreds of thousands of our boys. But footballers, well, they're mostly playing football.

So, from where are boys to get their direction?

When I was a lad, there were the dads at home, mine and everybody else's. There were loads of male teachers, and even priests, working within the educational system. On the telly, there was John Wayne always fighting the baddies. There was Dixon of Dock Green. There was Elvis - and even though he took drugs, we didn't know it at the time! He always had that spiritual, Christian aura. And then off he went to fight for his country.

And then there were scoutmasters and youth leaders, now all gone because of the dangers of working with children.

There were hordes of men doing good things all around us when we were lads. They showed us the ropes.

But where are the good men now?

They've all but disappeared from the TV screens because the feminist media always want material that portrays men as bad, violent, abusing and aggressive. They want us all to see men as the 'evil' ones. And they have succeeded so well in this, that it is even considered funny when a man has his penis cut off. Can you even imagine any mainstream comedian on TV making a joke about a woman having her breasts cut off? Would anyone laugh?

In Germany, the Nazis managed to achieve the same with their propaganda, and people laughed when Jews were killed. They really did laugh you know. That's how effective the propaganda was then. It's the same type of thing now. It's considered funny for a man to be severely mutilated. That's the world that we men live in. That's the society we have created.

It's not nice.

I remember Joe Brand, in her series, describing men's genitals as being 'disgusting and ugly'. She said it with venom. Can you imagine what women would feel like if this appalling kind of insult was constantly put out by the mainstream media about their genitals - and people laughed and applauded? That's how it was in Germany, in the 30's. That's how it is now, right here.

The feminist-indoctrinated media industry, the shallowest of all industries, continues to succeed to portray men in a way that women would find intolerable if they did this to them. But the men that they portray are the role models for our boys.

In real life, as opposed to on the screen, the trumped-up hysteria over child abuse has made it unsafe for men to work with children, and so the scoutmasters and youth leaders have gone. And so have the teachers. Our primary schools have a massive shortage of male teachers.

So, again, I ask you. Where are the male role models for our boys?

Now, the evidence shows very clearly that boys do better at school educationally, they are better behaved, and they grow up into better citizens if they have good, male teachers within their schools. They relate to these teachers and they are much influenced by them. Female teachers, however, cannot achieve the same results - though the selfish, lying, feminist-indoctrinated teachers argue otherwise. The truth, however, is that boys know where they are 'heading' in terms of growing up, and they know that they are not going to become women!

They simply do not 'identify' with female teachers. Further, as far as boys are concerned in particular, they feel that they are moaned at by women at school throughout the day, and then they are moaned at by women, their mothers, when they return home. By the time they're thirteen, they've had enough of it! And their attitude towards women is very badly affected. (So much so, that single mothers have often given up by then, and this is when the boys start hitting the streets in large numbers.) But who can blame the boys? Moaning, whingeing women is how they see it. All day long. All night long.

They then turn on the TV, and what do they see? Oprah, Ricki, Esther, Roseanne telling them how awful they are, or are going to be! It's complaining, whingeing women throughout their entire upbringing. Who can blame them for growing up with contempt for the entire gender?

Is it surprising that boys are becoming more and more of a real problem?

So, what is the government doing about getting more male teachers into our schools? Bugger All is the answer. Even though it would prevent thousands and thousands of our boys from being disadvantaged, with the consequent disruption to society, the government is doing nothing. Why? Because of Feminism.

We could get more men into the teaching profession by paying them more! Oh no, I hear you say. How can we possibly pay men more than women for doing the same job? It would be sex discrimination.

Well, there are two answers to this.

1. Not to do so is to discriminate against our boys. And very heavily so, in the most important areas of their young lives. Isn't this sex discrimination? Of an even worse kind? Sex-discrimination against children! A type of discrimination for which we will all pay a price? Of course it is. But nothing gets in the way of Feminist Ideology. And it doesn't matter that boys are disadvantaged.

2. Don't we keep hearing the phrase that the children are 'paramount'? Well, if they really are, then why is no-one doing anything about this problem? And the answer to this is very simple again. The children of this country are only considered to be paramount when it suits women - and feminists, in particular. If it comes to offending feminists, then the children can go to Hell. Paying male teachers more would be seen as favouring males. This would offend feminists. Thus, even though our boys will be discriminated against, and society, therefore, will be worse off, we must never upset the feminists. They are number one. (I'm not going to continue with this theme here, for it is evidenced throughout this website, but it really can be shown that, in this country, children are only considered to be paramount when it suits women. And this is evident in very many areas.)

The result of failing to bring up our boys properly, and honing in on their talents, particularly those 'narrow-minded', focused, competitive talents that we are now so accustomed to hearing about (as opposed to the female 'talents' of 'multi-tasking') is that instead of aspiring to, and being educationally capable of, becoming scientists, technicians, medical researchers, and so on, our boys are becoming more 'worthless', more superficial, more antagonistic and more concerned with 'show' than with 'depth'.

How much better for all of us if they were really encouraged to develop their particular talents in those areas that society benefits so much from. Shouldn't we be aiming to train thousands more of them towards futures in medicine, cancer research, gene programmes, environmental work, space exploration, computer sciences, technology, construction, food production, and so on? Wouldn't it be better if we were supplying the planet with armies of young men keen to foster peace, keen to alleviate poverty and food shortages, and keen to make the whole place better for all people? Wouldn't this be better than pandering to the feminist hate of them, disadvantaging them, and turning them into dysfunctional prison fodder?

The callous disregard of our boys' education by a society that continually panders to feminist vindictiveness toward the male gender is doing none of us any good at all. It may make feminists feel superior, and you can see them often gloating in the press about how poorly our boys are behaved and how poorly they do at school - but nobody benefits from all this. Society is harmed.

Whether it be a boy who ends up in prison or a boy who has simply failed his exams, who benefits?

Feminism has most of the media by the throat, it controls policies in our schools, it actively debilitates men in virtually all the areas of their lives, including their families, and it creates a climate where boys and men cannot function properly. And we are ALL paying the price of this.

Our real enemy is the very world that we live in. Nature is not on our side. If we cannot get our act together, worldwide, then we are not going to make it. And, at the moment, the most divisive ideology one can possibly dream up, where men and women are encouraged to hate each other, is alive and kicking. Feminism.

It has got to go.

It has to be destroyed.

And I urge all men to join the fight against it.

This article can also be found directly on Karl's site, at this link.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/24/1837219.shtml

The Children's War, The Boy's War

Scott · 25 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Salon Magazine had a feature length article on an issue which demonstrates how people accept the death and exploitation of male children as a given. It's entitled, "The Children's War," although it should really be called "The Boy's War," because it is mostly boys who are being slaughtered in the midst of the Israeli conflicts going on right now. The article is full of male shaming and stereotypes, and can be described as a rationalization of the deliberate killing of young men, particularly those under 18. I have to wonder aloud: if women were the primary ones being killed in this conflict, wouldn't the entire world be lamenting and figuring out how to put and end to it, rather than rationalizing it this way?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/25/1853237.shtml

A Reality Check Of Just How Far We've Come

Scott · 26 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

And it's not exactly flattering. BBC news posed the question, "Are men trapped in outdated roles?" and got a number of responses from various people throughout Europe. The answers were generally negative about men, and I'm appalled at the number of people (mostly women) who included something in their response about domestic violence. One answer was: "Surely it's a good thing for male violence to be under scrutiny? Personally I feel that there's a long way to go before women achieve equality with men. Not until fathers accept responsibility for child rearing and men stop using women as punchbags, that women will be equal." You can read other responses here, but please don't do it if you're already feeling depressed.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/25/1929233.shtml

An Open Letter To Gender Feminists

Scott · 26 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Jerry Boggs wrote an incredibly good "open letter to gender feminists" that can be read at this link. The quality of this letter cannot be overstated, in my opinion. He covers several key issues that have divided the sexes - misperceptions about the wage gap, the dynamics at play in male/female relationships, sexual harassment, and domestic violence. Jerry obviously spent a tremendous amount of time on this, so be sure to tell everyone you know about it to spread it wide and far.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/25/208222.shtml

Boys Behind Bars

Adam · 26 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This article tells us about how badly the "justice system" is biased against men and boys in Australia, and how the boys live in conditions no better than third world countries while the courts go out of their way to not imprison girls. Click here to read it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/26/2131229.shtml

GAL System Under Review in MA

Scott · 27 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Joe Dunbar sent me this article from the Massachusetts section of law.com on the Guardian Ad Litem (GAL) system, which represents a child's interests in family court often when allegations of domestic violence or drug abuse are involved. Joe has had some direct exposure with this system and is in support of its reform, and writes, "I am trying to help parents and children in the Massachusetts court system - Middlesex County. If you're from that area and have ever been treated unfairly by attorney and GAL Vicki Shemin or Judge Judith Dilday, please e-mail me. Documented cases of fee disputes or irrational custody recommendations by Shemin would be of particular interest. Shemin extorted over $26,000 from my family, then reversed her first two custody recommendations when I objected to her bill. I am also looking for ideas to help the MA probate courts with use of GALs and other bulletin boards to post this to."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/27/0123258.shtml

Marc Responds To Gloria Steinem's Political Theorizing Of Men

Scott · 27 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The Daily Bruin printed my letter responding to Gloria Steinem's claim about why men vote for Ralph Nader. This letter shows my own progressive angle towards men's issues, but I think men's activism can fit perfectly on any point in the political spectrum, and I respect everyone else's position on that spectrum." Marc's activism shines through again - thanks for the submission, and your efforts!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/27/0131258.shtml

Uncovering Battered Men

Scott · 27 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This story from the Bangor Daily News is on battered men in Maine, and does an excellent job both explaining DV statistics and sharing the personal horror stories of battered men in that state. Time and time again the men reveal that they had no one to turn to for help, and were afraid of losing their children if they attempted to flee from the marriage.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/27/1446208.shtml

Warren Farrell's New Book Contents

Scott · 28 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Warren Farrell, one of the best known authors in the men's rights movement, is releasing a new book toward the beginning of 2001, Father and Child Reunion. I noticed on Warren's web site that he's put up the Table of Contents of this book, which can be viewed here. In my opinion, Warren was very smart to write a book on father's issues, and this is sure to become a hot seller. (Note, you can view an interview Mensactivism.org hosted with Warren at this link)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/27/1432234.shtml

Women Dying In The Military

Scott · 28 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl submitted this story from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. It's on the recent deaths of two women in the Cole destroyer, which was attacked near Yemen. Bill writes, "[The article] is interesting from a number of angles. I mean, here's the media talking about not its coverage of women but it's lack of coverage of women. Many ironies in this article and some hard hitting truth too. How interesting that nowhere in the article does it say anything about the male only draft."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/27/2235208.shtml

Great Letter Rebuking "Deadbeat Dads" Myths

Scott · 28 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I thought this letter by Richard Weiss was a really effective and concise way of explaining the myths about "deadbeat dads". Bravo, Richard, and thanks for taking the time to write to the Huntsville Times about this!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/27/2321201.shtml

Interview With Fred Hayward

Adam · 29 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I came across this a while ago, in this interview Fred Hayward explains what he's been doing for men's issues the past 20 years, his clashes with feminist groups, his meetings with Warren Farrell and much more. Quite a story I'm sure you'll agree, and you can read about it here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/28/2117207.shtml

Tricked Men No Longer To Pay Child Support In Ohio

Scott · 29 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Let's hope other states follow this trend; in Ohio, a 500 year old common law stated that any child born in wedlock is assumed to be the mother's husband's child, and child support payments have been enforced against men who have proven with DNA tests that they are not the father of the child. A new law has been passed that nullifies the old law, so that "Ohio no longer rewards mothers who lie about who the father of their baby is," as described by the sponsor of the bill, Rep. Peter Lawson Jones. You can read the story at this link. This is an important, basic step in moving toward the concept of male reproductive rights.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/29/0153219.shtml

Men's Issues Awareness In The 21st Century

Scott · 30 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

bernee writes "Steve Biddulph, an Australian author with a variety of men's and boy's health books to his credit, is releasing a new book which he has edited and is an anthology of "Mens' Stories".
This article reflects on some of the issues which are pushing the growing movement towards a need for recognition of issues affecting men's and boy's health and well being." I hope that the explosion of the movement is as inevitable as Biddulph makes it sound.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/30/1347223.shtml

New "Divorce Game Show" To Air In 2001

Scott · 30 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

As if the depths of depravity and greed in television weren't deep enough, the Fox network has created a game-show like program called I Want a Divorce, as a followup to the Who Wants To Marry A Millionaire show. You can read the article here. "I Want a Divorce will be a two-hour special in which couples who have recently separated can tell their opposing sides of their stories, answer questions about their spouses' lives, and have a chance to win a grand prize of $100,000 as well as marital assets." I haven't owned or watched TV regularly for over five years now. Apparently I'm not missing much!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/30/158247.shtml

Divorce Increases Risk Of Suicide In Men

Scott · 31 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from MHA forwarded me this story from HealthScout. It discusses new research which shows that men (especially poor men) have a significantly higher risk of suicide shortly after a divorce. The reasons for this have to do with the fact that men generally have smaller support networks, and often loose their family and home, which makes them feel that everything they've worked for has come to nothing. Please consider this if you know a man going through a divorce, and keep an ear open to his pain.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/30/1536254.shtml

A Gender Gap In The Election

Adam · 31 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Since the election is only a few days away,I thought an update would be useful.Here's an article that says married women could be the deciding bloc in the election, but you can probably take it for granted that whoever wins will do so with a very narrow margin of voters, be they married women or another social group. As we've said before: The Men's Activism News Network does not officially endorse any political candidates.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/30/1720227.shtml

On-line Chat On DV Hijacked - To Discuss Male Victims!

Scott · 31 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is incredible - The Washington Post held an on-line chat on domestic violence, and a "DV expert" was on the program who told the typical distortions and lies about gender and domestic violence. Amazingly, enough supporters of battered men were participating that she was quickly put on the defensive. Best of all, the moderator of the chat seemed very supportive of men, and undoubtedly facilitated the turn of events. You can read a transcript of the chat at this link. Thanks to Marc Angelucci for sending me this!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/30/2330247.shtml

Paul Weller Barely Escapes Rape Charges

Scott · 31 October 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Paul Weller, a popular music artist in the UK, was recently accused of raping a woman during a party back in 1996. The police have finally said he will not be charged with rape. Weller described the ordeal as "one of the most depressing moments of my life," and also said, "I understand the need for anonymity, [but] it should be extended to both parties in such cases, especially prior to any criminal charges being brought." My sentiments exactly. You can read the Yahoo! Music news article here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/31/1236222.shtml

The End Of Boyhood?

Scott · 1 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Jim Castelli writes "An article by Alex Beam appearing in the Boston Globe today, is entitled Tom Sawyer and the End of Boyhood. According to the article, since the 1960's the natural spirit of boyhood has been turned into a psychological illness. The writing of William Pollack (Real Boys) is cited as one of the most egregious examples of pathologizing what had been considered normal boy behavior. From the article: "If Tom Sawyer were a boy in school today he would most likely be in therapy three times a week and jacked up on Ritalin." Is there a correlation between the rise of "male-bashing feminism" and the pathologizing of normal boys behavior? Let's see, most teachers in grades K-12 are women schooled in the contemporary "male-bashing feminism" begun in the 1960's. You decide!"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/10/31/184205.shtml

Prone To Violence

Adam · 1 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is an online book by Erin Pizzey who founded the first refuge for battered wives in 1971, the book is her personal story of all the struggles she had in getting the shelter set up, her encounters with DV victims and the men's side of the story and how she also set up a men's shelter, but it was closed down due to the grant being withdrawn. You can read it here. I remember hearing a rumor that Erin Pizzey fled Britain soon after publishing this book due to death threats from women's groups, I can't confirm this but would any of us be surprised? Scott's note: Murray Straus, a family violence researcher, has also received death threats and bomb threats at his speaking engagements. At times radical feminists act more like terrorists it seems.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/01/153227.shtml

Conference On Paternal Instinct

Scott · 1 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

According to this Excite news story, a conference will be held November 10-12 to "explore whether men have an inherent paternal instinct to maintain supportive and nurturing relationships with their offspring and, if so, how that basic drive can be harnessed for the benefit of their children." Warren Farrell will be a keynote speaker at this conference, so you can be sure it's going to be pro-male and pro-father.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/01/0330232.shtml

Male Sex Problems On The Rise In China

Scott · 2 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Claude Saint-Jarre wrote in to inform me of this news article from China Daily. It talks about a disturbing rise in male sexual problems, including sterility, erectile dysfunction, and prostate hyperplasia. It is believed that these diseases are "increasing among men due to the growing stress of work and the family, and the fact that men are often reluctant to visit the doctor. Serious environmental pollution is also seen as a major reason for the increase."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/01/2116207.shtml

Al Gore's Views On Fatherhood And Child Support

Scott · 2 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Voter.com news has this article, which outlines the public views of presidential candidate Al Gore regarding welfare, fatherhood, and child support. It's not particularly positive to men, to say the least. Note: The Men's Activism News Network does not officially endorse any political candidates.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/01/2146254.shtml

Daily Bruin Prints More Letters On Men's Issues

Scott · 3 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The UCLA Daily Bruin surprisingly printed my letter even though they just printed another of mine a week ago. You can read it here. There's also an interesting letter by a "pro-life feminist" just above mine that even asks "where are the father's rights?" regarding abortion. The elections are making gender a hot topic and we need to take advantage of the moment while we have it by writing to the papers." Marc, your success and enthusiasm are a great sign to me and encouragement to others. Thank you!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/02/1755222.shtml

Private Donations And Title IX

Scott · 3 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

There is a new conflict surrounding Title IX, and this one seems absurd. Schools are now starting to require private donation funds, such as booster clubs, to donate equally to men and women's sports, or not to donate at all. As it was put in the article: "'We're the ones who have been out here working to make money, and ... they're now telling us how we can spend it,' says Mrs. Proctor, president of the booster club, whose son is a center and linebacker on the team. 'If we would like our boys to go to Louisville and be a part of a passing competition, and we have the money, why can't we send them?'" You can read the Christian Science Monitor article here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/03/0232200.shtml

Gendercide Case Study: Imprisonment

Adam · 3 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The gendercide watch website deals with gender selective mass killing. While being imprisoned might not seem like gendercide, the nature of capital punishment and the death penalty is. This case study here tells us how gender-based prisons over a lot of the world are, and also how gender based the death penalty and capital punishment is. The article is very well written and even has a reference from Warren Farrell's book The Myth of Male Power as well.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/03/1753234.shtml

What Is The Lace Curtain? - Part 2

Adam · 4 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a continuation of our previous story on the "Lace Curtain." In the second part of his writings, Warren Farrell continues his story of the lace curtain. In this part he explains the workings of publishers when it comes to gender issues, and how 75% of publishers are feminists resistant to men's issues. All this and more can be read at this link.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/04/167222.shtml

Discrimination Against Men In VAWA

Scott · 4 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User writes "VAWA's discrimination against men is denounced in an article by Philip W. Cook (author of a recent book about domestic violence toward men) that appeared today on the Op/Ed page of The Oregonian. The link is here." Philip Cook's book is Abused Men, and highly recommended to anyone interested in this topic.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/04/1749245.shtml

Boy On Field Hockey Team Creates Controversy

Scott · 5 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Jim Castelli writes "Lisa Knight, field hockey coach of Martha's Vinyard High School Field Hockey team complained about Nate Coolidge playing on the girl's field hockey team from Sandwich. After losing to the Sandwich team coach Knight stated, '...Coolidge has no business competing with girls....I'm big on equality in women's sports...In this country, it's a female sport...Men are going to be bigger, stronger, faster. He's clearly the dominant player on the field. Without him Sandwich would not be the team they are.' But men and women are equal, aren't they Lisa?" You can read the Boston Globe article here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/04/1755253.shtml

Prostate Cancer Climb

Scott · 5 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America notified me of a team of men who plan to climb Mount Aconcagua in Argentina to raise money for prostate cancer awareness and research. Their goal is to raise one million dollars, and they need your help. Please see the Prostate Cancer Climb web site to see what they're up to and how you can donate to this effort.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/05/058216.shtml

Fighting For Father Custody

Adam · 6 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Good news on the fatherhood front - more men are trying for custody and winning (albeit with king sized legal fees). This article from the UK Sunday Times tells us how fathers are starting to win high profile cases. What really gets me though, is how society devalues men's unique style of parenting (which is practical), and thinks women's style of parenting (which is emotional) is inherently better. I mean, how is a man who provides a house and a monthly income (practical parenting) for his wife and kids not considered a primary or equal caregiver?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/05/1818258.shtml

Bill 117 To Destroy Men With One Phone Call

Scott · 6 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Rand submitted this link to an Ottawa Citizen story. It's about a new domestic violence bill that completely blew my mind. Under the new law, a woman accusing a man of violence (in marriage or dating relationships) will automatically be transferred ownership of all of the man's property, a restraining order will be enacted, and all this can be done without informing the man first. You've got to read it to believe it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/06/1318201.shtml

Hey You - Get Out And VOTE!

Scott · 7 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is just a reminder for everyone in the USA that democracy only works if we take part in it. Although this hasn't been a great election from the standpoint of men's issues, there are still many reasons to cast your vote and help influence the future of this country. Please, get to the polls today and stick your vote in the ballot box!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/07/0235242.shtml

Men Needed To Improve 'Social Scene' At Colleges

Scott · 7 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This Boston Globe article discusses the decline of male enrollment at universities, but after reading it in its entirety I have to wonder why it is people are concerned about it. Several college women were interviewed about the problem, and all of them complained that it was simply "hard to meet guys" on campus (ahem - and have them pay for dates?). Also, toward the end of the story, the decline of "testosterone" and "male violence" is also seen as a welcome result of the larger percentage of women on campus. The misleading "men = violence" equation is at work again.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/07/1548249.shtml

Why Feminists Will Never Get What They Want

Adam · 8 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In his article, Matthias Matussek tells us of misandry and women's "identity problem." He also explains how togetherness will not be achieved unless men are viewed as equals also. This quote sums up the purpose of the article better than I could: "In short: when the sucking-dry of men stops being a generally accepted society game" is when things will begin to improve for both men and women. You may read the article here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/07/1551227.shtml

UK Men Still Struggling For Compensation In Coal Mine Lawsuits

Scott · 8 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Thanks to IHF for submitting this: in this UK Independent story, thousands of seriously ill men from coal-mine related respiratory problems are struggling to receive compensation before dying. I share their frustration not only from the delays the government is causing, but also from the apparent lack of outrage over this - these men sacrificed their health and lives on a daily basis just to support their families. Where is the respect we owe them?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/08/1741203.shtml

L.A. Times Commentary Repeats Wage Gap Myth

Scott · 9 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The L.A. Times printed this article that repeats the "women earn 74 cents to a man's dollar" myth. A few letters to the L.A. Times (letters@latimes.com) might help get a response printed. Go here for some facts to use in response." The facts Marc refers to were actually compiled by me, and I hope others might find the collection useful.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/08/1952251.shtml

6 Year Old Boy Gets Help For Family After Car Wreck

Scott · 9 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Despite the large amount of depressing and frustrating news, good things do get into the newspapers occasionally. Here's a story from the Houston Chronicle about a 6 year-old boy who emerged from a car crash in heavy rain and flagged down help for his grandmother and brother who were stuck in the car. This little guy deserves a lot of praise.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/08/2328241.shtml

Oprah Winfrey Sued By "False" Domestic Violence Victims

Scott · 9 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An anonymous reader sent in this link to a Boston Globe article related to politics in domestic violence. Apparently they were on an Oprah Winfrey talk show where Oprah falsely portrayed them as battered women. Was this the intentional misrepresentation of domestic violence, or a legitimate mistake? I don't know, but the women suing thought they were on the show for reasons completely unrelated to domestic violence.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/08/2026207.shtml

Veteran's Day: A Day Of Honor

Scott · 10 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Today is Veteran's Day - a day to honor and reflect upon the contributions that war veterans have made to protect the freedoms we currently enjoy in this country. Obviously, this shouldn't be the only day we pay respect to those who have struggled and fought for us, but I hope we will all take some time today to think about what it really means to have risked one's life in wartime. You can visit the Veteran's Day Home Page by the US Dept. of Veteran's Affairs here. Also, read on for a message that I found distributed on the internet last year.

WHAT IS A VET?

Some veterans bear visible signs of their service: a missing limb, a jagged scar, a certain look in the eye.

Others may carry the evidence inside them: a pin holding a bone together, a piece of shrapnel in the leg - or perhaps another sort of inner steel: the soul's ally forged in the refinery of adversity.

Except in parades, however, the men and women who have kept America safe wear no badge or emblem. You can't tell a vet just by looking.

What is a vet?

He is the cop on the beat who spent six months in Saudi Arabia sweating two gallons a day making sure the armored personnel carriers didn't run out of fuel. He is the barroom loudmouth, dumber than five wooden planks, whose overgrown frat-boy behavior is outweighed a hundred times in the cosmic scales by four hours of exquisite bravery near the 38th parallel. She is the nurse who fought against futility and went to sleep sobbing every night for two solid years in Da Nang. He is the POW who went away one person and came back another - or didn't come back AT ALL. He is the Quantico drill instructor who has never seen combat - but has saved countless lives by turning slouchy, no-account rednecks and gang members into Marines, and teaching them to watch each other's backs. He is the parade-riding Legionnaire who pins on his ribbons and medals with a prosthetic hand.

He is the career quartermaster who watches the ribbons and medals pass him by. They are the three anonymous heroes in The Tomb Of The Unknowns, whose presence at the Arlington National Cemetery must forever preserve the memory of all the anonymous heroes whose valor dies unrecognized with them on the battlefield or in the ocean's sunless deep. He is the old guy bagging groceries at the supermarket - palsied now and aggravatingly slow - who helped liberate a Nazi death camp and who wishes all day long that his wife were still alive to hold him when the nightmares come. He is an ordinary and yet an extraordinary human being - a person who offered some of his life's most vital years in the service of his country, and who sacrificed his ambitions so others would not have to sacrifice theirs. He is a soldier and a savior and a sword against the darkness, and he is nothing more than the finest, greatest testimony on behalf of the finest, greatest nation ever known.

So remember, each time you see someone who has served our country, just lean over and say Thank You. That's all most people need, and in most cases it will mean more than any medals they could have been awarded or were awarded. Two little words that mean a lot, "THANK YOU".

Remember November 11th is Veterans Day

-- Author Unknown

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/10/0148206.shtml

Advice For Men Falsely Accused Of Domestic Violence

Scott · 10 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Dean Tong forwarded me some detailed instructions for men who are falsely accused of domestic violence. Dean is a Trial Consultant who believes that the recent passage of VAWA is going to increase the number of men falsely accused of domestic violence. Click "Read More" to read his advice. Note: The Men's Activism News Network is not responsible for the results or application of any legal advice presented through this web site.

How-To Combat VAWA, If YOU Become Victimized:

As VAWA II (Violence Against Women Act) passed into law last month more men and fathers will get hit with domestic violence injunctions, ex-parte.

What is a DVI (Domestic Violence Injunction)?

A Domestic Violence Injunction is a Complaint sworn out by usually a woman in affidavit form alleging that a man has beat her, hit her, slapped her, pushed her, intimidated her, threatened her with harm, et al. Every state in the country has their own subsidiary version of VAWA. The essence of the law says that a woman need only show by way of hearsay allegation, with no proof or evidence, she is in imminent danger of bodily harm for herself and her child(ren). In Massachusetts DVI's are called 209A's, in Pennsylvania-PFA's (Protection From Abuse Orders), in Minnesota and Iowa-OFP's (Orders For Protection). In many states, DVI's carry mandatory arrest measures against the accused.

The Effects of VAWA and DVI's Upon Your Relationship With Your Children:

If you think that just being accused of alleged spousal abuse of your wife or paramour will not dampen your relationship with your kids, think again! There is a rebuttable presumption that the accused will not be allowed joint custody, or unsupervised visitation, unless the DVI is squashed in its entirety. That means-Do NOT plea bargain!!! Do NOT plead nolo contendre, or no contest, meaning you're not contesting the charges against you. If you do so that is tantamount to a plea of guilty!!! Even assuming the district attorney decided against prosecuting you in a criminal case because you accepted a plea bargain (e.g. you decided to enter a batterers intervention program in exchange for no jail time), your plea will come back to haunt you in family court where visitation and custody are at issue.

How-To Counter False Domestic Violence Charges?

Accusing a man of spousal abuse in 2000 America is the new weapon of choice in both juvenile and family court. Once accused you are presumed guilty. Once accused you're labeled with OJ Simpson Syndrome. And, once accused, you must prove your innocence while impeaching the credibility of your false accusers. I recommend the following defense strategy when falsely accused of spousal abuse:

1. If arrested, retain a criminal defense lawyer who is associated with NACDL (National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers) and who has tried false abuse cases before, successfully so. Get a copy of the attorneys CV (Curriculum Vita-Resume).

2. If in civil court, retain an attorney who is board certified in family/marital law, who is associated with ATLA/AAML (Association of Trial Lawyers of America/American Association of Matrimonial Lawyers), and who has litigated false abuse cases before, successfully so. Get a copy of the attorneys CV (Curriculum Vita-Resume).

3. File A Request For Production of Documents obtaining a copy of the accusers complaint/affidavit sworn out against you.

4. Realizing, once you've been accused of spousal abuse, you have only 14 days until your day in court-the evidentiary hearing, where you get to present evidence, witnesses and testimony to refute the allegations against you, consider hiring an investigator to interview collateral witnesses who may be able to impeach the accusers allegations.

4. Take out a mutual DVI against your accuser. This will ensure that no further antics are played out by the complainant as she will not be allowed near you.

5. Have your attorney file a Deposition Duces Tecum against the Complainant to have her deposed under oath.

6. Go for psychological anti-domestic violence testing, specifically, the MMPI-2, CTS-2, MOSHER HMI, CAPI-Form VI, and Polygraph, to ensure that you do not have the propensity to be the monster she painted you to be. Also, your VRAG (Violence Risk Appraisal Guide) score should be calculated.

Dean Tong, Trial Consultant

813-885-6173

http://www.abuse-excuse.com/

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/10/1455249.shtml

Cop Falsely Accused Of Murder By His Former Lover

Scott · 11 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "Well, look at this story. Sonia Flores, the former lover of L.A.P.D. Officer Rafael Perez, after telling authorities Perez killed people and buried them in Mexico, now admits - after her story was discounted - that she lied. Why? Because he didn't marry her. According to her own attorney, she 'made up the stories because she still feels jilted by Perez and wanted to see him spend the rest of his life behind bars.' Imagine the terror he's been feeling all this time, with nobody to believe him. Her attorney puts it quite nicely: 'She's a woman scorned . . . She had everybody fooled.' This is a great opportunity to write letters and op-eds to our local papers on false accusations." I've put some details about suggested research sources for false accusations info in the extended body of this story. Click Read More below to read it.

Using the Men's Activism News Network to Research Men's Issues

I think this is a good opportunity to give a short tutorial on how to use this site to research news and facts on men's issues.

The Search Mensactivism.org box at the top right of the page is the most flexible search engine for the site. Simply type in your text, ie "prostate cancer", and this will return news articles on the topic of Prostate Cancer that have been posted to Mensactivism.org.

You can also browse stories by topic, by clicking on the News Topics link in the box located in the upper left corner of the page, and that will bring you to a page listing all of the news categories currently on Mensactivism.org. If you click on one of the category icons, you will go to a page with a list of news articles posted on that topic, and can click on each headline to go to the corresponding story.

So, give it a try with False Accusations...either type in "fase accusations", "false rape accusations", etc. in the search box, or click News Topics, then False Accusations and browse the articles.

I must note that there are some issues with bookmarking individual stories on this site - and I'm working on fixing that this weekend. This statement will be removed when this is complete.

So, please make use of this site - not only to stay informed on news stories related to men's rights and dignity, but to actively help bring an end to bias and attacks against men in society!

Thanks for reading this,

Scott - scott@mensactivism.org

Site Admin

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/11/1611221.shtml

Sexism In Hollywood Movies

Scott · 13 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This story from Reuters news at AOL examines the misandrist messages in Hollywood movies, taking Charlie's Angels as a case in point. "Charlie's Angels opened to a record $40 million last weekend, and it's no surprise audience were anxious to see it. Sony did a bang-up job in marketing the film, including an action-packed trailer: One man gets thrown to the ground, two men get slugged and seven men get kicked in the face...Why do men put up with this persecution?" I'm not much of a movie-goer myself, and this has quite a bit to do with it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/12/212213.shtml

Mensactivism.org Feature: Male Paths To Healing

Scott · 13 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

We received an excellent feature article this week from Thomas Golden. Tom is a psychotherapist who approaches his work from a male-affirming perspective, and recently put out a book on the ways that men deal with loss. The feature article is an excerpt from his book Swallowed by a Snake: The Gift of the Masculine Side of Healing. Whether you've lost a loved one recently, gone through a bad divorce, or have to struggle very day to maintain your sanity while trying to get custody of your children back, we have all felt pain and loss at some point of our lives. Tom acknowledges the unique ways that men deal with hurt and loss, and honors them with the essays and healing methods he describes in his book. This is one issue every man must confront, and Tom's writing is rare in how it speaks to men in such positive, productive ways. Click "Read More" below for the text of his essay...

MALE PATHS TO HEALING:

Fixing a Hole: Grieving With Other Men

by Thomas Golden - golden@webhealing.com

http://www.webhealing.com

Note: Although this excerpt is about Tom's own personal experiences, the majority of Swallowed by a Snake is focused on understanding pain and loss, and practical methods of healing from loss.

There I was dripping in sweat, the kind that rolls down the side of your head and innocently into your ear. The still summer evening was allowing me to hear my own breath and my own thoughts. I was determined to make this a great hole and I kept digging - probably farther than I really needed to, but on I went. What seemed like a great deal of sweat was swallowed effortlessly by the hole, absorbed as a matter of course by the dirt in the bottom. The hole and the dirt were equally unmoved by the tears I shed.

This hole was to be the home of a tree that was being given as a memorial to my father who had died the previous November. I had known the hole needed digging, but had put off the task until now - now being just about the last possible moment it could be dug. As I continued digging, I found myself flooded with memories of my father. My thoughts moved back and forth between recent events leading up to his death and childhood experiences. I remembered his engineering talents and nature and tried to dig the hole in a way that would please him.

As I dug, the feelings flowed through me: the sadness of missing him, the gratefulness of having been his son, and the anger and frustration of my powerlessness. All of these feelings found their way into this hole. The act of digging became an avenue for the various thoughts and feelings to arise. Through the action I was opened to my own inner world.

I started wondering why I had put off this job, then realized that I hadn't, and didn't, want to do it. Actually digging the hole brought the death more into reality, and a part of me didn't want that. I've learned to accept this part of me that wants to deny things. Denial is not really such a bad thing, and it doesn't go away as quickly as some people seem to think. I've noticed it has a slow, zigzag decay that can last a long time. In a way, denial can be our friend, allowing us to slowly accept the reality at hand. I became aware of the battle going on between the denying part and the digging-the-hole part. As a friend of mine says, "We have wetware, not hardware."

The tree was planted in an emotional ritual attended by myself and the six men who donated the tree. The activity became an avenue for all of us to delve into our interiors and connect with a variety of issues, from relationships with our fathers to the finality of death. The activity of buying, digging, planting, and gathering together became a hub for a wide variety of spin-offs. As we stood around the tree, we all had a chance to speak and to listen, and somehow having an activity made this process flow smoothly. It would have been much more difficult to simply sit in a circle and talk about our feelings. It was through the doing that we could connect.

Death professionals have long been confounded by the difference in men and women in visiting gravesites, which is that the men tend to visit more often. My own experiences have given me a deeper understanding of why this takes place. Men tend toward linking their grief with a place, action, or thing. There have been many examples presented in this book: the man who wore his deceased daughter's ring as a remembrance of her, the man who carved a bust of his wife after her death, the man who built a pond in memory of his murdered brother, the man who wore his father's watch, and so on. These activities are often quiet and unseen by most people. The casual observer might assume that the man is "not grieving," but that is many times not the case.

I have found a wide variety of activities that, like planting the tree, help me in connecting to my inner spheres. Writing, gardening, and music are examples. All of these activities can take me into myself and my grief and joy.

Another activity I have used is a ritual practiced by Cree Indians, as discussed in chapter seven. Tree wounding is a simple and beautiful ritual. Following ancient custom, Cree men who are grieving go into the forest, select a tree, and after uttering a prayer, strip away a piece of the bark. Now the tree, like the man, has lost something whose loss causes deep pain. Many times over the following months the man will return to visit the tree. As the seasons pass, the wound in the tree heals, and so does the wound in the man's heart. With the tree as a visible reflection of his loss, the man is reminded that he, too, is healing.

In this ritual there is both an action and a place, and both serve as "containers" or "hooks" for the inner state of the man. As the man performs the action or visits the place, he is afforded the opportunity to experience his pain and to have his healing reflected back to him. I have used this ritual a number of times and have found it extremely helpful. The trees I have chosen are mostly in my back yard, and they stand as reminders to me of my grief, pain, and healing.

The use of activity as a means to connect with one's grief is not exclusive to men; women also find this approach helpful. The difference is that women have a strength in connecting their emotions to their words and then are inclined to "share" those words with the people in their life whom they love. This proclivity fits nicely with the keyword of "intimacy" that Deborah Tannen used to describe women in her book You Just Don't Understand. According to Tannen, a woman's world revolves around her intimacy and connection with others. We would expect that when a woman experiences the chaos of grief, a primary mode of healing will be connecting her pain with her intimacy to others.

Tannen uses the keyword of "independence" for men. When independence is your keyword, you are probably less likely to want to "share" your feelings with those around you. You will be more likely to seek out modes of healing that will be harmonious with your interest in maintaining independence. I know for myself, and for many men, the verbal connection is facilitated by linking it with some action, place, or thing. I am less inclined to simply "share" my feelings with those around me. I am grieving, but I do it in my own way, a way that is more quiet and less visible and harmonizes with my interest in independence. It is for this reason that it is unwise to judge a man's grief by how much he "shares" it with others. A man's pain cannot be judged by outer appearances or the abundance of tears. All people are unique in the ways they find to heal themselves. There are probably more individual differences in grief than there are gender differences, but the gender differences do exist and need to be honored.

My father's memorial tree now stands in a park that is adjacent to my home. Not only was the activity surrounding the tree helpful, now the tree has moved from being an activity to being a place. Each time I come or go I see that tree sitting there, being itself. When I see the tree I am reminded of my father, my grief, and the men who lovingly honored both my father and my pain.

You can purchase a copy of Tom's book, Swallowed by a Snake: The Gift of the Masculine Side of Healing on-line at this link.

The book is also available at other on-line booksellers, and should be hitting the shelves of local bookstores by the time you read this. Please note that the book is in its second edition, and to make sure you are ordering the correct edition when shopping at other on-line sources.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/12/2025222.shtml

Myths About Health Research Shattered!

Scott · 13 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett of Men's Health America has issued a press release on the myths of gender health research today at the American Public Health convention in Boston, MA. This event is a very big deal. We expect a lot of mainstream coverage of this "atomic bomb", as Ed describes it, and Mensactivism.org will be actively monitoring major media outlets for coverage of this event. For now, click here to read a ton of facts on gender in health research that were presented in the press release.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/12/2125220.shtml

Major UK Study Shows Women More Violent In Relationships

Scott · 14 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Rand wrote in about this story from the UK Independent. It discusses a major study done on domestic violence by Prof. John Archer from the University of Central Lancashire. It is noteworthy that in his conclusions, Archer finds that Western women are more violent because they are "economically emancipated and therefore not afraid of ending a relationship." The article also mentions a forthcoming article in the Journal of Men's Studies that traces battered men in history, including John Wayne, Humphrey Bogart, and Abraham Lincoln.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/13/1433244.shtml

The Plunder Of Fathers In Family Court

Scott · 14 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This article by Stephen Baskerville in DadMag.com is on the trials and tribulations that fathers go through in family court. None of this should be news to most readers of Mensactivism.org, but Baskerville as usual does an excellent job explaining the dangers of divorce to men, and DadMag.com is not really a "father's rights" magazine - so the word is getting out to new people.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/14/1837247.shtml

George W. Bush Promoting Fatherhood

Adam · 15 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In this acticle (from July), George W. Bush tells us of his "Promoting Fatherhood" initiative, an $185 million program to help strengthen the role of fathers. While he does come at this from the highly dubious "responsible fatherhood" angle, he also says "Our nation must reverse the trend toward fatherless homes." It seems that the problems of fatherlessness are slowly starting to get noticed - keep up the great work people!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/14/1918218.shtml

UNH Report Exaggerates Violence Against Women; Emphasizes Lack Of Violence Against Men

Scott · 15 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In today's edition of the University of New Hampshire school newspaper, this article presents amazing statistics about violence against women and women's overall fear of violence. Some choice statements from the article: "67.6 percent of women surveyed said that they would be afraid to walk alone at night, while only 4.4 percent of men said the same...[A UNH Police Officer] said this is due to the higher number of assaults on women than on men." Update: I am in the process of composing a response to this article. My results will be posted to Mensactivism.org when it is printed in the newspaper.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/14/2348228.shtml

Please Ignore Any Site Weirdness

Scott · 15 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I'm transferring the management of the Mensactivism.org domain name to a new registrar, in order to fix some quirks of this site's current setup (namely, the frames issue and not being able to bookmark individual stories). If things start acting funny this week please bear with me - everything should be changed over by the end of Friday.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/14/1841225.shtml

Boston Globe Features Health Research Editorial

Scott · 15 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In today's Boston Globe, Cathy Young wrote a column on the recent press conference on public health research which demonstrated that women have never been neglected by NIH research studies. There are lots of good statistics here, and from my personal contact with Ed Bartlett, the reception of this news went well - he did not have one person come up and challenge him after he released the report. Now we just need to keep promoting this and get it to trickle up to the national media. Update: I've fixed the link now. Sorry about that.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/15/154250.shtml

Yahoo! Repeats The Wage Gap Myth

Scott · 16 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc writes "Yahoo! News repeated the wage gap myth, again. Click here. It's so tiring. Maybe we need a class action lawsuit to stop this. For now, we can scroll down to 'conversations' and give your input."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/15/2054228.shtml

Girl Assaults Boyfriend For Not Kissing Her

Scott · 16 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

A high school aged girl gave her prom date two black eyes for not kissing her at the prom. The boy did not retaliate because, "he was taught never to hit a girl." And not only that, but she initially claimed that he had raped her, and recanted charges, saying that she was angry that her boyfriend rejected her in her drunken state. You can read the article here. Can you believe this? According to "progressive" rape theory, this young man was a victim of attempted rape (unwanted sexual contact - kissing), and she then turns around and falsely accuses him of rape! And then there's the abuse - what a horrible situation this young man is in.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/16/1425240.shtml

Why We Must Fight On

Scott · 17 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

bernee writes "This sad story about a man killing himself due to massive child support payments is typical of the perils faced by men - that he must give so much and then lose control his life because of an unfeeling Government policy - a supposedly "gender neutral" policy but one which, when tied in with the Family Courts, is clearly discriminatory. This is the reason why we must fight on. Another distressing aspect of this story is that the editor of the newspaper wrote an editorial two days before this article was published concerning the Child Support Agency. It is a fine example of gutless political crap that totally ignores who is really suffering because of these discriminatory policies. I have written to him in disgust. My letter is yet to be published."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/16/1847246.shtml

Workplace Stress In Men

Scott · 17 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I found a good article on stress in the workplace and the ways it affects men. There are some tips about helping to reduce stress, and also signs that a person may be under severe stress (managers and co-workers take note!). You can read the MSN news article at this location.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/15/2329229.shtml

Novel Written About Domestic Violence Against Men

Scott · 17 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I received notification from Dr. Charles Corry about a novel written by Trudy W. Schuett that focuses on the reality of violent women and domestic violence against men. You can find out more about the book at this link. The book's title is Friends to the End, and is apparently available only on-line. But it's an important step forward.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/17/1537246.shtml

Women Feel Their Health Issues Are Ignored

Scott · 18 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This news from Yahoo! claims that women feel that women's health is ignored by politicians and medical researchers, mainly because the people responsible for making these decisions are men. I find this interesting not only in light of the recent report that Men's Health research is neglected by comparison to women's, but also that as far as politics is concerned, I've seen a tremendous amount of attention devoted to it. Promoting women's health issues is one of the key components of getting the "woman's vote," which is so coveted. I guess this just goes to show that perceptions don't always reflect reality.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/17/1544205.shtml

New DV Shelter For Men & Children In Kansas City Area

Scott · 18 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

George McCasland writes, "I'm George McCasland, the person that answers the 1-800-SEE-DADS line for the National Congress for Fathers & Children. I would like to invite all of you to go to the NCFC-MoKan Chapter Web site at: kidsndads.org and click on the "Shelter" link. We are in the process of putting together a domestic violence shelter for men and children in the Kansas City area. This will be the first major center of its type in the country, and we hope will serve as an example for other shelters. I would like you to review our proposal and consider donating towards this effort. If nothing else, review it, and tell others about what we are trying to accomplish. We will not be able to change the public's views on domestic violence against men and their children, until we can show more than just some studies. We need to be showing some live examples of its effects. So please, take a look and consider helping in our effort."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/18/1739251.shtml

Prof. Alan Hawkins Stresses The Need For Fathers

Scott · 19 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An anonymous reader submitted this link to a Utah Salt Lake Tribune article about the importance of fathers. Prof. Hawkins of BYU is working with the National Fatherhood Initiative to help pass laws that will help promote fatherhood and marriage. From the article: "The fact is that fathers are great monitors of the present and especially the futures of children's lives...More than 60 percent of convicted rapists, 72 percent of teen murderers and 70 percent long-term prison inmates are males who grew up without fathers."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/19/0118242.shtml

Political Debates On Marriage

Adam · 19 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Commenting on the battle for marriage in the UK is Melanie Phillips, whose article from the Sunday Times tells us that the case for marriage is being debated in politics. As this quote tells us, "a battle has been raging over marriage. In the nuptial corner are Jack Straw, Paul Boateng and David Blunkett. Opposing them is the feminist hard core made up of Baroness Jay, Harriet Harman and sundry women junior ministers." Unsurprisingly, the Prime Minister sided with the feminists. And the debate rages on.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/19/1715217.shtml

Columbia's Sexual Misconduct Policy In The News Again

Scott · 20 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Today's front page of the Boston Globe had this story on Columbia University's recently enacted sexual misconduct policy. The article contains plenty of information sympathetic to supporters of the code, but also includes: "At a time when colleges nationwide feel newly emboldened to replace constitutional due process with their unique brands of discipline, the Columbia policy is seen by some students and civil libertarians as an extraordinary step toward injustice. According to Boston University Chancellor John Silber, the system has elements lifted from a Kafka novel: No lawyers. No right to face the accuser or listen to witnesses. Complaints can be filed up to five years after the alleged incident. No right to cross-examination, and no recorded transcript of what was said - of the detailed arguments or of the nuances that might influence the jury."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/20/1520229.shtml

Domestic Violence Programs In Orange County, CA

Scott · 20 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci sent in this article from the Orange Country Register on domestic violence. It's perspective is based on the political doublethink that we're working to change, and particularly disturbing is an example they use toward the end of the story where a man accused of domestic violence in an act of revenge by his wife goes through the treatment program and claims it has changed his life for the better. We have a very odd relationship to liberty in this country when people claim that being falsely accused of crime can have social benefits.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/20/1541258.shtml

The Facts About 'Man Beaters'

Scott · 21 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Rand submitted an article from the Sunday Times on domestic violence. This one is excellent in its extensive use of statistics, and directly refutes domestic violence research made popular in the UK by Betsy Stanko. Prof. John Archer again makes this conclusion: "Modern secular values, he says, have combined with the economic and sexual emancipation of women to enable them to end relationships with little cost and small risk of male aggression. The result is the rise in female violence."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/20/1813217.shtml

ABA Journal Prints Letters Disputing Domestic Violence Stats

Scott · 21 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The December issue of the American Bar Association Journal, which has a circulation of 400,000, printed two letters disputing their claim that 90 percent of domestic violence victims are female. One is from me. They unfortunately didn't put the links and references I gave, but they did mention the National Coalition of Free Men under my name. A big thanks to Scott for posting the ABA's distortion on this site, and to all who wrote letters to them." And hey Marc, congrats on passing your CA Bar exam!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/20/1952249.shtml

International Child Abduction

Scott · 21 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

ABCnews printed this story about when parents abduct children abroad, and the difficulties that the parent left behind has to deal with. Often, there is no hope, as several countries have no means to find children or do not enforce their return orders. The conflicts between US and international law also complicates things.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/21/1448211.shtml

L.A. Times Distorts Domestic Violence, Again

Scott · 21 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

There seem to be lots of domestic violence stories lately, and Marc Angelucci is on top of things again, reporting: "The L.A. Times printed this article on domestic violence in the Latina/o community, and it again completely ignores male victims. Please join me in writing to them (letters@latimes.com). Anything will help, even one line. If we send enough, they might finally print something."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/21/1451229.shtml

Male Suicides Due To Child Support Burdens

Scott · 22 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

"As many as three men a day are committing suicide because the nation's child-support system is driving them over the edge, according to the Lone Fathers Association Australia." This very disturbing news can be found in The Canberra Times. Click here to read it. These numbers are not official statistics but are still jaw-dropping in implications.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/22/0024204.shtml

Rape Shield Laws And False Accusations

Scott · 22 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Ottawa Citizen had a great editorial piece by Eva Saira, which lays bare the fact that under current conditions, men accused of rape and sexual harassment are basically guilty until proven innocent. The letter is a line-by-line indictment of the rape shield laws that enable false accusers to get away with their crimes without accountability. While no one can deny the importance of sensitivity in handling sex crime cases, I believe that privacy standards for those accused but not yet convicted would go a long way to reduce the number of false accusations.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/22/0510226.shtml

Happy Thanksgiving From Mensactivism.org!

Scott · 23 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I just wanted to take a moment to wish everyone a Happy Thanksgiving, and to offer a hearty THANKS to everyone who visits this site and makes use of it on a regular basis. It's the diverse and loyal user base that has made The Men's Activism News Network into what it is today. Enjoy your dinner and family!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/22/2345212.shtml

New Findings Begin To Rule Out Social Causes Of Anorexia

Scott · 24 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF sent in this link to a story from the UK Independent. It discusses some new research which is suggesting that anorexia nervosa may have genetic, not social, causes. It turns out that people with anorexia exist in remote areas of Africa where Western media has no influence. Also, it is often unexplained why anorexia affects some people more than others, suggesting causes other than social pressures. While the research is not yet conclusive, it does present another way of looking at the disorder. There was no mention if this could also affect the outlook on disorders involving male body image.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/24/1748239.shtml

New Fathers Spend More Time Working

Adam · 25 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

According to this study reported on by Yahoo!, new fathers "worked about 53 additional hours a year when the child was a boy rather than a girl," and also if the child was a first born, new fathers worked an additional 66 hours per year. This demonstrates that men's practical style of parenting remains seen by many as providing and not parenting. Hopefully someday this will change.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/25/0044210.shtml

G.I. Joe And Male Body Image

Scott · 25 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Time magazine recently had an article on boys' body image. It's by a woman who believes that toys such as G.I. Joe, whose muscular size has dramatically increased over the years, is a root cause for eating disorders and muscle dysmorphia in men. This article is an interesting contrast to our previous one on anorexia, but includes statistics for boys and men: 36% of boys in the 3rd grade have tried to lose weight, and up to 15% of high school aged boys are believed to use androstenedione (basically, an over the counter steroid). Thanks to Bill Kuhl for sending this one in.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/25/159208.shtml

Suspicions And Stereotypes Of Men With Young Children

Scott · 27 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Adam pointed me to this article from the UK Guardian. It's from late August, but is still a timely editorial on the topic of prejudices people have when men are alone with young children. These stereotypes are what keep men out of roles such as early childhood education, where I feel they are desperately needed. You don't hear much public dialogue on this issue, and I hope this will eventually change.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/26/2021233.shtml

Cool New Features At Mensactivism.org

Scott · 27 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Okay, maybe this isn't such a big deal, but....I've fixed some of the annoyances of using this web site. You can now bookmark individual pages on Mensactivism.org, so you can return to them later! Before, the way I had the site set up used frames and "domain cloaking" to keep the address http://www.mensactivism.org in your browser's Location bar, and this would stay the same no matter where you were looking on the site. Now the URL changes according to the page you are looking at. This should make the site more useful to researchers and those wanting to keep track of our editorials and articles.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/26/2030247.shtml

Photos From The Barnes & Noble Campaign Effort

Scott · 27 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci has been running a campaign and petition drive to establish a Men's Studies book section at Barnes & Noble retail stores, and has been highly successful in his efforts. He recently sent me some photos from the events, and I had them scanned and posted to the site. You can view his story and the photos here. Marc's been doing an excellent job, and could use some help to keep the momentum going. Also, thanks to Jim Castelli for scanning the photos for me.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/27/0440228.shtml

Obesity Rate Skyrockets For Boys

Scott · 28 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This alarming news article from the National Post reports that for Canadian boys, the obesity rate has tripled in the past 15 years (it also doubled for girls during the same period). "The findings are considered alarming and significant, particularly since overweight children tend to become obese adults, who are much more likely to suffer from high blood pressure, diabetes, stroke and heart disease." Here's a great reason for promoting fathers, who tend to encourage sport and outdoor activity participation with their children.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/27/206225.shtml

Another UK Artist Falsely Accused Of Rape

Scott · 29 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An article from the UK Telegraph, submitted by IHF, explains how the UK singer and songwriter Mick Hucknall of Simply Red was arrested on false rape allegations. Not too long ago we reported on the similar situation that Paul Weller found himself in. No mention was made of the accuser's name, which again is an example of the lack of accountability in false accusation cases.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/28/2057229.shtml

The Wage Gap: "The picture is more complicated than is often thought"

Scott · 29 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In another UK Telegraph article, someone else is questioning the wage gap between men and women. It is explained that the difference in average wages is mostly the result of men and women's choices, and says, "the picture is more complicated than is often thought. Single men earn less than married men, who are spurred to work harder by the responsibility of a family. The reverse is true for married women, who earn less than single women largely because they are more likely to work part-time...Only a part of the labour market advantage enjoyed by men can be attributed to discrimination in any sense that can be addressed by public policy."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/28/2123218.shtml

Sex Differences In Brain Use While Listening

Scott · 29 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I'm posting this as an example of sex differences in human beings (something which is a controversial gender issue), a topic I haven't reported on previously on Mensactivism.org. A news story from Yahoo! states that women tend to use both halves of their brains when listening, while men tend to use only the left side of their brain. While I've read some immature remarks that imply that this is some biological deficiency in men, I've likewise heard that men can do more with half a brain than women can with both halves. I say let's just let the scientists determine the implications of this, and resist the urge to turn this issue into a superiority complex.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/29/1745217.shtml

Black Heterosexual Masculinity And AIDS

Scott · 30 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Jim Castelli writes, "James Carroll's Boston Globe editorial, when stripped of the disingenuous disclaimers, essentially says that black heterosexual men are the cause of AIDS. While purporting to not blame males, Carrol presents thinly veiled stereotypical generalizations of black male sexuality reminiscent of "To Kill A Mockingbird" while absolving women of any role in the spread of AIDS. The demonization of gays which Carroll strongly asserts was wrong two decades ago is now being replaced by the demonization of heterosexual men and boys. It is as if he is subtly suggesting that the safest of all solutions would be to eliminate male heterosexuality."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/29/1822200.shtml

The Complex Reality Of Child Abuse

Scott · 30 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The UK Sunday Times printed this story on child abuse (including sexual abuse), and many of the misconceptions surrounding it. The article has a good deal of information in it, including data on family situations that are more prone to abuse (broken families are worse than intact ones) and mothers who are abusive. Take a look at the data - I learned quite a bit by reading it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/29/2253235.shtml

Woman Abducts Son To Cuba

Scott · 30 November 2000 · Archived copy · Original

ABCnews reported recently that the wife of Jon Colombini has abducted their son and sailed to Cuba (sound kinda familiar?). Jon has joint custody of the child and is fighting for something to be done. It won't be easy, considering that Cuba does not have an extradition treaty with the U.S, and the fiasco that surrounded the Elian Gonzalez situation. For more information about the complications of international child abduction, you can read another story we previously reported on.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/30/1921219.shtml

Men Again Blamed For AIDS Epidemic

Scott · 1 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

John L. writes "I found on USA Today this story from a London AP news release. In connection with World AIDS Day, the following statement was released: "The United Nations' message for the 13th World AIDS Day was that men must take responsibility for their behavior to help stop the spread of the deadly virus.'...'Men can make a particular difference - by being more caring, by taking fewer risks and by facing the issue of AIDS head-on,' U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan said." It appears men alone must take "responsibility" for their actions, the implication being that men are responsible somehow for this epidemic. The article also later singles out men as being disease vectors, while ignoring that virtually all infections of babies are transmitted from the mother, and that women can infect men from having intercourse as well. Statistics indicate that the majority of HIV carriers are women, and women are as likely as men to be unaware of the infection. Seems like more scapegoating of men to me."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/01/1750229.shtml

City Living Increases Men's Risk Of Death

Adam · 1 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

According to a University of Michigan study, "men who lived in urban areas were 62 percent more likely to die than men who lived in suburbs, small towns or rural areas" What's interesting are the race and gender comparisons in this article. However, this study does seem a bit inconclusive. I believe we need to keep an open mind on this until more scientific studies are done. Scott's note: While I didn't see any direct gender comparisons in the article, the way it was worded suggested to me that women do not have a corresponding rise in mortality rate from city living - and this is why this is most newsworthy.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/11/30/2219258.shtml

Warren Farrell To Debate On National Public Radio

Scott · 2 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I was forwarded this message written by Warren Farrell: "...This Monday, December 4, I will be debating feminist attorney Liz Schneider before a live audience...It will be taped, on NPR, meaning, of course, a feminist moderator. Their audience will be at the Civic Center, from 7:30-9:00pm...Schneider favors clemency for women who kill husbands and say they were abused. My question: Do you know of any men's issues people, men who have been victims of domestic violence, or domestic violence against men advocates who could be audience participants? If so, would you ask them to contact Sheryl Flowers, the producer, at (202) 879-6784 or email her at sflowers@appcpenn.org? I have been assured by her she will accommodate the people representing men's perspectives."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/01/2032203.shtml

NIH Changes Misleading Gender Research Fact Sheet

Scott · 2 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I received incredibly good news from Ed Bartlett of Men's Health America. Due to pressure from activists challenging the text of an NIH fact sheet that read, "Historically, research studies were conducted only with men" has now been changed to remove that misrepresentation! You can view the updated sheet here. As Ed put it, "We have just landed a stone in Goliath's eye." Great job to Ed and his team! Now we can go a step further and try to get the NIH to actually change the underrepresentation of men in health research.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/01/2012213.shtml

The Plight of Custodial Fathers - One Dad's Story

Scott · 3 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Richard Bygrave submitted his web site where you can read about the frustrating but all-too-typical problems he's had with the family court system in Canada. I'd like to see more dads putting their stories on the web, to create a kind of historical record of the injustice many men are dealing with today. Thanks for coming forward to publicly tell your story, Richard.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/02/2344238.shtml

Man As 'Nigger'?

Adam · 4 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This controversial article by Warren Farrell tells us how women's oppression has been analogized to black slavery, but how it is also true that men could be seen as "niggers" on the same level, even though the term has been used to imply a one-sided oppressiveness. As Warren puts it, "But what none of us realized was how each sex was the other's slave in different ways." Read it and judge the truth of it for yourself.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/03/2142202.shtml

Letter About Ottawa's Bill 117

Scott · 4 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Ottawa Citizen printed a good letter recently by Joe Rade, who counters claims that Dave Brown's recent editorial on Bill 117 was overzealous. It's important to recognize what little public dialogue is going on about this law, and to bring it to people's attention. In today's fast-paced world, it is easy to let controversial issues slip by without comment. "The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing. " (Edmund Burke)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/04/1450244.shtml

Help Out Some Homeless Men

Scott · 5 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Deborah Watkins, President of the Dallas/Fort Worth chapter of NCFM is doing a project to "adopt" homeless men in the area. If you'd like to help contribute to the efforts of this group, click "Read More" below to read Deborah's message and info on who to contact.
Deborah Watkins, President of the Dallas/Fort Worth chapter of the National Coalition of Free Men writes:

Dear family and friends:

I would like to help the homeless this Holiday Season. The Presbyterian Night Shelter in Fort Worth is in desperate need for some holiday cheer for their adult male residents.

As a society, we tend to have more of a "soft spot" for women and children, and the needy men go ignored. They are just as lonely and afraid as the homeless women and children, but we tend to blame them more for their situation.

There is now a Dallas/Fort Worth Chapter of the National Coalition of Free Men (http://www.ncfm.org), and we would like to "adopt" as many of these homeless men as possible. The Night Shelter will provide us with handled shopping bags; each bag will have a list of "wants" such as: socks, stocking caps, gloves, deodorant, etc. We expect that each bag could be quite adequately filled with $10-$15 worth of items. These are items that would make a HUGE difference this winter!

If you would like to help us with this project, we would be more than happy to do the shopping and delivery for you, if you would only pledge $5-$10 to help.

Let me know if you would like to participate. We'll tally up the pledges and let the Night Shelter know how many bags we need. We'll do ALL THE SHOPPING and take the bags back to the shelter for distribution.

You can send me your pledge after the holidays if that is easier for you, or you can send it to me now. Either way, if you pledge to help, we'll be able to do more bags and help more people.

Thanks for sharing your good fortune!

Deborah

Call me toll-free M-F 8-5 Central if you need more info: 800-644-2297 ext 27610

You can make checks payable to Deborah Watkins and send to:

NCFM Dallas/Fort Worth

P O Box 17345

Fort Worth, Texas 76102-0345

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/04/224205.shtml

Work Choice And The Pay Gap

Scott · 5 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Jim Castelli writes, "In this Boston Globe article, attorney Donnalyn Kahn joins ranks of female lawyers "choosing" to leave the insane work demands of Boston law firms. Ms Kahn describes the "harassment" of women who "choose" to work less than 60/70 hours a week. Over the last 30 years we have heard of the gender pay gap where women supposedly earn a fraction of men's salaries. Perhaps the pay gap is the result of women "choosing" to forego the life-shortening demands of a career which expects the sacrifice of life for the benefits of money. The real harassment in Ms Kahn's former work place is not the policies that caused her to leave but the views of society that force men to stay. At a time when the gender life gap shows that women now outlive men by 7 years, the question of the effects of work demands on men needs to be addressed. When will men get the same choice as Ms. Kahn?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/04/2237229.shtml

Draft Boards Looking For New Members

Scott · 5 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl submitted this St. Lois Post-Dispatch article and writes, "Did you know that women are allowed to serve on draft boards? The article gives a brief recent history of the draft. Did you know it was Carter who reinstated selective service registration? The main point of the article is that they are hunting for volunteers to staff draft boards now that board members terms are up. I can't help but wonder (perhaps it's wishful thinking) that people see the draft as so blatantly dicriminatory that they don't want to be associated with it. It's a good, informative article."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/05/1431208.shtml

Blatantly Fabricated Testimony Lands Father In Prison

Scott · 5 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Washington Times printed this article about a false accusations case that the man is still serving time for. Apparently his ex-wife took the children and fled to New Zealand (illegally), confounding further investigation of his case. It's a situation in which the testimony of his children was obviously fabricated, and guided by the mother. It's a depressing story that has no closure.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/05/1547232.shtml

A Win For UK Paternity Leave Advocates

Scott · 5 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF sent in this article from the UK Times, bearing good news: that paid paternity leave equivalent to what mothers receive is expected to become law in the UK soon. From the article: "Britain now languishes towards the bottom of the European league in conditions for parental leave and the Green Paper will make clear that the status quo is not an option. Mr Byers has said that one of the five key objectives of the paper is to 'widen opportunities for fathers to play a greater role in home life.'"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/05/1529211.shtml

Review Of Warren Farrell's New Book: Father And Child Reunion

Scott · 6 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Lawrence Hellmann of the National Congress for Fathers and Children wrote a great book review of Warren Farrell's new book, Father and Child Reunion: How to Bring the Dads We Need to the Children We Love. Click "Read More" below to read the review and find out how to get a copy of the book. This would also be a great book to buy as a gift for family or friends! (or social workers, or politicians, or ...)

Book Review - Father and Child Reunion: How to Bring the Dads We Need to the Children We Love, by Warren Farrell. Putnam Publishing Group, December 2000.

Review by Lawrence Hellmann

Some of the greatest novels - War and Peace, Crime and Punishment,
The Red and the Black, Bread and Wine - exist around the essential struggle of the Grand Dichotomy. Warren Farrell's latest book, Father and Child Reunion, due out January 8, 2001, [SEE NOTE AT BOTTOM, IT MAY BE OUT SOONER] is not a novel;
it is fact that lives that great struggle between the two opposites of fatherhood - its absence and its presence.

Over nine years ago, when I had not been able to see my daughter for over two years, I was in the depths of despair, torn between the pain I knew my little girl would suffer through an intense and continuing custody battle and the pain of her growing up fatherless. Right about this same time, her mother called me up to talk to our daughter. She had not eaten in four days "because her friends were making fun of her because she did not have a daddy." I was staring the devils of the day and the devils of the night in the face. I was ready to give up completely.

Warren Farrell gave me a set of statistics from a proposed chapter in his book The Myth of Male Power (the chapter was refused publication)
- straight information, cold and undeniable facts about the effects on children from growing up fatherless. He told me simply:
"know this and if you still want to give up, you can." No one had ever given me permission to give up before, no one had told me that I had a choice. And once I knew the hard reality of fatherlessness, I could not give up. The choice was easy. I have custody of my daughter today.

Father and Child Reunion is the culmination of thirteen years of research and at least nine years search for a publisher.
Applaud the courage of Tarcher-Putnam.

This book is the most important compilation of the effects of fatherhood on children that anyone interested in family, fathers or children will ever find. It has a most generous set of footnotes citing authority, sources, and studies that allow the reader to think with essential truth.

There are many arguments about why there is so much fatherlessness in America, in the world today. We need to get beyond the why.
This book goes right to what happens because there is so much fatherlessness. The problem demands a solution.

What is that solution? Understand the cost of fatherlessness and make it as profitable for children to have that essential relationship with his/her father as it has been for the child not to have a father. The costs are horrendous - drugs, alcohol, suicide, crime, prisons, prostitution, divorce, more father absence.
It's a vicious circle, and there have now been a few generations to verify the extent of the problem.

Warren Farrell has taken a few bold steps beyond the identification of the problem. He has come up with some thought provoking and challenging solutions. Real life solutions. Things we can all do starting today, every day in our own homes with our very own families. Before further problems surface.
While the problem still has a solution.

Anyone who has a father or a child should read this book. Anyone who has a father or a child needs five copies of this book to anyone who doesn't have it. Anyone who has a father or a child must give copies of this book to their priest or minister, to their teachers and congresspersons, to every judge and attorney in town, and to their doctors. Organize a book-fest for the sake of every child who has drawn a breath or will draw a breath in the future. It is that important.

My child has a father. Make sure every child you know has one too.

Larry Hellmann, President

National Congress for Fathers and Children

9454 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 907

Beverly Hills, CA 90212

Note: You can purchase a copy of this book on-line from Barnes & Noble. According to their web page, the book should be available starting December 6, 2000.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/05/2220257.shtml

Feminist Group Opposes Columbia's Sexual Misconduct Policy

Scott · 6 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The organization Feminists for Free Expression has publicly denounced the new Sexual Misconduct Policy enacted at Columbia University, saying, "As feminists, we of course applaud the idea of taking sexual assault very seriously and providing for its punishment. But in reading your 'Policy and Disciplinary Procedure,' we are dismayed by provisions that infantilize students by streamlining away both the protections for the accused and the accountability of the accuser" You can read their official statement here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/06/1317231.shtml

Sweden Debating Mandatory Military Service For Women

Adam · 6 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's some more news on the draft topic: As this CS Monitor story from April tells us, women might be subjected to the draft as well as men. At least seven out of ten women oppose being drafted, and if it does go into effect, "the Swedish Constitution would have to be changed, since it now forbids gender discrimination except in the cases of military service or affirmative-action measures." However, the "quote of the week" goes to Annica Kronsell who said: "I think even the women who are very involved in equality issues have taken it a little for granted that men are involved in that sector...This is a little different because it's arguing not to have a right but to have a duty, an obligation."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/06/1259230.shtml

Letter: The Reality of Male Victims

Scott · 7 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci is in the news again, reminding LA Times readers about the reality of domestic violence against men. You can read his letter here. There is no doubt that Marc has been a letter writing "powerhouse" lately, and he is certainly inspiring change.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/06/194219.shtml

"Men Are Disgusting By Nature"

Scott · 7 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

One would like to think this is a joke, but in today's gender climate, I seriously doubt it will be taken that way. In an article about the way marriage "civilizes" men, Jonah Goldberg happily takes degrading digs at single men and masculinity in general: "The first thing that needs to be stipulated is that men are disgusting by nature...Like dogs, men need to have their instincts redirected toward positive ends...[marriage] encourages knuckle-draggers, like me, to stand up straight, work hard and play by the rules." Does this man have any self-respect? You can read his article at this link.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/07/162226.shtml

The Decline Of Men In Higher Education

Scott · 8 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The UK Telegraph posted this story on the decline of male enrollment at universities. From the article: "Only 44 per cent of this year's admissions are men and academics now wonder whether their encouragement and preference for women may have gone too far...The pattern of declining male applications and rising female university attendance was established in the 1970s. During the past decade, however, it has worsened drastically...Government estimates forecast that men will make up only 42 per cent of university students by 2010."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/07/2030229.shtml

Teacher Claims 1.1M For False Harassment Charges

Scott · 8 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This story from the Globe and Mail talks about Fred Rutledge, and 8th grade teacher who went through tremendous grief in a false accusations case over 2.5 years ago. Just recently, he finally completed a law suit obtaining 1.1 million dollars in damages. It was a nightmare case: "In 1998, Mr. Rutledge became one of the hundreds of teachers in Canada falsely accused of sexual misconduct with students. The utter absence of evidence did not prevent the police from arresting him. Convinced that they had stumbled on a vast cover-up, they also laid charges against a school social worker, the vice-principal and the principal for failure to report his crimes."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/08/192239.shtml

The Dangers Of Challenging Feminism: Neil Lyndon's Story

Scott · 9 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This is a very long, but really insightful and interesting article. Neil Lyndon was a popular writer from Britain, whose life was radically changed after he wrote an article on men's issues that undermined the tenets of feminist theory. His story can be read here, in his own words. I'd highly recommend this article to anyone on his or her way to becoming a high-profile figure in the men's movement, to know what to expect from your opponents. This will continue to be a struggle for us for some time, but things are already changing and opportunities are opening more often these days. I personally continue to remain optimistic. Update: I've changed the link so that it should work more consistently.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/08/1958205.shtml

Controversy Surrounds "CuntFest" Event At Penn State

Scott · 10 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User (you can obviously understand why) submitted this link to a Campus Report of a feminist event at Penn State titled "CuntFest." I don't even know how to sum it up, except it was an extremely vulgar and disturbing performance supporting radical lesbian feminism, whatever that means. It was even more extreme than the Vagina Monologues, if you recall what that was all about. Please don't read the article if you are easily offended.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/09/209248.shtml

Conference Calls For Ban On Circumcision

Scott · 10 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

In Sydney, Australia, an international conference of scholars and doctors held talks on circumcision, and debated whether it is equivalent to female genital mutilation and should be banned as FGM is. "Prof. [Greg] Boyle said circumcision was a violation of a child's human rights and should be considered an offence to be prosecuted through the courts." You can read the news article by clicking here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/10/0148216.shtml

Yes, Another Story About A Father Being Mistreated In Family Court

Scott · 10 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

There is a story in the Metroland News by a father who lives 5 minutes from his daughter/ex-wife and yet has little contact with his daughter due to bias in the family court system. He's seen it all: false accusations, blatant disregard for his daughter's well-being, and being stuck and not able to fight back. It's a well written story with plenty of facts about divorced dads, definitely worth reading.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/10/020230.shtml

Gender Differences In Sentencing

Scott · 11 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

If you click here you'll go to an excellent statistical analysis of sentencing for youth offenders in Canada. Included in the report are some facts about gender, including that males are more likely to be placed into custody and receive harsher sentences on an offense-by-offense basis. Before using these numbers I suggest checking two things: that the age differences between males and females be factored out, as well as Recidivism (repeat offenders). I can't tell from the abstract whether these were accounted for. StatCan is a high-quality organization, so it may be the case that this has already been done.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/11/1530252.shtml

Neil Lyndon's Story: Part II

Scott · 12 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I was glad to see that Neil Lyndon has a second part to his first article about his fall-out from society due to his public questioning of feminist theory. You can read part two here. In it, Lyndon talks more about his son, discusses domestic violence, academic feminism, and women's suffrage. Check it out! Update: I've changed the link to the story, as it was not working consistently for some users.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/11/1944228.shtml

Great Analysis Of The Wage Gap

Scott · 12 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This article from The Regional Economist destroys myths about the gender wage gap, in particular the myths that the gap is related to equal pay for equal work and that it is due to discrimination. From the article: "Is one to take from the numbers presented here that the gender wage gap of 23.5 cents is mostly an illusion, and that gender wage discrimination is not a serious problem? Well, yes and no. Most of the gender wage gap is due to factors other than wage discrimination, so it is illusory as an indicator of wage discrimination. Nonetheless, no study has been able to explain it away entirely."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/12/0510254.shtml

Mensactivism.org Feature: Men's Rights: Backlash or Movement?

Scott · 12 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

We have a new feature article submitted by Justin Zellers. It's a superbly written essay which summarizes many issues in the men's movement, examines how it came to be and its relationship with feminism. Justin clearly and positively outlines the need for the men's movement, without unreasonably scapegoating feminism or polarizing men and women further. It's an effective presentation of men's issues that has the potential to open many minds. You can read the essay by clicking "Read More" below...

Men's Rights: Backlash or Movement?

By Justin Zellers

In the American pursuit of happiness, many social ills and injustices have been discovered, studied, evaluated, and eliminated. Throughout the history of the United States, there have been various social movements led by activists who had noted problems standing in the way of a group's or individuals' right to this pursuit of happiness. Many of these social fires have been all but extinguished through the years, but not without consequence. Fighting a good battle can and usually does cause a backlash, which may or may not be justified. In the case of the feminist movement in the last quarter of the twentieth century, the Men's Rights backlash has begun, and controversy is surrounding this backlash.

In America, we all learn that women traditionally received the short end of the stick when it came to gender issues. Women's rights activists in the early part of the twentieth century proved just how unfair many of society's commonly accepted laws and traditions were to women. Women were tired of being disregarded and not having the same rights as men in that day enjoyed, such as the right to vote. Men were beginning to take notice and things slowly began to change for women in America.

Flash forward to the 1960's. The beginning of a new era in American women's fight for equality was in full swing. Women were beginning to question gender roles and stereotypes, which began a revolution. The Feminist Movement began with a basic goal in mind: Equality with men (not victory over men). Women wanted equal opportunities where they were denied access throughout American history. However, what began as a struggle for equality soon became a fight overshadowed by extremists who were in it for supremacy. Radical Feminism saw the oppression of women as fundamental and the most basic form of oppression. The extremists said most forms of oppression stemmed from male dominance. Radical statements and ideas such as these caused many to generally view all feminists in a negative way, thus opening the doors for a future backlash.

Many of today's moderate feminists say that these extremists became the normal feminists' worst enemy, destroying their cause and bashing men at the same time. The ideology of legal feminism today goes far beyond the original and widely supported goal of equal treatment for both sexes. The new agenda is to redistribute power from the "dominant class" (men) to the "subordinate class" (women).

Today, there are many men in America that feel they are getting the shoddier treatment when it comes to true equality. "Men feel that courts and legislatures should resist efforts to limit individual rights in the guise of protecting women as a class, and reaffirm the fundamental principle consistent with the classical liberal origins of the movement for women's rights: equality before the law regardless of gender." (Michael Weiss, 1992).

Men today have many legitimate arguments about what exactly today's feminist movement seeks. Every year, there are new laws made to protect women as a group, rather than protecting people in general. A common complaint in today's society is that women are getting special treatment, not equal treatment. For example, The Violence Against Women Act was written and passed with full knowledge that men are the victims of roughly 80 percent of all violence in America (mostly men on men). Both feminists and men's rights activists agree on this point. However, it is the radical feminists that keep pushing for these laws, which in turn, ends up giving women certain areas of supremacy in many ways.

In their well-founded concern with violent crimes against women--particularly rape and domestic battery--the radicals are intent on eliminating many procedural protections for men accused of such crimes. Of course, there is no reason to think that such encroachments on procedural process will remain confined only to rape cases; but to those feminists who dismiss autonomy, liberty, and privacy as mere male illusions, that is not a matter of great concern. At the same time, radical feminists are taking exactly the reverse doctrinal approach to cases of women who kill their partners. They have worked to create a new procedural defense for such women--the battered woman syndrome, which, if taken to its logical extreme, could free any woman who committed violent crimes. This paradox suggests that to the radical feminists, procedural protections belong exclusively to women. The overweening power men theoretically possess in the "patriarchy" in which we live is used as justification for eviscerating the rights of actual men. (Cathy Young, 1992)

A Men's Movement was inevitable once radical feminists began to go beyond equal rights and move towards oppression of all men. Beginning in the 1970's, men began to notice that they were being completely overlooked in most feminists' plight for equality. Men's issues were ignored and women's concerns were being analyzed thoroughly. Feminists tended to look at equal rights as a single-gender issue and follow a course that blamed men for everything. "The goal of fundamental feminism has never been to oppress men, but to open the doors for women to pursue their own dreams and fulfill their own destinies. In this agenda, there is no imperative to judge men by women's standards. Unfortunately, this changed." (Rod Van Mechelen, 1992)

Many people have heard of the radical, 'All Men Must Die' web pages, or SCUM, Society for Cutting Up Men. With names like these, how could men not be offended and feel threatened? Without getting into specifics, which would require essay's of their own; there are many issues that have caused this recent uproar among America's men. However, it is only fair that I mention some of them in a broad sense to help illustrate some of the justifications for the current backlash to feminism.

In the 1970's, when the gender roles really began to change in America, women entered the workforce in large numbers, in many jobs that were often dominated by males. Sexual harassment became a huge issue and many precedents have been laid down over the years, but many men feel these laws have gotten out of control. A number of men now feel that the social situation in the U.S. has moved off-center, to the point where allegations of sexual misconduct are treated as a conviction before they're even examined.

Many Masculists claim that rape laws are designed merely to protect women and discriminate against men by taking the woman's story for truth most of the time. Men feel that they are guilty until proven innocent in the majority of these cases. Consent laws are so easily turned against men in false accusations. Men's rights activists also say if it's rape to attack a woman's genitals, then an attack on a man's genitals is rape, too. Legal experts and pop-feminists alike disagree, and assert that attacking genitals is not rape, but sexual assault, and that rape is an exclusively male domain: "There is nothing absolutely certain about rapists apart from the fact that they are male." (Women on Rape, Jane Dowdeswell, p 36)

Jane Dowdeswell has repeatedly said words to the effect that all men are rapists, but most have not yet been convicted, which tends to make some men a little irate. Most people know that every male is not a rapist, yet only a few decent feminists are standing up to the absurd anti-male generalizations of radical feminists. Men are trying to unite to reject this feminist propaganda.

Women have comfort groups and many other options for help and comfort after a rape has occurred, yet men feel that they are overlooked when it comes to seeking positive encouragement after being assaulted. Some male extremists even feel that when a girl offensively attacks a boy's testicles, he may be in need of as much treatment as rape victims. A recent study conducted by the Journal of the American Medical Association found that one in ten boys between the ages of 10 and 16 has been kicked in the groin by another child, usually as a prank. Many men are becoming disgusted and sensitive to all of the television comedies and movies in which the audience laughs when women hit men in the testicles deliberately, giving children the impression that it is OK to do so when irritated by a male. These male extremists ask, "If women were repeatedly hit in the breasts in movies for humor, would women still be laughing?" Most likely, they'd be offended and be up in arms.

In that same survey conducted by the Journal of the American Medical Association, they found that after most boys' genitals were attacked, they did not tell an adult about the assault. But 25% were injured. A year later 25% had signs of depression and 12% had post-traumatic stress symptoms. Young men's suicide rate is astronomical and society does not pay enough attention to this startling fact.

Men now feel it is time to fight for equal representation for victims of physical sexual assault in the United States. Even though there are plenty of these help centers that are funded by public tax dollars, reports indicate that many will not accept and help males. Feminists do not seem to be saying anything about the blatant discrimination taking place in this area, so many men are now standing up and speaking their minds.

In Wisconsin a woman who is drunk cannot give sexual consent even if she is not passed out. The next morning, she can charge her lover with rape. However, the same consideration is not given to her lover who also might have been intoxicated. Women want to be equal, yet they expect men to continue to take the sexual initiative. If they are pleased by the overtures of a man, they are delighted. If they are not pleased because he may be the wrong man or because of his style of responding to general flirtation, they may accuse him of sexual harassment.

Men feel it is unfair that they are still usually expected to pay for dates and take the initiative to ask the women out. Men know that rejection hurts, and women have the real control over dating, sex, and money, in the opinion of may male extremists.

Abortion is another topic several men feel strongly about. Men do not have a right to choose in the United States, yet it takes two to make a child, and half of that child is biologically his. If a man wants a child and the woman aborts the child, if he grieves most people do not recognize his grief as legitimate.

Domestic abuse is a crisis that many women have to deal with. However, men are now claiming more often that they too are abused. Research strongly suggests that women initiate physical assault far more often than men: violence by women is by no means 'statistically insignificant', and may be as significant a problem as violence by males. This fact may be unpalatable to many, and may even be described as 'anti-feminist', but it is a fact that must now be addressed. (People's Equality Network - January 1995) Violence by men against women is recognized as a significant problem; violence by women is not often enough seen as the serious issue that it is. Feminists feel that these complaints by men are just designed to take away the feminist's thunder and judicial influence in this particular area.

Feminists claim they want equality in the military, but will not lobby for women as a matter of civic duty to be obligated to sign up for the draft or be required to fulfill their obligation of combat duty. "Women and children first!" Do men's lives not have the same intrinsic value? Men want feminists to realize that most males are willing to die for females, but many females take this for granted and are not willing to do the same for men.

Pop feminists defend excusing a woman from crime on the basis of a post partum or PMS defense. Men receive 58% longer prison sentences for conviction of the same crime, furthering men's anger about criminal discrimination. (Dateline NBC, 1998) Men's rights activists report that even though statistics and studies show that more than 50 % of accusations of sexual assault are false, most district attorneys will not bring charges against the lying party even though it is a felony.

Men are still mocked and looked down upon if they are stay-at-home dads. Men protest that they do not get equal work leave, if any, when a baby is added to the family. Fathers are tired of being considered an outsider or visitor to their children by the courts. For example, just 9 years ago 37.9% of fathers have no access/visitation rights in America. (Source: p.6, col.II, para. 6, lines 4 & 5, Census Bureau P-60, #173, Sept 1991.) The percentage of men who pay child support is six times higher than the percentage of women who are ordered to pay child support. (The American Psychological Association, 1995) In the name of fairness, many people are beginning to say that children should go to whichever parent can support them best, as opposed to now when roughly 85-95% of the time children go to the mother purely by default and challenging that can bring down the wrath of feminist groups for no good reason.

Many feminists vigorously claim that there is little attention paid to their health care. Masculists respond by saying that breast cancer research receives 6 times more dollar subsidy than cancer of the prostate even though the rates of cancer are very similar. (National Cancer Institute, 1997) They ask how can it be said that women's health care is neglected when they are the primary users of the health care system and men live on average 7.6 years less than women. Other men are lobbying for infant's rights in regards to circumcisions of infant males in the U.S., claiming that it is genital mutilation without consent. Numerous men's rights activists feel that men are not receiving enough medical attention from the government.

These are just some of the commonly debated issues that the Masculists are trying to make the public aware of. It is obviously not fair for either feminists or masculists to claim that one gender is oppressed more than the other. This is where the controversy exists. Men and women both have certain troubles that they will always have to deal with. Sure women have many things worse off than men, but what men are now saying is that they too are oppressed by society and not enough attention is given to their tribulations.

I find it interesting that there are now many masculist extremists popping up, just as feminist extremists began to gain in numbers shortly after the woman's liberation movement in the 1960's. History does seem to find a way of repeating itself, but not exactly. I find it very saddening that these extremists on both ends of the gender issues are so recognized by society. The aspect I find most disgusting about gender activism is the radical views on both sides.

However, it seems that both sides go about what they're trying to accomplish in the wrong way, through exaggeration, scare tactics, and occasionally even lies, but those represent the extremists. What's sad in the Feminist movement is that those extremists are highly regarded by many. On the Men's Rights side, the extremists are pretty much universally regarded as crackpots.

I feel that the Feminist movement is heading in the wrong direction, too often following its extremists, and that doing so could well be disastrous for the movement in general. For example, if the feminists want women in the military then the proper way to go about it would be to push for the exact same treatment as men. This means the same boot camp, the same living quarters, and certainly the same draft registration that is now required for men at the age of 18.

Society is slowly beginning to listen to some of these men who feel oppressed, but not yet on the scale that they listen to and accept feminist issues. The U.S. Government has all but ignored the men's movement so far, but I believe that will soon change. As with all true social ills, the current discrimination against men will one day be recognized, and legislature will be put into place to try to level things back out.

The Feminist movement should put its own house in order before trying to affect the world around it, removing those extremists from its organization and being far more careful in its research than it has been in the past. A certain amount of extremism is sometimes necessary in order to be heard and get things rolling in the right direction. Once things begin to roll, as they have for feminists, the extremists should not have as much influence as they once might have.

I think that people should be selected for their job solely based on their capability, not the color of their skin or their gender or sexual orientation. As a humanist, believing in equality and equal rights for all people, I also feel that laws that give special protection to certain groups must also be closely examined and reformed. There is plenty of room for both women and men to fight for rights, but both sides need to start taking into account the other side's reasoning. Everybody needs to look at and take in the whole picture instead of narrowly focusing on one side of the spectrum.

The extremist feminist craze must end now, before it further warps the perceptions of the generations that have already suffered for it. If the existing laws do not serve as sufficient deterrent, then perhaps they should be strengthened, but by no means should we add more laws that enshrine certain groups as somehow more worthy of protection than others. Men are beginning to take a stand, and rightfully so. Once men and women begin to recognize each other's problems and learn to work together to fight the social ill of discrimination, the free pursuit of happiness can be achieved on a much larger scale. I hope that we can all learn from each other and one-day see harmony between the sexes. I am a Humanist. To improve the lives of all humans is a truly worthy goal, one to which we should all aspire in the name of the pursuit of happiness.

If you'd like to get in touch with Justin, please contact scott@mensactivism.org for his e-mail address. This was done at Justin's request (and to avoid spam bots).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/10/1859220.shtml

Rape Shield Law Challenged In The UK

Adam · 13 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's some breaking news from the UK Guardian.
As this story tells us, rape shield law which forbids the questioning of a victim's past sexual history in court is being challenged under the Human Rights Act in Britain, as part of the right to a fair trial. This case could have a profound effect on rape cases and may even have a "ripple effect" through the West if it is overturned.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/12/2224238.shtml

Cathy Fordham Is Sentenced For False Accusations

Scott · 13 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Back in August we included a story about Cathy Fordham, who ran a community recovery home and manipulated and falsely accused several men there of assault and sexual assault. Just recently she has been sentenced, as this story from the Ottawa Citizen tells us. Basically, she was given six months of parole with strict house arrest, because she was "not a danger to the public." Considering how manipulative she's been described as by both her patients and the police, I have some doubts about the effectiveness of this sentence.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/13/1322229.shtml

Men's Lack Of Representation In Health Research Gets Worse

Scott · 14 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America recently posted that the NIH has released its latest report on gender enrollment in NIH sponsored research, and the results aren't good for men. You can read his posting here. "In Fiscal Year 1994, men represented 44.9% of participants in extramural research, women 51.8%, and the sex of the remaining 3.3% was unknown. By 1997, male participation fell to 37.1%.
Table 2 in the most recent report presents disturbing news: In 1998, male participation dropped to 32.2%" But Ed also writes that due to the media focus on the election, it is best to hold off on letter writing campaigns and activism until we can expect to get some coverage of the issue.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/13/2115227.shtml

The Death of Due Process

Scott · 14 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Peter Brimelow wrote an article in Forbes Magazine about the general erosion of due process. I'm including it here since I think civil liberties are very relevant to pro-male activists, considering the removal of due process in rape laws and attempts to censor speech by PC advocates. The article gives some interesting background and perspectives on how we got to this state today.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/14/1314234.shtml

Female Teacher Acquitted For Sexually Exploiting Boy

Scott · 14 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

It's pretty obvious how this represents a double standard: a 28-year-old teacher in Canada who was having a sexual relationship with one of her students, 17, and became pregnant by him was recently acquitted in court for the charge of sexual exploitation of a minor. I'm sure the attentive reader will notice many other ways the story is portrayed that wouldn't happen if the genders were reversed in this case. The article is from Canoe News and can be read here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/14/1652232.shtml

Religious And Gender Discrimination Case

Scott · 15 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

WasatchFrontMan writes "Brian O'Neil is a man and is openly religious. That is a bad combination these days for a college administrator. The inevitable happened - the mostly female administration at Middlesex Community College eventually found a way to have him removed. He was fired even though he had always received good reviews and only a month earlier, he had been given a merit pay raise. Click here for the full story" This article also deals with gender pay issues and seems to be a pretty clear cut case of discrimination.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/14/1936251.shtml

NH Man Demands New Trial; Victim Recanted, DNA Evidence Supports Him

Scott · 15 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Foster's Daily Democrat printed this front page story about a man who is serving a 6-20 year sentence for aggravated sexual assault of his former girlfriend. DNA evidence has just proven that he is not the father of the woman's child, who was conceived at the time of the rape, and the victim had even recanted her story in the original trial! But he was still convicted because the prosecution claimed she had a vested interest in recanting the story and used an older videotape of her making the accusation to convict him. After the trial, she even went to media outlets saying she had made up the accusation in revenge because she thought he was seeing another woman. Will justice be served?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/15/152206.shtml

Concise Reasoning On Wage Gap Myth

Scott · 16 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Although the article is from April of this year, if you click here you'll read a good, concise piece explaining the misconceptions and reality about the gender wage gap. From the article: "The pay equity movement seemed to be cruising along until a 1999 study came out that cast doubt over the validity of the 73-cent statistic. Researchers Diana Furchtgott-Roth and Christine Stolba argue that the wage gap is virtually nonexistent when you consider factors such as job experience, actual number of hours worked and individual choices, such as flexible scheduling to balance work and family life." The researchers wrote Women's Figures, an indispensable reference to have when debunking the wage gap myth.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/15/2122209.shtml

UK Man Sues For Being Tricked Into Fatherhood

Scott · 16 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

IHF sent in this story from the UK Telegraph. It's about a man who is suing his former lover for tricking him into raising a child that isn't his. "Mr X plans to sue Mrs Y for "deceit", the emotional distress caused by the discovery, and the costs, with interest, he incurred while bringing up the child. The man, from the West Midlands, and his former girlfriend cannot be named because of a court order protecting the child's identity." This case could have profound effects on the Choice for Men movement in the UK, and even in the US.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/16/150218.shtml

WOMB - Women Opposed to Male Bashing

Scott · 16 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I know many readers will enjoy Jocelyn Payne's web site and organization - Women Opposed to Male Bashing (WOMB). She describes the site as, "an Egalitarian, Anti-Sexist, Anti Hate site - Pro woman, Pro man, Pro Dialogue. I respect Masculists, Feminists & Humanists who are searching for a fair and balanced relationship between the sexes , while respecting gender differences." The WOMB site includes many useful links to men's rights web sites and research on men's issues.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/16/1826221.shtml

Beating Up On "Deadbeat Dads"

Adam · 17 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This report by Stephen Baskerville reminds us how corrupt the family courts are, and gives an informal estimate that puts as much as one-third of the jail population of this country as fathers on contempt-of-court charges. And with a quote like this "A Georgia sheriff and superior court judge have proposed creating forced labor camps specifically for fathers", the analogy between child support and slavery has never been more true. Please send Stephen an email of thanks for his superb and highly articulate articles. He must take a tremendous amount of flak for being so outspoken in the name of fathers and men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/16/1846246.shtml

UK Headmasters Concerned About Paternity Leave Law

Scott · 18 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Apparently some teachers in the UK are concerned that the new paternity law proposal could seriously disrupt education in these times of severe teacher shortage. IHF notified me of this story in the UK Telegraph. A spokesman for the Education Dept. replied to the complaints with "Schools will have to manage in the same way as other businesses."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/17/2030214.shtml

Gender Politics: Feminism And The Democratic Party

Scott · 18 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This article from The New Republic outlines the increasing role that feminism has played in the democratic party, and gender politics in general. With the U.S. election differences in gender voting preference playing a very significant role in this election, this is probably going to become a very popular topic among political analysts (as it has already).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/18/1654219.shtml

Fewer Men On College Campuses

Scott · 18 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Time magazine printed this story recently on the gender education gap, where males are consistently doing worse and worse. It's a typical overview of the subject, but includes some good numbers and quotations of Christina Hoff Sommers. Also of possible interest is this fact: "Last July the University of Georgia lost a lawsuit filed by female students who were denied admission because of an affirmative-action policy that favored men. Could this be the first case of an explicit affirmative action program for men? Well, I mean besides Selective Service. (sarcasm)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/18/175238.shtml

Canadian Group Challenges Legality Of "Most Wanted" Deadbeat Dad Displays

Scott · 19 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

A group called the Equitable Child Maintenance and Access Society from Calgary, Canada is planning to legally challenge the public display of "most wanted" lists of "deadbeat dads." Photos of fathers in child support arrears on the internet violates the person's right to privacy, and consequently the Freedom of Information Act and the Freedom of Privacy Act, according to the group. The article from the Calgary Herald can be read here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/19/0223202.shtml

UK Women's Unit To Shut Down?

Scott · 19 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The latest UK Sunday Times reports that "The government's oft-criticised women's unit is in its death throes. Downing Street advisers and female ministers want it junked and replaced with a new outfit to combat discrimination against men and women...The new unit would be as likely to produce a green paper on the under-achievement of boys in state schools as low pay for women." All I have to say is...WOW, what a great idea! Could it be possible that people are looking to move beyond gender politics and are tired of one-sided feminism? Click here to read the story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/19/1420256.shtml

Detailed Story Of The Brandeis Rape Accusation Case

Scott · 20 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

The Wall Street Journal Opinion Journal had an editorial on the recent Brandeis false rape accusation case, where there was significant controversy over the way universities are allowed to enforce their own discipline codes. This is one of the most detailed stories about a false accusation of rape on a college campus that I know of, and is immensely valuable reading material. Please check it out. Update: I have changed the description of this article, arfter recieving some percpetive comments about it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/20/1742245.shtml

A Child's Vision Of War

Scott · 21 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron writes "This article by the New York Times [free registration required] talks about how young boys are used in warfare in Colombia. As an issue I find that the treatment of men and boys in the third world is probably the last thing to be mentioned on men's sites. In a sense this is good, because it is a humanitarian issue not a gendered issue, but feminists have framed the third world as an area where only women are oppressed and it simply isn't true."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/21/0345212.shtml

Case Raises Issue Of Sexual Abuse By Women

Scott · 21 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron writes "Statistics say men sexually abuse children more than women do, but as with most definitions of sexual based crimes the definition itself is biased towards only describing male criminal behaviour. For example the FBI stll defines rape as something that only happens to women. This article in the Chicago Tribune is about a case where a single mother was forcing her 6 year old son to breast feed and sleep naked with her. The state called it sex abuse. She called it good parenting. The judge called it bad parenting but refused to say it was sex abuse. When will sexual crimes be seen as truly gender neutral and when will women's sexual crimes be recognised? The child is now in foster care."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/21/043236.shtml

$9M For Prostate Research

Scott · 21 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett's post from the Men's Health America list announces that a nine million dollar study has been sponsored by the NIH to research a prostate condition called Benign Prostatic Hyperplasia. "BPH refers to the non-cancerous enlargement of the prostate gland. This condition may make it difficult for men over 50 years of age to urinate. It is estimated that one in four men will need treatment of BPH by the time they reach 80 years." Details of the study can be read here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/21/1733221.shtml

iFeminism: A Unique Feminist Group?

Scott · 22 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron has been submitting insightful news stories left and right lately, and writes "I have spent time looking at feminist sites on-line and trying to debate on feminist boards for a couple of years now, and in all that time of trying to find a sincere feminism, only one group has managed to convince me that they might really want sexual equality and are prepared to be honest. The site is now one year old and here's a quote from their newsletter: For slightly more than a year now, we have been making an all-out effort to heal the destruction wrought by gender feminism and to offer in its place a feminism that embraces men as equals, the free market as opportunity, sex as a source of joy, and civil liberties as every human being's right. My thanks to each and every one of you for sharing and contributing to our vision."Click "Read More" below to view more of David's comments and find out what site he is referring to...

The iFeminist site and newsletter is run by Wendy McElroy, who seems to be a libertarian first and a feminist second (the "i" in "ifeminist" stands for "individualist"), however this is most definitely an unapologetic feminist group not a women's group such as the Women's Freedom Network which Cathy Young and Christina Hoff Sommers are associated with. The iFeminist emphasis remains on feminism, and there is plenty to disagree with, but let me list a few of the features that make iFeminism unique as a feminist group:

- VAWA. Its very rare to find a feminist who disagrees with the sexism of the US Violence Against Women Act. Wendy McElroy condemns VAWA as gender apartheid.
- Gender wage gap hoax. The iFeminist site has many links and articles pointing out that the wage gap is a natural result of women's choices. In my experience this sort of honesty is unheard of in feminism.
- History. I know of no other feminist site on the net that is honest about the darker side of feminism in the 19th century. Even some men's rights boards seem to go along with the white wash! McElroy traces individualist feminism and the darker side of feminism to its historical roots.
- Censorship. The only feminist board (that I know of) on the internet that doesn't censor non-feminist comments. In fact the only feminist board I've been on that hasn't banned me or censored me!

In my experience any one of these items makes the iFeminist site unique among feminist sites, and worth a mention, but the final straw for me was reading a recent iFeminist newsletter which called attention to a counter-feminist site (in fact a site on the Feminism On Trial webring) run by Rowena, an Australian student with a very sharp line in sarcasm. Rowena's form letter for feminists was quoted with approval, as a joke. Feminism with a sense of humor? About themselves?

Scott's note: Yes, ifeminism.com is a very different group of feminists. In fact, a month or two ago, Wendy asked if she could include mention of Mensactivism.org in one of her newsletters! Her site and philosophy is definitely worth checking out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/21/237213.shtml

Sexist Snowmen

Scott · 22 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

So here's an example of how academic feminists spend their time: "Dr Tricia Cusack, of Birmingham University, has carried out a five-year study in the cultural meanings of snowmen, and now believes they are obsolete symbols of gender discrimination." Ananova News reported on this story - click here to read it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/22/155212.shtml

NOW Enforces Stricter Censorship

Scott · 22 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron writes "The so-called discussion boards at NOW have realised they must censor and ban comments by non-feminists after several weeks of worrying about how censorship will hurt their public image. Without any announcement NOW has moved its discussion board to a new URL and has deleted many previous posts and threads at the same time placing many non-feminist posters on a banned list to prevent the truth about feminism getting out. Here is the old board and here is the new board.

The mass deletions, bannings and the move to a new URL were made secretly to prevent giving the impression that NOW supports censorship...." Please click "Read More" below to read the rest of his account of censorship.....

Previously a NOW representative had admitted they would ban me to make sure the board remained feminist in content (ie they specifically admitted the reason for the ban would be political). At that time several hundred posts were deleted (including their own post where they had originally admitted the reasons for censorship), but I was not banned until the new board was created. Other posters who are not recognised as feminist enough have also mysteriously stopped posting, and several have complained.

I have tried to re-register for the NOW board to complain about the secretive censorship policy but I am blocked at the IP level from re-registering. I have no problem with feminist censorship if it is kept honest -- NOW are free to do as they like with their own boards -- but this method of pretending they are open to anyone is deceptive. If NOW cannot afford to debate the issues let them admit it openly!

The NOW board used to allow unregistered posts but now requires registration."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/22/1735254.shtml

Boy Could Be Charged With Felony For Slapping A Girl's Butt

Scott · 22 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

ABCnews is reporting that a 14 year-old boy could face a felony charge of sexual assault for slapping a girl's butt at school. The mother of the victim was quoted as saying, "What he did wasn't right, but I wouldn't have pressed charges, given that it was just a slap on the butt." Likewise, I agree that the boy should be disciplined, but this is going way too far.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/22/184247.shtml

John Waters Defends Himself From Feminist Accusers

Scott · 23 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This piece in Irish Times by John Waters describes many journalistic attacks made on him by others offended by his columns on men's issues and criticisms of feminism. "What I have suggested is that men are in certain ways oppressed. Feminists, claiming a monopoly on suffering, do not like this. Nor do they like the fact that, by advancing a plausible case, people like us have had an effect on public opinion. We must be shamed into silence." It's a superb article - maybe we could write John some letters of support for standing up for men and not being shamed into silence.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/23/1434253.shtml

The Fragile Male

Adam · 25 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's some excellent work from the British Medical Journal about boys and masculinity, as this essay by Sebastian Kraemer tells us: "A typical attitude to boys is that they are, or must be made, more resilient than girls. This adds social insult to biological injury." He explores the basis of this vulnerability in greater detail in the essay, which you may read by clicking here. Also, be sure to send Sebastian an e-mail telling him how you much you hope he'll continue to do research on boys and masculinity since it gives men's issues some much needed credibility, and to put it simply, without scientific studies to back up our issues, we will not gain public support unless we can demonstrate some proof of our claims. So be sure to send him some praise and encouragement.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/24/2115250.shtml

Happy Holidays From Mensactivism.org!

Scott · 25 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

We'd like to wish everyone a Merry Christmas/Happy Holidays/Happy Newtonmas/etc, and the best in the New Year! The Men's Activism News Network, now about six months old, has been our gift to help a movement that we strongly believe in. We hope as many people as possible can spend time with their families this season, and for those that cannot, we will continue to fight for you. Take care everyone.

Scott and Adam.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/24/1521207.shtml

Coverage Of Kraemer's Report On Boy's Fragility

Scott · 26 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

I received a couple of anonymous submissions about coverage of the recent report on the fragility of boy's health. The story was also distributed on Yahoo! News and also ABCNews. Although I'm glad to see this get more media attention, I have to wonder if it's being done to encourage the need to "resocialize boys" under the stereotype that masculinity is toxic.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/26/1523239.shtml

New York Requires Insurance Coverage For Prostate Cancer Screening

Scott · 26 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a great move for men's health that could hopefully be imitated by other states: New York recently passed a law requiring the coverage of prostate cancer screening by insurance companies. Ed Bartlett's post to the Men's Health America list can be read here. Please take a moment to sign up with Ed's list if you care about men's health issues!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/26/1536211.shtml

Parents Want School Girl Disciplined In Assault

Adam · 27 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Related to the recent ABCnews story about a boy who could face felony charges for slapping a girl's butt, this story from The Tennessean is about a girl who could face discipline charges for sexually assaulting two other girls. While this does bring up the issue of sexual assault/abuse by women, I really think we should leave kids out of it. Click here to read the story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/26/1845252.shtml

President of R-KIDS On Hunger Strike

Scott · 27 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Backlash.com is reporting that Steve Blake, president of R-KIDS of Minnesota, is currently in prison for failure to pay child support. However, Steve claims to have paid his required $750/month payment and has begun a hunger strike to draw attention to his injustice. I plan to follow up on this story for further developments. I have no contact information for people to call at this time.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/27/0240212.shtml

Review Of What Women Want

Scott · 27 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Don Feder in his latest column for Jewish World Review writes about the new movie What Women Want. The movie, of course, is degrading to men and features a feminist utopia where Mel Gibson puts aside his traditional masculinity for the traits of a female-worshiping lapdog. As Feder puts it: "Like most of today's movies about relationships, What Women Really Want is relentlessly anti-male. Men are dense. Men are crude. Men are self-centered. Men just don't listen." There's no need to support male-trashing movies such as this, and I'd be wary of anyone who enjoyed it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/27/001220.shtml

Fraud In High Profile Refugee Case

Scott · 27 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

"A Ghanaian woman whose campaign against her deportation from the United States became a rallying point for prominent American women, including Hillary Clinton, Gloria Steinem and Julia Roberts, has been exposed as an impostor and faces prosecution for fraud." The story is from the UK Guardian and can be read at this link. She had used the argument that if she were returned to Ghana, she would face female genital mutilation. But it was a lie.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/27/1340256.shtml

Russian Women Disappointed With Russian Men

Scott · 28 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

This article from the New York Times (free registration required) is about the disappointments many women are experiencing as their "biological clocks" run down and they still cannot find a man (breadwinner) to marry and have children with. "'There are no normal men,' [a woman] complained...'They've all got an inferiority complex because they can't earn enough money to support a family. All of them live with their mothers. They all earn 1,000, 1,500 rubles a month,' $35 to $55, roughly. 'Who would want to bear a child with a man like that?' she asked." There's more than a bit of irony in this quote, in several ways. I'll leave it to you to interpret it. :)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/28/1642228.shtml

Debunking Presidential Statements On Domestic Violence

Scott · 29 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

Ian Murray wrote an article for Jewish World Review that debunks the three statements that President Clinton recently made, that "In America today, domestic violence is the number one health risk for women between the ages of 15 and 44 ... Every twelve seconds, another woman is beaten. That's nearly 900,000 victims a year." It is of course very damaging to have the US President making these false claims, and all the more important to have the true facts ready. Bookmark this article!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/28/1741221.shtml

Tips To Avoid And How To React To Parental Child Abduction

Scott · 29 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

As sad as it is to say this, any man who is going through a divorce or will be doing so soon should read this. The Washington Post printed this article, which is a series of tips on what to do in the event of parental child abduction, and what information you'll need on hand to try to stop it before your children are taken abroad. With so much at stake in a situation like this, it is better to be safe than sorry, and to be prepared.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/29/1532232.shtml

Justice Served: Terry Johnson Gets A New Trial

Scott · 30 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

There is good news to follow up to the recent story about Terry Johnson, who was convicted of sexual assault due a videotape of the victim's accusations, which was shown in court even though the alleged victim has publicly recanted the accusations. Thursday, the NH Supreme Court ruled that the videotape should not have been used as evidence in the trial. Johnson will get a new trial, and it is unlikely he can be convicted with the victim still recanting the accusations. Foster's Daily Democrat had the latest news here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/30/012241.shtml

In Praise Of Canadian Men

Scott · 30 December 2000 · Archived copy · Original

BusterB writes "Elizabeth Nickson of the National Post writes about how wonderful Canadian men are. Apologies to the fellows south of the border and over the ocean, who don't fare so well in her opinion piece. Although I can't vouch for what she says about men in other countries, I agree with her assessment of Canadian men. What she forgets to mention, though, is that Canadian men are so nice because Canadian women are, as an acquaintance once put it, so macha. We men are easy to get along with because we're surrounded by nasty women and are accustomed to abuse." Update: The link has been fixed.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/30/1421258.shtml

Expansion Of The Battered Woman Defense

Scott · 1 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Salon.com printed this article about a Massachusetts court case that could expand the "Battered Woman" defense to include attacks against third parties. Before, the argument was only used in cases were the woman attacked her abuser. And as we know, there is no "battered man" defense, due to the lack of recognition of domestic violence against men. The legal trend toward creating these kinds of excuses for murder is also disturbing.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/00/12/31/2357230.shtml

Happy New Year/ New Millennium!

Scott · 1 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Men's Activism News Network wishes everyone a great and prosperous New Year, and welcome to the new Millennium! (yes, the 21st century starts this year, not last year, despite the media circus we had). Please consider making some resolutions to participate in activism projects and pay close attention to your health this year - let's use 2001 as an opportunity to make great strides for the cause of men's rights and dignity!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/01/007237.shtml

Activism Project: Protest Patricia Schroeder In The AAP

Scott · 1 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Speaking of activism projects. :) The NCFM letter writing committee this month is protesting the involvement of Patricia Schroeder, a feminist politician, who has recently joined the head of the Association of American Publishers, which puts out many public school texts. Schroeder is very active in promoting the wage gap myth and other issues in gender politics that have been harmful to men. Note that you don't need to be a member of NCFM to participate in the letter writing committee - all are welcome. Click here for more info on where to write and how to participate.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/01/0354240.shtml

High Profile International Child Custody Case

Scott · 1 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The National Post reported here that Boris Becker, three-time Wimbledon champion, is demanding that his wife return his two children now in the U.S. back to Germany, and is working to obtain sole custody of them. There are also financial issues why Beckher's ex-wife wants to stay in the U.S. - if the divorce proceedings are done in the States, she could receive up to $75M of Mr. Becker's fortune, as opposed to a mere $3.8M she'd get if they were finalized in Germany. There are lots of interesting dynamics involved in this case.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/01/192212.shtml

Men's Health Year In Review

Scott · 2 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This posting from Men's Health America gives an annual report of men's health issues in 2000, and what work the organization does. Ed Bartlett's group is very large and extremely active, and men's health is a fairly non-controversial issue that we can really hope to break some ground with. Join Ed's group to help "eliminate the life span gender gap and other disparities affecting men's health."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/01/2211252.shtml

Full Time Students Must Still Pay Child Support

Scott · 2 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Salt Lake Tribune printed this story about a court ruling which denied a full time college student exemption from paying child support. Judge Orme said that "A child's right to ongoing support should not be held hostage to a parent's desire to get a higher education...Contemporary college students are not forced to choose between earning an income and getting a higher education -- they can do both." This is more evidence that denying men reproductive rights has long term negative effects. I know too many men that can barely feed themselves and pay their child support, let alone attend a tech school or university.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/02/121244.shtml

Home Paternity Testing Kits To Be Regulated In UK

Scott · 3 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

IHF sent in this link to a UK Independent story about the fact that Ministers are planning to have the DIY DNA testing kits regulated "to outlaw DNA testing by fathers using samples from mothers and children which are not verifiable or gained with consent." That's right - it's not being done due to civil liberties concerns, but because the kits can threaten the best interests of children. When are people going to go to the root of the problem, women who are tricking men into paternity, instead of forcing men to foot the bill for children who aren't their own? Do men simply exist to financially support women and children? With news like this, one has to wonder.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/02/1252250.shtml

Marriage And Quality Of Life

Scott · 3 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl writes "On the NBC Nightly News on New Year's Day there was a segment debunkng the myth that following marriage, on average, the quality of men's lives improves while the quality of women's suffers. The recent study was done by sociologist Linda J. Waite of the Univ. of Chicago. Previously, as NBC pointed out, experts in the field had agreed that, after getting married, men's health tended to improve while women tended to become depressed. (I just can't help but wonder, how were they able to compare their sampling with a cloned group of unmarried men and women? There are too many variables that could have brought about the changes in the two groups' quality of life.) Nonetheless, kudos to Dr. Waite and to NBC for reporting on the politically incorrect study. I might add that the segment mentioned a number of areas in which the quality of women's lives tend to improve. A summary of Dr. Waite's findings can be found at this link. Perhaps the nicest tidbit that NBC reported was that only 4% of the married female respondants said they had 'unhappy marriages,' certainly not the picture of marriage that the media and academia would have us believe."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/03/1134224.shtml

Deconstructing "Machismo"

Scott · 3 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl pointed me to this St. Louis Post-Dispatch article and writes, "My gut reaction to the article is that on the one hand it's good to see men coming together to try and help each other with their problems, and to hear about Latino men for a change, but on the other hand the support groups referred to in the article sound as though they were born out of a gender feminist ideology - perhaps these men should be reflecting on the word for Spanish word for 'hypocrite' instead of 'macho'." The article is about profeminist men's groups that subscribe to myths about domestic violence and try to "keep men in their place" by reinforcing the male workhorse role with chivalrous sympathy and subtle shaming. I share Bill's mixed feelings about these groups.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/03/1217247.shtml

CNN Coverage Of Choice For Men Issues

Scott · 3 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

CNN is reporting on the new Ohio law that allows men who were tricked into paternity to stop paying child support and sue to recover past payments in the event that a DNA test proves that they were not the father. It is great to see more coverage of this issue, and there are several anecdotes in the story from men who've been tricked into fatherhood and are still forced to pay. Interesting fact: "Lab directors say that in about one-third of the welfare cases and 10 percent of other cases, the father named by the mother turns out not to be the biological parent."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/03/1956227.shtml

Scientists Grow Sperm In Laboratory

Scott · 4 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A team of scientists in Japan have successfully cloned the embryo cells of mice and turned them into sperm cells. The UK Sunday Times reported on the story here. From the article: "The team, from the Machida district of Tokyo, also believe they will be able to reprogramme male cells into producing eggs so that men can both father and 'mother' children." The research is also controversial due to the use of cloning technology, and while the sperm haven't yet been used in creating a mouse offspring, it is widely believed among scientists that it would work.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/04/158228.shtml

Police With Too Little To Do

Scott · 4 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Fred Reed's latest column is a commentary on the recent news of a boy who could be charged with a felony for slapping a girl's butt. Fred provokes insight into the story with his usual humor and sarcasm. "Do you suppose Chief Salazar doesn't have enough to do?...The prissy confused in Espanola are teaching Sally that sexual attention from boys is sick, reprehensible, and a cause for calling the police. Gee, that'll make for happiness later in adulthood. And, dead serious, they may put the boy in juvie for two years, destroying his life forever. They're teaching Bobby that females are dangerous, that a man should never trust them."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/04/164222.shtml

Making Boys More Like Girls

Adam · 5 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There's some surprising info from the Massachusetts News about William Pollack, who "joined the feminists at Wellesley College and Harvard's Graduate School of Education in their attempt to alter the nature of men by starting with boys in public schools across the country." Have a read of it right here. And there are some excerpts from his book, Real Boys. Of course, by "changing men," he means to make them more like women. Also, they included some soundbites from The War Against Boys by Christina Hoff Sommers to balance Pollack's claims, which was unexpected but a very fair move.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/05/0243220.shtml

More News About Canada's Bill 117

Scott · 5 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Although this is from Dec. 20, I only recently found a web link to this story and want to include it for the sake of thoroughness on the Bill 117 saga. The Ottawa Citizen printed another article on the Bill, also by Dave Brown. In it he mentions, "Reader reaction [to his original article] was the heaviest I've experienced in more than 30 years of column writing. Many refused to believe it. They thought I must have my facts wrong." Unfortunately - and frighteningly - the media seems to be completely ignoring this issue.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/05/033211.shtml

Boy Facing Two Years For "Butt Slapping" Incident

Scott · 6 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The UK Telegraph has an article stating that the boy who recently slapped a 13-yo classmate's butt could be facing two years in a juvenile detention center for the incident. Note that both mothers of the children involved in the case do not feel this is necessary. So why is this madness continuing?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/06/1714250.shtml

Many Countries Now Phasing Out Military Draft

Scott · 7 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Washington Times had a great, in-depth article about how several countries are eliminating the military draft, and the reasons for its demise. From the article: "'The draft was very efficient if what you needed was a large mass of semiskilled labor to deal with a direct and massive threat to your homeland,' said Philip Gold, director of defense studies at the Discovery Institute...'That does not even remotely describe the threat that the United States and its European allies are facing for the foreseeable future.'" Economic concerns as well as the social unpopularity of the draft, demonstrated during the Vietnam War, are other reasons that the draft is coming to be seen as obsolete.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/07/035252.shtml

Montel Williams Show To Feature Philip Cook

Scott · 7 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous Reader writes, "Philip Cook, author of Abused Men - The Hidden Side of Domestic Violence will appear on an upcoming Montel Williams Show. Taping is set for Weds. Jan 10th. Show will air in about two weeks after that date, but no air date has been set yet. Watch your local listings in late January and February. Cook will also appear on the O'Reilly Factor, Fox News Network on January 22nd. This show usually airs the same day, but it may be next day." Mark your calendars!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/07/0311227.shtml

Divorced Dad Forced To Visit Daughter By Internet Videoconferences

Scott · 7 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In a surprising ruling, a New Jersey court ruled that a mother could move across the country with her daughter, and have the father "visit" with her through internet videoconferences. This is an awfully shallow form of "visitation," and the father is justifiably upset over this. David Levy, president of the Children's Rights Council, is disturbed by the precedent set by the case, calling it "unacceptable." Father's rights groups now have yet another issue to protest. Salon.com reported on the story at this link.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/07/0323253.shtml

German Women Can Now Join Military Combat Forces

Scott · 8 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

As reported on by BBC News, women in Germany can now join combat units of the armed forces, after a woman took the law to court and won. Could this be an opportunity for greater equality of responsibility, or will it turn into another disaster of sexual harassment suits, as has happened with the U.S. military? Time will tell.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/07/0349204.shtml

Women's Violence To Cause "A Fundamental Conceptual Shift In How Domestic Violence Is Being Studied"

Scott · 8 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The truth can't be held back much longer...the reality of violent women was reported on in this Massachusetts News article. Even the liberal Mother Jones magazine is saying that "Women report using violence in their relationships more often than men." More data is expected to be released by the U.S. Justice Department to demonstrate this disturbing trend.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/07/0356231.shtml

Washingtonian says "IWF in, NOW out"

Scott · 8 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron writes "The Independent Women's Forum or IWF is thrilled to report that the Washingtonian has featured them in its annual "What's in and what's out" for 2001. The IWF is "in" and NOW is "out" says the Washingtonian. As far as I can remember the IWF has a far larger membership than NOW and has had for some time. The IWF opposes VAWA and the gender wage gap myth, and tends to be more conservative than the Women's Freedom Network. Both women's groups oppose the sex discrimination of feminism. Congratulations IWF!"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/08/1422223.shtml

Barnes & Noble Petition Update

Scott · 8 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "On Sunday, 1/7, I petitioned at the Barnes & Noble Bookstore in Burbank, California for a men's studies book section, like the one which exists at Borders Bookstore. After three days of petitioning I've got about 800 signatures. But on Sunday, after one hour (and 60 signatures), I was asked to leave. Even though two managers at the Burbank store gave me written permission to petition, the national store in New York called the Burbank store and told a higher up manager (John) to get security and make me leave. Evidently they don't like their customers expressing their views about the store's poor coverage of men's issues in their gender studies section. I'll be back next week at another Barnes & Noble bookstore in Los Angeles where there is a public sidewalk outside the front entrance (rather than in a private mall) so I can assert a 1st Amendment right to speak based on the public forum doctrine. I'll mail copies of the signatures to B&N when I have 1,000 of them, and for each 1,000 thereafter. I'm averaging 250 signatures a day, but I'm alone and very busy. At this rate it could take forever, but I'm not stopping. A few letters and phone calls to them always helps, though." Please click "Read More" below to read where to send your letters, e-mails, or phone calls to.

Contact information:

Customer Relations

Barnes & Noble Bookstores

122 Fifth Avenue

New York, NY 10011

(212) 633-3301 extension 0

E-mail: customerrelations@bn.com

Also note that the Barnes & Noble campaign is included in the list of Mensactivism.org activism projects, which you can click on to find more details about the project. Here are some photos from his previous petitioning, too.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/08/1434210.shtml

Washington Post Repeats Wage Gap Lie

Scott · 9 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The Washington Post repeated the wage gap lie again, saying women are "second class citizens" and that they "earn three-quarters of what men earn for every hour worked and . . . hold only 5 percent of top-level jobs." Of course, we also know men make over 90% of workers in 24 of the 25 Worst Jobs in the Jobs-Related Almanac (factoring pay, stress, danger, etc.). For further refutation of this myth, Scott Garman prepared some info here, which includes a link to a Detroit News editorial. Some have already responded by writing the Washington Post. I hope they print."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/08/2155203.shtml

Black Men Excluded From NIH Study On STDs

Scott · 9 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I received this press release from the Men's Health America list, stating that a new study on sexually transmitted diseases sponsored by the NIH is excluding black males. Ed Bartlett is calling this "Tuskgee II," referring to the Tuskegee Syphilis Study which denied treatment for almost 400 black men. The list posting includes an address to write to and protest this racial and gender discrimination.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/09/1540232.shtml

Parker Provides New Info On "Butt Slapping" Boy

Scott · 10 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kathleen Parker's latest column in Jewish World Review is on the topic of the boy who is facing criminal charges for slapping a 13 year old girl's behind. Parker dug up some new facts which I found interesting: "This time, everyone's a little bit wrong and a little bit right.
What's wrong is the assumption that the offending boy is an innocent...This is his second brush with a girl's behind and his fifth with the New Mexico DCYF...What's right about the case is appropriate concern that this boy could end up spending two years in juvenile detention for what amounts to aggressive bad manners and a history suggesting that he needs more help than punishment."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/09/162235.shtml

Cathy Young Exposes Double Standards In The Courts

Scott · 10 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous Reader submitted this article by Cathy Young in today's Boston Globe. In it, Young discusses the recent Massachusetts court decision to expand the "battered woman syndrome" defense to allow victimized women to kill others (in this case her son) and get away with it. She gives examples of other cases where fathers are given harsher sentences for not stopping the abuse of their children by the mother, and also double standards in drug sentencing for accomplices based on whether the person is male or female.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/10/1446219.shtml

News On A Male Birth Control Pill

Adam · 10 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I came upon this news and opinion article which explains various methods of male contraception that have been tried and are being tested. It also explains how the fear of lawsuits and other factors has lowered the size of the potential market for a men's pill in the short term. While it was written last April, it's still an informing read, so please take a look at it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/10/166241.shtml

The Dangers Of Being A Man (At Least, An Unmarried One)

Scott · 10 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article from the Australian Sydney Morning Herald talks about the wide discrepancy in causes of death between men and women in the 25 to 39 year old age category. The article seemed like a positive one if it weren't for the pervasive highlighting of the increased rates of death for unmarried men. While I know this information is true, the tone of the article almost suggests to me that the author may have certain intentions by writing it (i.e, to perpetuate the myth that men must have the "civilizing" influence of a wife to be healthy). Still, it has some useful statistics in it from Australia.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/10/1655229.shtml

Great Article On NIH Disparities In Gender Health Research

Scott · 11 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci wrote an article for UCLA's Daily Bruin on the topic of men's health and the amount of neglect the NIH has given it. It's an excellently written piece with tons of statistics. He even put a plug in for this web site. Thanks Marc!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/10/174259.shtml

Montel Williams: A Public Ally Of Men?

Scott · 11 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl wrote in about his thoughts regarding Montel Williams and his talk show. Bill believes that Williams has generally been an open minded and supportive public figure for men's issues by the way he handles gender on his program. I'm not too familiar with talk shows personally, but I don't recall ever hearing about pro-male issues (including Choice for Men) being discussed on any other TV talk shows (with one or two rare exceptions). Perhaps his program is targeted to more male viewers, which is probably a significant difference from other talk shows. Click "Read More" below to check out Bill's thoughts, and feel free to express your own opinions in the comment board for this story. Montel Williams: Public Ally?

It's quite possible that the men's movement has a very reliable, consistent ally in Montel Williams of the "Montel Williams Show." As noted in Mensactivism.org a few days ago, Williams will feature the author of Abused Men: The Hidden Side of Domestic Violence Philip Cook in a couple of weeks. On today's telecast, January 9, the issue at hand was couples struggling over just what kinds of health treatments their children should or should not undergo. Early in the show a wife and mother debating with her husband over whether to immunize their daughter tried to bolster her point of view by stating, "Usually the mom makes the decisions on a lot of issues like that [that is, health decisions for the child]." Williams immediately countered with, "Woah! Woah! Let's not be so sexist around here! ..... maybe that's the way it has been but I think if 2 people create a child 2 people share a right to make all the decisions about that child ..."

Later, the show contained a segment on a couple debating over whether their 7-month old son should be circumcised. Kudos to Williams for helping bring this controversial procedure to light! The mother, the one opposed to circumcision in this case, referred to it as "barbaric" and "unnecessary." Both sides of the issue were brought out with a number of good points being made by a pair of authorities in attendance. I've consistently watched Williams' show for a few years now. He has done shows on, or that at least touch on, domestic violence by women, fathers' rights, the controversy over sexual harassment and false accusations against men by women. I can resolutely say that Williams has a side of himself that is wholly devoted to the rights and concerns of men and boys - and he is not at all afraid to express this side. His show is a good vehicle for getting men's and boys' issues into the public spotlight. There are even some television markets that run his show twice in one day (the second time being in the wee hours of the morning). I encourage you to make local television affiliates that carry Williams' show aware of our appreciation to them.

Note: To post a comment on this message board, click the "Reply" button shown below and you will be given a text box to type your response in. Then Preview/Submit it and it will be posted on this page below.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/11/1143209.shtml

British CSA Told Teenager To Sue Her Father

Scott · 11 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Recently a father from Britain lost a court case where he was forced to pay for his teenage daughter's tuition to attend one of the most expensive private schools in the country (the father was quite wealthy, and was paying for her to go to a cheaper private school, but did not want to pay more). It was recently discovered that the Child Support Agency recommended that Nicole, the daughter, sue her father for the money, rather than having her mother sue so she wouldn't have to pay legal expenses. The UK Sunday Times has the story here. This is probably the most direct and indefensible attack on the family I've ever seen by a government agency. I hope this stirs up some controversy in Britain, and gets some more talking going over here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/11/1158242.shtml

14 YO Boy Speaks Out Against Court Bias; Starts Hunger Strike

Scott · 11 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This is both incredible and disturbing...a 14 year-old, very articulate boy from Canada has created a web site about how divorce and the family court system harms children, including a letter he wrote to a Court Justice. He is also keeping an on-line diary of his hunger strike, which he started on January 1. If this is real, I'd imagine the local media must be covering the story. I'm in the process of getting in touch with the boy and will try to find. out. Update: This is legit, folks - the Calgary Herald had a front page story yesterday that can be read here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/11/1216202.shtml

The Roles Of White Women In Slave Ownership

Scott · 12 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Rand writes "Here's a review of a book that shatters the myths and feminist propaganda that women did not play a role in slave ownership or were more compassionate to their slaves. Click here to read the review." Honest research into this part of history will eventually force feminists to admit that women have been just as tyrannical and unjust as men through the times.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/11/1844211.shtml

International Journal Of Men's Health Coming

Scott · 12 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This announcement from the Men's Health America list states that an international journal on the topic of men's health is being formed. "The Men's Studies Press will launch a new multidisciplinary and multicultural academic journal in the winter of 2002 devoted to the subject of men's health. The International Journal of Men's Health will publish peer-reviewed papers addressing all aspects of men's health." There are editorial positions open for the journal, and contact information is provided in the announcement.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/11/2056258.shtml

Tech Companies Sued For Causing Cancer In "Clean Room" Workers

Scott · 12 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The New York Law Journal is reporting that a group of employees at IBM who worked in a particular "clean room" and now have cancer are suing IBM and the manufacturers of several chemicals used in the clean room for damages. All of the men are under the age of 30, and two of their coworkers have already died of cancer. The article quotes the lawyer defending the men as saying, "What makes [this case] unique is that this is the first time anyone has taken on the computer industry." For the sake of men's health and to decry the disposability of men working at dangerous jobs, be it in a coal mine or a "clean room" with toxic chemicals, I hope this suit succeeds and makes a statement (and they don't just take a settlement out of court).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/12/125248.shtml

Police In Ohio Don't Have Much To Do, Either

Scott · 12 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tony Delgado directed me to this article from Excite News which is about a man who was convicted for domestic violence because he accidentally knocked off his wife's glasses while driving. His wife didn't want to press charges, but the police went ahead and did so anyway. He had to be pardoned by the Ohio governor to avoid being deported from the country. Tony writes "The same reasons that immigration offices are trying to use to avoid deportation of women are now used to enforce deportation of men. This doesn't surprise me, but unfortunately it is yet one more example of how biased American society is becoming against men. Apparently police departments in our country must think that women are sacred and untouchable, not even touchable by mistake."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/12/1739214.shtml

Gay Father Wins Custody Of Child From Surrogate Mother

Scott · 13 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I discovered this New York Post story about a gay man who won custody of his son who was born though a surrogate mother. NY Supreme Court Justice Marilyn Diamond "said her decision was mainly based on her belief that it's in the child's best interests to stay with his father, with whom he already lives. The mother was ordered to pay child support."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/12/1751240.shtml

Help Put Pressure On Group For False DV Portrayal

Scott · 13 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I received a request from an anonymous reader to help question the Break-The-Cycle organization for presenting misleading information on domestic violence. His message is a bit long for the main index, so you can read it by clicking "Read More" below. It will only take a moment to send an e-mail to this organization asking for the sources of their statistics, and it would help to put pressure on them to change their extremely harmful portrayal of domestic violence. An Anonymous User writes *"I could really use a hand here. Break-The-Cycle is a very active domestic violence group that speaks at high schools. They recently had a panel discussion in which they claimed "95% of reported DV cases are women." Dr. David Fontes of SAFE shows that this figure is 15 years old and no a longer accurate figure even based on "reported" cases, which now show men make between 15 and 35% of victims (Download the "Violent Touch" document at this link) while survey data shows men make 50% of victims (click here). At the Break-The-Cycle website, they use 'he' for batterers and 'she' for victims. Then they give a disclaimer that says: "Throughout this web site, we refer to victims as 'she' and abusers as 'he' because that is the reality of most relationship violence. However, boys and men can be victims, and girls and women can be abusers; and domestic violence does occur in same-sex relationships. The above information applies equally in those cases." This disclaimer doesn't alleviate the harm done by using gender-exclusive language and lying about the statistics, which is only used to justify the lack of attention to battered men and the failure to reach out to them. So I called and asked politely for their source on the 95% figure and referred them to Dr. Fontes' analysis. They said they'd get back to me with the source for the 95%. That was months ago, and they're ignoring me. I believe it's because the source is 15 years old. Can a few people PLEASE send them a quick e-mail at Info@break-the-cycle.org and ask them the source, along with your comments? Thanks."*

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/13/169251.shtml

Columnist Retracts Support From Father Of Hunger Striking Boy

Scott · 14 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Licia Corbella of the Calgary Sun was covering the story about Clayton Giles, the 14 year old boy who is on a hunger strike to protest the mistreatment of children in family court and his own custody ruling that kept him from his father. She wrote an article stating that upon review of the court documents in the Giles' case, she was appalled at the vindictive behavior of Clayton's father, and regrets writing in support of him. You can read her article here (sorry, as of 1/14 the link is now outdated). Clayton wrote an e-mail response to Ms. Corbella which can be read from his diary entry. This is obviously an extremely controversial case.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/14/043204.shtml

NIH Changes Position On Health Research Discrepancies

Scott · 14 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In a major victory, Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America is reporting that the National Institutes of Health have modified their position on the "gender heath research gap." From the article: "According to William Harlan, MD, NIH Associate Director for Disease Prevention, 'Women have been included with overall equivalency in most observational epidemiological studies when the conditions commonly affect both genders.'...[the] statements came in response to the recent report, 'Were Women Excluded from Medical Research?' by Men's Health America."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/14/0420218.shtml

Fifty Australian Men Sue Government For Not Paying For Male HRT

Scott · 15 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Sydney Morning Herald carried this story today, reporting that a class action lawsuit of fifty men are suing the federal government for sex discrimination because testosterone hormone replacement therapy is not covered by the state (as it is for women's HRT). The case may bring attention to the issue of "male menopause," an often neglected men's health problem.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/14/2242248.shtml

Male Health Problems Prompt Little Sympathy

Scott · 15 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

And here's a perfect example - this story from DrKoop.com talks about the various health risks and developmental issues that boys have, and essentially ridicules them in a condescending tone: "So much for the macho male...New research...says guys are -- brace yourself -- 'fragile.'" The author then goes on to talk about how boys shouldn't be treated so callously and roughly when young. Apparently it's ok to shame and patronize them, though.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/14/2256257.shtml

Martin Luther King Remembered

Scott · 15 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I was looking around on the web for something to post here about Martin Luther King, Jr, but found a short e-mail by Ed Bartlett to be very appropriate. It's a quote from Dr. King, and reads, "If a man hasn't discovered something that he will die for, he isn't fit to live." - MLK Speech in Detroit, June 23, 1963. I believe the men's movement as a movement can learn a lot from the civil rights movement. Here is a web site at Stanford devoted to the original writings of Dr. King.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/15/1723247.shtml

Equal Parenting Hunger Strike In UK

Scott · 16 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Richard writes "I am passing on a special request from Len Miskulin. He asks that as many people as possible go to this website and submit a letter of support for him. He needs as many letters as he can get as quickly as possible. Please take a couple of minutes to do that. It's important for him and all non-custodial parents." Len has been striking for a month now, and has stated that he is willing to die. You can find out more info on this site. Please take a moment and show your support of Len.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/16/0118237.shtml

Problems Plague Child Support Office

Scott · 16 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An article from the Topeka Capital Journal is about the headaches and problems the child support office has caused, not only for non-custodial parents, but also for the CPs and children. Over 2,400 people did not receive child support checks in the month of October from the Kansas payment center. We have reported on other major issues stemming from paperwork and computer problems at child support agencies, and from this article more than one woman quoted in it has become so fed up that they have stopped using the agency.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/16/1420209.shtml

Save The Males Web Site

Scott · 16 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Henry Makow wrote in to tell me about his new web site, which has a neat multimedia introduction to the issue of men and the anti-male climate at the University of Winnipeg. Henry was formerly a professor of English at UW until he was ousted from the school because he was seen as anti-feminist. You can read his story here. I will be posting a review of his book on this site by the end of the week.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/16/1732257.shtml

Erin Pizzey Puts Feminists On The Defensive

Scott · 17 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There was an interesting article from The Scotsman on the topic of domestic violence and Erin Pizzey. Pizzey was one of the first people to open battered women's shelters in the UK, and is an equity feminist as evidenced by her frequent criticisms of feminists who support the anti-male portrayal of domestic violence as one-sided. Apparently she has ruffled quite a few feathers, and this article sounds almost apologetic when discussing modern feminism. One thing is for certain - with more and more people challenging false information about domestic violence, radical feminists will be forced to go on the defensive in the near future.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/16/2338203.shtml

Clayton Giles Update

Scott · 17 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Clayton Giles, the fourteen year-old boy who is hunger striking to get his mother to sign over custody to his father, has moved his web site to a new server. Click here to read his frequent on-line diary entries. At this time his mother has still not given in, and he is still going without food.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/17/0254257.shtml

Letter Writing Campaign For Len Miskulin

Scott · 17 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Backlash.com is sponsoring a letter writing campaign to help raise awareness of Len Miskulin's hunger strike, and to help ensure that the media and courts have little room to escape accountability for ignoring his situation. Even if you're from the U.S. or Canada, your letters can go a long way to help this cause.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/17/1426236.shtml

Restoring Respect To Boyhood

Scott · 18 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The London Free Press had an opinion article on the topic of boys being taught that masculinity is toxic at school. The author frequently quotes Christina Hoff-Sommers' latest book The War Against Boys, and insists that we need to start treating boys with more respect and to understand the different conditions under which boys thrive on in school.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/17/1454247.shtml

Must Women's Gain Be Men's Loss?

Adam · 18 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There's an interesting article by Maureen Freely about replacing the women's unit with a "gender equity unit" in the UK, while looking at one of the major men's issues, namely the lack of parental rights. While she does believe a few feminist myths, (i.e, men had all the power while women were the second sex, etc.) she does seem sincere about making men equal in the article, which you may read by clicking here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/18/019214.shtml

Wage Gap Article In Kiplinger's Magazine

Scott · 18 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There was a concise but relevant article in the February 2001 issue of Kiplinger's Personal Finance. "After narrowing throughout the 1980s, the so-called gender wage gap actually widened a bit in the '90s, with women earning only about 75 cents for every dollar that men make. But that doesn't mean that wage discrimination is rampant, or that it even explains why the gap exists."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/18/1933206.shtml

Obtaining Your Child's School Records And Grades

Scott · 19 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Dadsdivorce Magazine has some useful information for fathers who are being blocked from accessing their child's public school records. You can read the guidelines for obtaining legal access to them here. Your rights are protected by the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/18/1939212.shtml

Title IX Is A No-Win Numbers Game

Scott · 19 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Washington Post had an article on Title IX recently, and the ways it has negatively impacted both male and female athletes. "At JMU and on other campuses, students and faculty alike have a seemingly genuine desire for fairness. But no one questions the twin logical fallacies that underlie the current implementation of Title IX: that the failure of women to participate in sports at the same rate as men means that something is 'wrong,' and that achieving proportionality means everything is 'right.'"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/19/1513210.shtml

UK Government Abandons No-Fault Divorce

Scott · 19 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In a controversial move, the British Government has eliminated the law allowing no-fault divorces. "the Government said it was not convinced "that removing fault grounds will substantially influence the way parties conduct themselves throughout the divorce process". A spokesman for the Lord Chancellor's Department added: "The reduction of acrimony and the adoption of a more conciliatory approach to divorce may require a cultural change beyond the realms of legislation." You can read the UK Independent story at this link.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/19/1527200.shtml

Men As "The Weaker Sex"

Scott · 19 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tony Delgado submitted this article from MSNBC on the facts about male vulnerability to health risks. Tony writes "What I don't like about this article is the obviously insulting tone that the journalist Linda Carrol uses in the introduction part of the article. It is the typical anti-male, pseudo-journalism than the media is so happy to publish these days. I think this article deserves complaints on the MSNBC message board." Linda's e-mail is lcarrolljag@mindspring.com. I think Tony is using a lot of restraint in his description; I found the entire article to be one of the most condescending articles about men I've ever read.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/19/1935240.shtml

Clayton Giles Ends Hunger Strike

Scott · 20 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Clayton Giles has ended his hunger strike today at 1 PM. You can read his press release here. He also announced that he will be walking and bicycling his way from Calgary, Canada to Washington, D.C, along the way gathering stories and signatures from children who want the family courts to change the ways they treat children as property, and to support joint custody. He plans to meet with the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the U.S. If you can donate any time or resources to his efforts, contact information is given in his press release.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/19/2031221.shtml

Stolen Sperm!

Scott · 20 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User writes "This tennis player claims that his sperm was stolen. Of course the journalist treats this as a joke. Imagine if a woman was complaining that she was impregnated against her will - would the journalist treat it as a joke too?" Click here for the story from the Sydney Morning Herald. According to Becker, the woman impregnated herself after having oral sex with him. This could raise some male reproductive rights issues as well - we'll see.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/20/0247248.shtml

Steve Blake No Longer Hunger Striking

Scott · 20 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Earlier we had reported on the illegal imprisonment of Steve Blake, the president of the Minnesota chapter of R-KIDS. He had begun a hunger strike on December 23. I just received an e-mail from Scott Booth, who has informed me that Steve is no longer on a hunger strike, but he is still in jail, and they are working on getting him out. Scott told me that if there is anything else that can be done, I will be notified. Keep an eye on this site for further details.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/20/1536247.shtml

Battered Men Cry For Help

Scott · 20 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous Reader sent in this link to a superb opinion article by Raymond Saulnier. Saulnier works with a battered men's help line in Maine and wrote an article on the unaddressed problem of battered men, and how almost no one is talking about the recent Jonesboro murder in terms of domestic violence. From the article: "If a battered man approaches a battered women's agency for emergency housing, he will be referred to a homeless shelter...Advocates for male victims are few and far between. This mirrors the plight of the battered women a generation ago."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/20/1854211.shtml

Activism Project: Get More Men's Studies Books On The Shelves At Foyles

Scott · 21 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Adam has organized a new activism project, especially for those from the UK. The largest bookstore in Britain is called Foyles and it has only two shelves of men's studies books compared to the 25-40 shelves devoted to women's studies, and that's including "lesbian studies" and subtopics of women's issues. So I'd like to start a campaign to enlarge the men's section to the same size. That means trying to convince the store to carry every major men's studies book that exists. Check out our Activism Projects page for a suggested letter format and info on how to participate.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/20/1734244.shtml

Dads And Daughters

Scott · 21 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Jim Gard writes "My divorce has been extremely bitter costing thousands of dollars, great amounts of time from work, and constant attempts of alienation on the mother's part. The bottom line is, enjoy your kids and stay neutral concerning any Mom comments. Your children will appreciate it. For all of the Dads who need something different to do with their daughters during an extended vacation, please visit my web site at this link. My two daughters, ages 10 and 4 and I traveled the nation by train. We did the same over Christmas, this time heading up the east coast." Thanks for the submission, Jim - I enjoy posting information such as this which is definitely of interest to fathers. I'm sure young boys would also enjoy trips like this as well.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/21/0120250.shtml

ZDNET: Wage Gap In IT Widens As Experience Increases

Scott · 21 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

ZDNET printed this story about the wage gap in the Information Technology (IT) field. According to the article, women's salaries equal men's when they first enter the industry, but as men and women gain experience, the wage gap widens. But the author indicates the fallacies of the study, saying "It is impossible to say why male techies earn more than their female counterparts as both groups gain experience; statisticians did not inquire about the potential salary drag of extended maternity leaves, salary negotiating skills, job tenure or alternative compensation such as stock options."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/21/1422213.shtml

UK Police To Keep DNA Samples Of Innocents

Scott · 22 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In some very disturbing news, police in Britain have been given permission to keep DNA samples and fingerprints of people involved in crime investigations and who were not convicted. Previously, the samples had to be destroyed if the person was innocent. IHF (now AngryHarry) submitted this UK telegraph article. The systematic collection of DNA samples from the population will undoubtedly change the way law enforcement is done, and this is one step closer to a police state where authorities can know with certainty if you've been somewhere or touched something.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/21/2028210.shtml

Interview Transcript On "Male Menopause"

Scott · 22 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

ABCNews posted a transcript of an interview/chat session with Jed Diamond, who has written on the topic of midlife changes in men, sometimes referred to as "male menopause." The Men's Health Network is mentioned in the interview, and it's an interesting discussion on the physical and psychological changes that men go through in middle age.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/22/0143237.shtml

The Idea Of "Ecomasculism" - Part One

Scott · 22 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I received a feature submission from Claude Saint-Jarre, a Canadian environmentalist and father, who wrote an in-depth essay on the idea of "ecomasculism." Since his paper is quite long, I've divided it up into two sections. Click "Read More" below to read part one, and I hope to post part two on this site in a few weeks. Claude has a tremendous wealth of knowledge about ecology and I'm sure would welcome any questions or feedback from readers. He's also been working to create fatherhood groups based on ecoliteracy, and so if this idea interests you, please drop him a line.

The Idea of Ecomasculism

Following my reply to the Mensactivism.org article Standing While Urinating Represents Contempt For Women, Scott Garman asked me if I would like to write an essay on ecomasculism. Using urinals is ecologically correct; it does not use much water, which is important in these times of clean water scarcity. Thus it would be consistent for ecomasculists (as a counterpart to "ecofeminists") to argue that the use of urinals is best from a standpoint of ecology.

I have many things to say. Here they are in a nutshell:

- Ecomasculism is not a currently widespread concept.
- Many men are in favor of a cultural transformation which would effect the ecology in positive ways.
- Many men are ecologists.
- Very few men are masculists and ecologists.
- And even for those who are both masculists and ecologists, they do not tend to identify themselves as ecomasculists.
- Also, the Earth has no rights in the Constitution, says Thomas Berry, who thinks we are autistics toward the environment.

My present writing is, of course, a subjective point of view in this virgin territory. My native language is French, and Scott and I worked to translate this essay into readable English. There may be still be a few rough spots here and there, but please feel free to e-mail me if you have any questions about the essay or my views: stjc@info-internet.net.

First of all, why I am an ecologist?

Both of my parents were raised on a farm. My mother enjoys observing trees and recycles. My father lives in awe before nature; he likes spring water, cows, crows, music. Without forests, there would be no clean air, no natural music, etc.

I was raised in Abitibi, north of Montréal, which is an area as big as France, colonized only a hundred years ago. It was then only forest and lakes. Today, there are almost no forests left. Minamata disease, a form of methyl mercury poisoning in humans caused by eating large quantities of fish from polluted waters, occurs here as in Japan, and gold mines have caused deterioratation to the surroundings. There were even atomic bombs hidden in our local military/civilian airport that I was aware of when I was young, and I had always feared what kind of accidents could occur with this kind of weaponry.

In my youth, I studied social work, but in the turbulent 70's, during the anti-Vietnam War demonstrations, I quit before finishing my bachelor's degree following a student strike in order to obtain democracy at my University. We did a strike for four months - which we named le departement parallele de service social - to pressure the University to use democratic forms of collective management and self or co-evaluation of exams. The University became impatient and said that if we did not want to use the old systems, then we would not get our bachelor's degrees. Twenty-four of us quit in protest, choosing to remain true to the teachings of Carl Rogers, Paulo Freire, Ivan Illich, and Henri Laboritt.

Then, I traveled. Traveling is a good way to open the mind. I did yoga and meditation, changed my eating habits, quit smoking, reduced the use of white sugar, and studied forestry. But I was deceived because this kind of forestry was far removed from what we think of today as "ecoforestry." I was then living in a small cottage, near a lake, a forest, electric lines, and a railroad. It was a place between the old and the new. Again I left forestry, sad to only be cutting down trees. During this time, I read a book by the French Alain Bombard, who described his crossing of the Atlantic, alone in a small rowboat. He said he was surprised by the amount of pollution he saw. I knew that seaweeds create oxygen as the forest does. And I thought that if the water is polluted, seaweeds probably have difficulty creating oxygen. I wrote to him and he answered that according to NASA, there is a deficit in oxygen creation by the plankton and forests. I was surprised that my intuition was right and that gave me confidence to study ecology further.

Later I studied cooking organic foods and finally, twelve years later, got my masters degree in social work. My thesis was: Ecological and Systemic Social Work for Sustainable Development During The Communications Era, and then I discovered I could find no paying job in the field! Social work is often done on a volunteer basis in these post-Reagan days. I am now working as a clerk in a municipality office, and FATHERING!

So that is my background, and how I became interested in ecology...

Ecofeminism

Let's begin first with ecofeminism. This movement was started in 1978 by Françoise d'Eaubonne with her book Eco-Feminisme. Some say that modern ecology began with the great work of Rachel Carson with her book The Silent Spring, which documented the harmful effects of DDT (an insecticide) on animal life and humans.

Ecofeminists often link the domination of women and of nature to patriarchy. We will see that Andrew Kimbrell has a different view in his book The Masculine Mystique.

The medical doctor Helen Caldicott is certainly a sort of ecofeminist with her critique of nuclear armaments, which she names "macrobes," contributing to the "omnicid" suicide of humanity.

Theodora Colborn has written a very important book: Our Stolen Future, where she documents the effects of small quantities of toxic chemicals - endocrine disruptive - elements, that are responsible, among others, of lowering sperm counts in men. (http://www.canoe.ca/JamBooksReviewsO/ourstolen_colborn.html and http://www.mojones.com/mother_jones/MA98/snell.html)

By the way, "ecological design" is the alternative to this trend. We will see that many men are contributing to this science.

Another very important author is Rosalie Bertell, who won the Alternative Nobel Prize, for her book, No Immediate Danger? where she explains the dangers of low-level radiation. There are at least 20 million victims who have been harmed by the nuclear age, she says.

I must also mention the fantastic work of the scientist Mae-Wan Ho who is criticizing with lucidity and courage the practice of genetic engineering by a cartel of corporations and governments: http://www.i-sis.org

Ecomasculinism

And now, onto the men, or those who have an explicitly supportive outlook on men.

To me, Buckminster Fuller is the grandfather of the future. He saw that science and technology could be used in positive ways for the benefit of all. He cultivated a well rounded, comprehensive mind and conscience. He showed that we can go beyond the Malthusian paradigm and concomitant social darwinism. Thomas Malthus, in 1800, was a professor of Political Economics at the East India Company College. He observed that the population was expanding at a geometrical rate but that the food supply was only available at a linear rate. He then concluded that there will never be enough food for everyone.

In fact, today, there is more than enough food for everyone; it is just not well distributed, people do not have enough money to buy it and a percentage is lost due to lack of refrigeration or electricity in some parts of the world. Malthus did not foresee progress in our capacity to do more with less materials and energy, as Fuller has demonstrated 100 years later.

Meanwhile, Darwin did the same in the Malthusian scarcity context, saying that only the strongest survive. Present day global economic trends exclude a good half of humanity from living a decent life by believing in scarcity and the struggle for life. This is called social darwinism.

Fuller rejected social darwinism, and said that we can create a "success of humanity" by implementing a ten year plan during which we could convert the military industry to civilian use, ecologically and peacefully, and offer a good quality of life to everyone. He is the first person to have theoretically demonstrated this. I felt good and relieved from a kind of sadness by reading his books. But we still have to change.

Fuller criticized our science. He preferred the geometry of triangles and tetraheadrons to squares and cubes. That lead him to investigate geodesic domes. He designed domes that could house poor people, were energy efficient, and could grow food and recycle wastes. He was inspired by the atomic structure, in which he said there is no true parallel or perpendicular, but only geodesic curves. This is explained in his book Synergetics, Explorations in the Geometry of Thinking.

Fuller got often angry to see that the plumbing on the land is 5000 years behind of the plumbing on ships and air ships. He did not agree with, in a round world, perpendiculars, parallels, squares and cubes. That's why he studied synergy. He thought we are not being honest when we say "up" or "down," because we have known for 500 years that the sun does not rise and sleep.

The Buckminster Fuller Institute: http://www.bfi.org

One student of Buckminster Fuller recommends this site: http://www.cyberus.ca/choose.sustain Fuller's spiritual sons are "ecological designers." I know Amory Lovins, author of The Soft Energy Path and Natural Capitalism, which can be read free on-line at http://www.rmi.org. James Baldwin wrote On Buckminster Fuller. There is also John Todd. He wrote From Ecocities to Living Machines. He also says that it is possible to create a post-industrial society without violating fundamental ecological integrity. His Living Machines are examples of living solutions proven as multi-functional, non-chemical waste treatment technologies. They are whole systems to treat wastewater. They are solar powered, accelerated versions of the water treatment facilities found in mature natural systems, incorporating helpful microbes, plants, snails and fish in diverse, self-organizing and responsive communities.

Here are some site specific biological solutions that transform waste streams into resources: http://www.oceanarks.org

I recently read a very interesting article by Ty Cashman on converting our economy to a hydrogen economy. Cashman offers a vision to the youth who knows what it is against but not what it is "for."

Cashman , past coordinator for wind energy for Governor Jerry Brown, writes: "Currently, the biggest stumbling block to switching to a hydrogen economy (which would prevent 80% of the pollution), is the fact that the general public doesn't know what it is.... We do not have to crash and burn. Having bootstrapped this extraordinary civilization with fossil fuels, we can now instead ease ourselves back into the mainstream of nature with our new understanding and abilities intact. The hydrogen economy will allow us to come home again."

The article has only been published in the Annals of the Earth journal and is not on the web. If you want to read it, please e-mail me at stjc@info-internet.net and I can send you a copy.

The oncologist Karl-Henrik Robert has also innovated tremendously. He was tired of conceptual fights about the environment and looked for common ground. He prepared a scientific text which he proposed to fifty scientists in Sweden and rewrote it 21 times until they were all satisfied. This consensus was named The Natural Step. It consists of four basic scientific principles and four conditions to satisfy in order to do define sustainable development. The paper is in this sense, a compass. The fourth condition he wrote of pleases me, as a social worker:

"There must be fair and efficient use of resources with respect to meeting human needs."

http://www.naturalstep.org

The "green architect" William McDounough also stands apart with his dedication and ingenuity with regard to sustainability. He designed a textile industry that has zero waste. To succeed in doing this, he and a chemist friend analyzed the 8,000 materials used in this industry to find the non-toxic ones. They found only 37 that were safe. Sweaters are now made with these materials and, as a surprising result, the water coming out of the plant is cleaner than the water coming in! So a formerly dangerous production process is now itself a cleaning process!

http://www.radicalmiddle.com/x_hawk_lovins.htm

Suren Erkman is a journalist who has written a good book on industrial ecology. The aim of industrial ecology is to contribute to create a good quality of life, with 90% less materials and energy. Here are some interesting links on the topic:

http://mitpress.mit.edu/JIE

http://www.indecology.org

http://www.smu.ntnu.no

http://www.indigodev.com

Her e-mail address is: suren.erkman@icast.org

Other Important Men Involved In Ecology

1. Fritjof Capra: he is a physicist who wrote three outstanding books that articulate the ecological philosophy: The Turning Point, The Web of Life, and The Tao of Physics. He also wrote a more political one on "green politics" where he gave considerable space to feminist philosophy. But here is a good article by Capra: http://www.sdearthtimes.com/et0195/et0195s1.html.

2. David Orr: Orr is involved with Capra in ecoliteracy. They articulate it around the "theory of living systems," which presents these core concepts: networks, nested systems, cycles, flow, development, dynamic balance. Some links are:

   http://environmental.jrn.msu.edu/Orr.htm

   http://www.ecoliteracy.org

3. Linus Pauling: this man won two Nobel Prizes: one in Peace, and one in Medicine. For Peace, he succeeded to almost completely stop nuclear testings, with a group of international scientists he formed. In Medicine, for his work on vitamin C. He also developed new fields in medicine: orthomolecular medicine and orthomolecular psychiatry. These have led the way to the development of clinical ecology. Pauling has shown the importance of proper nutrition. Improper nutrition can lead to mental illness, including violence. So he suggests in a way that violence is not a gender issue.

4. Seymour Melman: Melman is an industrial engineer who is a leader in the conversion of the military industry to civilian use. I read and enjoyed his book Pentagon Capitalism. Gorbachev said the military pollute a great deal and founded the Green Cross to combat this problem. Fritjof Capra said of Gorbachev in a lecture near Montreal in 1986 that he is the first politician to apply the ecological paradigm.

5. David Shank is not an ecologist per se, but his critique of the way economic powers use computers and shows that it is often anti-ecological. He also advocates a reactionary return to nature.

6. In 1992, 160 Nobel Prize laureates (mostly men, but thanks also to the women who signed it), published a Warning to Humanity, about the dangerous level of destruction of the environment and what we should do about it. (1,700 scientists signed)

   http://www.deoxy.org/sciwarn.htm

7. John Hamaker stands out and is not listened to. In his book The Survival of Civilization, he hypothesizes that instead of global warming, we could enter another ice age, due to our excess petrol use and deforestation which prevents forests from absorbing excess carbon dioxide. To correct this, he proposes a massive remineralization program of forests and agricultural soils with fine rock dust in addition to reforestation and a rapid transition to a solar-powered age. I believe his ideas have not entered the mainstream media because they are owned by the petrol/nuclear/agro/pharmaco conglomerates that would suffer financially (at least in the short term, but not in the long term!). Buckminster Fuller endorsed this book.

8. The physicist Sid Liebes has worked on a volunteer basis for 12 years to create an exhibit that would depict the Story of Universe. Finally, he was helped by his employer, Hewlett-Packard, to realize it. Its purpose is twofold: to convey a sense of wonder about the creation of life on Earth, and give us a sense of responsibility in taking care of our environment. There have been five massive extinctions of life on earth so far and each took 30 million years to replenish biodiversity, and we as a species are creating a sixth one. See the book A Walk Through Time or this web site: http://www.globalcommunity.org

9. In the same endeavor, a cosmologist, Brian Swimme, and a theologian, Thomas Berry, have written a beautiful Story of Universe, which ends with their advice that it is time now to create a new era: the ecozoic era that would be biocentric instead of anthropocentric, that would use biocentric technologies inspired by nature. To them, ecology is applied cosmology.

10. Matthew Fox is never far from Thomas Berry. He invented Creation Spirituality, which dwells on ancient spiritual saints such as Hildegarde de Bingen or Master Eckard. His book Original Blessing is indeed very de-culpabilizing. And that's good for men! To him, the creation of the universe is always continuing and we need to reawaken our spirits to our sacred role. In his book The Reinvention of Work, Fox explains the new ecological paradigm (the Universe as an organism, not a machine), and shows how to become less materialistic and adopt an organic world view which springs from the inner hidden seed of mystery and creativity. We must become truly critical of the systems that keep so many of us out of touch with justice and economic fairness. If more people listened to him, it would help support spiritual and meaningful roles for men. See http://www.universalmind.com/matfox.htm for more info on this.

11. Edgar Mitchell is an ancient astronaut who attained "instant enlightenment" by looking at the Earth from space, as he was stupefied by its beauty. He founded the Institute of Noetic Sciences to study consciousness, and you can look at Online Noetic Network. In an interview he said this:

    "I think the next evolutionary step is learning to use the brain mass in a much more holistic way - to achieve greater coherence between the right and the left hemispheres. Now, meditation does that. I mean that's one of the ancient techniques for achieving greater coherence. We also understand that when we learn to utilize the logical, rational functions of the left brain, and the intuitive, creative functions of the right brain in a more coherent fashion, that the rate of learning and the rate of capability goes up an order of magnitude."

    And he was asked: what is our more distant potential?

    "The further we get out into the future, the less our predictions are valid. I think the immediate hurdle here is to become sufficiently aware of ourselves and our impact on the environment to create a sustainable civilization. It's not apparent that we're quite ready to do that yet. We're simply so ego concerned and we have our socio-political, economic structures based upon our Cartesian and Newtonian ideas. And it is falling apart. The infrastructure of that world view is not valid, and we're running out of its limits of validity, much to our peril - unless we shift our thinking and our understanding of what's happening. We're likely to have some rather difficult times ahead of us."

12. James Hillman continues: "I think we are on the Titanic - we are in a system that is itself pathological and dysfunctional. The effect of psychotherapy's underlying assumptions is to help the individual cope by focusing his energies inward and, in effect, anesthetizing the passions and discontent which could otherwise be directed at the problems of the world. We must develop a therapy of the soul itself." This comes from his book: We've had a Hundred Years of Psychotherapy - And the World's Getting Worse.

    Concerning men and especially fathering, Hillman, the "archetypal psychologist" has this to add and I don't want you to miss it: "Even if the father puts everything he has into the child, the child is still left facing a world which will not receive the soul. That's the big job. So fathers have a very important job in addition to keeping a roof over the heads of their sons. They also have to correct the culture. And that's a very hard one. But that's the calling, I think that every man has."

    More at: http://www.vix.com/menmag/hillmaiv.htm

The next part of this document will delve in detail into the works and philosophies of some of these great ecological thinkers and others including Andrew Kimbrell and Warren Farrell. Please check this site in a few weeks for the next installment!

Claude Saint-Jarre, stjc@info-internet.net

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/22/034208.shtml

The Feminization Of British Universities

Scott · 23 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC submitted some excerpts from the article, How exams are fixed in favour of girls from The Spectator: "Girls are doing better than boys in exams, but that does not mean that they are brighter, says Madsen Pirie. What has happened is that exams have been feminised - and so has the country...Only five years ago, men gained 1,800 more first-class honours degrees than women. The number of women with firsts has trebled in a decade, with women now leading the field in 12 of the 17 subject areas, including medicine, law and business. Partly, they gain more of the firsts because there are more of them. They make up 55 per cent of the university population, and gain more of all qualifications. There is, nonetheless, a clear trend running through education...Ultimately, we have to ask ourselves what sort of society we are producing if we feminise the entry qualification into its leadership positions. Will it still produce penicillin and hovercraft? Or will it just produce civil servants?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/22/1332203.shtml

Changing Divorce's Impact On Children

Scott · 23 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I received an anonymous submission to this story reported by CBSNews. It is about trying to prevent the negative impact of divorce on children, and the way that seems to be having the best effect is the assumption of joint custody. In fact, in states such as West Virginia which have laws making joint custody the default ruling in divorce settlements, both the rate of divorce and the rate of "deadbeat dads" is dropping significantly. Not to mention the positive benefits of maintaining children's contact with their fathers.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/23/1511214.shtml

Is Bias Against Men In Family Court Common Knowledge?

Scott · 24 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In this example, we can conclude with a resounding YES. In an "Ask Our Experts Column" from the femail web site, expert Sandra Davis gives this advice to a woman concerned about losing her children if she divorces her husband: "You will not lose your children by moving out. A court would be sympathetic to your reasons for leaving. Its view is 'mother is best' and your husband would have a hard job convincing them otherwise." While the reasons this woman wants to leave her marriage are valid, the response clearly indicates that despite the circumstances, it is widely believed that courts are biased in favor of mothers. I just thought this would be a useful reference as a "sign of the times." Source: femail web site/magazine

URL: http://www.femail.co.uk/pages/askourexperts/probadvice.html?in_article_id=11028&in_page_id=473&in_expert_id=122

Author: Sandra Davis

Date: Unknown (Undated?)

Keywords: bias against fathers, child custody, divorce

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/23/213207.shtml

UK Courts Turn To Silencing Len Miskulin

Scott · 24 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Len Miskulin, who has been hunger striking for over a month to protest the family court system that has barred him from seeing his children, has apparently had another major stumbling block to his cause. I have been unable to confirm the source of a press release that is circulating by e-mail, but it states that a media gag order has been issued by a British court, forbidding the use of Len's name or personal information in reports on his hunger strike. Effectively, it is undermining the media's ability to report on his case or to exercise free speech. This makes his cause all the more urgent - please visit Len's web site for updates or info on what's going on. Keywords: Len Miskulin, hunger strike, child custody, divorce

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/23/2116248.shtml

Refuting Myths About Fathers

Scott · 24 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This letter to the editor of the Oklahoman is great to see - the writer doing a point-by-point refutation of many myths about fathers, including "Fathers abandon families," "Dads don't want custody," and "Dads do not pay child support," among others. I like to see people speaking out in their local media on this - we need to encourage it as much as possible. Source: The Oklahoman [newspaper]

URL: http://www.oklahoman.com/cgi-bin/show_article?ID=626300&pic=none&TP=getarticle

Author: Gregory J. Palumbo

Date: January 22, 2001

Keywords: fatherhood myths, child custody, child support

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/23/2320231.shtml

Myths About Youth Violence

Scott · 24 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from the Men's Health America list submitted this report from the Surgeon General on Youth Violence. As we know, youth violence generally means male youth violence, but this report successfully addressed this issue without stereotyping boys or stigmatizing them. It includes a list of myths about youth violence that I'd like everyone to read. Despite the way the media portrays it, we are not on the verge of an explosion of school violence - so let's calm the hysteria before young boys are systematically monitored for "potential" violent tendencies (but give treatment to those who have been violent). Source: Office of the U.S. Surgeon General

URL: http://www.surgeongeneral.gov/library/youthviolence/sgsummary/summary.htm

Date: Unknown

Keywords: male violence, crime

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/24/0055247.shtml

Are Women Better Leaders?

Scott · 24 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Are whites better leaders? Are straight men more efficient than gay men? Are these kinds of questions similar? U.S. News magazine had an aritcle on the superiority of female leaders. Much of it has to do with the stereotype that women are more "holistic" and "web thinkers" than men, which like many stereotypes can contain a grain of truth but should not be reinforced due to the potential misuse of the stereotype - such as in making sweeping generalizations about the superority of one gender, race, etc. over another. The article is a perfect example of this.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/24/141237.shtml

Woman Who Shot And Almost Killed Husband Is Now Suing For Support

Scott · 25 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Star from Canada is reporting that a woman who served two years in prison for shooting and almost killing her husband is now trying to sue him for alimony. "That she shot her husband in the face may be a moot point when determining support, since Canada's Divorce Act is 'no fault' and does not take prior conduct into consideration. Nor is there any statute of limitations for filing a claim." Her ex-husband is quoted as saying, "All I want her to do is back off, leave me alone. I still get headaches. I still have a bullet in the back of my spine."Source: The Star [Toronto, Canada newspaper]

Title: Victim is sued for support

Author: Martin Patriquin

Date: January 23, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/25/1537236.shtml

Man's Lawsuit Over Paternity Fraud Allowed To Go To UK Court

Scott · 25 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In encouraging news for Choice for Men supporters in the UK and abroad, a British judge ruled that a man may sue his ex-wife for paternity fraud and attempt to collect damages for raising a child who is not his own. The ruling "was welcomed as a caution to women tempted to hoodwink lovers into accepting responsibility for another man's child." You can read the story from the UK Telegraph at this link.Source: The Telegraph [UK newspaper]

Title: Man can sue lover over son 'deception'

Author: Maurice Weaver

Date: January 23, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/25/1548217.shtml

Men's Health Programs Lag By A 5:1 Margin At DHHS

Scott · 26 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This Report to Congress from Men's Health America analyzes the data and concludes that men's health is being neglected at a rate of five times women's health in terms of funding and programs. "The first-ever survey of men's health programs in the federal government has revealed that men's health trails women's health by a 5:1 margin. According to the Report to Congress: Men's Health Lags by a 5:1 Margin at DHHS, which was released today, the budget for men's health programs at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services totaled $963.6 million, compared to $5 billion for women's health."
Source: Report to Congress: Men's Health Lags by a 5:1 Margin at DHHS

Author: Men's Health America

Contact: Ed Bartlett, eba@intr.net

Date: January 25, 2001

Keywords: men's health statistics, health financing

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/25/232219.shtml

Fathers And Families Outline Their Vision

Scott · 26 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Joe Dunbar recently attended an important meeting of the Fathers and Families organization, led by Ned Holstein. A description of their plans, both in philosophy and in specific goals are readable by clicking "Read More" below. Especially noteworthy is their formation of a Father's Legal Defense Fund. FAF and Ned have demonstrated a lot of initiative and an ability to work with other father's rights groups in a very synergistic manner, and I think we can expect to see much more from this group. FAF meeting summary, Wed., January 24, 2001 in Woburn, MA

Ned Holstein's Fathers and Families meeting was well planned and very encouraging as he shared their new 2001 plan for open discussion. It was exciting to hear most comments that went both ways as everyone tried to maximize the impact this fund raising and strategic plan had to combat fatherlessness. Ned was superb in promoting their New Vision: A Father for Every Child. They started by emphasizing the importance of a short summarizing Mission statement, and challenged us to improve on the following after many good views showed just how hard it was:

Fathers and Families combats fatherlessness by advocating for the child-father bond. We seek equal parenting rights and responsibilities for divorced or never-married fathers and mothers.

The vision was shaped as they addressed The Problem: Fatherless Children. ``Half of all American children are growing up without a father because their parents are divorced or never-married''

The plans and problem were serious, and their need to employ a more professional approach instead of relying strictly on volunteers was apparent. Their focused with Five Tools for Social Change: 1) Fathers Legal Defense Fund, 2) Lobbying Presence, 3) Public Relations, 4) Research Arm, 5) Member Services: attorney referrals, newsletter, website, etc. And determined: Fathers and Families is the only fatherhood organization with a comprehensive strategy to fight fatherlessness by promoting shared parenting, eliminating gender bias from family policy, and securing equal rights for all parents.

Everyone got their say as Ned eagerly sought out our suggestions, and graciously shared their reasoning from the professional staff that had worked at this plan over the last six months. Actually Ned's been at it for several years as he recited his beginnings in CPF. He welcomed their eager participation to join in helping as Town Captains to organize calls and a letter writing campaign for the four legislative bills FaF recently introduced. It was the best Fathers meeting I've been to, and certainly not the last as I was eager to sign on as a Town Captain and anxious to hear more. I'd imagine their web site will be back soon, showing the polished plan that many will want to promote. I'm curious on other's take on this and what we can do to further support Fathers and Families.

Great job Ned!

-- Joe Dunbar, joewdunbar@hotmail.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/26/155238.shtml

Commentary On Alexander v. Alexander In National Post

Scott · 26 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The National Post had an editorial piece by a woman who aptly uses the example of Alexander v. Alexander - the case where a woman who shot her husband is now seeking support money - to demonstrate the double standards of the Divorce Act and the problems of government regulating people's personal lives and private matters. It's time to end these laws that can require a man to pay his ex-wife after she cheated on him, abused him, or even tried to kill him. Source: National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Blame it on the Divorce Act

Author: Karen Selick

Date: January 25, 2001

Keywords: domestic violence against men, alimony, husband murder

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/26/1526221.shtml

Montel Williams Episode On DV Reviewed

Scott · 27 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl sent in another good analysis of Montel Williams and his talk show, which may be one of the most far-reaching venues for "men's issues" that currently exists and is (at least in a lukewarm sense) voicing our concerns. Click "Read More" below for Bill's comments. And thanks to everyone who has been submitting editorials recently - I want Mensactivism.org to be a voice of the people who are participating in the men's movement and whose ideas deserve to be heard. On January 24, the Montel Williams show was on the subject of female to male domestic violence. Unfortunately, the show was not billed this way. It was billed as, "Women Who Abuse for Attention" - which is exactly what a graphic at the bottom left hand corner of the screen read through out the entire telecast. (This graphic seemed to lend a slight sense of legitimacy to the behavior of these women. Can you imagine a TV talk show on "Men Who Abuse to Stop Nagging"? I can't.)

Indeed, the show was revealing in that a number of men disclosed, in detail, the violence perpetrated against them by the women in their lives. And Williams chipped in nicely on a couple of occasions, pointing out that a hurled ashtray could hit someone in the temple thereby causing severe injury, even a fatality. However, too much of the telecast was spent with the women attempting to justify their behavior, or the couples discussing the attendant problems in their relationships, or the the audience snickering at the experiences of the male victims. One of the experts, a psychologist, even broke into laughter a couple of times. Much too much of the show possessed a lighthearted tone. There existed a lack of seriousness through out - a tone that wouldn't have been there had this been about men abusing women. Don't get me wrong. I'm glad that ANYONE with the media power that Montel Williams possesses would do ANYTHING to reveal this hidden social ill to the public. I was just hoping for a show that not only exposed the problem but also went into the dynamics of female to male domestic violence, with a sense of compassion. Instead, the biggest round of applause during the show occurred when Williams admonished the men by saying, "You have to figure out, ... why you put yourself in a relationship like this." I'm a grad student in counseling doing my thesis on the inadequate understanding that counselors have of this problem. There are a lot of dynamics that could have been explored, a lot of very unique issues these men face. Unfortunately, these issues weren't brought up until near the end of the show and it was the men themselves, and author of "Abused Men" Philip Cook, another expert, who brought them up. Cook pointed out that "a lot of times the man will be the one most injured ... and yet, he is arrested." He also noted that "men have no place to call. Where's the men's crisis lines?"

Kudos to Williams for giving this problem exposure. I just hope that the next TV program on female to male domestic violence will have the compassionate tone that exists when the genders are switched.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/26/1516221.shtml

Mensactivism.org Gets "Encoded"

Scott · 27 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

"An Edgy and Intelligent Magazine for ALL Men," The Guy Code featured The Men's Activism News Network in its weekly review of "encoded" web sites, giving this site the "Far More than Backlash" award, along with many kind words. Thanks guys!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/27/001228.shtml

Georgia Senate Hearing On Paternity Fraud

Scott · 27 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kingsley Morse, Jr. forwarded me this press release about an upcoming session in the Georgia senate about the problem of paternity fraud. "Now is the time to END PATERNITY FRAUD as a legally protected extortion against men. The constitution says the law is supposed to provide equal protection for it's citizens. Georgia must protect the real victim and provide restitution to those who have been victimized. Join us today, at the Georgia State Capitol's Legislative Office Building on Wednesday, January 31, 2001 @ 5:00PM. We need 100 people, victims, wives of victims, girlfriends of victims, fathers rights groups, men and women. Will you join us?" Contact information is provided in the press release. This looks to be a hopeful opportunity to air this issue and to get some results.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/27/1758227.shtml

New Study By US Justice Dept. On Campus Rape

Scott · 28 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron writes "New Jersey Online reports a new study by the Justice Department's National Institute of Justice in this article. As usual from the 'injustice' department, the study is biased towards women - nothing new there - however despite the best gloss that they could put on the result, the study blasts away most feminist claims about college rape. The original report can be found here in text format." Click "Read More" below to see some more important comments that David has about the study and some points about ways to interpret it.

Feminists have long used Mary Koss' figures that 25% of college women are raped each year. Although the headline of this article says the figure is really 1.7%, reading further we see there were two protocols used, and the less favoured result said only 0.16% or one woman in 600 was raped.

Why the big difference? One protocol from the same report gives a figure more than ten times the other. This is a very important point to grasp if you are using statistics on rape and domestic violence. As the article says, "Highlighting the effect of definitions and survey techniques, the researchers identified their first telephone poll as a survey of 'unwanted sexual experiences' and their second poll as a survey of crime victims". Its been known for a while now that "crime" surveys give lower results because people are often reluctant to identify events as crimes.

This is big news for men's advocates. Why? Because men are far more reluctant to report an event if it is framed as a "crime" than women are. Both sexes report less in crime surveys but the effect is especially noticeable on men. In particular all the surveys feminists use to suggest there is a large difference in victimization rates on domestic violence are crime surveys.

Source: New Jersey Online (web news site - www.nj.com)

Title: Justice study: 1.7 percent of college women raped, 13 percent stalked

Author: Michael J. Sniffen (Associated Press)

Date: January 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with

comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/27/1821205.shtml

Florida May Begin Charging Willful "Deadbeat Dads" As Felons

Scott · 28 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Sun-Sentinel is reporting that activist groups are pushing for new laws that will make the willful nonpayment of child support in excess of $5k a felony. The law would not apply to people who are in tight financial situations and are unable to pay. While I'm not arguing that willful non-payers of child support shouldn't be punished, I find this disappointing in light of the fact that there still exist no laws which enforce a father's visitation rights, or require the custodial parent to account for how child support money is spent. Source: Sun-Sentinel [Florida newspaper]

Title: Activist want parents who don't pay child support to be charged as felons

Author: Shana Gruskin

Date: January 21, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/28/1559215.shtml

Long Live The Male?

Scott · 28 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Karen De Coster wrote an editorial for LewRockwell.com about how men have become feminized over the years. She prefers a "Marlboro Man" kind of masculinity and believes "men need to be manly, and women need to let them be manly, and that means taking on some serious anti-wimpification measures." While the article is in a superficial sense "supportive" of traditional masculinity, there were a number of interesting counterpoints made in a reply that Mark Lesmeister wrote up and submitted to Mensactivism.org. Read De Coster's article, and then click "Read More" below to view Mark's insightful and decidedly pro-male response.

Karen De Coster's article is a direct frontal assault on an idea currently in vogue in some circles, namely the notion that masculinity itself is inherently bad. She reminds us that there's nothing wrong with men acting like men. Thus, at first blush (if a real man is allowed to use words like "blush") she seems to provide a refreshing counterpoint to the constant stream of radical feminist male-bashing. However, on closer examination one quickly realizes that radical feminist male-bashers and "traditionalist" women such as Ms. De Coster are simply two sides of the same coin. Both groups want to define for men how men should behave, rather than let men determine that for themselves. That the radical feminist male-blaming attitude is bad for men is self evident. However, Ms. De Coster's traditionalist views can be just as destructive to men, albeit in different ways.

For example, Ms. De Coster thinks "manly" is looking and acting like the Marlboro Man. It's interesting to note that at least two of the actors who portrayed the Marlboro Man later died of lung cancer. Wayne McLaren, who portrayed the MM in print and billboard ads, died in 1992 at the age of 51. David McLean, who portrayed the MM on TV, died in 1995. My point? The activity that these ads intended to associate with masculinity, namely smoking, in all likelihood led to the premature deaths of the men involved. Their stories are thus a metaphor for the situation all men in our society face. We're constantly being told that in order for us to be real men, we must engage in some kind of risky or self destructive behavior. Sometimes the self destructive aspect of supposed "masculine" behavior is obvious, like smoking, or fighting, or high risk sports. Sometimes the self destructive aspect of the behavior comes from not asking for help when we need it; like the MM, we're supposed to be stoic. "Shut up and take it like a man," the traditionalist woman tells us.

And boy, do we get the message. If boys were taught that it's OK to ask for help, and that their lives are just as valuable as girls, would boys commit suicide at a rate 4 times that of girls? What if men weren't taught to equate their egos with their jobs, as Ms. De Coster does in this essay, and what if men weren't judged by the size of their paycheck but by the content of their character? Would they be so willing to do most of the "death jobs" and put up with unsafe workplaces, so much so that over 90% of workplace deaths are male? Indeed, what if men were taught that it takes just as much if not more courage to fight unsafe working conditions, rather than just stoically accept them? That's one problem with the traditionalist's definition of manliness. Let's say we accept courage as a positive masculine trait. The problem is, the kind of courage displayed by someone like Gandhi, whose demeanor and ectomorphic appearance were opposite that of the Marlboro Man, doesn't even show up in the traditionalist radar scope.

Another example: Ms. De Coster freely admits to "making game of stay-at-home daddies." She then reveals her fundamental mistake about what at-home-dads are when she refers to men who "look good pregnant." This statement arises from the mistaken notion that men who stay at home with the kids somehow want to be women or mothers. Nothing could be further from the truth. I am an at-home dad. But don't call me "Mr. Mom" because I'm not a mom and don't want to be. My kids have a mom, and she's great. I'm a dad, and I do all the same things dads have done throughout history. I teach my sons right from wrong; I act as a role model for them; I protect my family. If Ms. De Coster doesn't think that's manly, that's her narrow minded problem. I just hope when and if her career takes off, and she wants to get married and have kids, (and for all I know she may already have done all that) she'll understand when her "manly" husband insists she be the one to give up her career and take care of them. Surely she wouldn't want to do something nontraditional or "unladylike" and continue to work when she has kids at home. That's another thing about this essay that grates on me. For a woman who is a CPA and is getting her MA in economics to lecture men against making nontraditional life choices is blatant hypocrisy.

Let me give just a little background, so that everyone will know my comments are not the "sour grapes" of a man who couldn't hack it in the traditional "manly" spheres. I'm a former Marine officer who liked nothing more than rappelling out of helicopters in the dead of night. (By the way, as a Marine I've learned a few things about leadership along the way as well. One thing I've learned is that real leadership happens anywhere, not just in a 9-5 job.) My hobbies include participating in a group of volunteer civilians who serve as opposition forces for Reserve and Guard units. And, though I'm now more Drew Carey in appearance, anytime some Sean Connery or George Clooney type wants to throw on an 80 lb. backpack and hump through the woods to see who drops first, I'm game. I'm not saying this to brag (well, maybe a little (g)) just to let you know where I am coming from. One of my at-home dad buddies is a former saturation diving instructor for the Navy Seals. I'm sure he'd say the same thing; staying at home doesn't make us wimps, nor do we want to be like women.

And no, I don't watch Oprah. Between taking care of the boys and working out at the gym, I don't have time. If anything, I watch reruns of JAG and Law and Order. The only daytime talk-show I can stand, and that rarely, is Montel Williams, because Montel is a Marine and a former Navy cryptologist, just like me.

Personally, I don't care if my wife brings me flowers. She has, but she has also brought me a man-bouquet on occasion. In case you didn't know, that's two six packs, i.e. a dozen beers instead of a dozen roses. The important point was that she did something to show that she appreciates what I do for our family. I know it comes as a surprise to many when I say this, but men are people too! We deserve to be shown appreciation just as much as women.

In short, Ms. De Coster's prescription for "manly" behavior is just as narrow, just as deleterious for men as the radfems who despise all traditional masculinity. I will modify my earlier dictum about conservatives and liberals and state that "traditionalists" and "nontraditionalists" mainly differ in how they want to screw men. Here's a radical idea: How about if we let men decide what is and isn't masculine for a change? Specifically, how about we let each man decide for himself what masculine behavior is? If he behaves honorably, and contributes to society rather than diminishes it, we should honor his contribution, and not shame a man merely for not fitting into some predetermined role.

Mark J.L. Lesmeister, mmeister@houston.rr.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/28/1616227.shtml

MANN Feature: A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Men's Rights Forum

Scott · 29 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett, author of the novel Friends to the End which delves into the taboo subject of domestic violence against men, wrote an essay about the state of gender relations today, and how far we (haven't) come. Trudy outlines the history of the anti-male women's movement, and is not afraid to offer criticism where it is due. As a woman, Trudy's views further validate the need for a restoration of men's rights and dignity. She concludes that trust is the vital aspect missing in most male/female relationships today, and we must change the portrayal of men and divorce on television and the media to restore hope. Click "Read More" below to view her bold and unapologetic essay...

A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Men's Rights Forum

by Trudy W. Schuett, dsrtlite@primenet.com

Lately I've been dealing with an avalanche of information relating to men's rights issues. I've been reading everything from scholarly works to online message boards, and I'm finding: there is nothing fair about the way men are being treated by our court systems, governments, and even their wives and mothers. It's almost easier to dump a husband than to get rid of a stray dog who turned up in your yard.

Years ago, when my son was still in school, I thought I was imagining things when I saw mothers of his friends appearing not to love their boys at all. Only, now it seems I was on the right track. Maybe women who got rid of their husbands can't bear to have a man (ugh!) in their house at all, even if they did bring him into the world. So they shut off emotionally at a time when their boys need them more than ever. Sure, they still provide basic subsistence - food, clothing, and shelter - because they have to, but that's all. The kids grow up and get out into the world thinking there's got to be something wrong with them if their moms don't even care.

I can't even imagine how it feels for the adult men who are told, "You don't live here anymore, don't expect to ever see your kids again, and by the way, here's the bill."

What is wrong with women?

It's a complex morass of emotional and legal issues that, as far as I can tell, goes back as far as WWII, when women had to fill the positions in factories and other jobs that were previously held by men. But once all the men came home, and wanted their jobs back, some women went quietly back to their new tract houses and babies while others didn't go quite so quietly. There were adjustments to be made all around. The results of five years of a worldwide culture gone berserk does not go away fast and easy - it lingers, and resentments begin. While most people were busy trying to figure out how this "peacetime" thing should go, some of those women who hadn't gone quietly home when the war ended got noisier and noisier and eventually made themselves heard. These women didn't want to stay home and take care of babies; they'd held jobs and gained respect and they wanted that respect back.

By the mid-60s, with another war simmering in Southeast Asia, the numbers of dissatisfied, unhappy women had grown to thousands. Using the same techniques as the anti-war protesters, women picketed, held sit-ins, and burned their bras. That may well have been the first mistake of the early second-wave feminists. Although the issues weren't the same; the peace movement was against the war, the feminist movement was for equality, somehow the two issues became inextricably entwined in the public consciousness. In those days only men fought wars, so if you were in favor of peace and equality, that meant you had to be anti-male. Even after the war was over, the feminists kept on using the same old protest movement techniques. Calling the movement the fight for equality, they continued to picket, rally, and even riot.

Other issues, such as the abortion issue, domestic violence, even gender-biased language became part of the equality movement whether they belonged there or not. Soon "the Patriarchic Establishment," and the "male-dominated society" were being blamed for practically everything from inequality in the workplace to the heartbreak of psoriasis. Women who had never burned their bras or read so much as a single issue of MS Magazine were becoming aware that everything that was wrong with society had to be the guy's fault. Men didn't do much to defend themselves, perhaps they were unaware that the militant feminist groups were serious about all this. When Gloria Steinem said, "A woman needs a man like a fish needs a bicycle," too many people laughed without a clue as to what was to come.

The Equal Rights Amendment of the 70s failed miserably because it was so confused with other, unrelated issues. Seen on its own it's fairly benign and has nothing at all to do with unisex toilets or closing private schools. (Those are a couple of the arguments I heard used against it.) It was also, mistakenly, seen as the thing that would make feminism the law of the land. Once the ERA was a dead issue, many felt feminism was also a dead issue, and those bitchy, silly women would go home and find another cause.

Only, they didn't do that. They continued to work on other laws, especially now since some of them had gained a bit of renown and prestige. Their message that there was something fundamentally wrong, something bad about men was quietly finding its way into books and magazines, TV, movies and radio until male-bashing was almost respectable. If you tell somebody something often enough, even if it's not true they'll begin to believe it.

So women's feelings toward men began to change. Not all women, of course, but enough to wreck half the marriages in the country. Because at the same time all this other stuff was happening, the idea of divorce as a solution to a woman's self-esteem problems came creeping in. I don't think anybody knows where that came from, but it's there all right. There is also the idea that somehow divorce benefits the children. I think the notion is that it's better for them to live without Dad than to hear him arguing with Mom. I bet if we asked the kids they'd disagree. I wonder how many little kids go to bed at night not feeling quite safe because it's just them and Mom now.

I wonder how many women fully understand what it is they're giving up in exchange for their freedom. I wonder - do they really know what they're setting themselves and their X2B up for?

On TV and in movies, women get happily divorced from their gorgeous, charming husband and a week or so later they've got a new guy equally as charming and gorgeous. Often there's very little or no distinction between the two guys. Maybe one wears Eddie Bauer and the other wears J.Crew. Mom is validated after finding a high-paying job even though she has no apparent marketable skills. Why she couldn't do this before the divorce is not made clear. Meanwhile the ex-husband either begins openly cavorting with his long-term mistress (the rat) or confesses that he's gay. Everyone lives in lovely, large homes and drives late-model SUVs. When one of their kids gets in trouble in school, Mom immediately phones Dad and they visit the school together, though Dad sometimes brings the slut along. Everybody's so happy it makes ya wanna hurl.

The subliminal message is: divorce is fun; all of the benefits of marriage but you still get to date. They don't have anybody on TV like the divorced people I know, some of whom haven't dated in ten or fifteen years and probably won't. I can't think of anybody I know that had a mistress, either. And nobody I know, married, divorced or otherwise, looks anything remotely like those people on TV.

It sure doesn't look like much fun to me. I've begun to think we've now got a situation where a lot of women neither trust nor care for men at all. They've been told so often by the mass media that men are supposed to be unfaithful, dangerous and stupid while at the same time men are also supposed to be rich, handsome and wise that the girls just don't have a clue anymore. And our culture of immediate gratification precludes them taking the time to find out.

The biggest casualty of the 20th Century was not either of the World Wars or even Vietnam. It was the relationship between men and women. So many of the problems of larger society could be solved if we could all trust each other again. I find it easy to get along with men because I've lived and worked with men all my life. In most any situation, it's been me who's been the odd one out. I have developed a few basic observations that may well be true: Men are equally as complex and perplexing as women are. There is no blanket statement you can make that will apply to all men, all the time. 99% of married men love their wives and want to raise their children. Men have feelings, and they don't have to "be in touch with their feminine side" to express them.

A long time ago, I found an old housekeeping book at a rummage sale. It had been printed somewhere around 1900, and had a lot of things like recipes for floor wax and the directions for cleaning oil lamps and gas fixtures. There was a section on family life, and tucked in among the rules for allowing children to mingle with company and some other things was this statement: "Always treat your husband as an honored guest. His needs are first and foremost, above all others."

Echoes of a gentler time. We've come so far in 100 years - but in the wrong direction.

Trudy W. Schuett is an active supporter of men's rights through the Arizona Father's Rights organization, and the author of Friends to the End, the first-ever novel about domestic violence against men, which can be read at http://hyperpedia.net

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/29/0232256.shtml

The Inevitability Of Violent Men

Scott · 29 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Globe and Mail printed this science article about the roots of "male violence." A species of freshwater fish and fig wasps were studied, and testosterone levels of the males were monitored in various behavior situations. But is it reasonable to compare the behavior of simple organisms such as insects with conscious men? As Mark Lesmeister put it, "This article's headline makes the mistaken substitution of 'men' for 'males.' Human beings aren't cichlid fish or fig wasps."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/29/1456232.shtml

Gingerbread Man Is Now Gingerbread Person

Scott · 30 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC submitted some excerpts from an article stating that politically correct thinking has now hit the production of gingerbread men: "Political correctness hits gingerbread man...the gingerbread man has become a gingerbread person.
The supermarket chain Safeway announced that it would be producing an equal number of gingerbread men and gingerbread women in response to consumer demand...The move provoked mockery in the town of Grantham where the biscuit originated in 1740...'It's political correctness gone way beyond the pale. The gingerbread man has always been an innocuous little fellow. It's not as if he has all his naughty bits showing.'"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/29/1442242.shtml

New Domestic Violence Ads In New York Subways

Scott · 30 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Salon.com posted part one of a two part article series about a new domestic violence awareness campaign which is being advertised in New York City subway trains. The ads show yearbook portraits of young women with the subtitles, "Most likely to be forced into sex," "Most 911 calls," "Most excuses for a black eye," etc. "This year's campaign...tells us that high school and college girls are at risk; that partner abuse is so pervasive, many girls won't be able to avoid it; that if they find themselves in an abusive relationship, these women need to get themselves out of it; that they can start by calling the mayor's hot line." All of the ads ignore the existence of violence against men, and the author of the article, while thoroughly entrenched in DV politics, at least criticizes the campaign for stressing the victimhood of women and not addressing DV in homosexual relationships.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/29/214246.shtml

Having Women Register For The Draft In The U.S.

Scott · 30 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

James Castelli submitted this article from the Boston Globe and writes, "With women making up 14% of the total of the armed forces, isn't it time that the responsibility to register for the draft be shared equally? Since all 18 year old males must register for the draft within 30 days of their 18th birthday isn't it time that the call for equal rights for women be broadened to include equal responsibilities? John Solomon and Thomas Mc Guire write that the rationale for excluding women from the draft is quickly eroding while reasons to include them - from military preparedness to gender equality - multiply."Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: A-TEN-shun: It's time to register women for draft

Authors: John Solomon and Thomas McGuire

Date: January 28, 2001

Keywords: military draft, selective service

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/30/0115215.shtml

C4M Issue Hits The Courts In Massachusetts

Scott · 30 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

James Castelli sent in another article from the Boston Globe, this one on the topic of male reproductive rights. Jim writes "After paying child support totaling $28,000 for 7 years Andrew suspected that the child he had supported was not his. DNA tests confirmed his suspicions and now the Massachusetts Supreme Court must decide if he can be forced to continue child support payments despite the fact that the child he is being forced to support is not his biological child. Men, like women, should have a 'choice' about their reproductive and financial destiny..."
Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: 7 years of child support later...

Author: Kathleen Burge

Date: January 28, 2001

Keywords: choice for men, paternity fraud, family court reform

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/30/0131246.shtml

CBS Article On Men, Divorce, And Suicide

Scott · 30 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Jon Mollison submitted this CBSNews story and writes, "The article offers a few thin excuses for the increased suicide rate of divorced men but fails to mention the high rates of men who are denied access to their children. It does mention that women do better after divorce, emotionally, and that they initiate divorce more often than men. However, it fails to come to the clear conclusion that most men are genuinely happy being good husbands and fathers."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/30/1840246.shtml

Female Teacher Sentenced For Having Sex With Student

Scott · 31 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

BusterB writes "Well, finally - justice is also starting to apply to women, after the Mary Kay LeTourneau fiasco and a couple of similar cases in Canada in which the teachers in question weren't even charged with a crime (although they did lose their jobs). This is a different jurisdiction, of course, but perhaps the justice system is slowly waking up to the idea that there is no excuse for female teachers having sex with their students, and that the students weren't "asking for it" simply because they were male. Now if only we can get judges to realize that rape victims shouldn't have to pay child support...then we'd be seeing some real progress."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/30/1715208.shtml

Is America Shortchanging Male Children?

Scott · 31 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User submitted a link to Cathy Young's article in Reason magazine about boys and the education gap. There is an interesting contrast of the views of Christina Hoff-Sommers vs. William Pollack, and the article is typical of Young's consider-both-sides-of-the-story approach, which always sounds reasonable and lets the reader decide on the outcome. It's a very good essay, and includes many relevant statistics. Check it out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/31/0438207.shtml

Barnes & Noble Campaign Handout

Scott · 31 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci sent me an informational flyer for the Barnes & Noble petition campaign which you can download by clicking here (it's in MS Word format). Feel free to distribute and tell others about it! Barnes & Noble has gone without a book section on Men's Studies for too long, and needs customer feedback for this to change.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/31/1442247.shtml

Male Grief And Father Loss

Scott · 31 January 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America submitted a great article from the L.A. Times about male grieving and dealing with the death of a father. It is in line with the past feature article we had by Tom Golden, stating "Men...are not the emotional cripples society has stereotyped them as. They deeply feel the loss of their fathers. Some cry, some don't. Some talk, many won't. But they do grieve, albeit very differently from women." Source: L.A. Times [newspaper]

Title: The Big Goodbye

Author: Susan Gregg Gilmore

Date: January 28, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/31/1455247.shtml

Warren Farrell On The Air

Scott · 1 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I received a message from Peter Allemano about a special event involving Warren Farrell. He is going to be on a radio program tonight (1/31) and will be debating men's issues with a "gender relations expert" on a show that has a host notorious for being anti-male. You can participate in the program even if you're not within range of the radio station - you can listen on-line and still call in to show your support of Warren. Click "Read More" below for further instructions. Warren Farrell, author of THE MYTH OF MALE POWER and the just-published FATHER AND CHILD REUNION, is arguably the nation's foremost spokesman for men's rights, writing from a perspective that upholds compassion for men and women alike. He has publicly stated that, of all the men's organizations in the country, NCFM best represents his perspectives on gender issues, and, indeed, Warren even serves on NCFM's Board of Advisors.

Warren has called NCFM to ask for the support of members and friends of NCFM in the greater New York area tonight (1/31/01) -- but, actually, it is possible for anyone with Internet access to participate, so regardless of where you happen to be, geographically-speaking, PLEASE CONTINUE READING!

Warren is scheduled to appear as a guest on New York's popular Alan Colmes Show, 11:00 p.m. - 2:00 a.m. EST, on WEVD--1050AM, along with an unnamed "male/female relations expert" (according to Colmes' own Web site). Colmes has a track record of hostility towards men's perspectives on gender issues, and his "male/female relations expert" is likely to be an anti-male feminist; together these two people can be expected to try to rip Warren from limb to limb. Here's where we can help: the Alan Colmes Show follows an "audience participation" format, and by calling in our support for Warren, we can mitigate the attack Warren is likely to receive while letting other listeners in a significantly large audience know that Warren is by no means a lone voice in the wilderness.

People outside the greater New York area can participate in tonight's broadcast through the radio station's Web site. For instructions on how to do so, click on the following link:

http://www.1050wevd.com/listenlive.html

To get the call-in number, we will have to tune in around 10:00 p.m., and it's possible to call the number a few minutes before the show actually begins to get placed on "hold" in a line-up for being heard on the air.

Folks, it takes courage to stick up for ourselves, but we owe it to ourselves to do so. Here's a golden opportunity not only to do exactly that, but also to express our appreciation for a dedicated author who has served as an inspiration for so many men's rights activists both here in the U.S. and abroad. Here's hoping I get to hear many of your voices over the radio tonight!

Peter Allemano, PAllemano@cravath.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/01/31/209221.shtml

Child Abuse Investigation Policies Revamped In Winnipeg

Scott · 1 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Winnipeg, Canada Child and Family Services office has undergone dramatic changes in the way child abuse accusations are investigated, with most of the changes helping to reveal those who were falsely accused. The National Post story can be read here. Most importantly, the accused person is now interviewed by the social workers, where previously he could not even tell his own side of the story. "The policy of interviewing accused persons is one 'every father and grandparent who has ever been accused has prayed for,' says Ms. Malenfant. 'These changes are fantastic. I used to be the most vocal critic of Winnipeg's child welfare system, but I believe it's the best in the country right now."Source: National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: False alarm bells sounded

Author: Donna Laframboise

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/01/1526256.shtml

Scottish Rape Cases May Protect Anonymity Of Accused

Scott · 2 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In another positive false accusations story - AngryHarry submitted this story from the UK Telegraph about the Scottish Parliament Justice Committee's support of creating anonymity for those accused of rape. "The reforms were proposed by George McAulay, the Scottish chairman of the UK Men's Movement. His petition to parliament had sought for men accused of rape to have the same courtroom anonymity as their alleged victims to protect them from 'unjust stigma.'" These two stories should help to renew hope that progress can be made to prevent false accusations and protect those falsely accused. Source: The Telegraph [UK newspaper]

Title: Anonymity sought for men in Scottish rape cases

Author: Nick Britten

Date: January 31, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/01/2015238.shtml

Man Sues After Being Denied Treatment For Breast Cancer

Scott · 2 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article from Australia's The Age is about an American man who is suing his employer, Verizon, and his health insurance company for not covering expensive treatment for breast cancer. "An American man with breast cancer sued his employer and health insurers for $US 2 million, saying he was denied adequate treatment because he is a man...[the insurance company] has allowed the same procedure for women...About 1600 men are diagnosed with breast cancer each year, and about one-quarter of them will die from the disease, according to the American Cancer Society.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/02/0028255.shtml

Anti-Male Gender Humor A Hit At The Washington Post

Scott · 2 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Courtland Milloy shares a few jokes on male sexuality, demonstrating that it's ok to bash men - after all, they never respond or stand up for themselves. Or do they? Read this article and decide for yourself. "Question: What should you do if you see your cheating husband rolling around in pain on the ground? (Answer: Shoot him again.)" That one sure cracked me up, among several others.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/02/0034213.shtml

Rape Hoax Highlights Need to "Clarify Procedures"

Scott · 2 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve Hoffman writes "The Chandler, AZ police department has recognized the need to "clarify police procedure on reporting crimes such as sexual assault" as a result of a false rape report. No word on action they are taking to protect innocent men from women such as the perpetrator of the hoax. Click here for the story." Note that according to the article, false reporting is punishable by a fine, and is considered a misdemeanor. I wonder how that compares to the effects of being falsely accused on the victim of the accusation?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/02/1448213.shtml

Book Review: Women of the Klan

Adam · 2 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This is a book review of Women of the Klan: Racism and Gender in the 1920's by Kathleen M. Blee,the book shows us how involved women were in the KKK and "that it documents in great detail a direct lineage between the Women's Ku Klux Klan and the radical feminist movement as it exists today.The book draws from a wide variety of historical documents, letters, and in-camera interviews that the author recorded with older women who were still alive at the time the book was written."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/02/1143212.shtml

Abused Guys Break The "Pink Barrier"

Scott · 3 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W. Schuett writes "Earlier this week, several members of the Abused Guys Yahoo! Club posted articles in the Domestic Violence category at Themestream.com. Previously, this category contained only articles written by women. There is also a new Men's Issues category. The author of each work gets two cents each time someone reads an article. There is also space for readers to comment on and rate the article."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/03/1645217.shtml

Housewife Poisons Estranged Husband

Scott · 4 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I received an anonymous pointer to an article from the Globe and Mail about a woman who gave her husband wine laced with antifreeze. Later, she had him on the telephone as he drank it "so that he wouldn't seek medical attention for the effects of the poison, it and kept the conversation going." The article makes no mention of domestic violence but in court there were several examples of the abusive and hateful behavior of his wife.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/03/2128249.shtml

The Men's Health Campaign Begins - Please Help Out!

Scott · 4 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett and the Men's Health America team have now begun an action-oriented campaign to establish an Office of Men's Health at the DHHS (Department of Health and Human Services). Join the MHA list now and you'll receive daily e-mails with action items to take part in. The MHA campaigns are very well laid out and have proven their effectiveness in the past. If you want to make a difference in men's lives, do this! As Ed writes, "If a man's life isn't worth fighting for, then what's worth fighting for? This is our duty. We're starting Sunday. Are you ready?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/04/1443223.shtml

"Roe" In Roe v. Wade Lied About Rape, Was Used By Attorneys

Scott · 4 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This really eye opening story in WorldNetDaily is about Norma McCorvey, the "Roe" in the Roe v. Wade Abortion case. It outlines many surprising and disturbing facts about her life, including that she has never had an abortion, nor does she support abortion any more, that she lied about being raped and was used callously by her attorneys, and that she attempted suicide and resents many of the pro-abortion feminists. She says "Plain and simple, I was used. I was a nobody to [the attorneys]. They only needed a pregnant woman to use for their case, and that is it. They cared, not about me, but only about legalizing abortion. Even after the case, I was never respected - probably because I was not an ivy-league educated, liberal feminist like they were...My experience with pro-abortion leaders is that they are snobs."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/04/1433214.shtml

The Crisis Of Fatherhood

Scott · 5 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Stephen Baskerville wrote an excellent general interest article about the state of fatherhood and the real problems behind fatherless children (the courts and uncooperative mothers). The Washington Post article can be read here.
"Most of the absent fathers our leaders excoriate so mercilessly are kept away not by high-powered, globetrotting careers but by court orders. Contrary to public perceptions (and government public relations), very few fathers voluntarily abandon their children, and no scientific evidence has ever been adduced to show that they do."
Source: Washington Post [newspaper]

Title: The Real Crisis of Fatherhood

Author: Stephen Baskerville

Date: February 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/05/034237.shtml

Interview with Greg Bishop on his program "Boot Camp for New Dads"

Scott · 5 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Doctor_Damage writes "ABCNews conducted this interview with Greg Bishop who created the "Boot Camp For New Dads" program. Gregs remarks "...we are swamped just trying to meet the demands from dads. There are alternatives for women in the form of many groups after the birth where new moms can gather and exchange information. And from my office window I often see up 30 moms with strollers on their way to just such class." Given the plethora of facilities for new moms to come to terms with the new responsibilities and tasks that go with becoming a parent, programs such as this with men in mind seem like a remarkably sound idea. More information about the program can be found at www.newdads.com"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/05/1126206.shtml

Combating Male Suicides In Northern Ireland

Scott · 6 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry submitted this article from the UK Sunday Times about suicide prevention programs in Northern Ireland. As the suicide rate has increased, people are now viewing it as a social problem in need of education and prevention campaigns similar to drug abuse and other serious social ills. The article does mention the need to target young men specifically in their prevention programs, and offer resources to them. Hats off to the Times for helping to raise public awareness of this issue. Source: Sunday Times [UK newspaper]

Title: Ulster to tackle record male suicide rate

Author: Chris Ryder

Date: February 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/06/0041255.shtml

The Need for Choice for Men

Scott · 6 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tony put up a web site about the lies and manipulation he went through with an ex-girlfriend who frauded him into fatherhood. His story is a perfect example of the injustice done to men who have no recourse from being forced into paternity, and I can assure you his experience isn't all that uncommon. Please check out his site and drop him a note of support. He's particularly looking to contact others who have been in similar situations.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/06/0050217.shtml

Man Attempts to Induce Miscarriage

Scott · 7 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

While this action is NOT TO BE TOLERATED OR CONDONED in any way whatsoever, it makes one wonder how things would be different if men did have reproductive choice - would there be any motive to do this? As the title suggests, a man had surreptitiously inserted pills into his girlfriend's vagina to induce a miscarriage when he discovered she was pregnant. And with the legality of new oral drugs such as RU-486, the potential for inducing abortions and/or miscarriages in women by their lovers is very real. The news story from Hartford Courant can be read here. Source: The Hartford Courant [newspaper]

Title: Woman Alleges Man Attempted To Abort Fetus

Author: Eric Rich

Date: January 10, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/06/019253.shtml

Salon Interview with Warren Farrell

Adam · 7 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Salon.com just did an interview with Warren Farrell about his new book Father And Child Reunion to give us a small preview of what to expect in the book. While the interviewer did seem a bit condescending at times, it's a great personalized insight into Warren and his life, so click here to read it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/06/1755246.shtml

Men Who Refuse Paternity Tests Will Be Assumed the Father

Scott · 7 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The UK Times reports that a new parenting law will by default presume that a man declared the father of a child by the mother is indeed the father if he refuses to take a DNA paternity test. This is a very serious civil liberties issue, as we should all have the ability to safegaurd our genetic information, and not relinquish that right simply because a person names you as the father. The potential for misuse of this law is staggering. Click here to read the article. Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: DNA threat to absentee fathers

Author: Melissa Kite

Date: February 6, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/07/1319219.shtml

Lynne Cheney, Anti-feminist Second Lady?

Scott · 7 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron writes "An article about Lynne Cheney in the New York Times (requires free subscription) compares her to Hilary Clinton as a political wife who may have considerable influence on the administration. She is a member of the Independent Women's Forum and although she's kept a pretty low profile so far didn't give the usual answer that so many public women opposed to feminism give when asked about feminism ("That depends what you mean by feminism"). Here's a quote from the article: "Asked if she considers herself a feminist, Mrs. Cheney, who is 59, said: 'In the early days I certainly did, though now that's identified with a political philosophy I don't agree with. I'm pro-life and think Clarence Thomas is a wonderful justice.'"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/07/0056255.shtml

Double Standards in Workplace Discrimination Law?

Scott · 8 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron writes *"An article from the New York Times (free sub required) tells the story of a male gynecologist who was fired because of his sex. Women are demanding female gynecologists. Behind the usual male bashing put-downs the story describes a highly discriminatory field of medicine. What I found especially interesting was the legal angle. Apparently the issue "tests the limits of a longstanding tenet of employment law, namely, that customer preferences generally do not justify discrimination in hiring or employment". Well as you could expect the rules seem to have changed when the customer wants women, not men. It seems anti-male bias is routine in this field where female-only practices openly discriminate. Also interesting to see that the preference for female gynecologists is largely limited to middle class women. Overall a sympathetic article (see the last paragraph)."*

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/08/0416237.shtml

Think Before Using 911 for a Domestic violence Call

Scott · 8 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Charles E. Corry from the DV Against Men - Colorado group wrote up an informative article about what happens when 911 is called during a domestic dispute, and why this shouldn't be used (by either party) even if one is already in extreme danger. Dr. Corry believes that calling 911 can make the situation worse and has irrevocable consequences for both parties involved. Click "Read More" below to read this article.

Is A Nuclear Weapon Really Needed in a Domestic Argument?

Think before using 911 for a domestic violence call

by Charles E. Corry, Ph.D., F.G.S.A.

The 911 emergency telephone service is a lifeline and should be used in that fashion. Unfortunately, but certainly understandable from a human perspective, it is used as well for everything from a missing dog to a cat up a tree, as well as in domestic arguments.

A woman in a domestic situation should think, however unlikely it is she is going to do that in the heat of an argument, whether she needs a nuclear attack to stop her partner, or whether she should just walk away for awhile until things cool off.
In an intimate relationship, dialing 911 is the equivalent of a nuclear attack. It may be needed but the same safeguards we use to prevent an accidental missile launch should be considered before the 911 call is made.

Once launched, there is no going back under current law. A simple phone call can lead to a lifetime of regret, misery for the children, and extreme financial hardship. And, as in any nuclear attack, the level of violence may well increase. Like a missile launch, police response isn't instantaneous, but they cannot be recalled. It will take the police anywhere from 15 to 45 minutes, or longer, to respond. If real, immediate danger exists from one's partner, it is probably better for a person to leave if they can.

If a police response is necessary, it is certainly safer to call them at a distance from the danger. No rational person would step inside a burning building to call 911 about a fire. However, if a person can't get out, then there is the consideration of whether calling 911 will further enrage the partner and result in greater danger before the police can arrive. The current laws requiring mandatory arrest and "no drop" have been found to increase the level of violence in three out of seven cities studied.

The problem is that people don't behave rationally when dealing with an intimate partner,. particularly if there is a history of abuse in the relationship. However, if there is such a history of abuse, a person can plan a response to the next occurrence. It is likely that calling 911 isn't the best solution a person can come up with to deal with intimate partner violence and abuse.

In a November 12, 2000, editorial in the Denver Post, Ms. Billie Stanton examined the "mandatory arrest" policy that has been in effect in Denver since 1984. She found that most domestic violence calls do not result in an arrest because police don't find probable cause of a crime when they arrive. Ms. Stanton states that Denver police got 16,080 domestic violence calls from October 1, 1999, through September 30, 2000, but made only 4,619 arrests in those cases. She claims the same has held true in other jurisdictions in Colorado in spite of the state law. Thus, when police are called there is only about a 30% chance that an arrest will be made even under the current draconian laws.

There are many possible explanations for such a low arrest rate but a lifeline isn't any good if all the lifebuoys have already been thrown over the side. Though a woman is hardly likely to be prosecuted for false reporting, making an unjustified nuclear attack on one's partner is very likely to end the relationship, and it isn't likely the termination is going to be amicable.

Use 911 if you really need it, but the odds are that by placing the call to 911, it isn't going to solve your immediate problem, and it may well make the situation worse. As with a nuclear attack, it is Mutually Assured Destruction (MAD) in most cases. What happens if the police do make an arrest? Based on FY 1997-1998 figures, 12,166 domestic violence cases were filed in Colorado state courts as a class 6 felony or lower. About 4,331 people were convicted, or 36% of those charged. It is estimated that the very large majority of those convicted pled guilty or no contest. Thus, an individual has a very substantial chance of winning if they take their case to trial. If a person obtains competent counsel, and the facts support their case, it is estimated that an individual has a better than 90% chance of acquittal in a jury trial on charges involving domestic violence.

Using the figures above, for 1997-1998 there were approximately 40,000 calls to 911 in Colorado concerning domestic violence. In response to these calls ~12,000 arrests were made, and ~4,300 people, mostly men, were convicted. There is thus about a 10% chance a call to 911 will result in a domestic violence conviction. If the person arrested can afford competent counsel, and takes the case to a jury, the odds of conviction after a 911 call are probably less than 1%.

Conversely, it is estimated that 80% to 90% of the time a call to 911 leads to a breakup of the relationship, though it may be as low as only half the time, and the breakup may not occur immediately after the first call. As a result of these calls we estimate that between 32,000 and 36,000 intimate relationships ended in that year, resulting in broken homes, acrimony, heartbroken men, women and, especially, children as a result of what may have been a reflexive moment of anger or panic.

Lawyers, courts, and domestic violence and divorce industries thrive in these circumstances, but the individuals involved are destroyed. Mutually assured destruction is no saner in an intimate relationship than between nations. Is a nuclear weapon really what is needed in a domestic argument?

Think before you use 911 for a domestic violence call!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/08/1810225.shtml

Doctors Protest Unreasonable Regulations on Treating Impotence

Scott · 9 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This UK Telegraph article was submitted by AngryHarry, and discusses the obstacles many men with erectile dysfunction have to deal with in order to obtain treatment. As the article says, "we should not lightly dismiss the significance of the condition by regarding it as trivial, or unimportant or a bit of a joke." Currently, drugs such as Viagra can only be administered in Britain to men with certain medical conditions, and doctors are lobbying to allow the administration of these treatments on the grounds of clinical need. Source: The Telegraph [UK newspaper]

Title: Doctors demand end to rules on impotence care

Author: Celia Hall

Date: February 8, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/09/0230239.shtml

Suicide Rate Extremely High at MIT

Scott · 9 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This is a long, informative article from the Boston Globe about the alarmingly high suicide rate for students at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Comparisons were made with several other top engineering schools and MIT had the highest suicide rate overall. Many of the deaths, of course, are men. There is an effort to increase counseling services at MIT and to try and do more to prevent suicide. Certainly, the stress and pressure on men to perform and achieve is very prevalent at such a prestigious school, and I also hope that steps will be taken at the other schools listed in the article which had disturbingly high suicide rates. Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: 11 years, 11 suicides

Author: Patrick Healy

Date: February 5, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/09/1529244.shtml

University Lies About Rape to Get $543,000

Scott · 9 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC submitted a link to this article from the Sacramento Bee. The article describes how the University of California at Davis obtained a U.S. Dept. of Justice grant for over half a million dollars to fight sexual assault on campus. The grant application stated that over 700 rapes or attempted rapes happen each year at UCD, but public data shows that one rape occurred there between 1995 and 1998. This discrepancy, of course, is the cause of much controversy, and amazingly, the counsel for the University is trying to claim that since rapes are so underreported, that the 700 figure is still accurate!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/09/1857229.shtml

Violence Against Women Day

Scott · 10 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

E Zielin writes "From the More Wild Exaggerations and Misandrist Propaganda Dept: An effort by feminists across the country to transform Valentine's Day, a millennia-old celebration of romance and friendship, into a "Violence Against Women Day" - a day of resentment against men. Click here for the story." Thanks also to Ed Bartlett for submitting this.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/10/023218.shtml

Rosie O'Donnell Promotes Fatherless Families

Scott · 10 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC sent in another story, this one about Rosie O'Donnell, an outspoken talk show host who has recently started helping adoption agencies give children to celebrity single mothers. And it's specifically for single mothers, married ones or single fathers she will not work with. The second half of the article attempts to refute O'Donnell's work, and demonstrate that she will be directly harming children, especially young boys, by promoting fatherless families. The article is from WorldNetDaily News.Source: WorldNetDaily [web edition news site]

Title: Rosie O'Donnell's baby factory

Author: Debbie Schlussel

Date: February 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/10/1651223.shtml

Sex Abuse by Women

Scott · 10 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "This Ottawa Sun report is an article about how women can be sex offenders and not always the victims as feminists would have us believe." From the article: "The criminal acts of pedophiles are similar, whether it is committed by a female or male perpetrator...Rick Goodwin, director of The Men's Project counseling program for male survivors of sexual abuse, agrees that female offenders tend to go unnoticed. He calls sex abuse by women the 'invisible crime.' There is usually no physical evidence; cases go unreported; allegations aren't believed or can't be proven." While the article doesn't include much in the way of statistics, it is an encouraging break from the silence which is too often heard on this important issue. Source: Ottawa Sun [newspaper]

Title: Sex abuse by women: The 'invisible crime'

Author: Kathleen Harris

Date: February 10, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/10/1658239.shtml

Prayer Circle for Men in Crisis

Scott · 11 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "
Trudy Mackay, wife of Rev. Laughlin Mackay of Arizona announced today the formation of a prayer circle to aid men in crisis. This global effort will link e-mail volunteers from many countries to offer prayers for men in cases of domestic violence, divorce and other situations. To request prayers e-mail desertlight@angelfire.com with the word Request in the Subject line. Requests will be kept entirely confidential and e-mail addresses will not be used for any other purpose. More volunteers are also needed! For more information, send an e-mail to desertlight@angelfire.com with the words Volunteer Info in the subject line." Thanks for this information, Trudy! I know many men who will appreciate this kind of spiritual support network.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/10/172218.shtml

Man Has Pregnant Girlfriend Beaten to Kill Fetus

Scott · 11 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC writes "Erik Bullock, 30, received an automatic sentence of life in prison in addition to a 20 year sentence for hiring others to beat his girlfriend to kill her fetus. She lived, but the "choice" was stillborn. The case was the first brought under Arkansas' Fetal Protection Act. The 1999 law allows murder charges if a fetus in at least the 12th week of gestation dies as a result of a violent crime. The prosecutor described the defendant as a selfish person, but of course, not the mother. DNA TESTS LATER SHOWED THAT BULLOCK WAS NOT THE FATHER OF THE CHOICE, er, child. Click here to read the article." This is yet more disturbing news which attests to the despair and resentment of men who are forced into paternity - and in this case, the child wasn't even his! This is NOT the way to lobby for male reproductive rights, but I feel it's important to report on these kinds of events to force people to see what they might otherwise be able to ignore. Source: Fox News [television, also web site]

Title: Man Who Ordered Fetus Killed Gets Life in Prison

Author: Melissa Nelson

Date: February 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/11/1340257.shtml

Internet Privacy Issues

Scott · 12 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The New York Times (free registration required) had an insightful article about making metaphors for the current crisis of on-line privacy issues. Rather than describing it in terms of "Big Brother" (from the novel 1984), Carl Kaplan believes that Kafka's The Trial does a better job explaining the consequences of ignoring the need for privacy standards on-line. It's a good read, and relevant to all readers of Mensactivism.org. To drive the point in a bit further is news that Michigan state is considering a law that will require local ISPs to register their customers' e-mail addresses with a valid phone or credit card number, to ease law enforcement tracking of users based on their activity on-line.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/11/2012244.shtml

Full Scholarships for Black Male Teachers

Scott · 12 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A short blurb in a recent issue of Time magazine caught my attention - in an attempt to increase the number of black male teachers in inner-city schools, three historically black colleges in South Carolina will be offering full tuition scholarships to male students. The catch is they must work for a minimum of four years in the state after they graduate. This sounds like a much needed incentive to get more male role models in public schools as teachers. Source: Time [magazine]

Title: Someone to Call "Sir"

Author: Desa Philadelphia

Date: February 12, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/11/2237204.shtml

Elderly Men Most at Risk from Depression

Scott · 13 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Australia's Daily Telegraph reports that a study was done examining why some elderly men kill themselves, and found that large numbers of them were depressed and were not receiving treatment for depression. "Prof Snowdon's research included reading the notes left by 41 per cent of the suicides and interviewing friends and relatives. Many of the suicide notes were angry and most reflected serious depression, he said." No mention was made as to what could be done to help prevent this from happening. Source: The Daily Telegraph [Australian newspaper]

Title: Elderly men most at risk from depression

Author: unknown

Date: February 8, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/12/2027207.shtml

Short Article on Male Victims of Rape

Scott · 13 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This short, fairly superficial transcript from a news program on Australia's ABC network mentions the existence of male rape victims, and the lack of support services for them, but that's about it. There was no comment about what kinds of circumstances male rape occurs (for example, by exposing the high incidence of prison rape), and the woman being interviewed claims that the court system is "patriarchal" and this discourages men from coming forward. So while I wouldn't describe this as progress, it is noteworthy in that something was at least said about male rape, rather than nothing.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/12/2037212.shtml

New Rules Threaten Gender Neutral Domestic Violence Treatment Program

Scott · 13 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Dave Maupin from the Family Violence Prevention Services program in North Carolina wrote in and wanted to ask for help to fight new domestic violence legislation. The law will effectively shut out FVPS from taking on clients referred to them by the courts - because compliance with the new rules would require them to be approved and monitored by politically motivated domestic violence groups. Click "Read More" below to read his message and information regarding the new legislation which will end up harming men, women, and children seeking to overcome family violence.

Dear Sir/Madam:

I am a psychologist, marriage and family therapist, and founder/director of a private, non-profit family violence prevention and treatment services program that has been in operation for seventeen years and that serves families in western North Carolina. We provide separate professional counseling groups for men, women, and children. We also offer couples counseling for intact couples who have completed the domestic violence component of our program, and a violence prevention curriculum in the schools (kindergarten through third grade).

I am writing to you concerning a move by the North Carolina Coalition Against Domestic Violence and other victim advocate groups to legislate standards for abuser treatment programs. Last October, "temporary rules" were distributed to all programs in the state that provide counseling for abusers. For a copy of these rules, please go the NC Domestic Violence Commission website (http://www.doa.state.nc.us/doa/dvc/abuser.htm).

It is the intent of these groups to have the state legislature make these rules permanent in this years' legislative session which began several weeks ago. As a professional counseling program, serving families in which there is violence, we cannot comply with many of the rules and, as a result, are at risk of losing our program and nearly twenty years of effective violence prevention and treatment. (Those programs that are not "approved" will be denied court-referred clients. That is the population our program is most effective with, and represents 75% of our caseload).

In the past few weeks we have gone to the state capital to meet with two groups of legislators who were willing to hear our concerns about the appropriateness of the rules for family centered programs like ours. We clearly have the ear of some of the legislators who want to help us. At the first meeting, we presented our concerns unopposed to fifteen legislators representing the six counties where our staff reside.

At our second meeting with legislators this past Wednesday, the opposition was out in force in defense or their anti-family, anti-professional, anti-male rules. The executive director of the NC Coalition Against Domestic Violence proceeded to trash most of the points we had made the previous week. It was unsettling for me and I have known who these people are and how they operate for many years. At the very least, it must have been confusing to some of the legislators who are probably wondering whom to believe.

If you would like to help, I have additional information that I could fax you for your review. Also, I can answer any questions you may have about our program, its services, and our endless struggle against these radical feminist groups. I believe your involvement could help focus the legislators on the need to adopt more inclusive, less restrictive, family friendly standards for men's treatment programs in North Carolina.

Thank you for your help.

Dave Maupin

Family Violence Prevention Services

Dave also sent me the following, which is what he told the legislative council at their first meeting:

Legislative Meeting, Raleigh, NC - 1/30/01

Thank you all for coming. My name is Dave Maupin. I'm program director for Family Violence Prevention Services, a private, non-profit, violence prevention and treatment services program in Alexander and Iredell counties.

Each of you should have a manila envelope of materials relevant to today's meeting. You will find a description of our services, some of our effectiveness measures, letters of endorsement, a copy of a recent national study by the US Dept. of Justice on intimate partner violence, and a paper on Standards for Abuser Intervention from the state of Maryland.

First, I would like to introduce some of our staff who have taken time off from their day jobs to come to Raleigh today to meet with you.

Greg LeTourneau - Men's program director

Annette Beam - Women's program director

Yvette Smith - Children's program director

Frances Boerema - Couple's group therapist

Pat Myers - a member of the Executive Committee of our Board

In July of last years' Short Session, legislation was passed that gave the NC Council for Women authority to "approve" abuser treatment programs. Only those programs that are "approved" may receive domestic violence counseling referrals from the courts.

Last October, the Council for Women distributed fourteen pages of "temporary rules" to all domestic violence programs in the state known to provide counseling services for male abusers. Program directors were told that public hearings on these rules would be scheduled at locations across the state for late November and early December but none were ever held.

In December, applications for approval were sent out to all providers. We completed our application and returned it to the Council for Women, even though we had serious concerns. The application was based almost entirely on the "temporary rules" and was not relevant to professional counseling models such as ours. Our concerns were similar to other professional counseling programs across the state whose directors I have spoken with: We were being told whom we could counsel, how we could counsel, when and where we could counsel, and we were particularly uncomfortable with the thought of employees from the Council for Women having free and open access to confidential client records.

Nevertheless, it was made clear that final "approval" would be based on strict compliance with the "temporary rules", and that our program, and others like us would no longer be permitted to provide the kinds of domestic violence counseling services through the courts which we know to be needed and effective.

Nearly twenty years ago, we discovered that, when there is domestic violence, most women and men want to maintain their relationships together when at all possible, We developed a family intervention approach that is effective at stopping violence while keeping families intact. Today, other domestic violence programs in North Carolina are also working with families and see a growing need to provide family-based services in this area.

The CARE Domestic Violence Program which operates out of the Department of Social Services in Cumberland County, and the Family Services program of Gaston County are two such programs. The Duke Endowment and other human service foundations in North Carolina have also recognized the importance of family intervention to solve family problems.

The Intensive Family Preservation Services program, adopted in 1999 by the NC Division of Social Services, is another example of the family intervention approach at the state level. Its mission is similar to our own: "To provide services designed to help families alleviate crises that might lead to out-of-home placement of children at imminent risk; maintain the safety of children in their own homes; and assist families in obtaining services and other supports necessary to address their multiple needs in a culturally sensitive manner."

The "rules" issued by the Council for Women have been written from a perspective that is different from our own perspective and professional experience. The majority of court-referred cases we receive involve intact families where victims want to maintain their relationships and want to find ways to solve family problems without violence. We recognize the need for shelters for women and children in cases of extreme, life-threatening violence. And we do not want to take anything away from existing domestic violence programs, but we do want to have the chance to offer families a choice.

The Department of Justice study says that two-thirds of all intimate attacks are simple assault (pushing, shoving, yelling and name calling), the least serious form of violence studied. We are here today to ask you to help us amend these "temporary rules" or to at least postpone their implementation until they can be modified to reflect the needs of the larger domestic violence population and the services provided by programs such as ours. Input should be welcome from providers who have developed effective approaches to stopping violence in families, whether or not these approaches fit "the mold".

Domestic violence counseling programs should not all have to be the same, because all domestic violence is not the same, either in degree or in kind. We, and other service providers have learned that domestic violence is complicated and that a variety of treatment models are needed.

I've asked each of our staff to speak briefly about their work with families, and then we will do our best to answer your questions.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/12/2229228.shtml

A Tragic Tale of Child Abuse

Scott · 13 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett submitted this sickening story from TownHall.com. It's about a women who had a history of drug problems and abusing her husband who eventually received custody of her two young boys. Things were stable for a short while until she took off on a cross-country trip with the boys, along the way cutting and abusing the boys in ways that were blatantly obvious to those around her, but she was never reported to the police by people who saw her. I think it's also clear that this story simply could not have happened had the boys been traveling with their father, and it serves as a disturbing wake up call to end the prejudices about women's incapacity for violence. It's also a good time to ask yourself, what would you have done if you had seen this woman and her children in their physical state on a train?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/13/011218.shtml

Canadian Group Seeks to Outlaw Circumcision

Scott · 13 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The National Post printed this story about an organization, the Association for Genital Integrity, which trying to obtain funds to have non-therapeutic male circumcision legally recognized as sexual assault. The argument will rely on an equal protection reasoning, claiming that the current law is discriminatory because it outlaws female genital mutilation but ignores male genital mutilation (circumcision). Some religious groups are concerned about the legal challenge, but it is possible that a religious exemption could be made. Personally, I think the issue at stake is that infant boys have no choice in the matter - if they want to become circumcised when they're old enough to make the decision themselves, that's fine, but I believe they need the choice.Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Circumcision is against the Charter, group says

Author: Adrian Humphreys

Date: February 12, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/13/1740255.shtml

Eminem: As the Left Turns

Scott · 14 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tom Smith from the American Union of Men wrote up an interesting essay about Eminem, the rap star whose music is currently incredibly popular but which is also extremely vulgar and thus has caused quite a bit of controversy. Tom has been willing to put aside the prejudices about Eminem that the PC media has created and examined his music, and found a tremendous amount of angst related to men's issues (father loss, his own divorce problems, etc). If you're open minded, Tom's article is sure to introduce you to this rapper in a new light. Click "Read More" below for the complete article...

Eminem: As the Left Turns

By Tom Smith

I was "turned on to" Eminem when my daughter's fourteen year old friend asked me to cut her a CD of tunes off of Napster in late December 2000. Just out of curiosity I checked out the tunes she listed, one of them being "Stan" by Eminem. It was obvious from the first listening that we had here a new and fresh talent. I went on to check out the rest of his tunes and was blown away. While I struggled with the appropriateness of the music for young kids, it was clear that the social commentary was the most real and honest that I have heard for most of the past thirty years, with the exception of some rare punk tunes.

Not only was this guy Eminem giving voice to issues of substance, most of which fit what I saw as the crisis of American Men, but he was positioned in one of the strongest areas in the history of pop music; another crossover white guy exploiting a black genre. He rang the big bell of contemporary American social issues and at the same time assured himself a place in music history no matter what else he did.

I then got very curious and asked myself how this low life out of Detroit got where he is? Did he just stumble into it or was there something he knew and then exploited the situation? The first explanation was in the music form itself, rap music. I was in Attica in the mid seventies for pot and loved watching the black guys banter. This essentially is the roots of rap. I knew then that this was a special and precious indigenous American art form needing a vehicle. Five years later rap would come on the scene. A large part of Em's (Eminem) charm is the rap music itself and his skillful representation of it. Because of my jail experience and subsequent friendship with black men, I had developed an ear for this style of art. So I knew right off that Em was being true to it. But there was an added dynamic to the music he was making, and that was that he was 100% white which gave the music a whole other dimension. I also had an ear for how white males expressed themselves and Em was also true to that. You can especially hear it in his song "Guilty Conscience" that he does with Dr Dre (the Dee Barnes slapping part). In that segment he is rapping true to form but at the same time being his white guy self, very different from how black guys would do the same rap (more in your face and "edgy")

The next explanation that I came up with for his stellar performance was in his life at the time he was making the tunes. The first element was his early "hook up" and procreation...he knocked up his girlfriend and was trying to follow through responsibly. He got a lesson that many of us never get and those who do usually find out much later, and that was divorce with kids for a father in America. On top of that he was poor and saw in stark detail that no one gave a fuck about him or his fatherhood. On the contrary, he was actively oppressed by the very people who were supposed to be representing him, the democratic party with it's legions of blacks, feminists and gays. He gives voice to this in one of his songs when he laments about being criticized for doing rap and not being black and he says, "I'm white and don't exist" to the rest of the world. Then he adds he wants the whole world to kiss his big white ass. There's all kinds of other laments in his music about this and being a father with no support from the rest of society, some very touching and others humorous.

Also out of his experience at the time he was writing those tunes was the situation in pop music in the late nineties. Most of the nineties were dominated by female performers and the only male performers on the scene might as well have been females (Eddy Vedder, the "boy groups", etc). Even I was complaining at the time to my young pre-adolescent son that his male contemporaries were doing didley in pop music. I'm sure this situation didn't escape Em and he clearly makes jibes about it in his music. So his music and the inordinate amount of testosterone that it contains is in part most likely a response to that limp period in pop music.

But the main reasons Em (Marshall Mathers III) has done such wonderful work is thirty years of feminism and all the balless men he has seen around him in his twenty eight years of life. Any young man witnessing this debacle of American Manhood would have to be a fool if he didn't complain loudly. Yes, I know, most young American Men are fools when it comes to women and it isn't anything new. The only difference is that in past times men had some semblance of power, this is the only time in history where they not only have no power, but are actively ruled over by women (the feminist democratic party and those traditional traitors of men, the republicans).

Maybe now with the emergence of a bold, honest and talented American Man like Marshall Mathers the Third, we will see American Men begin to be reincarnated.

Tom Smith

The American Union of Men (AUM)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/13/2330238.shtml

Pro-Father Radio Program

Scott · 15 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kingsley Morse writes, "Jim Whinston [from the National Center for Men] has a pro-father radio show which is now available worldwide on the web via Real Audio. It's at www.kpsu.org from 6 - 7 PM PST on Thursdays." Click here for the direct link to the Real Audio feed.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/13/1748256.shtml

The Invisible Male Victims of Domestic Violence

Scott · 15 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I'm back - though I could use some sleep. :) The EastSideJournal printed a great story about the way men are systematically ignored in DV awareness campaigns, and points out some of the most prevalent (and false) statistics about DV. From the article: "For years, we have been told that domestic violence is a serious problem: it must not be tolerated in any form and every victim must be believed. Yet, countless victims of domestic violence are ignored by the system, dismissed as liars, and even charged as abusers. These victims have been hit, kicked, punched, bitten, choked, knifed, shot, run over with cars, and even set on fire. They are men."Source: East Side Journal [newspaper]

Title: Gender profiling prevalent in domestic violence

Author: Lisa Scott

Date: February 13, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/15/1726243.shtml

Congressmen Move to Create Office of Men's Health

Adam · 15 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Here's some news on how Randy Cunningham and James McDermott have been pushing for an Office of Men's Health, and the idea is gaining momentum as it's also being backed by the National Medical Association. However, as they remind us, "Both Congressmen stressed that the creation of an Office of Men's Health would not impinge on the funding or the status for the Office of Women's Health, which was created in 1990" it's a real shame they have to point this out, as it shows that we can never offer to help men without first deferring to women's concerns.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/14/2327250.shtml

First VMI Pregnant Cadet

Scott · 16 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC submitted this link to a news report that the Virginia Military Institute now has its first pregnant female cadet, and it has stirred up a lot of controversy. The Naval Academy policy states that "Pregnancy and parenthood impose significant responsibilities and demands upon midshipmen which are incompatible with service as midshipmen" but the woman (who was not identified in the article) was given three options for living quarters to accommodate her needs. Even women who have attended VMI gave disapproval of this situation, and feel she should either leave or be suspended during the pregnancy. One of them said "Cadets can accumulate demerits and wind up suspended essentially for being late for class and not shining their shoes, and yet this woman is far more irresponsible and gets 'almost preferential treatment.'"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/16/154239.shtml

Creativity - now a "Chick Thing?"

Scott · 16 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I've been meaning to post this for a few days now - Trudy Schuett, who has time and time again shown a great deal of compassion and understanding of men's issues, wrote an essay on Themestream about creativity and gender. Her thesis is that the two have no connection, and that people mistakenly believe women are more creative because they give birth. "Creativity comes from the spirit, not from DNA...It's not a chick thing, or a guy thing. In fact, it is precisely the thing that will get us all out of this mess of gender issues, of feminism and masculism and mutual hatred and distrust." Check it out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/16/195222.shtml

Deadbeat Dads Portrayed as Dogs

Scott · 17 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kathleen Parker's column in the Orlando Sentinel describes a campaign by Alabama to crack down on deadbeat dads. Ads were taken out in local newspapers which show pictures of deadbeat parents (only one of them, though, is a woman) with the title: "Lost Dogs: Have You Seen Us?" Although the ads are targeting the worst offenders, they still send a powerfully strong anti-male message, and some father's rights groups are planning lawsuits against the state for violating the civil rights of those depicted by the ads. Stuff like this really makes by blood start to boil. I wonder how many more steps can be taken to "beat dead" fathers who owe child support when absolutely nothing is done to ensure the money is actually spent on the child's needs? It just seems too one-sided. Source: Orlando Sentinel [newspaper]

Title: Alabama support law dogs dads

Author: Kathleen Parker

Date: February 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/16/2331234.shtml

An Enquiry Into the Adult Male Experience of Heterosexual Abuse

Adam · 17 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This is an excellent study about DV against men committed by women, written by Anne Lewis. The study examines many factors involved in DV against men (powerlessness, feeling trapped, etc.) and does so in a sympathetic way. However, the interviews with the abused men are the most haunting thing in the entire study, and such brutal honesty is hard to take, so don't read the study if you're depressed or feeling uneasy right now. And as Anne says "In giving abused men a voice and the opportunity to tell their stories in an atmosphere of trust, I went on a journey of discovery. As an abused person, I was giving myself a voice. The men's pain became my pain, their injustice my injustice, their anger my anger. I listened to myself as I listened to them, and in helping to free them, I freed myself. My inner processes were facilitated by the validation which I as a woman receive from society, and I sought to bring something of that hope and vision to the men whose stories I was privileged to share." Be certain that you read the study to learn for yourself.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/17/0027231.shtml

A Deadbeat Child Support Agency

Scott · 17 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC writes *"Despite the fact that he he was making weekly child support payments and had visited the support agency's offices twice recently, an Ohio county's child support agency claims that they couldn't find Charles Collins to give him a check for over $20,000 he overpaid. The agency is also trying to get $327,000 in unclaimed child support dollars to some 500 families. What do you bet that this is not an isolated incident? All those in favor of taking away the CS worker's driver's licenses and throwing them in jail, raise your right hand! And then click here for the story."*Source: The Plain Dealer [newspaper]

Title: Agency said it couldn't find man it owed money

Author: Andrea Simakis

Date: February 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/17/1638202.shtml

Ending the Battle of the Sexes

Scott · 18 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Claude Saint-Jarre sent me a link to an essay that blew me away with its quality and message. Elizabeth Herron and Aaron Kipnis have been collaborating to help end the war between the sexes, and this essay demonstrates that they are really willing to hear both sides of the story, and to validate both men and women while addressing gender issues. Please read this article, if nothing else the examples they have of men and women's complaints strikes a balance like I have never read before. If you're a fan of Warren Farrell, this will certainly interest you.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/17/2110215.shtml

Reproductive Rights News from Australia

Scott · 18 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Recently, we reported that tennis pro Boris Becker was frauded into fatherhood. He has recently changed his story and is now accepting paternity for the child. However, this Sydney Morning Herald article is one of a two-part series on men who are forced into paternity, and the first part deals with the legal issues surrounding "stealing someone's sperm." It is written by a woman who "During the 15 years I answered a Cleo advice column, I had many letters from women who were considering [tricking men into paternity] and wrote seeking my approval for staging a 'supposed accident.'" It's a really good article, and I can't wait to see the second part, on "Father's Choice."Source: Sydney Morning Herald [Australian newspaper]

Title: Whose sperm is it, anyway?

Author: unknown

Date: February 17, 2000

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/18/157241.shtml

On-line Prostate Cancer Support Group

Scott · 19 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

CNN had a health story on a new support group for men with prostate cancer. The group is called 2Against1 and New York Yankees manager Joe Torre, who has prostate cancer, endorses the site and says, "When a man is diagnosed, he needs someone thinking clearly...I found friends who had had it only after I went public a couple of years ago" The article is unique from one's I've read so far in that it also talks about the side effects of treatments and also how family members are affected by it. Source: CNN

Title: Prostate cancer support group forms online

Author: Michele Dula Baum

Date: February 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/18/1635249.shtml

Men Scarce in U.S. Colleges?

Scott · 19 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "This article at FoxNews.com describes the difficulties at Oberlin College which has a largely female population. The really disappointing thing is that the college administration is fearful of backlash from women's organizations should they actively recruit boys. Sexist statements from Clifford Adelman, senior research analyst with the U.S. Education Department ("Boys like to strut and make claims and tell everyone they are going to do something and then they don't do it") don't help much, but the article does make the point that getting men into college makes both the educational and social environments richer."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/19/0013211.shtml

Len Miskulin Ends Hunger Strike

Scott · 19 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

After SIXTY-THREE days of hunger striking to protest having his sons taken away from him in his divorce, Len Miskulin has decided to pursue other options than hunger striking. While I'm glad to hear Len will remain with us (he was willing to die this way), I am disappointed at the lack of activism that surrounded his work. This was no doubt due to the media gag order injunction that a UK judge upheld to prevent the local media from reporting on his situation. I would like to think, that if this had happened in the U.S, that there would be riots in the streets. But I'm not so sure anymore. Please drop Len a note of support at: jafp@talk21.com and wish him a speedy recovery to health. Len is currently unable to walk due to his starvation, and will need a few months to restore himself. To read Len's e-mail, click here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/18/1949250.shtml

Women Flirt Subconsciously?

Scott · 19 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An article from the Sydney Morning Herald discusses a study which showed that women tend to use flirting techniques when meeting a male stranger, and will not give any rejection signals until she has assessed him fully. I found this interesting because men are often blamed for misreading a woman's body language, and this suggests that there is good reason for it - because she will in fact use courtship signals from the start. I wouldn't read too much into the article, though - I'm not aware of too many other studies like this one.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/19/042221.shtml

DNA Fingerprinting Inventor Wants Massive UK Database of DNA

Scott · 20 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry submitted this article from the UK Independent, which states that the inventor of genetic fingerprinting, Sir Alec Jeffreys, believes that the benefits of collecting DNA information from everyone in the UK population would outweigh the drawbacks. Sir Jeffreys and I disagree. Genetic information is being linked to many kinds of diseases, and even mental illnesses and behaviors. Wouldn't it be convenient for the government to have access to this information once these traits are determined more precisely? Source: The Independent [UK newspaper]

Title: Discoverer of genetic fingerprinting calls for universal DNA testing

Author: Andrea Babbington

Date: February 18, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/20/021235.shtml

Father Sues for "Recovered Memory" Accusation Damages

Scott · 20 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry also pointed me to this story from the UK Sunday Times. It's about a father who is suing for damages after her daughter accused him of sexually abusing her after undergoing controversial "recovered memory" psychiatric treatment. "If successful, it could open the floodgates for compensation claims running into millions of pounds. The British False Memory Society has 1,400 people listed on its database who claim they have been falsely accused of sexual abuse after adult children 'recovered memories'." That is a lot of people. It will be interesting to see how this turns out. Source: The Sunday Times [UK newspaper]

Title: Father to sue NHS trust in sex abuse test case

Author: Sue Leonard

Date: February 18, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/20/028215.shtml

Demonizing Men in DV Campaigns

Scott · 20 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There was a letter (toward the bottom of the page) by Ed Bartlett in a recent issue of the Washington Times. It makes the point that men are constantly villified by women's groups in order to obtain more funding for women's causes, i.e. domestic violence legislation or funding. "Feminists have found that portraying women as the helpless victims of male battering is an extraordinarily powerful tool for provoking female anger and male guilt. The end result is to stereotype and scapegoat men...The vilification of men in the name of female liberation is frightening and needs to stop."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/20/032232.shtml

Warren Farrell and His Struggles

Scott · 21 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Elliot Zaret from TheGuyCode informed me of this article they had just posted on Warren Farrell. In it, an introduction to Farrell and his work is outlined, but what I found most interesting were the explanations of how Farrell has been blacklisted by his former colleagues (including people at N.O.W.), and the sinister techniques they have used to keep the media silent about him. It's an excellent read, and in another two weeks the site will post something about Father and Child Reunion and the importance of fathers.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/20/1518249.shtml

Australian Man Sues Ex-Wife for Paternity Fraud, Pain and Suffering

Scott · 21 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC submitted a link to this story from the Australian The Advertiser. It mentions that a man is suing his ex-wife for $400k after DNA tests showed that he is not the father of the two children he has paid child support for the past eight years. The man says he suffered "severe anxiety and depression" from the finding, and who can blame him? When such a fundamental fact of life such as the paternity of your children and fidelity of your wife are taken for granted for so long, pain and suffering must certainly result. But no doubt he will be mocked and disbelieved for his suffering. There is little compassion for fathers and men these days. Source: The Advertiser [Australian newspaper]

Title: Husband in $400,000 lawsuit over DNA tests

Author: Mark Dunn

Date: February 20, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/20/2110215.shtml

Child Support and Father Access

Scott · 21 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In part two of Arndt's series on male reproductive rights and the family courts, Arndt discusses the problems of getting access to one's children with a vindictive mother, and how blatantly obvious many women are in using the father for child support rather than for being a father. Acknowledgment is made of the unreasonable financial burden that child support can sometimes cause, and also stresses that many men still want access and are willing to pay support for children that aren't theirs. "It is all very well to say men shouldn't worry whether the children are theirs - but when they are confronted by a child-care system where men are required to pay far more than the actual costs of children and get little or no relief for costs of contact, you can hardly expect them to pay for children that are not theirs. Most step-parents value the relationship with their children and would be happy to pay to support them - provided it was a fair amount."Source: Sydney Morning Herald [Australian newspaper]

Title: Father's choice

Author: Bettina Arndt

Date: February 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/21/0024214.shtml

The Surrendered Wife

Scott · 21 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I received a short commentary from Bill Kuhl about the recent book and "movement", The Surrendered Wife. In short, the theory encourages women to submit to their husbands and let him be in charge. But is this really good for men or women? Read on for Bill's thoughts...The CBS Evening News on February 19 carried a segment on a new book entitled, "The Surrendered Wife." The book's author, Laura Doyle, states that women should, generally, give in to their husbands and stop trying to control them with criticism and constant nagging. Her book even argues that women should turn over control of the family's finances to their husbands. Although this sounds like it would be a very unpopular idea with most modern women, the book has actually sold very well - it landed on the New York Times Best Sellers' list the first week it was in bookstores. The CBS segment also featured a group of Dallas women who had formed a "Surrendered Circle Support Group," women who meet to discuss ways of "implementing the controversial ideas" from the book in to their lives.

However, the lighthearted tone of these women, and of the author herself, leads me to believe that this book is, indeed, no epiphany - women as a result of "The Surrendered Wife" will not come to realize the excesses of feminism or the many forms of discrimination against men. In fact, the book's author admits, "I'm not looking for any converts of any kind. I'm just saying this is what worked for me." I would speculate that many of Doyle's most ardent fans are actually upper middle class white women (all the women in the CBS report appeared to be) whose biggest nag is a little voice in the backs of their minds, repeating: "You know, if you keep coming down on him left and right, he's going to demand equality too and then you're going to be the one getting out of bed at 3AM to go check out the strange noise out back." I think you'll be likely to find this book on a lot more living room coffee tables than scholars' desks. Actually, the whole idea seems like nothing more than a new way to make money off of the battle between the sexes. Ho-hum.

Bill Kuhl

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/21/0030213.shtml

Feminists and Their Enemies

Scott · 22 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Along the same theme as the recent Warren Farrell article, this link submitted by Rand is about how feminism has taken over the liberal media and how challenges to this are so difficult to mount. Plenty of focus is given to Christina Hoff Sommers because she is one of the few that has been successful in doing so, and consequently is considered "Public Enemy Number One" by feminists. It's a very insightful article. Source: City Journal [magazine]

Title: Feminists and Their Enemies

Author: Harry Stein

Date: Autumn 2000 [Vol. 10, No. 4]

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/22/1513229.shtml

Woman Calls Ex-Boyfriend 1,000 Times per Day

Scott · 22 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Yahoo! news reports in this story that a woman from Hong Kong called her ex-boyfriend 1,000 times each day for three years. The man changed jobs and telephone numbers to get away from this psychotic woman, but eventually his new numbers were found out, and she began calling again, and making 500 faxes to him each day as well. When one day she showed up at his home to demand money from him, they got into a physical fight - and the man was arrested and carted away. This is from the "Oddly Enough" news on Yahoo!, but I feel the issue is more serious than this. This is often the kind of domestic violence that women inflict upon men - things which when taken individually don't seem harmful, but who could deny that this man was pushed over the edge by her behavior?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/22/1525218.shtml

Male-Bashing Domestic Violence 800 Number

Scott · 23 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "During the Grammy's, a commercial depicted a child listening as a man beat his wife in the background, then gave the number 1-800-END-ABUSE to call. When you call, you'll hear a message that talks about "men" beating up "the women they promise to love." If you've got a moment, leave them a message about the harm this slanted and biased message causes. How in the world do they get away with this?" Considering the enormous viewership of the Grammy Awards, this is doing incredible damage.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/23/0533246.shtml

Fathers are not Disposable

Scott · 23 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl submitted an article from the St. Lois Post-Dispatch about the way fathers are devalued in the media. The author, who once supported the portrayal of Murphy Brown in her TV sitcom to have a child on her own, has since changed his mind and strongly believes we are harming children by condoning the absence of fathers in families. "If I told you a mother was unimportant to a child's well-being, you'd look at me like I had two heads. Yet somehow, we have bought into a lie that says father is dispensable, that anything he brings to the table can be replicated by a determined single mother or, indeed, any loving person who happens to be around."Source: St. Lois Post-Dispatch [newspaper]

Title: Fathers again face familiar attacks on television

Author: Leonard Pitts, Jr.

Date: February 22, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/23/0531234.shtml

Men as "Success Objects"

Scott · 23 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I managed to get a biweekly editorial column in the UNH school newspaper about men's issues. You can read my first article, about how men are seen as "success objects" at this link. I hope to make use of the column to get a dialogue going about men's issues started at the university, and hopefully meet some people in support of men's rights. My articles will also be posted in the "Men in the Media" section of the new Massachusetts Coalition for Men web site, which is currently under development and will be unveiled soon.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/23/1553238.shtml

Men and Eating Disorders

Scott · 24 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Also in today's TNH, an article by Chris Godbout on male body image and eating disorders can be read at this link. Chris, myself and Peter Welch from the Health Ed. Dept. are working together on a presentation called Junk Male: Images of Men in Advertising which will be shown toward the end of March. This semester is looking to be a great one for awareness of men's issues at UNH!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/23/164249.shtml

L.A. Times Covers Barnes & Noble Campaign

Scott · 24 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes *"The Los Angeles Times covered my Barnes & Noble petition drive after I sent 1,000 signatures in. There are a few misquotes, and some things were left out, but I think the article was for the most part pretty well done and I'm happy with it. Click here to read it. I'll still continue to petition. Meanwhile, please don't hesitate to drop Barnes & Noble a line at customerrelations@bn.com."*Source: Los Angeles Times [newspaper]

Title: He's Seeking a New Chapter in Attitudes Toward Men

Author: Martin Miller

Date: February 22, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/24/013223.shtml

UCLA Daily Bruin Prints Article On Anti-Male Bias

Scott · 24 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The UCLA Daily Bruin printed my piece on discrimination against men in the Justice System. I had provided a plug to Mensactivism.org, but they didn't include it. They did, however, put the National Coalition of Free Men in there. Click here.
I'm working on forming a local chapter of the National Coalition of Free Men in Los Angeles. We really need some local grassroots activism. Please e-mail me if you live in the L.A. area or nearby, or if you know someone there who might be interested, and I'll include you in the invite for an initial meeting: Angelucc@2000.law.ucla.edu."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/24/1243207.shtml

Kathleen Parker on Paternity Fraud

Scott · 25 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kathleen Parker wrote a column for Town Hall which discusses the uncomfortable subject of paternity fraud. A man from Georgia has been trying to get a law passed that would allow victims of paternity fraud to absolve themselves of child support and relations with the child, if desired, and give fathers who dispute their paternity the legal right to having a DNA test. Parker's sympathy for both men and children in cases such as this is well balanced: "How can you suddenly stop loving a child for whom you've always been Dad? How can you abandon a child who needs you? These are tough questions and prompt emotions that interfere with one's usual impulse to fairness. But fair is fair, and the truth looks like this: The mother who lies about paternity is guilty of fraud and deserves condemnation at least equal to what we assign fathers who abandon their children. In no other imaginable scenario, meanwhile, do we punish victims of a false allegations."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/24/140249.shtml

Man Leaves Prison After 10 Years in False Accusation of Rape

Scott · 25 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Yahoo! News reported that Jimmy Williams of Ohio is receiving a new trial for the rape of a 12 year old girl, who is now a grown woman and has recanted the accusation. Williams has always maintained his innocence through the years, and will finally get to be with his 10 year old son that he has never been able to spend time with. It is possible that Williams could sue for $25k for each year he was imprisoned, for a total of $250,000. Imagine if that money could be put into an organization to lobby for the rights of accused men?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/24/189256.shtml

Proving Daniel Amneus Right

Adam · 25 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article describes one of the most hateful studies written about men I've ever come across, but it does have a redeeming feature. Namely, it proves that all the work of Daniel Amneus is true, in that the ghettos are the result of the Male Role having no stability, where he can kicked out of family life at any second for displeasing mom. Be certain that you read Amneaus' works online, including The Garbage Generation and download The Case for Father Custody in Adobe PDF format to read the truth for yourself - they're "must read" material for anyone in the mens/fathers movement.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/25/1611259.shtml

Debbie Schlussel Named Enemy No. 1 by Ms. Magazine

Scott · 26 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Debbie Schlussel wrote an interesting column for WorldNetDaily where she talks about how Ms. Magazine has named her "Enemy No. 1" for being a popular female commentator on conservative issues. "Clearly, Ms. is out of touch with the modern world. I know, because as a young, Gen-X, professional, single woman, I'm their target audience...And I'm not listening." It's good to see women who are willing to take the modern feminist movement to task for claiming to represent them.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/26/1220243.shtml

Austrian Minister Slammed for Proposing Men's Dept.

Scott · 27 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Jon writes "Good news for Austrian men - Yahoo! News (through Reuters) posted this article in their Oddly Enough section about a new Men's Department in the Austrian government's Social Affairs Ministry. Still think that the media isn't biased against men? Notice how Herbert Haupt, the man proposing the department, is described as "a member of the far-right," and his detractors are described as merely "opposition." At least Yahoo! News doesn't judge whether it's odd that the department is being created or odd that critics are so violent in their opposition..."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/26/1955245.shtml

Interesting Article By Gay Men's Activist

Scott · 27 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "Steve Gaskill is an activist in the gay black male community who joined the Barnes & Noble campaign. The sexually-liberating experience he describes in this article can be, in my opinion, analogous to even the non-sexual bond that straight men feel upon sharing male experiences or discovering a common interest in men's issues. I just thought I'd share it."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/27/1528242.shtml

Response To Marc's Daily Bruin Article

Scott · 27 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "For the first time, someone actually responded to me in the Daily Bruin. This one attacks the National Coalition of Free Men and makes some very weak and tired arguments about males being in power (as though men in government meant men's issues were being addressed). I enjoyed this one. Just thought I'd post it." I thought the article was interesting in that the arguments were transparent - there was little dishonesty in this person's views, they are simply based on a feminist portrayal of reality which has never truly considered men's side of the story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/27/1533221.shtml

NIH Makes Major Retractions of Gender Research Disparities

Scott · 28 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett of Men's Health America announced today that the NIH has issued three letters retracting claims they made that women were neglected in medical research. You can read the MHA press release here. If anyone challenges you when you claim that gender health research disparities have not been harmful to women, this information will certainly be very useful. Now we must go another step and have it demonstrated that the research still isn't equal, and that men are in need of "catching up."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/27/1554220.shtml

Challenging Child Abuse Myths - Except Those About Gender

Scott · 28 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Australia's The Age printed a story whose apparent purpose is to shatter myths about child abuse, including the misperception that most child abuse is committed by strangers. The article sounds the alarm that child abuse and neglect barely register on most people's minds as a serious, widespread social problem. I also noticed that there was absolutely NO mention about the prevalence of abuse according to gender. No doubt most people who read the article will think that it is men who are the primary abusers of children, when in fact this is not the case. Perhaps the author assumes we can only deal with a couple myths being shattered at a time. Click here for the story. Source: The Age [Australian newspaper]

Title: Child abuse society's hidden scar

Author: Julie-Anne Davies

Date: February 21, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/28/140202.shtml

Office of Men's Health in the News

Scott · 28 February 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Washington Post printed an article which outlines the current legislation to establish an Office of Men's Health at DHHS. Read it here. The article mentions that much of the 15.5M budget that the Office of Women's Health has was used for public health awareness, and that the establishment of one for Men's Health could go a long way in changing stereotypes about men and health care. Source: The Washington Post [newspaper]

Title: It's a Guy Thing

Author: Marc Borbely

Date: February 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/28/1517204.shtml

Choice for Men Web Site Given Facelift

Scott · 1 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kingsley Morse has announced that his C4M web site, long deemed the main web site of the male reproductive rights movement, has been completely redone. They have a new redirection domain: www.choiceformen.com. Check out the web site and be sure to send Kingsley your comments. The web site changes were long overdue but well worth the wait!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/28/2152239.shtml

Long Live Men? Let's Hope So

Scott · 1 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Al Knight wrote a great column for the Denver Post, outlining the current crisis in men's health. Lots of stats are given and Knight's theory of why the legislation for the Office of Men's Health is going to be well received is that Cunningham has obtained the support of several female legislators, and as he writes "Clever move. If women are for the bill, who would have the nerve to be against it?" Thanks to Not PC for submitting the link. Source: Denver Post [newspaper]

Title: Long live men?

Author: Al Knight

Date: February 28, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/02/28/2247254.shtml

Heather Mercer: Not A Heroine

Scott · 2 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I came across this story from the Independent Women's Forum about Heather Mercer, the female kicker who was cut from Duke's football team after showing poor performance in practice. She later sued and won $2M from the university. While hailed as a heroine in some circles, Kimberly Schuld points out that she in fact has made things worse for aspiring female athletes. In retrospect, the Duke coach could have refused to give her a chance outright (this exception is allowed in contact sports), and thus would have been safe from a lawsuit. But by giving women a chance in male contact sports, it is now apparent that schools are opening themselves up to legal liabilities. The result: no one will want to take that risk and women will be denied the chance to try out for male contact sport teams. Keywords: Title IX

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/02/0252209.shtml

Acknowledging Male Victims of Sexual Abuse

Scott · 2 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl writes, "Greg Freeman, who is quite popular locally (he also has a local TV show and a radio show) has done an article on an institute devoted to helping male victims of sexual abuse. The article is well written and very favorable to our cause. The man whom Freeman interviews, the director of the institute, I am almost positive is the same guy who started a men's issues bulletin board at Washington University's School of Social Work (a highly acclaimed MSW program). I strongly encourage readers to e-mail Freeman at: gfreeman@post-dispatch.com and thank him. Like I suggested above, Freeman has a lot of clout at least in this area.Source: St. Lois Post-Dispatch [newspaper]

Title: Institute seeks to help men who were victimized

Author: Greg Freeman

Date: March 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/02/036254.shtml

Female Violence in Night Clubs

Scott · 2 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Jerry Boggs from NCFM submitted this piece about women's violence in night clubs reported on by the Toronto Sun. The article explains how problems of violence used to be mostly with male patrons, but has significantly shifted to female-on-female incidents. Many of them are even over a man! "'Women rule this world,' says the club's (male) night manager wryly. 'It's not just violence. There's unabashed sexual aggression.'" Note: article has been archived on the Toronto Sun web site, and is accessible for a fee. Click "Read More" below for reference information to retrieve the article if needed. Source: Toronto Sun [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Female aggression on the rise

Author: Jean Sonmor

Date: March 2, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/02/1957237.shtml

MIT Faculty Bias Report Unfounded

Scott · 3 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC submitted a link to this Christian Science Monitor story about a recent flurry of controversy over MIT's unequal treatment of female faculty. As it turns out, there was no evidence to support the claims: "Check out the study yourself at MIT's website. You will notice an astonishing fact: MIT's study is innocent of evidence of gender discrimination. Not an iota of data is offered to show that MIT treated its female faculty any differently from its male faculty." The story demonstrates how quickly the media and public are willing to believe without question any claims of discrimination against women to the point that facts are no longer checked. The woman who made these claims obtained an enormous grant from the Ford Foundation and many other workplace 'perks' from MIT. Source: Christian Science Monitor

Title: False solution on gender

Author: Judith Kleinfeld

Date: February 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/03/1111247.shtml

Jane Fonda in the News

Scott · 4 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Jim Castelli submitted this link from the Boston Globe and writes, "*Jane Fonda continues the egocentric ways that have endeared her to millions of men since the Vietnam War. Contributing $12.5 million dollars to Harvard to create a center on gender education, Ms. Fonda asserts that for too long "she had fashioned her opinions and image to make men happy" because of her low self esteem. Anyone who remembers "Hanoi Jane" from the Vietnam War will have a difficult time accepting her argument. Anyone who has the temerity to go to North Vietam during the height of the Vietnam War and essentially thumb her nose at her country and all the men who were dying in Vietnam is not motivated by a desire to please men. Ms. Fonda now as always suffers from an ego that expects men to worship her beauty and her opinions without question. From Barbarella, to Vietnam, to her fitness videos, to her marriage to Ted Turner, Ms Fonda suffers not from low self esteem but from an exagerrated view of her own importance.*"Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: Making over an image

Author: Patrick Healy

Date: March 3, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/03/1839200.shtml

Choice for Men Hits Snag in Georgia

Scott · 4 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I received this depressing news from Kingsley Morse: "The Supreme Court in the U.S. state of Georgia has legalized discrimination! In Palmer v. Bertrand, Georgia's highest court has made men second class citizens by ruling that it's OK to protect women's family planning, but not men's. The man in this case is going to ask the court to reconsider, and if it won't, he intends to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court. In a related move, the U.S. based National Center for Men has also thoroughly updated it's internet efforts. You can help too." Click "Read More" below to view the rest of his message, and to find out what you can do to help.Men have been treated as an under class without reproductive rights since Roe v. Wade in 1973, despite the Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee of "equal protection". The National Center for Men takes the position that forcing only men into parenthood discriminates, is demeaning and offensive to the basic principles of human dignity. Ironically, the Georgia Supreme Court's ruling is also counter to the trend of protecting men's family planning in that state's own legislature, which recently introduced HB369 to stop non-paternity fraud.

Unfortunately, although we believe in the principles of his case, his attorney, NCM's executive director and I all expect that he has little chance of getting any relief. It seems to me that we need to foster more of a public discourse about men's reproductive rights before we can realistically expect the U.S. Supreme Court to even consider a case like this. Toward that end, the National Center for Men is fostering public debate by expanding its internet presence:

1.) Our improved web site (www.choiceformen.com) is now officially up and running. It has a.) news,

b.) case law,

c.) over 10,000 emails,

d.) a search engine,

e.) a click-able flowchart to help paternity suit defendants,

f.) a survey and g.) much more.

2.) The digest version of the messages submitted to the Legalize Choice for Men email list (a.k.a. lc4m-d) is being forwarded to usenet.

Publicity from the Georgia case would also foster public debate and the man involved told me that he'll reconsider going public once he knows if they'll accept his case under a pseudonym. Evidently we should know in a month to two years.

If you'd like to support his efforts, you can:

1.) Help pay his legal fees. The appeal is expected to cost $US 5000 and he's considering filing for bankruptcy. Send contributions to his attorney:

Philip T. Raymond, III

SHAFFER, RAYMOND & DALTON

Post Office Box 1935

Macon, Georgia 31202-1935

(912) 471-1112

bfturnip@mindspring.com

State Bar No. 596850

2.) Consider writing an amicus brief. We'll know more later about the details of submitting them, but I can tell you now that my understanding is that Federal Courts are very picky about how amicus briefs must be submitted and it may be necessary to get an experienced attorney involved.

3.) Look for other cases that are ready for U.S. Federal Court and which could be combined with his in a class action.

Thanks,

Kingsley G. Morse Jr.

Reproductive Rights Chairman

National Center for Men

Support Fairness in Family Planning

www.choiceformen.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/04/1429201.shtml

UK Pushing for Improvement of Men's Health

Scott · 5 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry submitted this story from the UK Independent. Although it might be too early to say, perhaps a wave of awareness of men's health issues is starting to sweep the globe! The issues of male suicide as well as increased heat disease risk were mentioned in the article, and the causes of the gender discrepancy were noted as due to both men's attitudes toward health as well as lack of funding for male health problems. With the recent news about setbacks in men's reproductive rights, I think it's all the more hopeful to see some progress being made in the area of men's health. Source: The Independent [UK newspaper]

Title: Drive to improve British men's health

Author: Jo Dillon

Date: March 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/04/1421213.shtml

MHA Campaign Round 2: Time to Hit the Senate

Scott · 5 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America has begun "Round 2" of the activism campaign to establish an Office of Men's Health at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The first round targeted the House of Representatives and resulted in sixty-one representatives co-signing the bill! If you want to jump into the campaign and do something for men's lives, now is the time to do so. See this posting for more info and join the MHA mailing list.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/05/0217224.shtml

Destabilizing Marriage

Scott · 5 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There is an article in the Massachusetts News about how feminist social workers have been working to uproot marriage in the name of bringing forth female victims of domestic violence. While the article lays the rhetoric on pretty thick, it does point out that violence against men continues to go unaddressed and that the funding for these (mostly anti-male) institutions has skyrocketed in recent years. Thanks to Not PC for informing me of this news story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/05/1435210.shtml

Man Knocked Unconscious by Wife; Scenario Made Into Joke

Scott · 6 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This also belongs under the "inequality/double standards" dept....according to this story from Ananova News, a man who mistakenly sent a gift intended for his mistress to his wife was knocked unconscious by an ashtray she threw at him as he tried to flee. The incident occurred in Romania, and has been made into a joke here in the U.S. If a man had knocked a woman unconscious in the same way, even if he had found out she was unfaithful to him, we would disparage him as a jealous, dominating husband. The words "domestic violence" would be used to describe the incident. But not, for some reason, when the person being attacked is male.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/05/1443249.shtml

Office of Men's Health "More Money Down a Rathole"

Scott · 7 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Joseph Farah, a writer for WorldNetDaily, doesn't like government programs. While he is entitled to these views, he has chosen to do a lot of harm to the efforts to create an Office of Men's Health by mocking it and calling it a "rathole" that money is being wasted on. Regardless of your views on libertarianism, men's health is in such a sorry state that we can't afford to miss out on opportunities to help stop the crisis. Please e-mail Farah at: jfarah@worldnetdaily.com and let him know that if he's going to complain about government social programs, that targeting men's health issues is extremely unfair given the enormous gender disparities in health and lifespan - disparities which, in all likelihood, will end up affecting his own life.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/06/2139210.shtml

A Major Inroad on CBS "48 Hours"

Scott · 7 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl submitted comments on last night's CBS 48 Hours program, which confronted the issue of domestic violence against men in a fair manner. This is something to write positive letters in to reinforce the airing of this important issue. Click "Read More" below to view Bill's comments...Kudos, kudos, kudos to CBS' "48 Hours." A major inroad was made during their March 5th telecast. The entire one hour newsmagazine was devoted to domestic violence. There were a few segments on women who had been beaten, plus a segment on male batterers and a treatment program in which they participate. The show seemed to have a slight anti-male bias until about midway through the program when a male victim of domestic violence was featured. This segment lasted nearly 10 minutes and not only clearly acknowledged the existence of the problem of domestic violence against men but also went into some of the dynamics. In addition, the segment cemented the picture of this particular female perpetrator as a very seriously violent person, not merely an irritated wife in a tiff, by interviewing her two sons. Both expressed that they were fearful of the mother and afraid for their father as well. Seems she had attacked her husband and one of the sons with a knife in separate incidences - along with threatening her husband with a shotgun. Again, let's hear it for CBS; this is the first time I have ever seen a prime time, major network TV show making a serious attempt to expose the problem of domestic violence against men.

Bill

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/07/0338251.shtml

Book Review: A Long Way to go for a Date

Scott · 7 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

David Shackleton, editor of the Everyman men's journal, was kind enough to send me his review of Henry Makow's book A Long Way to go for a Date. The book is about Makow's experience with a "mail order bride" from the Philippines, but goes much deeper into gender issues, male psychology, and the often confusing and sometimes irrational state that men and women find themselves in, particularly in relation to each other. Click "Read More" below before making too many judgments - this is definitely an interesting book for those in the men's movement.
Book Review: A Long Way to go for a Date, by Henry Makow. Published by Silas Green, Winnipeg, MB, 2000. ISBN: 0-9687725-0-1. 128 pages, $12.95. Review by David Shackleton.

I was touched by this book. I am always moved by courageous honesty. Henry Makow holds a politically incorrect vision: to love a young, traditional woman who, in her subservience, will love him simply because he looks after her: the traditional masculine virtues of protection and providing. And he is resolute in his pursuit of this daunting goal. He writes, I am an explorer in the undiscovered continent of love, a scientist in the laboratory of masculine longing. Can a middle-aged man, scarred by the sex wars at home, find a new beginning on a tropical island where women are still feminine?

A Long Way to go for a Date is the emotionally intimate diary of a man who seeks, finds and marries Cecilia, a mail order bride, and brings her from the Philippines to Winnipeg, MB. As we might expect in these feminist times, nearly everyone in Makow's life disagrees with his plan. He faithfully records these conversations, along with his inner thoughts and feelings about the issues. The book thus becomes an intimate dialogue about the merits of traditional gender roles versus modern notions of liberation, informed by Makow's inner thoughts and experiences as he pursues his dream. He is, of course, a protagonist for what we can call the light side of traditional roles and the dark side of modern, feminist notions of female emancipation. But this is refreshingly different to the depressingly repetitive cultural mantra of today, featuring the oppressive nature of traditional gender roles, and the self-righteous glory of the feminist vision of female liberation. I enjoyed the difference and found it stimulated fresh thought on the question of gender roles.

An appealing aspect of A Long Way to go for a Date is the way it unfolds like fiction, like a novel. This is a consequence, I think, of the fact that it is developed directly from the diary that Makow kept of his thoughts and experiences, and so his ideas and conclusions develop and change as one progresses through the book. This makes his moments of insight very present and direct: the reader feels his worldview turn and alter. For instance, he writes:

I tell [a Philippine friend of Cecilia's] that many women in America are self-centred, neurotic, ambitious and masculine. The nice ones find me too old. He agrees that Philippine women are 'very loving' and 'submissive.'
He seems to take that for granted, and instead, finds independent women more alluring.
Ed's use of the word 'submissive' rings a bell. I had told myself that I wanted a 'traditional' woman. I did not dare to consider the word 'submissive.' But damn it! That's exactly what I want!
After talking to Ed, I decide to go back to the the house. I ask Cecilia to come home and make a cup of coffee for me.
"Get it yourself, you fucking asshole," I can almost hear her American sisters.

She brings me the coffee. I put it aside and pull her down on the bed.

"Are you a submissive woman?" I ask.

"What does submissive mean?"

It means you obey your husband.

"I obey you because I love you," she says.

"And I'll never do anything to weaken your love," I vow.

Henry Makow is an exceptional individual, perhaps an eccentric. He is willing to invest heavily in his own ideas, and I admire this greatly. From a syndicated column for 38 newspapers called Ask Henry at age 11, to his invention of the board game Scruples, to being fired from his University teaching position for defending traditional gender roles, Makow has surely cut his own path through life. The story of his mail order search for a traditional wife told in A Long Way to go for a Date continues that pattern.

But what of his vision? Is it practical? Can the feminist genie be coaxed back into the bottle? With some sadness, I have to confess that I think not. Like a radio technician who insists on continuing to design using vacuum tubes and avoids "those newfangled transistors and integrated circuits," Makow's vision is, I think, doomed to failure. But like the charge of the Light Brigade, his failure may well be magnificent, for he does not lack courage. And then again, maybe I am wrong. Maybe Makow will prove that the twenty first century can be wedded with the nineteenth. I think that I would like that.

Makow's first experiment with Cecilia does not end well. On the back cover of his book, he writes, Things don't look so good at this moment. Is my hypothesis wrong? Or will it be discredited because I chose the wrong woman? I sense the satisfaction feminists would be feeling now. But I am not about to panic.

Indeed he is not, for he has recently attracted a new 'traditional' woman, from Mexico, into his life. Perhaps a further book will emerge to tell the continuing story of his experiments with love and masculine identity.

An epilogue to A Long Way to go for a Date entitled "What I Believe" tells in more abstract, theoretical terms how Makow sees relationships between men and women, and how he believes modern feminism has poisoned the ground. That chapter is excerpted/summarised as an article entitled "In Defense of Heterosexuality" on page 48 of this issue of Everyman.

A Long Way to go for a Date can be purchased at www.alongwaytogoforadate.com.

Contact author Henry Makow of Winnipeg, MB by email at silas_green@go.com

Reviewer: David Shackleton is a thinker and writer on gender, and editor of Everyman; A Men's Journal (sample copy available on request). You may contact him by phone at (613) 832-2294, or by email at editor@everyman.org.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/07/145217.shtml

Government-Approved Drug Addicts

Adam · 8 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In this article Tom DeWeese links the recent school shootings with "Government-Approved Drug Addicts" - also known as kids who've been put on Ritalin and Prozac against their will. As Tom truthfully writes, "Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD) and Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (AHDH) are complete frauds. There is no scientific evidence whatever to prove either exists." Please drop him an E-mail of thanks and ask him to write more articles like this.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/08/1641253.shtml

Men the Minority (in Education)

Scott · 9 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Glenn Burger submitted an article about his theories on why so few men are in today's colleges and universities. Glenn's premise is that the physical demands of "masculine" kinds of blue-collar labor take away a lot of energy that is needed to get a degree, while the jobs that women often take (or are able to get due to discrimination against draftable men) put them on track to improve their education and skills both inside and outside the workplace. Click "Read More" below for Glenn's interesting essay.

Men the Minority (in Education)

According to recently released statistics, colleges and universities in North America now have an undergrad population which is 56% female.

I believe that there is a reason why, increasingly, North American society is educating women and that reason is remarkably provocative and has a strongly anti-male component.

There is a direct relationship between employment and education. Where you work can, and often will, have a major impact on whether or not you acquire higher education.

If, for example, you work in the straight days, upwardly mobile, skills acquiring, stable, secure, generally non-physically demanding white collar employment sector, your chances of furthering your education, particularly at night, can be quite high. This is especially true of white collar workers in large, urban centers who have immediate access to colleges and universities and, of course, is less true of white collar workers who work in more rural areas.

In contrast, if you work in the physically demanding, frequently shiftwork, generally boring and non-skills acquiring blue collar sector your chances of acquiring higher education can be greatly reduced.
It would seem evident to me that there would be a great many more white collar employees furthering their education at night - or at any other time - than there are blue collar ones doing the same.

To my way of thinking, this reality has enormous relevance to an issue that has bedeviled me for over 25 years, that issue being gender bias in employment. It has been my considered belief for many of those years that many employers have been hiring and training only women for skills acquiring, white collar work because women are not vulnerable to military conscription in the event of war.

Just prior to WWII, many corporations in North America had substantial numbers of male white collar workers. In Canada's banking system, for example, 65% of the employees were male in 1939, just before the outbreak of hostilities. By 1943, the banks had closed almost half of the banking system due to lack of staff, as those male employees left for the war.

At the end of the war, employers implemented draconian anti-male hiring policies for the white collar employment sector. Obviously women could do the work and just as obviously they would not be vulnerable to military conscription if WWIII or any other large conflict occurred.

I have documentation in my possession that shows that these hiring policies were so successful that, by 1987, fully 95% of the white collar staff and supervisory cohort in Canada's banks was female, contrasting with the much smaller in number managerial and executive ranks being almost 98% male. What happened at Canada's banks is typical of what happened in the entire white collar employment sector in both Canada and the United States since the end of The Second World War.

This startling division in gender is understandable. Those executive males were not going to give women all the staff and supervisory positions because of their invulnerability to conscription and then give them most of the executive positions too, so the executive ranks remained almost exclusively male.

Ergo, white collar staff in North America is, and has been, almost exclusively female for generations. If white collar workers are mostly women (and they are); and if white collar workers are more likely than blue collar workers to partake of higher education (seems logical); then the recent statistics showing that 56% of undergrads in tertiary education are female (and that percentage is continuing to rise) should be readily seen as being understandable and shouldn't come as any great surprise.

I think that, just as North American women who work in the white collar sector have gotten stuck on themselves and enormously impressed with themselves because of where they work, North American men confined to the blue collar sector have gotten down on themselves. Male opinion of self seems to be: "I'm just a (1) cop, (2) fireman, (3) bus driver, (4) trucker, (5) mechanic, (6) mill worker, (7) refinery operator, (8) machinist," etc, etc. "How would getting a higher education benefit me?" And "How would I go about getting it with the often crummy hours that I work?"

It doesn't seem to be likely to many of these men that higher education would do them much good. In other words, most working class men, regardless of intelligence and motivation, are not allowed to be anything except blue collar workers and to the detriment of many of them, they accept it and adapt to it. They don't head to the institutions of higher learning to benefit their lot because they don't think that their lot can be benefited.

In contrast, women are not at all down on themselves because of their skills acquiring, white collar jobs and have a much better feeling about their job prospects and future employment opportunities. Tertiary education CAN lead to even better jobs for women and it is well within reach for most. Wisely for them, many of them grab the chance to further their education and this readiness, I maintain, is being reflected in those tertiary educational institutions now having 56% of their under grads nationwide being female.

And that percentage is growing.

It seems evident to me that men are being pushed aside. First, from white collar employment because employers don't want to spend money to train men and then lose that expense to the military (and if you disagree just go and look at the staffing levels at most white collar corporations) and second, from the institutions of higher learning. The "second" here is directly related, as I said, to the first.

The question that comes most readily to my mind is, "What are we going to do about it?" Complaining to media seems fruitless. Media is big business. Complaining to other business interests is even more naive. That seems like complaining to the coyote about raiding the hen house. It has been my experience that complaining to politicians can have a considerable impact. Initially, I didn't think that it would, but it has.

Also, promulgating this view of gender bias against men on the internet also has worthwhile possibilities.

Obviously, we are going to have to do something. If we don't, we are going to have a society of well educated women (most working in the white collar sector) and poorly educated men.

That may please many of the women's groups, but it does not bode well for society at all.

Glenn R. Burger, glennburgerroute66@hotmail.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/09/0151255.shtml

Update on NC Attacks on Pro-Family DV Treatment Programs

Scott · 9 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Dave Maupin has sent me an update on the current situation in North Carolina, where new domestic violence legislation would deny court referrals to DV treatment programs which don't meet a series of politically-inspired "rules" about treating victims. Dave's non-profit program has been had great success in the past but is now in danger because it provides family intervention programs which help to keep families together, rather than pull them apart. "Read More" below will take you to his message. Anti-male DV programs will only become stronger if we don't act to stop this now!Dave Maupin, from Family Violence Prevention Services writes:

This is where we are as of today. (3/6/2001)

Last Thursday, I received a memo from Joyce Taylor, North Carolina Council for Women, Acting Abuser Program Coordinator, in response to the application we had submitted last December for "approval" as an abuser treatment program. The memo cites ten areas where our application was considered deficient and/or out of compliance by the Oversight Committee of the Abuser Treatment Program. The "temporary rules" issued by the Council for Women last October are the standard by which all programs providing abuser treatment in North Carolina are to be measured. It has been made clear from the outset that final "approval" will be based on strict compliance with the "temporary rules," and that family-centered programs like ours will not be "approved" and will no longer be permitted to receive domestic violence counseling referrals from the courts.

These "rules", a fourteen page document, (a copy of which you can download from the DV Commission website at www.doa.state.nc.us/doa/dvc/dvc.htm) , have been written from a perspective that is different from our own perspective and professional experience. Nearly twenty years ago, we discovered that when there is domestic violence, most women and men want to maintain their relationships together when at all possible. We have developed a family intervention approach that is effective at stopping violence while keeping families intact.

Today, other domestic violence counseling programs in North Carolina are also working with families and see a growing need to provide family-based services in this area. We recognize the need for shelters for women and children in cases of extreme, life-threatening violence. We do not want to take anything away from existing domestic violence programs, but we do want to have the chance to offer families a choice.

So far this year, we have had two meetings in Raleigh with groups of legislators (one which we arranged on January 30, and a second on February 7, which was called for by the legislators) to ask for their help in amending these "temporary rules" or to at least postpone their implementation until they can be modified to reflect the needs of the larger domestic violence population and the services provided by family-centered programs such as ours.

Legislators expressed concern about the restrictive, punitive tone of the "rules" and the fact that established, effective programs like ours, which are supported by the community, might not be approved. One said the "rules" would be somewhat improved if all the 'wills' and 'shalls' were replaced with 'woulds' and 'shoulds.'

As you know, a recent Department of Justice study found that two-thirds of all intimate attacks were simple assaults (pushing, shoving, yelling and name calling), the least serious form of violence studied (Please see copy of AP article attached). Other research supports the modest changes we have suggested (You have a copy of our suggested changes.) These changes would in no way impact those programs that choose to follow another counseling approach. Also attached is a summary of recent correspondence on the subject from three internationally known and highly respected researchers in the field of family violence. The full text of that correspondence was sent to Rep. Theresa Esposito and Rep. Beverly Earle, who were responsible for arranging the February 7 legislators' meeting.

I believe the NC Coalition Against Domestic Violence, a domestic violence victim's advocacy group for women, has been a major influence in the development of these "temporary rules." I can fax you a copy of a document I received in the mail recently that illustrates the mission statement and views that organization seeks to promote.

The population that Family Violence Prevention Services has counseled for the past two decades is very different from the population that the Coalition and the Council for Women describe. Our program does not threaten any other. Our referrals are men and women who are court ordered for misdemeanor offenses that have not resulted in serious physical injury. Our services are often those sought out by both men and women who want to learn ways to communicate and to improve their relationships together.

Our concerns with the "temporary rules" are similar to those of other family-centered professional counseling programs across the state whose directors I have spoken with. We are being told whom we can counsel, how we can counsel, when and where we can counsel, all this by a group with no professional counseling credentials or expertise in this area that provides no funds to the programs they would regulate.

Domestic violence counseling programs should not all have to be the same, because all domestic violence is not the same, either in degree or in kind. We, and other service providers have learned that domestic violence is complicated and that a variety of treatment models are needed.

Public hearings on the "temporary rules" have been scheduled in April at three locations across the state: 4/18 in Greenville; 4/25 in Asheville, and; 4/30 in Greensboro. We plan to speak as do other family-centered programs (I know of three other family-centered programs that were cited for "deficiencies and compliance issues"). If you are interested in attending any of the hearings and perhaps speaking yourself, please let me know and I will give you more specific information.

This is where the action is right now in North Carolina, at least as far as domestic violence prevention and treatment services is concerned. If we don't stop them here, it's going to be just that much harder down the road. The research is on our side. We've got good, effective programs offering needed services to families where there is violence.

This is where we at FVPS draw the line. Will you help us?

Dave Maupin, Founder and Director

Family Violence Prevention Services

Summary of Recent Correspondence On Domestic Violence Treatment Services

To Rep. Beverly Earle and Rep. Theresa Esposito, NC General Assembly

From Terrie Moffitt, Ph.D., Daniel O'Leary, Ph.D., Richard Gelles, Ph.D.

February 28, 2001

Dr. Terrie Moffitt - Although it is imperative that North Carolina ban treatment of couples in felony battery cases, two-thirds of abuse cases are the common couples abuse type (misdemeanor simple assault). This type can benefit from treatment to prevent escalation to injurious felony violence, and treatment should be offered to women as well as men. Policy that withholds approval from service-delivery agencies offering treatment for common couples abuse has the unwanted side effect of discouraging agencies from developing such treatments and making them available for misdemeanor simple assault cases and to couples seeking help on their own outside the courts. As a result, state policies prohibiting treatments for common couples abuse will have a net effect that runs directly counter to violence prevention.

Dr. Daniel O'Leary - To regard all men who engage in physical aggression against their partners as alike simply does not fit the evidence. With different levels of physical aggression and relatedly different impacts of the physical aggression, it makes sense to have different treatment services available to men and women who are in relationships characterized by some level of physical aggression. As has been documented many times, there is no single treatment program which has shown to be uniquely effective over any others. Having some alternatives available to men in physically abusive relationships is both desirable and practical, especially if safety of the women and children are given a first priority. We have found no problem with having men and women receive services in the same building under these circumstances. In fact, since they live together and may have transportation and baby sitter problems, they often chose to come together to our facility.

Dr. Richard Gelles - There is no scientific evidence that the prevailing models for batterer's intervention (Emerge and Duluth) are actually effective in reducing violence. Having standards (for abuser treatment programs) implies effectiveness and conveys a possibly dangerous message to women that their partners are "cured" after going through an approved program. Ruling out couples therapy is done for ideological not scientific reasons. Couples therapy may well be as effective as other interventions depending on the level of violence, level of risk, and readiness to change.

Dr. Terrie Moffitt, Dr. Daniel O'Leary, and Dr. Richard Gelles are internationally known and highly respected researchers in the field of family violence.

Domestic violence down 21% in 1990s, Justice study finds.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON

The rate at which American women are attacked or threatened by loved ones declined 21 percent in the mid-1990s, Attorney General Janet Reno said yesterday. She called for the renewal of the 1994 Violence Against Women Act.

This comes after the Supreme Court struck down Monday a key provision of the law that let rape victims sue their attackers in federal court. Reno called that "deeply disappointing" and asked Congress to act quickly to keep the rest of the act's programs and money from expiring in October.

"Violence still devastates too many lives," she said at a news conference.

In a report, "Intimate Partner Violence," the Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics described a widespread decline in violence between husbands and wives, and boyfriends and girlfriends that mirrors the general decline in serious crimes nationwide since 1992.

The rate at which women were attacked by "intimate partners" -- current or former spouses, boyfriends, girlfriends or partners -- declined 21 percent during the mid-1990s and the number of men killed by wives or girlfriends declined 60 percent from 1976 through 1998.

"We've given wives alternatives to feeling like they have to pick up a loaded gun to kill their loaded husbands," said Professor James Alan Fox of Northeastern University in Boston. "Divorce is easier."

Reno and Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., the sponsor of the 1994 legislation, credited the act for the decrease. Under the law, states had to honor protective orders issued by other states; federal money for shelters more than doubled; and new grants were given to train police and prosecutors, set up special units and track incidents.

To qualify for grants, states also had to adopt policies that encourage police to arrest offenders on a domestic call. In many states, police must make an arrest when they go to a domestic dispute or explain in writing why they didn't.

The Supreme Court threw out the provision allowing rape victims to sue their attackers in federal court, saying that Congress wrongly trampled on an area of state authority. The other provisions were not at issue in the decision.

Biden said he could not figure out a way to rewrite the law to allow rape victims to circumvent the ruling. Asked whether there were any changes that could be made to make federal rape-lawsuits legal, he replied: "Yes, two new justices."

THE BUREAU REPORT, citing FBI data, showed that the number of intimate-partner homicides dropped since 1976 for every race and gender group except white women. Some details of the report:

In 1998, 1,320 women were killed by intimates, and 510 men. In 1976, women accounted for just over half of the 3,000 men and women killed by intimates.

For black men, intimate killings declined by 74 percent from 1976 through 1998.

For black women, the number of killings was down 45 percent.

For white men, it declined 44 percent.

Between 1976 and 1993, the number of white women killed by intimate partners was fairly stable, but such killings dropped by 23 percent between 1993 and 1997.

Black women were far more likely to report such violence to police than white women -- 67 percent of the time, compared with 50 percent for white women.

Overall, the percentage of women who reported intimate violence to police rose from 48 percent in 1993 to 59 percent in 1998. Among men, 46 percent reported intimate violence to the police, with little difference between races.

Counting deadly and lesser violence and threats of violence, attacks on women by intimate partners declined from 1.1 million in 1993 to 876,340 in 1998.

The rate at which men were attacked by wives or girlfriends remained stable during this period, with 160,000 attacks on men in 1993 and 1998.

Two-thirds of all intimate attacks were simple assaults, the least serious form of violence studied.

Published: May 18, 2000

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/09/1426215.shtml

Good Overview of Boy's Issues

Scott · 10 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An article by Meghan Cox Gurdon from the National Post does a great job covering many gender issues that boys face - including the high rates of male dropouts and boys who are held back a grade, the overprescription of Ritalin and other drugs to modify boys' behavior, the way male sports are being marginalized to compensate for girls' lack of participation, and the stereotypes that have been broken through for girls but not yet for boys. I feel this is a great introduction to the problems our young men have to face, and the lack of attention they receive. Source: National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: The new gender gap -- 'Girls Rule'

Author: Meghan Cox Gurdon

Date: March 5, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/10/1441220.shtml

Angelucci to Discuss DV on KRLA Radio Program

Scott · 10 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci from Men Enabling New Solutions will be hosted on radio station KRLA in the Los Angeles area, to discuss the reality of domestic violence against men. You can listen to the show on-line at this link. He will be on the air from 11:00-11:30 AM Pacific Time. Marc will be referring to facts and statistics about domestic violence that can be read on this web site. Click "Read More" below to view this information.

Los Angeles Commission for Men Campaign

A growing number of people are recognizing the dire need for a County Commission for Men in Los Angeles, similar to the Commission for Women. A Commission for Men would address the often neglected issues that affect males and their loved ones. These issues include:

- male victims of partner violence
- depression
- suicide
- violence
- gangs
- fathers
- masculinity
- prostate and testicular cancer
- attention disorders and Ritalin
- dropouts
- homelessness
- gay and bisexual men
- prison conditions
- mental health

One silent but major problem facing men in Los Angeles, for example, is the complete lack of shelter and outreach for male victims of domestic violence.

In 1998, the Institute of Justice found that 835,000 men and 1.5 million women were victims of spousal rape or battery in the previous 12 months. (See exhibit 7 at http://www.ncjrs.org/pdffiles/172837.pdf). Other studies show much higher numbers. The Institute of Mental Health found in 1975, 1985 and 1992 and that 1.8 million women and 2 million men are victims of domestic violence yearly (http://www.safe4all.org/essays/vtbreak.p df). About 100 other studies verify this (http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm).

No matter what the numbers are, a battered male deserves services just as any other victim does. Statistics cannot change that.

Yet domestic violence has for decades been phrased in terms of "violence against women" while male victims are routinely excluded from shelters and outreach. (No Place To Run For Male Victims of Domestic Violence, Detroit News, 4/20/97: http://detnews.com/1997/metro/9704/20/04200070.htm) Even the Violence Against Women Act has language that restricts funds only to shelters for women.

This neglect is fostering the very violence that domestic violence activists claim they are trying to stop. When men don't seek help, the violence tends to escalate, and children who witness the violence and often grow up to become batterers themselves. This cycle will never end until we address the violence in its entirety and get males to come forward for help.

As things are, many in the domestic violence field have political agendas that oppose reaching out to male victims (Philip Cook, Abused Men: The Hidden Side of Domestic Violence). They often cite misleading data to show low numbers of male victims, such as crime reports or crime surveys that are inaccurate because males are less likely than females to report the violence or to see the violence as a crime. One example is the California Bar Association, which says men make between one and five percent of victims (http://stage.calbar.org/2con/calbar_pamp/3condomestic.htm#dom1).

One way to resolve this problem, as well as other problems relating to men, is to create a forum of experts within the county to address the issues faced by men, as we have done for women. June Dunbar, the President of the County Commission for Women, recently wrote a letter supporting a Commission for Men and a battered men's shelter. But much more support is needed.

Anyone interested in helping with this should write to their County Supervisors in Los Angeles and ask to put a Commission for Men on the agenda (http://bos.co.la.ca.us/). Another thing we can do is get various leaders and groups to also support a Commission for Men. And anyone may give their comments in person to the Supervisors at their meetings on Tuesday mornings (http://bos.co.la.ca.us/Categories/MtgsBoard/LiveBroadcast.htm).

For more information, write to MENS (Men Enabling New Solutions) at mens@mensactivism.org.

Please help us. By showing support for a Commission for Men, we can impact the city of Los Angels in ways never tried before. Now is the time to act.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/09/1736242.shtml

NIH Retractions Reported on by Wall Street Journal

Scott · 11 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

It's starting to happen - awareness of the misleading notions we've had about gender health disparities are entering the mainstream media. The Wall Street Journal has reported on the NIH retractions of statements claiming that women's health research has been neglected. Click here to read the article, which was forwarded to the Men's Health America mailing list. Now is the most critical time to keep pushing these facts into the open - we are close to, or at, a pivot point where a flood of news articles on this issue could break free. Source: Wall Street Journal [newspaper]

Title: Feminism is Bad for Women's Health Care

Author: Sally Satel

Date: March 8, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/10/1818244.shtml

Bogata Holds a "Night Without Men"

Scott · 11 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "Bogota's mayor really has found the way to make the hatred of men even more present in Colombia. Click here for the article." To "cut down on street crime and domestic abuse," the mayor imposed a curfew on men and encouraged women to go out and party all night. I can't think of a more humiliating way to marginalize men in society that's been done before. If something like this spreads, we'll see just how hopeless today's men have become.

Source: CNN

Title: Colombian women party on 'Night Without Men'

Author: Unknown

Date: March 10, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/11/1536217.shtml

DV Against Pets?

Scott · 12 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "This link will lead you to an article that portrays men not only as abusers of women and children, but also as the sole and exclusive abusers of pets. What next? Abusers of stuffed animals?" While people who are violent to other people are probably more likely to be violent to animals, this does seem to be pushing the concept a bit far. The article just reeks with the gender politics of domestic violence we're so familiar with. Source: The Washington Post [newspaper]

Title: Program Links Domestic Abuse, Pets

Author: David Crary

Date: March 11, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/12/0334219.shtml

MAJOR Choice for Men Article in New York Times

Scott · 12 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

geoffg50 sent me a link to this New York Times story on paternity fraud and male reproductive rights. The article is in-depth, and presents the problem of children's rights vs. the father's in a fairly objective manner. A lawyer for the man whose case is in question was quoted as saying, "I now advise every man who's getting a divorce to get paternity testing...I don't like it much, but now it seems like it could be malpractice not to warn them." Exposure like this in the NYT could be very significant to the cause. Source: The New York Times [newspaper]

Title: In Genetic Testing for Paternity, Law Often Lags Behind Science

Author: Tamar Lewin

Date: March 11, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/12/1532241.shtml

'Sweet Young Woman' Arrested Under New DV Law

Scott · 13 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In Utah, a new law went into effect requiring an arrest to be made when the police take a domestic violence complaint. This story from the Salt Lake Tribune is by a police officer who made the first arrest under the new law - and he had to arrest a woman. The article is good because it's honest and portrays a realistic (indeed, it was real) scenario of domestic violence against men. Source: Salt Lake Tribune [newspaper]

Title: 'Sweet Young Woman' With Red-Hot Temper Booked for Domestic Violence

Author: Paul St. John Fleming

Date: March 5, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/12/1345219.shtml

Man Sues Hospital for Circumcision

Scott · 13 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous Reader sent me this link to an ABC Good Morning America story that William Stowell, 19, is suing the hospital that circumcised him as an infant. He claims that his mother, who signed the waiver form, was under the influence of painkillers when she signed the form. "Stowell's attorney, David Llwellyn, has considerable experience with men who lament the loss of their foreskins. He has filed similar lawsuits in the past, winning as much as $65,000 in one settlement...the hospital claims there is a 10-year statute of limitations on medical malpractice suits. However, Llewellyn responds that in the state of New York, the clock doesn't start ticking until a person turns 18." While it might not be productive to open the floodgates of litigation for people who were circumcised, I'd like to see cases like this bring about the end of the practice on infant males who can't give consent. Source: ABC Good Morning America [television program]

Date: March 12, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/13/1821256.shtml

Political Correctness Author Fired for Sexual Harassment

Scott · 14 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In more than a twist of irony, a UK police public relations manager who authored a guide on political correctness for the department was fired after four women accused him of sexually harassing them at a party. "During his 18 months in the job, Mr. Williamson was part of the team which produced a guide called The Power of Language, which advised the force's 7,000 officers to avoid sexually overt terms of endearment such as 'love,' 'pet' and 'dear' because people might find them offensive." Read the article here.Source: The Scotsman [UK newspaper]

Title: Sex claim PR man loses job

Author: Sinead McIntyre

Date: March 13, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/13/1832243.shtml

CHS Interviewed in Salon

Scott · 14 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Salon.com recently interviewed Christina Hoff Sommers about Jane Fonda's recent donation of 12.5 million to Harvard University for the creation of a Gender Studies Center, and Carol Gilligan's recent leaving of Harvard. The article discusses Sommers' views on the future of gender studies and covers a number of important issues, including the problems that college aged men are facing. She ends with: "I'm sorry to report the good news that little boys are healthy. They are neglected academically. Boys could be doing a lot better, especially in reading and writing and simply caring about educational achievement. But they are not pathological. Being a boy is not a disorder; it's not something you need to recover from." Source: Salon Magazine [on-line]

Title: Battle of the celebrity gender theorists

Date: March 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/13/1852223.shtml

Man Falsely Accused of Abuse Given Right to Sue

Scott · 14 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry sent in this story from the UK Times. It's about a man who was falsely accused of sexually abusing his (then) three year-old daughter by his wife. The wife was determined to have Munchausen's syndrome by proxy, and the way the child was interviewed by social services and police was irresponsible (leading questions, etc.). He will be suing the police dept. and social services unit that handled the case negligently. Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: Court lets father sue police over abuse case

Author: Ian Cobain

Date: March 13, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/14/1334243.shtml

Police Chief Cleared of Sexual Assault Accusation

Scott · 15 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In another story of a false accusation, a Michigan police chief, Ronald Deziel, was accused of sexually assaulting a woman working in a hair salon. There were inconsistencies in the woman's story and also no DNA evidence was found where it was expected in the woman's clothing fibers. The case has been very high-profile and damaging to Deziel's reputation. "County prosecutors are now considering whether to charge the Taylor woman with making false statements to police and the filing of a false police report, which is a misdemeanor punishable by up to 90 days in jail." I guess when the consequences of making a false accusation are so insignificant, it's questionable whether to even bother pressing charges! Click here for the Detroit News story. Source: The Detroit News [newspaper]

Title: Deziel won't face sex charges - Police now consider whether woman made false accusations

Author: David Shepardson and Craig Garrett

Date: March 8, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/14/1353237.shtml

Chinese Psychiatric Association Takes Homosexuality Off Mental Disorders List

Scott · 15 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

China has taken a significant step toward the toleration of homosexuality by removing it from the list of mental illnesses created by the country's main Psychological Association. "China is to remove homosexuality from the official list of mental illness. Up to now homosexuality has been automatically included by the Chinese Psychiatric Association (CPA) in its diagnostic manual." The American Psychiatric Association removed homosexuality as a mental illness in 1973. The Irish Times article can be read here.Source: The Irish Times [UK newspaper]

Title: China to take gays off mental illness list

Author: Miriam Donohoe

Date: March 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/15/1410226.shtml

NH Commission on the Status of Men Report On-Line

Scott · 15 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There has been lots of interesting activity going on in New Hampshire in support of men's issues (particularly father's rights). The NH chapter of the National Congress for Fathers & Children has been active at the state level, speaking out on legislation and even having legislation for men passed as well. Their recent major undertaking was to draft a report on the status of men in New Hampshire, and their results include a great deal of useful information for men's activists in the state and elsewhere. Go to this link to download the report, and please distribute it wide and far!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/15/1519221.shtml

High Stress in IT Careers Cause Women to Leave

Scott · 16 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I consider this very relevant news because of the way gender was portrayed in the article. Basically, it acknowledged that men are more willing to destroy their lives in a stressful, all-consuming job and that the high turnover rate of women in the industry is a signal that the job standards need to be changed. "Stress and lack of work/life balance in the IT workplace is taking [a toll on women]...Women in IT are the "canary in the coal mine" warning that the New Economy workplace is destructive for employees...IT managers should realize that what women are experiencing in the IT workplace is very likely a reflection of men's experience and that unreasonable stress and lack of work/life balance have the power to destroy productivity in the long run." Read the article from Computerworld at this link.Source: Computerworld [magazine]

Title: Stressed-out IT women tempted to quit, survey finds

Author: Kathleen Melymuka

Date: March 15, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/16/1654213.shtml

Boy Gymnast on Girl's Team Barred from Full Competition

Scott · 17 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Jim Castelli submitted this Boston Globe story and writes, "Mark Scialdone is a boy, but was chosen for this season's Globe's girls' All-Scholastic squad as a gymnast. In 1978, 136 NCAA colleges had men's gymnastics, now only 24 do. In MA, only 8 high schools have boy's gymnastics teams. This year when he accompanied his Beverly, MA team as captain to the New England Girls Gymnastics Championship, he was told that his scores would not be allowed."Technically he was a non scoring participant,' said Haig Varadian, executive director of the Council of New England Secondary Schools Principals Association....'The Council feels its an invasion of the girl's tournament...The playing field isn't level when you have a boy competing against girls.'" But in the wake of Title IX, the girls' teams may be the only playing field left for male gymnasts.
Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: Gymnast vaults into gender-equity flap

Author: John Powers

Date: March 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/16/217217.shtml

Reviews of Father and Child Reunion

Adam · 17 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a small preview of Warren Farrell's latest book Father and Child Reunion. It has brief excerpts from several chapters so you can get a feel of what the book is about. And there's also another book review by J. Steven Svoboda, who outlines some of the main points to made in the book when it comes to men's parenting rights. If you like what you read, don't delay and order the book now!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/16/2141201.shtml

British Airways Considers All Men Potential Paedophiles

Scott · 17 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

British Airways, a major international airline company, admitted that is has a policy which has been in effect for several years which requires flight attendants to move, if possible, men away from children who fly alone. "A spokeswoman for British Airways said flight crew and ticket staff were under instructions to keep men away from unaccompanied children wherever possible because of the dangers of paedophiles." Thanks to AngryHarry for submitting this link from the UK Times. This is a perfect example of how society views men as sexual predators - and no one should tolerate this kind of biased treatment of men. Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: BA says men cannot sit with lone children

Author: Lewis Smith

Date: March 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/17/0230206.shtml

$5M Won in Lawsuit Over False Recovered Memory

Scott · 19 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h submitted this CNN story and writes "This is one story that got by Ted Turner: a woman, now deceased, had falsely accused her family of abusing her as a result of memories "recovered" through therapy. The award is substantial, but I'm sure it does nothing to compensate for the dishonor falsely visited upon her family." No doubt this is a very positive step by holding the psychiatric industry accountable for such damaging actions. It also warns other experts who practice unethical forms of memory recovery that their day may be coming as well.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/18/221202.shtml

Woman Tries Poisoning, Suffocating Husband

Scott · 20 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A trial is currently underway in the UK in which a wife tried to kill her wealthy husband by poisoning his breakfast cereal with antihistamine tablets and then suffocating him when he was sedated. He barely escaped, and she claimed that she did it to draw attention to their marital problems and that they needed outside help to deal with them. The way in which the woman behaved seemed disturbingly apathetic to the consequences. The UK Times article can be read at this link. Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: 'She tried to kill me. She's gone for a gun'

Author: Joanna Bale

Date: March 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/19/2034256.shtml

UK Man Tries to Stop Ex-Girlfriend's Abortion

Scott · 20 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC informed me that the BBC is reporting that a man is legally challenging a woman's right to abortion against his will. While the article aptly points out that men currently have no rights in the decision of whether or not to abort, it is pretty obvious (to me, at least) that this legal challenge will not be successful. There are too many other ways a woman could thwart a lover's demand to bring a child to term, and now that the possibility to obtain an abortion is viewed as a woman's right over her own body, I can't imagine that these "rights" can be taken away. But the struggle continues, for good reason. Men deserve some reproductive rights, the question is, which rights would be most fair?Source: BBC [UK news network]

Title: Former partner tries to stop abortion

Author: Unknown

Date: March 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/20/0223237.shtml

E-mailing U.S. Congress Members May Not Be Effective

Scott · 20 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

According to this ZDNet story (found on Slashdot), " Members of Congress are inundated with so many e-mail messages from constituents and special interest groups--80 million last year alone--that lawmakers routinely ignore most of them, according to a new study." A disturbing part of the report claims that citizen's expectations should be lowered, and that people have no right to expect a response to electronic communications with Congressmen and women. Source: ZDNet [Tech news network]

Title: Tech crisis--D.C. drowning in e-mail

Author: Unknown [Reuters news story]

Date: March 18, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/20/0240202.shtml

Debunking Feminist Stats at Brown University

Scott · 21 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nicholas Krippendorf, a recent graduate of Brown University, is currently living in China teaching English. However, when he was at Brown, he wrote a blockbuster article critical of the false statistics that were put out by the university's Women's Center. He's looking to get the article published in other men's magazines, so if you want to re-print this elsewhere, feel free to do so. The text of his essay can be read by clicking "Read More" below. Enjoy!The following article was printed in The Brown Daily Herald on Friday, April 7, 2000.

Reading between the numbers

Statistics don't always tell the whole story in sex crimes

By Nicholas Krippendorf

Herald Opinions Columnist

Twenty-two to thirty-five percent of women who visit emergency rooms are there for injuries related to ongoing abuse. This statistic, printed on a table slip by Brown University's Women's Center last year, was shocking. This table slip turns out to be more disappointing than shocking because the statistic is completely misleading.

The statistic comes from the 1984 article "Domestic Violence Victims in the Emergency Department" published in the Journal of the American Medical Association. The study was conducted in a downtown Detroit hospital. The authors admitted that this sample group was not representative of the American population at large.

Ninety percent of the 492 patients questioned were from inner-city Detroit and 60 percent of them were unemployed. The 22 percent figure represents both men and women. Either the Women's Center was unaware of this information, or they deliberately misled the entire Brown community. I'd like to think the former.

Christina Hoff Sommers, women's activist and author of Who Stole Feminism, might not be so forgiving. According to Sommers, many academic feminists "are imposing a narrow political agenda, diluting traditional scholarly standards, and using up scarce resources." Sommers' book identifies and debunks dubious feminist research promoted by irresponsible, narrow-minded, chronically upset and whiny feminist academics.

She discovered that many statistics feminists use to promote their agendas are either misleading or completely false. If you think you can avoid feminist misinformation at Brown, think again.

Attempting to whip up support for the Vagina Monologues, the Brown Women's Center once again distributed table slips with shocking statistics. On one slip I found, "Somewhere in America a women is raped every two minutes."

This statistic comes from the 1996 National Crime Victimization Survey (NCVS), sponsored by the US Department of Justice. Rape is not only the most underreported crime but it is also the most terrible. The incident of rape should be dealt with responsibly and seriously.

Although the Department of Justice seems like a reliable source, the reality that a woman is raped every two minutes in America seems almost unbelievable.

If you read the survey you will most likely be surprised by what the NCVS counts as a rape. According to the survey, "A completed rape is a report of a respondent physically forced or psychologically coerced to engage in sexual intercourse. An attempted rape may consist of verbal threats of rape."

These definitions are surprisingly broad. Do you consider someone who has not been physically forced or threatened but merely psychologically coerced to have sex a rape victim? Would you count a woman who receives a verbally threatening phone call a victim of an attempted rape?

A candlelight dinner and a few drinks persuade a women to have sex with her date. The next morning the woman feels guilty and regrets her behavior. She realizes that, had it not been for the romantic ambiance and her alcohol buzz she would not have had sex with her date. The NCVS counts her as a rape victim and her date as a rapist.

The NCVS also found that about 330,000 sexual assaults occur each year. What would you count as a sexual assault? (Maybe behavior which results in physical force or violence.) The NCVS claims that a sexual assault "may or may not involve force"[and]"also include verbal threats." The survey goes on to claim, "Sexual assaults also include incidents in which the offender's motive was not clear."

Apparently when a women misinterprets a man's dinner and a movie proposition as an attempt to "get her in bed" the US Department of Justice counts the women as a victim of sexual assault. The NCVS's definitions make it difficult to believe that this survey is a well-designed study without an agenda.

Many feminists are masters at creatively interpreting and transforming statistics to mislead people. On another table slip printed by the Brown Women's Center was, "Somewhere in America a women is battered every 15 seconds." This statement is a half-truth and misleading.

The statistic comes from a study by the FBI. The FBI study relied on the book "Behind Closed Doors: Violence in The American Family", by Murray Straus and Richard Gelles. Gelles and Straus did find high levels of violence in American families; but they also found that women were as likely to engage in it as men.

They did find that women are more likely to be seriously injured as a result of violence. However, they found the percentage of women who are seriously injured to be smaller than inflated claims of irresponsible feminists - fewer than one percent. Surveys about violence often distinguish between minor violence, such as pushing, shoving, grabbing, and slapping (no injuries) and severe violence, such as kicking, trying to hit with an object, and beating up (injuries).

Often feminists create misleading statistics by deliberately ignoring the distinction between minor and sever violence and counting all acts of violence as abuse. No effort is made to distinguish between non-threatening aggression and physically harmful aggression.

According to the 1998 National Violence Against Women Survey (NVAW) "approximately 5.9 million assaults [were] perpetrated against women" in the previous 12 months. Seems like a high number. Why?

According to this survey a physical assault was defined as "behaviors that threaten, attempt, or actually inflict physical harm." Furthermore, the NVAW survey counts a "push, grab, or shove" as an assault. If a man gets in an argument with his girlfriend and he pushes her out of the way as he stomps out of the room, the NVAW counts the women as a victim of assault.

Many feminist activists want you to think society shortchanges females. To convince us they are quick to discard all comparison of boys and girls in areas where boys are in trouble. We'll hear that girls are more likely than boys to attempt suicide but not that boys are four times more likely to die from suicide. We'll hear that girls score lower than boys on math and science exams and boys get more attention from teachers. We're not as likely to hear that boys significantly trail girls in national reading and writing tests, get lower grades in school, suffer from more learning disabilities, are more likely to drop out of school, abuse drugs or be assaulted.

We should not become fixed on the victimology game. Women's problems are no more and no less important than men's. When irresponsible, narrow-minded, and usually chronically whiny feminists promote sham and misleading information, such as some information here at Brown, the real victims of abuse are cheated. This is a real tragedy.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/20/1714206.shtml

Scotland's Police Allowed to Take DNA Samples from All Crime Suspects

Scott · 21 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Scotland's national DNA database is about to become a lot bigger, now that police have been given permission to take DNA samples from anyone who is arrested. The UK Daily Telegraph story can be read here. Previously, only major crime suspects, such as murderers and sex criminals, were forced to give DNA samples. While suspects who are found innocent will have the DNA sample destroyed from the database, this still opens the door to the wider use of DNA to identify and track citizens, which carries a number of consequences in regard to privacy and civil liberties issues. Thanks to AngryHarry for the link. Source: The Daily Telegraph [UK newspaper]

Title: Police force lets officers take DNA from all suspects

Author: Tara Womersley

Date: March 20, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/21/0122205.shtml

Lawyers Profiting from Gender Polarization

Adam · 21 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I've some mixed news about divorce - read this story. It turns out that British men might be able get a "cheaper" divorce settlement in certain countries due to a new European Union regulation. However, the main reason I'm posting this is due to this quote from Alain Cornec, a divorce lawyer in France who says "Being a lawyer, I'm delighted, the more paranoid that spouses get about their absent partners, the more legal assistance they will seek." It just goes to show how much profit there is for lawyers (and certain other groups) in gender polarization.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/21/0415242.shtml

Sexism in American Psychologist

Scott · 23 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "The February 2001 issue of American Psychologist arrived today (not online, unfortunately) with an article by social psychologists Peter Glick and Susan Fiske, discussing the concept of "benevolent (vs. hostile) sexism." There is much I find offensive in the article, such as the assumptions that "sexism" refers to prejudice against women only, and that disagreement with the feminist agenda is ipso facto prejudice against women. The concept of benign sexism is intriguing, though, because it consists of beliefs that women should be rescued before men in an emergency, that men need women's love in order to be complete, that women are more cultured than men, that women should be protected by men, and that men should make sacrifices in order to provide for women. They argue that these beliefs actually harm women by legitimizing less benevolent forms of discrimination, in the way the "white man's burden" legitimized colonialism. They are completely submerged in feminist ideology, but from a men's rights perspective, one can only hope that some of their ideas catch on!"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/23/1218216.shtml

Woman Cleared of Attempted Murder of Husband

Scott · 23 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry had a link to this UK Telegraph article, which reports that Melanie Cangardel has been cleared of attempted murder charges. We had reported on this story earlier, which described how Ms. Cangardel crushed antihistamines in her husband's cereal and then tried to suffocate him with a plastic bag when he was sedated from the drugs. Mr. Cangardel did have enormous levels of the drugs in his system when tested, and the earlier story indicated that Ms. Cangardel admitted to doing this to bring attention to their marital problems. I have no idea what must have happened in court, but this is a tragic loss for justice. Source: The Telegraph [UK Times]

Title: Wife cleared of trying to suffocate husband

Author: Richard Savill

Date: March 23, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/23/1823221.shtml

Fathers Are the True Heroes of Childbirth

Adam · 24 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Some positive news from the UK Times: it turns out that "FATHERS emerged as the heroes of childbirth yesterday as women criticised maternity services and saved their praise for the men in their lives. " Fathers were also "rated as rocks of support." All I can say is wow!
It seems things are slowly starting to turn our way, but while we have a long way to go yet, perhaps we should sit back and enjoy this for a few minutes before continuing about our daily business.
Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: Fathers are the true heroes of childbirth

Author: David Charter

Date: March 22, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/23/1024212.shtml

CA to Tie Driver's License Registration with Draft Registration

Scott · 24 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "Kudos to California for having the 5th worst Selective Service registration compliance in the nation (79%). But Assemblyperson Briggs and the L.A. County Board of Supervisors see this as a "problem." To fix it, they want to pass California Assembly Bill (AB1572), which would make draft registration automatic upon applying for a driver's license - if you are male, that is." Click "Read More" below to view some quotes and more of Marc's comments. So, gentlemen, if you want to drive in California, you now must pay for your maleness not only in higher auto insurance rates, but by signing off your body as an on-call warrior. After all, driving is a privilege, not a right. And if you're male, it may not even be a privilege anymore.

The L.A. Board of Supervisors put this bill (see Item #3) onto their agenda on 3/20/01 and wound up voting to support it.

Here are excerpts from the L.A. County Board of Supervisors Agenda:

3. Recommendation as submitted by Supervisor Knabe: Send a five-signature letter to Governor Gray Davis, Assembly Member Mike Briggs and the Los Angeles County Legislative Delegation, supporting AB 1572 (Briggs), legislation which would link the Selective Service System registration with the process of applying for a driver's license or State identification card by requiring the Department of Motor Vehicles to include on the application a notice to applicants who are at least 18 years of age, but less than 26 years of age, that his submission of the application serves as consent to registration with the Selective Service System; and urging early passage and enactment of the bill.

Federal law requires virtually all male U.S. citizens, as well as immigrant men residing the United States, to register with the Selective Service System (SSS) when reaching age 18. However, despite ongoing education efforts, many men do not know about this important civic obligation and legal requirement.

Declining registration compliance is of concern to officials because it means that any future draft instituted by Congress and the President in a national emergency would be less than fair and equitable. Also, men who fail to register with Selective Service are not eligible for certain programs and benefits that the Congress and 28 states have linked to registration. They include student loans and grants for college, most government jobs, and job training. The Immigration and Naturalization Service can also deny immigrant men who fail to register U. S. citizenship. California is currently at 79% compliance for SSS registration. Out of 50 states, California ranks 45th.

It is generally believed that the key to solving the SSS registration compliance problem in a state is to link SSS registration with the process of applying for a driver's license or state identification card. These laws are simple and inexpensive to implement and have already been enacted in Oklahoma, Delaware and Arkansas. An SSS registration driver's license law has passed the Utah legislature and is currently awaiting the Governor's signature. There are 22 states where legislation has recently been introduced and will be voted on during the 2001 sessions. Numerous other states are in the process of drafting similar legislation in the near future.

In California, Assembly Bill 1572 (Mike Briggs, R-Assembly District 29, Fresno) has been introduced to link SSS registration with driver's license/identification card process. The people of California have always supported a strong national defense and a prepared America.

I, THEREFORE, MOVE that a 5-signature letter be sent in support of Assembly Bill 1572 to the Los Angeles County Assemblymembers and State Senators, the author of the legislation, and to Governor Gray Davis urging early passage and enactment of this proposal.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/23/1812237.shtml

More Coverage of NIH Retraction

Scott · 24 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The National Center for Policy Analysis has recently started publicizing the gender politics that created the myth that women are neglected in medical research. Their statement on the matter can be read here. The floodgates of truth open a bit further...Source: National Center for Policy Analysis [US]

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/24/1639220.shtml

Woman Who Raped Boy Walks Free

Scott · 25 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A 19-year old Australian woman who had sex with a 13-year old boy as part of a "truth or dare" game was given a 12 month prison sentence but was "ordered not be sent to jail and that the term be served as part of an intensive correction order." This is despite the fact that the judge claims "the woman's conduct should be considered as serious as that of a man who had preyed on a young female." Also from the article: "a victim impact statement supplied by the boy with whom Dugdale had sex revealed he continued to experience nightmares and had trouble communicating with females. She said the boy experienced on-going embarrassment, guilt about his mother's distress and required on-going counselling." Read the article here a>.Source: The Courier-Mail [Australian newspaper]

Title: Woman freed by judge after having 'dare' sex with boy

Author: Tony Keim

Date: March 21, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/25/1257202.shtml

Combat Tests Diluted to "Aggressive Camping" for Women to Succeed

Scott · 26 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry pointed me to this UK Telegraph article about combat training in the Army. Brig Seymour Monro, director of the Army's infantry, is speaking out that the tests have been so watered down that they are little more than "aggressive camping" exercises. "The exercises, a crucial part of the Army's "Combat Effectiveness Gender Study", have concluded that women are as capable as men of serving in combat units. However, [Monro] said this conclusion could only be reached because the tasks that women soldiers were not physically capable of performing had been made easier or dropped from the trials. A scathing commentary on the trials, written by Monro, had been suppressed by senior officers, defence sources said."Source: UK Telegraph

Title: Combat tests 'watered down for women'

Author: Michael Smith

Date: March 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/26/1545247.shtml

Fred on Computer-Assisted Surveillance

Scott · 27 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Since a lot of Mensactivism.org visitors are fans of Fred Reed's writing, I thought I would post this link to his recent article about computer-assisted surveillance technology, and how the use of this technology for the purpose of social control is going to creep up on us if we aren't vigilant. While his explanation of the problem is very broad, it's a good introduction to the issues that groups like EPIC and the EFF are confronting.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/26/2024241.shtml

Lawsuit Filed Against DV Shelter in MA

Scott · 27 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A woman has filed a lawsuit against the Independence House battered women's shelter in Barnstable, MA, claiming that she was illegally forced to attend the program by DSS. When she initially refused, DSS put her children into foster care, a tactic which she claimed has been used to force her and other women to "accept the message" that the shelter teaches. "I complained in the Independence House meetings that I did not want to be there and was being forced to attend through intimidation, threats, and coercion. Independence House did everything to me that they claim would be control and emotional abuse if a man did it. I felt so violated. Our little girl suffered terribly. Independence House, of all places, should understand that when a woman says 'no' - it means 'no.'" The Massachusetts News has the article here - and thanks to Dr. Charles Corry for the submission.Source: Massachusetts News

Title: Suit Filed Against Battered Women's Shelter in Barnstable

Author: Unknown

Date: March 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/27/028204.shtml

Clayton Giles to be Back in Action Soon!

Scott · 28 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Dr. Charles Corry from dvmen.org also submitted news about Clayton Giles, whose case we have covered in the past (story 1, 2, 3, 4). He writes: "Clayton Giles is a 14-year old boy who wanted to be with his father. Only the courts in Calgary, Alberta, Canada wouldn't let him. So first he ran away to his father's home. When the courts still wouldn't acknowledge his father's rights, Clayton went on a hunger strike and picketed the courthouse to international attention gained through his web site. After 19 days the court caved in. He now lives legally with his father. On April 28th he will be starting a bicycle and walking trek from Calgary to Ottawa, and then to Washington, D.C. to promote children's right to have both parents. He deserves and has earned all our support. Details are on his web site at Legalkids.com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/27/2246215.shtml

Male Bashing: Today's Politically Correct Sport?

Scott · 28 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

My second article in a series for the UNH school newspaper was printed last Friday, and you can read it at this link. It covers the issue of male bashing, and the differences between how we view female bashing and male bashing. It acknowledges the wrongness of misogyny, and asks for people to recognize the unfairness of misandry. Finally, it offers a plea to both men and women to take the issue seriously and work together to end the "gender war". Enjoy!Source: The New Hampshire [UNH school newspaper]

Title: Male Bashing: Today's Politically Correct Sport?

Author: Scott Garman

Date: March 23, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/28/0355256.shtml

Key Congressional Hearing for Men's Health

Scott · 28 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America writes, "Next Wednesday, April 4, the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Health will be holding a hearing for the National Institutes of Health. The topic of the hearing will be "Special Populations." This will be a critical hearing in our battle to overcome the exclusion of men from NIH research studies. In the next few days, I will be asking you to (you guessed it!) make a phone call, write a letter, and fax your letter to one of the members of the House Appropriations Committee." Update: click here for the MHA announcement of what you can do to help! A little bit of effort now will go a long way at this point in the activism campaign.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/28/1335216.shtml

Males as Predators

Scott · 29 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h submitted this link to Kathleen Parker's latest editorial in Town Hall. In it, she discusses the policy of British Airways to seat men away from children who are flying alone, and an incident at a Target store where a single dad was hassled for helping his 8 year-old daughter try on clothes in a dressing room. Parker puts it well when she says, "In our hypervigilant world of zero tolerance, pedophiliac paranoia and incest sensitivity, everyone's a pervert until proven innocent. If you've had the extremely bad judgment to be born a male, you're automatically suspicious."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/28/1353256.shtml

Reading, Writing, and Ritalin

Scott · 29 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Sydney Morning Herald printed a story with a lot of statistics about Ritalin use among children in Australia. "For the first time, the data breaks down the use of Ritalin and dexamphetamine by age group - and reveals a ninefold increase in their use between 1990 and 2000. The prescription rate is four times higher for boys, but is growing for girls, and any NSW [New South Wales] primary classroom has a one-in-two chance of including a child taking drugs for the condition." This alarming trend is out of control and has got to be challenged. Source: Sydney Morning Herald [Australian newspaper]

Title: In 2001, it's readin', writin' and Ritalin

Author: Julie Robotham

Date: March 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/29/0242215.shtml

Feminism and Pornography

Scott · 29 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User sent in this link to an article by Jim Peron. It is an overview of feminism's relationship with pornography, and the controversies it has caused within the women's movement. Peron's analysis of two major anti-porn figures, Andrea Dworkin and Catharine MacKinnon, is well researched and excellently written. Regardless of your own views on pornography, this article gives some interesting background and information about current arguments over porn and free speech.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/29/0249249.shtml

Man's Attempt to Stop Girlfriend's Abortion Denied

Scott · 30 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC sent me a link to this story from The Scotsman, which follows up to the earlier news we had reported on about a man who legally tried to stop his girlfriend from getting an abortion. The court apparently granted him an injunction to keep her from doing so, but she aborted the fetus anyway. The article didn't make it sound like Stephen Hone had any further legal right to sue for damages, or that he was planning on doing so. As I had said before, while the case brought up the fact that men have no reproductive rights currently, the issue we need to address is ending the ability for men or women to force their partner into parenthood. Source: The Scotsman [UK newspaper]

Title: Man loses his battle to stop girlfriend's abortion

Author: Tanya Thompson

Date: March 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/29/0259247.shtml

Child Support Guidelines: Research and Analysis

Scott · 30 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User writes "While attending a meeting of the Massachusetts Joint Committee on the Judiciary which was addressing, among other things, the issue of child support and child custody, I was given a link to this page. Being a divorced Dad in Massachusetts, I was very interested in the section on how Massachusetts stacked up against other states. As one would expect, not very well."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/30/0035225.shtml

Men's Committee Bill Passes NH House

Scott · 30 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A group of pro-male activists led by the New Hampshire chapter of NCFC has been making extensive progress in the NH legislature. Earlier we reported that a report was written up on the Status of Men in NH, and as of late the group has been pushing for a full-fledged Commission on the Status of Men. They have just reached a major success, having Bill HB587 passed in the House by a vote of 182 to 145. Read the text of the bill by clicking "Read More" below.

>HB 587-FN-A - AS AMENDED BY THE HOUSE

>22mar01...0364h

>2001 SESSION

> name=P6_62>01-0780

>10/01

>HOUSE
BILL>
587-FN-A

>AN
ACT establishing a commission on the status of men, and making an appropriation therefor.

> name=P13_183>SPONSORS: Rep. Bickford, Straf 1; Rep. Jacobson, Merr 2; Rep. Dickinson, Carr 2; Rep. Gilmore, Straf 11; Rep. Zolla, Rock 13; Sen. Boyce, Dist 4

> name=P15_326>COMMITTEE: Executive Departments and Administration

> name=P18_376>AMENDED ANALYSIS

>This bill establishes a commission on the status of men to address issues of cultural bias and stereotyping, health problems unique to men, and methods for encouraging personal growth.

>An appropriation for each of the next 2 fiscal years is made from the general fund for the purposes of the commission.

>The commission is terminated on September 1, 2009.

>- - - - - - - - - - -
- -
- -

>Explanation: Matter added to current law appears in bold italics.

>Matter removed from current law appears [~~in brackets and struckthrough.~~]

>Matter which is either
(a) all new or (b) repealed and reenacted appears in regular type>.

>22mar01...0364h

>01-0780

>10/01

>STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

>In the Year of Our Lord Two Thousand One

>AN ACT establishing a commission on the status of men, and making an appropriation therefor.

>Be it Enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court convened:

>1 Purpose. The general court recognizes men as an important resource for their families and children and wishes to explore the causes and consequences of a variety of social, economic and health problems currently facing men, and make recommendations for relief. Specifically, the general court recognizes that fatherlessness is a severe social problem and New Hampshire children who have a poor or non-existent relationship with their father are the largest users of state-funded juvenile services. In addition, the health of men whose average life expectancy was formerly on a par with that of women are now dying 10 years sooner with much higher rates of suicide and mortality rates from the 15 leading causes of disease and accidents. And educationally, the general court recognizes the need to address the poor performance of boys in the areas of reading and language skills and increase the grade passage rate for boys while encouraging the pursuit of post-secondary degrees. Therefore, the general court recommends the establishment of a commission on the status of men.

>2 New Chapter; name=P47_2480>State Commission on the Status of Men. Amend RSA by inserting after chapter 19-H the following new chapter:

>CHAPTER
19-I

> name=P49_2600>STATE COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF MEN name=P49_2637>

>19-I:1 Commission
Established; Members; Appointment and Vacancy.

>I. There is hereby created a state commission on the status of men, hereinafter called the commission, consisting of 7 members.

>II. All members of the commission shall be appointed by the governor and council for terms of 3 years each, provided that the initial appointees to the commission shall serve the following terms:

>(a) The first 2 persons appointed shall serve one-year terms.

>(b) The second 2 persons appointed shall serve 2-year terms.

>(c) The last 3
persons appointed shall serve 3-year terms.

>III. At least one member shall be invited from the university system of New Hampshire.

>IV. If a vacancy occurs on the commission, the governor and council shall appoint a new member to fill the vacancy for the remainder of the term.

>19-I:2 Compensation.
The members of the commission shall receive no compensation and shall not be entitled to reimbursement for expenses but shall be entitled to reimbursement for mileage at the same rate provided for state employees.

>19-I:3 Officers. The governor and council shall designate the chairperson, vice-chairperson, secretary, and treasurer of the commission.

>19-I:4 Duties. The duties of the commission shall include, but not be limited to:

>I. Examining issues and effects of cultural biases and stereotyping beginning with childhood experiences and progress in public schools, and extending to include a study of male suicide and adult concerns such as family relations, promoting education and policies which bring fathers and children closer together.

>II. Studying health problems unique to men or which predominantly affect men, and making appropriate recommendations.

>III. Promoting initiatives and programs that will enable men to develop career skills and continue their education so that they become productive and responsible citizens.

>19-I:5 Cooperation.
The commission shall cooperate with any state or federal agency or any private organization in conducting investigations and studies in the area of the status of men. All state agencies shall assist the commission in carrying out its duties.

>19-I:6 Report. The commission shall submit a biennial report of its activities on or before November 1 to the governor and council, the commissioner of administrative services, the president of the senate, and the speaker of the house. The report shall include any recommendations the commission finds for the general court to consider.

>19-I:7 Authority to Accept Gifts. The commission may accept any gifts, donations, or grants from any source whatsoever provided the gifts, donations, or grants so received shall be used exclusively in the furtherance of the duties of the commission.

>19-I:8 Records. The commission shall file and keep its records in space and facilities made available for such purposes in the offices of the secretary of state by the secretary of state.

>19-I:9
Administratively Attached. The commission shall be administratively attached to the department of administrative services.

>3 Prospective Repeal of Chapter. RSA 19-I, relative to the state commission on the status of men, is repealed.

>4 Appropriation. The sum of $69,561 is hereby appropriated to the department of administrative services for the fiscal year ending June 30, 2002 and $62,008 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 2003 for the purposes of this act. The governor is authorized to draw a warrant for said sums out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

>5 Effective Date.

>I. Section 3 of this act shall take effect September 1, 2009.

>II. The remainder of this act shall take effect July 1, 2001.

>LBAO

>01-0780

>1/31/01

>HB 586-FN-A - FISCAL NOTE

>AN ACT establishing a commission on the status of men, and making an appropriation therefor.

>FISCAL IMPACT:

>The Department of Administrative Services stated this bill would increase state general fund expenditures by $69,561 in FY 2002, $62,008 in FY 2003, $64,567 in FY 2004, and $67,237 in FY 2005. There will be no fiscal impact on state, county and local revenue or county and local expenditures.

>This bill appropriates $50,000 each year in FY 2002 and FY 2003 in state general funds to the Department of Administrative Services for the purposes of this act.

>METHODOLOGY:

>The Department stated this bill would establish a commission on the status of men and appropriate $50,000 from the general fund in FY 2002 and FY 2003 for the purposes of the commission. The Department states in order for the commission to fulfill its mission, including the submission of a biennial report, an executive director position (LG 24), office space, equipment and supplies will be needed. In addition, commission members will receive mileage reimbursement (currently $.345 per mile). The Department assumes annual steps for the executive director, benefits at 32% of salary, mileage increases of $.005 annually, and a 3% annual increase for rent, telephone/fax services, and supplies. The costs are estimated as follows:

>FY2002 FY2003 FY2004 FY2005

>Salary (LG24) $35,334 $36,933 $38,610 $40,365

>Benefits (32%) 11,307 11,819 12,355 12,917

>Mileage 3,312 3,360 3,408 3,456

>Rent 4,608 4,746

4,889 5,035

>Supplies 4,000 4,120
4,244 4,371

>Telephone/Fax 1,000
1,030 1,061 1,093

>Office Equipment
5,000 0 0 0

>Computer Equip.
5,000 0 0 0

>Total Costs $69,561
$62,008 $64,567 $67,237

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/30/1443257.shtml

The Least Talked About Male Health Issue

Scott · 31 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl wrote up a review of last Friday's episode of 20/20 on the ABC television network. It covered an issue you won't find much talk about these days - gynecomastia. Assuming you haven't heard of the term before (I hadn't), gynecomastia is the medical condition of having enlarged male breasts. It is obviously a very embarrassing problem for men, and if you click "Read More" below you can view Bill's comments on the program and an overview of gynecomastia. And kudos to 20/20 for their informative and sensitive coverage of the topic. Let's Hear It for ABC's 20/20!

What is the least talked about male health problem? Prostate enlargement? Testicular cancer? Most likely it's neither of these. ABC's "20/20" had a segment last Friday on what it may very well be - it's medical term is gynecomastia, more commonly referred to as "enlarged male breasts." The segment was straightforward in its examination of this extremely embarrassing problem - as one of the the interviewees stated, men with enlarged breasts have to do an excellent job concealing their chest size. For the record, we are talking about men with what look like small female breasts. As "20/20" pointed out, this is not the same as the temporary condition experienced by some teen males due to raging hormones nor is it the "flabby" looking chest of severely overweight men. This is a permanent condition that will not decrease in size, no matter how much a man exercises. The only medical answer, per the report, appears to be "a liposuction-type of procedure" performed by a plastic surgeon. In the segment, a New York plastic surgeon by the name of Dr. Eliot Jacobs was interviewed along with a couple of his patients. Jacobs, himself a sufferer of the condition, has performed the surgical procedure on hundreds of men. Overall, "20/20" was very respectful of the men who spoke about their embarrassment over their chest size, and the men were very forthcoming. As a result, this straightforward, responsibly handled segment should help other men to feel the courage to come forward and get help. Thank you "20/20!"

(By the way, please don't be confused by the term "gynecomastia" - it can refer to most any mass of unwanted tissue in the male chest. I once had a gynecomastia; it was nothing more than a very small, hard lump under one of my nipples, the result of some medication I had been on. Please remember that the men in this segment had what looked like permanent small, female breasts - which also are referred to as "gynecomastia." For more information, many websites can be found on the subject by simply putting "gynecomastia" into a search engine.)

Bill Kuhl

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/30/0118257.shtml

Columbia University Considers Reforming Sex Discipline Code

Scott · 31 March 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Last fall, we reported on the appalling actions of Columbia University's administration to pass a new Sex Discipline Policy that removes several fundamental rights of the accused in rape trials. Since then, a great deal of pressure has been put on Columbia, particularly by FIRE (The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education). After failing to participate in a public discussion or Fox television interview on the policy, the directors of SAFER (an anti-rape program on campus) have called for a reform of the policy in the school's newspaper. Nothing has been done yet, but it looks like an opportunity for change. Read the latest update on the story here.Source: FIRE (The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education)

Date: March 13, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/03/31/1451251.shtml

One Man's "Psycho" Ex-girlfriend

Scott · 1 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Dave Burroughs writes, "Check this out: www.psychoexgirlfriend.com. They had this guy on Fox News the other night. His ex girlfriend kept calling him with her threats and pleadings - sometimes several times a day for months. He got sick of it and set up this website. He has .mp3 files recorded from his phone message machine and has posted them unedited on his site. No doubt the feminists have some explanation for her behavior that lays the blame squarely on him." The audio files of her phone messages are extremely disturbing, hateful, hurtful, and manipulative. Don't listen to them if you have a weak stomach.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/01/0238224.shtml

How Hillary's Village Raises Eminem

Adam · 1 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Regular readers will love this commentary by Debbie Schlussel on how fatherlessness makes men like Eminem. As this quote puts it, "It should be no surprise, in this world where Hillary Clinton tells us, "It Takes a Village [to raise your children]," that the child becomes a village idiot." The commentary is one of the most enjoyably vicious articles I've ever read in defense of fathers and to a lesser degree men in general. By the way can you give Debbie an Email of thanks and ask her for more articles like this? It's a small thing to do to encourage her to writ more articles like this. Source: WorldNetDaily

Title: Hillary's village raises Eminem

Author: Debbie Schlussel

Date: March 2, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/01/0842239.shtml

Adam to Take Over for Scott This Week

Scott · 2 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Due to a hair-pulling deadline I have this week (yes, yet another!), I will be unable to post new stories to Mensactivism.org until the weekend. However, Adam, my lead co-administrator, will be taking over for the week and the site will still be updated with news. I'll be forwarding any e-mail news submissions to Adam, and if I seem a bit sluggish in responding to e-mail, please bear with me. Thanks to everyone who visits this site and especially thanks to Adam for filling in for me!

- Scott

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/01/2037225.shtml

Raider of the Lost Patriarch

Adam · 2 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Patricia Hausman, a member of the Independent Women's Forum has written a culture essay debunking Women's History Month, explaining how Marxist-feminists are the ones running the show. It also has an excellent counter argument against "men's dominance." What is that counter argument, you ask? You'll have to click here to find out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/02/120252.shtml

Why Boys Are The Way They Are

Adam · 3 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Warren Farrell has just written a new article on his website, and as usual he defines the problems boys face with superb clarity and insight. He goes on to explain the double standards boys face and offers solutions for their problems, to quote him "When we seek to find boy's inner world, we will give a gift to our sons in the 21st Century." As always, he shows sensitivity to both sides of the issue, so be certain you read the article as soon as you can.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/02/2017212.shtml

Women Who Love Men

Scott · 3 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron writes "I'm setting up a small web site to list and honor some of the women who are either strong critics of feminism, or involved in the men's movement somehow. Its not meant to be a resource as such, more a sort of "thank you". Please have a look, and add some more recommendations to the guestbook. Click here: Women Who Love Men"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/02/2141252.shtml

ABA Journal Prints Interesting Article On DNA Evidence

Scott · 3 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "Here's an interesting article on DNA evidence and it's gradual acceptance as an important tool not only to fight crime but to protect the innocent. The article mentions false accusations of rape. Click here for the ABA Journal article."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/03/1431213.shtml

Ex-husband, Not Ex-father

Adam · 4 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article is quite a surprise in that it's an open discussion in a UK newspaper about fathers after divorce. I've never seen such an open article about the problems fathers face after divorce - it's an excellent sign that things are starting to improve for men and fathers, so don't lose hope. Read it here as it's well worth it.Source: The Independent [UK newspaper]

Title: Ex-husband, not ex-father

Author: Unknown

Date: April 2, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/04/1015204.shtml

Garbage In, Gigantic Wage Gap Out

Adam · 5 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Yes, it's Patricia Hausman again, and she's gotten more vicious than ever as she debunks the wage gap myth in her casual and methodical manner. As the subtitle says "Garbage in, gigantic wage gap out" so don't forget to read the article when you can.
Source: National Review

Title: I Am Woman, Hear Me Whine

Author: Patricia Hausman

Date: April 3, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/04/2050254.shtml

From The Personal To The Political

Adam · 5 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Written by Erin Pizzey, this essay explains the history of the women's movement and points out some of links with communism she found in the movement. The article's an excellent read with many great insights into things she found out by working "behind the scenes." For example, in this quote, "there were just as many women pedophiles as there were men...women go undetected as usual" she explains from her experience working on child abuse cases, etc, so check the article to find out more.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/05/127227.shtml

UCLA Daily Bruin - Which Sex Does "The Work of the World?"

Scott · 5 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes *"Glenn Sacks, a key activist in L.A. who sparked furor at UCLA for twice debunking the rigged "one in four" rape myth, has written another ground-breaking article. This one responds to a feminist professor's claim that "it is women who do the work of the world." Borrowing from Warren Farrell's Women Can't Hear What Men Don't Say, Sacks helps expose the falsified data from the U.N. that women work "more hours" than men internationally. Sacks is upset, though, that the editors titled his article "Women Don't Do The Work of the World, Men Do," explaining he meant to argue that BOTH sexes do the work of the world. Is the title accurate? And if not, was it careless error, or sabotage? You be the judge."*Source: The Daily Bruin [UCLA campus newspaper]

Title: Women don't do the work of the world, men do

Author: Glenn Sacks

Date: April 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/05/1645244.shtml

Male Sexual Papers

Scott · 6 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Lander writes "Hi, I found your web site while doing a search for another topic. But I know of another site that might be of interest to fellow readers of Mensactivism.org. It has a lot of really good information about male sexual issues, including a lot of taboo or scared to ask about topics. Women could also use the page to understand their partner's sometimes confusing actions. The link to the page is here. Also, keep up the good work on this site. Its one site that I visit several times daily." This is definitely a site that many men will appreciate - it is completely honest about male sexuality (whether bi, straight, or gay) and is not crude or degrading to men. I'm categorizing it under "Men's health" because male sexuality is an issue directly related to men's health.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/05/2033212.shtml

Proving Daniel Amneus Right: Part 2

Adam · 6 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The article I've found here sounds a lot like a feminist utopia: "In the Mosuo language there are no words for father, illegitimacy, single mother, widow, jealousy, virgin, or monogamy. The explanation is simple: these concepts do not exist." This is exactly what Daniel Amneus tells us what will happen to Western men unless something is done to stop it. Read his books The Garbage Generation and also download The Case for Father Custody to find out just how his writings are starting to become a disturbing reality.Source: The Telegraph [UK newspaper]

Title: Chinese men threaten 'lake of free love' where women rule

Author: Damien McElroy

Date: March 25, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/06/1732235.shtml

Being Arrested for Name Calling

Scott · 7 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User sent me this link to a story in the UK Spectator. It's about a man who was arrested for "aggravated harassment" because he had called his ex-girlfriend names when they had broken up months ago. From the article: "In America these days, it seems, being politically incorrect is against the law...when a woman is being hysterical and indecisive should the law really give her all of the leverage? If a woman is still choosing to sleep with an ex boyfriend, to return his telephone calls and emails, to meet with him and discuss matters at hand, is it particularly fair to say that the victim is in fact a victim?" Source: The Specator [UK magazine]

Title: Smashmouth!

Author: Benjamin Aldo

Date: April 7, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/06/1754220.shtml

Ritalin Abuse Is Government Child Abuse

Adam · 7 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Thomas Sowell has written this article explaining the dangers of Ritalin and of government intrusion into family life. "Claims that "studies prove" the need for Ritalin are far less convincing when you realize how often studies have "proven" one thing, only to have later studies prove the opposite. Parents and voters need to wake up to the dangerous extension of government despotism into the family."

Source: NewsMax.com

Title: Ritalin Abuse Is Government Child Abuse

Author: Thomas Sowell

Date: August 16, 2000

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/07/1130250.shtml

Schools Ever More Boy-unfriendly

Scott · 8 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An article from the National Post discusses the numerous ways in which schools have become more unfriendly to boys and the ways boys are seriously lagging behind girls in the public education system. It's a short article that does an overview of the issues at hand, but I thought a couple of good quotes/facts where included in the article, such as, "[schools have been called] "the most boy-unfriendly places on Earth"...[there are] institutions where the budget for the equity office may exceed the budget for the library to purchase books. Where administrators turn a blind eye to academic offences such as cheating, but come down hard on any student who might give a sexist chant at a football game."Source: National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Schools ever more boy-unfriendly

Author: Ian Hunter

Date: April 3, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/08/1447246.shtml

Retiring MA Judge Admits Restraining Orders are Routinely Abused

Scott · 9 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Massachusetts News is reporting that Judge Malcolm Jones, a retiring judge in Bristol County Probate Court, is openly claiming that restraining orders (or 209A's, as the are officially called), are routinely administered indiscriminately by judges. He was quoted as saying, "It's a necessary law, but it's an abused one. I've seen it used too many times as leverage in divorce cases, not for women in imminent fear of physical danger. One third of them are not legitimate, merely used as an "I'll fix you."" A lawyer was also quoted as saying, "they are issued like candy. It's a rare case that they won't be issued as long as somebody says the magic word, "I've been hit" or "I've been threatened." Unless that person has three heads or something really incredible like that, a District Court judge is going to issue them." Source: The Massachusetts News [newspaper]

Title: Retiring Judge Reveals that Restraining Orders Are Huge Problem [sidebar title]

Author: Unknown

Date: April 2, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/08/1510227.shtml

Mixed Messages About Fathers' Role in Childbirth

Scott · 10 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I have to admit, I am more than a bit confused and frustrated with this article by Betsy Hart, from the Union Leader. Hart comes down hard on men who are expected to take time off of work to be present when their wife gives birth, and it's apparent that Hart thinks men's place is at work and women's is childrearing. She does make the comment that "Hey, if a husband really wants to be in the delivery room, OK," but she obviously is somewhat repulsed by the idea. What do you make of this?Source: Union Leader [newspaper]

Title: The single place men are needed

Author: Betsy Hart

Date: April 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/10/1638254.shtml

Prostate Cancer and Race

Scott · 11 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America submitted this link to a news article about prostate cancer prevalence and treatment rates. It set out to investigate to what extent socioeconomic factors affect the higher death rates of prostate cancer in men of different races. The study raised some new questions about the cancer in black men, as socioeconomic factors did not explain the increased prevalence (but did explain the difference for Hispanic men). Source: The Albuquerque Journal [newspaper]

Title: Prostate Cancer Study Leads to Questions

Author: Jackie Jadrnak

Date: March 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/10/2019211.shtml

Gender Politics and Young Children

Scott · 11 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Cathy Young wrote an excellent article for Reason magazine about the current "gender warfare" going on about socializing children. She begins by discussing Jane Fonda's recent donation to Harvard for a program on gender studies, and does a balanced job reporting the current trends and how this field is being applied to children. "It's clear that the proposed interdisciplinary Center on Gender and Education will pursue not only academic research but also a social agenda...Maybe the real danger is that, in these ideological gender wars, the needs of children of both sexes will take a back seat to scoring points in the debate." Source: Reason [magazine]

Title: Children and the Gender Wars

Author: Cathy Young

Date: April 2, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/10/2039215.shtml

Mensactivism.org Reviewed in Nashville Scene

Scott · 11 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

James Hanback, Jr. reviewed a group of pro-male web sites for his Online column in the Nashville Scene, an alternative newspaper. Mensactivism.org is included in the review, as well as several other great sites for men. You can read his article here. As he points out, "it's the Internet that is giving the greatest rise to men's causes, providing the widest forum for the discussion of these issues." From Hanback's discussion of what "men's issues" are in the article, he's obviously someone who "gets it." Source: Nashville Scene [newspaper]

Title: Men Spin - Enough of ivillage; where are the Web sites for men?

Author: James Hanback, Jr.

Date: April 12-18, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/11/216230.shtml

Online Debate on Men's Health Research

Scott · 12 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The Society for Women's Health Research posted Fallacies and Facts about Women's and Men's Health to dispute many of the claims about gender health research disparities. In response, Dr. Ed Bartlett of Men's Health America posted these point-by-point refutations. This important debate is thankfully taking place in what seems to be a very professional manner. The arguments provide excellent material for research, op-eds and letters to editors."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/12/039212.shtml

Boys Need Male Teachers for Most Effective Learning

Scott · 12 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Sydney Morning Herald printed this story which explains that young boys strongly need male mentors and teachers to learn most effectively, particularly about male identity. "There were important aspects of learning connected to boys' sense of male identity which could not be adequately addressed without the involvement of men...Of course, females make excellent teachers for boys...However, there are important aspects of learning connected to boys' sense of male identity which cannot be adequately addressed without the involvement of older males." It's a common-sense notion that we would do well to heed. Source: The Sydney Morning Herald [Australian newspaper]

Title: Yes, sir, boys need a man about the classroom

Author: Unknown (Australian Associated Press?)

Date: April 6, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/12/1445246.shtml

Women's Health: $27M; Men's Health: $0

Scott · 13 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There seems to be a surge of stories about boy's issues and men's health recently. Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America writes, "DHHS Secretary Tommy Thompson has just released his proposed budget for Fiscal Year 2002. His budget includes $0 for an Office of Men's Health. In contrast, the DHHS Office of Women's Health is slated for a whopping $10 million increase, from $17 million in FY 2001 to $27 million in FY 2002." Click here to find out what you can do about this problem.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/12/1452213.shtml

"SANE Nurse" Testimony Undermined in VA Rape Trials

Scott · 13 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Washington Post is reporting that the testimony of Sexual Assault Nurse Examiners (SANEs) can no longer be considered scientific evidence in rape trials in Fairfax County, VA. These nurses examine the victim immediately after an alleged rape and can supposedly tell whether sex was consentual or not. One defense attortney quoted in the article said: "It turns out our SANE nurses here have taken their conclusions far beyond what the research says." A deputy's attorney also noted, "when consent is the ultimate issue, experts shouldn't be allowed to testify either way...It's for the jury to decide." I'm inclined to agree. Source: The Washington Post

Title: When Rape Is in Question, So Are Nurses' Answers

Author: Tom Jackman

Date: April 2, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/13/0314240.shtml

Great Story on False Rape Charges and DNA Evidence

Scott · 13 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes *"Here is a great article in the New Times LA about Jeffrey Grant, who spent months in prison on rape convictions that were later overturned by DNA evidence. Grant won a $1.7 million judgment against the city as a result. Justin Brooks of the Innocence Project says that, of the cases in which the Project uses DNA to prove that a convicted person is innocent, 85% were convictions based on eyewitness testimony."*Source: New Times L.A. [newspaper]

Title: The Rapist Who Wasn't

Author: Michael Gougis

Date: April 12, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/13/004259.shtml

New Poll Ideas?

Scott · 14 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Hey, we've been running this web poll for a few months now, and I was wondering if anyone had any ideas about a new poll to run. Either e-mail them to me at scott@mensactivism.org or post them as a comment to this message. Thanks!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/14/0023203.shtml

IL Lawsuit Over "Ladies Night" Discounts at Night Clubs

Scott · 15 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h submitted this link to a Chicago Tribune article about a civil lawsuit being filed by a man upset that women receive discounts routinely at night clubs. He's claiming that it's sex discrimination along the same lines that women have won lawsuits about the different pricing of haircuts or dry cleaning for men and women. The article ends with a somewhat ironic statement that the man filing suit "would rather spend the extra money I'm charged at the door to buy women drinks at the bar." I guess while he's against businesses discriminating against men, he doesn't mind cultural discrimination against men. (!)Source: Chicago Tribune

Title: Suit aims to bar 'ladies' nights'

Author: Dan Mihalopoulos

Date: April 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/15/0119208.shtml

MHA/SWHR Debate Publicized with Press Release

Scott · 16 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Men's Health America has upped the ante in the debate about gender health research disparities that adversely affect men. We reported on the debate which is ongoing with the Society for Women's Health Research. Now, MHA has issued a press release to help thrust this debate into the public spotlight. Seeing that the facts are easily researchable and that we have the truth on our side, this was a very wise thing to do. You can read the press release by clicking "Read More" below...For Immediate Release: Friday, April 13, 2001

Contact: Barbara Oldroyd

WOMEN'S GROUP DISPUTES NIH "RETRACTION"

Rockville, MD -- A leading women's health research organization has disputed the statement that the National Institutes of Health has "retracted" prior claims that women were "routinely excluded" from medical research.

The Society for Women's Health Research, a Washington, DC-based group, recently released a statement that the NIH Office of Research on Women's Health "did not retract any statements regarding the historical inclusion of women in clinical trials." The statement can be found at www.womens-health.org/menshealth.html.

The Society also defended the fact that male participation in NIH-funded studies has fallen from 45% to 32% in recent years, and that female-only studies now outnumber male-only studies by a 3:1 margin. The SWHR downplayed the fact that only 1.5% and of eligible men, vs. 4.0% of eligible women, participate in cancer clinical trials. The Society also calls it a "fallacy" that men face twice the risk of dying of heart disease as women.

The response of Men's Health America can be found at http://groups.yahoo.com/group/menshealth/message/302.

# #

Men's Health America is dedicated to understanding the 6-year gap in male life expectancy, and its effects on women and children. MHA is a research and education organization based in Rockville, Maryland.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/15/1457212.shtml

Reader's Digest Bashes Fathers

Scott · 16 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "In the April, 2001 issue of Reader's Digest there is an article [not available on-line] entitled "Pay-Up Time for Deadbeat Dads." The article completely ignores reality, such as that fathers have a better record of paying court-ordered child support than mothers do, or that, of non-custodial dads without employment problems and who have access to their children, over 80% pay in full and only 5% don't pay at all. (Sanford Braver, "Divorced Dads.") Instead it presents things in the same one-sided, misandrist manner that the average major media article typically does. You can write a letter to the editor here."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/16/034244.shtml

New Approach to Rape Awareness Causes Controversy

Scott · 17 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Thomas Golden from Webhealing.com submitted this story from the Washington Post. It's about rape awareness groups that have shifted focus from blaming men and putting them on the defensive to encouraging men to empathize with women who are raped and viewing men as "helpers" who can work to stop rape. However, the approaches described in the article still portray men as the empowered group and strive to "reconstruct" masculinity. It also uses examples of male rape not to raise awareness of this neglected issue, but to try to "put men in women's shoes" to understand what rape is like for women. Despite the fact I still see the campaign as implicitly anti-male, women's groups have largely attacked the program for promoting male-only groups of activists and not coming down hard enough on men. Go figure.Source: The Washington Post [newspaper]

Title: Campus Efforts To Prevent Rape Changing Focus

Author: Amy Argetsinger

Date: April 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/16/2039218.shtml

Men: Guilty Until Proven Innocent

Scott · 17 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

For my third article in my men's issues column for the UNH school newspaper, The New Hampshire, I wrote about a challenging topic - advocating the rights of men accused of rape and sexual harassment. I mentioned the news about Columbia University's draconian sex discipline code, and explained how men are routinely denounced when accused of a sex crime, even when few people know what the facts of the case really are. Read the article here.
Source: The New Hampshire [UNH school newspaper]

Title: Men: Guilty Until Proven Innocent

Author: Scott Garman

Date: April 13, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/17/1421223.shtml

Women As Warriors?

Scott · 17 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Both frank h and Sergei Hoff himself wrote in to inform me of Hoff's latest column in Toogood Reports. The article is a scathing criticism of compromising military standards for the sake of allowing women into combat positions in the U.S. armed forces. The issue is, of course, very controversial from a men's rights standpoint. On the one hand, our freedom could be at risk if we don't have a military which is anything less than the best, but many of us also see male-only military enrollment as evidence that men's lives are less important and as a gender we are "disposable" in wars. This is a conflict that I have yet to resolve for myself. Source: Toogood Reports

Title: Size 6 Combat Boots

Author: Sergei Hoff

Date: April 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/16/215259.shtml

How "Gender Equity" Killed Male Athletics

Scott · 18 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h submitted this link from Reason Magazine and writes *"I haven't read this yet; I just found it. But as I go to colleges with my daughter, I see the diminished opportunities for men in collegiate sports: the programs just aren't there. Yet the effort and expense the colleges go to in populating women's teams is unbelievable. Mediocre girls who clearly aren't as enthralled by sport are being offered full scholarships just to show up. The poor ratings and ticket sales of the WNBA should be an example. The right answer is clear: each candidate athlete ought to have the same chance of being EXCLUDED. That way, athletics would be funded on real student interest, not political correctness."*Source: Reason [magazine]

Title: Title IX's Pyrrhic Victory

Author: Michael Lynch

Date: April 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/17/2131229.shtml

Gender Differences in Stress

Scott · 18 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes *"In a recent issue of the American Journal of Psychiatry, a study was done to examine whether one gender or the other reported exposure to a greater number of life stresses, or reported greater likelihood of depression in response to stress. Thus, the authors examine the "cost of caring" hypothesis, in which women are thought to be more prone to depression because they have a greater emotional investment in their social networks. Results: Men were more likely to report stresses such as occupational problems, job loss, legal problems, and being robbed. Women were more likely to report stresses from conflict, crisis, or illness in their support network. Results were seen as consistent with gender role expectations. There was no indication that women experienced more stresses or were more sensitive to stress. An abstract of the article can be found here."*Source: American Journal of Psychiatry

Title: Gender Differences in the Rates of Exposure to Stressful Life Events and Sensitivity to Their Depressogenic Effects

Author: Kenneth S. Kendler, M.D., Laura M. Thornton, Ph.D. and Carol A. Prescott, Ph.D.

Date: April 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/18/1320216.shtml

Few Turn Out to Meet Patricia Ireland

Scott · 19 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron writes *"An article by the Boston Globe entitled, "On campuses, fewer rallying for feminism" records a turn out of only about 40 women when Patricia Ireland, president of NOW, came to the all-female college at Wellesley. The article briefly discusses the reasons for the dwindling interest in feminism. As you can guess men are partly to blame, even at an all woman college!"*Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: On campuses, fewer rallying for feminism

Author: Farah Stockman

Date: April 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/19/112223.shtml

Article on NOW Controversy Distorts the Truth

Scott · 19 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes *"Wired News printed an article on how NOW is creating controlled internet forums to avoid the "misogynist talk," "hate" and "verbal abuse" they allegedly receive in their internet forums. If some people were rude in the NOW forums, they should not be. But I have seen NOW take down messages from David Byron and others that were very polite attempts to engage in meaningful dialogue on the issues. NOW is telling half-truths and falsehoods as usual to justify their aversion to debate. If NOW wants to create controlled environments with no controversy for purposes of supportive discussion, that is wonderful. But if they are doing it just to avoid debate, which is very apparent, then they should be honest about it rather than lying and male-bashing to justify their cowardice. And the media should give balanced coverage of it by getting both sides of the story, which they did not. You can write a letter to the Wired News editor here newsfeedback@wired.com."*Source: Wired News

Title: NOW Provides Shelter From Scorn

Author: Robin Clewley

Date: April 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/19/1157215.shtml

Schuett Leaves The Liberator

Scott · 20 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "Trudy W. Schuett has left the Liberator, a print men's issues magazine, citing personal reasons. She intends to continue supporting the men's movement through other projects, such as The Moms for Dad's Rights Yahoo Club, The Men in Crisis Prayer Circle, and a projected book co-authored with AZFather's Rights Org member David Hamu. She will also begin publication of a bi-weekly e-zine called, The DesertLight Journal. The DesertLight Journal will focus on the issues of domestic violence and divorce/child custody, and the people and groups behind these issues. The DesertLight Journal will encourage new writers, and will often feature essays and articles written by former contributors to the now-defunct Themestream.com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/19/1241235.shtml

The Death of the UK Government's "Women's Unit"

Scott · 20 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Jonathan writes *"This is a short article highlighting the fact that for once, the UK Labour Government is removing a useless layer of bureaucracy, the Women's Unit. Unfortunately, despite accepting the fact that it was an embarrassment, derided by both men and women, they are still going to press ahead with positive discrimination for women in Government. This will be achieved by installing far more women ministers in the next Government, irrespective of ability. Click here for the link."*Source: The Daily Telegraph [UK News]

Title: The Women's Unit RIP

Author: Unknown

Date: April 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/20/0224216.shtml

Male Suicide in Australia

Scott · 20 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

bernee writes "The high level of suicide in Australia in males aged 29-30 is noted in this article from The Canberra Times. No mention is made as to how to counter this trend nor the reasons for it." Well, I suppose acknowledging the problem is the first step, but not even offering any kind of explanation for the reasons behind it does seem kind of callous on this critical issue. Source: The Canberra Times [Australian Newspaper]

Title: Men 'four times more likely to suicide'

Author: Unknown

Date: Unknown

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/20/1425214.shtml

Director Battles Paternity Fraud in Court

Scott · 21 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Carnell Smith submitted this press release. It outlines Smith's Georgia court session where he explains how he was frauded into fatherhood. From the release, "We don't know and we won't have an answer from the Judge until he completes his review. There was one great victory for Smith, the mother's attorney admitted in open court "they do not want future child support" and the judge replied "I understand that child support is waived". The court recessed after conflicting testimony of the mother and her best friend. Smith observed several members of GA Dept of Human Resources present at the trial, along with 20(?) supporters of CAPF and other interested parties."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/21/0241255.shtml

Liberté! Egalité! Stupidité!

Adam · 22 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Patricia Hausman is on a roll lately with her latest article about the futility of creating equality of outcomes: "Like any good gender warrior, La Parité says it is motivated by the principle that the sexes deserve "equal representation" throughout society. Au contraire. The low number of females among prison inmates, workplace fatalities, and non-custodial parents does not trouble this crowd. It focuses solely on stations in life that involve money, power, and prestige. La parité, it seems, is French for a world where women are guaranteed at least half of the good stuff, and men most of the bad."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/21/1341204.shtml

USA Indifferent to Prison Rape of Men

Scott · 23 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "Here is an article I think you may find interesting about male-on-male rape in men's prisons in the USA." From the article: ""I have been sexually assaulted twice since being incarcerated. Both times the staff refused to do anything except to lock me up and make accusations that I'm homosexual...," wrote J.G. of Florida...."Roughly half of all states don't even gather specific data on prison rape. And those that do, the data is just not realistic," said Joanne Mariner, author of the report. "The fact that other states aren't even collecting the data shows that they are not taking the issue seriously.""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/22/1821238.shtml

International Reading Association Seeks Gender Issues Leader

Scott · 23 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h directed me to the International Reading Association's special interest group on Gender Issues in Reading Achievement and writes, "The person who currently chairs this group is unable to continue and the group is likely to fold. This is a wonderful opportunity to have a direct, positive effect on the success of males in reading education, especially considering the demonstrated poor performance of males in the recent NAEP results." Please consider volunteering if you have the background, and pass this information around to anyone you know who might be interested. Contact information is on the web page linked to above.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/23/1641222.shtml

Blaming Men for Women's Choices

Scott · 23 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC submitted this article from Town Hall and writes, "After years of attempting to educate women on the foolishness of having children out of wedlock, it would appear that the next step is to blame men. Suzanne Fields says that 1.3 million babies are born without fathers. Of course, these children have fathers -- it took two people to make a baby. What she really means is that either these women don't know who is the father of their children or that the father of their child is not married to them. Let's put the blame where it belongs, Suzanne!"Source: Town Hall

Title: Where have all the daddies gone?

Author: Suzanne Fields

Date: April 23, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/23/1647216.shtml

Tony Blair to Reserve Jobs for Women in Every Government Dept.

Scott · 24 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry submitted this story from the UK Telegraph. In Tony Blair's campaign for re-election, he has promised to reserve a position in every government department for a woman. This move is intended to "compensate" for the fact that he disbanded the women's unit, which we reported on earlier this month. (Warning: sarcasm ahead) It's nice to now that, in this day and age, gender discrimination is so unacceptable to our enlightened souls. Source: The Telegraph [UK newspaper]

Title: Blair to give women a job in every department

Author: Sarah Womack

Date: April 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/24/2058228.shtml

Take Back the Campus

Scott · 25 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy's ifeminist.com newsletter featured this web site by a woman who's had enough feminist propaganda thrown at her. It was described as, "Dedicated to advancing reason rather than feminist propaganda on campus. "Are you tired of male-bashing and victimology? Have you had your fill of feminist 'Ms./Information?' Have you been mislead by factually challenged professors?" Take their test and see if you need to be de-programmed."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/25/0412238.shtml

Violence Toward Men: Fact or Fiction?

Scott · 25 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Dr. Murray Straus e-mailed me about this report from the American Medical Association about violence against men. He wrote, "despite the title, [this report] presents a quite reasonable statement on male domestic violence victims. Since the AMA is such an authoritative source, you might want to look at it and quote from it, perhaps especially the recommendations at the end."Source: The American Medical Assocation

Title: Violence Toward Men: Fact or Fiction?

Author: The American Medical Association

Date: Unknown (1994?)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/25/1335211.shtml

Hopkins Researchers: Medical Research has Favored Women

Scott · 26 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Further evidence of bias against men in medical health research was noted in Ed Bartlett's MHA mailing list, message 319. "The journal, Statistics in Medicine*, has just published an important article that compares the number of single-sex studies done for men and women, and compares that number with the disease burden faced by both sexes. The study, "Estimation of Gender Bias in Clinical Trials" looks at articles published from 1966-1995. The article...concludes that while women were underrepresented in heart disease trials, men were underrepresented both in cancer and in other trials. The article further abolishes the myth that women were "routinely excluded" from medical research.*

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/25/1416233.shtml

MA Court Rules that Non-Bio Dads Must Still Pay Support

Scott · 26 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC and Jim Castelli submitted this link from the Boston Globe, a serious setback for male reproductive rights. Not PC writes, "The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court says that it doesn't matter if there is a biological connection of a man to a child, he's still the father. In other words, he's guilty of being a man. Women, on the other hand, can bear children from any man and never worry about getting paid for it. They can even get college expenses for those children in Massachusetts." "Guilty for being a man" is exactly right. Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: SJC says fatherhood goes past DNA test

Author: Kathleen Burge

Date: April 25, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/25/1716228.shtml

Jennifer Lopez, Porn, and the Hypocrisy of Equality

Scott · 26 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Elliot Zaret from TheGuyCode sent me a link to this article, which is superb. It discusses the hypocrisy of female stars, such as Jennifer Lopez, who complain about the way women are portrayed in film but then "flaunt their stuff" when it is to their advantage. The article is also interesting in that it is laid out as a dialogue between himself and Lisa Napoli, the co-author, with each side giving their own take on the issue. Both agree that women's sexual power is a very real force and one that isn't recognized as such these days. It's a great read. Source: The Guy Code

Title: Jennifer Lopez, Porn, and the Hypocrisy of Equality

Author: Lisa Napoli and Elliot Zaret

Date: April 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/26/1747234.shtml

APHA Newsletter Prints Facts About Health Research

Scott · 27 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from Men's Health America had an article (scroll to bottom of page) printed in the Spring 2001 issue of the American Public Health Association's Journal Section on Epidemiology. Ed tallied the participation in several key research areas, including heart disease, stroke, cancer, and injury, among others, demonstrating the fallacy that women were routinely discriminated against in health research. Check it out. Source: American Public Health Assocation Epidemiology Section Newsletter

Title: The Exclusion of Women from Medical Research: Perception vs. Reality

Author: Edward Bartlett

Date: Spring 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/26/0333259.shtml

Circumcision and Consent

Scott · 27 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

J. Steven Svoboda, Executive Director of Attorneys for the Rights of the Child (ARC) submitted an abstract of an article about the needless procedure of circumcision. "The article, "Informed Consent for Neonatal Circumcision-An Ethical and Legal Conundrum," appears in the Winter 2000 issue of the Journal of Contemporary Health Law and Policy." Click "Read More" below to view more info on this article and what it's all about. J. Steven Svoboda writes "Attorneys for the Rights of the Child
2961 Ashby Avenue, Berkeley, CA 94705 Fax/phone 510-595-5550

CONTACT: J. Steven Svoboda 510-595-5550 (arc@post.harvard.edu)

CIRCUMCISION: DOCTORS FAIL TO OBTAIN VALID CONSENT

Berkeley, CA - Doctors who circumcise infants violate the legal requirement of a valid, informed consent, thereby exposing themselves to lawsuits. That is the conclusion of an article recently published in a major legal journal by a team of lawyers and doctors.

The article, "Informed Consent for Neonatal Circumcision-An Ethical and Legal Conundrum" appears in the Winter 2000 issue of the Journal of Contemporary Health Law and Policy. It was written by J. Steven Svoboda, a Harvard-educated attorney and Executive Director of Attorneys for the Rights of the Child (ARC); Robert S. Van Howe, M.D., a pediatrician at the Marshfield Clinic - Lakeland Center in Minocqua, Wisconsin and Clinical Instructor at the Medical College of Wisconsin; and Assistant Professor James G. Dwyer of the William and Mary College of Law in Williamsburg, Virginia.

No physicians regard neonatal circumcision as necessary, according to the authors, and it is performed on newborns who are incapable of consenting to the procedure. Medical professionals routinely fail to provide parents of newborn boys with the information they need in order to make a knowledgeable decision about the surgery. By disregarding requirements for securing informed consent, doctors risk lawsuits from regretful parents and circumcised males. "Infant circumcision seriously breaches the child's rights and-even when uninformed parents ?consent? to the procedure--is utterly incompatible with the physician's legal and ethical duties toward the child patient," Svoboda said "A parent's consent cannot justify removal of healthy tissue - whether it be a finger, a breast, a clitoris, or a foreskin - without a valid medical reason."

Several circumcision cases have been settled or decided for significant sums, including a $10 million lawsuit by an Ohio boy who lost the tip of his penis in a circumcision which was settled in 1999. Cases are underway where parental consent was inadequately informed. The article lays the groundwork for legal challenges to "successful" circumcisions even where parents gave "informed consent." One such lawsuit is already underway on behalf of an 18-year-old man in New York.

Svoboda pointed out that the American Medical Association (AMA) and the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) both affirm the absence of any medical reason capable of justifying neonatal circumcision. Consent to such a procedure can never be given by the patient, the newborn infant, and no medical emergency exists. Also, non-medical cultural or religious norms are irrelevant to medical decision-making and cannot justify the procedure. Therefore no valid consent to newborn circumcision is possible."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/27/0243221.shtml

New Law Recognizes Fetuses as Persons

Scott · 27 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Spartacus and Not PC submitted this link to news that the Unborn Victims of Violence Act was recently passed, which will make it a federal crime to harm a pregnant woman, because the fetus also may be harmed. The bill specifically makes an exemption allowing for women to abort the "person," so there is a great deal of controversy over whether this is contradictory. It certainly seems so to me.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/27/1453234.shtml

Sex, Lies and Monogamy

Scott · 27 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

jonathan writes "This feature from New Scientist, taken from a review paper, reveals some interesting results relating to the biological basis for monogamous relationships." One has to wonder how much truth there are to stereotypes about men and women - I felt there were some really good points made in the article, but is biology really destiny? I guess it's up to us to decide.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/27/0248239.shtml

Columbia Student Speaks Out Against Rape Hysteria

Scott · 28 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Considering Columbia's new Sexual Misconduct Policy and the controversy it has created, the courage of student Jaime Sneider is even more awe inspiring. Sneider's NY Daily News article debunks the statistics used by the promoters of Columbia's Take Back the Night rally, including the "1 in 4" rape statistic and domestic violence myths. It seems that Jaime and I were thinking along the same lines recently (more about that on Monday). Source: New York Daily News [newspaper]

Title: At Columbia, Bad Lessons

Author: Jaime Sneider

Date: April 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/27/2352255.shtml

Proposed Harassment Policy Divides GWU

Scott · 28 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h submitted this article from the Washington Times. The article discusses a new controversial sexual harassment policy being drafted at George Washington University, which says that "faculty members accused of sexual harassment would not be told the identity of the accuser or the specific charges against them...teachers could be charged with sexual harassment if something they say in class can be construed as such." Frank writes "Again, we see that men are no longer afforded protection under the Fourteenth Amendment." Well, I'm hoping that since the faculty are the ones up in arms, that something will actually be done to stop this. The lack of student outrage about Columbia's rape policy is more than a bit disturbing.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/28/0249200.shtml

Book Review: Domestic Tranquility

Adam · 29 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a book review of Carolyn Graglia's Domestic Tranquility: A Brief Against Feminism it's quite an interesting read, as all the main points are well summarized.
Carolyn Graglia is a 72 year conservative who says of feminists that they are "borderline misogynistic" and with a lifetime of seeing social change behind her, this book might well be worth buying.Source: Front Page Magazine

Title: Sexual Counter-Revolution

Author: Robert Locke

Date: April 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/29/1718232.shtml

Divorced Parents Can be Forced to Pay College Tuition

Scott · 30 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC submitted a link to this story from the Oregon Live, regarding a recent OR Supreme Court Ruling that divorced parents can be forced to pay college expenses for their children, even though married couples are not required by law to do the same. The judge even admitted that it was discrimination, but discrimination with a "rational basis." I guess it must be "rational" to extend the "divorced-father-as-wallet" metaphor for as long as possible. And if you combine this with MA's recent Supreme Court ruling, you'd even get non-bio fathers to pay for their non-bio children's college expenses! This is surely the pinnacle of "rationality"...Source: Oregon Live [newspaper]

Title: Court: Divorced parents can be made to pay tuition

Author: Peter Farrell

Date: April 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/30/031217.shtml

Addressing Rape Without Alienating Men

Scott · 30 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

My latest article for the UNH school newspaper, The New Hampshire, has been printed. I must admit there was a bit of a struggle to get them to print this article, and it was assumed that my challenging of the "1 in 4" rape statistic was simply wrong, despite the fact that I included my source in the article. I ended up having to show up in person with photocopied sections of Who Stole Feminism? to demonstrate that I had the facts straight, and then they agreed to print the article. But that, of course, was after a week's delay. The on-line editor for the paper has left, so the article isn't on TNH's web site, but you can read it by clicking "Read More" below. Enjoy!

The following article appeared in the Friday, April 27, 2001 issue of The New Hampshire, the University of New Hampshire student-run newspaper:

Addressing Rape Without Alienating Men

by Scott Garman, TNH Columnist

The second part in a two part series about men and rape.

In part one of this series, I discussed how men are often considered "guilty until proven innocent" when accused of rape or sexual harassment, and the dangers of accepting this prejudice. As promised, this second part will focus on ways we can address the problem of rape without destroying men's rights or alienating men from participating in anti-rape groups. I came up with these four guidelines, which could serve as a basis for male-friendly activism campaigns to help spread awareness about the reality of rape and how to prevent it from happening in the first place.

1. Don't only portray men as powerful oppressors; most men aren't.

The radical feminist philosophy that men are sexual predators by nature pretty much kills all chances for men to participate in rape prevention, unless they're willing to continually grovel and apologize for their maleness. Today, no man has the right to tell a woman what to do, and it certainly is not culturally acceptable to do so. The idea of "male privilege" is a highly exaggerated concept, and one that doesn't recognize the many ways in which women have power over men.

2. Don't talk down to men. We really want to help.

I personally believe that if the condescending tone toward men were eliminated in rape awareness campaigns, participation by men would not decrease. It would increase. Many men naturally feel a strong sense of honor and dignity by participating in a social cause for the sake of the women they love. No one is ever going to argue against rape education programs if the programs are both pro-male and pro-female. If men and women could participate together and on the same terms in a rape awareness campaign, a lot of synergy would result.

3. Shock tactics trivialize rape and its effects.

SHARPP is not unlike many campus groups in that it uses the most shocking statistics in an attempt to motivate people to act. Many social activism groups know the power of statistics, and much "advocacy research" has been done. The famous Koss study by Ms. Magazine which came up with the "one in four" rape statistic stretched the meaning of rape in order to obtain this high number. In fact, of the rape "victims" in the Koss study, 42% subsequently had sex with their "rapist" one or more times after the "rape" had occurred! Koss herself now admits that her questionaire did not meet the legal definition of rape in the states for which the study was designed. A thorough investigation of the fallacies in this research was done by Christina Hoff Sommers in her book Who Stole Feminism? (available from the UNH library).

Now, does it make rape any less important an issue if it isn't happening to a quarter of all women? Of course not! In fact, one might argue that inflating rape numbers to such a degree actually desensitizes men and women to it, and generates suspicions and apathy when the truth is discovered. Six rape cases were handled by the UNH police in 1999. That's six too many for me.

4. Recognize men's rights and get the facts before assuming anything.

As I explained previously, bias against men accused of sex crimes is unfair and something we should identify and discourage. If a woman tells you she was raped, she needs support, and should be given it. If a man says he has been falsely accused, he also needs support, and should be given it. The two are not mutually exclusive. The prevalence of false accusations is irrelevant if this is the case where he was falsely accused. The presumption of innocence is in our judicial system for a reason. Defend it, or regret it one day when you find yourself falsely accused of something.

To treat all men as though they are honorable, decent human beings and not as potential rapists is all that I ask. Is that really such a radical idea?

I welcome any and all feedback at [campus e-mail address]. What do you think: Does rape awareness have to be anti-male?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/30/041243.shtml

Editorial on MA Paternity Fraud Case: Keep Paying, Chump

Scott · 30 April 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Jim Castelli submitted this link to Jeff Jacoby's Boston Globe editorial and writes, "Jacoby reacts to the MA Supreme Court's decision forcing a young man to support a child he has been deceived into believing was his. Mr. Jacoby writes: "And what burden, you might wonder, does the law place on women? A burden to tell the truth when asked to identify a child's father? A burden not to trick a young man into forfeiting tens of thousands of dollars that he doesn't owe? A burden not to deceive the courts? Nope, none of the above. To judge from the court's opinion, a woman like Cheryl's mother is under no obligation at all....In the court's view he is not a wronged man with a compelling plea for relief. He is an ATM machine.""Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: SJC to paternity victim: Keep paying, chump

Author: Jeff Jacoby

Date: April 30, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/04/30/1814201.shtml

IWF in the News

Scott · 1 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Andrew submitted this story from the Washington Post. It gives a very thorough introduction to the Independent Women's Forum and what the group is involved in, and how it has come a long way in the public profile. Mention was made that IWF has a $1.3M annual budget, something that no men's group can claim, so I think that as an organization which is publicly challenging anti-male feminism, it is something we might do well to learn from.Source: The Washington Post [newspaper]

Title: Women's Forum Challenges Feminists, Gains Influence

Authors: Richard Morin and Claudia Deane

Date: May 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/01/1425255.shtml

The Critical Need for Involved Fathers

Scott · 2 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC sent in this link to a NewsMax story on the importance of fathers. The article touches on a wide range of subjects, including the rise of illegitimacy, father's influence on their children's academic success, the problems facing urban black families, reasons why we currently have so many children without regular contact with their dads. The article isn't entirely pro-male, but covers both sides of the issue, closing with "Many "deadbeat" fathers are actually "dead broke," Rep. Carson said. Carson said she knows it's not all men's fault. Some mothers accept child support but refuse to grant fathers access to their children, she said, and some women drive a wedge between children and their fathers."Source: NewsMax

Title: The Importance of Fathers

Author: Unknown

Date: May 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/01/1816258.shtml

Toronto Father's Rights Workshop

Scott · 2 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Rick Neagle from FACT (Fathers Are Capable Too) wanted to announce that there will be a one-day workshop on June 3, 2001, for divorced/separated fathers and non-custodial mothers, their supporters, and people who work with or provide services to divorced parents. Warren Farrell will be participating, and preregistration is required. Click here to download an info flyer in MS Word Format, or contact Rick at rickneagle@hotmail.com. If you already know you want to register, just go to this site and sign up.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/02/0322256.shtml

Falsely Accused Father Gets $20,000 From CFS

Scott · 2 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Louise Malenfant sent in this news article from the Winnipeg Free Press about a father who was falsely accused of sexually assaulting his daughter. He received a $20,000 settlement from the Winnipeg Child and Family Services. Louise herself, as head of Parents Helping Parents, is involved in reforming overzealous social services groups when they routinely trump the civil liberties of parents, particularly fathers. She was quoted heavily in this article. Update: The link has now been fixed.Source: Winnipeg Free Press [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Wrongly accused dad gets his due

Author: Aldo Santin

Date: April 29, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/02/2023241.shtml

Husband Murdered for Money

Scott · 3 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h submitted this AP story from Excite News, about a woman who shot her husband four times in the head as he slept to get a portion of his $11M fortune. Ron Rudin must have had some inkling that this could occur, because "he had signed a secret directive in 1991 saying that if he died violently, anyone found responsible would be cut out of his estate." Regardless, he is now dead and she is awaiting sentencing having been found guilty of murder.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/02/2154209.shtml

Ex-Husbands as Slaves

Scott · 3 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett stumbled across a Yahoo! e-mail list called Ex-husband_is_now_my_slave . Check out the description of the list, which currently has over 350 members: "A serious and supportive discussion forum for divorced or legally separated women to discuss how they have used divorce, child support, alimony and the courts to make their ex-husbands their financial slaves. Also how ex-wives have used the psychology of divorce to turn their ex-husbands into servants and slaves for their own amusement and enrichment. A forum for women to share their success stories in humiliating and bankrupting ex-husbands--and then moving on, with their ex's money, to better relationships with more attractive men. Humiliation. Revenge. Female power. Female financial domination. No doubt about it: For many women, divorce can be the road to the easy life--and wealth and riches. And the beauty of it all is that it's all done at the expense of your ex, who now is your financial slave. This list is about placing your ex in psychological and financial bondage. Discuss the tactics--and laugh about it--here." Incredible. I'm speechless.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/02/2258253.shtml

Reforming California's Dependency Courts

Scott · 3 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kevin Thompson, Chairman of the Coalition to Preserve Families, writes "CPF is working to place the Child and Family Protection Act on California's March 2002 ballot. This initiative will improve juvenile dependency courts by 1) introducing the right to have a jury hear allegations of abuse, 2) requiring a speedy hearing, 3) removing the requirement for absolute confidentiality, and 4) promoting a preference for placement with relatives when a child is removed from the home. We need your help! For more information, see our web site at www.CoalitionToPreserveFamilies.org."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/03/1725244.shtml

Mensactivism.org Serves 1k Pages/Day

Scott · 4 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Men's Activism News Network hit a milestone yesterday, May 3, by serving over 1,000 pages to visitors in a single 24-hour period. To be specific, there were 1,009 Page Hits. Site traffic has increased consistently since the site was started in late May 2000, and I'd like to thank each and every one of you who visits the site, submits news or posts comments. A special thanks also to Adam, my co-administrator, and also Not PC, who has probably submitted more news than any other user so far. You folks are terrific!!!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/04/0429256.shtml

Fatherhood Legislation

Scott · 4 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC (there he is again!) sent me this story from the Sydney Morning Herald about new legislation aimed at promoting "responsible fatherhood." While the bill is of course aimed at increasing child support payment compliance, the dialogue surrounding the bill confronts the problem of fatherlessness publicly. "Senator Bayh said 17 million American children were living without a father today, up from 5 million in 1960. Fatherlessness was the most profound problem Americans faced, he said. It cost the Federal Government billions of dollars each year because it led to juvenile violence, teenage pregnancy and failure at school." Source: Sydney Morning Herald [Australian newspaper]

Title: Senators push solution to the father of all problems

Author: Unknown

Date: May 2, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/04/0454218.shtml

Double Standards in Prisons

Scott · 5 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In Canada, The Cross Gender Monitoring Project has recommended that male prison guards be removed from women's prisons, for the protection of women's privacy concerns. While the problems of sexual harassment by the staff of the prisons was investigated, it was found that male prison guards were rarely involved in these cases. But in 1993 the Canadian Supreme Court also decided that male inmates who objected to female prison guards frisking them were not important, since ""Imprisonment necessarily entails surveillance, searching and scrutiny. A prison cell is expected to be exposed and to require observation." In other words, when men commit crimes, they lose their right to privacy." Donna Laframboise examines this double standard in her National Post column. Thanks to Rand for the link. Source: National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Double standard behind bars

Author: Donna Laframboise

Date: May 3, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/05/1327215.shtml

Sexual Harassment of U.S. Senate Male Staff

Scott · 5 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Michael P. Wright writes "Ever wonder why David Boren, with two years remaining on his term, gave up one of the most powerful seats in the U.S. Senate in order to take the much lesser job of president of the University of Oklahoma? His surprise resignation took place not long after Queer Nation activist Michael Petrelis began to accuse him of sexually harassing his male staff members. I independently investigated Petrelis' claims. Go here for my findings. My article has numerous references which can be investigated by others."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/05/1618205.shtml

Feminist View of MA Paternity Case

Scott · 6 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Andrew writes *"Boston Globe columnist and nationally-syndicated feminist spokeswoman Ellen Goodman presents the politically-correct view of the recent Boston DNA case wherein the Massachusetts Court ruled that a man must continue to support a child not his: as usual when a situation reveals the fundamental fallacies of feminism, it seems we just can't make up our dithering minds. Maybe what the woman did was not on the up-and-up, but think of the child! This heartless man wants to abandon her (men are all alike)! Clearly, Goodman would rather the secret had remained forever hidden; why am I not surprised? The feminist attitude toward children is interesting: on the one hand, a woman has an absolute "right to choose" to kill her children should she find them inconvenient; on the other she can get away with massive fraud by citing a child's 'best interest.' Heads she wins, tails you lose."*Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: The complications for 'duped dads'

Author: Ellen Goodman

Date: April 29, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/05/1622227.shtml

Men Forced to Leave Take Back the Night Rally

Scott · 6 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "This article on Excite explains how men were asked to leave a Take Back the Night rally on Colorado University's campus last week because women were offended by their presence there. Citing women's prejudices against men (ie, the bigoted belief that all men are attackers), the organizers of the women's rally forced male supporters of the rally to leave, even those who were scheduled to work at the event. It's a sad day when a man isn't even allowed out in public because women are uncomfortable with him."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/05/1823259.shtml

Men Open Up About Erectile-Dysfunction Concerns

Scott · 6 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "A spate of recent Excite articles have focused on men's health issues, from exposing an incorrect perception that women suffer more from carpal tunnel because fewer men are reporting it, to this article, which reports that men, contrary to popular belief, do want to open up to their partners and discuss their relationships. The article also points out that, until recently, erectile dysfunction was "one of the least discussed and most overlooked medical disorders." Let's hope prostate cancer gets the same turn-around."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/06/1544231.shtml

Newly Discovered Protein Helps Detect Prostate Cancer

Scott · 6 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "Excite comes through once again. In this article, dated May 4, scientists with Maritech claim to have discovered the presence of a protein in men with prostate cancer that is not present in healthy men. The discovery of this protein could improve prostate cancer early detection." This sounds like an important breakthrough...

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/06/1548244.shtml

Who Gets the Spoils of Divorce

Scott · 7 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

bernee writes "The Australian Institute of Family Studies has released a working paper into divorce which reveals women are receiving the majority of assets.
The research has found almost half of divorced couples must divide basic assets including the family home and contents, car and usually the husband's superannuation.
The institute says on average, women receive two thirds of basic assets and a fifth of non-basic assets including businesses, investments and superannuation.
The complete report can be downloaded here."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/07/0351240.shtml

Rape Awareness Week at the Univ. of Oklahoma

Scott · 7 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Michael Wright wrote an excellent, in-depth report about rape hysteria at the University of Oklahoma. His article appeared in the March/April 2000 issue of Clarion. He thoroughly attacks the "1 in 4" stat and the many ways campus anti-rape groups have modified the definition of rape to ensure that it exists in epidemic proportions no matter how safe the campus seems. It is perhaps one of the most thorough refutations of "all men are potential rapists" campus feminism that I've ever seen.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/07/0357257.shtml

Low-income Men Less Likely to be Screened for Prostate Cancer

Scott · 7 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "Excite once again reveals men's health news that exposes some (perhaps unintentional) inequity in men's health. The article's main focus is the fact that men of lower incomes are less likely to be screened for prostate cancer, but also points out that prostate screenings are not as accurate as they should be. The physician quoted in the story maintains that scientists are seeking ways to improve the accuracy of prostate screenings."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/07/044223.shtml

Calling for an End to Gender Politics in Medicine

Scott · 8 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes *"Reason Online recently published this article, exposing how women were never really excluded from medical research, and asserting that gender politics should have no place in medicine. The article attacks both feminists and men's groups, claiming that the "victim mentality" of both groups contributes to the problem. Unfortunately, I believe the "victim mentality" may be a necessary evil for some men's groups to help push government into restoring balance. Let's face it, we are victims nowadays... not necessarily of women (although that is many times the case), but certainly of politics."*Source: Reason Magazine

Title: False Diagnosis

Author: Cathy Young

Date: May 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/08/1554213.shtml

Courts Punish Responsible Fathers

Scott · 8 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Maritta Meri sent in an editorial she wrote about two recent divorce court cases in Ontario, Adams v. Adams and Miglin v. Miglin. Both demonstrate the affluent lifestyle divorced women can enjoy without being expected to work or take on responsibilities. Meri's comparison and analysis of these cases should come to no surprise to most readers of this site, but the essay serves as further testimony to the double standards and "man-as-wallet" attitudes so prevalent in North American court systems today. Click "Read More" below to read the essay.Maritta Meri writes:

The Ontario Court of Appeal, in the Adams v. Adams judgement, which was released on April 30, 2001, has once more reaffirmed its position that men who put their families first need to be punished.

Just a few days earlier, on April 26, the judges at the same court had sent a clear message to women when they delivered the Miglin v. Miglin ruling: marry well and divorce will be a lucrative business opportunity. Men are told: you only have yourself to blame if you get married and earn a good living for your family. After the divorce, your income is still considered to be the "family" income, though you yourself will be an outcast.

The interesting thing about the Miglin case is that, besides being husband and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Miglin were business partners. While married, they benefited equally from the business venture. The three judges at the Appeal Court upheld the trial judge's order which provided Mrs. Miglin with a generous income under the guise of child and spousal support after she wanted out of the marriage and accompanying responsibilities.

This income exceeds the amount that she had earned while working alongside with her husband during the partnership. In addition, she got the absolute decision making power over the children and his share of the matrimonial home. When he showed concern about the children and asked for joint custody he was told that he was obsessive about them and only wanted to get out of his responsibilities. Having rejected joint physical custody Mrs. Miglin was seen as the victim who alone had to care for the children. Who, in one's right mind, would want to stay married, share the decision making power and work for one's keep when one can get a divorce, stay at home while earning more by holding the children as hostages, and yet be seen as being a victim?

Mrs. Miglin was her husband's business partner. Her income was far above of what she would have been paid had she been employed by someone else. There is no mention of her other qualifications besides being married to her partner.

In the Adams case, the mother is a qualified nurse, the father a successful plastic surgeon. Because of her marriage, she enjoyed an elevated standard of living while staying out of the paid labour force. Just like in the Miglin case, there was no mention if she had domestic help or if she herself did all the housework and childminding. Her true contribution to the family in return to the benefits that she enjoyed was not open to scrutiny. His was wide open, and seems that he passed with flying colours.

Mrs. Adams initiated the divorce proceedings. She asked for $6,474 a month in child support for five children born between 1980 and 1989. Her demand for spousal support was $7,000 a month. From the court transcript: "Essentially, from that time [the birth of the first child] forward, she devoted herself to be a house [sic] maker and raise the children." She was not asked what she did, or did not, do. Just like Mrs. Miglin, she did not offer to continue to provide any services to her husband after the divorce.

The children are now at a stage where they no longer need a full time caregiver. The oldest had left the home, but now intends to return to his mother in order to "further his education."

The Court of Appeal concurred with the trial judge: "It is my opinion that support payments should be $5,000 per month as this amount more properly reflects the standard of life that Mrs. Adams was accustomed to during the marriage [my emphasis] and is reflective of the fact that she is a full-time caregiver of four boys who range in age from 11 to 18 years of age. Moreover, a review of the trial record does not suggest even a hint of extravagance on the part of Mrs. Adams," said the judge.

Referring to her estimate of $350 monthly for house repairs and maintenance, Mrs. Adams testified: "Oh, because, because particularly this year I've actually had to replace a fence"

Referring to her general financial situation, Mrs. Adams testified: "Oh, I think I've, you know, certainly come to terms with the fact that, you know, I'm not secure right now, and I haven't, I've become more careful. I mean, I have certainly had a comfortable lifestyle before and I was very fortunate, but now I feel a little differently, and yes, I think I've cut the bills back significantly."

The trial judge rejected Dr. Adams' submissions on the issue that he had made mortgage payments over and above the require amount: "Dr. Adams voluntarily made prepayments on the mortgage and thereby voluntarily accrued a benefit to his wife." Indeed, Dr. Adams concluded his testimony at the trial on this issue by saying that he agreed with Mrs. Adams' counsel "that the primary reason was to provide a roof over the heads of my family."

Further quoting the transcript: "The Adams" matrimonial home was a large and expensive one. Dr. Adams was the legal owner of the home and he was responsible for paying the mortgage [Strange conclusion. The Divorce Act defines the matrimonial home to be a joint property, and therefore joint responsibility, between husband and wife, no matter who pays the mortgage and/or whose signature is on the deed]. Prior to the separation in October 1996, Dr. Adams made mortgage payments of $1,500 weekly or $78,000 yearly. These high weekly mortgage payments accomplished the goal of, as expressed by Dr. Adams, "paying it off in a very rapid rate."

"After the separation, Dr. Adams made no change in the mortgage payments until September 1997, when he extended the mortgage to 20 years and reduced his payments to $1,436.15 monthly. These payments continued until the home was sold in September 1998, with Dr. Adams making them until May 1998, and then Mrs. Adams making them pursuant to a separation agreement."

Mrs. Adams is a qualified nurse. There is no shortage of jobs for nurses in Ontario. She can pick and choose the type of work that she wants to do as well as her hours of work. The conclusion: she does not want to work.

There is a striking similarity to the Miglin case. Both women benefited from the marriage. They maintained a post divorce standard of living far above what they would have been able achieve without their husbands' income. Why would women want to work when they can earn more by staying at home? Why would they want to stay in a marriage and share the decision making with another person when they can have sole custody, support payments and absolute power over the children? In addition, they are given an awesome power to control the life of their ex-husbands who are ordered to earn enough to provide their ex-families as they had done before they were reduced to the status of walking wallets. Yet, though they garner all the rights without accompanying responsibilities, women are seen as the universal victims of a patriarchal world. The ultimate irony is that this is called "equality."

"In June 1997, the Department [of Justice Canada] released its policy on gender equality analysis which requires that this analysis be integrated into all work of the Department, including policy and program development, research, legal advice, legislative drafting and litigation strategies." [Source: Department of Justice. Diversity and Justice: Gender Perspectives. A Guide to Gender Equality Analysis. 1998]

According to these directives, only the negatives, either perceived or real, affecting women are to be analysed, the positives in their lives are not taken into account. Then those negatives are compared to the positives, either perceived or real, in men's lives. The Department of Justice concludes: "Since both women and men are diverse, being more inclusive of women can also result in inclusion for more men."

The two above cases are an eloquent testimony of how these directives are applied. The more we see women as victims, the more we will be forced to regard men as victimizers. Equal? In my opinion, not.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with

comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/08/178223.shtml

CEDAW, Again

Scott · 9 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes *"Wendy McElroy is at it again. This time she takes on the U.N. Convention for the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW). The fact that the U.S. may be starting to be seen as softening on radical feminism (for those who care to read the writing on the walls, anyway) may well be a contributing factor in our loss of a position on the U.N International Commission on Human Rights. Click here for the link."*Source: Fox News [US Television channel]

Title: The United Nations Moves Beyond Peace to Take On Family Values and Gender Issues

Author: Wendy McElroy

Date: May 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/08/1711213.shtml

Chemist's Screw-up Nets Rape Conviction for Innocent Man

Scott · 9 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Spartacus and an Anonymous User sent in this NY Times article (free registration required) about a false accusation of rape. Anon User writes "This story is about an Oklahoma man who has been freed after spending 15 years in prison for a rape he didn't commit. According to the story, a police chemist's testimony led to the man's conviction. An investigation into all the chemist's findings since her hiring has been initiated. That's the good news. The bad news is that her conclusions have resulted in at least 11 executions of men over the years. In the words of the now-liberated Oklahoma man: "The citizens of Oklahoma County have been duped. The juries have been lied to for the last 20 years. There are going to be a lot more victims."*"*Source: The New York Times [newspaper]

Title: Flaws in Chemist's Findings Free Man at Center of Inquiry

Author: Jim Yardley

Date: May 8, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/09/0259234.shtml

Boycott Hallmark for Mother's Day Cards

Scott · 9 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Warren Farrell has shown some excellent examples in his books of how contempt for men has been institutionalized in society by packaging and selling it in greeting cards. He identifies Hallmark (particularly the "Shoebox" subdivision) as one of the biggest perpetrators of this act. Here's something simple you can do this year - don't buy a Hallmark card for any holiday, especially Mother's Day this weekend (there are a lot of degrading cards about men for this particular holiday). I personally believe that spending $3.50 for a piece of cardboard is a waste anyway, and that spending quality time with someone is the most appropriate gift you can give.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/09/1146217.shtml

Home Depot Supports Men's Charities and "Real Men Cook"

Scott · 9 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "This article on Excite explains how Home Depot is sponsoring a "Real Men Cook" event on Father's Day this year. According to the article, the event is designed to "mobilize hundreds of men across the country to participate as volunteer cooks on Father's Day. The mission of Real Men Cook is to raise money for charity through family, food and community celebrations" in various metropolitan areas around the country. Among the many charities being supported are: Charles H. Wright Museum of African American History; Real Men Cook for Prostate Cancer, Men's Empowerment; plus many others. My favorite quote from this piece is from a Home Depot spokeswoman: "Through our support of Real Men Cook, we are able to participate in the real-life celebration of men who have worked very hard to sustain their families and build their communities.""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/09/035239.shtml

Awesome News Submissions

Scott · 9 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I just wanted to mention that the influx of quality news submissions has been terrific lately, and I'd like to thank the active participants of Mensactivism.org for their efforts. My apologies if the turnaround time between submitting the news and seeing it posted takes a while - my final exams begin soon so I'm having a hard time keeping organized. But by all means, keep the news coming!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/09/0313247.shtml

LA Commission for Men Campaign Makes The News

Scott · 9 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The editor of the Pasadena Star News wrote about NCFM's Campaign for a Commission for Men in Los Angeles County. Although the article ends with some half-hearted sympathy, it mostly ridicules the idea that men are in "crisis" and compares the campaign to one for "White" people. You can read it here. I wrote a response (click "Read More" to view it). Others can do the same by using the "write a letter" section on the website."
Dear Pasadena Star News:

Editor Larry Wilson should do some research before ridiculing my organization for claiming men are in a state of crisis. ("Comedy's Not In Ommissions," 5/5/01).

By doing so, he also ridicules the seventy two members of Congress who have thus far agreed that "There is a silent health crisis affecting the health and well-being of America's men," and have therefore endorsed House Resolution 632 - the Men's Health Act.

The New Hampshire Committee on the Status of Men similarly found men to be in a "silent health crisis" while the Georgia Commission on Men's Health found men to be in a "serious state of decay."

But Mr. Wilson knows best. He thinks it's all funny and calls me a whiner for seeking a Commission for Men in Los Angeles County.

Mr. Wilson even compares the plight of males to the plight of White people. Never mind that men make 85% of homeless, 94% of occupational deaths, 90% of prisoners and 65% of dropouts (disparities that persist within each race), or that men die six years younger than women and have higher mortality rates for each of the top ten leading causes of death, none of which can be said about White people.

In addition to ridiculing 72 members of Congress, Mr. Wilson is also ridiculing several dozen community leaders, including professors, doctors and mental health professionals, many from the African American community, who have signed on to our petition for a Commission for Men.

Incidentally, if Mr. Wilson were to develop prostate cancer, would he find it funny that the federal government spends more than four times the amount on breast cancer research than prostate cancer research even though they boh kill about the same number every year?

(http://www.dailybruin.ucla.edu/db/articles.asp?ID=2307.

Marc Angelucci, Esq.
National Coalition of Free Men"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/09/1959229.shtml

Guess Who Needs the ERA? Men Do!

Scott · 10 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes *"Who needs the ERA? Men do, according to a commentary by Robyn Blumner, columnist for the St. Petersburg Times and former director of the American Civil Liberties Union. I've been long opposed to the ERA, supporting instead the equality of all via the 14th Amendment. Ms. Blumner almost has me convinced. The above article, by the way, appears in Black & White, a Birmingham, AL, alternative newsweekly."*Source: Black & White [newspaper]

Title: Guess Who Needs the Equal Rights Amendment?

Author: Robyn Blumner

Date: April 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/10/1238243.shtml

Male Teacher Punished By School for Protecting Students

Scott · 10 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes *"The Chicago Sun Times reported this story about a male teacher who was reprimanded for reporting the bullying of two girls and one disabled boy by school bullies. The school board later heard outraged complaints from the community about the reprimand. Apparently, the teacher was assuming a father-like, strong male leadership role by reprimanding the bullies, but the female principal wanted none of that. Traditionally, men have been the disciplinarians at home and at school. The effects of no longer having that presence at home or at school are all too obvious. It's too bad these bullies have no such role models to help straighten their path to manhood."*Source: Chicago Sun-Times [newspaper]

Title: Teacher battles bullies, gets in fight with school

Title 2: Anti-bully teacher defended

Author: Sabrina Walters

Author 2: Sabrina Walters

Date: May 3, 2001

Date 2: May 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/10/1247233.shtml

The Power "Down Below"

Scott · 10 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Spartacus sent in this link to a UK Times story about the Eve Ensler and the Vagina Monologues. Ensler starts off the article talking about how vaginas are the center of women's being, and that they are what motivates women in every part of their lives. And I thought biology wasn't destiny? For those of you who don't know, the Vagina Monologues is a controversial, male-bashing play which has been performed at various universities and theaters around the world. It is almost certainly a sign of the times when a person can make a living doing something like this...Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: The power down below

Author: Penny Wark

Date: May 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/10/1310203.shtml

Soy Protein Good for Men's Bones

Scott · 11 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "Although osteoperosis is often seen as a female-only disease, approximately one-quarter of its victims are male, as stated in this article from Excite. A diet enriched with soy protein apparently strengthens male skeletal health. This isn't the first time soy has been pronounced good for men, although I do not recall some of the other problems it's supposed to counter. Is this good news or is soy just the latest health fad?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/10/2143211.shtml

In a Slumping Ad Market, Men's Magazine Thrives

Scott · 11 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Regardless of your opinion of Playboy, I found this article on Excite interesting. Increasingly, advertising agencies have been marketing directly to women and pretty much ignoring men. Now, with advertising in a general slump and the economy going downhill, marketing directed at men (at least for this magazine) is thriving, while other publications are suffering from dramatically slashed customer ad budgets. The news is proof to me that men, contrary to recent convention, should not be ignored by ad agencies as important consumers, and that marketing to men works just as well as marketing to women. There is, however, a new disturbing trend in marketing toward men. Has anyone seen the new Rogaine commercials for men? They encourage us to "ask her if she wants you to use it." If I want to use Rogaine, shouldn't that be MY decision?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/10/2144231.shtml

Where are all the College Guys?

Scott · 11 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Spartacus submitted this link to a USA Today article about the decline of men in higher education. Colleges and Universities are realizing that they are reaching a threshold where men are going to think twice about going to a school which is overwhelmingly female, and affirmative action for male applicants has caused a lot of controversy. "University of Georgia lost a lawsuit defending its policy of male preference last summer when a female student was denied admission." With the U.S. economy the way it's been, men are being able to slip by without many consequences. But as the economy turns down, a college degree becomes increasingly important to have. Source: USA Today [newspaper]

Title: Hey, where are all the college guys? Universities fret about how to attract males as women increasingly dominate campuses

Author: Karen Sloan

Date: May 10, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/11/1651211.shtml

UCLA Prints Article On Media Bias

Scott · 12 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes *"The UCLA Daily Bruin printed my opinion piece in which I criticize their gender bias and their failure to scrutinize feminist "facts." For example, they recently printed an article that regurgitated the American Association of University Women's misleading claim that Latinas drop out of school more than "any other group," and when I showed them that "Hispanic" males drop out more than "Hispanic" females they explained that "any other group" meant "any other group of women" and thus did not print a correction. Click here for the article."*Source: The Daily Bruin [UCLA student newspaper]

Title: Media?s representation of gender issues misleading

Author: Marc Angelucci

Date: May 11, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/11/135202.shtml

Colleges Opening Up to Men's Needs?

Scott · 12 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"USA Today ran this article detailing a lack of attention to male body-image problems on college campuses. More intriguing, however, are the final four paragraphs of the column, which claim that more campuses are beginning to include men in sexual assault awareness programs. Although it doesn't go into a whole lot of detail, the author hints at the wrongness of the male/female equals oppressor/victim mentality. However, she does focus more on men supporting anti-violence against women campaigns and less on violence against men."*Source: USA Today [newspaper]

Title: Colleges start to realize men need body-image help, too

Author: Kimberly Shearer Palmer

Date: May 10, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/11/229229.shtml

Offensive Anti-Rape Slogan Reappears in Restrooms

Scott · 12 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Excite posted this story about the reappearance of a sexual assault awareness campaign in men's restrooms on college campuses. Many male students are offended by the campaign, which is why it was originally stopped in 1997. The campaign's slogan informs men that they hold the key to stopping rape "in your hands" (referring, of course, to our penises). Men opposed to the campaign said that it felt accusatory. It most certainly does."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/12/155232.shtml

Master Manipulator Flunks Her Own Class

Scott · 13 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl sent in a short editorial about a recent episode of ABC's "Primetime," which interviewed Ellen Fein, co-author of the book The Rules, a guide for women on how to manipulate men most effectively when dating. Well, they've now released a second book, The Rules for Marriage, which explains how to keep husbands in the marriage (at least, until she wants to get rid of him). Click "Read More" below for Bill's comments...Master Manipulator Flunks Her Own Class

Remember the '90's guide on finding a man through manipulation, "The Rules", the book that women purchased to the tune of 2 million copies? Well, its co-authors have put out a sequel. Naturally, their new book is a guide on helping women KEEP their men; it's called, "The Rules for Marriage." According to a report on ABC's "Primetime" this second book sounds like more of the same shallow drivel that preceded it. For example, one of the authors, Ellen Fein, is shown pleading with the interviewer, "It works so well ... it works so well," referring to a particular rule which states: "The key to a romantic evening is to pretend you're in a toothpaste commercial and smile, smile, smile." Certainly, the most notable aspect of the book has to be the story behind its writing - co-author Fein was herself going through a divorce while writing the book. The "Primetime" segment shows Fein on a couple of occasions referring to her own marriage in instructing "The Rules for Marriage" seminar attendees, hordes of women who had paid $50 a pop to hear how to avoid what Fein obviously couldn't. Later in the segment, Fein dismisses questions about her apparent inability to keep her man by saying, "... I was too tired [to apply all the rules] ...[and] I'm not here to talk about whether I slipped with the rules or not." Yet, still, the most interesting part of this story may be that during the period Fein was writing the book and simultaneously going through a divorce - she somehow failed to mention the latter to her publisher. Only because of a phone call from a reporter did Fein's publisher find out, but by this time the book had already been finished. Maybe Fein's real skill is in manipulating publishers and the public, not men.

Bill Kuhl, bridgewater6729@yahoo.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/12/1546249.shtml

L.A. Times Prints Article Debunking Wage Gap

Scott · 14 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes *"Glenn Sacks, one of our top activists, published an article Saturday in the L.A. Times refuting the pay gap. Right on Glenn! It can be read at this link. And here is the response from a local NOW president, who had the privilege of seeing the opponent's article, which Glenn did not have. Anyhow, fair enough - You be the judge. Anyone who even remotely knows the LA Times would probably agree this is a long-awaited victory."*Source: L.A. Times

Title: Is Pay a Function of Gender Bias?

Author: Glenn Sacks

Date: May 12, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/13/2250253.shtml

Ohio Assists Uninsured Female Cancer Victims; Ignores Men

Scott · 14 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes " This editorial on Excite describes new Ohio legislation which guarantees financial assistance for uninsured female victims of breast cancer, but not male breast cancer or prostate cancer. The author lauds the bill's support of uninsured women, but also decries its lack of attention to men. I'm not as sure as the author that the legislators' reasons for assisting uninsured females were sound (it was based upon women's alleged lack of equality in the workplace), but I am glad the problem of ignoring men was mentioned."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/13/2252228.shtml

Conference on Battered Men

Scott · 14 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Bangor Daily News reports that a conference about male victims of domestic violence will be held in Portland, Maine this coming Friday, May 18. Noteworthy speakers will include Cathy Young and Mary Cleary (from AMEN). Myself and a few members of the Massachusetts Coalition for Men will be attending. The conference is one of the first of its kind and has drawn interest from all over the country. Click here for the story and more info on the conference.Source: Bangor Daily News [newspaper]

Title: Event to help battered males

Author: Ruth-Ellen Cohen

Date: May 12, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/14/0051219.shtml

CA Court: Father with No Parental Rights Exempted from Child Support

Scott · 14 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The L.A. Times printed this story about a recent California court case which has ruled that biological fathers who have terminated their parental rights cannot be held liable for child support. Previously, even when a child was adopted, the bio dad could still be required to pay child support. "attorney...Patrick Reardon...said it is illogical for a father to have an obligation to support his son but be denied the right to visit him." Finally I see a court case which sees fathers as something other than a wallet! Perhaps this could also set a precedent that fathers paying child support have an intrinsic right to visit their children, and that violation of this right puts child support obligations in jeapordy?Source: L.A. Times [newspaper]

Title: Parent Who Lost Rights Need Not Pay Support

Author: Anna Gorman

Date: May 13, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/14/1515202.shtml

What do Women Want?

Scott · 14 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Andrew writes "Finally, the definitive answer to Freud's famous question: According to a national poll commissioned by Women.com in honor of Mother's Day, 'Most American women consider high-profile single mothers such as Rosie O'Donnell positive female role models, but 72 percent of women want two-parent households to raise their children.' Whew; it's good to have that cleared up. (Actually, read the article and it becomes clear that what they want is not the man, but the money.)"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/14/1517224.shtml

Peter Breggin's Anti-Ritalin Site

Adam · 15 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a site all Men's groups and parents in general (even more so if they have sons in school) should read up on, regardless of what they're working towards. Peter Breggin has an excellent resource about informing people of the the undisscussed dangers of stimulants and other drugs (like Ritalin) and is also fronting several lawsuits against Ritalin. I'm sure you've heard the saying "no man is an island?" well he's the exception, so click this link to get going.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/14/2123208.shtml

YWCA Subscribes to VAWA

Scott · 15 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "I'm not sure how many folks already knew this. I did not, but I had suspected all along the feminist leanings of the YWCA. Hopefully, this will result in decreased funding from private sources, but it probably won't. They must've found a way to get VAWA funding by subscribing to NOW ideals. Look here for more info."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/15/1324218.shtml

Human Rights Watch Documents U.S. Prison Rape

Scott · 16 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The organization Human Rights Watch has completed a three-year study on the prison rape of men, resulting in a 378 page report on the topic. You can view the materials here. There are video interviews with some of the 200+ prisoners who took part in the study. This is by far the most comprehensive study I've ever seen on the topic of prison rape, and by including the accounts and recordings of inmate interviews, this site forces you to confront the personal reality of this issue. If you are doing research in this area, this is one report you must see. Source: Human Rights Watch

Title: No Escape: Male Rape in U.S. Prisons

Author: Human Rights Watch

Date: April 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/16/152212.shtml

Prostate Cancer Drug Slows Disease's Progress

Scott · 16 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Excite posted this story about a new drug which appears to slow the progress of prostate cancer to the bones. The article explains that the spread of prostate cancer to the bones is usually the most painful stage of the disease, and is a major cause of death among men with the cancer. The drug is no cure (it doesn't kill cancer cells), but it apparently does prevent them from growing."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/16/1920210.shtml

N.O.W. Fabricated Budget, Membership Levels

Scott · 17 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Insight Magazine reports that the National Organization of Women has been lying about its annual budget and membership levels. A N.O.W. chapter from Virginia requested the IRS non-profit documents of the national group and found that while N.O.W. has claimed it has an annual budget of $10 million, the budget has been under $5 million in the past few years. Furthermore, its claimed membership of over 250,000 is also inaccurate. What I found most interesting is that the salary of Patricia Ireland was disclosed: "The filings suggest that NOW's top leaders enjoy pretty good incomes and lifestyles. The salaries of the top five, including Ireland, are at the level of Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan. Ireland receives $143,252 for a 34-hour workweek. All five top officers also receive generous expense accounts and travel allowances." Source: Insight [magazine]

Title: NOW's Membership and Budget Are Grossly Overinflated

Author: Unknown

Date: May 28, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/16/1951248.shtml

Women Leaders More Peaceful?

Scott · 17 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Spartacus sent in this link from the L.A. Times about the recent news that Japan's princess is pregnant, and writes *"This time the you don't have to read between the lines to get the feminist agenda: "No announcement has yet been made on the sex of the child. But recent calls by the prime minister for legal changes allowing women to ascend the throne have fueled speculation that the child will be a girl. Women's groups and social critics say having an empress could help improve women's profile--and give Japan a better monarch. "Men always seem to be starting wars," said Midori Watanabe, a professor at Bunka Women's University and expert on the royal family. "So we definitely need a female ruler as a symbol of peace in the 21st century.""*Source: L.A. Times [newspaper]

Title: It's Official in Japan: Princess Is Pregnant

Author: Mark Magnier

Date: May 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/17/1454242.shtml

Father's Rights Conference w/ Warren Farrell: Don't Miss Out!

Scott · 18 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Rick Neagle from Fathers Are Capable Too (FACT) sent me some more information about the pro-father conference at the University of Toronto which will be happening on June 3. Regardless of whether you're from the Toronto area, this conference will be a major event and is well worth attending. Note that the "early bird" registration fee lasts until May 25, and will go up after that - so register today! More information on this conference can be viewed by clicking "Read More" below, and you can register at this web site.

One-day Interactive Workshop Entitled:

"What's Missing When Father's Are Missing?

with Dr. Warren Farrell, author of Father & Child Reunion

SUNDAY JUNE 3RD, 2001

LOCATION: TORONTO- UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO'S

HART HOUSE

EVENT DETAILS:

NAME OF EVENT: "What's Missing When Father's Are Missing: How to Bring the Dad's we need to the Children we Love"

EVENT HOSTED BY: Fathers Are Capable Too - Parenting Association (F.A.C.T.): A divorced parenting group, that is dedicated to shared parenting & formal equality

WHO SHOULD ATTEND THIS EVENT:

Fathers and non-custodial mothers who are separated or divorced and their supporters (grand parents, friends, partners, etc.)

People who work or provide service to non-custodial separated/divorced parents and their children , i.e. Social workers, mediators, teachers, paralegals, counselors, psychologists, lawyers, judges, etc.

DATE & TIME OF EVENT: Sunday June 3rd - 10:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

LOCATION: University of Toronto's Hart House, Debate Room

COST (*):

General admission: $89.00 (before May 25, $109 after May 25)

Members of Father/Parenting groups: $59.00 (before May 25, $79.00 after May 25)

(*) Reduced fee available for people with limited financial resources - call 416-410-FACT for details

* * * * Lunch and morning coffee/tea is included * * * * * * *

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF EVENT: "What's Missing When Fathers Are Missing?" is a special one-day interactive workshop lead by best selling author Dr. Warren Farrell.

Dr. Farrell will facilitate a discussion based on his best selling book 'Father and Child Reunion' on How to bring the dads we need to the children we love.

Participants will have an opportunity to increase their understanding of the role fathers have in the family and the challenges that separated/divorced fathers deal with when their marriages break-up. As well, participants will discuss and develop strategies to help "put fathers back in the picture" both at the individual family level and at the societal level.

The workshop will open with a panel discussion dealing with the barriers and obstacles separated/divorced fathers are faced with. Followed by a question and answer period.

Don't miss this great learning and networking opportunity. By attending this workshop you will also be supporting F.A.C.T. 's lobbying efforts for changes to the family divorce laws so that they promote shared parenting, equal access and fairness and equality for both parents.

JUNE 3RD WORKSHOP AGENDA:

10:00: Reception and sign in

10:30: Opening Remarks & Introduction

10:45: Panel Discussion: "Barriers & Obstacles Fathers are dealing with Today"

11:25: Question and Answers

12:00: LUNCH (Provided)

1:00: Key Note Presentation & Workshop with Dr. Warren Farrell author of "Father & Child Reunion" "What's Missing When Father's Are Missing: How to Bring the Dad's we need to the Children we Love"

4:15: Closing Remarks

HOW TO REGISTER: Register on line at www.fact.on.ca and click on "What's Missing ?" or telephone 416-410 FACT (3228)

Thank you

For more information please contact Rick Neagle.

Rick Neagle

Director

Fathers Are Capable Too

Rick's Direct Line: 416-964-2838

Rick's e-mail: RickNeagle@hotmail.com

www.fact.on.ca

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/18/0525213.shtml

Can't Have It All? Welcome to the World of Men!

Scott · 18 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"This article in Australia's "The Age" points out that women are just now discovering what men have known for years about developing a career and maintaining a family at the same time: it ain't easy. The author, in fact, says it can't be done. He points out that the "we can have it all" philosophy of the feminists is backfiring on them, but men are getting the blame for it because we "don't pitch in.""*Source: The Age [Australian newspaper]

Title: Can't Have It All? Welcome to the World of Men

Author: Phil Dye

Date: May 15, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/18/1559213.shtml

Fund Raising Fraud in Your Community

Scott · 18 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "A hint for some of us activists from Sam and Bunny Sewell: Recently we have been sending the below notice to City Councilmen, County Commissioners, law enforcement agencies, churches, etc. We access a women's shelter web page in Anytown, USA. If that web page contains the usual lies, we start bombarding community leaders with this short note. We are not sure how much good it does, but boy do people respond!" Click "Read More" below for the notice.
Fund raising fraud in your community

You do not know us. We are clergy from Naples, Florida who are also marriage and family counselors. As part of our research on family violence we discovered a web page for an organization in your community, The Family Refuge Center. http://www.familyrefugecenter.com/ . We thought it was appropriate to alert you that this family violence web page is a scam.

When we read their web page it seemed more like a front for the anti-marriage, anti-family feminists. Their message is blatantly sexist. They have misrepresented the truth about family violence. If they are raising funds by distorting the truth, they are subject to charges of fund raising fraud.

We publish a report on the Internet that contains a family violence bibliography, which clearly demonstrates that gender advocates have severely distorted this issue. The aggregate sample size in the reviewed studies exceeds 70,000. (©Martin S. Fiebert, Ph.D.)

The year 2001 edition of the Family Violence Report from Family Resources and Research has been released. It may be quoted, linked and copied without further permission. The Internet version is available at:

http://www.naplesfl.net/~best self/Family-Violence.htm

Also included is an article written by Sally L. Satel, M.D., about the dangers of present family violence policy. Dr. Satel is a psychiatrist at the Yale School of Medicine.

Reverends Sam and Bunny Sewell

Family Resources and Research

11216 Tamiami Trail North

Naples, FL 34110"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/18/1727225.shtml

The U.S. Census and Fathers

Scott · 19 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h and Nightmist both had news to submit about the recent U.S. Census report. frank h sent in this article from the Washington Post and writes "This U.S. Census report says that single-parent families led by fathers are in the increase. Note that it also says that fathers tend not to seek child support for fear of losing custody." Nightmist wrote "The New York Post ran this commentary, which asserts that there is both good news and bad news from the results of the 2000 Census. Good news? Men are catching up to women in numbers. Bad news? Single motherhood is up 21% while two-parent househoulds are up only 7%."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/19/0612242.shtml

Britain Going the Way of America with the Divorce Industry

Scott · 19 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Spartacus submitted this ABCNews story and these excerpts: "Hoping for a slice of the competitive, upscale divorce market pie, Brookman Solicitors, a London law firm has released a campaign featuring a poster of a packed designer suitcase with the caption, "Ditch the Bitch."
Another poster, this one aimed at women, showed a woman in her underwear lying face down on a bed. It reads: "All men are Bastards."...for some women's rights groups, the real villain in this case was the ad campaign. "This is offensive terminology and very derogatory to women," "The heart of the problem, some legal experts feared, was that the British legal tradition was going down the "American road," with aggressive, confrontational campaigns virtually encouraging people to get divorced" Source: ABC News

Title: Divorce, English Style

Author: Leela Jacinto

Date: May 17, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/19/1439238.shtml

Portland, Maine DV Against Men Conference a Success!

Scott · 19 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I was fortunate to have the opportunity to attend A Conference on Male Victims of Domestic Abuse in Portland, Maine on Friday evening. The event was sponsored by the Maine Battered Men's Helpline and the Bangor Daily News, and was superbly done. Speakers included David Burroughs, Mary Cleary, Cathy Young, and Richard Davis. Click "Read More" below to view a summary of the event and see some photos that I took (with a very cheap digital camera, I might add).

The conference was held at the University of Southern Maine on Friday, May 18, 2001. I believe it was said that this was the first conference of its kind (focusing on abused men) in New England, and they hope to make it a yearly event. Attendance was moderate, I'd roughly estimate that 30-40 people were there, but this also made it very easy to approach the speakers and attendees and get some good conversations and networking going. Mary Cleary and Cathy Young agreed to do e-mail interviews over the summer, so Mensactivism.org readers can look forward to this in upcoming months!

(Ray Saulnier introduces Cathy Young to the audience)

Ray Saulnier from the Battered Men's Helpline introduced the speakers and acted as the host for the evening. He talked a bit about the Helpline, which is one of only a handful of resources available for men in the entire country. The group is entirely volunteer based (they receive no federal funding from VAWA or the like) and are an official 501c3 non-profit organization. Details about making a donation to the hotline are included at the end of this article. I would encourage people to give to this group, as they are breaking ground in this area and will serve as models for other men's help lines and shelters - so please consider helping them out to keep them going strong!

[image]

(David Burroughs made a lot of good points about activism that evening)

David Borroughs runs the Forum for Equity and Fairness in Family Issues in Delaware and is a member of the Domestic Violence Task Force in that state. He gave a very good overview of current studies which are often cited in DV advocacy, including those used by feminists against male victims and those which show a greater balance of information. He also gave some examples of how and why the bias exists against men when police need to decide who to arrest, as much of the training materials police have use the pronoun "he" for the attacker and "she" for the victim. David urged people to get involved in state politics and work from the local level to convince legislators of the urgency and reality of domestic violence against men. This is the first step we must take before we can even begin to think about changing the social biases about DV, he said. David is a survivor of domestic abuse and also talked about the difficulties he had in confronting the fact that he was being abused and how difficult it is for men (and women) to stop denying the problem when it exists in their own lives.

[image]

(Mary Cleary talks about her AMEN program in Ireland)

The next speaker was Mary Cleary. Mary is the founder of AMEN (Abused MEN), which is a well organized support services group for battered men and their children in Ireland. AMEN was started in December of 1997 and has served the needs of over 15,000 men. Mary believes that she is close to obtaining government funding for her program, and that in some ways it is easier to make this kind of progress in a small country because the community is much tighter and an individual's impact can be much more influential if they are persistent. Mary's talk was mostly anecdotal, giving an outline of how she became aware of the abuse of men when she worked as a nurse in a fracture ward, and how her awareness and compassion brought her to become a full-time advocate for battered men. Her message was hopeful - "Despite [the naysayers], the truth is emerging...the monologue is turning into a dialogue." She is most encouraged by college students, many of whom are doing their thesis papers focusing on DV against men, and she spends much of her time helping them do research in this area. She told me after her lecture that her work is very demanding and often draining, but the fact that she is seeing progress, especially with younger people, keeps her going on in the struggle.

[image]

(Cathy Young talks about how women's violence is almost always "explained away" as the man's fault)

Cathy Young, a well known writer on gender issues for over 15 years, spoke after the intermission. She admitted that at first the idea of male victims of domestic violence wasn't easy for her to accept, but that upon uncovering the advocacy research of domestic violence she was led to conclude that there is a strong bias against finding that men are victims of this tragedy, and that the message needed to be brought out into the open. She discussed many examples of how female violence tends to be "explained away" by researchers and the media, and that no matter what the scenario is, it is assumed that the man is responsible for a woman's violence, even if he remains completely non-violent and non-threatening. She also explained the insidious technique that some researchers use in which certain studies (such as Straus, Gelles, etc) are used to obtain the high number of female victims, and then use others (like the Justice Dept.) to determine the number of male victims, to create as large a spread as possible between the prevalence of domestic violence against each gender.

Cathy also took a close examination of the amount each gender reports being "afraid" of the other, debunking the idea that only women are afraid of men in relationships. Again, dishonest tactics are used to come up with high numbers of women who fear their male partners and not vice versa. One of her final points, which I think was well-placed, was that even if men were only 5% of DV survivors (which is the common feminist advocacy number), the funding for male-related services is nowhere near 5% even now. She compared this to coming up with an Occupational Safety Act for Men, since women are a very small percentage of workplace fatalities. Clearly, the outrage a law like that would incite is not being felt in relation to VAWA, where the genders are reversed!

[image]

(Richard Davis talks about new strategies to get funding for services for men)

The final speaker was Richard Davis, a retired police officer from Massachusetts. He currently teaches Criminal Justice and Domestic Violence classes at Quincy College in Plymouth, MA. He is currently writing a training manual for police officers which does not include biases against men or women when discussing the perpetrators and victims of domestic abuse. Richard had an interesting message: that we should change our tactics in approaching DV awareness and instead of turning it into a battle of statistics (with each side having enough data to keep this debate going endlessly), we need to look for the ways feminist tactics open themselves up to rebuttal using their own facts and statistics against them. He compared this to the martial arts techniques of using an enemy's strength against him (or her). He pointed out that the reports being issued under VAWA acknowledge the men are victims in certain numbers and the we should be able to use that to demand resources for male victims of abuse. He strongly voiced his support of the Equal Rights Amendment and encouraged people to make their arguments from a perspective of establishing equality, not simply as a men's rights issue. Richard believes that if we simply expose the ways data about male victims is hidden in DV research done by feminists, that they will have no way to refute it. He gave several examples of studies (such as the one that showed a woman is beaten every 15 seconds) which also include lots of data about men, but these facts are glossed over in the publicity materials that are used to promote awareness of domestic violence.

[image]

(Members of the Massachusetts Coalition for Men stand with Cathy Young and Mary Cleary)

There was a great deal of enthusiasm about the event, and afterwards I was able to talk with the speakers and attendees about men's rights and domestic violence. I heard in the back of the room there were a couple of people who didn't agree with the message being said, but they had enough sense to stay quiet, knowing they were well outnumbered by supporters and even men who had themselves been abused. It is hard to deny the truth when it is sitting in the same room as you. Again, I can't express how impressed I was with the professionalism of the presentation and the opportunities it presented for meeting people who research or advocate for men in this subject. Mary Cleary shoved a CD-ROM and several research papers into my hands when I explained my purpose for being there. Certainly, Mary's message and her own progress is the proof that we must keep fighting to bring awareness of male survivors of DV into the world.

Unfortunately, in the U.S. we haven't yet achieved what Mary has in her own country of Ireland. As I mentioned before, the Maine Battered Men's Helpline is a non-profit organization which is still being held together on a volunteer basis and is in need of more financial support. If we want shelters and hotlines for men to become more prevalent in the U.S, I think we have an opportunity to help this process along by ensuring the success of the Maine Helpline. They field on average 25 calls each month, and this is with very little advertising in the state. Few of the people who need to know about the hotline are aware of it, so the word needs to be spread further. If you'd like to send a donation to the Helpline, you can send a check made out to Battered Men's Helpline to the following address:

Battered Men's Helpline

P.O. Box 252

Harmony, ME 04942

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/19/2126226.shtml

Don't Accept "Virtual Visitation"

Scott · 20 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Elliot Zaret from TheGuyCode.com sent me this story from MSNBC News. It's an editorial about the latest way fathers can be alienated from their children - the substitution of "virtual visitation" for real visitation when the mother wants to move away. Brock Meeks will have none of it, and sharply criticizes the practice: "the courts believe such herky-jerky videoconferencing sessions are the next best thing to throwing a Frisbee in the park with dear ol' Dad..."This will be another tool for judges to further distance fathers from their children's lives," Stuart Miller of the American Fathers Coalition told the Associated Press." Meeks ends the article with statistics about the prevalence of physical punishment by mothers - which will certainly result in a barrage of hate mail. Perhaps you could write to Meeks and express your support for his courage. Source: MSNBC

Title: Divorced fathers told Net visit with kid is as good as real thing

Author: Brock Meeks

Date: May 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/20/0123213.shtml

Controversy Surrounds IWF "Feminist Deprogramming" Ad

Scott · 21 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

David Byron sent me this story from the National Review. It covers the news about the full-page ad that the Independent Women's Forum has put in several college and university newspapers, which outlines the "Ten Most Common Feminist Myths" and the reasons they are misperceptions. Christina Hoff Sommers said in response to the outrage related to the ad: "This is a common response, hysteria and irrational reactions...Free and open discussion doesn't exist in most academic forums. Instead of research or debate, they hold rallies and protests - not exactly the most reasonable way to spark discussion."Source: National Review

Title: The Ladies Doth Protest

Author: Ben Domenech

Date: May 18, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/21/1323207.shtml

Furor Stirring At UCLA, Glenn Sacks Defends IWF

Scott · 21 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "Our very own Glenn Sacks printed an article in the UCLA Daily Bruin today responding to several opinion pieces that attacked the ad placed by the Independent Women's Forum. He reiterates the points he has repeatedly made in prior articles about "1 in 4," the wage gap and other myths that campus feminists just cannot seem to let go of. The ad has really caused furor at UCLA, but of course, not enough factual dialogue as usual. If Glenn Sacks' article doesn't change that, I'm not sure anything else will."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/21/1631207.shtml

209A Study in MA Shows Women Just as Violent as Men

Scott · 22 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Massachusetts News reported in this story that Steve Basile of the Fatherhood Coalition has directed a study in the state about domestic violence and 209A restraining orders. His work, which will be presented at the UNH International Family Violence Research Conference in July, demonstrates that men are no more violent that women and that a significant bias by the courts exists against men who try to obtain restraining orders against their violent partners. The article also mentions that Jane Doe, a DV group which opposes the research, went though great lenghts to attack and stop the research from happening. Source: The Massachusetts News [newspaper]

Title: Women As Abusive As Men, Beacon Hill Will Be Shown

Author: Ed Oliver

Date: May 17, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/21/2227206.shtml

Colleges Debate How to Attract More Males

Scott · 22 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Christian Science Monitor is running a two-part series on the gender gap at the college level. Part One partially examines the dilemma university administrators are facing as the lack of males on campuses cause both male and female students to transfer to other, more balanced institutions. Part Two, which will appear May 29, examines the origins of the gender gap in K-12." Source: Christian Science Monitor

Title: Overview: The Gender Equation [Part one of a two part series]

Author: Mark Clayton

Date: May 22, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/22/1658231.shtml

Article Celebrates Circumcision

Scott · 23 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "This link describes an Islamic celebrity who claims to have performed over 106,000 circumcisions. The story can be read here." There are a lot of references about how circumcision is the "rite of passage" that makes boys into men, but I know quite a few circumcised older males who are certainly not men. The tension between the religious tradition and individual rights continues on...Source: L.A. Times

Title: Spreading Islam With His Scalpel

Author: Amberin Zaman

Date: May 21, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/22/178234.shtml

To Love, Honor, and Manipulate?

Scott · 23 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "In the current issue of The Women's Quarterly (an IWF publication), Charlotte Allen offers her considerable wisdom on men, women, and marriage, in a generally negative review of Laura Doyle's recent book, The Surrendered Wife."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/23/1337203.shtml

Mother Kills Baby to "Get Back" at Boyfriend

Scott · 23 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry submitted this article from the UK Telegraph, about a woman who threw her 10 month old daughter out a third-floor window to "get her own back" on her boyfriend during an argument. The child was killed. "[Helen] Patterson, 23, of Newcastle upon Tyne, denied murder but pleaded guilty to manslaughter on the grounds of diminished responsibility. [The prosecuting attorney] said the Crown had decided to accept the plea following reports from psychiatrists that she was suffering from depression and other mental problems." Source: The Telegraph [UK newspaper]

Title: Mother threw her baby out of window

Author: Thomas Penny

Date: May 22, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/23/189213.shtml

More Men Registering For Selective Service

Scott · 24 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "A big part of me would love to see a day when women must register as well. This article on Excite claims the men who do not register are "missing opportunities." To quote: "But even more tragic is that our experience shows the young men most likely to miss the message are the very men who may stand the most to gain from these opportunities.""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/23/2011208.shtml

Restraining Order Reform in MA

Scott · 24 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article from the Boston Globe (by Cathy Young) outlines a Judiciary hearing in which argument were heard to reform the Abuse Prevention Law, which covers domestic violence restraining orders. "While many see the well-intentioned law as a necessary shield for abused women, there is mounting evidence that it is often used as a sword in messy domestic disputes." Young cites several examples of non-violent men who were thrown in jail for making a phone call to their child on the wrong day of the week, and similar situations. Some were even pushed to suicide after being alienated and mistreated for so long. How can this happen? Young writes, "Blame the mentality that it's best to err on the side of safety for women, even if it means trampling on the rights of some innocent men." No kidding.Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: When the law is one-sided in domestic disputes

Author: Cathy Young

Date: May 23, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/24/130218.shtml

Number of Elderly Men on the Rise

Scott · 24 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"According to this article from the Atlanta-Journal Constitution, new information indicates that the number of elderly men in this country is on a sharp increase. Men are starting to live longer, catching up to women in lifespan. It suggests that the growing population of elderly men may start to experience some of the frailty generally associated with elderly women now that men are living longer. Also, the number of elderly men is increasing more than the number of elderly women."*Source: Atlanta Journal-Constitution

Title: Increase in elderly propelled by men

Author: M.A.J. McKenna

Date: May 22, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/24/1759209.shtml

Deadbeat Dads Day

Scott · 24 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h submitted this article from TooGoodReports about the media hype over "deadbeat dads." It's an interesting, insightful article that is satirical in many places, and unfortunately, all too true. "Wake up guys! 'Deadbeat Day' is coming, and if you think you can escape the snare of a feminized society, you should be a Hollywood script writer because you are living in virtual reality."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/24/1235215.shtml

How Far We Have to Go

Scott · 25 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal has a very depressing outlook for men, which he explains in his article for LewRockwell.com. "It has become clear that left-wing feminists dominate the media, the schools, and key parts of both the legal system and the government. They saturate the country with false or misleading statistics to back up the message that men are violent by nature; and that in the right circumstances, men are only too willing to abuse women and children." I hope his article will serve as a wake up call for many men - we have a long way to go.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/24/2036215.shtml

One More Way in Which Fathers Have No Rights

Scott · 25 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC sent me this story from the Vancouver Province, which is about a court battle a father lost to have his newborn children given hyphenated last names. The mother instead registered the two sons under her own last name and fled (kidnapped) with the boys. "When he found her living on Vancouver Island, he said, she told him "to go to hell." "She said if I didn't like it, she'd say I was being violent and stalking her.'" Excerpts of the judicial decision are included, which explicitly state that as a father, he has no rights. It's a very frustrating and depressing story. Source: The Province [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Dad 'feels like dirt'

Author: Andy Ivens

Date: May 24, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/25/1414238.shtml

Men Do Ask For Directions After All

Scott · 25 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Another shattered stereotype. The proliferation of these types of "studies" disturbs me. It's almost another one of those "let's find some more differences between men and women we can exploit and use to make men look stupid so women buy our products" study, but if that was its true intent, it must've backfired."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/25/1547218.shtml

Are Family Courts Biased Against Fathers?

Scott · 27 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Claude sent me this link to an article from Insight Magazine. It's a point/counterpoint debate on whether the family court system is biased against dads. Stephen Baskerville, a great choice for the article, lists more than a dozen jaw-dropping injustices that fathers have received at the hands of family courts, and claims that this mistreatment is not uncommon. Tim Tippins argues that while the courts aren't perfect, most fathers do get a fair shake in court, and custody decisions are generally not unfair to men. Read it and decide for yourself - and furthermore, send a letter to the editor expressing your own views. Baskerville mentions in an e-mail that "This magazine is sent to all congressional offices and media outlets, and it is influential with policy makers."
Source: Insight Magazine

Title: Q: Are family courts prejudiced against fathers?

Authors: Stephen Baskerville and Tim Tippins

Date: June 18, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/27/0231224.shtml

Fathers Day Marches Planned

Adam · 27 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There are several marches planned, the first is on june 15th called Events to mark Fathers Day by the UK Men's Movement. There's also the American Coalition for Fathers and Children protest happening on June 5 referred to as the National Family Courts Protest so check it out if you're interested. And to finish off, there's the Fathers Rights March & Rally from June 11th to June 17th - Fathers Day. Kindly pass these links along to everybody you know, and lastly, I hope these marches are a great success for all involved!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/27/156246.shtml

Hey, We're a Year Old...Yesterday

Scott · 27 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I knew the one year anniversary of The Men's Activism News Network was coming up soon, but I missed it! It was yesterday, May 26. Mensactivism.org is now a year old, and still going strong. And once again, I'd like to thank the regular visitors to this site for their support and participation in the men's movement - because this web site would be pointless if so many visitors weren't making use of it. I have some great things planned for this summer, and will be giving details about them next week - stay tuned!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/27/1955237.shtml

Talking to Dad About His Health

Scott · 28 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

ABCNews has a great article about techniques for approaching fathers about improving their health. It acknowledges that older men often don't take care of their own health well enough but offers ways to approach the issue effectively, without talking down to him. I especially liked the suggestions to work out with your father or bring the grandchildren for a visit and a walk every week - having more involvement with fathers/grandfathers is a great boost to emotional health, as well as encouraging physical activity. Source: ABCNews

Title: So, How's Your Old Man?

Author: Unknown

Date: May 25

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/27/1522241.shtml

FACT Father's Rights Conference with Warren Farrell

Scott · 28 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Rick Neagle from FACT (Fathers Are Capable Too) wanted to remind everyone that there will be a one-day workshop in Toronto, Canada on June 3, 2001, for divorced/separated fathers and non-custodial mothers, their supporters, and people who work with or provide services to divorced parents. Warren Farrell will be participating, and preregistration is required. Click here to download an info flyer in MS Word Format, or contact Rick at rickneagle@hotmail.com. If you already know you want to register, just go to this site and sign up.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/02/0327200.shtml

Judge Spares Woman from Jail for Theft Due to Her "Shopaholism"

Scott · 28 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In addition to the "battered wife syndrome," which has excused dozens of women from attacking and/or murdering their husbands, a U.S. court has now acknowledged "shopaholism," which can excuse women from theft. The Sydney Morning Herald reported here that a woman (whose salary was $250k/year to begin with) was not given a jail sentence for stealing more than $500,000 from her employer - because her "shopaholic" tendencies were a symptom of depression. In the end, she was sentenced to five years of probation. Source: Sydney Morning Herald [Australian newspaper] Note: article originally appeared in The Sun-Herald

Title: Depressed thief spared from jail

Author: Unknown

Date: May 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/28/1512220.shtml

Defendants Disadvantaged in Court of Public Opinion

Scott · 29 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "The UCLA Daily Bruin recently printed an editorial in which the author examines how defendants in high profile cases are judged guilty and their lives irreparably damaged by the court of public opinion, regardless of the facts. I must agree that society as a whole assumes guilt when someone is charged with a crime (witness what's currently going with Robert Blake and the way the story is treated by late night talk show hosts...he's already guilty). This is the uphill battle which men, especially, face in our courts."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/28/1521223.shtml

Turning Sacred Cows into Cash Cows

Scott · 29 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Evan Gahr's latest column for Jewiwsh World Review investigates some of the taxpayer funded programs which fuel feminist institutions. He focuses primarily on the Women's Education Equity Act Resource Center and the programs it has sponsored. "WEEA allows an ideological clique that purports to speak "for women" to turn sacred cows into cash cows."Source: Jewish World Review

Title: Funding feminism

Author: Evan Gahr

Date: May 24, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/28/1745226.shtml

Men's Health Takes Center Stage in Ireland

Scott · 29 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"The Irish Times is reporting new efforts to increase awareness and assistance for men's health issues in that country, where women's health issues have long been top priority. One positive note, in my opinion, is that the article mentions mental health as well as physical (and points out that suicide is the leading killer of young men)."*Source: The Irish Times [UK newspaper]

Title: Project aims to find out about men's health needs

Author: Unknown

Date: May 23, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/29/1817204.shtml

Males Now Admitted At Formerly All-Female College

Scott · 30 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Part 2 of Christian Science Monitor's series on men in education details how men are now being admitted at a formerly all-female institution, the students at which used to sport T-shirts demonstrating the "Top 10 Reasons Not to Admit Men." Commencement speaker this year was William Shatner. A school official pointed out how appropriate it was for the captain of the Enterprise to speak where men are now "boldly going where no man has gone before."" Click here if you missed part one. And thanks, Nightmist, for all these great submissions!Source: Christian Science Monitor

Title: Making room for men's gains where women once reigned

Author: Mark Clayton

Date: May 29, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/29/2015230.shtml

Activism Project: Stop Paternity Fraud!

Scott · 30 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Activism Projects page has been updated (I know, it's been a few months...sorry) with the latest NCFM letter writing campaign. The goal of the project is to write to the U.S. Justice Department and express outrage over recent court cases in which men who have been proven not to be the biological father by DNA tests were still ordered to pay child support. If you feel that paternity fraud should not be condoned by our society, please take a moment to write a letter and send it off. Click here for the Mensactivism.org Activism Projects page.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/30/0250225.shtml

Latest DesertLight Journal Released

Scott · 30 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett sent out the May 30 issue of The DesertLight Journal, which can also be read on the web here. DLJ is a bi-weekly e-zine dedicated to father's rights issues and domestic violence against men. Check it out!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/30/0310248.shtml

Child Support Slavery

Scott · 30 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes *"In the Washington Times today, there is an article entitled "Study: Poor fathers need help with jobs to pay child support." I found it incredibly offensive. Absolutely no mention was made of improving custody and visitation enforcement, just finding ways to make men work harder to pay child support that was mandated by the courts without considering the father's means to begin with. "The beatings will continue until morale improves!!""*Source: The Washington Times

Title: Study: Poor fathers need help with jobs to pay child support

Author: Cheryl Wetzstein

Date: May 30, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/30/180255.shtml

Men More Vulnerable to Workplace Stress

Scott · 31 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This article claims that men's health is more affected by threats of layoffs or job insecurities than women. The article hints that one potential reason for this disparity is that men's lives are more devastated by job loss than women's. Perhaps this is because women still may choose to stay at home or work, while men's identities--for the most part--are still closely associated with our jobs." That sounds like a very reasonable explanation to me. What do you think?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/30/1915205.shtml

Top 10 Habits of Great Dads

Scott · 31 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "MSN published The Top 10 Habits of Great Dads today. In typical MSN fashion, they posted the list on the "Women Central" portion of their Web site (they have no section dedicated to men). The list comes from the 1999 book "Throwaway Dads" by Ross D. Parke and Armin A. Brott."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/30/2241223.shtml

Boys Strip-Searched While on Jail Tour

Scott · 31 May 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"This story in the Courier Press details how several middle-school age boys on a tour of prison facilities were forced by teachers and jail employees to 1) watch while inmates were strip-searched and 2) forced to remove their clothes for a strip-search in front of other students as a "demonstration of what it's like in jail." The thing that concerns me most is that officials say they are "looking into whether the boys' civil rights were violated." I say there's no "looking into" to it."*Source: Courier Press [newspaper]

Title: Young students strip-searched while touring jail

Author: Justin Blum and Yolanda Woodlee

Date: May 25, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/31/1948215.shtml

Help Support Pro-Equality Feminists

Scott · 1 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

It has come to my attention that the message board over at shethinks.org has become a battleground for gender feminists, who are attacking equity feminists for speaking out against the top 10 lies of gender feminism. If you support the Independent Women's Forum for distributing the ad, please take a moment and help support them by going to their bulletin board, and posting supportive, non-antagonistic messages. Try to counter the irrational hatred with calm, reasonable postings.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/01/0039202.shtml

Scotland Decides Against Anonymity for Those Accused of Rape

Scott · 1 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry pointed me to this article from the UK Telegraph. The courts of Scotland were considering allowing anonymity of those accused of rape until a conviction is secured. The Scottish Justice Minister decided against it, however, claiming that he didn't believe false accusations of rape are common. I'd be interested to see what the numbers actually are. The article describes a couple of cases of false accusations, and also interestingly comments that providing anonymity of the accuser is done according to custom, rather than law. Source: The Telegraph [UK newspaper]

Title: Scotland rules out anonymity for men accused of rape

Author: Nick Britten

Date: May 31, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/05/31/2352259.shtml

Washington Times Article on IWF Ad

Scott · 1 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC sent me this editorial from the Washington Times. It outlines the controversy at UCLA for the printing of the Independent Women's Forum Ad which factually refutes feminist myths. Christie Scott's call for an apology and for "this to never happen again" is being well exposed as the oppressive PC-censorship that is really is. The article concludes: "In their obvious reluctance to joust, fact to fact, in a debate of ideas, campus feminists reveal not only their loathing for the First Amendment...but also their fear of it. Why else try to stifle someone else's freedom of speech, rather than more vigorously exercise one´s own?"Source: The Washington Times [newspaper]

Title: Feminist fury

Author: Unknown

Date: June 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/01/1734228.shtml

Modern Literature Overly Political

Scott · 2 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

BusterB writes "While not strictly a men's rights article, this opinion piece in Canada's National Post amused me because - as a man - this is exactly why I've soured on modern literature, plays, and in some cases film. So much of it seems to be designed to bash me over the head with overt, ideological messages about how ashamed I should be to be white, be a male, or be both. It's refreshing to see a hard-core bookworm complaining about this, too."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/01/199244.shtml

JunkScience.com: "Feminism Bad for Women's Health"

Scott · 2 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Junk Science, a fascinating Web site full of debunkery, posted this article regarding the recent retraction of one 1997 study claiming women were "routinely excluded from clinical trials." FYI: this site also debunks a few myths about breast cancer. A 1997 article about the IWF (I have much respect for those women) and its stance against the myths also appears here."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/02/1919213.shtml

Pasadena Star News Prints Response On Male DV Victims

Scott · 3 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The Pasadena Star News printed my letter responding to their editor's downplaying of male victims of DV. In the original editorial in which the editor belittles the numbers, the editor made a fool of himself because he assumed the National Institute of Justice was some crazy advocacy group and he said "something called the National Institute of Justice says . . ." When I pointed this out to him and showed him the data, he became upset and evasive, called it "nutty," and said "I don't believe your data." (As though it were "my" data and not the National Institute of Justice's data.) I think he's just upset that he made himself look like a fool." Update: I've fixed the link to the story. Another update: But now it's broken again! Read More to view instructions on how to access it.Source: Pasedena Star News

Title: Men can be victims

Author: Marc Angelucci

Date: June 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/02/1924215.shtml

H.I.V Infection Rate Skyrocketing for Black Gay Men

Scott · 3 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article from the New York Times (free registration required to read) was announced on the Men's Health America mailing list. The story is about a report that H.I.V. infections among young black gay men in large cities is dramatically above the rates for young white men - up to six times as much. The report should expose the need for more aggressive screening and educational programs about H.I.V, and "that programs for black men "must address the stigma of homosexuality which prevents many of these men from identifying themselves as gay and bisexual and may keep them from accessing needed prevention and treatment services.""Source: The New York Times [newspaper]

Title: Report Finds Young Black Men at Higher Risk for H.I.V.

Author: Lawrence Altman

Date: May 31, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/03/0447234.shtml

Creating Change in Advertising

Scott · 3 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "From time to time, I e-mail various corporations about their advertising campaigns. If I find a campaign particularly offensive to men, I send a scathing e-mail. If I find a campaign presenting men in a rare positive light, I will send a congratulatory e-mail. Recently, I sent one of each to Tylenol. Click "Read More" below for the results of those letters."

A few months ago, I sent the scathing one, admonishing Tylenol for their father-hating "Tylenol for Women" ad, which started out with the words "Face it, guys. It's a woman's world." I received no reply from them, but I noticed that a few weeks later the ad had been edited and shortened, cutting out the "Woman's World" comments.

More recently, Tylenol stopped running that ad and is now running an ad called "Baby Boom," which features a father doing dishes and dancing around to the sound of his baby clanging two pot lids together. The catch at the end is: "Sometimes the difference between noise and music is all in your head." I sent Tylenol a favorable e-mail on this one for a couple of reasons:

1) This commercial was not presented in a "Hey! Look! It's a gender role reversal!" fashion. The father was doing dishes, the kid was clanging pot lids. No mother was present or walking out the door to be a breadwinner. No big deal was made about the father doing dishes.

2) The father and child were having a good time together. No female chaperones were necessary.

Here's the response I received from Tylenol about this commercial:

Thanks for visiting our website and taking the time to contact us about your satisfaction with our TYLENOL (TM) commercial depicting a father and child. It is always gratifying when customers are thoughtful enough to let us know when they are pleased with our efforts.

Our first responsibility is to our diverse group of consumers and their families. The TYLENOL (TM) name is your guarantee of our commitment to you. We've worked hard to earn your trust; we'll work even harder to keep it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/03/0515204.shtml

Female Thieves Use Breasts, Drugs to Rob Men

Scott · 3 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Now there's a headline for you. :) Nightmist writes "This article on Excite explains how several young Colombian women have been rubbing narcotics on their breasts, then luring male victims to lick them. The men are rendered unconscious and then robbed. On rare occassions, the article says, victims of this type of drugged robbery have died."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/03/1448232.shtml

NH Men's Commission Bill in the News

Scott · 4 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

New Hampshire's Portsmouth Herald printed a front page story about the proposed Commission on the Status of Men in NH, which has passed the House stripped of the program's funding and is headed for the Senate. The article outlines many of the findings of the research group which proposed the commission, listing several key areas where men are not doing well, including health issues, fatherlessness, and education. FYI, the legislative report can be downloaded here.Source: The Portsmouth Herald [newspaper]

Title: Commission on Status of Men proposed in N.H.

Author: Steve Haberman

Date: June 3, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/04/007243.shtml

There's No Equality in Dating

Scott · 4 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This column on Excite is no doubt meant to be humorous, but it also points out some very real frustrations for males who date females. As the author says, "And that's when I came to a shocking conclusion: We're not equal. Somewhere along the way, we poor men got the short end of the deal."" This was a great column to see being printed in a campus newspaper - a young man coming to the revelation that women and men are equal, until it comes to paying for dates, initiating relationships, etc.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/04/0013224.shtml

Fatty Fish May Cut Prostate Cancer Risk

Scott · 4 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Research by Finnish scientists claims that eating fatty fish like salmon and mackerel may significantly reduce a man's risk of getting prostate cancer. "The men who ate no fish had a two-fold to three-fold higher risk of prostate cancer than those who ate moderate or high amounts," one researcher said. Prostate cancer is the most common cancer in Swedish men."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/04/0014213.shtml

Second "Walk For a Cure" For Prostate Cancer Scheduled

Scott · 4 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "LA's Second Annual Champions For A Cure Run/Walk is scheduled for the day before Father's Day. Says the article: "The event will be hosted by sports legend Wayne Gretzky and is expected to draw thousands of Los Angeles area residents to participate in the 10K/5K Run/Walk, the 1K "Kids Dash For Dad" and the Interactive Sports Festival."" Registration information for the event is included in the article - please consider attending or participating if you're in the area.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/04/0017227.shtml

Prostate Cancer Treatment Causes Severe Bone Mass Loss

Scott · 5 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This frightening article posted on Excite claims that a common treatment for prostate cancer is causing loss of bone mass to accelerate in men. Bone loss which would normally occur within 10 years occurs within one year of starting the treatment. The treatment suppresses testosterone, which is responsible for spurring growth of prostate tumors, but is also responsible for healthy bone mass."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/05/0347207.shtml

D.C. Forms Commission on Black Men and Boys

Scott · 5 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"The Washington Post is reporting in a news brief that "Del. Eleanor Holmes Norton (D-D.C.) and a civil rights group announced the creation yesterday of a Commission on Black Men and Boys in the District to find services to combat joblessness, crime, illness and family dysfunction that disproportionately strike African American men." This program is reportedly the first of its kind for D.C."*Source: The Washington Post [newspaper]

Title: Panel to focus on black men and boys

Author: Unknown

Date: June 5, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/05/2033238.shtml

Teachers Ignoring Fathers' Roles in Education

Scott · 6 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This story on EurekAlert details how teachers for children in low-income, at-risk households were routinely ignoring the role and interest of fathers (or father figures) in the educational development of such children. After some study and sensitivity training for the teachers, they began to include fathers more. The misperception among teachers, according to the study, is that most of these children have no fathers."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/05/2042244.shtml

Mayor Candidate Wants More DV Cases Pushed Into Court

Scott · 6 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Terence Hallinan, who is considering running for mayor in San Fransisco, has explicitly stated that he wants the "charge count" on domestic violence cases increased - "We've got to do better even if it means tightening up the charging criteria" he said. In response, a police officer was quoted as saying, "It's B.S...the cases are just going to get tossed [out of court] anyway." What is most frightening about this is that due to the highly political climate around domestic violence, his chances of winning the mayor seat are benefiting from this. The story is the second topic covered in this column from the San Fransisco Gate. Source: The San Fransisco Gate [newspaper]

Title: Matier & Ross [column]

Authors: Phillip Matier and Andrew Ross

Date: May 30, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/06/0250214.shtml

Go Ahead and Bash Men in Advertising, It's OK With Us

Scott · 6 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This foolish article in the Christian Science Monitor attempts to defend negative portrayals of men in modern advertising as a way of attracting male buyers to products, and that men aren't offended by such ads, but use them as excuses to be *stupid. One moron quoted in the article says the ads resonate with women, too, because "Women know a lot of stupid men." Newsflash, jerk, I've known many a stupid woman in my time."*Source: The Christian Science Monitor

Title: Ad world "dumbs down" American males

Author: Neal Learner

Date: June 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/06/0156234.shtml

John Leo: Miffing the Myth Makers

Scott · 7 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

John Leo's column in U.S. News and World Report covers the IWF's feminist myth-busting ad, and serves as yet more embarrassing coverage to colleges and universities which no longer tolerate free speech and open inquiry. Leo analyzes the attacks on the ad, noting that the tactics of campus feminists are to portray the ad as creating a hostile environment for women, and trying to shift the perception of the ad as an issue of free speech to one of violent speech. Leo then quotes Stanley Kurtz with, "Once words we don't like have been equated with acts of violence, there's no place left for free speech." I thought this was a great article for making this issue more explicit. Source: U.S. News and World Report

Title: Miffing the myth makers

Author: John Leo

Date: June 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/07/0430221.shtml

iFeminists.com Speaks Out on DV Against Men

Scott · 7 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The iFeminists.com web site had an article by Wendy McElroy about battered men. It discusses the uphill battle male victims of DV and their supporters have to climb in order to get help and recognition by society, and mentions the recent battered men conference which was held in Portland, ME. From the article: "For self-interested reasons, many women's shelters continue to deny that men comprise a significant portion of those victimized by domestic abuse. Their funding depends on the denial...The only right abused men seem to have retained in full is the right to remain silent."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/07/0441223.shtml

"Pit Stop" Program Targets Men's Health at Car Races

Scott · 7 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

bernee writes "There is no question that when it comes to the health stakes, men are often short changed, especially in rural areas. An initiative in Australia is hoping to address this. "Pit Stop", as it is known grew out of the observation that getting men to go to the doctor was often difficult but they turned up in droves to car races etc. "Pit Stop" is a mobile clinic that travels to organised car events doing check-ups and advising men on health issues. This initiative was featured on a national TV program, the transcript of which is available here."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/07/1851224.shtml

Equality Marches On

Scott · 8 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Andrew writes *"Remember that famous feminist slogan? Something like, 'To get respect in a man's world, a woman must do twice as much in the same time as a man. Fortunately, this is not difficult.' (If anyone has a more accurate version of this, and a source, I'd like to hear about it.) Gee, I guess this news story, Women find army training too tough must be some kind of anti-feminist plot. While the Western nations work to make their military training female-friendly, the Chinese are busy toughening up the largest army on the planet. 'Those who will not learn from history are condemned to repeat it."*Source: The Advertiser [Australian newspaper]

Title: Women find army training too tough

Author: Unknown

Date: June 7, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/07/1853258.shtml

Cancer Web Site Launches Prostate Cancer-specific Resource

Scott · 8 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Along with Cancer-Option.com's breast cancer and lung cancer sites, Excite news reports that a new prostate cancer-specific site has been launched. ProstateCancerOption.com will focus solely on news and assistance for men suffering the disease. CancerOption.com, meanwhile, is still a general resource on all types of cancers."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/07/1856252.shtml

Family Courts Creating "Deadbolt" Dads

Scott · 8 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"Christian Science Monitor reports on a widespread protest of family court justice in America. The protestors advocated "shared parenting," in which both parents get equal time with their children. It also points out that in 85 percent of cases, the mother gets custody, even though some states already have shared parenting legislation (Massachusetts is apparently working on it)."*Source: Christian Science Monitor

Title: From divorced fathers, a plea for time with kids

Author: Marilyn Gardner

Date: June 8, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/08/153203.shtml

Don't Forget About "Real Men Cook"

Scott · 9 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"The Detroit News ran the article recently on Real Men Cook, which is slated to take place Father's Day in various cities around the country. The event raises money for various urban men's and family's causes."*Source: The Detroit News [newspaper]

Title: Cooks out to prove they are real men

Author: Rhonda Bates-Rudd

Date: June 6, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/08/1854224.shtml

Feminists and Father's Groups Clash

Adam · 9 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Feminist groups in Canada have threatened to boycott nation-wide government consultations on changes to divorce law since they might have to sit with Father's advocates. The hypocrisy here is unbelievable, this quote says it better than I ever could "The best interests of children...can only be met by ensuring the well being of their mothers." if you think that's bad, the rest of the article gets worse. The full article can be read from the National Post Online.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/08/1151254.shtml

Egalitarianism Confronts Genetics

Adam · 9 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Now this is an interesting article. American social scientist Charles Murray believes that "advances in genetics and neurology will lead to the death of egalitarianism within 20 years." From the sounds of it, psuedo-science could finally be eliminated. This last quote is quite interesting: "What he calls the "intellectual egalitarianism" of the Left actually is not about equal outcomes at all, he says. It just "hates the idea that some people are inherently smarter or more charming [and that you can't change that] by the right social program or the right liberation of people from their oppressors." Social engineering can't cure inequality."Source: Sydney Morning Herald [newspaper]

Title: The intolerable truth of genetic inequality

Author: Miranda Devine

Date: May 24, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/08/2144233.shtml

Dadmag.com Names Top 12 Dads of the Year

Scott · 10 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Excite News reports that father-oriented Web site Dadmag.com has named a list of a dozen fathers its "Twelve Top Pops" for Father's Day. Among the names on the list are: Dr. Wade Horn of the National Father's Initiative; Prime Minister Tony Blair; Weatherman Al Roker; "Daddio" star Michael Chiklis; and Bill Clinton. The reasons for each selection are noted by the names."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/09/1914249.shtml

Testicular Cancer Deaths on Decline

Scott · 10 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This article on Excite News reports that deaths from testicular cancer are on the decline, although there are a greater number of cases. Interestingly, some researchers are saying that exposure to high levels of estrogen in the womb may be one of the causes for the increase in cases. Testicular cancer is also more likely in men ages 25-29, first-born sons, and fraternal twins."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/09/1915241.shtml

University Population Explosion Creates Co-Ed Dorm Controversy

Scott · 10 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This editorial in the Daily Texan defends the University of Texas-Austin for temporarily converting an all-female dorm to co-ed because of a summer schedule population explosion on campus. The dorm's female occupants are outraged and have signed a petition to keep men out, claiming that (because men are violent and immature) women will be more likely to be attacked and the dorm will be more likely to be vandalized. The author of the editorial, however, points out that these women are succumbing to stereotypes."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/09/1917213.shtml

Country Music Scene Struggling With Gender Issues

Scott · 11 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mark sent in this USA Today article and writes *"After the success of Shania Twain's 1995 anti-male "The Woman In Me" album and the success of other female acts such as the Dixie Chicks (whose song "Goodbye Earl" was about murdering an abusive husband), country radio stations began tailoring their format to appeal almost entirely to women. Now after having chased away most of their male listeners, these stations are trying to win them back. However, the article mentions that "You can have a record that may send men screaming from the room on your radio station, but you cannot have a song that sends women screaming from the room." Still, the pendulum appears to have started swinging back. The article mentions that women are tired of "bend-over-backward proclamations of love and songs about empowered women." And any male country music listener today has no doubt enjoyed songs like Toby Keith's "How Do You Like Me Now" and Montgomery Gentry's "She Couldn't Change Me""*Source: USA Today [newspaper]

Title: Macho country (subsection: Country's gender agenda)

Author: Brian Mansfield

Date: June 7, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/10/2336256.shtml

Men Harassing Other Men

Scott · 11 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Peter sent in this article from the New York Times (free registration required). It's about the rise in sexual harassment lawsuits filed by men against male employers. The article is testimony to the unequal treatment of gay men in the workplace. From the article: "While some of these men are complaining of unwanted sexual overtures, just as women frequently do, most complaints involve men being picked on, through boorish hijinks that come across as offensive and humiliating...Men's claims now account for 13.5 percent of all sexual harassment charges being brought to the commission, nearly double the percentage a decade ago." The article describes the problems faced by those who file same-sex harassment claims, which the courts do not take as seriously as claims filed by women against male employers.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/11/0356220.shtml

National Men's Health Week is Here!

Scott · 11 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Yes, it's here again - National Men's Health Week, June 11-17, 2001. It's time to think about heading to the doctor for a checkup if you haven't been there in a while, and to educate and raise awareness of men's health issues. The Men's Health Week web site has lots of good info, including a calendar of events. I'd also highly recommend subscribing to Ed Bartlett's Men's Health America mailing list to receive updates on news about men's health. And don't forget your mental health, too - when's the last time you took a vacation?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/11/1614246.shtml

Mothers of Deception

Scott · 11 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This bold story, which appeared in the UK Observer, confronts the stark reality of mothers who use men as sperm donors, then wallets. It begins with a disturbing story of a woman who changed the locks on their house as soon as the father's name was on the birth certificate. It also mentions, "These women are not rare: the Government's Children First consultation paper found that 40 per cent of the divorced or separated mothers admitted to thwarting child-father contact....Fatherhood is an inalienable right, for both child and father, and we should defend it from those women bent on trampling it." Source: The Guardian Unlimited Observer [UK newspaper]

Title: Mothers of Deception

Author: Cristina Odone

Date: June 10, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/11/1857243.shtml

Farrell Review in The Report

Scott · 12 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Canada's The Report give a review of Warren Farrell's latest book, Father and Child Reunion. It stresses Farrell's findings that children are better off with single dads than with single moms, but doesn't portray this view as too radical or antagonistic, which could easily be done by a reviewer who doesn't like Farrell's findings. Click here for the article. Source: The Report [Canadian magazine]

Title: Dad as nurturer

Author: Candis McLean

Date: June 11, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/11/173201.shtml

The PC Police Strike Again

Scott · 12 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Fox News ran this column about recent legal and other battles regarding free speech v. politically correct speech. Although not specifically a men's issue, the First Amendment is taking quite a beating lately, and these incidents deserve some attention."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/12/0034255.shtml

Fatherlessness A Problem for Kids, Not Mothers

Scott · 12 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mark sent in this article by Maggie Gallagher. She mentions that President Bush spoke recently to the National Fatherhood Initiative, saying that fatherlessness is one of America's largest social problems. Gallagher also derides wealthy single mothers, like Calista Flockhart (Ally McBeal), who was quoted as saying, "I want more children. I guess it would be nice to have a husband, too, and if you know where I might find the right one, let me know. But meanwhile, the baby is all I really want."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/12/1410201.shtml

Doctors Don't Talk to Men About Prostate Cancer

Scott · 12 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This article on Excite News claims that a recent report published in Men's Health found that doctors talk to one in two male patients about prostate cancer, the second leading killer cancer among men (behind lung cancer). Likewise, the story says, many men who are high-risk for the disease are not being tested, and about one in five do not even know what a prostate is."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/12/2030233.shtml

Report on Child Soldiers

Scott · 13 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A.J. writes "This Reuters article reports on the use of child soldiers by militaries around the world. I'm appalled that this occurs at all but am also disturbed by the reporting. The article states that "300,000 children under 18 were fighting for government forces or opposition groups at any one time." There is one (count 'em) reference to gender of those children forced to fight: "The report said that 49 children, including 32 girls between 11 and 15, were among 140 LTTE personnel killed in a battle with security forces in October 1999" referring to actions in Sri Lanka. No mention of gender for the other 299,968 children forced to fight. What are we to assume about the gender breakdown of those children?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/12/2029206.shtml

Man Awarded $1.15 million After False Date Rape Accusation

Scott · 13 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Wendy McElroy of iFeminists.com reports on Fox News about one man's seven-year struggle against false date rape allegations which destroyed his teaching career before it had even started. The accusations were leveled by Gonzago University (and denied over and over by his alleged victim). The man in this case was extremely lucky in the fact that his alleged victim continued to deny the charges, even through faculty attempts to brainwash her into believing she had been raped." Thanks also to the Anonymous User who submitted this article.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/12/2032234.shtml

More Dads Taking Advantage of Flexible Work Time

Scott · 13 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Ernst & Young claim in this short article that 17 percent of the 1,500 people taking advantage of their flexible work schedules are men who are taking time to be with their children. This article was probably intended as a release for press-only (because it names three fathers who are available to talk about the program). Any journalists out there want to contact these people and write a great fatherhood piece on it?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/12/2349241.shtml

DesertLight Journal No. 5 Hits the Web

Scott · 13 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett's excellent DesertLight Journal has released another issue, which can be read at this link. This one is a special Father's Day themed issue, with lots of great news articles and editorials. Go Trudy!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/13/1359244.shtml

Girl Bullies in High School Often Worse Than Boys

Scott · 13 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mark writes "This article written by a high school teacher of 30 years not only dispels the myth that all bullying is done by males, but also adds that quite often the female bullies are more relentless.
*"I'd rather be bullied by a guy any day than by a girl. ... Compared to guys, girls are vicious" said one 17-year-old girl."*Source: USA Today [newspaper]

Title: Bully-boy focus overlooks vicious acts by girls

Author: Patrick Welsh

Date: June 12, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/12/2356222.shtml

Sex Discrimination in No Man's Land

Scott · 13 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Spartacus pointed me to this article from the Washington Post, about a Supreme Court ruling that upheld the double standard that unmarried mothers bearing children abroad can have an easier process to establish the child's U.S. citizenship than fathers. The reason this was justified was that mothers can be certain of their maternity, while paternity of a child can not be such a sure thing. If the court is practically acknowledging the problem of paternity fraud, could an understanding of the need for Choice for Men be that much further away?Source: The Washington Post [newspaper]

Title: Parent's Sex May Be Factor in Citizenship, Court Rules

Author: Charles Lane

Date: June 12, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/13/007238.shtml

NIH Expands Fatherhood Research

Scott · 14 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett writes, "The US Department of Health and Human Services is in the process of dramatically expanding its fatherhood programs. As part of of this effort, the National Institutes of Health has developed a compilation of fatherhood research projects that it is funding. These studies are being sponsored by the NIH National Institute on Child Health and Human Development and by other NIH institutes. NIH Activities in Support of the Fatherhood Initiative through September 2000 can be found at this site."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/13/1737210.shtml

Healthology Teams Up With Men's Web Sites for Men's Health Week

Scott · 14 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Healthology, a leading health-oriented Web site has teamed up with Men's Health Network, AskMen.com, and Dadmag.com to provide Web-casts about men's health issues for each day of National Men's Health Week (June 11-17.... this week!). This article on Excite News explains the details and purpose of the arrangement."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/13/225218.shtml

Server Upgrade on the Way...

Scott · 14 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Well, today I received in the mail the parts I'll be using to upgrade the Mensactivism.org server. In addition, I'll be performing an upgrade of the server's OS and the Slash web engine which runs this site. It's not going to be fun, since the setup I'm using is extremely customized. After I've installed the new hardware and tested it, I'll announce when Mensactivism.org will be down for the upgrade. It could be for a duration of 3-4 days if things get really nasty, but I'll create a temporary page to keep people posted on the progress.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/13/224206.shtml

Prime Minister Blair Eligible For Up to 13 Weeks Paternity Leave

Scott · 14 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mark sent me this article from BBC News and writes *"With the arrival of a new baby in the home of British Prime Minister Tony Blair, there is talk of how much of the nation's new 13-week unpaid paternity leave he will take. The article mentions that Britain, though ahead of the US, still lags far behind other industrialized nations in the amount of leave that fathers may take. In Sweden and Japan, the leave (up to 450 days) is completely transferable between the parents and up to 85% of the income is to be paid."*Source: BBC [UK network]

Title: Blair baby sparks leave debate

Author: Unknown

Date: May 21, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/13/2211231.shtml

The Factor's View

Scott · 14 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Chad from the Men's Movement Connection writes, "On June 12th 2001, Mr. Bill O' Reilly had the pleasure to have a discussion on the rights of fathers. The discussion took place on "The O' Reilly Factor" on the Fox News Channel. His guest was Mr. Jeffrey Leving, author of the book, Father's Rights. O' Reilly revealed (according to his statistics) that 50% of all fathers are denied visitation to their children, and on top of that, only 12% of fathers see their children, and only once a month. However, Mr. O' Reilly's took the narrow-minded view that it was the father's fault and not the courts or the government. And he went on to say that, "If it is not possible (to see them), don't have them." And on top of all of this O' Reilly seemed to not let his guest explain any of the issues. If you would like to write Bill O' Reilly the email address is OReilly@FoxNews.Com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/14/1316216.shtml

Supporting Fatherhood

Scott · 14 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "In this Town Hall article, Michelle Malkin takes the time to criticize Camryn Manheim for her "fathers are superfluous" position and her defiant choice to be a single mom. Thanks Michelle!" From the article: "In the "progressive" feminist worldview, dads are little more than expendable sperm donors. The strength, discipline and guidance Ms. Manheim received from her own father mean nothing to her now. Women like Ms. Manheim see children not as the fruit of a loving union between two married partners for life -- but as just another accomplishment to check off on their to-do list."Source: Town Hall

Title: "Male Stimulant's" Day?

Author: Michelle Malkin

Date: June 13, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/14/128251.shtml

The Amazing Dad

Scott · 14 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"The Christian Science Monitor published this article about the author of a new book on fatherhood and entertaining children. Dads are generally the entertainers of the household, in addition to their other duties, according to the author. His book provides dads with even more ways of entertaining the kids."*Source: The Christian Science Monitor

Title: The magic bond between fathers and their kids

Author: Ross Atkin

Date: June 13, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/14/1213206.shtml

Girl's Treatment Shocks Former Father

Scott · 15 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"Fox News reported this story about a young girl who was locked in a closet and nearly starved to death by her mother and step-father. The mother regained custody of the girl after changing her mind about allowing another couple to adopt her. A tragic tale, and more proof that our justice system really isn't interested in "what's best for the child" as much as they are protecting the rights of motherhood."*Source: Fox News

Title: Girl's Treatment Shocks Former Father

Author: Unknown

Date: June 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/14/1952235.shtml

Feminizing the Black Beret

Scott · 15 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Andrew writes "I expected this article to be about the feminist destruction of the American military, particularly in reference to the recent decision to issue the Army Rangers' 'black beret,' previously restricted to an elite fighting force, to all 'soldiers' (including perky girls) regardless of ability or accomplishment. Indeed it began on that subject, but quickly developed into a really excellent analysis of all that has gone wrong in American culture in recent decades, focusing on the 'downsizing' of men and manhood that is the real (and inevitable) aim and effect of the feminist campaign to make everyone 'equal.' And that ultimately can have only one result: as I've noted, while America is working to make its military 'female-friendly,' China is busy toughening up the largest army on the planet. In the real world, which will actually prevail? Are you willing to bet your freedom - or your life - on your answer?" Click on Read More to view more of Andrew's comments and background.As it happens, I've long been a great fan of Chinese culture, and have been studying the language for some years. Nevertheless, I wouldn't want to live in the kind of sociopolitical environment Chinese people seem to like - or at least tolerate. America is far from perfect, to be sure, but it remains the only place on the planet where the citizen's rights are (theoretically, at least) defined as prior and superior to government power. It would be a great tragedy of world history to lose what we have here in the rising sea of feminist/socialist human-termite collectivism. At the moment, unless we turn it around, that is exactly what will happen, and soon.

By the way, I am far from a military cultist; I was a draft-dodger in the Vietnam War (which I don't regret; that war had nothing to do with defending America's hearth and home), have never been in the military or even learned to fight in my youth like a normal boy once would've. In short, I am a product of the times, a good example of the feminist ideal mama's boy 'sensitive' intellectual wussy guy. But I also cannot hide from the truth; indeed, as I grow older and realize how completely I've been lied to throughout my life, I find I have an almost desperate hunger for the truth. And the truth is, in the real world women and men are different, and a country whose men have been feminized will not survive.

Please read this article, and give it some serious thought. It says nearly all that needs to be said, and very well.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/15/1340238.shtml

Misandry in Canada

Scott · 15 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h sent in this story from the National Post and writes *"While this news is not new (it was mentioned in a posting a few days ago), this author provides an interesting analysis of the recent announcement by feminists that they will boycott the subject government meetings. Their misandry is showing, glaringly, and I can only conclude from this that progress is being made. However, I'm not sure that the government's language, even now, supports men/fathers very well. The author includes phone and fax numbers at the bottom of the article and I would encourage all of our Canadian readers to use them."*Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: When dad becomes a dirty word

Author: Donna Laframboise

Date: June 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/15/1346215.shtml

Parental Abduction Rates

Scott · 15 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Matthew writes *"A Story from the Ottawa Citizen about parents abducting children is here. It mentions that when a child is abducted by a parent it is 'equally likely to be women or men' who are the abductors. This is provided without a source and it isn't clear whether that's in absolute numbers or as a percent of non-custodial parents. If it is in fact true that the numbers are equal in absolute terms, considering that there's fewer non-custodial mothers than fathers, then that is certainly food for thought."*Source: Ottawa Citizen [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Child abduction occurs four times a week

Author: Michele Oberoi

Date: March 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/15/1351206.shtml

Father Involvement Improves Sons' Outlook on Marriage

Scott · 16 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mark and Tarek both submitted this story from Yahoo! News. It describes a study in which young men were polled about their attitudes toward marriage and divorce, and it was found that having a close relationship with one's parents, especially one's father for boys, dramatically improves a son's outlook on marriage and confidence in building long-term relationships. From the article: "In this respect, a boy's relationship with his dad may be even more important than the one he shares with his mother, since fathers remain a boy's most important male role model, shaping his attitudes toward intimate partnerships." The article can be read here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/16/1338204.shtml

Women Sentenced More Leniently in New Zealand

Scott · 16 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC sent me this article from New Zealand's Stuff site and writes "The fact that men get tougher sentences shouldn't be too much of a surprise to anyone who's been around a courthouse in the last thirty years. Here is another study, from New Zealand, that also includes family law and domestic violence. As usual, judges look for an explanation and an excuse for an offending woman, whereas all men are bastards. One quote which would be humorous if it wasn't said in all seriousness was from Oakes' lawyer, Judith Ablett-Kerr. She said, "I believe that it was Cecelia Lashlie who, when she was in charge of Christchurch Women's Prison, said that most of the women whom she locked up were there directly or indirectly as a result of their association with a man.""
Source: Sunday Star-Times [New Zealand newspaper]

Title: Sugar and spice

Author: John McCombe

Date: June 10, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/16/149220.shtml

CNN Positive on Fatherhood?

Scott · 16 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

More fatherhood news, appropriate as we get so close to Father's Day: frank h writes "CNN actually managed to say something about fatherhood, single fatherhood nonetheless, and they did it without being critical or sarcastic!" It's a short piece on the rising number of single dads, and while they made sure to quote some children as feeling a deep loss without their mother (when's the last time an article on single mothers mentioned father loss?), the article generally seems lukewarm to single dads. Click here for the link.Source: CNN

Title: As numbers grow, single dads still face skeptics

Author: Dr. Sanjay Gupta

Date: June 15, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/16/1347201.shtml

Australian Magistrate Under Fire for Admitting Women Can Lie About Being Raped

Scott · 17 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Australia's ABC news network is covering the story of a female senior magistrate (judge) who has said that many women lie about rape. Pat O'Shane is defending her comments, saying she is stating a fact: "It's a fact of life, people do it...there is no question that...women do manufacture complaints against men, just as men manufacture all sorts of allegations against women, and for that matter against each other." The outcry from women's groups has been significant, and they are demanding for Ms. O'Shane to resign. The Chief Magistrate of New South Wales is considering reviewing the cases that Ms. O'Shane handles, to ensure she is not given sexual harassment or rape cases.Source: ABC [Australian news network]

Title: O'Shane stands by rape fabrication comments

Author: Unknown

Date: June 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/16/1914227.shtml

Happy Father's Day!

Scott · 17 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

We'd like to wish everyone a Happy Father's Day, the second one that Mensactivism.org has been around for. Here's a proclamation by President Bush on Father's Day. All sorts of events are planned, from marches on Washington to local events, such as the NCFC-NH chapter picnic in Dover, NH. Click here to view the official Father's Day 2001 web site, and enjoy the day with dad! I hope many of you also did something to promote men's health, as this is the final day of National Men's Health Week.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/16/2034208.shtml

Irresponsible (Black) Fathers

Scott · 17 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "This column, from the Richmond Times-Dispatch, repeats the perpetual condemnation of black fathers for abandoning their children. When will somebody mention the multitude of mothers who drive black fathers away so the mothers will have undisputed control?" What a great Father's Day article - why not send Mark Holmberg an e-mail of appreciation? (I'm being sarcastic)Source: The Times-Dispatch [newspaper]

Title: Irresponsible fathers allow hoods to destroy the 'hoods

Author: Mark Holmberg

Date: June 17, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/17/2121205.shtml

Here's a GOOD Father's Day Article!

Scott · 18 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "Los Angeles activist Glenn Sacks published a Father's Day article today that helps make up for the Richmond Times-Dispatch's sad stereotyping of dads. Both the LA Daily News and the Salt Lake City Tribune printed the article (Click on either link to view it). After mentioning how father-presence is the largest predicting factor in major aspects of a child's upbringing, Glenn explains point by point how "we allow hundreds of thousands of fathers to be locked out of their children's lives by ex-spouses . . . and by a family court system that is biased against fathers." Thanks again, Glenn!" Ditto, Glenn - great work.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/17/2256207.shtml

Fathers-to-be Experience Hormonal Changes Too

Scott · 18 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Men's hormones fluctuate similarly to women's when a man is expecting to become a father, according to this story on Excite News. Scientists have known for years about the effects of the hormonal changes in women, but only recently discovered that changes occur in men as well. Although research in this area is new, I'd say there's a good chance it could enhance the argument that fathers have as much right to be parents as mothers do by scientifically establishing the similarities of the biological bonds. If we can't win with our hearts and souls, gentlemen, let's prove it with science."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/18/026208.shtml

Helping At-Risk Young Men Become Good Fathers

Scott · 18 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This article about a young, reluctant father who changed his ways and grew responsible is important. For years, males have been ignored by teen sex/pregnancy education programs. The young man profiled here is now assisting other young men in these types of programs, helping to get them off the streets and to teach them to wait about becoming a father, as well as how to be a good father. The article also details a bill on the floor of the Calif. legislature to extend more funding to the male program."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/18/027213.shtml

An Interesting Difference of Opinion

Scott · 18 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "I noticed kind of an interesting difference of opinion in these two articles - The Seattle Times: ""Do women batter? Sure, but not very often," said Bonnie Campbell, who headed the federal Violence Against Women office under President Clinton. "The more success we have as a society in highlighting violence against women, the more of a backlash we get," she said. "I view a lot of this talk about battered men as a significant part of the backlash."" The Irish Times: "Women are more likely than men to perpetrate domestic violence, according to new research on Irish couples who seek marriage counseling. The report, published yesterday, also found that domestic violence was one of the less important factors in marriage breakdown in the largely middle-class group studied." I wonder what the Irish know that Americans don't? From what I've heard lately, it seems the Irish are beginning to address DV as a non-gender issue, so maybe it bodes well for us Yanks!"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/18/1743206.shtml

Prostate Cancer Risks Increases With Number of Sex Partners

Scott · 19 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This article on Excite News claims that a man's risk of getting prostate cancer increases with the number of female sex partners he has during his lifetime. A good case for monogamy for heterosexual males, although many scientists nowadays believe that monogamy goes against our biological/procreational instincts." And I'm sure that struggle will continue! :)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/18/2053211.shtml

Male Bashing in Academe

Scott · 19 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User sent in this article. Ilana Mercer wrote the article for Lew Rockwell about how feminist ideology is attacking young men in schools and colleges. She starts out with a statement by a female Computer Science professor that men are lazy because they know they rule the world and their social status is assured. Mercer then delves into the fallacy of this attitude and of "second-wave feminism" itself, including comments by male students who feel they are treated unfairly. It's an excellent read - check it out!
Source: Lew Rockewell [web site]

Title: Male Bashing in Academe

Author: Ilana Mercer

Date: June 15, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/19/1242220.shtml

M.A.D. Men United Revamps Web Site

Scott · 19 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

John Buethe wrote in to announce that his organization, M.A.D. Men United (M.A.D. standing for Men Against Discrimination) has become an official non-profit organization and redesigned their web site. You can view it at www.madmenunited.org.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/19/1214239.shtml

Safeway Joins Fight Against Prostate Cancer

Scott · 19 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from the Men's Health America list writes, "During the month of June, Safeway Foods has joined forces with CAP Cure (Association for the Cure of Cancer of the Prostate) to raise funds for prostate cancer research. Safeway customers can give the check-out cashier a $1 coupon, which is applied to prostate cancer research. For more information click here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/19/128258.shtml

Ann Landers on Women Abusers

Scott · 20 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal and Richard Cann sent me Ann Lander's column today, about domestic violence against men. Neil writes "Ann Landers is still claiming that there are more male abusers than female. I hope we can get her plenty of evidence to the contrary." I'm a bit lukewarm about her comments, too - while she admits that men need more services for domestic violence, she also is unwilling to accept women's violence, saying that women batterers are only alcoholics or druggies.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/19/1418232.shtml

Men's Hour Program to Counter BBC Women's Hour

Scott · 20 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I think it was Jello Biafra who said, "don't blame the media...become the media!" Well, that is certainly the case for the Men's Hour web site, which was created by some individuals who felt that there needed to be an alternative to the Women's Hour program on the BBC network. The result is the Men's Hour, an audio program with interviews and news about men's issues and men's rights, listenable worldwide to anyone with an internet connection and a streaming audio player. Take a listen, they have the first program available, and while they are having a few technical issues during the program, it shows a great deal of promise.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/19/1428257.shtml

Boy Bashing

Scott · 20 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Wendy McElroy once again exposes the political nature of some "studies" conducted in the 1990s which led to our current public policy of demasculinizing boys. The parents of one of the boys who participated in the study are challenging its results (results which claimed that boys exist in a "bully culture" and need to be feminized). The boys themselves say many of their answers were jokes. Said one subject: "Our immature attempt at humor four years ago should not be the benchmark for the 21st century.""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/20/0410245.shtml

Upgrade Plan

Scott · 20 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Well, now that the new hardware seems to be working reliably, it has come time to do the software upgrade of the Mensactivism.org server. This web site will be down beginning Friday morning, June 22, and will come back up (hopefully!) sometime on Sunday, June 24. Visitors to the Mensactivism.org web address will see a temporary page with updates on my progress, and all @mensactivism.org e-mail should still be delivered intact. PS: Sorry about the downtime on Thursday night - we had a power outage and the server was unavailable until midnight EST.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/20/0417242.shtml

An Example of Unequal Sentencing

Scott · 20 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neuticle writes *"This story is on a 46 year-old woman who hit and killed two elderly people while driving her Benz and talking on the phone at the same time. She was charged on two counts of vehicular manslaughter. The sentence: 120 days HOUSE arrest, restricted driving (only to/from work etc.) and she is "not to use a cell phone while driving". Yeah, that she was only "grounded" for 120 days after killing two people is outrageous, but, especially in light of this study, I'm wondering if she just had one heck of a lawyer, or if gender bias by the judge had anything to do with it. Would a man in the same situation have got away so easy? I can only wonder."*Source: The Sacramento Bee [newspaper]

Title: Woman banned from using cell phone while driving after fatal crash

Author: Unknown

Date: June 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/20/1246258.shtml

White Men Downsized at Ford Motor Co.

Scott · 21 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous Reader sent in an article from the Virtual New York News. It details how Ford has changed their management evaluation system in ways that discriminate against older white men. Two class action lawsuits have been filed and are in process. Read the article here.Source: Virtual New York

Title: White males accuse Ford of job bias

Author: Unknown [United Press International]

Date: June 20, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/21/0423254.shtml

"Date-Rape" Down at UNH, And Men Can Be Victims Too

Scott · 21 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "In this story on Excite News, Dr. Ellen S. Cohn of the University of New Hampshire says that incidents of date rape and nonconsensual sexual contact are on a decline on that campus. The most interesting part of this study, however, is at the end of the article, where Cohn admits that 8 percent of men in the study reported unwanted sexual contact and 4 percent reported unwanted intercourse. Said Cohn: "I think that people for the most part have associated victims with being women. But in fact we know that there are cases of men who are victims, as well. I think it's just harder for men to come forward and admit that they've been victims.""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/21/0429229.shtml

Two Points for More Responsible Rape Prosecutions

Scott · 21 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl sent in some commentary on a recent report by the CBS Evening News: "Last night's broadcast of the CBS Evening News contained a segment on the law's handling of testimony by frontline health professionals in rape trials, especially "he said/she said" cases where the outcome hinges on whether the sex was consensual or not. The report stated that in three separate Virginia rape trials, testimony by sexual assault nurses who had treated the women alleging rape was thrown out..." Click on Read More to view the rest of his comments.The judge in each case stated that the nurse's testimony had gone past the point of simply reporting what she knew; the judges determined that the nurses had, essentially, drawn conclusions. In fact, one of the nurses concluded that, by having read Masters and Johnson's "Human Sexual Response," she was able to distinguish whether the sexual activity between the woman and the alleged rapist was consensual or not. From court documents, the reporter explained that the nurse believed that if there was damage to the woman's body then the sex must have been nonconsensual and if there were no damage then the rape was consensual. The judge agreed with the defense which held that consent cannot be determined by physical examination alone. It was also pointed out in the segment that, by and large, the group of sexual assault nurses shown in the background attending a legal workshop agreed that, as witnesses, they should "stick to the facts." One of the nurses even stated that a nurse giving testimony could not say if the sex was consensual or not "unless she was standing in the room" at the time of the act. The news piece also noted that the importance of testimony by frontline sexual assault nurses in "he said/she said" rape trials is paramount; their testimony usually weighs in heavily in such cases. The entire segment came off as being as responsible as the decisions of the three judges. Sources were cited throughout, defendants were referred to as "alleged" perpetrators, and the nurse who claimed to be able to determine consent from an examination alone was offered time to give her side of the story; however, she declined.

Bill

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/21/1512238.shtml

Stop Making Schools Sedentary

Scott · 22 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Today's Christian Science Monitor has a good letter about a very important issue: boys and schools. Read the letter here, titled "Let those kids move around!"" From the article: "When the education system doesn't meet the needs of boys or require them to endure its hardships for its promise, many boys learn that it is not for them. Instead of trying to direct boys (and girls) into a sedentary mold, and allowing large numbers of men to be marginalized in their social contribution, shouldn't we attempt to make society more people-friendly?" I thought this quote sounded particularly Warren Farrell-like. The letter makes some excellent points.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/21/225211.shtml

US Black, Poor Men More Likely To Die From Heart Disease

Scott · 22 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "According to this article on Excite News, black men all over the country and poverty-stricken men of all races in the rural south are more likely to die of heart disease than their white or more affluent counterparts. From the article: "The Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) said in a report on heart disease the results showed the need to reduce inequalities in social environments.""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/22/0020203.shtml

Daily Illini: "Battered Men Need Shelters"

Scott · 27 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This editorial which ran in the Daily Illini and was reprinted on Excite News, offers some mainstream media support for building domestic violence shelters for men. It mentions the controversy over the numbers (battered women v. battered men), but then makes this well-stated point: "Whether there are 20,000 physically abused men or 20, they should have access to domestic-violence services. Family violence is harmful and wrong, no matter which gender is doling out the abuse.""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/27/2112221.shtml

We're Back!

Scott · 27 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I'd like to thank everyone for being patient for the past five days in which Mensactivism.org was down for the system upgrade. From running out of space on my backup tapes to pulling my hair out trying to configure sendmail, to the lack of responsiveness from the DNS servers which direct the mensactivism.org domain to the correct server, it was a very stressful five days. But with new hardware, a less buggy version of the Slash web engine, and a fresh operating system, The Men's Activism News Network is now prepared for further expansion and some new ideas I've been working on. One of them is a weekly on-line chat session, which I'll release more details about this Friday. It's good to be back!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/27/2121255.shtml

Racial Profiling of Black Men

Scott · 28 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This article on Excite News details how about half of African American men responding to a survey felt discriminated against by law enforcement. Notice that fewer black women reported feeling discriminated against, hinting that not only do some law enforcement officers racially profile, but they also profile by gender."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/27/2114201.shtml

Home Paternity Testing Kits Selling Fast

Scott · 28 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h sent me this story from the National Post. It's about the increasing sales of home DNA "paternity testing kits" in which tiny samples of genetic material are collected from the father and child and sent to a lab for testing. The company can then establish with certainty the paternity of the child. "although the test was aimed at men, the firm had been surprised at the number of women applying to find out who was the father of their baby...[The lab's director said]:"We make it clear that it's better if all parties are informed, but we do not insist.'" This, to me, is what I find most disturbing. Genetic testing without consent seems very much like a violation of privacy rights to me. Source: The National Post [newspaper]

Title: Business booming for mail-order paternity test

Author: Michael Leidig

Date: June 25, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/28/027241.shtml

DLJ No. 6

Scott · 28 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett's DesertLight Journal, Volume 1, Number 6 has been released and can be read here. Trudy has also created a page where you can view archived past issues of the e-zine, which focuses on father's rights and domestic violence against men. Update: Trudy also had a letter printed recently in the Phoenix New Times decrying the abuse of restraining orders.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/27/2252234.shtml

LA Times Exploits Men Again, Practices Bias in DV

Scott · 28 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes *"The LA Times spit out yet another anti-male piece on DV from a purely male=perpetrator perspective. You can read it here. The title says it all: "Helping Boys Be Boys, Not Abusers: A group called Mothers and Adolescent Sons aims to break the cycle of violence that often stems from fathers." They just can't seem to get off their gender-profiling kick. If you can, please write them a few lines at letters@latimes.com with a name, address & phone no, even if out of state."*Source: The L.A. Times [newspaper]

Title: Helping Boys Be Boys, Not Abusers

Author: Elizabeth Mehren

Date: June 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/28/0259226.shtml

Man Falsely Imprisoned Sued for CS he Owed While in Prison

Scott · 28 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Andrew sent me this disturbing article from Yahoo! News. It begins: " William Gregory spent eight and a half years in a Kentucky Prison for a rape he did not commit - leaving his son on state child support. But with his freedom came a twist straight out of Kafka: not only did he get no compensation, but the state then sued him for the child support it paid while he was in prison." Gregory was quoted as saying he was sleeping in the streets after being freed, and was given nothing to help get him back on his feet, despite the fact he was falsely imprisoned.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/28/1731256.shtml

Trial Starts for Brazilian Jail Massacre

Scott · 28 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Matthew writes *"This is a story that I found at www.gendercide.org (a great site for unbiased international news on gender issues). The story is from BBC News and gives a brief history of the massacre. What the story fails to mention is that all the prisoners killed were men. The gender imbalance in the criminal justice system (all over the world) is an issue that doesn't get discussed as often as it should and when something like this happens (to men) the gender aspect has almost always been completely ignored. Part of the problem, I feel, is that organizations that pay the most attention to these issues (Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch, Peace Brigades International, etc.) tend to have a feminist perspective. It would be beneficial to the people who depend on these organizations if more 'masculists' got involved with these organizations. On a final note I do think that it is to their credit that these organizations are beginning to progress to a more unbiased view of the world. It's just feels agonizingly slow to me."*Source: BBC News Network

Title: Brazilian policeman denies massacre

Author: Unknown

Date: June 21, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/28/1734259.shtml

Paula Poundstone Charged With Child Endangerment

Scott · 29 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This article on Fox News gives little detail on the charges against Paula Poundstone, who has been arrested for "three counts of committing a lewd act on a girl under the age of 14 on May 19 and June 6, as well as endangering two other girls and two boys on June 6, Deputy District Attorney Gina Satriano said in a statement. She could face a maximum of 13 years and four months in prison if convicted of all charges." It is interesting to me that in most cases of child endangerment involving males, the charges and details of those charges are laid out in black and white in the story. Here (even though police reports are public record in most states) we are told the D.A. isn't releasing details... interesting."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/29/0324219.shtml

Breaking the Pink Barrier

Scott · 29 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "Marc Angelucci's short-but-sweet Letter to the Editor suggesting more equitable coverage of domestic violence issues appears in today's LATimes. Way to go, Marc!"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/29/1518216.shtml

Gene Therapy Trials for Prostate Cancer Begin

Scott · 29 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "This article on Excite News details new gene therapy trials which could turn protstate cancer cells into targets for anti-cancer drugs. The therapy involves inserting a modified virus directly into the cancer cells."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/29/1734237.shtml

On-Line Chat Sessions Start Next Week!

Scott · 29 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mensactivism.org is proud to announce a new feature for the site: an on-line chat page. The only requirement to participate is a web browser with Java enabled, no one even has to sign up for user accounts to use the chat room. Our first official chat session will be held on Thursday, July 5, starting at 9:30 PM Eastern Time. The session will last for as long as people participate. We'll have weekly chats on Wednesday nights at the same time from then on (next Wednesday is July 4, hence the exception). On top of that, there will be another special announcement during next Thursday's chat session including some free giveaways!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/29/226212.shtml

Men Banned From Rock City Women's Festival

Adam · 30 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Yes, it's another"no men allowed" incident, according to this Ottawa Citizen article. As you would expect, they're backed up by the law to a certain extent since their justification "cites a 1986 case in Montreal, in which a feminist group wanted to exclude men from a musical event on International Women's Day. The Quebec Human Rights Commission ruled that excluding men was within the organization's right." If ever there was a good reason for men's groups to gatecrash.... Source: The Ottawa Citizen [newspaper]

Title: No offence intended, men, but you're still unwelcome

Author: Bev Wake

Date: June 28, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/29/1756242.shtml

Male DV Victims Overcoming Skepticism

Scott · 30 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes *"The Salt Lake Tribune ran this article recently about Jade Rubik and www.safe4all.org. In the story, Rubik tells some of his own horrifying experiences as a victim of abuse. I e-mailed him after the story ran. He said the piece ran on the front page of the print edition. That's pretty high profile in mainstream media. It's about time."*Source: The Salt Lake Tribune [newspaper]

Title: Victims of Domestic Abuse Slowly Overcoming Skepticism

Author: Ashley Estes

Date: June 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/30/0351259.shtml

Don't Make Fun of Feminists

Adam · 30 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Here's an amusing incident involving the dress code at the South Carolina House of Representatives, a non existent Men's Caucus sending a memo, and some women's advocates. So how do these things come together to form an amusing story? Why don't you click the link and find out? The scary thing to me is that legal action could be in the works for something that was obviously satire.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/29/182224.shtml

O'Reilly Attacks Fatherhood... AGAIN

Scott · 30 June 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "According to Fox News' Bill O'Reilly, the father of the five Yates children recently slain by their mother (allegedly in a fit of postpartum depression) should bear the responsibility for the deaths of said children. Of course, O'Reilly is going under the assumption that the mother really was insane at the time of the killings, an assumption which the science of postpartum depression may dispute. Again, remember that Bill O'Reilly is Fox News' Jerry Springer, so I wouldn't consider his opinion as being either informed or asserted with any great intellect."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/30/1552201.shtml

Cathy Young Reviews Feminist Books

Scott · 1 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "In this Reason magazine review of recent feminist books, Cathy Young finds some documentation of women's desire to control child rearing." Young's commentary on where feminism stands today is quite interesting, and she calls for the inclusion of men's perspectives in the ongoing dialogue about gender, even in books about feminism.Source: Reason [magazine]

Title: What Do Women Want?

Author: Cathy Young

Date: July 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/30/1950229.shtml

Singapore Clubs Offer Men's Night Out

Scott · 1 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "It's finally happened. Four night clubs in Singapore have offered a response to all the Ladies Nights offered by clubs all over the world: Men's Night. And guess what? They've been successful. In fact, the article suggests that the majority of the crowds who attend men's nights are male and heterosexual, meaning that the guys just want a night out without the girls. Likewise, the males on men's night are getting free or discounted admission to these clubs as well as free or discounted drinks. Maybe other clubs will take a hint and either get rid of the discriminating discounts altogether or offer comparable discount nights to males. Either way, I'd be happy."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/06/30/1953202.shtml

Big Brother is Watching You

Scott · 1 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry sent in this story from the UK Sunday Times, about how "An elite team of detectives and psychiatrists is being set up by police to target would-be killers and stop them before they commit murder." To what extent do you think this program will target males - particularly men of color? In other news, the Tampa Bay News Channel 9 is reporting that a camera system has been set up in Ybor city which digitally scans people's faces and compares them to a database of people's faces who have an oustanding arrest warrant. I sure hope they don't get too many false positives. Source: The Sunday Times [UK newspaper]

Title: New police unit will spy on would-be killers

Author: David Leppard

Date: July 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/01/1444230.shtml

Tennessee Targets Spouse Behavior in Divorce Cases

Scott · 1 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "A new Tennessee law will automatically place injunctions against spouses running away with children, draining joint bank accounts, and making harassing phone calls during divorce proceedings. The attorneys in this article (all female) disagree on whether the law is a good thing."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/01/2010215.shtml

Activism Project: Get the Truth Out About DV in Scotland

Scott · 2 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Douglas Rome, a journalist who writes extensively on men's issues in the UK, has told me that a particular domestic violence organization in Scotland is promoting lies and misleading info about domestic violence. Their "facts and figures," in particular, can be read here. Douglas has been organizing a campaign to lobby the group to change their information, and could use your help. Helen Norman is a main organizer for the group and can be e-mailed at HNorman@dghb.scot.nhs.uk. I would encourage people to be polite, but firm in their lobbying of this organization. Your efforts could be instrumental in changing the way DV awareness is promoted in Scotland.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/01/2017230.shtml

Custody Disputes in NH Favor Women

Scott · 2 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article from the Union Leader quoted some work done by the New Hampshire chapter of the National Congress for Fathers and Children, explaining that "of 275 contested custody cases in 1998, mothers received sole custody of their children in 72 percent of the cases. Fathers received sole custody in 14.5 percent of cases. Joint custody was awarded in 10.5 percent of cases." The article falls short of claiming that bias undeniably exists against men in custody decisions, but the facts reported certainly seem to imply this. Source: The Union Leader [newspaper]

Title: Group: Courts favor women in custody cases

Author: Unknown (AP)

Date: June 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/01/2342205.shtml

Review of Divorced Dads: Shattering the Myths

Scott · 2 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Frontpagemag.com has an outstanding review of Dr. Sanford Braver's Divorced Dads" The article is excellent, and explains how Braver debunks six of the most common anti-father myths one at a time. It's a very informative review. Thanks also to Not PC for submitting this review.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/02/1228225.shtml

Reversible Contraceptive for Men Being Tested

Scott · 2 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A recent National Post story describes a new form of male contraception that is as effective as a vasectomy but also reversible. A special implant is placed within the vas deferens tubes which blocks the sperm. The procedure for adding and removing the device is simple, and effectively creates a fully reversible vasectomy for its user. Initial safety clinical trials are beginning now, which will be followed by tests of the device's effectiveness.Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Ottawa approves human trials for reversible male contraceptive

Author: Tom Arnold

Date: June 28, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/02/1113225.shtml

Time to Re-Write Title IX?

Scott · 2 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes *"Monday, the Washington Times published a good column on Title IX, which prevents single-sex programs in government schools. It implies, but unfortunately it doesn't explicitly show, that the schools are designed for girls."*Source: The Washington Times [newspaper]

Title: Rethinking Title IX

Author: Leonard Sax

Date: July 2, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/02/1850249.shtml

Colorado Allows Custodial Parents to Relocate at Will

Scott · 3 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A new law in Colorado will allow custodial parents to move at will by only giving the NCP notice of the move. This law will certainly bring more anguish to NCP fathers who will lose contact with their children more easily. Thanks to AngryHarry for notifying me of this article, which can be read at this link.Source: The Denver Post [newspaper]

Title: Another blow to marriage

Author: Al Knight

Date: June 20, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/03/1322209.shtml

Making Excuses for Mothers Who Kill

Scott · 3 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nightmist writes "Wendy McElroy's latest column exposes the truth behind the news reports on Andrea Yates, the woman who recently killed all five of her children by drowning. McElroy touches on all the different ways in which this woman is being protected by media and feminists: from blaming society to blaming the children's father. This is one the best explanations of what's happening with this story that I've seen."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/03/1713238.shtml

Men Benefit From Hormone Replacement Therapy

Nightmist · 4 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Although there's been much talk in the news about "male menopause," a scientist in this article on Excite News admits there is no such beast. Nevertheless, he adds that men who suffer from androgen or testosterone deficiencies in advancing age could benefit from hormone replacement therapy. Says the doctor: "Male life expectancy is increasing and the quality of life for aging men plays a more and more important role; and of course, women notice the benefits of HRT and wonder why there is nothing equivalent for their partners."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/04/0726206.shtml

Prostitute Admits She Killed Clients For Fun, Not Defense

Nightmist · 4 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Now the subject of a television movie and an opera, convicted murderer and prostitute Aileen Wuornos has admitted that she killed six men because she had "always wanted to kill somebody." At her trial, she claimed the six men had assaulted her on separate occasions, and that she acted in self defense. She now says she wants to drop her appeals and allow the state to carry out her execution. If released, she says, she would kill again. It makes me sick that the arts have rallied around her, and turned this murderer into a hero while her victims become criminals.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/04/0746245.shtml

Happy Fourth of July

Nightmist · 4 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Hope everyone is having a happy Fourth of July. I, personally, am using the time off not for bar-b-que and fireworks, but to contemplate the course of human freedom in this country, why it was established, and where it is going. Considering our many common interests and goals on this Web site, I thought the following might be an appropriate post for Independence Day:

WE hold these Truths to be self-evident, that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness --

You may read all of the inspiring words of the Declaration of Independence here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/04/1619243.shtml

Prostate Cancer Patients Have New Therapy Options

Nightmist · 4 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article describes a new procedure for prostate cancer patients who do not respond well to radiation treatment. Previously, if radiation therapy was not successful, patients were left with no other options. Now, Medicare will reimburse patients for cryotherapy, which destroys a tumor by freezing it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/04/0752227.shtml

Activism Project: MA Reviewing Child Support Guidelines

Scott · 5 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h sent me Ned Holstein's e-mail calling for action to change the Massachusetts child support guidelines. This is the first time in which fathers will be heard in the process of reviewing the guidelines, so please take part in the hearings if you're in the area! Click here to view details of how to participate and where the hearings are being held. This is a MAJOR opportunity that no MA father's rights advocate should miss out on!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/04/2155205.shtml

Scientists Identify New Male Infertility Syndrome

Nightmist · 5 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article on Excite News claims that male sperm counts have been on a steady decline for several decades, and that both genetics and environmental factors could be contributing to a rising number of male infertility problems and testicular cancer. The scientists believe the problems are beginning in the womb, and that adverse environmental factors such as hormone disrupters, probably acting on a genetic susceptibility, could be to blame. "Hormone dirupters" may be found in--among other things--paint, pesticides, and detergents.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/05/1328216.shtml

Site Addresses UK Senior Gender Discrimination

Scott · 5 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry sent in a link to this new web site, which seeks to address the gender inequalities and double standards that senior citizens in the UK face. Examples include benefits that women can take advantage of at age 60 while men must wait until age 65, including discounted bus passes, state pension, winter fuel allowance, prescription drug discounts, and tax breaks. This is all the more unfair considering that men die on average several years before women, lessening the years that men can enjoy these benefits even if they began at the same age as women.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/05/0343235.shtml

Report Recommends Women be Given Lighter Sentences than Men

Scott · 5 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I was notified of this report from the Massachusetts Lawyers Weekly which proposes that women should receive lighter sentences than men for the same crimes. Part of their reasoning behind this is that since women are the primary caregivers of children, they should be treated more leniently for the sake of their children. Absolutely incredible...

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/05/1827213.shtml

Viewing Violent Women as Victims

Scott · 6 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I received an excellent article from Glenn Sacks, who had it published in both the Pasadena Star-News and the San Gabriel Valley Tribune. He only sold them market rights to the article, so I'm fortunate that it can be reprinted here (it's not in the web edition of either of the two newspapers). Click Read More to view an insightful essay into the reasons why society wants to make excuses for women, especially mothers, who murder.

Female Murderers Seen in a Different Light:

Society Prefers to View Violent Women as Victims

By Glenn Sacks

A Miami mother is drowning her six month-old baby in an apartment swimming pool when a maintenance man stops her and rescues the child. A Jacksonville woman asphyxiates her three children with car fumes. A Houston woman drowns her five children in a bathtub. A San Diego toxicologist poisons and kills her husband after he discovers her affair.

All of these crimes shocked the nation during the past week. But should we really be so surprised?

The truth is, female violence in American families is anything but rare.

For example:

According to the US Department of Justice, 70% of confirmed cases of child abuse and 65% of parental murders of children are committed by mothers.

Police investigators and academics believe that 15% of the roughly 7,000 Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS) cases reported each year in the United States are really cases of suffocation, primarily committed by the mother. This alone accounts for at least 1,000 homicides a year.

Criminologists point out many if not most cases of SIDS aren't reported and, because autopsies are rarely able to distinguish between suffocation and SIDS, the actual number of murdered infants is probably much higher.

Female juvenile crime rose 75% from 1980 to 1999, and female crime rose 200%. At the same time, violent crime nationwide declined.

Infanticide in the industrialized nations is as common or more common as the killings of adults, and the vast majority of these infants are killed by their mothers, according to the World Health Organization.

A custodial mother is five times more likely to murder her own children as a custodial father, adjusting for the greater number of single mothers, according to the US Department of Health and Human Services.

And women are getting away with it. Among women convicted of killing their infants, two-thirds avoid prison completely and the rest serve an average of only seven years. The average prison sentence for females in the U.S. is only about 70% that of males for most violent crimes. A man convicted of murder is 20 times more likely to receive the death penalty than a woman.

How do women get away with it? For one, their victims tend to be the helpless, or semi-helpless, such as children, the elderly, and infants. Thus there's less struggle in their crimes, and less evidence left behind. Also, they tend to use "hands off" methods such as smothering and poisoning, which are less traceable. Female murderers tend to be older than male murderers, and thus are looked upon with more trust and less suspicion. When killing husbands or other adults, women often hire others to do the killing.

However, according to crime journalist Patricia Pearson, author of When She Was Bad: How and Why Women Get Away With Murder, the reasons women escape punishment go far beyond the evidence (or lack of it) left at the crime scene. Female killers, Pearson says, are often successful at turning their violent crime into victimhood by citing, among others, defenses such as Postpartum depression, Pre-Menstrual Syndrome, and Battered Wife Syndrome. According to Pearson:

"The operative assumption is that the violent woman couldn't have wanted, deliberately, to cause harm. Therefore, if she says she was abused/coerced/insane, she probably was."

Pearson also blames male judges and law enforcement personnel and men in the media who don't take women's capacity for violence seriously and tend to make excuses for, and cover up for, violent women.

The case of Russell Yates illustrates Pearson's point. His wife Andrea murders their five kids and he, while commenting on the horror of her crime, seeks to protect her from harsh punishment.
During the week after the murders, writers, talk-show hosts, and talk show callers rushed to make excuses for Ms. Yates. One caller suggested that Russell Yates is the real perpetrator for allowing Andrea to be alone with the kids in her condition and that he should be charged with manslaughter. Another caller compared the murders committed by a pair of 10 year-olds to the Andrea Yates killings, saying that all three perpetrators need sympathy and understanding. The insulting infantilization of the mother--as if a grown woman is no more accountable for her actions than a 10 yea r-old--went unnoticed by both conservative male talk show host Mark Taylor and his feminist co-host, Gloria Allred. After the Miami near-murder, one prominent internet news service posted the story and asked readers to sound off on the question: "Should children be permanently removed from their mother if she tries to kill them?"

Treating the violent woman as if she were a child, or insane, or a victim worthy of sympathy--is this the way to protect society and our children from violent criminals?

Glenn Sacks is a columnist who has written for the Los Angeles Times, The Salt Lake City Tribune, and the Los Angeles Daily News.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/06/1459257.shtml

Courts Uphold Racial Profiling of Black Men

Nightmist · 6 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article in Christian Science Monitor tells the story of an African American state trooper who was pulled over, essentially, for "Driving While Black." He took it to court, believing he had a case, but the system apparently believes prejudice is OK if one is a police officer. Next, it'll be Spanish speaking people, then it'll be men in general...

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/06/1557220.shtml

Man Freed After 14 Years For Rape He Didn't Commit

Nightmist · 6 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Calvin Washington, 45, has been released from a Texas prison after 14 years, according to this article on CNN. He was convicted of rape and murder, but DNA evidence has now exonerated him. From the article: "I'm speechless," Washington said after leaving the McLennan County Jail. "It was hard to do time like that knowing you didn't commit the crime."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/06/2034230.shtml

Women's Groups Boycott Divorce Law Talks, Demand Their Own

Scott · 7 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Earlier we had reported on the Canadian women's groups that have refused to sit at the table with father's rights advocates to discuss changes to Canada's divorce laws. From this National Post story: "Although the consultations ended last month, the Justice Department and its provincial partners are considering a special session for "women's equality-seeking organizations" that are fighting proposed changes to the federal Divorce Act. Those changes would give separated and divorced parents an equal say in raising their children under a new concept called shared parenting. The women's groups are urging governments "not to cave into a father's rights groups agenda."" Apparently it's okay to cave into the agenda of the women's groups, though. Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Feminists might be granted own hearing on divorce law

Author: Chris Cobb, with files from Ralph Bodirsky

Date: July 5, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/06/2221244.shtml

Ignoring the Obvious When it Comes to Male Suicide

Scott · 7 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

John Waters wrote an important opinion piece for the Irish Times, where he looks into the causes for the ever-increasing rate of male suicides. He expresses frustration about how society doesn't want to understand why young men are killing themselves in such high numbers, and would rather leave the question to "experts" who can come up with biological reasons for depression rather than exposing the anti-male climate we live in today. It's a great article. Source: The Irish Times [UK newspaper]

Title: Reasons for male suicide all too clear

Author: John Waters

Date: July 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/07/1642255.shtml

The Men's Helpline

Scott · 8 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tim Campbell posted the following to the newsgroup soc.men, which I thought would be relevant to readers here: "The Men's Helpline is organized and run by men in the Guelph, Ontario, Canada area, with various backgrounds and experiences. We share a common interest in helping ourselves and others with problems. Our Mission is: to provide a telephone help line for men, to provide an open support group for all men, to invite discussion among men about the issues that we face, and to provide a Web-based presence, as well as resource links to other sites." Their web site can be found here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/07/1916251.shtml

Yates Will Get Off "Because She Is a Woman"

Nightmist · 9 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Without running the Andrea Yates story in the ground (mother who killed her five children by drowing them in a bathtub), this commentary from the Iowa State Daily in plain-English states what I think many men are probably thinking right now. If the father had been the perpetrator, he would've already been convicted: both in the mind of the public, and especially in the press. The press seems ominously sympathetic to Andrea Yates, though, because of her claims that post-partum depression made her do it. Check the author's stats on that in this piece.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/09/027242.shtml

U.S. DoD Sponsors Prostate Cancer Research

Scott · 9 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Men's Health America list sent out this interesting message which shows how the United States Department of Defense is sponsoring prostate cancer research. More info can be found on this fact sheet.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/09/1344202.shtml

Violence Against Men

Scott · 9 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes *"As a follow-up to the Glenn Sacks item posted July 6, here's a piece from the NY Post on a related topic. When will the judges understand that just because a man CAN beat his wife in a fight doesn't mean he WILL."*Source: The New York Post [newspaper]

Title: The Husband Beaters

Author: Hallie Levine

Date: July 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/09/1429208.shtml

Madonna Steals an Idea From The Dixie Chicks

Nightmist · 9 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This short article on Excite news describes how Madonna has taken what she started with her "What It Feels Like For a Girl" video and continued it on her "Drowned World" tour. At one point in the show, she shoots a man "who has been harassing her" with a rifle. For those who haven't seen the video, it features Madonna and an elderly woman recklessly driving a stolen car, which they then use to run over, kill, and injure men on the streets.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/09/1752226.shtml

Abused Son Sues for Mother's Estate

Scott · 10 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Chad sent in this article from the UK Guardian. It's about a 48 year-old man who is suing for a part of his late mother's estate. His mother, who sexually abused him when he was a child, left him completely out of her will. Raymond Marks claims he has experienced disorders including bulimia due to the abuse, and was the only child in his family.Source: The Guardian [UK newspaper]

Title: 'Abused' son sues for share of mother's estate

Author: Clare Dyer

Date: July 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/10/1239247.shtml

Making Sperm Obsolete

Nightmist · 10 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article on Excite News is a bit frightening because, as the scientist quoted in the article states, it opens up an "ethical can of worms." Scientists in Australia believe they've found a way to fertilize eggs from cells from any part of the body, not just from male sperm (in mice). Scientists argue that this means infertile males may now have their own biological offspring (as can lesbian couples). Right now, they're predicting more problems than successes. Australia and other countries currently have a ban on this type of experimentation with human eggs.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/10/146230.shtml

France Ends Military Draft

Nightmist · 11 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This AP article describes how France has finally ended its military draft, and is releasing all men from service who were conscripted. Like the U.S., any man of 18 years old was eligible to be drafted. Unfortunately, it is not the sexism of the draft which brought about its demise, but France's feeling that it was simply no longer a military necessity (because of volunteerism and the lack of a serious national threat).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/10/1454252.shtml

Ford Dumps Discrimination Against Older White Males

Nightmist · 11 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News heralds the end of Ford Motor Co's 2000 grading scale policy, which was introduced in an effort by Ford executives to get rid of the older white males populating the majority of management positions at the company. The policy became the target of several age, sex, and race discrimination lawsuits (the story labels the lawsuits "reverse discrimination" lawsuits because the people filing them are white males).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/11/0037237.shtml

Men's Hour Broadcast Number Two

Scott · 11 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Episode two has been released of the Men's Hour, a streaming audio program which discusses men's rights issues, particularly in the UK. An interview with Len Miskulin, the father who went on a very severe hunger strike for 63 days, is included, as well as a man who was put in prison for giving his child a birthday present. RealAudio and Windows Media formats are available.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/11/141228.shtml

On-Line Chat Tonight

Scott · 11 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Remember, our weekly on-line chat will begin tonight at 9:30 PM Eastern Time. You can join the chat at this page. While we welcome all kinds of discussion in the chat room, tonight's main topic will be the way men are portrayed in the media. We're looking to put together a page on Mensactivism.org that tracks anti-male companies that abuse or defame men in commercials. Readers would then be able to see a list of companies that they might consider boycotting or writing to in protest.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/11/1410202.shtml

LA Times Columnist Supports Threatening Men With False Accusations

Scott · 11 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "John Smith sent this article from the LA Times to me. Take a look at the bigotry this columnist expresses about entrapping men: "I wish every Okinawan woman dating an American military man would implant in his brain the thought or fear that she might send him to jail." This author comes from miles away in Cardiff, California. The LA Times will print her bigotry but they refuse to print things from men's activists who live right here in LA. You can write the editor at letters@latimes.com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/11/1425235.shtml

MSNBC on Baby Abandonment (It's the man's fault)

Scott · 11 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Michael Kramer sent me a link to this transcript of an MSNBC Dateline program about baby abandonment and the legislation which is making it legal (for mothers) in many states. Michael wrote an insightful response to the program and his letter can be read by clicking Read More below. As he said to me, "The madness not only continues, it worsens daily, something straight out of Kafka. If you're a male in today's America, you best start running."Editors:

I just saw your report on the murdered baby.

Unfortunately -- but not surprisingly -- you failed to address the only germane issue in the whole putrid affair.

Blaming the boyfriend -- as the parents and townspeople do, and as your spin implied -- is ludicrous. That is facile scapegoating, but males in America should be used to it by now.

It is illuminating that the good folk of the town "rallied behind" the person responsible for the child's death.

Let us imagine, just for a moment, what the reaction of the good folk, of the courts, and of your show would have been were a man found responsible for leaving a baby to freeze to death in the snow. I can tell you -- he would have been lucky to survive long enough to make it to the courthouse, and if he did, he would be in prison until his toenails fell out. In the prisons we maintain for men, no doubt he would have been beaten and sodomized in line with the jungle justice doled out by the other prisoners. He wouldn't have been weeping crocodile tears at the Women's Correctional Country Club.

In the unlikely event that he were ever released from prison, we can be sure that a roomful of mickey mouse memorabilia and christmas gifts would not be awaiting him. I don't think the townsfolk would be waiting to greet him with open arms and forgiveness, either.

The real issue here -- the one we can't talk about in America, and damn sure can't report on -- is the infantilization, coddling, and massive overprotection of the feminine, especially of girls, along with the comprehensive double standard of justice in America based on gender. Now that's not a report we're likely to see on MSNBC, is it?

The American media, and American culture in general, shares partial culpability for the death of this child. As long as we hold women and girls to one standard of "justice," and men and boys to another, we can expect that many more of "daddy's little girls" will feel sufficiently privileged to do whatever they damn well please, to whomever they please. Why shouldn't they? Even the murder of a child elicits only sympathy when you're one of the Protected Classes.

"There's a babe in the arms of a woman in a rage," Bob Dylan sings, and he ain't just woofin'. From SIDS to sentencing, from the schoolyards to the skyscrapers, we are a culture in total gender denial, with males scapegoated and punished in every cultural context, and females deified and excused. When we entitle, privilege, and protect one class of persons over another, these are the results we must expect, and we are ALL responsible for the outcome.

Until the American media finds the courage to report on that, we will all suffer the consequences. It'll be a long, long time coming.

Michael Kramer

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/11/1440222.shtml

DesertLight Journal No. 7

Scott · 12 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A new issue of the DesertLight Journal is out, with information about Clayton Giles' journey across Candada and the U.S. to protest the way family courts treat children, and a new masculist literature e-mail list, among other things. Check it out at this link, and thanks to Trudy Schuett for her efforts!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/11/1857235.shtml

Wisconsin High Court Orders Man Not to Father Children

Nightmist · 12 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A four-man and three-woman Wisconsin high court in this story from Excite News has banned a man from having any more children while he is on probation for not paying $25,000 in child support. The decision was split along gender lines. The three female justices said that the ban denied the man his basic human (and Constitutional) right to father a child. The four male justices said the ban forced the man "to consider responsibility." The female justices and the man's lawyer expressed concern that such action could lead to the trampling of the rights of men who cannot afford child support.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/11/1912232.shtml

Male Pill Being Tested in Britain

Scott · 12 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC sent me this article from the UK Telegraph about a male contraceptive pill. The drug would be a pill which hormonally stops sperm production and would be effective for three years. Testosterone injections would have to be given to maintain normal sex drive, but according to the article, "The results to date show completely reversible blockage of sperm production without major side effects." Source: The Telegraph [UK newspaper]

Title: 'Pill' for men that lasts three years

Author: Celia Hall

Date: July 11, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/11/2344241.shtml

"Politically Incorrect" w/ Bill Maher Tackles Feminism

Scott · 12 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Igor writes "I was channel surfing late last night (7/11/01), and I stopped on "Politically Incorrect," a show on ABC that tackles abrasive issues with comedy (always a good approach). Last night, the focus was on feminism and its flaws. One of the guests was (hooray!!!) Christina Hoff Sommers. She did an amazing job fending off the most anti-male guest (ironically, a man), a film director whose name escapes me. He reminded me of the way I (and, I suspect, a few of you) used to be, and I pitied him. Bill Maher (the host) and CHS made some great points during the show, and a transcript should be up any time now at the "Politically Incorrect" website."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/12/128254.shtml

Young Men's Satisfaction in Life Dependent on Having Girlfriend

Scott · 12 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User sent me an article from the Sydney Morning Herald. It describes how young men surveyed showed a dramatic difference in the satisfaction with their lives, depending on whether they had a girlfriend or not. Furthermore, only 18 percent of fathers feel satisfied with their relationship with their teenage sons. Perhaps the two could be related? It's probable that when men are trained to depend on women for emotional support, that this kind of scenario is bound to happen. You can read the article here.Source: The Sydney Morning Herald [Australian newspaper]

Title: Life tough on young men still in the hunt for love

Author: Leonie Lamont

Date: July 11, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/12/1239238.shtml

What Men Want

Nightmist · 13 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Although articles like this one on AskMen.com leave a lot to be desired in terms of depth, I do think it brings up a good point. The author points out that society pressures men to be obsessed with what women want--what makes women happy--in a relationship. Why not turn the tables? Here are 10 things that men might want in order to be happy in a relationship.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/12/2018244.shtml

Divorce Research Project in NY

Scott · 13 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Peter Allemano writes "The Greater New York Chapter of the National Coalition of Free Men is considering undertaking a research project involving issues surrounding divorce in New York State. Initially, information is sought about New York attorney JoAnn Douglas and New York Supreme Court Justice Judith J. Gische. Anyone with knowledge about, or personal experience with, either of these individuals is kindly requested to contact Joseph R. Sahid, Esq." I've moved Sahid's other contact info into the Read More section, but his e-mail is sahid@att.net.Joseph R. Sahid, Esq.

845 Third Avenue, 20th Floor

New York, NY 10022

tel.: (212) 308-5930

fax: (212) 308-2760

e-mail: sahid@att.net

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/13/1414238.shtml

British Men Increasingly Suicidal

Nightmist · 13 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This report on Excite News indicates that British men are now three times as likely as women to take their own lives. In 1971, men were 1.5 times more likely. Researchers for this study claim they have not yet found a cause for the increase in suicide among men, while women's suicide rates have remained relatively stable.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/13/1632246.shtml

Compensation for Falsely Accused Teacher in Canada

Scott · 13 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "A former teacher in Canada has been awarded some money after a parent falsely accused him of sexual misconduct. The story can be read here." The teacher received $70,000, after having proved that the parent intended to cause "destruction through a gratuitous, malicious and a vicious attack."Source: The Montreal Gazette [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Parent must pay teacher $70,000

Author: Karen Seidman

Date: July 13, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/13/1910201.shtml

MANN Feature: The Battle for Men's Rights in Scotland

Scott · 13 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Douglas Rome, a Scottish poet and professional journalist, sent in an engaging essay about the current happenings of the men's movement in Scotland, and the struggles it is facing. Of the many things one might call Douglas Rome, complacent isn't one of them - his writing style mixes news journalism with confrontational editorial commentary that makes no apologies. Douglas covers the status of several key men's rights issues, including father's legal rights, male suicide, false rape accusations, and more. Click Read More below for the essay.

The Battle for Men's Rights in Scotland

By Douglas Rome, douglas-rome@lineone.net

Dumfries, Scotland

Embattled men in Scotland have won crucial new rights in the teeth of bitter opposition from the Scottish matriarchy. The Scottish Executive -- the new devolved government in Scotland -- has started an inquiry into women's violence against men.

For decades, feminists have insisted that domestic violence is inflicted exclusively by men on women. Now, after unrelenting pressure by the men's movement, the Executive has been forced to concede otherwise. Announcing the inquiry to the Scottish Parliament in Edinburgh, the social justice minister (and feminist) Jackie Baillie said (through gritted teeth) that the results should be known by early next year.

It is not known yet who will lead the probe or how far-ranging its research will be; but campaigners for men's rights have made it clear that if the inquiry team works to a brief dictated by the feminist agenda, they will not accept its (predictable) conclusions. Activists in the men's movement say that as it was their campaign that forced the government into action, they should have a key role in the inquiry.

And in another significant advance for Scottish men, the Executive is to give unmarried fathers full legal rights over their children in reforms planned for Scotland's family laws. Forty per-cent of Scottish children -- about 18,000 -- are born to unmarried couples, but the fathers have no automatic legal rights over their health, welfare and education. All that will change as the Executive strives to create more stability for children for whom often-feckless mothers have sole responsibility.

Alastair McLaughlan is typical of the fathers who have been deprived of their rights. When he and his partner split up, he discovered that because they were not married, he had no legal right to a say in his son's future. Like thousands of other Scottish fathers, he thought that because his name was on his son's birth certificate, his legal rights and responsibilities were guaranteed.

Alastair says: "With no rights or responsibilities, you are right at the bottom of the ladder. The state is telling you that if you want to be a father to your children, you have to prove you are suitable. You are guilty until proven innocent." Under the present discriminatory family laws, if a father wants legal parental rights, he has to marry the child's mother, register an agreement with her, or get a court order.

Alison Clelland, convenor of the Child Law Centre in the Scottish capital city Edinburgh, said the proposed changes would benefit children. She said: "I know of many clients who think that because their name is on the child's birth certificate, they have some rights. They don't. If they have been involved with their children's lives, that seems to them very wrong and unfair -- and the centre agrees with them."

The changes to the family laws will affect only fathers whose names are on their children's birth certificates. The draft bill goes out for consultation next year: for Scotland's deprived and derided unmarried dads, it can't become law quickly enough.

Meanwhile, men's rights campaigners in Scotland are focusing on two more issues that are central to the struggle between the genders: the national tragedy of young male suicides and the alarming rise in the number of false rape allegations by vindictive or deranged women. Men account for three out of every four suicides in Scotland. The Scottish suicide rate is one of the highest in Europe. Suicide kills more young men here under the age of thirty-five than die in road traffic accidents. Since 1989, suicides and undetermined deaths have risen by more than one-fifth. The latest figures for Dumfries and Galloway, the region of Scotland where I live, show that male suicides outstrip female suicides by a ratio of five to one.

Of course, the regional health authority here is worried about men's plight...so very worried that its major promotion this year is the creation of a website devoted to "domestic abuse" -- one that uses the distortions of the women's movement (and public funds) to repeat feminist cant about male violence. Go to www.dumgal.gov.uk/domesticabuse to see what I mean. Then ask spokeswoman Helen Norman how the health authority plans to help the male victims of women's violence mentioned on her site. You can email her at HNorman@dghb.scot.nhs.uk -- although you may have to wait for a reply.

The Scottish Executive is funding an inquiry into suicide and homicide by people suffering from mental illness. I trust that it will ignore the "explanations" offered by psychiatrists and all the other functionally-useless "behavioural experts." According to most of them, young men kill themselves because of some obscure (and never convincingly defined) chemical process in the brain. Significantly, the mind-doctors never talk about the one indisputable fact of the suicide rate among young Scottish males: that its rise runs parallel with, and is inextricably linked to, the triumph of man-hating feminism in Scotland. Feminism -- more properly, womanism -- arrived here just in time to rescue Scotland's mildewed matriarchy from the oblivion so long yearned-for by decent people of both genders. The feminazi chorus began with the aberrant murmurs of Women's Liberationists in the late-1960s, swelling through three dark decades to the full-throated shriek of visceral misandrists who blame all men for everything that is wretched in their sterile lives.

In one of history's most successful propaganda campaigns, feminists persuaded the UK government to open its coffers without limit to Women's Aid, Victim Support, War Against Rape, Rights of Women, Zero Tolerance, Justice for Women, and all the other parasitic supplicants spawned by feminism. At the same time, it levered its zealots into powerful positions in the Government bureaucracy and -- its most significant achievement -- recruited them to the universities and other higher educational institutions. Campus feminism, under the seemingly innocuous syllabus label "gender studies", used Hitlerian indoctrination techniques to foster misandry in the minds of our brightest youngsters from the 1970s onwards.

What the misandrists didn't know (until now) is that among the students whose minds they tried to corrupt in all the major Scottish universities were male and female members of the antifeminist movement who recorded every hate-filled utterance of their feminazi teachers. When a true, gender-blind rule of law prevails in this country, and the mind-manipulators are brought to a rigorous final reckoning, they will have condemned themselves out of their own mouths.

A similar fate awaits those women who cry rape falsely. In 1991, Catherine Commins, then assistant dean of student life at the prestigious Vassar College in New York, extolled (without criticism or dissent) the value for feminism of making false accusations of rape. Her criminal endorsement of one of the gravest crimes was reported in Time Magazine's edition of June 3, 1991. Since then, the international cysterhood has taken up her call with evil glee; each year increasing numbers of men are jailed, and some executed, for crimes of which they are innocent.

It's difficult to imagine a crime more destructive than false rape; for, whatever the outcome of the trial, the victims' lives are wrecked. Even after they have been cleared by the courts, the unjustly accused men are branded forever: they carry a stain that everyone can see. They can change their names, their addresses and their jobs -- but, like men hunted as paedophiles by the vigilante mob, they cannot change the evil destiny forced on them by a lying woman.

Scottish men's rights campaigners, demanding laws to protect men from false rape allegations, say that men accused of rape should be given equal anonymity with their accusers. The campaigners want a register of false rape accusers -- similar to the British register of sex offenders -- and a study of how the legal system deals with false accusations. Malicious claims should bring sentences equivalent to those handed down for rape, they say.

The activists point to research in the United States which shows that a quarter of the number of men convicted of rape are innocent. "Impossible, unjust, an insult to women," screamed the matriarchy , which found a spokeswoman (of a kind) in Professor Sheila McLean of Glasgow University, an "expert" on medical and legal ethics. She dismissed the campaigners' proposals as "unworkable."

Mclean said that the notion of a "false accusers" register would serve no purpose as it was often difficult to establish whether allegations had been made maliciously. It would therefore be difficult to prosecute malicious accusers. McLean's idiocies show, perfectly, why moral philosophers change nothing (save, occasionally, each other's minds). Her position is best summed up thus: "We think this woman, or these women, is/are lying about being raped. That's a crime. But because we think we can't prove it, we're going to let the criminals carry on with the crime." If present interrogation techniques cannot bring the rape liars to justice, it's time we tried other methods, including the use of a "truth" serum such as sodium pentathol on both the accused and the accuser. Innocent men and women would have nothing to fear.

I acknowledge that this is an extreme step: it goes against every instinct for freedom that I own; it's incompatible with our noblest democratic traditions. But when we fight gender-fascism we fight the most powerful totalitarian force since Hitlerism. The existential plague that calls itself "feminism" is pure death instinct, visceral hatred on a global scale. It threatens all that's best in Western civilization. When we go to the arsenals of democracy for the weapons to fight it with, we find that all the guns are rusted. If I may adapt Churchill slightly, we must be prepared to mete out to the feminazis the measure, and more than the measure, of what the feminazis have meted out to us. And we must use the the most effective weapons we have.

All my life I have opposed capital punishment -- or murder by the state as we should more properly call it. But after a decade of chronicling the atrocities of feminism, I am beginning to change my mind. Rape liars smash lives. Perhaps they should pay with their own, or at the least be imprisoned for life without the possibility of parole. I think the same about the ultimate fate of the evil women in nursery group, primary school classroom and university lecture-hall who, at the behest of gender supremacy, have turned the best education system in the world into a death camp of the mind patrolled by the Gestapo thugs of political correctness.

In 1970, Germaine Greer published The Female Eunuch -- feminism's Mein Kamp -- in which she inquired: "Is it too much to ask that women be spared the daily struggle for superhuman beauty in order to offer it to the caresses of a subhumanly ugly male?" That was the signal for her followers everywhere to launch the demonisation of men in terms which exactly mimicked the Nazis' vilification of non-Aryans before the Third Reich began its genocide of the Jews. Since then the feminazi assaults on all decency and humanity have grown in stridency and viciousness, unchallenged by supine judges in their complicit courts, to the point where natural justice demands as savage a response. Let me assure gender totalitarians everywhere: it is coming. The protean surge of the international men's human rights movement is the most thrilling development of my time. It is a great convulsion of rage, anguish, despair and love -- a veritable tsunami in the socio-cultural ocean. The great wave carries with it the hopes and dreads of a generation of men all-but-destroyed by feminism's insane supremacist imperative. It is about to engulf the enemy shoreline. Then "let the healing fountain start / in the desert of the heart."

By endless cunning, duplicity and secret conspiracy in the desert of its heart, feminism thought to neuter successive generations of men, to make them its slaves. Instead, at the end of one of the darkest nights of the Western soul, all that it has done is rouse a sleeping giant and fill him with a terrible resolve.

Douglas Rome is a Scottish poet and journalist.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with

comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/13/2047227.shtml

Men Still Account for 93% of All Occupational Deaths

Scott · 14 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

As posted to the Men's Health America list, "This recent report from the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reveals that even though occupational death rates are falling, men account for 93% of all occupational deaths." The CDC report updates the information covered by Warren Farrell in his groundbreaking book The Myth of Male Power, where I first learned about this enormous gender disparity.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/14/1559207.shtml

International Men's Network

Scott · 14 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Alan Carr has created a site and a movement idea called the International Men's Network. The idea is that the network grows by each participant finding two other men to join, and each "cell" of three men writes in protest or support of a particular cause each month. I think it's a neat idea. His web site was pretty hard for me to read, and I've been told he's had problems with some people's browsers but not others, so check it out and if you are having trouble reading it just e-mail Alan at pc006a0002@blueyonder.co.uk and I'm sure he'd be glad to explain.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/14/1754254.shtml

Boy Dies at AZ "Reform" Camp

Scott · 15 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ken sent me a few articles about a boy who died while attending a reform school/camp for troubled youths. These camps are often harshly physically abusive to children in an attempt to scare them out of their antisocial behavior. And of course, these camps are populated almost exclusively by boys, something not pointed out in any of these articles. A story from the New York Times (free registration required to read) can be read here, and there are two other articles from the Arizona Republic, article1 and article2.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/14/2156210.shtml

Court Threatens Right To Bear Children

Scott · 15 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kathleen Parker wrote a great article for TownHall.com in which she discusses the recent WI court decision barring a "deadbeat dad" from having any more children. While the idea makes sense on the surface, there is a lot more at stake when it comes to our civil rights, as Parker clearly points out. The ruling also reinforces a gender double standard, "This court ruling is just one more message that men are no-count predators while women are hapless victims. Women choose; men lose." And this is how it's been so far in the history of men's reproductive rights.
Source: Town Hall [conservative news web site - www.townhall.com]

Title: Court Threatens Right To Bear Children

Author: Kathleen Parker

Date: July 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/15/0119220.shtml

Female Teacher Sentenced to 45 Days for Sexual Contact with Students

Scott · 15 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

cheddah sent in this AP article, which as the title states is about a woman who received 45 days in prison and must stop teaching for having sexual contact with two 17 year-old male students of hers. The teacher's lawyer was quoted as saying "[his client] was worried about being treated fairly by the courts because of her gender and the publicity surrounding the charges, but was satisfied with the outcome."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/15/0131258.shtml

More Women Inmates Than Men Treated For Mental Illness

Nightmist · 16 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This report on Excite News claims that prison inmates who are mentally ill often go untreated, and that the number of mentally ill people in prison is underestimated. It also says that female prisoners are treated at a higher rate for mental illness than their male counterparts. Anyone surprised?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/16/145226.shtml

Maine "Child Abuser" Registry Under Fire

Scott · 16 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Portland Press Herald printed a story about controversy stirring over a registry of people who have been investigated for child abuse cases, which is routinely used for background checks by employers. Just recently the people who were in the registry no longer have to be contacted about it, and there are many people in it who have been wrongly accused for child abuse or neglect. The article can be read here.Source: The Portland Press Herald [newspaper]

Title: List of alleged child abusers called unfair

Author: Gregory Kesich

Date: July 12, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/16/1436232.shtml

Latino "Men's Movement" Aims to Redefine Masculinity

Nightmist · 16 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Christian Science Monitor ran this article about a growing Latino men's movement. This movement seems to have adopted the feminist notion that men are predatory and women and children are victims. While it is laudable that these men should want to become more in tune with their families, it is disconcerting to hear them say things like "most of us were beaten by our fathers."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/16/1457219.shtml

Mother of "Political Correctness" Says She Was Misundertsood

Nightmist · 17 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Fox News' regular PC Police feature offers a couple of stories of interest for men, including a quote from Julia Kristeva, the so-called matriarch of political correctness. "Kristeva now says she and her work have been misunderstood by groups that held her out as an icon of feminism and multiculturalism. She believes the group identity adopted by some feminist, gay and ethnic leaders is "totalitarian" and that freedom of the individual should take precedence over communitarianism; that political assertion of sexual, ethnic and religious identities eventually erodes democracy."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/16/1444244.shtml

A Day of Discrimination Against Men

Nightmist · 17 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article from AskMen.com follows one man through his workday and social life as he details every ounce of discrimination he faces. This reads a bit like fiction, and it may be, but it is still an account of problems with which we all identify. It's depressing. And I think we've found another commercial to add to the list of male bashing companies we discussed during last week's chat: Radox Bath Salts. Update: Found a strikingly similar article here at bigpond.com. I don't know, now, if this is the same author, plagiarism, or spoof.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/16/1558222.shtml

Sitter Who Allegedly Had Sex With Children Says Boys Are To Blame

Nightmist · 17 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A babysitter who allegedly had sex with an 8-year-old and a 9-year-old boy now claims in this article from The Salt Lake Tribune that the young boys forced her into it. A female judge has delayed the babysitter's sentencing so the woman can "undergo psychological counseling." Male defendants convicted of molesting and then blaming young girls are routinely sentenced to prison. But on Friday, 3rd District Judge Leslie Lewis delayed Nelson's fate for 90 days, and ordered her to undergo a psychosexual evaluation by prison psychologists. "I need to know what happened here," Lewis said. Click Read More for information on contacting Judge Lewis.
Judge Lewis is, incidentally, the chair of the Utah Gender Bias Implementation Committee. I have so far been unable to find an e-mail address for her. You may contact her through the U.S. mail or phone number below (as posted on the Utah Bar Web site).

Judge Leslie A. Lewis

3rd Judicial District of Utah

240 E. 400 South

Salt Lake City, UT 84111

801-535-5474

I encourage anyone making contact with Judge Lewis to be polite but firm in your assertion that this sitter should not be given a lighter sentence because of her gender.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/16/1811226.shtml

Men May Be At Greater Risk for Methamphetamine Damage

Scott · 17 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve writes "In this article from HealthScoutNews, Adam Marcus reports that men who use the drug methamphetamine may have an increased risk for brain damage if their mothers abused that drug. New research shows the increased risk affects male laboratory mice, but does not affect female laboratory mice. Methamphetamine is a widely abused drug and is known by the slang names 'crank' 'ice,' and 'chalk.'"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/16/2327214.shtml

Report on MA Child Support Hearings

Scott · 17 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ned Holstein from Fathers and Families sent out an update on the public hearings on the Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines, which are up for review. We reported on this earlier and included it in our Activism Projects page - thanks to everyone to participated! To read Ned's message, click Read More below. Apparently the first two meetings went extremely well.

Last week, the fatherhood movement took an important step forward at the first two of five child support hearings. This week, on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, we must keep up the pressure by filling the hearing halls in Worcester and Lawrence.

For the fist time ever, those who are responsible for reviewing the child support guidelines heard the voices of non-custodial parents. Both the Boston and Brockton hearings were packed to standing-room only, indicating the depth of the discontent over the current guidelines. In the time allotted, only 53 speakers could be heard, each for three minutes, almost all of whom were non-custodial parents telling how the present child support guidelines harm their children. Quite a few second wives were heard as well, explaining how their children are made into second-class citizens by the extraordinary amounts of child support that are required in Massachusetts.

Judge Barbara Dortch-Okara, who will have the final say over any changes to the Guidelines, personally attended the Boston hearing, which, like the other hearings, have come about only because of the political pressure generated by Fathers and Families.

A handful of people were there to advocate for HIGHER child support guidelines. These people are taxpayer-supported professionals who openly discriminate against fathers--by their own admission, they will represent only mothers, not fathers, in family law actions. They are employed by the Women's Bar Association, the Massachusetts Law Reform Institute, Greater Boston Legal Services and various domestic violence groups.

But where were the single mothers--those who, according to the paid poverty lobby, are suffering from inadequate child support? There were only one or two such single mothers there. Why? Because most single mothers know deep in their hearts that the existing guidelines are more than fair to them. There is no grass-roots constituency for raising the child support guidelines, only the paid poverty bureaucracy.

A few single mothers were there because they are not receiving court- ordered child support from their ex's. These women have a legitimate complaint in most cases, but their problem cannot be solved by raising the guidelines for those who do pay. To the contrary, a persuasive argument can be made that many of these mothers receive nothing precisely because the guidelines are so high; their ex- partners would rather disappear, so goes this argument, than subject themselves to a system that will jail them when they inevitably fall behind on an impossibly high child support order.

Call to Renewed Action

We cannot allow the authorities to look out over empty hearing halls in Worcester, Lawrence and Springfield. We must fill these halls as we filled Boston and Brockton. We must show that excessive child support is a problem all over this state, that there is a seething resentment about it, that children are harmed when their fathers are impoverished, and that fathers care deeply about the wellbeing of their children. We need YOU to come to the remaining hearings. WE ESPECIALLY NEED STEPMOTHERS AND GRANDPARENTS.

I especially urge you to attend the hearing on Wednesday evening, July 18 in Lawrence, where I believe there will be the best chance of having an opportunity to speak. Details and directions follow.

Worcester

Tuesday evening, July 17, 4:00 pm to 5:30 pm

Worcester Courthouse

50 Harvard Street

Jury Assembly Room

Lawrence

Wednesday evening, July 18, 4:00 pm to 5:30 pm

Fenton Judicial Center

2 Appleton Street

Courtroom 1

Springfield

Tuesday evening, July 24, 4:00 pm to 5:30 pm.
More info in a few days.

Ned Holstein, MD, MS

President

Fathers and Families

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/17/0033210.shtml

Confronting Women's Violence

Scott · 17 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett and an Anonymous User both sent in this essay from Lew Rockwell.com. Ilana Mercer directly examines the ways society denies that women have a violent nature and the double standards which perpetuate it. She also notes that "Women's aggression is different to that of men, which is why it so easy to misconstrue" and concludes, " the old stereotypes must be replaced with a nuanced understanding; one which recognizes that if women can match men in almost every way that is good and fine - then so can they harbor the potential to be as sinister as men."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/17/1529257.shtml

Men Opposed To Marriage

Adam · 18 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There's an excellent article here at the Alberta Report about "a growing male mutiny against marriage." It turns out that men are becoming very aware of the ways they are treated unfairly with legal marriage, and are avoiding it like the plague. They look at several factors contributing to this including the comments of Greg Kershaw, founder of the father's group Fathers Are Capable Too (FACT). The article well worth bookmarking in my opinion.

Source: The Alberta Report [online newsmagazine]

Title: Do You Take This Woman? No Way!

Author: Paul Wodehouse

Date: January 18, 1999

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/18/017219.shtml

On-Line Chat: Strategies for Promoting Men's Rights

Scott · 18 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Yes, it's time again for our weekly chat - last week's was very productive, and the list of pro and anti male companies should hit the web site later today. Tonight, our topic will be strategies for promoting men's rights. What new and unorthodox methods need to be tried in this arena? Are there any special tricks or techniques in the traditional methods (letter writing, etc) which you feel helped to get your voice heard? Join our discussion and learn how to maximize the effectiveness of your activism! Click here to go to our chat page at 9:30 PM Eastern Time tonight.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/18/1327207.shtml

The Politics of Prison Rape

Scott · 19 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h sent in this article from FoxNews and writes "I know I'm treading on thin ice here, but I hope our gay readers will give me some leeway because this article brings up some interesting questions. First among them is why is it that prison rape gets so little attention until it happens to someone who looks/purports to be a woman? I take no issue with Cuoco's desire to change gender, but I have to assert that if Cuoco had presented herself as a male, this would NEVER receive national attention. Is the best way for a man to get attention to injustice to change himself into a woman? Why is it more wrong or more noteworthy to rape a woman than it is to rape a man? If the state regards Cuoco as a man and if the court finds the for the plaintiff (Cuoco), then what precedent is set for other men who are raped in prison?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/18/2216207.shtml

The Mensactivism.org Media Watch

Scott · 19 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I added a Media Watch page to track companies or groups that portray men positively or negatively in the media. Use the list to voice your opinion to these entities and encourage pro-male portrayals and discourage (even boycott) companies or groups which bash men on a regular basis. The initial list is a compilation created from our last on-line chat session and recent e-mails we received on the subject. Thanks so much to the people to contributed to this list!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/18/2342225.shtml

Campaign to End Selective Service

Scott · 19 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User writes "This isn't an article per se, but were you aware that the Libertarian Party has launched an online campaign to end Selective Service? Did you know that a bill to end the draft has been introduced to the House of Representatives? Check out the official website for more information, and to sign the petition supporting HR 1597: endselectiveservice.org"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/18/2219259.shtml

Wrongly Convicted Men File $60M Lawsuit

Nightmist · 19 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The men in this story from Excite News were convicted of murder based on the testimony of one female witness, who later recanted and said she testified against them for the $1,000 reward. The two men spent 14 years behind bars before a private detective located the real killer. One woman's word is worth the word of 100 men, perhaps?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/18/2350232.shtml

Australian Web Site Attempts to Stem Suicidal Tide

Nightmist · 19 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Doctors in Australia have launched a new Web site (the server is apparently not up yet, though) in an effort to stem the alarming tide of young male suicides in that country. According to this story from Excite News, the suicide rate for young males in Australia has doubled since 1975. One in four deaths of young men in that country is a result of suicide.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/19/1453213.shtml

New Commercials Break Down Latino Male Stereotypes

Nightmist · 19 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

According to this article from Excite News, the creator of the GOT MILK? ad campaign is starting a new Spanish language advertisement which also focuses on shattering the stereotype that Latino men "wouldn't be caught dead doing woman's work," or spending time with their children. The commercial features a father and daughter shopping for groceries together. The article generalizes that Latino men are family-centric, but most ads depict them as hardened and unemotional toward their wives and children. This sounds like a good spot for the "pro-male" category on our media page.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/19/211229.shtml

Words of Advice From Daniel Amneus

Adam · 19 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I'm posting this article for two reasons, firstly it summarizes all his work, so please read this article very carefully and examine everything he says, and lastly, the main point Amneus makes is that by paying child support, alimony, etc, men are paying for the destruction of their own families and themselves, something that cuts close to what countless divorced dads know all too well.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/18/015219.shtml

Executive Women Choose Flexibility Over Pay

Scott · 20 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

BusterB writes "As reported in the National Post of Canada, "A survey of 350 female executives in Canada revealed that an overwhelming majority prefer incentives that allow them to attain balance in their lives...." This article outlines how women executives the positions that feminists are always whining that women have trouble attaining prefer job flexibility such as a four-day work week over more pay. The problem for feminism, of course, is that this kind of survey puts a lie to their claim that when women are paid less than men for the same job, it's because of discrimination."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/19/235224.shtml

MA Child Support Awards Unfair to Fathers

Scott · 20 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Worcester Telegram printed this story about the Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines hearings, with the title, "Support levels high in Mass." It's a supportive article that objectively explains the bias against Non-Custodial Parents in divorce and the reality of false accusations against fathers. How refreshing it is to see such a positive piece about an emotionally charged issue in the mainstream news!Source: The Worcester Telegram Title: Support levels high in Mass.

Author: Martin Luttrell

Date: July 18, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/20/1716216.shtml

Media Watch Submissions

Scott · 20 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I'd like to thank the people who have been writing in about the Media Watch page and making suggestions. I promise to update the page this weekend, as I'm busy playing catch-up with work and e-mail today.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/20/1722246.shtml

Misandry and Jewish Culture

Scott · 21 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Glenn Sacks wrote a particularly courageous editorial for the Intermountain Jewish News. In it, he describes his experiences with Jewish family and friends and the excessive male bashing he's found from Jewish women. While many people will take exception to Glenn's focus on misandry in Jewish culture, Glenn is Jewish himself, so no one can accuse him of harboring anti-semitic prejudice. In an e-mail to me he said he is not attacking Jews in general. Note: This was our 1,000th posting to Mensactivism.org!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/20/2255218.shtml

Sexism Against Men a Result of the "Patriarchy???"

Nightmist · 21 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Here's an interesting bit from Excite News. The National Organization for Men Against Sexism has organized a conference to discuss how sexism against men is a result of a "sexist, patriarchal society." The overwhelming majority of murderers and homicide victims are male, and men are more likely than women to use drugs or drink in excess. These are the results of a sexist, patriarchal society, according to Brian Klocke, a University of Colorado-Boulder doctoral candidate in sociology. Although I'm happy that these folks want to shatter male stereotypes, I don't think doing it under the flag of feminist dogma is the way to go about it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/21/0433239.shtml

Discrimination Not To Blame For Women Leaving Labor Force

Nightmist · 21 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article from Excite News claims that women take longer than men to find new work after losing a job, and are more likely to choose part-time work or not re-enter the labor force at all. Surprisingly for mainstream media (Reuters), the story points out that the reason for this "disparity" is not discrimination against women, but a result of women making their own choices, especially if they happen to have a man around who is already bringing home the bacon. The article also hints at the fact that women generally have more choice about whether to work or stay home than do men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/21/0439241.shtml

Female Serial Killer Gets "Fast Track" To Execution

Nightmist · 21 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Aileen Wuornos, who was convicted of killing six men and claimed that she'd done so because they had sexually assaulted her, may have won her fast track to execution Friday after a Florida circuit judge said he would recommend to the Florida Supreme Court that Wuornos' execution be carried out. Wuornos recently admitted that she had lied about being sexually assaulted by men, that she just wanted to know what it felt like to kill a man. From the story: "I am a serial killer. I would kill again," Aileen Wuornos said during 1 1/2 hours on the witness stand.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/21/0449243.shtml

Everybody Should Have a White Man

Scott · 21 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Andrew writes "Some time ago a question occurred to me: If, as a white male, I am responsible for everyone else's suffering, then who is responsible for mine? (And furthermore: If I am responsible for my own suffering, while non-whites/non-males are not responsible for theirs, doesn't that set me apart as, well, a superior order of being? Whoops, don't want to go there!) I've never really seen this question addressed (though I do have some ideas about it myself), but this article makes an interesting (and amusing) start. Nice to see somebody (not a white man) finally say it: 'Everybody should have a white man. Even white men should have a white man. Because when you have a white man, nothing is ever your fault.'"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/21/1642228.shtml

Prostate Cancer Stamp to be "Stamped Out" Sept. 30

Scott · 21 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Gordon Clay from the MenStuff web site sent out an announcement reminding everyone that the U.S. Post Office Prostate Cancer Awareness stamp will no longer be available at post office branches as of September 30. My local PO hasn't had them in a while, and while they're only 33 cents (requiring an additional 1 cent stamp for first class mail), they're a great way to help remind people about the existence of this critical men's health issue.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/21/2129233.shtml

Man Sentenced for Writing Thoughts About Fictional Children

Scott · 23 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry sent in this link from FrontPage Magazine, about an Ohio man who was recently sentenced to seven years in prison for privately writing disturbing thoughts about sexually abusing fictional children. While I'm not going to claim that there isn't something wrong with this man, the fact that he will be in prison for seven years for simply writing about something is direct evidence that our civil liberties mean nothing in the U.S. First Amendment? What First Amendment?Source: FrontPage Magazine

Title: The Thought Police

Author: Bob Herbert

Date: July 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/23/0053208.shtml

Women in Combat

Scott · 23 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h sent in this article from TownHall.com and writes "This is a call to action for anyone who thinks that men and women are not equal in combat to contact their Congressmen and tell them so. Thanks to Mona Charen for writing this." The article points out that "Recently, the Center for Strategic and International Studies did a study on the military culture. It found that two-thirds of junior enlisted men did not believe women would pull their own weight if it came to combat. Forty-four percent of junior enlisted women agreed!" Obviously, things aren't right here, something which both genders seem to agree on.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/23/1437237.shtml

Taking Sexual Abuse Against Boys Seriously

Scott · 23 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An editorial in the Olympian newspaper makes some well-needed points that we are doing a great disservice to society and young men by not taking seriously situations where boys are statutorily raped. Too many people, including judges and the media, accept a double standard when an older woman seduces an underage boy, but the consequences are very real. "The media has even romanticized idea of the young man or teen-age boy being guided through sexual encounters by an experienced, mature woman -- as if it were a rite of passage for him. Does anyone stop to consider what this does to the development of these boys as sexual beings as they enter adulthood?" Bravo to Mr. Davis for writing this opinion piece.
Source: The Olympian [newspaper]

Title: Male victims of sexual abuse must be treated equally

Author: M. Shawn Davis

Date: July 20, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/23/1659236.shtml

Another MA Child Support Guidelines Update

Scott · 24 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ned Holstein sent out another update on the public hearings in Massachusetts for reviewing the state's Child Support Guidelines. With one hearing left tomorrow, in Springfield, we need to finish this off on the right foot. Be there if you can! Click Read More below for his announcement.The last public hearing on the Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines will be held this Tuesday, July 24, from 4:00pm to 5:30pm at the Springfield Hall of Justice at 50 State Street in Springfield. This is also known as the Hampden County Hall of Justice and also as the Springfield District Court. Please report to the Jury Assembly Area.

To get there, from all points: Take the Mass Pike to Exit 6 (I-291). Take I-291 South to I-91. Take I-91 South to Exit 5 (Broad Street). At the traffic light at the end of the ramp, turn left onto Broad Street. Take Broad Street to the next traffic light and turn left onto East Columbus Avenue. Take East Columbus Avenue to the second traffic light and turn right onto State Street. Court Square is bordered by State Street, Main Street, Court Street and East Columbus Avenue.

A map can be found at:

www.state.ma.us/courts/courtsandjudges/courts/springfielddistrictmain.html

Once in the Jury Assembly Area, look for a sign-up sheet for speakers.

The previous four hearings were filled to capacity, except Lawrence, which was only three-quarters full. All of the hearings have been overwhelmingly dominated by people who feel that the Child Support Guidelines are too high. At each hearing, there have been a few taxpayer-supported poverty lawyers advocating the other way. (These are the same unbiased folks who refuse to represent indigent fathers.) We must be sure that the Jury Assembly Area is overflowing and that our view predominates in Springfield, as in the previous four locations. WE ESPECIALLY NEED SECOND WIVES AND GRANDPARENTS TO APPEAR AND TO SPEAK.

I estimate that approximately 350 supporters of lower Child Support Guidelines have turned out at the previous four hearings combined. Is this a good result or a bad result? Half empty or half full? Clearly, our point of view has predominated. But compared to the thousands of people who have complained to us about the Child Support Guidelines,and the tens of thousands who haven't called us, it is a paltry turn-out. The hearing rooms could have been overflowing into the streets. In a democracy, people's fate is in their own hands. You can choose to be at Springfield, and make a difference, or you can assume that change is impossible and that nothing can be done. The second choice, of course, will become a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Ned Holstein, MD, MS

President

Fathers and Families

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/23/1821205.shtml

Fathers Who Smoke Pot Increase Child's Risk of SIDS

Nightmist · 24 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This report on Excite News opens up some interesting questions about the biological link between fathers and their offspring. According to the article, fathers who smoke pot create a greater risk of SIDS (sudden infant death syndrome) for their offspring than mothers. Not much more is known about this phenomenon right now, but it does further the scientific fact that a child is half his father and half his mother (with respect to genetic make-up)... not all his mother and only fertilized by father.By the way, folks, I'd also like to provide this link to an excellent scientific description of how a fetus develops into a male or female. One of the biggest fallacies among the general public these days is that a human fetus "starts out female" and that maleness is then forced upon that fetus by the Y chromosome and excretions of the developing testes. That's only partially true.

As you'll see from reading above, a fetus actually starts out sexually indifferent. It has the ducts to create either a female OR a male. Now, we HAVE proven that if deprived of the testis secretions, the fetus will naturally develop into a female, but that's a far cry from stating (as is the popular notion) that "we're all female in the beginning."

I love science. :)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/23/1944252.shtml

Boyosauruses

Scott · 24 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A recent article in the National Post delves into the different ways that boys and girls view dinosaurs, and certain gender differences in general. I felt that the article seemed to focus on these differences in a fairly pointed way, explaining how girls have a more intellectual and productive interest in dinosaurs and science, while boys are only interested in the visceral response they get from movies like Jurassic Park III. Click here for the story.Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: A herd of boyosauruses stomps into the theatre

Author: Joseph Brean

Date: July 21, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/24/1232239.shtml

Resistance Grows Against Excessive Medicating of Young Children

Scott · 24 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Dallas Morning News reported here that Connecticut recently passed legislation barring school officials and counselors from recommending psychiatric drugs for students. Schools can still recommend that a student be evaluated by a doctor or psychiatrist, and I think this makes sense - so students who do have mental health problems can still be helped. The strong support for this bill is testimony to the fact that too often, kids (especially boys) are being drugged up excessively and needlessly, and the public is concerned about this.Source: The Dalls Morning News [newspaper]

Title: Law reflects backlash against medicating kids

Author: Matthew Daly

Date: July 18, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/24/1247242.shtml

Men Suffer "Awareness Gap" Regarding Prostate Health

Nightmist · 24 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

New York City Mayor Rudy Giuliani has begun a campaign to decrease the gap in men's awareness of prostate cancer and what they do about it, according to this article on Excite News. Apparently, even though we are aware of the dangers of prostate cancer, most of us still aren't taking steps to avoid it. On a related note, Baylor University is currently enrolling men in a prostate cancer prevention study.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/24/163232.shtml

Boys as the "Weaker Sex"

Scott · 24 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes *"The title of the article is "Are Boys the Weaker Sex?" which I find to be deliberately inflammatory, and the article quotes my favorite (not!) male feminist, William Pollack. But it does finally begin to recognize that boys are not, and have not for a long time, been doing well in schools, and it recognizes something that feminists have been fighting for a long time: boys and girls are different. I'll read the article again before I decide how I feel about it, but I would encourage all to read the article; don't judge it on its title. The article can be found at this link."*Source: U.S. News and World Report [magazine]

Title: Are Boys the Weaker Sex?

Author: Anna Mulrine

Date: July 30, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/24/1618243.shtml

Phillipine Gov't Cracks Down on Harassment; Women Just As Guilty

Nightmist · 25 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News describes a new Phillipine government policy which labels "offensive jokes" sent via e-mail or instant messaging ("texting," the article calls it) as sexual harassment. The interesting part of this story is at the end, though, where a female official is quoted admitting that there's a stereotype against men when it comes to sexual harassment. Arroyo added that she was glad the practice was no longer viewed in stereotypical terms as always involving an older male superior harassing female subordinates. "This is true in the vast majority of cases ... but it is also true that sexual harassment can and does occur with the traditional roles reversed or with the same gender involved." Personally, the number of ways in which someone may be considered a "harasser" scares me.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/24/1553211.shtml

The Glamorization of War

Scott · 25 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "The L.A. Times Magazine published an excellent article about the glamorization of WWII, and war in general, and the lifetime of psychological scarring that war leaves on soldiers. The story focuses on WWII veterans, specifically how the U.S. shipped them off to war, forced them to commit horrendous acts, then gave them no emotional support system when they returned to the States. Even though many of these vets suffered, and continue to suffer, from PTSD, the U.S. military insisted that these men suck it all in and "take it like a man." As a result, many vets fell into a lifetime of depression, alcohol/drug abuse and other emotional disorders. Even worse, Hollywood continues to pump out feel-good WWII movies that portray battle as a positive, wholesome, and overall glamorous experience. After reading this, you'll never look at those movies the same way again."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/24/1925244.shtml

On-line Chat: Advocating Men's Rights for Young Men

Scott · 25 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tonight's on-line chat will be on the topic of boy's issues. Several recent news stories posted to Mensactivism.org have covered the way men's rights is related to issues facing our young men - be it the over-prescription of Ritalin for "overactive" boys, the supposedly "inferior" physical and mental development that boys experience in contrast to girls, and how sex crimes perpetrated against boys by older women are not taken as seriously as if the genders were reversed. Join us for a lively discussion on what we should do to help advocate for boys and young men, and what possibilities exist for educating young men about the harm that anti-male feminism is causing them. The chat login page can be found here, and the chat begins at 9:30 PM Eastern Time.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/25/1630233.shtml

Title IX Destroys Men's College Teams

Scott · 25 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in this USA Today article, which adds more examples to the growing list of men's sports teams on colleges and universities that have been harmed or destroyed by Title IX. The article also reiterates the contradictory nature of the law: "Ironically, the current interpretation of Title IX actually violates the law's own language (to say nothing of the Constitution), which forbids gender discrimination in college programs. Cutting men's teams in the name of gender parity is gender discrimination."Source: USA Today [newspaper]

Title: Title IX defeats male athletes

Author: Ann Coulter

Date: July 25, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/25/173224.shtml

Blaming the Father at All Costs

Scott · 25 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anniee sent in this essay from the American Reporter, which pins the blame for the Andrea Yates killings on her husband: "Yes, I think Rusty Yates, who looks as squeaky clean as the bathtub his children drowned in, ought to be locked up instead of his wife for callously ignoring his wife's needs (if not worse) and for criminal neglect of his children." I've been extremely selective about posting more stories about the Yates killings, but this one was just too inflammatory to pass by. It simply reeks with the double standards we have about men and women regarding responsibility.Source: The American Reporter

Title: The Yates Tragedy Reveals Evils of Passivity

Author: Cindy Hasz

Date: July 25, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/25/1713223.shtml

Discover, GQ present "Man of the Year" Award

Nightmist · 26 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article on Excite News announces a GQ magazine "Man of the Year" award sponsored by Discover. The award asks "sons, daughters, wives, and girlfriends" to nominate men for GQ's "Man of the Year." The winner will be announced on Discovercard.com. Certainly, this is simple promotion of a product, but I do think that it will make people stop and think about the men in their lives and all the good we can (and do) create. Looks like both GQ and Discover may be good candidates for the pro-male section of our Media Watch page. :)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/25/193243.shtml

Meeting Another Child's "Daddy Woman"

Nightmist · 26 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Christian Science Monitor ran this commentary by a stay-at-home dad who, along with his wife, rediscovered the fact that children tend to take for granted that the situations in their own families exist everywhere. The column is fun and a little humorous, but also a sincere reminder that we need to start educating our children early on all the opportunities that are (or should be) available to them--male or female--as they grow up.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/25/2026259.shtml

Defeating Stereotypes of Gay/Bi Men

Scott · 26 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Igor writes "I stumbled upon a great website lately: www.StraightActing.com provides a community for many homosexual/bisexual men who feel rejected by the Gay Pride Movement. Many of these men feel that society pressures them into the "limp wrist" definition of homosexuality. A great deal of them avoid the gay scene entirely just because they are sick of being stereotyped as effeminate. The general consensus on the forums is that the "gay community" is just as bad as the "straight community" when it comes to accepting these men. This is a great website for homosexual/bisexual men (even heterosexual men too) who want to feel masculine while still accepting their sexuality. Society has accepted "lipstick lesbians" (lesbians who act like heterosexual women). When will society accept masculine gay/bi men?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/26/1444229.shtml

Readers Speak Out About Men Avoiding Marriage

Scott · 26 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There were a couple of great letters in the Christian Science Monitor replying to a recent article about how men are avoiding marriage because of the ways it is unfair to them. You may recognize the names as Mensactivism.org readers and commentors. Great work, Alan and Neil! This is a great example of reader activism.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/26/2043236.shtml

Dear Abby Comes Around

Scott · 27 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Several weeks ago men's activists wrote to Dear Abby about her advice on an issue involving fathers' parenting time. Today she came around to our side: click here."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/26/2136235.shtml

Heroic Boy Was "Just Doing What He Had To Do"

Nightmist · 27 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Here's an inspiring story from Fox News about a 6-year-old boy who, when his mother was incapacitated, managed to rescue his baby brother and himself from a flipped car after an automobile accident. "We're very fortunate," Gegelman said. "Breyleigh loves his brother, and he's real protective of him. I just think what he did was heroic." Here's to the destruction of the stereotype that boys (and men) are incapable of the type of love which fuels such action.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/26/2048250.shtml

DesertLight Journal No. 8

Scott · 27 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

It's that time again.... issue number eight of Trudy Schuett's DesertLight Journal has hit the internet. Read it here. 'Nuff said. :)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/27/0133258.shtml

New Jersey Men's Issues Group

Scott · 27 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h is looking to form a chapter of the National Coalition of Free Men in New Jersey, and is looking for potential members. Please e-mail Frank at fhujber@optonline.net if you're interested.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/27/038233.shtml

Celebrating Gender Diversity

Scott · 27 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h pointed me to this article from TooGoodReports.com and writes "Duplantier encourages the celebration of gender diversity in this short essay. Not real hard-hitting, but well-said." From the article: "Thanks to the persistent intervention of reality, the hostile egalitarianism of the sexes may at long last be on the wane...Instead of trying fanatically to blur the distinctions between the sexes, let's go back to accentuating and celebrating them."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/27/1551246.shtml

Public School Tries Military-Style Discipline

Nightmist · 27 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

With all the talk recently about boys and education--mainly, how boys require more physical activity--I thought that this article from Christian Science Monitor was both relevant and important. It reports on the first public school to adopt military-style discipline for students, and it is, of course, controversial. However, the school officials promise it will not to be one of the "boot camp" schools about which we've heard so much lately. The focus is going to be on education, discipline, and physical activity. Although this sounds particularly good for boys' education (we've all heard about how boys learn better when physical activity is involved), the article only quotes female students (and the parents of female students). I'll be writing an oped letter to point that out to them (e-mail oped@csps.com... you must include your name and address if the letter is to be considered for publication).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/27/212231.shtml

Another Typical DV Article Demonizes Men

Scott · 28 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ray Remark sent me this predictable story from the Spokane Spokesman-Review about domestic violence. The story is specifically about the usage of "Children's Rooms" in courts for children to stay in so they don't have to observe the domestic violence trials that their parents are going through, but practically every paragraph of the article points out the overwhelming prevalence of male abusers. Ray sent in a sharp response, which can be read by clicking Read More below. It probably won't be printed in the paper, so you might as well read it here.

Dear Editor:

Your front page story of July 27 by Kevin Blocker on the domestic violence Children's Waiting Room betrays, yet again, the extraordinary state of denial America cli ngs to over domestic violence, rape, and gender issues in general.

Again and again, the "protection of children" is used by the culture and its servants as a tool to demonize males. Each instance of domestic violence described in your story involves an evil male terrorizing a helpless female.

You publish the findings of the Domestic Violence Consortium as truth. The Consortium - essentially a political and ideological special interest group- finds in th eir self-conducted, self-serving survey that "women were nearly twice as likely to experience intimate partner violence as men."

This finding is contradicted by impartial studies which consistently show that women and men engage in virtually equal amounts of violence in domestic contexts. Me n, ashamed of their weakness, rarely report this violence, while women are encouraged by ideological criminals to bring men to "justice." Further, non-ideological stud ies consistently find that women overwhelmingly initiate episodes of domestic violence. We can't have anything like truth in the paper though, can we?

The scapegoating and imprisonment of masculinity that swamps American culture is chillingly reflected in the statement by Gary King, program coordinator for the wai ting room, who claims it's easy to spot kids from abusive backgrounds. "Those are the ones who are leery of me - the only adult male figure in their lives is an abusi ve one. They always have at least one eye on me."

While I do not doubt that the brainwashing of children against masculinity is epidemic in American culture, again, impartial research consistently indicates that ch ildren in America are abused disproportionately by females. This is not a finding the culture wishes to hear, however. It's much more profitable -- and psychological ly reassuring - to scapegoat males, to indoctrinate children against them, and then to use the "evil male" as an excuse for removing children from any masculine influe nce.

Likewise, Spokane District Court Judge Richard White reveals the misandry so typical in modern American jurisprudence. He is paraphrased as saying he "can't begin to count the number of kids who've been exposed to brutal testimony." Judge White is then quoted: "Mom and dad would be testifying against each other - I've sentence d many a father before their sons."

Indeed, you Honor. But damn few women in front of their daughters, it goes without saying. No wonder American boys are lost and filled with rage. Two parties exp ress essentially equal contentions before "blind" justice - and always it's the male that goes to jail. Judge White's bias is widely reflected in the policies of many jurisdictions and enforcement agencies across America involved with domestic violence. The current pattern is to arrest, try, and imprison only males, regardless of the circumstances surrounding each incident.

I am hardly shocked that funding for the Waiting Room came from McDonalds and Women Helping Women organizations. Like the Domestic Violence Consortium, these group s have no interest whatsoever in justice, fairness, or equality before the law. They hide behind false service to children and community, when in fact they are enemie s of both. Their real agenda is to construct a society in which males are second-class citizens, in which the feminine is deified and the masculine demonized, and in which the feminine dominates the masculine under unceasing threat of punishment, especially imprisonment. In this, they have already succeeded, recapitulating matriar chal conditions exactly.

Yet another of the endless women "helping" women groups, Stop the Clock, counters FBI statistics showing local declines in sexual violence by conducting -- and publ icizing -- their own "surveys." Not surprisingly, their findings indicate that sexual violence is everywhere, and that males are to blame. Of course, when "researcher s" include such categories as "cat calls," "degrading jokes," and "rude stares" in the criteria, it's easy to conclude with satisfaction and sham rage that American me n oppress and violate women at every instant. When ideologues like Stop the Clock conduct polls at Ani DiFranco concerts, it's like asking foxes in the chicken coop h ow they like their fryers prepared.

Indeed, were I to include "rude stares" from American women as my criteria for establishing sexual violence, I would be sexually violated a number of times weekly.
Stop the Clock isn't interested in that, though. They're too busy fabricating their truth.

The only honest thing in the entire piece appeared in your sidebar, "Court handles huge caseload." Judge White - that champion of justice - says, "The problem - is that domestic violence isn't an anger issue, it's a power and control issue."

Correct. In America, domestic violence - and most of jurisprudence - is about gaining and maintaining complete power and control over masculinity. America is not suffering from mass domestic and sexual violence, but from mass psychosis and hysteria by infantilized females covertly seeking power, privilege and control over anyt hing even vaguely masculine. In this, they are funded and abetted by every cultural institution and innumerable "watchdog" groups.

Gary King, Judge White, and the domestic/sexual violence propagandists are not the protectors of our children and communities, but instead the foes of a truly just, inclusive, non-vengeful culture. With each day they corrode and destabilize a once-proud, once-sane nation.

Shame on the editors of the Spokesman-Review, and on reporter Kevin Blocker, for validating and publicizing their prejudices.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/28/0315246.shtml

Man Harassed, Needs Advice

Scott · 28 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robert H wrote in about a situation he found himself in where he was being harassed at his workplace and accused of "making moves" on another employee's wife. After having left the job because of the stress, he has attempted several ways to get some sort of support, but found it nowhere. Robert's story can be read by clicking Read More below. I would urge you to contact Robert if you can suggest to him any resources and offer some moral support for another man who was mistreated and is being ignored. Robert H writes "Hello my name is Robert H. and I have just had an experience that I would like to pass on to you. I worked for a major auto parts retailer for the past 2 yrs. with loyal service. We had a new employee start her training with the company, and the first night that I had to close our store with another employee, myself and the female. Upon leaving our store all three together, her husband which is also an employee of the same company accuses me of MAKING MOVES on his wife. I reported it to my store manager and requested that it be written in all of our files for protection of myself in case any accusations were made in the future. It was not! After a year of torment from these two and two hospital visits to a cardiac unit for job-induced stress from these two people, I have had to quit my job and go to another company. I made repeated complaints to my store mgr. (who is female) and also to my district mgr. and relations mgr. Just four weeks earlier I had a meeting with these upper mgt. personnel and told them to fix this problem or I would quit, they advised me to work it out if I could. It wasn't three weeks until we had another confrontation, and I decided to quit and go somewhere else. My point is this: if the roles were reversed, and I was causing this female these kind of work problems, she could accuse me of harassment or any number of other forms of complaint and I would have been written up or terminated. But because I'm a male and I'm white I don't have any rights as I have been told by the EEOC if I were minority I could claim racism, if I were female I could say sexual harassment or gender discrimination, if I were from an alternative lifestyle I could complain and those organizations would line up to help me. If I were physically challenged I could get those organizations to help me, if I were native american I could get help, if I were famous I could get help, but because I'm just Joe Ordinary White Male living lawfully and working my life away to support my family, TUFF LUCK!

I have a lot of documentation of the incidents that happened to me and I have contacted lawyers, the EEOC, even the company itself. Point is, I had my rights violated and no one will listen to me long enough to understand. If you have any direction to point me in i would be very grateful.

Robert H.

jakstar@wilkes.net

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/28/188233.shtml

Rise In Male Infertility Linked To Pesticides, Solvents

Nightmist · 29 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A study described on Excite News indicates that some pesticides and solvents may be to blame for a dramatic increase in male infertility. Dwindling sperm counts have been a cause of concern since Danish researchers reported in 1992 that sperm counts worldwide were declining. Many experts blame environmental factors for the decline, as well as an increase in testicular cancer.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/29/0248213.shtml

Yes, Women Are More Likely To Visit The Doctor

Nightmist · 29 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article on Excite News purports to confirm an old stereotype that women are more likely to visit the doctor than are men. In spite of its headline, the article spends more word space focusing on how to "improve" women's health and relationships with the medical profession than men. In fact, men are only mentioned in three paragraphs of the 12 paragraph story. Most of the comparisons are made between white women and black women. Not surprisingly, women are diagnosed and treated for depression more often than men. It is my personal belief that this is because of the old stereotype in which men must "suck it up and tough it out" while women are too delicate to be allowed to experience any discomfort.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/29/033258.shtml

Lack of Men on Campus Changes Dating Culture

Nightmist · 29 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This study conducted by a University of Texas professor and sponsored by the Independent Women's Forum indicates that the sharp drop of men on college campuses in the U.S. has had an equally dramatic impact on college dating culture. Women are finding it more difficult to find long-term partners, according to the study, while men are enjoying a preponderance of brief sexually charged encounters. The article does stereotype men as "only wanting one thing," but one brave soul speaks up and points out that men do seek out long-term relationships as well. It will be interesting, to me, to find out whether other men lament or laud this change in dating climate.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/29/2056245.shtml

Lance Armstrong Wins Tour de France - Again

Scott · 30 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Lance Armstrong, who overcame a very serious testicular cancer case about four years ago, has today won the Tour de France - for the third year in a row. Because of this I feel that Armstrong's victory is not just about a bike race, but about a man's victory over cancer and an inspiration to other men. The Lance Armstrong Foundation, which supports research, public awareness, and support to cancer survivors, can be found at this link.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/30/0011244.shtml

Restraining Order Abuses - and What You Can Do

Scott · 30 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AngryHarry sent me this article which explains the all-too-common scenarios where 209A orders (restraining orders) are abused by women. What's even more important about the article is they have other pages on what to do about false accusations and methods of fighting back against the Massachusetts DSS. I consider this site a "must read" for any man who is currently in a relationship that is having some rough times. A small amount of time spent now could help you tremendously in the future.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/30/0026250.shtml

Violence Against Boys in Children's Cinema

Scott · 30 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Chad from the Men's Movement Connection writes, "Recently Disney has released a new motion picture. "The Princess Diaries," targeted towards a younger audience, is rated "G," but the movie contains a scene where the character played by "Erik Von Detten" is sexually abused. This was shown in the theatrical trailer. We must try to stop the male bashing in at least Children's Cinema before it gets out of control." Contact info for Disney is listed in the Read More section of this story. To contact The Classification and Rating Administration, to voice your opinion on how a movie with such imagery could possibly swing a "G" rating!? Write to them at:

The Classification and Rating Administration

15503 Ventura Boulevard

Encino, CA 91436

To contact Disney on this issue go to:

http://studio.go.com/cgi-bin/gmail/generic_mail.cgi?template=contactus/contact.tpl

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/30/0114249.shtml

Accusatory Urinal Splashguards Spread to New Campuses

Nightmist · 30 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An organization calling itself "Men Stopping Rape" is once again distributing the offensive urinal splashguards with the slogan "You hold the key to stopping rape in your hands" to men's restrooms in Pennsylvania. The trend started in Ohio. The article is, of course, supportive of the measure, but does quote a few brave dissenting souls: "It kind of pissed me off. I know rape is out there and it makes you think, but this is State College, it's not like it's Philly. The splashguards aren't directed to me and so I'm going to ignore them. By putting those in there, you must think all guys are out there abusing women." Update: The first Men's Activism News Network post on this urinal splashguard fad (from back in May) is available here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/30/1647250.shtml

Female Teacher Does 10 Days At Home For Kissing Student

Nightmist · 31 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Former Washington high school teacher Marty Barnes will only do 10 days of a traditionally 90-day sentence for second-degree criminal attempt of sexual misconduct with a minor (a misdemeanor) after she allegedly kissed one of her male students (twice). This story in the Seattle Times details the facts of the case. Barnes pleaded down from second-degree sexual misconduct with a minor, which would have meant she would have been required to register as a sex offender. Update: The author of this article (in an e-mail to me) says that several readers have written her asking why Barnes was given such a lenient sentence when a male would've received the max. You may write your letter to the editor to the Seattle Times here (opinion@seattletimes.com).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/30/175225.shtml

Extensive Analysis of DOJ DV and CV Reports

Scott · 31 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Michael Snyder (a frequent poster on the newsgroup soc.men) wrote up a detailed analysis "comparing and cross-referencing the various DOJ reports on violent victimization, to show a pattern of bias in reporting, placing outrageous emphasis on female victimization and downplaying both male victimization and female offenders." I hope you'll take a moment to check this out, because it will blow your mind. Click here for his site.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/30/1712216.shtml

Police Bias in Domestic Violence Cases

Scott · 31 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Rob Exeter writes, "I came across a rather one sided view of domestic violence stats on this webpage for the Kennebunk, Maine police. What is sad is that the "Mission Statement" of the Maine Police with respect to DV victims refers only to women and children. The crowning glory of the usual selective collection of "stats" is the attempt to compare the number of men killed in the Vietnam war with the number of females killed in the US during the same period. An interesting rebuttal to the figures can be found at this site, however.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/30/1825235.shtml

Mother Forced by DSS to File Abuse Charges Against Father

Nightmist · 31 July 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In a shocking column on Fox News about how social services systems have a financial incentive to accuse parents of abuse and neglect, Wendy McElroy tells the story of a family torn apart so that the department could receive its "adoption incentive payment." According to the mother of the family, she was forced to accuse her husband of abusing her children so that DSS would have all the more reason to remove them from their home.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/31/1826210.shtml

Man Murdered For Showing Compassion

Nightmist · 1 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News illustrates all too well the effect of male stereotypes on society, and their potentially deadly consequences. A Nashville, Tenn., man was murdered recently--I am not making this up--because he was holding his wife's purse and escorting a blind friend to the men's restroom after a short cruise on Nashville's Gen. Jackson Showboat.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/31/1937254.shtml

The Chat Tonight is Up to You

Scott · 1 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I'm afraid I won't be able to make it to the chat session tonight - but that doesn't mean you can't do so! Most people meet at the chat page at 9:30 PM Eastern Time and go from there. Feel free to do so and discuss whatever topics you'd like. I'll try to drop in if I can.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/01/1225228.shtml

Shakespeare Brings Male Prisoners Together

Nightmist · 1 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article and photo essay in the Christian Science Monitor tells the story of male inmates coming together and "transforming their lives" through acting. While females in prison are offered more in the way of social support, males are often left to their own devices (and survival). Shakespeare Behind Bars appears to be trying to break through all that. Not that it's been easy: Previous wardens were not all supportive of Curt's efforts, and the current warden admits his program probably wouldn't be around if it cost anything. Curt raises money to pay for costumes, and volunteers his time. He says he does it because acting can transform lives - particularly those of prisoners. The program is, of course, controversial, but the article does present it as bringing an element of humanity back to these men. Make sure you check out the photo essay.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/31/2129211.shtml

The American Holocaust

Scott · 1 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Spartacus sent in this article from dadi.org. It covers a number of related issues, including the decline of fatherhood, the rise of the welfare state, and the government programs which essentially reward mothers for eliminating dads from the home. It ends with a plea not to let further government intervention in family matters destroy fatherhood and our society further.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/01/1235257.shtml

Fathers and Families Meeting

Scott · 1 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Massachusetts based Fathers and Families organization will be holding a meeting on Monday, August 6, from 7 to 9 PM. E-mail Ned Holstien at NedHolst@aol.com for the location. "This meeting will be a good opportunity to review how the five hearings on the child support guidelines went, and to discuss what our follow-up steps will be. We will also be able to update members on the status of our legislation, and other current matters."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/15/041236.shtml

Child Support Liberation

Scott · 2 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User pointed me to a for-profit organization called Child Support Liberation. They claim to provide services for NCPs paying child support to help ensure they aren't being taken advantage of. I think this is a great idea, considering all of the resources devoted to the enforcement of CS orders that are too often unfair to the NCP. There needs to be some accountability in this process, and CSL appears offer it (for a fee, of course).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/02/0139249.shtml

Everybody Loses in Duke Title IX Discrimination Lawsuit

Nightmist · 2 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This commentary posted on Excite News laments a court's decision to award a female walk-on kicker for Duke monetary damages under Title IX after she was cut from the team. The coaches and author of this piece assert that she was cut based on physical limitations in her performance, just as any male player is. Duke is appealing the decision.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/01/1759241.shtml

Title IX Defended by Indigo Girls Singer

Scott · 2 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "USA Today published a feminist reply to Ann Coulter's column on Title IX. It claims that men's college teams are being dropped because they are expensive. Send your reply to: editor@usatoday.com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/02/1218220.shtml

Men's Unhealthy Fears

Nightmist · 2 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Australia's news.com.au focuses on why fewer men than women go to the doctor. This issue has drawn considerable attention recently, especially after the study recently reported about on this Web site. Unfortunately, the main reason people seem to believe men do not go to the doctor as often is because of the old male stereotypes: men are afraid they'll be seen as "weak."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/01/195242.shtml

New Dating Abuse Study

Scott · 2 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in an item from the Times-Dispatch about a new study which found that "one in five high school girls is physically or sexually abused by a dating partner." The article's highlight is the statement: "The study also suggests that a disturbing number of adolescent boys "have adopted attitudes that men are entitled to control their girlfriends through violence," said lead author Jay G. Silverman of Harvard University's School of Public Health." I'd encourage people to research this study and examine the methodology. It seems to me that the findings might be explained by an over-emphasis of poor men and women, but is certainly not representative of the population at large.
Source: The Times-Dispatch [newspaper]

Title: One in five girls a date abuse victim: Study says it fuels risky behavior

Author: Unknown (AP article)

Date: August 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/02/1956214.shtml

Woman Gets 1-10 Years For Sexual Assault on 12-Year-Old Boy

Nightmist · 3 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A 25-year-old Pennsylvania woman has been sentenced to 1-10 years in prison after pleading down from statutory rape to statutory sexual assault for having sex with a 12-year-old boy. She will be eligible for parole after one year. Amazingly, she claims to have been "seduced" by the boy.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/02/2157216.shtml

Lifespan Gap Widens Between Japanese Men, Women

Nightmist · 3 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Japan's citizens are living longer than any other people on the earth, but Japnese women's lifespans are increasing at a greater rate than Japanese men, according to this article from Excite News. The article attributes the widening gap to Japan's ailing economy and an increase in male suicides.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/02/2055219.shtml

Men's Hour Program #3

Scott · 3 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This is just to let everyone know that the Men's Hour, episode no. 3, has been released at this page and is available in RealPlayer and Windows Media formats. In this episode, they interview Len Misulkin extensively, news of a hunger strike in Berlin, Richard Doyle about the Men's Defense Association, and Clayton Giles' journey for kids.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/07/22/1222237.shtml

Feminine Hygiene Manufacturers Marketing to... Men?

Nightmist · 4 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This report on Excite News reveals that the marketers of at least one unlikely product have recognized the extraordinary amount of shopping men now do for households in the U.S. Believe it or not, feminine hygiene products manufacturers are now trying to find ways to market those products to men, because they've discovered that many men are taking over the family shopping. The article, unfortunately, paints the picture of men as inept and "floundering," though.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/02/2147218.shtml

Adult Male Suicide Prevention Initiative in Australia

Scott · 4 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Australia's The Age reports here that a dialogue has begun on the need for prevention programs for adult men, who commit suicide at much higher rates than boys. The biggest event linked to older men taking their own life is a divorce, especially when they lose contact with their children. The article is very well balanced and raises a number of important points. Among them is the implication that advocating for men's contact with children after divorce could be part of a prevention program. Source: The Age [Australian newspaper]

Title: When love fails

Author: Bettina Arndt

Date: August 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/04/1240245.shtml

Child Support Panel Ejects Baskerville

Scott · 4 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Virginia's war on fathers is getting some media attention for dumping the outspoken non-custodial father on its child-support review panel." The "outspoken" man was none other than Prof. Stephen Baskerville, one of the most articulate advocates for father's rights I know of. The Washington Times article can be read here.Source: The Washington Times [newspaper]

Title: Professor ousted from child-support panel

Author: Daniel F. Drummond

Date: August 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/04/1245252.shtml

Battered Men Featured on Radio Program

Scott · 4 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The WHYY FM station in Pennsylvania ran an on-air feature about male victims of domestic violence. The program was very high quality and sympathetic to battered men, and can be listened to on-line with RealAudio at this link. The fact that this radio program went on with so few detractors (there was only one negative caller, a woman who obviously had an axe to grind) is incredibly encouraging.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/04/1848210.shtml

Petition to End Paternity Fraud

Scott · 5 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC sent in this link to an on-line petition to stop paternity fraud - when men are deceived into having children against their will. The petition is from the PaternityFraud.com site run by Carnell Smith, so you can be sure he's going to follow through with it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/04/1948226.shtml

Widows Sue for Value of Husbands' Housework

Scott · 5 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Sydney Morning Herald printed this story about a group of widowed women who sued their deceased husbands' employer for a monetary value of the housework that the men would have done in retirement. The men had died prematurely due to asbestos exposure. One would think that if a group of men had sued because of their wives' premature death for the value of their "housework," society would see this as treating women as property and house servants. But when women exploit the deaths of their husbands, no commentary on the degrading nature of the lawsuit is mentioned. Source: The Sydney Morning Herald [Australian newspaper]

Title: The value of men's housework

Author: Unknown (AAP story)

Date: August 2, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/05/1335203.shtml

Perceiving Boys as Weak

Scott · 5 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC pointed me to this Washington Times op-ed printed today, which questions the recent inquiries into "male fragility" as reported on by U.S. News and World Report, among others. The essay points out that these days any form of masculine behavior is seen as a pathology, and that it's not boys that are "sick," but our culture which continually demonizes men.Source: The Washington Times

Title: . . . the perception of boys does the same

Author: Unknown

Date: August 5, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/05/193224.shtml

Southern Illinois Men's Gymnastics Reunited After Title IX Squelching

Nightmist · 6 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News not only reveals the surprising fact that men's gymnastics is the most successful sport ever on Southern Illinois University's campus, but also details the bittersweet tale of a reunion of the athletes who did the university so proud before Title IX destroyed the program more than 10 years ago. Mitchell is still baffled by the administration's questionable decision for a sport that costs little to run. "It was a dynasty." Mitchell said. "When you have a dynasty, it's unfortunate that the administration could not see the light.".

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/05/2347256.shtml

Providing Alternatives to Divorce

Scott · 6 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Fortune from Domestic Solutions of New Hampshire, a consumer protection and advocacy group for people seeking solutions to relationship issues, is working on a project to get legislation passed in NH that would give people alternatives to divorce, particularly if they have young children. The idea is to refer couples to a form of relationship therapy friendly to both men and women, which is based on the work of Dr. Harville Hendrix (see this site for more info). The idea has received attention from UNH's Family Research Laboratory, which would be willing to study the effectiveness of the program if funding can be obtained. Bill is very interested in your input, and I'd encourage you to contact him if you have further questions. By clicking Read More below, you can view excerpts from a letter he wrote to President George Bush. Bill's e-mail is: indust.consult@rcn.com.We all know the problems of the last Century; broken homes, abandoned children, billions spent on studies to determine the cause of the problems and failed social programs, etc. etc., including many proposed solutions.

I have spent many years reviewing the present methods used that try and effect "solutions." These years of investigation and feedback, enable me to say that The Institute for Imago Relationship Therapy has developed the best and most comprehensive methods to resolve the root causes of even relationships in deep conflict. Their methods are a compilation of the best methods of others, and in addition to their own methods, make a quantum leap. . Highlights include; relationships can and should be used to resolve even serious issues, "do it yourself" workbooks and tapes available, people should go forward from where they are and bring about changes, people help themselves as they help another, deals with causes not the symptoms, and expands on marriage enrichment. When people resolve their issues, we know that social ills are greatly reduced.

In marriage, where conflicts are resolved, children grow in healthy, nurturing homes that in turn grow to be healthy, nurturing adults.

Our vision is to introduce and implement these methods along with several other complementary methods. Preliminary experience indicates that just the knowledge and availability of the methods motivates many people to work at resolving their relationship issues. To the extent that people "work out" their own problems, government expenditures are reduced.
The goal is to make the public aware of the theory and install programs statewide, whereby they can be introduced when the state is summoned to be involved; reduce burden upon the taxpayer. This may sound like an insurmountable project. In my experience, I have been told that several times before. Consequently, I have several successes to my credit, while I have gained the respect of my naysayers.

Dr. Murray Straus of the University of New Hampshire's Family Research Lab. has expressed an interest in assisting in the implementation and tracking the success of the program.

As far as I'm concerned this a life and death struggle. Not only does defective relationships cause many of our social ills, they also cause an early death. This is an opportunity for New Hampshire to be a shining star in the center of New England. I am certain that we New Hampshire folks haven't lost our Yankee Ingenuity spirit and I trust the people of New Hampshire to again demonstrate our leadership.

I beg you to assist Domestic Solutions of NH in obtaining seed funding, identifying funding sources and promote our common goals. You are the first president of this new century and this is a great opportunity to start this Century with, as Dr. Laura might say, a new attitude. Your Stature and the Weight of Your Office is needed to overcome the resistance of the divorce industry.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/05/0157232.shtml

Couple Falsely Accused of Rape Wins Huge Judgement

Nightmist · 6 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A Washington couple falsely accused of raping a child has won a large judgement, according to the story in the Washington Times. Just as important, though, are the remarks their attorney makes about how easy it is for a case like theirs to get so far in the justice system. "There is no doubt that child sex abuse happens, and it is tragic," said John Stocks, an attorney who represented the Simses and three other defendants during the trial. "It is also tragic that people can be falsely accused of crimes and to go that far in the system without the checks and balances ferreting them out."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/06/008215.shtml

Troubled Youth Becomes Rhodes Scholar, Helps Other Youths

Nightmist · 7 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in Christian Science Monitor tells the tale of a young man whose mother, exasperated with his poor grades and knack for getting in trouble, finally sent him to a private military school. After running away five times (in four days), the youth realized the hardships his mother was facing to put him through school and buckled down. He is now a Rhodes scholar and has developed a program he calls STAND (Students Taking A New Direction). The program teams other troubled youths with college students for tutoring and mentoring. For all the trouble young men are experiencing in education these days, it's good to see a story turn out like this.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/07/032215.shtml

Feminists, Adultery, and the Destruction of Marriage

Nightmist · 7 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy's weekly Fox News column explores why feminists are silent about adultery in the case of Gary Condit (and Bill Clinton) when they are so vocal about every other ill they often associate with marriage. McElroy rightly condemns "gender feminists" for their hostility toward marriage as patriarchal oppression, and offers some excerpts from said feminists' writings about adultery. Given the unsophisticated level of commentary offered by the leading feminist periodical is it any wonder that NOW has nothing useful to say about Condit's conduct? The gamut of the Ms.-advice on adultery runs from "accept it" to "get busy," from "I don't know" to sexual mutilation. Indeed, one feminist threatens to "hack off" her husband's penis if she caught him committing adultery.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/07/0515256.shtml

What Really Did Happen to Stephen Baskerville?

Adam · 7 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Speaking of Stephen Baskerville, the Alliance for Non-Custodial Parent's Rights has got their hands on the the full story of what really happened, with all the correspondence involved, so click on all the links to discover the full story. Seeing as how this has national attention, I would advise you to read up on their talking points before responding.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/06/215224.shtml

The ADHD/ADD Debate Continues

Adam · 7 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article is a must read for those of you who are trying to make sense of the whole ADHD/ADD debate and try to answer that question of "does it exist?" Geoff Metcalf interviews psychiatry-abuse crusader Don Pierson to get the full lowdown on the facts you won't hear in the media, such as the fact that we could easily have another Thalidomide incident on our hands. I'll leave you with this quote from the National Institute of Health in 1998 "We don?t have an independent valid test for ADHD. There are no data to indicate that ADHD is due to a brain malfunction. Existing studies come to conflicting conclusions as to whether use of psycho-stimulants increases or decreases the risk of abuse and, finally, after years of research and experience with ADHD, our knowledge about the cause or causes of ADHD remains speculative."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/06/2057206.shtml

Cloning Experts Gather For Talks

Nightmist · 8 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Fox News details some of the debate surrounding current talks about human cloning, an act the U.S. House of Representatives has already voted to ban. Although this story doesn't say so, the technique used to clone humans is strikingly similar to the technique recently used by an Australian researcher to develop mouse embryos without sperm. The greatest difference is that the somatic cells in the Australian experiment came from two different adults. The HR bill specifically bans the reproduction of humans via somatic cell transfer, which means the Australian research, though not technically "cloning," is included in the ban. The Fox News article also describes some interesting biological problems with somatic cell transfer, including the production of a more rapidly aging animal.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/07/1712206.shtml

We're Back!

Scott · 9 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Well, we're back... I'll be glad to post a summary of what has gone on, but due to the server's problems we've had these past couple of days, I'm very far behind in my work right now. Those of you that are observant, you'll notice the server is running on port 81, and the domain www.mensactivism.org is automagically translated into mensactivism.org:81. The bottom line is, we're back up and running.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/09/177200.shtml

Title IX Destroys More Men's Gymnastics Programs

Nightmist · 9 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The reduction of 200 collegiate men's gymnastics programs to 21 since the introduction of Title IX is a major topic at this year's U.S. Gymnastics Championship, according to this article on Excite News. The article goes so far as to describe it as "an epidemic." Some colleges are trying harder to equalize things, though. "We've added five women's sports so we don't have to cut any men's sports," said Miles Avery, the head coach at Ohio State, which won the NCAA championship this spring. "Every athletic department can't do that, but that is the way it was intended. To add opportunities for women, not curtail opportunities for men."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/09/1643225.shtml

Jews Threaten To Quit Military Units If Forced to Serve With Women

Nightmist · 9 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News reveals that some Orthodox Jewish rabbis in Jerusalem are threatening to instruct male observant Jews in the Israeli army not to serve in fighting units if the military continues to use women in combat roles. Orthodox soldiers have been complaining about serving with women because Jewish law "prohibits contact between men and women who are not married or related." The observant soldiers, who also make up a small part of the army, say they encounter women through work in cramped tanks, physical training exercises and sleeping in mixed quarters.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/09/170253.shtml

Russian First Wives Want Laws To Enact Alimony

Nightmist · 10 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in the Financial Times explains how some first wives of rich Russians are attempting to change divorce laws so that their former husbands must continue to support them after divorce. The women claim that their rich husbands' dumping of them for younger women "is a social problem" and that legislation must be enacted to deal with it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/09/1845217.shtml

Prosecutors Seek Death Penalty for Yates

Nightmist · 10 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Although the Men's Activism News Network is attempting to restrain from posting too many Andrea Yates stories (Texas mother who drowned her five children), the latest news in this case is too important to the men's movement not to post. According to this AP story on Excite News, prosecutors in the Yates case will, indeed, seek the death penalty. Whether you are pro- or anti-death penalty, this news is important because it demonstrates that these Texas prosecutors are willing to pursue sentencing for a woman just the same as they would a man.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/10/157210.shtml

"Deadbeat Dads" Myth Gets a Good Debunking

Nightmist · 10 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Men who don't pay child support are neglectful and irresponsible, right? Right? Not necessarily so, according to this article on Salon.com. Specifically, this article deals with the problems generated by the perception that low-income black fathers "don't care about their children," and reveals that other circumstances often contribute to the non-payment of child support. Unfortunately, the author's article does claim that Men, women, liberals and conservatives all feel fairly comfortable in reviling deadbeat dads. I think "all" is too general a term here. Anyone else?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/09/1853205.shtml

Judge Sentences Man He Believes is Innocent

Scott · 10 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ched sent in this story from the Boston Globe about a man who was found guilty for armed assault with intent to murder and armed robbery, but the judge apparently disagreed with the jury's decision and has pretty much openly stated that he feels he is sentencing an innocent man: "This is the most difficult moment I have been faced with during my legal career," [Judge] Murphy said. "I am mindful of the possibility that I am sending an innocent man to jail.'"' The man was sentenced to up to 20 years in prison. The question is: why???Source: The Boston Globe

Title: Judge sentences man even though he doubts his guilt

Author: Unknown (AP story)

Date: August 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/10/1640240.shtml

Sugar And Spice And Everything Nice? Not Likely.

Nightmist · 10 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Fox News reports on a growing trend of violent offenses by young women and girls. Several reasons have been given for this turn of events, the most reasonable being that law enforcement is now more willing to arrest females and the most outlandish being that it's the result of women caving to the social priorities of "The Patriarchy." Notably, feminism is also blamed for "teaching girls to behave like boys rather than teaching boys to behave like girls." I remember my young female cousin once pulling my hair because she thought I was sitting too close to the television. She was far too young for feminism. Perhaps girls are simply violent by nature as well?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/09/2132204.shtml

Family Court Judge Named in Corruption Lawsuit

Scott · 11 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Dr. Chuck Corry forwarded me the following press release: "Colorado Springs, Co. - State District Judge Thomas L. Kennedy was named as a defendant in a $36 million lawsuit filed this day in Colorado Springs, Co. The lawsuit is asking for the disbarrment and the removal of Judge Kennedy for Fraud and Conspiracy to Commit Fraud. Plaintiff, Michael Sandifer, a "Father For Equal Rights" advocate called the Family Court System of Colorado "a cess pool of graft and corruption." Other named defendants are: Robert J. Frank, partner in the law firm of Tegtmeier, Frank & Jones, Virginia Etheridge, a Colorado Springs attorney, Connie W. Frhoring, former President of the Colorado Childs Play Therapy Association, and 5 other defendants. For further information contact Chuck Hansen at (719) 748-9058." Legal action is often a path to quick social change. It will be interesting to see if this case is heard and its outcome.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/10/2338207.shtml

The Plight of Divorced and Separated Fathers

Scott · 12 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham writes " A lot of the material written about the plight of divorced and separated fathers is written from a very conservative outlook. This, I believe, helps to limit the appeal of their plight to a narrow audience. Michael Green in his book, Fathers After Divorce and his web site of the same name presents an alternative vision, and in doing so presents their plight in such a way as to appeal to a wider audience. I heartedly recommend his book and site."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/12/1339232.shtml

US News & World Report Gives Half-Truths on Domestic Violence

Scott · 13 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "You'd think US News & World Report would be a little more gender-aware after John Leo's coverage of femi-fury at UCLA a few months ago. Not so. This short US News article says one in five girls report violence in relationships, then goes on to tell the usual one-sided story. Not a single word about male victims. Please write to the editor at letters@usnews.com. I'll post the outcomes when they print."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/13/1247222.shtml

Judge Kennedy Threatens Sandifer Over Corruption Lawsuit

Scott · 13 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This news just in, again from Dr. Chuck Corry: "State District Judge Thomas L. Kennedy, angered over being named a defendant in a $36 million corruption lawsuit, has threatened to arrest the Plaintiff, Father's Rights Advocate, Michael Sandifer, and hold him without bail. "No bail" is used only for the most serious capital crimes. Upon learning of the threat, the plaintiff, Father's Rights Advocate, Michael Sandifer replied, " I am taking this threat very seriously. It's hard to believe such an extraordinary abuse of Judicial power could happen in America." For further information contact Chuck Hansen @ (719) 748-9058."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/13/175257.shtml

First World Congress on Men's Health

Scott · 13 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ed Bartlett from the Men's Health America list writes "Men's health is going international! The preliminary program of the First World Congress on Men's Health, to be held in Vienna on Nov 2-4, 2001, is now available at this site."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/13/179236.shtml

How To Avoid Violent Women

Nightmist · 14 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Times, a UK newspaper, posted this review of a new book which purports to teach men how to avoid getting involved with potentially violent women. The book's author is none other than Erin Pizzey, the founder of Britain's first refuge for battered women. The fact that this person wrote a book about this particular subject offers hope to men everywhere that the problem of domestic violence against men is going to finally see mainstream light.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/13/1843224.shtml

Making it OK to be Male

Scott · 14 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham writes "It is necessary for our culture to repudiate the deficit perspective on what it means to be male. Boys and men are not deficient simply by being male. Unless we address this negative understanding of the value of men and boys, which is largely accepted by our society, we cannot make inroads into reducing the high rates of suicide among men and boys. The following PDF document is a good attempt to promote a positive approach to the health and well-being of boys and men."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/14/030254.shtml

Men, Are You Headed for Divorce?

Scott · 14 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal wrote a great editorial for Lew Rockwell.com. In it, he explains that men need to become aware of the high incidence of divorce which often is initiated by women, and to take steps to avoid it (divorce or marriage). The article begins, "Would you take action if you learned you might lose the use of your legs within seven years? Well, the odds on your being divorced are much, much higher; and it can cripple you almost as badly."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/14/1713201.shtml

Not All Fathers Are Child Molesters

Nightmist · 14 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In 1971, the radical gender feminists developed a new theory about "The Patriarchy." They claimed that most fathers molest their daughters, "priming" them for wife and motherhood. Wendy McElroy in this column on Fox News puts the math to the myth.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/14/039221.shtml

Divorced Dad Barred from Implanting Frozen Embryos

Scott · 15 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

cheddah writes "The New Jersey Supreme Court today barred a divorced father from having frozen embryos implanted in another woman, which would make his ex-wife a mother against her will." The article is here from the Boston Globe. The argument here is clear: women cannot be forced into unwanted parenthood. Now how about the same thing for men?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/14/1716213.shtml

Lessing Decries Male Bashing by Feminists

Scott · 15 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Doris Lessing, a well known feminist novelist, has recently spoken out about the needless and vicious male bashing that feminists keep promoting, according to this UK Guardian article. Lessing is quoted as saying, "It is time we began to ask who are these women who continually rubbish men. The most stupid, ill-educated and nasty woman can rubbish the nicest, kindest and most intelligent man and no one protests. Men seem to be so cowed that they can't fight back, and it is time they did."
Source: The Guardian [UK newspaper]

Title: Lay off men, Lessing tells feminists

Author: Fiachra Gibbons

Date: August 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/15/0026237.shtml

Men's Hour Program No. 4

Scott · 15 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The latest episode of The Men's Hour, an internet radio program about men's rights, has been released on the web. Listen to it in Windows Media or RealAudio format at this page. Program 4 includes interviews with Maurice Elfeke about a hunger strike in Berlin, Michael Joiner, who did a hunger striker in Tennessee, and Trudy Schuett, author of the DesertLight Journal, and much more.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/15/1637236.shtml

MANN Chat: Using Technology to Advance the Men's Movement

Scott · 15 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This week's chat is on the topic of making use of technology, particularly the internet, to promote men's rights and organize the men's movement. Some people have noted that in recent years the men's movement has made more progress than ever before, and that this has corresponded directly with the rise of the internet. With the ability to find people with similar views and experiences only a search engine away, the 'net and other technologies are empowering men's activists in ways that were never before possible. What can we do to help this process along? Click here starting at 9:30 PM Eastern Time tonight and join our discussion!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/15/1644205.shtml

The Last Time She Hit a Man

Nightmist · 15 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This commentary on responsibleOpposing.com is one woman's story about the last time she ever hit her husband. She makes the important point that it didn't really matter whether she physically injured him when she hit him, the problem is that she hit him at all. It's always good to see someone awaken like this, although it is unfortunate that her husband had to be abused before it happened.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/15/1712254.shtml

De Coster Thinks Women Are "Higher Mortal Beings"

Adam · 16 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Yes, you did read that title right - during a book review of The War Against Boys she says " A boy becomes a man by gaining strength, courage and chivalry. He is taught to respect females as a higher category of mortal being." Here is the book review I'm referring to. Her e-mail is austrian-accountant@home.com. Please kindly remind her that respect is a thing of individual merit which is earned, among other things. Be firm but fair in your replies.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/15/2318220.shtml

Man Leaves Prison After 13 Years for False Rape Conviction

Scott · 16 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

cheddah submitted this article from the Boston Globe. Yet another man has been freed from prison based on rape charges that DNA evidence has vindicated him from. 13 years of Angel Hernandez's life was wasted in prison. "Hernandez, who maintained his innocence throughout his incarceration, said he forgives the state. He said he planned to spend time with his family."
Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: DNA evidence clears man of crime after 13 years in prison

Author: Unknown [AP article]

Date: August 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/16/1812208.shtml

Gay Men's Health Issues Go Beyond HIV

Scott · 16 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

From the Men's Health America list I found this New York Times article (free registration required). It's about the need for health education for gay men that goes beyond HIV and AIDS, which aren't the only health issues gay men face. The article discusses other STDs, prostate cancer, and problems many gay men face that are just as important to them as for heterosexuals.Source: The New York Times [newspaper]

Title: For Gay Men, Health Care Concerns Move Beyond the Threat of AIDS

Author: David Tuller

Date: August 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/15/1613216.shtml

Help a Student Speak Out About Misinformation

Scott · 17 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neuticle writes "I go back to college in a couple of weeks, and I remember that at the annual activities fair there has always been a "feminist" booth. Now this booth was distributing a ton of the usual "Ms"-information about rape, discrimination and wage gap. This year, I want to put up my own booth, with statistics and facts that present a different story, information that shows why the other statistics are flawed, as well as examples of the discrimination against men (No reproductive choice, draft etc.)
Since I attend a very academically rigorous (and PC) institution, I know that I will need to document good sources that I can cite to defend against the expected backlash. I have some info, but it has been scattered, and this is a big project: I'm asking for help researching this.
I plan on publishing the finished compilation on my web site unless someone already has (which would be great)."
Please post any ideas you have in the comments section of this article - I hope Neuticle will also post his e-mail address there too!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/16/2151205.shtml

"Justice Files" Examines DNA Exonerations

Nightmist · 17 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This episode of Justice Files on the Discovery Channel Thursday night explored the use of DNA as a tool to both exonerate innocent men and identify the guilty. There were a couple of stories about innocent men who spent years behind bars, and who (only by the grace of elected officials) were allowed to use DNA testing to prove their innocence after conviction. I cannot find a repeat of this episode on the Discovery Channel Web site anywhere, but if anyone knows when it will air again, please inform us. The title of Thursday's program was "DNA On Trial."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/17/0450219.shtml

A Double Standard?

Scott · 17 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Chris Lee sent me this article from the Jerusalem Post. The article describes how a woman while waiting at an airport went into the parking garage, stripped off her clothes, and propositioned men for sex (not as a prostitute, but for "fun", I guess). The police found her and simply told the woman to behave "properly" in the future and set her free. Here's an exercise in thought: what do you think would have happened if a man did this? Source: The Jersalem Post [Israel newspaper]

Title: Ben-Gurion's bare naked lady

Author: Unknown

Date: August 15, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/17/1414212.shtml

Sandifer/Judge Kennedy Update

Scott · 17 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Here's an update we received by e-mail about Michael Sandifer: "Six days after being named a defendant in a $36 million lawsuit, [Colorado] State District Judge Thomas L. Kennedy had the Plaintiff, Father's Rights Advocate, Michael Sandifer jailed. Sandifer spent 6 hours in the Criminal Justice Center of El Paso County before being released on bail. Sandifer has responded by saying: "I will be formally notifying State Attorney General, Ken Salazar, of my intention to bring civil action against the State of Colorado in Federal District Court under the Racketeering and Corrupt Practice Act. The lawsuit will seek class action status and be asking for damages in the amount of $ 1 Billion. For further information contact Chuck Hansen @ (719) 748-9058"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/17/1740212.shtml

MANN Feature: Inequality in Sentencing

Scott · 17 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Our latest feature article was written by Marc Angelucci and is on the double standards of justice America has for male and female criminals. Are women really treated more leniently than men for the same crime? If so, how does it compare to racial differences in sentencing? Read on for a superb eye-opening article that was so thoroughly researched that Marc also got it published in the Los Angeles Daily Journal, a reputable legal newspaper.

Males Get Longer Sentences than Females for Same Crime

Originally printed in: Los Angeles Daily Journal

August 1, 2001

Author: Marc Angelucci, Angelucci2000@alumni.law.ucla.edu

When Etta Ann Urdiales was murdered in Colorado, two completely different juries convicted two different people of the crime. Both juries believed there was only one murderer. One convicted Bobbie Hogan, a woman. The other convicted Jess Jacobs, a man. She got 10 years in prison. He was put to death.

This case is just one example of the discrimination men face in criminal courts throughout the United States.

According to Pradeep Ramanathan, vice president of the National Coalition of Free Men (NCFM), a volunteer, non-profit organization that has explored and addressed men's issues since 1976, "All the research clearly demonstrates that gender is the most significant biasing factor in determining whether or not someone will be charged, prosecuted, indicted and sentenced, as well as determining the severity of the sentence."

And Ramanathan is right.

Department of Justice figures show that being male increases a murderer's chance of receiving a death sentence by more than 20 times. And the data repeatedly confirms that men receive higher sentences than women for the exact same crime.

One study, published in Justice Quarterly in 1986, examined 181,197 felonies in California and found that, for the same crime, being male increased the chance of incarceration by 165 percent. Being black, in comparison, increased the chance of incarceration by 19 percent.

Another study, published in Crime & Delinquency in 1989, examined non-accomplice crimes and factored together the number of charges, convicted offenses, prior felony convictions, as well as the race, age, work history and family situation of the accused and found that "gender differences, favoring women, are more often found than race differences, favoring whites."

In yet another study, published in the International Journal of the Sociology of Law, researchers Mathew Zingraff and Randall Thomson found that being male increases sentence lengths more than any other discriminatory variable.

The bias applies to victims as well as the accused. When Edward Glaeser of Harvard University and Bruce Sacerdote of Dartmouth College examined 2,800 homicide cases randomly drawn from 33 urban counties by the Bureau of Justice Statistics, they found that killing a female instead of a male increased sentences by 40.6 percent. Killing a white instead of a black, in comparison, increased sentences by 26.8 percent.

Even when the exact same type of crime is accounted for, the disparities still persist. For example, a drunk driver who kills a black male receives an average sentence of two years. A drunk driver who kills a white male, four years. A drunk driver who kills a white female, six years.

To those who recognize the problem, gender stereotypes are a major culprit. In a 1991 NCFM report titled "Gender and Injustice," researchers John Ryan and Ian Wilson suggest the problem stems from stereotypes about women being more innocent, more reformable and less dangerous than men. Barbara Swartz, former Director of New York's Women's Prison Project, called it the "chivalry factor" and says, "If there were more women judges, more women would go to jail."

Others attribute the problem to the devaluing of male lives.

But addressing the causes does little good when the public does not even recognize the problem. One reason that we don't is that the task forces that we appoint to investigate the problem are just as biased as the legal system that they are supposed to monitor, so a full picture of the bias never gets drawn.

In 1980, the National Organization for Women and the National Association of Women Judges formed the National Judicial Education Program to Promote Equality for Women and Men in the Courts (NJEP). In 1986, they wrote "Operating a Task Force on Gender Bias in the Courts: A Manual for Action," which became the manual used by gender bias task forces nationwide. The manual opens by stating that gender bias operates more frequently against women and that it is not a contradiction for task forces to focus primarily on bias against women in courts.

As one might guess, this is exactly what the task forces do.

"None of (the commissions) study bias against men," said Ramanathan.

For example, even though men are more likely to get prison and women to get probation for the same crime, a New York task force claimed that it is women who were discriminated against because - get this - they receive longer probation periods.

One commission recently justified giving women shorter sentences because women are often custodial parents. But the sentencing disparities persisted in the above studies that took family situations are accounted for. So even if custodial parenthood justifies a shorter sentence, courts are giving men longer sentences than women even when neither (or both) are custodial parents. Needless to say, when a father commits a crime, the courts have no trouble calling him an unfit parent and removing him from his kids.

The gender bias in our courts and in our gender bias task forces is not just an injustice to the victims; it is a tragic betrayal of public trust. In fact, as embarrassing as it sounds, we may need to create task forces to investigate the gender bias of the task forces that we created to investigate gender bias in the first place.

Marc Angelucci is a public interest attorney in Los Angeles and the local representative of the National Coalition of Free Men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/17/1719221.shtml

"Mankind Conference" Scheduled for Sept. 15

Nightmist · 18 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Fathers are being driven out of the family--effectively disenfranchised from society--but no one knows. Those are the introductory words on this Web site, which is promoting the Mankind Conference 2001, to be held Sept. 15, 10 a.m.-9 p.m., at The Friends House, Euston Rd., London. Opposite Euston Station. I'm in the U.S. and won't be able to attend, but I encourage anyone interested in fathers' rights to get involved. The ultimate goal of this conference is to make family courts public, because The process of smearing is now second nature in the media and in the secret family courts. It makes for fabulous headlines but when the cases fall flat the public is never told.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/17/1540256.shtml

FHM Named Fastest Growing Magazine

Nightmist · 18 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Offering proof that men everywhere are finally demanding something of their own in a world rife with periodicals and entertainment geared almost exclusively to women, this story on Excite News reports that FHM has not only become the fastest growing men's magazine in the world, but is also now the fastest growing magazine of any category in the United States. May the advertising and entertainment industries take note. If men once again become a consumer powerhouse, we're likely to see less male bashing as advertisers attempt to cater to men and women equally.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/18/1749250.shtml

Mustard Gas May Cause Testicular Damage, Infertility

Nightmist · 18 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

As if the military doesn't already screw men over with the draft, now some scientists are claiming that mustard gas, a common biological weapon used in warfare since World War I, causes testicular damage and infertility in men. It was intended to attack the respiratory system, skin, and eyes. So not only have governments forced young men who weren't willing to give their lives into service, but they've also destroyed the survivors' chances of carrying on future generations.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/18/1758220.shtml

Study Blames Male Behavior For Increased Female HIV Risk

Nightmist · 19 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This report on Excite News attempts to remove responsibility for a woman's own sexual choices and place them squarely on the shoulders of her male partners. Men who are bisexual and who do not use protection, the study claims, are directly responsible for an increase in HIV among women. Their solution is to include men in education about condom use. I, for one, had no idea we were being excluded.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/18/185228.shtml

Discrimination Laws Intended To Protect Both Sexes: Court

Nightmist · 19 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The 8th U.S. Court of Appeals has overturned another court's acceptance of the University of Minnesota's appeal of a sexual discrimination lawsuit filed by a male professor, according to this story on Excite News. Amazingly, one of the university's arguments was that anti-discrimination laws were intended to protect women only! The male professor filed the lawsuit as a result of women-only pay increases after a 1989 sexual discrimination lawsuit settlement. In response to the University's second argument, the appeals court ruled both men and women are protected under sexual discrimination laws. Update: You may e-mail the university's Board of Regents here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/18/1852217.shtml

NOW Promoting More Gender "Hate Crime" Laws

Scott · 19 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "As if all crimes aren't hate crimes... now we need additional laws to further oppress and strip people of their constitutional rights to appease the radical left. Oppose further dilution of due process and liberty! Be aware of laws like this that pass without opposition!" The link to the story is here. What I'd be curious about is if this law specifically protects women and not men. Certainly, even if it is egalitarian, it will most likely be interpreted in a biased way against men by the courts.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/19/1432244.shtml

Court Affirms U. Texas Sex Harassment Lawsuit

Nightmist · 19 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A federal appeals court last week affirmed that the University of Texas failed to take proper action when a male faculty member claimed he was being sexually harassed by a male superior. This story on Excite News details that the man's case was the first to take advantage of the 1998 Supreme Court ruling which established that sexual harassment could take place between members of the same sex.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/18/191235.shtml

Turning a Blind Eye to the Problems of Boys

Scott · 20 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A really passionate article was written on the problems that boys face in the UK Times. While the author writes with a great deal of despair, he accurately describes the many problems that have put boys these days in crisis: suicide, fatherlessness, repression of boys' physical exuberance, etc. Perhaps the article will act as a wake up call to those who claim to care about boys' needs but have taken no action on their behalf as of yet. We can't continue to let things continue this way. The article can be read at this link.Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: Who'd be a boy?

Author: Richard Morrison

Date: August 15, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/19/163236.shtml

L.A. Times: Dads Aren't Needed

Scott · 20 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The L.A. Times printed this article today, titled "Moms Are Enough," which essentially says that the success of lesbian parents means dads are not really needed. It's interesting how the author doesn't mention the flipside: the success of gay male parents would mean moms aren't needed. The author also conflates all father's activists with traditional family supporters, which not all of us are. We're just sick and tired of seeing courts blocking fathers from being with their kids. I wrote to them. You can too at letters@latimes.com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/20/1136249.shtml

Coach Opposed To Title IX Under Scrutiny

Nightmist · 20 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News reports on a Minnesota wrestling coach who is under scrutiny for "misuse of resources" after he developed a program to fight the gender equity problems caused by Title IX. The coach had managed to gather support and funding from several people and schools before being accused of using school property for personal work.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/20/175238.shtml

UK Protects Female Infants Against Circumcision

Nightmist · 20 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News details new UK guidelines for doctors who are being told they must stop parents from having their female children circumcised. There is no mention of male circumcision anywhere in the story, although male circumcision is obviously more widespread (and, as obviously, more widely accepted). I've always found it interesting that women refer to female circumcision as "genital mutilation" and male circumcision as a "medical procedure."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/20/2117256.shtml

Tyson Won't Be Prosecuted For Alleged Rape

Nightmist · 21 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Considering the controversy over boxer Mike Tyson's original conviction of rape in the early 1990s (according to polls I recall from those times, males generally perceived the conviction as a bum rap, females perceived it as justice being served), I thought this story on Excite News was appropriate. A 50-year-old woman recently charged that Tyson raped her while training for an upcoming bout. Prosecutors say there is not enough evidence linking Tyson to the reported crime, and they do not expect things to change, but they're not considering the case closed.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/20/2239245.shtml

Paying Women To Marry

Nightmist · 21 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on knoxstudio.com describes how a Bush aide wants to "run with the idea" of paying women an "extra $100 per month" if they marry the fathers of their children. This seems like a desperate attempt to keep the traditional family together, and in the long run it may hurt more than it helps. "Mommy, do you love Daddy?" "No, honey, I'm just in it for the money. Someday YOU can use a man for some extra cash!" Society would be better served by allowing people to remain independent of marriage while supporting fathers in their attempts to be a larger part of their children's lives.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/21/0125210.shtml

Kathleen Parker Comments On The Yates Case

Adam · 21 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I know we're not supposed to keep posting articles on Andrea Yates, but this one was far too interesting to pass up. In her latest article Kathleen Parker defends not giving the death penalty to Andrea Yates on the grounds that she was insane (I'm sure we can find a fair few men who got the death penalty for that) she says the tired old line that women do most of the childcare as a seemingly subjective defence, overlooking a father's socializing influence (see here for more info) and his economic contributions to name a few of several factors. However, things get interesting when it's divided down gender lines, I won't spoil it here, but I think most men's activists can spot what's happening.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/21/024250.shtml

Is Sexual Harassment Policy Driving Up College Tuition?

Nightmist · 22 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy examines the other costs of extremist sexual harassment policies on college campuses these days: a rise in tuition. McElroy uses several cases as examples, including one in which California State University at Fullerton was ordered to pay $75,000 to a student whom they basically told to "keep off the grass." The student claimed she was reprimanded because she was female. CSUF is just one school. Sexual harassment policies, procedures, complaints, and lawsuits are ongoing at virtually every university and college in America. No figure exists on how much money harassment suits have collectively cost academia within the last twelve months. Nor is there an estimate on how much tuitions have risen in response.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/21/1611210.shtml

Los Angeles Daily News Addresses Male Victims!

Nightmist · 22 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The Los Angeles Daily News, which is the biggest competitor of the Los Angeles Times, printed an opinion piece by Glenn Sacks addressing the discrimination that male victims of domestic violence face throughout the County of Los Angeles. It mentions the data, the discrimination, just about everything that can be put in a short opinion piece." This is one of the best examples of careful accuracy and concision in newspaper commentary on these subjects I've seen in a while.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/21/1948219.shtml

MANN Chat: The Good That Men Do

Nightmist · 22 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tonight's chat will be guest moderated by Steve Imparl, who also picked tonight's topic. Steve writes: In William Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, Anthony declares that the good that men do "is oft interred with their bones." Is this really true? Do our good works live on in our children, our creations, and our interactions with others? Do our good deeds have great value to all of us today and tomorrow? What good deeds are characteristically male actions? This week's chat topic is "The Good that Men Do." We will explore those special things that men offer the world, list them, and consider how to use them in men's activism. The chat begins at 9:30 p.m. ET and may be accessed here. Click "Read More" below for the complete details.

Men's Activism News Network--Chat Tonight

The Men's Activism News Network, www.mensactivism.org, would like to announce the topic for its weekly on-line chat tonight.

The Good that Men Do

In William Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, Anthony declares that the good that men do "is oft interred with their bones." Is this really true? Do our good works live on in our children, our creations, and our interactions with others? Do our good deeds have great value to all of us today and tomorrow? What good deeds are characteristically male actions?

This week's chat topic is "The Good that Men Do." We will explore those special things that men offer the world, list them, and consider how to use them in men's activism. Please join us for a lively discussion.

HOW TO JOIN OUR CHAT: Just go to the following web page: http://www.mensactivism.org/chat.shtml at 9:30 PM Eastern Time tonight, and use the Java applet to join the chat - it's simple! Also note that our discussions these past few weeks have lasted well after 11 PM Eastern Time, so if you can't make it at 9:30, feel free to drop by later.

The Men's Activism News Network - Tracking men's rights news from around the globe! Fostering men's activism for the sake of improving men's lives.

See you there!

The Mensactivism.org Admin Team

admin@mensactivism.org

http://www.mensactivism.org

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/22/004224.shtml

The Reintroduction of Fatherhood

Nightmist · 22 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham writes " Being an active and involved father does make a difference. I am very thankful that now, compared to when I was a child, more fathers want to be actively involved with their children. But does that mean that fathers are simply male mothers? Do they have a distinctive contribution to make? Just as mothers have a distinctive contribution to make. The following is a good attempt to explore this important domain." Interestingly, this report does try to strike a balance between fathers sharing motherhood roles and making their own father-specific contributions as well.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/21/1642250.shtml

Judge: Father Must Allow Boy to Stay Overnight With Mother in Prison

Nightmist · 22 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

cheddah writes "Risking contempt-of-court charges that could land him in jail, a father is refusing to let his 6-year-old son spend the night in prison with the boy's mother, a convicted killer." Unfortunately, the father agreed to visitation terms upon their divorce which allow the mother to have the children from Friday through Saturday. It is notable, however, that the mother is not asking the prison to change its rules to comply with the divorce decree for her 11-year-old son as well. Children do not belong in adult prisons. The story is here.Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: Boy, 6, is ordered to stay overnight with mother, a killer

Author: Kevin O'Hanlon

Date: August 21, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/21/1654205.shtml

Secret Underground of The Patriarchy Exposed!

Nightmist · 23 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

With this exclusive first-of-its-kind photograph, the misandrists finally have proof that, yes, we males really do control everything! What do you know? They finally discovered our secret. Hey, Scott and Adam, isn't that you in the front row? ;) (Folks, please do be aware that this piece is assigned to the "humor" department.) ;) Perhaps we should print out this page and tack it onto our bulletin boards.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/21/178207.shtml

Ann Landers Blames Husband for Wife's Behavior

Nightmist · 23 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Both Hawth and Neil Steyskal submitted the following Ann Landers column. Hawth writes "Ann Landers responded to a man who complained that his wife was spending too much time playing computer games (and chatting excessively with a 25-year-old man!) by telling him that HE needed to liven up the marriage and that his wife was probably just bored. Had it been a woman who wrote in that her husband was spending all his time playing computer games and chatting on the phone with a much younger lady, I doubt Ann's response would have been the same."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/22/1751235.shtml

Lesbian Moms and Junk Science

Nightmist · 23 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "In this article on toogoodreports.com, Dr. Gerald Rowles provides a rebuttal to Dr. Peggy Drexler's "Moms are Enough" piece submitted a few days ago. Needless to say, Dr. Rowles and I agree 100%." It's great to see a printed rebuttal. Now if only the LA Times would print some of those Letters to the Editor.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/22/1755259.shtml

Minimizing the Problems of Boys and Men

Nightmist · 23 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robex writes "I came across this article in the UK Independent by a columnist called Natasha Walter. It was written in response to Doris Lessing's (a well known feminist) recent assertion in the UK National press that it is "Time for men to hit back." Lessing was referring to the brow beating of boys and the male gender in UK schools and their subsequent poor exam performances. Natasha Walter's heart apparently "sank" when she read Lessing's words because she does not know where the smug and complacent females referred to by Lessing are. Click Read More for the rest of Robex's commentary.The plaintive wail of Walter's article seems to suggest that she is only concerned that focusing on Men's Issues in any way might detract from women and their issues, irrespective of the truth of the matter. Amongst the usual cliches and dogma, she includes the following:

"Because despite their much trumpeted failure, men still hold the cards in Britain.....We still live in a world in which the jobs traditionally done by women attract the very worst pay and conditions, in which women still earn only about 60 per cent of the total earned by men"

I have written to Ms Walter explaining that in the absence of context, statistics are useless. Additionally, in this case, she is simply wrong. The actual (misleading)unadjusted figure for the UK "gender gap" is 74.5%. When age, tenure, experience and qualifications are taken into account, the difference shrinks dramatically. However, as all journos know, proof by anecdote is very powerful.

I have also taken issue with her outrageous suggestion that traditional female occupations attract the worst conditions. I have pointed out that unquestionably, men have drawn this particular short straw. In the UK over 96% of all workplace fatalities are male. Even excluding all high risk occupations, men still attract a 20% higher death rate. I have suggested that the next time she gets a chance, she should look at the gender of the person who collects her garbage, cleans her drains, sweeps her streets, fights for her country, fights the fires, and drills for oil. I have suggested that she then informs these people that the low paid secretaries of this world have a tougher job.

Finally, since "men hold all the cards", I have listed for her comment the fact that as a male in the UK, I am more likely to die from all 15 leading causes of death (Heart disease, Cancer etc.) I am also massively more likely to be a victim of all recordable types of crime, commit suicide, die at work or be homeless. I have also pointed out that I hear very little of the other gender gap ? in which men routinely die 5-7 years earlier than women.

I do not seek to minimise the problems that women face, but to deny, ignore or pretend that men do not also have issues sickens me."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/22/180218.shtml

Protecting Primary Breadwinners In France

Adam · 23 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An interesting article from the Spectator about France, it seems that the French actually protected the traditional breadwinner role of men, by keeping heavy industry around, and unlike alot of western countries they're better off. The writer seems to think this is a bad thing however, towing the rad-fem line at a point, Still, it's an interesting read so click here to read it. On a side note, I have been thinking about how heavy industry might be regenerated in the west to help men out, do any of you have some ideas?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/21/1442200.shtml

Not All Child Killers Are the Same

Nightmist · 24 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham writes "Gender feminists join forces with traditional conservatives in promoting that women deserve special treatment, even when children are killed! I thought a crime was a crime was a crime. You might like to send Janet Albrechtsen, the author of this article an email for presenting the case in lucid form that equality does not mean just in the work force, or providing services for female victims of domestic violence. NO, NO, NO. Equality also means that men and women ought to receive the same punishment for the same crime. And also the same compassion, where appropriate!"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/23/1451256.shtml

Writer Berkoff Speaks Out Against Rape Accusation

Nightmist · 24 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Writer Steven Berkoff says rape laws should be changed to protect men from false accusations. This comes after a woman recently filed rape charges against him. Berkoff, who has claimed to be a male feminist, now says "I have dedicated my life to love and to women and to relationships," he said. "In my poetry and plays I have castigated men for what they have done to women. "I have done nothing wrong and nothing to be ashamed of. All I can say is I will not be vindictive." Berkoff, at the Edinburgh festival with his new play The Secret Love Life of Ophelia, said: "I used to be a feminist. Now I'm a misogynist. Update: I was just made aware that I neglected to post the link to the original article. My humblest apologies. :(

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/24/1556221.shtml

Women Coaching Male Sports Teams

Scott · 24 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Here's the latest front in the Title IX war. Women are suing to coach men's teams." The article brings up a very valid controversy about the nature of discrimination. Read it here from TownHall.com and think. Thanks also to Not PC for sending this in.Source: TownHall.com

Title: When coach is a chick

Author: Debbie Schlussel

Date: August 22, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/24/1726219.shtml

Increase In Male Enrollment Causes Housing Problems

Nightmist · 24 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A 40 percent increase in male enrollment at Texas Christian University this year has caused dramatic housing problems on campus, according to this story on Excite News. Many freshman males are being housed in frat houses and residence hall lounges until better accomodations can be made. The campus provides more housing for females than males "because of the female-to-male ratio," the story says. I wonder, though, if male dorms would be forced to house female students for a time if the roles were reversed?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/24/1626221.shtml

Feminist Claims Idaho Suffers From Wage Gap

Nightmist · 24 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story, which originally appeared in the Biose State U.'s The Arbiter claims that female graduates from the college will make less than male graduates for doing the same jobs. Interestingly, the subject quoted in this article does hint that women often choose lower-paying careers than men, but blames this on the way daughters are reared. She shoots down her own blame of The Patriarchy, though, by also claiming that "Women are traditionally not only child-bearers, but also caregivers." So... it's women who are rearing women to take on those smaller paying positions, then? Well, perhaps feminists should then be looking for ways to defeat the "Matriarchy."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/24/1635221.shtml

Male-Only Golf Club Under Fire

Scott · 25 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Rams sent in this link to an ESPN article about a proposed male-only golf course in Arizona. The club is meant to be specifically geared toward "serious, low-handicap golfers" and will be limited to about 500 members. Is this the 'ol boy network at work, or is it truly analogous to women's health clubs? In any case, it is believed that the club will be legal because it does not serve the public and has a small number of members. Source: ESPN.com

Title: Couples helping to design men-only course

Author: Unknown (AP article)

Date: August 23, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/24/1738255.shtml

Women Allowed to Humiliate Men Via One-Way Bathroom Mirrors

Nightmist · 25 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in The Sunday Times is as much an insult to men as the accusatory college campus urinals we discussed recently. It seems that some bars in South Africa have decided to put one-way mirrors between men's and women's restrooms so that women can see men at their most vulnerable. They've installed couches in the women's restrooms so that the women can sit "in comfort" and gawk (and laugh) at males. I wonder how long it would take a woman in the reverse situation to file a lawsuit?Source: The Sunday Times [South African newspaper]

Title: Guys, watch out - Big Sister is watching you

Author: Brett Horner

Date: August 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/24/1917227.shtml

Stop Anti-Male Bias

Scott · 25 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve wanted to announce a new on-line resource for people to focus on stopping male bashing and anti-male bias. Appropriately, it is titled Stop Anti-Male Bias and is a Yahoo! Club. Their mission is: "This club is dedicated to promoting a gender-neutral approach to equality, and stopping the destructive influence of anti-male bias in the media, legislation, and general society. "Don't get mad - take action'""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/25/041259.shtml

Parental Alienation Questionnaire

Scott · 26 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Stan Hayward writes "A questionnaire on parental alienation set up by Families Need Fathers in the UK is getting many responses from around the world, and in particular from the USA. Check out the website at www.fnf.org.uk for the main site, and click here for the questionnaire. It is permitted for this questionnaire to be used by other fathers groups."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/25/2342233.shtml

Are Your Tax Dollars Being Used to Fund Andrea Yates' Defense?

Scott · 26 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "I really didn't want to submit yet another Andrea Yates story, but this one is making me vomit. I just read another article about how the feminists are being financed by the federal government, and it seems like the feds might even be funding Yates' legal defense!" While I didn't see anyting in the article that stated that money is directly going from federal programs to Yates' defense, these two articles, taken together, strongly suggest that it could be done.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/26/021215.shtml

Australia Considering "Divorce Tax"

Scott · 26 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham wrote in about a proposed tax in Australia for the "guilty party" in a divorce, and brought up some interesting points: *"A "Divorce tax on the guilty party" is a retrograde step! Why increase suffering? Rather it is helpful to try to reduce the suffering of those who are divorcing, both men and women. Marriage is extremely important, especially when children are involved! But couples ought not to be forced to stay together who ought to separate. The goal is shared parenting, not forced marriages. The response of Michael Green to this article is most pertinent. Michael Green has a web-site at fathersafterdivorce.com You can send him an email, via the web site."*Source: Sydney Morning Herald

Title: Pell wants guilt back in divorce - plus tax

Author: Kelly Burke

Date: August 24, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/26/1534249.shtml

DC Police Family Violence Study Biased

Scott · 26 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "The Washington Post reported here about a DC Police Dept. evaluation of their handling of family violence cases. The study interviewed only women. Let's remind them, again, about the men victims. Write to: letters@washpost.com"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/26/1540233.shtml

Colorado State U. Offers Help For All Victims of Sexual Assault

Nightmist · 27 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News reports on a new advocacy program geared toward assisting victims of sexual assault on that campus. The story specifically states (twice) that the program is there to help both female and male victims of sexual assault. We'll all remember that Colorado State U. is one university that received quite a bit of flack for preventing male students from participating in "Take Back The Night" rallies, and for repeatedly perpetuating the notion that women are victims and men are predators. Although this looks like a step in the right direction, I am still uncomfortable that the program is run by the "Office of Women's Studies."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/26/1841213.shtml

Female Politician May Lose Votes From Men-Only Club

Nightmist · 27 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A Massachusettes politician who was told she cannot speak at a men-only veterans dinner because she is female is enraged and thinking of taking legal action, according to this story on Excite News. The club in question does have some female members, but is a bona fide private club and can, therefore, exclude whom it wishes. The woman says that she could lose a prime networking opportunity if not allowed to attend the dinner. Silva told DeFranco the men-only dinners are a tradition. "And that's the way it's going to be," he said.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/26/1852203.shtml

Women's Studies Program Becomes "Gender Studies"

Nightmist · 27 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article on Excite News claims that one of the oldest women's studies programs in the U.S. is changing its name to "gender studies" to "more accurately reflect the goal of the program." Unforunately, it does not appear to me that the program is being in any way altered to include men. Perhaps men aren't even a sex anymore? Numerous courses are offered through the program that have "gender" in their titles, but the department does not feel that more male students will feel welcome to take such courses.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/26/190217.shtml

University Bookstore Controversy Reveals Other Women's Studies Problems

Nightmist · 27 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News is largely about the women's studies and English departments at the University of Arizona supporting an independent bookstore rather than the university bookstore. To combat this, the university instituted a policy in which all professors must submit book requirements for their classes to the university's bookstore. It also reveals how misleading the titles of women's studies courses can be. In some cases, such as the incident that sparked the institution of the policy, the required literature from Antigone has been about gender studies. Rep. Linda Gray, R-Ariz., who came out in support of the policy, said that was not the main issue for putting the mandate into place. "That really wasn't the important aspect," she said. "However, this student had signed up for a women's literature course and was not told it would be a celebration of the gay and lesbian community." Gray said instructors should be "up front" about the content of their courses, and they should practice "truth in advertising."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/27/1549209.shtml

Weekends Peak Time For Men's Heart Attacks

Nightmist · 28 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There's been a tremendous amount of focus on women and heart disease in the media lately, which is surprising when you consider that men have traditionally been more likely to die from heart disease than women. This story on Excite News examines some potential reasons why men are more likely to get heart attacks on weekends rather than during the week.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/27/163236.shtml

Woman Jailed Over False Abuse Claim

Nightmist · 28 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h sent in this story and writes "Finally, someone in law enforcement has woken up to the fact of false allegations! According to court records, the woman took photos of a bruise to her thigh she received in a fall from a ladder, using it later to try to prove her husband had kicked her and thrown a metal file at her."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/27/2041203.shtml

Anti-Ritalin Lawsuits Dropping Fast

Nightmist · 28 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Unfortunately for people who's children (mainly boys) are misdiagnosed with ADD or ADHD, credibility for claims of misdiagnosis is being shot down almost singlehandedly by an overzealous 65-year-old psychiatrist who wrote in a recent book that children should be having sex with each other as a means of liberating themselves from "parental oppression." The psychiatrist in question also happens to be one of Ritalin's biggest foes. This article on Fox News spills out the gory details.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/27/1837218.shtml

Spa Vacations Now Catering To Men

Nightmist · 28 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article on Excite News bodes well for advertisers and the media once again recognizing the buying power of men. According to the PR piece (that's really what it is) more and more men are taking "solo" spa retreats, and more spa vacation packages are beginning to offer the "adventure" type retreats men are seeking. Unfortunately, the article also suggests that the reason men are taking these "solo" retreats is to meet single women. I say perhaps we just want to get away for a while.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/27/1627248.shtml

Leading Causes of Death in Canada

Scott · 28 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

nagzi writes "This article on CBCnews's webpage is a break down of the leading causes of death in Canada. Towards the bottom of the page is a link to a break down of the stats by gender. Needless to say, men are the biggest victims in all areas with the exception of one. And the one thing that kills more women [psychoses] is by a small fraction." Of course, the CBS story didn't mention anything about gender in the story, indicating how unimportant this gender inequity is. Source: CBC News [Canadian Broadcasting Company]

Title: Causes of Death

Author: Owen Wood

Date: August 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/28/1642218.shtml

Woman Arrested for Nearly Castrating Common-law Husband

Scott · 29 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Thomas pointed me to this article and writes "Fox News reports that an Ontario man was nearly castrated by his common-law wife during a domestic dispute. Fortunately, the woman was arrested. Unfortunately, Fox News saw fit to make a joke of the incident with the final comment, "(Sgt. Paul Malik of the Durham Regional Police) did not say whether the man's voice was in a noticeably higher pitch."

Obviously, Fox News would not make a joke of a woman who was mutilated by a man." You can send your comments to Fox News at topstories@foxnews.com. Update: The article's last line has been changed! Thanks to everyone who wrote in to them about this.Source: Fox [news network]

Title: Woman Nearly Rips Off Husband's Testicles in Domestic Spat

Author: Michael Y. Park

Date: August 28, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/29/0339216.shtml

MANN Chat: Creating Resources for Abused Men Awareness

Scott · 29 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tonight's chat (starts at 9:30 PM EST, click here, etc.) will be a very important chat session. During it, we will be designing some flyers and informational materials which can be used by battered men's advocates during October's Domestic Violence Awareness Month campaign. Now's your chance to do something to help raise awareness of domestic violence against men. The flyers will be created and then posted to Mensactivism.org for anyone to print out and distribute. Every year, advocates for abused men are silenced and mocked. It's time for this to change, and we need your help. Please join our chat tonight for some serious activism.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/29/1414247.shtml

Derbyshire: Are Men Obsolete?

Scott · 29 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal submitted this essay from the National Review. John Derbyshire writes about the increasing "feminization" of culture, and the growing redundancy of men. His outlook is depressing, to say the least, and Derbyshire offers no suggestions on how to avoid the dystopia he describes. It's a fairly somber read.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/29/0354216.shtml

Equality Ends When the Check Arrives

Scott · 29 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mark writes "This article (free registration required to read) from NY Times columnist Maureen Dowd discusses how many women today still feel that even after women's liberation, men should still pay for dating..."Going Dutch is an archaic feminist relic. It's a scuzzy 70's thing, like platform shoes on men." One man admitted that he had to spend $10,000 on dates to "get his wife."" Source: The New York Times [newspaper]

Title: The Manolo Moochers

Author: Maureen Dowd

Date: August 29, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/29/1458253.shtml

Female Deceit of Men

Scott · 29 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h and Andrew sent in this very disturbing article from Ananova News. It reports on a survey done by the women's magazine That's Life, which found that 24% of women would "try to conceive without their partner's consent if they wanted a baby." Other quotes from the article: "The Scruples and Lies Survey found that modern women are willing to lie about everything from contraception to the size of their bank balance. Whether it's little white lies or serious porkies, 94% of the 5,000 respondents confessed to telling fibs, with 48% lying on a daily basis...The vast majority (84%) said they could lie with a clear conscience, with many justifying their deceit as a means of sparing other people's feelings." Source: Ananova [newspaper]

Title: Women confess to lying to their men

Author: Unknown

Date: August 29, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/29/1929232.shtml

Feminism: It Wasn't Supposed To Be This Way

Nightmist · 30 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In the commentary in the National Post, Donna Laframboise echoes the recent comments by Doris Lessing, that feminists need to lay off men and boys. It's not what feminism was supposed to be about, she says. She also says that because men are either too afraid to speak out, or are too extremist to be taken seriously, women need to speak for them. On this, I disagree. Certainly, women should speak out for men if they feel so inclined, but not in place of men speaking out for ourselves.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/29/1612239.shtml

Aggression Obsession

Scott · 30 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robex writes "I was reading this fairly innocuous article which claims that "workplace violence is all too common in corporate America". In stating this, the female author claims that bad behavior goes unpunished and cites as an example that "Sports figures still play, even if they've beaten their wives"....It seems that "crimes against women" outweigh any other type and the ludicrous inference is that not only should jail sentences be imposed, but the perpetrator should be prevented from working at his job thereafter....Is anyone else concerned at the level of bitterness and spite involved in this particular feminist thought process?" For space reasons, I had to shorten Robex's submission, but I have included it in full in the comments section. There he gives some specific examples.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/30/145245.shtml

The Fight for Fathers in Canada Concluded

Adam · 30 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bad news for fathers groups in Canada, a while back we reported that women's groups shunned father's advocates and refused to sit at the table with them over divorce law reform hearings. Following on from that, there was more bad news to go around as we learned that the feminists might be granted their own hearing. Now, it's been brought to a conclusion. Sadly there won't be any justice for fathers yet as Anne McLellan has buried the report, which is unsurprising as she has strong feminist leanings. Read the conclusion for yourself to find out the bitter truth.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/30/0122246.shtml

When Will the Educators Learn? SAT Fallacies

Scott · 30 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes *"The LA Times Article SAT's Gender Gap Widening analyzes, not very carefully it seems, the gender gap that persists in SAT performance. The "experts" STILL do not recognize the the SAT is a VOLUNTARY test, and that because of this, it NOT a good generalized assessment of academic performance for any group, whether divided along gender or ethnic lines. A better assessment of academic performance is a test that EVERY student must take, such as the New Jersey ESPA and GEPA, which show that girls are ahead by a lot, especially in reading and language arts. The gender and ethnic reports for the NJ 4th and 8th grade tests can be found here."*Source: The L.A. Times [newspaper]

Title: SAT's Gender Gap Widening

Author: Martha Groves

Date: August 29, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/30/1446219.shtml

DV Awareness Month is Quickly Approaching

Scott · 30 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "As you read this, your local media is planning their coverage of DV Awareness Month (October). This is a good time to contact them suggesting that they cover the men's side of the issue. This not a letter to the editor that you'd expect to see published; rather it is a suggestion for an issue you'd like to see addressed in their programs or pages. Many local talk shows have a spot for feedback or suggestions on their websites. Provide them with links to info, orgs, and support groups that you know of, online or off. Even better if you have someone with an org or website that would be willing to appear or be interviewed. You may have DV counselors in your area, or a local chapter of one of the men's groups. If you can provide them with this info, you have already done half their work for them and you may be pleasantly surprised at the result! The DesertLight Journal is more than willing to help. If you have questions or would like to know where to find this info, e-mail me at dsrtlite@mindspring.com. But time is critical - we need to get our suggestions to them within the next few days if at all possible."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/30/1413241.shtml

Men Overwhelmingly Imprisoned in the Drug War

Adam · 30 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

According to the the drug war prison facts just being a man makes you more likely to be imprisoned. While that's hardly news to most of you, the gender ratio will be. Based on my calculations, there are 15-16 men in prison for every woman on the charge of drug offences. If some of you thought the drug war was a war on men, albeit an undeclared one, the sad fact is you could well be right. On a side note, the site has a special section on women but not on men. Care for some activism, anyone? dmcvay@drugwarfacts.org

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/30/0129228.shtml

Ellen Goodman Gloats About Brain Power

Scott · 31 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Rsutaruro writes "In this incredibly sexist article, Ellen Goodman, feminist writer to the extreme gloats about a university study about men and women's brains." I found that the article itself really had no focal point - making me wonder if Goodman was using "both halves of her brain" while writing it. :)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/30/1418204.shtml

Can Rape Be Provoked?

Scott · 31 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "This article in the LA Times decries the establishment, in the law, of the recognition of the provocation of rape in northern Mexico. While I don't know the details of how it's implemented, I applaud this measure and I think that the states in the US ought to recognize this notion as well. Hopefully, we have some Mexican readers out there who will let their legislators know that they agree with this instead of allowing only the women to speak against it." I agree that an open discussion on this topic should be allowed - and that somehow we've got to restore some balance to rape laws, which currently give false accusers too much power and not enough accountability.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/31/1339241.shtml

Responses to Dowd's Dating Article

Scott · 31 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal wrote in to let us know that the New York Times has printed a few responses to Maureen Dowd's recent article where she interviews people who think that women who pay for or split the cost of dates are "archaic feminist relics." The responses, which were overwhelmingly critical of this self-serving view, can be read here (free NYT registration required).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/31/1347208.shtml

Motorola Donates Phones to "Save Women's Lives"

Nightmist · 31 August 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In a new woman-oriented PR move for Motorola Corp., the company is rounding up old mobile phones, which it then plans to donate to shelters for female victims of domestic violence. The company claims it wants to provide safety for women by providing them with an easy way to call for help. There are no plans for a similar campaign for male victims of domestic violence. I suppose this is better than donating pepper spray.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/31/1457238.shtml

Culture of Dating Spreads to the Internet

Nightmist · 1 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This humorous column in the Nashville Scene points out that Internet dating services are now taking advantage of men's wallets in the same way women have been doing for years: shell out loads of cash, potentially get some company. Note the final paragraph of the column, as it has the most relevance to the men's movement.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/31/151222.shtml

Mass. SJC and Restraining Orders

Scott · 1 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

JDD writes "This article from the Boston Globe deals with a woman attending a town concert and seeing a man she has filed a restraining order against also in attendance. In addition to it being an interesting read, I found the blatant use of gender in this paragraph to be disturbing: 'The zone of protection around the victim, in this case, 100 yards, is designed to create a barrier between the victim and the batterer and prevent any contact, Wolfman said. "The victim knows she's safe," she said. "The batterer knows he has to stay away. The police know they can arrest."'"You can e-mail the author of this article at kburge@globe.com.Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: SJC case to spotlight restraining order tangle

Author: Kathleen Burge

Date: August 31, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/01/0142245.shtml

Republican Women Don't Get Their Way, Claim Discrimination

Nightmist · 1 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A group of whiny Georgia Republican women are claiming in this story that new districting maps (which openly discriminate against Republicans, according to the Democrats) discriminate more so against women. If the men's movement needed any more evidence that we are friends of neither liberals nor conservatives, this is it. It is notable, however, that the Democrat women in this controversy are not siding with the Republican women, claiming that the new maps are not discriminatory based on gender.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/31/1510219.shtml

Judge Orders WOMAN Not To Have Children

Nightmist · 1 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In a surprising twist on the recent Wisconsin Supreme Court decision which banned a so-called "deadbeat" dad from fathering any more children, a Minnesota judge has banned a woman from having any more children after she was convicted for her role in the death of her infant. Pierce County Judge Dane Morey also sentenced Andrea Goetz, 26, to 10 years probation. Goetz was found guilty in June of second-degree reckless homicide in the death of her 3-month-old daughter. She had faced a maximum penalty of 15 years in prison. Still, she didn't get her due time in jail, as a man would have.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/08/31/2045214.shtml

Men's Contraceptive

Scott · 2 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in this story from Australia's Herald Sun and writes "Having children that you haven't planned is one of the most serious risks for men. [This] new development brings us a bit closer to having more control over it."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/02/1556230.shtml

No Prison Sleepover for Child with Mother who Murdered

Scott · 2 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "This article says that the Governor of Nebraska is revoking the 'right' of an imprisoned mother to have her six-year-old son spend the night with her in prison. Hooo-Ray for common sense. The judges, on the other hand, favored the sleepover. This Governor needs to hear from men nationwide who applaud his action because he will surely hear from the feminists." This brings up some interesting questions. I think everyone would agree that having a child sleep in a prison with a parent convicted of murder is not a good idea, but what about less serious crimes? Do children not belong in prisons at all or should a parent (often the father, mind you) serving some time for a minor offense be given the right to see his or her child for an extended visit?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/02/162244.shtml

Reader Response on Men's Health

Scott · 2 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A. Hunter sent in a short rant (as she described it) on men's health and men's responsibility to take care of their health. You can read it by clicking "Read More" below. Hunter shares her experiences trying to get her husband to see a doctor regularly and the frustration it can cause. She raises some good points about how men are often their own worst enemy when it comes to health issues, but I think there are a lot of other factors that contribute to the problem as well. Listen up, Gentlemen...

There is no feminist plot to deprive men of appropriate health care. If anything, there is a feminist plot to force you into the doctor's office for preventative maintenance, no matter how much men resist.

I'm fed up with men who do not take their own health care seriously, and when my husband and I turned 40 together a coupla four years back, I started using a club to impress upon my love of 30 odd years that he would get an annual physical...or deal with a seriously unhappy wife.
Eventually, it boiled down to threats. "Honey, you vill get into see the Dr. I haff vays uff makink you."

These days, I don't nag and harp anymore. I don't argue, whine or threaten. I simply make the appointment, and I see to it that he keeps the appointment...fortunately, he's a bright guy.

When I was 12, this man informed me that I would spend the rest of my life with him. Had I known then that I would be obliged to use force to get him into see the doctor, I'd have had the obligation written into our marriage vows.

The upshot here is that men do continue to ignore their own best interests, for reasons alll their own, and this feminist is calling the boys on their own nonsense!

Finally:

Gentlemen, as we women generally are obliged to see to our plumbing at a much earlier age, we get used to the indignities associated with medical examinations. We do understand that. But pain is the body's way of telling you something's wrong...and you do yourself (not to mention your loved ones) harm in your refusal to take ostensibly minor injuries and other warning signs more seriously. Moreover, no man needs to die prematurely from prostate cancer...there are superb treatments. Get the damn examination.

A. Hunter

ahunter@thevillagelink.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/02/178234.shtml

Women Not the Only Losers of the Sexual Revolution

Scott · 3 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC sent in this article by TownHall columnist Paul Craig Roberts. Roberts writes that, contrary to the common stereotypes, men have also been harmed by the sexual revolution, which is making it increasingly difficult for men to find long-term relationships and, in particular, marriage with a woman. "Men do want marriage. There is no comfort in a different woman every night. Moreover, that approach to sex might produce offspring, but not a lifetime relationship with sons, daughters and grandchildren." Later in the article Roberts also looks at the way marriage has been decimated by easy divorces. He acknowledges that marriage has even become a foolish choice for most men these days, and that some serious reform of divorce laws will be needed recover the value of marriage. His message is that the sexual revolution has also destroyed the value of lifelong fathers, and so men are also the losers of the sexual revolution.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/02/1721251.shtml

Farrell Says Frozen Embryos May Assist Choice For Men

Nightmist · 3 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In this column by Warren Farrell, the sage of the men's movement takes a look at how recent lawsuits over technological advancements like frozen embryos may actually assist men in equalizing ourselves with women over whether we want to become fathers. In essence, he says contract law is going to become more important in custody cases than laws based on biology, specifically because more lesbian couples are going to find themselves in the same types of custody lawsuits as heterosexual couples.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/03/0014230.shtml

West Hollywood Declares September Prostate Cancer Month

Nightmist · 3 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Contrary to the recent feminist posting on this Web site accusing men of apathy regarding men's health issues, this story on Excite News indicts a lack of education and awareness of prostate cancer as a chief cause of a lack of early detection, particulary among African American men. Also, if we have any readers from West Hollywood, get out there on Sept. 16 and get your free examination.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/03/032234.shtml

Sexual Liberation: Is It True Liberation Or Oppression?

Nightmist · 3 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In spite of the author's obvious support of women holding sexual power over men, this column on Excite News makes a good point about how duplicitous feminism is regarding the sexual display of femininity, specifically, the exposing of women's undergarments as a fashion statement: is it women sexually expressing themselves, or women oppressing themselves by making themselves "objects" of men's desire? Unfortunately, the author does not point out the third possibility: that these women could be using sex as a manipulative advantage.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/03/0328222.shtml

Utah State University Teaches Women To Beat Up Men

Nightmist · 3 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News reveals a new campaign by Utah State University to teach women alone how to to defend themselves against sexual assaults. The college offers a self-defense class "for women only" to this end. The article, at the end, acknowledges male victims of sexual assault, but then dismisses them based on numbers.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/03/0337226.shtml

Date Violence Common To Both Boys and Girls

Nightmist · 4 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In typical feminist media fashion this article on Excite News acknowledges that both boys and girls are victims of date violence these days, but then goes on to focus almost entirely on the female victims. The report suggests that 9 percent of females and 6 percent of males in high school are victims of date violence. Not a large difference in percentages there. Wonder why male victims are ignored?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/03/0344209.shtml

After Eight Years, Doctor Convicted Of Sexually Abusing Men

Nightmist · 4 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A UK Group has admitted that it failed many young men who were sexually abused by a doctor over a span of eight years. According to the story, the group is considering new guidelines to streamline complaints about doctors. In the cases of the abused young men, the complaints were ignored or bogged down in red tape.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/03/0351228.shtml

Activism Project: DV Portrayal Media Campaign

Scott · 4 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve from the Stop Anti-Male Bias Yahoo! Club created a letter template which can be sent to media outlets such as ABC, CBS, NBC, and other print media sources. The intent is to let the media know that there are people out there who want to hear or read a more balanced portrayal of domestic violence during the upcoming Domestic Violence Awareness Month in October. Some interesting links are included at the end of the letter for background reading and references. Send your letters out now, and help change the way DV is portrayed in the media this year! See our Activism Projects page for more info.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/04/1259236.shtml

Rogaine Ads Bashed In College Column

Nightmist · 4 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A student columnist at North Carolina State U. had this to say about how insulting modern advertising is. She specifically mentions the Rogaine commercials we all despise so much, and points out that they should be as insulting to women as they are to men. Applause.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/03/045212.shtml

Men, Boys Are NOT Emotional Mummies

Nightmist · 5 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

You know that William Pollack theory that boys develop emotional deficiencies due to socialization which forces them to be emotionally detached? It's bunk, according to this article on Excite News. Dr. Mark S. Kiselica, associate professor and chair of the department of counselor education at The College of New Jersey in Ewing, says If that's the norm, then insecure attachments should be the norms for boys and men--men should long for intimate relationships, yet recoil from them. There's no empirical research to support those claims.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/03/0429219.shtml

Drafts of DV Flyers Available for Download

Scott · 5 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Well, the fruit of last week's on-line chat is becoming ripe - click here and download the current drafts of the Mensactivism.org DV awareness flyers. We need your comments! Please join tonight's chat session to give feedback and refine these resources that will be used nationwide for promoting awareness of domestic violence against men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/05/0418236.shtml

Home Schooling: Is It The Answer For Boys?

Nightmist · 5 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy's latest column examines home schooling, and attributes its rise in popularity to the prevelance of feminist political correctness in the public school system. She also mentions Doris Lessing's recent comments about how cowed boys are in school this days, blamed for being male.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/04/0155243.shtml

Father Fights Paying For Adult Child's College Education

Nightmist · 5 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in the National Post details a long-running battle in Canada against unfair child support laws affecting non-custodial parents (particularly fathers). In what is widely interpreted as a deliberate attempt to force government to clarify the law, [Judge Jack] Watson ruled that students are destitute because they cannot go to school and work at the same time. The father is asking that the ruling be suspended while he challenges it in the Alberta Court of Appeal. Many students do work while in college. Hopefully, the appeals court will recognize that fact.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/04/1656241.shtml

Gendercide: War Is Hell

Nightmist · 6 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Adam Jones wrote this interesting piece about the slaughter of ethnic-Albanian men in Kosovo. Much is heard around the world about the killing of women because they are women. Jones provides an interesting look at the killing of men and the lack of attention it gets in the media. A broad sample of media commentary is presented to demonstrate that "unworthy" male victims tend to be marginalized or ignored entirely in mass-media coverage. A trio of common marginalization strategies is discussed, and a theoretical framework of "first-order," "second-order," and "third-order" gendering is proposed to clarify the deficit in coverage. This deficit is then contrasted with the attention given to the victimization experiences of "worthy" victims, such as women, children, and the elderly.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/04/1736222.shtml

Women Soldiers Poor Defenders

Scott · 6 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "This Washington Times article finally cites an intelligently-done study that concludes that women in the infantry is a bad idea for defense. There are other sources as well." Thanks also to Not PC for sending in this story. It's yet another opinion in the ongoing military debate.Source: The Washington Times

Title: Women in combat costly, 'criminal'

Author: Robert Fox

Date: September 5, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/06/0039236.shtml

Glenn Sacks Creates Web Site

Scott · 6 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Glenn Sacks e-mailed me to tell me about his new web site. To my knowledge, Sacks is the only regularly published male columnist in the U.S. who writes about gender issues from a perspective unapologetically sympathetic to men and on a wide variety of men's issues. His columns have appeared in The Los Angeles Times, The Los Angeles Daily News, The San Francisco Daily Journal, The Salt Lake City Tribune, The Sacramento Business Journal, The Los Angeles Daily Journal, and others (including Mensactivism.org, of course!). Visit his website at www.GlennJSacks.com.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/06/1455240.shtml

People Growing Intolerant of Zero Tolerance in Schools

Nightmist · 6 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

As if we need any reminder that political correctness is rampant in education these days, this article on Fox News reports that zero tolerance is adversely affecting school systems by tying them too closely to law enforcement. Although the article does not specifically mention gender, one must wonder how many of the students being suspended in these zero tolerance cases are male.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/05/1852224.shtml

Feminists Creating a Police State with Zero-Tolerance Laws

Scott · 7 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Henry Makow wrote a very thought-provoking article on TooGoodReports.com. In it, he shows how zero-tolerance laws overwhelmed police and take up an enormous proportion of their cases, and how being arrested for the most minor forms of "violence" is hurting men, women, and relationships in general. While I take issue with Makow's comments that homosexuals are leading a conspiracy to destroy heterosexuality, the article does a good job outlining the damage being done to society by attempts to control people's personal behavior and the inevitable consequences of these laws (a police state and reduction of civil liberties). Source: TooGoodReports.com [web site]

Title: The Dawn Of The Feminist Police State

Author: Henry Makow, Ph.D.

Date: September 5, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/06/1447217.shtml

The ACLU, Abortion and Women's (Men's?) Rights

Scott · 7 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes *"Here is an interesting article. Lots of information regarding the history of abortion and the ACLU's influence on the issue. One line that caught my attention is attributed to attorney Harriet Pilpel at a 1964 ACLU conference. "She asked: Does it not unconstitutionally deny a woman life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, for example, if despite her wishes and the opinions of concurring doctors she is forced to bear a child she doesn't want and, objectively, shouldn't have?" Why didn't anyone in the ACLU consider replacing the gender in that sentence or making it gender neutral?"*Source: The Human Life Review [magazine]

Title: ACLU v. Unborn Children

Author: Mary Meehan

Date: Spring 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/07/0312249.shtml

Clayton Giles Arrives in Washtinton, D.C.

Scott · 7 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I feel I have to apologize for the lack of reporting we've done on Clayton Giles' Journey for Kids, an incredible 2,500 mile bike ride a 13 year-old boy is doing to protest the way courts treat children in divorce cases. This young man, who I met briefly in NYC, could very well be doing more to reform the court system than the efforts of several focused father's rights groups. Because he's not an adult yet, his message is being listened to, and his petition has thousands of signatures which he will be presenting to President Bush in the next few days. Click here and take a few minutes to read about Clayton's journey and his dedication to doing something to make a difference.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/06/1414227.shtml

Sexist Reporting of Teen Violence Stats

Scott · 7 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

rparent writes "This is an opinion piece, but it gives an interesting view of how teen violence stats are reported differently, depending on the victim's gender. Check it out at this link." The article does a great job of unraveling "advocacy research," a concept the general public needs to be aware of. Source: PressDemocrat.com [web site]

Title: Sexist reporting of violence studies

Author: Joe Manthey

Date: September 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/07/038221.shtml

Swedish Government to Regulate, Possibly Ban, Male Circumcision

Scott · 7 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

J. Steven Svoboda from Attorneys for the Rights of the Child sent in a press release announcing that Sweden has passed a law that will study whether male circumcision is a violation of a child's human rights. The law also set up the foundation for government regulation of male circumcision, and if it is found to be a human rights violation, the Swedish government will have the proper authority to ban the practice. "This marks the first time the circumcision of males under the age of majority has been officially accepted for study by a national government as a human rights issue. Sweden's is the first law in modern times to regulate and restrict the practice of male circumcision." Click "Read More" below to view the entire press release.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: Swedish Parliament Scrutinizes Male Circumcision as a Violation of Human Rights

The Swedish Parliament has overwhelmingly passed a new law to regulate male circumcision with the purpose of protecting the human rights of the child. The Parliament voted decisively, 249 to 10, in favor of the new law, whose preliminaries also mandate a study to determine what effect the new law will have and whether male circumcision should be considered a human rights violation. The law is in the process of being enacted. Many Swedish Members of Parliament stated that male circumcision violates children's rights. Several Members of Parliament stated that only an outright ban on circumcision of all minors would be consistent with the United Nations' Convention on the Rights of the Child.

This marks the first time the circumcision of males under the age of majority has been officially accepted for study by a national government as a human rights issue. Sweden's is the first law in modern times to regulate and restrict the practice of male circumcision.

All licensed practitioners of male circumcision are now required by law to use anesthesia and to perform the procedure in hospitals or under similar conditions. A temporary exception was included to allow licensed Jewish practitioners of male circumcision (mohelim) to perform the procedure in hospitals or under similar conditions using anesthesia, but only during the first two months of a child's life. Thereafter, ritual circumcisions performed by anyone other than a medical doctor are not allowed. Violation of the law will result in punishment of up to 6 months in prison or a fine of an individually determined amount based on income.

Sweden has a history of pioneering human rights legislation and not one legislator claimed medically unnecessary circumcision was a legitimate procedure. The 10 dissenters objected only because they supported total criminalization, rather than mere regulation, of non-therapeutic circumcision of male children, and without any temporary religious exception.

J. Steven Svoboda, Executive Director of Attorneys for the Rights of the Child, stated, "This historic decision by Sweden represents a turning point in history. Again Sweden has demonstrated its concern for human rights. It is regrettable that the initial version of the bill, which would have banned outright all circumcisions of male minors, did not pass. Nevertheless, we congratulate Sweden for acknowledging that males' right to genital integrity deserves serious evaluation as a human rights concern."

In 1982, Sweden became the first developed country to outlaw female circumcision. This law was strengthened in 1998. Following Sweden's lead, many countries including the United States, Canada, and Australia have recently passed laws criminalizing female circumcision. Human rights organizations and legal scholars in each of these countries have pointed out that laws prohibiting only female genital cutting are discriminatory and violate national equal protection laws and international human rights laws. Worldwide, in the last four years every national professional medical association, which has issued a recommendation regarding routine male circumcision, has recommended against the practice.

Contact info:

J. Steven Svoboda

Attorneys for the Rights of the Child

2961 Ashby Avenue

Berkeley, CA 94705

Fax/phone 510-595-5550

Email arc@post.harvard.edu

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/07/1412250.shtml

NOW Backpedals On Yates Support

Nightmist · 7 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In a move apparently prompted by a group of 19 (mostly female) prostesters outside NOW's Washington headquarters, the group is backpedaling on its previous statement that it will raise funds for the defense of Andrea Yates, the woman who drowned her five children in the bathtub and is pleading not guilty by reason of insanity. The story in the Washington Times quotes some of the protesters. "I don't think we should make excuses for murder," said Bishop Imagene Stewart, who represented the African American Women's Clergy Association at the rally. "If we let her get away with this, other women--who are mad at their husbands--will do it too, and just plead insanity." The mostly female group of demonstrators hoisted signs like "Pro-Woman, Pro-Choice, Pro-Drowning?" and "NOW does not speak for me."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/07/1514253.shtml

Why Fathers Are Blamed

Nightmist · 8 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Like the U.S. and Andrea Yates, Ireland has apparently been dealing with its own "killer mom" stories of late. John Waters in this column in the Irish Times explores the reasons why society may believe that children are more likely to come to harm in the care of their fathers than their mothers.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/07/1520249.shtml

Sacks: Title IX Hurts Men and Minorities More Than It Helps Women

Scott · 8 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Glenn Sacks, the only regularly published male columnist in the US who writes about gender issues from a perspective unapologetically sympathetic to men, condemns the savage attacks on men's collegiate athletics in his latest article "Title IX Lawsuits are Endangering Men's College Sports." It was published in the Los Angeles Daily News on Friday, September 7. Readers with comments on the article can write to the Daily News letters section or to Glenn at GlennJSacks@cs.com. Click "Read More" to view the essay.

Title IX Helps Women Little, Hurts Men, Minorities a Lot

By Glenn Sacks

Reprinted with persmission from the author

In one of UCLA's proudest moments, UCLA-trained swimmers and gymnasts dominated the 1984 Summer Olympics. Half of the gold-medal winning men's gymnastic team were Bruins. Yet, despite producing 22 Olympic swimming competitors and dozens of world-class gymnasts, these UCLA men's teams were eliminated less than a decade later. In fact, over the past five years more than 350 men's collegiate athletic teams have been eliminated nationwide, and the number of men's gymnastics teams has fallen from 200 to just 21. What happened?

These athletic programs were not felled by mismanagement, drugs, or rules violations. They were destroyed by something far more dangerous than a triple full twist off the parallel bars or a reverse three and a half somersaults dive. They were destroyed by Title IX.

Title IX of the Education Amendments Act of 1972 barred sex discrimination in any educational program or activity which receives federal funding. In the decades since, women's athletics have burgeoned in high schools and colleges. Title IX was and remains an important and laudable victory for the women's movement.

More recently, however, misguided feminist lawsuits and political lobbying have changed Title IX from a vehicle to open up opportunities for women to a scorched earth policy whereby the destruction of men's athletics has become an acceptable substitute for strengthening women's athletics.

Feminists have used an obscure, hastily prepared bureaucratic action--known now as the 1979 Policy Interpretation--to mandate that the number of athletes in college athletic programs reflect within a few percentage points the proportion of male and female students on campus. The problem is, as studies have shown, fewer women than men are interested in playing organized sports, even though the opportunity is available. Even in all-female colleges the number of women athletes fall considerably below that needed to satisfy Title IX requirements in co-ed colleges.

The fact that women now outnumber men in college 57%-43% nationwide makes it even harder for schools to achieve the numerical gender balance demanded by the 1979 Policy--an interpretation never reviewed or approved by Congress. Time and again the Federal Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights (OCR) has investigated schools and allowed them only two options to meet Title IX--create new women's teams for which there often are neither funds nor interested female athletes, or cut men's teams.

Thus women have gained a little but men have lost a lot. According to the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), for every new women's athletics slot created between 1992 and 1997, 3.6 male athletes were dropped. During the same period, colleges added 5,800 female athletes--and cut 20,000 male athletes. Kimberly Schuld, director of the Independent Women's Forum's Title IX Play Fair! Project, calls this "clear, government-sanctioned sex discrimination."

Critics of modern Title IX point out that its equity calculations are misleading in part because they count college football's athletes and dollars without considering football's money-making ability. USC, for example, has been hit hard by feminist legal action based on its greater number of male athletes and higher men's athletic budget. What's not considered is that USC's men's teams--largely football--are responsible for over 99% of the near $20 million total revenue of the Athletic Department. At UCLA, football alone accounts for $15 million in revenue every year--over 40% of UCLA athletics' total. In fact, over 70% of Division I-A football programs turn a profit.

Thus schools are caught in a vise. Because schools need football's revenue yet must also equalize gender numbers, they are forced to cut men's non-revenue sports.

Todd R. Dickey, USC's general counsel, Schuld, and many others argue that football should simply be taken out of the gender equity equation because no other sport earns as much revenue, has such a large number of athletes or staff, and needs as much equipment.

"You can't spend as much on women's sports as you can on men's, because there is no women's equivalent for football," Dickey says.

Title IX's modern application has struck hardest at minority men. Lawsuits brought to balance the number of athletic scholarships awarded to men and women have decreased the number and value of men's scholarships, upon which minority men often rely to finance their educations. Black colleges and universities, where female students outnumber males 60%-40% and money is usually tight, have been particularly wounded by feminist lawsuits. And when Title IX forces schools to drop their football programs, as San Francisco State did in 1995, it is black athletes who are hurt disproportionately.

The situation cries out for a flexible athletics policy based on student interest levels instead of rigid proportionality. Title IX states "no person...shall, on the basis of sex...be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance." Misguided women's advocates have used a bureaucratic obscurity to undermine these simple yet high-minded words, and turn Title IX from an instrument used to fight sex discrimination into a policy mandating it.

Glenn Sacks is a columnist who has written for The Los Angeles Times, The San Francisco Daily Journal, The Salt Lake City Tribune, The Sacramento Business Journal, The Los Angeles Daily Journal, and The Los Angeles Daily News. He invites readers to visit his website at www.GlennJSacks.com.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/08/1247239.shtml

Good News!

Scott · 8 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I recently discovered that my ISP has stopped blocking port 80 incoming connections, so the current "hack" that has kept this site available can be removed. If the web site acts funny during Sunday and Monday, it will probably be me testing and implementing the changes. If you've been wondering why there is a ":81" in all the URLs, you won't have to wonder much longer - they will disappear in the next day or two.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/08/1641227.shtml

UN Criticized for Sexist Position on Genital Mutilation

Scott · 8 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I received another Press Release from Attorneys for the Rights of the Child, in which J. Steven Svoboda spoke out criticizing the UN and its Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights for discrimination against men with regard to their stance on genital mutilation. "Svoboda commented that everywhere that FGM occurs, male circumcision also takes place, adding that male circumcision occurs six times for every time FGM occurs. "Some day," Svoboda told the United Nations, "we will come to understand the misguided nature of our attempts to explain why any violation of female genitals is criminal while a comparable, serious, extremely painful, and disfiguring alteration of male genitals is permissible." Attorneys for the Rights of the Child has apparently made circumcision one of their main issues, and I applaud them for their advocacy. The full press release can be read in the "Read More" section below.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: United Nations Criticized for Sex Discrimination Against Males

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND-The United Nations and its Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights were sharply criticized yesterday by two human rights organizations for discrimination against males in the enforcement of human rights. Speaking on behalf of the National Organization of Circumcision Information Resource Centers and Attorneys for the Rights of the Child, J. Steven Svoboda, Esq., a Harvard-educated human rights lawyer, noted that while a panoply of protections for women and girls has been instituted including aggressive programs to stop female genital mutilation (FGM), male circumcision has never even been studied by any United Nations body including the Sub-Commission.

Svoboda demanded that the Sub-Commission explain why Sub-Commissioner Mrs. Halima Embarek Warzazi, previously its Special Rapporteur on Traditional Practices Affecting Women and Children, was now barred from considering traditional practices' effects on male children.

Svoboda commented that everywhere that FGM occurs, male circumcision also takes place, adding that male circumcision occurs six times for every time FGM occurs. "Some day," Svoboda told the United Nations, "we will come to understand the misguided nature of our attempts to explain why any violation of female genitals is criminal while a comparable, serious, extremely painful, and disfiguring alteration of male genitals is permissible. The best way to do justice to the rights of the child is to do no harm, to let it enjoy life in every aspect and to protect it and to love it. When the child is of the age of consent, he or she can make up his or her own mind about his or her own body. "

Svoboda called the United Nations' attention to the fact that the Parliament of Sweden recently voted decisively, 249 to 10, in favor of new legislation which regulates male circumcision and in its preliminaries also ordered a study to determine what effect the new law will have and whether male circumcision should be considered a human rights violation. Many Swedish Members of Parliament stated that male circumcision violates children's rights.

Svoboda reminded the Sub-Commission that Ms. Gay J. McDougall, its own expert on systematic rape and sexual slavery, stressed that human rights must protect both males and females from all forms of sexual assault. Svoboda added that human rights professor Jacqueline Smith of the Netherlands Institute of Human Rights has emphasized the importance of protecting males as well as females from circumcision.

Svoboda called the Sub-Commission's attention to the disfigured genitals and deaths which are regularly caused by male circumcision wherever it is practiced, in the United States, in the developing world, or elsewhere. He recounted the story of David Reimer, whose penis was entirely burned off, as has since been documented on television and in a best-selling book. Reimer was raised and surgically "reassigned" as a girl but his life and the lives of everyone in his family were catastrophically altered. Svoboda quoted an August 1 article in the New York Times reporting that 35 boys have already died this year in South Africa alone from circumcisions. Ten percent or more of initiates have been left with no penis or a "disfigured stump."

Svoboda testified that every single national medical association that has examined the issue has failed to find medical benefits which can justify routine removal of healthy tissue from a non-consenting infant. Regarding religion, Svoboda stated that for boys and girls alike, under basic human rights principles, another's right to practice a religion must end where that individual's body begins.

Contact info:

J. Steven Svoboda

Attorneys for the Rights of the Child

2961 Ashby Avenue

Berkeley, CA 94705

Fax/phone 510-595-5550

Email arc@post.harvard.edu

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/08/1236200.shtml

LA Takes "Deadbeat" Parent Tax Refunds For Child Support

Nightmist · 9 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in the LA Daily News highlights, in my mind, the biggest problem with the child support industry: it is, indeed, an industry. To that end, here's a highlight from the major points of one of the sources in the article: "I think it's a big boost," said Trom, who noted the money will either go to reimburse welfare or directly to families. Reimburse welfare? Interestingly, though, the article does not use the term "deadbeat dad." It uses "deadbeat parent" instead. Is this sensitivity to men from the news staff, or simply political correctness?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/08/2239234.shtml

Texas Mom Fights Discrimination Against Her Son In School

Nightmist · 9 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

School dress codes have been controversial with students for years, particularly teen-agers, who often wish to define their personalities by their clothing, piercings, or what have you. This commentary from Texas A&M's Battalion supports a Texas mother in her efforts to fight an elementary school dress code which will allow girls to wear earrings, but not boys. The 5-year-old boy was suspended from school for wearing an earring to kindergarten. The author of this commentary is, perhaps, seeing things too black-and-white, but I support her overall statement that school dress codes should not discriminate between the sexes.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/09/0124202.shtml

New Television Show Offers View Of Women Through Men's Eyes

Nightmist · 9 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News reports on a new television show airing on NBC daytime this season (starting Sept. 10). Titled "The Other Half," it's yet another talk show geared toward a female audience, but with men discussing the issues from their perspectives rather than women. The producers describe it as "The View," except with men. Unfortunately, the show's description reads like yet another way for women to bash men on television, but make it appear OK because it's men who are doing the bashing. I'll be interested to see how it works out, though. Anyone home during the daytime on this site? Check out this show and report to us on it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/09/0150230.shtml

Plastics Softener May Cause Health Problems For Young Boys

Nightmist · 9 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A popular plastics softener used in the creation of blood bags and tubing for medical practitioners may cause development problems for children, especially boys, according to new research by the FDA. This story on Excite News suggests that the plastics softener may leach into fluids fed through tubings or blood bags, and into the patient's body. The softener can cause problems with the development of sperm and the development of the testicles.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/09/0159202.shtml

Another Survey Reveals How Men And Women Think Differently About Men

Nightmist · 10 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Surveys by corporate America (especially corporations selling products like alcoholic beverages) are often frivolous, and intended to be entertaining. This survey however, hints at a disturbing problem between men, women, and sports. According to the survey, women have more sinister expectations about men's behavior at sporting events. Not surprisingly, according to the survey, men's true actions do not fall in line with the female thoughts on the subject. Perhaps it is this engrained cynicism about men which allowed the "40 percent increase in domestic violence on Super Bowl Sunday" myth to take hold?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/09/029213.shtml

Problems Fixed!

Scott · 10 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I'm happy to announce that we've transitioned back to using the standard port (port 80) to run our web server on, now that the ISP block has been lifted. Now, if you have any links which refer to mensactivism.org and include a ":81" in them, those will not work. Just remove the :81 and they will work again. Please send any further problem reports to admin@mensactivism.org.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/10/0152249.shtml

Well-Researched Article on False Accusations

Scott · 10 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Andrew sent in this article from Canada's National Post, which should be very useful for people researching false accusations of sexual assault. The article includes many good stats and quotes from Canadian police departments, and also explains the very touchy issue of why a woman might make a false accusation, including cases where "the system" continues to prosecute a man long after it has been discovered that the accusation is false or unfounded. Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Crying wolf

Author: Christie Blatchford

Date: September 8, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/10/0010252.shtml

Gold-diggers Justified

Scott · 10 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kingsley Morse sent in another great article from the National Post, this one on "gold diggers" - women who hunt down men with lots of money for financial exploitation. The article interviews some self-professed "gold diggers" and some men who've had experience with this kind of woman, which is really insightful. In the end, though, it seems that there is too much justification of the gold diggers' motives, making it sound like being a gold digger is a demanding job in itself, and worthy of the "fruits" of its labor. I don't think the financial exploitation of men should be condoned any more than the sexual exploitation of women. Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Looking for Mr. Goldbar

Author: Serena French

Date: September 8, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/10/0126200.shtml

HBO to Air Anti-Male Series

Scott · 10 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve writes "I came across this in the Diversions section of U.S. News & World Report: "The Mind of the Married Man (HBO, debuts September 11, 10:30 p.m. EDT) is all about horrible husbands. That means cheating hearts, body parts, and R-rated fantasies. The leading men are - how to put this delicately - sex-addicted idiots. Still, the comedy series can be wildly funny, even poignant. Real-life partners won't be able to stop talking (and arguing) about it." I realize that HBO airs a few decent movies and shows (as well as mindless drivel), but do we really need a series like this? If you want to contact HBO, click here."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/10/0018231.shtml

Texas Woman Recants Assault Story

Nightmist · 11 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Fortunately for the men of Texas, a woman who claimed two men had assaulted her has now recanted that claim. She originally said two white males had carved the letters "KKK" into her chest. Law enforcement became suspicious of her story when she failed to retell it the same way. Turns out, she had carved the initials in her chest herself with a pair of scissors. Officials have not yet determined her motive for mutilating herself and then falsely alleging that two men had perpetrated the act. The woman is expected to face criminal charges for lying to police and will be charged the cost of the investigation.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/10/1527223.shtml

Men's Health Reports on Prostate Cancer Risks and Treatment

Nightmist · 11 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in Men's Health is particularly appropriate now because September is National Prostate Cancer Awareness Month (you may or may not have read so in the media). The article offers some good advice for men (young and old) about the risks and prevention of prostate cancer.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/10/1529254.shtml

Redefining Domestic Violence

Nightmist · 11 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy's weekly Fox News column this week tackles the sensitive issue of how feminism has hijacked domestic violence and turned it into advocacy. She spends a great deal of print space, as well, explaining in terms with which we men's issues folks are now very familiar that men can be victims of domestic violence as well as women. Herself a victim of domestic violence, McElroy does a great job of examining how feminism has turned all women into victims and all men into perpetrators. She also mentions our own frequent contributor Marc Angelucci.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/11/0145203.shtml

Domestic Vandalism and the Element of Surprise

Scott · 11 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl sent in a great essay he wrote about the research he's been doing on domestic violence against men. In it, he discusses two topics that are rarely spoken about in current DV literature: "domestic vandalism" of a person's property, and how the element of surprise is another way that women often gain an upper hand in the domestic abuse of men. See the "Read More" section below for his article.

A Couple Key Aspects of Domestic Violence Against Men That Few People Are Aware Of

I have been working on my graduate thesis on domestic violence against men for some time now. Specifically, it's on the lack of awareness that professional counselors have regarding the key aspects of domestic violence against men (that is, assuming the counselor believes that there actually is such a thing). One key aspect of this subject that I rarely come across is the fact that along with the actual physical violence that women direct towards men's bodies, there is a tremendous, tremendous amount of violence directed towards men's property. True, in a lot of the anecdotal information from male victims there will be mention of what I have come to call "domestic vandalism," and once in a great while in the literature on domestic there will be the slightest mention of damage to men's property, but I have yet to see any formalized rhetoric (book chapter or article) or scientific study on the subject.

Now that I think about it, this particular subject could be broadened to include the instances where women take men's possessions and refuse to give them back unless some condition is met, so I guess we could enlarge my phrase to, "domestic vandalism and/or theft." I can assure you that in pursuit of my thesis I have read and heard tons of information on domestic violence against men, some of it scientific studies, some of it articles and some of it books, and I have rarely see any attention paid to this problem. To the best of my knowledge there is absolutely no scientific study that's ever been done on "domestic vandalism and/or theft." To get this problem into the public eye, perhaps it would be good if people started routinely using this phrase; it'd make it easier to slip into conversations on the subject. Plus, I've never seen or heard of an aggregate monetary figure being computed on the amount of (let's get started with using the phrase, I'll drop the quotes) domestic vandalism and/or theft by women against men. (Oh, and by the way, don't think that such illicit acts aren't done by men, it's just not nearly as common.)

Can you imagine it someday? Tom Brokaw leads off the evening news with, "Reports from the Univ. of so and so School of Sociology estimate that men in the United States incur a total cost of $125 million dollars a year in domestic vandalism and/or theft." The other aspect of domestic violence against men that probably gets talked about even less, but is more important, is the method with which women are able to gain an upper hand on men in violent encounters. As much of the literature on the subject states, women are able to get an even footing with men in violent encounters, or even an upper hand, with the use of some sort of weapon. It can be just about anything from a broken glass to a baseball bat to an automobile. But after reading scores upon scores of anecdotes from male victims, the fact that women often will turn to a weapon is certainly something we should keep in mind, but in most cases a weapon is not what really gives a woman the upper hand over a man. What puts a woman in the dominant position over a man physically is the same element of warfare that every general through out history has known to be the most potent of weapons (and I can't emphasize this point enough) - it's the element of surprise!

In countless incidences where men have been seriously injured by women, the women used at least some surprise to gain the dominant position. In one instance, a man was walking down the steps, and he wasn't aware that his wife was behind him; she gave him a good shove; As a result, he broke his kneecap and suffered a concussion. In another, a man was lounging by a hotel pool listening to his walkman when his wife came up behind him with a tire iron: concussion and a broken finger. In yet another, a man with no shirt on was walking through the hallway of his home, and his wife suddenly jumped out in front of him from one of the open bedroom doors. She flogged him with a straightened wire hanger: multiple cuts. With this factor in mind it's easy to see how the need for shelters for men is even more important than we had thought. Everybody has to eat, sleep, shower, shave, sit and relax, so in a sense men whose wives are routinely violent are constantly at risk - they never know when it might happen.

To add to this element of surprise is the fact that, for some men - especially naive ones, even when a woman is standing within an arm or leg's reach right in front of them, and then suddenly becomes violent, there is still an element of surprise at work - the man trying to get over his shock that a woman would actually do such a thing. Let's face it, we are all still raised on this false "sugar and spice" view of females, and for some of us it takes a long time to get over this conditioning. Pardon me but I just have to digress for a moment on this particular point.

As I look down at the back of my left hand, I am clearly reminded of the moment when I got over this conditioning. I was a sophomore in high school, and it was the first week of classes. I had been assigned to sit next to a pretty, coifed junior girl; she was to be my biology lab partner. Naturally, I felt like a complete idiot. Here, she was all of one year ahead of me in school, very attractive and wearing a very feminine outfit, frills and lace and such. I never knew what to say to ugly girls that I didn't have much interest in. The guy sitting in front of us was a complete dip who routinely hassled everybody, male or female. He continued razzing my biology partner about something, and at one comment she became enraged. Suddenly, she lifted her hand high in the air, bearing a sharpened pencil, and looked right at the back of my left hand, resting on our lab table. As her hand was suspended there, I distinctly remember thinking that she was about to stab me and then thinking to myself, "No way. She's a girl." To this day there's still a tiny black fleck on the back of my left hand, the part of the lead that went in so deep I couldn't dig it out.

Remember, as in warfare, it's all about the element of surprise, just ask any general worth his salt.

Bill Kuhl

bridgewater6729@yahoo.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/11/0239228.shtml

It's Raining Men?

Nightmist · 11 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

According to this story on Fox News, the gap between the number of men and number of women in the U.S. has been closing rapidly since 1980, and closed most dramatically in the 1990s. Fortunately, the Fox article takes a newsier approach to this information than the AP and Reuters, which created headlines like this from the story: "Good News For Women! There Are More Men Available."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/10/1717244.shtml

OC Weekly Writer Bashed For Circumcision Statements

Nightmist · 11 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This column in alternative newsweekly OC Weekly raised the ire of several readers who wrote in to defend a man's right to keep his foreskin. The column writer was called sexist and a bigot for the statements of disgust she makes in her "censorship" column about uncut men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/11/1824258.shtml

To Be Speechless...

Scott · 12 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I feel obliged to say something, however unqualified I am to say it, about today's tragedy at the World Trade Center, and offer the condolences of the Mensactivism.org admin team to those who have suffered a personal loss from the attack. Certainly, every U.S. citizen, and most people in the world have felt the sting of this attack on human dignity and freedom. In particular, I hope the best for the folks I met in NYC recently who were organized and promoting men's rights there, and that they are safe at this time.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/12/0147220.shtml

The Growing Number of Widowed Men

Scott · 12 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

cheddah writes "Although this Boston Globe article does touch on issues relevant to men, it does not explore the reasons why men live on average shorter lives compared to women. Also - referring to men as "males" seems denigrating, and the author points out that men are emotionally dependent on women in order to live a happy life." I feel that the Globe should be applauded for covering such a rarely talked about topic, though - the lonliness of older men is a problem we should care about as a men's issue. Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: As males live longer, more are, unexpectedly, all alone

Author: Cindy Rodriguez

Date: September 10, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/11/2327215.shtml

Tonight's Chat Will Be An Open Discussion

Scott · 12 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tonight's weekly on-line chat is going to be an open discussion. We made this decision since it is probable that people may want to discuss the events surrounding yesterday's tragedies in the United States. There are also a number of men's issues related to this event, including honoring the heroism of the hundreds of firefighters and law enforcement officials who gave their lives yesterday for the sake of saving others. Our on-line chat page can be found here, and we'll be starting the chat at 9:30 PM Eastern Time tonight, 9/12. All friends of the men's movement are welcome to join.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/12/1327258.shtml

NBC's "The Other Half" Reviewed

Scott · 12 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett sent in her opinion on a television show called "The Other Half," which is being aired on the NBC network. Click "Read More" below to read it. The program is not particularly friendly to men, to say the least.They come on stage wearing high heels, and the show degenerates from there.

Dick Clark, ancient rock n' roll legend, Danny Bonaduce, who you might remember from the "Partridge Family," Mario Lopez, from Saturday morning TV, and Jan Adams, plastic surgeon are the hosts of a new AM TV program called, "The Other Half," which is supposed to be about women learning about men or men learning about women or something. You can be sure nobody learns anything practical from this cutesy, giggling waste of airtime. These guys checked their balls at the door, and are proof positive people will sink to any level given enough cash and TV exposure.

After announcing that they "promise to do our best to experience the world of women," the hosts all draw lots and submit to having a body part waxed. Eyebrows, legs, chest, and something called "a Brazilian bikini wax" are all demonstrated on the guys amidst much screaming from the men and high hilarity from the female audience. There's plenty of laughter on this show, and it's pretty clear these women are laughing at the guys, not with them.

It's male bashing sent to a new level-a full hour on a national network. An early segment shows their various wives and mothers giving their boys "advice" on how to deal with this TV show for women. The girls are all still laughing. Dick Clark's wife tells him, "If there's anything you don?t understand, wait til you get home and I'll explain it to you." A later segment shows a woman being dressed as a man, and a man being dressed as a woman. The person doing the makeover on the woman apparently does some kind of home parties where women actually pay her to dress them as men. It is not explained why these women can't do this themselves - most likely they don't know any men, and thus have nobody to borrow from. Her handiwork is nothing better than a high school drama department could have done. Her statement as to why she's in this line of work was chilling: "There is a very powerful idea that men have a right to be entitled in this world, and we're not given that right."

Entitlements - somebody "giving" somebody else rights - where have we heard that before?

This was followed by a meaningless segment (I didn't think it could get any worse, but it did) on how your sleep positions affect your marriage - huh? And then came the letters. This was supposed to be an advice segment. Danny Bonaduce admitted to not being sexually aroused by the sight of his wife nursing their infant son. This elicited a gasp, and the camera panned to the audience, focusing on a 40-ish woman giving him a look that cannot be described as anything but naked hatred. The upshot of it all was that if women aren't interested sexually after giving birth, then it's the man's fault, of course. "He must keep the romance alive," somebody said.

I saw this program on Denver NBC affiliate KUSA, and didn't notice much, if any national advertising. Perhaps this show is on a trial run and not yet available in all markets. Admittedly, I'm not a particularly objective observer in these matters, but it did seem to me the underlying message was: "Men are pigs, and the only way they can redeem themselves is to become more like women." Meanwhile, women are supposed to become more like men. This paradox I've never understood, and probably never will.

I tuned into the program expecting to be bored, or angry, but instead I came away with a sense of deep sadness. Through the power of TV's ability to convey a message, women who watch this program and 'get' the message will continue to ruin their own lives with a false expectation of "the way things should be." Worse, these impossible ideas of women being especially 'entitled' to something they haven't earned is validated by men whose only motive is a big paycheck. This show does everyone a disservice. One can only hope it doesn't last long.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/12/1338201.shtml

Did Male Passengers Prevent Further Terrorism?

Scott · 13 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve writes "The Associated Press has reported that there is speculation that male passengers on the airplane that crashed in Pennsylvania may have stopped further terrorist activities by the hijackers. In this news story, the AP noted that men have prevented the hijackers from causing further death and destruction. This seems to be another example of positive male behavior. We [as men] are the protectors of the world, and we often risk our personal safety--and sometimes our lives--to protect others." I just found another article which talks about this event in more detail.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/13/1721259.shtml

NOW Claims Family Courts are Biased Against Women

Scott · 13 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

cheddah sent in this story from the National Organization for Women and writes *"Can you believe that NOW is promoting the idea that family courts are biased against women!? Here is a quote: "These injustices are commonplace today in the closed-door family court system. These courts often claim to operate in a manner consistent with the "best interests of the child." In practice this often means that a judge, often a male judge, biased and imperious, defines that phrase. These judges decide, time and time again, when a woman raises the allegation of sexual abuse in a custody dispute, that it is she who will lose her children forever."*"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/13/1726210.shtml

The Guy Code Pontificates on War in America

Nightmist · 14 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Masculist e-zine The Guy Code has published articles by three of its writers (one its editor) today about Tuesday's tragedies and America's struggle against Terrorism. Francis L. Scurvy writes from the anti-draft view and demonstrates that you can be anti-draft and still be a patriot. Ordinarily humorous writer Ray Meyers points out that there's nothing funny about what's happening in America right now. And Guy Code editor Elliot Zaret writes about heroism among the ruins.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/14/1546225.shtml

Goodbye Civil Liberties...

Scott · 15 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I found the following two articles from Wired News off of the Slashdot site. I think they are certainly of interest to us, as the men's movement is quite dependent on the internet and secure communications will be very important to us. This Wired article describes how Senator Judd Gregg from NH wants a global ban on encryption systems that don't have a "back door" for the government to use to monitor your communications. In another Wired article, a bill allowing FBI wiretaps of a person's internet communications without a warrant has just been passed by the Senate! What we will inevitably see in the upcoming months are blows to people's civil liberties which are unprecedented in our country's history. Click Read More for some of my thoughts on this.

The fear and insecurity of these terrorist attacks are already being used to shove laws through that will restrict, and in some cases, eliminate, many of the civil liberties we enjoy today. The problem is, many of these laws will do nothing to offer us more protection, or the gain in safety will be far outweighed by the damage done to our sacred rights of free expression, personal autonomy, and privacy.

First of all, let's look at outlawing strong encryption or encryption that doesn't have a back door for law enforcement agencies... How many terrorists and criminals do you think are going to upgrade their secure cryptographic systems to the new monitoring-enabled ones? None. These people are already breaking the law, and prohibiting secure encryption isn't going to stop them one bit.

Second amendment advocates have said, "Outlaw guns, and only outlaws with have guns." Likewise, outlaw strong encryption and only outlaws will have strong encryption. We want and need the good guys to have unbreakable encryption. We need the whistleblowers and social activists to be able to have secure communications. Remember, we're men's rights activists - not exactly on the political mainstream. Who knows if the PC movement could make it a crime some day to talk about men's rights?

In addition, strong cryptography has been around for a long time, and is fairly embedded in our society. Although the average internet user doesn't encrypt their e-mail (although they should), there will be a backlash by industry and crypto-aware individuals who won't like having these rights taken away. Especially when it is unlikely to have any effect on stopping or catching criminals and terrorists (see argument above).

Furthermore, crypto systems with a built-in back door are insecure, period. They offer a single point of failure such that if someone were to crack the backdoor decryption scheme, or the master escrow of secret keys, they'd have access to anyone's messages or communications. Do you think the government can create a cryptosystem so good that a well-funded corporation couldn't crack it? Do you want some rouge company to start selling access to your communications on the black market?

People need to contact their congresspeople NOW. Write them, call them, and don't wait any longer - these bills are already being drafted and jammed through the legislature. Let's try to kill them now instead of having to wait years before they're overturned by the Supreme Court.

As Thomas Jefferson wrote, "The price of liberty is eternal vigilance." Let's not forget that.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/14/233245.shtml

A Feminist's Story of Discovering Men's Issues

Scott · 15 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tom Golden from Webhealing.com pointed me to a magnificent essay written by Sheridan Hill. Hill writes about her discovery and acceptance of domestic violence against men and women's violence. As a self-described feminist since she was 14 years old, Hill was able to openly examine the research and statistics about DV and learned that the feminist doctrine about DV was incredibly harmful to men. Toward the end of the article she also acknowledged the problems boys are facing in school. I was struck by how useful this kind of testimony is to getting the message out to feminists, and hope that more women will come forward and speak out like this.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/15/0127247.shtml

New Research Indicts Ritalin

Adam · 16 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Disturbing news about Ritalin as this quote tells us "a recently concluded study at the Brookhaven National Laboratory (BNL) not only confirms the similarities of cocaine and Ritalin, but finds that Ritalin is more potent than cocaine in its effect on the dopamine system" there's alot more reading in the article for your interest. If you have trouble reading it, copy and paste it into notepad if need be. On a side note don't forget to check out Changing children into drug addicts? where this issue is continued in a similar style.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/15/239212.shtml

Boys Entering Puberty Sooner?

Scott · 16 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This cautious article from InteliHealth describes some research recently that is showing that boys are entering puberty sooner than they were in the past, with black boys even earlier. The article mentions a couple of potential flaws with the research, but suggests that this is definitely a valid issue to look into. As boys enter puberty sooner, they are at higher risk for some kinds of hormonally influenced diseases, such as testicular cancer. It would also suggest that sex education should begin sooner as well.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/16/046245.shtml

Slow News

Scott · 17 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Obviously, the media has been focused pretty exclusively on the terrorist attacks against the U.S, and consequently, news on men's issues has been pretty sparse. Thus the fewer number of postings per day on this web site. But, I have an important announcement coming up that the domestic violence awareness flyers will be released on Monday!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/16/1617237.shtml

National Catholic Review Comments on Prison Rape

Nightmist · 17 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This commentary on prison rape by the National Catholic Review may represent the first time media has acknowledged the existence of Human Rights Watch's recent report on male rape in prisons. The author of the commentary is horrified by the report. By allowing rape to go on, the "correctional" authorities ensure that prisoner violence is contained within the cells. Frustrated prisoners are permitted to release aggression on condition that they direct it against other inmates, not the authorities. That the victims, who comprise as much as 20 percent of 2 million inmates held in U.S. prisons and jail, live in perpetual fear is also conducive to control. Divide and conquer is the name of the game; the fact that it amounts to horrendous violations of human rights does not really interest the prison authorities.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/16/1733254.shtml

Fatherhood Coalition Writes Back

Adam · 17 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mike Franco of The Fatherhood Coalition wrote an excellent letter countering the "deadbeat dad" smokescreen, it's hard hitting and well written. Go to Massnews letters and scroll to the end of the page and read his letter titled "Column in MetroWest Was Wrong" the last paragraph is a real "I felt that from over here" moment in my opinion, you'll understand when you read it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/16/2039231.shtml

Final DV Flyers Available for Download

Scott · 17 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

After some significant editing, the final versions of the domestic violence awareness flyers have been posted to Mensactivism.org. Download them, distribute them, and do something to help raise awareness of abused men! Click here for the flyers. Update: The Q&A flyer was updated around 9 PM Eastern Time on 9/17 - please download the new version if you grabbed them earlier!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/15/0435248.shtml

New Poll

Scott · 17 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I added a new poll today, one I've been meaning to add for a while which was suggested to me by Rams. Hopefully, it will help people pause and think about their answer, and whether they're happy about it and want to change it. I know I was pretty disappointed about my own answer when I stopped to think about it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/17/0551210.shtml

A Father Attempts To Reach Out To His Son

Nightmist · 18 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This column by The Guy Code's "Commando Dad" is a heart-wrenching look at a divorced father's pain as he attempts to reach out to his eldest son, who will soon be leaving for bootcamp. Commando Dad chronicles the letters and e-mails never acknowledged, and one horrible moment when his own son tells him he has "nothing to say to you." It's a gut-twisting look at what befalls man after divorce. It's sad and depressing, but a must-read.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/17/2059236.shtml

Another Woman Speaks Out for Male Reproductive Rights

Scott · 18 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Catherine Harris wrote an article about choice for men that was printed on the RITRO (Real Insight Through Raw Opinion) web site. She discusses equality, what it means, and how when it comes to reproductive rights, men and women don't have equal rights. "Men have no reproductive rights, and for women that fight for true equality this fact should shoot up a red flare. Equality is not about domination, which is what many women are looking for. Equality is about having equal rights along with the equal responsibilities." It's great to see more articles like this coming from women.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/18/0014242.shtml

Poundstone Makes Plea, Avoids Prison

Nightmist · 19 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Comedian Paula Poundstone has been relieved of three counts of "lewdness" charges against her and has pled no contest to child endangerment, according to this report on Excite News. She's been slapped with five years probation (she could have received 13 years and four months in prison). She will also not be allowed to care for any more foster children, and the two foster children previously under her care will not be returned to her. She may regain custody of her adoptive children, however.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/19/1951256.shtml

DesertLight Journal No. 12 Released

Scott · 20 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

We've missed announcing the past couple editions of Schuett's DesertLight Journal, but this is to let you know that issue number 12 has been released and can be read on-line here. The e-zine covers a couple of interesting editorials related to the terrorist attacks last Tuesday.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/19/2112258.shtml

Rape Provocation Controversy Continues in Mexico

Nightmist · 20 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mexican legislators have reversed a law which would lower sentences for men convicted of rape if said rape was "provoked." This story on nj.com fills in the details. Although I, personally, disagree with most rape provocation theories (I control my penis), this article does prove that women's groups hold a tremendous amount of power all over the world, and that lawmakers will cave for whatever their demands may be.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/19/2117251.shtml

When are Boys not Innocents?

Adam · 20 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I've come across this e-groups message asking a very important question, one that goes right to the heart of the men's movement: namely at what point do boys become "non innocent" and therefore expendable? And why is half of humanity left out of that infamous saying "women and children only"? It's quite a question, and I doubt we'll find an easy answer.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/20/1922214.shtml

Die on TV, Become a Hero

Scott · 20 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robex writes "This article was printed in The Times of London today entitled "As men became heroes". Amongst other things, Josephine Hart (the article's author), learned the following from the WTC disaster:
"We learnt that men are not all children, potential rapists and commitment-phobes. We learnt because they taught us with every step they took, trudging their way up the stairs of the World Trade Centre to almost certain doom while others walked down to the hope of safety."
Whether her own personal beliefs, or repeating supposedly commonly held stereotypes, the paragraph tells us much about Hart's attitude to men.
*I have written to The Times today expressing dismay at these comments and pointing out that it pains me greatly that men have to die on live TV to change one embittered writer's view of them."*Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: As men became heroes

Author: Josephine Hart

Date: September 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/20/1938259.shtml

Here We Go Back to the Old Stereotypes

Nightmist · 21 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This commentary in the UK Guardian points to a lack of female perspective and reporting over the recent terrorist attacks in America. The writer essentially blames The Patriarchy, and then claims that is woman's nature to be less violent and more nurturing than men. She hints, but does not explicity say, that men did the killing, so other men should die fighting the killers. Now this is a writer who deserves some letters.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/20/2242245.shtml

Fears of Draft Rising Among U.S. College Men

Nightmist · 22 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article from the University of Wisconsin's Badger Herald may put at ease some college age men who fear the draft may soon call them into a physical fight against terrorism against their will. According to the author, Wisconsin professors doubt the draft will be used in the war against terrorism. One large group of people noticeably absent in the draft is women. The original draft provisions referred only to "male persons" as candidates. The constitutionality of this was upheld in 1981 in Rosktker v. Goldberg. President Clinton also asked the Department of Defense to reconsider the gender requirement in 1994, but they came to no decisive conclusions. Pevehouse said the draft is very unlikely to be reinstated, and young men should not worry about it. Update: The author of this piece misspelled Roskter. The summary of the case may be found here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/21/228252.shtml

Eating Disorders Are Affecting Men, Too

Nightmist · 22 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article from Boston University's The Daily Free Press claims that men are now more and more being affected by eating disorders traditionally thought to be women-only problems. The Eating Disorders Council of Long Island estimates that at least one in 10 people with eating disorders in the United States is a man. Medical health professionals such as those at the Eating Disorders Council believe more cases exist, but that many go unnoticed and underreported. That sounds familiar...

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/21/2225230.shtml

Sacks: All Americans Need to Stand Up for U.S. Arabs, Muslims

Scott · 22 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Glenn Sacks, the only regularly published male columnist in the US who writes about gender issues from a perspective unapologetically sympathetic to men, has in his latest column come out strongly in defense of American Muslims and Arabs who have been targeted for hate crimes since the September 11 terrorist attack. You can read his article, All Americans Need to Stand Up for US Arabs, Muslims, which I feel is an important message we need to support. Arabic men, in particular, are under the most suspicion and distrust these days. Update: Glenn also has a new article, "Attacks on American Muslims Reaffirm Wisdom of 2nd Amendment" which should appear on his web site soon.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/22/1848219.shtml

Firefighting and Gender

Scott · 23 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in this article from the National Review. In it, Kate O'Beirne writes about the firemen in New York, and a court decision that watered down the physical fitness test required for people to become firefighters. An interesting fact is that, even with the test change, only 36 of New York's 11,000 firefighters are women.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/23/1917253.shtml

Divorce "Contagious" for Men in the Workplace?

Scott · 24 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

rparent32 submitted this short Ananova story which reports on a Swedish study which found that men become more likely to divorce when their male co-workers have gone through a divorce, but women behave in the opposite manner. The idea is that when men see other men with new partners after a divorce, they perceive the risks of divorce as minimal. Not much else is mentioned in the article, but it's a curious finding to say the least. Source: Ananova News

Title: Divorce can be contagious in the workplace

Author: Unknown

Date: September 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/23/1923255.shtml

Parents at Odds Over Son's Circumcision

Scott · 24 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

rparent32 sent in this Ananova story about a father who objects to having his son circumcised and whose mother insists on the procedure. rparent32 writes, *"It seems this couple split up over the circumcision issue, and are now in court. I don't know if the court will decide if the boy should undergo the procedure or not, or decide which parent gets to decide. I'll keep looking for follow ups to this story and post them."*Source: Ananova News

Title: Court fight over son's circumcision

Author: Unknown

Date: July 17, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/23/1929248.shtml

More Pro-Male Stories About Firemen and Policemen

Scott · 24 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I do have to admit, that since the terrorist attacks on the U.S, there has been a good number of pro-male news stories in the media. Thanks to Glenn Sacks and Claude Moreau for sending in this one from the National Post. Christie Blatchford writes in appreciation of the men who risked all and pushed their limits to help others. Check it out.Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: This triumph of the spirit belongs to men

Author: Christie Blatchford

Date: September 22, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/24/1618254.shtml

Dateline NBC Tells Heroic Flight 93 Man's Story

Nightmist · 24 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This transcript of a recent Dateline NBC tells the story of Tom Burnett, one of the now famous passengers of Flight 93, which crashed outside Pittsburgh after Burnett and other passengers attempted to overtake the hijackers. The story is inspiring.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/24/1817239.shtml

Yates Deemed Competent to Stand Trial

Nightmist · 25 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Amid all the news about the war against terrorism, this story went largely unnoticed in the major news media last week. Andrea Pia Yates, the Texas mother who methodically drowned her five children in the bathtub, has been deemed competent for trial. Prosecutors are seeking the death penalty.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/24/1821205.shtml

Thai Police Chief Hospitalized After Sexual Assault

Scott · 25 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

rparent32 writes "This link is to the original story, and the second is a follow up. What I found interesting is that this piece doesn't deal with injured genitals in the familiar humorous genre. Also I found it interesting that the cop didn't want to press charges, because the women had enough problems already. It seems she, and others, lost their jobs, and this was the reason for the protest. Why do so many men refuse to press charges against women? Is it just an extension of the old concept of chivalry?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/25/0042258.shtml

Shout at Your Spouse, Lose Your House

Scott · 25 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ragtime wrote in a short article about the state of affairs in Ontario, Canada, these days with regard to domestic violence. If you're a long time visitor of this web site, you'll recall that we reported on a law passed in Ontario called Bill 117 - which is the most extreme form of punishment on someone accused of domestic violence that I've heard of to date. The worst part is that the consequences occur not after a conviction, but upon a simple accusation, which need not be verified by the police in any form. Click Read More below for Ragtime's discussion of the matter.

Shout at your spouse, lose your house.

I live in Ontario, Canada, and I live alone. I gets pretty lonely, but I have no choice.

I don't have a wife or girlfriend -- I'd like to, but it's just too much risk. I'm pretty much resigned to living alone because I can't take the chance of being destituted on a woman's whim if she were to get angry at me. Pretty sad state of affairs...(sigh)

It really is that bad, you know. New legislation, referred to by critics as the "shout at your spouse, lose your house" legislation, allows almost all of a man's assets to be transferred immediately to a woman. All she has to do is place a call to 911 and say "he frightened me."

When this happens, the man is slapped with a restraining order, he's removed from his house, and his assets are transferred to the woman. The man is not present in court when this takes place. No checking is done on the truth of the accusation (that would be invasive of a woman's rights), and the woman placing the call doesn't even have to be the man's wife or common-law live-in partner; she could be a girl he just brought home after a first date -- or even a hooker. Critics call this law "a pimp's dream." This 'protection' is extended only to women, of course.

This law is an unbelievable, unholy travesty, and stomps jackbooted over a man's most basic human rights.

And this law will never be abused, of course, because a woman would never make a false accusation.

Under this legislation, a man is "one phone call away from total ruin." He has no rights whatsoever and is just discarded. He is left with nothing and is completely on his own. If he's lucky, he might find a bus shelter to sleep in. Which is, to follow the 'logic' of the legislation, all he deserves.

By Dave Brown, senior editor at the Ottawa Citizen:

http://tsw.odyssey.on.ca/~balancebeam/one_phone_ca ll.htm

From the 'Fathers Are Capable Too' web site:

http://www.fact.on.ca/news/news0012/ar001218.htm

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/25/0050231.shtml

A Comment on Heroes

Scott · 25 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Frank Hujber submitted his own essay about the value of masculinity in society, particularly to deal with massive disasters such as what the United States has recently experienced. His essay, A Comment on Heroes, can be read by clicking Read More below.

A Comment On Heroes

by Frank Hujber, fhujber@optonline.net

September 2001

Evil has struck again and in the aftermath we consider the people who responded: the leaders, the emergency workers, the common men and women. As we write the book on this incredible event, we need to consider how we elevate individuals to hero status, and we need to be objective in how we do this. In our perpetual effort to give equal treatment to all, we risk losing sight of the valor and the response in the face of adversity exhibited by men. Certainly, there are women heroes as well, but in times that required the application of testosterone, machismo, and a brain biology particularly well-suited to fight-or-flight decisions, men stood tall.

It is true that the people at the controls of the four airplanes that hit the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, and the ground in central Pennsylvania were men. It is also highly likely that these men, or at least some of them, were mentally ill or under the influence of drugs, or both. Regardless of all these factors, no matter how many people they killed, they are no more evil than Andrea Pia Yates. The number of victims only belies their efficiency.

There were nineteen hijackers, all of them men. There were over 300 firemen, policemen, and other emergency personnel who went into the building, consciously walking into the jaws of death with one purpose in mind: saving lives, and one emotion: compassion. To be sure, there were women working with them. Those women, though in the minority, are no less heroes than the men. There were also women supporting the terrorists, if offering no more support than traveling along to America to legitimize their husbands presence. It is difficult to believe that the wives of these terrorists were completely unaware of their husbands mission.

Every day, in every town in America, and most towns world-wide, there are men, MEN, who get up and go to work in jobs that require them to put themselves in harms way. There are women, too, to be sure, who choose to take these risks, but they are overwhelmingly outnumbered by men. Why? Whatever the reason, men are far more likely than women to be attracted to these jobs. Also, men, by and large, are physically better equipped to be successful at them. They usually are bigger, stronger, and can run faster than women. They can usually carry a heavy burden longer than most women, which means that they can carry the equipment they need to the scene or can carry a victim away from the scene. Finally, the biology of the male brain lends itself to fight-or-flight decision-making, and this factor alone may make males considerably more successful in these roles.

A group of men in Flight 93 assessed their situation; some made phone calls: Todd Beamer to the Airfone operator and Thomas Burnett to his wife. They had a plan, and they needed to verify the circumstances. They acted decisively. From Flight 77, Barbara Olson called her husband and asked what she should tell the pilot to do. Flight Attendant Madeline Amy Sweeney, on Flight 11, called a colleague. ``I see water and buildings. Oh my God! Oh my God!'' was the best she could do. I don't wish to disparage these women. I believe they did the best could under the circumstances. Just to make these calls in and of itself is courageous, but it is not heroic. The men, for whatever reason, recognized their situation and took action. In the case of Flight 93, they knowingly sacrificed their lives in order to save others.

I want to make two points:

- There is enough evil to go around, and it is clear that women get as equal a distribution as men do. Evil may manifest itself differently in women than in men, but it no less prevalent.

- Men are more willing, are physically better equipped, and may be mentally better equipped for the kind of heroics that accompany law enforcement, firefighting, and emergency rescue work.

For the past twenty years or so, we have been listening to the feminists, male and female, talk of how machismo and testosterone are passe. Not only passe, but destructive. I say to you that it was testosterone and machismo that carried those firefighters up the stairs and those three men to the front of the airplane on September 11. And I say to you that testosterone and machismo have, again, demonstrated their value to society.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/25/0151234.shtml

MANN Chat: The Draft

Scott · 26 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tonight's on-line chat will be about the male-only military draft. Is it sexist? If so, what should be done about it? Should women be drafted, or should the draft be abolished? Or is there some other solution? Join us tonight to discuss these and other questions related to the draft and men's issues. I've begun to wonder if the draft could now become a common cause for young men that would bring them into the men's movement. If so, how should this be done? Click here for our on-line chat page and join us at 9:30 PM Eastern Time tonight!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/26/1355222.shtml

Should Men Be More Conniving To Be Equal?

Adam · 26 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I've a found an interesting article where "Doc Love" advises men to be more conniving so they can stand on an equal level with women. Perhaps this quote sums up the article better than I could: "You and your girlfriends say that I'm teaching men to be conniving women. Well, I couldn't have said it better myself. If fathers would teach their sons to be a little more conniving, then the war of the sexes might be a bit more of a fair fight instead of manslaughter." Heresy or honesty? Don't ask me, I just post articles around here :)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/25/2220206.shtml

Solving The Problem Of Child Support

Adam · 26 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Missingsomething.com has a list of 8 recommendations to solve the problem of child support, mainly by getting rid of the bureaucracy involved and maintaining the parent/child relationship by keeping it the way it was before divorce. One final recommendation I would add is joint physical custody, so that regardless of whom the NCP is, they can look after their kids directly, without compromising their relationship. Here's the link to it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/25/2221235.shtml

Genetics May Contribute to Higher Blood Pressure in Men

Nightmist · 26 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

According to this article from CourierPress.com, scientists may have discovered that a certain type of Y-chromosome (which starts the process of a fetus becoming male) may contribute to the fact that men are twice as likely as women to have high blood pressure until age 55.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/25/2334238.shtml

Female Fetus Advantages Actually Detrimental?

Nightmist · 27 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This short column on the New York Times Web site (free registration required) points out the well-known fact that females fetuses are less likely to be still-born or spontaneously aborted, but the last line struck me as an extension of the "men's shorter lifespans are a women's issue" argument: The W.H.O. warns, "When this female potential for greater longevity is not realized it is an indication of serious health hazards in their immediate environment," like malnutrition or neglect.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/25/2342214.shtml

Women Losing Battle of Sexes in Sports?

Nightmist · 27 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in the Salt Lake Tribune quotes a female "academic" who claims that the sports world (which she admits was created by men for men), particularly the Olympics, is discriminatory against women. Nevermind that every year the Olympic committee is adding more sports and medals for women athletes, she says. That's only a reminder that women have a long way to go.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/25/2348212.shtml

Playboy Claims Its Readership Is Stupid

Nightmist · 27 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This column in Playboy asserts that men are stupid. It backs up this assumption with statistics comparing the number of men in college versus the number of women. Further, it attempts to "guide" men in our efforts to date women "smarter" than we are. Obviously, Playboy's editors decided to trash their famous journalistic endeavors of the past in favor of taking feminist numbers at face value, without exploring the real reasons fewer men are in college or show any ambition these days. Namely, college campuses are politically correct and not male friendly places. Neither is the classroom.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/27/1454222.shtml

Young Men Need A Masculist Movement to Give Them Direction, Says Educator

Scott · 27 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

New Zealand's Stuff reports on a female educator who believes that boys currently have little direction and no true sense of what it means to be male, and for too many young men, prison is their only "male right of passage." She advocates for a men's movement, similar to feminism, that will give boys a strong identity and empower them to lead strong and healthy lives. "[Ms Lashlie] said the excitement of being truly male had been vaporised and washed away by feminism...She called for the boys' schools to publicly promote the place of men in society and celebrate their differences from women." You can read the story here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/27/1331254.shtml

Divorce Filings Dropped En Masse After 9/11 Attack

Scott · 27 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal submitted this article from the Houston Chronicle. Apparently, the number of divorce case dismissals has skyrocketed since the Sept. 11 attack. "Family-law attorneys have found that clients contemplating divorce, as well as those in the middle of one, now say they will try to patch things up. Family-law cases, the vast majority of which are divorces, have been dismissed in nearly three times the volume in the days after the tragedy as in the days before it." I guess the event really put people's problems in perspective.
Source: The Houston Chronicle [newspaper]

Title: Couples want peace at home

Author: Mary Flood

Date: September 25, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/27/1338233.shtml

Individualist Feminism: The Men's Movement's Sister?

Nightmist · 28 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In Wendy McElroy's latest column, she explains the differences between mainstream feminism and "individualist" feminism, which focuses on women's issues but seeks equal treatment of men and women under just law (women are neither discriminated against nor given special privleges compared to men). Although the column does not specifically address the men's movement, it does address some of the issues crucial therein. Mainstream feminism says, "Reform divorce laws to make them just." Individualist feminism says, "the very existence of marriage/divorce laws is an injustice because the State has no proper authority over what should be a private contract between individuals."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/26/2043217.shtml

The Lost Boys of Sudan

Scott · 28 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Bill Kuhl sent in an original article he wrote about the "lost boys of Sudan," a group of refugee boys and men who fled chaos and forced military service in their home country and who are now struggling to integrate into a new culture while trying to protect what is left of their own. It's an interesting read. You know the deal - click "Read More" below for the essay.

A Unique Refugee Phenomena

I recently learned of, what the website Refugees International calls a "unique phenomena in the refugee world, ... the lost boys of Sudan." To sum up their story, since 1983 the Sudan has been embroiled in an extremely bloody civil war in which all people in the country are in danger. There are no noncombatants in this war; civilians of all ages are routinely killed. In the late 1980's, a group of boys started literally circulating around the southern Sudan in an attempt to avoid being forced into military service. Any boys who were abducted by the guerrilla forces were sure to be forced into service. If they did not comply with their abductors, they faced being killed or being forced into some non-military form of servitude. Most of these boys had already lost family members in the fighting; many of them had lost both parents. Few if any of the boys in these drifting bands had any possessions other than the rags they wore. They lived in the bush, doing everything they possibly could to hide from the troops. The number of boys who eventually made their way from the Sudan to refugee camps in Ethiopia totalled 17,000. There, they were forced back into the Sudan where they again went on a long trek, this time to Kenya. About 10,000 managed to reach internationally-run refugee camps in Kenya. Along the way to Kenya, they lost many boys to the guerrilla troops, to disease, to starvation, to bombings and land mines and even to the lions who forage in that region of Africa.

Today, the "lost boys" are being placed in homes all around the world, including the United States. Now, many of the boys, some of them in their 20's, are facing a much different obstacle. They are trying to adjust to a new culture while at the same time trying to deal with their own quickly fading culture, which went the way of their families and their homeland. This compelling story of flight possesses a number of interesting angles from a men's activist point of view. What's very interesting is to read the recommendations made by the organization "Refugees International" on their website; this may be the only place where I have ever seen any organization recommend that a group of people be given asylum due, in part, to their being "male." Their website which contains a story about and recommendations for the "lost boys" can be found at www.refintl.org/bulletins/su_090998_01.htm. A wealth of other articles on the "lost boys" can be found by going into the Google search engine and searching under "lost boys of Sudan." One final note, it's interesting that when feminists are confronted with the fact that women are exempt from the military draft they often reply with some feminists tripe along the lines of, "Well men start the wars," or something about men being inherently aggressive and actually relishing the thought of going to war. Perhaps the reason the media has kept this story of 17,000 males who refuse to fight so hush-hush is because it flies in the face of such thinking.

Bill Kuhl

bridgewater6729@msn.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/27/2157218.shtml

"World's Smartest Human" Apologizes For Being Male

Nightmist · 28 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Cecil Adams, the pseudonym for the columnist who writes the Chicago Reader's "Straight Dope" column every week, apparently isn't really "The World's Smartest Human" after all. In this column about Kegel exercises, Cecil essentially apologizes to women for being male. All these years men have worried about how long it is, and now they have to worry about how strong it is. I'm not saying that makes up for labor pains, menstruation, and breast cancer, but at least guys don't have it all their way. Make up for breast cancer? Apparently, Cecil hasn't heard of prostate cancer. As for the rest, why should men be punished for woman's biology?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/28/1657228.shtml

Man Fined for Shaming Wife's Illicit Lover

Scott · 28 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in this short but interesting story, which details how a man whose wife was cheating on him put up a neon sign on his shop exposing the man she was having an affair with. The British courts fined Robert Sofolowski, claiming that he was invading the privacy of his wife's lover by posting the sign. Sofolowski replied, "I am the one who has been wronged...There is no reason for cuckolds like myself to hide themselves away."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/27/2210203.shtml

Don't Touch Your Crotch In Utah

Nightmist · 28 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in the Salt Lake Tribune reports on a recent Utah Supreme Court ruling which held that a 15-year-old boy could be charged with lewdness for grabbing his (clothed) crotch in public. The court apparently believes the act is equivalent to pubic masturbation. The story does point out that celebrities (Roseanne, Madonna, Michael Jackson) often grab their crotches in public without being charged with lewdness. I wonder how long it will be before Utah adopts the Tennessee and Mississippi laws which have made it illegal for a man to have an erection if he is in public view (even if said erection is clothed).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/28/1558201.shtml

Prisons Push Ban on Sexual Material

Nightmist · 29 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story from the Associated Press claims that MA officials are attempting to remove access to nudie magazines (like Playboy and Penthouse) from inmates. The officials use the feminist argument that nudie mags "desensitize" men (a fact often disputed by individualist feminists and men who know how to control their own libidos). This is interesting coming from an institution completely desensitized to the sexual frustrations of the imprisoned and male rape.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/28/1937209.shtml

WTC Victims Were Largely Male

Scott · 29 September 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent me this USA Today article, which announces that about 80 percent of the people who died in the WTC attacks, particularly those who died in the building, were men. "Eight of 10 were men, the average age was 40, and many were parents. "We saw the deaths of a lot of young fathers and fathers with young children," says David Blankenhorn, president of the Institute for American Values, a think tank on family issues. "It makes the whole thing that much more tragic."" Indeed it does.
Source: USA Today [newspaper]

Title: Most victims were male professionals; many were parents

Authors: Paul Overberg and Cheryl Phi

Date: September 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/09/29/2122256.shtml

Fertility Ethicists OK Sex Selection of Embryos

Nightmist · 1 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Under certain circumstances, says a fertility ethicist, it is OK for a couple to use invitro fertilization to choose the sex of their child. According to this article on Excite News, the ethicists say it's OK as long as the couple already has children of the opposite sex. Other ethicists were surprised by the decision, calling the selection of sex the start of a discrimination slippery slope which will end in selection of color, intelligence, etc. In other words, a lack of diversity.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/01/0113259.shtml

Gender Stereotypes Harmful To Children's Education

Nightmist · 1 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News reports that a new study on gender and ethnic stereotypes in education prove that such stereotypes can influence a child's performance in class and on tests. Surprisingly, both boys and girls between 8-10 years of age performed better when they were told that their sex was "better" than the other. Researchers chalk this up to that specific age group, when each sex fears "cooties" from the other.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/01/0144248.shtml

ASRM Says Ethicist's Sex Selection Comments Taken Out of Context

Nightmist · 1 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

After one fertility ethicist reported that it is OK for couples to choose the sex of their children under certain circumstances, the American Society of Reproductive Medicine issued a statement saying the ehticist's comments were taken out of context and that ASRM does not support sex selection. This story on Excite News says, however, that fertility clinics are already using the previous statement as a "go-ahead" to offer sex selection services to the public.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/01/0122207.shtml

Another Columnist Advocates Drafting Women

Nightmist · 1 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This column on Excite News supports changing the male-only status of the U.S. Selective Service. This author portrays The Draft as discriminatory against women rather than discriminatory against men (which I feel it is). Otherwise, he makes several good points about looking at the differences between individuals, not the differences between men and women. But there are differences within any group of men, and there are situations that certain men shouldn't be in. Not all men, simply by virtue of being men, are suited for any and every position in the military. Decisions about which men are suited for which position often are made on a case-by-case basis; it should be the same for women.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/01/0136224.shtml

Tai Chi May Boost Older Men's Circulation

Nightmist · 1 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This men's health article on Excite News claims that Tai Chi Chuan may be helpful in boosing older men's circulatory systems. "From the perspective of health promotion, Tai Chi is a suitable exercise for the elderly," Wang said. "It is a low-technology approach to conditioning that can be implemented with minimal cost and can be promoted easily in the elderly population owing to its slow and structured movements."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/01/0147231.shtml

Calcium May Increase Prostate Cancer Risks

Nightmist · 2 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This surprising article on Excite News claims that men who snack heavily on calcium foods like cheese, ice cream, and milk, may be at greater risk of developing prostate cancer. A high calcium intake, particularly from dairy products, may suppress blood levels of vitamin D. Besides serving as an important nutrient, vitamin D is a hormone that may protect against prostate cancer by preventing the proliferation of prostate cancer cells, Dr. June M. Chan, the study's lead author, told Reuters Health. Other researchers say evidence for the link between calcium and prostate health is debatable.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/01/0151200.shtml

Married Men Deserve More Credit

Scott · 2 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Scott Haltzman, MD writes "Felice J. Freyer, medical journalist for the Providence Journal, interviewed me about my perspective on men's role in relationships. As a psychiatrist specializing in husbands, I have long felt that men are held to a female standard in marriage. Freyer states: "As Haltzman sees it, men are naturally--indeed biologically--inclinded to express themselves in action rather than words." The journalist, on the other hand, reports the men she knows "have trouble shutting up.""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/01/1443230.shtml

DNA Paternity Tests Gaining Popularity in Moscow

Nightmist · 2 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article in the Moscow Times reports that DNA paternity testing is becoming a common solution for everything from visa applications to custody battles. The article also hints at how common paternity fraud may be in Russia. As strange as it may seem, some Western studies suggest that one out of every 10 children is not the biological offspring of the man officially recognized as the father.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/01/1611203.shtml

Australia Launches 24-Hour Helpline for Men

Nightmist · 2 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This press release documents Australia's first 24-hour helpline for men. The helpline has been established to help men cope with stress, depression, and other problems. "If this service saves one life, connects one child with its father or better, helps families deal with separation, it will be extremely worthwhile," Mr Anthony said.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/02/1727251.shtml

Domestic Violence Awareness Program Ignores Male Victims

Nightmist · 3 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month and, as many of us suspected, male victims are being ignored. This Web site focuses on Domestic Violence Awareness month as a time to acknowledge only female victims. This organization may benefit from a little enlightenment by some of our folks who are familiar with domestic violence against men.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/02/1835216.shtml

New DesertLight Journal, and a DV Awareness Campaign

Scott · 3 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett's excellent DesertLight Journal e-zine has reached issue 13, and can be read at this link. As October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, the focus is on the domestic abuse of men, with several interesting essays. Trudy's also been heading a campaign to get the media to cover battered men - click here for a letter template and how you can participate.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/03/1223209.shtml

Prenuptial Agreements to be Legally Tested

Scott · 3 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Cheddah submitted this Boston Globe article and writes "A prenuptial agreement might not be upheld because the woman may have been under "unfair" circumstances when she signed it - MA Probate and Family Court Judge Catherine Sabaitis ruled that the agreement was not fair and reasonable, noting that Susan DeMatteo did not fully explore her options. "I think this is a pivotal case for prenuptial agreements," said Mark T. Smith, one of Marty DeMatteo's lawyers. "If this decision is upheld, then it is essentially going to make prenuptial agreements unenforceable."" The ex-wife is complaining that her $35k/year alimony, house, car, and other benefits aren't satisfactory. The ex-husband also didn't earn his wealth - it was inherited. I think this is an obvious case of greed to the extreme. Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: How 'fair' must a prenuptial deal be?

Author: Kathleen Burge

Date: September 30, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/03/1248232.shtml

MANN Chat: The Draft, Part 2

Scott · 3 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tonight's Mensactivism.org chat will be a continuation of last week's discussion on the male-only military draft. Based on the great turnout we had last week and the depth of the discussions, this topic is worthy of another chat session. To participate, click here for our on-line chat page and log in tonight, 10/3 at 9:30 PM Eastern Time.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/03/1219218.shtml

Female-Only Shortlists for MPs in England

Scott · 3 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Vic writes "This is one of several articles in British Newspapers today that announce Labour's plans to introduce female-only shortlists in choosing MPs to feature in British Parliament as a means of "positive discrimination" against men to bump up the numbers of women in parliament. Is there any such thing as "positive discrimination"? - I'd like to know what others think, and would it lead to less able MPs standing in parliament? Is this cynical Blairite vote-catching in the same way Labour has a Minister for Women but not for men?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/03/1226220.shtml

Infomercial Promotes Prostate Cancer Awareness

Scott · 4 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

nagzi writes "I was just finishing watching Star Trek: TNG (late night) and before I had a chance to turn the TV off, an infomercial came on about a product that's supposed to help with prostate cancer. They gave some pretty scary stats: 10 million men are walking around and do not even know that they have a problem. They talked about some of the operations that men have to go through to treat the cancer -- very scary. Also, Dirk Benedick (StarBuck from Battlestar Galactica) was helping to promote the product. He talked about his experiences when he tried to talk about prostate cancer on national TV, and he basically was told to stop talking about it. Maybe someone in a men's issues group could get a hold of Mr. Benedick to promote prostate cancer. The product is called Beta Prostate, and no, I don't have anything to do with it. I just found it interesting that so much information was given, and that there was actually something about prostate cancer on TV."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/03/1230221.shtml

"Dear Abby" Acknowledges Male Victims of Abusive Relationships

Nightmist · 4 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Today's Dear Abby column includes a heart-wrenching letter from the parents of a man who lived with an abusive woman for years. Fortunately for him, he's broken free of that relationship, and still maintains contact with his children. The most important part of this column, however, is that Dear Abby acknowledges that women can be perpetrators as well as victims. Scott's update: We'd like to give credit to Neil Steyskal for submitting this too.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/04/1751241.shtml

Is Terrorism Male?

Nightmist · 4 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This column from jsonline.com claims that terrorism is "gendered male," and points to the fact that all 19 terrorists in the recent attacks on America were male. The author goes to great lengths to suggest that "not all men are terrorists," and even suggests that terrorism, like being a doctor and smoking, may be things that are male-dominated only for a time. From a women's studies source in the article: She would have been surprised, Ferree said, if it had been women who were flying planeloads of innocent people into buildings filled with more innocent people. We know females are capable of violence, but in most parts of the world women are far better known for raising children and nurturing family and community relationships, she said. The question in my mind is: why did the author choose this subject to write about at this time?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/04/1854227.shtml

Spas For Men Springing Up In Some Areas

Nightmist · 4 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Getting pampered in a spa used to be a mainly female pasttime, according to this short article, but now many men are starting to look for places of their own to improve their health and appearances. Enter a Parisian spa for men, which this fall is opening a spa for men in New York. It's a response to the growing numbers of guys sheepishly seeking help at traditional spas and cosmetic counters. "The idea is that men are too intimidated or embarrassed to ask the saleslady at Nordstrom about the bags under their eyes," says Sarah Anderson of the Grooming Lounge.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/04/192230.shtml

Indian Men Assist In Developing New Condoms

Nightmist · 5 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on azcentral.com reports that contraceptive use by men in India is extremely low, largely because of the high rate of failure of condoms. With that in mind, the India Council of Medical Research is measuring a variety of Indian men in order to create a variety of condom sizes, which they hope will reduce the failure rate. The ICMR officials said only three percent of Indians use condoms while 52 percent don't use any contraceptive method. " These measures could help protect men against unwanted children and disease.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/04/198214.shtml

War on Terrorism Renews Women in the Military Debate

Nightmist · 5 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article on jsonline.com discusses not women and the Draft, but women in the military in general. Opinions from both sides are well-represented: why women should be in combat roles and why they shouldn't. It's something to think about. From an advocate for women in combat: "Women are tougher than most people think, and they can shoot as well as any man, that's not sex-linked."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/04/1918254.shtml

Some Responses to Glenn Sacks' Articles

Scott · 5 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Glenn Sacks had some responses printed about his recent articles in the UCLA Daily Bruin. In one, Glenn is sharply criticized for his article about Afghanistan's history, but the final letter is a positive and insightful response to his article on Title IX. You can read the letters here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/05/0156241.shtml

Dan Curry Interviews Trudy Schuett from the DesertLight Journal

Scott · 5 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

DanCurry writes "The DesertLight Journal's publisher and online author Trudy Schuett will be interviewed on The Dan Curry Show this Saturday at 2PM Pacific time. Dan Curry hosts an Internet talk show focused primarily on men's issues. October being Domestic Violence Awareness Month, we want to focus on biases against men and realistic solutions for slowing the cycles of domestic violence and abuse. Dan Curry is also accepting requests and recommendations for interviewees and guests on future shows. You can submit those here. Questions for guests can be submitted before or during the show here. All you need to listen is Windows Media Player or any third party MP3 player. Webcasting is made available through the services of Live365.com. If you have trouble listening to the show from my site, help is available here."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/05/1636247.shtml

New Program for Female Juvenile Offenders

Scott · 6 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes *"While the program mentioned in this article from Connecticut's Journal Inquirer appears mostly focused on teaching girls to further manipulate their 'victimhood' as a way to success in life, at least there's an acknowledgement of the increase in females committing violent crimes."*Source: The Journal Inquirer [newspaper]

Title: New law requires special programs for girls in juvenile justice, DCF systems

Author: Kym Soper

Date: October 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/05/1641239.shtml

Feminist's Anti-American Speech Causes Uproar

Nightmist · 6 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Canada.com details a recent Canadian controversy in which a former president of NAC spoke to a women's conference (to much applause) about America's "trail of blood," adding that people should not feel pain for the deaths of those who were attacked and killed on Sept. 11. (One wonders if she would feel the same had 80 percent of the victims been female.) Naturally, the speech has generated much controversy. One interesting thing about this woman, though, is her stance on mainstream feminism: As the outspoken leader of the NAC, Thobani created much controversy when she said in 1995 that only white, middle-class women had benefited from the feminist movement. Although I do not agree with her anti-American rant, I actually do tend to agree with her statement about the feminist movement.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/06/1442243.shtml

Men's Health Medical Test Table

Scott · 6 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Intellihealth.com printed a very useful article about men's health which includes a table of what kinds of tests men should get and how often, along with a description of what the test is for and how they are done. Please take a moment to check this out and see if you're due for any medical screenings!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/06/1522220.shtml

About.com's Coverage of DV Awareness Month

Scott · 6 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "Featured yesterday on the About.com portal site, is coverage that various "About Guides" are giving to DV Awareness Month. Paul Reed, author of the "Guide to Current Events: Law" section was first on 10/1 with a balanced view of DV as it affects both men and women. Rod Powers, from the "Guide to U.S. Military" section, also admits he's seen it both ways in military families. About.com has a variety of sites devoted to specific women's issues, while the Fatherhood and Men's Health sites are the only ones for men. The Men's Health section is currently without a Guide."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/06/1656238.shtml

DivorcePort Covers War and Gender

Scott · 7 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "Since the September 11 attacks, DivorcePort.com has begun offering extensive coverage of current events as they relate to the Men's Movement. DivorcePort provides a broad range of links related to men, activism, ideology, community support, legal resources, and many other resources."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/06/176204.shtml

Call For Masculist Literature For New Anthology

Nightmist · 7 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I am now seeking written works (fiction, non-fiction, poetry, journalistic commentary/articles) for publication in a new anthology of masculist literature. I plan to compile these works over a year's time and publish them as a collection in both e-book and physical form (if possible). Any writers interested in contributing to this compendium may do so by e-mailing me at nightmist@mensactivism.org. Click "Read More" below for full details.

Anthology Submission Requirements

- Work must be submitted in either Word, HTML, or text format.
- There is no specific length requirement, but considering that this is an anthology of many authors, we don't want one dominated the entire book. I'd recommend that longer works be no longer than 10,000 words.
- We are attempting to cover ALL aspects of the men's movement in some form or other. That means you have a wide range of topics to choose to write about. Because we don't want everyone writing about the same topic, it would be wise to submit your topic idea to me before you begin writing or submit your work.
- After all works have been collected, they will be judged for inclusion by a yet-to-be-determined team of judges. The final work will be co-edited by myself and Steve Imparl.
- You will retain the copyright on any work you submit to us. We only ask permission to edit your work for mistakes and clarity, and for the rights to publish it in this anthology and any future revisions or redistributions of this anthology.
- There is no guarantee of financial reward for your work in this anthology. It's a labor of love for now. If it does end up turning a profit, we will distribute those profits equally among the authors.
- All works will be given equal consideration. We do have a couple of really big names who have expressed an interest in contributing to this anthology. However, we will not be judging works on name recognition or value. Works will be judged on their relevance to the overall topic of masculism and quality of writing.

Submission Ideas

We are looking for works about any and all of the following:

- Divorce
- Fatherhood
- Choice for Men
- Men and the media
- Male bashing
- Male stereotypes (breaking the molds)
- Male stereotypes (fulfilling the old roles)
- Men's Health
- Education
- Feminism
- Comparisons of Individualist Feminism and the Men's Movement
- War and the Selective Service

- Domestic Violence
- Male rape
- The criminalization of men/men in prison
- Circumcision
- The feminization of boys/young men
- False accusations
- Myths of oppression by men (wage gap, etc.)

Types of Works

We are accepting almost any kind of literary work for this anthology, including:

- Poetry
- Fiction
- Non-fiction essays
- Illustrations
- Journalistic editorials/commentary/articles

Questions and submissions should be directed to nightmist@mensactivism.org.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/07/1947239.shtml

Upcoming Movie About Father's Rights

Scott · 8 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "Julianna Margulies (ex-Carol) will next star in the movie Evelyn, where she will play a woman who helps Pierce Brosnan's character regain custody of his children, who were taken from him by Irish authorities. The movie may also star Stephen Rea and Aidan Quinn and will be directed by Bruce Beresford. There is no release date yet announced." It would be great to see some mainstream movies include some men's rights issues. I hope Trudy will give us further updates when she hears any more news about this particular film.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/08/0337211.shtml

The Draft is Discriminatory

Scott · 8 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Paul Clements had an excellent letter printed in Foster's Daily Democrat about the unfairness of the sexist military draft. Clements lists a series of tasks that women could perform in the military without going into combat, so he avoids that hot-button issue entirely. I have to say I agree completely with his comments.
Source: Foster's Daily Democrat [newspaper]

Title: The draft is discriminatory [Letter to the Editor]

Author: Paul Clements

Date: October 6, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/08/0430209.shtml

Heroes make a comeback

Adam · 9 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There is a great article from the Washington Times about men as heroes making a comeback (have they ever really been gone? I doubt it). Personally, I think it should have been called "Men make a comeback" as it shows masculinity is on the ascent to greater things. Anyway, it's well worth reading, so why not read it here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/09/0018249.shtml

An Interview With Camille Paglia

Adam · 9 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Getting straight to the point, this quote is what caught my eye: "this is the Gloria Steinem line: Masculinity is something that is pernicious and is the cause of all wars and destruction and violence and battering against women, and slowly we're going to be programming it out of our youth. I said it in the Playboy interview: All it takes is one natural disaster for that entire artificial world to come crumbling down, and suddenly everyone will be screaming and yelling for the plumbers and the construction workers. Only masculine men of the working class will hold the civilization together. " Does this remind you of the WTC? The rest of the interview is an interesting read, to be sure.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/09/0021208.shtml

New Guy Code Column Focuses on Men's Activism

Nightmist · 9 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

About a month ago, I approached Elliot Zaret, the editor of The Guy Code about writing a bi-weekly men's issues column for his e-zine. After reading some of my clips, he welcomed me aboard. Here is my debut column on his site about a false accusations incident that nearly ruined my life way back in high school. Look for my column on The Guy Code every other week.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/09/1436222.shtml

At Home Dads Convention Coming Soon

Nightmist · 10 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Slowlane.com has announced an At Home Dads Convention to be held at Oakton Community College in Des Plaines, Ill. for later this month. A new, wide-open discussion format and two keynote speakers focusing on the joys of fatherhood through all ages await at-home dads attending the 6th Annual At-Home Dads' Convention at Oakton Community College, just outside of Chicago, on Saturday, November 17.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/09/1542210.shtml

Why Women Aren't Required to Register For The Draft

Nightmist · 10 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Finally, after all the debate, here it is from the horse's mouth: Why women aren't required to register for the draft. A supplemental backgrounder document is also available. To draft women, military policy must first be changed to allow them into combat roles. The wording of the law must then be made gender neutral. Then funding must be provided for requiring women to register. Also from the backgrounder: The U.S. came close to drafting women during World War II, when there was a shortage of military nurses. However, there was a surge of volunteerism and a draft of women nurses was not needed.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/10/0443229.shtml

MANN Chat: The Media and Domestic Violence

Scott · 10 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I know it's a little late notice, but tonight's Mensactivism.org chat will be on how the media has handled domestic violence this month. Personally, I haven't seen a lot on the subject considering the current focus on terrorism. This could have both good effects and negative ones. Come to our chat by visiting this page at 9:30 PM Eastern Time tonight (10/10), and share your views.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/10/1952239.shtml

Dads Bring Important, Unique Style of Parenting

Scott · 11 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There's an awesome article on DrKoop.com about the ways fathers interact with babies, and the benefits of dad's unique style of parenting. Everything from how dads hold and talk to babies to the way they encourage rough-and-tumble play styles, which actually makes children less aggressive as they get older, is mentioned. It's a great article to show others when discussing the importance of fathers even when a child is in its infancy. Source: DrKoop.com

Title: The Daddy Difference

Author: Kim Lachance

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/10/2022212.shtml

A Crisis of Fatherhood Advocates

Adam · 11 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Stephen Baskerville wrote an article for the Washington Post several months ago in defense of fathers. However, his two biggest critics were David Blankenhorn, author of "Fatherless America : Confronting Our Most Urgent Social Problem" and Wade F. Horn, president of the National Fatherhood Initiative. I have to say, for father's advocates, their letters are quite surprising. I did some digging and found this interview with Wade Horn where he says "...Some are fathers' rights groups, keeping you angry and outraged. They give you excuses why you haven't been a good guy." That was said by the man who's the President of the National Fatherhood Initiative? You work it out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/10/2332248.shtml

Zubaty's Book in Print

Scott · 11 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Rich Zubaty, a men's issues author and just an interesting person in general, had his latest book, What Men Know That Women Don't, put into print. You can still buy in in electronic form (for half the price), and if you haven't read it, I'd highly recommend it. I'd also welcome any book review submissions from readers who have read this book, or any other books related to men's issues. Click here to get a copy of Zubaty's book from the Virtual BookWorm store.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/11/197225.shtml

Ford Discriminating Against White Men

Adam · 12 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

More "Positive Discrimination" against White Men (the only group discrimination is positive against it seems) To quote Ford "Action include delaying the hiring, promotion and referral of white males unless there is a good business case to bring them in before year end. Actions also include the pulling ahead of any promotions, upgrades, referral etc of non-white males. " notice how they say "white males" to deny them basic humanity as much as possible. Don't forget to go here to see for yourself. Terms such as "terrorized by tolerance" and "silenced by sensitivity" spring to mind....

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/11/1838252.shtml

Visitation and Child Support Should Be Enforced Together

Scott · 12 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

David Lubofsky from Guam wrote a great article about the correlation between visitation rights and child support compliance. He argues that the child support industry could save immensely by enforcing visitation rights along with child support orders, and that too often, "deadbeat dads" are the ones routinely denied visitation with their children. "Eloquently put by one parent, not seeing my kid and having to pay child support resembles taxation without representation."
Source: Guam Pacific Daily News [newspaper]

Title: Develop strong laws on child custody; enforce visitation orders

Author: David Lubofsky

Date: September 29, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/11/1922252.shtml

Funny Guise: Men and Humor

Scott · 12 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Funny Guise is an examination of the way men use humor in their day-to-day lives. Presenter Paul Ramsay uses jokes and commercials focusing on men in a program that celebrates the male sense of humor while challenging men to think about the pitfalls of some uses of humor. Paul suggested that the primary form of communication for men is through humor, and that within the broader male culture there is a subculture of humor which men are pretty dependent on. I attended Paul's presentation at UNH this past Tuesday night and I can't speak highly enough of it. If you're involved in any campus programming, please get in touch with Paul, as I'm sure he'd be glad to share notes. His e-mail is: pramsay@cisunix.unh.edu.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/11/1936247.shtml

Forensic Consultant and Author Dean Tong on the Dan Curry Show

Scott · 12 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

DanCurry writes "Internationally noted forensic consultant and author Dean Tong discusses his new book Elusive Innocence: Survival Guide For The Falsely Accused as we explore solutions to violence and abuse in the home during Domestic Violence Awareness Month. Dean reveals the differences between real and unreal child abuse and domestic violence allegations. With over 1600 TV and radio talk show appearances, he delivers common sense advice for men (and women) caught in the web of false allegations. On the Dan Curry Show this Saturday at 2 PM Pacific Time. Dan Curry hosts an Internet Talk Radio program focused on mens issues. You can submit questions for the guest here, both prior to and during the show."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/12/1237230.shtml

Woman Testicle Ripper has Charges Dropped

Scott · 12 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

rparent32 sent in this short story from Ananova.com and writes "[The] Crown (Prosecutor) dropped charges against a woman because of the unlikely possibility of conviction. Any Canadians out there?" What is most disturbing is the fact that the man feels he "deserved" the assault and has been the butt of jokes over it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/12/0323258.shtml

Judge Denies Request to Dismiss Circumcision Civil Suit

Scott · 13 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Dan Bollinger from Nocirc.org sent in a press release stating that a federal court has denied the request to dismiss a case in which a 19 year-old man is suing the doctor and hospital that circumcised him when an infant. "This landmark case brings into question whether a physician can legally obtain consent from a mother while she is debilitated by post-surgical pain and anesthesia, and also raises issues regarding removal of healthy, normal tissue from a non-consenting minor for non-therapeutic reasons." Click Read More below for the complete press release.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

CONTACT: Marilyn Milos, 1-415-488-9883

Physician and Hospital Motion to Dismiss Circumcision Case Denied

Precedent Set for Men to Sue For Being Circumcised as Infants

SUFFOLK COUNTY, NEW YORK - Judge Leonard Wexler, of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York, denied last week the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim in the precedent-setting case of William Stowell, a 19-year-old who filed a civil suit against the physician that circumcised him as a newborn and the hospital where he was circumcised.

Plaintiff William G. Stowell, born on December 22, 1981, at Good Samaritan Hospital in West Islip, NY, was circumcised the following day by his mother's obstetrician, Frank P. Cariello, MD. This landmark case brings into question whether a physician can legally obtain consent from a mother while she is debilitated by post-surgical pain and anesthesia, and also raises issues regarding removal of healthy, normal tissue from a non-consenting minor for non-therapeutic reasons. Depending upon the facts of the case and the jurisdiction, a male who was circumcised as an infant may be able to file a lawsuit of this type within 1, 2, or 3 years of reaching the age of majority, the time depending upon the law of the state in which he was circumcised.

The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) first acknowledged that there is no medical justification for routine circumcision in 1971. Last year, the AAP reaffirmed its policy that does not recommend routine circumcision. The American Medical Association recently concurred, calling routine circumcision "non-therapeutic." No national or international medical organization recommends routine circumcision.

The case received national attention earlier this year, after Mr. Stowell filed a civil lawsuit against his doctor and hospital on December 19, 2000. The Stowell case has been featured on Good Morning America, and in Newsweek, The New York Post, and numerous other radio talk show programs and news articles.

Mr. Stowell is represented by John L. Juliano of East Northport, NY, and David J. Llewellyn of Conyers, Georgia. Mr. Llewellyn, who regularly represents the victims of circumcision throughout the country, can be reached at 1-770-918-1911.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/12/0317231.shtml

NCFC-NH Meeting Announcement

Scott · 13 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This Sunday @ 7 PM on 14 October, 2001, at the Newington, NH Town Hall, The New Hampshire Chapter of NCFC will meet to determine the possibilities for promoting and protecting the father/child relationship, and other men's issues. NCFC-NH also recently set up a web site at ncfcnh.org.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/12/1252228.shtml

Men Are Fashionable Again

Scott · 13 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in another article praising the virtues of masculine men. Peggy Noonan's Wall Street Journal editorial can be read here. "We are experiencing a new respect for their old-fashioned masculinity, a new respect for physical courage, for strength and for the willingness to use both for the good of others." Also a belated thanks to WasatchFrontMan for sending this story to us.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/12/1244246.shtml

Affirmative Action Unconstitutional in New Jersey Casinos

Adam · 15 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Breaking news just in, here's the lowdown: "A federal judge on Wednesday struck down affirmative action regulations that governed virtually every aspect of hiring in New Jersey's casinos, finding that they violate the 14th Amendment rights of white and male workers." I don't know about you, But all I can say is it's about time! this looks like it'll be the first of many cases, a small victory but in many ways a great one. Have a look at the full article to find out more.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/12/1918209.shtml

War, Violence Are Not Masculine Says Iowa U. Forum

Nightmist · 15 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News delves a little deeper into the issues of war and the gender roles involved in it that have been discussed in so much depth on this site recently. According to the article, not every country is like the U.S. in its wariness about sending women into battle. In Sri Lanka, as a matter of fact, 35 percent of the combat forces are female. "Women have actively participated as perpetrators of violence," Eyango said. "Historically, women have been combatants because of their physique and ability to conceal weapons. Women make up 35 percent of the fighting force in Sri Lanka."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/15/0419235.shtml

Men Less Afraid of Flying Than Women, Survey Shows

Scott · 15 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve writes "This story from the Associated Press reports on a recent poll showing that women are much more likely than men to be afraid of flying in airplanes. The AP poll found that 6 out of 10 women are bothered by flying, as compared to 3 out of 10 men. 27% of women said they are "afraid" of flying, while only 10% of men said they are afraid. I'd be interested in the thoughts of other Mensactivism.org members about: 1 - Reasons for the gap between men's fears about flying and women's fears about flying, and 2 - The policy implications of this difference, if any."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/15/0247209.shtml

Ford Worker May Keep Confidential Documents

Nightmist · 15 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story on Excite News reports some good news for those of us dismayed by the anti-male discrimination policies of Ford Motor Co. A Ford worker allegedly stole human resources documents which prove Ford's discrimination practices (we saw portions of those documents in a previous post here, I believe). A judge has ruled that the worker does not need to return those documents to Ford, and portions of them have actually been read into the court's records.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/15/0428256.shtml

Sperm Gene Discovery May Create New Contraception And Fertility Possibilities

Nightmist · 15 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Scientists have discovered a gene which apparently controls the speed of human sperm, and may result in new contraceptives for men by blocking this gene. On the other hand, repairing a defective copy of of this gene could help cure infertile men (if their infertilty is a result of the defective gene).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/15/0443236.shtml

Glenn Sacks Examines Domestic Violence Myths

Nightmist · 16 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In this article from the Daily Bruin, Glenn Sacks examines some popular feminist myths about domestic violence in honor of Domestic Violence Awareness Month. Serious research on domestic violence overwhelmingly asserts that domestic assault is committed by both men and women and that, by using weapons and the element of surprise, women are abusing their male partners as often as vice versa. Only about a quarter of violent heterosexual relationships fit the feminist "man/aggressor, woman/victim" model - about the same percentage as fit the "woman/aggressor, man/victim" model.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/15/0450202.shtml

Free Speech Hating Feminist Accused of Hate Speech

Nightmist · 16 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy's latest column on Fox News explores the irony of a Canadian anti-free speech feminist's recent anti-American speech. Her own government, which sponsors her with Canadian tax dollars, is now attempting to distance itself from her. According to McElroy, this woman has for years claimed that free speech is a white male plot to oppress women, and that women could only obtain power by suppressing free speech.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/16/006233.shtml

Sacks Again Refutes DV Myths

Scott · 16 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Glenn Sacks, one of the only regularly published male columnists who writes about gender issues from a perspective unapologetically sympathetic to men, is at it again. This time he has an editorial which made it into the Los Angeles Daily Journal and the San Francisco Daily Journal, with an article similarly themed to his Daily Bruin one on the truth about domestic violence. This is particularly significant since the two newspapers are targeted to and read by legal professionals, including lawyers and judges. Since I don't have links to his story on either of those two newspapers, you can read it on his web site here. All I can say is, go Glenn!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/16/0232228.shtml

Women's Educational Equity Act is No Longer Necessary

Scott · 16 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in this report by The Heritage Foundation. Krista Kafer writes that the Women's Educational Equity Act is currently wasting taxpayer dollars that could be used to help economically disadvantaged children, which are currently the ones in most need of more educational resources. In the process, Kafer debunks the myth that "schools shortchange girls," and points out many areas where boys are doing very poorly. The report seems targeted to lawmakers, and includes important graphs and statistical information.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/16/1353236.shtml

Teen Boys Face Years of Stigma For Minor Infractions

Nightmist · 17 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in the Detriot Free Press highlights a major flaw in the sexual offenders registry system used all over this country: it can stigmatize men as rapists or pedophiles, even if their actions weren't consistent with those crimes. He was 16, wanting to be one of the guys, playing truth or dare. The dare: touch a girl's breast during a football game at Hazel Park High School last year. He did. As a result, the boy will be branded as a sex criminal until the year 2024.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/16/2020200.shtml

DesertLight Journal No. 14

Scott · 17 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Need I say more? DLJ number 14 is out, and can be read at the usual spot. The focus again is on domestic violence, including a summary I wrote about Day 1 of my DV awareness project at UNH. Enjoy!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/17/0139236.shtml

Criminalizing Masculinity

Scott · 17 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "This article is an important commentary on the destruction of maleness at the hands of feminists that comes at a critical time, when we now begin to resurrect our recognition of the value of machismo and testosterone in the towers of the WTC and the mountains of Afghanistan. An unspoken message here is that the feminists have done real damage to the military and that maybe it's time for the dismantling of the Pentagon's Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services (DACOWITS)." Thanks also to Neil Steyskal for submitting this story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/17/170253.shtml

California Governor Addresses Men's Rights! Well, Sort of...

Scott · 18 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes *"Governor Davis of California just vetoed SB 700, a California bill that would give special child visitation rights to "Any female prisoner serving a term of imprisonment subject to Section 3041 who has not had a release date" but not to males in a similar situation. Davis vetoed the bill for reasons mostly having to do with security. He did mention that it excludes males, but then he cites the problem as one of "costly litigation" rather than civil rights. Again, men don't really have rights. Here is all he says on the discrimination: 'Of additional concern is that by permitting specified female prisoners, but not similarly classified males, to have family visits, could lead to costly litigation due to its gender-specific provisions.' Thanks Governor Davis. Sort of."*

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/18/1351248.shtml

Paul Craig Roberts on Domestic Violence

Scott · 18 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Not PC sent in Paul Craig Roberts' latest article from TownHall.com. In it, Roberts talks about the ways "propaganda has crowded out truth" in domestic violence awareness, with companies such as Philip Morris sponsoring one-sided advertisements "designed to arouse anger at men." Roberts also brings up the Super Bowl Sunday DV myth, which I think serves as an excellent example of how the media goes overboard when trying to report on sensational news (especially the kind that denigrates men at the same time).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/18/1412213.shtml

Wales Man Refunded Child Support After Proving He Wasn't the Father

Scott · 18 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In some very encouraging news, a man from Wales (UK) will receive a check for 30k pounds, plus interest, after paying child support for seven years for a child that he never fathered. He discovered this fact after taking a DNA paternity test. Gerard Bradbury decided to take the test as the CS payments began to become "crippling" to him. Bradbury said, "I don't begrudge the child a penny but I hate being taken for a fool. The last few years have been a nightmare. But now at last I can get on with my life." This was noted as the second time in Britain that a man was able to stop paying child support when backed by a DNA test. You can read the BBC story at this link.
Source: BBC

Title: CSA pays back 'wrong' dad

Author: Unknown

Date: October 17, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/18/2156227.shtml

Glenn Sacks on the Dan Curry Show

Scott · 19 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

DanCurry writes "Glenn Sacks will be on the Dan Curry show
Saturday, October 20th starting at 2PM Pacific Time.
Glenn is the only regularly published Columnist in the US who writes about gender issues from a perspective unapologetically sympathetic to men.
We will be discussing some of his recent articles, including Domestic Violence: A Two-Way Street and more. You can submit questions prior to the show or in realtime via this form. As always, you can set the pace for future shows by suggesting a guest."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/19/1423231.shtml

Dear Abby Advises Husband Reader About Domestic Violence

Scott · 19 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Dear Abby's column today is about a violent woman. It's interesting that she didn't tell the writer to call the police and get away from his wife fast."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/19/2117220.shtml

UNH Student Speaks Out Against Domestic Violence Against Men

Scott · 20 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Foster's Daily Democrat ran a story about my domestic violence awareness project at UNH. Sean Goodwin did a decent overall job reporting on it but I feel the article reads very choppy and is somewhat confusing. Dr. Murray Straus is quoted extensively in it, and was an excellent source to help balance the article out. I just wish they could have made it clearer that I'm insisting that the sociology studies show that men and women abuse each other at about equal rates, which isn't clear at all from the article, and was the main point of my press release. Source: Foster's Daily Democrat [newspaper]

Title: UNH senior getting the word out about domestic violence awareness against men

Author: Sean Goodwin

Date: October 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/19/225233.shtml

NH Bill Proposes to Ban No-Fault Divorces for Couples with Minor Children

Scott · 21 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kingsley Morse, Jr. sent me an e-mail about a new law proposed in the New Hampshire legislature. HB1301 would prohibit married couples from obtaining no-fault divorces if they have any children under the age of 18. I'm curious, what do readers think of this? It certainly seems like a great way to reduce the ability of selfish parents to harm their children through the process of divorcing, but if they're that selfish to begin with, are they really better off staying together? Another question that popped into my mind is, could this give rise to more false accusations against men by encouraging women to use this route to get out of an unsatisfactory marriage? I'm a bit lukewarm on this one, though I do support the intentions of the bill.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/21/226220.shtml

Suicide in Men Over 50: An Epidemic

Scott · 22 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

There is an important article posted to the Men's Health America mailing list that includes some statistics about suicide. Sadly, suicide for men overall has gone up for men and down for women between 1970 and 1998, and most disturbingly is a significant increase in sucides by men over the age of 50. Please check out this posting and keep it for reference.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/22/0132242.shtml

The Farce of Feminism

Nightmist · 22 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This editorial in Harvard University's Harvard Crimson laments the modern face of feminism, pointing out that while the movement once had a noble cause--equality--it is now simply a means for women to paint themselves as victims. The author also points out that modern feminism results in discrimination against men by women. It's an interesting read, and there's a bonus: the author is female.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/22/1547257.shtml

Playing Soccer Strengthens Young Men's Bones

Nightmist · 22 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article on Excite News reports on an interesting study which found that young men who played soccer prior to puberty had heavier bone density in their legs and spine than those who were more sedentary. Health researchers say the activity of these young men may prevent them from having bone-related diseases or problems later in life.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/22/1611257.shtml

The BBC's Reporting of Afghan Refugees

Scott · 23 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Les Farkas sent in a letter he wrote to the BBC for their focus on female refugees from Afghanistan. Les is encouraging us to also write in and get some exposure on major news web sites such as the BBC, which prints letters from readers. As he wrote me, "The more society whines about unfairness to women, the more I feel men being written off or disposed of someway, somehow. In the midst of all the sentimentality over females, we must never stop reminding people, whether they like to hear it or not, that the well being of the other half of humanity should also be of concern!" Read More below to view his letter. And send yours in too!(Aside: If you do contact the BBC, don't forget to praise the Brits.
They are good people who are on our side in this time of crisis.)

To the Editor:

The "role" of afghan women in this conflict is the same for women the world over in all conflict zones: that is, to DO NOTHING while their men and boys are killed , herded and conscripted into war and violence! I don't feel half as sorry for afghan women as I do for their miserable men and boys. How do we weigh the moral outrage of not allowing women to go about uncovered, as opposed to conscripting eleven year old boys? Talk about a loss of freedom! These are many of the victims of the US military hardware. Who compels this from females? Male refugees trying to flee this madness are also sometimes detained from leaving Afghanistan, forced to fight. I am continuously annoyed by society whining about unfairness to women while overlooking greater injustices against men!

Les Farkas

lfarkas@enteract.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/22/2026223.shtml

Girl Sues Father For Computer, Tennis Racquet... And Wins

Nightmist · 23 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The battle for men's rights in Scotland is far from over, as evidenced by this story in The Scotsman. After successfully suing her father to pay for her education, a 17-year-old girl sued him again (and won) for a computer and a tennis racquet. Naturally, the father in this story is painted as cold and heartless. His side of the story, in fact, isn't even presented.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/22/1927231.shtml

Dealing With a "Psycho" Girlfriend

Nightmist · 23 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This advice column on AskMen.com attempts to help a young man deal with his "psycho" girlfriend. Apparently, this lady latched herself onto him and, when he tried to get away, threatened him, destroyed his car, and even falsely accused him of sexual harassment. Be afraid, be very afraid. Thousands of men across America let their guard down, thinking that just because they're with a woman, they have nothing to fear. But the fact remains that a stranger is a stranger and you will never know what they're capable of until you've lived with them long enough to understand their character and even then, you still never know.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/22/1637241.shtml

Chemical Sperm Substitute Allows Baby-Making Without Men

Nightmist · 23 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in Australia's Herald Sun reports on another new technique for women which will allow them to conceive children without men. Scientists have engineered synthetic sperm which clones the 23 chromosomes from the human female egg, completing the number of chromosomes necessary for an egg to begin cell division and develop into an embryo. This path is filled with dangerous consequences, though, and not just for men. It could also be dangerous for the child produced by such means. "The big risk with this parthenogenesis is if you've got bad genes . . . (you would be) very concerned about abnormalities of the offspring.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/23/1445200.shtml

Replacing Father's Day with a "Men's Day of Shame"

Scott · 23 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve writes "An NZ lawyer is starting a campaign to rename Father's Day into Men's Day of Shame for sexual abuse. The full story can be read here. I have posted my own plan for protest here." This literally turns my stomach. From the article: "New Zealand could lead the way internationally if "good" men stood up in shame and denounced the sex crimes committed by other men." Good men standing up "in shame?" On Father's Day? This is one of the most degrading things I've heard of in a long time.Source: New Zealand Herald [newspaper]

Title: Father's Day should be a day of shame: lawyer

Author: Mary Longmore

Date: October 22, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/23/1647255.shtml

MANN Chat: Legalizing Choice for Men

Scott · 24 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tonight's Mensactivism.org chat will be on the topic of men's reproductive rights (also referred to as "Choice for Men"). As you know, women have multiple options to decline parenthood, including abortion and baby-abandonment laws. Men, on the other hand, have no fail-safe methods for planning their own family life. But did you know that there are cases where boys have been raped and then sued for child support? That Georgia's Supreme Court has even admitted that the laws discriminate against men? Check out www.choiceformen.com for some good background reading and then click here at 9:30 PM Eastern Time on Wednesday, Oct. 24 to log in and participate in the discussion.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/24/0334209.shtml

A New Alliance?

Scott · 24 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I've been having some discussions with Wendy McElroy, who is recognized as a leader in the "Individualist Feminist" movement. iFeminism, as it's called, is far removed from NOW-ideologies and dogma, and from the number of articles she's written on false accusations, domestic violence against men, and the inconsistencies of mainstream feminism, she has consistently given men a fair shake in her writing. Wendy and I have been discussing ways to try to work together on common goals that both Mensactivism.org and iFeminism.com share, but I want to get reader feedback on this idea. Click "Read More" below to read more info and please post your thoughts on all of this! I value and will consider all thoughts by Mensactivism.org readers on how to handle this potential alliance.

More background on iFeminism:

Individualist feminism, as I mentioned above, is nothing like the feminist movement run by Patricia Ireland, Andrea Dworkin, and others like them. Individualist feminism focuses...well, on individualism. Most women (and yes, there are also male iFeminists) in this group tend to have opposite views than the mainstream feminist movement. Many tenets of the iFeminist movement are:

- Pro-capitalism: McElroy in particular is a very strong libertarian and capitalistic thinker. Followers of Ayn Rand's philosophy tend to take to iFeminism, because of the strong support for laissez faire capitalism and an open democracy.
- Pro-second amendment: Many iFeminists have been outspoken for the rights of Americans to own guns.
- Free speech activists: The need for free speech is an obvious aspect of iFeminism. After all, they're speaking out against the politically correct brand of feminism that wants to censor opposing views. Also, many women and men in this movement are pro-pornography, as part and parcel of free speech.
- Pro-men's rights: Most significantly to us, many iFeminists have spoken out on behalf of men's rights. Whether it's debunking the myth that only women are victims of domestic violence, or pointing out that all fathers are not potential child molesters, iFeminists have done a great deal of activism on behalf of men.

In short, the "feminism" in iFeminism doesn't have the negative connotations that that we normally associate it with. In fact, I'd say iFeminism is even different from "equity feminism," a term made popular by Christina Hoff Sommers. CHS and other equity feminists often tend to have a conservative agenda, but iFeminists seem to be of a more varied political and philosophical background.

Some links to read up on:

An overview of individualist feminism

Speaking out against myths about domestic violence

Refuting the idea that all fathers are potential child molesters

The iFeminist.com web site.

So what will this "alliance" entail?

First, let me explain what a potential partnership with iFeminism.com will not entail. I do not intend to compromise the focus and purpose of The Men's Activsm News Network, which serves to inform and empower readers about men's rights issues. Mensactivism.org and iFeminism.com will remain independent entities, each with their own respective web sites and memberships. We will not have editorial or censorial control over the other, but will share news and information that both groups are interested in. There will be no administrative changes to the web sites, and I'm not planning to add or remove any of our Mensactivism.org co-administrators.

For example, iFeminism and Mensactivism.org are both interested in exposing inconsistencies in the mainstream feminist movement. We both promote the ideologies of free speech over politically correct censorship, the civil liberties of men (and women) accused of domestic violence and/or rape, and equality for men and women under the law. Wendy's iFeminist e-mail newsletter often includes links to the same stories posted to Mensactivism.org. I'm sure both of us have used the other as a place to check for news stories relevant to our readership already.

Some examples of joint projects iFeminism.com and Mensactivism.org could work on are: a joint chat room and/or bulletin board, or a mutual letter writing or awareness campaign, etc. Wendy has also suggested that we get a joint anthology started about gender equality and justice, with content from both men and women. There are many interesting possibilities.

What's in it for us?

A very important question, of course. :)

Credibility. As unfair as this fact may be, in the current political climate, women who speak up for men's rights are often more likely to get our message across than we are. This isn't to discount the activism efforts of Mensactivism.org readers, but I believe that an alliance with iFeminism.com will give us a degree of credibility in certain situations that we might not be able to obtain otherwise. The fact that they call themselves feminists could even work in our favor sometimes.

Wendy has also successfully broken into the mainstream media, something that I've been working on for Mensactivism.org but haven't managed to do yet. Wendy has a weekly article on Fox News' web site, which has served as in incredible public platform for her ideas and advocacy for women's and men's rights.

There are also many people who believe in equality that have shied away from the men's movement due to misperceptions about us (i.e, that we're a bunch of angry white males, woman haters, etc). This alliance would help to break down these prejudices and misperceptions, and bring us some new members and friends. The women's movement couldn't have succeeded without the support of men, and the support of women is also needed in the men's movement. While I strongly believe that men should have male-only groups to go to and bond in, Mensactivism.org has always been an open forum and has included female activists from the start. I will consider creating additional resources (such as a mailing list) just for men if people would find this useful and a way to create some extra space for men to speak their minds.

What's in it for them?

Well, again, I think it's credibility, but from a different perspective. Since iFeminism has already got its "foot in the door" of the media, so to speak, this would give them additional leverage so they could claim they are truly advocating gender equality and fairness. I also believe that there are many people in the iFeminist movement that simply want to join forces with more men so that they can get more done.

You're going to consort with feminists?? You traitor!

I really hope that by the end of this article you're not still thinking this. I can understand it as an initial reaction, because I think the term "feminism" has some strong negative connotations, often for valid reasons. But if we focus only on words and not what is behind them, we will not make any progress as a movement. As far as I'm concerned, iFeminism really isn't feminism. It's simply a group of women and men who believe in equality but have decided to focus mostly (but not exclusively) on women's issues. Wendy and I have set up some pretty clear boundaries for this alliance to ensure that neither side can co-opt the other's web site or editorial slant, and I think these and other ground rules will help preserve each movement but also allow for joint efforts that will benefit us all.

So now it's your turn to express your thoughts on this matter. I promise to take each and every one into consideration. I will not delete any comments posted in this section, so please be open and honest with your views

(and use the Anonymous User account if you wish). I have told Wendy that I am very interested in this alliance, but I have not promised her anything yet.

Also, note that for this Wednesday, 10/17, we will be discussing this alliance for our on-line chat. I've invited Wendy to participate and she has agreed to answer questions related to this partnership, so please consider stopping by to meet Wendy "in person," so to speak.

This looks like a "win-win" situation to me. What do you think?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/17/0025251.shtml

New Book: Spreading Misandry: The Teaching of Contempt for Men in Popular Culture

Scott · 24 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A new book is soon to be released that should be of interest to MANN readers. Spreading Misandry : The Teaching of Contempt for Men in Popular Culture by Paul Nathanson and Katherine K. Young is "A probing inquiry into the pervasiveness of negative male stereotypes in popular culture...Paul Nathanson and Katherine Young argue that men have routinely been portrayed as evil, inadequate, or as honorary women in popular culture since the 1990s. These stereotypes are profoundly disturbing, the authors argue, for they both reflect and create hatred and thus further fracture an already fractured society. In Spreading Misandry they show that creating a workable society in the twenty-first century requires us to rethink feminist and other assumptions about men." This is definitely on my reading list for this winter!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/24/1549230.shtml

Foster's Prints Letter Correcting Domestic Violence Article

Scott · 24 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Foster's Daily Democrat, which ran a story about my domestic violence project at UNH, wasn't exactly forthright with my views regarding statistics about domestic violence. So I wrote them a short letter explaining the statistics further, which they printed in today's letters section. Hopefully this will help to set the record straight.Source: Foster's Daily Democrat [newspaper]

Title: Domestic abuse not gender issue [Letters to the Editor]

Author: Scott Garman

Date: October 24, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/24/1611220.shtml

American Communism And The Making Of Women´s Liberation

Scott · 25 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Henry Makow wrote an interesting article about the political nature of feminism for TooGoodReports.com. While I've heard and agree with requests from readers to avoid becoming political with this web site, I think this article and its perspectives deserve some airtime here to balance things out. It's interesting to note that ifeminism is almost completely the opposite of Makow's description, suggesting that ifeminism has few ties with the modern feminist movement.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/24/1843254.shtml

Setting The Women's Liberation Issue Straight

Adam · 25 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I recently found this article written by Murray Rothbard, while it was written in 1970 it's just as true today (maybe even more so) and it's quite a read. In the article he makes the case that men are the real slaves, and implies this is due to women having a matriarchy over men. He makes such a good case it's just plain scary (is it the truth facing us?) It might be heretical but it's worth hearing him out. Oddly enough, the woman he talks to says she'd rather see a man than be one; is this proof that she knows men have it worse or was she just being polite? I don't know about you, but words fail me.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/24/2221202.shtml

Gender Bias No Cure for Domestic Violence

Scott · 25 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Claude Moreau sent in this article from the Seattle Times about domestic violence. It's an excellent refutation of myths about domestic violence, and was written by a female family law/domestic violence attorney. From the article: "Many male victims are ignored or ridiculed by a system that seems to recognize only female victims. When women are the abusers, they are more often than not given a pass. Recent cases with which I have personal experience involve men who have been hit, punched, gouged, choked and threatened with weapons by their spouses. Despite reports to police, none of the women were charged with crimes."
Source: The Seattle Times [newspaper]

Title: Gender bias no cure for domestic violence

Author: Lisa Scott

Date: October 24, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/25/1358213.shtml

Article Protests Mothers Being Sent to War

Scott · 26 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User writes "This article by Maggie Gallagher on Yahoo! News talks about the issue of single parent and dual-service couple soldiers needing to leave their children in the care of others while they go to war; and questions whether it is 'civilized' to send mothers to war. Even though the article quotes a statistic from Brian Mitchell's 1998 book, Women in the Military, which states that dual-service couples and an equal number of single moms and dads will need to leave their children in the care of others, the article gives almost all of it's focus to protecting mothers, and single mothers in particular, from being sent to war. Fathers are merely subsumed into the category of 'parent' - as in a child being asked "to risk both of their parents, or their only parent, for us"."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/26/1326227.shtml

Farrell Addresses Australia: Men Have Fewer Choices

Nightmist · 26 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story from an Australian publication details a lecture Warren Farrell presented recently to an audience of men about modern man's lack of choices compared to women. Farrell's central argument is that the traditional image of male-as-oppressor is inaccurate, that power is about choice, freedom to explore options that men don't have. Being a man means being obligated to earn money that other people spend, he says. Farrell recently received an email from his 91-year-old accountant father telling him to give up the fight. "If you continue this way you are going to starve to death," his father wrote.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/26/1629222.shtml

Probable Cause Needed for Arrests in Restraining Order Violations

Scott · 26 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A federal court ruled recently that those accused of violating a restraining order cannot be arrested unless the police have determined probable cause for arrest. You'd think this is a basic right but this article from The Massachusetts News explains how men are routinely arrested for 209A violations based only on an accusation. An accusation does not and should not create probable cause. This is definitely a step in the right direction for men's rights, and also civil rights in general. Source: The Massachusetts News [newspaper]

Title: City of Lawrence Pays Man $5000 for Illegal Arrest Under Restraining Order

Author: Unknown

Date: October 22, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/26/2034219.shtml

Men Standing Up for Their Honor - Stopping "Day of Shame"

Scott · 27 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve writes "So many men spoke up against the idea of Men's Day of Shame, that the lawyer who proposed it had a "week of hell." The story is here." I was seeing a lot of activity about this on the men's rights mailing lists, and all I can say is, awesome job people! This is what should happen when someone makes such a public attack on men and fathers!Source: New Zealand Herald [newspaper]

Title: Week of hell for 'shame' lawyer

Author: Michele Hewitson

Date: October 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/27/0149223.shtml

Testicular Self-Examination How-To

Scott · 27 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This page serves as a good guide on how to perform a testicular self-examination, a check which should be done monthly for men 15 years old and older. Early detection is the key to beating this cancer, which is highly treatable when discovered early. Remember, being an activist about your own health is the only way you can stay around to be an activist for men's rights!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/27/1851248.shtml

MANN Feature: Men's College Sports Under Assault

Scott · 28 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Glenn Sacks' latest column is being included on Mensactivism.org as our newest feature article. Glenn continues to be the only regularly published columnist in the U.S. who writes about gender issues from a perspective unapologetically sympathetic to men. This time, Glenn researches the declining state of male athletic programs at the CA State University system, and how legal attacks by N.O.W. have destroyed dozens of men's sports at schools around the state. Read More below for his essay.

California Men's College Sports Under Assault from N.O.W.

By Glenn Sacks, Glennjsacks@cs.com

California State University men's sports are under assault from feminist organizations who are pursuing a course which both ignores the desires of female college students and victimizes male college athletes. This week's casualty was California State University Northridge's (CSUN) 40 year-old football team.

The attack on male CSU athletes began in February of 1993, when the California chapter of the National Organization for Women (Cal-NOW) sued the CSU system for sex discrimination in athletics under federal Title IX legislation. The CSUs were forced to sign a consent decree with Cal-NOW in October of that year, and since then dozens of men's college teams throughout the state have been eliminated.

The consent decree mandates that CSU schools achieve "gender equity" by bringing the percentage of female to male athletes and the percentage of female to male scholarship funding to within 5% of the percentage of females to males eligible to participate in athletics. It also requires that the female portion of the overall athletic budget be within 10% of the school's male-female ratio.

On the surface this seems fair, but it in fact discriminates against male college athletes in several ways. For one, the consent decree judges "gender equity" by male-female enrollment ratios instead of student interest levels. Yet numerous studies demonstrate that female college students, in general, are less interested in competitive team athletics than males are, and are more interested in personal fitness activities (jogging, aerobics, etc.), than males. Even at all-women's colleges the percentage of females participating in and expressing an interest in participating in team sports would not be enough to achieve the consent decree's gender balance at most co-ed schools.

At the same time, some female athletic activities, such as drill team and cheerleading, are not counted as athletics. Thus a male football player and a female drill team captain both practice with their teams, do physically demanding training, and perform every weekend, but only the football player is considered an athlete, and only the money spent on his activity is considered for gender equity.

In addition, gender equity calculations unfairly count a sport's athletes, scholarships, and budget without considering its money-making ability. While most male sports and almost all female sports are not profitable, some, such as football and men's basketball, often bring schools large revenues--revenues which frequently benefit women's athletic programs but which are completely invisible in gender equity calculations.

The attempts by CSUN and other CSU schools to comply with the decree are made even more difficult by the fact that women have come to dominate the enrollment on most college campuses, leading 57% to 43% nationwide and 61% to 39% at CSUN.

Cal-NOW's consent decree sets the gender equity bar so high that even CSUN, which has done a tremendous job in building up its female athletic programs since 1993, has been unable to reach it and is considered to be out of compliance. From 1993 to 1998 CSUN tripled its women's athletic budget and more than tripled its female scholarship budget, while its male scholarship budget has been reduced. Its percentage of female athletes to male athletes has risen 50%. It has added three women's sports and cut four men's teams (though community activists won a reprieve for the men's sports by securing outside funding). CSUN's percentage of female athletes is over 50%, and its women's athletic budget and women's scholarship funding are just under 50%. All three percentages will be pushed far higher by the elimination of football.

CSUN's expansion of women's athletics has gone considerably beyond the interest levels expressed by its female students in numerous student surveys. In those surveys women comprise between 35 and 40 percent of those CSUN students expressing an interest in playing college sports. Even in the 1992-1993 school year, before the decree was signed, 40% of CSUN's athletic budget and scholarship funds were spent on women, and 35% of the school's 428 student-athletes were women--clearly in line with the interest levels indicated by student surveys.

Certainly CSUN football has many woes unrelated to gender equity calculations, including the lack of a stadium and scant attendance and revenue. However, the leaders of CSUN seem like the factory owner who invests little in his plant for 30 years and then closes it down because it is "outdated" and "unprofitable." Certainly the decision of former CSUN President Blenda Wilson to build a new biotechnology center on the site of the football field without even considering where the team would play in the future doesn't give the impression that CSUN was committed to football.

But Cal-NOW shares responsibility, as do feminist organizations nationwide, who have used similar tactics which have been largely responsible for the elimination of 20,000 male athletic positions over the past decade.

When Title IX was passed in 1972 to bar sex discrimination in programs receiving federal funds, it was a huge and laudable gain for the feminist movement. It was never meant to be a sword wielded to cut down the dreams and hopes of 19 year-old boys.

Glenn Sacks is a regular columnist for the Los Angeles Daily Journal and the San Francisco Daily Journal*. He invites readers to visit his website at www.GlennJSacks.com.*

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/27/1947223.shtml

Spousal Killings of Men Decreasing Significantly

Scott · 28 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal pointed me to this NY Times article (free registration required to read) about intimate partner homicide rates. According to a new CDC study printed in The Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, the "rate at which men were killed by their wives or companions fell by close to two-thirds over the last 20 years...The rate at which women were killed...also fell, by almost a third....The researchers speculated that the sharper decline in the homicide rate for men was related to various social and legal movements that had given better alternatives to women in abusive relationships."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/28/1319256.shtml

Anna Quindlen: Women Should Also Be Required to Register for the Draft

Scott · 28 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in another story, this one about the draft. To me the most interesting part was her good summary about the recent history of the draft, and why a constitutional challenge to the all-male draft probably won't hold up this time, since women can and do serve in combat positions today. It's an excellent article. Source: Newsweek [magazine]

Title: Uncle Sam and Aunt Samantha

Author: Anna Quindlen

Date: November 5, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/28/1329204.shtml

Court Absolves Mother of Kidnapping Her Children

Nightmist · 29 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The National Post reports that a mother who became an international fugitive after she kidnapped her three children from their father (who had full custody) was absolved of those kidnappings by a jury, who found her "not guilty by reason of necessity." The outraged father says that the court has now set a precedent for an "open season" on child abductions by non-custodial parents. I wonder if the same jury would've found not guilty a father in this mother's same situation.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/28/1656234.shtml

Web Site Focuses on Inspiration For and About Men

Nightmist · 29 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A woman interested in the masculist anthology Steve Imparl and I are working on sent this link to me today. The site is full of stories and poetry, much of it celebrating men. In fact, there's a section specifically dedicated to celebrating men. I urge you all to check out this site if you need a little inspirational boost in your day.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/29/1625247.shtml

It's Never Father's Day

Scott · 30 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Douglas Rome sent in this story from the UK Observer. It's the story about divorced dads who are alienated from their children. One man was quoted as saying, "I have been to court about 13 times, mostly to try to stabilise the access to my children. I've been in front of nine different judges, none of whom has seen my problem. I feel powerless. I started off seeing my children two or three times a week. Now I see them once a week for four hours, if I'm lucky. I have no overnights, no weekends, no holidays. I'm like an uncle they see occasionally, rather than their father." I'm sure many readers know this kind of pain and frustration.Source: The Observer [UK newspaper]

Title: It's never Father's day

Author: Unknown

Date: October 21, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/29/2056247.shtml

A World Without Men

Scott · 30 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Barbara Ellen wrote an article for the UK Observer which I believe is meant to be a form of satire. It's an essay on how the world will become without the need for men. She begins by explaining that with new reproductive technologies, men are no longer needed and no one is allowed to have male children - only female. Then men are confined to "man zoos," where they serve as examples of what "women had to put up with" in the past. War has ended, but is replaced by "endless international bitching sessions." In the end Ellen states her belief that this brave new world has not changed for the better, and hopefully by this time built up in the reader a sense of disgust at how people could want to live in such a world - a world without men.Source: The Observer [UK newspaper]

Title: How the other half lived

Author: Barbara Ellen

Date: October 28, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/30/140224.shtml

DivorcePort Offers Content of Interest to Men

Scott · 30 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Michael Aiello wrote in to let people know about his web site, DivorcePort.com, which offers news and commentary on men's issues and also coverage on the war on terrorism. Aiello's site gives special attention to cross-cultural gender issues. Check it out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/30/1350241.shtml

Audio Interview with Warren Farrell

Scott · 31 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Warren Farrell did an audio interview with Australia's ABC News, and can be listened to from this page. This was actually the first time I've heard Farrell on the air, and he had quite a bit to say in this interview. He touched upon a few issues related to the options that men have vs. women, the importance of fathers in families, and the contributions of men's style of parenting.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/31/0013211.shtml

No Chat Tonight

Scott · 31 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Considering that tonight is Halloween night for most people in the U.S, I've decided to skip the chat this week. If you still want to show up, feel free to do so, though. I'm also getting a bit short on chat topic ideas, and would welcome any suggestions - post them as a comment to this story, or e-mail them to me at scott@mensactivism.org.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/30/1825245.shtml

Doyle: The Importance of the Family

Scott · 31 October 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Richard Doyle from the Men's Defense Association sent in a short essay about father's rights and families in general. Toward the end, Doyle looks at it from a political perspective, and acts to help inform his political party's members about the need to help families by helping men, particularly by putting men and women on a more equal ground when it comes to the family courts. Read More below for his essay.

The Importance of the Family

by R. F. Doyle, Men's Defense Association

Recent events should remind us to keep things in perspective, and distinguish the important from the unimportant. Of all things, the family is one of the most important. Strong families make America strong, and more capable of standing up to our enemies, both external and internal.

Unfortunately, the family is not faring well. About half of marriages are ending in divorce. Twenty four million children live with only their mothers. The fatherless ghetto pattern, a relatively recent phenomenon, is becoming commonplace. Consequently, delinquency, crime and other aberrations are skyrocketing.
What has transpired in the last 4 or 5 decades to cause all this? Cultural mores and immorality are certainly to blame, but another factor is even more at blame: anti-male prejudice. While this prejudice exists in several areas, how it exists in domestic relations is of special importance. Both conservatives and liberals are guilty of this mindset: conservatives out of misplaced chivalry, and liberals out of mod. interpretations of political correctness. Both are influenced by, and fear, the feminist juggernaught.

Consider the Elian Gonzalez matter. Conservatives REALLY blew it there. And we claim to be pro-family! It gags me to agree with Janet Reno, but she was right on that issue. Children belong with their fathers - even in Cuba.

Contrary to popular opinion, men are not abandoning their families wholesale, to run off with some bimbo. But many women are doing just that. Almost 80% of divorces are initiated by wives, justifiably confident in walking away with child custody and huge financial settlements, often too huge for men to pay.

Single fathers have demonstrated that they can be good parents, often better than single mothers. Nevertheless, divorce courts enforce what they consider to be men's responsibilities and women's rights, almost exclusively.

Every man is but a guest in his own home, living there only at the forbearance of his wife. He is evictable at a moment's notice if she tires of him or makes unsubstantiated allegations of abuse. This ploy is resorted to in an astonishing number of cases.

Nowadays, men are avoiding marriage and other commitments. Who can blame them? Some are afraid even to associate with or talk freely around women. If we could guarantee men that any children they may father would be inalienably theirs in more than just a monetary sense, they would be more receptive to marriage, and there would be far fewer divorces.

Anti-male prejudice in divorce is but one facet of a much broader phenomenon, one that is so politically incorrect it's seldom mentioned in polite circles. If this country is to overcome many of the dangers facing it, external as well as internal, this prejudice must be recognized for the danger it poses. The very male image is under attack. Not all men are Jack the Ripper, nor are all women Mother Theresa. The restless, active boys that teachers seem too quick to drug with Ritalin are the very ones that may protect us with their energy in time of crisis - if they haven't been demasculinized.
It would take more space than available here to propose remedies, so I'll summarize them in one phrase - fairness and equal rights for men.

Of the two persuasions, because they have more common sense, conservatives (and some Libertarians) would appear to be more educable on these matters. I'll grant that fairness and equal rights for men is a unique concept, and feminists would scream bloody murder. But if conservatives supported it strongly, perfidious feminist influence would be greatly diminished.

Last week, putting aside considerations of personal danger, I flew from relatively safe Minnesota to address the Conservative Leadership Conference Washington D.C. Several men's and father's organizations attended in an effort to convince conservative leaders of the importance of saving our families by removing the incentives to destroy it. There were many think tanks there. We gave them something worthy to think about.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/31/0031212.shtml

Men's Hotline Opens in Australia

Scott · 1 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham sent in this link and writes "The following service has just begun in Australia. Men's Line Australia is the first national telephone counselling line for men who want to talk about their family and relationship concerns. It provides information, support and referrals. The service is available 24 hours a day from anywhere in Australia for the cost of a local call." I'm particularly encouraged to see that the helpline seems focused on helping men who are depressed and/or suicidal. You can click here to find out info on how to support the helpline, by volunteering or donating to them.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/31/1749217.shtml

Father's Rights vs. Involved Fatherhood?

Nightmist · 1 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This commentary on Women's eNews accuses father's rights groups and activists of inciting violence and hatred against women and children. The author claims "involved fathers," those who have made job sacrifices, etc., to be with their children, are somehow different from those who have been forceably estranged from their children by a vindictive ex-spouse. He also attempts to vindicate court biases against men by claiming that fathers who seek child custody are often abusers.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/10/31/1738256.shtml

An Interview With Andrea Dworkin

Scott · 1 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

nagzi submitted this link which is a RealAudio interview with Andrea Dworkin on a free speech radio program. As you would expect, Dworkin gets tripped up a bit when talking about pornography to the host, who in general otherwise seems supportive of Dworkin's work. I'm including this interview because it's instructive to know what we're up against - Dworkin has lost a lot of influence over the years, but she still represents one of the most radical, anti-male forms of feminism we've seen to date. Take note of the techniques she uses to make her points and study them.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/01/1825227.shtml

Justice Dept. Stats on Gay Domestic Violence

Scott · 2 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent along this link to a report about the latest Bureau of Justice Statistics report which for the first time includes data about domestic violence against homosexuals. Again, this is a crime survey, not a sociology or family violence study, and it exhibits the typical bias against men who are less likely to report domestic violence (including homosexuals, who have other reasons to fear contacting the police for help). Still, we should make note of this because the Justice Dept. stats are the ones most widely used by battered women's advocates, who have been able to define domestic violence over the past quarter century.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/01/1832213.shtml

Proposed MI Bill to Prohibit Schools from Recommending Ritalin

Scott · 2 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Cheddah writes "A package of bills before the Michigan Legislature would prohibit school employees from recommending that any student be prescribed Ritalin. As any Mensactivism reader knows, it has been mostly young boys who have been targeted for this drug." This certainly opens up some questions about parent's rights vs. public school authority, and I think we need more debate on this issue. You can read the story here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/01/1836219.shtml

Families in Crisis + New DLJ

Scott · 2 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett had an article printed in the Sierra Times about divorce and the family courts. The article is an in-depth look at how our current divorce system in the U.S. is harming everyone involved, particularly children. Trudy includes lots of good stats and I hope her message is heard. Speaking of Trudy, the latest edition of the DesertLight Journal was released, and can be read here. Source: The Sierra Times [internet magazine/newspaper]

Title: Families in Crisis

Author: Trudy W. Schuett

Date: November 1, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/02/0125255.shtml

UK To Enforce Visitation Rights?

Scott · 2 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal pointed me to this article from the UK Guardian, which states that a proposed law would create consequences for custodial parents who deny court-ordered visitation to non-custodial parents. The accountability would be based on fines and community service orders, and may also require attending parenting or anger management classes depending on the situation. All I can say is, it's about time! I hope our UK readers are lobbying for this law and that it gets passed. Source: The Guardian Unlimited [UK newspaper]

Title: New law may boost rights for fathers

Author: Clare Dyer

Date: October 29, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/02/1436240.shtml

N.O.W. Getting Worried About "Gender Studies"

Scott · 2 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve writes "Academic freedom is under further attack. This N.O.W. article attacks all gender studies which are not Women's Studies." The fear of offering legitimacy to "Men's Studies" is explicitly mentioned in the article, written by Loretta Kane. Apparently, N.O.W. is starting to get worried about the men's movement.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/02/1448221.shtml

A New Warrior of the 21st Century

Scott · 3 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

zerostress writes "This story of a man and his peculiar war should be an example of what a man who desires to influence the world for the good can do. Let's hope his example will prompt many of us to do the utmost for what we believe" This is an amazing story about a man who is delivering humanitarian aid on the front lines of battle in Afghanistan. He really is an inspirational person.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/02/2343217.shtml

Book Review: Naomi Wolf's Misconceptions

Adam · 3 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I've found this book review of "Misconceptions Truth, Lies, and the Unexpected on the Journey to Motherhood" by Naomi Wolf, a well known feminist. Reading the review, I was reminded of Carolyn F. Graglia's comment (author of Domestic Tranquility: A Brief Against Feminism in case you're not aware) that women's advocates are the biggest woman haters of all, chances are you might get the same impression as well.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/01/180219.shtml

Supervised Child Exchanges Becoming Popular

Scott · 3 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in an article from the Christian Science Monitor about a new idea that is gaining popularity in the U.S: supervised visitation exchanges of children in a neutral setting. The idea is to keep both parents from seeing each other to avoid conflicts which inevitably harm the children. The system seems fair and does what it's intended to do, so I think it's a great idea. Source: The Christian Science Monitor

Title: To protect kids, sites keep warring parents apart

Author: Craig Savoye

Date: October 31, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/03/1459211.shtml

Women's eNews: Kids Need Money, Not Men

Nightmist · 4 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Women's eNews' attack on fatherhood continues with this commentary by Cindy Richards, who claims that fathers are not necessary and contribute nothing to the child rearing process, and that fathers may simply be replaced by wallets. Oh, and by the way, the editor's note at the top of this story says that this piece is the "first in a series." I wonder what other BS they have planned?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/04/1547224.shtml

McElroy to Debate on Prostitution at Univ. of Colorado

Scott · 4 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Thomas Walsh asked me to announce that Wendy McElroy from ifeminists.com will be debating Kathleen Barry about whether prostitution and pornography exploits women. The debate is being sponsored by the Campus Libertarians and will be held this Tuesday, Nov. 6. A poster for the debate can be seen here. If you need more info or are interested in attending it, drop Thomas an e-mail.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/04/1632256.shtml

MND Named "Cool Site of the Day" Today

Scott · 4 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

mpaiello writes "Men's News Daily has been named today's Cool Site of the Day. The site will be available here for viewing and voting today only. If you support Men's News Daily, please click this link and VOTE FOR US!! The higher our rating, the more likely we'll be picked for Cool Site of the Month or even of the year. That would be a boon for putting men's issues in the mainstream of popular thought and discussion. Thank you Scott, and all the readers of Men's Activism - Michael Patrick Aiello, DivorcePort.com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/04/1719211.shtml

World Conference of Men's Health: "Men must become the new women"

Scott · 5 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

brad writes *"This National Post article raises issues of male health. "Doctors gathering today for the first World Conference on Men's Health in Vienna, Austria, have a solution for the sad state of today's male: Men must become the new women.""* That pretty much sums up the article, too. Although it covers the importance of men to organize and lobby for men's health issues, it seems very condescending at the same time. But at least the issue is getting some more attention.Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Doctors tell men to be the new women

Author: Brad Evenson

Date: November 3, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/04/1724222.shtml

Woman Murders and Cooks Husband

Scott · 5 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Uberganger writes *"A truly horrific story of domestic violence and murder from Australia, found via AngryHarry.com. The woman abused all four of her husbands, murdering the last one in a particularly grotesque way. Let's hope she is put away for life, as the article suggests she probably will be. How long do you suppose it'll be before some group of 'do-gooders' try to present her as the real victim?"*Source: The Daily Telegraph [Australian newspaper]

Title: Break-up led to slaying

Author: Frances O'Shea

Date: November 3, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/05/1517258.shtml

Domestic Violence is a Societal Problem

Scott · 5 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "This article in the Worcester Telegram & Gazette details the balanced viewpoint given by a female cop lecturing at Mount Wachusett Community College criminal justice classes. She says, "Do not ever make a domestic violence arrest based on gender."" I've heard a local story about some female police officers who questioned some of the training given by a local domestic violence shelter too - and I'm thankful for it. Source: The Worcester Telegram and Gazette [newspaper]

Title: Domestic violence is societal problem

Author: Mary Jo Hill

Date: November 5, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/05/1522247.shtml

The Extinction of Men?

Scott · 6 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in a mixed article about men's health and social status. The article raises the point that with men's health and longevity in such a poor state, combined with negative attitudes about men's roles in society, that men could literally become extinct in the not so distant future. On the other hand, there's a disturbing quote blaming men for starting and maintaining all of the major wars currently going on in the world. Perhaps these people need to realize that it's that kind of negative attitude about men's roles in society that's the problem.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/06/0522206.shtml

Is Unilateral Divorce Bad For Children?

Scott · 6 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in another interesting link to an abstract about a study examining the policy implications of making divorce easier for parents, and how it affects children. While some common sense could easily answer this question, it brings to light issues that are starting to get some serious attention from state governments, including New Hampshire, which is considering whether to abolish no-fault divorce for parents with minor children.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/06/0530216.shtml

The Seat of Temperance (in Men)

Scott · 7 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

krob4399 submitted this link to a UK Telegraph story which describes the discovery of a "seat of temperance" in men's brains, which is used to censor sexual drive. Apparently this part of the brain has evolved over time, as it is much smaller and less developed in primates than in human beings. krob4399 thought it was interesting to contrast this discovery with this article, which is about pre-menstrual dysphoric disorder, somewhat the opposite of the "seat of temperance" with women.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/07/0615229.shtml

MANN Chat: Male Friendship

Scott · 7 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This week's Mensactivism.org on-line chat is on the topic of male friendships, and how to promote friendship and brotherhood amongst men. Too often these days, men are isolated from each other, and don't create opportunities to meet with other men on a regular basis. What can be done to help change this, and what are some ways to establishing new friendships with other men? While this seems like an odd topic in and of itself, it's a very important one for the men's movement to consider. Our success depends on promoting meaningful relationships between men and getting men to see themselves as a group with common interests to act upon. You probably know the routine, click here at 9:30 PM Eastern Time on Wednesday, Nov. 7, to log in and participate.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/07/060255.shtml

Foreskins Used in Burn Bandages

Scott · 7 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal pointed me to this UK Daily Telegraph article which mentions a new bandage that can be used to speed up the healing process for burn victims. The miracle material the bandage is made of?: foreskins from circumcised infants.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/07/0620230.shtml

Sacks Exposes Myths in Women's Studies Textbook

Scott · 8 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Uberganger writes "This is an interesting article on the kind of things that are printed in Women's Studies textbooks and taught in Women's Studies classes. A copy of it should be handed to every woman - and man - who parrots the usual feminist rubbish." Ah, you beat me to it - I've been meaning to post this for a few days now. Glenn Sacks is at it again, writing more articles of interest to men's activists.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/07/2136212.shtml

Man Receives Child Support Bill Years After Being Raped

Scott · 8 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Kingsley Morse, Jr. sent in this article from the UK Times. It describes a man who received a bill from the Child Support Agency for 55k pounds. He never knew he had fathered a child, and it turns out that the child was conceived when he was statutorially raped when he was 15 years old by a woman two times older than him. He was quoted as saying, "I am being treated as a criminal, but I was a minor being led on. Presumably she has now reached a point in her life where she needs an easy meal ticket."
Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: CSA sends seduced boy a £55,000 bill

Author: Sam Lister

Date: November 6, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/08/0451244.shtml

Men's Health Conference: "Will men be needed at all?"

Scott · 8 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ched writes "MSN.com posted this article about men's health. It basically blames men for not keeping pace with healthcare options, and provided some "are men becoming extinct" examples before addressing some relevant points about men's health buried at the end of the article." What is it with these people? I'm getting the impression that masculist doctors weren't invited to this conference.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/08/1734243.shtml

University of Virginia Writer Tackles Wage Gap Myth

Nightmist · 9 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article, which recently ran in the University of Virginia's Cavalier Daily takes a stab at refuting the oft-media-cited "wage gap" myth perpetuated by groups like the National Organization for Women. It's refreshing to see this kind of column appear in a college media outlet (and by a female writer, no less).

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/08/2229234.shtml

Professor Studies Male Role Models On Television

Nightmist · 9 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in the University of Missouri Maneater reports on two professors who are studying the way men are represented in situation comedies on television. In 1998, the professors viewed 55 episodes from 11 top sitcoms. The study, released at an American Psychological Association meeting, revealed that each show illustrated positive instances of male disclosure. These instances were met with either positive or neutral responses.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/08/2239245.shtml

Activist Alert: Methods of Contacting the Media are Changing

Scott · 9 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "Western Newspapers,Inc. has announced it will no longer accept letters to the editor and press relases by snail-mail. "These items should now be submitted only via e-mail, FAX or on floppy disks hand-delivered to the newspaper office outside an envelope," Prescott Courier Editor Ben Hansen said. The Prescott Courier is part of a chain of over 20 newspapers in the state of Arizona. A spokesman for the chain expects other newspapers and news-gathering agencies to follow suit. This is important news for activists and others who deal in publicity for their orgs or often send Letters to the Editor. Snail-mail was once considered the best way to get letters and releases noticed. FAX will now most likely take the lead as the most efficient way to send. Check the next issue of the DesertLight Journal, Wednesday, Nov. 14th, for more on how this change will affect the way groups and orgs handle publicity and promotions."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/09/0430251.shtml

Study Says Beauty Impacts Male Brain Like Food, Drugs

Scott · 9 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ched submitted this Boston Globe story and writes "It seems that in order to get an article in a major paper relevant to men's issues today, the article has to denigrate men. This article compares men's brains with reptiles (lizards). States that when a pretty woman is viewed that men look like rodents bar-pressing for cocaine. No mention was made of a similar study done on women - probably because the results were about the same..."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/09/1441243.shtml

Domestic Violence Art Attacks Men

Scott · 10 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I'm waaaay behind in posting news stories, and I apologize for that. Several people, including frank h, stevenpauljones, Steve , and Acksiom sent in this story or ones similar to it. The article describes an art exhibit at the Boulder Public Library sponsored by a local domestic violence shelter, which features, "21 ceramic . . . ummm . . . men's appendages, which are displayed on a clothesline in the library. It's entitled "Hung out to dry."" The exhibit is meant to say something about domestic violence and gender, and you can guess it's not particularly positive. Steve suggested that we contact the newspaper and I think it's a good idea.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/09/2259231.shtml

Is the War Commentary Sexist?

Scott · 10 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in a series of links about complaints that commentary on the war in Afghanistan is sexist because few women are seen as authorities on the subject. The Christian Science Monitor ran this story which was followed up with these letters, and Neil says that this Washington Post story exposes the fact that feminists as a group are working to promote the idea that few female commentators is sexist. What do you think?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/10/180253.shtml

Finding Non-Profits that Help Men

Scott · 11 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

plumber writes "The list of charitable organizations in the charitable giving campaign for federal workers illustrates distorted priorities for sex equity in the US today. The list includes a large number of organizations promoting reproductive rights for women...[but] no organizations addressing men's reproductive rights. The list includes a large number of organizations addressing women's health...[but] just one organization with a focus on men's health, the Prostate Cancer Research Institute. The list includes a number of organizations addressing domestic violence. While some of the entries refer to men or partners, others assume that only women are victims of domestic violence. What are some good 501(c)(3) organizations that care about the...problems of males? What can be done to encourage charitable donations to men's organizations?"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/10/1815213.shtml

Ceramic Penis Display Stolen

Nightmist · 12 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

According to this story at bouldernews.com, the controversial ceramic penis display in a public library was torn down and stolen recently, and replaced by an American flag. The artist, library, and police are up in arms about the theft. The article makes a point of saying that the display was meant to help places which protect "women and children" victims of domestic violence. No mention of male victims. Those of you writing the paper, the artists, and the library, make SURE you mention that women and children are not the only victims of domestic violence. And make SURE you don't stop any planned protests. Just because the exhibit has been removed doesn't mean minds have changed. (I also do not advocate such illegal means as theft as a way of getting one's point across.)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/12/1547249.shtml

LA Times Finally Prints the Word "Misandry"

Scott · 12 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "The LA Times printed my letter to the editor on how the Taliban treats men. I've been wanting to get the word misandry in there for the longest time. This wasn't the best use of the term, but it still worked. Now let's see if we can get them to print the word "masculist.""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/12/1615237.shtml

Pres. Bush Proclaims Prostate Cancer Awareness Month

Scott · 13 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

nagzi writes "I got this via the Menshealth a yahoo egroup. I'm not an American, but this is certainly good news for men everywhere. The press release mentions a few interesting facts, such as that prostate cancer is the most commonly diagnosed form of cancer (with the exception of skin cancer)."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/12/1653230.shtml

Donna Laframboise Needs Our Help

Scott · 13 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

BusterB writes "Donna Laframboise, a controversial Canadian newspaper columnist who is sympathetic to men's points of view and who regularly takes feminists to task, has been laid off by Canada's National Post. She is asking readers to enjoy her columns to subscribe to her writings as one would to PBS. See her site for details."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/12/2311259.shtml

"Hung Out to Dry" Penis Exhibit Update

Scott · 13 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Thomas writes "This is a recent report on the Boulder Public Library's display of hanging, ceramic penises. Apparently, the thief, Bob Rowan, hasn't been arrested yet. Note that Susanne Walker, who created the outrage, said "the the theft contradicts the values symbolized by the flag and 'makes a joke of the pain and suffering involved in this exhibit."" Thanks Thomas - keep us posted on updates to this story!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/12/2325203.shtml

Reflections on Veteran's Day and the Feminist View of War

Scott · 13 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Although the timing is now pretty bad (it's 40 minutes until midnight), I wanted to post something about Veteran's Day. First of all, I hope everyone took some time out to reflect upon the sacrifices that war veterans have made for us, and what we owe to them. Ed Bartlett wrote up a short essay that relates to men's issues and the way war is often spoken of as an expression of masculinity - when the only thing particularly masculine about it is the body count. Click Read More for the submission.

Reflections on Veteran's Day and the Feminist View of War

A couple days ago I was talking to a woman about Veteran's Day.

During our conversation, she expressed the feminist theory that war is simply an expression of male aggression, and it has nothing to do with men risking their lives to protect their families and countries. She suggested that if women were in control, we wouldn't have any wars.

In response, I mentioned to her these historical facts:

- In 1973, Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir helped launch the Israeli counterattack against Egyptian and Syrian troops in the Yom Kippur War.
- In 1982, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher declared war on Argentina in a battle over the British-occupied Falkland Islands.
- Just a few weeks ago, President Bush requested Congress to support him in his war against terrorism. All but one of the female members of Congress voted in favor of the resolution.

Veteran's Day was established at the close of World War I, a war that claimed over one million U.S. casualties, almost all of them men.

Veteran's Day commemorates the supreme sacrifice that men have made in the past. And Veteran's Day recognizes the four men who have already died in Afghanistan in the fight against Osama bin Laden.

The feminist theory of war stereotypes men as inherently violent. This theory ultimately serves to discount the many sacrifices that men have made since time immortal to protect their children and womenfolk.

It's time we put to rest the feminist explanation for war, a far-fetched, hare-brained theory that does not stand up to even the most superficial historical analysis.

Edward E. Bartlett

eba@intr.net

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/13/0425204.shtml

A Game Show for Fathers

Scott · 13 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

nagzi writes "This is a game show from Japan which centers on the father. The point is the show gives the father a task to do. He has one week to practice the task, and then he does the task on tv. If he completes his task his family wins a total of 3 million yen in various prizes. It won the "Golden Rose Award" from Geneva, Switzerland in 2000. The show is available in the US (Hawaii only) via Kikutv, or the internet if you know where to look. The tasks range from completing a Rubic Qube in less than 3mins to memorizing the first 100 places of the square root of 3."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/12/2327244.shtml

Men's Hour Program No. 7

Scott · 13 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Men's Hour, an internet radio program about men's issues, has released program number 7, which can be listened to with either the WindowsMedia or Real players. They also just registered a new domain name, www.menshour.com. This espisode was shortened due to technical problems but they discussed news about World Male Health Day, the proposed "Men's Day of Shame," and calls for submissions to the upcoming masculist anthology. Check it out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/12/2351220.shtml

Murderer Receives Domestic Violence Award

Nightmist · 13 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Amazing. This story on BBC News details the awarding of a "domestic violence" award to an Asian woman for "breaking the silence" about domestic violence against women. What did this Asian woman do that deserved the award? She murdered her husband rather than going to the police. In fact, she was jailed for life for the brutal murder, in which she set her husband on fire. Scott's note: Also thanks to an Anon User who submitted this story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/13/1550221.shtml

Men: The Expendable Sex

Nightmist · 14 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I wrote this column about the draft and the perceived expendability of men versus women a while back for my now-defunct The Guy Code column. Wendy McElroy at ifeminists.com graciously agreed to use it as a guest editorial on her page. I am also linking to it from MANN because the draft is, of course, a hot topic for us.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/13/1622206.shtml

Robert Rowan May Join On-Line Chat

Scott · 14 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This is a currently unverified rumor, but I have been told that Robert Rowan, the man who stole the male bashing art display from the Boulder, CO library, is going to participate in our on-line chat tomorrow night. More details will follow as they become available. Don't get your hopes up just yet, though....

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/13/2214252.shtml

Men Need Not Apply?

Scott · 14 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Fredpro writes "I was just browsing through my University's online jobs listing, and of the three relevant positions available one specifically (and quite obviously) encourages females to apply.
The job is in the physics/engineering/computer science field and I understand that females are a minority in this particular area. My question is, are they allowed to recommend a specific gender should apply? I'm unsure, and before I whine to the employer, I would like to get my facts straight. Thanks!" Also note that this University is in Australia.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/13/2217218.shtml

Sexual Harassment False Accusations Site

Scott · 14 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Erik has an excellent web site about false accusations, particularly with regard to sexual harassment. Anyone with personal experience or other interest in this topic should check it out: http://mensrights.bizhosting.com. He includes information about many high profile sexual harassment cases, some of which are real eye-openers.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/14/0319225.shtml

ACLU Defends Colorado Misandry

Scott · 14 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Steve writes "The ACLU wants to prosecute the man who stole the ceramic penises. The story is here. You can also vote on whether he should be charged, and comment on it." It looks like they've closed the voting poll, but people have clearly come out against the display, saying that the man was justified in removing it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/14/0324204.shtml

Part 2 of "Mothers Need Money Not Fathers"

Adam · 14 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I'm half tempted to not post the latest piece of anti-father psuedo-science by womensenews.org but I think some activism is needed here. To get straight to it, they blame fathers for the nearest mothers' problems and think a socialistic quick fix is the answer, among other points of mindless folly. If you want to respond to this, try writing in the letters to the editors section. And guess what? it says "Note: Women's Enews reserves the right to edit or delete letters." Funny thing is, that wasn't there last week...

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/14/0336229.shtml

Bob Rowan Has Been Charged / Chat Update

Scott · 15 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Thomas writes "According to this article in today's Rocky Mountain News, Bob Rowan has received a summons for misdemeanor criminal tampering. The charge is for his removal of the "Hang 'em out to dry" exhibit from the Boulder Public Library. It's worth noting that, when I spoke with him this morning, he was very upbeat because of the amount of community support that he is receiving." Update: Rowan has e-mailed me personally and will be attending tonight's chat! Remember, it starts at 9:30 PM Eastern Time tonight, and you can participate by clicking here to go to the on-line chat page. Update 2: Bob called and said he wasn't able to make it tonight, but would like to come on next week. Sorry about the let-down...

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/14/2238232.shtml

An Interview With "El Dildo Bandito"

Scott · 15 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

HombreVIII writes "Bob Rowan, the man who recently became known as El Dildo Bandito, was gracious enough to allow me to interview him via e-mail. I kept it fairly short with just 9 questions, and here are the results." Click Read More below for the interview. And thanks, Hombre! :)

1. Hombre: "How did you first hear about the exhibit hanging at the library?"

Bob: "From a letter that Sen Ben Nighthorse Cambell wrote to the head librarian & was read aloud of Fox radio last Friday morning (KRFX) 103.5 Denver"

2. Hombre: "What was your first reaction when you discovered it?"

Bob: "This bullshit has gotta go!"

3. Hombre: "Why did you decide to react as you did?"

Bob: "I felt time was of the essence... If our Senator cannot persuade the dumb student & librarian - nobody can! For some, words of morale character will forever be meaningless."

4. Hombre: "You're actions could be described as being a bit on the extreme side, yet in the note you left behind you referred to yourself as 'El Dildo Bandito'. This presents the image of someone who isn't seeking to get himself taken seriously, but the issue itself. Was that message you were trying to send?"

Bob: "Hey guy's we're talking about stealing dildo's, crotch humor is not bad, the sarcastic note was intended to bring laughter with hurt."

5. Hombre: "Was it ever your intention to keep the ceramic penises, or had you planned to return them from the start?"

Bob: "We intended to return em & had em boxed by the time the cops came at 1:30 am Sunday."

6. Hombre: "Have you gained a lot of celebrity as a result of this? If so, how has it effected your life?"

Bob: "Yes a little... a bit hectic with interviews, however after asking my lawyer if I should shut up now, he emphatically said no. 'You keep talking & tell the people,' he said, 'enjoy the moment'."

7. Hombre: "Do you feel that your actions have helped make the issue of male bashing a little more known to the public?"

Bob: "Absolutely! no question."

8. Hombre: "What do you think the messages were that this 'artwork' was sending out?"

Bob: "All men are assholes, our military can kiss my ass & screw the flag."

9. Hombre: "Do you think El Dildo Bandito will ever strike again, in a similar fashion to that of Zorro resurfacing whenever the people needed him?"

Bob: "Count on it!"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/15/0456251.shtml

Man Awarded $150,000 After False Rape Allegation

Nightmist · 15 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a refreshing tale from law.com. A man falsely accused of rape by a co-worker was branded a rapist without due process, prodded and invaded by his employer, and subjected to all kinds of humiliation. Subsequently, a jury has awarded him $150,000 in damages.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/14/1830234.shtml

Men Suffer Under Taliban Regime As Well

Nightmist · 15 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Cathy Young eloquently writes about the oppression of men under the Taliban regime, and reminds us that the suffering of men should not be forgotten amid all the discussion in the media of the oppression of women.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/15/151208.shtml

Harvard Rejects Case For Marriage Out of Political Bias

Nightmist · 16 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article in the National Review suggests that Harvard's publishing house refused to publish a book titled The Case of Marriage out of a political bias for feminist orthodoxy rather than the reasons the publishing house's board originally stated: that they believed the book failed to provide evidence of casual benefits of marriage. Now, though, researchers claim to have proven those benefits: For the first time in the history of research on marriage, Ginther and Zovodny appear to have successfully shown that the "marriage premium" — the tendency of married individuals to make more money than single people — is an actual effect of marriage, and not just a function of a preference shown by both employers and potential spouses for people with qualities likely to bring about success.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/15/2153204.shtml

Kathleen Parker on Drafting Women

Scott · 16 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in this article from TownHall.com and writes "Kathleen Parker says that drafting women will result in a wave of pregnancies" Parker's views are mixed, she is strongly against women in combat but does seem to believe that women should make some sacrifices for the sake of our military. It seems that the main purpose of her article is to refute Anna Quindlen's recent Newsweek article which defends drafting women. Source: TownHall.com [on-line media site]

Title: Gender equality isn't a fair question in war

Author: Kathleen Parker

Date: November 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/15/2158204.shtml

Men in Afghanistan Shave Off Beards

Scott · 16 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

krob4399 submitted this New York Times article (free registration required to read) about how men in some parts of Afghanistan are now free to shave their beards since the Taliban have left. I thought this was a very interesting story about the new cultural freedoms men will be able to enjoy in a Taliban-free Afghanistan.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/15/223208.shtml

Religious 'Fear' of Women

Scott · 16 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal pointed me to this article from the Washington Post. It's about the history of religions and how they are rooted in male contempt (and fear of) women and femininity. Apparently the author of the article hasn't read anything by Rich Zubaty. Source: The Washington Post [newspaper]

Title: The Birth of the Myth That Men Are Closer to God

Author: Robert S. McElvaine

Date: November 11, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/16/0537224.shtml

Divorces Could Be on the Rise After 9/11

Scott · 16 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Abigail Trafford's column in the Washington Post health section talks about 9/11 as a catalyst for divorces. It's no coincidence that the examples she gives involve women leaving men. Comment to: health@washpost.com." Talk about a one-sided article - you'd think all divorces are simply about men being inadequate and women righteously moving on.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/16/0549226.shtml

Jaks Calls Phallus Art "Hate Speech"

Scott · 16 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

From Men's News Daily: "Hi Scott- here is a link to Lowell Jaks' letter to the DA of Boulder, CO on their decision to prosecute Bob Rowan." With the address of the District Attorney in the letter, I'd encourage others to write in as well.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/16/1535230.shtml

New DesertLight Journal

Scott · 16 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett's latest DesertLight Journal is out, No. 16. You probably know the routine by now, click here for the latest issue. This particular issue includes info about a new "Activism for Newbies" section on the DLJ web site and also an announcement of a new electronic publishing company friendly to men's issues, cyberManbooks. Trudy's efforts on behalf of men are truly incredible.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/16/0657250.shtml

Media "Suprised" at Girls Surpassing Boys in Education

Scott · 17 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "This article in the Chicago Tribune indicates complete surprise at the "astounding" way in which girls have bested boys in ALL subjects in their most recent standardized tests. These people must have their heads in the sand, what with all the NAEP and other data that's been published on the deficiencies in boys' academic performance. This is something we can do something about on a small scale, because most school districts are operated locally, and it's possible for a small, motivated group to have an impact. Further, few mothers of sons would object to getting help with their boy's reading homework, no matter what their feminist bent."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/16/1538210.shtml

When can I walk as a free American?

Scott · 17 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

LeonardMisner submitted a story about his struggle with the child support system, which overcharged him and apparently made deliberate accounting mistakes to increase his expenses. The following story will be included in his new book, In the Children's Best Interest, available through his web site. Read More below for a summary of his situation.

Disclaimer: The Men's Activism News Network is not responsible for and cannot ensure the accuracy of the following article. As a rule, we generally do not post personal stories for legal reasons, but the following exception was made since Mr. Misner limited any mention of other individuals in his article and is publishing this material in book form.

When can I walk as a free American?

I've sent this message to Senators and Governors and Mayors in the States most directly in touch with my situation, and to President Bush. Mayor Giuliani's FAX machine just wouldn't pick up. And I hope government representatives can take a hand to accomplish this simple task. I did receive a response from Illinois' Senator Fitzgerald. He has invited me to Washington, to discuss things over breakfast. I am also regularly alerting the media to my situation, and my new book. Over the years, I've tried every related County, State, Regional, and Federal Office and Agency, only to find that County family agencies are above the scrutiny of any other governmental office or agency, and are hence free to, and do, routinely violate laws and the constitution to no consequence.

I am extending this offer with every plea for help in my case. "If anyone can recoup the moneys which Macomb County, Michigan has overcharged for my child support, I would gladly allow 100% of it to be diverted to the relief efforts in New York - that amount of cash should be approaching $25,000. I have all the documentation and receipts."

Everything in this letter is covered in my new book, In The Children's Best Interest. I'm already writing a follow-up book. And this letter will be in the introduction section to that book. I hope you find it in your heart to respond and react to this request for action. Any media time would be greatly appreciated. America's children deserve protection of the laws which are in place. Cases like mine are all too common. And continuing to ignore cases like mine only allow family agencies to continue to violate federal law, state law, and like my case, even their own Circuit Court Orders, all at the expense of our children.

My two daughters were emancipated from child support in October, '95 (6 years ago) and January, '97 (almost 5 years ago). My total child support obligation is overpaid by $25,000. A withholding order is still enforced, and money is still taken from my paychecks. There is a warrant for my arrest TODAY, for non-payment of support, even though this withholding order has been in effect since 1988, and I've changed jobs only once and have been continuously employed and paying. Every day, I wonder if I will ever be allowed to live in America without the constant threat of being jailed at any moment, because no one in the Macomb County, Michigan, Friend of the Court can add and subtract.

For over a year I paid child support to my ex, while simultaneously, my older daughter was a ward of the State of Michigan. I also reimbursed probate court costs, and was billed an additional $11,900 when my ex institutionalized my daughter for voicing her desire to come live with me - her biological father. Hence I was forced to pay for my older daughter to be in two places at the same time for over a year.

I repeatedly requested copies of my accounting for over 11 years. It was only after going to the agency in person, and stating, "If you don't give me a copy of my own accounting records, then you are in violation of the Freedom of Information Act", that I finally did get a copy of my accounting records. Upon review of those records, I found multiple problems.

There were "adjustments" in the accounting, which added thousands to my balance. These were in addition to the interest being charged. I asked what those adjustments were, and the only response was, "We can't tell you specifically what those adjustments are. They just happen." ...but that's not all!

There was a specific period of over a year, where the accounting was in violation of even their own court orders. When pushed for over six hours of heated exchange, they finally admitted, "Your case worker didn't feel that the court order was fair, so he went to previous orders and adjusted the accounting to something that seemed to make more sense." I asked if a caseworker has the authority to override the signature of a circuit court judge. They promised to make the appropriate deductions from my balance, and proceeded to add this adjustment rather than deduct it from my balance. ...And that's not all!

When the family agents initially established my support, they used income information, which was known to be out of date and not a reflection of my true income. I had been in a debilitating accident at work before my wife filed for divorce. My initial child support obligation was established on income information from before the accident, not a reflection of my current income. So, my initial order for support was in violation of the federal guidelines.

I was told to bring my next income statement for an adjustment. When I did, I was told that I couldn't get an appointment to see a caseworker, unless I had an attorney. I said I had the right to represent myself, and asked for an appointment. The desk clerk picked up the phone and told me she was calling security to have me escorted from the building. Being in a full upper torso brace, and walking only with crutches, I left rather than to be wrestled out of the building. I believe I had a right to see a caseworker, and certainly had a right to represent myself in this situation.

Further, a hearing in my case was held without notifying me. I believe this was in violation of my right to be notified.

And because I was denied access, and denied my right to a hearing, my child support obligation was more than twice my gross income for over 5 years, in violation of the Consumer Protection Act.

There was a warrant issued for my arrest at that hearing, and was forced to desert my children, or go to jail for being debilitated. Had I been arrested and jailed, THAT would have been a violation of the 13th Amendment ("No indebtedness warrants the suspension of the right to be free from compulsory service." - already referenced and upheld as it relates to incarceration for non-payment of child support). Some rulings in these cases also discuss the Antipeonage Act, as implementing the 13th Amendment and under the enabling language of the Amendment. But the current laws make no distinction for those who refuse to pay, as compared to those who cannot pay. So, the courts say if you don't pay, regardless of your ability to pay, we will call it "contempt of court" and put you in jail. If it flies/swims/waddles/quacks like a duck, you can paint it pink, put a bow on it, and call it an elephant, but it's still a duck. Debtor's prison is commonplace in the land of the free.

While in college, putting myself into a position to pay my child support, Michigan initiated an action for hearing in Indiana. The Indiana court reviewed my true income, and proceeded to enforce and order for child support. However, Michigan continued enforcing their order, though their actions resulted in a second order, on the same case, enforced simultaneously in another State. Two orders, enforced simultaneously on the same case is in violation to protection from being twice put in jeopardy. I have a letter stating this type of situation is specifically the impetus for implementing UIFSA. "The Clinton administration in its proposed Work and Responsibility Act of 1994 is pursuing a change in this by advocating that all States adopt the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act which provides for one controlling order at a time, which should eliminate confusion stemming from the existence of multiple orders."

And aside from the impact all of this has had on my children, this is what I find most reprehensible. I've made reference to several Article I rights. Several lawyers have told me that certain portions of Article I were written expressly to protect the rights of criminals. Has it come to this point, where the constitution is interpreted such that some groups have certain protections by the law, while other groups are excluded from the same protection? I find this perspective reprehensible, especially in light of the 14th Amendment's clear insistence for equal protection;

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Stating that certain rights are reserved for select groups, while all others are excluded from the same protection is ludicrous, and clearly in violation of the 14th Amendment. And so, these other violations, exercised routinely and daily by the States at the county level should be addressed immediately!

60% of America's rapists, 72% of adolescent murders, and 70% of long-term inmates grew up in fatherless homes. Help our children to have more stable and successful lives. And help us all, as a society to be safer and more stable, by addressing children's needs. The best parent, is both parents.

And above all, parents have a Constitutional right to the care, custody and maintenance of their children as defined by the Supreme Court of the United States in Stanley vs. State of Illinois and Santosky vs. Kramer. Help protect parent's rights, and children's rights. Bringing media attention to my case, and my book, will be a helpful step.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Leonard Misner, author

In The Children's Best Interest, ISBN: 1-58820-698-X

(1stBooks.com) (Ingram Book Group)

www.leonardmisner.com

lamisner@aol.com

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/16/0617212.shtml

Court: Father Must Pay Support In Spite of Contract

Nightmist · 17 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This harrowing story deals a severe blow to Choice For Men as far as American justice is concerned. A young man agreed to impregnate his girlfriend (who wanted a child) as long as she signed a contract stating he would not be held financially responsible for the child's upbringing and no one would ever know he was the father. Ten years later, the mother filed a paternity suit against him... and won. Scott's note: Thanks also to Neil Steyskal for submitting this story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/16/1548222.shtml

Will the Draft Rise from the Dead?

Adam · 17 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Writing for LewRockwell.com, Robert Higgs slams the draft in defense of men, by standing by the founding principles of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. It's only 5 paragraphs long, but gets the point across. "Whatever happened to the idea that every person, even a young man, has inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness? Whatever happened to the idea that a just government is instituted to secure these rights, not to crush them underfoot upon the earliest pretext?" this has to be the first anti-draft article I've came across to use that argument.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/17/0140208.shtml

Cartoon Depicts Men as Fat, Lazy Pigs

Scott · 18 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Thomas writes "This disgusting editorial cartoon appeared in the 11/15/01 Rocky Mountain News. Copley News Service depicts the "normal" male as a lazy, fat pig, while his wife works outside on the lawn. This is done at a time when young men are struggling and risking their lives for us and the Boulder city government, through the library, preaches anti-male hate and promotes anti-male violence. Note: you'll have to click the "Get Image" button next to 11/05/01."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/17/1926220.shtml

How Men and Women Deal with Stress

Scott · 18 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

krob4399 sent in this article from BBC News about how hormonal differences between men and women relate to how they cope with stress. They found that young women cope with stress better than men, but post-menopausal women lost the advantage due to lack of the hormone oestradiol. Yet the end of the article observes that there are many kinds of stress and that broad conclusions shouldn't be drawn from the study. Source: BBC News

Title: Women cope better with stress

Author: Unknown

Date: November 15, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/17/1937209.shtml

Suicide in Australia

Scott · 18 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Robert Cunningham writes " While this report was published last year, it certainly needs a wider audience. The Suicide in Australia report is full of helpful material. It relates the suicide of men with family breakdown, in a manner that is usually ignored."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/17/1928254.shtml

G.I. Joe Increasing Sales Under Fire

Scott · 18 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Calvin Heide submitted this link to a story from CNSNews.com. It's about G.I. Joe, the military action figure that is popular among boys. Increasing sales of the toy are getting the attention of groups which oppose violence in children's toys, and this article is about that subject. While I'm particularly disgusted with the amount of violence on TV, I think G.I. Joe is the least of our worries. As the article ends, "Parents know their children best [and what is] most appropriate for them."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/17/2031230.shtml

UK Resource for Sexually Abused Men

Scott · 18 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Emanslave let me know about this web site, which he believes might be the only resource specifically for men in the UK who have been sexually abused or assaulted. The site definitely seems sensitive to men who have been abused, and is performing a national census of men who have had personal experience with this issue.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/18/0047202.shtml

Review of Spreading Misandry

Scott · 18 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

zerostress sent this link my way, which is a review from the National Post about the new book Spreading Misandry: The Teaching of Contempt for Men in Popular Culture. It's an excellent review, and as soon as I finish a couple of books I'm in the process of reading, I'm definitely going to get a copy. Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: Male-bashing could prove 'disastrous,' authors warn

Author: Graeme Hamilton

Date: November 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/18/1630212.shtml

PC Means Political Control

Adam · 19 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I've two articles for your reading on this topic. Tammy Bruce, in her book The New Thought Police says that "political correctness is the principal tactic by which civil rights, feminist, and gay and lesbian organizations exercise political control." According to this Denver Post article, that's mainly where the terms "terrorised by tolerance" and "silenced by sensitivity" come from. And I've also found a Geoff Metcalf interview with Tammy Bruce herself, so you can get a better insight into what she thinks. It's interesting stuff to be sure.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/18/1814237.shtml

Body Dysmorphic Disorder

Scott · 19 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal submitted this story from the Sydney Morning Herald about body dysmorphic disorder in men. This is a little talked about problem, and one that is on the rise: "In this month's British Medical Journal, two researchers, Australian David Castle and American Katharine Phillips say body image is becoming almost as big an issue for men as for women...Castle says: "We want people to be healthy, but on the other hand if you look at the sort of images we are being flooded with, nobody could achieve those looks - looks which are extreme.'"Source: The Sydney Morning Herald [Australian newspaper]

Title: Big, beautiful, but not necessarily benign

Author: Unknown

Date: November 16, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/18/230232.shtml

No Help for Abused Men in Salons

Scott · 19 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "The Washington Post is promoting San Francisco's use of hair stylists to help abused women, but the program ignores the men who are victims. Remind them about the abused men: letters@washpost.com." Source: The Washington Post [newspaper]

Title: For Some Abuse Victims, A Wash, Set -- and Counsel

Author: Rene Sanchez

Date: November 18, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/18/2311202.shtml

Wage Gap Issue a War of Perception

Scott · 20 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mike LaSalle from Men's News Daily writes "This article from the Sydney Morning Herald purports to document the wage gap between men and women. Another article (this one from the University of Virginia Cavalier Daily), succinctly refutes the superficial reporting of the first. The SMH article appears pitched at an "elementary-school" reading level, while of course the latter article is written by and for a college audience..."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/19/2124224.shtml

When Women Abuse Men

Scott · 20 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mike from Men's News Daily writes "This article promotes a new web site/organization that tackles female violence against males." The couple mentioned in the story created the web site HelpingMen.com, which is soliciting personal stories from site visitors. If you'd like to share your story, please stop by there. Update: The link no longer works, but I'd still encourage you to visit helpingmen.com for more info.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/19/2130210.shtml

UK to Allow DV Charges Brought by Third Parties

Scott · 20 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In one of the most disturbing moves since Ontario's Bill 117, I learned from this UK Independent story that a new law will allow third parties to bring charges of domestic violence against the victim's will. The move is meant to protect women who are too afraid or unwilling to press charges against their abuser. Most disturbingly, "Possible candidates for this role include social services departments, voluntary groups working with survivors of domestic violence as well as the police." The second group is the one I'm most concerned about.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/19/2223230.shtml

Apply for a Divorce Now -- Online!

Scott · 20 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Yes, you read that right...there are only a few strings attached. For only $249, residents of California can now complete all divorce proceedings though a web site, without having to walk into a courtroom. The service can only be used if the couple is divorcing amicably and can agree on asset distribution and child custody. Still, it's surreal to think of people divorcing this way. And my favorite quote in the article: "I really don't believe having something available that makes it easier and costs less money is going to encourage divorce." Uh-huh. Click here for the story from the LA Times.Source: The Los Angeles Times [newspaper]

Title: Couples Can Untie the Knot Online

Author: Martin Miller

Date: November 19, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/20/0254243.shtml

Feminist Majority Foundation Buys Ms. Magazine

Scott · 21 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "Ms. Magazine is now owned by the Feminist Majority Foundation. The magazine's offices will move to Los Angeles in Spring 2002. Most of the New York staff has been laid off." As Wendy McElroy put it in her latest ifeminist newsletter, "all attention seems to be focused on the Women of Afghanistan. It is as tho' radical feminism has abandoned domestic politics."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/20/218219.shtml

Reasons for Needing Men (Well, Sorta)

Scott · 21 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In an Irish Independent article, Betty Cody gives an overview of how society has changed and sends inconsistent messages to men. The article begins with the question, "Do we really need men?" and then meanders along stating some of the problems men have faced with the breakdown of rigid roles for men and women. Overall, I found her tone clinical and unfeeling, and her description of men pretty negative overall (ie, fathers are "not particularly competent" at housework and taking care of their kids). But at least in the end she promotes the idea that men need more advocacy for their issues and that they're not receiving it. It's kind of a lukewarm article.Source: The Irish Independent [UK newspaper]

Title: It's official: we don't need men

Author: Betty Cody

Date: Unknown (on or before November 19, 2001)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/21/0534232.shtml

Ritalin May Alter Brain Structure

Scott · 21 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In a disturbing article from Australia's Herald Sun, it is revealed that a recent Buffalo University study has found that Ritalin, the most popular drug for treating ADD/ADHD, may cause long term brain damage. "The changes look similar to those with stimulants such as amphetamine and cocaine...One of the genes [modified by large amounts of amphetamine and cocaine] has been linked with addiction when it is activated in certain parts of the brain."
Source: The Herald Sun [Australian newspaper]

Title: ADD drug may change brain

Author: Unknown

Date: November 13, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/21/0545220.shtml

Tennessee School District May Back Diplomas With Warranties

Nightmist · 21 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This article in The Tennessean reports on a unique new program being considered by Williamson County schools in Tennessee. The school district may back its diplomas with a warranty. If any student graduating from a Williamson County school is forced to take remedial classes upon entering college, the school system will pay for those classes. Although the issue of boys isn't specifically addressed, this could be incentive for teachers to better address boys' struggles in their classrooms. It is also worth noting that Tennessee is currently one of the lowest-ranked states in the nation for education spending, and is also relatively low in the ranks on quality of education.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/21/1845222.shtml

MANN Chat: Anti-Male Art, Part II

Scott · 22 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Good news, Bob Rowan has been contacted and he's planning on coming to the chat tonight, as is Wendy McElroy. You know the deal, go to this page at 9:30 PM Eastern Time tonight and log in! Hopefully holiday travel won't impact our turnout too much.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/21/2035214.shtml

Comment Views Changed for Most Users

Scott · 22 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I made a change to the user preferences database so that viewing comments will seem more logical. For anyone who kept their comment view as "Oldest First," I have changed this to "Oldest First (Ignore Threads)" so that comments will be displayed from top to bottom in order of their posting. I think this might make reading the comments more consistent and help prevent people from mistakenly replying to the wrong thread. If you find you don't like this, if you're logged in you can always change it under the User Preferences, "Customize Comments" section. This change affects the Anonymous User account, too.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/21/2149213.shtml

Woman Murders Husband with Frying Pan; Sentenced to Four Years

Scott · 22 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

krob4399 sent in this Yahoo! News story which briefly outlines the murder of a man by his wife after admitting he had an affair. From the article: "Last November, the 32-year-old housewife stabbed her husband, also 32, with a knife after beating him dozens of times with the steel pan, saying: ``You said you would die if you had an affair, so I want you to die as you had promised.'"' The woman was sentenced to four years in prison for the murder in a Japanese court.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/21/219257.shtml

The "Boy Code" at Work

Scott · 22 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Emanslave sent in this story from ABCNews.com. It's about the socialization of boys and girls with respect to what kinds of toys they play with. It points out that when girls play with "boy" toys, that it isn't a big deal with other children, but when a boys plays with a "girl" toy, they tend to receive sharp socialization messages which discourage this behavior. William Pollack is quoted in the article, and while I think this is a legitimate issue, I feel the article is tainted with the idea that we need to resocialize children away from any gender differences. Source: ABC News [on-line]

Title: A Gender Straitjacket

Author: Unknown

Date: November 21, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/22/0511239.shtml

A Hero Without a Country

Scott · 22 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The latest column by Glenn Sacks isn't directly focused on men's rights, but it does deal with the very real phenomenon of young boys being impressed into armies and forced to do horrendous things. Glenn's article, A Hero Without a Country, tells the story of a young boy who is drafted into a Guatemalan faction's army, and his eventual escape and later life as an illegal immigrant in the U.S. It's the kind of article that gets you to stop and reflect for a minute.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/22/0518241.shtml

Activism Project: The Plight of Afghan Men

Scott · 23 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Today, the Men's Health America mailing list announced an activism campaign to break the silence about the brutalization of Afghan men. While we've all heard about the oppression of women under the Taliban, the treatment of men under this regime can in no way be likened to "freedom" and "empowerment." It's time to remind the media about this, and to do so in numbers. Starting Friday, November 23, and for at least the next 10 days, messages on the MHA mailing list will outline activities you can participate in to make a difference. Please join the list if you're not a member, as it's a great resource. We will also be linking to each message related to this project.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/23/0418257.shtml

Turkey Writes In Law That Men And Women Are Equal

Nightmist · 23 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in the Chicago Tribune reports on new legislation to equalize men and women (particularly in divorce) in Turkey. The legislation was lauded by a women's group calling themselves "The Flying Broom," but what's more interesting is the fact that the legislation genuinely seems to promote equality rather than privelege of women over men. Previously, in a divorce women were entitled only to property legally registered in their names. Now, property and assets are to be divided equally. At the same time, men will be able to seek alimony from wives. Of course, we'll need to wait and see how Turkey interprets the application of the law toward men down the road.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/23/176231.shtml

Female Rap Star Celebrates Men

Scott · 24 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ched writes "In [the song] 'Brotha,' Angie Stone celebrates black men instead of dissing them in the usual hip-hop way. "When I give a concert now and say, `Where are my guys at?' they all go, `Yeah!' Because maybe for the first time, they can really enjoy a show. They don't have to squirm down into their seats because they think a woman is going to cut them up." The Boston Globe story can be read here.Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: One proud sister

Author: Steve Morse

Date: November 23, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/23/2122247.shtml

The Selective Brutalization of Men In Afghanistan

Scott · 24 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This Men's Health America posting outlines the consistent human rights violations perpetrated against Afghan men, both before and as the Taliban came to power in Afghanistan. The request in this activism project is to let others know about these facts, by distributing the post to friends and mailing lists you belong to.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/24/033236.shtml

Violence Knows No Gender

Scott · 24 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mike LaSalle writes "Men's News Daily has published an original article by Bill Kuhl on the subject of women's violence against men. Kuhl is currently writing his graduate thesis on the subject. Men, he says, endure as much violence to their possessions as they do their persons. And women, it turns out, often use weapons to gain advantage in their violent encounters."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/24/035211.shtml

Biased Article Ignores Afghan Men, Again

Scott · 25 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "The NY Times has published another editorial about Afghan women -- still without a word about the many men in Afghanistan who have been executed, tortured, and subjected to forced labor. Comment to: letters@nytimes.com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/24/1939258.shtml

UN Neglect of Afghan Men's Human Rights

Scott · 25 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Men's Health America released a second special report on the neglect of Afghan men's human rights. This time, the focus is on the United Nations, which has spoken out on many occasions against the treatment of Afghan women, but neglected men. The report outlines several examples of this, and will serve as good material for any letters you decide to send in to the media. Neil Steyskal is our main media watcher for this campaign, and will be forwarding stories to this site which are in need of response.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/25/036207.shtml

Manly Heroism

Adam · 25 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a conflicting article
From Fox News, I say conflicting because in one-way men are glorified for putting their lives on the line to help others, and on the other hand praised for being open with their emotions. For example in the article Liz Quilty says "Not just because they are the picture of strength and masculinity, but also because they've done the hardest, most noble job of all, which is to put their own lives second to others." and then Nancy Kirsch says "There is also an inner strength shown. Men on television are welling up and crying, but it doesn't mean they aren't strong ... my gosh, it is the opposite." Can you see the culture clash now? Keep your eyes on this one, it's bound to evolve into something interesting.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/25/0251256.shtml

Male Bashing Montauk Sofa Ad

Scott · 25 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Les Farkas found this offensive ad in a recent issue of Chicago Magazine. Needless to say, this is another issue worth writing in to protest. Les writes, "[Montauk was] so smugly satisfied with the ad that they showcase it on their homepage...This kind of advertising creates a climate where men can be systematically ridiculed and put in their place. The ad reinforces this kind attitude in women." Click Read More for contact information where you can send your opinion of this. Given that the ad is so outrageous, I think we have a chance of effecting some change. Kudos to Les for initiating this project.

Contact Information

Montauk:

montauk@montauksofa.com

Their New York number is (212) 274-1552

Chicago Magazine:

Letters to the Editor: ChicagoMail@primediamags.com

(312) 322-8999

Other contact info: http://www.chicagomag.com/ros/about_us.htm

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/23/0432249.shtml

Two Afghan Bias Articles

Scott · 25 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Sunday the Washington Post published a major article advocating political preferences for Afghan women. Comment to: letters@washpost.com. The Christian Science Monitor has also editorialized in favor of special programs for Afghan women. Comment to: oped@csps.com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/25/1740259.shtml

Dads Don't Need To Know?

Scott · 26 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

frank h writes "I found this article courtesy of David Limbaugh (Rush's brother) in his most recent article here. I don't even have the time to get angry about this one, but it's more psycho-babble about how children are better off if dad's don't really KNOW if their children are really theirs." Something tells me that the field of evolutionary psychology has a long way to go...

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/25/1750225.shtml

A Feminist Blames Feminism

Adam · 26 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Regulars here at Mensactivism will probably love this article, so I'll ask you a quick question: Have you ever wondered what would happen if a hardcore feminist looked long and hard in the mirror about their beliefs and said what they saw? You don't have to wonder anymore as viewing this link shows you the results, and the honesty is quite surprising and refreshing at the same time. I was gonna give a quote, but where's the fun in that? Read it, it's a rare find.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/25/0254252.shtml

Trolls, Sincerity, and Our Public Image

Scott · 26 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I feel that the time is ripe to write something about how we as a movement should give some thought to public relations and how to help increase our numbers in the men's movement. I would like to ask every reader of Mensactivism.org to take a moment to read this article and reflect on it, and tell me what you think. I don't pretend to have all the answers, but I think it's time for a discussion on the following topic. Click "Read More" below for the text...

In the year and a half that I've seen Mensactivism.org grow and flourish, I've always been encouraged by the number of sincere, thoughtful people who are helping to get this movement off the ground. Men's issues are definitely making some headway, in the media and in public consciousness, though the progress has often been slow and meandering. But I think we're approaching a critical point where a large number of new people are going to want to learn more about us, and this is an opportunity that could catapault us ahead or set us back to square one, depending on how we deal with it.

The new cooperation between Mensactivism.org and iFeminism.com has attracted a lot of attention from men and women in both groups. Consequently, we've received a bunch of new visitors to Mensactivism.org recently, and while some of them are already "on our side," others are suspicious of us and some are testing the waters to decide what to make of us.

I think it would be useful to take a moment to think about how we should approach new people who profess to have some interest in the men's movement, through posting on our comment boards. I don't intend to single anyone out, but there have been moments of antagonism and minor flame wars which aren't helping us to reach our common goals. Admittedly, there have been a few troll posters (antagonists that simply post nonsense to stir up trouble, usually through the "Anonymous User" account), but some of the hostilities have turned out to be unreasonable.

First of all, I firmly believe that men and women can and should be angry about the pervasive discrimination men face these days. Emotion is a strong motivator, and the intent of this message is not to encourage complacency in any way. The intent is to ask people to consider the effects of how they utilize their anger and discontent. I'm not talking about censorship or making sure people don't use "bad words" on our comment boards, but for people to consider what effects their words can have beyond the topic they are discussing - that is, how other people will perceive their postings and connect it with the men's movement.

My plea to you, the reader, is to give other people the benefit of the doubt as much as possible. In particular, there have been two disturbing trends I've noticed. In one scenario, someone posting here for the first time who signs their message with a female name immediately gets grilled if she expresses anything other than 100% agreement with our views. In another case, anonymous posters who express dissent in any form are sometimes referred to as "she" by other posters. The latter case is apparently intended to alienate the person and brand him or her as "the enemy," and implies that women in general are "our enemy." We're not going to get anywhere by alienating others, including turning supporters away on the basis of their sex. And responding in these ways simply provokes fruitless confrontation and ad hominem flame wars, getting us nowhere.

I hope when you stop and think about these issues you'll agree that we need to focus on building a fair and just image for the men's movement, and that you'll help take part in making Mensactivism.org a community where newbies can come to learn and be encouraged by us - where they will be compelled to defend us in front of others, rather than having their preconceptions of us (ie, as a bunch of "angry, white men") reinforced.

On another note, I do recognize the need for men and women to be able to express their disgust at many of the things which go on in the world that get posted here as news stories. But there is a difference between ranting about an unjust law or policy, and allowing the frustration one feels about an issue spill over into the personal interactions that happen on Mensactivism.org. If we are going to build strength as a movement we need to be able to agree to disagree, and to have arguments which keep the concept of respect intact. Honestly, the stuff that's gone on here is very minor compared to many e-mail lists and newsgroups, but I wanted to get this message out now while we have the most control over it.

And as for the true trolls, just don't spend your time answering them. They get their kicks from inciting others to waste their time and energy responding, time and energy that could be used to keep pushing the men's movement forward. When you've determined that someone is a troll, just try not to respond to them. When you waste your energy with a troll poster, they've won over you.

These are just my own thoughts on the matter. I encourage you to add your own thoughts here.

Scott

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/24/0210210.shtml

The Invisibility of Afghan Men At Amnesty International

Scott · 26 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The third and final Special Report from Men's Health America has been released, and can be read here. This one focuses on the way Amnesty International, a leading human rights watch organization, has expressed its own bias against men. Keep the letters going, folks - there's a success story which will appear on this site in an hour or so.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/26/1831225.shtml

Latest Coverage of Afgan War Articles

Scott · 26 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "This opinion article from the LA Times gives us yet another imbalanced perspective on gender and the Afgan war. It emphasizes human rights. But it only mentions gender when it comes to women, as usual. It even refers to "women and civilians," as though "civilians" would not do, and as though male soldiers who are forced to fight are somehow less innocent. They printed my letter on this two weeks ago, so I can't write again for a while. But they do print letters from other states, so please write them at letters@latimes.com." Also of note, Neil Steyskal writes "The Christian Science Monitor published a letter from Cary Roberts about Afghan men. Thanks Carey!" Source: The Los Angeles Times [newspaper]

Title: After Bombs Must Come Civil Rights

Author: Rosa Ehrenreich Brooks

Date: November 25, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/26/1817242.shtml

Hawaii Supreme Court Strikes Down Sex Offender Registration Law

Nightmist · 27 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In a surprising move by the Hawaii Supreme Court, that state's version of Megan's Law (a law many states have adopted which requires sex offenders to register with an official registry, and to announce their presence in neighborhoods) has been struck down as unconstitutional. This article in the Fresno Bee explains. The court said that the law violates due process by not allowing those charged with sex crimes to present a defense. Hawaii's willingness to scrutinize Megan's Law for due process violations is a step in the right direction for those who fear false accusations.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/25/2035205.shtml

McElroy and Nightmist Comment on the Ceramic Penis Controversy

Nightmist · 27 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In her weekly Fox News and ifeminists.com column, Wendy McElroy eloquently tackles the hotly debated issue of El Dildo Bandito's (aka Bob Rowan) recent taking down of 21 ceramic penises from the Boulder Public Library. Likewise, I have written this piece, my personal masculist perspective, on the events surrounding Mr. Rowan. I am ashamed to admit that Wendy, ever-vigiliant, managed to mention both the recent YWCA hate campaign against boys and mensactivism.org in her piece, while I merely railed against taxpayer supported hate speech expression. Both these columns are also available directly off ifeminists.com, mine being a guest editorial for the week.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/26/2250258.shtml

New Suicide Study Published

Scott · 27 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal submitted this article about a new Irish suicide study that outlined the stark gender differences in suicides: "five times more men died from suicide than women, and 40% of the deaths were men aged 30 or under...The report recommended specific health strategies for men, and they needed greater encouragement in accessing health services."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/27/0437227.shtml

It's Time to Enlighten Human Rights Watch

Scott · 27 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

As we enter the activism phase of the Men's Health America campaign to draw attention to the abuse of Afghan men's human rights, we are asked in this MHA posting to contact the organization Human Rights Watch, which claims on their web site that "Women have borne the lion's share of human rights abuses in Afghanistan throughout the conflict" (see here). The statement ignores the brutalization of Afghan men and wrongly turns the issue into one where we discount the suffering of half the population. Please contact HRW and ask them to correct this.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/27/0449212.shtml

Colleges Biased Against Women?

Scott · 28 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in this article from the Christian Science Monitor about a study which claims that women learn 33% less than men in college. The article suggests that colleges and universities are biased against women, but from the dropping enrollment of men in college and the poorer academic performance of men in general, I think the article failed to present the issue in an unbiased way. Source: The Christian Science Monitor

Title: A 'gender effect' in college learning?

Author: Mark Clayton

Date: November 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/27/2125247.shtml

Addressing Media Bias in Afghan Human Rights Stories

Scott · 28 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The latest Men's Health America posting includes links to three articles (also submitted to Mensactivism.org by Neil Steyskal) which serve as typical examples of the media is ignoring the human rights of Afghan men. Read, and respond: New York Times article, e-mail: letters@nytimes.com. USA Today article, e-mail: editor@usatoday.com. Christian Science Monitor article, e-mail: oped@csps.com. Neil also sent in an interesting article from the Wall Street Journal whic comments on some of the gender politics surrounding condemnation of the Taliban.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/28/0317248.shtml

Woman Convicted of Murder for One Child Given Custody of Another

Scott · 28 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

DAR sent in this story from Maryland's SunSpot and writes "[This is] Another case where the 'system' incorrectly assumes that the 'blood' parent (being a 'mother') is the best parent." The article offers a graphic description of some of the abuse this mother perpetrated against her child, and the fact that she was given custody of another (apparently due to the "battered woman defense") is appalling. It's a perfect example of just how far the battered woman defense can be exploited. Source: The SunSpot [newspaper]

Title: Woman Convicted in Death Gets Baby

Author: Susan Skiles Luke

Date: November 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/28/0636214.shtml

MANN Chat: Welcoming Newcomers

Scott · 28 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tonight's Mensactivism.org chat is intended to serve two purposes. One is to continue discussion about the topics discussed in the Trolls, Sincerity, and Our Public Image thread, and the other is to welcome the wave of newcomers to this site recently (since Wendy's latest Fox News column, we've seen a dramatic jump in new user registrations and site traffic). So drop by our chat page tonight, Nov. 28th at 9:30 PM Eastern Time and say hello, all you new people! We should also note that our first official joint chat with ifeminists.com will be held this Sunday, December 2, starting at 9:00 PM Eastern Time.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/28/0748219.shtml

DesertLight Journal No. 17

Scott · 28 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett's DesertLight Journal has hit issue number 17, and can be read here. Topics covered in this men's rights e-zine include News From the Battered Men's Helpline, AMEN Ireland DV Awareness Week, the Afghan media bias campaign by Men's Health America, and more. Check it out!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/28/0727224.shtml

Gender Feminist Accuses Men's Groups of Creating Hostile Environment

Nightmist · 28 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in the Irish Times is perhaps the most significant mention of men's rights by a gender feminist I've ever seen. The woman attributes what she thinks is a rise in hostility toward women to the men's movement's efforts to help male victims of domestic violence! I don't know about Ireland, but an American gender feminist accusing the men's movement of this, in my mind, would be like Microsoft claiming that Apple is destroying its marketshare.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/28/059235.shtml

False Rape Accusation Backfires

Scott · 29 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Ched submitted this story from the Boston Globe and writes *"Yet another false allegation gone bad. It seems that this woman knew that falsely accusing a police officer with rape might help her beat the attempted murder charges that she faced."*Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: Brother's tip lands sister in jail

Author: Unknown [AP story]

Date: November 28, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/28/2123223.shtml

A Barrage of Stories About the MHA Campaign

Scott · 29 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal continues to send in so many news stories related to the Afghan men campaign, we can barely fit them all! Here's a summary: Good news! Carey Roberts again got a letter printed pointing out bias, this time in the Washington Post. This article from USA Today talks about land mines in Afghanistan - and that most of those killed or maimed by them are men: editor@usatoday.com. And this FrontPageMagazine article author is in need of some awareness: radioright@aol.com. The latest Men's Health America posting offers a sample letter to send to Amnesty International, demanding that the plight of Afghan men no longer be silenced. Keep the positive and negative feedback going to those news outlets!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/29/157202.shtml

Hefty Trash Bag Commerical Trashes Men

Scott · 29 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

'disclaimer' of freerepublic.com sent in this link to a discussion about a recent Hefty trash bag commercial where a garbage bag is compared to a man and then dumped into a garbage can gleefully by a woman. I haven't seen it, but from the sounds of it, this is definitely a case where some activism is appropriate. Anyone have contact info for Hefty?

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/29/1511224.shtml

iFeminist Newsletter

Scott · 29 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

If you're not already receiving Wendy McElroy's iFeminist.com newsletter, why not stop by here and sign up? (The weekly update subscription is on the top half of the page) Wendy's weekly newsletter features articles of interest to both men's and women's activists, and has featured articles recently by our prolific Mensactivism.org admin, Nightmist. As one of the only known pro-male feminist organizations, the Individualist Feminist movement has a lot to offer - stop by and check them out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/29/1557251.shtml

Upcoming Conference on Boys' Issues

Scott · 29 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

nagzi writes "This conference sounds like one with going to. Its about trying to understand what's happening to boys and young men in Canada today. It takes place in Toronto at the beginning of March. The one problem is that its somewhat expensive, early enrollment $295, and late enrollment $345. And yes, add in the GST (7% tax)."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/29/1538241.shtml

Male Heroes of United Flight 93 Deserve Medals

Scott · 30 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Nicola Papp writes "I read this article in the UK Times. It's a very detailed description of the heroism of the men on Flight 93 that saved hundreds of lives in whatever target the terrorists were directing the plane. I have not seen anything like this in our US press. Is this a case of 'passive' male bashing? Shouldn't these men be awarded a medal for their valor. Maybe is politically incorrect to give them a postmortem medal and not to the other women on board." Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: Hijackers squabbled as passengers fought back

Author: Katty Kay

Date: November 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/29/1542255.shtml

Judges Urged to Send Fewer Women to Jail

Scott · 30 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

phil writes *"I found this article in the UK Telegraph (referenced from www.angryharry.com). If anyone still doubts men are (knowingly!) discriminated against by the justice system, just read it. The quotes and opinions reported really made my jaw drop."*Source: The Telegraph [UK newspaper]

Title: Too many women are sent to jail, judges told

Author: Philip Johnston

Date: November 27, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/29/2340244.shtml

Letter Exposes Draft Injustice

Scott · 30 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Men's activist Woodrow Dick got a powerful letter about the draft into the Richmond Times-Dispatch. Congratulations, Woody!"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/29/2344217.shtml

Men Who Teach Preschool

Scott · 30 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

DaveW writes "This article in the Atlanta Journal-Constitution describes men who teach preschool. It also mentions the prejudice they face for being men." I happen to know several male middle school teachers in the area, and all of them have had incidents where they were "guilty until proven innocent" from an unfounded accusation by a student. Some are doubtful they will teach much longer, out of fear. It's sad, especially considering how much young kids (both male and female) benefit from having male teachers.Source: The Atlanta Journal-Constitution [newspaper]

Title: Tiny percentage of preschool teachers show it can be man-sized job.

Author: Patti Ghezzi

Date: November 26, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/30/150222.shtml

Are Men Really Back? Doesn't Look Like It

Scott · 30 November 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal pointed me to this article by Debbie Schlussel, which asks the question, "Are men really back?" Her resounding answer is no - male bashing and degradation are just as pervasive in the media today as they were before the Sept. 11 attacks, which brought masculinity into favor briefly. She cites many examples to back this up, and the article is good food for thought.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/30/1511205.shtml

Sexuality Web Site Portrays Men as Aggressors

Scott · 1 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

brad writes "Having recently read in my university's newspaper that a new major website on sexuality had been released, I decided to pop over to determine its male friendly status. All in all, it's not as bad as it could be. They acknowledge that men can be victims too. However, they seem intent on driving home the fact that men are the aggressors. On one page they admit that men are victims but the only reference they have available is for female victims. On another I came across the following tidbit: "Men commit 99% of all sexual assaults." No contact was listed on the site for feedback."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/30/2146251.shtml

Contraceptives for Men

Scott · 1 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Claire4Liberty writes "www.malecontraceptives.org believes "that men can, and should, have access to contraceptive options beyond condoms and vasectomy. Male methods could potentially be safer, more effective, and easier to use than the best contraception available on today's market." More and better B.C. choices for men equals fewer unwanted children, and that's a goal everyone can support."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/11/30/2148236.shtml

Neil's Effort Pays Off

Scott · 1 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Marc Angelucci writes "To all who wrote the LA Times, thanks! They printed Neil Steyskal's letter responding to the articles that only focus on Afghan women but not men. These editors are of course quite biased. I know a number of people who wrote letters. But the editors printed only one and printed a letter on top of it that attacks men for having a back track record in Afghan leadership. No doubt they did this to send the subtle "but it's men who do it" message. Anyhow, nice job Neil!" Neil also was printed in the Richmond Times-Dispatch and the Baltimore Sun. Way to go, man!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/01/1617246.shtml

Two More Afghan Bias Articles

Scott · 2 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Here's a Baltimore Sun column on Afghan women. Isn't it curious how these media campaigns spread? Comment to: letters@baltsun.com." In addition, Neil sent in this New York Times article, which also fails to mention men. Comment to: letters@nytimes.com. The latest Men's Health America posting is a request for people to catch up with the background reading and to send in some letters over the weekend.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/01/2116259.shtml

New Logos Submitted by Readers

Scott · 2 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tom Parker surprised me by sending in an updated version of our logo. He gave it a more beveled/3-D look, and I think it's great! Thank you, Tom! Update: Brad also just sent in new icons for for the following news topics: men's organizations, circumcision, and masculinity. They can be seen here. Thanks Brad!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/01/2218217.shtml

MANN/iFeminists.com Chat: Bob Rowan and the Boulder Art Controversy

Scott · 2 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Don't forget, Sunday night will be the first chat sponsored by both Mensactivism.org and iFeminism.com. The topic, which has caused a lot of interest from both groups is the Boulder Public Library male-bashing art exhibit. The chat will be held in the Mensactivism.org chat room, and will begin at 9:00 PM Eastern time this Sunday, Dec. 2. We'll have a different group that usual, and this would be a great opportunity to meet some of our supporters from the Individualist Feminist movement.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/01/2317239.shtml

Feminists Miss the Point in Afghanistan

Scott · 2 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

alphamale writes "This article by Mark Steyn describes how feminists have missed the point of what went on in Afghanistan. Steyn cames across articles in the Boston Globe and the Montreal Gazette in which one feminist (or as I like to think of them: female chauvinists) claimed that women in Afghanistan were forced by society to cover up; while the other article stated that in the Western world, society forces women to undress. Neither viewpoint is accurate and as Steyn notes, society has not thrust unreasonable body image expectations on women - just look around. Most women do not look like Kate Moss! I guess the conclusion is that as long as you can make some connection to the lies of feminism, you can get funding and get published."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/01/2126230.shtml

Cancer Charity Misandrists

Scott · 2 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The UK-based Imperial Cancer Research Fund is a leading British medical charity and leads the world in cancer research. It also discriminates against the male sex,almost as a matter of routine, by organising an annual sporting event from which men are excluded. Douglas Rome, a Scottish writer whose work has already appeared here, protested to the ICRF, only to find that it was insultingly arrogant and unconcerned about its sexism. In this essay on AngryHarry, Douglas suggests how the ICRF can be challenged and addresses a ton of other issues related to men's rights. It's long, but good.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/02/029214.shtml

TLC Interviews NOCIRC on "Circumcision Vs. AIDS"

Nightmist · 2 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The Learning Channel Saturday night featured a documentary about a connection between a man's likelihood of contracting AIDS if he is uncircumcised. Scientists working in Africa found that men who were uncut were more likely get to the disease because of thin keratic cells on the inside of the foreskin. NOCIRC, an anti-circumcision group in the U.S., did not dispute the science, but maintained that a public policy encouraging circumcision is not a wise step. Instead, they said, this research should promote further research. Check tlc.com for their schedule and when this show will run again. WARNING: This documentary is graphic and does show the faces of young African boys as they are being circumcised. It also displays the removed foreskin of an adult man who had donated his foreskin to the AIDS research. Scott's note: Thanks also to nagzi for submitting this.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/02/044214.shtml

Tolerance.org Ignores DV Against Men

Scott · 2 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Vince writes "Here, the intolerance of Tolerance.org is displayed. As usual, they don't mention any data whatsoever on battered men. Contact them through this page. Let's make them aware of their intolerance. Let's make them aware that men make up far more than the "5%" myth." Update: Neil Steyskal had also sent in a similar article from the Washington Times.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/02/1728209.shtml

Man Gives Up His Life to Save Strangers

Scott · 2 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

DaveW writes "Amidst all the anti-male hatred in the media, [there is] a story in the Atlanta Journal-Constitution of a man giving his life to save strangers - a woman and a child he didn't even know." Randy Burris pushed a baby stroller out of the way of an oncoming car, and was hit instead. He died two days later and is an example of some of the self-sacrifice we take for granted from men these days.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/02/051204.shtml

Sex and Race Discrimination Ends at UGA

Scott · 3 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

DaveW writes "Race and sex discrimination finally ends in the admissions process at the University of Georgia after a successful lawsuit by Atlanta attorney Lee Parks over reverse discrimination."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/02/054255.shtml

Liz Claiborne Site Stereotypes All Abusers as Male

Scott · 3 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Dr. Matrix writes "Liz Claiborne's "love is not abuse" campaign against domestic violence includes a web site. The site suggests that men should be recognized "not only as perpetrators or potential offenders, but as bystanders who can confront abusive males," but directly acknowledges neither that women can be abusers nor the extent to which they are and...promulgates the stereotype that only men are abusers and only women are victims." Dr. Matrix included some quotes from the site that displayed this bias, which can be read in the Read More section of this story.

The stereotypes are repeated throughout the site in statements such as the following:

> If you suspect that your sister, friend, co-worker or neighbor is being abused, let her know you're there to support her.

In one footnote, justification for the site's anti-male tone, which consists of the stereotypical gendering of victims of domestic violence as female and perpetrators as male is provided in the following statement:

> *The U.S. Department of Justice estimates that more than 90% of all relationship abuse victims are female and most abusers are male. Because of this, we use "she" when referring to victims and "he" when referring to abusers. Whether the victim is male or female, violence of any kind in relationships is unacceptable.

If the situation were reversed and 90% of abuse victims were male and "most" abusers were female, the across the board gendering of abusers as female and victims as male would provoke feminist outrage.
More to the point, other studies suggest abusers are roughly equally male or female.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/02/1733227.shtml

Afghan Women Speak Out for Afghan Men

Scott · 3 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal submitted this article about some women from Afghanistan who are challenging the U.S. media's portrayal that men are dominating tyrants in Afghan families. It was an excellent, rare article and we should praise the Washington Post for printing this story. Comment to: letters@washpost.com.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/03/1154259.shtml

More Women Face Charges in Domestic Disputes

Scott · 3 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tony sent in this article from the Toronto Star which discusses the rising number of women being charged with domestic violence. In one case mentioned, a woman made 320 harassing phone calls to her estranged boyfriend in a span of two weeks. She even continued to call after the police warned her to stop. We reported on a similar situation a while back where a man created a web site called Psychoexgirlfriend.com and documented her calls on his site. Source: The Toronto Star [Canadian newspaper]

Title: More women face charges in domestic disputes

Author: Unknown

Date: November 23, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/03/1131209.shtml

Trends in Educational Equity

Scott · 4 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tony writes "You might find this interesting. The educational Statistics Quarterly did a study looking at trends in educational equity of girls and women. The quote I found most interesting is," Data show that in school an in college, females are now doing as well as or better than males in many of the indicators of educational attainment, and that the large gaps in educational attainment that once existed between men and women have significantly decreased or been eliminated altogether." I find it interesting that a study on women and girls mentions this fact."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/04/175210.shtml

Hefty Responds to Trash Bag Commercial Complaint

Nightmist · 4 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Someone at Hefty has responded to my complaint about their current commercial trashing men. Among other reasons they give for running this ad is the fact that they ran it through several focus groups, which found it "humorous." She does not tell me what the ratio of women to men in those focus groups were. She does, however, apologize for the offensiveness of the advertisement. Her letter (as well as my original) may be read by clicking Read More below.--------

Hefty's response to me

Dear Mr. Hanback,

First, I would like to apologize to you for offending you with our new television commercial. We meant no harm. In fact, a lot of research was done before the ad was put together and it was decided to do something like this as a "tongue-in-cheek" approach to the women consumers who do most of the shopping for groceries and clean up items, etc. After filming the ad, but before any final decisions were made as to whether or not we would go with it, the company then spent considerable time showing it to focus groups to get a good feel for their reaction. The overwhelming majority of consumers found it amusing. They thought it funny and cute, with no serious thoughts to "throw out" the men in their lives.

Considering the level of seriousness we all must deal with today, we were simply trying to approach the introduction of a new style trash bag with some humor. We would never knowingly offend or annoy our consumers in anyway. Again, please accept our apology.

Sincerely,

Arlene Stafford

Consumer Affairs Representative

Pactiv Corporation

My original letter

Dear Sir or Madam:

This notice is to inform you that I will no longer be purchasing any products under the "Hefty" brand. I have come to this decision because of a recent advertising campaign intended to besmirch and degrade men to the level of women's garbage.

As a single man and the owner of my own home, I have always relied on Hefty products, but from now on I will be purchasing my garbage bags and other plastics products from your biggest competitor. I also intend to request that my local Wal-Mart and Food Lion (where I do my shopping for these items) refrain from stocking your product, so that other men who have not seen your ad are not unwittingly supporting the idea that they are nothing but garbage.

The advertisement to which I am referring is a television ad campaign in which a woman compares having Hefty trash bags to having a "big strong man" around the house, which she can then trash when she's done with "him." As a man, this advertisement is insulting on a variety of levels:

1. It paints a picture of men as soulless, lifeless "tools," good for nothing but exploitation by women;

2. It encourages women to think of men as "garbage" and not people; garbage which can be tossed out and trampled upon without second thought to our humanity;

3. Together with other male bashing ads by other companies and advertising agencies, your ad further polarizes men and women against each other, and fosters greater resentment between the sexes.

In another way, this particular advertisement insults women because it paints all women as heartless and evil people who are simply looking for someone on whom to take pleasure by destruction.

In this day and age when fewer men are choosing to marry out of fear of divorce and the destruction of their lives, and more and more women are become violent and murderous toward their husbands, boyfriends, and male children, your ad is an unwelcome instigator.

Considering the above, I implore you to take the following action:

1. Remove the offending advertisement and all others like it from the airwaves;

2. Fire your ad agency and marketing people, and demand your money back from the amazing display of social incompetence that created this offensive piece;

3. Reply to my message so that I know you received it and are taking this matter seriously.

I am forwarding this complaint to everyone I can find who may be affiliated with this particular advertisment. I am also posting it to several locations on the Internet which support men's interests, so that others may see my outrage and duplicate my action against it.

I also hope that you do understand my reasons for behaving this way against your company. I have nothing personal against you, nor do I have any complaints about your product. I am simply tired of and frustrated with fighting to prove myself a human being in women's minds every day. Advertisements like yours make that struggle all the more difficult, and make my life all the less worth living.

Thank you for your time and attention to this matter.

Respectfully,

James Hanback, Jr.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/04/1732254.shtml

Chivalry's Last Rites?

Scott · 5 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal submitted this Washington Times article where Suzanne Fields makes some interesting comments on the concept of chivalry. She starts out by discussing the repealment of old fashioned laws based on chivalry but then comes to point out that in many ways chivalry has taken a new form in domestic violence laws. She ends by discussing the plight of Afghan women, and throughout the article, I had a hard time trying to figure out her position. You can reply to this article at letters@washingtontimes.com.Source: The Washington Times [newspaper]

Title: The last rites for chivalry

Author: Suzanne Fields

Date: December 3, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/04/2138257.shtml

Exploiting Afghan Women for Feminism's Gain

Scott · 5 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy's latest Fox News column is interesting because it exposes how the radical feminist movement is getting miffed at Laura Bush's advocacy for Afghan women. McElroy writes that the reason for this is that "The left wing of feminism is desperate to own this issue. Voices like the Feminist Majority Foundation are trying to use the oppression of Afghan women in the same manner they exploit other international issues, such as the trafficking of women or working conditions in the Third World." It's not completely related to men's rights, but provides some insight into the feminist movement, whose tactics we should try to understand.
Source: Fox News

Title: Call Me 'Anti-Woman'

Author: Wendy McElroy

Date: December 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/04/2233207.shtml

Domestic Violence Against Men Awareness Week

Scott · 5 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Eeva Sodhi writes "Mary Cleary, the spunky and ever so resourceful Irish woman who founded AMEN, suggests that as a postscript to November, celebrating "woman abuse" we need to declare the week of Dec. 3-9 as "Domestic Violence Against Men Awareness Week." I support her wholeheartedly. After all, we women need to demonstrate that we are WOMEN, not feminists who have invented the obscure term "gender."" So begins Eeva's essay on domestic violence. Please click Read More below to view the rest of her submission. Thanks, Eeva!

Until very recently the term "domestic" or "family" violence was portrayed as being synonymous with "wife abuse."

Even in cases where both men and women were surveyed, only the results of male-to-female violence were available to the general public.

However, as true bidirectional results from independent research began to trickle out, we learned that not all was as it was made to appear. Women actually admitted that they were the main instigators and perpetrators of direct physical violence in intimate relationships.

One of the earlier surveys is a longitudinal study conducted in New Zealand. It shows that three times more women than men (18.6% and 5.7%, respectively) engaged in severe forms of violence against their partners. When less severe types of violence were included, the figures were 37% and 22%, respectively. Further, in the same report: "the preliminary findings of this study do not conflict with those of U.S. epidemiological studies, which survey broad populations, as opposed to clinical studies of domestic violence in which samples are likely to be drawn from shelters or the courts."

Statistics Canada, having included men in its 1999 General Social Science Survey (GSS), had to admit that both sexes were almost equally culpable. When only current partners were counted, the study found that more men than women reported having been victimized during the past five years.

We can carry on comparing who hits whom and how many times, but the outcome will be that, without a weapon, the stronger one is usually the one to inflict more damage. That such methods as poison and motor vehicles, or attacks on sleeping targets, will compensate for the lack of physical strength is a non-issue among the main stream researchers who routinely use the Conflict Tactics Scale (CTS) questionnaires.

Notably absent are any surveys that would focus on indirect aggression. False allegations of abuse are the foremost weapon in this insidious form of abuse that is designed to inflict the maximum damage on the victim while the perpetrator remains under cover. Often the main cause for direct violence is that an individual who has suffered long lasting circuitous abuse in the hands of an intimate partner may, under certain circumstances, suddenly lash out with tragic consequences. The "Battered Woman Defense" has become an accepted defense for women who do not need to produce any evidence save their own word, and who carefully prepare and execute the murder of their sleeping partners. No similar recourse exists for abused men, no matter how valid their evidence, who have been provoked to act in self-defense or in a fit of anger.

Indirect abuse may also manifest itself as emotional or financial abuse, often done by proxy. There can hardly be a more sinister form of abuse than what is meted out to divorced men. They not only stand to lose their children, their reputation and all of their worldly belongings, but they are often condemned to lifelong servitude in order to pay support to the mothers of their children. According to the guidelines "The standards of living of the children and the receiving parent are interrelated because they live together" The courts interpret it in a following manner: "The purpose of the guidelines is to enhance the child's post-separation standard of living to approximate, as far as possible, what that standard would have been had the parents not separated."

One of Justice Canada's directives suggests that the data on domestic violence be disseminated in "two different information brochures: one relating to victims, largely women, and one relating to abusers, largely men." Therefore, no women ever appear to be perpetrators, and no men can be seen to be victims.

The Hon. Dianne Cunningham (Ontario Women's Directorate) stated in her speech during the opening of the Ontario Domestic Violence Court Pilot Project at North York: "...The offender must plead guilty" and is required to participate in a "male batterer's program."

The project at that particular location targets first time offenders when there is no significant or visible injury to the claimant. Family violence courts, based on the Duluth model, operate in secrecy and on the principle that only men can be offenders. Men have a chance to appear in front of a judge only after they have made their plea. Ms. Cunningham's statement also echoes the current practise of placing a reverse onus on men, but not on women.

The abuses against men by the judiciary all across the industrialized world have become so flagrant that Lord Woolf, the Lord Chief Justice of the United Kingdom, saw it necessary to caution (Nov. 23, 2001) that dozens of men might have been wrongly convicted of child abuse as the allegations might be motivated by claims for compensation.

Revenge, in addition to greed, is often the motive, as the "Family Violence in Canada 2000" documents: "In addition, women were more likely to report the incident to the police so the abuser would be arrested or punished." Note, again, the "incident" and "abuser," without the qualification "alleged." A report, followed by a mandatory charge under the existing zero tolerance policies, can only be called "alleged" until it has been substantiated.

Considering that charges are mandatory only in cases of reported wife assault, and that no charges are necessary in regard to other "family disturbances," the following short excerpt from a Justice Canada interpretations of section 15 (1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and freedoms proves that the fundamental charter rights of men are violated by Canadian family courts:

"If the impugned provision creates an offence that can, as a matter of fact, be committed by either sex" but goes on to specify that it is only an offence when committed by one sex, then there may well be an infringement of s. 15(1) R. v. Hess, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 906.

And:

"The dominant purpose of s. 15 is to preserve equality. It follows as a matter of principle that a special law or programme which is put forward under s. 15(2) cannot be justified if it unnecessarily denies the existing rights of the non-target group" Apsit et al. v. Manitoba Human Rights Commission (No. 2), [1988] 1 W.W.R. 629 (Man. Q.B.).

Yet, the denial of men's rights goes on, unabated. We have become a selectively afforded rights culture, which sees equality as all the rights to women and all the responsibilities to men. Time to take a pause and reflect on the evidence, especially in the light of the Canadian Institute for Health Information (CIHI) report on injury deaths in Ontario released Nov. 28, 2001. The report showed suicide accounted for one-third of Ontario's 3,138 injury deaths in 1998-99. Men made up 79% of the deaths. Our gender biased laws are killing some of the best and brightest of Canadian men. Considering that divorce has been shown to be the main cause for male suicide, it can be seen to be spousal homicide by proxy.

Sincerely,

Eeva Sodhi

Ontario, Canada

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/04/0232213.shtml

MANN Chat: Is Chivalry Really Dead?

Nightmist · 5 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Chivalry (or, the placement of women on a figurative pedestal) has long been blamed by feminism for women's inequality with men in a variety of areas, but is it also responsible for modern inequalities which directly affect men? Unequal sentencing for similar crimes all the way down to unequal pricing for goods and services could conceivably be blamed on this relic from ages old we call "chivalry." They say it's dead. Are they right? Join us at 9:30 p.m. EST for an online chat on the subject, and we'll attempt to determine the truth.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/05/043202.shtml

Chestnut Hill College to Admit Men in 2003

Scott · 5 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Rams sent in this article from PaperClip Communications. It announces that Chestnut Hill College, a Catholic liberal arts college, will be ending its policy of admitting only women beginning in the Fall of 2003. The reason? "Declining interest in all-women's institutions." CHC President Sister Carol Jean Vale said, "It was the most responsible decision we could make...I think a good number of the remaining women's colleges will either merge with a larger institution or become coed."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/04/2216252.shtml

Woman Severed Husband's Penis, Nine Months Jail "Enough"

Scott · 6 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

rparent32 writes "A woman in Hong Kong was released by a judge, who felt the nine months she had already spent in jail was enough. She drugged her husband, and cut off his penis, when he arrived at their place to discuss a separation. I don't now about the laws in Hong Kong, but this sounds similar to a story in Vancouver, Canada. A women thought her husband was cheating on her, so she got her revenge by hacking off his penis. She was charged with common assault. This charge is usually reserved for such things a punching someone with a fist. She was convicted, and given probation."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/05/0026203.shtml

Britain Gives Women Right to Know Men's Salaries

Nightmist · 6 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In yet another slam against manhood in the United Kingdom, the British government is granting women the right to know the salaries of their male co-workers. The government is painting this as an initiative to promote pay equity. It sounds more like a legal invasion of the privacy of one sex by another, and further attempts to force men into smaller pay scales no matter their years of service and quality of work. The story can be read here.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/05/1725213.shtml

Therapist Takes Issue with Dear Abby Response

Scott · 6 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "A therapist has written to Dear Abby to advise an abused man to leave his wife and take his children. The therapist isn't aware that the man will have to be very lucky to keep his kids, even if he has a well documented case. This is something Dear Abby needs to know. Go to the "reply" link on the site."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/06/0659241.shtml

Men Overreact to Stress?

Scott · 6 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Donald Cameron writes *"An article in the National Post reports: "By nature, men overreact to stress...male fetuses release double the amount of the stress hormone, cortisol, than female fetuses do. This "exaggerated stressful response" in males before birth means men may be "over-responsive to stress" after birth." I have to wonder if there is hope for men in light of this kind of research. It is good to know about the causes of diseases and disorders. I just somehow feel that we are headed into some strange territory (dare I say "Brave New World?") where genetic research can be used to make wild claims that go beyond the findings of a study. They could just as easily have said that women underreact to stress, could they not?"*Source: The National Post [Canadian newspaper]

Title: By nature, men overreact to stress, research finds

Author: Sarah Schmidt

Date: December 4, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/06/075212.shtml

More Male-Bashing Ads

Scott · 6 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Thanks to an active readership, we've been able to track more anti-male portrayals in the media. Anna wrote in about a demeaning ad she saw in Parents Magazine, Dec. 2001 issue: "It's for Secret anti-perspirant for women. It reads.. "It's gentle. It's sensitive. It's strong...Men, take note." The "men take note" is in larger and bolder print. I wrote to Proctor and Gamble through their web site I will also write a hard copy." cheddah and bledso both wrote in about a new Norelco electric shaver ad on TV. It shows an entertainment center fall apart, presumably due to the man's incompetence at building it, and the announcer ends it with something along the lines of, "...because men can never do anything right." The Media Watch page has been updated accordingly.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/06/1432209.shtml

Kosovo to Institute Sex Quota System in Parliament

Scott · 7 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Serge submitted this BBC News article, which covers the new parliament in Kosovo, which will institute a quota system to guarantee members will be at least 28% female. "While many countries, including France, Italy and Belgium have systems that demand a minimum number of women candidates, virtually none ensure that they are elected." The article also notes that "The US has one of the lowest number of elected women officials of any (Western democratic) nation." But to that I would add that just because men are the ones making laws doesn't mean that they are not serving women's needs. Who could deny that lawmakers in America are almost continually bending over backwards to please women and feminist groups?Source: BBC [UK News Organization]

Title: Kosovo leads Europe in woman power

Author: Nicholas Wood

Date: November 29, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/06/1531205.shtml

Some Thoughts One Woman Has About Men

Scott · 7 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Rams writes "Chris McKendry works for ESPN and wrote this short piece on some of the things she's observed working in an environment dominated by men. They sound reasonable to me, and I particularly like what she wrote about working dads. Check it out." Rams put this under the "Humor" category, and I think that's a fine place for it. It's a lighthearted article, which I think we could use more often on this site. :)

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/06/2213216.shtml

Hoff-Sommers Severely Heckled, Insulted During HHS Lecture

Scott · 7 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

plumber writes "Christina Hoff Sommers, who wrote The War Against Boys recently encountered outrageous abuse at a government-sponsored conference. Because she dared to question the value of the program "Girl Power," she was told to stop talking by the organizers, heckled by the audience, and Professor Jay Wade of Fordham University shouted from the audience "Shut the fuck up, bitch!" We should recognize the courage of Ms. Hoff Sommers and others who confront feminist power with truth. She might also appreciate some sympathy and thank you notes at sommers22@aol.com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/07/0438247.shtml

Write to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for Afghan Men

Scott · 7 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The latest Men's Health America posting reveals an urgency to contact that U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee to urge them to address the needs of Afghan men, and to prevent the brutalization of Afghan men as has happened for so many years during and before Taliban rule. A sample letter is included, and those with Senators not on the Committee are urged to write to committee chairman Joseph Biden. In other news on this campaign, Neil Steyskal got yet another letter printed in the Washington Times. Spartacus also sent in this link which has a ton of stories which are potentially biased. Just pick a few, read them, and consider writing in response.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/07/058204.shtml

Paying for Dates

Scott · 8 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "The Washington Post's advice columnist tells how to deal with women who don't pay their share." The response is pretty entertaining, too. Check it out.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/07/2315258.shtml

ADD/ADHD Treatable Nutritionally?

Adam · 8 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

How's this for unexpected? I came across this interview with Lendon Smith, A man who claims that ADD/ADHD is basically caused by a dietary problem and giving the kid certain foodstuffs would stop the problem. He also claims to have an 80% success rate with his nutritional method. Think of this article as a reminder that we have to help the nearest boy as much as the nearest man.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/08/1614252.shtml

Judicial Chivalry

Scott · 8 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mike from Men's News Daily wrote an editorial related to what I like to call "judicial chivalry," or how women often get shorter sentences than men for the same crime, because they're women. Mike's article discusses how feminists have tried to turn the concept on its head, claiming that women are punished more severely for committing crimes, since criminal behavior is seen as a male realm. He ends the essay with an encouraging anecdote of a judge who saw through this issue and refused to be apologetic about sentencing a woman who had nine children.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/08/1723232.shtml

The Welfare State and Crime

Adam · 9 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This testimony by Michael Tanner explains the link between welfare and crime for young black men, but it really is a universal concept and not just a racial issue. Some parts are a bit dubious, but at least they're starting to look at policies that economically marginalize men for the short-term benefit of the sancrosact "women and children," which will only make things worse for everyone in the long run." Scott's note: The comments about how welfare checks "replace" the roles of men in poor urban areas is an accurate comment, and there was also mention about the need of fathers and male role models for young men, which I think is very relevant to our cause.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/08/1616233.shtml

MANN/iFeminists Chat: Men's Rights/Responsibilities in Abortion

Scott · 9 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Please come by tonight for the second Mensactivism.org/iFeminists.com on-line chat, which this time (and from now on) will be held at the iFeminists chat room. Tonight's topic will be a controversial one, I'm sure - the rights and responsibilities of men in abortion. Should men have any say in an abortion, or should they have the option of "abortion" themselves? Or something else? Go to the iFeminists chat page tonight, 12/9, at 9:00 PM Eastern Time and offer your input!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/09/1518237.shtml

Education Statistics from Canada

Scott · 9 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Donald Cameron writes "In a National Post article we are treated to an interpretation of a landmark OECD schooling study. According to this article, it would appear that the boys seem to be lacking any benefit from their " innate overreaction to stress." Reporter Heather Sokoloff would have us believe that this study applies to all students. She would also have us believe that the test is actually meaningful in any sense. I have to wonder if Canadian boys just read differently than Canadian girls but schools and tests don't deal with this."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/09/1526209.shtml

Men Fight Back Over Sexist TV Adverts

Scott · 10 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

An Anonymous User sent in this link from the UK Observer. It's an encouraging testimony to the effect we're having on the advertising industry. "Figures to be released this week by the Advertising Standards Authority show that the number of complaints has doubled this year. Over the last six years protests have increased tenfold. Men say they are fed up being depicted either as sex gods with unfeasibly muscular bodies and chiselled jaws or - more often - as incompetent, brow-beaten slobs who cannot express themselves, hold down a job, clean the house, or keep a girlfriend."
Source: The Observer [UK newspaper]

Title: Men fight back over sexist TV adverts

Author: John Arlidge

Date: December 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/09/1541243.shtml

Married Men's Health

Scott · 10 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal submitted Richard Morin's latest Unconventional Wisdom column, where he discusses the effect of men and women working long hours on their health it turns out that men's health tends to suffer when their wives work more than 40 hours/week, while women's does not when men work 40+ hours/week. After some commentary on the possibilities of why that is so, a subsection of the column devotes a couple of paragraphs to the way men are portrayed as idiots on popular sitcoms in the past few decades. Source: The Washington Post

Title: Workaholic Wives and Their Sick Husbands

Author: Richard Morin

Date: December 9, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/09/1536251.shtml

Sperm Donor Forced to Pay Child Support to Lesbian Mother

Scott · 10 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Subversive writes "A court in Sweden has ruled that a man who donated sperm for artificial insemination, enabling a lesbian couple to have three children, must pay child support after the two women separated. A county court ruled that the man was undoubtedly the children's biological father and hence obliged to pay child support of $265 per month after the women's 10-year relationship broke up. Here's an idea: why not hit up the lesbian for child support instead?" Thanks also to an Anonymous User and krob4399 who submitted this story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/09/2156213.shtml

Survey About the Men's Movements

Scott · 10 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

John Fox, a graduate student in the Dept. of Sociology at the University of Massachusetts - Amherst, asked me to make this survey available to Mensactivism.org readers. It's a survey he's doing in his research about the various men's movements. The document is in MS Word format, and he would like people to edit it with their responses and send it back to him at: fox@soc.umass.edu. Please consider taking part in this study.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/10/006221.shtml

Male Bashing Editorial Column

Scott · 10 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

DaveW writes "The Atlanta Journal-Constitution has its own department of sexist bigotry in the form of columnist Martha Ezzard. In this column, Ezzard continues her anti-male rhetoric by writing about abused girls and "adolescent prostitutes, victimized by male pimps and predators." She fails to mention that women often force or seduce children and young adults into prostitution. She fails to mention that women often manage prostitutes. She fails to mention that male children are sometimes forced into prostitution, often by their mothers. She also derides expenditures for youth sports programs, which can provide discipline, purpose, and mentoring that are the salvation for many kids. Feedback to: mezzard@ajc.com."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/10/1744232.shtml

Female Gunman Victims Honored More Than War Veterans in Canada

Scott · 11 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

AFG writes "Christie Blatchford at the National Post reports that the Canadian government had chosen to honour the 14 victims of lone gunman Marc Lepine by ordering all federal flags to be flown at half-mast on December 6. While this seems like a good idea, the government had failed to order a similar undertaking for the November 11 Rememberance Day honouring the 100,000+ men and women that died in the two major world wars, and in Korea." Thanks also to an Anon User who sent this in, and zerostress who sent in this story and this followup which states that the Minister of Canadian Heritage was unaware of the government order, and is concerned about the unequal recognition.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/10/1752243.shtml

Boss Tweed Feminism

Nightmist · 11 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy of ifeminists.com once again tackles gender feminism in her weekly Fox News column. This week's focus is on the struggles by gender feminists to institute quotas for women in the post-Taliban government of Afghanistan to ensure that women have a voice in the new government. McElroy correctly argues that quotas and democracy are contradictions.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/11/0411226.shtml

Afghan Bias Articles

Scott · 11 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I've gotten behind in announcing the Men's Health America campaign to inform the media about the brutalization of Afghan men. Here are some MHA postings to read, one, two, three, four. Neil Steyskal also submitted this article from the Baltimore Sun. Comment to: letters@baltsun.com.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/11/0519217.shtml

Bachelors Finding it Harder to Date

Scott · 11 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in this article from MSNBC. It describes that single men in their 30s are having a harder time finding mates due to a decline in birth rates over the past several decades. The trend is especially true for men looking for younger women, and is expected to continue.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/11/0528253.shtml

On-Line List of Men's Rights Activists

Scott · 12 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

tpaker writes, "I am starting to assemble a list of nicknames, e-mail addresses and state/province info for men's rights activists at my web-site. The idea is to allow people in the same state to find each other and work together. I can be reached at parkertr@w-link.net, or through the main page of my web site." Please consider having yourself added to this list - the more people who participate, the more useful the list becomes. And I think it was a smart move not to require people to give out their full names to protect everyone's privacy.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/11/0535235.shtml

Fighting Back Against Male Bashing

Nightmist · 12 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

My latest column, which will also soon be available as a guest editorial on ifeminists.com, explores the recent report by the UK's Advertising Standards Agency that men are fed up with anti-male advertising. I also briefly examine what's so bad and harmful about male bashing in the media.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/11/1531230.shtml

MHA Afghan Campaign: Far Exceeded Our Expectations

Scott · 12 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The latest posting on the Men's Health America mailing list summarizes the substantial effect we've had in the campaign to raise awareness about the plight of Afghan men and the bias against them in the media. Special thanks to Ed and Neil, who tirelessly kept this campaign running. And it's not over yet - the end of the message reports that a new phase will be launched in January, and I will do my best to announce them here on Mensactivism.org.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/12/0121255.shtml

MANN Chat: Making Child Support Easier to Swallow

Nightmist · 12 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

As an extension to last Sunday's joint chat between mensactivism.org and ifeminists.com, this week's MANN chat topic is on ways in which child support could be made more palatable to non-custodial parents. We've all known those parents, usually fathers, who want to support their children, but are either 1) not sure where the money is really going, or 2) not given joint custody or good visitation. So what are some things we could do to improve those situations? Should the custodial parents provide a statement of exactly where the child support is being used? Should the courts be a little more willing to set up joint custody? Join us tonight at 9:30 p.m. EST, talk about it, and decide for yourself.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/12/0355237.shtml

Australian Conference Discusses Domestic Violence Against Men

Nightmist · 12 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

A controversial study that focuses on male victims of domestic violence is the topic in this story about an Australian national conference on domestic violence this week. The study is controversial because some people in attendance at the conference still believe that women are the overwhelming majority of victims, and that violence against men is generally seen as less serious than abuse of women.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/12/1717243.shtml

Hoff Sommers Censorship Opens Larger Debate

Nightmist · 13 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story at Tech Central Station describes some of the scrutiny which the Center of Substance Abuse Prevention is taking after Christina Hoff Sommers was told to "Shut the fuck up, bitch" and heckled off the stage at CSAP's Nov. 1 government-sponsored conference on "Boy Talk" and "Girl Power." Apparently, the original National Review Online article struck a nerve, and the outpouring may result in the dismissal of some bureaucrats. The author of this piece says that's not enough.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/12/2123240.shtml

Another Mother Kills & New DesertLight Journal

Scott · 13 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy W Schuett writes "In the latest edition of the DesertLight Journal, see the chilling details of the latest infanticide by mother in Yuma Arizona. There is no daddy here to take the blame!  Family Friendly Groups Merge - 10 Yahoo! groups get together to work for serious change  Pro Se All The Way - to the Supreme Court!--a North Dakota Man bets the farm to get his kids back. And more!"

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/13/1453228.shtml

Ultrasounds Potentially Harmful to Males?

Scott · 13 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

wiccid stepparent writes "I saw this article and thought it was interesting. It claims that ultrasounds may cause some amount of brain damage in male fetuses. This could have some impact on boys and men if it the evidence is correct."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/13/1540242.shtml

The Veiled Resource

Scott · 13 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Tony writes "This article, from The New York Times (free registration required) is another example of male issues in Afghanistan being ignored. It does mention men and boys in two portions: "In the Dari language, a man who does not beat his wife is sometimes dismissed with the phrase "to nadari," which suggests that he is a eunuch. and hints at some of the issues but fails to discuss them." and another were a local merchant is going to fire all the boys working at his factory because "girls are better workers.""

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/13/1613218.shtml

More Outcry Over Sommers Treatment

Scott · 13 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal and Subversive both sent in this link to some more commentary in the National Review about the abhorrent treatment of Christina Hoff-Sommers at the CSAP forum. The whole episode is doing a lot to the CSAP's discredit, and is rightly turning into an enormous negative campaign against them.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/13/169253.shtml

Victims Economic Safety and Security Act

Scott · 14 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original tparker writes "This bill (S 1249) is aimed at insuring economic safety for women who are victims of DV. Senator Murray (D-WA) is pretty clear about this. For more info on the bill, see this site. There is also a link to the companion House bill. The language of the bill seems gender-neutral, but the intent of Senator Murray and her co-sponsors seems otherwise."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/13/1615205.shtml

Men's Hour Audio Program No. 8

Scott · 14 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The streaming audio news program about men's rights, The Men's Hour, has currently released episode 8. Among the topics discussed are: An interview with Richard Hayden of the AbusedGuys Yahoo! club, the recipient of the "Manhater of the Month" award, and news about a study showing that gender counted much more than race in sentencing drunk driver homicides, which I found to be the most interesting. Click here to visit the Men's Hour site and listen to it in RealAudio or Windows Media streaming audio.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/13/2159210.shtml

Male Bashing Nine West Store Display

Scott · 14 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Christina S. writes, "On a recent trip to a local shopping mall in Louisiana, I noticed a disturbing 5' tall sign prominently displayed in the Nine West store window. The advertisement shows a woman in an extremely short, snake scale patterned, red leather dress wearing shiny black, knee-high boots. The woman is stepping on the bare chest of a prone man with one boot." Click Read More to see more of Christina's comments and contact info for Nine West. There is no text on the advertisement. This ad seems to promote the image of female superiority. Because of her extremely suggestive clothing and his bare chest, the photo turns the man into a dominated sex object. I'm very disappointed in Nine West and have sent them an email to let them know that I find that sort of advertising unacceptable. If men and women were secure in their equality, perhaps the photo might be humorous. As things stand, I feel these sort of images send a negative message, that women are stronger or more important than men, not equal.

E-mail: customer_relations@ninewest.com

Phone: 1-800-999-1877

Customer Relations Representatives are available Monday-Friday 9am-5pm EST

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/14/0022216.shtml

Strongly Biased Afghan Article in USA Today

Scott · 14 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in the following story from USA Today which was so strongly biased with gender politics that the Men's Health America campaign reopened just to urge people to respond to this article. Comment to: editor@usatoday.com.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/14/1321236.shtml

'Law & Order: SVU' To Air Episode About Male Rape

Nightmist · 14 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

NBC's Law & Order: Special Victims Unit will tonight air a controversial episode in which a male victim of rape must fight to prove he was victimized by a group of women who hired him as a male stripper. The advertisements for this episode include scenes in which one of the women is shouting "women can't rape men" and another scene in which the victim, tears in his eyes, fights to make his voice heard. It looks like powerful episode worth watching. Scott's note: I accidentally deleted a user submission on this same topic, and I apologize to this person!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/14/048206.shtml

Donate to a Cancer Charity and Learn to Program

Scott · 15 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

nagzi writes "This isn't directly a men's issue thing, but still a nice idea. If you want to learn some new programming skills (for beginners), check out this article and then follow the link to icanprogram.com. Just make a donation to your favorite cancer charity and you can take any course of theirs for free." This is a neat idea. The course teaches some of the fundamentals of programming in the Linux environment and you can donate to the Lance Armstrong Foundation (testicular cancer) or the Prostate Cancer Research Institute, among others.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/14/134231.shtml

Sitting on Santa's Knee: Is It Sexual Harassment?

Nightmist · 15 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

The sexual harassment overshadowing of America continues, and spreads all over the world, as evidenced in this commentary in The Australian. And like passive smoking, passive watching is the next big lawsuit. A directive from the Minneapolis Equal Employment Opportunity Office in May suggests walking by someone who happens to be looking at something offensive may create a hostile work environment.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/14/1633244.shtml

Mother Kills Child, Father Charged with Murder

Scott · 15 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User sent in this Boston Globe story about some recent cases where a child on life support is taken off of it by the mother, after realizing that the father had been abusing the child. The idea being that the child is better off dead than continuing to be abused. What strikes me as unfair here is that the father is then charged with murder, and the mother is not. If he was abusing the child, charge him with child abuse, but murder? Murder was the woman's choice, and she should be accountable for it. Also, thanks to Luek for sending in this CNN article on the same story.Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: Woman's agonizing decision leaves baby dead, husband charged with murder

Author: Randall Chase

Date: December 14, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/15/151209.shtml

Barry Maley Criticizes Divorce Laws in Australia

Scott · 16 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Mike LaSalle writes "Australian Barry Maley has written a book pertaining to family and marriage in Australia. Several articles [including this one and this one] and a radio interview are available. Also, Men's News Daily will be "cool site of the day" at Askmen.com on 12/17/01." Nice job, Mike!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/15/2336237.shtml

Defense Lawyers Counteracting Child Abuse Claims

Scott · 16 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal sent in this article from the Washington Times and writes "Women who claim child sexual abuse are stepping up their rhetoric. Look out for due process. Comment to: letters@washingtontimes.com." It looks like the widespread use of false accusations against men is coming back to hurt children who are really being abused, as this article claims that abuse allegations are losing credibility before judges when in a divorce setting. Source: The Washington Times [newspaper]

Title: Courts accused of victimizing children

Author: Matthew Cella

Date: December 15, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/15/2345211.shtml

MANN/iFeminists Chat: Men Under the Taliban

Scott · 16 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy writes, "This Sunday (12/16), the jointly sponsored ifeminists.com/mensactivism.org chat room will feature a discussion of Men Under the Taliban. Has the coverage of Afghan women totally overshadowed the abuse experienced by men?" The chat begins at 9:00 PM EST at this page, which is the ifeminists chat room. We hope to see you there!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/16/032212.shtml

Women As Peacemakers?

Scott · 16 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal writes "Here's a column about women as peacemakers. It bothers me, but I don't quite know why. If you want to comment, click the "Contact us" button." I think it bothers me because the men=warmakers/women=peacemakers stereotypes are easy to translate into men=evil/women=good. Neil also writes, "Carey Roberts does it again [with] another great letter about Afghan men."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/16/1758216.shtml

Salt Lake Tribune Reports on Male Rape in Prison

Nightmist · 17 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story in the Sunday Salt Lake Tribune throws some light on a little-acknowledged (but much joked about) problem in prison: the rape of men by other inmates. The article quotes studies which claim that at least one-fifth of the United States' 2 million prisoners have been raped or otherwise sexually assaulted in prison. That's 400,000 victims. "I didn't see them," Turner, who is black, said of his white attackers. "It was three of them. I got raped . . . But what can you do? They saw someone who was young, didn't know what was going on, and took advantage of it . . . . As long as they have prisons, they'll happen."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/16/2139254.shtml

Man Freed From Prison for False Rape Accusation

Scott · 17 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This story from the UK Times reports that a man has been freed after serving nine years in prison for the rape of a young girl. The girl admitted that she made up the accusation to get the attention of her mother, and at age 14, finally recanted the story to have the man freed. Source: The Times [UK newspaper]

Title: Prisoner cleared after girl admits rape lie

Author: Laura Peek

Date: December 15, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/17/1332228.shtml

Ask MANN: Why do Women Make False Rape Accusations?

Scott · 17 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Posting the previous story reminded me of a submission I've been meaning to post here for weeks: An Anonymous User writes, "I was discussing the issue of false rape allegations with a group of feminists and of course I was very quickly shouted down. I tried to look up articles here that have to do with men being freed from prison after DNA evidence proves their innocence. I do not know the details of these cases. However, [the feminists] insisted quite vigorously that all cases of men being freed were NOT for false rape accusations but for mistaken identity. They seem to believe that women never lie about being raped." In addition to our previous article, can anyone point this person to more examples of false rape accusations for reasons other than mistaken identity?Following Slashdot's lead, we've decided to add a new type of news story to post. "Ask MANN" will include interesting or relevant questions to direct to the activist community, which might include helping a person with men's issues research or advice on a question we as a movement should address. Look for more "Ask MANN" posts in the future!

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/17/1339242.shtml

7-YO Boy Sentenced to Alternative School for Pocketknife Possession

Scott · 17 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

In an example of the particularly harsh treatment of boys in schools, DaveW sent in this story and writes "A 7-year-old boy is banished to alternative school for 11 days for having a 1-1/2 inch pocket knife in his back pack." It is believed to be the first time a student so young was sent to this alternative school, which is for students with severe behavioral problems.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/17/1344201.shtml

Another Article on Half-Mast Flag Gate in Canada

Scott · 17 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

zerostress writes "On Angry Harry, I found another story by columnist Christie Blatchford about the half-masting of all Canada's flag to commemorate the 15 women's death by a lone gunman in Montreal and the double standard applied to Canada's war veterans."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/17/1344258.shtml

MANN Chat: Reading About Men's Rights

Scott · 18 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

This week will be our final Mensactivism.org on-line chat of 2001. Will suggested to encourage people to read books on men's issues by having a few chat sessions set aside for discussing a particular book. This week will be an introductory session where we can decide on which book(s) to hold future chats on and give people the opportunity to buy and read these books before those future chats are held. People new to the Mensactivism.org community, or those who haven't done much reading about men's rights will definitely receive some great suggestions on where to start reading by other members. Join us on Wed. (12/19) night starting at 9:30 PM EST.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/18/1513224.shtml

McElroy Urges Women To Stand Up For Men

Nightmist · 18 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Wendy McElroy's FOX News column this week makes one of the most impassioned pleas on behalf of men and the women who understand equality I've ever read. And the timing couldn't be more appropriate. In her ever-eloquent style, McElroy boils down many modern problems with gender feminism and the equal rights of men into a short, but powerful, call to women: As a Christmas present to the men in your life, make a commitment to stand up for them. Do not tolerate slander directed toward those you love. The infant son you hold in your arms is not an inevitable rapist or exploiter of women. The father who worked every day to make you safe and comfortable is not an enemy. The husband with whom you are planning a future is not a part of "the rape culture." They are family, friends and good neighbors. Scott's note: Also thanks to Thomas for submitting this story.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/18/054220.shtml

Male Coach at Smith College Gets $1.6 Million in Discrimination Lawsuit

Scott · 18 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Anonymous User submitted this Boston Globe story and writes *"Although I generally think that sex discrimination law suits are awarded monetary damage that far exceeds the damage done, it is refreshing to see an a man benefit from such vindictive laws. A former Coach at Smith college received $1.6 million in a sex/age discrimination case. Anyone familiar with Smith college can easily understand that he worked in a highly sexist environment."*Source: The Boston Globe [newspaper]

Title: Ex-Smith coach awarded $1.6 million in sex, age discrimination case

Author: Unknown [AP story]

Date: December 18, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/18/1534219.shtml

E-Book: Suffering Patriarchy

Adam · 19 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I've found a new E-Book on father's issues, it's written by Robert Lindsay, and while its main focus is on fatherhood, he does digress into men's issues a bit, judging from the chapters I've quickly looked at. Robert himself made a forum post over at Arizonafathersrights.com to explain things better, and as the man says, "This is a watershed work that completely connects-the-dots for any reader so interested to take the time and read this work." How can you resist? Visit the book's home page and begin reading.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/18/0215225.shtml

L.A. Times Gushes Over Paula Poundstone

Scott · 19 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Claire4Liberty writes *"When I saw this article in my morning paper, regarding Paula Poundstone's return to the stage, I nearly brought up my breakfast. This reporter absolutely fawns over her, making her sound like Mary Poppins instead of an accused pedophile. "To see Poundstone onstage is to understand why she might relate well to kids, and vice versa.""*Source: The L.A. Times, Calendar Live section [newspaper]

Title: Staging Her Return

Author: Paul Brownfield

Date: December 17, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/19/139234.shtml

The Boy Can't Help It

Adam · 19 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I don't normally post messages from egroups, but this one is a exception. The writer makes the case that "special needs" kids (almost all of whom are boys) suffer due to the fact that there are no role models for them, and this is why they're put in the "special needs" section. It makes for quite a convincing case, so click this link to read it.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/19/0125210.shtml

Domestic Violence and the Male Victim

Scott · 19 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

donaldcameron1 writes "On AngryHarry.com I was surprised to see myself "included" in a study of my own experiences. Reading something like this is most illuminating for me. In addition to providing pure validation and catharsis, it confirms for me just how oppressed we have, and continue to, become. That which does not kill us only makes us know for certain that the system has been corrupted. We have spent much time on getting women to "come forward" it is time to encourage men to do so."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/19/1315253.shtml

Sticks and Stones: Revisited

Nightmist · 20 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

My apologies for the rerun here, but considering that the The Guy Code removed my column from their archives, I thought I would repost it with its new URL. Here, for posterity, is my own trial-by-fire with the phenomenon known to us as "false accusations."

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/19/0147252.shtml

The Torture of Afghan Men

Scott · 20 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

Neil Steyskal submitted this article from the Washington Post about the way some Afghan men suspected of being spies have been tortured. I'm encouraged to see that this issue is receiving some exposure in the Post. Source: The Washington Post [newspaper]

Title: Inside the Taliban's Torture Chambers

Author: John Pomfret

Date: December 17, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/20/1345229.shtml

The Male Intellect: An Oxymoron?

Scott · 20 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

David Compas writes "“The Male Intellect: an oxymoron?” - [is] a show in Reno, Nevada that begins on 9 January 2002. Probably male bashing at its worst. See the web site here." Hey, there's nothing like a guy mocking men and masculinity as a way to make money as a comedian, right? Careers have been built on this stuff.

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/20/146250.shtml

False Rape Conviction Results in $1.1M Lawsuit

Scott · 20 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

jaxom writes "A Calgary man received a $1.1 million payment for his wrongful rape conviction. It looks like the Canadian government tried to once again hide the fact that they have too many wrongful convictions of men with resulting payouts. The story is here." This article quotes Kaglik extensively on what it was like in prison (inmates tried to rape him), and the background of his false accusation.Source: The London Free Press

Title: Wrongful rape conviction brings $1.1-million award

Author: CP

Date: December 20, 2001

NOTICE: This story was migrated from the old software that used to run Mensactivism.org. Unfortunately, user comments did not get included in the migration. However, you may view a copy of the original story, with comments, at the following link:

http://news.mensactivism.org/articles/01/12/20/1437222.shtml

A Case Against Alimony

Adam · 20 December 2001 · Archived copy · Original

I've been working on this article for a while now, and thought readers might like to see how it's going. To be honest, I need to do a lot more work on it, so think of it as a preview of great things to come. :) I'll keep adding to it on the go, so it can only get better. Feel free to point things out, such as how I could make it better, arguments I might have left out, etc. You can e-mail me at adam@mensactivism.org. Click "Read More" below to read it.A Case Against Alimony

By Adam H

The intent of this article and/or essay is to persuade you, the reader, that Alimony is an outdated concept, no different from forced slavery in many respects and not necessary in an age of equality. The reason I write this article is that Alimony is a much-neglected issue but a vital one that should not be overlooked. To begin with, I shall prove to you that alimony is forced labour for the benefit of another, and also obligations without rights. For example, were you aware that:

Alimony assessed by courts, on the wife's behalf and taken against a man's wages for his work performed, fits ALL of the criteria of INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE, under Title 18, USC., Sec.1584 and PEONAGE, under Title 18, USC., Sec. 1581 Hence: the concept of Alimony is illegal and violates anti-slavery laws in America.

(Were you to make a similar claim in other countries, I have no doubt you would find similar laws to make a case against alimony.)

The International Labour Organization's Forced Labour Convention of 1930 defines forced labour as "all work or service, which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the said person has not offered himself voluntarily." Why the gender neutrality? I mean how often does this happen to women?

As you know, alimony is supposed to pay the "marital debt" that women are "owed" he's forced to pay and support a woman who does nothing for him, and if he fails to pay, he risks prison and contempt of court. The only official law remaining in the justice system where imprisonment happens for non-payment of "debt" Except, that this is a "debt" which the man had never started. Last time I checked debitor's prisons were supposed to be outlawed, except if you're a man that's forced to pay alimony and child support. And what of the woman in this? She does nothing for him while he's forced to pay her to do nothing, and as we know there are no laws forcing her to do anything for him. So it is in essence, a forced men to women transfer.

As there's no way for a judge to know what she did around the house, the injustice is huge. For example she could be dropping the kids in full time day care for all the judge knows, and chances are she'd still get alimony. For a woman to claimed she compromised her career because she chose to parent her kids full time is a choice she made and should not have it both ways.

