Anonymous · 9 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stories of Turkish girls forced into arranged marriages in Germany are well known. But hardly anyone talks about the men who are forced into marriage -- sometimes harassed, blackmailed or beaten.

Azad will never forget that day in September 2005. It was the day of his wedding in Stuttgart, but for Azad it was filled with hours of shame. "It's really bad, when you have to force yourself to have sex with a relative," says the 20-year-old Kurd. "It's sick. With my first cousin."

When Azad was 16, his parents informed him that he was to be engaged to a cousin from eastern Anatolia, who was also 16. When he refused, his mother threatened to commit suicide. "You will find me hanging from a rope in the basement," she said. At 17, Azad and the cousin were married in a civil ceremony during a family vacation in Turkey. When he was 18 his bride came to Germany, and ornate wedding invitations were sent out. The wedding ceremony took place in a midrange hotel in southwestern Germany. "It was pure horror," says Azad.'

Negative stereotyping in the media stops boys being adopted

GaryB · 9 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

This story on the BBC site shows proof of what we've all been saying for ages - that males (and boys) are constantly being portrayed as 'bad' in our culture. Quote:

"Negative images of boys are making people less willing to adopt them, a national adoption agency has said. The British Association for Adoption and Fostering (BAAF) said that at one of its "hard-to-place" agencies, 63% of cases were boys.
...
The BAAF is concerned that people are put off adopting boys by constant negative portrayals in the media. An ICM poll for the BAAF found more than half of those asked felt boys were portrayed in an overly negative light.
...

The poll found 53% of the people surveyed said they felt the media portrayed boys in an overly negative way. Men felt this more than women, with 55% of men agreeing, compared to 50% of women.'

Related: Adoptive parents believe boys are 'too much trouble'. Excerpt:

'As prospective parents look through the Be My Parent adoption newspaper filled with photographs of hopeful children, it soon becomes apparent to them that there are far more boys looking for a new family than girls.

Boys wait twice as long for families in some parts of the country, as agencies struggle to challenge negative attitudes among parents, according to research by the British Association of Adoption and Fostering (BAAF).'

Lack of male teachers "close to crisis"

anthony · 9 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In 2004, 16 percent of elementary teachers in U.S. public schools were men, according to federal data. It's also the norm in Washington: One male per six women elementary teachers.

In Clark County's largest school districts, the ratio is more like 1-to-10.
...
So, what does this mean for elementary schoolchildren? Does it affect performance or discipline — for boys or girls?

Education professionals in Washington cannot cite studies that definitively link a dearth of male teachers to poor outcomes. But they agree the disparity can't be good, and say they see pupils' hunger for male role models.

"I'm not so sure it isn't close to a crisis," said Michael Henniger, associate dean of the Woodring College of Education at Western Washington University in Bellingham. Along with Central Washington University, WWU is the state's top producer of new teachers.'

College of Wm and Mary Staff Editorial: The Wo(Men)'s Rights Movement

anthony · 9 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'So, where are the cries for men's gender equity?

Author and family therapist Michael Gurian argued in 2005 that "there is no big network that protects the needs of boys" and also commented that "if we create a generation of men who aren't getting an education, that's bad for women."

It seems that the voices speaking up today for men's equality in college admissions and college athletics are few, and it seems that they are speaking against a much louder voice of media images and traditional notions that say being male means not needing someone else to fight for you.

In reality, many of these problems start before college. The average male faces a dangerous statistic that says he will drop out or lose motivation during his early academic career. No wonder the competition among women in college admissions grows ever harsher, while most men merely follow their ambitions and boost the all-important gender ratio.'

RADAR Cited In Domestic Violence Article

anthony · 10 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'RADAR (Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting), a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's domestic violence laws, says false allegations of domestic violence have become widespread. In fact, according to a RADAR report, at least one million restraining orders are issued each year in which violence is not even alleged.

There is no other court in the land where the penalty for perjury does not exist - you can lie and not be punished for it, but actually be rewarded for it. There is no other court where you are presumed guilty until proven innocent. And for non-custodial parents...especially fathers...going through a divorce...and the never-ending litany of custody issues and all the rest that goes with it...it can feel like eternal damnation.'

ESPN: Change is coming to sports, too, under Obama

anthony · 10 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In addition to the changes he will enact on the professional level, Obama's approach to governing can be expected to have some indirect impacts in college sports. Coaches, athletes and administrators in a number of so-called minor sports, such as wrestling, have long been wary that their sports will be eliminated to meet the equality of gender requirements of Title IX, and they cannot be happy about Obama's election. With President Bush in the White House and Dennis Hastert, a former wrestling coach, serving as Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, participants in those sports had some hope that Title IX requirements might be diluted.

Bush and his staff looked hard at Title IX and the possibility of enacting changes in the regulations of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services that govern Title IX, but they backed away as opposition to any changes grew.

Obama, the father of two daughters, might not be sympathetic to those hoping to lessen the impact of Title IX.'

Norwalk woman who killed husband could inherit $1.2 million estate

anthony · 10 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NORWALK - Although a jury found Mary Ann Langley guilty of killing her husband by throwing gasoline on him and lighting him on fire, she could still inherit his $1.2 million estate, family members and attorneys said.

This turn of events was made possible by a jury of eight women and four men who did not convict Langley of murder two weeks ago after a seven-day trial at state Superior Court in Stamford. The jury was unable to find beyond a reasonable doubt that Mary Ann Langley intended to kill her husband by throwing the gasoline on him, and instead found her guilty of intentional first-degree manslaughter in the December 2006 death of her husband, James, 55.

...

"I don't think it is right. If you kill someone, why should you profit?" said Willie Langley, James' brother and executor of his estate. "I think if you pour gasoline on someone, you meant to kill them anyway, but (the prosecution) couldn't prove that."'

Fomer NOW president praises Obama policy committee for their pro-feminist views

Matt · 10 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SENECA FALLS — Tuesday's national election results were good news to Eleanor Smeal, former president of the National Organization for Women.

Smeal, now head of the Feminist Majority organization in Arlington, Va., spoke Saturday at the New York State NOW convention in Seneca Falls.
...
Smeal said President-Elect Obama's policy committee has some excellent members, including several very strong feminists with a knowledge of the issues.

She said with the Obama-Biden team in the White House and bigger Democratic majorities in both houses of Congress, feminists should "think big," despite the conventional wisdom that a more centrist, bi-partisan approach is being advocated by many in light of the serious problems the country faces.
...
The delegates were also asked to sign a reaffirmation of the Declaration of Sentiments , a product of the first women's rights convention conducted in Seneca Falls in July 1848.

Today, the NOW delegates will conduct workshop sessions, view the all-girl created and performed play "Keep Your Eyes Open" and announce the results of voting for officers and resolutions.'

Feminist blogger apologizes to MRAs for comparison to cockroaches

anthony · 10 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Let me start off by saying that the post MRA Infestation and Glenn Sacks Worshipers was a response to my disgust with the commentary on a post I wrote entitled, MRA Glenn Sacks Applies Pressure to Domestic Violence Shelter. I wrote the infestation post in great anger and it caused me to use language that was unacceptable.

As much as I find your hate and your positions vile, I had no right to dehumanize another human being by calling you cockroaches, and for this I apologize.
...
I will never agree that your movement is anything other than an attempt to maintain white male, heterosexist, abelist, racist privilege, but a reduction in our common humanity was not necessary to make that point.
...
Once again let me state for the record that I find your positions vile but reducing your humanity was wrong.'

Angry Harry: Why Governments Love Feminism

anthony · 10 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism has very little to do with equality between the genders, and it also has very little to do with the rights of women.

First and foremost, feminism is about various groups seeking to acquire power and money, and to build huge self-serving empires in which millions - literally millions - of people nowadays have a vested interest - a vested interest that is, in fact, highly detrimental to those societies in which these people operate.

To see how their game is played, I just want you to imagine a society - a somewhat idealised society - wherein the women are happy to spend their days being closely associated with their homes and their children, while the young men and the fathers are reasonably happy to troop off to the workplace - wherever this might be.'

Quinn: Feminist goals including outlawing 'male behavior' in schools

anthony · 10 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Summary: Jim Quinn cited as evidence of "the chickification of schools, the feminization of society, and the war on masculinity" the story of a teacher who reportedly informed the school principal and campus police that a picture of a vampire one of her students had drawn might contain gang symbols. Quinn added that "the goal of the public school system -- the feminists in the public school system -- is to make male behavior illegal, a crime."

17-year-old boy is Nebraska's 30th 'safe haven' child

anthony · 10 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LINCOLN, Neb. - A 17-year-old boy left by his mother at an Omaha hospital is the 30th child abandoned under Nebraska's safe-haven law, state officials said.

The boy from the Omaha area was left at Creighton University Medical Center on Monday morning, said Todd Landry, director of children and family services for the Department of Health and Human Services.

The state was still investigating the case and additional details were not available, he said.'

RADAR ALERT: Yes We Can ... Fix VAWA Now!

Matt · 11 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

On January 20, 2009, Barack Obama and Joe Biden will be the president and vice-president. What does that mean for our Fix VAWA Now! effort?

While Joe Biden is the architect of the Violence Against Women Act, VAWA Reform is not a Republican or Democrat issue. VAWA is at best ineffective, and at worst, it's harmful to victims of violence and it breaks up families. Can any politician, Democrat or Republican, turn a cold shoulder to these hard truths?

As soon as possible, please work toward establishing channels of communication with the winners of your local, state, and national elections – even if you voted for their opponent! Find areas of common ground and invite them to be a true champion for victims of violence.

With your help, we can fix VAWA. Let's get to work.

++
Date of RADAR Release: November 10, 2008

Want to improve the chance that they'll pay attention to your letter? Click here.

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

Glenn Sacks DART Campaign Round 3--Targeting the Media

Matt · 11 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Action Item here. Excerpt:

"Over the past two weeks Dallas Area Rapid Transit & Dallas authorities have received over 7,500 calls & letters from our supporters protesting the anti-father domestic violence ads depicted above.

We've done very well bringing media attention and sympathy to our cause, particularly given the presidential election. Our campaign has been covered by CNN, The Associated Press, CBS, FOX, the Dallas Morning News, and numerous radio shows--see the "News" column to the right. However, we're looking to build more media pressure.
We want you to write the media and urge them to cover our campaign. To send a letter to several dozen important media outlets, click here.

We also want you to call Dallas radio stations and urge them to cover our protest. Below we have listed the information for a dozen relevant Greater Dallas radio stations--call them by clicking here."

UK: Couple arrsted for lewd conduct - only man is named

Matt · 11 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Only the man is named, interestingly enough. The woman was "bailed" while the man was not? Excerpt:

'A couple have been arrested for allegedly having sex in a crowded train carriage.

Other passengers en route from Liverpool to London appear to have sat in embarrassed silence as the 41-year-old woman allegedly committed a sex act on her male partner.'

Harvard announces cut-back on tea and crumpets deliveries

Matt · 11 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

OK, I know, this is not MR-related, really. It's just that we do know what university Larry Summers used to run, until they chased him out for daring to suggest that maybe there are inherent general capacities and proclivities associated with gender and these ought to be considered when looking at differences in students' interest in certain subjects.

That thought-crime was enough to get him tossed out of the school. So now one of the most bloated, wasteful, uber-PC institutions of our time must gasp face the reality of money (oh, that dirty word!) and how they actually need someone to work for a living in order for them to afford the luxury of sitting around all day talking about how the evil patriarchy is striving to oppress them day in and day out. Gosh, life just ain't fair! Excerpt:

'BOSTON (AP) - Harvard University is considering spending cuts because the economic slowdown may reduce federal grants and the school's substantial endowment, President Drew Faust said Monday.

Harvard's endowment posted an 8.6 percent return and grew to $36.9 billion in the fiscal year that ended June 30. The school, however, lost 12.7 percent on its U.S. stock portfolio and 12.1 percent on its foreign equity portfolio during that time. Faust's spokesman on Monday declined to say much the endowment has lost during the current economic turmoil.'

Cry me a river.

WINK News: What's the problem with boys?

anthony · 11 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the U.S. Department of Education, more girls than boys participate in student government, the drama club, the debate club and the honor society. Statistics show that of those students who write for the student newspaper and yearbook, girls outnumber boys. And on a reading level, girls are typically ahead of boys by a year and a half.
...
"It's kinda shocking, but in reality, the truth, I know that girls work harder than guys," says Ryan, 16.
...
Two-thirds of all learning disability diagnoses are for boys.
Seventy percent of all D's and F's on report cards go home in boys' backpacks - not girls.
Ninety percent of school discipline referrals are for boys.
Eighty percent of all Ritalin takers are boys.
Eighty percent of all school dropouts are boys.
Fewer than 40 percent of college students are currently male.
Girls in general are surpassing boys in school in all subjects except math and science, and even that gap has closed significantly in the past few years.'

MySpace Trial Judge: Suicide Not Relevant

anthony · 11 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(AP) Prosecutors in the trial of a woman accused of a MySpace hoax that allegedly led a 13-year-old girl to kill herself will likely be prohibited from presenting evidence of the suicide, a U.S. District Court judge said Monday.

Judge George H. Wu told attorneys he was leaning toward excluding the evidence from the trial of Lori Drew, who is accused of using a fictitious profile on the social networking site to drive Megan Meier, her daughter's former friend, to hang herself.

...

"I don't necessarily think the suicide is relevant to the crime charged," Wu said, adding he thought details of Meier's death would unfairly prejudice the jury. He said he planned to announce his final decision Friday.'

UK: New Judicial Law Treats Women More Leniently

anthony · 12 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Under the controversial reforms, men would be tried for murder rather than manslaughter for "crimes of passion" while women who kill abusive husbands because of years of abuse would be treated more leniently.
...
The government proposals, which have been characterised as being part of a feminist agenda, are aimed at ending what ministers call sexual discrimination in murder cases, where men get away with lighter sentences by claiming their wife's adultery had provoked them into an act of violence.
...
Under the proposals, men who kill wives or girlfriends will be less likely to escape murder convictions by pleading jealous anger. The law change is designed to help women who kill abusive husbands because of years of abuse. People will also be able to claim they killed for fear of future violence against them.'

Australia: Child support payments given back to duped 'dads'

anthony · 12 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MOTHERS are being forced to pay tens of thousands of dollars to men who paid child support over decades but were wrongly named as fathers.

The payouts follow a contentious reform of child-support laws.

In the biggest case, Queensland man Ken Rodgers obtained orders for the repayment of $60,000 after making child-support contributions for a decade to a woman who refused to send him even a photograph of his alleged child.

The Courier-Mail can reveal that 18 men, cleared of fatherhood by DNA testing, have attempted to reclaim funds already paid to the mothers through the Child Support Agency.'

Australia: Fathers 'disrupt debate on DNA'

anthony · 12 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EMOTIVE arguments from men's rights groups threaten to hijack the discussion of new laws to outlaw DNA theft.

The claim comes from policy-makers and academics backing moves to make it illegal to take and test a bodily sample such as hair or saliva without permission. The concern is that, because DNA testing is now easy and accessible, genetic information could be misused by employers, insurance agencies and journalists tracking down "famous DNA", as well as by angry spouses.

David Weisbrot, president of the Australian Law Reform Commission, said: "I wouldn't want to derail the general reform because of the concerns of fathers' groups which might be better addressed in other ways -- for instance, through family law reform."

Men who want genetic proof that they are the biological father of a child have legal avenues for getting the youngster tested even without the mother's consent.'

UK: Warning to men over fake drugs

anthony · 12 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men could be gambling with their lives by buying fake medicines, a top medical professional has warned.

The Cracking Counterfeit report, commissioned by Pfizer Inc - the world's largest research-based pharmaceutical company - highlighted the ignorance amongst men about which medicines required a prescription.

Pfizer's medical director, Dr David Gillen, said: "Men bypassing the health system to purchase medicines is a growing problem in the UK, particularly relating to the increased availability of counterfeit medicines.
...
The Pfizer commissioned report reveals that one in 10 men interviewed admitted buying prescription-only medicines without a prescription. They included drugs for erectile dysfunction, smoking cessation, weight loss, lowering cholesterol and anti-depression.'

DailyIllini: No plans to add more men's varsity sports

anthony · 12 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But between baseball at Wisconsin, cross country and track and field at Northwestern, and men's soccer and swimming and diving at Illinois, there are many cases throughout the Big Ten where otherwise common sports are absent.

Illinois has been without men's swimming and diving since the 1990s, when the University eliminated it, along with men's fencing, in favor of picking up women's soccer and softball.

...

The NCAA has tried to help universities comply with Title IX by creating "emergent sports," which are exclusive to women. An emergent sport is a NCAA-recognized sport that is not part of Division I, II or III. They are a means to test a sport to determine whether it is competitive and appealing.

Women's rowing, ice hockey, water polo and bowling are emergent sports that have already achieved Division I status. Seven Big Ten schools offer at least one of those sports, though Illinois is not among them. There are currently seven emergent sports, the only one offered at a Big Ten school being synchronized swimming at Ohio State.'

Korean Women Say Birth Control Is Men's Responsibility

anthony · 12 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Birth control has become an important issue for women's rights as well as the environment. However, a study of South Korean women aged 19-34 found 45% believe contraception should be a man's responsibility. Only 4.8% in the survey felt birth control was a woman's responsibility.

The survey, by the Study Group for Contraception, shows that most women are doing little or nothing to avoid unwanted pregnancies. Of the 1000 women who participated in the survey, one in five said she relied on coitus interruptus or timing pregnancy cycles as a form of birth control. Both methods have high failure rates of around 25%.

...

What's more, abortion is illegal in South Korea, except under extenuating circumstances. The result is an almost entirely first-world country where each year hundreds of thousands of women practice illegal abortions at "don't ask don't tell" clinics.

Woman sentenced for "sexual relationship" with teen tac0965 · 12 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MADISON, Neb. - A Norfolk woman who had a sexual relationship with a teenage boy and subsequently fled from the area has been sentenced to prison for child abuse.

Tammy Walnofer, 39, was sentenced by Madison County District Court Judge Patrick Rogers on Monday to 18 to 26 months in prison, with credit for 16 days served.
...
Walnofer's attorney, Jim Egley of Norfolk, described the victim as demanding attention and threatening to harm himself or others if Walnofer did not comply with his wishes, which included having sex.
...
Rogers said that in his experience as a judge, it's common for defendants to lay blame on others. "Just because I have a robe on doesn't mean I have God-like power to know what exactly happened here," he said.'

I wonder what choice words the judge would have if a man was convicted of the same crime, and what sentence would be imposed. The judge also said that even though both parties in the case seemed to be vulnerable at the time of the incident, the offense was extremely serious and committed by an adult.

So, vulnerability on the part of the woman is an excuse? The article doesn't mention if she would be required to register as a sex offender.

Girl held in school shooting

Matt · 12 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. – A 15-year-old student died after a shooting at a Fort Lauderdale high school Wednesday, and police were questioning another student believed to be responsible.

Sophomore Amanda Collette was confirmed dead after being discovered on a hallway floor by a school resource officer at Dillard High School around 11 a.m. Another 15-year-old girl was being held and questioned by police in the death.

...

The suspect was apprehended at an area restaurant after a caller there reported she may have been involved in a school shooting. A gun was recovered.'

UK faces 'sperm shortage'

Matt · 12 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Looks more like a shortage of suckers to me, and that's a good thing. Story here. Excerpt:

'LONDON - Britain is facing a sperm donor shortage after reversing confidentiality laws and limiting the number of women who can use sperm from one donor, fertility experts warned Wednesday in the British Medical Journal.

Britain in 2005 changed the law protecting anonymous sperm donors and allowed children to learn the identity of donor fathers — one reason, fertility experts say, there are fewer donors now.

...

In France, sperm donation is anonymous and the government covers donors' expenses but the country still faces a sperm shortage. France registered 248 sperm donors in 2006, according to the country's Agency of Biomedicine — a level an official there said was not enough to supply demand.'

What's next, "fertility flights" where would-be single mums fly into New York from Heathrow every week for an insemination until "it takes"? Good grief. Wouldn't put anything past anyone these days.

Study: HPV vaccine prevents genital warts in males

anthony · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA — For the first time, an expensive vaccine aimed at preventing cervical cancer in women has proven successful at preventing a disease in men, according to a new study.

The disease? It's genital warts, a sexually-transmitted problem that is embarrassing and uncomfortable but not life-threatening.

Still, the results are expected to bolster a likely bid by the vaccine's manufacturer _ Merck & Co. Inc. _ to begin marketing the vaccine to boys, experts said. Merck plans to ask the government for that approval later this year.

"This opens the door to a wonderful opportunity to prevent illness," said Anna Giuliano, a Tampa-based researcher who worked on the Merck-funded study. She is an epidemiologist at the H. Lee Moffitt Cancer Center in Tampa.'

Sexes equal in education, women lack power: study

anthony · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'GENEVA (Reuters) - Women still lag far behind men in top political and decision-making roles, a waste of talent given that their access to education and healthcare is nearly equal, the World Economic Forum said on Wednesday.

Averaging 130 national scores, the report found that girls and women have reached near-parity with their male peers in educational attainment, health and survival, in both rich and poor countries.

But economically, in terms of workforce participation and earning opportunities, and politically, in terms of empowerment, the gap between the sexes remains large.'

Retired F.B.I. Agents Join Cause of 4 Sailors Covicted Of Rape/Murder

anthony · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'But on Monday, 30 former agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation took up the cause of four sailors, known as the Norfolk Four, who were convicted in a 1997 rape and murder.

Arguing that DNA and forensic evidence points to a prison inmate who has confessed as the sole perpetrator of the crimes, they called on Gov. Tim Kaine to pardon the sailors.

“After careful review of the evidence we have arrived at one unequivocal conclusion: The Norfolk Four are innocent,” said Jay Cochran, a former assistant director of the F.B.I. and former special agent who served at the bureau for 27 years. “We believe a tragic mistake has occurred in the case of these four Navy men, and we are calling on Governor Kaine to grant them immediate pardons.'”

Scotland: 110% increase in domestic abuse against men

anthony · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'INCIDENTS OF domestic violence against men have more than doubled in the last nine years, with police called to more than 6000 incidents in 2007-08 in which men were assaulted or threatened, according to figures obtained by the Sunday Herald.

The true number of attacks is likely to be far higher, however, as research has repeatedly found men are far less likely to report domestic abuse than women.

And while the Scottish government has spent tens of millions of pounds in recent years to support female victims of domestic abuse and violence, it has not directed a single penny to support men who suffer at the hands of their partner.

...

"Anecdotally, we are aware the number of men reporting is probably the tip of the iceberg," he added Capaldi acknowledged "there's no equivalent for men of Women's Aid", but cases to Glasgow's dedicated domestic violence court can refer victims to the Assist support service, which "takes a gender-neutral approach".'

University group seeks to spread "stop beating your wife" message to random men in bars

anthony · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'IOWA CITY - The majority of violent crimes are committed by men, but the majority of men are not violent, University of Iowa graduate student Jerrod Koon says.

Getting those men to speak up against violence, especially violence against women, is the key to changing the problem, said Koon, coordinator of the Men's Anti-Violence Council.

Like-minded UI students, faculty and staff attended an open house last night hosted by the new group. About 25 people mingled during the first hour of the two-hour event.

UI freshman Sterling Martin, 18, heard about the open house from a friend, and after getting some information, said he thinks he would like to volunteer with the group. He can see where young college men might be hesitant to join an anti-violence group if they think it is about "taking away their masculinity."'

Editorial: Real Questions for Larry Summers

anthony · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some ardent feminists have launched a campaign to block Lawrence H. Summers, former President Bill Clinton's treasury secretary, from taking the same post in the Obama administration. In raking up old controversies, they threaten to deprive the new government, in the midst of a deepening financial crisis, of the services of a star economist who led the way to a budgetary surplus and a rare reduction in the national debt. Settling old scores is no way to face a dangerous and uncertain economic future.
...
Mr. Summers has apologized repeatedly, perhaps too much. He was taking part in a discussion of a real problem in the failure of women to go farther in the scientific professions. He was simply raising the question of whether discrimination against women was entirely to blame. If such questions can't be asked, for fear of retribution far out of scale to the query, such longstanding problems won't be resolved. This shortchanges everyone, not just the group that appears to be getting left behind.'

Plotting wife admits to battery

anthony · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ANGOLA - An Angola woman accused of paying an undercover police officer $50 to have her estranged husband killed has pleaded guilty to aggravated battery in an agreement with prosecutors.

Mollie Krontz, 45, was arrested in July 2007 after police said she met with Indiana State Police Detective Mark Heffelfinger and gave him $50 with a promise of $150 more that August.
...
Though Krontz didn't have detailed plans about how her husband should be killed, she did suggest that he be shot, police said.

Krontz remains free on a $100,000 bond. A sentencing hearing is set for Jan. 12.'

Ed. note: This is Angola, Indiana in the US, not the country of Angola.

Australia: Teacher told student to abuse her during 'affair', court hears

anthony · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A SCHOOLTEACHER accused of ordering a student to abuse her and treat her as his sex slave has been sent for trial.

Melbourne Magistrate's Court yesterday heard claims Nazira Rafei, 26, did the 15-year-old boy's maths test for him and threatened his grades if he called the relationship off.

"Disrespect me. Say shut the f--- up to me and stuff like that," the boy claims Ms Rafei told him during a tryst in her car.

"Say I'm your sex slave."

Ms Rafei, a married science and maths teacher, pleaded not guilty to sexual penetration of a child under 16 under her supervision or authority and four counts of committing indecent acts.'

UCSC Student Paper: Men Venture into Feminist Studies Major

anthony · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In 1999, at Boston College, associate professor Mary Daly refused to enroll two male students into her “Introduction to Feminist Ethics” class, because she believed that a male’s presence would interfere with the female students’ learning. There was a large backlash against Daly, and she eventually agreed to retire.

Within UC Santa Cruz’s feminist studies department, although significantly outnumbered by women, men do major in feminist studies.

Timothy Clark is a third-year feminist studies major and a teacher’s assistant for “Intro to Feminist Studies.” He is also the only male in his TA seminar. Clark acknowledges that there are still stereotypes about studying feminism.
...
“As a man, to be involved with feminist studies, you have to be very open to the idea that you’re the privileged people, and you have to be willing to be uncomfortable some of the time,” Clark said. “Men are generally the dominant voice in society. Feminist studies is trying to change that. It’s working toward a more equal and just society.”

Professor takes a look at violent women

anthony · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Laura Sjoberg, a professor of political science, weighed in on her theories of how violent women are treated differently than violent men last night. She took a few minutes to sit down before her lecture to give an overview of her research into the gender gap between men and women in the area of global political violence.

Q: Now what is the most important focal point of your lecture, if you could possibly sum it all up?

A: The focal point for the lecture is that violent women are treated in the media and scholarly accounts as if, first, they don't have any agency in their violence and, second, that violent women are no different from real or "normal" women who are still innocent and peaceful and pure.'

Mama don't preach: Madonna lets Guy see his boys... on 12 conditions

Matt · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After weeks apart, an emotional Guy Ritchie was reunited with his sons Rocco and David at a London airport this morning.

The director's children were back on English soil after being whisked away to the US by Madonna, who is in the throes of her Sticky and Sweet tour.

But as Guy held his two boys close for the first time in weeks, his estranged wife tightened her grip from the other side of the Atlantic.

The Mail has learned that the 50-year-old has issued a list of demands that Ritchie must meet while the children are with him in London. It includes a ban on TV, non-organic food and clothes not sent by her.'

F4J Update: Stanesby sentenced to two months

Matt · 13 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'IVYBRIDGE Fathers 4 Justice activist Jolly Stanesby was today jailed for two months for a rooftop protest at the home of Deputy Prime Minister Harriett Harman.

Fellow protestor Mark Harris, of Elford Crescent in Plympton, was given a conditional discharge.

Members of the group, which had disbanded in September of this year, said they would be staging further protests on the Minister's roof and at the Prime Minister's home in Kirkaldy & Cowdenbeath within the week to protest at what they described as a 'politically conceived show trial.'

Spokesman Mark Harris said: "I am shocked that Mr Stanesby has been imprisoned and know that fellow campaigners will be taking his place on Miss Harman's roof within days if not hours. The court has made a serious error in committing him to prison and in doing so incited angry dads to take further direct action."'

Ed. note: You can leave messages for Jolly here.

Beltway gossip: Obama considering Hillary for Sec'y of State

Matt · 14 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There's increasing chatter in political circles that the Obama camp is not overly happy with the usual suspects for secretary of state these days and that the field might be expanding somewhat beyond Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.), Gov. Bill Richardson (D-N.M.), Sen. Chuck Hagel (R-Neb.) and maybe former Democratic senator Sam Nunn of Georgia.

There's talk, indeed, that Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-N.Y.) may now be under consideration for the post. Her office referred any questions to the Obama transition; Obama spokesman Tommy Vietor declined to comment.'

Note to Obama: Please, just don't do it.

Nebraska set to shut the dumpster lid on anyone but infants-- last call for drop-offs!

Matt · 14 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Hurry, you have only a few days left to abandon your troublesome teenagers and just walk off! Excerpt:

'LINCOLN, Neb. – The mother was running out of more than patience when she abandoned her 18-year-old daughter at a hospital over the weekend under Nebraska's safe-haven law. She was also running out of time: She knew that state lawmakers would soon meet in a special session to amend the ill-fated law so that it would apply to newborns only.
...
The safe-haven law was intended to save "Dumpster babies" by allowing desperate young mothers to abandon their newborns at a hospital without fear of prosecution. But lawmakers could not agree on an age limit, and the law as passed uses only the word "child."

All states have safe-haven laws, but in every state but Nebraska, the law applies to infants only.

Authier said her group and others had warned senators after the law passed early this year that there could be problems, but the lawmakers did not believe it.'

UK: Boys' club threatened with funding axe unless it accepts girls and changes name

Anonymous · 14 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For 114 years, the Broad Plain Boys' Club has been keeping youngsters occupied and out of trouble.

Its leaders run sports sessions for boys aged between seven and 25 to improve self-discipline and confidence - and twice a week girls are welcomed too.

But it seems that for officials at the town hall, that's not good enough.

So they have told its leaders that they must change it to something more politically correct, such as the Working With Young People Club, and invite more girls in - or face losing the £11,600-a-year funding.

Dennis Stinchcombe, who has been in charge of the club, in Easton, Bristol, for 33 years, said the decision could force the club to close.

'They want us to drop the name Broad Plain Boys' Club, no matter that we have had that name for more than 100 years', he said.

'It will cost thousands to change the name. We would have to get new letterheads and change all the equipment with the name on it.

Although the council is happy to fund women's groups, they believe a boys' club is just too exclusive.'

UK: Mother accused of stabbing sons to death 'tried to abandon older boy at A&E last year'

Matt · 14 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mother accused of killing her two young sons had previously tried to abandon the older boy, it was revealed today.

Jael Mullings dumped two-year-old Romario - with a note attached to him - at the A&E department of a hospital near her home in June 2007. Then in November she left the boy at a doctor's surgery.

Social workers had been monitoring the family, but closed their file on Ms Mullings, judging that the mother was capable of caring for her children with the support of 'other agencies'. Today, an investigation into that decision was under way.'

No. 34 dumped in Nebraska

Matt · 14 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. There'll be a line forming by the end of the day. You can be sure most of the dumpees will be boys, too. Excerpt:

'OMAHA, Neb. – A 5-year-old boy has been dropped off at an Omaha, Neb., hospital only a day before the state Legislature begins a meeting to change the state's safe-haven law.

The state Department of Health and Human Services said Friday the boy was left at Immanuel Medical Center about 9 p.m. Thursday. He's from Sarpy County near Omaha.

Nebraska's safe-haven law was intended to protect unwanted newborns from being abandoned, but unlike similar laws in other states, Nebraska's doesn't include an age limit.'

In chicken-egg factories, only female chicks are kept. The males are ground up in large garbage disposal-type units right after they are born. Looks like we may be headed toward that one day if the boy-hating continues to flourish as it is.

Female BBC Radio Host Fired After Requesting ‘Non-Asian’ Cabbie

Matt · 14 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here regarding the firing of Sam(antha) Mason, a popular (former) BBC radio personality. Caption: "A guy with a turban is going to freak her [daughter] out. She's not used to Asians." She also said she would prefer a female driver, too.

The commentary that follows includes a debate among the commentators (all female) that includes speculation that the BBC's actions are not entirely justified or legally defensible, and then goes on to discuss whether or not it would have been less offensive and even a far-more valid concern if she had only asked that the driver be female. They seemed to be in agreement on that point.

They also compared her case to Don Imus' and said the difference between him and her was that Imus said what he did on the air and she did not. They close with the speculation that the taxi company had done her wrong by releasing the tape to the BBC. There is a related print story here.

And so it goes.

New Internet Talk Radio Show For Men

JSoltys · 14 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

To the fans of Mensactivism.org,

My name is Joe Soltys. I have started a new live internet radio show dedicated to discussing and debating men and father issues, gender issues, and sexual poitics.

The show will be broadcast live by BlogTalkRadio.com on Sunday mornings and is titled "An Hour With Joe Soltys".

Listeners can voice their opinions during each show by way of a listener phone number, or by way of a live chat room that will be available to my listeners for the duration of the show.

If you cannot listen to the show on Sunday mornings, within an hour of each completed show, a recorded copy will be archived and available at BlogTalkRadio for those who missed the live show.

This Sunday's topic will be: Should women be forced to sign up for Selective Service, and should they be forced onto the front lines of combat in the name of gender equality?

So stop by, listen to the show, and tell me what you think.

The show can be found at http://www.blogtalkradio.com/J-Soltys

Best Wishes,

J. Soltys

Why don't we trust dads?

Anonymous · 14 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Guy Ritchie met his children at the airport this week, he reportedly didn't just receive hugs and kisses. He also got a list from Madonna's PA of do's and don'ts for the kids during their stay...

...why does he need a list of the responsibilities he fulfilled before then?

It's not just an academic celebrity question. Most couples I know have tension in their relationships when dad takes over and mums tries to stage direct from the wings. "They don't eat their spaghetti like that" or "That's not how she does her hair for school" or even "You're folding the towels wrong". Almost every dad I know has experienced it and every mum I know has guiltily admitted interfering, even though she knows it sets her partner's teeth on edge and that the kids will be fine even if dad does it a different way.'

New book: "Domestic Violence Treatment for Abusive Women: A Treatment Manual "

Matt · 14 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Domestic Violence Treatment for Abusive Women: A Treatment Manual, by Ellen Bowen, was just made available for pre-order. Description:

'Recognizing that women can be as abusive in their intimate partnerships as men, this book provides the clinician with comprehensive information to understand the characteristics and treatment implications for women's domestic violence. It offers guidance for conducting group treatment of abusive women.'

UK: Girls' schooling 'sacrificed to help boys'

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 40-year drift away from single sex schooling has sacrificed girls' education in order to give struggling teenage boys a "wake-up call", according to one of the country's leading girls' school heads.

Vicky Tuck, head of Cheltenham Ladies' College, who will open the annual girls' school conference in Winchester, Hampshire, on Monday, said that boys' schools are increasingly going co-educational because they are struggling to recruit and to boost exam results.

She said girls are being used to improve their male classmates' education and are losing out on a focused women-only school life.'

Teacher sex claims explored

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WARREN -- The Detroit Police Department is investigating allegations that a female school teacher had a sexual relationship with a male student last year.
...
The Warren teacher is alleged to have engaged in a six-month relationship with a male student, who was 16 years old at the time of the incident last year when the school was located in Roseville. The sexual encounters occurred in Detroit, which is where the student resides, Superintendent Charles Meredith said.
...
The Warren charter school incident follows a string of others involving female teachers in Metro Detroit.

A former Roseville High School French teacher was sentenced in Macomb Circuit Court this summer to three years' probation for allegedly having sex with her teenage classroom aide. Janelle Batkins, who pleaded no contest in May to two counts of second-degree criminal sexual conduct, was also ordered to register as a sex offender, complete 240 hours of community service and continue counseling.'

Newport News woman gets life for hired murder of husband

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Within two months after Catherina Voss' Navy husband was murdered by a hit man she admitted hiring, she plowed through a $100,000 death benefit on jewelry, trips and other items she shared with her boyfriend.
...
Voss admitted her actions in federal court in Newport News after agreeing to testify against her boyfriend, Michael Draven, and David Runyon, who is accused of being the hired gunman. Prosecutors dropped plans to pursue the death penalty against her.

On Friday, Voss was sentenced instead to four life prison terms plus 20 additional years. She pleaded guilty to murder, conspiracy to commit murder for hire, and related charges.'

Child abuse suspect requests lower bail

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'(KSL News) A Utah County woman accused of abusing two children in her care by starving them and making them sleep in a bathtub wants to get out of jail.

Lawyers for Mary Heath yesterday requested her bail be lowered from $50,000 to $10,000. A judge will hear arguments on the motion next week.

Heath was arrested last month after her 9-year-old niece was found wandering her Eagle Mountain neighborhood wearing nothing but underwear. Police then went into Heath's home and found the girl's 8-year-old brother locked in a bathroom and almost starved to death.'

Grandmother, aunt accused of starving boy to death

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SCOTT COUNTY, MS (WLBT) - A bouquet of flowers covered little Austin Watkins' tiny white casket. The child's life was drastically cut short just days before his fifth birthday.

Authorities say little Austin, who weighed a mere 19 pounds, was starved to death.

"It looked like just skin over bones, it was just a terrible sight. Over my years of coroner I've never seen anything like it," said Joe Bradford, Scott County Coroner.

The child had been living in a trailer home near Ludlow with his grandmother, 43-year-old Janice Mowdy, and his 23-year-old aunt, Stephanie Bell.

Both women have been charged with murder and felony child abuse.'

Stage set in Charleston for VAWA reform

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHARLESTON - In addition to the White House, the road to reforming a federal anti-domestic violence law ran through Charleston as a dinner featuring a delegate for Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama was held the same day Obama's running mate, and the chief architect of the law, was in town for a campaign stop.
...
However, later that evening at a domestic violence awareness dinner held at the Marriott, General Parker, a Peoria, Ill., boilermaker, who was elected to serve as a delegate for Obama to this year's Democratic National Convention, said despite its good intentions, VAWA's impact has been the break-up of families.

...
It was at this point that Parker says he discovered that financial incentives built into VAWA keeps innocent people trapped in the criminal justice system. Though the protective order his wife filed against him was dismissed, Parker said the prosecutor's office later charged him with assault, and hounded him on the parental kidnapping charge until, after two trials, a jury acquitted him.
...
Concurring with Parker, Plants said something is terribly wrong when the courts don't protect citizens' most fundamental rights.

"Before the state breaks down the family, due process should be observed," Plants said.'

Opinion: Male circumcision should be frowned upon

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision, though common among males in Canada, is considered a massive human rights violation when done to women. So why are male and female circumcision gauged so differently?
...
The acceptance of male genital mutilation is an outdated social construct that needs to be looked at from a less dichotomous perspective. It's almost the same thing, so why treat it differently?
...
Parents are rarely well-informed when choosing circumcision for their child. The most common misconception is that the foreskin is unhygienic and an infection waiting to happen.

Circumcision is not necessary to maintain good personal hygiene. Like any other folds of skin, foreskin can trap exfoliated skin particles, natural oils, dirt and moisture. The combination of these things is called smegma, and can accumulate on both male and female genitals if not cleaned properly.'

International Men's Day - November 19th - is approaching

bharati · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

International Men's Day was first celebrated in Trinidad and Tobago on November 19, 1999. Other countries probably observe different days, but celebrate? Not yet. This is changing as India and Australia observing International Men's Day on November 19th.

An Australian Non-Governmental Organisation has decided to celebrate International Men's Day on November 19th. Excerpt:

"One of the promoted themes for the celebration of International Men's Day in Australia is honour and sacrifice, a theme that resonates with Aussie men, particularly as this date coincides with a major loss of male lives in the HMAS Sydney naval tragedy.

Having International Men's Day in November also ties in very well with Movember - a moustache growing charity event held during November each year that raises funds and awareness for men's health.'

Sex offender calls her match with teen boy 'perfect'

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Indianola, Ia. - Shannon Michelle Rew faces up to 10 years behind bars and a lifetime as a registered sex offender, but the 37-year-old Indianola mother of three is unapologetic about her sexual relationship with a teenage boy.
...
Rew, who pleaded guilty Monday to two counts of third-degree sex abuse, said she and the boy "cared a lot about each other" and "kind of let emotions just take over," which prosecutors say led to an ongoing relationship that included pornography, explicit text messages and a sexual encounter in her van while she was free on bond.
...
People who are charged with crimes try "to make excuses to justify their crimes and take the focus away from what they did wrong under our laws by focusing attention on the victims," he said. "She took advantage of an emotionally unstable individual. That's what a criminal does. He or she takes advantage of someone who is vulnerable or in a fragile state."'

VA Tech student paper: "Do Violent Women Betray Stereotypes?"

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sjoberg painted the clear picture that when it comes to war, women are still seen as these naturally nurturing, domesticated and inferior people who need protection.

Instead of taking this stereotypical viewpoint, Sjoberg said, "As women's freedoms increase, so will their violence." They no longer need to be looked at as people who need protection, she said, adding that, in fact, others may need protection from these women.

Sjoberg said that when women engage in violence, they are often portrayed as one of three things: mothers, monsters or whores who have no agency in their violence. Instead, their violence is always attributed to some sort of emotion or problem, never just because they are strong-willed women fighting for their rights. If it's a woman engaging in violence then popular culture always attributes her violence to some sort of disorder or emotional breakdown.'

27 female suicide bombers in Iraq profiled

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young women have been trained in their dozens to become suicide bombers in one Iraqi province in an attempt to reverse an improving security climate and derail talks about an upcoming security pact, Iraqi officials believe.

The assessment follows the latest lethal blast on Sunday at a checkpoint outside a hospital in Baquba, which is believed to have been carried out by a girl as young as 13. Pathologists and police are still trying to determine her exact age and identity.

The girl's death has taken to 27 the number of female bombers from the province of Diyala, 37 miles (60 km) north of Baghdad, in the past 18 months and has led to an urgent Iraq-wide security review, which is likely to involve more intrusive searches of women at checkpoints.'

Husbands blamed for high maternal filicide rate in Japan

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Experts say the case is emblematic of a broader crisis. Recent statistics record more than 100 cases of maternal filicide — mothers murdering their children — since the end of 2005, including six in September this year. Although the proportion of Japanese aged 14 and younger has been steadily shrinking in the past decade, the number of filicides has stayed roughly constant.

The cases feature a wide variety of motivations and triggers. Many, however, feature persistent theme: young mothers feel acutely isolated from their community and receive no support from uninvolved or abusive husbands. Usually they are too ashamed to seek treatment for their depression. In a moment of quiet desperation, they are driven to kill.'

Obama Transition Team Asks NOW For Cabinet Input

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Early indications that men might dominate the hierarchy of Obama administration have women's groups worried, even as a growing chorus of advisers reportedly pushes Hillary Rodham Clinton for secretary of state [sic].
...
The Obama transition team asked NOW to send suggestions of qualified female candidates, according to Gandy.
...
The backlash from women's groups may have pushed Summers off the short list for Treasury secretary. Only 33 women have held Cabinet or Cabinet-level appointments, according to the Center for American Women and Politics at Rutgers University. Bill Clinton holds the record for female nominees, appointing 14 during his two terms in the White House. He's followed by George W. Bush, who put eight women in top-level posts.'

Teenage Girl Stabs 5 During Brawl After High School Football Game

anthony · 15 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'STUART, Fla. — Investigators were searching Saturday for a teenage girl they say stabbed five others during a melee that ensued after a high school football game in southeast Florida.
...
The girls' wounds were in the leg, shoulder, forearm and hand. One person involved was Tasered by a deputy. The girls stabbed were taken to a hospital.

Another person was bitten by a police dog and one woman was arrested in a series of unrelated fights that involved around 30 people outside the school, Irons said.'

Moviewatch: 'Changeling' character repeats common falsehoods re circumcision

Matt · 16 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

I saw Changeling not too long ago and overall I think it was a very good movie from a lot of angles. However there was a scene wherein a character, Dr. Earl Tarr (played by Peter Gerety), a psychiatrist, states:

"Very likely his abductor thought it appropriate. After all, circumcision is hygienically sound. Must have been quite traumatic at the time. No wonder he's submerged the memory."

The script is available here (.pdf file); see page 32 of the file. Granted, his character was an antagonist, and the times (the late 1920s-1930s) the movie is set in are portrayed overall as still being rather backward in many ways. Nonetheless, this is a popular movie currently in theaters and this line from it offers MRAs an opportunity to write letters -to-the-editors pointing out the line in this movie and how it is both false and, unwittingly perhaps, encourages this barbaric practice.

Woman douses boyfriend with gasoline and sets him on fire

Michael · 16 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FORESTHILL, CA - A Placer County woman is under arrest after allegedly dousing her boyfriend with gasoline and setting him on fire Friday morning.

The woman, identified as 21-year-old Traci Nicole Gilson, apparently grabbed a container of gasoline that was inside a Jeep, poured some of it onto her boyfriend and lit him on fire, according to Placer County Sheriff's investigators.

"When he fled the vehicle he was in fact on fire. His clothing was on fire," said Placer County Sheriff's Sgt. Dennis Walsh. "The driver, who had gasoline on him, fled the vehicle into the forest here and then fled down the roadway. He was found by paramedics some ways down the road."

The victim is identified as Allan Lane Scott, 19, hospitalized with severe burns to his hands and the front of his body. He's listed in fair condition at the UC Med Center in Sacramento.'

Police say rape claim was false

anthony · 17 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'OCALA — An Ocala woman who claimed she was raped on Aug. 6 while walking along Southwest 32nd Court is being held in Pennsylvania on charges of making up the story.

Marion County sheriff's officials say Sandra Lawrence, 41, made up the bogus rape because she'd had unprotected sex that day with a 16-year-old boy and wanted a morning-after pill.

Lawrence allegedly claimed a Hispanic man dragged her into the woods and raped her, setting off a major law enforcement manhunt.

...

Lawrence was being held on charges of unlawful sexual activity with a minor; tampering with or fabricating physical evidence; tampering with a victim, witness or informant; making a false report to law enforcement officials; and giving alcohol to a person under 21.'

India SC: Estranged wife entitled to her own house arindamp · 17 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Another sexist, anti-men verdict. Excerpt:

"NEW DELHI: Husbands paying monthly maintenance to cover food, clothing and other expenses of estranged wives may now have to shell out a great deal more. For, the Supreme Court has ruled that maintenance should include provision for a house akin to the husband's.

"Maintenance, as we see it, necessarily, must encompass a provision for residence," said a Bench comprising Justices Arijit Pasayat and Mukundakam Sharma, ruling in favour of Komal Amma from Kerala who struggled to find a house for herself after estrangement."

Men now have to provide houses for females. How sexist can it get?

South Africa: White male suicides on the rise

anthony · 17 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Suicide experts are warning that the current economic turmoil is driving an increasing number of white men to severe depression and suicide.

The SA Depression and Anxiety Group (Sadag) reports a marked increase in volumes of distress calls, particularly white men aged between 40 and 50 who are considering taking their lives.

Now the group, along with other experts, is becoming increasingly concerned that the looming festive season, during which suicides usually spike, will drive even more men over the edge.'

UK: Parents turning to private girls schools 'to protect daughters'

anthony · 17 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Parents are increasingly turning to private education for their girls as an antidote to a society dominated by "Botox and bingeing" and to protect them from the coarsening of society.
...
Vicky Tuck, principal of Cheltenham Ladies College, said that parents today were anxious that their daughters were growing up too fast, and worried that they were being exposed to many negative influences.
...
Ms Tuck said that girls often preferred a single sex education for personal reasons. "They do say that it helps not having boys around either mucking about or making them worry about their appearance; that they can compartmentalise their lives," she said.'

Tim Russert, Sudden Heart Attack, and Sexism Against Men

anthony · 17 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

This article dates back to June, but the relevancy cannot be overstated. Excerpt:

'Tim Russert's untimely death from a sudden heart attack reminded me of the dramatic 50+-year-long gender disparity against men in health care research and outreach. Many more men than women die of sudden heart attack and at an earlier age than do women of breast cancer.

Indeed, sudden heart attack is the #1 cause of premature death among men over 40. Yet, more money per capita is spent on breast cancer research.

And regarding outreach, there are a trivial number of prostate cancer ribbons compared with the number of pink ribbons against breast cancer. And have you ever seen even one ribbon against sudden heart attack?

More broadly, men die 5.3 years younger than women, and spend their last decade in worse health. There are more than four widows for every widower.'

Hillary plans to accept Secretary of State position

Matt · 17 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton plans to accept the job of secretary of state offered by Barack Obama, who is reaching out to former rivals to build a broad coalition administration, the Guardian has learned.

Obama's advisers have begun looking into Bill Clinton's foundation, which distributes millions of dollars to Africa to help with development, to ensure that there is no conflict of interest. But Democrats do not believe that the vetting is likely to be a problem.

Clinton would be well placed to become the country's dominant voice in foreign affairs, replacing Condoleezza Rice. Since being elected senator for New York, she has specialised in foreign affairs and defence. Although she supported the war in Iraq, she and Obama basically agree on a withdrawal of American troops.'

The bright side is, maybe New York will finally get a real second senator now. :-|

Woman pleads no contest in toilet corpse case - called 'a victim'

anthony · 18 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MAUSTON, Wis. - A woman accused of helping her religious leader hide a decaying corpse on her toilet so they could continue collecting her Social Security was convicted of a misdemeanor in a deal for her to testify against the leader, a prosecutor said Monday.

Tammy Lewis, 36, of Necedah, pleaded no contest to obstructing a police officer and was fined $350 in a plea bargain that defers prosecution of more serious charges. Juneau County Circuit John Roemer ordered her to pay the fine within 60 days or serve a seven-day jail sentence.
...
"We view her as a victim as well of Alan Bushey," Southworth said. "We also understand the power, the mental power, that Alan Bushey was exercising over her, the coercion he was exerting over her."

A deferred prosecution agreement calls for Lewis to continue to receive mental health treatment and testify against Bushey in a trial set to begin in April, the prosecutor said.'

RADAR ALERT: Is This What Congress Had in Mind for VAWA?

Matt · 18 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

For the past several weeks, an organization called The Family Place has been running ads on in the Dallas area buses featuring young children.

In one ad a young boy says when: " I grow up I will beat my wife." Another ad features a young African-American girl who says "when I grow up my husband will kill me".

Glenn Sacks has led the charge against these ads. You can check out his efforts at http://glennsacks.com/dart.

These ads create many problems, not the least of which is that they misrepresent the true nature of domestic violence.

Featuring a young girl with this message that her husband will kill her when she grows up implies that domestic violence is widespread especially in marriage. But census statistics show that domestic violence rates in marriage are around 0.2%. See http://www.ojp.usdoj.gov/bjs/intimate/table/wommar.htm.

And depicting this young girl as African-American stereotypes African-American boys as future abusers.

Much of the funding for these ads comes from government grant programs like the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). VAWA reauthorization will be coming up in the next Congress. By the time that happens, these ads will be long gone. But it's important for our Senators and Congressman to know what domestic violence organizations are using taxpayer money for.

Last Friday RADAR distributed a flyer about the ads to all 100 U.S. Senate Offices. The members of the House of Representatives also need a copy. Please:

1. Download the flyer at http://www.mediaradar.org/docs/RADARflyer-DART.pdf
2. Find out who your your congressional rep. is and how to contact them at http://writerep.house.gov/
3. Fax or e-mail the flyer to your congressional rep. and tell them you don't want you taxpayer money spent this way.

As always, be sure to be polite and courteous.

++
Date of RADAR Release: November 17, 2008

Want to improve the chance that they'll pay attention to your letter? Click here.

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

More pro-father music available

Matt · 18 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Via J Swanson: Our fine hard-working musician brother in arms Joakim Ramstadt in Sweden has produced a new video and MP3 file for our general 'enjoyment' and for wide distribution. The latest is "The Eyes of my Child" which I believe is equally as good as his original "A Crime to be a Man"; links to both videos are hereunder.

Music being one of my passions beyond my FR activities I especially enjoyed these and they come highly-recommended. There is no doubt that apart from being a good Father our brother is also a brilliant musician. The songs are licensed to Joakim as performed by his band "Tequila Sunrise" and he wants you to know that he will send you a free copy of the MP3 and or the video (19MB) if you want it. Personally I have opted to receive just the MP3 files because one can view the video at the links hereunder.

Please enjoy and then send these around to family and friends. Besides the exceptional quality of the music itself there is a clear message in the words of the song and the graphics in the video. The more people who see these videos, the better. Joakim has been working all night on producing this video for you all and is exhausted right now but if you can find the time please email him at joakim.ramstedt-at-gmail.com and thank him for producing all of this on behalf of our lost children. You can use the same email to ask him for the MP3's. Joakim has produced these for the sake of justice and principle alone.

Links:
A Crime to be a Man

The Eyes of my Child

While I am on topic another fine activist-musician is Australian FR activist and brother Peter van de Voorde who produced the CD "Our Stolen Children" which contains exclusively related material. It sure is worth a listen and certainly the purchase of the CD. Purchase one or two or more here.

Besides on the site above you can listen to some of the sample tracks here and here.

"Shocking" report re teen girls

Matt · 18 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Where has Ms. Banks been, hiding under a rock? This comes as no surprise, really. Excerpt:

'More than 10,000 teenage girls and young women took part in an anonymous survey over the summer on TyraShow.com, the Web site of “The Tyra Banks Show.” Survey questions focused on sexuality, sexually transmitted diseases and teen pregnancy, as well as drinking, drugs and violence among females. Here are some findings from the survey:

* On average, girls are losing their virginity at 15 years of age.
* 14 percent of teens who are having sex say they’re doing it at school.
* 52 percent of survey respondents say they do not use protection when having sex.
* One in three says she fears having a sexually transmitted disease.
* 24 percent of teens with STDs say they still have unprotected sex.
 One in five girls says she wants to be a teen mom.*
 About 50 percent acknowledge that they’ve hit someone.*
* One out of three teens has tried drugs.'

Cops: ‘Cinderella’ abuse no fairy tale

anthony · 18 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police say a 35-year-old Worcester woman raped and abused her teenage niece, forcing her to be a live-in housekeeper in what police are calling a sick, real-life “Cinderella” story.

Mara L. Escobar pleaded not guilty yesterday in Central District Court in Worcester to two counts of child rape, five counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, three counts of assault and battery on a child causing bodily injury and one count of domestic assault and battery.

The alleged victim, now 16, was reportedly beaten with thorny rose stems, assaulted with frozen hot dogs, slammed against the floor and kicked and punched in the eye on numerous occasions starting in 2005 while living at Escobar’s home, according to court documents.'

Man lands in jail and loses job over wrong ID in support case

Matt · 19 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When Walter Andre Sharpe Jr. signed for a certified letter from Dauphin County Domestic Relations in 2001, he didn't know he was signing on for a seven-year nightmare.

Since then, the Philadelphia man has been thrown in jail four times, lost his job, become estranged from his four children and spent more than $12,000 to support the child of another man.

It finally stopped in May 2007 when a judge reversed a finding that he was the father.'

International Men's Day slowly gets more traction in India

bharati · 19 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Today is the day to celebrate! It is International Men's Day. The idea of an International Men's Day was initiated at the UN by Mikhail Gorbachev.

First celebrated on November 19th, 1999 in Trinidad and Tobacco, India did so for the first time in 2007 and then again in 2008. Abhinav Bindra was the first individual Olympic gold medalist from India to put his support behind it. The reasons why we need this day are succinctly put here.

Australia is celebrating this day as well, with Dads4Kids taking the lead.

How is this day being marked in India?

- 30 bikers rally from Bellunder Gate to Madivala checkpost in Bangalore
- 50 bikers rally from churchgate to Bandra, Mumbai
- Peace march in Kolkatta
- A sit-in in Delhi

Of course it's a day where bosses are supposed to sponsor their reports for lunch or dinner to commemorate the event.

HAPPY MEN'S DAY everyone! It's the day to take up male gender issues!

Mandatory domestic violence classes proposed for high schoolers

tac0965 · 19 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'York, Neb. — Attorney General Jon Bruning says he's dedicated to preventing domestic violence and will ask for legislation next year that would require high school classes on the subject.
...
"I was shocked to see how much domestic violence, date violence, is happening at the high school level and even at the middle school level," Bruning said. "I want the Legislature to pass a law, this coming year, that will help bring that to a stop. I will be asking for that bill, and I want it passed."
...
The Rhode Island law requires all school districts to have a dating violence policy. It also requires annual dating violence education for students in the seventh through 12th grades, through the health curriculum.'

I just hope these classes present both sides of the issue.

Hunt is on for more men to lead classrooms

anthony · 19 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The same scenario is playing out across the state and the nation, where the number of male teachers is dwindling despite a recent focus on drawing more men into classrooms. In Massachusetts, only 24 percent of teachers last year were men compared with 32 percent 15 years ago, according to the most recent state data. Nationally, a quarter of teachers are men, a 40-year low.

...

Even more eyebrow-raising, the research questioned whether a predominantly female teaching force is causing more boys to be labeled as behavior problems because women may struggle in handling the sometimes rambunctious nature of boys. It also questioned whether boys may respond better to a coachlike sternness found in some male teachers.

...

Yet the shrinking number of men can be chalked up to another reason: Some men worry that overly protective parents might falsely accuse them of being pedophiles because teaching, especially in the lower grades, is still largely perceived as a woman's job, requiring a nurturing personality that supposedly is not common among men. In other words, something must be wrong with the guy who likes working with children.'

Texas Teacher Arrested for Giving Topless Photo to Boy

anthony · 19 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SAN ANTONIO — A 27-year-old woman has been arrested on charges of distributing harmful material to a minor after a 14-year-old's parents found a topless photo of her on his cell phone.

Victoria Ann Chacon, a former middle school teacher, allegedly met the boy at their church, where she was a Sunday school teacher. Authorities at Somerset Independent School District said they found no evidence of any inappropriate relationships with students; the 14-year-old attended school elsewhere.

The boy's parents called police in March after finding racy letters in which Chacon professed her love. The boy initially refused to give a statement about the relationship, the arrest warrant says.'

Male Student Could Face Charges for Hugging Social Worker

anthony · 19 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'OLATHE, KAN. -- An Olathe junior high school student could face sexual battery charges after allegedly giving a school social worker an "inappropriate" hug, police said on Tuesday.

According to Olathe Police, a school social worker at Chisholm Trail Junior High School told an assistant principal that the boy, 13, hugged her in a way that she thought was inappropriate.
...
"The report has been taken and the incident was documented and it has been forwarded to the district attorney's office," said Sgt. Johnnie Rowland of the Olathe Police Department. "They will review it and decide from that point what action should be taken."

Nicole Littler from MOCSA, the Metropolitan Organization to Counter Sexual Assault says some teens don't understand sexual harassment, and she urges parents to talk to their children about it.'

Former student pleads not guilty to false rape charge

anthony · 19 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A former Elmhurst College student has pleaded not guilty to charges of falsifying a police report.

Investigators say 19-year-old Safia Jilani reportedly told them she was attacked in a campus bathroom last month because she is Muslim.

After an investigation, police say Jilani made up the story. She has been expelled from the college. Her attorney said Jilani is in treatment but would not discuss details.

She could face three years in prison if convicted.'

Maryland teacher arrested on sex abuse charges

anthony · 19 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SALISBURY, Md. — A Salisbury Christian School music teacher was arrested on sex offense charges this morning after law enforcement officers were notified of an improper relationship with a former student, police said.

Carole Leigh Mayers, a 41-year-old Eden resident, is charged with five counts of third-degree sex offense, five counts of fourth-degree sex offense, five counts of child abuse and perverted practice, according to police.'

Feminist fascism at Canadian university

Anonymous · 20 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The Kingston university has hired student facilitators to step in when they overhear homophobic slurs, remarks bashing women or racially tinged insults, along with an array of other language that could be deemed offensive.
...
'If people are having a conversation with offensive content and they're doing it loud enough for a third person to hear it ... it's not private,' said Jason Laker, dean of student affairs at Queen's.
...
Patricia Gurin, professor emeritus of psychology and women's studies at the University of Michigan, is one of the founders of the intergroup dialogue concept.
...
She said that facilitators who haven't been trained properly could end up reinforcing defence mechanisms of privileged students.

"White males say 'This is more white-male bashing.' What are they learning from that? Reinforcement of defensiveness rather than opening up and exploring is the consequence."'

Love in the Time of Darwinism

Anonymous · 20 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It would be easy enough to hold up some of the callow ranting that the piece inspired as proof positive of the child-man's existence. But the truth is that my correspondents' objections gave me pause. Their argument, in effect, was that the SYM is putting off traditional markers of adulthood—one wife, two kids, three bathrooms—not because he's immature but because he's angry. He's angry because he thinks that young women are dishonest, self-involved, slutty, manipulative, shallow, controlling, and gold-digging. He's angry because he thinks that the culture disses all things male. He's angry because he thinks that marriage these days is a raw deal for men.
...
As the disenchanted SYM sees it, then, resistance to settling down is a rational response to a dating environment designed and ruled by women with only their own interests in mind. "Men see all of this, and wonder if it's really worth risking all in the name of 'romance' and 'growing up,' " a correspondent who calls himself Wytchfinde explains. "After all, if women can be hedonistic and change the rules in midstream when it suits them, why shouldn't men? Why should men be responsible when women refuse to look into the mirror at their own lack of accountability?"

...
In fact, some people would wager that the Darwinian answer to dating chaos is our future normal. "I have lived in many places, countries, and cultures," Douglas Gurney from Montgomery, Alabama, writes. "This is a worldwide phenomenon. The behavior of men is simply a response (which is actually a quite logical one) to the changing behavior of women. Simply put, men are a breeding experiment run by women. You reap what you sow—and when a man can sow all he wants and leave the reaping to others, well, why not?"'

Teacher suspended for letting class vote out autistic boy

anthony · 20 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Florida kindergarten teacher was suspended for polling her students on whether an autistic boy should remain in class.

Alex Barton, 5, lost the vote 14 to 2.

Barton, a former student at Morningside Elementary School in Port St. Lucie, Fla., had received two discipline referrals to the principal's office May 21, the South Florida Sun-Sentinel reported. The school was aware that Barton was in the process of being tested for Asperger's Syndrome.

This week, the St. Lucie County School Board voted unanimously to suspend his tenured teacher, Wendy Portillo, for one year without pay. Superintendent of Schools Michael Lannon recommended discipline after Portillo took Barton to the front of the class and asked students to tell the boy what they didn't like about his behavior and how it impacted them.

Barton said the teacher allowed his classmates to call him "disgusting" and "annoying."

Girl, 10, Drafted School Hit List

Matt · 21 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NOVEMBER 20--A 10-year-old Wisconsin girl drafted a hit list containing the names of 21 classmates and four teachers who would be targeted "when I go on my killing spree." The handwritten list was confiscated Monday afternoon by a teacher in a McKinley Middle School classroom, according a Kenosha Police Department report, a copy of which you'll find below. At the top of the one-page list the sixth grader wrote, "When I go on my killing spree the victims are..."'

Thanks from Joe Soltys

JSoltys · 21 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

I just wanted to thank the readers of Mensactivism.org. The first week's numbers for my new internet radio show at BlogTalkRadio were very respectable. The more avenues of media we can utilize to advance our concerns will only help grow the momentum that has already been established by organizations/individuals like Mensactivism.org.

This week, I will discuss how authorities are changing their approach towards prostitution, which involves compassion for the prostitutes, and jail for the johns. Isn't this gender discrimination?

Also, the different reaction in society between advertising that offends men, and advertising that offends women (DART vs. Motrin).

And finally, how research released this week proves feminists lied about girls and education.

Link to my show's web page: http://www.blogtalkradio.com/J-Soltys

Joe Soltys

Denmark: Proposal to ban child circumcision

BinaryShadow · 21 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Several parliamentary parties are considering creating legislation that would spare all children from circumcision - not just girls.

A proposal to ban circumcision for boys may be on its way to parliament after intense discussions by MPs over the past week, reports Kristeligt Dagblad newspaper.

Although circumcision of girls was outlawed in response to the practice being common among immigrants from some Muslim countries, boys may still be circumcised if a certified physician is present.'

Ed. note: Not surprisingly, there is a great deal of resistance to this from religious quarters. Story here.

Canada: National Child Day with announcement of Equal Parenting Bill

Matt · 21 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Press release:

Vellacott celebrates National Child Day with announcement of Equal Parenting Bill

For Immediate Release
November 20, 2008

OTTAWA – “Today is National Child Day. It is a great day to be talking about the best interests of children,” says Conservative MP Maurice Vellacott (Saskatoon-Wanuskewin). “My next initiative – in an 11-year political history of fighting for Canada’s children – is a bill to require a presumption of equal, shared parenting in child custody decisions.”

In the last Parliament, Vellacott introduced M-483, a Private Member's MOTION advocating equal, shared parenting. In this parliament, he is preparing to introduce a Private Member's BILL that would amend the Divorce Act to direct judges to demonstrate a presumption of equal, shared parenting in cases of marital breakdown where children are involved. Exceptions will exist for cases of abuse and neglect.

“The overwhelming testimony from the best research is that children’s interests are best served when they are raised by both parents,” said Vellacott.

“In cases of marital breakdown, this must be facilitated with greater emphasis being given to equal, shared parenting by Canadian courts when they decide on custodial and access questions,” he added.

A 1998 Canadian Special Joint House-Senate Committee on Child Custody and Access produced a report entitled “For The Sake of the Children.” This report had important recommendations on equal, shared parenting. This year is the 10th anniversary of the release of that Report.

Up to now, governments have failed to implement the important child-friendly recommendations from this report. Vellacott gives special recognition to the 10th anniversary by stating his intent to introduce a Private Members’ Bill to implement equal, shared parenting provisions in federal law.

Vellacott.M-at-parl.gc.ca

Estranged Wife Denied Husband's Lottery Winnings

anthony · 21 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'POLK COUNTY, Fla. -- For richer or poorer, that's the vow, but it's not the law. Ida and William Cody are married, but have lived apart for decades. When William hit the lottery, Ida thought she'd get a share of it.
...
It took jurors just one hour to decide Ida had no claim on her estranged husband's $1.9 million lottery jackpot. Ida said she gave William Cody $20 to purchase the winning ticket, but the jury didn't buy her story.

The Codys were married in 1974, but they've been separated for more than 20 years. And, until William Cody struck it rich, the pair weren't on speaking terms.

"I'd rather have ne'er a penny and be eating grass than to have all the money in the world and her nagging me, putting me through all this stuff," William said.'

Woman gets 9 years for killing couple while DUI

Anonymous · 22 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A drunk businesswoman who killed a young couple while speeding 'grotesquely' at 113mph in a £50,000 Jaguar on her way home from the races has been jailed for nine years.

Mary Butres, 47, lost control of the car after she hit standing water and careered into Mark Compton, 20, and his 19-year-old girlfriend Jodie Brown, who were walking away from their car after it had broken down.

The helpless couple were hit with such force they were hurled onto the opposite carriageway and killed instantly.
...
Today Butres, of Stamford, Lincolnshire, showed no emotion as she was jailed and given a seven-year driving ban for two counts of causing death by dangerous driving.'

Former sex assault-case pursuing deputy DA accused of sexual assault crimes

Luek · 22 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

This is a news story about a Deputy DA in California who was a sex crimes prosecutor and who is being accused of rape, sodomy, threatening to kill the alleged victim and other nasties.

It basically boils down to a "he said, she said" case because there is no remaining exculpatory evidence since the alleged rape. She filed the charges after learning her work contract with the DA's office would not be renewed. Sound familiar?

The DA who is being accused said he is shaken to his very core and BEING ON THE OTHER SIDE IS EXTREMELY PAINFUL. Ah, poor baby!

I wonder if he would now be open to the legal concept that making a false rape accusation is rape and should be prosecuted as a Class A felony? Excerpt:

'MARTINEZ, Calif. -- Contra Costa County Senior Deputy District Attorney Michael Gressett pleaded not guilty Friday to charges that he raped and sodomized a fellow prosecutor in May.

The charges, which were filed Friday in Martinez, include two counts rape, four counts sodomy, three counts forced sexual penetration, one count forced oral copulation, one count false imprisonment and one count of making criminal threats for allegedly threatening to kill the alleged victim, according to the complaint.
...
"This false accusation has shaken me to the core," Gressett told a swarm of reporters outside the courthouse. "I know that the accuser knows these accusations are not true."

Gressett, who was one of the top sex crimes prosecutors in the county and has been an attorney since 1987, said that after so many years of prosecuting "bad guys and fighting to get ... the truth out" it was extremely difficult and painful to be on the other side.'

Gressett, 51, also faces multiple enhancements for allegedly tying up the alleged victim and using a handgun and an ice pick during the alleged assault.

Boy arrested for passing gas

Matt · 22 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I never understood the trouble kids (boys) got into for passing gas. It isn't like one has a great deal of control over it and it's pretty easy to tell if he is doing it to cut up (ie, "artificial farts") or actually just got taken by surprise. But even in the "good ol' days", the most some crazed, wild-eyed farting boy had done to him was getting told to stand in the corner or maybe, if it's a real bad case of flatulence, to go see the principal (or maybe the nurse if it was accompanied by such crimes as barfing or coughing). Nowadays it seems, it warrants arrest.

War on boys? No. Feminized classrooms? No, no way. It's an illusion, just propaganda being bandied about by crazed MRAs and other such male chauvinist sexist bigot types. Now that that is all straightened out, you may go back to sleep and let the Mommy State take care of everything for you... provided you pony up.

Excerpt:

'NOVEMBER 21--A 12-year-old Florida student was arrested earlier this month after he "deliberately passed gas to disrupt the class," according to police. The child, who was also accused of shutting off the computers of classmates at Stuart's Spectrum Jr./Sr. High School, was busted November 4 for disruption of a school function. A Martin County Sheriff's Office report, a copy of which you'll find below, notes that the 4' 11" offender admitted that he "continually disrupted his classroom environment by breaking wind and shutting off several computers."'

 Even shutting off computers warrants no more than a trip to the principal's office. Sheesh!

Mom Allegedly Burns 'Wimp' Into Daughter's Neck With Cigarette

anthony · 22 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MOUNDSVILLE, W.Va. — A West Virginia mother faces charges after being accused of burning the word "wimp" into her 6-year-old daughter's neck.

Tammy Smith is charged with five counts of child abuse and of malicious assault, all felonies.

Moundsville Police Chief Jim Kudlak said Saturday that the child told police that her mother used a cigarette to burn her. Smith's daughter told authorities that her mother burned her because she was angered that the girl tripped and fell.'

Woman charged in murder attempt on husband that kills their kids instead

anthony · 22 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GAINESVILLE, Ga. — An Army wife accused of setting her apartment on fire botched an attempt to collect on her husband's $400,000 insurance policy when he survived and her two children died instead, a federal prosecutor said.

Billi Jo Smallwood, 35, was denied bond at a Friday hearing in northeast Georgia, where she appeared on federal charges of damaging government property by fire.

"She set fire to her own home in hopes of killing her husband and wound up killing her kids," Assistant U.S. Attorney Stephanie Gabay-Smith said.
...
Smallwood's family members stood and identified themselves to the judge in support of her release on bond. Her husband, accompanied by friends in Army uniforms, stood and said, "My name is Wayne Smallwood and I am here to support my wife."'

Britain Considering 'Name and Shame' Plan For Men Who Visit Prostitutes

anthony · 22 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LONDON — The British government wants to make it illegal to pay for sex and is considering a plan to "name and shame" men who visit prostitutes — a move critics say would turn back the clock to Victorian times.
...
The proposal would make paying for sex illegal and carry additional penalties for men who have sex with women forced into prostitution, the Home Office said. But it declined to give details on fines and other penalties before the formal announcement.

Men who frequent prostitutes could also be identified publicly, as they are in the London borough of Lambeth, where police send warning letters to the homes of drivers whose license plate numbers are caught on closed-circuit television picking up street walkers.

In addition, the plan would make it a criminal offense to pay for sex with a prostitute "controlled for another person's gain" and could bring rape charges against men who knowingly paid for sex with a woman forced to work as a prostitute.'

'It’s time to solve The Boy Problem in our schools'

anthony · 23 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Among college administrators it’s known as The Boy Problem.

But it’s a problem that starts in grade schools, high schools and homes. Boys lag behind girls in being prepared to apply for and be accepted to college.

While American colleges were roughly balanced between male and female students a generation ago, now most schools have more women than men. Some have many more.
...
Why is that a problem? Administrators think that once a school reaches that point it becomes less attractive to both male and female applicants. As one admissions director told U.S. News & World Report last year: “Even women who enroll … expect to see men on campus. It’s not the College of Mary and Mary; it’s the College of William and Mary.”
...
Which leads to the bigger questions: Why aren’t boys succeeding in school at the same level as girls, and what are we going to do about it?'

California Boy Is Last Teen Dropped Off After Safe-Haven Law Gets Age Limit

anthony · 23 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kimball, Neb. — A 14-year-old California boy became the last teenager reported abandoned under Nebraska's safe-haven law, which was just changed to limit such drop-off to infants 30-days-old or less.

The boy, from Yolo County, Calif., was left at the Kimball County Hospital late Friday afternoon by his mother, who drove to Nebraska.
...
Nebraska lawmakers changed the law Friday, which previously did not have an age limit for drop-offs. The change took effect Saturday.'

Girl who made false rape claim won't face charges

anthony · 24 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SPOKANE - The girl who wrongly accused Ferris high school boy's basketball coach Don Van Lierop of rape is not expected to face any criminal charges, according to Spokane Police.

Detectives exonerated Van Lierop Thursday afternoon, more than two-weeks after the 16-year-old girl and her mother made the accusation.

The girl's attorney admits she fabricated the whole story.
...
The girl who made the accusation is currently undergoing counseling, according to attorneys.
...
The girl no longer attends Ferris High School.'

Sydney Morning Herald op-ed defends male-bashing music videos

anthony · 24 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fair point. And if Cilmi is subverting the history of men's violence towards women, she isn't alone. Rather, she's evidence of a growing trend towards what might be termed reverse sexism or female chauvinism. Especially in advertising, where women are increasingly ogling, objectifying and victimising blokes.
...
In response, masculinists and men's libbers now argue they are the ones suffering. These days men are claiming the right to be victims too. Not that you will hear Kathy Lette crying.

"It's a man's world," says Lette, author of 10 novels about the sex war. "One hundred years since Emmeline Pankhurst tied herself to the railings and women still don't have equal pay, and we're still getting concussion hitting our heads on the glass ceiling - plus we're expected to Windex it while we're up there. Until women are treated as equals instead of sequels, we have every right to comically kneecap you in ads or song clips. And you're pathetic whinge bags if you complain about it."

I'm not complaining. As a man - albeit a man with a woman's name - Cilmi's video is not offensive. It's harmless and clever, with a mood that's more teen dress-ups than Nazi-themed sex romp. Not one of her victims looks distressed. These young men may be deprived of their liberty, but every hair is in place. That, presumably, is the main thing.
...
It's the former, a necessary step on the path to parity. For too long, men have held power at the expense of women; now, in a few corners of pop culture, this inequality has been overcorrected and replaced by an inverted inequality. In some music videos and ads, sex objects and sex subjects have traded places. As long as this inversion is both temporary and playful, I'm all for it.'

Mother charged with killing her disabled son while on bail for his alleged attempted murder

Anonymous · 24 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother has been charged with murdering her son at a care home.

The 56-year-old woman was on bail and awaiting trial for an alleged previous attempt to kill the 22-year-old, who was being treated for head injuries.

...

He had been a patient at the rehabilitation unit after being seriously injured in a road crash in September last year.

It was while Mr Inglis was seriously ill in hospital in Essex last December that the earlier alleged attempt to murder him was made.'

Female teacher accused of fracturing boy's skull

anthony · 24 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A day-care teacher was arrested Thursday after a three-month-old boy suffered a fractured skull in her care last month, Richland County deputies said.

Deidre Goff, 44, of Lollipop Lane Day Care Center on Leesburg Road, is charged with unlawful conduct toward a child.

...

If convicted of the felony, Goff faces up to 10 years in prison.

She told the infant's mother he was fussy because about 10 a.m. Oct. 13 he had hit his face on a play center used to help babies gain leg strength, deputies said.'

UK: Wife 'killed husband with knife hidden in burkha'

anthony · 24 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A newlywed wife killed her husband with a kitchen knife hidden under her burkha so that she could carry on seeing another man, a court heard today.

Mahmuda Khatun, 28, stabbed Mohammed Miah through the chest before telling a series of "brazen and persistent" lies to allay suspicion, jurors were told.

Khatun carried out the premeditated attack on her husband's 28th birthday in August last year, just 33 days after their wedding, the Old Bailey heard.'

New Zealand: Men urged to wear white ribbon against domestic violence

anthony · 24 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men are being encouraged to wear a white ribbon and take a stand against domestic violence today.

People will wear the ribbons as a sign they do not condone domestic violence and to encourage people to speak out about violent or abusive behaviour.

White Ribbon Day, started by a men's group in Canada in 1991, has now been designated by the United Nations as the official day to mark the campaign to eliminate violence against women.
...
The day has been organised by the Families Commission and more than 500,000 ribbons will be handed out. The ribbons were packaged by Rimutaka Prison inmates, with $357,000 funding supplied by eight government departments, including the Social Development Ministry, Justice Ministry and police.'

Study Says Domestic Violence Is More Common In Lesbian Relationships

anthony · 24 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, discussed by Glenn Sacks. Excerpt:

'Page Six spies saw Lohan and Ronson get into a spat outside of Citrine on West 21st Street recently, and the London Sun published details of a explosive argument this week outside Boujis in London, where Ronson was deejaying.

The paper reported "all hell broke loose" and the screaming match ended with Lohan "in tears."

The wild child sank down in tears following the 4am bust-up with DJ girlfriend Samantha Ronson.

It's not mentioned in the story's headline nor in its lead five paragraphs, but it turns out that what is portrayed as a lover's "spat" is actually a case of domestic violence.'

Rocky Mountain News: "Fathers' rights woefully ignored"

anthony · 24 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Opinion piece here. Excerpt:

'It's a sad fact that in political campaigns the truth is maligned and mud is thrown in an effort to discredit the other party. What's sadder is that this is a reality in divorce. A modern effort to discredit loving parents in the name of revenge and greed.

What defines truth? What makes truth evidence? To what extent does a court accept hearsay evidence as fact? Courts have a demonstrated bias to side with the mother. Why is this? Maybe in the days of our grandparents when mothers were the sole nurturer in the nuclear family while fathers served only as material providers - but not today. Today we see mothers stuffing newborn babies into microwaves or throwing them into dumpsters because their new boyfriend wasn't interested in someone with a child. Today we see premenopausal women leaving young ones alone at night while they relive their teenage party years. How the paternal families grieve for the loss of these children - children who they had fought for custody of and were denied because the court sided with the mother just because she was a woman. Giving birth does not make someone a mother, it makes them a donor.'

Female Teacher Gets 30 Days In Child Sex Abuse Case

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MACHIAS — A former teacher at a Lubec elementary school was sentenced Friday in Washington County Superior Court to 30 days in jail for having a sexual relationship with a 13-year-old boy.

Tina Mason, 31, of East Machias cried and sniffled in the courtroom as she pleaded no contest to charges of assault, sexual abuse of a minor and unlawful sexual touching. The victim, who is now 15 years old, showed no emotion while he sat on the other side of the courtroom with his family.

Mason sought to avoid serving time behind bars, but Justice Kevin Cuddy agreed with the prosecution's recommended sentence of 30 days in jail for Mason, who is married and has two young children.'

UK: 'Intimidating' boys put girls off science, minister says

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The new Schools minister advocates a return to single-sex education to get girls more interested in subjects like science and engineering.

In her first interview since replacing Lord Adonis in the Prime Minister's recent reshuffle, Sarah McCarthy-Fry told The Independent that she was concerned about getting more girls to opt for science and engineering at school – and thought separating the sexes for lessons in co-educational schools might be the answer.

She said: "Girls do much better in science in single-sex classes. They sometimes feel intimidated in mixed- sex classes with the boys hogging the limelight and putting their hands up to answer all the questions."

UK: Dinosaurs, science and Pompey get boys into reading

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A school has improved boys' writing abilities – by bringing in more books on subjects they get excited about.

Dinosaurs and science get a greater showing in Medina Primary School's library where boys outnumber girls.

In one class there are 21 boys to just nine girls, which has led to staff adapting their teaching style.

And with its focus on writing – particularly among boys – the Portsmouth school has been rated 'good' by watchdog Ofsted.

Headteacher Howard Payne said: 'There's an issue with boys writing nationally so we've increased our non-fiction area in the library so there are more books on things like science and dinosaurs.'

You might be a sex offender if...

BinaryShadow · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

This article lists all the insane reasons someone has been put on the sex offender list. This list needs to be removed because it is a complete waste of taxpayer resources and ruins innocent lives. Excerpt:

'One of the prevailing myths in society is that everyone on registries are all violent rapists or pedophiles. However, landing on a sex offender registry (or even the prospect of landing on the registry) is a very real threat. Over the years, I have collected some very outlandish cases which have either landed someone on the registry or have at least made them potentially subject to placement on the registry. Some are sad, some are ludicrous, others leave you questioning the laws. However, it is important to keep in mind how easily one can be caught up in the registries. Think about that next time you look at a sex offender registry.'

DART Campaign Wrap-up, two ways to promote shared parenting

Matt · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Glenn Sacks Newsletter item here. Exceprt:

'As many of you know, the anti-father Dallas domestic violence bus ads we protested come down this week (11/30). While the ads remained up a few weeks longer than we desired, overall our campaign was very successful, and I am grateful that so many of you participated.
...
Several of The Family Place's financial contributors withdrew or reduced the financial gifts they planned for the end-of-the-year giving season. I don't say this with pleasure--I would have preferred that The Family Place do the right thing from the beginning rather than lose the funding.
...
The Fatherhood Movement does not have Obama's ear and won't anytime soon, but we should still urge Obama and the Democrats to embrace Shared Parenting. To do so, click here.
...
To tell the RNC to embrace Shared Parenting, click here. Feel free to post what you told the RNC in the comments section of www.glennsacks.com. Please remember to be polite and credible.

Indiana girl sues for chance to play baseball

Matt · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - Logan Young has been playing baseball with the boys for nine years, and she and her parents don't think that should change now that she's in high school.

The 14-year-old and her family have filed a federal lawsuit over an Indiana High School Athletic Association rule that prohibits the Bloomington South freshman from trying out for the high school baseball team because she is female.

"In this day and age, a girl should have the opportunity to participate on an equal footing with the boys in high school sports and the IHSAA precludes that," Tae Sture, one of the family's attorney's, said Monday.'

Do you suppose I can try out for a spot on the local women's softball team and get a fair shake at that?

University cancels support of cystic fibrosis annual fund raiser because it “affects mainly white males” badgerb · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Read this disturbing article here. Excerpt:

'Carleton University’s Students Union’s decision not to do Shinerama next year because cystic fibrosis “affects mainly white males,” is based on misinformation, says the head of the Canadian CF Foundation.

“It’s the most common, fatal, genetic disease affecting young people in this country,” CEO Cathleen Morrison said.

“Hopefully people are making decisions based on information that is correct.”

At their monthly meeting Monday night, student councillors heard a motion to stop supporting Shinerama that included the whereas clauses that they want to be “inclusive as possible,” “support diverse communities” and that “CF has recently been revealed to affect white people and primarily men.”'

Got to love that liberal arts education.

Teacher sues city after being fired for affair with runway model student

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Her boy toy may have been a stud, but he was no student.

A Queens teacher fired for bedding a 17-year-old male model is suing to win her job back, saying she had no idea her lover boy was enrolled in high school during their affair.

Gina Salamino, 37, contends her job as a tenured second-grade teacher at Public School 121 should have been spared because Joshua Walter was so busy catwalking he never attended a single class during the 2006-07 school year.
...
Walter, now 19, met Salamino in 2002, when he was 12. He saw her again, records show, at an August 2006 party. That flirty encounter led to dates at the movies, hundreds of phone calls, nights at her Howard Beach apartment and sex.'

Utah Mother Allegedly Texts Nude Photos to Teen Boys, Follows Up With Sex

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The 40-year-old mother of a Salt Lake City-area high school student faces charges of having sex with minors in her Utah home after allegedly sending nude photos of herself to the cell phones of several teenage boys.

Kimberly Arigot of Syracuse, Utah, is accused of sending naked pictures of herself to boys in her neighborhood ranging in age from 15 to 18 years old, MyFOXUtah.com reported.

Police said the sexy texting ultimately led two boys, 15 and 17, to have sex with Arigot.
...
Arigot reportedly cooperated with police and allegedly confessed before she was released on bail earlier this week. She faces felony charges of unlawful sex and unlawful contact with minors and providing alcohol to the underage boys.'

Mother Accused Of Slashing Boys' Throats

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Less than a year after four strangers risked their lives to save Michelle Kehoe and her sons from an icy Iowa River, the mother is accused of slashing the two boys' throats and leaving them to die.

Kehoe's 2-year-old son was found dead the morning of October 27 outside the family's van, which was parked a short distance from the Hook-n-Liner pond in Littleton, Iowa.

Her 7-year-old son was injured but still alive inside the van. He was rushed to the hospital for surgery, according to the Iowa Department of Public Safety.

...

Some act on genuine psychotic delusions, as jurors determined to be the case with Texas mother Andrea Yates, who told doctors she drowned her five children because God told her to do so. Others can be motivated by selfish reasons: Susan Smith's alleged motive for killing her children was that she perceived them to be an obstacle in her relationship with her boyfriend.'

UK: Working class boys education fear

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost 80% of teenage boys from impoverished Protestant estates in Northern Ireland leave school without adequate grades, the Education minister revealed.

Those failing to obtain at least five GCSE C grades in deprived unionist areas is significantly higher than the 64% rate in disadvantaged Catholic/nationalist estates, Caitriona Ruane told the Assembly.

The Sinn Fein minister said tackling underachievement among Protestant boys would be a priority of the new Educational Skills Authority (ESA). The centralised delivery body is set to replace the five existing education boards in 2010 under plans to streamline public administration in the region.'

Study: Women Outlive Men During Lung Cancer Trials

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHICAGO, Nov. 18 -- Men involved in clinical studies of inoperable non-small-cell lung cancer appear to be at a 23% greater risk of mortality during a trial than comparable women, researchers said here.

Being a woman is a clear advantage, Corey Langer, M.D., director of thoracic oncology at the University of Pennsylvania, said at the 2008 Chicago Multidisciplinary Symposium on Thoracic Cancer.

"Across the board, independent of race or partnering status, men did worse than women," said Dr. Langer. "This is an observation that has been repeatedly observed in multiple epithelial malignancies, not just lung cancer."

Growing a 'Stash for the Fight Against Prostate Cancer

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Movember Foundation is working in conjunction with the Prostate Cancer Foundation, a 501 (c) (3) organization, sponsoring Movember. Movember (the month formerly known as November) is a charity event held during November each year.

At the start of Movember guys register a clean shaven face. The Movember participants, known as Mo Bros have the remainder of the month to grow and groom their Mo (Australian slang for mustache).

The purpose is to raise money and awareness along the way for men's health and the fight against prostate cancer.
...
Prostate cancer is the most common non-skin cancer in the U.S. with 1-in-6 American men developing the disease and more than 28,000 men dying of the disease every year.'

American Thinker: 'The Testosterone Crisis'

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In his book The Suicide of Reason Lee Harris argues that our present state of liberal democracy has led to "eliminating the alpha males from our midst, and at a dizzyingly accelerating rate." Instead of supporting and valuing testosterone's virtues we're "drugging our alpha boys with Ritalin." In addition, one could view Barack Obama's election as the triumph of yin over yang. Obama's policies promise to cast the father out of America's parks and replace him with the more "caring" and yin oriented federal government. For Lee Harris however the feminization of American men comes at an extremely high price:

> "The end of testosterone in the West alone will not culminate in the end of history, > but it may well culminate in the end of the West."

...
We can now start to understand part of Obama's appeal. Alpha males in this nation have been browbeaten in every profession, most notably in education. Indeed, the largest percentage ever of young, educated Americans in a presidential contest threw its support behind Barack Obama. In addition, whereas John Kerry received 51% of the female vote in 2004, Barack Obama garnered close to 60%. When black Americans overwhelmingly supported Obama to the tune of 90%, how much of this support was a product of race and how much was simply a product of a culture in which 70% of children are raised without fathers?

Both political parties now believe that they can garner votes by playing the yin, or compassion card. We've seen this with the Bush Administration and its heavily statist "compassionate conservatism." On the other hand, Democrats in congress thought that extending loans to unqualified borrowers was an act of compassion. An excess of yin is now causing many of our states, like California, to go broke. Despite these examples an "uncaring" America was the chief rallying cry of Barack and Michelle Obama during the recent election.'

The model of modern masculinity whose guiding force is women

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mr Obama has acknowledged in speeches and memoirs his debt to his womenfolk: they were resourceful, capable and unsinkable while the men in his life were flaky, fragile and absent.

Conflicts Mr Obama sees in his own wife have led him to promote policies supporting work-life balance. “Michelle is like a lot of women of her generation in that she has carried within herself two very powerful ideas: one, that she’s as smart as any man, on the other hand, she loves being a mother,” he has said. “We have a society that doesn’t really provide a lot of support for women in those roles. We don’t provide the kind of maternity and paternity leave that other countries do.”

UK Guardian Blog: 'Men have their uses but are rather last century'

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Technology has transformed the work place, replacing the masculine qualities of muscle, system, specialism and dictation with the feminine aptitudes of dexterity, multi-tasking and negotiation.

The emphasis within human organisation and business has moved from competition to collaboration, with a new emphasis on 'others'. This is seen in support systems, restorative justice, health and safety, and a therapy culture for victims, whether of trauma or disadvantage.

The new human narrative is creating an essentially feminine paradigm.

It is possible that the resurgence of masculinity is simply a cry of protest from a gender in decline, as it faces up to the redundancy of those qualities by which it has hitherto dominated the stage.'

UK: Court upholds woman's right not to tell father about baby

anthony · 25 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who conceived a child after a one-night stand with a colleague and hid her pregnancy from everyone has won the right to keep the birth a secret from the father.

The woman, who is now 20 and cannot be named for legal reasons, became pregnant when she was 19, but did not realise until a late stage. She told no one, shunned medical help until she went into labour, and put the girl up for adoption as soon as she was born.

In September, after an application from the local authority, a county court judge ruled that the woman's parents and the father of the child should be told. But yesterday, three appeal judges overruled him and, in a landmark judgment, agreed that the mother has "the ultimate veto" over who should be told about her child.'

Glasgow University Study: 60 percent said "it was acceptable for women to hit their husbands"

anthony · 26 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'However, there is a lack of acceptance that men, too, are increasingly becoming silent victims of domestic abuse and violence at the hands of their partners, and that there is a growing number of same-sex couples experiencing domestic violence from their partners.

...

In a recent study on emerging attitudes and patterns of domestic violence, Glasgow University found that of the 200 women surveyed, 60 percent said "it was acceptable for women to hit their husbands" while 35 percent admitted assaulting their partners and a total of 8 percent admitted to physically injuring them.

...

Owing to societal pressures and socialisation, men are less likely to talk about the abuse they suffer behind closed doors.

And not much is done to encourage men to report cases of domestic abuse, although many civil society organisations fighting domestic abuse and violence claim to represent men as well.'

Australia: Are Dads Getting A Bum Rap?

anthony · 26 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Have you noticed that more and more men, especially dads, are depicted in the media complete idiots? You know, all the ads where Dad can't think of what to cook so pulls something out of the freezer to fool his dear family, or balks at nappy changing. Sacha Molitorisz, over at the pleasingly punctuated Who's Your Daddy?, has had enough.
...
As one who has volunteered with "disadvantaged" boys for four years (in New York), one trend I have observed is that boys feel the treatment they receive in school and in society is that they are second class citizens when compared to the girls. They are punished for acts which girls are not punished for, they are treated as thugs, labelled as abusive and unable to learn, etc. I do think the popular culture portrayals of boys and men do inform and effect to some degree how these young men are treated by both teachers and administrators - who are primarily female - and their female peers.'

Domestic violence courts: dispelling myths

anthony · 26 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In their attempts to understand the purpose of this specialized Court, maybe these lawyers are confused by the pink file covers that are used by police to denote a domestic violence case; perhaps their analysis doesn't go beyond the colour pink symbolizing female.

Since the 2007 inception of this specialized court, many lawyers have repeated, sometimes indignantly, some version of the myth that its very existence means that male perpetrators have been stripped of their Charter rights and are presumed guilty before they even stand before the Judge.

I have heard it said it's impossible for an accused to have a fair trial in Provincial Court -- Domestic Violence with all of those biased feminists running the show and trying to prove some point.'

Op-ed: Men are getting shortchanged

anthony · 26 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month where there is a lot of publicity including TV spots, marches, newspaper ads, pink ribbons, pink T-shirts, and all sorts of activity to highlight this form of cancer - and to raise millions of dollars in the fight for its detection and cure. This highly commendable effort illustrates the concern of our nation for those who are inflicted with this deadly, gender specific disease. (There are a very few, very rare, cases in which males develop breast cancer, but Breast Cancer Awareness Month addresses only breast cancer in women.)

OK, so what does this have to do with these divisions - the separation into different groups or categories? Simple - men also suffer from a deadly, gender specific disease - it's prostate cancer. So some men are now starting to ask, "Where's prostate cancer awareness month - or week, or even day? Where's a postage stamp to raise money for prostate cancer research - the breast cancer awareness one raised over $50 million? Where are the marches, the T-shirts, the TV spots? In short, why doesn't anyone care about the guys?"

DV queen asserts: A man having a good time at a party is a domestic abuser

anthony · 26 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

And Sandra, 56, reckons she can spot a male abuser within seconds.

'She said: “After leaving a party, I sometimes reflect on the people and tell my husband if I think there was an abuser in our midst.

But how can she be so sure she has a monster in her sights?

She said: “Men with a tendency to abuse women are usually the life and soul of the party — the outgoing man who loves to be the centre of attention.

“Often their partner will change their behaviour in front of them and become submissive and timid.

“These are early warning signs. Men who abuse women can alternate quickly between rage and charm.'

Is he breathing? He's a cheater!

Matt · 26 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

MSN strikes again! Check your pulse, fellas. If you have one, you are a cheater, 100% for certain. Read all about it here. Excerpt:

'When you're dating a guy, you can forgive him for some indiscretions, but it's nearly impossible to turn the other cheek if he strays. Well, Cosmo did some investigating to ascertain the traits that may make men more likely to cheat, and some of our findings were surprising eye-openers.

But before you freak, realize that just because he possesses characteristics of a mangy scoundrel doesn't mean he's actually cheating on you. "You have to listen to your gut as well as read the clues," says Gary Aumiller, Ph.D., a psychologist and coauthor of "Red Flags! How to Know When You're Dating a Loser." Run through this list of wandering-eye warning signs to see if your partner is predisposed to prowl... and find out how you can deal.'

Jury convicts mom of lesser charges in online hoax

Matt · 26 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOS ANGELES (AP) - A jury has convicted a Missouri woman of three minor offenses for her role in an Internet hoax that apparently drove a 13-year-old girl to suicide.
...
However, the jury found defendant Lori Drew guilty of three counts of the lesser offense of accessing a computer without authorization. Each count is punishable by up to one year in prison and a $100,000 fine.

The jurors could not reach a verdict on a conspiracy count. The disposition of that count was not immediately clear.

Prosecutors said Drew violated the MySpace terms of service by conspiring with her young daughter and a business assistant to create a fictitious profile of a teen boy on the MySpace social networking site to harass Megan.'

Women From Iraq Suicide Bombing Network Surrender

anthony · 27 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. If I was a betting man, I would say these women spend six months at Guantanamo and receive counseling. Excerpt:

'BAGHDAD — Eighteen young women purportedly belonging to a suicide bombing network in northern Iraq surrendered to U.S. forces on Wednesday, a top U.S. commander said.

The number of bombings carried out by women has spiked this year even as overall violence has declined, and Hertling said Wednesday's surrender would deal a significant blow to recruitment efforts.

U.S. military figures show 31 attacks by 35 female suicide bombers so far this year, compared with eight in 2007.

Hertling said the cleric approached U.S. forces earlier this week to tell them about a group of 21 women who were part of a suicide bombing network. On Wednesday, 18 of the women surrendered and signed a form promising not to conduct attacks as part of a reconciliation program, Hertling said.

"This will significantly affect at least part of the female network cells in the northern area of operations," he told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.'

UK: Lesbian soldier gets £200,000 payout in harassment case

Anonymous · 27 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A lesbian soldier last night celebrated winning almost £200,000 compensation after being subjected to a lewd campaign of sexual harassment by a male sergeant.
...
Her award easily outstrips the £161,000 offered to double amputee Marine Ben McBean, who was hailed a 'real hero' by Prince Harry. Her compensation was branded 'obscene' by one Forces organisation.

Shaun Rusling, of the National Gulf Veterans' and Families Association, added: 'We don't agree with anyone being picked on but it is just Miss Fletcher's feelings that have been hurt. She will get better. You do not get better when your arms and legs have been blown off.'"

UK: Mother of missing girl 'went shopping'

Matt · 28 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mother of Shannon Matthews went out shopping for a satellite navigation system on the night her daughter was reported missing, it emerged in court.

Karen Matthews admitted shopping in a supermarket, but denied buying beer hours after her daughter failed to come home, Leeds Crown Court heard.

Ms Matthews, 33, and Michael Donovan, 41, deny kidnap and false imprisonment over Shannon's disappearance.
...
Mark Goode said he was delivering a bed to Moorside Place and heard Mrs Meehan say: "Don't say nowt, just keep your mouth shut. They'll never, ever find out."

Mr Goode said Mrs Meehan looked like she was "panicking".

The prosecution alleges Mr Donovan kept Shannon drugged and imprisoned in his flat as part of a plan he and Ms Matthews had to claim £50,000 in reward money.

The trial continues.'

Teacher In Sex-With-Student Case Gets House Arrest, Probation

anthony · 28 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'KISSIMMEE, Fla. -- A 32-year-old Central Florida teacher who admitted to having sex in her home with a 16-year-old boy who was her former student was sentenced on Monday to two years of house arrest and eight years of probation.
...
"Somehow it's become OK for a female teacher to have sex with a child with no punishment, while a man would go to prison," Assistant State Attorney Amy Chandler said.

The judge said Joel's remorse and the fact that the incidents were isolated factored into his decision.'

UK: Female baby-rapist set free after 30 months

Matt · 28 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A MONSTER who helped rape a 12-week-old baby walked free from jail yesterday after serving just 30 months of a five-year sentence.

Depraved Tanya French, 21, sparked outrage in 2006 after it emerged she attacked the tot while lover Alan Webster filmed it on video.

She and Webster, 42, were both jailed for raping the baby while babysitting in Hatfield, Herts.

A family source said last night: “The idea of French being out and able to rebuild her life is sickening. Angry does not even begin to describe how we feel.

...

Last night the Ministry of Justice insisted the law required them to release French because she had served half her sentence.'

NY Examiner: Of royalty, male heirs, and the almighty penis

anthony · 28 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For most of history the penis has been seen as the chief qualification to succeed to a throne, become world leader, CEO, government bigwig, and religious leader. Until very recently, the same was true of armed soldiers, the exception in history being that of the Amazons, a fierce tribe of warriors with vaginas who, it has been said, liked to hand any male enemy his genitalia in a wooden bowl.
...
No, hating men and their anatomy is not my problem. My problem is with society at large, which seems to think that, even if a person is an incompetent cretin, if that person has the right appendage, he deserves all the marbles in the game of life.
...
History is full of people with penises who totally screwed up the world.'

"The Economy and Child Support"

anthony · 29 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A slumping economy affects our lives in many ways And this week's question comes from someone who says he's doing his best to stay out of jail and support his kids.

Marshall Coe of Monticello wants to know what happens to your child support payments when you lose your job because of the economy.

Marshall's not alone in this situation. Forty-two percent of parents who pay child support are behind on their payments according to the Office of Child Support Services. Not all because of the economy, but the office says its something they're seeing more of.'

Review: Garcia's 'Decline of Men' paints bleak picture for those with Y chromosomes

anthony · 29 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In his new book, the felicitously named journalist Guy Garcia has decided to act as ambassador from Mars. The news from Planet Dude ain't good: Women now outnumber men at American universities. In cities such as New York, Dallas, Los Angeles and Chicago, women outstrip men in earning power. Men's health is in decline, compared with women's; women are buying guns; more women than men initiate divorce; more women than men voted in the presidential election. Women are even taking over pornography.

The Decline of Men is a jeremiad (unkind persons might call it an extended whine) on the state of maleness in the 21st century. Once men ruled all they surveyed: women, children, livestock, land. Male genitalia conferred power, at least over most other mammals in the immediate vicinity. Life was good. Everybody had a well-defined, biologically driven role to play. Then things went weird: Women started demanding their rights. Worse, they wanted men to talk to them!

...
Garcia wants us to understand that men are people, too. Fair enough. But until I look up and see women making the same wage for the same work as men, a woman running the Army, a Congress with more than a paltry 20 percent female membership, more women running Fortune 500 companies and top universities, I just can't seem to get too worked up about men's searching around for a new way of being. Man up, and get over it.'

Huffington Post: Female Infidels Catch Up... And Invade Your Home?

anthony · 29 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Don't look now, but there is someone, someone nearby, waiting to steal (or at least borrow) your spouse from right under your nose.

What is the good news? Or even just the new news? Turns out infidelity is an equal opportunity employer; women are turning to men who don't belong to them in record numbers according to a poll by Women's Health magazine in the November issue. That's right, ladies. If the stats are to be believed, your sisters don't consider that cutie with the ring-finger tan line so off-limits.

The study found that 46.3% of women admitted they'd been involved with a "taken" man. Of those, one in four said he was the boyfriend or husband of someone she knew; 40% stated it bothered them, but not enough to put on the brakes, and 27% said that commitment was his responsibility, not hers.'

Global food crisis worse for women and girls?

anthony · 29 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is little prospect of returning to the cheap food regimes that characterized the world prior to 2005 anytime in the foreseeable future. So far, the food crisis has pushed an estimated 75 million people into chronic hunger since 2005.

Women and children, particularly girls, have been hardest hit by the food crisis. In part, this disproportionate impact is because women in poor rural communities have less access to resources, transportation, and communication networks. Any effective resolution to the food crisis - and to reinforce food security more generally - must incorporate an understanding of this differential impact on gender roles.
...
Women and children (especially girls) are more vulnerable to food, fuel, and fertilizer price increases, and to rural poverty generally, than men. This is, of course, not intended as gender one-upmanship; men also experience hardship caused by the marginalization of rural societies.'

"What's worse than the mommy wars?"

anthony · 29 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In divorce, that decision is often the source of the most mean-spirited, painful fight. If you thought the mommy wars were bad, this related war - call it the spousal support slaughter - is worse.

Some men receive spousal support, of course, but in the vast majority of cases - at least 99 per cent, family lawyers say - women do. As the most contentious issue in divorce, it is where the choices that people and their former spouses made about how to manage their family are addressed - and not always fairly.

...

But ironically, what is a victory for women's choices and an important effort to address the feminization of poverty post-divorce is also, in many cases, a harmful disincentive for women to find identity, meaning and self-sufficiency through work.

It is both an advancement and a regression, if taken too far, for women's issues. But few in the legal community are willing to publicly discuss the politically sensitive topic.

"The mindset among the judiciary is that women need to be sheltered and helped," explains one family lawyer, who asked for anonymity. "They are afraid of appearing heartless if they don't side with women."'

False Rape Accusation Associated With Near Fatal Beating Of Black Man

anthony · 29 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An 18-year-old woman who twice falsely reported being raped by an unknown black man pleaded guilty to mischief Thursday.

April Ibbotson, of no fixed address, pleaded guilty to mischief by misleading police to believe she had been sexually assaulted June 21 and again July 24, both times in Owen Sound.

The claims prompted a week's worth of wasted investigative time, assistant Crown attorney Michael Martin said. The allegations also came within weeks of the near-fatal beating and stabbing of a black man wrongly accused of rape in downtown Owen Sound in late July.

...
Ibbotson's first false accusation occurred June 21, Martin said. She contacted Owen Sound police at 11 p. m. and reported that she had been approached from behind along 3rd Avenue West and was dragged near a fence at about 9:30 p. m. that night. She alleged her underpants were taken down and she was sexually assaulted.

She was examined in hospital. Police established a crime scene in the area where she said she'd been raped by a black man 6'3" or 6'4" inches tall, with a moustache and goatee. Police canvassed people in the area around 13th Street West and 3rd and 4th avenues.'

Faludi on post-9/11 feminism

anthony · 29 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and author Susan Faludi examined the issue of modern feminism yesterday at the Moritz College of Law.
...
Faludi started her lecture by acknowledging that the feminist movement has made progress by putting more women into higher education and specialty fields like medicine. According to Faludi, women comprise 60 percent of undergraduate and master's degree enrollment.

"You always hears about the firefighters and policemen after 9/11, but you never heard anything about the nurses who were taking care of all the injured people." Berberich said. "That kind of sexism is very subtle and subversive.
...
"Women's issues aren't just women's issues; they're society's issues," Faludi said. "The success of any political realignment in the U.S. has to be based on the success of the feminist agenda."'

Editoral Response: Outdated take on boys', girls' differences

anthony · 29 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For a variety of reasons, girls have long since surpassed boys as academic leaders in most schools. It is commonplace today to see eight of the top 10 grade point averages at graduation held by girls. Too many boys have concluded that they don't stand much of a chance on a day-to-day basis in school, and have chosen to be docile, disengaged, and perfectly comfortable with their slacker status. Single-sex schools are a promising solution for a pendulum that often swings too far in both directions.
...
I WAS glad to see the Globe endorse a legislative initiative to repeal state laws that stand in the way of establishing single-sex public schools. As the headmaster of the oldest boys' school in the country, the Roxbury Latin School (founded in 1645), I can speak from experience personally and institutionally'

Article re boys competing on girls' teams

anthony · 29 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Everyone has heard the argument that females should be allowed to play on male sports teams. Whether it is in youth leagues, high school or college, females have pushed the envelope and have played on all male football and wrestling teams. They have also consistently played on predominantly male Little League and youth soccer teams.

What is rarely talked about — and usually welcomes a rash of criticism — is male athletes participating on female teams. Outside of family members and teammates, there is little to no support for the male athletes.
...
“It’s really a double-edged sword,” said Taconic Hills volleyball coach Alan Eggleston. “The girls that I coached liked beating the boys but it was very hard for me to justify to them why the boys could play on a girls team.”'

Man stabbed to death in domestic dispute

anthony · 30 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GRIFFIN, Ga. -- A domestic dispute in Griffin left one man dead and a woman behind bars.
...
When officers arrived at the scene, they found Childs dead on the floor of an apartment.
...
Butler was at the Spalding County Jail on Saturday morning. She was charged with murder.'

Woman in Metrodome sex incident now claims she was victim

Evil White Male... · 30 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MINNEAPOLIS - While police say a high-profile indecent conduct case in the Minneapolis Metrodome Saturday is closed, a Carroll woman involved in it told the Daily Times Herald she believes she was a victim of foul play rather than a willing collaborator.

...

Feldman acknowledged drinking heavily before the game and says she doesn't remember being in the bathroom.

"I would never ever do that," Feldman said. "My kids are my life. I go to church every Sunday."

Information obtained in police reports and during an interview with University of Minnesota Police Chief Greg Hestness revealed no suggestion or evidence that the incident was anything but consensual on the part of both Walsh and Feldman.

...

When asked to respond to Feldman's suggestion that she is a victim of a crime, Hestness said: "All I can say is the actions went on for some period of time with many witnesses on hand and no one reported either party was objecting."'

Edmonton foster mother found guilty of manslaughter

Scottie · 30 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

In itself, this story isn't much of anything new (at least, to us). Funny though, that it appears to be the only main headline that isn't open to comments on the CBC forum. Also funny is that all related stories appear to have been closed for comment. Methinks the editors at CBC need an earful. Excerpt:

'An Edmonton foster mother covered her mouth and broke down in tears after a jury found her guilty of manslaughter in the death of a three-year-old boy in her care.
...
The 34-year-old woman, who cannot be identified, was charged with second-degree murder after the child died in January 2007 of brain injuries. She was, however, found guilty of the lesser charge of manslaughter.

The Crown argued during her trial that she abused the child repeatedly in the month leading up to his death.'

NY Times: Enlisting the Aid of Hairstylists as Sentinels for Domestic Abuse

anthony · 30 November 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The privileged, often therapeutic relationship between hairdressers and clients has long been the subject of magazine articles and movies. A growing movement in New York and across the nation tries to harness that bond to identify and prevent domestic violence, a pervasive problem that victims are often too ashamed to reveal to law enforcement or other public officials.
...
The initiative joins similar efforts that have been sprouting across the nation; perhaps the best known, called Cut It Out and based in Chicago, has trained 40,000 salon workers in all 50 states to recognize signs of domestic abuse. In the past few months, the Cut It Out program was also adopted by the Empire Education Group, which has 87 cosmetology schools, and endorsed by the American Association of Cosmetology Schools, the trade organization representing another 800 schools.'

Police: Freeport woman stabbed boyfriend in NYC nightclub

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Freeport woman was charged with attempted murder after she stabbed her boyfriend in the neck with a broken beer glass at a Manhattan nightclub early Sunday morning, according to New York City police.

The boyfriend, 22, was admitted to Bellevue Hospital Center in critical condition. Police withheld his name.
...
An owner of the nightclub, Ariel Palitz, said the couple were arguing near the coat-check area when the woman hit her boyfriend in the neck with a pint beer glass. It wasn't clear whether she broke the Stella Artois beer glass first, then slashed him, or whether the glass shattered from the force of hitting his neck, Palitz said.'

CBC Commentary On Cancellation Of Cystic Fibrosis Annual Fund Raiser

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most readers will already have choked on the revelation that the worthies on the student union wanted to give up on cystic fibrosis, after nearly a quarter of a century of Carleton's supporting the charity, because - in homage to that stern god, Diversity - the disease wasn't "inclusive" enough.

The telling phrase in the motion, a monument to the caring and scrupulous intellect of that most delicate of mechanisms - the politically correct sensibility - was that "cystic fibrosis has been recently revealed to only affect white people, and primarily men."

...
What is finally interesting about the episode is that it's almost a casebook example of how political correctness, the attempt to purge every thought, word, or deed of its ideological impurities, almost always ends up like the fabled serpent that devours its own tail. Of committing greater sins than the ones it seeks to proscribe.

In the effort to be purer than the pure, the poor innocents at Carleton demean a fine charity, offend its many victims and embarrass their university. In pursuit of the ignis fatuus, the foolish fire, of diversity at all costs, they wander into a great wilderness of bad taste and offence. Much like their equally risible brethren at Queen's, with their grotesque innovation of "conversation monitors" or "dialogue facilitators" whose goal is to purge the campus of every trace, every scintilla of the dreaded "homophobic, sexist, racist" trifecta.'

Selecting a New Secretary of State – Does Being a White Male Disqualify You Automatically?

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Have we gone so far in being Politically Correct that White and Male are now practically disqualifications for serving as Secretary of State?
...
By the time the next Secretary is installed, it will have been 12 years and the tenures of three Secretaries of State since the last white male held the position. With each succeeding secretary, the incumbent president has attempted to "prove" something--to deliver a politico-social "message" about the United States, about U.S. foreign policy, about representative-inclusiveness. Thus we have had the "first" woman; the "first" African-American; the "first" African-American woman.
...
Likewise, even political partisans will admit that our two most effective Secretaries of State in the past generation have been the pale males, George Shultz and James Baker. Secretary Shultz maneuvered with Soviet interlocutors to lead seminal bilateral arms control agreements during the closing years of the Cold War. Secretary Baker through guile and inducements assembled a massive military coalition under a UN mandate to reverse Iraqi aggression in Kuwait.'

UK: 'Why women don't see the funny side of their mothers-in-law'

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A study of hundreds of families has found that mothers are far more likely to feud with a daughter-in-law than a son-in-law.

Nearly two-thirds of daughters-in-law accused their husband's mother of 'unreasonably jealous maternal love'.

A similar proportion of mothers-in-law complained they had been isolated and excluded by a female addition to the family.

...

She said: 'As they struggle to achieve the same position in the family as primary woman, each tries to establish or protect their status, each feels threatened by the other.

'Mother-in-law and daughter-in-law conflict often emerges from an expectation that each is criticising or undermining the other. But this mutual unease may have less to do with actual attitudes and far more to do with persistent female norms that few of us manage to shake off completely.'"

Positive Update: California Domestic Violence Ruling

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Programs that receive state funding to help victims of domestic violence must provide equal services to men and women, under a state appeals court decision that took effect this month.
...
"We applaud the ruling," said Protima Pandey, a board member for San Bernardino's Option House, which provides services including emergency housing, transitional housing, counseling and assistance with getting a restraining order.

...
"Most of the men who came to us didn't come because they were afraid for their life or feared being put in a hospital," Evey said. "Their fear was abuse against the children."
...
Web sites for agencies and organizations that offer services to domestic violence victims predominantly feature photos of women and their children.

A Web page with information about spousal abuse on the California attorney general's Web site refers to "she" and "her" exclusively.

"I think it's absolutely outrageous that they stigmatize male victims that way," Angelucci said. "I guess I shouldn't be surprised, but I am because I thought things were changing."'

New War Memorial Will Only Honor Female Veterans

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A group is seeking $500,000 in donations to build a unique park at the Fort Douglas Military Museum in honor of female veterans.

Utah Military Veterans Advisory Committee chairwoman Su Richards said several women in her group came up with the idea because they felt females needed a memorial of their own.

"They were getting the respect but not the honor," said Richards, a research archivist at the museum. "As near as I can tell, there are very few memorials for women that have bronzes."

Sculptor Jerime Hooley will create two life-sized bronze sculptures. One will feature four women in different period uniforms running across a map of the United States. A second piece will depict a World War II nurse and a "woman warrior" lacing up her combat boots, Richards said. Workers will also build a gazebo for the memorial.'

Australia: Mens ambassador debates depression suicide link

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Blaming male suicide on mental health issues and depression is “too simplistic”, says one of the nation’s new men’s health ambassadors.

Societal factors such as job loss or relationship failure also play a major role and should not be overlooked in efforts to curb the nation’s suicide rate, says Sydney-based Professor John Macdonald.

...

“It’s often a combination of social factors, not initially mental health problems, which cause five men a day in Australia to kill themselves,” Mr Macdonald said in Sydney today.

“However, strangely, little research to date has been conducted on the role social factors, such as separation from children and partners and unemployment may have in determining suicide risk.”'

Canada Free Press: 'The Return Of The Girly Men'

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The new improved Girly Men are marching, (mincing) in lockstep in front of anyone who will watch, patting themselves on the back for having ‘evolved’. These men have swallowed whole the feminist mantra that This Is What Women Want. A new, sensitive man. A man not afraid of feelings, a man in touch with his inner self who has the, yes, the raw courage, to shed the shackles (whew) of masculinity.
...
Nail polish and hair spray will become the new weapons in the battle of the sexes. And millions of men are rushing to re-invent themselves in the new, socially ordained and politically acceptable way. They have become ‘empowered’. Metrosexuals are the new flavor of the day.
...
Girly Men have claimed the moral high ground and traditional methods of male behavior are to be considered déclassé. Feelings trump facts, intentions trump outcomes and tears trump fists. Men have evolved to a higher plane and they’re loving it.

So are our enemies.'

National Post: Price of free expression

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There have been a number of cases on university campuses of late in which it appears that political correctness is trumping free expression --and even common sense.

The Carleton University Students' Association voted to drop giving money to a cystic fibrosis charity because the disease "has been recently revealed to only affect white people, and primarily men." Under a barrage of criticism, the student council reinstated the charity as a beneficiary.

At Queen's University, in Kingston, Ont., the school administration hired six students whose jobs as "dialogue facilitators" involves intervening in conversations among students encourage discussion of such social justice issues as race, ethnicity, gender and sexual orientation. (The program is now being subject to early review.)'

Carleton students petition to impeach union president over cystic fibrosis gaffe

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Embarrassed Carleton students are getting closer to ousting the members of their student council responsible for a cystic fibrosis gaffe that garnered national attention.

Frustrated by their student council's recent decision to drop a cystic fibrosis charity as the beneficiary of its annual Shinearama fundraiser because the disease "has been recently revealed to only affect white people, and primarily men," Carleton students are attempting to clear their school's name with a petition to impeach their union president ...
CUSA president Brittany Smyth said she was "very sorry for the confusion" and stated that an emergency meeting of the association's council is planned for next Monday evening and she'll be personally trying to rescind a decision to pull CUSA support for the annual "Shinerama" fundraiser.

But despite CUSA's efforts to backtrack on the controversial decision, a student movement has emerged to impeach Ms. Smyth and councillor Donnie Northrup, the science councillor who wrote the motion.'

It's official: Hillary Clinton on deck (SoS)

Matt · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. S.O.S. indeed! Excerpt:

'Obama introduced Clinton first, saying of his former presidential rival, "She possesses an extraordinary intelligence and toughness, and a remarkable work ethic. ... She is an American of tremendous stature who will have my complete confidence, who knows many of the world's leaders, who will command respect in every capital, and who will clearly have the ability to advance our interests around the world."

Clinton will give up her seat as a senator from New York to join the Obama Cabinet. Her appointment was preceded by lengthy negotiations involving her husband, the former president, whose international business connections posed potential conflicts of interests.'

Of course the Senate has to confirm her first. Undoubtedly they will do so. I would be very surprised indeed if they didn't.

Woman arrested in man’s shooting death

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Timonium woman was arrested Thanksgiving Day and charged with first-degree murder in the shooting death of Timothy Lekin, also of Timonium.

Keri Schneider, 36, of Thornhill Road, is being held without bail at the Baltimore County Detention Center, in Towson.

Police responded to a call at 3:05 p.m. Nov. 26 about a man slumped over the steering wheel of his car at the end of Sparks Valley Road, in Sparks, said a police spokesman, Cpl. Mike Hill.

Police found Lekin, 35, of Cormer Court, had been shot and was dead in his car. Evidence at the scene linked Schneider to the killing, police said. She had been having a relationship with the victim, police said.'

Woman charged with murder, arson

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 63-year-old Inkster woman will face murder charges stemming from an arson at the home of her ex-boyfriend which claimed the life of his new girlfriend.

The fire, at 28000 block of Rosewood Street, claimed the life of homeowner Larry Lee's 52-year-old girlfriend, Denise Robinson, who was overcome by smoke in the upstairs bedroom, according to reports.

Zilpah Ann Warmack was charged with one count of felony murder, one count of assault with intent to murder, and an additional count of arson Wednesday at the 22nd District Court in Inkster.

The felony murder charge carries a mandatory life sentence behind bars, the assault charge carries a penalty of any number of years in prison up to life, and arson is punishable by 20 years in prison.'

Grant headlines Men’s Health Night

anthony · 1 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The four "poster boys" for the first Men's Night haven't forgotten the lessons they learned from the February 2008 event. While their experiences didn't drastically change their lives, they did have a lasting impact and spur them to be more health-conscious.

The four — Buzz Lundeen, Joel Myhre, Rick Schara and Mick Siems — agreed in December 2007 to go public with a healthy competition to promote Men's Night, an evening of speakers and information focused on men's health....
The success of the event — close to 300 men braved the blustery weather on a cold February night to attend — inspired organizers to make plans for the 2009 Men's Night. It's scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 26, on the Fergus Falls campus of Minnesota State Community and Technical College.
...
Siems, the community health outreach manager for Lake Region Healthcare and organizer for Men's Night, said the keynote speaker will be Bud Grant, former coach of the Minnesota Vikings and a well-known outdoor enthusiast.'

Teen Must Register As Sex Offender For Life After Having Sex With Girlfriend - Please sign Petition

anthony · 2 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TULSA, OK -- An Oklahoma teenager is swept up in laws aimed at protecting kids from child predators. He must register as a sex offender for life, as the worst level offender, after having a sex with his girlfriend, who said she was his age, 16. Sex between teenagers is no longer just a moral issue, it's a legal one.
...
But, the district attorney charged Ricky as an adult for two counts of felony sex abuse of a child. He was facing 25 years in prison, so he pleaded guilty and got a deferred sentence, which means it would expunged off his record.
...
Ricky's record was expunged last month, but Oklahoma won't take him off the registry.'

The petition in support of changing the current laws is at http://rickyslife.com/. Please sign!

It is a call for legislative action to change the laws that have done such great harm to Ricky and others like him. When we unite in encouraging our legislators to act responsibly to correct these injustices, we pay the just price for our freedom.

Please also share this petition by email with 10 or more people. THIS IS FAR MORE IMPORTANT THAN SIGNING IT. If each of us shares it with enough people to get more than one person to sign it, it will sweep the nation.

Michelle Malkin, Glenn Reynolds Hold up Our DART Campaign as a Model for 21st Century Activism

anthony · 2 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Our Campaign Protesting Father-Bashing Domestic Violence Ads was recently praised on PJTV by two prominent commentators--Michelle Malkin and Glenn Reynolds.

Malkin is a syndicated columnist whose columns appear in nearly 200 newspapers, the author of three books, and a frequent TV and radio commentator.

Reynolds' blog, www.Instapundit.com, is perhaps the most-read political blog in the US, and he is an author and frequent TV commentator.'

"Boys were found to lie and steal more than girls"

Matt · 2 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'American teenagers lie, steal and cheat more at "alarming rates," a study of nearly 30,000 high school students concluded Monday.
...
In its 2008 Report Card on the Ethics of American Youth, the Los Angeles-based organization said the teenagers' responses to questions about lying, stealing and cheating "reveals entrenched habits of dishonesty for the workforce of the future."

Boys were found to lie and steal more than girls.
...
"As bad as these numbers are, it appears they understate the level of dishonesty exhibited by America's youth," the study warned, noting than more than a fourth of the students (26 percent) admitted they had lied on at least one or two of the survey questions.'

Arizona Baby Sitter Arrested for Leaving Children Alone to Drink

patriotsofamerica · 2 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHOENIX — A Mesa baby sitter has been arrested and accused by Mesa police of leaving two children home alone while she went out drinking.

The children's mother told police her boyfriend's sister, 18-year-old Synjan Mitchell, was baby-sitting her 5-month-old daughter and 21-month-old son Wednesday.

The mother told police she came home and found the front door of her apartment open.

The mother says she found loud music playing, beer cans scattered on the floor and her two children home alone.'

Yeah, women are really the responsible ones...not! I bet this woman/baby sitter claims some kind of victimhood for her actions.

20/20: The Age of Consent: When Young Love Is a Sex Crime

anthony · 2 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Twelve years ago, Frank Rodriguez pleaded guilty to sexually assaulting a child.

Faced with two to 20 years in prison on the charge, he signed a plea bargain that gave him seven years probation. He was told he must never be near children. That meant he couldn't be any place where children gather, like playgrounds or parks, which made it tough to find work.
...
Rodriguez completed his seven years' probation without another violation, but he will forever be on the Texas sex offender registry. And what was the nature of the sex crime he committed? Well, when he was 19, Frank had sex with his 15 year-old girlfriend, Nikki Prescott, at her suggestion.

"It was my idea," she said. "I would say I pushed it more."'

ABC News Video: Age of Consent: Double Standard?

"Frustrated mom makes son wear humiliating sign in public"

Matt · 2 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Watch how the "reporters" trip over themselves to side with that "poor mom". Would they have done so had she done this to a daughter?

Teens Charged In Nursing Home Abuse

Matt · 2 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DECEMBER 2--A group of teenagers working at a Minnesota nursing home abused and sexually humiliated elderly residents suffering from Alzheimer's disease and dementia, prosecutors allege. The six young female caregivers were named yesterday in criminal complaints charging them with a variety of cruel behavior at the Good Samaritan Society nursing home in Albert Lea, a city in southern Minnesota.'

Not unrelatedly, I suppose: 1 in 5 young Americans has personality disorder

School club looks to re-engage boys In math and science

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The two Heritage High School science clubs are in head-to-head competition with their NASA challenge experiments. They're also trying to outdo each other with entries for a coming science fair.

Members of the fledgling girls-only STARS predict that they'll mop up.

The message back from Men of Brilliance: Bring it on.

Four years ago, neither club existed. Men of Brilliance — MOB — was created first, born of concern for male students who were falling behind in their math and science classes, Ouellette said.
...
"It's no secret that males, especially socioeconomically disadvantaged males, are at the bottom of the ladder," Ouellette said. "The girls aren't. We've pounded it into the girls that they are smart about science and math, but what did we do in the process? We ignored the males. This is a way to improve the situation."'

Poll ignores economy's impact on men's health

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A faltering economy is taking a toll not only on women's wallets but on their health as well, a new survey finds.

Women are cutting back on health care due to costs, according to a Harris Interactive poll released Tuesday by the National Women's Health Resource Center, part of the U.S. Department.
...
Almost half the women failed to seek medical care in the year before the survey, citing health care costs. They reported skimping on doctor visits, recommended medical procedures and medication, both for themselves and for family members.Cultural differences emerged, with 58 percent of Hispanic women reporting they skipped health care, compared to 43 percent of white women and 42 percent of black women.On the brighter side: Women seem to be coming to terms with aging, looking on it as an adventure or opportunity versus a struggle. To age well, many are taking action, such as exercising, eating a healthy diet, and not smoking.Offered a list of celebrities over 50 as role models for aging, the women most admired Tina Turner, followed by Sophia Loren and Diane Keaton. They liked the fact that Turner has stayed active as she has grown older, remaining physically fit with a good attitude about aging.'

No special deals for women, commission says

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ladies may still be welcome, but only if they pay full freight.

That's what the Nevada Equal Rights Commission told a Las Vegas gym that offered free enrollment to women only.
...
The floodgates of litigation have opened," said Todd Phillips, who instigated the case against Las Vegas Athletic Clubs in August 2007.

Phillips, a self-described "liberal civil rights attorney," says he intends to continue pressing the matter until sex-based pricing is a thing of the past in Nevada.

He objected to the club's discriminatory pricing policy as well as separate workout facilities it reserved for women only.

"If you allow a service to women, whatever it is you have to allow it for men," said Phillips.'

Woman admits fabricating abduction, rape allegations

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HOUMA – The 24-year-old Raceland woman who told police she was abducted from a parking lot and held captive for days in a house where she was raped admitted fabricating the story, police said.

Jacqueline Parfait, 551 Danos St., told detectives she made up the story because she came to Houma without telling her friends and family to engage " in certain activities that she was extremely ashamed of," Houma Police Sgt. Dana Coleman said. Coleman would not elaborate.

...

If convicted of filing a false report, Parfait could face up to six months in jail and up to $500 in fines.'

Woman Sets House On Fire With Boyfriend Sleeping Inside

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An O'Fallon, Missouri woman is facing a felony for allegedly trying to burn down a house that her ex-boyfriend was sleeping in with another woman. The fire happened last Friday at about 11:00am.

Investigators say at first 21 year old Kara Dodt told them she had left the home to go a friend's house and got a call about the fire. She later admitted to starting the fire. Dodt is facing a first degree arson charge.
...
Police say there is no evidence that she was trying to get back at her ex-boyfriend. Instead, police say Dodt told them she did it to get insurance money to help pay off bills. Dodt says she did not know the blaze was going to get out of control.'

Probation for Tucson woman who imprisoned son

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) - A Tucson mother who kept her 11-year-old son locked in a stuffy room all summer with only a bucket for a toilet has been sentenced to three years of probation.

Norma Barrientos had pleaded guilty to one count of child abuse.
...
Deputies said the room was warm, had a stench of urine and feces and had a fan that did not work. There were bars and an extra locking device on the window.

Barrientos and her boyfriend told deputies the boy was locked up because he was getting dangerous items like lighters and flammable liquids that were kept in the home.'

Judge to determine woman's sanity in stabbing death of boy, 5

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Lawyers in a Newark courtroom yesterday sparred over whether an Irvington woman was legally insane two years ago when she killed her 5-year-old nephew by stabbing him 57 times with a kitchen knife.

Public Defender Sterling Kinsale insisted Jasmin Collins, 42, was insane, saying she's had a "schizoaffective disorder" for years, one that's been documented in a number of hospitalizations and can trigger violent behavior when it's not controlled.

Essex County Assistant Prosecutor Romesh Sukhdeo acknowledged Collins has a problem but maintained she knew what she was doing when she knifed Meshach Collins to death in her home on Nov. 19, 2006, and was aware she was doing something wrong.'

UK: Women play hard to get to find out how helpful men will be, scientists say

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Researchers believe that the female of any species employs the technique so that men can prove themselves more worthy than their rivals.

But it only works where there are a large number of males to choose from and where there is a mixture of different types of men.
...
Professor John McNamara, co-author of the paper, came up with the conclusions after crunching the data into a mathematical model.

He believes coyness and helpfulness tend to encourage each other - although some males have learned to cheat.

"The more coy females are, the more helpful men will be; and the more men around, the more coy women are," he said.'

Iceland: 'Let women tame the macho excess'

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's typical: the men make the mess and the women come in to clean it up, joked an Icelandic banker about the appointment of two women to rebuild Iceland's collapsed financial system. The promotion of Elin Sigfusdottir and Birna Einarsdottir to run the nationalised New Landsbanki and New Glitnir banks respectively is an attempt by the Icelandic government to draw a line under the past and start again. The macho culture of irresponsible risk-taking that many now blame for Iceland's financial meltdown will no longer be tolerated.

Bringing in the women, pooper-scoopers in hand, would seem to be an admission that the men have screwed up, big time - for, let's acknowledge it, financial firms are still largely run by men, for men. Radical voices are calling for the testosterone-ridden rules to be torn up and rewritten along more feminine lines. 'The current crisis gives us the opportunity to insert gender into the re-writing of the rules,' said Nadereh Chamlou, one of the World Bank's senior advisers. 'We need new people at the table - people who are not associated with the past,' she adds. Enter the women...'

India: Husband commits suicide after wife calls him ugly, impotent, wife not charged under 498A

arindamp · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"NEW DELHI: Harassed by a husband's “ugly” taunts, if a wife commits suicide within seven years of marriage, the man is sure to be booked under Section 498A of the Indian Penal Code for harassing her in the matrimonial home.

The reverse has happened. Within a week of marriage, a man committed suicide allegedly hurt by the “ugly” and “impotent” taunts of his wife. And the Supreme Court has let off the wife by upholding the quashing of her prosecution under Section 306 of IPC for allegedly abetting the suicide."

What kind of a sexist justice is this?

India: Cops book wife for man’s suicide

arindamp · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NAGPUR: Five days after Vitthal Dodke, a resident of the Ayodhya Nagar, committed suicide, Sakkardara police have registered offences against six persons, including his wife, for allegedly abetting the man to end his life. Police have already dispatched units to arrest the accused, but till Wednesday evening, none had been taken into custody.

Behind the scenes, one may say that it was due to the efforts put in by members of the Save Indian Family Foundation (SIFF), an organisation consisting mostly of men tortured by their wives, which did the trick. Otherwise, the police had not registered offence against anyone despite the fact that Dodke had mentioned in his suicide note that his wife had driven him to commit suicide.'

Ed. note: The difference between seeing justice done in this case and the one I just posted was activism. Every case matters, and MRAs are having a real effect on the world.

Duke University Sues Insurer Over Lacrosse Controversy Claims

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Duke University has filed a lawsuit against its insurer, demanding that the company cover the costs of its settlement with three former lacrosse players who were falsely accused of rape.
...
"Because National Union has not paid, Duke has been forced to bear the full financial impact of its own defense," Duke attorneys wrote in the lawsuit.

Along with the settlement provided to the three players -- Reade Seligmann, Collin Finnerty and Dave Evans -- more than 40 unindicted players from the 2006 lacrosse team have since sued the university. The former lacrosse coach, Mike Pressler, has also sued the school.'

Phyllis Schlafy: Where Did the Reagan Votes Go in the 2008 Election?

anthony · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The other explanation is social: the feminists have carried on a 40-year campaign to destroy marriage and what they deride as the patriarchy. They want to replace it with a matriarchy.

In the 1970s, the feminists achieved unilateral divorce-on-demand from state legislatures, unilateral abortion-on-demand from the courts, and unilateral control over children in the welfare class by taxpayer handouts to women that made husbands and fathers unnecessary.

The feminists have continued their campaign against marriage through Joe Biden's favorite legislation, the Violence Against Women Act, which provides a billion dollars a year to feminist centers to promote divorce and oppose reconciliation. VAWA is based on feminist ideology that women are naturally victims entitled to tax-paid legal and financial assistance while men are naturally batterers who are not entitled even to due process protections.'

Queen Elizabeth II: All-women shortlist for political parties fine until 2030 in UK

Disembodied_Voice · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"My government is committed to helping families and businesses through difficult times."

Bills in the Queen's Speech include:

...
Equality Bill: for England, Wales and Scotland - Aims to streamline laws on sex, race and religious discrimination, improve enforcement and allow political parties to use all-women shortlists until 2030.'

This will give political parties the power to put forward all-female candidates to run in elections at the exclusion of men for another 22 years.

"For women, AIDS stigma worse"

el cid · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

This story reminds me of an old joke about a NY Times headline: "World to End Tomorrow: Women, Minorities to be Hardest Hit."

I say this because the author argues that the HIV/AIDS epidemic is worse for women while admitting women make up half of the victims of HIV/AIDS. Why is it worse for women? Because women are infected by men, which means men must change their behavior. (The notion that men are likely infected by women apparently does not occur to him.)

His question:

"Is it inevitable fate or the will of God that women everywhere should suffer the greatest stigmatization and discrimination because of HIV and AIDS?"

His answer:
"Biologically, culturally, economically and religiously, women are more susceptible to HIV. In today's world, AIDS has a woman's face. Women total almost 50 percent of the 33.2 million HIV-positive persons worldwide. Of the infected, women comprise 61 percent in sub-Saharan Africa, 40 percent in Asia, and 21 percent in the U.S."

His solution:
"A major reversal of male attitudes and actions is imperative." He provides a number of examples of needed changes, including men's complicity in supporting gender inequality, unsafe sexual practices, and "rejecting patriarchal structures and relationships."

More from the "male = unfaithful" department

Matt · 3 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

This is positively laughable! Be prepared for amusement. Excerpt:

'6. When away on business, this new love of yours doesn't provide details about what activities are occurring — and doesn't share the name and phone number of a hotel, either. Um, maybe because your special someone isn't away on business?

7. You start to notice that your new honey prefers to email you rather than call you. (This could be because his or her partner is in the other room.)

8. Often when this person calls you, the calls are (a) kept short, (b) end abruptly, and/or (c) conducted in a barely audible voice. All signs that someone else may be in the picture.

9. When you first meet this love interest, you're only given a work number — and getting a cell-phone number is very slow-going ... (probably out of fear that you'll call when he or she is out with the significant other).'

Let's think about just these four for a minute. Item 6: Well, does she ask for this information? But even after three or four dates, detailing one's business itinerary is still a bit much. Item 7: Ever work in a busy office without much privacy? E-mail is the only way to actually communicate in any way that isn't hushed if you don't want your coworkers pestering you for "Details!". Item 8: See item 7. Item 9: This may well be the best of the entire list. For many people, a cell number is a sign you feel the other person won't post it on the Internet or otherwise spread it around. Cell phones cost the caller and the callee; until you know you are not dating a loon, keeping your cell number to yourself is not a bad idea. As for home numbers, these are all but off the map now that so many have cell phones and don't need land-lines at home. The only thing left is a work number. One could say reticence to give a work number is as "bad" as not handing out one's cell number after a short time dating.

Here's a criterion the author left out: "And finally, does your new love have a penis? If so, it's almost a certain sign he already has three families in three other states, four mistresses on the side, a $2000/day prostitute habit, and to top it all off, he has a French rent-boy he gets with while he's in Marseilles supposedly on business! Run, girl, run!"

This is like late night comedy/variety show stuff.

40% of family caregivers for the elderly are men

anthony · 4 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK, Nov. 29 (UPI) -- An increasing number of men are becoming the primary caregiver for elderly parents, says the U.S.-based Alzheimer's Association.

In a survey, men comprised nearly 40 percent of family care givers -- up from 19 percent in a study conducted by the Association in 1996, The New York Times reported Saturday.

...

It's estimated 17 million men are caring for adults in the United States as families become smaller and more women work full-time, the Times reported.

...

"That's the harder part for men, to find someone to talk to," Benton said. "It's the emotional side: the guilt, the sadness, the anger. For men it becomes more stressful because they can't talk about it. They feel cut off."'

UK: "Feral" teenage girl sentenced to life for murder

AngryMan · 4 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A feral teenage girl who stabbed a man in the neck and then told friends 'just let him die' was jailed for life for murder today.

Callous April Bright, 17, knifed Mohamoud Hussan outside a pub and casually walked away as he stumbled around with blood spurting from the wound.

She then casually wiped the blood from her hands in the womens' toilet and continued partying in the bar.

Bright, now 18, was found guilty of murder at Bristol Crown Court and jailed for life yesterday with a minimum term of 12 years."

12 years?

Man Travels by Foot from Michigan to Washington, D.C in Support of the U.S. Constitution

Anonymous · 4 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"That is correct BY FOOT!

Michigan man to walk from Spring Lake Michigan to Washington, D.C. in support of the U.S. Constitution.

Spread the word on this one - it will be interesting to follow all the way to Washington, D.C. where his hunger strike will apparently begin.

Find out how you can make sure he eats once again upon his arrival in Washington, D.C.!"

UK: "Men can be victims, too" - California ruling discussed in The Scotsman

Matt · 4 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A. Article here. The entire article is available only as part of a subscription. Nonetheless, it is reproduced below in full. [Hopefully we won't get in trouble. This was my idea, not Marc's. :)]

'REFUSING to provide domestic violence programmes for male victims because of gender-based analysis is against the US constitution, a Californian court has ruled.

The decision in the case of Woods v Shewry is the highest-level judicial rejection of the concept as a basis for discriminating between men and women who suffer domestic abuse.

Gender-based analysis is also the model on which funding is provided for support for victims in Scotland.

The California case was filed in 2005 by four male victims of domestic violence and the daughter of one of the men against the state of California and various agencies and state-funded domestic violence service providers.

The Sacramento Superior Court initially dismissed the case, ruling that men are not entitled to equal protection on domestic violence, because statistically they are not similarly situated with women.

On an arithmetical basis, more women than men suffer domestic abuse and that was found to justify exemption from the overall requirement of state legislation not to be discriminatory.

That decision was appealed by an attorney, Marc Angelucci, who presented evidence last month showing that not only is the arithmetic ideologically skewed, but also that all victims are entitled to equal protection under the law.

On 14 October, judges in Sacramento!s Court of Appeal reversed the decision and held that: State funding of domestic violence programmes that offer services only to women and their children, but not to men, violate equal protection.

The leading plaintiff in the case was David Woods and his daughter, Maegan. Woods and his wife, Ruth, were married in 1981. Since the mid-1980s, David was attacked violently on numerous occasions by his wife. Meagan was also subject to violence and was present on many occasions when her father, who is disabled, was attacked.

On several occasions Wood contacted a Sacramento domestic violence agency called Women Escaping a Violence Environment (Weave), but was always told: We don!t help men. In February 2003, Maegan called Weave herself and insisted they help her father. According to Maegan,Weave said they do not help men, and that men are the perpetrators of domestic violence, not the victims.

The Appeal Court heard evidence from a number of experts, including Dr Richard Gelles, whose groundbreaking work on domestic violence in the 1970s was instrumental in bringing the issue of violence against women to public consciousness. His recent research explains that current policies often trap abused fathers - they can!t leave their wives because this would leave their children unprotected in the hands of an abuser, but if they simply take their children away with no recognised refuge to go to, they are liable to be arrested for kidnapping.

Angelucci also submitted a series of expert reports and research findings that were not challenged by the Attorney General!s Office. The evidence asserted that virtually all sociological survey data confirms women initiate domestic violence as often as men and men sustain about one-third of the injuries. It also found that crime data alone is unreliable, because it is known that men underreport more than women.

The three Appeal Court judges were unanimous in their finding in favour of Mr Woods and the other plaintiffs, stating: Male victims of domestic violence are similarly situated to female victims for purposes of the statutory programmes and no compelling state interest justifies the gender classification.

They added that, in any case, the analysis improperly views equal protection rights as group rights, rather than individual rights, and permits discrimination simply because fewer men than women are affected.

Finally, the court cited previous findings that: Arguing that a group of people [here male victims] is too small in number to be afforded equal protection is simply arguing that the right to equal protection should hinge on "administrative convenience". Administrative convenience is an inadequate state interest under a strict scrutiny analysis.

Angelucci said: For all the good work that has been done for women victims of domestic abuse, the ideology [from gender-based analysis] has seriously overreached itself by denying the reality of the experience of hundreds of thousands of men.

Professor Jim Murdoch, of Glasgow University, said hewas unaware of similar legal challenges to the provision of domestic abuse services at UK or Scottish level: There is the 1979 United Nations Convention on the Ending ofAll Forms of Discrimination Against Women that defines domestic violence in gender terms.

But, on the other hand, the European Convention on Human Rights is gender neutral in protecting us against violence or inhuman or degrading treatment as an entitlement we all have as individuals.'

Male infanticide employed "to end tribal war"

patriotsofamerica · 4 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Of course it's always the men's fault! Excerpt:

'WOMEN in Papua New Guinea's Highland region are killing their male babies to end a tribal war that has gone on for more than 20 years.

Two women from the Eastern Highlands spoke of the slaughter to PNG's National newspaper during a three-day peace and reconciliation course in the region's capital of Goroka.

Rona Luke and Kipiyona Belas, from two warring tribes, said male infanticide reduced the cyclical payback violence infamous in Highlands tribal fights.
...
"This situation shows the extreme frustration the women have with the men in these areas," a spokesman said.'

UK: Woman found guilty of kidnap plot of her own daughter

AngryMan · 4 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mother of Shannon Matthews was today found guilty of the kidnap of her own daughter.

Karen Matthews, 33, was convicted alongside her co-accused Michael Donovan after a trial at Leeds Crown Court.

The court had heard how they kept Shannon drugged and leashed to the loft to stop her escaping during her 24-day ordeal in a 'cynical' plot to eventually claim £50,000 reward money for her safe return.
...
Both were found guilty on counts of kidnap, false imprisonment and perverting the course of justice.

After the pair were told they would face lengthy jail terms, one senior officer described Matthews as 'pure evil' and said her actions 'beggared belief'.

Male suicide a growing concern in tough times

anthony · 5 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There's always an internal detonator with suicide, but an external spark helps light the fuse. One factor that comes along every few generations is economic distress. During the Great Depression, when banks went bust and people's life savings vanished, suicide rates soared. Another instigator: large numbers of veterans returning from armed conflict, many of them with troubled (or injured) minds, lousy job prospects, and fractured families. Which begins to explain why suicidologists, who study the phenomenon, are feeling a little edgy themselves these days. "For those who serve in the military, the suicide risk may be even greater considering multiple deployments, possible brain trauma from concussive blasts, and combat-related post-traumatic stress," says David A. Jobes, Ph.D., a professor of psychology at the Catholic University of America. "This may be a uniquely dangerous moment for young American men and suicide, given the recent economic upheaval."

No jail time for Hermiston woman who abused teens

anthony · 5 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HERMISTON -- A teacher's assistant who pleaded guilty to sexually abusing teenage boys won't have to spend time in prison.

Following a plea bargain, Umatilla County Judge Garry Reynolds this week sentenced Roxana Mata to three years of probation on charges of rape and sexual abuse.

Mata, 23, must pay a $500 fine for each victim and can't have contact with children other than her own two kids and the one she is expecting.

She must also perform community service, write letters of apology to her victims, take part in an alcohol program and register as a sex offender.'

Man Pays $12,000 in Support, Finds Out Child Not His

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HARRISBURG, Pa. — A Philadelphia man was forced to pay more than $12,000 in child support for another man's daughter and spent two years in jail for falling behind on payments.

Dauphin County prosecutor Edward M. Marsico Jr. told The Patriot-News of Harrisburg that he is examining the case of Walter Andre Sharpe Jr., who has been unable to recover the money even after establishing that he isn't the girl's father.

...

He served four six-month jail terms for not keeping up with support payments between 2001 and 2005, then lost his job. Petitions he filed for DNA testing were opposed by the court's domestic relations officials and denied by the judge.

In May 2007, the paternity order against Walter Sharpe was overturned after the girl's mother and grandmother failed to show up to a court hearing. But the judge ruled in October that Walter Sharpe was not entitled to compensation.'

Barbara Kay: Fed on myths, preying on men

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'November was Domestic Violence Awareness month. Truth in advertising suggests it should be Y-Chromosome Apartheid Month. Far from promoting "awareness" of a social problem or remedies for men and women with anger issues, the month is basically a radical feminist war dance around the Original Sin of maleness, cheered on by "progressive" media sympathizers.
...
The truth is that the more precisely identified phenomenon of "intimate partner violence" (IPV) in Western culture is gender neutral, an acting out of psychological problems around intimacy that afflict men and women alike. IPV is initiated by both sexes in about equal proportions. Self-defence is rarely the motive for women's violence against men. Literally hundreds of peer-reviewed, community-based studies, including StatsCan's, confirm this. But they don't reach the public. (Under pressure from feminist organizations, for example, a Quebec health agency recently sequestered a commissioned psychosocial study showing men and women are equally culpable for IPV.)'

Link Between Tobacco Smoke And Behavioral Problems In Boys With Asthma Strengthened With New Study

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ScienceDaily (Dec. 5, 2008) — Boys with asthma who are exposed to environmental tobacco smoke have higher degrees of hyperactivity, aggression, depression and other behavioral problems, according to researchers at Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center.

In a study posted online ahead of print by the Journal of Developmental and Behavioral Pediatrics, the researchers said behavioral problems increase along with higher exposure levels, but they added even low levels of tobacco smoke may be detrimental to behavior.
...
Interestingly, although girls in the study were on average exposed to higher levels of tobacco smoke than boys, the exposure did not lead to an increase in behavioral problems among them, investigators said. In boys, however, behavioral problems increased about two fold with each doubling in their tobacco smoke exposure, said Dr. Yolton.'

"It’s time we welcome back manhood"

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'I was married to a man 20 years older than me, in 1983 when feminazis were in the boil and New Man was about to be born. Women had already been cast in the roles of the suppressed, victims and martyrs and men as brutes, sexual predators, bullies or bumbling fools. A culture was being fomented that was increasingly hostile toward males who, gradually, were going underground, retreating from a bewildering world into their holdouts.
...
Manhood, manliness—words signifying qualities admirable in a man: strength, bravery, honor, valor, chivalry, gallantry. The kind that goes to the moon, travels in space, fights war and injustice, drives F1, puts up shelves, opens doors, gets up in the middle of the night to see what the noise is about, brushes your cheek tenderly, holds you to keep you from breaking. A dangerous world needs men; a girlfriend her boyfriend; the wife her husband; the children a father they can look up to as a role model.'

UK: Queen's Speech: Firms free to favour female and black job applicants

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Companies will be free to discriminate in favour of women and black job candidates under proposed ‘equality’ laws.
...
Ministers insist that businesses will not be compelled to favour the woman or the black candidate, but the law will be changed to ensure they cannot be sued for turning down a white man.
...
But the Equality Bill, which brings together nine major laws and 100 other regulations, will inevitably lead to charges that women are more equal then men.

Miss Harman, whose earnest feminism has earned her the nickname Harriet Harperson, said yesterday that the economic downturn would not hold back the ‘tough’ new measures, claiming ‘fairness doesn’t cost anything’.

Other proposals in the Bill include moves to tackle the gender pay gap and powers to ban discrimination against older people in the provision of goods and services.'

There will also be measures to ensure more Government contracts, worth a total of £175billion, are awarded to firms which have good records on equality.'

Babysitter admits shaking, dropping boy

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MOUNT OLIVE —A 31-year-old Mount Olive woman admitted Thursday that she shook a crying infant for whom she was babysitting and dropped him twice, which caused the boy to suffer severe brain damage and paralysis.

As the father of the boy -- who was 11 months old when he was harmed by babysitter Khac Tam Nguyen last Dec. 27 -- wiped away tears, Nguyen pleaded guilty before state Superior Court Judge Thomas V. Manahan in Morristown to one count of aggravated assault.

With the assistance of a Vietnamese interpreter, Nguyen answered questions posed by defense lawyer Peter Toscano, and acknowledged that she was babysitting the child on Dec. 27 along with her own two children at her Budd Lake apartment and got frustrated with his incessant crying. She said she shook the child and dropped him twice.

Assistant County Prosecutor Brian DiGiacomo said the state is recommending the maximum sentence for Nguyen on the charge, 10 years in prison, with 85 percent of the term to be served before parole consideration.'

The Tri-City Daily: Women’s problem – violence – is men’s problem

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Violence will stop when the collective voice begins to talk about violence against women as not a women’s problem but a men’s issue.

Jackson Katz, in his book The Macho Paradox, writes, “ I am not going to guilt-trip twenty-first-century American men by blaming them for thousands of years of sexism and patriarchal oppression. Men shouldn’t feel guilty simply for being born male. If there is a reason to feel guilty, it should be about what they do or fail to do, not about their chance placement in one gender category.”

If there is a glimmer of hope for women, it is that men are beginning to speak out about violence against women, truly recognizing it as a men’s issue. This is good news. Speaking out is a beginning for transformation and the acceptance of responsibility.

This is breaking new ground. We need leaders who will lead and model respect and accountability: violence against women is not acceptable.'

To Domestic Violence Trainers: We Get It

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Slowly we started seeing laws and services for women change. Then came the training from man haters and cop haters lecturing us about how the advocates from among the academics and social activists knew the truth about family disturbance calls while us ignorant cops were brutal and crude and just making everything worse. Ask a cop what they learned in domestic violence training back then and they'd say, "Woman good, man bad". We were a tough, eye-rolling crowd. And yet even with the left-wing activists ramming it down our blue collar throats, the law enforcement profession responded. We became enlightened. We began to understand that a punch in the nose shouldn't be acceptable just because the victim is sleeping with the perpetrator. We studied the research and accepted the science of offender behavior and the studies of victimology that made sense of the seemingly illogical behavior of battered women.'

Ed. note: No mention that men are DV victims, also. So he may get what the trainers are saying, and may have good advice back for the trainers, but do the trainers get that upwards of half the actual number of DV victims are male?

No Jail Time for Mother Who Nearly Bit Off Son's Ear

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'No jail time for a mother accused of nearly biting off her son's ear.

Tammy Carson-Toney pleaded guilty to child abuse.

She received a suspended sentence of 11-months, 29-days.

It happened last December, when she signed her son out of school at Notre Dame.

The two began fighting and the police report says she bit her son's ear so hard, the lower half was nearly severed.

The boy was able to break free and run back inside the school, where administrators called police.'

Bond Set For Mom Accused Of Burning Child's Hands Because Of 'Stress'

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mom accused of setting her child's hand on fire is being held on $2,500 bond.

Natasha McIntosh appeared in front of a judge Thursday.

Authorities said she put rubbing alcohol on her child's hands and set them on fire.

She told the judge she was under a lot of stress.'

Mother ‘addicted’ to abuse in Fort Myers court

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The stepmother accused of beating a 2-year-old boy to near death consented to allegations of abuse, abandonment and substance use Wednesday in Lee County dependency court.

She did not admit guilt.

Rosemary Kunz, 23, was arrested in October on charges of cruelty toward a child by aggravated abuse and neglect of a child causing great harm. She told detectives she was "addicted" to abusing him.
...
Kaydin suffers headaches daily, his aunt said, and takes seizure medication twice a day.

“He cries and holds his head and just says, ‘No more owwies, no more boo-boos,’” Prange said.'

Charges dismissed against mother accused of placing son in the oven as punishment

anthony · 6 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Charges against Tiffany Fraser, a 26-year-old mother accused of putting her young son in an oven for losing a cell phone, were dropped yesterday at the recommendation of Child Protective Services.

Fraser, an Airmont resident, was indicted in May on felony assault and misdemeanor child endangerment charges.

Her son, then 7, was placed in the custody of a foster mother.

"Following recommendations from Child Protective Services and the expressed concerns of the child's foster-care mother, it was concluded that proceeding with the case against Fraser will likely cause further harm to the young victim," District Attorney Thomas Zugibe said in a statement yesterday. "A dismissal of this matter was clearly in the child's best interest."

Mom Who Drowned Baby Found "Insane" with Post-Partum Depression

anthony · 7 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'AUBURN, CA - A Granite Bay mother has been found legally insane at the time she drowned her newborn daughter, but will still face prison for other abuse.

Kristina Fuelling cried openly at several times Monday when she pleaded guilty to attempted murder and child cruelty against her newborn daughter Faith last January.

To the key charge of second degree murder, however, the Placer County judge found Fuelling, 27, not guilty by reason of insanity.

Faith Fuelling was only eight days old on January 19, 2008, when her mother put her in a sink, turned on the water and held the infant under until she drowned.'

No jail time for woman who held employer hostage

anthony · 7 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There will be no jail time for the Ashburn woman charged with holding her former employer and his family at gunpoint in May, following a pleading in Circuit Court. Instead she will be transferred to a state hospital for mental evaluation and treatment.

Michelle Raquel Davidson, 39, pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity before Judge Thomas D. Horne this morning to two charges of abduction and one count of breaking and entering with a deadly weapon. In exchange for her pleas, the Commonwealth's Attorney's Office agreed not to prosecute her on the three counts of using a firearm in commission of a felony, charges that carry a mandatory prison sentence.

Under the agreement, Davidson will be transferred from the Loudoun Adult Detention Center to the Central State Hospital and to the custody of the state's Commissioner of Mental Health, Mental Retardation and Substance Abuse Services. The commissioner will evaluate Davidson to determine the length of her treatment within the state hospital.

...

While the process of submitting a not guilty by reason of insanity plea must be started by the defense, Deputy Commonwealth's Attorney Nicole Wittmann said she, and her office, were pleased by the outcome.

"We feel that justice is served by this plea," she said. "This has been a very difficult case for everybody."'

New report shows pollution causing serious damage to males of many species

Matt · 7 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The male gender is in danger, with incalculable consequences for both humans and wildlife, startling scientific research from around the world reveals.

The research – to be detailed tomorrow in the most comprehensive report yet published – shows that a host of common chemicals is feminising males of every class of vertebrate animals, from fish to mammals, including people.

Backed by some of the world's leading scientists, who say that it "waves a red flag" for humanity and shows that evolution itself is being disrupted, the report comes out at a particularly sensitive time for ministers. On Wednesday, Britain will lead opposition to proposed new European controls on pesticides, many of which have been found to have "gender-bending" effects.

It also follows hard on the heels of new American research which shows that baby boys born to women exposed to widespread chemicals in pregnancy are born with smaller penises and feminised genitals.

...
Communities heavily polluted with gender-benders in Canada, Russia and Italy have given birth to twice as many girls than boys, which may offer a clue to the reason for a mysterious shift in sex ratios worldwide. Normally 106 boys are born for every 100 girls, but the ratio is slipping. It is calculated that 250,000 babies who would have been boys have been born as girls instead in the US and Japan alone.

And sperm counts are dropping precipitously. Studies in more than 20 countries have shown that they have dropped from 150 million per millilitre of sperm fluid to 60 million over 50 years. (Hamsters produce nearly three times as much, at 160 million.) Professor Nil Basu of Michigan University says that this adds up to "pretty compelling evidence for effects in humans".'

Special needs teacher is placed on sex offenders register after admitting sex with boy

Anonymous · 8 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A guilt-ridden teacher who turned herself in to police after having sex with a pupil is facing a prison sentence.

Alison Smith, 29, spent the night with the 15-year-old boy after he visited her home with friends.

She told officers the teenager had instigated kissing between them, but no one had instigated the sex. ' That just kind of evolved,' she said.

Smith's name has been placed on the Sex Offenders Register after she pleaded guilty at Aberdeen Sheriff Court on Friday to breaching her position of trust and having sexual intercourse with a 15-year-old.'

India: Girls gain extra points in admissions

arindamp · 8 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW DELHI: Feel fortunate if you are seeking the nursery admission of your girl child this year. Boys may crib, but many schools are giving extra points to girls in the admission criteria. The purpose is to facilitate the education of the girl child as the ratio of girls to boys is still dismal in the classrooms, say schools.

"Being a co-ed school, we want a healthy ratio of boys to girls in our school because of which we are giving 10 extra points to the girl child. It's alarming that the number of girls coming for admission has declined over the last five years. Roughly, every fifth applicant for nursery admission is a girl," said Jyoti Bose, principal Springdales, Dhaula Kuan.'

"The Monday After - Some men drive women to kill"

anthony · 8 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Glued to a Play station while moms do real work

I have always believed the cliche about guys not growing up, but now not only has this notion proved to be nauseating, it's become their greatest excuse.

Guys such as Paul Mashaba and his obsession with computer games make it impossible to be polite and if I have to slam doors again, I'll also remove the handle.

Please help my best friend's man and his buddies stay away from computer games. This hobby is childish, it's time wasting and downright brain smashing.'

Are men hardwired to overspend?

anthony · 8 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'University of Michigan researcher Daniel Kruger looks to evolution and mating for an explanation. He theorizes that men overspend to attract mates. It all boils down, as it has for hundreds of thousands of years, to making babies.

...

Financial consumption was the only factor that predicted how many partners men wanted in the next five years and also predicted the number of partners they had in the previous five years, Kruger said. Being married made a difference in the frequency of one-time sexual partners in the last year, but not in the number of partners in the past or desired in the future.

The 25 percent of men with the most conservative financial strategies had an average of three partners in the past five years and desired an average of just one in the next five years. The 2 percent of men with the riskiest financial strategies had double those numbers.

"Men in the ancestral environment were valued if they were good providers. Now we have this new consumer culture, so basically we show our potential through the consumer goods that we purchase, rather than being a good hunter or providing protection," Kruger said.'

Sydney Morning Herald: Husbands better second time around

anthony · 8 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research reveals that many men in second marriages shape up, becoming the partners their first wives had probably wanted them to be. They share the domestic chores more equally with their second wife than they did with their first.

But for women in second marriages, the story is different - or rather it is the same old saga. They tend to carry an unchanged and unequal burden of domestic chores just as they had done the first time round.

...

"Maybe these younger second wives are asking the men to do more, and the men have to do more to compete with younger males," Dr Solaz said. "Maybe the men have learnt from the mistakes of their first marriage."'

Men losing jobs in unequal numbers

anthony · 8 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are losing jobs at far greater rates than women as the industries they dominate, such as manufacturing, construction, and investment services, are hardest hit by the downturn. Some 1.1 million fewer men are working in the United States than there were a year ago, according to the Labor Department. By contrast, 12,000 more women are working.

This gender gap is the product of both the nature of the current recession and the long-term shift in the U.S. economy from making goods, traditionally the province of men, to providing services, in which women play much larger roles, economists said. For example, men account for 70 percent of workers in manufacturing, which shed more than 500,000 jobs over the past year. Health care, in which nearly 80 percent of the workers are women, added more than 400,000 jobs.'

Brewer: At holiday parties, women are birds, men are pigs

anthony · 8 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's look at the different ways the genders approach parties:

Women enjoy parties for the conversation and companionship. Men like that stuff, too, but it's difficult to keep a scintillating conversation going while eating with both hands.
...
For women, holiday parties offer an opportunity to dress up. For men, parties are a reason to wear pants, at least at first.
...
At dinner parties, women compliment the chef by oohing over the food and asking for recipes. Men compliment the chef by groaning and asking for more.

Women politely offer to help the hosts serve food and drink. Men sometimes clean up their own spills.

Some fancy parties include dancing, which many women enjoy. Men prefer a challenging game of drunken Twister.'

Divorce & Child Custody Tactics for Women

anthony · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But if you want to bring out the big guns, I recommend what those of us inside the divorce industry have come to term the "nuclear option". Just call up Child Protective Services and tell them that your husband has molested one of his own children. I can't wait for you to see the look on his face! It is best for you to choose a child who is either 1) impressionable enough to repeat a story that you have taught him, or 2) is young enough that she can't be expected to articulate what "really" happened in her own words. A good time to make the child molestation allegation is after daddy has helped bathe your child. "Daddy washed me ALL over" is sure to raise questions.'

Woman faces possible prison time for rape claim

anthony · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BRISTOL, Conn. - Authorities say a 22-year-old Southington woman faces up to six months in prison for falsely claiming a town police officer raped her last year.
...
She alleged a Southington patrolman caught her trying to buy drugs, then forced her into having sex if she wanted to avoid being arrested.

She repeated the assertion to detectives, and more than 30 officers fitting Ladd's description were interviewed before she recanted.'

Mom gets 40 yrs after shooting husband

anthony · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RIVERSIDE, Calif. (CNS) -- A mother of four who fatally shot her husband in what she has repeatedly described as an accident was sentenced Friday to 40 years to life in prison.

Sonja Regina Hadnot, 39, was convicted in June of second-degree murder and a sentence-enhancing allegation of using a firearm in a crime resulting in great bodily injury or death for the June 28, 2000, death of her husband, David.

Judge J. Richard Couzens sentenced her to 15 years to life for the murder charge and 25 years to life for the gun allegation, according to Hadnot's attorney, Danny Davis.'

Man barred from seeing daughter for 7 years

Anonymous · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'"STEVE" has been barred from seeing his daughter for seven years.

He has never harmed his only child or her mother. He has never threatened them and a court has accepted he is of good character.

But last week, after a tortuous 10-year journey through four courts, more than 20 hearings, 12 psychologists and six lawyers, he was told he could not see his daughter until she came of age.

Steve, whose real name cannot be revealed for legal reasons, has gone through more than 20 intrusive psychological examinations, while daughter "Molly" has endured seven.

He says he has spent more than $100,000 in 10 years.

His wife twice raised sexual-abuse allegations, proven false after months of investigation.'

RADAR ALERT: TV Newscast Highlights False DV Allegations

Matt · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Around the country, groups are working to stop false allegations of domestic violence. Now the mainstream media are beginning to highlight the devastating impact of such claims.

Recently WCVB-TV, the ABC affiliate in Boston, Mass. ran a newscast highlighting two men whose girlfriends obtained domestic violence restraining orders. The orders had been issued without any evidence of abuse.

When it came time for the final hearing, the women didn't bother to show up and the orders expired. But the men's names were permanently entered into the state Domestic Violence Registry.

As a result, one man had his employment application denied. He commented, "I was guilty from the moment this person walked in and filed that order."

The segment also quotes a representative of the Massachusetts domestic violence coalition who notes restraining orders can be "misused," and admits, "I think it's a problem."

The 4-minute, must-see segment can be viewed here.

To RADAR's knowledge, this is the best-ever TV coverage of the problem of false allegations.

TAKE ACTION NOW:

We encourage every person who reads this Alert to view the newscast and forward the URL to your media contacts, elected officials, and others. Emphasize that the nation's domestic violence system has spun out of control, and we need to reform the Violence Against Women Act.

Each year 2-3 million restraining orders are issued, half of which don't involve even an allegation of violence. RADAR has released 10 recommendations designed to curb false allegations of domestic violence: http://www.mediaradar.org/alert20081020.php.

++
Date of RADAR Release: December 8, 2008

Want to improve the chance that they'll pay attention to your letter? Click here.

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence.
http://www.mediaradar.org/.

Psychologists report that a gender gap in spatial skills starts in infancy

anthony · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men tend to perform better than women at tasks that require rotating an object mentally, studies have indicated. Now, developmental psychologists at Pitzer College and UCLA have discovered that this type of spatial skill is present in infancy and can be found in boys as young as 5 months old.

While women tend to be stronger verbally than men, many studies have shown that adult men have an advantage in the ability to imagine complex objects visually and to mentally rotate them. Does this advantage go back to infancy?

"We found the answer is yes," said Scott P. Johnson, a UCLA professor of psychology and an expert in infant perception, brain development, cognition and learning. "Infants as young as 5 months can perform the skill, but only boys — at least in our study."

Australia: Housing, mentoring to keep women out of jail

anthony · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of women in prison is growing rapidly. In NSW, it has almost doubled in the past 10 years, and Aboriginal women are over-represented. Life in jail is difficult for anyone but for women there are particular challenges.

Most of the women in custody are mothers. But studies show their community support networks while in prison are weaker than those of men, as male partners are less likely to hang around and keep the household running.

Without partners, their children live with family or in foster care. Regaining custody can be hard, as women need stable housing to get their children back but struggle to get public housing if their children aren't living with them.
...
Ms Armstrong agrees. She credits her success at turning her life around since 2003 to a mentor provided by the prisoner advocacy group Justice Action. She is now one of the driving forces behind the Women In Prison Advocacy Network.'

Canada: Changes to family law aimed at better protecting women, children

anthony · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Proposed tough changes to family law in Ontario — from beefed-up requirements for those seeking custody of children to easier to obtain restraining orders and new rules on how to divvy up pension assets — were announced this morning by the provincial attorney general.

...

The Star reported on Saturday that Bentley would introduce legislation that toughens how custody is awarded. The proposed changes include detailed, sworn child care plans from those seeking custody for both parents and non-parents; for non-family members seeking custody, they must submit to police checks and submit a letter from Children's Aid outlining concerns, if any, the society may have about that person's ability to parent.

...

The changes were welcomed by many groups and advocates for women's rights.

"We can no longer ignore the fact that the safety of women and children in this province must be paramount," said Zahra Dhanani, legal director for the Metropolitan Action Committee on Violence Against Women and Children.'

UK: Depressed woman kills toddler with 4x4 during failed suicide attempt

anthony · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Katie Gutierrez-Perez, 40, ran over Finlay Woods in her two ton Toyota Hilux as his mother Tina Woods pushed him along the pavement near a primary school in Chingford, Essex, in September.

Finlay was dragged under the wheels while his mother was smashed against a pillar and left with a head wound. The toddler was taken to nearby Whipps Cross Hospital but died.

Appearing at Snaresbrook Crown Court in London on Wednesday via video-link, Gutierrez-Perez sobbed as she admitted causing death by dangerous driving and driving without insurance.

Sue Rodham, defending, said: "There was quite clearly a failed suicide attempt and a history of depression."

Gutierrez-Perez owned a struggling café which had been closed by bailiffs days before the crash.'

Women, economic crisis and fightback

anthony · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a newly built women's prison in Massachusetts where 40 percent of the women have mental health issues and 85 percent have substance abuse issues. In the wake of severe budget cuts, instead of providing social services like drug treatment programs, mental health programs, jobs, childcare, etc., the state is throwing women in jail.

The Women's Fightback Network in Boston is demanding that the governor declare an economic state of emergency. WFN brings to the forefront how women have been disproportionately victimized by foreclosures, evictions, job loss and budget cuts. Anita Hill wrote an article last year stating that women were particular targets of subprime predatory lenders, especially elderly women and Black and Latina women. One loan officer talked about how she would add many additional costs to the mortgage loan if the client "appeared uneducated, inarticulate, was a minority or was particularly young or old."

NY Daily News Opinion: Gov. Paterson, why appoint a woman to Hillary's seat?

anthony · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As speculation heats up over another Kennedy in the Senate, New Yorkers - and especially women - need to seriously consider what exactly is behind the nudge-that's-become-a-shove for a woman to fill Hillary Clinton's seat.
...
This is the kind of emotion-laced rhetoric that reduces the importance of public service to a petty, quid pro quo board game of interchangeable pieces, and sets gender debates back 50 years to a time when it was argued only a man could lead a country, a boardroom or a military division - only now the argument is reversed.

Since when are men incapable of or disqualified from advocating for women's rights? Barack Obama supporters, in fact, told us incessantly during his campaign that he and Joe Biden would be two stalwart male champions of women's issues. In particular, the giddy cheerleading on behalf of Kennedy, a well-respected national figure who has no experience in elected office, only worsens the sexism and elevation of symbolism over substance.'

How Men And Women Cope In A Recession - Men Will Fare Worse Because For Them, Money Equals Happiness

anthony · 9 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'9 December 2008 - As the world grapples with a global recession and financial markets remain volatile, many people are reminding themselves that money can't buy happiness. Men however, beg to differ.

Results of a global happiness survey from The Nielsen Company reveal that men are happier with money, while women are happier with friendships and relationships with their children, co-workers and bosses.

"Because they are happier with non-economic factors, women's happiness is more recession-proof, which might explain why women around the world are happier in general than men are," said Susanna Baggaley, Executive Director, The Nielsen Company, New Zealand.'

LeoRockwell.com: Thought Policing 101

anthony · 10 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One lesson came from an emailer in California who was an economics student at a state university in the early 1990s. "This is like déjà vu," he wrote. He told me that as part of his studies he researched the economics literature on the male/female "wage gap" and arrived at basically the same conclusions that Professor Block did in his Loyola College lecture: Once one accounts for the effects of marriage and numerous other economic factors, there is little evidence that sex discrimination is a very important determinant of the "wage gap."

He presented his paper at some kind of student forum, and informs me that the campus feminists immediately began calling him the vilest of names and demanding that he apologize. Being totalitarian minded, the California campus feminists were convinced that they, and only they, held THE TRUTH about the wage gap. Therefore, any dissenters were not to be debated but embarrassed and ridiculed, which is what an "apology" would do. Any such apology would also go a long way in deterring anyone else from bringing the subject up in the future.

Now that the academic feminists are deans, vice presidents and presidents of universities, they no longer bother to demand apologies from those who question their superstitions: they make them themselves, as Loyola College did in the case of Professor Block. The apparent objective is the same as with the California feminists: to prohibit freedom of speech when it comes to their cherished superstitions, such as the notion that capitalism is inherently sexist; hence the "wage gap" and the "glass ceiling."'

Carey Roberts: Domestic Violence Industry: Hateful

anthony · 10 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From its beginnings three decades ago, the domestic violence industry has been plagued by a cabal of pinkshirts who will do almost anything to advance their agenda.

Erin Pizzey, founder of the first domestic violence shelter in England, let the cat out of the bag when she revealed many of the women in her shelter were as abusive as the men they had left. In retaliation, feminists issued death threats and eventually forced her to flee the country.

In the United States, Dr. Suzanne Steinmetz' research on the Battered Husband Syndrome triggered a whispering campaign designed to torpedo her impending promotion, as well as a bomb threat at her daughter's wedding.

Family violence researcher Murray Straus at the University of New Hampshire has been similarly slandered, harassed, and threatened by radicals who all claim to be against violence.
...
Professor Murray Straus, a courageous man who refuses to back down in the face of feminist efforts to squelch his research, explains it this way: "History is full of atrocities carried out in the service of a moral agenda."'

'Perfect mother' massacred her five children by slitting their throats while husband was away

Anonymous · 10 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

A 'perfect' mother massacred her five children by calling them one by one into her bedroom and slitting their throats, a Belgian court has been told.
Genevieve Lhermitte, 42, said she felt desperate and trapped alone at home with the children - four girls and a boy aged between 14 and three - while her husband Bouchaib Moqadem was away visiting his parents in Morocco.

On the day of the killings last year, which left Belgium in shock, she stole two knives from a supermarket and cooked a farewell lunch for the family before locking the front door and starting the massacre, the court in Nivelles, near Brussels, was told.
...
She later told police she felt "desperate and trapped" at having to be at home with the children while her husband was away, the court heard.'

Future fast arriving: Android mates coming to a box store near you!

Matt · 10 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Well I suppose it keeps you from seeing the inside of a "family court" but it's sad commentary on the state of affairs between the sexes. We will soon see a male version I am sure. For all the money the inventor spent on creating this android, as imperfect as it is at mimicking an actual human, the truth is that the technology is available today and the only thing lacking is major funding and the input of more engineers who are as brainy (or nearly so) as the inventor. The selling price of the "Programmable Perfect Mate 3000" could be as high as $30,000 and there would be no shortage of takers. Heck, they could sell them for $100k and still make a mint. Cylons indeed! Excerpt:

'Inventor Le Trung, 33, created Aiko, said to be “in her 20s” with a stunning 32, 23, 33 figure, shiny hair and delicate features.

She even remembers his favourite drink and does simple cleaning and household tasks.

"Fem-bot" Aiko, who has cost £14,000 to build so far, is a whizz at maths and even does Le’s accounts.

Le, a scientific genius from Brampton in Ontario, Canada, said he never had time to find a real partner so he designed one using the latest technology.

He said he did not build Aiko as a sexual partner, but said she could be tweaked to become one.'

Mother charged with stabbing her two baby sons

Anonymous · 10 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother will appear before magistrates in Manchester this morning charged with murdering both of her children.

Jael Mullings was arrested after the bodies of two-year-old Romario Mullings-Sewell and his brother Delayno, aged three months, were found at their home in Kilmington Drive, Cheetham Hill, on November 12.

Both had been stabbed to death with a single wound to their chests, according to the post-mortem examinations.

Police and paramedics discovered the bodies at 5.45pm, a few hours after a GP called reporting concern for the children's welfare.

...

Officers had called at the house where the boys' bodies were found just hours before the brothers were killed.

The boys were described as "gorgeous" and "beautiful" by their family. Their mother was sectioned under the Mental Health Act following their deaths.'

Hooker Mom Has Teen Daughter Dance Half-Naked at Detroit Sex Party

Matt · 10 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Caption:

A mom is accused of hosting a sex party and allowing her teenage daughter to dance half-naked.

"So much for the fundamental responsibility of mothers protecting their children." -- Sheriff in interview

Just keep watching; the sheriff reports these kinds of cases (where mothers are pimping their kids out one way or another) are increasingly more common to his department.

Judge cites boy's 'raging hormones,' reduces woman's sentence for sex with teen kbdnh · 11 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NASHUA – A 38-year-old woman was sentenced to prison Monday for sexually assaulting a teenage boy she initially accused of rape.

Robin Mowery of Nashua was convicted in June of four counts of felonious sexual assault and two counts of sexual assault involving a friend of her teenage daughter. Mowery was 35 at the time; the boy was 15.
...
"Like it or not, an underage boy having sex with an older-aged girl is viewed differently than the other way around," Lynn said at the sentencing hearing.
...
"Young men have raging hormones. It doesn't make him a bad person," said Lynn, who also noted that the teen also tried to use the relationship as a "bargaining chip" to escape penalty for crimes committed as a juvenile.

Lynn also chastised Mowery for falsely testifying that the teen forced her to have sex at knifepoint. She also claimed he threatened to rape and kill her daughter if she spoke about their affair.'

It's not Paternity Fraud - It's a genetic throwback disorder

Arden Linoge · 11 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. You gotta see this one. This article claims to be the tragic story of a black girl born to white parents, get this, not because of paternity fraud, but because of some rare genetic throwback. Excerpt:

'Her African features were almost certainly a throwback to an unknown ancestor whose DNA, having lain dormant for generations, had emerged in her. But when Sandra was a schoolgirl, this aspect of genetics was unknown and there was no such thing as a DNA test.

There was only the cruel and relentless gossip suggesting that her mother had had an affair with a black man.

For four years, teachers and the parents of other pupils at her all-white primary school had fought to have her expelled on the grounds that she was of mixed race. Finally, they had succeeded.'

"Dear Zachary" up for Academy Award consideration

Matt · 11 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Via Glenn Sacks' Dec. 10 newsletter:

'Producer Kurt Kuenne is full of "fury at the injustice done to his best friend Andrew Bagby, a doctor who was set up and gunned down," apparently at the hands of an ex-girlfriend who he had broken up with.

Kuenne has made a film to memorialize his murdered friend and tell the world about the injustice his ex perpetrated. The legal system coddled the apparent killer, allowing her to be free on bail and have custody of their son, who she subsequently murdered.

...

From Christopher Smith's review of Dear Zachary: A Letter to a Son About His Father:

...

"Surrounding all this isn't just the ache of loss felt by Andrew's parents, which is so palpable, it burns, but also of his many friends and family, who are interviewed in ways that not only show us who Andrew was as a man, but also in ways that move the story forward. And where that goes, I'm not going.

"Dear Zachary" is currently being promoted for Academy Award consideration, where it will be taken seriously. For those seeking a profound, unshakable movie, it's worth a call to your local cinema to ask that they show it."

Video excerpts of the film can be seen here. To learn more, click here.'

Stroke victim found tied to bed with dog leash

Matt · 11 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A nursing-care company at the centre of a searing abuse case in which an emaciated 69-year-old stroke victim was found tied to his bed with a dog leash refused yesterday to discuss its role, or even acknowledge it was involved.

"Because of privacy laws in Ontario, I really cannot comment on any specific client or client case," said Lynn Tughan, vice-president of operations for S.R.T. Med-Staff.

At issue is the plight of Thomas "Tony" Butler, rescued from his Richmond Hill apartment in March after his adult daughter, Julie Henderson, discovered him and alerted York Regional Police.

...

In sentencing, Mr. Justice Peter Bourque said Ms. Madi had tried to conceal Mr. Shakeri's repeated assaults on Mr. Butler, who stands 6 foot 1 and weighed just 68 pounds when his daughter found him at the apartment he shared with Ms. Madi, also 42.'

Psychology Today: "How to be happy"

Anonymous · 11 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Excellent article from Psychology Today here. Excerpt:

'One of the things that evolution has done is to make men and women very different. In some ways (though not in others), males of one species are often more similar to males of other species than to females of their own species, and vice versa. In some ways, in many ways, men are more similar to male chimpanzees or gorillas than to women. One of the ways that men and women are different is in what makes them happy.

Forget what feminists, hippies, and liberals have told you in the last half century. They are all lies based on political ideology and conviction, not on science. Contrary to what they may have told you, it is very unlikely that money, promotions, the corner office, social status, and political power will make women happy. Similarly, it is very unlikely that quitting their jobs, dropping out of the rat race, and becoming stay-at-home dads to spend all their times with their children will make men happy.'

Woman stabs boyfriend for refusing to have sex with her

Matt · 11 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DECEMBER 10--Meet Brittany Phillips. Early Saturday morning, the 19-year-old Louisiana woman wanted some sex from her boyfriend. But Todd Stewart, 35, was apparently not in the mood. In fact, he tried to push Phillips off of him in the bedroom of the pair's West Monroe home. That much the couple can agree upon, according to Ouachita Parish Sheriff's Office reports. Phillips claims Stewart became violent after rebuffing her advances. Stewart told an investigator that he left the bedroom to sleep on a living room couch, but that Phillips "would not leave him alone." At some point, he added, things got physical and he was stabbed in the lower lip with "a long metal object which appeared to be a knife."'

"A slander on Canadian men"

Matt · 11 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marking the 19th annual commemoration of the Ecole Polytechnique massacre, Mr. Ignatieff issued a statement commiserating with the 14 female victims' families. Well and good.

Not well and good was the lily-gilding statement, "Even today, nearly one in three Canadian women are victims of spousal abuse."

This oft-cited figure is a myth, fabricated from whole ideological cloth. If true, the epidemic social pathology it represents would render Canada as dysfunctional as Darfur.
...
Here are the facts Mr. Ignatieff's staff could not be bothered to research: The five-year incidence of spousal assault victimization reported by women in a recent StatsCan survey was 8% for women, 7% for men. It is not reported whether, as is likely, many of the victims were also perpetrators, since half of intimate partner violence (IPV) is reciprocal. For severe violence, the annual reported figures are 2.6% for men and 4.2% for women.

Unilateral spousal "battering" is fairly rare. In a U. S. national survey of men and women touched by IPV, only 6% of married women cited unprovoked abuse by their husbands against 10% of men reporting the same by their wives.'

From Duct Tape Evidence to Potential Insanity Plea, Anthony Trial Could Be One to Watch

anthony · 12 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Should the discovery of skeletal remains near the home of missing Orlando girl Caylee Anthony's family could be particularly damning evidence in the accused mother's trial, but the mother also has a number of defense options, attorneys told FOXNews.com.

If the duct tape-bound remains are proven to be those of Caylee — who has been missing since June -- the method used to dispose of the body will become a significant factor in the first-degree murder trial of the girl's mother, Casey Anthony, attorney Scott H. Cupp said.
...
"In any case where someone is charged with killing a child, the first thing you explore is some type of psychiatric defense," he said. "No one in their right mind would do something like this, so I'd hire my own experts to examine and explore her mental history and behavior to see if I can mount some type of psychiatric defense. No criminal would commit such a crime in such a fashion unless there was a psychiatric component."

Unicef report is "Crude, outdated and mum on the father's role"

Michael · 12 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Where the report has failed spectacularly, however, is in the omission of any specific reference to the role of men in childcare. It refers pointedly throughout to "parents", not just mothers, and includes parental and paternity leave, not just maternity leave.

But nowhere does it dig beneath the surface to explore the possibility that actively involving fathers more in childcare might produce better results all round, for families and the economy. Nowhere does it say out loud that this is a man's issue too.'

Alec Baldwin: NY Gov. Paterson Must Appoint a Woman

anthony · 12 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton might have won, if not for that. It isn't a good idea for anyone seeking a singular office like the Presidency to make that distinction. This country has been run for centuries by men only, and men named Adams and Wilson, Ford and Reagan, Carter and Clinton. To break that mold, you almost had to avoid the subject of breaking any mold whatsoever. (Witness some of Obama's recent appointments.)

But in a state like New York, teeming with talented, ambitious and dedicated women within its political circles, in a state like New York that has already elected a woman to one of its current US Senate terms, in any state wherein the Congressional delegation provides for two US Senators to hold office, Governor David Paterson must appoint a woman to replace Senator Clinton. It is not difficult to imagine that we are at the place in the history of New York politics where this is "the women's seat" of the two from New York.'

Girl Accused of Seeking Hit on Father

Matt · 12 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 15-year-old Hagerstown girl suspected of being part of a clique of teens who liked to suck one another's blood approached a friend on a crowded high school bus in October and asked him to kill her father, prosecutors say.

Prosecutors in Washington County in Western Maryland allege that she told the friend, a male classmate, that he could find her father at 5 a.m., climbing into the work truck he parked in the alley behind their rowhouse.

And that was where, on Halloween morning, her father's body was found in a pool of blood. He had been stabbed repeatedly in the head and neck.

This week, the girl was ordered held without bond on charges of soliciting murder.'

Women at the top of business outearn men dungone · 13 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, study here (.pdf file). Excerpts:

'The largest empirical analysis of the top echelons of publicly traded companies determined that women earned about $100,000 more per year than men of the same age, educational background and experience.'

'Female executives on the whole still earn less than male executives, but that's because more women quit before they reach the top, the study says.'

I'm sure this study will help dispel many of the typical feminist myths about income inequality. However, I still can't help but point out the irony in this:

'"That common perception is not borne out by this study," said Robert A. Miller, professor of economics and strategy and one of the authors. "If you're looking for evidence of gender discrimination in executive promotion and compensation, it's not happening there."'

It's such a pervasive view in our society that glass ceilings are for women, patriarchy is for men, and that so long as the discrimination favors women then it's not even worth mentioning as a possibility. They just showed that there is a gender wage gap, but already there are signs of relief that it is good news for women and that's all that matters. You can be sure that if it was the other way around, feminists would immediately seize the income difference as proof of male privilege and sexism.

JCPenney's Offensive Prison For Men

anthony · 13 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Summary: A guy buys his wife a vaccum cleaner for their anniversary, and she's none too pleased. Ha ha. Then she makes him get down on all fours and enter a doghouse. A little silly, a little creepy, but still a funny ad. Then the guy ends up in the dungeon, with the other naughty husbands. You could actually cut it there and it would be a fun ad. But it turns out all the guys have been there forever, never get released, have to eat food out of dog bowls and beg before an appeals board of privileged white women.

Would there be an outcry if the genders were reversed? Of course. Did Saatchi know about the misandry angle in this ad? Totally. They count on it not only for the initial laughs — extremes are (often) funny! — but also for some internet outcry like this post right here, and the inevitable others scads of blogs everywhere. The ad isn't getting skipped on a TiVo, and, hell, JCPenney doesn't even have to pay to air it.'

Foster mom gets 90 days for sexual assault of boy

anthony · 13 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BROWNWOOD -- The former foster mom accused of having sex with a 13-year-old foster child in her care, and having a child by the boy, was found guilty Friday and sentenced to 10 years probation.

The jury deliberated less than an hour before returning a guilty verdict about 11:30 a.m. against Phylicia Humphries, 26, for sexual assault of a child.

But it took more than five hours of deliberation before the jury assessed 10 years probation and a $10,000 fine. The sentence was handed down by 35th District Judge Stephen Ellis at around 7 p.m. Ellis added 90 days in jail as a condition of the sentence. Humphries will begin serving the 90-day sentence at the Brown County Jail on Dec. 29. Humphries also will be restricted from being around children under 17 and must register as a sex offender.'

Washington State U student paper: Playing the victim is overplayed

anthony · 13 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'This victim mentality is self-limiting. Far too many women attribute their personal failures to societal bias. While sexism does fuel some people's actions, discrimination alone does not account for all outcome inequalities. Blaming others for our situation is often much easier than self-reflection, but avoiding responsibility is not a successful life strategy. Instead, focusing on self-improvement is a proactive way to handle setbacks. Character development can only happen when we take responsibility for our actions.

Victims see themselves at the mercy of some kind of construct such as "the system" or "the Man" and may resign themselves to a lower position than they otherwise could achieve. Many women's advocacy groups overemphasize sexism in American society and portray women as helpless victims. This mindset does not empower women to take control of their lives. Rather, it places women at the mercy of ambiguous societal pressures.'

New Zealand: Greater Focus On Male Suicide Prevention Needed

anthony · 13 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The male suicide rate is nearly three times higher than that of women, according to figures released today by the Ministry of Health.

The figures relate to deaths in 2006, the most recent data available. 524 deaths by suicide with recorded in 2006, of which 386 were male.

Suicide Prevention Information New Zealand (SPINZ), a service of the Mental Health Foundation, says the rate of male suicide has decreased 22.7% since 1995, but the over-representation of men continues to be an area of concern.

"Depression is the single biggest risk factor for suicide, and for many men - particularly Maori men - it remains undiagnosed," says Merryn Statham, Director of SPINZ. "Reaching people, especially men, with information encouraging them to seek help is essential, as well as ensuring that mental health services are truly responsive."'

Remembering “The Dangerous Book for Boys”

anthony · 13 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I wouldn’t be at all surprised if The Dangerous Book for Boys were banned by zealous school groups, social workers, and other moral busybodies. I first encountered this admirable work when it was published in London last year. I liked its retro look–the lettering and typography of the cover recalls an earlier, more swashbuckling era–and I thought at first it must be a reprint. Imagine my surprise when I discovered that a book containing instructions on how to make catapults, how to hunt and cook a rabbit, how to play poker, how to make a waterbomb, was published today, the high noon of nannydom.

...

And speaking of “boys,” have you noticed how unprogressive the word sounds in today’s English? It is almost as retrograde as “girls,” a word that I knew was on the way out when an academic couple I know proudly announced that they had just presented the world with a “baby woman.”

Homeless vets get a hand

anthony · 13 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"It's a shameful fact that when you look at a homeless population, you can go '1,2,3,4,' and that fourth person will be a homeless vet," he said.

Patterson said that according to a 2007 count by the Greater Lansing Homeless Resolution Network, there are about 800 homeless veterans in Lansing.

"When you look at the addition of beds for the homeless - homeless vets in particular - it's something that's needed," said Joan Jackson Johnson, director of Lansing's Human Relations and Community Services Department, who attended the ceremony. "We have too many veterans that are homeless."

'Missing Males' white paper discloses influence of men's buying decisions on markets

anthony · 13 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA, Dec 12, 2008 /PRNewswire via COMTEX/ -- Men's increasing relevance as an influential buying audience in the home environment is featured in a new white paper, Missing Males, just released by Kleber & Associates (K&A).

Missing Males provides the marketplace with evidence of the importance of tapping into the male demographic to increase market share, and ways to effectively market and sell to today's male consumers by identifying five male personas -- Solo Pilot, 21st Century Bachelor, Domestic Techie, Practical Papa and Mr. Gender Neutrality.

"Recent studies support our notion of the significant role today's men play in the home environment," said Steven Kleber, president and founder of K&A, an integrated marketing and communications firm specializing in the home products channel. "Due to a number of factors, men are spending more time at home and in traditional 'female-dominated' areas like the kitchen. They are also responsible for assuming more home purchasing decisions including grocery shopping, cooking and cuisine."

Paul Anka's Wife Arrested for Domestic Battery

Michael · 14 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'ET confirms with police that Anna Anka, wife of veteran entertainer Paul Anka, was arrested and booked on domestic battery against her husband.

According to the police report, Anna allegedly hurled a piece of ice at Paul that hit him in the head. Paul went to the hospital to get the resulting wound closed up with two staples, then later returned home to find no sign of Anna.

The police report says Paul called authorities and reported her missing. When Anna eventually returned home, cops became aware of the situation and arrested her for domestic battery. The Ventura County D.A.'s office rejected the case.

Paul and Anna married in the summer of '08 and have one child together.'

FrontPage Magazine: The Inequality Illusion

anthony · 14 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An even more significant cause of the gender pay gap is that women tend to have compiled fewer years of uninterrupted service in their current jobs than men. Indeed, women are far more likely to leave the workforce for extended periods in order to attend to family-related matters such as raising children. This is simply a life choice to forego some degree of financial reward in exchange for the emotional reward of being an at-home parent, whether full-time or part-time. During the course of their overall work lives, men accumulate an extra 5 to 9 years on the job as compared to their female counterparts, and each of those additional years translates to approximately 3 or 4 percent more in annual pay.
...
Despite the fact that this evidence has long been established, the notion that discrimination explains the gender gap in pay endures. Thus countless women continue to believe that American society gives them a raw deal in terms of pay, and that ill-conceived “equal-pay” laws are the sole solution. In campaigning for the White House, Barack Obama capitalized on this ignorance on the part of some of his female supporters. If his message of “change” was intended in earnest, the president-elect could do worse than begin his tenure by repudiating the old myth of “unequal pay.”'

Australia: Discrimination against white males will soon be encouraged

anthony · 14 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DISCRIMINATION against dominant white males will soon be encouraged in a bid to boost the status of women, the disabled and cultural and religious minorities.

Such positive discrimination -- treating people differently in order to obtain equality for marginalised groups - is set to be legalised under planned changes to the Equal Opportunity Act foreshadowed last week by state Attorney-General Rob Hulls.

...

Companies and public bodies accused of discrimination can only be held to account after a complaint has been made.

But the proposed changes go much further, allowing the commission to inquire into discrimination, seize documents and search and enter premises after attempts to bring about change have failed.

Businesses and individuals would be required to change their ways even if a complaint had not been received.

Action could be taken where an unlawful act was "likely to occur", not just in cases where discrimination has taken place.'

Mother 'sold her twins for £9,000 to pay for liposuction operation'

Anonymous · 14 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother accused of selling her newborn twin boys for £9,000 to pay for a liposuction operation was involved in an online rent-a-womb trade with women desperate to have children, it was claimed today.
...
Tamara Stegeman said that Ringoir had run sperm 'parties' at her large family home in Lovendegem, a village near Ghent, where she charged £300 a time to be impregnated with her husband's sperm.
...
After her marriage break-up, Ringoir now has a new boyfriend, Mitch. In an interview with a Belgian newspaper last week he claimed that her husband had put her under pressure 'to have her body rebuilt'.

'Sonia never had debts before she met Marc,' he added.

Ringoir can't be charged with trading in her babies as this is not a crime under Belgian law. She now faces between one month and five years in jail if convicted. The case had shocked Belgium and there are now calls by politicians to change the law.'

Barbara Kay on Dec. 11 airing of John Gormley Live

Matt · 14 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Radio archive here. "Barbara Kay brings to our attention that men are equally abused by women, and yet most of the time stay silent."

F4J: "Keeping father in Christmas"

Matt · 14 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SINGING Santas have been striving to keep the father in Christmas with a protest outside Burton County Court.

The members of Fathers 4 Justice, many of whom are "victims of failing family law", sang doctored carols highlighting the 'injustice' of the fact that one in four children will not see their dad this Christmas.

Among the festive tunes were Deck The Judge For He Is Biased and Tis The Season To Free Jolly - an ode to Jolly Stainsby, an activist recently jailed for climbing on cainet member Harriet Harman's roof.'

National Post letter: "Another view on domestic violence"

Matt · 14 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'This letter from the Ontario Minister for Women Issues is typical of the misleading information that plagues Canadian policy on domestic violence. Partner homicide is extremely rare, and the Ontario Death Review Committee cherry-picked cases that would support the Ministry's view of domestic violence. The Ontario cases are ones that the committee decided were domestic violence, and do not include all cases of homicide, as the system selects out female precipitated homicides as "manslaughter" or lesser charges.'

UK: Girls exceed boys in sex partners by age 21

Matt · 14 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'YOUNG women are no longer just lying back and thinking of England, they are actively seeking out sexual partners - even more so than men.
...
The study of 2000 women in the UK, commissioned by More magazine, found that by the age of 21, women have had an average of nine sexual partners - two more than their male partner.
...
But if a woman met someone she really liked, 56 per cent would make him wait "a month or more" before she would have sex with him.

Of the women surveyed, 50 per cent admitted they had cheated on a partner and half of those had been unfaithful at least twice.

Only 25 per cent said they had a partner who cheated on them.

If a man did cheat, 99 per cent of young women would dump him.'

NY Post: 'Outlawing Boyhood'

anthony · 15 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Or maybe females have removed their shackles and put them on males. In her book, "The Trouble with Boys," journalist Peg Tyre investigates an education system in which women principals oversee women teachers who treat girl behavior as standard. All the way down this gynocracy, normal male behavior (squirming in preschool, being more interested in war stories than relationships, pretending to shoot each other) is redefined as antisocial, threatening, or (most sinister of all) indicative of "special needs" that gets boys disappeared to the Gitmo of Special Ed. (Boys are diagnosed with attention disorders at four times the rate of girls).

"Girls have been oppressed by men since the dawn of time," one sarcastic letter writer declared to Tyre. "Now we're on top for a nanosecond and it's a crisis." Note the "We." Too many women (liberal women, it seems to me) think of females as much like a sports team, in mortal competition with the other team. Only one "side" can win.'

Eagleforum: Where the Education Gender Gap is Leading America

anthony · 15 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women have a growing influence on the fields of law and government. They represent half of law school students and one-third of lawyers. By 2050, they're projected to represent 60% of law school students. Women constitute half of medical school students and one-fourth of physicians. They're projected to constitute 70% of medical school students and the majority of physicians by 2050. According to a U.S. Census Bureau report, women are starting businesses at twice the rate of men. They're also rapidly rising into managerial and administrative positions.

In short, women are becoming richer and more powerful - and this is a good thing for America. Fueling this trend is the growing number of women earning college degrees. More education pays off in a big way. Those with a bachelor's degree earn, on average, nearly twice what those with just a high school diploma earn in a year, and roughly $1 million more over a lifetime.

...
In short, the education gender gap that starts in kindergarten is leading to a nation of undereducated men who are contributing less and less to the economy and the family structure. This will adversely impact our nation's productivity, prosperity, and culture.

It's in the interest of women as well as men to turn this situation around. It's already too late to make up for the generations of boys whose educational attainment did not live up to its potential. However, it's not too late to help the current generation of boys.'

'Looking for Alternatives in Title IX Enforcement'

anthony · 15 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Western Illinois University is the first school to work publically with the Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights to comply with Title IX via interest surveys. Schools were likely resistant to using surveys until this point because of the large backlash from interest groups who threatened to sue any school that attempted to rely on interest surveys to demonstrate Title IX compliance. But proponents of true gender equity should applaud WIU's initiative. After all, the real goal should be equality of opportunity, not equality of outcomes. It should be of no greater concern that there are fewer women playing sports than it is that there are fewer men taking part in campus theater or arts programs—so long as everyone is given equal opportunity to participate.'

'True Woman' movement seeks counter-revolution to feminism

anthony · 15 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOUISVILLE, Ky. (ABP) -- A group of conservative Christian women is seeking 100,000 signatures on a "True Woman Manifesto" aimed at sparking a counter-revolution to the feminist movement of the 1960s.

Introduced at a gathering of more than 6,000 women in early October, the document calls not for equal rights, but instead proclaims that men and women are created to reflect God's image in "complementary and distinct ways."
...
Kassian said even Christian women have been influenced more by feminism more than they realize, including the idea that patriarchy -- the idea of submitting to male authority -- is the source of all their heartache and problems.'

New Song - "Judges in Family Court"

Anonymous · 15 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a new song you might be interested in. It's entitled "Judges in Family Court." Needless to say, you won't be hearing your local disc jockey playing this from your local "Top 40" chart anytime soon.

Not too bad for a first effort from this group. No, I'm not in this production, but was invited. I sing very poorly.

An Announcement and Tribute on the occasion of the death of Harry Braunschweiler

Matt · 15 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy Swanson:

We have lost another fighter for Fathers' Rights - Harry Braunschweiler Has Died

Long-time Quebec Fathers' Rights Activist Harry Braunschweiler of St. Adolphe d'Howard, Quebec who, with his comrade William Levy of Dorval, formed the "Council for the Status of Men Canada" Activist Group in Quebec, fought the system in that province for many years, died yesterday afternoon from a stroke which felled him late last week. In his final years Harry and his son Marc were reconciled and Harry became a "Hero Dad" to his son. William Levy fights on in his friend's name. More details on his life and death and tributes to his activism will be forthcoming in releases by SMC, William Levy and others.

Details of the class action suit which Harry and William took legal course against Quebec legalists for collusion between the Government of Quebec's feminist wing, Revenue Quebec, and the failure of the Barreau du Quebec of its mission, causing a breach in public protection can be found here and here.

After years of delay the case was scheduled to be finally heard on May 9th 2009 in Montreal.

RIP Harry.

You were an example to us all.
You were a hero.
A Father's Hero.
Our hero.
You never gave up.
You never faltered once and you never compromised in the struggle.
You will be in our memory always.

Police: Girl Shoots, Kills Boy On School Playground

anthony · 15 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ASHEBORO, N.C. -- Police arrested a Randolph County girl who they said shot and killed a boy Friday night.

The girl, identified as Meredith Kandies, allegedly shot the 16-year-old boy in the stomach Friday at about 10:30 p.m.

Two boys were arguing at the Guy B. Teachey Elementary School playground in Asheboro when the Kandies shot one of them in the stomach with a pistol, police said.
...
Kandies was charged with involuntary manslaughter and was taken to the Randolph County Jail.

She was being held on a $30,000 bond.'

Parents want female bus driver fired for spanking boy

anthony · 15 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EAGLE POINT, Ore. -- Parents in a Southern Oregon school district submitted a petition seeking the removal of a bus driver accused of spanking a 6-year-old boy who wouldn't sit down.

The parents also contend the woman is a bad driver.
...
The alleged spanking occurred Oct. 30. The boy's 10-year-old sister submitted a statement saying the driver grabbed her brother's arm and "hit him on the thigh four to five times."
...
Parents also said they are unhappy with the way the driver handles disciplinary matters, including shouting and whistling loudly into the intercom.

"I don't feel it's safe with her as a driver, and I don't think the kids should be treated like this," Parent Leah Ferrell said.'

Japan: Recession has 25% of fathers never seeing their kids

Matt · 15 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. And to think, if a Japanese woman wants a divorce she could simply say he is "never home" and that's good enough. It's even easieR than that; after WWII, the constitution the US gave Japan guaranteed the right of divorce for cause to Japanese women (that particular clause was inserted by a member of the constitutional scholar team Douglas MacArthur put together - it was added by, you guessed it, a feminist). So any time a mother wants to shed her "old man" and keep him paying anyway for the kids, she can do it. Meanwhile, Japanese men work themselves into an early grave under a legal system that views them as dispensible in every way except where money is concerned.

50-year-old boys' school torture, murder probe opened

Matt · 15 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Utterly shocking, almost beyond comment. Excerpt:

'Thirty-one crosses made of tubular steel and painted white line up unevenly in the grass and weeds of what used to be the grounds of a reform school in Marianna, Florida. The anonymous crosses are rusting away but their secrets may soon be exposed.

When boys disappeared from the school, administrators explained it away, said former student Roger Kiser.

They'd say, "Well, he ran away and the swamp got him," Kiser recalled. Or, "The gators got him." Or, 'Water moccasins got him."

...

Colon recalls his visits to the white house as if they were yesterday:

...

He said he was forced to lie face down in a blood-soaked pillow -- a pillow with small pieces of lips, tongue and skin on it from the previous boy. He'd clench the metal bar of the bed. The ceilings were low. He would hear the strap hit the ceiling and make a "tick" sound before it swung down on him.

...

Kiser, a fellow White House Boy, said the beatings provided entertainment for the guards and administrators.

"There were bets, and money changed hands on who could draw blood on the first blow," he said. He recalled his reaction when he went into a bathroom to clean up after enduring another beating.

...

Colon said his reaction was to bury the pain inside. He told a story about how another boy's terror left him wrestling with his own best and worst instincts even to this day.'

Holstein in Newsweek on Joint Custody: New Study--Father Engagement Vital to Kids

Matt · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

From Glenn Sacks' newsletter here. Excerpt:

'Ned Holstein, MD, MS, Executive Director of Fathers & Families, is a central figure in the new Newsweek article Not Your Dad's Divorce: How changes in child support laws, and a push by fathers for equal time, are transforming the way this generation of ex-spouses raise their children (12/15/08).'

UK: Media gets access to family courts

Disembodied_Voice · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The media will be able to report legal proceedings in family courts as part of sweeping changes proposed by ministers.

Cases heard in family courts, such as divorce and custody, will be open to the media subject to some restrictions such as not identifying those involved.

Justice Secretary Jack Straw said the changes would help "lift the veil" on how the legal process worked.'

Scores improve if boys and girls are apart, some schools find

anthony · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"We've seen huge, huge increases in test scores," said Kiner, who presented the data this fall at the National Association for Single Sex Public Education's international conference here.
...
"Boys like nonfiction. They like gory, bloody stories. They like protagonists who look like them, sound like them and act like them," she said. "We know from research that girls are more comfortable with other girls. That's why we all go to the bathroom together.
...
"We told the kids they could have dress-down days for every 20 days we went without a fight," Pointer said.

"The boys came to us and said they were losing their dress-down days because the girls were fighting."

Turner said it's possible the fight-free message was unconsciously directed to the boys.

So, he stepped up the message to the girls and now records school fights by grade and gender.'

Report: Female inmate population is increasing

anthony · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men still significantly outnumber women at the state's prisons and county jails, but it's women whose incarceration rate is climbing the fastest, according to a study released yesterday by The New Hampshire Women's Policy Institute.

Drug and alcohol abuse, domestic violence, and unemployment are behind the increase, the study found. But those factors - and child-care responsibilities - also complicate the treatment and rehabilitation needs for women, who more often than men are their children's main or only provider.

If the trend continues, the study said, six of the 10 county jails will have to add 52 beds just for female inmates by 2012. That's expensive, not just for taxpayers, but for children and families separated by jail and prison sentences, lawmakers and corrections officials said yesterday.'

NY Times View: A Crisis of Confidence for Masters of the Universe

anthony · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Meltdown. Collapse. Depression. Panic. The words would seem to apply equally to the global financial crisis and the effect of that crisis on the human psyche.

Of course, it is too soon to gauge the true psychiatric consequences of the economic debacle; it will be some time before epidemiologists can tell us for certain whether depression and suicide are on the rise. But there's no question that the crisis is leaving its mark on individuals, especially men.

...

I have plenty of female patients who work in finance at high levels, but none of them has had this kind of psychological reaction. I can't pretend this is a scientific survey, but I wonder if men are more likely than women to respond this way. At the risk of trading in gender stereotypes, do men rely disproportionately more on their work for their self-esteem than women do? Or are they just more vulnerable to the inevitable narcissistic injury that comes with performing poorly or losing one's job?'

Open house promotes awareness of men and suicide

anthony · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To encourage anyone who's feeling depressed to seek professional help is a primary objective of a Remembrance Open House being hosted by the Survivors of Suicide Grief at the ADAMH Board office, 142 S. Prospect St. at 7 p.m. Wednesday.

Another goal is to promote awareness of the reality that men are more at risk to commit suicide because they aren't as likely as women to seek help, said Jody Demo-Hodgins, executive director for the ADAMH Board.

Three members of the support group have lost sons, boyfriends or husbands to suicide, Demo-Hodgins said.

"They're really concerned that men are more challenged to cope because society expects men to toughen up and live with it," she said.'

NCAA's Brand: Don't fault Title IX for future cuts

anthony · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"My expectation is that over the next year or two we are going to see more" cuts of men's teams, Brand said Wednesday in a telephone interview, "and so I am trying, frankly, to pre-empt the argument against Title IX, an unfair argument, I believe, and dissuade universities from going public with this approach.
...
Schools must pass one part of a three-part test to meet the participation requirements of Title IX: have numbers of male and female athletes proportionate to enrollment; have a continuing history of expanding opportunities for women; or meet the interests and abilities of the women on campus.

Schools must consider Title IX because they cannot pass the second or third tests if they drop women's teams.

"Title IX is a factor because fairness is a factor," Brand said.

"That is utterly disgraceful," said Jim McCarthy of the College Sports Council, an advocacy group for men's sports. "He knows perfectly well Title IX is going to force schools to target men's sports first. He is asking schools to join him in a whitewash."'

Title IX prompts changes and anger at the University of Delaware

anthony · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEWARK -- The University of Delaware subtracted one sport and added another Tuesday but, in its view, gained in the effort to keep in line with Title IX gender-equity mandates.

Golf will become UD's 13th women's sport sometime in the next few years, athletic director Edgar Johnson said.

And while Delaware was able to preserve men's cross country and outdoor track and field, where team members feared elimination, the men's indoor track program will be downgraded from varsity to club status next year.
...
Men's indoor track and field will be the first sport Delaware has discontinued since another men's activity, wrestling, was axed in June 1991.

There was widespread speculation that men's cross country and both indoor and outdoor track would be cut. Johnson confirmed for a Nov. 12 News Journal story that no decisions had been made, but Title IX put some men's sports at risk.

The news prompted a flood of calls, letters and e-mails -- even a movement on the social networking Web site Facebook -- aimed at preserving the cross country and track teams.'

RADAR ALERT: H.Res. 1397 Commends NCADV for Hateful Gender Stereotypes

Matt · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

On July 31, 2008, H.Res. 1397 was introduced to commend "the important achievements of the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence as it celebrates 30 years of service to local domestic violence shelter and service programs and the victims of domestic violence." [Bill text (.pdf file)]

Last week, the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence (NCADV) sent out an action alert urging their supporters to contact their representatives and request that they co-sponsor the resolution. (http://www.ncadv.org/publicpolicy/AlertsandUpdates_112.html)

A visit to the NCADV website reveals that almost everything they do is focused on female victims, and the "fact" sheet they provide. (http://www.ncadv.org/files/DomesticViolenceFactSheet(National).pdf) is inaccurate and misleading. In addition, the NCADV sells a poster that states "El la golpeo 150 veces" (Spanish for "He beat her 150 times"), which ignores the fact that women are just as likely to engage in partner violence, plays on women's deepest fears, and stereotypes Hispanic men as violent.

RADAR has prepared a flyer (http://www.mediaradar.org/docs/RADARflyer-NoOnHRes1397.pdf) that we ask you fax your House Rep as soon as possible. At the top of the flyer, print "Vote 'No!' on H. Res. 1397" and add your name, city, and ZIP code. In the alternative, please call your Rep. and ask that he or she vote "No!" on H. Res. 1397. You can find the fax and phone numbers by going to http://www.house.gov/ and then going to the webpage of your representative.

As always, thanks for your help.

++++++

PTA offical found half naked with 13-YO boy

badgerb · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

From the article:

'A Baldwin PTA official has been charged with endangering the welfare of a child after she and a 13-year-old boy were caught in the backseat of a vehicle parked behind an elementary school, Nassau police said.

Joan Tuckruskye, 44, of 1111 Steele Blvd., was in the backseat of a 2008 Nissan Pathfinder in a parking lot behind Meadow Elementary on Northern Boulevard with the boy Friday night, said Det. Lt. Kevin Smith.

Tuckruskye and the boy, who police did not identify, were naked from the waist down, Smith said.'

It never ends.

Wikipedia: 'Missing white woman syndrome'

anthony · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Wikipedia entry here. Excerpt:

'Missing White Woman Syndrome (MWWS) is a term used to describe what is alleged to be a disproportionately greater degree of coverage in television, radio, and print news reporting of a missing person case involving a white woman, compared with cases concerning male or non-white individuals. In the United States, a very small percentage of missing persons are victims of non-family abductions, and these victims are, according to the FBI, the most endangered. The majority of these missing persons are white female juveniles.

The essential features of a missing person said to give rise to Missing White Woman Syndrome are sex,her race, (relative) prettiness, and age. These features are said to provoke positive discrimination in the reporting as news of the disappearance of a young white woman, and so to increase public interest in her disappearance.'

UK: Woman who cried rape jailed

anthony · 16 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who cried rape and got her partner and a friend locked up is today starting a four month jail term.

Burnley Crown Court heard how Dana Doherty, 22, had called police and claimed her then boyfriend Ben Stanworth and friend Martin Massa had pinned her down on a bed and forced her into sex.

Both were arrested, medically examined, kept in the cells and questioned before she owned up and admitted her claims were not true true, Burnley Crown Court heard.

She later told police she had been angry with Mr Stanworth after a row and wanted to hurt him - but she had no reason to accuse Mr Massa.

Doherty, who has convictions for attacking her father and her sister, was said to have a personality disorder. Her solicitor pleaded for her to keep her freedom and said she was on the waiting list for treatment.'

NOW Urges Obama to 'Restore Educational Equity Protections'

anthony · 17 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently NOW joined with the National Coalition for Women and Girls in Education (NCWGE) to recommend policy changes and legislative initiatives that would restore protections in academic as well as athletic programs -- which apply to both girls and boys.

The list of women's issues that the new administration will be reviewing is important because eight years of the conservative, anti-women's rights Bush administration has taken a serious toll on our rights. Of course the Supreme Court and conservative congressional leaders have done their share of undermining equal education protections, particularly those established in Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972.

At the top of our list is immediate repeal of the "Additional Clarification of Intercollegiate Athletics Policy," which we believe discourages the inclusion of young women in college sports programs. Additionally, Department of Education regulations introduced in 2006 allow public schools to establish segregated-sex education programs without strong protections against sex discrimination, Many believe that these regulations are unconstitutional, and the coalition is asking for their withdrawal.'

CNN: Pressure's on for New York governor to pick female senator

anthony · 17 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- With Sen. Hillary Clinton's expected appointment as secretary of state, women are at risk of seeing a decrease in their representation in the Senate -- and some are putting pressure on New York Gov. David Paterson to make sure that does not happen.

...

Women's advocacy groups are calling on Paterson to turn to what they see as an abundance of qualified women when it comes time for him to make his pick. Paterson has the power to appoint a replacement, who then will face a special election in 2010 to fill out Clinton's term. The candidate would have to run again in 2012 for a full six-year term.

...

NOW, along with the Eleanor Roosevelt Legacy Committee, has been urging people to call Paterson to voice their support for a female senator.

...

Lasry said Paterson has an opportunity to give women a "leg up" and send a message to people across the country.'

Poll: Gender not important for Obama picks

anthony · 17 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to Barack Obama's Cabinet, women offer some intriguing advice:

Gender shouldn't matter.

That's the finding of a new national poll of 600 women – two-thirds of respondents said Obama should focus strictly on qualifications and "should not consider gender at all" in building his team.

A mere 3 percent said Obama should appoint an equal number of men and women to his Cabinet. And 27 percent staked out a middle ground – saying Obama should aim for gender balance, but not at the expense of finding the best people, the poll for the Lifetime Networks found.'

Carey Roberts: Hillary Clinton, Feminist-at-Large

anthony · 17 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'The truth is, Hillary does have extensive experience working in other countries — but not in the way most Americans would expect. During the Clinton administration, she was Bill's goodwill ambassador, traveling to the four corners of the globe as a high-profile advocate of the feminist agenda.
...
The following year she led the U.S. delegation to China to attend the Fourth World Conference on Women. She delivered the meeting's keynote speech, making the wrongful assertion that "Women are 70% of the world's poor." Clinton narcissistically concluded, "Women's rights are human rights and human rights are women's rights."

Three years later she appeared at a meeting of First Ladies held in El Salvador. This time she made the bizarre claim that "Women have always been the primary victims of war."'

"From Chauvinist Patriarchy to Feminist Matriarchy"

anthony · 17 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What's more, feminists of Hirshman's stripe make ordinary women angry by their replacement of the patriarchal judgment of women's lives with the constant scrutiny and judgment of the feminist matriarchy. Women are weary of being told that they have to sacrifice work for family, family for work, themselves for the greater good, the greater good for themselves, and on and on. Why is it so difficult for feminists to understand that women have deep, complex, often conflicting desires — just like men! — and that human flourishing is not the sacrifice of most of those desires for a lifestyle that some cranky feminist has told us is better than our own? Why are women confronted with two and only two options: the maternal drone or the worker bee? You call this progress?'

Groups Push Obama For Cabinet-level Office on Women

anthony · 18 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here (.pdf file). Excerpt:

'As leaders of women's organizations and advocates for women's equality, collectively representing over 14 million women, we are writing to elaborate on the need for historic levels of women's appointments and the need to restore and strengthen executive branch offices for women.

We applaud your initial appointments of talented women and we encourage you to further gender balance your White House, Cabinet, and executive appointments. The U.S., with women composing just 17% of the members of Congress, ranks 71st among the world's parliaments in representation of women. With women so underrepresented in Congress, we believe it is crucial for women's representation to increase dramatically at the executive branch of decision-making. Many of us will be submitting names of excellent and diverse women for your consideration.

Like you, we believe that we are at a time of real change in our nation's history. Through both words and actions, you have encouraged and challenged the nation to think transformationally.

In this spirit, we urge you to create a Cabinet-level Office on Women that will deal not only with the status of women, but with the many inequities women face in our society, our nation, and our world. Such an office is even more necessary today, because of the increased disparities and backward movement of the past eight years.'

Women's groups unhappy with Obama cabinet picks

anthony · 18 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Perhaps the plumpest appointment in President-elect Barack Obama's Cabinet went to a woman: Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, who was nominated for secretary of state. But his track record on picking women for his Cabinet is no different from that of the two presidents who preceded him.
...
"So far the numbers of women don't look great," Kim Gandy, president of the National Organization for Women, said of Obama's picks. "George Bush started off with this many, and Bill Clinton, at the height of his presidency, had nine out of 19."

Ellen Malcolm, president and founder of Emily's List, said Obama "obviously started off with a bang, with Janet Napolitano, Hillary Clinton and Susan Rice." She added: "We've been disappointed to see women suggested for some positions and not chosen."

CNN: Children forced into cell-like school seclusion rooms

anthony · 18 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MURRAYVILLE, Georgia (CNN) -- A few weeks before 13-year-old Jonathan King killed himself, he told his parents that his teachers had put him in "time-out."

"We thought that meant go sit in the corner and be quiet for a few minutes," Tina King said, tears washing her face as she remembered the child she called "our baby ... a good kid."

But time-out in the boy's north Georgia special education school was spent in something akin to a prison cell -- a concrete room latched from the outside, its tiny window obscured by a piece of paper.

Called a seclusion room, it's where in November 2004, Jonathan hanged himself with a cord a teacher gave him to hold up his pants.'

Official: Forget 'man flu' - it's women who really milk it when it comes to being ill

Anonymous · 18 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's a tale to make any man who has been ribbed for having 'man flu' suddenly feel a whole lot better - it's WOMEN who are worse at complaining of colds and flu, according to new research out today.
...
It is assumed that sufferers of man flu are exaggerating their symptoms to extract maximum sympathy from a few sniffles and force their partners to run after them with tissues, hot water bottles and painkillers.

But now a poll has found that most women admit exaggerating their symptoms to gain attention or to get a day off work.

Men, on the other hand, are revealed as more stoic and less likely to create a fuss or demand attention when ill.'

I think we all knew that anyway...

Europe's most prolific female serial killer strikes again

Anonymous · 19 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The woman identified only as Diana P, 45, was found dead by walkers in a ditch near her Fiat Panda car in October.

Extensive DNA testing came back this week on both the corpse and the car, implicating the predator known as the 'woman without a face' who has eluded police for 15 years.

...

The killer first struck in May 1993 when she turned up on the doorstep of churchwarden Lieselotte Schlenger in the town of Idar-Oberstein clutching flowers.

Having bluffed her way into the 62-year-old woman's home, she used the wire that bound the flowers to strangle her.'

"Why Women Lie About Rape"

Matt · 19 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy Swanson:

Why Women Lie About Rape
By Paul Clements

The National Organization for Women , radical feminists, and Women's Studies departments, often deny that women make false accusations about rape by asking the naïve, simplistic, and self-serving question: "Why would a woman lie?"

It turns out that there are plenty of reasons women lie about rape, either deliberately or out of desperation.

A U.S. Air Force study, "The False Rape Allegation in the Military Community (1983) investigated 556 cases of alleged rape, and found a 60% rate of false accusations. As part of the study, women who were found to have made false accusations were asked "WHY?"

Motivations given by the women who acknowledged they had made false accusations:

Reason - Percent

Spite or revenge - 20
To compensate for feelings of guilt or shame - 20
Thought she might be pregnant - 13
To conceal an affair - 12
To test husbands' love - 9
Mental/emotional disorder - 9
To avoid personal responsibility - 4
Failure to pay, or extortion - 4
Thought she might have caught VD - 3
Other - 6

The study found that most false accusations are "instrumental" – they served a purpose. If the purpose isn't avoiding guilt, or getting revenge, it might serve a more focused purpose, for example, telling her parents; "I didn't just go out and get pregnant, I was raped." Or, telling her husband, "I didn't have an affair, it wasn't my fault, I was raped."

An unrelated Washington Post article, "Unfounded Rape Reports Baffle Investigators" (6/27/1992) also found a wide range of motivations to falsely accuse men of rape. Anger toward boyfriends was common. One woman had her boyfriend spend 13 months in jail before she acknowledged that she had lied. One woman accused her newspaper delivery man of raping her at gunpoint because she needed an excuse to be late to work.

Neither woman was prosecuted or even reprimanded for lying to the police and attempting to have a man frivolously imprisoned. In a recent US case, police say a young woman who admitted to falsifying two rape reports only wanted a day off from work.

All rape accusations need to be considered seriously, as, no doubt, rape does occur. But a balance needs to be maintained between the claims of the accuser against the all-too-often legitimate denial of the accused.

Women who are found to have made a false sexual assault complaint should receive the same jail sentence as the male victim would have received if he had been convicted. That will put the brakes on fake rape charges.

RADAR ALERT: VAWA: Our 2008 legislative scorecard: A CLEAN SWEEP!

Matt · 19 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

VAWA Reformers –

The 110th Session of Congress has now come to a close, and the lights dimmed in the Senate and the House. So it's time to tally up our accomplishments.

In 2008, four domestic violence bills were introduced in Congress:

1. International Violence Against Women Act (S. 2279 and H.R. 5927)
2. National Domestic Violence Volunteer Act (S. 1515 and H.R. 6088)
3. Domestic Violence Victim Protection Act (H.R. 203)
4. Commending the important achievements of the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence as it celebrates 30 years of service to local domestic violence shelter and service programs (H. Res. 1397)

In all four cases, we succeeded in preventing passage of these bills, even though we were out-manned and out-spent, and even though the VAWA Mafia pulled out all the stops to secure passage of I-VAWA and the National Domestic Violence Volunteer Act. Break out the champagne!

To every person who responded to a RADAR Alert, made a phone call, sent a fax, fired off an email, spoke to a staffer, or came to Washington DC to do lobbying, THANK YOU! Your effort TRULY MADE A DIFFERENCE!

Of course, our battle is far from over. The VAWA Mafia has big plans for 2009. But in 2008, our side emerged the victor!!!

Sincerely,

The RADAR Team

P.S. Want to get an early start on lobbying Congress in 2009? Come to DC January 29 and 30. That will be our first big lobbying event of the year.

Mother protests one-sided suspension

Grummbler · 19 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A boy and a girl have sex at school, the boy is the only one suspended.

Interesting quote: "Besides her son, Goss said other male students have been suspended for sexual activity while the girls involved have been allowed to remain in school."

Glenn Sacks: Feminist TV Ad Pushes 'Wage Gap' Myth

anthony · 19 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'The ad above pretends that women get paid less than men because of anti-female discrimination. In reality, the wage gap exists for many legitimate reasons, including:

1) Men work longer hours at more demanding and hazardous jobs.

2) Men are more likely to travel, relocate or have long commutes for their jobs.

3) Men are more likely to have more years and more consecutive years of experience, because women are more likely to work part time or take years off of work to care for their children.

Given these factors, it would be very hard for men to not earn considerably more than women. When men and women of matched qualifications are working in matched jobs, women earn as much as men do.'

Federal Judge Critical of Firm's Fee Petition in Custody Case

anthony · 19 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal judge has sharply rebuked a team of lawyers from Fox Rothschild for filing an "excessive" fee petition after winning an international custody case, saying their bill of more than $163,000 in fees and expenses was simply too large for a "garden variety" custody battle.

"I simply cannot accept or justify an attorneys' fee award of this size in a case of this nature," U.S. District Judge Lawrence F. Stengel wrote in his 11-page opinion in Clarke v. Clarke.

...
Springer led a team that filed suit under the Hague Convention on behalf of Michael Clarke of Australia, alleging that his wife, Kristen Clarke, had taken their two children, Nathan, 5; and Grace, 2, to the United States and refused to return.

Kristen Clarke, who was born in the United States, responded by claiming in court papers that the children would be in "grave danger" if returned to Australia because, she alleged, Michael Clarke had sexually abused his son.

In May, Stengel ruled in favor of Michael Clarke, concluding that the allegations of sexual abuse had not been proven and had stemmed from the "overtly suggestive" techniques of a Pennsylvania psychologist whose practices "were designed to lead [Nathan] to say that his father abused him."
...
The psychologist, Joanne Cohen Hamilton, had testified that "play therapy" in which Nathan would draw pictures, act and play games, revealed evidence of sexual abuse.'

UK: Married father taunted by colleagues wins landmark harassment case

Anonymous · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A married father-of-three who says he was driven out of his job by being called a 'faggot' won a landmark case at the Court of Appeal yesterday.

Stephen English, 56, was taunted about being gay by his colleagues every day, even though he is heterosexual.

The teasing was so relentless that he felt 'tormented' and resigned from his job as a window blinds salesman.
...
'Until now, victims of this type of abuse had little or no legal protection. By supporting Mr English's case, the commission has helped to clarify the law to protect those who suffer harassment based on old-fashioned stereotypes.'"

Wife of police officer charged with falsely reporting rape

anthony · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ROGERSVILLE — The estranged wife of recently exonerated Kingsport police officer Daniel Scott Lane has been arrested in connection with a false rape accusation she allegedly made against Lane last month.

Courtney Jo Lane, 30, 203 Hickory Hills Road, Church Hill, was charged Tuesday evening with filing a false report, a Class E felony punishable by one to two years in prison.

A domestic assault charge filed Nov. 20 against Daniel Lane, 32, of Kingsport, was dismissed Monday by Hawkins County Sessions Judge David Brand, reportedly at the request of Courtney Lane.'

Brunei: False Rape 'Victim' Gets 1-Month Jail Term

anthony · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Bandar Seri Begawan - The Bandar Seri Begawan Magistrate's Court sentenced a 26-year-old woman to one-month imprisonment yesterday after she pleaded guilty to making a false rape report to the police.

Wailah binti Sakrib made a report at the Limau Manis Police Station six days ago that she was raped by an unknown individual at a house in Kampong Masin, the court heard.
As a result of police investigation, the police arrested two men, namely Ngo Van Van, 42, and Marzukin bin Darwash, 28, at the vicinity of a construction site in Kampong Masin.
...
According to the Deputy Public Prosecutor, Christopher Ng, who was assisted by Prosecuting Officer Attiyah Abas said it was revealed that the defendant had, in fact, asked for money in exchange for sexual services.'

Idealized-beauty women found to affect men's self-images negatively

anthony · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In yet another chapter of the Mars-Venus relationship of men and women, a University of Missouri professor has discovered that men can also suffer esteem-issues after being exposed to idealized women in magazines.

Common wisdom assumed that men see beautiful women and merely grunt or smirk, but Jennifer Aubrey, an assistant professor of communication, found that men — at least the pool of 18- to 23-year-old college men that she studied — were more likely to feel self-conscious about their own bodies when they viewed highly attractive females.

"It's simple," said Aubrey, whose research is being published in Human Communication Research this month. "One of the assumptions is that men believe that hot women want hot guys. This is not shocking. What's interesting is how men internalize this information."'

India: "Women are better administrator than men"

anthony · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"It is a reality that women bring more commitment to an organization. They listen better and are more sensitive to the needs and demands of other workers," said Ms Anu Aga.

"It is also unfortunately true that we as women are responsible in communicating the same gender-biased values to our children and in perpetuating this mindset through our actions," cautioned Ms Aga.

Ms Rumjhum Chatterjee, Managing Director, Feedback Ventures, said, "Though men must accept the management qualities of women, women on their part also need to pick up right level of confidence."

"It is a man's world where men and family decide and make their choices. But that leaves for majority of women no choice at all," she added.'

Brain thickness may affect spatial skills

anthony · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'IOWA CITY, Iowa, Dec. 19 (UPI) -- The greater parietal lobe surface area in male brains is directly related to better performance on mental rotation tasks, U.S. researchers said.
...
Magnetic resonance imaging showed about a 10 percent difference in parietal lobe surface area -- 43 square centimeters for men and 40 square centimeters for women.

"It's important to note that it isn't that women cannot do the mental rotation tasks, but they appear to do them slower, and neither men nor women perform the tasks perfectly," study lead author Tim Koscik said in a statement.

Study co-author Dr. Peg Nopoulos said while the way the brain performs a task may differ between genders, the big question remains whether this is nature or nurture. Nopoulos predicts "if we eventually see both a strong performance and parietal lobe structural difference in children, it would support a biological, not just environmental, effect."

"Is it sexist to think men are angrier than women?"

anthony · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier today we asked readers to imagine an angry face. Then, in a surprise poll, we asked what gender the face was. So far our results match those of a study led by D. Vaughn Becker: over three-fourths of the responses were "male."

In the published study, there was no difference in the response based the respondent's gender. Both men and women are much more likely to think of a male "angry" face than a female one.

If we'd asked you to picture a happy face instead of an angry face, the results would switch almost as dramatically in the opposite direction: Most people say happy faces are female, although in this case, the effect is entirely due to male respondents. Women's responses are evenly divided male-female.

But the researchers weren't just interested in imagined faces. What they really wanted to know is if there's a gender bias in recognizing facial expressions. Are we more likely to perceive a male face as angry and a female face as happy? Are we quicker and better at recognizing angry faces in men compared to women? If we are, does this mean we're sexist?'

India: Women empowerment at the cost of men's liberties

anthony · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WOMEN EMPOWERMENT, women equality, etc. seem to be the buzzwords these days with more and more articles coming about increased awareness amongst women about their rights. Since so many decades we have been hearing of these campaigns and they are still running. Feminists still seem to cry about women rights and women empowerment and women equality. For the past almost three decades women empowerment is happening and crores of rupees are spent on it every year and yet if the need for the same is felt, then either something is wrong with the women or their empowerment.

Whatever be the cause, in all this efforts by the various lobbies and groups, the real cost of women empowerment is being borne by men. Whenever men try to talk about their problems / rights / issues, they are subdued saying women empowerment is more important and their problems always take a back seat, when it comes to implementing solutions. And that is the reason in the past 60 years, not a single rupee has been spent for men's welfare.'

"In 2008, feminism is still an f-word"

anthony · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Notice how men losing jobs in construction and manufacturing is considered a bright future for women. Excerpt:

'Today, women have reproductive freedom. More women are independent, thanks to affirmative action hiring that gave them access to better-paying jobs. More women with more money helps them escape abusive relationships, as evidenced by the drop in reported homicides.

And the future looks bright.

Women outnumber men in most university faculties and, reports BusinessWeek, are better suited to the knowledge economy, "which rewards supposedly female traits such as sensitivity, intuition, and a willingness to collaborate.

This while traditionally male jobs, in construction and manufacturing, are disappearing.
...
So here we are, at the end of 2008, and "feminism" is still not only misunderstood and deliberately misinterpreted, it's still an f-word.

Count on me in 2009 to keep flipping the misogynists the bird.'

Do hopes for development in Africa really only lie with women?

anthony · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Much has been made in recent weeks about the role of women in Katine. Women are presented as the handmaidens of Africa's development and we are asked to place our hope in them. We have seen that men drink too much, and are not always good at managing family matters. Women are presented as responsible citizens, better at running businesses and investing in their children's education. There is some truth to this.

And yet, for better or worse, economic and social life in Katine is organised around households, not around individuals. If there is to be development then it will involve men and women. As we can see in the case of the Odulai family it is the rather complicated set of relationships that makes up a family (in Frances Odulai's case, two wives and 18 children) that determines the welfare of the family. The relationship between Odulai and Ajiko Salina and Alapo Sarafina, his wives, will determine whether or not the family eats, children get fed or the sick get money to buy drugs in the dispensary.'

UK: Gay man seeks visitation of child after 'arrangement' falls through

Matt · 20 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Instead, this child was conceived by an arrangement between a gay father and a lesbian mother, both of whom were living with other partners at the time. Michael and Joanne were not even introduced through friends, but by the prosaic means of a classified ad, placed by Michael in a gay newspaper, requesting 'a lesbian partner for a mutually beneficial child-rearing experience'.

The couple, Michael reveals, had met each other only four times before they decided to proceed on this most emotive and important of joint endeavours.

Once their baby was born, there was intermittent contact between Michael and his son, but after three years Ms Skinner suddenly broke all contact and has since apparently absconded with their child. And so, today, Michael now finds himself engaged in a custody battle with a women he barely knows, which has already cost him tens of thousands of pounds.'

Clare Boothe Luce Institute issues 'The Vagina Monologues Exposed: A Student's Guide to V-Day'

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Student Guide here (.pdf file). Excerpt:

'So, what's the best tactic for dealing with V-Day? What can students do to counteract the damaging effects The Vagina Monologues has on young people and campus life? The Clare Boothe Luce Policy Institute is a voice for those who want to stand up for decency. CBLPI created V-Day Unveiled to support students who are willing to take a stand against The Vagina Monologues and the V-Day College Initiative by:

Refusing to replace "Valentine's Day" with "Vagina Day"

Renouncing the offensive and degrading image of women and men presented in The Vagina Monologues and V-Day activities

Rejecting the false claim that these tasteless exhibitions will put an end to violence against women and girls.'

Ed. note: CBLPI home page is http://www.cblpi.org/

'The forgotten father figure'

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Opinion piece here. Excerpt:

'If we truly want to do something about gang violence and youth violence, it is time to reverse the crazy incentives that have thrown more and more fathers out of kids' lives.

Here is what needs to be done, in my opinion.

1.Pass Equal Shared Parenting legislation for fit parents and do it this legislative year.

2. Reform the Massachusetts Family and Probate Courts and make it harder for a father to be relegated to a visitor. Fathers are not visitors, they are parents. Kids need their dads too.

3. Reform Title IV (d) of the Federal Social Security Act and remove the perverse incentives that throw dads out of the house.

4. Reform the Violence Against Women's Act (VAWA) and make it gender neutral. Enforce due process laws. Make false accusations a crime.

5. Reform the Crime Bill to enforce due process laws. Make sure mandatory arrest laws are applied equally to men and women.

6. Do not hand out restraining orders without an evidentiary hearing. Remove the check box off the restraining order form for contact with children. Any restraining order that prevents contact with one's children must go through, at a minimum, an evidentiary hearing, but even more important, a jury trial by your peers. It is harder to fire an employee in a large company than it is to remove a parent, especially a father, from a child's life.

The bottom line: dads, fathers do matter. If we want to get to the root of gang and teen violence, we have to find a way to let a dad be a dad and be involved in his kids' lives. Putting bandaids to the problem will never work. Having a dad in one's life will.'

Why are so many female teachers targeting boys for sexual abuse?

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"There's a range of reasons these women are abusing boys," Shakeshaft told WND, "not just one."

"One of the reasons is because they can, because we haven't done in schools what we need to do to stop this from happening," Shakeshaft said. "A second reason is because they are in power positions, and they abuse power just as males abuse power."

Shakeshaft told WND, however, that most of the women who aren't hardened predators – including perplexing cases like LaFave's, where a woman may only grow attached to one boy and wouldn't dream of sexually abusing others – rationalize their romantic fixation because, inside, the teacher feels like a teenager herself.

"Most of these people who cross boundaries have arrested emotional development," Shakeshaft said. "They're putting themselves into the same peer group as their students.'

Australia: Lesbian teacher victim's ordeal was 'forced love'

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'THE words of the teenage schoolgirl who was befriended and then molested by now-jailed former teacher Amanda Thompson reveal her damage.

"Life is meant to be fun when you're a teenager. It's meant to be the best years of your life," wrote the schoolgirl.

"Amanda ruined that for me," the girl said in her handwritten victim impact statement tendered in court.

"Instead of going out to movies or going over to a friend's house on the weekend, I was drunk in the Valley with my teacher trying to get me into clubs, only to go back to her place to have sex."

Her abuser is behind bars, but for the Brisbane teen targeted by her lesbian teacher, the torment of the two-year nightmare continues.'

Australia: Victim Industry Attacks Men On Christmas

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Family violence is expected to peak over the Christmas holiday season, with shocking new statistics showing New Year's Day is the worst day for the incidence of abuse.
...
"It's important people understand that violence at any time is unacceptable, particularly violence directed at women and children," Mr Overland said.
...
"The Christmas holiday period can be a nightmare for women and children who live with abusive men. When all you wish for at Christmas is not to be hurt, it's a very sorry state of affairs.'

More False Domestic Violence Statistics

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Economic stress is a very, very important factor in domestic violence," says Shoshana Ringel, an associate professor of social work at the University of Maryland School of Social Work and an expert on domestic abuse. Ringel says that for many couples, financial problems can "definitely push things over the line."

More than half a million Americans, almost all of them women, are abused by their partners every year, according the U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics. Experts say the current economic crisis is so recent that there is little hard data on an increase in abuse. But the National Domestic Violence Hotline, a leading national organization located in Austin, Texas, says that in September, it saw a 21 percent increase in the number of calls it received, compared with last year. In October, the last month for which there are statistics, the rise was 18 percent.'

MND: Times are hard. Let’s trash men.

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two metropolitan dailies, the Baltimore Sun and the Detroit Free Press ran articles here and here this week on the increase in domestic violence the economic downturn seems to have produced. And guess what? All the victims are women. Why are we not surprised?

OK, I know, not all of them are women, just "almost all" according to the Sun. The Free Press calls it a "prevalent pattern" to which there are only "a few exceptions." And as usual, all of the personal examples of DV cited in the articles have male perpetrators and female victims. Nary a male victim is interviewed, only women. According to these articles, women don't abuse men, women don't abuse children and women don't abuse other women.

The Sun article maintains its facade of objectivity by citing Department of Justice statistics which say that 73% of DV victims are female. Now if I were writing the piece, I wouldn't call 73% "almost all" of anything. (Who would say that a baseball team with a 73% winning record won "almost all" of its games? Heckuva good year, but "almost all?") But what's more important is the fact that the DOJ statistics are the only source the article cites. And the way those figures are compiled makes them differ sharply from studies which ask people if they've ever committed DV or had DV committed against them. Those figures consistently show that women and men are equal opportunity abusers.'

India: Domestic Violence Cited As One Reason For Increased Suicide Among Married Men

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of suicides committed by married men is 57,593 whereas that by married women is 30,064. It seams that almost double the number of married men have committed suicide as compared to married women. Also, if one goes by the analysis of the year 2006, 30 per cent of suicides are due to domestic disputes. So in 2006, close to 16,500 married men committed suicide only because of domestic abuse.

Also there is a 33 per cent rise in suicides in the last decade (1996-2006). Hence in 1996, around 11500 married men must have committed suicide because of domestic violence, which gives us an average of 14000 suicide cases per year.

For 2007, the figure works out close to 16000. Hence in 11 years, 156,000 married men have committed suicide due to domestic violence.

Yet, the government did not take any strict measures to protect these men. Society ridicules these suicides by passing off these men as weak and irresponsible and cites financial reasons as the cause of their suicide. On the contrary, for the years 2006 and 2007 as per NCRB, the suicides due to financial reasons are only five per cent.'

"Restroom ads will offer help to abused"

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PONTIAC -- A new project that hopes to save women from domestic violence plans to use a nontraditional venue to deliver its message: bathrooms.

The Women's Commission for Oakland County, a volunteer group, hopes to launch a pilot project in 2009 in Southfield that would post information in women's public and private restrooms on how to seek help in domestic violence situations.

"We picked Southfield because it's so diverse with its residential, commercial, retail and industrial sectors," said Wanda Lohmeier, commission chairwoman. "Bathrooms are a private place, and this is a very private crime we are dealing with. This would give them numbers and groups to help."

'White ribbon' makes difference in middle-school students' lives

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this year, the Reno/Tahoe chapter of the American Marketing Association contacted Strauss for help with the local White Ribbon Campaign, an international effort raising awareness of domestic violence issues by encouraging people, particularly men, to wear white ribbons during a designated week to show that they condemn domestic violence. In conjunction with the campaign, the chapter also decided to hold a fund-raiser for a local charity, Crisis Call Center, which assists domestic violence victims.

Strauss, along with the University's American Marketing Association Collegiate Chapter, decided to get involved. The students in the Collegiate Chapter volunteered to make 5,000 ribbons for the campaign. Strauss designed the selling challenge in her class this semester to allow students to earn points for convincing people to wear ribbons, make class presentations, and secure raffle prize donations for the fund-raiser.'

"Some still don’t see double standard"

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Remember Debra Lafave, the 25-year-old Florida teacher who had sex with a 14-year-old in the back seat of a car being driven by a 15-year-old? She is the blonde whose lawyer told the court she was too beautiful to go to a prison full of women. So she was sentenced to house arrest.

“People tend to think women can’t really sexually assault because they don’t have the proper anatomy, or they don’t have aggressive tendencies — sexual aggression,” said Susan Strickland, Ph.D., a certified sex offender treatment provider.
...
And female sex offenders use more intrusive levels of sexual behaviors than men. They are more likely than men to abuse strangers. And they are less likely than men to acknowledge guilt or to feel sorry or guilty, Strickland said.

Still in our culture most men grow up viewing molestation by an older woman as a conquest: It feels good and sounds good when it’s told to the other guys.'

UK: Postcards and beer mats tackle abuse

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Postcards feature images aimed at making offenders think about the consequences of their actions and the negative impact it has on children.

One postcard features a young boy sitting next to a Christmas tree. The slogan reads – “All I want for Christmas is for daddy to stop hurting mummy.”

Another card features two young boys huddled together on the stairs listening to their mother being abused by their father. The message on the front reads: “Domestic abuse, you can’t hide it from them.”

...

The postcards will be distributed in supermarkets, social centres, snooker halls, golf clubs, pubs, leisure centres and will be made available to probation officers and domestic abuse offenders with bail conditions.'

UK: West Midlands Police launch advertising campaign to combat domestic violence

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Exceprt:

'THIS is the shocking poster that West Midlands Police believe will help to combat domestic violence over the festive season.

The photograph of a woman's battered face with a man's bruised hand covering her mouth is part of an advertising campaign by cops to tackle the growing problem.

The Christmas campaign comes amid figures which reveal December is the lowest month for reporting incidents of domestic violence, with women suffering in silence because they want to "hold it together" for the sake of the family.'

UK: Working class white boys lack aspirations

anthony · 21 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Working class white boys are limited by "low horizons" according to a Cabinet Office report.

The report suggested that living in working class areas, especially in former industrial towns and cities, could stop young people, especially white boys, from reaching their potential.

And, poor white boys had the lowest aspirations of all ethnic groups.
...
The Cabinet Office report analysed 14,000 young people in England and found that youngsters in certain neighbourhoods were less likely to stay on in full time education after the age of 16.'

Relatedly: White boys on free meals fall further behind in GCSEs

Canadian Feminist Lawyer: Abused women 'live in a war zone' every day

anthony · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"When women get married they are not signing up for life-threatening careers," Cross said, who likened women who are killed as a result of domestic violence to those who die in battle.

"It is no exaggeration that many women live in a war zone where every day survival becomes a battle, women who spend every day of their lives trying to outwit the enemy, stay alive one more day, protect the children, these women are heroes."

Cross commented on how easily stories in the media about women who are abused or murdered are quickly forgotten and how the media manages to paint a forgiving picture of the abuser.

"They all treat each incident as a singular event, rather than a pattern of violence against women. The abuser is a happy friendly man, a man who walks the dog." She said "this kind of reporting" makes it appear the victims "are somehow responsible for the incident that led to their death."

Italy: Absurd Domestic Abuse Statistics

anthony · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to Italian national statistic agency ISTAT, over seven million women in Italy have suffered from physical or sexual violence at least once, amounting to nearly a quarter of the female population. Sexual violence by itself counts more than five million victims and 961,000 women have experienced some form of physical abuse. A report by Italian women's advocacy association Casa Internazionale delle Donne claims that every three days in Italy a woman is murdered.'

Two Women Kidnap And Rob Man In Marriage Scam

anthony · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'KING COUNTY, Wash. -- Two women have been charged for allegedly kidnapped a vulnerable 78-year-old man and taking him to the courthouse, where one of them married him and then tried to withdraw thousands of dollars from his bank account.

Sujinda Yachatta, 56, and Kulany Roeksbutr, 29, have been charged with kidnapping on Tuesday.

Issaquah detectives started an investigation of the Nov. 22 incident after receiving a report from Adult Protective Services concerning the 78-year-old man, who suffers from dementia and lives at an adult family home in Issaquah, court papers said.

The investigation found that the two took the 78-year-old victim from his home without permission, then drove him to Bellevue District Court. A marriage was performed there between the man and Yahatta, who was the man's massage therapist.

Afterward, the two women took the victim to his bank and unsuccessfully attempted to withdraw money from his accounts, which totaled about $28,000, according to court documents.'

Mother allegedly murders son, kills herself over suspected affair

Matt · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ADDIS, LA (WAFB) - Police are investigating the case of a mother killing her seven-year-old son and then took her own life Thursday.

Addis police now say the woman was upset about an alleged affair her husband had with another woman.

West Baton Rouge Parish sheriff's deputies say 34-year-old Lavinia Banks was upset with her husband and fed up with her marriage. She allegedly shot her seven-year old son, Darieyonne, dragged the little boy to the bathroom, and shot him again.

Investigators say she put the little boy's body in a tub full of water and then shot herself in the head. Paramedics were called to the home on Bradley Court in Addis at 5:30pm after the father arrived at the home and saw blood in the hallway.'

Fantasist 'cry rape mother' who wasted 7,000 police hours and cost taxpayers £300,000 is jailed

Anonymous · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 'dangerous fantasist' who wasted more than £300,000 and 7,000 hours of police time, was today jailed for four years.

Mother-of-one Michaela Britton, 40, was found guilty of perverting justice after six months of bizarre false allegations, which included tying herself up, slashing herself with a blade and arranging her car to be shot at.

A court today heard how the case wasted more than 7,000 hours and cost taxpayers a massive £316,000.

Among her 'whopping lies', she told police she was being blackmailed over an explicit pornographic video with an anti-terrorist Metropolitan Police officer.'

UK: Cameron promises more help for (female) victims of domestic violence

Anonymous · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"David Cameron announced wide-ranging plans to tackle domestic violence today with a pledge that a Tory government would move swiftly to improve protection for women.

Domestic violence increases over Christmas and the New Year, when more alcohol is consumed, and the Conservative leader said that tackling it should be made a greater priority.

The Tories would create 15 more rape crisis centres, funded by £2.6million from the 'victim surcharge' that is imposed on criminals who pay fines."

Six-figure payout for couple whose three children were taken away by social services after false abuse claims

Anonymous · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A couple who had their children taken away from them for two years by social services after falsely being accused of sexual abuse have been awarded a six-figure compensation payout.

Tim and Gina Williams went through a 'total nightmare' of having their three young children placed in separate foster homes after being wrongly placed under suspicion by social workers.
...
They were today awarded an undisclosed sum in an agreed settlement at the High Court in Cardiff.
...
The Williams family also received a full written apology from Newport Council.

In his judgment two years ago, Judge Crispin Masterman criticised social services for failing to follow recommended procedures and not carrying out a proper assessment of the family."

Male teachers fight odds, stereotypes

anthony · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The number of male teachers in the United States is at a 40-year low. Out of 3 million teachers, only 25 percent are men, according to the National Center for Education Statistics.

So what's keeping men out of school?

Brian Nelson founder of MenTeach, a Minneapolis-based organization that seeks to encourage more men to become teachers, cites three reasons:

-- Stereotypes that men aren't nurturing and can't take care of little kids.
"Obviously, that's not true. Men can be great fathers and can be nurturing."

-- Fear of accusation of abuse.
"There's a belief that men are going to harm children in school," Nelson said. "The facts don't bear this out. A child is more likely to be harmed in their own home than they are in school.

"Some men I've talked to who were falsely accused said it really destroys their reputation, even if it's a false allegation. There's something that hovers over them. 'Maybe he did it but just got off.' That keeps men away. Why would you want to go through that?"

-- Low status/low pay.'

Glenn Sacks: The Boy Crisis in Education and the Boy Parent Dilemma

anthony · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Modern schools are not suited to boys' personalities and learning styles. This can be seen from the time boys enter school, when many of them are immediately branded as behavior problems. The line of 10 kids who had to gather every day after school in my son's first grade class for their behavior reports--all boys. The names of kids on the side of the chalkboard who misbehaved and would lose recess--all boys. The kids as young as five or six who must be drugged so they will sit still and "behave"--almost all boys.

By any measure, our schools are failing our sons. Boys at all levels are far more likely than girls to be disciplined, suspended, held back, or expelled. By high school the typical boy is a year and a half behind the typical girl in reading and writing, and is less likely to graduate high school, go to college, or graduate college than a typical girl.'"

City councilwoman seeks to allow girls to play on boys' teams

anthony · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On Tuesday, the council will vote on changing the rules for youth sports so that any girl younger than 12 will have the chance to play in all-boy leagues if she and her parents desire.

"If the girls can compete and they're willing to compete, why not let them?" said Byrd, who said she was not allowed to play on the boys football team at Bassett Middle School.

"I don't think it's enough to just say that we're not going to do it because it's a rule we have," she added. "Let's think about what we're doing and why we are doing it."

City sports officials, though, said they are just following state and federal guidelines for girls sports, and that the rule is meant to encourage more girls to play sports.'

Need letters requesting California Supreme Court review of Woods v. Shewry re inmate fathers

Matt · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

As most of you know, we recently won the case of Woods v. Shewry, in which the California court of appeal recently held that excluding men from state-funded domestic violence services violates men's constitutional right to equal protection. Decision here (.pdf file). See also http://www.metnews.com/articles/2008/wood101508.htm

However, in the same case, we lost the part on the exclusion of inmate dads from inmate parenting programs. So we filed a request for California Supreme Court review of that portion of the decision.

There are over 85,000 fathers in prison in California, and they are automatically barred from even applying for the inmate parenting program solely because they're fathers. These programs including residential housing, alternative sentencing, pediatric services, etc. for mothers with kids under 6 years old.

Fathers are categorically barred, which is clearly a violation of equal protection. The court denied our request because we didn't show there are any fathers who would otherwise qualify. This is a taxpayer suit, so we aren't required to show any particular fathers. But the court presumed no fathers would qualify by being non-violent offenders, primary parents, etc. That's just nonsense. It was more of an outcome-driven fiscal decision than a legal decision, and it needs to be challenged. If necessary we will go into the prisons to find plaintiffs, but that could take years. We need to challenge this now.

It would be great to have letters from organizations and individuals, in or out of California, asking the California Supreme Court to review the part of Woods v. Shewry that addressed inmate fathers. Organizations should begin by explaining who they are, then explaining why the issue should be reviewed. Individuals can go right to the point.

Your letters are appreciated. Address them to:

California Supreme Court
350 McAllister Street
San Francisco, CA 94102-4797.

then mail the original to them, and send a copy to the Attorney General at:

Roy S. Liebman, Esq.
Office of the State Attorney General
P.O. Box 944255
Sacramento, CA 94244-2550

Family Law Task Force getting flak for recruitment, ‘insider’ panelists

Matt · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A. Article here. Fred Sottile of Fathers4Justice Los Angeles, who is quoted, is also an officer of the Los Angeles chapter of the National Coalition of Free Men and a recipient of NCFM's Award of Honor for 2008. Nice going, Fred! -- Marc | Excerpt:

'A Task Force created to address alleged widespread problems in the state family courts system is taking flak from the same groups who have been calling for reforms.

Such criticism was widely expected when the Elkins Family Law Task Force was created last May. Men’s and women’s groups have been fighting a highly-politicized battle for years over problems in the courts that decide divorce and child custody proceedings.
While advocates on both sides agree that there are numerous serious issues in the family courts, they often have opposing views on what those problems actually are. But they do seem to agree that the process has been too closed, that there have been problems with a series of focus groups and that the Task Force includes far too many insiders. The 38 members include 16 judges, 12 attorneys, 10 staff members of various family courts—and no advocates or family court litigants.

“When you ask that same entity to investigate itself, and then you put on the panel judges who have historically protected the institution and themselves over the public good, how much substantive change is really going to occur?” said Patty Bellasalma, president of the California National Organization of Women (CA NOW).'

RADAR ALERT: 2008: Building Success Upon Success!

Matt · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

In 2008, the Violence Against Women Act was thrust into the national political arena. Selected as the vice presidential candidate, Sen. Joe Biden repeatedly highlighted his role in securing passage of the Violence Against Women Act. In addition, Republican nomination candidate Mitt Romney was asked at one campaign stop to state his views on bogus restraining orders.

By year's end, 2008 turned out to be a time of unprecedented success. Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting (RADAR), along with the VAWA Reform Coalition and other persons, notched impressive legislative victories, substantially expanded our media efforts, and broadened the coalition to reform the Violence Against Women Act.

This report is organized into three sections:

1. RADAR
2. VAWA Reform Coalition
3. Others' Activities

...

Please see http://mediaradar.org/alert20081222.php for the rest of the alert.

Woman Gets Jail For Sexual Torture/Murder, Man Receives Death Penalty

anthony · 22 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'INDEPENDENCE, Mo. - A suburban Kansas City woman pleaded guilty Monday to killing a woman whose sexual torture and suffocation were videotaped.

In a deal with prosecutors that allowed her to avoid the death penalty, Dena Riley, 42, pleaded guilty to first-degree murder in the May 2006 death of Marsha Spicer, who was suffocated during sex at an Independence apartment that Riley shared with her boyfriend.

...

As part of the deal, Riley was sentenced to life without parole for the murder charge and to eight additional life sentences and 239 years in prison for 25 other counts.

Earlier this year, Davis was convicted and sentenced to death for Spicer's slaying. He also is charged in the federal case.'

Playboy mansion party hosts faces lawsuit over gender discrimination

Matt · 23 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Details are scarce. Can anyone post more info?

White House Family Values: Where Are the Boys?

Daringest · 24 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"...In the 80 years before the Obama administration, only the Kennedys brought a boy into the White House.
...
So why no modern manlings in the east wing? I have a theory, born of careful historical analysis and solipsism: It's impossible to be elected to the White House if you have young sons, because that would mean you have to campaign with them.
...
The Obama campaign was noted for its discipline, its rigor and its self control: three things most young boys are not noted for."

This is another example of boy-bashing. Having girls are described as an "asset" which means having boys is a liability. The author has only good things to say about girls and nothing good to say about boys. She is obviously irritated that past US presidents ever had boys, and somehow more recent presidents not having male children is somehow an improvement.

It's also interesting that this person says boys are not noted for having discipline or self-control. Boys are taught discipline and self-control, and girls are not expected to have either, especially with regards to control over her emotions. Boys and men are taught and expected to exercise self-control, but a girl or woman is expected to have her every whim catered to without any self restraint, self control or discipline on her part.

Imagine the uproar if a journalist wrote something less than exalting about female children. Males are fair game for any derision.

Woman jailed for life after murdering husband just 33 DAYS after their wedding

Anonymous · 24 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Muslim woman who knifed her husband to death 33 days after their wedding to escape from her arranged marriage has been jailed for life by the Old Bailey.
...
Khatun then tried to cover up the murder, repeatedly lying to police and persuading a friend to give her a false alibi for the night of the killing.

When her alibi was exposed she said her husband had attacked her and she struck out in self-defence.

But the jury found her guilty of murder yesterday by a 10-1 majority and she was sentenced to serve a minimum of 17 years.'

Finding His Path - profile of a male RN

Vince · 24 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"In college, Pultorak earned the opportunity to learn more about ob/gyn care at a midwifery clinic along the Texas-Mexico border. He was the fist male nurse to attend Maternidad La Luz in El Paso, TX, and was very well accepted.

'They had never let a male go down to Texas,' Pultorak said, 'because they said the attitudes of the women giving birth were not supportive of having a male in on a birth or in on any examinations.'

...

'I know some male nurses are alienated or outcast, but I've never had that problem,' Pultorak said. 'I plan on staying at this hospital for as long as I can because I'm seeing so much and learning so much. I'm also having a great experience with the people I work with and my managers and educators on the floor. It's been more than I could hope for.'"

Police use excessive force, ER docs say

Matt · 25 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters Health) – In a survey of a random sample of U.S. emergency physicians, virtually all said they believed that law enforcement officers use excessive force to arrest and detain suspects.

The sample included 315 respondents. While 99.8 percent believed excessive force is used, almost as many (97.8 percent) reported that they had managed cases that they suspected or that the patient stated had involved excessive use of force by law enforcement officers.

Nearly two thirds (65.3 percent) estimated that they had treated two or more cases of suspected excessive use of force per year among their patients, according to a report of the survey published in the January 2009 issue of the Emergency Medicine Journal.
...
Blunt trauma inflicted by fists or feet was the most common type of injury cited in cases of suspected use of excessive force, followed by "overly tight" handcuffs.

Most emergency physicians (71.2 percent) admitted that they did not report cases of suspected use of excessive force by law enforcement officers.'

What's this have to do with men's rights? Well, how many of these "suspected abused suspects" do you suppose are female? One in 10? One in 100? One in 1,000?

Merry Christmas!

Matt · 25 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Merry Christmas from MANN! Have fun, guys, or, try to anyway.

Female Lawyers More Likely To Work Part-time Hours

Anonymous · 25 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are nearly 6,000 partners in 131 big law firm offices in Washington, the nation's second-largest law market. Less than 5 percent of the partners are part-timers, but women make up nearly three-quarters of the part-time ranks, according to a new study published by the National Association for Law Placement, a D.C.-based nonprofit group that examines hiring trends in the legal profession.
...
Lawyers make their money on billable hours, which makes it hard to reward with partnership someone who is working part time.'

Thoughts on "The Decline Of Men"

anthony · 25 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'And while women's wages have soared, wages for men have declined.

'Men are not just getting poorer, they're also getting dumber,' he says. And he's right. Beneath the lip gloss of metrosexual modern male, men are in trouble.

Men of all ages are becoming increasingly 'angry, suspicious, reactionary and isolated' because women have treated the men's natural roles without respect.

Who wouldn't become reactionary when all that you knew had been demeaned, taken from you or chipped away?

Who wouldn't feel isolated when society had institutionalised fatherlessness, thus eradicating the most vital and enhancing role any man can play in his life?

Garcia goes so far as to argue that the roles have flipped so much from the way they were, say, 50 years ago - and that men have become so emasculated and feminised - that 'men are the new women'.

If that's true, and sadly it is for some men, then women have a lot to answer for. And perhaps the greatest irony is that it's us who are the losers in the end.'

Bob Geldof: We need a law for dads

Matt · 26 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is the special child's time because 2,000 years ago, the story tells us, a woman and a man had a baby together and though the man knew perfectly well he was not the child's father he nonetheless loved him and his wife and raised him to be strong, independent, brave and loving.

Lucky kid, to have Joseph for a dad. Indeed, were Jesus alive today, to have any dad at all to raise him to be a good man.

For those divorced men with children, Christmas is a travesty, a repulsive contradiction of a family holiday, of a loving celebration, of a special children's time.'

Ninth body found at site of Santa-suit killings

Matt · 26 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'COVINA, Calif. (AP) - A ninth body was found Friday morning at the charred site of a Christmas Eve massacre where a recently divorced man dressed as Santa shot indiscriminately at partygoers and destroyed his former in-laws' house with a homemade blowtorch.

The attacker, Bruce Pardo, reached a Dec. 18 settlement with his ex-wife, who along with her parents was believed to be among the dead. His lawyer and a fellow church usher were among those who said they had never seen anything to indicate he was capable of such a brutal crime.
...

Pardo left the scene of the killings and was found dead Thursday, of a single bullet to the head, at his brother's house.
...
Court documents show Sylvia Pardo got the couple's dog, the wedding ring and $10,000 in the settlement agreement, while he got the house. In June, the court ordered Bruce Pardo to pay $1,785 a month in spousal support and put him on a payment plan of $450 a month for $3,570 that was unpaid.

Pardo's attorney said the man had trouble making the payments after he lost his job in July, but spousal support was waived in the settlement signed earlier this month.'

There's no excusing such behavior, of course. This is simply a believable tragedy. That's right, believable. I would have written "unbelievable" if I were typing this even 10 years ago, but alas, it is believable. Lots of dead bodies, no justice, many questions, no living suspect to exact revenge against by incarceration or execution, as he has already passed judgment and executed sentence on himself. A truly necrotic state of affairs it has become when relations between the sexes and then between the people and the state get so bad that this sort of thing happens. But I doubt it's the last of such incidents, sadly. And as usual, just switch the sexes around in the story and the tale remains believable-- at least as long as you know the truth about DV.

Police: Woman faked missing baby story to win back ex

anthony · 26 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Meagan McCormic faced television cameras on Christmas Day to plead for the return of her missing 5-month-old son.

"I don't even know if he's dead or alive," she said.

In fact, she knew that the child had never existed, police said.

McCormic was trying to lure an ex-boyfriend back when she invented a missing-child story that triggered a statewide search this week, police said Friday.

Investigators have charged the 22-year-old with filing a false police report. If convicted, they said, she may have to pay authorities for the cost of their search.'

Maryland Woman Arrested in Mexico 10 Years After Kidnapping 4-Year-Old Son

anthony · 26 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HOUSTON — A Maryland woman who fled 10 years ago with her son to Mexico after a custody dispute has been arrested and flown back to the United States, officials said.

Tamara Kennedy, a U.S. citizen and her now 14-year-old son, Joseph Alexander Kennedy, disappeared from Maryland in 1998, shortly before sole custody of the boy was to be given to the child's father, said Immigration and Customs Enforcement spokeswoman Brandon A. Montgomery.

...

The boy's father, Donald Wiswell, came to Houston on Wednesday in hopes of being reunited with his son.

But Child Protective Services officials will keep the boy in custody until the investigation is completed.

"In cases like this, there have been many years of separation, and there may be allegations by the parent who fled with him that we need to look at before reuniting to make sure the transition is smooth and the child is safe," said Houston CPS spokeswoman Estella Olguin.'

National Review: The Good Dad

anthony · 26 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The name Fathers for Good has a double meaning: 1) every man in his heart wants to be a good father, even amid human frailty; and 2) once a man becomes a father, once he generates new life, it is “for good,” for the rest of his life. No matter the circumstances of his life or those of his child, that man will always bear the identity of a father. This is good news of great joy, and we try to help men live out that joy.
...
CAULFIELD: The goal is to be of service to fathers in their often difficult vocation. Men in general and fathers in particular are often portrayed negatively on TV and popular media, and men need to know that their specifically male virtues and character are valued and have a place in the modern world. We also abide by Pope John Paul II’s insight that men learn their fatherhood through the love of their wives, so the relationship with their wives is key.'

Canada: Early release denied for female teacher convicted of sex offense

anthony · 26 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Cornwall-area teacher found guilty of sexually assaulting a student has been denied early release from jail.

Jennifer Dorland, 42, recently went before the Ontario Parole and Early Release Board in the hopes of being set free less than two months after she was first sent to jail. The former teacher was sentenced to six months behind bars on Oct. 28. She had been convicted on Dec. 20, 2007, on counts of sexual assault, sexual interference and invitation to sexual touching involving a 13-year-old boy.

In denying Dorland early release, the parole board said the woman would pose a risk to society if she were to be released and that she is at risk to reoffend.

The board said Dorland, who now uses the surname Toews, only recently admitted being responsible for her crimes and had maintained her innocence from the time she was charged until after she was initially incarcerated.'

Police: Florida Woman Murdered 8-Year-Old Son on Christmas

Michael · 26 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Police said Eryn Allegra, of Port St. Lucie, gave the boy eight Advil pills to put him to sleep, then early Thursday morning suffocated him with a pillow in a hotel room. Allegra then allegedly tried to slit her wrists, but the blade she used was too dull. Police said she dialed 911 and was taken to a local hospital.

Allegra told investigators she had been having financial problems since August 2007.

It was unclear if Allegra had an attorney.'

UK: Fines for loutish 'ladettes' treble since 24-hour drinking was introduced

Anonymous · 27 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"The number of women fined on-the-spot for loutish behaviour has trebled since Labour introduced 24-hour drinking.

Police chiefs last night blamed the surge in 'ladette' offences on the increased availability of alcohol since the licensing laws were relaxed in November 2005.

Figures obtained by the Daily Mail from police forces in England and Wales show that almost 37,100 fixed penalty notices of up to £80 were handed to women last year for offences such as being drunk in the street, shouting abuse or damaging property.'

UK: Mother attacks boy, five, at school - released 'with caution'

Matt · 27 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The woman was arrested following an incident at Priory Primary School in Tynemouth, North Tyneside, earlier this month.

Northumbria Police said the 44-year-old woman had accepted a police caution.

In a statement the force said: "At around 9.10am on Thursday December 11 police received a report of an incident at Priory Primary School, Percy Park Road, Tynemouth.

"A 44-year-old woman was arrested on suspicion of assault and received a caution."'

Commentary: The joke's on men in modern times

anthony · 28 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Garcia said the male-bashing trend is also a result of the pent-up anger women still hold for men. The fact is, it wasn't long ago that it was a man's world - that women had limited opportunities and options. For some women, male bashing is a form of payback.
...
The irony is that men aren't fighting women. Most are bending over backwards to accommodate women.
...
Garcia argues that in the most extreme cases a significant social trend has occurred - that as men stumble and fall behind, they are dropping out and giving up. He says we're in a state of denial - that the faltering male doesn't do anyone any good.

"The shrinking pool of educated, eligible males only adds to the perception that men are clueless deadbeats, a downward spiral that could affect generations to come," he said.'

Study: Toilet Seat Injuries to Little Boys Appear to Be on the Rise

anthony · 28 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. People with toddler sons, take heed! Excerpt:

'Parents of newly toilet-trained boys should take a few simple steps to keep their sons' penises safe when they go to the bathroom, a team of UK urologists advises.

There's evidence that crush injuries due to falling toilet seats may be on the rise, Dr. Joe Philip of Leighton Hospital in Crewe and colleagues warn in a letter in BJU (British Journal of Urology) International.'

NPR show: 'Raising Boys'

anthony · 28 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Show here. From the page:

'If you've paid attention to the media lately, you've heard that American boys are in crisis - lagging behind educationally, and disconnected from their masculinity. Others argue that these problems are no more a part of boys' lives than snakes, snails and puppy dog tails - and that maybe it's pressure to be stereotypically manly that exacerbates the difficulties they do experience. Join us this Wednesday when we look at the status of boys from both sides, and see what challenges are involved in raising boys today. Because this is a show from our archives, we won't be taking calls this hour.'

Single men turning to surrogates

anthony · 28 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Surrogacy experts say gestational surrogacy has increased steadily since the advent of in vitro fertilization in the early 1980s, because it provides an extra layer of emotional and legal protection for the client. The egg donor usually does not even know the client, and unlike the legally contentious "Baby M" case from the 1980s, the surrogate is not giving birth to her genetic child.

"It rises as an issue far less frequently with gestational surrogacy, because women never see it as their child to begin with," said John Weltman, president of Circle Surrogacy.

His agency, which expects more than 70 babies to be born in 2009, has seen a 50 percent growth in the number of single male clients over the past year.'

Military Struggles With Response To PTSD

anthony · 28 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CBS) The Pentagon says 1 in 5 service members who come home from Iraq or Afghanistan suffer from post-traumatic stress.

Some find their experiences too much to bear. There were 115 military suicides last year, and 93 through just August of this year.

The biggest obstacle to getting those numbers down may be the military culture itself, reports CBS News correspondent Kimberly Dozier.

...

On July 11, 2007, McKinney, serving on his second tour, killed himself in front of his men. He had endured months of sleeplessness, nightmares and guilt over losing so many of the soldiers he commanded.

"I think he felt like he couldn't send one more broken body home, one more dead person home," Jeff McKinney's father, Charles McKinney, said.'

Man dies after genitials 'set on fire by wife'

Anonymous · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Australian man has died from horrific burns after his wife allegedly set fire to his genitals while he was alseep.
...
His wife, Rajini, is expected to be charged with manslaughter or murder.
...
Police allege Mrs Narayan doused his genitals with methylated spirit and then set him on fire early on the morning of December 7.'

Pupils misbehave more with male teachers, survey shows

Anonymous · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Children are more likely to behave badly in front of male teachers than females, according to a survey published today.
...
Christine Blower, acting general secretary of the NUT, said: "Despite the impression given by some national figures that women teachers are more subject to experiencing bad behaviour than men, the evidence is that it is male teachers who sometimes experience greater levels of poor pupil behaviour.

"It also demonstrates how misleading gender stereotypes are."'

New York City Girl, 15, Charged With Two Homicides

anthony · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK — A 15-year-old Bronx girl has been charged with two homicides including the death of a man whose dismembered body was found in a plastic bag.

Sharell Butler was arraigned late Saturday and charged as an adult with murder in the deaths of 24-year-old Christopher Umpierre on Dec. 19 and 22-year-old John Hopkins-Drago on Dec. 21.

A Bronx building superintendent found Hopkins-Drago's body stuffed in a garbage bag. The medical examiner's office said the cause of death was stab wounds to his head, torso and extremities.

Prosecutors said Umpierre was shot in the chest during a home invasion robbery involving Butler and others.'

Withoutafather.com - sign of the times

Matt · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

The site is http://www.withoutafather.com/. From the "About" page:

'Welcome to WithoutaFather.com

This site was created for teens growing up without a father or without a mother.

If was created for those who rarely see their fathers after their parents got divorced and for those who never even knew their fathers. It was created for those who lost a parent to cancer and for those who go through long periods of time without their fathers or mothers because of their service in the armed forces. It was created for those who may have a physically present, but emotionally absent father.

In all these cases and many others, this site was created for you and with you in mind. Even more, this site is for to any teen anywhere who is trying to improve their life.'

Phyllis Schlafly: Obama's Plan to Rejoin the World Community

anthony · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Obama is toadying to his feminist friends by pushing ratification of the UN Treaty on Women, known as CEDAW. It was signed by Jimmy Carter in 1980 and persistently promoted by Hillary Clinton, but the Senate has so far had the good judgment to refuse to ratify it.

This treaty would require us "to modify the social and cultural patterns of conduct of men and women," to follow UN dictates about "family education," to revise our textbooks to conform to feminist ideology in order to ensure "the elimination of any stereotyped concept of the roles of men and women," and to set up a federal "network of child-care facilities."

Article 16 would require us to allow women "to decide number and spacing of their children." Everyone recognizes this as feminist jargon for a UN obligation to allow abortion on demand.

Like all UN treaties, the UN Treaty on Women creates a monitoring commission of so-called "experts" to ensure compliance. The monitors of the Treaty on Women have already singled out Mother's Day as a stereotype that must be eliminated.'

CNN: Why women shouldn't say 'I love you' first

anthony · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If I have a daughter one day, among the many things I'll teach her will be how to tie her shoes, to look both ways before crossing the street, to never end a sentence with a preposition, and to always let the man say "I love you" first.

I'll give her plenty of other relationship tips, too, like how it's perfectly okay to ask a guy out, to make the first move, to even propose, but when it comes to the "L" word, the ball's in the guy's court.

Unlike asking a man out, making a move on him, or even proposing, there's no action-based response to the first "I love you." It's all words, it's all emotion. In that moment, he either loves you back or he doesn't -- you only hear the black or white of a 'yes' or 'no,' not the gray of "Well, I like you a whole lot and I could see myself falling in love with you, but I'm just not quite there yet."

And the truth is, it often takes men longer to get there than it does for women. Men process their emotions more slowly, they're usually more cautious about taking their feelings and relationships to the next level.'

"Obama's women: He just can't win"

anthony · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Suddenly, Obama was an obstacle to the advancement of women. Now, President-elect Obama is again being portrayed as an obstacle to the advancement of women. Radical feminists whine that he didn't appoint enough women to his Cabinet.

Upon seeing that Obama had named five women to top administration posts, Kim Gandy, president of the National Organization for Women, said, "there need to be a lot more women's voices in this administration."

Amy Siskind, co-founder of New Agenda, said Obama has taken "shocking steps backward." She said "this constituency does not matter to the President-elect."
...
This type of bean counting, as Bill Clinton called it, is silly. Obama should have the freedom to pick the people he believes best suited for the work without being criticized by activists who care more about pressure politics than good government.'

Woman jailed for domestic abuse

anthony · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Tahlequah woman was arrested by Cherokee County sheriff's deputies Monday for assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, domestic abuse, and domestic abuse in the presence of minors.
...
Finch met deputies at a neighbor's house. When the deputies went to her residence to talk with her husband, they met the man with numerous injuries, including stab wounds, scratches and bite marks on his shoulders, scalp, forehead and forearm. He was bleeding in numerous places. He told deputies his wife had thrown snow globes at him and stabbed him numerous times.

Three children in the home were interviewed by deputies, and said Finch had thrown snow globes at the man and also hit him over the head with a green vase.

The man did not want to press charges or file a report, but deputies arrested Finch because of the evidence that she was the likely aggressor. A piece of wood believed to have been used as a weapon to stab the victim was logged in as evidence. The vase and screwdriver the children said were used as weapons were not located.'

India: 18% rape cases false

anthony · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW DELHI: A little less than 20% of sexual-assault cases reported in and around Delhi are false, shows a five-year study. In almost every fifth incident, or, in 18.3 % cases to be precise, rape is used as a weapon to malign and attempt revenge, found a group of psychologists who assist Delhi Police in investigating sexual assault allegations.
...
In September 2007, the Supreme Court had alerted lower courts to attempts at misusing the rape law, noting "the courts should bear in mind that false charges of rape are not uncommon."'

Male DV Research Project Seeks Subjects

Anonymous · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Dear MensActivism,

I received a link to this site recently in an email note and thought that you might be interested.

Regards,

Heretic
http://hereticalsex.blogspot.com/

--

Ed. note: This study has been mentioned before here on MANN but it can't hurt to mention it again for the benefit of people new to the site.

Husband Urges Men Who Slept With His Wife to Get HIV Test

anthony · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Canadian man is urging others who may have slept with his Thai stripper ex-wife to get tested for the HIV virus after she passed it on to him, according to a report in the Toronto Sun.

"I know there were other men she slept with," Percy Whiteman told the Sun on Sunday. "I am lucky that I was able to find out early."

Whiteman said learned her HIV status when she fell ill in 2004. She was convicted of criminal negligence causing bodily harm for infecting Whiteman with HIV and was sentenced to three years in jail in August 2007, the Sun reported.

Imkhong came to Canada in 1995 and was a dancer at the Zanzibar Tavern in Toronto until 2004. She married Whiteman in 1997. "She should have been deported a long time ago for what she's done to others," Whiteman told the Sun. "I don't think justice was fully served."'

"DSM psychiatry manual's secrecy criticized"

MR · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Fred and I discussed the APA's DSM-III on episodes of Face Up To Fred that dealt with Parental Alienation.

It's too bad this L.A. Times article (DSM psychiatry manual's secrecy criticized) doesn't address the "gender politics" that goes into some of the DSM's conclusions (in my opinion). Excerpt:

"...the issue carries real weight for parents desperate to address children's difficult behavior or people in distress over their mental state. It also speaks to citizens' concerns over news accounts of an overmedicated America and of the troubling financial links between some psychiatric researchers and the pharmaceutical industry."

...

"Darrel Regier, who heads the APA's research arm, said the critics are failing to recognize progress in the field. 'The field of psychiatry has gone from an ideology to a scientific pursuit,' he said."

...

"Some critics suspect that a quest for profits has encouraged the field to create mental illnesses out of personality quirks."

California: Male prisoners must drink unsafe water while female prisoners get bottled water

MR · 29 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

The Los Angeles Times reports today: Arsenic levels too high in Kern Valley State Prison's drinking water. Excerpt:

"At the California Institution for Women in Chino, the state has been buying bottled water for prisoners for five years -- at a current annual cost of $480,000 -- because of nitrate levels that violate federal standards in the water supply to the facility and to the nearby California Institution for Men.

Chino-area municipalities have built systems to filter their own water, and the state hopes to complete a similar project a year from now for both the women's and men's prisons."

UK: Politically correct brigade demands one woman on each fire engine

anthony · 30 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Local Government Association (LGA) has said that at at least 15 per cent of those in operational roles should be female.

That means they will fill one of the five or six places for crew on each engine.

The LGA said an increased number of firewomen is necessary "to meet the needs of local people".

But critics warned that political correctness was being put above the ability to save lives.

Susie Squire, of the Taxpayers' Alliance, said: "Introducing this sort of quota to the fire service is a big mistake.

"If ever there was a job that should be awarded on merit and physical fitness, it is that of a firefighter.'

Woman charged with raping 14-YO boy, also falsely accuses him of raping her daughter

anthony · 30 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police in Delaware have arrested a woman they say had sex with her teenage daughter's friend.

38-year-old Juli Faunce, a resident of the unit block of Commonwealth Avenue in the Overlook Colony Apartments, has been charged with four counts of rape in the 3rd degree.
...
Police say Faunce had sex with the boy on at least two occasions in November while he was "staying the night" in her apartment.

Faunce later learned that her daughter had also engaged in a sexual relationship with the boy. She called police Sunday to report the teen had forced himself on her daughter, because they say she was unhappy with the news of her daughter's new relationship.

Faunce has been arraigned and released on $40,000 bail. She was ordered to have no contact with the victim and also ordered to not have any teenage boys in her home for any period of time.'

Basically after "having sex" with a minor (clearly a minor, not an on-the-border-he-could-easily-be-18 minor), she then made a false report to the police accusing the boy of raping her daughter. The way I see it, they are still short on charges in this case.

Man charged over daughter's hypothermic death

Matt · 30 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This is one to keep an eye on. The issue here is equal treatment under the law. Had the father been the mother, would she be facing these charges? I doubt it. Still, there strikes me as being a strong element of negligence here, unless there are salient facts missing from the story. I am curious to know the more of the circumstances around events. If I get wind of updates or "new news", I'll post, and feel free to submit if you spot anything.
Excerpt:

'A father charged with the hypothermic death of his daughter cried and banged his head against a table Monday in a Shoshone courtroom after a judge read out each charge against him.

Robert E. Aragon, 55, is accused of felony injury to a child and second-degree murder, after two of his children tried to walk nearly 10 miles on their own through feet of snow and freezing temperatures on Christmas to see their mom.

Aragon's family says he's a loving father who shouldn't be in jail for the tragedy.
...

Quintana also said he thought Jenks was going to retrieve the children and thought Aragon and Jenks had coordinated that plan over the phone.

"We thought their mother was going to meet up with the children," Quintana said. "Where was she? How were we supposed to know she wasn't coming?"

But Jenks told the Times-News she disagrees, adding Monday she didn't have a car. "They didn't even call me, telling me they were walking," she has said.

Lincoln County authorities also say the road was undriveable due to snow drifts, according to court papers.
...
Quintana says he and Aragon searched and yelled out for the children for at least four hours, with towels wrapped around their heads, but they stopped as hypothermia set in. He said he had no cell phone reception in the search area.

'They found her (Sage Aragon) a mile and a half from where I turned around," Quintana said. "If we had kept going, we could have gotten her in time. I just couldn't go anymore, I was so tired. The whole time, we were yelling for the children, our eyes and throat were wind burnt."'

Women's magazine runs article on woman-on-man DV

Matt · 30 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Nice change! Article in "Marie Claire" here. Excerpt:

'According to a Penn professor who studies these things, every American man has about a 28 percent chance of being struck by a woman at some point in his life (in related news, the number of girls ages 10 to 17 arrested for aggravated assault has doubled in the last 20 years). And yet no one seems to take the phenomenon that seriously. Maybe it's because men, generally speaking, are bigger and stronger, and we assume there's a real limit to the physical damage women could actually inflict. We don't picture these scuffles resulting in bloody noses and black eyes or a trip to the station house. Furthermore, pop culture has made the idea of a pretty girl whaling on a guy a wacky comedy staple — Angelina Jolie smashing wine bottles over Brad Pitt's head in Mr. & Mrs. Smith and Cameron Diaz coldcocking Edward Burns in The Holiday were both played for laughs. But the reality of getting hit by your girlfriend isn't so sexy or hilarious.'

Baskerville commentary: Newsweek's lies about divorce

anthony · 30 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The mendacity is especially glaring regarding fathers. "Changes in child-support laws, and a push by fathers for equal time, are transforming the way this generation of ex-spouses raise [sic] their children," claims the carefully worded headline. Yet, Newsweek provides no evidence of any such changes; in fact, it concedes that "Most often, children still end up living primarily with the mother" and that "moms are the official primary residential parent after a divorce in five out of six cases, a number that hasn't changed much since the mid-'90s."

One divorce lawyer claims that "most states have provisions that say gender can't be the determining factor in deciding who is going to be the primary custodial parent," but he does not tell us that such provisions are ignored.

The magazine's account of child support is likewise distorted. Advertised as providing for children who have been "abandoned" by their fathers, child support is in reality the financial engine driving divorce, offering generous windfalls to mothers who break their vows, while criminalizing fathers with debts most have done nothing to incur and that are far beyond their means.'

Woman charged after three young sisters are found home alone on Christmas Eve

Anonymous · 30 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Three young girls were found home alone and apparently abandoned on Christmas Eve, it emerged yesterday. The youngsters had been left with no presents to open and no tree to cheer them up.

While police officers tracked down and arrested their mother on suspicion of neglect, their colleagues organised a whip-round and dashed to the shops before they closed for Christmas to buy some last minute gifts for the girls.

The incident happened in Gorton – the tough district of South Manchester which originally formed the backdrop of the Channel 4 comedy series Shameless.'

CNN: Eight signs your man may be depressed

anthony · 31 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though the stigma is lessening, men are still far more likely than women to let their depression go untreated. Blame it on Rambo, Brando, or the lure of the martini, but many guys still aren't getting the help they need.

As the traditionally stressful, dark days of winter set in, here are some signs that the guy you love might be suffering from more than a loss in fantasy football.

1. Substance use: Has he been drinking more beer than a pledging freshman? Has his usual dinner cocktail spawned into three? Often, an increase in substance use -- and this includes cigarettes, recreational drugs, and caffeine -- can be a desperate attempt to self-medicate or cover up unpleasant feelings that are gnawing at him.'

Wife stabs husband, gets custody of children

anthony · 31 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'His wife stabbed him about 5 years ago. While Leanne Putnam was awaiting her days in court for felony assault, she was awarded sole custody of their 3 children, allegedly by Rockville Superior Court Judge Jonathan J. Kaplan in Connecticut. Abuse of Fathers and their children in courts is not uncommon.

Chris Kennedy then lodged complaints against Judge Kaplan and other judges. The retaliation began, where he would have less, to no access, to his own children. His saga has been going on for about 5 years. After Chris lodged complaints, the charges were dropped against his ex-wife, and Chris Kennedy became the target of an out of control Judge, Jonathan J. Kaplan. Complaints Chris had lodged were put in his “secret, sealed folder” for other judges to see and to likewise help retaliate.'

DNA test doesn’t stop Oklahoma man's child support liability

anthony · 31 December 2008 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When an Oklahoma man’s ex-wife told him she was pregnant, he asked if he was the father.

"She said, ‘Yeah, 100 percent sure you’re the dad,’ so I didn’t question it past that,” the man said.

But that man, who asked to remain anonymous because of pending litigation, says testing shows otherwise. He provided The Oklahoman with a copy of genetic test results dated Nov. 10 from Identigene showing he is not the father. State law, though, compels him to continue paying child support even though he’s not a biological parent — and there are more like him.

Nearly 25 percent of about 3,000 paternity tests conducted by the state Department of Human Services from July 2007 through June ruled out the supposed father as the biological parent. Nationally, that number reaches nearly 30 percent, according to the American Association of Blood Banks.'

Fathers & Families Files Federal Suit to Block New Mass. CS Guidelines

Matt · 2 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Glenn Sacks; article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers & Families Files Lawsuit to Stop New Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines

Several years ago Fathers & Families scored a major victory in Massachusetts, getting child support obligations reduced by an average of 15%. This victory has saved Massachusetts noncustodial parents over $1 billion since 2001.

Unfortunately, now noncustodial parents are under attack, as child support guidelines are being greatly increased.

Fathers and Families has filed suit in Federal District Court in Boston to stop the scheduled January 1 implementation of new Child Support Guidelines. The suit seeks a temporary injunction halting the use of the new guidelines until a full hearing can be held. It will be heard before Judge D.P. Woodlock on Monday, January 5 at 10 AM in courtroom 1.'

UK: How benefits make parents better off if they decide to split

AngryMan · 2 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"David Cameron today attacked ministers' failure to protect the family after it emerged that couples with children can become more than £5,000 a year better off if they split up or choose to live apart.

A study by the Civitas think-tank shows how millions of working families are missing out on the benefits paid to single parents.

Today the Conservative leader said the report exposed the 'madness' of Government benefits policy and its failure to protect the family."

"Emerging priorities in men's issues in North America"

Matt · 2 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Presentation here. Greg obviously put a lot of effort into putting this together. Good work, Greg!

UK: Fathers' role in education stressed

anthony · 2 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Schools are being urged to increase contact with absent fathers to encourage them to play a greater role in their child's education, it has been reported.

Ministers want fathers who are not living in the family home to be kept informed of their child's progress at school, believing it can improve pupils' well-being and academic performance, particularly among boys, according to The Independent.

A recent Cabinet Office report showed a quarter of children were living in lone parent homes.

Studies show a father's involvement is vital to encouraging boys, in particular, to do better in school.'

"Governance Feminism"

MR · 2 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article entitled Alec Baldwin: A Promise to Ourselves. Excerpt:

'...“Governance Feminism” was first coined by ... Law Professor Janet Halley. The following is an excerpt from Baldwin’s interview with Professor Suk:

"[Governance Feminism is] the idea that feminism, which once criticized the law from the outside, is today actually in charge in many places in the law — among police, prosecutors, lawmakers, judges, and other legal actors. The feminism that often “governs” today is that strand developed by the legal scholar Catherine MacKinnon and that focuses on the subordination of women by men, particularly in intimate sexual relationships. Her influence on our legal system’s understandings of men and women cannot be overstated. If you talk to police, prosectuors, law-makers, and judges about domestic violence, perhaps they have not read MacKinnon, but they often subscribe to the premise that men subordinate women through sex and violence."

$13-million facility teaches homeless women fine cuisine while ignoring men

anthony · 3 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The cafe is the latest project of the Good Shepherd Center for Homeless Women and Children. Over the last 25 years, the organization has provided thousands with food, clothes, housing and counseling, all under the steady hand of Sister Julia Mary Farley, its founder and a saintly sort in local social work circles.

Good Shepherd occupies nearly an entire block in a stretch of town otherwise peppered with cheap motels, union halls and lavanderías. Its latest addition is a $13-million building with 21 transitional apartments -- and this tiny cafe.

The cafe is staffed by 10 women, nine of them mothers, all of them recently homeless, imprisoned or both. There are former addicts, dealers, thieves and old-fashioned down-on-their-lockers -- some of whom have eaten out of garbage cans -- being trained in classic cuisine and, on the best days, learning to love themselves again.'

Columnist praises men who stay with wife and child even after paternity fraud is known

anthony · 3 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Stop paternity fraud" has become the rallying cry for cuckolded men. Child advocates such as D.C. attorney Ron Henry call for child-support reform to prevent innocent men from being turned into "indentured servants" for 18 years. Paternity-fraud victim Carnell Smith, who founded www.paternityfraud.com, offers support and DNA tests to suspicious men. A Utah company, Identigene, markets affordable DNA Paternity Test Kits in Rite-Aid, CVS, Walgreens, Wal-Mart and other stores across the country.

Paternity fraud taps into a deep anger and distress men can feel when faced with a duplicitous woman. At the same time, however, I also have met many men who, when faced with this identical dilemma, considered their options, took a deep breath and became the father to a child who was not their own.
...
Too often, our media focus on the boys who make babies and walk away, and ignores the men who, with full knowledge and free will, quietly shoulder the responsibility, become a partner to the mother and take the father's seat at the table.'

Mother charged in toddler's death

anthony · 3 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Stevensville mother told sheriff's deputies she killed her 3-year-old daughter and attempted suicide earlier this month because she couldn't handle the holidays and wanted to take her child with her when she died, according to court documents.

Victoria Adele Sparrow, 43, was released from a Baltimore hospital yesterday and formally charged with the death of her daughter, Laci. She is being held without bond at the Queen Anne's County Detention Center on charges of first-and second-degree murder, first-and second-degree assault, reckless endangerment, first-degree child abuse resulting in death, and second-degree child abuse.'

Woman booked into Angelina jail on charges she killed her husband in 2003

anthony · 3 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Angelina County woman indicted last year in connection with the 2003 shooting of her husband arrived New Year's Eve to Angelina County jail after being extradited from Iowa.

Shelly Dorsey, 37, was charged with capital murder Wednesday afternoon following her refusal to waive her extradition from an Iowa county jail where she was being held.

An Angelina County grand jury in late October indicted Dorsey for the murder of 30-year-old Alvin Dorsey II, who died after being shot in the chest outside Little Jim's night club, off U.S. 69 south, on Sept. 12, 2003.

Police responded to reports of shots fired; when deputies arrived on scene, they saw Dorsey standing over the body of her husband, who was lying on his back in a pool of blood, an arrest report stated.'

Woman caught on tape trying to hire a hit man to kill her ex-husband

anthony · 3 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Washington state woman is accused of trying to hire someone to kill her ex-husband and his family, and police say they have the video to prove it.

Investigators said 28-year-old Elizabeth Beimer was enraged over a custody battle with her ex-husband and asked a friend to help find a hit man. That friend went to the police.

So instead, Beimer ended up meeting with an undercover officer.'

Pain of divorce: Where money is placed above fairness

anthony · 3 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Additionally, after thirty years of mainstream feminist control of virtually all federal, state, and county family law related legislation every Elkins Task Force member has undergone intensive training based on questionable ideological models, including through lucrative STOP grants funded by the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), the very name of which unequivocally reveals intentional gender bias.

Between 1996 and 2003, California was awarded more than $60 million in STOP grants to ensure the effective handling and prosecution of violent crimes against women (not men). The Judicial Council of California even administered a VAWA Education Project (VAWEP) to provide the courts with information, educational materials, and training about abused women.

Hence, feminist trained industry dependent Task Force members directly or indirectly represent womens' rights activists who complained about not being represented on the Task Force thereby giving women an overwhelming default advantage. There is no Task Force member with a clear understanding of men or fathers' interests, in part because no meaningful programs exist for training industry stakeholders on related issues and research; nor do men's issues bring financial incentives to state or county coffers.'

Woman charged in murder of police officer husband

anthony · 3 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'But here's where the evidence didn't seem to fit quite right. For one thing, said McCartin, a policeman at home, out of uniform, would never reveal he was a cop for fear of making a bad situation worse. And besides, if Joel had been shot while confronting his attackers, there should have been blood spatter everywhere. But there wasn't. There was lots of blood, of course. But only on the couch.

...In my opinion he was shot while he was sleepin' on the couch. He was on the couch the entire time.'

UK: Sex discrimination laws prevented ban on the belt for girls, reveal archives

anthony · 4 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'EARLY moves to ban teachers from giving girls the belt at school were thwarted by sex discrimination laws, newly released government papers reveal.
...
The documents, dating from the late 1970s – ten years before the belt wasbanned – were kept secret for 30 years and reveal that sex discrimination laws of the time prevented a reprieve from corporal punishment for girls.
...
"Any rules which provide that boys should receive corporal punishment where girls do not would be illegal.

"The Secretary of State for Scotland did not agree with corporal punishment for girls but could not say so because of the Sex Discrimination Act. The Secretary of State felt strongly that girls of any age should not receive corporal punishment."'

Rising autism rates challenge schools

anthony · 4 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of students diagnosed with autism in South Carolina's public schools has more than doubled in the past five years, creating more challenges in programming and staffing for education officials.
...
The local trend mirrors national data that show the prevalence has risen to 1 in every 150 American children, and almost 1 in 94 boys, according to a report released by the Centers for Disease Control in 2007.

Durant said the biggest challenge is making sure that everyone gets the necessary training to provide the right services to the students. Making sure special education teachers have training is much easier than with general education teachers, she added, but no less important.'

"Some Change Is a Big Improvement"

anthony · 4 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists are howling in protest against this growing trend toward single-sex public education. Ever since the 1960s, they've been demanding that boys and girls, and men and women, be treated exactly the same based on feminist theory that there are no gender differences.

"Without anyone batting an eye, we are re-segregating schools based on gender," complained Rosalind Barnett of Brandeis University. "If for a minute people talked about re-segregating on race, people would be up in arms."

But gender is not like race, and the huge demand for single-sex programs shows that parents know they are effective. Don't expect Hillary Clinton to protest something so popular, particularly among blacks, and it is doubtful that the Obama Administration will dare to stop this trend.'

Naugatuck man joins ranks of volunteer dads

anthony · 4 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'He is also involved in the "Dad's Club," through which programs give children quality time with their fathers or any other influential males in their lives. Among the many programs the organization hosts are "Doughnuts with Dad" and movie nights for fathers and their children. Last year the club showed "Air Bud" and appropriately named the program "Me and My Bud."

Huculak tries to convince other men that parental groups, like Parent Teacher Associations or Parent School Associations, are not just for women. He believes the message is starting to resonate.

"For so long it's always been the female that's going to the school, and the man kind of feels left out or that it's not his place," he said. "We're trying to show that the fathers, as well as mothers, need to have a strong presence in schools."

Studies show students perform better when mothers and fathers are both involved in the education of their children, according to the National PTA. Men and women think differently and bring different perspectives and skills to school and PTA activities, the group says.'

India: Women may have prevented recession: Study

anthony · 4 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An interesting study has now said that the roots may lie in the basic differences between men and women.

Last year's hall of shame are leaders that just couldn't stand up to the downturn. They all made mistakes, they all suffered setbacks and they are all men.

In fact, a recent study by Cambridge University has suggested that if there were more women in top power positions, the global financial crisis would have been significantly diminished.

So would that hold true for the economic downturn in India too? Powerful women who lead the pack seem to think so.

"Thinking things through, being authentic, ready to get your hands dirty and get down to the frontline yourself, being nurturing and supportive, these are traditionally a woman's traits but they rise to the fore in a crisis situation," said Dr Gita Piramal, author, Managing Radical Change.

Last year saw a series of problems that signalled a lack of people sensitivity, a tendency to shoot from the hip and not take into consideration the views of others - mistakes less likely to be made by women.'

Australia: Women are better than men at controlling their lust?

anthony · 4 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The tiresome myth that women are not as visually aroused as men is used to justify everything from sexual assault to double standards about public toplessness, and it's time to kill it dead.
...
Sometimes women even have sex with men for no other reason than - shock horror - physical attraction.

The should-be-obvious truth is that straight women love men's bodies. That it sometimes seems otherwise is only because pervy men are more acceptable in our culture than pervy women.'

India: First Website for Women-only Jobs

anthony · 4 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is a known fact that many women get rejected in job interviews just because of their sex. At the same time, many women in corporate India complain that they are denied promotions because of their sex. In such a scenario, it's not surprising that women worry before job interviews that they may lose out to men.
...
A women specific website can certainly do no harm to the ladies. But is it of any use to them? What do the women stand to gain out of this venture?

-A career site where men are not allowed means that the possibility of gender bias at the interviews is completely ruled out. Women will NOT be rejected just because of their gender.
...
-Last, but not the least, women should not forget that whenever they apply through naukriforwomen.com, they have already eliminated more than half the competition.'

Clinton and Palin Encourage Women Politicos

anthony · 4 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'"Women suffer more in difficult economic times than men do, so focusing on that, concentrating on equal pay and health care (are) all good things that I saw in the (survey) summary," said Jenni Smith, president of Mississippi National Organization for Women. She said that NOW is in the process of finalizing its legislative agenda for the 111th Congress, and is including many of the items that the poll revealed as women's concerns. She emphasized that the economy is most definitely a women's issue.
...
The same double standard seems to permeate every woman's campaign. An August Pew Research study indicated that while Americans believe women have more of what it takes to be leaders—honesty, intelligence, compassion and so forth—less than six percent believe women make better political leaders than men.

In the Lifetime poll, women agreed that qualifications should trump gender as Obama chooses his advisors. Smith said she would like to see the Obama administration continue to ensure that women are included at the highest level of government.'

Washington Post: 'One Gender's Crash'

anthony · 4 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let me begin with the caveats: I like men. My husband is one, as are my two sons. I have spent most of my career surrounded by men, and I have no major complaints. But as the financial debacle unfolds, I can't help noticing that all the perpetrators of the greatest economic mess in eight decades are, well, men. Specifically, they are rich, white, middle-aged guys, same as the ones who brought us Watergate in the 1970s, the Teapot Dome scandal in the 1920s and, presumably, the fall of Rome.

...

The financial crisis has exposed a quieter but equally pressing concern: We need women in leadership positions not only because they can manage as well as men but because they manage differently than men; because they tend -- over time and in the aggregate -- to make different kinds of decisions and to accept and avoid different kinds of risk. We need women who will say no to bad decisions based on male-dominated rivalries and clubby golf course confidences. We need women to blow the whistle when risks explode and to challenge the presumptions that too many men, clustered too closely together and sharing a common worldview, can easily indulge.'

Boston Globe: 'Girl power'

anthony · 4 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Females do have a lot of say. . . . A lot of the drama that happens on the street is over a female," said Samantha Allen, a 17-year-old senior with short brown hair that sloped over her forehead.

Allen said there is a name for girls who, either wittingly or unwittingly, initiate conflicts through their boyfriends, brothers, or male friends. They're called "set-up chicks," she said.

"They're chicks that run their mouths to other parts of the city," Allen said. "They cause a lot of violence."

Most of them rely on men to settle their feuds because they do not know who else to go to for help, said Allen. Many girls could use the guidance the campaign organizers are trying to provide, she said.'

Stephen Baskerville: "Divorced from Reality"

Matt · 5 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The decline of the family has now reached critical and truly dangerous proportions. Family breakdown touches virtually every family and every American. It is not only the major source of social instability in the Western world today but also seriously threatens civic freedom and constitutional government.

G. K. Chesterton once observed that the family serves as the principal check on government power, and he suggested that someday the family and the state would confront one another. That day has arrived.
...
Contrary to common assumptions, divorce today seldom involves two people mutually deciding to part ways. According to Frank Furstenberg and Andrew Cherlin in Divided Families, 80 percent of divorces are unilateral, that is, over the objection of one spouse. Patricia Morgan of London's Civitas think tank reports that in over half of divorces, there was no recollection of major conflict before the separation.'

Minnesota: Child custody law up for review

anthony · 5 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'St. Paul, Minn. — When a couple with a child divorces, a judge is supposed to start with a clean slate before deciding whether the child will live solely with mom, dad, or split living with each of them.

But under a legislative proposal, judges would presume the child would live with both parents unless there's a good reason not to -- such as child abuse.

While adding the word "presumption" to a statute may seem trivial, it would level the legal playing field that fathers' rights groups say is currently tilted against them.
...
Jobst says changing the laws so that judges presume divorced parents share physical custody would allow children to spend more time with both parents.
...
The state already presumes that both parents will share legal custody of children, which is different from physical custody.'

UK Woman charged with murdering her husband by 'shooting him while he slept'

AngryMan · 5 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A pensioner has appeared in court charged with shooting her husband dead while he lay sleeping.

Helen Lawson, 61, is accused of blasting her husband Geoffrey, also 61, twice in the chest with a shotgun.

Police found the body of the electrician in the bedroom of their £200,000 cottage after his wife dialled 999 just after 3.30am on Sunday.

Mrs Lawson was arrested at the scene and charged with murder.'

The False Rape Society blog

anthony · 5 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog here.

'News and commentary about wrongful accusations of rape and sexual assault.'

'This Web site was started by a U.S.-based attorney to help raise awareness about false, unfounded and wrongful rape accusations. Objectively verifiable data indicates that at least 9 percent and probably closer to half of all rape claims are false. (See, e.g., S. Taylor, K.C. Johnson, Until Proven Innocent.) Yet the crime of making a false rape report has become so embroiled in the radical feminist sexual assault milieu that it has been improperly removed from the public discourse about rape. Sexual assault counselors often disingenuously refer to the fact of false rape accusations as a "myth." Denigrating the experience of the falsely accused by dismissing their victimization as a myth is not merely dishonest but morally grotesque.'

Fathers' group sues to stop new child support rules

anthony · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Fathers & Families, a Boston-based group that advocates for "children's right to the love and care of both parents after separation or divorce," filed suit against Chief Justice for Administration and Management Robert A. Mulligan and other trial court judges on Dec. 23. That same day, the group filed a request for a preliminary injunction in hopes of preventing judges in Massachusetts from applying the new guidelines to cases involving child support after Jan. 1, 2009.

...

In its lawsuit, Fathers & Families argues that Mulligan and the Trial Court violated the federal equal protection clause by implementing discriminatory rules, the federal due process clause by passing a law by "judicial fiat," and the Massachusetts Declaration of Rights by passing a law without the participation of the other two branches of state government.

The group also argues that the new guidelines are "arbitrary and capricious" where the Trial Court did not consider, as statutorily required, any "data on the cost of raising children."

Divorce May Widen Distance Between Teens, Fathers

Matt · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ScienceDaily (Jan. 11, 2008) — The typical distancing from parents by adolescents is exacerbated by divorce for fathers, but not for mothers, according to a recent study published in the Journal of Marriage and Family.

"Historically, teens distance themselves from parents and increase involvement with peers," says co-author Dr. Alan Booth, distinguished professor of sociology, human development and demography at Penn State. "Coupled with divorce, this distancing may result in further declines in father-child closeness."

Although research demonstrates that fathers' involvement with children has increased in recent decades, mothers continue to do the majority of childcare while fathers are the less involved parent.'

Forum: The new Congress convenes, trial lawyer lobby smiles

anthony · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 111th Congress convenes at noon today, and House Democratic leadership is starting the week with two bills that appeal to their core constituencies but send the business community into conniptions. The two pieces of legislation -- the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act and the Paycheck Fairness Act -- are priorities for organized labor, liberal women's advocacy groups, and the plaintiff's bar.

The Paycheck Fairness Act is potentially worse, in that creates many new grounds for litigation in a supposed effort to fight gender discrimination. The bill, H.R. 1338 in the 110th Congress, passed in July 2008 by a vote of 247-178. It would:

-Eliminate current caps on punitive and compensatory damages in claims made under the Equal Pay Act;
-Expose employers to unlimited punitive and compensatory damage awards when unintentional pay disparities have occurred;
-Eliminate key employer defenses for pay disparities;
-Prohibit employers from disciplining or discharging employees for publicly disclosing sensitive wage information; and,
-Mandate new federal government "guidelines" about the relative worth of different types of jobs.

In its original form, the legislation also included the old "comparable worth" guidelines.'

Update: 'Jealous wife' charged after fatal genitals fire

anthony · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ADELAIDE, Australia - An Australian woman accused of setting her husband's genitals on fire because she thought he was having an affair has been charged with murder.

Prosecutors said 44-year-old Rajini Narayan confessed to neighbors that she set her husband on fire on Dec. 8, 2008, after she saw him hug another woman.

She was initially charged with endangering life and arson but the charges were upgraded to murder after her 47-year-old husband, Satish Narayan, died from his injuries last week.
...
Boord quoted Narayan allegedly saying: "I just wanted to burn his penis so it belongs to me and no one else. ... I didn't mean this to happen."'

UK: Government Plan to Name and Shame 'Sexist' Companies

BinaryShadow · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a move intended to eradicate the gender pay gap once and for all, the government is considering plans to shame companies into paying both male and female employees fairly.

Should the plans be approved, private companies will be required to publish annual figures specifying the number of male and female employees in each of their different pay grades. A 'pay inequalities' league table would then be developed from the results, designed to name and shame the companies with the largest gender pay gap.'

Of course, you're a 'sexist' company if women aren't paid the same as men (as in making less than men). If women outearn men in a field, I highly doubt this organization will care. We all know the gender pay gap doesn't account for life choices or experience or risk factors. But you guys have heard all this before.

Italy: Women Get Better Pay, Same Promotion Rates as Men at the Executive Level

anthony · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female executives who break through the “glass ceiling” in corporate America are rewarded with higher overall compensation than their male counterparts and benefit from the same rate of promotion, according to new research from the Tepper School of Business at Carnegie Mellon University.

...

The findings, gleaned from tracking the career paths and compensation of more than 16,000 executives over a 14-year period, identified that female executives actually earned a total of about $100,000 more per year than men of the same age, educational background and job experience. On average, total compensation for all of the executives — about 5 percent of whom were female — was about $2.46 million, including nearly $461,000 in salary and bonuses. The average age was 53 and approximately 23 percent of the executives studied — men and women — held an MBA.

However, women within the overall sample were, on average, younger and less experienced than males at the executive level and more prevalent at the lower executive levels. For example, only 2 percent of executives at the CEO, president or chairman level were female, while women represented nearly 6 percent of CFOs or vice presidents.'

UK: 'Radical feminists' honoured for women's enterprise

anthony · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Ten years ago we were seen as radical feminists, banging on about women's rights," recalls Ms Gill. This had now changed, she added, with even the banks adapting their services to appeal specifically to women. "It has made them realise that they [women entrepreneurs] need a bit of a different service," she said.

Female business owners are well placed to survive the recession, perhaps more so than their male counterparts who typically are more comfortable funding their ventures with higher levels of debt, Ms Gill said.

"Women are going to be better placed to take on the challenges of a recession. They have better strategies in place. They are prepared to play in a team environment. It's going to be tough for staff, because frankly they have had it easy for the last 10 years," she said.'

Singapore: More Men Die from COPD Compared to Women

anthony · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Singapore - infoZine - Men across the Asia-Pacific region have consistently higher mortality and hospitalization rates for chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) than corresponding rates for women in the region.

This higher rate for men reflects a different risk profile for men and women – in particular the higher prevalence of smoking among men across the Asia- Pacific region.

According to a study in Respirology published by Wiley-Blackwell, the average death rates ranged from 6.4 to 9.2 per 10 000 population for men while the corresponding rates for women only ranged from 2.1 to 3.5 per 10 000 population.'

A Man’s Take On Advice In Women’s Magazines

anthony · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Peruse any magazine rack and various Web sites and you’ll see headlines such as these splattered all over. Inside you’ll read article upon article about how women can decode, seduce, corral, turn on, and coerce men.

One is left to believe that men don’t want to be married or in any sort of committed relationship, men don’t want to treat women well, men don’t want families, men don’t want to settle down, and worst of all, men don’t even have the desire or the ability to communicate any of this about themselves. Good thing we smell so good.
...
I happen to know women who don’t want to be married and/or in a serious relationship. I know women who aren’t the articulate, clear communicators they’re supposed to be. I know women who aren’t that into kids and don’t want a family.

So pardon my frustration, and other men’s, when we read articles portraying us as the incapable, the insincere, and the incompetent gender.'

Economic blame game targets men

anthony · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"All of the recent perpetrators of the greatest economic mess in eight decades are, well, men," writes Deborah Spar in the Washington Post.

The aptly named Spar, president of Barnard College, deploys a variety of arguments to back up this broad claim, including male hormonal imbalance (testosterone has been scientifically linked with risky stock trading) and evidence that women tend to be more risk-averse than men, especially when high-stake finances are concerned. Add to that the grim facts of female employment in finance, where no women held chief executive positions as recently as last year, and the evidence against men becomes circumstantially compelling.
...
Yes, sure, a woman blew the whistle on Enron. Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal reported Monday that Mary Schapiro headed an agency that extensively investigated Bernard Madoff, but failed to uncover his vast Ponzi scheme.

Thus far, her hormone levels have not been analyzed.'

"Teen Sex Isn't a Crime With a Hot Teacher"

anthony · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The day before Christmas, 23-year-old Hope Jacoby, an athletic trainer at Tustin High School in California, was arrested and charged with suspicion of oral copulation with a minor and unlawful sex with a minor after she allegedly had sex with a student the police identified only as a male student who is 14 - 17 years old.
...
That got me to thinking, is it really a "crime" if the woman this boy slept with is better looking than any of the girls at his school?? Yes, I know that as a trainer at the school she was in a position of authority and really should have known better, and yes, if the boy in question is actually 14, instead of 17, that makes me mad. But if the boy is 17, as reports say he might be, then is it really so bad?
...
I believe that young boys can be be traumatized after being lured into sex by a desperate, lonely, "I can't find anyone else to sleep with" hag. But if the woman in question is young, hot, and desirable by many, don't you think that there's a really big chance that the boy (or boys) in question might have actually wanted to be with her -- really really badly?

I know that this isn't going to be a popular opinion, but I'm sticking to it and I'll bet if you showed ANY man a picture of Jacoby they would say that they definitely would have had sex with her in high school and it would NOT have traumatized them.'

UK: Wife kills husband in booze row

anthony · 6 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Leeds woman has been jailed for life after stabbing her partner to death in a row over whose turn it was to buy booze from the off-licence.

David Rider, 44, bled to death after Lesley Buck, 40 , pictured, thrust a kitchen knife through his leg as he sat on the sofa.

When police and paramedics attended her house in Belle Isle, Leeds, Buck seemed more interested in reading the newspaper and watching TV, a court heard.

After delivering the fatal blow, Buck walked to a phone box to dial 999 and claimed her partner's injuries were self-inflicted.
...
Ordering Buck to serve a minimum of 10 years before being considered for parole, judge Scott Wolstenholme, told her: "It was senseless, drunken and lethal violence on your part which has caused a man to lose his life."'

FDA Will Continue To Study Chemical Which Mimics Estrogen

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Food and Drug Administration, criticized by its own scientific advisers for ignoring available data about health risks posed by a chemical found in everyday plastic, said yesterday it has no plans to amend its position on the substance but will continue to study it.

The agency has been reviewing its risk assessments for bisphenol A, a chemical used to harden plastic that is found in a wide variety of products, from baby bottles to compact discs to the lining of canned goods. The chemical, commonly called BPA, mimics estrogen and may disrupt the body's carefully calibrated endocrine system.
...
Over the past decade, more than 130 studies have linked BPA to breast cancer, obesity, diabetes, neurological problems and other disorders. Much of the new research suggests that BPA has an effect at very low doses -- lower than the current safety standard set by the FDA. The most prominent finding was by the National Toxicology Program, part of the National Institutes of Health, which reported that there is "some concern" that BPA may affect the brain and behavioral development of fetuses, infants and young children.'

Woman Charged in Nephew's Stabbing Death Ruled Insane

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'IRVINGTON, N.J. (AP) -- An Irvington woman charged in the stabbing death of her 5-year-old nephew has been found innocent by reason of insanity.

Jasmine Collins was accused of stabbing Meshach Collins of Orange to death while the boy was at her house to play with his cousins in November 2006.

Authorities say she had changed her clothes and was arrested by police walking a few blocks from her home across the border into Newark.

Superior Court Judge Peter Vazquez ruled Tuesday that Collins was not guilty by reason of insanity.

Essex County Prosecutor's Office spokesman Paul Loriquet says she is being held in a state hospital until she is determined to no longer be a danger to herself or others.'

Should Government Reduce Inequality in Life Spans?

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt;

'In 2005, life expectancy at birth was almost seven percent higher for American women than for American men (80.4 years for women vs. 75.2 years for men). Governments could certainly reduce this life-expectancy inequality by redistributing medical research funding on women's health to research on men's health, and general medical care funding from women to men. Consider that men are more likely to die from prostate cancer than women are from breast cancer. Yet in 2005 federal expenditures for prostate cancer research were $390 million compared to $698 million for breast cancer research, and the American Cancer Society contributed almost three times as much for breast cancer research ($98 million) as for prostate cancer research ($36 million).'

UK: Michael Flatley false rape claim stripper faces jail

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former exotic dancer, who falsely accused Michael Flatley of rape, has been told by an American judge that she faces jail unless she cooperates with his lawyers as they seek to recover $11m in damages.

Tyna Marie Robertson tried to extort $30m (€21m) from the Riverdance star after saying she would go public with false allegations that he had sexually assaulted her in a Las Vegas hotel in 2002.
...
Robertson was later brought before Cook County judge Alexander White who told her she must cooperate with Mr Flatley's lawyers who are seeking documentation of her assets.

"This is your get-out-of-jail pass. If there is no cooperation . . . We are talking about civil contempt. I will put you in county jail for six months. No questions asked," he added.'

Woman arrested, kids taken away after alleged violent argument with husband

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MANITOWOC — A 22-year-old Manitowoc woman faces several criminal charges following a violent argument with her husband Friday that endangered the couple's two young children, according to Manitowoc Police Department reports.

Ashley R. Fonda faces charges of domestic violence-related damage to property, domestic violence-related disorderly conduct and second-degree reckless endangerment. The incident occurred at 4:45 a.m. in the 300 block of Riverview Drive.

According to police:

Fonda and her husband got into an argument Friday while a babysitter was watching their 1½-year-old daughter and 5-month-old son in the same apartment. Fonda allegedly began throwing things, tipped a garbage can over, knocked over furniture and threw a pot of food at her husband, smashing into the door of her child's room and putting a hole through it.

While her husband held their son, Fonda allegedly began throwing tools at her husband and threatening to kill him. She allegedly chased him through the apartment complex and beat on the apartment door with an air socket wrench when he got inside.'

Ten-year sentence for husband’s manslaughter

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who pleaded guilty to fatally stabbing her husband after a night of drinking in West Utica last April, was sentenced in County Court today.

Jady Voce, 43, of Saratoga Street, Utica, pleaded guilty to first-degree manslaughter before Judge Barry M. Donalty in November.

She was sentenced to 10 years in state prison today, plus five years post-release supervision, court clerks said.
...
Voce used a pocket knife that she carried for protection to stab her husband in the liver while at the corner of Lenox Avenue and Court Street, police said. Joseph Voce bled to death as a result of his injuries.'

Mother in child abuse case is released from jail while husband is sentenced to 9 years

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — A woman was sentenced Tuesday to time served for her role in the confinement of her son, then 9, who authorities say was kept locked in his bedroom for almost three years and monitored by a video camera.

Earlier in the day, Michelle Piercy pleaded guilty to child neglect and told prosecutors that the 809 days she had spent in jail were less stressful than living in the home her husband turned into a prison for their son.

Circuit Judge Mallory Cooper accepted a prosecutor's recommendation that she be sentenced to the more than two years she's already spent behind bars, and she was released from custody.

Her husband, Randall Piercy, was sentenced earlier this month to nine years in prison after pleading guilty to aggravated child abuse. Michelle Piercy is seeking a divorce.'

"Domestic Abuse Against Men — It Happens"

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic abuse against men — yes, it happens. You're going to have a hard time finding statistics, because reluctant as many women are to report abusive husbands or boyfriends to the authorities out of fear of his retaliation or because they've been conditioned to accept the abuse, men are even less likely to pick up the phone, dial 911 and say their wife or girlfriend just went upside their head or threw a pot at them.

If a man has a hot-headed, heavy-handed woman to deal with, there are reasons he doesn't say or do anything about it except hope she doesn't wind up maiming or killing him. For one, it's embarrassing to have it look like she can whoop his butt. For another, in certain states, all she has to do is claim she was defending herself and that she is in fear of him when the cops show up. Whether it's true or not, he promptly finds himself treated to a free ride downtown where he's accorded an insider's view of the county jail — from the wrong side of the bars.'

Woman Accused Of Murdering Her Husband Smiles During Mug Shot Photo

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Authorities say an Allen woman accused of killing her husband was determined to finish the job but made no attempt to flee the bloody scene.

Charles Shanks, 49, was stabbed, beaten with a stone and had his wrists cut in the couple's home Sunday, police said.

His wife, 51-year-old Kimberly Shanks, was being held Tuesday in the Collin County Jail, charged with murder. Unlike most people in her situation, she smiled for her mug shot.
...
She was being held in lieu of $100,000 bail. No attorney had been named to represent her, according to jail records.'

Woman admits burning 5 children, killing 1

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Saying she wanted to avoid putting her children through another ordeal, a Colorado Springs woman accepted a plea deal Friday and admitted she poured gasoline on her five children and lit them on fire, killing one.

Maria Darlene Gardner, who also uses the last name Joseph, pleaded guilty to child abuse causing death and four counts of child abuse causing serious bodily injury. The deal was mediated Friday before Senior 4th Judicial District Judge Richard Toth.

In exchange for her pleas, prosecutors Jeff Lindsey and Debbie Pearson dropped charges of first-degree murder and 11 other charges.

Gardner, 26, will be sentenced to between 75 and 85 years in prison Feb. 20.
...
"I thought we could win with the insanity defense," McHenry said. "An expert psychologist examined her within four days of the fire and decided she was completely psychotic at the time. She chose to do this so her kids would not have to be put through the trauma of testifying in open court."'

Australia: Four years' jail for killing husband in drunken rage

anthony · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Chaim Kimel, 55, died on the operating table at St Vincent's Hospital, just hours after an argument about the couple's catering business turned violent.

A jury earlier this year found Stewart, 32, not guilty of his murder but guilty of manslaughter.

In court yesterday, Stewart was sentenced to four years and six months in jail, with a non-parole period of four years.

She will be eligible for release in June 2011.

Stewart sobbed as Justice Jane Mathews spoke of her history of drug and alcohol abuse, anorexia and self-harm; she had suffered the childhood traumas of her mother dying of breast cancer and of sexual abuse by three different people.
...
Stewart had told psychiatrists she believed Mr Kimel to be dominating her in the relationship. But Justice Mathews said whatever perception Stewart had of her husband's behaviour, it was probably "designed to shield her from her own excesses.'

DA won't charge wife who killed abusive husband

el cid · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This story may indicate we've moved to a new stage in our treatment of women who kill their husbands: if she alleges abuse, don't bother filing charges. Kill your husband, claim abuse, walk away. There's no indication the wife was in immediate danger nor are details provided about the man's alleged "pattern of violence."

Excerpt:

"More than a year after the shooting death of Trinidad attorney Jim Tatum by his wife Ann, a court-appointed prosecutor has decided not to file criminal charges.

The shooting in the Tatum home just outside Trinidad ended a stormy marriage. Although Ann Tatum never denied shooting her husband multiple times in their kitchen — the event was witnessed by a deputy sheriff — Jim Tatum's pattern of violence against her surfaced early on as a possible legal defense."

UK: Female drunk driver jailed for seven years for toddler's death

AngryMan · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

The mother of a toddler crushed to death against school gates by the 4x4 of a drink driver said today: 'Every day is a living hell.'

Tina Woods, 31, was speaking after a woman was jailed for seven years for causing the death of her 15-month-old son Finlay.

The boy was in his pushchair with his mother when a Toyota Hilux veered towards them outside Selwyn primary school in Chingford last September.

At the wheel was Katie Gutierrez-Perez, 40, who was driving to hospital after a failed suicide attempt and had binged on drink and sleeping pills.

Witnesses said that after the initial impact the 4x4 repeatedly rammed into the gates, each time crushing the pushchair, Snaresbrook Crown Court in London heard.

Twenty parents and passers-by tried to lift the car off him but he died of severe head injuries.'

UK: Single father, 2 sons turned away from swimming pool

AngryMan · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A single father was left stunned after he was turned away from a swimming pool when staff told him he could not provide proper supervision for his two sons.

Phillip Smith and sons Jake, aged five, and Aiden, three, were not allowed to enjoy a swim at the leisure centre because under-eights must be accompanied on a one-to-one basis by adults.

...

Mr Smith, 37, from Killamarsh in Sheffield, who is separated from his sons' mother, accused the leisure centre of 'discriminating against single parents'.

He said: 'As a fireman, I'm highly trained and expected to be able to provide first aid at emergencies.

'To say I cannot cope with looking after my two sons at a swimming pool is just mad.'"

Dads in the PTA

Matt · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2009, for the first time in U.S. history, the parent in charge of the Parent Teacher Association will be a dad.

Charles J. Saylors will take office as president of the 5.5 million member organization in June, putting a further dent in the stereotype that has taken hold in recent years of moms who leave the workforce and devote their impressive — and sometimes excessive — energies to the PTA.

Men make up just 10 percent of the membership of the national PTA — which was founded 112 years ago as the “National Congress of Mothers.” While that number is small, it is larger than it has ever been, and reflects a steady increase of about 1 percent in each of the past five years.'

Judge's 'Gorilla' Warning To Teen

WakeUp · 7 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A young driving offender has been told he faces the prospect of a jail shower "with the gorillas in the mist" if he continues to break the law.

Sydney Magistrate Brian Maloney gave 19-year-old Cody Heap a stark warning about jail life in an attempt to scare the youth into good behaviour.

"You'll find big, ugly, hairy, strong men (in jail) who've got faces only a mother could love that will pay a lot of attention to you - and your anatomy," the magistrate said.'

My question: Because of traffic violations, the judge threatened this guy, saying he could being raped in prison. Would a judge say that to a woman?

Canada: 'Men's rights groups thrive on anger'

anthony · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sites such as these – and believe me, they are legion – are dedicated to "feminist horror stories" around the "divorce industry" which deprives fathers of their children and paycheques. Their other issues include the lack of resources for men who are battered by their wives, false accusations of partner abuse and rape, and last, but far from least, how men have no choice regarding what a woman they've impregnated does. They can't stop her from ending the pregnancy nor can they walk away from 18 years of support payments if she chooses to go to term.
...
So it's easy to conclude that, in many cases, the most vehement of these men's rights types are angry over losing control over their women.

Which might explain why, as much research shows, post-divorce men suffer disproportionately from mental health issues such as depression.

That they need counselling and similar services is evident. That's what they should be lobbying for.'

A simple list of Australian companies to boycott

Anonymous · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Hi All,

I found this list on the Australian 'Employer of Choice for Women' (EOWA) website identifying organisations that 'recognise and advance their female workforce': here (.pdf file)

The EOWA was established by the Australian Government to 'administer the Equal Opportunity for Women in the Workplace Act 1999 (Commonwealth) and through education, assist organisations to achieve equal opportunity for women.'

Unfortunately, most of the organisations on this list are universities, schools and other publicly subsidised entities against whom boycotts will simply mean less work, but some are subsidiaries of large multi-national organisations and big Australian exporters that your readership will recognise.

Disney Focuses on Boys

anthony · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's subscription only, so the whole article is below.

'Walt Disney Co. is making a push to crack a market that few media companies have been able to conquer -- boys aged 6-14.

Next month, the company will launch a boy-focused entertainment brand called Disney XD, consisting of a new cable television channel, a comprehensive Web site with games, music, videos and social networking.

For Disney, the move marks a new push designed to replicate some of the success it has scored in recent years with its largely girl-targeted entertainment franchises such as Hannah Montana, High School Musical and the Jonas Brothers.

"We looked at the landscape and feel that girls are being served -- if not super-served, and preschoolers are also well served, but boys really haven't been," says Rich Ross, president of Disney Channels Worldwide. "If boys have been served, it's been mostly in animation, which [is] only a narrow portion of what boys are interested in."

Using both television and a new Web portal, Disney hopes to introduce boys to a host of new live-action and animated shows, original movies, new music acts and games. And Disney executives also hope to leverage boys' love of sports, using the company's ESPN brand, which will likely collaborate on original programming and other sports-themed topics for Disney XD. (Disney says the letters don't refer to anything.)'

UK: Computer-esque books to lure boys

anthony · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Oxford University Press (OUP) claims the "truly boy-friendly" content and structure of its Project X books will appeal to boys up the age of nine.

The books have been tested in 2,000 schools and can be used interactively through CD-Roms and whiteboards.
...
Professor Elaine Millard from the National Association for the Teaching of English said the books were a shallow response to the problem of boys not enjoying reading.

"It's counterproductive - we want them to engage with the text so that they enjoy the pleasure of words.
...
But Elizabeth Blinkhorn from OUP said the books were aimed specifically at getting boys involved.

"We know that boys are very motivated by facts and 3D images and gripping story lines. There are short chapters to keep them motivated.

"And boys really want to be part of the story and in Project X they are part of the story."'

"Real Men Read to motivate 3rd-graders"

anthony · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Fewer than 50 percent of boys in low-income families in Allen County are passing third-grade reading, compared with 61 percent of girls from low-income families. That issue is the impetus for the United Way of Allen County's Real Men Read program aimed at closing the reading achievement gap.

Beginning in March, Real Men Read volunteers will be in classrooms to read with students and model the importance of reading. Boys will see diverse men who value reading and education as they listen to and read along with their mentors.

Each mentor will be assigned to a third-grade classroom and given books with guided reading cards for March, April and May.'

UK: Positive Relationships: Boys - Why gender matters

anthony · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So, what might be going wrong? One of the less edifying aspects of our education system is that it seems to be influenced by ideology rather than what we know about human development. It ignores what the influence of our evolutionary history might be on the structure of our brains and any innate predisposition for learning, which may also be influenced by gender.

The inclination of many boys to be interested in objects that move, movement itself and rigorous exploration and play, can sometimes be interpreted as a 'problem', while perhaps the inclination for girls to sit and talk is seen in a more positive light. Political correctness which, at its extreme, may try to deny physical/physiological/neurological differences between boys and girls, can also work against the very concept of equal opportunities which it is meant to espouse, as it appears to suggest that learning opportunities and learning contexts for boys and girls are almost interchangeable.

Another factor in the issue is that most of the practitioners in the early years and also in primary education tend to be female, and so there may be an unconscious predisposition for a greater 'identification' with the girls than the boys.'

Admin note: Free reg'n required to read article.

Woman threatened to harm juvenile judge's children

anthony · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Lawson's investigation revealed the woman had made threats to harm Davenport's children, according to Murfreesboro Police spokesman Kyle Evans. Judge Davenport had ordered Vaughn's rights to see her children revoked on two occasions.

"In November 2006, Vaughn was arrested on aggravated child abuse charges by Detective Lawson," Evans said. "Because of that, she lost custody of her children and had to see her kids through the Murfreesboro Exchange Club."

Evans said Vaughn's rights to see her children through the Exchange Club were revoked on Dec. 18, 2008.

"Due to her angry temperament and the cussing out of staff members, those rights were also revoked," Evans said. "Staff members at Realist Interventions have been working to help Vaughn with parenting issues and anger management."'

Woman arrested for beating child

anthony · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Guyton woman beat her 5-year-old child with her hands, then a mop handle, and attacked a man who intervened with the mop handle, according to the Bulloch County Sheriff's Office.

Then, she tried to run the man over with her vehicle, said Bulloch County Sheriff's Chief Investigator Capt. Todd Hutchens.

Stacey Lynn Thomas, 31, Barrister Circle, then tried to run over the man with her vehicle, said BCSO chief investigator Capt. Todd Hutchens.
...
Thomas has been charged with cruelty to children, simple battery, disorderly conduct, aggravated assault, striking a fixed object, DUI (refused test), obstruction and DUI: endangering a child, he said.'

Man must pay support though twins not his badgerb · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

It is interesting to note that this article was posted in the same rag the very next day. I suggest that you read all of the comments. The overwhelming majority are with the man on this issue. For those of you who do not know the Toronto Star it is a Liberal bastion which makes the support of the male all the more astounding. Perhaps the word is getting out there. One example of the comments:

Ridiculous
This coming one day after an editorial by a star journalist slamming men and praising feminists. And to boot, the woman was trying to increase the money they were receiving and decrease the amount of time the father got to spend with his "children". Absolute Farce!

It is also interesting (though not surprising or unexpected) that the judge is a female.
Though as we know it wouldn't matter the gender pandering is done by both sexes to the Princesses of Privilege.

Blog: "Feminism Is The Bane Of My Existence"

anthony · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog here. Excerpt:

'That's right, today's feminism (or third wave feminism) is not about making men and women equal, it is about advancing women's rights at the expense of men (and sometimes other women). This crap can be seen in the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). The name alone reeks of 'protected class'. Isn't ALL violence bad? Where is the Violence Against Men Act? Why not rename it the "Violence Against Humans Act". To me. this seems more egalitarian.

...

If feminists want economic equality, they are truly dreaming. Everyone has their own skills and education. To make everyone truly equal economically would send the world into mediocrity. Everyone would earn the same wage, regardless of the work involved. This way Bill Gates and the burger flipper at McDonald's can be roommates. Bill Gates is where he is because of the contribution he (and Microsoft) made to society. If Bill Gates never mainstreamed Windows and brought the rise of the home PC, you wouldn't even be reading this rant.'

No Charge: In Civil-Contempt Cases, Jail Time Can Stretch On for Years

Matt · 8 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One can spend a long time in jail in the U.S. without ever being charged with a crime.

It happened to H. Beatty Chadwick, a former Philadelphia-area lawyer, who has been behind bars for nearly 14 years without being charged.
...
All three men were jailed for civil contempt, a murky legal concept. Some scholars say it is too often abused by judges, to the detriment of those charged and their due-process rights. "These results of too many civil-contempt confinements are flatly outrageous and often unconstitutional," says Jayne Ressler, a professor at Brooklyn Law School.
...
Consider Mr. Chadwick's case. In 1994, during divorce proceedings, a Delaware County judge held Mr. Chadwick in civil contempt for failing to put $2.5 million in a court-controlled account. He says he lost the money in bad investments; his wife's attorney claimed he had hidden it offshore. In April 1995, Mr. Chadwick was arrested and detained. Nearly 14 years later, Mr. Chadwick, who suffers from non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, is still in jail -- even after a retired judge was hired to help locate the money, and failed.'

An Analysis of so-called Chauvinism

Anonymous · 9 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

An article inspired by the book "The Myth of Male Power" by Warren Farrell. Excerpt:

'Feminists have used this word very judiciously to bargain for unwarranted concessions for women from the society. And the fools that men are, easily bought this stupid argument of men being chauvinistic as well and started giving concessions to women...
...
...Power, as misunderstood, is not the LIBERTY to do something at WILL. Power is the ability to control your own life the way you want and have the choice to do so. Something which men do not have currently, women however have it. Hence it's the women who are more powerful than men.

It is said that men are biologically powerful than women which is true. But does that define absolute power is the next question one should be asking. And the answer to that question is NO...
...
Men, the feminists argue, have the power to take decisions and since women don't have this power they are not powerful and hence need protection...
...
A male being powerful is another delusional attack on men to prepare them to give concessions to a woman...
...
...All this has happened because of "The Myth of Male Power" falsely propagated by feminists.... It's high time to demystify "Male Power" concept and that men are chauvinistic.'

Casey Anthony in court

Matt · 9 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Casey Anthony is the prime suspect in the case of her young missing daughter, whose body was found not long ago. Despite so much evidence pointing to her as a prime suspect, this case has dragged on for months as people seem incapable of believing she murdered and probably dismembered her daughter's body. Note how much sympathy she is getting in this report despite the evidence against her. This is one to watch.

"Equity bill" passes House

Matt · 9 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – The House has passed legislation to assure that employers live up to their four-decade-old legal promise to provide equal pay for equal work.

Democrats led lawmakers in approving a bill making clear that women who are victims of gender-based discrimination can sue for compensatory and punitive damage.
...
"Equal pay is an issue of fundamental fairness," House Speaker Nancy Pelosi said. "But as families grapple with difficult economic times, equal pay for equal work is often about daily survival for millions of families."

Republican opponents saw the measures, introduced in the first week of the new Congress, as an incentive for people to file lawsuits that will benefit trial lawyers. It's "little more than an earmark for the trial bar," said Rep. Marsha Blackburn, R-Tenn.

The Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act is a response to a 2007 Supreme Court decision that made it more difficult to sue over past pay discrimination. The other bill, the Paycheck Fairness Act, would strengthen the 1963 Equal Pay Act that requires equal pay for equal work.'

South Shore teacher accused of statutory rape

anthony · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BROCKTON -- Police described an Abington elementary school teacher today as an obsessive predator who allegedly seduced a 13-year-old boy and carried on a sexual relationship that lasted for 18 months.
...
The boy, who is now 16, told police that over the next 18 months he and McCallum had intercourse every other day for a total of "approximately 300 times," according to a police report filed today in Brockton District Court. She gave him a cell phone so they could communicate, authorities said, and wrote him a series of letters that while not overtly sexual depicted an obsessive woman in the throes of an intimate relationship with a teenager.
...
McCallum has been charged with seven counts of statutory rape stemming from seven alleged sexual encounters that investigators said they were able to document. She appeared in Brockton District Court today with her husband of five years, Scott, at her side and pleaded not guilty to the three counts that allegedly occurred at the teen's home in Abington.'

Second article on same case here.

Canada: Drug addicted mother escapes jail term in daughter's abuse

anthony · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A crack-addicted woman was handed a 13-month conditional sentence yesterday for corrupting her developmentally challenged daughter, who was used for sex and given cocaine by other crack-users at the family's Rexdale flophouse.

...

"A mother has totally failed her daughter in the worst kind of way. She was sexually assaulted and became a drug addict by being given drugs over a 12-month period," said Strasberg, who demanded a prison sentence in the "range of 18 months."

Strasberg said the mom would be smoking crack in her room while the daughter performed sex acts in the living room. Drug testing confirmed the girl's drug use with "high level of exposure."

Justice Lloyd Budzinski rejected the prison term and agreed with defence lawyer Donald F. McLeod's call for a stay-at-home sentence. The judge said the remorseful mom pleaded guilty, sparing her daughter the anguish of reliving the horror from the witness stand.

"Her actions ... made the child vulnerable to acts of violence ... But it doesn't send any greater message (to imprison her). It's in the child's interest to restructure the family under the supervision of the CAS," said Budzinski.'

UK: Girls 'under too much pressure'

anthony · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Incoming Girls School Association head Jill Berry said parents were worried about achieving a balance between school achievement and happiness.

Mrs Berry also said that girls could put themselves under a lot of pressure.

A poll of 1,000 parents surveyed for the association said their top concern was their daughter's education.

Girls tend to outperform boys in all stages of their education, and this can lead schools to assume all girls will do well.

Mrs Berry said: "There is no doubt that many mothers and fathers are worried about getting the balance right between their daughters realising their academic potential while at the same time being happy and safe."'

Woman arrested for stabbing husband

anthony · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PLYMOUTH — A 22-year-old Plymouth woman has been arrested for stabbing her husband in the arm.

...Investigators learned the victim, Joshua McNeal, had been stabbed once in the arm by his wife.

...Amber McNeal ... admitted she stabbed her husband during an argument. She was arrested and taken to the Marshall County Jail.

She now faces charges of domestic battery and battery with a deadly weapon.'

Woman arrested after reportedly striking husband

anthony · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ORANGE LAKE - A 67-year-old woman accused of hitting her husband was arrested by a sheriff's deputy and charged with battery on a person over 65, according to a Sheriff's Office report.

The man reportedly suffers from dementia. According to the report, his shirt had blood all over it and his left cheek was swollen. He refused medical treatment.

His daughter told a deputy Thursday that her mother hit her father in the face so hard he fell out of his wheelchair and was bleeding. She said the two had been arguing about women the victim had been with during their 49 years of marriage.The deputy noted in her report that the daughter said the beatings occur frequently.'

Update: Woman arrested, husband critically burned in Wells fire

anthony · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WELLS -- Police have charged a woman with arson after a fire in her apartment left her husband burned over 85 percent of his body.

Police said they arrested Kimberly Spampinato, 42, when she turned herself in at the Wells Police Department shortly after the Harbor Road fire was reported after midnight.

Police said her husband, Christopher Spampinato, 39, was asleep when the fire broke out. Police found him sitting on the front steps to the apartment house, critically burned, when they responded to the report of the fire.
...
She is charged with arson, which was filed by the state Fire Marshal's office, and violating bail conditions, charged by Wells police. McCausland said she had been arrested late last year on a domestic abuse charge involving her husband and was currently out on bail.'

Woman arrested in husband's death makes bail

anthony · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Huntington woman arrested last week after being extradited from Iowa for the 2003 shooting death of her husband has made bail.

Angelina County Jail records show Shelly Anne Dorsey's attorney, Ryan Deaton, posted a $100,000 bond Monday afternoon.

An Angelina County grand jury indicted Dorsey, 37, in late October for the murder of 30-year-old Alvin Dorsey II, who died after being shot in the chest outside Little Jim's night club, off U.S. 69 south, on Sept. 12, 2003.

Following the indictment, law enforcement in Story County, Iowa arrested Dorsey on the charge, and she refused to waive her extradition to Texas, said Angelina County assistant prosecutor Art Bauereiss in a previous interview. Governors of both Texas and Iowa signed off on her extradition and she was transported back to Texas and booked into Angelina County Jail Dec. 31.'

Woman allegedly tries to kill husband with eye drops

anthony · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — A 40-year-old southwest Missouri woman is accused of trying to kill her husband by spiking his tea with a half bottle of Visine eye drops. Greene County deputies said the woman was jailed Thursday night on $100,000 bond on a first-degree assault charge.

She was arrested late Wednesday after a co-worker told Greene County deputies that the woman told her about the plot to kill her husband.
...
Authorities say the woman researched other means of killing her husband when the first attempt didn't work.'

Woman allegedly shoots son in face

anthony · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 47-year-old local woman is arrested after police say she shot her son in the face.

Winnebago County detectives say it happened inside this home on Horace Avenue.

Nicholas Bryant, 24-years-old, was then taken to Rockford Memorial by family members.

After some questioning, investigators arrested Felicia Washington-Graves. She's facing several charges including attempted murder. Detectives have also recovered a weapon. No word on Bryant's condition.'

Woman arrested after shooting boyfriend in view of police

anthony · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Youngsville police arrested a woman Monday after she allegedly shot her boyfriend in the back in front of police officers.
...
The suspect, Carronda Lynette Syon, had apparently called 911 dispatchers and told them her boyfriend was coming to the residence, according to Youngsville Police Chief Earl Menard.

Menard said there was some indication that the suspect did not want her boyfriend there.

When an officer arrived, both the victim and suspect were standing on the porch.

The victim started walking toward the officer when Syon allegedly shot him in the back, according to Menard.'

Recent anti-fathers' groups article in "The Star" generates response

Matt · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

MANN story here. Seems comments on her article generated a reaction from "the management"; read here. Excerpt:

'The comments have exploded on some of my recent posts relating to men's rights groups, divorce and custody, child support and paternity issues. Many of them remain unpublished -- not by me but by the Star's Kommentariat Bureau, aka The Goderators -- who assume responsibility and control of these matters.

If it were up to me, I would post them all, including the obscene and hateful ones. I think being called a "feminazi whore" and worse by those who purport to seek fairness and justice kind of reinforces my point that some guys have anger issues.
...
...There used to be a time when women, before feminism gave them the opportunity to have decent careers outside the home, also got alimony automatically, along with sole custody and child support.

Remember that?

I do.

Feminism screwed women out of alimony. It gave us "manimony." It also helped joint custody happen.

Just saying.'

Sitter charged with baby's death in dryer

WakeUp · 10 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. From the article:

'GRETNA, La. - A Louisiana baby sitter is charged with second-degree murder after prosecutors say she put a baby into a spinning clothes dryer for disturbing her television watching.

Nineteen-year-old Arielle Smith was indicted by a grand jury Thursday for the baby's September death in the New Orleans suburb of Harvey.

Authorities said 5-month-old Andre Jenkins died at the scene from skull fractures and burns suffered in the dryer.'

Did it ever occur to her that babysitting means being responsible for the safety of the children?

Side note: As much as anyone is capable of child abuse, here is a conversation on HotJobs Q&A about stereotypes preventing men from taking jobs with children.

Scotland Sunday Herald: 'Chivalry: Who needs it?'

anthony · 11 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I could go on, but my question here is relatively simple: does chivalry still exist? And if so, what does it actually look like? Are there still rules on pulling chairs out, opening doors, laying cloaks down in puddles, paying for lunch, avenging slurs, and escorting ladies home? Rules that won't earn the well-meaning man a well-aimed elbow in the solar plexus.

...

Chivalry, as King understands it, is "a nice set of rules for men and women in society that create a kind of harmony". Having a chair pulled out for her is not demeaning, sleazy or patronising, providing the person doing the pulling is not demeaning, sleazy or patronising. "Men and women do fall into certain gender roles," she says. "I don't see a man opening a door for a woman as looking down his nose at her or thinking he's better. There should be equality when it comes to most things, but I don't see chivalry as the opposite of equality."

...

TYPICALLY, our hero will take a bullet in the thigh without a murmur, but then whimper like a baby when the femme fatale gently dabs his wounds with a damp cloth. He is primed to walk girls home in heavy hail, pay for things he can't afford, and get into brawls for a woman's honour, or his own (especially while waiting for a taxi). Certain behaviours have morphed and others have been diluted. The crusades and voyages on which old-school knights cut their teeth might these days translate to a trip to the bar for an alcopop, but only if the woman in question is deemed worthy.'

Christina Hoff Sommers: What's Wrong and What's Right with Contemporary Feminism?

anthony · 11 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This evening I will be arguing that contemporary feminism has taken a wrong turn. In my view, the noble cause of women's emancipation is being damaged in at least three ways by the contemporary women's movement. First, today's movement takes a very dim view of men; second, it wildly overstates the victim status of American women; and third, it is dogmatically attached to the view that men and women are essentially the same. In the time I have with you, I will try to explain and justify these criticisms, and conclude by offering what I think is a reasonable and humane alternative to current feminism. I will also extend an olive branch to the feminists I criticize. But first a few words about my background. . . .'

PDF file here.

Chinese schoolboy has 52 stitches after attack from teacher

AngryMan · 11 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A primary-school student in central China had to have 52 stitches in his face after he was beaten by his teacher for not doing his homework.

Zheng Chaoqun, 10, is still being treated at a hospital in Henan province after his teacher tore away a strip of flesh. Zheng told a local newspaper, the Dayang News, that his assailant, 37-year-old Guo Yabin, had picked him up by his cheeks after he failed to hand in his work.

"She was very angry at the time," he said. "She ripped and tiwsted my cheeks with both her hands and then she lifted me off the ground."

The boy said he felt his face ripping off and fell back to his seat. "She still had my skin in her hands, and my face was bleeding. She looked anxious and sent me home," he said.'

UK: Wife bites hubbys 'willy' to avoid sex

anthony · 11 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'London, Dec 31 (ANI): A man was left crying with pain after his wife chomped his manhood because she did not want to have sex with him.

Chris Bowers was taken into custody for attacking her husband after the couple had been drinking.

It was when the couple returned to their home in Deltona, Florida, that an angered Charris attacked her hubby Delou Bowers because she was not interested in having sex with him.

According to a police report, they started of with having oral sex, but Bowers was left writhing in pain as his wife clamped down on his penis.

First Bowers pleaded with his wife to stop but later he punched her in the face until she finally let go.

However, Charris then gave her husband a storm of blows in return before he escaped from the room.'

No where does it say he forced his penis in her mouth. He acted in self defense.

"In support of a feminist stimulus"

anthony · 11 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. The biggest issue I have with this idea is the suggestion of requiring construction companies to implement one third of new apprenticeships to women. If we're trying to improve the infrastructure, why use affirmative action to hire unqualified women? Does feminist equity include bridges collapsing? Excerpt:

'We suggest three lines of action that will insure that women get a fair share of the benefits from your program:

1. Revive and enforce the Labor Department regulations that require government contractors to institute affirmative action plans that provide a share of the jobs for women and minorities. Closely monitor the contractors for compliance.

2. In connection with the infrastructure projects, institute apprenticeships, and ensure that at least one third of the positions go to women.

3. Add projects in health, child care, education, social service that will both provide jobs to women, and also provide needed services to them.'

Another example of double-standards applied to similar cases

anthony · 11 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 17-year-old Sheboygan girl was charged Thursday with misdemeanor sexual assault for allegedly having sex with her 14-year-old boyfriend.
...
Guthrie admitted having sex with the boy between 10 and 15 times, according to a complaint charging her with fourth-degree sexual assault. She faces a maximum of nine months in jail, if convicted.
...
On Wednesday, Alan J. Jensen, 17, of 1416 New York Ave., was charged for allegedly having sex with a 14-year-old girl who he claimed told him she was 16. Jepsen is facing a count of felony second-degree sexual assault, which carries a maximum prison term of 25 years.
...
Haasch also said the cases are different because Guthrie's boyfriend is "almost 15," with a birthday in February. Jensen's girlfriend turns 15 in April.'

Credit card thief charged as sex offender

anthony · 11 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Mr. Soucia was a thief: more precisely he stole a credit card. And, as a result, he was prosecuted “under the ‘Sex Offender Management and Treatment Act’.” How’s that!!

What gave the low-life prosecutor, aptly named James Conboy, the excuse was that the young man used the stolen credit to hire some strippers. In the logical world of Mr. Conboy: “If you commit a burglary and your goal is because of your own sexual gratification, it’s a sexually motivated felony.”

I sincerely doubt that Soucia broke into a house to rob it just to get his jollies. I doubt that the reason he robbed the house was so he could hire a stripper. And, even if he wanted to hire a stripper, to call this sort of theft a “sex offense” is absolutely ridiculous. Either Mr. Conboy is incredibly moronic or incredibly power-hungry. Either way he is a threat to the decent people in his county.'

Men in Europe wearing 'chastity belts' as protection vs. sexual harassment claims

Matt · 12 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Read it to believe it, here. Excerpt:

'British and German women, however, feel free to make their husbands wear genital irons before letting them leave for work. The most horrible thing about it is that "cuffed" men do not give way to despair: they easily communicate with other men, who have their penises locked up in their pants. Chastity belts pose only one problem for their owners - men feel shy to use public toilets.
...
Salzburg lawyer Henrich Firshman was accused of sexual harassment at work. The lawyer's wife told the judge that the suit filed against her husband was groundless, because the man had been wearing a chastity belt at work for two years. The belt was presented at the court - it looked quite worn out. In addition, forensic experts proved that the belt was worn by Firshmen. The chastity belt saved the man's career and relieved him of the need to pay thousands of euros of penalties. About 30,000 European men come to work wearing chastity belts nowadays. This astounding Puritanism during the age of sexual revolution has been probably caused with people's wish to be 100 percent sure of their faithfulness. It is noteworthy that women wear chastity belts in such families too.
...
Specialists of medicine say, however, that chastity belts are very harmful to men. They are very tight and rigid; they may block blood flow and cause painful edema, tissue numbness and even temporal impotence. Women's chastity belts are a lot less problematic - they do not exert any negative influence on the sexual function of a woman.'

Family court to men - 'Just shut up and pay'

badgerb · 12 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

See editorial here. The misandry inflicted upon fathers and men seems to be finally hitting the mainstream media with more regularity. A well written editorial on last weeks article on forcing a man to pay child support even though he was not the biological father.

Once again I urge you to read the comments after the editorial that are for the most part polite well thought out arguments against the current judical and societal systems that inflicts pain and hardships on men and fathers.

One such example:

Ontario family law has been predicated o Odium Paternus -- Hatred of fathers. It is truly disgusting, and has the unbridled support of sociopaths and psychopaths who use these laws to extort, coerce and steal funds from fathers and good natured people.

RADAR ALERT: RADAR Launches New Campaign - VAWA: Out of Control

Matt · 12 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Today RADAR launches a new campaign "Violence Against Women Act: OUT OF CONTROL" The campaign will highlight that despite spending billions of dollars over the last decade, VAWA-funded programs lack accountability and effectiveness, and are destroying families. Case in point are the advertisements that were run on the Dallas Area Rapid Transit last Fall that featured messages promoting harmful and false stereotypes.

During the next few months our campaign will highlight how the Violence Against Women Act has gone out of control. We will be asking you to help get out the word to your elected representatives and the media how the Violence Against Women Act is out of control, as well as how to reform VAWA.

Successfully reforming VAWA depends on your participation. Last year we have succeeded in stopping four out-of-control bills: I-VAWA, ABA earmarks, gun confiscation, and a House resolution. Please familiarize yourself with how the Violence Against Women Act is "Out Of Control" at http://www.mediaradar.org/how_is_vawa_out_of_control.php

++
Date of RADAR Release: January 12, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

UK: Toddler-killer sentenced to 7 years

AngryMan · 12 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who killed a toddler by smashing her 4x4 into his pushchair was jailed for seven years yesterday.

Suicidal Katie Gutierrez-Perez, 40, had swallowed sleeping pills, cider and wine after bailiffs snatched her home and business — but was driving to hospital after a change of heart.

She lost control of her Toyota Hilux outside a school and mounted the pavement, catapulting mum Tina Woods, 31, through the air before pinning her 15-month-old son Finlay's buggy against a gatepost.

Finlay died of head injuries. After mother-of-two Gutierrez-Perez was pulled from the vehicle she shrugged and asked: "Have I hurt someone, then?"

Minutes earlier she had been warned not to drive by a DVLA inspector, who saw the 4x4 was uninsured and smelled alcohol.'

Joan Rivers: 'Men Are Stupid... And They Like Big Boobs'

mens_issues · 12 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I found this piece of misandry about Joan Rivers' new book "Men Are Stupid... And They Like Big Boobs" on NPR.

If this woman was ever funny in the past, she isn't any more. The title of her book has put me off. I tried to listen to the online interview Scott Simon did with her, but was turned off by the way the book was portrayed in a cute manner, when the title obviously wasn't cute.

Hey, how about a book titled "Women Are Stupid...And They Like Big Paychecks." Or bad boys.

On You Tube: Ann Coulter Discusses Single Mothers On 'The View'

anthony · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. I realize Ann Coulter is extremely controversial, but she makes some logical observations about motherhood and fatherhood. Notice how the audience roars with applause when Elisabeth Hasselbeck insinuates fathers are not taking responsibility.

Grandmother to climb Kilimanjaro for shared parenting awareness

Matt · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Very inspring! Story here (.pdf file). Excerpt:

'Charlotte, NC - 70 year old grandmother, Sheila Peltzer, will climb Africa's tallest peak, 19,200' Mount Kilimanjaro raising awareness for Shared Parenting and Familial Dysautonomia. Peltzer, departing January 21, 2009, will make the ten day trek up the western route where sub zero summit temperatures are expected.
...
Tim McKyer adds; "I'm involved with Sheila to help shine a spotlight on the family courts. At one time my children lived with me and were doing well. Now I have limited access to them and they are falling behind in school and having other problems. The courts are handicapping my kids unnecessarily. What my kids are being subjected to at the hands of the court is beyond absurd."'

"Lilly Ledbetter Is No Victim"

anthony · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have represented many sex discrimination victims. I have won their cases. After 20 years of such efforts, I know a victim when I see one. Let me tell you something: Lilly Ledbetter is no victim. When Ledbetter issued, I reserved judgment as I wished to actually read the opinion first, something knee-jerk liberals rarely do. They are so politically motivated to cry foul that the actual legal merits of the case are of no concern to them.
...
Here's another fact ignored in the political rhetoric. Ledbetter, for unexplained reasons, abandoned an Equal Pay Act claim asserted in her suit. The Equal Pay Act does not contain Title VII's filing limitations, nor does it require plaintiffs to prove intent. It was a much better claim, easier to prove, and it was timely. After abandoning it on appeal, Ledbetter essentially tried to squeeze the EPA claim into Title VII's framework and she justly failed in the effort.

They ought properly to rename the bill as the Ledbetter Con Act of 2009. But she'll stand next to Obama at the signing, like she was some kind of Rosa Parks. What a joke.'

Editorial: Sex charges against female teacher no joking matter

anthony · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Locker-room humor about the case involving an Abington boy who police say was raped by a female teacher may be good for a laugh in some circles.

But such banter threatens to perpetuate the misguided idea that boys involved are not victims.

Christine McCallum, 29, stands accused of having a 21-month relationship with a boy, starting when he was 13 and involving up to 300 sexual encounters.

She pleaded innocent Friday to seven counts of statutory child rape.

While most people recognize the violation of trust and potential emotional damage inherent in such a crime, others – and you'll find plenty – see it as a welcome rite of passage.'

Area girls team continue to practice against the boys

anthony · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The recent lawsuit by a female high school basketball player who was injured scrimmaging against males has caused area coaches to take notice, but not make changes.

Girls basketball teams at Ross, Lakota West and Madison are among those who regularly practice against boys, but their sessions are structured and the boys are scrutinized.

"It's not like we're just grabbing anyone out of the hallway and saying, 'Come play against our girls,' " Madison coach John Rossi Jr. said. "Most of these guys are friends with the girls, and they're all good-character, straight-A type of kids, and we let them know we're not interested in seeing what the heck you can do."'

Deployment Used In Battles for Kids

anthony · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'"We are seeing a substantial increase in cases . . . challenging the custody of military parents and the return of custody when they come back from mobilization or deployment, compared to virtually none 10 years ago," said Mark E. Sullivan, a retired Army Reserve judge advocate who practices family law in North Carolina. The increase has been greatest in states with large military populations, such as Virginia and Texas, he added.

Female troops may be particularly at risk, because mothers are more likely to have custody of children after a divorce. "For them to go away for 15 to 18 months, it opens the door to these challenges," said A.J. Balbo, Greer's attorney and a former Army judge advocate.

...

Diaz gained temporary custody of his daughter, Talia, in February 2002 because her mother was unfit, Diaz said. But when he deployed to Iraq with his engineer battalion in April 2003, he had to delegate joint custody to his mother and Talia's mother. When he came back, Talia's mother refused to return the child.'

Minnesota Woman Tried to Set Boyfriend on Fire, Police Say

anthony · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'ST. CLOUD, Minn. — A St. Cloud woman is in jail after police say she tried to set her boyfriend on fire using a lighter and air freshener.

Investigators say the 49-year-old woman is accused of pouring fingernail polish remover on the victim and the blanket covering him, then trying to light him on fire.

The victim was able to take the air freshener from the woman. Police say she then hit him on the back of the head and bit him several times. As the man tried to call police, the woman allegedly ripped the phone cord out of the wall.

The woman is in the Stearns County Jail on suspicion of domestic assault and interfering with a 911 call.'

Take Action: Stop the Bailout for Trial Lawyers

Matt · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Item here. Excerpt:

'Last Friday, in one of its first actions of the 111th Congress, the House of Representatives passed the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act and the Paycheck Fairness Act. Although the bills purport to ensure equal pay for men and women, in truth they are a stimulus package for trial lawyers and liberal/feminist special-interest groups.

The Senate is expected to vote on the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act (H.R.11) as early as Wednesday of this week. This Act would eliminate the current statute of limitations (either 180 or 300 days, depending on the state of employment) on discrimination claims so that a worker can sue in federal court for alleged pay discrimination 20 years earlier. The statute of limitations was included to prevent frivolous lawsuits against which employers are not able to effectively defend themselves. For example, the bill's namesake, Lilly Ledbetter, who worked for Goodyear Tire & Rubber for more than 19 years and retired from the company with benefits, brought suit more than a decade after the alleged discrimination when her allegedly discriminatory supervisor was long dead.'

Related piece here.

Soldiers and Child Support

Anonymous · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

MANN received this submission anonymously. While we normally don't publish such lengthy pieces, especially if submitted anonymously, this one is just too well-written and timely not to publish. It also reads like it was written as a letter to a government official and so it has content others may find useful. Big thanks to whomever submitted it!

"I am a long-time Army Family Member, being both the daughter of a retired Sergeant First Class, and the spouse of an Active Duty Sergeant First Class, and the sister-in-law of two retired soldiers, in addition to both my brothers serving in the Army; the Army has been the only life I have led. I am proud of the sacrifice that my family has made for the Army and this grateful nation and as such I have dedicated my time to volunteering to honor the life of public service that has been bestowed upon me. It is on behalf of this and other proud servicemen and women that I compose this letter with a serious concern for the soldiers' and their families.

The current Federal Guidelines for calculating spousal and child support along with many other federal programs allow for each States Attorney General to define at their discretion what can be included as income for non-custodial parents. The Federal Guidelines are silent on what can or cannot be counted as income for service members, therefore each state decides if Basic Allowance for Housing, (BAH) and Basic Allowance for Subsistence (BAS), is calculated for child support. The Federal Guideline is currently only requires states to include healthcare and "income". Ninety percent of states current count these amounts in calculating child support for noncustodial parents that are service members regardless if they are receiving this money.

The BAH that a service member receives is to house their family either on or off post. The purpose of this is clearly outlined in Army Regulation 608-99 dated February 2003, which covers support of the family and the consequences that soldiers' may face for non-support. While it addresses issues concerning soldiers' that do not have court orders for support it also defers to each state as to the inclusion of BAH. Therefore a service member's child support or spousal support could significantly increase simply by being transferred to another post as BAH is calculated based on zip code and rank. This then causes a hardship on the soldier and their children because child support is the right of the child, but it is the right of the Army to transfer you at any time.

The main issue that this poses is that the inclusion is still applied even if the solider is living in military housing and does not receive that money. The BAS that a service member receives is to provide them, personally with food, and was previously defined as "rations in kind". If a soldier chooses to eat in the dining facility then they do not receive this benefit and are in different circumstances that vary by location on how much if any BAS they receive, however again ninety percent of states still count this as income for child support purposes.

Most do not understand do to the unique circumstances of soldiers. The law needs to address the inequity that civilians and military face as outlined above. The Federal Law should state that Base Pay, which is truly what they earn for their service, is what is to be used to calculate as there are too many state and military variables that do not allow the members of our Armed Forces to support their children and families in an appropriate manner. When I contacted the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services department with this issue the Agency of Children and Families which administers part of the Federal Child Support Enforcement Act did not know that this is how child support was being calculated for service members as they focus on those that do not pay. This is an issue that should be handled on a Federal Level.

As an active member of the Army Volunteer Corps I have personally seen how this impacts soldiers' and families not just on my personal situation. Lower ranking soldiers that earn far less than my spouse are unable to meet day to day expenses because of how these calculations are made from state to state. Some have been evicted from their homes, had vehicles repossessed and were forced to take out loans just to survive. One soldier in particular deployed to Iraq and although he was divorced from his spouse and child support had been set and he was current, she was able to successfully petition the court (he waived his SSRA) to increase his support based on his BAH and Combat Pay even though he had joint custody of their children and the Army allowed for him to maintain quarters for them. This increased his support to over $3000.00 per month for two children and when he returned from war he was forced to file for bankruptcy. Sir, children have the right to be supported by both parents but members of the Armed Forces need a specific outline in the Federal Child Support Guidelines so each state cannot treat each solider differently."

National Car Rental ad pulled due to activism

DLR1943 · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Recently National Car Rental had an ad showing John McEnroe smashing a tennis ball into a mans' head for trying to take a car he wanted. I protested the commercial because it continues to promote the idea that inflicting pain on a man is funny. I found out today that the commercial has been permanently dropped because of the protests that were received from viewers. I am glad that others found the ad offensive and that national car rental got the message. -- Dave

The ad can be seen here.

Ms. Magazine Posits Obama as Super-Feminist

anthony · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Ms. Magazine, the publication founded by Gloria Steinem, is releasing a special inaugural issue with somewhat provocative cover. Its photo-shopped image portrays Barack Obama in an iconic Superman pose: heeding a distress call and pulling open his starched white shirt to reveal a secret identity. In this version of the comic-book send-up, the somewhat misleading layer of business attire conceals not a blue and red leotard, but a black t-shirt that reads, "This is what Feminism looks like".
...
'When the chair of the Feminist board, Peg Yorkin, and I met with Barack Obama, he immediately offered, "I am a feminist." And better yet, he ran on the strongest platform for women's rights of any major party in American history.'"

UK: "Harriet Harman is an ultra-feminist gender warrior trapped in a student radical time-warp"

anthony · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a speech this weekend, she will hail this move as a step towards ‘a new social order’.

‘We want to do more than just provide escape routes out of poverty for a talented few. We want to tackle the class divide,’ she will say.

This is but the latest bit of cack-handed injustice from Harman, an ultra-feminist gender warrior who has spent much of her political career trying to institutionalise injustice against men and privilege women on the basis of ‘sexual equality’.

Much is made of Gordon Brown’s unreconstructed redistributive socialism. But in fact Harman is the most conspicuous example of another important characteristic of this government: its state of fossilised adolescence.

After all, listening to her is a bit like entering a time-warp and being subjected to some ghastly student radical circa 1970 nasally boring on about the class/gender/race struggle. That’s because she - and a number of her ministerial colleagues - were indeed part of that generation of privileged baby-boomers who indulged in adolescent fantasy politics about changing society and human nature - but who, crucially, never grew out of it.'

Man fighting to gain parental rights to toddler he says he fathered with married woman

anthony · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A father says he's been stripped of his parental rights and now he's taking bold steps to get the word out about his case.

James Rhoades says he fathered a child with a woman he had an affair with. But since she's married to someone else, the courts won't recognize Rhoades as the dad. So now he's putting up billboards asking for help.

In the heart of St Matthews shopping district you'll see a billboard with a toddler looking down at you.

James Rhoades says the toddler is his son and he's doing everything he can to see him again.'

Woman sentenced for false rape report

anthony · 13 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TROY — A Wapakoneta woman will be paying authorities $892 for the overtime detectives used to investigate her false claim of being raped.

Melissa Turner, 40, told the sheriff's office May 19 she was raped on the banks of the Great Miami River, under the Eldean Bridge north of Troy. She admitted May 21 that she had lied, according to court documents.

She pleaded guilty to the felony charge in November and was sentenced Monday, Jan. 12 to community control and order to reimburse the Miami County Sheriff's Office.'

Hitchens on Hillary's nomination

Matt · 14 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Once again, Mr. H. hits the nail on the head. Read it here. If you read this, even if you are a die-hard 100% feminist, and don't find it very disturbing, then you probably are among the Clinton donors he is talking about. Excerpt:

'Here is a thought experiment that does not take very much thought. Picture, if you will, Hillary Clinton facing a foreign-policy conundrum. With whom will she discuss it first and most intently: with her president or her husband? (I did tell you that this wouldn't be difficult.) Here's another one: Will she be swayed in her foreign-policy decisions by electoral considerations focusing on the year 2012, and, if so, will she be swayed by President Barack Obama's interests or her own?
...
...The deal struck by the wide-eyed incoming Obama administration is that the list of donors to the Clinton Foundation will be reviewed once every year and that only the new donations from foreign states—which already include an extraordinarily large number from Gulf sheikdoms—will be scrutinized by administration lawyers. How would we react if we read that this was the rule for the Vladimir Putin government, say, or former Chancellor Gerhard Schröder's regime in Germany?

...
...No, we are getting a notoriously ambitious woman who made a fool of herself over Bosnia, at the time and during the recent campaign, and who otherwise has no command of foreign affairs except what she's picked up second-hand from an impeached ex-president, a disbarred lawyer, and a renter of the Lincoln Bedroom. If the Senate waves this through, it will have reinforced its recent image as the rubber-stamp chamber of a bankrupt banana republic. Not an especially good start to the brave new era.'

Why MEN love being single

webdigr · 14 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marriage automatically translates into a legal binding and loss of freedom. No wonder, they are commitment-phobic.

The word commitment can make the sanest of men shudder and the mention of marriage is enough to drive a man out of a relationship in a jiffy. So what is it about this social institution that has men break into a sweat?
“Commitment for men is a one-way street towards marriage and the thought of being married to a person for the rest of his life is scary for s guy...
For most men, the first thing that strikes them when they think of commitment is loss of freedom...
...
Moreover, for single men who think that they can have any woman they want in the world, marriage comes as a rude shock. It ends many options.
...
“Men use denial all the time, it’s perfectly natural. For example, a man might say — I am not going bald, I just shaved my head because I wanted to look like Bruce Wills or I could buy a sports car, but it’s just not eco-friendly...'

Man wrongfully convicted of rape dies

Michael · 14 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'HOUMA – A Dulac man who spent 18 years in state prison for a rape he didn't commit has died.

Clyde Charles, 55, died of natural causes Wednesday at his home on Shrimpers Row, according to relatives.

In 1981, Charles was wrongfully convicted of rape and sent to Louisiana State Penitentiary in Angola after a woman identified him as her attacker.

Almost two decades after his imprisonment, Charles was exonerated of the crime based on DNA evidence. The same evidence implicated his brother, Marlo Charles, in the crime. Marlo Charles is serving a life sentence for aggravated rape.

Relatives said he had diabetes, among other health problems, and was receiving dialysis.

A memorial service is scheduled for 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday at the Blaine Clay Lodge No. 14 F.M., 915 Lafayette St., Houma. In lieu of flowers, family asks donations be made to the Innocence Project at innocenceproject.org'

Canada: Man jailed for rape might get a new trial

Matt · 14 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ivan Henry already had a criminal history in 1983, a previous conviction for attempted rape. He also had a history of drug and alcohol abuse. According to a court-appointed psychiatrist, he was psychotic and suffered paranoid delusions.

...

He has spent the past 26 years in prison for crimes he has always maintained he did not commit.

The record now casts serious doubt on the prosecution's case against him and the process leading to it.

...

But "relevant and potentially exculpatory" evidence had surfaced while Henry languished in prison.

He had, in the 1980s and 1990s, tried to initiate 55 proceedings, all on his own. None succeeded.

...

The suspect was identified during yesterday's proceedings, but his name cannot be published under court order. He pleaded guilty to three sex offences in 2005 and received a five-year prison sentence. He has since been released.

Henry, on the other hand, remains in prison. "A man has been convicted and has served 26 years in prison for crimes he did not commit," David Layton told the panel of B. C. Court of Appeal judges yesterday. The Crown ventured almost as far.'

"Woman Charged In Domestic Tiff"

Matt · 14 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ottawa police have charged a woman with aggravated assault after her boyfriend fell through a pane of glass at a Herongate-area apartment building Sunday.

Police are disclosing nothing more about the 25-year-old accused or the alleged assault because they say their policy is not to disclose information about domestic-related incidents.

Officers responded to an apartment building on Cedarwood Dr. just after 2 p.m. and found a 34-year-old man with cuts to his neck, face and head.

Police said the injuries were originally life-threatening, but the man's condition subsequently improved.'

"Tiff"?

UK: "Harman's latest men-bashing policy is not just odious - it turns morality inside out"

AngryMan · 14 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Having given us class war yesterday with her ‘equality’ proposals the Minister for Women, Harriet Harman, returns today to her signature battleground of the sex war to promote yet another policy that springs from the desire to give men a bashing.

At present, the law provides a defence of provocation to the charge of murder in cases where there is a sudden loss of temper or self-control.

For years, Harman and the sisterhood have campaigned against this provision which they say discriminates against women. This is because, typically, men kill their womenfolk in the heat of the moment - most often on account of perceived infidelity - while women who kill their menfolk rarely do so in a similar state of uncontrollable rage.
...
Now the Coroners and Justice Bill says this provocation provision will be scrapped altogether and be replaced with two partial defences - that people have killed because they fear they could be the victim of serious violence, or can prove they have been ‘seriously wronged’ by their victim.

Harriet Harman has said: ‘For centuries the law has allowed men to escape a murder charge in domestic homicide cases by blaming the victim. Ending the provocation defence in cases of 'infidelity' is an important law change and will end the culture of excuses.'

But the fact is that this change discriminates against men, justice and morality.
...
Moreover, ministers appear to be not only dismissing the grievous wrong of infidelity but inverting the moral responsibility, so that the wrong lies not with the unfaithful spouse but with ‘the spouse who is thus betrayed' who is apparently at fault for ‘sexual jealousy’.

So marital betrayal actually becomes the fault of the betrayed. How odious is this? It’s not just taking a swipe at morality – it is to turn it inside out.
...
Harman and the sisterhood are most obviously motivated by a deep animus against men. But what this proposed change shows so very clearly is that behind such extreme man-hating feminism - along with all the rest of the sub-Marxist agenda that constitutes fashionable thinking - lies an onslaught upon the bedrock moral values upon which our society and its laws depend.'

FOX: Does New Government Drunk Driving Campaign Unfairly Target Men?

anthony · 15 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Title: "Does New Government Drunk Driving Campaign Unfairly Target Men?"

UK: Female teacher at top boys' school arrested for 'having sex with sixth formers'

anthony · 15 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A female teacher at a top private boys' school has been arrested over allegations of sexual misconduct involving sixth-formers.

Hannah McIntyre, 24, has been suspended from her job at Merchant Taylors school, in Crosby, Merseyside.
...
The alleged sexual activity is said to have taken place away from the premises of the £8,000-a-year school, whose former pupils include ex-Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie.

Although sixth-form students are above the age of consent, it is a criminal offence for teachers to engage in sexual activity with them because of their 'relationship of trust'.

Government guidance also warns teachers that 'intimate or sexual relationships between staff and pupils will be regarded as a grave breach of trust'."

Ed. note: Re "Sixth form". The students were thus likely to be around 16-to-18 years of age. In the U.S. it's equivalent to the junior and senior years of high school.

University Of California: "SeXX Shift"

anthony · 15 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the biggest splits occurs in families with a father who has little education or is absent — with sons much less likely than their sisters to go to college, said Claudia Buchmann, an Ohio State University sociologist who spoke at UC Davis in November. The reasons are unclear, though young men from those families may face more pressure to get a job immediately after high school, place a lower priority on education or fail to recognize the potential of a degree to raise their earning power.

...

The result, Kimsey said, is a society of women who are increasingly highly educated and white collar and men who are less educated and blue collar.

...

Many men who do go to college seem less prepared than their female classmates for the rigors of their coursework, say some UC Davis academic advisers and students. Men tend to procrastinate more in their studies while many women seem driven to excel.'

Wilson College to allow adult female students on-campus residence

anthony · 15 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHAMBERSBURG -- Adult female college students struggling to juggle an academic career with several other commitments elsewhere can now live on campus at Wilson College through its adult residency program.
...
"Adult women are the fastest-growing college demographic and are projected to be so over the next several years," said Mary Ann Naso, Wilson vice president for enrollment.
...
Men are barred from living on campus, as there are no programs for traditional-age male students at Wilson.
...
Under the older program, mothers can stay in a two-room suite with their daughters up to their last year of high school, or their sons up to age 11. Unlike the new program, it is for full-time residency only.'

With depression, vets face higher suicide risk

anthony · 15 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Valenstein's research team collected data on 887,859 VA hospital patients being treated for depression from April 1999 to September 2004. They calculated the suicide rate for several 12-week periods, including after the start of treatment with antidepressants, after treatment changes, and upon discharge from a psychiatric hospital.

"The possibility of increased suicide risks with antidepressant use has received much media attention, and there have been governmental recommendations for close clinical monitoring during these periods,"" Valenstein said. The study confirmed what others have shown: that the first 12 weeks after starting antidepressants is a higher risk period for patients, with 210 suicides per 100,000 person-years, but that the risk returns to normal thereafter.
...
"Although the results of this study are limited, in that they are based on a largely male and older VA population of depressed patients, they still provide an important contribution to an area of extreme importance to the entire mental health system in the United States: suicide prevention," Rego said.'

Forbes: Women Vs. Men: Handling Economic Stress

anthony · 15 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2005, the latest statistics offered by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 25,907 men killed themselves, versus 6,730 women. A big part of this discrepancy is that men use much more successful methods of suicide. Each of the four moguls who took their lives did so in a decisive fashion. "Men take far more permanent measures," says Manhattan psychotherapist Jonathan Alpert, who counsels many Wall Streeters and their families. "Women might make gestures that are not as strong, that are more a cry for help or attention."

The financial crisis offers serious and perhaps widespread motivations for male suicidal behavior. "This is just the tip of the iceberg," says Dr. Leslie Seppinni, a Beverly Hills, Calif., clinical psychologist who counsels many millionaires, both male and female.'

UK: School teacher facing jail for sending lewd texts to schoolboy

Anonymous · 15 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A primary school teacher faces jail for sending lewd texts to a 14-year-old boy after grooming him over the internet game World of Warcraft.

Lynn Walls, 42, who has been sacked from her job, used the interactive computer game to befriend the teenager and get his mobile phone number while playing online.

She then sent the boy, from London, a series of graphic texts in November 2007 which outlined what she intended to do with him if they met.

She was caught out when his father read them.

Today she returned to Newcastle Crown Court to be sentenced after admitting inciting a child under 16 to engage in sexual activity.'

Man charged despite girlfriend telling police she framed him

webdigr · 15 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A University of Arkansas employee faces charges for recording a teenage girl in the shower even though his girlfriend told police she did it to get him in trouble.
...
Robinson is accused on Oct. 6 of possessing nude images of a 16-year-old girl and using a digital camera to secretly record her while she was taking a shower.
...
He said his longtime girlfriend, Lela Churchwell, took the video herself in an effort to get him in trouble, ...
...
On Nov. 13, Churchwell told police that she had recorded the nude shower footage but told the victim and police that Robinson did it to get him in trouble...

She also told police she had become pregnant by another man and she planned to blackmail Robinson so he would move out of the house and she could stay there while he paid the mortgage.
...
"Developments in the case" convinced prosecutors to file charges against Robinson even though his girlfriend claims she made up the story, said Mark Booher, 4th Judicial District deputy prosecutor.
...
Police reports indicate that Robinson was accused of making numerous comments of a sexual nature to the 16-year-old girl, but he is not accused of any sexual contact with her.'

Hillary shooed into full vote

Matt · 15 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Thursday voted overwhelmingly for Hillary Rodham Clinton to become the next secretary of state, endorsing President-elect Barack Obama's promise to take U.S. foreign policy in a new direction.

The action paves way for a full Senate vote after Obama takes office on Jan. 20. Clinton is not expected to hit any major roadblocks, with Republicans and Democrats alike praising her acumen on the issues.

But concerns about her husband's charitable fundraising overseas remains. Sen. David Vitter of Louisiana, who was among several Republicans who raised the issue at her confirmation hearing earlier this week, cast the lone opposing vote.

Sen. Jim DeMint, R-S.C., said he too remains wary that contributions to the Clinton charity could pose conflicts of interest. But, he added, he wouldn't stand in the way of her appointment at this point and noted that Clinton could become one of the nation's best secretaries of State to date.

Her departure from the Senate has been closely watched because it would give New York Gov. David Paterson, a fellow Democrat, the power to appoint her successor. Caroline Kennedy, the scion of a political dynasty, wants the job.'

"Murder Spree by People Who Refuse to Ask For Directions" tonysprout · 16 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Ann Coulter at her finest, flings poop back at the monkeys at the NY Times by identifying the group that has a large hand in the decay of Western Civilization. Excerpt:

"But as long as the Times has such a burning interest in the root causes of murder, how about considering the one factor more likely to create a murderer than any other? That is the topic we're not allowed to discuss: single motherhood." and "Imagine an America with 60 to 70 percent fewer juvenile delinquents, teenage births, teenage suicides and runaways, and you will appreciate what the sainted "single mothers" have accomplished."

Engagement rings for men catching on

Matt · 16 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

My how times do change. Story here. Excerpt:

'A jewellery chain is set to be the first in the country to sell engagement rings exclusively for men.

H Samuel says the move comes after demands from female customers for equality - as increasing numbers of women propose to their partners.
...
As well as issues of equality driving demand for male engagement rings, H Samuel says women are equally enthusiastic about them as a means of making it clear their men are spoken for.

An H Samuel spokesman said: 'Women are no longer waiting until the man pops the question. We are equals in the workplace, equals in our relationships and we make our own decisions.'

Rather belies feminist assertions about "relationship inequality" doesn't it? If marriage is so oppressive to, why are they now doing the asking? It just don't add up.

I have never heard of a case where a man in a relationship with a woman has instigated marriage. The idea is always brought up first by the woman and brought up repeatedly until she gets a proposal. Perhaps it's a sign of progress that if marriage is going to continue to exist as a legal matter, at least now some women are finally admitting to the reality of things and taking their chances asking a fellow for his hand in marriage.

Not that I think it'll change the response rate that much.

"Bad males" want sex on date #1

Matt · 16 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Open misandry to be found here. Tell me, a girl who wants to have sex on the first date-- is she a "bad female"? Excerpt:

"A woman increases her chances of getting a 'good' man by not sleeping with partners on a first date, mathematicians have found.

They used a numerical model to show that better partners were willing to date for a longer time before having sex, whereas 'bad' men were more reluctant to hang around.
...
By delaying mating, the female is able to reduce the chance that she will mate with a bad male.

'A male's willingness to court for a long time is a signal that he is likely to be a good male.

'Long courtship is a price paid for increasing the chance that mating, if it occurs, will be a harmonious match which benefits both sexes. This may help to explain the commonly held belief that a woman is best advised not to sleep with a man on a first date.'
...
'The female's strategy is a compromise - a trade-off between on the one hand the greater risk of mating with a bad male if she mates too quickly, and on the other hand the time cost of delay. Under this compromise there remains some risk that she will mate with the wrong type of male. She cannot eliminate this risk completely unless she decides never to mate.'"

Fox Forum: "Obama, the Feminist?"

anthony · 16 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists need to realize that if we want truly equal treatment for women, we have to stop demanding preferential treatment, in the form of senate seats, anti-men legislation and the conventient revision of history. And they need to remember that real American women — in San Francisco, Topeka, and Anchorage — are not defined by only one issue.

Ms. magazine has offended a lot of women in the past — both by glorifying and, in fact, celebrating abortion as an act of defiance against men, and by appearing anti-Semitic in refusing to run an ad honoring Israeli women. If the election of Barack Obama is opening feminists' eyes to the realities of the world — that men are valuable and important, and shouldn't be excluded from our fight for equality — then I am now a huge supporter of Barack Obama. Here's hoping the new feminist mantra can be "I Am Man, Hear Me Roar."

New Zealand: Author Believes False Rape Allegations Need Help Not Prosecution

anthony · 17 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women who make false rape allegations need help not prosecution, says a rape victim counsellor.
...
Of more concern was the number of sexual abuse assaults not reported to police, with only 9 per cent of sexual assault cases reported.
...
Police should be finding help for these women, she said.

"I would recommend some form of therapeutic intervention rather than charging them."

She said someone needed to be "pretty distressed" to make a false allegation of sexual assault but there were several reasons someone would. A young woman may have had sex against her parent's wishes and told her parents she has been raped. Dr McGregor said the parents complain to police but when the woman was interviewed she would then say she had lied.'

"After School": Teacher-student sex documentary released

anthony · 17 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Collingswood, NJ (PRWEB) January 16, 2009 -- RollingStone.com has teamed up with Powerhouse Pictures Entertainment to premiere an exclusive interview from the upcoming documentary feature film, After School, directed by Chris Barrett. After School examines the disturbing nature of teacher student sexual relationships.
...
...Director Barrett goes on to say, "After School will delve more deeply into the topic of teacher student sex than any other media outlet has."'

http://www.afterschooldocumentary.com/

Book helps turn young boys into lifelong readers

anthony · 17 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new book co-authored by an Arizona State University faculty member tackles head-on the fact that, in general, boys in the United States read less often and less well than girls. “Bright Beginnings for Boys: Engaging Young Boys in Active Literacy” offers practical advice and strategies for teachers, parents and anyone with an interest in boys’ literacy development.
...
“‘Bright Beginnings for Boys’ offers alternatives to repetitive drilling on basic skills, which can lead to boredom, inattention and behavioral problems,” Zambo says. “We believe this book will benefit teachers, caregivers, and anyone else who wants to help young boys learn basic skills in a way that is active and connects to their interests. Beyond that, we want adults to use books to help young boys find positive visions of themselves.”'

Mother to face trial in toddler's poisoning

anthony · 17 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A young mother who authorities said deliberately mixed drain cleaner with her toddler's apple juice must face trial for child abuse and other charges, a judge ruled Wednesday.

Christina Noel Howell has pleaded not guilty to a charge of aggravated mayhem in the alleged poisoning of her 22-month-old son with caustic chemicals. If she is convicted, she could face up to life in prison.

The 22-year-old also has pleaded not guilty to two counts of child abuse and two counts of poisoning.

Deputy District Attorney Keith Watanabe said Howell told authorities the child's ingestion of caustic chemicals, once on May 25 and again on May 28, was accidental. Watanabe maintained the Warner Springs woman purposely served the poison to the toddler.

Howell's son suffered internal damage so severe he risks choking every time he drinks water, according to the child's doctor, who testified at a key pretrial hearing for Howell on Tuesday.'

Women safer from the unemployment line than men?

anthony · 17 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In these tough times, the unemployment line is getting longer and longer, and it looks like you have a better chance of standing in it if you are a man.

A new study shows women seem to be holding on to their jobs more than men.

Since the recession began, the jobless rate for men rose from 4.4% to 7.2%. The jobless rate for women went from 4.3% to 5.9%. Why the discrepancy? Experts say the kind of jobs women tend to hold offer more stability. About 75% of the people who work in health care and education are women. Those jobs certainly aren't going away right now.

Women are more likely to work part-time than men. That means they make less money than the full-timers and probably don't get benefits.'

Business Week: Too Much Testosterone on Wall Street?

anthony · 17 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Finance has always been dominated by men and driven by a testosterone-enhanced culture. If women had been running our banks, might we have avoided the sub-prime mess and the resulting economic meltdown?

Halla Tomasdottir, a prominent Icelandic financier, answers yes. In a recent BBC interview she shared her outrage at the wild risks male bankers had taken in Iceland, resulting in three banks being nationalized and the country being frozen out of foreign exchange markets. At least two smart women saw it coming—Tomasdottir herself and her partner Kristin Petursdottir, who set up Audur Capital in 2007, recruiting mainly women and exercising risk awareness in their choice of investments. Audur was one of the few Icelandic financial companies to survive the crisis. "Our ground rule was simple, we didn't invest in anything we couldn't understand," says Tomasdottir. In early 2008 she published a report warning Prime Minister Geir Haarde that Iceland's financial model was unsustainable.

He appears to have listened. Two months ago he appointed two women to rebuild the financial system. Elin Sigfusdottir and Birna Einarsdottir now head up the nationalized New Landsbanki and New Glitnir banks - their mandate to move away from the macho culture of irresponsible, aggressive risk-taking that many now blame for Iceland's troubles.'

Ed. note: Notice the source: harvardbusiness.org

American Businessmen in Hong Kong falling victim to date-rape drug

Broadsword · 18 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"...It was in Hong Kong, in the pulsating red-light district of Wan Chai. Garcia, a Singapore-based executive for a luxury sports brand, had gone out for Friday-night cocktails with colleagues. "The next thing I knew, it was 2 a.m. on Sunday, and I was lying on my bed, butt-naked," he recalls. "My cell phone, wallet, and $3000 Omega watch were gone." So was all memory of the previous 24 hours...

...Police on the island metropolis say 44 Western businessmen have reported similar date-rape druggings by prostitutes in Wan Chai in the past four years. The real number of victims is higher, they believe, because few men report the crime if they were cheating on their wives or girlfriends at the time. An advisory committee for the U.S. State Department deemed the trend serious enough to issue a warning about it in its 2008 Hong Kong travel report...

...Juli says she'd never report one of her fellow hookers to the police if she found out they were using date-rape drugs to rob customers. "I don't have any pity," she states flatly. "Of course it's bad news if a guy dies or loses his marriage because his wife finds out, but nobody forces them to come to Wan Chai."

She snaps open her Nokia and checks for calls from clients before having her last uncompromising word: "We've always had to protect ourselves from men. Maybe now it's their turn to start protecting themselves from us."

Mother of Florida Girl Caylee Anthony Describes Herself as a Victim in Just-Released Tapes

anthony · 18 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla. — The Florida mother charged in the killing of her toddler daughter described herself as a victim when talking to her parents during a jailhouse visit last August.

Casey Anthony, 22, told her parents she was just as much a victim as anyone else in the case during the recorded visit at the Orange County Jail in Orlando. Tapes of the visit were released this week.
...
"This is seriously the first time I've been angry, that I've been frustrated to the point where I can't even think straight at this moment," Casey Anthony said. "The worst part is nobody can see my side and I have to keep my mouth shut."'

"Father-ectomy court is now in session"

anthony · 18 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What does this Obama administration mean for new and old men and fathers? It means - welcome to family, I mean father-ectomy court, where if you think you are getting custody of your kid(s), think again! It means millions of more dollars funneled in to support CAPTA and VAWA, its constituents, its supporters, and that includes advocacy programs supporting the protection of women and children and what is in their best interests. If you think father custody is now at about 15% wait until 2010 when Obama, et al start to crank up the pressure in support of domestic programs created to ultimately curtail the rights of you guessed it - deadbeats, visitors, high rise condos known as time-sharers in Florida, child molesters and wife beaters; aka fathers.'

Australia: Rob Hulls criticised for stand on men-only clubs

anthony · 18 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ATTORNEY-GENERAL Rob Hulls said this week: "It seems to me that a contemporary, enlightened and diverse world demands that clubs . . . should really change their fossil-like views."

Hulls spoke about the Athenaeum Club excluding female members.
...
The issue at stake is property rights, not equal opportunity. And making it equal opportunity makes it impossible to design a system that makes everyone happy. Take Fernwood Fitness Centres.

It's a female-only fitness club that believes there's a "need for women to have their own special space -- a comfortable sanctuary to work out and enjoy regular exercise".
...
The real objective of Hulls's proposed changes isn't equal opportunity, but affirmative action, rooted in "progressive" ideology, to tinker with societal outcomes.'

India: Wife beats up her husband for divorce

webdigr · 18 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Thirty seven-year old S Babu, who is into construction business, has complained to Madiwala police that his wife Malini Babu was in the habit of popping sleeping pills, and was addicted to alcohol. According to him, she would regularly abuse him, demanding a divorce and Rs 25 lakh.

Interestingly, Malini's father also supporting his daughter, and is keen to see the couple separate. Babu and Malini had married on February 2, 1997, and have two children Nita and Rama. They live in an apartment on Taverekere Main Road.

Police said on December 29, Malini had allegedly beaten up her husband and the children.'

Another study debunks the two percent false rape canard

Matt · 18 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Radical feminism has enjoyed almost unchallenged success in convincing lawmakers and university administrators that when it comes to rape, one gender is incapable of telling a lie, while the other is incapable of anything but lying.

From the faulty premise that women do not lie about rape follow the equally faulty but still widely accepted premises that there is no such thing as a false rape claim, and that conviction rates for rape are far too low. To help jack up those rates – or, in the twisted logic that follows from those faulty premises, to help justice be better served – laws and policies are changed to provide rape accusers with special accommodations allowed to no other criminal complainant.'

Woman sought in fatal stabbing of S.F. man

anthony · 19 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'San Francisco police are searching for a woman who they say fatally stabbed an 18-year-old man during a domestic incident in a violence-scarred public housing development in the Western Addition.
...
Authorities did not identify the suspect in the latest homicide or provide details in what they described as a case of domestic violence. But several neighbors in the Plaza East housing complex said authorities were looking for 27-year-old DeEbony Smith, with whom Pickett had a baby daughter.

The neighbors said Smith lives in an apartment in Plaza East with her mother and three children. They said the fathers of the other two children had also died in recent years, one in a shooting and the other in a car wreck.'

Smart Mom/Wife-Dumb Dad/Husband commercials

Anonymous · 19 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I wish to nominate 2 more businesses for the boycott list.

Vonnage Phone Service: In the commercial, the "Smart Wife" is describing how easy it was to hook up and use the Vonnage system with her computer. Throughout the time, her husband (who is a rotund and rather ridiculous looking "tell-a-tubby" sort) is attempting to do the Michael Jackson Moon Walk. During the "Smart Wife's" description of how easily she connected to Vonnage, she looks over her shoulder at the antics and gives a look indicating that she is indeed a long suffering individual married to a complete idiot.

Home Depot: In one of their recent commercials, the "Smart Wife" talks about the "3 Reasons I'm Heading to the Home Depot this weekend". The reasons include her 3 year old drawing on the wall with crayons and then comparing her husband to the 3-year-old for having put numerous holes in the wall in an effort to hang pictures.

Ed. note: If you have links to the commercials, please post.

RADAR ALERT: Where IS the Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting?

Matt · 19 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Recently, an ABC World News Report story by Charlie Gibson was presented as 'Protecting Teens from Teenage Violence'. The more accurate name should have been 'How to Protect Your Daughters From Those Violent Teenage Boys'.

A report issued by Richard L. Davis, MS and MA, "ABC News Report on Domestic Violence Dating: Harmful or Helpful?", shows that the media continues to present an awfully skewed portrayal of domestic abuse, completely ignoring the need to be gender neutral in its evaluation. Davis points to Liz Claiborne, Inc., which developed and distributed its own A Parent's Guide to Teen Dating Violence:

Questions to Start the Conversation: This handbook completely ignored Liz Claiborne's own "teen relationship abuse survey" that clearly indicates that male teens are no more abusive than their female counterparts. On the contrary, the survey indicated the opposite. Yet the handbook denotes "he" as the abuser and "she" as the victim throughout. Interpretation of statistics can obviously be subjective, especially by the side who is viewing and attempting to extract a story from it. But as Davis points out, when presenting information to the masses, it is irresponsible to take the bits and pieces that are to your liking and throw out the rest.

Contact Charlie Gibson and the producers at ABC's World News Report and let them know that they need to be conscious of the bias and should present the facts ... ALL of them. You can reach him here.

Further, send a message to Liz Claiborne, Inc. that they can't ignore their own research, that it dilutes the results and gives a false picture. You can reach them at loveisnotabuse-at-liz.com.

As always, be polite.

++
Date of RADAR Release: January 19, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

Dad told to pay for child's birth or wed mom

Matt · 19 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FLINT, Mich. (AP) - The state of Michigan is giving a father a choice: pay the medical cost of his daughter's birth or marry the girl's mother.

Gary Johnson was billed $3,800 for the birth of his daughter JaeLyn, The Flint Journal reported in Sunday online editions. Johnson is not married to the child's mother, Rebecca Witt.

The Michigan Legislature amended the state's paternity act five years ago to waive birthing costs for a father, if he married the child's mother. A year later, Witt gave birth to JaeLyn. The state paid for the hospital costs because Witt was on Medicaid at the time and is now trying to recover the money.'

"Lost in Castration"

Matt · 19 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I never thought I'd see it. But anyone who knows even a little of Dirk Benedict's background knows he isn't afraid to tell it like it it. Read it here. Title: "Lost in Castration". Excerpt:

'Starbuck was meant to be a lovable rogue. It was best for the show, best for the character and the best that I could do. The Suits didn't think so. "One more cigar and he's fired," they told Glen Larson, the creator of the show. "We want Starbuck to appeal to the female audience for crying out loud." You see, the Suits knew women were turned off by men who smoked cigars, especially young men. How they "knew" this was never revealed. And they didn't stop there. "If Dirk doesn't quit playing every scene with a girl like he wants to get her in bed, he's fired." This was, well, it was blatant heterosexuality, treating women like "sex objects." I thought it was flirting. Never mind, they wouldn't have it. I wouldn't have it any other way, or rather Starbuck wouldn't. So we persevered, Starbuck and I. The show, as the saying goes, went on and the rest is history for, lo and behold, women from all over the world sent me boxes of cigars, phone numbers, dinner requests, and marriage proposals.
...
There was a time, I know I was there, when men were men, women were women and sometimes a cigar was just a good smoke. But 40 years of feminism have taken their toll. The war against masculinity has been won. Everything has turned into its opposite, so that what was once flirting and smoking is now sexual harassment and criminal. And everyone is more lonely and miserable as a result.'

Pepto Bismol and Coors Light Run Misandric Commercials

xtrnl · 19 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Another member of this site has recently submitted an article nominating two companies for boycott. I have two more to go with them.

Pepto Bismol:
In this ad, a woman is on the phone with an agent from Pepto Bismol's customer questions line, and tells him, "Rex got into everything last night." The agent asks her what he ate. She lists several things, and ends the list off with "and of course dog treats." The agent then tells her that dogs are not covered. She responds, "Charlie is my dog. Rex is my husband."

I don't see how it makes sense to compare half of your customer base to dogs, and expect them to want to buy your product. Perhaps the ad-execs who came up with this should be compared to dogs instead. I would much rather suffer from nausea, heartburn, indigestion, upset stomach, or diarrhea than use their product.

Coors Light:
A woman from Coors Light tries to explain to an all-male focus group (heaven forbid gender neutrality!), that when their beer is 'certified cold' the mountain on the label will turn blue. They all have difficulty understanding and ask her questions like "when does the beer turn blue?" and "when does the label turn to beer?" It ends off with all of the focus group looking outside at the mountains, another man asking them what they're doing, and one of them responding by saying, "the mountains are about to change colour".

I think we should take the time to write these companies emails explaining to them why these ads don't compel us to buy their products, and in fact deter us from doing so.

I would also like to end off by saying, as a side note, that the 'Office Park' Stride Ad is still running, and we should probably send them an email as well letting them know that every time we see that ad it reminds us not to buy their products.

Thanks for reading!

X-TRNL
Real Men Don't Take Abuse!

Ed. note: As before, if you have links to these ads, please post them.

Glenn Sacks: What Will the Obama Presidency Mean for Fathers?

anthony · 20 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm often asked what I think the Obama presidency will mean for fathers. I think there are some reasons to be optimistic and some reasons to be pessimistic. Below I list a bunch of them, not in any particular order.

Positive: Obama clearly understands the importance of fathers, and has often emphasized it.

Negative: Obama believes, or at least publicly believes, that fatherlessness is caused almost entirely by irresponsible fathers.

Positive: Obama seems to understand that there are systemic problems with the child support system, and that these problems are part of what causes men to fail to pay their child support.

Negative: Obama has said that he wants to beef up child support enforcement against those who he believes, perhaps incorrectly, are capable of paying.'

UK: Jealousy no defence for killer husbands, but abused wives can escape a murder charge

anthony · 20 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Stripping husbands of the right to claim that infidelity was the spur for their actions means they will face a charge of murder, rather than manslaughter.

But women who kill abusive partners in cold blood could escape a murder conviction if they prove they feared more violence.

The most sweeping changes to murder laws in 50 years are part of the Government's controversial Coroners and Justice Bill, to be published today.

...

The new murder rules follow a report from the Government's legal advisers, the Law Commission, which paid deep attention to the claims of feminists that women who kill violent husbands or boyfriends are too harshly treated.

But Robert Whelan of the Civitas think-tank said: 'The Government is making some people more equal than others before the law. It seems some lives are worth more than others.'

Researcher and author on families and the law, Patricia Morgan said: 'They are differentiating between victims. They are saying some groups have excuses because they fall into a different category.'

Mrs Morgan added: 'It seems that women have excuses and men don't.'"

UK: Parents want more men to be school teachers, survey shows

anthony · 20 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parents are calling for more men to become teachers because they fear their children lack male role models, research showed yesterday.

Demand is even stronger among single mothers, who told the survey their children had little contact with men in caring roles.

The study found one in six children living with a single mother spends less than two hours a week with a male role model, such as a father figure, relative or teacher.

One in three of these children has such contact for under six hours a week.

Over the past 20 years there has been a dramatic decline in the number of men working in schools and nurseries and a growing trend for children never to be taught by a man.

The slump in male recruitment has been blamed on a perception among men that teaching, especially of young children, is 'women's work' and that they risk false allegations of child abuse.'

Sweden: Best-selling DV book author accused of fraud

Matt · 20 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It all started in the year 1995 when journalist Liza Marklund made her debut as an author with the book ‘Gömda : en sann historia’ (Hidden : A true story). In what she claims to be a true story verified by authority documents.
...
The book Gömda quickly became a success and started a debate about how Swedish authorities do not help a parent who is on the run from an abusive partner.
...
The book ‘Mia - Sanningen om Gömda’ (Mia – The truth about Hidden), written by freelance journalist Monica Antonsson, is all it has promised to be. The real story about Marklund’s story, that shows what a thin line the celebrated and famous journalist has been walking on when she “documented” how Swedish authorities ignored a mother fleeing from an abusive husband.

Antonsson’s book is based on documents from authorities and about 40 interviews with people who know the background or Mia personally. What is showed is a rather complex child-care dispute, where the escape by Mia with her and her husband’s daughter is severely over-dramatised and far from rooted in fear for her life as she claims. Instead, many people says to have suffered by being falsely portrayed in the books by Marklund and do not recognise Mia’s claims, this includes her old friends and family members.'

Relatedly, also see this blog entry. Excerpt:

'Take a look at the cover of this book. It's called "When the blood ties breaks", and is written by the alias "Hanna Svensson". Look what it says on the book cover at the bottom. (A true story). This story is just as invented as "Buried alive" and "asylum". Fantasy and fiction right through.

Today, I can reveal that this book is part of the same evil project as "Buried alive" and "asylum". The people behind it is ROKS, probably in cooperation with senior politicians in Sweden. Exactly what Liza Marklunds role in the project has been and how much she knew is still not quite clear. But given how desperate she now tries to lie herself out of this tight spot, and how she has built a lucrative career in this matter, one can still draw some conclusions.'

Benard Chapin: The Semi-Declared War on Men

anthony · 21 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The battle between the sexes has ceased being a battle and has quickly turned into a rout. With women the recipients of state sponsored advantages such as affirmative action, preferential treatment in the courts, and a public educational system uniquely sensitive to the needs of girls, men are like frogs in an aquarium where water is added incrementally at ever-increasing temperatures. The frogs only realize the danger just as they begin to boil to death. This is exact warning that Dr. Richard Hise gives us in his 2004 book, The War Against Men.

Its full title includes the secondary, Why Women are Winning and What Men Must Do If America is to Survive, and this is the approach the author takes within. He first outlines the problems of today and then gives suggestions as to what we should do about them. Dr. Hise is a professor of marketing at Texas A&M's Mays Business School. This would not be a natural subject for a business professor to address, yet he wrote the book for highly passionate reasons. Indeed, the author "…cried when I read how our young sons are degraded in school through the feminization efforts espoused by and, unfortunately, implemented by the female dominated educational system."

...
Women are becoming dominant in the work place and within education as the rules of productivity have been altered to ensure their competitive advantage. In higher education, as most of us are already aware, the universities are devoted to fighting the "phallocracy" which means paranoia in regards to men. The author uncovers a horrifying piece of propaganda put out by the University of Massachusetts, Amherst Women's Studies Director. It demands that American universities make gender "part of all pertinent programs of institutional research," and that all "curricula would be transformed according to guidance from an autonomous women's studies site." The "gender" that would be imposed would be exclusively female in its orientation. If such ideas were ever adopted, then a college education would be next to worthless. Dr. Hise wisely shares with his readers a list of the Top 10 most anti-male universities which is something that every prospective student should consult.'

Wendy Murphy: Male abuse victims suffer from crime and stereotype

anthony · 21 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the Department of Justice, females account for 6,000 sexual offenses each year. A total of 1.6 million men and 1.5 million women were sexually abused by women when they were children. The majority of female offenders are between 22 and 33 years old and are not mentally ill. They are typically employed in professional jobs or as managers and a high percentage of their victims are “close” contacts, such as students, family friends and children they advised in some fashion.

When they offend against boys, we either ignore or discount the harm because it seems impossible for a boy’s parts to get, um, tingly if he’s truly being harmed. Truth is, boys suffer terribly, even when their parts are tingling. But because we high-five them as “lucky,” they aren’t free to talk about the experience as painful. This silencing adds to the psychic pain for male victims and so long as we continue to view male sexual abuse through the prism of an orgasm, it will continue.'

Opinion: Fair pay acts will hamper recovery

anthony · 21 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two new "equal pay" laws will likely land on President-elect Barak Obama's desk as soon as he is inaugurated

Tuesday. These laws were taken up by the new Congress as its first order of business, along with emergency measures to rescue the economy.
...
Due to the undeniable progress made towards equity over the past 40 years and the marked diversity of today's workplace, I would argue that rank discrimination is today the least likely of many factors in any woman's compensation.

However, in the burdens they impose -- and the urgency with which their advocates are trying to get them enacted -- both of these new laws seem to assume that discrimination is the most likely.

Existing anti-discrimination laws, with their stiff penalties, already provide strong prohibitions against pay differentials based on race, religion or gender.

Employers who have invested heavily for decades in leveling the playing field for women should not be penalized now -- in the midst of a full-blown economic crisis -- with a flood of costly litigation. Our economy needs rescue measures that see the workplace as it is, not as it was 40 years ago.'

Ohio Mom Charged With Daughters' Bathtub Drownings Heard Voices Urging Her to Kill

anthony · 21 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CLEVELAND — A defense attorney says an Ohio woman charged with drowning her two young daughters in a bathtub heard voices urging her to kill.

Twenty-three-year-old Amber Hill has pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity. During opening statements Tuesday, her defense attorney said Hill had been increasingly troubled and depressed leading up to the deaths of her daughters on Oct. 1, 2007.

...

The girls' father, Jamie Cintron, rushed home and pulled his daughters from a bathtub filled with water, then called 911.'

Mom allegedly coached girl in sex case

Matt · 21 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CALGARY - Cops wrongly charged a Calgary dad with sexual abuse after his ex-wife coached their three-year-old daughter's complaint, a $900,000 lawsuit claims.

And the lawyer for the dad says his client has now effectively lost his daughter since the mom has taken her to their native China.

"He may have lost the child forever," lawyer Robb Beeman told the Sun yesterday.

Beeman said police should have done a more thorough investigation before charging his client with sexual assault two years ago.'

Woman seeking alimony after common-law marriage

Matt · 21 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MONTREAL — She is a willowy brunette with supermodel looks. He is a multimillionaire who travels the globe. Their union produced three kids - and their breakup is now poised to test Canadian law.

A Montreal woman turned to a Quebec judge yesterday in a bid to obtain alimony from her wealthy ex. She says she was the man's companion, travel partner, and mother to their children: The only thing she wasn't was his wife.

Now the woman is challenging federal law and seeking $50-million of her ex's fortune, saying she was unfairly penalized because she never tied the knot.'

"Women" agenda page on whitehouse.gov

anthony · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Read it here. Replace "women" in the url with "men" and you get a 404 error. No big surprise there. Excerpt:

'Fighting for Pay Equity: Despite decades of progress, women still make only 77 cents for every dollar a man makes. Throughout their careers, President Obama and Vice President Biden have championed the right of women to receive equal pay for equal work. In the Illinois State Senate, President Obama cosponsored and voted for the Illinois Equal Pay Act, which provided 330,000 more women protection from pay discrimination. In the U.S. Senate, Obama joined a bipartisan group of Senators to introduce the Fair Pay Restoration Act, a bill to overturn the Supreme Court's recent 5-4 decision in Ledbetter v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company. The bill will restore the clear intent of Congress that workers must have a reasonable time to file a pay discrimination claim after they become victims of discriminatory compensation. The President was also a cosponsor of Senator Tom Harkin's (D-IA) Fair Pay Act, and President Obama will continue to promote paycheck equity and close the wage gap between men and women.
...
Reducing Domestic Violence: One in four women will experience domestic violence in her lifetime. Family violence accounted for 11 percent of all violence between 1998 and 2002. As a member of the Senate, President Obama introduced legislation to combat domestic violence by providing $25 million a year for partnerships between domestic violence prevention organizations and Fatherhood or Marriage programs to train staff in domestic violence services, provide services to families affected by domestic violence, and to develop best practices in domestic violence prevention.'

Harkin's Statement On the Fair Pay Act

anthony · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Published in April 2008 but relevant to the kind of rationale being used. Harkin is appealing to the Labor Theory of Value which in essence says work's value is commensurate with how much effort is put into it rather than whether or not the product thereof is in demand. Based on that thinking if one were to dig a sand-pit in the middle of a desert, one should be paid the same as if he were to excavate by request a similarly-sized hole in downtown Manhattan where a building is to be put. Excerpt:

'Defenders of this status quo offer all manner of bogus explanations as to why women make less. How many times have I heard the fairy tale that women work for fulfillment while men work to support their families? This ignores the great majority of single women who work to support themselves, and married women whose paycheck is all that allows their family to make ends meet. It ignores the harsh reality that so many women face in the workplace, where they have to work twice as hard to be taken seriously, or, say, get pushed into being a cashier when they had applied for a better-paying sales job. These pervasive acts of discrimination deny women fair pay; and they also deny women basic dignity.

Let me cite just one example of the discrimination I am talking about. Last year, in a hearing of the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, we heard remarkable testimony from Dr. Philip Cohen of the University of North Carolina. Dr. Cohen compared nurses' aides, who are overwhelmingly women, and truck drivers, who are overwhelmingly men. In both groups, the average age is 43. Both require "medium" amounts of strength. Nurses' aides, on average have more education and training. But nurses' aides make less than 60 percent of what truck drivers make.'

"Promiscuous women raise the bar for men"

webdigr · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Infidelity produces faster sperms, say researchers

Toronto: Female behaviour determines the quality and quantity of sperm of her mating partner, says a new Canadian study.

If she is promiscuous, she can trigger changes in the quality and quantity of sperm of a male as he has to compete with other males to impregnate her.

Only if he can produce better, larger and faster sperm than others does he stand a chance of impregnating her, says the study on fish by McMaster University at Hamilton near here.

The study says the idea that sperm would evolve to become more competitive when males compete for fertilisation seems obvious, but there has been little proof of this till date.'

India: Heartless Kolkata watches man die

webdigr · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Read the story here. Do you think a woman would have been left to die on the streets like this? Mostly not. But the status of men is lower than even animals. Excerpt:

'KOLKATA: It's known as a city with a heart caring, nourishing and reaching out to the helpless and destitutes. This premise was put to test over the weekend, and sadly, Kolkata failed.

As hundreds of passersby and locals watched, a man shivered to death beside a garbage vat at the Rafi Ahmed Kidwai Road-Ripon Street crossing late on Monday evening. The vat is metres away from the spot where a police patrol vehicle stands every night. According to eyewitnesses, the man had been lying there ill, unfed, and in pain since Thursday night.

...

On Monday morning, Jalani fed the man tea and biscuits. He then bathed his hands and feet in warm water and rushed to his father Hakim Mohammad Quayum, a practitioner of traditional medicine.

...

The area is teeming with thousands of people all day, but no one moved a muscle to rescue the man. "Buddha to garbage mein para tha. Usko hum kaise help kare? (The old man was lying on garbage. How could I help him?)," was the response of Ajmal Khan, a local tea-stall owner.'

Report: More men committed suicide in India by almost 2:1 in 2007

webdigr · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW DELHI: India reported 122,637 suicides last year — an average of 336 every day — with more men ending their lives than women, the latest report of the National Crime Records Bureau (NCRB) has revealed.

Although suicide was a nationwide phenomenon, five states — Maharashtra, Andhra Pradesh, West Bengal, Tamil Nadu and Karnataka — registered consistently higher number of suicidal deaths during the last few years. Overall, 2007 recorded an increase of 3.8% over the previous year's figure of 118,112.

Poverty was surprisingly not the major reason for suicide with more people ending their lives due to family (23.8%) and health problems (22.3%) than bankruptcy or sudden change in economic status (2.7%), love affairs (2.8%), dowry dispute (2.6%), unemployment (2%) and suspected/illicit relation (1.1%). Only 2.3% of people committed suicide due to poverty.
...
The latest report of the National Crime Records Bureau (NCRB), released last month and covering the year 2007 has revealed much more.
...
Referring to the sex profile of persons committing suicide during 2007, the NCRB report said social and economic causes led most males to kill themselves whereas emotional and personal causes mainly drove women to end their lives.

Sex wise figures show that the male-female ratio of suicide victims for 2007 was 65:35. However, the proportion of boys-girls suicide victims (up to 14 years) was 48:52.'

India: Activists want a ministry for men

webdigr · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"New Delhi: Men's rights activists want domestic violence laws to be gender-neutral. Armed with statistics of high suicide rates among men, their wish list includes a ministry for men's welfare, a national commission for men and a review of the antidowry law, which they claim is grossly misused.

"Men are suffering from 'legal terrorism' at the hands of some women. If you can have a ministry for animal welfare, why not one for the welfare of men" asks Swarup Sarkar, coordinator, Save Family Foundation, Delhi.

According to the 2007 National Crime Records Bureau, 57,593 married men have committed suicide compared to 30,064 married women. Men's activists say while these figures should be self-explanatory, women's suicides are often ascribed to marital woes while men's cases are mostly put down to financial problems.
...
Agrees Kamal Vikram, member, GHRS. "Men are suffering in silence. It's the only country where the father is not considered important for the child," he says.
...
The group says it has found support in this endeavour from fellow organizations like SIF (Save Indian Family), an online group that claims to have more than 3,000 members.
...
"We are not saying women's issues should be ignored, but men's genuine problems should also be understood," says Bhartia who's lined up programmes on men's rights across cities like Delhi, Kolkata, Bangalore, Pune and Nagpur."

Teenage girls accused of abusing elderly nursing home residents

Matt · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ALBERT LEA, Minn. – Allegations that two young assistants groped, spanked and spat on several nursing home residents suffering from dementia have shaken members of this southern Minnesota community, including the lead prosecutor in the case.

Brianna Marie Broitzman and Ashton Michelle Larson, both 19, appeared in court Wednesday to face multiple charges over the alleged abuse at Good Samaritan Society. The young women did not enter pleas, and both were released on bail.

"I think that they are very serious charges," Freeborn County Attorney Craig Nelson said after the hearing. "We're dealing with people who are vulnerable adults. People who are clearly ... in need of our care and our concern and our monitoring. They depend on us for everything."

Nelson added: "I, as a member of this community, certainly can feel it in my bones."'

Still takes a court order for boys to have long hair

Matt · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

How many years has it been and still, boys can't have long hair without judicial intervention? Even so, the reason has to be something like religion. How about just plain self-expression? Story here. Excerpt:

'Five-year-old Adriel Arocha doesn't have to stuff his hair into his shirt collar. And he doesn't have to meet privately with a teacher, away from his classmates, for flouting the school's policy on hair length.

On Tuesday, a federal judge ruled that the Needville Independent School District's policy violated state law and the U.S. Constitution by punishing the American Indian kindergartner for religious beliefs that require him to wear his hair long.

"By the policy's terms, A.A. must wear his hair in his shirt during recess, on field trips, and on the school bus. When he becomes older, he will have to wear his hair down the back of his shirt at football games, school dances, and, presumably, his high school graduation," wrote U.S. District Judge Keith P. Ellison. "The policy will deny A.A. the opportunity to express a religious practice that is very dear to him and his father."'

India: Domestic Violence Claims 156,000 husbands crusader · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the last eleven years (1996 - 2007) 156000 husbands have been claimed by rampant domestic violence against them. In a shocking revelation of suicide statistics for the year 2007 reveals that almost double the number of married men have committed suicide in comparison to married women as the report attached here corroborates. It states that in the year 2007 57,593 married men committed suicide in comparison to 30,064 married women whereas the same figures for the years 2006 are 55,452 and 29,869 and for 2005 are 52,483 and 28,188.

While there has been a lot of hue and cry for domestic violence against women with various studies being sponsored for studying the same with tax payers' money 82% of which comes from men, but sadly enough no study has ever been done in India for studying the prevalence, effects and trends of domestic violence against men or the statistics about it.

International studies world over have proved that both men and women are equally likely to be victims of domestic violence, but the Indian government unfortunately has closed its doors very brutally on the men leaving them to fend for themselves on their own. Even the courts have an anti – men and a step – motherly attitude towards men what with the Honorable Delhi High Court observing, "Though men are victims of violence, such incidences are few and far between, thus ruling out the possibility of protection from the parliament", while dismissing a petition challenging the constitutionality of the Domestic Violence Act as it violates Article 14 of the Indian Constitution.'

"Single mother who allowed her son aged THREE to smoke cigarettes at home walks free from court"

Proud_to_be_a_man · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original Story here. Utterly unbelievable. And, OF COURSE, she gets no jail time. Words fail me. Excerpt:

'A young mother allowed her three-year-old son to smoke, a court heard yesterday.

The boy was apparently familiar with cigarettes and knew how to use a lighter and inhale.

He was allowed to smoke in his bedroom and around the house, and was only stopped when a family friend used her mobile phone to film him and alerted social workers.'

Her CHILDREN's sake... She has more than one. Maybe the others are alcoholics and drug addicts?

Ireland: First female ever jailed for incest

Broadsword · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The 40-year-old alcoholic, from Co Roscommon, is the first woman in the history of the Irish state to be convicted of incest.

She admitted to being the worst mother in the world after putting her youngsters - who were aged between six and 15 at the time - through a harrowing catalogue of neglect, including forcing her 13-year-old son to have sex with her.

At Roscommon Circuit Court, Judge Miriam Reynolds said she would have given the unnamed woman a life sentence had she been a man but was restricted by the terms of a legal act carrying a maximum sentence of seven years for incest cases involving women."

Paternity fraud fight of husband 'duped for 17 years by wife'

Anonymous · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A husband was conned for 17 years by his wife into bringing up her lover's child as his own, a court heard yesterday.

Mark Webb only found out the truth from DNA tests conducted after the girl turned 18, it is alleged. He has tried to sue his ex-wife Lydia Chapman for deceiving him over the paternity of her daughter.

In the first 'paternity fraud' case to reach the Appeal Court, Mr Webb claimed his former wife and her alleged lover conceived the girl at a hotel in 1985.'

This is an important test-case in the UK. The outcome will set a precendent for other cases.

How hysterical mothers have driven men out of teaching

Anonymous · 22 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"As endangered species go, this one is especially alarming: so rare has the male primary school teacher become that one in ten schools has none at all, while across the country they account for barely 15 per cent of those who teach under-11s.

...

Is it that these days, men are scared of teaching young children because they are scared of false allegations of child abuse.

And if you want to know who is largely responsible for creating an atmosphere in which such a fear is all too horribly realistic, look no further than the twittering bunch of over-protective, over-excitable mothers clustered around our school gates.

These are the people who have bought, wholesale, into the myth of the sexually predatory bogeyman on every corner; the people who have, in a single generation, swept us from the sensible 'don't take sweets from strangers' to the absurd 'all men are paedophiles'."

Obama economic adviser voices concerns about 'white male construction workers' getting too much economic stimulus

anthony · 23 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Economist and former U.S. Labor Secretary Robert Reich worries about too much of the Obama stimulus going to white males in the construction sector.

“If there aren’t enough skilled professionals to do the jobs involving new technologies, the stimulus will just increase the wages of the professionals who already have the right skills rather than generate many new jobs in these fields. And if construction jobs go mainly to white males who already dominate the construction trades, many people who need jobs the most -- women, minorities, and the poor and long-term unemployed -- will be shut out,” Reich said on his economic blog.'

Ed. note: I heard him say essentially the same thing in broadcast testimony before the Congress yesterday. He did not word himself quite the same way though; watch it here. My judgment is that his voice drips with contempt as he says "white male construction workers", but that's just my opinion.

Deliver pizzas, wife tells laid-off hubby, or "[we] won't make it"

anthony · 23 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- Donna LeBlanc gave her husband, a former restaurant manager, the stark ultimatum: become a pizza delivery man or their family "wouldn't make it."

The Lafayette, Louisiana, family of six was struggling with $45,000 of mounting medical debt from Donna LeBlanc's unexpected case of pneumonia and tonsillitis a year earlier. The family savings account had dwindled to $100.

"It's embarrassing for my husband to take a job he is overqualified for, and I know he feels ashamed at times," says Donna LeBlanc, a 35-year-old mother with four children. "But this is what we have to do and we're going to make the best out of it."

She watched her husband, Rob LeBlanc, 35, load Domino's pizza boxes into their family car and deliver orders until near dawn for $10 an hour.'

Ed. comment: Let's see a similar story where a man tells his wife to deliver pizzas or else they won't make it as a family get touted all over the press without editorial criticism.

Director proud of "feminist film"

anthony · 23 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'John Krasinski is proud that his new film Brief Interviews With Hideous Men is a "feminist movie".
...
It tells the story of how a graduate student copes with a break up by interviewing various "hideous" men for her dissertation, to find out what's going on in their heads.
...
"Did I learn that all men are bs? No, no. I think they're all good at heart - they just sometimes can do hideous things," she said.
...
Dominic described his character in the film as "very, very disturbed".

"The men in it are revolting, if truth be told," he joked.'

The movie's Wikipedia Description is here.

New York Gov. Paterson to Name Rep. Gillibrand to Clinton's Former U.S. Senate Seat

anthony · 23 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. You guys might be asking how this is relevant to us? It's obvious this is another example of political affirmative action. The NY seat was vacated by a Hillary Clinton therefore a female must take her place. Excerpt:

'New York Gov. David Paterson will name Rep. Kirsten Gillibrand, an upstate Democrat, to replace Hillary Clinton in the U.S. Senate, a Democratic official with knowledge of the governor's decision told FOX News on Thursday night.

Gillibrand, elected in 2006, represents the state's 20th congressional district in the U.S. House of Representatives. She is the first Democrat to represent the district since 1978 -- and the first female representative of the district.'

Ledbetter bill clears Senate

anthony · 23 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON - A wage discrimination bill that heralds the pro-labor policies of the Democratic-controlled Congress and White House cleared the Senate Thursday and could be on President Barack Obama's desk within days.

The legislation reverses a 2007 Supreme Court ruling that narrowly defines the time period during which a worker can file a claim of wage discrimination, even if the worker is unaware for months or years that he or she is getting less than colleagues doing the same job.

The House is expected to act quickly to again approve the measure, sending it to Obama for his signature. The House passed it two weeks ago but then combined it with another bill that the Senate didn't consider.
...
The House approved the legislation during the first week of the new session of Congress, signaling that labor rights bills that made little headway during the Bush administration will be at the top of the agenda this year. The bill paves the way for considering more controversial labor measures, including one that would take away a company's right to demand a secret ballot when workers are seeking to organize.'

House cleaner gets scolding, no jail time for having sex with several teens

badgerb · 23 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HOUMA – A district judge scolded a 47-year-old house cleaner Tuesday morning who pleaded guilty to having sex with a group of teen boys – two as young as 13 – in her Ashland trailer.

Maureen Lirette, 444 Ashland Drive, must serve five years of probation and register as a sex offender to comply with a plea deal she took. She was charged with three counts of carnal knowledge of a juvenile and could have received 10 years in prison for each count.

The boys' families requested that Lirette get no jail time, said Juan Pickett, a Terrebonne assistant district attorney.
...
"It's not unusual for them not to want jail time," he said, adding the Terrebonne District Attorney's Office has handled a few cases such as Lirette's. "It's rare to see it reported."'

I have no words to describe what I think about this. Perhaps my fellow brethren do.

Betrayed just once, hostile forever

webdigr · 23 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a report on why the men turn hostile in society. First men are betrayed, rejected and humiliated as boys by the society, then when due to obvious reasons some of them turn hostile, they're only blamed again. Excerpt:

"A new study seems to have confirmed the link between social exclusion and aggression by showing that people who feel socially rejected are more likely to see others' actions as hostile.

What's more, they are more likely to behave in hurtful ways towards individuals they've never even met.

For the study, lead author C Nathan DeWall, PhD, from the University of Kentucky, conducted four separate experiments with 190 participants, all college students. In one experiment, 30 participants completed a personality test and were given bogus feedback about the results."

Killer of three-year-old foster child free to walk the streets while awaiting sentencing

Matt · 23 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two years after her three-year-old foster child died of cranial trauma so severe that it left his brain "popping out of his skull," the killer still walks around a free woman.

And it will be another three months before a judge finally determines an appropriate punishment for her deplorable crime.

"I'm sick to my stomach," the victim's aunt said yesterday as she struggled to keep her composure.'

"10,000 Violent Women and One Screenwriter, Part I"

Matt · 23 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"“I killed him by mistake,” she says.

“Mistake, what kind of mistake?”

Josepha, serving a life sentence for murder one, is known to be one of the most violent and unpredictable women in a society of violent and unpredictable women. She stares at me with gray eyes that are surprisingly warm and endearing.

I have to be careful. I’ve been in this women’s prison for three days and I don’t understand the social rules that make this place go round. I’m terrified of saying something really dumb, and then seeing my insides, well, outside.
...
Prison. One thing I’ve learned about the inmates: they lie. Whatever they say, you have to read between the lines to discover anything resembling the truth.

I’m doing research for a film.'

Child Support: How much is too much?

anthony · 24 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Jan. 1, Massachusetts adopted new child-support guidelines that will likely raise the amount paid by non-custodial parents, usually fathers.

Are the new guidelines excessive and unfair, as a lawsuit charges? Or were the old guidelines too stingy? How much child support is enough? How much is too much?

Fathers & Families, a Boston-based advocacy organization, says the payments under the new guidelines are excessive. Non-custodial parents, usually fathers, who must now make increased payments could be forced to work long hours or move to a distant community to find housing they can afford.
...
"Currently the guidelines tell the minimum wage employee whose income is $16,000 that you're going to pay $4,000 in child support. It can't be done." In Boston, a minimum wage employee with that obligation might be able to rent an apartment but would have nothing left over for food, Holstein says."'

Prosecutors: Sexual Assaults Staged

anthony · 24 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Federal Prosecutors say an alleged sexual assault and attack in the Waldo neighborhood was staged.

Federal prosecutors charged Julie Bernet, 39, of Bucrys, Mo. And Gordon Reabe, Jr., 33 of Lee's Summit, Mo. with wire fraud on Thursday.

Court documents say Bernet and 23-year old Lindsey Crawford offered to pay Reabe $100,000 to duct tape them and assault both women inside Carwford's garage on Nov. 25, 2008.

...

Prosecutors say the women hoped the attacks would force a higher settlement of their sexual harassment lawsuit against a former employer.

Bernet and Crawford filed the lawsuit against former employer Mercedes-Benz of Kansas City last year, citing gender discrimination, sexual harassment, hostile work environment and retaliation.

Court documents indicate Bernet ran across the street to a neighbor's house, claiming two masked men attacked them the home minutes after Reabe assaulted them.'

"Mom" loses custody for ailenating Dad

badgerb · 24 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Eureka! A win for the good guys! If you can find the judges email address send her kudos. Heck if I knew where I would send her flowers. Way to go judge!!!! Excerpt:

'In a stunning and unusual family law decision, a Toronto judge has stripped a mother of custody of her three children after the woman spent more than a decade trying to alienate them from their father.

The mother's "consistent and overwhelming" campaign to brainwash the children into thinking their father was a bad person was nothing short of emotional abuse, Justice Faye McWatt of the Superior Court of Justice wrote in her decision.

The three girls, ages 9 to 14, were brought to a downtown courthouse last Friday and turned over to their father, a vascular surgeon identified only as A.L.'

Judges: Mom not guilty of drowning daughters by reason of insanity

anthony · 24 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CLEVELAND - A mother charged with aggravated murder in the bathtub drownings of her two daughters was found not guilty by reason of insanity Friday.

A three-judge panel in Cuyahoga County Common Pleas Court determined that 23-year-old Amber Hill suffered from a severe mental disorder when she drowned her daughters on Oct. 1, 2007.

"The court concludes she did not know the wrongfulness of her horrific acts," said Judge John Sutula.
...
"Now my daughter can get some help," she said. During the trial, Hutchins had testified that she wanted to take her daughter to a hospital for mental health counseling before the children died.

Mack said Hill had since been medicated and was functioning well.

"She was a good mother," said the defense attorney Myron Watson. "She cared for those children. Those children were the center of her life."'

Tears as teenage boy is cleared of rape

anthony · 24 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHEERS erupted from the public gallery at Doncaster Crown Court after a teenager was cleared of rape charges.

Dean Bunn, aged 19, broke down in tears and had to be helped from the dock when he was overcome by emotion at the end of his six-month ordeal.

...

Mr Bunn, of Pickering Road, Bentley, was first arrested in early July when he went to a police station after seeing a cordon thrown around the alleged crime scene next to Bentley railway bridge.

He told police he had had sex with a woman in bushes at the bottom of the bridge embankment, but said she instigated it – something he maintained throughout two trials.

...

A second trial, in which the 36-year-old woman who had cried rape gave evidence by video link for a second time, concluded yesterday with Mr Bunn's acquittal.

In his defence he said he had been walking from a pub at Carcroft to town when he met the woman, who cannot be named for legal reasons, on Bentley Road near the bridge. He had never met her before.

She asked him for a cigarette and then asked him if he was "hoping to pull" that night before saying "we can always go down there", indicating the embankment.

He told the jury that sex took place at the bottom of the embankment.

"At no stage did I think she was uncomfortable," he said."'

UK: Ad admonishes men to "...remember Valentine's Day... or else!"

Matt · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Agent Provocateur's most racy advertising campaign yet, model-of-the-moment Rosie Huntington Whiteley gives her on-screen lover an adults-only lap dance.

The nearly three-minute film culminates in her thumping her boyfriend across the face to remind men not to forget Valentine's Day.

...

Huntington Whiteley proceeds to tie him up, faux bondage-style, before blindfolding him with a black tie.

With the sound of his heavy breathing in the background, the girlfriend marches over and punches him in the face.

'This will teach you to forget Valentine's Day,' she says, and then marches off.'

BBC personality made 40 false rape allegations against her ex-boyfriend

Matt · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

' A BBC personality has shattered her ex-boyfriend's life by falsely accusing him of rape.

The woman, who has broadcast to television audiences of millions, accused him of raping her 40 times throughout their two-and-a-half-year relationship.

He was arrested, held in a police cell and handcuffed as police searched his flat for evidence of his crime. But she retracted her allegation weeks later, and the officer investigating the claims described them as 'inconsistent' and 'not credible'.

Despite the lack of evidence, the incident remains on the Police National Computer thanks to a legal loophole, which campaigners say is blighting the lives of falsely accused men.'

UK: Absent fathers who refuse to pay child support will lose their passports

Matt · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Unprecedented plans to give bureaucrats the power to revoke people's driving licences and passports without going through the courts will be unveiled this week.

Work and Pensions Secretary James Purnell will announce the far-reaching proposals on Tuesday as part of a new crackdown on absent fathers who refuse to pay for the upkeep of their children.

Officials in charge of pursuing them for child maintenance arrears would win the right to bypass judges and ban them from driving or travelling abroad at the stroke of a pen.
...
But in December 2007, the respected Lords' constitution committee warned that giving State officials the power to cancel passports would be a 'serious' curtailment of long-standing freedoms.'

It added: 'The freedom to travel to and from one's country is a right of great significance and should only be curtailed after a rigorous decision process.'

Philippines: Feminism blamed for ‘erosion of manhood’

anthony · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MANILA, Philippines—A high-ranking Vatican official currently in Manila has warned of the erosion of manhood and the “crisis in fatherhood” that have resulted in millions of children worldwide without a father or enjoying emotionally healthy relations with one.

German Cardinal Paul Josef Cordes, president of the Pontifical Council “Cor Unum,” the Vatican dicastery (or administrative agency) on charity, aid and relief, blamed “gender mainstreaming” and “radical feminism” for attacking biological manhood and insisting that “sexual roles are learned.”

He said men are demeaned and what is held up as an ideal is a man who is feminized and emasculated, one who, in a European study, is held up to be “a sweeter man.”
...
Cordes said statistics around the world “confirm that today the self-understanding of manhood and especially fatherhood is in crisis.”
...
Some newspapers hailed this as ‘the end of fatherhood.’”

He said a survey of German universities recently showed that while there were 98 university chairs “for deepening questions on womanhood,” only one existed for men.'

Boys will be boys at the bookstore

anthony · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Arriving in stores this month are "The Boys' Book of Survival: How to Survive Anything, Anywhere" and "The Girls' Book of Glamour: A Guide to Being a Goddess."

This newfound embrace of "la difference," as the French say, can be traced to the astonishing international success of 2006's "The Dangerous Book for Boys" by British authors Conn and Hal Iggulden.

The book - which instructs boys in manly pursuits such as building treehouses, skipping stones and learning Latin - was catnip for conservative critics with ears for Christina Hoff Sommers' argument in "The War Against Boys: How Misguided Feminism Is Harming Our Young Men" that modern American educational theory is inordinately troubled by blossoming masculinity, with the practical consequence that boys are disadvantaged in classrooms.'

UK: Women’s last secret: money scares them

anthony · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Hilary Black ditched her boyfriend two years ago she didn’t exactly expect sympathy – she was, after all, breaking his heart – but she assumed her girlfriends would rally round, assuring her she’d done the right thing.

Instead her decision was met with gasps of surprise and barely disguised disapproval. The boyfriend concerned was rich, you see. Very rich. “One of my friends actually said, ‘Are you crazy? This guy could take care of you for life!’” says Black.

“These were thirtysomething women who would never publicly advocate marrying for money yet they implied that I was making a mistake. It was interesting: it seemed a sign that women have a more complicated relationship with money than they let
“The idea of self-reliance is out there but it hasn’t caught on in the quick, easy way you might have thought it would. When I started talking to my friends about this I discovered that there is a lot of confusion.
...
“Boys are told you can be a train driver or an astronaut but essentially you have to get out there and earn a living. Girls are now told they can be an astronaut too, but if they want to they can also stay home with the children. They don’t know what they want to do or what they’re meant to do: there’s a lot of uncertainty behind the confidence.”'

UK: Men are more than twice as likely as women to go bust

anthony · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are two and a half times more likely to file for bankruptcy than women, possibly because they are less efficient at running their finances, according to research by Tenon Recovery. More than 430 of the 600 bankruptcies handled by Tenon last year involved men. The firm said anecdotal evidence suggested women were less likely to fall into insolvency because they were more efficient at tasks such as keeping financial records and collecting payments.

"Women's strong organisational skills could go some way to explaining why they are better at managing their finances than men,' said Carl Jackson, head of Tenon Recovery.

More women are losing their jobs in this recession than in previous slumps. But research by NatWest and Everywoman has found that female business owners are more likely to take a structured approach to running a firm, with 55% following a business plan, compared with only 34% of men. They are also more willing to take advice. Both of these traits could help female businesses survive the crunch.'

Boston.com: "Can't buy me love"

anthony · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Some singles have taken themselves out of the running for love during this recession. Unlike couples and families, who may interact with each other more when they're housebound, the single-and-jobless are often isolated by cutting their entertainment budget. When there's no money to date, it means suffering through a drought that's both professional and personal.

According to job counselors, it's a problem that primarily affects heterosexual men. The US Labor Department has reported more men out of work, while the number of employed women continues to rise. Even though the stigma of unemployment has diminished during these bleak times, traditional gender roles remain: Men are supposed to pursue dates and offer to pay."

The answer is simple: Don't hire a woman

anthony · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"The Paycheck Fairness Act would address this reality [pay discrepancy] through a number of needed reforms," notes Hillary. "The Act would create a training program to help women strengthen their negotiation skills; enforce equal pay laws for federal contractors; and require the Department of Labor to work with employers to eliminate pay disparities by enhancing outreach and training efforts.

Interesting how it's automatically assumed any pay discrepancies are due to evil men discriminating against women.
...
I've already been told by at least three small businesses that they won't hire a woman because it's too risky. I agree. Look at a woman wrong and you're accused of sexual harassment. Open a door for her and you'll get hassled into enrolling in a "sensitivity" course. Complain when she needs yet another day off to take care of her sick kid, and you're accused of gender discrimination. It sure is a whole lot easier to hire a man!

You see, in Real America the solution is quite simple: Don't hire a woman and all your problems will be solved.'

News Flash: Arizona State Attorney General lets Women Use The Better Grill At Country Club

anthony · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Call this a hard earned victory for all women facing kitchen amenity discrimination. I wonder if Congress with pass the Equal Grill Act? Excerpt:

"State Attorney General Terry Goddard said Wednesday that his discrimination lawsuit against the club had been settled out of court. The settlement requires the club to allow women into its men's grill and men into its women's grill when both re- open next month after renovations.

The club issued a statement saying that the settlement doesn't mean it had agreed with the accusations and that it didn't accept liability in the dispute. But the club said it agreed to let both grills be open to all members and guests. Goddard said the men's grill has better amenities and is seen as a prime spot for business deals and networking.

The case was prompted by a complaint to the club's board by Logan and Barbara Van Sittert. The lawsuit says the couple, who declined to comment Wednesday, wrote to the board president asking that women be allowed in the men's grill."

Unemployment blues: Men tend to say it ain't so

anthony · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Seeking treatment for depression is still taboo for men, while increasing unemployment places more men at risk. Illinois' unemployment rate climbed to 7.3 percent as the national unemployment rate dropped to 6.7 percent in late last year.

And the unemployment rate for men has been higher than women in Illinois since 2005. The result is an increasing number of disenfranchised men in the Chicago area falling into depression.

...

Can unemployment be connected to depression in men?

Absolutely. Men in our culture have been socialized to view their jobs as very important and, often, their self-definition is all wrapped up in work. If they're out of a job, it's a major blow to their self-esteem. Often that results in depression. There's really no quick fix to the economic problems we face, and all of that affects human beings in a profound way."

Australia: Surrogates told to pay support

Matt · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE Australian Government is demanding a New Zealand surrogate mother pay child support for the baby she had for two gay Queensland men, amid accusations she abandoned it.

Her case has raised fears of financial clawbacks for other New Zealand surrogates, including an Auckland woman who is eight-months pregnant with a son to another gay Australian couple.

"She's told the couple they have to sort it out as there's no way she's paying," said the second surrogate, who declined to be named.

...

Australian funding agencies Centrelink and the Child Support Agency confirmed they were likely to seek maintenance payments from a birth mother in New Zealand if the Australian birth father claimed benefits as a sole parent caring for their baby.'

Terence Blacker: Gender wars and unspoken words

anthony · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to the age-old question of men and women, their relative strengths and weaknesses, a strange species of madness seems to have recently taken hold. Everywhere, not only in the media but also in academic and political life, the complexities of gender have been ironed out, reduced to a series of reassuring but stupid assumptions. The female principle is essentially generous and virtuous; masculinity is its opposite: selfish, untrustworthy.

...

The revered and apparently intelligent actress Meryl Streep has this week been speculating on why the film Mamma Mia! has become the highest-grossing release of all time in the UK. Me too: trapped on an aeroplane recently, I endured 30 minutes of the film's mindless feel-good guff before switching over to Hellboy II. It is popular, I concluded, for the same reason that Busby Berkeley films did well during the Depression: it offers fluffy, escapist optimism for hard times.

Not according to its star. "I knew it would do well because it was aimed at an audience that has been neglected in recent years in film offerings – women," said Meryl Streep. "They are the last group anybody ever cares about."

Woman Shoots Boyfriend Because He Wouldn't Let Her Sleep

anthony · 25 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Monroe woman, who said she was angry because her boyfriend wouldn't let her sleep, shot him with a small-caliber handgun, according to an arrest affidavit.

Charged with aggravated battery was Roshonda Anding, 21, of 3002 Burg Jones Lane. She remained in Ouachita Correctional Center on Saturday afternoon with no bond set.
...
"Anding was cooperative," the affidavit said, and "only stated that she shot (the victim) because he was bothering her and wouldn't let her sleep."'

Reader Comment:

"I am pretty sure this makes me evil, but this story made me laugh so hard. I mean, doubled over laughing. The whole idea of her shooting him to get some sleep. Hysterical! Oh man, I think my express ticket to hell just arrived."

Gender gap widens for colleges as women extend lead

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite increasing concern, the gap has widened steadily this decade. By 2007, according to the National Center for Education Statistics, a third of women ages 25 to 29 had bachelor's degrees, the highest proportion ever. For men, it was just over one-quarter, lower than it was in 2000.

Educators have not been able to agree on what causes this disparity. Guidance counselors who work with high school seniors have different theories, and many observe that boys sometimes take a lackadaisical approach to future plans.
...
The trend is playing out in the gender ratios at many colleges. To maintain a balance between the sexes, some schools have worked hard to attract young men.

Seton Hill University in Greensburg is about two-thirds female. Though the former women's college began admitting men in 2001 and added a football team in 2004 to attract male students, it has yet to reach a gender balance.'

39-year-old mother accused of having sex with teen boys

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HAMILTON — A 39-year-old woman is facing two charges for allegedly having sex with two teenage boys over the past two years.

Tracy Conley, who lists addresses on Trenton-Franklin Road in Madison Twp. and Weeping Willow Drive in St. Clair Twp. in court documents, was indicted last month on two counts of unlawful sexual conduct with a minor, a third-degree felony.

The charges allege that Conley engaged in a sex act with a boy between the ages of 13 and 16 on Dec. 31, 2007, and between May 15 and May 31, 2008. Assistant Butler County Prosecutor Greg Stephens said there are two victims.'

SOS for a new feminism: How Obama's being hailed as a new champion for women

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the first time in several decades, the F word is back on the agenda. No, I don't mean that we are all debating the merits of yet another misogynistic chef, but that feminism is taking centre stage.
...
It is all about the boys,' she told me. 'They come first. And the boys don't want to know you if you don't sleep with them. They were all raised on porn, they all read lads' mags, they think that is what we should be like. We dumb ourselves down for them.
...
I spoke to a 26-year-old male friend yesterday, and asked if he even knows where he stands. 'I find women competitive with each other, confrontational, liberated sexually, oh my goodness yes, but they also demand we pay for everything. We are not supposed to object to anything they do, how they dress, how much they drink. It's confusing.'

India: Court rules a divorced mother's custody of child can never be illegal

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'New Delhi - A divorce cannot take away a mother's right to be with her child and the custody cannot be called unlawful, a city court has held while quashing a man's petition alleging that his estranged wife had illegally detained his son.

Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate (ACMM) Rakesh K Sharma said that keeping the child is a mother's "natural right", and a court requires extraordinary reasons to disturb the guardianship. "The custody of a minor child by his mother, by any stretch of imagination, would not constitute any offence," the ACMM said in his order on Thursday.

The court also held that a mother could not be called an offender even if she forcibly detains the child. In the present case, the man had demanded that a search warrant be issued against his estranged wife.'

Health Group Calls for a Change in Circumcision Policy

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Matthew Hess, the group's president, argues that boys are being treated unfairly when it comes to circumcision.

"We need to stop discriminating against male infants," said Hess. "When girls are born, they are welcomed into the world peacefully. But for more than half of our nation's boys, life begins with painful and irreversible cosmetic surgery. While I support every man's right to undergo circumcision if he chooses to do so, no child should be forced to have this unnecessary surgery. Ten out of ten babies oppose circumcision - and for good reason."
...
Circumcision is the surgical removal of the foreskin, a protective zone of skin and tissue covering the glans of the penis. Thousands of erogenous nerve endings including the ridged band and some or all of the frenulum are destroyed after circumcision, leaving behind a diminished penis capable of sending fewer nerve impulses to the pleasure centers of the brain. After a circumcision is performed, the body tries to replace the protective function of the foreskin by forming keratin around the exposed glans and remaining inner foreskin, causing further interference with sexual sensation.'

Health plans cut circumcision

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Snip, snip! No, that’s not the sound of your baby boy’s foreskin getting nipped—it’s the sound of Medicaid cutting the benefits that cover circumcision.

Thousands of male infants aren’t being circumcised this year because their states don’t cover the procedure. There are currently sixteen states that don’t cover circumcisions through Medicaid, which costs between $250 and $300 on average.

...

Get it together, Medicaid. Forcing the next generation of men into a lifetime of smooth, unaltered genitals is no way to govern a nation. Our forefathers fought hard so that American men would have the sculpted penile curves of a Ferrari, and denying them that right is simply unconstitutional.*

*Yes, I'm being sarcastic. The style of one's genitalia is a personal choice and the debate on whether circumcision is beneficial or unnecessary continues. Do you believe circumcision is an outdated practice? Aesthetically pleasing? Mutilation? Share your opinion (nicely)!'

Sacramento mother who killed son gets maximum sentence

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Sacramento mother convicted earlier this year of killing her 3-year-old son wanted a do-over, but a judge ruled Friday that once was enough.

No new trial for Carline Balbuena.

The judge's decision brought to a close – for now, anyway – an ordeal that began in November 2005 with the beating death of Keith Carl "K.C." Balbuena, a little boy with a winning smile and an agonizing, short life. The case graphically illustrated the vulnerability of a child in an abusive home, where both adults – a lovesick mother and violent boyfriend/roommate – had lied about his numerous injuries.

The murder also revealed the inability of Sacramento's Child Protective Services to decipher the web of lies and appropriately intervene, the subject of a Bee investigation.
...
In opposing a new trial, Deputy District Attorney Robin Shakely said Foster's decision not to pursue a domestic violence assessment was "entirely reasonable and the obvious choice of a highly competent, vigorous advocate." Shakely described Balbuena as a "conniving, controlling, manipulative mother who consistently put her own desires above her children's safety and needs."'

RADAR ALERT: Spread the Word: Shelters Don’t Help the Real Victims of Violence

Matt · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A report issued today by RADAR Services, "Are Abuse Shelters Helping the True Victims of Domestic Violence?" (.pdf file), reveals some disturbing facts about the country's 1,200 abuse shelters.

Based on research studies, reviews of shelter websites, and interviews with former shelter residents and staff, the report reveals that only one in 10 persons are in shelters because of they are victims of battering. Instead, shelters are filled with homeless persons and substance abusers. This makes it hard for true victims of domestic violence to get the help they need.

The report also identifies problems, many widespread, with lax admission policies, unqualified staff, coercive tactics, and weak accountability measures. At Safespace in Florida, a 26-year-old woman was fatally stabbed by another shelter resident. At the Brewster shelter in Arizona, a 12-year-old boy was sexually assaulted by a shelter resident. At Bethany House in Falls Church, Virginia, women are "coached by the staff to go to court and get a protective order against their husbands" even though abuse never occurred.

It addition, while discrimination against male victims of domestic violence is illegal, it is not only commonplace in the domestic violence shelters, it seems to be the norm. Emblematic of this, Judy King Smith, director of the Rape and Domestic Violence Information Center in Morgantown, West Virginia, recently admitted under oath, "We do not shelter men in the shelter even if it’s empty."

Let's raise awareness about the underreported yet serious problems lurking in our nation's domestic violence shelters. Please distribute this alert and the RADAR Services report far and wide so the truth gets out.

Thanks.

++
Date of RADAR Release: January 26, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

Domestic Violence Help for Men

Matt · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men's rights advocates have come a long way in getting husband abuse recognized as a form of domestic abuse. There is help and resources for men to recover from abuse.

An American sociologist, Suzanne Steinmetz, introduced the term battered husband thirty-two years ago. Battered men may have officially become recognized as victims in abusive relationships in the academic world, however, it took over twenty years before it slowly was accepted in other professional fields.
...
Debating the prevalence or severity of husband abuse is irrelevant. Domestic violence should not be a gender issue: it is a human issue.'

Australia: Big increase in women committing crimes - but of course it's the men's fault

GaryB · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This story on the Sydney Morning Herald explains that there has been a huge increase in women committing crimes lately - but then goes on to explain how basically - surprise surprise - it's all our fault, chaps... Quote:

'THE number of women found guilty of crimes has jumped dramatically, partly as a result of alcohol-fuelled young "ladettes" trying to emulate young males. The number of young women offenders has risen 17 per cent in the past four years, compared to just 4.5 per cent for men.
...
Eva Cox, head of the Women's Electoral Lobby, said the rise in female crime rates was "one of the consequences of equality" which happened as women had greater opportunities to offend than in the past. They were trying to keep up with the general cultural image in which being a yobbo male was seen as desirable.
...

"The hard-drinking, hard-driving larrikin lout is still being seen as the model of how to impress society," she said. "For women looking for equal status, sometimes by being equal to inappropriate male culture is the only way to go."
...
But, she said, it was not something to be alarmed about because crime rates for women were still low - about 19 per cent of those found guilty of crimes are women.'

None of this is a surprise, of course it's always a mans fault at the end of the day - but what is frustrating is the (yet again) focus of the media on excusing their behaviour and going along with the feminist ride. Of the four 'specialists' interviewed for this piece, one says it's just women trying to be men (therefore it's OUR FAULT), another says the courts are becoming more willing to prosecute women (therefore it's the COURTS' FAULT) and yet another says it's part of our punitive culture that punishes the wrong rather than rewarding the right (therefore it's SOCIETY'S FAULT) - and notice how that one is a child welfare specialist, hinting that this is a child's issue, not just a women's issue. Nobody gets a chance to say it's just women going wild.

Prioritize education in your son's life

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The statistics involving boys and education look bleak. More boys flunk or drop out of school than girls, and young males make up more than two-thirds of the students in special education. Across the board, in elementary, high school, and higher education, girls outperform boys in regard to homework and grades, as reported by the Public Broadcasting Service Web site, pbsparents.org.

So who is to blame for, what looks like, boy's educational apathy? Michael Thompson, coauthor of the book Raising Cain: Protecting the Emotional Life of Boys, believes that boys have too much energy for traditional schools. "More boys have problems with attention and focus than girls...And they are not given enough opportunities [in school] to move around."

Thompson's claim may support why boys are three times as likely to be diagnosed with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD). Nevertheless, boys who are not turned off by the lack of movement and activity inside the classroom are often persuaded by societal ills outside the classroom, such as gangs and drugs. So how do we help make school and learning fun for our sons? And how do we teach boys to care about their education despite the obstacles they face in traditional schools and society? Below are just a few ways you can get your sons on the right track.'

UK: Men 'twice as likely as women to become alcoholics'

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A study claims men have a 20 per cent risk developing a drink problem in their lifetimes, and 10 per cent chance of becoming hooked.

The seeds of abuse and dependence on alcohol often begins in the late to mid 20s, according to researchers from the University of California, San Diego.

However the lifetime risk for women abusing alcohol was only between 8 and 10 per cent, they estimated.

Earlier this week official figures showed that millions of Britons are putting their health at risk by spending too many evenings at home with a bottle of wine.

Official guidelines warn that men should drink no more than three to four units a day and women no more than two to three.'

Philippines: "Hurray for sweeter men!"

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's been little more than 30 years since the emergence of the modern international women's movement, and already, at least in the view of a Vatican official, there has been an "erosion of manhood" and a resulting "crisis in fatherhood." This last, said Cardinal Paul Josef Cordes, has given rise to millions of children around the world growing up without a father, with fatherless boys doomed to end up in prison, drop out or be expelled from school, become runaways or even commit suicide.
...
Given how women have been abused, demeaned, discriminated against and marginalized through the centuries, it's a wonder we're still able to hold up our heads. But no matter how long we've been denigrated as the "weaker sex" and confined within our "natural" and "special" roles as sex objects and bearers of children, I haven't heard anyone, much less a representative of the Holy See, spend any time bemoaning the erosion of womanhood or a crisis in motherhood. That's because there hasn't been any such crisis, because women have been able to carry on our roles in society even as we seek to expand our opportunities and change perceptions of who or what we should be.'

Balance sought in elementary schools staffed almost completely by women

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Ventura County and nationwide, Gaona is hardly typical. The number of male teachers in the county dropped below 25 percent in the last few years, the lowest in a decade, state records show. In many elementary schools, women outnumber men by an even greater margin.

A small Santa Paula district has no men on its teaching staff. In Camarillo's Pleasant Valley School District, men made up only 12 percent of teachers last year, and less than 5 percent in elementary schools.

Gender doesn't have anything to do with teaching quality, said Michael McCambridge, liberal studies director at California Lutheran University in Thousand Oaks, but "it's important to have role models who are both women and men."
...
Many school districts will likely discuss layoffs more than teacher recruitment this year, because of looming state budget cuts. And that might continue the trend of fewer men entering elementary education.'

Art Fights Violence Against Women

anthony · 26 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. What do you guys think of the painting? Excerpt:

'DADE CITY - When it comes to educating people about domestic violence and sexual assault, Sunrise of Pasco County can get pretty creative.

The nonprofit organization, which helps victims deal with abuse, is organizing performances of "The Vagina Monologues" next month and is inviting local artists to submit artwork that can be displayed at the shows.
...
Sunrise is also presenting a one-man show Friday that deals with sexual assault and dating violence. Comic Ben Atherton-Zeman will perform "Voices of Men" at 7 p.m. Friday at the Pasco Middle School Auditorium, 13925 14th St.

In his performance, Atherton-Zeman shows men how they can become part of the solution in ending violence against women.'

Dead athletes' brains show damage from concussions

Matt · 27 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. What price, glory? Suppose if a "woman's sport" were found to inflict this kind of damage on the brain there wouldn't be a law against it the next day? Excerpt:

'But today, using tissue from retired NFL athletes culled posthumously, the Center for the Study of Traumatic Encephalopathy (CSTE) is shedding light on what concussions look like in the brain. The findings are stunning. Far from innocuous, invisible injuries, concussions confer tremendous brain damage. That damage has a name: chronic traumatic encephalopathy (CTE).

...

CSTE studies reveal brown tangles flecked throughout the brain tissue of former NFL players who died young -- some as early as their 30s or 40s.

McKee, who also studies Alzheimer's disease, says the tangles closely resemble what might be found in the brain of an 80-year-old with dementia.

...

The NFL is planning its own independent medical study of retired NFL players on the long-term effects of concussion.

"Really my main reason even for talking about this is to help the guys who are already retired," said Johnson. "[They] are getting divorced, going bankrupt, can't work, are depressed, and don't know what's wrong with them. [It is] to give them a name for it so they can go get help."'

Report: Some ADHD drugs can cause kids to have severe hallucinations

anthony · 27 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HOUSTON—U.S. Food and Drug Administration researchers have found that drugs for attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, or ADHD, can cause children to have severe hallucinations, Reuters reports.

The study of the drugs was conducted by drug makers. They found cases of psychosis and mania in some young patients, even those with no obvious risk factors.

Millions of children use ADHD drugs. In the Journal Pediatrics, one doctor wrote, “The numbers of cases of psychosis or mania in pediatric clinical trials were small. However, we noted a complete absence of such events with placebo treatments.”'

Men's Studies Press: The Men’s Directory available

anthony · 27 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The Men's Directory (TMD) is a complimentary research tool summarizing the men's studies field from research on masculinity to men's health and men's rights.

Its focus is on research and resources, including information on themes (boys/education; aging; sexuality; fathering; health), initiatives (organizations, events), tools (bibliographies, encyclopedias, databases, content analyses, research measures), output genres (book series, textbooks, journals, readers) and mediators (publishers). TMD includes a list of abbreviations and an index.'

Devastated By Divorce Court

badgerb · 27 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Last week I posted a story from Toronto about a win for the good guys. Another article from Toronto shows what is giveth by the courts can be taken away by the gender panderers. Article here. Excerpt:

'At 51, Tippett is broken, bankrupt and bunking in the guest room of his parents' Burlington home after a divorce settlement that's left him $75,000 in debt and racking up $1,000 more each month.

Today, he'll appear in court at a default hearing to try to explain why he can't afford to pay his ex-wife (the couple had no children) $3,300 a month, $16,000 in retroactive alimony and $42,000 of her court costs out of a complex case he himself still doesn't understand.
...
While Cormier is now getting just over $2,000 a month of his disability pay, technically Tippett is on the hook for $3,300, so each month his arrears are climbing.

"I've been given a life sentence and she's been given a cash for life ticket," says Tippett. "I actually asked my lawyer at one point, `Isn't there a human rights issue here? Don't I have the human right to have a life after divorce?'"'

Once again I am heartened to see that the comments from a liberal news site support the male on this issue. Though the writer has written a three part series on this issue. Somehow I doubt it will be very objective. Stay tuned.

Phyllis Schlafly: Feminists Expect to Cash in With Barack Obama

anthony · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The groups that elected Barack Obama are poised to cash in on their investment, and the feminists are muscling to be first in line. The National Organization for Women (NOW), bragging that "we all worked hard to help elect" Obama, has helpfully spelled out the "feminist action agenda":

-- Direct Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to compare pay scales in job categories held mostly by women or mostly by men, and then enforce wage control to equalize wages according to the feminists' subjective definition of what they call comparable worth.
...
-- Stop federal funding of marriage promotion and fatherhood programs. Repeal all the restrictions put into place by welfare reform legislation that encourage welfare recipients to seek employment or training for a job.
...
-- Ratify the long-dead Equal Rights Amendment with no time limitation on the process. Ratify the United Nations Treaty on Women (CEDAW), which would make our laws, customs and textbooks subject to supervision and control by a U.N. committee of feminists designated as "experts."
...
-- Enact Hate Crimes legislation to cover acts of violence based on the victim's real or perceived gender, sexual orientation or gender identity. Fully fund, expand and aggressively enforce the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), and enact the International VAWA (IVAWA).'

CNN: 'Ladies Nag Obama about Lack of Women's Jobs'

anthony · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Liberal feminists claim that President Obama's administration will not have enough female representation and that the job creation part of his stimulus plan will favor men.
...
Newsroom host Kyra Phillips introduced Christine Romans' estrogen-dominated segment which included feminists complaining about Obama. Romans mentioned that six cabinet positions out of 21 have gone to women, yet liberal feminist groups like National Organization for Women (NOW) and The New Agenda were "disappointed."
...
The New Agenda promotes liberal policies including what amounts to an affirmative action policy for women. Its Web site states that the group is "working towards parity [for women] in the government and in the workplace." The New Agenda also aims to "increase the number of women in high-level appointments" because there is a "grave imbalance," citing the "reduction in female Supreme Court justices."
...
But according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the unemployment rate for adult women stands at 5.9 percent much lower than the 7.2 percent rate for adult men as of December 2008.'

Feminists at the Inauguration Praising Themselves for Being Women

anthony · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Emily's List, the feminist organization whose sole purpose is to get pro-abortion women elected to Congress, hosted a segment of the inauguration today featuring speeches by its stars. The theme was praising women for being women. (the listener is thinking, and???)

...

The gist of Pelosi's speech was to celebrate the fact that women have overcome barriers to public office. It sounded silly considering the first woman was elected to Congress in 1916, and 249 women have been elected to Congress. Women made advancements a long time ago yet feminists still have no theme but celebrating this. Contrast this with a Republican Women's meeting, which would never go on ad nauseum about how wonderful it is that women are in office. They're not living in the past and obsessed with their gender.

...

Listening to their underachieving biographies, it became apparent why feminists are so angry. Too many of them got where they're at based on some kind of affirmative action - the left promoted and paid for these women to rise in the ranks, solely on the basis of their being women. Contrast this with being a woman in the GOP - female Republican leaders aren't angry because they know they got where they are based on merit.'

Australia: Hulls' club-footed sop to remaining feminists

anthony · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rob Hulls, out to prove he really is a sensitive new age guy, is set to send the simpering sycophants of the politically-correct movement into spiritual orgasms as he signals his intent to remove private clubs from the list of those exempted under Victorian anti-discrimination laws.

This is a topic 99 per cent of people couldn't give a stuff about apart from, it would seem, Rob Hulls and the last remaining feminists who have already won or are in the process of winning everything that was writ on stone tablets in the 1960s.
...
They are today benign and some would say irrelevant to government or anything else for that matter. But for some reason, they continually attract the ire of the intellectual feminist left. One can only assume that it's a bit like climbing Everest and you do it quite simply because it's there.

There are, of course, still many clubs of various types that are women-only, such as the Alexandra and Lyceum _ which are female versions of the Melbourne Club _the Country Women's Association and the oft-talked about Fernwood gym chain. No man I have ever talked to has ever suggested he would like to join any of these female-only organisations. In fact, most would prefer to have hot knitting needles poked in their eyes.'

Fair Pay Act roils workplaces

anthony · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the first bills that President Barack Obama signs this week, the Fair Pay Act, could result in more women suing over being paid less than men. This new activity in the Capitol has stirred conversations in boardrooms, law offices, factory floors -- even newsrooms. Why aren't women earning as much as men and should salaries be openly discussed?

Richard Tuschman, a South Florida labor lawyer, says until women make different choices, their incomes won't rise, no matter how many bills are signed into law. By choices, he's talking about the careers they pursue, the hours they work, the jobs within their industries they hold and the parenting decisions they make.
...
The numbers most often used are those among full-time workers -- women make only 77 cents for every dollar paid to men. But there are many, like Tuschman, who feel those numbers are bogus because of all the trends that factor into the pay gap. Women with college degrees tend to go into fields like education, psychology and the humanities, which typically pay less than sectors preferred by men such as engineering, math and business.'

UK: Bringing men into nurseries

anthony · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CONTACT with male role models is a vital part of growing up. Outside their own family, the best places for young children to meet such role models are nurseries and schools.

But while a new survey has found that 55 per cent of parents, and 66 per cent of single parents, want a male childcare worker for their nursery-aged child, the reality is that only 2 per cent of childcare workers are men.
...
Many of those questioned said they believed boys behaved better for a male teacher, adding it was important for boys to have a role model to look up to.
...
The survey, which was commissioned as part of a campaign to recruit more male primary teachers, also found that 35 per cent of men felt having a male primary teacher challenged them to work harder at school, and 22 per cent believed male primary teachers helped build their confidence.'

Israel: Education Ministry takes on sexist classics

anthony · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'As part of its efforts to promote gender equality awareness among Israel's students, the Education Ministry has decided to introduce a new study program that encourages children to revise the lyrics of classic Hebrew songs that contain chauvinistic notions.
...
"But when you read the words carefully you find out they contain hidden messages that work just like existing marketing methods. We are aware of the difficulty to reread the songs, but the situation cannot remain as it is. Well-liked songs contain wrong, sexist conceptions," she added.
...
The students will not only be exposed to the chauvinistic stereotypes in the songs, but will also be asked to revise them and come up with new, more egalitarian lyrics.

As part of the program they will also read songs that express feminine equality and independence.'

SJU hosts sixth annual Conference on the College Male

anthony · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The sixth annual Conference on the College Male, “Best Practices for Involving College Men,” is Feb. 13-14 at Saint John’s University, Collegeville.

In addition to four speakers, 14 universities and colleges will present pilot programs to increase college men’s participation in volunteering and vocational discernment activities. The program, funded by a grant from the Indianapolis-based Lilly Endowment Inc., will identify best practices and a theoretical model for what works with college men, and why.

The $599,000 grant, awarded to SJU in November 2007, will identify ways to increase men’s involvement in volunteering, leadership training and vocational decision-making activities. The two-year grant runs through Dec. 31, 2009, and is designed to address chronic underrepresentation of college men in these types of activities. For example, only one-third of students who volunteer are men.'

"Does it get any clearer than this?"

Matt · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two incidents. Same state. Same city. Same crimes. Perpetrators aged the same. Victims aged the same. No prior serious offenses for either perp.

Pretty similar cases, right?

In each, a 17-year-old had sex multiple times with a 14-year-old. But in one case the perpetrator faces felony charges and up to 25 years in prison, while the other charge is a misdemeanor whose maximum sentence is 9 months.'

Florida abuse shelter scandal

Matt · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"It was really terrible what I went through." These were the first words that Yvonne Scott blurted out, even though the incident happened more than five years ago.

One morning a social worker and policeman showed up on the woman's doorstep. "Either you come with us to the abuse shelter or we take away your children," was their grim-faced ultimatum. Scott had been previously involved in an abusive relationship, but there was no current threat to Ms. Scott or any of her three children.

One might expect such an encounter to occur in the former Soviet Union or maybe a Latin America banana republic. But in the sunshine-addled state of Florida?'

Canada: "Nunavut minister demoted over derogatory remark"

Matt · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'IQALUIT, Nunavut - Nunavut's premier has stripped the territory's justice minister of his duties over a remark that suggests women are partly to blame when they are assaulted during domestic disputes.

Eva Aariak said she has taken over the department from Louis Tapardjuk, who made the comment last week in an email.

"Often, in cases of domestic disputes, both parties share the blame but, according to the Criminal Code, the person who gets physical is charged, even though the other party initiated the conflict," Tapardjuk wrote.
...
Tapardjuk also suggested that the slow pace of the criminal justice system is responsible for many young people committing suicide when they face charges. He also said the involvement of social services and police in marital problems contributes to a growing number of divorces.

Tapardjuk has since retracted his statement and asked for forgiveness.

"I have spoken with Minister Tapardjuk and he has retracted his comments," Aariak said in a release. "I believe he has learned from his mistake and can remain a productive member of cabinet. However, I will be assuming the portfolio of Justice immediately."'

American Bar Association Data Falsification Debugged

Matt · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Website of the American Bar Association (ABA) sets out to correct ten purported myths about domestic or intimate partner violence (IPV). The critique of these myths appears to be empirically based. However, a close reading of the studies used to debunk these “myths” shows that they are either: 1) government publications with no empirical data, or 2) empirical studies that do not refute the targeted myth. The problems with the false conclusions on the website are varied, but three main ones are: 1) confusion of allegations of abuse with real incidence of abuse; 2) interpretations of unsubstantiated claims of child abuse that are based on varied sources for corroboration that use vague decision criteria in studies not designed to assess malingered claims; and 3) over simplification of the complex causality of psychological phenomena, such as Parental Alienation Syndrome.'

Draft mandate for fed jobs ruled unconstitutional

kellyrrice · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BOSTON – Henry Tucker had worked for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. for 17 years when he was told he was going to lose his job — because he hadn't registered for the military draft when he was 18.

Tucker was offered another job as a budget analyst at the National Institutes of Health, but that was withdrawn when the agency learned he never registered.

...

U.S. District Judge Douglas Woodlock ruled Monday that a separate law that bans employment at federal executive agencies for men who fail to register is an unconstitutional "bill of attainder," an obscure Constitutional provision that prohibits the legislative branch from punishing people without a judicial trial.

Woodlock rejected the argument that the Military Selective Service Act, because it applies only to men, is discriminatory and violates the Constitution's equal protection guarantees.

A spokeswoman for U.S. Attorney Michael Sullivan said the U.S. Department of Justice is reviewing the ruling and had no immediate comment.'

Settling for Second Best

kellyrrice · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'On my way to volunteering for PTA duty at my 13-year-old daughter's middle school, I saw a picture of her staring at me from the main school bulletin board, and it stopped me in my tracks. Marina is the school's student-body president, and she was featured along with the other council members. In the picture, she had a confident smile and that "I can do anything" look I've seen on her face so many times before. Curious, I read the profile below her photo and smiled at her answers. "Favorite food: sushi. Favorite sport: soccer." Then, "Role model: my dad." I did a double take and peered closer. Surely it said "my mom," too? Nope. Just two lonely words: "my dad."
...
Yes, my husband, Mike, is a generous and loving father. But I'm the Room Mom and the Team Mom! I chaired a school fundraiser that took months of preparation! I plan all the birthday parties! I scour cookbooks for nutritious dinner recipes! And who's there for the kids every day when they come home from school? Me!
...
I may have swallowed my pride—or pretended to—but part of me will always wonder why this beautiful young woman didn't choose her mother as her model for womanhood. But I think I'm finally getting over it. Because I have gotten to thinking more about role models lately I'm proud to say I have two in my life: my husband, because he is pretty amazing, and my daughter, because she's got a marvelous independent streak that keeps even her mother guessing.'

"It’s the Economy, Girlfriend"

badgerb · 28 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

See website here. Excerpt:

Are you or someone you love dating a banker? If so, we are here to support you through these difficult times. Dating A Banker Anonymous (DABA) is a safe place where women can come together – free from the scrutiny of feminists– and share their tearful tales of how the mortgage meltdown has affected their relationships."

I thought this had to be a spoof website. Sadly, it is not. Article here.

India: Wedding off, groom and dad in custody

webdigr · 29 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

If a girl runs away with her paramour from the wedding, the world would hail her courage. But if a boy cancels wedding, he'll be arrested. This is the Law in India... read on...

"The marriage hall was fixed, the wedding cards were distributed, jewels and clothes purchased. But like a bolt from the blue, the groom's father cancelled the wedding fixed for Feb 1 and 2. The enraged father of the bride has complained to the police, and the groom and his father are in police custody.
...
The engagement ceremony had been conducted a few months ago and both families had even distributed the wedding cards. But Raja Gopal cancelled the nuptials, citing what the complainant called a trivial issue.
...
In his complaint to the Indiranagar police, Munikrishna said Raja Gopal and his son had demanded more dowry, including a site. But Raja Gopal and his son have denied the allegation, the police said.

The police have registered a case of cheating and have taken both Raja Gopal and Keshav into custody."

'Feminists' helping mum hide Aussie sons

Mr VanHuizen · 29 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A MELBOURNE father of two young boys believed to have been abducted by their mother in Sweden claims a taxpayer-funded feminist group called Kobra is involved.

Swedish authorities are investigating members of Kobra amid allegations the group is using a vast network of "safe houses" and covert techniques to help the mother and children evade police.

George Pesor last saw his sons Frank, 11, and Andre, 9, in September 2008 after the Family Court in Australia ordered they be allowed to travel to Sweden to visit their estranged mother Ann-Louise Valette.

The boys were supposed to return to Melbourne on October 11 but they disappeared along with Ms Valette, who has a warrant out for her arrest after being charged with their kidnapping.

Mr Pesor said he now believes his sons are living with their mother in Sweden in one of 30 secret hiding places he alleges are operated by Kobra.'

Army to report record number of suicides

anthony · 29 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (CNN) -- The U.S. Army will report Thursday the highest level of suicides among its soldiers since it began tracking the rate 28 years ago, CNN has learned.

Statistics obtained by CNN show that the Army will report 128 confirmed suicides last year and an additional 15 suspected suicides in cases under investigation among active-duty soldiers and activated National Guard and reserves.

...

The Army is expected to announce a new effort to study the problem and determine why its suicide-prevention programs appear not to be working, and the extent to which post-combat stress may be a contributing factor. Many of the suicides occur after troops return home.

The Army has long cited personal stress -- including financial, relationship and substance-abuse problems -- as the major reason for suicides, but it is also studying the extent to which deployments to a war zone may play a role.'

"Remember the ladies": More 'affirmative action' needed for women

el cid · 29 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jared Polis, a Colorado congressman, argues that the current stimulus package will favor men because many of the jobs created will be in construction. He proposes requiring construction companies to increase the number of women working for them--in short, another affirmative action program for women. Excerpt:

'The economic recovery package before Congress this week is largely devoted to infrastructure investment--transportation and school projects, energy efficiency improvements, and green economy investments such as smart grid expansions -- to jump-start our economy and create hundreds of thousands of jobs.

Unfortunately, while President Obama is to be applauded for proposing such a robust investment, the proposed infrastructure spending overwhelmingly benefits men and won't be of much help to unemployed women. Without efforts to increase workforce diversity, this could lead to a massive shift of hundreds of billions of dollars of wealth from women to men.
...
Congressman Jared Polis is a former Chairman of the Colorado State Board of Education and was elected in 2008 to represent Colorado's second congressional district, where he serves on the House Education and Labor, Rules, and Democratic Steering Committees.'

Man frozen in block of ice ignored for over a month

Matt · 29 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. If these had been heels and a dress instead of men's shoes and jeans coming out of the ice, do you suppose everyone who knew about it would have been quite so indifferent? I doubt it. Excerpt:

'DETROIT -- This city has not always been a gentle place, but a series of events over the past few, frigid days causes one to wonder how cold the collective heart has grown.

It starts with a phone call made by a man who said his friend found a dead body in the elevator shaft of an abandoned building on the city's west side.

"He's encased in ice, except his legs, which are sticking out like Popsicle sticks," the caller phoned to tell this reporter.
...
Nearly 24 hours went by. The elevator shaft was still a gaping wound. There was no crime scene tape. The homeless continued to burn their fires. City schoolchildren still do not have the necessary books to learn. The train station continues to crumble. Too many homicides still go unsolved.

After another two calls to 911 on Wednesday afternoon (one of which was disconnected), the Detroit Fire Department called and agreed to meet nearby.

Capt. Emma McDonald was on the scene.

"Every time I think I've seen it all, I see this," she said.

And with that they went about the work of recovering a person who might otherwise be waiting for the warm winds of spring.'

I notice that the word 'person' is used to describe the dead man, not 'man'. I can't help but think that this was a stylistic decision on the part of the author who knows, consciously or not, that the article would get little attention if the word 'man' were used to describe the victim. So 'person', the gender-neutral term, gets used. Maybe then, the story will get some attention.

Divorced father seeks equal protection

anthony · 30 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A case is developing in a Tennessee divorce dispute that one attorney believes could impact custody decisions nationwide because it calls down the authority of the 14th Amendment's equal protection clause to help fathers who are good parents and want to remain involved in their children's lives.

The attorney, Stanley Charles Thorne, told WND the issue in the case at hand will be significant, since there are 3,000 divorce or custody cases in courts across the U.S. daily.

And according to the Children'sJustice.org website, those cases leave nearly 38 percent of the fathers with no access or visitation rights to their children. In addition, four in 10 mothers report they interfered with the father's visitation to punish him at least once, half the mothers see "no value" in the father's continued contact with his children and 70 percent of the fathers wanted more time with their kids.
...
"If we look at what's happening to our society we can trace the social pathologies just as increased rates of incarceration, early sexual activity for girls, truancy issues related to the family breaking down and the social fabric of our society is breaking down in terms of the family breaking down, we are being weaken as a nation and we need to change that," McCormick added.

He estimates 17 million fathers nationwide do not have fair access to their children, and about 3 million mothers have the same problem.'

Woman Accused Of Raping Male Friend

mens_issues · 30 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A bizarre story. Notice that the media actually used the word "rape.". Excerpt:

'LONGMONT, Colo. — A 53-year-old Longmont woman was arrested Wednesday on suspicion that she drugged a male friend during a backyard barbecue and then raped him, police said.

Janice Lynette McCarl was booked into the Boulder County Jail at 7:40 p.m. Wednesday on suspicion of sexual assault, a class-three felony.

Longmont police Cmdr. Tim Lewis said reports of female-on-male rape are very rare; one victims' advocate said this was only the second local instance she could remember happening within the past decade.

Lewis said McCarl is accused of having inappropriate sexual contact with a 50-year-old male friend.

"She allegedly took unwanted advantage of this friend in a manner he did not want or approve of," Lewis said.

The man told detectives the incident happened on Nov. 9 at his Longmont house and involved "unwanted penetration."'

Canada: Courts can rescue kids from an alienating parent

Matt · 30 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judges in Canada are now omniscient parents, willing to practice tough love, even though the plan they rely on to help the children has no longitudinal studies to prove that it works.

In cases of parental alienation, judges are prepared to step in and decide what is right for the children, against their wishes and those of the custodial parent, with whom they may have lived for many years.

That was the upshot of the case reported last week in which an Ontario judge stripped a mother, a 42-year-old chiropodist known in court documents as K.D., of the custody of her three girls, aged 9, 11 and 14.'

California Men's Centers report: "Law Enforcement and Intimate Partner Violence Study"

anthony · 30 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Report here (.pdf file). Excerpt:

'Most criminal justice data documents that in serious incidents females do suffer from more injurious and fatal violence than males. However, as the POPIPV documents most IPV incidents are minor or there is no empirical evidence to demonstrate who initiated the assaultive behavior. Contemporary unprecedented IPV training curriculums establish a bias found nowhere else in the criminal justice system. IPV trainers simply refer to females as victims and males as offenders.

Some states have provided “primary or dominant aggressor” laws and IPV training that are based on what the POPIPV may refer to as “gender clues.” The intent of the “gender clues” is to suggest to officers which gender is the offender. These primary or dominant aggressor laws or training implies that when there is little physical evidence or it is difficult to determine who is guilty, the officer’s should make an arrest based on the difference in size and strength of the partners or which partner of the two appears most fearful.'

Another wife murders her husband and gets probabtion sjones2 · 30 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Millington woman who shot and killed her husband with a .22-caliber rifle while he made doughnut circles in his own yard in his pickup truck was sentenced to three years of probation.

As part of a negotiated sentence, Linda Abbott, 40, agreed not to ask Criminal Court Judge John Colton Jr. for diversion, which could have erased the voluntary manslaughter conviction returned by a jury in November. In return, she will do no jail time if she complies with probation requirements.'

Mother guilty in strangling death of 12-year-old daughter

Matt · 30 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BRIDGEWATER, N.S. -- "Mommy, don't," were the last words Karissa Boudreau spoke as her mother strangled her to death with a piece of twine in the woods outside of Hebbville, N.S.

Her words were read in court Friday morning from an agreed upon statement of facts as Penny Boudreau, 34, pleaded guilty to the second-degree murder of her 12-year-old daughter.

...

She drove her daughter to a Sobey's parking lot and left her in the car while she went in. While inside, she phoned her boyfriend to say Karissa was missing. Boudreau then drove to nearby Hebbville, where she chased her daughter out of the red Dodge Neon, forced her to the ground, and choked her with a piece of twine.

Court heard she could feel her daughter struggling beneath her.

With her daughter's body slumped over in the front seat of her car, Boudreau drove to a Tim Horton's and threw out the twine in a coffee cup. She then drove to the LaHave River and disposed of Karissa's body, court heard.'

Brainwashing the kids to spite the ex

Matt · 30 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In what has been called a "stunning and unusual family law decision" released Jan. 16, a Toronto father was awarded sole custody of his three daughters, aged nine to 14. The "persistent and overwhelming" campaign by the mother over the course of more than a decade was recognized as emotional abuse by Ontario Superior Court Justice Faye McWatt, and the children have been sent to a California therapeutic recovery centre for treatment.

The couple, known as A. L. and K. D., have had a volatile relationship since they met 15 years ago. In spite of K. D. falsely alleging that A. L. sexually abused their first child, the couple had two more children between bouts of disaffection. K. D. -- herself dominated by a vindictive mother who had beaten her in childhood-- repeatedly called police after provoking physical confrontations with A. L., and frequently bad-mouthed him in front of the children.'

...

In fact, I don't share Mr. Niman's optimism that this represents a sea change in the fortunes of the legions of alienated partners desperately seeking redress for the baseless loss of their children's affection.

My files bulge with parental alienation stories in which this well-documented form of child abuse is ignored by judges. In this case, even just from media accounts, I note the following disturbing facts that suggest this judgment is an exception, rather than the harbinger of a rule: ...'

UK: Prenatal Paternity Tests Blamed For Abortion

anthony · 31 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The illegal use of DNA testing to determine the sex of fetuses in the developing world is widely known, but now, concern is growing in the United Kingdom that the availability of prenatal paternity tests is encouraging women to terminate fetuses that are the result of extramarital affairs.

According to Dan Leigh, the marketing director with DNA Solutions, a global DNA test firm with offices in 40 countries, the number of women opting for the prenatal paternity test shot up from 20 in 2002 to 500 last year.

"The testing technology has improved vastly," Leigh told ABC News. "It's become much more accessible."

"It's fairly common to see women take this test after their husbands have found out about an affair and want to know if they have fathered the child their wife is carrying," Leigh said.'

India: Whistling part of college life, not sexual harassment, says SC

anthony · 31 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Supreme Court on Thursday said it would consider framing a policy on sexual harassment at higher educational institutions.

A bench headed by Chief Justice KG Balakrishnan directed the petitioner Medha Kotwal, social activist from Maharashtra, to submit suggestions regarding the policy.

The bench asked senior advocate Colin Gonsalves appearing for the petitioner to specify how sexual harassment should be defined. “Whistling cannot be categorised as sexual harassment,” said the CJI, adding: “This is part of college life.” He also declined to entertain the petitioner’s plea to have a police probe in cases involving sexual harassment.'

US Men Dying For Rigged Elections?

Luek · 31 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Iraq is holding national elections that guarantee women seats. Excerpt:

"Regardless of the votes their candidates receive, parties are required to give every third seat to a female candidate on their list, according to a report this week from the International Crisis Group."

In other words, American men fighting in Iraq are being maimed and killed so a misandric matriarchal form of government can be forced upon the nation of Iraq.

Well, isn't that just really stupid?

Attorney for teacher's aid lashes out at police

anthony · 31 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GARDEN CITY, GA (WTOC) - A female teacher's aid charged with molesting and raping a 15-year-old male student was back in court today. This time her attorney lashed out at investigators.

Police said 28-year-old Erika Simmons had sex with the boy at her Garden City home. The two met at Myers Middle School in Savannah where she worked as a teacher's aid and cheerleading coach.
...
Garden City police testified they first learned Simmons was having sex with a student after she bragged about it to her friend and fellow employee at Myers Middle School, Alissa Robinson.
...
"He's going to throw everything on the wall and see if anything will stick," said a family member of the victim. WTOC is not publishing her name to protect the identity of the boy.

The family says none of this would have been said in court if it was a male teacher who had sex with a female student.'

UK: The Battle for Britain's Masculinity

anthony · 31 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last April, the Telegraph published the results of a survey that should have infuriated all self-respecting British. The study highlighted "the extent to which men have had to change within one or two generations." It also revealed how emasculated British males have become.

Over half of the men polled thought that society was turning them into "waxed and coiffed metrosexuals." Fifty-two percent said they had to live according to women's rules. Men said they "felt handcuffed" by political correctness, and two thirds openly admitted that they felt they could not speak freely and had to conceal their opinions.
...
"Manly men" have been "hunted to near-extinction in the British Isles," says historian Neil Oliver. "There's been some kind of politically correct revolution where we've forgotten—or discarded—the value of being manly men."'

Stereotypes Questioned in D.C. Forum On Strength And Masculine Power

anthony · 31 January 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'This weekend the Georgetown University Law Center hosted Campus Strength D.C., a two-day training event meant to facilitate discussion about stereotypes of strength and masculine power, as well as the effects these ideals have on society.

...

According to Joseph Vess, consulting and training director for Men Can Stop Rape, the program aims to provide a way for men to redefine old ideas of male strength to create a more inclusive, healthy culture.

“Many men are finding that traditional masculinity is not working for them,” he said. “The old masculine ideal, of always acting ‘tough,’ staying emotionally distant, not being able to have healthy relationships with other men — it really creates a negative effect on a society.”'

It's that time of year: The Super Bowl Myth

Gunner Retired · 1 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Super Bowl is coming up. And the Super Bowl Myth, that "Super Bowl Sunday is the most dangerous day in America for women." Washington Post reporter Ken Ringle checked into it back in 1993, and quickly found this "factoid" was a lie.

But we hear it every year. Christina Hoff Sommers lays out the story in Who Stole Feminism. The ironically-named "watchdog" group FAIR (Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting) and others held a press conference just before the January 1993 Super Bowl to put the factoid in circulation, citing an Old Dominion study. Jan Katz, one of the principal authors of that study said, "That's now what we found at all." Their study, on Washington Redskins regular-season weekends, found that an increase in emergency room admissions "was not associated with the occurrence of football games in general."
...
Who gains from these lies and deceptions? For one, feminists and activists in the "violence against women" industry fueled by $1.8 million under the federal Violence Against Women Act. VAWA II pending before Congress has a $2.8 billion price tag. (The National Violence Against Women survey conducted by the woman-oriented Center for Policy Research and sponsored by the National Institute of Justice and Centers for Disease Control found that each year 1.5 million and 835,000 men are assaulted by intimate partners, but a provision in VAWAII would specifically prohibit domestic violence programs from serving battered men.)'

Inclusive reading: http://batteredmen.com/batresrh.htm

Dr. Dean Edell takes strong anti-circ position

Matt · 1 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Tonight I heard on Dr. Dean Edell's syndicated medical issues program a strong denunciation of circumcision and some clear reasons as to why it should no longer be considered an acceptable practice when inflicted on someone else without their explicit consent. He also went after the it-reduces-HIV myth as well. Kudos to him! His show's site is here.

UK: Hunger Strike Over Marital Rape Conviction

Anonymous · 1 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For 16 months, inmate William Coleman has been wasting away in state prisons on a hunger strike.

A man who once carried more than 250 pounds on his 5-foot-10 frame, the former soccer coach lost about 125 pounds, sustaining himself on liquids, before alarmed Department of Correction officials restrained and force-fed him.

...

Coleman's attorneys say his protest is in the tradition of hunger strikes by women suffragettes in the early part of the 20th century and by Mahatma Gandhi in India's struggle for independence from Britain. In recent years, detainees at Guantanamo Bay have staged hunger strikes to protest conditions.

...

Coleman, a native of Liverpool, England, and the former women's soccer coach at Central Connecticut State University, says an acrimonious divorce and custody battle landed him in prison. He claims his ex-wife falsely accused him of raping her in 2002 in their Waterbury home to prevent him from getting custody of their two young sons.'

My gosh! Where did he get the idea the misandrist judiciary was corrupt?

Changes made to the Indian Dowry Law to stop misuse bharati · 1 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A little bit of background: There was an amendment made to the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment 41-1A in India who would provide relief to millions of people who are suffering from the abuses of the Dowry Law. The Amendment was passed and signed by the president of India is now law. Excerpt:

'NEW DELHI: Dealing a blow to women's rights activists who have been stringently defending the Section 498A provision of the Indian Penal Code, Chief Justice of India K G Balakrishnan on Saturday said that in some cases this section — that deals with matrimonial cruelty — was being `grossly misused'.

Elaborating on false cases being filed in recent times, the CJI said that relatives not involved with a matrimonial dispute were unfairly implicated. "In some cases, 498A is grossly misused," he said. Balakrishnan was speaking at a seminar, `Marriage laws -- issues and challenges', organised by the National Commission for Women.'

The link to the story of the spat between Chief justice of India and the women's organisation is here. See how confused and vicious Girija Vyas, a leading feminist, sounds. Can the western feminists ever match our feminists here in India for viciousness? Though it's not enough progress as yet, we do believe that we now have backing of the law to prevent the unjust arrest of husbands.

Woman abandons babies, leads sought as 'welfare case'

Michael · 1 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WYANDOTTE, Mich. - Police in suburban Detroit are seeking fresh leads on the identity of the mother of a baby left in a hospital, one of two newborns abandoned in the area in recent days.

Wyandotte police are searching for a woman possibly in her 20s who left what is believed to be her newborn daughter Thursday in a bathroom at Henry Ford Wyandotte Hospital. Police say charges are unlikely and are treating it as a personal welfare case.'

NY Times: "My Sister's Keeper"

anthony · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THEY called it a lesbian paradise, the pioneering women who made their way to St. Augustine, Fla., in the 1970s to live together in cottages on the beach. Finding one another in the fever of the gay rights and women's liberation movements, they built a matriarchal community, where no men were allowed, where even a male infant brought by visitors was cause for debate.

Emily Greene was one of those pioneers, and at 62 she still chooses to live in a separate lesbian world. She and 19 other women have built homes on 300 rural acres in northeast Alabama, where the founders of the Florida community, the Pagoda, relocated in 1997.

...

For Ms. Adams, every choice she makes today — which restaurant to go to, which contractor to hire, which music to listen to — is guided by a preference to be around women.

"To me, this is the real world," she said. "And it's a very peaceful world. I don't hear anything except the leaves falling. I get up in the morning, I go out on my front deck and I dance and I say, 'It's another glorious day on the mountain.' Men are violent. The minute a man walks in the dynamics change immediately, so I choose not to be around those dynamics."

"Outside the gate, it's still a man's world," said Ms. Hall, who retired as the publisher of a gay and lesbian newspaper in Tampa and St. Petersburg, Fla., and moved to Alapine in 2006. "And women are not safe, period. It's just that simple."'

RADAR ALERT: Call 'Foul' on the ABA's Gender-Political Agenda!

Matt · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Sixteen years ago Sheila Kuehl held a press conference shortly before the Super Bowl to announce the startling news that domestic violence increased 40% after men watched professional football games. It was a complete hoax – but that didn't the stop her myth from being endlessly recycled.

Now, a new group is out there broadcasting DV myths. This time it's the American Bar Association's Commission on Domestic Violence. These myths are found in the ABA flyer, "10 Myths about Custody and Domestic Violence and How to Counter Them."

Last summer RADAR issued a Special Report (.pdf file) debunking the claims – and requested the ABA to remove the flyer.

But the flyer (.pdf file) is still there, stereotyping men in the worst possible ways.

Now, a recent article published in the peer-reviewed journal Aggression and Violent Behavior provides a blistering critique of the ABA material. Written by Donald Dutton, Kenneth Corvo, and John Hamel, the article reveals, "almost without exception, the resource materials offered to dispel these myths are flawed, biased, outdated, and/or inconclusive research studies."

The authors conclude the flawed report leads to the "mis-education of practitioners, specifically, the legal profession and custody assessors."

To read the article, go here (.pdf file).

Please contact ABA president Thomas Wells today abapresident-at-abanet.org. The ABA flyer contributes to our society's stereotyping and vilification of fathers and men as wife-beaters and abusers. Tell Mr. Wells he needs to blow the whistle on the half-truths and lies from the ABA Commission on Domestic Violence.

++
Date of RADAR Release: February 2, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

Defense Rests in Baby Grace Trial

anthony · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GALVESTON, Texas — Attorneys for a mother accused of beating to death her 2-year-old daughter during a daylong discipline session rested their case Monday after presenting only one witness at her capital murder trial.

The jury of seven women and five men was expected to begin deliberating Kimberly Dawn Trenor's fate after closing arguments Monday afternoon.

Trenor's only defense witness, a co-worker of her husband's, testified he believed Royce Clyde Zeigler II seemed to be controlling of his wife. Trenor's attorneys have argued to jurors that Trenor was under Zeigler's control and she was not responsible for the death of toddler Riley Ann Sawyers.'

Update: Verdict is in: guilty.

Twice-Monthly Male Contraceptive Shot Stops Sperm Production, Being Tested in Australia

anthony · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men in Sydney, Australia will be among the first in the world to try a new contraceptive giving them control over their own fertility.

ANZAC Research Institute at Concord Hospital has begun testing a new twice-monthly male contraceptive injection.

It works exactly like the female contraceptive pill by shutting down the reproductive function.

The contraceptive tricks the brain into thinking it has already produced sperm and does not affect men's sexuality.

Earlier studies have found the injection works in 95 percent of men and allows users to become fully fertile within three month of stopping the injections.'

Israel: Livni Plays Gender Card as She Runs 2nd in Race

anthony · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When Tzipi Livni, Israel's foreign minister and a candidate for prime minister, spoke before a group of women lawyers last week, she received three standing ovations. Her male rivals in the race had to make do with polite applause.

"Whether we have a female prime minister is up to you and your vote," Livni told the 200 or so women, who promptly rose to their feet, clapping and cheering.
...
However, running second behind the Likud Party's Benjamin Netanyahu and with her male rivals attempting to undercut her credibility, using language some describe as thinly veiled chauvinism, Livni has pulled out the gender card, possibly in realization of the potential strength of women voters.
...
"I want a woman in charge—a woman has more of a sense of responsibility for her people," hairdresser Rachel Rubin, 54, said during a break at the salon where she works.'

Woman Charged With Stabbing Son And Ex-Husband

anthony · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VINALHAVEN (NEWS CENTER) -- Police say a woman from Vinalhaven has been arrested for stabbing her ex-husband and her eight-year-old son.

The Knox County Sheriff's department says Maria Witham was arrested on the island of Vinalhaven early Monday morning, after deputies were called to a home on the Roberts Cemetery Road about 12:30 am.
...
Maria Witham has been charged with two counts of elevated aggravated assault, and with violating conditions of release.'

Woman arrested after domestic shooting

anthony · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Shreveport woman was arrested on a charge of second-degree aggravated battery Saturday after her husband was shot in their home in the Pinecroft neighborhood south of Shreveport Regional Airport.
...
According to police reports, during an argument with her husband, Taquela Harris “armed herself with an automatic handgun and subsequently shot her husband in the foot.” The online arrest report provides a little more detail, saying that "the offender and her husband were arguing and she told him not to leave. She told him that if he left out the door she would shoot him and he walked out and she shot him in the foot."'

Man, 45, Killed in Shooting; Woman Charged With Murder

anthony · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 45-year-old District man was fatally shot by a woman who was arrested and charged in the killing, police said yesterday.

Police released few details about the homicide, one of two that occurred in a two-hour span early yesterday in Southeast Washington. They said the 45-year-old man, who was not identified because next of kin had not been notified, was shot about 3:45 a.m. in a house in the 1500 block of Tubman Road SE.

He was taken to Prince George's Hospital Center, where he was pronounced dead, authorities said.'

Woman suspected of running down man

anthony · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Police arrested a 27-year-old woman for allegedly driving her car into a man after an argument last night.

According to police, the woman and a man, 28, had gotten to an argument in Kailua around 8:20 p.m. She walked away and returned with her car, police said.

She then allegedly drove her car into the man, hitting him.

He was taken to a hospital in serious condition, police said.

The woman fled, and was later found by police at Porky's Bar at 32 Maluniu Ave. in Kailua.

She was arrested on suspicion of attempted murder.'

Woman Gets $1M Bond After Fire Crews Find Body

anthony · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'COLUMBUS, Ohio—A 22-year-old woman was arraigned Friday after firefighters found a man's body in a Northeast Side home Wednesday.

Columbus fire was called out to the 1700 block of Devonshire Road at 12:49 a.m. Wednesday.

When firemen extinguished the flames at the Northeast Side home, they discovered a male victim inside the residence.

The victim had gunshot wounds to his upper body, according to CPD.

CPD identified the victim as 44-year-old Jackie D. Hagwood.

Columbus police arrested 22-year-old Tamara L. Smith on murder charges in connection with Hagwood's death.

Smith was arraigned Friday, and her bond was set at $1 million.'

Opinion: Young men and violence

anthony · 2 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Masculinity. Masculinity in our culture is extremely unhealthy. Virtually all of these rage-induced rampages are by males. Though we went through a period of men being encouraged to be more sensitive (largely, thanks to feminism), recent influences have moved men back to a hyper-masculinity that poses serious problems for our society. Through cultural and parental conditioning, media images (tech games but also action films, comic books, graphic novels and advertisements), sports influences (mixed martial arts in particular), peer influences and so on, males today more than ever feel pressure to be hyper-masculine. The end product is a male who doesn't allow for emotional outlets, doesn't express or communicate mental anguish, doesn't show weakness or get help but instead sees violence as a viable option to solving problems.'

UK: Woman gets 21 months in jail after texting-while-driving causes fatal accident

webdigr · 3 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. She killed a man out of sheer buffoonery, and all she gets is a 21 months jail? Would you have given the same punishment to a man, if he killed a woman in exactly the same situation? Excerpt:

'A motorist who sent and received more than 20 text messages before she crashed into another car killing its driver has been jailed for 21 months.

...

Curtis, who was convicted of causing death by dangerous driving in December, had told Oxford Crown Court she felt there were times when using a phone while driving was acceptable.

During the trial the defendant, a waitress, said she had been "hyper" as she set off on her two-hour journey on 20 November, 2007.

She had made various calls and sent text messages to a number of friends using predictive text.

Shortly after making a call, her car hit Ms McBryde's parked Peugeot 106, then spun into oncoming traffic, hitting two more vehicles.

...

Judge Hall said he hoped the case would send out a warning to other drivers not to use their phones when behind the wheel.

Pakistan: Three women abduct, rape man in Karachi

webdigr · 3 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Karachi police have registered a case against three unidentified women who allegedly abducted a man and raped him over four consecutive days, and later throwing him near Qayyumabad River in an unconscious state.
...
As he regained consciousness, Khalil found that the women “were forcing themselves onto me”. According to assistant superintendent of police Asad Raza, the women sexually assaulted Khalil for four days, and then threw him near Qayyumabad river. “His condition is really bad ... his genitals are bleeding and he cannot walk properly,” said Raza.

Raza said the women belonged to rich families of Karachi’s Clifton area. “It’s a complicated case ... but we are hoping that we will solve it soon,” he added.'

Hiding the Truth About the Pay Gap Between Men and Women

anthony · 3 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Labor Department's conclusion was that the gender pay gap was the result of a multitude of factors and that the "raw wage gap should not be used as the basis for [legislative] correction. Indeed, there may be nothing to correct. The differences in raw wages may be almost entirely the result of individual choices being made by both male and female workers."

The Labor Department's new report is clearly an important contribution to the debate over pay equity. But where is it? Although it was posted on the Labor Department's web site just days after it was finalized, it was apparently removed as the transition in power was occurring between former President Bush and President Obama. We don't know why the report was taken down, but certainly the timing is suspicious.'

'Stimulus Plan' includes $1 billion of "incentive funds" for child support collection

Matt · 3 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's take a look at some of the "investments" in the House Stimulus plan to see if this new pork-laden bill will "lay a solid foundation for future growth." It includes:
...
• $1 billion to provide incentive funds for states to collect child support owed to families (stimulus for the state police).'

Mother of Iraqi women bomber network arrested

Michael · 3 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman accused of helping recruit dozens of female suicide bombers looked into the camera and described the process: trolling society for likely candidates and then patiently converting the women from troubled souls into deadly attackers.

The accounts, in a video released Tuesday by Iraq police, offer a rare glimpse into the networks used to find and train the women bombers who have become one of the insurgents' most effective weapons as they struggle under increasing crackdowns.

In a separate prison interview with The Associated Press, with interrogators nearby, the woman said she was part of a plot in which young women were raped and then sent to her for matronly advice. She said she would try to persuade the victims to become suicide bombers as their only escape from the shame and to reclaim their honor.'

'One Tree Hill' Aftergasm: Feminism and Half-Naked Men

anthony · 4 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In today's society, women are still objectified as sexual playthings. From Hooters to strip clubs and prostitution to GoDaddy.com Super Bowl ads, depicting women as nothing more than sexual objects is sadly still around Thankfully, One Tree Hill shines as a beacon of feminism in an otherwise male-dominated society. It might seem odd, but looking back at the history of the series, it's always been a place where it's the male stars who are made into sexual objects.

...

While other shows might focus on the sexy women, stripping them down to bikinis to parade around the screen, One Tree Hill does the same thing with its men. James Lafferty has seemingly spent about half his time on the show without a shirt. Whether he's playing basketball, walking around the house, or participating in the Boy Toy Auction, the show keeps him as naked as possible as often as possible.'

Huffington Post: How About a Super Bowl Sunday Dedicated to Ending Violence?

anthony · 4 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), first authorized in 1994 and co-authored by Vice President Joe Biden, is currently offensively underfunded. The VAWA provides funds for investigating and prosecuting crimes of violence against women, improving safe houses and shelters as well as support for the national domestic violence hotline. Despite a Congressional plea for funding increases, President Bush recommended only a $421.6 million budget for VAWA in fiscal year 2008--the equivalent of a little over one hour of Super Bowl commercials. Without additional funds, shelters will close and desperately needed services will be cut.
...
While we award trophies for high-stakes brutality, we must also recognize those who are working to reduce violence in our society and in our culture. We must pressure our political leaders and the Obama Administration to fully fund the Violence Against Women Act and ensure that respect for women's human rights are a pre-condition of international aid. We need to make sure that violence prevention efforts become as integral to our nation's schools as our football programs. Now that would be something worth cheering about.'

New law could make fathers' rights come smoother

anthony · 4 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Historically, the state's courts have not favored this arrangement because of concerns that shuttling between parents could be disruptive for a child. Custody often went to mothers, who tended to be the primary caregivers. But now, fathers are more involved. "I think in some ways it's a matter of the judicial system catching up with changes in society," says Melissa Froehle, policy and program director at the Minnesota Fathers & Families Network in St. Paul.

Rep. Tim Mahoney (DFL-St. Paul) has made it his mission to change the law. Divorced twice, Mahoney paid through the nose to get joint physical custody. "But I thought everybody did that," Mahoney says. "It wasn't, 'Oh, I'm a wounded divorced father and I feel slighted.'"

He says conversations with his constituents convinced him that the law should change. Dozens of men have told him they pay child support but find it difficult to visit their children because of poor relations with the mother, he says. "They don't give a damn about the money. Mostly what they want to do is see their kids."

Over the past five years, Mahoney has introduced bills to change the law. His legislation has included an exception for victims of domestic violence, but advocates for battered women remain unconvinced.'

Joint custody helps children

anthony · 4 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, originally. At the time of posting, though, the article isn't showing up (404 error); the home page of the on-line paper has a notice saying they are having technical problems though, so that could explain it. I did manage to find it in the Google cahce though, here. Excerpt:

'The winner-take-all adversarial divorce system of Judge Meyer and Mr. Cade of routinely awarding custody or ownership of our children of divorce to one parent, usually the mother, and demoting the other parent, usually the father, to the status of a visitor deprives our children of the stability and continuity of having two parents during their developmental years. The system also deprives fathers of their basic right of raising their children.

Divorced fathers are still waiting for the state Legislature to enact parenting and joint custody legislation that would provide a preference for equality between divorcing parents or a presumption of joint custody that would not reduce a parent to the status of a visitor.'

More Staten Island dads are waging custody wars

anthony · 4 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'They are among a growing army of well-intentioned fathers who view the system as stacked against them because of their gender, even though New York State law requires judges and magistrates to consider only the best interests of the child in disputes between parents.

...

An increasing number of dads are stepping up to the legal plate to fight custody and visitation battles against women they claim are dead-beat moms, he said.

...

On the other side, "There are thousands of guys out there like me," he said. Some men find themselves victims of "moms using the system to send dads into exile from their kids, taking them out of their lives with ease."

Mothers can be vindictive, "hell-bent on destroying you," charged another father who endured a Family Court battle over the custody of his young son. "It's hard. It took me three years to learn how to play the game. It was the worst experience of my entire life."'

Divorced father seeks equal protection

anthony · 4 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A case is developing in a Tennessee divorce dispute that one attorney believes could impact custody decisions nationwide because it calls down the authority of the 14th Amendment's equal protection clause to help fathers who are good parents and want to remain involved in their children's lives.

The attorney, Stanley Charles Thorne, told WND the issue in the case at hand will be significant, since there are 3,000 divorce or custody cases in courts across the U.S. daily.

And according to the Children'sJustice.org website, those cases leave nearly 38 percent of the fathers with no access or visitation rights to their children. In addition, four in 10 mothers report they interfered with the father's visitation to punish him at least once, half the mothers see "no value" in the father's continued contact with his children and 70 percent of the fathers wanted more time with their kids.'

Exactly How Are Men Superior?

Broadsword · 4 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I love my sons—they're funny, sweet, and full of surprises. But I don't understand how a species incapable of feeding themselves—much less hitting the toilet—ever came to rule the planet.

Last week as I watched the 44th male take possession of the most powerful position in the world, I had to ask myself how men ever came to be in charge of the world. How did they surpass women in status, power, and wealth? I don't hate men, I live with far too many of them to survive day-to-day harboring such feelings. I just know that women are the more capable sex. As early as the age of two, girls leave boys standing bewildered in their dust as they speed along the social, emotional, and intellectual racecourse of life.
...
How can it be that they can't overcome hunger, the most basic of human instincts, yet they are given the power of world nuclear annihilation?
...
The only possible explanation I can come up with is that in prehistoric times, in order to get some real work done, cave women sent their men off to hunt and do battle, and the trend stuck. I love my boys; I find them funny, and sweet, and full of surprises, but I just don't understand when the girls got lapped in the race. They had such a clear lead.'

Men Shouldn't Be Overlooked as Victims of Partner Violence

Matt · 4 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In addressing intimate partner violence, the focus is usually on women who are physically battered by husbands or boyfriends. However, women sometimes hurt their partners as well.

Women are doing virtually everything these days that men are—working as doctors, lawyers, and rocket scientists; flying helicopters in combat; riding horses in the Kentucky Derby. And physically assaulting their spouses or partners.

In fact, when it comes to nonreciprocal violence between intimate partners, women are more often the perpetrators.'

Sadly, killer moms are not uncommon

Matt · 4 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter to the editor here.

'The horrific killing by Penny Boudreau of her 12-year-old daughter, looking into the child's eyes while strangling her, should make us both shudder and consider. While this cold-blooded killing is extreme by any standard, a large sample study of child deaths in the United States showed that mothers were involved 60% of the time and acted alone as the perpetrator in one-third of the killings.

Despite this, governments have ministries for women and children and universities have faculties of women and children -- all designed to further the myth that the greatest risk to children comes from men, and specifically fathers. The research statistics suggest otherwise.'

Woman chased, attacked husband with knife, gets sent for psychiatric treatment

webdigr · 5 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. When a wife is mortally attacking the husband, all 'explaining' and 'counseling' comes into effect... But if its the other way round, even if its only alleged and no one but the alleging woman knows the truth, no one ever thinks of any counseling for the man; he just has to be punished as hard as possible. And they say its the man's world! Excerpt:

'SUSSEX, N.B. — A woman appeared in court Wednesday to face charges after RCMP officers had to use a Taser to disarm her on Tuesday.

At the time she allegedly chased her husband around a barber shop with a knife.
...
"The (officers) made verbal and physical efforts to control the situation, but it became obvious that the female was out of control and she was posing a real threat to the (officers) so they had no choice but to use the Taser," Tremblay said.

"We try everything we can, we negotiate as far as we can, but there comes a time when for the security of the public, especially with people around in the mall, that the (officers) had to do something."
...
She has been sent for a five-day psychiatric assessment and will return to court on Feb. 10 for a bail hearing, Tremblay said.'

Husband charged with a crime(s) even after accident admitted by police tac0965 · 5 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A husband accidentally kills wife while cleaning firearm. The police acknowledge that the incident was an accident. The incident was covered in the press as a sad accident with the husband displaying remorse. However, nonetheless, he will be arraigned on charges Thursday afternoon for the accidental killing. Notice how the article towards the end turns in to an advertisement for taking gun safety courses.

How many women kills their husbands on purpose, then claim domestic violence or depression and are never brought up on charges? Excerpt:

'A 21-year-old newlywed is facing a homicide charge in the shooting death of his wife. Sources tell Channel 6 News Joshua Beasley will be arraigned at 2 p.m. Friday on a negligent homicide charge.

Prosecutor Joe Kelly of the Lancaster County Attorney's Office would not explain what led prosecutors to bring charges and said they were still deciding exactly what charge or charges Beasley might face.

Investigators said Beasley's wife of 10 weeks, 20-year-old Alaina Beasley, died of a shotgun wound early Sunday at a Lincoln hospital.

The couple had been out skeet shooting on Saturday. Joshua told police that he was cleaning the gun that night in their Lincoln apartment when it discharged.

Police had said earlier that the shooting appeared to be accidental.'

Canada: A gold digger without a leg to stand on

Matt · 5 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Montreal woman is suing her former lover -- the father of her three children--for spousal support, even though the two of them were never legally married and Quebec law does not grant so-called "common law" spouses any entitlement to alimony or property equalization.

The man is reportedly a billionaire. The woman is seeking a $50-million lump sum, plus $56,000 monthly. She already receives $35,000 monthly in child support, plus the use of a $2.4-million house and several servants.

The rhetoric of the woman and her lawyers is astonishingly arrogant. They speak and act as if the man on other side of this case didn't even exist -- as if they were fighting a grievance against the federal and provincial governments, rather than against a sentient human being.
...
The woman's lawyers suggest that the court draw a new line: Couples who have co-habited for three years (or one year if they have children) would get the same rights as consensually married couples. But this wouldn't end discrimination. It would merely discriminate against a different group: namely, those who have cohabited only two years and 364 days (or 364 days with kids). Why should a single additional day of cohabitation confer such enormous financial consequences? When will this group bring its constitutional challenge?'

UK: Sperm is a man's property, judge rules in landmark case

Broadsword · 5 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Six cancer patients whose sperm samples were lost by the NHS have won their claim for damages in a landmark judgement which establishes the legal principle that a man's semen is his own property.

The case, which could cost the NHS hundreds of thousands of pounds in compensation, is expected to lead to a review of the law relating to ownership of human body parts.

In yesterday's judgment the Lord Chief Justice, Lord Judge, the most senior judge in England and Wales, rejected the notion that sperm held by North Bristol NHS Trust had the same legal status as a discarded toenail or hair cut at a barber's shop.

Lord Judge, Master of the Rolls Sir Anthony Clarke, and Lord Justice Wilson, ruled that the sperm samples – given by the men after they were warned by doctors that chemotherapy might damage their fertility – were the property of the six who could claim damages for the loss. "Unlike products of the body which are removed from it with a view to their being abandoned – such as cut hair, clipped nails, excised tissue and amputated limbs – the sperm was ejaculated with a view to its being kept," said the judges."

Rights group calls to ban Czech castration law

mens_issues · 5 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Apparently this has been going on in the Czech Republic for decades, without evidence that it's effective. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- The Czech Republic's practice of surgically castrating convicted sex offenders is "invasive, irreversible and mutilating" and should stop immediately, the Council of Europe's Anti-Torture Committee said in a report made public Thursday.

The central European country castrated at least 94 prisoners in the 10 years up to April 2008, when investigators from the Council of Europe, a human-rights forum, visited the Czech Republic.

The Council of Europe condemned the practice as "degrading."

The procedure is being performed even on first-time, non-violent offenders, such as exhibitionists, its investigation revealed.

Prisoners have to request castration under Czech law, but many fear they will be jailed for life if they do not, the investigation found.

"In practically all the cases, these patients indicated that their application was at least partially instigated by fear of long-term detention," the report said.'

RADAR ALERT: Economic Stimulus Bill Funds Ineffective DV Programs. Call The Senate Now!

Matt · 6 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Did you know that the Economic Stimulus plan under debate in the Senate allocates 400 million dollars to fund ineffective domestic violence programs?[1]

The Senate may vote on the Economic Stimulus plan at any moment. So stop whatever you're doing and take a few minutes to call these three key Senators on the stimulus bill right now:

Senator	Phone	State	Party
Sen. Ben Nelson	202-224-6551	NE	D
Sen. Susan Collins	202-224-2523	ME	R
Sen. Arlen Specter	202-224-4254	PA	R

Tell the Senators:

NY Times: As Layoffs Surge, Women May Pass Men in Job Force

anthony · 6 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With the recession on the brink of becoming the longest in the postwar era, a milestone may be at hand: Women are poised to surpass men on the nation's payrolls, taking the majority for the first time in American history.

The reason has less to do with gender equality than with where the ax is falling.

The proportion of women who are working has changed very little since the recession started. But a full 82 percent of the job losses have befallen men, who are heavily represented in distressed industries like manufacturing and construction. Women tend to be employed in areas like education and health care, which are less sensitive to economic ups and downs, and in jobs that allow more time for child care and other domestic work.
...
Economists have predicted before that women would one day dominate the labor force as more ventured outside the home. The number of women entering the work force slowed and even dipped during the boom years earlier this decade, though, prompting a debate about whether women truly wanted to be both breadwinners and caregivers.'

UK Guardian: 'Sexist feminism'

anthony · 6 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If a man – any man, apparently they're all the same – says he hates women, he's being sexist. But some women have no qualms about pigeonholing all men into one category of violent, abhorrent brutes and calling it feminism. And that's when feminism becomes nothing more than another form of sexism.

...

Many people saw the backlash against Palin in terms of her sex. For example, the Guardian's Kira Cochrane said it was misogynist. Apparently, it's fine to say all men are rubbish, but if we criticise a woman, that's automatically deemed to be sexist, as if being female is some kind of "get out of jail free" card that excuses us from playing by the very rules we want men to keep.

...

I'd like to think that 21st century feminism would advocate doing away with these narrow parameters and see people as people. When Stephanie Theobald wrote about tomboys, their mothers made comments such as: "In some ways, my daughter is very feminine – if there's a baby in the room she will pick it up and hold it so tenderly". If we want to achieve true equality, feminists need to stop categorising human traits as masculine or feminine. Feminists should be the last people doing this. We should be seeking to shatter all stereotypes, not cherry-picking the ones that suit us. Do that and you're not abolishing the patriarchy, you're becoming the very thing you are fighting against.'

Woman Convicted of Poisoning Husband, Harming Daughter

anthony · 6 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SYRACUSE, N.Y. — An upstate New York woman was convicted Thursday of murdering her husband by poisoning him with antifreeze and then trying to kill and frame her daughter for the death.

An Onondaga County jury found Stacey Castor, 41, guilty of second-degree murder in the poisoning death of her husband, David, in August 2005. She was also found guilty of attempted second-degree murder for trying to kill daughter Ashley Wallace, then 20, with an overdose of drugs and vodka in September 2007.

"If there is a ceiling in terms of evil, she (Castor) is at the ceiling," District Attorney William Fitzpatrick.
...
The death of Wallace's first husband had been ruled a heart attack, but after the exhumation, authorities also ruled the death a homicide caused by ingesting ethylene glycol, a toxic chemical found in antifreeze.

Castor has not been charged in Wallace's death, but prosecutors used evidence surrounding it to build their case against her. Keller said he would challenge the judge's decision to allow the evidence about Wallace's death.'

Judge clears dead Texas man of rape conviction

Michael · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man who died in prison while serving time for a rape he didn't commit was cleared Friday by a judge who called the state's first posthumous DNA exoneration "the saddest case" he'd ever seen.

State District Judge Charles Baird ordered Timothy Cole's record expunged.

Cole was convicted of raping a Texas Tech University student in Lubbock in 1985 and was sentenced to 25 years in prison. He died in 1999 at age 39 from asthma complications.'

Madonna syndrome: I should have ditched feminism for love, children and baking

Broadsword · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"I never thought I would be saying this, but being a free woman isn't all it's cracked up to be. Is that the rustle of taffeta I hear as the suffragettes turn in their graves? Possibly. My mother was a hippy who kept a pile of (dusty) books by Germaine Greer and Erica Jong by her bed (like every good feminist, she didn't see why she should do all the cleaning). She imbued me with the great values of choice, equality and sexual liberation. I fought with my older brother and won; at university I beat the rugby lads at drinking games. I was not to be messed with.

Now, nearly 37, those same values leave me feeling cold. I want love and children but they are nowhere to be seen. I feel like a UN inspector sent in to Iraq only to find that there never were any weapons of mass destruction. I was led to believe that women could “have it all” and, more to the point, that we wanted it all. To that end I have spent 20 years ruthlessly pursuing my dreams - to be a successful playwright. I have sacrificed all my womanly duties and laid it all at the altar of a career. And was it worth it? The answer has to be a resounding no...
...
Increasing numbers of my feminist friends are giving up their careers for love and children and baking. I wish I'd had kids ten years ago, when time was on my side, but the problem is not so much time as mentality. I made a conscious decision not to have serious relationships because I thought I had all the time in the world."

Never, ever break up a 'chick fight'

Matt · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most Canadian boys are taught from a young age not to hit girls and protect a female or weaker boy if they are threatened.

After sitting through two of the court proceedings that followed the so-called midway mauling" at Lee Park last spring, I'm convinced we should put just as much weight on the not kicking someone when they're down" rule.

Devin Marshall, 13, tried to do the right thing May 10, 2008 while attending a midway carnival at Lee Park. He made an effort to convince a teenage girl to leave a female friend of his alone.

I'm assuming he thought his friend couldn't defend herself against the other girl.

But this particular young lady wasn't much afraid of Marshall and she definitely didn't take kindly to him calling her a prostitute.

He was kicked in the groin and took a few punches to the kisser for his troubles. And when he defended himself from further assault, wrestling her to the ground for his own protection, she yelled for help.

The real trouble began soon afterward. Her friends pulled him off and a couple dozen hero-wannabes swarmed in like hornets lapping up pop at a picnic.

The mob mentality took over and a husky boy stepped forward and dropped Marshall with a thundering sucker punch."

He ran away, the Ontario Court of Justic was told, and two other young men stepped in and laid the boots to Marshall, who suffered two fractures to his jaw, a fractured cheek bone and cuts.'

United Nations Population Fund Leader Says Family Breakdown is a Triumph for Human Rights

Matt · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MEXICO CITY, February 3, 2009 (LifeSiteNews.com) - A leader in the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) has declared that the breakdown of traditional families, far from being a “crisis,” is actually a triumph for human rights.

Speaking at a colloquium held last month at Colegio Mexico in Mexico City, UNFPA representative Arie Hoekman denounced the idea that high rates of divorce and out-of-wedlock births represent a social crisis, claiming that they represent instead the triumph of “human rights” against “patriarchy.”

"In the eyes of conservative forces, these changes mean that the family is in crisis," he said. "In crisis? More than a crisis, we are in the presence of a weakening of the patriarchal structure, as a result of the disappearance of the economic base that sustains it and because of the rise of new values centered in the recognition of fundamental human rights."'

Anti-male Cheerios commercial taken to task on Fox

Matt · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video clip here. Marc Rudov debates Bill O'Reilly over the content of this and similar ads. O'Reilly sides with feminists of course.

Fathers' rights vs. gender bias

anthony · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers everyday are being denied equal rights regarding their children in custody cases. Gender bias should be eliminated from family law and future legislation. BOTH biological parents should be responsible for the emotional well-being of their children, as well as assuming financial responsibility.

Child support orders should be reasonable--realistically reflect the cost of the basic needs of the child as well as the responsibilities of both parents in a shared parenting plan. When parents are given equal rights, equal responsibility follows; when parents have equal access to their children, and support levels are reasonable and reflect true cost of raising a child, parents will comply with court orders. When equity is created in our laws, the conflicts inherent in divorce situations dissolve and that in the end is the greatest gift that anyone could possibly bestow on children.'

Roe vs. Wade and the Rights of the Father

anthony · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While the topic I have chosen here, “Roe vs. Wade and the Rights of the Father” may sound interesting, actually there is nothing to write about. There are no such rights.

A father can’t stop an abortion if he wants his child, nor can he insist upon an abortion if he doesn’t want his child.

This situation should trouble everyone, not from a religious point of view, not from a personal choice point of view, but rather from an Equal Rights point of view.
...
So where are all these well-reasoned arguments when it comes to a father and his unborn child? Why do people who have Equal Protection claims at the ready on other issues suddenly suffer constitutional amnesia when abortion is mentioned?

During every abortion a father’s child dies, so fathers are affected. There is much written about the post-abortion depression of women. Nothing is mentioned about the father. A good father knows his role is protector of his child. His depression must be crippling when the law allows him no chance to save his child from death by abortion.
...
As Justice Ginsburg said in the quote that appears at the top of this FOX Forum post, the emphasis is not abortion, rather an individual’s right to control his own reproduction. If we protect such a right for women, can we constitutionally deny it to men?'

Obama Is First Feminist President, Panelists Say

anthony · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNSNews.com) – Panelists at a feminist conference have made it clear that they believe Barack Obama is the first feminist president.

...

Smeal wrote that Ms. “wanted to capture both the national and feminist mood of high expectations and hope as the 44th president of the United States takes the oath of office.”

She said when she met Obama, “He immediately offered, ‘I am a feminist.’”

...

Other topics covered by panelists included the injection of feminism into popular culture and organizing the next generation of feminists.

Organizations taking part in the conference included the National Organization for Women, Feministe, National Council of Negro Women, American Association of University Women and VivirLatino.'

Domestic abuse bill brings men's rights to light

anthony · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill proposing to increase fees in order to support domestic violence service agencies was heard Wednesday in the Senate Judiciary Committee. If passed, the bill would designate a percentage of funds specifically for organizations that provide domestic abuse services for military members and veterans.
...
Opponents of the bill voiced concerns the current funding for domestic abuse services has done little to prevent abuse. Many of the men who testified also thought the proposed legislation would promote a misconception that men cannot be victims of abuse.

According to Dr. Charles Corry, president of the Equal Justice Foundation, domestic violence cases have nearly doubled over the last decade, meanwhile the state's population has grown by just 23 percent during this same time period. Corry maintains this disproportionate increase proves current funding is not being used effectively.

"What happens is for these people to get more money and keep their budget up, they have to report more cases," said Corry. "More money means more charges filed."

Cliff Smedley also testified in opposition of the bill. He was once wrongly accused of domestic abuse and sees himself as a "victim of the domestic violence industry."

"Men don't have a monopoly as abusers, and women don't have a monopoly as victims," said Smedley.'

Massachusetts: Supreme Judicial Court sees possible bias in rape case

anthony · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A sharply divided Supreme Judicial Court said yesterday that a 14-year-old boy accused of statutory rape may have been a victim of gender discrimination because authorities charged him and not the three underage girls with whom he allegedly had sex.

The case, which originated in Plymouth County, involved a high school freshman football player who is accused of engaging in various sex acts from August to October 2007 with three girls. Two were 12, and the other was 11.

"None of the complainants reported being afraid of the boy's behavior," Chief Justice Margaret Marshall wrote for the majority. "Indeed, sexual behavior seemed to melt seamlessly into games of 'manhunt,' 'truth or dare,' and 'making out.' Some of it occurred with more than one complainant present."
...
In its 3-to-2 ruling, the majority emphasized that statutory rape laws, which once exclusively protected girls, are now gender-neutral. The boy, the court said, has a constitutional right to see if Plymouth District Attorney Timothy J. Cruz's office discriminates against boys when prosecuting statutory rape cases.'

Obama on track to ensure equity for nation’s women

anthony · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Noting that 19 million women are uninsured, Obama has pledged to repair the nation’s health care system, support research into women’s health, and fight cancer. He said he will support moves to invest in women-owned small businesses, strengthen laws against domestic violence and provide for women’s reproductive rights.
...
The president said he will protect Title IX, which ensures that female students and employees at all levels of education are not discriminated against, and help empower women to prevent HIV/AIDS. Women make up 45 percent of the workforce but hold only 12 percent of the science and engineering jobs. Therefore, Obama has said he will help increase jobs in science and engineering.'

Mens' Eye Protection Issues Revealed and What Women Can Do About it

anthony · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the safetybriefs.org blog you will find entertaining and informative solutions to help you or your company keep safety issues top on your list. It turns out that each post is written from a lighter side and some are written by a woman who challenges men to wear safety gear. Do not expect the standard OSHA lingo in her blog posts.
...
Here is just a sample of some her current statistics about eye protection:

90% of eye injuries could have been avoided.
The average time off work for an eye injury is 2 days.
Men make up over 80% of all eye injuries.

The Sassy Safety Glasses Queen goes on to write this reminder: "Ladies, there is a good chance your hubby is NOT wearing his safety glasses. My solution was to buy a hot looking pair of safety glasses (I prefer OCC and Wiley X safety glasses) and told my husband how good he looked wearing them. You better believe he wears them all the time. If only getting him to unload the dishwasher was that easy." '

'Age of Testosterone comes to end in Iceland'

anthony · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Iceland, ravaged throughout history by volcanic eruptions and natural catastrophes, is struggling with a man-made disaster so overwhelming that the women are taking over. It is, they say here, the end of the Age of Testosterone.

Next week a newly minted left-leaning Government led by Johanna Sigurdardottir will start to tackle the tough agenda of cleaning out the old-school-chum networks that have led Iceland to the verge of bankruptcy.

Half of her Cabinet will be women; female advisers carrying briefcases move in and out of the Prime Minister's whitewashed office, a former jailhouse in the middle of Reykjavik. Two women, Birna Einarsdottir and Elin Sigfusdottir, now run the struggling and disgraced New Landsbanki and New Glitnir banks.
...
You can see what is happening," says Katrin Olafsdottir, Associate Professor of Economics and a member of the board of New Glitnir, which is trying to devise a new mission for the crippled bank. "The men went out there and took these incredibly irrational risks — and getting loads of money for doing it, feeling really good about it - and then the women have to come in to clean it up."'

American wins fight to visit son in Brazil

anthony · 7 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BRASILIA, Brazil - An American who has waged a four-year custody battle for his son in Brazil reached an agreement Friday to visit the 8-year-old boy.

David Goldman reached the agreement during a five-hour mediation session. The custody battle started in 2004 after his wife took the boy to her native Brazil, according to Goldman.

U.S. Rep. Chris Smith, who traveled to Brazil with Goldman in an attempt to reunite him with his son, announced the agreement after attending the session, which was presided over by a high-ranking federal judge.
...
He said he has not seen his son since his former wife Bruna took the boy for a two-week vacation to her native Brazil in 2004 and never returned.

She later divorced Goldman in Brazil — a divorce he says is not valid in the United States — and married Rio de Janeiro lawyer Joao Paulo Lins e Silva. She died last year of complications from the birth of another child.'

India: Another feminist movement started based on entirely false data

webdigr · 8 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

These are entirely made up, concocted and twisted statistics that these Indian feminists are projecting to the world in order to beg for more and more millions from the taxpayers money of the western countries. Then of course, the money is used primarily to feed their own gigantic greed, and with whatever leftover money, to bribe the politicians into passing more and more anti-men laws, so that all men get so scared that they start to shy away from the institution of marriage itself. And quite obviously no one is worried about the ever increasing men facing domestic violence from their women partners! Here's the story: Ring the bell, stop domestic violence

'What do you do when the man next door is beating his wife? A) Close the windows and turn up the volume on the telly. B) Squirm but tell yourself it's no use interfering. It is simpler to not do anything and that is exactly what Mumbai resident Christina Lobo Jha did till a new initiative to end domestic violence gave her a third option - Ring the Bell or Bell Bajao.

...
Batting for the battered

37% of women reported abuse
32% experienced violence in the first five years of marriage
55% of women though spousal abuse was warranted
41% of women thought slapping was warranted by husbands if in-laws were disrespected
35% of women thought a beating was warranted by husbands if household chores and child care were neglected
51% of 75,000 men surveyed think hitting their wives is acceptable, if in-laws were disrespected, with a smaller number thinking that bad cooking/refusing sex were also legitimate reasons'

Al Roker: A Father's Promise

mens_issues · 8 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

You may be interested in A Father's Promise by Al Roker on MSNBC. While this show correctly shows the importance of fathers to their children's well-being, it appears to blame fathers for being absent as well. Excerpt:

"More American boys and girls than ever are growing up without a father. It is a cultural issue that has emerged at the forefront of American politics. "A Father's Promise" explores this unsettling crisis. Coinciding with Black History Month, MSNBC will premiere "A Father's Promise" Sunday, Feb. 8 at 8 p.m. ET."

Sorry for the short lead time with this.

Girl tells police: Mom 'cooks me in oven'

Matt · 8 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HAMTRAMCK -- The license plate in the window of the family Cadillac reads "Best Dad." But a 4-year-old girl told police Mom wasn't nearly so kind.

"Mom cooks me like a turkey in the oven," she told police.

Hamtramck cops stumbled onto the graphic allegations of burnings, beatings and torture after the girl's mother phoned police Jan. 23 and confessed to "harming her children," Detective Ben Bielecki said Thursday.
...
Police said Valentino's husband, Randy, wasn't home and there's no evidence that he abused their children.

After the incident, Valentino called police about 3 p.m. to come get her.

"She said she is harming her family," Bielecki said. "It's extreme. It's an awful thing that's happened. I just hope she doesn't get custody of the kids -- ever."'

Israel's Livni woos female voters ahead of poll

anthony · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'JERUSALEM, Feb 9 (Reuters) - With Israeli pollsters predicting a close national election on Tuesday, Foreign Minister Tzipi Livni is wooing female swing voters whose support could help her clinch victory.

Campaign ads for Livni's centrist Kadima party splashed over billboards and across websites promise a "different kind of prime minister" and urge Israelis to elect the country's first woman prime minister in three decades.
...
"I make decisions, not coffee," Livni told an audience in Tel Aviv of her role in the assault on Gaza, countering critics who have said she lacks high-level experience.

"This can also be a country in which women decide their future," she told a rally in Jerusalem to women wearing pink T-shirts saying: "The time has come for women to be first".
...
"It is sexist to say Livni lacks experience. Here the (male) generals think they are God," Shulamit Aloni, a retired dovish lawmaker, told Reuters of Livni, Israel's chief negotiator with the Palestinians and a senior cabinet minister through two wars.'

Book Review: 'Boys Adrift' by Leonard Sax

anthony · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While I agreed with Dr. Sax's main ideas when I heard him speak on the radio program, I wasn't sure what was behind his assertion that the American culture was in trouble unless we reverse this trend. After reading this book (in one day, I might add - I couldn't put it down), I'm sold. We cannot afford to have nearly one-fourth of our young men living at home, not working or contributing to society, avoiding responsibility and believing that this approach to life is just fine - but that's the way American society is headed. Something is wrong, and Dr. Sax believes he knows why American boys and young men can't find their way toward a purpose-filled life.

Dr. Sax makes a convincing case for each of his five factors, including the effects of estrogens on the physical development on boys. While I can't quite figure out how young parents will easily manage the switch from plastics containing PET to glass baby bottles (when did you last see a glass baby bottle for sale?), I think I'd give it a try if I were raising an infant now. My personal experiences as a substitute teacher, Scout leader and homeschooling parent all snapped into focus as I read Dr. Sax's explanations of the five factors that make boys less motivated, less healthy and less inclined to aspire to noble manhood. All of Dr. Sax's assertions match my personal observations.'

Groups Question $400 Million for Abuse Programs in Stimulus Bill

anthony · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, February 6 - Some groups worry that the $400 million in bill for abuse-reduction efforts will do little to stimulate the economy, and are calling on lawmakers to remove the funds until domestic violence programs show proof of effectiveness. The call comes from RADAR (Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting), a victim advocacy organization, as well as from other partner organizations.
...
Groups such as African-Americans for VAWA Reform believe the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) relies too heavily on law enforcement and ignores the needs of male abuse victims. Other problems include a rise in false accusations of domestic violence which lead to families unnecessarily being torn apart, and victims revictimized by abuse shelter staff, and immigration loopholes that grant permanent status to foreign nationals based on a simple allegation of abuse. In addition, statistics show that VAWA has not been effective in reducing domestic violence.'

Study: Smoking Pot May Increase Risk of Testicular Cancer

anthony · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marijuana use may increase the risk of developing testicular cancer, in particular a more aggressive form of the disease, according to a U.S. study published on Monday.

The study of 369 Seattle-area men ages 18 to 44 with testicular cancer and 979 men in the same age bracket without the disease found that current marijuana users were 70 percent more likely to develop it compared to nonusers.

The risk appeared to be highest among men who had reported smoking marijuana for at least 10 years, used it more than once a week or started using it before age 18, the researchers wrote in the journal Cancer.'

Blog: "WhyBoysFail.com" tracks boys' educational trends

anthony · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

'About' page here. Excerpt:

'That chart you see above is one reason why this issue is so intriguing: What happened in that time interval to motivate so many more girls than boys to aspire to higher education? That's a puzzle, but there are reasons beyond that puzzle to conclude this is an issue that will rise in importance. Regardless of why boys are relative slackers, the momentum of this social change appears unstoppable, at least in the near future. Women will increasingly dominate higher education. Within about ten years, the average U.S. campus will have two females for every male.

Given that both the College Board and U.S. Department of Education agree there are no economic reasons for these imbalances (men and women get equal income boosts from earning bachelor's degrees), something here is amiss. My own theory is that as the world has become more verbal, schools have allowed boys to slip behind in literacy skills.'

RADAR ALERT: Keep it Up: Tell the Senate DV Funding Doesn't Belong in an Economic Stimulus Bill

Matt · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The Economic Stimulus plan currently being considered by the Senate allocates 400 million dollars to fund ineffective domestic violence programs?[1].

Last week, we asked you to call three key Senators on the stimulus bill, Senators Ben Nelson, Susan Collins, and Arlen Specter regarding the proposed funding. This week, we ask you to contact those Senators again and two additional Senators, Sen. Olympia J. Snowe and Sen. Joe Lieberman.

Because of the importance of the stimulus package, you may be unable to get through on the Senators' main numbers in D.C. If you cannot get through, we ask you to either fax them or contact their district offices. The web pages with their district office contact information is included below:

Australia: Kids are in fact safer with Dads

Matt · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Australian Institute of Criminology has recently corrected an error in its National Homicide Monitoring Program 2006-07 Annual Report (see email below).

The original report stated that 7 homicides involved a mother and 15 involved male family members.

The corrected report states that 11 homicides involved a mother and 11 homicides involved a male family member. When the category of 'male family member' is broken down, we see that only 5 perpetrators were fathers, while another 5 five were de-facto partners of the mother who lived with the child (one father murdered two children). Importantly, no child victims were killed by a complete stranger in 200607.'

Mom accused of killing kids to plead insanity

anthony · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Brewer Monday pleaded "not responsible by reason of mental disease or defect," and will now be sent to a secure upstate psychiatric facility indefinitely, prosecutors said.
...
Brewer, prosecutors and Berkowitz all agreed to the plea after two independent psychiatric evaluations showed that, at the time she killed the three children, she didn't know that what she was doing was wrong.

"My granddaughter loved her children," said Brewer's grandmother Maebell Mickens, outside the courtroom. "I feel she's getting ready to get the help she needs."

Brewer, 28, is accused of drowning her three children in February 2008, and she later said she feared that her children were under a voodoo curse. Killed were Jewell Ward, 6, Michael Demesyeux, 5, and Innocent Demesyeux, 18 months.
...
The father of the youngest children, Innocent Demesyeux, said in a statement issued by his attorney last week that he was "shocked" that prosecutors would let Brewer plead insanity.

"The question of whether she is guilty or not by reason of insanity should be decided by regular people on a jury and not by lawyers and politicians," Demesyeux said in the statement.'

Mumbai suspect accuses female FBI agent of sexual abuse

arindamp · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The probe into the November 26 Mumbai terror attack took an unusual twist with one of the accused, Faheem Ansari, levelling sexual harassment allegations against a woman officer of America's Federal Bureau of Investigation.

An FBI team is conducting an independent probe into the attacks. Faheem has moved the court with his lawyer Ejaz Naqvi filing an application before an Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate alleging that a woman FBI officer, who had interrogated the accused, had "sexually harrassed him all through the night."
...
"According to Indian law, no foreign agency can be allowed to interrogate an Indian suspect and we have sought relief from the court," Naqvi said.
...
Ansari and Sabauddin were arrested last year in connection with the 2007 New Year eve attack on a CRPF camp in Rampur in Uttar Pradesh. The lone terrorist, Mohammed Ajmal Amir Kasab, arrested in the November 26 terror strikes is also presently in police custody till February 13.'

UK Guardian: This mess was made by men. Now let the women have their say

anthony · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a school of thought that the crisis was the product of overwrought masculinity on trading floors and in bank boardrooms. The mostly male commentary is in a similar vein, couched in language that is dehumanising, aggressive and militaristic.

We can't undo the crisis, but we can change the terms of the analysis so we think and talk about it in a more rounded way; so that we listen to the voices of women; and so that we bring some humanity into economic discourse. The harsh truth is that this clean-up is too important to be left to the men who made the mess.'

"Mistresses of the Universe"

anthony · 9 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Op-ed here. Excerpt:

'Banks around the world desperately want bailouts of billions of dollars, but they also have another need they're unaware of: women, women and women.
...
Wall Street is one of the most male-dominated bastions in the business world; senior staff meetings resemble a urologist's waiting room. Aside from issues of fairness, there's evidence that the result is second-rate decision-making.
...
"We found that a trader's morning testosterone level predicts his day's profitability," reported the study, published last year in The Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. Higher testosterone meant more risk-taking and, usually, more money.

On its own, that might suggest that men have an advantage on the trading floor. Yet the same study also suggested that elevated testosterone levels could lead to greater assumption of risk; high testosterone levels "may shift risk preferences and even affect a trader's ability to engage in rational choice." In other words: when male traders crash ... boy, they crash.'

UK: Male abuse is 'being ignored'

webdigr · 10 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men in their early 20s are just as likely to be abused by their partners as women, according to the latest government figures seen by Newsbeat.

6.4% of men in England and Wales between the ages of 20 and 24 say they were victims over the last year, compared with 5.4% of women.

The official definition of partner abuse includes non-physical forms like emotional bullying.

It also means more serious behaviour like threats and severe force.

...
Mark Brooks from the men's health charity Mankind reckons the issue of male domestic abuse is often ignored by the government, social services and the police.
...
Kevin Edgar from Masa, which operates a helpline for abused men, says blokes can be slow to come forward and recognise the problem.
...
"More and more men will come forward when they realise they are not the only ones being abused."
...
12% of all recorded incidents involved a male victim and female perpetrator up from 8% in 2000/1 although campaigners say that figure underestimates the scale of the problem as men are less likely to file an official police report than women.
...
On Tuesday Home Secretary Jacqui Smith announced a £3.5m package to help victims of domestic abuse.

The money will be used to safeguard the future of helplines and provide leaflets which will help families and friends of victims to identify and support them.'

White House Cabinet Position Campaign for Kim Gandy

anthony · 10 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On Sunday, February 8th, I got a series of e-mails alerting me to a blog campaign against a potential candidate to fill the top post at the US Department of Labor's Women's Bureau. Actually, the job wasn't even on my radar. I've been focused on the drama of the stimulus bill.

The candidate in question was the President of the National Organization for Women, Kim Gandy. I had just heard her speak in Washington D.C. about the imperative need to fund 1.6 million women's jobs. In addition, I was aware of her long history as a lawyer, fighting for a woman's right to fair and equal treatment.
...
My concern is the tone permeating the anti-Gandy rhetoric. Jonathan Alter of Newsweek pointed out at a 2008 new media conference that writers on the web, emboldened and sheltered by the cloak of anonymity, present invective posing as commentary and insight.'

A Fistful of Dollars: Obama and the Department of Education

anthony · 10 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The badly misnamed "American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009" appropriates roughly $150 billion for "education" purposes, more than double the current budget for the Department of Education. But the little-known truth is that the Department of Education's own supervisory body has identified 47 programs that should be eliminated, at a savings of $3.3 billion a year to taxpayers. The Women's Educational Equity, for instance, exists to support "educational equity for girls and women," but even the Department states, "There is no longer a need for a program focused on eliminating the educational gap for girls and women, as women have made educational gains that match or exceed those of their male peers." Still, the program remains. Moreover, the Office of Management of Budget singled out 758 congressional earmarks totaling $330 million in the Department of Education's 2008 budget alone.'

Don't just blame schools for dropout rate, Quebec minister says

anthony · 10 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MONTREAL -- Quebec's Liberal government fought off criticism yesterday that it has failed to rein in the province's soaring high-school dropout rate, which is getting worse despite repeated pledges to fix the problem.

Figures show that nearly 30 per cent of Quebec students quit public secondary schools before getting their diplomas in 2007, an increase of three percentage points since 2000.

Boys are dropping out more than girls, and in some school boards in the province, the rate is reaching levels of more than 40 per cent.

The Opposition Parti Québécois says the Charest government needs to cut teacher-student ratios and invest in after-school activities, along with other measures aimed at helping keep teens in school.'

UK: Male Victims of Domestic Violence covered by BBC

Anonymous · 10 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

There was plenty of coverage on the BBC in the UK today about the scandalous lack of help for male victims of domestic violence. Published just today: 'She'd put cigarettes out on me' Excerpt:

'Men in England and Wales aged between 20 and 24 are just as likely to be abused by their partners as women in the same age group. Campaigners claim not enough is being done by the police, social services and the government to tackle the problem. Read one victim's story.
...
"She would put cigarettes out on me. She'd send the kids into the back garden to play and then she'd corner me in the front room and just attack me.

"She'd be scratching my face, kicking, punching, spitting in my face. That was a regular thing."

Mark says the physical abuse wasn't that hard to deal with, but the psychological manipulation was the worst part because he had no control over it.

"Some nights maybe she'd go out and go missing, turn her phone off, and then come back and say she'd been with another man. All that was going on."'

Blog Have Your Say: Have you been the victim of male domestic abuse?

Boys face child porn charges for receiving cell phone pictures

Matt · 11 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FALMOUTH - Six middle school students could face child porn charges after a boy took a nude photo of his 13-year-old girlfriend and “sexted” it to his pals’ cell phones, cops said.

The six boys, ages 12 to 14, will be summoned to Falmouth District Court for a hearing to determine whether they should be charged with possessing, exhibiting or distributing child porn in the form of a text message photo, according to The Cape Cod Times.

Wendy Murphy, who lectures on sex crimes at the New England School of Law, said “sexting” almost has become an “epidemic.” Murphy said, “I know it seems heavy-handed to bring child porn charges. Law enforcement is using the only tool it has for what has become a huge problem nationwide.”'

Female coach sued by ex-player over hetrosexual orientation

Matt · 11 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MOUNT PLEASANT, Mich. (AP) - - Central Michigan and its women's basketball coach are being sued by a former player, who claims her heterosexuality was a factor in losing a scholarship after two seasons.

Brooke Heike said she fell out of favor with Sue Guevara immediately after the coach was hired in 2007.

Heike said Guevara told her she wore too much makeup and was not the coach's "type." That meant she wasn't a lesbian, according to a lawsuit filed last week in federal court in Bay City.

The former Romeo High School star lost her scholarship after the 2007-08 season.'

After bitter 4-year fight, he finally sees his son again

Matt · 11 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Choking back tears that had been building up for more than four and a half years, a New Jersey father tried to describe the emotions he felt at finally being able to hold and hug his son and tell the boy how much he loved him.

“It was the most beautiful thing I’ve seen since his birth. It was incredible. Amazing. I got to see my son,” David Goldman told TODAY’s Meredith Vieira Tuesday by phone from Brazil.

The previous day, accompanied by U.S. Rep. Chris Smith of New Jersey, Goldman had finally reached the end of a nightmare that began in June 2004 when his wife, Bruna, left with their son, Sean, for a two-week trip to visit family in her native Brazil. She never came back.'

No-contact order with girlfriend keeps man out of his own house

Matt · 11 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here Excerpt:

'EDMONTON -- In a bizarre case before the courts, an Edmonton man has been forbidden from going to his own home while his girlfriend - whom he has told to get out - is still living there.

Todd Shandro, 36, went before a judge yesterday to try to resolve the situation, but he was told there were jurisdictional issues and he has to take the matter to civil court.

"It's very sick what is happening here," said a frustrated Shandro. "I am the sole owner of the house. The mortgage and title are in my name and she is essentially a squatter.'

Reader-submitted essay: "The Wrong in Women's Rights"

Matt · 11 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The Wrong in Women's Rights
by E. Abdiel

Abortion. A cornerstone in the woman's movement. It is a cornerstone that claims it is a woman's sole right to decide the outcome of the unborn child inside her. Yet when this assertion is applied consistently to its end, it contradicts the arguments used to assign equal responsibility to men for the care and support of unplanned children.

Feminist ideology proclaims that what a woman does with her body should not be governed by government policy, the judgments and dictates of men, or conventional morality. A woman is to do what she wants with her body and her decisions are her own. Yet it's simple common sense to understand that if it's only her body and only her decision what she does with it (to abort or not abort), then congruently it is only her duty to be responsible for a decision that only she makes (child rearing). Feminist dogma stands in blatant contradiction to a simple rule of natural law that no one disputes in any other situation in our lives. And that is that there is an exact and direct correlation to the amount of authority we have in situations, to the amount of responsibility accessed to us for the decisions we make. In other words, it's completely illogical to say it's 100% my decisions to do as I wish with my body (premarital sex) but I'm only 50% responsible for the outcome of my decision to engage in sexual activity (pregnancy). And it's 100% my decision what is done to my body (to abort or not abort) but I'm only 50% responsible for the outcome of that decision also (child rearing). If you are 100% in control of your body, then it's 100% your decision to involve yourself in the risks associated with having premarital sex. And if it's 100% your decision to keep rather than abort an unborn child, then it's 100% your responsibility to raise and support that child after birth. Not 90%, not 75%, not 50% but rather a full 100%.

There is an ongoing trend in most feminist ideology that no one questions because it either self-servingly benefits them or because there is the very real fear of societal retaliation for speaking against it. And that is with nearly every feminist issue, women get to have it both ways. Women always receive the full benefits of every situation but never need to take the full responsibility that goes along with it. If a woman uses the rights or privileges she demands inappropriately and has to deal with the consequences of her actions, there's always partly or fully someone else to blame. And that someone else is almost always a man.

But let me make this clear. Even if abortion advocates did take the position that it is 100% a woman's right to decide the fate of an unborn child and also 100% their responsibility to provide support for the child after birth, I'd still argue they were wrong. Because both religion and science confirm that when conception takes place, what is inside a woman is not a lifeless mass of cells but a human being. Abortion advocates try to insinuate that the "life argument" is merely a religious one that science has yet to confirm. But science has long since confirmed that at conception a human life is created. Even scientists who are pro-choice will freely admit this when directly asked. Contrary to popular belief, faith in God is not necessary to know an embryo is a human life. And making it all the more egregious, it is life imparted by the sperm of a man. So if the sperm of a male is the life giving factor, why aren't a father's rights, from what is biologically half his, being represented? Why is a child only half a man's after a woman makes a decision that requires him to financially support the child for at least 18 years but it's not his before she make a decision to abort? In case you missed the gravity of that question and a central argument against this injustice, I will reiterate it. Why is a child only half a man's after a woman makes a decision that requires him to financially support the child for at least 18 years but not his before she makes a decision to abort? Doesn't ANYONE find this to be at least a little bit oppressive for him and convenient for her?

In legal circles and Constitutional terms this is a classic case of "being denied equal protection under the law". And although the Supreme Court has consistently acknowledged this infringement upon the rights of fathers, it will in the same breath refuse to do anything about it for what it calls "the greater good of society". Suffice it for me to say that rampant moral decline and statistical facts discrediting the Roe v. Wade decision as a source of "greater good" in society are too numerous to address at this time. Though the Court has the authority to make rulings based on the "greater good" and not "established law", these rulings should be based in fact not personal ideology. Most importantly, being that an embryo is scientifically declared a life, the taking of it is murder. And no one has the right to take innocent life, whether they are the one who imparts life (man) or carries it to birth (woman).

As someone said it best, "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness" --- Thomas Jefferson

It's puzzling how they missed that. It's the very first one.

But if abortion advocates did claim that in all situations it is a woman's sole decision to abort a child and sole responsibility to care for it, it would at least be harder to disprove (although not impossible). It would be closer to the truth and at least a little more honorable albeit still wrong; and albeit still murder. (For a clear and concise explanation of what the actual solution should be, feel free to email me at e.abdiel7-at-gmail.com) But because they don't claim this, it becomes obvious that their motivations are not to get to the truth or to do what is fair, but rather they are self serving, deceitful, and discriminatory in nature. There are always sacrifices to go along with the rights and privileges we have in life. So it behooves me to remind them that there is no such thing as a position that benefits you but doesn't require an equivalent amount of sacrifice and responsibility to sustain it.

And don't be misled by the many shrewd arguments used to place undue responsibility onto men. Pointing out a man's willingness to participate sexually is a typical talking point used for accessing 50% responsibility to him. But there is a difference between being a "willing party" and being a "responsible party". A man's willingness to participate in sex is irrelevant in accessing responsibility.

Case in point: There is a woman who owns a house and a man who has purchased a large amount of illegal drugs and now wants to use these drugs in her house because he has no place of his own. When he asks her, she initially tells him no so he leaves to go elsewhere. And why is she able to tell him he can't use drugs there? Because it is 100% her house and she is 100% responsible for what goes on there. Therefore, he has to abide by her rules. Now the man is obviously willing to use these illegal drugs in her house. You got that? He is willing. But the fact that he is willing to do these things has no bearing on whether or not these things will occur in her home. His willingness is completely irrelevant. If she says no, it's not going to happen. It is her decision and her decision alone on whether or not to put herself and her house at risk. So if this same woman decides at any point that she too is willing to use drugs with him in her household, it still remains irrelevant that the man was equally willing. Because the man's willingness wasn't the determining factor for their drug use in her home but her complete authority to make that decision was. That's why it wouldn't be the man's responsibility if the police raided her home and the state government confiscated her house. No court would ever entertain the argument that a woman willingly participating in behavior that led to the government confiscating her home must be compensated by a man for 50% of her loss because he was an equally willing participant in her home. Yet the obvious correlation between this and stating a man is 50% responsible for a woman getting pregnant, when only she has 100% authority to decide what she subjects her body to, is no longer even questioned by a hoodwinked society. Being equally willing in an act doesn't automatically mean someone is equally responsible for all the consequences that each party in a situation must face. Willingness alone is not the determining factor. The determining factors are what you have authority over, and what you are responsible for, as well as your willingness.

As someone said it best, "The presence of willingness is irrelevant when the absence of responsibility is present." --- E. Abdiel

Some argue that a man can just as easily say no to sex making him equally responsible for the negative results. This is another shrewd but misleading argument used to try and place 50% of the responsibility upon men. Continuing with the female homeowner analogy, for a man to be held responsible for what occurs in a woman's house would presume that he either acted through force, without her knowledge, or at least as part owner of that house. Consensual sex is not an act of force or ignorance. And the entire premise behind the whole pro-choice argument is that a man doesn't own or have authority over even 1% of a woman's body let alone 50%. So that rules out the "part owner" defense. The fact of the matter is, a man may be completely capable of stopping drug use in a woman's house, but being capable is altogether different than being responsible for stopping it. This common sense and legal understanding is exactly why a man would never be held accountable in a court of law for the loss of a woman's house for their consensual drug use. And neither should a man be held accountable for what happens to a woman's body (pregnancy) simply because he is capable of stopping sex from occurring. Because a woman's body is solely hers, it is only the woman and not the man, who is responsibility to stop what may happen to her. Only she is capable and responsible. Because only she has authority over what she does with her body before and after sex. Am I not only reiterating the most sacred tenant of the woman's movement?

An argument one may use to discredit such analogies is to say that if the police raid the house, both the man and woman will get arrested. And because there is blame and responsibility placed on the man also, it proves he too is accountable just as the woman is. This is the only argument with any validity. However, it doesn't disprove my assertions but rather confirms them. Because even though both the woman and man willingly participated in the exact same act that produced the police raid, there is one significant fact that separates these two individuals. The man chose to use drugs knowing what consequences his particular actions might cause him personally and the woman did the same. Yet if you compare the negative consequences, of similar actions, by equally willing partners, you'd see different results because only the woman is the 100% owner of the house. Therefore the man might also be arrested and punished, but only for what he is 100% responsible for in that situation; which simply is himself. Not her and not the loss of her house, but just himself. The woman on the other hand is not only responsible for herself but also the negative consequences that affected her house. Because even though she did the same act, she knowingly took a bigger risk and therefore is paying a bigger price. Because she had more to risk, she had more to lose. Yet the woman, and the woman alone, still made the decision to continue. Is it fair that the man pays a smaller price for willingly participating in the same act? Of course it is. At least we consider it fair in every scenario in life except when we reassign 50% responsibility onto men for the sexual decisions women make with their bodies.

When you clear away all the feminist rhetoric and talking points, it comes down to this: Women's rights activists and their supporters have used the legal system to remove perceived injustices against women because they hate the fact that men biologically have less to lose for doing similar sexual acts. They refuse to see that by subverting the natural order of things, injustices are actually being carried out against men. Injustices done by laying the responsibility and blame in the incorrect place; thereby disparaging the character of all men. Injustices done by making the responsibility strictly a financial one; thereby teaching men, women, and children that the only important role that fathers truly play in a child's life is monetary. Injustices done by only giving lip service to fathers being equally important to their children; while stripping them of every ability and right they have to be fathers. Mothers may publically say they want men to be fathers to their children but what they mean is as long as it is on their terms; financial and otherwise. Fathers may be permitted the occasional suggestion, but mothers must hold ultimate veto power. Even in the best case scenarios of joint custody, with physical custody almost always given to mothers, fathers have little to no say in their children's protection, direction, and upbringing. This is a direct assault to a man's pride, manhood, and natural instinct to lead. At best, women's rights activists have used the legal system to effectively relegate fathers to have no more influence over their children than a mother's friend, relative, or regular babysitter. And more often than not, even less influence than that. In short, they take away what truly makes him a father and a man and then demand payment for it. And then society sanctimoniously wonders why men in these situations gravitate away from their children instead of toward them.

But as with most feminist causes, they do more harm than good to those they are supposedly fighting for. The leaders of the women's movement don't care in the slightest that they are destroying the lives of the average woman also (or the lives of the children inside and outside the womb). That's because the women they declare they are trying to help, protect, and empower are secondary to their cause. I will say that again because it is vital for any woman reading this to understand. Women are secondary to their cause. Secondary because they are committed to "ideas" rather than "actualities"; "agendas" rather than "realities". Adversity and unhappiness is now the reality for most women. Studies show that most women will describe their lives as unhappy rather than happy. This is a direct result of the political, legal, cultural and moral changes stemming from the woman's movement. But before the woman's movement, despite certain inequities, most women described themselves as happy. But in the minds of those who support the radical ideas of the woman's movement, the typical woman's reality should be sacrificed for the sake of their "idea" of the way it should be.

And understand this also: When feminist supporters use the media, legal system, and government policies to consistently reassign responsibility and blame to men, it causing women to become indoctrinated into a culture of entitlement that takes responsibility and then shame off of all their actions. This is how we've gone from a culture where being a single mother was something to be avoided, to a culture where saying "I'm a single mother" is a source of pride; a badge of honor; an accomplishment. It is now something that is said to inspire positive feelings and preferential treatment in those who hear it. This mentality, instilled by the women's movement, has undeniably brought about the exact attitudes that cause women to more and more likely not care if they entwine themselves in the precarious sexual situations that feminists are supposedly fighting to protect them from. Because now women feel there is little consequence, less responsibility, no shame and therefore no deterrent to cease illicit behavior. On the contrary, there are only a multitude of reasons to increase it. But what feminist never tell you about is the almost assured adversity, pain, poverty, and unhappiness that comes from their casual sexual encounters; whether pregnancy occurs or not. This is the fruit born, not from men as feminists and the media portray, but from the underpinnings of the women's movement. The so-called friend and protector of women.

As someone said it best, "With friends like these, who needs enemies." --- Unknown.

So it is apparent that women are taught to feel oppressed by the biological fact that they can get pregnant from their irresponsible actions but a man cannot. And because it is impossible to direct their anger at God or nature for making them this way, they blame the only other possible suspect in this so-called injustice against them. MEN. Men and their misogynistic plots to make them second class citizens. This irrational and biased mindset is taught to our daughters as children and reinforced throughout their lifetime. Though it is blatant prejudice, it is such repetitive propaganda that even a majority of men have succumbed to its trickery. So even though women know only they can get pregnant, it now appears their remedy is to act as irresponsibly as men can, have a man pick up half the tab for choices only they make about their bodies, then have society praise them for their courage and selflessness for choosing to become a single mother, while denying men the same choice about becoming fathers.

But the dirty little secret about single motherhood is that most prison inmates are the products of single parent homes. And most men who commit rape are products of single parent homes. And most married women who eventually decide to get divorced are products of single parent homes. And most families living in poverty or are welfare recipients are single parent families. And the physical abuse, neglect, and murder of children is rarely committed by fathers but rather mothers, most of whom are single mothers (yet television and movies exclusively and inaccurately portray fathers as the physical abusers of children). And most juvenile delinquency, juvenile crime, adolescent substance abuse, high school drop-outs, teenage runaways, teenage homelessness, teenage suicides, teenage promiscuity, teenage pregnancy which leads to more single mothers, are products of single family homes. Nearly every critical problem we face in society can be linked back to single parent homes. Eliminate the single parent phenomenon, which overwhelmingly consists of single mothers, and you eliminate most of our societal problems.

Having said that, history has shown us that barring the downfall and destruction of society itself (which is not far off), followed by a re-evaluating of our laws and lifestyle choices, this will never happen. Because Democrat and Republican politicians at the federal, state, and local level, are too afraid of not being re-elected if they cease creating policies strengthening single motherhood. And the legal system, bolstered by Roe v. Wade, finds ways to subvert the will of the people and/or the Constitution via judicial activism by creating laws in support of the feminist agenda rather than interpreting it as is their function. And the mainstream media with its liberal, secular, progressive agenda is all too willing to perpetuate the single mother as simultaneously a selfless heroine and victim of male oppression. And women's rights advocates refuse to inform women and the general public that most of our societal problems are stemming from illegitimacy because their ideas are more important than our realities. For them the end doesn't just justify the means, the end justifies our end. But maybe we should just close our eyes to the truth and start looking at it as they do.

After all, at least it's all done in the name of equality.

But as someone said it best, "Be careful what you ask for, you just might get it." --- Unknown.

CNN Video: Police Say Mother Tossed Newborn In A Lake

anthony · 11 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Apparently the woman 'casually' walked to the lake and threw the baby in the water with the umbilical cord still attached.

Daughter Set Mother on Fire, Georgia Police Say

anthony · 11 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'NORCROSS, Ga. — A Norcross mother is recovering from severe burns after police said she was deliberately set on fire.

Investigators said the assault occurred Tuesday afternoon at a residence on Langston Road.

Norcross Police Capt. Brian Harr said Na Yong Pak, 31, was booked on an aggravated assault charge.

Harr said Pak allegedly doused the unnamed 50-year-old victim with some type of accelerate and set her ablaze. The woman suffered second and third degree burns. She was taken to Grady Memorial Hospital for treatment. Her condition was not immediately available.

Police said Pak has a prior arrest for domestic violence.'

Agency: Housing for disabled workers criminal

anthony · 11 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'IOWA CITY, Iowa - An Iowa state agency said Tuesday it intends to file criminal charges against the party responsible for lodging 21 mentally disabled factory workers in an unsafe, poorly heated building.

The state Department of Inspections and Appeals would file charges of operating a health care facility without a license, but it's unclear who can be charged, said agency spokesman Dave Werning.

"We're pursuing criminal charges," he said. "But the suspects have yet to be determined."'

Ed. note: "Workers" = "men" Funny how they don't use the word "men" in the headline. Funny like a heart attack.

CNN Video: Women face less unemployment

anthony · 11 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. As I'm sure many of you know, feminist groups have been complaining the stimulus package ignores women. Groups like NOW have been pushing for more money to create jobs in female dominated professions. Guess what -- according to this report, not only is women's unemployment lower, but the job market for health care and teaching is actually growing.

Canadian Columnist Recognizes the Severity of PAS

Sheldon · 12 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article can be read here. Halifax Chronicle Herald columnist Peter Duffy wrote a piece on parental alienation syndrome on Tuesday, recognizing it as a very serious issue and sympathizing with the two men he mentions in his column. It's particularly interesting because it highlights some women's vanity leading up to alienating their children from their fathers, as one of the men mentioned in the article states the "reason" why his partner did this to him: "My partner said to me, 'You're the first man who ever said 'no' to me,'" The article concludes with the important recognition of the children caught in between these vindictive quarrels. Excerpt:

'Welcome to the unbelievable world of parental alienation, a relatively little-known syndrome spawned in the toxic atmosphere of couples who fall out of love.

Essentially, it’s when a bitter parent, usually the one with custody, systematically poisons the minds of the children against the other parent.

What was once considered merely collateral damage during bitter divorce proceedings is now being seen in a new light.

A few weeks ago in Ontario, for example, a judge removed three children from their mother and sent them to a deprogramming centre after ruling she had deliberately alienated them against their father.'

Two cops on the same force discover they are father and son digitalhermit · 12 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

"Chris Walker would have searched the world over to find his biological dad. But it turns out his father was sitting right across from him.

An astounding father-son reunion, chronicled in a report by Ann Curry on TODAY Thursday, came together as the result of an unexpected confession from a mother and a bit of detective work from an inquisitive cop in Petersburg, Virgina."

"From Ideology to Inclusion 2009" conference is scheduled

Matt · 12 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

http://www.cafcusa.org/

"From Ideology to Inclusion 2009: New Directions in Domestic Violence Research and Intervention

Most presenters serve on the editorial board of the new peer-reviewed journal, Partner Abuse, published quarterly by Springer publishing."

Friday-Sunday, June 26-28, 2009 in Los Angeles, CA.

Conference flier here (.pdf file).

Woman charged with setting fires in Upper Darby

Matt · 12 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

No, can't be true. She's just sooo cute! =) Story here. Excerpt:

'A 19-year-old Upper Darby woman who was observed on a store surveillance camera singing, "The fire company is going to be mad at me," was arrested and charged with setting seven fires in the township early yesterday.

Amanda Gessner of the 300 block of Childs Avenue was charged with arson, causing or risking catastrophe, criminal mischief, and related charges.

Upper Darby Police Superintendent Michael Chitwood said he did not believe Gessner was involved in any of the nearly two dozen arsons that have plagued the Coatesville area.

Gessner was seen at previous fire scenes taking pictures with her cell phone, Upper Darby Deputy Fire Chief John Hicks said. A few weeks ago, she gave firefighters a "hard time" at the Garrettford Station on Edmonds Avenue, Hicks said.'

India: Now, hubby files a dowry case

webdigr · 13 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The man claimed that he was given dowry though he did not ask for it. Excerpt:

'A husband facing a dowry case, has sought to turn the tables on his wife and in-laws by filing a case against them alleging that they had given him dowry though he had not asked for the same.

...as per the law, giving dowry is as much a crime as demanding it and hence, attracts equal punishment under Section 3 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961.
...
...The judge has ordered the police to investigate the matter and file a first information report (FIR).

This is a first of its kind case in Karnataka where a husband has filed a case against his wife and in-laws for their 'confessional admission' of giving dowry 'reserving his right to defend himself against allegations'.
...
Virat's case is now sure to arm organisations battling for harassed husbands.'
...
In the last few years, several outfits have emerged to fight the injustices being meted out to married men.

DV groups relinquishes state funding after refusing to help male victims

Anonymous · 13 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

ABUSED and battered women brave enough to front Gosford Court could do so without help after the Central Coast domestic violence intervention response team handed back its State Government funding.

The dramatic decision followed orders from the Community Services Department for the team to care for male victims of domestic violence at its women's "safe room" at the courthouse.
The order shocked long-time domestic violence volunteers Pat Gaunt and Kaye Spicer.

The intervention response team has workers at Brisbane Water command police stations who contact victims as soon as possible to guide them through the court process.

The service has successfully operated under the auspices of the domestic violence court assistance scheme for five years.

But after "constant interference" by the department, the management committee unanimously voted to hand back responsibility and funding.

"We are not prepared to compromise the integrity of our service by operating under the onerous and inappropriate conditions being imposed by the department," Ms Spicer said.'

I've said it before (I've been saying it for years), and I'll continue to say it: "this De Guello!" ideology of the Gynocentry is going to be their undoing. When they so adamantly refuse to lift a finger to address the problem of battered men that they'd prefer to return funding then assist the aforementioned battered men.

How does this speak for their desire to achieve anything beyond perpetuate their own misandric (ie male bashing) 'Cult of Victimology' rhetoric? Even sadder when you stop to consider the vast majority of academic study reports reports men are battered in roughly equitable ratios as are women. CDC studies, DoJ studies, NIJ studies, NAMHC studies, etc. all offer essentially the same returns, that battered men are a serious concern for sociologists.

So these battered women's advocates: are they in their line to assist victims of battering? Or merely perpetuate their own brand of hatred for men under the guise of assisting female victims of men?

Gunner Retired

Australia: National Men's Health Policy Consultation Forums Announced

Matt · 14 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

National Men's Health Policy Consultation Forums Announced

The Australian Government has announced the dates for community consultation forums in Tasmania, Sydney and Canberra for its National Men's Health Policy. We encourage you to circulate this email widely and attend the forum closest to you to let your views about men's health issues be heard.

Women tougher on friends than men: Study

anthony · 14 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Contrary to the nurturing images of sisterhood put forth by chick flicks, female friendships can be a ticking time bomb of fickleness and judgment, according to results of a study in the journal Psychological Science.

Traditional views hold that women are more socially co-operative than men, but researchers from the Universite du Quebec at Montreal, Harvard University and Emmanuel College in Boston found female same-sex friendships are significantly less tolerant, more volatile, and likelier to degrade based on a single negative incident than male same-sex friendships.'

Sign a Petition for Male Victims of DV

Anonymous · 14 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Here are two things you can do to help male victims of domestic abuse:

1. Sign this petition. Excerpt:

For decades domestic abuse has been looked upon as a social problem of violence against women by men. Battered women's advocates and others concerned about domestic violence have created and funded over 2000 non profit agencies across the country that help victims. For more than 20 years these agencies have specialized in offering a full spectrum of services to what has been considered the traditional victims of domestic violence, women and children.

2. Help the Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women (http://www.dahmw.org/) receive a $5,000 grant. Voting online begins January 19, 2009 through March 2, 2009. To vote online visit http://www.communitymattersmore.com/. We are starting up male victim/survivor support groups in Feb. 2009. Contact us for more information.

UK: Primary teacher who sent boy explicit texts jailed

Anonymous · 14 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A primary school teacher who bombarded a 14-year-old-boy with sexually explicit text messages was jailed yesterday.

Lynn Walls, 42, befriended the boy after logging on to the interactive fantasy internet game World of Warcraft.
...
She was jailed yesterday for 12 months after a court heard how she left the teenager, now 15, feeling suicidal.
...
She was banned from working with children for life and placed on the Sex Offenders' Register for ten years.'

UK: 13-YO boy becomes dad with 15-YO girl: Where's arrest warrant?

Matt · 14 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'INNOCENT-eyed Alfie Patten spent his first night acting as a 13-year-old dad and declared: “It was easier than I thought.”

The four-footer — who looks no more than eight — said: “I know I’m young, but I plan to be a good dad.”

As he went on the PlayStation with 15-year-old girlfriend Chantelle Steadman, he added: “I think we’ll be good parents. I’ll have to work extra hard at school.”

Chantelle looked up from 18-rated action game Saints Row II to admit her first night out of hospital since having 7lb 3oz daughter Maisie had been tough and had left her “in a daze”.
...
Mickey and Minnie Mouse hold hands, surrounded by lovehearts, on the headboard of her bed — where Maisie was conceived when Alfie was just 12 and Chantelle 14.'

If the girl were 13 and the boy 15, wouldn't he be facing charges right now?

Sheila's Kili Climb Update

Matt · 14 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From ACFC's recent newsletter here.

'Gransma Sheila Peltzer left the United States January 21, 2009 for Africa attempting to scale 19,200' Mount Kilimanjaro. She dedicated the climb to Shared Parenting and Familial Dysautonomia. At 4:00 a.m guides awakened Sheila after five days of climbing to prepare for the hike to the summit. At 4:00 p.m., after walking twelve hours her guides suggested she end the effort and return to the base camp. Sheila indicates the air gets thin at 17,500'.

Wanting to go further Sheila told the guides she was not experiencing any of the signs associated with altitude problems such as headaches, cramping, lightheadedness, chest pains, etc. She simply needed to stop and catch her breath every once in a while. The guides response, "Sheila, stopping often to catch your breath is the primary sign of having reached your limit." So, she pulled out her banner and what you see above is Sheila just beneath the summit telling the world of her support for Shared Parenting. At age 70 (at any age) it's a great achievement, we're proud of you Sheila, thanks!! And thanks to all of you who made a contribution in support of these causes.'

Release deal for smothered infant's mother

Matt · 17 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother who smothered her son with a pillow then left him in her car where he was overcome by exhaust fumes has been released into the community.

Karyn Louise Kemp, 34, admitted responsibility for killing her seven-month-old son Jacob in January last year.

She was found not guilty because of mental incompetence.'

User-submitted essay: The Wrong in Women's Rights (Part II)

Matt · 17 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The Wrong in Women's Rights (Part II)
by E. Abdiel

Some may have thought that I plainly stated in Part I of my editorial "THE WRONG IN WOMEN'S RIGHTS" what the correct course of action should be for assigning financial responsibility to men for illegitimate children (If you have not read this, please go to http://news.mensactivism.org/node/11762). Let me make this clear. I did not plainly state it. My intent in writing the original "THE WRONG IN WOMEN'S RIGHTS" is threefold.

First, my intent was to use the arguments of those who support a woman's sole right to choose an abortion to discredit their own arguments concerning a father's responsibility in raising illegitimate children. By following their "My body, My Choice" argument to its logical conclusion, it discredits their position that a man is 50% responsible for the child rearing of illegitimate children. The fact that men are denied equal protection under the law because of their position is not in dispute which the Supreme Court itself acknowledges (although their validity as a credible adjudicating branch of our Federal Government is increasingly suspect). The argument that men are 50% responsible for illegitimate children when it is "Their body, Their Choice" is illogical, unethical, and contradicts principles clearly stated in our Constitution as well as practiced through our laws in comparable scenarios. So by pointing out the inherent flaw in their argument, it forces those who are truly seeking fairness to acknowledge that the laws on the books cannot be correct. That alone may not provide us with the exact solution, and my initial editorial "THE WRONG IN WOMEN'S RIGHTS" does not do that, but it does point us in the right direction. As discovered through my everyday interactions, the first step in changing minds is to logically point out the error in what is currently being practiced.

Secondly, my intent was to make sure that men continue with the dialogue concerning this issue and do not simply surrender to the mindset that things are as they should be as so many men and women now believe. We may never correct this injustice (and due to a multitude of unstated reasons I do not believe we ever will) but we should not simply submit to it. As I stated in the first editorial, "…they take away what truly makes him a father and a man and then demand payment for it". They may take away from us what makes us fathers but to acquiesce to their second class treatment, without a word of protest, is to allow them to take away what truly makes us men.

And lastly, my intent was to show by your own thoughts and comments that this issue will never have the slightest hope of any resolution until the few men who have enough courage to fight against it start speaking with one voice. Debating minor points is one thing but our own positions are so far apart that we fight against ourselves as much as we fight against this injustice. Some men who are pro-choice see the inherent flaw in the "My body, My choice" argument and want to have no financial responsibility for the decisions that are solely made by women about the unborn. Other men who also see the inherent flaw in their argument still do not fully accept this solution because they are pro-life and feel this is allowing a larger problem in order to correct a lesser one. Some men actually reiterate the feminist position that men shouldn't have any voice when it concerns abortion and it doesn't seem fair that a woman should assume all financial responsibility when they both had sex (This despite my editorial clearly demonstrating that in life, similar acts alone do not equate to equal responsibility for all parties involved). These men are willing to accept 50% financial responsibility as long as they are legally given 50% say in all decisions before birth (Not taking into consideration that it is impossible for both to be fully represented if one party is determined to say no to an abortion and the other is equally determined to say yes). Other men seek no rights before a child is born but only equal rights, in law and in practice, over the lives of their children once they are born (Not taking into consideration the men who want the equal right to choose to become a parent. Because women not only decide when and if they become mothers to their benefit, but against a man's will they decide if and when a man becomes a father to his detriment). Some men don't care at all about the principles stated in the editorial even though they too take issue with the current laws. For them, nothing is worth reading if they hear the word "religion" mentioned. Believing this indicates an irrational bias, they are unable to recognize the bias in their own belief. It didn't matter that legal, scientific, and common sense arguments were used, and not religion, to advance the position. Though people of faith also agree with our legal and scientific arguments and will argue in such a way in secular forums, they are often excluded as partners simply because they don't solely need the law or science to reach the same conclusion we all believe in. All of our differing viewpoints, which are from a negligible minority that the public receives unsympathetically and with ridicule, are only the tip of the iceberg.

So I ask you this: Why do we expect others to change the law when we our divided and cannot even agree as to what the law should be ourselves?

Here is one of the main problems in many men's reasoning. It is the same problem that feminist had in their reasoning. It's the same problem all categories of people have in a society increasingly based on entitlements. People on all sides keep stating what they want. And what they want is what they say the law should be. But it isn't about what YOU want. You may not get everything you want. It is about being fair but simultaneously realizing that what is fair does not mean that everyone gains or loses the exact same thing in a negative situation. There are a multitude of factors that determine the level of responsibility assessed and what one's responsibility actually is. And these factors may dictate fairness differently for different people. EQUAL OUTCOMES WITHOUT REGARD TO OUR DIFFERENCES IS NOT EQUALITY. IT IS THE EXACT OPPOSITE OF EQUALITY. To ignore our differences when considering issues is to impose a higher and more oppressive standard upon one party. This is exactly how the current laws we protest against came to be. To continue in this mindset when trying to resolve this issue is not only futile but hypocritical and will cause you to thrust upon women a solution as flawed and discriminatory as the one now thrust upon men.

When negative situations happen, fairness and the responsibility assessed to us are determined by our individual circumstances. It is not simply based on a universally set result for everyone. Sometimes we determine responsibility and fairness due to someone's age or mental acuity (we sentence children and the mentally handicapped to lighter penalties than adults to ensure they're being FAIRLY treated). Sometimes we determine responsibility and fairness because of someone's financial holdings (we distribute larger fines on big business than we do on small business to ensure they are EQUALLY affected by their actions). And as demonstrated by the female homeowner in Part I of "The Wrong in Women's Rights", we always determine accountability based on what we are personally responsible for controlling (unspoken for drugs found in the glove compartment of a car are automatically attributed to the owner not the passenger to ensure the appropriate person is held RESPONSIBLE). And so on and so on.

But the only kinds of individual circumstances we are not allowed to consider, even though they are glaringly different, are our biological circumstances. That's because we have been taught by the woman's movement and political correctness that it is sexist, discriminatory, and unfair to even consider such a thing when making these decisions (as if the biological circumstances of being male does not require things of men that it does not of women in a multitude of situations). If we are ever to correct this problem, we need to understand that we do not achieve equality by ignoring our differences. Rather we need to realize that because we are different, we each have different responsibilities we must meet. Fulfilling your unique responsibility while your partner fulfills theirs, will not only achieve a common goal but the equality we all seek. And understanding that we each have different but equally important responsibilities will lead us to the answer as it concerns a man's responsibility in raising illegitimate children.

Keeping this in mind, the answer to the problem is this: A man should not be held financially responsible for illegitimate children. A man should only have full legal rights and be held financially responsible for children conceived in marriage or conceived outside of but born in marriage. It should be the man's sole decision how much, if at all, he decides to contribute to the financial support of illegitimate children unless otherwise stated by a legally binding court order THAT CAN ONLY BE INSTIGATED VIA A FATHER'S PETITION. All requests for legally recognized financial support of illegitimate children will be not be heard unless requested by the father and agreed to by the mother. However, the direction and upbringing of an illegitimate child should be the uncontested right of the mother. Men should have no legal right to their illegitimate children without a legally binding court order THAT CAN ONLY BE INSTIGATED VIA A MOTHER'S PETITION. It should be the mother's sole right to determine the extent, if at all, that anyone, including the father, is involved in an illegitimate child's life. All requests for legal rights to illegitimate children will not be heard unless requested by the mother and agreed to by the father.

This is not the best solution, it is the only solution.

Every concern would be addressed if we returned to the way society has dealt with this situation since civilization began. Including our own society before the so-called intellectuals thought they could improve upon thousands and thousands of years of history. The reason this has worked throughout history is because there is a built in deterrent for promiscuous behavior and a built in incentive for responsible behavior for both men and women. Women risk economic hardships for their irresponsible sexual behavior unless they marry a man they deem worthy to assist in the financial support of their children. Men risk their influence over and a relationship with their children for their irresponsible sexual behavior unless they marry a woman they deem worthy to bear their children. Each party assumes their unique risk if they choose to participate in premarital sex. In this situation, both men and women are equally responsible for their irresponsible sexual behavior.

Many men who are currently fighting for access to the lives of their illegitimate children may not initially like this anymore than women who have won financial support for their illegitimate children. If you are one of these men, understand this: Your initial opposition is stemming from injustices carried out against you for an act you took under ambiguous assertions and unfair laws. It is not stemming from the way the law should be. After all, when society tells a man that he has equal rights to his children under all situations but laws are only put in place to guarantee a woman's sole right, how can you not feel as if an injustice has taken place against you? But if men and women clearly understood what society and an unbiased law expects of them BEFORE an illegitimate child is born, they would not perceive their circumstance as injustice even if they don't get everything they want from the situation. Men as well as women would understand that they are simply paying an unpleasant price for their irresponsible decisions; just as they use to understand before "our intellectual superiors" established our current laws. Different but equally important responsibilities. Different but equal consequences for irresponsible behavior.

This would reduce illegitimacy and single parent homes, which is the driving force behind most societal problems, to statistical non-relevance. Though this would not change the inequities in our abortion laws, even pro-life supporters can whole-heartedly support this because abortion would also become a rare occurrence in the lives of women (currently 1 in 6 women have had at least one abortion). And though abortion would still be our country's most divisive topic, a woman's sole decision to abort or not abort a child outside of marriage, thereby forcibly deciding for a man if he will become a father who must financially support an illegitimate child, would no longer be an issue. Abortion would still be the woman's sole decision to make but she would accordingly take sole responsibility for her decision. The Roe v. Wade decision, whether you agree with it or not (and I strongly disagree), would become a completely unrelated debate. Suffice it for me to say, all the moral and legal repercussions that are currently crippling our society that would be greatly diminished or completed resolved are too numerous to fathom. Our society itself would be transformed.

Again, this is not the best solution, it is the only solution.

And until we as men come to understand this solution and begin to speak on it with one voice --- to our legislators, to the media, to our wives, to our daughters, to our sisters, to our girlfriends, to our friends, and to other men --- we should consider ourselves culpable in the injustices taken against us.

Spurned belly dancer jailed for eight-year hate campaign against ex-husband

Proud_to_be_a_man · 17 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original Story here. A whopping FOUR MONTHS for making her ex-husband's life a living Hell. As usual, reverse the sexes and the sentence would be more like FOUR YEARS. Excerpt:

"A husband whose ex-wife subjected him to a bizarre hate campaign has spoken out after she was finally jailed following 11 arrests for harassment.

Judith Holmes-O'Brien, a 44-year-old professional belly dancer, was convicted of breaching a restraining order against contacting ex-husband Barry.

A court heard she hurled abuse at Mr Holmes-O'Brien's new partner and told his staff and customers he was a paedophile."

UK: 20-something men more likely to fave DV than 20-something women

anthony · 17 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New statistics suggest that men in their early 20s are MORE likely to be abused by their partner than women the same age. It's not a subject that's much talked about. On Newsbeat, we're changing that.

The official definition of partner abuse includes non-physical forms like emotional bullying as well as physical force. But men in this age range have been on the receiving end of all forms, including sometimes severe violence.
...
So why are men in this age at such risk? Are 20-something women becoming more aggressive? Are men less able to defend themselves? And is this a taboo that's now being talked about for the first time?
...
Reporting the crime carries risks too. Some men clearly feel that telling police can lead to the finger of blame being pointed at them. One, who wants to stay anonymous, texted us to say "ex girlfriend pushed me down the stairs ,i called the police and they locked me up for three hours and made me walk home with dislocated toes cos they did not believe me". Others say they were threatened with assault charges - even though they were the victim.'

Australia: Senate Select Committee on Men's Health established

Matt · 17 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Men's Health Australia:

Wednesday February 18, 2009
Senate Select Committee on Men's Health

The Australian Senate has established a Select Committee on Men's Health to inquire into general issues related to the availability and effectiveness of education, supports and services for men's health. Submissions close on 27th February. Many have wondered why this inquiry was established, considering the public consultation process currently underway to develop Australia's first long-awaited National Men's Health Policy.

The Senate Select Committee on Men's Health is a public inquiry with open and transparent reporting of its findings to parliament and publication of all submissions received. The outcome of the Men's Health Policy consultation process, however, will ultimately be decided by bureaucrats behind closed doors. While we are hopeful that the ultimate policy recommendations will be positive, we cannot be guaranteed that the final policy will not be based upon tired old male-deficit perspectives which have unfortunately dominated government policy for the past 30 years (typified by the approach "it's men's own fault they are unhealthy").

The Government might also shy away from continuing the much-needed reform of the Family Law Court and the Child Support Agency, two institutions which have arguably been significant contributors to the shameful suicide rate amongst separated fathers. The reform process was initiated by the previous Coalition Government with bipartisan support from the then Labor Opposition in 2005/2006. Unfortunately this process of reform has stalled and would appear to be in danger of being wound back.

The Select Committee on Men's Health could be seen as an 'insurance policy' of sorts that might persuade the government bureaucrats to create the broad, world-class Men's Health Policy that Australian men and boys desperately need, rather than a toothless watered-down policy that sits and gathers dust.

We would strongly advise individuals and organisations who support the health and wellbeing of men and boys to lodge submissions to the Select Committee on Men's Health before the closing date on 27th February. A submission can be two lines, two paragraphs or two pages - it doesn't need to be a weighty academic paper. Please pass this urgent request onto your networks.

More information about the inquiry

The Senate has established a Select Committee on Men's Health to inquire into general issues related to the availability and effectiveness of education, supports and services for men's health, including but not limited to:

1. level of Commonwealth, state and other funding addressing men's health, particularly prostate cancer, testicular cancer, and depression,
2. adequacy of existing education and awareness campaigns regarding men's health for both men and the wider community,
3. prevailing attitudes of men towards their own health and sense of wellbeing and how these are affecting men's health in general, and
4. the extent, funding and adequacy for treatment services and general support programs for men's health in metropolitan, rural, regional and remote areas.

The committee is to report by 30 May 2009. Submissions are due by 27 February 2009 and may be submitted online or emailed to menshealth.sen-at-aph.gov.au. For further information see http://www.aph.gov.au/Senate/committee/menshealth_ctte/index.htm or phone (02) 6277 3559.

For further information, contact:

Committee Secretary
Senate Select Committee on Men's Health
Department of the Senate
PO Box 6100
Parliament House
Canberra ACT 2600
Australia

India: Pubs, Liquor Shops and Women Empowerment crusader · 18 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One fine evening all the women surrounded the country liquor shop and the ahaataa. They were holding placards in their hands demanding closure of the establishment. All the men who were inside the ahaataa were beaten with footwear. In many cases wife / sister of the man being beaten was cheering the crowd to do a more thorough job. Police watched as spectator only ensuring that the beating did not cross limits. The next day, authorities decided to shift the liquor shop away from the area. The women were jubilant. They had emerged victorious and felt empowered.

The above incident was not reported in any newspaper or electronic media. Such incidents have taken place in hundreds of places across the country. In most states of the country, there are rules in place that if women of the area protest against any liquor shop, the shop is shifted immediately. Getting these rules made has been a major achievement for women activists who want to ensure that men take care of their families and not squander away their earnings on alcohol. Contrast the incident of S. Farm with the protest against pubs in Mangalore. The tables have surely turned. Instead of women protesting against men drinking, it is the men who are protesting against women drinking. When women protest against men drinking, there are no issues of individual freedom or human rights or "who gave you the right to do this". I am not in favour of beating up any one – whether men or women. But surely, for all those who believe in equality of women, beating up of women drinkers is in no way worse or more condemnable than bashing up of alcoholic men. So, one fails to understand the hell that has broken loose after the protest against women-in-pubs by Shriram Sene in Mangalore.'

"Rihanna is not alone" makes no mention of male DV victims

Matt · 18 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. All examples and stats cites are of battered women, no mention of men. Excerpt:

'I certainly felt alone during my abusive relationship, but unfortunately I was in good company. The U.S. Department of Justice estimates that between 1 million and 3 million women in America are physically abused by their husband or boyfriend each year.

Every day, on average, three women are murdered by their husbands or boyfriends. At some point in our lives, 25 percent of American women will report being physically abused or raped by intimate partners, according to the National Violence Against Women Survey conducted by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

However, these statistics, grim as they are, fail to highlight the root of the abuse cycle. A national survey showed that 50 percent of men who frequently assault their wives also frequently abuse their children.'

Feel free to submit reader comments below the article. Polite comments including links to articles discussing the full story re DV are most productive.

Human Rights Watch: At least 140,000 male inmates are raped in the US each year

BinaryShadow · 18 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'The present report--the product of three years of research and well over a thousand inmate letters--describes the complex dynamics of male prisoner-on-prisoner sexual abuse in the United States. The report is an effort to explain why and how such abuse occurs, who commits it and who falls victim to it, what are its effects, both physical and psychological, how are prison authorities coping with it and, most importantly, what reforms can be instituted to better prevent it from occurring.'

The Plight of Men Addressed in Modern Literature

bikeking8 · 18 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I am fortunate enough to be with a girl who is level headed and sensible, which allowed me to illuminate and point out the countless examples of misandry we see on television and marketing. She even understands my concerns for my future sons' and grandsons' self-esteem and confidence should this continue.

I understand how important it is to keep a tally and log all the misdeeds of marketing and media and even legal matters which target men. It is a necessary thing to track for future reference. However, there is a goodly amount of modern literature dealing specifically with the detrimental effects of male bashing in today's society, presented in a thorough and purposeful manner. Surprising to me, at least, there are female authors of these works as well.

- Spreading Misandry: The Teaching of Contempt for Men in Popular Culture. Paul Nathanson, Katherine K. Young
- Legalizing Misandry: From Public Shame to Systemic Discrimination Against Men
  by Paul Nathanson, Katherine Young
- The War Against Boys: How Misguided Feminism Is Harming Our Young Men. Christina Hoff Sommers
- The Myth of Male Power. Warren Farrell
- The War Against Men. Richard T. Hise
- Taken into Custody: The War Against Fatherhood, Marriage, and the Family. Stephen Baskerville
- Save the Males: Why Men Matter Why Women Should Care. Kathleen Parker

These are but a few of the titles I have come across. Though it is good news for us that yes, in fact, we have some great minds on our side that actively question the practices of widespread misandry; it is not the main purpose of this submission.

Barring my daydream of a well organized and well planned mass migration of American men and their families to a gender-equal country (hahaha), I think the next best thing would be men having discussions with their female counterparts and friends. At the very least, every one of us men who is concerned with misandry and it cultural effects can show a woman or two the negative results of unchecked and rampant misandry through well informed and solid arguments in conversation.

We all know women's capacity to fight dirty, but think of how much it could benefit men's equality if a good number of them played for "our side"?

India: Vasectomy for gun licence deal sours

webdigr · 19 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Vasectomy has always been an unpopular operation in the dacoit*-infested Chambal district of Madhya Pradesh, but it enjoyed a brief surge in popularity last year.

More than 250 men put their private parts under the surgeon's knife through 2008; this, in a place where the male sterilisation figure had never reached double figures in the past 20 years.

They had an incentive: the government, in the form of Shivpuri District Collector Manish Shrivastava, had promised them an arms license each if they underwent the operation. They did so in family planning camps where forms for gun licenses were made available.

All of these men are a disillusioned lot now. Their vas deferens' have been sacrificed, but the promised gun licenses haven't come.
....
He says no one is ready to come to family planning camps any more. Moreover, "people are calling us cheats", he says.'

---

* "dacoit" - outlaw, criminal

Reader essay: "Male Dominated Society! Really?"

webdigr · 19 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Full article here. Excerpt:

"'Male Dominated Society'...Now that's such a phrase that's been ingrained in our minds since the very childhood... The boys are told that its a male dominated world, so they don't have to worry, just dominate the world. Girls on the other hand are continuously taught, that since its a male dominated world out there, so they need to dominate 'their' male partners at home and around. Sounds familiar?

Well, amongst all these 'teachings', has anyone stopped for a while to look around an ask a simple question... Is it really true? Is it really a male dominated society? Do we call it 'male dominated' just because the number of men working outside the house is more than the number of women?

To answer this question, I'll try to start by digging some past, then look at the present and try to project some future too!"

UK: Family shock: 1-in-3 parents don't see kids after splitting up

Matt · 19 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost one in three parents never see their children after splitting from their partner, a survey revealed yesterday.

The study of separated mums and dads found 29 per cent said their children had no contact with the parent who had left home, which was usually the father.

Fiona Weir, chief of single parents' pressure group Gingerbread, said: "Findings show just how hard it is for separated families to achieve arrangements that work for all concerned.

Families are struggling along with precious little help. Parents need to know that help is out there, and need to feel comfortable using services to help them resolve contact issues."'

Adulterous Spanish woman told to pay husband €200,000 in damages patriotsofamerica · 20 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This story put a smile on my face this morning. Could this be a sign of things to come? I surely hope so. Excerpt:

'The woman, who had three children by her lover, pretended for years that they were fathered by her husband, according to reports.

After years of suspecting his of infidelity, the husband who can't be named, finally discovered she had kept a lover for six of the fourteen years the couple had been together.

DNA tests showed that three of their four children had been fathered by the other man, the Times reports. The husband then took his wife to court, demanding compensation.

The court in Valencia, southeastern Spain, ordered her to pay €100,000 for the suffering she caused him. She fought the ruling, but the Supreme Court has upheld it, and doubled the damages to €200,000 .'

Canadian women report poorer quality of life than men as they age the_captain · 20 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The quality of life of Canadian men and women differs as they age, Statistics Canada reported Wednesday.

The agency followed 7,915 Canadians over age 40 for 10 years. Participants were asked to answer questions about their quality of life every two years from 1994 to 2004.

Health-related quality of life is defined as overall health status - such as the ability to see, hear, feel pain, and whether there are any emotional problems or mobility issues - and how it affects them daily.

"In summary, Canadians are, on average, quite healthy as they age from mid to later life," the study's authors concluded.

But at age 65, more women than men said they had more than one chronic condition and women were more likely to need help with activities of daily living, Heather Orpana, a senior researcher at Statistics Canada, and her colleagues found.

"We were interested in this result because men didn't show a similar important decline in that early decade," said Orpana, also an adjunct professor in health psychology at the University of Ottawa.

This study did not look at why, but followup research is exploring whether physical activity levels, life stress, social support or access to health care make a difference.'

Paper on the merits and policy for Equal Parenting published

Matt · 20 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The definitive paper on the merits and policy for Equal Parenting has been published by Prof. Edward Kruk. Excerpt:

'This paper was commissioned by the Father Involvement Research Alliance (FIRA) based at the University of Guelph. Funding support for FIRA and this paper was provided through a Community University Research Alliance grant from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada. The intent of this paper is to promote informed dialogue and debate. The views expressed are those of the author and do not necessarily reflect the views of FIRA or of other researchers/collaborators associated with FIRA. Communications can be addressed to the author.'

Full paper here.
Executive summary here.

Both are .pdf files.

Robbing banks no longer just for guys, FBI statistics show

anthony · 20 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Nationwide, 6.2 percent of all bank heists today are committed by women. That's up from 4.9 percent in 2002 -- a 25 percent increase, according to the most recent FBI crime statistics.

"Here's a crime that you can commit easily and its an equal opportunity crime," crime historian Robert McCrie said. Banks have become so customer-friendly and open, they've become "a safe place to rob," he added.
...
She went on wild spending spree, going through most of the money before her arrest several days later.

She said she would never again rob a bank, because her arrest and incarceration nearly destroyed her parents and two kids.

But Smith admitted that the thrill was addictive. "I loved the danger in it. I wanted to get more money. I wanted to keep doing it. That's how it really felt -- an adrenaline rush. Perfect."'

Japan: 15-year-old girl arrested for abandoning mother's body

Matt · 20 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Police arrested a 15-year-old female high school student early Saturday on suspicion of abandoning her mother's body in Okinawa Prefecture, investigative sources said Friday.

The girl is believed to have left the body of her mother, 46, in a closet at their home in the village of Kitanakagusuku, Okinawa, according to the sources. The mother is believed to have been strangled.

The body was found by the girl's father on Tuesday. The girl had been unaccounted for since then but was located Thursday and taken into custody by police officers in Okinawa, they said.

The police will question the girl about whether she was involved in the death of her mother, the sources said.'

--

"Gee, maybe she was 'involved in the death'-- ya think so, sarge?"

NH selectman calls domestic violence program ‘gimmick’

anthony · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CONWAY, N.H. — An organization that serves victims of domestic and sexual abuse is outraged by comments made by a Conway, N.H., selectman who voted against funding the group this week.

Selectman [sic] voted 4 to 1 against recommending that the town budget include $7,500 for the Starting Point agency. In explaining his vote, Selectman Crow Dickinson said a lot of women use domestic violence as gimmick in divorce proceedings. The agency’s supporters have responded with e-mails, letters, phone calls and an Internet-based publicity campaign to call attention to the comments and promote the agency.

County attorney Robin Gordon called the comments a blatant example of Neanderthal thinking.

Dickinson was unapologetic. He says those who are angry at him shouldn’t be running around gnashing their teeth and should instead work together to restore the funding at the upcoming deliberative session.'

Domestic violence advocates try to draw more men into movement

anthony · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'John Capuano was a bit nervous as 70 boys from the junior class filled the bleachers at Bayless High School. He was about to talk to them about sexism, masculinity and patriarchy — tough subjects for a group of teenage boys.

Standing on the gym floor, he had 20 minutes to give his spiel.

Capuano, 30, an educator in domestic violence prevention, has created a program called Guys Group, and he's trying to convince school counselors to let him start a club in their schools.
...
"Do you ever talk about how you perpetuate the violence? How you've been sexist? How you've been disrespectful to women?" Capuano told the boys.'

Colorado marriage, divorce fees could rise to fund DV programs

anthony · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt;

'DENVER (Map, News) - Colorado couples getting married or divorced could end up paying bigger fees.

The Senate Appropriations Committee backed a bill Friday that would raise marriage and divorce fees to pay for programs to help victims of domestic abuse.

The measure would raise the marriage license fee from $10 to $30. Divorce petitions would go from $220 to $230 and divorce responses would be raised by $10 to $116.
...
Half the money raised from the divorce fee increases would pay for legal fees for the victims of domestic violence. The rest of it and all the money from the wedding fee increase would go to groups that counsel and advocate for domestic violence victims.'

Jury convicts woman in husband's death

anthony · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After more than 30 hours of emotional deliberation, a Macomb County jury found Fayette Nale guilty of manslaughter in the September 2007 death of her husband.
...
Michael Nale, 56, died of a stab wound to the chest. Fayette Nale said her husband fell on a kitchen knife after he began to attack her in their Richmond condominium. She claimed she was a victim of years of domestic abuse.
...
Officials with Turning Point of Macomb, an agency that helps victims of domestic violence, said they were disappointed with the verdict.

"While we know that nationwide 75%-80% of battered women are convicted when they are charged with the homicide of their abuser, we had hoped for a different outcome this time," said Sue Coats.'

Men’s Group Raises $36,000 to Stop Domestic Violence

anthony · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NORTH EASTON, MA (February 16, 2009) – Despite a difficult economy, the men’s group of Congregational Covenant Church recently raised $36,000 for two agencies assisting battered women.
...
The community also has been eager to support the dinner. “We have made this into a very visible cause,” says Kevin Symmons, one of the co-chairs.
...
In the past four years the men have raised more than $130,000. They held the first event after taking an oath as part of the White Ribbon Campaign to do whatever they could to stop domestic violence.

Symmons says he is grateful for the active support the men in the church have shown. They had so many who wanted to help with the dinner that “we had to turn away volunteers and tell the guys to enjoy the dinner with their wives,” he says.'

College woman files false rape report, gets counselling

anthony · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The false report of a rape on campus shocked the NIC community on Feb. 6, sending a school-wide security alert to students and staff.

NICAlerts spread the message through text messaging and the NIC web page that Friday morning to inform students of the possible existence of a threat on campus. The alert gave a thorough description of the suspect, who turned out to be a figment of the woman's imagination, and gave information about possible contacts if anyone was to encounter the assailant.
...
The female, who is not being identified due to the request by the police department, reported that a white male, age 48, dressed as a woman accosted her in the first-floor bathroom of the Meyer Health & Science Building Jan. 30. According to early reports by police, she claimed she knew the man from a prior dating relationship, but could not supply investigators with a name.
...

Sgt. Christie Wood, Coeur d'Alene Police Department investigator, said a report was not available regarding the incident. The woman who made the allegations was cited for filing a false police report. The charge is a misdemeanor and will be dealt with through the prosecutor's office, according to Wood.

"The incident has now become a matter of counseling, and we hope the woman gets help," Murray said.'

Student paper: Woman's sense of self destroyed in Vagina Monologues

anthony · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Op-ed here. Excerpt:

'The play promotes sexual aggression in at least two monologues—one in which a man named Bob forces off a self-hating woman's clothes so that he can "see" her, the essence of her, which is her vagina. The monologist views this as a positive development in her life, and she actually thanks this man for showing her the light. In the other, a teenager is shown how to pleasure herself by an older woman, who teaches this young girl that she need not depend on men ever again for self-validation. I am so sick of looking towards other people, in particular, sexual partners, for validation. All the blunt talk of clitorises and vaginas are a distraction from what this play really is—a platform for showcasing the worst patriarchal oppressions in good light!'

Mother accused of murder 'didn't see' son's injuries

anthony · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In a videotaped conversation at Baltimore County police headquarters hours after her young son was declared dead in 2007, Susan J. Griffin veered from certainty to indecision when attempting to describe Andrew's condition in the weeks leading to his death.

"He's got no health problems that I'm aware of — well, he does," Griffin told a detective in a rapid chatter, acknowledging the boy's weight loss but not his emaciated condition and the wounds covering his body, which had alarmed the staff of the emergency room at St. Joseph Medical Center when his father brought him in, lifeless, the day after Christmas.

...

"I know he's small -- he's about 10, 15 pounds off," Griffin said. And yet, she noted, "Andrew eats everything in the house." Yes, she conceded, he had "little scratches" on his body, "but nothing major."

...

An autopsy revealed the cause of death to be starvation.

...

Referring to the boy's injuries, Griffin said his mouth "looks really nasty," with signs that a tooth had penetrated his lip, but blamed it on the child's habit of biting himself. She said some of the scratches might have been made by one of Andrew's brothers.'

Indian court: Sustaining high living standard no cause for maintenance arindamp · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW DELHI: Sustaining a high standard of living is no ground for seeking maintenance from an estranged spouse. This is what a Delhi court told a woman who had sought a maintenance of Rs 1 lakh per month from her husband after the couple separated within a year of their marriage.

The woman, who has a permanent job, had sought the allowance "to maintain the same standard of life". Dismissing her plea, the court said that her income cannot be termed insufficient for maintaining herself.

"The provision (of maintenance) cannot be resorted to by one of the litigating parties to enrich itself at the cost of the other.... The applicant was doing the same job during the golden days of their matrimonial life, hence it cannot be concluded that her status is reduced now," additional district judge Rajender Kumar Shastri said.'

"Separate grills lawsuit" Club sued again

anthony · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former member of the Phoenix Country Club who spoke out against the club's gender-segregated dining facilities has filed suit against the club for his expulsion, claiming it was based on unlawful discrimination and retaliation.

Russell Brown, a real-estate attorney, was expelled last fall for comments he made to the New York Times concerning the club's men-only grill.

"The law protects a person from retribution aimed at one's efforts to promote equal rights," said Brown's attorney, David Bodney, who also represents The Arizona Republic. "Mr. Brown should not have been expelled or forced to forfeit his substantial investments as a result of his constructive efforts."'

"Black Widow"

Matt · 21 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Caption:

When PEI native Melissa Friedrich was arrested in Florida and charged with exploitation of the elderly, her past revealed a long and complex criminal history that began in the Maritimes and included a conviction for manslaughter in the death of one husband. Another husband died under what his family believes are suspicious circumstances and what finally landed her in a Tampa jail was enough evidence to convince authorities that yet another man might be at risk. Linden MacIntyre investigates the story of the woman who has been called a "black widow."

UK: Men 'will close life expectancy gender gap by 2035'

Michael · 22 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women have traditionally outlived men due in part to the increased mortality rates of "masculine" careers like the military and mining.

But with the West at peace, dangerous careers on the decline and men increasingly willing to improve their diets and seek early medical advice, male life expectancy is increasing at a faster rate.'

Woman murders husband, uses false allegations to try to get out of trouble

Matt · 22 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Gilbert police say Marissa Devault left behind a bloodied hammer that was used to beat the head of her husband, who would become the town's first homicide since 2007.

Dale E. Harrell, 34, survived nearly four weeks after undergoing surgery to remove part of his brain following a 2:45 a.m. Jan. 14 attack that left him critically injured in the master bedroom of the couple's home on the 2100 block of East Maplewood Street, according to a police report released Friday.
...
"By Marissa's own statement, she would have continued to assault with the hammer if not stopped by a third party," an investigating officer wrote.
...
In a call to 911, Devault stated her husband choked her during an argument, a police report states. She also claimed Harrell was attempting to sexually assault her, yet "evidence at the scene did not support the information," one detective wrote in the report.'

Bronx Woman Held in Death of Grandson

Michael · 23 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 4-year-old boy was found beaten to death in his grandmother's Bronx apartment, and she has been charged with his murder, the police said Sunday.

The boy, Kevion Shand, died of blunt impact injuries and brain hemorrhaging, according to the medical examiner's office.

His grandmother Angela Barksdale, 45, was charged with second-degree murder, said Steven Reed, a spokesman for the Bronx district attorney's office.

...

It's a sad case," said Brett Wilkerson, 37, who said Ms. Barksdale welcomed him to the building when he moved in in 2001. "You never know who you're living next to."

Kaprisha Foster, 19, said Ms. Barksdale had let her stay in her apartment when she locked herself out. She added that Ms. Barksdale was "not the type of person" to hurt someone.

...

Mr. Anaya described Kevion as a friendly boy who always said hello and showed no signs of abuse.

Ms. Barksdale was expected to be arraigned Sunday night or Monday morning.'

RADAR ALERT: Take Action Today - SAFE Act will Supercharge False Allegations of DV

Matt · 23 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Representatives Lucille Roybal-Allard (D-CA) and Ted Poe (R-TX) recently introduced H.R. 739, the SAFE ("Security and Financial Empowerment") Act. If passed the bill will supercharge false allegations of domestic violence by granting lifetime job security to anyone who merely claims to be a victim of DV. By creating powerful incentives to file false claims, the bill trivializes the problem of domestic violence and would marginalize its true victims.

H.R. 739 prohibits an employer from refusing a job to any person who claims to have suffered from domestic violence or "substantial emotional distress or psychological harm" – words that can be interpreted to mean just almost anything. As hard as it is to believe, no hard evidence of domestic violence is required to receive these benefits – the "victim" only has to sign a sworn statement or get a restraining order, and restraining orders are notoriously easy to get because of the low standards of proof and weak definitions of domestic violence. Furthermore, judges are reluctant to deny applications for fear that they'd be blamed if something bad happened following the denial.

A family or household member of the DV "victim" is also entitled to the same benefits. HR 739 also allows any person who "is, has been, or may be the subject of abuse" to qualify for lifetime health insurance coverage. The "victim" would also be entitled to 30 days of emergency leave as well as unemployment compensation. The bill amounts to a lifetime guarantee of job security and availability of employer-subsidized health insurance for any person who claims to be a victim of domestic violence or psychological abuse, or for any family member.

And the person who allegedly inflicted the abuse has no right to refute or appeal the charges. Some readers might wonder if we're exaggerating when we say all this, but we're not – see RADAR's analysis of the bill here (.pdf file).

Suffice it to say, this bill is prime example how VAWA has spun Out of Control.

Rep. Ted Poe's sponsorship of this bill is out of step with his party's stand on economic policy. Please contact his office and ask him to withdraw support for H.R. 739. As always please remember to be polite.

Rep. Ted Poe (R)
Texas, 2nd Congressional District
Phone: 202-225-6565
Fax: 202-225-5547
Webform: http://poe.house.gov/contact/contactform.htm

Over 1 million restraining orders are issued each year in which partner violence is not even alleged. This so-called "SAFE" Act is the last thing we need. Take action today!

P.S. – Our last two alerts targeted the VAWA money in the stimulus bill. Although we were not fully successful in removing the funding, we did succeed in eliminating $75 million from the final package – $325 million instead of $400 million. Thank you for helping expose how VAWA has spiraled out of control because of the lack of an honest debate!

++++++

"Welcome to the age of female rage"

Proud_to_be_a_man · 23 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This woman is so up herself it's amazing! I love the comments from readers. Sample of her whining:

"My generation of women aren't having it all - we're doing it all. It's a constant struggle to meet the demands of my various roles as wife, mother, daughter, colleague, lover, friend. I feel as if I short-change everyone all the time.
...
I never have a moment that's just mine. Someone always wants a piece of me. Yesterday, in the middle of a bikini wax, I had an urgent call from the office and had to orchestrate a crucial meeting on the other side of the world, biting my fists to stop yelping at the wrong moments."

Missing teacher and student found in West Virginia

anthony · 24 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A 24-year-old teacher from Holyoke, Massachusetts, is in custody after allegedly leaving town with a 15-year-old student, city officials said Tuesday.

Lisa Lavoie and the male student were found in Morgantown, West Virginia, Monday night after apparently being together for a week, Holyoke Mayor Michael Sullivan said.

Investigators have charged Lavoie with enticement of a child.'

Final separation deals may not be: ruling

Matt · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Separation agreements between divorcing couples are not necessarily final if one spouse gets a bad deal, the Supreme Court of Canada said Thursday in a ruling that ordered a B. C. dairy farmer to pay his former wife $650,000.

The Supreme Court unanimously concluded that Ben Brandsema exploited his wife's fragile mental state by allowing her to sign her name to an "unconscionable"agreement in which he failed to disclose all his assets.

The ruling is a reminder that if you try to "pull a fast one" on your estranged spouse, a judge can rescind the agreement even years later, said Toronto family law expert Phil Epstein.'

UK: Fathers 'powerless against vengeful mothers'

Matt · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Decent fathers are left powerless to see their estranged children if vengeful mothers are determined to prevent access, a senior judge has admitted.
...
Lord Justice Ward attacked child access law after presiding over a case that saw a “vicious” mother falsely accuse her ex-husband of sexually abusing their child.

He spoke out after telling the father that there was nothing he could do to help him re-establish contact with his daughter after his ex-wife turned her against him.

The man’s 14-year-old daughter, who cannot been identified, had been influenced by a “drip, drip, drip of venom” from his ex-wife, who wanted to deny him his paternal rights.

Lord Justice Ward said the case was bordering on the scandalous but the court was compelled to act in the interests of the child.

Because of her mother’s “viciously corrupting” influence, it would cause the teenager too much distress if she spent time with her father, he said.'

Daughter Tried to Hire Undercover Cop as Hitman for Dad's Murder

Michael · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'...his oldest daughter, Tammy Lewis, had plotted a murder-for-hire scheme to collect on his $200,000 life insurance policy, he was shocked at the allegations made against his wife but not his daughter.

"My daughter ... I could believe it. My wife, no way," said Hughes, of Garland, Texas. "She's my wife, my friend, and I just don't think she would do anything like that."

But law enforcement officials believe she was involved in the would-be contract killing.

Police said Lewis offered to pay $25,000 to an undercover detective acting as a hitman to kill her father and said she wanted her dad shot dead as soon as possible.

The two met at a local strip mall, where Lewis gave the undercover officer a loaded pistol to use in the homicide. Lewis said she and her mother would pay the would-be killer the $25,000 fee from her father's $200,000 life insurance policy as soon as it was cashed.

"It's certainly unique to have two people involved in a murder for hire," said former FBI agent and ABC News consultant Brad Garrett. "Add another person and you're really increasing your odds of getting caught."

Shirley Hughes and Lewis confessed to police to having played a part in the plan. Both women are currently being held at the Dallas County Jail on $100,000 bond and face charges of solicitation to commit capital murder.'

Hundreds Respond to Fathers & Families' Action Alert to Defend Truth-Telling Politician

Matt · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Hampshire local politician Crow Dickinson is being crucified for uttering some inconvenient truths about divorce and domestic violence–"There are a lot of women who use [domestic violence] as a gimmick in divorce proceedings." Hundreds have responded to Fathers & Families' Recent Action Alert to write letters in support of Dickinson.
...
Many family law professionals agree with Dickinson's contention that false claims of domestic violence are often used as custody maneuvers in divorce cases.
...
Domestic Violence Protective (aka "Restraining") orders have become so commonplace that the Illinois Bar Journal calls them "part of the gamesmanship of divorce."'

UK: Independent schools: Girls' schools winning the private battle

anthony · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's well known that girls outperform boys in state schools, but it's less widely realised that the same phenomenon applies in the private sector, too. Of the 200 highest-ranked independent schools in the 2007 A-level league tables, three times as many were girls-only establishments (95) as boys-only (31), with the rest being co-eds.
...
Vicky Tuck, head of Cheltenham Ladies' College and president of the Girls' Schools Association, agrees. "The modern-day exam system does favour girls," she says. "Girls are better suited to a style of working which requires diligence and consistency, rather than cramming everything into a three-hour exam."

According to Pat Langham, head of Wakefield Girls' School, the other crucial factor in girls' academic success is the absence of boys. "With no need to adopt any 'boy-friendly' educational initiatives, all our efforts are directed towards the girls," she says. "Girls-only schools are fine-tuned to accommodate the cognitive, social and developmental growth of teenage girls. The teaching is gender specific but without any gender stereotyping of subject choice, which means it's considered cool to be the best mathematician, physicist, musician or athlete.'

Arizona Republic: Engaging boys and books

anthony · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The argument that boys learn to read and write at a slower pace and are motivated by a more active style is backed by studies that date back 60 to 70 years, Brozo found.

The "boy crisis" point of view tends to ebb and flow, never gaining enough momentum to bring systemic change. It gained traction in the 1990s and held its ground through the early 2000s, culminating in Peg Tyre's best-selling "The Trouble with Boys" in 2008.

Feminists who had promoted better education for girls were skeptical, worried that girls would lose hard-won ground if attention shifted back to boys.
...
"I have a lot of feminist friends in the academic community," Brozo said. "But I can't agree all the time with their assumptions that this is just an overreaction because girls are making great strides."'

Woman arrested in husband's slaying

anthony · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'PHOENIX (AP) - A Gilbert woman has been arrested in connection with the slaying of her husband, who police say was beaten with a hammer.

Marissa DeVault, 31, was arrested Friday and charged in the murder of Dale E. Harrell, 34.

Police said DeVault initially was arrested and booked into jail on Jan 14 for aggravated assault after she reportedly hit her husband with a hammer while he was lying in bed.

Harrell died Feb. 9 from his injuries, according to authorities.'

Men Allowed To Attend 'Women for Hire' NYC Career Expo

anthony · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tory Johnson, the organizer of the 10-year-old event and chief executive of Women for Hire, said the crowd was something she had never seen before. The expo, which saw about 1,500 people pass through its doors when it was last held in September, recorded that many attendees in the first hour.

Overall, the event brought in 5,103 people, according to Johnson. She noted that while most of the attendees were unemployed, some came to prepare for the possibility of a pink slip.

Men were allowed to attend the biannual event for the first time. Johnson said the decision was borne out of dozens of requests from women who had attended previous events, seeing a need for their husbands, brothers and fathers to find a job, too. About one of every five people in the line that spanned two city blocks was a man.'

United Nations report: Most human traffickers are women

anthony · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pretoria - Up to 75% of all perpetrators of human trafficking are women, according to a study released in Pretoria on Wednesday.

...

In countries that participated in the study, 30% more women than men were convicted for trafficking.

"Women play an important role, more than men and boys," said Lucas.

...

Sexual exploitation was found to be the main form of exploitation in southern Africa and the rest of the world. This was closely followed by forced labour, said Kruger.'

New University: 'If Women Ruled the World'

anthony · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First, many pre-modern societies have been run by women and were not strangers to war and suffering. Empresses and queens from Catherine the Great to Queen Elizabeth have created war all around the world. Women were able to gather power outside of Europe. In East Asia, empresses ruled China and not necessarily in peacetime. Empress Dowager Cixi, ruler of China, went to war over Vietnam, one of dozens of examples from the region.

There are more than historical examples to support the idea that a world run by women would not be all puppy dogs and smiles. Any woman will be the first to tell you they prefer to fight with men rather than with other women. Is this because they are better at it than men are? Actually, it is due to the nature of their conflicts. Women attack people socially, utilizing group sticks-and-stones tactics, while men tend to utilize direct and individual confrontations. This goes beyond common sense; it is also backed by psychological experiments. Women are born fighters, just like men. The only difference between them lies in their methods.
...
A world run by women would not be any better than our current one. Historically, societies run by women have had the same set of economic and military hardships. Psychology has shown that women and men are not that different overall. They each do what the other does, just in a different manner. Concentrating all the power in either gender's hands is never beneficial. More men are in power today, but our current situation is a result of human flaws, not those of gender. A world ruled by women would experience almost the exact same set of problems as our world ruled by men.'

UK Sun: Why men don't want sex anymore

anthony · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For decades women have used the excuse “Not tonight darling, I’ve got a headache” to fend off amorous partners.

But a new survey has revealed more and more MEN are finding excuses to shun sex.

The poll by independent charity the Men’s Health Forum found that 15 per cent of men aged between 18 and 59 admitted to a “lack of interest in sex”.

And relationship counselling service Relate has reported a 40 PER CENT increase in the number of men saying they had gone off sex compared with ten years ago.

These men have no physical problems — they just do not want to have sex.'

U.S.: Sen. Boxer Seeks to Ratify 'Convention on the Rights of the Child'

anthony · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sen. Barbara Boxer is urging the U.S. to ratify a United Nations measure meant to expand the rights of children, a move critics are calling a gross assault on parental rights that could rob the U.S. of sovereignty.

The California Democrat is pushing the Obama administration to review the U.N. Convention on the Rights of the Child, a nearly 20-year-old international agreement that has been foundering on American shores since it was signed by the Clinton administration in 1995 but never ratified.

Critics say the treaty, which creates "the right of the child to freedom of thought, conscience and religion" and outlaws the "arbitrary or unlawful interference with his or her privacy," intrudes on the family and strips parents of the power to raise their children without government interference.
...
Parental rights groups are similarly stirred; they see in the U.N. convention a threat that the government will meddle with even the simplest freedoms to raise their children as they see fit.'

Cops: Mom runs over son

anthony · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There are cases that shock even the toughest of cops. The crimes that make hardened detectives sick to their stomachs. This is one of them.

A mother in Louisiana is accused of killing her own child. Investigators say the murder weapon was an SUV. And published reports describe the suspect as a former police officer.

The incident occurred Saturday morning. At around 9:15am on February 21, a call came into the Saint Landry Parish Sheriff's Office. A woman said she was walking along a rural road when she noticed a silver Suzuki SUV with extensive front damage. She said the driver told her to contact the police because she had just run over her son.

When the authorities arrived at the scene, they say the driver said the same thing to them – that she had run over her son. They also allege she directed them to his body. The victim was found next to a barn near the road. Samuel Utomeh was 11-years-old.'

Canada: Feminist-sponsored "fictional drivel" in schools decried

Matt · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Monday's front page news contained an unprecedented case of literary lese majeste. A parent of a Grade 12 Toronto high school student petitioned for the removal from the school's reading list of The Handmaid's Tale, a 1986 novel by the queen of Canadian literature, Margaret Atwood.

...

The Handmaid's Tale isn't drivel because of the sex and violence that concerned the parent. It is drivel because it is a paranoiac fantasy whose principal purpose and effect is to stir up hatred of men.

...

Dystopian fiction deserves critical respect when its premises are grounded in psychological or historical reality. That sexual relations in the West on a collective scale ever did or ever could descend into Ms. Atwood's ideologically self-indulgent nightmare is -- well, fictional drivel.

...

Mass eugenics coincides historically with anti-religious collectivist visions run amok. The Chinese program of forced abortions came from the atheist, utopian left. The Nazi Lebensborn program, which seems to have been Ms. Atwood's inspiration, in which fertile young women were lodged at breeding farms, there to be impregnated by SS officers in order to improve Germany's Aryan stock, grew out of anti-religious paganism allied with fascism.

...

But in Ms. Atwood's conspiracy-theorist feminist universe, women are victims, men masters of their fates. Women cannot be seen as opportunistic or exploitative, and men cannot be seen as themselves victims or objects of pity. Theory demands that her fictional women emerge as innocent dupes of warring control freaks.

...

It is not a "cautionary tale," as one Atwood admirer characterized it in Monday's news story. For here we are 23 years later. Forced-breeding camps? Hardly. Politically and culturally, women's issues rule; abortion is rampant; fatherlessness is pandemic. It is men--insofar as their traditional roles as providers, progenitors and protectors are concerned -- who are the endangered social species.'

Revealed: women's role in Nazi crimes

anthony · 25 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Nazi art, films and magazines, women were always portrayed as the fairer sex, fighting on the home-front as their menfolk fought on the battlefields.

...

But a new book by the historian Kathrin Kompisch has revealed a very different reality.

"Apart from a few particularly cruel examples, the participation of women in the crimes of the Nazis has been blended out of the collective conscious of the Germans for a long time," she wrote in the book, Female Perpetrators: Women under National Socialism.

Many women were in fact used as assistants to the doctors who sterilised and murdered disabled people and as guards in the concentration camps - like the character played by Kate Winslet in her Oscar nominated role in the film The Reader.

...

"Women typed the statistics of the murdered victims of the SS Action Squads in the east, operated the radios which called up for more bullets, were invariably the secretaries - and sometimes much more - in all the Gestapo posts," she said. "And at the end of the war they tried to diminish their responsibility by saying they were just cogs in the all-male machine which gave the orders."

...

Most "Blockwaerts" - apartment house snoops who reported on un-Nazi activities to the party - were women, who denounced their neighbours to the Gestapo if they suspected them of being ideologically unsound or Jewish.

The surviving files of the Gestapo in the city of Duesseldorf noted that women "try to change the power balance of the household by denouncing their husbands as spies or Communists or anti-Nazis." "Lower-middle or working-class urban women tended to be the ones who filed reports with the Gestapo, and such reports were most likely to lead to the persecution of the denounced party if he was a member of a group considered racially inferior, like the Poles," said Ms Kompisch.'

UAE: Woman rains blows on husband in court

Michael · 26 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman enraged at her husband's refusal to divorce her launched a furious physical assault on him in a court here.
...
Several court guards were forced to intervene and eventually managed to separate the irate woman from her husband, whose clothes were in tatters by that time.

The man at the receiving end was slightly injured and was provided clothes to cover himself. His entreaties to his wife to calm down didn't seem to have the desired impact.
...
The court official said the couple had a record of ongoing problems and marital disputes and that the woman had earlier lodged a complaint against her husband accusing him of failing to provide for her.
...
This conversation provoked the woman who threw him to the floor and started raining blows on him hysterically.

The court official said the scene created by the woman in the court house was not acceptable, especially since she had given full vent to insults and had manhandled court staff and members of the public at the scene.'

Wife sentenced for husband's shotgun death

Michael · 26 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BUFFALO, N.Y. - A Buffalo woman has been sentenced to 25 years to life in prison for shooting her sleeping husband with a shotgun.

An Erie County judge gave Robin Kalinowski the harshest sentence allowed, even as she continued to maintain the November 2005 shooting was an accident.

...

Kalinowski still faces charges of conspiring to hire a hit man to kill a man with whom she was having an affair. The would-be hit man was an undercover state trooper.'

Study: Washington State courts unfair to men, minorities

anthony · 26 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OLYMPIA — A University of Washington study has found disparities in race and gender in the penalties doled out by the state's criminal courts.
...
"Our findings show that some people convicted of similar offenses face very different sentencing outcomes, not on the length of confinement but on the financial side," said Katherine Beckett, an associate sociology professor at UW. "It's a huge financial obligation to possess."

The study focused on court fees and fines, not the amount of time that defendants were sentenced to jail or prison.'

Eating Disorders Increasing In Men, Children And Elderly

anthony · 26 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PORTLAND (NEWS CENTER) -- At one time eating disorders were considered primarily as a women's disease. But recent studies show a growing number of men, young children and the elderly are suffering from anorexia or bulimia.

Eating disorder experts here in Maine say more people are getting help thanks to heightened awareness about the disorders.

...

But the face of the disease is changing. The New England Eating Disorder program at Mercy Hospital is the state's only comprehensive eating disorders clinic. The clinic used to primarily treat women 14 to 22 years of age, now they have patients as young as 7 and as old as 70 -- and more men are seeking help.

...

"Men are more comfortable now than they used to be in acknowledging that an eating disorder could be a possibility, a lot of athletes in particular will have a desired goal and go beyond that into a danger zone, so we work to get them back," said Dr. Lockhart.'

India: Paternity leave, a boon for new dads

webdigr · 26 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Even though there is no specific law that enforces paternity leave, more and more companies in India are increasingly offering paternity leave to their employees...

In the good old days, dads didn't dare enter the delivery room, let alone take time off from work to bond with junior or care for their wife...

For those of you who are unfamiliar with the term, paternity leave is a paid leave granted by the company to an employee when he becomes a father.

And even though there is no specific law that enforces this leave, more and more companies in India are increasingly offering paternity leave to their employees.
...

So how do the employees feel about this gesture? Says Bangaru Babu, IT manager at Omega Healthcare services, Bangalore, "It is a great concept and is also very useful. I took my paternity leave last month as my wife delivered our baby in Hyderabad...

Apart from natural birth, paternity leave is also being given for adoption by certain companies. "We give five days paid paternity leave even on the adoption of a child, apart from child birth.
...
While some may argue that three to five days is not enough, it may be considered as a ray of light — corporates are at least becoming sensitive about the concept...'

F.R.A.M.E.D.

FramedFather · 26 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The Creation of F.R.A.M.E.D.

F.R.A.M.E.D. (Fathers Rights And Men Ending Discrimination)

By FramedFather

Was I FRAMED by the family court system here in Union County, Georgia? Oh Yes I was Folks!

I have been the target of a 'mock trial', allegedly found - capriciously - guilty, and convicted for being a loving Father and a concerned Parent.

I have done nothing wrong, I tell you all here and now. Notably 'folks' not a thing was said badly about me at the trial. The opposing attorney even suggested 50/50 custody in their closing arguments.

At 'the mock sentencing' farce, I was stripped of my rights to be a Father and Parent by the human rights violator Judge. Who then falsely sentenced me to only be a visitor not the father, with limited visitation rights only of: (4 days a month and even though I live only 3 miles from my daughter). I was also fined $10,400.00/yr. at the sentencing hearing, 66% of my income. The federal government also makes me pay taxes on that $10,400.00 dollars each year, which brings the fine up to almost 70% of my income -- for one child.

The mother is allowed to make up her own rules and violates court orders on a daily basis, with no accountability at all and with the support of the court. I am forced to walk on pins and needles as added punishment for being a visitor and I am under constant threat of incarceration.

It isn't easy being framed for being a Father. Besides losing my rights to being a father/parent, I have also been robbed of my integrity and dignity. My daughter has been cheated out of a vital human right of having a steady Father.

The mother will not allow me one minute more with my daughter, not even for good behavior, for no reason what so ever, although Narcissistic Tendencies, Manipulative Characteristics, Vindictiveness, Anger, Jealousy, Hate, etc., may play a major factor in her reasoning. I can only speculate because she has yet to explain to me why her agenda is to punish me and alienate my daughter from me.

There is no logical reason why she could not allow me at least one evening between my every other weekend visits too at least have dinner with my daughter. It's pretty obvious to everyone that she does not support my daughter's relationship with me. The thought escapes her that she is truly hurting our daughter more than me, or maybe she just truly doesn't care either way as long as she feels she is causing me pain.

So I created F.R.A.M.E.D, (Fathers Rights And Men Ending Discrimination) in hopes of bringing more attention to others about the damage being done to children from "traditional biased rulings" and for profit (ie, federal incentives). The system is flawed and needs to be repaired immediately! The true criminals need to be held accountable. Children need both parents; 50/50 custody IS in the best interest of our children in most cases.

Automatically giving the mother custody and stripping the father of all his rights to be a father, a parent, for no reason other than biased rulings and for profit, is plain and simply, child abuse and a hate crime. It is also a crime against humanity and a violation of our Constitutional rights to parent. It is also against our God-given rights to parent and raise our children.

Kidnapping and criminal rulings are ruining the fabric of society and destroying families and our children's future. We must stand together as one and speak as one voice and demand change before it's too late!

Framed: To manufacture false evidence against (an innocent person), so as to make the person appear guilty of a crime. The act of framing a person is often referred to as a frame-up.

Jim, aka: FramedFather
Blairsville, Georgia

Founding Father & Civil Rights Director of:
F.R.A.M.E.D. (Fathers Rights And Men Ending Discrimination)
FRAMED Website / Blog: http://www.FramedFathers.com/
FRAMED Forum/Talkboard: (http://framedfathers.proboards.com/)

Ireland: Working women almost certainly caused the credit crunch

anthony · 26 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of course there will always be a place in the world of business for exceptional women. Women also have an important role to play in jobs that are too demeaning for men, like teaching. But the general employment of women is another matter. Indeed, working women almost certainly caused the credit crunch by bringing a second income into the average household, pushing property prices up to unsustainable levels.

Whether working women actually caused the credit crunch is now a moot point. The point is that removing women from the workforce would mitigate its effects.

Consider the issue of unemployment. There were 221,301 men on the live register last month and just under one million women in work.

Surely at least half these women have a partner who is earning? Surely at least half would be happier at home? One half of one half is a quarter and one quarter of a million is roughly 221,301. I think we can all see where this argument is going.'

Dr. Amy: Are fathers optional?

anthony · 26 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In other words, more than 1/4 of white children, 1/2 of Hispanic children, and almost 3/4 of black children were born to mothers who did not feel that marriage was necessary. Since marriage reflects the commitment of mother and father to stay together permanently, it means that a large proportion of women chose to give birth without taking steps to make sure that the father would live with his child and be a permanent presence in his or her life.
...
However, as the birth statistics demonstrate, the problem is not simply one of abandonment. Women are actively conceiving and bearing children in the knowledge that their fathers will almost certainly not be living with them throughout childhood. Simply put, women are behaving as if fathers are optional.'

Domestic Violence Videos you, or the public, won't usually see

Matt · 26 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S.: In collaboration with the professional filmmakers at Kaeco Productions and Derringer Productions and Post, we have produced a full curriculum series of 13 video vignettes specifically designed for counseling female abusers.

Nonviolent Alternatives
View a sample of one of our videos on YouTube. "I produced 13 videos that are just like Duluth videos except they are women who are abusive. We took a large collection of child protective services reports and police report narratives documenting abusive women, then we grouped them into similiar behavior patters. Then we narrowed the group to a top 13 and wrote scripts for the videos. We would have done more but I only had enough money to produce 13. There is a sample of one of the videos on our website at http://www.cognitiveaccountability.com/.
Terry A. Moore, Program Director

Newsweek: Laid-off men are lazy wife-beating slobs el cid · 27 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I think the writer omits a few cliches and negative stereotypes about men, but not many. Of course, there's hope here to--if a writer this bad can keep a job, anyone can.

Excerpt:

"Let's start with the myth of the new diaper daddies. The American Time Use Survey shows that in fact laid-off men tend to do less—not more—housework, eating up their extra hours snacking, sleeping and channel surfing (which might be why the Cartoon Network, whose audience has grown by 10 percent during the downturn, is now running more ads for refrigerator repair school). Unemployed women, in contrast, spend twice as much time taking care of children and doing chores. Nor do former working stiffs necessarily reconnect with their families: following alcoholics and drug addicts, they're the most likely demographic to beat their female partners."

US Family Court Reform Alliance

FCRAdvocate · 27 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

US Family Court Reform Alliance is current accepting applications from other Family Court Reform related websites and Blog operators to establish a presents on our forums using their group name.

We will provide you will a category of forums on our Forum Home Page dedicated to your group name, which will be Moderated by a member(s) of your group, in addition to site administrators, and a site Super Moderator, in accordance with our website "Forum Rules". Additionally, your group will be allowed to take full advantage of the many state of the art features out platform offers such as: Private Messaging, Email, Social Groups, a Dedicated Calendar for your group, our Blog feature, and finally the many general forums we offer for all groups and individuals to socialize, learn, become familiar with each other, and make life long friends.

We offer this service completely FREE OF CHARGE.

For additional info go to http://www.aboutus.org/Usfcralliance.org or visit the forums at: http://www.usfcralliance.org/forums/

We're here for YOU and YOUR Organization or Group. Individuals are also welcome to join our cause which is to Unify the Family Court Reform movement.

Regards,
FCRAdvocate - US Family Court Reform Alliance

Upcoming Screenings of "Indoctrinate U"

Matt · 27 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

NYC-AREA SCREENING: MARCH 24

First, we're happy to announce that "Indoctrinate U" has been accepted by the New York International Independent Film and Video Festival!

In accepting the film, the festival's reviewers wrote:

"Well-edited, good looking titles, technically pulled together well so there's no major problems that distract you from looking at it. Content: About the problems of political correctness on college campuses today and how they often impinge on professors and students' individual rights of expression. Great story and content with plenty of examples to draw from, mostly talking head interviews with archival footage cut in, well-shot film that could easily play on PBS or something along those lines. A wry, hard hitting documentary about the effect of the campus culture wars on individual rights, diversity of opinion, and the life of the mind in American higher education. Very professionally made. Great subject matter, we found it very interesting."

The film will be shown at the festival on Tuesday, March 24th at 6:00PM at the Village East Cinema at 2nd Avenue and 12th Street.

For tickets and other information, visit:

http://indoctrinate-u.com/pages/screenings.html#nyiifvf

DOCUMENTARY CHANNEL AIRINGS

Also, the overwhelming response to the Documentary Channel's previous airings of "Indoctrinate U" encouraged them to bring back the film for a second run. The film will be shown several times in March:

Tuesday, March 17th @ 9:00PM
Wednesday, March 18th @ midnight
Wednesday, March 25th @ 5:00PM
Monday, March 30th @ 2:00AM

The Documentary Channel is available on the Dish Network as well as on some cable carriers.

In addition, some PBS stations simulcast the Documentary Channel during certain parts of the day. If you don't get the Documentary Channel itself, you still may want to check the times above against your local PBS affiliate's schedule.

Giving parents equal parenting time by law

Matt · 27 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the third time in 22 years, Washington state is leading the nation in family law reform. This time, the report is called the Residential Time Summary Report prepared by the state Office of the Administrator for the Courts. This is a first-in-the-nation compilation of post-divorce breakdown of parenting time for children, mothers and fathers. The numbers are collected case-by-case and county-by-county.

Amazingly, 46 percent of children of divorce, statewide, are ordered to spend a minimum of 35 percent parenting time with their biological fathers. Parenting time is broken down by large percentages, and meaningful shared parenting starts in the range of 30-35 percent. This is about 300 percent better results than anyone could have expected from the time the Parenting Act was first approved. If there ever was any doubt, Washington state is now an official shared-parenting state for families impacted by parental separation.'

Deadliest jobs in America

Matt · 27 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Slideshow here. See if you can spot any women in the pictures.

Cops: Woman Traded 2 Kids For A Bird, $175

anthony · 27 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(AP) A Louisiana woman is accused of trading two young children in her care for a pet cockatoo and $175 cash from a couple who had been trying for years to have their own child, authorities said Thursday.

Donna Greenwell, 53, a long-haul trucker with an arrest record from Pitkin, is charged with aggravated kidnapping, along with would-be adoptive parents Paul J. Romero, 46, and Brandy Lynn Romero, 27, of Evangeline Parish.
...
The transaction for the 5-year-old boy and the 4-year-old girl was negotiated by phone after Greenwell spotted a flier posted at a livestock barn selling a cockatoo for $1,500 and called the Romeros on Feb. 18, Dupre said.'

"When it comes to reading, girls rule"

anthony · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many parents and educators do not realize that, on average, girls are better readers than boys. In every age group, boys have been scoring lower than girls on U.S. Department of Education reading tests for more than 30 years.

The longer boys are in school, the wider the reading gender gap becomes.
...
According to NAEP, males who have made it through 12 years of school have significantly poorer reading skills than their female peers. Among white males of college-educated parents, 23 percent scored “below basic” in reading, compared to 7 percent of their female peers. Among Hispanic males of college-educated parents, 34 percent scored “below basic” in reading, compared to 19 percent of their female peers. Among black males of college-educated parents, 44 percent scored “below basic” in reading, compared to 33 percent of their female peers.'

UK: Teenage girls have overtaken boys as the new gross-out merchants

anthony · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'They have entirely missed the point. Did you spot the age of the protagonist? Teenage, right? And she's female. And those two things qualify her as a member of the new gross-out generation. It is true that teenage boys, and the teenage boy in every man, have long had a monopoly on disgust. From the Earl of Rochester to Philip Roth, the boys have loved the shock of the “eww!” Our daughters may be made of sugar and spice, but it is not for them that the notorious apple pie scene in American Pie was made. Horrible Histories, the gross-out children's books, are marketed for boys.

Teenage girls are applauded for overtaking their male classmates on most officially gradeable targets. With their typical thoroughness, they now excel in this previously exclusively male skill too: the ability to make a joke about a wet sock, and, for an A*, laugh about it while snorting milk through the nose.'

Boston Globe: Where have all the 'real' men gone?

anthony · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Editorial here. Excerpt:

'IN ITS PUERILE, lowest-common-denominator way, Hollywood has always reflected society. The movies "Taken," starring Liam Neeson as Bryan Mills, a retired CIA operative, and "The Wrestler," with Mickey Rourke as an aging grappler whose life and career have reached terminal velocity, share in their depictions of the Alpha Male separated from his kin by the vicissitudes of the warrior profession.

...

These days, it's no longer fashionable to be a man - to inhabit one's masculinity as previous generations have done. Compare baseball star Alex Rodriquez, under scrutiny for using steroids, with Red Sox great Ted Williams, who sacrificed the prime of his career to serve as a Marine aviator. (Williams flew 39 combat missions in Korea and crash-landed after taking small-arms fire.) Williams's baseball statistics, including a lifetime batting average of .344, compare favorably with A-Rod's. And in this age of the pseudo-man, it's hard to imagine Rodriquez visiting the troops in Iraq, let alone volunteering to serve there.

...

Any single dad will tell you that family court punishes those men who persist in doing what men were once mandated to do: range wide in hunting, bringing back the kill at irregular intervals, adorned with its blood. In today's world, you must produce the trophy without being the one who kills it. In Hollywood, anyway, the only acceptable role is man-by-proxy: You must get someone else to do your dirty work, or risk losing everything.'

'The Female Persuasion '

anthony · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We size up men for their potential and then attempt to train and transform them into our ideal image. We pretend to be offended by their masculine presentations and open assertions regarding sex. We turn on the charm and the tears at will and are determined to make the men in our lives responsible for our life experiences and happiness. We hold the power of sex and wield it to trap them and at a moment that suits us, transform it into a tool of punishment and torture for any lack of patronization. Are those mixed messages and abuses of power conducive to the success and happiness we seek?

Each time we choose a man it is based on our visions, our needs, our hopes and dreams and by our standards and design. If things don't go according to our plan we blame him for our own bad choices. One of the biggest complaints from men is that innate need women have to change them, to mold and shape them to the female design. Men are what they are, and most like it that way. If women did not hold the power of sex men wouldn't dare agree to conform. However, forcing that reform usually means failed relationships or breeds discontented men who cheat. Are we really better off having an unhappy man rather than no man at all?'

Hospital Builds $360 Million Dollar Women's Unit Equiped With Robotics And Day Spa Services

anthony · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The all-women's unit is one of many innovations revealed Wednesday by Detroit-based Henry Ford at a preview of its new Oakland County hospital, an expansive 300-bed structure set to open March 15. The stone and brick building is attached to the existing medical center Henry Ford opened in 1975. The new hospital has a ground-floor retail area with small-town style storefronts and a look more in line with the feel of a northern Michigan lodge than a sterile medical building.

Along with its cozy resort-style look and all-private patient rooms, the hospital will have robot-assisted surgery, a one-stop care center to treat seniors with neurological illnesses, and a wellness center with day spa services and personal health coaches.

The female-only unit -- a ground-breaker in Metro Detroit, according to Henry Ford officials -- is on the hospital's third floor beside pediatrics and maternity. It will differ from a typical women's health center, where hospitals tend to group women's services, such as maternity and OB/GYN, because it will accommodate women with more generalized medical needs, such as recovering from surgery, Zambricki said.
...
And does Henry Ford know what men want?

'"We are going to start with women," Zambricki said, and depending on how that goes, "we may expand it to men."'

Former Deputy Wants Men To Help End Domestic Violence

anthony · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Inside a lecture hall at UNC Charlotte, professor Joe Marinello teaches criminal justice students. His passion is understanding and ending domestic violence.

"Domestic violence is a social cancer," he said.

He said it's a disease that's slowly killing society, and for too long women have led the movement alone to try to stop it.

"Men have to come out of the shadows and admit that we are the primary perpetrators against women, children, and other men," he said.

...

Marinello is also reaching out to teach boys and girls in middle and high schools about respect in relationships. He said he wants to plant the seeds for change that men should be protectors and not controllers.'

UK: Men get domestic violence support

anthony · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A network of refuges for male victims of domestic violence has opened in Northamptonshire.

Privately run and funded by mother and daughter team Dawn Hardie and Rachel Allen, Next Steps Housing Association provides 35 three-bedroom homes across the region with spaces for 105 men fleeing violence and their children.

Ms Hardie said the scheme is the second in the UK, and the first on this scale.

‘There is nowhere for men…and there’s no funding available, no support at all…it’s an uphill battle and we’ve funded it from our own pockets,’ she said.

The association has already received six men, two who had been victims of rape and another who had been hit in the face with a claw hammer.

‘All of them have been hospitalised, they suffer from depression and feel they have failed. They’re all high risk,’ Ms Hardie said.'

UK: Thame sex offending teacher spared jail

anthony · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A THAME woman who had sex with a 14-year-old boy who contacted her over the internet to help with his learning difficulties, will not go to jail.

Catherine Armstrong, 33, had admitted three charges of sexual activity with a child and was today given a 12 month prison sentence, suspended for two years, at Oxford Crown Court.

In sentencing Armstrong, Judge Julian Hall told her that he did not think she posed a danger in the future and that female prisons did not have the facilities to help sex offenders.

"You have been given the chance to rebuild your life," he added.'

Dartmouth Review: 'Hating the Man, Loving Your Body'

anthony · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The most offensive of these supposedly light-hearted monologues was one entitled “The Little Coochie Snorcher that Could.” It was given from the perspective of a sixteen year-old girl (thirteen in Ensler’s original play) who hates her “little coochie snorcher” (read: vagina) because of myriad reasons including an over protective mother, a deadbeat father and an earlier sexual assault described in far too much detail.

Then one glorious day she meets a nice twenty-four-year-old lesbian who takes the girl away from her mother, gets her drunk and sexually abuses her further. The girl, however, describes the encounter in positive terms saying of the assailant: “[she] turned my sorry-ass coochie snorcher into a kind of heaven.” The same phenomenon is seen in those suffering from the Stockholm Syndrome.

It should be noted here that in the original script of the scene the young girl acknowledges that it was a rape, but it was a “good rape”. While the V-Day organizers deserve kudos for the alteration to the original, what remains is far from an appropriate scene in a play that claims to be for the prevention of sexual abuse. Just imagine the riotous uproar that would result if it were a twenty-four year-old man and a sixteen year old girl, much less a thirteen year-old.'

She'll be out in less than a year...

Anonymous · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

... thanks to the way British 'justice' works:

Model who left student scarred for life in glassing attack is jailed for two years. Excerpt:

'A former model who smashed a glass in a student's face, leaving him with horrific lifelong scars, has been jailed.

Drunk air stewardess Lisa Kee hit Liam Sharratt twice with the glass, dragging it down his face and wounding him in five places.

Kee, who lashed out when a flirtatious conversation turned sour, was jailed for two and a half years at Manchester Crown Court yesterday. She was dragged screaming into custody.
...

He said: 'This was a vicious and wholly unwarranted attack and you know what you have done and you know the enormity of what you have done and the effects which will continue to be a blight on Mr Sharratt every time he looks in the mirror.'

She was ordered to serve at least half of her sentence after admitting a charge of unlawful wounding.'

The photographs of what this insane bitch has done to this poor young man have to be seen to get the true picture.

As usual, imagine if the genders were reversed.

NH Shared Parenting Bill Petition Needs a Strong Show of Support

Scott · 28 February 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Richard Smaglick of New Hampshire is asking for as much support as possible for HB139 - a bill which would establish a default presumption of shared parenting in divorce or separation cases. You can read more and sign a petition here. Please consider taking part in this simple act of activism that can help an important effort for parental equality.

'Ladette' binge-drinking violence soars by 300% in just seven years

Proud_to_be_a_man · 1 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

As a kind of companion piece to the article I submitted yesterday about the 'model' who disfigured a young man because he was laughing at her:

Ladette binge-drinking violence soars by 300% in just seven years. Excerpt:

"Violent attacks by binge-drinking teenage girls have risen by nearly 300 per cent in seven years in a frightening wave of ‘ladette’ violence."
...
Hundreds of thousands of women have signed up to online forums where they boast about their antics and proudly post pictures showing them in various states of inebriation and undress, including kneeling over lavatories, being sick, exposing themselves or answering a call of nature in public.'

The gentler sex, eh?

Australia: No jail for blind drunk feminist

Matt · 1 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A PROMINENT academic has avoided jail for crashing her car with her child onboard, after consuming an estimated 15-20 standard drinks.

Dr Fiona Rummery, 41, a lecturer at the University of Western Sydney was found guilty of drink driving after crashing her Volvo into the back of another parked car in Haberfield on the evening December 10 last year.

Rummery's young daughter and pet dog were both in the car at the time but none were injured.'

Poll: Should the Army exempt mothers with young children from active service?

Matt · 1 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Vote here. Some comments:

"This isn't a feminist issue (and I have often been described as one), both men and women who have served their country with honor but then kept on the list for recall should as parents be able to care for their children. The military has the ability to provide stateside jobs and should take every means possible to provide this. It is not their duty to break apart families. Let the parent complete their military contract where they can also be the parent they need to be."

"I completely agree. We cannot whine our way into the service and then use the fact that we can carry children to try to whine our way back out. When you sign up for the military, you KNOW this is a possibility...like it or not, you can hope it doesn't happen, but it does...now deal with it! And, YES, I am a mother!!"

India: Woman cuts husband's genitals after fight

webdigr · 2 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In a fit of rage, a woman allegedly castrated her husband while he was asleep at their house in the Amraiwadi area of the city, police said on Monday.

The incident occurred late on Sunday when Kailashben Mackwana (23), who had a fight with her husband Kanusinh (23) earlier in the day, in a fit of anger, cut his genitals with a knife, they said.
...
"The patient's condition is stable. For now we have done skin grafting in the affected area. His penis has been cut, but there is no injury to the testicles," Dr Gautam Sharma of the civil hospital said.
...
The police have arrested Kailashben, who told them during interrogation that the duo had a fight over some mortgaged jewellery.

Futher investigation is on, police said.'

Australia: Daughter not guilty of cling wrap murder

Matt · 2 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman accused of smothering her father after binding him with cling wrap has been found not guilty of murder by a Sydney jury.

Daniela Beltrame, 55, had pleaded not guilty to murdering Ederino Beltrame, 70, in the early hours of April 26, 2001, at his Canley Heights home in Sydney's west.

She earlier had admitted to a charge of forging his will and on Monday was convicted of a third charge of coercing a witness - her daughter Loretta Appleyard.'

UK: IVF mothers can name ANYONE as 'father' on birth certificate

Matt · 2 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Family values were under attack again last night with the news that single women having IVF will be able to name anyone they like as their baby's father on the birth certificate.

New regulations mean that a mother could nominate another woman to be her child's 'father'.

The 'father' does not need to be genetically related to the baby, nor be in any sort of romantic relationship with the mother.

...

'Teenage pregnancy is on the increase, abortion is on the increase, family breakdown is at record levels and we have got a growing number of dysfunctional children that are the product of broken homes.

'The lesson seems to be loud and clear to me that fathers are required.'

Tory MP Ann Widdecombe said the change would destroy the 'basic nature' of a man and a woman bringing up a child together as parents.'

Philippines: DNA test confirms fraud, annulment granted

Matt · 2 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Bacolod Regional Trial Court Judge Ray Alan Drilon has annulled the marriage of a Negrense couple after a DNA test showed that the child borne by the wife was not the biological offspring of the husband who works abroad.

The family court judge ruled that the marriage of the couple, whose names are being withheld by the DAILY STAR on the request of the court, was null and void.

Due to fraud committed by the wife in getting her overseas worker husband to marry her, properties acquired during their marriage are awarded in favor of the husband, the judge said in his decision, a copy of which was furnished the DAILY STAR yesterday.'

NC mom recalled to Army duty will be discharged

Matt · 3 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RALEIGH, N.C. – The North Carolina mother who reported for Army duty with her two young children will be discharged from the military, her attorney said Monday. Attorney Mark Waple of Fayetteville said it wasn't yet clear if Lisa Pagan would receive an honorable discharge or a general discharge under honorable conditions. It also wasn't certain when she would be discharged.

The reason for the discharge will be that she doesn't have, and cannot have, an adequate family care for her two young children, he said.

"There is definitely some feeling of relief, especially since she has been led to believe that the command at Fort Benning is going to do everything to expedite this so she can return to Charlotte, North Carolina, with her children," Waple said of Pagan's reaction to the decision.

She has received no time line "except they are trying to process it as quickly as possible," he said.'

Jim Cook, the 'Father of Joint Custody,' Passes Away

Matt · 3 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Jim Cook, often called "The Father of Joint Custody," passed away last week. He is pictured above at the left along with Warren Farrell (right) and Dr. Ned Holstein (center). Time Magazine described Jim's work in 2003:

As late as 1971, the Minnesota State Bar Association's handbook advised lawyers and judges that "except in very rare cases, the father should not have custody of the minor children. He is usually unqualified psychologically and emotionally."

When James Cook, a Los Angeles real estate lobbyist, divorced in 1974 and sought shared custody of his son, "the judge thought it was preposterous," he recalls. "He told me, 'I don't have permission to do it.'"'

RADAR ALERT: Like Tall-Tales and Fairy Tales? Then You'll Love the SAFE Act!

Matt · 3 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Recently Rep. Ted Poe and Rep. Lucille Roybal-Allard introduced the Security and Financial Empowerment (SAFE) Act. Normally you'd expect a bill to be based on well-accepted facts and good research. But the Findings of this bill include tall-tales at best, and fairytales at worst.

Here are some of the bill's goofiest Findings:

- FINDING: Violence against women has been reported to be the leading cause of physical injury to women."
  FACT: Family violence researcher Richard Gelles had this to say about this Finding: "Unfortunately, as good a sound bite as it is, the statement is simply not true." The Centers for Disease Control reports that in 2006 (the most recent year that data is available) all of the leading causes of injury to women were unintentional. Intentional injury to women accounted for only 1.4% of injury-related Emergency Department visits. (See chart)

- FINDING: "According to the recent study by the National Institutes of Health and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, each year there are over 5,300,000 non-fatal violent victimizations committed by intimate partners against women."
  FACT: This Finding comes from the National Violence Against Women Survey, but conveniently ignores the fact that the survey also found 3.2 intimate partner victimizations against men. Also, the survey was done by the National Institute of Justice, not the National Institutes of Health.

- FINDING: "Domestic and sexual assault victims have been subjected to discrimination by private and State employers, including discrimination motivated by sex and stereotypic notions about women.."
  FACT: "... Motivated by sex and stereotypic notions about women" – this vague and unsupported statement resembles an ideological rant, not an objective Finding.

Rep. Ted Poe, in sponsoring the bill, is out of step with his party. Please contact two key Republican Congressional leaders, Rep. David Camp and Rep. Howard McKeon, and request they oppose H.R. 739.

Rep. David Camp
Phone: (202) 225-3561
Fax: (202) 225-9679

Rep. Howard McKeon
Phone: (202) 225-1956
Fax: (202) 226-0683

If possible, please mention RADAR's analysis (.pdf file) of the bill.

And, as always, remember to be polite.

++++++

Australia: Dad jailed over card

Matt · 3 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story reported here. Excerpt:

"A MELBOURNE father of three has been jailed for sending a birthday card to his daughter.

The man ``Mick'' -- who cannot be identified for legal reasons -- was locked up in a suburban police station for seven nights and spent another in the tough Melbourne Custody Centre. He says he was surrounded by drug addicts and people charged with violent offences during his ordeal last month.

Mick claims he is a victim of a family law system that is biased against fathers. ``I was jailed for nine days and eight nights for sending my 11-year-old daughter a birthday card,'' he said. ``Apparently I broke an intervention order. It's ludicrous and it breaks your heart.''

The 51-year-old is estranged from his wife and claims she has brought a series of intervention orders against him, banning him from contact with his children, without any evidence. ``Until my wife divorced me I was a legally unimpeachable citizen -- now I'm being treated like a criminal just because I want some contact with my kids,'' Mick said yesterday. ``And that contact was ended arbitrarily without even a hearing or the presentation of evidence.''

Overt racism: Fine if you're female

Matt · 3 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'NIAGARA FALLS—Two days after a man was sentenced to probation and community service for putting up a sign as a “joke” in a public works garage that said “whites only” on a drinking fountain, city police were called to a home in the 600 block of 25th Street on Sunday to investigate another racially charged sign.

This one was clearly no joke.

No charges were filed Sunday, but police told the woman she must take down the handwritten sign on a fence on her property saying, “I rent three bedrooms [at her address to] white people Niagara Falls.”

The 53-year-old woman told police she put up the sign after someone tried to break into her house and added, “I can do what I want. I live in America,” according to a police report.

Police said they received complaints and she must take the sign down. An officer at the scene said the woman agreed to take down the sign under protest. The officer said the woman already had seven more signs she was planning to hang up.'

Man gets arrested, woman gets... told to stop. And then nothing else happens.

"Daddy Bread"

Gwyddion · 4 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Daddy Bread. Excerpt:

"He used to make it only when the snow was flying, usually on his days off from his job as a registered nurse.
...
Now that I'm a parent with my own little ones to feed, I marvel at how amazingly integral that bread was to my growing up years. No matter what else was going on in life, Daddy Bread made me feel safe and cared about. It was almost like an extension of my strong, capable and loving father himself."

"If I Thought Like A Girl"

xtrnl · 4 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Hello everybody. These are the lyrics to my latest hip hop song. I figured you might like it. I was inspired to write this after having to listen to Beyonce's "If I Were A Boy" one too many times.

I want to make it clear to all the female members of the site that the girls I'm refering to in this song are actually the opportunistic women that we MRAs try to steer clear of. I am well aware that not all women are like the ones I describe in this song. I just figured there are so many songs which stereotype all guys as cheaters, it would be refreshing to encounter a song from a guy's point of view.

IF I THOUGHT LIKE A GIRL
by X-TRNL

Since I don't look like a man from a magazine
I'll never be another cog in your machine
I'll never be the guy that you place by your side
Just to cover insecurity and make you feel pride
I'll never ever be able to compete with Your idea of a perfect guy, it doesn't exist
And I must say it is rather sexist
To judge the other gender on how much they spendin'

(Pre-chorus 1)
If I thought like a girl, it might make sense
How money's worth more to most than innocence
How giving girls bribes just to be in my life
Is the only way they would consider being my wife
The way they act like the bedroom benefits only men
And think we should have to serve them to get it again
The way some bitch about committment and think men should pay up
When all the while they're the ones ready to trade up

(Pre-chorus 2)
It's finally, occured to me
I would much rather be free
Than abide by rules that are
Based on a double standard
'Cause I'd much rather be alone
Than risk everything I own
Just to have a girl to whom to pander

(Chorus)
What do you see when you look at me?
Do you see your lover or just money?
Do you see the one with whom you wanna be,
Or just a source of forced apologies?
You don't want a partnership, just a one way street
Your favourite two letter word is 'me'
You don't wanna repay the nice stuff I do
So tell me why the f should I be with you?

I play no fool, I play it cool, and I will not pander to
The very likes of you

Since I am not a man who has a trust fund
I'll never be the reason you're going plus one
To your friend's wedding, it must be so much fun
Predictin' which guy's likeliest to pay a lump sum
Yeah, damn right, you're gonna hear me askin'
Why do you treat love like a business transaction?
Why do I need cash for your love to be lasting?
Don't go maxing out my cards on useless contraptions

Pre-Chorus 1
Chorus

Since I am not a man you say is a real one
I'll never be the guy from which you're concealing
The secret that you're pregnant, 'cause you're in fear of
The dad wanting to keep the kid, when you wanna clear it
So you'll go on, and act like nothing happened
You'll get rid of the baby without even asking
The father's opinion or for his insights
It's clear that you don't give a sh about a dad's rights

It's finally occured to me,
I would much rather be free,
Than abide by rules that are
Based on a double standard.

Chorus
Pre-Chorus 1(2x)

What do you see when you look at me?

Women Previously Charged With Castration Sentenced To Ridiculously Lenient Sentence

xtrnl · 4 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I really regret to inform everybody that the infamous Rebecca Dawson, who used her fingernails to tear the scrotum of a co-worker, received an unbelievably lenient sentence for her crime. Excerpt:

'A Harnett County woman pleaded guilty Monday to assault in the castration of a man at a Christmas party two years ago.

Rebecca Dawson, 36, pleaded guilty to assault inflicting serious injury, a misdemeanor. She had been charged with malicious castration, a felony.
...
Dawson received a 75-day suspended jail sentence and was placed on 18 months of supervised probation. She was ordered not to drink alcohol while on probation, and she must complete an anger management course.'

So I guess the obvious question is if this were the case of a man tearing off part of a woman's private parts, would he get this lenient a sentence? He'd probably never see the light of day again.

Clinton intervenes in US-Brazil custody case

anthony · 4 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK – Secretary of State Hillary Clinton has intervened in an international custody dispute over an 8-year-old boy, saying Wednesday she is pushing Brazil to return him to his father in New Jersey.

The boy, whose Brazilian mother died last year, is being raised by his stepfather, a lawyer in Rio de Janeiro.
...
Goldman's wife, Bruna, took the boy on a vacation to Brazil in 2004 and never returned to the United States. She divorced him, remarried and died last year after giving birth.

Goldman has said he was denied visitation for years.

Clinton said Goldman's case is an example of a problem around the world. She said there were nearly 50 U.S. children in similar situations in Brazil who should be returned to the U.S. — and more around the world.'

Office on ‘gender’ proposed for UN

Matt · 4 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At a forum hosted by the Carnegie Council for Ethics in International Affairs in New York this week, a former top United Nations (UN) official criticized the UN’s “deplorable” record on women and the “the hypocrisy within the UN” on gender. In a presentation entitled “The United Nations and Gender: Has Anything Gone Right?,” Stephen Lewis promoted a radical overhaul of the United Nations, starting with a the creation of a new, billion dollar gender office.

Lewis, the former UN Special Envoy for HIV/AIDS in Africa and a former Deputy Director of UNICEF, has long been a vociferous supporter of the creation of a “fully-resourced” women’s agency. Such an agency could change the UN and end the “suffocating patriarchy” with a new “sensibility of collaboration.” Lewis continued that this, “would not only help women but rescue the UN from some of its worst behavior.”
...
In pushing for a “gender” office, Lewis joins radical feminist non-governmental organizations such as Equality Now and the Women’s Environment and Development Organization (WEDO). Last year, WEDO commenced a formal campaign for Gender Equality Architecture Reform (GEAR), lobbying for a “stronger, consolidated, higher status women’s entity.” 275 organizations have signed onto the GEAR campaign and WEDO is slated to host two events at the UN headquarters during this year’s annual Commission on the Status of Women meeting in an attempt to rally more support for the new agency.'

Official review finds a catalogue failings by Social Workers

Matt · 5 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The father of murdered baby Aaron Gilbert has accused social services of not doing enough to save his son.

Aaron was subjected to a torrent of abuse from Andrew Lloyd, aged 23, who had moved in with Aaron's mother Rebecca Lewis after starting a relationship with her.

He pleaded guilty to murdering the 13-month-old and 21-year-old Lewis was found guilty of familial murder for allowing the abuse to continue.

Now Aaron's father Gareth Gilbert has said more should have been done to protect his son.

Sharon Hurlow, a cousin of Lewis, called social services on two occasions before Lloyd inflicted the fatal injuries to Aaron on May 5 last year.'

UK: Woman Bites Off Boyfriend's Tongue During Kiss

anthony · 5 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Tyneside woman deliberately bit off her boyfriend's tongue during a drunken birthday kiss, a court has heard.

Tracy Davies, 40, bit a third of Mark Coghill's tongue off, Newcastle Crown Court was told.

...

They returned to Mr Coghill's home but Ms Davies grew upset because she wanted a baby but was not yet pregnant.

As Mr Coghill moved to comfort her, she asked him to kiss her, the court heard.

Julian Smith, prosecuting, said: "He did so and within a few seconds, she bit down hard on his tongue.

...

After the attack Ms Davies called an ambulance and paramedics then alerted police.

Mr Smith added: "She told police, 'We have had a domestic. I have bitten his tongue off. Here it is'."

He added that Ms Davies was surprised when police arrested her, telling officers: "You're joking".'

Teen gets probation in videotaped beating

anthony · 5 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BARTOW, Fla. - One of five Florida teens accused of beating a cheerleader classmate in a videotape seen widely on the Internet received a year of probation.

Brittany Mayes also was ordered Thursday to pay $1,752 to the victim's family. The 18-year-old was one of five girls who pleaded guilty to battery in connection with the March 2008 attack.
...
The victim's father claimed the teens were motivated by plans to produce a video that would become popular on a video-sharing Web site. But the mother of one girl said the victim provoked the other teens by insulting them on a social networking site.'

The Times of India wants to slap men

arindamp · 6 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The sexist anti-male 'Times of India' is running a poll asking what man should be slapped. Please condemn them on their site by abusing them to your heart's contents. It's on the main page and a direct link is given.

--

Ed. note: The link to the poll does not seem to be on the front page anymore. Perhaps they replaced it after getting complaints or just plain thinking better of it. Still, it looks like it had been there for some amount of time, as the link above is valid.

UK: Woman assaults gov't official, no arrest or charges pending

Matt · 6 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An anti-Heathrow protester has sloshed green custard into Business Secretary Lord Mandelson's face as he arrived at the Government's low carbon economy summit.

Leila Deen, an activist from campaign group Plane Stupid, covered the politician's face in pea-green goo as he got out of his ministerial car.

...

A Scotland Yard spokesman said no complaint had been received on the matter.'

Author Equates Domestic Violence With Torture While Ignoring Male Victims

anthony · 6 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Taking this step asserts that domestic violence ranks with the gravest human rights violations and that violence in intimate relationships is no less heinous and damaging than violence in official prisons and interrogation “booths.” The tortures authorized by U.S. officials against male detainees in Guantanamo and Abu Ghraib, including methods of sexualized humiliation and fear-induction, bear strong resemblance to what is tolerated as “domestic” violence.
...
While women are not the only victims of domestic violence, we are overwhelmingly so. Because of its disproportionate effect on women, domestic violence is also viewed as a brutal form of discrimination against women. It is notable that, despite the international recognition of gender violence as a grave violation of human rights principles, U.S. constitutional law does not accept domestic violence as either a civil or human rights violation.
...
Likewise, the state perpetuates violence and torture when the state takes away the victim’s children, arrests her on the perpetrator’s say-so or when the judicial machinery is so riddled with sexism or racism that domestic violence victims are reluctant to use it. The result is to discourage recourse to the state, notes Natalie Sokoloff.'

View Point: Stop Avoiding the Issue of Failing Boys

anthony · 6 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Interestingly, however, there's something all these groups studiously avoid talking about. These U.S. education numbers look bad primarily because the schools are failing boys. For the most part, those awful high school graduation numbers are driven by boys, not girls (32 percent of boys drop out, compared to 25 percent of girls). And the lackluster college graduation rates are due primarily to men floundering in college (men earn about 42 percent of four-year degrees). Given that men are far more likely to major in math and science – a special worry for the technical industries -- the chamber should be particularly concerned about men falling behind.

But the gender angle never gets mentioned. Popular, well-thought-out solutions, which include strengthening the high school curriculum, building better after-school programs and making college more affordable, skirt the obvious solution of reaching out to failing boys specifically. As for MDRC's 15-point plan – gender didn't get a mention.'

Canada: Feminist activist targets male-dominated government, ice rinks

anthony · 6 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The feminist planner, researcher and activist, who is a founding member of Toronto Women's City Alliance and the author of a recent UN-HABITAT publication on gender and local government, will speak at the city's International Women's Day Celebration in council chambers March 9.

Khosla, who works internationally and lives between Toronto and Vancouver, says administrators in charge of Toronto's skating arenas allotted ice time for hockey players based on who had held slots in the past.
...
Decisions about infrastructure, sports and recreation, public transit, public toilets and neighbourhood design would better suit women, seniors and multicultural groups if they were considered through a gender lens, Khosla says, who cited the example of better lighting around bus stops.'

Philippines: "What (police) men can do, women can do better"

anthony · 6 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MANILA, Philippines—For a woman chief of police like Superintendent Lailene Amparo, duking it out in a man's world like the national police force is not as hard as it seems.

In fact, she said, what policemen can do, policewomen can do better.
...
"Eventually they got used to having a woman police chief," Amparo said in an interview after the weekly media forum at Camp Crame on Friday.
...
Amparo's advice to other women who want to venture into the man's world: "If men can do it, women can do it too. Sometimes even better."

UK woman readily admits she tricked three men into having children

Saira · 6 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"As a 31-year-old woman, she might be expected to have developed a more mature attitude to pregnancy and childbearing. The reality is anything but. Because Angelica, who claims to be 'addicted to having babies', readily admits to tricking three hapless men in succession into fathering half her brood of illegitimate daughters.

A former model, she now lives in a luxurious house in Hertfordshire with her lawyer partner. And so thrilled is she by her family so far that she is planning to expand it even further, this time by IVF so that she can select a male embryo.
...
Defiantly, she says: 'I'll tell them I wanted a baby, but that I didn't tell their fathers I was trying to get pregnant. When they realise that I was prepared to lie to conceive them, they'll know they were really wanted and much-loved babies.'"

Clerk was wrong to claim sexism in setting pay

anthony · 6 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hartland Township Clerk Ann Ulrich played the "sexist" card at a meeting of the Hartland Township Board of Trustees last month, complaining that a male maintenance worker was hired in at a higher rate than a female worker doing the same job.

After the board approved hiring Dennis Goodwin for $12 an hour and Virginia Toor for $11.50 an hour, Ulrich said, "The explanation does just not warrant it. This looks sexist."
...
The explanation Township Manager James Wickman gave Ulrich and the board was that Goodwin had more experience and better qualifications than Or; therefore, according to township hiring policies, he should get a better offer. Also, Goodwin is intended to be the primary maintenance worker, while Or is considered a substitute in the event Goodwin is unable to come to work. According to resumes submitted to the township, Goodwin lists some 32 years of maintenance experience while Or has 12 years in the field.'

Teachers charged with 'having sex with student'

Matt · 7 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two Bountiful Junior High School teachers are accused of sexually assaulting the same 13-year-old student, after their separate relationships with him spiraled from personal conversations to the exchange of sexual text messages and phone sex, authorities said.

On Friday, the Davis County Attorney's Office filed first-degree felony charges of rape and sodomy on a child against Linda R. Nef, 46, and Valynne Bowers, 39.

Nef, a Utah studies teacher and cheerleading adviser, and Bowers, who teaches math, each confessed to having sex with the student, said Bountiful Police Lt. Randy Pickett. Until recently, the two teachers did not know about each other's relationship with the same boy, Pickett said.'

NYTimes: Opinion column ignores DV facts

Matt · 7 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A. Article here. Excerpt:

'Conversation should start young because abusive relationships can, she warns. Dating violence is shockingly common among teenagers. According to the Family Violence and Prevention Fund: One in five female high school students reports being physically and or sexually abused by a date...'

Among other things she cites one-sided stats on dating violence.

You can post a reply and can send a letter to letters-at-nytimes.com

Some stats on dating violence and DV:

A recent 32-nation study on dating violence by the University of New Hampshire found women are as violent and controlling as men in relationships worldwide.

In 2006, the University of Florida recently reported that women are more likely than men to “stalk, attack and abuse” their partners.

In 2007, the University of Washington found that “nearly twice as many women as men said they perpetrated domestic violence in the past year including kicking, biting or punching their partner, threatening to hit or throw something at their partner, and pushing, grabbing or shoving their partner.”

The American Psychiatric Association and Harvard Medical School announced a major national study of young adult heterosexuals and found half of the domestic violence was reciprocal and women initiated most of both the reciprocal and non-reciprocal violence. (Refs here and here)

Men report it less than women, which makes crime data Lisa unreliable. But empircal research consistently shows women are at least as violent as men in heterosexual relationships. California State University Professor Martin Fiebert summarizes over 200 of these studies online.

This Canadian government report (.pdf file) on abused men recognizes the same data.

Also see: Dutton, D., & Corvo, K., Transforming a flawed policy: A call to revive psychology and science in domestic violence research and practice (.pdf file) (11) 2006, 457-483.

Saudi Arabia: Violence Against Men

Anonymous · 9 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A not so well-known fact is that there are thousands of men who suffer from physical or verbal abuse from their wives, but they have to keep their suffering private, because of the social stigma attached to reporting it.

“If you mention the issue of ‘battered men’ in the East, the first reaction is usually laughter, followed by scorn. Women are now more aware of their rights through the media and Internet. They get frustrated when deprived of their rights and this causes an enormous latent aggression which drives them to verbal and physical abuse to give vent to their feelings,” said Professor Chamman Rahim, a lecturer of Social Sciences in Dar-Al-Hikmah College at Jeddah.

...

She always starts beating me without any provocation. One Friday night I was playing cards with my friends and she came over and pushed me off the chair and told my friends to leave home,” he said. He said that when they argue, his wife throws things at him accompanied by verbal abuse, and at one point even threw a phone at him which cut his forehead and left a scar.

“I’ve never hit her back, because I am not that type of person and I do not want to leave her because of the children,” he said.'

It's encouraging to see that men from all parts of the world are now speaking up.

"Mothers Who Kill Their Children" tracks the cases

Anonymous · 9 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Part of DaddyBlog, a running list of mothers who kill their children: Mothers Who Kill Their Children by Microwaving, Stabbing, Drowning, etc.

Woman assaulted ex-boyfriend who asked for ring back, say police

Michael · 9 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PORTSMOUTH — When Britta Osberg's ex-boyfriend asked her to return a ring, she punched him in the face twice, leaving the ring's imprint on his cheek, police allege.

Based on those allegations, Osberg, 19, of 110 Perkins Road, Rye, is scheduled to be arraigned in Portsmouth District Court Monday on two class A misdemeanor counts of simple assault.
Stories & blog

According to an affidavit by Officer Eric Kinsman, the alleged victim told police he went to a city gas station to retrieve the ring from Osberg, she refused to return it and they began to argue. During the argument, Osberg is alleged to have twice punched her ex in the face.'

On Chris Brown's and Rihanna's Abuse, other news

Matt · 9 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'And another member of the “nurturing, compassionate, never-violent” sex defies the ideological feminist stereotype (while an unconstitutional Violence Against Women Act was passed in the U.S. to protect her!):

“Pop star Rihanna hit boyfriend Chris Brown, slapping him 'numerous times' before he allegedly beat her and left her with serious facial injuries, according to reports. ...Rihanna was the first one to lash out at Brown — after seeing a text message from another woman — and continued to fight him as he punched her....”

How many times have you seen women slap men in movies, sitcoms, and even commercials? In real life, when a woman slaps a man, does she believe she, like the fictionalized women who slap men, will experience no blow-back from the man, that he will just stand there and take it? What does a real-life woman do when she herself is slapped numerous times? Stand there and take it? No, she will likely lose her temper and retaliate. While I condemn both of them for their violence, I realize it takes considerable will power and self-restraint to keeping from losing one's temper when one is being slapped repeatedly, especially when, as Brown was doing, driving one's vehicle and putting lives in danger in a potential accident.'

Pro football player stabbed in head and neck by girlfriend

Matt · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TAMPA, Fla. (AP) - Authorities say the girlfriend of Tampa Bay Buccaneers linebacker Geno Hayes stabbed him in the head and in the neck.

A Hillsborough County Sheriff's spokeswoman says Hayes was taken to a hospital by a friend Saturday. The 21-year-old former Florida State player was treated and later released.

Deputies arrested 19-year-old Shevelle Bagley on Saturday afternoon. The sheriff's spokeswoman says Hayes and Bagley got into an argument, which led to Bagley grabbing a pair of scissors and stabbing Hayes in the head. He managed to get the scissors away from her, but authorities say she then grabbed a knife and stabbed him in the neck.

Bagley was charged with aggravated battery with a deadly weapon. Jail records show she was released Sunday on $25,000 bail.'

UK: Tougher powers to target abusers

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A consultation to tackle violence against women in England and Wales has been announced by ministers.

It will consider applying more powers against those convicted of domestic violence, and better ways to pass information between police forces.

Ministers are also considering giving police the right to ban offenders from the family home for a fortnight.
...
Ms Smith has called for a national debate on the issue and has asked police to report back on the powers they need to get a grip on the problem.

She said the consultation may also consider sharing information on those convicted with women going into relationships.
...
Home Secretary Jacqui Smith told the BBC: "Any violence against women, inside the home, or outside the home, is unacceptable.
...
The latest Home Office figures for 2007/8 show 2.2% of women of any age said their partner used minor or severe force against them over the last year. The figure for men was slightly lower at 2.0%.'

UK: Violent partners on register

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A VICTIM of domestic abuse has welcomed proposals that would give police powers to warn women if new partners have violent histories.

Abusive partners could be placed on a register and monitored by police if a new Government plan gets the go-ahead.

...

“At least we would know about it. I think we should name and shame them.”

Home Secretary Jacqui Smith has asked Wiltshire Police chief constable Brian Moore to consider what powers police need to crack down on wife beaters.'

Wife booked with murder for hire

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A marriage gone cold and a lust for money led to a murder-for-hire plot that left a well-respected Folsom area paramedic dead, and his wife and an accomplice behind bars, authorities said Monday.

The plot, apparently in the works for months, culminated in the strangling of Mario Scramuzza Jr., 48, Friday night. St. Tammany Parish sheriff's deputies began to investigate the case Saturday morning. By Monday, the victim's wife, Gina Scramuzza, 41, and Carlos A. Rodriguez, 38, of Kenner were booked with first-degree murder.
...
The plot unraveled almost immediately, when deputies noticed inconsistencies in Gina Scramuzza's story and demeanor, Detective Sgt. George Cox said.

"She didn't act like a grieving widow," he said. During a weekend interrogation, she confessed to the killing and fingered Rodriguez as her accomplice, he said.'

UK: All work and no play is bad for boys

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An “unashamed feminist”, Tyre was brought up to worry about the achievement of girls. She was astonished to discover that it is now boys who are falling behind. “Evidence of this trend is everywhere,” she says. “People think there's something wrong with boys, but I'd say that's not necessarily true: it's what we expect of them instead.

“When you talk to boys about school, they say it's girly, that it's lots of ladies talking,” says Tyre. She argues that boys are badly served from pre-school onwards. They are not allowed to run around and not taught by enough male teachers. There has also been an educational shift away from play towards learning and targets at an earlier age.

She is convinced that reading and writing skills are the key to life and educational achievements, but says that boys are falling way behind in these skills. This is partly because they start to read later than girls, and never recover from that earlier deficit. But it is also, Tyre argues, because boys are given the wrong books to read.'

Kill my ex: Woman's murder list for her lover

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN pleaded guilty to murder yesterday as court documents revealed she gave her lover written instructions on how to kill her ex-boyfriend and dispose of his body.

"Wipe him out of existence, go somewhere two hours out, burn his body," one note read.

The Herald can reveal for the first time the events leading to the death of David Harrison, 23, who was stabbed to death in the garage of a rented Muswellbrook house in 2007.

The Victorian man's body was discovered in July 2007 in a shallow grave at Greta, bearing 35 injuries, mainly stab wounds.'

Women's shelter has kennels for pets

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LAKE CHARLES, LA (KPLC) - A local state district judge is believed to be the first in the state to utilize a new provision in the law that allows a protective order for an abused woman to be extended to the family pets. The new legal tool is expected to save not just pets but human lives too.

For many pets are truly members of the family. Statistics show women who are victims of abuse sometimes stay in abusive situations rather than leave beloved pets. But a change in the law allows orders to protect women to now include their pets.
...
The women's shelter has kennels for pets of women who seek protection there. They hope other attorneys and judges will also utilize the change in the law to protect abuse victims and their pets. Says Zilbert, "Lives will be saved both four legged and human because of the fact that protection of the pets is no longer a reason for a woman who's being abused to stay with the abuser."'

PEO grants women-only educational assistance

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Saturday, in the Kaplan Auditorium of the Henderson County Main Library, there was a fellowship of women. The Philanthropic Education Organization hosted an education fair to introduce women of all ages to the various loans, scholarships and grants the organization offers for women trying to go to school.

“We have the heart and the means to help women achieve their educational goals,” said Pauline Wickens, organizer with the state’s chapter of PEO. “What we don’t always have is visibility or accessibility to those who could benefit from our services.”'

UK: Recruiting black and women-only firefighters 'wrong' - minister

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fire Minister Sadiq Khan has ruled out a ban on white men at brigade recruitment days despite new local diversity targets being drawn up.

On a visit to Bristol he insisted that while it was vital to boost the number of female and ethnic minorities firefighters he fears the tactic employed last year by the Avon service could fuel resentment.

Officials barred white men from four of the five recruitment days held locally sparking outrage.

But Mr Khan told the Bristol Post: "The best people for the jobs should get the jobs. I don't want a situation where people are resentful.'

Obama Creates White House Women's Council

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Obama will sign an executive order tomorrow to establish a White House Council on Women and Girls, according to an administration official familiar with the move.

The Council will be chaired by Valerie Jarrett, a senior adviser and personal friend to the president, and the day-to-day operations will be run Tina Tchen, who is currently director of the White House Office of Public Liaison and was a major fundraiser for Obama during the campaign.

"The mission of the Council will be to provide a coordinated federal response to the challenges confronted by women and girls to ensure that all Cabinet and Cabinet-level agencies consider how their policies and programs impact women and families," reads a memo describing the move and obtained by The Fix.'

Obama and his team know that if he can maintain his 2008 margin among women in his reelection race in three years time, he will be sitting pretty. Expect then more symbolic moves like the establishment of the Council to demonstrate Obama's commitment to women and women's issues.

Australia: Woman 'killed man who complained about dog'

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A SYDNEY woman stabbed a man to death after he complained about her barking dog, telling him "not to speak to her dog like that", the NSW Supreme Court has been told.

Joseph Durrant, 47, was stabbed from behind after becoming involved in a late night argument about his neighbour's barking dog in Phyllis Street, Mt Pritchard, in Sydney's west.

...

Durrant then became involved in a physical struggle with Ms Whitmore, her brother Frederick Reyon Whitmore and her partner Steven Spiro Sotiropoulos, and was fatally stabbed.

Mr Whitmore and Mr Sotiropoulos are facing a joint trial in the NSW Supreme Court at which they have pleaded not guilty to his murder.

...

In his opening address today, crown prosecutor Chris Maxwell QC told the jury that Ms Whitmore had threatened to stab Durrant moments before the attack and had been seen brandishing a knife by Adam Duncan, who was attending a party next door.

"He will say that he heard Katrina saying, 'I'll stab you in the neck, personally'," Mr Maxwell told the court.'

California Club in Former Women-Only Club Space Closes

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SANTA ROSA, CA -- Body Zone Fitness, which took over the space formerly occupied by Body Central, closed its doors last week, according to the Santa Rosa Press Democrat. Body Central was the women-only club that closed a few months after a judge ruled in a lawsuit that it must admit men as members.
...
In 2003, a Santa Rosa man, Phillip Kottle, filed a complaint that he was denied a membership to Body Central because of his gender. The California Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH) said that Body Central violated California's civil rights law barring businesses from discriminating based on sex, race or religion.

The Body Central owner at the time, Shannon Hartnett, signed a settlement agreement with the DFEH in October 2004 that required her to open the club to men. She agreed to provide at least one hour of anti-discrimination training to the club's staff and agreed to get rid of all advertising that portrayed Body Central as a women-only club. Hartnett also agreed to pay Kottle $500, and the club was required to provide separate shower and locker facilities for men within two years.'

Canada: More women doctors needed

anthony · 10 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OTTAWA -- Increasing the number of women doctors might be the right prescription for a healthier population, two Canadian researchers argue in the prestigious Journal of the American Medical Association.

Taking direct aim at doctors and data suggesting women physicians don't work as hard as men, Queen's University family medicine specialist Dr. Susan Phillips and undergrad Emily Austin conclude not only do females pull their weight, "the feminization of medicine is good for health outcomes."

...

On average, women doctors do work fewer hours than men. Canada's 2007 National Physician Survey found that among all physician specialties, men put in an average 53.8 hours a week whereas women worked 47.5 hours.

Still, medical schools over the past decade have consistently welcomed more women than men. Women accounted for 57.4% of students accepted in 2007-08.

...

The way women practise strengthens this system, the authors say. Female physicians tend to spend longer with each patient, communicate better and put more stress on preventive care such as mammograms, immunizations and screening for chronic disease.

On average, women doctors do work fewer hours than men but most go into family practice, as opposed to surgery, when men dominate.'

Australia: New project to help men prevent disease launched

webdigr · 11 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A NEW project has been launched to cut the death rate in men from preventable illnesses.

Steve Trumble of the The Royal Australian College of General Practitioners said: "With lung cancer for every 100 women who die, 174 men will die.

"It is similar with emphysema and asthma.

"With suicides, 78 per cent of deaths are men and 75 per cent of transport accidents deaths are men rather than women," Associate Professor Trumble said.

"Cirrhosis of the liver, alcohol-related illnesses and skin cancers are more common in men.'

Teachers in sex scandal to undergo evaluations

anthony · 11 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BOUNTIFUL — Two teachers charged with rape in a junior high school sex scandal will be undergoing mental health evaluations, their attorneys told the Deseret News.

Both women are accused of having a sexual relationship with the same boy, beginning when he was 13.

"We want to get all the information," said Sean Druyon, the lawyer for Linda Neff. "When you look at this at first blush, here's a 40-something-year-old woman, here's a 13-year-old, almost 14-year-old boy, 'What was she thinking? She must be a pedophile.' That's not always the case."
...
"I think there's some psychological issues," he said Tuesday. "The kid is clearly a victim, but I think these ladies were somewhat vulnerable."'

UK: Male suicide tops mental health bill

anthony · 11 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tackling the staggeringly high level of suicides among young men was top of the agenda at a conference on men's mental health in Calcot yesterday.

Suicide is one of the biggest killers of young men, who are four times more likely to commit suicide than young women, and every minute there are two deaths by suicide in Britain.

In the past six years, 6,729 men aged between 15 and 34 have killed themselves in the UK.

Key speakers stressed the importance of raising awareness of the signs of depression in young men and highlighted a training programme for therapists at the Charlie Waller Institute at The University of Reading, which aims to help reduce the numbers of young men taking their own lives.'

THE MO'KELLY REPORT: The 'Other' Side of Domestic Violence Coin

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yes, violence against men is the “other side,” the less talked about side and often the more controversial side of domestic violence. The prevailing question is “At what point is a man ‘allowed’ to use force in the defense of himself?” Let this story be a perfect example of how to handle oneself.

The boyfriend was cut in the cheek but nowhere in any published report has Mo’Kelly found any mention of him striking her back.

Good for him. No…GREAT for him.

This is another teachable moment my African-American brothers. Really take a closer look here.

For his trouble and good sense…she’s the one in jail, not him. He is enjoying his freedom and she will languish in jail until their court date, whenever that may finally be. If he hits her (self-defense or not), they both are likely arrested and it then devolves into a situation of her word against his, her injuries versus his.

Do understand, from what we know about this case, it seems the boyfriend would have been well within his “right” to inflict bodily harm on the woman. When a person is charged with aggravated battery with a deadly weapon, defending oneself is probably in order. Not only that, judging by the lack of wounds in the above mugshot, Ngeskebei was the likely aggressor.

To bring this full circle once again…the boyfriend likely could have also responded with violence, a weapon of some sort and the only result is both parties are arrested and someone possibly ends up dead.

It’s likely that the boyfriend along with an injured face has an injured ego. Any woman who hits a man is out to emasculate as well as injure. Ending up in The Mo’Kelly Report because your woman tried to kill you is not a boost to a man’s ego, you can best believe.'

L.A. County Jail Overcrowding: Women serve just 10% of their sentence while men serve 70%

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Roughly 32,000 women pass through the women's jail system annually at the Century Regional Detention Facility in Lynwood, Bobb reported. It is a modern 1990s jail facility with cells built around a small central area that houses about 2,200 inmates daily.

...

Because of jail overcrowding, most women serve just 10% of their sentences -- compared to slightly less than 70% for men. Overcrowding has forced the department to immediately release "any inmate whose sentence is less than 180 days," Bobb wrote.'

Binghamton University paper: Share some responsibility, women need condoms too

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine that a woman gets up in front of a group of other women and says that women don't need men, men are stupid, men are useless and women don't need men because women are better than that. That's OK, she would be on "The View," "Oprah" and everything in between. She would be a star. Now imagine the same scenario only it's a man doing the talking and saying the same things — men don't need women, men are smarter, better, blah blah blah. What would be the reaction? He wouldn't be on "The View" anytime soon, that's for sure. But the outrage would definitely be memorable. Women are allowed to call themselves better than men and they are considered strong and confident, but a man says he is better than a woman and he's a pig.'

'Real Housewife' Charged with Assault

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'One of the stars of reality TV show "The Real Housewives of New York" has been arrested after allegedly assaulting her boyfriend.

Kelly Killoren Bensimon, 40, one of six housewives featured in the hit series, was arrested last week and charged with misdemeanor assault after her lover Nicholas Stefanov accused her of punching him during an altercation on Tuesday.

...

Stefanov says in a statement to the New York Daily News, "What are you supposed to do when a girl is hitting you, just sit there like a punching bag? If I had hit her, I'd be sitting in a jail cell right now."'

Queens woman's playground rape horror a hoax, police say

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A waitress trying to cover up an affair fabricated a story about getting raped in a deserted Queens playground Wednesday, police said.

The 32-year-old woman told cops she finished her shift at an East Elmhurst diner just after 4 a.m., and was followed by two men near 98th St. and 25th Ave.

They hit her over the head, dragged her to a playground adjacent to Public School 27 and sexually assaulted her, she claimed.

But detectives, who combed the playground and checked surveillance tapes, uncovered holes in the alleged victim's time line and determined that her story was false.

A source said the married woman was drunk when she left her workplace - which was actually a strip joint - and came home disheveled.

Confronted by her husband, she came up with the rape tale.

In reality, the source said, she was having an affair with an ex-flame she met while bartending.'

UK: False rape claim - woman jailed

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A WOMAN who falsely claimed to have been raped has been jailed.

Lauren Chaffey, aged 21, of Huddersfield Road, Newhey, admitted perverting the course of justice when she appeared at Bolton Crown Court.

Today (Wednesday) she was sentenced to five months in prison.

Chaffey claimed to have been out with friends in March last year when she was introduced to a man who later raped her.

As a result an innocent man spent almost 24 hours in custody while police investigated the allegation.'

Alaska mother implicated in infant's disappearance

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A woman who reported her baby missing is accused of orchestrating the disappearance, which triggered Alaska's first fully initiated Amber Alert.

Elisa LaCroix, 20, is charged with making a false abduction report. In January, she was charged with falsely accusing an ex-boyfriend of raping her close to her due date.

LaCroix was out on bail on the earlier case when she was arrested Sunday after 3-week-old Ethan LaCroix was found unharmed at Fort Richardson in the custody of Amelia Cameron.
...
"This was an act of desperation by a mother who knows she's already in trouble," Butler said. "She's young and under lots of pressure right now and, quite frankly, made some mental errors in judgment. This was not a malicious act."
...
In that case, LaCroix accused Rothacher of beating her and raping her at knifepoint, then "staging the scene," according to Parker. Rothacher — also a Fort Richardson soldier heading to Afghanistan — was arrested on suspicion of domestic violence sexual assault, but was ultimately exonerated by the police investigation.'

Bristol rape accused: False claim made my life hell

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A recovering addict from Bristol was driven back to drink and drugs after being accused of a rape he did not commit.

Robert Bosley said he struggled to cope with the stigma of being a suspected sex offender.

As previously reported by the Bristol Post, the 38-year-old's former partner Mandy Whittle, falsely accused him of rape for reasons known only to her.

She later admitted making it up and last week was jailed for eight months for perverting the course of justice.
...
Meanwhile Mr Bosley was arrested, put in a cell under constant watch, and subjected to a physical examination by a woman police doctor, having been refused a male nurse, which he said made him feel "violated".
...
"Crying rape is just an evil thing to do. To me it's just as bad as doing it."'

Two Women Charged With Falsely Reporting Rape on East End

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After finding money missing from her wallet, a Shirley woman accused a man of rape and her friend from Mastic who was with her corroborated the allegedly false accusation, an investigation revealed on Friday, Feb. 20, Southampton Town Police say.

Caitlin Bolte, 23, called in the rape from outside the Speonk home where she was visiting friends and upon the officers' arrival, she was found sitting in a car parked out front with Kelly Kling, 22. Bolte told investigators that one of the men in the house took her to his bedroom, raped and sexually assaulted her and she then identified the man she accused, according to Southampton detectives. Kling told investigators the same account and Bolte was evaluated at Peconic Bay Medical Center, authorities add.'

False rape accuser gets 45 days for not following probation order

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 19-year-old woman recently placed on probation for misleading Owen Sound police into investigating her bogus rape allegations was sentenced to 45 days in jail for twice failing to comply with her probation order.

April Ibbotson, of no fixed address, pleaded guilty Thursday in the Ontario Court of Justice to failing to report to her probation officer between Jan. 8 and Jan. 23, then to breaching the order again Jan. 15 to Jan. 23 by living somewhere without first obtaining approval from her probation officer.

Ibbotson also spent 14 days in presentence custody.

In January she pleaded guilty to mischief by making false allegations that she'd twice been raped by a black man. She also pleaded guilty to failing to attend court.

A few weeks after her false accusations, a black man was beaten and stabbed downtown after being falsely accused of rape hours earlier.

The Crown attorney said at Ibbotson original sentencing Jan. 8 that he wasn't blaming Ibbotson for anyone getting hurt. Instead, he blamed "the rumour mill in downtown Owen Sound." She also spent 58 days in pre-plea custody on those charges.'

Obama's first cover-up: the gender wage gap myth

Matt · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was House Speaker Nancy Pelosi who engineered the recent passage of the Lilly Ledbetter Act. And just a few weeks ago Rep. George Miller of California made the red-meat assertion that women earn "78 cents for every dollar that is earned by a man doing the same job with the same responsibilities."

Democrats call it as the "gender wage gap," but I prefer to think of it as the "scare-the-female-electorate-into-submission" ploy.
...
In its foreword, the Department of Labor concluded, "this study leads to the unambiguous conclusion that the differences in compensation of men and women are the result of a multitude of factors." The DoL added this parting comment: "the raw wage gap continues to be used in misleading ways to advance public policy agendas:"
...
The report was finalized on January 12, 2009 and then posted on the Department of Labor website. But within a few days the document disappeared without a trace.'

Obama signs exective order creating Council on Women and Girls

Matt · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A little while ago the President signed an Executive Order to ensure there is always an eye kept on how every government agency is addressing the challenges confronted by women of all ages. The White House Council on Women and Girls will be chaired by Senior Advisor Valerie Jarrett, with Director of Public Liaison Tina Tchen serving as Executive Director, and will made up of Cabinet Secretaries and other top White House staff. It will begin its work immediately by asking each agency to analyze their current status and ensure that they are focused internally and externally on women.'

N.O.W. couldn't be happier. Their press release is here.

"Shooter deliberately targeted women" - or did he?

Matt · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Smiling happily for the camera, these are three of the teenage girls shot dead by a crazed gunman at a German school.
...
Authorities believe he deliberately targeted women as 11 of his 16 victims were female.
...
All three teachers were women and eight of the children were girls. More than a dozen other teachers and pupils were injured.'

I commented to the article as follows. Doubt it'll get published, but here it is:

'Before a claim that he was targeting females over males can be made, you have to ask yourself what the male:female ratio of students is in the school. Here in the US our last couple of birth cohorts have been markedly female. As many as 70% of our college students are female. In some counties especially in northern states in the US, the M:F ratio is 1:3 in high schools. So jumping to conclusions about the shooter's gender-based murder preferences here is a bad idea.

Food for thought: if most of his victims were male, would anyone be talking about that? If the shooter were female and most victims male, would anyone suggest she specifically targeted boys?'

Doubtless some casual visitors to MANN will interpret my posting as a defense of the boy's behavior. Nothing could be further from the truth. What I am criticizing is the authorities/press' tendency to jump to these kinds of conclusions without a discussion of the facts that may or may not support the claim. As for the shooter, well, he was a little monster and he earned his death at the hands of the police.

Oh yeah, notice there are no pictures of the male victims of the shooter anywhere in these stories? Guess they're not as important as the female victims.

Robert Bly events at the University of Minnesota

Matt · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Dear MensActivism,

It is with great pleasure that I announce two exciting events sponsored by the University of Minnesota Libraries.

First, there is an exhibit showcasing materials from the Robert Bly Papers held by the University of Minnesota. The exhibit is running now through May 9, 2009. You may view this dynamic exhibit at the Elmer L. Andersen Library on the West Bank of the University of Minnesota. For directions and more information on the exhibit, please go to: http://blog.lib.umn.edu/lib-web/events/2009/01/the_pen_still_moves_freely_rob_1.html.

In addition, there will be a creative and artistic conference entitled Robert Bly In This World which will be held April 16-19, 2009 on the West Bank of the University of Minnesota, as well. Here a link to that website: http://staff.lib.umn.edu/communications/bly2009/. Complete registration information is included on the site. There are also links to print out promotional flyers for circulation to spread the word about this exciting event.

We hope you will be able to take advantage of these once-in-a-lifetime opportunities to celebrate Robert Bly's life and career, while also experiencing Robert's and others' performances of his poetry. Please let me know if you would like more information; and if you have any questions on either of these offerings, feel free to contact me. We look forward to seeing you here!

Best regards,

Archivist for the Robert Bly Papers

Mayor Bloomberg Launches the New York City Commission On Women's Issues

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mayor Bloomberg Launches the New York City Women's Resource Network as Part of Women's History Month Celebration!

On Thursday, March 5, 2009, Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg announced the launch of the NYC Women's Resource Network, a free, online, searchable database of over one thousand nonprofit organizations and government agencies that provide a variety of services to women and families in New York City.'

Obama’s New ‘Council on Women’ Seen As Vehicle to Promote Feminist Agenda

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama on Wednesday created a new bureaucracy to deal with women’s health, domestic violence and economic security. But some conservatives fear the new council will actively promote the feminist agenda in the government.

...

“It’s a political payback for feminists,” Crouse told CNSNews.com. “There is no question what is coming down the pike. Women voted for him, 56 percent to 44 percent.”

...

According to the White House, the council will work directly with the departments of State, Treasury, Defense, Justice, Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, Health and Human Services, Housing and Urban Development, Transportation, Energy, Education, Veterans Affairs, Homeland Security, the ambassador to the United Nations, the Office of Management and Budget, the Council of Economic Advisors, the National Economic Council, and the Domestic Policy Council.'

"We are now what I like to call 'a woman's nation.'"

anthony · 12 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON - President Barack Obama invoked his grandmother, his single mother and his two young daughters on Wednesday in creating a White House panel to advise him on issues facing women and girls.
...
Obama cited statistic to back up his case: Women earn just 78 cents for every dollar men make; 1 in 4 women still experiences domestic violence; women are 49 percent of the work force but only 3 percent of Fortune 500 chiefs.
...
Advocates praised the new panel. The National Women's Law Center applauded the move but added that more needed to be done. California first lady Maria Shriver, who is working with the Center for American Progress on a report on women's issues, said the move was a reminder that "we are now what I like to call 'a woman's nation."'

Insemination fight ends in wife's arrest

Matt · 13 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Bizarre. Wonder where this fits into "The Duluth Model". It's probably all the brother's fault. Anyway, story here. Excerpt:

'PITTSFIELD — A woman who allegedly intended to artificially inseminate her wife with her brother's semen has been charged with domestic assault and battery.
...
Jennifer A. Lighten, 33, told police that Stephanie Lighten, her wife, was "all liquored up" when she returned to their Lincoln Street apartment, where the defendant then allegedly tried to use a syringe to inseminate her, according to a police report.

According to a report by Pittsfield Police Officer Kipp D. Steinman: "Jennifer said that Stephanie had a 'turkey baster and her brother's semen in a sealed container.' Jennifer said she told Stephanie that she didn't want to get pregnant." The device was actually a large syringe with a catheter tip, police said, and it was still in its original package when officers confiscated the item.

That's allegedly when Stephanie threw Jennifer on the couch, grabbed at her clothes and threatened to impregnate her, police said.
...
Detective Thomas H. Harrington said Jennifer Lighten declined "to go forward with charges of assault with intent to rape" because she did not believe "Stephanie was going to sexually assault her with the syringe." However, Harrington informed the alleged victim that attempted rape charges could be filed if she changes her mind.'

World Net Daily: 'Barack against the boys'

anthony · 13 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Barack, however, has it backward: It is boys, not girls, who lag behind – and have for decades.

The 1972 federal law Title IX saw billions funneled into sex-based affirmative action programs. Schools – primary, secondary, tertiary – were feminized and boys demonized. The very system Obama has just reinvigorated has already instituted what Dr. Bruce Perry, a Houston neurologist, calls a "biologically disrespectful model of education." Disrespectful to boys. "Girl behavior [has] become the gold standard," seconds psychologist Michael Thompson, Ph.D., coauthor of "Raising Cain: Protecting the Emotional Lives of Boys": "Boys are treated like defective girls.

And when the defective "suffer" bouts of boyness – competitiveness, aggression, hyperactivity – they are punished, or medicated.'

Pilot project aims to let boys be boys – and excel

anthony · 13 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'St. Thomas School in Waterdown wants to get its boys excited about reading. By doing so, school and Hamilton-Wentworth Catholic District School Board officials hope they can boost the primary boys' literacy scores and assist in closing the 20 per cent reading gap identified between genders.

But while the test scores ranked above the board and provincial averages, broken down, the results indicate a reading gap between the school's boys and girls. "All my girls are at an A level in reading and most of my boys are at a B level," explained principal Michael Goffredo. "They are doing well, but there is a gap, a 20 per cent gap."
...

"We decided that we have to change the way we teach," said Goffredo. Implementing two strategies in each Junior Kindergarten to Grade 3 classroom, teachers have restructured their lessons to target boys and further engage them.

Boys, explained Goffredo, tend to appreciate shorter lessons. "Boys like bite-size, digestible and time-limited activities," he said. At St. Thomas, 40-minute lessons have been broken down to allow for brisk, well-paced lessons.'

Behind that familiar face, the crisis of men and boys

anthony · 13 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By coincidence, on the same day this week's shootings occurred, President Obama signed an executive order creating the White House Council on Women and Girls to ensure they are "treated fairly all matters of public policy." There are still many reasons why special care should be taken to ensure that women aren't discriminated against in the workplace, that domestic violence is treated as a serious problem and that girls get the same educational opportunies as boys.

'But this is not our only gender-specific problem. Sometime this year, for the first time in history, the number of American women drawing a paycheck will exceed that of men. This doesn't mean that women suddenly are doing a lot better. It means that men are being disproportionally affected by the economic downturn and are doing a lot worse.

Whether the current economy bothered McClendon at all is uncertain; he seems to have quit a couple of jobs by choice. Like most of his brethren, however, there's a familiar dead-end quality to the outlines of his story.

Even more so in hard times than the boom years, we urgently need to understand the psyches behind these easy-to-forget faces. We need to figure out how young men like these can gain a sense of self-worth, the lack of which becomes so abundantly obvious only after it has taken its toll. Maybe we need a White House Council on Men and Boys.'

Sharma Howard: Lack of positive male role models is very disturbing

anthony · 13 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ninety-five percent of crimes are committed by men, that's a fact every man has to confront — that violence is mainly male, but at the same time, 95 percent of men aren't violent. So, yes, men commit violence, but it's a small percent, your son has to know both those things," Thompson said to me.

And while men and boys get more air time in movies and on TV — 70 percent more than girls — they also are frequently cast as the instigator or troublemaker.

Couple that with the lack of nurturing adult males depicted in TV and movies and you begin to wonder what that impact has on these boys who will one day be fathers themselves.

"There's a serious dearth of both sympathetic and competent fathers in TV and movies, the best we can do is 'Two and a Half Men,' and these are well-meaning bumbler dads," Thompson notes.
...
Female teachers need to avoid approaching boys with a "reformist" mindset, he said, which is woven into our culture of parenting boys.'

Ed. note: Her heart's in the right place but she's wrong about the 95%-of-crimes-are-commited statistic.

Advice Goddess Blog: 'Um, What About The Men And Boys?'

anthony · 13 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I've heard horrific stories of men being denied access to their children after a divorce, of boys getting harsh punishments that are not applied by schools or the legal system to girls, and I've seen scholarship and fellowship programs for women and minorities where guys, especially white guys, can't get in.

We don't fight discrimination with discrimination -- and while I am not for "councils" of this kind to begin with, I'm disgusted that the president thinks it's a good thing to come out with a council for women and girls when there are vast problems men and boys are dealing with.
...
Then again, if you really want to change things, to really improve life for a great number of people (especially children), how about coming up with a Council Against Single Motherhood, including rich, largely white women, who are selfish, me-first/children's needs second "single mothers by choice"?'

'Hoodies, louts, scum': how media demonises teenage boys

Broadsword · 15 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The portrayal of teenage boys as "yobs" in the media has made the boys wary of other teenagers, according to new research.

Figures show more than half of the stories about teenage boys in national and regional newspapers in the past year (4,374 out of 8,629) were about crime. The word most commonly used to describe them was "yobs" (591 times), followed by "thugs" (254 times), "sick" (119 times) and "feral" (96 times).

Other terms often used included "hoodie", "louts", "heartless", "evil" "frightening", "scum", "monsters", "inhuman" and "threatening".
...

"We found some news coverage where teen boys were described in glowing terms – 'model student', 'angel', 'altar boy' or 'every mother's perfect son'," the research concluded, "but sadly these were reserved for teenage boys who met a violent and untimely death."

"Oven Pride - So Easy a Man Can Do It"

Proud_to_be_a_man · 15 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The advert features a couple who are straight out of a 1970's sitcom - she's a sour-faced battle-axe in training and he's a simpering emasculated idiot. Their relationship is so loving that they can barely bring themselves to look at each other. So instead they take part in a bizarre silent and deeply menacing gurning competition.

There she stands - hands on hip, desperately trying to suck her lips clean off her face - as a statuesque representation of womankind's disgust at the inadequacies of men. Whilst he fidgets uneasily on his stool, presumably because he's so idiotic he's put his underpants on the wrong way."

I just saw this ad on TV and HAD to post about it. It's unbelievable.

Women as breadwinners: The great American role reversal?

anthony · 15 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Speaking of households being turned upside down, you probably saw Sunday's NWjobs article about men being laid off at a far more rapid rate than women. As Patrick May of the San Jose Mercury News reports, in an increasing number of households, women are being thrust into the role of main breadwinner and laid-off men are stepping into the role of househusband or stay-at-home dad.
...
"Since the recession began in December 2007, more than 80 percent of those laid off have been men, thanks to their disproportionate slice of jobs in hard-hit fields such as construction and manufacturing..."

And while it's typical for more men to lose their jobs during a recession than women, May's article points out that this is the highest unemployment gender gap the country has seen during the past 25 years.'

Ireland: Unemployment could lead to rise in male crime

anthony · 15 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ireland could face social unrest and higher crime rates following a massive surge in unemployment among men in their early 20s, a leading economist has warned.
...
Men in their early twenties have experienced a threefold increase in unemployment, a more pronounced rise than any other age group, driven by the collapse in the building industry. One in five men in this age bracket were out of work in the three months to November, according to the latest Quarterly National Household Survey.

O'Neill believes society is ignoring the plight of men who opted out of further education in favour of earning huge wages in bricklaying, carpentry and other trades during the boom. Some 82,000 men who were working in construction in January 2007 left school without sitting their Leaving Cert exams.'

UK Times: Jobless Men 'Prematurely Retired Racing Dogs'

anthony · 15 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was bound to happen. Since the scythe of recession got swinging, newly jobless men have been shuffling around Britain's town centres on weekday mornings like prematurely retired racing dogs. You can spot them nervously sipping cappuccinos or hanging in morose little groups outside the local hardware shop. Watching them on the treadmills — literally going nowhere — is depressing. They have gone from power lunches to power shakes, from Bloomberg monitors to MTV, from having a ball to being in danger of losing theirs. And that's only for an hour or two each day at the gym — what are they doing with the rest of their time?'

Harvard Crimson: 'Men Are Dogs'

anthony · 15 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Framing safe heterosexual intercourse in the language of “men are dogs—protect yourself!” constructs a hypothetical, collective female vulnerability that deprives women of agency in their sexual encounters. Rather than empowering women, it establishes a paradigm in which women are victims of men’s animalistic urges. In reality, men are not the sole indulgers in promiscuity. This characterization assumes that men are infidels and that women are their perpetual victims, when this is by no means a universal truth. Forced sexual encounters are tragic occurrences that will erode sexual equality as long as they persist, but to establish the lying, cheating beau as the norm in sexual relationships is regressive and destructive. It instills a resignation that a dishonest scoundrel is all a heterosexual woman should hope for, when, in reality, any woman who writes off all men in one fell swoop is probably a bit of a dog herself.'

UK: Girls School Launches Appeal To Prevent Redevelopment Of Boys School

anthony · 15 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Last summer, Langley Park School for Girls and the neighbouring Langley Park School for Boys became locked in a dispute over a large-scale development at the boy's school.

Bromley Council originally agreed to a complete overhaul of the boys' school's facilities in June, but the neighbouring girls' school tried to overturn that decision at the High Court.

And, even though a High Court judge ruled against the challenge last month, the council says the girls' school is now considering launching an appeal.
...
Cllr Noad said: "The actions of the girls' school are not based on planning grounds as was proven in the High Court, rather they are designed to wreck the scheme and they hope that funding will be withdrawn. They seem to be against the rebuild in principle.
...
Mr Grimble added: "We do not accept that the girls' school, or any other party, has, or attempts to exercise, any right of way across any part of our land and, consequently, we view this as another attempt by the girls' school to derail the much needed redevelopment of our school.'

Review finds boys were regularly restrained

anthony · 15 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An independent review into allegations of abuse at a school for boys with behavioural problems has found that pupils were restrained on a routine basis.

The local authority-commissioned report found that staff at Gatehouse residential school in Milton Keynes used restraint as a "first resort", instead of attempting to deal with pupil behaviour using alternative methods.

Pupils were also locked in classrooms frequently. One parent complained that a teacher punched their son in the stomach.

Teachers said that both the deputy and head teacher subjected them to intimidation and bullying.'

Boys group home appeals decision to shut it down

anthony · 15 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A group home for teenage boys in Columbiana will appeal the city's council decision to shut it down, City Clerk Gina Antonili said Monday.

The council voted Feb. 17 not to grant a business license to the Fortress Group Home on Mildred Street. The home opened in late 2007 and houses boys 14 to 19 who are wards of the state.

A public hearing will be held to discuss the home's future Monday, March 16 at 6 p.m. at City Hall. People for and against the home will be allowed to speak, Mayor Allan Lowe said.

Those against the home say the children there are unruly. Mayor Lowe said he's received numerous complaints about Fortress. He also said several of the teens there have had run-ins with Columbiana police officers.'

Former New York Teacher Rearrested in 'Affair' With Teen Day After Sentencing

anthony · 15 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MINEOLA, New York — A former high school teacher in New York has been rearrested a day after being sentenced for having a long-running affair with a 16-year-old student.
...
The 25-year-old was first arrested in March. She pleaded guilty to sexual misconduct and was awaiting an August sentencing.

Prosecutors got a tip Kennedy was still meeting with the boy and began watching her. The victim also admitted having sex with Kennedy five times since her guilty plea.'

Australia: Men's help group loses funding for suicide prevention

anthony · 16 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SUICIDE rates in the Clarence Valley could rise because of a Federal Government decision not to continue funding a men's suicide prevention group.

Dads in Distress (DIDS) was founded nine years ago by Coffs Harbour man Tony Miller to help guide men through traumatic experiences. In 2001, Grafton became just the second city in NSW to start a DIDS support group.

Local co-ordinators have run DIDS support group meetings in an effort to help Clarence Valley men deal with any type of stressful situation that may lead to suicide or depression.
...
“The thing that amazes me is that the Government has announced a national men's health policy and here's a group that works to prevent male suicide and they're just letting it go,” he said.'

Australia: Woman jailed for only two years for killing husband

anthony · 16 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Melbourne woman who shot dead her husband and lied about it for seven years, has been sentenced to five years in jail.
...
Margaret Uttley killed her husband Stephen Uttley on their Tarneit farm nine years ago, when he came home drunk late at night wielding a gun, and threatened to shoot her.

The court heard they struggled, and she accidentally shot him in the head.

The court heard she burnt his body and lied about the killing for seven years.

But she pleaded guilty to manslaughter earlier this month in the opening stages of her trial for murder.

She will serve a non-parole period of two years.'

New service helps men cope with divorce

anthony · 16 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When we as a society think of divorce recovery, we tend to think of women as being the more vulnerable gender needing the most help getting through the divorce. While women may be more sensitive to some things, men, too, can be knocked down by an emotional blow of divorce.

Care for women struggling with divorce has been covered thus far in the series, but what about men? Do they need the same kind of help that women do, if at all? Are men as much the victim in the emotional destruction as are the women?

...

“The reality is that suicide rates are up to 10 times higher in men who are separated or divorced compared with those who are still in a relationship. Men who don’t commit suicide are often depressed, but they cover up the depression by quickly remarrying to fill the void,” Kamaria said. “These men also tend to overwork, drink or gamble too much and since 67 percent of second and 74 percent of third marriages end in divorce, remarriage is not a solution.”

Suicide prevention difficult at Niagara falls

anthony · 16 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most attempted suicides at the falls, Gromosiak found, are young men between the ages of 20 and 40.

Of all attempted suicides, 71 per cent are men. Twenty per cent of suicides occur at the Horseshoe Falls.

On the American side, several suicide prevention measures have been implemented near the falls.

Several emergency suicide hotline phones are installed at Niagara Falls, N. Y. State Park.

The phones are linked directly to the county's Suicide Prevention Service.

There are no such phones on the Canadian side, but that doesn't mean they might not appear in the future.

"It's a good idea and it is something we can consider," Kane said.'

HIV awareness fair offers free testing for only women and girls

anthony · 16 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'San Mateo County will host an HIV awareness health fair today in Redwood City offering local women and girls free private risk-reduction counseling and HIV tests with near-immediate results.
...
According to the county, a quarter of all new HIV infections occur in women. More than 80 percent are black women or Hispanic women. AIDS is now the leading cause of death for black women between 25 and 34 years old, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

In addition to counseling and testing, the event will also include information on domestic violence and drug prevention. A photo exhibit, "I am," will be on display at the event, profiling county residents affected by HIV and AIDS.'

Media trashes breadwinning-dads with Parenting Magazine's 'Mad at Dad' Survey

anthony · 16 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Alarming percentages of moms are angry at dads on a regular basis." "Hell hath no fury like a mommy scorned." "Moms are angry about dad's role."

These are some of the headlines which greeted Parenting Magazine's new "Mad at Dad" survey which found that 31% of mothers get "little or no help" with childcare and 46% of mothers "get irate with their husbands once a week or more." The New York Times called the survey "disturbing," while a Washington Post columnist announced that mothers are "literally killing themselves."

Mothers who are dissatisfied might want to examine their own behavior as well as that of their husbands. Studies reported in the Journal of Family Psychology in June, 2008 and the Journal of Marriage and the Family in 1999 show that mothers are generally the gatekeepers of fathers' involvement with their kids. If she criticizes or insists that any way that isn't her way is wrong, dad will often withdraw. But if she stands aside and lets him parent, he usually does.

Another problem with Parenting's survey is that they only queried mothers - a poor method to judge what fathers do or don't do. For example, a 2002 Rand Graduate School study of father involvement found that "the failure to incorporate both parties' (i.e. mothers' and fathers') perspectives may lead to inaccurate, inappropriate…conclusions."'

Woman charged in stabbing of ex-boyfriend and his sister

anthony · 16 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LAWRENCE - Police arrested a Lawrence woman early yesterday and charged her with stabbing her ex-boyfriend and his sister.

Rosemary Nieves, 24, of 125 Jackson St., was charged with two counts of assault by means of a dangerous weapon.
...
Nieves said Edwin Rodriguez walked to the porch and kicked in her bedroom window after she told him it was not a good time to remove things from the apartment.

At that point, Nieves said, she grabbed her car keys and opened up a two-and-a-half-inch metal folding knife and stabbed Edwin several times in the forearm, Officer Todd Allard wrote in his report.'

American Taliban part one: School boys

anthony · 16 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 1991, the prestigious, but goofy, American Association of University Women (AAUW) made a startling declaration: ‘Most girls emerge from adolescence with a poor self image.’ Researchers, all female, informed the body politic that the primary culprit here was the public school system in America. No one seemed to notice that at the time this assertion was loosed upon us that 85% of all public school teachers were women.

Consequently, after much ripping of garments and public self-flagellation, Congress passed the 1994 Gender Equity in Education Act which officially categorized girls as an ‘under-served-population,’ placing American womanhood on a par with other discriminated against minorities. Millions of dollars flowed into the coffers of thought-control institutions so they could look deeply into this heart-of-darkness. In 1995, at the UN 4th World Conference on Women, held in Beijing, the American delegation, chaired by Secretary of State Madelyn Albright, laid bare the educational and psychological deficits of American girls as a pressing human rights issue.

Human rights issue? Hard data from the U.S. Department of Education (DOE) and from several recent university studies show that far from being shy and demoralized, today's girls outshine boys. Girls get better grades. They have higher educational aspirations. They follow a more rigorous academic program and participate more in the prestigious Advanced Placement (AP) program. Furthermore, the DOE reports that in 1996 there were 8.4 million women but only 6.7 million men enrolled in college. It also shows women holding on to and improving this advantage well into the next decade. According to one department prediction, by 2010 there will be 10.2 million women in college and 6.9 million men.'

RADAR ALERT: Tell Rep. Poe: The SAFE Act Could Bankrupt America

Matt · 16 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

In introducing H.R. 739, the SAFE ("Security and Financial Empowerment"), Representatives Lucille Roybal-Allard (D-CA) and Ted Poe (R-TX), claim the law is needed to combat workplace discrimination against victims of domestic violence. A 1998 General Accounting Office study, however, casts doubt on whether workplace discrimination is really a problem. The GAO reported, "we cannot conclude that being a victim of domestic violence changes the likelihood that a woman will work."

Furthermore, section 303 of the bill says: "An employer shall not fail to hire, refuse to hire, discharge, or harass" a person who claims to be a victim of partner abuse. Thus, the SAFE Act would require employers to provide lifetime job security to alleged victims of abuse. According to an analysis released by RADAR today, the employment entitlement will cost companies $28.8 billion a year. See our analysis here (.pdf file).

The SAFE Act would also require companies to provide health insurance, 30 days emergency leave, and unemployment insurance, and would make it harder for employers to terminate workers. Any employee at risk of being laid-off could simply assert victim status, whether true or not (a dirty little secret about the American legal system is that perjury is almost never prosecuted). Eventually, employers will become reluctant to hire new employees and will be less adept at responding to marketplace opportunities, leaving companies in a European-style stagnation.

Rep. Poe is out of step with the Republican party on this one. Please fill out this flyer (.pdf file) asking him to withdraw his support of the bill and fax it to his office (202-225-5547).

If H.R. 739 isn't stopped, it could bankrupt America.

++
Date of RADAR Release: March 16, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/

Washington, DC HIV infection rate at 3% -- black men have it the worst

Matt · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At least 3 percent of District residents have HIV or AIDS, a total that far surpasses the 1 percent threshold that constitutes a "generalized and severe" epidemic, according to a report scheduled to be released by health officials tomorrow.
...
"Our rates are higher than West Africa," said Shannon L. Hader, director of the District's HIV/AIDS Administration, who once led the Federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's work in Zimbabwe. "They're on par with Uganda and some parts of Kenya."
...
...Black men, with an infection rate of nearly 7 percent, carry the weight of the disease, according to the report, which also underscores that the District's HIV and AIDS population is aging. Almost 1 in 10 residents between the ages of 40 and 49 has the virus.'

Wonder if, like in San Mateo County, the free HIV testing and other services bound to emerge after this report will also only allow women and girls through the door.

"Indoctinate U" reviewed by CNN's Lou Dobbs

Matt · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Interview here. CNN's Lou Dobbs gave a ringing endorsement of Indoctrinate U on last night's show. Saying the film was "terrific" Dobbs added, "I can't recommend it highly enough." He closed by recommending that viewers "get this documentary. It's extraordinary."

Courts ill-equipped to handle parental alienation

Matt · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Toronto lawyer Brian Ludmer speaks about the suffering caused by parental alienation, the words come from his head and his heart.

He's seen the devastation of a mother's orchestrated campaign to make her children hate their father, or how a dad can use a 4-year-old as a weapon against his mother in the ugly aftermath of divorce.

Ludmer is, by training, a corporate lawyer. But he's being "swamped" by desperate parents looking for help reconnecting with their children. "Experts in this field will tell you that they've never met a lawyer who understands this the way that I do," says Ludmer.

That's because he's also lived it.

"Parental alienation is a plague. It's rampant out there," says Ludmer, 48, who declined to talk about his own case for fear of upsetting his children. "This stuff has been going on for a hundred years. It's just that now it has a name."'

Marine free after conviction tossed out

Matt · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After spending a decade behind bars, a former Camp Pendleton Marine is now a free man because a military appeals court ruled that “a muddled, hearsay-based case” caused his spousal-rape conviction.

But anyone who thinks Brian Foster is bitter would be wrong. As Foster left the prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., on Feb. 20, he picked up his sergeant stripes and spoke candidly with his superiors.

“I told (them) I was happy to be back in the Marine Corps and that I'll go anywhere and do anything the Marine Corps wants me to,” Foster, 35, said during a phone interview yesterday from Belton, Mo. “I said I love my country and I love the Marine Corps and that unfortunately, these things happen in a free country.”'

Maine town gripped by "new witch hunt" - false rape allegations and summary arrests

Matt · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 1690's New England was gripped by the Witch Hunt Hysteria which destroyed the lives of countless innocent people and their families solely by the false testimony of their accusers and the misconduct of their prosecutors.

Today, over 300 years later, a new insidious Rape Hysteria grips a small community in Maine's Bar Harbor region, and again, countless lives are being ruined solely by false testimony of their accusers and the misconduct of their prosecutors.

Numerous men have been arrested and jailed in Ellsworth Maine, often solely because of someone's accusations. Some of the accused men spend many months in jail until they are finally tried on the flimsiest or even fabricated evidence. Virtually every man who is accused gets arrested, charged, and has his life publicly ruined.

The accusers are sometimes young, mentally or emotionally impaired, girlfriends, occasional sex partners, and even wives in bitter custody battles with their husbands.

In a small county of only 50,000 people, as many as 4 men per month have been indicted on multiple counts of Rape, each carrying up to 30 years in prison.'

Glenn Sacks: 2 Action Alerts, Fathers & Families Supporters Help Move Comparable Parenting Bill Forward

Matt · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Newsletter here. Alerts:

Action Alert: Tell Nationally-Syndicated Talk Show Host Neal Boortz That Dads Aren't Deadbeats

Massachusetts Action Alert--We Need Activists to Attend MA. Democratic Party Platform Hearings

Outrageous... Father in Parenting Magazine Pic with Dart Through his Forehead georgemaxwell · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Magazine: Parenting School Years Magazine
Issue: February, 2009
Pages: 94 - 100.
Article URL: http://www.parenting.com/article/Mom/Relationships/Mad-at-Dad

Author: Martha Brockenbrough
Authors web site: http://www.marthabee.com/

I received my issue of Parenting Magazine today and was I mad over the article “Mad about Dad.” Check the web site (above) to see a picture of a smiling dad on a dart board. After several “misses” (holes in the picture) the final shot lands right in the middle of his forehead.

The picture in the magazine was so big it covered not just one page, it overflowed onto the second. Other photos in the magazine article included:
Husband and wife on a boat with devil horns, beard and tail sketched over the man.
Voodoo doll with pins stuck all over including one stuck in his juggler vein, another stuck in his forehead, another in his heart, etc.

I don’t need to get into the content of the article. The photos were enough.

I could not find Susan Kane’s email address who is editor-in-chief of Parenting Magazine and told her that articles like this are not only contrary to the mission of the magazine, it further advocates violence against men as a way of dealing with a women’s frustrations.

Interesting - Susan Kane’s previous positions were Executive Editor of New Woman Magazine and Senior Editor at Woman Magazine.

I don’t mind that men are the brunt of jokes but to photograph men with a dart and pins in their foreheads and juggler veins, well enough is enough.

'70s radical Sara Jane Olson released from prison

Matt · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Jon Opsahl said he doesn't think domestic-terrorist-turned-housewife Sara Jane Olson served nearly enough time for his mother's murder, but he's relieved the saga ended with Olson's Tuesday release from prison.

Olson, a member of the self-styled revolutionary Symbionese Liberation Army -- perhaps best known for kidnapping Patricia Hearst -- was released from a California prison after serving seven years, the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation said.
...
Her sentence stems from her involvement in the 1975 attempted bombings of two police cars and the slaying of Myrna Opsahl during a bank robbery that same year.
...
"Enough with the BS that she was unfairly targeted by law enforcement for her youthful indiscretions -- she is a criminal," Weber said in a Monday statement.

Corrections officials say it's important that she be reunited with her family during her parole -- it helps reduce recidivism -- but Minnesota legislators, the governor and the St. Paul Police Federation have asked Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger to keep her in California over the next year.

"Letting a domestic terrorist like Kathleen Soliah set the terms of her parole is an insult to the memory of Myrna Opsahl and all the men and women of LAPD past and present," the St. Paul union said in a letter last week.'

Woman accused in deaths of husband, kids gets bail

Matt · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SAGUENAY, Que. — A Quebec woman charged with killing her three children and helping her husband to kill himself was granted bail under strict conditions by a judge on Monday.

Cathie Gauthier faces three counts of first-degree murder in the deaths of her three children — 12-year-old Joelle, seven-year-old Marc-Ange, and four-year-old Louis-Philippe.

She also faces one count of aiding her husband Marc Laliberte, 46, to commit suicide in what Quebec provincial police have alleged was a murder-suicide pact.

The details of Gauthier's bail hearing cannot be reported because the Quebec Superior Court judge hearing the case granted a defence request for a publication ban.'

Lay off men, Lessing tells feminists

Matt · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The novelist Doris Lessing yesterday claimed that men were the new silent victims in the sex war, "continually demeaned and insulted" by women without a whimper of protest.

Lessing, who became a feminist icon with the books The Grass is Singing and The Golden Notebook, said a "lazy and insidious" culture had taken hold within feminism that revelled in flailing men.

Young boys were being weighed down with guilt about the crimes of their sex, she told the Edinburgh book festival, while energy which could be used to get proper child care was being dissipated in the pointless humiliation of men.

"I find myself increasingly shocked at the unthinking and automatic rubbishing of men which is now so part of our culture that it is hardly even noticed," the 81-year-old Persian-born writer said yesterday.'

Female employee charged with stealing thousands from NH feminist clinic

anthony · 17 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A Manchester, N.H., woman is accused of stealing thousands of dollars from the Concord Feminist Health Center, where she was finance manager.

Police say 55-year-old Janet Curtin surrendered Tuesday on theft charges.

Investigators say Curtin is believed to have stolen about $26,000 from March 2004 to June of 2006, while she worked at the clinic.'

"Men are women's 'issue'"

anthony · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A council on men and boys would promote stable marriage as the best avenue to improve the lives and living conditions of America's women and families. A council on men and boys would address the crisis in American manhood that results in the scourge of infidelity, divorce, lack of commitment and fatherhood with multiple partners.

A council on men and boys would seek to eliminate the objectification of women in the media. It would battle our hypersexual culture by fighting against the “hook-up” mentality that defines the way in which young men view young women. And most importantly, it would stamp out the violence against women that emanates from men's widespread exposure and growing addiction to pornography.
...
Believe me, I'm not man-bashing. Rather, I think the feminist agenda is a false promise. A council on women and girls that seeks to infuse feminism across the government propels us further from real solutions. Our government just isn't man enough to fix what's wrong.'

Filipina who accused Marine of rape recants

Matt · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MANILA, Philippines - A Filipino woman who accused a U.S. Marine of rape has altered her testimony and emigrated to the United States, saying she was no longer certain that a crime took place, a lawyer said Wednesday.

The case has strained U.S.-Philippine military relations amid calls for the scrapping of a pact allowing U.S. troops to train Filipino soldiers, and has become a rallying point for anti-American protests.
...
The turnabout has shocked her supporters, including lawyer Evalyn Ursua, who said her client terminated her services this week then moved to the U.S. to start a new life and was no longer willing to talk.

Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez said the affidavit may not be admitted as new evidence because it should have been introduced during the 2006 trial.

"I am not happy with her because her accusations divided the nation, then she turns her back on everything," he said.'

Not too hard to believe. Once in the U.S., she can now recant. One-way ticket to a better life. And of course, women's groups in the Phillipines think this is about a "lack of support" from the Philipine government over the situation and not about a guilty conscience. Meanwhile, the accused man remains in jail.

The rise of the anchorwomen mens_issues · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Originally found on Fark. Excerpt:

"Young women can look more mature than men of the same age. The fact is that the average woman coming out of school, if you dress her up and put makeup on, she looks like an adult. The average guy coming out of school looks like he's coming out of puberty. It's not discrimination. It's biology."

Do they ever stop humiliating the male gender? This is so tiresome.

US births break record; 40 pct out-of-wedlock

anthony · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The birth rate rose slightly for women of all ages, and births to unwed mothers reached an all-time high of about 40 percent, continuing a trend that started years ago. More than three-quarters of these women were 20 or older.

For a variety of reasons, it's become more acceptable for women to have babies without a husband, said Duke University's S. Philip Morgan, a leading fertility researcher.

...

Cultural attitudes may be a more likely explanation. Morgan noted the pregnancy of Bristol Palin, the unmarried teen daughter of former GOP vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin. The young woman had a baby boy in December, and plans for a wedding with the father, Levi Johnston, were scrapped.

"She's the poster child for what you do when you get pregnant now," Morgan said.'

Setting feminism back, one page at a time

anthony · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ladies, settling for less? Can't figure out why the selfish, egomaniacal, mentally, emotionally and/or physically abusive, jobless, carless, jealous, bootie-callin' gambling addict only gives you a half-assed "sorry" when he doesn't call? With the extreme popularity of the film, "He's Just Not That Into You" comes a terribly useless resurgence of the bestselling book of the same title by Greg Behrendt and Liz Tuccillo who examine all the different ways in which men show you that they don't like you.

In "He's Just Not That Into You," instead of telling women to use their brains so they can learn and grow from past relationship mistakes, women can instead pick up Greg and Liz's book for $14.99 and grieve into its pages like the overemotional teen audience the book was truly meant for, hoping to learn some secret way to change themselves. The authors even have a friendly way of formatting the book to facilitate a single woman's emotional collapse by using a terribly dimwitted question such as this one from Nikki: "Dear Greg, This is dumb. I know you're not supposed to call guys, but I call guys all the time because I don't care! I don't want to play games. I do whatever I want! I've called guys tons of times. You're such a square, Greg. Why do you think we can't call guys and ask them out?"'

A new school at the Boys Ranch

anthony · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Florida Sheriffs Boys Ranch dedicated the Donald Ralph Cooke School March 13. The school features eight classrooms with one designated as a computer lab. The school was funded through the generous gift of Mrs. Donald Ralph Cooke in memory of her late husband.

The education program at the Boys Ranch encompasses three different curriculum streams. Students who are on track maintain their current education program. For those who are behind in their education a personalized program is designed for each student and one on one attention is provided due to the small class sizes. Youth who are significantly behind in school and close to graduation participate in courses to prepare them for the Graduate Equivalency Degree (GED.)'

"The real question is for Chris Brown" (or "masculinity is intimately tied to violence")

anthony · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How do we teach boys to be men? How do we respond to these first incidents of violence in order to prevent escalating incidents in the future? What is our commitment to educating teens about healthy relationships? What values do we perpetuate in our media, music and marketing? What are we willing to do to keep repeat perpetrators of domestic abuse contained before they kill their partners and/or children or move from one victim to another?

In America, masculinity is intimately tied to violence, and the sooner a boy learns that, the easier his passage through adolescence to manhood. Just listen to the names classmates and teammates call boys when they choose not to embrace violence: “sissy,” “girl,” “fag,” “homo” — and worse. Homophobia and violence against women and girls are intricately linked. The quickest way for a boy to prove his masculinity and thereby avoid being bullied is to be violent against someone weaker.'

Kathleen Parker: Bring the Boys Along

anthony · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here Excerpt:

'With a flick of his pen, President Obama finally laid to rest Freud's most famous question and iterated one of man's hardest-learned lessons: Women want what women want.

And the wise man sayeth: "Yes, dear."

Thus it came to pass that the president created the White House Council on Women and Girls to ensure that all Cabinet-level agencies consider how their policies affect women and families. Presumably, men and boys may expect to benefit from what is helpful to women and girls. We shall see.

...

Where's the White House Council on Men and Boys? Okay, let men fend for themselves. But boys really do need our attention, not only for themselves but also for the girls who will be their wives (we hope) someday. We do still hope that boys and girls grow up to marry, don't we? Preferably before procreating?

Boys, meanwhile, are the ones dropping out of school or being expelled. They're the ones failing, abusing drugs and committing suicide. What kind of men do we expect them to become, assuming they survive?'

Top ten men's health myths

anthony · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"2. Men don't use health services as much as women

WHO SAYS? Everyone; this myth is repeated so often you'd assume it's gospel. Your other half will delight in using it as a stick with which to beat you all the way to your GP's door.

HOW WRONG IS IT? It's a distortion of the truth.

GIVE ME THE FACTS Women do use health services more than men, but that's because they have more reason to. As a bloke, you'd get funny looks if you booked for a smear, ante-natal check, Pill prescription and so on. True, you're the proud owner of a prostate and pant-tackle that the girls don't have. But these are easily trumped by lady's problems involving breasts and gynaecology. Now do the maths: subtract from female health service use the strictly girlie stuff, then do the same for men. You'll find that at least 60 per cent of the apparent male v female difference in doctor door-stepping vanishes."

Drunken Woman Attacks Husband With Garden Hoe

anthony · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'THURSTON COUNTY, Wash. -- A 50-year-old woman is in the Thurston County Jail Wednesday morning after allegedly trying to kill her estranged husband with a garden hoe.

Investigators with the Thurston County Sheriff's Office told KIRO-TV that Tina Nystrom had apparently been drinking when she went to her estranged husband's home near Lacey.

Police said the woman asked to see the couple's children, but her husband refused because she was intoxicated.

When the man went into the bathroom, his wife tried to break in the door. When he came out of the bathroom he was struck on the head with a garden hoe.

...

"She admitted striking him. In fact, she told us she intended to kill him," said Jim Chamberlain of the Thurston County Sheriff's Office.'

Carle Place woman pleads guilty to killing boyfriend while drunk

anthony · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Just as jury selection in her trial was set to begin in Riverhead, Jesenia Vega admitted in court that she dragged her boyfriend to death as she drove away from a party, attorneys said Monday.
...
Suffolk prosecutors said Vega had spent the night of July 21, 2007, drinking beer and tequila at a Centereach block party when she tried to leave in her sport utility vehicle.

Her boyfriend, Louis Wiederer, 26, tried to stop her, warning Vega she was too drunk to drive, prosecutors said.
...
Vega's lawyer gave a different account of how the night unfolded, saying she was attempting to flee abuse.

Vega decided to leave the party after Wiederer threatened, berated, then physically attacked her, McCann said.
...
Reached at her Westbury home, Wiederer's mother, Barbara Dempsey, 47, acknowledged that her son's relationship with Vega was volatile, and she recalled seeing physical abuse on both sides. "Those two together created violence," she said.'

Woman accused of killing boyfriend files insanity plea

anthony · 18 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CANTON — A woman charged with killing her boyfriend in his sleep has pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity, and her attorneys may argue that she's a battered woman who acted in self-defense.

Stark County Common Pleas Judge Lee Sinclair is expected to order psychological testing for Andrea M. Carr later this week.

...

Authorities say she admitted to shooting Polen in the head with a .357-caliber revolver and slashing his neck while he slept during the early morning hours of Dec. 9.

...

Defense attorney Samuel Ferruccio said he couldn't discuss the exact reasons for the insanity plea, but he and co-counsel Richard D. Reinbold Jr. feel it is appropriate at this point.

Whether Carr is found not guilty by reason of insanity will depend greatly on the results of the psychological evaluations.

In court filings, Ferruccio and Reinbold also put county prosecutors on notice that they anticipate using a battered-woman defense.'

Angry Wives Examined: Who's to Blame?

anthony · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What's better than the lazy, lump-on-a-log dad stereotype? Well, the whiney, nagging wife stereotype of course. Thanks to Melissa Kossler Dutton at Patagraph.com we got a decent dose of both. In her March 9th article, "Moms mad at dad: A touch of rage on the homefront" Dutton aims blame squarely on dads as she assesses, "Men still don't pull their weight."

Dutton's article focuses on the fact that moms are filled with rage because of their husbands. Moms almost walk on water and their anger is given a pass time and time again. Her article is a reactionary piece like many similar gripe session articles that all were born from the article "Mad at Dad" from Parenting.com. The "Mad at Dad" article is a real gem and pulls on such great statistics like:
...
Apparently, moms are upset that their husbands don't do anything around the house and are surprised that their constant yelling and screaming doesn't get the desired effect of compliance. I am no psychologist, but I do know that a productive environment is one in which the lines of communication are open and mature discussions about disagreements take place--just saying. Also, anger is not a healthy emotion to be feeling in the first place and does have serious health implications for those who are consumed by it--not to mention the fact that moms are modeling very poor behaivor with all these angry outbursts.'

One-Party Classroom: Interview with David Horowitz

anthony · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'JW: You claim that in a Penn State Women's Studies class, "students have no option to take different or dissenting views."(96) Where is your evidence for this claim? Did you talk to any students in this class?

DH: The course is billed by the instructor as an "introductory feminist survey course," in other words not a dispassionate analytical course about feminism, but an indoctrination in feminism. The instructor declares that her intention is to "examine (and challenge) the nature of power and privilege in our lives and institutions." The course agenda is to "challenge" power and privilege, not to examine whether power and privilege may have useful and beneficial functions, as well as negative ones. Since the course is set up to provide only radical feminist answers to the questions it poses – that is to deny legitimacy to alternative views, the answer to your question should be self-evident.'

UK: 'Trust me, Gordon, loyalty’s in my DNA'

anthony · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the wake of intense speculation about her leadership hopes, it's fitting that Harriet Harman will be taking Prime Minister's Questions tomorrow while Gordon Brown is in Washington.

It's not the first time she has stepped into the ring as his substitute but tomorrow, the scrutiny will be all the fiercer.

She has emerged as a serious contender for the leadership — but also as a gaffe-prone member of the senior team.
...
Her political strength derives from the strong mandate that no other minister possesses: her direct election by the Labour party as its deputy leader. Squeaking past Alan Johnson by the narrowest of margins, she won thanks to the overwhelming backing of women activists, as well as the votes of London party members. Her strong base in the capital is a significant fact if she should go all the way and run for leader.
...
In the early 1980s, she was one of a small group of professional women in the Labour Party who strove to combine feminism with Labour values. It included Cherie Blair, with whom Ms Harman argued about abortion rights, and Margaret Hodge. Bossiness and self-interest are charges most often levelled at her.'

Economist.com: 'Lady in red': Gordon Brown’s deputy is the early favourite to replace him

anthony · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PRIVILEGE is no bar to the commanding heights of the Labour Party. Neither are women always squashed under its industrial machismo. There is even a place for lifelong Londoners in a movement whose heartlands are northern and Celtic. So much is obvious from a glance at the cabinet, with its expensively-schooled chancellor, female home secretary and Primrose Hill’s own Miliband brothers.

But no modern Labour figure embodies all three forms of otherness like Harriet Harman, the deputy leader whom many suspect of manoeuvring to replace Gordon Brown after the general election he seems doomed to lose next year. Recent weeks have seen this feminist of vaguely aristocratic provenance, not only a native of the capital but an MP for one of its constituencies, side with the left of the party on such wedge issues as bankers’ pay and the planned part-privatisation of the Post Office. Bookmakers have her the favourite to take over from Mr Brown and, having beaten five others to the deputy leadership in 2007, she is a proven winner.'

More Israeli women dodging the draft

Matt · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Israeli, female and looking to dodge the draft? Don't get caught kissing.

With more 18-year-old women claiming religious modesty as grounds for exemption from male-dominated military life, the Israeli Army is hiring investigators to spy on suspected draft evaders, catching them doing decidedly unreligious things.
...
All men are expected to serve three years and all women two year, and secular resentment over exemptions on religious grounds runs high.
...
In 1991, 21 percent of women avoided service on religious grounds, according to army figures; last year the figure was 36 percent, even though overall only around 20 percent of Israelis classify themselves as religious.

The numbers for men claiming religious grounds are running high too ... largely because the Orthodox are Israel's fastest-growing Jewish population group.
...
The declining numbers have prompted the military to cancel plans from earlier this decade to shorten army service for men by four months.'

Note the "male-dominated" line the author slips in at the beginning. Typical stuff to make excuses. Basically, "the ladies" don't want to give up their cushy civilian lives but are fine if "the men" do so. In short: same old, same old.

Hamas offers reward for men who marry Gaza widows

webdigr · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

In light of rise in number of widowed women following Operation Cast Lead, Hamas decides to give $3000 to men willing to wed and provide for widows and their children
...
Hamas initiated the move in an attempt to lower the number of widowed women in the Gaza Strip who lost the spouses who provided for them and their children, and in order to ease their emotional grief and financial difficulties.
...
Hamas hopes that by encouraging men to wed these women, it will be providing them with stability and a better life.

According to the report, Hamas has set a number of terms that the grooms must meet in order to receive the money: The men must be able to provide for two women or more, be religiously devout and ethical.

They are also required to allocate sufficient space in their house for the new wife, help care for her children and treat them as if they were their own.

Barack against the boys

Matt · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unless there's been a monstrous misunderstanding, the man is muddled, malevolent, or both.

Barack Obama has just signed "an Executive Order creating the White House Council on Women and Girls. The mission of the Council will be to provide a coordinated federal response to the challenges confronted by women and girls and to ensure that all Cabinet and Cabinet-level agencies consider how their policies and programs impact women and families."

Under the rubric of this Council, feral, (mostly) female bureaucrats will "ensure that agencies across the federal government, not just a few offices, take into account the particular needs and concerns of women and girls. The Council will begin its work by asking each agency to analyze their current status and ensure that they are focused internally and externally on women."

Barack, however, has it backward: It is boys, not girls, who lag behind – and have for decades.'

Fathers 4 Justice Pair Arrested At Heathrow

Matt · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The pair belong to an offshoot of Fathers 4 Justice, a spokesman for the campaign group said.

BAA confirmed two people were held after attempting to gain "unlawful access" at Heathrow shortly after 10am.

They were "quickly apprehended and arrested and are now in police custody", the airport operator said.
...
"This was a misguided and ultimately unsuccessful attempt to disrupt the travel plans of thousands of Heathrow's passengers, and we condemn the actions of those involved unreservedly."

The founder of Fathers 4 Justice suggested there could be further protests in coming months as fathers sought to "take the mantle back" from anti-airport expansion activists Plane Stupid.

Matt O'Connor said: "We suspended direct action campaigning in September last year, but we obviously understand that there are many frustrated fathers out there who want to engage in direct action.

"To be honest I think it's inevitable at some point there will be another upsurge in direct action akin to what went on before."'

Wife divorcing ex-CEO: $43 million not enough

Matt · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HARTFORD, Conn. - A 36-year-old Swedish countess divorcing a former CEO says she cannot live on $43 million.

Marie Douglas-David, a former investment banker, says she has no income and needs her 67-year-old husband, George David, to pay her more than $53,000 a week — more than most U.S. households make in a year — to cover her expenses.

David stepped down last year as chief executive at Hartford-based United Technologies Corp. but is still chairman of the board and has an estimated net worth of $329 million. He and his wife accuse each other of extramarital affairs. Their divorce trial started Wednesday.
...
Douglas-David has filed court papers showing she has more than $53,800 in weekly expenses, including for maintaining a Park Avenue apartment and three residences in Sweden. Her weekly expenses also include $700 for limousine service, $4,500 for clothes, $1,000 for hair and skin treatments, $1,500 for restaurants and entertainment, and $8,000 for travel.

At that rate, Douglas-David would burn through $43 million in less than 16 years. The Census Bureau estimates that the median U.S. household income in 2007 was just over $50,000.'

Fathers' rights activist banned from Facebook as "offensive"

Matt · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Ron Lasorsa, operator of http://www.restrainingorder911.com/, claims he was banned from Facebook for "offensive material". His blog video report here. Content warning: some graphic language but nothing to get too worked up about. I'd rate it as PG-13 based on today's standards, but use headphones if you are at work or some place where there are younger kids nearby.

Tutor charged with endangering welfare of a child

Matt · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'IRONDEQUOIT — Police have arrested a woman who tutored children at Bishop Kearney High School on charges of having inappropriate sexual contact with three students.

Lisa K. Marshall, 37, of Lakebreeze Park, Irondequoit, was charged Wednesday with three counts of endangering the welfare of a child and one count of third-degree sexual abuse. She was later arraigned in Irondequoit Town Court, police said.

Marshall was employed by Monroe County Board of Cooperative Educational Services District 1 and was assigned to work with students at Kearney during the school day, according to BOCES spokesman John Walker.

Police said Marshall propositioned a 15-year-old male student at her home in February, requesting that the teen have sex with her. Marshall had picked the student up at his home and brought him to her home, ostensibly to have him help her create a MySpace page.'

Related video report here. Surprisingly, they do mention toward the end of the report that 40% of reported "unwanted sexual attention" accusations made by students are aimed at female teachers. What they didn't mention is that that is just the statistic for reported incidents.

'Project Runway' Finalist Faces Assault Charges

anthony · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kenley Collins, the catty, batty finalist on "Project Runway," really let the fur fly when she assaulted her now ex-fiancé with their pet feline in their Williamsburg apartment, authorities said yesterday.

The fashion designer, 26, was charged with assault and criminal possession of a weapon the weapon being the cat itself for her crazed attack on Zak Penley, 28, prosecutors said.

"It was a miscommunication," Kenley told The Post after getting released without bail from Brooklyn Supreme Court yesterday morning. "Fights happen, and that's that.

According to sources, the fur began to fly at 7 a.m. when Collins cocked her arm and threw one of the couple's two cats Arlo or Sandra at Penley, who was sleeping at the time.

She then threw her laptop as he fell and crawled on the floor, cops said. She also allegedly slammed a door on his head.

As Penley dialed 911, Collins threw three apples at him and doused him with water, cops said.

"You're lucky, it could have been worse," Collins told Penley after the blow, according to sources.'

Pro-Joint Parenting Story

Anonymous · 19 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The author debates the pros and cons of shared parenting with a child that has been with his mother for 9 of 11 years. Excerpt:

'Post-divorce child custody arrangements fall commonly into two models. There is the primary residence model, wherein children sleep, eat and live primarily in one house with one parent. For reasons of prejudice, the primary residence most often belongs to the mother. Then there is the two-residence model, wherein the children split time in what are essentially two lives, two homes and possibly two neighborhoods.

Both models make deals with the devil as it were.

In the primary residence model, the upside is domestic continuity for the children, which is convenient to say the least. But the downside stinks. There is no escaping that the nonresidence parent becomes in some part subordinated, no matter how heroically he or she battles to stay present, involved and connected. The nonresidence parent becomes the visitation parent. He or she visits the children. His or her children come to visit. That is, not live with you. This is a huge and consequential symbolic and actual shift in the relationship.

Only a nonresidence parent could possibly phrase the question. "What do you want to do while you're here?"'

Reports: Woman gave birth, left baby on plane

Matt · 20 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WELLINGTON, New Zealand – A woman who secretly gave birth on a flight from Samoa to New Zealand may face criminal charges after her baby was found alive in the plane's bathroom, police and media reports said Friday.

Police are inquiring into "the alleged ... abandonment of the child by the mother" after the flight landed in New Zealand on Thursday, police communications manager Ana-Mari Gates-Bowey said. "A likelihood of this investigation is a criminal prosecution."

Media reports said the mother left the baby in a bathroom waste bin on the Pacific Blue plane carrying 150 passengers; others said she was spotted with bloodied clothes in an immigration line. Police have declined comment on the reports.

Gates-Bowey said late Thursday the woman had undergone surgery at Auckland's Middlemore Hospital and was later reunited with her baby. Its gender has not been disclosed.'

Rudov Radio Interview Points Up Double-Standards in DV

Matt · 20 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Listen to the interview here. Clicking this link launches your Media Player and the show streams. I tried saving the link file down and running it from my hard drive but that doesn't work.

The Teen Rape Double Standard

Matt · 20 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After a 17-year-old boy had sex with his 14-year-old girlfriend, he was charged with a felony for statutory rape. When a 17-year-old girl in the same town commited the same crime, she was charged with far less. Was the boy the victim of gender bias?

Alan Jepsen was playing videogames at his home in Sheboygan, Wisconsin, when the cops came knocking on his door. He was handcuffed in front of his sister and thrown in jail. In the words of his attorney, Jeffrey Purnell, “This child, this 17-year-old high-school kid, had to spend a week in jail—they locked him up and they put him in jail with grown-ups.”

His crime: Having sex with his 14-year-old girlfriend. And, perhaps, being a boy.'

Woman charged in fake rape report

anthony · 20 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'OXFORD TWP. – A 23-year-old College Corner woman now faces a misdemeanor charge after police said she concocted a story about being kidnapped and raped earlier this week.

Jacqulyn Harrison could spend up to six months in jail if she is convicted on a charge of making a false alarm.

On Wednesday, Harrison reported to police that she was forced into a black vehicle earlier in the day while walking along U.S. 27 near College Corner around 1:30 a.m.

She said a man took her to a field where she was repeatedly raped and forced to take drugs. She told police the suspect stole her money and then dropped her off back near U.S. 27.

Harrison gave police a detailed description of a suspect and his vehicle, right down to his white “Air Force” brand tennis shoes.

The incident never occurred, Oxford Township police said today.'

MSNBC: Want to be a dude? Movies will teach you how

anthony · 20 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'2. Pepper your everyday speech with references to flatulence, diarrhea, sex acts, vomit and menstruation. If you can work them all into a sentence used in the presence of your mom or, better yet, your best friend's mom, all the better. Extra points if you can spread this frosting on the cake of an expensive college education. The "Adventureland" twentysomethings toss around Nikolai Gogol and Virgil as often as they do bags of weed.
...
5. Use so much convoluted, idiomatic slang-intensive speech that even you don't understand. Rather than leaving it behind in the hermetically sealed teenage world, the New Dude carries it well into adulthood and trades it for credibility with other men. "I Love You, Man" takes a daring approach to this rule by mocking the practice (See the ad campaign's "Pop a squiznot" posters) but it will most likely endure anyway.'

Transgender wife gets 4 years for husband's death

anthony · 20 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHARDON, Ohio — A transgender woman has been sentenced in Ohio to four years in prison for killing her frail husband by forcing him to exercise.

Forty-one-year-old Chris Mason was sentenced Friday in Geauga (GEE'-aw-guh) County Common Pleas Court for reckless homicide in the death of 73-year-old James Mason. She pleaded guilty earlier and could have gotten five years at sentencing.

Mason's voice quivered as she tearfully apologized for the June death of her husband, who had heart problems. A surveillance camera caught Mason forcing her husband around in the pool.
...
Police say she forced James Mason, who had heart disease, to do stressful activity in an indoor pool for more than two hours. He collapsed and died the next day after Chris Mason authorized his removal from life support.
...
A security videotape shows Chris Mason pulling her husband by his arms and legs on June 2, tossing and dunking him. Sometimes he clings to the side of the pool and his wife pulls him away. She appears to block his path as he tries to get out of the water _ 43 times, by the police chief's count.'

Mom says LA toddler found dead not kidnap victim

Michael · 20 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PALMDALE, Calif. (Map, News) - A woman who reported her 18-month-old daughter missing now says the child died accidentally and that she dumped the body near a freeway, authorities said Friday.

Stacey Barker, 24, told detectives that when her daughter Emma Leigh died, she panicked and believed she would be blamed, Los Angeles County sheriff's Sgt. Diane Hecht said.

A body found Thursday in Sylmar, a few blocks from Interstate 5, was identified by coroner's officials as Emma. The cause of death was not immediately determined.

Barker initially told investigators that she was knocked unconscious by someone while putting Emma into her car in Lancaster on Wednesday. She said Emma was gone when she awoke partially clad hours later in another city.'

India: Jaipur men victim of false dowry cases

arindamp · 21 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"Two cases of dowry harassment and domestic violence are registered everyday with three Woman Police Stations in the city. Thirty alleged dowry deaths were reported in the district in 2008. Amid hue and cry by the NGOs and other social organizations over the alleged misuse of sections related to dowry harassment and domestic violence, there is another aspect which goes unnoticed most of the times. There are many people who have to suffer at a very young age due to such cases. Their career is ruined and they are left with no other option but to suffer from delayed judgments and biased police investigation.
...
In most of the cases, the FIRs are lodged by giving distorted facts and police either act lethargically or adopt a biased attitude which cost dear to the groom and his family," Ashwani added."

U.S.: Vasectomy Rates Up Sharply

Matt · 21 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FRIDAY, March 20 (HealthDay News) -- Doctors around the United States are reporting a sharp increase in the number of vasectomies performed since the economy soured last year, with one noting that many of his clients are from the beleaguered financial industry.

Their best guess is that the trend is due both to a decreased desire to have children because of the expense involved, and an increased desire to get such medical procedures done before their jobs -- and health insurance -- disappear.

Since November, Dr. Marc Goldstein, surgeon-in-chief of male reproductive medicine and surgery at the Cornell Institute for Reproductive Medicine in New York City, said his practice has seen about 48 percent more vasectomy consultations compared to the same time the previous year.
...
"We were doing 40 to 45 a week, and then it went to 70 to 75 each week," he said. "Some patients were concerned about losing their insurance, but it seems to me more of it is the idea of 'I can't commit myself to raising another child in uncertain times.'"'

"All men should take responsibility for violence"

Stinger503 · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The letter is here. Excerpt:

'Does anyone doubt Muruwet Tuncer won't be the last?

Calling these acts domestic violence is a convenient way to downplay and push aside this crime. Why not call it what it really is: male violence against women and children?
...
To all the men in this city who hold women in high esteem and would never think about acting violently against them, I would ask: What are you doing about male violence? Are you raising your sons so they will not act in a violent way? It seems to me that when you allow other men to act violently and take no responsibility for their actions, you are tarnished with the same brush. More succinctly, if you are not a part of the solution, you are a part of the problem.'

To submit a response to the Hamilton Spectator, go here.

Office of Women and Girls Head Makes One-Sided Claims on NPR

Matt · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from RADAR: Valerie Jarrett, who heads up Pres. Obama's newly-formed Office on Women and Girls, recently said: "Domestic violence is still a major issue, not just for women but also for girls." – NPR Morning Edition, March 12, 2009

Jarrett's one-sided claim is disturbing because the Office on Women and Girls will attract extensive media attention in the next 4+ years, and could set the stage for even more anti-family DV laws.

Can you help us get the word out to stop the "Ms.-Information"? Complaints can be made here.

UK Times: "School is better without boys"

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Getting the best for girls has always been a vexed issue. Do they do better in single-sex schools or when taught alongside boys? In recent years single-sex schools have been tarred as old-fashioned and antiquated, a throwback to the Victorian era, but a report published last week looks like the last word on the issue: girls really do do better in single-sex schools.

The study, by The Good Schools Guide, followed 700,000 girls and found that those who sat GCSEs in single-sex state schools all did better than could have been predicted by their scores at the end of primary school.'

Journalist to discuss boys at education seminar

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Veteran investigative journalist Peg Tyre will be the keynote speaker at the Mississippi Association of Partners in Education's upcoming state seminar.
...
Tyre, former senior writer at Newsweek, is author of “The Trouble with Boys: A Surprising Report Card on Our Sons, Their Problems at School and What Parents and Educators Must Do.”

Tyre will explore issues related to boys' academic performance and why a disproportionate number of boys are high school dropouts. The state seminar also includes the Governor's Awards luncheon and training opportunities for education professionals.'

Australia: Female judge 'let sex teacher off lightly'

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A victim support group is disappointed with the non-custodial sentence imposed on a Melbourne teacher over a relationship she had with a 15-year-old student.

Nazira Rafei has been convicted of committing indecent acts with a child after she performed sexual acts with the boy on two occasions last year.

The court heard the boy initially pursued the teacher and they engaged in a sexual act in the back of her car during last year's teacher strike.

...
But Noel McNamara of the Crime Victims Support Association says the sentence is too lenient and points to female bias as a possible factor.

"I think they seem to be mainly in most cases female judges who hand down these sentences and think that it is okay for female teachers to interfere with young boys," he said.

"We don't know what the end result is going to be with this lad."
...
Rafei will be placed on the sexual offenders register and she has also been ordered to do 150 hours of community work.'

"Father and president"

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jay Fagan, a professor of social work at Temple University who has done studies on fathers, said that children who are living in households where their fathers are not present are much more likely to be living in poverty.

They are more likely to fall victim to substance abuse and child abuse. They're also at risk for emotional and behavioral problems. They're more likely to have problems at school, and they're at greater risk of delinquency and teen pregnancy.

Linda Nielsen, a professor of educational and adolescent psychology at Wake Forest University, views fatherlessness not as a family values issue, but as a "huge economic issue."

From high dropout rates, which lead to unemployment and under-employment, to low emotional health, so much of what is costing taxpayers money can be linked to children "not getting enough fathering," she maintained.'

Albany woman sentenced to 25 years to life for murder plot

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) - An Albany woman who conspired with her boyfriend to kill her husband has been sentenced to 25 years to life in prison.

Tammara McCoy was found guilty of second-degree murder and conspiracy for the death of Tyrone McCoy in November 2007.

Prosecutors say Johnson was dating 32-year-old Tammara McCoy when her estranged husband came into thousands of dollars, and they plotted to kill him and escape with his money. Tammara McCoy drove her husband to her Albany apartment and then Johnson shot him in the head.

McCoy was sentenced Thursday. Johnson was found guilty in November. He's currently serving 28 and a half years to life in prison for murder, conspiracy, criminal possession of a weapon.'

Inherent Sexism in Child Abandonment Cases Linked to Feminist Abortion Theory

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As far as I can tell in the first case the abandoner was a man and the second it was a woman and women have emotions that effect their judgment and culpability. Of course the fact that the woman would have been lawfully permitted to kill her child only a short time before abandoning it has nothing to do with the difference in treatment.

As a person who has researched the abortion issue extensively I have noted that what passes for sexism and misogyny is frequently embraced and even promoted by certain quarters to promote the ideals of those who claim to be favour of women. They will condemn statements like the above quote in popular theological writings of the past as patronising and insulting yet when there are benefits to women from being treated as full rational agents they seem quite willing to buy into this line of thought as long as it enables women to avoid criticism.'

MND: Obama Women’s Council Tells its First Lie

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Maidens of Mendacity are at it again, only this time they're speaking from the bully pulpit that President Obama himself established. A couple weeks ago President Obama established the White House Council on Women and Girls. During the March 11 ceremony, Obama explained, "It's not enough to only have individual women's offices at different agencies, or only have one office in the White House."

The very next morning the Office's director, Valerie Jarrett, went on NPR Morning Edition. This is what Jarrett had to say: "Domestic violence is still a major issue, not just for women but also for girls."
...
Each year an estimated 600 Americans are struck by lightning - that's according to the National Weather Service. And each year fewer than 1,500 Americans - men and women - are murdered by their intimate partners.'

Michelle Obama Hosts Female ‘Firsts’

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It felt like a high school prom at the White House Thursday night…minus the teenage boys and the spiked punch.

Michelle Obama hosted 110 high-school junior and senior girls from eleven Washington-area schools for dinner and music in the East Room. Sheryl Crow and Alicia Keys performed.

Obama assembled the group in honor of Women’s History Month. She told the group of girls to use the night for networking and to “poke and prod” the successful women in the room “to figure out how they got where they are.”'

UK Telegraph: 'Men in the classroom'

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The news that more than a quarter of England's primary schools do not have a single male teacher might not seem very alarming: in recent years we have come to think of this area of teaching as the preserve of women. In fact, the statistic is testament to a mighty failure of our education system, and one that needs to be put right as soon as possible.

The counties of Hertfordshire, Derbyshire, Essex, Surrey, Hampshire, Lancashire, Norfolk and Cumbria each have more than 100 schools with no men teachers. These findings come from the Government's Training and Development Agency, which also discovered that 83 per cent of parents were unhappy with this situation. How has it come about? There are many factors, but one of them is a grossly exaggerated suspicion of paedophiles – a fear that it is not safe to leave children alone with men. On the contrary: it is not only safe but also necessary to employ properly qualified men to teach children under 11. Boys in particular need male mentors, especially if they do not have one at home.'

Why Are More Women Confessing to Infidelity?

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an October 2008 study, researchers from the University of Washington explored the recent increase in infidelity, and the changing makeup of the participants. A greater number of older men and younger women have reported being unfaithful than in earlier studies. However, historically, gauging responses in scientific studies of sensitive issues such as sexual behavior has proven to be a flawed science.

According to The New York Times, which cites the University of Washington's research, the number of young women who report engaging in extramarital sex is not much lower than that of men. The study reports that 20 percent of men and 15 percent of women under the age of 35 have cheated on their spouses, up from 15 percent and 12 percent respectively.'

Trying to avoid trouble is a ridiculous reason to cry 'rape'

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Do teen girls really believe it's easier to claim false rape to their parents and police than to face the consequences of their own dumb actions?

For the second time in less than six months, a south suburban teen has acknowledged lying about a sexual assault to avoid punishment.

In the most recent case, 19-year-old Heather Krueger, of Tinley Park, told police last week that she was attacked while on her way home from the South Side Irish St. Patrick's Day Parade. The assault, she said, happened in the 80th Avenue Metra parking lot in Tinley Park.

Within two days, though, she recanted her story and admitted fabricating it to deflect the wrath she would face from her parents after they learned she had been celebrating in true Irish fashion.
...
Teen girls never should be given the message that crying rape is a good way to get out of trouble, even if they are having emotional problems or can't face possible consequences of their actions. And filing a false sexual assault report because you might get caught drinking? I am sure a lot of teens went home Sunday and had to face the music after celebrating at the parade, but they didn't waste police time and resources searching for an attacker who doesn't exist.'

Scotland: Businessman suffers brain damage after assault over false rape claim

anthony · 22 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A PROMINENT businessman suffered devastating brain injuries in a vicious attack after he was wrongly suspected of raping one of his workers, a court heard yesterday.

John Chalmers, 47, has had to "learn everything again" and step down from a senior role in his family's bakery in Aberdeen – which holds the Royal Warrant – because of the assault.

He had become friends with a woman less than half his age, who's brother mistakenly believed Mr Chalmers had sexually assaulted her.

On Christmas Day, 2007, Steven Macleod, 28, struck Mr Chalmers a blow to the head with a length of wood and repeatedly punched him, causing a fractured skull and internal bleeding. Without prompt medical treatment, he might well have died.'

A bad day for female violence

Ric_TVY · 23 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

In today's news section on the front page of Australia's NineMSN, their top 4 stories of the day included 3 stories about female violence:

Court Claim: "Wife admitted to chopping up husband" - Police say wife blasted husband to death with a shotgun, took his body out the back (obviously not a small woman) and chopped him up before hiding bits around the state. Lets see what she gets, my prediction 6 years, out in 3.

Disfigured - Nightclub glassing victim acquitted - A Ms Goldrick admitted pulling a woman to the floor and punching her in the mouth after herself being punched in the mouth, victim a Ms Kelley was also glassed in the face leaving her blind in one eye and scarred for life. Goldrick was acquitted as there was some doubt about where the glass injury came from. I did think that punching someone in the mouth was illegal, obviously not, as she walked free.

Sex Murder - "Desperate Students call cut off" - British holidayer has her throat cut by female flatmate and her boyfriend for not participating in a sex game.

Makes you wonder how our Governments can continue to make domestic and dating violence all about male perpetrators and female victims when the truth is on the front page of Australia's most popular website, day after day. Note also that according to the ABS 25% of violence against woman comes from other woman - in this second story we have just that - a glassing by one woman against another.

Nebraska woman sentenced for false sex-assault report pays $150 fine

anthony · 23 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'COLUMBUS, Neb. (AP) - A Columbus woman who recanted her story of being sexually assaulted by a man she met over the Internet has been fined and told to pay restitution.

Janae McMahon pleaded no contest to attempted false reporting. Last week she was fined $150 and ordered to pay the court $1,671 in restitution.

The 27-year-old had reported in May last year that a 38-year-old man from Meadow Grove sexually assaulted her after they watched a movie at her home.

He told police the sex was consensual.'

Henryville woman jailed, accused of molesting boys

anthony · 23 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Henryville woman is accused of molesting two 12-year-old boys she knew from church and that her husband reportedly coached in a youth football league.

Sheila Granger, 33, is charged with five counts of class A felony child molesting, three counts of class C felony child molesting and one charge of class B felony child solicitation. She is being held without bond in the Michael L. Becher Adult Corrections Complex, awaiting her first court appearance.

Lt. Rachael Lee, a detective with the Clark County Sheriff's Department, said Granger's husband coached the two boys in a football program in Henryville. Lee said Granger and the two boys attended the same church.

Lee said Granger knew them "through a personal relationship with the parents of the boys." She said the investigation began after a school resource officer received information about abuse and followed up on it.'

Woman killed her own son and forced sibling to watch

anthony · 23 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Twenty-five-year-old Teresa Gilman was also sentenced to 30 years behind bars for child abuse resulting in death and four counts of child abuse.

The ninth judicial district attorney says Gilman's son, six-year-old Lorenzo Cabral, Jr. died from blunt force trauma to the head in January of 2007.

Gilman reportedly believed the child was possessed by the devil.

Three other children were home at the time of the killing.

Police say Gilman forced the oldest child to watch the abuse that led to his sibling's death.'

Advocates for fathers sue trial court over child support rules

anthony · 23 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boston, Mass. - A fathers' rights group says it is suing the Massachusetts Trial Court for what it says are unconstitutional child support guidelines that are decimating household budgets.

"There are people who are literally being driven out of their homes and apartments because of their inability to pay," said Ned Holstein, founder of the nonprofit Fathers & Families. "We believe in guidelines that will well take care of all the children and also be fair between the adults. These guidelines do not do that."

Holstein said the group intends to argue that the child support guidelines, because they have the potential to increase child support payments, represent a tax increase. Under the constitution, he said, only the Legislature has the power to authorize new taxes. The changes, approved in November by the Chief Justice of Administration and Management of the Trial Court Robert Mulligan, took effect Jan. 1, 2009.'

Even with a presumption of shared custody men still get the shaft

Anonymous · 23 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FAMILY Court judges seem reluctant to order that children spend equal time with parents in the most bitter and complex disputes, with only 15 per cent of such cases resulting in a 50-50 parenting split.

Mothers are more likely to be granted the most time with their children in the most acrimonious cases contested in court, according to Family Court figures.

Of mothers involved in contested cases, 60 per cent were granted main residence, or the majority of time.

Of fathers in such cases, 17 per cent were granted the majority of time. The analysis is based on almost 1450 cases contested in court that were finalised in 2007-08.'

What Feminism Wrought

Broadsword · 24 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The need for some return to sanity is presented pretty clearly in an article in the April issue of O, the Oprah Magazine. The article details how some women find themselves leaving men in favor of relationships with partners of their own gender.

One recently divorced academic describes what attracted her to a future female lover. “She got up and gave me the better seat, as if she wanted to take care of me. I was struck by that,” she said. “I felt attracted to her energy, her charisma. I was enticed. And she paid the bill. Just the gesture was sexy. She took initiative and was the most take-charge person I’d ever met.”

...

"The women interviewed in the article appear to want someone to take charge a bit — there is an attraction to, if not a need for, some hierarchy. And in a culture in which masculinity — well, at least in men — is so often suspect, some women seem to be looking to reinvent the masculine themselves."

Letters to the editor Washington Post: A Justified Focus on Women and Girls

Broadsword · 24 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"In ridiculing President Obama's establishment of the White House Council on Women and Girls, Kathleen Parker presented a misleading picture of the persistent pay gap between men and women ["Bring the Boys Along," op-ed, March 18].

Ms. Parker would like us to believe that men and women are simply making different "choices," and that this explains the gender pay gap. This view overlooks evidence to the contrary. A study from the Government Accountability Office concluded that even after accounting for "choices" such as work patterns and education, women earn an average of 80 cents for every dollar that men earn.

Moreover, the GAO has found that women with children earn about 2.5 percent less than women without children, while men with children enjoy an earnings boost of 2.1 percent, compared with men without children. So mothers pay a penalty for their choices while fathers receive a bonus.

Equal pay is not just a women's issue, it's a family issue that also affects our fathers, husbands and sons.

In more than 13 percent of families, women are the sole earners. The impact of the wage gap is particularly painful in our current economic downturn as families struggle to make ends meet on stagnant wages. President Obama is right to make this a priority.

CAROLYN B. MALONEY

U.S. Representative (D-N.Y.)

Washington

JOHN D. DINGELL

U.S. Representative (D-Mich.)

Washington

Determined To Talk, Wife Handcuffs Self To Husband

WakeUp · 24 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Brief article here.

'FAIRFIELD, Conn. - Fairfield police say they rescued a screaming husband with bite marks on his torso and arms who was handcuffed to his wife, who was attempting to reconcile with him.

Police charged 37-year-old Helen Sun with third-degree assault, disorderly conduct, reckless endangerment and unlawful restraint. She was due in Bridgeport Superior Court on Tuesday.

Police say Sun told them she wanted to have a full conversation with husband Robert Drawbough without him leaving. Police say she changed the locks on their bedroom and handcuffed herself to Drawbough while he was asleep.

Drawbough used a cell phone to call police, who heard his screams when they arrived at the couple's Fairfield home. He was treated at a local hospital.'

She wasn't charged with a crime that has the word "domestic" in it.

RADAR ALERT: Valerie Jarrett Unveiled: Tell the White House the Truth

Matt · 25 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

During a recent interview on NPR's Morning Edition Valerie Jarrett, the head of the newly-created White House Council on Women and Girls, remarked, "Domestic violence is still a major issue, not just for women but also for girls," and stated that in regard to the prevention of violence against women, the first thing the council would do is "take a look at all of the federal agencies and inventory everything [they] are currently doing...[they] are not leveraging the federal dollars as well as [they] could...and [they] could really do more to enhance the lives of women and girls."

While on the surface Ms. Jarrett's stated objective for the Council seems sincere and business-like, conspicuously absent was the plight of male victims of domestic violence as well as the need to maintain integrity in the nation's fight to prevent domestic violence, which is compromised by the ever-present weapon of false allegations that lead to the destruction of families.

Ms. Jarrett's comments intimate that the dynamics that are wrong with VAWA at present will not only be ignored, but will actually be worsened.

Please share with the White House your concerns about Ms. Jarrett by filling in this form.

As always, be polite.

++
Date of RADAR Release: March 24, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

Columnist questions the success of modern feminism badgerb · 25 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Particularly in the M.T. case, Ms. Timson blames the girl's actions on "a very retro scenario," an "ages-old pre-feminist scenario" in which girls believe they have no power on their own. So they convince themselves that they must attract a man and keep him at all costs, even murder.

Pardon me? Girls have turned to murder because they have no power? The truth is, they have turned to murder and "obsessive irrational hatred of one girl toward another, depict[ing] an emotional landscape devoid of respect, conscience or heart," because they have too much power. I don't mean too much power relative to boys — with whom they are now equals in every real sense — but rather relative to teens of past generations.
...
Feminism's attempts to release women from the strictures of the old sexual morality, and the movement's encouragement for women to act like men, have produced violent girls like M.T. who use their sexuality as a tool, and think nothing of offering up — via cellphone text messages — "bj's " and "bang bangs" in order to have a perceived rival, Stefanie Rengel, killed. It's not the technology that's changed, it's the girls.'

UK: Chef faces rape charge from lawyer because she was drunk

Matt · 25 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Peter Bacon, who denies raping the woman, said she smiled at him and touched his leg with hers before they made their way upstairs to her bedroom.

The 26-year-old told police after his arrest that sex with the lawyer was 'reciprocal' and that she had plenty of opportunities to say no.

'She was drunk, but she was still able to hold a conversation with me. She gave the impression that she was enjoying it,' he insisted.

...

The alleged victim, who is in her 40s, claimed that she woke after a night drinking wine to find Bacon lying next to her in bed.

He had been invited round to the house by the woman's former flatmate but the lawyer claims she was so drunk that she did not even remember him arriving.

She told Winchester Crown Court that when she woke up she told Bacon to get out and told him: 'It's because of b like you that the law has been changed.'

Prosecutor Kerry Malin said the woman was referring to a 2007 legal ruling that someone who is drunk may not be capable of giving consent.

Bacon was so concerned by her allegations he went to a police station to find out where he stood in relation to the law.

He claimed the sex was consensual - but was later arrested and charged.

Today, the court heard Bacon had told police in his interview that he believed the woman was as keen to have sex as he was because she never said no, and he insisted she had played a full part in what happened.'

Boys Failing Schools and Under Enrolling in College

anthony · 25 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Center for Educational Statistics found that boys were 30 percent more likely than girls to flunk or drop out of high school, five times more likely to be diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD), get worse grades than girls in elementary, middle, high school, college and graduate school, are less likely to attend college and have 12 percent less bachelor degrees than women and 10 percent less graduate degrees.
...
In the book “Suicide and Attempted Suicide” by Geo Stone, a table showed during 1990 for every 100,000 people in the United States, an average of 20.4 men committed suicide while only 4.8 women did.
...
Alvaro De Vinicente, the headmaster of a private all-boys school called The Heights School in Washington said in a Voice of America article, “I think that in many cases boys are falling behind because there has been a process over the last 20 years, a process of education becoming more feminine. And I mean that in sort of a realistic factual sense. Because if you look at the statistics, there is a majority of women teachers and a majority of girls in the school that everything gets tailored to the girls and the young women.”'

"Baseball no field of dreams for female athletes"

anthony · 25 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. You won't see the author discussing the bat speed and hand eye coordination necessary to hit a 98 mph fastball. You also won't read anything about the difficulty of throwing a ball from the '408 foot sign at Yankee stadium to gun down a runner at home. Don't expect to read about the strength, balance, and stamina needed by a catcher during a three hour game. Excerpt:

'Girls face ostracism from boys who were their friends outside the game. “When they were young, if the girl was really good enough, sometimes she would be accepted by her teammates,” Cohen said. “The older she got, the more hostility she would face because the stakes are higher.” Scouts from professional teams and colleges are looking for prospects “and boys still feel that their masculinity is threatened because they’re going to be struck out by a girl or woman…. There’s a lot of gender issues involved when it comes to accepting a woman athlete on par with a male athlete on male teams.”

Does Sexism Still Reign In TV Advertising?

anthony · 25 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For many years television advertising was plagued by what we today consider to be ridiculous stereotyping with a woman portrayed as pretty much a subservient extension of her husband whose only role was to make him happy.

Today those kinds of ads are no longer broadcast and I'm glad to see the change. But there is one area where sexism in advertising seems to be ok, when it is used to portray men as dumb idiots who can't cook, clean, take care of kids, etc.
...
But imagine if the same technique were used to show woman as helpless with a car, or unable to do household repairs, or driving badly ? The same ads in the same humorous spirit would be quickly banned under protests from advocacy groups.'

UK: Sexism claims rejected by employment tribunal

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A LOUGHTON mum's claim that she was the victim of sexism at a City bank has been dismissed by an employment tribunal.

Anna Atkins, 52, said she was passed over for promotion at Standard Chartered because of a macho culture where meetings ended up in strip clubs.

During a six-day hearing at the London Central Employment Tribunal last month the account manager said her department was "typified by late-night drinking and cigar smoking" from which women were excluded.

A judgement issued on Monday (March 11) dismissed her three allegations of sex discrimination and six allegations of victimisation by senior executives at the bank.'

UK: Sexism claim by sacked Baby P boss has ‘no hope’

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'THE claim by former children's services director Sharon Shoesmith that she was sacked without compensation because she is a woman was dismissed today as nothing more than a “bargaining chip” to win higher damages.

Ms Shoesmith lost her £130,000-a-year job at Haringey in the furore over the council's failure to protect Baby P.

Experts believe she could win more than £1 million if her unlawful dismissal and sex discrimination claims against the council succeed.

Her case, lodged at Watford employment tribunal, is said to claim that “she was treated less favourably by the council than a man would have been in similar circumstances in that she was summarily dismissed from her job without compensation whereas a man would not have been so dismissed”.'

Rose Afriyie: Violent gender roles

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Andrea Dworkin, an author and activist, once said she believed “in the humanity of men against all the evidence.” Color me optimistic. I believe in the humanity of men who have been physically violent, no matter how deeply buried that humanity may be. We have gone to a very dark place when we say that there are crimes people can commit that rob them of their ability to rehabilitate. Faith in rehabilitation is not in opposition to the often-reported high relapse rates of violent offenders. It simply hopes to envision a world where people aren’t doomed to be battered or a batterer after one act of violence has occurred.

But it all starts with us. We may win brownie points in our social networks by polarizing the debate and making it about how much we can stick it to domestic violence offenders in the public eye. But these actions don’t get women any closer to healing, men any closer to questioning their sexism on multiple levels or our society any closer to rethinking conflict resolution in partnership. These constructive activities aim to stifle violence and lead us on the path to healthy relationships.'

Fresno Radical Men's Discussion Night

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

'The radical men's discussion night is open to all who identify as men/male. It's an opportunity to discuss sexism, male-ness, feelings and relationships, and of course, revolution.
...
Men benefit from gender privilege and power, and this is something we will discuss: how we men can struggle against sexism. At the same time, sexism hurts us all. How have other men treated us throughout our lives? While patriarchal culture gives men power and privilege, we often have roles and expectations thrust upon us that we did not choose. How have we felt confined by gender roles and expectations? How can we confront sexism and patriarchy, deconstruct gender norms, and create healthy, sustainable forms of masculinity and individuality?'

An opportunity here to educate some of our future compadres?

Experts: Abuse doesn't just affect women

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many male victims of violence are unwilling to come forward and seek help said Erika Tindill, executive director of the Connecticut Coalition Against Domestic Violence.

The coalition oversees 18 domestic violence programs throughout the state, including The Umbrella and the Center for Women and Families. Tindill said men who are abused by female partners can feel emasculated by the situation.

"We are in a paternalistic society," Tindill said. "We depend on men to be the providers."

Being abused by a wife or girlfriend flies in the face of that macho archetype, she said, and male abuse victims might be unwilling to admit what has happened to them. As a result, Tindill said, female on male violence "is clearly underreported."

'Manhunt' for Woman Sought in Ex-Husband's 2008 Plumas County Murder

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PLUMAS COUNTY, CA - Murder charges were filed Wednesday and a manhunt was underway for a woman charged with killing her ex-husband in Plumas County last year and burning his body in Nevada, according to a Plumas County sheriff's spokesman.

Plumas County prosecutors charged Nazira Cross, 43, with murder with special circumstances Wednesday in connection with the July 2008 death of Cross' ex-husband Michael, Plumas County sheriff's Sgt. Steve Peay said.

Peay said detectives were actively searching for Nazira Cross, who allegedly had several aliases and may have fled the area or the country.'

Korea: Women-Only Parking Lots to Debut

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'The Seoul Metropolitan Government will introduce female-only spaces in all parking lots from April.

The spaces will be painted pink with emblems of women in the center. The special parking lots will be longer and wider than normal parking spaces. Road parking lots will be mandated to secure more than 10 percent of space as women-only spaces — and over 20 percent for buildings.

Under the plan, the city plans to increase women-only parking lots by up to 7,500 spaces this year from the current 2,000. Accordingly, more than 31 percent of public parking lots will be set up as women-only spaces. Female-only parking lots will be placed near elevators and will maintain over 70 lux of light.'

Woman Charged with Sexual Abuse of Stepson

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Charleston woman is jailed on charges of carrying on a two year sexual relationship with her teenage stepson.

Thirty-four year old Jenee Afzal was arrested Tuesday night after a warrant was issued for her arrest. She's charged with sexual abuse by a parent and incest and is jailed in lieu of $10,000 dollars cash only bond.

The victim, now age 18, says the incidents started when he was 16.'

Lawrenceville woman held in boyfriend's stabbing

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Lawrenceville woman has been charged with stabbing her boyfriend with scissors early yesterday during an argument over their car.

Charges against Sherrse A. Gaines include aggravated assault and domestic violence, police said.

Ms. Gaines, 25, answered the door, her arms and face bloody, when police responded to a call at their residence in the 5200 block of Wickliff Street around 4 a.m.

Police said the boyfriend was seen on the stairs with a large, open wound of the chest, and officers immediately summoned an ambulance.

The victim told police that during the argument, Ms. Gaines began punching and scratching him before she brandished the scissors and began lashing at him, striking him in the face and chest.'

Jury finds woman guilty of murdering her husband

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman whose first murder trial ended up in a hung jury was convicted Monday of killing her husband by the second jury to hear her case.

Grace Pianka, 51, was found guilty of second-degree murder in Maricopa County Superior Court. She faces up to 22 years in prison when she is sentenced May 29.

Pianka was charged in the April 15, 2006, shooting death of her husband, Adam Kostewicz.
Her first trial ended in a hung jury last August.
...
The jurors would not comment on the case, but all affirmed their guilty votes when individually polled after the verdict was read in the courtroom of Judge Warren Granville.

Pianka faced a presumptive prison term of 10 to 16 years for the crime. However, Granville ruled that aggravating circumstances - the fact that a gun was used in the crime - meant that the prison term could be stretched to as much as 22 years.'

Sheriff: Woman Fired on Deputy Assisting Child

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LEONARDTOWN, Md. -- A sheriff's deputy who went to a home to perform a welfare check found himself in the line of fire Friday, according to the St. Mary's County Sheriff's Office.

The deputy made contact with 35-year-old Nancy Martha Ahearn at a Leonardtown residence when he saw an 18-month-old boy pull a bookshelf onto himself, authorities said.

When the deputy went to assist the child, Ahearn went to a closet to get a handgun, according to the sheriff's office. She pointed it at the deputy, who sought cover, and fired.

Ahearn only managed to successfully fire one shot, authorities said, and the deputy was able to disarm her.

Ahearn was taken to St. Mary's Hospital for evaluation. She was charged Wednesday with attempted murder and first-degree assault.'

X Versus Y - The Ultimate Battle of the Sexes

anthony · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The quest to find a man, not a boy, plagues most women today. We women find ourselves sitting and pondering where the elusive man has gone, and why he has been replaced with these obviously cheap knockoffs the same quality of a swap meet Gucci bag.

Well, the pondering is over and our question answered. The cherished Y chromosome is losing its genes from generation to generation. Women can let out that sigh of relief - It's down to genetics. They might not be that into us, but it's because genetically they aren't that into themselves.
...
Every guy should give a hand to that, not because they are saved from disappearance, but because, at their current state, it's the only real loving they should get. So, as the hunt for the real man continues, women can stop settling for some half mutated loser, but comb through looking for that one man who escaped his genetic disposition, and learned a thing or two from his mother.'

Wales: Concern over absent father stats

Matt · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One in four children in Wales have no contact with their biological father, a children's charity suggests.

In a poll of young people from the year 7-11 school age group, 24%, when asked, said they 'don't see' their father.

More than a quarter of 15-year-olds asked said they had tried cannabis, with the figure higher among those who did not feel close to their father.

Catch22, which commissioned the survey, said it underlined the importance of a good father child relationship.

The findings form a preliminary part of a report, Growing up with Dad, based on research carried out by Catch22, a charity that helps young people out of difficult situations.'

Woman who stabbed herself released from jail

Matt · 26 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There will be no more time behind bars for a local woman who stabbed herself in an effort to have her daughter's father charged.

Janet Laforge was able to convince both the Crown and the judge Monday that she deserves a chance to turn her life around.

The 38-year-old woman pleaded guilty in February to attempting to commit public mischief by causing police to begin an investigation into the false allegation.

She also was convicted of three other offences, including assault and two counts of breach of a recognizance, stemming from the Jan. 11 incident.

As well, Laforge pleaded guilty to possession of stolen property and three counts of possession of stolen credit cards.

These charges were in connection with a Dec. 11 shopping spree where she made purchases with credit cards stolen from another woman's purse.'

India: Boys more abused than girls

webdigr · 27 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While the recent Mira Road rape cases have brought to light sexual crimes against girls in society, the fact is that boys are even more victimised than girls.

"In our experience, we found that boys were more sexually abused than girls. And they were even more reluctant to report it than girls," said Pooja Taparia, founder-CEO, Arpan, a non-governmental organisation (NGO) which works to prevent child sexual abuse and heal those who have been affected by it.

...

"The truth is boys are as much at risk as girls, and so protecting only girls is not enough," said a child rights activist Pranay Veer.

The second myth is child sexual abuse is prevalent only in the lower class.

...

According to a national survey, 50% of the offenders are known to the victim.'

Debate over drugs for ADHD reignites

anthony · 27 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New data from a large federal study have reignited a debate over the effectiveness of long-term drug treatment of children with hyperactivity or attention-deficit disorder, and have drawn accusations that some members of the research team have sought to play down evidence that medications do little good beyond 24 months.

The study also indicated that long-term use of the drugs can stunt children's growth.
...
One principal scientist in the study, psychologist William Pelham, said that the most obvious interpretation of the data is that the medications are useful in the short term but ineffective over longer periods but added that his colleagues had repeatedly sought to explain away evidence that challenged the long-term usefulness of medication. When their explanations failed to hold up, they reached for new ones, Pelham said.'

NCFM objects to recent DV training video, informs San Diego D.A.

MR · 28 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A letter (.pdf file) has been sent by the National Coalition For Men (NCFM) to the District Attorney of San Diego. The letter addresses a new training video (funded by taxpayers) that is being used to train police.

"The new training video, Domestic Violence: You Make the Difference that your office funded is seriously flawed. Much information in the new video is not scientifically derived or evidence based, and cannot be construed as a best practice."

Toronto mother charged in toddler's death

Anonymous · 28 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 34-year-old Bolton, Toronto, mother has been charged in the slaying of her 18-month old child. The toddler's body was found earlier today in a car parked in an underground garage of the Mississauga Executive Centre located directly across from Square One Shopping Centre.
...
The woman is to appear later this afternoon in a Brampton courtroom. She will be charged with first-degree murder. The boy's body was discovered just before 8 a.m. after the accused called police, telling them where to locate her dead child, police say.

The woman was under investigation by the Children's Aid Society.

Police won't confirm a report that the child protection agency was about to take the deceased child and her two other children.'

College professor asserts men need more stress in their lives

Matt · 29 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.: In this article, Sociology professor Scott Coltrane is quoted saying men have not added enough stress to their lives until the past decade and that they now are no longer "off the hook" as they are expected to do more childraising and housework. How ironic that all these lazy, stress-free men have for decades climbed in Coltrane's sewers, collected his garbage and fixed his streets so he can get to his cushy job and talk about how lazy and stress-free men have been.

You can send a letter to the editor at letters-at-usatoday.com and editor-at-usatoday.com and you can email Coltrane directly at coltrane-at-uoregon.edu.

Reminds me of Professor Christine Littleton's comment in the Daily Bruin that "It is women who do the work of the world" which Glenn Sacks slammed in a subsequent op-ed. Or maybe it's just "boys are stupid, throw rocks at them" all over again. I guess it's not enough that men make 92% of job deaths, 70% of job injuries, work 90% of overtime and die younger and more often for the 10 leading causes of death including stress-related ones like stroke. And never mind that a recent 25-nation study by economists from Berlin, Brussels and Texas found men do their fair share of housework when we look at all types of work combined, both in and out of the home. The University of Maryland found the exact same thing.

In fact research shows most men would take a pay cut or quit their jobs if their partners could support the family. It is not men who have refused to be child-rearers, it is women who have chosen to stay primary parents. Women are much more likely than men to have the option of staying home after graduating from college while men still don't have that option anywhere near the same degree women do. They're either primary breadwinners or on the streets. So they take high-risk, high-hour and high-stress jobs to fulfill what is expected of them, only to then get bashed by ignoramus academics who sit at their desks and talk about how lazy men are.

Judge chastises Norway after woman, daughters flee Canada

Matt · 29 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SASKATOON — A Saskatchewan judge slammed the Norwegian government last month for providing new passports to help a woman flee Canada with two children in the midst of a nasty, transatlantic custody battle.

“The Norwegian government played a pivotal role in the breach of orders of this court. (They) could not have left Canada without its assistance,” Court of Queen’s Bench Justice Geoff Dufour remarked in a Feb. 19 written decision obtained recently by the Saskatoon StarPhoenix.'

Urge the probation or early release of Will Hetherington

Anonymous · 29 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

You and I have our hands full - but I received a letter today from William Hetherington...do you remember him? In a hesaid/shesaid story, William and his wife were in the process of a divorce. She wanted the divorce, he did not. They had two children. She got involved with her boss.

William convinced her to attend marriage counseling, and in time she hinted reconciliation. She invited him to dinner in their home...sent the children to grandma's house. He arrived to find music, candles, flowers, etc. Soon in bed together; and then she jumped up, ran outside screaming that he had raped her. Michigan's first spousal rape case. Police arrived. She said he stuffed a rubber ball in her mouth, but no ball was ever found. He was arrested. Next day, she emptied bank accounts. He had no money for attorney, was denied public defender - because he allegedly had assets.

He went to trial with an attorney he had never met, called in from hallway a minute or so before trial. Attorney told him to plead guilty. He refused, and a judge sentenced him to 30 years in prison. He has been denied parole ever since. It is going on 28 years. I think. He wants me to help him contact politicians, Michael Moore and newspapers to help alert public (especially men) about this spousal rape law - in this he/said/she said case a man spend his adult life in prison while some drug dealers, murderers (even some pedophiles) get probation. My friend spent years trying to help change this law but died two years ago, so now this inmate turns to me in desperation. He contacted me first to write his life story, but I was tied up. He thought he could persuade someone to do a movie about his story if a book were available. He's had a lot of support - but in time people forget and move on. or die. He's sick now (cancer, I hear), and unlikely to be a problem to society if released.

If you have friends or buddies who should know this story and might want to help in self defense if nothing else - or if you can contact Michael Moore (they grew up in the same Burton/Davison area) let me know. It is a terrible law! Please forward on - one never knows where it will land.

William Hetherington #186155, Boyer Road/Carson City Correctional Facilities,P O Box 5000, Carson City, MI 48811-5000

Justice was not done in cases when evidence does not support spousal rape. Does justice demand one plead guilty to earn probation after serving 20+ years? It would seem so, but that is not the issue now. The issue is whether or not a man deserves to spend life in prison in a hesaid/shesaid spousal rape case, and whether or not that law should be amended.

Ed. note: Wikipedia entry on this case is here.

Baby P and the Child Abuse Industry

Matt · 29 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Baby P killing reveals the child abuse industry at its most cynical. The Soviet-style ineptitude revealed daily is the product not of poor training or underfunding but of the logic inherent in bureaucratic politics.

We have long known what causes child abuse and why children like Baby P die. The vast preponderance of child abuse and child deaths occurs in single-parent homes. Very little abuse takes place in married, twoparent families. London's Family Education Trust long ago demonstrated that children are up to 33 times more likely to suffer serious abuse and 73 times more likely to suffer fatal abuse in the home of a mother with a live-in boyfriend or stepfather than in an intact family.

Figures from the US Justice Department show that single mothers accounted for 55 per cent of child murders. Shorn of politically correct euphemism, what this means is that the principal impediment to child abuse is a father. 'Fathers have often played the protector role inside families,' writes Adrienne Burgess of Fathers Direct. A study in the journal Adolescent and Family Health found that 'The presence of the father … placed the child at lesser risk for child sexual abuse.'

Yet instead of allowing fathers to protect their children, fathers are forcibly and systematically removed from their homes and children by family courts with the active support of social work bureaucracies. Ironically, this is often effected using trumped-up charges of child abuse against fathers, though statistically biological fathers are responsible for very little abuse. Judges claim they remove fathers, even without evidence of abuse, to 'err on the side of caution'. In fact they are erring on the side of danger, and it is difficult to believe they do not realize it. Thus the child abuse apparatchiks remove the children's natural protector, whereupon the real abusers — the single mother and her boyfriends — are free to abuse his children with impunity. Groups like Fathers4Justice and protesters like Jolly Stanesby are vilified for calling attention to the confiscation and abuse of their children, when they are merely responding as any parent can be expected to do when someone interferes with his child.'

Gender bias evident in parental alienation cases

Matt · 29 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'JUSTICE REPORTER — A study of alienated children has found that mothers were significantly more likely to be the parent who emotionally poisoned their children than were fathers.

Toronto family lawyer Gene Colman told a Toronto symposium yesterday that of 74 court rulings that found parental alienation since 1987, the mother was the alienator in 50 cases. The father was the alienating parent in 24.

"I'm not trying to dump on moms," Mr. Colman told about 150 psychologists, family lawyers, mediators and activist parents. "I'm just saying, that is what the data reveal."

In parental alienation syndrome, an estranged parent systematically brainwashes a child into hating the other parent. The profile of the syndrome escalated over the past year, after three Ontario judges ordered that children be removed from an alienating parent and taken to U.S. clinics for deprogramming therapy.'

UK: 'Face it, girls — a drunken romp isn't rape'

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is it too much to hope that men falsely accused of rape by drunken women might one day be treated with ordinary courtesy and remain anonymous until proven guilty? Last week it took a jury a mere 45 minutes to throw out an accusation made by a woman in her forties, whom we must, maddeningly — because she is automatically guaranteed anonymity – refer to as Miss X, against Peter Bacon, a 26-year-old student and chef from Canterbury, Kent.

After an evening at the woman's house, during which Miss X, Bacon and a friend had drunk at least five bottles of wine, Bacon and Miss X retired to bed and had sex. Next morning Miss X, a solicitor, was so hungover she did not even remember what had happened, then claimed Bacon had raped her because she was too drunk to have consented to sex. The way Bacon tells it, Miss X was "giving me the come-on". When they started kissing, "she did not say no. There was never any indication of her saying, 'What are you doing?' She had plenty of time to say, 'Oi!'," he told the jury.'

Female 5th Grade Teacher Arrested for Having Sex with Male 7th Grader

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Another elementary school teacher is being accused of molesting a former student. This time it's happened at Rosa Parks Elementary School in City Heights. The teacher, 35-year old Adrienne Feistel, is accused of molesting a 13-year-old boy she befriended. The molestation allegedly occurred while the boy was in 7th grade. Feistel's neighbors are in disbelief.
...
Authorities say the crime was reported by the teenage boy when police were interviewing him about an unrelated incident, a confrontation between the boy's mother and sister. Neighbors tell San Diego Six News that Feistel moved out of the neighborhood last October and is separated from her husband who is a San Diego Sheriff's Department Deputy.

Those same neighbors are trying to come to grips with the allegations.

"Surprised and shocked. It doesn't seem like something she would do." says the unidentified neighbor.

If convicted, Feistel could face up to eight years in prison. She sits in jail at the Las Colinas Detention Facility in Santee. Her bail was set at $50,000.'

MND: Claim that Boys Doing OK in School Comes up Short

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This study purports to disprove the notion that there's a boy crisis in education. It's by Sarah Mead courtesy of a self-described "think tank" called the Education Sector. From what I can gather, it pretty accurately represents the response by those in the educational system who want to ignore the obvious problems boys have in school.

Mead's short take is that boys haven't performed worse over the past 35 years, girls have just performed better. Indeed, she claims boys are doing better than ever, just not as well as girls. But to get to that conclusion, Mead misreads the data she herself cites and, simply ignores the implications of other facts.
...
What has caused this crisis in our efforts to educate males can be a subject for debate. Surely many factors contribute. My personal guess is that it has a lot to do with a culture that has been viciously denigrating men since (what a coincidence!) the early 70s. For at least three decades, men in this country have been consistently told, among other things, that we're stupid. Could that possibly have anything to do with poor performance in school? What about the claim that all the good we do is just patriarchal oppression of our betters? Maybe boys have gotten the message. Think of that.'

HAWC's new name removes 'women-only' perception

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The local agency dedicated to eradicating domestic violence has chosen a name that better reflects its mission and services, according to Executive Director Candace Waldron.

Help for Abused Women and their Children is now Healing Abuse Working for Change. HAWC is also launching a new logo design contest with a $1,000 cash prize.

"We want to be sure we're responsive to all communities where domestic abuse might occur," Waldron said. "After 30 years of doing work, it's become clear that it's really the behavior of controlling and abusive persons that needs to be addressed, and it affects different genders."

The nonprofit agency was founded by a handful of Salem women in 1978. Over the years, it has grown to serve men affected by domestic violence, as well as women.

"I think our name, frankly, has been somewhat of a barrier in having men contact us," Waldron said.'

Woman loses legal round in assault on husband

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Utah Court of Appeals has rejected the argument that a Taylorsville woman, accused of ramming her SUV into her husband, should be able to include jury instructions regarding "extreme emotional distress" as part of her case.

Brenda Christine White, 33, is charged with attempted murder, a first-degree felony, and criminal mischief, a second-degree felony, in connection with an April 26, 2006, incident in which White and her estranged husband, Jon White, argued about money, child custody and other matters.

Prosecutors say an enraged Brenda White returned four hours later, chased her husband in her vehicle as he ran for cover on foot, smashed the SUV through a Salt Lake office building's glass door and hit her husband once, throwing him about 10 feet.'

UK: Woman in false rape claim jailed for 20 months

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Alesha Watkins, 20, claimed Darren Ball, 25, attacked her after a party at Rushden, Northamptonshire, in December 2007.

Mr Ball spent 19 hours in custody and made four court appearances over seven months, Northampton Crown Court heard.

Watkins admitted perverting the course of justice. Judge Charles Wide QC said her lies had left a completely innocent man accused of rape.

...

She had been drinking alcohol and taking cocaine before they became involved in a "play fight" at his home that led to sexual intercourse, the court heard.

Prosecuting, Alex Bull said: "She said she had not been raped, and lied because she had regretted having sex with him.

...

Reading out a victim impact statement, the lawyer added: "It has had a significant impact on Mr Ball.

"He has had difficulties in his relationship since this time. He began to drink heavily.

"He said he began to feel suicidal. He's now in a relationship but blames this on his break-up with his ex-partner. He now only sees his children on school holidays." '

"Women for Hire" still at it

Luek · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Feeling bad because you are out of work? Jobs fairs may be the answer to landing that job to help pay your back child support and divorce lawyer fees.

However, if you are someone who was born with the X-Y chromosomal genetic makeup forget going to this job fair. IT IS FOR WOMEN ONLY!

The site "claims" that many top companies will be present to discuss your employment future with you IF YOU ARE A FEMALE.

College newspaper can't stomach the word COM(MAN)D on a T-shirt

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Hanszen College Men's Resource Center (MRC) has been selling "MAN" shirts both to raise campus awareness and to raise funds for its Hu(man)ity Campaign to help "young men in the Fifth Ward Enrichment program become responsible adults and productive members of the community." I thought it a perfect example of the kind of socially conscious civic engagement projects Rice students should engage in - that is, until I saw a shirt with the slogan "COM(MAN)D" with the word "man" displayed in a larger font and bracketed within the whole word.

Understandably, the MRC was probably trying to make a statement by using funny or enticing slogans as part of its campaign. Most of the slogans are indeed so, such as "WO(MAN)," "(MAN)GO" and "BRO(MAN)CE," but this particular slogan, "COM(MAN)D," is particularly offensive and potentially misleading.

"Command" is a word that connotes power, control, force and dominance. This meaning is obvious in every dictionary definition of the word. One cannot command without being obeyed. "Command" and "obey" form a basic binary opposition, just like "male" and "female." If a man "commands," then a man cannot "obey," which leaves anything that is not man to "obey."'

Canada: Custody judges rule on vengeance

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Toronto -- The scope of the courts' reach into family affairs has long been contentious, but a recent trend in Canada's legal system has brought a new controversy that has some onlookers praising judges and others condemning them for accepting what they call "voodoo science."

More than ever before, Canada's judges are recognizing that some children of divorced and warring parents are not simply living an unfortunate predicament, but rather are victims of child abuse and suffering from Parental Alienation Syndrome.

Though debate swirls as to whether the occurrence should be termed a syndrome, a disorder, or simply ‘parental alienation,' Canadian and American judges, lawyers, and psychologists are increasingly buying into a view that sees programming a child to despise a non-custodial parent as grounds for removing the "brainwashed" child from the alienating parent's custody - or what is known in the extreme as a court-ordered "parentectomy."'

Canada: Gender bias evident in parental alienation cases

Matt · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'JUSTICE REPORTER — A study of alienated children has found that mothers were significantly more likely to be the parent who emotionally poisoned their children than were fathers.

Toronto family lawyer Gene Colman told a Toronto symposium yesterday that of 74 court rulings that found parental alienation since 1987, the mother was the alienator in 50 cases. The father was the alienating parent in 24.

"I'm not trying to dump on moms," Mr. Colman told about 150 psychologists, family lawyers, mediators and activist parents. "I'm just saying, that is what the data reveal."

In parental alienation syndrome, an estranged parent systematically brainwashes a child into hating the other parent. The profile of the syndrome escalated over the past year, after three Ontario judges ordered that children be removed from an alienating parent and taken to U.S. clinics for deprogramming therapy.'

Hillary: Priority in Afghanistan is expanding women's rights

Matt · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HOUSTON - U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton has told a Planned Parenthood convention that reproductive rights, as well as women's rights and empowerment, are key issues in President Barack Obama's foreign policy.

Clinton vowed her support for these issues during a speech Friday evening at the Planned Parenthood's national conference in Houston.

...

Secretary Clinton started her day in Washington, where she and the President announced the administration's new direction in Afghanistan. One priority, she said, is ensuring the expansion of women's rights there.'

ACLU Intervenes As Girl, 14, Faces Porn Charges For Nude Photos

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

You might be asking how is this relevant? Think about the plethora of stories about boys facing severe consequences for similar actions. I've never read anything about the ACLU coming to the aid of these boys. When a girl faces the same injustice, hypocritical groups like the ACLU come to the rescue. Excerpt:

'A 14-year-old New Jersey girl has been accused of distributing child pornography after posting nearly 30 explicit nude pictures of herself myspace.com — charges that could force her to register as a sex offender if convicted.
...
The American Civil Liberties Union has asked a federal judge to block the filing charges, saying that the teens didn't consent to the picture's distribution and that the image is not pornography, in any event.

"Teenagers need to know that there are serious consequences for sharing risque or compromising pictures of themselves, but trying to teach that lesson with heavy artillery like child-pornography charges — which can have lifelong consequences — is uncalled for. Who does it protect?" said Deborah Jacobs, executive director of the New Jersey ACLU.'

World Net Daily: Who will raise kids: Mom, Dad or state?

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though efforts to pass a constitutional amendment protecting parental rights have failed in the past, two U.S. legislators are preparing to reintroduce the idea this week; and this time, they say, the effort is backed by more than 60 congressional members.

Rep. Peter Hoekstra, R-Mich., who introduced a parental rights amendment by himself last year, told the Agence France-Presse that he will be joined by Sen. Jim DeMint, R-S.C., on Tuesday as they renew the fight.

According to a statement released to AFP by Hoekstra's office, the amendment "would clearly outline in the U.S. Constitution that parents, not government or any other organization, have a fundamental right to raise their children as they see fit."

Jury Awards Damages For Botched Circumcision

Luek · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. It is just a measly $1.8 million but still it is a step in the right direction in stopping this now discredited barbaric procedure. Excerpt:

'A Fulton County jury has awarded $1.8 million in damages to a boy whose penis was severed in a botched circumcision.

The state court jury gave another $500,000 to the boy's mother in the decision rendered Friday.
he case involves a child, identified only as D.P. Jr., who was born at South Fulton Medical Center in 2004. In a suit filed two years later, his mother contended that the doctor who circumcised him removed too much tissue and that his pediatrician failed to respond when a nurse complained of excessive bleeding.'

Army reaches out to families to stem suicides

anthony · 30 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. - Fort Campbell officials struggling to stem a recent increase in military suicides hope family members will be able to spot signs that soldiers may be depressed and hesitant to seek help from the Army.

Of the 100 family members and spouses at a meeting at the post Thursday, more than a dozen raised their hands when asked if they knew someone who had committed suicide. Those family members — often the first to notice problems — received information and training on recognizing signs of suicidal thoughts — and how to get help for the soldiers at the installation along the Tennessee state line.'

O no, not again! Oprah's school rocked by second sex scandal in 2 years patriotsofamerica · 31 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original Story here. This school that was set up by Oprah just for girls to prove that women and girls left in their own environment are better than men. This my friends, is proof that women are not the better sex. They are behind closed walls away from male influence and yet, they sexually harass and molest/rape each other. I will remember that next time I have to go to a sexual harassment class for work! Women ARE and CAN BE predators! This time, NO MEN can be blamed! Excerpt:

'Oprah Winfrey's elite boarding school for girls in South Africa has been rocked by its second sex scandal in fewer than two years.

Seven students were suspended last week for sexually harassing their schoolmates, the "Afrikaans on Sunday" newspaper reported.

One 15-year-old was accused of preying on another pupil and forcing other girls to lie to investigators about it, the paper reported.

"You have been found guilty of physical contact of a sexual nature with another pupil on campus, harassment, bullying other girls on campus and of being dishonest by not telling investigators the whole truth," a letter to her parents read.

Other girls were caught fondling each other or trying to get other girls to join them in lesbian liasons, the paper reported.'

History has been 'feminised', says prominent UK professor

Broadsword · 31 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an interview with the Radio Times, out today, Dr Starkey said: "One of the great problems has been that Henry, in a sense, has been absorbed by his wives. Which is bizarre.

"But it's what you expect from feminised history, the fact that so many of the writers who write about this are women and so much of their audience is a female audience. Unhappy marriages are big box office."

...

Dr Starkey went further, by saying that modern attempts to paint many women in history as "power players" was to falsify the facts.

He said: "If you are to do a proper history of Europe before the last five minutes, it is a history of white males because they were the power players, and to pretend anything else is to falsify."

For example, while he considered Elizabeth I to be a great monarch, "the way she is presented as some sort of female icon is ludicrous".'

Free At Last: The Exoneration of Alan Beaman

Matt · 31 March 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In 1994, Alan Beaman was convicted of the murder of his ex-girlfriend and spent 13 years in prison for the crime.

Through the work of the Center on Wrongful Convictions at the Northwestern University School of Law, the Illinois Supreme Court reversed the conviction last May, citing the weakness of the evidence against Beaman.

A panel of those involved in the effort to clear Beaman's name recently reunited at the law school to discuss their experiences with the case.'

RADAR ALERT: Party Hearty-- Spend National Tea Party Day Protesting VAWA

Matt · 1 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

April 15th, tax day, is slated to be National Tea Party Day. Throughout the country, citizens will be protest the unprecedented level of federal spending will gather in front of their city halls.

Among the grievances listed at http://teapartyday.com/ are that the federal government is "spending trillions of borrowed dollars, leaving a debt our great-grandchildren will be paying" and that members of Congress "consistently give special interest groups billions of dollars in earmarks to help get themselves re-elected."

RADAR shares the tea partiers' displeasure over out-of-control spending and pork. Included in the so-called economic stimulus bill of 2009 is $325 million earmarked specifically for ineffective domestic violence programs. Ineffective, that is, at preventing domestic violence. They have been very effective at contributing to the deaths of women and children, breaking up families, and creating incentives for false allegations while whittling away at the traditional due process protections previously provided to the accused.

In the near future, we will be providing a flyer that you can take with you to hand out at a local tea party. This week, we ask that you find out details about your local tea party. To start, we suggest checking out this webpage to learn who's organizing tea parties in your area.

Thanks for your support.

++
Date of RADAR Release: March 31, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/

India: 'Baazigar syndrome' on the rise webdigr · 1 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some men want to get back at their wives so desperately they don't care if they destroy themselves in the process. A men's rights activist names the condition after a Shah Rukh Khan film, reports Savie Karnel.

...

The squabble ended when he killed her and surrendered before the police. He said he'd had enough of her demands for money to lead a lavish life.

This may be an extreme case, but men trying to avenge their wives, whatever the cost, is on the rise, according to a men's rights foundation.

...

Some are angry to be at the receiving end of dowry harassment cases when they haven't taken any dowry. So, they file counter cases saying giving dowry is a crime. They urge that the wife's family also be arrested.

...

"It was not so before. We suggest to people who come to us to not get entangled in legal hassles and waste their time... But they all seem to want revenge and don't bother what happens to their lives," she said.'apR27Q

Using kids as weapons

Matt · 1 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last weekend, I attended the Canadian Symposium for Parental Alienation Syndrome (PAS), Canada's first international conference on a form of child abuse that can be as bad as, or even worse than, sexual and physical abuse.

For the "show, don't tell" version of what the presentations added up to, read A Kidnapped Mind (Dundurn Press, 2006), by former model and journalist Pamela Richardson, who spoke at the symposium. Richardson wrote the book after her 16-year-old son, Dash Hart, neither drunk nor drugged, threw himself off Vancouver's Granville Street Bridge on New Year's Day, 2001.

Although Richardson was unaware there was such a syndrome until well into a 12-year custody ordeal as a "target parent," her detailed chronicle of a remorseless campaign to "disappear" her from Dash's life by his narcissistic father is the human face behind the evils described in the PAS literature.'

Single mother subjected adopted boy to years of cruelty

Anonymous · 2 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A single woman who was chosen to adopt a boy subjected him to four years of beatings and abuse.

She spat at him, locked him in a laundry cupboard for hours without food or water, and once pushed his face into a plate of hot spaghetti.

The adoption was one of the first by a single mother after social workers and adoption agencies began looking for single parents and gay couples to adopt, in some cases in preference to married couples.

The 43-year-old woman, who cannot be named for legal reasons, had never lived in a long-term relationship or been married when social workers decided she was suitable to adopt.

Yesterday she was given a conditional discharge after admitting child cruelty.'

UK: Man cleared of rape after court shown 'phone footage'

Anonymous · 2 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A businessman has been cleared of raping a university student after jurors were shown footage of the sex session taken on a mobile phone.

Gary Taylor, 41, was accused of attacking the 27-year-old woman after turning up at her flat with cocaine and a bottle of red wine.

The woman, who can't be identified for legal reasons, told jurors that Mr Taylor forced her to perform a sex act on him and then raped her in her living room.

But during cross-examination she was shown footage Mr Taylor had taken on his mobile phone during the encounter on September 26, 2008.

Mr Taylor's barrister Karen Holt said the footage showed the woman 'actively' performing a sex act on him.
...
The prosecution offered no evidence following advice from the judge.

Mr Taylor, who runs a multimedia company, was cleared of four charges of rape and walked free from court.'

Murderer in jail for 11 years gets pregnant during day release from prison

Anonymous · 2 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman jailed for life for the brutal murder of a pensioner has become pregnant during day release from an open prison.

Lisa Healey is expected to give birth in the next few days after secret sex sessions with her boyfriend.

The 26-year-old, who has served 11-years-of her sentence, will bring up her child up in a mother and baby unit of Askham Grange Prison near York.
...
Healey was 15 when she and her 14-year-old friend Sarah Davey killed widow Lily Lilley in Failsworth, near Oldham, Lancs in 1998.
...
'The Prison Service provides Mother and Baby Units for the benefit of the prisoners' babies who would otherwise have to be separated from their mothers.

'The primary consideration is the best interest of the children.'

Teacher accused of letting cats starve to death claims fear of return to home

Matt · 2 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BOCA RATON - The Congress Middle School teacher accused of letting her two cats starve to death "was the victim of an abusive situation" and her Boca Raton apartment had become "a zone of danger that was real and significant," her attorney said Wednesday in the first statement released on her behalf.

"The State Attorney's Office has accused Ms. Allison Dinsmore of malicious acts that were committed with the intent to cause harm and suffering. This conclusion was not shared by the police agency initially assigned to investigate this matter," Dinsmore's attorney Jordan Lewin wrote in a statement.

"Allison was the victim of an abusive situation in which her former apartment presented a zone of danger that was real and significant," Lewin wrote. "This abuse created a level of distress and anxiety that affected her normal routines and forced her to make abrupt lifestyle changes. Every reasonable effort was made to ensure all of her responsibilities were being taken care of in a way that would keep all of those involved with this situation safe. All of her choices and decisions were made under duress. The miscommunication and errors that led to the unfortunate demise of her pets was a terrible tragedy. These errors were not intentional or purposeful."
...
Dinsmore, who now lives in Miami, is accused of letting her two domestic cats die in her Boca Raton apartment while she said she was busy working and spending time with her boyfriend and family.'

OK, so who was 'abusing' her?

Mother guilty of feeding cocaine to toddler

Matt · 2 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 26-year-old mother has been convicted of steadily giving her toddler cocaine over 14 months, finally administering a near-lethal dose that left him brain-damaged.

"It's difficult to see what would motivate her to give him cocaine, possibly to stop his crying, or to get him to sleep, or to control him. Was it to punish him or to get back at the father?" Justice Tamarin Dunnet said yesterday.

The Scarborough woman, who cannot be named to protect the identity of her son, also intentionally fractured a number of her son's ribs over time and failed to take him to hospital for a broken forearm, the judge said.

Cocaine levels discovered in the 2-year-old in testing at Hospital for Sick Children were so high that if he were an adult, he would be in the top 5 per cent of users, an expert testified.'

Nurse Charged With Injecting 10 Patients With Bleach, Killing 5

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LUFKIN, Texas — A former nurse has been charged with injecting 10 patients with bleach — killing five of them — at a dialysis center in Lufkin.

Kimberly Saenz has been indicted by an Angelina County grand jury on one count of capital murder and five counts of aggravated assault.

She's charged with injecting bleach into the blood stream of her dialysis patients over a span of four weeks last April.

DaVita, which runs the clinic, says the indictments were a "painful reminder" of the deaths that unfolded last year.'

Men take lead at the unemployment line

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's a "he-cession" out there and, man, it's brutal.

Friday's government employment report is expected to bring bad news about job losses in a tough economy. The pain will be worse, however, for one sex more than the other.

To a much greater extent than in past recessions, men are bearing the brunt.

In December 2007, when the economy started tanking, unemployment ran nearly even at 5 percent for men and 4.8 percent for women. In February, that tally had shot up to 8.8 percent for men and 7.3 percent for women, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The 1.5-point spread is historic, and likely to widen as the overall numbers keep soaring, said Mark Perry, an economist at the University of Michigan in Flint: "I don't see it turning yet."'

Mother accused of stabbing, strangling daughter, 2

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother has been accused of stabbing her 2-year-daughter with a scissors last night in Gardner and trying to strangle the child with an electrical cord, police said.

The mother, Susan Johnson, 38, allegedly stabbed the girl in the torso, head, and neck in a laundry room of an apartment building. The child was rushed to Heywood Hospital in Gardner and taken into custody of the Department of Children and Families.

When police arrived at the apartment building, a security guard had pinned Johnson to the floor of the laundry room, keeping her away from her bleeding daughter. Police arrested Johnson on charges that include attempted murder, armed assault with intent to murder, and assault and battery on a child with injury.'

Student paper: 'Men have bodies too!'

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week was Love Your Body Week, which focused on helping women with eating disorders. It's great that these days women can easily find help for their eating disorders when twenty years ago they may have found it more difficult while trying to obtain the perfect figure. However, my question is: What about the guys?

Guys seem to be left out when it comes to respecting and loving their bodies exactly how they are. We seem to think guys have a better self-esteem than women and therefore do not need any help.

Many women strive for the perfect figure and try to accomplish this unrealistic model look by eating less or not eating at all. Plastic surgery or tummy tucks (if one has the money), or even excessively working out to the point of exhaustion and unhealthiness. Don't guys do the same thing?'

MSNBC: ‘I’d trade my husband for a housekeeper’

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

“People are actually less happy today than in the prior generation,” Joshua Coleman, Ph.D., author of The Lazy Husband, explains. “The first problem is expectations. Today we expect our partner to be everything to us. Our workout partner, our coach, our lover, our friend.” The next problem, Dr. Coleman says, is that we tend to enter into marriage with ludicrously overblown notions of what it will be like. We think we’ll have perfect communication; star-aligned value systems; great sex after kids; the perfect house; a long-lasting, healthy, best-friendship marriage... the list goes on and on. And while that’s all really nice, we need to get those visions out of our heads and start talking realistically about marriage if we want to be happy in it. Marriage and motherhood are difficult — but they can also be magical and worthwhile. Counterintuitive as it may seem, we’ve got to start acknowledging real marriage — flawed marriage — if we want to learn to enjoy the marriages we’ve got.
...
Compounding the problem, many of us assumed our husbands had these same rosy expectations of marriage. In reality, many did not. As Bill, a father of two daughters, told us, “I have two little girls, and their favorite stories are about princesses getting married! Guys have a much less romantic view of marriage. When guys talk about marriage, we buy into this idea of ‘giving things up.’ We’re doing our duty. We go into [marriage] automatically thinking the romance is out of it. And I didn’t know it at first. It was a running joke: “Welcome to the team,” and all that. Your pals make fun of you and tell you what it’s really like. And later on you go, ‘Oh, you meant it?’ It’s tough — it’s a lot of work! Guys expect to work. This is just another form of work.”

Women, however, tend to think that finding the right person is the hard part of getting married, not the beginning of a life’s work. As Dr. Pat Covalt, author of What Smart Couples Know, explained to us, “I think what happens is we women are totally unrealistic about love and romance in marriage. We get caught up more in the gown that we’re going to wear than what our conflict management style is.”'

Men raise awareness for domestic abuse by walking in women's shoes

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EVANSVILLE, IN (WFIE) - Some men came out Tuesday night to try and stop domestic violence, rape and other crimes against women, and they did it by putting on heels.

"It's an important issue," U.S.I. student Jon Steiner said. "It's ignored, I think. It doesn't get as much attention as it should."

"This is an opportunity to poke a little fun at us, to have some fun at it and also to replay that adage that says, 'you don't understand my life until you've walked a mile in my shoes,'" Sheriff Eric Williams said.

So, Tuesday afternoon, Sheriff Williams put on some gold pumps and joined a crowd of men as they literally walked a mile in women's shoes.
...
"Men are the perpetrators of a vast majority of these crimes," Williams said.'

Japan Times: 'Women should lead Russia'

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Perhaps this is what modern Russia really needs above all — a woman's touch. The women of Russia could surely do a better job than the backward-looking machismo men who have led it to nowhere. The world badly needs such a Russia, not just for its resources but for its positive influence in building new international institutions to replace the faltering or hollowed out 20th-century structures such as the U.N. Security Council, the International Monetary Fund, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and many others.'

Student paper: "There's no stopping it...men's sports are better than women's sports"

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why do this now, you ask? Because it is always around this time of year when March Madness takes its place at the top of all the sports coverage that a very scattered minority of people choose to question the unequal coverage given to both the male and female basketball tournament.

This annual inquiry is merely a microcosm of a larger occurrence, and this issue deserves to be addressed without a thick layer of sugar-coating poured on top of it.

So what separates the sexes on the playing fields? First, it is public preference of watching the best perform at the highest level of play. People want to see who they perceive as the best of the best play against one another, and that fact does not exclude gender.

Take the WNBA for example. Los Angeles Sparks forward Candace Parker was the first female player that was ever rumored to possibly be capable of playing in the NBA.

However, while she possesses the height to play in the league, she does not have the strength of a center or forward to operate in the paint, nor the quickness or ball handling ability to play either guard position or defend either guard position.'

US News & World Report: Why Women Should Favor Circumcision: To Prevent HPV Infection

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To snip or not? Any parent of an infant son faces this circumcision question; for some, like me, it's a no-brainer. I had my two sons circumcised in accordance with my Jewish faith. Others, though, would like to know if there are any health reasons in favor of circumcision. Well, a study of 5,000 initially uncircumcised Ugandan men in this week's New England Journal of Medicine found that once the men underwent circumcision, their rate acquiring herpes virus infection plunged by 28 percent and they were 35 percent less likely to get infected with human papillomavirus (HPV), which is responsible for genital warts and, in women, cervical cancer.'

UK: Men's midlife cash crisis

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men in their 40s are more likely to suffer a financial crisis than a midlife crisis these days.

Statistics reveal that about 28% of the 106,000 people declared bankrupt or insolvent in 2008 were men aged between 40 and 45.

This means men in their 40s are the most likely group to enter into an individual voluntary agreement (IVA) , say financial advisers Tenon Recovery.

The firm highlighted the South-East, including London, as the UK's IVA hotspot, with 25% of cases coming from the region. Next worse was the Midlands with 18.5% and then the North West with 15.5%.

Tenon director Gill Wrigley says: "As people reach their 40s, any increase in wages over the years is counter-acted by a disproportionate increase in outgoings, such as paying college bills.'

Teacher gets probation for sexual relationship with boy

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CUMBERLAND - A female high-school teacher from Frostburg has been sentenced to five years of unsupervised probation for having sexual contact with a 15-year-old boy.

Twenty-five-year-old Autumn Leathers also must register as a sex offender for her conviction on one count of fourth-degree sex offense.

A one-year jail term was suspended during her appearance Thursday in Allegany County Circuit Court in Cumberland.

Leathers pleaded guilty to the crime in January. In return, the state dropped more serious charges, including child abuse and assault.'

UK: Zero Male Teachers Equals Zero Future Men

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to a recent report, more than a quarter of English children do not have even a single male teacher at their school. For many children, that means they have greatly reduced contact during the day with an adult man until age 11 when they go to secondary school. Children who don't have a father in the home may not have any regular contact with a male role model until they go to secondary school.

The situation is similar in America, and Canada, and Australia—where between 70 to 75 percent of teachers are female.

Why is society robbing young boys of the masculine role models they need?

The lack of male leaders in schools is all the more shameful considering the fact that most of the children going to school come from broken families or families that will one day experience divorce. America has more than 13 million single parents raising more than 21 million children. More than four out of five of those custodial parents are mothers.
...
Many educators, especially feminist teachers, claim that a teacher's gender makes no difference in how students learn. But even this claim is false.'

Men's depression expected to increase as economy declines

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Pity the men, for there is nothing manly about depression.

Every belief a man holds about his masculinity is attacked by depression — his physical strength, sexual prowess and ability to provide and protect. All the traits that our society says makes a man manly.

Worse, most men do not know what's hit them. The symptoms of depression in men are so different than in women that many men are emotionally blindsided.

If asking for directions is difficult, imagine asking for help with your feelings.

'There is a huge amount of stigma for men,' said Michael Addis, head of the Men's Coping Project, a study funded by the National Institutes of Health. 'Depression is seen as a personal weakness and a character flaw.'

Because many men define success by their bank accounts, experts expect to see more depression in men — and more suicide."

Michelle Obama at UK Girls School: 'You are the women that will build the world as it should be'

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Who caused all the shrieking at the Elizabeth Garrett Anderson Language School in London today?

A surprise visit from English soccer star David Beckham? Pop boy band, the Jonas Brothers?

No, that was First Lady Michelle Obama sparking a frenzy at the all-girls school, where she spoke about the importance of education, explained why being smart is cool and even shared a little girl talk about her courtship with her husband, President Obama.

...

“By getting a good education you too can create your own destiny. I never cut class. I like being smart. I thought being smart was the coolest thing in the world,” she said. “You are the women that will build the world as it should be and that's why a good education is so important.”'

UK: Divorcing Man Pays 105 Percent Of Assets

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LONDON, England (CNN) -- A British court Wednesday told a business financier he would still have to pay a $13.6 million divorce settlement despite losing a fortune in the credit crunch.

Brian Myerson had told the UK Court of Appeal that instead of receiving £14.6 million ($21 million) from a division of his assets, he would now be £½ million out of pocket, according to the UK Press Association.

The court rejected his appeal, saying the "natural process of price fluctuation, however dramatic" did not justify changing the settlement, PA reported.

Under the original settlement made last year, Myerson, the former CEO of Principle Capital Holdings, was ordered to pay 43% of his then total £25.8m assets to his wife.

Lawyers for Myerson said because of the economic downturn, the wife's share of the total assets under the order would now be 105% and the husband's would be -5%.'

"Good Morning America": Ad on DV causes consternation, but no mention of male DV victims

Matt · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Not a single word about male DV victims. The show's feedback form is here. They really need to hear from us on this topic, so please take the time to voice your opinions. This show is watched by over 4.5 million people every morning.

DOJ stats can be found at http://www.ojp.usdoj.gov/bjs/intimate/offender.htm

Open Season on Men in Oklahoma

Belgorod · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A new law has passed in the Oklahoma State Legislature, authorizing the use of deadly force by women, to protect their unborn children. So gentlemen, if you have a nasty argument with your baby-mama, you could end up dead while your murderer gets off Scott-free. Excerpt:

'The bill stems from a Michigan case where a woman who was carrying quadruplets stabbed and killed her boyfriend after he hit her in the stomach. The woman lost the babies and was convicted of manslaughter.

Oklahoma lawmakers said they want to make sure that a woman can legally protect her unborn child.

"Unfortunately, we feel we need legislation like this," said Rep. Mike Thompson. "What we want to make sure is that a woman feels safe and secure defending herself and her unborn child against any attacker."'

Father 4 Justice USA News Flash - "Spiderman" and "Superman" to appear in court

Matt · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Donald Tenn and Paul Fisher (Spiderman and Superman) will appear before a jury on Monday April 13th, 2008, in Columbus, Ohio.

Despite there being no physical damages, and no intent to cause harm to the structure in question, (the prerequisites for vandalism), the pair have been indicted for felony level vandalism. If found guilty the duo could spend up to eighteen months in prison.

The charges stem from the September 29th, 2008 crane protest on The Ohio State University campus.

http://www.f4j.com/

UK: Should all women be screened for domestic violence?

anthony · 3 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A screening programme which would require doctors and nurses to ask all women whether they have experienced domestic violence, whatever their reason for seeking medical attention, is not justified, according to a new report by researchers at the University of Bristol, funded by the National Institute for Health Research Health Technology Assessment (NIHR HTA) programme.
...
One proposal for improving care has been a policy whereby all women, regardless of their reason for seeking medical attention, are asked by doctors and nurses if they have experienced domestic violence. This is called screening and has been effective in other areas, for example in detecting thyroid disease in babies and raised blood pressure in adults.'

"Mother hit hard in custody case"

anthony · 4 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Toronto judge has taken the drastic step of finding a mother of three in contempt of court for flagrantly violating court orders during her relentless campaign to alienate her children from their father.

The woman, known as K.D., lost custody of her daughters in January, but this latest ruling takes the case to a new level, with the 42-year-old chiropodist finding herself on the losing side of a power struggle with the court.

The mother intentionally acted against the best interests of her children by cutting off telephone calls and visits with their father and walking out of counselling sessions, Justice Faye McWatt said in a decision released earlier but withheld from publication until today so K.D., who is self-represented, could read it first.

She has been ordered to pay $35,000 in penalties and legal costs to her ex-husband, 56, a vascular surgeon known as A.L., who was also granted permission to take the girls to a U.S. therapy program designed to undo damage caused by parents who poison children against another parent.'

CS Monitor asks: "What if women ran the world?"

anthony · 4 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'San Francisco - It is getting harder to escape the sense that most of the trouble in the world – whether it's coming out of the Senate, a mortgage lender, or a tank turret – can be traced to one overriding problem: too many men steering. Had our economic, domestic, and foreign policy been more informed by women, we might be enjoying a safer ride.

Doubt it? Here's a test. Would any of the women you admire have set up a healthcare system as byzantine, costly, and underperforming as America's? Or a financial system where mortgage lenders don't have to care about being paid back? Or a bailout that spends $1 trillion in public money to subsidize the purchase of junk debt from the same geniuses that generated it?

It may be time for guys to hand over the keys, ask for directions, and sit (quietly, please) in the back seat for a while.'

World Net Daily: "Selective feminism"

anthony · 4 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But feminists are selective in their advocacy. They hate femininity (which they see as weakness) and loath women who choose traditional roles (try voicing support of housewives in any college women's studies course and see what happens). Stay-at-home moms are seen as traitors to the Cause.
...
Modern feminism has become little more than collective whining from women who never are, and never can be, satisfied until … I dunno, they have world domination or something.
...
Feminists do not just want equal opportunity, which already exists. They want equal outcome – equal numbers of men and women in all fields, most especially the male-dominated, high-paying fields such as engineering, mathematics and the physical sciences. (I don't see them clamoring for equal representation in such dangerous fields as mining, logging, taxi driving, or even farming.) No, only a high status career – as defined by feminists – will do, thank you.'

Motorcycle dealer to host party for women only

anthony · 4 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'To help, Cole Harley-Davidson in Bluefield will host a free, women-only Harley-Davidson Garage Party event at their dealership, 1804 Bland St., Friday from 6 to 9 p.m.

The party provides an inviting environment for women to learn more about motorcycling and to meet other women who are interested in riding, Davidson said.

“Party guests can expect activities that will be both entertaining and informational with topics including a review of the basic motorcycle controls, how to customize a motorcycle’s ergonomics and how to choose proper riding gear,” she said.'

Women's Center now open to men, families

anthony · 4 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'VINELAND -- The city's women's health center will now lend a hand to more than just women and expectant mothers.

The Vineland Women's Health Center expanded its services this month to include primary care and family services to men and women of all age groups.

The Brewster Road facility, formerly known as Vineland OBGYN, was originally a private practice specializing in obstetrics and gynecology. After pairing with nonprofit group Community Health Care Inc. last June, the practice now offers a wider range of care and serves patients with private insurance, no insurance, or low income.'

NOW Press Release: Lawmakers Must Rethink Violence Against Women as a Hate Crime

anthony · 4 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Given the history of violence against women we cannot deny that women are in a class by themselves, discriminated against, hated, used, disrespected and abused. Any form of violence against women is a hate crime, including "domestic violence." In a 1998 article titled "Rethinking Violence Against Women as Hate Crimes" by Ann Noel she states "domestic violence is often viewed as an individual dispute between a man and a woman, or the pathological problem of a particular man. Yet domestic violence reveals deep historical, cultural and legal roots to subordinate women. Men who assault their wives are living up to cherished Western cultural prescriptions -- aggressiveness, male dominance, and female subordination and they are using physical force as a means to enforce that dominance. Taking these crimes out of the realm of the individual and into the collective realm requires looking at how our society sanctions men's control of women."

UK: Soldier stigmatized as "more likely to be violent" because of his gender and occupation

Anonymous · 5 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Sitting in his mother-in-law's living room, Matthew Dean's eyes widened in shock as he listened to what his social worker was telling him.

Because he was a man and a soldier - accustomed to fighting for Britain in war-torn countries - he was, they said, more likely to be of a violent disposition, and therefore more capable of abusing his baby son, Louie.
...
t is a sad and worrying saga - and one that seems to be becoming all too familiar - of overzealous social workers acting on a flimsy diagnosis and ultimately tearing an innocent family apart.

Their agony ended last November when Portsmouth High Court decided that they should be reunited with Louie - by now 15 months old and a healthy little boy - and, finally, left alone.'

Call it an education crisis

anthony · 5 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Mundt heard a radio interview with author Leonard Sax, an expert in the different ways boys and girls develop, he suspected Duluth was part of a bigger problem — a “worldwide problem,” he said in a meeting with the News Tribune editorial board.

Sax and others argue that children are being pressured at an earlier age to read, that the part of a boy’s brain that grasps words and letters doesn’t develop as quickly as in girls, that boys are growing frustrated with books as a result and disengaging from school. More boys are being given mood- or behavior-altering medications, and, by high school, the argument goes, they care more about video games than class work. As adults, they return home to live with their parents.'

Double standard?

anthony · 5 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"In the past year, a dozen women have been in Valley courtrooms on charges of sexually abusing minors. They range in age from 20 to 40; their victims from 12 to 17. Each woman was at least five years older than the boy or girl.

Local prosecutors and counselors aren't sure what to make of the apparent increase, but they see interesting differences between male and female offenders - in the nature of the cases, in the severity of punishment and, especially, in the way the abusers and their victims are viewed by the people around them.

"There's an enormous public perception problem," said Jean Fisher, who prosecutes sex abuse cases for Ada County. "If the boy's under 14, people might say 'poor little fellow,' but with a 16- or 17-year-old boy, you're more likely to hear, 'Oh, man, he got lucky!'"

India: A serial misuser of dowry law gets arrested bharati · 6 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Finally a women gets arrested but after she has blackmailed and extorted 10 men. Story here and here. Please note that this businessman brought this to light by hiring private detectives and had lost his finger due to violence by his wife. She earned 20 million rupess this way, a huge sum that can take of at least 5 people for life. I find it most obnoxious that 10 husbands earlier rewarded her for her behaviour instead of fighting it out. Excerpt:

'A 32-year-old woman and her parents were arrested on Saturday by the Sion police for allegedly cheating a city businessmen over the last 18 years.

The police said Bangalore-based Kausar Begam used to cheat people by marrying them and fleeing with their money and valuables. The, she used to register complaints of dowry harassment cases against her husbands. Begam's parents Iqbal Pasha and Gulnaz, who had been allegedly assisting her, have also been remanded in police custody till April 8.'

Children harmed by sole custody

Matt · 6 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Family court judges are misguidedly harming children by granting sole custody to one parent – usually the mother – in bitter divorce battles, says a comprehensive new report.

Too many children are being "robbed of the love of one parent" by a legal system that is out of touch with the needs of children and treats them like property to be won or lost, says Edward Kruk, an expert on child custody issues.

"The system is set up to polarize parents, to make them enemies, to set up fights over custody and exacerbate conflict rather than reduce it," says Kruk, an associate professor of social work at the University of British Columbia, whose three-year study is now in the hands of Canada's justice minister.'

Mother who dumped baby wins appeal

Matt · 6 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who abandoned her baby in a railway station toilet cubicle has walked free from court after successfully arguing that sending her to jail was too strict a sentence.

Lisa Randall, 26, left her eight-month-old son in a cubicle at Bristol Temple Meads station. On Monday, Torquay Magistrates sentenced her to four months in prison for abandoning her child in a way which was likely to cause him "unnecessary suffering".

But yesterday at Exeter Crown Court, her defence argued she felt "threatened and intimidated" in prison and was afraid of the reaction from other inmates if they found out why she was jailed.'

Your tax dollars at work: "Feminist Research Education Development and Action Centre"

Matt · 6 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S.:

Take a look at what stands between your Canadian brothers and truth, justice and equality. And just imagine, all of this is funded by the taxpayer. So we pay for our own feminist propaganda to be used against us. And this is just one organization. Look at the 'More Information' links. And we have nothing to counter it. From the 'About' page:

'* What is FREDA?
FREDA is one of five violence research centres across the country that were established in 1992 through a five year grant from Health Canada and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada (SSHRC). Since its inception, the Centre's mandate has been to facilitate and conduct research on violence against women and children, in order to raise awareness and effect policy.

* How is FREDA funded?
Until 1997, the FREDA Centre was funded from the initial grant provided by Health Canada and the SSHRC. Since then, the Centre has been operating on the basis of project-specific grants and is currently funded by Simon Fraser University (SFU) and the University of British Columbia (UBC).'

Fathers 4 Justice (USA) April 6th 2009 Action Alert

Matt · 6 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

It is time for the united front of Fathers-4-Justice and all of its supporters to inform Prosecuting Attorney, Ron O'Brian, and his staff that we do not agree with his “Nifong” type application of the law in the cases, “ Ohio vs. Paul Fisher” aka Superman and “ Ohio vs. Donald Tenn” aka Spiderman.

It has been asked that you call (614) 462-3555 and ask for Ron O'Brian between 9:00 AM and 2:00 PM eastern time. If he is unavailable, leave a message and request a return call.

As always, be polite and courteous. With the volume of calls expected, you will most likely be talking to over-worked secretaries, please be considerate.

Our message is simple:

Inform them that you will be watching these cases, and that you will be notifying other public officials of your disapproval of the conduct of Ron O’Brian’s administration. Also, state that you are displeased with the severity of the charges and feel this entire charade is wasting taxpayer dollars. It is self-evident that there was no malice or intent to cause harm. The demonstration was peaceful and brought much needed attention to government policies that are harming America 's families and children.

If you do not receive a return call, please call everyday until you do, or until the verdict has been reached on April 13th.

This is your opportunity to take a stand against the "war on fatherhood."

More info here.

UK Guardian: "Women's refuges told they must admit men"

Matt · 6 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Charities for battered women have been threatened with the loss of their funding unless they help male victims of domestic violence, under new equality laws.

Women's Aid, the domestic violence charity whose patrons include the prime minister's wife, Sarah Brown, says its female-only services are essential to reassure battered women and children that they will be safe. However, some local authorities are demanding that services such as counselling and outreach be opened to both sexes.

Fiona Mactaggart, the former Home Office minister, said some refuge services had lost grants or contracts in what she said was an "unintended consequence" of changes in equality law.

"There are some local authorities who interpret equalities to mean that a refuge has to provide for men, not only for women," said Mactaggart, co-chair of the women's parliamentary Labour party, a grouping of female MPs. "There are some stupidnesses developing in the system that nobody intended."

Although 15% of men say they have been physically assaulted by a partner, according to the most recent British Crime Survey, the extent to which men suffer domestic violence is disputed. Surveys have suggested that many allegations of being assaulted by women are made by men facing prosecution for domestic violence.
...
Mactaggart wants ministers to resolve the problems unwittingly created by the so-called gender equality duty, which requires local authorities to ensure that services do not discriminate on grounds of sex. The Government Equalities Office said councils were being overzealous about the new duty, adding: "This cannot be an excuse [for cutting services]. This interpretation of the duty is law."'

Submission for women to be able to provide video evidence in DV cases

GaryB · 6 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

In Australia, this story appears on the Sydney Morning Herald site. Except:

'POLICE should be able to use initial video evidence given by victims, rather than written statements, to better show in court the effects of domestic violence, an independent MP says.

Legally classing the victims as "vulnerable" would allow police to replace written statements with the raw video, Richard Torbay said as part of a campaign for his New England constituents who had been abused.

"This is something that I believe needs to be done if we are serious about domestic violence," he told the Herald.

The change could encourage perpetrators to plead guilty, avoiding the need for their victims to face them in court, experts said.'

So how much of a chance do you think the guy stands now? Not only does he have to face a charge of DV that is almost impossible to defend (how do you prove you DIDN'T act threateningly or hit?), not only does he have to face the fact that the entire court system is biased against him - after all, he's a MAN, that most hated of violent species - but now the judge and jury get to watch his ex breaking down and sobbing and telling of the complete horror she endured - before he even gets a chance to defend himself. I predict this guy is right, many more men WILL plead guilty - because they won't stand a hope of getting off even when they didn't do it!!!

But the most hilarious bit comes further down, quote: "But if video evidence would make it harder for victims to recant their statements to police, the issue could be contentious, Ms Braaf said. If victims were not afforded discretion, they might avoid the courts. "They are not going to seek justice, they are going to seek some other kind of remedy," Dr Braaf said."

So this move would make it easier for women to screw men over, BUT it might make it harder for them to change their minds later on. Hmm. What a dilemma the poor things face....

UK: Estranged wife jailed for falsely accusing husband of sex attack

anthony · 6 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man has told of the pain and humiliation he endured when his estranged wife falsely accused him of rape.

Anthony Scoones, 27, spoke out after Gemma Scoones was jailed for a year for perverting the course of justice.
...
His clothes were taken for forensic examination and he was left naked so that DNA samples could be taken. Mr Scoones said: 'I wasn't just stripped of my clothes, but of my dignity. I was stood there naked, with two police officers at one side of me and a doctor at the other side, having swabs taken from all over my body.
...
Durham Crown Court heard that she told police Mr Scoones followed her home from a shop, forced his way into the house and raped her in a downstairs toilet.

She claimed she was hurt but had not been able to call police immediately because he threatened to petrol-bomb her house.

It was only after discrepancies emerged in a police interview with her that Mr Scoones was told he was in the clear and his ex-wife was charged with committing an act intended to pervert the course of justice.'

Canada: Sask. teacher charged with sexual assault of teen student

anthony · 6 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SASKATOON — A female teacher in northern Saskatchewan is charged with sexual assault after allegedly having a relationship with a 15-year-old male student.

Michelle Marie Francoeur, 37, is charged with one count each of sexual touching, sexual exploitation and sexual assault against the unnamed teen and will make her first court appearance Jan. 27 in Spiritwood, Sask. She was released from custody on an undertaking shortly after the charges were laid.

The charges stem from a Dec. 3 complaint stating Francoeur had an "inappropriate sexual relationship" with the boy between Sept. 1 and Nov. 30, 2008, according to an RCMP media release Friday.'

RADAR ALERT: Teed Off About Wasteful VAWA Spending? Have a Tea Party!

Matt · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This April 15th citizens will gather at Tax Day TEA Party rallies in front of city halls all across the country to express their outrage at Congress' wasteful spending. (http://teapartyday.com/)

Like most of the population, the majority of attendees will never have heard of VAWA (the Violence Against Women Act), VOCA (the Victims of Crime Act), or FVPSA (the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act).

But unlike most of the population, this is a motivated group that would be outraged if they knew that through these acts, Congress squanders $1 billion of our tax dollars each year on domestic violence programs that don't solve the problem of domestic violence. And they'd be even more outraged to learn that what we actually get for our $1 billion per year are provisions – slipped into these laws under the radar without any debate – that undermine the very principles of justice that are an essential part of the foundation of any free society. What our annual $1 billion buys us is a heartless system that penalizes millions of innocent people each year, and does so with impunity.

Please plan to attend the TEA party rally in your area on April 15th so you can educate the other attendees on why they should speak out about the harm Congress funds under these laws. Take lots of copies of the flyer at http://www.mediaradar.org/docs/RADARflyer-TeaParty-April15.pdf with you to distribute at the rally. To find where the rally will be held in your area, go to http://teapartyday.com/Locations.aspx.

++++++

Parental alienation syndrome leaves bruises deep inside

Matt · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the end, it was one tiny voice that silenced anyone who still had doubts that parental alienation is real and one of the most insidious forms of child abuse.

The voice wasn't real – Dashiell Hart opened his arms wide and threw himself off a Vancouver bridge eight years ago at the age of 16.

But his voice was brought to life at a Toronto conference by his devastated mother, Pamela Richardson, who endured a 12-year court battle with her ex-husband to try to win back the heart and mind of her son.

Dash was just one tiny soldier in the growing army of children who are becoming collateral damage in bitter battles between ex-spouses that are overwhelming Canada's divorce courts, the first Canadian Symposium for Parental Alienation Syndrome (PAS) heard recently in Toronto'

Voices from the Grave, Betrayed by a Restraining Order

Matt · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Debi Olson had three restraining orders taken out against her. But that didn't stop the woman from ambushing ex-husband Mauricio Droguett in an Iowa shopping mall last July, fatally stabbing him in front of shocked mall-goers.

Toni Brown of Washington, DC was shot by former girlfriend Raina Johnson on August 12, 2008, leaving the woman paralyzed from her neck down. Johnson is currently serving a 28-year sentence for a crime the judge termed "extraordinarily brutal." A restraining order had been previously issued against the assailant.

Karen Allende of New York City was walking to work on a September day in 2006 when she was attacked suddenly by her husband. She died that morning on the sidewalk, a restraining order folded neatly in her purse.
...
Judge Milton Raphaelson of Massachusetts once opined, "Few lives, if any, have been saved, but much harm, and possibly loss of lives, has come from the issuance of restraining orders and the arrests and conflicts ensuring therefrom."

Each year, the Violence Against Women Act spends up to $75 million to promote restraining orders. That's the kind of wasteful federal program that leaves a bad taste in taxpayers' mouths.'

Father's web site a good example

Matt · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Web site here. "Dedicated to Madison Nicole Tenn" -- This man had his daughter abducted by her mother from their home and he hasn't seen her since.

This kind of site is important because not only does it raise the chance that the perpetrator will be caught and a father-and-child reunion will occur, but it also helps personalize the experiences of the people in question. It highlights the problem of under-enforcement of equal rights when the mother is the perpetrator and the father the victim in a parental child-abduction case such as this.

Ireland: 'Feminists demand equality, but women and children come first'

anthony · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If there is a coherent moral order to the present thoughts of the National Women's Council, it is that words no longer mean what they used to. In the Council's prospectus for the year 2009, the word "equality" is used 38 times. Yet clearly, in the sisters' deviant vocabulary, "equality" does not mean equality of pain, or hardship or suffering or poverty. No: it means the opposite of equality. It means a protection from these conditions, regardless of what men are enduring. In other words, lifeboat-feminism, surely the most ignoble and unprincipled of all the many liberal political creeds which dominate our ethos today.'

Murdered Man Victim Of Domestic Abuse

anthony · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'UNDATED -- A Sand Springs man, who was murdered last month, had been a battered spouse for years. When men are the victims of abuse, they rarely admit it, talk about it or get help and Jimmy Weaver's case ended in tragedy.
...
Jimmy's mother says he was a loving father and skilled carpenter, but developed a drinking problem and married a woman who had one of her own. Records show Deborah Weaver grew violent when she drank and often took it out on her husband and two young daughters.

Jimmy filed several protective orders against her over the years. Once he wrote, "she pushed me off the porch, then hit me in the mouth and pulled my hair."
...
Deborah Weaver was convicted in December of domestic violence on Jimmy and is in jail charged with killing Jimmy on March 26th. He'd been shot in the chest and his face had also been beaten.'

Oprah School Locked Up Students

Matt · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

' FOUR students claim they were kept in solitary confinement for two weeks before being expelled from the Oprah Leadership Academy for Girls in South Africa, amid allegations of sexual misconduct.

The girls, who were among seven pupils accused of forcing fellow students into sexual relationships and engaging in bullying and harassment, told a South African newspaper of how they were treated before being sent home.
...
A 15-year-old confirmed physical contact between students.

"If they say I was touching other learners, it's true," she told The Star.

In her defense, she said, "No one complained to me about it. Obviously if you touch someone, if they are uncomfortable, they will tell you."

On March 26, security guards told the girls to pack their things. They were each allowed monitored goodbyes with three friends for five minutes. Clothes, phones and shoes given to students by the school were taken back.'

Advice to the Queen of Foreskin Harvesting herself: Get out of the education business. It's a no-win scenario.

Author of "Afraid to Go Home" gets Kindle distribution

Matt · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Someone writing under the name Baden Hill has penned a book entitled "Afraid to Go Home", now for sale also on Amazon.com as a downloadable Kindle book. His (her?) stated reason for seeking to sell it as a Kindle book is because it may be that if an abusive husband caught his wife with the print version, it would probably lead to her being beat up (see the full second "press release" below). Excerpt from the first "press release":

'AFRAID TO GO HOME, a 420 page paperback, is about a White, middle-class, educated, female executive who is taken advantage of at work by the Good Ol' Boys, and is trapped in a violent relationship which she can't free herself and her children from at home.

"One of the reasons I wrote this book," says Baden Hill, the author, "is that I wanted to de-bunk the myth that domestic violence is primarily a problem of minorities and youth."
...
Sadly, all studies confirm, the vast majority of cases of violence against women are never reported, with the victims not calling the police because they consider the violence to be a "private matter."

"This is a problem that doesn't get the attention it deserves," says the author. "I hope that publishing a book, such as this one, will help the victims realize that they are not alone and that help is available to them."'

Interestingly I was not able to find a web site for the publishing company, "Tristan/Isolde Publishing". However the full "press release" about the book's Kindle format is below; I could not find it on-line anywhere either but received it as a forwarded note from a MANN reader. There is contact information there.

The amount of misinformation and debunked statistics as well as the total lack of any discussion, so much as a mere mention, of male DV victims, is stunning. But no surprise when there's money to be made. By the way, I am skeptical of the name of the author. That is, I think it may be a "pen name". If nothing else, Baden Hill is the name of a glacier-formed sediment protrusion near Baden, Ontario. I don't mean to speculate too much but perhaps the author is a Canadian feminist? Wouldn't surprise me at all.

=====

AFRAID TO GO HOME,
A Novel About Violence Against Women,
Now Available on Amazon's Kindle

(Redondo Beach, CA, April 6, 2009, 2009) – Tristan/Isolde Publishing, a new imprint devoted to examining relationships between men and women, announced, today, that its latest book, AFRAID TO GO HOME, is now available on Amazon's Kindle

AFRAID TO GO HOME, a 420 page paperback, is a novel about a White, middle-class, educated, female executive who is taken advantage of at work by the Good Ol' Boys, and is trapped in a violent relationship she can't free herself and her children from at home.

"This is significant," says Baden Hill, the author, "many women who are living in difficult circumstances are not able to read a copy of AFRAID TO GO HOME at home for fear of creating an outburst, and possibly greater violence. By being able to read the book on an iPhone, iPod Touch or Kindle, a woman can feel more secure that her reading selection won't be discovered."

The episodes of violence depicted in the book are drawn from both discussions the author had with victims, as well as from stories posted on the internet, usually by the victims themselves, but often by the perpetrators of the violence who wanted to "confess" what they had done.

There is no shortage of police and U.S. Justice Department statistics that prove that this is a problem for all of society:

• One in three women will report physical or sexual abuse by a husband or boyfriend at some point in their lives.

• Four million American women experience a serious assault by a partner during an average 12-month period.

• Everyday in America, on average, 3 women are murdered by their husbands or boyfriends.

• Approximately 73% of the female victims of violence are White and between 25 and 54 years of age.

Sadly, all studies confirms, the vast majority of cases of violence against women are never reported, with the victims claiming they didn't call the police because the violence is a "private matter" and 12% of the victims even say that they don't report the violence to "protect the offender."

"This is a problem that doesn't get the attention it deserves," says the author. "I hope that publishing a book, such as this one, will help the victims realize that they are not alone and that help is available to them."

AFRAID TO GO HOME, which retails for $19.99 in hardcopy and $9.99 in the Kindle version, is available online and at bookstores nationwide.

Tristan/Isolde Publishing is the continuation of a Southern California-based publishing family that began in 1986. The new imprint will be focusing on literary fiction on the subject of male/female relationships.

***

For more information contact:
Steve Roth, VP Publicity afraid.to.go.home-at-gmail.com

UK: Founder of women-only-as-employees company recounts results

Anonymous · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Excellent article here, written by a female boss who thought it would be a good idea to set up an all female business... BIG mistake, as she now realizes. Excerpt:

'Over in one corner sat Alice, a strong-minded 27-year-old who always said what she thought, regardless of how much it might hurt someone else. In the other corner was Sarah, a thirtysomething high-flier who would stand up for herself momentarily - then burst into tears and run for the ladies.

Their simmering fight lasted hours, egged on by spectators taking sides and fuelling the anger. Sometimes other girls would join in, either heckling aggressively or huddling defensively in the toilets. It might sound like a scene from a tawdry reality show such as Big Brother, but the truth is a little more prosaic: it was just a normal morning in my office.

The venomous women were supposedly the talented employees I had headhunted to achieve my utopian dream - a female- only company with happy, harmonious workers benefiting from an absence of men.

It was an idealistic vision swiftly shattered by the nightmare reality: constant bitchiness, surging hormones, unchecked emotion, attention-seeking and fashion rivalry so fierce it tore my staff apart.

When I read the other day that Sienna Miller had said there was no such thing as 'the Sisterhood', I knew what she meant.

...

In hindsight, I should have learned the lessons of my past - at my mixed secondary school I was bullied by a gang of nasty, name-calling girls, so I knew only too well how nasty groups of women could become.

And working in TV, I'd met lots of super-competitive 'door-slammers' who'd do anything to get to the top. But I told myself that, with the right women, work could be wonderful.

So, in April 2005, I left my job, remortgaged my house - freeing up close to £100,000 - and began paying myself just £700 a month to set up this utopian business. Having worked extremely hard for 12 years, I had lots of experience and a good reputation. What could go wrong?'

Grieving Parents Lose Thousands To Con Artist

teriincali · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Whether by disease, accident, murder or suicide, losing a child is one of the worst experiences a person could face. Another tragedy that ranks at the top of the list is having a missing child. Strangers abduct a small percentage of these children. Most are abducted by one of their parents.

There's one type of parental child abduction that doesn't get much attention. It happens when one parent uses the legal system to postpone or eliminate any chance of the other parent spending time with the children. One way is by claiming fear of domestic violence. Studies now show that sixty to eighty percent of allegations of domestic violence are later found to be unnecessary or false.

...

As described in Defiant Dads, most of these people are knowledgeable, sincere, and generous with their advice and encouragement. Unfortunately this is not true of everyone a parent might come across in the online community, which is often called the fathers' movement, the family rights movement or the equal parenting movement. One man who has taken advantage of these vulnerable parents is Torm Howse, creator of the website UnitedCivilRights.org.'

Bridget's Law: Lies Without Consequences?

anthony · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BRIDGET Marks says her nasty custody battle with a philandering ex-lover has transformed her from a buxom nude model into a full-blown political activist.

...

Last year, the former Playboy pin-up, now 43, got state Assemblyman Jonathan Bing and Sen. Tom Duane (both D-Manhattan) to craft "Bridget's Law," which protects parents from being penalized in custody cases for making "good-faith efforts" to protect their kids from child abuse. It was signed into law by Gov. Paterson.

"And with the help of Congresswoman Carolyn Maloney*, we'll have a national 'Bridget's Law' in the foreseeable future," Marks told us. "It's a silent national crisis of women losing their children for no good reason. I've been contacted by thousands of women from as far away as Australia."

Five years ago, Marks lost custody of twin daughters Amber and Scarlett, now 9, in a battle with gambling tycoon John Aylsworth. The court found Marks had coached the girls to lie that Aylsworth had molested them and poisoned their relationship with him. An appeals court returned the girls to Marks in 2005, saying what she'd done was "abhorrent," but there no reason to remove the kids from her custody. The fight with Aylsworth, who impregnated Marks while he was married (Marks says she didn't know he had a wife) nearly bankrupted her.'

---

*Hyperlink of name not part of original article.

Woman, 64, Accused Of Assaulting Man, 72, With Car

Matt · 7 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'David Gorn, 72, was leaving a diner Monday night when Harris allegedly confronted him and accused him of abusing a turtle.

Police later said it was a decorative item -- a porcelain turtle if you will that she claims was damaged.

But Harris' lawyer said it was an actual pet turtle.
...
Whatever the case, after the argument, cops said Harris grabbed his keys and took off in her car. Harris drove right next door to an adjacent parking lot and Gorn followed desperate to get his car keys back.

Cops said that's when she assaulted him with her Honda Accord, allegedly striking Gorn once, waiting for him to get up, and then hitting him again.
...
Harris' lawyer said she's ready to fight the assault charges.

"There's two sides to every story and she looks forward to telling her side," Seeger said.

Harris left court under orders not to contact the ex-boyfriend, who is recovering with a head injury.'

Melbourne dad finds kidnapped sons and shows up Swedish cops patriotsofamerica · 8 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I figured a good-news story was in order. A father reunited with his two boys. Excerpt:

"A MELBOURNE father's speedy rescue of his two kidnapped sons has embarrassed Swedish police, who struggled with the case for six months.

Armed with just a pair of binoculars and a rental car, it took the dad only one week to find his missing sons, aged 11 and ten, in Sweden.

"It is a genuine failing mark to the work of the police," columnist Lars Lindstrom wrote in the Swedish newspaper Expressen.

"(The father) went on leave, flew from Melbourne to Sweden and found them in a week. How did that happen?""

'All My Thoughts On Colleen Stan' (Why Men Get Prison and Women Get Probation)

lostcauser · 8 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'On May 19, 1977, 20-year-old Colleen Stan was hitchhiking in California and accepted a ride from a young couple with a baby; Janice and Cameron Hooker had come to an agreement that if Janice could have a child, Cameron could find a woman to whip and torture, as long as he promised never to have intercourse with her.

Back at the Hooker's home, Cameron put Colleen in a three-foot square, cubed box and for the next seven years the Hookers and Colleen lived in a single-wide house trailer in Red Bluff, California. Eventually Cameron Hooker moved the box under the bed he shared with Janice, and later, after signing a slave contract, Colleen was allowed to roam about, go into town and shop, and visit her family, unescorted, in another state.

...

Stockholm Syndrome is a response sometimes seen in cases of abduction in which the hostage shows signs of loyalty to the hostage-taker, in spite of the apparent danger in which they have been placed. The Compliant Victim theory was introduced into law enforcement lingo through a FBI study of the female partners of practicing sexual sadists. The authors of this study, FBI profiler Roy Hazelwood and forensic psychiatrist Dr. Park Dietz, concluded that these women acted criminally in concert with violent men because they were psychologically predisposed to submission.

...

Gender is far more likely to determine the penalty one pays for breaking the law than age or race: Cameron Hooker was sentenced to a total of 100 years in prison for sexual assault, kidnapping and various weapons charges; having been declared a "Dangerous Offender" Paul Bernardo will in all likelihood remain in solitary isolation for the term of his natural life. Janice Hooker and Karla Homolka lessened their culpability by testifying against their respective spouses, and the following narrative is my humble attempt to explain precisely why this dynamic of gender disparity is at best, illogical.

...

So, thanks just the same, Agent Hazelwood and Dr. Dietz, but coming up with a theory that makes women less accountable for their actions than men is about as helpful as placing us on a pedestal by putting your hand up our skirt. I'm not just so hopped about the idea of going to prison for something, but as an adult woman, it's insulting to be thought as a child, or an idiot, or worse, as an idiot child. Colleen Stan had many chances to free herself from the Hooker's clutches, and toward the end had apparently become quite smitten with Cameron Hooker; Karla Homolka and Janice Hooker swore in court their spouses had beaten them into submission, yet both found the strength to abandon their husbands when it was suspiciously and legally convenient.'

Why Some Mothers Kill Their Children

Matt · 8 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rachel Summers, a Mufreesboro Tennessee woman is accused of poisoning her her own son to death. A 19 year old Cuban native, Mariafelix Morales is accused of killing the son she secretly gave birth to in her Shelbyville Tennessee home. Even in rural areas like these youll find these headlines. Although it seems unnatural for a woman to kill her own children it is not uncommon. More than 200 women kill their children in the US every year, according to a recent study by the American Anthropological Association.

Homicide is the leading cause of death in children under four. Not crib death as many believe and not by a maniacal stranger but by a parent. Deliberate killing of ones own infant has never been observed in wild primates. There is a direct correlation between the act and the human society. Women, for the most part, do not make the best criminals. FBI crime statistics show that women commit only two crimes as frequently as men. Shoplifting and the murder of their own children. Although women commit less than 13% of all violent crimes they are also responsible for about 50% of all parental murders.
...

Historically, the families survival is pivotal to the sacrifice of weaker children or female children. Infanticide has always soared in counties riddled with famine or during political unrest. African women on board slave ships killed their children. The amount of these cases will continue to grow each year until societal norms maintain that this is not rare behavior. Mother love is not universal. All women are not natural loving mothers. Nor does motherhood trump all illnesses and psychosis.'

No mention at all of other possible motivations... such as selfishness. And even if so many infanticides done by mothers are driven by psychological issues, why not say the same if the perp is the father? Arguably anyone who murders an infant is insane in some way. But it seems the sex of the killer decides whether or not they are treated as murderers or patients.

Australia: Third round of National Men's Health Policy consultation forums announced

Matt · 8 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

Wednesday April 8, 2009

The Australian Government has announced the dates for the third round of community consultation forums for its National Men's Health Policy, this time in Perth, Kalgoorlie, Whyalla, Adelaide, Geelong and Melbourne. We encourage you to circulate this email widely and attend the forum closest to you to let your views about men's health issues be heard.'

Woman Murders Son at Shooting Range, Commits Suicide

Matt · 9 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Caption: "A security video from inside a gun range shows a Florida woman shoot her son in the back of the head before turning the gun on herself. Family members say she was mentally ill."

More from the "mentally ill" department of excuses for women...

Mom Who Dumped Newborn in Plane Bathroom Avoids Jail

anthony · 9 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Samoan woman who secretly gave birth on an international flight and then dumped the baby in an on-flight toilet has been convicted of child abandonment.

Karolaine Maika, a 29-year-old fruit picker, had the child in the bathroom without anyone realizing.
...
Judge Heather Simpson decided not to jail Maika but ordered her to be deported to Samoa.
...
Judge Simpson said she took into account that Maika was unaware she was in labor before she boarded the flight.'

Judge OKs collecting of dead son's sperm

anthony · 9 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mother of a 21-year-old assault victim who died of his injuries received permission Tuesday for his sperm to be collected post-mortem, giving her the chance to have a grandchild through a surrogate mother.

Travis County Probate Judge Guy Herman ordered the medical examiner's office to maintain the body of Nikolas Colton Evans until his sperm can be taken.

Herman also said officials at the office must provide access so an expert can take the specimen.

Herman issued the orders after an emergency hearing at the request of Marissa Evans, whose son died Sunday after being punched and falling during a March 27 assault on East Sixth Street.'

Canada: 81% of jobs lost were held by men

Scottie · 10 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. You will also notice that (of course) there are snippets of anti-male propaganda both snuck in and slapping you in the face. Excerpt:

"OTTAWA — More than four out of five jobs that have been lost in Canada since October 2008 have been jobs held by men, according to the newest data from Statistics Canada.

The trend, in which men represent more than 81 per cent of the 357,000 jobs lost over the past six months, is prompting some to refer to this economic downturn as a "he-cession."

Statistics Canada said another 61,300 Canadians lost their jobs in the month of March, pushing the unemployment rate up to its highest point in the past seven years.

Men between the ages of 25 and 54 have been hit particularly hard in the ailing economy, making up more than 55 per cent of the jobs lost in Canada since October."

F4J USA Action-Results Update

Matt · 10 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via an F4J USA Alert:

From Donald Tenn aka Spiderman:

The response from the hundreds of telephone calls and e-mails from F4J members and supporters was nothing less than phenomena. I would like to say "THANK YOU" to you all. The TEAMwork used to pull this off was fantastic. Fathers-4-Justice members and supporters can achieve anything when we UNITE!

It was conveyed to my attorney that the support from F4J members and supporters was overwhelming for the prosecutor's office. It is this support that may have been instrumental in the rescheduling of our jury trial.

That's right: THE JURY TRIAL for both Paul and Donald has been rescheduled!

So save some energy for the NEXT round. More updates will come as the events progress.

Media contact:
Brian Holladay
bholladay-at-f4j.com

Canada: "Fathers 'reduced to ATM status' by the courts ..."

Matt · 10 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter to National Post here.

'What Justice Brownstone fails to mention in his attack on separated parents is the extent to which they are merely responding rationally to the adversarial, winner-take-all system they face in court. A survey of family court cases in Ontario since 2000 reveals that almost 80% of the time costs are awarded against the father. That gives a fair indication of a father's chances of success in family court. Nearly always, he is relegated to the status of a visitor in his child's life, and reduced to the psychological state of an ATM. Justice Brownstone also admonishes parents to separate financial issues from parenting issues. Yet family court judges are so eager to award mothers exclusive use of the matrimonial home and begin the flow of "maintenance" that parenting issues usually get dealt with summarily on the basis of myths and stereotypes. Judges create the unseemly focus on money matters, while refusing to take access denial and parental alienation seriously. (One judge, now on the Court of Appeal in Alberta, told me that it is not his job to "punish" mothers who deny access and alienate the children.)

Until family court judges clean up their own act by implementing a presumption of equal shared parenting and favouring the more co-operative parent in custody disputes, nothing is going to change significantly.'

College Student Alert: Beware of One-Party Classrooms

Matt · 10 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Horowitz documented 150 college courses at 12 elite universities, from Columbia in New York to the University of California at Santa Cruz, which he calls "the worst school in America" and whose highest ranking professors are the Communist lesbians Angela Davis and Bettina Aptheker. Other institutions along the way include Duke, Penn State, the University of Colorado, and the University of Southern California.

Horowitz quotes directly from the syllabus of each course he critiques, lists assigned readings, and reports on the credentials and background of the instructor paid to teach the course. The most offensive departments are women's studies, black studies, and peace studies.

These so-called academic departments teach students to hate America, to believe that women, blacks, and all minorities are the victims of oppression and racism, and that America is a land of injustice that needs drastic change in our social structure. The universities teach William Ayers-style "social justice," which is the template for a socialist political agenda.'

Oprah defends record of South African school

Vince · 11 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"Last month, four students were expelled and three others suspended. South African media at the time said they were accused of trying to force students into relationships and to engage in sexual contact.

Winfrey herself hasn't given details of the misconduct. But she said in the newspaper interview that it was 'insulting' that the family of one of the expelled girls had complained to the press even though she had been warned before about her behavior.

...

'The majority of girls are thriving, really fulfilling the dream and vision I had,' Winfrey told the newspaper. 'They really have exceeded any expectations I had for them.'

'In spite of everything that's happened, what keeps me inspired and hopeful is the heart of every girl, because they are wonderful, they are magnificent.'"

I truly wonder whether or not Oprah would've said that if the students were boys -- just a thought.

Student paper: "On grammar: It's not violence against women but violence by men"

Matt · 11 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The patriarchy works in mysterious ways in society, from the big things like women getting paid 75 cents on the dollar to how we construct our language. In public discourse on violence, especially in journalism, men are often left out of the equation altogether, as if the violence women are subjected to is without a male perpetrator.

By using the passive voice when writing news stories, the blame is shifted from the men commiting this violence to the women targeted. We talk about violence against women instead of violence by men. By situating the terms of the discourse like this, we are ignoring that men are the ones raping and abusing women. Instead, women are continually portrayed as victims at the hands of a vague male entity. We should be talking about it as men being violent toward their girlfriends, wives, friends and family and working to eradicate this violence.

The feminist magazine off our backs rewrote a press release on the rising levels of violence against women by Amnesty International to reflect a more accurate worldview of gender violence. "Behind closed doors and in secret, women are subjected to violence by their partners and close relatives, too ashamed and afraid to report it," the original article reads. The off our backs writer changed it to say "Behind closed doors and in secret, men subject their female partners and close relatives to violence, and then shame the women and make them afraid to report it."'

Letters to the editor can be submitted here and also via email at mhnews-at-mtholyoke.edu.

Police busy looking for men while female perp walked away

Matt · 11 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Jeremy S.: Remember all this: Girl Missing, Homes of 2 Men Searched? They even towed the cars of the two suspect men and wasted valuable time and resources looking for a male suspect. Maybe even two. This is what they got: Calif. Sunday school teacher booked in child death. Excerpt:

'TRACY, Calif. -A California Sunday school teacher was arrested on suspicion of kidnapping and killing an 8-year-old girl whose body was stuffed into a suitcase found in an irrigation pond.

Melissa Huckaby, 28, was arrested at 11:55 p.m., about five hours after she drove herself to the station at the request of police, according to Tracy Police Sgt. Tony Sheneman.

"She gave enough information to us during the course of the interview that probable cause was there to arrest her," said Sheneman.

A massive search for the child, Sandra Cantu, included hundreds of volunteers and law enforcement officials. The search ended April 6 when farmworkers who were draining the irrigation pond to water fields found a suitcase.

Pictures of the girl with dark brown eyes and light brown hair were posted all over Tracy, a city of 78,000 about 60 miles east of San Francisco.

The slain girl's aunt, Angie Chavez, said in a phone interview with The Associated Press early Saturday that she was happy to learn of the arrest.'

Ceremony planned to observe Child Abuse Prevention Month

anthony · 11 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Administration for Children & Families estimated that in 2006, four children died each day as a result of maltreatment. More than 1,500 children died that year out of the 905,000 who were confirmed victims of maltreatment. More than three-quarters (78 percent) of children who were killed were younger than 4 years of age; 12 percent were 4-7 years of age; 5 percent were 8-11 years of age; and 5 percent were 12-17 years of age.
...
• Six in ten (61 percent) alleged perpetrators of child maltreatment were mother or father figures, with the majority being mother figures (39 percent). Other relatives comprised 14 percent of alleged perpetrators. Paramours of the caretaking parent or other non-related adults accounted for 16 percent of all cases.'

Akron police say woman stabbed husband

anthony · 11 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Police arrested an Akron woman Wednesday night after she allegedly stabbed her husband during an argument.

Tanika Kirk, 33, of Crestview Avenue, was charged with felonious assault, domestic violence and obstructing official business after she used a kitchen knife to stab her husband, Marcus Kirk, 22, in the back and his side, police said.

Officers said the suspect lied to them about the incident.

The victim was taken to the hospital and treated for what police said are not life-threatening injuries.'

Real Housewives Star "Devastated" Over Assault Case

anthony · 11 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

Real Housewives of New York City newcomer Kelly Killoren Bensimon faced a judge this morning for allegedly assaulting her ex, Nick Stefanov.

The reality star, 40, was arrested earlier this month for reportedly punching her 30-year-old beau in the face, causing lacerations below his left eye and "substantial pain," according to the complaint he filed with police. She could face up to a year in jail if convicted.

I can't believe the guy went to the police," Hayes told New York's Daily News. "It is very, very mean-spirited. It's not like she's in his apartment. He's in her apartment."

"I don't even know if I qualify him as lover. How about a jilted moron?" he continued to Extra.
...
"If he doesn't show up from now until then, they'll dismiss the case. It's not a real case," Hayes told Extra. "He just wants to make her life uncomfortable."

"I'm devastated my girls and I have to go through something like this," Bensimon told the Daily News. "They don't need to be exposed to something like this.

Bensimon said she was confident the case would be resolved in her favor. "The only time I'll ever be here again is for jury duty," she declared.'

Father Sues Northwest Side School Over Rape Of Son

anthony · 11 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHICAGO -- The father of a 15-year-old boy has filed a negligence lawsuit against a Northwest Side school for troubled youth after a female teacher allegedly drank and had sex with his son on several occasions.

Linda Pithyou, 29, of 3723 W. Devon Ave., was formally charged March 13 with two counts of criminal sexual assault and four counts of aggravated sexual abuse, Cook County State's Attorney's office spokesman Tandra Simonton said.

The boy's father filed the suit Friday in Cook County Circuit Court against Lawrence Hall Youth Services, where the alleged abuse occurred. The boy and his father are listed a John Doe and Richard Doe in the suit.

Pithyou, a teacher at Lawrence Hall, allegedly drank alcohol, smoked marijuana and engaged in oral sex and sexual intercourse with the boy approximately four times a week at various locations in a car, occasionally with her 16-month-old son in the back seat, according to prosecutors and the suit.'

Quebec dad sued by daughter after grounding loses his appeal

Matt · 11 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Quebec father who was taken to court by his 12-year-old daughter after he grounded her in June 2008 has lost his appeal.

Quebec Superior Court rejected the Gatineau father's appeal of a lower court ruling that said his punishment was too severe for the wrongs he said his daughter committed.

The father is "flabbergasted," his lawyer Kim Beaudoin told CBC News.

In its ruling, issued Monday, the province's court of appeal declared the girl was caught up in a "very rare" set of circumstances, and her father didn't have sufficient grounds to contest the court's earlier decision.

The family's legal wrangling started with a dispute over the girl's internet use.

She had been living with her father after her parents split up when he grounded her in 2008 for defying his order to stay off the internet. The father caught her chatting on websites he had blocked, and alleged his daughter was posting "inappropriate pictures" of herself online.'

Boys in US jails sentenced to life without parole

Matt · 11 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- It began as horseplay, with two teenage stepbrothers chasing each other with blow guns and darts. But it soon escalated when one of the boys grabbed a knife.

The older teen, Michael Barton, 17, was dead by the time he reached the hospital, stabbed twice.The younger boy, Quantel Lotts, 14, would eventually become one of Missouri's youngest lifers.

Lotts was sentenced in Missouri's St. Francois County Circuit Court in 2002 to life in prison without parole for first-degree murder in his stepbrother's stabbing death.
...
Lotts is one of at least 73 U.S. inmates -- most of them minorities -- who were sentenced to spend the rest of their lives in prison for crimes committed when they were 13 or 14, according to the Equal Justice Initiative, a nonprofit organization in Alabama that defends indigent defendants and prisoners.
...
At the time of the crime, Tammy Lotts said she left her children for several days with her husband to get high on crack cocaine.'

So why wasn't Tammy Lotts and her husband put away, too? Maybe her husband was (the story doesn't say) but it looks like she wasn't charged with anything.

Macabre Dance of Family Law

Matt · 13 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From an ACFC e-mail:

This just in from ACFC Advisor Dr. Jayne Major about the phenomenal success of her presentation on parental alienation at a recent Canadian Symposium on Parental Alienation. It seems the Canadians are ahead of most of the American legal profession on this issue. Many Canadian judges get it and have ruled appropriately to contain the disturbed parent...at least there have been some landmark cases. Go to http://www.cspas.ca/ and read about them.

Also read a summary of her presentation, The Macabre Dance of Family Law, which describes a three Tier mediation protocol for reform of family court practices. It begins with a presumption of 50-50 shared parenting to "level the playing field" and thus make real mediation possible, as opposed to the inherently inflammatory "winner-take-all" sole custody model that all too often is the spark that ignites conflict that then explodes out of control in our currently dysfunctional family law system.

Dr. Major reports that an attending American judge asked her to train judges in America. Is it possible that reform could be coming to America through enlightenment of judges, despite the benighted opposition of bar associations pandering to the dysfunctional ideology of sociopathic radical feminism?

We suggest our readers print out The Macabre Dance of Family Law, and hand it out in courthouses, and anywhere else where some folks might benefit from a dose of its eminent common sense.

ACFC

DA: Rape may be alleged in Calif. girl's slaying

anthony · 13 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SAN FRANCISCO — Prosecutors said Monday they may include rape and molestation allegations in their murder charge against the woman suspected of killing an 8-year-old Northern California girl and putting her body in a suitcase.

Melissa Huckaby, a 28-year-old Sunday school teacher, was arrested Friday on suspicion of kidnapping and murdering Sandra Cantu.

Formal charges have not yet been filed, but San Joaquin County Deputy District Attorney Robert Himmelblau told The Associated Press that a murder charge against Huckaby could include the special circumstances of rape with a foreign object, lewd and lascivious conduct with a child and murder in the course of a kidnapping.

A conviction on any of the special circumstances would make Huckaby eligible for the death penalty or life in prison without parole, Himmelblau said. The district attorney's office has not determined whether it will seek the death penalty, he said.'

'Shattering Myths: Men, Boys, and Mental Health' - Eighth Annual Conference Announced

anthony · 13 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the National Institute of Mental Health, it is estimated that 6 million American men will be diagnosed with depressive disorder in any given year and many have suffered silently. Four times as many men as women commit suicide. These critical issues and others will be the subject of "Shattering Myths: Men, Boys, and Mental Health," the Eighth Annual Community Mental Health Conference presented by the Naomi Ruth Cohen Institute of Mental Health Education at The Chicago School of Professional Psychology.'

Opinion: Women can inflict domestic violence, too

anthony · 13 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2000 the Department of Justice published a compendium of domestic violence review with the incredibly biased title: "U.S. Domestic Violence Against Women Study." This was a review study compiling many different looks at this issue, mostly published by academics using crime statistics.

It consistently showed that a lot of domestic violence is actually unprovoked attacks by women on their male partner. The numbers are consistently between 25 percent and 40 percent.

In this study, men were twice as likely to be the victim of a knife attack (cue Bobbit) and almost twice as likely to be injured by "an object thrown with intent to harm."

Many jurisdictions report at least 25 percent of issued restraining orders are served on women. My knee-jerk reaction when first reading this was that these women must have just been protecting themselves against the evil males. But that's not what the data show.'

Massachsetts: Suicide among men rose in 2007, breast cancer death rate at lowest level

anthony · 13 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Swampscott - Suicides among men in Massachusetts spiked by 28 percent in 2007, according to a Department of Public Health report issued Wednesday, April 8. The number of suicides among males rose to 159 in 2007 from 118 in 2006 and 153 in 2005. The increase occurred in white males between the ages of 25 and 44, according to the department, which said it would analyze the data to develop insights.

Suicides in women declined by 8 percent in 2007.

Meanwhile, death rates for cancer, heart disease, stroke and chronic respiratory diseases have declined between 13 and 31 percent between 2001 and 2007, according to the department. For women, the breast cancer death rate fell by 13 percent from 2006 to 2007, or “to their lowest level ever recorded.”'

State Child Custody Law: 50-50 Split?

anthony · 13 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kevin Yoachim of Hebrom spent Easter Sunday dinner with his two kids, both teens. But now, in the midst of divorce, he worries those dinners will be few and far in between.

"A lot of my friends have told me, you're going to have a really hard time getting custody," he said.

Two bills before state legislators would make child custody in Nebraska a 50-50 split, with some restrictions. LB423 would mandate a presumption that both parents are fit for joint legal and physical custody unless evidence proves otherwise.

LB589 states both parents should get equal custody unless there is a medical or legal reason why this should not happen.'

UK Sun: More paternity rights

anthony · 13 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the parents bond over their new baby, the scene is broken by the midwife carefully declaring that it's time for daddy to leave.

This is the scene in maternity wards up and down the UK.

86 per cent of men now attend the birth of their child, but in a large number of hospitals, as soon as visiting time is over dads are asked to leave.

Duncan Fisher, 47, director of dad.info, thinks that this practise needs to change.

Duncan says: "When my first child was born 12 years ago I was asked to leave at the end of visiting hours. I was completely baffled; I wasn't expecting to be told to leave at all.

"My wife wasn't too upset, so I quietly left."'

Ex-astronaut seeks to have charges dropped

Matt · 14 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Ahhh, remember this one? Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla. — A former astronaut accused of driving 1,000 miles to confront a romantic rival asked a judge Monday to dismiss the criminal charges against her because prosecutors failed to disclose evidence.

An attorney for Lisa Nowak filed a motion seeking sanctions against prosecutors and police officers. Attorney Don Lykkebak said they failed to turn over a report that raises questions about whether Nowak's rival, Colleen Shipman, was pepper-sprayed during the confrontation more than two years ago.

"The police made a mountain out of a molehill in this case and now we have learned there was never a molehill to start with," Lykkebak said in a statement.'

Boston Globe Front Page Story Covers Fathers & Families' Lawsuit

Matt · 14 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Glenn Sacks' newsletter. Article here. Excerpt:

"Joseph P. Kahn's front page story Amid layoffs, child support pacts fraying: Stressed-out parents ask family court for help, relief (Boston Globe, 4/13/09) details the problems faced by child support obligors in the face a bad economy. It is not uncommon for decent, loving fathers like the Fathers & Families supporter quoted above to be punished or even thrown in jail simply because they can no longer earn enough money to pay the child support the family law system demands."

Abuse excuse: how liberalism keeps women in their place

Matt · 14 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Liberals have become the unapologetic predators of women, gleefully playing on their fears and psychological vulnerabilities, all in the name of curbing domestic violence. Of course women's only hope lies in heavy-handed state intervention.

Before proceeding, I will warn you this column is filled with high-octane statements made by the willfully dishonest, the social schemers, and the patently unhinged. As you wade through the claims, keep in mind two facts.

First, all forms of violent crime have fallen dramatically in the past 30 years. The incidences of rape, intimate partner homicide, and non-fatal partner violence are now half what they were in 1980. We've made tremendous progress in the last three decades and everyone should be feeling a lot safer.

Second, research shows women are more likely than men to instigate partner violence — http://pn.psychiatryonline.org/cgi/content/full/42/15/31-a . But that's one of those inconvenient truths the liberals will never concede.'

Prosecutors to Seek Death Penalty in Casey Anthony Case

Matt · 14 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Prosecutors plan to seek the death penalty for Casey Anthony, a Florida woman accused of murdering her daughter, a spokeswoman for the state attorney's office said today.

In December, the state's attorney's office filed court papers indicating that prosecutors would not seek the death penalty in connection with the first-degree murder case.

In a notice of intent filed today, prosecutors said additional information has become available. The filing says that "sufficient aggravating circumstances exist to justify the imposition of the death penalty," according to the Orlando Sentinel.

A spokeswoman for Jose Baez, Anthony's attorney, said in a statement, "This is not a death penalty case. We will do whatever is necessary to defend Casey Anthony from the state trying to take her life. We already have death-qualified defense lawyers on our team and are prepared for a vigorous defense."

Anthony, 22, has pleaded not guilty in the death of her daughter, Caylee. She is scheduled to go on trial in October.'

From Feministing: Sexual assault against men should be called rape

Vince · 14 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Yes, you read that right. Post here. Excerpt:

"It seems like a reasonable question, to ask what the hell is wrong with Jimmy Kimmel. But the problem is, while not excusing his actions for a single second, that he has a whole culture (and audience) backing him up.

"In the majority of sexual assault cases, where a woman is the victim of a man's violence, rape apology is rooted primarily not in the denial that male violence exists, but in the denial that male violence means something and needs to be stopped. Conversely, in cases where a man is the victim of a woman's violence, rape apologism is strongly rooted in the denial that women's actions can count as violence at all -- and especially that their actions can count as sexual violence against men, who are routinely construed as incapable of being victims."

"...never hire a male to watch your children"

Matt · 15 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The nymphotropic divert/excuse machine is in full swing now that an accused female child molester and murderer is in the dock. Latest outrage here. "Never hire a male to watch your children" is delievered at the very end of page 3 of the story. Excerpt:

'Police accusations this week that the woman charged with the murder of Sandra Cantu penetrated the Tracy, Calif., 8-year-old with a "foreign object" sent psychological chills up the spine of Americans.

The arrest of Melissa Huckaby, a 28-year-old mother and Sunday school teacher, on charges of kidnapping, rape and murder also sent up red flags for criminologists.

Women are rarely sexual predators -- only about 5 percent to 15 percent, according to experts -- and when they do molest children, they are more often accomplices.
...
While rare, women do commit sexual acts against children. Research reported in a 2000 article in the Journal of Sex Research cites well-accepted studies by David Finkhor and Diana Russell that show women may account for up to 5 percent of the abuse of females and 20 percent of males.

These statistics include women either acting alone or with a partner. Only 6 percent of sexual abuse against females and 14 percent against males are carried out by females alone.'

Time to disabuse the author (and readers) of the incorrect statistics all over this article by posting comments. You can also send email to ABCNews.com with this form.

"Another Awkward Sex Talk: Respect and Violence"

anthony · 15 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It has never been easy for adults to deal with young teenagers honestly and sensibly on this subject, and it isn't easy now. We live with an endless parade of hypersexualized images — and a constant soundtrack of adults lamenting children's exposure to that endless parade. There's increasing knowledge of dating violence, including well-publicized celebrity incidents. And there's always a new movie to see about how adolescent boys are clueless, sex-obsessed goofballs.

Stir it all together, and you may get an official worldview in which boys are viewed as potential criminals and girls as potential victims.

William Pollack, a psychologist at Harvard Medical School who wrote "Real Boys: Rescuing Our Sons From the Myths of Boyhood" (Owl Books, 1999), argues that the way we talk to boys and young men about sex often stereotypes them and hurts their feelings.

"One boy said, 'They treat us like we're perpetrators — we have sexual needs but we also have other needs,' " Dr. Pollack told me.'

One feminist's commentary here.

Christina Hoff Sommers: 'A threat to Title IX'

anthony · 15 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'• Title IX could make "similar striking advances" for women in science and engineering. Indeed it could -- but at what cost to science? The idea of imposing Title IX on the sciences began gaining momentum around 2002. Then, women were already earning nearly 60 percent of all bachelor's degrees and at least half of the Ph.D.s in the humanities, social sciences, life sciences and education. Meanwhile, men retained majorities in fields such as physics, computer science and engineering. Badly in need of an advocacy cause just as women were beginning to outnumber men on college campuses, well-funded academic women's groups alerted their followers that American science education was "hostile" to women. Soon there were conferences, retreats, summits, a massive "Left Out, Left Behind" letter-writing campaign, dozens of studies and a series of congressional hearings. Their first public victim? Larry Summers, who was forced to resign as president of Harvard University in 2006 after he dared to question the groups' assumptions and drew a correlation between the number of women in the sciences and gender differences implied in math and science test data.'

Female Texas Teacher, Coach Resigns After Allegedly Having Sex With Girl at School

anthony · 15 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A female Texas teacher and coach indicted on charges of having sex with a 15-year-old girl at her school has officially resigned, according to local media reports.

The charges, stemming from an alleged sexual relationship between 39-year-old Jennifer Lea Burton and one of her junior high school students, include three counts of sexual assault and three counts related to an improper relationship between student and educator, KFDM.com reported.

The purported sexual encounters between Burton, who was a teacher and coach at Orangefield Junior High, and the teen lasted from September to November of 2008, according to the indictment filed last week.'

Village men step up to inspire 8th grade boys

anthony · 15 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For seven years, the girls disappeared to take part in “Girls to Women, Women to Girls,” a one-day conference in Snowmass Village that encouraged girls to explore beyond their limits by meeting professional women who introduce them to a variety of career choices. The program was launched by the Women’s Foundation of Colorado.

In 2006, the 8th grade boys no longer had to feel left out. Villager Sue Smedsted, who had been in charge of the Girls to Women program, was encouraged by the Aspen School District to provide a similar program for boys in the upper valley. Her husband, Jeff Tippett, became the organizer for “Boys to Men, Men to Boys.”'

Hotel Trends: Where the boys aren't

anthony · 15 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Safety. Comfort. Luxurious bath products. The freedom to go padding down the hallway in jammies and slippers.

With selling points like these, hotel floors for women travellers - after being dismissed as old-fashioned, sexist and just plain insulting a quarter century ago - are making a comeback.

At the Crowne Plaza Bloomington in Minnesota, female travellers opting for the women-only floor enjoy fresh flowers, makeup mirrors and plush robes in their rooms as well as complimentary snacks and fashion magazines in a communal area. Following a strategy similar to the executive floor common to many luxury properties, access to this female enclave is by keycard only.
...
The Hamilton Crowne Plaza in Washington, D.C., takes catering to women a step further by offering the services of a bellman or security staff to walk nervous female guests to restaurants or other destinations in the vicinity of the hotel.'

Examiner: Some feel we need PSAs for male victims of domestic violence

anthony · 15 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'I have a friend who believes that Rihanna should have been charged in the incident in which she was hurt because she admitted hitting Chris Brown first and that Brown would've been acting in self-defense if Rihanna had been a man. I disagree about Rihanna needing to be charged because I find it doubtful that her blows hurt Brown, but this brings to light an entire can of worms about men as victims of domestic violence. I do not doubt that men in homosexual relationships are sometimes abused by their partners, and I am sure that there are some men who are harmed by their female partners. But is this really an issue that requires public service announcements and research and attention? I have heard of plans for some such PSAs in the near future. There are claims that men are victims almost as often as women and that women abuse the use of restraining orders.'

Letter To Editor: 'Women are also guilty'

anthony · 15 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Ms C Springer, your Editor, from her chair in the newsroom asserts for my instruction that “domestic violence exists in all races, classes and in every sector of society.”

What she seems unwilling to conceive of, or incapable of conceding is that domestic violence exists in all “sexes/genders.” To make it clear, women are also guilty. This is the point of my letters. This is what, as idea, she finds offensive. Ms Springer needs a triumphant victim (woman) on one side and a diabolised victor (also essentially victim) on the other. That this position that I have expressed represents “an outmoded and bigoted” attitude contributing to perpetuating the problem is how Ms Springer responds to the threat to extending her all-embracing domestic violence victim categories to include men.'

India: Candle Light March for Fathers' Rights

Anonymous · 16 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Save Indian Family Foundation (SIFF) and Children's Rights Initiative for Shared Parenting (CRISP), NGOs working towards the cause of Family Harmony, Gender Equality and Child Rights announces a "Candle Light March" in condolescence of the unfortunate demise of Mr. Syed Makhdoom, who committed suicide on 5th April 2009 after he was no longer able to bear the domestic violence being done on him by his wife and in-laws as they trapped him in false dowry harassment cases and separated him from his child. His suicide came to light on the 9th April 2009 after his landlord grew suspicious.

In a bone-chilling, 8 minute video that he recorded of himself on his mobile, minutes before he committed suicide, Syed Makhdoom expressed the pain that he underwent in an insensitive society and before an insensitive judiciary that trivialized his pain, never understood a father's feelings and did not grant him visitation to his child which is the natural and biological right of both the child and the father.

Syed Makhdoom's case is not a one off case. Every year 57,000 married men are committing suicides, unable to bear the torture meted out on them by their wives and in-laws. In the year 2007, 57593 married men committed suicide. Similar figures for the years 2006 and 2005 are 55452 and 52000 respectively as per National Crime Records Bureau. Since 1996 suicide rates have shot up by 40%. Every year the suicide rate is going up by 4% whereas population grows at the rate of 1%. 4 times more men are committing suicides than they are born. Compared to women, the suicide of married men is 1.86 times and grows at 6 times the rate of growth of married women's suicides.'

Toronto Woman Plotted the Murder of Her Lover's Boyfriend, Court Told

Anonymous · 16 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ashleigh Pechaluk hated her female lover's long-time boyfriend, whom she saw as an obstacle to their relationship, and that's why they formed a plan to kill him with an axe, a prosecutor says.

The 24-year-old woman and her lover, Nicola Puddicombe, carried out the plan to murder Dennis Hoy, 36, while he lay sleeping in a Queensway apartment on Oct. 27, 2006, assistant Crown attorney Tom Lissaman told a jury today at the opening of Pechaluk's first-degree murder trial.

"He was bludgeoned to death as he lay naked and asleep in his girlfriend's bed," Lissaman said.

Puddicombe, 36, who will be tried after this trial ends, stood to gain $250,000 as the sole beneficiary of Hoy's life insurance and pension policies, Lissaman alleged.'

Montreal dad eager for reunion with young daughter found in Vancouver

Anonymous · 16 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Montreal father says news that his daughter has been found safe in Vancouver more than two years after her disappearance is like "a gift from God." Frank Gonis said police told him Friday they had located his daughter, Ashley Gonis, 10, at a SkyTrain station in the neighbourhood of East Vancouver.
...
"The police called me on Friday early in the morning and it was like, I don't know, a gift from God. It's amazing that she's safe," he said.

Ashley disappeared in January 2007, along with Gonis's ex-wife, after a parental dispute that he says ended with him being awarded sole custody of the girl.

When she surfaced on Friday, police said Ashley told them she had run away from an "abusive situation at home" in B.C. and walked for hours before making a 911 call.'

HBO declares "Women's Studies" major

anthony · 16 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Here's one to file under "TV shows we never saw coming": Reuters is reporting that HBO and "Daily Show"/"Colbert Report" executive producer Ben Karlin is developing a new comedy series called "Women's Studies." Julie White will likely star as "a onetime famous author who, after a tumultuous period as a feminist It Girl, is now a professor at a small liberal arts college in the Northeast." White is also on board as a producer.
...
And, let's face it: Academia (and, yes, that includes women's studies), with its departmental pettiness and Ivory Tower elitism, is ripe for some good-natured ribbing. Can you just see it now? Of course, we'll have to have the frat guy who signs up for a women's studies course to meet chicks. And let's not leave out the T.A. who speaks Judith Butler as a first language. Is an episode that pits the sex-positives against the sex-negatives too much to hope for?'

Tax Tea-Party Ignorant of Feminist Pork

MR · 16 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

"'What does, 'End Feminist Pork' mean,'" was the first question I heard at the Tax Tea-Party I attended yesterday? The question came from the wife of a retired LAPD officer I knew. I explained what it meant, but little did I know I would be asked the same question more than 20 times throughout the afternoon and evening. At one point, I had just finished explaining, when another person came up to me and asked the same question.

If America doesn't wise up soon to all the "feminist pork" that's ripping taxpayers off, and destroying the social fabric of society, for many more males it may soon be the end of their world.

Teen Stabbed to Death by Woman in Wheelchair

anthony · 16 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'LOS ANGELES — Los Angeles police say a 15-year-old girl was stabbed to death by a woman in a wheelchair possibly twice her age after the pair got into a fight over a man.

Officer Karen Rayner says officers recieved several reports of the incident Wednesday afternoon on a street in South Los Angeles.

Rayner says "it sounds like it was a donnybrook of a lot of people fighting."

The victim was taken to a hospital where she was pronounced dead.

Rayner says the suspect is about 30 years old. Police did not immediately say what charges she faced.'

Responses to misandrist article on male/female prisoners

Matt · 16 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.: MRA Joe Manthey of Petaluma, CA sent out this article in which misandrist professor Barbara Bloom manufactures a smoke-and-mirrors style "crisis" for female prisoners using the usual one-sided feminist hypocrisy. Most of what Barbara Bloom says about female inmates can also be said of male prisoners, but she misleadingly weaves those things in with a few statistical differences to propagate her myths. And she totally ignores the sentencing disparities that men already face. If you have a moment, please write to the editor at letters-at-pressdemocrat.com and copy Barbara Bloom at bloom-at-sonoma.edu. The letter I sent is below the excerpt as follows:

'We are facing a correctional crisis in California that is unparalleled in other states. With prisons at or above 200 percent of capacity and federal court intervention imminent, a hidden aspect of corrections is the plight of incarcerated women.

Relative to men, the number of women in state prison may seem small. But, at more than 11,000, female prisoners are a growing and significant population, currently the largest in any state. Additionally, there are almost as many women locked up in county jails. The net result is more than 22,000 women in custody.

Not only are women prisoners hidden, their pathways to prison are often neglected and not addressed. Additionally, women have different reasons for being in prison than men, different histories of abuse and addiction, different family roles and relationships, different health concerns and different motivations to change.'

What does Barack Obama Mean For Men?

Matt · 17 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama is clear about one thing: he goes to bat for women. That's aptly demonstrated by his immediate signing off on the White House Council on Women and Girls and on what I call his "Ledbetter Payback Act," in reference, of course, to the Ledbetter Fair Pay Act, which I believe is a promised payback to feminists and women for their vote.

He may also help men --- some men, at least — in an incidental way with such programs as the construction jobs he hopes to create with his plan to rebuild the infrastructure. (But judging by how feminists are getting most if not all of what they want from him, they may get from him the requirement that the infrastructure contractors hire mostly women because the construction business is already mostly men).

But other than the construction jobs, how, in the direct and selective manner in which Obama helps women, will he help men, especially black men, who need as much help as black women and more help than white women, who are, usually, the main beneficiaries of governments' gender-aid programs?'

Stephen Baskerville scheduled for The Jim Bohannon Show on 4/17/09

Matt · 17 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Radio show page here. This show is syndicated on hundreds of radio stations across the US. Find a station in your listening area here.

Upcoming evening show page here.
Archived shows here.

Note: When I first posted this story about 30 mins. ago I thought this was a morning show only. (This will teach me to do more than just scan the page when it comes to these things.) On closer examination it was clear that this is a morning and evening show, and so I have corrected my post accordingly.

Hulk Hogan Comments Spark Mixed Reactions and Opinions

Matt · 17 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Hulk Hogan's "OJ Comment" as reported here sparked this news commentary in a Fox's "Kelly's Court" segment. I was surprised both by the report itself and the analysis. Worth watching, in both the video sense and the case sense. Article excerpt:

'Hulk Hogan said his comments to Rolling Stone magazine that he can "totally understand" O.J. Simpson -- the former football great found liable for the deaths of his wife and another man -- are being misunderstood.
Linda and Hulk Hogan enjoy happier times at the 2006 MTV Video Music Awards in New York.

The pro wrestling legend said Wednesday that he "took the high road" and "didn't do the O.J. Simpson thing" despite the pain of his bitter divorce fight with wife Linda.

Hogan's lawyer said the quotes leaked to a gossip column have been taken out of context and the full article proves Hogan "never condones the O.J. situation." Video Watch Hogan claim he was misquoted.

A spokesman for Linda Hogan said the statement amounts to a death threat and that her attorney is "weighing all options necessary to protect his client."'

Woman allegedly kills 9-YO daughter then stabs herself to cause a miscarriage

anthony · 17 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'QUINCY, Mass. — A pregnant Massachusetts woman accused of killing her 9-year-old daughter, trying to strangle her 14-year-old daughter and stabbing herself in the stomach to kill her unborn child has been charged with one count of first-degree murder and one count of assault with intent to murder.

The Norfolk District Attorney's office said Friday that 38-year-old Fang Chi Xue was treated for self-inflicted stab wounds to the arms and abdomen at Boston Medical Center and will soon undergo a mental health evaluation. She was 7 1/2 months pregnant.'

School: Female Teacher Took Girls To Strip Club

anthony · 17 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'(AP) A school spokesman said a southwest Ohio teacher has resigned after acknowledging she accompanied four female students to a male strip club. Butler Tech school district spokesman Bill Solazzo said the 47-year-old teacher resigned Thursday.

He said the teacher told Edgewood High School administrators that the students, all cheerleaders, asked her to take them to the bar in February.

The teacher told school officials in an e-mail that she got permission from the parents of the 17- and 18-year-olds to bring them to the club.

The teacher taught marketing at the school and previously served as a coach for the district's eighth-grade cheerleaders.'

Police: Teen stabs boyfriend over Pop Tarts

Matt · 17 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Lakeland, Florida -- Police have charged an 18-year-old girl with stabbing her boyfriend during an argument over a box of pop tarts.

Catherine Marie Colon was arrested at her residence on Lake Hollingsworth Rd, which she has shared with her boyfriend, Shawn Andrews, 19, for the past three months.

Police say when they arrived, she was cleaning up blood from the floor.

"Colon had moved out of the apartment and had returned to collect belongings when he and Colon began arguing over a box of 'Pop Tarts,'" according to police spokesman Jack Gillen. "At some point, Colon stabbed Andrews with a steak knife."'

Angry Woman Taped Dog To Fridge And Assaults Boyfriend

anthony · 18 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CBS/AP) Police say a Colorado woman wrapped her boyfriend's dog in packing tape and stuck the animal upside down to a refrigerator because he wouldn't get rid of it.

Abby Toll was arrested Tuesday after police say she got into a fight with her boyfriend. She was charged with felony cruelty, drug possession and other counts and is free on $12,500 bond. She has declined to comment.

Police say Toll, 20, used packing tape to bind the legs, snout and tail of Beck's dog, Rex, a Japanese breed called a Shiba Inu. She told police she stuck the dog to the refrigerator because she was angry Beck wanted to keep it.

Toll also is accused of slapping Beck and throwing a vase and soda bottle at him. In addition, police say they found a trace amount of heroin in her possession at the jail, reports CBS-4 in Denver.'

"Who Should Pay for the Date?"

Matt · 19 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. After objecting to the double-standard, the author resigns himself after a series of rationalizations. Cognitive dissonance in its fullest glory.

I recall in the 1970s that one of the reasons feminists gave for "allowing" men to continue to pay for sex indirectly through dinner dates was that since women couldn't make as much as men in the same lines of work due to sexism, it made sense for men to pay for dates (ie, sex) since they could and women couldn't. Now that in so many places the script is flipped, a new set of rationalizations is used. The net result, as with the circumcision issue, is set up to be the same: men get the shaft.

Wouldn't it be nice to see an article written by a feminist stating categorically that as long as a woman is making more (in many cases now, much more) than the man she is on a date with, that it should be expected that she pick up the tab? Wouldn't it be nice if it were as prominently displayed as ones like this?

Maybe there's an alternate universe where women pick up the tab for as much as men are expected to here. It'd be nice to visit that universe just for a little while.

Custody Battle "Beyond Tragic"

Anonymous · 19 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Although my heart goes out to the three boys in this story, there is something about this article that doesn't smell right. It's as though the writer is subtly and carefully trying to undermine the concept of Parental Alienation Syndrome:

'The set of drums scattered in the back of his dad's van is a painful reminder for 18-year-old Daniel of how his family has been destroyed by divorce. The Mississauga teen had hoped to start a band with his two younger brothers, who were both learning to play guitar. But by the time he was given the drums, his brothers had disappeared.
...
Jake, 12, and Max, 14, were ripped from Daniel's arms – crying for help – five months ago outside a Brampton courtroom in an alleged case of parental alienation that one veteran divorce lawyer describes as "beyond tragic."
...
This has become one of the most controversial cases of alleged parental alienation to be handled by the courts, with Daniel and his parents – along with a growing chorus of lawyers – questioning if a legal system set up to protect children in cases of high-conflict divorce has done more harm than good.'

Public Skeptical Woman Killed, Raped California Girl

anthony · 19 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TRACY, Calif. — Callers have inundated the phone lines of Tracy police, saying it can't be. Veteran homicide and sex-crime researchers say they cannot recall a case quite like it. Even the investigators themselves looked at the evidence and initially said "no way."

A woman was accused not only of killing someone else's child, but of raping her.
...
Tracy police Sgt. Tony Sheneman said dozens of callers a day have insisted that Huckaby could not have acted alone, that no mother would rape another's child, that the scenario was too improbable to be true. The case is so striking that police initially shared the public's reaction.
...
When investigators were first looking at this they went 'Huh, no way... Who did she work with?"' Sheneman said. "We got that info and said 'there's no way, that doesn't happen."
...
When they do commit sex crimes, women often are acting as accomplices to men, and their victims tend to be teenagers, said David Finkelhor, director of the University of New Hampshire Crimes against Children Research Center.'

Man-to-Man: Time for some fathering

anthony · 19 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The last couple generations of men are disconnected from their masculinity. They are feminized. That means they have been influenced primarily by women — and men who had little sense of themselves as men — and have grown up to see the world through their mothers' eyes. As a result, these men continue to seek out other women, rather than men, when they need help with their emotional worlds.

What these men need is to be introduced to something they so desperately needed when they were boys. These men need to be fathered. And it's not too late.

No matter how old you are, you can benefit from the support of other good men. Seek out a men's group, reach out to buddies, reconnect with the men in your family, or find a male counselor who can give you the masculine energy and guidance you need.'

Men bear the brunt of US jobs lost

Matt · 19 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The US recession has opened up the biggest gap between male and female unemployment rates since records began in 1948, as men bear the brunt of the economy's contraction.

Men have lost almost 80 per cent of the 5.1m jobs that have gone in the US since the recession started, pushing the male unemployment rate to 8.8 per cent. The female jobless rate has hit 7 per cent.

This is a dramatic reversal of the trend over the past few years, where the rates of male and female unemployment barely differed, at about 5 per cent. It also means that women could soon overtake men as the majority of the US labour force.'

The author has to end of course with the usual sop to modern feminist mythology with: "Since women earn on average 20 per cent less than men, that is putting extra strain on many households," with no mention of course of the reasons behind it.

Canada: "Economic stimulus" - for women, anyway

Matt · 20 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Jeremy S.: An analysis of the advantage given to women by the federally-funded Industrial Training Authority (ITA) in Canada.

A Tale of Two ~~Tradesmen~~ Tradespersons

For a woman who is currently unemployed (or under-employed), and is considering one of the piping trades (plumbing, steam fitting, sprinkler fitting or welding), the ITA will pay for the following:

Six-Week Exploratory Course
Daycare (weekly): $200/child
Transportation (weekly): $23
Lunches (weekly): $50
Shop Clothing (coveralls): Free
Safety Gear (boots, gloves, glasses): Free
School Supplies: Free
Tuition: Free

Four-Month Specialization Course
Daycare (monthly): $800/child
Transportation (monthly): $90
Shop Clothing (coveralls): Free
Safety Gear (boots, gloves, glasses): Free
School Supplies: Free
Tuition: Free

Innocent Marine freed after 9 years in prison

anthony · 20 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'OCEANSIDE, Calif. — After more than nine years locked up in prison, fighting to overturn his 1999 rape conviction, Sgt. Brian W. Foster finally won his freedom in February.

But the battle to restore his military rank, pay, career and life is just beginning.

A decade ago, while serving as a military police officer at Camp Pendleton, Calif., Foster told his company commander that he would refuse nonjudicial punishment over allegations made by his estranged wife accusing him of raping her in 1995 and assaulting her from 1994 to 1998. Her rape claim surfaced amid a bitter divorce and custody fight over their two young sons.'

"SW Idaho seeing more women charged with sex abuse"

anthony · 20 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BOISE, Idaho – From a Boise psychology teacher accused of having sex with a teen student to a Caldwell guardian who bore her ward's child, the Treasure Valley has seen a flurry of sex-abuse cases with female defendants.

Canyon County is prosecuting two women charged with molesting minors, and a third was sent to prison in February. In Ada County, two women have been charged with sexually abusing youths since December, the same month two others were convicted of similar crimes.

In the past year, a dozen women have been in Valley courtrooms on charges of sexually abusing minors. They range in age from 20 to 40; their victims from 12 to 17. Each woman was at least five years older than the boy or girl.'

USA Today article gives "mental health" pass to female child molesters

anthony · 20 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women have been arrested this month in connection with two shocking child molestation incidents — one that ended in murder. The cases, which surfaced last week, are particularly notable because both are so unusual, experts say.

For one thing, only about 5% of adults who molest minors are women, says David Finkelhor, director of the Crimes Against Children Research Center at the University of New Hampshire. A common scenario is the "Mrs. Robinson" variety — an older woman having sex with a teenage boy who often feels some mutual attraction, he says.

A woman who would kidnap, rape and kill a little girl is more likely a psychotic than a true pedophile, says Frederick Berlin, a psychiatrist and founder of the Sexual Disorders Clinic at Johns Hopkins University. He says the delusions of this kind of murderer may be like those of Andrea Yates, who killed her own children.'

Police find MTU rape report to be false

anthony · 20 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'HOUGHTON -- Police say the alleged sexual assault that took place on the Michigan Tech campus last month was false.

After a three-week investigation, the woman who said she was sexually assaulted March 23 in the library parking lot has told police the assault did not take place.

The woman is a Michigan Tech student.

The Houghton County Prosecutor's Office is reviewing the case to determine if charges will be filed against the student.

This is the second false rape report in Houghton in the past three weeks.'

Immediate parole for woman who made false rape charge

anthony · 20 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Meadville woman facing a maximum of two years in jail and a $5,000 fine was granted an immediate parole and ordered to pay a $150 fine Monday after pleading guilty to a charge of making a false report to law enforcement.

“I’m very sorry for what I did,” Jacqueline Owens, 21, of 473 Arch St., told Judge Anthony Vardaro before he handed down the sentence during an afternoon session in Crawford County Court of Common Pleas. “All I’m trying to do is make my life better.”

...

“She had been raped,” Rowden explained to the judge before the sentencing took place. “When she reported it, she reported it as burglary-rape,” he continued. “It was more acquaintance rape. She had invited him in.”'

"Women-only lunch has guy fed up"

anthony · 20 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Commentary here. Excerpt:

'Q. I'm a 50-year-old man who works as a department director at a large international corporation. My supervisor is a vice president, and she oversees about 20 people, split evenly between men and women.

Last week she sent an e-mail to the women in the department, inviting them to an all-expenses-paid "extended lunch" that would include manicures. She advised them that if the men asked where they were going, to say they had an off-site meeting.

Some female co-workers forwarded me the e-mail. I was appalled by the exclusion of men. Since the department has both professional men and women, the supervisor should have offered everyone a free lunch in the conference room rather than pull such a biased stunt.'

Uganda: Female Condom - the Ignored Option for Women Against HIV

anthony · 20 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kampala — ASK anyone if they have ever seen a condom and the answer will be 'yes'. Unfortunately, that answer only refers to a male condom. Few people, including women have seen a female condom despite its introduction as an alternative HIV/AIDS prevention method, 10 years ago.

The Government imported 1.5 million female condoms in 1999 but halted their distribution *due to insufficient demand.

The Ministry of Health (MOH) is re-introducing them. However, critics say the ministry has not learnt lessons from its past mistakes, as people still hardly know anything about these condoms.'

---

*Emphasis added

RADAR ALERT: How Much Taxpayer Money is Enough for Domestic Violence Programs?

Matt · 20 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Congress currently spends approx. $1 billion (!) annually on domestic violence programs(1), and the recent economic stimulus bill just added another $325 million.(2) Yet, while the rest of the nation is forced to cut back during these difficult economic times, advocates are asking Congress for even more – over a quarter billion more dollars every year!(3) Although this analysis considers only Federal funding, be aware that these programs also receive sizeable private donations as well as state and local funding.

Congressonal spending this year works out to approximately $2,948 per female domestic violence victim. The demand for a funding increase amounts to an additional $623 per female domestic violence victim every year.(4) Since domestic violence service providers offer neglibible help to male victims, services for male victims are not included in these calcualtions.(5)

Oregon Shared Parenting Bill Hearing on Tuesday, April 21, 2009

Matt · 20 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via an ACFC e-mail news release:

Oregon Shared Parenting Bill Hearing

Just in...Tomorrow the House Judiciary Committee will be hearing HB 3402 for Shared Parenting in Oregon. The hearing is at the Oregon State Capitol Room 357 beginning at noon. Please attend and show your support. The proposed law defines joint legal and physical custody as presumptively in the best interest of the child. The bill declares relocation not in the child's best interest and penalizes parents for access interference. Click here to read the bill (pdf file).

Canadian Member of Parliament Conducts Equal Shared Parenting Poll

MP Maurice Vellacott sent this announcement late last week. Thanks to our friends and counterparts at the Canadian Equal Parenting Council for supplying the poll numbers. Click here for the poll (.pdf file). It's obvious the public 'gets it' when it comes to Shared Parenting. Our task is to turn these sentiments into reality.

4th Annual Parental Alienation Awareness Day April 25, 2009

anthony · 21 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PRLog (Press Release) – Apr 15, 2009 – Parental Alienation or Hostile Aggressive Parenting are a set of behaviors that adults exhibit which are harmful to children's emotional and mental health. These behaviors are most often seen during divorce and separation, but can also be present in intact families. Children who suffer his form of abuse may exhibit symptoms of low self esteem, depression, anxiety, aggression, trust issues, and sometimes suicidal tendencies.

Parental Alienation can be as mild as speaking badly about a parent in front of or to a child, to showing the child court documents or discussing child support with a child, to extreme examples such as Parental Abduction and Parental Homicide.'

President Obama urged to create White House Council on Men and Boys

anthony · 21 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'04.20.2009 – One of the leading organizations of men in America has asked President Obama to create a White House Council on Men and Boys.

Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc., the world's oldest collegiate Greek-lettered organization of African-Americans recently wrote the president a letter encouraging him to create the council after Mr. Obama formally established the White House Council on Women and Girls.

"Mr. President, we are keenly aware of the challenges that face women and girls. However, we believe a focus must also be placed on men and boys," wrote the Rev. Herman "Skip" Mason, Jr., general president of Alpha. "As a father of a six-year old son and an eight-year old daughter, like you I want to make sure that there are well-educated, responsible and community-oriented men for them to look up to as they grow and develop."'

All-boys middle school hopes to start in fall

anthony · 21 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The move toward single-sex classrooms is a growing trend around the nation and in Western North Carolina.

Eight public schools in North Carolina offer single-sex education, according to the National Association for Single Sex Public Education.

Asheville is home to Hanger Hall, a private middle school for girls, as well as to some single-sex classes within coed private schools. Carolina Day School's middle school, for example, has single-sex classes for core subjects.

Yeiser hopes to use Hanger Hall as a model. The school was started by Howard Hanger 10 years ago because he wanted something different for his daughters' education. The school now has 63 students.'

'Men put aside their pride' - more men parading in high heels

anthony · 21 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'With their masculinity set aside and high heels strapped tightly, local men and boys strutted their stuff Saturday morning to promote sexual abuse awareness in Acadiana.

More than 100 men and boys of all different ages and from all walks of life participated in Stuller Place's third annual Walk a Mile in Her Shoes event.

...

Families and groups of men from UL, the Lafayette Parish Sheriff's Office, University Medical Center and Best Buy showed up wearing boots, stilettos and even shoes with fur.

...

And participants Chad Grow and David Reese didn't stop short of showing how dedicated and "fantabulous" they were for the event.

Both men came dressed in dresses, pink boas and wigs.'

Woman accused of 'hammer' beating could get death penalty

anthony · 21 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GILBERT - A Gilbert woman who admitted that she beat her husband with a hammer while he slept could receive the death penalty.

Prosecutors say Marissa-Suzanne Devault killed her husband, Dale Harrell, for financial gain, which makes her eligible for the death penalty because the alleged murder meets three of the 14 standards listed under state law

Devault claims she killed her husband because he physically abused her; however, police have not found any evidence of abuse.'

Woman facing abuse charges retains custody of child

anthony · 21 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Dunn, N.C. — A Harnett County woman charged with beating two of her children still has custody of a third child.

Delores Geddie, 57, of 801 S. Ellis Ave. in Dunn, was charged Monday with two counts of child abuse and was released after posting a $250,000 bond.

Harnett Primary School teachers and administrators reported suspected abuse to social service workers recently after a 7-year-old boy and a 5-year-old girl showed up at school with deep bruises.

"They had belt marks on their back (and) on their arms, and the little boy had a belt mark on his face and nose," Dunn Police Chief B.P. Jones said.

...

"She just lost it. That's what she told the investigator," Jones said.

...

The two who were injured are staying with Geddie's mother; Geddie is prohibited from seeing them as a condition of her bond. But Geddie retains custody of their brother, who is in a wheelchair.'

Major Media Opportunity on National TV Show—Is This You?

Matt · 21 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently the Boston Globe ran a front page story on a Fathers & Families‘ member who was jailed for child support because his income in the Real Estate industry dropped dramatically and he was unable to pay his child support. The story also covers our highly-publicized lawsuit against the new, higher Massachusetts child support guidelines.

Fathers & Families was contacted by a major national TV show which is doing a story on the problems with the child support system and is looking for child support obligors to be on the show.

The network is specifically interested in individuals with the following scenarios:

1) Your income has declined significantly over the past year but you have been unable to get courts to modify your child support obligations. (You could be in any state)

2) Your child support has been raised under the new Massachusetts guidelines. (Massachusetts only)

This information will not be shared with anyone except the TV producer. Please do not respond unless you are willing to be publicly identified on national television.'

The article includes a form where you can submit your contact information.

Texas Man Settles Discrimination Lawsuit Against Hooters Restaurant Chain

anthony · 21 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt

'A Texas man has reportedly settled a class action lawsuit against Hooters for refusing to hire men as food servers.

Nikolai Grushevski filed a complaint against Hooters of America in January alleging its Corpus Christi franchisee would not hire him as a waiter because the position was being limited to females by an employer "who merely wishes to exploit female sexuality as a marketing tool to attract customers and insure profitability."

Hooters argued a “bona-fide occupational qualification” defense, which applies when the “essence of the business operation would be undermined if the business eliminated its discriminatory policy,” according to Onpointnews.com.

“If we lose this go around, you can next expect hairy-legged guys in the Rockettes to line up and male models in the Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue." Hooters' vice president of marketing said, according to Onpointnews.com.'

Woman pleads guilty to drugging, dismembering boyfriend

Matt · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MONTESANO, Wash. (AP) - A Grayland woman who drugged her boyfriend and dismembered his remains has pleaded guilty to second-degree murder.

Sherry Hamm entered the plea Monday and is scheduled to be sentenced on May 22 in Montesano. Grays Harbor County Prosecutor Stu Menafee told KXRO she faces 22 years in prison.

Prosecutors say the 59-year-old woman put an overdose of Xanax pills in a drink she gave 62-year-old Ken Hutchinson, her boyfriend of 30 years. She cut up his body and left the remains wrapped in plastic under their trailer in Grayland.'

Canada: Woman seeks fourth trial in murder case

Matt · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. She has gotten three trials and has been convicted twice of the same murder. Still, she is a female and is photogenic, so despite the two convictions and the imprisonment of the only boy involved in the gang-murder of a teenage girl (the mob that attacked her was otherwise made up of girls - wonder what happened to them in all this?), the Canadian Supreme Court needs to be polled for its opinion for what would have been an open and shut case if the primary agent in this assault and murder had been the boy.

Police: Mom ordered daughters out, drove off

Matt · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. - Usually, it's an empty threat: "If you kids don't stop fighting, I'm going to stop this car right now and leave you here!" But a mother from an upper-crust New York suburb went through with it, ordering her battling 10- and 12-year-old daughters out of her car in White Plains' business district and driving off, police said Tuesday.

A judge on Wednesday modified a temporary order of protection against 45-year-old Madlyn Primoff and her two daughters. Her lawyer, Vincent Briccetti, said Primoff is no longer barred from living or talking with her children.

Primoff, a partner in a Manhattan law firm, pleaded not guilty to a charge of endangering a child on Monday.
...

Woman intentionally hits man with minivan, throwing him off freeway ramp

anthony · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A San Jose woman intentionally struck a man on a freeway connector ramp, catapulting him over a guardrail 50 feet above the ground, according to police.

The unidentified man landed in a parking lot below the ramp and is now in a coma.

Damariz Michi, 21, is expected to be arraigned Thursday on charges of attempted murder and hit-and-run resulting in permanent serious injury or death, according to Amy Cornell, a spokeswoman for the Santa Clara County District Attorney's Office. Michi faces a maximum sentence of 17 years, eight months in prison if convicted as charged, Cornell said.

The man had been in Michi's minivan before the incident, according to police, who are not disclosing the nature of the relationship between the two. Because the investigation is ongoing, police would not disclose the man's age, only to say he is a San Jose resident.'

Mystery donor keeps giving to woman-run colleges

anthony · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mystery college donor has struck again — this time at Binghamton University in New York, whose financial aid office phone started ringing off the hook as word of an anonymous $6 million contribution spread across campus.

Binghamton is the latest of at least a dozen universities to receive donations totaling more than $60 million in recent weeks. The gifts have arrived with the same, highly unusual stipulation: not only must the donor must remain anonymous, but not even the college can know who it is or try to find out.

The recipient colleges seem to have almost nothing in common except this: so far, all are led by women.'

US News blogger asks: "Do Women Have a Competitive Advantage Over Men?"

anthony · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'And, if so, why do men still earn a dollar for every 77 pennies women earn? Why are men's small businesses larger than women's small businesses?

It shouldn't be like this.

Because when it comes to running anything—a family, a business, a country—women possess extraordinary leadership qualities. We're more intuitive, more patient, and we tend to share more, which makes us better at motivating. We're tenacious and we're great problem solvers (if only because we've always had to make do with less). Even more important, we excel at doing many things at once.
...
(For men: Look up once in a while to notice what's going on around you, and help!)'

Iceland's Women Reach for Power

anthony · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Iceland's women are blaming men for the financial crisis that has brought the country to its knees, They are now looking for a female solution to clean up the mess. Caretaker Prime Minister Johanna Sigurdardottir is heading into this weekend's election with good chances of winning.
...
At Audur, there's a simple recipe for success. "We've brought greater female values into the financial world," says Halla. The company isn't interested in investments that quickly generate high yields. Instead, they focus on sustainable investments in projects that make as much sense socially and environmentally as they do for the investors themselves. The women call their business maxim "emotional capital," or "profit with principles." But is that a recipe that can be enough to get Iceland out of its current mess?'

False allegations could bring four years in jail to female student

anthony · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'HOUGHTON -- The 19-year-old Michigan Tech student, who according to police filed a false sexual assault report last month, faces up to four years in prison if convicted.

According to court documents, Jennifer Renee Stigers lives in a residence hall on campus.

Stigers was arrested on Monday by MTU Public Safety after she took back allegations that an assault happened in a campus parking lot on March 23.

Judge Mark Wisti continued bond, ten percent of $10,000, which Prosecutor Mike Makkinen didn't object to.

A preliminary exam is scheduled in district court on May 4.'

Teacher Accused Of 'Sex' With Boy, 14

anthony · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JACKSONVILLE, Fla. -- A 34-year-old woman was arrested Monday after a 14-year-old boy said he had several sexual encounters with his science teacher.

According to the arrest report, Jennifer Collier had sex with the boy in her SUV Friday night after agreeing to take him home after a field trip from James Weldon Johnson Middle School.

The report says the boy showed police several e-mails from Collier to the victim that demonstrated their inappropriate relationship.

When arrested, investigators said Collier claimed to have a "mother-type relationship" with the boy who had come to her to talk about problems he was having in his home life. She then requested an attorney.'

Substitute teacher gets probation for sex with teen

anthony · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW PORT RICHEY — Lisa Marinelli, a former Pasco County substitute teacher, pleaded guilty Friday to having a sexual relationship with a student last year but avoided any time behind bars.
...
Instead, prosecutors and her defense attorney agreed to a stringent probationary sentence that includes a year of house arrest and no contact with children under 18 without supervision.

The married mother of two also will have to register as a sex offender...
...
Marinelli joined a dubious list of educators accused in recent years of having inappropriate relationships with students.

Their sentences have varied widely.

Former Hillsborough County middle school teacher Debra Lafave, convicted in 2005 of having sex with a 14-year-old student, was given three years of house arrest, followed by probation. She was let off house arrest early.

Michael Aaron Black, the former band director at Pasco Middle School in Dade City, is spending 22 years in prison for having a sexual relationship with a seventh-grader.'

Report asserts sports fans "linked to sexism"

anthony · 22 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The homophobic jock might be more than just a stereotype, says a new study that links sports zealots with attitudes about gender and sexuality.
...
University women's and gender studies professor Elizabeth Reis said she's not surprised by the findings.

"It seems to me that what connects these things is hypermasculinity and susceptibility to peer pressure and irrationality," she wrote in an e-mail.

Reis said that being a sports fan probably does not make a person sexist and homophobic, nor are all homophobes and sexists apt to watch men's basketball and football.'

UK: Male domestic abuse doubles in four years

Matt · 23 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FIFE* councillors will be briefed today about the experience of men in the Kingdom who have been domestically abused.

Organised by Fife Male Victims of Domestic Abuse Working Group, the briefing, to be held in the Touch Community Centre, will relate the difficulty men have in finding support for themselves and their children.

The group's Freedom of Information request to Fife Constabulary show that the number of reported incidents of domestically abused men has more than doubled in the last four years, from 213 to 463.

This is in line with Scotland-wide police statistics which show males on the receiving end in one of eight reported incidents – although government research has shown that men are much less likely to report being victims of domestic abuse.'

---
*Fife is a council (ie, a county) in Scotland.

MSN asks "Do Women Make Better Managers?" - and you know the answer already

Matt · 23 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Before getting to the point of this provocative headline, here's a disclaimer: Prepare to consider widely accepted generalizations.

Translated, that means, "Included in this article are some sweeping statements presented as general truths but based on limited or incomplete evidence."

But let me add this: Remember, too, that being equal does not mean being the same. Now, let's proceed.
...
For owners of small and midsized businesses, being able to keep staffers and stakeholders enthusiastic may be the key factor in building success. "You want to delegate outcomes, not tasks," says consultant Siegel. "You must have the ability to let go. Women can do that better than men because their self-esteem is multifaceted," he says. "Men's self-esteem is based on what they do, it's uni-dimensional."

The upshot for chief executives should be to move over to the "female" side of management, whether you're a thoroughgoing left-brainer or a woman trying to manage "male." Turns out, girls can do it better.'

Remember guys, sexist generalizations are fine when made to the benefit of women.

Boy faces capital murder charge in baby’s death

Matt · 23 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HOUSTON - A 12-year-old suspended from school for fighting killed a 10-month-old baby by throwing him to the floor at a home where several young children were unsupervised, officials said Wednesday.

The preteen boy, whom authorities won't name because of his age, was charged as a juvenile with capital murder. A judge Wednesday ordered him held in juvenile detention.
...
Authorities still are trying to determine how many children were in the house in a working class section of southeast Houston when the mothers of the two sets of siblings left them alone. They also don't yet know whether the 12-year-old, who was the oldest in the group, was specifically left in charge.
...

"It's not clear whether the mothers told the 12-year-old, 'You are in charge,' and left with the intention of coming back. He would have been the oldest so more than likely you would think he would be in charge," Olguin said.
...
CPS has not taken custody of any of the two mothers' children. It is legal to leave children alone as long as one child is 12 or older.

If convicted, the boy could receive a maximum 40-year prison sentence, probation or commitment to the Texas Youth Commission system, said Bill Moore, the chief of the juvenile division for the Harris County District Attorney's Office.'

"Micro-credit" founder offering loans in New York-- to women only

Matt · 23 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters) - Nobel Peace Prize winner Muhammad Yunus, known as the "banker to the poor" for making small loans in impoverished countries, is now doing business in the center of capitalism -- New York City.

In the past year the first U.S. branch of his Grameen Bank has lent $1.5 million, ranging from a few hundred dollars to a few thousand dollars, to nearly 600 women with small business plans in the city's borough of Queens.
...
Zemia Shoffner received a loan of $2,000 in January from Grameen America, which she used to take a baking class to expand her catering expertise and drum up more business.

"I have been running my business for about three years now and (the course) meant a lot because it makes me more marketable," Shoffner told Reuters, noting her bad credit meant she could not get a traditional bank loan.'

Ex-Teacher Who Fled to Mexico With Student Lover Gets 8 to 10 Years in Prison

anthony · 23 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LEXINGTON, Neb. — A former Nebraska teacher who fled to Mexico with a 13-year-old student has been sentenced to eight to 10 years in prison.

Kelsey Peterson's sentence Thursday in Dawson County District Court comes after she pleaded guilty in January to two counts of first-degree sexual assault of a minor.

Her sentence is to be served simultaneously with a six-year federal prison sentence she's already serving for transporting a minor across state lines to have sex.

She had faced up to 50 years in prison on each count.'

Feminists go on 'Someone was raped here' graffiti campaign

anthony · 23 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Keep in mind the graffiti/vandalism is not for actual rape convictions, only accusations. No information was provided about whether these feminists were charged with vandalism. Excerpt:

'Local feminists launched a dynamic anti-rape campaign this month, marking the locations of sexual assaults with graffiti declaring “Someone was raped here.”

Sympathetic activists have responded with praise, while some rape survivors have responded with disgust. Radical feminism is back in Columbus—but is it doing any good?
...
Locations were chosen from OSU’s campus police crime logs according to Jennifer Yoder, founder of the Feminist Avengers. They were left near sites where multiple rapes were reported, so that no particular survivors would be singled out, said a spokeswoman for the vandals, Yoder said. Deputy Chief Richard Moorman of OSU’s police department said his office received one e-mailed complaint about the graffiti.
...
Though the “Raped Here” stencilings were quickly removed from their locations, the debate over the action is only heating up on the Feminist Avengers website.'

On YouTube: Lorena Bobbitt talking about throwing a Penis on Oprah

anthony · 23 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Clip here. This clip is only 23 seconds long but you'll notice the audience having a good laugh when Lorena Bobbit talks about throwing the man's genitals from the car window. Absolutely deplorable.

Mother and Daughter Rob Elderly Man then Leave Him to Die

Vince · 24 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Who says women can't steal? Excerpt:

"WILKES-BARRE, Pa. - A mother and daughter in northeastern Pennsylvania have admitted to robbing a 73-year-old man of $100, then leaving him to die.

They are 37-year-old Andrea Bidding of Exeter and her 19-year-old daughter, Erika Legg. Both pleaded guilty to third-degree murder on Thursday for the 2005 beating death of Peter Lach at his home in Edwardsville, a small town about 95 miles north-northwest of Philadelphia. They said they did it because they needed money and didn't mean for anyone to die."

UK: Wealthy women using more pre-nups to protect themselves

Broadsword · 24 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Contracts stipulating how much money each party would receive if a marriage collapsed have traditionally been demanded by successful businessmen wary of "gold-digging" wives.

But growing numbers of women – many of whom received large payouts from previous divorce settlements – are now turning to the law to ensure that their future husbands are not entitled to half their riches.
...
"There has been a surge of interest. With the recession hitting there is an awareness among women that men are going to take their money unless they protect it," she said.
...
"Many, particularly those who have been married before, have told us that they would very much like to find a partner but are cautious when it comes to what happens to their cash."'

UK: FRA activist's 'chaos' pledge

Matt · 24 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A FATHERS' rights activist from Ottery has vowed to cause "massive public disruption" by "shutting down" one of the country's "major public infrastructures" by the end of the month.

New Fathers For Justice campaigner and dad of two Richard West*, 42, who has carried out a string of high-profile protests while clad in superhero garb, said he has issued the "ultimatum" to protest against the NHS and Home Secretary For Justice Jack Straw.

Mr West wants the NHS to disclose case notes regarding treatment given to one of his children and also claims a pledge to "open up" family court hearings to the media by Minister Straw is in fact a "smokescreen" that will see them "closed further" thanks to a related, "small print" contempt of court law.'

---

*Link added

UK: Compulsory audits on equal pay will force firms to give women more

Broadsword · 24 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Companies will be forced by law to disclose how much they pay men compared with women in a surprise government move to narrow the pay gap.

Compulsory “gender pay audits” will seek to shame employers who routinely pay women less, and spur more women to demand pay rises.

...

The new law will apply to companies with 250 or more staff, who will be given until 2013 to comply. After that they will face civil or criminal prosecution. It will also apply to public sector bodies with 150 staff or more.

...

Ministers would like to see a simple comparison of average hourly earnings of men and women, across the whole company, published in the annual report.

Although ministers recognise that career choices made by women, who often still favour low-paid professions, account for part of the pay difference, they believe that companies are still paying men more than women for similar work, in the belief that that no one will discuss their salary level so they will not be caught breaking the law."

California high school exit exam gets a failing grade in Stanford study

anthony · 24 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Boys are doing well on this particular test and its now considered a problem. It's acceptable for girls to outperform boys, but not the other way around. I suspect California will act quickly to change these testing outcomes while boys still wallow in special education classes. Excerpt:

'Graduation rates for low-achieving minority students and girls have fallen nearly 20 percentage points since California implemented a law requiring high school students to pass exit exams in order to graduate, according to a new Stanford study.
...
The study also said the exam is not a fair assessment of the basic skill levels of minority students and girls, because it takes higher skill levels for them to pass the test.
...
"Clearly the exam has had a disproportionately negative impact on students of color and girls," said Sean Reardon, an associate professor of education at Stanford and the study lead author. "That is consistent across all four school districts we studied. It's a statewide phenomenon, not just a problem of one or two districts. These findings are troubling."'

California Mother Accused of Murdering Baby Daughter After Kidnap Hoax

anthony · 24 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PALMDALE, Calif. — A woman was arrested Thursday for allegedly murdering her 1-year-old daughter, dumping her body along a highway and telling authorities the child was kidnapped.

Stacey Barker, 24, has been under investigation since her toddler was found March 20 in tall grass a few blocks from a Los Angeles highway.

The woman initially reported being knocked out by someone while putting young Emma into her car and waking up to find the child missing. She later recanted the story and claimed the child died in an accident.'

'The Origins of Political Correctness'

anthony · 24 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Where does all this stuff that you've heard about this morning – the victim feminism, the gay rights movement, the invented statistics, the rewritten history, the lies, the demands, all the rest of it – where does it come from? For the first time in our history, Americans have to be fearful of what they say, of what they write, and of what they think. They have to be afraid of using the wrong word, a word denounced as offensive or insensitive, or racist, sexist, or homophobic.

...

First of all, both are totalitarian ideologies. The totalitarian nature of Political Correctness is revealed nowhere more clearly than on college campuses, many of which at this point are small ivy covered North Koreas, where the student or faculty member who dares to cross any of the lines set up by the gender feminist or the homosexual-rights activists, or the local black or Hispanic group, or any of the other sainted "victims" groups that PC revolves around, quickly find themselves in judicial trouble. Within the small legal system of the college, they face formal charges – some star-chamber proceeding – and punishment. That is a little look into the future that Political Correctness intends for the nation as a whole.'

New Orleans Jazz Fest now has modern restrooms-- for women only

anthony · 24 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Any Jazz Fest veteran is familiar with portable potties. And the guys know to get in the lines where there are more guys than gals. The line just moves faster.

It seems the Jazz Fest organizers have given this some thought. This year look for two sets of roomy restrooms on 53-foot trailers that are for women only. That's even better than a short line at the Crawfish Monica booth.

The women-only restrooms will have flushing toilets, hand sanitizers and mirrors. One will be on the dirt trail in front of the Blues Tent, and the other near the Congo Square crossing.

So, go ahead and indulge in that Mango Freeze and jumbo lemonade. Drink up, girls!'

UK: Woman who fractures baby's skull freed by judge; judge says "you have suffered enough"

Anonymous · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who battered a nine-week-old baby in an horrific attack has avoided jail after a judge decided she had already suffered enough. Claire Thompson, 32, who had been entrusted with looking after the infant, was found guilty in March of fracturing its skull, breaking a rib and inflicting up to three leg fractures.
...
An expert at her trial said the skull fracture was probably caused by the baby's head hitting a hard surface with force, the rib was probably broken by severe squeezing and the the leg bones were likely to have been fractured by forceful pulling or twisting, or by violent shaking.

But yesterday Judge David Goodin spared Thompson from prison, handing her a nine-month suspended prison sentence, ordering her to do 200 hours of community service and telling her to pay &500 costs.

Hearing that she had 'lost everything' following the assault, he heaped praise on her character and told her she had already suffered more than any sentence he could impose on her.'

Judge Goodin said: 'All evidence simply confirms you to be an industrious, decent and placid well-liked young woman who was slow to anger and disinclined to confrontation.' He added: 'The only sensible explanation for these injuries must have been a sudden and momentary loss of control.

Opinion: A compromise for the term 'feminism'

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's strange to me that the same women who would not be caught dead using the words wuss and hysteria for their obvious and not-so-obvious slights about women will still proudly proclaim that they are feminists. In other words, my problem with feminism is a semantic one. Words shape the way we think about and how we interact with the world. Many men are put off by the word feminism, and rightly so, because it tilts the favoritism from one side of the scale, men, to its polar opposite.

In reality, women and men have equal intrinsic value, so a compromise is needed that eliminates the problems associated with feminism; for this purpose, I would like to coin the term equalism. An equalist is someone who advocates equal rights for men and women.'

Community View: Have we encouraged girls at the expense of boys?

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Year after year, there are multiple conferences and seminars dedicated to helping girls become young ladies, focus on education and achieve emotional wholeness, but seldom do I hear of the same type of programming for boys.

We tell our girls to be feminine, independent, virginal, strong and intelligent. We support this effort by developing programs to assist girls in these areas, but I often wonder if we have gone too far. What I mean is, have we as a society shifted our investment to girls with the assumption that boys will continue to improve? Statistics vary from source to source.

Some say that boys are not in crisis, when others state the opposite. In 2006, Newsweek published an article called "The Trouble With Boys." By almost every benchmark, boys across the nation and in every demographic group are falling behind, the author wrote.'

Jeffery M. Leving: Palin's father is wrong: boys aren't deadbeat dads

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In recent interviews on "The Tyra Banks Show" and CBS's "Early Show," Levi Johnston accused the family of Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin of limiting his access to his infant son, Tripp.

Only the parties involved know if that is true, but Johnston has brought to the forefront the real pain suffered by many unmarried teen fathers, who have little or no access to their children due to interference by their ex-partners and their families. This is a real problem in America, where 76 percent of teen births are out of wedlock.

In response to Johnston's statements, Sarah Palin's father, Chuck Heath, called the boy a "deadbeat dad," claiming that he was not contributing financially to the raising of his son.'

DA: Woman had 'sex' with teenage boy

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 31-year-old mother of a teenage daughter had unlawful sexual intercourse with a 14-year-old boy she picked up with his friends at a San Bruno movie theater last year, according to prosecutors who say she also plied them with alcohol and cigarettes.

Nina Valeska Herrera has pleaded not guilty to the charges of unlawful sexual intercourse, lewd and lascivious acts with a minor age 14, two counts of providing alcohol to a minor and three misdemeanor counts of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Herrera was expected to face trial last week but, with no judges available to hear the case, she returned to court yesterday to pick a new date of Aug. 31.'

According to the District Attorney's Office, on March 9, 2008, Herrera "cruised around" in her minivan seeking out teenage boys at the San Bruno movie theater. Herrera, a divorced mother of a 13-year-old girl, reportedly picked up the 14-year-old alleged victim and his friends and offered them alcohol and cigarettes.

Fish may be brain food for teenage boys

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters Health) - Teenage boys who regularly eat fish may be doing their brains some good, a new study suggests.

Swedish researchers found that among nearly 5,000 15-year-old boys they surveyed, those who ate fish more than once per week tended to score higher on intelligence tests three years later.
...
Researchers believe that the omega-3 fats found in fish -- particularly oily fish like salmon, mackerel and, to a lesser extent, albacore tuna -- are important to early brain development and to maintaining healthy brain function throughout life.'

Another Women Only Event Trumpeted

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'One of the annual rites of spring kicked off inside the Salina Bicentennial Center Thursday afternoon. Salina Media Group's "For Women Only" show did not disappoint.

A large crowd was already in the parking lot, ready to file in, as the doors opened at 4:30.

With nearly 50 vendors and booths, this year's edition featured something for everyone*, including great prizes.

Prize's [sic] ranged from $20 gift certificates to prizes worth hundreds of dollars. Riddle's Jewelry gave away the grand prize, a $1,500 diamond pendant.'

---

*Everyone except men. Or children.

Clinic to offer low-cost checkups -- for women only

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Throughout May, Bridge Community Health Clinic will offer well-woman checkups for $25. The checkups include a pap smear to screen for cervical cancer, a pelvic exam, a breast exam and blood pressure check, said Sarah Jaeger, a physician assistant at the clinic.

The exams do not include mammograms, but the clinic works with Aspirus Women's Health to see if Bridge Clinic patients qualify for free mammograms, said Laura Scudiere, Bridge Community Health Clinic's executive director.
...
"With the economy and people being laid off, I think it's really going to resonate with people this year," Scudiere said. Some women only visit the clinic in May.

Screenings have caught precancerous conditions among some patients, Jaeger said. The clinic works with the state's Wisconsin Well Woman program to help offset costs for follow-up care.'

Supreme Court Ruling Unlikely to End Affirmative Action

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The other pillar of the court's anti-affirmative argument – and it cropped up again in the New Haven case – is that qualified white males are getting kicked to the curb and are losing ground to unqualified blacks, minorities and women. That myth has been repeatedly debunked. According to census figures, if every unemployed black worker in the country were to displace a white worker, only a tiny fraction of whites would be affected. Furthermore, affirmative action pertains only to job-qualified applicants, so the actual percentage of affected whites would be minuscule. In New Haven, the number of firefighters allegedly affected was 20. The main sources of job loss among white workers have to do with factory relocations and labor contracting outside the United States, computerization and automation, and corporate downsizing.
...

During the presidential campaign, affirmative action was not an issue. John McCain and Barack Obama made only the barest mention of it. And that came only in response to when Connerly plopped his anti-affirmative action measure on ballots in three states, one of which was McCain's home state of Arizona. McCain backed the Connerly measure. He insisted that he backed equal opportunity and opposed discrimination. Obama opposed the initiatives. Connerly quickly pounced on Obama for it, noting that he cut radio ads in 2006 that hammered his Michigan anti-affirmative action initiative. Obama unabashedly said that if the measure passed it would hurt women and minorities in getting jobs and in education. Connerly tried to use Obama's opposition to his initiative as a foil. But it did not diminish voter support for Obama.

The Supreme Court almost certainly will rule in favor of the white firefighters in New Haven. But it won't end affirmative action. And that's still fine with most Americans.'

Job losses creating more stay-at-home dads

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It makes sense for more and more families, said Scott Coltrane, a University of Oregon sociologist who studies the role of fathers. In the months since Hammond lost his job, the work force trend toward 50-50 parity between males and females has accelerated, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Experts interpret that as indicating that more men have been laid off than women, freeing them for greater parenting duties.

Even before the recession, fathers were taking a larger role in family responsibilities as dual-income families became more the norm, Coltrane said.

And more stay-at-home fathers. The number jumped by almost 50 percent from 2003 to 2006, according to U.S. Census Bureau figures. Even so, there were still more than 30 stay-at-home mothers for every father after that growth.'

'No nice guys, please'

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thank heaven for a good man indeed, that's a laugh. You would think that most women would really clamour for a good man's love, rush to be with a really nice guy, race to snag a gentleman, but alas, that is often so far from the truth.

Statistics have shown that many women don't really want nice guys - those knights in shining armour - and as the song says, "Nice guys only win in the movies", plus the French, who are reputed to know all about romance, also say, "Women marry gentlemen and fool around with rogues." So in any language it's "No nice guys, please." Nice guys seem to finish last on many occasions, and even the responses to my article on 'How to Handle a Woman' attests to that, as you'll see.'

American Thinker: 'Women can be brutal too!'

anthony · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We often hear and read about men brutalizing women and it is a national disgrace that so many women live their lives in terror. I've written many times about the battering situations I came across as a police officer in NYC.

But, there's another type of battering I've witnessed, albeit not nearly as often; women brutalizing men. While working a tour in Brooklyn one night, my partner and I were summoned to an apartment to handle an assault in progress. When we arrived and climbed a few flights of stairs, we heard moaning sounds coming from behind an open door of one of the rooms. Other occupants of the building were standing outside their apartments yelling advice to us about the incident. "Be careful officer, she's crazy!" one woman hollered, jabbing her finger in the direction of the open door.'

Nurse pleads not guilty to killing 5 patients at Texas dialysis clinic, released on bail

Matt · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'LUFKIN, Texas - A former nurse has pleaded not guilty to murdering five patients and injuring five others with bleach injections at a Texas dialysis clinic.

The Lufkin Daily News reports that 35-year-old Kimberly Saenz remains free on $500,000 bond after her Friday arraignment.

She's charged with five counts each of capital murder and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon.

The indictment alleges she injected 10 patients with bleach last April at the Lufkin DaVita Dialysis clinic and that five of them died.

Federal records show 34 patients were taken by ambulance from the clinic that month, more than three times the March total.

DaVita fired Saenz a day after temporarily closing the clinic.'

MSN: 8 Signs That You're a Dirty Fighter

Matt · 26 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If so, it's time to dial back your behavior. Why? Well, for starters, a fight with you means a full-volume freak-fest. Sometimes you'll destroy things; other times, you'll fight until you're too exhausted to bark anymore. Not good! "Your flare-ups tend to be so unpredictable, you're virtually begging your partner to bury his own anger," explains Jeff Palitz, a licensed marriage and family therapist. "The more stunts you pull, the more your spouse will pull away and ignore you."

Tame-your-temper tricks:

The key is to delay your explosions. The next time you fight, take a walk, suggests Palitz. Once you've gotten a little more oxygen flow to your brain, you can approach the topic logically (like, Okay, maybe he doesn't want another wife...he just said my closet was messy). Another approach? Try opening up (about your family, your sex life, how you'd like to spend your joint money) when you two are actually getting along, Palitz says. He's much more likely to hear you when you aren't screaming.'

"Sometimes you'll destroy things" - Yes, indeed. If men do that it's an arrestable offense. If women, do it, it's just them "getting angry and a little too worked up."

Well I have to give MSN some credit. I wasn't expecting them to publish an article like this in any case.

Harriet Harperson: Pay gap disclosure 'will boost economic recovery'

Broadsword · 27 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

"Requiring firms to reveal the "pay gap" between their male and female staff will help, not hinder, Britain's recovery from recession, Equalities Minister Harriet Harman insisted today.

...

"The economies of the future that will prosper are the ones which are not blinkered, held back by old-fashioned hierarchies, by a sense of women knowing their place, by overlooking the talents and abilities of people on the basis of the colour of their skin," she told reporters.

"When times are difficult, actually fairness is at a premium and it does not cost anything to be fair. It is part of helping the economy prosper for the future by tackling what its market failure because it is market failure to treat people unfairly for any reason.

"We don't see this as anti-competitiveness - it actually underpins competitiveness.

"Equality and opportunity underpins a meritocracy. This does not hold business back, this helps business."

Glenn Sacks Campaign: Protest Lifetime's New Reality Show 'Deadbeat Dads'

Matt · 27 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Campaign page here. Excerpt:

'Lifetime TV announced the launch of its new, father-bashing reality show Deadbeat Dads last week. To email and fax a letter to Lifetime Executives protesting this show, click here.

According to The Hollywood Reporter, “Deadbeat Dads, originally developed at Fox, follows National Child Support founder Jim Durham as he tracks down and confronts dads who don’t pay child support.” According to Reuters, Durham “functions as a sort of ‘Dog the Bounty Hunter’ for tracking deadbeats…It’s ambush reality TV.” Durham will target fathers who are behind on their child support by “making their lives miserable — foreclosing on their house, repossessing their car. He will squeeze them.”

Germany: "Neighborly effort" to help couple have a baby reveals paternity fraud

Matt · 27 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Truth again beats fiction with this story. No mention of what effect the revelation involved in this tale had on the one couple.

"A nice story, with surprising end:

In Stuttgart, Germany, a court judge must decide on a case of honorable intentions in a situation where a man hired his neighbor to get his wife pregnant.

It seems that Demetrius Soupolos, 29, and his former beauty queen wife, Traute, wanted a child badly, but Demetrius was told by a doctor that he was sterile.

So, Soupolos, after calming his wife's protests, hired his neighbor, Frank Maus, 34, to impregnate her. Since Maus was already married and the father of two children, plus looked very much like Soupolos to boot, the plan seemed good.

Soupolos paid Maus $2,500 for the job and for three evenings a week for the next six months, Maus tried desperately, a total of 72 different times, to impregnate Traute.

When his own wife objected, he explained, "I don't like this any more than you. I'm simply doing it for the money. Try and understand."

When Traute failed to get pregnant after six months, however, Soupolos was not understanding and insisted that Maus have a medical examination, which he did.

The doctor's announcement that Maus was also sterile shocked everyone except his wife, who was forced to confess that Maus was not the real father of their two children.

Now Soupolos is suing Maus for breach of contract in an effort to get his money back, but Maus refuses to give it up because he said he did not guarantee conception, but only that he would give an honest effort."

Ex-marshal sues Colorado Springs, alleges anti-male bias

anthony · 27 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.—A former marshal with the Colorado Springs police department has filed a lawsuit against the city claiming he was discriminated against because he is a man.

Attorney Hollie Wieland said Friday that her client Philip McDonald received good evaluations but started having problems under a male supervisor who allegedly treated women better than men.

She says McDonald faced retaliation when he voiced concerns about what he thought were racist comments that a white female co-worker made to a black female co-worker, then was fired in 2007 over unfounded allegations that he left a courtroom unattended while court was in session.

Lori Miskel, a senior city attorney, says the city believes it acted appropriately. '

'Family Court practices unfair to the accused (read: male)'

anthony · 27 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'I personally believe that the Family Court system consistently and institutionally violates the Constitution's Fifth and Fourteenth amendments, regarding due process and equal treatment under the law.

My reasoning: When petitioners come to Family Court and file for a protection from abuse order, but cannot afford their own legal representation, they are immediately referred to the Delaware Legal Aid Society where they can receive a highly skilled and impassioned attorney. The petitioner will also be granted one and sometimes two court advocates.

The respondent, whom I will refer to as the accused (remember innocent until proven guilty), has no such recourse. In fact if a respondent contacts the Delaware Legal Aid Society, he will be told point-blank that the organization only represents the petitioner.

So when the day of the hearing arrives, the petitioner's legal machine is ready to conquer.

The respondent's fate is all but certain. Not knowing how to effectively navigate through the legal arena, he is easy prey.'

Opinion: Are scales tilting toward women?

anthony · 27 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All over the world, more men than women report a history of attempted suicide, with a gender ratio of 3:1, as revealed by many survey reports.

There is a lack of advocacy for men's rights and there are more social programs for women than for men indicating a gender bias favouring women.

Special government agencies for women's affairs have been set up recently in many nations with no corresponding agencies for men's affairs.

There is a general assumption of female innocence in sexual assault cases or sympathy for women, invariably there is a dismissal of female-on-male rape cases.'

Women's Network hosts bake sale to illustrate gender wage gap by charging men more

anthony · 27 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Women on campus will be able to buy cookies, brownies and other bakery items for 75 cents, while men will have to pay $1 if they want a bite at a campus bake sale, a member of the TCU Women's Network said.

Megan O'Brien, president of the TCU Women's Network and senior art history major, said the Women's Network and Women's Studies Program will be hosting a bake sale to illustrate the gap between women's and men's wages on Thursday.

...

O'Brien said women on average get paid 77 cents to every dollar earned by men. The bake sale will sell cookies, brownies, cake and vegan options, she said.'

More Events Where Men Put On Women's Shoes

anthony · 27 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A walk around the Quad is normally a piece of cake, unless you were one of the several men that participated in “Walk a Mile in Her Shoes” on Sunday afternoon.

The walk was in accordance with Sexual Assault Awareness Month.
...
The men donned the high heel footwear and walked one lap around the Quad. They were then assisted by the women in the crowd for another half lap. The walk was followed by a short speech by Ross Wantland, coordinator of sexual assault education for the Women’s Resources Center.'

Relatedly, Men in heels. Excerpt:

'CLARINGTON -- Councillor Willie Woo looked quite dapper in his black suit, white shirt, ruby tie and ... red stilettos?

Yes, the Clarington politician's footwear did, indeed, consist of a pair of size 13 red pumps as he helped promote the upcoming Walk a Mile in Her Shoes event being organized by Bowmanville's Bethesda house, a women's shelter and outreach centre.

The event, in which men will wear or carry women's shoes, is aimed at raising both money and public awareness, said Bethesda House executive director Jaki MacKinnon.'

'Women to the Rescue' -- All Girl Medical Missions

anthony · 27 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. (Ivanhoe Newswire) -- For the poor who live in developing nations, repairing a cleft lip, cataracts, or severe burns is not an option. Most are forced to live with their condition and are shunned by their own communities. But some are finally getting the help they need at the hands of a tireless group of American women.

If you find this difficult to look at, imagine how hard it must be to live with. This is the reality for those in countries without the medical expertise or money for surgery. It's no surprise then that local clinics are swamped when Denise Cucurny and Amy Wandel, M.D., come to town. The anthropologist and plastic surgeon, with a team of female doctors and nurses, travel the world fixing cleft lips, cataracts, burns and cavities
...
Their gender, they say, opens doors and builds trust.

"We're accepted places where men might not be accepted because we tend to come as non-threatening, non-violent, nurturing, giving people," Dr. Wandel explained.'

UK: Men are no more promiscuous than women, survey finds

anthony · 27 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Researchers found that women and men in countries like Britain tended to have the same number of children with the same number of partners.

The study of more than 10,000 people in 18 countries seems to throw on its head the generally accepted expectations that men tend naturally towards promiscuity and women are more particular when it comes to choosing a mate.

It also seemed to disprove the belief that some men are incredibly successful at mating while others fail altogether.
...
Dr Gillian Brown, of the University of St Andrews, said: "The study shows that women are just as likely to seek out just as many partners as men.'

Father and daughter both lose because of hatred

Anonymous · 28 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This is the tragedy of a messed up mom who couldn't parent, a stable dad who wanted to but was overlooked and a troubled child who's been raised by the state. Our favorite misandrist columnist Mindelle (Mindy) Jacobs of the The Sun Media Group actually delivers a non misandrist column (albeit with a few backhanded swipes) of fathers.

I have sent an email to Ms. Jacobs to acknowledge the fact that she wrote a positive column on men (for once) but to also let her know we are still monitoring her scribblings. You can send e-mail to Ms. Jacobs mindy.jacobs-at-sunmedia.ca. Excerpt:

'This is the tragedy of a messed up mom who couldn't parent, a stable dad who wanted to but was overlooked and a troubled child who's been raised by the state.

Some men don't want anything to do with the children they've fathered. Others, like David, do but end up shut out of their kids' lives because of hostile ex-partners, government bureaucracy and legal fees that sap their spirits as well as their bank accounts.

I'd like to identify David (not his real name) but I can't because his daughter, almost 17, is in foster care in B.C. She has been a permanent ward of the state since age 8, when she was removed from her unfit mother's care. '

UK: Education expert called in after primary boys score bad results

anthony · 28 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'An education expert is being roped in to help boys shine as brightly as girls in the classroom.

Last week the Post revealed how primary schools in Neath, Port Talbot and the Swansea Valley had some of the lowest results in Wales.

The good news was that secondary education was among the best in the Principality. But at both levels there was a clear "must do better" message for boys, who were lagging way behind girls.

Now Professor David Egan, of the Cardiff School of Education, who acts as advisor to the Assembly on issues such as teacher education and the reform of 14-19 education policy, is being brought in to advise the county's education chiefs and put forward recommendations to engage boys more at primary and secondary level.

Cabinet member for education councillor John Roger said: "We are determined to help bridge the gender divide and look forward to working with Professor Egan to put a number of recommendations in place."'

RADAR ALERT: NOW vs. Rush Limbaugh on DV - Who's Right?

Matt · 28 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Last week, NOW responded to comments made by Rush Limbaugh on domestic violence. Limbaugh stated:

"Remember when the NOW gang and all these other social interest groups started asking women if they'd ever been a victim of domestic violence? They didn't like the numbers they got initially. The numbers weren't high enough for the NOW gang. So they expanded the definition to include a man shouting at them. A man shouting at them equaled domestic violence. It didn't matter if the women shouted first."

Melody Drnach, Action Vice President of NOW, responded:

"It shows that NOW and other advocacy groups are on the right track spreading the message of domestic violence when even Rush Limbaugh agreed that domestic violence comes in all forms -- physical abuse, mental abuse and verbal abuse ... When Rush Limbaugh understands that shouting is a form of domestic violence, then we are on the right track. Then we did something right."

While Ms. Drnach is right that DV "comes in all forms," her disingenuous comment about Limbaugh's understanding of DV ignores the truth. RADAR Service's special report, "Expanding Definitions of Domestic Violence, Vanishing Rule of Law," (.pdf file) which analyzes the civil domestic violence laws> in all 50 states and the District of Columbia, concludes that statutory definitions have been widened over the past decade to the point that in most states, almost any action can be viewed as "violent." As Washington attorney Lisa Scott put it in 2006, Domestic violence has become whatever the man does that the woman doesn't like. Finding out she is having an affair and demanding she stop is seen as 'abuse.' This often triggers the woman to file for a restraining order, where no real evidence is required. In my 18 years of family law practice, I have seen this pattern occur over and over."

RADAR spokesman Ron Grignol would be a great guest for the Rush Limbaugh show. Please e-mail Rush at his public e-mail address: ElRushbo-at-eibnet.com), or if you're feeling ambitious, join his website to use the member's only e-mail address.

Ask Rush to interview Ron about the continually expanding definition of domestic violence. Have the producer call 703-868-0535. Thanks.

++
Date of RADAR Release: April 28, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

Virginia Apgar, M.D.

Matt · 28 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A friend pointed this out to me. A woman who got where she went all without trumpeting her victimhood/femaleness at every turn as either a pro or con to all her efforts! She did it all without the help of feminists' whining and bullying, and without doing that herself, too! Imagine that!

If a woman needs hero to look up to, an example of an independent woman who doesn't let her sex be a factor in all her decisions, let her look to Dr. Apgar. Excerpt:

'In 1953, she introduced the first test, called the Apgar score, to assess the health of newborn babies. It is administered one minute and five minutes after birth, and sometimes also at 10 minutes.

While Apgar was frequently the "first woman" or "only woman" in a department, to serve in a position, or win an accolade, she avoided the organized women's movement, proclaiming that "women are liberated from the time they leave the womb".

Apgar never married, and died on August 7, 1974, at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center.'

The American Fertility Association Blog declares "Men Lie"

Matt · 28 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Nothing makes me happier than seeing a man thoroughly enjoying himself. So I was very happy last night, watching Richard Grazi having a ball, talking with a room full of young women at our most recent Manicures & Martinis event in Brooklyn. His take home message? Men lie.

Did you know that? I had my suspicions, but still….Dr. Grazi confirmed it last night. Yup. Men lie. Why did that little tidbit come up at an infertility prevention event? Hmmmm. Have you ever heard of STD's?

Oh yeah. One of the key points of the Manicures & Martinis events is a simple one – if you are not currently trying to get pregnant, use a condom. You would be surprised how many women don't. And the reasons why they don't got knocked out of the water by Dr. G. over and over again last night. He told them straight – married men lie too. And no man really likes to wear a condom, he said. It feels like wearing surgical gloves when you're playing the piano.'

Yes, men do lie. So do women. After all, if a man gets an STD from a woman, and she didn't mention it before, was it spread "accidentally" before she knew about it in each and every case? Doubt it. This is simply more gleeful male-bashing, begun in this case by one Dr. Richard Grazi, and happily propagated by a misandrist writing on her blog. Dr. Grazi knows better, or he should anyway, and it strikes me he was playing to his audience and thus taking his one-sided misandry to the bank. Alas, he is not alone in that.

The AFA Blog staff contact page is here. The author of this particular screed's email is Corey.Whelan-at-TheAFA.org.

If you do decide to let Dr. Grazi or the AFA know how you feel, please remember to be polite and stick to the facts. Nasty voicemails, cursing, etc., hurt our cause and don't bring enlightenment but only cause others to dig in their heels and claim victimhood. We got enough of that already. What's important here is to let them know they are not going unnoticed in their misandry. That in itself is a very powerful means of reducing this kind of wonton bigotry.

Police investigate stabbing by woman justin · 28 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A remarkable short story in the Ottawa Citizen. Notice the lack of gender designation in the headline.

'OTTAWA — Gatineau police are looking for an 18-year-old woman after an altercation between two women in Buckingham Monday night sent one woman to the hospital with non-life threatening stab wounds.

At around 7 p.m., an altercation broke out between two 18-year-old women at the corner of Rue Jean-XXIII and Rue des Pins.

One of the women sustained multiple stab wounds to her face, chest, hand and leg. She tried to escape, police said, and ran into a house on Rue des Pins, before going to the hospital with a friend.

Police were informed of the stabbing at about 10:25 p.m., said Const. Isabelle Poirier.

The suspect, also an 18-year-old Gatineau woman, is known to the victim. No arrest has yet been made.

The investigation continues.'

Equalism blog "Pendulum Effect" interviews available

Matt · 28 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Justin Trottier was kind enough to interview yours truly for his on-line Equalism web site, http://www.equalismactivism.com/. Justin is also the exec. director of the Center for Inquiry, Toronto chapter. The interview can be found here.

Regarding the introduction on the podcast page though, I just want to point out that I didn't help organize the 2007 Boys and the Boy Crisis Conference, since by then I had relocated from the area, but I was involved in organizing the previous two MR conferences. MANN's own Tom G. was the organizer of the 2007 conference and he was one heck of a one-man band at it, too.

I also want to encourage people to listen to the archived interviews as well, as there is a lot of good commentary and insight available in all of them.

As for my interview, well, I'll be signing mp3's in the lobby. ;)

CBS News: "Government's Gender Pay Gap Shrinking"

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(AP) Women working in the federal government still earn less than their male counterparts, but the pay gap is shrinking.

The difference between average annual salary for men and women in the federal work force declined from 19 cents to 11 cents on the dollar between 1998 and 2007, according to a draft report from the Government Accountability Office.

...

All but 7 cents of the gap can be accounted for by differences in measurable factors, such as differences in education levels and the type of jobs men and women had, the report said. The gap narrowed the more men and women shared characteristics, including the jobs held, levels of experience and education.'

Woman found not guilty of stabbing husband & father through insanity

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Beech Island woman who seemed to mentally snap and stab her husband and father has been found not guilty by reason of insanity.

Angela Glass admitted to stabbing her husband and pleaded guilty to assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature. She had originally been charged with assault and battery with intent to kill.

On April 17, 2006 Aiken County Sheriff's Office responded to a Beech Island address, they saw Glass' husband and father with knife wounds. When they found Glass, she told officers "I stabbed him."

During subsequent evaluations and interviews, Glass was believed to have been hearing voices, seeing visions, she talked about being god, then changed to being Satan, according to testimony. She also hallucinated about being pregnant.

Both the husband and father refused to press charges stating that they knew their daughter/wife was not in a right state of mind.'

Woman accused of killing FBI agent requests visits with her children

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Christina Korbe has asked a federal court judge to authorize visits with her children.

Ms. Korbe, who has been in jail since Nov. 19, when she was charged in the shooting death of an FBI agent at her Indiana Township home, is being held in the Cambria County Prison.

John Elash, one of her defense attorneys, said Ms. Korbe has not had a contact with her children, ages 5 and 10, since she and her husband were arrested after a drug raid at their home.

In addition to the homicide charge, Ms. Korbe, 40, has been indicted on charges of conspiracy to distribute cocaine, possession of cocaine and crack, assault with a dangerous weapon, aiding and abetting and using a firearm during a crime of violence.'

Woman faces new charge in alleged plot to kill ex

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ASPEN, Colo. (AP) - A Denver woman faces another felony in her alleged plot to have her ex-husband, a Pitkin County prosecutor, killed.

The Jefferson County district attorney's office this week filed a count of solicitation of second-degree murder against 36-year-old Elinor Dvir.

Dvir already was facing felony counts of solicitation of first-degree murder and solicitation of first-degree assault. She is jailed on $100,000 bond.

District attorney's spokeswoman Pam Russell says the latest charge was filed after prosecutors looked at the evidence "from more than one angle." She declined to elaborate.

Dvir was arrested March 15 after investigators say she offered an undercover police officer $2,000 to kill her ex-husband, Richard Nedlin. Court records say the two are in a custody dispute.'

Ashland woman will serve only 90 days for stabbing ex-husband

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Ashland woman, originally charged with attempting to murder her ex-husband, will serve 90 days in jail for stabbing him last year.

Marilyn Alice Gale, 60, pleaded guilty today in Jackson County Circuit Court to third-degree assault and first-degree burglary. The sentence imposed by Judge Ray White includes five years of supervised probation, and Gale must comply with a list of conditions that includes having no contact with the victim, Alan Gale.

She also must continue with mental health treatment. Gale will receive credit for time served after her May 2008 arrest, but could end up serving up to three years in prison on the assault charge if she violates any of her probation conditions, White said.'

Limerick woman jailed after husband stabbed

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LIMERICK — A Limerick woman remains in York County Jail this week on charges of aggravated assault and violating conditions of release following the stabbing of her husband last Friday.

York County Sheriff's deputies responded to a 2 a.m. call from Washington Street in Limerick on April 17 for the report of a subject suffering from several stab wounds.

Upon arrival they found Scott Gammon, 38, of Limerick, with four stab wounds to his upper torso. Gammon was conscious and alert and told deputies that his wife, Nancy Gammon, 49, had stabbed him. Scott had fled and had gone to a friend's house nearby.'

Woman charged with kidnapping kindergartener

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Rockville police have charged a woman with kidnapping a kindergartener at an elementary school.

Police say 39-year-old Xuhua Huang and her husband went to Lakewood Elementary School on Tuesday to pick up their sick daughter.

But police say Huang didn't think her daughter was being treated well and decided to leave with a different child "to make someone else feel the way she did."

Police said that a school volunteer heard the boy ask Huang who she was and where she was taking him and followed them to the parking lot. Huang's husband yelled at her to let the boy go and the boy ran back to the volunteer.

Huang is charged with kidnapping, false imprisonment and second-degree assault.'

'Where the boys aren't'

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. When you look at the picture you'll see a young man wearing a pink t-shirt stating: 'Women's Health Matters'. I wonder if he realizes he'll die approximately 4 years earlier then a female of the same age. Excerpt:

'In a split second the classroom air goes from composed to one thick with female solidarity. You can hear a pin drop. The women leer at the "sacrificial" male student, their eyes like heat-seeking missiles. He said that all women are "biologically engineered to nurture and mother offspring, so why would a woman ever want to deviate from that?" Soon the intellectual shrapnel flies as student after student rips this poor guy's comment (and ego) to shreds with well-honed feminist rhetoric.
...
But for many guys, these classes aren't worth the intellectual commitment. Yet some men brave the good fight. Jesse Game-Brown is a 22-year-old senior at the University of Michigan concentrating in women's studies. While his early experiences in the program were rocky, he continued pursuing courses because analyzing gender and masculinity norms sparked his interest.
...

Man Forum is a small but growing bunch, mostly made up of straight males from varied backgrounds — there's a feminist here, a cognitive science major there and so on. Each week sees a different theme; subjects covered include childhood, media, and deviant and predictable sexuality. It's a safe space for people to talk without offending others.

While some Man Forum participants don't consider themselves feminists, their conversation addresses themes and issues common to a women's studies classroom.

The discussion centers on domestic and sexual violence. Emotions and tempers can run high, especially when some share personal stories. But the talks mostly stay calm, with dashes of relevant pop culture references such as South Park and Deliverance.
...
"To my mind, women's studies is a perfect place to be addressing those questions," Metzl continues. "Feminist models are helpful in understanding what it means to be a man as well."'

Classy Dads: D.O.G.S. program involves men in school life

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Altogether, 80 fathers, stepfathers and other men in the students' lives were there one night last week. Counting students and other family members, the total came to about 150. Once everyone was settled in the library, the people at Bolton delivered the message that they want the men to keep coming back.

"Your children need you to be here," said Doreen Sorensen, the principal.

Guidance counselor Rinita Williams and others at Bolton are working to organize a chapter of a national group known as Watch D.O.G.S. (Dads of Great Students), a school program sponsored by the National Center for Fathering.

The idea is to get fathers and father figures into schools to eat lunch with students, help them with projects and greet them in the halls. Having men around a school can have a positive overall effect on behavior, Williams said.'

Country waits to see how Obama enforces Title IX

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Educators and high school and college officials are watching to see how the Obama administration will oversee the enforcement of the gender-discrimination law. Many agree he will at least maintain the enforcement level of Title IX, but how far his administration goes remains to be seen.

In March, Obama signed an order creating a White House Council on Women and Girls and spoke strongly in support of Title IX. Obama said he was establishing the council not just to continue equal opportunities for women, such as in sports, but to enhance them.
...
On Title IX's 36th birthday last June, Obama said he would strengthen Title IX enforcement at the Department of Education and direct the department to help schools take the initiative in fulfilling their Title IX obligations. He supports the High School Sports Information Collection Act, which directs schools to make information on equality in athletic programs publicly available, as it is at the college level. '

Canada: Prostitution: What if we only criminalized the men?

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Q. You say men are the root of the problem, and in seeking a "moment of bliss," they deepen the misery of the women they pay for sex.

A. These men never ask how she is, how did she get here, is she being forced. They don't look into her eyes beyond the veneer of gaudy makeup, stiletto heels and cheap clothes. They just want to get their rocks off. When money changes hands, it's the ultimate conscience pacifier. They don't have to deal with guilt.

Q. If johns are charged, as you recommend, how would women be protected?

A. I strongly believe the vast majority of women are victims and shouldn't be charged or picked up in vice raids. You should pick up the men. They are demanding it, doing whatever they want. Sweden decriminalized the women and criminalized the men. They know it is a human-rights violation, that you'll never have equality and dignity and respect for women as long as this is allowed. Sweden is a beacon. The number of prostituted women has been reduced by half. Norway just introduced legalisation in January.'

Vermont Legislature Considering Drivers License Bill Requiring Only Men To Register For Selective Service

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Legislature is considering a bill that would automatically register young men with the Selective Service when they go for their driver's licenses. It would be a way to avert the trouble young men fall into when they forget to register.

The Selective Service is the agency that administers the draft, which does not exist at present (and has not since 1973). For people of a certain age, who remember the role the Selective Service played in their lives in the 1960s, the whole topic inspires a complicated mixture of feelings, many of them uncomfortable.
...
In the meantime, young men are required to sign up for a draft that does not at the moment exist. As long as that is the case, they ought to be helped to do so in a convenient way. Using the driver's license process links the yearning for privilege of driving a car with the perhaps less-yearned obligation to serve. It seems like a reasonable bargain.'

Rich South teacher pleads innocent to 'sex' with student

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Former Rich South High School teacher Sarah Tolzien pleaded innocent today in Cook County Circuit Court in Markham to sexually assaulting a 16-year-old male student.

Tolzien, 24, of Arlington Heights, is facing eight counts of criminal sexual assault and 24 counts of aggravated criminal sexual abuse.

Tolzien, who also coached the boys varsity cross country team at the Richton Park school, resigned from the school Dec. 2.

The sexual activity between Tolzien and the boy, a member of the cross country team, occurred in Matteson while she gave him rides home Nov. 14 and Nov. 17, according to police.'

Teacher Accused Of 'Sex' With Godson Out On Bail

anthony · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHULA VISTA, Calif. -- A defense motion regarding questioning of the alleged victim forced the postponement Wednesday of a preliminary hearing for a South Bay elementary school teacher accused of having sex with her underage godson, who was also one of her students.

Carmina Erica Lopez, 33, is charged with eight counts of committing a lewd act on a child. She was arrested in January, when allegations of her alleged four-year sexual relationship with the victim came to light.

Prosecutor Leonard Trinh said he expects to add more charges when the defendant's preliminary hearing gets under way May 6 at the South Bay Courthouse.'

UK: "Wanted: single men to serve on the fostering front line"

Broadsword · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In his baggy jeans, he studies his fingernails to avoid making eye contact. He is evidently not keen to talk much, but what he does say is testament to how much Graham has turned his life around.
...
“Some young men say that they cannot relate to women because they have been abused by, or in major conflict with, them. In these cases the best option may be to live in an all-male household..."
...
But men prepared to work with children are in short supply. Research by the charity Action for Children has found that many are not coming forward because they fear being labelled paedophiles —a fear borne out by the results of a survey by the charity last year, in which 40 per cent of respondents said that single men should be banned from adopting. In addition, some people still see caring as “women’s work”.

Worse, men who are involved sometimes say that the system seems geared against them. Some male foster carers complain that they cannot take part in training sessions and professional development opportunities, as these are often held during traditional office hours. They also say that the content and delivery of sessions does not take their needs into account. Men who foster as part of a couple often feel that they are considered “second-class” by other professionals working with a child, who overlook them in favour of a female partner.
...
"Williams says that society needs to “get away from the idea that men are deadbeats”. He agrees that single men face barriers to fostering. “There is a lot of stereotyping — I rang up the school once and they said, ‘Don’t worry, we’ll wait to talk to your wife later.’ I said, ‘You’ll be waiting a long time because I haven’t got one!’"'

Canada: "Middle-class" prostitution by teen girls a growing problem - but guess who has to be taught to behave?

Matt · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It sounds like an overblown cautionary tale for parents, but teen prostitution is an emerging middle-class phenomenon, says journalist and documentary filmmaker Sharlene Azam in her new book Oral Sex Is the New Goodnight Kiss (which is accompanied by a DVD).

One prostitution ring saw more than 15 girls aged 12 to 16 from several Edmonton middle and high schools offering their bodies to older men who gambled in a townhouse; another involved 15-year-old high-school girls charging college guys $20 for oral sex in Kelowna, B.C. In Surrey, B.C., pimps recruited 12-year-olds at their local mall.

...

The author argues that father absenteeism, ineffectual sexual education classes, Internet porn and a hypersexual, "poisonous culture" that promises status through the accumulation of luxury goods are to blame.

...

How do the guys fit in?

Parents have a responsibility to teach boys not to use girls. But how do you do that? If you're just starting to look at what your kids are watching and trying to make them media literate at 12, it's kind of too late. ... You have to clarify values and know what healthy sexuality is, versus porn sex. ... [The boys] have this idea of what sexy is and it's a total fabrication. It has nothing to do with the girls that they know, but it's really influencing how they treat girls. They will have an inability to relate to a girl in a normal, healthy relationship.'

I wonder, were any boys actually interviewed for this book? And just when are the girls held responsible for what they are choosing to do (ie, sell sexual favors), or is this all on the guys? It looks like it... same crap, different day.

Packing party benefits women soldiers

Matt · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Men apparently don't need magazines or toiletries like women do. Anyway, would we ever see an article entitled "Packing party benefits male soldiers"? Not anytime soon. Excerpt:

'One hundred care packages are on their way to be received by 100 black female soldiers stationed at sea and in Iraq, Afghanistan and Kuwait.

The care packages were filled from 1:30 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday in the C.C. Baird Center at Galilee Baptist Church then transported to be processed for shipping as part of the 16th Sister Soldier Packing Party. Hosted by Sistahs BookClubbing, the event was in support of the Sister Soldiers Project, which has donated more than 1,200 care packages since 2006 to black women deployed in such places as Iraq and Afghanistan.

"The project was born out of the desire to help the women serving our country and provide them with personal care products so important to their quality of life that are not available to them," founder Myraline Whitaker, of Arroyo Grande, Calif., said. "They never complain in all their letters. They tell how hot it is and that the water is so hard. We try to give them what they ask for, and the needs change by season."'

Oh yeah, another thing: black female soldiers only are getting these packages. So it's OK now to proclaim proudly that a group is packing goodies for black women ONLY while everyone else serving overseas gets lumped into a generic "the other soldiers" category (not even mentioned in the article of course) and then promptly ignored. See where this kind of nutsery leads to? Maybe there'll be an over-30 Asian male soldiers-only packaging party soon or perhaps a packaging party for soldiers-from-the-northeast-side-of-Manhattan-who-are-green-eyed-and-between-5-10-and-6-0-and-weigh-no-more-than-200-lbs-and-are-gay-and-male-and-of-Puerto-Rican-decent. Ugh.

He's Dead, She Walks - DV's Double Standard

Matt · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Action alert here. Excerpt:

'This past week in Canada a young man, Adam Cunningham, lost his life as a result of domestic violence apparently perpetrated by his wife. At the time of the initial incident she was charged with assault. Now that Adam is dead the Crown prosecutor declines to charge her further with manslaughter or homicide, and has told the family the assualt charges may be dropped as well, since the victim - who was also the only witness - has died.

See the news video here. (caution, the wounds are graphic)

Note in the obituary the comment that the wife will miss him. We can only imagine what that might mean.'

Thought police muscle up in Britain

Matt · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BRITAIN appears to be evolving into the first modern soft totalitarian state. As a sometime teacher of political science and international law, I do not use the term totalitarian loosely.

There are no concentration camps or gulags but there are thought police with unprecedented powers to dictate ways of thinking and sniff out heresy, and there can be harsh punishments for dissent.

Nikolai Bukharin claimed one of the Bolshevik Revolution's principal tasks was "to alter people's actual psychology". Britain is not Bolshevik, but a campaign to alter people's psychology and create a new Homo britannicus is under way without even a fig leaf of disguise.

The Government is pushing ahead with legislation that will criminalise politically incorrect jokes, with a maximum punishment of up to seven years' prison. The House of Lords tried to insert a free-speech amendment, but Justice Secretary Jack Straw knocked it out. It was Straw who previously called for a redefinition of Englishness and suggested the "global baggage of empire" was linked to soccer violence by "racist and xenophobic white males". He claimed the English "propensity for violence" was used to subjugate Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and that the English as a race were "potentially very aggressive".
...

Permissiveness as well as draconianism can be deployed to destroy socially accepted norms and values. The Royal Navy, for instance, has installed a satanist chapel in a warship to accommodate the proclivities of a satanist crew member. "What would Nelson have said?" is a British newspaper cliche about navy scandals, but in this case seems a legitimate question. Satanist paraphernalia is also supplied to prison inmates who need it.

This campaign seems to come from unelected or quasi-governmental bodies controlling various institutions, which are more or less unanswerable to electors, more than it does directly from the Government, although the Government helps drive it and condones it in a fudged and deniable manner.'

Releatedly: Every phone call, email or website visit 'to be monitored'. Excerpt:

'The proposals will give police and security services the power to snoop on every single communication made by the public with the data then likely to be stored in an enormous national database.

The precise content of calls and other communications would not be accessible but even text messages and visits to social networking sites such as Facebook and Twitter would be tracked.
...
Ms Smith has already claimed local authorities will not have access to the data but the Tories have warned of the "exponential increase in the powers of the state", while the Liberal Democrats have dubbed the plans "Orwellian" and deeply worrying.

Security services fear a failure to monitor all forms of communications effectively will hamper their ability to combat terrorists and serious criminals. Sir Stephen Lander, chairman of the Serious Organised Crime Agency, said: "Any significant reduction in the capability of law enforcement agencies to acquire and exploit intercept intelligence and evidential communications data would lead to more unsolved murders, more firearms on our streets, more successful robberies, more unresolved kidnaps, more harm from the use of Class A drugs, more illegal immigration and more unsolved serious crime."'

Australia: "Rudd gets tough on domestic violence"

Matt · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prime Minister Kevin Rudd has announced a new $41.5 million strategy to tackle domestic violence.

Research commissioned by the National Council to Reduce Violence Against Women and their Children shows that violence against women costs Australia more than $13 billion a year.

Australian Bureau of Statistics figures say one in three Australian women will suffer domestic violence and one in five will fall victim to a sexual assault.

Mr Rudd said the Government was working with the states and territories to make sure that a domestic violence order taken out in one state or territory is automatically registered across the country.

...

"We must work harder and smarter to tackle this challenge," Mr Rudd said.

"Our challenge is to change the attitudes of many Australian men, especially young men."

Mr Rudd will also take the report to tomorrow's COAG meeting in Hobart to work with the states on a national plan to reduce violence against women for release next year.'

Brazil man's penis severed by girlfriend

Proud_to_be_a_man · 29 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original Story here. I guess she wouldn't have thought of just, er, reporting him to the police and let them investigate her claims? Excerpt:

'Police say a man in northeastern Brazil had his penis severed by his girlfriend who accused him of raping her daughter.

Police officer Fabio Gaudencio says 42-year-old Isaias Saturnino was sleeping at home last Friday when Maria da Silva used a kitchen knife to cut off his penis.

Gaudencio says Silva fled and remains at large.

Saturnino underwent reconstructive surgery and was in good condition on Monday, but is expected to stay at least two months in the hospital for observation.

Gaudencio says Silva's daughter accused Saturnino of raping her starting at age seven. She is teenager now. He hasn't been charged so far.

Gaudencio said Monday that Silva is expected to voluntarily turn herself in.'

UK: Women are 'imprisoned' by fight for equality, claims leading feminist

Matt · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Erin Pizzey is one of the few, if possibly only, feminists who has stood up for the truth when it comes to DV. Nonetheless, I am weary of the constant stream of woe-is-me from feminists, if even they are saying "woe" over the abundance of successes they have claimed. Woe when they fail, woe when they succeed. When does the woe-is-me ever stop? Excerpt:

"Women have won the war for equality but it has left many of them imprisoned and exhausted, a pioneering feminist has claimed.

Campaigner Erin Pizzey, who founded the world's first refuge for battered women in 1971, claims the idea of women happily combining a career and a family has proved to be a myth.

The 70-year-old said women's 'freedom of choice' to have both has left them with less spare time than they had before.

But she added that many now did not understand what they had lost.

...

She said: 'There's been a subterranean war between men and women which has been won by women and they don't actually understand what they've lost.'

The campaigner added: 'I don't think anybody foresaw that what a freedom of choice would do is imprison many.

'Many women, they don't have a choice now, they have to work, they have to work hard, and I just see an exhausted generation of women trying to do it all.'"

Marks On "Octomom" Son Spark Questions

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CBS/ AP) The mother of the California octuplets has been questioned by police and child welfare officials after her 4-year-old autistic son showed up at school with a black eye and bite marks.

Nadya Suleman's attorney, Jeff Czech, says it's not clear if any action will be taken against the mother of 14 young children.

...

Police have said they've made several visits to Suleman's home in the past year to respond to complaints about lost, trapped or poorly cared for children, but, Kauffman points out, haven't removed any from the home.'

Boys will be boys, girls will be girls, says study

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Washington, April 29 (IANS) Boys will be boys and girls will be girls, because gender specific personality traits develop along typical lines, according to a new study.
...
Not surprisingly, girls and boys differed in their sex-specific personality traits and their sex-typed activity interests in early adolescence, with girls showing higher levels of expressive traits (kindness and sensitivity) and interest in 'feminine' activities (arts and reading).

Boys showed higher levels of instrumental traits (independence and adventurousness) and interest in 'masculine' activities (sports and math).

Girls' typically feminine, expressive traits didn't change over time. Conversely, boys' sensitivity and warmth declined substantially across middle childhood but increased in later adolescence.'

E-tailers face gender-divide: 'Men Want It Fast, Women Want It All'

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men want to complete the task and get on to the next task. Women want to experience the task. Guys, I know that sounds stupid, like forming a relationship with pain, but this is why women are good at taking care of you. Generally, they seem to be more thorough, which is why she's never ready when you're jingling your keys at the door and why you might survive getting stuck in a blizzard once you finally get out the door. (That's a poor example. She'll likely know there's a blizzard coming and will protest leaving at all. Men believe they will defeat the blizzard. Women, I know this sounds stupid, but this is why men are good at killing mammoths, and why they're good at protecting you. In the end, it's all about taking down the beast.)'

Pneumonia more likely to kill older men than women

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON: Pneumonia is more likely to kill older men than women because of differing gender-based biological responses to the infection.

"Our study found that men with CAP (community-acquired pneumonia) were less likely to survive after an infection compared to women," said Sachin Yende, assistant professor in critical care medicine, University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine (UPSM) and study co-author.

Data were gathered from the multi-centre Genetic and Inflammatory Markers of Sepsis (GenIMS) study.'

Effects of Infidelity on Men vs. Women Surprise Researchers

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How guilty would you feel if you cheated on your partner? The answer has a lot to do with the type of infidelity — and your gender.

Men feel guiltier following sexual infidelity, while women feel guiltier after emotional transgression, a new study finds.

The researchers had hypothesized the opposite. Men, they thought, would feel guiltier if they fell in love with someone else, as women place a high value on emotional loyalty and the resources it provides; similarly, because men's sex drive is considered to be more biologically hard-wired, it was assumed women would have more guilt knowing the pain that sexual infidelity would cause their partner.'

U of New Mexico student writes 'Men need to let go of power, accept inferiority to women'

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'In response to Tuesday's article, "Study: Female professors earn less than males," I suggest our phallic powerhouse needs a slice of castration.

I was dismayed to find that, according to the most recent information available from Zimmerman Library, the five highest-paid faculty member in the English department are all men, even though more than half the department is female. This state of affairs is atrocious. I was reading Anna Karenina the other day when, like the dove descending, it dawned on me that women are essentially better than men. Any fool knows that women make better teachers than men; they are much holier, despite the blasphemous conceits of antiquity; they are less inclined to give way to irrational haste in judgment; they are more firmly grounded in reality and less susceptible to impractical and counterintuitive notions; without the corrupting influence of men, they would be less affected by moral turpitude, and they are generally more sensible, compassionate, likeable and pleasant than most men.

There may not be any universal essence of a woman, but I think the general trends can be telling. This isn't to say that men should be wiped from the face of the Earth or society, but that they should acknowledge their position of mental inferiority and elevate women to those levels of economic and political dominance to which they are biologically entitled. This shouldn't be done with the testicles still secretly pulling the strings, as may be the case in our undergraduate government, but only with a genuine and total transference of power. How many foreskins can we collect from our penis-loving oppressors in the English department?'

U.S. Representatives Hill and Murphy Introduce the 'Men and Families Health Care Act of 2009'

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, April 30 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- Men's Health Network applauds Representatives Barron Hill (D-IN) and Tim Murphy (R-PA) today for introducing H.R. 2115, the "Men and Families Health Care Act of 2009."

This bipartisan legislation would establish an Office of Men's Health within the Department of Health and Human Services for the purpose of improving the health of men and their families. This Office will mirror the existing Office of Women's Health, established in the early 1990s, which has improved the quality of life for women nationwide.

"The goal of this bill is to raise awareness about men's health issues, and ways we can prevent and detect men's health problems. The Office of Men's Health will bring this issue to the Federal stage and result in more men getting the treatment they need, which will save lives," said Congressman Murphy. "For too long the health needs of men have gone unaddressed. This bill will help men's health take its rightful place in our Federal government's healthcare priorities."'

'Don't be hypocrites, ladies - you like to ogle, too'

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I can hear all the female whining already about the Lingerie Football League*. Please, ladies, spare me the hypocrisy.

You'll whine about female exploitation. How women are being "objectified." How men only care about their bodies and not their other wonderful assets. How men will only go to these games to ogle. How this new football league is only an excuse for men to go out and be lechers, that this football league is nothing more than a glorified strip club, minus the pole dancing.

Pretty profound stuff, huh? Please.

Fact is, women do exactly the same thing with men. But men don't whine about it.'

---
*Hyperlink added, for those of you who have never heard of it (like myself) until now.

Women Become the Majority of Workers

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First, women have the authenticity, humility, and relationship-building skills required to lead customer-centric organisations in the 21st century world, a point made by a reformed Alpha Male consultant and author, David Flett.

He says, "Women are now in a position to lead because theirs is the only model that works in the new global business environment."
...
Second, women may soon outnumber men in the workforce for the first time. In the US and Australia, where this trend seems most likely, more men have lost their jobs than women in part because men tend to dominate in the blue-collar industries such as construction and manufacturing that have been hardest hit by the recession.
...
"Perhaps even more compelling is some new data on the projected number of women graduates in the future", says Wittenberg-Cox. By 2015, more than 60% of the graduates will be women in ten OECD nations, according to a recent OECD report, Higher Education to 2030. And in the UK and Sweden, the figures surpass 70%. In 2020, the figures exceed 70% in four nations: Hungary (73%), Italy (70%), UK (72%), and Sweden (76%).'

'The End of Sisterhood'

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The sisterhood of lawyers has never been more potent. In conference rooms and swanky restaurants, women across the ranks--senior partners and associates, general counsel, and staff attorneys--are brainstorming about what it takes for women to succeed in a profession that's still predominantly male. Over sushi, cosmos, and the occasional mani/pedi treatment, they are bonding, united in the mission for gender equality. The message is clear: Women are united, and they want their sisters to succeed.

But scratch the surface a bit deeper, and some members of the sorority tell another story: that women--particularly their immediate superiors--can be their worst tormentors. Fact is, despite the veneer of harmony and the decades of shared struggle, there's tension on the women's front. Talk to any group of women lawyers, and there will be plenty of war stories on the betrayals--real or perceived--that they have experienced at the hands of other women.'

Survey: Swedish men becoming less manly

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'STOCKHOLM, Sweden, April 29 (UPI) -- A survey suggests most Swedes believe the country's men were more masculine in the past than now.

The online survey of 1,003 people between the ages of 15 and 64, conducted by YouGov on a contract from MBT Shoes, found 51 percent of those polled -- including 58 percent of male respondents -- believe Swedish men were more masculine in the past, The Local reported Wednesday.

Nine percent of respondents said they believe Swedish men are more masculine than the males in other countries, while 19 percent said Swedish men are less masculine and a 65 percent majority said they believe Swedish men are on par with other countries.'

UK: Women-only clinic for addicts triples in size as cases soar

anthony · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'London's only treatment centre for women alcohol and drug addicts has tripled in size to cope with an increasing number of cases.

Hope House has moved from an eight-bedroom building in Maida Vale to a 23-bed centre in Clapham Common formerly used only by male addicts.

The centre treats women who have been through detox and offers them help to accustom themselves to the world after the first stages of rehab.'

New F4J activist arrested in UK

Matt · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S. from a New F4J mailing:

Richard West (of the New F4J) has been arrested in his home town of Ottery St Mary (Devon, England UK) and held at Heavitree Road Police Station, in Exeter. We believe that this has been after Richard continually trying to get hold of medical documents relating to his son and C.A.M.s (social services) Richard secured a bid in Court and the C.A.M.s team was told to hand the files over but continually and blatantly refused to co-operate. Even the mother of Richards son joined the request in seeing their OWN child's records!!

Last week Rich publicly made a statement to his local press, The Sidmouth Herald stating that the NHS, who are responsible for the C.A.M.s team, have till the end of the month to comply or he would "cause massive disruption by shutting down one of the country's major public infrastructures by the end of the month". (See here.)

Earlier on this evening it is believed that the C.A.M.s team contacted Richard and he reminded them that they had till the end of the month to comply or he would carry out his threat of public protest, re-iterating that the end of the month is tomorrow.

At approx 2000pm tonight local officers attended Richards house and arrested him for making "threats to an organisation". The house was then searched and the police seized Richard's 'Mr Incredible' costume, his partner's 'Superwoman' costume, and his son's costume as well. The police left items such as laptops and phones.

Details are a bit sketchy at the moment but it is believed that Richard will be taken to Rygate Police Station in Surrey.

Rich West has been a persistent activist against the lack of Fathers Rights in this country climbing Stonehenge with F4J and more recently climbing a mast near his home town to try and get a meeting with his local MP after being ignored.

[Signed]
"Chalkie"

Woman Actually Arrested For Domestic Violence

Luek · 30 April 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The rarest of the rare is this woman who was arrested for assaulting her live-in boyfriend. She was charged with violation of something called the Family Violence Act. And to top it off the male victim was not also arrested as is the standard operating procedures in DV incidents where the female is the prime aggressor. Excerpt:

'A Clayton County school board member was arrested last week on charges of simple battery after a dispute with her live-in boyfriend.

Trinia Garrett, 36, the District 7 representative, was arrested on April 21 on charges of violating the state's family violence act.

According to Clayton Magistrate Court records, Garrett made "physical contact of an insulting and provoking nature" against Albert Stocken, 58, with whom she has lived for the past 18 months in Lake City.

Garrett allegedly started the altercation by arguing over a credit card charge of $85 at a local hotel. She grabbed a chain and pulled it from Stocken's neck, according to court records.'

Why women don't even get close to the 'glass ceiling' in the workplace

Broadsword · 1 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Women executives regularly get pushed off the career ladder in favour of men, a survey said yesterday.

'Invisible discrimination' means they have no chance of matching the success of male counterparts, it was claimed. In some industries it was found that only one in 14 women with the potential to reach the top actually did so.
...
Management consultancy DDI, which carried out the survey, said its evidence showed that most women never reach the 'glass ceiling' that is usually said to block their progress. Rather, the experts said, women slide down 'glass walls' before they even get near the top.
...
Yet inquiries launched by Labour over the past decade in an attempt to unmask prejudice among employers have failed to find evidence of any.
...
The consultancy advised women to make their ambitions clear from the start of their careers and to accept assignments abroad.

'Don't be afraid to take the family with you,' the report said. However, Anastasia de Waal of the Civitas think-tank said: 'It isn't invisible discrimination, it's imaginary discrimination.

'There is no gender gap. There is a childcare gap and that is not a matter for employers.

'Women do not put themselves forward for promotion or they do not work long hours because they are bringing up children. The reasons for that are complex.'"*

---
* Admin note - May 4, 2009: The last sentences are the original quote from Anastasia de Waal as reported. Since then it has been identified as a misquote and the correction notice, as well as the corrected quote, is here.

UK: The gender pay gap does not exist

anthony · 1 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman claims that women earn on average 22.6% less per hour than men and takes it for granted that this difference is the result of discrimination against women by men. And yet the Government's own figures support no such conclusion.
...
Quite simply the Government's emphasis on the gender pay gap of 22.6% is an abuse of official statistics. And to infer that the difference in the average hourly rate is the result of discrimination is an abuse of logic. When women without dependent children compete head to head with men in the same situation their hourly rate is higher. Most women today work throughout their 20s and find that success is the result of being good at something. Employers are looking for capable people whether male or female.

Women today don't need government quotas. They are doing fine on their own. They want to be judged on their merits, not patronised by the old generation of 1970s quota feminists like Harriet Harman.'

Courts father unfairness

Matt · 1 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The erratic treatment of Rod Refcio in Ontario family court is an extreme but powerful example of disturbing flaws that continue to plague Canada's spousal support system.

Two courts incredulously concluded Refcio's responsibility to his ex-wife extends to her twins; twins who were born well after the marriage ended and who were fathered by another man.

In 2006, Ontario Court Judge Thomas Granger ruled Refcio owed his ex-wife Katia $1,500 per month, for an indefinite period of time. For the payer of spousal support, the length of the order is crucial.

Without an end date, a person's life is on hold indefinitely, making a clean break from a former spouse impossible.'

Gender stereotypes present in study

Vince · 2 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

For once, a reasonably fair article on dating abuse, from my alma mater, no less. Article here. Excerpt:

"Both psychological and physical abuse in dating relationships have been reported among high school and college students in the United States, with mental and physical health consequences similar to that of cohabiting adults. Whereas women are much more likely than men to be the victims of domestic violence, most studies on adolescents found that males experience rates of relationship abuse similar to or greater than that of females.
...
Females were significantly more favorable than were males about their partner on the positive scale. There was no gender difference on the sexual abuse scale. For the remaining seven abuse scales, males reported more abuse than females, for both non-physical and physical items. Fortunately, the overall levels of dating abuse we found were low, with the highest frequencies reported by a minority of the students."

Father faces 100 years for infant neglect

Matt · 2 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Contrast the attitudes shown with what mothers get for the same crime with the same circumstances. Another report with more detail found here. Note one piece of press commentary: Our View: Absolutely no business being a parent. I wonder if they would have written that way if the mother had gone to trial first and been convicted? This is a case to watch; we'll see what sentence the father gets vs. the treatment the mother gets. Excerpt:

'(Peoria) -- James Sargent has been found guilty of two counts of first-degree murder in connection to the death of his five-and-a-half-month-old son Benjamin last year.

A Peoria County Judge handed down the verdict Wednesday afternoon, immediately following the conclusion of a three day bench trial.

Sargent is guilty of failing to provide care for Ben including giving him food, water or changing his diaper for up to eight days.
...
He said Sargent became preoccupied with his relationship with the baby's mother and neglected Ben, but did not do so on purpose.

Sargent faces 100 years in prison due to the act being found as brutal and heinous behavior indicative of wanton cruelty.
...
The boy's mother, Tracy Hermann, is also charged with his death and is set for trial in August.'

UK: Male teachers desert primaries

anthony · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost 40% of primary schools now have no male teachers on their staff. New figures obtained under the Freedom of Information Act show 1,238 of the state's 3,248 national schools have an all-female line-up in the classroom.

The revelation means that the Department of Education's expensive efforts to attract men into primary school teaching have been a failure so far. Many children are now educated exclusively by women as the teaching profession becomes increasingly feminised.

...

Matt Hume, principal of St Joseph's boys' school in Terenure, Dublin, which bucks the trend by having a staff of 40% men and 60% women, said it is important for boys to have male teachers as role models, particularly in areas where they may not have otherpositive male role models in their lives. "Another problem is that if boys don't see male teachers in schools, they're unlikely to pursue a career in teaching themselves," he said.

The department has defended its efforts to encourage more men into primary school teaching, arguing that the percentage of male students in teacher training colleges is rising.'

Carey Roberts: White House Council on Men and Boys: the right thing to do

anthony · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week a letter was sent to President Obama, urging him to establish a White House Council on Men and Boys. The plea came from Alpha Phi Alpha, a fraternity boasting a membership of 200,000 African-American men: http://apa1906.net/PressNewsDetails.php?newsID=90&newsCat=Press%20Release

The APA letter highlights a report by the Schott Foundation for Public Education that found only 26% of black male students in New York City graduate from high school. Nationally, only 22% of Black men who enter college end up getting their degree.
...
Surely both Barack and Michelle desire that their daughters will one day be courted by marriage-able men. If we're going to have a White House on Women and Girls, it's only fair that we extend the same courtesy to men and boys.

And liberal feminists, often portrayed as a self-serving interest group, should support the measure as well to prove they really do care about equal opportunities for both men and women.'

UK: With friends like Harman, women don’t need enemies

anthony · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now Harman has succeeded in driving through her cherished equality proposals, which in the name of equality will make it possible to discriminate against individuals on grounds of sex or race. If Hattie has her way, the Equality Bill she unveiled last week will make it legal for employers to discriminate against white men in favour of white women and black people. This horribly muddled thinking gives meaning to the misogynist’s phrase “feminine logic”.

...

Here we have a spectacle that is about as bad for women as it gets. Female politicians, many promoted above their ability, seek to promote another woman above her democratic entitlement and against their own principles and meanwhile legislate to promote working women over men. With supporters like Harman and her crew, we women do not need enemies.'

Illinois Governor shortens sentence of woman who killed kids

anthony · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SPRINGFIELD, Ill. - Illinois Gov. Pat Quinn has commuted the sentence of a woman experts believe was suffering from a postpartum psychosis when she killed her two young children more than two decades ago.

Quinn on Friday commuted Debra Lynn Gindorf's life sentence to 48 years. That likely means she's eligible for immediate release on parole because she's served 24 years and can qualify for day-for-day good-conduct time, her lawyer said.

Gindorf, 45, of Zion was found guilty but mentally ill in the 1985 slayings of her children, 23-month-old Christina and 3-month-old Jason.

Experts conceded she was a depressed and battered wife but couldn't agree what was wrong with her. She and her supporters now believe she had postpartum depression when she attempted to kill herself, then decided to kill her children as well.'

California Family Fitness sued over women-only areas

anthony · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'California Family Fitness is being sued for alleged gender discrimination for operating workout areas and one club dedicated to women.
...
For years California regulators and courts have squashed women-only poker tournaments, sex-based discounts at car washes and bars, and other promotions that favor one gender over another. Rotary Clubs, for one, were forced to accept women members after a court decision two decades ago.

Fitness centers locally and nationally — particularly express gyms such as Curves — have long marketed themselves to one gender. Eight states specifically allow for single-gender health clubs, according to the International Health, Racquet and Sportsclub Association. But California isn't one of them. An effort to pass such a law in the Golden State failed in 2005.'

Business Week: Men Bearing the Brunt of Layoffs

anthony · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"That is not really all that surprising, because this economic crisis has been concentrated in the classic industrial sectors," says Christian Dreger, head of Macro Analysis and Forecasting at the Berlin-based German Institute for Economic Research (DIW). The automobile industry in particular, including the businesses that supply the main carmakers, is shedding jobs. "And those are sectors that still employ more men," Dreger says. Women tend to work more in the service sector. "And the crisis has had little or no impact there."
...
However, better-paid women are also doing well, such as those working in traditionally more female spheres like education or health. The major industries like construction, manufacturing or even the financial services industry have always been more vulnerable to economic cycles and therefore suffer when the economy dips.
...
"In a society where services are becoming increasingly important, women quite simply have the better jobs," says Hans Bertram, a sociologist at the Humboldt University in Berlin.'

Men, unemployment, and the future of boys

anthony · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The unemployment ax is falling hard on men - many are in jobs that don't require education beyond high school; this will transcend the current economic crisis due to the combined effects of technology and globalization.

Obama and Congress face millions of angry and disillusioned unemployed young men.

For every 100 women enrolled in college in the U.S., 77 men are. And this trend is continuing to worsen. In regard to bachelor degrees, it's 10-0/63. In regard to associate (community colleges), it's 10-0/67.

For every 100 women ages 18-21 in prison, 1,430 men are. For every 100 young women, ages 20-24 who commit suicide, 624 young men will.
...
...Last month Obama created the White House Council for Women and Girls. Right there in the White House.

Women's groups pressured him - about 50 of them, I hear. They wanted an actual cabinet seat for a Women's Office, but now are happy that they have the entire cabinet as every matter that now comes before the cabinet must include an assessment of what impact it will have on women and girls. One well known lady evidently exclaimed that now we have a nation of women.'

Blount Schools host national conference on how boys, girls learn

anthony · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Blount County Schools hosted a national conference this week in which an American psychologist and family physician provided teachers with powerful new information about gender differences that could improve student performance.

...

"Do not ever assume all girls are one way and all boys are one way. That's a false assumption," said Dr. Leonard Sax, author of "Why Gender Matters," prefacing his speech.

Sax then talked about the differences in typical male and female visual systems. "Everything about sex-difference visual systems we know from the last eight years -- mostly the last four to five years," he said, noting researchers used to only study men.

"The assumption until eight or nine years ago was apparently that females were just shorter males who menstruate," Sax joked. Researchers have learned a typical man's brain is wired differently from girls to make boys more interested in movement.'

Misquote report on recent article

Anonymous · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Please note that the quote from Anastasia de Waal of Civitas in the Daily Mail re women and the glass ceiling was a misquote and has since been corrected to: 'Don't be afraid to take the family with you,' the report said.

However, Anastasia de Waal of the Civitas think-tank said: 'It's not so much invisible discrimination in this case, as 'imaginary' discrimination because it's the parenting responsibilities gap which is the main issue.

'In this context it's less about a gender pay gap per se, but about a childcare gap and that is not necessarily a matter for employers.

'Women do not put themselves forward for promotion or they are not able to work long hours because they are bringing up children. The reasons for that are complex.'

UK: Fathers for Justice campaigner posts nappies to Prime Minister Gordon Brown

Matt · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A HEATHFIELD man dressed up as Batman to post nappies to Gordon Brown.

The New Fathers for Justice member who did not want to be named, hopes the prime minister will take notice of members' campaign to fight for the rights of fathers denied access to their children.

He took part in a nationwide campaign in the form of the superhero to ask him to stop disposing of dads in society.'

'Women Build' -- female-only building program

anthony · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'And then she joined Women Build, the organization's female-only building program. This is where we are on a spring day, on a site with nine other female volunteers ranging in age from 19 to their 60s, and in experience from licensed contractors and former engineers to women who have yet to make friends with a power drill.

The latter would be me. And when I confess this to Baron, she wastes no time teaching me how to use hers.

There's a reason her tools are spray-painted pink, and it's not just to demonstrate her girl power. On the many construction sites she's worked on with men, tools tend to stray. This way, at least she doesn't lose hers.'

UK: False rape claim victim's relief

anthony · 3 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A millionaire businessman has spoken of his relief after he was cleared of carrying out a violent sex attack.

Anthony Atherton, 51, was accused of attacking a 49-year-old woman in the kitchen of his home in Victoria Road, Bolton last August.

A jury at Leeds Crown Court took an hour to acquit Mr Atherton of attempted rape, sexual assault, assault by penetration, making a threat to kill and false imprisonment.

He claimed the woman, who cannot be named for legal reasons, set him up.
...
He said: "I'm grateful after eight months of hell to be vindicated."

His solicitor Paul Schofield said: "From the very onset Mr Atherton firmly denied all these allegations.

"He claimed that this case was a malicious complaint and a 'set up'. The verdicts, the speed with which they were returned, and the order for costs, all vindicate him completely.'

Women and Sexism

Anonymous · 4 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine if Sonoma County's new 5th District supervisor had told a reporter that he was glad he was elected because he has "long believed that men offer a unique voice to government as rational and protective beings and because of the way we approach conflict and communications."

Just think of the outrage, charges of being a male chauvinistic pig and calls for his resignation.

However, when the new 3rd District supervisor, Shirlee Zane, was quoted in The Press Democrat saying she has "long believed that women do offer a unique voice to government as caregivers and the way we approach conflict and communications," there was no outrage; no one called her a female chauvinistic pig or called for her resignation.'

RADAR ALERT: Want a Good Laugh? Check Out the SAFE Act!

Matt · 4 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

What if you knew a bill had been introduced in Congress in which most of the findings were misleading, outdated, or simply false? Welcome to wonderful, wacky world of HR 739, the Security and Financial Empowerment Act (SAFE).

The bill contains 53 different claims. Only 4 of those claims can be verified as accurate, current, and truthful. As for the remaining 49 claims, whoever dreamed up this stuff has an incredible sense of humor!

The following bold-faced quotes come straight from the SAFE Act findings. They are followed by the actual facts. So get ready for some side-splitting humor:

1. "Violence against women has been reported to be the leading cause of physical injury to women." Here's what the website of U.S. Department of Health and Human Services shows:
   - Under the graph the DHHS states, "All of the leading causes of injury in 2006 were unintentional." But domestic violence is an intentional cause of injury. In other words, DV is not even on the list of leading causes of injury.
2. "According to recent Government estimates, approximately 987,400 rapes occur annually in the United States". Here's what the FBI really says:
   - "In 2007, the estimated number of forcible rapes (90,427) decreased 2.5 percent from the 2006 estimate." So the SAFE number is off by about 900,000. We'll just call it a rounding error.

Woman makes "documentary" on circumcision

Matt · 4 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. More of a propaganda piece in favor of it, actually. Excerpt:

'You try to avoid getting overtly political in the film. But I have seen people compare circumcision to female genital mutilation.

I absolutely think that it's offensive to women to think that there's any parallel here. Of course, they both involve genitals but are done for very different reasons, and I ran away as far as I could from anything to do with female circumcision, which has to be stopped. It's not comparable. But what does interest me is why the movement against male circumcision needs to be so extreme? They have such a valid point, but they come off as such extremists.'

One of the anti-circumcision activists you interview even gets you arrested while you are filming him. They come across in your film as really, really loony.

They are! Both sides of the equation are crazy, the whole thing is crazy. Those who believe in it and those who believe it must be stopped because it is genital mutilation -- they all have valid reasons and all are insane. I love the idea that we look at ourselves through this insane prism, my family included.
...

You end up having to make choices about whether to circumcise each of your sons. And at the end, you worry that they will be mad at you when they grow up and understand what you've done.

Who do you betray? A son who has been circumcised, a decision you've just spent nine months ridiculing? Or a son that is intact? I was gonna betray both of them, no matter what way I chose.'

Betray them both? How? Remember: If you object to male circumcision, you're an extremist. if you object to female circumcision, that's fine. We got a long way to go, guys.

Marilyn French dead at 79

mens_issues · 4 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Marilyn French, infamous for her statement that "all men are rapists and that's all they are," has died at age 79. Excerpt:

'With steely views about the treatment of woman and a gift for expressing them on the printed page, Ms. French transformed herself from an academic who quietly bristled at the expectations of married women in the post-World War II era to a leading, if controversial, opinionmaker on gender issues who decried the patriarchal society she saw around her. “My goal in life is to change the entire social and economic structure of Western civilization, to make it a feminist world,” she once declared.

Her first and best-known novel, “The Women’s Room,” released in 1977, traces a submissive housewife’s journey of self-discovery following her divorce in the 1950s, describing the lives of Mira Ward and her friends in graduate school at Harvard as they grow into independent women. The book was partly informed by her own experience of leaving an unhappy marriage and helping her daughter deal with the aftermath of being raped. Women all over the world seized on the book, which sold more than 20 million copies and was translated into 20 languages.'

A rather nauseating review of a woman whose novel contributed to the destructiveness of the radical feminist movement, but what do you expect from the NY Times.

I wish I could be a bit kinder to someone who is deceased, but in this case I find it hard to do.

Non-custodial father tries to save child but is ignored by CPS

Luek · 4 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A non-custodial father tried in vain to access the CPS system to save his children from abuse, but failed. One child was eventually murdered by the child's mother's live in boyfriend and while he was given a stiff sentence, that is locking the barn door after the horse escapes, as the old saying goes. In my opinion the non-custodial father was ignored simply because he was a male, which is misandry, and in this case it resulted in a child's death. Excerpt:

'TACOMA, Wash. -- A man who fatally injured a 3-year-old boy when he hurled him in a fit of anger has been sentenced in Tacoma to 50 years in prison.

Noah Jeremiah Thomas was sentenced Friday in Pierce County Superior Court in the death of Michael-Kekoa Ravenell last May 28, when he was babysitting the boy.

The 25-year-old, who was dating the boy's mother, pleaded guilty in March to homicide by abuse.
...

Nearly two months before the fatal injuries, the boy's father had called Child Protective Services when he suspected abuse.

It was the first of what the boy's father said were many suspicious marks on both his son and daughter.

"And he had bruising on the side of his head that was tender," said Michael Ravenell, the boy's biological father, in an interview earlier this year.

The case file showed CPS assigned an inexperienced social worker with just three months on the job to Kekoa's case.
...
The social worker never had a doctor examine the boy even though his father had informed her about the bruises.'

Round 2 of Campaign Against Lifetime's 'Deadbeat Dads'--Contact Hearst Corp.

Matt · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Action item here. Excerpt:

'Lifetime TV announced the launch of its new, father-bashing reality show Deadbeat Dads last week, and Lifetime received several thousand protest letters, calls and faxes last week. This week we take our protest to the Hearst Corporation, which owns much of Lifetime TV. To email and fax a protest letter to both Hearst and Lifetime Executives, click here. Also, please call Hearst-Argyle Television, Inc.'s main switchboard at (212) 887-6800. If you participated in Round 1, we invite you to participate in Round 2.

According to The Hollywood Reporter, "Deadbeat Dads, originally developed at Fox, follows National Child Support founder Jim Durham as he tracks down and confronts dads who don't pay child support." According to Reuters, Durham "functions as a sort of 'Dog the Bounty Hunter' for tracking deadbeats…It's ambush reality TV." Durham will target fathers who are behind on their child support by "making their lives miserable — foreclosing on their house, repossessing their car. He will squeeze them."'

UK: Feminists quiet when victim is male

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Now, a few weeks ago I was confident that the various state-subsidised feminist quangos -- from the Rape Crisis Centres, to the National Council of Women, to the Equality Authority -- would say nothing about the preposterously light sentence of seven years for the serial rape of a 14-year-old boy by his mother, and I was right. The fact that the judge was a woman was no doubt a factor in their silence. Her explanation for the light sentence -- that the Edwardian law was more heavily biased against paternal incest was both tendentious and spurious: for the charge of sexual assault alone carries a maximum of 14 years' imprisonment.

It's possible that I missed some condemnation of the sentence by the vast army of feminist-commentators and feminist quangos: but if I did, it wasn't for want of trying. But imagine the outcry -- and very properly -- if a man who had raped and sexually abused his 14-year-old daughter was sentenced to just seven years' imprisonment by a male judge.

...

Now, we can be quite certain if a woman had been so gravely wronged by the State in some matter relating to sexual crime, that the feminist sirens, media and quangos alike, would have been howling in anger, and demanding enquiries and heads. But in the aftermath of this case, nothing: the sirens remained as quiet as a mountain lake. For the victim is a man, so really, the injustice done to him really doesn't count. Not in 1997, not today, and no doubt, not in 2019 either.'

Feminism & Violent Women

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to a report in the Journal of Men's Studies, titled "The Feminization of Domestic Violence in America," contrary to society and the media's portrayal of women as "recipients of domestic violence...epidemiological surveys on the distribution of violent behavior between adult partners suggest gender parity."

Once Feminism turned the corner and sought to change the concept of maleness and femaleness, things began to deteriorate quickly.

According to psychologist Dr. Helen Smith, Feminism began to teach women to essentially shed most of their female attributes.

"Feminism taught the current generation of young women to unsex themselves," said Smith. "The reason they were taught to unsex themselves is because the Second Wave Feminists believed that femininity is inferior to masculinity."
...
To be clear, Feminists created a huge paradigm shift in society, and then began to blame men for the poor results, which include a sharp decline in the marriage rate, and a sharp incline in domestic violence initiated by women.'

Heeled men march against violence

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'As students walk through the quad at this time of year, we are reminded by the men of the Alpha Kappa Lambda fraternity to take a stand against domestic violence. And every year, we trace our hands onto the board and write our name, pledging that "these hands don't hurt."

In 2004, Men Today Men Tomorrow, MT2, was created by a group of men who wanted to take a stand in violence against women. The MT2 message is simple: Respect women. The group hopes to bring awareness to men today and serve as role models for the younger male generation, educating boys and young men to respect women.'

USA Today: More parents share the workload when mom learns to let go

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Equality is gaining ground at homes across the USA, but the move toward parity leaves some mothers in a quandary; they're ready to share the workload with their partners, but to do that, they'll also have to come to terms with the loss of hierarchy at home.

"Women who want to create this sometimes don't appreciate the level at which they must let go," says Amy Vachon of Watertown, Mass. She and her husband, Marc, have become the standard-bearers for a philosophy called "equally shared parenting."'

Megan Fox on men: "I just don't like them or trust them."

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The "Transformers: Revenge of the Fallen" actress and her two co-stars in life -- Have you seen the new trailer? It's all about her breasts -- are the subject of much attention for both Elle's June cover and Esquire magazine's Day in the Life pictorial.

For the female readers of Elle, Fox shares that, "I've lived the life of a 35-year-old since I was 18. I'm so suspicious of boys-slash-men. I just don't like them or trust them."'

Opinion: Don’t forget victims of false rape accusations

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'April is Sexual Assault Awareness Month. Unfortunately, much of the “awareness” raised about a crime that victimizes all too many women is unnecessarily politicized and factually incorrect. For reasons that have nothing to do with aiding rape victims and everything to do with advancing a larger political agenda, too many of the persons who dominate the public discourse about sexual assault feel it is necessary to insist that false rape claims are a myth.

We write for one of the few websites in America devoted exclusively to giving voice to the persons wrongly accused of sexual assault, The False Rape Society.

False rape claims are America’s taboo epidemic, and we chronicle news of false rape claims on a daily basis. We receive heart-wrenching emails, especially from mothers of young men who have been falsely accused. One young man recently told us our website stopped him from committing suicide. That is an awful burden to put on one little website, but these people have nowhere else to turn.'

Woman charged with making false report of rape, abduction

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NORTON — Police arrested a 32-year-old woman they said made up a horrifying story of abduction and rape.

Jessica Smith of Doylestown in Wayne County told Norton police that a man abducted her at gunpoint from a gas station on April 9, took her to Akron and raped her for four days before releasing her. But police said after spending many hours investigating the story, they determined it never happened.

Smith was arraigned Wednesday before Barberton Municipal Judge Greg Macko on one count of making false alarms. If convicted, she faces up to one year in prison.

Police spent about 100 hours investigating her claims before concluding the story was made up. They were called to the emergency room at Akron City Hospital on April 12. '

Teacher Accused Of Sex With Teen Takes Plea Deal

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VIERA -- In Brevard County Tuesday, a former teacher who had sex with a student reached a plea deal with prosecutors that gives her prison time.

Under the deal, Janet Hughes, a former teacher at Jackson Middle School in Titusville, was sentenced to between one and six years in prison, and she will have to register as sex offender when she gets out.

Hughes was arrested two years ago after police said they caught her and a 16-year-old boy in a van outside a Titusville church.'

Defense Attorney For Female Teacher Accused Of Rape: "he's an advanced 14-year-old"

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The case in favor of a teacher accused of having sex with a 14-year-old student emerged after a court appearance today.

"The charges in this case now don't fit the facts," said Rich Gallegos, defense attorney for Evelyne Bowers Bowers, a math teacher at Bountiful Jr. High, appeared in district court in Farmington on charges of rape and forcible sodomy.

"There was no force. There wasn't even any deception as far as I'm concerned," attorney Gallegos said.

Bowers and another Bountiful Jr. High teacher, Linda Neff, are both accused of having sex with the same boy. But neither knew of the other's affair.

"In my opinion he's an advanced 14-year-old," Gallegos said.'

Moms Beware! Protect Your Adolescent Boys

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The cycle of emotional and physical damage caused by this type of abuse will last a young boy's lifetime if not worked through in therapy. As a society, we have in the past chalked this behavior up to "young boys just getting lucky" and "I wish I had a teacher that wanted to have sex with me," but these are simply ill-informed statements with total disregard for the true fall-out for these boys.

First, you must know that the women who fall into the "Teacher/Lover" category of female sexual offenders are highly manipulative and groom their victims in a similar way to male sexual predators. They pick vulnerable kids who are looking for attention and approval that may seem lacking within their own home environment.

These women believe they have a "special bond" with the child and usually don't believe they have done anything wrong at all because it was "love." Her motives for the sexual offenses are to teach them sexually and obtain love and attention from the child.'

Oft-unreported: Men stoned to death in Iran for adultery

Matt · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. You'll hear feminists complaining about how in the Middle East women get stoned to death for adultery. What many won't mention, or may not know, is that men do, too. Excerpt:

'TEHRAN (Reuters) - A man was stoned to death in Iran for adultery but the woman involved in the case repented, the judiciary said on Tuesday, suggesting her life was spared.

The Islamic Republic has been heavily criticized by the European Union, rights groups and the United Nations for stoning convicted criminals and there are official Iranian recommendations the practice should not occur.

Asked whether he could confirm that a man charged with adultery was stoned to death in the northern city of Rasht during the Iranian month that ended on March 20, judiciary spokesman Alireza Jamshidi told a news conference:

"What you said about stoning is correct. But the woman repented ... Among the instances in which the sentence is not performed is when there is a repentance by the individual involved."

Iranian media said the executed man was 30 years old.

According to Iran's Islamic penal code, men convicted of adultery should be buried up to their waists and women up to their chests for stoning. Stones used should not be large enough to kill the person immediately.

In January, Jamshidi said two men convicted of adultery were stoned to death the previous month in the city of Mashhad, but a third man escaped while the punishment was being carried out.'

Feminist Rule #5675: "Concerns over human rights abuses in the Middle East are limited in scope only to women. This is because men's human rights can't possibly get violated in such a place since 1) it is a PATRIARCHY and so by definition men's rights cannot be violated and 2) "human rights" should never be confused with "men's rights".

Teacher Charged With 'Sex' With 10-YO Boy

anthony · 5 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DURHAM (WTVD) -- A Creekside Elementary teacher's assistant charged with having sex with a student made her first court appearance Thursday morning.

The Durham Police Department says Gina Marie Watring, 40, had intercourse with the child on at least two occasions in April - the first, three weeks ago and a second last Tuesday. It would not comment about where the incidents happened.

A source told Eyewitness News the victim is a 10-year-old boy.'

"The human side of a man-hating feminist"

Anonymous · 6 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Famous misandrist Marilyn French is dead. Here is an amusing attempt to defend her in the Times of London. Excerpt:

'Yet she was human, and not unloving: her anger against patriarchy was mingled with a real pity for the “dumb, grey, mute” men equally trapped by stereotype and expectation. And so they are - or were, although the softening of the modern male ideal in Western society should please her: the gentle fathers, woman-friendly employers, emotionally open gay men. From interviews I have read I am not sure that, as her life drew to its end, she saw or accepted the rate of change in such men, even as a minority. But she was an intellectual and academic historian, and knew that centuries of culture do not evaporate overnight.

Her vision, skewed and rhetorically extreme though it is, still has its uses. The Women's Room is not a book I'd pick up again, but Beyond Power still has things to say to a generation about to plunge into a nasty recession in which the weakest (often the ones with the wombs) will be shoved to the wall.'

BBC News Magazine asks: "Are there women paedophiles?"

Broadsword · 6 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Over the years we've had lots of men abused by mothers, sisters, aunties and baby sitters," says Mr Bevan.

"It's hard enough for adult men to admit abuse but to admit to abuse by a woman is even harder because it challenges their masculinity, it challenges their sexuality."

Women can commit a wide range of sexual offences, he says, including rape. And their victims commonly experience sexual confusion and a fear of intimacy. Anger can manifest itself as violence towards a wife or girlfriend in later life."

...

"Experts agree that women commit only a fraction of child sexual abuse but so much is hidden that it's difficult to be accurate. An influential study in the US in the 1980s suggested 20% of all offences against boys and 5% against girls were by women."

Finally! DV Against a man addressed in a "Dear Abby" column

Stinger503 · 6 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I have to give credit to Dear Abby for featuring a man being abused by his wife and encouraging him to seek help. Column here. Excerpt:

'DEAR ABBY: My wife thinks it's funny when she hits me. The other day I was splitting some wood and decided to take a break. I began driving golf balls into the field. She came out, grabbed the club out of my hands and whacked me in the leg with it. When I asked her why, she said, "Get back to work!" and started laughing. I was left with a large welt and a big bruise.
...
DEAR FRUSTRATED: Why are you afraid to speak your mind? Are you afraid she'll hit you again? Your wife has a sadistic sense of humor and enjoys seeing you in pain. Unless you draw the line, she will cause you serious injury.

Regardless of how much you love her, for your own safety you should get the heck out of there. What you have described is a form of spousal abuse, and it will escalate. That's why I'm urging you to contact the National Domestic Violence Hotline. The toll-free number is (800) 799-7233. The counselors there offer guidance to women AND men who are being abused by their spouse or partner.'

"Missing feminists"

Matt · 6 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Jeremy S., an oldie but a goodie entitled "Missing feminists". First I have ever seen it so it's new to me. :) I think you'll enjoy it. Essay here. Excerpt:

'A few years ago a guy had to be on guard when randomly chatting with a woman in this town. Conversations frequently erupted into gender-political disputes without warning. You'd be treated to a whole report on the ways in which you were to blame for oppressing women, through pornography and lipstick and breast implants and stuff.

It seems to happen less often now. Some say the world has dumbed down, but if we've traded shrill ideology for dumbness, I'll take that deal.
...
Once, at a party, a bunch of girls on a sofa 20 feet away were giggling at a friend and me. We hadn't met. They were laughing because one proposed our castration. The girl now works at the CBC.

I rang up Jeffrey Asher to ask whatever happened to the golden era of the gender war...

"In the early '80s, feminism changed from a human rights movement to a single sex movement where the lunatic fringe took over the centre," he says...
...
Asher's struggle seems logical. But as a man it's hard to begrudge a group I'm biologically programmed to like. Besides, who cares what they teach at university? And most guys can survive chances of some random occasional guilt trip as the price for female company.

If all of those quarrels and arguments were about allowing women the equal privilege of pushing paper in cubicles, I really have no objections to that.'

Office of Men's Health proposal makes government news - please contact your rep and voice support

Matt · 7 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 1991, Congress created the Office on Women's Health within the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). But don't men face health issues, too? Yes they do, and U.S. Rep. Tim Murphy (R-PA, 18th), has introduced a bill that would address men's health by establishing the HHS Office of Men's Health.

According to Rep. Murphy, his "Men and Families Health Care Act of 2009" (H.R. 2115), would raise the public's awareness of health problems affecting men, and ways to detect and prevent them. ..."For too long the health needs of men have gone unaddressed. This bill will help men's health take its rightful place in our federal government's healthcare priorities."'

This is very important because such an office will open up the matter of men's well-being as such to government involvement. Aside from the VA, the idea of focusing on men's well-being is completely missing from the US government's history of legislative efforts (unless it comes with strings attached, such as risking life and limb in defense of the country). Please take the time to contact your Congressional representative and voice your support for this bill. This is a rare opportunity, we cannot let it just pass us by.

GovTrack.us is a very good resource for all kinds of activism that is seeking legislative changes. The entry for this particular bill is here. Currently this bill is in the House Committee on Energy and Commerce. The members are listed here. You know what to do!

UK: Harriet "Harperson" Harman: I'll put women in charge of banks

Broadsword · 7 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman wants to use controversial new equality laws to pack the boards of nationalised banks with women.Labour's deputy leader is determined to boost the proportion of female workers in the financial sector and end what she calls 'pay discrimination' in the City.
...
She said last night that legal powers championed by her to discriminate in favour of minorities could help achieve her ambition. Some women MPs have claimed that the 'testosterone-fuelled' financial meltdown could have been avoided if there had been more women in decision-making positions.
...
'Sometimes we have to take scary methods in order to achieve worthwhile results,' she told a mainly female audience.

'It is about saying, "because you are a woman I'm going to put you in this promotion".'

She claimed that because women generally remained homemakers, the recession caused them to fear not only for their own jobs, but also for their husband's, for their children's futures, and for elderly relatives.

'We have to worry more than men and we are definitely worrying more about the recession than men are,' she said."'

Why the Graduation Crisis in our Cities Affects All Americans

Matt · 7 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the United States battles several threats including an economic crisis and a possible public health pandemic, it's important to remember that we are experiencing a "silent epidemic" that poses the greatest threat to our long-term economic strength and even our national security.

Today only about half (53%) of the young people in our nation's 50 largest cities graduate from high school, and in the time it takes to read this, another U.S. teenager will have dropped out. In fact, 1.2 million students drop out annually. That's 7,000 each school day, one every 26 seconds. The statistics are even more startling for students of color—less than half graduate on time.

We see the real depth of this disparity when we compare urban schools with their suburban counterparts. On average, suburban schools report graduation rates that are 18 percentage points higher.'

I posted the following comment; we'll see if it gets published:

"What the author is failing to mention is that the majority, and ever-more increasingly as time goes on, of the dropouts are boys (see: http://ftp.iza.org/dp3216.pdf, page 20 of the document, and figs XIV and XV on the last 2 pages of the .pdf file. That's just up through ~1985. It's gotten a lot worse since then.). What we're seeing is the creation of a huge underclass of men, while the graduation rate for women from colleges and universities is sitting firmly at 70% and the dropout rate for men from colleges is just over twice that of women (see http://www.weeklystandard.com/Content/Public/Articles/000/000/006/531ffoaa.asp ; here's the math: 58/42 = 0.724; 60/40 = 0.666; 0.724 - 0.666 = .058)

The future is not only not bright vis-a-vis education in general but also when speaking of society at large. The fastest way to cause a society to fall apart is to neglect the level of education that men have. Arguably it is the difference between maintaining civilization itself and watching it slip away. A world where most men you may come across are underemployed and undereducated is not a good world to be living in, and eventually not a very safe one; most men (and women, too) who commit violent crimes are un- or under-educated. This is not a mere statistical correlation."

Victims of restraining order abuse: contact Massachusetts Lawyers Weekly

Matt · 7 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From RADAR:

Glenn Sacks of Fathers & Families has asked that victims of restraining orders based on a false allegation of domestic violence e-mail David Yas, Massachusetts Lawyers Weekly publisher, and let him know about it.

If you are such a victim or know of one, please see to it that Mr. Yas finds out about it (in a polite way, of course). You can email him by clicking here. Glenn requests you "write a Letter to the Editor of the Massachusetts Lawyers Weekly and send it to Henriette Campagne at henriette.campagne-at-lawyersweekly.com. Please keep the letters short and to the point."

Thanks.

Feminist quotations and definitions

Matt · 8 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S. In case some you were still unaware of the depth of hate and intent of the other side take a good look at what you are all up against. Listing here. Excerpt:

'This brief collection is merely indicative.

"I believe that women have a capacity for understanding and compassion which a man structurally does not have, does not have it because he cannot have it. He's just incapable of it." -- Former Congresswoman Barbara Jordan

"All men are rapists and that's all they are" -- Marilyn French, Author, "The Women's Room"

"I feel that 'man-hating' is an honorable and viable political act, that the oppressed have a right to class-hatred against the class that is oppressing them." -- Robin Morgan, MS. Magazine Editor
...
FROM 'A Feminist Dictionary', ed. Kramarae and Treichler, Pandora Press, 1985

*MALE: ... represents a variant of or deviation from the category of female. The first males were mutants... the male sex represents a degeneration and deformity of the female.

*MAN: ... an obsolete life form... an ordinary creature who needs to be watched ... a contradictory baby-man ...

*TESTOSTERONE POISONING: ... 'Until now it has been though that the level of testosterone in men is normal simply because they have it. But if you consider how abnormal their behavior is, then you are led to the hypothesis that almost all men are suffering from "testosterone poisoning."
...
"Who cares how men feel or what they do or whether they suffer? They have had over 2000 years to dominate and made a complete hash of it. Now it is our turn. My only comment to men is, if you don't like it, bad luck -- and if you get in my way I'll run you down."

Signed: Liberated Woman, Boronia Herald-Sun, Melbourne, Australia - 9 February 1996'

NYTimes: "Women Bullying Women at Work"

Anonymous · 9 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The New York Times printed an article which speculates about the reasons why women often bully other women in the workplace.

'During this downturn, as stress levels rise, workplace researchers say, bullies are likely to sharpen their elbows and ratchet up their attacks.

It's probably no surprise that most of these bullies are men, as a survey by the Workplace Bullying Institute, an advocacy group, makes clear. But a good 40 percent of bullies are women. And at least the male bullies take an egalitarian approach, mowing down men and women pretty much in equal measure. The women appear to prefer their own kind, choosing other women as targets more than 70 percent of the time.
...
Leadership specialists wonder, are women being "overly aggressive" because there are too few opportunities for advancement? Or is it stereotyping and women are only perceived as being overly aggressive? Is there a double standard at work?'

Of course, the article doesn't consider the obvious: That women bully others because they are more or less the same as men, and that it's only sexist to imagine that women, as a group, would be free of any particular failing that affects men as a group. Some men are bullies, and some women are bullies, too. This shouldn't surprise anyone.

UK: If women ruled the world...

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman suggested last week that she might use her proposed Equalities Bill to get more women into positions of power in Britain's banks. The Bill will allow employers to practise "positive action", by choosing a female candidate over an equally well-qualified male. Since this is something that everyone is free to do already, without explicitly saying so, it sounds to me like legislation of the status quo. Feel free to employ a woman – or not, if you prefer.
...
Women are not chaste vessels of virtue, in matters of money or anything else. You only need to be one to know that. We may lack the testosterone surges that make little boys delight in smashing each other with sticks, but we are born – and remain – every bit as competitive, cruel and egotistical as them.

The myth that women are the less aggressive sex is disproved every day, in ordinary social intercourse. Introduce a room full of men to each other and they will quickly find a common interest – usually sport – around which to bond. Introduce a room full of women and they will circle round each other like hungry lionesses, trying to decide who should be admitted to the pride and who should be eaten for dinner.'

UK: Court case threatens women-only cab firm

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Its lurid pink cars and women drivers were launched to provide a safe and hassle-free service for women of all ages worried about getting into taxis driven by men.

But the women-only cab company Pink Ladies is being threatened with closure after its founders were taken to court this week by Warrington council in Cheshire and charged with operating an unlicensed private hire company.

The Warrington-based firm, which was launched four years ago, said it could close if the council won its case because if they registered under the taxi licensing system, sex discrimination laws would force its drivers to pick up male customers.

"We will fight this all the way to the high court," co-founder Andrea Winders said yesterday. "We are not a taxi service. We are a unique organisation. We do not fit within current legislation, therefore Warrington council has decided to issue court proceedings against us personally."

UK: Women only hear properly when gossiping or eavesdropping

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than two thirds of women admitted that a gossip with friends is the only time they are properly listening to what is being said.

The same percentage think they hear most intently when they are trying to eavesdrop on an argument taking place nearby.

Only half of men said they only hear properly when gossiping, while four in 10 admitted to listening closely to other people's conversations.

The poll of 2,000 people also found that more than one in five men reckon they always listen carefully to every word, and while less than one in five of women said the same.

Ladies are also most likely to switch off when listening to their work colleagues, with the average woman catching what they say just 64 per cent of the time.'

Not for women only: Male victims of domestic violence

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence happens to men, too. While statistics show that it is more common against women, nearly 8 percent of heterosexual men and more than 15 percent of gay men are assaulted by a date or intimate partner during their lives.

Domestic violence is also called intimate partner violence or abuse. It can occur in any relationship. A wife can abuse her husband. Same-sex partners can also be victims. This type of abuse often starts in milder forms when a couple is dating. It can continue into long-term relationships and marriages.

It's often difficult for victims of abuse to report their partner. As an abused man, you might also fear ridicule or disbelief. But domestic violence of any kind is not just personally devastating, it's also a crime.

A common part of domestic violence is control. The abuser will try to control his or her partner with threats of -- or actual -- physical, emotional, sexual or financial harm. Domestic violence may start with verbal abuse or gestures like slamming doors. These early signs are not always recognized as a problem. But controlling and violent gestures typically get worse and more frequent.'

Ambrose: Only a woman for Supreme Court vacancy?

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Supreme Court Justice David Souter is retiring, President Barack Obama will soon nominate a successor, and the cry is that it be a woman because, you know, it would be just dreadful otherwise.

Why, if Obama nominated a man, the next thing you know we would be back in the caves, yanking women by their hair, banging them on the head with clubs and forgetting every advance made against drooling, brute male oppressiveness.

Or maybe not. Some of us suspect that ours could very well continue to be a just, rights-respecting republic even if a highly qualified, capable male somehow sneaked past liberal watchfulness to fill Souter's vacancy. In our view, improvements in women's status would then shrink nary a millimeter.'

UK: Women only parking bays backed

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'IS this women-friendly car park Britain's best-kept secret?

Bolton council decided in 2002 to introduce `ladies only' bays at the town's Bow Street car park.

The ground-floor spaces are well lit and close to the multi-storey's security checkpoint.

Officials say they provide reassurance and make sure women feel safe when they return to their cars.

And customers we spoke to were quick to give them their seal of approval.

But despite their success in Bolton it appears as though the idea has failed to catch on with the rest of the region.'

Tulsa Woman Falsely Reported Rape

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TULSA, OK -- It turns out a report from a woman found under a porch was mostly false. The woman had claimed she was kidnapped and raped. Tulsa Police say much of her story was a lie and they are frustrated they spent so much time and effort on the case.

The story was heart-wrenching and scary all at the same time. A man and his mother found a woman crying out for help underneath their porch. She told them and police she'd been walking when she was kidnapped, held for two days and sexually assaulted inside a nearby house.

Police say she wasn't kidnapped. Several witnesses confirm the man picked her up at her home. Detectives say they can also prove she wasn't assaulted inside the home, either. The man involved, saw the story on the news and went to police before they even called him.
...
Advocate groups estimate only 2% are false, but police departments believe it's much higher, in some places, half or more. Detectives don't usually make a big deal out of it because they don't want real victims to be reluctant to come forward.'

Former teacher gets probation for 'sex' with student

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BELVIDERE — A former Belvidere High School teacher and volleyball coach was sentenced to probation today for having sex with a 15-year-old student in December 2007.

Loren Leoni, 25, was sentenced by Judge Joe McGraw at the Winnebago County Courthouse to 48 months of probation. She will undergo mandatory counseling and will register as a sex offender for the rest of her life.

“Sending her to prison isn’t going to restore him to the boy he was before this happened,” McGraw said in court while detailing the factors in his decision, which included a sex offender evaluation that said recidivism was unlikely.'

Lawyer blames bipolar disorder, 'mutual affection' for ex-Jupiter Christian teacher's 'sexting' case

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WEST PALM BEACH — The former Jupiter Christian School teacher charged with sending sexually explicit messages to a 14-year-old student blamed her behavior on bipolar disorder.

Geneva Henry, 29, is accused of sending messages such as "I want to rip all your clothes off" and "I want to kiss you all over" to a student through a MySpace account over a two-month period beginning in December.

School administrators were made aware of the messages by at least one student.

Jupiter police said she admitted to school administrators that she sent inappropriate text messages and resigned her position as an English teacher after the allegations surfaced.

In an interview with police, she blamed her behavior on a medical condition. Her lawyer said her client told her she suffers from bipolar disorder.

"This was a shock to everybody who knows her," said her lawyer, Heidi Perlet. "Completely out of character. By all accounts she was a great mother, a good teacher and well liked by the community."

Former Holly teacher could face prison time after entering plea in 'sex' with students case

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PONTIAC, Michigan -- A former Holly High School vocal music teacher could spend time behind bars for having sex with two students in her home and at the school.

Ranee S. Proper, 42, on Friday pleaded guilty to second-degree criminal sexual conduct before Oakland County Circuit Judge Edward Sosnick.

Under a plea agreement, five counts of third-degree criminal sexual conduct -- which carries a mandatory prison term -- were dismissed. Proper, 42, could still face prison time, but Sosnick will have the option of giving her a lesser sentence under this plea. Proper will be sentenced June 3 at 1 p.m.
...
"If it was a male I think a male would have gotten a more strict penalty."
...
"Leniency is a good thing in this case, although I have to say she's in a position of trust as a teacher," he said.

"The boys are old enough to have some decision making but they are still minors."'

UK: Mother denied all access to her children due to PAS

Broadsword · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A COURT has denied the former wife of a rich City financier all access to their three children after she was found to be turning them against him.

In an extraordinary ruling, the woman, who was also judged to be too indulgent a parent, has been legally barred from seeing her children for three years. She was jailed for approaching one of them in the street and telling him she loved him in breach of a court order. She is facing a possible return to jail this summer for posting a video about her plight on the internet.

The woman judge presiding over the case justified banning contact between the mother and her children because they were being placed in “an intolerable situation of conflict of loyalties resulting in them suffering serious emotional harm”.

During supervised visits with her, the children made serious allegations about their father which were later shown to be unfounded. Social workers believed the mother was either prompting them to make the claims or they were saying them just to please her."

Participate in survey on abused men

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Survey here. Main page reads:

'Thank you for agreeing to participate in this short survey, conducted by researchers from the University of California, Hastings College of the Law. Your participation is very important to us.

Our study examines how people choose to resolve interpersonal problems.

You are about to be presented with a short story describing a situation. After reading the story, you will be asked to answer a few multiple choice questions regarding how you would deal with the situation.

The survey is anonymous, and all your answers will be kept confidential. Your participation is entirely voluntary, and you may exit the webpage at any time. The survey should not take more a few minutes to complete.

Please only complete the survey once.

Thank you very much!'

Editorial Response: University was right to cancel Women's Studies program

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rather than home economics, in the minds of most people I know women's studies means militant, obnoxious feminism that is filled with man-hate and rubbish/rot academic courses preached to the closed ranks of a male-bashing all-female choir.

Unfortunately, what started as a good idea with noble aims was politicized by radical elements to become a female version of a good-old-boys club.
...
In short, women's studies programs in most U.S. and Canadian colleges and universities have become radicalized, exclusionary, impractical, and dangerously self-isolated. That is a recipe for demise. Women's studies does NOT allow us to evaluate the world through women's experience because it does not reflect the attitudes, beliefs and lives of a great majority of women in this world.'

America's Reading Gender Gap

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The good news is that reading scores for 9 and 13-year-olds are the highest ever according to results released this week from the 2008 National Assessment of Educational Progress.

The bad news is that boys trail girls in reading performance at all age levels. The gap at age 9 is 8 points, at age 13 is 8 points, and at age 17 is 11 points. This is not a new trend—boys have been scoring lower than girls on U.S. Department of Education reading tests for more than 30 years.

The reading gender gap spans every racial and ethnic group, and categorically finds boys underperforming girls regardless of income, disability, or English-speaking ability.'

Still too few male teachers? Many grades see small percentage

anthony · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Educators are expressing concerns about the trend, which is backed up by National Education Association reports showing that only one in five public school teachers are men, with that number being even more disproportionate (one in nine) for elementary school educators.

An NEA report formulated using survey information from education departments in all 50 states estimates there are 785,151 male teachers in public elementary and secondary schools across the nation, compared to 2.4 million women counterparts.

...

She also suggests having middle and high school male students be encouraged to job shadow teachers to help steer them into a possible career in the classroom.

"It is an unfortunate truth that men commit the majority of violence in our country, often toward each other. Until we demonstrate that men can teach, be productive and help our children succeed, everyone will lose," Washington wrote.'

The Future of Men Panel and Breakfast: May 27, 2008 at NYU Steinhardt

Matt · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'As male students decline in proportion in almost every field across US undergraduate and graduate/professional schools, little attention has been devoted to systematically exploring the causes of this trend; or, in an age in which education is vitally important, its implications for men's roles in American society, culture, economics, and politics more generally. This breakfast discussion, involving practitioners and a range of academics from NYU and elsewhere, will help launch such a sustained investigation of these vital themes. The breakfast will include an announcement regarding forthcoming fellowships for scholars focusing on men's studies and related issues.'

Mother who left baby in the cold should not go to jail, court told

Matt · 10 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Regina woman who left her baby in a stroller in the bitter cold has changed for the better, according to presentations made during a sentencing hearing on Friday.

Natacha Araya, 22, should not be behind bars according to submissions from both the Crown prosecutor and defence lawyer on the case.

Araya had already pleaded guilty to failing to provide the necessities of life after leaving her six-month-old son inside a baby stroller on a Regina sidewalk on a winter night.

It was 1:10 in the morning of Feb. 28, 2008, with a temperature of –20 C, according to information provided to the court on Friday.

Court was told how Araya was seen struggling to make her way as she pulled a stroller along a snow-clogged street, at one point dragging the baby carrier behind her like a sled.'

RADAR ALERT: Judge Judy Tells False Accuser: "You Didn't Play Fair!"

Matt · 11 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The Honorable Judith Sheindlin has made it clear that the no-nonsense judge will not tolerate the manipulation of the judicial system by litigants who try to use restraining orders and false allegations of domestic violence to their advantage.

During the April 30, 2009 episode of Judge Judy, Her Honor told her audience of 10 million people that the female defendant was not about to "put one over" on her. "That's how well I know your game," she told the defendant. "... you may get over on a judge tomorrow, but you're not getting over on me today ... I am going to tell you what you did wrong ... you didn't play fair!"

This episode can be viewed at YouTube: Part 1 and part 2.

Judge Judy is viewed by 10 million people daily. That is a quick and efficient way to spread the word to the masses that the this type of abuse should not and will not be tolerated.

Contact the producers of Judge Judy and let them know how important cases such as the one above really are by going to http://www.judgejudy.com/your_opinions.php.

Then contact your local legislator and let them know that even Judge Judy and her audience of 10 million people are aware that false allegations of domestic violence and the overt abuse of restraining orders are "not fair."

As always, please remember to be polite.

To find your Representative's contact information go to http://www.house.gov/ and enter your zip code in the upper left corner.

++
Date of RADAR Release: May 11, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

Appeal for support for Irish MRA Mike Murphy

Matt · 11 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S.: A very brave Irish Journalist, Kevin Meyers, who wrote the two columns below and has coined the term “Lifeboat Feminists” may be subjected to a negative email campaign by feminists who oppose his writing style. He has requested letters to his editor to provide him support independent.letters-at-independent.ie, kmyers-at-independent.ie

I think all of you could understand a man writing this would be subject to a great deal of hate mail. As Barbara Kay, a Canadian female journalist, who writes about similar subjects, points out not many editors would allow their male columnists to continue dealing with these topics under the circumstances. I am asking the MRAs so inclined to write a letter to his editor as shown in his email and mine already completed, to provide solace and encouragement to Kevin. We are not likely see this kind of writing by a man in North America very often, if at all. Links to his articles with respect to feminists are ">here and here and in the columns.

Of note Una Hardester’s mother now has a blogspot blog with a statement to the press on the circumstances surrounding the false allegations. It is here.

Kevin Meyers writes:

Sorry to add to your burdens, and I am extremely grateful for your support, but I have just learnt that a major e-mail campaign against me is being organised on this issue.

If you wish, I would be grateful if you would contact your like-minded friends – and their like-minded friends, and theirs also, and so on - and ask them to publicly agree with me at letters-at-independent.ie. Your choice, naturally.

Fathers' group urges changes to laws

anthony · 12 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'UTICA — Local advocates for the rights of fathers are asking New York Governor David Paterson to form a human rights commission to look at what they call unfair treatment of fathers in divorce proceedings in the state.

“I am calling upon you to assemble a non-partisan commission of New York residents to study and remedy ongoing violations of human rights in our domestic relations courts,” National League of Fathers Director John Kalil Jr. said in a letter to Paterson dated Monday.

He cited what he termed “the systematic removal of mainstream fathers from the lives of their children,” and said the way the laws are structured now create a financial incentive for governments to perpetuate the system.

Laws relating to custody and child support are often biased toward mothers, New Hartford resident Kalil said.

Utica-based lawyer, Leon Koziol who is the organization’s attorney, agreed.

“They are bankrupting fathers and forcing them out of their children’s lives,” he said.'

UK: Girl faked town centre rape story

anthony · 12 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'AN 18-year-old girl who claimed she had been dragged into a town centre alley and raped, made up the story, it has been revealed.

Detectives say the complaint was false and is no longer being investigated.

The girl could face prosecution for wasting police time.

She claimed she had been dragged into the alley off Bradshawgate at around 2.30am after a night out on Saturday, May 2.

Police launched a hunt for her attacker and cordoned off the area. They also appealed to a mystery "Good Samaritan" to come forward. The girl claimed he had disturbed the rapist, and then escorted her home.

Police reviewed CCTV cameras in the area and found no sign of the incident taking place.'

Report of rape along jogging trail turns out to be false

anthony · 12 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A report about a rape along a jogging trail in an unincorporated part of Santa Ana was found to be false today after investigators interviewed the woman for the third time, authorities said.

Authorities with the Orange County Sheriff's Department were preparing to release a sketch Thursday of a man described by the woman to investigators. But during the third interview of the woman Thursday, investigators found that the report had been falsified, said Jim Amormino spokesman for the Sheriff's Department.

"She made it up," he said.'

Woman fakes rape, burglary

anthony · 12 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'STOCKTON, Ala. -- A Baldwin County woman duct-taped her 2-year-old son and herself in an effort to make it look like her house had been burglarized and she had been raped, according to the Baldwin County Sheriff's Office.

The woman later confessed that it was all a lie, and she was arrested, Sheriff's spokesman Maj. Anthony Lowery said.

The woman, identified as Tonya Yolanda McRae, 27, called for help Thursday morning.

She told deputies that someone broke into her Stockton home and raped her.

Lowery said several aspects of her statement led deputies to suspect that her story was untrue.

After a rape test came back negative, Lowery said, McRae admitted that she made the story up.'

Ignoramus parents harming child/parent relationships

FramedFather · 12 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'Lately I have been getting quite a few emails from parents (mostly fathers of course) who are asking what to do about their ex's not complying with parenting plan final orders, such as; not allowing full visitation, not allowing phone calls, etc.

Some of these parents are telling me they are going to their local courthouses and asking for help or contacting certain court officials seeking help only to be told, "sorry, can't help ya".

Well, they are not blowing smoke in your face, they can't help you nor do they want to help you. Most attorneys won't help you either nor really want to get involved, unless of course you throw thousands of dollars down on the table first. Even then they will grab your money and put it in their bank account and slowly forget about you. Why should they be concerned, it's not their life or their children they are fighting for.'

New York plans to charge homeless for shelter space

Matt · 12 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Jeremy S.: Today I can guarantee an uptick in DV and Child Abuse allegations, specifically in New York .

Pulling out a 1997 New York law, Homeless shelters are going to start charging the homeless parts of their incomes in order to live in homeless shelters.

Domestic violence shelters do not do this!

Document EVERYTHING, if you are on rocky ground in your relationship...if you are about to lose your home, if you have an abusive partner/spouse...you could be a target for false allegations...but not in the normal 80 percent range now. I expect that reports of Domestic Violence will surge, over four hundred percent or more during this time of economic crisis, in any place where homeless people are being charged parts of their income in order to live in a homeless shelter. Excerpt:

'The Bloomberg administration has quietly begun charging rent to homeless families who live in publicly run shelters but have income from jobs.

The new policy is based on a 1997 state law that was not enforced until last week, when shelter operators across the city began requiring residents to pay a certain portion of their income. The amount varies based on factors that include family size and what shelter is being used, but should not exceed 50 percent of a family's income, a state official said.

Vanessa Dacosta, who earns $8.40 an hour as a cashier at Sbarro, received a notice under her door several weeks ago informing her that she had to give $336 of her approximately $800 per month in wages to the Clinton Family Inn, a shelter in Hell's Kitchen where she has lived since March.

"It's not right," said Ms. Dacosta, a single mother of a 2-year-old who said she spends nearly $100 a week on child care. "I pay my baby sitter, I buy diapers, and I'm trying to save money so I can get out of here. I don't want to be in the shelter forever."'

False DV story leads to officer's death while liar remains remorseless

Anonymous · 12 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Disturbing story out of Vegas about the death of a police officer in a car accident who was responding to a false domestic violence call from a 14 year old girl. The girl shows no remorse for her actions. Excerpt:

'Karen stopped her and put a hand on her shoulder.

"I'm going to tell you something," Karen said. "You know that night, with you and your father? That night that you had called is the night that police officer died because he was coming to your phone call. But we're going to stop at that."

Her daughter blinked.

"I'm hungry. Did you eat my doughnut?"'

Gender-bending chemical timebomb fear for boys' fertility

Broadsword · 13 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Chemicals in food, cosmetics and cleaning products are 'feminising' unborn boys and raising their risk of cancer and infertility later in life, an expert warns today.

Professor Richard Sharpe, one of Britain's leading reproductive biologists, says everyday substances are linked to soaring rates of birth defects and testicular cancer, and to falling sperm counts.

The government adviser's report published today is the most detailed yet into the threat posed to baby boys by chemicals that block the action of the male sex hormone testosterone, or mimic the female sex hormone oestrogen.
...
Doctors are concerned about rising levels of birth defects, with 7 per cent of British boys born with partially descended testes and seven in 1000 with malformed genitals.

The latest estimates indicate that one in six men in the UK has a low sperm count and will struggle to father a child.

And the number of testicular cancer cases among men in their 20s and 30s has been doubling every 25 years.
...
In repeated experiments, testosterone-disrupting chemicals found in pesticides, drugs, plastics and household products created symptoms of TDS (Testicular Dysgenesis Syndrome) in laboratory animals. Some of the experiments showed that the chemicals work in combination - causing problems at doses where the individual chemicals should be harmless."

New Student Organization at U of Chicago: “Men In Power'

Anonymous · 13 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Contact: Steve Saltarelli
FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
Email: MenInPowerChicago-at-gmail.com

NEW STUDENT ORGANIZATION “MEN IN POWER” DEBUTS AT UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

Male Advocacy Group—Only of Its Kind in America—Provides Pre-Professional and Social Opportunities to All; Angers Some

The demographics of American colleges are changing, females now representing 58 percent of graduating students. According to third-year Men in Power president Steve Saltarelli, the presently male-dominated corporate environment is a reflection of the nature of the educational landscape 30 years prior, with workplace gender-dynamics bound to change in the coming generations. At University of Chicago, there are twelve female-oriented advocacy groups, but none to prepare men for this change; until now. After a satirical editorial in the Chicago Maroon, the school’s newspaper, birthed the idea, Men in Power has gathered steam, amassing 125 members on campus and becoming a Registered Student Organization. Some university groups and students, however, aren’t thrilled about their new peer, whom they see as misogynistic.

The article exhibits some of this resistance. A poster identified only as “Hannah” says, “Men: 51% of US workforce, 97% of fortune 500 CEOs.” Other comments decry the group as “bashful and naive sexism”.

The editorial, Saltarelli insists, is satire, and as a group Men in Power will operate on the highest plane of professionalism and inclusivity. The organization is composed of five groups, three of which are pre-professional (Business, Pre-Law, Pre-Med), complementing the group’s Outreach and Events wings. Men in Power includes numerous female members, including its Head of Outreach, third-year Liz Scoggin.

Men in Power is currently looking to establish alumni ties and contact with professional leaders in the Chicago-land area. They hope to hold their first campus-wide event before the academic year ends in June.

Men in Power at the University of Chicago seeks to equip an enterprising group of young men with the tools, knowledge, and connections they will need to become future leaders in their respective fields of business, law, healthcare, and politics.

###

If you’d like more information about this topic, or would like to schedule an interview with any of Men in Power’s members, please contact Steve Saltarelli at MenInPowerChicago-at-gmail.com

Number Of Unwed Moms In U.S. Rising

anthony · 13 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(AP) The percentage of births to unmarried women in the United States has been rising sharply, but it's way behind Northern European countries, a new U.S. report on births shows.

Iceland is the leader with 6 in 10 births occurring among unmarried women. About half of all births in Sweden and Norway are to unwed moms, while in the U.S., it's about 40 percent.

France, Denmark and the United Kingdom also have higher percentages than the United States, according to the report from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.'

Shattering rampant abuse myths

Matt · 14 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine a world where ideology takes the place of truth and laws are rooted in dubious factoids from nowhere. That pretty much sums up the fact-challenged, hysteria-mongering domestic violence industry that is propped up by $1 billion of federal money each year.

Industry ideologues are loathe to admit the fact, but they truly believe the cause of partner abuse is patriarchal oppression. Not convinced? Just take it on the authority of feminist Gloria Steinem who once made this randy claim, "The patriarchy requires violence or the subliminal threat of violence in order to maintain itself."

In her now-famous PBS interview, Steinem expounded on her conspiracy-laced worldview: "It starts with the slippery slope of the supposition [of] gender that sexual relations between men and women are dominant-passive... And then it goes all the way up the scale to beatings, torture, [and] murder."

Victim Of False Rape Claim Eligible For Monetary Compensation

Luek · 14 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man falsely accused of rape has been told he has grounds for compensation.

A tribunal in Taunton ruled Clive Bishop, of Walton, Somerset, can apply for compensation from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (CICA).

In 2007, Mr Bishop was falsely accused of rape by a woman who made up the allegation. She was given a 10-month prison sentence as a result.'

'Deadbeat Dads' protest update

Matt · 14 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Update from Glenn Sacks' newsletter here. Excerpt:

'Two weeks ago we launched a protest campaign against Lifetime's Deadbeat Dads.

Lifetime has received over 5,000 calls, letters, and faxes from our supporters, and our protest garnered press attention and the endorsements of nearly 200 mental health, family law and medical professionals, and other prominent citizens. We also drew support from the Center for Law and Social Policy (CLASP), which advocates for low income families.

This campaign was an early, preemptive strike–if the show does air, it won't be for several months. We have made our point, and have decided to suspend the campaign against Deadbeat Dads. We will continue to monitor the situation, and if in the future we have good reason to believe that Lifetime will be going ahead with the show, we will renew our efforts. The campaign web page will remain up, as will all relevant information concerning the campaign.

Thanks to all of you who participated.'

CLASP Issues Devastating Critique of Private Child Support Collectors' Abuses

Matt · 14 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"[P]rivate collection agencies often fail to deliver any genuine services. Instead, they strip income from low and moderate-income families that could have been spent on housing, childcare, clothing and school expenses, or saved for their children's education. They trap custodial parents in perpetual contracts.

"They also exploit the child support indebtedness of low and moderate-income non-custodial parents through the use of predatory and abusive tactics that increase their debt levels and often destroy their credit histories and interfere with parenting relationships.

"A number of private child support companies bring to the table a history of consumer complaints, bar association ethics complaints, and litigation filed against them."'

Megan Fox: "...men are so dirty that I'd never want to sleep with a girl who had slept with a man."

Matt · 14 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"I have no question in my mind about being bisexual.

"But I'm also a hypocrite.

"I would never date a girl who was bisexual, because that means they also sleep with men, and men are so dirty that I'd never want to sleep with a girl who had slept with a man."'

As I said in my previous post on her earlier comments about how she "hates men", boycott this woman. Do not do anything that may lend to her cash-flow. She is a misandrist of the worst kind and is at the same time making her living off of men.

Newsweek: 'Bringing Up Baby in the Big House'

anthony · 15 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A prison may not seem like the best place to raise infants. But researchers are finding that it's better than the alternative. Joseph Carlson, a criminal-justice professor at the University of Nebraska at Kearney who recently completed a 10-year study, says he thought such programs were "strange" when he began his research. Now he thinks they're "a win-win situation" for mothers and babies—and reduce crime by helping inmates to reform. Carlson also believes such programs can help "stop the generational cycle" in which children of inmates become criminals themselves. "Our goal is that the child will feel loved, the mother will stay out of prison herself and thus will hopefully strive to keep the child out of prison," says Carlson, whose study will be published this spring by the journal Corrections Compendium.
...
Some prison guards aren't sympathetic toward the women. They make snide remarks that children don't belong in jail. That attitude angers Toomer, who admits to loving "fast money" but wants to get a college degree when she gets out. "I don't look at it as the babies doing time," she says, "because all the baby knows is they're with their mother and that's where children prefer to be."'

Former Teacher Who Had Sex With Student Avoids Jail Again

anthony · 16 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VOLUSIA COUNTY, Fla. -- A former Volusia County teacher who had sex with a student, but hasn't avoided children, still won't go to prison for her crime. Cynthia Horvath was given probation in her sex case, but then she violated that probation by chatting online with a boy.

Horvath had a hearing Wednesday at the Volusia County courthouse for violating her probation. What was at stake here was the former cheerleading coach could have gone straight to prison for at least three years.

But what it came down to was, when she was on the Facebook web site, did she really believe she was communicating with a 16-year-old boy? The state couldn't prove that she did.'

Charge dropped in case of alleged false rape claim

anthony · 16 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SPRINGFIELD, Mo. | Prosecutors have dropped their case against a Greene County woman accused of making a false rape claim that resulted in a massive investigation.

The Springfield News Leader reported on its Web site that the making a false report charge was dismissed Friday after prosecutors found that there was not enough evidence to prove that the woman's tale was fake.

The investigation began in July 2007 after deputies who responded to a call from the woman found her bound and partially nude behind a barn near her home.

Authorities spent hundreds of hours investigating before prosecutors charged the woman in July 2008. They alleged that she had injured and bound herself before calling police.'

Woman to be charged for false rape claim

anthony · 16 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 36-year-old woman had been arrested in Tembisa for perjury yesterday after laying a false charge of rape, Gauteng police said.

Captain Manyadza Ralidzhivha said the woman had opened a case of rape in February. She alleged that she had been raped by a pastor when she went to assist with tea at a church.

During investigations, police questioned her and she revealed that she had gone to the man's house, but that he had not raped her.'

Ireland: False rape report as bad as crime

anthony · 16 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The printed media is often accused of having a hidden agenda, or a pronounced political slant to one party or set of ideals. It is refreshing therefore to read Kevin Myers' contributions on the subject of gender in your publication.

His recent column on the Michael Hannon case (Irish Independent, May 5) highlighted the clear double standards that pressure groups have when the victim doesn't conform to their gender expectations.

Rape is a heinous crime, but just as we condemn and punish perpetrators, we should do so equally to those who falsely accuse men of this crime.

A few high-profile cases in the UK recently clearly highlighted that some people believe that the rape accusation itself is as much evidence as is needed.'

Man's car damaged by partner who had made false rape accusation

anthony · 16 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who cried rape against her boyfriend later smashed his car window.

Adelyn Marsden continued her relationship with Graham Smith despite falsely accusing him of rape, Durham Crown Court heard.

She was given a suspended prison sentence for that offence in November of last year.
...
"The false allegation of rape was made in the heat of the moment, but she retracted it quickly afterwards.

"That may be why the court was able to suspend the sentence, which on the face of it does seem a lenient penalty for that type of offence.

"I have a letter from Mr Smith in which he says he forgives her and he still sees a future together for the pair of them."'

Dear diary: "I beat him again."

anthony · 16 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 78-year-old Lynnwood woman has been charged with second-degree assault after she allegedly beat the tar out of her 84-year-old husband because she believed he was unfaithful, the Everett Herald is reporting.

The woman allegedly hit her husband with a bowl, a metal pipe and a carpet sweeper, which she documented in her diary.

"I beat him again," the woman wrote in the diary, which was recovered by police. "I told him it would be worth going to jail just to watch him bleed to death," she wrote.

A witness told police the woman believed her husband had an affair 35 years ago, according to court documents.'

Waco woman who sliced husband's neck given 10 years probation

anthony · 16 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Waco woman who sliced her boyfriend's throat in June and then married him in March was sentenced to 10 years of probation Tuesday.

A 54th State District Court jury of nine women and three men deliberated about an hour before granting Tasha Nicole Delao's request to be spared from prison in the assault of her husband, the father of her five children.

Delao, 29, pleaded guilty Monday to aggravated assault charges in a June 25 incident in which Archie McLeain was cut twice on the neck during an argument at her home in the 1000 block of Harlem Street. His wounds required 36 stitches, trial testimony showed.'

Edmonton cabbie sues passengers over false assault allegations

Matt · 16 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A veteran Edmonton taxi driver is speaking publicly about a civil lawsuit he filed last year against four young women who falsely accused him of sexual assault after travelling in his car three years ago.

"I just want to give those girls [a] lesson," Soner Yasa told CBC News. "We're so vulnerable as a cab driver."

The lawsuit, filed by Yasa in Edmonton's Court of Queen's Bench in April 2008, seeks nearly $250,000 in damages to cover emotional and mental distress. His allegations have not been proven in court. One of the four young women filed a statement of defence last month in which she admits to getting into Yasa's taxi but denies the rest of his allegations.'

UK Guardian: "Our prisons are failing women"

Proud_to_be_a_man · 17 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Poor wimmin who break the law should be spared prison. This 'Crook' woman is a complete and utter imbecile. Even the Guardian readers are making her look idiotic! Article here. Excerpt:

'In pay, pensions, politics and promotion, the gender gap is a disgrace. But in justice, women face a national scandal. A report published today by the Fawcett Society reveals a justice system that is "institutionally sexist". This is of no surprise to organisations such as the Howard League, which have long campaigned against the hopeless situation of women rotting in our prisons.

Today, as we sit outraged in our armchairs, 4,274 women and girls languish in our jails. These are not the dangerous criminals one might imagine, but often sad victims of circumstance and violence – often at the hands of men. More than half have been victims of domestic violence, a third have experienced sexual abuse, and 25% have been in care as children. Two-thirds of women in prison have dependent children under 18; of these, just one in 20 remain in their own home once their mother has been sentenced.

A sharp increase in the severity of sentencing has seen this number soar by 60% in a decade. Two-thirds of women are in for less than six months: these are damaged people in jail for petty offences. Women and children with mental health problems and addictions are then warehoused temporarily in our flooded and failing jails. Rotting in the security-driven prisons, which follow the rules designed for high security men's prisons, simply serves to exacerbate problems and will most likely lead to more serious and frequent reoffending on release. The idea that public protection is served by this vicious circle is not one many victims of crime would recognise.'

Read the whole thing (if you can stomach it) and then read the far more sensible comments from (gulp!) The Guardian readers.

She's done this before of course: Close down women's prisons

Pop-star's violent misandry in still music video fare

HumanistGirl · 17 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

In pop star Pink's new music video for Please Don't Leave Me, she is seen beating the living daylights out of some poor guy who appears to be in her clutches. I guess she wanted to do a sort of tongue-in-cheek sort of homage to "Misery". At the end, as the guy's being carried away on a gurney, the police are just hovering over her and at the very end she gives the camera a wink.

First of all, think about if the situation was in reverse. The video would probably not even see the light of day. Yet, it's perfectly okay to show a video by a popular FEMALE artist where she's beating up a man?

Secondly, consider that Pink is considered a role model for young girls. What message is this sending them? That it's perfectly okay to beat the hell out of some guy just to get him to stay?

Apparently, Pink believes that violence against men is not only okay, it's also a good ploy for selling records. Either way, I think it's messed up.

Girl Scouts Are Learning Feminism

anthony · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When many parents think of Girl Scouts, they imagine young girls in uniform selling Thin Mints and Tagalong cookies – not learning about stone labyrinths, world peace, global warming, yoga, avatars, smudging incense, Zen gardens and feminist, communist and lesbian role models.

But that's exactly what many of 2.7 million Girl Scouts will learn about with a new curriculum called "Journeys" released last year.

...

They will be briefly introduced to Polish poet Anna Swir, known for her feminist and erotic poems, and Jane Addams, an ardent feminist and pacifist who received a Nobel Peace Prize.

...

In the next age group, for teens in the ninth and tenth grades, girls are taught about wage disparities between the sexes, and a lack of assets and senior management positions held by women.'

UK: Who’s to blame for our lost boys?

anthony · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sadly, in a society low on trust and high on risk aversion, I can’t imagine many British men being prepared to volunteer as a role model. Our society’s growing “fear of boys” means that most older citizens now steer clear of youngsters. According to the Good Childhood Inquiry, the British are more wary of children and young people than any country in Europe. This fear runs alongside another distinctly unhealthy and widespread “fear of men”. A combination of feminist rhetoric and media obsession with paedophilia has turned every man into a potential child molester. In the words of one male interviewee, who gave up running an athletic club: “People think you’re a weirdo if you want to hang about with boys.” Indeed they do, to the extent that adults must now be cleared by the Criminal Records Bureau before even spending time in the same room as children.'

Teacher in sex case approached second boy

anthony · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Henry County High School teacher who was arrested last month for having sex with a student allegedly approached another male student with intentions of having a similar relationship.

Sandra Kay Curtis, 36, of Camden, was charged with solicitation of a minor Tuesday and was arrested at the Henry County jail by Henry County Sheriff's Department Lt. Stan Pinson.

According to a press release from the Sheriff's Department, the charge stems from an ongoing investigation into the incident. Damon Lowe, director of the Sheriff's Department's Criminal Investigation Division, said this morning that Curtis allegedly approached a second male student in one of her classes, but that incident never went any further.

Curtis was originally arrested April 21 on three counts each of statutory rape by an authority figure and aggravated statutory rape for a relationship she had with a 16-year-old male student.'

Sexism against men is as evil as that suffered by women

anthony · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I am often taken aback by how the gender discourse has become shorthand for women's issues. I suspect that there is someone out there who thinks "gender" is simply a more sophisticated name for what unlearned people refer to as "women".

That, perhaps, is why the so- called gender activists, who in reality are women's rights activists, have chosen to ignore the other slur from the idiotic Floyd Shivambu and his older alter ego, the secretary of the Umkhonto weSizwe veterans' association Ramatuku Maphutha.

It seems nobody made a big deal about the sexism against the men Helen Zille appointed to her Western Cape cabinet. I don't know whether those men are good at what they do, but to suggest that they got their positions in return for sexual favours is sexist in the extreme.'

UK: Man flu? It's we women who are the REAL sickly sex

anthony · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Someone needs to speak up for men, so it had better be me. After years of being vilified for their shortcomings - be them in the kitchen, nursery or boudoir - men now stand accused of being the 'weaker' of the two sexes.

A new survey claims that men are not only more likely than women to become ill, they are also more likely to pull a 'sickie' in order to skive off work. Women, on the other hand, soldier on, aided by stronger immune systems.

Now, I am as suspicious of surveys as I am of political party manifestos - and this one was probably compiled by a coven of man-hating spinsters.'

Canada: Defending men's image against TV stereotypes

anthony · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'• A JR Furniture ad shows a male staff member using a chainsaw to chop in half a showroom sofa, not understanding his boss meant he should cut the price by half.

• A BMO Master Card ad shows a naive husband telling his wife how excited he is about planning for a trip for them to Paris several decades hence; after he slowly earns enough air-mileage points to pay for the long-awaited vacation. His wife looks appalled.

When I recently mentioned some of these ads on my blog, the response from readers was instantaneous and strong. It proved once again that people eat up any issue that has to do with the gender.

Many men, and women, have been noting that commercials, TV sitcoms (such as The Simpsons and King of Queens) and even songs have for a long time played the silly-man card.'

Joe Biden Peddles Domestic Violence Myths

anthony · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A little old (late April of this year) but still relevant. Excerpt:

'Through his work on the issue, he said, he has learned that seven out of 10 homeless children are homeless because their mother is a victim of domestic violence and that 70 percent of women who go to a hospital emergency room are there because of physical abuse from male partners.
...
Money from the federal economic stimulus package is being made available to the National Domestic Violence Hotline Center and a teen abuse dating hotline, he said. The investment helps saves hospital costs incurred by abused women and addresses the problems of dysfunctional families and children from abusive families who may grow up to abuse themselves, he said.
...
President Barack Obama's administration also is working with the State Department on an international effort to stop violence against women, Biden said.

The vice president also was attending private political fundraisers in Texas organized by the Democratic National Committee in Austin and Houston.'

UK: The women who want to save banking

anthony · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Women tend to bring a lot to the table. They think more long-term, they think about the team, and not only themselves. They think more about people, and they see other business opportunities than men."

There is another, crucial difference, they find: "Women are willing to ask stupid questions. We want to understand. We won't take risks we don't understand, so we ask: what is sub-prime? Who'll pay these loans back?"
...
Moreover, they say, as women "we are willing to use our rational mind and our emotional intelligence to release value out of our investments. The touchy-feely side is actually the harder side. We reject a lot more investment opportunities as a result of emotional due diligence than financial due diligence."'

SAFE Act: Abuse Industry Batters the Truth

Matt · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a group of activists among us who have found the perfect way to advance their statist, anti-family agenda. They ply their issue by relying on a devious mixture of exaggerations, half-truths, and bald-faced lies.

I'm referring, of course, to the domestic violence industry. DV operatives make bogus claims designed to garner ever-expanding federal funding, which in turn is used to disseminate more biased factoids that keep women in a continuous state of fear. It's a multi-billion dollar, taxpayer-financed scam, and I'm here to blow the whistle.

Last week Dear Abby devoted her column to helping a man who had been pummeled and maimed by his wife. And according to a 2006 Harris poll, 55% of Americans know of a man who has been physically abused by his wife or girlfriend.

But the domestic violence industry works day and night to make you think the Roper poll got it wrong — that abused men are a statistical rarity, and such men probably had it coming anyway.'

Office Of Women's Health Manipulates Statistics By Ignoring Higher Male Suicide Deaths

anthony · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the report, women are nearly twice as likely as men to suffer from major depression. They are three times as likely to attempt suicide, and they experience anxiety disorders two to three times more often than men.

While these statistics are not new, their importance is generally underplayed, says Wanda Jones, Dr.P.H., health scientist and director of the OWH. She notes that whereas past reports have focused on bringing mental health to the forefront of concern -- such as the 1999 publication "Mental Health: A Report of the Surgeon General" -- few have focused primarily on the specific mental illness issues specific to women, hence the need for such a publication.'

Prosecutor: I put away an innocent man

Matt · 18 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When I prosecuted Charles Chatman for aggravated rape in 1981, I was certain I had the right man. His case was one of my first important felony cases as a Dallas County assistant district attorney. Chatman was convicted in a court of law by a jury of his peers. They, like me, were convinced of his guilt.

Nearly 27 years later, DNA proved me – and the criminal justice system – wrong. Chatman was freed from prison in January after DNA testing proved him innocent. He spent nearly three decades behind bars for a crime he did not commit – a stark reminder that our justice system is not immune from error. No reasonable person can question this simple truth.

I am proud of having been a prosecutor; it is honorable work. In fact, I still have a portrait of former Dallas County District Attorney Henry Wade in my law office. He was a good man, and he gave me a chance to be a trial lawyer. However, my unknowing involvement in prosecuting an innocent man has been a troubling experience.
...
I am no bleeding heart. I have been a Republican for over 30 years. I started my career as a supporter of removing violent people from society for as long as possible, and I still believe that to be appropriate.

But I also believe that the government should be held to the strictest burden before it deprives a citizen of his freedom. It is not too much to ask that we not convict and execute innocent people in our quest to enforce the law. Let's get this system fixed.'

Blue collar U.S. males lose more ground

Matt · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DALLAS, May 19 (Reuters) - Rodney Ringler is an unemployed blue collar male without a college degree. He's hardly alone. Men like him have been the main victims of the current recession in the United States.
...
One statistic that stands out in America's recession-stung economy is the unemployment rate for adult men: in April for the second month in a row it surged ahead of the national average to 9.4 percent versus 8.9 percent for all workers. The jobless rate for adult women was 7.1 percent.

The reasons are clear: male-heavy sectors such as construction and manufacturing have been hard hit. But the implications may be dire for the broader economy and hamper the recovery as families that once had male breadwinners struggle.'

And every day we read in the MSM about how hard this recession is on women.

UK: 13-YO boy not the father after all

Matt · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DNA tests have revealed that a 13-year-old British boy who claimed to have fathered a child with his 15-year-old girlfriend was not the dad, according to a court judgement made public Monday.
...
But the story, reported in February just days after the birth, sparked claims from other boys who lived nearby that they could also be the father and social workers organised a DNA test.

The results, revealed in a high court judgement last month which was only made public Monday, showed the father was 15-year-old Tyler Barker, who lived on the same housing estate as Steadman in Eastbourne in southern England.'

Apparently, one can never be too young to be a paternity fraud target.

Woman beats husband over old affair - filed under "Odd News" dschmidt · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Yahoo is, of course, reporting this as "Odd News". Excerpt:

'LYNNWOOD, Wash. – A 78-year-old woman arrested last month for allegedly beating her 84-year-old husband because she believed he cheated on her several times during their marriage was charged Thursday with assault. Prosecutors said she hit him with a bowl, pipe and carpet sweeper. He suffered broken ribs, pelvis and a wrist.'

Funny how you never see stories about men breaking their wives' bones reported as simply "Odd".

Sisters are best tennis players on boys' team-- boys on girls' teams any time soon?

Matt · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Congratulations to them! Now had the sexes been reversed, would boys have been allowed to play on the girls' tennis team? Excerpt:

'The championship was a "repeat" of sorts. The sisters won the girls' AA doubles state championship last year without dropping a set the entire season. When they couldn't find enough players to field a team this year, they had a choice – play no matches until the sectional tournaments and then play singles only, or join the boys team and play all year.

"I wasn't going to leave her hanging," Karli said.

The result? Karli was the top seed on the boys team and went 22-0 on the season. Tanya was the second seed and went 20-2, losing twice to the same opponent. Thanks to their nearly automatic two points, the team went 19-3 on the year.'

RADAR ALERT: Play the Abuse Card, Win a Green Card

Matt · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

"Immigration laws are being manipulated by women claiming domestic violence to gain citizenship," says immigration law attorney Nicomedes Suriel. "Women have found a loophole in the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA)". (cite) Mr. Suriel was commenting on the case of Reed Simon, whose Ukrainian ex-wife's phony accusations cost him tens of thousands of dollars in legal fees and ate up a year and a half of his life before the judge dismissed the case. Simon has since found dozens of other men facing the same situation.

Suriel says some directors of domestic violence shelters for immigrants also run dating services through which they set women up with American men, all the while coaching the women on what accusations to make and when, in order to seize his property, get permanent U.S. residency, and eventually citizenship. These women and the shelter directors are "gaming the system", he says. On occasion, a judge sees through the scam. In other cases, the damage is never rectified.

The recurring themes in these incidents are:

1. Foreign women enter the U.S. on fiancee visas, marry the men in a couple of months, then claim abuse in order to get permanent residency immediately.
2. Women are coached on what to say, what to do, and how to act, in order to make the false accusation seem credible.
3. Men are penalized due to false accusations. In some cases they lose their property, their homes, their jobs. And under the rules specified in the Violence Against Women Act, Citizenship and Immigration Services regularly denies any accused citizen the opportunity to present evidence in his defense.

At http://www.radarsvcs.org/docs/RADARreport-VAWA-Funded-Immigration-Fraud.pdf you can read RADAR Services' Special Report "VAWA-Funded Immigration Fraud" which addresses in detail the ways that VAWA encourages immigration fraud.

This week, we're asking you to contact the investigative team at KPHO in Phoenix who broke the story 5investigates-at-kpho.com to thank them for their excellent coverage of this issue.

Then, contact Arizona Senators John McCain http://mccain.senate.gov/public/index.cfm?FuseAction=Contact.ContactForm and Jon Kyl http://kyl.senate.gov/contact.cfm to ask them to fix VAWA to prevent it from empowering foreign thieves to prey on innocent American men. Please remember to be polite and courteous in all your calls and emails.

++
Date of RADAR Release: May 19, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

Potential Supreme Court Nominee Sotomayor May Face Criticism For Comments On Gender, Ethnicity

anthony · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In her 2001 speech, delivered at the Judge Mario G. Olmos Law and Cultural Diversity Lecture at the University of California-Berkeley, Sotomayor questioned the notion that male and female judges would reach similar conclusions when deciding cases, though she also "sounded many cautionary notes," the Times reports. Sotomayor said, "I would hope that a wise Latina woman with the richness of her experiences would more often than not reach a better conclusion than a white male who hasn't lived that life." Sotomayor also said that the increasing diversity in federal courts "will have an effect on the development of the law and on judging." She said that being a woman or a minority can affect a judge's perspective because of "experience or inherent physiological or cultural differences."'

Lifetime TV Beats Up on Divorced Dads

anthony · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Strong families need strong fathers, but American television has come a long way from the 1950s series "Father Knows Best."

Now Lifetime TV, a network known for its movies about women being endangered by men, has sunk to a new low - a reality program called "Deadbeat Dads."

The Lifetime TV program ignores the numbers. More than 90 percent of fathers with joint custody paid the support due, according to a Census Bureau report (Series P-23, No. 173). So deadbeats are in the minority. Also, most so-called deadbeat dads actually are dead broke. Two-thirds of men who fail to make child-support payments earn poverty-level wages, according to the Federal Office of Child Support Enforcement. Most of the others are unemployed.

...

Bruce Walker, executive coordinator at the District Attorneys Council in Oklahoma City, who ran the state's child-support enforcement program for three years and jailed hundreds of fathers for nonpayment, told the Newark Star-Ledger in 2002: "These men are seldom the mythical monsters described by politicians."

"Many times I prosecuted impoverished men," he told the Star-Ledger. "I prosecuted one deadbeat dad who had been hospitalized for malnutrition and another who lived in the bed of a pickup truck."

Nor is it likely that Lifetime will ever show that some fathers simply give money directly to their teenage children because some mothers end up using child-support payments for everything but the child.'

The President's New Women's Council – A Good New Deal for Mothers?

anthony · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With one glance at the female companions surrounding the President during the photo op, including Nancy Pelosi, Barbara Boxer, and other members of the Congressional Women's Caucus, one might reasonably inquire about the content of the advice the President is likely to get. Will it include more health and reproductive services and safe and professional day care, followed by very early childhood education, after-school care, and a longer school year for women who have children, but can't be with them? Will all this be subsidized even more with tax dollars requiring more double incomes and the emptier homes that come with them? One would not have to look far to see that these measures are at the core of the agenda of those who have taken up women's issues (like Pelosi and Boxer), and, were more proof needed, that they have just received a massive economic jolt, thanks to the recent crisis.

...

This manner of assessing and addressing the problem of girls and women is not unfamiliar, especially wherever equality is invoked. Equality, after all, has the job of flattening the differences. It is the great leveler. It has its place, to be sure. It is important, for example, to equalize the hot and cold water so that the baby is neither scalded nor chilled. But there's something very curious about the whole business of equality, especially when used to resolve the kinds of problems that attend the differences between the sexes. Generally the equalizing of differences is done on the assumption that the difference in question is a problem to be overcome, and even worse, a matter of more or less, or better and worse. Thus, when "equality" is put to work on the differences between men and women, it tries to remove them, or, more precisely, the woman's difference, the "lesser" one, as "difference feminists" point out; for it is, after all, her difference which is so problematic, she being the one who has to be unencumbered in order to become his equal, just like him. Indeed, if the problem of men and women must always be forced into the narrow straightjacket of equality talk, it is difficult to see how there would be any baby at all to put into the bathwater!'

Second prosecutor files sex charges against ex-teacher

anthony · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MOUNT VERNON, Mo. -- A former Greenfield High School music teacher now is accused of having sex with a 16-year-old student at her home here. The Lawrence County prosecuting attorney charged Alison Peck, 23, with statutory sodomy and statutory rape on Monday.
...
The Dade County prosecuting attorney charged Peck last week with two counts of statutory rape. Those charges resulted from the Greenfield student telling a Missouri State Highway Patrol detective that he and Peck had sex at a park in Dade County. He also said he visited Peck at her home in Mount Vernon and had sexual relations numerous times.'

‘Sex with teacher was second nature’

anthony · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Canberra school teacher had sex with her 14-year-old male student so often that intercourse was like "second nature" for the pair, a court heard yesterday.

...

The 43-year-old, who was a science teacher at Saint Francis Xavier and coordinator of the boy's Year 9 group when the alleged offences were committed, has pleaded not guilty to five counts of sexual intercourse with a person under the age of 16 and one count of maintaining a relationship with a person under the age of 16.'

Woman faces perjury charge for allegedly lying about rape

anthony · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Earlene Rogers, 18, was indicted by a grand jury in Kirksville because she allegedly lied under oath. Specifically, she accused two men of raping and sodomizing her -- then, after the men spent eight months in jail, withdrew the charges. The county prosecutor accuses Rogers of lying when she made the original report.

Oh, and here's an eye-opener of a quote:

“The state can prove a sex crime merely by the allegation of the victim. You don't really need any evidence, you don't need any eyewitnesses. It's just whether or not a judge or jury would believe that witness. And so if the victim then under what we believe falsely accuses somebody there has to be accountability towards that person,” said Adair County Prosecutor Mark Williams.'

Web Site Allows Rape Victims To Identify Alleged Attackers

anthony · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'COLUMBUS, Ohio — Police, residents and prosecutors are considering the pros and cons of a new Web site that gives rape victims a forum to post information about their alleged attackers, 10TV's Lindsey Seavert reported on Monday.

Signs that encourage victims to expose their attackers can be found in the Short North. In bold print the flyers read, "Expose your rapist."
...
Even though phony posts can be traced, O'Brien worries about false accusations and proof of guilt.
...
Residents in the Short North shared similar concerns with 10TV News.

"It's harmful in a way because people could post something about somebody that is untrue," a passerby said after seeing a sign.'

Ed. note: The web site in question is http://www.youforum.cc/safespacecolumbus/

She Admits To Killing Her Kids: Should She Be Free?

anthony · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The crime was so horrible, it's been hard for many to forget, especially in the town of Lamar. Two small children murdered in their own home on South 6th Street during the afternoon hours of October 16, 2003.

Grace Headlee, 4, and Gabriel Amaya, only 5-months-old, were drowned in their bathtub by their own mother Rebekah Amaya.

Right now we are awaiting a judge's decision on whether Amaya will be free to walk among us. She is asking for the chance to make unsupervised trips away from the State Mental Health Institute.
...
Amaya's former sister-in-law, Michelle Jamie, was and is still outraged that Amaya admitted to the crime, but in 2005 a judge found Amaya Not Guilty by Reason of Insanity.

"She killed, she took two lives and she hasn't spent a single day in prison. It's just not fair," Michelle Jamie said. "Innocent by reason of insanity, kind of contradicting. Innocent and killing. Just should be guilty by reason of insanity."

By law, a person cannot be found guilty if he or she doesn't remember the crime or could not distinguish between right and wrong at the time of the crime.

In 2005, psychiatrists testified Amaya was mentally ill and suffered from Post Partum Depression and Psychosis.'

Leniency sought for some moms who kill infants

anthony · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'State Rep. Jessica Farrar pushed a proposal through a House committee last week that could lessen penalties for some mothers who kill their infants.

The measure is aimed at women who show signs of postpartum psychosis, a rare condition that's been cited in such high-profile murder cases as that of Andrea Yates, the Texas mom who drowned her five children six months after giving birth to her youngest.

The long-shot bill will likely never see the House floor, the Houston Democrat acknowledged, and she's fine with that.
...
Under the bill, a defendant's attorney could argue during the punishment stage of a murder trial that the mother's judgment was impaired by the effects of birth or lactation. If the victim was younger than 12 months old, the crime could be reduced to a state jail felony, meaning a maximum sentence of two years and a minimum of 180 days. Currently, the slaying of anyone under the age of 6 brings a capital murder charge.

"It's outrageous legislation," said Jonathan Saenz, director of legislative affairs for the conservative Free Market Foundation, a group that has lobbied against the bill. "The fact the mom could be walking six months after killing one of her infants is disgraceful."'

The American Prospect: "Is it sexist to say the financial crisis was caused by men?"

anthony · 19 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'Welcome to our second installment of "Ask a Feminist," in which our own Dana Goldstein and Ann Friedman address a topic in the news related to gender and feminism. Today's episode features a question from Matt Yglesias: "Is it sexist to say the financial crisis was caused by men?"'

Thousands beaten, raped in Irish reform schools

Matt · 20 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DUBLIN – A fiercely debated, nine-year investigation into Ireland's Roman Catholic-run institutions says priests and nuns terrorized thousands of boys and girls in workhouse-style schools for decades — and government inspectors failed to stop the chronic beatings, rapes and humiliation.

High Court Justice Sean Ryan on Wednesday unveiled the 2,600-page final report of Ireland's Commission to Inquire Into Child Abuse, which is based on testimony from thousands of former students and officials from more than 250 church-run institutions.
...
"A climate of fear, created by pervasive, excessive and arbitrary punishment, permeated most of the institutions and all those run for boys. Children lived with the daily terror of not knowing where the next beating was coming from," the report concluded.

The commission said overwhelming, consistent testimony from still-traumatized men and women, now in their 50s to 80s, had demonstrated beyond a doubt that the entire system treated children more like prison inmates and slaves than people with legal rights and human potential.'

ABA Journal: Research shows attorney gender gap is not due to discrimination

Matt · 20 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A.: Story here. A recent ABA Journal article addresses new research showing it is the choice of pausing career to care for kids, not one's sex, that causes the gender gap in law firms. This coincides with what Warren Farrell's explains in his book, "Why Men Earn More" and what other research confirms about the "pay gap."

If we really want to remove the gap, we need to encourage women to allow men to be primary parents. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters) - They may be a small minority in corporate boardrooms, but women directors typically earn more than men, a new U.S. study has found.

Female directors in corporate America earned median compensation of $120,000, based on the most recently available pay data, compared with $104,375 for male board members, research group The Corporate Library said in its annual director pay report on Wednesday.

At the same time, the study said, women in corporate boardrooms are outnumbered eight to one.'

The final report is here (.pdf file).

Mother tells cops she had sex with boys to 'divert' them from her daughter

Michael · 20 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 30-year-old Northern California woman has pleaded not guilty to charges that she had sex with three teenage boys.

Deborah Towe faces 11 felony counts, including unlawful sexual intercourse with a minor, oral copulation of a person under the age of 16, committing lewd acts upon a child and arranging a meeting with a minor for a lewd purpose.

The boys were 15 and 16 years old.

Police in Anderson, about 150 miles north of Sacramento, began investigating in April after two girls from a local middle school reported that a friend's mother was having sex with boys.

In a 48-page report released this week, Towe told police she was protecting her daughter by diverting the boys' attention to herself.

She denied the charges during an appearance Wednesday in Shasta County Superior Court. Towe remains jailed, with her bond set at $250,000.'

Reason Online: "The Feminist Makeover"

anthony · 20 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here was a woman who had fought the good fight, broken glass ceilings, made tough calls about work-life balance, and made a great success of herself. Yet somehow, when she looked at me, she didn't see a happy beneficiary of her labors, a young woman free to make professional and romantic choices in a far better world than when she herself had started out. She saw, first, a secretary, and second, an ungrateful wretch. I think she honestly believed that she was speaking a hard truth to me, one I might not hear anywhere else.
...
So if we're living in a post-post-Friedan utopia, why aren't women happier? Well, women make a lot of bad choices. But you know who else makes terrible choices? Men. Virtually all of my late-20s male friends are currently having career and/or life crises. They're depressed. They feel out-of-joint, disconnected from the life they wish they were leading in ways that are difficult to express, just like Friedan's housewives. Their crises aren't the same as my women friends'—men don't fret about the health of their gonads, for instance. But the New York Times 1963 review of The Feminine Mystique gets this about right for both sexes: "To paraphrase a famous line, 'The fault, dear Mrs. Friedan, is not in our culture, but in ourselves.'"'

Mirror images of male rage

anthony · 20 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'GERMAINE Greer's provocative essay On Rage, which fuelled heated debate about male violence in indigenous communities, was a revelation for Ben Quilty. "Others say that On Rage is less about masculinity and more about indigenous culture," says Quilty, a young, white Australian from a suburban background.
...
"Feminism did happen, and then the whole thing with gender studies and women's studies," he says. "But back at university, I was the only man in a course studying it, even though it made more sense that, post-feminism, men should be studying it.

"That's what should happen after feminism, that men should rediscover themselves, but there's no way men were able to have any input.

"Let it happen, feminism, then let men talk about it, but men are hopeless at talking about it, and that's why there are not a lot of men making work about what it meant to be masculine in the pre-feminist days."
...
The artist's work is about "the cult of masculinity", Slade says, "expressing the rage, boredom and oblivion of growing up as a white male in Australia". She describes the huge Smashed self-portraits as "the death wish of the Aussie male played out in paint".
...
"There's a really fashionable thing for young men to make very soft work, often using watercolours, exploring sensitive men, with young men, naked, lying around," he says. "It's sort of homoerotic, even homosexual, although most of the guys making this work are not homosexual themselves.'

Boy bowlers now put on equal playing field with girls

anthony · 20 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'OELWEIN - Oelwein High School will be offering a newly-sanctioned boys' varsity sport following approval granted by the Board of Education at its May meeting Monday night.

The board unanimously approved the local sanctioning of boys' bowling as a varsity sport beginning with the 2009-2010 school year.

The action by the board comes after the Iowa High School Athletic Association granted approval within the past month to sanction boys' bowling as an official Iowa high school sport.'

Shoplifting aunt used baby as weapon patriotsofamerica · 21 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original Story here. Again explain to me how women are more nurturing and less violent than men? Excerpt:

'MEMPHIS, TN (WMC-TV) - Memphis police are searching for a shoplifting suspect who used a tiny baby as a weapon against a security guard during an escape attempt Wednesday.

The incident happened early Wednesday afternoon at Wal-Mart on Austin Peay in Raleigh, where police say a woman was caught shoplifting. While attempting to escape, the woman hurled her two-month old nephew at a security guard. The infant, seated in a carrier, fell onto the concrete floor.

The suspect then threw the baby at a good samaritan who tried to tend to the infant.'

Blog: "Adult women who abuse neigborhood kids"

Matt · 21 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog here. Unlike the story posted yesterday about the web site the Columbus city government wants to make the landing zone for accusations of rape or other sexual assault, this blog pulls its information from news reports. It looks like it would be a good resource for keeping track of female perpetrators of child abuse.

Bow Down Before Your Wife's Diktat: Supreme Court of India Tells Men

Matt · 21 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On 19th May, the Supreme Court of India remarked that husbands ought to "Bow down before your wife's 'diktat'".

A vacation bench of justices Markandeya Katju and Deepak Verma observed, "Bibi joh boltee hai woh sunno (listen to whatever your wife says), as otherwise it could land you in trouble. Because if you do not listen to her, you will suffer the consequences."
...
The bench further said that a husband has to accept the suggestion of a wife irrespective of the fact whether it is sensible or not."

Being a founding member of a prominent men's rights organization observing the way men are treated, these views by the Supreme Court are hardly surprising to me. This attitude has been prevalent in almost all courts since many years and it is for the first time that the Supreme Court has said this formally, even in jest.

A modern man can bow down before his wife. There is absolutely no issue with that, after all they share a life together. However, does the matter just end there? In most cases, it may not be only about a husband obeying his wife, but it is also about a husband forced to obey his mother-in-law, his sister-in-law and his father-in-law, whose business in not running well.'

UK: Fife councillors in political scrap over battered husbands

Matt · 21 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HE hidden plight of battered husbands – often a taboo subject – was the topic of heated discussion at Fife Council on Thursday.

Councillors heard the bizarre tale of one man who had been almost strangled because he wouldn't take his wife to her favourite nightclub.

Male domestic abuse was raised by Inverkeithing and Dalgety Bay Tory councillor Dave Dempsey who was upset by what he heard at a meeting he attended with a local campaign group.

Mr Dempsey emphasised that by highlighting the issue of male victims it did not diminish in any way the major problem of women who are abused.

However, he said he was "angered" after hearing evidence of men who suffered violence and was concerned Fife's services were not currently designed to help them.'

In Recession, Women Splurge as if Addicted

Matt · 21 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. As always when the source is "JunkScience.com", take it with a grain of salt. Excerpt:

'The itch to shop has long been known to overwhelm some people, either because of simple materialism or to compensate for emotional problems. Many researchers liken it to addiction, and some think it has been a growing problem in the modern consumerism society.

The problem is likely not confined to women. A 2006 study in the United States found 6 percent of women have it so bad they are labeled compulsive buyers, but so are 5.5 percent of men.
...
Problem is, the splurges don't always have the intended effect.

About 25 percent of the women surveyed said shopping sprees in the week prior to being surveyed left them with feelings of regret, guilt or shame.

Sounds a lot like other addictions, Pine said.'

Personally, I feel everyone is susceptible to going out to buy stuff to cheer themselves up. We're bombarded with message telling us we'll be happy if we buy something. Few ads have pictures of miserable people in a state of distress holding up some product being peddled. The message is clear: "Happiness and security are to be found in buying our product, never mind the price!" Same thing with food-- feel down, eat something. No wonder so many of us in the west have gotten fat and in debt. But everyone is responsible for their own decisions-- yet even women. The tone of the article though is more or less pseudo-clinical and the impression it gives is that some people just can't help themselves. I don't accept that. The rule is this: stop using credit cards and don't spend the rent money on anything other than rent. It's that simple.

"The agony of child support"

Matt · 21 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Your Monday editorial "Anti-Dad bias," is the first substantial challenge to the divorce industry by a major newspaper and deserves to be pursued much further. This abuse of power goes far beyond media bias. The child support machinery has been expanded and perverted from a means of providing for abandoned children into a huge federal subsidy of divorce and single-parent homes. It also distorts public policy and criminalizes innocent parents.

Ostensibly created to recover welfare costs, child support enforcement on the federal level has failed and now costs taxpayers more than $3 billion annually. More seriously, it pays mothers to divorce or forgo marriage, thus creating the very problem it is supposed to alleviate.

Mothers are not the only ones who profit from fatherless children. State governments generate revenue from child support at federal taxpayers' expense. By paying states according to the amount of child support they collect, federal programs give states an interest in more fatherless children. The more broken homes there are, the more revenue for the state.
...
STEPHEN BASKERVILLE
Associate professor of government
Patrick Henry College'

Police: Mom killed boy, buried him in playground sand

Michael · 21 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. – Police said Thursday that the mother of a 3-year-old boy found buried at a playground told investigators she suffocated him, had second thoughts and resuscitated him, then changed her mind and suffocated him again. Police Chief Ray Schultz said Tiffany Toribio, 23, told officers that she and her son, Tyruss "Ty" Toribio, were in Alvarado Park before dawn on May 13 and that she suffocated him while he was asleep.

She told detectives she had second thoughts and performed CPR on the boy, reviving him, but again reconsidered and placed her hand over his nose and mouth until he suffocated, Schultz said. She said she waited a few minutes before burying him in the playground, the chief said.

Ty's body was found Friday by a mother who saw his black tennis shoe sticking out of the sand. Police released an artist's rendering of the boy's image on Tuesday, which led to tips about Toribio from family members and others, Schultz said.
...
"What makes this story especially sad was when asked the reason why she took Ty's life, Tiffany said that she did not want him to grow up with no one caring about him the same way that she had grown up with no one caring about her," Schultz said.

Schultz said Toribio was being held at the Bernalillo County jail under close observation because she had attempted suicide. He did not provide details about the suicide attempt.'

Teen mother allegedly smothered newborn

Michael · 21 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'FEDERAL WAY, Wash., May 11 (UPI) -- A 14-year-old Federal Way, Wash., girl allegedly smothered her newborn baby to hide her pregnancy from her family, police records said.

The girl, pregnant by her 20-year-old boyfriend, gave birth at home while her mother was away, The Seattle Times reported Monday.

She then allegedly smothered the baby and called her mother to say she was bleeding heavily, police reports said. A family friend found the dead infant after the girl was taken to a hospital.

The girl, who was arrested April 9, the day the baby was born, has pleaded not guilty to second-degree murder in King County Juvenile Court.

Leonel Guzman-Jacobo, the girl's boyfriend, has been charged with second-degree child rape because the girl is younger than 16, the age of consent in Washington state. Guzman-Jacobo, who allegedly began having sex with the girl when she was 13, was not involved in the baby's death, police said.'

Christina Hoff Sommers: Are Men the Second Sex Now?

anthony · 21 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fast forward to 2009, and you find that women are now fully half of the American workforce. They earn 57 percent of bachelor's degrees, 59 percent of master's degrees, and half the doctorates. Females have achieved parity with males in law school and medical school and left their male counterparts in the dust in fields like veterinary medicine and psychology. Women serve as presidents of Harvard, MIT, Princeton, the University of Pennsylvania, and many other leading research universities. Today American women are among the healthiest, freest, best-educated women in the world, and they score near the top on international surveys of happiness and life satisfaction.'

Mary Kay Letourneau Hosts 'Hot for Teacher' Night at Nightclub

anthony · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'SEATTLE — Mary Kay Letourneau and her former sixth-grade student — the father of her two youngest children — are hosting a "Hot for Teacher" night at a Seattle nightclub. Letourneau, now 47, served 7 1/2 years in prison after she was convicted of raping Vili Fualaau, now 26. They were married four years ago this week.

The bar's owner said Letourneau has served her sentence, she's married her former student, and it's OK for them to have some fun on a Saturday night.

Mike Morris, owner of Fuel Sports Eats & Beats, said this is the third time Letourneau and Fualaau have hosted a "Hot for Teacher" night at the nightclub. The event begins at 9:30 p.m. Saturday.

The couple first met when Fualaau was in the second grade. Their relationship became sexual when he was 12 and she was a 34-year-old married mother of four.'

For some, Father's Day is a sad and bitter occasion

anthony · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A bit early, but a good article, here. Excerpt:

'For some tens of thousands of fathers, in your Canadian province alone, "Father's Day" is an especially bitter occasion. These are the men separated from their children by court order, many never to see them again. Each knows that his children have been subjected to vicious propaganda against him, that in many cases a child's own mother -- a woman the father once trusted enough to marry -- has turned the child's heart against him. (I know of many cases.)

It could be worse: for the father may have been replaced in his own household by a new man, or even a new woman. Someone who will never care for his children as he did, however badly he may have expressed it; who will at least be lacking the biological compulsion to look out for one's own flesh and blood.'

Kirksville woman indicted for making false rape claims

anthony · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'KIRKSVILLE — A Kirksville woman is facing eight counts of perjury stemming from rape allegations that resulted in two innocent men spending eight months in jail.

According to Adair County Prosecuting Attorney Mark Williams, Earlene Rogers, 18, was charged with lying to a grand jury four times over two separate depositions.

Last year, Rogers allegedly accused Glen Johnson, 35, and Timothy Rogers, 30, of rape and forcible sodomy.

The men, with bonds of $150-000, spent eight months in jail before they were released in February of this year.

Earlene Rogers is currently being held at the Adair County Jail on a $25,000 cash-only bond.
Johnson, a father of two, said he feels cheated by the time he lost with his children.

“I lost eight months of my life,” he said. “That’s eight months away from my kids. We missed a lot of holidays and functions we will never get back.”'

Montco teacher charged in sex case

anthony · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Heather Lynne Zeo reportedly ignored an important message from her Christian upbringing: Thou shalt not commit adultery.

Police said yesterday that Zeo, 37, a married math teacher from North Penn High School in Lansdale, admitted to having a sexual relationship with a 17-year-old student last month. She allegedly also left sexually explicit Internet and phone messages for another student earlier in the school year.
...
Zeo, a Christian singer who has released two CDs - "Light as a Feather" in 2003 and "Musically Math" in 2008 - contacted the boys on Facebook, one earlier in the school year and the other last month, according to the affidavit of probable cause.

The teen who police say had sex with Zeo told police that he had received and accepted a friend request from Zeo on Facebook and that throughout the affair they would communicate on the site at night about the sex acts that they were going to perform with one another, the affidavit said.'

UK: Mother jailed as horrific baby abuse case closed

Michael · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LONDON, England (CNN) -- The British mother of a child who died after being brutally abused has been jailed indefinitely.

The child's -- originally known as Baby P --horrifying death caused a furor in Britain, with the media, public and politicians united in demanding to know how his terrible injuries were missed by social workers, police and medical staff.

Judge Stephen Kramer also Friday jailed the 27-year-old mum's boyfriend for life with a minimum of 12 years and their lodger, Jason Owen, 37, indefinitely but with a minimum of three years, the British Press Association reported. The boyfriend, 32, was also convicted of raping a two-year-old girl.'

Sandra Cantu Murder Suspect Faces New Charges of Secretly Poisoning Man, Little Girl

Michael · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'he California Sunday school teacher accused in the shocking kidnap, rape and murder of 8-year-old Sandra Cantu is now being accused of secretly poisoning two people, including another little girl.

Melissa Huckaby, 28, will be in court in Tracy, Calif., Friday on additional charges filed alleging that she gave "a harmful substance" to a 7-year-old girl in January and an adult man in March, according to the complaint.

The little girl, identified only as Jane M. Doe, has since recovered from the Jan. 17 alleged poisoning. The man, Daniel Plowman, hasn't been located, according to the complaint filed Thursday.'

Ed. note: Michael originally this URL to the story, but I felt that the Fox story had more relevant details, so I took liberties.

Woman Who Choked Cowell's Ex Was Getting Revenge For Abdul

Michael · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'As Rock Daily reported yesterday, American Idol judge Simon Cowell's ex-girlfriend Terri Seymour was assaulted following Tuesday night's performance show. Now the 33-year-old woman who choked Seymour is speaking to Radar Online from jail — and reveals the motive behind her attack was revenge for Paula Abdul.

Janice Thibodeaux tells Radar Online, "I wasn't cool with Simon Cowell choking Paula Abdul on the show last week and with her crying-out 'help' as he did so," referring to Cowell mock-attacking Abdul during judging. "Nobody said anything about that so I wanted to confront him about it because that is not appropriate behavior, is it?" Thibodeaux also claimed she was a former security guard at AI and bought a ticket to attend the Tuesday showdown between Adam Lambert and Kris Allen. When she saw Seymour in the crowd, Thibodeaux decided to confront her instead of Cowell.'

Commentary on current case of woman fleeing with son to avoid chemotherapy

Matt · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For most parents, the moment they first hold their newborns, they realize what lengths they might go to in order to protect their child. From fighting off lions to jumping in front of speeding cars, parents would be willing to battle any demon that they had to for the sake of their child's safety. Daniel Hauser's parents are no different. His mother genuinely believes that the chemotherapy treatments that might save his life could also destroy him.

Thirteen year old Daniel Hauser was diagnosed in January of 2009 with Hodgkin's lymphoma. His parents have decided, based on their religious beliefs, that Daniel's cancer would be treated better through the use of alternative medicines or alternatives in combination with chemotherapy.
...
I know that it cannot be easy to see your child sick as a direct result of medication, and I know that turning your trust over to someone else while denying your beliefs is enough to make anyone ill. With Daniel, however, his parents just don't have a choice. Parents of sick children must consult experts about viable treatment options available so they can make informed choices that may be contrary to their personal and religious beliefs.'

If the mother had been the father, would the tone of this commentary be quite so cordial?

Note: For those new to this case, a video report is here.

Wendy McElroy On Circumcision

anthony · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A disconcerting issue has hit the political radar: male circumcision. Is it a medical procedure or child abuse?

As furor over female genital mutilation grows, so does the criticism of male circumcision.
...
Circumcision is also a moral issue. The organization Doctors Opposing Circumcision decries the procedure as "painful," "tragic," "contra-indicated," and states "that no one has the right to forcibly remove sexual body parts from another individual." DOC claims that circumcision violates the physician's Golden Rule — First, Do No Harm — as well as all seven principles of the A.M.A. Code of Ethics.
...
As medical associations one-by-one refuse to support routine circumcision, the procedure is losing ground — medically, morally, politically, and legally. This process is being sped along by aggressive groups like The National Organization of Circumcision Information Resource Centers, a "non-profit educational organization committed to securing the birthright of male and female children and babies to keep their sexual organs intact."'

Should all boys be circumcised?

anthony · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I don't know about you guys, but I found the picture a bit disturbing. Excerpt:

'Circumcision is the world's most common surgical procedure. But it is also among the most sensitive – politically, culturally and ethically. Even within the scientific community it is difficult to have a reasoned debate about the pros and cons, examining the evidence, without people taking sides. For several decades, the medical community has kept quiet about circumcision, mindful of the sensitivities around it. Doctors are broadly agreed that the operation is "not medically necessary" – except in a tiny minority of cases, for example where the foreskin will not retract. They say it is for parents and the public to decide about the ethics of circumcision for religious or other non-medical reasons.
...
Now new evidence has emerged for the protective effect of circumcision against infection with Human Papilloma Virus (HPV), the chief cause of cervical cancer in women, which is reduced by 35 per cent, and against Herpes Simplex Virus (HSV), the cause of herpes, which is reduced by 25 per cent. Circumcision probably also protects against syphilis, but the findings, published in the New England Journal of Medicine in March, were based on too small a sample to be conclusive.'

Playboy Mansion party violates Unruh Civil Rights Act in California

Anonymous · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I wanted to bring to your attention a party being thrown Saturday, May 23, 2009, at the Playboy Mansion. They are currently charging $450 for women and $675 for men. This appears to be a clear violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act in California, which protects against discrimination based on gender.

The California Supreme Court has ruled that the Unruh Civil Rights Act outlaws sex-based prices at bars (ladies' nights): offering women a discount on drinks, but not offering the same discount to males. In Koire v Metro Car Wash, 40 Cal 3d24, 219 Cal Rptr 133(1985), the court held that such discounts constituted sex stereotyping prohibited by this Act.

You can find the full text of the Act here, reading in part:

'Section 51b: All persons within the jurisdiction of this state are free and equal, and no matter what their sex, race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, disability, medical condition, marital status, or sexual orientation are entitled to the full and equal accommodations, advantages, facilities, privileges, or services in all business establishments of every kind whatsoever.

Section 51.6a: No business establishment of any kind whatsoever may discriminate, with respect to the price charged for services of similar or like kind, against a person because of the person's gender.'

As far as I can tell the party is being organized by Chris Marcovici (chris-at-mixnightlife.com).

I urge you to consider this information. It's discrimination like this that holds us back from reaching true equality. Please spread the word about this injustice against civil rights progress.

What's wrong with the Paycheck "Fairness" Act?

jayhammers · 22 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Below I have described my preliminary objections to the current form of the "Paycheck Fairness Act 2009" (see full text here). The Act was passed by the House January 6, 2009, with a 256-163 vote. It is expected the bill will go to the Senate floor for a vote. Below are excerpts from the Act followed by my comments in bold.

—

A BILL

To amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to provide more effective remedies to victims of discrimination in the payment of wages on the basis of sex, and for other purposes.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.
This Act may be cited as the 'Paycheck Fairness Act'.
I do not believe this description is appropriate for the following reasons:

1) The Act claims that "in many instances" wage disparities are the result of intentional discrimination. Wage disparities may occur due to other factors including individual free choice.

2) In every instance when the Act mentions discrimination against a particular gender, that gender is female. The Act does not recognize wage discrimination or disparities against men.

3) The Act implies that wage disparities are the only factor contributing to spending power and wealth. Other factors such as net worth, which may not show such disparity, are not recognized.

4) The Act provides for negotiation skills training for women only. Throughout, the Act does not recognize men's rights issues and appears to promote the idea that gender equality is a one-sided issue. Please note that men now make up a significant minority of college attendees and graduates and face discrimination in many areas of life, including the workplace.

In summary, the Paycheck Fairness Act is not fair to men and women.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.
Congress finds the following:
…
(2) Despite the enactment of the Equal Pay Act of 1963, many women continue to earn significantly lower pay than men for equal work. These pay disparities exist in both the private and governmental sectors. In many instances, the pay disparities can only be due to continued intentional discrimination or the lingering effects of past discrimination.
Does not mention pay disparities that may exist in which men earn significantly lower than women for equal work. 2004 data shows a part-time working women make $1.10 for every dollar made by a male counterpart. ("Why Men Earn More", Warren Farrell, 2005)

Claims that "in many instances," pay disparities can only be due to continued intentional discrimination or the lingering effects of past discrimination, rather than other factors. Does not provide any evidence that such pay disparities are due to discrimination. Some argue that the sources for much of the gender earnings gap are "free choice" elements such as college major, hours and years worked, type of job chosen, and place of employment. These choices are made freely by men and women.

Does not provide data to show that pay disparities are substantial when the comparison controls for job title, education, hours worked, age, and other factors. U.S. Census data from 2001 reveals childless women who have never married earn 117 percent of their childless male counterparts, when the comparison controls for education, hours worked and age. ("Why Men Earn More", Warren Farrell, 2005) Many statistics which claim that women earn X cents for every dollar a man earns do not control for any of these factors.

(3) The existence of such pay disparities--

…

(3)(D) has been spread and perpetuated, through commerce and the channels and instrumentalities of commerce, among the workers of the several States;

Claims again that pay disparities are an artificial construct that has been perpetuated intentionally.

…

(4)(A) Artificial barriers to the elimination of discrimination in the payment of wages on the basis of sex continue to exist decades after the enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) and the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000a et seq.).

Does not describe in detail these perceived "artificial barriers".

…

(4)(C) Elimination of such barriers would have positive effects, including--

…

(4)(C) (ii) substantially reducing the number of working women earning unfairly low wages, thereby reducing the dependence on public assistance;

Does not aim to reduce the number of working men also earning unfairly low wages.

…

(5) The Department of Labor and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission have important and unique responsibilities to help ensure that women receive equal pay for equal work.

Does not aim to ensure that men also receive equal pay for work.

…

(6) The Department of Labor is responsible for--

(A) collecting and making publicly available information about women's pay;

Does not mention collecting and making available information about men's pay.

…

(6)(C) disseminating information about women's rights in the workplace;

Does not mention disseminating information about men's rights and gender equality in the workplace. Among men's rights issues are military conscription, divorce and alimony, education (college acceptance and graduation disparity), employment, false rape allegations, family law bias, health, reproductive rights, criminal sentencing disparity, domestic violence, and wages.

…

(6)(D) helping women who have been victims of pay discrimination obtain a remedy; and Does not mention helping men to obtain such a remedy.

…

(8) With a stronger commitment by the Department of Labor and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to their responsibilities, increased information as a result of the amendments made by this Act to the Equal Pay Act of 1963, wage data, and more effective remedies, women will be better able to recognize and enforce their rights.

Again, does not recognize men's struggle to recognize and enforce their rights.

…

SEC. 5. NEGOTIATION SKILLS TRAINING FOR GIRLS AND WOMEN.

Does not provide for negotiation skills training for boys and men.

…

SEC. 6. RESEARCH, EDUCATION, AND OUTREACH.

The Secretary of Labor shall conduct studies and provide information to employers, labor organizations, and the general public concerning the means available to eliminate pay disparities between men and women, including—
Pay disparities between men and women may exist that are not due to artificial constructs. Eliminating all pay disparities arbitrarily without accounting for other factors is not only impossible but also harmful to businesses and employees. Furthermore, wages are not the last factor in spending power. Net worth is another. 1984 U.S. Census Bureau data indicates women who are heads of households have a net worth that is 141 percent of the net worth of men who are heads of households. ("The Myth of Male Power", Warren Farrell, 1993)

Biased circucision story on Australian 'Sunday Night' show

Anonymous · 23 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Just an alert, in case you're not already aware, that the Channel 7 Australia program 'Sunday Night' is about to air an incredibly biased segment promoting infant circumcision, 6:30 pm tomorrow night.

You can view a preview of the story here. Just scroll down and click on 'Play video' next to 'Sunday Night preview'.

It appears that the entire segment is going to be based around Brian Morris (http://www.circinfo.net/) and Terry Russell (http://www.circumcision.com.au/), with a few token opponents of circumcision tossed in and portrayed as outliers. And of course, there is the promise in the advertising that circum-fetishists will get to see at least one baby boy spread-eagled and cut.

It is perhaps noteworthy that journalist/presenter Mike Munro promoted similar rubbish in his previous channel 9 roles on 'A Current Affair' and '60 Minutes'.

Like most circumcision-enthusiasts, Morris, Russell, Munro et al. are not otherwise noted for their interest in mens' or boys' health issues.

UK: Outrage at Curb on White Men Becoming PCs

anthony · 23 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BRITAIN'S second largest police force has been accused of discriminating against white men by setting itself targets to recruit and promote more black and female officers.

West Midlands police chiefs have pledged to increase the proportion of new recruits from "black or minority ethnic" groups to 12 per cent and women to 42 per cent.

...

The force has been warned it is walking into a potentially illegal and costly minefield of political correctness.

Former West Midlands police superintendent and city councillor John Mellor described the move as a terrible mistake.'

UK: Court rules taxi driver falsely accused of rape can receive compensation in legal first

Matt · 23 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A taxi driver falsely accused of rape could receive a five-figure compensation payout after winning a landmark victory.

Clive Bishop, 49, says his life was ruined after a drunken 17-year-old passenger claimed he attacked her.

Kirsty Palmer later admitted she made up the allegations and was jailed for ten months for perverting the course of justice.

When he applied for compensation, Mr Bishop described how months of living under a cloud of 'slurs and lies' had caused him enormous suffering.

But the foster carer was twice refused a payout by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority on the grounds he had not come to physical harm.'

Let President Obama know: We want a Supreme Court Justice for equal rights

jayhammers · 23 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Let President Obama know that his nominee for the Supreme Court should be someone who understands equal rights is not a one-sided issue. Men's rights should not be left by the wayside.

You can contact the administration here.

I sent the following letter.

Mr. President,

One of the reasons I voted for you is I believe you are a wise, far-sighted individual with a firm grasp on what progress really entails. I urge you to strongly consider a Supreme Court Justice who is similarly far-sighted in the area of civil rights, specifically in the area of gender fairness. The women's rights movement has achieved a great deal of progress toward gender equality in the law, in the workplace, and socially. However, we should not discount the equal importance of men's rights.

I believe this is a critical time in our country's – and our species' – journey. Choices made today will have long-lasting effects on the future of American politics and global issues. One of these issues is whether we believe in equal rights for both women AND men? Some areas of concern in the men's rights movement are the family court bias against fathers and shared custody, violence laws that protect only one sex and marginalize male victims of domestic violence and prison rape, the criminal sentencing disparity against males and African Americans, and selective service based on gender. Rigid social expectations enforced on men tell us we are to be strong, we are to grin and bear all hardships, and thus society's indifference to discrimination against us continues to receive little attention.

I believe you are a supporter of equal rights. I urge you to nominate a Supreme Court Justice who understands the importance of equal rights for every human being regardless of age, race, or gender, and knows that discrimination against any group should never be made legal. I urge you to choose a Justice whose vision for the future is as keen as your own.

I am 25 years old and have only recently become interested in politics. Your election gave me great hope for the future of America and inspired me to become involved. May your wisdom and open mind prevail in propelling the United States successfully forward into the 21st century.

Sincerely,
J. Hammers

Girls' video shows how to kill classmate

Matt · 24 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption: "Girls at a Spanaway, Washington school made a video showing ways to kill a classmate."

Only boys are violent or bully other kids. We all know this. So this can't possibly be right. There must be a boy behind it, controlling the girls' minds in some way. Yeah, that's it.

Japan Times: "Trapped by old gender roles"

Michael · 24 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most societies all over the globe miss answering the most crucial question for men: What is our purpose in life?

Women do not have to face this question as they are the giver of life — with the exception of the growing number of women not willing to face motherhood and, sadly, including women not able to give birth. These women as well as men face the critical question of the purpose of their existence.

...my generation as well as the younger one has occupied themselves with acts of substitution — busying ourselves with consumption, making ourselves "comfortable" — for now leaving the question about our spirit and purpose out of sight. But we feel the burning doubt lingering in our mind. Is being an obligated worker and good consumer all there is to life?
We should teach the new generations of men what it really means to be a man: It is not being an aggressor or war hero and it never was supposed to be. A real man is about being confident, independent, mentally settled — someone able to give freely from a position of inner strength. The "good fight" men fight is about creating a better self and a better society.'

Japan Times: "Tackle gender gap in mathematics, reading"

Michael · 24 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In science, Japanese fourth-graders ranked fourth in performance compared to their international peers; eighth-graders ranked third; 15-year-olds ranked third. All three ranks represent performances significantly above international averages.

The only difference in average math performance between Japanese boys and girls was in the 15-year-old category, wherein boys outperformed girls by 20 points. The math gender gap has widened by 9 points since 2003.

Japanese 15-year-old girls outperformed boys in reading by 31 points. The reading gender gap has not narrowed since PISA began collecting data in 2000. It is currently more than 50 percent larger than the math gender gap.
...
52 percent of males and 38 percent of females enter universities in Japan. The international average is 50 percent of males and 62 percent of females.'

Kenya: 1.5 million men are DV victims

Michael · 24 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A report by a lobby group championing men's rights on Sunday said over 1.5 million in Kenya are victims of domestic violence daily.

The Maendeleo ya Wanaume organisation said even though they are battered by their wives, men find it difficult to report this to authorities for fear of social ridicule.

The findings show the campaign for the rights of the women has led to a reverse of the scenario and now men are at the centre of violence. The group carried out a survey in 40 selected districts in Kenya's provinces from August 2008 and has found out that between 1 and 1.5 million men are domestically abused by women daily.

The report shows that men have little say on issues that concern conjugal rights in their relationship and that women are the ones who determine when they should get intimate. In an apparent reference to the just-concluded sexual boycott called by a group of women activists, G10, the men said “this was equal to a domestic abuse against men.”'

UK: Fathers 'cool on parental leave'

Michael · 24 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Only 7% of men would be prepared to stay at home with a newborn baby if maternity benefits were replaced with parental ones, according to a survey.

Even fewer women - 4% - would hand over the role at home to the father, while two-thirds of working mothers said they only kept jobs out of necessity.
...
"And interestingly women who don't have children tend to continue earning virtually the same as men as they continue in their careers."
...
New mothers currently get nine months paid leave, six weeks at 90% of their salary and the rest at the statutory rate of £117.18 a week. Fathers get two weeks at the statutory rate.
...
The show's survey found that 54% of respondents thought men were the main breadwinners, although 67% did not think they should be.

Almost one in five women said they experienced sex discrimination at work, while twice as many men than women surveyed had asked for a pay rise in the last five years.'

Mother accused of dumping children, 3 and 7, off Oregon bridge

Matt · 24 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'The mother of a three-year-old boy whose body was pulled from an Oregon river hours before daybreak on Saturday was arrested and accused of dumping the boy and her seven-year-old daughter off a bridge.

Portland police said Amanda Jo Stott-Smith, 31, was taken into custody at a downtown parking garage.

Police said her car was on the Sellwood Bridge over the Willamette River moments before residents of the area heard the children's screams and a massive search was launched.

A resident who joined the search in his boat found the children nearly an hour after the screams were heard. Rescuers were unable to revive the boy. The girl was admitted to hospital.'

Paycheck Fairness Act 2009 "call to action"?

Matt · 24 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Jay H.: The National Women's Law Center provides a form to express one's support for the Paycheck Fairness Act 2009, a bill rife with bias against men here.

The nwlc.org website is on the first page of search results when searching Google for either "Paycheck Fairness Act" or "Paycheck Fairness Act 2009" or "women's pay". When searching for a variation of "fair pay" it is the first or second result.

The ACLU's frontpage provides a link to a nearly identical form with the description, "TAKE ACTION - Tell Your Senators to Support The Paycheck Fairness Act". Shouldn't we be asking for a similar call to action against this misguided bill?

It would be wonderful if there were a similar form available to urge one's senators NOT to pass this bill in its current form. I've toyed with replacing the subject and body of the NWLC's form to urge my senators NOT to pass this bill, and it would be a fairly simple thing to provide a standard template for others to do so too. But I can't be sure that my message is sent unadulterated using this form.

An article on the 2008 version of this Act is here. And my blog entry on what's wrong with the Act is here.

Australia: 'Sunday Night' biased infant circumcision story on Channel 7 report

Minuteman · 24 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This story aired on Australian television last night, and I immediately wished I hadn't dignified it by watching it: here . (The main story is preceded by about 30 secs of advertising).

Excerpt from story tag:

'The kindest cut?
The complex debate surrounding male circumcision is back on the agenda and Monique Wright discovers the decision to snip or not to snip is not an easy choice for parents.'

Actually, 80+% of the world's parents are never confronted with any decision at all and the 'choice' for parents in Australia is only made difficult by the statements of discredited, publicity-drunk academicians like Brian Morris and profiteering doctors like Terry Russell.

Indian law and courts traditionally sympathetic towards women

webdigr · 25 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'"Do as your wife commands and never question her authority": this advice to husbands came in a lighter vein from a vacation Bench of the Supreme Court comprising Justices Markandey Katju and Deepak Verma. The judges asked them to adhere to this time-tested formula.

...

The Bench's banter did reflect the traditional sympathetic view that the law and the courts adopt towards the fair sex. Law considers matrimonial relationship to be sacred and takes a strict view of anyone polluting it.

Take for example the offence of adultery, which is punishable under Section 497 of Indian Penal Code (IPC). The offence, as defined in IPC, can only be committed by a man, not by a woman! In Sowmithiri Vishnu vs Union of India (1985 SCC Sup 137), the SC held, "Indeed, the section provides expressly that the wife shall not be punishable even as an abettor... The contemplation of law is that the wife, who is involved in an illicit relationship with another man, is a victim and not the author of the crime."'

Woman recants story after saying man met on MySpace raped her antifeminist · 25 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who was allegedly raped by a man whom she met on MySpace.com now says the sex was consensual, according to Orlando Police.

The woman told officers earlier this week that the man raped her when she went to his apartment on Westgate Drive.

The 21-year-old woman told officers she met the man, 25, on MySpace.com on April 20 and began talking to him on the phone and via e-mail.

According to a police report the woman went to the man's apartment on Tuesday afternoon to hang out there and eventually leave to go hang out somewhere else together.'

Elle Magazine: 'Career Advice: Sabotaging Husbands'

anthony · 25 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The current economic crisis has thrown such touchy issues into sharp relief. With the recession intensifying financial pressures on millions of families, many men have lost—or are afraid of losing—their jobs. Even in prosperous times, husbands often feel threatened when their partners' achievements or incomes surpass their own. More than a quarter of working wives now outearn their spouses, and as women's economic empowerment and professional clout transform the American marriage, couples are becoming increasingly egalitarian. But even if a husband remains the major breadwinner, his wife's financial autonomy may threaten his control or erode a fragile sense of self-worth. Needless to say, problems can be greatly exacerbated if the man's economic power is diminished or jeopardized.

"A man who's successful in the world may be, but isn't necessarily, a mature man," says Roger Gould, PhD, a professor of psychiatry at UCLA and a couples counselor in New York City and Los Angeles. "And if he's insecure, his spouse's independence becomes a threat to his power or dominance over her."'

Obama: Michelle Has No Feminist Agenda for Supreme Court Pick

anthony · 25 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"I can't tell you the number of women, including Michelle, who say choose the person you think is going to be best," President Obama said in an interview airing today on C-SPAN.

Michelle Obama understands the nomination of a woman to the Supreme Court in a way her husband cannot.
...
Those feminists who continue to insist that the president should nominate a woman to the bench in order to balance the numbers to reflect the population are demeaning all professional women.

In my career in politics and the media, I have never gotten a job because my boss needed a woman. I was hired for my hard work ethic, experience, intelligence, and skills.'

Margaret Wente: We are witnessing the passing of working-class masculinity

anthony · 25 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As low- and semi-skilled manual jobs disappear, working-class men are getting hammered - and so is their masculinity. “Manual labour has been a key source of identity, pride, self-esteem and power for working-class men,” says a recent British study, which set out to probe a fascinating question: What makes these men so unemployable?

The conventional answer is that their education levels are too low and their skills are too poor. But the more accurate answer is that they're psychologically mismatched to the seismic shifts in our economy. The new economy (over the long term) is creating tons of service jobs in retail, customer support, and personal care. The trouble is that these jobs require temperamental attributes that are stereotypically feminine - things like patience, a pleasant demeanour, deference to the customer and the ability to empathize and connect. Another way to put it is that these jobs require emotional labour, not manual labour. And women, even unskilled women, are much better at emotional labour than men are.'

Female WWII pilots to receive Congressional Gold Medal without seeing combat

anthony · 25 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Women Airforce Service Pilots was born in 1942 to create a corps of female pilots able to fill all types of flying jobs at home to free male military pilots to travel to the front.

In the days after the outbreak of the war, Jacqueline Cochran, one of the country's leading female pilots at the time, went to a key general to argue that women would be just as capable pilots as men if they were given the same training.

She won the argument, and the program was launched.
...
Some 65 years after their service, the WASPs are being honored with the Congressional Gold Medal [hyperlink added] -- one of the national's [sic] highest civilian honors.
...
"This is a largely overlooked veterans group. They haven't gotten the medals they deserve, the recognition they deserve," Ros-Lehtinen told CNN.'

Related: Senators swarm to bill to cite WASPs

Woman Charged With Hurling Baby in Car Seat at Wal-Mart Employee

anthony · 26 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Police have charged a woman who they say used a child car seat with a 2-month-old infant inside to hit a Wal-Mart employee.

Detective Monique Martin said in a news release Monday that Camilla Fields of Memphis, Tenn., was charged with felony child abuse and neglect and assault. Police did not know if she had an attorney.

A police report from the Wednesday incident says Fields was carrying the car seat when she was confronted by a security guard about shoplifting.

Police say Fields threw the seat and ran away, causing the baby to land face down on the pavement. A paramedic treated the baby until the child regained consciousness.

The child's mother, Stacey Cleaves, was also charged with false reporting and child neglect.'

Gender Equity in a Time of Fiscal Restraint

anthony · 26 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Under prevailing law, which is based on the Brown University case brought by women gymnasts whose team had been eliminated in a university-wide cutback, institutions must "fully accommodate" the interests and abilities of women to participate in intercollegiate sports. It is not simply a matter of eliminating equal numbers of men's and women's teams or even equal numbers of opportunities to participate for each gender. Women's teams simply cannot be eliminated unless a college can prove that females in the student body have their interests in participating fully met. Unless college women suddenly decide that they no longer wish to pursue college athletics, schools will have to save money by cutting only men's teams or finding some other means to balance their budgets. They can always follow the Brandeis University approach of either selling their artwork (which Brandeis ultimately decided not to do) or cutting pension contributions for their loyal employees (which Brandeis decided to do last week).'

Sonia Sotomayor nominated to high court

anthony · 26 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – President Barack Obama chose federal appeals judge Sonia Sotomayor to become the nation's first Hispanic Supreme Court justice on Tuesday, praising her as "an inspiring woman" with both the intellect and compassion to interpret the Constitution wisely.
...
In one of her most notable decisions, as an appellate judge she sided last year with the city of New Haven, Conn., in a discrimination case brought by white firefighters. The city threw out results of a promotion exam because too few minorities scored high enough. Coincidentally, that case is now before the Supreme Court.
...
As a federal appeals court judge in 2002, she ruled against an abortion rights group that had challenged a government policy prohibiting foreign organizations receiving U.S. funds from performing or supporting abortions.

In her opinion, Sotomayor wrote that the government was free to favor the anti-abortion position over a pro-choice position when public funds were involved.'

Fatimah Ali: 'Deadbeat Dads' an insult to reality

anthony · 26 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists will probably jump all over me, but here's the real deal.

Many of us joined the women's movement decades ago without looking ahead to see what repercussions our actions would have on both our families and the economy. Now, most of us have to work, which leaves our husbands and children angry because no one is at home tending the hearth.

Our choice to be independent of men financially and of the family structure creates a wide range of problems in our children. And many men feel displaced and angry now because women are competing with them at work.

Far too many women are willing to go it alone and risk poverty and instability for shallow reasons of "self-empowerment" rather than trying to work out their marital challenges. Families need both parents in the household - not just economically but also spiritually and morally.

The whole idea of a "Deadbeat Dads" show is ludicrous. The creators are using the program to exploit what is really a much larger social problem - America's broken families.'

Positive news for a change: Men count!

GaryB · 26 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This story on the Sydney Morning Herald caught my eye this morning, with the headline "Bedroom ad ruled offensive to men". Quote:

'The Advanced Medical Institute (AMI) has been forced to pull a television commercial for longer lasting sex because it "vilified and shamed" men.

But the AMI says it is appealing the "bizarre" ruling on the advertisement, which features former A Country Practice police officer Sergeant Frank Gilroy entering a couple's bedroom after what is perceived to be a rather short love-making session.
...
"The ruling from the ASB says this ad is discriminating against and vilifying men who are suffering serious health problems such as premature ejaculation," he said.

"Of course they're serious problems - these are the very men we're trying to reach with this ad.

"It wouldn't be very effective advertising if we were upsetting the very people we're trying to talk to about available help, so we're planning on appealing this bizarre decision."

Mr Vaisman says the AMI will cooperate with the ASB and remove the ads while an appeal is conducted.'

I know we get bombarded by bad news, but lets celebrate the good when it comes along. Anecdotally, I've been seeing far less of the man-bashing ads on TV, my gut tells me that the advertisers are at least starting to get it - and maybe everyone else is too...

Texas Assistant AG fired for refusing to sign affidavit condemning father's rights-supporting Texas judge

jayhammers · 27 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former assistant attorney general alleges in a whistleblower suit filed May 18 that the Texas Office of the Attorney General fired her in 2008 for reporting that two OAG attorneys in the Dallas child support office tried "to suborn perjured testimony" from her about a Dallas judge.

Ginger Weatherspoon, who worked in the OAG's child support division from July 2006 until November 2008, alleges in her original petition in Weatherspoon v. Office of the Attorney General of Texas that in February 2008, James Jones and Harry Monck, then-senior regional attorneys in the Dallas child support office, tried to coerce her to sign an affidavit containing "numerous misrepresentations" about a conversation she had had with 254th District Judge David Hanschen [hyperlink added]. Weatherspoon further alleges in the petition, filed in the 44th District Court in Dallas, that Jones and Monck "confined her in a room against her will" after she refused to sign the affidavit.'

Teacher Charged with Having Sex with Teen

Matt · 27 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Maine East High School teacher is being held on $50,000 bond after she was charged with two counts of aggravated criminal sexual abuse as a result of an eight-month relationship she admitted to police she has had with a former student, Cook County Sheriff Thomas J. Dart said.

Jennifer Espinosa, 38, of Park Ridge, told Cook County Sheriff's Police investigators she "loves" the 16-year-old boy, who was expelled from Maine East in September and is a known Sureno 13 gang member, investigators said.'

Pension policy encourages divorce

Matt · 27 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Truth once again is stranger than fiction. Continental Airlines is suing some pilots who "faked" their divorces so they could get their pension distributions early rather than take the chance that their employer will go out of business and eat the pension fund.

The bigger picture here, aside from jobs being in danger and people acting thusly, is the fact that these kinds of policies encourage couples to split up rather than stay together. As for the comments regarding the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation, I doubt most people believe this, even if it is true, in the face of so many institutions considered solid just a year ago turning out to have feet of clay.

Women's Groups Vow to Fight for Swift Confirmation

anthony · 27 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Women's groups that had been urging President Obama to select the fourth female Supreme Court nominee in American history greeted his choice of Judge Sonia Sotomayor with enthusiasm.
...
The National Organization for Women also cheered the nomination of Sotomayor and president Kim Gandy said it would launch a campaign to ensure her "swift confirmation."

"Judge Sotomayor will serve the nation with distinction. She brings a lifelong commitment to equality, justice and opportunity, as well as the respect of her peers, unassailable integrity, and a keen intellect informed by experience. President Obama said he wanted a justice with 'towering intellect' and a 'common touch' and he found both in Judge Sotomayor," Gandy said in a statement calling for Sotomayor's confirmation before the Senate's August recess.'

Reports: Missing mom, girl not abducted

Matt · 27 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA – Philadelphia news outlets are reporting a suburban mother who claimed she and her 9-year-old daughter had been abducted were spotted on video surveillance at Philadelphia International Airport boarding a plane to Florida.

The Philadelphia Inquirer and WPVI-TV, citing unidentified sources, report Wednesday that 38-year-old Bonnie Sweeten, and her daughter Julia Rakoczy, were shown boarding a plane to Tampa on Tuesday afternoon.

Investigators say they can now conclude that the two were not abducted by a pair of men following a traffic accident in suburban Philadelphia.'

I am curious to see the details when the full story comes out after the police catch up with them.

WSJ: "The 'Empathy' Nominee"

Matt · 27 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a speech published in the Berkeley La Raza Law Journal in 2002, Judge Sotomayor offered her own interpretation of this jurisprudence. "Justice [Sandra Day] O'Connor has often been cited as saying that a wise old man and wise old woman will reach the same conclusion in deciding cases," she declared. "I am . . . not so sure that I agree with the statement. First, . . . there can never be a universal definition of wise. Second, I would hope that a wise Latina woman with the richness of her experiences would more often than not reach a better conclusion than a white male who hasn't lived that life."

We quote at such length because, even more than her opinions, these words are a guide to Ms. Sotomayor's likely behavior on the High Court. She is a judge steeped in the legal school of identity politics. This is not the same as taking justifiable pride in being the first Puerto Rican-American nominated to the Court, as both she and the President did yesterday. Her personal and family stories are admirable. Italian-Americans also swelled at the achievement of Justice Antonin Scalia, as Jewish-Americans did at the nomination of Benjamin Cardozo.

But these men saw themselves as judges first and ethnic representatives second. Judge Sotomayor's belief is that a "Latina woman" is by definition a superior judge to a "white male" because she has had more "richness" in her struggle. The danger inherent in this judicial view is that the law isn't what the Constitution says but whatever the judge in the "richness" of her experience comes to believe it should be.'

First male student advocacy group in the United States formed at University of Chicago

jayhammers · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

See the Chicago Tribute article here. Excerpt:

'A group of University of Chicago students think it's time the campus focused more on its men.

A third-year student from Lake Bluff has formed Men in Power, a student organization that promises to help men get ahead professionally. But the group's emergence has been controversial, with some critics charging that its premise is misogynistic.

Others say it's about time men are championed, noting that recent job losses hit men harder and that women earn far more bachelor's and master's degrees than do men.'

Join the Facebook group here to show your support.

Report: British Teacher Fired for Writing Racy Novel About Her 'Favorite' Students

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A British teacher reportedly has been fired for publishing a novel describing sexual encounters with some of her students.

The fictional work "Stop! Don't Read This" focuses on five of Leonora Rustamova's "favorite" students at Calder High School and addresses the 39-year-old's growing struggle to view her students as "kids." She also writes about her tendency to flirt with students and allow them to flirt with and fantasize about her, according to the Daily Telegraph.

In addition, the expletive-filled book featured stories of students drinking, skipping school and possibly using drugs. It also named other faculty members, including the school's headmaster Stephen Ball, the Daily Telegraph reported.

When she was suspended in January over the book's release, more than 250 students and parents demonstrated in support of Rustamova, saying she was only try to encourage the students to read, the Telegraph reported.

The school announced on Wednesday that she had been terminated following a disciplinary hearing into her conduct.'

India: Cases of battering jump the sex divide

webdigr · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Cases of wives abusing their husbands and giving them sleepless nights is on the rise and so are the number of divorces in the city

...

Adarsh is a software professional. A Hindu, he married his college chum, Selina, a Christian, two years ago.

...

...Adarsh's parents are at their wits' end, for the girl, they say, swears and uses off-colour risques when she gets into a fit of anger. Adarsh says he wants to try psychiatric help but can't without her cooperation. Selina scoffs at the suggestion. When DNA met him, he was locked out and staying in a hotel. He showed scratches and bite marks on his body.

...

Wife-bashing has been around ever since Adam woke up from his slumber to find his one rib missing. But husband-battering has been invisible up till now. Recently, many young men in the third richest city are seen frequently rushing out of bedrooms howling. The 2006 and 2007 crime data say 1305 husbands in Bangalore ended their lives in 2006 and 1596 in 2007. It was 245 a decade ago. The national scene shows that 65.3 per cent of men committed suicides in eight cities in 2007. Bangalore comes third in the list.'

Even in Sweden's generous welfare state, kids in single parent homes more at risk

Matt · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"“If children without fathers fare worse than children in two-parent families, say defenders of single mothers, the answer is better pay for women and better social programs. Yet even in Sweden with its generous welfare state, a major 2003 study found that children raised in single-parent homes were at significantly higher risk for addictions and serious psychiatric problems.”

A nice piece from Cathy Young in the Boston Globe–Single mothers and the baby boom (5/26/09). She writes:

"In the past 10 years, with my biological clock winding down and no husband in sight, I have been asked quite a few times if I had considered having a child on my own. What used to be scandalous is now practically a conventional life choice.

The economic and social pressures that used to propel people into marriage no longer exist; even Bristol Palin, the daughter of Governor Sarah Palin of Alaska, a conservative Christian, can opt out of marrying her baby's father without opprobrium. Expectations of love and emotional satisfaction in marriage are much higher than they once were. Gender roles are in flux. In today's economy, working-class women often have better job opportunities than men, yet men's marital desirability is still linked to the traditional notion of the “good provider.”"'

‘Runaway mom,’ girl found at Disney World

Matt · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Prosecutors believe that the Pennsylvania woman who was found with her daughter at Disney World after claiming they were abducted by two black men may have been taking actions due to domestic tensions with her second husband.

“They’re still looking into the motive behind this. We believe it may have to do with some domestic problems she may have been having with her husband,” Bucks County (Pa.) district attorney Michelle Henry told TODAY’s Natalie Morales Thursday. Henry said the couple may also have been facing financial problems.

Henry said that Bonnie Sweeten, 38, of Feasterville, will be charged with false reports and identity theft, both misdemeanors, and would be extradited from Florida to face the charges. Her 9-year-old daughter, Julia Rakoczy, was being interviewed by investigators and was to return home with her father and Sweeten’s ex-husband, Anthony Rakoczy.'

Hmmm...
"...after claiming they were abducted by two black men..."
"...domestic tensions with her second husband..."

Predicted outcome: Psychiatric evaluation, treatment, book deal, appearances on Oprah. In short: She will be rewarded for making a false police report and burning thousands of dollars in taxpayer money on a wild goose chase while leveraging anti-male/anti-black-people/anti-black-male-people prejudices to both escape negative consequences and find a way to make money off it.

Oh, that poor woman!

Sonia Sotomayor: supreme misandrist?

Matt · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Does this remark make you want to head for the hills?

"I would hope that a wise Caucasian man with the richness of his experiences would more often than not reach better conclusion than a Latina woman who hasn't lived that life."

A male faculty member who made such a claim would be laughed off of any college campus. But a slightly-revised version of that remark actually was made at the University of California at Berkeley. This is what Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor had to say at a Law and Cultural Diversity lecture she gave in 2001:

"I would hope that a wise Latina woman with the richness of her experiences would more often than not reach better conclusion than a white male who hasn't lived that life."

Punctuating that loopy logic, she then opined,

"Whether born from experience or inherent physiological or cultural differences,...our gender and national origins may and will make a difference in our judging."

Physiological or cultural differences? Gender and national origins? Let's come right out and proclaim it to the rooftops: Having female genitalia and being able to roll your R's makes you a better judge!'

Malaysian men who call their wives ugly could go to jail

Michael · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It could soon be a crime for Malaysian men to call their wives ugly, a women's rights group claimed this week.

The Women's Development Department, which is a branch of the government, plans to ask Parliament to ban 'emotional violence' against women. Physical violence is already illegal.

Campaigners said offenders who 'demonstrate a pattern of causing mental and psychological damage' should face counseling, fines and jail terms.
...
About 90 percent of some 800 women who called Malaysia's Women's Aid Organisation for help last year reported being psychologically abused, though some were also physically assaulted.'

'Men in throes of Supreme panic'

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

't's been such fun watching the right-wing white boys sputtering over the Supreme Court nomination of Sonia Sotomayor, a Hispanic woman nominated by a black man!

"Our world domination's slip, slip, slipping away," you can almost hear them whimper. "What to do?"
...
Note to those arguing that if a white man said about caucasians what Sotomayor did about Latina women judging better, he'd be finished: That's true. But it's a ridiculous analogy. White men - unlike women and minorities - have never endured government-sanctioned racism. Not yet, anyway.

Quick questions:

Why, when a white man wins a political seat or a court appointment, it's all about merit? But when a nonwhite wins (Obama) or gets appointed (Sotomayor), it's all about "identity politics" and tokenism?

How can anybody argue today against diversity in courts, Congress, whatever, considering that legal sexism and segregation continued right through the '70s in great part because men - white men - ran everything?'

Assisted living center employee sued over false rape rumors

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WHEELING - An assisted living center is suing one of its employees for allegedly spreading rumors that an older man residing at the facility raped a woman.

Weirton Health Partners filed a federal lawsuit April 14 against Gabrielle Yates.

Weirton says it lost clients after Yates began to call families of residents living at Wyngate Senior Living Community and told them a resident had raped another resident.

But Weirton contends the claims are not true.

Rumors began flying after Wyngate staff members discovered the existence of a romantic relationship between two elderly residents in June, according to the complaint.'

Real Clear Politics: Obama, Sotomayor, Ricci and White Male Privilege

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Polls show support for affirmative action tracks with those who benefit from the policy. For example, white women overwhelmingly support affirmative action when it involves women. But when it involves only minorities, white women generally agree with white men. A majority of whites do still support affirmative action for minorities. But their support nears 90 percent when it regards economic background rather than race or gender.
...
That's the bigger issue afoot. It is still acceptable for society to discriminate against white males and to speak derisively of them. At what point will this change?

As Sotomayor stood beside the president Tuesday, she said, "I strive never to forget the real-world consequences of my decisions on individuals, businesses and government."

But Sotomayor demonstrated no empathy for the "real-world consequences" of affirmative action on Ricci. In the months and years ahead, the Supreme Court, this president and Sotomayor will have to consider whether they should.'

State's first women-only veterans clinic opens

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHATTANOOGA - A new veterans clinic for women only is opening in Nashville and officials say it is one of the most comprehensive Veterans Affairs women's care clinics in the country.

Mary Ann Woodward-Smith, who oversees women's care for the Tennessee Valley Healthcare System, said the clinic opening Wednesday is a sign that the VA is expanding services to women, who have been underserved in the male-dominated military.

The Chattanooga Times Free Press reported the clinic on Charlotte Avenue is separate from the main VA hospital campus and is staffed entirely by women.'

UK: Justice system a 'sexist operation', study finds

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The society's commission on women and the criminal justice system, whose members include high court judges and Cressida Dick, one of the most senior women in British policing, warned that since it last reported in 2004 there has been a lack of consistent progress in promoting women into senior positions, and victims and offenders continued to be marginalised in a system designed for men.

It raised concerns over the number of women given short prison sentences for non-violent crime, including the non-payment of fines and television licences, and the effect it had on their children as well as its failure to address the causes of their offending.

In 2007, 63% of women sent to jail were given sentences of six months or less. Last month the female prison population stood at 4,309, compared with 2,672 in mid-1997. Ministry of Justice projections show that at best it may decrease by 200 by 2015, and at worst will increase to 5,100.'

Mother Approves Of Teacher Raping Son

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HIALEAH, Fla., May 27 (UPI) -- Police in Hialeah, Fla., have charged a female teacher at a religious school with having an affair with a 15-year-old 8th grader.

In addition to the teacher, the boy's mother is under investigation after acknowledging to authorities that she approved of the relationship, the Miami Herald reported Wednesday.

"She apparently didn't find anything wrong with it, thought that the teacher was a nice enough person and a good influence on her son," said Detective Carl Zogby of the Hialeah police.'

Former Teacher's Aid Ordered Held Without Bail

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. When its a female teacher, its sex or relationship. When its a male, its abuse or rape. How many female teachers who rape boys are held without bail?

'A former teacher's aide in Burlington will remain in jail pending trial on sex abuse charges.

Douglas Cavett, 43, of Milton, is accused of assaulting a male student from Hunt Middle school back in the early 1990s.

Police say Cavett gained the trust of troubled boys and hosted parties at his house where he gave teenage boys drugs and alcohol. Cavett already has one sex crime conviction from 2005, also involving a teenage boy.

Last week he pleaded not guilty to two counts of aggravated sexual assault, but police fear there may be more victims. A judge denied him bail, saying he's a risk to public safety.'

Ex-teacher's aide 'sorry for parties', gets plea deal

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HARRISON, Pa., May 27 (UPI) -- A former teacher's aide and one-time stripper apologized in a Pennsylvania courtroom for her sexual trysts and partying with teenage students.

Abbie Swogger, 36, of Harrison was sentenced to 3-to-6 years in prison Tuesday after saying she was sorry she had not acted like the role model she should have been during her brief tenure as an aide at a local high school.

The Valley News Dispatch in Tarentum. Pa., said Swogger will also be registered as a sex offender. In exchange for the plea, most of the 40 counts against her were consolidated or dropped.'

Ex-teacher in 'student-sex tryst' wants earlier parole hearing

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NASHVILLE - A former Tennessee teacher who was convicted of having sex with a 13-year-old student is fighting for another shot at parole.

Pamela Rogers was arrested in February 2005 and pleaded no contest to having sexual intercourse and oral sex with the student, who attended the elementary school in McMinnville where she had taught physical education.

She was released early for good behavior, but was sent back to jail for sending nude photos to the boy after she was released.'

Police Accuse Female Teacher Of "Intimate Contact" With 15 Year Old Boy

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WILMINGTON – More details emerged Wednesday in the case against a former New Hanover County middle school teacher charged with sex crimes.

Wilmington police say they caught 27-year-old Jessica Wishnask in "intimate contact" with a 15-year-old boy. She was charged with taking indecent liberties with a minor.

News 14 Carolina confirmed Thursday that the teenager is a student at Williston Middle School, where Wishnask used to teach. It is unclear if he was her student.

News 14 Carolina does not identify the victims of sex crimes.

New Hanover County school district leaders say the teacher was suspended twice during her two years with the district. They did not release the reason for those suspensions. She resigned for personal reasons last December.

Wilmington police say they caught the teacher and student together in a parked car around 3:30 a.m. Saturday.'

Australia: Teacher awaits decision in sex trial

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The trial of a Canberra teacher accused of having sex with a 14-year-old student ended yesterday with the woman's young accuser branded a liar in court by a defence barrister.
After seven days of evidence and submissions in the ACT Supreme Court, 43-year-old Tania Tominac now faces an agonising wait for Justice Malcolm Gray to return his verdict on her guilt or innocence.
...
In his closing submissions yesterday, defence barrister Ken Archer told Justice Gray that the boy at the centre of the allegations was "not a witness of truth" and that some of his claims were "beyond belief".

Tominac, a former teacher at Saint Francis Xavier College in Florey, is accused of conducting an affair with the then 14-year-old student.

The mother-of-three pleaded not guilty to five counts of sexual intercourse with a person under the age of 16 and one count of maintaining a relationship with a person under the age of 16.'

MSNBC’s O’Donnell: No White Men Qualified For Supreme Court?

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the 3:00PM EST hour on MSNBC on Wednesday, political analyst Pat Buchanan wondered why President Obama’s short list for the Supreme Court only included women, in response, anchor Norah O’Donnell declared: "Did it ever occur to you, Pat, that maybe there weren’t any white men who were qualified?"

Buchanan replied: "No, it did not occur to me...You mean there are no white males qualified? That is – that would be an act of bigotry to make a statement like that." O’Donnell defended her remark by claiming past discrimination against women in the nominating process: "In the past there have been no women that have been qualified." Buchanan argued: "They certainly have been qualified in the past. I don’t doubt there are. But probably half of the great lawyers and judges are white males in this country. And to rule them out, why? Because of their sex and because of their race is wrong, I think. At least it’s affirmative action."'

Police officers to get day in court for reverse discrimination

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FLINT, Michigan -- A showdown is coming between former Flint Mayor Don Williamson and 45 city police officers who claim they are the victims of reverse discrimination.

And it could cost Flint taxpayers millions if the cops win.

A federal judge this week refused the city's request to toss a lawsuit that claims Williamson passed over qualified white officers when he handpicked five officers for his Citizens Service Bureau in 2006.

Four of the officers were black men and one was a white woman.

The lawsuit filed by 45 white officers claims that Williamson "unlawfully discriminated against them when Williamson personally selected officers on the basis of race" for the department.'

New York NOW Memo Opposing Mandatory Joint Custody

anthony · 28 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A case for “Primary Caregiver Presumption.” The National Organization for Women-New York State has always favored a primary caregiver (usually the mother) presumption to ensure stability and continuity of care for children. If the father has not been involved in a major way in the lives of his children during the marriage, why would that involvement increase after divorce?

...

Father’s rights groups are in the forefront of the push for legislation establishing a presumption in favor of joint custody. These groups emphasize that many states already have some form of mandated joint custody. The first of these was California. After seeing the effects on children: convoluted living arrangements between relocated, possibly remarried parents, children being transferred from parent to parent in front of police stations, children being enrolled in two separate schools and other horror stories, the California legislature, in 1989 revoked its presumption and the statute now established “neither a preference nor a presumption for or against joint legal custody, joint physical custody, or sole custody, but allows the court and the family the widest discretion to choose a parenting plan which is in the best interest of the child or children.”'

NYC Teacher Accused Of Classroom Sex With Student

Matt · 29 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Looks like it's teacher-student-statutory-rape-story-Friday here on MANN. One more here. This one's a real shocker, but is anyone really surprised when so many female teachers get away with it so easily so often? Excerpt:

'It was inside a second-story classroom where police said Weber gave one of her students an up close and personal lesson in sex education.
...
...But authorities said the 27-year-old took particular interest in one student, having sex with the teen seven times from mid-April to mid-May, all after school.

She allegedly told him: "Don't tell anyone. I could get arrested and I could lose my teaching license."

Investigators said after the boy's mother was tipped off by school employees, she checked her son's cell phone and found hundreds of calls and texts from Weber, the last text reading, "erase your phone."'

Elmer Smith: Another crime appearance by 'black men'

Matt · 29 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OK, GIVE yourselves some credit. You had this Bonnie Sweeten abduction pegged for a hoax by morning coffee break Wednesday.

Anybody around the water cooler with an IQ of 65 or above was starting to sense that the by-now hardy perennial tale of the missing blue-eyed blonde being hijacked by those handy, hulking black men from Central Casting was bogus.

Don't gloat too much, though. The odor of week-old carp was wafting off of this one from the moment the call came in from the damn'dsel in distress.
...
The paper trail she left behind was easier to follow than the bread crumbs Hansel and Gretel left on their trek through the woods. Her inevitable conviction may be a deterrent to the next fable spinner.

But this is small solace to hundreds of black men who have found themselves in the dragnet after one of these bogus yarns. Some of them have been convicted on the basis of lies not much better than this one.

The truth may make us free. But lies like Sweeten's may keep some of us from having to be freed.'

"White House: Sotomayor says she chose word poorly" - well, not exactly...

Matt · 29 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – The White House says Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor acknowledges she made a poor word choice in a 2001 speech in which she said that a Latina judge would often reach a better conclusion than a white male judge who hasn't lived the same life.

That's according to presidential spokesman Robert Gibbs. He says he has not talked directly to Sotomayor about it but has spoken to people who have.'

So she is saying she made a "poor choice of words". At least, she is said to have said to have said something like that. That is, someone is saying he heard from someone else that she said words to that effect, or in some way acknowledged it.

"Poor choice of words". I wonder what "choice of words" she would choose today to express the sentiment, whatever it was, since her first choice of words was, apparently, "poor" -- or so we are told by someone told by someone else who said she said something like that.

Well, in any case what she says is not nearly as important as what she does, though what she says does let people know a bit how she thinks and looks at the world, and thus to some degree, gives us some idea of what kind of Supreme Court judge she would make.

But whether or not you like what she has has actually done while being a judge in lesser courts up until now is up to you.

Just launched - a social networking site just for men mens-space · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Two "men of a certain age" have just launched Men's Space, a new social networking site for mature men. The site, http://www.mens-space.com/, will provide a platform for men over 30 or even younger, to air and share their views because, said co-founder John Murphy (64), "There is so much support for women but men seem to have to tough it out for themselves".

Co-founder Tony Reid (a little older) said "We want to give men a voice again. A "man of a certain age" can be a man of any age, so long as he wants to engage with other men in a grown-up manner". The Men's Space site will have a very different demographic to the likes of Facebook and that is the target.

Men's Space has the usual facilities to be expected of a social networking site, including the main forum, the ability to form groups and profiles with photo galleries.

Men have a new challenge or problem almost every day and Men's Space will empower them to seek out answers to their questions; share interests and passions; converse and make new friends from all over the world.....
###
Men's Space is a new company formed for the purpose of promoting the needs of men over 30 on the internet.
Website: http://www.mens-space.com/
Contact: John Murphy - co-founder
Email: john-at-mens-space.com

Woman charged with false rape report

anthony · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Concord woman who claimed her boyfriend tried to rape her has been arrested and charged with false reporting.

The police are still trying to figure out what exactly happened between Tabitha Carbone, 18, and Andrew Trudell, 25, early May 22, when Carbone told the police that Trudell grabbed, choked, and tried to rape her after she said she wanted to break up with him.

But prosecutors have dropped the charge of attempted aggravated felonious sexual assault against Trudell, who was arrested after a foot chase the night of May 22. His bail, originally set at $100,000 cash, was reduced and converted to personal recognizance. He left the Merrimack County Jail on Wednesday.'

Rape charges dropped, but scars remain

anthony · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For more than three months, Scott Michael Waite wore an electronic ankle bracelet that made him a prisoner in his own home. With his reputation sullied and his life put on hold, he sat accused of raping a 26-year-old woman he had met in an Oakdale bar on a cold January night.

But in a recent unique turn of events, after an exhaustive investigation by his attorney, Ryan Garry, prosecutors dropped the charges in April. Waite, 29, now must rebuild his life.

"I'm pretty shook up by the whole thing," Waite said. "I was treated like a complete criminal. To hear people say these malicious things about me is really hurtful."

The case was dropped "in the interest of justice" and was an unusual one "where we get information after the fact and feel we really can't prove our case at all," said Susan Harris, first assistant attorney in Washington County. "In this particular case, they found a lot of people willing to come forward and speak against [the accuser]."'

Time: 'A Florida Epidemic: Female Teachers Sleeping with Their Students'

anthony · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'If you're the parent of a teen-aged boy in Florida, you probably muttered "not again" while reading your morning newspaper this week. There on the front page was yet another case of an adult female teacher being arrested for admitting to having had sex with an underage male student. This time the alleged perp was Maria Guzman Hernandez, a 32-year-old instructor at the private Our Lady of Charity school in Hialeah; her victim was 15. But she just as well could have been the 34-year-old Jacksonville public-school science teacher arrested last month for allegedly having sex with a 14-year-old student, once in her SUV; or the 32-year-old St. Petersburg teacher collared in March for allegedly "sexting" nude pictures of herself to an 8th-grade boy; or the 45-year-old teacher at a private Christian academy in South Daytona arrested days before for allegedly having sex with a boy from her class in various Daytona Beach hotels.

...

It doesn't help that society already brings a double standard to these cases, the notion that somehow it isn't as harmful for a boy to be seduced by a woman as it is for a girl to have sex with a man. In fact, it's not uncommon in the wake of news like Hernandez's arrest to hear morning radio jocks in Florida declare congratulatory high-fives for the boys.

"This isn't an 'affair,' it's abuse, and we have to shift that paradigm," says Terri Miller, president of Stop Educator Sexual Abuse, Misconduct and Exploitation (SESAME) in Nevada. "We say, 'Bully for the boy and his conquest of the geometry teacher,' but that makes it harder for boys to vocalize their victimization." Indeed, studies by psychologists like Julie Hislop, author of the 2001 book Female Sex Offenders: What Therapists, Law Enforcement and Child Protective Services Need to Know, note that boys who are sexually abused by women often develop alcoholism, depression and their own sexual dysfunctions, including rape, as men.'

Defense Attorney For Runaway Mom: 'It's not a crime to take your kid to Disney World'

anthony · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA - A woman accused of staging an abduction hoax that began near Philadelphia and ended at Florida's Walt Disney World was returned to Pennsylvania in police custody on Friday and was held on $1 million bail.

A drained-looking Bonnie Sweeten appeared in an Orlando, Fla., courtroom for a brief hearing Friday morning before detectives from Bucks County, Pa., escorted her to the airport for the flight home.

...

Defense lawyer Louis R. Busico told reporters before the court appearance that Sweeten, 38, is not a flight risk and was not running from the law when she went to Florida with her 9-year-old daughter.

"It's not a crime to take your kid to Disney World," Busico said.'

Germany: ‘Male kindergarten’ has great possibilities

anthony · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Germans also gave us the concept of kindergarten, which has become the foundation of public education.

Well, a couple years ago, the Germans came up with an extension of the kindergarten concept. It’s for women fed up with their partner grumbling about having to go on shopping ventures. Thanks to progressive thinking, a fraulein who wants to shop ’til she drops doesn’t have listen to a man whine, “Is it time to go, yet?” She can drop off her male at Maennergarten.

Maennergarten is a day care service for men. And guys, before you get all huffy and go into macho outrage at the notion of “hubbie kindergarten,” check out this deal.

First, Maennergarten day care isn’t held in a private home owned by someone named Bertha, with three dozen screaming, drooling, snot-nosed kids climbing all over you.

Nah. Maennergarten is held at watering holes, like a bistro in downtown Hamburg called the Nox Bar. The only screaming, drooling, snot-nosed humans present are other grown up males!'

American Thinker: The Crisis of the Disappearing Educated Male

anthony · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...Hostility toward men and masculinity begins in daycare and increases each year thereafter. Sexual harassment training and policies have created an uncertain environment, if not a hostile one, where men have to watch their every word and action lest it be misunderstood or misinterpreted. Some experts criticize a campus "worldview that sees things only in terms of oppressors and the oppressed." Typically, the few campus men's studies programs are designed to push an anti-masculinity agenda.
...
Actually, the solution is much simpler: create an environment starting in kindergarten that teaches children to respect masculine traits. To do otherwise is to discriminate against our sons and brothers.'

Inside Higher Ed: Lost Men on Campus

anthony · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In terms of strategies and recommendations, Edwards and Harris suggested first giving college men permission to stop performing and to be themselves. “It’s really about creating some kind of balance to the external pressure,” said Harris. “We talk about challenge and support, challenging the negative behavior.”

Edwards and Harris also recommended providing opportunities for critical self-reflection about what it means to be a man – “to disrupt the functioning of hegemonic masculinity” – including through facilitated student affairs programming and academic courses (a course in women’s studies, for instance). They recommended a need to build "cultural competence" for faculty and staff in issues of gender. While many in the audience lauded the transformative impact of small group discussions among men, one common point was the need for a facilitator who really understands gender dynamics.'

Scotland: Dani Garavelli: Let our boys be boys

anthony · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sadly, statistics bear out these writers' pessimism. Academically, boys lag behind almost from the day they're born. They are four times more likely to be expelled from nursery, are more likely to be diagnosed with ADHD and, because they are seen as more demanding, wait twice as long to be adopted in some parts of the UK.

Some of the challenges associated with raising sons are integral to their gender: their surplus energy means they require to be exercised daily, while their desire to avoid meaningful conversation means more effort is required to keep the lines of communication open. Other difficulties are the result of social change – the large number of single parent families means many boys are growing up not only without male role models, but with mothers whose own experiences with men may be negative.'

"Fathers Rights Groups Are Destructive"

Matt · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Usually I ignore feminist blogs since they are so predictable. This particular entry though strikes me as especially venomous. FR groups are painted as being front organizations for batterers and, based on the language used to describe them, all but terrorist organizations. These kinds of defamations must be confronted and the accusers called to task for their mischaracterizations. Entry here. Excerpt:

'Lets begin with the infamous shared parenting bill brought about by fathers rights groups.
Campaign messages were:

* Fathers are committing suicide because they are not seeing their children.
* Single mothers are bad aka "fatherlessness"
* Mothers make false allegations for financial reasons or revenge
* Most Domestic Violence allegations are made to gain custody of the child

The submissions that were made in the Australian family law reform were mostly from men and women supporting men. There was no credible research to prove any of these statements, but the amplified voice of propaganda won above common sense and ethics.

...
Dads In Distress is one of the milder operational cells of the Australian FR Network. They are milder simply because they are restricted by funding guidelines set out by FACSIA . DIDS has been funded for over a million dollars under the guidelines of, "Suicide Prevention". Dads In Distress claimed in his appeal for more funding that fathers will be committing suicide without his service. The Mens Referral Service has been far more responsible in providing these services for men without lobbying for children to have contact with mentally unstable men. In many studies conducted on murder suicides, research revealed that when men do it, they usually take children and women with them. Such advocacy is irresponsible and selfish in respect to the interests of the children.
...
In Family Court Proceedings, False Allegations are rare. Dr Kim Oates was quoted on ABCs Parent Alienation Background briefing to have findings of false allegations as low as 2.5%.'

Hands-on dads handle stress better

Matt · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Job loss is traumatic. So is financial anxiety. But hands-on fathers who can juggle bath-time, playground jaunts and laundry duty are better equipped to deal with those than earlier generations of men, says the author of a new book on fatherhood.

In Daddy Shift, to be released next month, Jeremy Adam Smith explores how fathers' growing participation in childrearing and domestic duties is transforming modern families.'

Obama sure Sotomayor would restate 2001 comment

Matt · 30 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Latest entry in the on-going saga here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – President Barack Obama on Friday personally sought to deflect criticism of Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor, who finds herself under intensifying scrutiny for saying in 2001 that a female Hispanic judge would often reach a better decision than a white male judge. "I'm sure she would have restated it," Obama flatly told NBC News, without indicating how he knew that.

The quote in question from Sotomayor has emerged as a rallying call for conservative critics who fear she will offer opinions from the bench based less on the rule of law and more on her life experience, ethnicity and gender. That issue is likely to play a central role in her Senate confirmation process.'

So now we have heard the president say he's "sure" she would have "re-stated" what she said. He did not say she said that she would. She did not actually say so herself, as near as anyone can tell. You'd think she was camera-shy given how much others seem to be speaking for her, or on her behalf, or at least speculating about what she might do or say if she were to actually say something herself in front of other people. I wonder why she is so not-visible now, since she never seemed to be that way in the past.

"I heard someone say someone said that someone else said that he honestly and truly believed this about her: That if she had it to do today, she probably would say what she said using different words."

OK, guess that'll have to do.

Oh, did we forget what she actually did say, what all this talking about talking about talking about what she said or might have said or may say is all about? Her actual, real words, from her own lips, spoken in public (wow, took a long time to get there!) were in fact:

"Justice O'Connor has often been cited as saying that a wise old man and wise old woman will reach the same conclusion in deciding cases. I am...not so sure that I agree with the statement. First,...there can never be a universal definition of wise. Second, I would hope that a wise Latina woman with the richness of her experiences would more often than not reach a better conclusion than a white male who hasn't lived that life."*

Your turn to be the judge.

---

*As quoted by the WSJ. They said she said that. :)

Naomi Wolf: "Feminism and the scientific evidence about the male Brain"

anthony · 31 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists understandably have often shied away from scientific evidence that challenges this critique of sex roles. After all, because biology-based arguments about gender difference have historically been used to justify women's subjugation, women have been reluctant to concede any innate difference, lest it be used against them. But, in view of recent scientific discoveries, has feminist resistance to accepting any signs of innate gender difference only created new biases?

The feminist critique, for example, has totally remade elementary-level education, where female decision-makers prevail: the construction of male hierarchies in the schoolyard is often redirected nowadays for fear of "bullying," with boys and girls alike expected to "share" and "process" their emotions. But many educators have begun to argue that such intervention in what may be a hardwired aspect of "boy-ness" can lead to boys' academic underperformance relative to girls, and to more frequent diagnoses of behavioral problems, attention deficit disorder, and so on.'

Sex abuse: different for boys, or is it?

anthony · 31 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"We don't often have that kind of sympathy for men in sexual abuse situations," Casey said. "Our culture has a message to boys and men that any kind of sexual behavior is getting lucky."

That attitude can translate into lighter sentences for female offenders. In 2006, Florida teacher Debra Lafave escaped charges of lewd and lascivious battery on a 14-year-old student with a sentence of house arrest and probation. Her attorney implied in court that she was too pretty to be sent to prison.

The illicit couple in question can even gain a kind of celebrity status. Mary Kay Letourneau, the former teacher imprisoned for having a sexual relationship with one of her sixth-grade students, recently hosted a "Hot for Teacher" night at a bar in Seattle with her former student and current husband as DJ, according to the Associated Press.'

Royal Oak woman guilty of burning 5-year-old son

anthony · 31 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Returning a guilty verdict for child abuse in the second degree, an Oakland County Circuit Court jury believes a Royal Oak woman burned her 5-year-old son with a hair straightening iron the same day she turned 29.
...
“We are certainly hoping for leniency in light of the fact that Ms. Drew has no criminal record,” Youngs said. “Second-degree child abuse removes intent as an element and requires that the prosecutor only show recklessness. The sentence Ms. Drew receives may impact how we go forward. This case has been a nightmare for her.”
...
The third-degree burns to the child's lower right leg required skin grafts and plastic surgery, and the arrest came several months into the investigation, Swiatkowski said.

The boy has autism and limited verbal skills, which kept him from being able to tell police how he was burned, according to Swiatkowski.'

TMW creates pack to help combat male suicide

anthony · 31 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LONDON - TMW has produced a business-targeted campaign aimed at reducing the numbers of men who commit suicide due to work and economic pressures.

The direct marketing activity has been produced free of charge for the Campaign Against Living Miserably (Calm), which provides help and advice via phone and its website.

...

The campaign has been created in response to fears that the recession will lead to an increase in male suicide.'

Schumer won't concede Sotomayor misspoke

anthony · 31 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) declined Sunday to concur with President Barack Obama's claim that Supreme Court Judge Sonia Sotomayor believes she chose her words poorly in a 2001 speech where she said a "wise Latina" judge would reach better results than a white male.

"I don't think anybody wants nine justices on the Supreme Court who have ice water in their veins," Schumer said on ABC's "This Week."

However, when pressed by host George Stephanopoulos on whether Sotomayor planned to distance herself from the "wise Latina" comment during her confirmation hearings, Schumer, who is a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, did not answer directly.

"I think she'll stand by the entire speech," Schumer said. "The specific sentence there is simply saying that people's experiences matter and we ought to have some diversity of experience in the court."

Changes in human sex ratio and chemical contamination

Matt · 31 May 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Excerpt from Our Stolen Future here, reading in part:

'Several researchers, however, have reported apparent recent declines in the proportion of male births, in the US, Canada, Denmark and the Netherlands. These declines have been very small but statistically significant. Fewer boys are being born than would be expected on the basis of the recent historical worldwide average.

In addition to these general declines, several specific cases have been reported involving sharp alterations in the sex ratio of people because of industrial accident, occupational exposure, or because of exposure to air pollution from incinerators. For example, in Russia pesticide workers exposed to elevated dioxin and dioxin-like compounds are less likely to father boys. A similar pattern is observed in men exposed to a mixture of PCBs in Taiwan. Both these studies report no effect on the sex ratio of infants born to exposed women. The Taiwanese study also suggests that exposure before the age of 20 is necessary for there to be an effect on sex ratio.'

One of the co-authors is scheduled to present at the 2009 ideaCity Conference in Toronto, Ontario in June of this year.

Living life by Archie's law

webdigr · 1 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Women marry for money all the time, so what's wrong with a man doing so?

The shock announcement that young Archie Andrews has finally proposed to foxy Veronica rather than cute as a button Betty has set off a furious debate. Love or money is the topic at hand, being discussed with vigour at water coolers and in the blogosphere.

...

It soon became apparent what it was--Archie's misguided and rash step (even though it has taken him nearly seven decades) had got those keyboards rattling with outrage and disgust (Archie is a sap, how could he, she'll ditch him.)

...

But now Archie has gone and done exactly what he shouldn't have. And bloggers are upset.

...

Women marry for money all the time; why can't a man? This is bound to be a deeply unpopular view, but is more in tune with reality as it is rather than as it ought to be. To all those Archie fans, in the blogosphere and elsewhere, who are upset, disappointed and crushed at how far their hero has fallen, I can only say, c'est la vie. Better still -- get a life.'

Woman shoots father of her children, police say

Matt · 1 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A Phoenix woman shot the father of her children at an apartment complex near 51st and Van Buren streets Friday afternoon, police said.

Just before 2 p.m., Phoenix police responded to the scene and found that the man had been shot, later determining the shooting was a domestic-violence case and taking the woman into custody, according to Luis Samudio of Phoenix police.

The children were in the apartment, though it was unclear how many children they have.

The condition of the man was not yet known.'

School drop-out rates rise for children of divorce, claims study

Matt · 1 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parents thinking about getting divorced, especially for the second or third time, should consider the impact of that decision on their children's schooling, new research from University of Alberta suggests.

The groundbreaking study -- believed to the first in Canada to look at the long-term impacts of household upheaval on academic success -- found children who experience changes to their family structure are much more likely to become high school dropouts than classmates whose parents stay together.

The findings were particularly grim for children who live through three or more parental changes: divorce or death, remarriage or another divorce. Such children have just a 40-per-cent chance of completing their high school diplomas, a success rate half that of children with no family shakeup.'

‘Black man did it’ hoax sparks outrage

Matt · 1 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA - It's an old lie, claiming that The Black Man Did It.

But it was trotted out again last week when a white mother from suburban Philadelphia said two black men snatched her and her 9-year-old daughter from their SUV and abducted them in the trunk of a black Cadillac.

Blacks across the country were outraged after Bonnie Sweeten was found in a luxury hotel at Disney World. Authorities quickly unraveled the hoax, but not before an Amber Alert, frantic searches and national news coverage that played into images of marauding black men.

...

Authorities discovered that Sweeten had made the call from miles away, in downtown Philadelphia. Their attention turned to the airport, and Sweeten was soon found. She is free on $1 million bail, facing misdemeanor charges of identity theft and false reporting.

During a news conference after the hoax was exposed, Bucks County District Attorney Michelle Henry explained the charge of filing a false police report.

"It's a terrifying thing," she said, "for a community to hear that two black men in a black Cadillac grabbed a woman and her daughter."'

BBC: Testicular cancer genetic advance

anthony · 2 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Researchers have for the first time found inherited genetic factors which raise the risk of testicular cancer.

A UK team found many testicular cancer patients shared common DNA variants on chromosomes five, six and 12 that healthy men did not have.

This finding was echoed in a separate US study in the same journal, Nature Genetics, which highlighted two of the same variations.

Both studies raise hopes of better treatments and diagnostic tests.'

Lawyer: NJ Man Wins Custody of Son Taken to Brazil

anthony · 2 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A federal court in Brazil has ruled that a New Jersey father should get custody of his 8-year-old son, whose mother took him to the South American nation after their divorce and died there, the man's lawyer said Monday.

Attorney Patricia Apy, who represents David Goldman, said she was notified of the decision Monday afternoon. The ruling calls for the boy to be turned over to his father on Wednesday, Apy said.

The boy's Brazilian mother took him to Brazil in 2004. She remarried and never returned to the United States. She died last year of complications from the birth of another child.'

"Power Pipeline Program" for women only

Anonymous · 2 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This group is promoted in companies, but men are not allowed. If you contact the organization they will say men may apply. If you ask if any men have attend, you get no answer. A company in my city promotes the program and tell men they cannot apply even though the company policy is not to discriminate against men.

Women are promoted as a result of being apart of this seminar in my company.

Accuser in alleged cabin rape has history of false reports

anthony · 2 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SEVIERVILLE (WATE) -- There's new information about the Georgia woman who claims she was kidnapped, then raped in a rented Sevier County cabin.

According to broadcast reports in Atlanta, the woman, 24, has been in trouble before. She's accused of filing three "false assault" reports.

In 2004 in Henry County, Georgia, the woman reported that two men broke into her home and sexually assaulted her. Investigators determined that report was false, but didn't charge her.

In 2005 in Cherokee County, Georgia, the woman reported that two men broke into her home, kidnapped and sexually assaulted her. She was found behind a Kohl's department store.

The next day, she was charged with filing a false report. She pleaded guilty to obstruction and got 12 months probation.'

Relatedly, Rape charges go forward despite false accusations in past.

Police: Mom guilts kids into armed robbery

anthony · 2 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHOENIX - A 51-year-old woman used guilt about her family's difficult finances to get her young sons and their friends to help her pay bills by committing at least 20 armed robberies in the Phoenix area, authorities said.

Cynthia Roberson, her two sons, ages 12 and 14, and five others face charges of armed robbery and aggravated assault, investigators said Monday.

"All of us should be disgusted by this," Phoenix police Sgt. Phil Roberts said. "This is absolutely not how to raise your children."'

Two women face justice in Waco for sexual assault of youths

anthony · 2 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Brazos Middle School teacher pleaded guilty Monday to 10 counts of sexual assault of a child and is asking a judge to place her on deferred probation.

The case was one of two in a Waco courtroom Monday involving women committing sexual offenses with youths.

McLennan County prosecutor Melanie Walker recommended that Tara Allison Hodges, 27, be sentenced to 10 years in prison on each of the 10 counts of improper sexual contact with a 14-year-old male Brazos Middle School student and told 19th State District Judge Ralph Strother that she would oppose Hodges' request for deferred probation.
...
Hodges had a two-month sexual relationship with the boy in 2008, officials have said. She also smoked marijuana with the boy, bought him shoes, gave him money and sent him explicit cell phone photos of herself, according to records filed in the case.

Hodges' attorney, Russ Hunt, said Hodges has surrendered her teacher certification and will never teach again. He said she must register as a sex offender for the rest of her life and has moved to El Campo, Texas, to live with her parents.'

Ireland: Woman accused of killing lover gets bail

anthony · 2 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A POLISH woman accused of murdering her lover in their Co Tyrone home was yesterday granted bail to stay at a shelter in Belfast.

Aneta Sadowska (36), is alleged to have used different knives to stab Marek Sewern (37), through the heart and stomach a day after their son was christened.

Mr Sewern, also a Polish national, was also beaten over the head with a blunt object – possibly an ashtray or frying pan – following a drinking session at the couple's flat in Omagh last December, according to prosecutors. The court was told that Ms Sadowska, with an address at Rathronan House, Hospital Road, in the town, formed a relationship with the victim after splitting with her husband.'

University of Winnipeg introduces men's studies

anthony · 2 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WINNIPEG — The University of Winnipeg is introducing a course in men's studies — an examination of masculinity, boys, men and popular culture.

U of W says men's studies emerged as early as the 1970s, filling a gap left by women's studies that had not dealt with what academics call the gendered construction of masculinity, and masculinity's complex relation to power.

"When Women's Studies became Women's and Gender Studies several years ago, we incorporated perspectives from men's studies into our courses, but this is the first time we have devoted a course specifically to the area," said Prof. Pauline Greenhill, who's teaching the course next winter.'

UK: It's academic: university women are beating men at almost everything

anthony · 2 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women outperform men in almost every single aspect of higher education, according to research published today.

The number of women at university began to exceed the number of men for the first time 16 years ago.

However, for years there were still academics claiming that men had "more where it mattered", ie at elite Russell Group universities – the group which represents 20 of the UK's leading research institutions including Oxford and Cambridge.

One study published in 2005, Class Rifts Eclipsed by Sex Divide, said: "Many women are studying in lower-status universities... the university continues to be a space where class privilege is maintained and women's participation is limited to the bottom of a hierarchical continuum."'

MANN is no place for spam

Matt · 2 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Recently people who have registered within the last week or so have been leaving links to various web sites that sell things like pre-written college essays, money-making ventures, etc. These posts have been edited to eliminate these links and the registrants banned from making further posts. Others posts that had no comments even remotely germane to MRA issues or the posted article, but only hyperlinks to software sites, for example, have been deleted and the users banned.

MANN is no place for spam. If you start spamming, I will ban you immediately.

Thank you and enjoy your lack of spam.

"Eliminate" the California Commission on the Status of Women

MR · 3 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Scrolling down this California government-funded web site's main page reveals an urgent message from the taxpayer funded, California Commission on the Status of Women:

"OPPOSE ELIMINATION OF THE CALIFORNIA COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN - The California Commission on the Status of Women is on the Budget Conference Committee's agenda TODAY to be considered for elimination."

These people are using hard earned tax dollars to plead for more tax dollars to further what are (in many cases) misandrist endeavors.

Here is one reader's response to their request:
"ELIMINATE" THE CALIFORNIA COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN"
End Feminist Pork

RADAR ALERT: VAWA Loophole Creates Epidemic of Immigration Fraud

Matt · 3 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

In his May 27, 2009 story "Former Agent Calls Sham Marriages 'Epidemic,'" CBS4 (Denver) investigator Brian Maass interviewed John Sampson, a former immigration investigator who "says he is seeing an 'epidemic' of fraudulent marriages where foreign women marry American men, then claim domestic violence to escape the marriage and legally remain in the U.S." Since January 2009, when Sampson set up a private business in Aurora, Colorado, he's been contacted by 200 men who say they were falsely accused of domestic violence by foreign women seeking green cards, which, under the Violence Against Women Act, they can get by simply claiming abuse.

According to Sampson, "What happens is they enter into a one-sided sham marriage to defraud an American citizen into believing they love him. And once they get in, they allege domestic violence to get themselves out of the sham marriage and to throw off suspicion this was a sham marriage to begin with."

In his opinion, "It's something completely different and pernicious and vile to seek out a U.S. citizen and run a scam by them and entice them into marrying them and not only abandoning and emotionally abusing them, but falsely accusing them of a heinous act. They allege the U.S. Citizen abused them somehow and file paperwork with (the U.S. government) ... and they're here to stay. They have an ace-high flush."

For the sake of balance, Maass also interviewed Laura Lichter, a Denver immigration attorney who believes that fraud marriages involving domestic violence allegations number 1% or less.

Maass' story appeared at the CBS4 website and was the subject of a television piece.

Please contact Mr. Maass at bmaass-at-cbs.com and thank him for his coverage of the issue. Also share with him any personal anecdotes involving false allegations of domestic violence you may have. Please be brief and, as always, be polite.

++
Date of RADAR Release: June 3, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

WeMen asks "Why men hate other men so much?"

Matt · 3 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ever since I started taking active participation in men's issues and related media coverage, one question has stalked my mind like anything, "Why men hate other men so much?" The reason I ask this question is because surprisingly enough I have found stiff resistance from men about men's rights rather than women. Women, have been generally found to be understanding of the problem and empathizing barring a few radical male haters whom I anyways do not consider as women. They are just some non-males born to hate males.

Although I have talked about men's inability to communicate and men being unable to connect to their experiential domain earlier, today I will be talking about why men hate other men so much?

The counter argument to this can be, even women have more jealousies amongst themselves and this comes from the natural physiological behavioral pattern that "Opposites Attract, Likes Distract". However, there is a difference between dislike and hatred. When in hatred, you basically use your power against the hated to unleash your hatred. Currently this is happening with men.'

Men in Power reflects larger rights movement

Matt · 3 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'I was so happy to read about the student group “Men in Power” in the Chicago Tribune. Groups like this are part of a growing, global men’s rights movement that advocates for equal treatment of men in areas such as child custody, domestic violence policies, reproductive rights, criminal sentencing, public health policies, paternity laws, the draft, dating expectations, and more.

Opponents of this movement tend to reactively look only at gender disparities at the top of society (government, CEOs) while overlooking the bottom, where men account for 80 to 90 percent of homeless adults, work-related deaths, prisoners, and suicide deaths, as well as 99 percent of combat deaths and the majority of dropouts and special education students. Men also die younger and more often than women for the 10 leading causes of death.'

Brazilian judge suspends order to reunite boy, American father

Matt · 3 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (CNN) -- A Brazilian supreme court judge on Tuesday suspended a lower court's order that would have given custody of a 9-year-old boy to the U.S. Consulate in Rio de Janeiro, where he was to be reunited with his American father.

Judge Marco Aurelio argued against taking Sean Richard Goldman from what has been his home for almost five years to the United States "in an abrupt manner."

Doing so, he wrote in his order published on the court's Web site, could subject the boy to psychological harm.'

The "Impaled Ex-husband" knife-holder resurfaces

Matt · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I wasn't expecting to see it at thinkgeek.com, but here it is. Trying to get the disaffected female market? No excuse. I'll be ordering my novelty Star Trek phasers and Dr. Who sonic screwdrivers from some other merchant. You can contact them at webmonster-at-thinkgeek.com or here.

Passing exams could be child's play for boys

Mr VanHuizen · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Leading academics and policymakers have pondered long and hard about the problem of how to overcome the poor performance of boys at school.

Now it seems, according to new research published today, the answer may be quite simple – just get them to play more games and the exam passes could take care of themselves.

A study of 508 independent schools by the Independent Schools Council (ISC) reveals for the first time that there is a strong link between the amount of voluntary activities such as chess and cricket undertaken by children and their exam performance. Pupils in the top-performing schools for GCSE results took part, on average, in 50 per cent more activities than those schools at the bottom of the performance ladder. In addition, the research found, the difference in performance was more marked in boys-only schools.'

Male Rape Suspect Beaten, Mob Not Charged

SpikeRants · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

Personally, I by no means condone rape, especially of a child. However, at the time of the beating, he was only labeled a "person of interest." He is now in hospital suffering from head injuries. Why is the mob not being charged? What precedent does this set? If I'm falsely accused of rape, does that mean my entire neighborhood can swing at me with baseball bats and get off? Excerpt:

'A mob of furious neighbors of an 11-year-old girl raped on her way to school in Philadelphia won't be charged for beating a man wanted for questioning in the case.

Philadelphia Police Commissioner Charles Ramsey said Thursday that no charges will be filed against the group of about a dozen residents of the city's West Kensington section who attacked 26-year-old Jose Carrasquillo.

Carrasquillo hasn't been charged with rape but was arrested on an unrelated warrant. Ramsey said investigators have forensic evidence and witness identification placing him at the scene of Monday's attack.'

Texas Mother Charged With Feeding Her Child Feces

anthony · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Bet she cops the old Munchausen-by-Proxy Defense. We'll see if it works for her. Excerpt:

'AUSTIN, Texas — A woman in Texas has been accused of repeatedly smearing human waste on her 3-year-old daughter's intravenous feeding line, potentially causing life-threatening infections.

Emily Beth McDonald, 23, of Austin, was charged with felony injury to a child. She faces up to life in prison if convicted.

According to an arrest affidavit, a surveillance video at Dell Children's Medical Center captured McDonald on Sunday placing feces from a soiled diaper on the cap of a tube with a direct link to her child's bloodstream.

According to the affidavit, police interviewed McDonald, who allegedly confessed and said she knew that her actions could make the child severely ill and possibly even kill her. No motive was disclosed.

McDonald was released on a $100,000 bond Wednesday.

The Austin American-Statesman reported she must wear an electronic monitoring device and comply with a police protective order that prevents her from seeing her three children.'

Mom Accused of Trying to Duct Tape, Kidnap Daughter's Boyfriend

anthony · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'ADELANTO, Calif. — Authorities arrested a woman for allegedly trying to kidnap her daughter's boyfriend and haul him away to Northern California. A sheriff's spokeswoman said Tuesday that two women went to the young man's home on Saturday afternoon and tried to tie him up with duct tape.

The victim told authorities the women said they were taking him to get him away from one of the women's 21-year-old daughter. Authorities said both women were arrested on suspicion of attempted kidnapping.

Officials said the girlfriend was later arrested for investigation of dissuading a witness and extortion for allegedly trying to get her boyfriend to recant his statements on the kidnapping to authorities.'

"Does CA Need a Commission on the Status of Women? "

anthony · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2009 women are clearly full contributors to society. Ms.Wiberg, even, acknowledged substantial progress since 1965, noting that more than half of law students are now women. Would there ever come a time, however, when the Commission itself might be unnecessary?

“I would like to hope that at some time there would not be a need for this commission,” Ms. Wiberg said. Alas, that would not be any time soon because there is still a need to see issues “through a gender lens,” and the Commission, in her view, serves “a valuable function.”

To adapt a feminist slogan, California needs a Commission on the Status of Women like a fish needs a bicycle. I fail to understand how it’s a valuable function to portray women as a caste of permanent victims and essentially helpless without a government bureaucracy to speak for them. I don’t see much value in linking women’s achievements to the helping hand of Big Brother. Further, I know from experience that the kind of government health care the Commission wants will not help women.'

False rape report suspect in court

anthony · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'HOUGHTON -- The Michigan Tech student accused of filing a false rape report appeared in court Wednesday for her arraignment. A not guilty plea was entered on her behalf.

Jennifer Renee Stigers, 19, is charged with one felony count of filing a false police report which carries a maximum four-year prison sentence.

Police say they can't find Stigers in surveillance video from the date she says she was attacked in March outside the library at Michigan Tech.'

BBC: 'Gang rape' woman admits she lied

anthony · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman has admitted falsely accusing three men of raping her after video footage on a mobile phone disproved her claims.

Victoria Salter pleaded guilty to perverting the course of justice at Preston Crown Court on Wednesday.

The 26-year-old's false allegations of rape led to three men being arrested. But one of the men filmed the incident and provided mobile phone evidence.
...
She made false report in September, when she said she had been followed home by four men, three raped her while the fourth watched.

The court heard that Salter had been filmed by one of the men during the sexual encounter and she had been partaking "enthusiastically".'

Charges Dropped Against Teen Who Alleged Rape

anthony · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Charges were dropped Thursday against a Tinley Park teenager who allegedly lied about being raped after a St. Patrick's Day parade, authorities said.

Heather Krueger, 19, was accused of filing a false police report, which claimed she had been raped March 15 - the evening of the South Side Irish St. Patrick's Day Parade - in the parking lot of the 80th Avenue Tinley Park Metra station.

But she later retracted the allegation, police say.

It was a story she made up so her parents wouldn't be angry she'd got drunk at the parade, police said.

Tinley Park Police Chief Michael O'Connell said the Cook County state's attorney's office contacted him earlier this week because the case against Krueger was "unwinnable," he said.

"I'm not happy that we couldn't win the case," O'Connell said.'

Teacher faces 'sex charges'

anthony · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An I.S. 8 teacher accused of having sex with a 14-year-old student at the Jamaica middle school now waits in jail as she faces charges of statutory rape.

Melissa Weber, a social studies teacher, allegedly engaged in sexual intercourse in a second-floor classroom with the boy — the son of a PTA member — on seven separate occasions between April 13 and May 14. She was arraigned Friday on seven counts of second-degree rape, 14 counts of third-degree sexual abuse and one count of endangering the welfare of a child.
...
Bail was set at $100,000, and the judge ordered Weber to stay away from the boy if bail were to be posted. If convicted, Weber could face up to seven years in prison.

“The charges are very disturbing,” Queens District Attorney Richard Brown said in a statement. “A teacher is accused of preying on a young student who she is entrusted to teach. A classroom should always be a safe place for a child. The defendant is alleged to have destroyed her students’ trust.”'

Former teacher faces statutory rape charge

anthony · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Williston Middle School teacher already facing a criminal charge for alleged sexual contact with a 15-year-old boy was arrested again Thursday and charged with statutory rape and dissemination of harmful materials.

The new charges against Jessica Bailey Wishnask, 27, of Oak City in Martin County, stem from alleged conduct with the same boy on or before her initial arrest on May 23, said District Attorney Ben David.

Wishnask was re-arrested Thursday morning in Martin County, where she had been living, said Wilmington Police Chief Ralph Evangelous. After the arrest, Wishnask was transported to New Hanover County, where she made a first appearance in court Thursday on the new charges via teleconference from the county jail.'

Carey Roberts: Sexism rife within the Democratic Party

anthony · 4 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sadly, Democrats have become sold on the use of anti-male clichés as their short-sighted strategy to ballot-box success.

Here's Hillary Clinton in 2005: "Research shows the presence of women raises the standards of ethical behavior and lowers corruption." Remember the quip she made about "evil and bad men" made at an Iowa campaign stop? And in New Hampshire, she commented, "I don't know about you, but I like seeing women in charge." (Just imagine the ruckus if candidate John McCain had proclaimed, "I don't know about you, but I like seeing white men in charge.")

Consider Democratic pols like Nancy Pelosi who express misandrist put-downs that range from the haughty ("I didn't come to Congress to change the attitudes of men.") to the imperious ("By electing a woman Speaker, my colleagues turned the old system upside down.")
...
The reason for all this, of course, is the Democratic Party has morphed into the political arm of the National Organization for Women. Democratic candidates casually make sham claims that paint men as ogres and tyrants: "women in the workplace are victims of wage discrimination," "wives suffer from an epidemic of domestic violence," "females were routinely excluded from medical research," and so forth.'

Gender and heritage a frequent topic for Sotomayor

Matt · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – Sonia Sotomayor told the Senate on Thursday that the White House never questioned her about cases or issues she might have to decide as a Supreme Court justice, a disclosure gleaned from reams of documents that reveal she has spoken repeatedly about how her gender and Latina heritage affect her judging.

The federal appeals court judge divulged new details about her finances and provided three decades of writings, speeches and rulings that give both supporters and critics fresh fodder for the coming debate on her confirmation. They include more instances in which she said she hopes a "wise Latina" would reach a better decision than a man without that experience.

The comments in 2002 and 2003 echo a much-criticized remark she made in 2001 at the University of California-Berkeley law school that has prompted a furor among conservatives who say they suggest President Barack Obama's first Supreme Court nominee brings a personal bias to her legal decisions.

Obama has said he is "sure she would have restated it." In fact, she said it almost precisely the same way in speeches to the Princeton Club in 2002 and one at Seton Hall law school in 2003, according to copies she sent the Senate.'

Has feminism made women unhappy?

anthony · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of these days, women really ought to make up their minds about what it is exactly they want. Then they could do us all a big favour by stating, unequivocally, what they have decided it is they want. And then they could cover themselves with glory by sticking to what they say.

In other words, it's about time women - especially their self-appointed mouthpieces - started behaving like fully grown-up adults and citizens. Or is that asking too much? Apparently, it is.

A survey published this week tells us that women today are far from happy with their lot and wish they could live more like their mothers and grandmothers - not having to work so much and free to spend more time with their children.
...
Men don't go on about it, but the truth is that things aren't entirely wonderful for us, either. The difference is that we don't suppose we've got a God-given right to blame women for it.'

India pledges women-only seats in national and state parliaments

anthony · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'India's new Congress-led coalition government is to press for a radical new law to reserve a third of the elected seats in parliament and in state legislatures for women.

The government has also pledged to introduce a bill which will set aside half the seats in elected village councils and city municipalities for women. At present only a third of the seats in village councils are kept exclusively for women.

India's first woman president, Pratibha Patil, announced the ground-breaking steps at the opening session of the new parliament in Delhi today. She also promised on behalf of prime minister Manmohan Singh's re-elected government that more women would be employed by the central government.

A National Mission on Empowerment of Women will also be set up to implement "women-centred" welfare programmes.

"My government will initiate steps within the next hundred days on these measures," she said.'

The Labour WAGs: The Blair Babes who became the Women Against Gordon

anthony · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"And of course never forget that behind this great female mutiny is the fact that one person in the Labour Party likely to benefit from Brown's downfall is Harriet Harman - perhaps Labour's greatest busybody social engineer.

It was Harman who helped inspire New Labour's politically correct, pro-women agenda which resulted in a series of new laws of social engineering.

Her particular obsessions were women's rights, equality bills and campaign for a new 'social order'. However, her key triumph, the Equalities Bill, was condemned by many, not least because it harked back to many of the right-on, class and gender-war issues of the bad old days of the 1980s Labour wilderness.

Public-sector job applicants to be vetted on their class background; gender pay audits; freedom of breastfeeding. Business leaders, already facing a ruinous slump, threw up their hands in despair.

Almost two decades ago, Harman was a co-author (along with Patricia Hewitt) of a controversial social policy pamphlet called The Family Way. It was described by the battered wives campaigner Erin Pizzey as a 'staggering attack on men and their role in modern life'."

Relatedly: Drunk on power, the third-rate WAGs...

Sotomayor's a member of a womens-only group

anthony · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor last year accepted an invitation the Belizean Grove, an elite but little-known women's-only group.
...
The group – which on its website describes itself as "a constellation of influential women who are key decision makers in the profit, non-profit and social sectors; who build long term mutually beneficial relationships in order to both take charge of their own destinies and help others to do the same" – hosts periodic meetings around New York, as well as an annual off-the-record three-day retreat in Central or South America at which its members attend cocktail parties with U.S. diplomats and host-country officials and participate in panel discussions on public-policy and business affairs.'

UK: New women-only gym opens in Nelson

anthony · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A NEW gym which caters solely for women has opened its doors in Pendle.

Owner Kate Turner said membership numbers were growing and many women had commented on the relaxed, friendly atmosphere as they were shaping up for summer with the help of experienced and supportive staff.

She explained that the gym provided a new concept in fitness, with members completing a 30-minute "circuit" comprising a three-minute warm-up, three-minute exercises on a selection of femnale-friendly resistance machines and then three minutes of stretches at the end - hence the name "In and Out"!'

New York Times: Debate on Whether Female Judges Decide Differently Arises Anew

anthony · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judge Judith S. Kaye, who was the chief judge of New York State for 16 years until her recent retirement, said she had long avoided engaging others on the question. “I struggled with it for the 25 years I served as a judge,” Judge Kaye said.

But she said she had ultimately come to terms with defending the idea that women judges will, at times, see things differently. “To defend the idea that women come out different on some cases, I just feel it,” Judge Kaye said.

“I feel it to the depths of my soul,” she added, because a woman’s experiences are “just different.”
...
The most prominent and recent academic study comparing male and female judges found that female judges were more likely than males to decide in favor of plaintiffs who alleged sex discrimination at the workplace. But the study, an unpublished paper by Christina L. Boyd, Lee Epstein and Andrew D. Martin, found no difference in cases involving disability law, environmental issues and capital punishment.'

In addition, the study said female judges might exert their influence in cases that were decided by multijudge federal appeals panels.'

UK: The future is female – how women are transforming face of the health service

anthony · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A quiet sexual revolution, brought about by the overwhelming success of bright young women applying to medical schools, is about to deliver the NHS into female hands. Within eight years, according to a report published today, most doctors will be women.

The old medical patriarchy has left, retired, gone underground or been forced to change its views.
...
The review was triggered by remarks from the first female president of the Royal College of Physicians, Dame Carol Black, which sparked a furore. She warned that the domination of medicine by women would end with the profession losing power and influence.

"We are feminising medicine. It has been a profession dominated by white males. What are we going to have to do to ensure it retains its influence? she said in 2004.

"Years ago, teaching was a male-dominated profession – and look what happened to teaching. I don't think they feel they are a powerful profession any more. Look at nursing, too."'

3 years in prison for foster mother convicted of manslaughter.

the_captain · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Edmonton foster mother, convicted of manslaughter in the death of a child in her care, was sentenced Thursday to three years in prison, with two months' credit given for the time she spent in remand.

A jury convicted the woman, 34, in November. She cannot be named under Alberta child protection legislation in order to protect the identity of the child, who also cannot be named.

The toddler died in January 2007 of a massive brain injury sustained when his skull hit part of a toilet bowl.

Court of Queen's Bench Justice Richard Marceau delivered his decision in a courtroom packed with the friends of the foster mother and relatives and friends of the dead child's family.

After going through all the medical evidence presented by both sides in the case, the judge said he had enough reasonable doubt about how the boy came to hit his head on the toilet bowl to give the benefit of doubt to the accused. He described the fatality as closer to being a "near-accident" than a "near-murder."

Other factors were taken into account in coming to the decision, Marceau said. He felt the woman was under too much stress and had taken on too much work by caring for four foster children at one point.'

What a surprise that comments are closed to this article.

Female Teacher Incarcerated for Rape Still Getting Paid

anthony · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- Former teacher Charlene Schmitz is behind bars in a federal detention center in Tallahassee, Florida, serving 10 years for using texts and instant messages to seduce a 14-year-old student.

She has been fired from her job as a reading teacher at the high school in Leroy, Alabama.

But she is still collecting a paycheck.

Schmitz is appealing her federal conviction -- and her firing. State charges filed in connection with the case are pending. Under the law in Alabama, she is still entitled to her $51,000-a-year salary while she appeals her firing.

School officials are not happy that they now have to pay both Schmitz and her replacement. But her attorney says they must obey the law.

On Valentine's Day 2008, a jury found Schmitz guilty of two federal charges of enticing a child by electronic means, and she received the 10-year sentence. Three weeks after her conviction, the school board sent the tenured reading teacher a notice of its intent to terminate her. The school board officially fired Schmitz at a meeting in late March.'

Sotomayor's Questionnaire Delivered to Senate

anthony · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'The White House delivered Judge Sonia Sotomayor's questionnaire to the Senate Judiciary Committee Thursday as her nomination to the Supreme Court continued to trigger a larger debate about gender and the judicial process.

And as committee members parse through the 173-pages of documentation, controversy swirls surrounding past comments made by the federal appellate judge relating to gender and ethnicity.

...

These newly revealed comments appear as part of a recurring theme in Sotomayor's speech-giving history and only fuel the debatSandra Day O'Connor, the court's first woman justice, didn't believe it did.

...

"I can't see, on the issues that we address at the court, that a wise old woman is going to decide a case differently than a wise old man," O'Connor said.

But Sotomayor has specifically said she doesn't agree with O'Connor and that women, because of their experiences, are better.

"Better," Sotomayor said in that same 1994 speech, "will mean a more compassionate and caring conclusion."'

Police: Woman Moved, Left Son Behind

Matt · 5 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NORCROSS, Ga. -- A Norcross mother is accused of leaving her 7-year-old son alone for more than two weeks.

Police said Precious Walker, 23, packed up and moved from Smyrna to Norcross on May 4 without the boy. Police charged her with child neglect.

Walker told CBS Atlanta on Thursday that it did not happen.

"All of it just lies, all of it just lies. I'm just trying to get my lawyer and sue whomever I can sue," Walker said.'

New User Accounts Temporarily Disabled

Scott · 6 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I need to temporarily disable the creation of new user accounts on MANN until I find time to fully resolve the spam problem we've been having recently. This may take up to a week to fix, so bear with me. Thanks!

Update 6/13: In the meantime if you would like to create a user account you can send us an email at newaccounts@mensactivism.org with a requested username and we can create your account manually. Do not send us a requested password - we will generate one for you manually and you can change it after you log in for the first time.

Out-of-work bachelors struggle in dating game

anthony · 6 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men have been hit much harder than women by this recession. Close to 80 percent of the job losses since December 2007 were jobs held by men, according to economics expert Mark J. Perry, who analyzed Bureau of Labor Statistics data. April unemployment was a seasonally adjusted 10 percent for men and 7.6 percent for women.

For some guys, unemployment is the last thing they want to reveal to a potential date. Even if men aren't expected to pay for a date, they feel pressure from women who are looking for someone who is financially stable.

"A lot of men are very careful not to say, 'I'm unemployed,'" said Pepper Schwartz, chief relationship expert at Perfectmatch.com. "They say, 'I'm working on this project. I'm taking a sabbatical from work' or 'You heard of GM declaring bankruptcy? I worked there.' They find ways to make it sound like it's not permanent."'

Relatedly: Women are victors in ‘mancession’

UK: Girls will take up 70 per cent of university places, says new study

anthony · 6 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite the mounting evidence of inequality, ministers and education quangos are doing little to address the problem because they are afraid of being accused of favouring boys, according to a major report by the Higher Education Policy Instititue.

Nearly half of young women, 49.2 per cent, are now enrolled in university, compared to just 37.8 per cent of men aged 17 to 30. The figure for white boys from deprived backgrounds is just 6.4 per cent. In 2008, 47,000 more women than men were accepted on to degree courses, up from 28,000 more in 2005.
...
The gender inequality in university participation now is greater than the reverse inequality over 30 years ago, " said Bahram Bekhradnia, director of the institute and co-author of the report. "But there is a mindset generally that girls are the disadvantaged group not boys. While this might still be true of society as a whole, it is emphatically no longer true in higher education."

ABC's Cokie Roberts Agrees With Sotomayor: Women Are Better

anthony · 6 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cokie Roberts appeared on Friday's "Good Morning America" and agreed with Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor's 1994 comment that a wise woman would come to a better conclusion than a man. Roberts, cheered, "Of course, I would agree with her that they're better." Fellow ABC journalist Sam Donaldson empathized that if the judge made a mistake, "it was a Joe Biden problem. She blurted out the truth."
...
DIANE SAWYER: All right. Our thanks to you, Jan. A discussion to have around the breakfast table. And so, we're bringing in our two favorites, ABC's Cokie Roberts and Sam Donaldson, for just this discussion. Okay, Cokie. She didn't say women are different in making decisions. She said better. Can she get away with that?

COKIE ROBERTS: Well, she's having to backtrack on it. Of course, I would agree with her that they're better.
...

DAVID MUIR: Here we go.

ROBERTS: That the truth is- the truth is that there is a difference. And is the difference better in the case of a sex discrimination case? Not only do I think it's better, I think it's more rational...
But, look. You go before these big women's groups. And, Diane, I'm sure you've done it. I've certainly done it many times. And you do say things that kind of rev up the crowd and get women excited. And one of those things that you do say is that women are better than men.'

Brooklyn: Ridge Road woman arrested for false rape report... et al.

anthony · 6 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FALSIFICATION, RIDGE ROAD: A 45-year-old Ridge Road woman faces charges for filing a false police report after she told officers May 28 that an acquaintance raped her in her apartment. The woman was taken to Fairview Hospital where she later admitted that no attack occurred. Police interviewed the man who said the woman offered him sex in exchange for drugs and alcohol.

FELONY ASSAULT, WESTBROOK DRIVE: A 23-year-old Westbrook Drive woman faces felony assault charges after she sliced her boyfriend on the chin with a two-inch knife. The woman told police that her boyfriend had assaulted her and she used the knife in self defense. But investigators found no evidence to substantiate her claim. The boyfriend, a 24-year-old man, said the two were arguing over whether or not the woman would attend the Cleveland Cavaliers game that night. '

Ex-teacher arrested twice on sex charges involving teen

anthony · 6 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Wilmington, N.C. — A former teacher in New Hanover and Pitt counties was arrested Thursday on sex charges involving a 15-year-old boy for the second time in two weeks.

According an arrest report, a police officer caught Jessica Bailey Wishnask, 27, having "intimate contact" with the boy in a 2003 Pontiac Grand Am parked at 200 N. Fifth St. in Wilmington at 3:49 a.m. May 23.

The officer arrested Wishnask and charged her with taking indecent liberties with a minor. Wishnask, who has addresses listed in Leland in New Hanover County and Oak City in Martin County, was released under a $40,000 secured bond.'

Who is fighting for men's rights?

anthony · 6 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This family law system is a joke. It should have been called the Flawed Family Law System. In my opinion, this is a predatory system in which women use the divorce laws as a legalized vehicle for harassment against men. What gives me the right to have total power and control over his life until our children are no longer considered "children of marriage?"
...
I have been in touch with several men's groups in Canada and I am a proud member of Fathers 4 Justice Canada. I have read literally hundreds of e-mails from men reaching their hands out of the gutters of life to simply come up to a living standard that you and your other female activists would call hell on earth.

Where are the politicians? They fund women's rights groups but what about men's rights? This abuse of justice against men in Canada and around the world makes a mockery of everyone. How sad for our children.

Once a society knows that an injustice is being done, we have a moral, ethical and spiritual obligation to address the problem. I ask you why are we ignoring men's rights in Canada?

The media and government should be ashamed. You know that this problem exists. Please do what's right rather than what's easy. Be a voice for fathers and their children.'

Cambridge celebrates men’s health month

anthony · 6 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Cambridge — The Cambridge Public Health Department and community partners will host a series of events in June to celebrate Men’s Health Month.

“American men are experiencing a silent health crisis,” said Claude-Alix Jacob, the city’s chief public health officer and director of the public health department. Jacob said men have higher rates of death than women for heart disease, cancer, chronic lower respiratory diseases, and HIV/AIDS. They are also more likely than women to die in a car crash, commit suicide, or suffer a fatal workplace injury.

“Despite the grim statistics, the good news is that men can take some simple actions — like eating better, exercising more, and making routine visits to the doctor — that can help improve their health,” Jacob said.'

UK: GCSEs blamed for boys not going to university

anthony · 7 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tens of thousands of boys who ought to be capable of succeeding at university never make it because of school exams, according to a report today.

The Higher Education Policy Institute report suggests that GCSEs, introduced in 1988 in place of O-levels, appear to favour girls because of the style of teaching, content and types of question. The exams are the "most likely cause" of an achievement gap between the sexes that starts at school but carries on into adulthood, it concludes. The result is that men are less likely to go to university and less likely to do well when they get there.

"I think we are in danger of creating an underclass," Professor Bahram Bekhradnia, institute director and co-author of the report, writes in today's Observer. "Higher education brings social benefits as well as academic ones. If you have been to university, you tend to be in better physical and mental health. It has a terrific socialising effect and, by not going to university in such large numbers, men are being deprived of that. I think it is a real shame."'

"How feminism has made men’s lives safer — and women’s more dangerous"

Matt · 7 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Read this for your daily dose of bizarre-o-writings from the Land of Feminist Bloggers. Excerpt:

'Feminism, real or imagined, has long been praised and blamed for a whole pile of societal developments, crises and trends. But it has emerged recently in unlikely quarters: as a major factor in the "intimate" murders of women and as a saving grace in the lives of abusive men. In a devastating twist, feminism, while improving women’s lives in many obvious ways, may also have made their lives more dangerous. At the same time, by offering escape and support to battered women, it has saved the lives of abusive men.

Much has been made of the fact that, in the past 20 years, the number of homicides in the United States has sharply declined. That is good news, especially for abusive husbands, who, statistics show, are living longer because their wives and girlfriends are taking advantage of shelters, hotlines and other services for battered women. In other words, feminists have invested decades fighting domestic violence as part of the battle for women’s rights and their work has paid off — by keeping batterers alive.

But there is bad news too. Only one category of homicide has failed to decline at the same rate as the rest. In fact, in some regions, it has not declined at all. It is "intimate homicide," in which a man kills his girlfriend or wife, often murdering the rest of the family too. In about one-quarter of the killings, the man then kills himself.
...

Women’s increased status and independence also have had an impact on their ability to leave abusive spouses and boyfriends, says Richard Rosenfeld, professor of criminology at the University of Missouri, St. Louis, and Dugan’s co-author on the 50-city domestic violence study. Women today have higher incomes, education levels and workforce participation than they did 25 years ago. This allows them to leave abusive men they might have otherwise killed. Marriage rates, too, have significantly declined, allowing unsuitable mates in the volatile under-30 age bracket to split up before their differences turn into violence.'

Newborn dies, mother found dead in crawl space; woman charged

anthony · 7 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A 28-year-old Oregon woman has been charged with murder after the body of a new mother was found in the crawl space of her home.

Rescue crews first went to Korena Roberts' home in Washington County on Friday in response to a call of a newborn in distress. They found Roberts' boyfriend unsuccessfully trying to revive the baby using first-aid techniques.

Roberts told deputies the baby was hers, the county sheriff's office said. Medics noticed a lot of blood at the home, and sent Roberts and the baby to a hospital.

"Doctors at the hospital were not able to revive the baby," said Sgt. David Thompson of the Washington County Sheriff's Office in a news release. "They also discovered that Ms. Roberts had not delivered a child at anytime in the recent past."
...
An autopsy will now determine how the baby was delivered, and whether he died before or after birth, Thompson said.

The outcome could result in another murder charge for Roberts, deputies said.'

UK: Maybe men are now the underdog sex

anthony · 8 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So is it good news or bad news that more women than men are going to university? The feminist approach is obvious: if it wasn't a problem when men outnumbered women in higher education, why should it be when it's the other way round?

...

Of course, you can have too much of a good thing, but I just don't believe people like Caroline Flint when they talk, as she did in a Sunday newspaper, about what a burden it is being female – and, sotto voce, good-looking – in the male-dominated world of politics. I bet she would not like it if we didn't look twice at her because she was in a majority of females, among commentators as well as MPs.

...

By rights this should put feminism out of business. But it won't. It would take too much of a shift in our prejudices to see boys as the problem, disadvantaged sex. Perhaps that's because it doesn't suit either men or women to do so.'

Science Blog: What about the boys?

anthony · 8 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to Judith Kleinfeld, boys get the raw deal. Compared with girls, American boys have lower rates of literacy, lower grades and engagement in school, higher drop-out from school, and dramatically higher rates of suicide, premature death, injuries, and arrests. Boys are also placed more often in special education. Girls on the other hand are more likely to have different problems including depression, suicidal thoughts and eating disorders.

The researcher argues that although there have been numerous federal, state, school district, and foundation programs aimed at addressing issues faced by girls, led in part by the strong feminist movement, the same cannot be said for the problems encountered by boys. In her view, they have been largely neglected.'

Police time is wasted, taxes spent and justice abused from false claims

anthony · 8 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Springfield area has seen its share of high-profile police manhunts triggered by lies. Sadly, some of the false statements have also included claims of brutal sexual assault. Neighbors fret, innocent people get questioned, and police waste expensive time.

Yet, when the fraud is exposed, little or no penalty seems to come to the liar.

More should be done to try to combat this problem.

Obviously, it cannot be eradicated. But we encourage local criminal justice officials to discuss the possibility of advocating an increase in the penalty for false reports -- at least the kind that trigger a great expense or result in wrongful arrests.'

'Will I lose my teaching job because I had sex with one of my pupils?'

anthony · 8 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Exchange here. Excerpt:

'Dear Miriam,

I'm a 27-year-old married woman and a teacher. Last month, I had a one-night stand with a pupil. He's 18 and very mature for his age.
...
Now I hear there are rumours circulating around the school about us and I'm having kittens the head teacher will get wind of it. What can I do?
Erin

Dear Erin,
This is a serious breach of professional ethics as well as a betrayal of your husband, which is likely to have serious consequences for you.

Your drunken sex romp may well have sabotaged your professional future and your marriage. It seems likely you're living on borrowed time. Clearly, the boy has bragged to someone and it may only be a matter of time before the gossip spreads uncontrollably.'

Sheriff: Michigan man comes home to find wife killed 2 sons, then herself

Michael · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A Michigan sheriff says a Lansing-area woman apparently killed her two young sons before committing suicide.

Eaton County Sheriff Mike Raines says the woman's husband called 911 and said he returned to the family's home at Plum Tree Apartments Monday afternoon and found the three bodies. He says detectives were questioning the husband.

Raines didn't release the names or ages of the woman and her children or say how they died. He says the three were taken to Sparrow Hospital for autopsies.

The sheriff says the deaths appear to be a murder-suicide, but that the case is still under investigation.'

RADAR ALERT: Wednesday's VAWA Senate Hearing - Say No To a Dog-and-Pony Show

Matt · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The Violence Against Women Act was passed in 1994 with the laudable intention of solving the problem of domestic violence. Unfortunately the law has numerous flaws, including[1]:

1. VAWA programs have been ineffective in reducing partner abuse, and in some ways have placed victims at greater risk of violence.
2. VAWA undermines basic notions of civil liberties and the presumption of innocence.
3. VAWA programs have had a disproportionate negative effect on minority and low-income populations.
4. VAWA undermines the family, escalates partner conflict, and discourages reconciliation.
5. VAWA fosters sex-based discrimination.
6. VAWA promotes half-truths, myths, and falsehoods about domestic violence.
7. VAWA encourages immigration fraud.
8. VAWA programs lack accountability and allow wasteful use of taxpayer dollars.

F&F Action Alert: Defend Judge Who Denied Woman Restraining Order Based on False Charges!

Matt · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Alert here. Excerpt:

'Fathers & Families is often critical of family law judges. Given the anti-father bias in the system and the lack of respect many judges display towards fathers' loving bonds with their children, this criticism is appropriate. However, we also feel it is important to comment judges when they do the right thing, and we've done so on countless occasions.

One of the many judges Fathers & Families has defended is conscientious Virginia judge James Michael Shull. It's a long story, but it's an instructive one, and we'd like your action on the matter.

n December, 2006 Shull smoked out a woman who sought to extend a restraining order based on false charges of domestic violence, and was removed from the bench for his actions in the case in 2007.

I have examined the evidence in this case and it is clear to me that Shull was railroaded. He was also the victim of widely-disseminated misleading reporting.'

MSN propagates: "Men Are Pigs"

Matt · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Happy June! More importantly, happy Ryan's-Dating-Sabbatical-Is-Over! I don't have any dates lined up yet, but that's OK because one of my romantic resolutions is to go with the flow. The only real prospect on my horizon is an attractive young lady who messaged me on Nerve a few days ago. I would probably reply if it weren't for one crucial detail:

She's 21. To put that in perspective, when I was a senior in high school she was a sixth grader (which is the official yard stick for measuring age differences in the dating world). To be honest, I don't think I could get over such a significant age gap, which definitely puts me in the male minority. I know tons of guys who only have eyes for significantly younger women. What is it they like so much about younger women? Here are a few ideas:
...
4. Men Are Pigs. You already know I find older women extremely attractive, and I'm certainly not the only one. But it's simply a fact of nature that there are certain physical, um, perks to dating younger women.

Never fear, what's good for the goose is good for the gander — check out these celebrity women who date younger men. And here's a handy trick for figuring out if a guy is too old for you.'

The author, aside from being a self-hating man, works for Glamour magazine as their "dating blogger". Glamour's contact form is here.

Woman accused in rape of neighbor boy has charges dropped

Michael · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The case against a 30-year-old Salt Lake County woman accused of raping a 13-year-old neighbor boy came to an abrupt halt Monday after a witness gave prosecutors additional information that did not support the boy's story.

The dismissal came after attorneys and 3rd District Judge Vernice Trease spent the morning selecting a jury to hear the evidence against Catherine Cates, who was charged with four counts of first-degree felony rape of a child and one count of second-degree felony sexual abuse of a child.

...

The boy's mother said she does not understand why prosecutors had not presented the case to a jury, despite changes in the roommate's testimony.

"[The roommate] actually walked in and caught the two of them [having sex]," the woman said.

Alicia Cook, spokeswoman for the Salt Lake County District Attorneys Office, called the roommate "a neutral witness" who provided last-minute details that were "contradictory to what victim was saying."'

Veteran LAPD detective faces 1986 murder charges

Matt · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOS ANGELES – A veteran police officer accused of killing her ex-boyfriend's wife in 1986 rose through the ranks of the Police Department for two decades, even as the victim's father pleaded with police to investigate her.

On Tuesday, Stephanie Lazarus will face a judge on charges that she bit, beat and shot Sherri Rasmussen after breaking into her condominium 23 years ago.

Lazarus, 49, could be sentenced to death if convicted of Rasmussen's murder.'

Woman's Rape Charge Proves False

anthony · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Tippah County woman could face jail time for crying rape when it never really happened.

The initial report put law officers in at least two counties on alert and ran up huge investigative bills, until the victim recanted.

Investigators won't identify the woman but they have a lot to say about the seriousness of the false claim.

The rape report, a few weeks ago, put every law officer in Tippah County, and a few from out out of town on the streets to look for suspects.

Crimestoppers offered a $6,000 reward.

Investigators had just one problem, the report was a lie.

"Just a classic case of the shepherd boy crying wolf. Everybody came to the rescue," said District Attorney Ben Creekmore.'

Sussex student teacher in sex scandal seeks admittance into pretrial intervention program

anthony · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FRANKFORD -- The state is awaiting the results of DNA tests as it proceeds with charges against a former elementary school teacher accused of sexual encounters with one of her students, an assistant county attorney said today.
During a brief pre-indictment conference in Superior Court in Newton, Sussex County Assistant Prosecutor Francis Koch also told Judge N. Peter Conforti that the defendant, Lindsay Massaro, has applied early for entry into the pretrial intervention program.
...
Entry into the PTI program, a probationary program for nonviolent, first-time offenders that's a part of many plea agreements, requires approval from the prosecutor's office.
...
Massaro was charged with second-degree sexual assault, third-degree endangering the welfare of a minor and fourth-degree criminal sexual contact. The second-degree charge carries a possible 10-year prison sentence.'

UK: Why boys can't keep up with the girls

anthony · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But the sheer weight of numbers suggests that it must be only a matter of time before hierarchical professions such as medicine and law are "feminised" – and hopefully for the better. Could it be that the downturn in the economy places an even higher premium on good degrees in the jobs marketplace, enabling more women to launch careers that go all the way to the top? Could it be that future female leaders smash the male-dominated networks that cling onto power so successfully, limiting social mobility in the UK? It will certainly take more than a decade for this to happen.

However, we must not lose sight of the stark underperformance of boys – particularly those from the poorest backgrounds. There are deep-rooted cultural forces at play – a "macho anti-intellectualism" that surfaces particularly during early secondary school. The need for role models is absolutely key. More dads in the primary school classroom would help to combat negative stereotypes of those who do well at school – early in children's lives.'

Study: Boys' school issues neglected

anthony · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FAIRBANKS, Alaska, June 9 (UPI) -- Both boys and girls have learning issues, but those affecting boys in school are more serious and have been neglected, a U.S. researcher says.

Judith Kleinfeld of the University of Alaska in Fairbanks, reviewed gender differences in literacy levels, college entrance tests, school grades, engagement in school, dropout rates, as well mental health, suicide, depression and conduct disorders.

The study, published in the journal Gender Issues, found that compared with girls, U.S. boys have lower rates of literacy, lower grades and engagement in school and higher drop-out rates. The boys also had dramatically higher rates of suicide, premature death, injuries, and arrests, and were also placed more often in special education.'

Wrong man attacked in vigilante injustice

anthony · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:
'

"Out of nowhere, I just start getting hit with sticks; I get hit with a baseball bat on my back. I was just getting stomped, I was just getting beat up for at least 45 seconds before I knew what was going on," Zenquis said.

It wasn't until then that he knew why he was being pummeled when someone yelled, 'You raped that little girl!.'

"I kept yelling, I'm innocent, I didn't do anything, I don't know what's going on," Zenquis said. "They were just calling me, 'Rapist! You deserve to die!' They were saying, 'Kill him, kill him!', and it was just too much.
...
Police officers took him to the hospital and then the special victims unit, where detectives realized he was not the guy they were looking for and let him go. He says he feels terrible for the little girl that was raped and understands the anger people felt, but:

"They shouldn't have took the law into their own hands, ok? Because look, they got the wrong guy. What if they would have killed me? Then what?" Zenquis said.'

Men rewarded in rape suspect's capture

anthony · 9 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two Kensington men each received a $5,750 reward yesterday for their roles in the capture of Jose Carrasquillo, 26, who allegedly raped an 11-year-old girl on her way to school Monday morning.

"These guys stepped up to the plate," said Fraternal Order of Police President John McNesby, adding that $1,500 of the reward money was donated by a private citizen. "It shows it really hit the community hard. It's a good feeling [to know] he's off the street."

Investigators determined that two men from the mob of Carrasquillo's attackers, Fernando Genval and David Vargas, should receive the reward, McNesby said.
...
In response to controversy surrounding the beating of Carrasquillo before he was charged, McNesby said the FOP does not condone vigilantism, but that he has no problem with how Carrasquillo was apprehended.'

UK: Nursery school worker charged with sex offences

Anonymous · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Plymouth, UK: A nursery school worker was today charged with seven offences, including sexual assault and distributing indecent images of children.

Vanessa George, 39, from Plymouth, is accused of four offences of sexual assault and one count each of making, possessing and distributing indecent images of children. George is in custody at Charles Cross police station, where she will be detained until she appears before Plymouth magistrates court tomorrow.
...
Police were continuing to speak to staff at the Little Teds nursery in Plymouth and the parents of children who attend the centre. Police have not said whether the allegations relate to children at the nursery.
...
George is understood to have worked at the unit for around two to three years as a member of the 15-strong staff.'

'We are the girls ...?'

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The University of Florida might want to rename its traditional game-day pep song "We Are the Girls From Old Florida."

Since 1998, female students have outnumbered males on the UF campus. Next year's incoming freshman class is expected to be 60 percent female - the highest level ever.

Nationally, women have long outnumbered men in college classrooms. In fact, UF is actually behind the trend and ranks last among state universities in the percentage of female students.
...
The growing gender imbalance is "not a healthy situation," he said. He links the trend to a growing incarceration rate in the U.S. and an increasing number of men committing suicide.

He calls for changing the way in which boys are educated. Boys learn through a more active, hands-on learning style than girls, he said. Mischief-making boys are treated as criminals or sent to special education classes, he said.

"Boys aren't allowed to be boys today," he said. "They're treated as defective girls."'

Woman booked with filing false reports

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JENNINGS, La. (AP) - A Lake Arthur woman has been booked with filing false police reports and theft after she admitted to making up separate rape and armed robbery claims.
...
Cassidy said the charges resulted from Thibodeaux alleged false complaint of a rape at the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Jennings last November and an alleged false complaint of armed robbery at the Dollar General store in Lake Arthur in January.'

Canada: Mixed reviews for women-only hotel floors

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What makes a hotel floor female friendly, you might wonder? Forty levels up on the Chopard Floor at the swanky Jumeirah Emirates Towers in Dubai, you'll be coddled and catered to by a strictly female staff and bed down in an oversized pink satin duvet and silky sheets. You can practise your sun salutations in the privacy of your oversized luxury suite with the provided yoga mat and DVD. If you've forgotten your anti-aging night cream, dip into the fully stocked cosmetic bar in your room while you prepare to face the day in your silk kimono.
...
Online comments on the topic peg women's opinions somewhere between being impressed and insulted. One reader on bettertravel.com had this to say about the topic: "No! Absolutely not! I have no interest in paying to be pandered to with any of those women-specific 'amenities.' " Another reader on the same site said: "Yes, in certain circumstances, and in certain countries, I would find this a welcome perk. I have been in countries where I am stared at as a solo female business traveller, and feel very uncomfortable."'

Murder, womb-cutting not so uncommon for women who'll stop at nothing

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While members of the psychiatric community were quick to point out that each case is different, they were just as fast in identifying a common thread: "a desperate longing for a child combined with either psychopathic tendencies or a psychotic break, which creates a delusional belief that an infant must be claimed, at any cost, to be 'returned' to its 'rightful' mother.

The case of Lisa Montgomery details the delusional belief from which some women suffer. Montgomery, who was 36 at the time and the mother of two teenagers, was charged – in 2004 - with a kidnapping that resulted in murder.
...
Some women feel that the ability to be pregnant and give birth is very essential to being a successful woman," Dr. Gail Saltz, an associate professor of psychiatry at New York Presbyterian Hospital, told the New York Times in 2004. "The inability to maintain a pregnancy can be devastating. Add fluctuating hormones, and you can have someone who develops a post-partum depression and a psychosis that could drive them to do completely out-of-character, irrational things."

Commenting on the Lisa Montgomery case, Dr. Jack Gorman, of the department of psychiatry at Mount Sinai School of Medicine, said: "In these cases a woman might have a delusion that 'that's my baby in that woman, she's stolen it, and if I don't rescue it she's going to kill it', and the motivation is so overwhelming that you just lose contact with reality."

UK: 'Women never forget, Gordon. So watch out'

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman scorned is a dangerous thing. Hell hath no fury to match her menace.What hope for Gordon escaping the poisoned darts shot by women who have abandoned him? None whatsoever.

A woman overlooked, scorned and set adrift is a loose canon fully loaded and fizzing. At some stage she'll go off with an almighty bang. Then she'll reload and fire again.

Gordon Brown should be digging an underground shelter right now. He's surrounded by dangerous women – and they all have his soft, tender bits in their sights. They want his career and his reputation. And boy, are they on course to claim them.
...

Worse still, they are armed to the teeth with the kind of secrets that can cause the most pain. As any woman knows, the definition of a secret is something that should be kept closely confidential until it becomes irresistibly useful. These ladies have oodles of them.

Margaret Thatcher knew that, which is why she never kept women close, nor even gave any a job. Men, she realised, were much more easily managed. She took the easy option.
...
How long, one wonders, will it be before Harriet Harman joins them? Watch her face, as she sits at the side of her leader during Prime Minister's Questions. No guffaws and hoo-has from Harriet, no obedient nodding at his every word of dubious, wriggling wisdom.
...
Gordon's old girls are growing more angry by the day. They're nowhere near finished with him yet. Their ammunition is building and their target practice is damned near perfect.'

NYC mayor seeks to soften image at women's event

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (AP) — Mayor Michael Bloomberg, who's sometimes perceived as cold and unfriendly, sought to warm up his image at an event with women voters on Monday.
...
The Bloomberg campaign, which just released new television ads featuring testimonials from prominent women supporters focusing on issues such as reproductive health access, domestic abuse and schools, insisted the event was not invite-only. Invited people were allowed to bring guests, spokeswoman Jill Hazelbaker said.'

University reinstates women's team and drops men's after court action

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Four days after a federal judge issued a temporary injunction that barred Quinnipiac University from cutting the women's volleyball team, the school changed course Tuesday and reinstated the program.

But while keeping the program in the face of a Title IX lawsuit, Quinnipiac said that it was cutting the men's indoor track team. The school had previously eliminated men's outdoor track and golf because of budgetary concerns.
...
Andrew Schneider, the ACLU's executive director, said testimony showed that Quinnipiac could have achieved its budget cuts without eliminating programs, so he was critical of the decision to cut men's indoor track.

"Today's decision ... is a false choice that unnecessarily pits men athletes against women athletes," Schneider said in a statement.
...
It's devastating," said Peg Sullivan of Ellington. "I think that they're all shocked, from the coaches to the players. They didn't see it coming. The worst part for me, as a parent, is that he loves the school. He loves the team. This is taking two-thirds of their season. And I don't think they really understand the mechanics of why."'

Boys 2 Men Conference will try to 'stop the bleeding'

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a gang and want to get out? Hooked on drugs? Mean to your parents? Afraid you have AIDS? Barred from visiting your child?

"You need to come to the Boys 2 Men Conference," said the Rev. Willie D. Brown, host and producer of the Saturday event designed to help young males face their problems and find answers. "We have a generation of young men on life support. We're coming in with the shocking paddles to give them their lives back."

Brown expects 300 to 500 young men, ages 12 and up, to attend. How does he plan to get them?
...
The conference will offer counseling, confidential AIDS testing, and prevention and intervention in areas from drugs to child custody.
...
"We'll find out each guy's issues. We'll break them to different groups. We'll show them how other people have handled their problems."'

'Women abusing men'

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Very few men call police on these women, but when they do many women get charged with domestic violence and battery. Terry Owen with the Port St. Lucie Police Department, says, "We have always seen the men as the abusers, but that is not the case now." Owen says in April, 28 woman were arrested for domestic violence. Owen says, "Woman are just more aggressive than they used to be, they are not laid back or passive." She says that coupled with the poor economy and the higher use of alcohol and drugs is pushing women over the edge. This is another 911 call, "Me and my boyfriend just got in to it and I am trying to get my stuff to leave and he won't let me get my stuff and I don't have time to argue with him." That was Lakeshia Tumblin. She was just arrested for throwing a knife at her boyfriend. The crimes continue and rarely do men report it..."

'Crisis In Masculinity' Leads To Eating Disorders In Straight Men

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young heterosexual men are falling prey to eating disorders such as anorexia and bulimia just as much as women and gay men - and their numbers are increasing, a leading specialist has warned.
...
To be a young man is our society is a difficult thing. What you do and who you are is less straightforward. Women were challenged decades ago to consider which of the many different social roles they adopted. Now men are having to respond to the choices that society gives them.

"Suddenly younger straight men have similar pressures to gay men and women. There is a crisis of masculinity in our society. They are given all these roles and to simply decide to manipulate your body is a nice easy solution to all the complexities of life."'

Indiana Removes Gay White Men from HIV/AIDS Funding Priorities

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Indiana State Department of Health recently cut gay white men as an HIV/AIDS funding priority. African-American and Hispanic men who have sex with men are still included as priority populations. The decision was made by the department's advisory Community Planning Group (CPG).

The CPG is a Center for Disease Control (CDC) mandated process for funding HIV/AIDS prevention and treatment programs in the states; it aims to be politics-free and representative of the community. The Indiana State Department of Health (ISDH) administers CDC HIV/AIDS prevention funds. Indiana health activists charge that the Group ignored the CDC's criteria for defining community priorities.
...
So why aren't white gay men included as a community priority? According to Tri-State Alliance spokesperson Gary Essary, "The criteria for Community Planning Groups to set community priority populations include Prevalence (absolute number of HIV/AIDS cases in a target population) as well as Incidence (rate of HIV/AIDS cases within a target population). The CPG ignored these recommendations, basing their decision solely on Incidence."'

Should you let a male nurse deliver your baby?

anthony · 10 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Great conversation and debate going on at Lylah and Barbara's Child Caring blog about moms who get the creeps leaving their children with male caregivers.

This drives hard-working male teachers, not to mention devoted dads, understandably crazy with outrage over society's sexist double standard. (For the record, I adore the two men teachers at our preschool -- I think they are great role models for the little boys, and all the kids see that teachers of either gender can teach and comfort them.)
...
Several months ago, I interviewed male nursing students studying at Bunker Hill Community College's state-of-the-art nursing program who hoped to enter the labor & delivery field.

These were really nice 20-something guys, but during their student-training rounds at big city hospitals, they were regularly ordered by laboring women to get lost.

Birth is a female thing, they were told. (In fact, male OB/GYNs are less prevalent in delivery rooms than they used to be, many studies show, as female doctors and midwives flood the field.)'

UK: Angry scenes as nursery worker appears in court on sexual assault charges

Anonymous · 11 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Follow-up to an earlier story here. Excerpt:

'A nursery school worker was jeered and spat at when she appeared in court today, charged with sexual assault and making and distributing child abuse images.

Vanessa George, 39, who worked at the Little Ted's nursery in Plymouth, was remanded in custody amid angry scenes in and outside the city's magistrates court. George, of Plymouth, faces three counts of sexual assault on girls and one on a boy. She is also accused of making, possessing and distributing indecent images of children.

The charges relate to offences alleged to have taken place between 1 January 2007 and June this year. The first charge relates to an assault in Plymouth of a girl aged around one. In the second, she is alleged to have touched an "infant girl". The third is a serious sexual assault on an "infant boy". Another involved an alleged serious sexual assault on an "infant girl".
...
The other three charges were that she took, possessed and distributed indecent images of children.'

Has anybody else but me noticed the subtle "whitewashing" in this story? She's not accused of distributing "child pornography" but "indecent images"... and she didn't "rape" the infant boy and infant girl, but "was involved in an alleged serious sexual assault" on the two of them.

Videotaped remarks shed light on Sotomayor

Matt · 11 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judge Sonia Sotomayor once described herself as "a product of affirmative action" who was admitted to two Ivy League schools despite scoring lower on standardized tests than many classmates, which she attributed to "cultural biases" that are "built into testing."

On another occasion, she aligned with conservatives who take a limited view of when international law can be enforced in U.S. courts. But she criticized conservative objections to recent Supreme Court rulings that mention foreign law as being based on a "misunderstanding."

Those comments were among a trove of videos dating back nearly 25 years that shed new light on Sotomayor's views. She provided the videos to the Senate Judiciary Committee last week as it prepares for her Supreme Court confirmation hearing next month.

The clips include lengthy remarks about her experiences as an "affirmative action baby" whose lower test scores were overlooked by admissions committees at Princeton University and Yale Law School because, she said, she is Latino and had grown up in poor circumstances.'

"Don't Date This Girl" web site debuts

Matt · 11 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Some equal time for the "Don't Date Him Girl" crowd: http://www.dontdatethis.com/ddtgirl/

"Dontdatethis.com was created to hold girls/women accountable for their actions. Next time your girlfriend cheats, lies, gives you an unexpected trip to the doctor or just does something wrong to you, you have a site to place a warning to all guys all over the world about her.

The goal of this site is to create a user friendly information database that hopefully makes all girls/women think twice before they act."

Looks like they also provide equal-equal time with http://www.dontdatethis.com/ddtguy/.

London (Ontario) police say babies probably died in another location

the_captain · 11 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A senior police official says investigators are actively exploring the possibility that the three infants whose remains were found in a London, Ont., home on Saturday did not die there.

Det.-Supt. Ken Heslop said it's possible the deaths occurred in another Ontario community before Jennifer Sinn, the woman charged in the case, moved to London.

Heslop said Peel Regional Police and the Ontario Provincial Police are trying to trace the movements of the 32-year-old woman before she moved to London last October.

Court documents suggest the infants may have died in 2001, 2002 and 2006.

Sinn has been charged with three counts of concealing the body of a dead child and causing an indignity to a dead body."

The CBC NEVER allows comments on these types of stories. I wonder why...

Girl, 15, will undergo psychiatric assessment in senior's murder case

the_captain · 11 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 15-year-old girl charged with first-degree murder in the killing of 78-year-old Frank Tonge has been remanded for a psychiatric assessment.

The young girl, who cannot be identified because of the Youth Criminal Justice Act, made her first court appearance in Hampton on Thursday.

She fought back tears as the charge was read, her mother and sister looking on.

Tonge was found on June 5 laying in a pool of blood in his home in Damascus, near Hampton, by a friend.

The girl did not enter a plea and David Lutz, the defence lawyer, requested a 30-day psychiatric, psychological and medical assessment.
...
Meanwhile, the RCMP continues to investigate but the police seem to be backing away from earlier suggestions that other suspects could be charged.'

Once again, no comments allowed by the CBC.

Viewpoint: Top academic performers — Where are the boys?

anthony · 11 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Principal Efe Agbamu, was reading off the names of the top ten academic performers in the class of 2009. Every single one was a female student.

They are very accomplished, talented young women with very bright futures. They are making plans to attend top notch four year institutions and to pursue careers like biomedical engineer, medical doctor, physical therapist, chemical engineer, nurse and the list goes on.

I was very proud of their accomplishments and certainly do not want to take anything away from their hard work, but I couldn't help but think, "Where are the boys?"
...
He informed me that a significant reading gap has developed between our females and our males. We all know how important reading is to success in school and our females are doing much better in reading.
...
I don't have the answers. My goal here is to raise a significant concern in the academic performance of young males.'

Should Father's Day be banned in schools?

anthony · 11 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A British newspaper reports that thousands of Scottish students were not permitted to make Father's Day cards at school this year, for fear of offending students who live with single mothers or lesbians. Local authorities defended the policy stating that teachers need to be sensitive to "the changing pattern of family life." It is interesting to note that students are still allowed to make Mother's Day cards at school.
...
I have no problem with teachers being sensitive, but I think this is overkill. Father's Day is just as important to children who don't have a dad in the home as it is to those who do. Even if a father is not as involved in his children's lives as he should be (for whatever reason), Father's Day is still an opportunity for the children to recognize him for what he does do. If the father is completely absent (again, for whatever reason), it is a bittersweet opportunity to talk about the man who helped to bring the children into the world and what it really means to be a dad...not just a father. For boys, it is an opportunity to open a dialog about the importance of fathers and help the young men aspire to be good fathers. For girls, it is an opportunity to talk about the importance of fathers and the qualities the girls want to look for in a future partner.'

Think Again: Sotomayor and SCOTUS, Captured on a Carousel of Time

anthony · 11 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sonia Sotomayor's confirmation hearings are not scheduled to begin until mid-July, but her punditocracy hearings are already well underway. This week they're all about her now infamous (and almost always decontextualized) "wise Latina" comment.

Pat Buchanan regularly reminds the public that Obama's nominee can't wait to get her hooks into the rights of white men. Michael Steele concurs, explaining: "God help you if you're a white male coming before her bench." Shelby Steele, in a triumphant act of hyperbolism, claimed that "Sotomayor has demonstrated a Hispanic chauvinism so extreme that it sometimes crosses into outright claims of racial supremacy."'

Club answers call for women-only workouts

anthony · 11 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

• In 2006, Fitness USA agreed to place a divider and frosted glass in its Lincoln Park, Mich., gym to ensure gender separation. The move came after 200 Muslim members of Fitness USA signed a petition saying that the company reneged on a promise to maintain gender separation at that facility.

• Last year, Harvard University agreed to set aside women-only hours at one of its fitness centers for students after Muslim women pleaded their case.

• Curves for Women gyms, a fast-growing franchise in the United States, has rapidly expanded into the Middle East, with more than two dozen facilities in Israel, Egypt, Lebanon, Kuwait, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Turkey and Qatar opening in the past two years, according to Becky Frusher, head of corporate communications for Curves.
...
Mullooly says she helps to maintain a women-only atmosphere at the club, which also has a pool, by stopping all male visitors at the front desk and by scheduling repairs by workmen after hours.'

Man Sues Mother’s Day Promotion for Sexism

anthony · 11 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to ESPN, a certain Alfred G. Rava took the time to drive from San Diego to Oakland to attend the Oakland A’s Mother’s Day promotion. A lot of the activities were geared towards breast cancer awareness—a 5k fight-breast-cancer run and free mammograms. Rava focused on the fact that Macy’s gave the first 7,500 women attending floppy sun hats.

Rava sued—and sadly enough, nearly won, using California’s Unruh Civil Rights Act of 1959. The judge ruled that any male who can prove that they were among the first 7,500 people to enter the stadium can receive $50, two-for-one A’s tickets, and $25 coupon to Macy’s.'

Ed. note: The ESPN article is here. Not surprisingly, it is not sympathetic to the point the man was trying to make.

Army: Suicide rate among soldiers continues on record pace

anthony · 12 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (CNN) -- The suicide rate among U.S. Army soldiers jumped in May -- continuing a four-month upward trend and on a record pace for a second straight year, according to Army statistics released Thursday.

Last month the deaths of 17 soldiers were either confirmed or suspected to be suicides, up from 13 in April and 13 in March, the new numbers revealed.

The Army said the total number of potential or confirmed suicides since January stands at 82. Last year the Army recorded 133 suicides, the most ever.

...

"It's clear we have not found full solutions to this yet. But we are trying every remedy and seeking help from outside agencies that are experts in suicide prevention. There isn't a reasonable suicide prevention tool out there the Army won't potentially employ," he said.'

Bad mom really needed jail time badgerb · 12 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here . Excerpt:

'But that assumes both parents are reasonable. In this case, the mother is clearly a nutbar who used her kids as weapons against her ex. Jail might have taught her a lesson a lot sooner.

A.L. is "exhausted but very, very happy. He has his children," says his lawyer, Harold Niman.

"This kind of case will hopefully send a message to those people who think it's OK to undermine a relationship between the children and the other parent."'

We criticize Ms. Jacobs when she lets her inherent misandry leak out in a lot of her columns but here she gets it right. Please email and thank her for getting it right this time. It also lets her know we are still watching her. Her email address is at the bottom of the column.

Wetzstein: Fatherhood issues remain

anthony · 12 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This month marks the 100th anniversary of Father's Day, and a big celebration is planned for June 20 at the Lincoln Memorial. I figured it was a good time to ask a local lawyer who is active in family court, child support and gender issues about what he sees facing boys and men at this milestone.
...
"We ought to be looking at why boys are disengaged in primary and secondary education such that they never get to college. What is it about our school system that turns off the boys so that by the time college comes around, they're not in the equation? What is it that is causing boys to have lower academic aspirations than girls?" Mr. Henry asked.

Other topics:

• Domestic violence, which is a national issue with an office of its own when it's against women, but an invisible issue when men are the victims.

• The gender gap in health-insurance coverage, in which men are more likely to be uninsured than women. (The current gender breakdown among uninsured, nonelderly adults is 54 percent male and 46 percent female, the Kaiser Family Foundation says.)'

BBC: Gender, pay and 'misleading' stats

anthony · 12 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Equalities Minister Harriet Harman has been accused of over-stating the plight of women in the workplace: using misleading statistics to make it look as though female workers are having a tougher time than they really are.
...
But I am reliably informed that when the National Statistician Karen Dunnell went to the Government Equalities Office last November and told them that their way of calculating gender pay differences might be confusing and potentially damaging, the GEO ignored her and published anyway.

So instead of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) pay-gap figure of 12.8% (hardly something to crow about), the department put out a press release in April this year which stated that women are paid, on average, 23% less per hour than men.

Now a letter has been sent to Harriet Harman by Sir Michael Scholar, the chair of the UK Statistics Authority (the official watchdog on the use of government stats), saying that her use of the 23% figure "may undermine public trust in official statistics" and "risks giving a misleading quantification of the gender pay gap".'

Dear Abby: Mom blowing child support on boyfriends

anthony · 12 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dear Abby: My sister has five children, all younger than 18. She has full custody and receives child support every month from her ex-husband.

The problem is, she has been spending that money on her boyfriends instead of her children. Because of it, they have been homeless twice, and it may happen again.

The only person in that household with a steady job is the oldest, but he can't support all of them by himself. How can I make my sister see how irresponsible and immature she is?

Dear Alarmed Auntie: Your sister's behavior is not only irresponsible, but also detrimental to the welfare of her children. If it's possible, contact their father and let him know what has been going on. Also contact Child Protective Services because although foster care is not ideal, it would be better than what's going on.'

Are men bad parents?

anthony · 12 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'New fathers don't have to meet all the expectations mothers do, said Brett Singer in ParentDish, but why do so many people seem stuck on the silly "notion that women are somehow wired for parenting and men are not"? British newspapers are citing Michael Lewis' new book Home Game: An Accidental Guide to Fatherhood as evidence that men have to adjust in order to love their children. In the age of modern parenting, that "sounds pretty old-fashioned to me."

Plenty of guys say men aren't natural parents, said Ellie White in Britain's The Sun. In addition to Michael Lewis, who writes that fatherhood can be "boring and demoralizing," there's Ben George, editor of the literary journal Ecotone, who says men are only beginning to talk openly about the "dark moments of fatherhood." And Fox News broadcaster Steve Doocy, author of the forthcoming book Tales From the Dad Side: Misadventures in Fatherhood, says men aren't wired for parenting the way women are.

Men are wired to be good parents, said Aaron Traister in Salon, but many struggle to overcome pressure from a society that still tells them they should be making money and not taking care of babies. The old gender roles started crumbling the moment our moms entered the workforce. Instead of clinging to the responsibilities men think we should have, we should "embrace the ones that are right in front of us," the ones wearing the droopy diapers.'

Teen with 47 IQ gets 100 years in sex abuse case

WakeUp · 12 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PARIS, Texas - A teenager who has profound mental disabilities was sentenced to 100 years in prison after pleading guilty to charges in a sex abuse case involving his 6-year-old neighbor.

Aaron Hart, 18, of Paris, was arrested and charged after a neighbor found him fondling her stepson in September. The teen pleaded guilty to five counts, including aggravated sexual assault and indecency by contact, and a jury decided his punishment.

...

Hart has an IQ of 47 and was diagnosed as mentally disabled as a child. He never learned to read or write and speaks unsteadily.

...

"He couldn't understand the seriousness of what he did," said his father, Robert Hart. "I never dreamed they would think about sending him to prison. When they said 100 years — it was terror, pure terror, to me."'

...

Hart's appellate attorney, David Pearson, said the court-appointed doctor did the bare minimum to assess competency and ran tests geared for mental illness, not mental retardation.

He said an appeal will be filed.'

Amanda Knox on trial in Italy

Matt · 12 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The media could not have a more winning formula for sensationalism and luridness. Excerpt:

'Amanda Knox is a riddle. The expatriate American student has been the mysterious, ambivalent Mona Lisa face plastered across television, websites and newspapers since a few days after Halloween 2007. According to Italian authorities and their partisans in the blogosphere where her case has been strenuously debated, behind her beatific smile lies a psycho hedonist capable of depraved murder. But family and friends insist she's just a granola-crunching athlete and honor student from Seattle who has, through bad luck, become the poster child for the perils that await American girls caught up in the dark side of Italy.'

As always, if Amanda had been Adam, would the article be written the way it is? Would there be so much 'controversy' in the case. No.

Canada: 2008 was 'worst year yet' for disability claims in public service

Scottie · 13 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Note the stats:

'Female public servants make disability claims at roughly twice the rate of men. In 2008, women, who represent 54.4 per cent of the workforce, filed more than 70 per cent of all claims -- up from two-thirds in 2007.'

Note the excuse:
'"That likely reflects the fact that women face more pressures outside the office, Gordon said.

"It's a pretty well-known fact that women tend to be the main people who give home care, and they're trying to work to support the family as well. And there's a lot of single mothers who work."'

There is comments section below, let's get our voices heard.

This U.K. Sheriff Cites Officials for Serious Statistical Violations

Matt · 13 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here come the stats police.

Mobilized by distressingly low levels of public trust in official statistics, the U.K. government is embarking on a daring, and possibly unique, experiment. With broad support, Parliament in 2007 approved the formation of the U.K. Statistics Authority, a group with the budget, authority and independence to question other government agencies on the numbers they release to the public.

After its formation last year, the authority got off to a slow start, but it has already taken to task other government agencies for presenting data in a misleading way. Now, it is gearing up for audits on hot-button topics, such as crime statistics and education test scores, whose reliability has come into question.'

Kenya men cry foul over Budget

Matt · 13 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A.: Story here. Excerpt:

'NAIROBI, Kenya, Jun 12 - Kenyan men were crying foul on Friday for what they termed as ‘discrimination’ in the Budget delivered by Finance Minister Uhuru Kenyatta on Thursday.

An organisation championing men’s rights said men were the biggest losers because their commodities were not zero-rated as was the case for those used by women.

“We were the biggest losers. Women were the winners because their cosmetics and jewelry were zero-rated,” Nderitu Njoka, chairman of the Maendeleo ya Wanaume told Capital News.'

Ed. note: Please forgive my ignorance of the workings of the government in Kenya or the role this budget plays in determining things like tax levels, etc. Can someone from Kenya or knowledgeable about the Kenyan budget/government process help me put this story into better context?

Deployed Marines' Families Brace For Father's Day

Matt · 13 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'June 12, 2009 · On Father's Day, June 21, hundreds of Marines from Camp Lejeune in North Carolina will have been away from home for nearly a month. While the Marines are in Afghanistan, their children are learning to get along without their dads. NPR is following the deployment of the 2nd Battalion, 8th Regiment, a unit of more than 800 Marines known as "America's Battalion." On the home front, the families of those deployed are coping with their absence.

American flags dot the street that leads to the home of Marine Sgt. Major Bob Breedan, the 2nd Battalion's top enlisted man. Breedan talked with NPR before his unit deployed to Afghanistan.

He said he has missed almost every milestone in his daughter's life. His wife Barbara didn't miss a thing.'

Feminist who thinks men should bring up babies is new Labour family guru

Mr VanHuizen · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A hardline feminist has been chosen as the Government's new chief spokesman on families.

Dr Katherine Rake, who wants to see men bring up babies, will head the Family and Parenting Institute, a heavily state-financed organisation set up by Labour to speak for parents and children.'

...

'It has complained that women will never achieve equality with men at work without 'challenging the traditional roles of homemaker and breadwinner'.

Fawcett has also condemned Tory plans to give tax breaks to married couples, complaining that 'it penalises all those children living with unmarried parents or with one parent'.'

Children's Aid Society workers should be reined in, critics say

Matt · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'They are charged with the most essential of duties: protecting vulnerable children from abuse and neglect. They will intervene in the lives of roughly 200,000 Canadian children this year.

For most of us, they are generally unseen, save for occasional mentions in news reports, when they rescue children from misery. Or, as sometimes happens, deliver it.

Canada's child-welfare agencies, says University of Manitoba social work professor Brad McKenzie, have among the broadest intervention powers in the Western world.'

'Chivalry is Dead, Male Chauvinism is Alive and Well'

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There was a time in our country when a woman had gallant men riding in to defend her honor. Since the failed feminist movement has destroyed these pedestals of virtue and reduced women to nothing more than dim reflections of the boorish men they seek to emulate, it is no surprise that chivalry has experienced societal obsolescence.
...
Men have denigrated women to the point where two men think that their anatomy is the equivalent of a woman's and choose that option to the real thing because women, in their eyes, are not worthy of intimacy. Two percent of the population, claiming to be the victims of societal victimization, are the ones who have the power to punish women, like Carrie Prejean, who express a different opinion.'

'Woman to woman: Do we need male advocacy groups?'

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Steve Saltarelli started a student group called Men in Power at the University of Chicago, he intended it to "spread awareness and promote understanding of issues and challenges facing men today." But from the explosive reactions to its formation, you would have thought he was suggesting women return to greeting their master at the door with slippers in hand.

The Chicago Tribune's feature story on the group was quickly blogged across the Internet, with many echoes of the female student who said, "It's like starting 'White Men in Business' -- there's not really any purpose." Or, more derisively, the blogger who told men, "You've ruled the world for far too long, now you cry fowl! Booo, hooey!"
...

These reactions show how desperately men's groups are needed. The University of Chicago has nine similar women's groups, and the fuss over starting just one for men exposes the anti-male resentment still festering today. Society's focus on women's needs has somehow made it unacceptable to focus on men. But this is not a zero-sum game, and we must fully encourage both.
...
Young men may very well need encouragement to care about their studies and stay in school. Yet these and many other statistics show that the professional world still has a long way to go before being male puts you at a disadvantage and in need of special coaching and networking avenues. In 2009, Men in Power isn't just the name of a special interest group it's still a pretty accurate description of the workplace.'

Woman arrested for making false rape report

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LAPEER -- A young woman who claimed she was sexually assaulted by a police impostor was arrested and charged with fabricating the rape.

Bethany Anne Montgomery, 22, of North Branch, was arraigned Thursday by District Court Magistrate Mike Delling on two counts of false reports of a felony, one for allegedly inventing the attack, and the other for a home burglary she reported. Montgomery is also facing unrelated charges for writing bad checks.

"We made an arrest, but it wasn't a rouge cop," said Lapeer County Sheriff's Sgt. Jason Parks. "Miss Montgomery owes this entire community an apology. What she did was wrong. She frightened many people and victimized our community. This is very disturbing."'

False VFW rape report leads to charges

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A Lake Arthur woman who admitted to filing a false report about being raped in the Jennings VFW parking lot – and also admittedly filed a false report for an armed robbery in Lake Arthur – will now face charges from the Jeff Davis Parish District Attorney's Office.

Cassidy said Jenny Thibodeaux, 42, of Lake Arthur, will face two charges of filing a false report and an additional charge of theft. On Nov. 18, 2008, Thibodeaux claimed she was raped in the field alongside the VFW on U.S. 90 by an unidentified assailant wearing dark clothes, gloves and a ski mask. She claimed she was attacked as she exited her vehicle to play bingo at the hall. She told police that the attacker fled in a white van. A woman on a cigarette break allegedly found Thibodeaux partially clothed and screaming for help, according to Jennings police.'

Commentary: 'De-Masculinity & The U.S.'

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the government is methodically taking over key industries and financial institutions, the people's attention is being diverted to – what else – diversity, the be-all and end-all of the social agenda that has been driven for some 30-40 years by the so-called liberals, with women's militant feminist organizations in the vanguard. The term diversity has been primarily utilized as remarking ethnic/gender considerations, but actually it has been code for the term "de-masculinity," applied mostly to white Anglo-Saxon males...and within an entirely pejorative framework.
...
This is but the latest example of the emasculating of the government, the castration of it insofar as actions/responsibilities of white males are concerned. Sotomayor, in an appeals court case that she has just handled, heaved and brought forth the opinion that promotions in a fire department should go to minorities, even though they scored lower than a number of white males on the required tests. This decision, then, gave her the added ethnic bona fides to further the affirmative action agenda, no matter the degree and kind of reverse-discrimination involved. The highest scorers were white males, thus, in Sotomayor's thinking, they would not make good decisions...OR...she has an agenda, not a bent toward interpreting the Constitution. Either way, Omamessiah should look for someone else, maybe a left-handed, one-legged, ex-con female from Lower Slobbovia...to give DIVERSITY to the Court.'

'Celebrate National Man Day?'

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A pair of Indiana brothers, Joel and Aaron Longanecker, have convinced more than a quarter-million males to promise to "stand up and do manly things" on June 15 in observance of their proposed new holiday -- National Man Day.

Their National Man Day page on Facebook urges men across the country to take time to get in touch with their masculine sides on Monday. Suggested activities include playing football, camping, hunting, eating 18-ounce steaks, blowing things up, shooting guns, punching each other for no reason, pumping some iron or "watching every Rambo movie from beginning to end. Straight through!"

The purpose of the proposed holiday, according to the National Man Day page, is to acknowledge that the time has arrived "to take back the crown of masculinity."

BBC: Flint criticised in 'sexism row'

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Labour MP Caroline Flint has been criticised for her attack on Gordon Brown's style of government and his treatment of female ministers.

Ms Flint resigned as Europe minister on Friday, claiming he operated a "two-tier" government via an "inner" circle.

Senior female figures were regarded as "little more than window dressing" by the prime minister, Ms Flint argued.

Fellow MP Geraldine Smith said Ms Flint would "regret" her comments, saying she should have thought twice about them.'

Charleroi wife to go free after husband, shot in head, refuses to testify

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'As Vickie L. Kubin left a Washington County magistrate's office in chains Thursday before her expected release later in the day, her husband, Mark, said, "See you in a bit."

It was a calm contrast to June 3, the last time they were together.

At that time, they were involved in an argument at their home at 105 Fox Stop Road in Fallowfield Township, and Vickie Kubin 35, shot her husband in the side of the head, according to an affidavit of probable cause.

Minutes before she was to face a preliminary hearing before Magisterial District Judge Larry Hopkins in Charleroi yesterday, attorneys for both sides reached a tentative agreement that likely will involve 12 to 23 months of probation, but no prison time. The agreement requires Common Pleas Court approval.

Charges of criminal attempt to commit homicide and aggravated assault filed last week were dropped. Kubin waived her right to a preliminary hearing on charges of recklessly endangering another person and simple assault.'

India: Woman kills husband, stepson after man returns to first wife

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A women [sic] fatally beat her husband and stepson to death with the help of her friends after the man returned to his first wife, on Monday morning in the Pandesara area of Surat.

Rambabu Paswan was killed on the spot while his son Krunal died during treatment at the New Civil Hospital on Tuesday afternoon.

The assault took place near the Akashbhumi Complex at Pandesara GIDC, when Rambabu was on his way to drop Krunal to the nearby tuition class on his motorcycle. His second wife Rekha alias Asha Tiwari (35) arrived in an autorickshaw along with her friends and assaulted the two with wooden sticks and baseball bats.'

Woman charged with stabbing husband in Washington Twp.

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON TWP. -- A township man nearly bled to death Monday night in the mobile home he was living in after being stabbed by his estranged wife.

Police were tipped off to the incident by a neighbor of Joseph Hill, 46, of the 900 block of Tuckahoe Road around 9:05 p.m. Hill banged on the neighbor's window saying he had been stabbed.

According to police, Lana Hill, 47, who was last residing in South Harrison Township with a Mullica Hill mailing address stabbed her husband in the left leg with a kitchen knife, causing a single puncture wound during what authorities are calling a domestic dispute.

Joseph Hill was taken by ambulance to Cooper Medical Center in Camden. On arrival he was unconscious after losing a considerable amount of blood. He eventually came-to.

His wife is charged with aggravated assault, as well as possession of a weapon for an unlawful purpose and tampering with evidence. The tampering charge is connected to her attempted to conceal the weapon she allegedly performed the stabbing with.'

International child abductions by parents rising

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — It was a globe-trotting romance: a handsome American working as a model in Italy falls in love with a Brazilian beauty studying fashion design in Milan. They marry in 1999, settle in the tony New Jersey shore town of Red Bank, and have a son.

Four years later, the couple's relationship begins to change from an international love affair into a diplomatic nightmare.

The woman, Bruna Bianchi, took the couple's son to visit her relatives in Brazil in 2004 but never returned. The boy's father, David Goldman of Tinton Falls, N.J., has been battling to get his son back ever since.'

Woman Charged With 28 Counts Of Sexual Child Abuse, Attempted Kidnapping And Extortion

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Valerie Lianne Carlton, 40, of Joppa, Maryland, was indicted by the Grand Jury for Harford County on June 2, 2009 on 28 counts ranging from the Sexual Child Abuse of two young girls, ages five and six, to Attempted Child Kidnapping and Extortion. These offenses began on or about January 2008 and continued through April 2009. Carlton has been a resident of Joppa for the past fifteen years.

The case is being investigated by the Harford County Child Advocacy Center and anyone with any information concerning this case is urged to contact the Center at 410.638.3294. Please contact Joseph Cassilly, State's Attorney for Harford County, at 410.638.3500 for further information regarding this release.'

Prosecutors Dismiss Child Abuse Charges

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Millcreek woman is free Monday night, just hours after a jury was selected to hear the case against her.

Catherine Cates faced 4 charges of rape of a child, and was arrested back in March.

Prosecutors alleged Cates had sex with a 13-year-old boy, whom she tutored.

Monday afternoon, the Prosecution filed a motion to dismiss all charges. Cates' roommate, who was going to testify for the prosecution, told them she remembered more details, and it hurt their case.

"She said she had been in the house every time they were together, and she didn't walk in on them and she didn't believe they had any kind of sexual encounter," said John Walsh, Cates' attorney.'

Mont. woman who hid son in car trunk pleads guilty

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HELENA, Mont. (AP) — A Montana woman accused of hiding the body of her 2-year-old son in the trunk of her car for most of last summer pleaded guilty Friday to negligent homicide and evidence tampering.

Summer ManyWhiteHorses told detectives that her son, James, fell from a high chair on the night of May 28 while she was watching television in another room.

She put his body in the trunk of her car and drove around the state with her 11-year-old daughter for nearly two months, paying for food, gas, hotel rooms and alcohol with government checks meant to take care of the boy, who was autistic.

ManyWhiteHorses appeared before a judge in Great Falls on Friday, three days before her trial was scheduled to start. The 31-year-old woman could be punished with up to 100 years in prison when she is sentenced next month in Cascade County District Court.'

ABC News: Future of Feminism an Issue in NOW Leadership Vote

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kim Gandy, a savvy former prosecutor, is stepping down as NOW president after eight years leading the battle against many Bush-era policies.

The election to succeed her, set for NOW's three-day national conference starting Friday in Indianapolis, is both an unusual clash of generations and an opportunity for activists to confront some of the challenges facing the feminist movement.

Delegates will be choosing between Latifa Lyles, a 33-year-old African-American who has been one of Gandy's three vice presidents, and Terry O'Neill, 56, a white activist who taught law at Tulane University, who was NOW's vice president for membership from 2001-05, and who most recently has been chief of staff for a county council member in Maryland's Montgomery County.

...

Overall, NOW says it has more than 500,000 "contributing members" — who are either paying membership dues at present or did so recently enough to stay on the mailing list. Gandy said there's been a recent dip in membership revenues, but it's modest enough so far that NOW has been able to avoid the staff layoffs occurring at many other nonprofits.'

Fiji: 'Men under spotlight, told to understand'

anthony · 14 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men enjoy power, privilege and status at the expense of women, a fact that contributes to persistent and widespread gender-based violence.

Stephen Fisher, an Australian trainer on masculinities at the Chisholm Institute [hyperlink added], Melbourne, was speaking at the Fiji Women's Crisis Centre's (FWCC) Pacific Regional Meeting on Violence Against Women at the Naviti Resort on the Coral Coast in Fiji.

Fisher said the concept of masculinities was a major factor that reinforced male behaviour normalising demeaning and violent treatment of women.

Many men enjoy maintaining their dominance role in their personal relationships and in and this is expressed through their masculinity, Fisher said.'

Men warned of greater cancer risk

Michael · 15 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'he reluctance of men to adopt a healthy lifestyle and visit the doctor may be fuelling a gender gap in cancer cases and deaths, experts say.

Among cancers which affect both sexes, men are 60% more likely to develop the disease and 70% more likely to die from it, Cancer Research UK said.

...

They found that overall men are 40% more likely than women to die from cancer and 16% more likely to develop the disease in the first place.

But excluding breast cancer and other cancers that are gender specific, as well as lung cancer which is more likely to affect men because more men smoke, the difference between the sexes was far greater.

...

Sara Hiom, director of health information at Cancer Research UK, said: "We know that around half of all cancers could be prevented by changes to lifestyle and it's worrying that this message could be falling on deaf ears for men.

"Delays in reporting symptoms to a doctor could be helping to fuel this gender gap in cancer mortality."'

If you're happy and you know it

Michael · 15 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Talk about a hot-button issue: Despite women's social and economic gains over the last 35 years, more American women report being less happy. In fact, a new gender gap has emerged: men are now happier than women.

That's according to a study, "The Paradox of Declining Female Happiness," by two University of Pennsylvania economists to be published in the American Economic Journal in August.

But the word's out, igniting gender battles online as both sides point fingers. "Typical complaining women," and "raving, loony feminists," snipe some males. "We have too much to do," and "sexist jerks," females retort.

None seemed overly surprised by the U.S. study, that women are unhappier now than in the 1970s. "There's no `me time,'" says a 38-year-old bank analyst with two children.
...

"Maybe women voice their feelings now. They were unhappy before but didn't say it," suggests a 45-year-old administrative assistant.

Betsey Stevenson, co-author of the "Paradox" study, has no easy answers. This pursuit of happiness business is serious stuff. Economists use such life satisfaction findings to help evaluate public policies, explains the assistant professor at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School.
...
They did find that women today are less satisfied with their household's finances than they used to be and less satisfied than men are. It could be expectations, suggests Stevenson, or women's increased intolerance for discrimination in pay.'

Trial set for woman accused of blackmailing man over rape charge

anthony · 15 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FARMINGTON -- A woman accused of blackmailing a man at Hill Air Force Base over a rape allegation will go on trial next month.

The 31-year-old woman appeared in 2nd District Court on Monday where she was expected to tae a plea deal. However, her attorney announced that she would like to take the case to trial.
...
The case is complicated, with the woman charged with second-degree felony theft by extortion. Her attorney said she is the victim of a rape and filed a police report in Seattle. Davis County prosecutors said any rape investigation has no influence on their case against her.
...
Court documents say the woman blackmailed the man out of nearly $50,000 by saying she would not report the alleged sexual assault to military authorities in exchange for the money.'

Gloversville woman charged for falsely reporting rape

anthony · 15 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Gloversville Police arrested a city woman last week for lying to them about an alleged rape she reported back in April.

According to police, 40-year-old Marybeth Baker filed a complaint on April 26th of being raped by someone she knew while on the Rail Trail.

During police investigation, though, Baker admitted the complaint was false and that she'd lied as retaliation against the suspect.

Baker was arrested June 12th and charged with misdemeanor falsely reporting an incident.'

Letter: Fathers, legal residents deserve equal treatment

anthony · 15 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to a Harvard Law study, one out of four children commit suicide when the father is "alienated" by the other parent via false restraining orders or unjust visitation rights. We cannot forget or lose sight of the fact that fathers (and mothers) deserve equal rights in child-custody cases.

Unfortunately the courts have been biased, cruel and unfair towards men who actively seek full or joint custody of their children, whom they care for and love.

Discrimination is a two-way street. So is equal rights. Judges: Men are people too. Get with it!

Stop the nonsense! Sometimes men make better parents than women.'

Reservations for Women: In Parliament, Judiciary, Corporates and Government Jobs

anthony · 15 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In recent times, there has been a lot of noise over the issue of reservation of women's seats in Parliament. Some existing male parliament members even went to the extent of threatening suicide in Parliament, if the women's reservation bill is passed. The male parliament members are sure that many of them will lose their seats and become politically irrelevant, if the women's reservation bill is passed. Some smaller parties consider it as a conspiracy to finish up smaller regional political parties.

What do men's rights activists think about women's reservations in parliament? From their perspective, they have no trust in any woman parliamentarian. For them, if some fifty women in parliament can bulldoze an extremely biased and badly drafted domestic violence law into being enacted into law, then 200 women in parliament will lead to many more biased laws and serious discrimination of men, which can result in a complete gender war. Such a conflict will not only harm men, but also harm women, children and entire the society.'

Court overturns teacher's sex conviction

anthony · 16 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Georgia Supreme Court on Monday reversed a sexual assault conviction against a 28-year-old schoolteacher who had a romantic relationship with one of her former students.

In a 5-2 decision, the court said the teacher, Melissa Lee Chase, should have been allowed to present a defense that the 16-year-old student consented to the sexual relationship.

Under Georgia law, the age of consent is 16, Chief Justice Leah Ward Sears wrote. "Generally speaking, it is not a crime in Georgia to have physical sexual contact with a willing participant who is 16 years of age or older."
...
At a bench trial, the student testified during cross examination that she initiated the relationship with Chase because she "had feelings for her." The student also testified she was the one who "pushed" the relationship.
...
Justice George Carley, joined by Justice Hugh Thompson, dissented, saying the majority "remarkably" misinterpreted the law and produced a "disturbing" result. "A statute enacted … to protect students from exploitation by teachers is now almost useless due to the judicial imposition of a defense of consent," Carley wrote.'

Sarah Palin hopes men like David Letterman 'evolve'

anthony · 16 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) — Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin is accepting comedian David Letterman's apology over the controversial joke directed at her daughter, but says she hopes "men who 'joke' about public displays of sexual exploitation of girls will soon evolve."

"Letterman certainly has the right to 'joke' about whatever he wants to, and thankfully we have the right to express our reaction," Palin said in a statement. "And this is all thanks to our U.S. Military women and men putting their lives on the line for us to secure America's Right to Free Speech – in this case, may that right be used to promote equality and respect."

CNN: Dad feels cheated on Father's Day booty

anthony · 16 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(Parenting.com) -- One Mother's Day, I bought my wife what she had wanted for years -- a weeping cherry tree -- and I threw in a bird bath, so that when the tree matures, our feathered friends can happily splash and drink under its loving protection.

For Father's Day, my wife gave me some boxer shorts and a tiny reading light, so I can flip through a book in bed without disturbing her.

My wife is the first to admit it: For her, and for many people, Father's Day is an afterthought, a holiday just a few steps above the one that celebrates the groundhog and that other one that promotes trees.

If Mom's Day and Dad's Day were in a prize fight, we all know which holiday would wind up lying in the corner of the ring, knocked-out teeth on the mat, dazed head stuck in a bucket.'

UK: Number of teenagers not in work or school rises to 10.3%

anthony · 16 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of teenagers out of school and out of work has risen dramatically, fuelled by unemployment rates not seen since the early 1990s.

The proportion of 16- to 18-year-olds not in education, employment or training increased from 9.7% at the end of 2007 to 10.3% at the end of 2008. "This is due to reduced employment amongst young people not in education or training," government statisticians said.

Young men are the worst affected with twice the rate of 16-year-old boys not in work or school than girls. In total there are more than 208,000 teenagers not in training or employment - more than one in ten of the total.'

Action Alert: Dear Abby Changes Column in Response to Our Protest

Matt · 16 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dear Abby's June 12 column concerned a mother of five who, according to her sister, has "has full custody and receives child support every month from her ex-husband. The problem is, she has been spending that money on her boyfriends instead of her children. Because of it, they have been homeless twice, and it may happen again."

Dear Abby's response implied that if the mother isn't taking care of her children properly, putting them in foster care is an equally viable option as placement with their father.

In response, we launched a Fathers & Families Protest via the Fathers & Families Action Squad, and Dear Abby was bombarded with letters protesting the wording of the column.

In response, Dear Abby has clarified her views, changing the column to specifically recommend the father as first option for the children. The column was promptly changed in the on-line editions of the hundreds of newspapers where her column is published.'

Infanticide Case Mesmerizes France

Matt · 16 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PARIS, June 15 -- When South Korean authorities announced in 2006 that they had found the bodies of two newborns in the home freezer of a French expatriate couple, the first reaction among friends and family was disbelief.

Véronique Courjault, 41, on the surface a devoted mother of two sons, and her husband, Jean-Louis, 42, a shy engineer specializing in diesel motors, at first said they had nothing to do with the macabre discovery. But from a murder trial underway for the past 10 days in Tours, 100 miles southwest of Paris, a grisly truth has emerged. The courtroom version of how the couple lived has fascinated France and left many people in shock and wonder.

Véronique Courjault, by her own admission, smothered the two babies after giving birth to them secretly in Seoul, the first in 2002 and the second in 2003. She also has acknowledged killing a newborn and burning the body in her garden after a first secret pregnancy in 1999, before the couple left France.

Jean-Louis Courjault, French prosecutors ruled, was never aware of his wife's pregnancies, or her lonely deliveries in the family bathtub and the subsequent slayings of three infants. After a long investigation, he was not charged, leaving unanswered how he could have failed to notice his wife's condition. He has attended her trial with the goal, he told reporters, of offering all the support he can.'

Canada: Presumed joint custody law introduced

Matt · 16 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mr. Maurice Vellacott introduced a Private Member's Bill this morning that would require a presumption of equal parenting. This is a BILL, not a MOTION. It's # is C-422. Don't refer to it as M-483 if contacting others such as politicians or media about this bill because M-483 as an equal parenting measure was terminated with the last election call, as most of you already know, so nobody will know what you are talking about if you refer to it incorrectly. Mr. Vellacott's introductory statement in introducing this bill this morning...'

Sotomayor defends her membership in elite all-women's club

Matt · 16 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor is defending her membership in an elite all-women's club, telling senators the group doesn't discriminate unfairly by gender and involves men in many of its activities.

Her explanation came in a letter submitted Monday evening to the Senate Judiciary Committee, which also included copies of several rulings, briefs and speeches the judge had not previously given the panel.

GOP senators had requested the material and questioned Sotomayor's membership in the Belizean Grove, a group of prominent professional women, because federal judges are bound by a code that says they shouldn't join any organization that discriminates by race, sex, religion, or nationality.'

Huffington Post: If Men Got Pregnant, Would Abortion Be Legal?

anthony · 16 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though abortion is controversial, few believe that women should be compelled to bear and be responsible for children who were conceived as a result of a criminal act, such as a sexual assault. Yet numerous courts have ruled that boys must be held responsible for the children they involuntarily fathered in their early teens as a result of a criminal act--statutory rape by an adult woman.

For example, in 2004 a Michigan appeals court ruled that a man who had conceived a child with an adult when he was 14 must pay her child support. Though the court acknowledged that the sex act which produced the child would have been a crime under state law, they decided that the case should be resolved "without regard to the fault of either of the parents."

Most people sympathize with women who have decided to terminate their pregnancies because they conceived as a result of being deceived into believing that their partners had vasectomies or were sterile. By contrast, courts have consistently failed to extend any consideration to men who have been deceived.'

FIU lab investigates the state of fatherhood

anthony · 16 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Family roles have changed substantially since the 1950s. Mom now works outside the home. And dad is expected to be more involved in raising the kids. But as parental roles and responsibilities become less defined, psychologists question: Are there essential characteristics of fathering versus mothering?

FIU's Fatherhood Lab explores these issues and Psychology Professor Gordon Finley, who runs the lab, focuses specifically on how divorce impacts fathers and the development of their children. Finley has found that a father's role is unique and far too often neglected by the family court system.

Using questionnaires and a retrospective technique in which he asked 1,989 young adults to think back on their relationship with their fathers, Finley found that children of divorce really miss their fathers. According to Finley, they are denied a relationship with them because of present-day family law and court practices.

"Divorce marginalizes or severs a father's relationship with his child," he says. "In reality, the father becomes a visitor in his or her life. He is no longer a father in the very literal sense."'

Japan panics about the rise of "grass-eating men"

Matt · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Few other articles I have read point out the no-win situation men in modern societies face when it comes to place in society/gender roles. Men who do what they have been told to do since childhood about being less aggressive or ambitious, less motivated by sex-seeking in relationships, doing things that are less stressful than the traditional male roles require, etc., suddenly get criticized and minimized for it. However if they go back to being the way they were before in these areas, they will also get criticized and minimized. There's no winning for losing.

I can't blame these guys in Japan for taking a vastly different path than their fathers and grandfathers took. The result of doing so means a longer, healthier life and no worries about wives getting a divorce inside a day and taking off with the kids, a process that is, believe it or not, much easier for women to engage in in Japan than in the US, Canada, or Britain. Excerpt:

'Today, Igarashi has a new identity (and plenty of company among young Japanese men) as one of the soushoku danshi—literally translated, "grass-eating boys." Named for their lack of interest in sex and their preference for quieter, less competitive lives, Japan's "herbivores" are provoking a national debate about how the country's economic stagnation since the early 1990s has altered men's behavior.

Newspapers, magazines, and television shows are newly fixated on the herbivores. "Have men gotten weaker?" was one theme of a recent TV talk show. "Herbivores Aren't So Bad" is the title of a regular column on the Japanese Web site NB Online.
...

Grass-eating boys' commitment phobia is not the only thing that's worrying Japanese women. Unlike earlier generations of Japanese men, they prefer not to make the first move, they like to split the bill, and they're not particularly motivated by sex. "I spent the night at one guy's house, and nothing happened—we just went to sleep!" moaned one incredulous woman on a TV program devoted to herbivores. "It's like something's missing with them," said Yoko Yatsu, a 34-year-old housewife, in an interview. "If they were more normal, they'd be more interested in women. They'd at least want to talk to women."
...
Yoto Hosho, a 22-year-old college dropout who considers himself and most of his friends herbivores, believes the term describes a diverse group of men who have no desire to live up to traditional social expectations in their relationships with women, their jobs, or anything else. "We don't care at all what people think about how we live," he says.'

'Baby located after man drove off' - well, not exactly

Matt · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police are considering charging a Markham, Ont., woman with public mischief after she told police her infant son had been abducted in a parking lot by a stranger, when he had just been taken by her husband.

The woman and her husband made a trip to a Costco store near Highway 7 and Woodbine Avenue this morning and got into an argument in the store's parking lot. The man left in the car, with the couple's one-year-old son in the back seat.

The woman called police at 9:40 to report a carjacking and child abduction. She described the abductor as an Asian male in his early 20s with dark, black hair. What she didn't tell them was that he was her husband.'

"...after man drove off," reads the headline. How about "Woman faces charges of filing a false abduction report against her husband, motivated by desire to get back at him after they had a row in the parking lot"

I don't know the circumstances of the fight they had and as a principle I wouldn't condone anyone driving off with the kids after an argument with one's mate like that. Nonetheless, her telling the police that "a man" abducted her child from the parking lot is obviously not accurate enough a depiction to say it was a sufficient representation of the truth to the police, given the accusation.

Note the G&M has disabled the comments for this one, too.

A girl's first hero

Matt · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hey, dads, what you sow now, your daughters will reap later.

How a woman feels about herself as a woman goes back to how dad treated his little girl, report experts.

"Behind every great woman, you will find her dad" -- that's if he was an engaged, present, involved dad, says Dr. Mary Jo Rapini.

"If dads are able to admire their daughters achievements, character and interests and not their looks, the daughter will grow up to be confident and self assured. She will choose men who treat her with the same admiration and respect as her dad did," adds Rapini, a psychotherapist and author.

According to Rapini, a dad has so much power over his daughter.

"If he gives her gifts and focuses on her looks he will raise a girl who is more materialistic and thinks love and affection comes in a gift box.'

Illinois Fathers - upcoming Father's Day events

Matt · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via ACFC's recent update email. Link here.

"We are meeting near you soon!

* June 19, 2009 - Springfield - Fatherless Day Rally in Springfield IL.
* July 18-19, 2009 - 2009 Family Preservation Rally, Washington DC

Come out and spend a little time with us."

Child Support and the Passing of John Cole

Matt · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Also via ACFC's recent update email. Link here. From the note:

'Two years ago this August in conjunction with the Family Preservation Festival in Washington DC, ACFC hosted an event at the National Press Club promoting Angelo Lobo's documentary Support: System Down. One member of the panel was John Cole who relayed his Virginia child support experience.

John's battle with cancer ended last week with his passing on June 11th. As you watch his video note the fact that even though John and his ex had reached an agreement over his support the state would not honor their agreement and continued to hound John, now literally to death....

John's story is preceded by comments of another Shared Parenting warrior who past last year minister Ron Smith. Thanks to William Wagener for posting this video.'

Woman Guilty in Sex-Games Murder of French Businessman

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GENEVA — A woman was convicted on Wednesday of murdering one of France's richest men by shooting him four times while he was dressed in a latex suit and tied up in a chair during a sex game.

A 12-member jury at Geneva's Court of Assizes found former mistress Cecile Brossard guilty of killing her lover Edouard Stern four years ago. Brossard, 40, admitted killing the banker but said it was because he enraged her by suggesting she was a $1 million prostitute.

The jury accepted the prosecutor's assertion that it was murder, which is punishable by up to 20 years in prison. The sentence is expected Thursday.
...
"I am not a thief. I am not poisonous," she told the court. "I am just desperately in love with a man and I will be forever."'

How the public school system fails boys

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is much criticism of the No Child Left Behind Act. Some authors and experts are now calling the act No Child but Boys Left Behind Act. As a male teacher in the education system, I feel it is decidedly not male friendly. We can debate whether the gender bias is intentional later.
...
Peter West believes schools fail boys for many of the same reasons I see boys fail Boys are in perpetual motion. They are aggressive, even when young. Classrooms are not places of toleration for kinesthetic behavior. We expect even normal boys to sit still for long periods. Aggressive play is involved in young males sense of mastery, a critical part of their development. This is normal male behavior yet in classrooms there is little toleration for it.

When boys are boys we often tend to bring on the medication, not to address behavioral deficits, but to handle our desire for sedate managed classrooms.'

12-year-old seriously injures boy with bookbag full of rocks; says she was sexually harassed

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SEATTLE - A 12-year-old girl could face criminal charges after hitting a boy with a backpack at school.

That boy was knocked unconscious, but the girl claims the real crime is relentless sexual harassment at school.

Yesterday, 12-year-old Mark Smith was hit in the head with a backpack that some say was filled with rocks. He fell to the ground and lost consciousness after hitting his head. "I heard a thump and then I heard another thump and I woke up in a hospital bed," the sixth-grader said.

...

She says the incident came only after suffering a year's worth of relentless sexual harassment and bullying by boys at Seattle's Denny Middle School. She says she had to stand up for herself.

...

Alexis Austin now faces a possible 90-day suspension from school, which would take effect next fall.

Police plan to send the case to King County prosecutors to see if they want to press charges.'

Japan: Men-only train cars sought in groping fears

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TOKYO (Reuters) - Many women taking the crowded train in Tokyo opt for women-only carriages during the rush hour to avoid gropers.

Now, for fear of being accused of groping, some are asking for carriages reserved for men as well.

Ten shareholders of Seibu Holdings, which runs trains in the Tokyo area, have petitioned for carriages reserved for men.

"There have been many cases of groping, as well as false charges of groping, on Seibu Railway," the shareholders said in a notice seeking a vote at the company's annual meeting next Wednesday.

"While measures against groping, such as setting women-only carriages, have been effective to a certain extent, no measures have been taken against false charges of groping... In the spirit of gender-equality, a male-only carriage must be introduced."'

Moscow metro to rejects women-only carriages and VIP trains

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The Moscow metro is not going to follow the example of Beijing authorities to introduce women-only carriages to prevent the sexual harassment of women.

“We have never considered such a question,” the chairman of the press service of the Moscow metro, Pavel Sukharnikov, told RIA Novosti.

The official added that there were no complaints from female passenger of the metro. However, this subject receives a lot of attention on the Russian Internet. Many bloggers write on their web-pages that every woman was subjected to sexual harassment in public transport at least once in her lifetime.

Psychologists say that public transport provides a perfect environment for that: many people, availability and an opportunity to avoid punishment. Up to 40 percent of female passengers of the Moscow metro were subjected to sexual harassment.

...

Dmitry Gayev, the chairman of the Moscow metro, previously said that there would be no VIP carriages in the underground. The idea to introduce such carriages appeared in St. Petersburg.

“I’ve heard those rumors about VIP trains and VIP carriages in the St. Petersburg metro. The subject was discussed actively, but I can officially reject the information,” he said.

“The metro is an open system of transportation, where all people are equal, just like they are in a sauna. If you’re stuck in a traffic jam, leave your Bentley and ride the metro,” Gayev said.

Dmitry Gayev also said that there would be neither bathrooms nor garbage cans in the Moscow metro.'

Judge Sotomayor and the Belizean Grove

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the New York Times reported yesterday, Judge Sotomayor has informed the Senate that (in NYT's phrasing) the Belizean Grove, the "all-female networking club" she belongs to, "did not discriminate in an inappropriate way."
...
As Jennifer Rubin points out, the "we let the guys come to party" defense "is reminiscent of the 'we let women be social members' excuses that exclusive men's clubs routinely gave for decades—and which were scorned by women's groups." Further:

> [T]he line about "no one ever asking to join" is rich. Certainly if one declares the organization to be "all men" or "all white" or "all anything" those not in the "all" group are going to be dissuaded from seeking membership. Isn't the mere statement of exclusivity enough to raise concerns?'

...
I won't claim that Sotomayor's membership in the Belizean Grove is itself a matter of any concern to me. But her apparent violation of Canon 2C and her readiness to rationalize her own participation in reverse discrimination tie into broader concerns about her impartiality.

Egypt Approves Quota for Women in Parliament

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Egyptian parliament passed a law Sunday adding 64 seats reserved for women to the lower house of the legislature. The quota creates 32 new constituencies with two seats each for women candidates only. It will take effect during next year's elections and raises the number of seats in the People's Assembly from 454 to 518.

Egypt's Minister of Legal and Parliamentary Affairs Mufid Shehab stated that the law "ensures parity for women and promotes their role in society, as stipulated by the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which Egypt has signed," reported Agence France Presse. Shehab also indicated the law will be effective for just two five-year parliamentary sessions in hopes that after that period, the number of women in parliament will increase without affirmative action.'

Some claims by man exonerated in rape can go forward

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A judge this morning found that some of the claims raised in a civil lawsuit by a man who was wrongfully incarcerated for 19 years for rape can move forward, though two others cannot.

Thomas Doswell filed a federal lawsuit against Detective Herman Wolf, his supervisors and the city of Pittsburgh, in June 2007, alleging among other things that he was the subject of a malicious prosecution.

Today, Chief U.S. District Judge Donetta Ambrose threw out both Mr. Doswell's state and federal claims of malicious prosecution, finding that at the time of his arrest, the state did establish probable cause.

Mr. Doswell was convicted of rape and sentenced to 13 to 26 years in prison stemming from the March 13, 1986, attack of a woman who worked at Forbes Hospital. However, the conviction was vacated in August 2005 when DNA testing of seminal fluid in the case showed conclusively that Mr. Doswell was not her attacker.'

USA Today: New daditude: Today's fathers are hands-on, pressure off

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'AUSTIN — Today's fathers may well take parenting as seriously as their mates, but unlike many moms, dads don't view it as a competitive sport. Instead, the new attitude of 21st-century fatherhood is hands-on and involved, but with a hint of playfulness.

"All of these social expectations have developed over decades about what moms are supposed to do. We don't have a new picture of what involved dads are supposed to look like," says Will Courtenay, a psychotherapist in Berkeley, Calif., who is on the advisory board of The Center for Men and Young Men at McLean Hospital, Harvard Medical School.

Those who study fatherhood say today's dads are forging a new identity, as working women press for a more egalitarian home life, and telecommuting and workplace flexibility make it possible for dads to have more time with the kids. Also, dads today are no longer the stuffy or clueless fathers portrayed on TV.'

MND: Troubling Findings About College Men

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's a piece on the Second Conference on College Men that took place at the University of Pennsylvania back in May (Inside Higher Education, 5/22/09). The article discusses a couple of studies done by Frank Harris and Keith Edwards into "the gendered experiences and identities of men in college." Overall, the people presenting the papers seem fairly sympathetic to men on campus, so you might ask why they open with statements like this:

"When we think about acts of violence, sexual assault, sexual harassment on college campuses, overwhelmingly the perpetrators of those acts on our campuses are men."

Now, there are several studies, like this one from the University of Florida, that contradict those claims. That showed that 32% of UF women surveyed said they were perpetrators of dating violence, versus only 24% of men. Another survey showed that 58% of UF stalkers were women.

...

Tellingly the article goes on to say,

Edwards and Harris also reported finding that the students had limited relationships with other men, particularly their friends and fathers, and experienced a loss of self. “It’s sort of for me the most poignant part of all this,” said Edwards. “I lose my authenticity when I pretend I’m someone I’m not.”

These findings are troubling. In the first place, they strongly suggest the effects of fatherlessness on these young men. The descriptions of what they understand masculinity to be are classic examples of boys without a mature masculine presence in their lives. Of course I can't say how many of these young men grew up without fathers, but the researchers pointedly noted the young men's "limited relationships" with their dads.'

Ex-teacher reaches plea deal in sex case

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FARMINGTON, Utah (AP) - A former Bountiful Junior High School teacher has reached a plea deal in a case that accused her of having sex with an underage boy.

Linda Nef, 46, pleaded guilty on Tuesday in 2nd District Court to attempted aggravated sex abuse of a child, a first-degree felony.

She had been charged with rape of a child and sodomy on a child, both first-degree felonies.
...
A second teacher, Valynne Bowers, 40, has pleaded not guilty to rape and forcible sodomy in a case involving the same boy when he was 14. She is due in court on June 29.'

No retirement benefits for teacher accused of sex with student

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Maine East High School teacher and former soccer coach charged with having sex with a 16-year-old former student known to be a gang member now has been fired by District 207.

That means Jennifer Espinosa, 38, will not get any retirement benefits. She had been a tenured teacher with 15 years at the district.

Espinosa, of Park Ridge, was charged with two counts of aggravated criminal sexual abuse as a result of an eight-month relationship with a former student, according to a Cook County Sheriff's office release.

Espinosa told police she "loves" the 16-year-old boy, who was expelled from Maine East in September and is a known gang member, the release said.'

The Daily Herald reports that the Maine Township High School District 207 school board voted unanimously earlier this month to terminate Espinosa's contract.'

USA Today Opinion: Decline of the American male

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Like most Americans, I look at the news about the economy, the need for health care reform and our growing national debt, and I worry about how we're going to escape the recession.

But as someone who has spent his career working to save an endangered species men I have another worry on my mind: What are we going to do about the Great He-cession?

This troubling trend has been going on for several years, but it really picked up speed at the end of 2008. Of the 5.2 million people who've lost their jobs since last summer, four out of five were men. Some experts predict that this year, for the first time, more American women will have jobs than men. And that's just furthering the decline of the endangered male.

Consider this: A 2007 government survey found that of the 36.8 million American adults who lack health insurance, 56% are men. But given the tremendous percentage of lost jobs that were held by men, that number could skyrocket. For family men, at least, there's a built-in safety net: The preponderance of two-career couples means that women, and their secure jobs, often provide the benefits. It's men who are single or divorced and who, studies show, live shorter lives than their married brethren who now make up the largest segment of the unemployed and uninsured. The impact of this in the form of untreated illness and injury will follow single men around for a generation.
...
The Obama administration showed great eagerness in addressing the problems of women soon after it took office, with the establishment of the White House Council on Women and Girls. We applaud that move, and we now look for equal time for the males of the species.'

A critical role for fathers

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A father's rights have remained a largely hidden issue, tucked away beneath America's fiery and passionate opinions on abortion. In many ways, the parental rights of expectant fathers are blatantly ignored, and fathers are, in a court of law, unable to voice their opinion in regard to childbirth.
...
"Men's rights are trampled on all the time when it comes to reproductive rights," said Dianna Thompson, executive director of the American Coalition for Fathers and Children. It is time to fight back, to force our government to re-evaluate the logic of treating men as little more than fertilizers.

This case raises serious questions about a father's say in the life of his own child, as well as the extent of the government's duty to help project human rights and encourage the family unit. Sadly, these profound questions fall by the wayside in a society that worships at the golden calf of individual choice, and relegates the voice of fathers and unborn babies to the margin.'

Barbara Kay: Height restrictions at the sperm bank ("The commodification of sperm")

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Googling desperately, I came upon an informational tidbit that proved excellent (and only slightly ribald) fodder for debate laughs, but also seems an apt take-off point for my yearly Fatherless Day column, namely: Most sperm banks will not accept donations from men who stand under 5’ 11” in height.

The sperm-seekers whose demand has produced this height restriction aren’t giggly teenagers or desperate housewives addicted to Harlequin romances. They are strong, autonomous, educated, middle class, not-so-young women of ambition with support systems and resources sufficient to the logistical demands of child-rearing.
...
We now take for granted the technology of alternate reproductive initiatives that marginalize men’s contribution to the family, and by extension to society. But we shouldn’t. Every child born with only half an identity — the mother’s — is a reproach to our decision, which began with the advent of the birth control pill in 1959, to privilege the sexual and reproductive rights of adults over the rights of children. For “adults,” read “women.”

Men took their cues from women. They soon internalized the feminist message that they had many responsibilities as fathers, but unlike mothers no natural rights, a rubric borne out in higher court judgments and countless custody narratives. Men’s biological and social value, and their relationship to their issue, has for some time been contingent on women’s wishes and perceived needs.'

Ed. note: The same article appears in the same paper under the headline 'The commodification of sperm'.

'It Pays, for a Change, to Be a Woman in the Workplace'

anthony · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women workers are faring better than men in the current economic downturn, for a variety of reasons. So much so that they may soon pass men and become the majority gender in the American workplace.

By November of last year, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, women had already become just more than 49 percent of the non-farm labor force. And the New York Times reports that in the current economic turndown, men have suffered 82 percent of the job losses. That's true, in part, because struggling industries like automaking and homebuilding employ an overwhelmingly male workforce.

But there are other reasons why job prospects for women are brighter right now than they are for men. Women make less money than men in many comparable jobs. That infuriates women's-rights advocates, but it makes women more attractive to employers who are cutting costs to weather the recession. Many industries have culled their executive and veteran workforce - men, by and large - by paying older workers to retire.'

Australia: Mother allowed her 12-YO to get pregnant

SpikeRants · 17 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Her mother allowed her boyfriend to move in with them, the father made REPEATED calls to Social Services about it, and was ignored. He finally gets custody, and finds out she's pregnant. Wow. Mothers are the best custodial parents, are they? Excerpt:

'NEW SOUTH WALES, Australia - A preteen who was allowed to live with her 15-year-old boyfriend despite her father's calls to authorities is now pregnant with the teen's child.

The girl was living with her mother and was only 11 when her boyfriend moved in. Her father, who was living elsewhere, repeatedly called the Department of Community Services, Australia's version of CPS.

However, no one responded. Police said they couldn't intervene because both children were underage, according to the Daily Telegraph.'

"When she cries rape"

webdigr · 18 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The questions being asked in Mumbai, in Bollywood, are not whether actor Shiney Ahuja did, as was reported, rape his 18-year-old domestic maid or had, as is suspected, consensual sex with her. The questions being asked are what happens to the man in such a case?

How do the police distinguish between what was rape and consensual sex? Is it just the woman's word against the man's? What if she is lying? Or out to exploit and blackmail the man? Trap him into marrying her after what was just an affair but mutual agreement? And... further, what happens next? What is the sentence for rape? And can there be one for consensual sex between adults? Also, if (as in Shiney's case) the man happens to be married and had consensual sex, is he only guilty of adultery? And if he is married and has committed rape, what kind of sentence does he face for the crime? Most Indian laws, framed during the colonial days of the British Raj, remain as grey as ever with prosecuting authorities struggling to get convictions while defence lawyers pick holes in the chargesheet. Even while the police muddle their way through the many 'rape' cases in their files, BT posed these questions to criminal law experts."

Maryland Woman Indicted on Charges of Killing Adopted Daughters, Storing Bodies in Freezer

Matt · 18 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'ROCKVILLE, Maryland — A Maryland woman has been indicted on charges of killing two adopted daughters and storing their bodies in her freezer.

State's Attorney John McCarthy says 43-year-old Renee Bowman will face murder and child abuse charges in the deaths of the two girls and abuse of her surviving daughter.

The case began in September 2008 when Bowman's 7-year-old daughter jumped out a window and was found in their Calvert County neighborhood.

The family lived in Montgomery County between 2005 and 2007. Investigators believe that's where Bowman killed the girls and that's where a grand jury indicted her on those charges.

The girls were adopted in the District of Columbia. Bowman continued collecting payments from a D.C. agency after their deaths.'

India: "'Deprived dads' to rally for parenting rights" arindamp · 19 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BANGALORE: Many Bangalore men who are separated from their wives but pine for their children are set to mark Father's Day (June 21) by taking out a rally here. Kids should get the love of both parents, they stress.

Saturday's rally will see these men asserting their right to be in touch with their children.

It is the brainchild of Children's Rights Initiative For Shared Parenting (CRISP), a city-based NGO fighting for shared parenting rights, in association with Save the Indian Family Foundation (SIFF).
...
"On the occasion of Father's Day, CRISP members will have a rally in the morning -- near Mahatma Gandhi statue at MG Road -- to create awareness on the importance of the father in the life of a child," added Kumar.

He himself has been battling for the custody of his daughter for almost a decade.'

Canada: New powers would allow police to snoop on web

Matt · 19 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police will be given new powers to eavesdrop on Internet-based communications as part of a contentious government bill, to be announced today, which Public Safety Minister Peter Van Loan has said is needed to modernize surveillance laws crafted during "the era of the rotary phone."

The proposed legislation would force Internet service providers to allow law enforcement to tap into their systems to obtain information about users and their digital conversations.

Police have lobbied for a new law for almost 10 years, saying that they need to access "Internet safe havens" for gangsters, sexual predators and terrorists.
...

"This is really not about the warrantless tracking of Canadians' Internet use," said Clayton Pecknold, of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police.

Privacy advocates and civil libertarians, however, have vocally opposed the prospect of giving police "lawful access" to the digital conversations of Canadians by being able to access such things as their text messages, e-mails, web surfing habits and Internet phone lines.
...
Federal Privacy Commissioner Jennifer Stoddard recently warned that forcing ISPs to surrender information "is a serious step forward toward mass surveillance" that violates the rights of Canadians.'

Obama kicks off a national conversation on fatherhood

anthony · 19 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama will kick off a national conversation today about fatherhood, family, and mentoring with a series of events around DC and a gathering of young men for a discussion at the White House.

Obama, whose father abandoned him when he was two years old, also penned an essay for Parade magazine about his experiences as a dad. In that essay he talks about seeing fatherhood through his father's absence—he saw his father for the last time when he was 10 and only got to know him through letters and family lore.
...
“We need fathers to step up, to realize that their job does not end at conception; that what makes you a man is not the ability to have a child but the courage to raise one,” he writes.'

Woman Skinned Puppy To Make Belt, Cops Say

anthony · 19 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 23-year-old woman who got a friend to kill her Jack Russell terrier was charged with skinning the puppy to make a belt out of its hide.

Krystal Lynn Lewis and Austin Michael Mullins, 26, were being held Friday in the Muskogee County jail on $25,000 bail each. They were charged with one felony count of cruelty to animals.

A Muskogee County judge ordered a mental competency hearing for Lewis.

Lewis wanted the puppy, named Poplin, killed because it was a gift from a female ex-lover with whom she doesn't get along, said Muskogee County sheriff's deputy George Roberson.'

Roberson said Mullins shot the terrier 10 times with a .22-caliber pistol. Lewis skinned the animal at her apartment and nailed the hide to a board.'

Dead Man's Sperm Gives Life, Not Benefits

anthony · 19 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 10-year-old girl conceived from the frozen sperm of a dead man cannot receive his Social Security benefits, a federal appeals court ruled.

A panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Wednesday upheld a lower court's rejection of child survivor benefits for Brandalynn Vernoff, who was born nearly four years after her father's death in 1995.

The case involved sperm that Bruce Vernoff's widow, Gabriela, had a doctor extract after he died unexpectedly from an allergic reaction. In 1998, she used it for in vitro fertilization and gave birth to Brandalynn in a Los Angeles hospital on March 17, 1999.

Gabriela Vernoff later applied for child survivor benefits from the Social Security Administration but was rejected. A federal judge in Santa Ana also rejected her claims.'

NIH Funds $423,500 Study of Why Men Don't Like to Use Condoms

anthony · 19 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The federal government is spending $423,500 to find out why men don't like to wear condoms, a project government watchdogs say is a nearly-half-a-million-dollar waste of taxpayer money.
...
"The project aims to understand the relationship between condom application and loss of erections and decreased sensation, including the role of condom skills and performance anxiety, and to find new ways to improve condom use among those who experience such problems."
...
"This government is so out of whack with what the priorities are that this actually makes sense that we'd be wasting money on a condom study rather than the real problems facing the country," said David Williams, vice president for policy at Citizens Against Government Waste, which tracks wasteful spending in the federal budget.

For American men -- many of whom have already undergone years of awkward sex ed in the care of gym teachers -- the study might not offer much of a boost, Williams said.'

Sotomayor quits women's club after GOP criticism

Matt · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor resigned Friday from an elite all-women's club after Republicans questioned her participation in it. Sotomayor said she resigned from the Belizean Grove to prevent the issue from becoming a distraction in her confirmation hearings.

In a letter to Democratic Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont and Republican Sen. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, the federal appeals court judge said she is convinced that the club does not practice "invidious discrimination" and that her membership in it did not violate judicial ethics.

But she said she didn't want questions about it to "distract anyone from my qualifications and record."

Federal judges are bound by a code that says they shouldn't join any organization that discriminates by race, sex, religion or nationality.

The Belizean Grove bills itself as women's answer to the 130-year-old all-male Bohemian Club in California. The club owns a 2,500-acre camping area in northern California called the Grove. Chief Justice Earl Warren belonged to the Bohemian Club beginning in the 1940s, before he joined the court and long before the federal judiciary adopted a code of conduct.'

Black widow woman who drugged, raped ten men

Mr VanHuizen · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A YOUNG Russian woman, a devoted collector of horror films and spiders, is on trial for sedating and raping 10 men.

The police were shocked that 32-year-old Valeria K., a quiet good-looking woman from the city of Tambov, was the mysterious rapist who abused 10 local men after poisoning them with clonidine, Life.ru reports.

Valeria, who has already been nicknamed the Black Widow for her love of spiders, would get acquainted with men and invite them to her place.

...

Waking up in hospital with clonidine poisoning and penis trauma, all the victims could remember was a friendly brunette who gave them drinks.'

Mom seeking justice for child victims

Matt · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every so often, she said, her youngster's mind drifts back to the morning of Oct. 16, 2007 when a 24-year-old city woman — in a fit of supposed rage — forced his tiny hands into a pot of boiling water in the Applewood Drive apartment she shared with her then-boyfriend, Damon's father.

Damon, who was two at the time, sustained serious burns and will require several surgeries, skin grafts and therapy to treat the wounds.

...

The first half of Muir's sentence is being spent under house arrest, while during the remaining nine months she will be allowed out into the community under certain conditions.

Like many others in the community, the boy's mother remains outraged at the sentence, charging her son was shortchanged by the criminal justice system.

...

To date, more than 8,200 people are members of her group 'Where is the justice?' — an element that Reddom hopes to harness into a special event to raise awareness about abused children and the "failings of the justice system" in the hopes of initiating change.

For instance, the Canadian justice system is "a very sexist," she said, noting that in her opinion, a man would have received a much harsher sentence for the same crime.

"This event will be to raise awareness about how this is happening to our kids everyday — children are getting abused everyday and people are getting away with it.'

Why ads paint dads as buffoons

Matt · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In commercial after commercial on TV, the image of the modern husband and father is one of the buffoon - trapped in a shed he built without doors, staring blankly at spilled juice, gorging on dog cookies until his ever-capable wife comes to the rescue.

Such ads are a mainstay because they work: They make viewers laugh, and they sell. And, also, critics argue, because such stereotyping remains socially acceptable.

"WASP men are the greatest target in advertising. The reason I say that is they are the only safe target in advertising," said Terry O'Reilly of Pirate Toronto, a leading audio advertising firm, and host of The Age of Persuasion, a CBC radio show.
...
"It reinforces for women and men alike the idea that this really isn't men's normal home turf, that they're not able to be good at it, and therefore, why bother?" Prof. Thomas said.

"As a feminist, I find that problematic, because while it appears to be empowering women - saying women are superior, women are supermoms, they can do everything, men can't really do this stuff -- what's the outcome going to be? That women carry on doing it all."'

Ed. note: The print edition discusses some examples of such ads at the end of the article. Print version with the title "Jeer old dad" is here.

Walk a Mile this weekend in Bowmanville

Matt · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BOWMANVILLE -- Gentlemen, it's not too late to don your favourite pair of women's shoes and take to the streets.

The first-ever Walk A Mile in Her Shoes event, to raise awareness about violence against women, is set for Saturday in downtown Bowmanville, as part of the Fabulous Fifties Festival.

The event is organized by Bowmanville's Bethesda House, a women's shelter and outreach centre. The organization paired with a similar group in Northumberland and ordered a number of pairs of ruby-red stilettos, specially sized for men's feet, to be worn during events in both areas.'

Women wanting to work with children?

Proud_to_be_a_man · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

You have to suspect any woman who wants to work with children. They're almost certainly paedophiles... Oh, sorry! That's the attitude that men have to put up with isn't it? Women, of course, can be trusted to look after children without abusing them in any way... er, wait a minute: Second woman charged over nursery 'child porn' probe. Excerpt:

"A woman arrested as part of an inquiry into child abuse allegedly committed by a female nursery worker has appeared in court.

"Angela Allen, 39, is charged with four counts of sexual assault, four counts of taking indecent photographs, four counts of possessing indecent photographs and four counts of distributing indecent photographs."

MSNBC: Obama makes responsible dads a priority

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a candidate and now president, he's been telling men what sort of father they should be. It's become his Father's Day ritual and he's not shy about it.
...
'His finger-wagging is most pointed when addressing other black men, reflecting years of worry about the fabric of black families and single mothers, but it applies to everyone.

Father's Day 2007: "Let's admit to ourselves that there are a lot of men out there that need to stop acting like boys; who need to realize that responsibility does not end at conception; who need to know that what makes you a man is not the ability to have a child but the courage to raise a child."

Father's Day 2008: "Any fool can have a child. That doesn't make you a father. It's the courage to raise a child that makes you a father."'

Huffington Post: Fathers Matter "Now" More Than Ever

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers matter more than ever, and anyone who doubts their importance has inevitably endured life without one.

Even feminist Gloria Steinem said, "Most American children suffer too much mother and too little father."

The politically correct modern notion is that as long as a child is healthy and loved, it doesn't matter who they are raised and nurtured by. And of course if there is no father, any loving parent is integral for a child's well being.

But the male influence in a child's life is invaluable, irreplaceable and necessary for most of us. There, I said it.

As politically incorrect as it may sound, fathers are important, and it would do us all good to reflect on where we might be without the great male influence that our fathers have bestowed on our lives.'

Watch Out for Myths About Fatherhood

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The role of the father is increasingly problematic in the context of modern American culture. Fatherhood has been marginalized and the rule and authority of fathers has been depreciated, ridiculed, and continuously redefined. From the Berenstain Bears to The Simpsons, fathers are all too often the object of ridicule or this subject of the laugh line.
...
The marginalization of fatherhood can be traced to many developments, but one prime source of this marginalization is the intellectual class and its radical commitment to ideological feminism. Fatherhood is now an ideological category that is inescapably linked to everything from patriarchy (considered to be the original sin) to popular culture (where the intellectual elites exert a very significant, if indirect influence).'

Australia: What we need is a fatherhood revolution

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Father's Day 2009 is being celebrated with a renewed sense of vigour and excitement. Fathers and children are appearing in more advertisements. The media are running father-friendly stories. Restaurants are booked out for Father's Day as well as Mother's Day.

...

The renovation of fatherhood and the renewal of masculinity have been heralded by writers like Ed Cole, author of Maximised Manhood; Gordon Dalby, Healing the Masculine Soul; Robert Bly, Iron John; and Warren Farrell, Father and Child Reunion and even by feminist authors such as Adrienne Burgess, Fatherhood Reclaimed and Susan Falundi, Stiffed. Australian author Steve Biddulph has been a trailblazer for the Australian fatherhood and men's movement for many years. His books sell very smartly overseas as well.'

Mother, May I? Helping Moms Back Off So Dads Can Be Dads

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The benefits of having a positive, involved father are well-documented by decades of research.

Now, scholars are focusing their microscopes on an obstacle to fathers' involvement: "gatekeeping" by mothers who control or hamper fathers' interactions with their children.

The findings reveal how women and men alike can trigger gatekeeping, which can cause tension between partners and dissatisfaction with parenting routines. As Father's Day nears, the research also sheds light on how dads can play a bigger role.

"The more we understand these patterns, the more parents will be able to make conscious and deliberate choices" about parenting, says Sarah Schoppe-Sullivan, assistant professor of human development at the Ohio State University.'

Personal Matters: Acknowledging gifts our fathers have given us

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I asked some friends to share their thoughts on gifts they received from their fathers:

A social worker: "My father cared about others and was always doing things for people. He believed in the importance of family, not just in the immediate sense but in the larger sense of all of humanity. My father taught me what is important in life."

A political activist and employment agency founder: "My father's ability to beat the odds in the face of adversity and his zest for life are the things I remember most about him. He suffered congestive heart failure in 1981 and in 1982 ... the doctors told us he wouldn't survive. He changed his diet, lost 30 pounds, stopped smoking and drinking, and lived an additional 11 years. Sometime later I was the Democratic candidate for representative in my state and he became one of my most enthusiastic supporters. He died suddenly at 81 in the midst of my campaign. I miss him every day."

A business leader: "The gift my father gave me was to teach me to take responsibility. When I did something wrong, he encouraged me to admit it, learn from it, put it behind me and go on. He taught me not to blame others for my problems."'

UK: Should your business do more for working dads?

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Fathers' Day looms, is it really the case that working dads get a raw deal from employers?

That's the conclusion of a survey from careers website TheLadders.co.uk, released to coincide with (/shamelessly cash in on) Fathers' Day this weekend. It proclaims that 72% of executives think UK companies should review and revise their company policies to help them be better fathers. According to the survey, men think being a father also makes them a better employee - yet they still don't feel comfortable asking for time off for paternity leave and family commitments. But given that some men don't even realise they're entitled to paternity leave, it suggests that employers may not be entirely to blame...

Nearly three-quarters of those polled said they didn't take enough time off when their children were born, while around half saying they were 'uncomfortable' about taking time out for family commitments like school sports days and parents meetings. The suggestion is that execs just don't believe their line manager is going to give them time off to watch their kid's egg-and-spoon race without thinking they're a lily-livered work-shy waste of space. 'Men still feel 'family' is a dirty word in the work environment,' bemoans TheLadders's MD Derek Pilcher.'

NY State Assemblyman sponsors shared parenting presumption bill

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'They and their supporters say the current legal system is biased against fathers and that new laws could eliminate the creation of an unnecessarily adversarial relationship between parents.

State Assemblyman Michael Benjamin, D-Morrisania sponsored legislation this year that would create a
The bill will not make it out of committee before the end of the session next week, but Benjamin said he's already speaking with the chair of the Committee on Children and Families about organizing a roundtable discussion on the subject this fall.

The bill will not make it out of committee before the end of the session next week, but Benjamin said he's already speaking with the chair of the Committee on Children and Families about organizing a roundtable discussion on the subject this fall.

“I think it's an issue that's important to fathers and I think fathers should have some consideration when it comes to custody cases,” he said.

Benjamin said advocates for fathers' rights he's met with have been “very zealous” about protecting their relationships with their children.'

Former Boise teacher gets jail time and 10 years of probation in sex case

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Michelle Farley apologized to her family, friends and "family of teachers" for having an inappropriate relationship with a 17-year-old student last year.

"I want to apologize to (the teen) and his family for the embarrassment and hurt I caused," the former Borah High philosophy teacher said. "It hurts me that I have hurt so many people because what I did was so wrong."

Farley left the courtroom in handcuffs Friday, on her way to the Ada County Jail, where she could spend the next six months after pleading guilty to a charge of felony sexual battery of a minor.

Fourth District Judge Timothy Hansen told Farley she can ask for an early release once she completes a class on "thinking errors" at the jail. But she will spend the next decade on probation, have to undergo sex-offender treatment and pay a $2,000 fine. '

Canada: 'Are girls smarter than boys?'

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ministry statistics provide ample evidence of the gender gap that has been observed by many during grad ceremonies. One set of statistics — the number of students receiving $1,000 provincial scholarships for excellent Grade 12 exam results — shows that hundreds more girls than boys win every year.

Last year, the tests found that 19 per cent of Grade 4 boys in B.C. and 14 per cent of the girls weren't meeting expectations in reading. The figures were similar for writing with 23 per cent of boys and 13 per cent of girls not making the grade. In math, 21 per cent of boys and 22 per cent of girls weren't up to par.

Boys had slipped from the honour roll to the suspension list, and not just in Burnaby. Figures from around the province confirmed that female students were much more likely than male students to be successful in school.

Nearly a third of B.C.'s 60 school districts have developed programs to improve boys' performance, she added. "For example, some districts are engaging students differently and looking at research about brain function and developmental stages of boys and girls and how that affects learning."

That suggests more than 40 districts are doing nothing.'

Title IX Ruling in California Could Lead to Stricter Standards

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to offering men and women equal opportunities to play sports, close may no longer be good enough.

Judges have typically ruled that universities are in compliance with the federal gender-equity law known as Title IX if the proportion of athletes who are women is within 5 percent of the representation of women in the total enrollment.

But a settlement announced Wednesday between the University of California-Davis and three female athletes holds the university's athletic officials to a stricter 1.5 percent standard and could influence similar cases around the country, according to lawyers who are knowledgeable about gender-equity cases.
...
Under the settlement, Davis has 10 years to bring female participation in varsity sports to within 1.5 percent of their proportion of the overall student population. According to federal education statistics, female athletes made up about 50 percent of Davis's athletes in the 2007-8 academic year, but 56 percent of its student population.'

Title IX keeps LSU men's club soccer fighting to stay alive

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite the recent success and growth of the LSU women's soccer team, the abundance of men's talent is left to compete at the club level. On top of that, with the recent addition of the Baton Rouge Capitols, the lack of a college men's team forces the city's own pro soccer team to look at other colleges for recruiting purposes. The absence of a men's soccer team at LSU is mostly due to Title IX, which, ironically, is supposed to be equal opportunity promoting legislation.
...
Jamie Krebs of Southern Illinois University's student newspaper, "The Alestle," reiterated Bentley's concerns: "While 5,800 athletic opportunities have been added for women in the past ten years, more than 350 National Collegiate Athletic Association programs involving about 21,000 male athletes have been terminated since 1991. That's roughly ten percent of the male athletes participating in that period."'

Austria: Greens want law against sexism in advertising

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Greens want to toughen up laws against sexism in advertising.

Greens' women's spokeswoman Judith Schwentner said today (Fri) so-called self-control exercised through the advertising council had had little effect and had done nothing to prevent sexism in advertising.

Schwentner called for a new law against sexism in advertising, noting Denmark and Norway both had such laws on the books. She said her party would present appropriate legislation in parliament in the autumn.'

Uganda: Education Experts Criticise Affirmative Action for Girls

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kuala Lumpur — EDUCATION experts have criticised the affirmative action in favour of girls, saying it has sidelined boys' access to education.

The experts noted that while countries had made tremendous progress to bridge the gender gaps in schools, more boys were performing poorly in class compared to the girls and dropping out of school to look for employment.

"For years, we have focused on women. But the worst that can happen is that the global phenomenon might start making policies of affirmative action for the boys," remarked Dr. Fatiha Serour, the director of youth affairs at the Commonwealth Secretariat.

According to Serour, evidence that girls are outnumbering boys in schools had created a stir in some countries.'

Senator proposes "fatherhood legislation", Obama pledges to sign

anthony · 20 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'WASHINGTON (WANE) - Senator Evan Bayh is trying to address an epidemic he calls Absent Fathers in America.

He's proposing responsible fatherhood legislation. The father of two is working with President Obama to get the bill passed. Senator Bayh says it will help pay for job retraining, literacy programs and employment services to counsel and help non-custodial parents. Plus, it will strengthen child support collection efforts.

Bayh says implementing the bill will cost about $3 billion, but in the long run, it may reduce the amount of money the government already spends helping single-parent families.

The president has pledged to sign the bill into law if it reaches his desk.'

NOW Activists Elect New President Terry O'Neill to Succeed Kim Gandy

anthony · 21 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'This weekend members of the National Organization for Women (NOW) cast their votes for a new team of leaders to direct the largest grassroots feminist organization in the country over the next four years. NOW delegates elected Terry O'Neill, who served as the group's membership vice president from 2001 to 2005, to succeed President Kim Gandy.

Gandy will retire from her office on July 20 due to the organization's term limits; she has been a leader in NOW for 36 years, with 22 years of service at the national level, including the last eight as president.

"NOW is the organization that fights for the rights of all women no matter the circumstances of their birth, their race or sexual orientation, no matter if they live in poverty or are trying to escape violence," said NOW President-Elect Terry O'Neill. "My experience with domestic violence, as an abused wife left me humiliated and embarrassed. I only began to talk about this publically [sic] five years ago as I realized that to keep quiet was to continue the abuse. I want to empower women and telling my story does just that. Women are fed up with persistent inequality and are ready for change. I am honored and eager to lead NOW in making that change."'

No Country for Burly Men

Matt · 21 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A "man-cession." That's what some economists are starting to call it. Of the 5.7 million jobs Americans lost between December 2007 and May 2009, nearly 80 percent had been held by men. Mark Perry, an economist at the University of Michigan, characterizes the recession as a "downturn" for women but a "catastrophe" for men.

Men are bearing the brunt of the current economic crisis because they predominate in manufacturing and construction, the hardest-hit sectors, which have lost more than 3 million jobs since December 2007. Women, by contrast, are a majority in recession-resistant fields such as education and health care, which gained 588,000 jobs during the same period. Rescuing hundreds of thousands of unemployed crane operators, welders, production line managers, and machine setters was never going to be easy. But the concerted opposition of several powerful women's groups has made it all but impossible. Consider what just happened with the $787 billion American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009.

Last November, President-elect Obama addressed the devastation in the construction and manufacturing industries by proposing an ambitious New Deal-like program to rebuild the nation's infrastructure. He called for a two-year "shovel ready" stimulus program to modernize roads, bridges, schools, electrical grids, public transportation, and dams and made reinvigorating the hardest-hit sectors of the economy the goal of the legislation that would become the recovery act.

Women's groups were appalled. Grids? Dams? Opinion pieces immediately appeared in major newspapers with titles like "Where are the New Jobs for Women?" and "The Macho Stimulus Plan." A group of "notable feminist economists" circulated a petition that quickly garnered more than 600 signatures, calling on the president-elect to add projects in health, child care, education, and social services and to "institute apprenticeships" to train women for "at least one third" of the infrastructure jobs. At the same time, more than 1,000 feminist historians signed an open letter urging Obama not to favor a "heavily male-dominated field" like construction: "We need to rebuild not only concrete and steel bridges but also human bridges." As soon as these groups became aware of each other, they formed an anti-stimulus plan action group called WEAVE-- Women's Equality Adds Value to the Economy.'

Oh yeah, happy Father's Day

Matt · 21 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Have a good one, or at least try to, you poor miserable bastards!

Layoffs, courts put some dads in jail

Matt · 21 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This will be an exceptionally sad Father's Day for millions of divorced and separated fathers and the children who love them and need them. Many dads have lost their jobs or suffered significant drops in income. Because it is difficult for fathers to get their child support orders modified downward, many decent, loving fathers are being jailed because they can't keep up with their child support obligations.

Ed O'Donnell, chairman of the New Jersey State Bar Association's Family Law Executive Committee, says that it "usually requires in excess of six months before a judge will say, '[The job loss] is possibly a real change in circumstances'… Six months is a long time, when you're desperate."

This problem is creating many outrageous, well-documented injustices.

For example, in one case highlighted by the Boston Globe, a divorced father who worked in the real estate industry had been paying $6,000 a month in child support, plus additional expenses such as health insurance and tuition. When the real estate industry crashed, he fell behind and, with an application for a downward modification still pending, was handcuffed in court and jailed for 30 days.'

The fight goes on for Dads

Matt · 21 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine a child living without a father. A little boy or girl clutching a teddy bear on the stairs waiting for their dad to walk through the front door. In a broken household a child will spend many nights missing a dad wishing things were different. A million parental couples go through the family courts every year, and of those at least 40% of fathers have little or no contact with their children after separation.

Of 12 million children in the UK, one in four will have suffered the grim reality of separation from a mother or father during their childhood. Matt O'Connor, founder of one of the most high profile and controversial campaigns of the modern era, Fathers 4 Justice, described the British family courts as "the Devil's Labyrinth" because as he bluntly puts it, "when you get into the system it's near impossible to escape". His formidable struggle to see his two children, aged eleven and nine at the time of divorce from a previous marriage, was a battle through a legal system that ' criminalises and crushes you before suffocating you with a blanket of secrecy and censorship', as described in his biography Fathers 4 Justice: The Inside Story, published in 2007.'

Deporting Fathers in the Name of Homeland Security

anthony · 21 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As families celebrate Father's Day, consider the case of Roxroy Salmon. The father of four U.S.-born children, Salmon has lived in the United States for more than 30 years. Yet the Department of Homeland Security now threatens to deport him to Jamaica, a country where he has not resided for decades, due to minor drug convictions from more than 19 years ago for which he served no time. This would effectively deny his children their father by permanently exiling him from his family and their common homeland.

Salmon's story is hardly exceptional. Each year the federal government deports tens of thousands of non-citizens, many of them with U.S. citizen children, to countries to which they often have tenuous ties. By doing this, the federal government seriously injures children and families, and produces large numbers of a particular type of refugee.'

NineMSN Poll "Are Women more violent than they used to be" and related news story

Ric_TVY · 21 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The Daily Telegraph (Australian National Daily) ran a story this morning that the rate of female DV has increased by 159% in 8 years, also pointing out this was an increase of 11% per annum, while male DV is rising by 2% per annum.

Its actually a very decent article and quoted Reg Price, who runs the Men's Rights Agency. It even pointed out the problems men have being beleived by our Police and also the lack of shelters for men. NineMSN (Australia's version of MSN) couldnt bring themselves to run the story of course, but did make the issue the question for todays poll - "are women becoming more violent?". Interesting to see how feminists try to mis-direct attention away from this story. Excerpt:

'WOMEN are becoming more violent towards their partners.

Shocking figures have revealed that the number of women who have been charged with domestic violence-related assault has soared by 159 per cent over the past eight years.

The figures, from the NSW Bureau of Crime Statistics, show 2336 women faced court on charges of domestic violence in 2007, mainly for bashing their husbands, compared with just 818 in 1999.

Men's groups said yesterday they were happy that police were finally taking men seriously but it remained tough for husbands to admit they had been attacked by their wives.'

India: Stepmom names two-month-old in dowry FIR bharati · 22 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Mumbai: In diapers, lying in her mother's lap and yet to sprout teeth, but Zoya is an accused in a dowry harassment case. The two-month-old baby was named along with seven adults by her stepmother in a complaint letter to the police. What is worse is that the police has included the child's name in the FIR.

Zoya - who should be playing in crib - had to spend several hours in a police station with her mother, foregoing food and sleep and came very close to being arrested.

...

Meanwhile, legal experts are stunned to say the least.

Advocate Usha Makasare says, "It is crazy. Unheard of. We will have to see under what circumstances the court has given this order."'

'The Death of Macho'

anthony · 22 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. This essay left me speechless. Reihan Salam's e-mail address: salam-at-newamerica.net. Excerpt:

'For years, the world has been witnessing a quiet but monumental shift of power from men to women. Today, the Great Recession has turned what was an evolutionary shift into a revolutionary one. The consequence will be not only a mortal blow to the macho men's club called finance capitalism that got the world into the current economic catastrophe; it will be a collective crisis for millions and millions of working men around the globe.
...
Although not all countries will respond by throwing the male bums out, the backlash is real--and it is global. The great shift of power from males to females is likely to be dramatically accelerated by the economic crisis, as more people realize that the aggressive, risk-seeking behavior that has enabled men to entrench their power--the cult of macho--has now proven destructive and unsustainable in a globalized world.
...
It might be tempting to think that the death of macho is just a cyclical correction and that the alpha males of the financial world will all be back to work soon. Tempting, but wrong. The "penis competition" made possible by limitless leverage, arcane financial instruments, and pure unadulterated capitalism will now be domesticated in lasting ways.'

RADAR ALERT: Junk Science at the Dept. of Justice

Matt · 22 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

In his inaugural speech on January 20, President Obama declared, "We will restore science to its rightful place." And in a March 9 memo the president reminded the heads of federal agencies, "The public must be able to trust the science and scientific process informing public policy decisions."

Apparently the U.S. Department of Justice (DoJ) didn't get that message.

Because three months later the DoJ issued a report titled, "Practical Implications of Current Domestic Violence Research."[1] Sadly, the report cherry-picks the research and badly misrepresents the truth.

The report states on page 22: "Of course, the most powerful predictor of risk of domestic violence is gender." Apparently the DoJ never bothered to check out the nearly 250 scholarly studies that reveal gender is not a "powerful predictor" of violence because men and women are equally likely to abuse.[2]

Washington Times: 'A call to action for men'

anthony · 23 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This Father's Day, let's stand up as men and boldly shove back against this society's attacks on masculinity. To first be sure our left-right combination lands squarely, we have to clearly define manliness - we need to understand just what is being attacked before we can counterattack.
...
Here's a quick aside that must be addressed: Feminists, or especially ultra-left-wing feminists, "feminazis," please drop the knee-jerk reaction that masculinity is a threat to women. After all, any man who has to put down the other gender in order to prop up his ego is too insecure to be a real man. A male chauvinist is nothing more than a child in a man's body. To see for yourself, read the codes of honor. You won't find a sexist rule among them. Instead, you'll find that women need to adhere to the universal code of honor to be all they can be, just as men do.'

Sacks/Franklin columns on Obama and Father's Day

Matt · 23 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Articles here:

1. Our fatherhood crisis appearing in the Washington Times
2. Obama's Father's Day Criticism of Dads Misses Mark appearing in MSN (how did they get MSN to publish it??)

Excerpts:
1. 'For the past three Father's Days, President Obama has criticized father absence and fathers. In his new Parade magazine article, Mr. Obama writes, "We need fathers to step up, to realize that their job does not end at conception; that what makes you a man is not the ability to have a child but the courage to raise one."
...
Mr. Obama is correct that children need their fathers and that too many fathers do not come through for their children. However, his narrow "heroic single mom/deadbeat dad" viewpoint fails to acknowledge a crucial truth - it often is mothers, not fathers, who create fatherlessness.'

2. 'President Obama has marked Father's Day 2009, 2008, and 2007 by calling attention to the importance of fathers and the damage caused by their absence. He also has consistently placed the blame for fatherlessness squarely on men, saying father absence is caused by fathers who have "abandoned their responsibilities, acting like boys instead of men."
...
The explosion of divorce, out of wedlock births, and post-break-up father absence has greatly harmed our children. This tragedy has largely been blamed on fathers. While fathers do deserve some blame, mothers and the family law and child welfare systems have also done much to separate children from the fathers they love and need.'

'Bathtub girl' killer gets early release for university studies

Matt · 23 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'One of two Mississauga sisters convicted four years ago of killing their mother will be let out of prison and allowed to move to a halfway house.

The woman, who cannot be identified, was granted early release so she can do university studies this fall.

The sisters were convicted in 2005 of killing their mother in 2003 by drowning her in the bathtub.

The 22-year-old who was given early release was a minor at the time of the crime.

A judge in Brampton, Ont., agreed Monday to change the conditions of her sentence.

She will go to a halfway house in Barrie, Ont., and from there she will be allowed to take online courses with the University of Waterloo where she has been awarded a $2,000 scholarship.'

Fatherhood can be a thankless job

anthony · 24 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'Last Fathers' Day, U.S. President Barack Obama, so eloquent on most occasions, chose not to celebrate good fathers but to rant about "deadbeat dads." David Warren hasn't repeated that mistake. His Saturday column, "In praise of patriarchs" is excellent (and not only because of his reference to the books that I have written with Katherine Young). In the hope his article will jump-start a public discussion of fatherhood, I offer the following comments.

...

I'm dismayed, therefore, to find that our society seems hell-bent on undermining the culture of fatherhood (or whatever remains of that culture). My research with Katherine Young indicates that every person and every group, to have a healthy identity, must be able to make at least one contribution to society that is distinctive, necessary, and publicly valued. Now that women can take over two of the three historic functions of men, provider and protector (if necessary with the state's help), only progenitor remains. And to be a progenitor in any meaningful sense is to care for children in the ways that I've outlined here, not merely to contribute a teaspoonful of sperm or even a monthly cheque. Boys must know that society will indeed need them to make at least this one contribution.'

Mother pleads guilty to drunken breast-feeding

Matt · 24 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GRAND FORKS, N.D. - A North Dakota woman accused of breast-feeding her 6-week-old baby while drunk has pleaded guilty to child neglect.

Twenty-six-year-old Stacey Anvarinia could face up to five years in prison when she's sentenced on the felony charge in August.

Judge Sonja Clapp says Anvarinia will not have to register as an offender against children.'

Equal pay - for men!

GaryB · 25 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The BBC reports here today on a 'landmark' case where men have been awarded equal pay to women. Wow. Excerpt:

'A "landmark" legal decision involving three councils in the north east of England could pave the way for 12,000 men to take forward equal pay claims. Financial settlements had earlier been agreed for women workers paid less than men doing similar work. The Employment Appeal Tribunal has now ruled that 300 other male workers were discriminated against as they then remained on lower pay than the women.
...
Mr Justice Underhill said: "It would be surprising and unsatisfactory if the [Equal Pay] Act offered no remedy to men in a situation like the present.

"The case where men and women do the same job but receive different rates of pay is the paradigm of the kind of situation which the Act was intended to prevent, how would it seem if the roles were reversed and the 'piggyback' claimants were not men but women?"

Lawyers involved, from the Cloister Chambers, have described it as a landmark ruling which will have a bearing on many other cases, and could cost councils hundreds of millions of pounds. Yvette Genn from Cloisters said: "This ruling is what thousands of male workers who have not received equal pay up and down the country have been waiting for. "There is no doubt that many of the similar 12,000 cases in the system will now proceed and are likely to be successful."'

So does this mean we get some justice for us, for a change?!

Brazil custody battle update

Matt · 25 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Glad to see this on the Today show, which usually keeps pro-fathers'-rights-related stories and issues off their airplay list.

Women's group study sees no "boy crisis" in schools

anthony · 25 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — Both boys and girls are doing better in school, so there's no reason to fear that school systems favor girls at boys' expense, a women's advocacy group says in a study to be released today.

It's the freshest argument in the boys vs. girls debate in education, one in which the group, the American Association of University Women (AAUW), has been a major player.

Having said in an influential 1992 study that the education system worked against girls, it now argues that the real crisis is racial and economic disparities, not gender.

"The mythology of the boy crisis continues to be influential," said Catherine Hill, the association's director of research. One reason, she added, is that "people feel uncomfortable with the success of girls and women."'

Billy Bob Thornton's Daughter Indicted in Baby's Death

anthony · 25 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The eldest daughter of Oscar winner Billy Bob Thornton was indicted Wednesday on several charges – including first-degree murder, aggravated child abuse and aggravated manslaughter – in connection with the October 2008 death of a 1-year-old girl she was baby sitting in central Florida

Amanda Brumfield, 29, was booked at the Orange County Jail, where she is being held without bail, reports the Orlando Sentinel.

...

An autopsy revealed a fractured skull and brain injury, leading the medical examiner to rule the death a homicide. Police said Brumfield's explanation was inconsistent with the child's injuries.'

Obama appoints domestic violence adviser

anthony · 26 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'WASHINGTON (AP) - A longtime advocate for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault has been named to a new post advising the White House on those issues.

Vice President Joe Biden announced the appointment Friday of Lynn Rosenthal, an expert in domestic violence policy. The White House said she will advise President Barack Obama and work with government agencies to ensure that violence against women isn't ignored and the perpetrators are held accountable.

A former director of a women's shelter, Rosenthal was executive director of the National Network to End Domestic Violence from 2000 to 2006. And she worked as director of the Florida Coalition Against Domestic Violence.'

Ed. note: White House press release here.

"In fact, Men in Power is a hearty example of grassroots feminism."

anthony · 26 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But none of the stated aims of the Men in Power student organization were cited in either of these news sources. Both media outlets focused on the satirical article and both The Tribune and Feministing missed the point. Instead, the media outlets quietly spun stories to fit their conceptions of what it means to be a feminist and what it means to be a man. Stereotypes have taught us that these groups are mutually exclusive. But real evidence of what Steve Saltarelli and colleagues (both male and female) are saying and doing at U. Chicago shows that it is indisputable that their mission fits well into the larger movement for gender equality.

In fact, Men in Power is a hearty example of grassroots feminism.

Saltarelli agreed to begin Men in Power in order to “discuss issues of masculinity in society.” And he is reported in the Chicago Tribune article as saying that “If we have good men in our society, everyone benefits.”

So before feminists get in a tizzy over an organization with an offensive name without questioning what the group actually does, and before misogynistic men begin their victory dances claiming to have finally put women back in their places, maybe we should begin our investigation of stories like this from a more conscious and less combative perspective.'

Strip Searching Students -- And Empathy For Whom?

anthony · 26 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The separate Ginsburg dissent alluded only obliquely to her apparent view that strip searching a 13-year-old girl is worse than strip searching a 13-year-old boy, as she implied in an interview with Joan Biskupic of USA Today several weeks ago that has won widespread applause. To illustrate why the court needs more women, Ginsburg complained to Biskupic that some of her male colleagues' comments during the April 21 oral argument showed that they did not understand what a "sensitive age" 13 was for Savana because "they have never been a 13-year-old girl."

I agree that the court needs more women. I also agree that as a general rule, because of anatomical and perhaps other differences, it may well be more traumatic for 13-year-old girls -- I have never been one, but have raised two -- to strip in front of authority figures than for boys to do so.

But how relevant should such distinctions be to Fourth Amendment law? If some other case comes along in which school officials want to strip search a 13-year-old boy for ibuprofen pills, should they go ahead because boys are used to running around naked in locker rooms?

Memo to school officials: Don't try it. But perhaps some senator should ask Judge Sonia Sotomayor at her Supreme Court confirmation hearing whether girls and women should enjoy broader constitutional protections than boys and men in such cases, and perhaps in others, too.'

Ireland: Women-Only Heavy Equipment Training

anthony · 26 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The gathering along the community's main street celebrated the accomplishments of 10 women who graduated from the Introduction to Heavy Equipment Operation Course.

Each piece of equipment was driven by one of the 10 women from Trout Lake who successfully finished the course offered in the community from June 8 to 19. This is the first time in the territory the course has been offered to a women-only group.

The decision to open the course to just women was made by the Status of Women Council of the NWT which funded the course as part of its Northern Women in Mining, Oil and Gas Project.

The project is designed to remove barriers to women entering non-traditional trades, said Annemieke Mulders, the project's co-ordinator.'

RADAR: 50 myths of domestic violence revealed

anthony · 26 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A link to RADAR's flyer here (.pdf file) summarizing the main 50 mthys around DV. Good resource for people new and not-so-new to the topic of DV.

Woman Pleads Guilty to Stabbing Stepson in Back With Kitchen Knife

anthony · 27 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ALLEGAN, Mich. — A 36-year-old western Michigan woman accused of stabbing her 14-year-old stepson in the back with a kitchen knife has pleaded guilty in the case.

Monica Embree of Dorr Township pleaded guilty Friday in Allegan County Circuit Court to assault with intent to do great bodily harm and interfering with a crime report. Sentencing was set for Aug. 21.

Prosecutors have agreed to drop an attempted murder charge and a felony assault charge in exchange for the plea.'

Local, female teacher accused of having sex with student

anthony · 27 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Adrienne Feistel, a former Rosa Parks Elementary School teacher, here in San Diego, is accused of having had a two-year, sexual relationship with a student, who is now 15 years old.

The relationship allegedly began when the boy was a student at Rosa Parks, as a fifth grader.

According to reports, the boy was "pressured" into the relationship by Feistel. Feistel also happens to be married to a sheriff's deputy but is in the process of divorce.

Apparently, the relationship began when the female teacher moved in with the family of the boy "for a short time." At the time, Feistel was "on leave of absence" from the school.
...
If convicted, she could face several years in prison, according to most reports.'

Silverton teacher accused of sexually abusing boy for 4 years

anthony · 27 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'SALEM, Ore. (AP) - Police in Salem have accused a sixth-grade teacher of sexually abusing a boy for four years, beginning when he was 13.

Police say the victim, now 21, reported the abuse in May.

They say he was not a student of 46-year-old Susan Alderson of Salem, who was arraigned yesterday on charges of rape, sodomy and sex abuse.

An official of the Silver Falls School District says there's no reason to believe any students in the district were involved.'

Farrah Fawcett's "Burning Bed" legacy

anthony · 28 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Farrah Fawcett will mostly be remembered as a Charlie's Angels chick and a pinup girl, but her performance in the Burning Bed was a durable, yet regrettable legacy. Sadly, the 1984 made-for-TV movie that portrayed premeditated murder as not only excusable, but heroic, won't go with her.

Of course, Fawcett herself should not blamed for the establishment of a myth that propelled a skewed view of domestic violence into the forefront of public consciousness. She was, after all, only an actress playing a part, and playing it well.

The movie however, helped establish a framework for dozens of later theatrical and TV movies that depict men as dangerous, violent abusers and women as saintly victims with nowhere to turn for help. Even after 25 years, this story of a single extraordinary case, exaggerated for effect, has become omnipresent. The male character is generally accepted as typical, and murder is sanctioned if not openly encouraged as a solution to the problem. Later films such as Sleeping With the Enemy starring Julia Roberts, built on the myth and added the aspect of relentless stalking, also extraordinary in the real world. Other movies added more, and there is now a whole TV network devoted to almost nothing but the theme of awful, despicable men vs. glamorous female victims.'

Title IX celebrated as study raises scholarship questions

anthony · 28 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'U.S. Secretary of Education Arne Duncan said in the 37 years since Title IX was passed, female participation in college athletics is up from 15% to 43%, and the number of female high school athletes has grown from 300,000 to nearly three million.

Duncan also announced $2.4 million in grants for 13 organizations to support projects that will help high school girls gain higher proficiency in math and science, according to a White House press release.

"These grants go hand-in-glove with our efforts to improve equity and access for women and girls in the classroom and on the playing field," Duncan said. "While much has been accomplished since Title IX was enacted, we must continue to push for further progress. The Obama administration strives to remove the obstacle of gender discrimination as a way to increase access to college and careers for all students."'

Grant to help girls in math, science in public schools

anthony · 28 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The U.S. Department of Education has announced $2.4 million in grants to 13 groups to help high school girls in math and science, including $163,559 for Pittsburgh Public Schools.

The four-year grants came on the 37th anniversary of Title IX, which helps to stop discrimination against women in education, including athletics.

"These grants go hand-in-glove with our efforts to improve equity and access for women and girls in the classroom and on the playing field," U.S. Education Secretary Arne Duncan said.

Under the grant, Pittsburgh Public Schools will track 348 female students from grades 9 through 12 as they complete math-rich career and technical education programs.

The district is partnering with Smart Futures and the Carnegie Science Center's Girls, Math & Science Partnership.'

Wrongful prosecution lawsuit dismissed

Matt · 28 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A federal judge dismissed a woman's lawsuit that claimed Nashua Police falsely imprisoned and wrongly prosecuted her over a rape complaint.

Monique Harrington had claimed a male acquaintance raped her in June 2003. When she filed a complaint three months later, Nashua Police determined the charge was false, and Harrington ultimately admitted it was untrue.

Nashua Police then charged the woman with making a false report, but Harrington was acquitted in a 2004 jury trial. Harrington responded by suing the city of Nashua, Nashua Police and a police detective, claiming her constitutional rights were violated and she was maliciously prosecuted.'

Anti-Abuse Bus Stop Ad Only Batters Women When Nobody's Looking

Matt · 28 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amnesty International has installed a new anti-domestic-abuse ad fixture in Hamburg, Germany which is equal parts clever and shocking: when you look at the photo, it's a smiling couple; when you look away, it's a dude punchin' a lady.

The billboard works by scanning its proximity with an eye-tracking camera, which triggers an image switch on the display panel when it senses someone looking at it. The change only occurs after a brief delay, so that observers understand what's going on, and get the message.'

Ed. note: You can contact AI via web form here.

Toronto YWCA is '...a ticking timebomb'

Anonymous · 29 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Abused women living in a YWCA facility in North Toronto say they've been forced to share showers with transsexual tenants and cope with frequent, violent behaviour from others living there.

Residents in the four-storey residence and shelter for victims of domestic abuse told the Sun repeated complaints about physical assault, harassment and verbal abuse have been downplayed, if not outright ignored by the YWCA.

"One woman on the third floor was wielding a knife to other people living on the floor and it took three years to evict her," a tenant told the Sun. "They tell us we have to show compassion."

YWCA staff have refused to call police following complaints of violent altercations, and told residents they have to call authorities themselves, according to women who live in the building.'

Court Rules for White Firefighters Over Promotions

Matt · 29 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON -- The Supreme Court ruled Monday that white firefighters in New Haven, Conn., were unfairly denied promotions because of their race, reversing a decision that high court nominee Sonia Sotomayor endorsed as an appeals court judge.

New Haven was wrong to scrap a promotion exam because no African-Americans and only two Hispanic firefighters were likely to be made lieutenants or captains based on the results, the court said Monday in a 5-4 decision. The city said that it had acted to avoid a lawsuit from minorities.

The ruling could alter employment practices nationwide and make it harder to prove discrimination when there is no evidence it was intentional.

"Fear of litigation alone cannot justify an employer's reliance on race to the detriment of individuals who passed the examinations and qualified for promotions," Justice Anthony Kennedy said in his opinion for the court. He was joined by Chief Justice John Roberts and Justices Samuel Alito, Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas.

In dissent, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg said the white firefighters "understandably attract this court's sympathy. But they had no vested right to promotion. Nor have other persons received promotions in preference to them."'

Persistent Myths in Feminist Scholarship

anthony · 30 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminist misinformation is pervasive. In their eye-opening book, Professing Feminism: Education and Indoctrination in Women's Studies (Lexington Books, 2003), the professors Daphne Patai and Noretta Koertge describe the "sea of propaganda" that overwhelms the contemporary feminist classroom. The formidable Christine Rosen (formerly Stolba), in her 2002 report on the five leading women's-studies textbooks, found them rife with falsehoods, half-truths, and "deliberately misleading sisterly sophistries." Are there serious scholars in women's studies? Yes, of course. Sarah Blaffer Hrdy, an anthropologist at the University of California at Davis; Janet Zollinger Giele, a sociologist at Brandeis; and Anne Mellor, a literary scholar at UCLA, to name just three, are models of academic excellence and integrity. But they are the exception. Lemon's book typifies the departmental mind-set.

...

All books have mistakes, so why pick on the feminists? My complaint with feminist research is not so much that the authors make mistakes; it is that the mistakes are impervious to reasoned criticism. They do not get corrected. The authors are passionately committed to the proposition that American women are oppressed and under siege. The scholars seize and hold on for dear life to any piece of data that appears to corroborate their dire worldview. At the same time, any critic who attempts to correct the false assumptions is dismissed as a backlasher and an anti-feminist crank.'

Girl Files Suit Against Father under India's DV Law for Sending Her to School She Doesn't Approve

Matt · 30 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Not too long ago I reported on a 12-year-old Canadian girl whose father had grounded her because she had disobeyed him by spending too much time on the Internet. Her being grounded meant that he refused permission for her to go on a class trip. She sued him and won. The Canadian court ruled that his punishment was too severe. At the time I said that I hoped the judges had given the dad their home telephone numbers. That way he could call them to ask their permission the next time she wanted to go to the movies or to a sleepover.

Now there's this piece out of India (Indian Express, 6/21/09). It reports that a 12-year-old girl has filed suit against her father under that country's Protection of Women From Domestic Violence Act. What brutality did he commit against his daughter? He sent her to a school of which she does not approve.

The parents are divorced. The family court has ordered that the girl not be placed in any school without her father's permission. I suppose the theory of the girl's lawsuit is that the family court's order violates the Protection of Women From Domestic Violence Act.'

Federal Government's Website on Fatherhood a Surreal Experience

Matt · 30 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On June 20th, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services issued a press release describing a new "public service campaign...promoting fatherhood." The press release directs readers to the website www.fatherhood.gov, and breathlessly promises a public service announcement by none other than President Obama himself. Needless to say, that was an offer I couldn't refuse.

When I went to the site, I discovered it was the home of something called the National Responsible Fatherhood Clearinghouse. And, much as I would expect from a site with that name, I found pablum - the shallowest, most out-of-touch-with-reality ideas of fatherhood and the barriers to father involvement imaginable. Obama's 30-second PSA is skin-deep, essentially an exhortation to fathers to take their children to the zoo and help them with homework. Michelle Obama's message is no better.
...
Look further on the site. Go to the library of publications and a whole new world opens before you. The publications the site links to aren't many and they're not up to date, but they paint an entirely different picture of fatherhood and the many barriers fathers face in trying to establish and maintain relationships with their children. There are scholarly publications on maternal gatekeeping, programs to enhance non-custodial parents' access to children, an article by Kathryn Edin about young, poor fathers and others.

In short, once a visitor to the site gets past the bumper-sticker phrases about responsible fatherhood, there's a lot of real information by (dare i say it?) responsible social scientists to be had.

And the juxtaposition of the two is mind-bending. It's the same thing we see every day. We know the truth; we read the massive amounts of social science that shows us the incontovertible fact that fathers strongly desire close relationships with their children, but are thwarted by a bewildering array of laws, policies and practices that seem to be based on a complete ignorance of well-established facts.'

"Dana Perino: Only Male Politicians Commit Adultery"

Matt · 30 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Well, that didn't take long. With the unfortunately predictable political sex scandals continuing to grab headlines in the MSM, and the astonishing amount of commentary on them, I'm only surprised that a blog like this one from former Bush Press Secretary Dana Perino in the National Review didn't come out earlier (National Review, 6/25/09).

From Clinton and Spitzer to Ensign and Sanford, and with plenty more in between, there's nothing the MSM likes better than a good, preferably kinky, sex scandal involving a highly placed public official. For MSM reporters, these stories have everything - sex, power, betrayal, weeping wives, disgrace and lots more. Perhaps best of all, they require no thought on the part of the reporter. There are no tedious issues to grapple with, no statistics to sort out, no ethical gray areas. It's simple.
...
...According to her, the salient feature of these scandals is that it's men who are the wrongdoers. And what that means is crystal clear to her - elect women to office and poof! no more sex scandals. Because for sure, women don't commit adultery.
...
The inconvenient truth contradicts her mythology of female virtue and male perfidy. Although most studies of adultery in America show that men do it more than women, others show it to be a dead heat. This summary of studies gives a pretty good idea of who has sex outside of marriage.'

Prominent FRA, Nathan Alexander, passes

Matt · 30 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"How harassment over child custody and child support eventually killed my brother who had preleukemia. It is a sad Father's Day this year.

May 24, 2009 was the day my older brother Nathan finally succumbed to leukemia. I felt like my world had ended. Nathan was a larger-than-life one-of-a-kind; the epitome of what a fun, charismatic, witty older brother should be. He was always happy, alternating between intellectual pontifications and mischievous joking. He understood my sense of humor better than anyone, and the emails flew back and forth between us sometimes 10 times a day. He frequently took humorous breaking news articles and inserted our friends' names into them, sending them out in official looking emails to mutual friends. Nathan and I remained close over the years, not having a significant other to confide in.
...
The legal battles with the mother of his child continued, as she was able to further reduce his visitation since he had moved out of the state. She added difficult restrictions to their daughter visiting him in Alabama, and refused to adjust the weeks Elisa would visit to accommodate his teaching schedule. He tried to take on teaching a fourth class in order to afford his child support, but he could not keep it up for long. Even fully healthy professors find taking on a fourth class exhausting. He finally was forced to file for bankruptcy.

...Right up until the end, the mother of his child refused to let Elisa (a very bright girl turning 10 years old in August) fly on a plane by herself, even though airlines allow children to fly alone on nonstop planes as young as five years old.'

Sad Dads May Lead to Crying Infants

Matt · 30 June 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TUESDAY, June 30 (HealthDay News) -- Don't automatically blame mom: A crying, colicky baby can be just as much the result of dad's state of mind, Dutch researchers report.

Other studies have found that depression among mothers can be related to excessive crying or colic, a common problem with newborns, but the researchers said that little was known about whether fathers' emotions and behavior also have an effect.

"Up to now, almost all attention went to the prenatal effects of maternal depression on child development, leading to the development of detection and treatment programs that focused on mental well-being of mothers," said lead researcher Dr. Mijke P. van den Berg, a psychiatrist at the Erasmus Medical Center in Rotterdam.
...
"This study demonstrates in a paradoxical way the importance of fathers, in that fathers' measurable depression during pregnancy is a risk factor for excessive infant crying at 2 months of age," Shaw said.

"This seems to be related perhaps to the enduring effects of fathers' depression on the family ambience, the parental relationship, child parenting and, perhaps as the authors suggest, there may be a genetic factor involved," he said.'

US pledges to put women, girls first in AIDS fight

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'WINDHOEK, Namibia (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton says the Obama administration will put women and girls first in the fight against AIDS.

Rodham Clinton addressed an international AIDS conference in Namibia by video hookup Wednesday.

She says her government will prioritize preventing mother-to-child transmission of the virus that causes AIDS, and work to ensure girls are not forced into prostitution or early marriages.

Africans have welcomed the election of Barack Obama, who has roots in Kenya and is America's first black president. But Africans also have applauded George W. Bush, Obama's predecessor, for an AIDS campaign launched in 2003 that expanded AIDS prevention, treatment and support programs in 15 hard-hit countries, 12 of them African.'

'Women actually do need men -- real men, that is'

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Too many unemployed guys have stopped hunting for jobs. Too many fathers know the names of the attendants at the golf course, but not the names of their children's friends.

Too many Casanovas want sex without commitment or the emotions that come with intimacy. And too many fellows brag about having a mistress and a wife or a "baby mommy and a bizzybody" as another popular song promotes. proclaims. These are not the actions of men. These are the behaviors of boys and "shawty don't need no" boy.

At the risk of being scolded by my fellow women's college alumnae, I will admit that I believe that the downgrading of manhood is a side-effect of feminism. Occasionally, women boast so loudly about being strong that they drown out men's offers of support. Furthermore, my sisters, we have failed to help guys understand their roles in this new world of independent women.
...
A few women do rebuff assistance and gallant acts, but gentlemen, please continue to offer. There are plenty of women who may not technically need your help, but sure do welcome it. It is not a contradiction to be a millennial woman with traditional values.

The women in my circle are all accomplished, self-sufficient and well paid, yet they still blush at the first sign of chivalry. In fact, one of the cutest couples I know got together after the guy went out of his way to help my friend find her lost dog.'

Psychologists examine role of control in domestic violence

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male and female perpetrators of domestic violence exhibit similar levels of controlling behaviour. This is one of the findings of a study presented at the British Psychological Society Division of Forensic Psychology annual conference 23 June 2009 at the University of Central Lancashire, Preston.
...
"Men and women perpetrators of domestic violence were found to have very similar levels of financial control, sexual control and intimidation in relationships. This leads us to believe that we can't only attribute controlling behaviour to men."
...
"The results of this study tell us that we need to challenge some of the assumptions around domestic violence if we are to really tackle the issue and develop programmes that prevent continued violence, one such assumption is that controlling behaviour in relationships is unique to men."'

Zero tolerance domestic violence policies make no sense

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What a zero tolerance policy usually means to those who create them for their organizations is that as a company (or government) not only they will not allow their employees to be abused, they will also take whatever measures are in their power to see that the abuser is held accountable for his actions. While this sounds good on paper, these policies are often adopted with at best, an incomplete understanding of the issue at hand. Special interest groups, in this case the powerful, feminist-run domestic violence industry, have spent years putting on the pressure and insisting the issue be approached their way. It is the industry view that intimate partner abuse is always a clear-cut issue that can be permanently solved by laws and policies, the human aspect be damned.
...
Cases of intimate partner abuse that flow out into the workplace probably should be dealt with in some way, but a zero tolerance policy is not an effective tool for managers at any level. Such a policy forces a negative, adversarial action against employees without regard to the actual situation; good managers know that a rigid, unconsidered response to a personal issue of any kind is no way to promote good employee morale or productivity.'

HIV-positive Knoxville woman a walking felony

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Most hookers spend only a few hours or days behind bars when they're busted. Twenty-eight-year-old Tiffany Ann Moore of Knoxville may end up spending the next three to 15 years in a state prison cell for the crime of selling her own body.

Moore differs from most of the 525 other known prostitutes arrested in Knox County over the past five years in one significant way: she is HIV-positive.

Moore's medical condition means that when she turns tricks for a living she's committing a felony called aggravated prostitution. Women without HIV face misdemeanor prostitution charges that often add up to no more than probation and a fine.

Moore is a repeat offender, having been convicted twice of being an HIV-infected prostitute before she was arrested a third time early this year, records show. Despite the fact that she's never been accused of any type of sexual assault, her criminal history already means she must register as a sex offender under state law and follow many of the same restrictions as rapists and child molesters.
...
In addition to a history of homelessness, she has also been diagnosed with a neurological disorder and mental problems that include "flashbacks of being raped while working the streets," according to her pre-sentence report.'

Military service - don’t ask women and tell men

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gay rights advocates are pushing hard on the Obama administration to allow gays to serve openly in the U.S. armed forces. Enter the law of unintended consequences. Allowing gays to serve openly will ultimately mean that should military conscription i.e. the draft be reinstated, gays would be marched off to boot camp along with their straight counterparts - but what about women? We have abolished many of the policies that once excluded women from combat positions yet still don’t require them register for Selective Service. Women get to fly fighters and command warships but only if they want to; how can that be considered equal treatment in the 21st century?
...
Much has changed since this decision in Rostker v. Goldberg was handed down in 1981. As I’ve noted earlier, women are serving in a wide variety of combat and combat-support roles that were unavailable to them nearly thirty years ago. Section 451(e) of the Military Selective Service Act states, “The Congress further declares that adequate provision for national security requires maximum effort in the fields of scientific research and development, and the fullest possible utilization of the Nation's technological, scientific, and other critical manpower resources.” As of June 6, 2009 the Department of Defense reports that 121 women have been killed in action and another 624 wounded in Iraq and Afghanistan. Given the extraordinarily valuable contributions of women to our national security, it is hard to imagine how any reasonable person could argue against their inclusion in the draft.
...

Although we are fighting in two wars, we are not in a state of national emergency that would require a draft. Machiavelli said it best, "It is a common defect in man not to make any provision in the calm against the tempest." Waiting until a crisis requiring the draft occurs is irresponsible and inexcusable. Recent congressional griping about “emergency” economic legislation being pushed through without time for a proper debate is proof positive that now is the time to settle this issue. It is the time for America to answer one simple question, “How can we have equal opportunity without equal responsibility”? I'm sure that is one question Sen. Barbara Boxer (D-CA) and Gov. Sarah Palin (R-AK) can both agree on.'

Canada: Men's one-day health clinic gets overwhelming response

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Encouraged and surprised by the success of a one-day men's health clinic in Windsor, health care professionals say more similar programs are needed in the community to screen men for cancer, diabetes and other illnesses.
...
The clinic, the first of its kind in the community, was staffed by two SCHC physicians and two oncologists from the Windsor Regional Cancer Centre, as well as other SCHC staff and volunteers from the Windsor and Essex County Prostate Cancer Support Group. They offered screening for prostate, testicular, colorectal and skin cancer, as well as testing for diabetes and high blood pressure, among other chronic conditions. The initiative was supported by the cancer centre's foundation and the Canadian Cancer Society.'

Teacher Burned Boy's 'Butt', Cops Say

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Am I the only one who thinks using the slang term 'butt' is a bit inappropriate considering the seriousness of the accusation? Excerpt:

'ALLEN, Texas - A former teacher at Allen's Lowery Freshman Center faces formal charges for allegedly burning a 14-year-old mentally disabled boy on the buttocks with a cooking pan.

A Collin County grand jury indicted 45-year-old Susanne Means earlier this month on injury to a child charges.

Police said Means was a special education teacher at the freshman center in March when the incident allegedly happened.

The mentally disabled boy's father told police his son had two 12-inch circular "scald" marks on his buttocks. The boy said Means had burned him with a hot pan, according to the arrest warrant affidavit.'

S. Africa: East Cape circumcision death toll now 24

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'THE death toll in the Eastern Cape's winter circumcision season has risen to 24, the provincial health department said today.

Spokesman Sizwe Kupelo said four youths had died in the Eastern Pondoland region in the past 24 hours.

Two of them had been attending legal initiation schools, the others illegal schools.

The situation in the region had prompted local State doctors to go out in teams with police to treat youths at the schools, Kupelo said.

"They say they can't watch these boys dying any longer. The situation is very bad in that part of the province."
...
Circumcision-related deaths are usually as a result of septicaemia from infected wounds, or dehydration, which happens when initiates are denied water by their carers.

Eleven unregistered traditional surgeons and nurses have been arrested this season. – Sapa'

Forest Knolls woman heads effort to stop circumcision

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Marilyn Milos, 69, of Forest Knolls was a nurse at Marin General Hospital in 1979 when she witnessed her first circumcision. The experience changed her life. After researching the procedure, she became convinced it was not only unnecessary but harmful. She says she was later fired from her job for sharing her opinions with patients and has spent the last 30 years crusading against circumcision as founder of the nonprofit National Organization of Circumcision Information Resource Centers.

Q: What do you remember about that first circumcision?

A: As we walked into the nursery, the baby was strapped down to a plastic board. I called it "the rack" when I worked there. The baby was pulling against the restraints. Then the doctor started to cut and that baby let out a scream I've never heard come out of the mouth of a human, ever, and it became louder and louder. My bottom chin began to quiver and then tears poured over my eyes, and the doctor looked at my face and said, "There is no medical reason for doing this."'

National Organization of Circumcision Information Resource Centers

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Site: http://www.nocirc.org/. Salient points:

"• No national or international medical association recommends routine circumcision.

• Only the USA circumcises the majority of newborn boys without medical or religious reason.

• Medicalized circumcision began during the 1800s to prevent masturbation, which was believed to cause disease.

• Today's parents are learning that the foreskin is a normal, protective, functioning organ.

• Today's parents realize circumcision harms and has unnecessary risks.

• Circumcision denies a male's right to genital integrity and choice for his own body."

Teacher Pleads Not Guilty to Rape of Boy

anthony · 1 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'(AP) A former Massachusetts schoolteacher who was found with a student at a West Virginia motel has pleaded not guilty to rape.

Lisa Lavoie, 24, was arraigned Tuesday in Hampden Superior Court in Massachusetts on three counts of aggravated rape and abuse and three counts of statutory rape.

Lavoie and a 15-year-old student were reported missing Feb. 16 and were found a week later. She was fired from her job.

Lavoie already pleaded not guilty in March to enticing a minor. Her attorney, David Hoose, says the new charges were not unexpected.

He says Lavoie is "very upset by the whole experience that she went through."

She is out on $25,000 bail.'

U.S. Society Ignoring Serious Boy Problems

Anonymous · 2 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While both boys and girls face issues — in school and out — the problems affecting boys are serious and have not been properly addressed by policy makers, according to a new review article by psychologist Judith Kleinfeld. Among the results: high rates of functional illiteracy and a troublingly high suicide rate that's become even more pronounced in recent years compared to the rate among girls.

"Boys' issues are being neglected, whereas girls' issues have been addressed for over 20 years, with great success," said Kleinfeld, a professor at the University of Alaska in Fairbanks. "Now it's time to turn our attention to boys."

Following concerns about psychological and educational problems affecting girls in the early 1990s, discussion of a so-called "boy crisis" emerged. Some publications claimed that boys were falling behind girls in school success and that feminist ideology was partly to blame for lack of attention on the issue.
...
"One [solution] is to create a national commission on boys, just the way national commissions on girls have been established," she said. Also, teachers should be alerted "to the particular problems boys have in writing, and also reading," she contends. Finally, we can "use the mental health professionals and especially school counselors who are on the front lines to identify boys who are at danger of suicide."'

San Diego District Attorney agrees that police training video contained unverifiable statistics about abused women

Matt · 2 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.: NCFM's San Diego Chapter, though NCFM President Harry Crouch, recently succeeded in getting the San Diego District Attorney to remove false, gender-biased material from their new police training video on domestic violence, such as the myth that domestic violence is primarily male-on-female and is a leading cause of death for women. The story, including a letter from the District Attorney thanking NCFM, is chronicled here.

Excerpt: "[NCFM] after being asked to review a new police training video sent a letter to the San Diego District Attorney showing that the video contained wrong and gender biased information, that is it was biased against men and perpetuated information detrimental to the community and police. Assistant District Attorney Patrick McGrath found that there were unverifiable statistics and agreed to have the video appropriately edited and re issued. He will be asking that the nine San Diego County police departments and Sheriff's Office replace the first version with the second on departmental Intranets as well as for use in other trainings. . . . We believe this is the first time a law enforcement agency within the United States agreed that information contained in a domestic violence police training video was wrong and took affirmative and costly steps to correct it. . . . ."

The District Attorney's letter thanking NCFM can be viewed directly here (.pdf file).

Thank you Harry Crouch, the San Diego District Attorney, and all others who participated!

Report: Guilty verdict overturned in MySpace suicide case

Michael · 3 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Lori Drew, the woman convicted of using a hoax MySpace profile to harass a teenage girl to the point of suicide, was acquitted by a Los Angeles judge on Thursday, Wired reported.

Judge George Wu overturned Drew's guilty verdict, which was issued in November, saying that if Drew had been convicted of a felony in the case, she would already have been sentenced. But because she was convicted of three misdemeanors--a significantly lighter offense than prosecutors originally sought--the constitutionality of the guilty verdict was less clear.

Drew, a Missouri resident, had been convicted of three misdemeanor counts of "accessing protected computers without authorization to obtain information to inflict emotional distress," each of which could have resulted in a year of jail and a $100,000 fine. But she hadn't been convicted of conspiracy, a felony that could've led to up to 20 years in prison.

Last year, the Electronic Frontier Foundation urged the courts to dismiss the case because of the precedent it could set. "Criminal charges for a 'terms of service' violation is a dramatic misapplication of the CFAA (Computer Fraud and Abuse Act), with far-ranging consequences for American computer users," the EFF said at the time, and argued that it could result in criminal charges for something as innocuous as a minor using the Google search engine.
...

Drew's lawyers had argued that the law being used against the defendant was vague and flawed, which the judge upheld Thursday when he threw out the guilty verdict. The Computer Fraud and Abuse Act is typically used against malicious hackers.

According to Wired, the judge argued for nearly 45 minutes with U.S. Attorney Mark Krause over the specifics of the CFAA.'

We're all slavering sex perverts/paedophiles - according to Microsoft

GaryB · 3 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Sydney Morning Herald has this report about an ad Microsoft pulled.

Basically, the ad shows a man surfing the net, then his wife pulling the laptop round to see what he's done. She's so horrified by what she sees (it isn't explained) that she pukes on the floor. He trips up in the vomit (slapstick, always funny when a guy gets hurt!) and then - just to make it absolutely certain that we know where the guy stands - she throws up all over him.

The ad doesn't explain what the guy was looking at, but the obvious intonation is that it is at the least hard core porn, if not child pornography. Queue actor who talks about surfing safe - followed by wife flirting with him.

The ad has been pulled already - but man it's horrific. I never liked Microsoft much but I own several laptops with Windows on it - be damned if I'll buy another, any company who paints me as a child porn pervert who's good for nothing but being vomitted on doesn't deserve my hard earned dollar....

Two Mexican Midget Wrestlers Killed by Fake Prostitutes

anthony · 3 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MEXICO CITY — Mexican authorities say two professional wrestlers found dead in a low-rent hotel in the capital may have been drugged to death by female robbers.

Autopsies are being performed on the two midget wrestlers, one of whom went by the name "La Parkita" — or "Little Death" — and wore a skeleton costume in the ring. The other was known as "Espectrito Jr."

Authorities say two women were seen leaving the men's hotel room before the bodies were discovered.

Prosecutor Miguel Angel Mancera said Wednesday that gangs of female robbers are experienced at using drugs to knock men out and rob them, but they may have used too strong a dose.'

New Jersey law requires $25 of $28 for a marriage license to go to battered women's shelters

Matt · 3 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Jeremy S.: GOOD GOD! How blatant is THAT? What an outrage! I was just going to ask for proof of this: "$25.00 goes to battered women's trust funds". I am stunned and outraged. I can only imagine what monies are transferred and to where in my own country. Everything is possible now. (Seriously this is not a joke.) I stand in disbelief and in renewed earnest solidarity with our American brothers. I need say no more. Let this tell the story.

37:1-12.1. Additional fee: '1. In addition to the fee for issuing a marriage license authorized pursuant to R.S.37:1-12, each licensing officer shall collect a fee of $25 from the applicants which shall be forwarded on a quarterly basis to the Department of Human Services.'

37:1-12.2. Trust fund to aid victims of domestic violence: '2. The Department of Human Services shall establish a trust fund for the deposit of the fees received pursuant to section 1 of this act. The moneys from the trust fund shall be used for the specific purpose of establishing and maintaining shelters for the victims of domestic violence, or a. for providing grants-in-aid to such shelters established by local governments or private nonprofit organizations;...'

Ed. comments: Of course the implication created by attaching a DV shelter-funding provision to a fee collected for marriage licenses speaks volumes about the prejudices underlying the conception of the regulation: that marriage leads to domestic violence so it is marriage that is to be taxed (at the relative rate of 830% as compared to the license fee without the surcharge: 25/3 = 8.33, or 830%). However research shows that such is not the case; DV can and does occur between unmarried and cohabiting and non-cohabiting people all the time. Yet it is marriage license fees are the things that get attached for this funding.

New accounts

Matt · 3 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Recenly we tried to re-allows new account registration here at MANN but almost immediately after doing so we got spam posts. So until the issue is resolved, assuming it can be, please send all requests for new accounts to newaccounts@mensactivism.org. Sorry for the inconvenience.

-- Matt

UPDATE (7/22/09): If you send a note asking for an account, please remember to include a request for a user ID; otherwise I can't make the account for you until you reply to my response asking you to do so. Bear in mind, also, that replies from me will be coming from matt_at_mann (at) yahoo.com, so please make sure you check your spam folder before deciding I didn't reply to you, or put that address on your safe-list.

If you recently asked for an account and think you never received a reply from me, it is probably because the reply got spam-blasted. So if that is the case, just send me another request.

Teacher Sends Feces Home in Student's Backpack, School Not Amused

anthony · 3 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'YAKIMA, Wash. — A Washington kindergarten teacher who sent a 5-year-old student home with a bag of feces tucked in his backpack has been formally reprimanded.

A West Valley School District official warned teacher Sue Graham in a letter that similar behavior in the future will result in disciplinary action, including termination.
...
The May letter was released Thursday in response to a public disclosure request from KIMA-TV. The district had previously said "appropriate action" was taken against the longtime teacher.'

Woman accused of targeting girl, 9, with Craigslist ad

anthony · 4 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A Long Island, New York, social worker is facing two misdemeanor charges after allegedly posting a sexually suggestive ad on Craigslist that gave interested parties the home phone number of a 9-year-old girl.

According to prosecutors, Margery Tannenbaum posted the ad to get revenge after an argument between her daughter and the girl, who attend the same school in Hauppauge, New York.

On Thursday, Tannenbaum was arraigned on charges of aggravated harassment and endangering the welfare of a minor. She pleaded not guilty and will appear in court later this month.
...
When asked about the case, Tannenbaum's attorney, Tad Scharfenberg, said, "I think this has been blown out of proportion to what the actual alleged act was."

He described Tannenbaum as "a well-loved woman by both family and friends," and said she was a classroom mom at her daughter's school.'

MSNBC: Out of Iraq's frying pan, into an economic fire

anthony · 4 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 1538th sustained no casualties during its almost 10 months in Iraq ferrying supplies and providing security for U.S. military convoys, perhaps in part by obeying its unofficial motto, "Drive it like you stole it." But the same can't be said for the jobs its members left behind.

Forty-six soldiers — fully 25 percent of the company — have no work awaiting them, including many whose jobs vanished while they were heeding their nation's call.

"They pretty much said there's nothing to come back to, better start looking for another job," said Pfc. Jonathan Maher, 20, of the Elkhart County community of Bristol, recalling the letter he received from his employer, Keystone RV, shortly after Christmas.'

Police: Arizona woman led sons on crime spree

Matt · 4 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHOENIX – Cynthia Mary Roberson is an unemployed mother who police say led her 12- and 14-year-old sons and their friends to commit at least 20 armed robberies and assaults, including the beating of a teenage boy who had nothing more than an orange lollipop.

Her motivation was purely financial — police said she needed money to pay rent and the loan on her gold Chevrolet. In every case, the mother drove the getaway car and once coached a kid during a robbery because he was having trouble stealing a cell phone from a victim, police said.

The case has outraged authorities and the public and drawn comparisons to "Ma Barker," the infamous mother who led her four young sons on a robbery spree in the early 1900s.'

Women-only baseball promotion under dispute

anthony · 4 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FISHKILL - The Hudson Valley Renegades [ed.: link added] still plan on holding Tuesday's promotional night, an event the team says is a tribute to its female fans.

But don't expect to see any county officials at Dutchess Stadium - inside or outside the ballpark.

Dutchess County sent the Renegades a letter late Thursday asking the team to cancel the promotion, which will keep men out of the stadium for the first half of Tuesday's game while women will be pampered inside, because the event may not conform to state equality laws on the books.

...

At best, the promotion is in poor taste. However, I write to warn that the promotion likely violates the New York State Human Rights Law and probably violates the guarantee to equal protection under the laws contained in the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution," the letter reads. "New York State Human Rights Law (Executive Law Section 296) expressly prohibits discrimination on the basis of gender in any place of public accommodation. Clearly, your plan to prohibit admittance based on gender runs afoul of this provision."'

Renegades' e-mail: gadesinfo-at-hvrenegades.com.

Canada: Women's only pharmacy offers safety, comfort

anthony · 4 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Look through the vast windows at 29 West Hastings St. and you'll see stylish wooden counters, a funky bench created from reclaimed pink and red chairs and chandeliers fashioned from bicycle rims, plastic hangers, water bottles and clear tubing.

Located between Funky Winker Beans and the Army and Navy, it's the site of Lu's: A Pharmacy for Women, and it claims to be the first of its kind in North America.

Vancouver Women's Health Collective will open Lu's July 7. The group has developed the business to sustain the non-profit society that has helped women with healthcare decisions for 38 years.

Caryn Duncan, executive director of the collective, came up with the idea of opening a pharmacy for women in the Downtown Eastside in 2006.

She lives in the area and often saw queues of patrons spilling out of pharmacies onto sidewalks and having to speak to pharmacists through security glass. "They're, I think, quite hostile places and women don't feel safe," Duncan said. "Women are walking distances to have prescriptions filled and we're hoping that they will think to come to Lu's."'

India: Women welcome ladies-only service

anthony · 4 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHENNAI: Railway minister Mamata Banerjee's announcement to launch Only Ladies' EMU services on suburban lines at Chennai, Delhi and Kolkata has brought cheer to the city's commuters. Ranging from school students to senior working professionals, daily passengers said the facility would make train journeys more comfortable for women.

"I think it will be very useful. We struggle to get into the ladies' compartments on EMU services right now since we have to run all the way to the front of the train or to the rear end when a train pulls into the station because there are no ladies' compartments in the middle sections of several trains. There is no indication of where the ladies' compartments are placed either," said Chitra Balasubramanian, an employee of the Postal department who travels from Mambalam to Meenambakkam every day. She has been using the EMU service for the last 24 years.'

Some good news: NJ law "allows" men not to be held liable for wives' debts

Matt · 4 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

As a rider to the story from yesterday regarding marriage license fees in New Jersey being mostly paid to DV shelter funds, I noticed this: 37:2-10. Married woman's liability for debts contracted before or after marriage: "A husband shall not be liable for the debts of his wife contracted before their marriage, or contracted by her, in her own name, after their marriage, but she shall be liable to be sued separately therefor in her own name, and any property belonging to her shall be liable to satisfy such debts, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole."

"Some justice," as they say.

Happy July 4th!

Matt · 4 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Here in the U.S., it's Independence Day: July 4. We usually celebrate by having parades, cook-outs and doing other such stereotypically tame things. However it is important to remember the many brave men who have fought and died in the many wars in which the US has been who really would have rather stayed home and enjoyed cook-outs and nice weather instead of enduring combat.

So MANN pauses to say "THANK-YOU" to the many men who have served and who today continue to serve the country in all manner of occupations involved in our defense. We also say "THANK YOU" to our Founding Fathers who pledged their lives, fortunes, and sacred honor to the founding of the United States, many of whom gave up those things by the time all was said and done.

And to all these men, we further say: "HUZZAH!"

Steve McNair apparently murdered by girlfriend

Matt · 5 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Former NFL star quarterback Steve McNair was found dead with multiple gunshot wounds in a Nashville condominium Saturday - and authorities hinted he was murdered by a girlfriend who then turned the gun on herself.
...
A woman McNair was reportedly dating, identified as Sahel Kazemi, 20, was found dead only a few feet away with a single bullet wound to the head. A gun was lying nearby, Nashville police said.
...

McNair, 36, who was married and had four children, had reportedly been dating Kazemi for a few months. They met at a Dave & Buster's restaurant where Kazemi worked, her former boyfriend told the Tennessean newspaper.

Neighbors of Kazemi told the paper they often spotted McNair visiting her apartment. At times, she returned home in a black limousine, and not long ago, she showed up with a brand new Cadillac Escalade she said was a gift from her boyfriend.

"She is the sweetest girl, and she did not deserve this," Kazemi's ex-beau, Keith Norfleet, told the newspaper upon learning of her death. "He was making her believe they were going to be together, and everything would be perfect."'

Lynn Rosenthal is no advocate for women

anthony · 5 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A reader pointed out a New York Times editorial lauding the appointment of Lynn Rosenthal as domestic violence czar. While the editorial encompasses some factual errors, it does a quite efficient job of illustrating the breadth and depth of the general misunderstanding regarding the issue of partner abuse.

In this article, I'll go thru the Times piece point-by-point and explain where the Times, and in fact, most people, have the wrong idea. The Times statements are in bold.

Domestic violence is a serious law enforcement and public health problem affecting as many as one in four women in this country.

While there can be no disagreement that domestic violence is a serious problem, there is no evidence that "one in four" women are affected. This is only an opinion formulated by those in the industry, based on wishful thinking and a desire to keep funding rolling in to existing programs. It also ignores the concept that men are equally affected; a concept illustrated time and again by objective study, some of which has been done by those same existing programs.
...
Vice President Biden has been sadly misguided in his key role in creating VAWA. By establishing an incorrect perception of a human problem, and codifying it into law as a political and gender issue, while also establishing a special victim class in society, the Vice President has simply managed to stall progress and keep the issue firmly planted in a bygone era. Only time will tell the extent of the damage done.'

Mom indicted, arrested for denying son cancer care

Michael · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 37-year-old Salem woman, who allegedly withheld life-saving cancer treatment from her dying son, was arrested tonight, two days after she was indicted on charges stemming from the death of the autistic child.

Kristen LaBrie, whose 9-year-old son, Jeremy Fraser, died of leukemia in March, was indicted by an Essex County Grand Jury on Friday.

Charged with attempted murder, permitting serious bodily injury to a disabled person, child endangerment, and permitting substantial bodily injury to a child, she is scheduled to be arraigned tomorrow in Salem Superior Court.
...
According to court documents, LaBrie's Danvers-based lawyer, Kevin James, might argue LaBrie's mental health was so strained she was unable to make appropriate choices for her son stemming from the death of the autistic child.'

Fatal DV Cases Have Male Victims

Anonymous · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Domestic violence against men is seen as a joke in this culture," he said, adding that male victims are often thought of as "wimpy" or "weak."

A Sonoma County health department report for 2005 through 2009 listed several gaps in resources and services for domestic abuse victims, including the need for greater attention for male victims and female perpetrators.

The report also said there was a lack of gender-specific support and counseling for male victims. It also recommended a change in thinking to acknowledge that both parties can instigate or contribute to domestic violence.

"Men are today where women were 30 years ago as far as being invisible victims," said Manthey. "The battered women's advocates have done a tremendous job in bringing to light this issue with the public. . . . It's time to turn the light onto battered men. Too bad it's taken three murders."'

Woman jailed over false date rape claims

anthony · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who falsely claimed she had been date-raped by a man she met over the Internet has been jailed.

Natalie Jefferson told officers she had been attacked in a back lane during a night out in Newcastle by a stranger she met in a chatroom.

As a result of her lies, an innocent man who has never been in trouble before was arrested and spent the best part of a day in police custody as a sex suspect.
...
"This was a huge waste of police time, and, more serious than that, is this led to the arrest of an innocent man."'

Researcher Says Women's Initiation of Domestic Violence Predicts Risk to Women

Matt · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How can we prevent Intimate Partner Violence and injury to women? IPV researcher Deborah Capaldi, Ph.D., a social scientist at the Oregon Social Learning Center, finds that the best way for women to be safe is to not initiate violence against their male partners. According to Dr. Capaldi, "The question of initiation of violence is a crucial one... much IPV is mutual, and initiations -- even that seem minor -- may lead to escalation."

Dr. Capaldi recently presented her work at "From Ideology to Inclusion 2009: New Directions in Domestic Violence Research and Intervention," an IPV conference in Los Angeles June 26-28. While studies have consistently found that women initiate as much violence against their male partners as vice versa, two-thirds of domestic violence injuries are suffered by women.'

Basically, don't pick fights with others if you don't want to get beat up yourself. Oh yeah, that's a rule only for men as it pertains to men.... silly me!

"Let’s Call the Whole Thing Off"

Matt · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

An article reviewed here on Glenn Sacks' blog. From the review:

'Loh had been married for 20 years when she decided she wanted a divorce. She and her husband have two elementary-school-aged children. She has nothing bad to say about her husband, but seemingly the magic just wasn't there any longer. Loh's oblique way of letting us know about her extramarital affair is to say that her "commitment to monogamy...came unglued." (Can you hear Mark Sanford or Eliot Spitzer saying that?)

And having done so, she found that "I would not be able to replace the romantic memory of my fellow transgressor with the more suitable image of my husband..."
...
And here's how: if a woman is sexually unsatisfied by her husband, she should have two men, one to do the chores around the house and the other to do sexual service on the side, but whom the kids never see. If neither partner has much interest in sex, then they agree to just be companions. And that, according to Loh, covers the waterfront. If there are any other permutations of male/female intimacy, Loh doesn't let on about them. Really, I kid you not.

And kids? Loh says that from ages 1-5 (what happened to birth-to-one year old?) children should be raised "tribally" by a group of women. Men would come in periodically to do chores and provide sex. After age five or so, men would take over parenting.

I know; you think I'm making this up. You're thinking of all the hundreds of gaping holes in her arguments, the wholesale ignorance of basic facts, the final descent into utter fantasy. Well, I thought of that too and I tell you, it's too much to take on, so I won't even try. As every attorney knows, sometimes it's better to just shut up and let your opponent's argument fall of its own weight.'

McNair murder: police not drawing conclusions yet

Matt · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On Monday, a relative of Kazemi claimed police have told him they are almost sure McNair's 20-year-old girlfriend was the shooter.

According to Farzin Abdi, the nephew of Kazemi, Nashville police also told him that Kazemi recently purchased a gun.
...
Police labeled his death homicide Sunday, revealing McNair had been shot four times - twice in the head, twice in the chest when found in a rented condominium he shared with a longtime friend, Wayne Neeley. Police found a semiautomatic pistol under Kazemi's body.

But police spokesman Don Aaron said they were reviewing every possibility, interviewing friends of both and an ex-boyfriend before labeling Kazemi's death.'

Heck, yeah, coulda been ANYTHING! I mean, he could have shot himself four times, two of those times in the head, then offed his girlfriend with a single shot to the head at point-contact range! Or maybe he shot her first, then shot himself four times, twice in the head. Or maybe her ex-boyfriend snuck in on them, shot McNair four times, then calmly put the gun to his ex-gf's head and pulled the trigger (just once, mind you), then left the gun on the scene and fled without anyone noticing. Oh yeah, he rubbed her hands all over the gun to make sure it had plenty of her prints on it, too. Also, he must have used gloves too the whole time he handled the gun. Man, that guy is one smart dude!

How about this: Green three-headed space aliens appeared out of hyperspace, shot them both, planted the gun with her fingerprints all over it, then zipped back up to space with no one the wiser.

Yeah, that's it!

States Defund Women's Commissions

anthony · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(WOMENSENEWS)--This year, at least five women's commissions--in Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire and California--are facing closure threats.

"State-local budgets are tight and women are the first to go," said Bonnie Coffey, president of the National Association of Women's Commissions, also known as NACW, based in Rockville, Md.

...

Coffey urges voters to contact local legislators to protest any defundings that they know about in their states.

"What appears to be the most help is for people in individual states to be aware of the need for women's commission and to raise a ruckus when they're threatened with de-funding or dissolution," she said.

...

"Women are not being put into the lifeboat first, they're being thrown overboard," he said. "How shortsighted and stupid do we have to collectively be to stop funding women's commissions, the only access, voice and power in government for girls and women, when issues of gender inequality still require far more federal government attention?"'

Maryland School Joins Test of Online Courses Tailored to Girls

anthony · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the Online School for Girls flickers to life this fall on computer screens across the country, students will take part in an unusual experiment that joins two trends: girls-only schooling and online teaching.

A consortium that includes the 108-year-old Holton-Arms School in Bethesda is driving the project, in the belief that girls can benefit from an Internet curriculum tailored just to them.

"There's been a lot of research done on how girls learn differently with technology than boys," said Brad Rathgeber, Holton-Arms's director of technology. "Part of this is a little bit of theory that we're trying to put in practice to see if it really does play out."
...
Backers of girls' schools say there are benefits to having no boys in the classroom: Girls prosper when teaching methods are designed just for them, they can pursue interests free from gender stereotyping and their hands shoot up more often when boys aren't around.'

CNN: Why marrying for money isn't a bad idea

anthony · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's a new book out called "Smart Girls Marry Money: How Women Have Been Duped Into the Romantic Dream -- And How They Are Paying For It," by Elizabeth Ford and Daniela Drake.

Forget for a moment that they annoyingly refer to grown women as "girls" in their title and check out their thesis: because, for a variety of reasons, men earn more money than women, it's a wise move to marry someone who can provide for you and your family.

I haven't read the book, so I have no idea if it is filled with sexist swill or not. But just reading Newsweek's article about the book, it sounds like pretty sensible advice to me.

Before you get upset, I will acknowledge a bunch of things that I know to be true: yes, women earn less than men for a lot of sexist reasons and that discrimination must stop. Yes, mothers get "mommy-tracked" and their careers are stalled. And of course there are all kinds of misfires to the "marry rich" idea, such as the rich guy who is an a-hole. But that doesn't change the fact that marrying a man with money can be a better idea than marrying someone who is broke.'

Author Blames Steve McNair

anthony · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In April, 2008 Steve McNair retired after 13 years playing in the NFL. His press conference statements portray a very different man than the one found shot to death yesterday. Or did he actually predict what would happen?
...
This married father of four and pillar of the community clearly couldn't hold it in – his pants. Like so many men in power, he used that power with the young women and probably thought he could do anything he wanted.
...
Perhaps he should have thought about his four young children before he started chasing young women. At least we now are clear about what he wanted to do personally in life that he couldn't do during football season. He continued to make passes, just not on the football field.
...
May we all see the wisdom in McNair's statement about taking things for granted and do our best to appreciate the bounty that surrounds us and the precious impermanence of life. And may all beings live with an integrity that allows them to be fully who they know themselves to be without harming others.'

Ball State favors women

anthony · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The June 30 story "Ball State in some Title IX trouble?" states that Title IX "prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex and applies to any education program or activity operated by a recipient of federal financial assistance." In fact, the application of Title IX allows discrimination so long as women are the beneficiaries.

Check out the Ball State Web site. The school has a women's studies program, offering a major and a minor, and one of whose goals is to have students develop an "appreciation of diversity." There is no men's studies program. So much for diversity.

Ball State has a women's health center that "was designed to meet those health needs unique to the female student population." There is no men's health center despite the fact that men have health problems unique to their sex. Among the health needs listed at the women's health center site are infertility issues, mild depression/anxiety, minor respiratory/sinus problems, urinary problems and sexual dysfunction. Men have these sorts of problems, too, but apparently their sex is not specifically invited to deal with them.'

Teen Told He Can't Play Field Hockey

anthony · 6 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The teenager said the athletic director went on to tell him that he was concerned about the safety of the girls if boys were allowed to play, and that Levine might take away playing time from the girls, which would make parents jealous.

"He brought up Title IX and said that Title IX does not entitle boys to the same rights it gives girls," Levine said of the conversation. "He said if it was a girl wanting to play football he'd have to let her, but because I'm a boy wanting to play field hockey, he's not gonna let me."

Title IX is a law enacted in 1972 that states, "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."
...
Levine's mother, Scheryl, told CBS 21 News that her son is a victim of "blatant sexual discrimination."'

Korea: 90% of Teachers Back Quota for Male Teachers

Anonymous · 7 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I've lived in Korea for almost 10 years, and here is one reason why. Thank goodness there are still some countries where common sense still applies. Excerpt:

'Nearly 90 percent of Korean elementary and secondary school teachers in a selective survey said schools should establish a quota for male teachers to correct the gender imbalance. The Korean Federation of Teachers' Associations (KFTA) surveyed a total of 549 teachers; 433 males and 116 females across the nation between July 3 and 6. Most of the respondents replied that they face some problems in teaching and counseling students due to the lack of male teachers.
...
A total of 89.3 percent said schools need to set up a quota for male teachers to keep the ratio of female teachers from exceeding more than 70 percent. It marks a sharp increase from 62.8 percent in 2007 survey.

Of the female respondents, 73.3 percent expressed concern that the dominance of female teachers could cause lack of role models for male students. Nearly 78 percent of female teachers backed the introduction of steps to resolve the gender imbalance.'

Nine years for grandmother who drowned baby: Fair result for this woman?

Anonymous · 7 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SAN ANTONIO — A Texas woman will serve at least nine years in prison for drowning her 3-month-old granddaughter in what the defense said was a misguided effort to teach the infant to swim.

Gabriella Sigler must serve half of the 18-year sentence imposed Thursday before being eligible for parole. Sigler had pleaded guilty to a charge of injury to a child in the 2005 death of little Melody Sigler.
...
Defense witnesses testified Sigler was suffering from bipolar disorder. But police said Sigler admitted to using drugs the night before and drinking wine the morning Melody died.'

New Zealand: Conference focuses on boys' education

anthony · 7 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The school holidays might have begun but the work has not stopped for a group of teachers from all around the world who have gathered in Hawke's Bay for an international conference.

They are here to deal with one of New Zealand's education systems most pressing problems, lifting boys' academic achievement.

It comes as new research shows Kiwi boys are further behind girls than any other developed country.

Hundreds of international educators gathered at Lindisfarne College on Tuesday to learn how to best teach boys.'

Related: Teachers Take A Stand For Boys

A look at Justice Ginsburg's "difference feminism" ideology

anthony · 7 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But ordinarily Ginsburg, a pioneering women's-rights lawyer, doesn't emphasize supposed differences between male and female. Indeed, one of her best known opinions in the one striking down the Virginia Military Institute's all-male admissions policy. In that 1996 case, Ginsburg, writing for the court, noted disapprovingly that a lower court that upheld the all-make policy concluded that coeducation would alter "at least these three aspects of VMI program: physical training, the absence of privacy, and the adversative approach." (Again, my italics.)
...
The notion that the Constitution should be interpreted in light of differences between men and women, or boys and girls, is more usually associated with "difference feminism" than with the notion that equality means treating the sexes exactly the same. Ginsburg is ordinarily associated with the latter, and older, approach to feminism. But wouldn't that view suggest that a 13-year old boy would be just as embarrassed by a strip search as a 13-year-old girl?'

Jail for woman who groomed girl

Anonymous · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman has been jailed for grooming a schoolgirl for sex, in what is believed to be the first case of its kind.

Sarah Wilson, 21, from Camberwell, south London, sent the 15-year-old girl "sexually graphic" messages via mobile phone and the internet for six months.

She was arrested after persuading the "vulnerable" girl to meet her at King's Cross station in January this year.'

Hudson Valley Renegades go through with women-only promotion

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Renegades management estimated between 500 and 700 fans filled the ballpark when Tuesday night's game started - there were about another 100 outside - and team officials couldn't have been happier, watching their women-only promotion come to fruition.
...
Billed as a tribute to female fans, the planned event would have kept men out of the ballpark until the game was official, providing male fans numerous diversions - from video games to large-screen television sets on which to watch the game - in a party-like atmosphere just outside the stadium gates.
...
Late last week, however, county officials sent a letter to Renegades management warning them the promotion likely violated the state's human rights laws, if not the U.S. Constitution. The county owns Dutchess Stadium and leases it to the Renegades, the Tampa Bay Rays' short-season, Class A affiliate.'

"I was surprised," Tumminia, a graduate of Our Lady of Lourdes High School, said of the backlash, which also included some fans. "There was a handful of men that were obviously very annoyed about this. … It's all in jest. There really was no ill will going into it. I was a little taken aback. It's really just a night of celebrating and honoring."'

Ex-teacher convicted of sexual assault seeks commutation, admits guilt

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LITTLE ROCK — In a request for commutation of her 12-year sentence, a former Greenwood teacher convicted of sexually assaulting a teenage student admits for the first time that she had sex with the boy.

Deanna Bobo, 41, submitted to the state Parole Board a request for commutation in which she wrote, “I engaged in sexual intercourse with the victim on two separate occasions.”

“This would be first time we’ve heard that admission,” Sebastian County Prosecutor Dan Shue said Monday.

Shue said he would oppose any sort of commutation for Bobo.

Bobo, formerly a special education teacher at Raymond E. Wells Junior High School, was arrested in November 2005 after the parents of a student at the school gave police a series of e-mails, some of them sexually explicit, that apparently were exchanged between Bobo and their son.'

Doubts on Theophanous rape case

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CORRESPONDENCE that could support a woman's claims that Labor MP Theo Theophanous raped her may have been falsified, throwing doubt on the allegations against him.

Two former friends of the woman told a committal hearing in the Melbourne Magistrates Court yesterday that conversations attributed to them in letters and emails from the alleged victim never happened.

The alleged victim told police that on September 10, 1998, Theophanous raped her on the couch in his Parliament House office.

She said that later she spoke to three friends about the alleged assault, but yesterday two of these women said the conversations never happened.'

Israel: IDF date rape case set to be closed

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two Golani Brigade soldiers who were arrested over the weekend for suspicion of raping two female soldiers after spiking their drinks with a date-rape drug were released from custody Wednesday after investigators failed to gather sufficient evidence against them.

The case is expected to be closed without indictments.

"I was certain that the truth would eventually come out; it was a false charge," one of the soldiers told his attorney after hearing of the decision to release him.

...

The attorneys representing the two soldiers, Shai Roda, Yahel Ben Oved and Boaz Reuven, expressed their satisfaction with the decision to release their clients.

"There was no justification to arrest them in the first place," Roda said, "it was clear that the women soldiers had fabricated the story.

"I am considering filing a motion to launch an investigation against the complainants and demand that the soldiers be compensated for the injustice done to them towards the end of their military service," he said.'

Charges Dropped Against Husband in Pizza Delivery Rape Case

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Charges of rape and kidnapping have been dropped against a married father of two who got more than he bargained for during a romantic rendezvous in the mountains with a stripper.

David Jansen was arrested after a pizza deliveryman stopped by his remote rented cabin in the Tennessee Smoky Mountains and saw a woman tied up on the couch mouthing, "Call 911."

But Jansen claimed all along that the woman was his lover and that she was into bondage, his lawyers providing stacks of evidence that the two had been in a relationship for sometime.

After news of the arrest hit the media, the woman's history of filing false rape claims surfaced and her mother was interviewed saying that her daughter was a notorious liar.
...
"This office will not prosecute the victim," Dunn said in the statement. "The evidence would not sustain a conviction for making a false report."'

Kansas City Woman Pleads Guilty to Wire Fraud in Staged Rape, Assault

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kansas City, Mo - infoZine - Matt J. Whitworth, Acting United States Attorney for the Western District of Missouri, announced that a Kansas City, Mo., woman pleaded guilty in federal court to her role in a wire fraud conspiracy involving a scheme between two women to hire a man to assault them. The woman was hoping to force a higher settlement of her sexual harassment lawsuit against a former employer.

Lindsey D. Crawford, 23, of Kansas City, waived her right to a grand jury and pleaded guilty before U.S. District Judge Ortrie D. Smith this morning to a federal information that charges her with conspiracy to commit wire fraud.

By pleading guilty today, Crawford admitted that she was involved in a scheme to pay a man to physically and sexually assault her and another woman. The assault occurred on Nov. 25, 2008, in the garage at Crawford's residence. Afterward, Crawford made false reports to law enforcement authorities concerning the staged assault, falsely claiming to have been assaulted by two unknown masked men. As a result, law enforcement authorities spent a substantial amount of time and money investigating the nonexistent crime.'

UK: Woman made false rape claim

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who cried rape after a night of kinky sex with an ex-boyfriend was convicted of trying to pervert the course of justice.

During the sex session Tracy Knowles had been tied to a four poster bed by Alex Warren.

Mr Warren told the court she consented to everything – but the next day Knowles complained to her current boyfriend, another friend and her parents that she had been raped.

Her father, a Ministry of Defence policeman in Bristol, then called police and Mr Warren was arrested and spent 22 hours in custody.

At the end of a three-day trial the jury convicted Knowles by a majority of 11 to 1 of making a false allegation of rape with intent to pervert the course of justice between June 15-18 last year.

Judge Martin Picton told Knowles it was a very serious offence made worse for her by fighting the case.'

Woman back in jail for murder of her son

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Vancouver resident who won the right to withdraw her 2007 guilty plea to murder in the death of her son has returned to the Clark County Jail.

Kelly N. Meining, 34, arrived at the jail June 19 from the Washington Corrections Center for Women in Gig Harbor.
...
Prosecutors have re-filed a charge of first-degree murder in the May 19, 2006, stabbing of 20-month-old Bryce Jasper Meining.
...
She was sentenced three weeks later to 24 years in prison.
...
Her appellate attorney successfully argued that the prosecutor, judge and defense attorney failed to give adequate warning that first-degree murder carries a mandatory minimum sentence of 20 years.'

UK: 'Men are redundant, but let's keep them anyway'

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The "Crisis of Masculinity", as it's often termed, has been brewing a long while. My old boss at GQ, Michael VerMeulen, used to say in the 1990s that the ascent of women meant that men only had two choices, "playboy or drone". But soon even those options were closed: in 2003, after reading Y: The Descent of Men, by the Telegraph science writer Steve Jones, my husband told me mournfully that the crumbling Y chromosome meant his lot would be extinct in another couple of million years.

A few resilient Iron Johns kept beating their chests, sneering at metrosexuals and rushing into the wilderness to wrestle bears. And things started to look up after The Dangerous Book for Boys became a hit, and whittling sticks was once again acknowledged as a useful male activity. But the announcement that British scientists have discovered how to create human sperm from stem cells means it's official: men are redundant.'

"Furry" woman accused of sexually assaulting teen

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FORT COLLINS, Colo. - A Fort Collins mother is under arrest accused of sexually assaulting a teenage boy she met through a common interest in "furry" gatherings. Furries are people who dress in animal costumes and get together to socialize.

According to the arrest affidavit, 45-year-old Richael Michels was considered to be a role model for the 16-year-old boy, but allegedly was having sex with him the entire time.

The initial tip apparently came from her husband, who was upset about her growing interest in Furries.

Brandon De Vito runs 25th Hour Anime shop and says most of his friends are Furries. He says they adopt animal personas and make costumes called "fur suits." De Vito says the Furry lifestyle is not about sex at all. He says Furries are harmless, gentle, good-natured people who like to get together to share their common interest.'

Standish Woman Charged With Assaulting Husband

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'STANDISH (NEWS CENTER) -- More than two months after Jeffrey Dolloff suffered serious head injuries in an assault at his home, his wife has been arrested.

State police arrested Linda Dolloff, 47, Wednesday afternoon. She is charged with two counts of attempted murder, two counts of elevated aggravated assault and one count of filing a false report. The charges stem from the beating of her husband inside their home Easter morning.

Linda Dolloff was treated for a gunshot wound to the abdomen after the incident. She is being held at the Cumberland County jail.'

Canada: FRA ordered to pay $20,000 punishment for challenging court

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Ontario Superior Court judge has ordered a crusading fathers'-rights activist to pay $20,000 to the federal government as punishment for mounting an ill-founded challenge to federal child-support payment guidelines.

Mr. Justice Alan C.R. Whitten ruled that Lucien Khodeir's negligence lawsuit amounted to a delaying tactic designed to forestall him having to pay support orders of $1,230 - including arrears - for Mr. Khodeir's 12- and 14-year-old children.

Several weeks ago, Judge Whitten dismissed the lawsuit after a brief hearing.
...
However, Mr. Khodeir said in an interview that the cost ruling is another example of judges shutting the courtroom doors to self-represented litigants who display the audacity to attack a sacred legal shibboleth such as the child-support guidelines.

Mr. Khodeir said that he is in debt "up to my eyeballs," but he will not be deterred from his campaign to overturn guidelines that he regards as unfair, arbitrary and discriminatory toward men.'

McNair murder: Police admit shooter was girlfriend

Matt · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NASHVILLE, Tenn. – Police confirmed Wednesday that ex-NFL star Steve McNair's 20-year-old girlfriend killed him before turning the gun on herself.

They said they may never know what was going through Sahel Kazemi's mind when she shot McNair in his condominium early Saturday, but interviews with friends led detectives to conclude she was becoming increasingly distraught over events in her life, including financial problems. Police said she also suspected McNair was seeing another woman.

Police earlier had labeled McNair's death a homicide, but awaited further tests and investigation before saying for sure what happened.

At one point, Kazemi told an associate that her "personal life was all screwed up," Police Chief Ronal Serpas said. She had mounting debts and had been unable to sell her car. Her roommate was moving, which would have doubled her rent.'

Update: She shot him to death while he was asleep; read it here. Excerpt:

'NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) - Former NFL star Steve McNair was shot dead in his sleep last week by a 20-year-old girlfriend distraught about mounting financial problems and her belief that he was seeing someone else, police said Wednesday.

Sahel Kazemi "was spinning out of control" when she shot McNair four times as he dozed on a sofa early Saturday, then turned the gun on herself, Police Chief Ronal Serpas said.'

North Wales fathers fight for their rights as equal parents

anthony · 8 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DIVORCED and separated fathers say they are being excluded from their children's lives.

A study by Families Need Fathers revealed almost 80% of dads in North Wales are not adequately informed and involved by their child's teachers following a break-up with their partner.

The organisation said most dads are not aware of their rights, and appealed for schools to get up to date with custody laws.

One Rhuddlan father, who wished to remain anonymous, said he had not been made aware of parents evenings, concerts or seen his daughter's school report in over two years.

The 43-year-old, whose child is educated outside Denbighshire in neighbouring Conwy county, said: "It's not so much the fault of school staff as it is the system, because dads are just an afterthought in general when it comes to parenting.'

NY Times interview with Justice Ginsburg: A man must do 'more than carry out the garbage'

anthony · 9 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Q: In the 1980s, you wrote about how while the sphere for women has widened to include more work, men haven't taken on as much domestic responsibility. Do you think that things are beginning to change?

JUSTICE GINSBURG: That's going to take time, changing that kind of culture. But looking at my own family, my daughter Jane teaches at Columbia, she travels all over the world, and she has the most outstanding supportive husband who certainly carries his fair share of the load. Although their division of labor is different than mine and my husband's, because my daughter is a super cook.

Q: Can courts play a role in changing that culture?

JUSTICE GINSBURG: The Legislature can make the change, can facilitate the change, as laws like the Family Medical Leave Act do. But it's not something a court can decree. A court can't tell the man, You've got to do more than carry out the garbage.'

Programs empower women affected by economic abuse

anthony · 9 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Racking up debt without a partner's knowledge? We all know that's something a wife has never done. On a personal note, this is something that happened to me by an ex-girlfriend. She was fond of using my credit card for shopping sprees on Amazon. Excerpt:

'Economic abuse can involve an abuser preventing a person from getting a job. Or cashing the family's income tax refund check and spending the money before paying bills. Or degrading someone by saying he or she is too stupid to manage a checking account. Or harassing a partner at work via phone calls, text messages or e-mail so frequent that the person loses a job.

These are some other forms of economic abuse:

• Taking money, credit cards or property from a partner without permission.

• Racking up debt without a partner's knowledge.

• Being forced by a partner to hand over paychecks.

Some abusers even have opened credit cards in their spouse's or partner's name and ruined their credit. It's tougher to get an apartment or a job with a bad credit score.'

Shriver to host Couric, Shakira, superstars at "Super Bowl" women's conference

anthony · 9 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'California First Lady Maria Shriver has done it again, wrangled a crowd of the world's top entertainers, political insiders and star speakers to her annual Women's Conference -- among them, hero pilot "Sully" Sullenberger, rock stars Shakira and Alicia Keys, Virgin airlines mogul Richard Branson, cousin Caroline Kennedy, CBS anchor Katie Couric, race car driver Danica Patrick, and political wives Elizabeth Edwards and Cindy Helmsley McCain.
...
*NBC's "Meet the Press" host David Gregory will moderate a panel starring key Obama advisor Valerie Jarrett, former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and Shriver herself on "the role of an increasingly women's nation,' Shriver said.
...
"They've asked me to bring it to Mexico, India, England," she said. "Gloria Steinem said we should put it in all 50 states.'

Male-only reproduction

Anonymous · 9 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Check this out. It appears that two men (gay or not) will be able in the next future to have their own offspring, without resorting to female eggs. Great news from my point of view, each MRA should support gay rights, because it will enable men to have their own families, without interacting with women and risking to experience a nasty divorce and discrimination in the courts. Combined with artificial wombs (that will come by the end of the twenty-first century), it will free men from this kind of oppression. What do you all think? Excerpt:

'Everybody is now focusing on the British research forecasting male-free reproduction. The team at the University of Newcastle has achieved proto-sperms from human female bone marrow cells.
...
A Brazilian team led by Dr Irina Kerkis of the Butantan Institute in Sao Paulo seems to have achieved both sperm and eggs from cultures of male mouse embryonic stem cells, as detailed in their study published in the journal Cloning and Stem Cells.

The study has not proved yet that the eggs coming from males can be fertilized to deliver viable offspring, but this could be the first step towards male only reproduction.'

Idaho Babysitter Accused of Having Sex With 14-Year-Old

anthony · 9 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'POST FALLS, Idaho — An Idaho woman face charges that she had sex with a 14-year-old boy that she was hired to watch in August 2007.

KXLY-TV reported Tuesday that 28-year-old Summer Nelson, of Post Falls, was charged Monday with four counts of lewd conduct with a child.

Court records say Nelson was a friend of the boy's mother. Police say the abuse was reported in December 2008, after the boy's mother grew suspicious of Nelson's attention toward the boy.

Investigators say Nelson told the boy's siblings that she was in love with their brother. Detectives say Nelson and the boy had at least four sexual encounters.

Nelson remains held in Kootenai County Jail on $50,000 bond. It was not immediately known whether she had a lawyer.'

UK: Father arrested and held in cells for playing football in park with his children without council permission

Anonymous · 10 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A father was arrested and held in a cell for five hours for playing football with his children in a park without permission from the council.

Darren Chapman, 42, was taken into custody after the family game, which was in defiance of town hall orders.

Council rules state that players must undergo a criminal records check, pay for insurance and apply for formal permission for the game.'

Names needed for petition for Geoffrey Hibbert

Matt · 10 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Mr. Hibbert was 'Batman' during a protest conducted by the New F4J. A YouTube video about his arrest is here.

He is scheduled to be sentenced next week. A petition for his release is here. His attorney has asked that people sign the petition and spread the word.

"Men have lost the 'battle of the sexes' . . . because the opponent cheats"

Matt · 10 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gentlemen, it is now obvious that the much ballyhooed "battle of the sexes" was over even before it had begun, and our side never fired a shot. It is incumbent on men to raise the white flag of surrender, but we mustn't feel bad because we never had a chance -- we are far too chivalrous, and our opponents fight dirty. To use a baseball analogy, their tactics are akin to moving the outfield wall in 100 feet every time they come to bat, then moving it back when our team comes up. You see, women won the battle with an amazingly simple, yet frighteningly ingenious, strategy: they merely declared their superiority to men in every facet of life, and that was enough to send our side into retreat.
...
But even pointing out these facts and suggesting that there is any inequity favoring women will be met with disgusted eye rolling on the part of the opposition. That's one of their formidable weapons that helped them win the "battle of the sexes" before a single shot was fired.'

Tori Amos: What I know about men

anthony · 10 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Violence and seduction are a ticking bomb. I think it goes back to the powerlessness some men feel. They feel so emasculated that they get angry or seek attention from a place that they shouldn't. For a man to get off on a woman screaming, the wires have got crossed somewhere. When you're dealing with men with real power they only want you if you're willing. It's about the dance between the male and female. Real power is about exchange, not subordination. For some people a powerful man is a bully. He's powerful because he scares people. And I would say that's not a powerful man - that's an intimidating man, a man who uses intimidation tactics. A powerful man is a man that knows who he is and doesn't need to manipulate people to get what he wants.'

George Jonas: When men are passé, who covers the support payments?

Anonymous · 11 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Large, hairy, smelly --and obsolete

British scientists reported this week that they're close to creating artificial sperm. Needless to say, the news is getting everyone very excited. If true, it will be possible to do away completely with that vestigial gender — I hesitate to call it "sex" — known as "men."

Not a day too soon, I say. Large, hairy creatures, with a knack for tracking dirt into the house, men tend to strut, slouch, or snore, depending on whether they're trying to walk, dine, or attend a concert. They prance like princes, weave in and out of traffic, then congeal into lumps when they get home. On weekends they pull themselves together long enough to watch the ballgame on TV or sneak out of the house for a game of golf. Mostly they're underfoot in the kitchen, where they scratch, munch, hitch up their pants, and fail to notice important things, such as people's new hairdos. They scrounge for bottles of beer to wash down enormous quantities of greasy food they keep demanding in booming voices. Calling them a nuisance is an understatement.
...

The fact is, other than a procreative function, men have been redundant for some time. Originally kept for lifting heavy objects, they initiated their own obsolescence by inventing the hoist. An indolent and cowardly lot, men always tried to avoid exerting energy or approaching prey animals or intruders too closely, so they kept tinkering with sticks and stones, fashioning them into tools and weapons. The wages of such laziness and timidity were not long in coming. The easier men made it for themselves to fetch, pitch and catch, the less people needed them for fetching, pitching and catching. Every time they came up with a danger- or labour-saving device — the wheel, the projectile, the shield — it diminished their reason for being.
...
When I said as much to a family court judge this week, she looked skeptical. "Very cute, but when embryonic stem cells differentiate into sperm," she said, "whom do we sue for paternity? The embryo? For this to fly, your British researchers need to develop an additional line of stem cells that differentiate into child support and alimony."'

"Women have always known that men are a bit of a waste of space"

Proud_to_be_a_man · 11 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Absolutely disgusting sexism (but it's the 'right' sort, so that's OK with the mainstream media it seems), here. Excerpt:

'Women have always known that men are a bit of a waste of space.

Now British scientists have proved how unnecessary blokes truly are by creating the first human sperm from stem cells.'

Let's do the always-enlightening gender reversal thing:

"Men have always known that women are a bit of a waste of space.

Now British scientists have proved how unnecessary chicks truly are by creating the first human ovary from stem cells."

Yep. I can see that one being printed in a national newspaper... not!

Essay: Why most men tolerate feminist misandry

Matt · 11 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Why most men tolerate feminist misandry
by Jeffrey Asher
7th July 2009
Over twelve years of teaching "Men's Lives," I also wondered why majority-male legislatures, judiciaries and mainstream media editors, capitulated to and enforced feminist politics and jurisprudence.

Above all, men are powerfully driven by sexual attraction to women. Men easily rationalize their sexual need for women as based in intellectual and moral equality.

Male protection of women and children - at the risk of men's safety and lives - over millennia of social evolution, allowed our species to survive. I suspect that imperative is as integral to male brains and hormones, as the need for and care of children is integral to women.

Men in power did not accede to feminists because of sexual opportunism alone – women remain second to one in that category. When feminists – confused as representing women – called out to men for 'equality,' men entrenched quotas and feminist jurisprudence. A man shamed by a woman promptly takes corrective action, to 'act like a Man'.

Fox-Memphis ignores male DV victims in latest billboard campaign

Matt · 11 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Steve McNair played 13 seasons in the National Football League, most of that time for the Tennessee Titans. This past Saturday, McNair was shot to death by his girlfriend Sahel Kazemi. Of course, no one wanted to call it "domestic violence."

Just five days later, Fox TV in Memphis ran a story on domestic violence, conveniently omitting any mention of male victims of DV. Why is it that male victims of partner homicide are invisible?

To express your strong displeasure with this biased reporting, go to http://www.myfoxmemphis.com/subindex/about_us/contact_us

UK: Honours system quotas to decorate more women and ethnic minorities

Proud_to_be_a_man · 12 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Quotas have been covertly introduced to the honours system by the Government so that more women and members of ethnic minorities are decorated by the Queen.
...
Jilly Cooper, the novelist, who was awarded an OBE in 2004, said: "This is an absolutely fatuous thing. What is the point of this? You can't make 55 per cent women; honours should be awarded on merit.

Mrs Cooper, 72, who is a close friend of the Duchess of Cornwall, added: "Sex should be absolutely irrelevant. What are the other 45 per cent going to be? Guinea pigs, gerbils, horses? I never heard of anything so silly and irrelevant, but it is just typical."'

Police Detain Wife in Ex-Boxing Champ Arturo Gatti's Hotel Death

anthony · 12 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SAO PAULO — The wife of former boxing champion Arturo Gatti was detained as a suspect by Brazilian authorities Sunday following his death at a posh seaside resort.

Police said 23-year-old Amanda Rodrigues was taken into custody after contradictions in her interrogation.

Gatti's body was found early Saturday in a hotel room at the Porto de Galinhas resort in northeastern Brazil.'

India: Court forcing men out of homes for domestic violence webdigr · 12 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Gaurav Sharma has just lost his house to his estranged wife, and he is not the only man ordered by the court to surrender his home as courts seek to crack down on domestic violence.

Life took an ugly turn for Sharma when a Delhi court asked him to vacate his newly bought house in Gurgaon near Delhi and hand over possession to a wife who had left him three years after marriage.

The dramatic development took place after his wife slapped a case of domestic violence. Sharma pleaded with the court to be lenient but was forced to move to a rented accommodation.

The Domestic Violence Act of 2006 seeks to provide protection and compensation for all kinds of abuse at home directed at women — including physical, sexual, verbal, emotional and economic.'

The story of prisoner F95488

Matt · 12 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It's March 3, 2008, a brilliant day in Santa Barbara. But for Eric Frimpong, it feels like hell. He's in Superior Court, encircled by sheriff's deputies, making one more trip to the Department 2 courtroom. This is his last stop on the outside for a while, a painful reminder of how far he has fallen. He left his native Ghana in 2005 to play soccer for UC Santa Barbara; a year later he became a campus hero while leading the Gauchos to their first-ever national championship. If the immigrant experience can have a sound, Frimpong's sound was a raucous stadium. But in 2007, just weeks after being selected by the Kansas City Wizards in the MLS draft, he was accused of raping another student on the beach near his house. Now he's a convicted felon.
...
Despite having DNA evidence matched to him, Randall was never a suspect. Neither was the man who retrieved Doe's purse, which she said she'd lost either on the beach or at Frimpong's home. It was delivered to the sheriff's department the next day, minus $30, by someone described in the police report as a "can recycler." But because of a "language barrier," he wasn't questioned.

Frimpong was the only suspect, even though there was no apparent sign of sexual activity -- no blood, semen, vaginal secretions -- or any scratches or other telltale marks of rape on his body or clothes. The absence of abrasions was odd. Doe told authorities she was wearing a "thicker ring" on her right ring finger and that she hit her attacker so hard, "all my knuckles were screwed up." There was also very little sand found on his clothes. (At the trial, Dianne Burns, a criminologist who examined the physical evidence, testified to the presence of two small vials' worth of sand in the cuffs of Frimpong's jeans and in one pocket.)
...

Back on campus, media coverage led to an unwelcome surprise for the defense: After reading about Frimpong's arrest, another student came forward claiming that she too had been assaulted by him. This new Jane Doe told police that a few weeks before the rape, he had acted aggressively toward her, grabbing her buttocks and tackling her on the beach. The DA used the accusation to charge Frimpong with misdemeanor sexual assault, which made for a second count at trial. (He was found not guilty.) "The DA's office filed a weak claim of sexual assault to portray Eric as a serial sexual predator and bolster the flawed rape claim," wrote Kim Seefeld, a local defense attorney and former prosecutor, in a blog post on Jan. 15, 2008. "The allegations severely prejudiced him before the jury."
...
On Jan. 31, 2008, with Frimpong in jail awaiting sentencing, the defense filed a motion for a new trial, citing several factors, including a development with the jury: In a written declaration to the court, juror Ann Diebold stated, "I regret the decision I made in finding Mr. Frimpong guilty." Among her many points was the court's refusal to provide the jury with evidence they had requested for review, including Doe's testimony and Frimpong's interview with Kies -- the latter because some jurors stated that they wanted "the opportunity to hear Mr. Frimpong's side of the story." (They were read only Doe's direct testimony, without cross-examination, because Judge Hill said "it would take some time to gather the additional information," Diebold wrote.) Diebold also claimed that the jurors rushed through deliberations so they could conclude the case by the Christmas holiday. "I felt pressure from the judge and other jurors to reach a verdict by Dec. 18," she wrote.'

The Atlantic: 'The Girls Step Up To This'

anthony · 12 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But all of that aside, I think it's about time for men to take more responsibility for their bodies and sex lives. Women, I am told, have to constantly think about protecting themselves. They have to give more thought to what situations they end up in. Who they're sleeping with, and who they're entering into a relationship. Rape and physical abuse always hangs in the air. Men, I think because of sheer physical strength, believe that we don't have to think this way. We think we can take few shots at the bar, screw whoever, wake up at nine, hit the waffle house, and then drive home with a great story to tell.
...
I don't want to blame McNair for his own death, but the fact is that men who are reckless, often leave behind families to pick up the pieces. I can't imagine the personal work his wife will have to do reconcile all of this, and then explain it to their four sons.'

'Privileging of the Penis'?

anthony · 12 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Few studies have focused on men's involvement in safe and unsafe heterosexual sex, far more research on the heterosexual transmission of HIV centres on women than on men, and very few education campaigns are aimed at straight men. There are good and bad reasons for this. On the one hand, this reflects feminist achievements in identifying AIDS as a women's issue. On the other hand, men's absence reflects the status of maleness as normative and invisible and perpetuates the allocation of responsibility for safe sex only to women. Women's inclusion in AIDS policy and education is a valuable achievement, and there are sound feminist reasons for directing attention also to heterosexual men.

...

Heterosexual men's complaints about 'showers in raincoats' demonstrate a privileging of the penis as an important site of sexual sensation and erotic pleasure. To the extent that these complaints inform heterosexual men's reluctance to use condoms, they privilege men's pleasure over prophylactic and contraceptive safety.'

RADAR ALERT: It's Hard Work Spending All That Money!

Matt · 13 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Congress spends approx. 1 billion taxpayer dollars each year with the stated intent of eliminating domestic violence, the largest portion of that amount being the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). They are poised to increase funding even further next year when they vote on a 5 year reauthorization of VAWA. One would think that this much money should have greatly reduced domestic violence by now. But VAWA spending has had little or no effect on reducing domestic violence.[1]

Since the passage of VAWA is a virtual slam-dunk, those who benefit financially from this law are emboldened to demand more and more with each reauthorization. So legislation that's only tangentially related to domestic violence – legislation that could never pass on its own merits – finds it way into VAWA.

Gatti murder update: "Nothing is being ruled out"

Matt · 13 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Like a replay of the McNair case only with an accent. Story here.

'RIO DE JANEIRO (AP)—Brazilian police investigating the death of former boxing champion Arturo Gatti are working on the assumption his wife strangled him with her purse strap.

But police spokeswoman Milena Saraiva says Monday nothing is being ruled out in the investigation, including the possibility another person may have been involved. Gatti was found dead early Saturday in a seaside tourist resort.

Saraiva says police in the northeastern state of Pernambuco are focusing on Gatti's 23-year-old Brazilian wife, Amanda Rodrigues. She is in custody and has been accused by police of killing Gatti. Rodrigues has yet to be charged and has denied any involvement in the death.'

So a room-bandit busted into their room, bashed his head in and then strangled him with his wife's purse, then forcibly drugged her so she would forget the last 10 hours.

Yeah, that's it.

Graham predicts Sotomayor OK 'barring meltdown'

Matt · 13 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – Senate Democrats praised Sonia Sotomayor as a judicial pioneer, but Republicans questioned her impartiality and President Barack Obama's views as well Monday at confirmation hearings for the nation's first Hispanic nominee to the Supreme Court.

Even so, Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., told Sotomayor, "Unless you have a complete meltdown, you're going to get confirmed."

"And I don't think you will" have a meltdown, he added quickly.

Graham spoke after Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, praised Sotomayor in remarks that opened confirmation proceedings in a packed Senate hearing room. "She's been a judge for all Americans. She'll be a justice for all Americans," he said.'

Children Recant Sex-Abuse Tales After Father's 20-Year Prison Stint

Anonymous · 13 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VANCOUVER, Wash. — Former Vancouver police officer Clyde Ray Spencer spent nearly 20 years in prison after he was convicted of sexually molesting his son and daughter. Now, the children say it never happened.

Matthew Spencer and Kathryn Tetz, who live in Sacramento, Calif., each took the stand Friday in Clark County Superior Court to clear their father's name, The Columbian newspaper reported.

Matthew, now 33, was 9 years old at the time. He told a judge he made the allegation after months of insistent questioning by now-retired Clark County sheriff's detective Sharon Krause just so she would leave him alone.
...
Spencer's sentence was commuted by then-Gov. Gary Locke in 2004 after questions arose about his conviction. Among other problems, prosecutors withheld medical exams that showed no evidence of abuse, even though Krause claimed the abuse was repeated and violent.'

Judge frees inmate after record term for delinquent alimony

Matt · 13 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA -- H. Beatty Chadwick, imprisoned in Delaware County for the last 14 years, was in the jail library yesterday giving legal advice to female inmates when a prison official walked up and gave him the news.
...
Minutes earlier a Delaware County Common Pleas judge issued an order granting Mr. Chadwick's petition for freedom, thus ending his incarceration for contempt of court -- a U.S. record for the charge.
...
In 1995 -- the year "Apollo 13" was a box-office hit, O.J. Simpson was acquitted of murder and 169 people were killed in the bombing of an Oklahoma federal building -- Mr. Chadwick was a corporate lawyer who grew up in Bryn Mawr and became embroiled in a nasty divorce. In April that year, he was arrested by two sheriff's deputies at his dentist's downtown Philadelphia office and landed in jail.'

I Now Pronounce You Government and Wife

Matt · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I go to dinner with a bunch of Hollywood Republicans every month or so and I'll tell you one thing, the women are easy on the eyes, none more conservative or good looking than my Beloved. Republican women are happy, they don't mope around like victims or screech about how terrible men are for being men. The men at these get-togethers are happier and generally sport less hair product. Married men are polled to have more sex and more satisfying sex than singles so Republican men have another great quality over their unmarried Democrat counterparts.'

DC mom accused of killing 4 daughters cited demons

anthony · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (AP) - A woman accused of killing her four daughters told police in an interview that the girls were possessed by demons and that she got rid of most of the family's possessions to contain the evil spirits.

A District of Columbia Superior Court judge spent a second day Tuesday reviewing a recording of a police interrogation of Banita Jacks. The decomposing bodies of Jacks' daughters—ages 5 to 17—were discovered in January 2008 when U.S. marshals came to evict her from her southeast Washington home.

Judge Frederick Weisberg was to decide whether to admit the interview as evidence in her trial. Jacks' attorneys want it excluded. They say police were trying to get a confession from her before they had evidence that she was responsible.

Weisberg will decide the case without a jury at Jacks' request.

Jacks' lawyers have urged Jacks to use an insanity defense, but she has refused. Weisberg has found her competent to stand trial.

In the videotaped interview, Jacks said the girls stopped being her daughters and took on the identities of the demons.'

"Unreadably Canadian" (National Post columnist Barbara Kay sticks it to the feminists again)

badgerb · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Not torn up enough to make it her subject, alas. Yet Moore claims she was "startled" at the paucity of writing to come out of the tragedy. She notes to Laidlaw that a 1985 Royal Commission report revealed: "A lot of safety practises were ignored. The men weren't trained properly. There weren't enough survival suits. They didn't have a safe exit plan."

And what does Moore do with this treasure-trove of thematic bullion? Something very postmodernly Canadian. The "startled" Moore deflects attention from the tragedy and its male victims to hover solicitously over a surrogate victim, her protagonist, 31-year-old widowed Helen, "a creation rooted in the lives of Moore's own mother and herself."
...
Me, me, me and my extraordinary capacity for sadness. Welcome to the unrelenting self-regard of CanLit, where it's all about nobly suffering women or feminized men: men immobilized in situations of physical, psychological or economic impotence (that is when they're not falling through the ice and nearly drowning), rather than demonstrating manly courage in risk-taking or heroic mode.'

28-YO babysitter accused of having sex with the 14-YO boy

anthony · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here.

Apparently the accused rapist asked the boy's mother for her blessing to continue the 'relationship'.

Maureen Dowd: 'White Man's Last Stand'

anthony · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here

'A wise Latina woman with the richness of her experiences would more often than not know that a gaggle of white Republican men afraid of extinction are out to trip her up.

After all, these guys have never needed to speak inspirational words to others like them, as Sotomayor has done. They've had codes, handshakes and clubs to do that

...

President Obama wants Sotomayor, naturally, to bring a fresh perspective to the court. It was a disgrace that W. appointed two white men to a court stocked with white men. And Sotomayor made it clear that she provides some spicy seasoning to a bench when she said in a speech: "I simply do not know exactly what the difference will be in my judging, but I accept there will be some based on gender and my Latina heritage."

...

And then there's the Supreme Court, of course, which gave up its claim to rational neutrality when the justices appointed by Republican presidents — including Bush Sr. — ignored what was fair to make a sentimental choice and throw the 2000 election to W.'

Daily Kos: 'Dear Scared White Men of America'

anthony · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's talk. If you're not someone like Sessions, Hatch, Graham etc. this is NOT directed to you.

I can imagine that it's really an adjustment for you to see so many changes taking place in our nation. We have our first non-white President and we are on the cusp of having only our third woman and first Hispanic Supreme Court Justice.

You don't understand how someone's experience other than being a white male, which in your view is the norm...the baseline...the yardstick by which all is measured, is relevant to anything. You see the world through false equivalencies and rear projected ideals that don't and have never existed.
...
I'm sorry you're scared. I'm sorry for you that you are that insecure. I'm also glad to know that you are a shrinking minority. That there are more white men like my High School teacher and some of my Professors in college. Strong, confident, white men who aren't afraid to share the playing field they've dominated throughout history. Men like we saw today in Senators Whitehouse, Schumer, Feingold. I'm glad I'm married to a white guy, who like them, isn't afraid.'

Microsoft invests $1m in IT girls

anthony · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Microsoft has made its second million-dollar grant to the National Center for Women & Information Technology (NCWIT) to support the advancement of women in IT.

Founded in 2004, NCWIT is a coalition of over 170 corporations, academic institutions, government agencies, and non-profits working to expand women's participation in IT. Members include Apple, AT&T, the Bank of America, Carnegie Mellon, Google, HP, Intel, MIT, Motorola, Pfizer, Princeton, Qualcomm, Stanford University, the University of California at Berkeley, Wal-Mart, and others.
...
NCWIT cites a number of statistics (PDF) to support its assertion that women are underrepresented in IT:

•Although 57 per cent of US undergraduate degrees went to women 2008, only 18 per cent of computer and information sciences degrees were earned by women.

•Only 24 per cent of IT positions in the US are held by women.

•Although 57 per cent of US high-school advanced-placement (AP) tests were taken by women in 2008, only 17 per cent of AP computer science (CS) were female.'

Health Care Reform: Women's Health Care In Jeopardy?

anthony · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Is there any doubt this country values the health of women more so then that of a male? Excerpt:

'ST. LOUIS - A lot of amendments have been attached to the health care reform bills being finalized this month in Washington, and several of those amendments have concerned people on all sides watching closely. One in particular, known as the Women's Health Amendment, would increase access to primary preventive care and would support clinics that are often the only source of health care for low-income women, such as Planned Parenthood. The amendment does not include coverage for abortions, but critics claim that it would.

Paula Gianino with Planned Parenthood of the St. Louis Region says misinformation threatens to derail health care reform and to hurt women.

"We believe that health care reform must strengthen and protect women's health care. Certainly it must not weaken it. And we believe that women's health care has to be a priority."'

RealClear Politics: The He-cession's Raw Deal

anthony · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Behind Washington's feverish debate over the $787 billion stimulus package is a question of why one gender is getting left behind--and it's not women.

No modern economic crisis has more disproportionately impacted men than today's Great Recession. Despite women constituting no more than a quarter of job losses, they are expected to receive more than 40 percent of the stimulus spending--and possibly significantly more

...

Men amount to a slim majority of the workforce but about 75 percent of all job losses, since the recession began in December 2007. Before the recession, there was no significant gender gap in the unemployment rate. Since then, men's unemployment rate has more than doubled.

...

Some respected media outlets have been quick to blame manhood for the bad guys who brought us to the brink. We are told an innately, and flawed, male quality has led us astray. This recession purportedly signifies more than economic decline, but the decline of American masculinity itself.

In February, ABC's "Good Morning America," headlined a segment: "Should women be in charge? Would things have been different now?" It went on to ask, "Could testosterone be to blame?"'

16-Year-Old Girl Convicted of Soliciting Dad's Murder

anthony · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'HAGERSTOWN, Md. — Maryland jurors have convicted a 16-year-old girl of soliciting the murder of her father who was stabbed to death outside the family's Hagerstown home on Halloween.

The Washington County Circuit Court deliberated about 90 minutes Wednesday before finding Danielle Black guilty of solicitation of first-degree murder.

She faces up to life in prison when she is sentenced.

The 20-year-old man charged in the death of 47-year-old Billie Lee Black is not the same friend she spoke to on a school bus about killing her father.

The girl contends she only wanted her father roughed up, not killed. She told police she had asked some friends to "take care of" him to end beatings she claimed she suffered. Police haven't been able to verify her claims of abuse.'

Top Five Crucial Medical Tests for Men

anthony · 15 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many men aren't proactive when it comes to their personal health care needs. A Men's Health magazine and CNN survey found one-third of men would not go to the doctor, even if they were experiencing major health problems, such as severe chest pains or shortness of breath -- both of which are signs for heart disease.

But it's imperative that men receive regular medical exams because they can be life saving. "GMA" medical contributor Dr. Marie Savard explains the five tests men must get and why they're important.'

Six Flags seeks customers with baseball throw to testicles sjones2 · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Tonight during Jimmy Kimmel Live a Six Flags commercial was run featuring a boy hitting his father in the testicles with a baseball. This was intended to lure more customers into the Six Flags parks by comparing how much 'more fun' it is to ride a roller-coaster vs. hitting your father in the testicles with a baseball.

Six Flags, and all corporations who use sexual violence and degradation of men as an advertising gimmick, need to hear from us. Their website contact page is here (scroll to the bottom for an email form).

Like most corporations who use misandrist sexual violence in their ads, Six Flags doesn't really want to hear from you, but they must.

Child Support Racket Strikes Again!

Luek · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This time in Adel, Georgia. Story here. Excerpt:

'ADEL, Ga. – A Georgia man spent more than a year behind bars for failing to pay child support for a child that wasn't his, but he was released after DNA tests showed he wasn't the father.

Frank Hatley, 50, had been jailed since June 2008 for not making payments, but two separate DNA tests in the last nine years showed he was not the father of the boy, who is now 21.

Southern Center for Human Rights attorney Sarah Geraghty won Hatley's release at a hearing Wednesday in Superior Court. A court order has also relieved him of his financial obligation to the Georgia Department of Human Resources.

"State child support officials have shown extraordinarily poor judgment in Mr. Hatley's case," Geraghty said.'

Girl bakes kitten alive, taunts protesters

Matt · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I can hear it now: "Girls don't do this kind of thing! Her boyfriend must be behind it all!" Ugh...
Excerpt:

'A heartless kitty killer hissed angrily at animal rights activists Wednesday, grinning widely as she took credit for stuffing the helpless pet into a 500-degree oven.

"It's dead, bitch!" snapped an unrepentant Cheyenne Cherry, sticking her tongue out after a plea bargain that will put her behind bars for a year in the May 6 killing of tiny Tiger Lily.

Cherry, 17, was confronted after her guilty plea in Bronx Supreme Court to charges of animal cruelty and attempted burglary in the May 6 killing at her former roommate's apartment.

Tiger Lily was left to die inside the blistering oven after Cherry and a 14-year-old friend trashed the apartment of Valerie Hernandez, destroying furniture before stealing DVDs and food.
...
Cherry is not new to animal crimes.

She was busted last year for using a BB gun to dog-nap a teacup Yorkie with her boyfriend. She was also arrested for robbing a man of his iPod at gunpoint.

The dozen animal lovers who attended the hearing said they represented more than 20,000 people who signed an online petition supporting harsh punishment for Cherry.'

ACFC call to affect the Responsible Fatherhood and Healthy Families Act of 2009

Matt · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The legislation focuses primarily on programs to benefit low income fathers and contains a number of positive provisions. For instance, low income fathers will be able to get a break on child support arrearages under certain circumstances. The entire bill is over 100 pages, here's a copy for those who enjoy this type of reading.

We believe the bill can go much further in addressing the issues faced by fathers in general, particularly providing relief for parents who have been separated from their children by the family courts.

There are a half dozen provisions that would improve the legislation and we need your help to get them implemented.'

New Policy Permits Asylum for Battered Women

anthony · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I wonder if immigrant men who suffer domestic violence at the hands of women would also qualify for asylum? That's actually a rhetorical question because I suspect they wouldn't. I wonder how many women will lie about abuse just to gain asylum? Excerpt:

'The Obama administration has opened the way for foreign women who are victims of severe domestic beatings and sexual abuse to receive asylum in the United States. The action reverses a Bush administration stance in a protracted and passionate legal battle over the possibilities for battered women to become refugees.
...
The administration laid out its position in an immigration appeals court filing in the case of a woman from Mexico who requested asylum, saying she feared she would be murdered by her common-law husband there. According to court documents filed in San Francisco, the man repeatedly raped her at gunpoint, held her captive, stole from her and at one point tried to burn her alive when he learned she was pregnant.'

Bringing Up Princess: Turning Girls Into Narcissists

Broadsword · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now researchers are finding that parents are promoting attitudes of superiority in their daughters. Jean Twenge, associate professor of psychology at San Diego State University, tracks the rising egotism on college campuses in her new book, "The Narcissism Epidemic: Living in the Age of Entitlement." She has found that college-age women are developing narcissistic traits at four times the rate of college-age men. She attributes the startling discrepancy in part to parents who put their girls on a pedestal.

...

Ms. Twenge describes moms and dads who lavish their daughters with unrealistic praise. Parents not only tell girls they are the prettiest and smartest but also train them to see themselves as the center of their worlds through clothes and accessories.

...

While there's unlikely to be much harm in indulging in one or two princess products, Ms. Twenge and other experts find that girls immersed in princess culture are embracing the notion of privilege that goes along with it. While parents may hope that princess-pushing will give their daughters confidence in the future, research shows that such girls later have trouble adjusting to professors, bosses and potential mates who don't automatically treat them as royalty.'

Study: Women have advantage in college sports

anthony · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Women athletes have far more opportunities than men to earn scholarships and to participate in many college sports, according to a study by an organization which advocates Title IX reform.

The College Sports Council largely limited its analysis to 19 sports in which both men and women compete, such as basketball, volleyball and tennis. The study released Wednesday determined male high-school athletes in those gender-symmetric sports face longer odds and fewer total opportunities to land college scholarships.

"We are trying to shine the light on a problem that exists where football frequently clouds the issue," CSC chairman Eric Pearson said. "We're not trying to tear down the women's numbers. We just want it to be even and fair. We support both men and women playing sports. We want more sports. We want more athletes to play, both men and women, and the NCAA's rules make that difficult."'

64 percent of men are told DV services only apply to women

anthony · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police recently concluded that former Baltimore Ravens star Steve McNair was shot dead in his sleep by girlfriend Sahel Kazemi in a murder-suicide. Yet while there are more than 10,000 media entries on Google News for "Steve McNair," only a few of them mention the phrase "domestic violence."

Violence by women against their male partners is often ignored or not recognized as domestic violence. Law enforcement, the judicial system, the media and the domestic violence establishment are still stuck in the outdated "man as perpetrator/woman as victim" conception of such violence. Yet more than 200 studies have found that women initiate at least as much violence against their male partners as vice-versa. Men make up about a third of domestic violence injuries and deaths in heterosexual relationships. Research shows that women often compensate for a disadvantage in physical strength by employing weapons and the element of surprise - just as Ms. Kazemi did.
...
Third, establish services and help for male domestic violence victims. Denise Hines of Clark University found that when an abused man calls the police, the police were more likely to arrest him than to arrest his abusive female partner. This is partly the result of laws such as Maryland's primary aggressor law. Primary aggressor laws encourage police to discount who initiated and committed the violence but instead look at other factors (such as size and strength) that make them more likely to arrest men. When the men in Ms. Hines' study tried calling domestic violence hot lines, 64 percent were told that they only helped women, and more than half were referred to programs for male DV perpetrators.'

Huffington Post: 'US Congress: Keep Your Word to Abused Women'

anthony · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The good news is that Congress has already made a commitment to do something about this. The bad news is that it hasn't put its money where its mouth is. While having previously recommended $175 million for emergency shelter in the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act, Congress budgeted only $127.7 million for these services last year. Likewise, the much-lauded Violence Against Women Act (VAWA -- a flagship piece of legislation for Vice President Biden when he was a senator) has never been fully funded.

This could dramatically change on Friday. The House Appropriations Committee is set to decide how much money to provide for a number of critical domestic violence services, including emergency shelter. Members would do well to remember Michelle, and the millions of American women like her who are forced to flee violent relationships. They should remember the duty of protection the government owes them and the pledge of assistance it has made. And they should be aware of the repercussions if that pledge is not kept. '

Cathy Young: 'Battered women - and men'

anthony · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LYNN Rosenthal, a veteran of the battered women's advocacy movement, was named to the new post of White House counsel on violence against women on June 26. On the same day, a conference opened in Los Angeles disputing the basic tenets of the movement Rosenthal represents - such as the view that domestic violence is overwhelmingly a male crime against women rooted in patriarchal power. Speakers argued for new policies based on a fuller understanding of the problem. Is there a way to bridge the gaps between these competeing paradigms?

Challenges to feminist orthodoxy on domestic violence are often seen as anti-feminist backlash from angry men. But this conference, "From Ideology to Inclusion 2009: New Directions in Domestic Violence Research and Intervention" (sponsored by the California Alliance for Families and Children), could not be so easily dismissed. The speakers included scholars, social workers, and counselors; about half were women.'

Did Sotomayor Lie to Senators?

anthony · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sotomayor apparently told Republican Senators in private meetings that those words were "inadvertent" and "inartful," -- implying that her statement was an accident. President Obama himself tried to explain this statement as just a one-time utterance that she would have worded differently if she had the chance to do it all over again.

But after these private meetings with Senators it was revealed that Sotomayor had used the equivalent phrases during at least seven different speeches over a period of a decade. It is one thing for Obama to explain this as an accidental, single occurrence; it is something quite different for Sotomayor, especially now that we know that she repeatedly made such statements.'

No Gender Gap for Victims of Violence

anthony · 16 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Published online in the Journal of Adolescent Health (subscription required), the study comes from a survey of about 2,000 students who sought treatment at health clinics at five universities in Wisconsin, Seattle and Vancouver in 2006-7. Similar rates of young men and women -- 17 percent and 16 percent, respectively -- reported experiencing violence within the previous six months. While men were more likely to report physical abuse, women reported a high rate of emotional abuse, which was defined as acts like "repeated ridicule, threatening statements, destroying belongings and unreasonable jealousy" and considered separate from physical violence.'

Court knew man jailed for a year for non-support was not child's father

anthony · 17 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Frank Hatley has languished in a South Georgia jail for more than a year.

The reason? He failed to reimburse the state for all the public assistance his “son” received over the past two decades.

The problem? Hatley is not the biological father -- and a special assistant state attorney general and a judge knew it but jailed Hatley anyway.

“I feel bad for the man,” Cook County Sheriff Johnny Daughtrey said Tuesday. “Put yourself in that man’s shoes: If it wasn’t your child, would you want to be paying child support for him?”

Daughtrey said he hopes a hearing Wednesday will resolve the matter. Hatley has been held at the county jail in Adel since June 25, 2008, costing the county an estimated $35 to $40 a day.

Even after learning he was not the father, Hatley paid thousands of dollars the state said he owed for support. After losing his job and becoming homeless, he still made payments out of his unemployment benefits.'

Pakistan: Man must choose between selling kidney or child

anthony · 17 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SARGODA, Pakistan (CNN) -- Mohammed Iqbal said he has been told by his landlord to pay up on debts and is left with a choice facing others in this impoverished corner of Pakistan: Sell your children or a kidney.

For the 50-year-old Iqbal, there is only one option. Despite a law passed in late 2007 banning transplants for money, he has decided to sell his kidney and has already been for pre-operation tests. The sale will net him between $1,100 and $1,600.

"What's incredible here is the law that bans the operation he's going to go through came into place in 2007," said CNN's Nic Robertson. "He's still able to go to a doctor, the doctors given him advice, that's what he has to do under law... He's going to make money out of it 100,000-150,000 rupees, and that is absolutely illegal. Yet, in just a few days, he's expecting to sell his kidney."

36-YO teacher accused of sex with teen

Matt · 17 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Caption:

'Prosecutors allege it was a "calculated seduction." A math teacher is accused of having sex with a teen student.'

A very nice change I am seeing here: A year ago, there would have been a lot of sympathetic pseudo-questioning of the defense position by the reporter. We didn't see that in this clip at all. In fact, he was very direct with the matter at hand and pointed out how the "She didn't know he was under 18" defense wouldn't fly if the sexes were reversed. Progress!

Chemicals and Our Health (phthalates and male sex deformities)

anthony · 17 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The problem is that phthalates suppress male hormones and sometimes mimic female hormones. As I've written before, chemicals called endocrine disruptors are believed to explain the proliferation of "intersex fish" — male fish that produce eggs — as well as sexual deformities in animals and humans. Phthalates (pronounced THAL-ates) are among the most common endocrine disruptors, and among the most difficult to avoid. They're even in tap water, and levels soar in certain plastic water bottles.

They probably are not harmful to us adults, but it is another story for children. In girls, some research suggests that phthalates may cause early onset puberty. Most vulnerable of all, it seems, are male fetuses in the first trimester of pregnancy, just as they are differentiating their sex. At that stage, scholars believe, phthalates may "feminize" these boys.

"Commonly used phthalates may undervirilize humans," concluded a study by the University of Rochester. The study, which was small, based its conclusion, in part, on measurements of "anogenital distance" — the distance between the anus and the genitals, which is typically twice as long for males as for females. Some scholars believe that shrinkage of this distance reflects "feminization" of male anatomy.'

Feminism has become just another special interest

anthony · 17 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Woman's organizations immediately denounced this as "Macho Stimulus" and about 600 feminist economists and 1000 feminist historians managed to press the president to scrap his "sexist bailout". The anti-stimulus feminist action group called WEAVE – Women's Equality Adds Value to the Economy was a huge success. They managed to get the Obama administration to completely rewrite his stimulus along gender-correct lines with 42% of new jobs going to women. Yet since women had only held 20% of the jobs lost in recession the stimulus as it passed through Congress on February 17 skews the creation of new jobs heavily towards women. And its working: Labor Department's latest June data revealed a 2.5 percentage-point gender gab for women over men.'

Study says men better at paying bills

anthony · 17 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters) - Men and women handle their personal finances much differently, research shows, with men more likely to keep a close eye on their spending and investments and to pay their bills on time.

The gender gap emerged in the results of financial planning questionnaires filled out by some 3,500 U.S. workers nationwide for Financial Finesse Inc., an employee benefits company.

The data showed two-thirds of men but just one-third of women said they regularly pay their credit card balances in full, said Liz Davidson, chief executive of the company based in Manhattan Beach, California.'

False rape report could mean prison

anthony · 17 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DELTA COUNTY -- A Gladstone woman could face prison time for allegedly making a false rape and kidnapping report to police back in February of 2008.

Wednesday, 27-year-old Amanda Miller-Tryan pleaded guilty to two counts of attempted false report of a felony, which is a two year felony. Four other false report charges were dismissed with the plea agreement.

Miller-Tryan said she and her husband concocted the story about a fake sexual assault and kidnapping after they had a physical altercation, and she felt she needed hospital attention.'

Pruden: 'Wise Latina' routs gang of white men

anthony · 17 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judged against the standard of the U.S. Senate, maybe Sonia Sotomayor has a point. "A wise Latina" certainly came across smarter than most of those white men on the Judiciary Committee.
...
This was par for the course. Patrick Leahy of the Boutique of Vermont seemed confused most of the week, garbling his questions and misquoting Mzz Sotomayor. Reprising her famous remark that "Latinas" are inherently smarter than white folks -- "I would hope that a wise Latina woman with the richness of her experience would more often than not reach a better conclusion than a white male who hasn't lived that life" -- the senator told her that she had "said, quote, you 'would hope that a wise Latina woman with the richness of her experience would reach wise decisions.' " Not remotely accurate, but no one could blame the nominee if she felt no need to correct him. Several aides, always hovering over their senator to show him how to take a cell phone call, find the men's room or the way back to the office, winced.'

9-Month-Old Had Blood-Alcohol Level Four Times Legal Limit, Police Say

anthony · 18 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'CARROLLTON, Ga. — Carrollton police found a baby sitter accused of feeding a 9-month-old boy wine, causing his blood-alcohol level to exceed four times the legal limit for an adult.

Carrollton police Sgt. Tony Johnson says authorities have found 40-year-old Tammy Demice Truitt of Carrollton. She was being sought on charges of first-degree cruelty to children and reckless conduct.

Police say Truitt was called to watch the baby and four other children ages 3 to 9 earlier this week when their mother had to leave town to care for a sick relative who has since died.

Doctors said the baby's blood-alcohol content of .33 was considered a life-threatening condition.

Johnson said the baby was released from the hospital on Wednesday and is doing fine.'

AIDS diagnoses for boys aged 15 to 19 years has nearly doubled

anthony · 18 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, July 16 (Reuters) - U.S. teens are getting sex education, but most are not learning about birth control from their parents, new government data showed on Thursday.

And rates of infection with sexually transmitted diseases reflect this -- the annual rate of AIDS diagnoses for boys aged 15 to 19 years has nearly doubled in the past 10 years, and rates of syphilis are also up.

The numbers show that U.S. youth need better sex education, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said.

The new administration of President Barack Obama has been dropping some of the more controversial policies of the former Bush government, including an emphasis on abstinence-only education.'

Obama's betrayal of the working-class male

anthony · 18 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's no secret that men have been hit hard by the recession. From November 2007 to November 2008, the U.S. economy lost over 2 million jobs – 82 percent of those losses were male jobs and only 18 percent female jobs. The reason is because men are concentrated in the sectors devastated by the downturn: manufacturing and construction.

This employment gap prompted University of Michigan economist Mark Perry to dub the downturn a "man-cession in the lipstick economy."

So in his Inaugural address, Barack Obama glowingly promised, "We will build the roads and bridges, the electric grids and digital lines that feed our commerce and bind us together."
...
As soon as Obama released his stimulus proposal, the National Organization for Women and other feminist groups swung into action. They knew the head of Obama's Council of Economic Advisers, Lawrence Summers, would be a push-over following the putsch at Harvard University.'

Commentary: 'Wise Women Unite! What Sotomayor Should Have Said'

anthony · 18 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(WOMENSENEWS)--I suppose it's a good thing Judge Sonya Sotomayor's confirmation hearings have been a little boring and uneventful. I keep waiting for the scandalous hidden love affair to emerge, but nothing. No affair, unpaid taxes or skeletons to derail her confirmation.

Hats off to the team that vetted her nomination.

What has become a sticking point, though, are Sotomayor's comments in the past when she had the nerve to refer to herself as wise.
...
How dare she? Everyone knows white men set the bar when it comes to making fair and impartial decisions. They never allow their background or experience to influence their judgment.
...
It was obvious from the majority opinion that none of them had been in the position of having their work devalued because of their gender.'

Men, Women and Ability

Matt · 18 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Camille Paglia observed: “As I drove across the Verrazano Bridge, I thought, ‘Men built this.’ As I looked towards the New York skyline, I thought, ‘Men built that.’ If women were in charge of culture, we would still be living in caves. Well-decorated caves, but caves.” That story may be apocryphal, but correct. Men continue to create civilization. All cultures, without exception, were built by Patriarchy.

But Feminist politics remain founded in indignation that women’s deserved opportunities remain suppressed. Over forty years, majority-male governments entrenched feminist jurisprudence. They decree that if women in any occupation rank below half, that is proof of misogyny, requiring a minimum 50% female quota. Women-dominated occupations are offered as proof of superior female abilities.
...
Charles Murray in “Human Accomplishment” offers Lotka Curve and other analyses, showing women comprise less than 2.2 percent of ‘Significant Figures,’ over 2750 years. Women’s achievements are mostly based in contributions to Western and Japanese literature and art.

Women rank as 4.4% (n=35) of Nobel Prize laureates, with 66% of their awards in literature and peace. Nineteen Prizes were won by organizations. The remaining 744 prizes were earned by men. All cultures and civilizations, throughout history, without exception, were fostered and advanced by Patriarchy.'

RADAR ALERT: The "Power and Control" of Domestic Violence Myths

Matt · 20 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Journalist Philip Cook observes that "there is more false, falsely framed, or disingenuously deceptive information about domestic violence than any other significant public and social issue."

RADAR's new special report, Fifty Domestic Violence Myths (.pdf file), debunks some of this misinformation, including the following myths:

- "From the very beginning, American jurisprudence has viewed wife-beating as an acceptable practice." (It's never been acceptable to beat your wife under American law.)
- "At least 40% of law enforcement families experience domestic violence." (Only if you define "domestic violence" to include any form of family conflict.)
- "Men and women engage in domestic violence for fundamentally different reasons." (A study showed 12 of 14 reasons for DV apply to both genders.)
- "False allegations of domestic violence are almost non-existent." (They're actually quite common.)
- "False allegations are no more common in divorce or custody disputes than at any other time." (They're actually far more common.)
- "The expression 'rule of thumb' refers to the diameter of a stick or rod for which wife-beating was considered legal." (Such a law has never existed.)

The problem with the myths identified in the report is not simply the number of them, but that "the widespread existence of such myths has come to overshadow the truth of domestic violence" and that their "cumulative effect has been to hamper the overall effectiveness of abuse reduction programs." (They also seem impossible to kill, as Christina Hoff Sommers noted in a recent article in The Chronicle Review, Persistent Myths in Feminist Scholarship.)

Please read the new RADAR report and forward it to anyone who might benefit from reading it.

Thanks for your help getting our message out.

++++++

Australia: Dads not the Demons

Matt · 20 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recent data from the Department of Child Protection in Western Australia (WA) has debunked a common misconception about fathers and violence. The data shows that natural mothers are far more likely to abuse children than their natural fathers, other than in sexual abuse, where mothers were responsible for only 13% of cases.

The past practice of lumping together de factos, live-in boyfriends and overnight male guests together with fathers as "male carers" has led to skewed beliefs about who abuses children. In releasing these recent figures that identify natural fathers separately, the DCP has provided a clearer picture of who is likely to abuse children.

The figures - obtained under Freedom of Information provisions - provide a clearer picture of who is likely to abuse children in families. The data show that there were 1505 substantiations of child abuse in WA during 2007-8.'

Dads reveal struggle to balance work, family

anthony · 20 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA, Georgia (CNN) -- The recession has radically changed the amount of time many dads spend with their children because fathers are either home much less or a lot more.

It's a two-sided coin: Many American fathers are working harder than ever as their managers try to take care of business with fewer workers. On the flip side, many dads who've lost their jobs are finding that they're becoming the new Mr. Moms.

According to a recent survey from CareerBuilder.com, modern times are prompting dads to search for a new balance.'

Police target women with 'Ladies Only' CCW class

anthony · 20 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HAMILTON — As one of the few police departments in the area that offers training for carry-conceal weapons permits, it's no surprise that Hamilton city police have hit another milestone.

In June, it held its first women-only CCW class, which is proving popular based on the number of enrollees.

"Some ladies called us and said they were interested. We've had quite a response," said Hamilton police Detective Daniel Stevenson.

The current class has around 30 women, up from the typical five to 10 in a co-educational class.

"The ladies told us they felt a little more comfortable in an all-ladies setting. We were just trying to take care of these ladies."'

South Korea: 'Picking Only Women at Ewha Law School Unconstitutional'

anthony · 20 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Male students preparing to enter law school will file a petition with the Constitutional Court against Ewha Womans University Law School, claiming that the admittance of only female students is a violation of their constitutional rights.

Three men said Sunday that Ewha Law School accepts only women for its allotted entrance quota of 100. They said that because the nation's total law school capacity was 2,000, as licensed by the Ministry of Education and Science Technology, the school effectively eliminated 100 slots for men by excluding them from its entrance exam, leaving only 1,900 total slots, they claimed.

``Ewha Law School should alter its prospectus to receive only females, or cancel the license of the law school itself, so men and women can have an equal opportunity,'' he said.

The claimants, who had been preparing to enter law school at the beginning of this year, argued that the school has set ``irrational'' entrance standards. They have been arranging the constitutional appeal since March and plan to file it in early August after legal consultation.'

'When will we have hated men enough?'

anthony · 20 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While a nominee for the Supreme Court gets away with expressing an obvious bigotry against white males, in San Diego County efforts are being made to correct the damage done to its citizens by that same kind of bigotry.

In the comments section here, I've seen readers (both male and female) express a surprising degree of hatred against men I haven't personally witnessed in years. One man even expressed a notion I'd thought had long ago been debunked – that anyone showing any sympathy for male victims of DV must secretly be supporting the patriarchy in their efforts to systematically beat women down. Talk about old-hat conspiracy theories! I figure the guy has an org to support and needs the attention.

Another commenter (a girl this time) suggested I only need to read some feminist blog to see the evidence of the evil men do. Sorry, dear, but 57 years of living with and around actual men, (three of those years spent around Marines) tells a quite different story. Many different stories, in fact; when the feminist blog has only one, repeated time after time, often with facts altered to suit the running narrative.'

Firefighters whose wives call them to help, receive burns themselves jayhammers · 20 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Mother falls asleep at the wheel, wives of off-duty firefighters pass by and call their husbands who save the 4-year old, both the child and firefighters sustaining burns. Who needs men, right? Excerpt:

'Firefighting brothers John and Joel Rechlitz are somewhat the worse for wear after their amazing rescue of a Tennessee boy trapped in a hell on earth — but they are happy and modest to bear the bandaged wounds of heroes.

The off-duty Milwaukee firemen were preparing for a family birthday Sunday when John's wife Joy called him in a frantic state — just four blocks away, an SUV had flipped over and burst into flames, trapping a mother and her two young children inside.

The Rechlitz brothers arrived on the scene within moments to find a group of good Samaritans already at work, struggling to free the family from the blazing vehicle — but it took guts and a combined 29 years of firefighting experience to save the life of the 4-year-old boy trapped inside by his car seat.'

Highly-skilled airline workers live in airport shanty-town-- all to 'provide for family'

Matt · 21 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For about 15 days a month, Alaska Airlines pilot Jim Lancaster lives in a motor home in Parking Lot B near the southernmost runway at Los Angeles International Airport.

Every four minutes, a jetliner or turboprop roars in -- 500 feet above his front door -- for a landing. The noise is so loud it forces Lancaster to pause during conversations. But he doesn't mind. Lancaster puts up with the smell of jet fuel and screaming engines to save time and money.
...
"This is the cost of being a pilot today," said Todd Swenson, 40, a first officer with Alaska Airlines. His wife, Amanda, and 2-year-old son, Noah, live in Fresno, a six-hour commute by car. "I've wanted to be a pilot all my life. It can be awful here. But I have to provide for my family, and I love flying airplanes."
...
Today, the colony has more than 100 residents -- mostly men -- from around the country, including captains, first officers, mechanics, flight attendants, support staff and employees of air cargo companies. There are at least two married couples, who work as flight attendants. About 10 people are on a waiting list.'

They've been there at least since 2005. I wonder if most of these people were women if they would be living on the tarmac like this for very long? I rather imagine the airline "wouldn't hear of it," and probably put them up someplace "more comfortable". Meanwhile, wives and children sleep tight at home - minus the old man, since he's making these sacrifices for them.

Feminist NY Rep. Carolyn Maloney apologizes over use of N-word

anthony · 21 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Rep. Carolyn Maloney's [link added] planned Senate bid isn't even officially off the ground and already she's scrambling to say sorry for using the N-word in an interview.

"I apologize for having repeated a word I find disgusting," Maloney said in a statement Monday.

Maloney used the racial slur while relaying a story she'd heard.

The potentially damaging gaffe comes a week before Maloney's scheduled launch of her Democratic challenge to Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand at the polls next fall.

Baruch College's political pro Doug Muzzio said Maloney's use of the N-word is, to be blunt, "stupid."'

'Naughty Neighbors' chronicles female sexual predators' histories

Matt · 21 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog here. Latest entry reads:

'Deadra Williams, a 41-year-old West Virginia has been arrested on allegations she sexually assaulted a two-year-old boy. Williams was picked up by police for an incident with a family member that allegedly occurred mid May.

Williams now faces first degree sexual assault charges and remains in the Southern Regional Jail in lieu of a $50,000 bond.

The victim reported the incident to another family member who immediately reported in to police.

Williams was charged with sexual assault back in 2001, but those charges were dismissed pending future investigation.'

The site is indexed by name and as each new incident occurs, they get an additional entry. I don't know who is maintaining this blog, but I say "Keep up the good work!"

Psychiatrist testifies that 'depressed mother' could not stop herself from killing her 3-YO

anthony · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'CENTREVILLE, Md. — A psychiatrist testified that a mother accused of the death of her 3-year-old daughter was so depressed she couldn't stop herself.

Defense witness Dr. David Williamson was one of three psychiatrists who testified Monday. Two others testified for the prosecution in Queen Anne's County Circuit Court in Centreville, saying Victoria Sparrow planned the killing weeks in advance.

The three testified at a hearing to determine if Sparrow was legally insane when she poisoned her daughter. Police say Sparrow killed her daughter, Laci, in December and then tried to kill herself with pills.

Sparrow has pleaded not criminally responsible by reason of insanity. Circuit Judge Thomas G. Ross will decide whether she was insane.'

'Boys In Crisis' Seminar - July 22, 2009, in Tyler, TX

anthony · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here.

'Parents and community members are invited to attend the "Boys in Crisis: Hear Our Cry" seminar from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday at Caldwell Auditorium. [link added]

The event, presented by Tyler ISD, will feature Dr. Paul Slocumb, an author and educator.

"He is coming to share research about the ways that boys learn and the best ways of making connections, building relationships and supporting them in their academic pursuits," said Kim Tunnell, director of curriculum and instruction at TISD.

"As we look at our data and trends within Tyler [link added], across the state and across the whole United States with dropout rates, we're missing the mark with addressing the needs of our boys. It's not that they're not capable. It's that we need to do a better job at meeting the needs of our boys."'

Rising suicide numbers point to 'boys crisis'

anthony · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The suicide rate among college-age men is increasing at an alarming rate, officials say, but even as schools work to head off the problem, counselors are baffled as to the cause.

"We don't know for certain," said Kristi Casey-Hart, a counselor at Dalton State College in Dalton, Ga. "I think that we put a lot of pressure on men."

While men overall commit suicide more often than women, the gender gap for suicide among young adults is staggering, according to a recent report published by the Boys Project out of the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

Among 20- to 24-year-olds, 20.7 suicides per 100,000 occur among males, compared with 3.5 per 100,000 among females, said Judith Kleinfeld, director of the Boys Project.

The ratio of suicide among male and females between the ages of 15 and 24 was 5 to 1, she said, and the male and female ratio for that same age range in 1933 was 1.56 to 1.'

Taiwan: More women-only gyms

anthony · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"MOVE over, guys, women-only gyms are getting bigger and better. Amore Fitness, which has 16 outlets islandwide, is planning to open a new 1,393 sq m fitness centre at City Square Mall at the end of the year.

Amore's founder and chief executive, Ms Jasmine Teo, says its gyms have 50,000 active members to date, with numbers 'constantly growing'.

Gyms like Amore not only have fitness regimes and classes tailored for a woman's physique, but also have less bulky fitness equipment and luxurious vanity areas where members can primp and preen after their workouts.
...
Ms Cordelia Fernandez, a junior-college teacher in her 30s, dropped 9kg in eight months after she joined womenonly gym Slender Shapes in 2002.

'The main advantage of women- only gyms is that there are no distractions,' she said. 'You can concentrate on working out without worrying about how your hair looks or if you have a visible panty line.'"

American Thinker: Are Men Obsolete?

anthony · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Being a lifelong liberal, I'd never heard anybody like Savage in my life. He yelled; he called people "vermin." He was unbridled masculinity, not the touchy feeling kind I was used to. And he totally accepted himself: his moods, passion, temper.

But what shocked me the most was his saying that men have become "feminized." I'd never been so offended. "Well, what's wrong with men being more feminine?" I shouted back at my radio. "Is there something wrong with femininity?" Men being way more in touch with their yin and less with their yang sounded good to me.
...
What a difference a year makes. Now I see Savage as a seer warning us of the dangers we were in for if men went the way of the dinosaur. I had thought taming men's animal nature was a win-win for everybody. Now I realize it was tampering with Mother Nature.

And I have to wonder whether the feminization of men has been an unforeseen result of liberalism or some twisted scheme hatched by the left. In some ways, it feels paranoid to even go there, like I've watched too many sci fi flicks. But at the same time if Professor Bill Ayers and his ilk could plot infiltrating the schools with all things Marxist, why stop there? Why not engineer a designer man who would go along with the liberal flow?'

For Women, Circumcised Partner May Be Better Lover

anthony · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Having a male sex partner who has been circumcised doesn't hurt a woman's sexual satisfaction -- and may improve it, according to a landmark study in Uganda.

Almost 40 percent of women in the study said that their sexual satisfaction improved when their male partner had been circumcised. Only a handful of women reported less satisfaction, while the rest reported no change, according to Dr. Godfrey Kigozi, of the Rakai Health Sciences Program.

Kigozi reported the findings at the fifth annual International AIDS Society conference on pathogenesis, treatment, and prevention of HIV.'

UK: False rape claim woman is jailed

anthony · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A MUM who lied about being raped has been jailed for two years.

On Tuesday Jennifer Day, 34, was led sobbing from the dock after she was sentenced for perverting the course of justice at Basildon Crown Court.

Day, of Williamson Way, Corringham, made a tearful 999 call on January 8, 2008, claiming she had been raped at home by an ex-boyfriend.

The boyfriend, Andrew Saxby, was arrested at work and held in custody for around ten hours before police became suspicious about inconsistencies in Day's story.

They confronted Day, who had met Mr Saxby on a dating website, and admitted she had made up the claim.'

S. Africa: Woman sentenced to 3 years incarceration after false rape cry

anthony · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Atteridgeville woman was sentenced to three years' imprisonment after she falsely accused a man of rape, police said on Monday.

Police spokesman Inspector Daniel Mavimbela said the accused man had already spent eight months in custody after bail was denied.

The 25-year-old woman had falsely accused a 42-year-old man of rape after her uncle found she had had sex with the man.

During sentencing, Magistrate Pierre Laurens told the woman she had put the man through shame through her false accusation.

"You must be ashamed of yourself, the only sentence I can think for you is a prison sentence, you are sentenced to three years," said Laurens.'

Forbes: "Ga. men, white workers hit hard by job loss"

anthony · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA -- Men, especially white ones, are bearing the brunt of job losses in Georgia, according to a state Department of Labor paper released Tuesday.

The paper dubbed the trend a "he-cession" and advocated efforts to channel men into female-dominated career fields like teaching.

The study examined the demographics of Georgians receiving unemployment insurance benefits between December 2007 and May 2009.

Officials found the number of men receiving benefits increased 160 percent during that period. White men saw a 211 percent increase during that time, the largest percentage increase among all ethnic groups, and one that put them ahead of black women on the list of claimants for the first time since the recession began, according to labor officials.'

Family court injustices to men

Matt · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Did you know that a family court can order a man to reimburse the government for the welfare money, falsely labeled "child support," that was paid to the mother of a child to whom he is not related? Did you know that, if he doesn't pay, a judge can sentence him to debtor's prison without ever letting him have a jury trial?

Did you know that debtor's prisons (putting men in prison because they can't pay a debt) were abolished in the United States before we abolished slavery, but that they exist today to punish men who are too poor to pay what is falsely called "child support"?
...
This system is morally and constitutionally wrong, yet all the authorities say the court orders were lawful.

Another type of feminist indignity is the use in divorce cases of false allegations of child sexual abuse in order to gain child custody and the financial windfall that goes with it. Former Vancouver, Wash., police officer Ray Spencer has spent nearly 20 years in prison after being convicted of molesting his two children who are now adults and say it never happened.'

Implicit criminal profiling jayhammers · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Social psychologists have shown that 'implicit' or 'unconscious' bias can effect what people perceive and do, even in people who consciously hold non-prejudiced attitudes. These associations or mental shortcuts include automatic or implicit associations between minorities, particularly African Americans, and crime.

Implicit bias might lead the officer to automatically perceive crime in the making when she observes two young Hispanic males driving in an all-white neighborhood or lead an officer to be “under-vigilant” with a female subject because he associates crime and violence with males."

Glenn Sacks and Ned Holstein on NPR re male DV victims

Matt · 22 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Segment title: "The Violence We Ignore". The segment page is here and the archived show's .mp3 file can be downloaded with this link. Segment blurb:

"Talk of the Nation, July 20, 2009 · Earlier this month, football star Steve McNair was shot dead by his girlfriend in an apparent murder-suicide. In a recent article for The Baltimore Sun, co-author Ned Holstein points out that many news sources failed to mention that this was a tragic case of domestic violence, in which the male was the victim. Holstein talks about his article, "The Violence We Ignore," and why cases of men victimized by their wives and girlfriends are often overlooked."

Ben Roethlisberger: Rape allegations are 'reckless and false'

anthony · 23 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Steelers QB Ben Roethlisberger rejected the rape allegations levied against him by Andrea McNulty in a brief statement on Thursday.

"The allegations against me are reckless and false," Roethlisberger said at the Steelers' facility in Pittsburgh. He did not take any questions.

"I would never, ever force myself on a woman," Roethlisberger said.

McNulty filed a civil lawsuit against Roethlisberger in Nevada alleging the quarterback raped her at a casino following a golf tournament last year. She has not filed a criminal complaint, and Nevada police have not investigated the claims as a result.'

Australia: Girl event ‘can refuse men’

anthony · 23 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A girls night in Victoria will be legally able to refuse biological men from the event following a decision in that state this morning.

Pinkalicious organisers were this morning successful in their application for a women’s only event with the Victorian Civil Administrative Tribunal (VACT).

Promoters applied to VCAT in May for an exemption from state equal opportunity laws to allow them to turn biological men away from the event.

Pinkalicious promoter Julie Mackenzie said it was a “historic”day for Melbourne’s lesbian community as the first enforced female-only event.'

Boys to Men Raises $125,000

anthony · 23 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'San Diego, CA (PRWEB) July 22, 2009 -- As many as 60 patrons of the Boys To Men Mentoring Network recently gathered in the La Jolla home of Nancy and Michael Kaehr to support the noble work being done around the world by the mentoring program known as Boys to Men. The evening was a huge success raising over $125,000.00 -- almost 33% of their annual budget.

Most Successful Fundraiser Ever

"After months of planning and the hard work of ten committed volunteers lead by committee chair Teresa Bertino, Boys To Men of San Diego pulled off its most successful fundraiser ever," said Joe Sigurdson, a Boys to Men founder. The dedicated team hosted five separate house parties, each designed to inform guests about the program. Attendees were approached by committee members to answer any questions about the program and to gauge their interest and level of commitment. Those who showed an interest in helping Boys to Men were invited to a formal party for a night of pampering and inspiration.'

Deirdre Reilly: Parenting has changed, but little boys haven't

anthony · 23 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Little boys haven't changed, even if the way we parent has. They still love bugs and dirt and a glorious ride down a steep hill alone, full-speed, on a wicked three-speed bike. They still have a wildness that is beautiful to watch; when they shoot an arrow straight or skip a stone with all their might at the ocean and then wonder where it went, or play an air guitar with abandon with a best friend. And they need to be left alone once in awhile to be just … free.

One of my favorite memories with my first two sons was a time when we all three ran up and down our street during a pelting rain. The boys, ages 3 and 6, screamed and danced delightedly as their hair and clothes became soaked, and their mother's did, too. Then we jumped into puddles as hard as we could and came in muddy, soaked and with a happiness that comes from taking everything away except for the moment you're in.
...
Boys haven't changed – only the parenting styles have. And for a few minutes, I had connected all three sons in celebrating the wildness and freedom that lives in all kids. We just have to remember to make time to do nothing but live the exact – and amazing - moment we're in.'

Lee Nessel: Is it time to revise Title IX?

anthony · 23 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ah, equity. You can write a law and force it, but there still will be someone who feels they are on the short end, someone who will say, "This equity is not fair to me."

Is it time to revisit and revise Title IX?
...
I have met and known men who lost their life's dream when teams were cut and opportunities shrank for them to participate in sports. To them, Title IX is unfair. I couldn't agree more.
...
But the question remains, without Title IX, can the power structure in high school and intercollegiate athletics be trusted to ensure women continue to get a fair shake? If so, do away with it. If not, consider amending it. Or else we live with it, as unfair as it appears to some.

But since none of us can see into the future, it appears Title IX is here to stay.'

College wrestling's predicaments: One possible way out

anthony · 23 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this week, we explored some of the predicaments that college wrestling is dealing with right now -- programs being cut because of the recession, and/or as a way colleges attempt to comply with Title IX, the 1972 federal legislation that ensures equal opportunities for men and women in educational institutions receiving government aid.

It's all too easy for many in the college wrestling community to look at these challenges and respond with a "There's nothin' I can do about it" hopelessness or a "As long as my program's still in business, I really don't care" arrogance.

"The wrestling world spends so much time fighting the elimination of college programs that we think very little about adding teams – and yet every year new squads enter intercollegiate wrestling. There are many roadblocks to starting a new program – finances in these economic times, lack of alumni recognition, Title IX, etc. Let’s use the lessons taught us by NASA and Dan Gable. Let’s join together and fight back."'

Govt Help Needed Figuring Out Masculinity, Femininity

anthony · 23 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The new Health, Education, Labor and Pensions (HELP) Committee's legislation is intended to add to society's confusion about men and women and proper sexual behavior.

According to CNS News, it requires the Department of Health to develop "standards of measuring gender"…apparently because a quick look between a person's legs is too difficult.

"HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius is required by the proposed law — The Affordable Health Choices Act,which was voted out of committee on July 15 — to create a database within one year of the law's enactment that will include detailed information about those who sign up for government-run or supported health care programs, including their race, ethnicity, socioeconomic status, language and disabilities.

The proposed law states that the database can use the Office of Management and Budget "standards for race and ethnicity measures."

But for the collection of "gender" data, instead of using the categories "male" and "female," the legislation calls for "developing standards for the measurement of gender.""'

Monster.com creates "Just For Men" portal

Matt · 24 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

New portal site is here. Not surprisingly, it has a corporate sponsor with the same name.

This is a good thing to see, but also bad. It's good in that if there will be women-only job-oriented web sites and recruitment events, of which there are a lot, then why shouldn't there be men-only ones? At the same time, I don't like sex-segregation in general because it sets bad precedents. Once you accept that otherwise open-to-the-public services (whether rendered by government or private efforts) can be sex-segregated, then it's just a question of what and why. Today, if we accept sex-segregation for otherwise public events like theme nights at clubs, pay-for-entrance parties, health clubs, banks, rail cars, etc., then eventually when the political or social tide turns, sex-segregation will be possible for things that people didn't think they would see it applied to, such as restaurants, hospitals, etc. And of course, if indelible characteristics can be used as a basis for legal segregation, well, we know where that leads us (back) to, don't we? It's the "slippery slope" that people are rightly concerned with in action.

"Dads On the Air" site re-launch announcement

Matt · 24 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The Dads On the Air Program is going from strength to strength- and this week the website has relaunched with a new updated design and new features.

Come and check us out. The design is now much cleaner and less cluttered and the site itself much more pleasant to use.

The more modern design makes it easier to read and navigate around. The pages have a friendlier URL structure, for example the backgrounder is at http://www.dadsontheair.net/background/ and the bookstore is at http://dadsontheair.net/bookstore/.

As well, the full weekly show flyers are now available for all shows new and old, not just a summary of each week's guests. Just click the show title on the Home page or the "Click to read more..." link on the Archives page.

You can now search old shows by topic from the Archives page. For example, if you're just looking for shows about Men's Health, just click the Men's Health link in the right column. You can now easily email shows to friends by clicking the Email Article link at the bottom of the show page

You can also now share shows using all the modern social networking tools such as Facebook and Twitter by clicking the Share Article link at the bottom of the show page.

We would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank our researcher Greg Andresen for the wonderful work he has done redesigning the website. He has done an absolutely marvelous job and we at Dads On The Air owe him a profound debt of gratitude.

http://www.dadsontheair.net/

"Are more women OK with watching porn?"

Matt · 24 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Next time a woman tells you or implies that adult movies are viewed only by men, or almost only by men, send her this. (Among other things, the author, Violet Blue, is a respected sex-advice columnist with the San Francisco Chronicle.) Excerpt:

'In the first three months of 2007, according to Nielsen/NetRatings, approximately one in three visitors to adult entertainment Web sites was female; during the same period, nearly 13 million American women were checking out porn online at least once each month.

Theresa Flynt, vice president of marketing for Hustler video, says that women account for 56 percent of business at her company's video stores. "And the female audience is increasing," she adds. "Women are buying more porn." (They're creating more of it, too: Female director Candida Royalle's hard-core erotic videos, made expressly for women viewers, sell at the rate of approximately 10,000 copies a month.)
...
I've also heard, plenty of times, that porn degrades women. That argument always makes me wonder about gay male porn, which lots of women appreciate for all its hunky hotties in flagrante. If heterosexual porn degrades women, does gay porn degrade men? What about porn made by women -- is that degrading, too?'

Male US Navy officer files sexual harassment complaint against female reporter

Matt · 24 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FishbowlDC Exclusive: US Navy Commander Jeffrey D. Gordon has filed a sexual harassment complaint against the Miami Herald's Carol Rosenberg.

FishbowlDC obtained a copy of the July 22, 2009 letter addressed to Miami Herald Senior VP and Executive Editor Anders Gyllenhaal. In the complaint, Gordon calls for a "thorough investigation" to put an end to Rosenberg's "appalling behavior" that includes comments about the Commander's sexual orientation.

The complaint outlines examples of Rosenberg's alleged "abusive and degrading, comments of an explicitly sexual nature."
...
Gordon, who also serves as the Pentagon Spokesman for Western Hemisphere and Guantanamo issues also accuses Rosenberg of "bullying" reporters from various outlets including New York Times, Washington Post, CNN, Fox News, CBC, Der Siegel and Al Jazeera. He claims that over the years, Rosenberg has labeled her peers in the press and Gordon's colleagues "bitches," "stupid," "lazy," "incompetent," "Nazis," and "Saddam Hussein-like."'

Low birthrate: It's men's fault

badgerb · 25 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Read this debasing and misandrist article here. Excerpt:

'If we want to get a handle on why young people in western countries aren't reproducing, we should look at the men. When we do, the picture is not flattering.'

The article of course says nothing about the behavior of women. They are never culpable just the victim.

Please email the writer (stern-at-thecitizen.canwest.com) as I have done and in a respectful manner explain to him about divorce rates, gender pandering judiciary, domestic violence stats as it relates to the culpability of women.

Chivalrous males such as this and the women who feel that it their right to have it all need a wake up call.

When are we going to realize as a society that it takes two to tango and their is equal blame on both sides? I believe if that happens we will be on the way to a more equitable society. Just my opinion. Articles like this make my blood boil.

Young "feminist" has problem dating feminist man

Matt · 25 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I just laughed when I saw this. Excerpt:

'I am a feminist. And yet, like many third-wavers, I cherry-pick my battles — no to Howard Stern and the C word, yes to depilation and miniskirts. But since I started dating a guy who could decry the patriarchal paradigm as fluently as I could, I was forced to admit that I hadn't exactly been walking the feminist walk in my kitten heels, especially where romance was concerned. Probably because I, like most girls — er, women — have always wanted to be treated "like a lady" — given gifts and compliments, whisked away for romantic weekends.
...
Still, while he'll never be the guy who "takes" me out to dinner, he gets it: He noticed the sexist treatment Hillary Clinton received during the '08 campaign before I did; I never have to explain to him why a cleavage-laden ad for, say, toothpaste is annoying; he asks for my opinion and takes it into account; and he supports me in my choices. He's still a guy — playing handyman with door latches and fixing my temperamental PC. And once we're in the bedroom, all politics go out the window.'

And she says she's a "feminist". LMAO!

Family Rights 101: Why is there a fathers rights movement?

anthony · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers around the world are uniting for their human and civil right to parent their children, in what is sometimes called the fathers rights movement.

Equal parenting advocates like John Murtari of akidsright.org and Bev Morris, founder of the National Association of Noncustodial Moms (nancm.com) are quick to point out that mothers are also victim to bad government policy, just in smaller numbers.

Statistics show that approximately 85% of children nationwide who are not living with both of their parents are in the sole custody of their mothers. Bill Sharp, an Illinois father who lost equal custody when the mother of his children refused to cooperate with court orders, overheard his family court judge saying, "The father should not be upset because this is how it ends up in 90 per cent of the cases."

Australia: Divorced dads fear rollback of parent laws

anthony · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE shared parenting laws that have given divorced fathers more time with their children will be rolled back because of the power of left-wing feminist women in Kevin Rudd's cabinet.

That is the view of men's groups that lobbied for the laws when the Howard government was in power, and who now fear "that 15 years of progress in getting fathers and children to spend time together is about to be undone".

"I met with (Attorney-General) Robert McClelland a few weeks ago, and it was clear to me that these laws are being rolled back," said Sue Price, of the Men's Rights Agency.

"They (the Rudd government) say they are reviewing the law, but basically the law will change because in the Labor government there are a number of women who are well and truly indoctrinated in a 1970s feminist movement background, and they do not value the role of men in society.

"(Tanya) Plibersek pushes domestic violence based on incorrect data. (Nicola) Roxon dances a merry dance around men. The fact is that children are at far greater risk from their mothers. Mothers kill more children than fathers, and that's a fact." '

Childless Men Jailed for Non-Payment of Child Support

anthony · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHICAGO, July 25 /PRNewswire/ -- Frank Hatley spent the past year in Cook County jail in South Georgia for falling behind in child support payments. However, as the court was aware, he had no children according to court documents. A DNA test even confirmed that there was no chance he was the father.

Walter Sharpe, from Philadelphia, was forced to pay more than $12,000 in child support for another man's daughter. He spent two years in jail for falling behind in child support payments. Sharpe's Petitions filed for DNA testing were denied by the judge. However, the paternity order against him was finally overturned after the girl's mother failed to show up to a court hearing.

"Paternity Fraud victims need justice and our system is broken," comments Fathers' Rights Attorney Jeffery M. Leving, publisher of LevingsDivorceMagazine.com.'

Missouri: New Legislation Is Giving Fathers More Rights In Child Support Cases

anthony · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'[Missouri State] Senator Jeff Smith [link added] along with members of the Fathers Support Center [link added] announced the changes in front of the Civil Courts Building. The changes include letting judges dealing with child support cases assign non violent fathers to educational, vocational , or job training instead of giving them a felony and sending them to jail.

The law also gives dads more rights in DNA testing.

"If a DNA test precludes the possibility that a man could be the father of a child he are she will be removed from future obligation and the birth certificate of a child will be modified until this law many men who they could show through DNA testing were not the father of the were ordered to continue paying hild support because there was no one else to pay and that's just not right. Sen. Jeff Smith (D) St. Louis

The law also provides better notification to fathers of paternity test results.'

The Abortion Debate: What's the Role of Men?

anthony · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I support a woman's right to make that choice, but it still really hurt that she never consulted me beforehand. There were cruelties: around this time she took up with a "friend" of mine, and they were never honest with me about it or the chronology. They eventually married and had one child of which I know. I wish I could say I wish them well, but I am still bitter. Rationally, I know I am better off that I didn't marry such a cruel, selfish, and inconsiderate person. But it still hurts, even 16 years later.

The abortion is just one element in my sad little tale, but I did and do think it was wrong of her to tell me after the fact. At the time, it just made me even more miserable. I'm not saying I had a right to input on the decision, but I think I was due a little consideration.
...
It's unfair, but heterosexual relations are unfair, and a man's responsibility should always be up front: "If you ever get pregnant, I will stand up and meet my responsibilities, period." A woman has to know that, because otherwise she will be hesitant to go through with it. But even though a man has to be willing to follow through just as described, if the woman does want to abort, he has to let her do that, too. Like I said, unfair. Of course, straight couples where the woman goes ahead and has an abortion frequently break up, but, that's another issue.'

Teachers fine-tune approach to boys when teaching basic skills

anthony · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First-grader Cyrus Mends parks himself on an exercise ball and tackles a Sudoku puzzle to help hone his math skills. He calls his teacher "Mr. Mealey" and his classmates by Mr., too. And he's a proud member of "Mealey's Men," made up of three teams that compete to demonstrate the best behavior and the best academic performance.

Tom Mealey's classroom at Carver Elementary School in Maplewood is a bit different from other elementary classrooms. The most obvious distinction? There are no girls.

Mealey is one of many educators tackling what some call a silent epidemic. By almost every achievement measure, boys in Minnesota and across the nation are falling behind their female peers.

Boys' reading and writing test scores continue to lag behind girls', while girls have caught up to boys in math. Check out the names of the top graduates at your local high school — chances are an overwhelming majority are girls. Girls are more likely than boys to get a high school diploma in four years, and they outnumber guys 3 to 2 on Minnesota's college campuses.

"There's something going on with boys," Mealey said. "And we need to deal with this in an aggressive manner."'

'Why is educating boys so hellishly hard?'

anthony · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'However, not only is there a large gap in favor of women's college attendance, but women go through college faster, with higher grades, more honors and fewer disciplinary setbacks. Currently, they are being admitted to elite graduate business and medical schools in greater numbers. The situation has become so critical that in order to have a reasonably balanced entering class, many schools have a sub rosa affirmative action program for boys. Oh, how the mighty have fallen!

...

Why have boys lost their academic and employment leads? Men have always been more trouble, starting wars and going over the edge, but they have usually been the ones to do the "big deeds," from inventing vaccines to building great businesses. They have been looked to by their womenfolk for leadership and security. Now more and more women are saying, "Why bother!" When young Elvis was asked why he hadn't married, he famously responded, "Why pay a cow when you can get milk free through a picket fence?" Ladies now are answering that same question with, "Why buy a stubborn, lazy mule when I can drive to town in my own car!"'

B.C. teacher may be jailed for sex with student

anthony · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Crown recommended eight to nine months in prison Monday for a 30-year-old female high school teacher from Burnaby, B.C., who admitted to having sex with a 17-year-old male student.

The relationship began with flirtatious emails and text messages and developed into highly sexualized phone calls from the teacher and, eventually, sex in her classroom after school one Friday. It was the student's first time having sex.

The student's face turned red in B.C. provincial court in Vancouver on Monday as the act was described and the Crown revealed it was the teacher herself who told other male students they "did it" and called his performance disappointing. It was the other male students who told authorities.'

The female discount for sexual predators

anthony · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Reported sex offenses by women increased tenfold from the '80s to the '90s, yet their prison time remains but a fraction of what men receive. A Kansas State professor found that, on average, male teachers faced up to 20 years in prison for sex abuse, while female teachers were handed probation, house arrest or a maximum of three years of jail time.

That's because the public—and judges—still can't imagine women as sexually aggressive.

"The speculation is that people are less likely to see the woman as a predator," says Vanderbilt law and psychology professor Chris Slobogin. "Also, there is perhaps the sexist assumption that boys who tend to be the victims of women aren't really victims, but in fact consented to the act and enjoyed it."'

Woman gets 4 years for conspiracy to kill husband

anthony · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BROOKSVILLE - Fenol Francois has mixed feelings about the woman who tried to have him killed.

In court on Thursday, he pledged his love for his wife, then placed her on the same level as Osama Bin Laden.

He pleaded with Circuit Judge Jack Springstead to give Jacqucia Francois a hefty prison sentence.

"If you only give her four years, she will come after me again," Fenol Francois said in the thick Caribbean accent of his native Haiti.

At the prompting of Assistant State Attorney Rob Lewis, Fenol Francois described life after his wife was arrested on suspicion of conspiracy to commit first-degree murder.'

Despite three witnesses and several changes to her story, woman acquitted of murder

Matt · 26 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ebony S. Mack was found not guilty Friday of killing a mother of four in a street-corner slaying that helped launch Rochester's Zero Tolerance anti-crime initiative.

Monroe County Court jurors acquitted Mack of second-degree murder, first-degree manslaughter, first-degree gang assault and second-degree gang assault in the death of Latasha Shaw, who was beaten and stabbed by a mob at Dewey and Driving Park avenues on Sept. 29, 2007.

...

A mob of 10 to 20 people stormed from the porch of a home occupied by Mack's mother and engulfed Shaw. As two of her daughters and her sister watched, Shaw was pummeled with sticks and bats, stabbed with a kitchen knife and left dying face-down in a puddle of blood.

...

Three witnesses, including Shaw's 12-year-old daughter, who was 10 when her mother was slain, identified Mack as the woman they saw plunge a knife into Shaw's chest. But the defense questioned the credibility of the witnesses, two of whom got breaks from the prosecution on criminal charges because of their testimony against Mack.

...

During an eight-hour-long interrogation by homicide investigators, Mack changed her story several times. At first insisting she was at work when the slaying occurred, she later admitted participating in the earlier fight involving Shaw's daughter and said she saw the mob engulf Shaw during the fatal fight.'

Guy friends rule

Matt · 27 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Very nice to see this. Article here. Excerpt:

'Ours is a world where female friendships are celebrated by Oprah and the Traveling Pants and bestsellers like "The Girls From Ames." ... But friendships between straight men and women wind up mangled by clichéd claptrap like "The Ugly Truth." Men are only interested in spreading their seed! Women are uptight prisses! And the only thing to do, of course, is to fall hopelessly in love.

Frankly, I'm a little fed up with it. Some of the deepest, sweetest, most enduring friendships of my life have been with males. Men I went to college with, men I've toiled in crappy jobs with, men who stuck around long after I lost touch with the ex-girlfriends who introduced us. ...Why do straight men so rarely get props for being good buddies? ...
A few months ago, when I was going through a simultaneous health, personal and career crisis, my girlfriends offered comfort and support. My guys, on the other hand, offered welcome respite from the comfort and support. They didn't ask questions. They didn't pity me. They took me out for BLTs and horror movies and burned me Lil Wayne mixes. They pried me for the details of my business negotiations and insisted I demand more. They emboldened me in a way that was very different from the care I got from women. They were as generous and loving as my girlfriends, in their uniquely, endearingly male ways.'

Mom Claims Devil Made Her Decapitate and Mutilate Son

anthony · 27 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In what police describe as one of the most gruesome crimes against a child in recent memory, an infant boy was stabbed, decapitated and mutilated early Sunday.

His 33-year-old mother claimed responsibility, police said.

Otty Sanchez told police that she was “hearing voices” and that the devil made her kill Scott Wesley Buchholtz Sanchez, to whom she gave birth on June 30, San Antonio police spokesman Joe Rios said.

Sanchez used a steak knife to repeatedly stab the nearly 4-week-old baby, then decapitate and mutilate him, Rios said. A police source said the baby was skinned and gutted.

Sanchez then used the knife to stab herself in the chest and abdomen, police said.

Sanchez was detained and taken to University Hospital, where she remained in stable condition Sunday night. She was charged by proxy late Sunday with capital murder, which is punishable by the death penalty. Bond was set at $1 million.'

In another report of the same murder, it is reported that the mother ate the boy's brain.

Police allege East Kingston woman framed ex-husband

anthony · 27 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kristin Ruggiero of East Kingston went to the media last year seeking help with an ongoing domestic violence case against her ex-husband.

Ruggiero told a television reporter she was so terrified of her ex-husband she couldn't sleep at night.

In an interview with the Exeter News-Letter, Ruggiero said he was posing as other people over the phone in an attempt to find out where she lived.

Now police allege that before she began her media campaign Ruggiero, 33, attempted to set up her ex-husband by sending a series of threatening text messages to herself from a cell phone she had falsely registered under his name. According to the affidavit, police tracked where and when the phone was used. They discovered a call made in California was six-tenths of a mile from where Kristin Ruggiero was staying at the time.
...
Another call, placed from Nashville, Tenn., lined up with the date and time Kristin Ruggiero had flown into the city, the affidavit states.

Based on this evidence, Ruggiero was indicted last month on 12 felony counts of falsifying evidence and one misdemeanor count of filing a false report.'

Examiner.com: 'Fathers' rights'

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a growing fathers' rights movement in the United States and especially Ohio where fathers are treated very unfairly. A little known fact about child support is that the county is allotted large sums of money for each case that is enforced. The money trickles down through the system via the County Commissioner's Office. The court merely rubber stamps the child support recommendation and nine out of ten times the father has no say in the matter. There seems to be no incentive to grant visitation to unwed fathers and no incentive to enforce visitation rights or lower support when needed. Speaking to many politicians around the State was very disappointing since almost none of them want to touch the issue. One response was that there was legislation looming but the last election year killed it. The details were not explained.'

Boys Left Out Of Rutgers Engineering Program

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PISCATAWAY — The engineering class going on this summer on the third floor of the Allison Road classroom building on the Busch campus does not look like any other engineering class at Rutgers University.

In fact, it may not look like any other engineering class anywhere.

That is because everyone in the class is an adolescent girl.

This is not an actual college engineering class. The students are still in high school.

They are participating in a summerlong program called The Academy at Rutgers for Girls in Engineering and Technology, or TARGET, designed to introduce girls as early as the sixth grade to engineering.'

Convicted of false report, Minneapolis woman files civil rights suit

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman convicted last week of making a false claim of rape against two Minneapolis police officers filed a lawsuit Monday alleging a cover-up and seeking damages in excess of $50,000.

Lawyer Jill Clark filed the complaint on behalf of Trisha Farkarlun against the city, Police Chief Tim Dolan and several police officers, including the two she alleged participated in the rape and those who investigated it. The suit was filed in Hennepin County District Court.

...

Last Tuesday, Clark successfully sought a delay in sentencing one day after Farkarlun, 23, was convicted of making a false report of police misconduct, a gross misdemeanor. She could be sentenced to up to one year and fined $3,000. Judge Tanya Bransford scheduled a hearing for 2 p.m. Thursday for sentencing and post-trial motions for acquittal, a new trial and juror misconduct.'

'Two fake sexual assaults in two days, but false reporting is rare'

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Center for Abuse and Rape Emergencies, Inc. said even though there were two false reports in two days, it's rare for people to make up these kinds of stories.

Mary Baer, Director of Sexual Assault Services said, "Only two percent of rape reports are false, and that is about the same number of false reports of any other crime."

Mary Baer also said false reporting not only wastes time and money, but it could also keep real victims from coming forward - fearing no one will believe them.

"False reports just feed into the myth that women lie about rape, and it's not true," Baer said.'

'Intactivists' lobby feds on circumcision

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A new organization based in the Lower Hudson Valley is hoping to influence the debate about infant circumcision, as the nation's most influential public health agency prepares to make recommendations on the procedure amid new evidence that it could help protect men from sexually transmitted diseases, including the HIV virus.

The group, Intact America [link added], is headed by Upper Nyack resident Georganne Chapin, who also leads the Tarrytown-based Hudson Health Plans, which provides health insurance to people on Medicaid.

The organization, backed by an anti-circumcision Texas millionaire, is circulating an online petition that it hopes will convince the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention not to recommend routine infant male circumcision as a matter of public health policy.

The CDC is reviewing new data, including studies recently done in Africa, that suggest that men who undergo circumcision, the surgical removal of all or some of the foreskin from the penis, have marked reduction in their risk of HIV infection.'

'Boy Interrupted' A Tale Of Teen Suicide

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LITCHFIELD - — In advance of its premiere on HBO, a new documentary about teen suicide will be shown July 25 at Bantam Cinema in Litchfield, with the directors in attendance.

"Boy Interrupted" is about Evan Scott Perry, who committed suicide at his home in New York City in 2005, at the age of 15, after a lifetime of battling bipolar disorder. His parents took years' worth of home-movie footage and edited together a chronicle of their troubled boy's life, which included treatment at Wellspring, a facility in Bethlehem.

Sheila Nevins, HBO executive producer, and Dana and Hart Perry will attend, as will representatives from Wellspring.'

Couples struggle with society's mixed messages

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We believe men are in charge and women are suppressed in relationships. But really, women dominate in personal arguments twice as often as men do. Furthermore, men get more stressed and stay stressed longer than women do following an argument. And two-thirds of divorces are filed by women.

Men's chivalrous tendencies to protect women against bullies are working against themselves. Being openly critical of men is gaining acceptance, but being openly critical of women is socially improper.

Women who can't get a man to commit to a relationship are seen as exploited. Men in the same boat aren't a real concern. "'Runaway Bride' was funny; 'Runaway Groom' would be anything but," Driscoll says.

Bottom line, Driscoll and Davis say, is men are being disenfranchised in their families. And unless we turn things around, it will be our children who suffer the most.'

American Thinker: 'The Feminist Way of Interviewing'

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ginsburg agreed to the assertio of unfairness, but laid it to ideology: "There are people in Congress who would criticize severely anyone President Obama nominated."

She then cited Sotomayor's 2001 remark about a "wise Latina" reaching "a better conclusion than a white male" and said, "I thought it was ridiculous for them to make a big deal out of that." Feminists are not concerned when the ox being gored is a white male, any more than a matador thinks twice about putting the blade between the shoulders of a charging bull.

Bazelon eventually brought up the court's overturning of Sotomayor's ruling in the Connecticut firefighter's reverse racism case (Ricci v. DeStefano). Ginsburg's comment was that they picked a "nice guy" who was a "dyslexic firefighter. Which is exactly what you should do as a lawyer." Bazelon agreed, observing, "It's true, it's a very good strategy. He was a very sympathetic plaintiff." As for the merits of the case and whether reverse racism is okay if you don't have such a sympathetic client, well, there was no follow up.

Bazelon moved on to the case of a strip search of a 13-year-old girl, suggesting that the men on the court were largely clueless, to which Ginsburg said, "I think it makes people stop and think, maybe a 13-year-old girl is different from a 13-year-old boy in terms of how humiliating it is to be seen undressed."'

'I've had a gun to my head': Man wants life back after sex charges tossed

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'AJAX -- For two years Ray Collingham felt like somebody was holding a gun to his head.

The reality was even worse.

"I was charged with seven counts of sexual assault, four counts of sexual interference, two counts of invitation to sexual touching and two sexual exploitation charges," Collingham said in an interview yesterday.
...
Now Collingham wants his life, name and reputation back.

"I've had a gun to my head, so to speak, for two years and now I'm hoping slowly that I'm going to be able to get back on my feet," Collingham said.'

Charges dropped in false MTU rape report

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HOUGHTON COUNTY -- The decision to drop charges against a Michigan Tech Student accused of filing a false rape report was made after a lot of discussion.

Jennifer Stigers was facing a felony charge after she filed a false report earlier this year.
...
If she had been found guilty of the charge, Stigers could have been facing up to four years in prison.'

UK: Girl, 12, made false rape claim

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 12-year-old Berkshire girl has been given a reprimand for wasting police time after falsely reporting a rape.

The girl, from Reading, told officers she had been raped by a 15-year-old boy on 11 July.

They arrested the teenager but further inquiries showed the rape accusation was false and he was later released without charge.

Police said the investigation cost thousands of pounds and caused distress to the innocent victim.
...
"In this case a 15-year-old boy was arrested as part of the initial investigation, which was obviously very distressing for him.'

Police: Ind. Alleged Sexual Assault Is False Report

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An allegation of rape has been determined to be a false accusation according to investigators in Dearborn County.

Officials say the determination was based on statements from the accused and the victim, as well as other evidence.

On July 15 the Aurora Police Department and the Dearborn County Special Crimes Unit were called in to investigate a possible sexual assault at the Aurora Little League Park just after Midnight.

The victim was treated and released from the Dearborn County Hospital. The victim's name is being withheld to protect her privacy.

No arrests were made in the case.'

Canada: Teen lied about sexual assault

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A southern Alberta teenager could be charged with public mischief for making a false sexual assault report to police.

RCMP in Strathmore had asked the public for help Monday after a 14-year-old said she had been sexually assaulted by up to five young men around 2 a.m. in an alley behind Strathmore's Co-op liquor store.

Police released a description of three men and a vehicle.

On Thursday, police said the girl had recanted her story. She told officers she made up the story, using details from a verbal encounter she had with two men in the alley.

"The RCMP wish to remind everyone that fictitious claims of criminal offences are not only subject to possible criminal charges, but these stories have a profound effect on the sense of security of the community, negative impact on the reputation of communities, any accused persons and others who are actual victims of crimes," the force said in a release.'

Woman admits report of sexual assault was false

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'PLAINFIELD TOWNSHIP -- A 25-year-old woman admitted Thursday she lied to Kent County sheriff's detectives about being sexually assaulted Wednesday at the Hidden Valley Townhomes by a man pretending to be a maintenance worker.

Detectives will be seeking charges against the woman of filing a false police report.

An interview with the woman Thursday revealed she fabricated the story.

The woman told detectives Wednesday a man approached her apartment and told her that he was there to fix her drywall.

The woman said the alleged suspect then entered the apartment, forced her to the ground and sexually assaulted her at knifepoint.

Criminal charges have not yet been filed.'

Jury: Minneapolis woman's rape report false

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A defense lawyer on Tuesday won a sentencing delay for a 23-year-old north Minneapolis woman convicted of falsely accusing two Minneapolis police officers of raping her.

After a three-week trial, a jury on Monday convicted Trisha Farkarlun, 23, of making a false report of police misconduct, a gross misdemeanor. She could be sentenced to up to one year in jail and fined $3,000.

Hennepin County District Judge Tanya Bransford delayed sentencing until Aug. 14 so she could receive written memos and respond to the defense motions for acquittal, a new trial and a hearing on potential juror misconduct.'

Story update: Cannibal-mother had been diagnosed with 'psychosis'

Matt · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SAN ANTONIO – The father of a newborn baby who authorities say was mutilated, killed and cannibalized by his mother said Tuesday he wants to see her executed. Scott W. Buchholz told The Associated Press that Otty Sanchez, the mother of 3 1/2-week-old Scotty Wesley Buchholz-Sanchez, seemed fine in the days before the killing, even though they argued.

However, he said she told him she had been diagnosed with postpartum depression and was going to be admitted to a hospital for treatment.

Sanchez's relatives told The San Antonio Express News that she had been diagnosed with postpartum psychosis, which can cause delusional thoughts and hallucinations.

Sanchez, 33, is charged with capital murder in the baby's death and could face the death penalty. When authorities found the infant's body Sunday, Sanchez told officers the devil made her do it, police said.'

US Legislators Examine Violence Against Women Act

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"So much more is needed. We must strengthen VAWA so that it works for all victims of sexual or domestic violence - whether they live in rural or urban areas, whether they speak English or another language," Karen Tronsgard-Scott says. "Every victim deserves a chance to live a peace-filled life."

But lawmakers are up against protectionists who don't want taxpayer funds benefiting residents who don't have permission to live in the U.S. Others complain about the confidentiality granted through the law. Once an immigrant claims abuse, their quest for legal status through the VaWa act is secret. The accused is not sought out for his side of the story.

Ron Grignol is a critic who says VaWa makes it easy for women to allege abuse, simply to become permanent residents. "Right away you're given legal status. You don't have to go through that immigration interview, you don't have to go through the administrative law judge," he explains. "Your spouse or ex-spouse is not allowed to provide any evidence that he thinks you committed fraud."'

Trudy Schuett: VAWA becomes a vehicle for wish-list funding

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Congress spends approx. 1 billion taxpayer dollars each year with the stated intent of eliminating domestic violence, the largest portion of that amount being the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). They are poised to increase funding even further next year when they vote on a 5 year reauthorization of VAWA. One would think that this much money should have greatly reduced domestic violence by now. But VAWA spending has had little or no effect on reducing domestic violence.
...
For next year's reauthorization, they've formed eighteen committees to dream up their wish-list. It's not possible to know right now just what their demands will be, but recent bills introduced in Congress offer clues to what sort of non-domestic-violence-related things they may ask for.

Workplace: HR 739 is a bill currently in Congress. The bill would make domestic violence victims a new class with special privileges. Under the bill, a domestic violence victim would be entitled to lifetime employment benefits! This includes the right to employee health insurance, and the right to sue employers over higher and firing decisions. And since this would apply to people who self-refer, removing the need to provide proof, such a law would act as an incentive to make up a story. In these times of massive job losses, such a law would create an epidemic of false accusations, destroying the lives of millions of innocent people.'

Women Business Owners Get Financial Support from Local Banks

anthony · 28 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It's a lament heard around the Valley, at networking events, in business meetings, over cups in coffee shops: "Banks just aren't lending anymore".

Well that's just not true! There are several banks that have funds available and are making loans to women and minority small business owners.
...
Deborah Bateman at National Bank of Arizona, in fact, heads a team of bankers dedicated to women business owners. The Women's Financial Group is 'banking by women for women'. They offer a complete portfolio of banking services for women including businesss & not-for-proft banking, personal banking services, personal financing and investment services.'

'Operation Bloodette' leads to arrest of 43 members of female-led Essex County narcotics ring

Matt · 29 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEWARK -- In what is being dubbed "Operation Bloodette," law-enforcement officials said today that they have dismantled a female-led narcotics ring and arrested 43 gang members and their associates.

The ring, which operated in Newark, East Orange, Orange and Montclair, resulted in the seizure of "significant amounts" of illegal drugs, weapons and cash, according to the Essex County Prosecutor's Office. Authorities said the group is believed to be related to the Bloods street gang.
...
Raids connected with the arrests netted PCP, heroin, cocaine and marijuana with a street value of $133,000, four loaded handguns and $21,000 in cash.'

Cops: Scorned NYC Woman Scorched Hubby's Genitals

anthony · 29 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'QUEENS (CBS) — A boiling mad Queens woman is behind bars after she took matters into her own hands to stop her husband's infidelity.
...
"She came into the bedroom and poured hot water on me," Ojofeitimi said.

The target of her revenge: his genitals.

The Nigerian native was rushed to the hospital for burns not only to his genitals but his chest, arms and legs.
...
As Ojofeitimi recovers at the hospital's burn unit, his wife is in jail, no doubt asking herself if her punishment for him fit his crime.'

Wendy McElroy: 'More on why you should not volunteer with children'

anthony · 29 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The Anthony she's speaking about is not me. :-} Excerpt:

'I haven't been able to get Anthony J. Tripoli out of my mind. He is the 69-year-old man I wrote about in a July 19th blog post. He was a volunteer who tutored children one-on-one in reading skills at a public school in Florida. Based on the testimony of an 8-year-old girl and without any supporting evidence whatever, he was given a life sentence for allegedly touching her in an inappropriate -- that is, a sexual -- manner. In reading the news story, I thought the man was probably innocent and a victim of the public/legal hysteria that surrounds the issues of children and sex.

I looked further into the story in the hope of finding reason to believe Tripoli is guilty because I hate, hate, hate the thought of a man's life being ruined because of an act of kindess he rendered to a child. But the more I uncover the more I am convinced of his innocence.'

Megan Fox boycott set for August 4

Matt · 29 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Off-linked from MSN.com, surprisingly. Asylum.com is one of the participating sites. I don't know if MANN's call for this had anything to do with it, but I don't care. I am just glad it's happening. Excerpt:

'Have you guys heard of this actress, Megan Fox? She's in the "Transformers" movie and she's super-hot and -- oh, you have heard of her already? Maybe that's because we, the media, have been covering her every weird thumb, geek-shunning, supposed bisexuality, Star Wars-T-shirt wearing, and sexy photo taken.

But on August 4, that all changes, as Asylum bands together with the other manly sites of the Web in an Internet-wide media ban on all things Megan Fox. After the jump, see our explanation and find out how you can help.'

Our paedophilia hysteria makes life in Britain a misery

Matt · 29 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This seedy and weird prurience really became noticeable at the start of the decade, when mobs in places like Portsmouth descended on suspected child molesters who had allegedly been placed in the area, whipped up by hysterical tabloid newspapers. What struck me was the site of 8 and 9-year-old girls in boob tubes carrying banners that said “Kill the pidofiles!” Only in Britain – a child dressed like a lap-dancer protesting against paedophilia.

The paedo-mania was an exercise in displacement by the British working-class, who had recently adopted wholesale fatherlessness and a consumer youth culture that glorified in child sexualisation. Mysterious nonces in dirty macs became suitable bogey figures, when sexual abuse of children was far, far more likely to happen in broken homes at the hands of a mother’s boyfriend.'

As good as it is, maybe the writer of this piece should do some more reading on the topic of rates of perpetration of sexual abuse against children in the UK.

'Nightmare' for two girls who commit fraud and - shock! go to jail

GaryB · 30 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This story is reported on the Sydney Morning Herald site. Excerpt:

'Efforts were being made today to try to free two British women being held in an overcrowded Rio de Janeiro jail on suspicion of staging a robbery insurance scam, their lawyer told media.
...
Police, suspicious because the women had taken three days to report the alleged theft and still had their passports, accompanied them back to their hostel near Copacabana beach.

There, a search of lockers turned up the mobile telephones and iPod the women said had been stolen.'

So their 'nightmare' is that they tried to commit insurance fraud, got caught out, and are now in the local jail waiting to be sentenced. Poor things...

Barbara Kay: Don't call it 'domestic' violence

anthony · 30 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Liberals deliberately conflate domestic violence with honour killing because they feel that making any distinction would "racialize" the crimes, indicting a whole culture. But in order to avoid offending the minority communities in which honour killings occur, they must then "genderize" the practice by force-fitting it into the category of all male-on-female domestic violence.

For theory's sake -- all cultures are equal -- they willingly indict an entire sex for these horrific crimes. Clearly liberal ideologues consider misandry a lesser evil than racism (and to many feminists no evil at all, rather an entitlement and a pleasure).

...

Part of the problem lies in the phrase "domestic violence," which seems to encompass any violence that occurs in a household. And, unfortunately, it is received wisdom in our highly feminized society to believe that domestic violence, like honour killing, is a one-way street: male on female. That's not the case, but cracking the shell of this unusually hardboiled myth is a thankless task for truth-tellers in the field.'

Moms reveal why they gave up their children

Matt · 30 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S. Article here. Excerpt:

'Mothers currently retain custody of the children in approximately 70 percent of divorces. But even though that's the majority, that still leaves a large and growing number of women who do not retain custody.

"The more I talk about it, the more I find that people's eyes are open to the reality — which is that over 2 million noncustodial moms are in America right now, and it is definitely increasing," Spicuglia said. "People are recognizing that fathers can be amazing primary caregivers, and we shouldn't sell men short."

Spicuglia is one of several women profiled in a Marie Claire magazine article about the growing phenomenon of noncustodial mothers. Joanna Coles, the magazine's editor-in-chief, said that response to the story has been generally positive.'

From Jeremy S.:

"Mothers currently retain custody of the children in approximately 70 percent of divorces"

Eh? I don't think so?. The 70% figure is not accurate in Canada for sure (94%) and I am doubtful about the USA. I think I can confidently say that in the UK, Australia and New Zealand the mother-custody rate is way over 80%. I am really not exactly sure about US figures but that 70% does not sound right to me. Perhaps our American brothers can set this right? What was especially interesting though was this comment: '"People are recognizing that fathers can be amazing primary caregivers, and we shouldn't sell men short."'

Police: Gatti's death a suicide, must release wife

Matt · 30 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) - Boxer Arturo Gatti's death was ruled a suicide by police Thursday and a judge ordered the release of his wife, who was once suspected of killing the former champion.

Lead investigator Paulo Alberes told The Associated Press that authorities decided Gatti killed himself on July 11 while at a seaside resort in northeastern Brazil.

...

A day after the 37-year-old Gatti was found dead, police said that his Brazilian wife, Amanda Rodrigues, had strangled him with her purse strap as he drunkenly slept.

But police began to back off the accusation about a week later after a coroner's report said Gatti may have killed himself as he was found "suspended and hanged." The autopsy report didn't exclude the possibility he was slain, but said he also could have died in an unexplained accident, besides killing himself.

...

"Nobody believes whatsoever that there's even a 1 percent chance of a suicide. He lived life to the fullest," Ivano Scarpa, a close Gatti family friend, said at the time.

But Rodrigues, in her letter from prison, said: "I'm innocent and I know that this will be proven in a few days."'

Porn Star Mulling Senate Bid Arrested For Domestic Violence

anthony · 30 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW ORLEANS -- It's been a tough week for porn actress Stormy Daniels -- complete with a domestic violence charge and a car explosion -- as she continues to mull a U.S. Senate bid that could make life uncomfortable for incumbent first-term Louisiana Republican David Vitter, still recovering from a sex scandal.

Daniels was arrested Saturday on a domestic violence battery charge after she allegedly hit her husband at their home in Tampa, Fla., during a dispute about laundry and unpaid bills.

...

Mosny told police that Daniels was upset "about the way the clothes had been done" and then "got more upset about some bills that had not been paid," the police report said.

The police report said Daniels allegedly "threw a potted plant at the kitchen sink," hit Mosny on the head several times and "threw their wedding album onto the floor and knocked candles off coffee table, breaking them."'

Woman Suspected of Cutting Baby From Massachusetts Mom's Womb Held on $2M Bail

anthony · 30 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman suspected of carving a nearly full-term baby girl from her friend's womb and passing the newborn off as her own was being held on $2 million bail Thursday.

Julie Corey, 35, has been charged as a fugitive from justice. She appeared in district court in New Hampshire via video from the county jail, a day after she was arrested at a homeless shelter in the state, allegedly with the live infant.

The baby is said to be "in fairly good health," police said. The infant's mother, 23-year-old Darlene Haynes, was about 8 months pregnant when she was killed.'

"Stolen Generation" - Recorded discussions on today's family courts

Matt · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S. He writes: "Here you go Guys. Relax with some tea and listen to some raw truth as you work. I am much impressed with this man-whoever he is. I am told he is a psychologist in Tasmania.

There is nothing better than unadulterated truth and it does not get more true, more blunt or better in any way than this. All you need to know in 4 hours of listening. Make a CD and play it in the car on the way to work or to pick up the kids. Or on the way to court even." Listing of audio programs:

Stolen generation Pt.1. (Two Parts, by Amfortas) http://soundcloud.com/christian-j/stolen-generation-part-one

A professional analysis of the Family Court's 'Bible' that justifies the ' least detrimental alternatives' to the traditional family. "We have a generation of fathers who are shell-shocked, heartbroken". It was Adolph Hitler who first said that people will take any reduction to their freedom if you tell them it is in the best interests of the children. Could we not have a non-detrimental alternative, Amfortas asks.

Stolen Generation Pt.2.
http://soundcloud.com/christian-j/stolen-generation-part-2

The Family Court brings about the detrimental conditions that lead to a delinquent culture of fatherlessness in children. The 'most deserving parent' is chosen on genitalia. Professionals make judgements that cause parental alienation syndrome. A juggernaut is driven over Magna Carta. An equal society is replaced by a superior class of people.

Give a Dog a Bad Name. Pt.1. (Two parts, by Amfortas) http://soundcloud.com/christian-j/give-a-dog-a-bad-name-part-1

The mass media is anti-male by commercial design. Comprehensive study data shows the depth of disrespect for men. Even 'Old-school' feminists are appalled at the damage being done to men. The media is 'Wrong, both factually and morally", says MRA Amfortas. Government pays for an agitprop war on men's reputation to frighten women. At what cost?

Give a dog a Bad Name. Pt.2.
http://soundcloud.com/christian-j/give-a-dog-a-bad-name-pt-2

Women have unconsciously adopted a habit of disrespecting men. "Men are feeling profoundly disappointed, disillusioned and disgusted" and are withdrawing their support and protection of women. Society, and women in particular, are losing a valuable resource needed for its healthy continuance. The Love of men. Is this what women want?
Sacred Cows in the China Shop. Pt.1. (Two parts, by Amfortas)
