http://soundcloud.com/amfortas1/amfortas-christian-j-sacred-cows-in-the-china-shop-part-one

A female economist, Dr Jennifer Roback Morse takes on a leading Feminist in a debate. Women's Studies Depts' have no legitimacy and should be closed. They are academically bogus and "Ideologically biased". A men's Studies Dept could be better trusted to seek truth and answers to urgent social questions. Women dominate Universities and are driven by bias.

Sacred Cows in the China Shop. Pt.2.
http://soundcloud.com/amfortas1/amfortas-christian-j-sacred-cows-in-the-china-shop-part-two

A 'Life studies dept' would serve society better than a 'woman's studies Dept. "50 million unborn babies have died for women's rights".

Enough is enough. University cobbled Feminists 'cherry pick' studies and ignore contrary evidence to present false ideas to the public, corrupting their intellectual obligation and actively creating and manipulating a negative and destructive image about men.

Feminism is NOT good for Women. Pt.1. (Two parts, by Christian J)
http://soundcloud.com/christian-j/web-log-aft-cj-debunking-feminism

Post WW2 Feminism adopted Marxist 'conflict' model, pitting a new 'Class' of oppressed women against an imaginary exploitative 'patriarchy, according to Female Economist Jennifer Morse. Christian J narrates how women adopted it to assuage and project their guilt and resentment after so many male deaths in wars to defend them. Women were in work since WW1 and had parity in University education before WW2, long before the Feminist revolution of the 70s.

Feminism is NOT good for Women. Pt.2.
http://soundcloud.com/christian-j/webcast-feminism-is-not-good-for-women-part-2

Christian J continues to show how the destruction of marriage and Family is against women's best interests and is leading to profound unhappiness. Women participate in the public sphere by chemically neutering themselves during the peak child-bearing years. "The infertile career woman - and her close cousin, the single mother -is not exactly by choice, but more by default. These women are extremely disappointed."

Also on YouTube
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Nmz2yLBTS2w&eurl=http%3A%2F%2Fwhatmenaresaying%2Eblogspot%2Ecom%2F&feature=player_embedded

Deliberately Lying about Domestic Violence in Australia. Pt.1. (Three parts; 2 by Amfortas and one by Christian J)
http://soundcloud.com/amfortas1/amfortas-christian-j-lying-about-domestic-violence-part-1

The 'women's Safety Survey' was "uncorroborated, biased and manipulated" 'Advocacy research' orchestrated by the Office for the Status of Women and passed off as Bureau of Statistics report. It caused an enormous row, says MRA Amfortas. Manipulated definitions and hysterical claims copied from America made innocuous behaviour criminal. DV sells commercial products to women and expropriates public funds for the fastest growing 'Industry in Australia.

Deliberately Lying about Domestic Violence in Australia. Pt.2.

http://soundcloud.com/amfortas1/amfortas-christian-j-lying-about-domestic-violence-part-2

Three other sources of 'official' data which are routinely manipulated and presented to support DV lies are analysed by Amfortas and compared to Independent University research which completely contradicts the 'official message'."
It would be generous to think that this manipulation and bias was just the result of incompetence.
But as we can see there is something far darker behind it. It is corruption. It is deliberate."

Deliberately Lying about DV in Australia. Pt.3. The Truth is out there – Somewhere.
http://soundcloud.com/amfortas1/amfortas-christian-j-the-truth-is-out-there-somewhere

Christian J narrates how the 2006 Australian Bureau of Statistics Personal Safety Survey completely contradicted the Government's 1996 survey. He also points to the attempts by feminist bureaucrats to manipulate by having ONLY female interviewers to bias the results.
Results show women twice as safe as men. The Government has thrown a blanket of silence over it. Feminists maintain an undemocratic stranglehold, expropriating public monies for their anti-male 'Industry'.

The Degradation of Women – by feminism (By Amfortas) http://soundcloud.com/christian-j/amfortas-christian-j-vagina-monologues-the-degradation-of-women

"In textbook leftist style, feminist supporters of the play 'Vagina Monologues' cloak their attack on normal family values and morality under the guise of promoting awareness about violence against women.

One does not have to be a prude to see a weak excuse for pornographyand an anti-male agenda. But to disguise it as ‘awareness of abuse’, is an abuse of women’s minds and sensibilities.” Amfortas lauds Bridget Blanton for her stand and protests and against the glorification of lesbian rape of young girls.

The Wages of Spin (Pod by Amfortas. Also in video, see below))
http://soundcloud.com/christian-j/the-wages-of-spin

Amfortas narrates the analysis of Paul Elam of the Pay Gap Myth, showing the mendacious and partial statistics promoted by politicians to anger women for political advantage. Women’s choices are intelligent and nurturing while men not only work longer hours but take the dangerous jobs that pay more. Dr Warren Farrell’s early rationales are sustained.

Everyday Family Terrorism (Pod by Amfortas. Also in video. See below)

“When Momma ain’t Happy, Nobody’s Happy”.
http://soundcloud.com/christian-j/everyday-family-terrorism
Amfortas and Paul Elam show how domestic violence and a lot worse are often caused by ‘controlling’ women who are willing to destroy their families to have their own way. Dr Eric Berne’s ‘Games’ are described including the major cause of broken families, the “Let’s you and Him Fight” strategy which uses the Police and Family Courts.

Is Feminism a Hate Movement? (By Amfortas)
http://soundcloud.com/christian-j/is-feminism-a-hate-movement

Amfortas narrates MRA Fidelbogan’s well established, clear and logical analysis of the links between the spectrum of disaffection feelings that women have for men and the rise and sustenance of Feminism. This spectrum is lead from the top by hateful, sociopathic women and supported by ‘rent-seeking scum’ women in growing bureaucracies, who take immoral advantage.

Everyday Family Terrorism
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Th0yGBy73GA&eurl=http%3A%2F%2Fantimisandry%2Ecom%2Fmra%2Dyoutubers%2Fif%2Dmomma%2Daint%2Dhappy%2D20678%2Ehtml&feature=player_embedded

Paul Elam, Amfortas and Christian J show and tell of the damage done within families and society by intransigent people, in this instance Women, who are prepared to destroy their own families to get their own way. Erin Pizzey documented the effects of showing the Truth about violent women, for which she received Feminist death threats. Dr Eric Berne shows several 'Games' used including the 'let’s you and him fight' game so common today where cops and courts do the dirty work that leaves children unprotected.

The Pay Gap
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=rbYU0aeaX1o&eurl=http%3A%2F%2Fantimisandry%2Ecom%2Fmra%2Dyoutubers%2Fwages%2Dspin%2D20606%2Ehtml&feature=player_embedded Amfortas, Paul Elam and Christianj, examine the myth of the Pay Gap and show, name and shame the political women who lie to get the women's vote. Dr Warren Farrell demolished the mendacious claims but has been ignored by the media. Men do the dirty, dangerous work which pays well while women exercise choices that are more nurturing and 'safe'. The glass ceiling does not exist but the glass cellar does.
Excellent video production by Paul Elam.

UK: Woman charged with false rape allegation

anthony · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A WOMAN appeared in court accused of making a false allegation that a man raped a child.

Anne Chambers told police she witnessed the offence in a park, Durham Crown Court heard.

She later withdrew the allegation, but not before the man had been arrested and kept in custody for two days.

Chambers, 33, of Sixth Street, Horden, County Durham, pleaded not guilty to perverting the course of justice in February this year.

Judge Esmond Faulks ordered the trial to take place on a day to be fixed in the first week of September.

Chambers was bailed on condition she live at home, and attend court for trial when called upon to do so.'

Current interests help boys find relevance in literacy

anthony · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Finding tie-ins between what young men enjoy doing outside of school and activities involving reading and writing is one way to engage boys and help them find relevance in literacy. The provincial Department of Education hosted a two-day summer workshop Thursday, July 30 and Friday, July 31 entitled “Reading Don’t Fix No Chevys” at the Old Orchard Inn in Greenwich as part of the Summer Institute on Literacy. Workshop leader Michael Smith, co-author of Reading Don’t Fix No Chevys: Literacy in the Lives of Young Men and professor at Temple University in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, said boys are underperforming girls in reading and writing all over the world.'

Mom accused of locking up son had prior arrest

anthony · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOWELL, Mass. — A Massachusetts woman charged with locking her 3-year-old son in a filthy, sweltering attic had been arrested previously for assault and battery with a knife.

Kirsten Paquette, 27, was arraigned Friday on charges of reckless endangerment to a child and assault and battery on a child. She was held on $10,000 bail.'

UK: Girl death accused woman held in psychiatric unit

anthony · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman accused of drowning her four-year-old daughter in the bath has been moved to a psychiatric unit under the Mental Health Act, a court has heard.

Laura Fletcher, 22, was charged with murder after daughter Chloe was found dead at their home in Oakdale Avenue, Wallasey, Merseyside, on 29 April.'

Fairbanks woman accused of firing at man

anthony · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) - Fairbanks police arrested a 56-year-old woman accused of firing at a man outside her home.

The man told police he tried to intervene when he saw one woman beating another in the front yard early Thursday. The authorities say that prompted Christine Babich to go inside, fetch a pistol and shoot at the man who ran down the street and called for help.

The authorities arrived and established a boundary around the house. But police say Babich did not surrender until they got a search warrant and sent a remote-operated vehicle into the place.

Babich is charged with assault.'

Woman Accused of Sex with Minor

anthony · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Santa Barbara woman has been arrested on 11 felony counts of sexual misconduct with a minor--a boy who was friends with her son.

Genise Schu, 47, has allegedly had a roughly seven-year sexual relationship with the now-20-year-old victim, according to authorities.

The relationship began when the alleged victim was 13 years old and would spend the night at the home of one of his classmates, her son. At some point, allegedly, she showed him pornography while others were sleeping, and eventually orally copulated the boy and had sexual intercourse at least twice. Since then the two have allegedly had consensual sex hundreds of times during the relationship, according to a declaration from Santa Barbara police officer Corina Terrence.'

Woman accused of stabbing boyfriend

anthony · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A city woman is accused of stabbing her boyfriend in the hand during a spat, causing minor injury, police said.

Marta Griffin, 36, of 7 Fairmount St., was arrested shortly after the incident, which took place around 11:20 a.m. Tuesday, police said. She faces felony, domestic violence charges of first-degree assault and criminal threatening.

Her boyfriend was treated at the scene by medical personnel, police said.'

Woman Accused Of Branding Foster Son, 9

anthony · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Investigators said that earlier this month, Jocelyn Louis, 72, heated up a potato masher and used it to burn the boy on his arms and legs. Police said the foster mother did not stop even after the first series of burns.

"He goes back to his bedroom, starts to cry. She comes back and says, 'I'm not finished with you yet,' and does it again," said Midwest City Police Chief Brandon Clabes.

Police in Midwest City are awaiting arrest warrants on Louis before they take her into custody.'

Woman accused of beating legally blind man

anthony · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WEBSTER — A woman allegedly assaulted and beat her legally blind neighbor, for whom she had been organizing mail and finances.

Annette L. Gray, 48, of 112 Main St., Apt. 1, is charged with armed assault in a dwelling, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (blunt object) and permitting injury to an elder/disabled.

She pleaded not guilty yesterday in front of Judge Robert G. Harbour in Dudley District Court. She released on $2,500 cash bail and was ordered to stay away from the alleged victim. A pretrial hearing is slated for Sept. 3. Shortly aftter midnight yesterday, police went to Matte's Hardware on Main Street on the report of a man screaming for help. The man is legally blind and receives Social Security disability, police said.'

North Augusta Woman Arrested After Trying To Kill Her Kids

anthony · 31 July 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'North Augusta, SC—29-year-old Melissa Sawyers will not see her children, Thursday night.

Jamie Corbett, friend: “She’s somebody who was crying out for help, and this was her last cry for help.“

North Augusta Public Safety Officers say, Monday night, Sawyers put her 7-year-old son and 11-year-old daughter into her car, then ran a garden hose from the tail pipe, into the car. Sawyers got inside and started driving.
...
Corbett: “She’s been struggling a little bit in her life, and situations people can’t handle certain situations and unfortunately this is how it ended up.“'

'How could a mother eat her own baby?': Answer: It's her baby-daddy's fault

Matt · 1 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Keep your barf-bucket handy. Excerpt:

'The case of Otty Sanchez is shocking and gruesome. But it's also a cautionary tale about how we treat new mothers ...
How is it that Buchholz has known Sanchez for six years, lived with her, and had a baby with her, as the AP reports, but professes to be unaware until last week that she had been diagnosed as schizophrenic?

Since Buchholz himself is schizophrenic, currently on a six-drug daily regimen, this does not seem like something Sanchez would be too embarrassed to share with him. Maybe she did mention it, but he forgot? Or perhaps he was in denial, dismissing her behavior as "baby blues" or simple "bitchiness"?'

Men's Health SA Media Watch Report

Matt · 1 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Greg Andersen via email: In November 2007, I was contracted by Men's Health SA (at that time the South Australian Men's Health Alliance - SAMHA) to conduct a one-day-a-week Media Watch role on behalf of SAMHA and its collaborative partners, the Men's Health Information & Resource Centre and the Australasian Men's Health Forum. This role was to involve the critique, analysis and, when appropriate, challenging of mass media statements and commentary and other forms of institutional, academic and government literature and media that:

- depicted men or boys or masculinity in an unfair, negative or disparaging way
- were misleading, inaccurate, or prejudicial towards men and boys
- detracted from a general positive affirmation of men, boys, and masculinity
- undermined the endeavour to approach men and boy's health and issues in an intelligent, respectful, positive, equitable and constructive way.

I have just put together a report on my Media Watch role over the past 18 months which you might find interesting or useful. It can be downloaded from:

http://www.menshealthaustralia.net/files/MHSA_Media_Watch_Report_July_2009.pdf

Harriet Harman: you can’t trust men in power

Mr VanHuizen · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HARRIET HARMAN has demanded that one of Labour’s two top posts should always be held by a woman — because she believes men cannot be trusted to run organisations on their own.

Labour’s deputy leader secretly tried to change party rules two years ago to ensure that it could never again be led by an all-male team, but she was foiled.

In an interview with The Sunday Times, Harman reiterates her belief in the principle and says her role as Gordon Brown’s second-in-command has changed for ever the way the party will be run.

“I don’t agree with all-male leaderships,” she said. “Men cannot be left to run things on their own. I think it’s a thoroughly bad thing to have a men-only leadership.”'

Domestic violence knows no barrier

webdigr · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Carthage: How did a handsome, seemingly happily married and former all-star football player such as Steve McNair become a victim and statistic of domestic violence?

Many people would say McNair was not a victim, but someone who was in an extramarital relationship, a choice that resulted in deadly consequences. No matter how you want to view the situation, his death July 4 was ruled a homicide, allegedly committed by Saleh Kazemi, who then committed suicide. Both McNair and Kazemi are domestic violence victims.

...

Men are increasingly becoming victims of domestic violence in North Carolina... Of the 47 domestic violence victims so far this year in North Carolina, 13 are males. Of 103 victims in 2008, 20 were males, and in 2007 another 20 males were killed out of 86 murders.

...

Since they do not conform to the stereotypical male image, men often hide the fact that they are victims of domestic violence because they know they may become the brunt of jokes and ridicule.'

'The Pattern of Fetal Ripping'

anthony · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I do not want to frighten pregnant women into believing that this pattern shows that they should be afraid of other women, at least not more than pregnant women should be afraid of men. I do understand that the pattern of feminism has veered into such a paradigm that men are violent and women are not that Erin Pizzey and Susan Steinmetz were both marginalized and vilified by feminists for claiming that a particular type of violent crime—domestic violence—is not a male-caused crime, but one in which women can be guilty as often as men. Perhaps more discussion of fetal-ripping can help us open up the broader discussion about how all women who become violent criminals do so through choice, just like all men who become violent criminals, and this will help clear the air on the entire discussion of gender and violence.'

Domestic Violence 101: The personal vs. the political Part 3

anthony · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Meanwhile, the laws in place allow total strangers to decide for women what their fate will be. There has recently been a media campaign in my area and others urging people to turn in their neighbors, friends, and relatives if they suspect domestic violence. A neighbor, hearing noise from a nearby house can phone police about suspected "domestic violence," and regardless of the facts, set in motion an unstoppable sequence of events that may well be to the detriment of the family involved. Advocates have imposed a set of ever-more Draconian laws, and in their arrogance a sexist and bigoted belief system on people who are vulnerable, in pain, and in need of realistic methods to help them cope with their problem. In some cases, a problem has been created where none existed before.
...
The "experts" on domestic violence are backpedaling furiously, engaging in all kinds of linguistic acrobatics claiming that women only use violence to defend themselves, and/or are given no choice but to use force by their designated batterer. There is now a movement afoot for laws that make it harder to arrest women for anything, so watch for bills to be quietly introduced in local, state or even federal legislatures that appear to be for the purposes of assisting battered women.'

S. Africa: Funds no longer for 'poor, white girls' only

anthony · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A multimillion-rand educational trust bequeathed by the industrialist and politician Sir Charles George Smith - for the benefit of "European girls born of British/South African or Dutch/South African parents" - will now benefit young women of all races.

This is after the University of KwaZulu-Natal, which manages the trust, applied successfully to the High Court to amend Sir Charles's will, saying that the bequest was an "embarrassment" and could expose it to Equality Court proceedings.
...
"More than half of the students attending the university now cannot be classified as white. In addition, the university has policies that are non-discriminatory."'

UK: Girls 13 Boys 0: Testing reveals gender gap in basic skills

anthony · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Girls are racing ahead of boys in a whole range of skills, from reading and writing to showing the ability to concentrate before they even start their first day of school. An analysis of the basic assessments carried out on every four-year-old before they start compulsory schooling shows a 20 percentage point gap already emerging in writing ability, with 74 per cent of girls able to use writing for a variety of purposes, compared with just 54 per cent of boys.

For the first time, the Government has published a gender breakdown of boys' and girls' results in the 117 different point scores they can achieve in the assessments. It reveals that boys perform better than girls in only three of the 117 points. They top the scale for mathematical development – attained by 7 per cent of boys and 6 per cent of girls – and are better at getting to grips with new technology and at building and constructing objects. In every other area of the curriculum, however, girls are either streets ahead or equal to boys.'

D.C. mother guilty of slaying four girls

anthony · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON - A D.C. Superior Court judge found Banita Jacks guilty yesterday of killing her four daughters in a case that shook the nation for its cruelty.

Judge Frederick Weisberg convicted Jacks on four counts of felony murder of the girls, whose decomposed bodies were found inside their home in January 2008. Weisberg also found Jacks guilty of first-degree premeditated murder in the deaths of the three youngest girls -Tatianna Jacks, 11, N'Kiah Fogle, 6, and Aja Fogle, 5 - but acquitted her of premeditated murder in the killing of Brittany Jacks, 16. The mother also was found guilty on lesser charges, including child cruelty. She probably will spend the rest of her life in prison.

Weisberg said the case was "a very lonely assignment and one of the most challenging and difficult" he has had during his 32 years on the bench.'

MND: 'A Letter to Women'

anthony · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you take an honest look at the academic environment to which our boys are subjected, you will see that their masculinity itself is under attack with ideology that teaches them they are inherently flawed.

Christina Hoff Sommers documented this in her highly recommended book “The War Against Boys.” She writes, “The pedagogy is designed to valorize females, such as teaching history in a woman-centered way. Boys are to be inspired to revere Anita Hill and to “enjoy” quilting. At the same time, schools discourage activities that are natural and traditional to boys, such as playing ball together.”

She goes on to say, with sad but pinpoint accuracy, “Most parents have no idea what their children are facing in the gender-charged atmosphere of the public schools.”

What Sommers didn’t add to that but I will is the fact that most parents have no idea about this because they choose not to.'

Feministing: 'Emotionally Abusive Women'

anthony · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My father is in an emotionally abusive relationship. I don't know how this directly correlates with feminism, but I believe all victims of abuse, including men, should be addressed in the feminist dialogue. I am in need of some advice or feedback—my family and I are currently going through a very difficult situation and I have found Feministing discussions to be always helpful and engaging.
...
Her out-of-control rages usually end up in her crying and seeking the comfort and sympathy of my father's family. She would say things like, "How dare he treat someone as beautiful as me like that?" or "He doesn't deserve me! I am a perfect person". No matter how much we try to rationalize with her, she would place all the blame on my father and make herself out to be the victim. ...
...
Being a feminist, I tend to think of "abuse" in terms of domestic and emotional violence perpetrated by men toward women. But recent events shaping in my family have enlightened me to the fact that spousal abuse by women is entirely possible. And that the situation is incredibly delicate, but I fear for my father's health and his mental well-being. He wants to keep this all from me, but it is clear that I have witnessed it myself.'

4 children taken from ‘inhuman’ home

Matt · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOWELL - Police investigating an anonymous tip Thursday discovered a naked 5-year-old boy, covered in feces, locked in an attic where the only window was nailed shut and the temperature had climbed above 100 degrees, police said.

The boy’s mother, 27-year-old Kristin Paquette, whose second-floor apartment was buried in so much trash that officers could not see the hallway floor, told police she locked the boy in an attic bedroom because she could not control him and he would “interrupt [her] cleaning,” according to a police report.

The boy’s 6-year-old brother told police that his sibling “was bad, so mommy put him upstairs,” something that happens “a lot,” the report says. And Paquette’s children told police, “Mommy does this when she gets angry,” prosecutor Dan Harren told a judge yesterday during her arraignment in Lowell District Court.'

Radio Show: "The Canadian Special" to air in US, UK, Canada, Australia

Matt · 2 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Full announcement here. Excerpt:

'This week we look at the struggle for family law reform in Canada, the home of some of the world's most extreme anti-male anti-father legislation. Recently Dads On The Air interviewed Canadian MP Maurice Vellacot, who has introduced shared parenting legislation into the Canadian parliament. This week we follow on from that interview by talking with the highly experienced family lawyer Karen Selick, who has been an outspoken proponent for reform of the system; Roger Gallaway MP, who co-chaired an inquiry into shared parenting in Canada and Jeffrey Asher, a professor men's studies who taught the last men's course in the country.'

Show times:
Dads On The Air
Tuesday 4 August 2009 10.30am-12.00 2GLF FM 89.3 and ONLINE

Local Sydney Time: 10.30am to 12 midday Tuesday 4th August 2009
USA Eastern time: 8.30pm to 10pm Monday 3rd August 2009
USA Pacific time: 5.30pm to 7pm Monday 3rd August 2009
UK GMT time: 12.30am to 2am Monday night (Tuesday morning) 3rd August 2009

Listen live on 2GLF 89.3FM in Sydney or online via live streaming at www.893fm.com.au/On-Air or in MP3 format at www.dadsontheair.net

'Why are boys failing?'

anthony · 3 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GRAND MEADOW — In Grand Meadow Public Schools this year, 10 of its 13 grades will have a male majority.

And those boys are falling behind.

In a move seldom seen in modern day classrooms, the district is trying to address boys' underachievement by teaching the way they believe boys should be taught: separate from girls.

Four seventh and eighth grade classes — art, vocal music, industrial technology and physical education — will be completely gender-segregated this fall.
...
Sax addresses five factors contributing to the decline of boys' performance in school: video games; changing teaching methods; prescription drugs, such as those for attention-deficit/hyperactivity disorder; endocrine disruptors, including chemicals found in plastic bottles that may lower testosterone levels; and devaluation of masculinity.'

UK: 'Just because they're women, doesn't mean they're any good'

anthony · 3 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the interesting questions that feminism turned up was whether sex was the bit of your identity that trumped the rest: class, religion, nationality. Actually, if you dig out a dusty copy of The Female Eunuch, you'll find that many Seventies feminists were anti-capitalist, but even so, one of the prevailing assumptions of the women's movement (pre-Thatcher) was that Team Woman was what you supported as a woman, almost regardless of how you felt about its members.

That whole mindset seems mildly quaint now, but it has been given a detox by Harriet Harman, Labour's Deputy Leader. She says in an interview that voters are fed up with "boys running the show". Two years ago, she tried to ensure that, in the Labour Party, either the leader or deputy leader would be a woman'

U.S.A.: Autism Affects 1 In Every 94 Boys

anthony · 3 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It seems everyone everywhere not only has a theory about what causes autism, they've got a therapy, behavior modification, remedy or some other deprogramming technique borne of an urgent demand for normalcy that is all too readily fulfilled by the multi-million dollar autism industry. But what if everyone caught up in battling and defeating autism called a truce? What if autism became the new norm?

If you think it preposterous, consider that, in the United States alone, autism affects one in every 150 children and one in 94 boys. But autism is not an American phenomenon, and statistics in other countries are actually narrower. It has been projected that, at the rate we're going, by the year 2035 most of our world's population will be autistic.'

NY Times Opinion: Do Women Make Better Bosses?

anthony · 3 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Do “female bosses tend to be better managers, better advisers, mentors, rational thinkers”?

That is the view of Carol Smith, the senior vice president and chief brand officer for the Elle Group, expressed in a short interview published inside The Times’s business section a week ago Sunday. Ms. Smith also said that male bosses “love to hear themselves talk” and that in some previous jobs she purposely arrived late to meetings so she could miss the men’s conversations about golf and football.'

Reverse racism, sexism will not bring about social justice

anthony · 3 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We have made great progress in America to move closer toward realizing the ideals of our Declaration of Independence, but many obstacles remain in creating a more perfect union. Yet, to overcome these challenges, should we participate in the same discriminatory practices of those who sought to keep us down, or do we work diligently and courageously to make our country a better place for all people? Is the goal of social justice even possible if we erode the pillars of justice for others? Are we not abating the equality of all people when practicing reverse racism and sexism? For many progressive-socialists, reverse discrimination is viewed as an acceptable remedy for a society which they believe is inherently unequal.'

UK: "Women's refuge closed by 'politically correct' council as it does not cater for abused men"

Matt · 3 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Supporters of a women's refuge were 'shocked and stunned' to be told it is being closed - because it does not cater for men.

The emergency shelter was set up 13 years ago for women and children and adult males are not allowed to stay.

But council officials have now ruled that, because it does not serve both sexes equally, the money used to run the home would be better spent on an 'outreach service' to help battered husbands as well as wives in their own homes.
...
Anthony Wilsdon, spokesman for Supporting People, said the new outreach service would help more people. He said: 'We have identified a need to support more people in their own homes.

'There is also a need to make support open to male victims and families with older male children.'"

4 Scorned Wisconsin Women Tie Up, Assault Married Ex-Lover, Police Say

anthony · 3 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'STOCKBRIDGE, Wis. — Four Wisconsin women are accused of tying up and assaulting a married man after allegedly finding out he was romantically involved with each of them.

The women are each charged with being party to false imprisonment, a felony with a maximum prison term of six years. One is charged with fourth-degree sexual assault.

Calumet County prosecutors say 48-year-old Therese A. Ziemann of Menasha lured the man to a Stockbridge motel last Thursday. Prosecutors say she was soon joined by 43-year-old Michelle Belliveau of Neenah; 43-year-old Wendy L. Sewell of Kaukauna; and the man's wife.

Authorities say Ziemann punched the man in the face and glued his penis to his stomach.

The Associated Press is not naming the victim's wife to protect the man's identity as a victim of sexual assault.

The women are free on $200 cash bails.'

Video here. The broadcasters had a lot of fun with this story. One of the female announcers believe the man should be prosecuted because adultery is illegal in Wisconsin.

The Root: "White women are the real winners of affirmative action"

fibtastic · 4 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Interesting take. I've always thought that feminism's biggest success was in hijacking the civil rights movement. All of the justice that should have flowed to historically discriminated against minorities has instead flowed to the most privileged class of people to ever walk the earth, white women. And yet watch the Lifetime Channel sometime. In all of those civil rights period dramas the white woman is portrayed as the sympathetic friend of the black man, all responsibility for racism is pinned her cold, monstrous White Male husband. Excerpt:

'Last Sunday, veteran Washington Post journalist Juan Williams and conservative author Shelby Steele wrote two opposing op-eds on the pending death of affirmative action. Williams opined that Justice Sandra Day O'Connor was too optimistic when she predicted that affirmative action, born with the Civil Rights Act of 1964, had at most 25 more years to live. And Steele argued that persistent racial inequality today between whites and African Americans is primarily a result of black underdevelopment rather than racism. I think they both missed the mark.

For all of Pat Buchanan's angry bluster and "white men built this country" rhetoric, he too misses the glaring but often unspoken truth about affirmative action: that white American women have been the biggest beneficiaries of so-called minority preferences.

All economic indicators, higher education admissions' practices, and corporate and law firm figures show that when it comes to leveling the playing field in the past 30 years, white women—not black men, black women or other persons of color—have gained the most ground.'

India: Harassed hubbies club to seek freedom

webdigr · 4 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On Independence Day, a group of men will meet in Shimla and make a plan for "freedom" from "harassment" by their wives.

"On Independence Day, we will raise the issue of freedom and dignity of harassed husbands. More than 100 men, representatives of 30,000 other harassed husbands from across the country, will converge at a day-long meeting to come up with strategies to take on their wives," Anil Kumar, president of the Save Indian Family Foundation (SIFF), told IANS.

...

The suicide figures were collected by SIFF from the National Crime Records Bureau. "This is an alarming number. Our fight is against such wives and for justice to the harassed husbands. In fact, husbands committing suicide because of harassment is double the number of wives committing suicide in the country," the founder of CRISP said.'

MSN: 'No One Believed Me'

anthony · 4 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Four Sacramento County Sheriff's cars pulled up in front of David Woods's house. He tried to explain to them what happened. But the lead deputy cut him off: "Yeah, that's fine. Put your hands behind your back."

David said, "No, wait, she stabbed me ... there's the knife. See the knife? See my neck wound? See?"

"Put your hands behind your back. Turn around," the deputy replied.

"No," David protested. "She stabbed..."

The deputies drew their weapons. David's little daughters came running out of the back bedroom pleading, "Leave Daddy alone! Mamma tried to hurt him with a knife!"

One deputy, a woman, took the children in the bedroom and shut the door. David stood there, cuffed.'

UK: 'Why Harriet Harman is right to call for more women in power'

anthony · 4 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If Harriet Harman will have achieved anything during her two-week stint in charge of the government, it will be this: she has already increased women's visibility in politics. Her own, especially. There she was at the weekend, on the front page of the Sunday Times, in a news story with the screaming headline "You can't trust men in power". And then again, yesterday, on the cover of London's Evening Standard, beneath the no less incendiary header "Woman running Britain says . . . banks crisis is down to men".

All of which could lead innocent souls to believe that Harman has spent the fortnight going after the patriarchy with all guns – or should I say, all bras – blazing. And she has still got a few days to go. Hurrah! The reality is slightly more muted. At no point in her Sunday Times interview did Harman actually say that she didn't trust men. Instead, she suggested that "men cannot be left to run things on their own . . . In a country where women regard themselves as equal, they are not prepared to see men just running the show themselves." Seems straightforward. And that tone is echoed in the Standard, where she is quoted saying that "women make up half the workforce of insurance companies and banks. Why shouldn't they have a say on the boards as well?"'

Womenomics: Write Your Own Rules for Success

anthony · 4 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First, for all the talk about opting out, "most educated women don't want to quit work altogether, even if they could," Shipman and Kay write. "We want to use our brains and be productive professionally." On the other hand, there's plenty of evidence that many women don't want to adopt the more traditional 9-5 male model of work either. While these two desires may have been in conflict in the past, these days, "women top every company's most wanted list." Companies with a high proportion of women executives tend to post better results, and as women earn a higher proportion of college and professional degrees, any company that wants to tap women's talents will have to change how it does business. Shipman and Kay call this new power "Womenomics," and their book documents what it means on a corporate level, and for individual women who wish to negotiate new working arrangements.'

On YouTube: 'Get a New Daddy'

anthony · 4 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This is a disturbing song which tells children a false molestation accusation is a good way to get rid of a father and get a 'new daddy'. It's received close to 800,000 views.

NY police: Wrong-way crash driver was drunk, high

Matt · 5 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GARDEN CITY, N.Y. – A mother drank vodka and smoked marijuana while taking a vanload of children home from a weekend camping trip that ended in disaster when she went the wrong way on a highway and crashed into an SUV, killing eight people, police said Tuesday.

Diane Schuler, who died along with her 2-year-old daughter and three nieces in her red minivan, had more than 10 drinks of alcohol in her system and a high level of the main ingredient in marijuana, authorities said. A broken 1.75-liter bottle of Absolut vodka was found in her wrecked minivan, police said.

The revelations from the 36-year-old Long Island woman's autopsy helped explain how the woman her family called "an accomplished working mother who always put her children before any other priorities" wound up driving the wrong way for nearly two miles on a suburban parkway before slamming into the SUV.'

CNN Video: Mom Arrested For Dragging Son On A Leash

anthony · 5 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Caption:

'A mom is arrested after dragging her son through a store on a leash. Did she go too far? Prime News reports.'

Lessons about wife-beating at five: In the week Harriet Harman takes charge, yet another feminist initiative

anthony · 5 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pupils as young as five will be taught about the evils of 'wife beating' and the need to form healthy relationships.

The lessons are part of a controversial drive, unveiled today, to reduce violence against women and young girls.

They will include teaching boys that they must not beat their partners or any other female.

...

This is despite evidence showing that boys and young men are more than twice as likely to fall victim to violence, and that young women are becoming increasingly aggressive.

...

She added: 'It is young men who are most likely to be the victims of violent crime. It is a distortion to suggest otherwise. It appears that everything must be viewed through the prism of 1960s feminism.'

...

It came as the Government prepared to announce the introduction of new Violent Offender Orders for wife beaters and other violent thugs being released from jail.

The thugs will be forced to sign a violent offenders' equivalent of the Sex Offender Register, and could face five years in jail if they do not keep the police informed of any changes to their address, or break any other terms of the order.'

BBC: Harman in the spotlight

anthony · 5 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman has been making headlines which will have troubled many of her male colleagues in government - not to mention the male population at large.
...
The overall theme suggested by some papers is that Harriet Harman is using her time standing-in for the holidaying Gordon Brown to promote her own "feminist agenda".

The other suggestion is that Ms Harman is using her stint as "temporary PM" to flag-up her credentials in preparation for a tilt at the "top job".
...
Harriet Harman once joked that if she became prime minister "there wouldn't be enough airports for all the men who would want to flee the country".

UK Times: Harriet Harman's rabid nonsense that has no regard for real needs

anthony · 5 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All-women shortlists have brought more females into the Commons, but not improved its performance. Of course, it should be illegal to promote only on the basis of colour, religion, or gender — and it is. Certainly much better than 40 years ago, when I needed a man's signature to open a bank account. But we long since got to that point, and beyond. What's upsetting is the gap between Harriet's priorities and the nation's real needs. Here we are, struggling with the mother and father of all recessions, with the worst government deficit and national debt in recorded history, in which everyone is desperately trying to hang on to their jobs and pay the mortgage. Then there's the war in Afghanistan and the terrible toll of young soldiers sent to fight it.

So Harriet is not only barking up the wrong tree, she is making the Government look even more irrelevant than it is. Her obsessions are those of an over-educated, well-off, middle-class woman who has no worries about where her money is coming from: our pockets, of course. She should go and talk to real working women, or a mother whose school-age children carry knives for protection, or elderly women scared of contracting MRSA in hospital, or the mother of a young rifleman going to Helmand. Then tell them that she, Harriet, should be running the country.'

Harriet Harman digs in her heels to demand tougher rape law

anthony · 5 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman has vetoed a review of the rape laws at the eleventh hour, complaining that the proposals fail to address the concerns of women.

Labour's deputy leader used her position as Gordon Brown's stand-in to demand a more radical overhaul of the law, such as targets for prosecutors and police to secure more convictions. She has the backing of Vera Baird, the Solicitor-General, but Jack Straw, the Justice Secretary and Alan Johnson, the Home Secretary, do not want to widen the terms of reference and the review has been postponed.
...
The review was to be announced today to coincide with the publication of an audit of the Government's plans to tackle violence against women. Two reviews are to report next month. One looks at links between the sexualisation of girls and violence; the other at whether police need more powers to control offenders who move from one abusive relationship to another.Ministers are also planning to make it a compulsory part of the national curriculum that children are taught about healthy non-violent relationships.'

UK: Seven days of feminist fantasies

anthony · 5 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman has been acting Prime Minister for only a week, but in those seven days she's unleashed a veritable blitzkrieg against the male sex.

Today we report that, to the fury of the Justice Department, she's been trying to grab the limelight in a move to make the law on rape even tougher towards men.

On the same day, she's almost certainly used her influence to force the Home Office to conclude that the most serious crime problem facing Britain is the threat to young women, despite statistics showing that young men are the most likely victims of crime.

Scarce resources are being diverted to silly ideas like compulsory lessons in domestic violence.

On Monday, she opined that if Lehman Brothers had been Lehman Sisters it wouldn't have gone broke.'

RADAR ALERT: NJ Appellate Division Overturns Crespo

Matt · 5 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Crespo vs. Crespo – the case that gave new hope to anyone who was ever hit with an unwarranted domestic violence restraining order - was back in the spotlight as the New Jersey Court of Appeals overturned a lower court decision that vacated a final restraining order (FRO) against defendant Anibal Crespo.

For those unfamiliar with judicial standards of proof, there are three levels:

- Beyond a reasonable doubt - the one you were taught about in grade school. This is the highest level of proof, used only in criminal cases. Restraining orders are tried as civil cases to allow the state to impose sanctions without having to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.
- Clear and convincing evidence - an intermediate level of proof. The evidence must show that it's substantially more likely than not that the accusations are true.
- Preponderance of the evidence - the very lowest level of proof. The evidence must show only that it's slightly more likely than not that the accusations are true. If there's a 49% chance that the accusations are false, the accused will still have a restraining order issued against him. Combined with the enormous pressures on judges to err on the side of hidden harm, use of this standard virtually guarantees that restraining orders will be issued gainst a significant number of innocent men.

On June 18, 2008, the Honorable Francis Schultz's ruling made the criteria for a FRO to be "clear and convincing evidence" rather than a "preponderance of the evidence." The landmark ruling was expected to set the stage for unwarranted restraining orders to be vacated and prevent future unwarranted orders from being granted. But that ruling was overturned recently by the state's Appellate Division.

David Heleniak, Anibel Crespo's attorney, said that while it is a disappointing turn of events, people shouldn't give up hope. "The Appellate Division ruled against Mr. Crespo, but they are not the final word on constitutionality in New Jersey," he said.

Heleniak is working on taking the Crespo case to the New Jersey Supreme Court. You can read his brief requesting the court take the case at http://www.mediaradar.org/docs/crespo_petition_for_cert.pdf.

In addition, he has another FRO case that could also end up in the hands of the State's highest court. The two-wave approach will make it more likely that the New Jersey Supreme Court will finally address the constitutional issues regarding domestic violence restraining orders.

Please stay updated on this groundbreaking effort and pass the information along to anyone who you think would benefit or make a difference.

Thanks for your help getting our message out.

++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++
Date of RADAR Release: August 4, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/.

Harriet Harman: In charge, but so out of touch

anthony · 5 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Topics of national and international import – the swine flu pandemic, doctors' hours, bankers' bonuses, war in Afghanistan, turbulence in Iran – are of no concern to the woman in charge while Gordon chews his nails in a sodden Lake District and rues the political necessity of having to take a holiday at home. Instead, Miss Harman's fixation with "equality" continues – although her ranting has taken on a disturbing shrillness reminiscent of the "all men are rapists" school of feminism.

...

There is no question that Miss Harman has her eye on a forthcoming vacancy. But she may come to regret her outburst this week. It has alienated a majority of women, who know, instinctively or through experience, that without merit there can never be a meritocracy.'

"He probably deserved it"

el cid · 6 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The story of a woman who apparently killed her husband (John Housman) in Boulder, Colorado affirms what has become our cultural norm: if a woman kills a man, he must have deserved it.

The Denver Post called the murder a tragedy. The Boulder Daily Camera has now run two stories, including this one, describing Housman's various past sins, including the contents of an e-mail from an ex-wife who assures us the killer must have acted in self-defense. The murder victim apparently had a bad temper, was ticketed was for DV, and harassed a former landlord.

It's difficult to imagine any newspaper running a story that suggests, implies, hints that a murdered woman deserved to die. But the BDC has now run two suggesting Housman deserved to die. Excerpt:

'BOULDER, Colo. — Nine years ago, in the throes of a divorce, John Housman — then 32 — was ticketed for domestic violence after threatening to kill his wife and “bash” her face in, according to a Boulder police report made public Wednesday.

Now, detectives are talking with friends and family members to find out whether Housman and his fourth wife, Traci, had a history of domestic violence, said police spokeswoman Sarah Huntley.

John Housman, 41, was found dead in his home at 2994 23rd St. in Boulder early Sunday after Traci Housman, 36, called 911 to report that she had stabbed him, according to police. She was arrested on suspicion of second-degree murder.'

Wife's Successful Hitman Attempt on Hubby a Hoax

Matt · 6 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There is acting and then there is the Academy Award-worthy performance put on by Dalia Dippolito on Wednesday morning after cops told her that her newly wed husband had been murdered.

A second after the words were uttered by Boynton Beach police, Dippolito broke down in tears and hysterical screams at the thought of her beloved husband leaving this earth. Her townhouse was surrounded by detectives and crime scene investigators.

...

Turns out Dippolito had hired a hitman to kill her husband of only six months -- or so she thought he was a hitman. It turned out to be an undercover Boynton Beach cop.'

UK: "When feminism went nuts"

Michael · 6 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is Friday evening at Liverpool Street station, London, and while browsing commuters kill time in WH Smith before their trains, a dozen young women attack a stand of lads' magazines. Over the covers of Nuts, Zoo, GQ and Loaded — "50 Boobiest Blondes", "Summer's real breast fest" — they slip brown paper bags adorned with handwritten slogans: "Don't be Nuts — get this sexism out of my face", "Stop mainstreaming porn", "FHM: For Horrible Misogyny".

Soon the mags in bags cover a whole shop wall and the women, activists from the feminist group Object, pause exhilarated yet apprehensive, awaiting a response. Mostly people are puzzled. A few men sidle out of the shop. But when Object asks women to sign its petition, to have lads' mags reclassified as porn and displayed on top shelves, no one refuses. "I never feel comfortable when they're on the counter in a newsagent's," says one woman, clutching a copy of Grazia. Finally the store manager comes over and actually apologises. "I don't like selling them," he shrugs, "but it's company policy."'

'As Colleges Cut Athletics, Title IX Does an Injustice to Men'

anthony · 6 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With endowments shrinking, donations falling and operating budgets squeezed, colleges and universities face great pressure to cut costs. Athletic departments are an obvious target. But, troublingly, men's sports are disproportionately bearing the brunt.

This year, men's programs across the country have gotten the third-strike call: swimming and soccer at Kutztown University (Pa.); baseball at the University of Northern Iowa; football at Western Washington; wrestling at Delaware State, Portland State and Carson-Newman. MIT, which has one of the largest athletic departments in the nation, eliminated men's teams in gymnastics, ice hockey, golf, wrestling, alpine skiing and pistol.'

Mom accused of mutilating 5-week-old son

Proud_to_be_a_man · 6 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

HOUSTON, Aug. 6 (UPI) -- Jury selection began in Houston Thursday in the trial of a mother accused of cutting off her infant son's genitals and blaming the family dog.

Katherine Nadal, 28, said the dachshund did it when the boy was 5 weeks old on March 13, 2007.

Nadal tested positive for cocaine, methadone and a tranquilizer the day after the 2007 attack, a Child Protective Services spokeswoman said.

Investigators said they ruled out dog bites and accused the former Anahuac High School cheerleader of using a sharp instrument to remove his penis, The Houston Chronicle reported.

The boy's aunt, Patches DeShazo, who is caring for the child, said the toddler is recovering and still waiting for reconstructive surgery.

Nadal is in jail in lieu of $75,000 bail.'

Senate confirms Sotomayor for Supreme Court

Matt · 6 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – The Senate confirmed Sonia Sotomayor Thursday as the first Hispanic justice on the Supreme Court. The vote was 68-31 for Sotomayor, President Barack Obama's first high court nominee. She becomes the 111th justice and just the third woman to serve.

Democrats praised the 55-year-old Sotomayor as a mainstream moderate. But most Republicans voted against her, saying she'd bring personal bias and a liberal agenda to the bench.
...
The Republicans said that they might disagree with some of her rulings, statements or views, but that she was well-qualified to serve on the nation's highest court.
...
Like Democrats, many of them called Sotomayor's background inspirational. The daughter of Puerto Rican parents, she was raised in a South Bronx housing project, then educated in the Ivy League before rising to the highest legal echelons.'

Experts: Women are drinking more, DUIs are up

Matt · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

And we all know whose fault it is! Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK – It seemed too horrendous even to imagine. But the case of the mother who caused a deadly wrong-way crash while drunk and stoned is part of a disturbing trend: Women in the U.S. are drinking more, and drunken-driving arrests among women are rising rapidly while falling among men.

And some of those women, as in the New York case, are getting behind the wheel with kids in the back.

Men still drink more than women and are responsible for more drunken-driving cases. But the gap is narrowing, and among the reasons cited are that women are feeling greater pressures at work and home, they are driving more, and they are behaving more recklessly.

"Younger women feel more empowered, more equal to men, and have been beginning to exhibit the same uninhibited behaviors as men," said Chris Cochran of the California Office of Traffic Safety.'

Dalia Dipolito enjoys nymphotropic welcome home

Matt · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Why is she NOT in jail? Why are her neighbors sympathetic with her? Why do they think "he had it coming"? Answer: She's a girl! Excerpt:

'A judge has ordered Dailia Dipolito to stay at her parents house in the Boynton Beach Community of Nautica. By late Thursday night things finally quieted down. But that was not the case earlier Thursday when Dipolito arrived.
...
"I think it's pretty sad. It's really is pretty sad. You know when you think about it. But I think there's a lot more behind it that nobody knows about", said neighbor Jack Lynch.

Another neighbor, Barbara Lombardo tols us, "Hopefully she comes out O.K. With it. But she should have just divorced her husband, I don't know."

Mom in MySpace case can use Web again

Matt · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ST. LOUIS - A Missouri mother who was tried on accusations she was involved in a MySpace hoax directed at a 13-year-old girl who committed suicide has been told she can use the Internet again.

The lawyer for Lori Drew says she has been offered a job that requires her to use a computer and the Internet. A federal judge in California on Thursday modified Drew's bail so she can.

Drew was convicted last fall in the case where she was accused of illegally accessing a computer to harass a neighborhood teenager, Megan Meier. U.S. District Judge George Wu tentatively threw out convictions against Drew in July.'

NOW calls for every vacant seat on the Supreme Court to be filled by a woman until there are at least four

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women have every reason to be outraged about gender disparity on the Supreme Court. When Sotomayor joins Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg on the court this fall, women will occupy a whopping 22 percent of the bench. Sixteen years passed between the confirmations of Ginsburg and Sotomayor, and three men were elevated to the high court during that time. At that unacceptable rate, it could take decades, maybe even centuries, to achieve a gender balanced court. There's no excuse to wait for equality: NOW calls for every open seat on the Supreme Court to be filled by a woman until there are four, if not five women justices.'

John Abberley: Outdated feminist views are harming Harriet's reputation

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'AFTER a week with Harriet Harman in charge at Downing Street, I shudder to think what would happen if this arch-feminist was the real Prime Minister.

In a few days she has turned her guns on men in a way which not only reflects her obsession with sexual politics but suggests she is aiming to indoctrinate young children with her anti-male prejudices.

What else can you say when Ms Harman, pictured, comes up with the crackpot idea that lessons on the evils of wife-beating should be given to pupils at primary school?

Her central plank seems to be that men abuse women almost institutionally. We are a nation of wife-beaters and potential rapists. There could be one living next door to you.'

Harry Potter’s Magic: Getting Boys To Read More

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I’m not alone in this view. An entire conference was held on the subject recently at Shenandoah University, where children’s authors and illustrators met with about 300 teachers and librarians for advice on getting boys to read more, says a recent piece in Education Week. The gender gap is well-documented in national achievement-testing data showing boys trailing girls in reading skills by a significant margin. (The ad slogan for James Patterson’s and Ned Rust’s new young adult novel “Daniel X: Watch the Skies” is “OMG! My son is reading!”)

Among ideas presented at the conference: Boys need male role models who love to read, to encourage them to do the same, says Jon Scieszka, a children’s author. Mr. Scieszka, who runs the Guys Read Web site, says being able to tell a boy that “another guy read this book and liked it” may also work. Also, avoid deluging boys with too many choices. Instead, provide a small selection as a start, recommends Mr. Scieszka, a former elementary-school teacher and author of “The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs” and “Knucklehead,” as well as other books for preteens.'

UK: Labour imposes women-only lists in half seats left by retiring MPs

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Labour has imposed women-only shortlists on more than half of its seats left vacant by retiring MPs, an analysis by The Times shows.

Figures released by the party yesterday show that 24 of the 44 selections in seats won by Labour at the 2005 election are restricted to women. The proportion is expected to increase as dozens more Labour MPs quit before the next election.

Party officials complain that Harriet Harman is rigidly enforcing a policy that women should be fielded in half of winnable seats in each area. It means that local parties in areas where there are few sitting women Labour MPs are given little choice over selection as the party's high command tries to meet the quota.

Ms Harman, Labour's deputy leader, sits on a sub-committee of the National Executive Committee, which decides whether to allow an open selection or impose women-only shortlists. It is supposed to decide each seat case by case but is pushing through an increasing number of such contests.'

Domestic violence cuts both ways in Australia

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sydney - It's the emancipation of women: they drink and drive more than they used to, they get sent to prison more and, it seems, they batter their partners more. Women have always been perpetrators of domestic violence as well as victims. Figures from the Bureau of Crime Statistics and Research in Western Australia, the country's biggest state, show a 159-per-cent rise in women before the courts over the past eight years on charges stemming from violent arguments in the home.
...
"It's much harder for a man to actually admit that his wife is beating him up," she said. "They seem to regard it as a shameful issue. And a lot of police actually say to men 'What did you do to make your wife hit you?' or 'Can't you handle your missus?'"'

Aberdeen woman made false rape claim

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'AN ABERDEEN woman who sparked a major police investigation after she falsely accused her former partner of rape today apologised.

Elizabeth Christie, 30, told a detective at Aberdeen's Grampian Police Headquarters she had been raped by Angus Reid, known as Greig.

Mr Greig was investigated and ordered to appear at a preliminary hearing at the High Court in Aberdeen.

But the accusations against him were not true.

Christie admitted making the false claims when she appeared at Aberdeen Sheriff Court.

Christie today said she made the allegation after suffering a nervous breakdown.

She also said it was a "cry for help" to her family who she said don't speak to her.'

Mother spared jail in false rape claim

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A young Shropshire mother-of-three, who falsely claimed she had been raped by her partner, has been spared a jail term.

Kirsty Smith, 23, was given a suspended prison sentence yesterday after the court heard she had been involved in an abusive relationship.

Judge Robin Onions told Smith that custody was the normal sentence for this type of offence which undermined the cause of true rape victims.

...

In June, Smith, of Meadow Road, Newport, had admitted perverting the course of justice by making a false allegation of rape against Shane Chetwood in January last year when she was six months pregnant.

At Wolverhampton Crown Court yesterday, Smith was given 52 weeks in jail, suspended for two years, placed on supervision for a year and ordered to complete 150 hours unpaid work in the community.'

High school teachers arrested for 'having sex with' boys

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two female Jay High School teachers were arrested today on charges that they had sex in their homes with teenage boys in 2007.

Ashley Elenea Burkett, 31, and April Burford Watson, 33, both of Jay, were arrested Thursday afternoon, charged with having sexual relationships with minors. Both were released on $50,000 bond each after being booked into the Santa Rosa County Jail on three counts each of unlawful sexual activity with a minor, a second degree felony. Both were released on GPS monitors.'

Female Teacher Pleads Guilty to Rape of Middle School Student

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 27-year-old teacher pled guilty today to raping her 14-year-old student this past spring. Melissa Weber was a social studies teacher at M.S. 8, a middle school in Jamaica, Queens. According to the Queens D.A., the two had sexual intercourse in a second-floor classroom seven separate occasions between April and May. The D.A.'s office says that the two had intercourse between 3 and 6 p.m., which was during after-school hours, when other students remain on campus for activities.

The situation came to light when the boy's mother, who is a member of the PTA, was told that the teacher was engaging in an inappropriate relationship with her son. She checked her son's cell phone and found hundreds of text messages between Weber and the boy, including one in which Weber told him to "erase your phone.'"

Weber pled guilty to statutory rape, or rape in the second degree. She will have to register as sex offender and lose her teaching license.'

Marc Rudov: 'Obama’s Misandry Cineplex'

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Team Obama is, perhaps, the most-misandrist bunch ever running American government. Few are familiar with the term misandry: hatred of men. Ask your friends; you’ll get blank stares — because misandry is both accepted and acceptable in our culture, as TV sitcoms and commercials prove by endlessly featuring moronic husbands and fathers.

Employing the anti-male projections of Vice President Joe Biden and almost-confirmed US Supreme Court Justice Sonia Sototmayor, as well as his own, President Barack Obama is operating a veritable misandry cineplex at the White House.
...
Misandry exists in the streets, in entertainment, and in baseless and unconstitutional public policies, laws, and adjudications. But, to appear macho, men shrug it off. Don’t forget: Crystal Gail Mangum, the woman who falsely accused three Duke lacrosse players of rape, still walks this earth with impunity and freedom.'

"Why men in ads are dumb, goofy or completely inept "

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Silly men. You can't take them anywhere.

If they're not messing up your house, running into glass doors or trying in vain to outsmart an air freshener, you'll find them eating the inedible or falling down for no reason whatsoever.

At least, that's what some advertisers would have you believe. More and more marketers are trying to tap into the overwhelming buying power of wives and mothers at the expense of their other halves. Dads are dumb, boyfriends are bumbling and husbands are utterly hopeless as brands strive to relate to women by showing men as especially goofy or incompetent.

"They're applying that same formula every time you see an ad," said Deborah Adams, senior vice-president of Harbinger Communications, a consultancy firm that focuses on marketing to women. She's seen the trend rise over the years. "It's not just advertising, it's in pop culture, depicting men in a very narrow, stereotypical view."'

'Are we a ‘Fatherless’ Society?'

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'Research also shows that children with absent fathers are significantly more likely to drop out of high school (National Principals’ Association Report on the State of High Schools), and that children in single parent families are less likely than students living in intact families parents to have parents involved in their schools.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, children in father-absent homes are five times more likely to be poor. Additionally, when fathers are absent or uninvolved, mothers often experience more financial and emotional stresses, which may decrease their ability to parent effectively and lead to increased child abuse and neglect.

A father’s presence in the home can help protect his children from maltreatment. While many fathers also perpetrate child abuse, research shows that the rates of child maltreatment (neglect, physical and sexual abuse), among single-parent families is almost double the rate among two-parent families (U.S. Department of Health and Human Services).'

Woman's work is never done – as profitably as man's Broadsword · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"In an unhappy moment for the politically correct, the academics claim that their research shows that having more women in the boardroom can have "a negative effect on financial performance".

While companies with more women on their boards tend to have better corporate governance, they are less profitable and have a smaller market capitalisation, according to the paper.

Dr Daniel Ferreira, from LSE's Department of Management said: "This is a complicated picture. Our research shows that women directors are doing their jobs very well. But a tough board, with more monitoring, may not always be a good thing. Indeed, we see that increased monitoring can be counter-productive in well-governed companies."

The research comes just days after, Harriet Harman, Labour's deputy leader, repeated a quote about "Lehman Sisters, not Lehman Brothers" to warn that the lack of women in senior business roles was one of the reasons for the financial crisis.

Miss Harman, who is standing in for the Prime Minister while he is on holiday, wasn't available for comment yesterday.'

Husband starts divorce proceedings after foiled 'Hitman For Hire' plot

anthony · 7 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BOYNTON BEACH, FL -- While Dalia Dippolito was able to go home to her family's home, still in the sweat pants she was wearing while arrested, her husband Michael has avoided his house.

Trying to stay away from the media long enough to figure things out for himself.

"He remains in a state of shock. You're here this has become a national story, said attorney Jason Brody.

Michael spoke with his divorce attorney hours after his wife's caught on camera performance where police said her husband was dead.

And to no ones surprise, he's already begun the process of divorcing the woman who police say paid a hitman to have her husband murdered.'

Woman Sets Fire to Man's Genitals

Matt · 8 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Greek woman set fire to a British man's genitals at a club after he allegedly made sexual advances on her.

The unidentified woman is being praised by her hometown in Crete for what she did and for also turning herself in to police immediately after the alleged incident. She has been charged with causing bodily injury and endangering private property, according to the Telegraph.

Police said that the incident took place at a club in the Greek resort town of Malia. The British man, who police have also not yet identified, allegedly took off his pants there and waved his genitals at a number of girls. He is then said to have "forcefully fondled" the Greek woman and asked her to hold his genitals.

The woman asked the man to stop harassing her, police said, and when he didn't, she poured Sabucco, a liquor that resembles Greek ouzo, on his private area.

When the man continued his advances, police said that's when the woman set fire to his genitals using a lighter.'

Husband of Wrong-Way Crash Driver Probed

anthony · 8 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CBS/AP) Authorities are investigating the husband of the woman who was driving a minivan the wrong way on a parkway just north of New York City when it hit an SUV head-on late last month, killing herself and seven others, sources say.

Diane Schuler, 36, is dead, along with her 2-year-old daughter, three nieces aged 5, 7 and 8 and three men in the SUV. Her 5-year-old son survived the fiery crash.

CBS station WCBS-TV in New York says it's learned that Daniel Schuler "is himself now being investigated by Suffolk County (Long Island, site of the Schuler family home) Child Protective Services" who want to know "how much Schuler knew about his wife's drinking and marijuana use the day of the crash."'

UK: 'Statistical gender bending'

anthony · 8 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman's office is in trouble with the statistics watchdog again.

After ticking off the equality minister in June for using a figure which "risks giving a misleading quantification of the gender pay gap", the UK Statistics Authority is more than a little perturbed that a quango based in her office - the Women and Work Commission - went ahead and published the figure again just a few weeks later. The number was quoted across the British media - including the BBC.

The figure in question is 22.6 - the percentage that Ms Harman's department likes to suggest is the difference between the earnings of men and women. But the head of the UK Statistics Authority, Sir Michael Scholar, told the Government Equalities Office on 11 June that the figure should not be used, because to do so "may undermine public trust in official statistics".

UK: Why boys are now the true victims of discrimination

Matt · 8 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, in the "Femail" section, no less. Excerpt:

'As the mother of an only child, a son, I do not think I am exaggerating in saying that I detected something akin to sympathy when we announced that we had a boy.
...
Answering counter-claims that the introduction of GCSE and the continued relatively poor performance of boys is just a coincidence, the study points out that in research by the Organisation For Economic Co-operation And Development, where more than 13,000 15-year-olds sat what might be termed 'traditional' tests, girls scored better in reading, while boys achieved more correct answers in maths and science.

When the same pupils sat GCSEs, however, the girls did better in all subjects.
...
As someone who has benefitted enormously from the women's movement, I deplore the prospect of a generation of disadvantaged young men failing to reach their true potential and missing out on university and the chances it brings.
...
And if we continue to ignore the yawning gender achievement gap in our schools, then we will all suffer as a result.'

Sweden: Woman, 32, found guilty of raping woman, gets 'psychiatric care' from court

Matt · 9 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. File this under the many ways that feminism serves not only to persecute men but also leave women unprotected from each other. Excerpt:

'A 32-year-old woman has been found guilty of the rape of another woman by the Gothenburg District Court.

The court ordered for the 32-year-old to be cared for at secure psychiatric institution after a psychological evaluation found that she suffers from a serious psychiatric disorder.
...
"Female sex offenders are extremely rare. In the last ten years four women have been convicted of rape in Sweden. Any cases that come under investigation deal almost exclusively with children who are close [to the perpetrator] or rapes that also involve a man," Kwarnmark told newspaper Göteborgs-Posten.'

"Psychiatric care"..."Female sex offenders are extremely rare." This is the result of feminism in action on a national policy-wide level. Maybe some people in policy and law-making positions in Sweden need to look at this.

UK: 'Women aren't equal to men - especially not the feminists'

anthony · 9 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is Harriet Harman's misfortune that she is the sort of woman who gives feminism a bad name. Her intentions may be of the highest, her motives of the most disinterested, but when she holds forth from her political heights about rape, the superiority of her imaginary Lehman Sisters to Lehman Brothers and the impropriety of a mere man running the country without a woman at his side to restrain him, there are many who mutter to themselves that if this is feminism, it is barking.

Harman's agenda seems at times quite daft: must tiny children really be taught at school about daddies' nasty way of hitting mummies? As the nation's newspaper of record itself was prompted to ask, has feminism gone nuts? The simple and depressing answer is that feminism has always tended to go – if not nuts – then wildly astray, from one extreme to another.

...

The tragedy of feminism is that it has been dogged, or perhaps I should say bitched, by a lot of fixed ideas and unquestioned beliefs. Only when it becomes intellectually rigorous will feminism have some claim to intellectual respectability and then perhaps some claim to justice.

It is a shame to my sex that the women's movement has been brought low by muddled and emotional thinking – so often said by misogynists to be characteristic of the female mind and, I believe, a characteristic of Harman's.'

Roethlisberger accuser allegedly bragged about sex

anthony · 9 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RENO, Nev. – The woman suing quarterback Ben Roethlisberger for alleged sexual assault has been accused of bragging about having consensual sex with him to a co-worker.

Angela Antonetti said the woman who made the rape claim "did not appear to be upset, stressed-out or nervous" about her time with the Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback during a 2008 celebrity golf tournament at Lake Tahoe, according to court documents filed late Friday.

Antonetti said her Harrah's hotel-casino co-worker "appeared happy and boastful," and later said she thought she might be pregnant from the encounter. Antonetti made the remarks in a sworn statement attached to a motion to move the case from Reno to Minden, Nev.'

Author engages in communal blame for George Sodini's spree

anthony · 9 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male rage does have a habit of popping up. Hardly a week seems to go by without inordinate amounts of venom and scorn being aimed in the direction of prominent female politicians. Elsewhere, I have noticed a distinct increase in musings on how over-assertive women only have ourselves to blame if our men are weak and emasculated. We have outmanned and unmanned them – what bitches we are! This isn't even counting the drear that's always there, especially on the internet, from bitter rantings on divorce sites, to full-throttle misogyny on openly women-hating sites. And now we have Sodini on his blogs and videos, blaming all his ills on a dominant mother (the ultimate male rage target) and the "30 million" who rejected him.
...
Sodini could be classed as just a random psychopath. In some ways, that's comforting. Far better that than the idea that for some men out there this kind of thing is becoming a distinct manifesto. The dark paradox is that if Sodini felt his social status was demeaned by his lack of success with women, he probably wasn't even shooting at the correct gender. It's men who tend to torture other men about status, just as women tend to torture other women about body image. Therefore, it's men, not women, who were responsible for Sodini's misery. In the meantime, women should be aware: male rage is dangerous and may be more widespread than you think. Be careful who you don't fancy.'

Australian university seeks candidates for "Womyn's Director" - women only need apply

Minuteman · 10 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

****
A message from Returning Officer - MUGSU Elections
****
WANT TO BE A PART OF SOMETHING WORTHWHILE, CHALLENGING & REWARDING?
Nominations Open - 9.30am Monday 10th August 2009
Nominations Close - 4.30pm Friday 28th August 2009
Ballot Opens - 9.30am Monday 14th September 2009
Ballot Closes - 4.30pm Friday 18th September 2009

Nominations are sought for the following positions on the MUGSU Union Board:
* President
* Education Vice President
* Off Campus Vice President (must be an Off Campus student)
* Treasurer/Secretary
* Media Director
* Activities Director
* Sport and Recreation Director
* Womyn's Director (must be female)
* Student Welfare Director
* Environment Director
* NUS Delegates x 3
* Staff representative (must be a Monash Gippsland Campus staff member)

http://mugsu.org.au/home-mainmenu-1/latest-news-mainmenu-57/315-elections-2009

Term of Office for all positions is from 1st November 2009 -- 31st October 2010. Notice of election and nominations forms available www.mugsu.org.au. A poll will be conducted via a polling booth on campus and an online voting system.

For information about the conduct of MUGSU General Elections or nominating please contact Returning Officer, Ms. Cassandra Webb on xx xxxxx xxxxxx or cassandra.webb-at-general.monash.edu.au

http://mugsu.org.au/home-mainmenu-1/latest-news-mainmenu-57/315-elections-2009

++
Please do not reply to this email as it has been sent from an unattended mailbox

Low-T Syndrome: Another Word for Male Menopause

anthony · 10 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Andropause is a "term of convenience" in describing the complex symptoms in aging men with low testosterone levels, according to one study at the University of Toronto Department of Medicine.

Some studies show only 25 percent of all men with low testosterone levels ever experience symptoms such as Dan's, as well as bone loss and fracture, sleep disturbances and lethargy.

The very existence of andropause is contentious and large-scale studies on hormone treatment are only a decade old. Many say the underlying cause of some men's complaints are part of the normal aging process.'

Bleacher Report: 'Attention Gold-Diggers: The False Rape Accusations Must Stop'

anthony · 10 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rape is one of those crimes that is so intimately disgusting and inhumanly unforgivable, the very accusation carries a somewhat sacred consequence—almost anyone who doubts the allegation risks the appearance of a malignant heart.

Nobody—NOBODY—would ever lie about being raped, so the mere suggestion of skepticism is dangerous.
...
Not only is the crime singularly evil, but it's extremely difficult to prove in the absence of physical injury. The prosecution and accuser should be afforded a good degree of latitude to explore the charge as well as a layman's presumption of honesty.
...
There seemed to be negligible risk of throwing innocent men in jail because nobody believed an innocent man would be charged with such a terrible crime.

Slowly, with each false accusation, these women are adding weight to the other side.

And woe to us all once the delicate balance is lost.'

Virginia Governor Sets Free 3 Sailors Convicted in Rape and Murder

anthony · 10 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RICHMOND, Va. — Gov. Tim Kaine on Thursday ordered the release of three sailors who were convicted in a 1997 murder and rape case that had become a national cause célèbre as an example of wrongful convictions based on coerced confessions.

The three, who with another sailor were known as the Norfolk Four, were charged in the rape and murder of the wife of a fellow sailor. But after someone else confessed to the crime and the men remained in prison, their plight attracted a long list of supporters, including former judges, agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and even some of the jurors in their cases.

Citing “grave doubts” about the men’s complicity in the crimes, Governor Kaine issued a partial pardon to the three sailors — Derek Tice, Danial Williams and Joseph Dick Jr. — which reduced their life sentences to time served and permits them to leave prison in the coming days.'

Woman's affidavit supports Roethlisberger's denial of sexual assault

anthony · 10 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Nevada woman who in a civil lawsuit accused Ben Roethlisberger of sexually assaulting her last year boasted to a co-worker at that time of having consensual sex with the Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback and said she hoped he had impregnated her, according to a sworn affidavit filed in court in Washoe County, Nev., late Friday.

Shortly after telling former co-worker Angela Antonetti about the tryst during a celebrity golf tournament at Harrah's Lake Tahoe, where both worked as casino hosts, the 31-year-old woman "expressed to me she was hoping for a 'little Roethlisberger,'" Ms. Antonetti said in her affidavit.
...
Ms. Antonetti said she was "absolutely shocked" on July 21 when she heard on the radio that the woman had claimed Mr. Roethlisberger had assaulted her "because I knew [her] allegation ....was false.
...
"Because I knew that [her] lawsuit and false allegations would unfairly and unjustly hurt Mr. Roethlisberger, I wanted to set the story straight," she said in the affidavit, part of a motion filed by two other defendants to move the case from Washoe County to Douglas County.'

Feminists blame "Culture of Misogyny" for gym killer

anthony · 10 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...To say that it is a “culture-wide problem” because America is apparently just still so misogynistic is ridiculous and wrong. And feminists know that. Most men do not harbor secret fantasies of forcing women to have sex with them whether they want to or not, nor do most men dream about enacting violence against women. Yet it doesn’t keep feminists from labeling men this way.

What I think it boils down to is that feminists no longer have anything to fight for. And so, a movement that once was dedicated to fighting for equality between sexes has now resorted to slandering all men as angry, violent, women-haters in order to further their own feminist agenda. George Sodini is a sick, evil man who I hope rots in hell for what he’s done. And while I don’t think feminists are evil, they should still be ashamed of themselves for exploiting a tragedy of this nature in order to continue to smear men.'

UK: The men transforming into female hybrids

anthony · 10 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Modern women are turning their husbands into 'male-female hybrids' by ordering them to do a rising number of domestic chores, a relationship counsellor claims.

Women increasingly used to being in charge in the workplace are adopting the same policy at home, telling their men to perform traditional housewives' tasks such as the laundry, vacuuming and ironing.

...

'Many of us are so focused, decisive and assertive, that the only role left for our husbands is one where they comply and let us take charge - traditionally feminine traits.

'But the irony is, we don't actually want men like that, and we end up eventually resenting them for not being more dominant and fearless.'"

Study: Women underrate bosses' opinion of them

anthony · 10 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — A new study shows female managers are more than three times as likely as their male counterparts to underrate their bosses' opinions of their job performance.
...
"Women have imposed their own glass ceiling, and the question is why," said Scott Taylor, an assistant professor at the University of New Mexico Anderson School of Management who conducted the study.
...
Taylor said managers may need to learn better ways to communicate to female employees that they are valued. Women may need to learn how to better seek positive and critical feedback, he said.

Taylor says the findings could indicate why many women don't rise to head companies or why there is a wage disparity between men and women.'

NY Times Op-Ed: 'Women at Risk'

anthony · 10 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We have become so accustomed to living in a society saturated with misogyny that the barbaric treatment of women and girls has come to be more or less expected.

We profess to being shocked at one or another of these outlandish crimes, but the shock wears off quickly in an environment in which the rape, murder and humiliation of females is not only a staple of the news, but an important cornerstone of the nation's entertainment.

The mainstream culture is filled with the most gruesome forms of misogyny, and pornography is now a multibillion-dollar industry — much of it controlled by mainstream U.S. corporations.
...
A girl or woman somewhere in the U.S. is sexually assaulted every couple of minutes or so. The number of seriously battered wives and girlfriends is far beyond the ability of any agency to count.
...
We would become much more sane, much healthier, as a society if we could bring ourselves to acknowledge that misogyny is a serious and pervasive problem, and that the twisted way so many men feel about women, combined with the absurdly easy availability of guns, is a toxic mix of the most tragic proportions.'

India: Boys fight for freedom!

Matt · 10 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rage. That's what one gets to see in the eyes of harassed husbands and men's rights activists in the city, who, outraged by laws, which they claim are unfair, are now getting ready to voice their protest on Independence Day this year.

"We are abstaining from Independence Day celebrations this year to protest the unfair laws that favour women," says Suresh, the convenor of the Chennai Chapter of the Save Indian Family Foundation (SIFF), an organisation fighting for men's rights and family harmony under the aegis of the Save Indian Family movement.

Men's groups across the country have been protesting gender-biased laws in general and the Domestic Violence Act and the 498A, in particular.'

Ballarat teacher on multiple sex charges

MaleOrderBride · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A FEMALE teacher charged over alleged sexual liaisons with two schoolboys has faced a Ballarat court.

Michelle Dennis, in her early 30s, was charged last October with three counts of sexual penetration of a child aged under 16 and one count of committing an indecent act, the Herald Sun reports.

She was immediately suspended from teaching by the Victorian Department of Education.

The charges came just days after Ms Dennis was stood down from Ballarat High School after being charged with three counts of sexual penetration of another student, aged 17 or under."

Abducted child's father faces prison for peaceful protest

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Donald Tenn, the Sacramento father who traveled to Washington DC recently for a rally to confront President Obama on his "fathers need to step up" comments, will be in a Columbus, Ohio courtroom Monday morning on charges related to his 4 day protest on a 175' construction crane last year.

Tenn was a stay-at-home daddy until Shannon Phillips took their daughter to Illinois on what was described as a vacation three years ago. After her arrival Phillips announced that she had no intention of returning to California, or of allowing Madison to return. When Tenn reminded her that California law prevents parental move-aways Phillips filed her first of many false charges of domestic violence against Tenn.

At one point he had hope. One judge refused a restraining order and scolded Phillips for her antics. But after Tenn had one visit with Madison in Illinois Phillips renewed her campaign of false allegations.'

Carey Roberts: Feminists endowed with a superiority complex

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For decades, male-bashing has been deemed an amusing side show in the Battle of the Sexes. Some consider it funny when an advertisement depicts a man maimed by his girlfriend. Others will say an abused man simply had it coming. (Think former NFL star Steve McNair, shot four times in his sleep by a jealous girlfriend — but no one could bring themselves to call it "domestic violence.")

In recent years, gender supremacism has entered the mainstream of political discourse. Former Congresswoman Barbara Jordan of Texas once declared, "I believe that women have a capacity for understanding and compassion which a man structurally does not have."

And consider Hillary Clinton's remark, "Research shows the presence of women raises the standards of ethical behavior and lowers corruption." Thank goodness we have ethical paragons like Hillary to show us out of the wilderness.'

UK: Worrying trend will hit boys' education

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The problem is most acute at primary level, where fewer than one in six is male. In an era when so many youngsters, sadly, do not have a father living in the home this is particularly depressing and worrying. In schools as a whole throughout Wales, women teachers outnumber men by three to one.

The question must be asked what effect the climate of suspicion which has hung in recent year over jobs which bring men and children together has had.

How many perfectly decent, honourable men have decided the prospect of a teaching career with its incipient risk of being wrongfully accused of something is simply a risk not worth taking?'

Malaysia: Teacher makes boy smoke 42 cigarettes as punishment

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia — A Malaysian teacher forced a student to smoke 42 cigarettes for four hours as punishment after a cigarette and lighter were found in his locker, a news report said Thursday.

A school official confirmed that the English teacher subjected the student to the unusual punishment, but said the teenager was made to smoke fewer than 42 sticks. He declined to elaborate.

He said the teacher was upset when she found her model student, Mohamad Alif Arifin, had a cigarette and lighter in his locker in the school in the northern island of Langkawi.
...
He said it was up to the state's education department to take action against the teacher.'

Expert: What can be done to help boys

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ORONO - Boys go to college at a lower rate than girls. It's become a state and national trend, said a professor at the College of Education at the University of Maine.

"Lots of task forces are getting together to explore different reasons," said Rumford native Rich Kent, an assistant professor of literacy.

Kent serves on the Maine Gender Task Force which is exploring why girls are outperforming boys. The group will give its recommendations in June.

One reason boys' aspirations have fallen could be that boys learn better from hands-on lessons. Boys say they'd "rather be doing stuff" than sitting in English class, Kent said. However, he stressed it's important not to label all girls as compliant, all boys as antsy.

While the task force works on answers, teachers can help by not always assigning reading and writing materials. Some reading and essays could be decided according to students' interests. "I grew up in Rumford in love with ski racing," Kent said. He rarely if ever was assigned to read or write about skiing.'

St. Louis chess club to host all-girls chess camp

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ST. LOUIS, August 5, 2009 -- The Chess Club and Scholastic Center of Saint Louis, site of the 2009 U.S. Chess Championship last May and the upcoming U.S. Women's Chess Championship in October, will host the 10th United States Chess School from August 11 through 15 at its world-class facility at 4657 Maryland Avenue in the Central West End.

The U.S. Chess School, which is sponsored by Dr. Jim Roberts in conjunction with AF4C (America's Foundation for Chess), is devoted to developing the strongest young players in the country. Started in 2006, this 10th edition is the first exclusively for female players. Previous camps have been held in Kentucky, New York, Arizona, New Jersey and California.

Each session is attended by eight to 12 players. The St. Louis edition includes eight players ranging in age from 12 to 19, who will be tutored by coordinator Elizabeth Vicary, Chess School president Gregory Shahade and grandmaster chess player Gregory Kaidanov, who was one of the 25 competitors at the 2009 U.S. Chess Championship in May.'

RADAR ALERT: Where's Your Money Being Spent?

Matt · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

In this tough economic recession, states have to decide how to balance budgets and where to cut costs. Facing California's largest budget deficit ever, Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger decided to cut unnecessary state expenses, or at least expenses that haven't proved the money was making a difference.

A report issued by RADAR Services, "Are Abuse Shelters Helping the True Victims of Domestic Violence?"[1], reveals some disturbing facts about the country's 1,600 abuse shelters. Based on research studies, reviews of shelter websites, and interviews with former shelter residents and staff, the report reveals that only one in 10 persons are in domestic violence shelters because of they are victims of battering.

Gov. Schwarzenegger apparently felt politically safe cutting all state funding to domestic violence programs in the state of California. The federal government openly admits that the shelters it funds give no data at all on what they do, how they do it, who they provide services to, what those services are, who they reject, etc. They also have established no criteria by which to judge whether they actually reduced domestic violence or not.[2,3]

UK: More women than men now in high-status jobs

Matt · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. And as usual, the claim is that women are underpaid relative to men, while also merely mentioning the fact that men tend to do the more dirty and dangerous jobs in society. Excerpt:

'Women are now in the majority when it comes to high status jobs - but men are still being paid far more for doing the same work, according to new research.

A study by Cambrige University, which found that more women than men are now employed as doctors, architects and lawyers, attributes the shift to improvements in education and a changing attitude to what is 'women's work'.

In the past, women were more likely than men to be in manual occupation, but as these types of jobs have declined, it is predominantly women who have moved into white-collar positions, according to the report authors.
...
The study, which also examined pay in 10 European countries, found that despite the elevation in job standards, women are still lagging behind in the salary stakes.

The report reinforces the findings of the Women and Work Commission, which last month revealed that the gender pay gap has now widened to 22.6 per cent.
...
It placed professions such as medicine and law at the top of the spectrum with managers and scientists, and showed more women were now employed in the 'prestigious' posts.

Dr Blackburn said dirty and dangerous manual work was usually carried out by men.

Formerly, women were more likely than men to be in manual occupations, but as manual work has declined, it is predominantly women who have moved into non-manual jobs,' he said.'

No mention of the fact that men categorically put in longer hours than women do across the board. No mention that a profession-by-profession comparison will reveal much different results re salary and total compensation. No mention about women's voluntary lifestyle choices and how they tend to affect the salary or wage they can command. And no mention of work-related death and injury statistics by sex, either.

Report: Alcohol Responsible for 50 Percent of Russian Deaths

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The resulting statistics are staggering:

— The average Russian drinks 50 bottles of vodka a year.
...
— The average Russian male lives to be 60 years old, dying 15 years earlier than his American counterpart. Russian women die 13 years earlier than American women.'

Relatedly, from Wikipedia:

'In 2008, 1,185,993, or 57% of all deaths in Russia were caused by cardiovascular disease. The second leading cause of death was cancer which claimed 289,257 lives (14%). External causes of death such as suicide (1.8%), road accidents (1.7%), murders (1.1%), accidental alcohol poisoning (1.1%), and accidental drowning (0.5%), claimed 244,463 lives in total (11%). Other major causes of death were diseases of the digestive system (4.3%), respiratory disease (3.8%), infectious and parasitic diseases (1.6%), and tuberculosis (1.2%). The infant mortality rate in 2008 was 8.5 deaths per 1,000, down from 9.6 in 2007.
...
In 2008, suicide claimed 38,406 lives in Russia. With a rate of 27.1 suicides per 100,000 people, Russia has one of the highest suicide rates in the world, although it has been steadily decreasing since it peaked at around 40 per 100,000 in the mid-late 90s, including a 30% drop from 2001 to 2006. In 2007 about 22% of all suicides were committed by people aged 40-49, and almost six times as many Russian males commit suicide than females.'

School seeks to boost boys' aspirations

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LEWISTON - It's the same at Lewiston High School as it is throughout Maine and the nation: Girls are outperforming boys.

More girls make the top 10. Girls dominate extracurricular activities. More girls go to college.

That worries Joan Macri, head of the high school's aspirations program, who fears that boys who skip college could be shut out of higher-paying careers.

One reason fewer boys go to college can be found in the student parking lot, Macri said. Boys are more likely to own cars and to get jobs to pay for them.

"They have to pay for insurance, gas, some make car payments," she said. "They get part-time jobs. A lot of money goes into their cars."

Learning can take a back seat to earning.

To change that attitude, parents of freshman boys are invited to a "Shifting Gears" meeting from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Thursday at the school. The guest speaker is Lynn Miller, an educator from the University of Southern Maine.'

Other Voices: 'What makes Johnny a naughty boy?'

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most boys aren't ready to compete with girls in a structured school environment as girls usually surpass the boys of this age in maturity by two years or more.

This is a significant gap, especially for boys who are often too immature for the school setting. Elementary school teachers will reveal that most discipline problems involve boys, who make up most of the children with academic deficiencies.

Much of what we do in elementary school classrooms is designed primarily for girls. The demands on students in terms of conduct, neatness, politeness and other such characteristics are really more geared to girls than to young, energetic boys.'

Higher education playing bigger role in gender wage gap

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are still segregated into college majors that will lead them to careers with less pay than men, said Donna Bobbitt-Zeher, author of the study and assistant professor of sociology at Ohio State University at Marion.

"Gender segregation in college is becoming more influential in how men and women are rewarded later in life," Bobbitt-Zeher said.

...

"A lot of people look at data showing that women are more likely to go to college than men, and that women get better grades in college than men, and assume that everything is all right," she said.

"But this research suggests there are still problems for women that relate to college."

...

"There's been a lot of attention paid to the fact that women seem to be doing so well in college compared to men. But what people don't know is that education is playing a bigger role than ever in perpetuating the gender income gap," she said.'

Study contact: Donna Bobbitt-Zeher, email: bobbitt-zeher.1-at-osu.edu
Author: Jeff Grabmeier, email: Grabmeier.1-at-osu.edu

As always, be polite, stick to facts.

Blog: 'Title IX and the He-cession'

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In case you missed it, my College Sports Council colleague Clay McEldowney had a fantastic op-ed in yesterday's Washington Post highlighting the disproportionate cuts being made to men's collegiate sports programs due to the economic downturn and, you guessed it, Title IX. As Clay explains, the ax is falling regularly this summer, and when it falls, it falls hardest on men's programs because of the quota enforcement of Title IX.

Clay also mentions a remedy that was put in place by the Bush administration but has been largely ignored by colleges and universities because of lawsuits threatened by women's groups and the NCAA: surveys. Instead of using an arbitrary quota to see if schools are complying with Title IX, just ask the kids what sports they want to play and judge schools on the basis of the results.'

Childless man released from child support debt

Matt · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA, Georgia (CNN) -- A Georgia man who spent a year in jail for nonpayment of child support -- despite the fact he has no children -- has been cleared of the debt, his attorney said Tuesday.

Frank Hatley, 50, spent 13 months in jail for being a deadbeat dad before his release last month. A judge ordered him jailed in June 2008 for failing to support his "son" -- a child who DNA tests proved was not fathered by Hatley.

...

When the child turned 2, Morrison applied for public support for the child. Under Georgia law, the state, can recoup the cost of the assistance from a child's non-custodial parent.

For 13 years, Hatley made payments to the state until learning in 2000 that the boy might not be his. A DNA test that year confirmed the child was not fathered by Hatley, court documents said.

He returned to court and was relieved of any future child support payments, but was ordered to pay more than $16,000 he owed the state before the ruling.

...

The Georgia Department of Human Services, which includes the Office of Child Support Services, plans to propose legislation in the next session of the state Legislature that would prevent similar situations in the future, said agency spokeswoman Dena Smith.

Two things still remain to be cleared up for Hatley, Geraghty said -- lifting the child-support holds on his driver's license and his income tax. It remains unclear whether he will be reimbursed for the $6,000 in payments he made since 2000, she said -- so far, he has not been.'

'America Is "Saturated With Misogyny"? Oh, Please'

anthony · 11 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I don't which infuriated me more: Bob Herbert's sanctimonious Sunday column describing American society as "saturated with misogyny," or the unusually thoughtless, "right-on" commentary that followed it. Herbert's thesis echoes the drumbeat of self-pity that has been coming out of paleo-feminist groups and women's studies departments for decades: America, in their view, is a country where "barbaric treatment of women has come to be more accepted," where we are all so inured to the victimization of the female half of the population that we don't even notice it anymore. ...

What on earth is he talking about? Having lived in several allegedly more progressive European countries, and having visited many far less female-friendly parts of the world, I can testify that American society is, at this point in history, one of the least misogynist on earth, one of the few in which real female achievement is possible, and perhaps the only one where women can and do succeed on a large scale. We are now on our third female Secretary of State; in Afghanistan, three women running for parliament have been chased out of their houses in the past few weeks. We consider it normal for women with children to work; at the school my children attended in Germany, this was considered borderline socially unacceptable. The majority of American university students are now women; in Saudi Arabia, women can't even leave the house without a male relative.'

Author asks us to try to "understand" Diane Schuler rather than condemn her fibtastic · 12 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Drunk-driving mom Diane Schuler's tale is tragic, but her behavior is more understandable than we'd like to admit
...
Diane Schuler was a mother of two small children who loaded her own kids and three others into her minivan for a long drive home from a camping trip. Small children, because they are so tied to our hearts, have the ability to drive us crazy with their complaints and carsickness and impatience. (Small kids are special in this regard.) Perhaps to fortify herself for the drive, Schuler reached for vodka and pot, substances she had probably used in the past. It may not seem obvious to someone who has never had a drinking problem, but for a woman whose most reliable support had become alcohol, it could make a kind of sad, twisted sense.

Schuler's husband -- who was once arrested for driving while intoxicated himself -- has publicly said that she didn't have a drinking problem, but Diane Schuler lived in a culture where drinking and driving was far too commonplace. Especially for women, alcohol has tremendous appeal as a way to calm our fears and blunt our miseries; it is private, portable, available and often very effective.
...
So if we're going to judge something, why not judge alcoholism -- instead of pointing the finger at one sad criminal alcoholic.'

Principal charged with misdemeanor after allegedly setting up hallway fight between two boys

anthony · 12 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'As first reported Tuesday on tulsaworld.com, Vicki Rae Smith, 50, who was recently reassigned from her post as principal at Houston Elementary School, is charged in Tulsa County District Court with contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Officers with the TPS campus police department reported that on April 2, Smith encouraged a 10-year-old boy and an 11-year-old boy "to become delinquent children by engaging in the offense of assault and battery."

Smith is accused of removing one boy from class to fight the other boy in a school hallway and not intervening "until she noticed that the fight was being observed by two visitors at the school," according to a police affidavit filed in court.

Records indicate that Smith was booked into the Tulsa Jail about 10 a.m. Tuesday and was released on a $1,000 bond about an hour later.'

Woman reportedly attempted to extort prominent college basketball coach

anthony · 12 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Louisville men's basketball coach Rick Pitino told police he had sex with a woman accused of trying to extort him of $10 million and later paid for her abortion, a newspaper reported Tuesday.

The Courier-Journal of Louisville reported on its Web site that Pitino told police he had been drinking in a Louisville restaurant and had consensual sex with Karen Sypher in August 2003. The police report said the 56-year-old coach denied allegations by Sypher that he raped her after the restaurant closed and at another time somewhere else. He said he later gave her $3,000 for an abortion.

Sypher reported the rape allegations to police last month, but a Kentucky prosecutor said the complaint wouldn't be prosecuted because it lacked supporting evidence. Sypher, 49, has pleaded not guilty to federal charges of lying to the FBI and trying to extort money from Pitino, who is married.'

Dad fights to get son back from Italian orphanage after mother abducted him during custody dispute

Matt · 12 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Article here. Excerpt:

'Home videos show 5-year-old Liam McCarty horsing around with his father, his blond curls bouncing around a cherubic face.

It's a face his father, Michael McCarty, hasn't seen in months.

Liam, an American citizen, was placed into the custody of an Italian orphanage this spring after his mother, Manuela McCarty, fled to her native Italy with the child in the middle of a custody dispute with Michael McCarty.'

UK: Women-only policy wrong

anthony · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here, written by an unnamed female Labor party MP. Excerpt:

'IT is with a heavy heart that I write to the Barry & District News to oppose the policy that has been forced upon the Vale of Glamorgan Constituency Labour Party, to select its next Parliamentary candidate from a women-only shortlist.

I know there is a silent majority of local Labour party members who would oppose the imposition of a women-only shortlist for the selection of our candidate to replace John Smith MP.

It is what I can only describe as bullying tactics from the national executive, which forced the local party to succumb to this policy.

The polls indicate the fight to return a Labour MP for the Vale of Glamorgan will be extremely difficult.'

India: 'Ladies special: men’s envy, women’s pride'

anthony · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHENNAI: Women cheered and men looked up with awe and envy as the Ladies Special chugged out of the Tambaram station in all pomp and glory on Wednesday. For women, the induction of this special train has come as a blessing to provide them a little relief from the peak hour rush. While women extend their heart-felt thanks to the railways; the introduction of women’s only trains did not go down well with many a man.

Kumudam, a 25-year-old school teacher was all praise for this initiative of the railways. “This special train will prove to be a boon to women, who have to take the train during peak hours. We don’t have to worry about starring and ‘accidental’ bumping,” she said.

At the same time her colleague Venkitaramani was not so keen about the idea of special trains. “Women are allotted special coaches in all trains. In this context the ladies only will be a luxury,” he said. According to him during the peak hours the demand for the suburban trains was high and there were a lot of men, who struggled to get into the trains. “Men run from one end of the train to the other to get into it and find a space for themselves. There has been no initiative to address our concerns,” he added.'

India: "Does your wife torture you? Contact Man Cell"

anthony · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Has your better half become the bitter half of your life? Are you a tortured husband, falsely booked into a dowry case or under domestic violence act and there is no one to pay heed to your side of the story?
...
Man Cell or Patni Atyaachar Virodhi Morcha (PAVM) is an organisation working for the cause of harassed husbands. Man Cell, which was established in 1982 by R P Chugh, a Supreme Court advocate and president of Man Cell, has branches at many places all over the country. He himself has been a victim of women since his childhood and campaigns against the anti dowry legislations, specially section 498-A of IPC and the Domestic Violence Act, as he feels that these laws are biased and violate basic human right of equality before law. Man Cell believes that there is no use of making new laws as existing laws are sufficient. He feels, there is a need to amend such existing laws as they only speak of the harassment of women and not of men.'

Canada: Police say woman fabricated sexual assault story

anthony · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Abbotsford woman has been charged with public mischief after she created a frenzy by falsely reporting a man broke into her apartment then attacked and assaulted her two weeks ago, Abbotsford police said.

After skeptical police confronted Tammi Zall, 22, with some evidence gathered, she admitted she made up the story, police said in a news release on Wednesday.

After Zall called 911 on July 29, police had deployed officers and a K9 unit to search the area, and crime detectives and forensic identification unit members investigated.

Police issued a news release with a description of the supposed suspect and warned residents to lock their doors and windows. Several residents called and e-mailed, concerned the "balcony rapist" was at large, police said.'

UK: Do male teachers get a bad rap?

anthony · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why the downward trend in male teaching? According to Bryan Nelson, founder of MenTeach, a nonprofit organization dedicated to recruiting male teachers, research suggests three key reasons for the shortage of male teachers: low status and pay, the perception that teaching is "women's work," and the fear of accusation of child abuse.

"There's a lack of support for male teachers, a lack of respect, and a lack of being able to be involved in decision-making," says Reg Weaver, president of the National Education Association (NEA). "And I can't say it's getting better."

Low salary levels have also proved to be a deterrent, especially for those men who value being the breadwinners of the family. The average U.S. public school teacher salary for 2005-2006 was $49,026, according to the NEA. "There's a long-entrenched idea that males are supposed to make lots of money and be a big-time breadwinner," Brown says. "But teaching won't make anyone rich."'

Malaysia: Lack of male teachers a worrying trend

anthony · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'RECENT reports that there will be no more male teachers in 20 years' time is a grave concern to the country.

In the 60s when I joined the teaching profession, we were fired with a sense of commitment, dedication and passion, and it was a vocation, but not anymore.

As accurately pointed out by my fellow teachers, now one enters the teaching profession only when one cannot find other jobs – a sad reflection on a profession that was once revered.

The current ratio of 72 females to 28 males for every 100 teachers is indeed a disturbing trend for the country's education system. Why has the teaching profession become so unattractive to males?'

Opinion: 'Jail time was warranted'

anthony · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lisa Glide, a former Old Bridge High School drama teacher who pleaded guilty to having a four-month sexual relationship with a student, was sentenced Monday to five years' probation. She should have received at least a portion of the 364-day jail sentence recommended by the prosecutor.

Superior Court Judge Frederick DeVesa said he didn't think incarceration was appropriate, citing the physical illness and depression that Glide, 35, of Howell was struggling with when the affair with a 17-year-old student took place. DeVesa also gave weight to a letter he received from the former student, now entering his sophomore year in college, who said he was "clearly not a young child" and that he was "the initiator of the contact, not Lisa Glide."

Woman sentenced to community service for 'sexual relationship' with male student

anthony · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 24-year-old Orange County woman was sentenced today to community service for having a sexual relationship with a male high school student, prosecutors said.

Hope Ashley Jacoby, of San Juan Capistrano, pleaded guilty earlier this month to four felony counts of unlawful sexual intercourse and three felony counts of oral copulation of a minor. Orange County Superior Court Judge Gregory Jones reduced the felonies to misdemeanors and sentenced Jacoby to 240 hours of community service over the objections of prosecutors.

The sexual relationship between Jacoby and the male student started in 2008 when he was 16 and lasted about one year. She met him while working as an athletic trainer at Tustin High School, prosecutors said.'

Observer editorial: Not enough feminism in Britain

anthony · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's hard to know why, exactly, Harriet Harman's stint in charge while Gordon Brown is on holiday has provoked so much leery humour among male commentators. Is it because she is, as the niece of Lord Longford and a distant cousin of David Cameron, unspeakably posh? Or because she is a feminist, which, let's face it, is just unspeakable?
...
It goes with the turf for politicians, both male and female, to be caricatured and lampooned: Harman is uncomplaining and unrepentant. Good for her: why should she pipe down?
...
There is precious little danger of too much feminism seeping into British business or society in general – the problem is the opposite: there is not nearly enough.
...

We have the luxury of laughing at women such as Harman, but at the same time even brilliant female professionals are finding it hard to break through the glass ceiling; women in general still earn substantially less than men and tens of thousands every year suffer discrimination at work because of their role as mothers.

Women's rights to live without the fear of violence, to be treated equally at work and to have fair opportunities are human rights. Standing up those rights isn't an anti-male campaign: we all live together and what benefits women is usually good for men, too.'

Trudy Schuett asks for Twitter followers

Matt · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This week, I'm going to be doing a piece at The DV Examiner on #FollowFriday and I'm hoping to collect as many movement people and organizations who are on Twitter as I can. (More on #FollowFriday here.) This will be a great chance to establish some followers, if you're new to Twitter, or get some more. I've found Twitter to be an invaluable source of news & info, not to mention a nearly painless way of reaching out to a whole new group of people who may not be aware of the issues.

Early next week, I'll be doing the same with Facebook.

Right now I've only got a couple of people on either one, and I need a LOT more to make this beneficial for everybody.

Thanks!

Trudy W. Schuett
Arizona Rural Headlines Examiner
Domestic Violence Examiner

http://twitter.com/trudywschuett

Another DUI mother with child in car gets caught after striking bicyclist

Matt · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Wonder what today's chorus of rationalizations will sound like? Excerpt:

'HAMPTON BAYS, N.Y. (CBS) — Police say an intoxicated Long Island woman, driving with her 6-year-old son in her vehicle, injured a teenager on a bicycle.

Southampton Town Police say Caroline Goss was charged with driving while intoxicated, endangering the welfare of a minor, and having an open container of alcohol in her vehicle.

She was ordered held on $20,000 bail Thursday at her arraignment in town court. The name of her attorney was not immediately on record.'

The MRA issue with these stories is not that a woman is caught DUI with a kid/kids in her car and that she got someone hurt or killed. Men do that, too. The MRA issue is how the law deals with male perps vs. how it deals with female ones, and also how the public and press react when the offender is female rather than male.

UK: Cry-rape girl, 20, dragged man into toilets for sex to claim £7,500 compensation

Proud_to_be_a_man · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 20-year-old woman who cried rape against a man she dragged into a public toilet for sex has been told she faces jail.

...

Just over a week after making the allegations, she contacted the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority, hoping to claim up to £7,500.

But she was found guilty by a jury at Basildon Crown Court in May of perverting the course of justice.

...

Giving evidence during the trial, Mr Bowers told the court how he had met Hilliard at a nightclub and they walked to the station. He said once they reached the station toilets, she dragged him into a cubicle and had sex with him on a toilet seat.

Afterwards she told him, he 'better be there for the baby' if she was pregnant.

...

Detectives found CCTV footage from the nightspot of Hilliard and Mr Bowers kissing and holding hands before leaving.

As soon as they saw the footage the police contacted Mr Bowers and told him he would not be charged and instead arrested Hilliard for perverting the course of justice.

...

Jacqueline Carey, defending, said Hilliard had an 'extremely difficult period in her past' which she had discussed with a psychiatrist.

She added: 'She's presents as a vulnerable young woman, there would be great concern for her physical and mental well behind if she were incarcerated.'

The judge said he was 'staggered' by the report into some of the personal relationships and suggested they 'might have been inventions' rather than truth.'

No doubt, she'll get off with probation or some such meaningless non-punishment. She should be locked up for at least 10 years in my humble opinion. But we all know she won't be.

Woman strikes sleeping husband in head with rubber mallet

Matt · 13 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police say stress may be the reason a Wisconsin woman struck her husband in the head with a rubber mallet while he was sleeping early yesterday morning.

Mary A. Claassen, 49, allegedly hit her 63-year-old husband in the head around 4 a.m. because, police said, “she was kind of frustrated with the relationship,” the Sheboygan Press reports.

Investigating officers said it appeared Claassen of Appleton was upset because her husband was not employed. So upset that she struck him a second time, after which he called out for help.'

Megan Fox says she wants to eat high school boys in new "joke" PSA

anthony · 14 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Megan Fox will go to great lengths to get back at a bully.

A new Public Service Announcement Fox stars in begins innocently enough, with her saying thousands of teenagers have to endure huge amounts of peer pressure in schools.

But then Fox , using an F-bomb or two, offers her plan for retribution: "killing and eating" every boy in school.'

Note: The video contains profanity.

Good news, bad news from Rutgers

Vince · 14 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

First the good news from my alma mater; story here. Excerpt:

"The Focus on Fathers/Me and My Dad programs began in Cape May County about four years ago with a core group of local dads. Through research and focus groups, educational programs and activities were developed to meet the needs of fathers in their changing role within the family. Reaching out to fathers is one more way Rutgers New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station (NJAES) Cooperative Extension is helping to strengthen families."

Now for the bad news; story here. Excerpt:

"The study involved 1,000 men who participated in the Wisconsin Longitudinal Study. The men were white, middle-aged and had at least a high school degree -- a narrow population that limits the study's applicability to all men.

But the research hints at the stereotypical tough-guy image having a negative effect on men's health, the lead author of the study, Kristen W. Springer, said in a news release."

Boys and Girls club hosts ‘Just for Girls’ events

anthony · 14 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Boys and Girls Club of East Mississippi will be more of a girls club than a boys club this weekend.

The organization will be hosting "Just for Girls" Events this evening and Saturday morning.

Girls aged 9 through 18 are invited to attend both events for free.'

Ireland: Girls outdo the boys in almost every Leaving Cert subject

anthony · 14 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE girls have again taken the honours in Leaving Certificate results.

Female candidates have out-performed males in almost all subjects -- at both higher and ordinary level.

Girls scored more A, B and C grades and were also less likely to put in a below-D performance, according to a gender breakdown of the Leaving Cert results.

Female students aim higher to begin with, being more likely than boys to study at honours level.

The superior academic performance of females is not unique to Ireland and is an international phenomenon.

It is attributed to girls being better organised and more co-operative around their studies, while boys may fall victim to the laddish culture where school is regarded as not being "cool".'

Harassed Indian husbands rally for their rights

anthony · 14 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"New Delhi - A group of harassed husbands are to meet in the northern Indian hill town of Shimla Saturday to protest against domestic violence against men and the misuse of laws intended to protect women.

Men who are beaten up by their wives and have no avenue for redress or complaint, extortion of money through false dowry cases, cruelty to parents-in-law by wives, using child custody as a tool to demoralize men - these are just some of the issues that will be discussed at the national convention organized by the Save Indian Family Foundation (SIFF).

'We have organized the national convention on August 15, India's Independence Day, because we want to use the occasion to speak out about how more and more men in this country are losing their freedom and are victims,' SIFF member Virag Dhulia said.'"

Huffington Post: 'What's Good For the Goose...'

anthony · 14 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'These talks in my office really emphasize the double-standard that seems to exist in the minds of many women caught in the midst of a divorce. It is totally acceptable to have the man pay spousal support, but not the woman. It is totally acceptable to have the mother raise the kids, but not the father. All of this makes me wonder, what was the point of the battle for equal rights? In this day and age, these women are the daughters of some of the same women who I remember burning their brassieres in the 60s, the daughters of women who stopped being stay at home mothers so they could go out and work, the daughters of women who went back to school to get advanced degrees. In many cases, these women themselves are the embodiment of the example that their mothers set for them. Some of them are overachievers, who can and have accomplished major feats in the business world, but somehow still see it as appropriate to be treated differently in the arena of the family law court. In the context of a child support dispute, one of my female clients lamented that "so I went out and built this successful business and my reward is I have to pay child support to him?".'

Region's reaction to teacher sex scandal telling

anthony · 14 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The sex scandal headlines that stood out in papers all across the West Florida region this past weekend were a shock to many. Two Jay High school teachers were charged with three counts of unlawful sex with minors. In 2008, nearly 500 of these cases were reported across the United States.

Many had to take a second look after hearing the news out of Jay. Not only were they two local teachers, but both were female. Several people can recall the Mary Kay Letourneau case in 1995. This was one of the most well known cases still to this date.

...

Unlike Jernigan, Veronica Steele of Milton said that insecurity, not discipline is to blame. “I think the reason these things happen is because people are insecure of themselves and have a low self esteem.”

As for the gender barrier, Steele said that male or female parties act the same, and should be treated the same in such an instance. “It can happen to a boy or a girl,” said Steele, “A male can come onto a female teacher just like a female teacher can come onto a boy, there’s no difference.”

Revocation hearing held for convicted Ala. teacher

anthony · 14 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MONTGOMERY, Ala. -- State officials have taken another step in their bid to stop a convicted teacher from continuing to draw her full salary and benefits while she is imprisoned and appealing her federal conviction for enticing a child for sex.

Charlene Schmitz, 56, is the first teacher in Alabama to continue getting paid under the state's tenure law after being convicted and put behind bars.

...

"We think it's important that this case is looked at carefully. As of July she has been paid $140,000 and she has not provided any service to the state of Alabama since August of 2007," he said.

Schmitz is serving a 10-year sentence at the federal prison in Tallahassee, Fla. She was imprisoned following a February 2008 conviction of using a cell phone and a computer to entice a 14-year-old boy for sex. She still faces state charges of rape and sodomy in Washington County for allegedly having sex with the student as many as 10 times in 2007.'

BBC: Caution over domestic abuse alarm

anthony · 14 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An organisation which helps women suffering domestic abuse says it has concerns over a new alarm scheme being used for the first time in Wales.

Welsh Women's Aid welcomes the Telecare scheme piloted on Anglesey, but it is worried the use of operators speaking to sufferers will stop women using it.

Victims press an alarm alerting staff who decide if they should call police.

Anglesey council said calls would be recorded and the service would be expanded if it proved successful.
...
They are given alarms which if activated, trigger a silent telephone call to the Gofal Môn control centre in Llangefni.

The operator will speak to the victim via a telecom system fitted into their home and call the police on their behalf if necessary.'

UK: Special courts for women who are victims of domestic abuse

anthony · 14 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Wait until you see the picture in this article! Excerpt:

'ONE-STOP courts to help survivors of domestic abuse are to be rolled out across the country to encourage women to prosecute abusers.

For the first time, women who give evidence against violent husbands will be able to start divorce and child custody proceedings straight away.
...
Nicki Norman, deputy chief executive of the charity Women's Aid, said: "Taking action against an abuser and having to attend court can be very traumatic, especially when there are divorce or custody proceedings to cope with as well.'

Girls rule; boys trail

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Academically, girls are outperforming boys in subjects from kindergarten through high school, a four-year review of test scores shows. In some subjects, girls have the boys beat by at least 10 percentage points.

“We recognize this is an issue ... but the answers we’re looking for don’t just jump out at us,” said schools Superintendent Jim Scales. “What we have seen is not disastrous, but it’s enough to be concerned about. Right now, we don’t have any prescription for trying to overcome it.”

And though the problem starts in elementary school, statistics show that there is a domino effect as fewer young men graduate from high school and college.

“Males become less and less represented the farther up the degree chain you go,” said David L. Wright, chief policy officer for the Tennessee Higher Education Commission. “And if that’s true, it puts Tennessee in an even tougher spot in competing for those higher knowledge jobs.”'

Cops say Clarkston teacher sent nude photo to student, 14

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A topless photo of herself and sexually explicit comments were among the 50 or so text messages a Clarkston teacher sent to one of her special education students over the course of a year, police said Friday.

Now, Michelle Simonson, 28, of Oxford Township is facing felony charges of enticing a minor for immoral purposes and distributing sexually explicit material to a minor.

She resigned her position in the Clarkston Community Schools on Friday and is expected to appear in an Oakland County court in the coming weeks for a preliminary examination.

If convicted, Simonson could face up to four years in prison.

She is the latest female teacher in metro Detroit to be accused of preying on a male student — a crime experts say is being reported more often.'

Ireland: 'We've won major battles but the sex war isn't over'

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It hasn't always been sunshine and lollipops in the Emerald Isle. No, despite our oft-quoted Proclamation, we weren't quite so keen to 'cherish all the children of the nation equally'; and up until 1983, children were put clearly into two distinct camps. Legitimate and illegitimate. Yes, if your parents conceived without bothering to cement their relationship with vows first you were legally a bastard. Sins of the fathers and all that. It was the late Nuala Fennell, as a junior minister with responsibility for Women's Affairs and Family, who succeeded in gaining support to remove this hideous law.
...
Is it time to introduce quota legislation? I think so. Until we do, political groups will continue to discriminate against women in their ranks and 'women's issues' -- essential for a fair and just democracy -- will be given lip-service. Men will not willingly cede power or opportunities to women, no matter how talented or capable women prove themselves to be.'

UK: All-women shortlist for Vale causes row

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A ROW has blown up after it emerged the Labour candidate for the Vale of Glamorgan in the next general election will be chosen from an all-female shortlist.

John Smith is standing down after representing the constituency since 1997.

Last night nine women who have applied for the vacancy met local party members in advance of a selection contest next month.

A female member of the Vale of Glamorgan party wrote to the Echo saying: “I know there is a silent majority of local Labour members who would oppose the imposition of a women-only shortlist for the selection of our candidate to replace John Smith. It is what I can only describe as bullying tactics from the National Executive which forced the local party to succumb to this policy.'

Woman Confesses to False Rape Charge

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'William McCaffrey has spent the last four years in prison, serving a 20-year sentence for a rape the victim now says never happened.

Biurny Peguero, now married and using the last name Gonzalez, accused McCaffrey of raping her in September 2005, and he was convicted by the State Supreme Court in Manhattan. But in March, Gonzalez confessed to her priest, and later to her attorney, that she had fabricated the rape story, according to reports from The New York Times and the New York Post.

Gonzalez initially accused McCaffrey of raping her while on the way to a late-night party. According to the Post, Gonzalez now says she lied about being raped because her friends were angry with her for stranding them without a ride when she went off to the party with McCaffrey.
...
Gonzalez now claims the bites and scratches on her body at the time of the alleged rape were caused by her friends, who physically assaulted her in their anger over being stranded.'

Woman accused of making false rape accusation

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Except:

'Magistrate Priya Beharry granted $60,000 bail to a woman accused of knowingly providing the police with false information that she had been raped.

It is alleged that on May 20 at Georgetown, Plachette Ross, a sales representative of 24 Prospect, East Bank Demerara, knowingly gave to Sergeant Cedrick Gravesande; a police officer, certain information namely that she was raped intending thereby to cause Gravesande to arrest the man.

She pleaded not guilty to the charge of giving false information when it was read to her on Friday in the Georgetown Magistrate's Court.'

Dirty little secrets of domestic violence programs

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger cut funds to California domestic violence shelters recently stories of battered women and children filled the news. Oakland television station KTVU ran a story about "women and children," never once mentioning male victims. Like stations around the state, and around the country, CBS5 did the same.

News reports featured three dozen noisy people lining a street in Watsonville protesting budget cuts to the Walnut Avenue Women's Center and Women's Crisis Support~Defensa de Mujeres. We listened to female victims.

We heard about women's advocates and community leaders gathering in San Jose to protest a cut in funding for Asian Americans for Community Involvement in San Jose, Community Solutions in South Santa Clara County, Support Network for Battered Women in Sunnyvale and San Jose's Next Door Solutions to Domestic Violence. And we listened to female victims.'

Protecting Fathers' Rights in Move-Away Petitions

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'California law has long favored awarding primary custody of children to mothers over fathers. This disturbing trend only has served to undervalue the important role fathers play in their children's lives and reinforce outdated gender stereotypes that mothers are best-suited for raising children.
...
Fathers contesting a move-away petition may be granted increased visitation time with their children or the court may even award custody, either temporarily or permanently, to the father if the mother follows through in her decision to move.

Generally, to win a change in custody, the father must be able to prove that the move is a detriment to the child. In the LaMusga case, the California Supreme Court held that the impact of a move on the child's relationship with the father is a relevant factor in determining whether the move is a detriment to the child and may justify a change in custody.'

UK: Dad's clean-up mission for fathers' rights

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A NO-NONSENSE Heathfield father is threatening to cause havoc in court in a bid to change the law.

Jason Sands, 37, is Sussex spokesman for New Fathers for Justice, a controversial group dedicated to campaigning for improved rights for fathers in the settlement of child custody.

The group have grabbed media attention by organising demonstrations around the country dressed as super-heroes and Mr Sands is currently working on his latest stunt, entitled Clean Up Family Law.

Dressed as Batman, Mr Sands is planning to attend law courts across the region carrying a cleaning in progress sign and a vacuum cleaner.

He warned: "I have asked around and they can't stop me entering. Once I'm in I'll plug it in and start cleaning."

Germany: Why Women’s Shelters Are Hotbeds of Misandry

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A major survey of divorced fathers conducted by the author in Bremen showed that violence occurs in 30 percent of all divorces, with 1,800 men reporting physical or psychological abuse by their partners. This represents a significantly higher rate of incidence than the approximately ten percent seen in relationships under everyday conditions. Within the 30 percent of divorces where violence occurred, sixty percent was initiated by the men’s ex-wives or ex-partners. Our survey findings revealed that within the most conflict laden context of an adult life, women, too, initiate violence. Only from the perspective of women’s shelters does violence emanate exclusively from men. Instead of making divorce conflicts more tractable, women’s shelters actually exacerbate them. The »every-fourth-woman« statistic is therefore being used to document the necessity of changing the Domestic Relations Law of 1998, because allegedly the sole source of danger for children during a divorce is violence stemming from their fathers. By pursuing this approach to family policy, the advocates of women’s shelters are attempting to use prejudice as a means to rescind the right of children to both of their parents.'

Feminist objections to stimulus content lead to strange funding priorities

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...feminist leaders complained that rebuilding roads and bridges would employ working-class men, who have borne the brunt of the recession, rather than women or the “sexually diverse.” Unemployment is very high among transportation and construction workers, who are overwhelmingly male. The vast majority of people who have lost their jobs in the current recession are male — 82%. But the stimulus package is not aimed at helping them. In response to demands from feminist leaders, the Obama Administration rewrote the stimulus package to largely exclude them, as Christina Hoff Sommers has chronicled at length.

The Obama Administration purged the stimulus package of most of the investments in roads and bridges originally suggested by economists, and filled it instead with welfare and social spending, out of political correctness, after feminist leaders complained that building and repairing roads and bridges would put unemployed blue-collar men to work, rather than women.

...

Recently, Obama fired an inspector general, Gerald Walpin, who uncovered millions of dollars of waste and fraud in the AmeriCorps program, including by a prominent Obama supporter, endangering the Obama supporter’s ability to administer federal stimulus spending in Sacramento.'

S. Africa: Bhisho team ‘traumatised’ by botched circumcisions

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TRAUMATISED Bhisho officials believe that showing traditional surgeons the results of botched circumcisions may help prevent deaths among initiates.

The province’s health standing committee, led by ANC provincial Legislature member Mxolisi Dimaza, visited Nelson Mandela Academic Hospital and Mthatha General Hospital where injured initiates are being treated.

“I have never seen anything like this in my whole life … It was a bad sight indeed … gruesome. I did not sleep the whole night, but (stayed up) sobbing. We were really traumatised,” said Dimaza.

The multi-party committee embarked on the tour to find solutions following the deaths of 53 initiates this season.

Thirteen others suffered penile amputations, and about 40 young men are still being treated at the two hospitals.

“Apparently, some were taken very late to hospital and now doctors cannot do anything to help them. Their manhood is just falling off,” Dimaza said.'

Australia: Legal spotlight on male circumcision

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Law Reform Institute is reviewing the legalities of the procedure, after the Children's Commissioner found uncertainly over whether it can be legally performed on an infant male.

An issues paper has been prepared by a post-graduate student of the Law reform Institute, Warwick Marshall.

"The biggest issue with the law, [is] that there's no particular bit of legislation that deals with male circumcision so the general, criminal and civil law applies."

"So charges such as assault and wounding, grievous bodily harm for example which you'd usually associate with fist fights, could apply to male circumcision," he said.'

S. Africa: Boy forced to eat skin taken from his circumcised penis

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tradition is set to be pitted against the constitution in a landmark case around forced circumcision, which is due to go to trial on Monday.

But ahead of the start of proceedings, the Congress of Traditional Leaders of South Africa (Contralesa) has declared that its position on circumcision - forced or otherwise - would remain unchanged, regardless of what a court may order.

Bonani Yamani, now 21, was abducted from his home shortly before dawn on March 3, 2007. He was tied up, taken to the bush, circumcised against his will, then forced to eat the skin taken from his penis.

Circumcision is against Yamani's personal religious beliefs, and he subsequently asked traditional leaders for an apology and an undertaking that no one would in future be subjected to forced circumcision.

Instead, Eastern Cape Contralesa chairperson Chief Mwelo Nonkonyana was quoted as saying that those who refused traditional circumcision should be ostracised by the community.'

Mom allegedly drank before her 3 boys drowned

anthony · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MORRILTON, Ark. — Authorities say the mother whose three young boys drowned when she drove into a central Arkansas lake had been drinking before the accident.

Conway County Sheriff Mike Smith said Friday that 26-year-old Amber Turley was arrested earlier that morning at her parent's house. She has been charged with felony endangerment in the April crash.

Prosecutor Tom Tatum says the alcohol was among several factors that resulted in the charges. It wasn't immediately clear whether Turley had an attorney. She has previously said the crash was an accident.

Smith acknowledged the emotions involved in bringing charges against the mother, but says he was acting on behalf of the children.

Turley has been released on $5,000 bond.'

Canada: Woman claims alimony eligibility discrimination for being unmarried

Stinger503 · 16 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Judgment came this week in the family law case of the year, in which a woman sued her former partner - a prominent billionaire - for $56,000 per month in alimony and $50 million. Her claim? Federal marriage law and Quebec family law discriminate against unmarried couples. A Quebec Superior Court judge has now ruled against her. The woman's lawyer says she will appeal.

The trial last January made headlines, especially in Quebec. The media here nicknamed the parties - a court order protects their identities - Lola and Eric. The case became a spectator sport. Many, including women, were vicious in treatment of the claimant. They called her a gold-digger. They said she should have known she had no rights if they didn't get married, and she should have known something was up when he refused to marry her.
...
It's no surprise the judge rejected the woman's discrimination claim. These days it doesn't feel like unmarried couples are a persecuted minority - especially not in Quebec, where more than one-third of couples are unmarried. Moreover, when reforming Quebec family law 30 years ago, legislators here decided that keeping distinctions between married and unmarried couples best respected adults' autonomy.'

UK Guardian: 'The 2009 summer of hate'

anthony · 17 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For anyone who thought the backlash against feminism was predicated on nothing more than the fevered imaginings of bitter, man-hating old harridans, the past few weeks must have been quite an eye-opener. From the mainstream media's desperate attempts to convince its audience that feminists don't even exist, to calls for Harriet Harman and Hillary Clinton to shut the fuck up and stop being uppity, the attack on both feminism and feminists this summer has been relentless.

...

The unprecedented vilification that's been heaped upon these two high-profile women cannot be seen in isolation, as though there's no common thread running between it all. It's no coincidence, for example, that both are the highest ranked women in their respective political administrations, and that both have resolutely refused to compromise their feminist beliefs. Equally it's not just by chance that they've both been "caught out" by the press at exactly the moment they've been let off the leash, when their male bosses haven't been around to keep them in their place.

...

Both Harman and Clinton have consistently spoken out. The 2009 summer of hate is the price they're both now having to pay.'

Ex-wife 'admits starting' Kuwait wedding party blaze that killed 43

anthony · 17 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A fire in a wedding party tent that killed 43 women and children in Kuwait was started deliberately by the ex-wife of the bridegroom, a Kuwaiti newspaper said today.

Al-Qabbas said that the 23-year-old former wife had admitted pouring petrol on the cotton tent and setting it on fire, furious at what she called her “bad treatment” by her former partner before their divorce. There was no official confirmation of the alleged confession.

Firefighters said that the blaze took less than three minutes to rip through the marquee, in which as many as 180 women and children were celebrating the wedding party. Many of those who died were killed in the stampede for the sole exit.'

New Jersey Mom Accused of Killing Daughter, Injuring Other Child

anthony · 17 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police say a New Jersey woman killed her four-year-old daughter, attempted to kill her six-year-old daughter and then tried to kill herself during a brutal attack Sunday morning.

Morris County prosecutors say 33-year-old Jenny Erazo-Rodriguez faces charges of murder, attempted murder and endangering the welfare of a child. Bail is set at $1 million.

Morris Township police responded to the home Sunday and found a neighbor administering CPR to an unconscious 4-year-old girl on the lawn.

Another neighbor was caring for the girl's 6-year-old sister. Officials say she was conscious, but lethargic.'

Woman Doped Breast Milk for Attention, Police Say

anthony · 17 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who was on probation for feeding her toddler son pain pills in California now faces felony assault charges for doping her infant daughter with a near-lethal dose of morphine in Oregon.

Police said Sara Rose Dillard, aka Sara Rose Lubin, drugged her 2-month-old daughter June 4 in an alleged attempt to get attention from the child's father.

The infant was immediately rushed to the critical care center at Doernbecher's Children's Hospital in Portland and survived.

But it took several weeks for officers to unravel Dillard's past and her previous conviction of Willful Cruelty to a Child under the last name of Lubin in Los Angeles. In the previous conviction, Dillard was also accused of creating a medical emergency to get the attention of her child's father.'

The "Mad Men" quandry discussed, if left unexplained

Matt · 17 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why are we so wild for Draper? By any measure, the character's a cad. He constantly cheats on his wife. He skips town for weeks and won't write or call. He doesn't talk much, and anesthetizes any feelings with copious amounts of booze. He's an enigma, a locked box of a man who resists, maddeningly, easy explanation. And yet he excites an attraction among women—particularly ones my age, women in their late '20s and '30s who were born after the era that Mad Men portrays—that seems unmatched by any leading man on television today, with the possible exception of Lost's con artist, Saywer (another strapping scoundrel with a deeply troubled soul). We describe our obsession in words that, like the show itself, are somewhat retro. "He is a straight-up man. He makes me feel like a woman via the TV." "He's a throwback to a time when men were men. "It's the thickness of his body." "Shoulders to cry on and a jaw that causes women to swoon."

...

A man's man. A virile man. A masculine man. Strong terms. And ones that would make our postmodern gender-studies professors blush. After all, we're the generation of women who grew up beating the boys in math class, reading Judith Butler (by choice or by force), celebrating "Grrl" power. Traditional male-female roles were going out the window while we were still toddlers. And maybe that's why we feel a little guilty when we stop to admit to ourselves why Draper excites us. Because we're not supposed to be using those terms anymore to describe our desires. Those words threaten a backsliding—they hint at some deep, unspoken turbulence; that, as if by saying we want a "real man," we threaten to erase all the gains our mothers made in terms of equality in the workplace and the home.

...

So we've been raised to marry different men. Men like our president, Barack Obama: supportive, mature, levelheaded, equal partners. A bit sexless, OK, but who these days still thinks that a gal can have it all? Better a sexless Obama than a philandering Bill Clinton (speaking of men who make powerful women simultaneously swoony and ashamed of said swoon). And anyway, there are so few men like Draper around that we're not in any real danger of meeting one—at least not in the affluent, cosmopolitan jungles where Mad Men's viewers are concentrated, and where smart young women flock to make their careers take flight. They're a dying, if not dead, breed: these men who came back from the battlefields and settled down in whitewashed houses and were somehow expected to find the same visceral rush in office jobs and country clubs and nice, sweet wives that they gained from far-off adventures and wars. Men who couldn't be satiated by these staid substitutions; men who were made caged animals by domesticity; men who unleashed their restlessness in ways both erotic and destructive. These types of men are not the men we marry anymore. But, apparently, they're still the ones we love.'

UK: Do-it-yourself DNA test kits ready to go on sale in chemists

anthony · 17 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Do-it-yourself DNA tests are being made available by chemists for the first time, allowing families to establish the paternity of children without the usual recourse to the legal system.

Anglia DNA Services, a testing laboratory, said yesterday that kits would be stocked in pharmacies across the UK from this week.

For just under £160, anyone aged over 16 will be able to establish paternity in less than five days — provided that the consent of all parties is obtained. Critics said that children could receive potentially devastating news about their parentage without having access to proper counselling, which would ordinarily be provided within the court system.

Norman Lamb, the Liberal Democrats' health spokesman, called for new regulation by the Human Tissue Authority, which oversees DNA testing. He said: "These DIY kits, inevitably, will cause enormous effect on those involved. There is an urgent need for new regulation to reflect this development because it has happened quite out of the blue."

RADAR ALERT: Tell President Obama, "Stop the Orwellian Half-Truths!"

Matt · 17 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Just about everyone knows men can be victims of domestic violence:

- According to a 2006 Harris poll, 88% of Americans have heard about a male victim of domestic violence in the past year.[1]
- Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy has noted, "We still have millions of women and men and children and families who are traumatized by abuse."[2]
- Nearly 250 scholarly studies confirm that fact.[3]

But a dwindling number of hold-outs still believe intimate partner violence against men isn't even worth mentioning. Unfortunately, several of those persons currently work in the White House:

- Valerie Jarrett, director of the White House Council on Women and Girls, once said, "Domestic violence is still a major issue, not just for women but also for girls [4]
- During a recent teleconference, Lynn Rosenthal, White House Advisor on Violence Against Women, repeatedly used the phrase, "violence against women." Lynn Rosenthal not once used the term, "violence against men," even though the call took place just two weeks after the murder of former NFL quarterback Steve McNair by his girlfriend.
- Despite repeated attempts to educate Vice President Joseph Biden about the truth of domestic violence, he continues to be a true believer in the myth that women never abuse.

Mom Gets 99 Years for Cutting Off Son's Genitals

anthony · 18 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HOUSTON — A Houston-area mother convicted of mutilating her infant by cutting off his genitals two years ago was sentenced Monday to 99 years in prison.

But minutes after the jury's sentence was read, Katherine Nadal, 28, yelled out that she did not hurt her son, prompting the boy's father to storm out of the courtroom.

Jurors deliberated for two hours Monday night before returning the sentence, which also included a $10,000 fine. The same jury had convicted her last week of first-degree felony injury to a child.

The jurors chose among possible sentences ranging from probation to life in prison. Nadal, who shook her head as the jury foreman read the sentence, will have to serve at least 30 years before she is eligible for parole.'

Sunday School Teacher Indicted in Kidnap, Rape, Murder of California Girl

anthony · 18 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TRACY, Calif. — A San Joaquin County grand jury has indicted a Sunday school teacher on charges she kidnapped, raped and killed an 8-year-old girl and drugged two other people.

Melissa Huckaby, 28, broke down in tears as Judge Linda Lofthus read the indictment against her Monday.

Prosecutors convened a grand jury in late July rather than hold a preliminary hearing to determine whether Huckaby would stand trial. Lofthus said the grand jury transcript would not be made public.
...
Huckaby is charged with murder with the special circumstances of rape, kidnapping and lewd or lascivious conduct with a child under 14, which could make her eligible for the death penalty if convicted.
...
Huckaby also pleaded not guilty to drugging a 7-year-old girl earlier this year as well as a 37-year-old man, whom police believe she had dated. She is charged with two counts of furnishing someone a harmful substance and one count of child endangerment in the drugging case.'

Relatedly: Public Skeptical Woman Killed, Raped California Girl

Mental Stress Training Is Planned for U.S. Soldiers

anthony · 18 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA — The Army plans to require that all 1.1 million of its soldiers take intensive training in emotional resiliency, military officials say.

The training, the first of its kind in the military, is meant to improve performance in combat and head off the mental health problems, including depression, post-traumatic stress disorder and suicide, that plague about one-fifth of troops returning from Afghanistan and Iraq.

Active-duty soldiers, reservists and members of the National Guard will receive the training, which will also be available to their family members and to civilian employees.'

Does feminism portend the rise of a new master race?

anthony · 18 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Beyond her feverish crusade to convince women to use birth control, Sanger was an unapologetic eugenicist. In her book The Pivot of Civilization she wrote, "More children from the fit, less from the unfit — that is the chief issue of birth control."
...
Nor could there be any doubt about Sanger's genocidal motivations. In 1926 she gave an impassioned speech at a New Jersey KKK rally and later established the euphemistically named "Negro Project." Sanger would later confide to a friend, "We do not want word to go out that we want to exterminate the Negro population."
...
Mary Daly, former professor at Boston College, was one of the early proponents of the "goddess movement," ... In 2001 Daly wrote, "If life is to survive on this planet, there must be a decontamination of the Earth. I think this process will be accompanied by an evolutionary process that will result in a drastic reduction of the population of males."
...
Consider the millions of dollars spent for "women's health" programs, even though men die 5 years sooner than women. And ponder the irony of colleges that sponsor "women's studies" programs, while the number of men in higher education continues to dwindle.

So is it far-fetched to countenance the quest for a new Master Race based on neo-eugenic feminist ideology? Columnist Jonah Goldberg offers this terse, if sobering answer in his recent opus: "The white male is the Jew of liberal fascism."'

'The Gender Gap in Happiness'

anthony · 18 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

“By many objective measures the lives of women in the United States have improved over the past 35 years, yet we show that measures of subjective well-being indicate that women’s happiness had declined both absolutely and relative to men. … These declines have continued and a new gender gap is emerging—one with higher subjective well-being for men.”

This comes from “The Paradox of Declining Female Happiness,” a May 2009 paper from the National Bureau of Economic Research. The authors, Betsey Stevenson and Justin Wolfers, are both at the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania. This prestigious institution, known for serious work, now comes up with something as ephemeral as a “gender gap in happiness.”

The study would seem to indicate the extent to which feminism, women’s studies and such, have colonized even the best business schools. Another example would be the “UC Davis Study of California Women Business Leaders,” an exercise in head-counting masquerading as scholarship, as we noted in a previous Contrarian.

In the politically correct world of the academy, it should come as no surprise that 35 years of measurable improvements leave women with a deficit in happiness. Yet there is at least one good reason to take “The Paradox of Declining Female Happiness” seriously.'

False rape charge and conviction leave justice delayed

anthony · 18 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man is sitting in an upstate prison, wrongly convicted of a rape he didn't commit - a rape that, in fact, never happened. He must be released immediately, and the criminal justice system must aim its fury at the woman whose brazen lies put him there.

What Biurney Peguero did to William McCaffrey, a man she barely knew, is beyond despicable. She must be punished.

This is what Peguero told police and swore in court during a 2006 criminal trial: Early on the morning of Sept. 18, 2005, she was sitting in a parked car in upper Manhattan when McCaffrey stopped to talk to her and invited her to a party. They drove off; they pulled over on a dark street. McCaffrey, she said, drew a knife and viciously assaulted her, slapping her, raping her and leaving bite marks on her left arm and shoulder.'

Weston woman pleads not guilty to filing false rape report

anthony · 18 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 33-year-old Weston woman has pleaded not guilty to charges she falsely reported being raped south of Bowling Green in April.

...

She told law enforcement officials a man, possibly wearing gray shorts, had assaulted her while she was jogging between Bowling Green and Rudolph on April 26th.

During a Wood County sheriff's investigation, a suspect provided documentation that he was at another location at the time of the reported incident. Bauman then confessed to fabricating the report, deputies say.'

Ireland: False rape accusation has made athlete more wary

anthony · 18 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Northern Ireland and Manchester United star Jonny Evans has told how he is “more wary of people” after being falsely accused of rape.

The 21-year-old Belfast lad said he was forced to grow up fast after being arrested and held in police cells when a 26-year-old woman claimed she had been |seriously sexually assaulted at an exclusive party at a Manchester city hotel in December 2007.

The rape allegations were made after a 13-hour party for the entire Manchester United squad and other guests, which included Christmas lunch and burlesque dancers at a casino, and drinks at a bar owned by a soap opera star.

Jonny, who was 19-years-old at the time, voluntarily presented himself to police investigating the allegation. He was arrested and released on bail. But soon after the case was dropped when the Crown Prosecution Service found insufficient evidence to substantiate the rape claim.'

Sex ratio for collegiate binge drinking about equal

anthony · 18 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'With the start of college right around the corner, there will be many high school students heading away from home for the first time and if they have been watching various advertisements on television or listening to war stories from older college students they might be considering it as an opportunity to binge drink.

Binge drinking is defined as consuming at least 5 drinks of alcohol in a row. If you have a daughter you might be thinking ‘no need to worry’. It is just an issue with boys. Well, there is very little difference when it comes to the sexes.

The rate of binge drinking is similar - 67% in boys and 61% in girls. Binge drinking can lead to risky behavior. Binge drinkers were more than 5 times as likely as non-drinkers to be sexually active, more than 18 times as likely to smoke cigarettes, and more than 4 times as likely to have been in a physical fight.'

The Most Deadly Domestic Violence Homicide Ever?

Matt · 18 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Kuwaiti authorities have apprehended the person suspected of setting fire to a wedding tent and killing 41 people and said Monday the motive was personal. Local newspapers reported the groom's ex-wife was the arsonist.

The inferno Saturday night in the tribal area of al-Jahra, west of Kuwait City, ate up the women's tent in just three minutes and left behind bodies so charred they were unrecognizable. Guests likely crushed one another in a desperate attempt to flee. It was still unclear if the bride had survived."
...
An earlier story says that the fire killed "41 women and children," which makes sense, since it was the women's festivities that were targeted.

We'll see if the Kuwaiti police's claim that the ex-wife confessed to the arson and/or their evidence against her holds up. But longtime Fathers & Families activist Bill Zamzow writes in with an interesting thought--"This could well be the largest number of victims of a DV homicide(s) case on record."'

Dads on the Air show "The Canadian Special" available for download

Matt · 19 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Download page is here. The link to the .mp3 file is at the bottom of that page. Excerpt:

"This week we look at the struggle for family law reform in Canada, the home of some of the world's most extreme anti-male anti-father legislation. Recently Dads On The Air interviewed Canadian MP Maurice Vellacot, who has introduced shared parenting legislation into the Canadian parliament. This week we follow on from that interview by talking with the highly experienced family lawyer Karen Selick, who has been an outspoken proponent for reform of the system; Roger Gallaway MP, who co-chaired an inquiry into shared parenting in Canada and Jeffrey Asher, a lecturer on men's studies who taught the last men's studies course in the country.

With Australia's left wing government heading in exactly the opposite direction to the rest of the western world and winding back the modest reforms of the previous government promoting cooperative care of children after divorce, now is the perfect time to look at the situation around the world. Canadian society and many tens of thousands of fathers and their children have paid a very high price for the country's previous embrace of extreme anti-male ideology; and numerous voices are now united in a call for sanity to prevail."

Opinion Blog: Misandry more insidious by far

anthony · 19 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Re: "Women at risk -- Our combination of pervasive misogyny, access to guns is a tragic mix, says Bob Herbert," and "Treatment of women isn't perfect, says Anne Applebaum, but we've come a long way, baby," Thursday Viewpoints.

Is Herbert kidding me? He truly believes we've become a "society saturated with misogyny"? If anything, we're a society with entrenched misandry, or the hate of males.

Daily violence against males often goes unnoticed and unreported. Male children endure more frequent abuse and neglect, including circumcision.

There is a special law to protect adult females against violence and another to protect infant females against genital mutilation.

The most blatant form of sexism in this country, Selective Service, essentially makes males potential cannon fodder. And capital punishment is more sexist than racist.

Appelbaum's viewpoint is a more thorough take on reality. Herbert should abandon his self-hating attitude and realize that violence is violence, regardless of the victim's or the perpetrator's gender.'

Report: Sleep apnea raises death risk for men

anthony · 19 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The classic manifestations of sleep apnea -- loud snoring, interrupted breathing and sleep disruption -- nearly double the risk for chronic disease and premature death among middle-aged and elderly men, according to major new research.

Even patients with moderate sleep apnea face an increased death risk, as much as 17 percent, compared with those who do not have sleep-disordered breathing problems, the decade-long U.S. study finds.

"The primary finding of our study is that sleep apnea can increase the risk of death by about 40 percent, even after other factors have been accounted for," said study lead author Dr. Naresh Punjabi, an associate professor of medicine at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore.'

Brazil: Girl, 17, confesses to murder of 30 men

Ragtime · 19 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This needs to be tried as a gender-based hate crime. Excerpt:

'A GYMSLIP murderess aged just 17 was being held last night for knifing THIRTY men to death.
...
She told detectives she wanted to confess before she turned 18 and could be tried as an adult.

The girl - too young even to be named - said she began targeting men in her home city of Sao Paulo, Brazil "for money, revenge and to bring justice".

She even SMILED as she reeled off her list of victims - which is feared to make her the world's most prolific teenage serial killer. She calmly bragged to police: "I don't have enough courage to hold a gun - but I can hold a knife.'

More women held for driving while intoxicated, study finds

anthony · 19 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (CNN) -- Arrests for women driving under the influence jumped by nearly 30 percent during the decade ending in 2007, according to a study released Wednesday by the U.S. Transportation Department.

"To be honest with you, I was certainly surprised about that statistic," Transportation Secretary Ray LaHood said at a news conference.

However, when it comes to drunken driving arrests, women continue to be outnumbered by men by four to one.
...
The report, authored by the FBI for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, found a declining number of men arrested for similar alcohol-related violations.'

Intact America alert: CDC meeting next week to consider large-scale circumcision plans

Matt · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Intact America:

ACT NOW

Next week, officials from the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) will be chairing a conference in Atlanta that will include discussions on how to introduce "large scale neonatal and adult male circumcision programs" to the United States.

Intact America will be on the ground to make sure the ethical problems inherent in such programs are not swept under the rug and ignored.

Reinforce our efforts in Atlanta by signing our petition to the CDC.

Already taken action? Ask your friends to help! Download our petition (.doc file) or share it on social networks.

Lots more information here, including names, addresses, and email addresses of key decision-makers. The CDC's page on this subject is here.

Mom accused of smothering crying baby

Matt · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ALBUQUERQUE (KRQE) - An Albuquerque woman accused of smothering her child to death had earlier been ordered to take parenting classes, but never did, according to Albuquerque police.

Stephanie Ledford, 21, is charged with child abuse resulting in death for the July 9 killing of the 8-month-old boy. She is being held at the Bernalillo County Metropolitan Detention Center on a $250,000 cash or surety bond.

According to Albuquerque police, she was arrested Wednesday after a complicated investigation where she had repeatedly denied hurting the boy and at times blamed her boyfriend.
...
The boy told police he saw Ledford put the pillow on the baby's face while he was going to sleep and held the pillow there until the baby stopped breathing.'

Fewer male teachers are in K-12 classrooms in Illinois

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For two years Chezare Warren taught math at a middle school on Chicago's South Side, weathering the kind of situations that keeps so many men from pursuing teaching careers at elementary and secondary schools.

There were the usual jokes from friends about his low pay and cushy workday. There were the awkward moments with women who sometimes belittled his profession. There was the occasional whisper or suspicious glance from parents who questioned why a young man would choose to spend so much time with children.

Most troubling for Warren -- one of six male teachers on a staff of more than 30 -- was the look in the eyes of many of his young male students each semester who, lacking positive male role models at home, seemed to latch onto him for fatherly guidance.
...
Many educators believe the trend has had a profound impact on the way young boys and girls learn. That's particularly true in urban communities where more and more children are growing up without a steady male influence, they say.'

India: HC upholds govt's decision not to admit boys in nursing course

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHENNAI: The Tamil Nadu government's decision not to admit any male candidate for the diploma course in nursing received the judicial nod on Monday, with the Madras high court dismissing a writ petition challenging the new norms.

The government, which was allotting 10 per cent of the available seats to male candidates till 2007-08, decided to make the diploma an all-girl course from 2008-09 following the introduction of a new syllabus by the Indian Nursing Council.

U Ashad Ali, whose application for admission was rejected by the health and family welfare department in November 2008, challenged the decision on the ground that discrimination on sex grounds was violative of the fundamental rights enshrined in the Constitution. He said male nursing assistants were very much needed in various hospitals.

The government, however, submitted that male nurses were required only in a few places like jail, ortho department, mental health hspitals and operation theatres. Government hospitals have enough male nurses, who would be in service till 2045, it said.'

NY Times: Disabled Students Are Spanked More

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 200,000 schoolchildren are paddled, spanked or subjected to other physical punishment each year, and disabled students get a disproportionate share of the treatment, according to a new study.

Among the cases cited in the report was that of a 6-year-old, first-grade boy with autism, who was paddled at his Mississippi elementary school. An assistant principal who the report described as weighing 300 pounds “picked up an inch-thick paddle and paddled him” on the buttocks, the report said.

“It just devastated him,” the report cited the boy’s grandmother as saying. “When a child with autism has something like that happen, they don’t forget it. It’s always fresh in their minds.”'

Ed.: You can be sure the vast majority of those beaten are boys.

Female high schoolers targeted for math, science degrees by N.J. colleges

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MIDDLESEX COUNTY -- New Jersey colleges are intensifying efforts to interest more girls in engineering, physics, computer science and physics careers, offering girls-only programs in early high school, mentorship opportunities and networking groups.

The effort to roll out the red carpet for women into math, science and engineering labs isn't new, and in recent decades there has been clear progress: Women today account for more than half the students at some medical schools and in the biological and environmental sciences.
...
At Rutgers this fall, the university is opening the Rosalind-Franklin House, a second all-women's dorm for math and science-related majors. The first such dorm, Bunting-Cobb, opened in 1989 and was the first of its kind in the nation.
...
Earlier this month as the girls put finishing touches on their mechanized projects, several said they liked the no-boys rule. Boys can be competitive and domineering in science class, they said.'

Canada: Closing the gender gap on reading

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the past two years, he has been researching the reading gender gap in Ontario as part of a project with the Education Quality and Accounting Office, an agency of the provincial government.

"It's a goal of the province to reduce the gap," said Klinger. "We want a strong knowledge economy. We have a goal in this province where we want 75 per cent of the children producing at what we call level three in achievement, which is considered to be the level of literacy you need to be successful. The girls are there; the boys aren't."

The reading gender gap is not exclusive to Ontario; it's an international problem. Girls, on average, are better readers than boys in every country in the world.

I met Klinger in his office at Queen's to learn about his work. I'm also an educational researcher who is trying to understand the reading gender gap,. I have visited schools in the U.S., Japan and Taiwan to better understand this phenomenon.'

Rambunctious boys have own day at kindergarten

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Movement was something teachers were seeing a lot of in Ouachita Parish kindergarten classrooms on Wednesday as they experienced the first ever district-wide "boy day." Tuesday's "girl day" in most cases was a bit more reserved.

"Crisscross apple sauce," Stacy Frost reminded her male students as they fidgeted in a reading circle. "That means cross your legs."

The pent up energy in both classrooms was quickly evident when either teachers' attention was momentarily diverted.

"The girls read books and played with Play-Doh yesterday," Herbet said, while the boys played with blocks, built race cars and threatened to attack toy castles. "The boys ... we want them ready for nap time."'

Little Girls, College Guys -- and Nervous Parents

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It turns out there was also another -- unspoken -- requirement: the tutor ought to be a woman. This was something my wife and I both felt in our gut, even though I knew it made me a huge hypocrite.

I have written over a thousand blog posts on fatherhood, mostly making the point that there is no reason why guys can't do the childrearing thing as well as women. And I know that unfair stereotypes are a reason why so few men end up in primary education. But it's one thing to defend my days as an at-home dad and another to put an elementary-school girl alone with a college guy for hours a week. Yes, I know the risk is low, but why accept the risk at all?

Still, out of a sense of open-mindedness, we did interview a male tutor earlier this month. He was a lovely kid, well-spoken and polite, bearing a letter of reference from a parent who trusted him to teach her children -- including her elementary-aged girl -- to swim. While we haven't talked to everyone on our list of candidates, there is no question that he'd make an excellent tutor. It is entirely possible that we'll hire him, even though the idea still makes me uncomfortable.'

Woman faces jail for lying about rape to get abortion in Spain

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The 27-year-old woman, who lives in Malaga, used the excuse to get a termination when she became pregnant after having an extramarital affair, police said.

The woman, who is from Latin America and has not been named, told police that she had been followed by a masked man who forced her into the back of his car, drove her to scrubland, and raped her at knife point.

But police became suspicious after inconsistencies in her story and because she failed to report the crime until two months after the supposed attack. She then took her police report to a medical centre and asked for an abortion.

Police spend three weeks investigating her claim before they accused the woman of inventing the story to prevent her husband discovering that she had become pregnant from her lover.

She is facing between six months and a year for requesting an abortion on false grounds and six to 12 months for falsifying a crime.'

Roethlisberger attorney claims accuser's words prove lies

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here Excerpt:

'Attorney David Cornwell released a statement on Tuesday requesting the accuser to drop her sexual assault civil lawsuit against Steelers QB Ben Roethlisberger. In a statement entitled "Andrea McNulty's Own Words Prove She was Not Raped By Ben Roethlisberger," Cornwell contends that McNulty's online behavior is inconsistent with someone who had been sexually assaulted. (Via the Reno-Gazette Journal, a pdf of the statement can be found here.)

The statement includes various e-mails and online chats that McNulty was said to have had with "Ben Millikan" aka "Ben the Soldier" the online persona that Roethlisberger's lawyers believe was McNulty's fictious online soldier boyfriend. I'm an attorney with a background in both civil and criminal law, so I hope to sort out what some of this means for you.
...
E-Mails Talking About Roethlisberger. Cornwell released a number of communications that suggest that McNulty wasn't afraid of Roethlisberger and talked about him in a positive way less than 24 hours after the alleged assault:

"This golf tournament has been really fun. I am really excited because we are all going to see Journey tonight and that will be soooooo much fun. Speaking of which I need to head over to a dinner with your lookalike [referring to Ben Roethlisberger, as noted in the email July 9th] and a few others before heading out."'

Does misandry discourages men from wanting kids?

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I certainly don't want children, now or in the future. As a member of VHEMT (Voluntary Human Exinction MovemenT)I have many reasons for not doing so, some of which are:
...
'5. Misandry. I've watched every one of my male friends who got married get hauled through the divorce courts. Those who had kids got relegated to the role of "fortnightly father" with almost no say in how the kids are actually raised, no home and 1/3 of their pay taken in maintenance, and that's if they were allowed access to the kids at all with all the false accusations of domestic violence and suchlike coming from the ex-wife. Their ex-wives usually found another bloke and got the benefit of his income plus the maintenance, while the guys can't afford to start a new family because of the ex taking it all. After seeing these guys go through hell on earth, no way am I going to let that happen to me.
...
Misandry? It's the word of the month in here isn't it? We've got a bit of misandry dysentery at the moment haven't we? I thought Mystikan was a random lemon squeezed from the nasal philosophy of Agent Smith from The Matrix (you know, "human beings are a.... virus") but when I went and did some snoop-dogging on the Interents I discovered that there was, in fact, such a movement called VHEMT. While Mystikan seems to have chosen not to have kids because he thinks men are being institutionally and (apparently) invariably brutalised by women in our modern societies, the VHEMT presents some slightly less subjective reasons for actively choosing not to have children.'

Man blames science for nearly 20 years he spent in prison

anthony · 20 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For 20 years Steven Barnes has relived one day over and over in his mind; the scenes sometimes unfold like a filmy, disjointed dream, and sometimes with a stark and painful furor.

It was the day he was arrested, at age 23, for a crime he did not commit.

“When they came to arrest me I was screaming and freaking out saying I didn’t murder nobody,” said Barnes, who is now 43, and was released from prison last November just a few days after his conviction was overturned.

His conviction hinged on what he calls “junk science.” In 1989, Barnes was convicted of raping and strangling to death 16-year-old Kimberly Simon on the evening of Sept. 18, 1985, in Marcy, N.Y. The case against him relied heavily on forensic evidence and he spent nearly 20 years in prison.'

Man charged in wife's death not guilty by reason of self-defense

Anonymous · 21 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A North Carolina dentist was found not guilty by reason of SELF DEFENSE in the death of his wife. The jury found that she tried to kill him with a spear (weapon of choice for wild savages)and he killed her to save his life. Some good news for a change from the state that gave us the term of getting "Nifonged" by the judicial system. Excerpt:

'MOCKSVILLE, N.C. -- Kirk Turner, the dentist charged in the 2007 stabbing death of his estranged wife during a confrontation at their farm, has been found not guilty by a Mocksville jury Friday.

Turner's attorneys argued that the man was defending himself after Jennifer Turner attacked him with a seven-foot spear. Deliberations started Thursday morning around 10 a.m. and ended that day around 5 p.m.'

Psychiatric exam sought for Pitino's accuser

anthony · 22 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOUISVILLE, Ky. - A woman charged with trying to extort $10 million from University of Louisville basketball coach Rick Pitino may be so mentally incompetent that she does not understand the legal proceedings and may not be able to assist in her own defense, federal prosecutors said Friday in asking a judge to order a psychological exam.

...

Sypher has pleaded not guilty to federal charges of trying to extort money from Pitino and lying to the FBI. She is accused of demanding college tuition for her children, that her house be paid off and $10 million in exchange for keeping quiet about allegations involving Pitino.

...

Prosecutors also asked Simpson to issue a protective order barring Earhart and Sypher from making public any evidence or statements turned over in the case. The motion did not blame Earhart, and he said he still has not received evidence from prosecutors in the case.'

CNN Video: Woman admits torture, murder

anthony · 22 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Caption:

'Woman admits to killing a Phoenix man in a wheelchair because she thought he was a police informant.'

Teacher allegedly paid student after sex

anthony · 22 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Helper Junior High School teacher charged with having a sexual relationship with a 15-year-old male student paid her victim between $1,400 and $1,500 after the encounters, court documents allege.

New details about the relationship between Melissa Ann Andreini and her alleged victim emerged from a probable cause statement recently filed in 7th District Court.

According to the statement, the victim's mother confronted Andreini at Andreini's home in Helper on July 3 after finding out the teacher was supposedly having sex with her son. Andreini admitted to the boy's mother that she had sex with the teenager on several occasions at her home, according to the statement.'

Article: "Roethlisberger continues relentless assault on his accuser"

anthony · 22 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three days after releasing e-mail messages described as the "tip of the investigative iceberg" and publicly demanding that the woman suing Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger abandon her case immediately, Roethlisberger has filed a motion to dismiss the claims against him, support by a 43-page legal brief and 29 exhibits.

We've obtained a copy of everything that has been filed. (And, consequently, the hard drive on the official PFT Commodore 64 is now full.)

Put simply, the attack against the plaintiff is among the most aggressive I've seen in nearly 18 years of practicing law.
...
Roethlisberger requests that the plaintiff be required to submit to an "immediate medical examination," alleging that "there is no question that Plaintiff is unstable mentally."

So, regardless of the merits of the case (and, frankly, it doesn't look good at this point for the plaintiff), Roethlisberger's lawyers are using the "nuts and sluts" defense by calling the plaintiff both a nut and a slut.'

UK: Woman charged with false Carlisle sex attack claim

anthony · 22 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who triggered a major investigation after claiming she was the victim of a sex attack in Carlisle has been charged with perverting the course of justice.

The 22-year-old is expected to appear in court following an alleged sexual assault in Cavendish Terrace, Stanwix, on January 4.

She answered police bail yesterday

The charge against her states that between January 3 and March 21, with intent to pervert the course of public justice, she made a false allegation that she was subject to a serious sexual assault which instigated a major police investigation during which four people were arrested.'

UK: Tougher stance on domestic abuse

anthony · 22 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence victims will be able to get greater protection from courts in England and Wales from next month.

Judges will have powers to impose restraining orders on abusers charged with any offence - even if they are cleared but still considered a threat.

Victims are currently often forced to go through civil courts to secure such an injunction even if, for example, a partner is convicted of assault.
...
From 30 September, anyone still considered a threat at the end of a criminal case - regardless of the charge or result - may be made subject of an order.'

Pakistan: Domestic Violence Bill 2009 comes under fire due to punishment provision for false accusations

anthony · 22 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A clause of the recently approved Domestic Violence Bill 2009 that allows punishment of six months or a fine of Rs50,000 to those who file false complaints came under severe criticism at a national consultation here on Thursday.

...

Demanding complete repeal of this new addition by the government, civil society activists expressed the fear that the clause would transform the bill, formulated to provide relief to women, into another Hadood ordinance. “This would mean that practically no aggrieved party, victim or complainant will ever file a case in fear of reactionary punishment to them,” said Maleeha Zia of Aurat Foundation. She was speaking at the ‘National Consultation on Domestic Violence Bill 2009’ organised by Aurat Foundation.

Aimed at lobbying with senators to raise their voices against the gaps in the final draft, the event was attended by civil society activists and female senators, who agreed with most of the points raised by the participants. Prominent among them were Yasmeen Rehman, Saeeda Iqbal, Farah Aqil, Nilofer Bakhtiar and Shiralla Mallick.'

UK: Fathers 4 Justice dad finally gains joint custody of daughter

anthony · 23 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A founder member of the Fathers 4 Justice protest group has won an eight-year battle over access to his daughter.

Jonathan Stanesby, 44, was jailed for two months last year for climbing on to Labour deputy leader Harriet Harman's roof dressed as a superhero.

He also cuffed himself to ex-Children's Minister Margaret Hodge to protest that he could only see his daughter one weekend every two weeks. But following an agreement with his ex-partner, he has now obtained joint custody of his daughter.

Stanesby said yesterday: "My daughter is now living with me half the time and she's chuffed - it's what we've always wanted. I'm obviously elated but I'm also very bitter about the whole experience. It destroys your life. I'm still paying fines, I'm still in debt, and I'll probably never be able to go back to the work I loved now that I've been to prison."

Teen pregnancy attitude shift: "Girls getting more like boys"

anthony · 23 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pregnant teens are nothing new, but the behaviors leading to it and society's attitude are surprising sexuality educators who have been working in the field for years.

"Girls are getting more like boys in terms of their behavior and their attitudes about sex. They're getting to be more aggressive and more liberal," said Joe Fay, executive director of the Pennsylvania Coalition to Prevent Teen Pregnancy and a sexuality educator for 32 years.

...

Teen pregnancy has become acceptable behavior by a society that to some degree even enables it, said Holly Gould, who works with teen moms in her job as director of Education Leading to Employment and Career Training at the Crispus Attucks Association in York. The program is funded through the state Departments of Education and Public Welfare.'

Canada: Bus driver threatened to cut off autistic boy's head, suit alleges

anthony · 23 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'OTTAWA — The mother of an autistic boy says he continues to suffer from severe emotional trauma after his school bus driver allegedly threatened to cut his head off with an axe, according to documents filed in court Tuesday.

The boy's mother has filed a $750,000 lawsuit against the bus driver, the driver's employer and the school board for the "serious and permanent consequences" sustained by the boy, including post-traumatic stress disorder, a statement of claim said.
...
After the boy began crying, his bus driver, Ariette Schoorl, threatened to cut off his head if he didn't stop, according to the plaintiff's claim. "The defendant then proceeded to remove the emergency axe located on the bus to further emphasize her threat," the document said. "The incident terrified (the child)."

Ireland: Focus on girls' exam success masks deeper concerns

anthony · 23 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a 2007 Department of Education and Science report, Sé Sí – Gender in Irish Education, points out, girls have been outscoring boys in English and Irish since the 1930s. What has changed is the extent of the difference. However, girls also now do better than boys in so-called “non-traditional” areas such as maths and the sciences. Applied maths was the only maths subject in which boys outshone girls in the 2009 Leaving Cert.

Some people frame the discussion in terms of gender wars, as proof that men are now becoming the oppressed species. Others wonder what the fuss is about. Is this not just a good news story for girls? Or is the “feminisation of education” a genuine concern?

The gender issue matters, but not because girls are achieving higher levels of honours. In fact, framing the problem in this way may be distracting from two deeper and related problems. The first is that, far from worrying about honours, there are huge numbers of young people leaving school without adequate qualifications. The second is that there are profound problems with our educational system.'

Police: Woman lied about rape at university

anthony · 23 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 22-year-old East Stroudsburg University student admitted lying about being raped at knifepoint on campus Aug. 13 because she was not doing well in school and having personal problems, state police at Fern Ridge said.

The woman initially said she was walking to her car in the parking lot at 11:15 a.m. Aug. 13 when a man with a knife grabbed her from behind, forced her into the bushes and raped her. She has since recanted her statement and said the problems she had been having led her to file a false report, according to police. Police will now see if she should be charged with filing a false report to law enforcement.'

European Groups Ban 'Sexist' Everyday Phrases

anthony · 23 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It could be construed as a black day for the English language — but not if you work in the public sector.

Dozens of quangos [link added] and taxpayer-funded organisations have ordered a purge of common words and phrases so as not to cause offence.

Among the everyday sayings that have been quietly dropped in a bid to stamp out racism and sexism are “whiter than white”, “gentleman’s agreement”, “black mark” and “right-hand man”.
...
Many institutions have urged their workforce to be mindful of “gender bias” in language. The Learning and Skills Council wants staff to “perfect” their brief rather than “master” it, while the Newcastle University has singled out the phrase “master bedroom” as being problematic.'

US: Officials Weigh Circumcision to Fight H.I.V. Risk

Matt · 23 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If ever there was a time to stand up for basic human rights for males, this is the time.

This issue is not about religion. It is about the right of men to decide for themselves about whether or not a life- and body-altering operation should be performed on them. This is not a decision that can morally or ethically be made for a man even while he is an infant. Yet, it seems for whatever reason of the moment, societies want to make it.

CDC contact info is here. Call or email the Director, Dr. Thomas Frieden, at (404) 639-7000 and let him know what you think. [PLEASE BE POLITE and stick to facts. And, don't use any language that could even be construed as threatening. You really don't want the FBI at your door in a week, do you?] If you can't call, send a note to the CDC's general email at cdcinfo@cdc.gov. [As of the time of this posting, curiously enough, the employee directory at http://directory.psc.gov/employee.htm for the CDC is unavailable.] Excerpt:

'Public health officials are considering promoting routine circumcision for all baby boys born in the United States to reduce the spread of H.I.V., the virus that causes AIDS.

The topic is a delicate one that has already generated controversy, even though a formal draft of the proposed recommendations, due out from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention by the end of the year, has yet to be released.

Experts are also considering whether the surgery should be offered to adult heterosexual men whose sexual practices put them at high risk of infection. But they acknowledge that a circumcision drive in the United States would be unlikely to have a drastic impact: the procedure does not seem to protect those at greatest risk here, men who have sex with men.
...
Circumcision will be discussed this week at the C.D.C.'s National H.I.V. Prevention Conference in Atlanta, which will be attended by thousands of health professionals and H.I.V. service providers.

Among the speakers is a physician from Operation Abraham, an organization based in Israel and named after the biblical figure who was circumcised, according to the book of Genesis, when he was 99 years old. The group trains doctors in Africa to perform circumcisions on adult men to reduce the spread of H.I.V.

Members of Intact America, a group that opposes newborn circumcision, have rented mobile billboards that will drive around Atlanta carrying their message that "circumcising babies doesn't prevent H.I.V.," said Georganne Chapin, who leads the organization.'

Cops get tough with women driving drunk

Michael · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here Excerpt:

'It used to be that a woman caught driving under the influence stood a good chance of getting a break from the police officer.

Not anymore.

Over the past decade, DUI arrests of female drivers have shot up in Chicago, as well as across Illinois and the nation, new government figures show.

That's happened even as the number of men being busted for driving drunk has been steadily dropping in the United States over the last decade.

The rising number of DUI arrests of women probably reflects a change in attitude by police.'

'Year One' uses "genital mutilation" to describe circumcision

Matt · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The recent comedy film Year One is noteworthy since it appears as if it is the first time in American film history that the term "genital mutilation" is used to describe circumcision as noted here (page-search on 'Year One' to find the film's entry). Excerpt:

'Many a true word is spoken in jest! This could be the first time "genital mutilation" has been used to describe male circumcision in a mainstream movie. With its exposed corona and sulcus, and dried surface, a circumcised penis is far from "sleek". Most reviews have panned the movie.'

Unfortunately the movie, despite some funny parts here and there, overall did not seem to me to be that funny. Nonetheless, this is some mainstream media exposure with regard to this issue, and given that the target market for this movie seems to have been adolescents in general, it's good they are getting some counter-message for it some place.

Ireland: 'It's time to dispense with the voodoo politics of the good condom and the guilty foreskin'

anthony · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Voodoo is an African word, but not an African monopoly. Every society has its own voodoo -- a fear of some mysterious ailment which can only be cured by magical means.

The latest proposal by the World Health Organisation to control the AIDS epidemic in Africa by circumcising males is just another voodoo. However, the disproportionate number of women scientists urging this "solution" does suggest a bizarre twist -- some feminists, for obvious, if largely subconscious reasons, rather like the idea of male genital mutilation. Furthermore, the hygiene argument (usually used tendentiously) justifying male circumcision could equally apply to the female labia, and more especially, to the fingernails of both sexes.
...
It is one thing for an adult to choose to be circumcised, though little good will it do him if he chooses then to have unprotected promiscuous sex (as many newly-circumcised African males do). It is quite another thing for the World Health Organisation to encourage people to rob little boys of their foreskins for "public health" reasons.

To do that is to mutilate him forever, and all in the name of a very dangerous ancient/modern voodoo, that this year has killed 53 boys in Cape Province alone.'

S Africa: Circumcision should be the in thing

anthony · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'South Africa's policy on circumcision is still being finalised, guidelines need to be drafted and health workers trained, so the Bophelo Pele centre is the only one in the country offering free male circumcisions.

Other countries in southern Africa have already begun rolling out mass male circumcision programmes in response to evidence that circumcision, safely performed in a medical setting, lowers a man's risk of contracting HIV by about 60 percent.

In South Africa, public health facilities only perform circumcision for medical reasons; those choosing it for other reasons must pay a private practitioner.'

UPDATE: US: Officials Weigh Circumcision to Fight H.I.V. Risk

Matt · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Looks like the CDC employee directory is available again at http://directory.psc.gov/employee.htm. Some contact info as follows:

Dr. Peter Kilmarx, chief of epidemiology: email: peter.kilmarx-at-cdc.hhs.gov
phone: 404.639.8998
fax: 404.639.6127

Dr. Thomas R. Frieden, Director of the CDC:
email: txf2-at-cdc.gov
phone: 404.639.7000

Do not just assume because this is posted here that others will contact these guys or others to voice their opposition to MGM. The MR movement simply does not have that many people that we can all just assume that "someone else" will do this kind of thing for us. Each and every person reading this who supports the end of MGM needs to make his or her voice known. Pick up the phone or fire up your email. It'll take less than a minute to do this but it is one of the few chances we get to raise our concerns to government and the public-policy makers that can so influence medical practices.

DO THIS NOW!

Boys get better grades at all-boys schools: study

anthony · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WELLINGTON (Reuters Life!) - Boys get better grades at single-sex schools than when they're in mixed-gender schools, where girls consistently outperform them, a recent New Zealand study shows.

The study, based on the long-term Christchurch Health and Development Study at the University of Otago, compared the educational achievements of over 900 boys and girls who attended single-sex and coeducational secondary schools in New Zealand.

For students attending single-sex secondary schools, there was a slight tendency for males to outperform females.

For students attending co-educational schools, however, there was a clear tendency for girls to outperform boys, a pattern that continued when students were followed up to the age of 25.'

NY Times: 'The Power of the Purse'

anthony · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Remember the concept of “sisterhood”? That quaint relic of an idea that women owed it to other women to crash through ceilings and navigate a male world? It just might be taking new root in a most unexpected place — among women with money. There are more women controlling more wealth in the U.S. than ever before. (Of those in the wealthiest tier of the country — defined by the I.R.S. as individuals with assets of at least $1.5 million — 43 percent are women.) And unlike the women who preceded them — old-school patrons who gave to the museum and the symphony and their dead husbands’ alma maters — these givers are more likely to use their wealth deliberately and systematically to aid women in need.
...
In general, women give differently than men. They are less likely to want their names on things and more likely to give as part of drives (large ones, like Women Moving Millions, and smaller ones, like living-room “giving circles”) that include other women. And they tend to spotlight different causes (women’s health, microfinancing of businesses owned by women) and for different reasons. A study of more than 10,000 large donors by the Center on Philanthropy at Indiana University suggests that while men describe their giving as practical — filling in the gaps that government can’t or won’t — women describe theirs as emotional, an obligation to help those with less.'

South Africa: Teen held for false rape claim

anthony · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An 18-year-old matriculant who ran away from home to visit her boyfriend was arrested on Monday for allegedly lying about being raped, Pretoria police said.
...
"She was taken to a doctor for treatment at the expense of the state and penetration was confirmed."

According to police she had consensual sex with her boyfriend during her stay at his house.

She would face a charge of perjury in the Atteridgeville Magistrate's Court on Tuesday. - Sapa'

Required Circumcision for All Baby Boys Born in the United States?

anthony · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is scientific evidence that circumcision can lead to a reduction in the risk of males contracting HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. AIDS has been at epidemic levels in Africa and studies show that African men who have been circumcised reduce their risk of getting AIDS by half. The clinical trials performed in Kenya, South Africa and Uganda focused on heterosexual males who were at risk from getting HIV from infected female sexual partners. The studies showed they were 60% less likely to become infected with AIDS if they had been circumcised. Circumcision did not seem to have an impact on the likelihood of homosexual men contracting the disease.

As a result, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in the United States is considering a proposal that all newborn baby boys in the United States should be circumcised. They are also considering offering the surgery to heterosexual adult males whose sexual behavior is such that they are at greater risk for the disease.
...
The money spent on requiring this procedure could be spent on education about it with plenty left over to put into more productive preventative medicines. There would probably be some left over to help offer circumcisions in African nations if they wanted the help. Either way, NOT having required circumcision for all baby boys born in the United States would save money and a lot of irritation on the part of the people. Let parents decide.'

Prof working to get boys into reading

anthony · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A lot of things — critical thinking, comprehension, imagination — bubble up into a child's brain from a book. But none of that can happen if the book isn't cracked open.

Turning reluctant readers, especially boys, into eager ones is the idea behind a reading program that a University of Northern Colorado education professor helped develop.

Michael Opitz, a former elementary school teacher who specializes in reading and language arts, said he's hopeful the new program, called Pair-It Extreme, will get children in first through third grades hooked on reading.

Opitz said boys are 50 percent more likely to be held back a grade and three to five times more likely to have a disability placement in school. Young boys often consider reading boring or a girly activity.'

'South Africa’s health system fails women, kids'

anthony · 24 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Researchers for a leading international medical journal say South Africa's health system is failing women and children in particular, but that new leadership could solve many of the problems.

...

Studies have shown circumcision can cut the risk of HIV infection by as much as 60 percent, and some of South Africa's neighbors have made the procedure widely available. But Motsoaledi said some in South Africa have expressed fears that men who undergo the procedure might become complacent and more likely to have unprotected sex.

Motsoaledi said circumcision as a medical intervention also would have to be explained in a way that took into account differing traditions in South Africa, where some tribes routinely circumcise young men as a rite of adulthood and others do not.'

Study: Reports of teen misuse of ADHD drugs soared 76%

anthony · 25 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Keep in mind, boys are prescribed ADHD medications at a much higher rate then girls. Excerpt:

'CHICAGO - Calls to poison-control centers about teens abusing attention-deficit drugs soared 76 percent over eight years, sobering evidence about the dangerous consequences of prescription misuse, a study shows.

The calls were from worried parents, emergency-room doctors and others seeking advice on how to deal with the problem, which can be deadly. Four deaths were among cases evaluated in the study, published today in Pediatrics, a medical journal.

...

Researchers from Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center evaluated 1998-2005 data from the American Association of Poison Control Centers. During that time, calls related to teen abuse of ADHD drugs increased from 330 to 581 yearly, and there were four deaths.

The true number of teen abusers who have bad side effects is likely much higher, because many cases don't result in calls to poison-control centers, said study author Dr. Randall Bond.'

Will Men Ever Share the Burden of Contraception?

anthony · 25 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For years, we've been hearing that more contraceptive options for sexually active males may soon be a reality. But that soon is starting to feel like never. Men still only have the condom, a vasectomy or abstinence when it comes to choices of birth control. So what's holding up their show?

Research consistently reveals that men want access to better contraceptives. A 1998 study in British Journal of Family Planning found that 80 percent of males regarded a hypothetical male pill as one of their top three contraceptive choices. A 2005 global study conducted by Schering found that 55 percent of men ages 18 to 50 are interested in a "new male fertility control."

Still, men like these are constantly getting teased with the prospect of greater control over their fertility during sex. Already we've been waiting years for male contraceptives in the forms of creams, monthly or quarterly injections, daily testosterone gel, patch, sperm plugs, sperm dissolvers, heat-inducing gels, hormone therapy, twice per year synthetic implants in the arm...'

"13 signs he's dating a loser"

John Dias · 25 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"I've had a bumpy ride as a single gal and have dated many guys who weren't worth my time. But that doesn't mean a girl can't be a dud, too! Case in point? That tragic and terrible VH1 show "Megan Wants a Millionaire," about a girl who's just looking for a rich guy to pay the bills.

For all you men out there, check out the 12 signs that you may be dating a loser. See someone you recognize? If you're smart, you'll lose her.

1. Dirty-flirty double standard: She flirts with dudes in front of you, shamelessly. Then, she gets super mad and makes a scene if you so much as give a cute waitress your order.

2. She needs to do everything with you: It's one thing to share experiences, but it's another thing to need someone to hold your hand all the time. When it goes beyond wanting to spending time together to demanding it constantly, you have to wonder, what's her problem?'

Tha Daily Dish: 'Lose the Foreskin!'

anthony · 25 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The responses to the Center for Disease Control's proposal this week to require all American boys to be circumcized are predictably hysterical. Hundreds of commenters wrote into the New York Times today to complain about "child abuse" and "genital mutilation" and one "religious sect's agenda of control" (i.e. Jews). Subsequent news stories refer to the "controversial procedure" and quote CDC epidemiologists carefully measuring their words.

But the procedure is only "controversial" because people have emotional, psychological and religious reactions to it. Scientifically speaking, it's not remotely controversial. The anti-circumcision sites always refer to the American Academy of Pediatrics' 1999 policy statement on circumcision, which declined to recommend the procedure. But that statement was issued before the most compelling studies emerged about the role circumcision plays in reducing the risk for transmission of HIV and other STD's."

Feedback form for The Atlantic is here. The author's email is hanna.rosin-at-gmail.com.

Australia: 'Willy-nilly circumcision sparks legal fears for doctors'

anthony · 25 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LAWS protect girls from genital surgery but parents wanting to circumcise boys can "go around willy-nilly chopping up bits of their sons", a state children's commissioner says.

Tasmania's commissioner for children Paul Mason and the Tasmanian Law Reform Institute have embarked on what they say is the largest review into the legalities of male circumcision in Australia's history.

Mr Mason said a critical issue for any non-therapeutic circumcision is whether parental consent is sufficient to protect a surgeon from legal action if the child's genital autonomy is thought to have been infringed.

"The only thing that protects a doctor from an action for assault or a civil prosecution is the valid consent of the patient," he said.'

Huffington Post: Male Circumcision and the HIV/AIDS Myth

anthony · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We now know that penile cancer is only slightly more prevalent in the uncircumcised, and routine circumcision is not the best way to go about preventing it, just as routine double mastectomy in women who are done with breastfeeding (and thus have no remaining physiological need for their breasts) is not a good approach to preventing breast cancer -- which is much more common than penile cancer. We also know that the human papilloma virus (HPV), which also causes genital warts, is the most important risk factor for cancer of the penis -- and genital warts are more easily contracted by circumcised men. Moreover, penile cancer is much less prevalent in countries like Denmark, where circumcision is uncommon, compared to the United States, where between 50-60% of males are circumcised.'

Atlanta report: Circumcision no AIDS protection for gay men

anthony · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA - Circumcision, which has helped prevent AIDS among heterosexual men in Africa, doesn't help protect gay men from the virus, according to the largest U.S. study to look at the question.
...
Circumcision "is not considered beneficial" in stopping the spread of HIV through gay sex, said Dr. Peter Kilmarx, of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

However, the CDC is still considering recommending it for other groups, including baby boys and high-risk heterosexual men.

UNAIDS ... promote[s] circumcision ...as an important strategy for reducing the spread of the AIDS virus. There hasn't been the same kind of push for circumcision in the [US].
...
"...It's possible the government won't make recommendations but instead will promote an education campaign for parents about the procedure's potential benefits and risks, he added.

The prospect of the government promoting circumcision of infants has already drawn fire from an advocacy group called Intact America. The organization, based in Tarrytown, N.Y., parked a motorized billboard this week outside the hotel hosting the HIV conference, displaying the message: "Tell the CDC that circumcising babies doesn't prevent HIV."'

TAKE ACTION!
If you have not done so already, or even if you have, contact the CDC and tell them what you think. But don't limit yourself to just the CDC-- contact your Congressional rep(s) as well. They have no direct influence on public medical policy, but they are in positions of decision-making authority over such things as funding of programs. And as we all know, it's all about the money, isn't it? Contact information:

Previous MANN story with contact info
Find you Congressoid and write or call: http://www.house.gov/

YouTube video on "new device to assist circumcising babies"

anthony · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This is a reprehensible and disgusting YouTube video of a new circumcision device. I'm somewhat embarrassed to even submit it. However, I think 'shock value' might sometimes be a necessary tool. I can't even think of a descriptive excerpt.

Plastibell Infant Circumcision Surgical Procedure

Ed.: It's so disturbing you have to log in and confirm your birth date. I looked at the video poster's user page and it does not seem to me he or she is advocating for circumcision, but simply supplying video information about it. (In fact the text for the user entry was taken from Wikipedia and is decidedly anti-circ in its tone). Videos may well be the best way to get people to make up their own minds and once the evidence is seen, well, I have a feeling I can guess what new opinion will be formed.

Linda Bollea Sues Hulk Hogan for Her Harley, Wants Him in Prison

anthony · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Linda Bollea Sues Hulk Hogan for Her Harley, Wants Him in Prison

Just a few weeks ago, Hulk Hogan and the mother of his children Linda Bollea finally reached an undisclosed divorce settlement that they were both satisfied with, and Pop Tarts was assured Bollea was particularly delighted with her prominent payout. But is the former pro wrestler not living up to his legal word and giving his ex the agreed-to goods?

...

Consequently, Bollea is not only demanding her money and motorcycle, but now wants him to cover all the transport and attorney fees she has incurred, and if he still refuses to comply, has filed a request to have Hulk "incarcerated."

...

A rep for Hogan told Tarts that the "Hogan Knows Best" star has done no wrong and is "absolutely complying with the terms of the marital settlement agreement."

"Linda will receive everything she is entitled to under the agreement as soon as it is available to give to her," the rep said.'

Purple Heart's Final Beat - A Soldier Suicide Story

Matt · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S.: This is must-see.

"A cry for help from SecondClassCitizen.org, dedicated to an old friend.

This story is far too true, and far too common. Soldiers returning from war, only to be oppressed by the same system they swore allegiance to protect. This film chronicles the last day in the life of one soldier - or many - as countless veterans every month end their lives in desperation."

Conscious TV - On Parental Alienation

Matt · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Also via Jeremy S.:

Personally I still absolutely do not believe or accept that parental alienation is "gender neutral". I think that this is simply a position of convenience and 'politically correct' expediency and that Parental Alienation is still overwhelmingly rooted in female action. However this TV appearance and presentation by Dorcy Russel on the subject itself is very encouraging.

RADAR ALERT: Another DV Myth: DV Situations and Danger To Police

Matt · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Last week the mayor of Milwaukee was injured while intervening between a drunk man and his daughter's grandmother.[1]

ABC's Milwaukee affiliate, WISN, followed up with a story that asserted, "domestic violence situations are, by far, the number one reason that police officers are wounded on duty," and quoting "domestic violence experts" to back up this bit of received wisdom.[2]

There's just one problem with this claim – researchers who studied this very question[3] found it wasn't true. They found that domestic disturbance ranked fourth in the ratio of assaults to calls or service, but only fifth in the ratio of injuries to calls for service. In other words, he rate of injury from domestic disturbance calls was lower than the rate from four other types of calls.

UK: Hunt for girl gang over unprovoked attack

Proud_to_be_a_man · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"Police are hunting a group of women they believe are responsible for an attack on a man during a night out.

Today detectives released CCTV footage showing six female suspects, all believed to be in their twenties.

The 38-year-old, who was left with a broken ankle and stiletto-shaped wound on his head, had been on a night out with his girlfriend at the time of the unprovoked assault in Liverpool."

The fairer sex, my big fat hairy butt!

Study: Gender may not influence survival outcomes after coronary

anthony · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Doctors have long known that women are nearly twice as likely as men to die in the first month after a heart attack. But a new study published in the Journal of the American Medical Association looked behind this statistic to discover that gender may not directly influence survival outcomes after a heart attack.

...

Among all the studies, women died at a 9.6 percent rate compared with a 5.3 percent rate for men in the first month after a heart attack. Yet the study pointed out key differences between men and women in these statistics.

Women were having heart attacks at an older age than the men. Women were also more likely to have diabetes, high blood pressure and heart failure while men were more likely to smoke, to have had a previous heart attack and have a previous bypass surgery.'

'Single dads in recovery deserve equality'

anthony · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's face it: sometimes men make better single parents than women. Some researchers even believe that this is almost always true, as single men are better able to impart such things as empathy to their children than women (Father and Child Reunion). With all of the hooting and hollering for women's rights that has gone on over the last few decades, the time has come for the lack of consideration of the rights of men to be noticed and changed. Recovery is definitely one of these areas, at least in the city of Louisville, and single dads need to be afforded the same opportunities to parent as women.

Volunteers of America, for instance, has the only halfway houses in Louisville for women with children: Maude Boothe, Grace House, and Freedom House. There are no such places for men. Why is this? Don't men deserve the same chance to care for themselves and their children as women? How many of you know a single man in recovery with sole custody of his children because their mother chooses to drink/drug instead of parent her kids?'

UK: One in four boys fails writing test for seven-year-old pupils

anthony · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Girls swept the board in national curriculum tests for seven-year-olds, beating boys in every paper – reading, writing, speaking and listening, maths and science.

The biggest gap was in writing, where one in four boys failed to reach the standard expected, compared with just 13 per cent of girls.

Overall, the results showed a one percentage point improvement in writing this year from 80 per cent to 81 per cent – but a one per cent slump in maths to 89 per cent. Reading, and speaking and listening, remained the same at 84 per cent and 87 per cent respectively – as did science at 89 per cent.

David Laws, the Liberal Democrats' education spokesman, described the decline in maths scores as "a blow to ministers who have been targeting resources in order to improve performance". He added: "The Government should be especially ashamed of the fact that one in four boys failed to master basic writing skills by this age."'

Pitino lashes out about revived accusations

Matt · 26 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)—A seething Rick Pitino said he could stay on the sidelines no longer.

The Louisville men's basketball coach said video aired Wednesday of a police interview with a woman at the heart of sex and extortion scandal surrounding Pitino revived a "total fabrication of the truth." In it, Karen Cunagin Sypher accuses Pitino of sexually assaulting her, an allegation she brought to police after she was accused of trying to extort millions from the coach. Prosecutors did not pursue charges against Pitino.

Against his lawyer's advice, Pitino said he felt he needed to speak out.

"Everything that's been printed, everything that's been reported, everything that's been breaking in the news on the day Ted Kennedy died is 100 percent a lie, a lie," Pitino said in a hastily called news conference. "All of this has been a lie, a total fabrication of the truth."'

'John schools' try to change attitudes about paid sex

anthony · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NASHVILLE, Tennessee (CNN) -- The accused came from all walks of life: Retirees, dads and twentysomethings. An engineer, a business owner and an auto worker. A man in a wheelchair. Men in need of Spanish or Farsi translators.

All had tried to buy a prostitute's services and were caught by police. It was their first offense, and a county court referred them to a one-day program called the John School. It's a program run by volunteers and city officials in conjunction with Magdalene House, a nonprofit that works to get prostitutes off the streets.

School is led by former prostitutes, health experts, psychologists and law enforcement officers who talk to -- and at times berate -- the men about the risks of hiring a prostitute.

Prostitution is based on the law of supply and demand. The thinking is: Women won't stop selling sex until men stop buying.'

UK: Women are better at ousting the boss than making money, academics say

anthony · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women on the board can be bad for a company's coffers but they waste no time in ousting male chief executives who are not up to the job.

The claims by two academics appear to support suggestions this week by Harriet Harman that "men cannot be trusted to run things on their own". Labour's deputy leader and Equality Minister has also hinted that the credit crisis could have been prevented if more women had been present on bank boards — the so-called Lehman Sisters effect.

Research in the Journal of Financial Economics found that while female board members behaved more like independent directors, this did not necessarily translate into bigger profits. It said that too much interference from directors could result in a loss of trust and lack of information-sharing, further reducing profitability.'

GCSE results: Boys bag top grades in maths

anthony · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys have leapfrogged over girls in maths GCSE results, bagging more of the top grades for the first time since 1997 after the government scrapped coursework last year.

The remarkable two percentage point increase in the proportion of top grades awarded to boys for maths sparked a debate about whether girls and boys should be assessed differently after experts claimed that girls thrived in coursework tests while their male classmates did better at cramming for exams.

A 20-year trend of girls increasingly outperforming boys could begin to reverse next year because coursework is due to be scrapped for nearly all subjects following the move with maths this year. The decision to reduce coursework was made amid concerns of increasing plagiarism, but it now appears it will have a significant impact on the gender gap in education and could disadvantage girls.'

Sentence for false rape charge: 6 months, suspended, $1200 fine

anthony · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A night of infidelity covered up by a snowballing lie came unstuck for a young Palmerston North mother.

Jaimee-Lee Fawcett, 19, received a six-month suspended sentence and ordered to pay police and ACC reparations of more than $1200 in the Palmerston North District Court yesterday for making a false allegation of rape.

Police prosecutor Sergeant Chris Whitmore told the court Fawcett had made the false statement after she told her boyfriend she was raped by a man she had met during a night out drinking.

Her boyfriend had then persuaded her to complain to police, which she did on June 30 but she had made up a name for the man she alleged had raped her.'

South Africa: 'Nice time' turns to rape turns to perjury?

anthony · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An 18-year-old girl who allegedly opened a false gang rape case while she in fact secretly spent time with her boyfriend, will have to attend a diversion programme if she wants to avoid criminal prosecution.

This was decided after the Atteridgeville Magistrate's Court's control prosecutor and a probation officer discussed the case on Tuesday.

The teenager was arrested on Monday, on a charge of perjury, two days after she had opened a rape case at the Atteridgeville Police Station.

...

When she got home on August 22, she apparently lied to her parents, claiming she had been kidnapped by six unknown men and taken to Rustenburg and repeatedly raped.

After registering a false rape case at the Atteridgeville Police Station, the girl was taken to a doctor for treatment and examination at the State's expense.'

'Don't blame all Muslims, but don't blame all men either'

anthony · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The other explanation of honour killings is ideological. It originates at least partly, often primarily, in the need of ideological feminists (as distinct from egalitarian ones) to score political points by denying the importance of cultural differences. Consider Aysan Sev'er, a sociologist at the University of Toronto. During a televised interview with Mutsumi Takahashi, she argued that the underlying cause of honour killings is not Islam but misogyny. And misogyny prevails not only in Islamic countries. She implied, therefore, that Canada is really not much better for women than Afghanistan is...

...

Another implication is much more sophisticated but also much more sinister: the belief that violence against women is the primal and universal crime. Unlike women, from this point of view, men have some profound desire to subjugate women though also, in a derived sense, other men. From this, it supposedly follows that violence against women underlies all forms of violence and all forms of oppression; even men who do not commit acts of violence against women presumably benefit from the acts of other men and therefore participate in their guilt.

This brings us to the heart of this ideological explanation for honour killings: the notion of "collective guilt," according to which some people are evil by virtue of their genetic identity. But blaming all men is surely no better than blaming all women, all Muslims, all immigrants, and so on. Both sexism and racism are forms of prejudice. Both, in fact, rely on genetically defined enemies.'

'Women overlooked in health care debate'

anthony · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Women work less hours and hold more part time jobs? Looks like the author explained the wage gap myth without even knowing it. Excerpt:

'Women (and men who care about women and our future generations) should be involved in the health care debate currently taking place in Washington, D.C., and there are many reasons why.

Women's health care needs are generally greater than men's, particularly in their reproductive years. However, in curious contrast, our current system makes it more difficult for women to obtain and afford the health care services they need.
...
About 40 percent of all women are employed full-time, whereas more than half, or about 60 percent of men, are employed full-time. Additionally, many of those women working full-time are employed by small companies that do not provide health insurance.
...
And women as a group work fewer hours than men. In a recent survey, more than 50 percent of all women reported delaying or avoiding health care services as opposed to 39 percent of men.'

UK: 'Domestic abuse tokens' given out

anthony · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Another completely outrageous domestic violence picture included with the article. Excerpt:

'Coin tokens with the message "Don't live with domestic abuse" will be handed to Berkshire residents to raise awareness about the issue.

The tokens, which are the same size as a £1 coin, can be used for shopping trolleys and gym lockers, Slough Borough Council said.

The contact number for the charity Women's Aid is included on the coins.

Slough Domestic Abuse Forum members will hand the tokens out at Montem Leisure Centre on Wednesday.'

Medford woman arrested in puppy-drowning case

anthony · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Notice the woman smiling in the police photo. Excerpt:

'A Medford woman accused of drowning a friend's puppy earlier this month was arrested last week.

On Aug. 9 around 6 p.m., witnesses said Rachel Wilson-McCollough held a 6-month-old pitbull puppy under water in the Chetco River, according to Capt. Bob Rector of the Curry County sheriff's office. It appeared she was intentionally drowning the puppy, the witnesses said. By the time a deputy arrived at the remote spot, Wilson-McCollough was gone.
...
Bail was originally set at $25,000, but had been reduced to $7,500 by Monday morning. The district attorney's office filed charges of animal abuse -- not the aggravated animal abuse she was first booked for -- on Aug. 21. Rector said that the charges may have been reduced because the sheriff's office had not finished its investigation on Friday, and that the charges could be changed once the final report was in. As for bail being reduced so substantially, he had no explanation. "I cannot begin to tell you why that was lowered," he said.'

UK: Do women make better riot police?

anthony · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'London - After months of taking a beating over allegations of heavy-handedness, Britain's largest police force is trying a new tack: handing women commanders the reins.

In a bid to maintain control of a potentially explosive situation, the Metropolitan Police Service is taking a "softly, softly" approach this week as environmental campaigners undertake five days of action against targets ranging from government buildings to the offices of multinational mining firm Rio Tinto.
...
The move is based on the theory, according to some experts, that policewomen often view their work as a public service, while policemen approach their task from the perspective of "control through authority."'

UK: The courts took my children away from me because I'm a working mother

Matt · 27 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a successful working mother, Jo Joyce always thought that women could have it all.

A high-flying divorce lawyer, she revelled in the cut and thrust of the courtroom, proudly combining her career with bringing up two young children, Ross and Madelaine.

With her businessman husband, Andy, the family lived in a £600,000 detached house set in a three-acre garden in a glorious part of Nottinghamshire.
...
After years of high profile stunts by male pressure groups, such as Fathers4Justice, many people assume that men still systematically fare badly in battles over custody (or what is now known as the residency) of children heard in family courts.

Yet, gradually, the pendulum is swinging against mothers or, at least, mothers who go out to work.

The Equal Parenting Alliance, advising those in such heartbreaking disputes, believes that with the acquiescence of the courts half of the children of splitting parents now end up in the care of the father.
...
She says:'The system is flawed. Custody should not come down to whether you're a woman who works or stays at home.

It should be based on behaviour and, most importantly, whether you're a good parent. Other mothers should beware.'

And she is, almost certainly, right.'

Divorce-court smears meet unwilling victim

anthony · 28 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Divorce cases, especially celebrity splits, can get nasty, with bitterness-inspired accusations flying, sometimes with little regard for the truth. But when it's final, how does a celebrity target of those reputation-damaging claims – in the age of the Internet spread instantly around the globe – regain the esteem of those who read and perhaps believe the mud?

Craig Schelske is finding out.

He's the former husband of country music star Sara Evans. Their divorce was final some time ago and both have moved on with their lives. But Schelske described the smear-attacks he endured and its impact on his life.

Those allegations included claims of photographic evidence of sexual misbehavior on Schelske's part, including statements that he posted explicit images in the digital world – allegations he has denied throughout the process.

Now Schelske is working with a newly formed organization called FamiliesUnite.org that seeks to protect parents who are targeted in those divorce fights.'

Marc Rudov interview re Chris Brown-Rihanna case

Matt · 28 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S: Missed the live interview? Not to worry. Go to this link and click on the entry from the archive list entitled "Marc Rudov, the No Nonsense Man".

You will hear his interview with John Oakley this morning about the Chris Brown-Rihanna domestic violence travesty. It's a 15-minute interview and worth every second of listening. Marc has it absolutely right. It's a great, solid interview. I urge you to listen, you won't be disappointed.

MSNBC reports on man wearing "I cheated" sign

Matt · 28 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video story here. Apparently the subject of the video got caught or admitted to being unfaithful and so his wife required him (presumably under threat of some other event, like divorce) to stand on a street corner wearing a sign saying he cheated. The commentators seem happy about it, with one of them suggesting (predictably, the male commentator) that this doesn't go far enough to punish the man.

Well, I have some thoughts. First off, marital fidelity and infidelity are private matters, or at least I feel they ought to be. Wearing a sign saying you're a cheater and standing on a street corner pretty much destroys that. It destroys it for the man's wife, too. So it is surely a sign that the man in question has some serious self-respect/boundary issues. (I imagine the man's wife does, too, albeit ones of a different nature.)

Second, I wonder, if a woman who cheated on her husband were told that as part of her "penance" she must do the same thing that this man is doing, would the press be quite so supportive? Or is it more likely that the law would get involved and accuse the man of doing something DV-related, or otherwise, how would he be getting her to do that? Must be threatening violence or "exerting abusive power and control" over her in some way, would go the thinking.

Add nymphotropism to today's journalistic priorities and this is what you get.

Ironically, right next to this video is a clip from a recent David Letterman show of an interview with Anne Heche. Miss Heche bashes her ex-husband (a film cameraman she met while doing a movie) and the father of their child and exhorts everyone to avoid marriage at all costs. (I can understand that, especially if we are talking about people like her.) She complains that she is paying some kind of support to her lazy ex-husband and how she doesn't want anything to do with him, not able to understand why he wants her to show up at events with him, except in that she is "so wonderful".

You know, I wonder why he'd want to be around her too. But she can't say he doesn't want to include her in events with their child. (Well, maybe not until she goes back to court for some reason...)

Remember this is the same Anne Heche who has gone through six romantic partners (just the reported ones), and showed up naked on the doorstep of total strangers during some kind of drug-induced "psychological episode". Yes, she's been in a few movies, but has made her real bank simply by having the right girlfriend (Ellen DeGeneres). Now she is doing late-night interviews talking about how great she is, how her ex-husband and the father of their child is a no-goodnick loser, and how marriage in general sucks.

Experiences vary, Anne, but I am quite sure that being married to you would indeed suck.

Twin bail bondswomen mix sexism with shame for special press coverage

Matt · 28 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Not to say those who skip bail are to be sympathized with, especially as it puts others on the hook for it. But I wonder, if a group of "we're men!" bondsmen ran around locking up female suspects and going out of their way to shame them for it, do you suppose it'd be so well-received by the press?

They have it pretty much set up to dissuade any men from joining their efforts unless he just wants to wash cars. Though I cannot help but think that somewhere out there, there is not a man ready to wear a pink shirt and use pink handcuffs whilst seizing wanted fugitives. It is, after all, a rough economy. But I doubt you'll see a discrimination suit brought against these sisters any time soon.

Man arrested for 'prostituting his wife'

Matt · 28 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'COLONIE - The Albany County Sheriff's Department says the popular website Craigslist has failed to live up to its promises.

Sheriff's investigators posing as johns used Craigslist to contact women who agreed to meet them at area hotels and engage in sexual acts for money.

In one case, Donald Mureness of Gloversville was arrested for prostituting his wife, Stacia Mureness. Investigators say Donald Mureness also requested to be in the room and take pictures.'

So HE was arrested for pandering. No word about whether or not SHE was charged with prostitution.

False rape accusations taken up in quasi-MSM publication axolotl · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two recent Monroe County cases of false rape reports pose the question: What evidence is necessary to charge or convict someone of a sex crime?

The victim's report alone is all, authorities said. No physical or DNA evidence is needed.
...
"You're never innocent," Sundmaker said. "You're just not guilty beyond a reasonable doubt."'

Ax's take: Good news for the MR movement, but possible bad news for the reporter: he will no doubt be ostracized by the feminist-controlled media.

Jaycee Dugard and the Untold Story of Misandry

Anonymous · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Why doesn't anyone ask just a bit more about Jaycee's dads? The biological one, and the step-father? MisforMalevolent digs a bit more here. Excerpt:

'The story of Jaycee Lee Dugard has drawn a lot of interest lately, but for me, it draws interest for slightly different reasons. There are questions that I'd like to know the answers to, questions that probably won't be answered.

I mean, we all read the Big Media Story, like the MSN one linked above, right? 11-year-old girl is abducted, kept as sex slave by sex offender Phillip Garrido, who had two daughters by her. But other parts of the story just didn't seem to be being brought out. One minor thing - I'd like to learn more about Nancy Garrido, Phillip's wife, who assisted in the kidnapping and then the 18 years of imprisonment. Was Phillip more evil that Nancy? Probably. Probably a lot. But I'd hate for the woman who helped every step of the way to get off scot-free because she cuts a deal.

But even more than Nancy, I wondered about Jaycee's fathers. Her step-father, who tried to run down the Phillip and Nancy on a bicycle as they zoomed away with Jaycee in her car, and also about her biological father. Very few words wasted on the man who was raising Jaycee, or the man who fathered Jaycee at MSN.'

UK: Tycoon sues his ex-wife after discovering children were not his

anthony · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A devoted father who discovered that two of his three children had been fathered by another man is suing his ex-wife for compensation.

The millionaire businessman is demanding unlimited damages of more than £300,000 from his ex-wife and her new husband, including the cost of bringing up the two children he believed were his for more than a decade.

The man, who was the woman's first husband, raised the two children as his own — with no clue that they had been fathered by his wife's lover.

He accuses the pair of fraudulent misrepresentation and deceit, and says he has not been allowed to see the two children since 2006.'

Reason Online: 'This Point Cuts Both Ways'

anthony · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Forget death panels. If you're really interested in putting a stop to the public option (and some truly entertaining town hall meetings), let's talk circumcision panels.
...
Now people at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (those folks who often carry themselves as if they, too, had the ear of the Lord) are mulling a national campaign to promote "universal circumcision" for all boys in the United States in an effort to reduce the spread of HIV. Additionally, as The New York Times reported this week, the CDC is thinking about expanding the campaign to target promiscuous adult heterosexual men. (Abstinence or circumcision? How quickly do you think sex becomes overrated?)
...
What if the CDC, through meticulous study, were to realize that circumcision is an entirely worthless procedure? Why would "we" waste $400 a pop? Would the CDC campaign to "universally remove" the operation from hospitals? Today, incidentally, government-run Medicaid doesn't pay for the procedure in 16 states. Most private insurers, on the other hand, do.'

Canada: Domestic abuse law blasted

anthony · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ontario's "zero tolerance" policy on domestic violence has come into question following an unusual court case involving an Orangeville-area woman who was charged with assault after joking in emails that she could solve her marital problems with a gun, if only she could get one.

Alison Shaw, 40, was forced out of her home and ordered to stay away from her three children after her estranged husband claimed to have been "frightened" by the online missive, which followed what a judge described as a "one-punch bar fight" over a month earlier in an area Legion hall.

The ruling is unusual on two fronts:

It's a twist on what men's rights groups claim divorcing fathers have been suffering for years at the hands of police and the criminal court system. And it's creating buzz in legal circles because a well-respected family law expert who helped draft Ontario's so-called "duty to report" policy 30 years ago now says it needs a review and better use of discretion.'

Audio: Health Care Reform Must Do More To Address Men's Health Issues

anthony · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Scott Williams, Vice President of the Men's Health Network, a non-profit organization located in Washington, D.C., says Congress must ensure that reform legislation addresses health issues that specifically affect males. Williams says his organization would prefer that the legislation include a mandate for the creation of an Office of Men's Health within the U.S. Department of Health. This office, or task force, says Williams, would focus on promoting awareness of and early detection of medical conditions such as prostate cancer.'

Fathers' rights attorney co-authors new Illinois laws

anthony · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Effective immediately, Gov. Pat Quinn has just signed into law 3 Illinois Council on Responsible Fatherhood (ICRF) bills that passed both houses of the General Assembly.

"As Chairman of the ICRF, I am pleased to have co-authored these bills. I want to thank legislators from both parties who helped pass these new laws," said Attorney Jeffery Leving.

SB 1628, sponsored by Sen. Iris Martinez and in the House by Rep. Deborah Mell, accomplishes two things: It amends the Paternity Act and other Acts, to insure that both parties be informed of their right to DNA testing before an adjudication of paternity can be made either through a voluntary acknowledgment of paternity, court proceedings or an administrative law judge. It also amends the visitation interference section of the Criminal Code and sets forth that it is now a criminal offense to deny the other parent their right to parenting time or custody time. This bill creates the first laws of their kind in our nation.'

Protecting Fathers' Rights in Move-Away Petitions

anthony · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'California law has long favored awarding primary custody of children to mothers over fathers. This disturbing trend only has served to undervalue the important role fathers play in their children's lives and reinforce outdated gender stereotypes that mothers are best-suited for raising children.

Until recently, state law also has granted mothers an almost limitless right to relocate with their children. Before a custodial parent can legally move to a new location with their children, they must file a move-away petition with the court. The non-custodial parent also must receive a copy of the petition and will be given a chance to contest the move. If the custodial parent does not file the request and receive permission from the court, the parent can be forced to return to California. The children also may be placed temporarily with the non-custodial parent until the court makes its decision.'

Police charge woman with filing false rape report

anthony · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 22-year-old Tobyhanna woman is charged with lying to police when she reported that she was raped in her home in July, police said in a release on Wednesday. According to Pocono Mountain Regional Police, the woman called 911 around 4 a.m. on July 7 and reported that an unknown man had entered her home in the Pocono Farms East community and sexually assaulted her and threatened to kill her before fleeing the scene.

After a complete investigation by police it was determined that the allegations made by the woman, Brandy E. Phy, were false. She was arrested on July 24 and charged with making false reports to law enforcement and tampering with or fabricating evidence.'

Number of women arrested for drunken driving jumped nearly 30 percent

nbdspcl · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"According to the federal government and lawyers who defend driving-under-the-influence cases, the courts are witnessing a rise in drunken driving cases involving women. Over the last decade, FBI statistics say, the absolute number of women arrested for drunken driving jumped nearly 30 percent. Over the same decade, DUI arrests of men decreased by 7.5 percent.
...
No surprise for Los Angeles DUI attorney Lawrence Taylor of the Law Offices of Lawrence Taylor, who wrote the book "Drunk Driving Defense". He has long seen this coming.

"This isn't something that happened in the last few months. This has been going on as a steady phenomenon for a number of years," Taylor said. The last few years in particular, he added, noting that women now account for up to 40 percent of his firm's clientele.

His theory? "As women are more liberated and take part in the workplace more and are less focused on the home, they are exposed to more pressures and will turn to things like alcohol, as men have always done," Taylor said."'

UK: Female drug deaths 'rise by 17%' - male deaths still almost 250% higher

nbdspcl · 29 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The number of women dying drug-related deaths in England and Wales rose by 17% in 2008 to 853, according to the Office for National Statistics.

The number of male deaths also rose 8% compared with 2007 to 2,075 - the highest total since 2001.

The figures, which include legal and illegal drugs, also show cocaine caused 235 deaths in 2008 - up 20% from 2007.

The government said it had invested more in treatment programmes, but the Lib Dems called the rises "horrifying".'

Phoenix woman indicted in dismemberment of man

Anonymous · 31 August 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHOENIX - A grand jury has indicted a Phoenix woman accused of stabbing a disabled man 50 times before dismembering and burning his body.

The Maricopa County Attorney's Office said Friday that 33-year-old Angela Simpson is charged with first-degree murder, kidnapping and abandonment or concealment of a dead body in the murder of 46-year-old Terry Neely.

Maricopa County Attorney Andrew Thomas said his office will determine later whether to seek the death penalty.'

UK: Women three times more likely to be arrested for domestic violence

anthony · 1 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are responsible for most cases of domestic violence, but women are three times more likely to be arrested for incidents of abuse, research reveals today.

A report into domestic abuse and gender by Bristol University found that the majority of cases involved alcohol misuse, that women were more likely to use a weapon to protect themselves and that children were present in the majority of cases.

Previous research has shown that the vast majority of domestic violence perpetrators recorded by the police are men (92%) and their victims mainly female (91%), with many more repeat incidents recorded for male than female perpetrators. While the majority of incidents of domestic violence recorded by the police involve male-to-female abuse, little is known about the nature of incidents where men are recorded as victims and women as perpetrators, nor about the circumstances where both partners are recorded as perpetrators.'

Letters to the editor can be sent to letters-at-guardian.co.uk

US News columnist: : "In terms of a woman's health, circumcision makes sense..."

anthony · 1 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention caused quite a stir last week when word slipped out that the agency was considering, for the first time, making public health recommendations concerning circumcision. In terms of a woman's health, circumcision makes sense because it lowers a man's risk of getting infected with HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases and, thus, decreases his likelihood of transmitting them to his female partner. That's probably why the editorial board of the San Francisco Chronicle has come out supporting recommendations, expected to be issued by the CDC next year, in favor of circumcision to "curb the spread of HIV and other infections." But those vehemently opposed to circumcision—who call themselves "intactivists"—have expressed outrage that the government is thinking about recommending that all newborn boys be circumcised. They contend it's a form of mutilation that destroys a man's ability to fully experience sexual pleasure.
...
Certainly, the debate isn't about mandatory snipping in the hospital cradle or whether circumcision will solve the AIDS crisis. But I do think CDC folks will have to evaluate the latest research carefully before deciding to take a cultural practice and turn it into a public health mission.'

Rwanda: Massive circumcision effort set to start in 2010

anthony · 1 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kigali — A massive sensitization programme on circumcision is expected to kick off early next year as one key measure to combat HIV/AIDS.

The exercise has for long been delayed because of the lack of capable personnel to carry out the circumcisions.

Mass male-circumcision, a policy that was adopted by government last year, as a way of reducing the HIV/AIDS infection rate is at a snail-pace due to lack of capacity to carry it out countrywide, according to Dr. Richard Sezibera, the Minister of Health.

...

Rwanda launched a campaign to encourage all men to be circumcised, to reduce the risk of catching HIV/AIDS. Health experts say that men who are circumcised are 60 percent more likely to be protected against HIV during sexual intercourse than those who are not.

The ministry said that soldiers, policemen and students would be asked to come forward first for circumcision. The National Coordinator of HIV clinical prevention in TRAC plus, Elévaniè Nyankesha Umuny'ana said that, once training of health specialist is done, a mass sensitization campaign of this policy will begin.'

UK: Neeeoww! Let’s stick up for boisterous boys

anthony · 1 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was an axiom of 1970s feminists that, apart from a bit of irritating biology, boys and girls were the same. Girls could be motorbike engineers and corporate lawyers, boys could be homebody childminders. And so they can.

They adjured us to give our girl-babies toy power-drills and press dollies and dusters on the lads. Any female infant found wrapping her Fisher-Price workbench in a shawl and nursing it, any boy-child going “Neeeeeeowwwwwww!” and setting up aerial battles between his toy dustpan and brush, must in this theory be firmly dissuaded.
...
Quite apart from the literal feminisation of the teaching profession, even school routines militate against young male biology: as fewer children walk to school, boys arrive with natural surplus energy, which it is a torment to suppress. One primary school that used to start with a quiet assembly tried replacing it with ten minutes of energetic running at the start of the day: boys’ disruption in class fell away.'

Woman arrested for stabbing man, setting fire

anthony · 1 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'PUNXSUTAWNEY - State police at Punxsutawney report that Diane Johns, 27, of Punxsutawney was arrested and arraigned Saturday on charges of attempted homicide, aggravated assault, simple assault and arson.

On Thursday, Ms. Johns and a 47-year-old Rochester Mills man were involved in an altercation at a Locust Road residence in Canoe Township, Indiana County. During the altercation, Ms. Johns allegedly stabbed the man several times.

She also set several fires within the man's residence, which were extinguished by state troopers upon their arrival.
...
Ms. Johns is currently housed in the Indiana County Jail in lieu of $250,000 bail. A preliminary hearing has not been set.'

Nevada woman arrested in death of newborn son

anthony · 1 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HENDERSON, Nev. — A 19-year-old Las Vegas-area woman has been arrested on allegations that she hid her pregnancy and then killed her newborn son because she was afraid her mother would be mad at her for giving birth out of wedlock.

...

Police allege Camero hid the pregnancy, delivered the child by herself at her home Sunday and then suffocated him.

An arrest report says Camero told investigators she smothered the baby because she was afraid her mother would throw her out of the house.'

Woman Arrested for Throwing Pot of Hot Grease on Husband

anthony · 1 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Greenwood woman was arrested on Thursday after throwing a pot of hot grease on her husband.
...
According to Greenwood City Police department reports, officers were dispatched to Pelzer Street in reference to an assault. When officers arrived they spoke with Ms. Coates who stated she had been assaulted by her husband, Johnny Coates. Coates explained to officers she had been preparing dinner when her husband entered the residence “cursing and yelling” at her.

When Mr. Coates was questioned by officers he claimed his wife had started arguing with him over money. He stated while arguing his wife began hitting him on his shoulder with her cane. He stated he tried to take the cane away from her, but she proceeded to bite him. After Mr. Coates was finally able to get the cane away from her, he claimed she threw a pot with hot grease at him, burning his left arm.'

NY Times Blog: "Do Women Make Better Loan Officers?"

anthony · 1 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As we've noted before, men have suffered more job losses during this recession than women. But several recent studies have blamed the excesses of finance, the industry that dragged us into said "mancession," on men themselves. (Way to show gender solidarity, guys.)

...

A new working paper looks at loans given by a commercial bank in Albania from 1996-2006. From the abstract:

[W]e find that loans screened and monitored by female loan officers show statistically and economically significant lower default rates than loans handled by male loan officers. This effect comes in addition to a lower default rate of female borrowers and cannot be explained by sample selection, overconfidence of male loan officers or experience differences between female and male loan officers. Our results seem to be driven by differences in monitoring, as loan officers of different gender do not seem to screen borrowers differently based on observable borrower characteristics. This suggests that gender indeed matters in banking.'

DAHMW offering on-line camera-enabled support group services

anthony · 1 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since 2000 the Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men & Women (DAHMW) has been offering supportive services to abuse survivors through its nationally available toll-free helpline.

For the first time ever male survivors of domestic abuse will now have available to them a peer led, 12-week support group that they may attend right from home.

This support group will give participants an opportunity to understand the effects of abuse on themselves and their children, explore what healthy intimate relationships look like, and help them toachieve personal growth in all areas of their life.
...
Participants will use virtual cameras and tune in online at scheduled times once a week for 12 weeks.

Participants must have access to a computer and high-speed Internet service.

DAHMW will reimburse participant for the web camera if they need to buy one.'

CDC's "Fact Sheet on Circumcision"

anthony · 1 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Fact sheet here (.pdf file). Excerpt:

'This fact sheet summarizes information in four areas of male circumcision: 1) male circumcision and risk for HIV transmission; 2) male circumcision and other health conditions; 3) risks associated with male circumcision; and 4) status of HIV infection and male circumcision in the United States.
...
Summary
Male circumcision has been associated with a lower risk for HIV infection in international observational studies and in three randomized controlled clinical trials. It is possible, but not yet adequately assessed, that male circumcision could reduce male-to-female transmission of HIV, although probably to a lesser extent than female-to-male transmission. Male circumcision has also been associated with a number of other health benefits. Although there are risks to male circumcision, serious complications are rare. Accordingly, male circumcision, together with other prevention interventions, could play an important role in HIV prevention in settings similar to those of the clinical trials [41, 42].'

Notice this document was updated in Feb. 2008. I await this year's update (assuming it happens) with 'bated breath.

Court allows ex-Duke lacrosse coach to pursue slander suit

anthony · 2 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) -- A North Carolina appeals court has ruled that Duke University's former lacrosse coach can pursue a slander lawsuit against the school and its former spokesman.

Duke's attorney has argued that the coach fired during a lacrosse scandal should be required to settle his claims through arbitration. Pressler's lawyers say arbitration could limit what the coach can get in damages.

The Court of Appeals decided Tuesday that Michael Pressler isn't required to arbitrate his slander and libel claims.

Pressler had settled with the school after he was fired following a stripper's false accusations in 2006 that she was raped at a team party. But the coach's lawsuit says Duke violated the settlement when a former spokesman made disparaging comments about Pressler to the media.'

CBS: 'Ditching Boys: Why Attending a Womens' College is a Great Idea'

anthony · 2 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Spending four years at a girls' high school was life changing. I not only received a first-class education, but I regained the confidence that slipped away during my middle-schools years and I discovered that boys aren't the only ones who can be leaders.

Because of my love of girls' schools, I was fascinated to stumble across research that bears out what I experienced as a teenager. The longitudinal study, which surveyed alumni from a 27-year-period, found that undergrads who studied at women's colleges rated their schools more highly than females who attended state universities or even coed liberal arts colleges.'

MND: The Depths of Male Disposability

anthony · 2 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'Male disposability is so deeply ingrained into the very fabric of our culture, that we rarely even think about it. And yet, it is one of the defining features of what it means to be a man. Throughout history, men have filled the roles and performed the tasks that demanded that you risk your life. The only risk that couldn't be removed from women was that of child-bearing, but apart from that women have more or less always been kept out of harms way.

Now let's not make the mistake that many contemporary feminists do and start talking about women's evil oppression of men or something along those lines. Men being defined as the disposable sex was not a personal thing nor was it some kind of gender war (there wasn't any room for a gender war in historical times). Women simply needed to be kept safe to ensure that the next generation was large enough to sustain or increase the influence of the community in question.'

Two of four women accused of revengeful sexual assault back in court

anthony · 2 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two of the four women accused of tying up a man to get revenge for his alleged cheating are due back in Calumet County Circuit Court today.
...
And Ziemann then reportedly used Krazy Glue to attach the man's sex organ to his stomach. Prosecutors said Davis was romantically involved with the three defendants outside his marriage.

The case has received national publicity. After the women were charged, Davis was charged with several unrelated crimes.'

Woman charged with abducting, beating toddler

Scottie · 2 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Funny how CBC has not opened this story up for comments. Excerpt:

'A 19-year-old woman has been charged with attempted murder and abduction after the brutal beating of a toddler in Winnipeg early Tuesday.

The 14-month-old girl, named Vanessa, was attacked around 4:30 a.m. CT near a Manitoba Housing complex and playground on Chudley Street.

The woman charged, Nikita Solange Eaglestick, and the girl are not related, Winnipeg police said.'

Attorney for kidnap case wife worried by media coverage

anthony · 2 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EL DORADO HILLS, California (CNN) -- The attorney for Nancy Garrido, charged in the Jaycee Lee Dugard abduction case, expressed concern Wednesday that intense media coverage may prejudice his client's ability to get a fair trial.

"There have been some misstatements made in the media, and possibly very innocent misstatements like, you know, 'She's charged with 29 counts, she was there, therefore she must be culpable,' " Gilbert Maines told CNN's "American Morning" on Wednesday.
...
"I'm sure you understand that this is a horrendous thing for her," Maines said. "I mean I realize it's horrendous for Jaycee and her parents and the children, but my concern right now is that my client get a fair trial."'

"Sin by Silence" - DV film documentary to be aired at university

anthony · 2 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vanguard University is hosting a free screening of the documentary “Sin by Silence,” a film about battered women and their seemingly hopeless options to get out of abusive relationships.
...
The film was inspired by a Vanguard professor’s book on battered women who were killers. The documentary is directed by Vanguard alumna Olivia Klaus and co-produced and edited by Vanguard assistant professor Ann-Caryn Cleveland.

The documentary questions why women don’t leave their abusers, examines the systems in place to help women gain independence from the relationships and aims to help people understand how domestic violence occurs today.

Organizers will take the movie on a tour of the 10 states with the most documented incidents of domestic violence in the country, school officials said.'

Women who killed men seek freedom

anthony · 3 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The hearings are the result of a 10-year effort by a group of attorneys and advocates for domestic violence victims. The group, the Missouri Battered Women's Clemency Coalition, has taken up 11 cases in Missouri, and has already helped get three women released early.

At the time the women were arrested, the group argues, there were few resources for battered women, domestic violence was poorly understood and evidence of abuse was not presented at trial.

"If they were in these situations today, they would not have been charged with the crimes they were charged with," said Colleen Coble, one of the leaders in the Clemency Coalition. "There was nothing for these women. They were left alone."
...
They will encounter some opposition. The prosecutors in their cases, and some family members of their slain husbands, have argued that no evidence of domestic violence exists.'

'More $$ for fighting male violence'

anthony · 3 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

“Boys are socialized to violence,” said Frank Durham, a UI associate professor of journalism and Antiviolence Council member.

He said it is difficult for young men to break away from that mainstream definition of masculinity.

“The mentoring program would offer acceptable, pro-social ways to be out of the mainstream,” he said.

Intended to forge relationships among students and faculty and staff members, the program will encourage discussions about masculinity and help raise awareness about issues such as dating violence and stalking.
...
The council got its start in 2008, drawing some funds from a $200,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Justice Office on Violence Against Women. The money ran out in May, taking with it government directives that required a specific focus on violence against women.'

‘Why didn’t she just leave?’ and other good phrases to get men out of trouble

anthony · 3 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A second way to absolve sporting men of any responsibility for their violence against women is what I call the “Four Corners strategy”. This strategy, used on the TV show Four Corners earlier this year, says that, because footballers must put up with being bashed around on the footy field, the sport inevitably attracts men with “risk taker” personalities. This means they can’t be held responsible for bashing and raping women.
...
This strategy works particularly well for men who haven’t been caught bashing or raping women before, because their behaviour can be written off as an “isolated incident”, or a mistake that was totally out-of-character. If Inglis can be persuaded to make a few contrite comments to the media this strategy should suffice. No one really wants to punish Inglis and make an example out him, especially with all his talent and the fortunes of the Storm at stake. Imagine if such a successful guy were to be made an example of! Men all over Australia would be given reason to think that their violence against women might actually have lasting consequences.'

Pennsylvania Woman Raped, Burned Man, Police Say

anthony · 3 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'WASHINGTON, Pa. — Police say a southwestern Pennsylvania woman raped a man and burned him with a curling iron to get him to comply.

Police say the 22-year-old man knows his alleged attacker, 23-year-old Samantha Harvey, of Washington, Pa.

Online court records don't list an attorney for Harvey who is jailed because the new charges violate her probation on theft and threat charges for stealing money from her grandmother in 2006.

Police charged Harvey Tuesday after investigating the man's claim that she forced him to have sex at his home on Aug. 20. The man told police Harvey clipped the hot curling iron to his ear and burned his genitals with it.

Harvey is also charged with involuntary deviate sexual intercourse, terroristic threats and reckless endangerment.'

High praise for football player who disarmed girl with gun on bus

anthony · 3 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A Mississippi high school football player is being hailed as a hero for saving a school bus full of elementary and high school students from a gun-wielding girl.

Surveillance camera footage on the Yazoo County school bus on Tuesday captured 18-year-old Kaleb Eulls tackling the 14-year-old girl while the children evacuated the bus.

Eulls managed to wrestle the .380-caliber semi-automatic handgun from her, Yazoo County Sheriff Thomas Vaughan told CNN.

...

The girl was arrested and taken into custody as a juvenile. She faces 22 counts of attempted aggravated assault, 22 counts of kidnapping and one count of possession of a firearm on school property because the bus is leased by the school district, Vaughan said.'

Keanu Reeves Agrees to DNA Test in Paternity Case

anthony · 4 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Back in May, we reported that a 46-year-old Canadian woman filed a lawsuit against Keanu Reeves, alleging that he fathered her four children, who are all in their mid-20s. She claimed that they were childhood friends, but Reeves said that he has no idea who she is.

She took it as far as demanding that Reeves undergoes a DNA test, stating that he owes her $3 million per month in spousal support (retroactive from November 2006) and $150,000 per month in child support (retroactive from June 1988). That adds up to about $140 million.

Fast forward to today, and the woman is still putting pressure on Reeves. To make the problem go away, Reeves' lawyer advised the 45-year-old actor to take the paternity test to "clear his name." And that's exactly what he's now planning to do.'

Texas DNA exonerees find prosperity after prison

Matt · 4 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'He and other exonerees in Texas, which leads the nation in freeing the wrongly convicted, soon will become instant millionaires under a new state law that took effect this week.

Exonerees will get $80,000 for each year they spent behind bars. The compensation also includes lifetime annuity payments that for most of the wrongly convicted are worth between $40,000 and $50,000 a year — making it by far the nation's most generous package.
...
His payday for his imprisonment — a time he described as "a nightmare," "hell" and "slavery" — should come by mid-November after the state's 45-day processing period.

Exonerees also receive an array of social services, including job training, tuition credits and access to medical and dental treatment. Though 27 other states have some form of compensation law for the wrongly convicted, none comes close to offering the social services and money Texas provides.

The annuity payments are especially popular among exonerees, who acknowledge their lack of experience in managing personal finances. A social worker who meets with the exonerees is setting them up with financial advisers and has led discussions alerting them to swindlers.'

The Growing Problem Of Wrongful Conviction

Matt · 4 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Written in 2003, but highly relevant to today. While the article doesn't mention men as such, you will note all the targets for these improper prosecutions were men. The public rushes to the sympathetic aid of women while rushing as aggressively to condemn men merely upon accusation. Excerpt:

'Wrongful conviction is on the rise because the protections against it have been eroded by the pursuit of devils—drug dealers, child molesters, environmental polluters, white-collar criminals, and terrorists—all of whom must be rounded up at all cost. In doing so, we have done what Sir Thomas More warns against in the play 'A Man for All Seasons': we have cut a great swath in the law.

...

...Blackstone conceived of law as the people's shield. It is better, he said, for ten guilty men to go free than for one innocent man to be convicted. In contrast, Bentham viewed the law as a weapon the government wields to punish criminals or anyone else in the name of the greatest good for the greatest number. He believed in rounding up people who might commit crimes. He wanted to restore torture to aid in securing convictions, and he believed that a defendant's lawyer had an obligation to aid the prosecution.

...

Every area of law reflects widespread disregard for the "Rights of Englishmen." Superfund law takes retroactive law back generations and places liability on people and organizations that never contributed an ounce of hazardous waste to a Superfund site (Roberts and Stratton 2000, 70–81). In child abuse cases, due process and the right to confront one's accusers do not exist. Anonymous allegations serve as grounds for seizing children and placing them in the hands of "therapists" who coax them into accusations (Lyon 1998; Roberts and Stratton 2000, 144). The Justice Department and the Housing and Urban Development Department have coerced neighborhoods that are legally using local zoning ordinances to keep out commercially operated halfway houses and drug-treatment clinics into abandoning their right to equal standing under the law (Roberts and Stratton 2000, 113–21).

The law as Blackstone understood it has been lost. Formerly, prosecutorial behavior was regulated by conscience and by the carefully inculcated ethic that the prosecutor's duty is to serve justice by finding the truth. The purpose of a trial was to weigh the evidence for and against the defendant, not to convict him at any cost. A prosecutor's career and self-esteem did not depend on his conviction rate. A prosecutor who suborned perjury or withheld exculpatory evidence in order to win a case was regarded as a shameful figure and an embarrassment to the law.'

British Woman Denies Enslavement and Abuse of Three Young Girls

anthony · 4 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A British woman has denied enslaving three girls and forcing them to work for up to 20 hours a day in horrific conditions.

Mercedes Farquharson, 63, is alleged to have banned the girls, who were not her natural children, from going to school or having friends.

Charges said she forced them to perform physical labor in harsh conditions at her house in Monroe, North Carolina, in the United States.
...
The girls were rescued in 2005 at the ages of 15, 18 and 22 following complaints from neighbors of suspicious activity at the house.'

USA Today: Women gain as men lose jobs

anthony · 4 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Women are on the verge of outnumbering men in the workforce for the first time, a historic reversal caused by long-term changes in women's roles and massive job losses for men during this recession.

Women held 49.83% of the nation's 132 million jobs in June and they're gaining the vast majority of jobs in the few sectors of the economy that are growing, according to the most recent numbers available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

...

Through June, men have lost 74% of the 6.4 million jobs erased since the recession began in December 2007. Men have lost more than 3 million jobs in construction and manufacturing alone.

...

The gender transformation is especially remarkable in local government's 14.6 million-person workforce. Cities, schools, water authorities and other local jurisdictions have cut 86,000 men from payrolls during the recession — while adding 167,000 women, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.'

Italy's end to employment discrimination has women crying foul

anthony · 4 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Milan, Italy – Labor laws should not make any distinction based on gender: This may seem obvious in most democracies. Yet a public outcry arose when the Italian parliament recently ratified a new law ending discrimination in the retirement age between men and women – much of it from women's rights groups and labor unions.

Until now, female employees could retire at 60, five years earlier than their male counterparts – a double standard based on the consideration that women also take care of the housework and family. The European Commission found the rule illegal last year, and the government acted to bring Italy into compliance.

But not all women are happy about the change – underscoring how traditional ideas about gender roles have held surprisingly firm in Italy, both in raising children and looking after ailing parents.'

UK: Men lose their minds speaking to pretty women

anthony · 4 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The research shows men who spend even a few minutes in the company of an attractive woman perform less well in tests designed to measure brain function than those who chat to someone they do not find attractive.

Researchers who carried out the study, published in the Journal of Experimental and Social Psychology, think the reason may be that men use up so much of their brain function or 'cognitive resources' trying to impress beautiful women, they have little left for other tasks.

The findings have implications for the performance of men who flirt with women in the workplace, or even exam results in mixed-sex schools.
...

But when the task was repeated with a group of female volunteers, they did not get the same results. Memory scores stayed the same, whether they had chatted to a man or a woman.
...
Psychologist Dr George Fieldman, a member of the British Psychological Society, said the findings reflect the fact that men are programmed to think about ways to pass on their genes.
...
'But a woman also looks for signs of other attributes, such as wealth, youth and kindness. Just the look of the man would be unlikely to have the same effect.'

UK: 'Honeytrap' killer jailed for a minimum of 10 years

Michael · 4 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A teenage girl who acted as a 'honeytrap' to lure a smitten 16-year-old to his death at the hands of a love rival was locked up for a minimum of 10 years today.

Samantha Joseph led lovestruck Shakilus Townsend into an ambush in a quiet cul-de-sac where he was beaten with baseball bats and stabbed six times.

The teenager bled to death after the 'relentless and merciless attack' by a masked and hooded gang in Thornton Heath, South London, in July last year.'

FOX: 8 Sex Myths About Women

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here are just some of the notions that still need debunking:

1. She always needs to have an emotional connection for sex.

Sure, some women need romance and emotional intimacy to have sex and – more importantly – enjoy it. But every now and then, some gals have no qualms about getting down and dirty. Some can have emotionless sex. Some are able to give themselves permission to indulge in nothing but raw, carnal action.

More women likely would if it weren't for cultural prohibitions that still exist around women enjoying themselves sexually. Even more would have sex for sex's sake if they didn't worry about being called whores or sluts.
...
8. She's less likely to cheat than men.

If asked, men 'fess up. Yeah, they cheated, which begs the question ... With whom? Adultery has payoffs for a woman. For example, having someone else interested in her means more resources. A woman simply won't admit to her infidelity as easily, namely for fear of losing the support of her primary relationship. The scarlet letter she's likelier to bear doesn't exactly bring her to confessional either.'

Canada: Unique problems of boys unrecognized, untreated

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OTTAWA — Boys and girls both have their issues, but boys are the ones getting no support, a new study suggests.

More men than women are prime ministers and brain surgeons, making it easy to think boys have it made, says the study by psychology professor Judith Kleinfeld. She says we forget that men are also more likely than women to be broke, homeless and illiterate.

...

"The difficulties of boys, however, which span far more areas, have been generally ignored. It is boys who are performing at strikingly lower levels in literacy," she writes in the journal Gender Issues. It is boys who are more likely to quit school early, to be in special education, to have behaviour problems and be suspended or expelled.'

Woman faces charges after false rape claim

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A WOMAN has been charged with three counts of perverting the course of justice after police investigated rape allegations.

Amanda Ruth Ossitt, 44, of Avenue Close, Harrogate, appeared before the town's magistrates on Tuesday and was sent for trial at York Crown Court, where she will make an initial appearance on Monday.

Ossitt, who did not enter any pleas, is accused of making a false report of rape on November 8, 2006, on April 4 this year and on May 16.'

India: Court orders trial of woman, daughter for false rape case

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Delhi court today ordered criminal prosecution of a woman and her minor daughter, taking strong exception to their acts of implicating a man with rape charge and then retracting from their statements.

Additional Sessions Judge Nivedita Anil Sharma acquitted Sunil of the charge of rape under Section 376 and molestion under Section 354 of the IPC, finding no evidence against him.

The court said those who file false cases should not be spared as they abuse the process of law and waste the time of courts and the police machinery.

"Such type of litigants who without any justified reason drag the matter for several years or file false cases/FIRs should not be pardoned as it has not only caused unnecessary harrassment to the accused but also caused wastage of the time of the police," the court said, adding they also undermined the authority of law.'

Sweden: 'Taxpayers should not have to fund feminist porn'

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Engberg has also tried to make feminist porn before, which has resulted in a lesbian porn film and a film of women's' facial expressions at the point of orgasm. Her vision is to get make the porn industry more appealing to women, all in the name of feminism. She also claims that women's sexuality is more multi-faceted than men's.

But to argue that girls having sex with girls and women masturbating is somehow a good alternative to mainstream porn feels like a completely alien concept to me, and to many other women. Furthermore, most people would agree that the state should not fund pornography. And when it does, should it really only benefit women, all in the name of equality? If a man had sought and received similar funding for ‘regular’ porn, it wouldn’t have taken long before there was an outcry from supporters of equality between the sexes.

Although the market catering for women's sexuality is increasing, it is still limited. There can be no doubt that the porn industry is dominated by men. It is therefore not the idea of developing the industry in favour of women that is upsetting – this is something that many women would welcome - it is the fact that it is happening with our tax money under the cloak of feminism. By labeling lesbian sex as feminist, it also contributes to the prejudiced notion that the equality debate is all about excluding men and privileging women.'

SFGate Editorial: CDC should recommend routine circumcision

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention are weighing a proposal to recommend routine circumcision for all baby boys born in the United States to curb the spread of HIV and other infections. The CDC should ignore the cries of outrage from so-called "intactivists" and recommend the procedure. The evidence shows that the benefits of circumcision outweigh the risks.
...
Well, the problem centers on the hysterical intactivists, who believe that: A. circumcision is "mutilation"; and that B. baby boys should be able to "decide for themselves," as though families have no right to make decisions about their children's health, treatment and culture. (Not to mention the health and safety of the larger society.)

The CDC should recommend routine circumcision.'

"Circumcision: What could go wrong?"

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Excessive bleeding; This is among the commonest complications and Dr Senoga explains that while it could be because the vessels are not closed off properly, it could also be a case out of anyone's control. "Unfortunately, we don't do prior health checks to determine each individual's health predisposition; we assume everyone is normal. But there are people with a tendency to over bleed and these usually bleed excessively after circumcision," he explains. In this case, the person would have to be watched and helped by doctors to curb the bleeding.
...
Local infection/sepsis; Also among the mostly likely complications, this is usually due to poor hygiene during or after the procedure. "This usually arises from those things people add thinking they are healing the wound, instead making the wound septic," says the doctor adding, "Only a doctor should tend to that wound."
...
Penile adhesions: Here, the remaining foreskin re-attaches and forms scar tissue, and infection, usually a result of poor circumcision procedure.
...
Of course the benefits outweigh the possibility of complications so these shouldn't be reason for one to shun the procedure. Ensure that you seek out not only qualified but also experienced medical personnel for the procedure.'

Woman Arrested After French Kissing a 6-Yr-Old boy

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Oakhurst, CA (KFSN) -- An Oakhurst woman accused of French kissing a 6-year-old boy is in jail.

Deputies arrested Krista Arceneaux Wednesday night in Bass Lake. They say she grabbed the little boy, kissed him, and said he was sexy ... then disappeared into a bar.

She's charged with lewd and lascivious acts with a child, interfering with a deputy who tried to arrest her. The deputy also says she had marijuana in her purse, and is also facing a drug charge.'

Castle Rock woman arrested for falsely accusing cop of rape

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DOUGLAS COUNTY - A Castle Rock woman has been arrested on charges of false reporting, forgery, and attempting to influence a public servant. 22-year-old Emily J. Petersen faces charges in connection with an incident that happened at a bar back in June.

On June 13, 2009, at around 1:30 am Petersen and several friends were at the Tailgate Tavern in Parker. Petersen was asked to leave because the bar was closing; she became uncooperative because she didn't want to leave, police said.

The staff asked for assistance from the Parker Police Department in removing Petersen from the premises. Petersen was escorted out of the bar by two uniformed Parker Police Officers.'

UK: Woman held after man is stabbed

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 17-year-old woman has been arrested after a man in his 30s was stabbed and died in hospital in Wells, Somerset.

Police were called to a property in Charter Way in the early hours of Friday following reports of a disturbance there.

The victim was taken to Bath's Royal United Hospital but died later.

"A woman aged 17 has been arrested on suspicion of murder and continues to be questioned by detectives," an Avon and Somerset Police spokesman said.

The house has been cordoned off and forensic examiners are looking at the scene.'

Police are appealing for witnesses.'

'We can stop domestic violence'

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men: 99 percent of gender violence and domestic abuse incidents are perpetrated by men. Therefore, this is a man's issue, not an issue where women put themselves into harm's way. Men need to change their attitude toward women so that violence and abuse is not ever seen as an alternative action.

Clearly, the vast majority of men are not perpetrators of violence but we are part of a culture that accepts violence as inevitable and that some men abuse women. In violence prevention the focus must be on men because it is men that teach other men and boys how to be men in ways that do not involve abusing and degrading women.'

Sounds like the author and the paper need some eduction on this matter. As always, be polite, stick to facts.
Author's email is MoothartTim-at-JohnDeere.com
Letters to the editor can be submitted at: http://www.thonline.com/letters.cfm

High female incarceration rate bemoaned by Oklahoma officials

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'State lawmakers and prison workers said Thursday that policy changes are needed to lower Oklahoma's incarceration rate for women — the highest in the nation — and do a better job returning women to their communities and families after they have served their sentence.
...
Sen. Constance Johnson, D-Oklahoma City, said Oklahoma's criminal justice policies have resulted in incarceration rates for women that are almost twice the national average. The state's incarceration rate for women is 131 per 100,000 residents while the national average is 69 per 100,000.
...
"We have an almost warehousing of women in Oklahoma," said Fields, who has six felony convictions for nonviolent offenses and is a University of Oklahoma student working toward a degree in petroleum engineering.'

Female teens committing crimes, too, experts say

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"It's worse than we're willing to admit," said Carl Taylor, a Michigan State University sociology professor and principal investigator for the Michigan Gang Research Project.

In Wayne County, 16-year-old Ciara Hill is awaiting trial on charges that she ordered a cousin to shoot a carjacking victim with an AK47 because he'd seen her face.

...

Taylor said the age and gender don't surprise him. He said more females seem willing to become physically aggressive.

"We have girls jumping guys -- something you really didn't see before," he said.

It is part of "a total breakdown" of accepted rules of conduct and behavior, Taylor said.

...

Veteran Detroit criminal lawyer David Cripps said he sees female youths as a part of "the absolutely tremendous surge" of youngsters charged with armed violence. "It's more than murders. It's armed robberies, carjackings, assaults. You see it in court every day," he said.'

Missing Boy Allegedly Abducted in Custody Battle Found Hidden Behind Wall

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ST. LOUIS — A boy allegedly abducted in a custody dispute nearly two years ago has turned up alive, hiding with his mother in a small, specially built secret room at his grandmother's Illinois home, investigators said.

Richard "Ricky" Chekevdia, who turns 7 on Sept. 14, was in good spirits and physically fit after being found Friday by investigators with a court order to search the two-story rural home in southern Illinois' Franklin County, about 120 miles southeast of St. Louis.

The boy's mother, 30-year-old Shannon Wilfong, is charged with felony child abduction. The grandmother, 51-year-old Diane Dobbs, is charged with aiding and abetting. Wilfong remained jailed Saturday on $42,500 bond in Benton, Ill., where Dobbs was being held on $1,000 bond.'

'Circumcision for All; Free Choice for None'

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I gave the author, Stephanie R. Murphy a very positive e-mail in agreement with her opinions. stephaniemurphy4-at-gmail.com. Excerpt:

'By contrast, the CDC's attitude demonstrates a lack of consideration for patient autonomy and consent, two essential elements in all medical decisions. The CDC would like every baby boy born in America to be circumcised, no matter the opinion of his parents and, more importantly, without the boy's consent. If circumcision were a medically necessary and life-saving procedure with no possible ill effects, things might be different. In reality, it is a surgical procedure that is not essential for the health of a normal man; furthermore, it has both risks and benefits. The relative importance of those risks and benefits is subjective. Every man may value them differently. For that reason, it's essential that each individual be afforded the choice about what to do with his own foreskin.

...

I certainly cannot agree with the CDC's move toward making a blanket recommendation that all boys should undergo a medical procedure at birth, without their consent. I want each man to have the opportunity to make his own decision about what to do with his foreskin when he reaches an age at which he is capable of doing so, based on his understanding of the risks and benefits, and how much he personally values each. The bloated, overreaching federal government apparently does not want the same.'

Manhattan District Attorney Candidates Talk Women's Issues

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Question: Prosecutors of domestic violence case often do not understand the cultural intricacies that complicate cases. How should we train assistant DA's?

Cy Vance Jr.: Repeat misdemeanors should be treated as a felony. Manhattan needs a Family Justice Center like Brooklyn and Queens do.

Leslie Cocker Snyder: Every domestic violence case is a homicide waiting to happen. Prosecutors need to be trained in evidence-based prosecution, so that the case can go forth if the victim is unwilling to testify.

Richard Aborn: Training needs to be evidence based. For prevention, women need financial support, transitional housing, and psychological help. Children need early intervention, too.'

'Reporting on Gender Inequality and the Recession: There's Nothing More Manly Than a Pink Slip'

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Upon further scrutiny, the balancing scales on the front page just seem silly. By applying some basic business logic, one finds this story is about detriment in several ways. First, employers are more likely to lay off the top earners at their companies because they'll save more money that way. When women are doing the same job as men for less, that means women get the honor of sticking around in tough times (and often picking up the slack). Stay-at-home moms also tend to pick up the slack when their husbands lose high-powered positions, often because of their perceived willingness to take on a part-time job that might be below their pay scale.
...
Those industries that are creating new jobs just happen to be the few that are dominated by women. I'm not sure what that will mean for the post-recession job market in such industries. Perhaps men will tire of changing catheters and being abused by other peoples' children and go back to architecture and the like. Maybe they'll rise up in the ranks and become hospital administrators and superintendents. Or maybe, if we're lucky, an increased male presence will raise the perceived cultural importance of such nurturing positions, so that pay will be more commensurate with the grueling (but rewarding) work of hospice workers, paraprofessionals and the like.'

'Pregnant prisoners shouldn’t be babied'

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ms. Nelson has filed a lawsuit against McPherson prison in Newport, Arkansas, complaining generally that her pre-natal care was below acceptable medical standards, but specifically that her legs were shackled right up to the moment of delivery.

Also, she whined that she had been given only Tylenol for her pain.

I would imagine that Tylenol would be a somewhat mild pain killer to people accustomed to intra-venous heroin.

Dee Ann Newell, whose day job is senior justice fellow at the Soros Foundation, also teaches pre-natal care in Arkansas, weighed in with her opinion of shackling pregnant criminals with this pathetic wheedle.'

“If you have ever seen a woman have a baby, you would know we squirm.” Ms. Newell, in her fevered efforts to condemn everyone but the criminal, fails to understand the widely accepted rules of shackling dangerous prisoners; namely, every state with the exception of California and Illinois, allow shackling of pregnant females.
Could it be that pregnant convicts can be dangerous?

Their crimes range from murder to mayhem, armed robbery to writing bad checks. I mean, look, you got a gal here who is pregnant, in pain, in jail, with no baby’s daddy in sight and looking for someone to blame for her predicament. Is that the ingredients for violence, or what?'

U.S. Life Expectancy at All-Time High but Men Still Lag Behind

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Americans are living nearly two-and-a-half months longer, according to new life expectancy statistics released today. In 2007, life expectancy in the United States reached a high of nearly 78 years, up from 77.7 a year earlier.

Life expectancy in the United States has been on the rise for a decade, increasing 1.4 years — from 76.5 years in 1997 to 77.9 in 2007, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. The life expectancy data, compiled by the agency's National Center for Health Statistics, are based on nearly 90 percent of the death certificates filed in the United States.

...

The report found that both men and women are living longer, although a gap of five years remains between men and women. In 2007, average life expectancy was 80.4 years for women, but 75.3 years for men. Although men still die younger than women, the gap has narrowed slightly. In 1979, women outlived men by nearly eight years.'

Justice at last! UK teen collapses after being found guilty of false rape accusation

axolotl · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This one speaks for itself. Excerpt:

'As a jury at the trial of Rosie Waggett returned the unanimous guilty verdict, after deliberating for less than an hour yesterday, the 18-year-old fell to the floor, crying uncontrollably.
...
Mr Muir said: She said she didn't have any money, so I asked how she was going to pay for the taxi. She said, "well if he (the taxi driver) asks me about the money I'll just say he tried to rape me."'

Troubles had mounted for mother suspected of killing two daughters

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On Wednesday morning, Edith and her big sister, Diana Moreno, 17, were found dead, their throats slashed. On Friday, their mother, Antonia Gomez, 38, was arrested on suspicion of killing her daughters.
...
Gomez lost her job at a sandwich shop about three months ago and was hospitalized for stress shortly after, relatives said.
...
Fuentes owned the property, and until days before the killings had rented out the home in the front.

But she was unable to make the mortgage, and with the home's value plummeting, the property went into foreclosure. Gomez, her mother and the three girls were going to have to find another place to live, relatives said.
...
"She didn't have the mental well-being to deal with too much pressure," Gomez Fuentes said. "I just can't visualize her doing this, killing her girls. If she did, she didn't have her five senses."'

First stage of trial in Winfrey school scandal ends

anthony · 5 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SEBOKENG, South Africa — The prosecution finished presenting witnesses Wednesday in the case of a woman accused of abusing six teenagers at Oprah Winfrey's school for poor South African girls, presenting a picture of a short-tempered, jealous young woman.

The testimony from the last prosecution witnesses wrapped up the first stage of the trial, which began more than a year ago.

The defendant, Tiny Virginia Makopo, allegedly tried to kiss and fondle the victims and is also accused of assaulting one of the girls as well as fellow supervisor. The 28-year-old pleaded innocent to 14 charges of indecent assault, assault and criminal injury.

Makopo's lawyer is expected to start the defense stage Monday. A verdict could be months away.

Much of the evidence so far has come from students who testified in a closed session because of their age.

The scandal erupted at Winfrey's $40 million school outside Johannesburg soon after it opened in 2007 amid great fanfare. Winfrey, who has spoken in the past about being sexually abused as a young girl, was devastated by the allegations.'

FOX: The Trouble With Textbooks

anthony · 6 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thirty years later, few textbooks bother with the disguise. Entire chunks of the English language have been banned from the classroom, liquidated in a P.C. purge. First to go were words containing the dreaded term "man," the three letters most offensive to professional feminists. Mailman, chairman, snowman, fisherman, manhole cover--every one now extinct, disdained relics of a bygone age.
...
So did it work? Did shielding children from scary words like "mailman" turn them into better students? Compare the test scores in your kids' school district to those from 1960, and judge for yourself. Or consider this: When asked about the Vietnam War recently, almost a quarter of students described it as a conflict between North and South Korea.'

Commentary: 'Revolution Anyone?'

anthony · 6 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While perusing the manifesto of this now defunct STORM, several things struck me as particularly interesting. There was of course the passionate commitment to Marxist ideals, radical feminism, gay lesbian and transgender liberation and the ardent support of the unrepentant murderer Mumia Abu Jamal. And there was this rather innocuous looking paragraph, which I found especially fascinating.

"Storm had a closed membership. People could not just decide to join whenever they wanted to. Instead the group invited small classes of activists to become new members. This insured more consistency and accountability within the membership. It also allowed the group to maintain its strict demographic quota requirements; each class was required to be 75% people of color and 60% women."

Given their expressed passionate commitment to revolution, I was surprised to discover that they would sacrifice principle on the alter of race and gender. If revolution is what one truly desires - a revolution that will deliver "true freedom for our people" - shouldn't that include liberty from being categorized by race and/or gender? Isn't a shared ideology – shared principles - more important than quotas? These of course are people living in the United States bemoaning the collapse of the Soviet Bloc so rationality may be too much to ask. It may also be one reason this group or Marxist revolutionaries never saw their membership increase beyond perhaps a dozen or so members.'

Trevor Phillips: Women of Britain, I'm here to help

anthony · 6 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The sleek headquarters of Britain's equality watchdog is the model of inclusiveness. There's a breastfeeding room for nursing mothers, subtitles on the television at reception for the hard of hearing, electronic door-opening devices for wheelchair users and an area for saying prayers. The latter was presumably useful this summer as the Equality and Human Rights Commission (EHRC) descended into civil war over Trevor Phillips, its leader.
...
"I would say that we have a culture that does produce bias, even if people don't mean it to ... The simple fact is that most offices, no matter how progressive and enlightened, still work on the basis that the average 'normal' worker is a white male, whose children are looked after by someone else, who can work 9-5. That doesn't work for many women."

He was "shocked, literally shocked" by the results of an investigation into the huge pay gap in the financial sector, to be published tomorrow. The City may be particularly unreconstructed in its attitudes to women, but he believes even institutions that have ploughed huge resources into anti-discrimination, such as the Metropolitan police and the BBC, have a long way to go. "We are going to need some radical, really serious culture change and institutional reform if we are not going to get stuck here," he says.'

UK: Poor pay, worse jobs and terrible bonuses too - sexism in the city lives on

anthony · 6 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman, minister for women and equality, said the report shone a spotlight on discrimination against women in the financial sector. "We cannot tackle discrimination if it is hidden, which is why I asked the commission to produce this report."

She added it was "unlikely men-only boards and management would ever deliver the change in working culture, such as family-friendly flexible working and childcare, that would allow women to flourish in the workplace".

Tough new measures in the forthcoming equality bill will include gender pay reporting and proposals to ban secrecy clauses that are "particularly prevalent in financial services", she said.

John Cridland, deputy director of the CBI said: "No sector is immune from tackling the gender pay gap, and this report highlights that in parts of the financial services sector there is some further distance to go. But, as in many other areas of business, women applying for the top jobs need more flexibility with hours and childcare responsibilities."

UK: Paternity rights: In the name of the father

anthony · 6 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From her suggestion that women would not have caused the banking crisis to her proposal that the Labour party leadership team should always consist of one man and one woman, Harriet Harman has covered plenty of topical work-related ground this summer. But for all her supposed outspokenness, it was the deputy Labour leader's comments in support of extra parental leave and flexible working rights that invoked the irritation of her cabinet colleague Lord Mandelson and captured some of the biggest headlines.
...
Although some companies do offer generous maternity and paternity packages, many just offer the statutory amount. At present this is 90% of a mother's average weekly earnings for the first six weeks then up to £123.06 for the remaining 33 weeks; only the mother can take this. Fathers and same-sex partners who are not the mother are entitled to up to two weeks' leave, starting after the baby has been born and finishing before the baby is 56 days old. These two weeks have to be taken together – they cannot be split into odd days or one-week slots, and this is also paid at the rate of £123.06 (or 90% of your average weekly earnings if this is less).'

Australia: "Domestic violence starts in toddlers"

anthony · 6 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. We're reaching a new low in domestic abuse rhetoric. The new culprit? You guessed it -- toddlers! The VAWA has abused the constitution to alienate fathers from their families. It pains me to wonder whats in store for our nation's boys. Excerpt:

'A first-of-its-kind-study in Perth has shed a new light on domestic violence and its shocking culprits - children.

Boys and girls starting as young as two have been reported as being verbally abusive towards their mothers before graduating to psychological, emotional and physical abuse at a later age.

Ashleigh Haw, who co-ordinates the Parenting Over Violence Project, has found that teenage boys make up the majority of those committing more serious abuses.'

Domestic violence - now live on the big screen at sporting events

Matt · 7 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via email: I came across this video. It's of a man who proposes at a baseball game on live TV and the woman slaps him in the face in front of everyone and storms off.

Even though I don't know the context of this video or the couple's relationship, I feel this is an example of the growing callousness and feelings of entitlement among young women toward men today. Obviously for some reason, she was not pleased and because of that, decided to hit him. Have a good day and thank you for all the work you are doing. Dan.

Web site to aid abused children shows only father as abuser

Matt · 7 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S.: Page is here. Note the posters only seem to show males as perpetrators. Two other posters show what could be women doing the abusing but they are not clearly shown as being women or men. In any case, the bias and ignorance is quite apparent. Contact info is here.

Psychologist demolishes anti-shared parenting claims

Matt · 7 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This article by Peter Tromp who is a Dutch child and educational psychologist, is, for my money, the best, most comprehensive argument for equally shared parenting in existence. In one piece, he lays out the overwhelming case for equally shared parenting along with a good bibliography in support.

As an exercise, first read Tromp's piece and then read the paper by NAWL, the Canadian women's law association which opposes equally shared parenting. Compare the two. Tromp's evidence is voluminous, comprehensive and compelling. The NAWL paper relies on misinformation and anti-father bias to see it through. Comparing the two is like comparing Tolstoy to a comic book.

Tromp begins by reciting the well-established benefits of connecting children and parents post-divorce. But he adds a few notions I wasn't aware of. In the first place, he cites studies from as far back as 1980 that show that, in a wide variety of ways, children growing up in shared parenting arrangements do better than those with a single parent. Those include better educational outcomes, better health outcomes, better psychological outcomes, less involvement in drugs and crime, etc.'

The truth about male victims of domestic abuse

Matt · 7 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's time to leave the male bashers, or female abuse deniers out of the picture. Not all men are abusers, and not all women are innocent, or unlikely to commit abuse.

Jan Brown spent years researching domestic violence and interviewing men who fit the definition of abuse. She discovered that there were very few options for male victims.

So she set out to make it right. In October of 2002, she founded the Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women (DAHMW), a non-profit organization created to help men who have been victims of domestic violence. The unique aspect is that this organization is not only for abused men, but abused women as well.'

India: The Missing Parent

Matt · 7 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two fathers fighting for child custody rights got the thumbs up from the Supreme Court last week. On Friday, a mother had to withdraw a petition trying to thwart a father's legal quest for more time with his daughter. The apex court had weighed in on his side, directing the divorced couple to settle it out of court.

On the same day, in another case, where a father has been estranged from his son for two years, the Supreme Court directed the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) to step in. The CBI has been given six weeks to find the mother who has gone absconding with her son. The apex court felt compelled to take this step since its repeated directions to state police departments on the matter had come to naught.'

Male-positive "Mr. Opportunity" Commercial by Honda mens_issues · 7 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I wanted to point out a male-positive commercial by Honda called "Mr. Opportunity". This has been running for the past few years, but I find it's a much better portrayal of a man than a lot of commercials out there.

You may or may not remember the Super Bowl commercials back in 2004, one of which was a Honda Pilot commercial "Run With the Wolves" in which a woman is married to a man who was "raised by wolves." It showed the husband looking all disheveled while licking a plate like a dog, drinking straight from the water cooler at work, and chasing a Frisbee (thrown by his son) into a stream. The commercial is here.

I posted about it at Mensactivism.org shortly after it aired. There was a letter writing campaign that followed this ad, and it would be nice to think that Honda's new Mr. Opportunity ads came about as a result of this protest.

Just to show that activism sometimes can work for us.

Women's group to start violence-prevention program at local high school

anthony · 7 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I suspect absurd violence statistics are used to demonize the school boys. Excerpt:

'The Bonsall Women's Group is planning to start a dating and domestic abuse awareness program at Fallbrook Union High School.

The program, called Love is Not Abuse, would teach students about domestic and dating abuse. The program was developed by Liz Claiborne Inc., a clothing design and distribution company.
...
Fallbrook Union High School District Assistant Superintendent Jim Yahr said Thursday he has spoken with La Barge and that he's interested in looking over the materials to see if the program can be integrated into ninth-grade health classes, which currently include some discussion of date rape issues and how to maintain a healthy, respectful relationship.'

The Justice of Pay Discrimination

anthony · 7 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First of all, it is exceedingly rare to find two people who are doing precisely the same work. Perhaps only two workers doing the same job at the same rate on the same assembly line would qualify. Two secretaries in an office, who in theory probably have the same duties, might still find that one of them ends up typing twice as many letters as the other. And this second secretary may in turn do three times as much filing as the first. One might take half again as many phone calls as the other yet do so in the same amount of time because she is able to get to the nub of the conversation more quickly. Even in the plumbing example I cited at the outset, the two toilets were different models, so plumber number two may have had an easier time of it or found cheaper parts than plumber number one. Productivity, proficiency, and even a certain amount of chance play huge roles in determining exactly what, and how much, work each person does. It is next to impossible to say that any two people have done “equal” work.

Even if it could be shown beyond all doubt that employee A and employee B were doing exactly the same work, there would still remain the problem illustrated by the plumbing story. If A and B each agreed to work at the wages they were being paid, then there is no injustice in paying A more than B for equal work. In the case of Lilly Ledbetter, who sued Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. for alleged pay discrimination, the fact that Ledbetter continued to work for Goodyear for 19 years and, presumably, to cash her paychecks indicates that she was satisfied with her compensation during that time. Had she at any time disagreed that she was being compensated fairly for the work she was doing, she had only to request an increase in pay and then, if the company declined her request, to quit.'

Sam's Club sponsoring women- and girls-only business conference

anthony · 8 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. No boys allowed! Excerpt:

The Women Presidents' Organization (WPO) knows the importance of financial security and is coordinating its third annual Financial Literacy Event for young women. The financial literacy program, Thrive Time, gives highly successful women CEOs, who own and operate multimillion dollar businesses, the opportunity to teach future leaders the importance of financial education and how it can impact their personal and professional lives. The participating WPO members are entrepreneurs who have grown their businesses to the multimillion dollar level and have a vested interest in the growth and success of women in business.

"The single most important factor for women in contributing to a stable existence is to be financially secure. It is equally as important, if not more important, to a young woman as it is to a young man," said Marsha Firestone, Ph.D. president and founder of the WPO. "Understanding money and finance empowers women in all aspects of life. Too many girls grow up without confidence and exposure to this area."

"This wonderful event allows young women to learn first-hand from successful women business owners and entrepreneurs," said Sharon Lechter. Sharon, a member of the President's Advisory Council on Financial Literacy, and a WPO national board member, helped create and organize the event. "WPO and Sam's Club are providing these young women with vital financial skills that will not only prepare them to survive in the world they face, but thrive in it!"

Is this what their telling boys? Is this supposed to motivate them to enter college?

Ed. note: You can contact Sam's Club corporate offices via web-based email here or by phone at 888-746-7726.

Obamas to appear in Oct 2009 issues of Men`s Health and Women`s Health

anthony · 8 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If Obama is so concerned with men's health, why is there no federal office dedicated to men's health? Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama and First Lady Michelle Obama speak candidly about health and fitness priorities for the country and their family in exclusive interviews that will appear in the October 2009 issues of Men`s Health and Women`s Health, respectively. The October issues hit newsstands on Tuesday, September 15.

President Obama, who appears on the cover of Men`s Health for a second time, turned to the publication to speak directly to the 12 million Men`s Health readers at a critical juncture in the health care debate. The President, himself a prototypical Men`s Health guy, explains how health care changes will affect American men and their families. President Obama previously appeared on the cover of the November 2008 issue of Men`s Health, which was on newsstands when he was elected.'

MND: Six Levels of Feminist Critics

anthony · 8 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In fact, I started playing around with different ways that you can be critical of feminism, and came up with Six Different Levels of Feminist Critics

1.At this level you have no criticism towards feminism and believe that feminism is spot-on. You are a feminist yourself and possibly self-identify with a particular branch of the movement.

2.Some mild criticism starts appearing. You find it important that masculinity studies within the feminist framework are carried out, since you believe that patriarchy hurts men too. Many liberal men and cultural creatives can be found in this category.

3.Radical feminism (i.e. the belief that men structurally oppress women) is criticized without hesitation, but classical feminism is embraced and deemed to be the solution to gender issues. You believe that women were unfairly disadvantaged in the past, but that the only correction needed is civil and legal equality around the world. You may or many not have anything against a men's movement. This is the level where we find Christina Hoff-Sommers, who's written Who Stole Feminism and The War Against Boys – two very important books for the men's movement.'

'Quote Of The Day': What is 'Feminism'?

anthony · 8 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Page here. If you'd like to post comments, there's no registration required.

'Feminism is the theory that men and women are equal in every respect--except for those in which women are superior. The trick is to interpret every social indicator as though it demonstrates arbitrary male privilege or genuine female superiority.

For example, when studies show that girls perform less well than boys at advanced math, it is due to systemic discrimination in favor of boys; but when the same studies show that boys' under-performance in the language arts is four times as great as that of girls in math, well that is due to girls' innate superiority.'

Title IX exploits women’s athletics, hinders men’s

anthony · 8 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The most common, and most often dismissed, argument against Title IX is that it has led to the destruction of many men’s athletic teams. Hundreds of men’s wrestling, gymnastics and tennis teams have been cut from D-I athletics programs around the country in order to allow universities to meet Title IX proportionality requirements, according to 60 Minutes. While this should be cause for concern for those who claim to support equality in college athletics, it is often dismissed as unimportant or blamed on football.

There are many Title IX supporters who claim that if universities would spend less on football, they would be able to have as many wrestlers and male gymnasts as they wanted. This is a ridiculous argument, however, in a country that is built on the tradition of college football.

Football makes millions of dollars for universities every year, and cutting their funding for less profitable sports is hardly in the best interest of college athletics.
...
Why is this a problem? It’s a problem for female athletes because they don’t get the scholarships they need or deserve, and it’s a problem for male athletes because, unless they’re football players, their team is in danger of getting axed in favor of proportionality. While this might seem like a problem with universities and not with Title IX, the loopholes in the legislation are to blame for the exploitation that is occurring.'

False report charged in alleged Peachtree City sexual assault

anthony · 8 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'False report charges have been issued against the woman who alleged a sexual assault on a Peachtree City golf cart path.

On Aug. 27, officers of the Peachtree City Police Department responded to the Piedmont/Fayette Community Hospital to investigate an incident involving a female victim reporting that she was sexually assaulted on the multi-use path system, according to Captain Rosanna Dove, public information officer.

The victim reported that at approximately 5:30 a.m., while she was running on the multi-use path adjacent to Lake Kedron and the cul-de-sac of Samiel Point and Larkins Landing, a white male approached her from behind and then forced her to the ground. The suspect was said by the woman to have sexually assaulted her and fled the scene.

Follow-up investigations revealed that the complainant falsely reported the sexual assault.'

UK: Mother stabbed daughters in their sleep after shopping trip, court told

Matt · 8 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother stabbed her two teenage daughters to death in their beds in an attempt to destroy her former husband's life, a court was told yesterday.

Rekha Kumari-Baker, 41, carried out a frenzied attack on Davina Baker, 16, and Jasmine Baker, 13, after "softening them up" on a shopping trip, Cambridge Crown Court heard.

There had been contention between Ms Kumari-Baker, 41, and her former husband David Baker, 44, about the care and custody of the girls, John Farmer for the prosecution, said.

The sisters were attacked in their mother's home in Stretham, near Ely, Cambridgeshire, in the early hours of June 13, 2007. She stabbed Davina 39 times and launched a similar assault on Jasmine, the court was told.'

Melanie Phillips: Catastrophe looms due to social and familial breakdown

Matt · 8 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Once again, Britain is recoiling from the sickening spectacle of childhood innocence being turned into its monstrous antithesis.

Two young brothers aged ten and 11 from Edlington, South Yorkshire, subjected two other little boys aged nine and 11 to sadistic attack and torture, leaving one fighting for his life.
...
People call these boys 'evil' because such absence of feeling is inhuman. But they are not evil. They are children.

We are all born with the capacity for both good and bad. Everything depends on whether the immature child is raised in a way that develops the good and discourages the bad, or whether something goes wrong with that process.
...

Their mother, who has seven sons by three fathers, is an alcoholic and drug addict who left them to forage from rubbish bins and fed them cannabis to keep them quiet; their father is a drunken brute, who regularly beat them and forced them to watch violent horror films.

We know that there are thousands of other children being raised in broadly similar backgrounds. There are areas of the country where the overriding problem is not material poverty but social, cultural and spiritual disintegration - at the heart of which is the collapse of family life.

Children are being born to lone mothers who were themselves raised in shattered homes by mothers who in turn came from identical backgrounds. The outcome is households in which children are neglected and maltreated, subjected to drug and alcohol abuse, violence and emotional chaos; and where the cruelty and indifference they endure is often translated into the sadistic way they treat others.'

Women to Stand Trial for Genital Gluing

anthony · 8 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Check out the picture of a man with lipstick on his collar. Excerpt:

'(AP) A man whose penis was glued to his stomach testified Tuesday that a motel tryst with a girlfriend involving a bondage fantasy turned painful and humiliating after his wife, a second girlfriend and another woman burst into the room and harassed him because of his cheating ways.

The 37-year-old Fond du Lac man told Calumet County Circuit Court Judge Timothy Van Akkeren that during the July 30 ordeal, which lasted about 30 minutes, he was punched in the face twice. The woman he had gone to the motel to meet, Therese Ziemann, super glued his penis to his stomach while at least two of the other women watched, the man said.

...

Sewell's attorney, Nila Robinson, said she would seek to have the charge against her client dismissed because of a lack of evidence.

...

She called the man dishonest, a liar and a con man. He tricked the women he called his girlfriends by telling them he loved them and wanted futures with them, Robinson said.'

Editorial: Title IX does injustice to college men

anthony · 8 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With endowments shrinking, donations falling and operating budgets squeezed, colleges and universities face great pressure to cut costs. Athletic departments are an obvious target. But, troublingly, men's sports are disproportionately bearing the brunt.

This year, men's programs across the country have gotten the third-strike call: swimming and soccer at Kutztown University (Pa.); baseball at the University of Northern Iowa; football at Western Washington; wrestling at Delaware State, Portland State and Carson-Newman. MIT, which has one of the largest athletic departments in the nation, eliminated men's teams in gymnastics, ice hockey, golf, wrestling, alpine skiing and pistol.
...
But as legal action groups and gender activists are riding to the rescue of women's sports, there appears to be no similar savior for men's athletics. Although the law promises equal protection for both sexes, Education Secretary Arne Duncan has so far been silent on the cuts to men's teams. Parents, coaches and athletes would be right to ask: Aren't male athletes facing discrimination if their teams are being singled out?'

PM of Bangladesh orders government men to stop wearing ties

Matt · 9 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Finally, some common sense! If the current president of the US or PM of Britain want to up their increasingly dismal approval ratings among men, this'd be one sure way to do it. Excerpt:

"In an inspiring display of sensibility, the prime minister of Bangladesh, Sheikh Hasina, has ordered male government employees to stop wearing suits, jackets, and neckties.
...
According to the BBC, Bangladesh has been suffering from a major energy shortage, with daily blackouts as the state-owned power plants are unable to meet demand. The British news service reports that the plants' output has not been able to keep up with the country's economy, which has been growing 6 percent annually for the past five years.
...
Despised by all but the most inveterate masochists, the necktie traces its origins to the uniforms of 16th century Croatian mercenaries in the employ of King Louis XIII of France. In a sartorial choice that has baffled and dismayed people ever since, upper-class Parisians adopted the mercenaries' knotted scarf, which they called a "cravat" – a mispronunciation of the word "Croat" probably caused by a restricted larynx.

The cravat eventually "evolved" into the modern necktie, which was eventually paired with an outfit consisting of a heavy jacket and flimsy slacks, a design that guarantees that its wearer will be uncomfortable regardless of the ambient temperature."

Roethlisberger's Attorney Rejects Rape Accuser's Offer to Drop Suit If He Admits, Apologizes

anthony · 9 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RENO, Nev. — The attorney for Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger is rejecting a settlement offer by a former Nevada casino worker who claims the Super Bowl winner sexually assaulted her.

Roethlisberger attorney David Cornwell says the woman's offer is bizarre.

The woman wants Roethlisberger to admit to the allegations, apologize and donate $100,000 to the Committee to Aid Abused Women, a Reno nonprofit organization that offers support to domestic violence victims.

In a statement Wednesday, Cornwell says the proposal insults women who have legitimately suffered from sexual misconduct.'

Hidden Boy's Dad: He Was Brainwashed

anthony · 9 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Wilfong and Ricky disappeared in Nov. 2007 after a contentious custody battle that resulted in temporary custody for the boy's father, Mike Chekevdia.

Wilfong's mother claims she and her daughter hid her grandson to protect him from Chekevdia, who they claim sexually abused the boy.

As she was being led away from the courthouse, Wilfong contended to reporters Tuesday, "My little boy said that he was scared to go back, because his dad was gonna tie him up again."

The judge has ordered Ricky to stay with one of Mike Chekevdia's relatives until a November custody hearing, but indicated his desire to reunite father and son after thorough counseling.'

U.N.: Higher rates of males born leads to rape and sex trafficking

Paragon · 9 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HANOI (Reuters) - The ratio of boys born in Vietnam compared with girls has grown at an unusually rapid pace in recent years and could lead to a rise in sex work and trafficking, the United Nations said.

The sex ratio at birth was 112.1 male births per 100 female births in 2008, up from an estimated 106.2 in 2000, the U.N. Population Fund (UNFPA) said in a report.

With growth since 2006 of one percentage point per year, the ratio might cross the 115 mark within three years, it said.

By 2035, the surplus of adult men would be 10 percent or more of the female population if the sex ratio did not return to 105 male births per 100 females, it said.

"Scarcity of women would increase pressure for them to marry at a younger age, there may be a rising demand for sex work and the trafficking networks may also expand in response to this imbalance," UNFPA said.

"Examples of gender-based violence and human trafficking have already been observed in Vietnam and point to some of the risks faced by vulnerable girls and women."'

Phyllis Schlafly: The Feminists Demand and Receive

anthony · 9 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The feminists had no sympathy with the fact that men were victims of most of the lost jobs because the majority of manufacturing and construction jobs are men's jobs. The segments of our economy dominated by women, social services, education, health, child care, and welfare have actually gained jobs during this recession.

Nevertheless, the feminists demanded that half the Stimulus jobs be given to women. The feminists worked to achieve this result by directing the Stimulus funds into the types of jobs where women predominate and by allocating at least a third of the spending in manufacturing and construction industries to training women for those men's jobs.

All the feminist organizations joined in the political clatter. They called for a meeting so they could lecture Obama's economic advisers and hurl their demands that the Stimulus package create jobs that women like, such as workplace-comfortable inside jobs with air-conditioned offices and carpeted floors.

As one tactic to intimidate Obama Administration officials, the feminists successfully insisted that participants in the meeting be seated in a circle without a table between them, a format that enabled the feminists to be confrontational. The feminists created their own vocabulary to shout at the men, demanding jobs for "human infrastructure" and "human bridges," which were euphemisms for social service, health-care, child care, and librarian jobs.'

Harriet Harman - Lies About Rape

axolotl · 9 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Piece here

Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman has spent many years of her political life stirring up hatred towards men in order to enrage women and to make them feel antagonistic towards men.

The idea behind this is to rally the support of women so that she can pursue her own ambitions - which have got nothing to do with gender 'equality' and nothing to do with any genuine concern about 'women'.

Her persistent hate-stirring is just a callous, calculating, well tried and tested mechanism through which feminists the world over have gained enormous power.'

[For those who don't know, Harriet Harman, MP (a.k.a. Harriet Har-person, Harriet Harm-man) is a British Labour Party politician and the Member of Parliament for Camberwell and Peckham since 1997.]

Also see the August 9th post about her on the Steve Moxon blog.

Brazil: Kiss Your Daughter, Go to Jail

shawn · 9 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This Italian man had the unmitigated gall to publicly kiss his daughter while on vacation in Brazil. He's now in custody awaiting possible criminal proceedings. I say lock him up for good. Eight to fifteen years in prison isn't nearly enough for any man who displays the slightest bit of affection towards his children.

Sarcasm aside, while it's important to protect children from exploitation, this is another example of the appalling way society views and treats men. Excerpt:

'There is growing controversy in Brazil over the arrest of an Italian tourist held after kissing his eight-year-old daughter in public.
...
Under a strict new law partly designed to combat child sex abuse in South America's largest country, he faces eight to 15 years in jail if convicted.

The unnamed man has been in custody for almost a week. A new attempt to secure his release this weekend failed.

His Brazilian wife says the case is all a misunderstanding, while staff at the resort where the incident took place have been reported as saying they saw nothing unusual.'

Unlike what almost all psychotherapists say, there is nothing inherently "wrong" with the way men grieve

axolotl · 10 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here

This little 20 minute video is of a talk given at the Boys and Boy Crisis Conference July 2007 in Washington D.C., by Tom Golden, LCSW. It offers the basics of information about the masculine side of healing.

As an alternative to the video, there is a short piece by Golden here

Excerpt:

'Behaviors like this bereaved father's are often misunderstood and mislabeled as not really grieving'

UN report: Male circumcision 'cost-effective' to curb HIV spread

anthony · 10 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"UNITED NATIONS, Sept. 9 (Xinhua) -- Male circumcision is a cost-effective means to prevent the spread of HIV, a new UN report said on Wednesday.

The study, published in the journal PLoS Medicine, found that one HIV infection could be prevented for every 5 to 15 procedures performed on heterosexual men.

The procedure is expected to control the cost of preventing one HIV infection in high HIV prevalence areas between 150 U.S. dollars and 900 U.S. dollars within 10 years.

First-line treatment usually costs over 7,000 U.S. dollars during a lifetime, and will double if involving second-line therapies, the report said.

With each circumcision procedure costing between 30 U.S. dollars and 60 U.S. dollars, "circumcising sexually active males of any age is likely to be cost saving," it said."

Australia: Doctors recommend no circumcision until boy is at least six years old

anthony · 10 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PARENTS who want to circumcise their newborn son should wait until he is old enough to make his own decision, Australia's peak body of pediatricians says.

The Royal Australasian College of Physicians will not change its policy against circumcision despite mounting evidence that the procedure can prevent the spread of HIV and other sexually transmitted infections.

A long-awaited position statement by the college's pediatrics and child health division released last month differs from the previous policy, issued in 2004, by acknowledging that circumcision does have some medical benefits, such as protection against urinary tract infections in infants, HIV transmission and penile cancer.

But it says the potential complications of the surgery and anaesthesia, such as infection and bleeding, mean any benefits "do not warrant a recommendation of universal circumcision for newborn and infant males'.

"Christianity Today" Women's Blog: "The Case for Male Circumcision"

anthony · 10 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'What mother hasn't, in the halcyon days after the birth of a son, felt her ferocious she-wolf instincts kick in when it comes time for her boy to be circumcised? Having perhaps suffered violence to her genitals during the birth, the physical ache to all that is vulnerable in her world can seem unbearable. And then it is done, and life goes on.

Anti-circumcision activists would have us believe that life does not in fact go on, that boys grow into men whose sexual pleasure (and that of the women they love) is compromised by this act of "genital mutilation." While increasing numbers are swayed by both argument and sentiment, I'm stupefied by the controversy.

Male sexual pleasure is not my highest priority, having rarely witnessed a lack thereof. Nor is my own, if in fact I'm speaking out of my ignorance of the delight foreskin can deliver. What I am concerned about is sky-rocketing rates of sexually transmitted diseases, and the gender inequality evident in these rates.'

San Joaquin seeking death in Sandra Cantu case

Michael · 11 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'San Joaquin County prosecutors will ask for the death penalty for the Sunday school teacher accused of raping and murdering an 8-year-old playmate of her daughter in Tracy, authorities said Thursday

Melissa Huckaby, 28, was indicted in July on a murder charge and three special circumstances in the death of Sandra Cantu - including that she killed during the commission of a rape - that make her eligible for execution if convicted. Huckaby was also accused of sexually assaulting a child younger than 10.
...
Huckaby pleaded not guilty at a hearing Thursday in San Joaquin County Superior Court. Judge Linda Lofthus revealed that the defense had hired a change-of-venue expert from California State University Chico, suggesting that Huckaby wants to move her trial elsewhere.'

Turkish court awaits genital recovery

Proud_to_be_a_man · 11 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From the tone of the first sentence of this report, it seems the man would be the one to blame if his penis gets cut off. Excerpt:

'Guys, here's a sharp reminder why you shouldn't make your wife/girlfriend/lover angry when you're dead, stinking drunk.

Yahoo new reports on the case of a Turkish woman whose jail sentence hangs on whether or not her former lover regains full use of his penis. Earlier this year the woman had, in a fit of anger, cut off her drunken lover's penis and thrown it from their apartment window.'

Written by some cretin called Mitch Kowalski.

So, using Mitch's logic, a woman should never make a man angry or he's liable to gouge her vagina out with a craft knife. AND it would be her own fault for making him angry?

I think she should be given a stern jail sentence. A 150 years should do it. With maybe 5 years off for good behaviour?

Ed.: Letters to the Editor of the National Post can be submitted here.

Maine Rape Hysteria update

Matt · 11 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The main website that has majority of the info on this case is here. This YouTube video is very compelling in this matter. Excerpt:

'In 1690's New England was gripped by the Witch Hunt Hysteria which destroyed the lives of countless innocent people and their families solely by the false testimony of their accusers and the misconduct of their prosecutors.

Today, over 300 years later, a new insidious Rape Hysteria grips a small community in Maine's Bar Harbor region, and again, countless lives are being ruined solely by false testimony of their accusers and the misconduct of their prosecutors.

Numerous men have been arrested and jailed in Ellsworth Maine, often solely because of someone's accusations. Some of the accused men spend many months in jail until they are finally tried on the flimsiest or even fabricated evidence. Virtually every man who is accused gets arrested, charged, and has his life publicly ruined.
...

The driving force of this Rape Hysteria is Assistant District Attorney Mary N. Kellett of Brooklin, Maine.

Vladek Filler is a decent, loving, and dedicated father, brother, and son, who decided to leave his 16 year relationship with his wife Ligia Filler (aka Ligia Barrientos), and save their children from her mentally unstable and abusive behavior. Up to the time Mr. Filler decided to leave, his wife repeatedly praised him for being "the most loving and caring man and father that she has ever seen in her entire life," and that he was “the only man for her”.
...
The most disturbing facts and evidence proving Mr. Filler's innocence have not been allowed in the trial, nor covered by the press, and remain untold as Mr. Filler struggles to save himself and his children from an unconstitutional conviction.

One day after his conviction, Ms. Ligia Filler appeared to demand their 12 year old son be immediately forced in to her custody citing Mr. Filler's conviction. For the moment, a court order protects the children from Ms. Ligia Filler's abuse.'

CBS: Does Wall Street Need More Women?

anthony · 11 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'If there had been a critical mass of women over a period of time at the decision-making tables, would we be in the place that we are in today? I don't think so," Zehner said.

The economic meltdown might not have been as severe, she says, if more women were in the executive suites on Wall Street.

Quoting a post-meltdown refrain: if instead of Lehman Brothers, it were Lehman Brothers and Sisters.

That's why at Pax World Mutual Funds, in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, three of the firm's six portfolio managers are women.

"I do think that when women are at the table, there's a richer discussion on issues like risk and that you make better decisions because of their input," said Joe Keefe, president and CEO of Pax World.

"It's not just the right thing to do anymore just because it's the right thing," Zehner said. "It's the right business thing to do."

Student paper commentary re the economy: Guys, this is your fault

anthony · 11 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No registration required to post comments. Excerpt:

'When an overweight frat boy spills his beer all over me at Kilroy's, I blame him. For obvious reasons, I extrapolate that blame to all the rest of mankind. My drenched shirt is, clearly, a man's fault.
...
And when the economy comes crumbling down, crashing under the weight of the imploding financial sector ... that's right – I blame men.

Credit crunch? Global economic downturn? Oh, they have guilty male fingerprints all over them.

Now, boys, in all fairness, I am no anti-male feminist. Before you throw my column down, muttering under your breath "stupid man-hater," hear me out (I know, I know, listening has never been one of your stronger skills, but bear with me).'

Baby died of 'natural causes' after circumcision at Golders Green Synagogue

anthony · 11 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'A JEWISH baby boy died from natural causes after a circumcision procedure in Golders Green, a coroner has ruled.

Amitai Moshe was just a week old when he underwent the traditional operation at Golders Green Synagogue on February 1, 2007.

Today, Coroner Andrew Walker ruled the procedure had nothing to do with the boy's death, with was caused by sudden infant death syndrome, commonly known as cot death.

Amitai, of Sandringham Road, Golders Green, collapsed in his mother Yotvat Geva-Moshe's arms more than 30 minutes after the procedure, and turned blue while bleeding from the nose and mouth as guests at the service rushed to help.'

UK Charity Warns of Male Circumcision Risks

anthony · 11 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A national charity has called for wider awareness of the risks of circumcision, as the inquest is held into the death of a 16-day-old baby following a religious ritual two years ago.

Amitai Moshe died in 2007 following a ritual circumcision in North London and the inquest into his death began at Hornsey Coroner's Court on Monday.

The inquest follows one in Windsor earlier this year which concluded that baby Celian Noumbiwe had bled to death within hours of a circumcision at a doctor's surgery in Reading.

Many parents who consider circumcision necessary for ritual reasons believe that the operation is harmless in early infancy, and that it will bring benefit to the child.'

CBS Evening News: "Does Wall Street Need More Women?"

Anonymous · 11 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This story was at best a male-bashing farce. In it, they made two claims:

1. Report Shows Hedge Funds Run by Women Outperformed Those Run by Men, Whose Risk-Taking May Have Fueled Financial Meltdown

2. The evidence: a recent report showed that while all hedge funds had an annual return of almost 6 percent, hedge funds run by women did better with a return of 9 percent.

Of course, they never mention the "recent report" - like who conducted the research for it, or what hedge-funds were examined.

I would like advice on how to combat this type of male-bashing.

I did a small amount of research of my own, I found a list of hedge-funds that were all up by 10 or more percent:

John Paulson of Paulson & company - up 20%.
Philip Falcone - up 42% through Harbinger Capitol Partners.
Peter Theil's - Clarium Capitol Management - up 50%.
Andrew Lahde's short credit fund - up 10%.
Matt Luckett - Balestra Capitol - up 13%.
Dan Arbess - Perella Weinberg Partners Xerion - up 25%.

I have also sent an E-mail and a written letter to CBS News asking them to reveal the source of their Miss Information.

Comments? Advice?

Thanks.

"What is a feminist anyways?"

anthony · 11 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Interesting vid on YouTube here. People in a college food court are asked what they think a feminist is.

New reason to file a false rape report - road rage

axolotl · 11 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

See below for the complete story.

[Link to story here]

Advice for men: never cut off a woman in traffic.

'Newport News detectives have charged Megan McLane, 18, with one count of filing a false police report.

McLane had called police on Wednesday afternoon saying she had been stopped along the side of the road in the area of Jouett Drive when a man opened the car door and attacked her. McLAne said the man placing a cord around her neck and began to choke and beat her as he pulled her from the car toward a nearby wooded area.

...

McLane stated he continued to beat her and hold her on the ground while attempting to remove her clothing. She said that once she was able to kick her assailant he left the area.

A large number of detectives, as well as forensic technicians, were sent to the area to begin processing the scene for any possible evidence and to canvass the neighborhood for possible witnesses.

McLane was taken to a local hospital for treatment of what appeared to be minor injuries. She was treated and released and was interviewed by detectives at Police Headquarters. After processing the scene, forensic technicians provided the investigating detective with photographs and other evidence pertaining to the investigation.

When confronted with the evidence and the results of the investigation to that point, McLane recanted her original statement and admitted to fabricating the story. Apparently, she was involved in an earlier road rage incident and was attempting to get the other party in trouble.

McLane was released on a summons.'

Police: Michigan Mom Found Long-Lost Son Online, Raped Him

patriotsofamerica · 12 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Enough already! I have personally had it! Women can be and are savages! This story as far as I am concerned takes the cake. I have never heard of a man looking for a kid he put up for adoption, finding that kid and then raping him or her. Never heard of it! Yet, here is a woman that did just that! I have heard of men looking for long lost kids and upon finding them they tried to be the fathers that they always wanted to be. They stepped up and became fathers. Women on the other hand look for long lost kids of theirs just to become: RAPISTS! Enough is enough. I have had it. Excerpt:

'Michigan police say a 35-year-old mother used the Internet to track down the son she gave up for adoption a decade ago, seducing and raping the teenage boy when she found him after an online search.

Aimee Louise Sword of Waterford Township, near Detroit, was arraigned this week on three charges of criminal sexual conduct for the alleged rape of her biological son, whom she put up for adoption more than 10 years ago, MyFOXDetroit reported.

Prosecutors say the boy is still a minor, but won't disclose whether he knew the woman was his mother — a situation that has horrified mental health experts who are calling the case "an abomination."'

Carey Roberts: USA Today Rejoices in Man-cession, Hails Rise of Gender Equality

anthony · 12 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here

Excerpt:

'The essay's pretzel logic is so outlandish that I promise to keep a straight face as I explain it to you.

And the article's original title was so outrageous that within hours the USA Today editors felt compelled to tone it down. But I'm getting ahead of myself.

It's no secret that men been hit hard in the current recession. The USA Today article acknowledges that men have lost 74% of jobs since December 2007, with women losing the remaining 26%. The reason is men predominate in construction and manufacturing, sectors that have suffered a massive hemorrhaging of jobs.

Most would view these numbers with dismay and even alarm. In many families men are the primary breadwinners and men's job loss hurts their wives, children, and dependent parents. And unemployment is emotionally devastating to many men.

But socialists view massive male unemployment with undisguised glee. After all, if we can't force more women out of the home into the workplace, then we can achieve numerical workforce equality by throwing millions of men off the assembly line.'

Nepal Launches Women-only Bus Service

anthony · 12 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'KATHMANDU, Sept 11 (Bernama) -- The women-only bus service operated by Nepali Minibus Entrepreneurs Association, has become effective and popular in the capital Kathmandu, the National News Agency RSS reported on Friday.

According to the RSS, the association had brought the bus service only catering to women into operation since Sept 6.

Women-only bus service was started with the request of women and taking into consideration the inconveniences faced by women commuters especially during and after office hours.'

UK: Women only for Labour at next general election

anthony · 12 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE LABOUR candidate for the next general election will be another woman after party bigwigs ruled on an all-female shortlist – to the dismay of local members.

The decision made by the Labour Party's National Executive (NEC) in London on Tuesday has not met with the approval of local members who had hoped for an open choice after current MP Kitty Ussher decided not to stand at the next election.

Party chiefs said the decision was made because the Labour Party was committed to the Equalities Bill which strives to see more women in public life.
...
The local party chairman added: "The party in Burnley unilaterally said it wanted an open list. We wanted to be able to choose the best candidate, whether male or female, and preferably someone local.

"I know of at least six local men who had expressed an interest but no women. I have told those men of the decision and they are very concerned. We have to look at the position very carefully now."'

Women-only pharmacy opens in Vancouver

anthony · 12 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A group in Canada is stretching the limits of niche practice. Lu's Pharmacy, which opened in July in Vancouver, British Columbia, doesn't just focus on women patients; women are the only patients it serves.

"We have never provided services to men," said Caryn Duncan, executive director of the Vancouver Women's Health Collective, which has been dispensing health information and advice to women since 1971. "We don't expect that to change now that we have opened a pharmacy."

Opening a women's pharmacy is not a new idea. This year, students from the University at Buffalo School of Pharmacy, Buffalo, N.Y., won first place in the National Community Pharmacists Association's Pruitt-Schutte Business Plan Competition. Their business plan for Isabella's Apothecary focused on early intervention and chronic-disease-state management tailored to the needs of women.

"It makes good business sense to focus on women," said Whitcomb Henry, who owns a pharmacy in Seattle, Wash. "Seventy percent of consumers who shop in pharmacies are women. A pharmacy that caters to women is a natural."'

No men have ever tried to fill scripts at Lu's. If a man did ring the doorbell, Duncan said, "I'd be outside having a conversation with him. We are here to support women's health and to focus on women's issues."
...
Thus far, B.C.'s men don't seem bothered by Lu's women-only stance.'

UK: Fury as women-only gym shuts for good

anthony · 12 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A POPULAR Worcester gym has closed for good – amid much anger among its paid-up members and users.

Simply Women has been shut since last week but it has now been confirmed that the doors to the gym in Henwick Road, St John's, will not be opening again.
...
"Being in a women-only gym, I didn't feel as vulnerable as I would be next to younger, fitter people who want to do a lot more on the equipment than I do."
...
A spokesman for Ashbourne Management, which deals with Simply Women's finances, said: "The gym has closed down now.'

Sex charge names East Valley teacher

anthony · 12 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'YAKIMA, Wash. -- An East Valley teacher faces criminal charges over allegations that she had sex with a 16-year-old male student in the Kmart parking lot and sent a suggestive photo to another boy.

Michele Taylor, 31, of Yakima is scheduled to be arraigned Oct. 16 in Yakima County Superior Court on one count of first-degree sexual misconduct with a minor and two counts of communicating with a minor for immoral purposes.

Sexual contact with students 16 or older is considered misconduct, rather than rape, under state law.
...
The 15-year-old also indicated that Taylor had invited him to go to her house several times when she was home alone. He told investigators she had also invited him to the movies.

According to the report, Taylor told the student how she felt she missed out on a lot when she was younger because she met her husband at a young age.'

The younger boy said she raised the possibility of sending him a nude photo, then sent him another suggestive photo of herself at a party, one showing another female licking her chest.'

Ireland: Girls beat boys in Junior Cert at almost all subjects

anthony · 12 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'GIRLS ACHIEVED better Junior Cert exam results than boys in almost every subject this year, with boys faring particularly badly in modern European languages.

The Junior Cert results for girls and boys echo those of the senior State exam. Girls also outperformed boys across the range of subjects in this year's Leaving Cert exams.

Junior Cert girls did better in the core subjects of English, Irish and maths at both higher and ordinary level. They also outclassed the boys in science, history, business, French and German. In each of these subjects boys achieved fewer honours and more failing grades than girls.

The only popular subject where boys got more honour grades than girls was higher level geography, where 77.1 per cent of boys got honours compared with 76.7 per cent of girls.

However, their failure rate at ordinary level in this subject was higher than that of girls – 4.7 per cent compared with 4.2 per cent. Boys did do better in metalwork and material technology, although few girls sat these subjects.'

Australia: Rat poison mum guilty of manslaughter

Matt · 12 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Sydney woman who killed her children with rat poison has been found not guilty of murder, but guilty of manslaughter.

The woman pleaded not guilty to murdering her children by reason of mental illness.

She gave her three-year-old daughter and four-year-old son rat poison before smothering them in February last year.

In letters written at the time she blamed her husband's affair for her actions and claimed to be protecting her children by taking their lives.'

Woman Accused of Freezing Daughters Pleads Guilty to Abuse of Third Girl

anthony · 12 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'PRINCE FREDERICK, Md. — A Maryland woman accused of killing two of her adopted daughters and keeping their bodies in a freezer for months has pleaded guilty to first-degree child abuse involving a third girl.

Renee Bowman, 44, entered the plea Friday in Calvert County Circuit Court and could receive up to 25 years in prison.

The charge involves a girl adopted by Bowman who was found wandering in her neighborhood after jumping from a window in September 2008.
The child, then 7, had a bloodstained nightshirt and sores and lesions over much of her body. Authorities say they subsequently searched Bowman's house and found the frozen remains.

Bowman faces separate first-degree murder charges in the deaths of the other two girls. That trial is set to start Nov. 9.'

Serena Williams abuses lines woman arindamp · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'Instead of stepping to the baseline to serve again, Williams went over and shouted and cursed at the line judge, pointing at her and shaking a ball at her.

Dropping the f-word liberally, Williams said, "I swear to God I'm fucking going to take this fucking ball and shove it down your fucking throat, you hear that? I swear to God."'

CNN Video: Ben Roethlisberger rejects sex settlement

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Title: "In Session's Jack Ford has the latest on the Ben Roethlisberger sexual assault lawsuit."

Some feel judge has bias against men

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The battle between men and women is old — but in one Livingston County courtroom, men say the judge doesn't give them a fighting chance.

Even the children caught in their parents' crossfire question why Probate Judge Carol Hackett Garagiola appears to rule against fathers even where experts have found the father to be the better parent under court-established guidelines.

...

The case would come as no surprise to Bob Simpson, 48, who got divorced in June 2008. At the time, he said his lawyer advised him to keep his mouth shut because the "judge hates men."

Simpson, who said there were no claims of domestic violence or wrongdoing from either side in the divorce, said he did not believe his attorney until Garagiola routinely ruled against him even when his ex-wife violated their divorce agreement by relocating out of the county, which was prohibited.

"I feel screwed," he said. "I'm afraid to go before (Garagiola) because I'm a man. I feel like a Negro ... in 1964 Mississippi. ... I feel like there is prejudice going on here."'

"Feminists Do Not Represent the Views of Most Americans"

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No, feminism is not dead. It's worse. It has become fully inculcated into modern society, to the degree that any woman who takes an alternative view is routinely marginalized and downright vilified. When I wrote a blog about the Larry King segment, mocking some of the ridiculous things the women said – "It's not until we fall in love with ourselves that the world will begin to honor and support us"; "I suggest women get financially independent because that gives you freedom and empowerment to love yourself first"; "Once you are complete you look for others in your life to complement your completeness" – I got this response from a reader:

Your words make me ill. really, really ill. gross. how could you dismiss women's desire to not be dependent on men? you are an embarrassment to women. i can't believe that someone would say such things. what on earth is wrong with you? so women SHOULD be dependent on men? and NOT love themselves? based on my life experience, and all my amassed world knowledge, that is a recipe for depression and abusive relationships. i am still in shock about your words. your words are extremely dangerous to women!'

Feminists Declare All-Out War On Men

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In other words, since feminist-minded women, which are most women today, can't get rid of men whom they have come to detest, the only option they see left is finally to drive men from the position they now occupy as virtually obsolete and useless beings to a state of total wimpified passivity, submissive inferiority, and meaningless human significance. This is envisioned as a state where men no longer make demands on women but instead only receive gratefully that which women in their absolute gratuitous kindness let them have, which most often is nothing. The whole thing is similar to what a benevolent master would do gratuitously for a meek and submissive plantation slave, mostly nothing.
...
In this combat that feminists have instigated and forced upon us for being so unfortunate as to have been born males, all but an extremely rare minority of women carry with them anti-male rage, while clueless men run around in a daze trying to figure out why no matter what they try to do that's nice or pleasant to get a woman's serious attention, totally fails to get a serious response. I'm telling you, if you're a man, you're dead to women, not only dead, but dead, disgusting and contemptible, though most women won't tell you this to avoid nasty confrontations. So the war we're in is mostly silent, though deadly real nonetheless.'

New Zealand: 'Feminised' education holding boys back

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was recently privileged to observe the practice of some of the best boys' schools in the country and to discuss with them the policies they implement to ensure that boys achieve their maximum potential.

Two points clearly emerge. First, there is a strong perception the educational system has been so 'feminised' that boys no longer feel comfortable within it and consequently find it more difficult to achieve success. And, as an expensive byproduct, a whole industry has grown up around the topic, with gurus springing up everywhere who claim to have all the answers.'

Woman charged with filing false rape report after road rage incident

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEWPORT NEWS — A Newport News woman has been charged with filing a false report after her original complaint sparked a police investigation into an allegation of rape, police say.

Megan McLane, 18, of Dinwiddie Place, initially complained to police that a man tried to choke and rape her. Police later learned she fabricated those statements because she had gotten into a verbal and physical altercation with another driver and she wanted to get the man in trouble, said Newport News police spokesman Lou Thurston.

The misdemeanor charge against McLane carries a fine of up to $2,500 and up to 12 months in jail, Thurston said.'

University student charged with making false rape report

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 19-year-old Massachusetts woman who claimed Friday that she was raped by Lehigh University police officers was charged today with making a false report to police, Pennsylvania State Police at Bethlehem report.

Brielynn Neumann Shrewsbury, Mass., faces arraignment in front of South Bethlehem District Judge Nancy Matos Gonzalez.

Neumann was being held by police Friday as part of an unrelated investigation when she allegedly told Bethlehem police that Lehigh officers had raped her, state police report. She later changed her story, saying an undercover Lehigh University police officer sexually assaulted her, police said. She was identified at the time as a Lehigh student.
...
It is the second alleged false sexual assault claim this summer on an area college campus.'

In case you were wondering, Lehigh University's take on sexual assault from their website is here. Excerpt:.

'Myth : Sexual assault usually occurs when a stranger attacks a woman in an isolated area like a parking garage or dark alley.

Fact : 85% of sexual assaults occur between people who know each other (Warsaw, 1994). Rapists can be strangers, but most often they are people the victims know and trust. They can be husbands, boyfriends, relatives, and other individuals in that person's life.

Myth: Women often lie about being raped because they regret having sex the night before, or they want to get back at the guy for something.

Fact: The FBI reports that only about 8% of reported sexual assaults are deemed "unfounded."(Uniform Crime Reports, 1996) This is about the same rate as every other violent crime. The fact is that very few women maliciously lie about being sexually assaulted for personal gain.'

Would We Still Have War If Women Ran The World?

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That “sensitivity to humankind” is a wonderful compliment, President Sirleaf, but, unfortunately, I think that it’s only a gender stereotype that women are inherently less violent and they “feel” parenthood and the loss of children to war more than fathers do. Maybe I’m just a cynic, but I don’t think cruelty and poor judgment knows a gender. Just because women largely have not been in positions of power in wars so far doesn’t mean they would be any less hawkish if they were to be in that position. Just think about it: If Hillary Clinton had been elected president, do you seriously think not a single American soldier or other world citizen would have died on her watch?

Gender stereotypes probably help get women like President Sirleaf elected, which is great, but nevertheless, stereotypes don’t do anything towards discouraging male politicians from being less violent. I know she means well by implying more women should be elected to public office so the world can change, but I don’t think we should delude ourselves as to how it might change.'

UK: 'A man's instinct for violence can never be 'cured'

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young men are dangerous. They are particularly dangerous when they gather together in packs. Is this news to anybody? It would seem so. The years of self-delusion, in which the people who determine these things actually believed that they had ruled male aggression out of legitimate social life, have made it necessary to state the obvious truth once again.

So here it is: men have a primary impulse (innate? hormonal? environmentally determined? who cares?) to band together and engage in quasi-tribal conflict. Stable and enlightened institutions can educate them out of the more gratuitous forms of this behaviour by channelling the impulse into disciplined, formalised activities. When such influences are lacking, and especially when the inclinations are not harnessed to any acceptable group loyalty, such as family or genuine community, mayhem is likely to result.'

Guess she has been oblivious to stories like this one. Oh well...

Poor People Need Fathers Not Government Programs

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Statistics confirm the fact that most “poor” people have no fathers. My father told me that Cheetos makes you fat. He also built a gym in our backyard. We lived in a very “poor” neighborhood. Our house cost $10,000 when he bought it in the 50’s. The neighborhood then got worse. All of our neighbors’ houses began to look dirty and have five broken cars and beer cans in their front yards. Our house was always immaculate and our front yard always had freshly mown grass. My father took us to church 3 times a week. He read the Bible out loud to Grandma and Grandpa every Sunday night, at Grandma’s house, because Grandpa was an agnostic and wouldn’t go to church. My father taught me how to read when I was 5, so that when I started first grade I was the best reader. I skipped second grade. My father played the piano every night and taught us show tunes, and how to harmonize. My father taught us how to water ski. My father was a gymnastics coach, so he taught me a “flip flop” and I was the only cheerleader who could do that. My father protected us. He bought a bee bee gun that looked like a real gun, to scare burglars away. We were robbed four times. He said, “I could never kill anyone.” My father made us feel safe. He gave us confidence and a history and a future.'

Woman arrested after domestic dispute, shooting

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tulsa police arrested a woman after she allegedly shot her husband during a domestic dispute early Friday.

The woman, Christine Goldblatt, 42, told police that the shooting was in self defense, police records show.

About 4:30 a.m., police were called to a residence at the 4600 block of South Vancouver Avenue on a report that a man had been shot, said Capt. Richard Alexander of the Tulsa Police Department.'

Shelby County woman arrested in murder plot

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Is it me, or are female abuser articles kind of short? This particular story has just three sentences.

'COLUMBIANA, Ala. (AP) - Shelby County Sheriff's investigators have arrested a 42-year-old woman who is accused of ordering a hit on her ex-husband.

Officials said Friday that Kimberly Dawn McGuffie was charged with criminal solicitation to commit murder, criminal conspiracy to commit murder, unlawful distribution of a controlled substance and unlawful possession of a controlled substance.

She is being held in the Shelby County Jail on a total of $545,000 bail for all four charges.'

Woman Arrested For Allegedly Running Over Husband

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tulsa - A woman has been arrested after police say she ran over her husband following an argument.

It happened late Wednesday night in the 44-hundred block of North Cincinnati. Witnesses reported seeing a man running down Cincinnati being chased by an SUV. The man was struck by the vehicle, whose driver then back up and ran over him again before leaving the scene.

The victim was rushed to a Tulsa hospital with what were considered life-threatning injuries. His condition was not known.

...

Wright was booked into the Tulsa County Jail on complaints of assault with a deadly weapon and leaving the scene of an injury accident. She's being held on more than 45-thousand dollars bond.'

Woman arrested in death of boy

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DAYTONA BEACH -- Murder suspect Carine Doctor was relieved when police finally came for her early Wednesday morning.

After being on the run for more than a month since the July 20 shooting death of 13-year-old Lloyd Robinson Jr., Doctor was found just after 9:30 a.m. at a tiny claptrap house at 512 Washington St., police said.

"She said she was glad this was over and that she had some things to get off her chest," Police Chief Mike Chitwood said, referring to Doctor. "She had been at the at house for the last two days."

The chief said he received a call Wednesday from a tipster who asked whether police were still interested in arresting Doctor. The caller told Chitwood that officers should go to the Washington Street address "right now," because Doctor was inside the house.'

Woman sought in son’s slaying arrested

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Sudanese woman who emigrated to the United States in 2005 is facing a murder charge in connection with the death of her 5-month-old son.

Marlen Ramadan Taboor, 21, was arrested Friday by Henrico County police and last night was being held in the Roanoke City Jail, according to law enforcement spokesmen.

Taboor, according to online court records, was charged in Roanoke Tuesday last week with the murder of her son, Christopher George, in October last year. It was unclear last night why Taboor was in the Richmond area. She was arrested in the 6300 block of Clover Lane in Henrico, near the intersection of Lakeside Avenue and Hilliard Road.

Taboor moved to the Roanoke area from Sudan in 2005, according to a news story then in the Roanoke Times newspaper. She was charged with grand larceny days before her son's death and given a suspended prison sentence, according to court records.'

Woman arrested for duct taping man

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'NORFOLK, Va. - Norfolk Police say they arrested a woman who confessed to driving around a victim who had been duct taped and beaten.

Police say Sonia Green and two other males grabbed a victim in the 3800 block of Granby Street last Sunday.

The victim, Obdulio Salazar, was duct taped, beaten and put into a van. The suspects then allegedly drove him around the city demanding his ATM pin numbers.

He managed to escape and identified Green through a photo lineup.

She was arrested and police say she confessed to the crime.'

Two women arrested for rape of woman

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two women have been arrested in connection with an assault and rape in Oklahoma City, police said Friday.

Police arrested Sonya Carr, 26, and Carla Terrazas, 19, on Thursday, Sgt. Jennifer Wardlow said.

On Aug. 30, a woman reported she had been attacked and raped about 5 a.m. that day in south Oklahoma City. She was found in her vehicle by a passer-by in the area of SW 41 and Youngs Boulevard. The passer-by called a friend of the victim, who took her to the hospital, Wardlow said.'

People new to MANN may be interested in this site. Contrary to popular belief, woman-on-woman sexual assaults occur much more than presumed. Feminists would have us believe such is not the case.

Austrian woman arrested over strangling man

anthony · 13 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 41-year-old Austrian woman has been arrested after a man was found strangled to death at her flat.

The 36-year-old Spanish man was killed last Friday at the woman's flat in Adliswil, Switzerland, according to Zurich police.

They said today (Fri) she had called them at 7am that morning to say she had found a dead man in her flat.

Zurich police said the Spaniard had been visiting the woman before his death. They have no information as yet about the woman's possible motive for killing the Spaniard.'

University Of Chicago: 'Men In Power' website

anthony · 14 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

http://www.meninpower.com/

'MiP is a Registered Student Organization at the University of Chicago that provides a unique opportunity for undergraduate men at the University of Chicago to expand and sharpen their knowledge of business, politics, and networking—giving them the skills they will need to become future leaders of the world. The group also seeks to address issues and challenges modern men face in their lives, with acknowledgment of the tremendous hardship that the female sex have suffered.'

Ohio official says castration comment a joke

anthony · 14 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FINDLAY, Ohio — A county commissioner said she was joking when she told a former county resident she wanted to castrate him and had the tools to do it. Jeff Davidson said Hancock County Commissioner Emily Walton, who is a veterinarian, made the comment to him during a heated telephone conversation last week over a neighborhood drainage issue. Davidson said the comment was unprofessional and that Walton should resign as commissioner.

Walton said Davidson had been disrespectful on the phone to her and to women working in the commission office several times. She says the castration comment is one she has used for years and that people with half a sense of humor understand.'

Hancock County Commissioner office: commissioners-at-co.hancock.oh.us

France: New Evidence in Botched Houston Castration Trial

anthony · 14 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(PARIS, France) - New evidence is developing in the Houston castration case, via the Facebook page of Mrs. Jennifer Coias, in an entry dated August 18, 2009. Five weeks after the birth of the baby boy, Katherine Nadal was down in deep post-partum depression, a fact attested by her taking strong pain-killers (methadone notably, which is supposed to prevent from addiction) rather than being “high on drugs”, as unjustly reproached. Mrs Nadal has been condemned on a highly unbelievable and unproven assumption that she would have castrated her child, which she has constantly denied. She logically “showed no remorse at the 99 year sentence” as a prosecution-minded journalist emphasized, insinuating she would be a monster. Nevertheless, since no blood or ADN was found on either sharp instruments in the house or the dachshund, this pure hypothesis is doubtful. There was no blood on the keen-teeth hunter simply because it had greedily licked his chops and paws. Anyway, in this extreme supposition, Mrs. Nadal was insane, not guilty of extraordinary hateful vengeance against her husband with whom, besides, she had a mere argument, not a knife fight. It appeared at the sentencing, that hatred in the couple did not come from Mrs Nadal but from her high on hatred companion who, as she shouted: “I didn’t hurt him.”, screamed at her in response: “You abused him while he was still in the womb!”

Tortured for child support arrears, he did not owe

anthony · 14 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bardes, who lost 126 friends in the World Trade Center attack on September 11, wanted nothing more than to be a good dad and equal parent to his son and daughter. He didn't ask his wife to have an affair with the nanny's husband. And when his ex-wife moved their children to another state after the divorce, Bardes followed, twice.

Due to the children living in three states over a short period of time (PA, NC, SC) Bardes had all three states charging him child support, resulting in mistaken arrears. Bardes says he never willfully withheld child support, and documents related to his Federal court case (#02:08-487-PMD-RSC) support his claim.

Bardes developed severe depression after being treated like a criminal. He says they "seized assets, destroyed my credit ratings, destroyed my business and income, and my mental health." He lost so much weight he was "skin and bones." This man who once made $180,000 a year now had a hard time finding employment.'

Italian Court Rejects Defense Request to Throw Out Amanda Knox Indictment

anthony · 14 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PERUGIA, Italy — An Italian court on Monday rejected defense lawyers' requests to throw out the murder indictments of an American student and her former boyfriend on trial for the slaying of her British roommate.

Lawyers for Amanda Knox and co-defendant Raffaele Sollecito, accused in the 2007 slaying of Meredith Kercher, had challenged key DNA findings in the case and asked the court to toss out the indictments. The indictments are partly based on DNA evidence.

Knox and Sollecito, who were both in court as the trial resumed after a summer break, deny wrongdoing.'

"...it was especially disrespectful because it was directed towards a woman..."

Matt · 14 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This particular incident wherein one performer interrupts another performer while she is giving an award acceptance speech is indeed an example of incivility and rudeness. No one denies that. The problem here is the way this story is discussed by this particular blogger. The most telling paragraph:

"Not only was Kanye's approach disrespectful, it was especially disrespectful because it was directed towards a woman--a teenage girl, actually. Taylor won't turn 20 until December. I can only imagine how her father feels. I'm sure he would like to have a talk to Kanye. I'm not related to her, and I'd like to have a talk with him."

What Mr. West did was indeed wrong and very poorly-thought-out. Of course he is entitled to his opinions about whether a certain award was given to the most deserving person. Grabbing a mic from someone else during their moment in the limelight however is just rude and uncivil. However his rudeness is neither more nor less exacerbated by the gender of the person he grabbed the mic from. As to her age, well, she's 19, and so, an adult. Had she been 17, there may have been a valid point to make, as adults are expected to refrain from setting bad examples to children or to do things that take advantage of their youthful vulnerability, with the point becoming more valid as the child's age decreases.

What I see in the blogger's comment is simply another example of chivalry, if not in action, then in intent.

The ego epidemic: How more and more of us women have an inflated sense of our own fabulousness

Michael · 14 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Us women are more egocentric and narcissistic than we ever used to be, according to extensive research by two leading psychologists.

More of us have huge expectations of ourselves, our lives and everyone in them. We think the universe resolves around us, with a deluded sense of our own fabulousness, and believe we are cleverer, more talented and more attractive than we actually are.

We have trouble accepting criticism and extending empathy because we are so preoccupied with ourselves.
...
She pointed out that she owned a gorgeous flat with gorgeous things in it, had a nice car, was a member of a fancy gym and wore designer dresses. 'I do what I like, when I like,' she said.

She'd been told, and appears to believe, that she's too successful and too well-educated for most men.'

Finland: Teenage girls more prone to violence against dating partners than boys

anthony · 14 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Finnish boys aged 15 to 16 are more likely to experience violence from their dating partners than girls of the same age. The matter comes out in a study by the National Research Institute on Legal Policy.

An extensive survey on youth crime shows that 22 per cent of boys in a dating relationship had been hit at least once by their girlfriends. Only six per cent of girls had experienced similar events.

The most serious types of violence is striking someone with a fist or a hard object, or kicking. Nine per cent of boys and two per cent of girls had experienced such attacks.

Being grabbed, or prevented from moving was the only type of violence that girls experienced more often than boys. The figures were 19 per cent and 14 per cent respectively.

The results were not very surprising, and followed the lines of a survey conducted in 2004, says Venla Salmi, who conducted the present study.

She says that one likely reason for the greater amount of dating violence perpetrated by girls is attributable to attitudes. The threshold for girls to commit violent acts may be lower than for boys because violence perpetrated by girls is not taken as seriously as that committed by boys.'

Update: Castration "jokester" has no plans to resign

anthony · 14 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FINDLAY - It may have been "ill-advised" to threaten to castrate an irate caller, but Hancock County Commissioner Emily Walton said Friday she has no plans to resign her elected office.

"Suffice to say, it was an ill-advised comment precipitated by my unsuccessful request that he treat our staff politely and with respect," said Dr. Walton, a long-time veterinarian.

...

"People disagree. They blow off steam. They use the Lord's name in vain, but this stunned me," Mr. Davidson said yesterday.

...

The comment may have shocked Mr. Davidson, but did not surprise those who know Dr. Walton.

"Emily's Emily. She's demonstrative," Mr. Ingold said. "She has brought a shovel in before at a meeting to demonstrate because she felt that all we get done is shoveling stuff that got left on our plate because the former commissioners didn't handle it. She's used her veterinary tools for emphasis on a number of occasions."'

Ottawa police charge woman with attempted murder

Matt · 15 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Report here.

'(Ottawa) – On Saturday, September 12, 2009, at approximately 3:21am, Ottawa Police responded to a report of an assault in the 1400 block of Caldwell Avenue. Upon arrival, officers located a 50-year-old man with what appeared to be puncture wounds consistent with those from a syringe.

The police investigation revealed that the victim had a verbal altercation with a 28-year-old woman. The woman stabbed the victim with a syringe while making death threats to the victim and a third party.

The Ottawa Paramedic Service treated the male victim at the scene and he is currently being treated for possible communicable disease contamination.

Angela ARVISAIS, 28-years-old, of Ottawa, has been charged with attempted murder and uttering death threats. She will appear in court today.'

Woman complains over loss of first place in women-only poker tourney to man

Matt · 15 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Suppose if a woman were in a "men-only" poker tourney (which as we know would not ever exist in a public forum) and she won it, and then the runner-up complained, do you suppose he'd get a lot of sympathy? Seems women can play on men's teams but not the other way around, even when physical skills have nothing to do with it. Excerpt:

'She was among more than 260 women who each put up $300 to play in the tournament, but when the dust cleared, Abraham Korotki, 65, of Ventnor City, N.J., took home the trophy and $20,982 first prize.
...
"When you're a woman and you play poker, 99 percent of the time you're at a table with nine men," Rowe, who won $11,889, said yesterday during a phone interview, adding that playing against a field of women is "something I look forward to.

"Why did he have to ruin it for us? Why would he do this?"

So what was a man doing in a game clearly meant for the XX chromosome set?
...
Borgata officials said that they were not aware of any other male participants, nor were any other men pointed out by female players.

Korotki insisted that Borgata staffers never told him that he couldn't play in the tournament and insisted that he wouldn't have made a fuss if he'd been asked to stay out of it.
...
Each acknowledged that earlier in the contest Korotki, after hearing from Rowe about her illness, purposely played a weak hand against her in hopes of helping her build her chip stack (she doubled her amount by winning the hand).'

"Why did he have to ruin it for us? Why would he do this?" -- Yep, one penis at the table ruins the entire thing for all the other people in the game who actually matter.

"The Girl Effect" links the end of poverty, etc. to "empowering adolescent girls"

Matt · 15 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Off-linked from Drudge: here. If you use a Flash media blocker, you have to unblock it. The site is all-Flash.

I couldn't agree more that the primary way to getting out of poverty for the majority of people is getting a useful education. I simply want to point out that poor countries have a problem with children of both sexes not being educated well enough to do the kinds of things that can help their whole community live in a better fashion. By focusing on girls only, the other half of the population of third world nations' children are left out. And frankly I doubt that if half the population of a country is poor and educated and the other half is poor and uneducated, that there can be much political and economic stability anyway.

Barack Obama Celebrates Fifteenth Anniversary Of The VAWA

anthony · 15 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'Today, we commemorate a milestone in our Nation's struggle to end violence against women. Authored by then United States Senator Joe Biden and signed into law in September 1994, the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) was the first law to create a comprehensive response to this problem at the national level. This landmark achievement has helped our Nation make great strides towards addressing this global epidemic.

Despite this great progress, our Nation's work remains unfinished. More families and communities must recognize that the safety of our children relates directly to the safety of our mothers. Access to sexual assault services, especially in rural America, must be increased. American Indian and Alaska Native women experience the highest rates of violence, and we must make it a priority to address this urgent problem. We must also work with diverse communities to make sure the response to violence is relevant and culturally appropriate. We must prevent the homicide of women and girls who have suffered from domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking.'

Wrestler Kurt Angle Not Guilty Of Harassing Ex-Girlfriend

anthony · 15 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'ROBINSON TOWNSHIP, Pa. -- Kurt Angle, Pittsburgh's Olympic gold medalist and professional wrestling champion, was found not guilty of harassment and other charges were dropped on Tuesday stemming from the alleged stalking of his ex-live-in girlfriend.

Angle, 40, was arrested last month, shortly after Trenesha Biggers, 26, got a protection from abuse order against him in Moon Township and had police officers remove him from his house.

"All I can say is I've been completely innocent of any charges that have been brought to me and God has shown that today and my attorney has been able to prove it in court," Angle said outside District Judge Carla Swearingen's office.'

The XX Discount

Anonymous · 15 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Get convicted of a crime as a FEMALE in the USA and sentenced under the Sentencing Reform Act, as over 70,000 people were in 2007, and you can expect to receive on average a 40% lighter sentence than a man would get FOR THE SAME CRIME.

Stop controlling for crimes (as might make sense, as women are often charged with lesser crimes) and the discount goes up to 59% - that's right. Across the board, women were sentenced to 59% shorter sentences than men. :(

Article at M is for Malevolent

-M

Woman pleads guilty to violating Fritz Coleman restraining order

axolotl · 15 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpts:

'Harbor College geography teacher Melanie Renfrew had inundated the KNBC weatherman with e-mails and letters. She could face jail time and a fine unless she refrains from contacting him.'

...

'Harbor Vice President Luis Rosas said Renfrew had received good evaluations from students and faculty in the more than 10 years she had taught there.

"We have had no reason to have been concerned," Spink, the college president, said.'

L.A. police confront woman holding her baby at knifepoint

axolotl · 15 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpts:

'In one arm, she held a 4-month-old infant. The other hand wielded a knife.

As traffic sped by on 7th Street just west of Hope Street early Tuesday, several Los Angeles police officers surrounded Malika Johnson, 33, but the volatile nature of the situation demanded calm.'

...

'Johnson was booked on suspicion of child endangerment -- her fourth arrest for the same offense since 2004, said LAPD Lt. Paul Vernon.'

ACORN Worker Describes How She Killed Husband

anthony · 15 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'The video, from ACORN's San Bernardino, CA office, shows a single ACORN employee, who O'keefe identifies as Theresa Kaelke, telling O'Keefe and Giles that she had past experience in running an escort service, and also claiming to have shot and killed her abusive husband 10 years ago.

"And I ran a service, yeah. I have some experience in, in, in how not to get caught," Kaelke said at one point in the video.

Kaelke described the alleged shooting of her in some detail. She said that although he was abusive, he was not abusing her at the time of the shooting. She also said that she first "laid some ground work" by going to a women's shelter and pleading her case "so everyone in town would know that this was happening."

Kaelke said that her husband was coming towards her and, "then I just picked up the gun and said 'f you'. And I shot him. And he died. Right there."'

Video: "Undercover Video Captures ACORN Worker Describing How She Killed Husband"

DNA Evidence Clears Florida Man After 26 Years

axolotl · 15 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'Anthony Caravella was ordered released after a private laboratory test revealed someone else's DNA at the crime scene.

Although it was once considered a rare and remarkable event, a growing number of defendants are being ordered freed from prison as DNA tests continue to uncover evidence of false confessions, shoddy police work, and questionable prosecution tactics.

Mr. Caravella's release on Thursday is conditional, pending further investigation. If the release order becomes permanent he will be the 243rd person freed by DNA evidence nationwide, the 11th in Florida, and the fourth in Broward County.

Seth Miller, executive director of the Innocence Project of Florida, says despite the proven success of such efforts it is becoming increasingly difficult for defense lawyers to pursue DNA testing.'

Humor: U.S. Condemned For Pre-Emptive Use Of Hillary Clinton Against Pakistan

Matt · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Ahh, The Onion! They really have come a long way. The addition of their Onion News Network was a stroke of genius. One example:

U.S. Condemned For Pre-Emptive Use Of Hillary Clinton Against Pakistan

Enjoy!

India: Woman-only trains popular (among women)

Matt · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Up and down the jostling train, women repeated the same theme: As millions of women have poured into the Indian work force over the last decade, they have met with different obstacles in a tradition-bound, patriarchal culture, but few are more annoying than the basic task of getting to work.

The problems of taunting and harassment, known as eve teasing, are so persistent that in recent months the government has decided to simply remove men altogether. In a pilot program, eight new commuter trains exclusively for female passengers have been introduced in India's four largest cities: New Delhi, Mumbai, Chennai and Calcutta.

The trains are known as Ladies Specials, and on one recent round trip in which a male reporter got permission to board, the women commuting between the industrial town of Palwal and New Delhi were very pleased.
...

Many men are not thrilled. Several female passengers said eve teasing was worse here in northern India than elsewhere in the country. As the Ladies Special idled on Track 7 at the station in Palwal, a few men glared from the platform. The Ladies Special was far less crowded, with clean, padded benches and electric fans, compared with the dirty, darkened train on Track 6 filled with sullen men. Vandals sometimes write profanities on the Ladies Special, or worse.
...
Then the train stopped, and Ms. Sharma stood up. Asked what more the government could do for women, she laughed.

"Oh my God, it is a long list," she said. "But I'm sorry, this is my station."'

15-YO girl sets fire to church with 50 people inside - fire dept. says she should get counseling

Matt · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 15-year-old girl who allegedly worships Satan was arrested Tuesday on suspicion of lighting a fire at her Orangevale church.

The blaze occurred at the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints at the corner of Hazel and Cherry avenues.

Christian Pebbles of Sacramento Metropolitan Fire District said the teen made it clear why she started the blaze, which damaged church pews.

"She hates the church and she worships the devil," Pebbles said. "That's the reason why."

Pebbles said the teen was taken into custody on suspicion of felony arson.

"Well, you know, kids sometimes don't always like what their parents want them to do," said Annette Hilt, the suspect's mother. "Everybody knows that."

There were nearly 50 other church members inside when the blaze took place.

"The flames were about 4 feet high inside the chapel," church facilities director Pat Elmer said.

Fire officials said the goal is to make sure that the girl receives counseling, not to necessarily punish her.'

Professor Fired, Escorted from Campus by Police over Mysterious ‘Sexual Harassment’ Charge

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA, September 15, 2009—The abuse of campus sexual harassment policies to punish dissenting professors has hit a new low at East Georgia College (EGC) in Swainsboro. Professor Thomas Thibeault made the mistake of pointing out—at a sexual harassment training seminar—that the school's sexual harassment policy contained no protection for the falsely accused. Two days later, in a Kafkaesque irony, Thibeault was fired by the college president for sexual harassment without notice, without knowing his accuser or the charges against him, and without a hearing. Thibeault turned to the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) for help.

"If you were to write a novel about the abuse of sexual harassment regulations to get rid of a dissenter, you couldn't do better than the real-life story of Thomas Thibeault," FIRE President Greg Lukianoff said. "Anyone with a modicum of respect for freedom of speech or simple fairness should be aghast at this blatant abuse of power by East Georgia College."'

Private Child Support Collection Firm Accused of Scamming Innocent Fathers

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Private child support collection companies are one of the more noxious plagues afflicting divorced parents. In 2008, Fathers & Families led a successful campaign against Fox, which planned to air Bad Dads, a show which would glorify the role of private child support collectors. Fox dropped the show in the wake of our protests, which made 300 newspapers.
...
In April of this year, Lifetime announced plans to air the same show, rechristened Deadbeat Dads. Again Fathers & Families led a highly-publicized campaign against the show. Our Lifetime campaign was apparently successful–we had been told that Lifetime planned to begin airing the show in late July or early August, and it's now mid-September. To learn more, see our campaign page here.

As we noted during the campaign, private child support collection agencies often manhandle fathers and exploit and deceive custodial mothers. In fact, women's advocates, including the National Organization for Women, have repeatedly condemned these agencies for mistreating women.'

The Truth About Feminism - Suzanne Venker Responds to Critics

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The reason people respond this way to those who argue against feminist thought is because college professors and the media have been so successful in preaching feminist theory that few dare to question their analysis. The other day I turned on the television and heard a female reporter say that the number of women in the workforce is about to surpass men -- but there was a caveat. "Women still do not earn as much as men. We still have a wage gap," she said.

The wage gap is feminists' signature phony assertion, used to assure Americans that women are still not viewed as men's equals. What that reporter won't tell you is that the wage gap between men and women exists b/c it reflects the choices most women in the country make -- willingly. The vast majority of women choose to make concessions for motherhood by opting to move in and out of the labor force as the needs of their families change. For some, this will mean women disappear from the marketplace for large chunks of time, thereby compromising their career trajectories.'

False rape, abuse allegations hard to prosecute

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(UNEDITED)In reference to Loretta Park's excellent article, "Deal offered in sex case," thank you so much for standing up against a most common and accepted corruption today - inequality and double standards coupled with abuse by many officials. This case will be very telling. Will they give Kimberlee Williams Arigot an equal appraisal and assign her teen rape case a fair market value, or sell it for pennies, or less, on the dollar?

Likewise, others and I have tried to find any prosecutor who will prosecute the pandemic of false domestic violence and rape allegations. We still can't find an honest prosecutor (Please clearly speak out, demonstrate it and show your track record for this if you are honest.). Prosecutors and their staffs have told many of us that they won't prosecute false abuse and rape accusers because it would frighten real victims from reporting. A testament to their true nature and interest in truth, equality and justice? Too many police, judges and others are just the same. If they are this corrupt in one area, it makes you wonder what else they are corrupt at?'

Woman jailed for false rape report

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ESCANABA - A Gladstone woman who said she was brutally sexually assaulted last year was sentenced Tuesday to four months in Delta County Jail on two counts of attempted filing of a false report of a felony.

Amanda Chatterton Miller, 27, claimed she was sexually assaulted by a stranger on Feb. 27, 2008, in Brampton Township. She told police in the hospital emergency room she was kidnapped, beaten and raped, and also a victim of sodomy.

Following an intensive two-day hunt for the suspect, Miller confessed to police she had lied about being assaulted by a man who never existed. She told police she and her husband, Gilbert Tryan, made up the story so he wouldn't get in trouble.
...
In addition to the four months in jail, Davis ordered Miller to 18 months probation on each of the two counts of attempted filing of a false police report, to be served concurrently. She was also ordered to pay restitution to be determined, $526 in fines and costs, and attorney fees to be determined.'

UK: Female teacher facing jail for having 'sex' with 15-year-old pupil

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Madeleine Martin, 39, is facing jail after she admitted sexual activity with the boy at a school in Tameside, Greater Manchester, which cannot be named for legal reasons.

The teacher, who is now estranged from her husband, stood with her head bowed in the dock at Manchester Crown Court as she pleaded guilty to ten charges of sexual activity with a child under 16.
...
The judge told her that she would also be registered as a sex offender under the Sexual Offences Act and would also be investigated by the Independent Safeguarding Authority who would decide whether she should be banned from working with children or vulnerable adults.'

Canada: 45 days in jail for teacher who had 'sex' with boy

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'OSHAWA -- A former Durham Region teacher has been sentenced to 45 days in jail and a year of house arrest after admitting to a sexual relationship with a teenaged boy.

Jill Sparks, of Bowmanville, trembled visibly as she offered a tearful apology in an Oshawa courtroom Monday morning, often sobbing as she described the toll her crime and conviction have taken on herself and her family.
...
Justice Halikowski imposed a sentence of 45 days in jail in addition to a 12-month conditional sentence, during which Ms. Sparks will be confined to her home. She will be on the federal sex offenders list for 20 years and has been ordered to submit a sample of her DNA. She is prohibited for 10 years from working or volunteering with children.'

Oregon teacher jailed on 'sex' accusations

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HEPPNER, Ore. — The Morrow County sheriff's office arrested a female teacher accused of having sex with two boys, 15 and 17.

The sheriff's office says 30-year-old teacher was taken into custody Monday and lodged at the Umatilla County Jail on charges of sexual misconduct and rape.
...
The sheriff's office says the incidents began before the end of the last school year and continued through the middle of July. Morrow County District Attorney Elizabeth Ballard says she plans to present the case to a grand jury this week.

Superintendent Mark Burrows says the teacher has been a "super" teacher. The district placed her on administrative leave last week following accusations of inappropriate contact with minors.'

Canada: B.C. female teacher is given 6 months in jail and counseling for sexually assaulting student

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'VANCOUVER, B.C. — A former private school teacher who sexually assaulted one of her teenaged students and then gossiped about it to his friends is going to jail for six months and will spend two years on probation.

A provincial court judge in Vancouver heard the teacher, who can't be named, convinced the Grade 11 student that if he were sexually active he would be more confident.

After the two had sex, the teen learned the woman had phoned two of his closest friends and talked about what they had done, his lack of experience and her frustration.

While the woman initially denied having sex with the student, she entered a guilty plea in May to touching for a sexual purpose while in a position of trust.

On top of the six-month jail term, the former teacher also has to give a sample of her DNA, can't have any contact with males between the ages of 14-and 18-years-old, and has been ordered to attend counselling.'

Teen admits to false sexual assault claim

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A high school girl who falsely reported she had been sexually assaulted by a classmate was put on 10 months probation Thursday in Sarnia court.

The 16-year-old pleaded guilty to making the false report to Sarnia police in the spring.

The girl and a male student went to a park near their school for consensual sexual activity before returning to school.

She later told police she had been assaulted by the boy.

A police investigation determined it was a false allegation but not before the boy was interviewed by police and the girl underwent a sexual assault examination at the hospital.

The girl admitted the allegation was false.

The girl's mental health issues played a large part in the false report, said defence lawyer Noelle Wright.

The boy had developmental issues but the girl did not take advantage of him during the incident, said Wright.'

Student recants sexual assault claim

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Friday afternoon, ISU Public Safety announced that the female victim in the reported sexual attack on Sept. 4 recanted her statement and is being charged with false informing.

The female in the case, Erin Conley, 19, a second semester non-preference major, reported Tuesday that she had been approached in the HMSU Commons in the early afternoon Friday by a man trying to sell her a magazine subscription, said Bill Mercier, director of ISU Public Safety. The man then asked to be shown around campus.

Conley reported that when they arrived at her room in the Lincoln Quads, he sexually attacked her.
...
Conley is being charged with false informing, a class D misdemeanor. She is scheduled to appear in Terre Haute City Courclass Dt on Sept. 16.'

Man Faces Deportation After 'Victim' Falsely Accused Him Of Rape

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Sexual assault charges against a man set for trial were dropped in state Superior Court Friday after the complainant changed her story.

Henry Flores-Guardado, 37, had been charged with sexual assault of a spouse or cohabitor after the mother of his children told police he pinned her on their living room floor and forced her to have sex in June 2008.

"She maintained the allegations until, frankly, yesterday," said the prosecutor, Assistant State's Attorney Joseph Valdez.

She told an investigator for the defense that the entire story was false, Valdes said.

Judge Gary White dismissed the charges. But Flores-Guardado is being held and will likely be deported, Valdes said.'

Former WWE CEO with groin-kicking track record seeking Senate seat

Matt · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – Pro wrestling executive Linda McMahon (link added) has never been shy about wading into the ring — and now she's plotting a smackdown of Connecticut Sen. Christopher Dodd.

World Wrestling Entertainment Inc. said Wednesday McMahon has resigned as the company's chief executive to seek the Republican nomination for Dodd's Connecticut seat, providing a show-business twist to one of the nation's marquee Senate races.
...
McMahon and her family have been occasional performers. McMahon, who typically worked behind the scenes at the WWE, has said she's appeared in portions of the shows at least several dozen times during her more than 25-year-career. One video on the Internet shows her in the ring, appearing to kick a man in the groin.
...
McMahon could face criticism for some unsavory aspects of WWE's programming, particularly its sexually suggestive and violent themes. There could also be questions about whether her candidacy is motivated at least in part as a public relations ploy.

"At some level it's not a surprise that someone with a lot of money who is bored in her job would run," said Roy Occhiogrosso, a veteran Democratic strategist and Dodd supporter. "It certainly lends itself to all kinds of interesting metaphors."'

Woman Accused of Cutting Baby From Womb Held on $500G Bail

anthony · 16 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WORCESTER, Mass. — A woman accused of kidnapping a baby girl who had been cut from her mother's womb has been ordered held on $500,000 cash bail.

Julie Corey was arraigned on a kidnapping charge Wednesday in Worcester after being extradited to Massachusetts from New Hampshire.

Authorities arrested Corey on July 29 after finding her with the baby at a homeless shelter in Plymouth, N.H.'

Domestic Violence 101: What good is a plea agreement

Anonymous · 17 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This article in the Tucson Abusive Relationships Examiner neglects the abuse of justice in pressuring for plea agreements based on verbal accusations alone. Excerpt:

'But the case is strong, you are going to testify, so why would they offer a plea agreement?

Because it's a guarantee. A trial depends on 8 to 12 people who listen to the facts and decide whether your attacker is guilty or not. In the eyes of the law. As a victim, you already know full well what he/she has done.

A plea agreement also saves money. I'm pretty sure, especially with the economy as is that that needs not be explained.

A defendant who knows he/she is guilty may feel free to continue lying about it, but still knows they will probably be convicted. The plea is generally for a lesser charge, with a lower sentence. If he/she is charged with 5 years, they may offer only one. This encourages the defendant to stop lying, admit what they did and pay for their crimes.'

Hofstra student recants gang rape story

anthony · 17 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EAST MEADOW, N.Y. — Four New York men were released from jail Wednesday and authorities dismissed charges that they gang-raped a Hofstra University student after the 18-year-old woman recanted her story.

"I'm so happy the truth finally came out," said Stalin Felipe, 19, outside the Nassau County Jail in East Meadow where he and the other three had just been released Wednesday night.

Nassau County District Attorney Kathleen Rice said in a statement late Wednesday that the woman told law enforcement officials that the sex encounter in a dormitory men's room was consensual.

Rice said a county judge then dismissed the charges against the four men and ordered their release. She said her office has launched a criminal investigation into the woman's statements.'

Ed.: Story also covered here. I wonder if charges for making false statements and false accusations will be forthcoming - or will this young woman, like the recent church fire-bug, merely get "sentenced" to counseling?

SUNY Plattsburgh: Women Studies Department Offers Course In 'Men and Masculinity'

anthony · 17 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men and Masculinities, a new general education course, has been added to the curriculum, as well. It was first offered in fall '08, with only three male students. The course quickly gained popularity, being offered online in both winter and summer. This semester 43 students enrolled in the course,one-third of them being men.
...
"It's a transformative experience for them. It gives them the opportunity to talk about what it means to be a man," says Sharoni. "They can relate to the material and they do great work in the class. At the same time, women are very excited to study gender alongside men as it is clear that men have a crucial role to play in the struggle for gender justice."
...
"Gender and Women's Studies is relevant to everyone that advocates social, economic, and political equality," says Brandon. "Men especially need to take an interest in the subject as members of the culture that promotes superiority over women."'

Woman accused of threatening to claim rape charged with extortion

anthony · 17 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'King County prosecutors have filed second-degree extortion charges against a Renton woman accused of threatening to report a former lover as a rapist if he didn't pay her $2,000.

In court documents, Mercer Island police contend that Jeanine Ann Gessner began harassing the man after he broke a date with her to attend a pre-season Seahawks game on Aug. 22.

An instant message exchange between Gessner and the man included in court filings shows a marked shift in her attitude toward him following the broken date. Initially loving, the writer whom prosecutors allege to be Gessner ultimately sent the man dozens of threatening messages.'

Indiana State University student who falsely reported rape faces community service as punishment

anthony · 17 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'The Indiana State University student who said she was raped and recanted her story could get a unique sentence.

Wednesday morning, 19-year-old Erin Conley pleaded guilty to False Informing.

The Vigo County Prosecutor will ask the Victim's Assistance office if Conley can do community service with them.

A deputy prosecutor told us they want Conley to work with actual crime victims in hopes this teaches her a valuable lesson.

It's also something they've never done before.

Conley will be sentenced September 25th.'

UM's Innocence Clinic Wants Man Accused of Rape Freed

anthony · 17 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ANN ARBOR, MI (Michigan Radio) - David Moran calls the 1986 trial against Karl Vinson a "scientific train wreck."

Moran is co-director of the Michigan Innocence Clinic at U of M. He says prosecutors presented false evidence at the original trial, including the fact that they called Vinson a "non-secretor," meaning his blood type wouldn't show up in any semen found at the scene of the crime.
...
"We know," says Moran, "and the evidence shows, and every scientist we've consulted says that he is conclusively exonerated."'

Councilman's wife arrested for assault

anthony · 17 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BULLHEAD CITY - Police arrested the wife of a Bullhead City Council member on Monday following a domestic violence incident at the couple's home.

Cyndie Renee McClure, 52, was arrested on suspicion of assault and disorderly conduct, both per domestic violence, at approximately 7:30 p.m. Monday in the 1500 block of Garnet Lane.

John “Mickey” McClure, 67, allegedly told police that he and his wife had been drinking at the Elks Lodge and that his wife got mad at him when they returned home and punched him in the face.'

Canton man stabbed in chest; wife arrested

anthony · 17 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CANTON — A Canton man was stabbed in the chest during an argument early Thursday morning and his wife was jailed.

Tanisha Baker, 35, of 1462 Gibbs Ave. NE, was booked into the Stark County Jail on a felonious assault charge and held in lieu of $50,000 bond, jail records said.

Canton Police reports said Anthony J. Baker, 34, of the same address, was stabbed in the chest with a knife during an argument at their home at 4 a.m.

The records did not provide details about the argument.'

Woman arrested in stabbing of 11 year old boy

anthony · 17 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here

'An 11-year-old Fresno boy was hospitalized Wednesday after he was stabbed by a 25-year-old woman, police said.

The victim suffered injuries to his chest, collarbone and back that were not considered life-threatening, police spokesman Jeff Cardinale said.

He was in stable condition Wednesday night at Community Regional Medical Center.

Police arrested the woman and booked her into jail on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon. Police have recovered an ink pen.'

MSNBC: The Superiority of Wives

el cid · 17 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Okay, get the barf bag ready: wives are indeed the better half. MSNBC and psychologist Carin Rubenstein say so. Women do it all; men do next to nothing. Excerpt:

'It turns out that a majority of married couples — about two out of three — are just like us: the wife is the one who can't get hit by a truck. She's the one who develops expertise in nearly all aspects of modern life; she becomes the de facto master of the marital domain while also earning a significant part of the family income.

It's as if by taking on a husband, a wife gains a dependent — not quite a child, but not quite a true partner either. She's Marge Simpson to her husband's Homer. This arrangement does not characterize every single married couple, of course, just a great many of them. While husbands may joke about wives being their "better half," quite often it's the literal truth. Wives are the better half — the ones who are capable and responsible, organized and efficient, caring and involved.
...
The superiority of wives has become the only remaining fact of modern life that dare not speak its name.'

Men’s Lost Decade: How Smoke and Cholesterol Shorten Life Span

Michael · 18 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sept. 18 (Bloomberg) -- Men who smoke and let fat clog their arteries die a decade earlier than those who don’t.

Scientists looking for a connection between life expectancy and cardiovascular risk factors combed through the Whitehall study, a survey of 19,019 male civil servants that started in London in the late 1960s.

They found that those who had high blood pressure, high cholesterol and smoked in middle age died about 10 years earlier than the others after reaching age 50. The findings are published in the latest edition of the British Medical Journal. The reduction in life expectancy was even greater when the researchers factored in body mass index and diabetes.

In the study, the researchers found smoking shortened life by about six years and married men tended to live about two years longer.'

Dr. Dean Edell debunks circumcision as weapon against AIDS

Matt · 18 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. More on Dr. Edell is found here. Excerpt:

'In 1978, Edell began broadcasting regularly on KGO AM 810 radio in San Francisco. The Dr. Dean Edell radio program has been in continuous production since then, and is currently (2005) syndicated to 90 markets by Premiere Radio Networks, and airs weekday afternoons on America's Talk on XM Radio. Its opening theme music (presently, in 2008) is "You Get What You Give" by New Radicals.

The program's format includes commentary from Edell and medical-related calls from listeners. He reports recent developments in medical science and exposes fraud whenever he sees it, which is often, particularly in the area of food supplements, opposition to vaccinations and holistic healing. He frequently summarizes complicated medical material into language that is easily understood by laymen, and is fond of tackling controversial concepts from a viewpoint based on the scientific method. His scientific and objective approach to presenting "just the medical facts as backed by the scientific proof" often draw the ire of those with hidden political, religious and/or financial agendas.'

Rape accusation 'traumatizing,' former suspect says

anthony · 18 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (CNN) -- Four young men falsely accused of raping an 18-year-old student at Hofstra University were trying to return to their normal lives Friday after an ordeal that two of them described as traumatic.
...
Authorities dropped charges and freed the four men hours after their accuser changed her story about having been forcibly tied up and sexually assaulted in a dormitory bathroom.
...
The woman recanted her story Wednesday after authorities told her that part of the incident was recorded on a cell phone video, Rice said.

"That was when she began to tell the truth," she said.
...

Authorities have not released the accuser's name.

"I believe that it is a question of potential safety for her, and the investigation is ongoing," Rice said.

It is against the law to report a crime when there was not one, Rice said. Authorities gave no indication whether the woman may face charges.

"Her actions and her demeanor depict a very troubled young woman in need of much help," Rice said.'

Michelle Obama: Health Care is a Women's Issue

anthony · 18 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First Lady Michelle Obama made the case Friday morning that health care reform is a women's issue and called on female activists to support President Obama's reform plan.

"Health insurance reform and what it means for our families is very much a women's issue," Obama said, speaking to a group of female advocacy leaders at the White House. "If we want to ensure women have opportunities that they deserve, if we want women to be able to care for their families and pursue things they could never imagine, then we have to reform the system."'

Blog: 'False Rape Accusations and Rape Culture'

anthony · 18 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Both rape and rape accusations are products of the roles assigned by rape culture. In the traditional seduction scenario, a woman is expected to not desire to have sex, and to only submit after the man has successfully coerced her into submission. When the preferred model for consensual sex looks a hell of a lot like rape, an array of fucked-up scenarios are inevitable: the woman never wanted to fuck the guy, refuses to submit, and is raped; the woman submits to the man's coercion in order to avoid other negative consequences (like being raped); the woman had desired the sex all along, but must defend her femininity by saying that she had been coerced into sex. Thankfully, a good deal of modern men and women reject these antiquated ideas, but they're far from being banished from the sexual landscape. Especially when that landscape involves four men, one woman, and freshman year of college.'

Roethlisberer's lawyer: Accuser's attorney fostered unfounded rape accusations

anthony · 18 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Attorneys for Steelers QB Ben Roethlisberer have formally asked a Nevada court to sanction the lawyer for the woman who accused him of rape.

Roethlisberger's attorneys claim that Cal Dunlap, the lawyer for Andrea McNulty, allowed her to bring forth a civil suit alleging rape when he knew the story was not true.

In court papers, Roethlisberger's team team said that Dunlap "welded together false allegations to punish (the plaintiff's) employer and coerce a windfall from an admired, civic minded and successful professional football star."'

MND: Where Are All the Men's Organizations?

Matt · 18 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The absence of strong men's organizations became painfully evident recently in Sweden when there was a prominent debate in the media about male circumcision (there is no Swedish tradition to circumcise men, but we have lots of Muslim immigrants and also a small Jewish community that practise circumcision). The only ones who spoke up against male circumcision were a few male surgeons who refused to perform the procedure, even though the Swedish government has ordered hospitals to offer this service to those who want it. A survey later showed that two thirds of surgeons were reluctant to circumcise healthy boys.

Anyhow, the main point is that no men's organization spoke up because there are no men's organizations in Sweden that could speak up. Where the men's groups should have been, was only a compact vacuum.

This is a stark contrast to the numerous women's organizations that exist in Sweden, feminist or otherwise. The end result is that male circumcision is still allowed in Sweden, even though female circumcision has been banned for almost three decades (Swedish people don't practise that either, but some African immigrants do).
...
...no substantial progress will be made until men self-organize into larger units that can then speak out for men's rights. Individual efforts are great, but in the long run organizations have more staying power than any one individual.'

Woman ordered son, friends to beat up teen, police say

anthony · 18 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A Maryland mother faces assault charges for allegedly ordering a group of teens to beat up a 14-year-old who was stabbed in the ensuing melee, Baltimore County police said Friday.

Kimberley Lyn Cudanin, 34, told her 16-year-old son and at least four of his friends to attack Malaki Malloy as retaliation for a recent assault against her 14-year-old son, police said in a news release.

On Saturday night, Cudanin drove some of the teens to where Malloy was, about a mile from her home, police said. Those teens and others at the scene then beat and stabbed Malloy and three friends who were with him, police said.

Malloy was released from the University of Maryland Medical Center's shock trauma center Monday, hospital spokeswoman Cindy Rivers said Friday.

Cudanin and her son Andre were arrested Monday and face first- and second-degree assault charges, police spokesman Bill Toohey said.'

American Prospect: 'Combating the Campus Rape Crisis'

anthony · 19 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why hasn't it worked? Perhaps it's because making rape prevention the responsibility of young women teaches students that guys can't be expected to be responsible for their own actions. Not surprisingly, that results in student bodies eager to let rapists off the hook and campus policies (like the one recently implemented at Tufts that forces victims into "mediation" with their rapists) that treat rape as an unfortunate disagreement instead of like the violent crime it is. Make no mistake about the danger of these equanimous attitudes -- in his 2002 landmark study of 1,882 male college students in the Boston area, Dr. David Lisak demonstrated that most campus rapes are perpetrated not by well-meaning boys confused about consent but by repeat-offender sociopaths who know exactly what they're doing. Treating rape like an unfortunate but understandable miscommunication doesn’t just deny victims justice and downplay the traumatic nature of the experience -- it allows rapists to remain free to rape again and again.'

2009 Value Voter Summit: A "new masculinism" needed to compliment a "new feminism" johndias · 19 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Information here. Political conservatives are putting on a conference today, Saturday September 19, in Washington, D.C. One of the breakout sessions is entitled, "The New Masculinity," and calls for a redefinition of masculinism and feminism as "compliments" to each other. You can watch the conference live (Eastern Standard Time, GMT -5). From the schedule:

2009 Value Voters Summit
Date: Saturday, September 19
Sponsored by FRC Action: The legislative action arm of the Family Research Council

Breakout session #2:

"THE NEW MASCULINITY"
Time: 4:15-5:00 p.m.
Place: Omni Shoreham Hotel, 2500 Calvert Street NW, Washington, D.C.
Room: Congressional A

Speakers:
Dr. Pat Fagan -- Senior Fellow and Director, Center for Family and Religion, Family Research Council;
Michael Schwartz -- Chief of Staff, Senator Tom Coburn (R-Okla.);
Dr. Matthew Spalding, Director; B. Kenneth Simon -- Center for Studies, The Heritage Foundation

Abstract:
Feminism has wreaked havoc on marriage, women, children and men. It is time to redress the disorder it has wrought and that must start with getting the principles and ideals for a new "masculinism" right. Such a "masculinism" will have its dovetailing counterpart in a new "feminism" for they mutually define each other and, in nature, are meant to be complementary. This panel will begin this exploration.

Israel: Violent female soldier caught on camera

Anonymous · 19 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a great example of how extremely violently women can freely behave in Israel without getting punished at all. You can watch and see it in this video.

A male soldier get into a bus, the driver asking him to step out only because there's no empty seat left in the bus but he refuses. A female soldier getting angry on him, assaulting him using both physical and verbal violence in order to throw him out of the bus. I can't even translate what she say because it's so extremely vulgar!

The Israeli media did show this story but covered her face in order to protect her, as they mostly do with female criminals.

Calif. pastor jailed for drugging, abusing 5 girls

anthony · 19 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

'MORENO VALLEY, Calif. - A California pastor has been sentenced to life in prison for beating and drugging her five adopted daughters and locking them in a garage.

Jessica Banks, 65, received consecutive life terms Friday after being convicted in July of sexually abusing two of her daughters and forcing all the sisters to go without food for days.

Banks was arrested in 2005 after one emaciated girl was found lying outside a Moreno Valley business.

Prosecutors say the sisters, who were ages 4 to 11 at the time, lived in a hidden room in Banks' garage with no air conditioning or heating.

They attended school at the Word of Life Apostolic Church, where Banks was pastor.'

State computer glitch causes overcharges in child-support cases

anthony · 19 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'TRENTON -- A local attorney has uncovered a glitch in the software the state uses to calculate child support awards, prompting an investigation into how widespread the problem is, officials have confirmed.

Robert Rottkamp Jr., who practices law in Ewing, discovered the problem when a state-support order issued against his client claimed the man owed $16 more each week than Rottkamp's own software indicated.

He advised a Superior Court judge of the discrepancy, and she took the matter up with the state Administrative Office of the Court. The ensuing investigation revealed an error in the software. The state is now looking into the ramifications of that problem.

"At this point, we don't know exactly what happened, how often it occurred or the number of people it affected," said Tami Kendig, a spokeswoman for the AOC.

Last year, state courts handled 67,387 divorce cases and 158,587 nondissolution cases involving unmarried couples with shared children or assets. Not all of the cases involved child support, Kendig said. Nor did they all utilize the faulty software, she added.'

Wendy McElroy: 'Kids are like the Gorgon. Do not gaze too long'

anthony · 19 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Piece here

'For many months I have been crying out against the political hysteria that currently surrounds issues of child abuse, child sexuality, etc. The witch hunt has made men into presumed criminals if they manifest the most innocent of behavior -- e.g. kiss their own child in public, snap a photo in which a child happens to be present even if the child is their own, make or hold eye contact with children, sit on a bench near a public school or park... The following is one of the emails I receive from men who are presumed guilty by society by virtue of being male.'

Women’s Group Presses Judge in Monserrate Trial

anthony · 19 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'The National Organization for Women in New York State is calling on the judge trying State Senator Hiram Monserrate on domestic violence charges to give him “the maximum sentence allowable by law.”

But Mr. Monserrate has not yet gone on trial on charges that he slashed his companion’s face during an argument on Dec. 19 — that starts on Monday in State Supreme Court in Queens. And he certainly has not been convicted.

To the outrage of his lawyers, the women’s group is asking its supporters to reach out to the jurist who is hearing the case as judge and jury. Mr. Monserrate decided this week to have his guilt or innocence decided by a judge in a bench trial rather than by a 12-member jury of his peers.

Joseph Tacopina, Mr. Monserrate’s lead lawyer, who was alerted to the campaign by one of the senator’s constituents who had received the appeal, called it “inappropriate, improper and offensive” and said he would offer a legal objection when the case opens on Monday.

“They’re trying to improperly persuade the fact finder,” Mr. Tacopina said in an interview. “It’s akin to writing a letter to a juror.”

Examiner: Why women are attracted to bad boys, thugs, and players

anthony · 19 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Piece here

Excerpt:

'The man that a woman deems to be "too nice" does not, BY HER INDIVIDUAL STANDARDS, present himself as the image of masculine power, strength, confidence, charisma, energy, sexuality, decisiveness, or character.

Too nice also means:

You are a wimp in that woman's eyes... milquetoast, sensitive and soft like a woman.

you are confused about what to do and how to do it to protect yourself when you see a game being run.

you have low self esteem and don't demand respect from the women you date in an effort to please, which comes across as groveling.

you are always there for people that are never there for you. Too nice means your family knows you are an easy tap for rent money after they spent theirs gambling in Reno.

your boss has no problem calling you in do work and assignments on the weekend, even though s/he knows you have plans with your family.'

Carleton suspends entire women's soccer team over 'rookie initiation'

Scottie · 19 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Full Story

OTTAWA — Carleton University suspended its women's soccer team on Friday after a rookie initiation party ended with a player being taken to the hospital by ambulance following excessive drinking.

It is believed that a team party last Sunday saw one player so incoherent from alcohol that an ambulance took her to the hospital.

The team will not participate in weekend games against the University of Toronto and Ryerson University and Carleton's athletic department will meet with individual players on Monday to decide if the suspension should be extended.

Jennifer Brenning, Carleton's Director of Recreation and Athletics, refused to discuss specifics, but said the entire team seriously breached the code of conduct set out by the athletic department and the university.

...

"It was a get-together of the entire team, to hold a rookie initiation," said Brenning. "The team met without the coach (Andy McNutt) Sunday and it involved the entire team. The coach found out about (the incident) on Wednesday and contacted (the athletic department). We started an investigation and found a breach of the code of conduct. We met with the entire team (Friday) and outlined the severity of their actions.

"In this situation, they all participated. They've all been suspended. In the past, we have suspended individual players for abuse of alcohol or other issues, but this is the entire team."

The athletic department's code of conduct says, "varsity athletes are expected to separate themselves from any conduct that might be considering unsporting or that might bring their own reputation, the reputation of the team, the University or their sport, into disrepute.

"Examples of unsporting behaviour include participation in any form of hazing, or any initiation rite, which would be considered demeaning, humiliating or disrespectful as measured by the standard of the reasonable person. (Participation will be deemed to include passive participation, or failure to act to end such behaviour by others where one reasonably knew, or ought to have known, it was taking place)."

"We will meet with individual players on Monday to make a decision on what the next step is for the program, in terms of whether there are further suspensions, and in terms of whether there's any more discipline," said Brenning. "We hope the team learns something and hopefully there's a lesson out there for other teams."

Men Underrepresented in 7 of 10 Grad School Fields insdel2005 · 20 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The Council of Graduate Schools just released data on graduate schools... Women represented 58.9% of all graduate students in 2008, meaning that there were 143 women enrolled in graduate school for every 100 men. Further, women were overrepresented in 7 out the 10 fields of graduate study and underrepresented in three fields (business, engineering and physical sciences).

Q: Why does the under representation of women in engineering, math and science get so much more attention than the under representation of men in arts and humanities, biology, education, health sciences, public administration, and social sciences? After all, male graduate students are about as underrepresented in fields like health sciences (20.1% male, and 398 women per 100 men), education (24.8% male) and public administration (25.5% male) as women are underrepresented in engineering (22% female).'

No yardstick for child’s best interest

Matt · 20 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“What is in the interest of the child?” is the question that must be asked in all situations in which legal decisions have to be made about the welfare of children.

But the answer is indeterminate and indeterminable.

While sounding noble, in practice this concept is nothing more than a blank screen upon which decision makers, mental health professionals, welfare workers, lawyers, religious leaders and politicians are invited to project their own beliefs and values.

A decision or belief in one context about what is in the best interests of a child would differ from person to person, place-to-place, culture to culture and generation to generation.

What was considered to be in the best interest of a child in Victorian times is very different from what is considered in the best interest of a child today.'

No charges against false accuser in Hofstra case

Matt · 20 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. The DA goes on with the usual "this is a rare case of false accusation" and how we can't let this get in the way of going after accused rapists, etc., etc. She also mentions toward the end how the accused should also be treated fairly. Yeah, right.

No telling why teacher's sex charge reduced

anthony · 20 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'YAKIMA, Wash. -- An East Valley High School teacher has pleaded not guilty to sex charges involving a student; however, a charge of sexual misconduct has been mysteriously reduced from what prosecutors initially said they had filed.

Earlier this week, deputy prosecutor Sam Chen said he didn't know why the charges filed in Yakima County Superior Court were actually for second-degree sexual misconduct -- a gross misdemeanor punishable by up to one year in prison.

In a phone message Monday, Chen blamed any perceived "double standard" on overblown media coverage.

"The difference is in the media, which seems to portray the sexual misconduct with female teachers as opposed to male teachers more," he said.

"It goes beyond sex cases. The criminal justice system, in my perception, is far more lenient to women accused of serious crimes than they are to men," Trejo said.

"Why do they do that? I think there's a perception that the woman is not a violent offender ... and there-fore is treated with gentle hands, with kid gloves."'

GROWTH INDUSTRY: False Rape Accusers Earning Big Bucks And Book Deals

anthony · 20 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here

Excerpt:

'According to reports, the crime of "bearing false witness" is rarely tracked or punished, and the context in which it is usually raised is highly politicized.

Now, a new pattern of making big bucks for these false accusers is emerging through back door deals ranging from personal appearances on shows like Oprah, book deals and cash donations from sympathetic and concerned citizens across the country.

Most recently, in fact, this month, a new case evolved where a young coed accused five men of gang raping her in a dorm bathroom. Four of the men were arrested and jailed while police searched for the fifth suspect. This all came about at Hofstra University in Mineola, NY. Hofstra was in the news earlier during the presidential race when the last debate was held there in 2008.

Just one example is the Duke lacrosse scandal where exotic stripper Crystal Mangum, accused three members of the Duke team of sexually assaulting her while she was dirty dancing at a frat party.

NOW, she is cashing in with her new tell all book titled "The Last Dance for Grace… The Crystal Mangum Story." As one person told us, maybe it should be titled "Last Chance to Cash In."'

Police say woman recanted her report of rape

anthony · 20 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'It began Friday night with phone calls to police about a woman running on a downtown Keene street in only a shirt and underwear, saying she had been raped.

After she changed her story, it ended Saturday afternoon in assault charges against her boyfriend and an investigation against the woman for a false report, police said.

At the hospital, Wheeler retracted the claim, and instead said that Michelewicz had pushed her to the ground during an argument, Maxfield said.

Michelewicz, who co-hosts the Cheshire TV libertarian-centric show Free Minds TV was arrested at the couple's home at 8 Town St., on Saturday afternoon and charged with simple assault.

He was later released on $1,000 personal recognizance until his arraignment on Oct. 5, and ordered not to contact Wheeler or go within 100 yards of her, Maxfield said.'

SHAWNE MERRIMAN FALSELY ACCUSED OF DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

anthony · 20 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'San Diego Charger's stud linebacker Shawne Merriman was arrested on September 6 for allegedly choking his girlfriend Tila Tequila Nguyen at his home and holding her against her will. Both charges were felonies under California law as according to San Diego County Sheriff's Lieutenant Gary Steadman, Tequila signed an arrest warrant against Merriman. Merriman was released from jail that morning shortly after 11 a.m. According to authorities, Tequila Nguyen did not appear to be hurt, but because she signed a formal complaint the police had no choice but to take Merriman into custody. Merriman contended he was trying to assist an imbibed Tequila Nguyen, to prevent her from driving; while facilitating her desire to get home safely. Clearly, this was a high profile case of he said, she said.'

According to a report from Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Violence Reporting (RADAR) - post 1994 Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), California passed legislation that targeted preferential/mandatory arrests in alleged domestic violence cases, and men as the primary aggressors. So, Merriman now knows why Lady Justice was unfair to him when the police arrived. Sure, in the end he was legally exonerated, but his reputation and character have been sullied due to the negative media exposure.

Hofstra Accuser Hiding Out In New York City

anthony · 20 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'She's been kicked out of college and is facing possible criminal charges. The woman who wrongly accused five men of rape is hiding out

Hofstra students told CBS 2 HD on Thursday night the case makes them angry.

"Her false accusations hurt a lot of people. Yes, it hurt the gentlemen who spent time it jail. It hurt the university. It hurt the university's reputation and it hurt Nassau County financially," student Zach Parker said.

"I think full charges should be pressed against her because that's just not right," Robert Koulakjian said.'

UK: 'Ladies only can park Heer!'

anthony · 20 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

Excerpt:

'Bosses at Heerema Hartlepool have cited reasons such as needing to find more spaces because of its growing workforce and trying to bring an end to an ongoing row which alleges that bays had been set up specifically for women.

Company officials spoke to the Mail after an irate worker at the site in Greenland Road sent a photograph to the Mail which had been posted in one of the parking areas and which claimed it was a women's only parking area.

The worker, who did not wish to be named, said it was gender discrimination and added: "The battle over women's parking has been an ongoing thing for over a year when Heerema put up signs stating that a certain area of the car park was reserved.'

More On Plattsburgh's Women's Studies Program

anthony · 20 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here

Excerpts:

'The Department of Gender and Women's Studies offers an array of diverse courses that cover a plethora of disciplines.

"We've been seeing a steady increase in students, and a lot of it is because of the Men and Masculinity course," Sharoni said.

...

The department focus has shifted from just women and their differences to gender and what it means to be male or female in a specific society.

...

"And the focus on gender allows us to also shift to issues that affect men, while continuing to focus on issues that affect women.

"One challenge is not to stereotype men. We see men in all societies who resist stereotypical, patriarchal models and the new models they present."

Critics claim gender studies is an attempt to take over the feminist agenda with studies on masculinity.'

Official: Charges 'likely' for Hofstra false rape accuser

anthony · 21 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The woman who falsely accused four men of gang-raping her in a Hofstra University dormitory bathroom is "likely" to face charges this week, a law enforcement official said, as the case became fodder for Nassau District Attorney Kathleen Rice's election opponent.

The woman, an 18-year-old freshman who has not been identified by authorities, probably will be charged "within days," said the official, who spoke Sunday on condition of anonymity because the probe is ongoing.

Nassau police and the district attorney's office are awaiting "a few pieces of corroborating evidence," the official said.
...
Watson, who was in charge of sex-crime prosecutions under former District Attorney Denis Dillon, said Rice should have charged the young woman "immediately."
...
While Rice has called the female student "a very troubled young woman in need of some help," Watson said decisions about "leniency" should be made "after charges have been brought."

Man faces dismal life after rape accusation, jail time

anthony · 21 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'He was accused of rape and jailed for more than three months before officials realized they couldn't prove their case. The woman, a mental patient, apparently lied, prompting even the prosecutor to call her the most “out-of-touch-with-reality victim he'd ever seen.”

But the accusation did its damage — emotionally and financially. He has nothing left.

“Even being cleared, there is a fog that's quite heavy that hangs over me,” Doke said. “You can't get rid of it.”
...
Doke was jailed for that incident, but he was acquitted of all charges except one: obstructing a peace officer. While in jail, a female friend, Barbara, wrote to him every day. Then, later, he put a new engine in her truck, but he wouldn't return it to her until she paid him for it. She told police he stole it. He earned a misdemeanor theft by receiving charge, for which he remains on probation today.'

The Happiness Gap is back is back is back is back

Matt · 21 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What may be the most widely-discussed statistical over-interpretation in history is coming around for the third time. The first gust front of commentary blew in with David Leonhardt in the NYT Business Section in September of 2007, echoed a few days later by Steven Leavitt in the Freakonomics blog. In May of 2009, Ross Douthat's NYT column recycled the same research for another round of thumb-sucking. And the same material has just been promoted again by Arianna Huffington...

...

People love this story. They love to speculate about the reasons for the trend — the favorites are variants of "too much feminism" and "not enough feminism" — and to tell us about their own happiness or lack thereof. Tens of thousands of readers, across the repeated reprises of this story in the mass media, have commented on various newspaper and weblog sites. In a certain sense, this tidal wave of response validates the story, which clearly resonates with something in the spirit of the times. But in fact, the empirical basis for all this fuss is so thin as to be practically non-existent.

...

To Arianna Huffington, this means that "women are becoming more and more unhappy", while "men … have gotten progressively happier over the years". To Maureen Dowd, this means that "Before the ’70s, there was a gender gap in America in which women felt greater well-being. Now there’s a gender gap in which men feel better about their lives." Ross Douthat described these numbers with the generalization "In postfeminist America, men are happier than women."

All of these statements are either false or seriously misleading. Maybe, if you look at the data through a sophisticated statistical model, you can support a conclusion about the relative signs of the long-term-trends for males and females. But any way you slice and dice it, there's not much there there.'

Australia: Elite school to fix gender gap

anthony · 21 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EXCLUSIVE Adelaide private school Pembroke is about to become even more so - particularly if you're a male.

The Kensington Park school has been granted a three-year exemption to anti-discrimination laws, allowing it to correct a gender imbalance within its junior ranks.

Boys will be turned away from Years 1 and 6, and girls will be turned away from Year 4.

The ruling by the Equal Opportunity Tribunal comes after the recent expiration of a previous similar exemption granted to the school in 2006.

According to evidence provided by the school to the Equal Opportunity Tribunal of SA, 61 per cent of Pembroke's 2010 enrolment for Year 1 and 6 will be boys, while Year 4 will be 60 per cent girls.'

Speaker teaches men to avoid abuse, sexism

anthony · 21 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It has been said that "It's a man's world," but some of us take that way too literally. In fact, sometimes such sexism can turn deadly.

"The foundation of manhood is not all that different for most men," said Tony Porter, co-founder of the group A Call to Men, which deals with issues of domestic abuse and sexual violence against women.

Porter, a nationally recognized public speaker, will be in Milwaukee and Madison this week to hold training sessions sponsored by various groups dealing with the issue.

Porter has held similar training sessions for the U.S. military, assorted colleges and universities and even the United Nations. He said his goal is to teach men to avoid the pitfalls of abusive and sexist attitudes toward women.
...
Porter has gained a national reputation for telling men how to do right by women, but much of his message also is about redefining what it means to be a man. His sessions are designed to show men just how much sexism remains as a barrier for women, but also a barrier for society in general.

"There are aspects of manhood that need to be redefined to make it safer for women," he said. "That way, it will make it safer for us all."'

UK: Mother guilty of daughter murders

anthony · 21 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Rekha Kumari-Baker, 41, admitted the killings but had denied murder on the grounds of diminished responsibility.

Davina Baker, 16, and Jasmine Baker, 13, were killed with a kitchen knife in a frenzied attack in 2007.

A jury at Cambridge Crown Court took about 30 minutes to reach a verdict of guilty on both counts of murder. She will be sentenced on Tuesday.

The court heard Davina was stabbed 39 times at the house in Stretham, on 13 June 2007. There were defence wounds on the girl's body.
...
Jurors were told one theory was that Ms Kumari-Baker wanted to "wreak havoc" on her ex-husband David Baker by killing the girls.
...
Psychiatrist Lyle Hamilton - who was called to give evidence by Kumari-Baker's lawyers - said medical literature showed that women had killed children because they were "mentally ill" and because they were a "retaliatory type".'

RADAR ALERT: Stop the Civil Rights Abuses; Prepare for Domestic Violence Awareness Month

Matt · 21 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Have you, or a person you know, ever been falsely accused of domestic violence? Targeted with a restraining order? Put in jail?

Each year over one million Americans are hit with a false or trivial accusation of partner abuse. It's now reached the point that domestic violence laws represent the largest roll-back in Americans' civil rights since the Jim Crow era!

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and the theme is "Restore Civil Rights to the Violence Against Women Act." DV Awareness Month is our opportunity to get word out that our nation's domestic violence laws have gone too far, harming innocent citizens and diverting scarce resources away from the true victims.

We are asking each and every person who reads this Alert to participate in DV Awareness Month. You can attend one of the events sponsored by your state domestic violence coalition - see listing of coalitions at http://www.usdoj.gov/ovw/statedomestic.htm.

Or you can set up your own event, whether it's an information table at a local library, presentation to local police, press release, radio interview, or whatever!

To assist your efforts, we've developed:

* A 2-page Analysis of the Issues: http://www.mediaradar.org/docs/RADARflyer-DVAM2009-issues.pdf
* A 1-page flyer: http://www.mediaradar.org/docs/RADARflyer-DVAM2009.pdf

At the national level, several columnists have agreed to write articles on the issue, and we will be holding a major lobbying event in Washington DC.

RADAR would like to have DV Awareness Month activities in every state around the country. After you have your activity, event, or program, please send us an email and let us know how it went: dvam2009-at-mediaradar.org

As we approach the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act in 2010, it's critical that every American hear the message, "Restore Civil Rights to the Violence Against Women Act."

"A small group of thoughtful people could change the world. Indeed, it's the only thing that ever has." – Margaret Mead

++
Date of RADAR Release: September 20, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence.
http://www.mediaradar.org/

'Four Things About the Hofstra Rape/Recant Story'

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'2) Did you notice how I just said "turn out to be false or are recanted"? Let's not confuse the two.

There's a widespread assumption that recanting an accusation means that you're admitting you lied. But in reality, lots of victims recant not because they made it up, but because they come to the unfortunate realization that it will cost them more, emotionally, to pursue justice than to let it go. We'll probably never now what happened in this case, but it's entirely possible that she was threatened by the accused perpetrators or their associates, interrogated by the police about her sexual history or what she might have done to "provoke" the attack, or blamed and slandered by the media or people in her community. All of these things happen all too often to rape victims who speak out. Let's not ignore the possibility that they happened here.'

Equal Rights For Men

Anonymous · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have a bone to pick with my female counterparts. Feminism is all about each woman having the right to choose her own path. We should be allowed to do whatever we want in this life and not be judged by society's arbitrary sex roles, right? Absolutely.

What about men? Do they enjoy this right?

Some examples:

Bob and Jane are a middle class couple. They have two children. They get an amicable divorce. There is a custody hearing. Both of them are good parents. Both of them want to be the primary custody holder. Who gets the children? Seriously, every single time, unless Jane lights up a crack pipe in the courtroom she will get physical custody. Bob is expected by society to be happy with every other weekend and two weeks in the summer. Don't believe me? What would you think if you heard that a woman only saw her children every other weekend and a few holidays? I PROMISE you would think, "What did she do to lose her kids?" But, with men, that's just the way it goes, right?

What message does it send to men about what sort of fathers they should be when it's made clear by the courts and their ex-wives that their most important contribution as fathers is a timely child support payment?'

October is DV Awareness Month - Get Ready

Matt · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Just a reminder; RADAR release here. Excerpt:

'Have you, or a person you know, ever been falsely accused of domestic violence? Targeted with a restraining order? Put in jail?

Each year over one million Americans are hit with a false or trivial accusation of partner abuse. It's now reached the point that domestic violence laws represent the largest roll-back in Americans' civil rights since the Jim Crow era!

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and the theme is "Restore Civil Rights to the Violence Against Women Act." DV Awareness Month is our opportunity to get word out that our nation's domestic violence laws have gone too far, harming innocent citizens and diverting scarce resources away from the true victims.'

Michael Daly: Five who were wrongly accused of raping Hofstra student have no reason to whine

Matt · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If these five guys have no sense of shame, they should at least shut up.

No young woman would consent to having sex with five guys in a bathroom unless she was seriously troubled.

Any guy with even a trace of gentleman would have told everyone to leave this 18-year-old Hofstra freshman alone, then walked her to her room and left her in the care of a female friend or roommate.

Instead, the five apparently went ahead and had sex with her, one after another after another after another after another.

One even videotaped it with his cell phone.

Then surprise! She turned out to be as troubled as they should have known her to be in the first place.

She told her boyfriend and then the police that she had been gang-raped. The police locked up four of the guys while the fifth quaked in fear of joining them before he finally came forward with the video that showed the sex was consensual.'

Hofstra false rape case and related

Matt · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A collection, for those interested. There are of course hundreds, maybe thousands, more web pages discussing this case, but we can't list them all. Here are just a couple, with some related content:

Hofstra Student Could Face Criminal Charges for Rape Allegations

Falsely accused Hofstra rape suspects try to cope

About Half of Rape Allegations are False, Research Shows

Google News search on "false rape claim"

UK: Women lying about being raped to claim compensation

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women lying about being raped to claim compensation: - Women in the UK may be accusing men of rape simply to get the thousands of pounds compensation. This can only have the effect of bringing into disrepute the action of reporting a rape and could make true victims even less likely to report the crime.

Two recent cases have highlighted this sad state of affairs and show how the table may well be turned on women who falsely accuse men of rape.

Sarah-Jane Hilliard had accused Grant Bowers of raping her and immediately applied for compensation from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority. She was found out after investigations found that her story had been lies and her friend was unable to corroborate her story. Meanwhile Mr Bowers has been left traumatised by the events and claims to have lost his confidence. However, a recent ruling may well allow Mr Bowers to claim compensation himself.'

Hofstra Gang Rape Hoax, and Feminism's War Against Men

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Who is this woman who falsely accused four men of rape? They story doesn't say! The false rape complainant who had four innocent men jailed, must have her privacy protected. She is thus identified as "the student," "the accuser," or "the woman." How about giving us her name?
...
Wonderful! How awesome it must be for those four men, for the rest of their lives, to have to explain to people who Google their names, that they really didn't gang rape someone. Awesome first-date and job-interview topics. Meanwhile, the woman who had the men imprisoned for three days while the D.A. investigated the case, remains anonymous.
...
What is there to decide? If I kept a woman in a dungeon for three days, I'd face serious felonies. The false accuser had four men kept in jail for three days. What is the difference? It's false imprisonment.'

In Conversation: Ashley Judd speaks with the Nike Foundation about their focus on women & girls

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I think investing in HUMANITY is a better idea. Excerpt:

'Lisa: Systemic change is required at all levels of development. We've boiled this down to four basic learnings:

1.Specific solutions for girls. The unique needs of girls are getting lost in the broader focus on women and youth, so we have to be specific about solutions for girls. For example, girls are five times more likely to die in childbirth than women in their 20s and they have less access to health and social services.

2.Invest directly. Investing in girls doesn't mean investing only in girls. Take a look at your current programs and figure out whether they directly reach vulnerable adolescent girls. No matter your focus, girls can be a powerful part of the solution, or accentuate your problem.

3.It's urgent: Get to her by 12. She arrives at adolescence in a pretty healthy state, and it goes sideways from there. If we don't reach her by age 12, we will be investing in a treatment cycle rather than more cost-effective prevention methods.

4.Count her: Regardless of institutional size, ask for your reports and your data to be disaggregated by age, gender and marital status at a minimum. Girls will remain invisible in development efforts until we demand to see them.'

Bronx Woman Arrested in Companion's Death

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This is your typical 'woman kills man' article. A grand total of five sentences.

'NEW YORK (1010 WINS/AP) -- Police have arrested a woman in the brutal stabbing death of her live-in companion.

Police said Tuesday that the 32-year-old Bronx woman was arrested in the killing of 53-year-old Carlos Benitez.

Officers were called to the couple's apartment Monday. They found Benitez with multiple stab wounds to his head, neck and torso. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

Investigators say a domestic dispute led to the killing but offered no further details.'

Woman arrested after punching men on subway platform

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Uptown neighborhood woman was arrested for allegedly punching two men on a North Side L platform Sunday night in the Lake View neighborhood.

Nicole Patrick, 39, of the 1000 block of West Lawrence Avenue, was charged with simple battery, a misdemeanor, according to police.

The incident occurred at 6:50 p.m. at the CTA's Belmont Red Line L station when Patrick allegedly called two men who were standing together on the platform "c----," according to police.

Police said one of the men "took exception" to the statement and she punched him in the chest and scratched his neck. The other man came to his aid and she allegedly punched him in the nose, giving him a bloody nose, police said.'

UK: Teacher jailed for 'sex' with pupil

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A private school teacher who admitted having an unlawful relationship with a 15-year-old pupil has been jailed for 15 months at Southwark Crown Court.

Helen Goddard, 26, taught music at a prestigious central London school before her arrest in July.

Goddard, of Thornham Street, Greenwich, south-east London, pleaded guilty to six counts of sexual activity with a female child under 16.

She has also been ordered to sign the sex offenders register.'

Police: Teacher, Teen Had 'Relationship'

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FAIRFAX, Va. - New evidence suggests a Fairfax County school teacher who was arrested in the company of a 15-year-old boy over the weekend was having a sexual relationship with the teen.

According to a search warrant affidavit, police found text messages suggesting the two were meeting for sex.

Valerie Roesler, 27, of Alexandria, was arrested early Sunday morning and charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Police found Roesler and the 15-year-old boy sitting in a car on Gunston Hill Lane in the Lorton section of the county. They say the teen had slipped out of his parents' home without their knowledge.'

Woman Claims She Was 'Forced' Into Pipe Bomb Plot At California Courthouse

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

' A 32-year-old woman pleaded guilty Tuesday to charges she plotted with two accomplices to set off pipe bombs at a federal courthouse and a Federal Express distribution center in San Diego.

Rachelle Lynette Carlock admitted to using a pipe bomb — a weapon of mass destruction — to commit a crime, along with co-defendants Eric Reginald Robinson and Ella Louise Sanders, FOX 5 San Diego reported.

Carlock told the court she purchased explosives materials and stole pipes for the purpose of constructing the small bombs. She said she was in a difficult place in her life at the time of the crimes.

"I was forced to do it," Carlock told the judge without elaborating, according to FOX 5 San Diego.

Carlock was charged with using and carrying a destructive device in relation to a crime of violence. She be sentenced to 30 years in prison in March, the station said.'

Washington Post: Obama's 'Man-Cession'

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Much has been made of this fascinating Labor Department report, which USA Today put on its front page. It shows that women now hold almost half of all jobs in the US (49.83 percent, to be precise), up from 31.8 percent in 1964. One of the causes: men have been clobbered by the recent economic downturn, having lost three-quarters of the 6.4 million jobs wiped out since December 2007. Guy work like construction and manufacturing has been hard hit; meanwhile, the fastest growing sectors are health care, education and government, where women dominate new hires. These also happen to be the areas that are slated to get the biggest infusions of federal money under the president's $787 billion fiscal stimulus plan.

It's not a recession, it's a man-cession! So far, though, most of the commentary has focused on whether this proves that America's economy is now biased against men or whether it is still biased against women.
...
But what happens to that support if men get the idea that Obama didn't help get their jobs back? Carter's male support dropped to 36 percent against Republican Ronald Reagan in 1980.

This is far from foreordained, but if I were one of Obama's political advisers, I would be thinking about this.'

Former NFL star tackles importance of reading

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tim Green, who played eight years with the Atlanta Falcons and is now a best-selling author of 15 books for adults and adolescents, brought his message about the importance of reading to students at Chenango Forks Middle School.

While describing himself as "a voracious reader," Green said many young people view reading as "a miserable exercise." He blames adults for this, saying they assign adolescents to read books that are not entertaining for them, not fun and "like eating cardboard."
...
Green has made 151 school appearances in the last two years. His appearance at Chenango Forks was arranged by Patricia Sweeney, the library media specialist.

Sweeney said one reason she wanted Green to come and talk is because his books appeal to "reluctant readers," boys especially.'

Carey Roberts: 'ACORN Falls from the Tree, Will Abuse Shelters Come Next?'

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ACORN, the liberal activist group, was stripped of its funding by the House of Representatives Thursday following release of undercover videos showing lurid and criminal activities.

One tape showed an ACORN employee named Tresa Kaelke of San Bernardino, Calif. bragging how she had murdered her husband: "I shot him. And he died. Right there." To perfect her alibi, the ACORN worker declared how she had gone to a local domestic violence shelter where she "pleaded my case."

...

Recently Trudy Schuett of Examiner.com published an insider account of abuse shelters. She reveals, "We've seen cases where fictional abuse, contrived for the purposes of leverage in court, became a reality." In other words, shelter workers coached women like Tresa Kaelke how to fabricate a White Lie for purposes of manipulating the legal system.

Others have developed a similar jaded view of shelters' claims of protecting women from their villainous tormentors. In July, Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger announced his plan to rescue the state from the brink of financial insolvency, cutting all funds for domestic violence shelters in the state.

Over the years I've had occasion to visit abuse shelters, speak with their employees, and peruse their literature. Just like the kiss-and-tell videos reveal fraudulent actions at ACORN offices around the country, I have found evidence of widespread malfeasance.

...

No doubt some abuse shelters are providing a tremendous service to their communities. But considering abuse shelters take in $1.4 billion from the government and other sources annually, there are far too many bad apples in this barrel for Congress to continue to turn a blind eye on this sordid affair.'

More women supporting families

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'U.S. companies have shed nearly 7 million jobs since the start of the economic downturn in December 2007. Men have lost three of every four of those jobs, prompting some labor market watchers to dub this downturn the “he-cession.”

Half the job losses have occurred in male-dominated fields such as construction and manufacturing. The meltdown on Wall Street and in the housing market delivered another large contingent of men to the unemployment lines. Even if these industries recover, they’re not expected to replace all the jobs they shed.
...
That change has led to major discomfort for some men who are still struggling with their new role. While his wife was willing to talk, Weishan declined to be interviewed for this story.

“It’s the elephant in the room that nobody’s talking about. There’s still this male breadwinner history and you have fragile [male] egos,” said Dr. Ira S. Wolfe, a Pennsylvania work force consultant and author of the book “The Perfect Labor Storm 2.0: Workforce Trends That Will Change The Way We Do Business.”'

Opinion: Your image of a domestic-violence offender likely wrong

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What does a domestic-violence offender look like? That's an easy one. He may be lying around the house half-drunk even now, while his victim is out working. He probably blames his unemployment on his criminal record. You know this guy's been in trouble with the law before.

Coming up in October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and one of our few consolations in facing this widespread social problem is that we have a pretty good idea of who the offenders are.
...
The real-life data aren't very kind to the stereotype.

For one thing, more than 1,000 of these guys don't fit the model because they're not guys. Almost exactly 20 percent, or one in five domestic-violence suspects, were women. This agrees with other research findings. But it's also true that frustrated police officers, unable to identify the main aggressor in a domestic fight, sometimes take both parties in.'

Erin Pizzey: 'Why I loathe feminism ... and believe it will ultimately destroy the family'

anthony · 22 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Exceprt:

'ERIN PIZZEY set up the world's first refuge for battered women in 1971 - and went on to establish an international movement for victims of domestic violence. But what she has never made public before is that her own childhood was scarred by the shocking cruelty of both her parents. Here, for the first time, she tells the full harrowing story - and how it led her to a surprising, but deeply felt, conclusion ...
...
Thirty years later, when feminism exploded onto the scene, I was often mistaken for a supporter of the movement. But I have never been a feminist, because, having experienced my mother's violence, I always knew that women can be as vicious and irresponsible as men.
...
To outsiders, my father was a genial, intelligent man and my mother a famous party hostess with three beautiful children and a perfect diplomatic family. In fact, my parents were both violent, cruel people and we were all deeply damaged.
...

Feminism, I realised, was a lie. Women and men are both capable of extraordinary cruelty. Indeed, the only thing a child really needs - two biological parents under one roof - was being undermined by the very ideology which claimed to speak up for women's rights.

This country is now on the brink of serious moral collapse.
We must stop demonising men and start healing the rift that feminism has created between men and women.

Harriet Harman's insidious and manipulative philosophy that women are always victims and men always oppressors can only continue this unspeakable cycle of violence. And it's our children who will suffer.'

Response to “Battered Woman Syndrome: Key Elements of a Diagnosis and Treatment Plan"

Matt · 23 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A. Article here. Excerpt:

'I am writing to comment on the online article by Lenore Walker, EdD entitled “Battered Woman Syndrome: Key Elements of a Diagnosis and Treatment Plan.” In my view, Dr Walker’s report contains several inaccuracies and distortions—such as the notion that our society trains men to dominate and control women (“It is understood that domestic violence is part of gender violence. . . ”) Dr Walker provides no credible evidence for this claim.
...
It is worth mentioning that there is very little evidence that a battered women syndrome is any different from a battered men syndrome or from a battered child syndrome. Should we not be referring to a battered patients syndrome? Also worth noting that rates of domestic or intimate partner violence are among the highest in lesbian couples.'

UK: Killer mother jailed for 33 years

Matt · 23 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother who murdered her two daughters as they slept has been jailed for life and must serve a minimum of 33 years.

Rekha Kumari-Baker, 41, stabbed 16-year-old Davina 37 times and 13-year-old Jasmine 29 times at their home in Stretham, Cambridgeshire.

Her ex-husband said the killings were "an act of calculated viciousness".

The 33-year minimum sentence handed down at Cambridge Crown Court is one of the longest jail terms given to a woman in the UK in modern times.'

Parents sue over circumcision death

anthony · 23 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The parents of a six-week-old boy who bled to death after a circumcision at Rosebud's Indian Health Service Hospital last year are suing the government for wrongful death.

According to documents filed Wednesday in federal court, Eric Keefe underwent a circumcision on June 13, 2008. His mother gave him Motrin and Tylenol for pain and he suffered massive blood loss at home that night, dying back at the hospital the next morning.

...

The Keefes are seeking $2 million for personal injury and wrongful death.

Sturgis lawyer Mick Strain, who represents the plaintiffs, said he and the parents wouldn't talk about the case until it is tried or settled. The file lists no lawyer for the government.'

Trudy Schuett: Your taxes encourage violence v. men

anthony · 24 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Proponents of the New Perspectives approach to domestic violence have long been aware of the sexist, and otherwise biased nature of what has become the "traditional" public response to domestic violence. To the detriment of the public in general, governments at all levels, from federal to local, have been forced to cooperate with political activist groups whose ultimate objectives have little or nothing to do with aiding couples and families where intimate parter abuse is a problem.

Utilizing a fabricated scenario that only addresses the perceived political nature of the issue from a radical feminist standpoint, these political activist groups have managed in the past several decades to establish themselves as "experts" in the field, when nothing could be further from the truth. Time and again, the feminist scenario of domestic violence fails to stand up to scrutiny, since there was never any substance behind the notion that all domestic violence is politically motivated and a political/governmental solution is by any means viable.'

UK: Happy birthday to the Men's Health Forum

Anonymous · 24 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Check this out. These guys are doing an incredible work in the area of men's health! Excerpt:

'The MHF is fifteen years old this year. A spotty teenager, slouching and taciturn save for the odd indecipherable grunt? The Forum's first short history is being written and talking to the author the other day got me thinking about how much has changed.

When we were a toddler, the Forum used to make the news. In fact, our president Ian Banks was quoted so often in the press that other organisations assumed we had an army of press officers when in fact we had barely any paid staff. Screaming kids get noticed.

We punched well above our weight because, oddly enough, health is traditionally one of the few subjects in the media that is female-led. But in the 90s, smarter journalists and editors looking for a new angle realised that their health coverage was neglecting 50% of the population. Suddenly, men were the new women. We even got our own magazines – GQ, Maxim, Men’s Health.'

Mum, not dad, more likely to neglect kids

Matt · 24 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mothers are more likely than fathers to neglect and emotionally and physically abuse their children, information obtained under freedom of information laws reveals.

But figures from the WA Department for Child Protection show substantiated cases of child sexual abuse against fathers still far outnumber those against mothers.

The data shows that parents were the perpetrators in almost 39 per cent of the 1505 substantiated cases of child abuse in 2007-08. Of the 582 cases of abuse by parents, mothers were responsible for 73 per cent, while fathers committed 27 per cent.

Mothers were more than 17 times more likely than fathers to neglect their children, while fathers were responsible for 85 per cent of sex abuse cases against children.
...
dults Surviving Child Abuse WA spokeswoman Michelle Stubbs said an initial look at the data did not present a clear explanation and other factors had to be considered.

She said it was important to keep in mind that mothers were often the primary caregivers for children and also may be held more responsible by the department in neglect cases.'

Paternity Fraud Victims Needed for New National Survey

Matt · 24 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A. Sharon Squires, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Sociology at California State University-Dominguez Hills, and Carnell Smith of Citizens Against Paternity Fraud, have joined forces to develop a new on-line survey, the first of its kind, which will examine the emotional, financial, legal, and social impact of paternity fraud on men. The survey is at http://www.paternityfraud.com/pfsurvey.php

A news release about the survey and about the appearance of Squires and Smith at the next screening of "Support? System Down" in Atlanta is available here.

Praxis International speaker: "I think I know a lot of men who deserve to be beaten"

Matt · 24 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Trudy Schuett mentions NCFM's work in her fantastic article in the Examiner about how Amanda McCormick of Praxis International apparently made a position statement on behalf of Praxis when she said she knows "a lot of men who deserve to be beaten" during her keynote address at the annual conference of the Washington State Coalition Against Domestic Violence. Thank you, Trudy!

Ed.:
Conference page here.
Also reported here. Excerpt:

'Naturally, when asked for clarification about this comment, Janice Wick, Associate Director of Praxis, said:

"Amanda McCormick is an employee of Praxis International but was not representing Praxis at the Washington conference. As I was not present, I can not speak to your concerns. I would not want to make a judgment based on a sentence that may or may not have been taken out of context. I will forward your email to Amanda and she will respond to you directly."

Notice how there is always an excuse when PC comments are made in most organizations, one that would not be tolerated had the sexes been reversed. I am glad to see that people who were attending were outraged and that Ms. Schuett is on the case.'

Intact America: Contact the CDC

Matt · 24 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From IA's recent email alert:

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) doesn't seem to get it.

When our work to prevent the CDC from recommending circumcision for baby boys started making waves in the press last month, the CDC responded with a statement that tried to address our issues.

But their response didn't even mention the ethics of circumcising baby boys who cannot give their consent. It's clear that they're still missing the point.

Send a message directly to the CDC – tell them they must answer our ethical questions about circumcision.

The Dalai Lama is a Feminist

anthony · 24 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During his closing remarks at the International Freedom Award ceremony in the Peabody Grand Ballroom today, His Holiness the Dalai Lama called upon women to help create a more compassionate world.

“I call myself a feminist,” said the Dalai Lama. “Isn’t that what you call someone who fights for women’s rights?”

The audience erupted in laughter and applause. The Dalai Lama went to on say that women are more prone to compassion, since they have the responsibility of bearing children.'

Wendy McElroy: America's debtor prisons for men

anthony · 25 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I received the following email from a heartbroken and understandably enraged wife whose husband languishes in America's version of a debtor's prison. No one knows how many people -- almost all of them men -- are being held indefinitely on contempt of civil court charges for which they do not have the due process protections offered to those accused of a criminal offense -- no right to a trial, an attorney, an appeal...no due process. Most of these imprisonments are for non-compliance with court ordered child support or alimony. It does not matter if the man is unable to comply due to poverty -- e.g. from losing his job; he can be imprisoned anyway until he "pays up." For an analysis of the plight of these prisoners who languish in jail without ever being arrested, tried or accorded Constitutional rights, please see my article "The Return of Debtor's Prison."'

Opinion: The unique power of crying rape

anthony · 25 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Hofstra incident seems to be a classic case of a woman "crying rape" after consensual sex was followed by regrets. The woman said she was lured to a bathroom during a fraternity party, tied to a toilet stall with a rope and raped by five men. The men were arrested and briefly jailed before one of them produced a cell phone video filmed during the encounter, showing consensual sex. Confronted with the video, the woman recanted.
...
Many feminists argue that the problem of false accusations is so minuscule that to discuss it extensively is a harmful distraction from the far more serious problem of rape. On the other side are men's-rights activists, claiming that false accusations are as much of a scourge as rape itself.
...
Meanwhile, some are expressing harsh judgment of the men for engaging in group sex in a bathroom and filming it. This is not attractive behavior, to be sure. Yet we always have been told that rape victims don't need to be angels or models of chastity to deserve support. Surely the same should apply to men who are falsely accused.'

NYC tour for women only

anthony · 25 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A women-only tour of New York city is billed as "a fun-filled adventure and an opportunity to see and experience what New York City has to offer." And it's a chance to support the Sexual Assault Centre's goal of establishing a residential care facility.'

Hofstra Rape Accuser To Get Counseling, No Jail

anthony · 25 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The woman who wrongfully accused five men of a gang rape in a dormitory bathroom of Hofstra University will not face jail time, under an agreement with the Nassau County DA.

The woman behind the false allegations, Hofstra freshman Danmell Ndonye, will have to complete "substantial mental health treatment and lengthy community service requirements" or else face criminal charges, Nassau County District Attorney Kathleen Rice said in a statement.

The 18-year-old, previously described by the prosecutor as "a deeply troubled woman," had claimed she was attacked following a dance party at a Long Island campus nightclub. Four men were arrested and a fifth was being sought when she recanted the story three days later.'

Nassau County DA's Office contact info is here.

UK: Four in court charged with raping a man

anthony · 25 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is one to watch. Will we see a sentencing disparity? Excerpt:

'Two teenage girls have been charged with the alleged rape of a man in Cippenham in July.

The 17-year-olds, who cannot be named for legal reasons, appeared at Maidenhead Youth Court on Thursday, September 17.

Both girls are charged with rape, false imprisonment and assault occasioning actual bodily harm (ABH).

They have been bailed to await their next court appearance at Reading Crown Court on Thursday, October 15.

Two men in their twenties appeared at Slough Magistrates' Court on July 11 also charged with rape, false imprisonment and ABH.

They have been remanded in custody and will appear at Reading Crown Court on October 15 for a plea and case management hearing.'

U.K. Court: Teacher May See 'Student Lover', 15, After Jail Time

anthony · 25 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In a controversial ruling, a British judge declined to forbid contact between a music teacher and the 15-year-old pupil with whom she'd had an affair.

A Sept. 22 article in the U.K. newspaper The Times reported that 26-year-old music teacher Helen Goddard was sentenced to a 15 month prison term and a decade-long inclusion on a sex offender registry, but that the judge declined to bar the teacher from renewing her relationship with the 15-year-old girl whom she was convicted of having an improper sexual relationship.

...

The prosecution in the case had sought an injunction against Goddard and the girl seeing one another for five years following Goddard's release from prison.

The judge in the case, Anthony Pitt, refused, saying that to have imposed such a restriction would have been "draconian and cruel" toward the girl, who reportedly remains in love with Goddard.'

DNA Results Cast Doubt On Sex Assault Case

axolotl · 26 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

This has all the makings of a false rape accusation. I found the article buried in my hard copy of the L.A. Times; and, 'surprise, surprise', it was not referenced on their home page for today - I had to dig for it.

Excerpt:

'The victim also described her attacker as 5-foot-10, 175 pounds, clean-shaven with dark brown eyes. Reynolds [the accused] is 5-foot-7, 140 pounds, has blue eyes and was not clean-shaven at the time, according to the defense documents.
...

The victim told police that her attacker licked her navel area, according to court documents. But the state's crime lab found that the only DNA consistent with saliva in the woman's navel area belonged to her.

Other male DNA evidence found on the student's stomach was inconsistent with saliva, the court papers state.'

UK: Paedophile fears are 'driving male teachers from primary schools'

anthony · 26 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than a quarter of state primary schools have no male teachers, partly because they have been deterred from working with young children for fear of being labelled paedophiles, an expert claims.

The result is that thousands of boys are being taught solely by women and have no educational male role models.

The trend is fuelling concerns that a generation of boys is growing up without an authoritative male figure in their lives.

...

'It's a sad comment on society that more men aren't attracted into teaching in primary schools. In part, this is due to concerns in society about paedophilia. Men are receiving the signal that it's more appropriate for them to teach in secondary schools than primary schools.'

The 'feminisation' of the curriculum, which includes an emphasis on coursework rather than 'sudden death' exams, is already believed to be responsible for a widening gender gap at secondary level.'

Hofstra update & feminist response: ignore data, blame victims, divert attention

Matt · 26 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.: To no surprise, the Hofstra false accuser will not be prosecuted. And, as expected, the feminist response (below) is to: (1) say false rape claims are rare, and ignore empirical research showing otherwise; (2) say the harm is to "real rape victims" while ignoring the harm to the falsely accused who are the "real victims"; (3) say the lesson to boys is to not act like these 5 boys did (i.e., blame the victims with your moral value judgments, as though they did something wrong); and, (4) say the lesson to girls is to "respect yourselves" (another personal value judgment about the sex act that ignores the CRIME committed and the HARM done). UNBELIEVABLE. Please respond to this sexist garbage if you have time. And BTW, Cathy Young did a much more fair and objective article at http://www.newsday.com/opinion/opinion-the-unique-power-of-crying-rape-1.1469444. Data on false rape claims that feminists ignore is available at http://www.mediaradar.org/research_on_false_rape_allegations.php.

http://www.newsday.com/opinion/opinion-false-rape-charges-are-rare-and-dangerous-1.1469447

Excerpt:

'OPINION: False rape charges are rare, and dangerous

September 23, 2009 By OLIVIA TURSI
Olivia Tursi is a counselor and community educator at the Victims Information Bureau of Suffolk: Family Violence and Rape Crisis Center in Holbrook.

It is the American way that a defendant is "innocent until proven guilty." In the instance of a sex crime, however, it often seems the victim is deemed "guilty until proven innocent." Such false assumptions are perpetuated by the small percentage of false reports that occurs.

The recanting of a rape accusation made by a Hofstra University student has raised the issue once again. Questioning the validity of a victim's statement is nothing new when it comes to sex crimes. When an accusation of rape is made, questions often loom of possible motives for the "alleged" victim to have fabricated her story.

Theories of revenge, a scorned lover and personal gain often become part of the conversation. When a person says she was raped, the blame gets distributed between both the perpetrator and the victim. When people say they were the victim of a home invasion, however, it seems much easier to place the blame solely on the perpetrator.

According to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, there are no more false reports of rape than there are of any other crime. Conversely, sexual offenses are more likely to go unreported than other types of crimes. For every one rape that's reported, seven to 10 aren't.'

CDC's response to circumcision emails

Matt · 26 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

After sending the CDC an email (discussed here), I received the following reply:

Thank you for your inquiry to CDC-INFO. We are sorry for the delay in responding to your email. A recent high volume of inquiries has slowed our response time. In response to your comments on CDC's male circumcision recommendations, we are pleased to provide you with the following information.

Some recent reports have speculated about the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's (CDC's) upcoming public health recommendations on male circumcision for HIV prevention in the United States.

It is important to note that the recommendations are still in development and CDC has made no determination at this time about the final content. CDC is employing a deliberative, evidence-based process for developing the circumcision recommendations, which allows for both external and internal CDC experts to provide input. CDC will also publish draft recommendations for public comment before the content will be finalized.
...

With respect to infant circumcision, it is important to recognize that many options are still being considered in this process, including simply recommending that health-care providers educate parents about the potential benefits and risks to ensure that parents have the information they need to make an informed decision.

In developing its recommendations, CDC is also considering whether circumcision should be recommended for heterosexual adults at high risk for HIV infection in the United States, as well as whether there is sufficient scientific evidence to make any recommendations for men who have sex with men.

Whatever the content may include, CDC's final circumcision recommendations will be completely voluntary. While CDC has not yet determined if male circumcision should be recommended for any population, ultimately the decision will rest with individuals and parents. CDC's public health imperative is to provide the best possible information on the risks and benefits to help inform those decisions.

The Status of CDC Male Circumcision Recommendations can be viewed on the CDC website:

http://www.cdc.gov/hiv/topics/research/male-circumcision.htm

Thank you for contacting CDC-INFO Contact Center. Please do not hesitate to call 1-800-CDC-INFO, e-mail cdcinfo@cdc.gov, or visit www.cdc.gov if you have any additional questions.

The Canley Heights Killings

Les · 26 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Canley Heights is a suburb in Sydney's southwest. During the first years of the millennium it threatened to become an incubator for Australia's violent murderesses.

On 31 January 2006 the patriarchy met its match there in the form of two 14-year-old girls. Having refused to pay a taxi fare on arrival near their destination, the girls robbed and repeatedly bashed about the head their disabled driver. It was found afterwards that their victim had died of a heart attack, so perhaps the girls offered no more than a few love taps to the skull, though there was mention of "massive head injuries". Anyway, they left him to die while they stole his mobile phone and drove off in his vehicle, which they soon crashed into a parked car. He was found lying beaten in a darkened street at about 2 a.m.'

...

A couple of years afterwards police charged a 29-year-old woman in the same suburb with the murder of her two children. Screams were heard from the back of a dwelling in McKibbin Street, and a neighbour called triple-0 saying she could see a woman as she attacked a 2-year-old girl and a 4-year-old boy. They were already dead from multiple stab wounds by the time their father got home from work, ten minutes later. The killer had slashed her own wrists and was taken to Liverpool Hospital where eventually she was charged at her bedside.

...

Those killings had happened in early 2008. At the time it seemed that Canley Heights had also been visited by a parricide. The death in question had happened in April 2001 but details hadn't come to light for six years. It wasn't adjudicated till a full jury trial in 2009.

Because 70-year-old Ederino Beltrame had a history of heart troubles, his GP didn't bother to view his body before issuing a death certificate. The policeman who was called to the house by Ederino's daughter Daniela, aged 55, took a look at the body and found no suspicious marks or injuries. Likewise the ambulance officers who turned up. Daniela Beltrame told them that her father had been "a bit off colour" the previous evening. Then he'd woken up dead in bed that morning. The constable examined the dead man's medicines before calling at the GP's surgery close by. The doctor issued the certificate sight unseen. He wrote on it "cardiac failure".

...

The determined Beltrame obviously impressed the jurors. Like Farah Damji or Wendy Titelman or Norma Khouri (all discussed elsewhere), she seemed to be one of those women who grow more passionate and virtuosic in their denials, the stronger the factual evidence piles up against them. Whatever the truth, it is from legal outcomes like this — as well as those in such cases as Matthey's and Fitchett's and Farquharson's — that ordinary people are able to go on clinging to the myth that all the trouble in the world derives from men, and that women and girls are gently law-abiding.'

'The Breakup' - Bud Light Commercial

anthony · 27 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Budweiser is already on our boycott list and this new commercial might be their worst. A man and woman are driving in a car and he asks her several times if she's going to break up with him. Eventually she gets so annoyed, she proceeds to open the passenger door and throw the man out of the moving car.

The Male Brain: What's Really Going On in There

axolotl · 27 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here

It was just a matter of time until a (biased) female journalist got her hands on the recent brain science, and then put an anti-male/pro-female spin on it.

Excerpt:

'The more science learns about how men are different from us (right down to the structure of their brains), the more we find ourselves hoping it will finally explain some age-old mysteries. For instance:

Why do men keep their cars spotless but live like pigs at home—while for women it's the other way around?'

Karla Homolka Teale's 'pact with the devil'

Les · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'As we saw in the aftermath of the Moors Murders, it's not unknown for gender co-operation between malefactors to break down when they're threatened with a police enquiry, with the massive sanctions of the law brought to bear. Often an enthusiastic partnership is refuted by the female partner at the last. She hastens to turn Queen's evidence or People's evidence and lay the lion's share of the blame at the feet of her 'dominant' colleague. Is it the basically law-abiding nature of women that causes this late change of mind, or is it fear of being faced with the consequence of former actions? Is it rectitude or timidity?

As we've hinted elsewhere, women are not naturally enthusiastic about having to face their own misdeeds. That aspect of reality is not for them. One of the reasons a female malefactor seeks a male partner is to shield herself once everything collapses. But sometimes when the chips are really down, your protector can do nothing, and it's better to dissociate yourself from him altogether. Your chance of survival is stronger if you let him sink, or even if you reach out a toe and give him a little push under. He's going under anyway, so what's the harm in your help?
...

Embracing their newfound equality, women must also accept the revolution in feeling their new status implies. They should embrace its implications for what in future might constitute a viable legal defence. It is no longer viable for women to say they committed ferocious crimes because of a sad childhood or because they were depressed or because they were in fear that they might spoil their hairdo — had a headache, or a poor body image. The same rational judgements which test male crime must also apply to the female.

Homolka's (link added) tale has implications too for equality of sentencing. It is no longer tolerable for female defendants to duck justice even after a court has found them guilty. Marie Noe sentenced to counselling after committing eight murders. It may not have been the most productive course to hold Myra Hindley in gaol for nigh on forty years till she smoked herself into oblivion; but where women are treated humanely, tolerantly, and with an eye to their rehabilitation — then men must be also.

Where women engage in sexual murder, they should be tried for it. And where the evidence finds them guilty, they should expect to feel the awful weight of the law just as heavy on them as it's fallen on men since before the dawn of legality. That's what equality means.'

Oregon: False rape charges follow man

Anonymous · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This is a great story. I came across your website and wanted to share this. Please check the link and story out. Who more to help this innocent man then you.

I'm afraid you may be unaware of a great injustice currently happening in Bend, Oregon. Local prosecutor Jody Vaughan is currently pursuing false rape charges against a local man. Her tactics are less than ethical and has built "evidence" she knows to be based on lies.The evidence against the alleged "victim", proving SHE is a repeat liar and crier of wolf is incredible and hard to overlook; unfortunately that is exactly what the Deschutes County District Attorney's office is doing.

As a woman, a mother and a victim of rape and sexual assault, it is extremely important to me for a woman to feel safe to report sexual abuse of any kind. I know firsthand the personal power that is regained when looking an offender in the eye and sending them to prison.
...

Regrettably I have also learned that it is far too common for women to hide behind the claim of rape in order to avoid taking personal responsibility for their own actions. The classic he said she said is almost always swayed to the woman's side, requiring little proof on her end of the alleged events; leaving the accused to fight for their life with little help due to the Rape Shield Law. My concern is that Kevin is not going to receive a fair trial due to the protections this "victim" has on behalf of the DA's office. This isn't the first time she has cried rape falsely and without your help it certainly will not be her last. Please, take the time to follow the link and read the story of Kevin Driscoll. The time is now for something to be done, before another innocent life is ruined. Kevin's trial begins November 3rd, 2009.

I sincerely and respectfully thank you in advance for your time.

Washington Times: Fight campus feminist follies

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The ugly face of female oppression is all around us. But the source might surprise you. Females are favored on college campuses for scholarships and sports, so it's not educational opportunity that we lack. In fact, female co-eds now dominate universities in both numbers and in special programs available to them.

With plenty of government grants for businesses run by women, we've got advantages there, too. And innumerable labor laws protect women in the work force from discrimination.

It's obviously not the modern American male that is oppressing women. A growing majority of men are so careful not to offend that many of them don't even open doors or compliment women anymore. Many men are scared to treat women like ladies - let alone deny them opportunity - for fear that the bitter voice of feminism will rise up and call them bigots.'

Pittsburgh police: Van abduction, rape a 'hoax'

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'PITTSBURGH - Pittsburgh police say a 15-year-old girl made up a story that she was forced by two men into a van then driven to a wooded location where one of the men raped her.

The girl claimed the incident happened just before noon Tuesday in the city's Carrick section, as she got off a bus and was walking toward Carrick High School.

But in a news release Wednesday, police say the girl had argued with her parents earlier that day and fabricated the report to keep from being punished.

Police and the Allegheny County District Attorney are discussing whether to charge the girl with making a false report to police, but no charges were filed immediately.'

Trial date set in recanted rape report

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Dec. 14 trial date has been set for a Thurmont woman who recanted rape allegations after the man she accused had spent two months in jail.

Samantha Carter-drabczyk, 29, faces three counts of making a false statement to police, a crime punishable by as much as six months in jail and a $500 fine for each conviction.

On Friday in Frederick County Circuit Court, Assistant Public Defender Matthew J. Frawley asked Judge Theresa M. Adams to have a prosecutor from another county assigned to the case.
...
She recanted her allegations in a meeting with four people: Angel, Littleton, Moffatt and Cpl. Jason West, a sheriff's office detective who later obtained the criminal charges based on Carter-drabczyk's March 16 statements, according to court testimony.'

The Great He-Pression: Men fall behind in higher education

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What started as a "man-cession" is turning into a "Great He-pression."

The unemployment rate for men is running 2.7 percentage points higher than for women -- a "just unprecedented" spread, according to economist Mark Perry at the University of Michigan at Flint.

One obvious reason: The downturn has hammered manufacturing, construction and other male-dominated sectors, while going easier on female-heavy fields such as health care and education.

But a less-appreciated factor could make an even bigger difference in the long run.

For years now, women have been earning the most college degrees. That trend is accelerating, leaving experts to wonder if men are somehow missing the latest economic wake-up call.'

'Lies, Damned Lies and Statistics: The Wage Gap'

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now we turn from the mostly meaningless college gap to the mostly nonexistent wage gap. It is quoted ad-nauseum that women make 75 cents for each dollar a man makes for the exact same work (it used to be 59 cents, now it ranges from 75 to 80). In response to this, Nancy Pelosi helped push through congress the Fair Pay Act. Furthermore, April 20th, 2010 not only represents a day we should all get stoned out of our gourds, it's "Equal Pay Day." This holiday (of sorts) symbolizes how far into 2010 a woman would have to work to make what a man makes in 2009 alone. Obviously this is a sign of discrimination; as Jessica Valenti, founder of Feministing.com, states rather bluntly, "the wage gap is like a big f*ck you to women."

Unfortunately (for Jessica, fortunately for every other woman in the country), even a faint knowledge of business or economics should immediately raise a degree of skepticism about this dubious claim...
...
The truth is that businesspeople discriminate in favor of the color green; money. Market economies discriminate mightily against those who discriminate. If it were true that men make approximately 33% more for the same work, companies that predominantly hired women would crush companies that predominantly hired men. Ask any business owner what would happen if he or she could decrease his or her labor expenses 25% and he or she would tell you he or she would soon be hiring his or her competitor's employees (as his or her competitor's employees would be unemployed, because his or her competitors got crushed).'

Women plead no contest in boy's abuse

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'COMPTON, Calif.—Two Los Angeles women accused of burning, starving and beating the 5-year-old son of one of the women have pleaded no contest to causing corporal injury to a child.

The boy's mother, Starkeisha Brown, was sentenced to 15 years in prison after entering the plea on Friday. Her live-in girlfriend Krystal Matthews received a 14-year term.

The two would have faced 25 years to life in prison if convicted. They avoided trial by pleading no contest, and prosecutors said the boy won't have to testify.

The boy was found ill and in the care of a homeless stranger outside a county child services office in Compton in 2008.'

Deputies: Boy was 'stick skinny' in abuse case

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A San Tan Valley woman has been charged with child abuse after deputies found her 14-month-old son so malnourished he couldn't hold up his head.

The mother, Rhandi Brown, 22, is free on bail after her Sept. 14 arrest.

According to Lt. Tamatha Villar, Pinal County Sheriff's Office spokeswoman, deputies discovered the baby when they responded on a domestic violence call to the home the woman shares with the child's father.

Brown allegedly stabbed the child's father Dec. 18, and she is charged with aggravated assault in that case.
...
Villar said the boy weighed only 13 pounds. Deputies at the scene described his arms and legs as "stick skinny," and he couldn't hold up his head.

His diaper was so soiled that the smell of urine was overwhelming.'

Girl arrested on rape charge

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Des Moines County Sheriff's detectives on Wednesday have arrested a Yarmouth teen on accusations she had sexual contact with two Mediapolis boys.

Kourtney Joy Babcock, 19, is in jail charged with three counts of third-degree sexual abuse. Each of the counts carry a potential penalty of 10 years in prison upon conviction along with other special sentencing guidelines such as lifetime supervision and sex offender registry requirements.

Authorities said the arrest stemmed from an investigation that started in July. Detectives said their office received a report that Babcock had sexual contact with two 12-year-old boys inside a home in Mediapolis.

Detectives allege Babcock "had performed multiple sex acts" with the two boys.'

Ireland: We must face up to these statistics of young despair

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It has, of course, been touted by the likes of John Waters that the Irish man has become so dominated by women, and his role so eroded, that he is suffering from some sort of post-feminism depression. But factually young males in the western world are probably the least oppressed human beings on the planet, and indeed man is instinctively a competitive animal, so it's ludicrous to think that some small advances by women in the workplace and on the domestic front are likely to unhinge the average male. It is, however, true to say that men tend to define themselves more by their role while women tend to define themselves more by their relationships, so some men may be very sensitive to any challenge to their position.

What's more likely to have caused a general rise in the number of suicides is an unravelling of the family and community structures that may have acted as a deterrent to suicide in the past. During the period from the Seventies to the Nineties, the traditional structures of stability within our society were irrevocably changed, with church-going numbers dwindling and marital breakdown and single-parent families rapidly increasing. This has all effected a decrease in extended familial and social supports available to someone considering suicide -- possibly leaving them feeling more isolated and detached than in previous generations.'

To help boys, school creates the poster men for reading

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Last September, if you had asked Nehemiah Wimbish what he thought of reading, chances are he would have rated it down there with doing math and eating tomatoes. Yuck, yuck, and nasty.

So how could it be that the same boy and several sixth-grade pals were making the rounds at their Glassboro middle school last week, touting the joys of the written word to other boys like themselves?

"We got inspired by seeing people read," Nehemiah, 11, told one fourth-grade class. "We want to encourage young men like y'all to do well."'

'To be more successful, hire women!'

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Companies should rather employ more women and make them progress in the company. It is what asserts a research work led by Michel Ferrary, professor in Ceram (College of business to Nice-Sophia Antipolis), from a sample of forty two big companies. This study demonstrates that those who employ more than 35 % of women see their turnover progressing more than the others (of upper 28,5 %). These companies are also more profitable (with an upper rate of 116,1 %), have a better productivity (48,6 %) and create more jobs(uses) (72,9 %). It's the same for those whose supervisory staff is more than feminine 35 %.

Previous studies on the influence of the rate of feminization on the economic performances of companies had ended in contradictory results, recognizes the author. Doubtless because - a social group has to reach a critical size to really influence the functioning of an organization, change the nature of the interactions and modify the dynamics of the group, - explains the sociologist.'

'We can stop domestic violence'

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men: 99 percent of gender violence and domestic abuse incidents are perpetrated by men. Therefore, this is a man's issue, not an issue where women put themselves into harm's way. Men need to change their attitude toward women so that violence and abuse is not ever seen as an alternative action.

Clearly, the vast majority of men are not perpetrators of violence but we are part of a culture that accepts violence as inevitable and that some men abuse women. In violence prevention the focus must be on men because it is men that teach other men and boys how to be men in ways that do not involve abusing and degrading women.'

Woman accused of kicking cop, threatening to kill husband

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEWARK — A Licking County Municipal Court judge set bail at $2,500 for a woman who allegedly kicked a Newark police officer in the face Tuesday night.

Deanna R. Sherrard, 25, last known address 388 S. Executive Drive, was charged with one count of assault on a police officer, a fourth-degree felony, for kicking Newark Police Sgt. John Brnjic during her arrest.

Newark police officers arrived at a Circle K at South Fifth Street and National Drive at about 9:10 p.m. Tuesday where they tried to calm Sherrard, who was allegedly screaming profanities at the top of her lungs, according to a Newark police report.

Police reported she allegedly smelled of alcohol and threatened to kill her husband. After her alleged threats, police arrested her for menacing.'

Woman who killed husband now suing for his pension

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who has maintained that she killed her husband out of self-defense is now suing his former employer for survivor's benefits through his retirement plan.

56-year-old Fayette Nale, who was convicted of voluntary manslaughter in the 2007 stabbing death of her husband, is serving a 3-15 year prison sentence. Nale had testified that she suffered months of physical and sexual abuse before a fight when she accidentally stabbed him.

Now Nale, who suffers from lupus and uses a wheelchair after injuries from a 1988 car accident, is suing Ford Motor Co. for her late husband's pension.

Nale has filed federal suit, claiming that her conviction "is not considered an intentional causing of death such that she should be denied survivor benefits," Courthouse News Service reports. She was acquitted of homicide when her original charge of second-degree murder was reduced to voluntary manslaughter.'

NY Times: Health Care Reform Is a Woman's Issue

anthony · 28 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many women gain access to their health insurance through their husbands. That means that male job losses as well as the possibility of divorce leave them vulnerable. A recent report by the Joint Economic Committee of Congress estimates that about 1.7 million women have lost health insurance benefits as a result of job losses since December 2007 — 71 percent of these as a result of their spouses' job loss.

Although fewer adult women than men lack health insurance, they seem to be more affected by insurance-related problems, including inadequate coverage. A Commonwealth Fund study released last May found that about 52 percent of working-age women, compared to 39 percent of working-age men, reported in 2007 that they had to forgo filling a prescription, seeing a specialist, obtaining a recommended medical test or seeing a doctor at all as a result of medical costs.'

Police say they have female bank robber in custody

anthony · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (CNN) -- Police in Connecticut say they have arrested a woman suspected of robbing at least six banks in the past week.

Detectives from the Major Crimes division of the Connecticut State Police took Heather Brown into custody at about 3:15 p.m. The 34-year-old resident of Norwich, Connecticut, will be formally charged with robbery in the first degree, police said.

Investigators believe Brown robbed the banks, often while claiming to have a bomb.

"When she goes into the banks, she gives the teller information through a note or verbally that she has a bomb," said Sgt. Jim Keeney of the Connecticut State Police. "However, there haven't been any reports of an actual bomb."

Michelle Obama to America's women: It's all about you!

Matt · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – First lady Michelle Obama says women should do what makes them happy, a lesson she says she learned after realizing her two children, her husband and her physical health feed off of her good moods.

In an interview appearing in the November issue of Prevention magazine, Mrs. Obama discusses the meaning of good health, aging and her exercise, diet and beauty routines. She sat for the interview at the White House in late July.

...

"She'd say being a good mother isn't all about sacrificing. It's really investing and putting yourself higher on your priority list," Mrs. Obama said. She said Robinson put her own two children first, sometimes to the detriment of herself.

"She encouraged me not to do that," Mrs. Obama said.

...

"Throughout my life, I've learned to make choices that make me happy and make sense for me. Even my husband is happier when I'm happy," Mrs. Obama said in her first interview with the women's health monthly. "So I have freed myself to put me on the priority list and say, yes, I can make choices that make me happy, and it will ripple and benefit my kids, my husband and my physical health."'

Presumably she could not care less if the men financing women's me-first lifestyle also drop dead at 50 from working their butts off.

Fathers & Families Hosts Debate Between 2 Leading Domestic Violence Authorities

Matt · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence and the DV policies of family courts and law enforcement is a multi-faceted issue that has an enormous impact on American families.

During the 1970s, feminist organizations fought hard to make domestic violence a public issue, as opposed to a private one, and to gain governmental and societal support for policies aimed at protecting abused women. Current policies have largely been shaped and influenced by the DV establishment which arose from that movement.

However, today those policies are coming under increasing attack from dissident domestic violence experts, as well as civil libertarians and fathers' advocates.

Fathers & Families is hosting a debate between two of North America's leading domestic violence authorities, feminist DV expert Professor Evan Stark, Ph.D, MSW, and dissident DV expert Dr. Donald G. Dutton.'

RADAR ALERT: NJ Attorney Challenges Constitutionality of Restraining Orders

Matt · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

David Heleniak, a Morristown, NJ attorney, has filed a motion on behalf of his client, John Paulsen, to vacate a final restraining order (FRO) on the ground that it violates Paulsen's constitutional rights.

Heleniak gained recognition on the issue of domestic violence restraining orders with his 2005 law review article "The New Star Chamber: The New Jersey Family Court and the Prevention of Domestic Violence Act" (.pdf file). More recently, in Crespo vs. Crespo, Heleniak won a landmark decision in which the Honorable Francis Schultz of Hudson County ruled that the criteria for a FRO must be "clear and convincing evidence" rather than a "preponderance of the evidence." That verdict made Crespo vs. Crespo a glimmering hope to anyone who was ever hit with a frivolous restraining order – until it was recently overturned by the New Jersey Court of Appeals.

"They were dismissive of the whole idea [that the NJ domestic violence statute could be unconstitutional]" said Heleniak. "In fact, they dealt with some of our best points in a footnote [7], in which they said they were unworthy of discussion. I think they're hoping the issues go away."

Heleniak, disappointed with the decision of the Appellate Division, has asked the NJ Supreme Court to take the Crespo case and has forged ahead with Paulsen in a similar action with a motion to vacate a domestic violence restraining order on constitutional grounds in the local Morris County family court.

"I believe their [the Appellate Division's] refusal to address some of the issues head-on affects their credibility. It just looks like they were ducking," said Heleniak. "But at some point the issues will have to be addressed at a high level. There are just too many cases out there with the same story – a restraining order handed down without sufficient evidence that ruins a man's life and the lives of his children."

Paulsen said that the FRO against him was nothing more than a tactical maneuver to gain an unfair advantage in the litigation process.

"The allegations of abuse against me that gave rise to the FRO were manufactured by my wife to gain a tactical advantage in a divorce that she had decided she wanted months before the allegations were made," said Paulsen. "In fact, she had surreptitiously had several meetings with her divorce attorney and was using the threat of a restraining order as a means of intimidation within our marriage for over a year before she used it as a first strike weapon in the divorce."

A recent analysis notes that unwarranted restraining orders create a "ripple" effect that can persist for many years, harming the alleged person's reputation, legal standing, security clearances, career prospects and financial status. In many cases, it also affects the person's relationship with their children, often causing devastating and permanent harm to that relationship. (A Culture of False Allegations (.pdf file).)

False allegations not only damage the individual falsely accused, they also affect other family members who may be barred from seeing a grandchild, nephew, or niece.

Special reports regarding domestic violence restraining orders can be viewed here.

++
Date of RADAR Release: September 28, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://mediaradar.org/

Nanuet woman accused of making false rape report

anthony · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SPRING VALLEY - A 42-year-old Nanuet woman has been charged with falsely accusing a village man of raping her and holding her captive, authorities said Monday.

Miriam Chambers' June accusations led Abraham Wilson to spend several months in the county jail as an accused parole violator, authorities said.

Chambers, who lived in Normandy Village, accused Wilson of approaching her on June 20 in Spring Valley and threatening to harm her unless she went with him to his Rose Avenue home, Spring Valley police said. She accused Wilson of beating her, breaking her hand and raping her, police said.

About a week later, however, Chambers recanted her accusations in a letter to Wilson's lawyer - at the Rockland Public Defender's Office.'

Ex-Spring High School teacher pleads guilty in student 'sex' case

anthony · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SPRING, Texas—A former Spring High School geography teacher was sentenced to two years in prison for having a sexual relationship with a male student who was 16 years old at the time.

Jessica Lynne Kelley, 25, pleaded guilty Monday to improper relations with a student.

Prosecutors dropped two felony counts of sexual assault of a child in exchange for the plea.

Court documents say Kelley and the boy had sex three times in July of 2008 at the teacher's home.'

Tacoma: Woman arrested in shooting of boyfriend

anthony · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 22-year-old woman was arrested Saturday after she apparently shot her boyfriend in the stomach at their Tacoma residence.

Tacoma police said a 23-year-old man called 911 shortly after midnight Saturday to report that he had been shot at his residence in the 800 block of 48th Street South.

When police arrived they found him and his girlfriend. He told police his girlfriend had shot him but it had been an accident.

The man was taken to St. Joseph Medical Center in serious condition. His condition wasn't available Monday.

A Tacoma police spokesman said both the man and the woman had been drinking alcohol.

The woman was arrested for investigation of domestic violence assault in the first degree. She was booked into the Pierce County Jail and is expected to appear in Superior Court today for arraignment.'

Lies, Damned Lies and Statistiscs: The College Gap

Anonymous · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Perhaps this is a bit of good news about the "college gap". Excerpt:

'Today, women earn far more Bachelor's and Associate's degrees as well as slightly more Master's and Doctoral degrees than men. Fortunately for men like myself, there is a major flaw in how this data is interpreted. When you look at this chart, what is the first thing that comes to mind? In all likelihood, if your thought was similar to mine, it was that more women are going to college and fewer men are than in the past. Or in other words, women are going to college instead of men. However, it is wrong to assume that because men make up a smaller percentage of college students today than they did in the past, that women must be taking spots previously held by men. The pie is not static; it got bigger, a lot bigger. College admission has exploded since 1970: the number of men in college has actually increased substantially and the percentage of men going to college is greater now than it was in 1970.

In 1970, there were 7.4 million college students and the United States population was just over 200 million: just under 4% of the population was enrolled in college. In 2007, almost 18 million Americans attended a university out of a population of just over 300 million, or 6% of the population. College admission has increased almost 150% in absolute terms and 50% in relative terms in just less than 40 years. In 1970, 4.4 million men attended college, or assuming the population is 50% male (it's about 49%), 4.4% of men were attending college. In 2007, 7.8 million men attended college, or about 5.2%. Male enrollment has actually increased 18% since 1970. What makes this statistic look so alarming is that female enrollment skyrocketed from 3 million to 10.1 million, or 3% to 6.7%, a 125% increase.

...

Admittedly, this is not proof that there is not a problem. It only reveals that there are a host of lurking variables to unravel before concluding that the gap is even noteworthy. We'd have to conduct a very careful study to determine whether or not there was any "excess" in the gap between men and women. And it's reasonable to conclude that if there is an excess, it is quite small. It could possibly even be that the proportion should be even greater than it currently is and women are getting the short end of the stick. What is important to note here is that this alarming statistic tells us very little on its own and is probably completely meaningless. All it says for certain is that the laws of supply and demand on college campuses have tilted significantly in men's favor.'

Circumcision: the first cut is the deepest

anthony · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The consensus, for once, is right: female circumcision reduces – if not eliminates – sexual pleasure, provides no apparent health benefits, and violates individual autonomy. At its core, female circumcision is a degrading and brutally unfair practice.

All of this is true of male circumcision – the removal of penis foreskin – as well. Yet, as the New York Times recently reported, the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), an arm of the United States federal government, is now considering a plan to ‘promote [the] routine circumcision’ of infant boys in the US with the aim of reducing the spread of HIV (1). This proposal is as degrading as it is illiberal.

The scientific evidence that the CDC is relying on in considering the new recommendation is laughably weak. Consider, first, the people who were the object of the study: the population group surveyed was from sub-Saharan Africa, where sexual mores and cultural conditions are utterly different from those of the US.'

American jailed in Japan for trying to reclaim his children

anthony · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TOKYO, Japan (CNN) -- Had this custody drama played out in the United States, Christopher Savoie might be considered a hero -- snatching his two little children back from an ex-wife who defied the law and ran off with them.

But this story unfolds 7,000 miles away in the Japanese city of Fukuoka, where the U.S. legal system holds no sway.

And here, Savoie sits in jail, charged with the abduction of minors. And his Japanese ex-wife -- a fugitive in the United States for taking his children from Tennessee -- is considered the victim.

After Noriko Savoie took the children to Japan, Savoie filed for and received full custody of the children, Bruno said. And Franklin police issued an arrest warrant for his ex-wife, the television station reported.

"Our court system failed him," said Diane Marshall, a court-appointed parent coordinator who helped Savoie make decisions about the children. "It's just a mess."

But Moses, Noriko Savoie's attorney, told CNN that the children's father had other legal options.'

Wendy McElroy: 'Permanent alimony is slavery'

anthony · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Again...this is one of many emails I receive from men who are financially unable to meet alimony/child support payments, from second wives whose husbands are in jail for non-payment of ruinously high judgments, from family members pleading for any relief from a patently unjust family court system... There is little I can do to help these victims of "the system." But I can reprint and publicize their voices.

The following email is particularly interesting because, as the author explains, it includes a "list with many reasons why the law needs to be changed and a copy of my personal story." Although I have verified the list, it looks to be a compelling argument in-and-of-itself against Florida's alimony laws. Moreover, the man's story should be widely circulated as a cautionary tale on how the family court system is financially destroying men and women who marry unwisely and, then, are forced to pay for that mistake for the rest of their lives. Their circumstances are a de facto form of slavery.'

UK: German men are 'world's worst lovers' with English men in second place

anthony · 29 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

Would we ever see a report where men rate a woman's love making ability? Could you imagine the backlash if German men said women had bad hygiene or British men saying women were too lazy in bed?

Excerpt:

'A poll of 15,000 women found that Germans are considered "too smelly".

English lovers came second because they are so lazy, while men from Sweden were branded "too quick to finish" and came third.

Spanish men topped the table as the best lovers, followed by Brazilians and Italians.

The poll, carried out by global research site www.OnePoll.com, asked women from 20 countries to rate nations on their ability in bed and give reasons for their answers.

Germans were deemed to have bad body odour, Englishmen were accused of letting women do all the work, whilst Swedes were a bit too quick to finish.

Men from Holland were "too rough" between the bed covers and Americans were accused of being "too dominating" in the bedroom.'

“Women should not go to prison”: fraud and Farah Damji

Les · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'The Uganda-born Asian confidence trickster Farah Damji caused a small sensation in England in 2006 when she absconded from prison and seemed at first to be taunting authorities by keeping in touch with them through a web log. As one-time editrix of a London lifestyle magazine, and a journalist with well-known national and regional papers, she had good media contacts. These got the tale of her exploits into the national news.

What was her public appeal? She had been personable when younger, and had lived in a luxurious style, reportedly owning houses in New York, Hampshire and Chelsea. But it was her apparent nerve that tickled those who wrote about her prison escapade. Her vividness inspirited a grey existence. She seemed to offer herself as some British-Indian Bonnie Parker or Butch Cassidy — a devil-may-care outlaw on the run from dull authority, and against overwhelming odds. In her case she looked like the one at ease with modern technology, while the clodhoppers of the law laboured sweatily to catch up.

...

And Damji was no Robin Hood — a figure moved with the rage for equality; nor was she a person fighting for the profile of women or of Asians. She wanted stuff. She was a thief and con artist, whose sole beneficiary was herself.

...

When it’s all boiled down it turns out that she was just another woman whose personal chemistry convinced her of her uniqueness in nature, that she alone was not subject to the demands of legality that oppress everyone else. Such females must have whatever their whims dictate for them. They need shoes, gems, the best hairdresser and most fashionable gynæcologist; must have Caribbean holidays and South Sea cruises. — All on tap through someone else’s plastic. Damji knew she was worth it because her body chemistry told her so. She shouldn’t have to work for those things, and it was an outrage that they existed without being immediately available to her. Why should she exert herself like every other mortal? She was a walking embodiment of the female conviction that a girl is a princess, one of nature’s privileged creatures, to whom the laws of physics, biology, economics, need not apply.

...

That at last Damji protested too much and was locked up for her temerity, was a small, rare triumph for the principle of gender equality, and for the objectivity of the law. We cannot be wholly confident that her effrontery will not win out in the end. In 2007 she confessed that she was working on an autobiography — or at least trying to hawk the idea of such a work to any London publisher who’d listen. This would evidently be a book that was based on the premise that notoriety sells no less than quality. Here would be a volume that former lovers might not think of putting in their wives’ stockings at Christmas. Our civilisation’s new propensity to wink at fraud, to be amused at the worst that in human behaviour, might yet give Farah Damji — with the backing of female opinion — that social traction she craves. She hasn’t finished with us yet, and may yet use as stepping stones her numerous victims as she resumes her role of picaresque heroine. A plucky good-time girl in the tradition of Moll Flanders, surviving as best she might in an unfriendly world.'

Michael Coren: Feminism revisited

Matt · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Growing up in Britain in the 1970s it was impossible not to be aware of Erin Pizzey. She was the iconic face of feminism, as she appeared on television seemingly every other night to expose what she saw as the oppression of women. She also founded of one of the first domestic violence shelters in the world. They were known as battered women's homes in those days but the nomenclature, as well as the politics, has changed over the years. So, it seems, has Erin Pizzey.

"I would go so far as to say," she wrote last week, "that the movement, which proclaimed that all men are potential rapists and batterers, was based on a lie that, if allowed to flourish, would result in the complete destruction of family life ... Feminism, I realized, was a lie. Women and men are both capable of extraordinary cruelty. Indeed, the only thing a child really needs — two biological parents under one roof — was being undermined by the very ideology which claimed to speak up for women's rights."

Pizzey seems to have arrived views which run delightfully, diametrically against the very core of contemporary feminism. And it's difficult to know which claim will cause the most offence to the women's movement. The battle of assumptions — that all women are merely a step away from abuse — was actually won some time ago. As early as the 1980s we were told that 50% of all women had been abused by their male partners at some point, and to question the statistic implied that the critic had something to hide.'

"Robert Bly Revealed" at U of Minnesota

Matt · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Site here. For those unfamiliar, more on Bly here. Excerpt:

'Robert Bly was born in Lac qui Parle County, Minnesota to Jacob and Alice Bly, people of Norwegian ancestry. Following graduation from high school in 1944, he enlisted in the United States Navy, serving two years. After one year at St. Olaf College in Minnesota, he transferred to Harvard University, joining the later famous group of writers who were undergraduates at that time, including Donald Hall, Adrienne Rich, Kenneth Koch, Frank O'Hara, John Ashbery, Harold Brodkey, George Plimpton, and John Hawkes. He graduated in 1950 and spent the next few years in New York.
...
Among his most famous works is Iron John: A Book About Men (link added), an international bestseller which has been translated into many languages. The book is credited with starting the Mythopoetic men's movement in the United States. Bly frequently conducts workshops for men with James Hillman, Michael J. Meade, and others, as well as workshops for men and women with Marion Woodman. He has taught at the annual "Great Mother Conference" since 1975. He maintains a friendly correspondence with Clarissa Pinkola Estés, author of Women Who Run With the Wolves.'

"7-month itch": not just for men

Matt · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I know you don't want to hear this, but newlyweds are cheating. The numbers are gnarly; 15 percent of women and 12 percent of men under the age of 35* reported cheating within their first year of marriage! The worst part: Since these stats came from people who admitted it, relationship therapist Dr. Bonnie Eaker said she suspects the real number is more than half. Don't believe me? Check out this clip from CBS News.

Although Eaker's estimate is interesting, I'm not sure I agree. I know a ton of couples who've made the long walk down the big white aisle, and while, sadly, many haven't made it past the three-year mark, I can only think of one where infidelity was a factor. I guess the real question is, why does anyone cheat within the so-called honeymoon phase? My guess is that these are people who just can't come to terms with what real marriage is. In short: not a perfect paradise full of roses and gumdrops and sexy-twinkly lighting 24/7.'

---

*The clip reports different numbers. It says 20% of men and 15% of women. I am assuming then the author of the article got her numbers confused.

I do find it a bit funny how the woman being interviewed to comment is offering analysis that seems much more sympathetic than I have seen such experts be when discussing only men's infidelity.

India: Woman held for blackmailing men

Matt · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'New Delhi, Sep 29 (PTI) A young woman, who allegedly blackmailed men by threatening them to frame them in rape cases, was arrested in the national capital, police said today.

The 30-year-old woman was arrested following investigations into a complaint filed by Sanjay Dass, who runs a pest control company, that he was coerced to hand over his belongings to two women after being put under the fear of framing him in a false rape case.

...

"One of them closed the door from inside while the other caught hold of him. She asked Dass to hand over all his belongings or else he will be framed in a case of rape.'

Woman accused of making false rape report

Matt · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SPRING VALLEY - A 42-year-old Nanuet woman has been charged with falsely accusing a village man of raping her and holding her captive, authorities said Monday.

Miriam Chambers' June accusations led Abraham Wilson to spend several months in the county jail as an accused parole violator, authorities said.

...She accused Wilson of beating her, breaking her hand and raping her, police said.

About a week later, however, Chambers recanted her accusations in a letter to Wilson's lawyer - at the Rockland Public Defender's Office.
...
On Thursday, police charged Chambers with a felony count of first-degree making an apparently sworn false statement. Her arrest is part of an investigation into the circumstances surrounding Chambers' filing of the report, Spring Valley Detective Reginald Anderson said.'

Sally Winter in New South Wales

Les · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'The blind spots and the rush to judgement that are strewn about the possible criminality of mothers are modestly illustrated by the case of Sally Winter, from the small town of Maitland in New South Wales. She killed her family and then herself, but because it's an article of faith with us that a woman could not act in such a way, early reports about this family massacre arbitrarily cast the husband and father as villain. Breaking accounts leapt to that conclusion on no apparent evidence. So the Sydney Daily Telegraph felt able to blare in its front-page headline: "FATHER SHOOTS FAMILY DEAD" — a wholly incorrect assertion for which that notorious newspaper declined to apologise. Its misinformation was picked up and repeated on the commercial radio networks, whose producers knew a story when they heard one.
...
What if anything do we learn from all this? Obviously, that women kill. That women are more than capable of violence and in many situations lack only the means — a lack which the presence of a gun removes. Feminists will always have lots to say about the plight of women in unhappy marriages — about bullying from the husband, about the way economic and family pressures bear down especially on the wife, about the general frustration which life in a patriarchy involves, and perhaps about a female past (real or imagined) stuffed with low self-esteem, sexual abuse and what-all else. Any reader can string together his own classic details.

For our own part we might suppose, if we knew more about the Winters, that one of the things which turns men to anger and sometimes, very unfortunately, to direct action is their understanding that society has no interest in hearing them, has no sympathy or support for them when their marriage comes unglued. Men are supposed to look after themselves. Society knows too well who the culprit must be when a marriage goes bad.

Soon after the Winter catastrophe some politicians were calling for an enquiry into why their guns had been handed back. Police defended the decision to return the firearms on the dumb-cop basis that they were "simply following procedure". No charges had been laid over the domestic argument, and the apprehended violence orders had been withdrawn. The idea that police should occasionally use their brains instead of "simply following procedure" was not pursued — perhaps because of the known threat which police brains pose to the public.'

Computer detects domestic abuse before doctors

anthony · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Victims of domestic abuse can hide the truth from doctors, but they leave clues in their medical records that a computer program has now learned to follow.

The program could save lives by acting as an early warning system for domestic violence, flagging up possible cases of abuse to doctors months or even years before they would otherwise be detected.

The program produced a set of rules based on the differences it found. These were mainly based on patterns of injuries and bouts of mental illness – signs of abuse that doctors already look for.

But the program also found new clues, including some that pick out victims of one sex but not the other. Alcoholism, for instance, is a red flag for abuse in women, but not men, because it is less common among women in general. In contrast, depression and other mood disorders are a strong predictor of abuse in men, but less so for women.'

Men will strap on women's shoes to create domestic violence awareness

anthony · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here here. Excerpt:

'Nearly 30 local men will step into women's fancy red heels next month to raise Domestic Violence awareness as they "Walk a Mile in Her Shoes."

These male volunteers will be showing off their footwear while emphasizing the importance of men being more involved in stopping violence against women at the Oct. 10 event.

"We wanted it very diverse because we know that violence affects everybody from all walks of life," Van Maanen said. "So we wanted men from all walks of life to participate."

"The guys were really excited about it," she said. "Then some of those guys got other men involved, which is exactly what we wanted to happen."

Historically, the domestic violence and sexual assault movement has been led mainly by women and it's time for men to get involved, Van Maanen said.'

States Argue About Tracking Domestic Abuse With GPS

anthony · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many states are deliberating whether or not it would be worth-while for them to use GPS tracking systems to monitor the whereabouts of domestic violence offenders who have orders of protection against them. It has been argued by many state governments that often these orders of protection are violated thus resulting in the deaths of many victims.

On the other hand, some lawmakers argue that the GPS systems are likely to help in some cases, but not all. They also argue that the GPS systems would come at a significant cost to tax payers. Furthermore, some states argue that because of these high costs, the thought of using this new technology is simply a delusion of grandeur. Meanwhile countless numbers of abused women have been relating stories of the protection orders being violated by their ex-partners. In one tragic case, a woman named Leigh Ann Olson told the story of how her ex-husband violated his protection order and fatally shot their five year old daughter Makayla, before shooting himself.'

Domestic Violence Prevention Advocates Say Men Must Take a More Active Role to Break the Cycle of Violence

anthony · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'IRVING, Texas, Sept. 24 /PRNewswire/ -- To help break the cycle of domestic violence, men must get more involved in speaking out against the problem and become advocates for change.

That was one of the primary messages of the 4th Annual Verizon Foundation Domestic Violence Prevention Summit held Thursday (Sept. 24) at the Omni Mandalay Hotel.

"Domestic violence is not just a women's issue," said actor and Verizon Foundation Community Champion Victor Rivers. "As a child, I was a victim of abuse and saw my father belittle and attack my mother. To break the cycle of violence, I'm calling on men to become more involved in the issue and make it a point to teach their children that domestic violence is never acceptable."

According to a U.S. Department of Justice study on intimate partner violence, 1 out of every 4 women will experience domestic violence.'

New National Study Gives Voice to Victims of Paternity Fraud

anthony · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA, Sept. 23 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- In 2003, The American Association of Blood Banks found that in almost 30 percent of the paternity tests conducted the man being tested is not the biological father.

"This means millions of fathers may unknowingly be raising children who are not theirs biologically. When a man discovers the truth about the child's parentage, this can have a far-reaching emotional impact upon him, the child, and the families involved like John Edwards' situation," said Carnell Smith PfV, renowned paternity fraud expert and director of U.S. Citizens Against Paternity Fraud (http://www.PaternityFraud.com).

Smith said, "Surprisingly there has been no formal study of this - until now."

Sharon Squires, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Sociology at California State University-Dominguez Hills, and Carnell Smith PfV have joined forces to develop a new on-line survey, the first of its kind, which will examine the emotional, financial, legal, and social impact of paternity fraud on men.'

UK: Paternity laws 'open to fraud' business group warns

anthony · 30 September 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Government announced that mothers who decide to return to work after six months can hand over, in effect, the remainder of their maternity leave to fathers.

The change means either party can receive the statutory rate of £123 a week if they chose to take the time off work when the child is aged between six and nine months old. After that, whichever partner has the 'maternal' role, they can take the following three months of leave unpaid.

...

The Federation of Small Businesses also cautioned the new law was wide open to abuse and fraud because it could be easy for a man to take time off and be paid at the same time as his wife was taking time off work and also being paid.'

Donna Fitchett: "No one was going to hurt my boys"

Les · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'In Australia as in many another place, it has become so familiar a news item we can call it hackneyed. It croaks from the radio as we grump through our Monday breakfast: the missing dad found this weekend in his car at some abandoned spot, his children dead in their seatbelts beside him — shot or poisoned by fumes from the exhaust. There is no sympathy for such a father; perhaps there should not be. Our feelings go out conventionally to the innocent lives the dad has taken with him, and perhaps, as we sip our coffee, we catch mention of a distraught mother — who's released her darlings on an 'access' or 'contact' visit, for Father's Day perhaps or for one of the children's birthdays — only to see the lives most precious to her snuffed out by an oaf who is now exposed for all to see as the brutal, 'abusive', self-obsessed pig that she'd always said he was.

That's what is reported, and it's what we see.

His distress? It would smirch the memory of his children to go into that. The economic strain of his having raised a family while tied to an obdurate partner; of his being forcibly separated from the family who were his life; of his loss of house and savings; of his being faced with unemployment as he's driven to the edge by those matter-of-fact lawyers in the Family Court, who are assured of their income whatever destruction they wreak upon him. His life has been unstrung by the militant and confused institutions of the state, and now he's groped for the one way out that his battered brain can visualise — annihilation. It's the wrong way, and if he were still around we wouldn't have any compunction about telling him so. And no doubt he'd see it too.

...

If he were a wife and mother things would be very different. We'd find an explanation and a way out for him (for her) — an abusive relationship, poor self-esteem, molestation during childhood or post-partum depression; there is no end of possibilities for getting a woman off her murder charge, even if we can't stop her before the killings. But if a man tries filial murder he'd better make sure he well and truly tops himself. He'd better embrace Samson's, the way of self-destruction as he takes those others with him out of the world. Alive or dead, a father will rightly be lambasted in the aftermath.

Men act in that violent way because they are naturally active. Women in similar straits crouch in the victim position because that's their nature. It happens that the path of non-violence is deemed to be more virtuous — less wicked and blatantly destructive — than the violent one. The gender differences in response to crisis do matter, but they are arguably incidental from the ethical viewpoint — expressive only of the two sexes' programmed behaviour. Is a 'victim' innately virtuous because she behaves as victims must?

...

David Fitchett came home from his job at UltraTune at around 6.30 of a Tuesday evening in early September 2005 to find his family's house in Dight Avenue, North Balwyn — a solid, middle-class suburb northeast of Melbourne — surprisingly quiet. He found his 46-year-old wife teetering about the gloom, glazed in her bra and pants, and cut about the neck, arms and groin. She'd taken sleeping pills, she told him, to "dull the pain". Their sons Thomas, aged 11, and Matthew, 9, were lying in separate bedrooms — cold, stiff and without any vital signs.

The ambulance took Fitchett — as she must now be called — to Box Hill Hospital and there she stayed under guard till transferred by police the following dawn to homicide headquarters in South Melbourne. Though she could not be interviewed because of her mental state, she was directed by the magistrate to supply police with scrapings from beneath her nails: "There are reasonable grounds to believe she may have committed the offence." The offence of doing away with her two boys. One of them had been scratched about the face; and one had material under his fingernail which was thought to be body tissue. The suspect kept her face hidden in a blanket for much of her short preliminary hearing, from which she went back to suicide watch at the Thomas Embling psychiatric unit in Fairfield.

...
In Melbourne popular support for Fitchett was a good deal more muted than it had been for Lemak in Illinois — because Australia is not yet America, because the tide of rabid feminism had eased slightly over the intervening years, and because Fitchett had not been threatened by her husband with any known material loss. It seemed plain that the destruction of Fitchett's life had come wholly from within herself. In both the Melbourne and the Illinois narratives, sympathy for the defendant declined during trials which uncovered unpalatable detail about the crimes. And a final parallel between the cases: lengthy custodial sentences were handed down for both Donna Fitchett and Marilyn Lemak — 24 years in Fitchett's case, with a non-parole period of 18 years; and life imprisonment without the possibility of parole for Lemak. Disquiet about the sanity issue lingered beyond both verdicts.'

Casey Anthony Wants Murder Charge Dropped

anthony · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla. — Attorneys for a Florida woman charged with killing her 2-year-old daughter want to prevent prosecutors from seeking the death penalty and said Wednesday that charges against her should be dropped.
...
Anthony's attorneys said that prosecutors can't prove first-degree murder was committed or that Anthony ever abused her daughter, Caylee.

"Specifically, the state cannot establish whether Caylee Anthony's death was accidental, natural, or the result of an intentional or negligent homicide," they said.'

Grandmother guilty of starving four-year-old

Matt · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A grandmother and an aunt pleaded guilty on Tuesday to starving to death a four-year-old boy who weighed less than nine kilograms when he was found last year at his home in central Mississippi.

Circuit Judge Marcus Gordon accepted capital murder pleas from Austin Watkins' grandmother, Janice Mowdy, 43, and aunt, 22-year-old Stephanie Bell.

In exchange for the guilty pleas, the judge sentenced the women to life in prison. They could have faced the death penalty if a jury had convicted them.'

Ed. note: Reported in an Australian paper, but the crime referred to herein occurred in the US.

UK: Nursery worker guilty of child sex abuse

Matt · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'[Vanessa] George, and her co-accused, all aged 39 and parents themselves, appeared at Bristol Crown court, facing a combined total of 37 charges, including making and distributing indecent images of children.
...
George admitted seven sexual assaults and six counts of distributing and making indecent pictures of children.
...
Blanchard pleaded guilty to 17 child pornography counts and two sexual assaults on children. He also admitted a further charge of possessing extreme pornography.

Allen pleaded guilty to four child sex assaults and one count of distributing an indecent image.
...
George, who abused babies and toddlers in her care, swapped her collection of images with the two other accused, it emerged.

The married mother met her accomplices “entirely by chance” in a Facebook chat room.

George used what she termed her “fun phone” to take 150 obscene images of infants in her care.

She passed these on to her two accomplices, together with images of her abusing some of those she was photographing.'

Pakistan: Farmer's daughter disarms terrorist and shoots him dead with AK47

Matt · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Good for her! Now why again are women not by default subject to selective service (aka the draft) should it be activated? Seems to me that with such weapons as rifles, a greater amount of physical strength isn't as necessary as it was back before the invention of firearms. Excerpt:

'Rukhsana Kausar, 21, was with her parents and brother in Jammu and Kashmir when three gunmen, believed to be Pakistani militants, forced their way in and demanded food and beds for the night.

Their house in Shahdra Sharief, Rajouri district, is about 20 miles from the ceasefire line between Indian and Pakistani forces.
...
Militants often demand food and lodging in nearby villages.

When they forced their way into Miss Kausar's home, her father Noor Mohammad refused their demands and was attacked.

His daughter was hiding under a bed when she heard him crying as the gunmen thrashed him with sticks. According to police, she ran towards her father's attacker and struck him with an axe. As he collapsed, she snatched his AK47 and shot him dead.

She also shot and wounded another militant as he made his escape.'

Note the story says she will be nominated for an award for gallantry. Somehow I doubt this would happen had she been a he. In that case, it would have been "just what he should have done, there's a good chap."

Intact America: AAP and AAFP considering circumcision recommendation

Matt · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA email alert:

'Help stop the AAP and AAFP from recommending circumcision!

Right now, both the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) and the American Academy of Family Physicians (AAFP) are considering recommending infant circumcision for all baby boys – for the first time in history.

We need to show the medical community that circumcision is unnecessary, harmful and ethically wrong – before it's too late.'

They are asking for donations, too.

Contact info for AAP and AAFP:

American Academy of Family Physicians (AAFP): here.
American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP): here.

NBC Plans Special Week of Coverage on Women

anthony · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NBC News will devote a significant amount of time and attention next month to the changing roles of contemporary women, much of it based on a study initiated by Maria Shriver, the one-time NBC correspondent who is married to Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger of California.

NBC is describing the project as an effort to “educate the public on the current state of women in America.” The news division is planning to include coverage related to the study over a full week of its evening newscast and three mornings on the “Today” show.

“The Shriver Report: A Woman’s Nation Changes Everything,” is modeled on a study undertaken almost 50 years ago during the administration of John F. Kennedy, Ms. Shriver’s uncle, and led by Eleanor Roosevelt. Ms. Shriver said that this one was not a government based study, however.'

US Department of Labor: THE EMPLOYMENT SITUATION

anthony · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

News release here. Excerpt:

As of August, the male unemployment rate was 10.1 opposed to 7.6 for women.

'In August, construction employment declined by 65,000, in line with the trend since May. Monthly losses had averaged 117,000 over the 6 months ending in April. Employment in the construction industry has contracted by 1.4 million since the onset of the recession. Starting in early 2009, the larger share of monthly job losses shifted from the residential to the nonresidential and heavy construction components. In mining, employment declined by 9,000 over the month.

Employment in health care continued to rise in August (28,000), with gains in ambulatory care and in nursing and residential care. Employment in hospitals was little changed in August; job growth in the industry slowed in early 2009 and employment has been flat since May. Health care has added 544,000 jobs since the start of the recession.'

Is Feminism Killing Old Southern chivalry?

anthony · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Piece here. Excerpt:

'From where I sit I think women today, particularly in the South, have it pretty darn good.

We are enjoying the steady spread of women's equality in the workplace, home and school system while still being treated like damsels in distress when it comes to our lifestyle.

Are we confused? Are we screaming to be treated equally while our actions are saying something else?

In a world of so-called gender equality, where do we differentiate between independence and chivalrous traditions?

Even though the feminist movement brought the right to vote and the beginning of equal pay for women, our demands for independence have been shadowed by the fact that we still expect special treatment.

Should we consider our rights and the way we clarify them to be all or nothing? Can we have our cake and eat it, too?'

Man's life in ruins by wife's false rape claim

anthony · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'He was made out to be a rampaging "Rambo," an armed and dangerous beast who raped his wife and later tried to kidnap her.

But it turned out that it was all wrong. Stephen Vaughn was innocent.

When the gavel finally came down, it was clear that Vaughn was not much more than a hapless character in an existential nightmare caused, in part, by his own poor judgment.

According to his attorney, Vaughn was primarily a victim of a prosecutorial process that operates under the assumption that the husband must always be guilty in domestic disputes in which violence is alleged.

A passing glance suggests that the system actually worked in the end. After all, an Orange County grand jury threw out the 2008 rape charge. Last month, a Westchester County found Vaughn not guilty of attempted kidnapping and a host of lesser charges.'

Ex-Teacher Faces Possible Life Sentence for 'Sex' With Teens

anthony · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BARTOW | Danielle Jones was once regarded as a dedicated sixth-grade science teacher with a knack for mentoring at-risk students.

Now, the 33-year-old Auburndale woman has been found guilty of having sex with four teenage boys, ranging in age from 14 to 16 years old. Two of the boys were her former students.

She faces up to life imprisonment at her Friday sentencing hearing. A score sheet prepared for Jones' case shows her lowest recommended sentence to be about 55 years.

Circuit Judge Donald Jacobsen can impose a lower sentence but would have to provide a written explanation if he chose to do so.
...
She said a double standard exists where boys are not treated as victims when they are sexually abused by women.
...
"If she is attractive, we give her permission to sexually abuse the boy," said Duncan.

If the woman isn't attractive, people hold that against the boys, she said.
...
People get stuck in "gender stereotypes" that boys can't be victimized by having sex with women, Duncan said.'

The Gender Wage Gap and Occupational Injury Risk

anthony · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Numerous studies, in particular for the U.S., have shown that individuals in occupations with high injury risk are compensated for that risk by corresponding bonus payments. At the same time, male workers are overrepresented in the most dangerous occupations like scaffolders or miners, while females typically work in relatively safe occupations with respect to occupational injuries. It is therefore remarkable that almost all studies analyzing the gender wage gap have disregarded different occupational injury risks as a potential explanatory variable for observed gender wage differentials.

By merging data on occupational injury risks to German and US panel data on individual workers, this study analyzes gender wage differentials in Germany and the US considering fatal occupational injury risk. The Blinder-Oaxaca method for Tobit models is used to decompose the gender wage gap with and without consideration of the fatal injury risk. Our results indicate that the compensating wage differentials for risky jobs are reflected in the resulting gender wage gap, which is caused by the unequal distribution of occupational injury risks among men and women.'

UK: Circumcision – above the law?

anthony · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The term "genital mutilation" sounds far less civilised that the commonly used term "circumcision". Yet the former is only ever used in relation to the removal of parts of female reproductive organs, and the latter, generally, for the removal of the foreskin from a male's penis. Make no mistake, a circumcision is the mutilation of genitals regardless of the terminology.

Male children from the Jewish and Muslim faiths have their foreskins removed at a young age under as part of religious practice. This is an irreversible procedure that would otherwise be classed as grievous bodily harm, contrary to section 18 of the Offences Against the Persons Act 1861. The fact that it is performed with parental consent has been deemed sufficient in allowing this procedure to be performed under English law.
...
Furthermore, if circumcision of males is allowed on religious grounds, then the ruling in the case of Adesanya must have been erroneous. The court here decided that a Nigerian woman could be prosecuted for cutting her teenaged sons' faces according to her cultural norms. It seems that freedom to commit GBH only extends to males, and only then of particular faiths or cultural backgrounds.'

MND: VAWA and Joe Biden's Personal Anguish

anthony · 1 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The party also signaled an opening day of sorts, as during the month of October the calendar will host the 22nd annual Domestic Violence Awareness Month....

In other words, it will be another 31 days of fundraising, fanaticism and fraudulence; another month in which America and the western world is misinformed on an epic scale, all in the name of perpetuating the myth that the ill effects of domestic violence is a "girls only" club and that draconian legislation is the only answer.
...
The facts around domestic violence point to the unavoidable conclusion that VAWA is legislation rooted not only in sexism, but in an ill-conceived agenda that severs men from rights and recourse with the crushing legal efficacy of Dred Scott.
...
One might be pressed to wonder why, with 835,000 men a year being victimized by violent partners, would Joe Biden conjure up a mammoth piece of legislation that outright denies that reality?...

The answer may be in Biden's childhood, as he was himself a male victim of violence in the home.

According to Biden's own words his sister regularly beat him in his childhood and adolescence. "And I have the bruises to prove it," he said, at a senate hearing on violence against women, December 11, 1990. To make sure the audience knew this wasn't a joke, he added, "I mean that sincerely. I am not exaggerating when I say that."
...
In Biden's brief tell-all, he acknowledged that the beatings he received were condoned and sanctioned by his parents, and that he was prevented from defending himself; That he was literally, in fact, powerless to make the abuse stop.
...
In these disturbing revelations, Biden offers us a glimpse into a tragically dysfunctional and abusive family. The rules he describes are clear. His sister was granted license to terrorize and abuse him over a period of years while the family strong-armed him into the role of her designated punching bag...
...
Consider what mental health professionals now say about the psychological consequences of repeated childhood abuse.
...
"Many traumatized people become involved in social situations that bear a striking similarity to the context in which they were first traumatized. Freud thought that the aim of such repetitions was to gain mastery, but clinical experience shows that this rarely happens; instead, repetition causes further suffering for the individual or for other people in their surroundings."
...
And it boggles the mind to consider that the scars of his unfortunate youth will result not in lessons learned about real abuse, but only in more damage to many, many more innocent people.'

Slate: How Often Do Women Falsely Cry Rape?

anthony · 2 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In her book, Brownmiller said that only 2 percent of rape allegations are false, citing findings by the female police in a New York City rape squad. The problem is that while this statistic has been widely repeated, with dutiful mentions of New York-based "research," no one has ever tracked down its source. This we learned from a comprehensive review of the literature on false rape charges published in the Cambridge Law Journal in 2006. The author, Philip Rumney, finds a couple of small studies that back up the 2 percent claim but isn't confident of their methodology.

Rumney's survey of the terrain is the best we found. He also takes aim at the findings on the other end of the spectrum—the research that purports to show that the rate of false allegations of rape is in the range of 40 percent, as well as the flawed (but often cited) work that makes a crazy high jump to as high as 90 percent. The 40 percent figure is usually attributed to a 1994 article by E.J. Kanin in the Archives of Sexual Behavior. Kanin looked at 109 reports of rape to police in one small Midwestern metropolitan area over nine years. His pool was small. The police he studied always offered the victim a polygraph—perhaps signaling they doubted her veracity. And Kanin himself "warns against generalising from his findings" and points to reasons for questioning them, as Rumney explains.
...
This is sobering. As, of course, is the whole topic. We're left to draw the following conclusion: False allegations of rape aren't rampant. But they don't have to be to cause terrible trouble. This is a problem that a men's rights movement shouldn't trump up. And also one that feminists can't dismiss.'

Join 'NCFM' and 'Protect Men's Rights' on Facebook

Matt · 2 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.: If you're on Facebook, please join NCFM on Facebook. There's also a Facebook group called Protect Men's Rights that has over 300 members now and growing.

Group links:
NCFM
Protect Men's Rights

India: Harassed men, kin to hit streets

Matt · 2 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHANDIGARH: Fed-up of being victims of domestic violence, harassed men and their family members across the country will take to the streets in prominent cities to protest against Domestic Violence Act. Representatives of Save India Family Foundation while talking to TOI informed that following an increase in the number of such complaints, they had decided to mark October 25 - day the Act was implemented - as "Domestic Violence against Men Day" and have chalked a list of activities, including protest marches by thousands of men in Delhi, Mumbai, Chandigarh and Hyderabad.

"We will be organizing a protest march in various prominent places of different cities across country on October 25," said Nitin Gupta, representative, SIFF, Chandigarh unit, adding, "In Chandigarh, we have sought permission to stage a dharna in Sector 17, whereas our Delhi unit is planning one near Jantar Mantar."'

University of California Davis: Caught inflating rape stats

johndias · 2 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Stories here and here. This story broke today on the front page of the Sacramento Bee. The University of California at Davis is located within 20 minutes of Sacramento, California. Jennifer Beeman, the director of anti-violence efforts on the university campus, was put on administrative leave in December 2008 only to retire in June 2009 after 16 years at the university. The Sacramento Bee has investigated Beeman before for inflating rape statistics. Excerpt:

'Past problems with misreported campus sex crimes statistics, through both understatement and exaggeration, re-emerged Thursday at the University of California, Davis.

Officials alleged that the former head of campus anti-violence efforts, Jennifer Beeman, had grossly inflated the number of forcible sexual offenses in three years of mandatory reports to the federal government.
...
In an investigative series published in 2000, The Bee found the university had consistently under-reported sexual assaults to the federal government.

In 2001, a Bee story revealed Beeman had written a federal grant application in 1999 in which she said that as many as 700 students at UC Davis were victims of rape or attempted rape each year.

In that same time frame, the university was officially telling federal authorities that rapes and assaults on campus were practically nonexistent.

Beeman's estimate was part of a proposal that netted the school more than $500,000 from the U.S. Justice Department for crime-fighting efforts.

At the time, Beeman said she had extrapolated the number from statistics that showed 1 in 20 college women was a victim of rape or attempted rape.'

Interesting that in the above quote, the author of the Sacramento Bee's October 2 story, Hudson Sangree (hsangree-at-sacbee.com), described the inflated amount of rapes reported by the university as having been "under reported," despite the fact that the Sacramento Bee's current and prior investigations have revealed that rape stats were over reported.

Men's rights movement makes front page of major German magazine

johndias · 3 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

1. Video (in German)
2. Cover page of the magazine
3. Summary (in English)

Quote:

"First of all, the Men's Rights Movement made it on the title of one of the biggest magazines (named Focus) in Germany.

"Very well done article that features DV, education, feminism etc., about 8-10 pages. Also talking about media, male DV victims were recently on TV.

"Secondly, parts of the German Men's Rights Movement (MRM) were able to shoot down a sexist TV series. Surprise.

"And finally as we approach the next election I can see parts of the MRM reaching out to a political party. A small one that is, but good efforts are being made (heck, I will vote them, my wife will, my uncle, too). We will see what happens.

The best thing is that we are going forward. Even the (female) chancellor of Germany doesn't believe in discrimination of women anymore. Step by step...

UK: Woman jailed for false rape claim

anthony · 3 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Victoria Salter, of Lostock Hall, told police in September last year she was raped by three men while one looked on.

This led to the arrest of three 17-year-olds but one of them had filmed the incident which proved the sex was consensual, the court heard.

Salter, 26, who earlier admitted perverting the course of justice was jailed at Preston Crown Court.

Salter, of Broad Meadow, dialled 999 to make the false report in September 2008.

She said she had been followed home by four men and was raped by three of them while the fourth watched.

But the court heard that Salter had been filmed on a mobile phone during the sexual encounter and had been partaking "enthusiastically".'

Female sex offender returns to teaching at all-boys school

anthony · 3 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CINCINNATI -- A woman who was fired from a previous teaching job for having sex with a student and who pleaded guilty last month to a sex crime with a minor is now employed at an all-boys Christian school.

She pleaded guilty last month in a plea deal to unlawful sexual conduct with a minor. She initially was charged with sexual battery, a felony that would have required her to register as a sex offender and could have sent her to prison. But because her victim refused to cooperate with authorities, prosecutors allowed a plea deal to a misdemeanor that, the judge indicated last month, likely will allow her to escape time behind bars and get probation.'

In Contrast:

Male teacher gets 15 years in student sex case

Story here.

UK: 'When women are as evil as men'

anthony · 3 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is still difficult to take in: that the catalogue of sexual abuse of very young children revealed in this week's paedophile court case was carried out by a 39-year-old female classroom assistant, at a nursery called Little Ted's.

In a sordid three-way exchange, Vanessa George swapped pictures of children in her care with another woman and a convicted sex offender businessman.

The fact that two of these paedophiles were female - and also mothers - is sickening enough without the fact that the victims had been entrusted into this sick woman's care by parents who were unaware of her true nature.

But what was even more upsetting about this case is that it subsequently emerged that 20 per cent of all sexual offences against children are now committed by women.'

UK: Pilot for male violence victims

anthony · 3 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jude Ruddock-Atcherley, from Hampshire County Council, said more men were coming forward as victims of domestic violence.

"I think a lot of men don't come forward because of the stigma attached to being a victim who is male who may be thought of as being able to protect themselves," she said.

"The more people that we are aware of, the more priority there will be attached to providing funding and services for men specifically."

...

National statistics show that one in six men and one in four women will become a victim of domestic violence in their life.'

Man shot during possible domestic violence case

anthony · 3 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SEATTLE - One man was shot and a woman taken into custody in what appears to be a case of domestic violence late Thursday night.

The incident began at about 10:30 p.m. at a home in the 800 block of SW 117th Street in the city's White Center neighborhood.

According to the police, the man and woman were apparently arguing when the woman pulled out a gun and shot the man. The relationship of the couple is still unknown.

The woman remained in the home for about 3 and a half hours before police went in and arrested her.

The man was taken to Harborview Medical Center with what are called non-life threatening wounds.'

Roman Polanski said he'd pay to end victim's lawsuit

axolotl · 3 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. It seems the authorities are determined to nail this guy even after three decades have passed - and even though the purported victim has effectively said, "enough".

Excerpts:

'"It is [my] opinion as the victim of this crime that the 42 days he has already served is excessive."'

'Geimer, who in recent years has been an outspoken proponent of dropping the charges against Polanski, has acknowledged reaching a civil settlement with him.'

'Geimer was 13 in 1977 when she told police that Polanski had raped and sodomized her during a photo shoot at actor Jack Nicholson's Mulholland Drive home.'

Ventura woman accused of pulling gun during argument

axolotl · 3 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Story below:

'A 44-year-old woman was arrested on suspicion of a felony weapons violation in Ventura on Sunday after she allegedly pulled a large handgun on a man during an argument, police said.

Michelle Hodgin of Ventura was arrested about 4:40 p.m. in the 1500 block of Spinnaker Drive after officers responding to a report of the incident found a loaded .357 Magnum revolver in her purse, Ventura police said in a prepared statement.

Several witnesses shopping near the Ventura Marina told authorities they had seen Hodgin display the gun in a hostile manner during a verbal argument with a man, police said.

Hodgin was booked into county jail on suspicion of carrying a concealed firearm. She remained in custody Monday in lieu of $50,000 bail.'

$50k? Maybe women are starting to be treated a little more 'equitably' for their crimes. Then again, this could be just an isolated instance of fairness.

MND: Research Dismisses the Validity of Feminist Gender Studies

anthony · 4 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'However, a few months ago, a came across a whole new way of “undressing” feminism, that I hadn’t seen before. This new kind of criticism towards feminism came from Swedish researcher Helen Lindberg, who earlier this year presented her doctoral thesis called Only Women Bleed?: A Critical Reassessment of Comprehensive Feminist Social Theory.

In her thesis she has evaluated four different feminist theories, with regard to internal coherence, and their usefulness as theories in a research context.
...
The short version of what she’s saying is that using feminist theory as the basis for conducting research, is about as useful as using Marxist theory to conduct research. She also nullifies the standard feminist reply to criticism (”what branch of feminism are you criticizing?”) by demonstrating that each of the four branches of feminist theory examined have the same theoretical weaknesses.

This confirms what I’ve long been suspecting: gender studies are not a scientific discipline, they are a method for applying a certain ideology onto whatever data you collect during your “research”. Still, gender study departments around the world are allowed to teach generation after generation of women that men are evil oppressors, while hiding behind a respectable academic façade that they certainly do not deserve. How long will this charade go on?'

Court issues landmark on child support

anthony · 4 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) - The Alabama Supreme Court has set a legal precedent in the state by ruling that child support payments are not automatically extinguished when parental rights are terminated.

The court's ruling Wednesday reversed the state civil appeals court, which had held that a parent who loses rights to a child no longer has a responsibility to pay child support.

The Supreme Court, split 6-3, said parental neglect could be rewarded if child support would no longer have to be paid.

In dissent, Justice Glenn Murdock said the issue was one that the Legislature should address and that the new legal standard could create uncertainty in the child welfare system.'

U.S. Calls for Japan to Sign Child Custody Pact

anthony · 4 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NASHVILLE, Tenn. -- Reacting to the case of a Franklin, Tenn., father, the U.S. State Department called upon Japan Wednesday to sign an international agreement on parental child abductions.

Christopher Savoie sits in a Japanese jail, accused of kidnapping the two children who had been taken from him here in Tennessee.

And we're seeing how close Savoie came to getting his children back onto what might have been, at least legally speaking, U.S. soil.

Witnesses say Savoie and his two children raced past Japanese police just outside the front gate of the U.S. Consulate in Fukuoka, Japan.'

Canada: Divorced dads can't catch a break

anthony · 4 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than a decade after a landmark study recommended an overhaul of Canadian divorce law, courts still haven't caught up to the new reality of Canadian family life. A generation of dads who can't stand being apart from their children is pushing for change.

...

Family courts around the world have seen a "dramatic increase" in court disputes launched by divorcing dads determined to see their children more than every second weekend and Wednesday evenings, observes Australian law professor Patrick Parkinson.

"There has been a significant change in fathers' attitudes towards parenting after separation," says Parkinson, one of the architects of drastic divorce reforms in Australia that are aimed at boosting shared custody.

...

She's seeing more left devastated by Ontario's 30-year-old "zero tolerance" directive, an initiative from the Ministry of the Attorney General aimed at forcing police and Crown attorneys to crack down on the scourge of domestic abuse against women. By alleging assault, a woman can pretty much assure that an ex-spouse will be removed from the house and tied up in a costly criminal trial during which she'll have interim custody of the kids, setting the stage for how the case proceeds.'

Whose kid is this, anyway?

anthony · 4 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let us examine the dynamics of having a child out of wedlock by beginning at birth. With all the medical professionals to witness the beautiful mess of birthing, pinpointing the mother is easy - she's the one lying on the table screaming for an epidural. Unless the old switcheroo is played at the hospital, that person goes on the birth certificate as "mother" and half of the parenting team is established.

There's also a place on the birth certificate for the father. Whoever signs up at the hospital is presumptively the father whether or not he knew the mother under Old Testament guidelines. A legal presumption is something that is assumed true but not considered firmly established. Legal presumptions can be subsequently disproven.

When a non-marital relationship goes bad, men are often surprised to find that, even after a few years of cohabitation and with their name on a birth certificate, they suddenly have no right whatsoever to see the child...
...
That's one right a father has without his paternity being legally established - the right to pay child support. The birth certificate is enough for the Child Support Enforcement Agency to establish a support order, although a presumptive father can immediately demand testing to unburden himself.

If the father does not want anything to do with the child, he better hope the mother finds a guy who does. An adoption terminates the previous father's rights, meaning, no more support. Only an adoption can so terminate a natural father's, or natural mother's, obligations.*'

* Not in Alabama anymore, anyway. See story just posted.

40th anniversary of unilateral divorce

Anonymous · 5 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I didn't realize it, but it's the 40th anniversary of unilateral divorce. Article here. Excerpt:

'Thus, the noble purpose of no-fault divorce was to remove the contentious, annoying legal requirement for couples to prove anything other than their desire to divorce. After all, the thinking went, if marriage was the union of two people, and one person wanted out, then the union was no longer viable.

Except that wasn't the whole story.

"The key to understanding the problem is to recognize that the grounds for divorce did not go from fault to no-fault; they went from mutual consent to unilateral," said Allen Parkman, University of New Mexico economics professor and author of books on divorce.

Under the fault system, "most divorces were negotiated and eventually [happened] based on mutual consent," Mr. Parkman said. But once one person could legally end the marriage, "there was no longer any need for negotiations."'

My take on this (knowing what we know about how much divorce impacts kids now that we've had "no-fault" for 40 years) is that if there are kids involved you better be able to show fault if your divorcing -- otherwise you're at fault for doing that to your kids. In other words, prove fault or lose custody. Divorce rates with children would likely plummet. It's not likely to happen though, with women initiating divorce in families with children at least 75% of the time.

More criticism of "no-fault" divorce can be found here.

Police say mother cut baby's throat

anthony · 5 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Brooklyn mother, apparently upset when her baby wouldn't stop crying, slashed him across the throat yesterday and then plunged a knife into her own leg, police said.

Cops took Tineka Johnson, 29, into custody after responding to an early-morning 911 call at her East Flatbush home.

She was charged with attempted murder and criminal possession of a weapon.

The baby's grandmother reported the incident on East 38th Street, and Johnson was taken away without incident, authorities said.

The 5-month-old boy was rushed to Kings County Hospital a block away where officials said he was in stable condition yesterday.

Johnson had been taking medications for a mental disorder and may have missed her dosage, sources said.'

Carey Roberts: Partner Abuse Industry Flirts with a Hateful Agenda

anthony · 5 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First, columnist Mike Adams reported on the plight of Mark Harwood, psychology professor at Humboldt State University which is located in Birkenstock-addled northern California. Based on extensive research, Harwood informed his students that women were as likely as men to engage in partner aggression.

But scientific truth apparently did not goose the gander of these gender guerrillas. So the women took it upon themselves to disrupt the class, taunting the good professor as a "privileged, rich, white male." Judge, jury, and executioner!

Then the head of the Women's Studies program demanded Harwood be barred from ever again teaching the course. In disgust, the professor resigned his post to go elsewhere.
...
Each year, over one million Americans are hit with a trivial or false accusation of domestic violence. These persons are plunged into an Alice-in-Wonderland justice system that spurns reason and fairness. Railroaded by hearsay and circumstantial evidence, a false charge stigmatizes a man as an abuser, drains his assets, and can break up his family.
...
Driven by a destructive gender ideology, our domestic violence laws now represent the most breath-taking roll-back in Constitutionally-protected rights since the era of Jim Crow.'

NY Times: 'The New Gender Gap'

anthony · 5 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Under other circumstances, that would be cause for celebration. But women have gained this latest bit of ground mostly because men have lost it — 78 percent of the jobs lost during this recession were held by men. So not only is it unseemly to rejoice over a larger share of a smaller pie, it is also unsettling to face the fact that so much of the history of women in the workplace (both their leaps forward and their slips back) is a reaction to what was happening to men.

...

Now they seem to be returning. Women will soon be the majority of workers because some are opting back in, and many others, who never left, are more likely to find and keep their jobs than men. Once again, the reasons for this are not a function of the clout of women but of the predicament of men and less a sign of how far women have come than of how far they have left to go.

...

Primarily, women are still cheaper. They earn 77 cents to every dollar earned by a man, and in a flailing economy employers see that as an attractive quality. Women who are returning to the work force after several years at home raising children are particularly cheap. Sylvia Ann Hewlett, an economist and the founder of the Center for Work-Life Policy, has estimated that the penalty is 10 percent of income for every two years out of the job market, a loss that is never recouped. From the hiring side of the table, that may be a good bargain.'

Will this fraud be prosecuted?

el cid · 6 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This article raises an interesting question. For years, rape advocate groups have exaggerated or lied about the number of rapes or sexual assaults in order to draw attention to the problem or increase their influence. In this case, UC-Davis and the director of its Campus Violence Prevention Fund lied about the number of sexual assaults in order to increase the funding it receives from the federal government. That's fraud, the author argues:

"The question, obviously, is this: Why did UC-Davis fudge its numbers? The source of the false information was Beeman, who used inflated figures to increase the federal grants that the university could receive...Readers have to understand that this is a classic example of real-live fraud as defined by federal fraud statutes. Unlike many of the fraud cases in which people charged really have not committed actual "fraud" but have run afoul of federal regulations or engaged in a legal action that the feds can re-interpret as being criminal.

Here we have a person who deliberately put false information in her applications in order to obtain larger grants. This money then went to the office that she directed, which meant that a least some of her own salary (if not all) came from this money, and we are dealing with hundreds of thousands of dollar. Granted, this is not Bernie Madoff, but nonetheless it is real, unadulterated fraud.

The question I have is this: Will the feds investigate and prosecute Beeman? We have the false statements, the fraud, and the motive. She even gained financially from this fraud."

Anyone want to make a bet on whether the director is prosecuted?'

Great turnout for NCFM-sponsored film "Support? System Down" in Atlanta

Matt · 6 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A.: On September 24-27, 2009, the NCFM-sponsored documentary film Support? System Down by filmmaker Angelo Lobo had an excellent turnout at the Peach Tree International Film Festival in Atlanta and was the highest-ranking film on the buzz meter.

The film, which includes an interview with NCFM's president Harry Crouch, examines the problems related to the child support system in the U.S. including issues such as draconian guidelines, flawed data, paternity fraud, procedural defects, problems for military parents, bias against non-custodial parents, and how these and other problems affect children, families, homelessness, incarceration, suicide and other issues.

The film has also aired with great success in San Diego and New York and is now being screened for consideration for the Lone Star Film Festival in Fort Worth, Texas.

NCFM helped with initial funding and support for the film, and various other organizations were involved in the production as well. For more information visit http://www.supportthemovie.com/

UK: Pilot for male violence victims

Matt · 6 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It looks like England is likely to lead the way, internationally, on male victims of DV (along with Holland, which now has government-funded battered men's shelters). The media and government of England have finally become more honest about the issue, and now they're forming a pilot program for male victims. Excerpt:

'A support service to help male victims of domestic violence is being piloted in Hampshire.

Honour based violence and forced marriage will also be targeted by the team in the one year project across Fareham and Gosport.

...
If successful it could be rolled out across the country.

...
Jude Ruddock-Atcherley, from Hampshire County Council, said more men were coming forward as victims of domestic violence.

"I think a lot of men don't come forward because of the stigma attached to being a victim who is male who may be thought of as being able to protect themselves," she said.

...
National statistics show that one in six men and one in four women will become a victim of domestic violence in their life.'

10-Year-Old boy gets $260 fine, misdemeanor charge for leaving classroom

anthony · 6 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EL PASO, Texas -- It all started with a phone call. “Well, the school called me it was about nine, and told me that my son had an incident at school,” said Charity Walka, recalling a morning about a month ago.

But little did Walka know that her son’s trouble in class would hit her in the pocket. She said her son has a behavioral disorder and was on medication and couldn’t stay awake in class at Travis Elementary School.

"So he fell asleep again, and when they tried to wake him, he got angry,” Walka said.

She said her son then left the classroom after a teacher tried to restrain him. She said her son also made noise in the hall and he laid down on the floor and wouldn’t get up. For disrupting class, officers at El Paso Independent School District gave her 10-year-old son a ticket for $260 and it is a Class C Misdemeanor. She said her son did not hurt anyone.

"It was just devastating. I was just so angry. He doesn't understand," Walka told KFOX.'

Gail Walker: Why do we still believe women are 'fairer' sex?

anthony · 6 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When nursery school teacher Vanessa George from Plymouth and Angela Allen from Nottingham - together with Colin Blanchard from Rochdale - pleaded guilty to sexually abusing young children, everyone was 'shocked'.

There's been no end of thought pieces in the media, focusing on how the crimes were made more chilling because two of the three offenders were women. And that the three, who had never met before their trial, goaded each other to act via the internet. A shocking, yet so modern crime.

Of course, it's hard to believe that anyone is so depraved. But commentators argue it's even more shocking because females were involved - the nurturing, caring,'fairer' sex. It goes against nature.
...
Evil - like 'gentleness' - is not the prerogative of one sex only. And it's time to recognise once and for all that, when it comes to abuse - of power or position or trust or of the elderly or children or the weak - it is stupid and dangerous to rule out anyone simply because of their gender.

What's scary is that this has probably been true all along and most of us are only finding out about it now.'

UK: Woman 'cautioned' after false rape allegation

anthony · 6 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Monday, 5.15pm - A WOMAN was arrested on Saturday night (Oct 3) after a false rape allegation was made. Police were called to Dysart Road at 10pm on Saturday following reports of a rape.
...
Enquiries were carried out and officers established the complaint had been false.

A 44-year-old woman was arrested and cautioned for attempting to pervert the course of justice.'

Swaziland: 'Ambitious' target for male circumcision funded by US and Bill Gates

anthony · 6 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MBABANE, 5 October 2009 (PlusNews) - Swaziland's Ministry of Health and Human Services aims to provide circumcision to 80 percent of men aged 15 to 24 in the next five years, in response to the surging number of men requesting the procedure to reduce their risk of HIV.

...

Health officials are now encouraging the renewed popularity of male circumcision by devoting publicity and resources to making it more easily available. Around 1,000 men have already been circumcised at the Litsemba Letfu (SiSwati for "our hope") Male Clinic in Matsapha, halfway between the capital, Mbabane, and the central commercial hub of Manzini.

The project is funded by the US President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) and the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, and is the first medical facility specifically for men.'

ABC: Mom's Depression Tied to Child Abuse in Some Families

anthony · 6 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters Health) - In families with a history of child abuse, a mother's depression may increase the risk that she will act aggressively toward her child, a new study suggests.

The study, which followed 5,500 U.S. families investigated by child- welfare agencies, found that when a mother developed depression, the odds of her child suffering "psychologically aggressive acts" -- including threats or name-calling -- increased.

The findings do not prove that mothers' depression, per se, led to the children's abuse, the researchers report in the Archives of Pediatrics & Adolescent Medicine.
...
It's possible, according to Conron's team, that having a supportive partner lessened some mothers' strain and, in turn, lowered the likelihood of child abuse.'

RADAR ALERT: Tell State Legislators: Repeal Mandatory Arrest Laws Now!

Matt · 7 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Domestic violence laws represent the biggest roll-back in Americans' civil rights since the era of Jim Crow.

Take mandatory arrest laws that disregard "probable-cause" protections that are guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution. Then add in "primary aggressor" policies that say, "If you're the bigger and stronger of the two parties (in almost every case, the man), you're the one who will be arrested, regardless of what the evidence shows."

That's gender-profiling at its worst.

Not only do mandatory arrest laws trample on Constitutional protections, they also put victims at risk. According to a Harvard University study, mandatory arrest laws increase partner homicides by 57% – probably because at-risk persons are reluctant to call the police for help, knowing law enforcement is tied to a lock-step arrest policy.[1]

Another legal victory for battered men

Matt · 7 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A.: Another victory for battered men and for gender-neutral domestic violence policies!

In its decision, a West Virginia trial court sides with Men and Women Against Discrimination, and against a public entity, by holding that certain acts of and regulations adopted by the public entity are illegal in that they result in domestic violence policies that discriminate against male victims of domestic violence and are not gender-neutral. (Story here). The decision can be downloaded here.

Congratulations Men and Women Against Discrimination and everyone else involved!

It was about one year ago today that NCFM won a similar victory in the California Court of Appeal.

UK: Abused Asian men's lives 'living hell'

Matt · 7 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'More South Asian men married to British women are becoming the victims of domestic violence, it has been revealed.

The National Men's Advice Line found 9% of calls for help to its service last year were made by men originally from countries such as India, Pakistan and Bangladesh.

...

After marrying, Mahmood, who is in his 30s, travelled to visit his wife in the UK for a two-week holiday. He planned to return to Pakistan to finish studying. But hours after stepping off the plane his passport was confiscated by his wife's family and he was told he would not be going back.

...

Because of feelings of shame Mahmood decided not to tell his family back in Pakistan.

"My wife would wake me up in the middle of the night and beat me, demanding money, and when I did not have any, my brother-in-laws would come and punch me and beat my back with iron bars. It was a living hell."

For four years he was not allowed to meet his own sister, who lived at a separate address nearby, or even phone her, and the only contact they had was on a handful of occasions. She was also being beaten.

...

Mahmood said: "I have two daughters, but have not seen my youngest child who was only born recently. My sister has managed to get custody of her children, but I will have to endure a long legal process to see mine again.

...

"I would have been better off living in Pakistan. At least then I would not have been mentally, physically and verbally abused over a period of four long years."

So children don't need their daddies, huh?

Matt · 7 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

One look at this will tell you otherwise.

"A family photo that shows a little girl beside her father and his fellow soldiers in uniform as they prepare to go to war has resonated well beyond the tight knit Bennethum clan.

Four-year-old Paige Bennethum really, really didn't want her daddy to go to Iraq.

So much so, that when Army Reservist Staff Sgt. Brett Bennethum lined up in formation at his deployment this July, she couldn't let go.

No one had the heart to pull her away."

Two Months After Vague Allegation of 'Sexual Harassment,' No Evidence or Accuser in Sight at East Georgia College

anthony · 8 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It now has been two full months since Professor Thomas Thibeault was fired by East Georgia College's president under what seems like a completely bogus charge of "sexual harassment," just two days after he pointed out—at a sexual harassment training seminar—that the school's sexual harassment policy contained no protection for the falsely accused. The full documentation is here, but you will search in vain for any actual evidence, or even an accuser.

That's right, two months after being fired for an alleged "long history of sexual harassment," Thibeault still has been offered not a single allegation of anything he allegedly said or did. There does not even seem to be an accuser, just a highly embarrassed vice president (Mary Smith, who ran the seminar) and a miffed president (John Black, who earlier in the same week had denied an otherwise unrelated grievance that Thibeault had filed). Black can't even get his story straight about whether he really fired, suspended, or initiated dismissal proceedings against Thibeault.
...
Any reasonable person would put the facts together and see nothing but retaliation. It seems that East Georgia College really has no case at all. The honorable thing for Georgia's Board of Regents to do would be to cut its losses, admit to Black's mistake and extremely likely abuse of power, immediately reinstate Thibeault, and make sure that Black renews Thibeault's annual, tenure-track contract without engaging in any other retaliation. We urge the Regents to do so, and you can, too.

Tell EGC to restore the rights guaranteed by the Constitution and the Georgia Board of Regents. Write a letter to EGC and the Board of Regents here.'

Divorced Kid: Stories from the 1970s Divorce Revolution

Anonymous · 8 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Minnesota Public Radio had a decent piece about a month ago on how divorce impacts kids. It sugarcoats things a bit by leaving the real meat of the story — the various studies that show the harmful effects of divorce on kids — to the end of the broadcast. It does cover them though.

My question is this: With more and more studies coming to light about just how harmful divorce really is to kids, and with mothers being responsible for initiating the vast majority of divorces, how can courts continue to claim with a straight face that mothers are "acting in the best interests of the children?"

Huffington Post: 'Want Less Risk? Hire More Women!'

anthony · 8 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have a better idea: why not hire more women? Many studies have shown that women tend to be more risk averse than men. Recent research [1] shows that testosterone is to blame. The higher the amount of testosterone, the more willing people are to take risks. Women, with considerably less of the male hormone coursing through their bodies, are more risk averse. Even women facing death are more risk averse than men in the same situation [2]. Women also, apparently, make better money managers according to another study by two professors at UC Davis [3]. That study found that overconfidence caused men to trade stocks 45 percent more often than women, thus lowering their net portfolio returns by 2.65 percent per year (compared with 1.72 percent lower returns for women traders).
...
But what is the cause and effect? If a previously male-dominated profession becomes female-dominated, does the total compensation automatically drop? Or conversely, if the total compensation of a profession is forced downward, is that job now less attractive to men and more available to women? One study(4) says not so. In reviewing data from 1983-2001, the researchers found limited evidence that feminization of an occupation causes reduced pay, and no evidence that reducing compensation causes an occupation to feminize. Perhaps 18 years isn't long enough to see any long-term trends. After all, it took more than 100 years for the secretarial profession to flip from 96 percent men to 96 percent women.'

UK: Aberdeen woman, 30, made false rape claim

anthony · 8 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'AN ABERDEEN woman who sparked a major police investigation after falsely accusing a former partner of rape has escaped five years behind bars.

Elizabeth Christie, 30, told a detective at Aberdeen's Grampian Police headquarters she had been raped.

Her alleged attacker was investigated and ordered to appear at the High Court in Aberdeen.

But Christie, whose address was given in court papers as 6f Park Road, Aberdeen, admitted the claims were false on September 2, 2007, at Aberdeen's sheriff court.

Sheriff Annella Cowan sentenced Christie to two years' probation.

Sheriff Cowan said: "I could send you to jail for five years. You acted very, very stupidly."

UK: Female tutor admits to 100 child molestation offences

anthony · 8 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A MIDDLE-AGED female teacher has been exposed as a predatory paedophile who sexually assaulted young children as they used public toilets over 17 years.

Carole Clarke, 46, targeted boys and girls aged four to seven after she saw them entering the toilets without their parents.

Clarke, a college tutor from Grimsby, now faces a lengthy jail sentence after admitting to police that she had committed around 100 sickening offences.

It follows the shocking case of Plymouth nursery worker Vanessa George amid concern about the number of female paedophiles who may be working with children.
...
But last night police were keen to stress that incidents involving a female paedophile acting alone were “extremely rare”.'

Only one woman confined in Florida under Jimmy Ryce Act

anthony · 8 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Nearly 700 Florida men are held in a secure facility, classified as sexually violent predators, despite having completed their prison terms. Just one woman is held in the same situation.
...
"Men typically abuse because they are sexually aroused by children, and women typically abuse because they are trying to get emotional needs met," according to Fort Lauderdale forensic psychologist Amy Swan, chairwoman of the Florida Board of Psychology and an evaluator for the DCF.
...
Scientific literature indicates a "best-guess estimate" that 4 percent of women sexually touch children, compared with 7 percent of men, according to Markus Wiegel, an Atlanta psychologist specializing in female sex offender research. Collecting data on women offenders is challenging, he said, because so little research exists.

Whether more women will be snared under civil commitment laws is the subject of debate, though prosecutors and mental-health professionals agree that the number of women likely will increase, though probably not in great numbers.'

CDC to release guidelines about circumcision

anthony · 8 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision has long been a personal decision left up to parents. Doctors say the risks and benefits are negligible. The American Academy of Pediatrics does not take a stance.

But now a health agency is preparing recommendations on circumcision based on new findings regarding HIV transmission. The proposal from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is expected this year.
...
Early reports from the CDC have stressed that any recommendations will be voluntary, and may only include advice for doctors on educating parents about infant circumcision. Experts at the CDC could also issue guidelines for uncircumcised adults who may be at risk for HIV infection.

Critics say the information from Africa does not apply to the U.S., where any benefits to promoting circumcision would be modest at best. In Africa, men primarily contract the virus through sex with infected women. Circumcision has not been shown to be effective in preventing transmission of HIV through homosexual contact, which is the most common cause of infection in American men.'

Divorced fathers in Japan fight to see children

anthony · 8 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"In Japan, nobody thinks it's a problem if a mother takes away her children without consent," said Hideki Tani, a lawyer who has taken on cases of fathers seeking access to their children. "Here, it's common for either parent to completely lose contact with children, but people outside Japan find it outrageous."

Tani did acknowledge a need to address problems like domestic violence that can contribute to broken families.

Lately, the number of custody battles has risen as overall divorce cases have climbed and more men have become involved in child-rearing and homemaking. Divorced men also say that children should have a right to see their fathers — and that too often the kids' interests are neglected.

"Nobody thinks about children's well-being," Yoshida said. "They are the victims."

Last year, there were more than 20,000 child custody cases in Japanese family courts, up from less than 17,000 in 2000, Ministry of Justice statistics show. About 90 percent of those decisions favored the mothers — as in Yoshida's case.'

Woman, 25, arrested in husband's shooting death

anthony · 8 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Metro Police arrested the 25-year-old wife of a man found shot to death this morning outside their home in the southwest Las Vegas Valley.

Investigators say the 37-year-old husband and his wife had been involved in a domestic dispute.

Police say the woman, Ericka McElroy, is alleged to have shot her husband outside their house in the 5000 block of Upper Falls Court near West Cactus Avenue and South Decatur Boulevard.

McElroy has been booked into the Clark County Detention Center on one count of murder with a deadly weapon. She is being held without bail, according to detention center records.'

Wendy McElroy: The lingering spectre of Hofstra's false rape claim

anthony · 8 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What did Ndonye receive? She was sentenced to undergo mental health counseling and to perform 250 hours of community service. Rice explained ‘the walk’, “This agreement is the only way we guarantee that this woman gets the help that she needs and is held publicly accountable for what she’s done to our community." This is the same D.A.’s office that rushed to judgment about ruining the lives of 4 young men, hardly pausing for due process. As one of the men commented, "I think they should have gathered more evidence . . . looked at camera footage and tried to match up times and things like that before throwing us in and letting the wolves get us." Now the D.A.’s office is oh-so concerned about helping a "troubled" perjurer whose lies could have sent 4 innocent men to prison for decades, where they would have been raped, brutalized and then, afterward, forced to register as sex offenders in perpetuity.'

Feministing: NOW wrongly blasts Letterman

anthony · 9 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'But NOW, without having heard from any of the women with whom Letterman had sex, using this opportunity to address the issue is classless, and most importantly, shows it doesn't truly care about the individual experiences of women, but rather, will readily write them off to achieve an end goal.

In this instance, NOW attempts to speak for all women, represent all women, without them asking NOW to do so. In this instance, it is NOW making victims out of women who otherwise are empowered women who just so happened to have had sex with Letterman.

It seems NOW does not think women can make decision on their own as to with whom to have sex, nor does it trust women enough to think that they can have sex without having been coerced into it.

Time and again, it seems NOW is stuck in the past - unable to change and get past the fights it so honorably fought for in the early days of its existence. It seems to comprise of privileged women who claim to speak for all women, without actually checking in with women to understand their lived experiences or needs.'

Prosecutors decline to file rape charge against former high-ranking city official

axolotl · 10 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In a July 28 search warrant, Los Angeles Police Department investigators said they were told that the woman who made the allegations had gone out with friends on a pub-crawl July 10 in the downtown area. She told police she was drugged and that she awoke the next morning as she was being sexually assaulted by a man she later identified as Adelman, according to the affidavit.

Prosecutors cited several factors for their decision not to seek charges. They included a surveillance video and an interview with a cab driver who drove the pair to Adelman's car that evening. Neither the video nor the cab driver suggested that the woman appeared drugged.'

Missing Men - the difference in death rates between men and women quantified

Anonymous · 10 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today's statistical foray is into the field of 'Survivorship'. One key way that we measure the relative treatment and condition of the different races is by their relative survivorship over time – how quickly they die off as opposed to the average, and as compared to other races. Black men, for instance, are about 1/3rd less likely to make it to age 80 than white men, and that indicates to us that black men are doing about 33% less well in our society than white men.

And the same logic reasonably applies to the differential in survival rates between men and women – a black male is 50% less likely than a white woman to make it to age 80, and about 35% less likely than a black woman to achieve that age.

And it isn't about race as much as it is about sex. Life expectancy at birth for black women has uniformly exceeded that of both white men and black men since at least the 1970s. More than your race, your sex determines when you will die.

...

Few and far between are the organizations raising awareness for men's concerns – suicide, men's heart disease, prostate cancer, testicular cancer, penile cancer, male breast cancer, workplace hazards and the like. Where are the stories in the media about men taking months off to renew themselves after half a life of wage slavery? There aren't many, and you won't find Oprah, Oxygen or HGTV financing a men's month off to get rejuvenated either. You gotta earn the money and go do it yourself.

So in case you haven't figured it out yet, it's a woman's world.'

Major Victory for California's Disabled Veterans

johndias · 11 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A major victory for disabled military parents in family law policy has just occurred in California in the United States. The following announcement can be linked to at the following Web page for the California Alliance for Families and Children (CAFC):
http://www.cafcusa.org/news/2009/10/cafc-wins-major-victory-for-californias.html

CAFC Wins a Major Victory For California's Disabled Veterans

Sacramento, October 11, 2009: The California Alliance for Families and Children (CAFC, online at cafcusa.org) is announcing another victory for military service personnel and veterans. Today Governor Schwarzenegger signed into law SB 285, a bill to protect disabled veterans disability compensation from illegal attachment and garnishments.

The bill, SB 285, was authored by California Senator Rod Wright. It was introduced at the request of CAFC in cooperation with the American Retirees Association (ARA), a group with which we have a long association.

SB 285 codifies existing federal law, United States Code, Title 38, Section 5301 into California's state statutes to assure that it is followed in our state's courts. Although federal law is very clear in its wording and intent, civil court judges nationwide have routinely ignored it. The result has been illegal attachments and garnishments of the disability compensation and erroneously calculating veterans' disability compensation into divorce settlements as a divisible asset or income.

Once again the experience and effectiveness of CAFC proved its worth. SB 285 passed California legislature without a single no vote, even though similar efforts in Iowa, West Virginia and Oklahoma have failed so far. We hope our victory will revitalize efforts in those states. CAFC is pleased to announce we have already received commitments from legislators in Arizona, New Mexico and Texas to follow the California lead.

As we mentioned at the beginning of this announcement this was another national first to correct inequities that veterans have faced in our courts spearheaded by CAFC. CAFC also lead the nation in passing laws to help protect military parents' child custody rights and fair child support treatment. What CAFC started in 2004/2005 has now led to approximately 30 states passing laws and changes at the Federal Level. For more details on our work for military parents please read this recent AmeriForce story and here.

CAFC wants to express our heartfelt appreciation and gratitude for Senator Rod Wright's unwavering willingness to stand up for our nation’s disabled veterans and the American Retirees Association for sponsoring the bill. CAFC also want to thank all of the approximately twenty four veterans groups that are part of the California State Commanders Veterans Council (CSCVC) and CSCVS for their support and help.

There is still a lot of work ahead and your help is the only way CAFC can continue our efforts to finish the job. We feel honored and privileged that our efforts are helping. A generous donation to CAFC will help us continue this valuable work.

SUPPLEMENTAL BACKGROUND INFORMATION

According to Veteran's Affairs (VA), 60,000 U.S. service personnel have been wounded or have struggled with psychological disorders in the wake of their tours in Iraq since 2003. The percentage of amputees is the highest since the Civil War and the VA estimates that up to one-third of all those who have served in Iraq suffer from Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD):
http://www.boston.com/news/nation/articles/2007/11/09/iraq_veteran_healthcare_could_top_650b/

Additionally, as with disabled people on SSI benefits, most disabled vets are barely living on $700.00 to $800.00 a month and even though both SSI and VA benefits are protected against garnishments and attachments. Some agencies and companies are getting around the federal protection laws for disabled persons on SSI and VA benefit as recently reported by CBS News from a AP story: Creditors Use Loop Hole to Seize Benefits: http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2009/06/03/business/main5057911.shtml?source=search_story

Please read more here and read: CAFC Helps Disabled Veterans with Family Law Reform and Update: SB 285 Wright Veterans Disability benefits for more information on this effort and issue.

Al-Azhar face-veil ban questioned

axolotl · 12 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Shaikh Ali Abu al-Hasan, the former head of the Fatwa Council at the Islamic Studies Institute (ISI) in Cairo, said although it was not required by Islam for women to cover their faces, Al-Azhar University should allow women to chose what they want to wear.

"No official has the right to order a young lady to remove a form of dress that was sanctioned by none other than Umar ibn al-Khattab, except for the purposes of identification for security reasons," he said.'

...

'On Saturday, scores of female university students protested outside al-Azhar university dormitory calling for the repeal of the decision banning fully veiled women from entering. There were similar demonstrations at Cairo University.'

So...how come we're led to believe that Islamic women everywhere are forced to wear these things?

CDC expected to make recommendations about circumcision by end of year

anthony · 12 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ST. LOUIS — Circumcision has long been a personal decision left up to parents. Doctors say the risks and benefits are negligible. The American Academy of Pediatrics does not take a stance.

But now a health agency is preparing recommendations on circumcision based on new findings regarding HIV transmission. The proposal from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is expected this year.
...
Critics say the information from Africa does not apply to the U.S., where any benefits to promoting circumcision would be modest at best. In Africa, men primarily contract the virus through sex with infected women. Circumcision has not been shown to be effective in preventing transmission of HIV through homosexual contact, which is the most common cause of infection in American men. Other medical benefits have been deemed minimal. Circumcised boys develop fewer urinary tract infections in their first year (about 1 in 1,000) compared with uncircumcised boys (1 in 100). The risk of penile cancer is reduced in circumcised men, although the overall risk of the disease remains very low.'

RADAR ALERT: Spread the Word-- Domestic Violence Laws Violate Civil Liberties

Matt · 13 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

At her recent keynote address at the annual conference of the Washington State Coalition Against Domestic Violence, Amanda McCormick, an employee of Praxis International, showed overt disdain for male victims of domestic violence. As reported by Trudy Schuett, McCormick announced, I think I know a lot of men who deserve to be beaten."[1]

Praxis International, according to their website, "is a nonprofit research and training organization that works toward the elimination of violence in the lives of women and children.... Since 1996, [they] have worked with advocacy organizations, intervention agencies, and inter-agency collaborations to create a clear and cooperative agenda for social change in their communities."[2]

Pet lovers join crusade against domestic abuse

anthony · 13 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The campaign against domestic violence is recruiting what might seem like unlikely new foot soldiers these days: animal lovers.

In an effort to protect potential victims of domestic violence, Harbor House — Orange County's only domestic-violence shelter — is reaching out to veterinarians, animal-cruelty investigators, law enforcement and neighbors to watch for signs of animal abuse that may indicate a deeper pattern of family violence.

"I think it would change the face of domestic violence if people understood how close that relationship is between animal abuse and domestic violence," said Harbor House CEO Carol Wick. "When you start getting people angry about pets being victimized, it may create a lot more awareness and protection for the people involved."

"Abusers use that bond between humans and animals as a weapon to coerce and control and humiliate their victims and to keep them trapped in abusive relationships," he said'

Boys & Girls Club teens help take back the night

anthony · 13 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Last week on Tuesday, October 6th, Boys & Girls Club teens attended Take Back the Night to help raise awareness about domestic abuse.

Previous to the rally, Club members created their own special signs to show support for domestic abuse survivors. “Domestic violence affects everyone, including kids,” said Club Education Director Tiffanie Bolling. “A lot of the kids that we work with have been victims themselves or know someone close to them that has been a victim. An event like Take Back the Night encourages strength and perseverance to individuals that have gone through horrific situations.”

“We teach our young girls to spot the signs of something wrong before it ever even gets to a violent situation,” said Bolling. “We teach them that love does not hurt and that no amount of hitting is ever okay. Getting help before it's too late is key.”

Finland: New Face of Child Abuse: Drunk Moms

anthony · 13 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police statistics show that child abuse has a new face: drunken mothers. Police say they get around 400 reports of domestic violence against children each year; these days around two-thirds of the cases point to intoxicated mothers.

The recession has apparently had a lot to do with the spike in the number of inebriated women who turn abusive.

"The typical case is a single mother who has an alcohol problem and who's become exhausted by work," explains Police Sergeant Pekka Hätönen, who's in charge of the child abuse unit at the Helsinki Itäkeskus police department.

"She might have recently lost her job. All these pressures become focused on a misbehaving child, and the mother becomes easily enraged and lashes out physically, violently."'

Area counties take part in online domestic violence registry

anthony · 13 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Raleigh, Fayette, Summers, Wyoming, Monroe and Nicholas counties have joined a statewide, online domestic violence registry.

The new database was created as a way to secure the safety of domestic violence victims and recognize ongoing disputes. It was launched in March after receiving an $815,000 federal grant to compile court records from each county in West Virginia and download them into a nationwide database.

“The Domestic Violence Registry gives law enforcement officers access to protective orders that have been ordered in court,” said Tonia Thomas, team coordinator for the West Virginia Coalition against Domestic Violence.

They will be able to be accessed electronically, avoiding the delay they may have with paper orders.

“If they don’t have a data terminal in their car, they can call the State Police detachment or their emergency operations center and be able to obtain those orders right away,” Thomas added.'

American Prospect Blog: 'Real Numbers on Domestic and Sexual Violence'

anthony · 13 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First, the good news: On the whole, domestic violence is down between 1993 and 2008. But unsurprisingly, women remain over five times more likely than men to be victims of both fatal and non-fatal domestic violence, including assault, rape, stalking, and homicide. One of the most interesting findings is that although fewer than 1 of every 1,000 American men has been the victim of domestic violence -- compared to 4.3 of every 1,000 American women -- male victims are more likely than female ones to go to the police: 72 percent of self-reported male victims filled out a police report, compared to 49 percent of female victims. This points to a number of problems familiar to advocates: that female domestic violence victims are especially wary of law enforcement, fearful of reprisal from their abusers, and must battle a cycle of shame and self-doubt before they seek help. About half never do.'

"The subtle art of misogyny"

anthony · 13 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It fills me with ice cold rage. Men and women both like to worship men, for some reason; women even, perversely, love to promote men who themselves hate women (hello, Roth'n'Updike fans. How's it going?). Both sexes unquestioningly perpetuate the boys' club through the invites issued to men, the opportunities, associations, deals and chances offered. The talks, readings, colloquia, special trips, lectures and guest spots are organised by women for the benefit of men's careers. For the men, the glory, status, visibility, influence and enshrinement in history. For the women, the expected but unacknowledged work.
...
It is time for women to realise how little they are respected, how little their presence is liked, how this antipathy is expressed and how very easy it is to spot: they do not want us around, so they do not invite us, though we may pay to worship. Misogyny is not something forcefully, loudly imposed by a mighty superpower. It is constantly, silently, automatically enacted by all the people present, including those who feel perturbed but don't speak up.'

Check out the comments.

UK: One in 10 men will be out of work by 2010

anthony · 13 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'More worrying is the fact one in five black men are currently unemployed - more than double the employment rate for white men.

The male unemployment rate is expected to rise above 10% by the start of next year and peak at 11% (1.9 million men).

According to research launched today by the CIPD, male unemployment currently stands at 9% (compared with a female unemployment rate of 6.9%). But the number of men unemployed has increased by 50% during the recession, while the number of women unemployed as increased by a much lower 33.4%.
...
John Philpott, CIPD's chief economist, said: "A focus on the relatively hard impact of the recession on men should not detract from the absolute deterioration in the labour market situation facing both sexes. Indeed, it is likely that the relative position of women will itself deteriorate in the coming decade as real cuts in public expenditure have an adverse impact on public sector employment.'

Minimally invasive prostate surgery may increase the risk of some complications

axolotl · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More men who need prostate-cancer surgery are choosing minimally invasive techniques because these surgeries typically lead to shorter hospital stays and decrease many types of complications, including pain. This type of surgery, which often includes the use of a robot, is heavily advertised to consumers.

Minimally invasive techniques increased from 1% to 40% of all radical prostatectomies from 2001 to 2006 and may be as high as 75% of all prostate cancer surgeries today.

But here's a detail men should know about: The most serious complications -- including incontinence and erectile dysfunction -- appeared more often in men who underwent minimally invasive surgery compared to traditional surgery, according to a study published today in the Journal of the American Medical Assn. '

Schrödinger's Rapist: or a guy's guide to approaching strange women without being maced

axolotl · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Piece here. Excerpts:

'So when you, a stranger, approach me, I have to ask myself: Will this man rape me?

Do you think I'm overreacting? One in every six American women will be sexually assaulted in her lifetime. I bet you don't think you know any rapists, but consider the sheer number of rapes that must occur. '

...

'While you may assume that none of the men you know are rapists, I can assure you that at least one is. Consider: if every rapist commits an average of ten rapes (a horrifying number, isn't it?) then the concentration of rapists in the population is still a little over one in sixty. That means four in my graduating class in high school. One among my coworkers. One in the subway car at rush hour. Eleven who work out at my gym. How do I know that you, the nice guy who wants nothing more than companionship and True Love, are not this rapist?'

With no charges, woman accused in husband’s death set free

Anonymous · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Charges haven't been filed against a Las Vegas woman arrested in the shooting death of her husband earlier this month and a justice of the peace today ordered her released from custody.

Metro Police arrested Ericka McElroy on Oct. 7 outside her home in the 5000 block of Upper Falls Court in the southwest valley.

...

Deputy District Attorney Pamela Weckerly said her office needed 30 days to file the criminal complaint.

With no charges to hold her, Justice of the Peace Tony Abbatangelo released McElroy on her own recognizance.

She is scheduled to appear in court again on Nov. 16.'

Wendy McElroy: Feminists Deny Truth on Domestic Violence

anthony · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, the shelter Pizzey founded denies her entry; her name does not appear in its official history.

Pizzey's 'mistake' was to diverge from the theory of domestic violence that feminists at the time insisted dominate all discussion. She believed that men could also be the victims of domestic violence, and that women could be as violent toward their partners as men.

Pizzey's views put her on a collision course with PC feminists who, according to Pizzey's own published account of events, initiated a campaign of harassment and violence against her.

...

In large and small ways -- from shrill protests to the tearing down of announcements, from blocking university promotions to threats and defamation -- PC feminism has attempted to stop voices it could not control.

Feminism is dying not from a backlash but from an orthodoxy that cannot tolerate real discussion...and never could.'

Detroit Woman Charged With Murdering Her Two Children

anthony · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DETROIT — A woman intentionally set a fire at her boyfriend's mobile home in suburban Detroit, killing two of her young children while fleeing with a third, a prosecutor said Tuesday in filing murder charges.

Wayne County Prosecutor Kym Worthy did not specify a motive, saying only that Sharon Hinojosa "knowingly left the children who were not fathered by her boyfriend."

Hinojosa, 29, was charged with arson, second-degree murder and felony murder, which is murder committed during another crime. The maximum penalty is life in prison.

"This should send chills up the spine of every person. I can't imagine the abject horror of the last seconds of their young lives," Worthy said.

She said Hinojosa set the fire around 3 a.m. Friday in Huron Township, about 20 miles southwest of Detroit, killing daughter Alayna Hinojosa, 3, and son Anthony Hinojosa, 4. Hinojosa escaped with a 1-year-old son, Worthy said, while Alayna and Anthony remained trapped inside.'

Police: Largo woman in relationship triangle falsely claimed rape

anthony · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LARGO - A 20-year-old Largo woman was arrested Tuesday after her boyfriend found her with another man at her home, and she falsely claimed the man was raping her, according to Largo police.

Coffii Ann Castellion, of 605 16th Ave. N.W., lot 1, was charged with making a false report to a law enforcement officer.

...

The officer listened as Castellion told him she was the victim of a sexual assault, and he thought there was more to it, so he had Castellion and the alleged suspect transported to the police station for further interviewing.

Within an hour, Castellion admitted the sexual battery was bogus, Largo police said. She said her boyfriend had recently been released from the Pinellas County Jail and caught her with another man at her home. She also believed that by filing a sexual battery report she could receive some medical treatment related to her recent sexual activity, Largo police said.'

Officer cleared of sexual assault

anthony · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HINSDALE— A Hinsdale police officer has been cleared of charges that he sexually assaulted a woman while investigating a complaint about animals in her neighborhood.

Officer W. Rodney Maloney, a part-time officer and animal control officer for the town, was acquitted of indecent assault and battery last week by a six-member jury in Central Berkshire District Court after 10 minutes of deliberations.

Maloney tells The Berkshire Eagle that although he feels vindicated, he’s still upset that someone brought false allegations against him in May 2008 that caused him "a year and a half of hell."'

Ed. note: Accused's name mentioned, accuser's not. Typical day.

Ireland: 'Domestic abuse: One man's story'

anthony · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When "Jon" first met his ex-wife, "Tracy," 13 years ago, he never thought their relationship would end in a divorce — let alone a protection order, criminal charges, and a fight to obtain regular visitation with his 4-year-old daughter.

But his four-year marriage has ended that way, and Jon said it is largely because today's laws pertaining to domestic violence do little to protect men who are on the receiving end of abuse from their female partners.

Jon said things are improving between him and his ex-wife now, and he has his daughter with him for half of each week, but he wants to share his story to raise awareness about how domestic abuse can affect men.

"I'm not doing this to get back at her, I'm doing this to let people know that this stuff happens," said Jon in a recent interview. "I think a lot of men are just too macho to admit they can be abused."

While Jon said his ex-wife had occasionally subjected him to physical violence, he said much of the abuse he suffered was mental and emotional.'

UK: Women only shortlist for Labour candidate

anthony · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this week the national executive council (NEC) for the political party ruled that Warrington South would be under an all female shortlist for the seat.
...
Rumours had been circulating that Labour figures in the area had wanted to drop the female only list to open up the possiblity of a person from the town standing in the seat.

A North West Labour Party spokesman said: “The NEC makes decisions on a case by case basis as to whether or not a parliamentary selection process should be an open shortlist or all-women shortlist.

“The NEC Organisational Subcommittee took the decision today that the selection processes for Warrington South should be based on an all women shortlist."'

BBC: Joy of India's women-only trains

anthony · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'What's striking about the new trains - not counting the exclusively female passengers - is the bright colours. The front of the engine is painted blue and red and the carriages are bright yellow.

All eight coaches are interconnected and brightly lit. The cushioned seats are comfortable and ceiling fans make the journey pleasant on a humid evening.

...

For many years, most suburban trains have had a couple of coaches reserved for women. But some men always forced their way into their compartments.

"Sometimes men board the ladies' compartment and when we ask them to leave or get aside, they start to argue. They say that if ladies can travel in gents' compartments they should be able to travel in ladies' compartments," Sangeeta says.

...

Sangeeta, a shy young woman who commutes daily from Faridabad to college in Delhi, says men often harass women on other trains.

"They touch and pinch."

She says travelling on the Ladies' Special makes her feel safe.

...

The Ladies' Specials are the brainchild of Railways Minister Mamata Bannerji, who announced the service in this year's railway budget.

"Our minister was very concerned about the safety and comfort of working women in the cities," Northern Railways general manager Vivek Sahai says.

"The women have ample space to sit comfortably so when they get home after a hard day's work, they can cook and look after their families."

...

As the train halts at a station, assistant sub-inspector Prngh Varma steps down onto the platform to ensure men stay away.

"We tell them very politely that 'sir, this is a ladies' train. Please stay away, don't board this train.' If they try again, I tell them, 'if you travel on this train, then what's the point of having a women's special train?"

Mr Varma says most men comply.

"But if anyone forces their way in, we take them to the police station and charge them with entering a ladies' train, and if they are ticketless then we charge them under that law too."

As the train halts at one of the stations en route, men waiting nearby do not seem too happy.

"Generally a man travels with his wife, or sister or daughter," said one disgruntled male passenger, Satya Pal.'

But since this is a Ladies' Special, he has to travel separately.

"That's not practical. There should be some provision for men to travel on this train," Mr Pal said.'

'Why Women Really Have Sex'

anthony · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"We found lots of surprising things," said Meston, director of the University of Texas at Austin's Sexual Psychophysiology Lab. "The overall biggest surprise is the huge diversity of reasons why women said they have sex. We certainly expected more than love, reproduction and because it feels good, but all the different ways women were having sex was incredible."

"A lot of women had sex simply for the adventure, the excitement," she said. "They wanted to try out men of different ethnicities, different penis sizes. And some did not want the emotional attachment. We did not find strong support for that theory at all. Physical gratification was placed much higher."
...
"I had sex with a couple of guys because I felt sorry for them. These guys were virgins and I felt bad that they had never had sex before so I had sex with them. I felt like I was doing them a big favor that no one else had ever done. I felt power over them, like they were weaklings under me and I was in control. It boosted my confidence to be the teacher in the situation and made me feel more desirable."
...

"I only [have sex for money] with my kid's father. Not a prostitute or anything and because I love him but nothing is free in this world."
...
"I was seeing a man who was 69 years old, 22 years older than me. He took me to an expensive steak and seafood restaurnt. I was only seeing him because I was bored, new in town, had not met anyone else. We both lived with relatives so mostly parked in his car, a big Cadillac. He usually wanted oral sex, so I did it. I figured, why not? He enjoyed it and I got a good meal." Heterosexual woman, age 47
...
"Um ... is there any other reason to have sex? Seriously. Love is pretty much it, as far as I'm concerned."'

'Men, Masculinity, and Spirit'

anthony · 14 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There has been a lot of good stuff written about the Goddess, Goddesses, and the Divine Feminine,. The Wiccan Goddess is first among equals in traditional Wiccan circles., and in my view, should be. Certainly She has been the most important influence in my own life. I have even recently completed a book manuscript dealing with some of these themes.

By comparison, there has been little attention paid to the Divine Masculine, the God, or male Gods as male. There are two good reasons for this lack, but while they are good reasons why the Goddess has received the most attention until now, I think it s time to give more attention to the Divine Masculine. The discussions over Robert Bly, the men's movement, sweat lodges and "muscular" spirituality in some comments appearing in the preceding post have tipped me into entering these perilous waters.'

U.S. Dad Accused of Taking Kids Freed in Japan

anthony · 15 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TOKYO — Japanese police say they have released an American man nearly 20 days after his arrest for allegedly snatching his children from his ex-wife.

Police said Thursday that while prosecutors have not pressed charges, they haven't yet dropped the case either. They decided to release him on grounds that he was not a flight risk.

Christopher Savoie was arrested Sept. 28 after allegedly grabbing his two children, ages 8 and 6, from his Japanese ex-wife as they walked to school in southern Japan. The case is among a growing number of custody disputes involving a foreign parent in Japan.'

Rejected women sue Swedish university

Matt · 15 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A group of women who are suing a Swedish university for gender discrimination have also reported Sweden's Equality Ombudsman ... to the Ombudsmen of Justice – JO), charging the agency failed to take up their case.

The women claim they were denied admission into the psychology programme at Lund University in southern Sweden on account of their gender.

They argue that they were passed over in favour of men, who received priority treatment for admission in order to increase the number of men in the programme.

In addition to filing a lawsuit alleging illegal discrimination against the university, the 31 women have also reported the Equality Ombudsman for failing to carry out its responsibilities as the arbiter of discrimination claims in Sweden.
...
The two conclude that, "because in reality DO thinks it's good to choose students based on gender – having equal numbers of each gender is a more important goal than equal rights and opportunities regardless of gender".

According to a study carried out by the Centre for Justice, 5,400 college applicants in Sweden were subject to gender discrimination in 2009, with women being negatively affected in 95 percent of the cases.'

Canada: Professor stands up for men's rights at U of New Brunswick

Matt · 15 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A.: Article here. Excerpt:

'A new human rights issue was brought to light this past week at UNB: what about men's rights?

On Thursday, Oct. 8 Dr. Anthony Synnott from Concordia University stood in front of a roomful of students and professors and spoke about his new book Re-Thinking Men: Heroes, Villains and Victims. Synnott sat in the hot seat as he discussed his theories on masculinity and equality for men. He believes that in the quest for women's rights, men's rights have been either forgotten or ignored.
...
Synnott takes this further by saying, "Prejudice against ethnic groups is called 'racism'; prejudice against women, 'sexism'; and prejudice against men is considered really, really funny."

Continuing to draw attention to society's prejudice against men, Synnott admits that men do commit more homicides and crime than women, but men are also killed more in homicides than women.
...
Synnott calls out to men to "man-up," a term he learned from a student. But he does not share her definition, which requested that men, "Get beer, not white wine. Don't get the baguette, get the steak. Stop whining, and just do it… oh, and hit on us more."

No, Synnott requests that men start organizing and fighting for their rights as women have done. Because as we have all learned at some point or other, ignoring problems does not make them go away, they only come back later to bite you even harder.

"So gentlemen, man-up! There are things to do here."'

Baltimore City Clerk of Court publicly questions lack of support for male DV victims

Matt · 15 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Baltimore City Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team had good news and bad news for criminal justice leaders Wednesday during its annual report, trumpeting a significant drop in homicides but bemoaning slow progress on policy recommendations the team made in past years.

“The number of domestic violence homicides is plummeting,” declared Julie Drake, chief of the Baltimore City State’s Attorney’s Felony Family Violence Division and vice chair of the team, which is a committee of the city’s Criminal Justice Coordinating Council.
...
Baltimore City Clerk of Court Frank M. Conaway Sr., who often asks pointed questions of the police commissioner, echoed his concern of previous years that the presenters and their offices focused on battered women to the exclusion of male victims.

Drake conceded that men can be too embarrassed to seek help; but if they do, she said, their cases are treated just like women’s. Lennig said the same is true at the House of Ruth, although battered men are placed in hotels whereas women, who constitute the vast majority of the clientele, share a communal space on site.

“I think there should be a House of John because men get beaten, too,” Conaway said after the meeting.'

Blogger replies to "Schrödinger's Rapist" essay

Matt · 16 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'Before I get constructive, I have to take a few paragraphs to cite a reasons why this article is insulting towards many men.

First, there's the "you are a good guy" dialog. This is presented in such a way that suggests Starling has some sort of empathy towards men. Almost immediately, it becomes clear that these words are not written in empathy nearly so much as a failed attempt to placate. There's also the student/teacher metaphor used in the writing. This sets a dominating and oppressive tone towards men. Feminist should know by now that being oppressive is not effective.

Beyond the tone and approach, this piece blatantly promotes the notion that all men are rapists until proven innocent. Rape is a horrible crime and those found guilty of rape are usually strongly punished. However, accusations of false rape often destroy the lives of innocent men. While the damage done to the victim in false charge cases rivals that of rape cases, the punishment for false charge is relatively insignificant. Being falsely accused of rape is a real and terrifying concern for many men. Starling's approach of openly labeling men as guilty does not help bridge the gap with her supposed audience of men.'

The subject matter essay was posted here on MANN on Oct. 13, 2009.

"No equality to be found in domestic violence"

Matt · 16 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A. Op-ed here. This one is worth responding to. It actually admits the near 50/50 data but downplays male victims based on injury rates, misleadingly. I see no comment page but a letter to the editor can be sent to northnews-at-northumberlandnews.com. I sent them a letter which is below the article here. But it might be good to have more. Excerpt:

'Physically and emotionally abused women of Northumberland County are safer today than they were a few years ago.

Northumberland Services for Women's long fundraising campaign to expand its capacity and services culminated with the opening of the third phase of the project, the new administrative offices, on Thursday, Oct. 15.

Although the project has resulted in an increase in beds for abused women and their children, second stage housing to ease families back into society in a safe environment, and now the office opening, that doesn't mean the problem of violence against women has ended. In fact, the shelter continues to struggle to accommodate the number of women fleeing abusive relationships.'

Woman shoots her young sons, killing one

anthony · 17 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(AP) LOS ANGELES (AP) - A woman shot her two young sons Saturday, killing a 5-year-old boy and critically wounding his 1-year-old brother, police said.

The woman called 911 about 8:30 a.m. and told a dispatcher that she had killed her children, Los Angeles police Officer Norma Eisenman said.

When police arrived at the apartment complex in South Los Angeles, the woman, believed to be in her mid-20s, was standing on a second-floor balcony waving a handgun and telling officers to shoot her.
...
The 5-year-old was declared dead at the scene. The younger boy was shot multiple times and was hospitalized in critical condition.'

Woman arrested for false rape report

anthony · 17 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'SHREVEPORT, LA (KSLA) - A Keithville woman is now behind bars after allegedly filing a false police report.

Shreveport Police arrested 22-year-old Olivia Green who now faces a charge of criminal mischief, after reporting back on October 8 that she had been abducted and sexually assaulted.

Police say Green originally told officers that she had been kidnapped from a convenience store on W. 70th St., back on October 5, by two males who then allegedly held her captive for four days, where she was also sexually assaulted.

Upon investigating, detectives soon learned that Green had lied and was never kidnapped or sexually assaulted.'

Roethlisberger wants damages from accuser

anthony · 17 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RENO, Nev. -- Ben Roethlisberger is seeking unspecified counter damages from a woman he says falsely accused him of rape in what his lawyer describes as a plan she hatched to seduce the Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback in his Lake Tahoe casino-hotel room.

The woman alleged in a civil suit filed in Washoe District Court in July that Roethlisberger sexually assaulted her at Harrah's in July 2008 after he lured her there under the false pretense of needing his television repaired.

Roethlisberger's lawyer, John Echeverria, said in a response to the lawsuit filed this week that the woman made up the story because she knew it was against Harrah's policy for employees to visit a guest's room without a work-related purpose.

Her violation of the policy "was a deliberate step in her plan to seduce Mr. Roethlisberger," Echeverria wrote.'

Woman charged in teacher 'sex' case

anthony · 17 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Deanna Higgins has been charged in a teacher sex case. Higgins, a science teacher at Spring High School, in Spring, Texas, is facing two felony charges stemming from an alleged relationship with a student. The charges are improper relationship between an educator and a student, and one for sexual assault of a child. These are both felony charges and an arrest warrant has been issued for Higgins. In addition to Higgins being charged for a relationship with a student it appears that a second Spring High School teacher is being investigated, and has been placed on leave.

...

I'm sure there are going to be plenty of comments about how this teacher is going to get off easy because she's a woman and the child is not going to be viewed as a victim. I hope that this isn't the case. There have been way too many stories lately of female teachers carrying on inappropriate relationships with students. I'm sure that the students were, for the most part, willing participants, but that doesn't excuse the behavior. The teacher should know better and no amount of justification in my mind is going to make that okay.'

Teacher resigns after "student encounter"

anthony · 17 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CLEVELAND, Texas - On Monday, investigators discovered a Cleveland ISD teacher allegedly had sex with a student. By Wednesday night, however, the teacher still wasn't in custody.
...
On Monday night, she called district officials and resigned. Investigators say she admitted to having sex with a 15-year-old male student.

By Wednesday night, Sinclair had not been charged with a crime, but Cleveland police are considering charging her with having inappropriately relations with a student and possibly sexual assault.

A Houston sex offender counselor says society tends to underestimate the harm that can come to teenage boys seduced by a female teacher.

Judy O'Brien says boys are likely to have skewed relationships with women well into adulthood and some will commit sexual crimes.'

Speaker: Masculinity at heart of violence

anthony · 17 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WATERLOO - Dealing with domestic and community violence is about facing issues of masculinity, according to Harry Brod.

That doesn't mean fighting against men.

"I always position myself as his ally, not his adversary," Brod said during his keynote speech.

Brod, a professor of philosophy and humanities at the University of Northern Iowa, spoke during the morning portion of the Safety, Accountability and Justice in Reducing Domestic and Community Violence conference. The event was Wednesday at Hawkeye Community College.

Brod also served as director of the Iowa Regent Universities Men's Gender Violence Prevention Institute and on the Iowa Governor's Task Force for Responsible Fatherhood.

In his view, masculinity plays a role in nearly all violence committed. School shooters often are bullied and mocked for not being masculine enough - which leads them to lash out - and husbands abuse their partners to assert dominance.'

Women's-Only Gyms Rock The Nation

anthony · 17 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though Pink Iron has been open to the female gym-going public since April, yesterday marked their official launch as L.A.'s premier women's only, full service health and fitness center created by Holly Holton, a certified personal trainer and globally ranked fitness competitor.

Holton came up with the idea after working for Gold's Gym, realizing that the market was primed for "a fun, motivating, and unique environment where women could sweat without having creepy dudes drool on them!" Sing it, sister!

But what if you don't live in Los Angeles? Actually, there are more than a few women's-only gyms across the country.
...
So if self-consciousness or dude issues keep you from busting a sweat at the gym, check your town for a female-only option. It might be just what the personal trainer ordered.'

Travel Japan by H.I.S. releases new pricing for 'women only' cultural tour

anthony · 17 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Travel Japan by H.I.S. has released new pricing for its innovative ‘women only’ nine-day exploration of Japanese culture.

Highlights of the ‘Japan Experience’ include a shiatsu massage, learning the secrets of Japanese cooking, an Ikebana class and tea ceremony and a private party with one of Kyoto’s famed geisha.

Ideal for mothers and daughters, aunts and nieces travelling together or for groups of up to 12, the program visits Tokyo, Takayama, Kyoto and Osaka.'

The Shriver Report released, claims it's a woman's nation

anthony · 17 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Report here (.pdf file). This report is extremely long -- 438 pages. Admittedly, I skimmed through it but I tried to provide some of the more intriguing excerpts.

“A Woman’s Nation Changes Everything” is work in the best tradition of those ideals. It flips a switch in our culture, sparking a collective acknowledgement of the interdependence of men and women today. With that switch we hope will come changes in the collective mindset of our government, business, faith institutions, our culture, media, and most importantly, men and women. Embracing these new dynamics and sparking new conversations is what “A Woman’s Nation Changes Everything” is all about.

As you’ll read in this report, women have now taken their place as powerhouses driving the economy. Consider this: Today, women now earn 60 percent of the college degrees awarded each year and fully half of the Ph.D.s and the professional degrees. Almost 40 percent of working women hold managerial and other professional positions. Women make 80 percent of the buying decisions in American homes. Companies led by women generally are proving to have healthier bottom lines.

One female corporate executive told me, “Women don’t need equal pay. They actually need to be paid more, because the fact of the matter is that we typically are responsible for more within our families, and we have to pay to outsource more. Most of the men I have competed with for positions have had a stay-home wife at some point and many have had a wife throughout their entire marriage.”

In addition to physical injuries and risks, workplace inequities produce “social hazards” that also jeopardize women’s health.62 Women can experience intense psychological stress and related disorders from occupying lower status positions in the workforce—from the devaluation of their work to lacking control over their working conditions, from strenuous tasks to hostility they often encounter when they break through gender barriers. Moreover, the shift work women often perform can cause disturbance of regular circadian-metabolic rhythm, which intensifies occupational stress. And another major source of occupational stress for women is sexual harassment.

Domestic violence is the number one cause of injury to women. Once thought of as a purely private matter, intimate violence is now recognized to have far-reaching public health and financial consequences that extend to the workplace. Perpetrators often try to threaten the stability of a survivor’s job, in order to further control her and make her more financially dependent on the perpetrator. Domestic violence contributes to a job loss for a quarter to half of all survivors.

Woman accused of showing porn from window, assaulting cop

Matt · 18 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Grand Forks woman is accused of broadcasting pornography from the window of her home Friday morning, allowing the images and noises to be seen and heard from Lake Agassiz Elementary School.

When police Cpl. Dylan Schauer arrived at Nicole Altendorf's house on the 800 block of Stanford Road, he found a still shot of a pornography video displayed on a television.

"We made contact with the suspect, who was not compliant in any way," a police report states. "She refused to come out and physically resisted. She was finally extracted by force from her entryway."

The report says Altendorf bit Schauer's arm and kicked him several times in the groin as he tried to put her in a squad car. Once in the car, she spit in Schauer's face, the report states.
...
Altendorf is charged with three felonies: simple assault of an officer, contact by bodily fluids and preventing arrest. The allegation she displayed the pornography led to a misdemeanor count of disorderly conduct. She's also charged with possession of drug paraphernalia because, officers said, she had a device for smoking marijuana.'

All-male college cracks down on cross-dressing

Matt · 18 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA, Georgia (CNN) -- An all-male college in Atlanta, Georgia, has banned the wearing of women's clothes, makeup, high heels and purses as part of a new crackdown on what the institution calls inappropriate attire.

No dress-wearing is part of a larger dress code launched this week that Morehouse College is calling its "Appropriate Attire Policy."

The policy also bans wearing hats in buildings, pajamas in public, do-rags, sagging pants, sunglasses in class and walking barefoot on campus.

However, it is the ban on cross-dressing that has brought national attention to the small historically African-American college.'

Gee, I wonder if any of the many women's colleges in the US has a ban on their students dressing like men?

"The modern male, he’s softer than a slug with a beer belly"

Proud_to_be_a_man · 18 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Has to be read in full to be believed. This Liz Jones woman is considered a bit of a joke here in Britain by the way. Excerpt:

'It’s official. Modern man is a wimp. A new book by an Australian anthropologist called Peter McAllister entitled Manthropology: The Science Of The Inadequate Modern Male has come to the conclusion that men are the worst they have ever been – the ‘sorriest cohort of masculine Homo sapiens to ever walk the planet’.

According to a set of fossilised footprints, prehistoric Australian aboriginals would have left 100m and 200m Olympic champion Usain Bolt standing.
...
You see? Women are now the strong ones in our society. Men no longer chase wildebeest across the pampas, and therefore have become hopelessly soft.

This deterioration has happened merely since two great leaps forward: the industrial revolution and the advent of free internet porn, which has created the unrealistic expectation that the ugliest slob in the world can bag a babe.

What poor, sad creatures modern men are. What wimps. What wastes of space.'

Experts: Hofstra false rape could hurt real victims

anthony · 19 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Hofstra University freshman who lied to police about being gang-raped in a dormitory bathroom stall last month altered both the course of her own life and the lives of the five men who were wrongly accused.
...
But victims' advocates said they had no doubt that public anger toward Ndonye would discourage actual victims of sexual assault from coming forward.

"The defense in sexual assault cases is always that the victim is lying," even when that is not the case, said Lois Schwaeber, director of legal services for the Nassau County Coalition Against Domestic Violence.
...

Scott Berkowitz, president of the Washington, D.C.-based Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network, said about 5 percent of sexual assault reports are determined to be unfounded. Still, Burns said, every prosecutor he knows has come across at least one or two such cases in his career.
...
The Criminal Courts Bar Association has said it believes that Rice's office should have charged Ndonye with a crime. Not to do so, Bouse said, sends a message to other would-be false accusers that there are no negative consequences short of a "slap on the wrist."'

Woman accused of false rape report arrested

anthony · 19 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Macon police arrested a woman today and charged her with making a false report of a crime and false statements, a release said.

Police arrested Tomeika Strange, 21, of Macon. She had recently accused two individuals of kidnapping and rape on Oct. 9 at a gas station on Houston Avenue.

An investigation by police and the Southeastern Regional Fugitive Task Force showed the accusations to be untrue.'

Woman gets 20 days after pleading guilty to false rape report

anthony · 19 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. It seems video's are often used to vindicate men falsely accused.

'A Valparaiso woman who the Porter County Sheriff's Police said falsely accused a man of raping her has been sentenced to 180 days in jail after pleading guilty to a charge of false reporting.

Erica Donohue, 20, of 1209 1/2 Chicago St., was sentenced to 180 days in jail, with all but 20 days in jail and 10 days of community service suspended, police said.

According to police, on July 15 Donohue reported being raped by an acquaintance of hers in rural Porter County.

Det. Gene Hopkins of the PCSP subsequently undertook an "extensive investigation," on the basis of which the Prosecuting Attorney's Office issued a warrant not for the man's arrest but Donohue's," police said.

Donohue was arrested on Sept. 29. "During the following interview, Donohue admitted to not being raped and fabricated the rape accusation to conceal her whereabouts from an individual with whom Donohue was having a relationship," police said. "A consensual video of the incident had been discovered during the investigation."'

Sportscaster Outlines Wife's Lavish Spending Habits in Messy Divorce Trial

anthony · 19 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CBS sportscaster Jim Nantz — who spent much of his professional life watching opponents face off — is now in a messy battle of his own.

Nantz, 50, who earns more than seven million dollars a year, is in divorce court to protect much of his fortune from wife of 26 years, Lorrie Nantz, the Connecticut Post reported.
...
Nantz's wife, who is seeking alimony as well as more than $1.5 million-per-year in child support for the couple's 15-year-old daughter, Caroline, has stated that she wants to keep the family's six bedroom home in Westport, Conn. The family also owns a condominium at a ski resort in Utah, according to the Connecticut Post. Lorrie Nantz said that she wants to care for the child's daughter even though she has a full-time nanny.
...
In nine years, Lorrie Nantz spent close to $1 million at a high-end clothing and jewelry store in Westport, Conn., the Post reported.

Last month she bought a $12,000 necklace at the posh store, but when pressed on its description, she could not remember details.'

NOW's new president takes on men 'behaving badly'

anthony · 19 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK — Men behaving badly. It wasn't a topic that Terry O'Neill expected to find high on her agenda as new president of the National Organization for Women, but she's tackling it with zest and determination.

"Men behaving badly is exactly the problem in this country," she said in a telephone interview. "It's not a diversion — it's at the core of why women are unequal, why they are kept in second-class citizenship."

O'Neill didn't drop the topic after issuing her statements. NOW urged its supporters to rally outside movie theaters in support of victims of rape and sexual assault, and O'Neill wrote to the president of CBS, which airs the "Late Show," requesting a meeting and urging the network to appoint more women to its board of directors.

"We're living in a time when women who put themselves forward as leaders are subjected to vicious misogynistic attacks — it's very analogous to sexual harassment in the workplace," she said in the interview. "The message to other women is, 'Stay in your place.'"

Steve McNair Death Probe Questioned

anthony · 19 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

On July 8, Nashville Police Chief Ronal Serpas told reporters, "We do believe, no questions, that she killed Mr. McNair and then killed herself."

Police announced the ruling after what they called "nearly four days of intensive investigation."

But now those closest to Kazemi -- speaking for the first time -- say they find that ruling impossible to believe.

"I don't think Jenny shot Steve McNair. I don't think jenny shot herself," Lakresia Polite, who was a friend of Kazemi's, told CBS News.

...

Azadeh Kazemi, Jenny's sister, told us, "She wasn't angry enough to do something like that. ... She wouldn't have hurt anyone."

"(She was) very positive ... happy and upbeat all the time," former Kazemi boyfriend Keith Norfleet, observed to CBS News.

Police, however, say Kazemi simply lost it in the last week of her life -- stressed out over mounting bills and her relationship with McNair.

In the July 8 news conference, Serpas said, "She had become very distraught ... unraveling ... messed up ... She was spinning out of control."

Kenya: Single women to easily inherit family property

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A proposed land policy will make it easier for unmarried women to inherit family property, including land.

The National Land Policy also explicitly prohibits one spouse from selling family land without the consent of the other.

In the 2005 national referendum on a proposed constitution, some Kenyans voted against the draft law, arguing that it allowed women to inherit land, contrary to their customs.

Women's rights

However, this time, people will not be given a choice on the matter.

"The government will put in place appropriate legislation to ensure effective protection of women's rights to land and related resources," says the draft policy, which Lands minister James Orengo is expected to table in Parliament next month.

It will further secure "inheritance rights of unmarried daughters in line with the practices of the respective communities" through public awareness campaigns.'

U.S. House OKs National Women's History Museum on National Mall; Senate vote sought

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'While the great women's rights advocates Susan B. Anthony and Elizabeth Cady Stanton (pictured) surely would be proud that the U.S. House of Representatives voted Wednesday to establish a National Women's History Museum in Washington, some, including our art critic, Christopher Knight, worry that the prime federal real estate where it would be built, the National Mall in Washington, is in bad condition and in danger of being overrun by haphazard development.

The bipartisan bill passed on a voice vote; if Senate approval follows, backers of the private, nonprofit museum, aimed at illuminating the social, cultural and historical roles played by American women, would have three years to buy a parcel alongside the mall from the government, and five years to begin construction.'

Opinion: Linda Ray and Brigid Doherty: Investing in women is crucial to economic recovery

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Piece here. Excerpt:

'Poverty does not cause domestic violence. An abuser determined to exercise power and control over his victim causes domestic violence. Certainly, though, the violence experienced by low-income women can make the climb out of poverty impossible.

Poverty, in turn, makes it more difficult to end domestic violence and heal from its effects.

We also know that women closest to the challenges in their community are the ones with the best solutions, which is why funding women is so effective at decreasing problems. Investing in a woman brings security to her as well as her family and her community.

We are at a critical moment for change in our community. By fully realizing the potential of women, we can lift up our economy, provide more — and safer — options to families and move ourselves out of the position of being the third-poorest big city in the nation.'

Australia: Push for establishment of register of women in SMEs to encourage more female directors

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Australian Chamber of Commerce and Industry has recommended to the Federal Government the establishment of a national register of women in SMEs who could be considered candidates for appointments to senior corporate boards.

But Jaye Radisich, chief executive of the Council of Small Businesses of Australia, says the creation of a national register would be a duplication of services already in existence.

"The principle is worthwhile, there is clearly a lack of women on boards in government and in private businesses, and any experienced women in SMEs or other parts of the community should be encouraged to be nominated or nominate themselves for these positions."

"However, it seems that creating a register for this purpose is a duplication of existing services and is an inefficient use of government resources. Women wanting to join boards can do so through organisations such as Woman On Boards, and the already existing government register. To create a separate register is just duplicating existing services.'

AAUW Provides Policy Recommendations for a True 'Woman's Nation'

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'"Women have broken through many barriers in the last 45 years, but there is still much to be done to adequately respond to women's-and men's-changing roles. We only need to look at the stark reality for working women who are simultaneously caring for children or parents to know this is true," said Lisa Maatz, AAUW director of public policy and government relations. "Even though there are laws on the books to promote equity in education and income, it does not necessarily mean that those laws are enforced and that women are being given a fair chance. CAP's timely report and AAUW's policy recommendations help bring those subjects to the forefront as women move forward in true, equal partnership with men."

The report is divided into various chapters, each focusing on its own topic area. AAUW is providing policy recommendations for five chapters, including education and pay equity, because we believe that the laws and regulations about work must be updated to meet the needs of today's workers. In the area of education, AAUW is advocating to strengthen the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA), to improve access to higher education, and to ensure educational equity through Title IX. To advance pay equity, AAUW is focusing on building on the successful passage of the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act by enacting the Paycheck Fairness Act, advancing pay equity within the federal government, and improving and advancing equal opportunity in the workplace. For a detailed listing of policy recommendations, visit www.aauw.org/womansnation.'

Group encourages men to take a stand against violence

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WORTHINGTON — Nearly a third of American women report physical and sexual abuse by a husband or boyfriend at some point in their lives, according to the Violence Against Women Act of 2005.

Though historically the struggle against sexual and domestic violence has been primarily a women's issue, men in Minnesota have the opportunity to take a stand, promoting safe relationships, healthy sexuality and respectful practices and public policies, as part of the Minnesota Men's Action Network.

...

The group found that women wanted men to be involved in helping to stop domestic violence and sexual abuse, but they also found that some efforts to involve men had ended badly. People working with victims were also concerned because the majority of that type of violence was committed by men.

The group needed to find a way to bring men in as good allies, "because I think pretty generally, everybody felt like it would be great to have good-hearted men that we could trust as part of this," Jewell said.'

NY Magazine: 'Would You Circumcise This Baby?'

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision is still, as it has been for decades, one of the most routinely performed surgical procedures in the United States—a million of the operations are performed every year. Yet more Americans are beginning to ask themselves the same question the Moreas did: Why, exactly, are we doing this? Having peaked at a staggering 85 percent in the sixties and seventies, the U.S. newborn-circumcision rate dropped to 65 percent in 1999 and to 56 percent in 2006. Give or take a hiccup here and there, the trend is remarkably clear: Over the past 30 years, the circumcision rate has fallen 30 percent. All evidence suggests that we are nearing the moment (2014?) when the year's crop of circumcised newborns will be in the minority.

Opposition to circumcision isn't new, of course. What is new are the opponents. What was once mostly a fringe movement has been flowing steadily into the mainstream. Today's anti-circumcision crowd are people like the Moreas—people whose religious and ideological passions don't run high either way and who arrive at their decision through a kind of personal cost-benefit analysis involving health concerns, pain, and other factors. At the same time, new evidence that circumcision can help prevent the spread of AIDS, coupled with centuries-old sentiments supporting the practice, are touching off a backlash to the backlash. Lately, arguments pro and con have grown fierce, flaring with the contentious intensity of our time.'

Intact America Urges Pediatricians to Say No to Infant Circumcision

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Oct. 19 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- Leaders of Intact America (www.intactamerica.org) today issued a call to conscience to doctors at the annual meeting of the American Academy of Pediatrics, urging them to say no to neonatal male circumcision.

Medical ethics requires informed consent of the patient before any surgical procedure or invasive treatment is carried out. Parental consent on behalf of a child is generally accepted only if the surgery is necessary to save the life or the health of the child. Because circumcision removes healthy, functional tissue and is not medically necessary, parental consent is inadequate. Intact America placed an ad in today's Washington Post urging pediatricians to say no to circumcision because "the baby, not the parent, is your patient."'

Mexico Latest to Launch Women-Only Taxis

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(AP) Each pink taxi comes with a beauty kit, a GPS system and an alarm button.

The new fleet of 35 cabs in Mexico's colonial city of Puebla are driven exclusively by women and don't stop for men. The cabs cater especially to those tired of leering male drivers.

"Some of the woman who have been on board tell us how male taxi drivers cross the line and try to flirt with them and make inappropriate propositions," said taxi driver Aida Santos, who drives one of the compact, four-door taxis with a tracking device and an alarm button that notifies emergency services. "In the Pink Taxi they won't have that feeling of insecurity, and they feel more relaxed."

Women's rights activists are aghast at the cars' sugary presentation and said the service does not address the root of the harassment problem.

"We are in the 21st century, and they are saying women have continued worrying about beauty and nothing more," said Vianeth Rojas, of the Network for Sexual and Reproductive Rights in Puebla. "They are absolutely not helping eradicate violence against women."'

UK: Inquiry fails to find single trafficker who forced anybody into prostitution

Anonymous · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The UK's biggest ever investigation of sex trafficking failed to find a single person who had forced anybody into prostitution in spite of hundreds of raids on sex workers in a six-month campaign by government departments, specialist agencies and every police force in the country.

The failure has been disclosed by a Guardian investigation which also suggests that the scale of and nature of sex trafficking into the UK has been exaggerated by politicians and media.

Current and former ministers have claimed that thousands of women have been imported into the UK and forced to work as sex slaves, but most of these statements were either based on distortions of quoted sources or fabrications without any source at all.

...

Those figures credited Pentameter with "arresting 528 criminals associated with one of the worst crimes threatening our society". But an internal police analysis of Pentameter, obtained by the Guardian after a lengthy legal struggle, paints a very different picture.

The analysis, produced by the police Human Trafficking Centre in Sheffield and marked "restricted", suggests there was a striking shortage of sex traffickers to be found in spite of six months of effort by all 55 police forces in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland together with the UK Border Agency, the Serious and Organised Crime Agency, the Foreign Office, the Northern Ireland Office, the Scottish government, the Crown Prosecution Service and various NGOs in what was trumpeted as "the largest ever police crackdown on human trafficking".

The analysis reveals that 10 of the 55 police forces never found anyone to arrest. And 122 of the 528 arrests announced by police never happened: they were wrongly recorded either through honest bureaucratic error or apparent deceit by forces trying to chalk up arrests which they had not made. Among the 406 real arrests, more than half of those arrested (230) were women, and most were never implicated in trafficking at all.'

Australia: Working with Boys Building Fine Men Conference 2010 - Call for abstracts

Matt · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Call for abstracts: closes 30 November 2009

When: 15 - 16 July 2010
Where: University of Newcastle, Callaghan, NSW

It is over 10 years since boys education became an important public issue. Despite large, well-funded programs and enormous effort, there has been little change in the overall rates of literacy attainment, school engagement and school retention that are at the centre of concerns about boys. There are also major social issues that differently effect boys and girls well-being, experiences and behaviour, such as binge drinking and bullying including cyber-bullying. Exactly why these issues seem so intractable, who they most effect and how to deal with them effectively are hot and controversial topics. Its time to tackle the controversy head on. Lets talk it out and see if we can come up with some solutions that draw on the enormous and diverse strengths of boys, teachers, schools and their communities.

It's time to tackle the controversy head-on.

Conference Themes:
Boys' motivation and engagement
Literacy
Family-School and Community Partnerships
School Planning Policy implications for boys' education

Call for Abstracts - to submit your abstract visit http://www.newcastle.edu.au/boys

Do you have evidence of success in tackling these issues in your school? Have you conducted research that could inform teacher practice, school programs and policies in this field? Then you should consider attending and presenting at this important conference.

A variety of presentation formats will be used to allow schools to present evidence-based results of practical programs or research into what has worked in schools and also the challenges faced. Proposals for presentations should address one or more of the conference themes.

We encourage creative and innovative submissions that reveal different perspectives in order to expand our collective wisdom and serve as a context for rich and provocative discussion. We particularly welcome presentations that include the perspectives of boys and young men. Proposals should state the main topic area and provide a brief outline of program/project and the results to date. If your proposal is for a 90 minute session, please be specific about how you will allow for interactive participation.

SUBMIT YOUR ABSTRACTS NOW at http://www.newcastle.edu.au/boys and for presentation formats.

For other events co-ordinated by the Family Action Centre visit http://www.newcastle.edu.au/centre/fac

Kind regards

Conference Secretariat
The Family Action Centre
University of Newcastle
Callaghan NSW 2308

UK: Cops DNA boy for throwing small ketchup packet

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A SCHOOLBOY was forced by police to give a DNA sample - for chucking McDonald's ketchup.

Zach Cameron, 15 - a twice-weekly bible student - lobbed the tiny pot of sauce at a girl diner for making "nasty" comments when he took the daughter of his pastor for a burger.

His 14-year-old "victim" complained to cops that it got in her hair - and days later Zach was summoned to a police station where he was also fingerprinted.

Shocked Zach said yesterday: "It was crazy. I know I should not have thrown the sauce but it was only a tiny bit." His outraged mum Dawn, 42, said: "This all started when Zach was defending the daughter of his church pastor who was being abused by this girl.

"He realises now it was a silly thing to do but it wasn't the crime of the century."

She blasted police for doing nothing when SHE was victim of a road rage attack, or when husband James, 43, was assaulted in a pub.'

Balloon Boy Mom: Co-Conspirator or Abused Wife?

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If Richard Heene has become the star of his own reality show centered on what is now believed to be a hoax involving his 6-year-old son and a runaway helium balloon, his wife, Mayumi Heene, has clearly taken the supporting role.

"She's the rock for Richard. She's a saint. I would put her up for sainthood for putting up with Richard," Richard Heene's former business partner Barbara Slusser told ABCNews.com. "She'll wear orange and go to jail with him."
...
Slusser, who worked with Richard Heene on his "Psyience Detectives" Web show and said she became good friends with the Fort Collins, Colo., family until his temper finally drove her away last year, said his wife's Japanese background has kept her in a subservient relationship with her husband and three boys. "She's a highly intelligent woman, a lovely soul. Man, she's gotten herself into a situation with Richard and the kids," Slusser said. "Whatever he says goes. She's basically his slave.
...
Lee Christian, Mayumi Heene's lawyer, said the accounts given by Slusser and others indicate that the woman should not be accused of being a co-conspirator in any alleged hoax.'

'Circumcision: cut the crap'

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In comparing FGM with infant male circumcision, Epstein is seeking to establish a moral equivalency between the two. FGM is not just, as he writes, ‘an article of faith for international development agencies’; it’s also a moral absolute he want to cash in on, even to the point of referring to it by the outmoded term ‘female circumcision’ so that it sounds comparable to male circumcision. If FGM is seen as a violation of the human rights of women and girls and male circumcision is, as Epstein would have it, just the same, then anyone who circumcises their son is violating his human rights.
...
By counterpoising the ‘personal autonomy’ of an infant to the judgment of his parents, Epstein and others who campaign against circumcision reduce the relationship between parents and their sons to one moment; a moment that forever defines the child as victim and the parent as victimiser regardless even of what the boy himself thinks about it later in his life. Once a victim, always a victim.'

You can send Letters to the Editor about this article here.

Investigation reveals final hours of McNair, girlfriend

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- The girlfriend of former NFL quarterback Steve McNair had grown frustrated with their relationship and was struggling with financial difficulties in the days before she killed him and herself in July.

Details of their relationship were revealed in a case summary released by Nashville police Monday.

McNair, 36, and Sahel Kazemi, 20, were found fatally shot in a condominium in downtown Nashville on July 4. Police have since ruled their deaths a murder-suicide.

"My life is just s--- and I should end it," Kazemi said the night before the couple were found dead, according to Sonya New, her shift manager at a Dave & Busters restaurant. New also said Kazemi was not her usual self and seemed down.

Though McNair was a married father of four, he was seeing Kazemi and at least one other woman, Leah Ignagni, according to Nashville police. McNair had spent the night at Ignagni's apartment on July 2, two nights before he was killed, Ignagni told police.'

Japan: Gov't unlikely to sign child custody pact for 2 years

anthony · 20 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The government will need at least two more years before it will sign an international treaty designed to settle child custodial disputes arising from failed international marriages, according to government sources.

In the wake of an increasing number of such cases, the government intends to speed efforts to sign the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. However, relevant legislative measures are unlikely to be submitted to the Diet until 2011 at the earliest, according to the sources.

The treaty stipulates that if a parent takes a child to his or her home country without the other parent's consent after their international marriage has failed, the dispute needs to be settled after the child has been returned to his or her habitual country of residence. The treaty aims to preserve the child custody arrangement that existed before an alleged wrongful removal.

Among the Group of Seven industrialized countries, only Japan has yet to sign the convention, which has resulted in conflict with parties in the treaty's signatory countries. Child custody problems arising from failed international marriages are dealt with under domestic laws in Japan.'

Woman plans to recant sex-torture testimony, former prosecutor says it's irrelevant to convictions

Matt · 21 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHARLESTON, W.Va. -- Seven people pleaded guilty for their part in abusing Megan Williams -- but now Williams says that abuse never happened.

She will hold a press conference Wednesday in Columbus, Ohio, to recant her claims of abuse, attorney Byron L. Potts, who represents Williams, told The Charleston Gazette on Tuesday night.

"She has decided she has been living this lie for approximately two years and she has decided to tell the truth," Potts said. "She fabricated the story and she did this in retaliation because she was having a relationship with one of them."

But former Logan County prosecutor Brian Abraham, who was in charge of the case, said no one ever went to jail because of Williams' statements.

...

According to the admissions of those eventually convicted, Williams was physically and sexually abused. She was beaten repeatedly, held against her will, burned with hot wax, stabbed in the leg, and forced to perform oral sex on at least two defendants.

"Each of them made statements incriminating themselves and others. When you sat back and looked at it in its entirety, there was a pretty clear picture of what had taken place," Abraham said.

"As she got hooked up with her family and with additional handlers joined in, she continued to embellish. But we had her original statements that she gave. For the most part, they were consistent with what the co-defendants said happened."'

Women's Wages Outpaced Men's During Recession

Matt · 22 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The wages of the typical woman who had a job during the worst recession in decades rose faster than those of the typical man, new data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics show.

Over the past two years, the wages of the median woman -- at the statistical middle -- rose 3.2% when adjusted for inflation. Wages of the median man rose 2%. Minority men were particularly hard hit, while minority women and highly educated women of all races did better.

The typical full-time female worker earned $657 a week in the third quarter, the BLS said. The typical man earned $812 a week. Men are more likely to be unemployed, though: The male jobless rate is 11%; for women, it's 8.4%

Economists cautioned that the wage numbers and the increases don't reflect the large numbers of workers who aren't working at all.

There were about 8.2 million fewer full-time wage and salary workers in the third quarter than two years ago; the data don't include part-time or self-employed workers. Low-wage workers are hit disproportionally during recessions, and their absence from the tally could cause median wages to rise even if the typical worker isn't getting a raise.

"This is a situation where everyone's losing but men are losing more, and that's not really a victory for women," said Heidi Shierholz of the Economic Policy Institute, a left-leaning Washington, D.C., think tank.'

New Jersey GOP candidiate hosts sex toy parties: "If I was a man, ...it would be a completely different story."

Matt · 22 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption: "WNYW: One candidate for state office in New Jersey is showing her entrepreneurial spirit hosting sex toy parties. Fifth District Republican Assembly candidate Stepfanie Velez-Gentry is the owner of Nookie Parties LLC and makes a living by organizing adult parties for women and couples."

Less the subject but her last sentence is very telling: "If I was a man and I did this for a living, it would be a completely different story." Note she invokes the Bible on this topic, too. I don't recall anything from the Bible saying that it's OK for anyone to host sex toy parties. I wonder where she gets this idea from?

UK: Cardiff bans street-drinking due to ladette excesses

Matt · 22 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The crackdown is aimed at late night revellers, targeting rowdy hen and stag parties and generally trying to make the streets safer after dark.

Police can use the new powers to confiscate alcohol or arrest anyone who defies them.
...
The Designated Public Place Order - a power introduced by the Home Office - does not make drinking in public illegal.

But police can order people to stop drinking on the streets and can confiscate their alcohol. Anyone failing to comply will be arrested.
...
The measures follow the revelation that drink was responsible for more than half the violent assaults in the city centre in the past 12 months.
...

It comes as experts warned that British schoolgirls are the worst for binge drinking in Europe. The problem is likely to become worse as it becomes more socially acceptable, a conference heard.
...
Professor Ian Gilmore, president of the Royal College of Physicians, said: 'We are more than double our nearest rivals when it comes to women binge drinking. We stand out like sore thumbs.'
...
Many familiar scenes of debauchery were seen, including half-naked women collapsing on the street.'

Two Montana Teacher's Aides Charged With Abuse of Special Needs Students

anthony · 22 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two teacher's aides face felony charges stemming from allegations that they abused special needs students in their Montana middle school classroom.

Julie Ann Parish and Kristina Marie Kallies are each charged with one felony count of assault on a minor and one misdemeanor charge of endangering the welfare of children after the Great Falls Police Department investigated the alleged December abuse of student Garrett Schilling, then 13.

The aides are accused of holding Schilling's head under running water after he fell asleep in class, forcing him to sit in his soiled pants for hours and making him eat his own vomit when he got sick at Great Falls' North Middle School.
...
"They were waterboarding my son," Schilling said, adding that she discovered the alleged abuse in April 2008, when a teacher's aide with whom she is friendly sent her an e-mail warning her of Garrett's teacher's aides.'

Intact America active in Boston and Washington

Matt · 22 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA newsletter:

Intact America was on the ground in Boston and Washington this week, speaking with doctors and decision-makers at conferences held by the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) and the American Academy of Family Physicians (AAFP).

Routine circumcision is ethically wrong – but the AAP and AAFP may become the first medical associations in the world to recommend it for all baby boys.

Many of the doctors we spoke with expressed concern over being pressured to circumcise babies. It's clear that we must continue to hammer home our message: No doctor should remove healthy genital tissue from a baby who cannot consent, and doctors as a group should take an ethical stance against infant circumcision.

Help us send a "call to conscience" to the AAP and AAFP – urge them NOT to recommend infant circumcision.

Man arrested for making coffee naked in own home

anthony · 22 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man was arrested for indecent exposure for being naked in his own kitchen. WTRV reports the circumstances:

29-year-old Eric Williamson says he walked into his kitchen to make coffee. Since he was home alone, he didn't bother getting dressed. A woman and a young boy walking outside saw Williamson through the window and called police. Investigators then arrested Williamson because they believe he wanted people outside to see him naked. But Williamson says that's not the case. He says he should be able to walk around naked in the privacy of his own home. If convicted, Williamson could face up to a year in jail and a $2,000 fine.'

UK: Violent crime by women goes up 80%

Mr VanHuizen · 22 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Violent crime committed by women has soared since Labour came to power, it is revealed today.

The number of women found guilty of murder, vicious assault and other attacks has risen by 81 per cent since 1998.

The massive increase, revealed in the Government's own data, means that women are now being convicted at the rate of more than 200 every week.

Murders have more than doubled, life-threatening woundings are up by a fifth and common assault has soared by 151 per cent.'

'Advice Goddess' Amy Alkon picks another cherry

axolotl · 23 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Anyone who has ever read more than a few of columnist Amy Alkon's 'Advice Goddess' blog posts knows that Amy has a tendency to report on Islamic 'oppression' of women while conveniently forgetting to mention that culture's wrongs committed against men. Case in point:

In her "How's it Hanging" blog post of October 20th, she describes how women in the country of Somalia are being whipped merely for wearing bras. Her post has a link to the original source, in the U.K. Daily Mail (news article here), and a little probing beneath the surface, i.e. clicking on the link, does indeed verify her claim. However, the same article also mentions a few minor examples of problematic treatment of men:

'Al Shabaab, which seeks to impose a strict interpretation of Sharia law over all Somalia, also amputated a foot and a hand each from two young men accused of robbery earlier this month...Abdullahi Hussein, a student in north Mogadishu, said his elder brother was thrown behind bars when he fought back a man who humiliated their sister by asking her to remove her bra...Any man caught without a beard was been (sic) publicly whipped.'

...

In all fairness to The Goddess, she does occasionally point out injustices which affect men and fathers, but apparently, for her, the world of Islam treats only women improperly.

The larger picture here is that since women in the West are not oppressed in any way, feminists and their sympathizers are forced to look ever further, in distance and/or in time, to find signs of oppression of females. And even these turn out to be phantoms (insofar as women are not being targeted based on any wide-spread misogynistic thinking), since attempts to judge other cultures and times from our own modern Western perspectives are nonsensical (i.e., they are completely bogus).

The Girl Effect

el cid · 23 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This showed up on MSN. Its premise is that the world is a mess and the way to fix it is to give money to girls, who will then fix the world. Simple.

One claim they make is that women invest 90% of their money in the family while men invest only 30 to 40%. They also claim that if you give a girl money, she will buy a cow and create more money and resources. I guess she buys it using the 10% left over after she invests 90% in her family. Hm--not quite sure how that all works.

I suspect this represents the new feminism--invest in girls, forget boys, and the world will soon be a veritable paradise.

So why is it that girls or women are never to blame for the current state of the world? If they can do all they claim, why haven't they done so before? And why do they need men's help to do it? Couldn't these wonder beings just do it themselves?

Newsweek's "How the Media Treat Murder" ignores men

Matt · 23 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ten women have been found slain or have been declared missing in Rocky Mount, N.C., in recent years. But the rest of the country hasn't heard about a possible serial killer stalking the young women in this Southern town of 60,000. The latest victim, Elizabeth Jane Smallwood, was identified on Oct. 12. Why have the Rocky Mount homicides been largely ignored?

"When you think about the famous missing-person cases over the last few years it's Chandra Levy, Natalee Holloway, and Laci Peterson," notes Sam Sommers, associate professor of psychology at Tufts University. All these women had a few things in common—they were white, educated, and came from middle-class families. The victims in Rocky Mount—which residents describe as a "typical Southern town," and is about 40 percent white and more than 50 percent black—were different. They were all African-American, many were poor, and some had criminal histories including drug abuse and prostitution.'

All valid observations-- but they leave out the fact that so many men are found murdered or go missing in any given year and are likewise ignored.

Web site for International Men's Day - November 19, 2009

Matt · 23 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The site is at http://www.mensday.ws/. From the 'About' page:

'International Men's Day is an international event celebrated on November 19 every year. It was inaugurated in 1999 in Trinidad and Tobago and was supported by the United Nations, and received in principal support from men's groups in USA, Europe, Africa, Asia, and the Caribbean. Speaking on behalf of UNESCO, Director of Women and Culture of Peace Ms. Ingeborg Breines said of IMD: “This is an excellent idea and would give some gender balance.” She added that UNESCO was looking forward to cooperating with IMD organisers.

The objectives of celebrating an International Men's Day include focusing on men's and boy's health, improving gender relations, promoting gender equality, and highlighting positive male role models. It is an occasion for men to highlight discrimination against them and to celebrate their achievements and contributions, in particular for their contributions to community, family, marriage, and child care.'

Canada: The problem with the Pink Book

Matt · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Liberal Women's Caucus has released their 40-page Pink Book, Volume III.

...Keen political social observers nearly fell over in shock at the caucus's revolutionary recommendation that Canadian women deserve a "compassionate Canada" where women can achieve "economic and social equality."
...
...The Pink Book III is rife with debunked statistics -for example, that old chestnut about women earning 70% of what men make; we know that figure mainly reflects self-selection out of areas of higher personal demand so that women can spend more time with their children.

As for caregiving: Yes, women do more caregiving for those they love and in whose well-being they are highly invested. There is personal reward in the sacrifice. And men do more fighting and dying in Afghanistan and saving people in burning buildings, but somehow we don't hear so much about those crummy jobs whose only reward is honour fulfilled and pride in supporting one's family.'

Bermuda: Woman's false rape claim costs her $7,000 with no jail time

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who sparked a $6,000 police investigation after pretending she was raped in her home by two masked intruders was ordered to pay the full cost of the inquiry yesterday.

Michelle Lee Carreiro, of Cut Road, St. George's, appeared at Magistrates' Court where she pleaded guilty to wilfully and knowingly making the false report to Police last week.

Senior Magistrate Archibald Warner told her she could have been jailed for six months but instead he fined her $1,000 plus $6,000 reparation to Bermuda Police Service.

The 22-year-old gave detectives a 19-page statement about the fabricated October 15 attack but on Wednesday she admitted to officers at Southside Police Station that she made up the whole thing.'

Girl, 14, arrested for false rape report

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 14-year-old female juvenile was arrested last Friday for filing a false police report in a rape case, Harrison Police Capt. Paul Woodruff said.

Woodruff said the girl had earlier this year told police that she'd been raped by a man in his early 20s, going so far as identifying the suspect by name.

When the suspect was brought in for an interview, he denied the allegation. So, police collected a DNA sample from him to be compared with DNA evidence collected from a medical examination of the girl immediately following the alleged incident.
...
The girl was arrested for felony filing a false police report and released to her mother, he said.'

Penn State running back Austin Scott sues following dropped rape case

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The attorney of former Penn State running back Austin Scott has filed suit against the university, Penn State Police and Centre County on Tuesday, claiming a dropped rape case against him damaged a potential NFL career.

Prosecutors dropped rape, sexual assault, simple assault and indecent assault charges against Scott in April 2008, saying it would be unlikely to convince a jury to convict if revelations from the woman's past were admissible in court.

The charges stemmed from an October 2007 incident in which a woman reported to authorities that Scott had sexually assaulted her at his on-campus residence. Scott's lawyers, who maintained that the encounter was consensual, said the woman had made a false rape accusation in the past, making her claim against Scott less credible.

Now, Scott wants $300,000 in total compensation from the university, Penn State Police, the county, the woman who said he raped her, Centre County District Attorney Michael Madeira, former Assistant District Attorney Lance Marshall, Penn State Chief of Police Stephen Shelow, Assistant Chief of Police Thomas Sowerby, three police officers and two detectives, according to court documents.'

UK: Traffic warden fails to get damages for false rape claim

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A FORMER Hampshire traffic warden cleared of rape has failed in a new legal bid to bring a £300,000 damages claim against his accuser for malicious prosecution.

Lawyers for Anthony Hunt, 66, had told three civil appeal judges that he wanted to “vindicate his reputation” by obtaining a judgment against the woman, referred to as AB, who had asked him into her home for a cup of tea and, he claimed, consented to sex.

But the Court of Appeal ruled that AB could not be sued for malicious prosecution as she was not “the prosecutor”.

She had not gone straight to the police and had not made it clear that she wanted Mr Hunt prosecuted – and even if she had done so, the intervention of the police and Crown Prosecution Service would have made them the prosecutors and not her.'

MND: The Shriver Report Proclaims a New Day, but Anti-Male Bias Remains the Same

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Liberal feminists have seized on the massive loss of jobs held by men to declare that "A Woman's Nation Changes Everything." That in fact is the title of "The Shriver Report," whose raison d'être is the fact that men have lost so many jobs that women have become almost half the labor force. (If anyone out there actually believed them when feminists claimed they were sorry, truly sorry about the plight of male workers in this recession, now you know.)

Maria Shriver, California's First Lady, has gotten together a passel of like-minded people and they've written a report which is really a book. And because it's a book, I haven't yet read the whole thing, so I'll have to blog about it piecemeal.

So here's the blog about the Executive Summary.

The Executive Summary is by Economists Heather Boushey and Ann O'Leary, who right off the bat inform us that "for the first time in our nation's history, women are half of all U.S. workers." Well, I suppose I shouldn't quibble, but they are not now half of all U.S. workers. About a percentage point still separates the two sexes and that means about 1.4 million workers.

Worse, they seem to think that American history began in the 1960s. It seems not to have occurred to Boushey and O'Leary that, as late as 1930, the majority of Americans lived on farms and that women very much worked on those farms. Nor does it occur to them that the vast majority of non-upper-class women have always worked at something.'

New Zealand: Alcohol and drugs blamed for false rape report

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An out-of-control young New Plymouth woman sentenced to jail whooped and leapt noisily down the stairs to the court cells, leaving her mother sobbing in court.

In the New Plymouth District Court on Thursday, Danielle Coombe, 18, of New Plymouth, admitted a series of offences including a false rape claim, resisting police and failing to appear for a court hearing earlier in the month.
...
Coombe had made an allegation of sexual abuse to police but had no memory of the night.
...
Coombe was sentenced to three months in jail, ordered to pay $60 reparation for theft and her fines of $675 were remitted.'

Journalists and students dissect Hofstra rape hoax

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Student journalists recently got an inside look at the coverage of the false rape incident that occurred on the University campus a few weeks ago.

At an event hosted by professors Peter Goodman and Geoffrey Roth of the Department of Journalism, Media Studies and Public Relations last Thursday evening, the New York Post's Kieran Crowley, WCBS-TV's Jennifer McLogan and Carol D'Auria of 1010 WINS spoke to students about the various approaches they took to cover the story and what they felt could have been done differently.
...
McLogan said that from the start, it was her instinct to question the accusation. "The police were sure of the rape," McLogan said, "but I said to myself, I hope this girl's credible."

She gave more personal insight on her perspective while covering the story. "We want to proceed cautiously," she said. "I'm a mom with three kids in college; two girls and a boy. I wouldn't want my daughters to be the victim, but I wouldn't want my son railroaded either."

D'Auria agreed with McLogan's notion that caution is necessary when covering such sensitive subject matter, but was pessimistic. "We need to move slower," she said, "but I don't see that happening."'

Wrongfully convicted of rape, man joins prison advisers

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'SPRINGFIELD, Ill. - A wrongfully convicted man has been appointed to a board that advises the Illinois Department of Corrections.

Wilder “Kendric” Berry of Chicago is among members appointed this week to the Adult Advisory Board by Gov. Pat Quinn.

The Center for Wrongful Convictions at Northwestern University says Berry went to prison because of a false rape accusation. Released and exonerated, he now works as a paralegal at a Chicago law firm.

The board advises the department on policies and programs affecting people in prison and on parole. Its other members include a suburban police chief, a county sheriff and a probation officer.

Illinois Department of Corrections Director Michael Randle says he welcomes the newly appointed members of the board.'

Female California teacher accused of 'sex' with student

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SANTA ANA, California – A female teacher who is alleged to have had sex with a male student in her school and then vandalized his car will be arraigned on Monday.

Naomi Perez, 33, of Brea, is charged with one felony count each of unlawful sexual intercourse, oral copulation of a minor, sexual penetration by foreign object of a minor, and one misdemeanor count of vandalism, said a statement by the Orange Country District Attorney's office.

Perez is accused of meeting 17-year-old student John Doe while working as a teacher at Saddleback High School in Santa Ana.

Between June 1, 2007, and Aug. 27, 2007, Perez is accused of having an unlawful relationship with the victim on multiple occasions in her Brea home.

Two years after the end of the relationship, Perez is accused of vandalizing the victim's car while it was parked outside of a family member's home by scratching and denting the vehicle.'

LA Times: In Naples' mob, there's no glass ceiling

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For decades, women have occupied a full range of roles within the Neapolitan crime syndicate, from bodyguard to boss, authorities say. In Naples, women are traditionally responsible for the finances within the household. They run the accounts and, according to anti-mafia investigators, have taken a major part in money laundering, cutting up drug deliveries for distribution and running numbers.

But wives and mothers have also been among the perpetrators of some of the worst violence in Naples, with the emancipation of women in Neapolitan society over recent decades mirrored inside the secretive world of the Camorra.
...
"Today women appear on all of the multiple arrest warrants that we issue," she said. "It's more like we are shedding light on a phenomenon that was always there."

The women operating in the Camorra crime syndicate today have some impressive role models to look back on. The first woman to be charged with "mafia association" was a Neapolitan, Anna Mazza, about a decade ago. The murder of her husband, Gennaro Moccia, gave her the nickname, the "Camorra Widow," and put the top job within her reach. She grabbed for it. She became the undisputed leader of her clan, moving its activities toward the lucrative construction industry and dramatically increasing its power.'

Israel: Ashkelon film festival to screen musical to women-only audience

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An American film that was rejected at last year's Jerusalem Film Festival because the Orthodox filmmaker demanded that it be screened exclusively in front of women will make its Israel premiere at next week's Jewish Eye World Jewish Film Festival in Ashkelon.

The musical, "A Light for Greytowers," was made by a group of Orthodox women who didn't want men to see them dancing or singing out of modesty. The film was originally scheduled to be shown at the Jerusalem Cinematheque last December but festival organizers canceled after they couldn't agree with the filmmaker over screening arrangements. "The 'women-only' issue definitely scared off other festivals interested in including the film," said Los Angeles-based Robin Garbose, adding the Ashkelon festival organizers contacted her after reading about it. "Upon submission, I clearly stated the film must be marketed to women only," she continued, saying the organizers almost got cold feet after they didn't seem to find a suitable venue for the screening.'

UK: David Cameron to insist on women-only shortlists

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'David Cameron provoked a furious row with Tory backbenchers and grassroots members yesterday after reversing his party's opposition to all-women shortlists in a bid to boost the number of female Conservative MPs.

Only Labour has opted for all-women shortlists at previous elections, with past Conservative leaders opposing them as undemocratic. Mr Cameron's U-turn will see all-women shortlists imposed on some constituencies selecting their candidates in the New Year. Aides to Mr Cameron have said he has done all he can to promote women MPs on to the frontbench but privately admit that he is hampered by the fact that the party only has 19 sitting female MPs. That number would rise to 60 should the party win a majority at the next election, still only one fifth of its seats.
...
The announcement immediately saw a backlash from Tory backbenchers and grassroots members of the party. Anne Widdecombe, a staunch critic of the all-women shortlists, said that it would make some female MPs feel like second-class citizens.

"Women, no matter what their circumstances, must get to Westminster on their own merits and be able to know that when they're sitting in the House of Commons," she said.'

Mona Charen: 'Maria Shriver Misses the Point'

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some of what's in this report is a recycling of long-discredited data. Heather Boushey, for example, regurgitates the statistic that women only earn 77 cents on the dollar compared with men. But as the Hudson Institute's Diana Furchtgott-Roth and other economists have shown, this number conceals more than it reveals. It is only true on average. But when you begin to compare like with like, the discrepancies narrow considerably. Comparing men and women who both work 40 hours per week, for example, reduces the pay gap by 10 cents per hour. You have to look carefully at what is being compared. Among workers labeled "full time," hours worked by men tend to exceed hours worked by women. When men and women performing the same job are compared -- whether supermarket checker or first-year associate at a law firm -- the pay gap nearly disappears.'

"A Woman's Nation" declares in one breath that the "war of the sexes is over" but in the next launches a broadside about women's educational opportunities. It requires some ingenuity to complain that women are educationally shortchanged, when, as even the chapter's author, Mary Ann Mason, acknowledges, "Women today receive 62 percent of college associate's degrees, 57 percent of bachelor's degrees, 60 percent of all master's degrees, half of all professional degrees (law and medicine) and just under half of all Ph.D.s." But there is a problem lurking beneath the surface of this evident success. Though they dominate higher education, too many women are still choosing "traditional female majors" like education, health care (including nursing), and psychology.'

UK: Are women paying for sexism laws?

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ms Banyard says that, despite having equal pay rights enshrined in law since the 1970s, a pay gap still exists and the law is not strong enough.

"As a result, companies are not required to check that they are paying equally, so it's absolutely crucial we have mandatory pay audits," she adds.

"The Equality Bill currently going through Parliament is a once-in-a-generation opportunity to reform equal pay law we cannot afford to miss."

Yet Ms Pease has urged MPs not to wade further into the issue, as legislation now meant some employers believed hiring a woman was a "nightmare".

Long maternity leave and fears of costly discrimination action were just two of the issues Ms Pease highlighted as factors that deterred firms from taking on women.'

Australia: Shared parenting laws on way out

anthony · 24 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE Rudd government is planning to roll back the controversial shared parenting law passed in the final term of the Howard government, enraging men's groups, which say the laws have finally given them access to their children after separation.

Six inquiries into the shared parenting laws are now under way, which men's groups have interpreted as a sure sign that change is under way, too.

In a message to supporters, Sue Price of the Men's Rights Agency, has described the planned rollback as the "most sustained and concerted attack" on shared parenting that she has seen in 15 years.

Ms Price said the laws did no more than encourage "reasonable contact between perfectly good fathers and their children" and she is urging supporters to "convince the Rudd government that there are a million votes at stake" if they roll back the shared parenting changes.

"War has been declared and now is the time to protest the changes," Ms Price said, adding that planned changes were an attempt to "deny children shared parenting" and "an attack on a child's right to be loved and cared for by a dad on a shared-care, equal basis".'

Circumcision attitude poll

Anonymous · 26 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Circumcision is a complex issue revolving around ethics, sex, medicine, law, religion, culture, and human rights. Opinions about rights and decision-making are not known. This survey will help reveal important attitudes concerning who has the right to circumcise infant boys. Please participate in this short survey.

India: Husbands allege misuse of Domestic Violence Act arindamp · 26 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men from across the city wore badges that read ‘Husband not an ATM machine’, ‘Alimony kills her real potential’ and the like on Monday to mark the third anniversary of the Protection of Women against Domestic Violence Act (PWDVA) coming into force here.

These men were victims of the misuse of laws like the PWDVA, section 498A of the Indian Penal Code (husband or relative of husband subjecting a woman to cruelty), section 125 of the Criminal Procedures Code (maintenance of wives, children) and child custody laws, which, they claimed, were heavily biased in favour of women.

Jinesh Zaveri, a member of the Indian Family Foundation (IFF) said, “Men who complain about physical or verbal violence inflicted by their wives are generally portrayed as cartoons. It needs to be understood that a huge number of men in the country has been caught in the web of false cases registered by their wives under various laws.”'

The Pink House

Matt · 27 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Yep, read it here. Now I am all about raising awareness of any number of diseases and the need to find cures. I just find it curious that given the actual numbers on the topic of dollars spent v. return in terms of human lives saved, there are many examples of diseases killing people of both sexes at higher rates than breast cancer but yet get a lot less attention.

Will we see a purple ribbon adorning the front of this, the nation's National Mansion, for prostate cancer awareness one fine day, I wonder? One thing's for sure, there is a lot of money changing hands in this whole BCA thing and whoever is doing the promotional work must be raking it in. I see pink ribbons all over everything these days and one would be naive to think the pot isn't getting split in the back room. Excerpt:

'The Obama administration paid tribute to Breast Cancer Awareness Month in a big way Monday, as workers hoisted a massive pink ribbon in the front of the White House.

The ribbon, which runs the length of the columns in front of the presidential residence, was raised after first lady Michelle Obama spoke at a breast cancer awareness event Friday.

Standing by breast cancer survivors, she tied the fight against breast cancer to the administration's effort to overhaul the health care system.

"It's a system that only adds to the fear and stress that already comes with the disease," she said.

Breast cancer awareness is one of the most widely recognized public health campaigns, with the NFL holding "breast cancer awareness games" this month during which players donned pink pins.'

Tyra Banks Discusses Women Who Beat Men

anthony · 27 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I was watching some television last night and couldn't believe the subject on the Tyra Bank's show. A mainstream program actually discussed women who abuse men. This is a big deal considering women are her main demographic. Excerpt from Tyra Banks website here:

'In the past, men have been the ones under fire for being abusive in relationships. Now, as more and more victims of domestic abuse are speaking out, a new trend in the violence is surfacing. We're talking to women who've admitted to hitting, punching, even kicking (in stilettos) their boyfriends and husbands.'

Make sure you check out the comment section! If you want to show some appreciation, Tyra can be reached at http://www.tyrabanks.com/contactus

Debra LaFave seeking contact with her kids

anthony · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TAMPA, Fla. — A former Florida teacher who had sex with a 14-year-old student wants to be allowed supervised contact with the children of her relatives and friends.

Former Tampa-area teacher Debra LaFave is serving seven years probation, and one of the conditions is a ban on contact with children. Her motion to ease that restriction is expected to be heard in court Thursday.

Lafave served more than 2 1/2 years of house arrest before being freed last year. She pleaded guilty in 2006 to two counts of lewd and lascivious battery for having sex with the boy in a classroom and her home.'

Glenn Sacks: Shriver Report Does Hatchet Job on Fathers, Family Court Reform Movement

Matt · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Shriver Report has a section about men and fathers called "Has a Man's World Become a Woman's Nation?" written by feminist sociologist Michael Kimmel.
...
Kimmel ignores altogether the many legal, social and cultural barriers between fathers and children. For Kimmel, the separation of children from fathers is all about men's "irresponsibility." If men just cared about their children, so the story goes, all would be well. There are some men who avoid their parental responsibilities. Some women do, too. But Kimmel never mentions the crucial issues today's fathers face. These include: maternal gatekeeping; visitation interference; the use of fraudulent restraining orders as a tool to separate fathers from their children in divorce/custody; unrealistic child support orders; and parental alienation.
...

Martha Burk, the Chair of the National Council of Women's Organizations who led the effort to open the Augusta National Golf Club to women, concurs. Burk, who was named Ms. Magazine Woman of the Year in 2003, explains that shared parenting provides women with greater economic freedoms and opportunities. She calls the current child custody system "mother ownership of children" and says that under this "harmful societal norm" judges "mindlessly award [sole] custody to the mother," to the detriment of all parties.

Kimmel denigrates the importance of fathers, writing that the idea that fatherlessness harms children is based on "a catalog of specious correlations masquerading as causal arguments." This ignores a mountain of responsible research that shows beyond a doubt the value of fathers to children, including that of Sarah McLanahan, Rebekah Levine Coley, Irwin Garfinkel, Kathryn Edin, Ross Parke, Armin Brott, Ronald Mincey, and numerous others.'

Phyllis Schlafly: Time again for the feminists' rant

anthony · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even so, the feminists demanded that the Obama administration give half the stimulus jobs to women rather than to the shovel-ready work that was the reason for passing the stimulus funds. Whatever the feminists demand from the Democrats they get, and the stimulus money was directed to jobs in education, health care and social services.

So what are the feminists complaining about? They want the taxpayers to provide high-quality day care and paid family leave, to pass laws to prohibit employers from ordering women to work overtime (as men are often required to do) and probably to force men to assume half the household and baby-care duties.
...
Women won't be happy as long as they believe the false slogan (repeated in most of these current articles) that women make only 77 cents on the dollar compared to men. The Equal Pay Law was passed in 1963, but it requires only equal pay for equal work, and women in the labor force don't work nearly as many hours per week as men do.'

Teen Girl Charged in 9-Year-Old's Murder

Matt · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The police had already searched the area, but the body had been "very well concealed," White told The Associated Press. The suspect, a minor, will appear in a concealed court hearing today to determine whether she will be held behind bars or released into her family's custody until the next hearing.

"It will be the judge's obligation to look at the individual and look at her, excuse me, look at the juvenile's circumstances," said Samantha Green of Cole County Juvenile Detention.
...
"I would ask that they wait, that they listen to the facts as they come out and not judge quickly," Valentine said. "Learn about this person, learn about this child. You're dealing with a child."'

I agree one shouldn't rush to judgment. However I doubt there'd be this kind of call to circumspection from both the suspect's lawyer AND law enforcement if the suspect were a boy.

Graves Identified at Boys Reform School

Matt · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A five-month Florida state investigation has found no evidence to support claims by former students of a state boys reform school that students were killed by abusive staff members or that the school covered up student deaths.
...
The state investigation found that most of the 31 graves were filled with teens or staff who died in a 1914 dormitory fire, from an influenza epidemic or from other accidents. One student was murdered by a group of other students in 1944 after he learned of an escape plan, the report said. Five people, who were buried between 1919 and 1925, had no listed cause of death, the investigation found.
...
But, several former students said they were not convinced by the report. One man who says he buried a friend of his when they were both at the school in the 1950s said he does not believe that school officials were not involved in the boy's death.
...
Officials at the school and the state Department of Juvenile Justice have not disputed that some abuse took place and recently dedicated a memorial to the White House Boys.

"The beatings were ungodly. I thought they were going to kill me," Roger Kiser, who said he was sent to the reform school from an orphanage in late 1958, said in an earlier interview with ABC News. "They would beat you for anything."'

MSN: Health care fight becomes a battle of the sexes

Matt · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Pennsylvania home health care company Linda Bettinazzi runs is charged about $6,800 per worker for health insurance – $2,000 more than the national average for single coverage. One reason: nearly every one of her 175 employees is a woman.

Insurers say women under the age of 55 cost more to cover because they use more health services, and not just for maternal and infant care. But Bettinazzi, the president and CEO of Visiting Nurse Association of Indiana County, believes there's something inherently wrong in charging her company more because it hires a lot of women.
...
Gender rating is the norm today, part of a complex formula of risk factors — including health history and age — insurers say has been necessary to fairly price policies. But advocacy groups for women argue that charging more for women than men is discriminatory and should be illegal.'

OK, so why aren't they complaining that men under 25 get charged more for car insurance on average than women under 25, all other factors being equal? Same thing, different sexes. And just how does the health carriers' claim that women under 55 use more health care resources than men in the same age group jibe with the feminist assertion that women are getting the short end of the stick in terms of access to health care? Answer: It doesn't.

NOW: Women and Girls live in fear of 'Vicious Hate Crimes' and 'Hate Filled Violence'

anthony · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This legislation is especially important for the girls and women of this nation because it extends existing federal hate crimes laws beyond the narrow scope of protected federal activities and also includes -- for the first time -- violent crimes committed on the basis of actual or perceived gender, sexual orientation, disability and gender identity. Women know first hand how vicious crimes of sexual and hate-filled violence can affect our lives, especially if local law enforcement is ill-equipped to investigate and prosecute these crimes. We know that hate crimes are more than individual assaults -- they send shock waves and fear throughout a whole community. Girls' and women's lives are restricted and often ruined by the fear as well as the reality of vicious hate crimes, be they based on our religion, race, gender identity or just because we are women.'

Lehigh University student waives hearing, faces trial for alleged false rape report

anthony · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 19-year-old Lehigh University student who allegedly made a false report about being raped by a campus police officer waived a preliminary hearing today and could stand trial.

Brielynne Neumann, of Shrewsbury, Mass., was lying in the center of Parkhill Street at 11:49 p.m. Sept. 3 when Bethlehem police approached her, according to court records. She identified herself as Brei Scano and gave a fake date of birth, records say.

The lie backfired when police, who claim she was intoxicated, took her to her sorority house to verify her identity, records say. Neumann then told officers she had been raped the day before by a man who claimed to be a Lehigh University police officer, records say.'

UK: Circumcision 'left boys in agony'

anthony · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A doctor offering £150 circumcisions at his private clinic in Essex left young boys in agonising pain, a disciplinary panel has heard.

Dr Aziz Chaudry allegedly did not adequately ensure young boys were fully anaesthetised, The General Medical Council (GMC) was told.

He is also accused of not fully informing the families of the processes involved at his clinic in Clacton.

Dr Chaudry admits failures over notekeeping but denies misconduct.

The hearing was told young boys were restrained in pain.

One boy's family was told he may need plastic surgery to correct damage, the GMC's Fitness to Practise Panel was told. Another boy, aged four, was taken to hospital after the operation.'

World Congress of Families Counters Feminist Disinformation on UN Resolution Supporting 'Traditional Values'

anthony · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Oct. 26 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- World Congress of Families Managing Director Larry Jacobs decried what he called "feminist disinformation" on a resolution of the United Nations Human Rights Council affirming "traditional values." The resolution also calls for a UN workshop in 2010 to examine the way traditional values are the foundation for human rights: http://ap.ohchr.org/documents/sdpage_e.aspx?b=10&se=100&t=4.

Sponsored by the Russian Federation, the resolution was passed by a vote of 26 to 15, with 6 abstentions. Just like the Amsterdam Declaration adopted by World Congress of Families (http://www.worldcongress.org/WCF5/wcf5.dec.htm) , the resolution reaffirms the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.
...
Jacobs responded: "Only radical feminists would consider honor killings and female genital mutilation to be 'traditional values.' These odious practices of violence are confined to a few societies worldwide, and should continue to be eradicated."'

UK: Women get labour vote

anthony · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Labour Party bosses are 'unlikely' to overturn plans to impose women-only candidates on Wigan's two parliamentary seats.

According to a national party source such an about-face would be very unusual.

He said: "The National Executive Committee will always listen to the views of constituency parties but it would be highly, highly unusual for such a decision to be overturned at this stage.

"In fact I have only known it once in the last 10 years."

Members of the Makerfield party have voted to reject the female shortlists three days after the Wigan party took the same decision.

The two MPs, Ian McCartney and Neil Turner, have both announced they will stand down at the next election.'

Canada: 'For boys, sugar and spice aren't nice'

anthony · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's a well-researched phenomenon: Boys tend to underachieve in school, while a higher proportion of girls successfully make their way to university. (Female students are a now majority in most faculties.) And this might have to do, at least in part, with the fact our schools are made for girls.

Parents of boys have been complaining for a long time about the way their sons are treated within the school system. Most teachers are female and quite naturally they choose books that interest girls. "My son has been fed a regular diet of novels about emotions and relationships, instead of books dealing with sport and action," says a colleague of mine. Boys are expected to behave like girls: They shouldn't yell, they shouldn't jostle, they should sit still in class. Moreover, they should express their emotions verbally, a mode of communication that comes naturally to girls but with which many boys are not at ease. And, of course, in this overly female world, there are too few male role models for boys who don't have one at home.'

Czech Republic: Police to prosecute Vietnamese over false paternity

anthony · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Brno, South Moravia, Oct 1 (CTK) - Czech foreigner police recently uncovered in Brno the case of false paternity in which a Vietnamese persuaded a Czech family to register him on the birth certificate as the father of their child for 25,000 crowns, police spokeswoman Roman Pittner told CTK Thursday.

The Vietnamese later obtained a residence permit in the Czech Republic on the basis of the forged birth certificate.

The parents of the child and the Vietnamese face up to three years in prison if found guilty.

"Although the foreigner police come across such cases rarely, it is very difficult to prove that such a crime was committed," Pittner said.

The fraud was uncovered when the child's mother asked for an increase in her welfare benefits. After being advised to address the father of her child for help she revealed that she lied about the real father and had already spent the money she received for her lie.'

Duct tape wielder charged with false imprisonment and child abuse

anthony · 28 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A secretary at Palmer Elementary School in Denver has been charged with false imprisonment and misdemeanor child abuse after she bound a misbehaving 6-year-old student's wrists with duct tape and applied the tape to his mouth as well. Jennifer Carter, 45, has been placed on administrative leave and the Denver Public School District has indicated she will be fired for her actions.

The incident happened last Wednesday, and the first grader's mother, Ashlye Tenner, expressed concern that a report had not been made about the incident until she pushed for it. On Thursday, the school sent a letter to parents notifying them of the situation.

The child had been sent to the principal's office for acting out in class; when the principal saw the duct-taped child, he immediately told Carter to remove it.'

RADAR ALERT: Tell Senators to Stop the Civil Rights Travesty!

Matt · 29 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

"Unless you have overwhelming evidence to the contrary, arrest the male."

That's the grim reality in dozens of states with DV mandatory arrest and predominant aggressor policies on the books. These laws were passed thanks to the 1994 and 2000 versions of the Violence Against Women Act, which paid millions of $$$ to states to establish and enforce mandatory arrest policies.

This week, we are asking you to take 5 minutes of your time to contact Senators Patrick Leahy and Jeff Sessions of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Tell them:

- Mandatory arrest laws are now responsible for the biggest roll-back in civil liberties since the Jim Crow era.[1]
- State mandatory arrest laws were passed thanks to financial inducements in the 1994 and 2000 versions of the Violence Against Women Act.
- Even though the 2005 version of VAWA wisely shifted from a "mandatory" to a "pro" arrest position, not a single state has repealed its mandatory arrest policies.
- The 2010 reauthorization of VAWA needs to include strong financial incentives to states to repeal their unconstitutional mandatory arrest policies.

This Is Your Brain Without Dad

Matt · 29 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Conventional wisdom holds that two parents are better than one. Scientists are now finding that growing up without a father actually changes the way your brain develops.

German biologist Anna Katharina Braun and others are conducting research on animals that are typically raised by two parents, in the hopes of better understanding the impact on humans of being raised by a single parent. Dr. Braun's work focuses on degus, small rodents related to guinea pigs and chinchillas, because mother and father degus naturally raise their babies together.

When deprived of their father, the degu pups exhibit both short- and long-term changes in nerve-cell growth in different regions of the brain. Dr. Braun, director of the Institute of Biology at Otto von Guericke University in Magdeburg, and her colleagues are also looking at how these physical changes affect offspring behavior.

Their preliminary analysis indicates that fatherless degu pups exhibit more aggressive and impulsive behavior than pups raised by two parents.
...
Dr. Braun's group found that at 21 days, the fatherless animals had less dense dendritic spines compared to animals raised by both parents, though they "caught up" by day 90. However, the length of some types of dendrites was significantly shorter in some parts of the brain, even in adulthood, in fatherless animals.

"It just shows that parents are leaving footprints on the brain of their kids," says Dr. Braun, 54 years old.

The neuronal differences were observed in a part of the brain called the amygdala, which is related to emotional responses and fear, and the orbitofrontal cortex, or OFC, the brain's decision-making center.
...
The report, which sparked some controversy when it was released in September, found that children in single-parent households have an increased risk of delinquency and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, or ADHD, as well as poorer scholastic performance.'

Canada: CHP suggests maintaining small handgun registration "especially for women"

Matt · 29 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'The CHP (ed.: hyperlink added) will maintain the registration of handguns but would restore the right of Canadians, especially women, to own .32 and .25 calibre weapons of barrel lengths shorter than 4.1 inches. Small handguns in the hands of women would do much to end the fear they currently experience because of violent ex-partners.

The intent of "especially women" was not to suggest that domestic violence is primarily perpetrated by men against women. As you correctly point out, statistics show that men and women are about equal in abuse. However, they also show that more serious injury and death are generally men assaulting women.

I've quoted below from a Macleans article from July 2006 entitled "Breakup Blast".

Domestic violence goes across all relationships. But serious injury and death -- it's men stalking and killing women," says Peter Jaffe, a professor at the University of Western Ontario and academic director of the Centre for Research on Violence Against Women and Children in London.'

Debra Lafave Allowed Contact With Children

anthony · 29 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'TAMPA, Fla. — A judge has allowed former teacher and sex offender Debra Lafave to have contact with the children of family and friends.

Lafave is the former middle-school teacher who pleaded guilty to having sex with a 14-year-old boy.

She served 2 1/2 years of house arrest but is still on sex-offender probation.

After a hearing Thursday, Circuit Judge Wayne Timmerman said that because Lafave has completed sex-offender therapy, state law allows her "appropriate" unsupervised contact with minors. Prosecutors did not object.

Lafave still isn't allowed to live near a school or work with children.

Her attorney called it "a good step forward." Lafave did not comment.'

B.C. police seek serial groin-kicker after series of attacks

Mr VanHuizen · 29 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LANGLEY, B.C. -- Police in Langley are investigating after a woman kicked a man in the groin so hard he lost a testicle -- the latest in a series of similar assaults.

"I just want to know what her problem is," victim Anthony Clark, 22, said this week. "People like her shouldn't be on the streets."

Mr. Clark was walking in the Brookswood area of Langley in early September when he passed his assailant on the sidewalk.

"I was looking down and then I took a passing glance and saw her walk up to me," he said.

That's when the young woman inexplicably kicked him in the groin hard enough to send one of his testicles into his abdomen.'

Report: Date-rape drink spiking 'an urban legend'

anthony · 30 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A study of more than 200 students revealed many wrongly blamed the effects of a "bad night out" on date-rape drugs, when they had just drunk excessively.

Many are in "active denial" that drinking large amounts of alcohol can leave them "incoherent and incapacitated", the Kent University researchers concluded.

Young women's fears about date-rape drugs are so ingrained that students mistakenly think it is a more important factor in sexual assault than being drunk, taking drugs or walking alone at night.

The study, published in the British Journal of Criminology, found three-quarters of students identified drink spiking as an important risk – more than alcohol or drugs.'

More than half said they knew someone whose drink had been spiked.

But despite popular beliefs, police have found no evidence that rape victims are commonly drugged with such substances, the researchers said.

Dr Adam Burgess from the university's School of Social Policy, Sociology and Social Research, said: "Young women appear to be displacing their anxieties about the consequences of consuming what is in the bottle on to rumours of what could be put there by someone else.'

Watch MSNBC discuss date rape drugs with NOW president, Terry O'Neil.

Jury hears boy, 7, describe how mother attacked him and his brother

anthony · 30 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A mother's plot to blame a stranger for killing her sons went awry when one of the boys survived and told police how Michelle Kehoe cut his throat, then moved on to his younger brother, an Iowa prosecutor said Thursday.

Police found the 7-year-old covered in dried blood in the family van the morning of October 27, 2008, in a secluded area near a pond east of Littleton. Beside the van, his 2-year-old brother lay dead, his throat also slashed.

"She cut me," the boy said in a high-pitched voice in an audio recording that was played Thursday in Kehoe's first-degree murder trial.

Kehoe, of Coralville, Iowa, has pleaded not guilty to charges of first-degree murder, attempted murder and child endangerment causing serious injury. Before the trial, her lawyers filed a notice of intent to present an insanity defense, according to court records.'

Woman Arrested For Filing False Alleged Rape Report

anthony · 30 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Angela Blackburn, 32, accused four young men of raping her at a party last month. Now she faces a felony charge of her own. Blackburn was arrested by Ozark Police Tuesday afternoon for filing a false police report.

"It took a long time," Ashley Wheeler told KFSM. "They had us locked up in no time at all." Wheeler is one of four men police say was falsely accused of rape. He and his friends are glad their accuser is now under arrest.

"A little bit of relief maybe so people know for sure that she was lying," Morgan Applegate, another of the vindicated men said.'

Op-ed: "Sometimes, those accused of crimes are actually victims"

anthony · 30 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To that end, when a crime is reported in which the name of the accuser is not revealed, such as sexual assault, I believe it is only equitable that the accused also be allowed to remain anonymous until they are proven guilty.

It is certainly understandable why the names of alleged sex crime victims are not reported. After all, these victims may decide to forgo filing a police report — allowing their perverse perpetrators to escape justice — if they believe a result of informing authorities about the crime will be the surrendering of their privacy. However, it is sometimes the accused in these cases who turn out to be the real victims. Should these individuals not be allowed the same treatment in regard to an unproven crime as their accusers?

Take the story of the then-unnamed University of Hofstra student who accused five men of raping her last month. Four of the men were immediately arrested and jailed before the woman confessed that she'd lied.'

"Does school or society cause boy dropouts?"

anthony · 30 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Still, the sad fact is, according to StatsCan numbers for 2006/7, one out of three boys doesn't graduate from high school while one out of four girls doesn't make it (with many female dropouts attributed to pregnancy, by the way).

But really, is the education system at fault – or is it a society that rewards macho-macho men, extreme athletes and action, and a blow-them-up culture of violence? And what about a system that makes it unattractive for men to take up teaching?

Fact is, if you pay attention to the cruel stories out of British upper- crust schools, it seems that girls' presence has a mitigating effect on that Lord of the Flies brutality – although females do better academically in the absence of boys.

Currently, there's conservative literature, including Christina Hoff Sommers' The War Against Boys and Kathleen Parker's Save the Males, which lays the blame for boys' failures on feminism.'

Afghanistan: Boys forced into prostitution ignored by media, world

Matt · 30 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kabul, Afghanistan (CNN) -- A young boy dressed in women's clothing, his face caked in make-up, dances the night away for a crowd of men.
...
The boy is but one youth among many throughout the country forced into an age-old underground tradition known as "bacha bazi," or "boy play," in which young boys are taken from their families, made to dance and used as sex slaves by powerful men. The number of boys involved is unknown -- the practice has been going on for centuries, in a country where such practices are overshadowed by conflict and war.
...
Farhad said that he was taken from a party by four police officers one night and almost gang raped at the station Before their commander walked in and stopped the assault. But then, "He said if I wanted to be set free I should give him my money and my mobile," Farhad said. "I had no real choice, so I gave him my money and mobile."

The boys said they are continuously threatened, beaten and raped by men who attend the parties they dance at; parties fueled by alcohol and drugs.
...
"We are not happy with this line of work," Jamel said. "We say that it would be better if God could just kill us rather than living like this."'

UK: "Women who cry rape will ALWAYS be sent to prison, appeal court warns"

ItsDan · 30 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Women who cry rape were warned by the Court of Appeal today that prison was 'inevitable' for an offence which attacks the criminal justice system.

Rejecting a sentence challenge by a woman jailed for two years after making a false allegation against an innocent man, two senior judges emphasised the impact of such a crime on conviction rates.

Mr Justice Henriques, sitting in London with Mrs Justice Rafferty, said: 'Every time a defendant stands trial for rape, defence counsel necessarily point out to the jury that false allegations are made.

'Allegations such as this drive yet another nail into the conviction rate.'"

ABC News blog: "Women in Peril: A Look at TVs Disturbing New Storyline Trend"

anthony · 30 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Should I be surprised nothing is mentioned about men portrayed as violent thugs? Excerpt:

'PTC analysts looked at 209 hours of television programming during the February and May 2004 and 2009 sweeps and found the following:

"Violence, irrespective of gender, on television increased during the study period only 2% from 2004 to 2009, while the incidence of violence against women increased 120% during that same period."

"Cumulatively, across all study periods and all networks, the most frequent type of violence was beating (29%), followed by credible threats of violence, (18%), shootings (11%), rape (8%), stabbing (6%), and torture (2%). Violence against women resulted in death 19% of the time."

"Violence against women or the graphic consequences of violence tends overwhelmingly to be depicted 92% of the time, rather than implied (5%) or described (3%)."

According to the report there was an 81% increase in the incidence of intimate partner violence on television from 2004 to 2009 and FOX was on top of the heap when it came to using "violence against women as a punch line in its comedies."'

NOW President on President Obama's All-Male Athletic Outings: 'It's Troubling'

anthony · 31 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We asked Terry O'Neill, the new president of the National Organization for Women, what she thought of those Democratic women and others quietly complaining about a "boy's club" atmosphere at the White House, as exemplified by the president playing basketball earlier this month with 11 members of Congress and four Cabinet Secretaries -- all men.

"Relationships get built in those more informal settings," O'Neill told ABC News, "and the relationships have a huge impact on the influence an individual has. We know what happens when we segregated whether it by race or whether it by gender -- you end up with 1st class citizens and you end up with 2nd class citizens."

O'Neill told ABC News' Mike Callahan, "we need to see the White House leading the way for desegregating the work places all around the country and it is troubling."'

Jury hears boy, 7, describe how mother attacked him and his brother

Matt · 31 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A mother's plot to blame a stranger for killing her sons went awry when one of the boys survived and told police how Michelle Kehoe cut his throat, then moved on to his younger brother, an Iowa prosecutor said Thursday.

Police found the 7-year-old covered in dried blood in the family van the morning of October 27, 2008, in a secluded area near a pond east of Littleton. Beside the van, his 2-year-old brother lay dead, his throat also slashed.
...
Kehoe, of Coralville, Iowa, has pleaded not guilty to charges of first-degree murder, attempted murder and child endangerment causing serious injury. Before the trial, her lawyers filed a notice of intent to present an insanity defense, according to court records.'

High-profile NY City News anchor pulled from TV even after false accusations by wife are admitted

Matt · 31 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TV newsman Dominic Carter was yanked off the air Thursday after he was accused of beating his wife while calling her a "dumb, stupid, project bitch."
...
Paulus dropped the hammer on Carter the same day his wife, Marilyn, told a Rockland County judge she lied when she claimed her husband attacked her last October.

With his job on the line and his reputation in tatters, Carter pleaded with Justice Arnold Etelson to issue a ruling in his favor.

"In the court of public opinion, if I leave here without an opinion, my career is over," he said.
...
Carter, 45, left the court with his wife by his side.

"I am sticking by him with this," said Marilyn Carter, 52.'

The New Art of Alimony

Matt · 31 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Paul and Theresa Taylor were married for 17 years. He was an engineer for Boston's public-works department, while she worked in accounting at a publishing company. They had three children, a weekend cottage on the bay and a house in the suburbs, on a leafy street called Cranberry Lane. In 1982, when they got divorced, the split was amicable. She got the family home; he got the second home. Both agreed "to waive any right to past, present or future alimony."

But recently, more than two decades after the divorce, Ms. Taylor, 64, told a Massachusetts judge she had no job, retirement savings or health insurance. Earlier this year, the judge ordered Mr. Taylor, now 68 and remarried, to pay $400 per week to support his ex-wife.

Ex-spouses are rethinking alimony agreements amid dwindling job prospects and savings in the economic crunch, even as some states re-evaluate alimony laws. Here are some pending proposals:
...
"This is insane," Mr. Taylor says, adding that the payments cut his after-tax pension by more than one-third. "Someone can just come back 25 years later and say, 'My life went down the toilet, and you're doing good—so now I want some of your money'?"'

Police: Woman slams baby's head into ground

Matt · 31 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Mount Vernon, NY -- Police in Mount Vernon say a naked, and emotionally disturbed woman repeatedly slammed her baby's head into the sidewalk.

It happened around 1:40 Friday afternoon outside East Lincoln Avenue.
...
The 6 month old baby was then rushed to Mount Vernon Hospital, and later transferred to the Westchester Medical Center trauma unit .

He is currently in critical condition.

The baby's mother was taken into custody.'

Arcadia University to perform "The Exonerated" for the PA Innocence Project

Matt · 31 October 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From a Facebook announcement (all hyperlinks herein added):

Arcadia University's theater department is putting on a special performance of The Exonerated to benefit the Pennsylvania Innocence Project. This unique play delves into the lives of 6 men sentenced to death but later exonerated for crimes they did not commit. A light reception and talkback featuring David Rudovsky and exoneree Edward Baker are part of the evening. Tickets can be purchased exclusively online at www.innocenceprojectpa.org.

This event is planned to start at 6:00 pm on Nov 12, 2009 at Arcadia University, Glenside, Pennsylvania.

Muslim Wife Slashed Husband's Neck Over Booze, Pork and Miniskirts, Say Prosecutors

anthony · 1 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (CBS/AP) Prosecutors in New York say a devoutly religious Muslim woman, Rabia Sarwar, slashed her husband's neck after he introduced her to booze, pork, and miniskirts.

Sarwar's defense lawyer says his client was "emotionally abused" and forced to violate her religious beliefs.

Sarwar is free on bail after appearing in a Staten Island court Thursday on attempted murder and other charges.

Her lawyer, Joe Licitra, said Sarwar's husband "got her to drink alcohol, eat pork" and wear clothing that violated her Muslim beliefs.

Sheikh "Eddie" Naseem, who has surface wounds on his neck, face and hands, said his wife needs psychological help. Licitra said Sarwar was previously treated for depression.
...
Said Naseem: "There was no gun pointed to her head to do these things."'

Rape charges divide teacher's friends

anthony · 1 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ALBUQUERQUE (KRQE) - Friends of an Albuquerque Public School teacher facing rape charges over her relationship with a 13-year-old student were divided in their emotions Thursday with some offering messages of support and others expressing disgust.

Kristy Sanchez-Trujillo, 33, was charged with three counts of rape after she allegedly admitted to police she had sex with the boy in her car in or near Petroglyph National Monument on Albuquerque's West Side.
...
Sanchez-Trujillo was a teacher at Jimmy Carter Middle School in northwest Albuquerque and taught a hip-hop dance class after school.

Detectives said they don't think she was sexually involved with any other kids.'

Opinion: Real Women Don't Complain or Pout, We Play Ball

anthony · 1 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Apparently, the writers at The New York Times don't read the front page of their own newspaper. Rather than delve into the hard hitting questions facing the nation such as what to do about the increasing instability in Afghanistan, the strategy to repair a still lackluster economy or how much debt we really are poised to pass onto future generations, one Times journo decided to explore the real hand-wringer of the day that's keeping Americans awake at night: is there too much testosterone in the White House??

The article was sparked by recent outrage from women's groups (and apparently one very isolated, out of touch, culturally delusional Times employee) over an all-male basketball game hosted by the president. ...
...
These types of temper tantrums undermine women, distract and reverse decades of progress. As long as women and men view every issue through a prism of gender, females end up marginalized. Women have made tremendous progress. We should embrace it, not seek to disprove it. Real women don't complain or pout, we play ball, whether the president invites us or not.'

Argentina: Man spends 20 months in jail on false rape charge from daughter

anthony · 1 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BUENOS AIRES – A 42-year-old man spent 20 months in a maximum security prison accused of raping his daughter, but the girl repented and confessed that she lied when she accused him, the press said on Friday.

The prosecutor withdrew the charges and the court released the defendant, after his daughter, now 19, repeated that she had lied, something that she had already said during the initial investigation, but her statement was not admitted because of the possibility that she had been pressured by the family.

Defense attorney Claudia Mirele said in a statement published in the Buenos Aires daily Clarin that the girl lied as a reprisal against her father for being “too strait-laced.”'

UK: Man told store job 'for women only'

anthony · 1 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A JOB-SEEKER claims he was refused the chance to apply for a job because of his sex.

Former construction worker Rob Stevens was told there was "little point" applying for a part-time sales assistant position at Hobbs womenswear because he is a man.
...
His wife, Sally, 41, said: "My husband went into Hobbs to pick up an application form and was asked who the form was for.

"When he replied that it was for himself, he was told that there would be little point as they normally employ women.

"When he said that this was discrimination, he was asked to leave the shop.

"The Hobbs website says they are an equal opportunities employer – this is clearly not the case."'

New Zealand: Boys less likely to go to university

anthony · 1 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teenage boys are over represented in stand down and suspension rates, less likely to gain university entrance than their female classmates and more likely to leave school before 17, a Ministry of Education report says.

The report, “Boys’ achievement: A Synthesis of the Data”, gives a number of examples of this discrepancy between the sexes including that as many as 72 per cent of all suspensions and stand downs in 2006 were boys, and that 10 per cent more girls will gain university entrance than boys.

The answer, the reports says, involves ensuring male students are “engaged in, and excited by, their learning, and able to achieve their full potential”.

A new initiative from Auckland University of Technology (AUT) aims to address these concerns and the discrepancy between males and females in education by reaching out to male students in year 10, before they lose interest.'

South Africa: Chiefs demand return of control over circumcision

anthony · 1 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DISGRUNTLED Eastern Cape traditional leaders want the Health Department to relinquish all powers vested in it to save initiates' lives during the forthcoming summer initiation season.

The traditional leaders recently launched a bid to have the Application of Health Standards in Traditional Circumcision Act amended.

About 54 boys died and 13 others lost their genitals because of botched circumcisions during the winter circumcision season in Transkei.

...

Congress of Traditional Leaders of SA (Contralesa) provincial secretary Chief Xolile Ndevu said this week the leaders wanted "complete power" to drive the tradition.

According to the Act, traditional surgeons and their attendants cannot perform circumcisions unless they are approved by a medical officer appointed by the department. No initiation school may operate before obtaining permission from the local medical officer.'

NY Times: Domestic Abuse Fraud: It's Rarely Suspected and Rarely Detected

anthony · 1 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the city's rich history of fraud schemes, the cases described this week by the city's Department of Investigation would not seem to rank up there with mortgage scams or fake Medicare patients: Six women were accused of posing as victims of domestic violence to gain subsidized housing.

Such cases are so rare, and the issue so sensitive, that city officials and advocates for domestic violence victims said that they are not usually on the lookout for fraud when people come forward with claims of abuse.
...
No documentation is required to prove abuse, said Barbara Brancaccio, a spokeswoman for the city's Human Resources Administration, which operates domestic violence shelters.

At the shelters, employees occasionally discover that women have exaggerated their abuse, but they are not forced to leave the facilities, Ms. Brancaccio said.
...
That said, the system is not "set up to catch people," she said, adding that she has never encountered a case of fraud.'

Houston police create new domestic violence unit focusing on women

anthony · 1 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Houston Police Department has created new investigative unit to handle domestic violence crimes.

The unit, dubbed the Special Crimes Division, will focus on domestic crimes against women and families.

The division is comprised of the department's Family Violence Unit and the Sex Crimes Unit, which were both previously part of the Homicide Division.

“We believe this realignment of resources, coupled with additional allocation of personnel, will assist us in our efforts to help people victimized by theses types of violent crimes,“ Chief Harold Hurtt stated in a news release today.

...

“I salute Chief Hurtt and the Houston Police Department for creating this division that will better serve and protect our citizens,“ Lykos stated in the department's news release. “This initiative will reduce violence, ensure compassionate assistance to victims, and enable more effective prosecution of predators.“'

Woman who stabbed husband 193 times seeks new sentence

anthony · 1 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman convicted of killing her husband by tying him to their bed and stabbing him almost 200 times will get a new punishment phase because of ineffective assistance of counsel in her trial, an appeals court ruled Wednesday.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that Susan Wright deserves another opportunity to convince a jury that she deserves a lenient sentence.

Her attorney, Brian Wice, said jurors should have heard from certain witnesses, including Jeffrey Wright's former fiance and an expert on battered women syndrome.

If her attorneys can convince a new jury that Wright killed in “sudden passion” her punishment would be capped at 20 years.

If jurors decide against sudden passion, she could face a maximum sentence of life in prison.
...
“I'm ecstatic,” Davis said. “I'm very happy she will have a new sentencing hearing and, hopefully, obtain some justice.”'

Report: UK police categorize political activists as ‘domestic extremists’

Matt · 2 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'British police inspectors have been building a massive, secret database containing personal information on thousands of otherwise innocent political activists, an investigative report revealed Sunday.

"The hidden apparatus has been constructed to monitor 'domestic extremists', the Guardian can reveal in the first of a three-day series into the policing of protests. Detailed information about the political activities of campaigners is being stored on a number of overlapping IT systems, even if they have not committed a crime."

The UK paper added that the term "domestic extremist" has no legal basis, but is instead intended to tar those who may have participated in something so benign as civil disobedience.

Even merely attending a protest and standing on the outskirts of the crowd can be enough to land one on the National Public Order Intelligence Unit's list of "domestic extremists."
...
The paper further noted that the database was first establish to curb legal infractions being committed by animal rights activists, but has grown outward ever since, even though the groups initially targeted are not nearly as active. Activists are divided up into four groups: Extreme right, extreme left, animal rights and anti-war. Groups roped in to the database even include those that have never been associated with any illegal activity.'

"Daddies be damned! Who are the British women who think fathers are irrelevant?"

Matt · 2 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Having reached the age of 38 without meeting Mr Right, Karen Shefras decided to become a mother by using donated sperm.

As a result, Karen, who runs her own company, has never met her ten-month-old daughter's father. The closest she came to him was at the clinic where five of her eggs were injected with sperm donated by the dark-haired and intelligent businessman.

'Ideally, it would have been nice to have met a man and had a baby the conventional way,' says Karen, now 41. 'I always pictured myself getting married - but it just didn't happen.
...
But the most telling thing of all is that Karen still hopes to meet 'Mr Right' - a positive sign at least that having a baby without a man does not remove a woman's emotional need for a life partner.

'I really do hope a man comes along,' she says. 'I can't see myself without a man for ever.'

In the end, perhaps the truth is that, for complete fulfilment, women need both a partner and children.

The most worrying question of all is why the most natural thing in the world has become so seemingly difficult to achieve, and why a generation of women have fallen foul of their dreams.'

"Vampire Diaries" TV commercial styles date-violence against men is "spunky"

Matt · 2 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

"I've been seeing this television commercial for a new TV show set to air this fall on the CW television network called "Vampire Diaries". In the commercial a man asks a woman for a kiss, then the woman hits the man. She is then referred to as "spunky" for hitting him.

To add to the apparent unapologetic attitude of the network in airing a commercial depicting violence towards men, CW actually named this particular promo commercial "Spunky". Appalling. So if a man hits a woman it's shameful but if a woman hits a man, she's spunky... gotta love that."

Ed. note: The slap is at around 00:23 in the commercial. Comments to the studio can be submitted via their site here.

Canada: "Women have never striven more for less"

badgerb · 2 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Read the article here. The same old dribble written by a woman whose mother is one of the newspapers editors. Excerpt:

'According to the University of Alberta, the salaries of recent female business graduates narrowly exceeded those of their male counterparts for the first time. In the U.S., a recent study called the Shriver Report found that half the American work force is now composed of women.
...
Despite working harder and in greater numbers than ever before, women are still earning less than men in the same jobs over all and taking most of the responsibility for housework and child care.

In essence, the plight of women is like that old morale-boosting management trick: the no-compensation promotion (also known as the non-raise raise). It's all very flattering until you realize that you have just taken on twice as much work and responsibility for no extra pay or respect.
...

In this new world order, women get to support their partners, remain the primary child-care givers and earn less money for doing the same jobs as men. See? Promotion without compensation.

At least in the 1950s, middle-class women got to stay home and drink martinis like on Mad Men. Maybe they were miserable, but they could wallow in it. Most working mothers I know wouldn't even have the time to register if they were on the verge of a nervous breakdown.
...
Joanne Lipman, the former deputy managing editor of The Wall Street Journal and editor-in-chief of Portfolio magazine, recently wrote an op-ed piece for The New York Times responding to the Shriver Report. In it, she revealed that, during her years as an editor, “many, many men have come through my door asking for a raise or demanding a promotion. Guess how many women have ever asked me for a promotion? I'll tell you. Exactly… zero.”'

It is important to read the comments from beginning to end, "Mike Murphy" and "Atlas is Shrugging" especially. We are fighting back and the feminists are been taken to task.

UK: Father fights mother over baby's life

anthony · 2 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'London, England (CNN) -- A baby born with a severe birth defect put its parents on opposing sides in a British court Monday over whether to switch off the child's life support.

The mother sides with doctors and favors disconnecting the baby's respirator. The father took the case to the High Court in London to stop them.

...

The father took the case to court to stop them.

He says the baby can play and recognize its parents. His lawyers plan to show videos of the baby in court to demonstrate he responds to the world around himself.

...

The Mayo Clinic, one of the leading hospitals in the United States, says on its Web site that "different forms of CMS vary widely in their symptoms, from mild to severely disabling. With accurate diagnosis and appropriate therapy, even potentially fatal forms can usually be treated successfully."'

Mom who stabbed son, self over custody fear will soon undergo a 'psychiatric evaluation'

anthony · 2 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A New Jersey mother whose inability to understand English apparently misled her to believe that her children would be taken away stabbed her 8-year-old son with a steak knife, then tried to kill herself, police said.

Elida Marroquin was charged with attempted murder, aggravated assault, child endangerment and weapons offenses following Saturday's incident at the family's home in Bergenfield. Bail was set at $500,000, and both she and the child were expected to recover from their wounds.

...

Authorities said the 37-year-old married mother of three, who does not read English well, grew stressful and mistakenly feared she would lose custody of her children after receiving several letters from their school in recent weeks.

...

She and her son were taken to Hackensack University Medical Center, where doctors removed the boy's gall bladder and treated his mother for a puncture wound to the neck. Both remained hospitalized on Sunday, and the mother will soon undergo a psychiatric evaluation.'

ABC: Female Warriors Engage in Combat in Iraq, Afghanistan

anthony · 2 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The image of young women in a hot, dusty combat zone toting automatic weapons is still startling to some.

But right now there are 10,000 women serving in Iraq, more than 4,000 in Afghanistan. They have been fighting and dying next to their male comrades since the wars began.

"I can't help but think most Americans think women aren't in combat," says Specialist Ashley Pullen who was awarded a Bronze Star for valor in 2005 for her heroic action in Iraq where she served with a military police unit. "We're here and we're right up with the guys."

...

Nevertheless, women serving in support positions on and off the frontlines, where war is waged on street corners and in markets, are often at equal risk. There have been 103 women who have been killed in Iraq and 15 others in Afghanistan.'

My condolences to all our service members who have perished, but the gender disparity is staggering. According to the Iraq/Afghanistan Coalition, there have been 5268 soldier deaths -- of which 5165 have been men. [Filter list by Gender and start counting]

A Class Action Lawsuit Win For Men

Anonymous · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. It took 6 years and is only a million dollars (lawyers will probably get most) in restitution but it is still a win. I think the main issue here is that a man actually decided to fight back against the ingrained misandry of this society and won! I doubt he will be on Larry King Live or Oprah. Excerpt:

'LOS ANGELES, California (CNN) -- Lawry's, a California-based chain of high-end steakhouses, has agreed to pay more than $1 million to settle a sex-discrimination lawsuit that claimed it only hired women to wait on tables.

...Under the EEOC consent decree, Lawry's has agreed to actively promote the hiring of men into server position among other remedies.

The EEOC launched an investigation into the case after a male employee at Lawry's sued the chain in March 2003, arguing that he was denied a job as a server because of his sex.
...
However, since the complaint, the company "undertook substantial efforts to remedy the matter."

...Among other requirements, it calls for $500,000 in relief to the plaintiffs' class, $300,000 for an advertising campaign on hiring servers and $225,000 to train employees on federal hiring laws.'

NYTimes.com: Fathers Gain Respect From Experts (and Mothers)

Matt · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A.: All right, who put acid in my coffee? I actually see the NY Times printing a male-positive article and acknowledging maternal gatekeeping as a factor in the shortage of father involvement. No way. What's next, acknowledging the actual number of male DV victims? Excerpt:

'Uninvolved fathers have long been accused of lacking motivation. But research shows that many societal obstacles conspire against them. Even as more fathers are changing diapers, dropping the children off at school and coaching soccer, they are often pushed aside in ways large and small.

“The walls in family resource centers are pink, there are women’s magazines in the waiting room, the mother’s name is on the files, and the home visitor asks for the mother if the father answers the door,” said Philip A. Cowan, an emeritus professor of psychology at the University of California, Berkeley, who along with his wife, Carolyn Pape Cowan, has conducted decades of research on families. “It’s like fathers are not there.” '

Help set Anderson Cooper straight on the wage gap myth

Matt · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.: Anderson Cooper of CNN is relentlessly spreading the gender pay gap myth over and over. Please post a comment on his latest one here ("Breaking into the boys club"). And, email him at anderson.cooper-at-turner.com. We need to bombard him with posts and emails. Here is some info if you need it:

The Department of Labor recently funded this study (.pdf file) titled "An Analysis of the Reason for the Disparity in Wages Between Men and Women" and provided a forward, which found the pay gap is a result of choices such as longer hours, flexibility, etc., not discrimination.

RADAR ALERT: N.J. Supreme Court Takes Up Crespo

Matt · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

On October 6th, the New Jersey Supreme Court announced it would hear the Crespo appeal. Crespo is the case that, among other things, challenges the constitutionality of Protective Orders issued under the "Preponderance of the Evidence" standard of proof, which is among the lowest of all legal standards of proof in the U.S. A lower court judge ruled that "Preponderance of the Evidence" is not sufficient to remove a person from their home and deny them access to their children. The appeals court overturned the decision. But New Jersey attorney David Heleniak has convinced the N.J. Supreme Court to review the case. According to Heleniak, a victory in the New Jersey high court could have ripple effects across the country.

The way protective orders are issued is one example of the erosion of civil rights and due process protections in cases alleging domestic violence. Mandatory arrest, "predominant aggressor" and "primary aggressor" laws, no drop prosecution, low standards of proof for protective orders, over-broad definitions of domestic violence, and Federal funding that encourages officials to interpret as many cases as possible as domestic violence cases, have all lead to the predictable result: massive civil rights violations in the area of domestic violence.

A recent article at crosscut.com (http://crosscut.com/blog/crosscut/19135) illustrates what happens all too often. The police, the prosecutor, and the judge, all chasing VAWA funding, choose to see domestic violence even in cases where the woman they want to paint as victim vehemently insists that rather than domestic violence, what actually happened was that her husband accidentally knocked her over while saving her from being run over by oncoming traffic. In doing so, these officials perpetrate massive harm on the innocent citizens they're charged with protecting.

In no other area of the law have civil rights and due process been so weakened. DV laws lead to politically driven justice instead of the impartial rule of law guaranteed by the federal and state constitutions.

Please notify your state legislators and let them know that the New Jersey Supreme Court has sufficient constitutional concerns for a hearing on civil rights and due process in DV laws. Tell them to undertake similar reviews and make legislative changes to DV legislation in your state.

++
Date of RADAR Release: November 2, 2009

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/

Australia: Lesbian mothers get retrospective recognition

Matt · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tasmania's Legislative Council has voted unanimously to make the legal recognition of lesbian co-mothers retrospective to 2003.

The vote followed the unanimous acceptance to legally recognise two mothers on a birth certificate.

The law was originally rejected in 2003 when gay and lesbian couples were first recognised in Tasmanian law.

Rodney Croome from the Tasmanian Gay and Lesbian Rights Group said it is an important step forward.
...
"Rather than go through the costly process, the drawn-out process of applying for adoption and doing it that way, and going through the Family Court, they will now be able to make the application to the registrar and if they can satisfy the register of their significant relationship, then it will be a fairly easy process for them to be included," he said.'

Group of 50 Mental Health Experts Pushing to Add Parental Alienation to DSM

Matt · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of 50 mental health experts from 10 countries are part of an effort to add Parental Alienation to the 2012 edition of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, the American Psychiatric Association's "bible" of diagnoses. According to psychiatrist William Bernet, this "would spur insurance coverage, stimulate more systematic research, lend credence to a charge of parental alienation in court, and raise the odds that children would get timely treatment."

Few family law cases are as heartbreaking as those involving Parental Alienation. In PA cases, one parent has turned his or her children against the other parent, destroying the loving bonds the children and the target parent once enjoyed.

Numerous misguided feminist groups oppose recognition of Parental Alienation in court or in DSM. Some of these opponents raise legitimate concerns. For example, Janet Johnston, a feminist-oriented clinical sociologist/justice studies professor, fears that PAS could be invoked by an abusive parent to gain rights to a child.'

MANN co-admin scheduled for the Jim Engster Show on Nov. 4

Matt · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Humbly ;) announcing that yours truly is scheduled to be interviewed on The Jim Engster Show tomorrow, Nov. 4 at 9:40 AM US Central Time.

There is no particular topical agenda for the interview, which will probably be pretty brief, other than mens' and fathers' rights issues in general. But tune in/download the podcast later anyway, it could be fun. :)

Sportscaster Nantz to pay ex-wife $916K a year

badgerb · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) - CBS sportscaster Jim Nantz must pay $916,000 yearly in alimony and child support to his ex-wife and give up their Connecticut home under terms of a newly issued divorce decree.

The ruling, made Monday in Bridgeport Superior Court, dissolves the 26-year marriage of Nantz and Ann-Lorraine "Lorrie" Carlsen Nantz. It comes after both testified about the breakdown of their marriage; Judge Howard Owens concluded neither was at fault.

...

Owens noted that the couple didn't share the same interests in Nantz's television career, which required frequent travel as the network's primary commentator for college football, golf and basketball, as well as appearances at charity events.

"In fairness, for most of the years he prioritized his family obligation and put his wife and daughter Caroline first. As frequently happens in marriages of lengthy duration, the parties do not have the same interest and ardor for their spouses' endeavors," the judge wrote in his decision.

Under the ruling, Nantz must pay $72,000 in alimony monthly until he dies or his ex-wife remarries, and another $1,000 weekly in child support for the next two years.

Nantz's attorney, Gaetano Ferro of New Canaan, said Tuesday that the famed sportscaster only wants what's best for his daughter and will not fight the terms of the divorce decree.'

Greg Gutfeld: 'The Gender Studies Racket'

anthony · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. This is some funny stuff! Fox's Greg Gutfeld does a brief monologue on gender studies.

Quote:

"Because gender studies doesn't help you do anything else but teach gender studies, no wonder tenor is so vital."

Police: Florida wife faked her own abduction

Matt · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It sounds like the sort of romantic-mystery potboiler that keeps readers on the edge of their summer beach chairs: A strikingly pretty Florida housewife with a handsome husband and two beautiful young daughters is kidnapped, sexually assaulted, and held for $50,000 ransom.

Or was she?

Prosecutors contend the strange case of 37-year-old Quinn Gray, who claims she was abducted and held for four days in hellish captivity, is a cleverly planned ruse. They claim her supposed abductor, a 25-year-old Bosnian immigrant, was actually her lover, and that the pair plotted to extort cash from Quinn's well-heeled husband, Reid.

Quinn Gray and her alleged lover, Jasmin Osmanovic, are charged with extortion. But two of her lawyers appeared on TODAY Tuesday to say that Gray, who has a history of mental illness, is a terrorized victim, not a scheming co-conspirator. The case has set the community around Jacksonville, Fla., abuzz.'

China sentences notorious gang 'godmother'

Matt · 3 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BEIJING – Dubbed the "godmother" of the Chinese underworld, she was notorious for her toughness and a lavish lifestyle that reportedly included luxury villas and a stable of 16 young lovers.

Her criminal reign ended Tuesday when Xie Caiping, 46, was sentenced to 18 years in prison for running illegal casinos and bribing government officials. Her trial was one of a series of gang prosecutions in the southwestern city of Chongqing that have featured lurid testimony about sex, corruption and the violent underworld.

Xie is the only female gang boss to be tried as part of a monthslong crackdown on local gangs, known as "black societies," in the sprawling southwestern megacity of 30 million. The trials have exposed the tangled web of links between government officials and police officers who sought to provide cover for the crime syndicates.
...
The court notice said Xie's gang "severely broke the normal order of society," and illegally detained others and allowed loan sharking at the casinos. The casino took a cut of the profits won by gamblers, the notice said. It said casino bosses hired stand-ins to take the blame when there was a crackdown and paid bribes to judicial officials.'

The Guardian: Population control is not what makes climate change a feminist issue

axolotl · 4 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But Fitzgerald is completely right that climate change is a feminist issue. Everyone stands to suffer if climate change is allowed to spiral out of control, of course, but a gender analysis of both the impacts and causes of climate change shows that globally women contribute less to the problem and yet are likely to be hit especially hard.

Poor people are likely to bear the brunt as the climate changes and 70% of the world's poor are women. According to one estimate, 85% of the victims of climate disasters are women. Another study found 75% of environmental refugees are women. (Statistics from the Women's Manifesto on Climate Change).'

Engster interview update

Matt · 4 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

They already have it archived. Anyway if you want to listen to it, it can be found here. My segment starts at 31:10.

International Men's Day on-line community created

Anonymous · 4 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I created a Men's Groups community for International Men's Day where everyone is welcome.

Thank you.

House Healthcare Bill Rewards Activism on Women's Issues

Matt · 4 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women may seem to be the driving force of health reform, given all the attention recently paid to gender disparities in insurance premiums. In fact, the massive health reform bill unveiled by the House of Representatives yesterday contains several sections that pertain just to women in terms of abortion coverage, pregnancy services, and prohibitions against excluding those with pre-existing conditions, specifically mentioning women who've been victims of domestic violence. While the bill does provide maternity coverage as part of a basic benefits package that insurers must provide in their coverage, it specifically says that public funding can't be used for abortions--which would include coverage under the public option--except where it's already allowed, such as in cases of rape or incest or where a mother's life is at risk.

...

Indeed, women have been more successful at lobbying for their health needs. Richards ticked off an impressive list of Planned Parenthood's health reform lobbying efforts: 150 op-eds published in newspapers, 50,000 letters and E-mails sent to members of Congress, meetings this week--accompanied by 100 donors and affiliate heads--with the White House and Congress. She says she's pleased to see the attention being paid so far to women's health issues in health reform and adds that keeping abortion access at the status quo is an acceptable compromise--though she's keeping her eye on Michigan Democratic Rep. Bart Stupak and other members of Congress who are pushing to add amendments that ban federally funded insurance companies from offering abortion coverage, even if they set aside private funds for the coverage.'

International Men's Day in Moldova

Anonymous · 5 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

For the first time in the Republic of Moldova, on November 19, 2009, groups of students from the State University of Moldova will be celebrated International Men's Day.

Men and Families Health Care Act of 2009 remains in committee

Matt · 5 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The Men and Families Health Care Act of 2009 remains in committee with only 5 co-sponsors while a huge overhaul of the US health care system chocked with specific clauses and provisions directly benefiting only women is poised for a House vote by this week-end.

Undoubtedly this bill will die in committee. Maybe someone will reintroduce it next year. We can make sure that happens by contacting our various reps. Whether or not it passes is another matter. Bill summary:

"Men and Families Health Care Act of 2009 - Amends the Public Health Service Act to direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish within the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) the Office of Men's Health. Requires the Secretary, acting through the Director of the Office, to: (1) conduct, support, coordinate, and promote programs and activities to improve the state of men's health in the United States; and (2) provide for consultation among HHS agencies and offices to coordinate men's health programs and activities and establish a clinical registries database to assess and measure quality improvement of programs and activities relating to men's health."

Do men need "special attention" (like the kind women get) from legislators? Look at some facts and you be the judge. My answer is "Yes".

Article: "Men's Rights" Groups Have Become Frighteningly Effective

klp · 5 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Kathryn Joyce of Double X, Slate's feminist-oriented section has this article about MRA's. She discounts a lot of research done, but gives RADAR credit for:

"...blocked passage of four federal domestic-violence bills, among them an expansion of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) to international scope and a grant to support lawyers in pro bono domestic-violence work. Members of this coalition have gotten themselves onto drafting committees for VAWA's 2011 reauthorization. Local groups in West Virginia and California have also had important successes, criminalizing false claims of domestic violence in custody cases, and winning rulings that women-only shelters are discriminatory."

Interesting that the feminists view this as a threat.

Relatedly, submitted by user "fibtastic":

I used to read Salon religiously, and I still love Heather Havrilesky, but this online fish wrap became so smug and angry during the Bush years that even I (no fan of Bush) couldn't take it anymore. I still check them out occasionally, when I need the angry lefty party line on anything, which led me to this story on the scary fringe dangers of the MRM. It's from their resident feminist rant organ, Broadsheet.

The story references this article over at Slate, in their in-house feminist organ, XX. Generally I find XX to be readable. Certainly far more open minded and less doctrinaire than Broadsheet, but not so in this instance. Note the pathetic tactic, used in both of these stories, of playing up the "fear" of men who organizing to oppose feminist writ. As if "scaring" a woman by opposing her politically is something any "real" man ought to be ashamed to do.

Australia: Sydney woman gets 4 years for murdering her two small children

MichaelClaymore · 6 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who gave her two children rat poison before smothering them to death told them: "It's just a little bit of hurt".

The 31-year-old woman from Canley Vale in Sydney's west, who cannot be named, mixed the poison with sugar and water before feeding it to her four-year-old son and two-year-old daughter in February 2008.

Fearing this would not work, she then smothered her daughter with a pillow and suffocated her son using her hand.

Then, she slit her wrists in an attempt on her own life.

She later told a psychologist she had told her son: "It's just a little bit of hurt and we are out of this world".
...
Justice Clifford Hoeben found her guilty on the lesser charges of manslaughter in September, saying she had been suffering "substantial impairment by abnormality of the mind".

He told the court on Friday she had been angered by her husband's infidelity.'

Exonerated by DNA, prisoner's jailmate coerced into false testimony with threats of rape accusation

Matt · 6 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. False rape accusations work so darn well for some women that even some police and prosecutors are using them to get what they want, be it some attention, money, or even just to close a case. Excerpt:

'Dillon, 50, walked out of the Brevard County jail last November after tests showed that DNA found on the killer's shirt — which investigators recovered, splattered with the victim's blood — wasn't his. A month later, prosecutors announced they wouldn't retry him for the 1981 bludgeoning death of James Dvorak, and his conviction was erased.

Dillon, one of more than 200 inmates exonerated by DNA nationwide, plans to move to Tallahassee soon so he can be available during those hearings. Under the state's automatic formula, Dillon would receive $1.35 million — $50,000 for every year in prison.
...
Dillon cried while testifying Monday at his first compensation hearing. Afterward, he said he forgave the jailhouse snitch who recanted his 1981 trial testimony that Dillon had confessed to the murder. Roger Dale Chapman testified Monday that detectives told him they'd send him to prison on a fabricated rape charge if he didn't lie.

Although it isn't feasible, Dillon said he would prefer that his compensation be paid by the prosecutors and law enforcement agents he believes railroaded him — not taxpayers.

"I think the people that did it to me — knowingly did it to me — should have to pay for it," he said.'

Joe Torre, prostate cancer survivor, on 'Sharing Miracles'

anthony · 6 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"WASHINGTON, Nov. 3 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- The Washington Examiner recently reported that the public affairs television program 'Sharing Miracles' is featuring Major League Baseball (MLB) manager Joe Torre during the month of November. In this episode, the baseball legend discusses his career and his battle against prostate cancer.

'Sharing Miracles' is a 30-minute public affairs television program that tells the compelling and inspirational stories of real patients. The program is produced by the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America (PhRMA).

...

However, his baseball career was almost ended by a foe more formidable than any he faced on the field when a routine check-up led to a prostate cancer diagnosis in 1999.

Torre's battle with the disease was successful and he remains cancer-free today. His experience has taught him the importance of using his public persona to spread the word about the importance of being tested: "I've had so many people come to me and whisper in my ear, 'Because of you, I'm getting checked for cancer.'"

Grandmother of baby found in box says mother needs 'help'

anthony · 6 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- The maternal grandmother of a 7-month-old Florida girl found hidden in a small cedar box under her baby sitter's bed says her daughter, who was charged in the case, is troubled and needs help.

Police think Chrystina Lynn Mercer gave Shannon Lee Dedrick to the sitter -- who is the baby's paternal aunt, Susan Baker -- and 10 hours later reported the girl missing.

"As confused as Tina is, I have to tell you, she has emphatically stated that she did not and would not ever harm her child," Mercer's mother, Kandis Boyer, said Thursday on HLN's "Nancy Grace."

Without elaborating, Boyer said she thinks her daughter "was manipulated into this situation."

She said her daughter has had counseling over the years, and "she's going to get the help she needs now."
...
Shannon had been inside the box for about half a day before authorities found her late Wednesday, but she might have been in and out of the box for several days, investigators said.'

Ed.: Also reported here in USA Today, with a bit more detail.

British Columbia College of Physicians and Surgeons releases statement against circumcision

Matt · 7 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A.: Statement here (.pdf file).

They actually talk about the HUMAN RIGHTS and medical ethics issues, which most are too hypocritical, ignorant or scared to do. Take a look at the bottom of the first page.

Nicely said, British Columbia College of Physicians and Surgeons! Thank you for joining your colleagues in Australia in saying NO to infant male circumcision and NO to hypocrisy! Excerpt:

'...Current consensus of medical opinion, including that of the Canadian and American Paediatric Societies and the American Urological Society, is that there is insufficient evidence that these benefits outweigh the potential risks. That is, routine infant male circumcision, i.e. routine removal of normal tissue in a healthy infant, is not recommended.'
...

The matter of infant male circumcision is particularly difficult in regards to human rights, as it involves consideration of the rights of the infant as well as the rights of the parents.

...Routine infant male circumcision is an unnecessary and irreversible procedure. Therefore, many consider it to be “unwarranted mutilating surgery”.
Many adult men are increasingly concerned about whether their parents had the right to give consent for infant male circumcision. They claim that an infant’s rights should take priority over any parental rights to make such a decision. This procedure should be delayed to a later date when the child can make his own informed decision. Parental preference alone does not justify a non-therapeutic procedure.
...
Ethical considerations regarding infant male circumcision centre on the welfare (or “best interests”) of the infant and the potential benefit and harm associated with the procedure. Ethics points us to corrective vision, i.e. to question practices that have become routine, or which we take for granted
...
These principles are articulated in specific responsibility statements in the CMA Code of Ethics. Also included below are items relating to physicians rights and care of the patient.'

Ed. note: The document's update date is September 2009, which appears on the last page.

Economic crisis turns some desperate dads into criminals

anthony · 8 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Since an article written on father's rights I have received numerous emails on the subject and the things I have heard are frightening. One in particular came from Samantha who's husband pays $600.00 per month in child support for one child. His ex wife is remarried and owns her home. She has no mortgage or rent to pay yet she takes Dave to court every three years to raise the child support. Dave has two children at home with his new wife Samantha and their two children have always gone without because of the high child support. Dave has fought for years to see his child without any luck. Now Dave has been laid off from his job because of the economic crisis. The couple could barely afford to pay their mortgage let alone a $600.00 child support payment. This is where the ever growing bureaucracy called the child support enforcement agency comes in. Since being laid off, Dave had sent out hundreds of resumes and not one single interview. It wasn't Dave's fault yet the child support bureau suspended his license and he was being hauled into court. Dave was now a criminal and said he would start robbing people to avoid going to jail. After that the child support bureaucracy started taking child support from Dave's unemployment and he and his family lost their home. Two kids were now homeless for the sake of one. I wont tell you what Dave does now."

Oprah magazine: "Women as capable of torture as men"

Matt · 8 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Occasionally, Hell freezes over. Looks to me like that just happened. Article here. Excerpt:

'The classic cruelty experiment was conducted at Yale in the early '60s by psychology professor Stanley Milgram, PhD. Each subject was assigned the role of teacher and asked to test a student, who sat on the opposite side of a thin wall. Whenever the student answered a question incorrectly, the subjects were instructed by a man in a lab coat to deliver increasingly powerful electric shocks (in reality, the student was an actor who felt nothing). As the severity of the "shocks" increased, the student screamed and begged to be released, cried that he was in excessive pain, even that his heart was bothering him, and ultimately stopped responding. Still, 65 percent of the subjects continued to shock him to the maximum voltage.

Milgram performed 18 versions of the experiment on men. Surprisingly, the one time he used female subjects, they shocked at the same rate. But he never followed up. Fast-forward to the lab of Santa Clara University psychology professor Jerry Burger, PhD, who replicated Milgram's study (adjusting for ethical concerns) and published his findings this year. Burger's subjects—70 adults—included both men and women. He got nearly the same results as Milgram, and there was no difference between the sexes.
...

Of course it's one thing to be ordered to shock somebody, another to be the person giving the order. But even here women are perfectly capable, according to Darius Rejali, PhD, a Reed College political science professor who has studied torture for nearly 30 years. The reason women haven't done more tormenting throughout history, he maintains, is simply that they've been denied opportunities. "It's rare that women get to do the torturing," as he puts it. "Those jobs have mostly been taken by men." (Although it is not technically torture, women also don't seem to have a problem forcing others into sexual slavery. A recent United Nations report showed that more than 60 percent of those convicted of human trafficking in Eastern Europe and Central Asia are females.)'

May I suggest you send the link to this article to everyone you know.

Wife No. 2 Paying for Wife No. 1? Join the Club

Matt · 8 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stress over alimony payments to her husband's ex-wife nearly drove Deborah Scanlan to divorce. Helping her husband make alimony payments to his ex forced Jeanie Hitner to take on a second job. Both Massachusetts women now say they wish they'd never gotten married.
...
The club, which claims 70 members and counting, consists mostly of married women who say that Massachusetts judges' rulings forced them to contribute to alimony payments for their partners' ex-wives. ...
...
"I was absolutely horrified that I was now responsible for a portion of the support of his first wife," she said. On the day of the judge's alimony ruling in her husband's case, Scanlan said, "I left the court house and just couldn't believe that such a thing was possible."'

Female college soccer player beats up other players, officials do nothing

Matt · 8 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Oh, they finally did stop her, after she had aggressively fouled almost every player on the other team.

What is of interest here is the reactions (or lack thereof) of the officials, her coach, and her team-mates. No one lifted a finger or called foul until it became so egregious that someone had to do something. "Girls don't behave that way," is the assumption, so cognitive dissonance kicks in and it takes her nearly having to start pummeling the other players openly to get someone to stop her.

George Clooney styled a 'Serial Dater' by CNN

redwoodwriter · 9 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Text and photos here. Notice the way that the media (CNN in this case) is characterizing George Clooney - as a "serial dater" (pic #8). They make it sound like he is more of a serial murderer because of it.

Clooney has said "he will not marry again or have children," (pic #2) which seems to be offensive to some. Guess it's criminal not to be interested in marrying a woman if you're a rich and famous heterosexual man. Sounds like Clooney is hip to divorce and child custody laws in America today. Perhaps his choice, against pursuing marriage and children, is fast becoming no longer newsworthy -- just a conclusion that any man who really understands what the current situation is, and how biased the laws are against men, would reach.

WHO: AIDS leading cause of death, disease in women

Matt · 10 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No mention of men because, as we know, men don't matter, at least not to the UN. Excerpt:

'Unsafe sex is the leading risk factor in developing countries for these women of childbearing age, with others including lack of access to contraceptives and iron deficiency, the WHO said. Throughout the world, one in five deaths among women in this age group is linked to unsafe sex, according to the U.N. agency.

"Women who do not know how to protect themselves from such infections, or who are unable to do so, face increased risks of death or illness," WHO said in a 91-page report. "So do those who cannot protect themselves from unwanted pregnancy or control their fertility because of lack of access to contraception."
...
WHO chief Dr. Margaret Chan noted that women enjoy a biological advantage because they tend to live six to eight years longer than men. But in many parts of the world they suffer serious disadvantages because of poverty, poorer access to health care and cultural norms that put a priority on the well-being of men, she said.'

If the cultural norms of these countries put a priority on the well-being of men so much, why are they dying so much sooner than the women? A "biological advantage"? If men lived longer than women on average, would Dr. Chan chalk it up to a "biological advantage"?

MANN reader observes: "Look at what soldiers go through "

redwoodwriter · 10 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The shooting attacks allegedly perpetrated by an Army psychologist at Fort Hood a few days ago should get people thinking about what our soldiers stationed in Iraq and Afghanistan go through. As an Army psychologist, the alleged perpetrator Maj. Nidal Malik, probably heard a lot of horror stories. Whatever his motives for killing 13 and wounding 42, I ask: Is our culture willing to consider that he may have just snapped given all the pressure our soldiers are under?

How can we MRAs leverage this incident, so that we help people to appreciate how difficult and painful it is to be a solider in the US Army today? How can we use this to publicize the PTSD, the brain trauma, the missing limbs, the recurrent terrifying nightmares, and other types of disability our soldiers (who are by far mostly men) are now suffering? How can we use this incident to underscore the multiple tours of duty, often soon right after another, that our men in uniform must go through?

Are we, as a culture, unwilling to consider that men suffer? Is this a taboo topic? Is that why people are trying to blame this incident on the fact that the perpetrator was a Muslim? I see a lot of military brass trying to sweep this incident under the rug, saying things like "we have services for the affected families" -- will things just go back to normal after this blows over? Or can we use this incident to launch both an investigation of the conditions, as well as a larger discussion about male suffering and what is expected of men?

"Mom" accused of keeping a 'concentration camp' for dogs

Matt · 10 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On Long Island, a Suffolk County mother is facing charges for alleged cruelty to animals, and they could be upgraded to felony charges.

In an eerie scene Saturday night, investigators found a backyard burial ground, with the remains of at least 20 animals, behind the woman's house. The remains were brought out in black plastic bags.
...
In addition to the dogs, one cat, along with a hamster and a parakeet, were rescued. They were found in the home of 43-year-old Sharon McDonough of Selden, who faces misdemeanor animal cruelty charges.
...
The person who allegedly blew the whistle on McDonough was her eldest son, Douglas.
...
The son says he was forced to torture the animals.
...
Now, investigators are looking into complaints about animals disappearing from the neighborhood, and allegations that McDonough tortured, killed, and buried them behind her house.'

Guess the author of that recent Oprah.com article forgot to mention animals can be on the receiving end, too.

UK editor of Vogue magazine: "Why would anyone hire a woman?"

el cid · 10 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Good question, one I've often asked myself when a debate about women's pay gets going. If women are paid less than men, as many claim, perhaps it's because they're so much riskier to hire. Men rarely file discrimination law suits, file sexual harassment claims, or take time off to have kids, then come back after weeks off and expect their old job back, with more flexibility in time. Even at 25% more, men are a better bargain. Be sure to vote on the poll question to see the results. Excerpt:

'I treasured what for me was stolen time to be a mother and homemaker, yet it also made me appreciate the liveliness and richness that my work brings.

It is also the very issue that drives a stream of women into my office to discuss their futures, their maternity leaves, four-day working weeks, possible job shares, all now encouraged by recent legislation.
...
I completely understand the decision of any woman to give up their job to stay at home with their children.

And it seems entirely reasonable that in many situations a woman who becomes a mother will want to trade in her role for something less demanding.
...

But what I don't understand is the idea that you should be able to keep exactly the same job, with all the advantages that entails, and work less for it, regardless of how that affects the office or colleagues.

I don't think I'm a monster. I currently employ a 90 per cent female staff on the editorial team at Vogue.
...
Except that, when they do return, many of them don't want exactly their old job back. They want the same role but moulded into a time frame that suits family life better.

They want to investigate four-day weeks, flexitime, jobshares, and they often then have another baby and are entitled to take another year off. But is this realistic?

Can the diversity of circumstances and job requirements mean that one-size-fits-all legislation works? Criticism of the situation is very much the view that dares not speak its name.
...
How cherished does one feel as a boss by someone who is only at work nine months out of three years, the rest being taken as maternity leave, or by someone who - when resources are already stretched - forces a flexi-time deal?

Women have increasingly broken through that old glass ceiling with determination and, to be honest, helpful employment legislation.

As a result, many are now employers themselves. Let's not put that progress back by creating a world where the next generation of women workers becomes too inconvenient and awkward to employ and find themselves legislated back into the home.'

Wikipedia entry for the author is here.

More from female-soccer-players-behaving-badly

Matt · 10 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Can't be, girls "just don't do these kinds of things," right? Excerpt:

'PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - League officials in Rhode Island are investigating a fight between members of two girls' high school soccer teams who threw punches, pulled hair and sparked a brawl in the bleachers.

The fight captured on video by WPRI-TV broke out Sunday with about a minute left in a match between Woonsocket and Tolman high schools.

...

Fans fought in the bleachers during an awards ceremony.

Woonsocket coach Kathleen Fagnant says she doesn't know how the fight started but says she isn't going to "take the fall for that."'

I think it's kind of ironic that right next to the story is an ad for the "Change starts with a girl" campaign.

American Prospect: 'What's the Alternative to Tucker Max?'

anthony · 10 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The roomful of young men was brainstorming all the qualities associated with masculinity. Wong was one of the organizers of the National Conference for Campus-Based Men's Gender Equality and Anti-Violence Groups, a long and clunky name for an unprecedented event that took place last weekend at his school. It was the first time that young guys from around the country -- guys like Wong, who recognize that the kind of masculinity they are describing is toxic for men, too -- gathered to share strategies for getting college men involved in gender-based activism and discuss the work ahead.

...

This is about so much more than the 200 men who attended this conference. They are on the front lines, but there are legions of progressive men of all ages, all over the country who are struggling to redefine masculinity and live that redefinition every day. They fumble without models but continue on because they know that there is so much to be gained. Guys who reject traditional masculinity, for starters, have a greater chance of finding fulfilling work that isn't just a symbol of their provider status. They might explore the joy of relationships -- being nurturing with their kids, real with their friends, open with their partners. They have the opportunity to shed their socialized skin and all the anxiety that comes with trying to be a "tough guy" and make a happy life defined, not by their paycheck or their size, but by their humanity.'

Ex-astronaut pleads guilty in attack on rival

Matt · 11 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S.: And if you are a man in Canada or the USA or the UK, Australia, New Zealand et al ask yourself honestly what would your legal position under these same conditions and criteria? Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla. — A former astronaut pleaded guilty Tuesday to attacking a romantic rival in an airport parking lot after driving 1,000 miles from Houston to Orlando to confront her.

Lisa Nowak, a Navy captain, pleaded guilty to felony burglary and misdemeanour battery. She originally had been charged with two felonies, attempted kidnapping and burglary, along with misdemeanour battery.

Nowak confronted her romantic rival, Colleen Shipman, in the parking lot of Orlando International Airport in February 2007 after driving from Houston. Shipman had begun dating Nowak's love interest, former space shuttle pilot Bill Oefelein.

Nowak, wearing a wig and trenchcoat, followed Shipman to the parking lot and tried to get into her car, then attacked her with pepper spray. Shipman was able to drive away.

Police arrested Nowak a short time later in the parking lot near a trash can where she was seen getting rid of a bag. Police officers found a steel mallet, a knife, a BB pistol, rubber tubing and several large garbage bags in Nowak's bag.

"Almost three years later, I'm still reeling from her vicious attack," Shipman told the judge after Nowak's plea, holding back tears. "I know in my heart when Lisa Nowak attacked me, she was going to kill me.'

Hofstra gal feared being branded a tramp after romp

Matt · 11 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Hofstra freshman who had a raunchy restroom romp and then cried rape made up the twisted tale because she didn't want her schoolmates -- particularly her new boyfriend -- to think she was easy, the beau told The Post yesterday.

"I think she needs a psychologist. She probably felt like, 'They'll think I'm a slut,' " her boyfriend, who asked not to be identified, told The Post.

Danmell Ndonye, 18, who had accused five men of gang rape, admitted the truth only when prosecutors confronted her after learning of a cellphone video that captured the whole sordid episode and showed she had willingly participated, officials said.

She created her outlandish tale when her boyfriend, a Hofstra student who's been dating her since the semester began a few weeks ago, demanded to know where she had disappeared after a wild frat party early Sunday.'

'See? Mothers can be sex abusers, too'

anthony · 12 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'With the release of the ChildLine findings, however, the idea that child sex abuse by women is more prevalent than previously thought gains in credence. According to ChildLine, 42 per cent more children called its hotline in 2008-9 than in 2004-5, and the number of children calling to report abuse by women rose by 132 per cent – that is, a rise five times greater than the rise in children phoning to report abuse by men. In total, during 2008-9 the number of children phoning to report female child sex abuse stood at 2,142, of which 1,311 claimed that the mother was the abuser.

The NSPCC and ChildLine have been predictably bullish. The head of ChildLine, Sue Minto, seemed almost proud to be exploding myths of the good mother: ‘Many would find it shocking that any woman – let alone a mother – can sexually assault a child. But they do.’ NSPCC senior researcher Lisa Bunting saw it as the proof of a problem too long ignored: ‘If you don’t think females are capable of committing sex offences, then you are never going to be looking for that.’

Prof busted in Columbia gal 'punch'

Matt · 12 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Whew, the mind fairly boggles. How does one "deconstruct" this situation if he or she insists on looking at the world through the lens of political correctness? A black man in an argument with two white people, one male and one female, loses his temper and punches not one, but both of them.

The article focuses on the fact that one of the victims was female. To hit anyone in a debate is of course wrong and I am sure he will lose his job over it, and no doubt suffer other repercussions, possibly criminal charges as well. But the first person he punched was the female of the two with whom he was arguing. With political correctness insisting that the people involved in the primary violent segment of the conflict are both members of groups that are without the appropriate defenses to maintain their own well-being, let alone prosper, which one of them was "more wrong" in their actions? As I wrote, the mind fairly boggles. Excerpt:

'A prominent Columbia architecture professor punched a female university employee in the face at a Harlem bar during a heated argument about race relations, cops said yesterday.

Police busted Lionel McIntyre, 59, for assault yesterday after his bruised victim, Camille Davis, filed charges.

McIntyre and Davis, who works as a production manager in the school's theater department, are both regulars at Toast, a popular university bar on Broadway and 125th Street, sources said.

The professor, who is black, had been engaged in a fiery discussion about "white privilege" with Davis, who is white, and another male regular, who is also white, Friday night at 10:30 when fists started flying, patrons said.

McIntyre, who is known as "Mac" at the bar, shoved Davis, and when the other patron and a bar employee tried to break it up, the prof slugged Davis in the face, witnesses said.

"The punch was so loud, the kitchen workers in the back heard it over all the noise," bar back Richie Velez, 28, told The Post. "I was on my way over when he punched Camille and she fell on top of me."

The other patron involved in the dispute said McIntyre then took a swing at him after he yelled, "You don't hit a woman!"

"He knocked the glasses right off my face," said the man, who would only give his first name as "Shannon." "The punch came out of nowhere. Mac was talking to us about white privilege and what I was doing about it -- apparently I wasn't doing enough."'

And what do you say of their salaries in that it is likely that make substantially more money at their jobs than anyone reading the story, regardless of their ethnicity or sex?

From an MRA-interest point of view, it is the reactions of bystanders and related commentary that is of interest. Of course no debate no matter how heated should result in violence. But should it be considered "more wrong" if one of the victims is female rather than male if that comes to pass? As listeners of the recent interview I did may know, I do not believe it is any more wrong to strike a woman in this or any other situation than a man - to do so in any case is equally wrong and should be prosecuted in the same way*.

---

*As an aside, here in the great state of New York, striking a person (read: man) once without causing injury of any kind is merely a violation, harrassment, 2nd degree. Only after a person builds up a history of these kinds of things or if more than one punch is thrown by the attacker, or as the law says, if the victim suffers a measurable injury, does it become an actual crime.

Eve Ensler faces MRAs in India

bharati · 12 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Eve Ensler faced picketing MRAs recently in India for spreading hatred towards the male gender. Excerpt:

'That's what harassed husbands claimed when feminist author Eve Ensler refused to meet them after a long wait of 5 hours

I Am An Emotional Creature (link added), the latest play by American playwright Eve Ensler, of "Vagina Monologues" fame may have touched a chord with the city's women but the city's harassed husbands are angry at the way it portrays men.

They waited for five hours on Sunday at Kyra Theatre and Restaurant in Indiranagar where the play was being performed so they could meet Ensler and air their grievances, but it was in vain as Ensler refused to meet them.
...

"We were there to let her know about the situation in India, which is very different from that described in her play. Things shown here are far from reality and men are portrayed wrongly," said Mithun Kumar, another SIFF member.

The pamphlets distributed by the harassed husbands gave figures on how women commit atrocities against men and their women family members by misusing Section 498 (A).'

'Three parent babies' take a step closer to reality

Matt · 12 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I do believe there will come a time when a "child of the world" will be possible, made up of a genetic amalgam of selected people from across the planet, possibly with genes from a few ducks or tomatoes thrown in there for good measure. I can only imagine what the custody battle will look like. (Hey, do tomatoes have parental rights?) Excerpt:

'Researchers used eggs from young donors to repair damaged eggs of older women in order to increase their chances of fertilisation.

They have not yet used the eggs to produce babies, but they have injected them with sperm to produce an early stage embryo in the laboratory.

While the move breathes new life into "old eggs" and could also remove genetic illnesses, it is likely to provoke an ethical storm as critics believe it could lead to hybrid or genetically modified children.

"If we could transfer these constructed new embryos, I believe the success rate would be high," Atsushi Tanaka, the lead author told the New Scientist.

IVF often fails in older women because there are abnormalities in the outside of their eggs, known as cytoplasm, which surrounds the nucleus.'

New warning on 'perfect vaginas'

Matt · 12 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Boys get their genital skin removed without consultation, long before the age where they can give consent, and it's practically a mandate from the UN to keep doing it, if not speed it up. Adult women however choose to get their genitalia altered for cosmetic reasons and what few risks there are to the procedure become front-page news. At least the risk they are choosing to take does not include the real possibility of their genitalia being completely removed "by accident". Excerpt:

'Women are undergoing surgery to create perfect genitalia amid a "shocking" lack of information on the potential risks of the procedure, a report says.

Research published in the British Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology also questions the very notion of aesthetically pleasing genitals.

Operations to improve the appearance of the sex organs for both psychological and physical reasons are on the rise.

But surgeons said the report overplayed the risks of an established procedure.

Researchers from University College London reviewed all the existing studies on cosmetic labial surgery - which generally involves reducing the amount of tissue that protrudes from the lips which cover the vagina. They found there had been little work to document any longer-term side effects.'

Feministing: The Question of Accountability in Feminism

anthony · 12 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's about how men in the "pro-feminist" movement can be accountable to women, not how women can be accountable to others in general. Take a look at pick your jaw up off the floor-- or just laugh at the irony. Excerpt:

'One of the buzz words that kept coming up at the pro-feminist men's conference at St. John's last week was accountability. How can men be accountable to women? How can pro-feminist men be accountable to the feminist movement?

There were no easy answers. Michael Kaufman, founder of the White Ribbon Campaign, wisely debunked the idea that there is some all-powerful feminist committee who serve as the accountability police. Obviously it is a diverse movement filled with folks who would consider some things okay and others offensive--as evidenced by the comment section of this very blog on a daily basis.

On the other hand, it does seem critical for men interested in doing feminist work and identifying with the feminism to be accountable to certain basic ideas--like the notion that men have, for too long, possessed a disproportionate amount of power in our society. This means that in feminist spaces, men should be cognizant of how much they talk, what sort of influence they exert, what kind of leadership they inhabit. But then again, shouldn't men and women always strive to be cognizant of these things.'

Carey Roberts: Abuse Industry Teaches Women to Fear Men, Teaches Men to Fear Women

anthony · 12 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently I attended a domestic violence conference hosted by a church in my community. "The Church's Role in Addressing Domestic Violence in the Faith Community," the glossy brochure explained.
...
I opted to screen a video called "Defending our Lives," featuring the accounts of five women incarcerated for murdering their partners. All insisted their lethal actions were taken solely in self-defense.
...
The video then claimed domestic violence is the leading cause of injury to women. That myth has been debunked by persons like professor Richard Gelles of the University of Pennsylvania who derides such claims "factoids from nowhere." (The actual leading causes of female death are accidental falls, motor vehicle accidents, and over-exertion.)

And then the coup de grace: "Battered women who kill have longer sentences than serial rapists."

The source of that outrageous factoid? Well, nobody seemed to know -- and no one really cared. After all, we've got an epidemic of domestic violence on our hands, so any make-believe statistic will do.

The effect of the conference was to teach women to distrust and fear the men in their lives as latent, if not actual abusers. Husbands, boyfriends, brothers, even teenage sons - all are now suspect.

Also attending the conference were a State's Attorney and an aide to a federal Congressman. Realizing that women outnumber men in elections, politicians have become sympathetic to women's concerns these days.'

NOW President: Obama "pushing women back into the back alleys to die"

anthony · 12 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Feminists are the very definition of melodrama. Excerpt:

'She said she understood the president's frustration in wanting to pass health care reform, but "it is not acceptable for him to achieve that goal by pushing women back into the back alleys to die." And the anti-abortion amendment added to the health care reform legislation "does just that."

...

"There's no question that Hillary Clinton would have fought for our rights," she says. "There's no question that she would have understood the devastating implications of the Stupak-Pitts amendment. She would not have countenanced the Democratic leadership" of the House insisting that the amendment was allowed to be voted upon, which O'Neill says was a decision that essentially assured its inclusion in the bill.

Did she contact Clinton?

"She works for President Obama," O'Neill says, "so that wouldn't be appropriate."'

UK: Leicester woman sent to jail for false rape claim

anthony · 14 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman willingly had sex with two men and then falsely claimed they had raped her, a court heard.

Christina Dallison, who also made a false rape claim against another man four years earlier, wept as she was jailed for two years yesterday.

Leicester Crown Court was told the two 40-year-old men she wrongly accused were held in custody for 20 hours, and underwent humiliating intimate tests.

All three innocent male victims endured the anxiety of facing prosecution for several months, until the cases were dropped.

Dallison (27), a former escort of Dunton Street, Woodgate, Leicester, committed the offences because she suffered from a personality disorder and craved attention.'

UK: Woman who lied over two false rape claims jailed for two years

anthony · 14 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman of 22 who falsely claimed two men had raped her was jailed for two years yesterday.

Chloe Dolton told police two men attacked her as she walked home.

The two Polish pals - one of whom had only been in Britain for 48 hours - spent 24 hours in a cell as part of a police probe costing £86,500.

It was later found Dolton had consensual sex twice with one man before inviting his friend to a shelter where she performed a sex act.
...
Dolton lied about the encounter to her boyfriend and family because of the "shame and regret" she felt about it, Exeter crown court heard.'

South Africa: First summer circumcision death

anthony · 14 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Cape Town - As the Eastern Cape recorded its first death of the summer circumcision season, the province's health department on Friday urged parents to play a stronger role in protecting their sons.

Spokesperson Sizwe Kupelo said the 19-year-old youth died of dehydration last week at an initiation school in the Butterworth area of Transkei.

Last month, following 55 deaths in the winter season, the department and traditional leaders held a summit on circumcision in Mthatha.

Kupelo said the department would now work even more closely with traditional leaders and the police in combating abuses.'

Video: Circumcision Decisions on 'Today' Show

anthony · 14 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'As Meredith Vieira points out, it's no secret that proud dads like to see their sons reflected in themselves. There's nothing cuter than matching haircuts and Hawaiian shirts, but why stop there?

Just imagine your pride years down the road when envious pals are admiring his stylishly snipped member and he can say, "Yep, it's just like my old man's!"

Male Genital Mutilation: Why circumcision should be stopped

anthony · 14 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Millions of baby boys are circumcised every year in the USA. This practice of snipping off part of a baby`s pe*is, usually without anesthesia (since people have widely believed that anesthesia can be fatal to babies, and if not, that it would hurt as much to have the anesthesia done as it would to just have the circumcision done) has been around for centuries.

But recent studies have shown that, as usual, we have underestimated the senses of newborns. It`s become apparent that circumcision for babies, especially without anesthesia, is not only incredibly painful and traumatic, but it also increases the risk of choking in babies.

Then again, who really cares about the pain of the newborn? They won`t remember it anyway, right?

Actually, wrong. There are severe psychological effects associated with the trauma of a circumcision. Male circumcision is not much different from female circumcision both are forms of genital mutilation that leave a person scarred for life.'

The Atlantic Wire: Fighting for the Future of Feminism

anthony · 14 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is feminism dead? Leslie Sanchez hopes so, and her new book has more than a few feminists up in arms. Debates about female politicians, or the backlash to women's liberation, aren't new, but the New Yorker's Ariel Levy is wondering how feminism got to be so divisive. She addresses some of the book's pressing questions: What is feminism now? Has Sarah Palin broken the mold for politically ambitious women? What does the feminist movement, after the victories of past decades, still have anything to offer? As liberal advocates of female empowerment engage in some soul-searching, here are their answers:'

UK: Climate change is not a feminist issue

anthony · 14 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's tempting to suggest that climate change, and in particular the question of population control, is a feminist issue. For starters it allows us to put a clear culprit in the dock: find the right stats and hey presto: "Men are all bastards and their irresponsible actions are destroying the planet."

Mary Fitzgerald recently argued that population control is at heart a feminist issue because, if women across the globe (and particularly those in "developing" nations) are given the right to control their bodies via universal birth control, this will halt the potentially disastrous upward curve of the birth rate. Alex Renton has also urged that "population reduction is best achieved by ensuring women's equality and improving their education, while providing cheap and effective birth control."'

Report of LGBT domestic violence finds 125% increase in fatalities

anthony · 14 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new report on LGBT domestic violence has found that there was a 125% increase in domestic violence-related fatalities in 2008.

Boston has seen the real-life ramifications of the drastic increase. Nicole Chuminksi is alleged to have set fire to her girlfriend Anna Reisopolous' South Boston home on April 6, 2008 after an argument, killing two of Reisopolous' children.

"As seen in the national report, and echoed by the fire in South Boston, partner abuse in LGBT communities can be just as lethal as that in heterosexual communities," said Beth Leventhal, executive director of The Network/La Red, a local organization whose findings were included in the report. "And the effects of domestic violence on children can be devastating."'

Mother faces charges in N.C. girl's disappearance

anthony · 15 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"(CNN) -- The mother of a missing North Carolina girl has been charged with human trafficking and other offenses, authorities said Saturday night.

Other charges against Antoinette Nicole Davis include felony child abuse, prostitution and filing a false police report, according to the Fayetteville Police Department. No more details were released on the arrest.

The whereabouts of her daughter, 5-year-old Shaniya Davis, remain unknown. Her mother told police Tuesday that she vanished from their mobile home in Fayetteville.

However, hotel surveillance video taken around the same time Shaniya was reported missing shows the girl with a man identified as Mario Andrette McNeill. He has been charged with first-degree kidnapping."

Man released after more than six years in prison after conviction overturned due to DNA evidence

anthony · 15 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Madison man who served more than six years in prison for a sexual assault he said he didn't commit was ordered released Friday after a Dane County Circuit judge overturned his conviction.

Judge Patrick Fiedler cited new DNA evidence and newly developed scientific research on faulty eyewitness identification in throwing out his own judgment of conviction in the 2002 case against Forest Shomberg.

Shomberg's attorney, Byron Lichstein of the Wisconsin Innocence Project, praised the decision.

"I think the judge followed the law and found significant new information that came up since the trial," he said.'

Suicides in U.S. Army Are on Track to Reach New High

anthony · 15 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nov. 13 (Bloomberg) -- The number of suicides among active- duty U.S. Army troops this year reached 133 in October, 18 more than in the same period last year and putting the service within reach of a new annual high.

The 133 reported suicides, including the National Guard and Reserves, between January and October compared with 115 during the same period in 2008 when the service recorded 140 by year's end, an annual record, the Army said in a statement.

The rate of suicide within the Army last year was 20.2 per 100,000 personnel, exceeding for the first time the age-adjusted rate in the civilian population, which was 19.2, according to the National Institute of Mental Health. The institute has paired with the Army to undertake the biggest study ever of suicide and behavioral health among military personnel.'

California Activist Alert: Legislation to ban PAS for consideration in child custody matters pending

Matt · 16 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Along with organizations like the Child Advocacy Center, the Leadership Council on Child Abuse and Interpersonal Violence and the California Protective Parents Association, the CJE believes there is a crisis in the family courts, and that abused children are being handed over to their abusers. One CJE study claims that 38 percent of fathers who are identified as perpetrators of abuse receive full custody of their children.

That statistic, and many others cited by these organizations, could not be independently verified. But there enough evidence of a problem that Sacramento lawmakers, including San Jose Assemblymember Jim Beall Jr., are calling for changes to state law regarding parental custody disputes.

Members of the Center for Judicial Excellence say one serious problem in family courts is that highly disputable, nonscientific theories are used as evidence in the courtroom, and frequently carry a huge amount of weight in many cases. The new law, co-sponsored by Beall, specifically bars theories such as the often-used "parent alienation syndrome" from child custody cases.

Beall sat alongside Anderson during a panel discussion at last week's meeting, where he talked about his Assembly Bill 612, which proposes a solution to problems in family court by establishing evidence standards. If A.B. 612 passes, courts will be prohibited from considering these unproven theories when deciding child custody or visitation rights. A.B. 612 will also eliminate training in these theories from Judicial Council–approved education for family court professionals.'

Ed. note: Hyperlinks added. At the moment, despite being passed in the Assembly, it looks like the bill remains unaddressed in the state Senate Judiciary Committee. Bills can be tracked here, however, and California activists may want to revisit that or the status link regularly and/or express their opinions about it to their state senators pro-actively.

It does not look like the bill has had a Senate bill number assigned to it, so tracking it via key words like "nonscientific theories" or the A.B. 612 Assembly bill number must suffice for now.

Chemical BPA in male workers linked to sex problems

Broadsword · 16 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Male factory workers in China who got very high doses of a chemical that's been widely used in hard plastic bottles had high rates of sexual problems, researchers reported Wednesday.

Heavy exposure to BPA, or bisphenol A, on the job was linked to impotence and lower sexual desire and satisfaction, according to the study, which adds to concerns about BPA's effects on most consumers.

The men in the study experienced BPA levels about 50 times higher than those faced by typical American men, said researcher Dr. De-Kun Li. "We don't know" whether more typical doses have similar effects, he said.
...
BPA is used in a wide variety of consumer products, including some hard plastic bottles and metal food or beverage cans. Several makers of baby bottles recently said they had stopped using the chemical. Some 90 percent of the U.S. population carries detectable levels in the urine.

Scientists are concerned that BPA exposure might harm the reproductive and nervous systems, and possibly promote prostate and breast cancers. Last year, a preliminary study linked BPA to possible risks for heart disease and diabetes.

The Food and Drug Administration concluded last year that trace amounts of BPA that leach out of bottles and food containers are not dangerous. But the FDA is now reviewing that stance after criticism from its scientific advisers."

Very Weak Magnetic Fields Lower Sperm Quality

Broadsword · 16 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A study has found that household chores including using a vacuum cleaner or microwave oven – could reduce a mans chances of having children.

Researchers exposed male volunteers to electromagnetic fields high doses of which are produced by all electrically charged objects, including refrigerators and vacuum cleaners and found such exposure could double the risk of having poor-quality sperm.

...

He said of the research, due to be published in January in the journal Reproductive Toxicology:

‘This is the first study to show a link between measured electromagnetic fields and poor semen quality in humans, which may provide a logical explanation for why we have seen reductions in sperm quality in men over the past century.’

Although the study did not look at what was producing the magnetic fields, electrical appliances – especially those containing motors such as hairdryers – produce high frequencies and therefore strong magnetic fields.'

Pilot Study Relates Phthalate Exposure to Less-Masculine Play by Boys

Broadsword · 16 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A study of 145 preschool children reports, for the first time, that when the concentrations of two common phthalates in mothers' prenatal urine are elevated their sons are less likely to play with male-typical toys and games, such as trucks and play fighting.

...

Because testosterone produces the masculine brain, researchers are concerned that fetal exposure to anti-androgens such as phthalates – which are pervasive in the environment – has the potential to alter masculine brain development, said lead author Shanna H. Swan, Ph.D., professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology, director of the URMC Center for Reproductive Epidemiology, and an expert in phthalates.

"Our results need to be confirmed, but are intriguing on several fronts," Swan said. "Not only are they consistent with our prior findings that link phthalates to altered male genital development, but they also are compatible with current knowledge about how hormones mold sex differences in the brain, and thus behavior. We have more work to do, but the implications are potentially profound."'

Men: The second sex?

Broadsword · 16 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'These days, outside top City circles, being a man does not signify first-class status. In much of modern life, maleness means coming second. For instance, boys are now less likely than girls to succeed in school and are less likely to apply for and get into university. Last year there were 172,925 female undergraduates and only 141,643 male. Teenage boys are more likely to take drugs, drink, commit crime and exhibit antisocial behaviour. They also tend to spend longer out of work and in training. Society has become “feminised” in the skills it values: multitasking, communication, sitting still in front of a computer — all these play to female strengths rather than male ones. And accordingly, the social status of masculinity is changing. In many areas it is men who are now The Second Sex, as Simone De Beauvoir, the feminist philosopher, described women in 1949.
...
The dearth of male teachers in primary schools and the high numbers of single mothers in areas such as Moston leave many boys with no such father figure. Meanwhile, many relationships break down because of domestic violence, leaving boys with a sense that men are hated and hate them.
...

Fishwick believes there is yet another problem facing his youngsters: the education system itself. Is the curriculum weighted against boys? “I have spent 30 years teaching in mixed schools. In my experience the system favours the girls; they are more sophisticated in communication and emotional awareness. They mature earlier. At 13 or 14, pupils have to make choices that will affect the rest of their lives. The girls are in a much better place to do that. And changes to the curriculum also play to their strengths.”
...
If women continue to dominate the learning sphere, more men are going to have to learn the Llanelli lesson. Perhaps Duffield and his peers are the last generation of men who will be able to assume that they rule the world. In future no man will be able to ask his question. But what makes me profoundly optimistic are the extraordinary men I met while researching this piece; there are remarkable role models out there waiting to lead our lost boys into the future.

They may not be lost, however, so much as tentatively finding their way to a new kind of manhood. If the relationships of the future include massage, supper — crispy potatoes, even — things are looking up, not least for the exhausted career woman who walks through the door in the evening. As Simone de Beauvoir said in 1949, “The free woman is just being born.” Could the same now be true of men?'

Body of Shaniya Davis Found Along North Carolina Highway

Matt · 16 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Disgusting gruesome story here. Of course they could not pass up a swipe at fathers. Excerpt:

'The body of 5-year-old Shaniya Davis was found alongside a North Carolina highway near her hometown, according to Raleigh ABC affiliate WTVD.

Shaniya had been missing for nearly a week. Her mother, Antoinette Davis, 25, was due in court today on charges of human trafficking and child prostitution.

Fayetteville Police spokewoman Theresa Chance told ABCNews.com today that officers had been searching a portion of Interstate 87 between Harnett and Lee counties.

"Information that we received leads us here as far as where the body was discarded," she said.

...

"It's frightening to learn about the age of entry into prostitution being 12 to 14," he told ABCNews.com today.

In general when parents traffic their own children, the fathers tend to be violent and abusive, while the mothers are typically desperate.

"But no poverty or economic desperation can along explain the prostitution of a child," he said.'

PhD Science student by day, US$600/hr "escort" by night

Matt · 16 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

It's almost too good. Read here. Excerpt:

'One of the best kept literary secrets of the decade was revealed last night when 34-year-old scientist Dr Brooke Magnanti announced she was the writer masquerading as call girl Belle de Jour.
...
Until last week, even her agent was unaware of her name. But now Magnanti, a respected specialist in developmental neurotoxicology and cancer epidemiology in a hospital research group in Bristol, has spoken of the time six years ago she worked as a £300 an hour prostitute working through a London escort agency. ...
...
"I did have another job at one point, as a computer programmer, but I kept up with my other work because it was so much more enjoyable."

Magnanti said her future lies in medical science, but she also has a literary streak. She has been writing a novel, and the Belle blog will "continue for a bit — I'd like her to have happy ending".'

Her "other work" was "so enjoyable" that instead of computer programming (which as we all know pays durned near nothin'!), she'd rather stick with turning tricks at 300 quid an hour. Well, really, I can't say I blame her. You just can't beat the money, and the "work" is pretty easy.

Why, if I were a woman... :)

Lesbians make 'better parents', says senior parenting official

ActaNonVerba · 16 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stephen Scott, director of research at the National Academy for Parenting Practitioners, has said his research shows children from lesbian couples do better in life than the offspring of heterosexual couples.

"Lesbians make better parents than a man and a women," Mr Scott told a meeting for the launch of think tank Demos...'

I hope the UK MRA's start getting this deconstructed. Personally, I'm 100% sure that once the study's methodology is assessed, this so-called study will prove to be, at best, misleading and, at worst, false.

[Ed. note: obviously, if dads are worthless, then two mothers are better than one. Right?]

Soldier mom refuses deployment to care for baby

Matt · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I sympathize, of course. I just wonder if "Single dad refuses deployment to care for baby" would elicit the same tone of writing. I am sure if someone took the time to ask, they could find a single dad deployed overseas in similar circumstances. I just doubt his story would get published. Excerpt:

'SAVANNAH, Ga. – An Army cook and single mom may face criminal charges after she skipped her deployment flight to Afghanistan because, she said, no one was available to care for her infant son while she was overseas.

Spc. Alexis Hutchinson, 21, claims she had no choice but to refuse deployment orders because the only family she had to care for her 10-month-old son — her mother — was overwhelmed by the task, already caring for three other relatives with health problems.

...

The Army requires all single-parent soldiers to submit a care plan for dependent children before they can deploy to a combat zone.

Hutchinson had such a plan — her mother, Angelique Hughes, had agreed to care for the boy. Hughes said Monday she kept the boy for about two weeks in October before deciding she couldn't keep him for a full year.

Hughes said she's already having to care for her ailing mother and sister, as well as a daughter with special needs. She also runs a daycare center at her home, keeping about 14 children during the day.'

UK: Poll reveals a third of family break-up children lose contact with fathers

Matt · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One in three children whose parents separated or divorced over the last 20 years disclosed that they had lost contact permanently with their father.

Almost a tenth of children from broken families said the acrimonious process had left them feeling suicidal while others later sought solace in drink, drugs or crime.

They complained of feeling “isolated” and “used” while parents admitted having used children as “bargaining tools” against each other.

Lawyers said the study showed that the court system itself was making family break-up more acrimonious with children used as "pawns".

They warned that so-called “no fault” divorces were encouraging warring parents to channel their “bloodletting” into disputes over contact.'

UK: Claims of sex abuse by women grow

Anonymous · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A huge rise in the number of children calling to report sexual abuse by women has been revealed by Childline. Over the past five years, the charity says the number of such calls has risen five times faster than youngsters reporting abuse by a man.

...

Of 16,094 children who called Childline about sex abuse last year, 2,142 told of abuse by a woman, up 132% on 2004-5. Men still account for the majority of child abuse claims, but the NSPCC said female sex abuse was under-reported.

...

This is because there is a reluctance or unwillingness on the part of professionals to acknowledge or identify sexual abuse by females, the charity suggested. The research follows the recent high-profile case of nursery worker Vanessa George, who abused children in her care. She was a member of an internet paedophile ring which included another woman.

...

Childline's report did not claim that sexual abuse by women was on the rise. It instead suggested that, as more boys were tending to call its helpline, more cases were being reported.

...

"Many would find it shocking that any woman - let alone a mother - can sexually assault a child. But they do."'

Corporations supporting International Men's Day

webdigr · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Recently HBO (a TV movie channel) announced that throughout November, they will celebrate the "Men are Back" movie festival. Especially, they plan to show a movies related to men, every Thursday, November 19 being one of those days.

Also, an apparel company of India, Allen Solly has announced special promotional offer targeting women, asking them to gift their men something special on November 19th on the occasion of International Men's Day!

No wonder the concept of Men's Rights and an International Men's Day is catching up fast across the world. The day is not far when we'll see International Men's Day recognized across the globe and be given an official status by the UN.

Wish you all a Very Happy International Men's Day on 19th November.

UK: Registry in planning stages for convicted and "suspected wife beaters"

ActaNonVerba · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Men with a history of domestic violence could be put on a register so that any future partners can be warned about them.

The controversial plan, which is being drawn up by the Association of Chief Police Officers, would list around 25,000 suspected and convicted serial wife beaters.

Police would approach women with the information if they are notified that a man on the register has moved home.

Alternatively, women could be given the right to ask about the past of a man they are with.

A small number of pilot areas are already trying out a similar system in relation to sex offenders.
...
Home Secretary Alan Johnson said: 'These proposals will stimulate important debate about how we can reach our future goal of preventing these cowardly crimes but also how to protect victims of domestic violence and tackle the abusers in the shorter term.'

Theresa May, Tory spokesman on women, said: 'No woman should live in fear of violence. What is needed is a coordinated and comprehensive strategy with prevention as the key priority.'"

Woman pleads guilty to charges in Smart kidnapping

Matt · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SALT LAKE CITY – A woman charged in the 2002 kidnapping of Elizabeth Smart pleaded guilty Tuesday as part of a deal with federal prosecutors and asked Smart to forgive her for all the pain she had caused.

Wanda Eileen Barzee apologized in court, saying she was "humbled as I realize how much Elizabeth Smart has been victimized and the role that I played in it."

"I am so sorry, Elizabeth, for all the pain and suffering I have caused you and your family," Barzee, 64, said. "It is my hope that you will be able to find it in your heart to forgive me."

Smart, now 22 and preparing to serve a mission in Paris for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, was not in court. But her father, Ed Smart, made a statement there.'

Two Moms Get Into Stabbing Brawl Outside School

Matt · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Now there's setting an example to the kids! But wait.. there must be some men behind this somewhere... find and arrest them at once! Excerpt:

'Rochester Police say two mothers got into a fight while dropping their kids off at school and ended up stabbing each other.

It happened on Avenue A near School #8 just before 8 a.m. Police say a 24-year-old woman pulled out a knife and stabbed a 23-year-old woman, cutting her face and neck.

The victim then tried to take the knife and ended up stabbing the suspect in the buttocks. The suspect then ran into the school.
...
"Administrators are obviously taken aback as to what occurred here today," said LaRon Singletary, of the RPD. "There were children that were out here. There was no threat to anyone in the school - the weapon never made it into the school, and the school took the appropriate action as far as locking down the school."

The suspect was later taken into custody without incident. Neither woman was seriously hurt. The suspect faces assault charges.'

Examiner: 'There's no crying in baseball! A modern rant about feminism'

anthony · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I see challenges as something to be overcome - if being a woman makes the road more difficult, then I will be at an advantage over the others from the lessons I learn in my journey. Rather than changing society by appealing to emotions alone, women should be able to discredit previously held notions of their roles and capabilities through their actions. Truth be told however, there are biological differences that predispose women to certain roles over others. Not all women will follow such patterns of course, and their unique presence will provide them with unique opportunities. They are the exception however, that will not and should not create the rule.

The feminist theory both tries to discredit gender theories based on biology and then tries to argue that "masculine" actions unfairly affect women based on their biologically predisposed roles (motherhood to caretaker). It seems absurd to complain about being classified by certain characteristics because they are untrue and then argue to be treated differently because you can't help those same characteristics that you just argued were untrue.'

Woman Indicted For Making False Rape Claim

anthony · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A Shelby woman was indicted by the Richland County Grand Jury on charges of escape, falsification and making false allegations after she ran out of a police cruiser in early October and accused the officer of raping her.

The incident began when Samantha Ramirez, 19, collapsed during a hearing in Shelby Municipal Court and was taken to MedCentral Shelby Hospital for treatment by Shelby Police Officer John Guisinger. After treatment, Ramirez was being transported to the Richland County Jail when she jumped out of the vehicle an fled.

She was later found at Ashland Samaritan Hospital where she accused the officer of raping her. She later confessed she lied.'

ESU false-rape-report case heading to county court

anthony · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Charged with lying about being raped at East Stroudsburg University, former student Laura Gruver, 22, of Bethlehem, waived her right to a preliminary hearing Tuesday before Magisterial District Judge Michael Muth and will head to Monroe County Court.

Gruver, who is free on $5,000 unsecured bail, will appear at a future date in district court, where she can go to trial or plead guilty/no contest.

...

A first-time offender with no prior criminal record, Gruver is charged with giving a false report, a misdemeanor punishable by up to a year in Monroe County Correctional Facility.

Police said Gruver at first told them the following story:

At 11 a.m. Aug. 13, she was walking to her car in the parking lot, behind the Dansbury Commons cafeteria, when someone grabbed her from behind, put a knife to her throat, forced her into the woods to the ground and raped her.'

S. Africa: False rape claim - woman pleads guilty

anthony · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Folweni woman who recently claimed she had been kidnapped and repeatedly raped, on Monday pleaded guilty to the charges against her at the Empangeni District Court.

Sindisiwe Buthelezi, 34, was charged with defeating the ends of justice as well as contravening the provisions of the Commissioners of Oaths Act. She pleaded guilty on Monday and was convicted.

Buthelezi had earlier reported to police that she had been in Durban when she was picked up by someone who promised her a job in Isipingo.

She told police the person did not take the Isipingo turn-off, but drove to Umzinto and dropped her off with three men in a bakkie, where there were two other women, before being taken to an unknown area. She said their faces had been covered and she had not been able see where they were going.'

Teacher sex case nets 12-year prison sentence

anthony · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Portland High School teacher convicted of having sex with her underage teacher's aide has been sentenced to 12 years in prison.

District Attorney Ray Whitley said Sandy Binkley "got what she had coming to her."

"(Judge Dee Gay) gave her the maximum sentence and that's what she deserved," Whitley said.

David Ridings, Binkley's attorney, said it was the most egregious abuse of justice in sentencing that he has ever seen. "We hoped that (the judge) would follow the law. He failed miserably at that," Ridings said.

Binkley's attorney had hoped the former teacher would be sentenced to no more than three years. He plans to appeal.
...
Binkley, 37, the former teacher, was convicted Sept. 29 in Sumner County on two counts of statutory rape by an authority figure.'

Australia: Female teacher admits sex with students

anthony · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Ballarat teacher who last month admitted to having sexual liaisons with two students has faced court for her plea hearing.

Michelle Lynn Dennis, 33, pleaded guilty in the County Count at Ballarat in October to two counts of sexual penetration of a child under supervision and one count of sexual penetration of a child under 16.

Dennis was teaching at Ballarat High School when she committed the offences against two students in 2007.

The former music teacher engaged in the sexual acts outside the school's grounds.

Dennis was arrested and charged in October, 2008, and stood down from the school.

She was also suspended from teaching by the Department of Education and Early Childhood Development.'

UK: Ritual circumcisions 'illegal'

anthony · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DOCTORS performing ritual circumcisions on children face financial ruin, disciplinary action and even jail.

A test-case being brought by a 20-year-old man circumcised as a baby could, if successful, open the floodgates to claimants.

The unnamed man is to sue a GP still practising in Greater London for physical and psychological damage.

He will argue that circumcision on a child without a medical requirement is mutilation.

His father took him to be circumcised shortly after birth in accordance with his own religious beliefs.

Now the father is mortified at the mental and physical state of his adult son, and is supporting the case.
...
"This is not a straightforward case. Parents have the right to give consent but only when in the best interests of a child. I don't think any act involving cutting off half of a child's penis is in their best interests."'

UPI: Both men and women maintain sexism

anthony · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MIAMI, Nov. 16 (UPI) -- Both men and women respond in a more hostile way to a woman who violates sex-role expectations, U.S. researchers say.

Co-authors Blaine Fowers, professor at the University of Miami, and Alyssa Fowers, a student at Duke University, said even though both men and women participate in maintaining a gender hierarchy in U.S. society, sexism is a form of social hierarchy that is beneficial to men and detrimental to women.

The study, published in the journal of Sex Roles, also found women show a strong preference for benevolent sexism -- portraying women as relatively weak, placing them on a pedestal of purity and suggesting they need protection and guidance -- over hostile sexism, the derogatory portrayals of women.
...
The researchers said both hostile sexism and benevolent sexism are harmful, because both support a gender hierarchy that limits and marginalizes women.'

Canada: 'Ice those sexism charges'

anthony · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You have to give the Toronto Leaside Girls Hockey Association credit for political smarts. Finding itself fighting for ice time on the city's overbooked rinks, it pulled out that ace of aces, the sexism card.

The 900-member association wrote a letter to Mayor David Miller threatening to launch a human-rights complaint for sex discrimination unless the city makes sure the girls get their share of ice. The mayor rushed to the mikes to promise that he would correct this monstrous injustice, even if it meant taking the issue to a vote at city council.

A Toronto Star editorial called it a clear case of “discrimination on ice.” But where is the evidence that the Leaside girls were discriminated against because of their sex – a serious charge indeed in the year 2009? Were they told they didn't rate ice time because they were girls?

No, the charge rests on the league's struggle to find affordable ice time. League president Ron Baker said it has spent more than $1-million over the past five years booking expensive private rinks because there isn't enough time available at public arenas.
...
...The way to get girls on ice isn't to wave around groundless charges of sexism. If the leaders of the girls' league would “smarten up,” says Mr. Gardner, “they would work together with the boys' groups to go after the city for more ice. That would make a lot more sense.” It surely would.'

Australia: Women-only trips breach male rights

anthony · 17 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A judge ruled that former tour guide Erin Maitland cannot advertise women-only holidays because it could breach the human rights of men.

Judge Marilyn Harbison refused to grant Ms Maitland an exemption to the Equal Opportunity Act, ruling that she had not proved it was reasonable or necessary.

"The exemption may well be convenient and practical in the establishment of her business, but it cannot be justified on human rights principles," said the vice-president of the Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal.
...
The judge said Ms Maitland believed Travel Sisters would provide security for women, re-assure male partners who could not travel and be used by women who did not want to mix with men for cultural or religious reasons or because they were victims of domestic violence or sexual assault.

Her application was opposed by the Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission, which said it would conflict with Victoria's Charter of Human Rights.'

Conference seeks ways to keep boys in school

anthony · 18 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'SANDIA PUEBLO, N.M. (AP) - Educators and community members from across New Mexico will meet Tuesday to find out why education is failing boys.

'The New Mexico Men's Council for Boys and Young Men (ed.: link added) will hold its second annual conference at Sandia Resort and Casino. The gathering will focus on closing the achievement gap for boys in education.

Conference organizers say dropout data from 2008 show that fewer than half the boys in New Mexico graduate from high school and only about 42 percent of students in colleges and universities are male.

They say as boys leave school, many turn to drugs and alcohol and violence which then drives up rates of addiction and domestic violence.

The organizers hope the conference will help mobilize parents, teachers, administrators and students to address the problem.'

Huffington Post Blog: 'Mrs. Obama, What About Our Boys?'

anthony · 18 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Michelle Obama touched down in Denver today to promote her efforts to connect America's public school students with professional mentors, she declined to send an invitation to one population who could most benefit: our city's neglected boys.

...

Over the years, I've written frequently about sexism against our boys. Perhaps it seems ironic given that I'm the mother of two girls. I do so, however, knowing that today's girl-power hype sends the wrong message to my own girls. Like professional working moms across the country, I provide my daughters an imperfect but devoted mentor right inside their own home. And gender has nothing to do with it, as they'll also see their father balance life's responsibilities and his own professional ambitions.

...

In an already overly complicated world, I don't need to explain why the First Lady believes that picking winners or losers based on gender is okay. It's not -- never has been and never will be.'

School discipline data show guys got in trouble three times as often as girls

anthony · 18 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Across the Juneau School District, 75 percent of all principal-level discipline occurred with a male student in the 2008-09 school year, according to data from district Director of Student Services Dave Newton.

Juneau-Douglas High School guidance counselor Frank Coenraad said one reason may be differing levels of school connectedness.

"I don't want to just say 'Boys will be boys,'" he said. "I feel that the more connected the student is at the high school, less in terms of behavioral issues will arise."

...

In the district's recent 2008-2009 student achievement report, girls outperformed boys in reading, writing and math. Boys outperformed girls in science.

While nationwide reports in recent years point to a changing gender achievement gap between boys and girls, the independent think tank Education Sector says the hype is overrated in its report, "The Evidence Suggests Otherwise: The Truth about Boys and Girls."

"The real story is not bad news about boys doing worse; it's good news about girls doing better," it says.'

Funding cuts leaves boys cutting wood

anthony · 18 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Desperate times call for disparate thinking. High school sports budgets are being squeezed even tighter this year and students are finding that they'll have to come up with creative funding, if they want extra travel or new uniforms.

Last week, the senior boys basketball team kicked off their fall fundraiser with a bottle drive, firewood delivery and leaf raking service. If the weather goes cold, they'll also be available for snow shovelling.

...

"We've had to cut back the amount we can charge each student for each sport they take part in," said Fisher. "Last year, it was $75 per sport for the major senior sports... soccer, basketball and volleyball. This year, we can only charge $50.'

Jobless, homeless, all this small band has is each other

Anonymous · 18 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"We met these three homeless men at the Urban Ministry Center where they had turned up for a meal at the soup kitchen, and they agreed to let us follow them around for the day.
...
As we walk, Corbett and Everhart tell us about the day laboring work they do for an agency, which sends people out to work as unskilled and semi-skilled laborers — usually construction or demolition work. If they get a day's work, they get $40 after taxes.

This involves walking two hours from their camp to be at the agency by 5:30am; otherwise there is no chance they will find any work.

"If we're lucky, we get one or two days of work a week," Everhart said. "Sometimes there are 50 or more guys out there and maybe 10 of them get work."
...

The men said they often lose out to younger men, who are preferred by the temp agency for the physical work they do.
...
Everhart has an ex-wife and has to pay child support, so some desperate days he "hangs the sign," standing by the road with a sign saying "hungry and need work" or a variation on that theme.

"It's risky to do because it's illegal and you can get arrested," he said. "But I have to pay my child support or they'll throw me in jail anyway. I haven't missed a payment yet."
...
Hawkins said that even though they are working whenever they can – he himself is limited in what he can do because he cannot stand for long periods on his prosthetic leg – prospective employers look down on them.'

U.S. lags in paid sick days, work benefits

Michael · 18 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of the world's 15 most competitive nations, 14 mandate paid sick leave, 13 guarantee paid maternal leave and 12 provide paid paternal leave by law, they said. Eleven provide paid leave to care for children's health and eight provide paid leave for adult family care.

The United States legally guarantees none of these policies to workers, the authors note....

Advocates for women's rights argue paid family leave is essential for women, who tend to care more for family members than do men, to compete and advance in the job market.
...
"One of the questions that's consistently asked in the United States is ... will we be able to compete if we have paid sick leave, paid maternity leave?" said author Jody Heymann of McGill's Institute for Health and Social Policy. "Will there be more unemployment? Will we lose jobs?'

Hair-pulling soccer player both sorry and defiant

Matt · 18 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Like clockwork: I'm a girl so it's harder for me. Same old story, here. Excerpt:

'Lambert said she does not recognize herself pulling down Kassidy Shumway by the BYU player's ponytail during a Nov. 5 game in the Mountain West Conference semifinals.

"I look at it and I'm like, 'That is not me,' " Lambert told The New York Times. "I have so much regret. I can't believe I did that."

However, Lambert contends other aggressive play, including elbowing an opponent in the back, trips and hard tackles, and an episode in which she seemed to throw a punch at an opponent's head, were to some degree misunderstood by casual fans.

Lambert, who called the apparent punch inadvertent, said her actions were blown out of proportion because they occurred in a women's game.

"I definitely feel because I am a female it did bring about a lot more attention than if a male were to do it," Lambert said. "It's more expected for men to go out there and be rough..."'

And there you have it. "...more expected for men to go out there and be rough." For this reason, it is OK for her not to just be rough but basically to commit what would otherwise be assault? And then not get called on it until her behavior just got so bad that someone had to do something to stop it? If a male player grabbed another fellow by the hair like that and pulled him down, he'd be suspended for I-dunno-how-many games and probably beat up by the other team's players, and without much sympathy from the coaching staff or fans, either.

"I'm just a girl", just like the song says. If she is going to wear an unflattering nickname, I rather think "Princess Elizabeth" seems to fit better than "loco Lobo", since she strikes me less as being nuts and more as being your typical spoiled-rotten and petulant teen princess that has become the norm.

15-Year-Old Missouri Girl Indicted in Murder of Neighbor, 9

anthony · 19 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Blessed with a Friday off school, 15-year-old Alyssa Bustamante dug two holes in the ground to be used as a grave, authorities said. For the next week, she attended classes, all the while plotting the right time for a murder, they said.

That time arrived the evening of Oct. 21, when Bustamante strangled 9-year-old neighbor Elizabeth Olten without provocation, cut the girl's throat and stabbed her, prosecutors said. Why?

"Ultimately, she stated she wanted to know what it felt like," Missouri State Highway Patrol Sgt. David Rice testified Wednesday during a court hearing over the slaying.

...

Cook recommended Bustamante be tied as an adult. Cole County Circuit Judge Jon Beetem agreed, saying the killing was vicious and that the state had no adequate facilities or services to treat Bustamante if she remained in the juvenile system.

Bill Heberle, with the Missouri Division of Youth Services, testified that the state has no secure facilities with fences for female juveniles. Youths in Missouri's juvenile system generally are housed in group settings and are not typically watched by staff 24 hours a day, he said.'

CNN: Women 'bearing brunt' of climate change

anthony · 19 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In a report released on Wednesday, UNFPA warns that it is women in the developing world such as Quispe who are bearing the brunt of the worsening and accelerating impact of climate change.
...
According to the report, women in poorer societies are most at risk because they make up a larger share of the agricultural workforce and have fewer income-earning opportunities. They also shoulder the burden of caring for other family members and household management, limiting their mobility and trapping them in a cycle of deprivation, poverty and inequality.

"For many people, especially poor women in poor countries, climate change is here and now," said UNFPA Executive Director Thoraya Ahmed Obaid. "Poor women in poor countries are among the hardest hit by climate change even though they contributed the least to it."
...
"Helping women to make their own decisions about family size would protect their health, make their lives easier, help put their countries on a sustainable path towards development -- and ensure lower greenhouse-gas emissions in the long run," said Obaid.'

UK: Ex-soldier faces jail for handing in gun

Anonymous · 19 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former soldier who handed a discarded shotgun in to police faces at least five years imprisonment for "doing his duty".

Paul Clarke, 27, was found guilty of possessing a firearm at Guildford Crown Court on Tuesday – after finding the gun and handing it personally to police officers on March 20 this year.

The jury took 20 minutes to make its conviction, and Mr Clarke now faces a minimum of five year's imprisonment for handing in the weapon.

In a statement read out in court, Mr Clarke said: "I didn't think for one moment I would be arrested.

"I thought it was my duty to hand it in and get it off the streets."

...

Prosecuting, Brian Stalk, explained to the jury that possession of a firearm was a "strict liability" charge – therefore Mr Clarke's allegedly honest intent was irrelevant.

Just by having the gun in his possession he was guilty of the charge, and has no defence in law against it, he added.'

Intact America: Intactivists appear on 'The Today Show'

Matt · 19 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Caption:

"Georganne Chapin appeared on The Today Show to speak about the risks, harms, and ethics of infant circumcision – and why the AAP and AAFP should NOT recommend it.

Watch the segment, and send a letter to the AAP and AAFP opposing circumcision!"

The last 40 secs. includes a brief commentary between the hosts (both women). That piece of this segment was reported previously here on MANN. Note the seeming frivolity with which this question is spoken about by one woman. The charged moment of silence between the two as the other sought to formulate a reply that was something other than "God, what a stupid comment!" was heartening to see, though.

What was not at all heartening was the fact that the baby in the story got circumcised even though the baby's father was clearly against it. That is the power that the mother's role in this decision about it holds - I can only imagine what was going through his head as he struggled with it. This is why it is so important that MRAs/intactivists be sure to take the time to find ways to change the minds of people of both sexes on this topic.

Vanier Institute of the Family report upholds two-parent model

Anonymous · 20 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Those problems, as I have often noted in my harangues on the need for fathers in children's lives, include an increased risk of behavioural difficulties, school dropout, criminal activity, future intimacy issues, unemployment, lost contact with families – and of course poverty.

This report (link added) will go far in dispelling the ideology-driven myth that children of divorce or growing up in single-parent households are no worse off than if they were living with married, biological parents.

So the bottom line is that for children, married is better. If not married, then equal parenting is best. Divorce does not always bring happiness. Marriage is a sign of commitment in a way that cohabitation is not. If you stick with a marriage long enough, you find that it's really not as bad as you thought.'

Ed. note: The Vanier Institute was established in 1965 by the Governor-General of Canada at the time, H.E. Georges Vanier, and Pauline Vanier, the First Lady. As such it does not hold a marginal place in governmental social policy formulation in Canada. (Search link here for references to the Institute on the Canada.ca government site). I think this report can be scored as a win for FRAs.

Rape-Prevention Programs Proliferate, but 'It's Hard to Know' Whether They Work

anthony · 21 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Imagine that you are a male police officer walking down a dark alley. Two drunken men surprise you, take your gun, and then sexually assault you.

This is the scenario groups of young men are asked to visualize during a presentation at Binghamton University. Part of a sexual-assault-prevention program designed for college fraternities, the exercise is meant to sensitize men to the way a female rape victim might feel.

...

On its Web site, Mr. Foubert's organization highlights statistics from studies he has conducted on the program's effectiveness. It says that not only does the program improve men's understanding of how to help a woman recover from rape, but it also lowers "the likelihood of raping for an entire academic year—longer than any other program evaluated in the research literature." Furthermore, Mr. Foubert concluded that 75 percent of "high risk" men who attend his program report lower likelihood of raping after the program concludes.

...

Mr. Foubert's nonprofit organization, One in Four—named after the college rape statistic—packs recent college graduates into an RV to tour the country presenting his program. So far about 35 colleges have created chapters of One in Four on their campuses. The University of Pennsylvania, which started a chapter four years ago, has 26 male peer educators trained in the Men's Program. "It works well," says Jessica A. Mertz, a violence-prevention educator at Penn. "Students like to hear from their peers."'

Making health a male issue

axolotl · 21 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Having sex with a condom is not what many men are used to. Even if they know their status, some are reluctant. But the hardest part is encouraging them to get tested. Families are traditional - it is hard for a woman to get tested if the man hasn't," says the 69-year-old. "If a woman comes home with condoms, the man thinks she is trying to take control."

At the joint government and BIPAI funded Baylor hospital in Maseru, a support group of 70 fathers meet to become HIV literate.

"The idea was that if we can empower men to become HIV aware, children and mothers will also get tested," says Dr Christopher Linda, one of the founders of the father-run group. "Most don't have any knowledge of HIV or what it means for children, so we show them videos of how it is passed on. People come still attached to stigma. But at least they are starting to come into hospitals now. Health has for too long been a female issue."'

Is it me, or does it sound like they're really 're'-making it a female issue, disguised as a male one?

Guilty of rape, doesn't have to register as sex offender

el cid · 21 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Answer here. You get two guesses as to the sex of the offender. The first guess doesn't count. This was a fairly brutal assault, by the way, with the perpetrator drugging the victim and inserting a foreign object into the victim's rectum while the victim was passed out, causing severe rectal bleeding.

'A 54-year-old Longmont woman accused of drugging and raping a male friend last year could spend up to five years behind bars after pleading guilty this afternoon to menacing and third-degree assault.

Janice McCarl will be sentenced Jan. 22. She faces prison and hefty fines but won’t have to register as a sex offender -- a result that the victim did not agree with, prosecutor Catrina Weigel said.

He "felt she should have to be required to register,” Weigel said.

McCarl’s case was scheduled to go to trial this week, but attorneys agreed to a plea deal at the last minute. If she had been convicted of sexual assault, McCarl could have been sentenced to up to 16 years in prison.'

ACFC Action Item: "Ever wonder who trains family court judges?"

Matt · 21 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Action item here. Excerpt:

'For those of you who have been through the family courts and wondered what just happened this email contains several resources judges use to determine whether or how much time you will have with your children. There are many good judges across the nation working to keep children and parents fully engaged with each other. On the other hand statistics continue to indicate Fathers are the parent overwhelmingly relegated to visitor, non-custodial or non-primary residential status even when that Father has joint legal and/or physical custody of the children and has been a 'hands on' fully engaged parent.

Our movement needs to be aware of an influential organization located in Reno, Nevada called the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges (NCJFCJ). For the better part of the past 60 years NCJFCJ has provided training and programming material for family court judges. Their influence in family law and the courts is significant.'

Specific actions to take are listed at the end of the item on the ACFC web site.

Insightful essay on misleading gender and workplace violence stats in the MSM

Matt · 22 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S. An oldie but a goodie, here. Excerpt:

'When reporting on gender issues, the media sometimes misrepresent statistics in a way that severely disfigures the reality of the sexes. Take Time magazine's report from some years ago comparing male and female victims of workplace violence. At the bottom of Time's archived page entitled "Odds & Trends" is what Darrell Huff, author of How to Lie with Statistics, would call a "statisticulation," the misinforming of people via statistical manipulation. Here is Time's statisticulation exactly as the magazine printed it:

> THE LEADING CAUSE OF DEATH ON THE JOB FOR WOMEN IS HOMICIDE. OF WOMEN FATALLY HURT AT WORK FROM 1980 TO 1985, 42% WERE MURDERED, 64% BY GUN. AMONG MEN, ACCIDENTS ARE THE TOP OCCUPATIONAL KILLER; HOMICIDES ACCOUNT FOR JUST 12%

Describing the men's homicide rate as "just 12%," Time completes its statisticulation, its lie that at work the sex facing the far greater murder risk is women.

To coax readers into accepting the lie as fact, Time first had to deceive them into thinking that as many workplace women are fatally hurt as men. It achieved that deception, at least to its own liking, by simply omitting the actual workplace homicide numbers.'

UK: 'Myth' of Mr Useless: Why women breadwinners exaggerate partner's faults

anthony · 23 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Working women have long complained that their man doesn't pull his weight on household chores.

But his lack of effort on the domestic front could actually be a myth created by his partner, researchers have found.

According to a major study, female breadwinners exaggerate their partner's uselessness around the home because they feel guilty about devoting too much time to their career, and not enough to their role of wife and mother.

By nagging their man over his alleged shortcomings, women feel more feminine because they can control the traditionally female role of maintaining the home and family, experts say.

'Working women who provide the majority of the household's income continue to articulate themselves as the ones who "see" household messes and needs as a way to retain claim to an element of traditional female identity,' said Dr Rebecca Meisenbach, professor of communication at Missouri University.'

...

Professor Janet Reibstein, a psychologist and author, said: 'Our respect for our partner rests on whether they are fulfilling their gender expectations.

'Higher-earning women struggle to respect their low-paid men because social prejudice says that a man should keep his woman.'"

UK: Rise of male student support groups sparks row at British universities

anthony · 23 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After decades of feminism, equal rights and "women-only" support networks, a lower, deeper voice is attempting to make itself heard at some of Britain's leading universities.

Male students are "manning-up", setting up men's groups to celebrate and explore the concept of masculinity amid accusations of sexism and gender stereotyping.

Manchester University has created the first official MENS Society – Masculinity Exploring Networking and Support – despite outrage from critics who claim the existence of such a group undermines women's ability to speak out for equality.
...
Detractors allege they are just a front for macho activities and beer-drinking marathons, but supporters insist they are essential as young men struggle to cope with the pressures of being a man in the modern world.
...
In Manchester, the MENS Society, which despite its name has women among its 306 members, claims it highlights not just masculinity issues, but also raises funds and awareness for men's mental health, testicular and prostate cancer as well as male rape and domestic violence issues.'

Wall Street Journal: The Continuing Feminist Experiment

anthony · 23 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Penned in 1994, still a good read today. Excerpt:

'In any work that requires skill or confers status, men's jobs and women's jobs have been distinct and separate throughout all but the last few decades of history, in all cultures and civilizations. The belief that women's jobs and women's social status were always inferior to men's -- practically an article of faith today -- is a half-truth at best. Rather, men competed with men, women with women. In knowledge work today, however, men and women increasingly do the same jobs and are competing and working collegially in the same arena.

Historically, women have always worked as hard as men. A farmer had to have a wife. And a woman on the farm had to have a husband. Neither could run a farm alone. ...

But, historically, men and women did the same work only when it was menial. Men and women both dug ditches, and they worked together. Men and women both picked cotton in the fields. ...'

Ed. note: If you can't see the whole article due to the page saying you need to subscribe, you can see it here in the Google cache. (If the ancient Egyptians had just had Google, they wouldn't have worried so much about whether or not they would live forever in an afterlife not too different from the one here, for they would have known by example that indeed all was eternal. :)

UK: Women-only car insurance could be joined by women-only garages

anthony · 23 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'If women drivers get their way, then they might be able to visit women-only garages in the future, as well as taking out specific car insurance for women.

Female drivers have voted to show that they would like to see women-only garages, because the majority often feel intimidated or patronised when taking their car to the male-dominated arena of garages.

Research from women's car insurance provider Diamond, has found that a significant proportion of women would prefer to see women-only garages, and this also applies to buying a new car, where women said they also feel patronised and would prefer to buy a new car from a saleswoman than a man.
...
"However," she added, "garages still seem to be very much men's domain and can be intimidating for some women. Women only garages could make for a more comfortable experience."'

New Zealand: Teacher has baby with 17-year-old student

anthony · 23 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 17-year-old secondary school student and his 26-year-old female teacher had sex - and a baby - after bonding when putting the school yearbook together.

The teacher tried to stop the incident going public to protect her now two- year-old child, but it came to light on Friday when the disciplinary tribunal of the Teachers Council released a copy of its decision on the teacher's future.
...
The tribunal has not stripped the teacher of her registration. Instead, it has indefinitely suspended her practising certificate. Before she is allowed back into the classroom, the teacher must show she has addressed ethical and professional issues around power relationships between teachers and students.

The decision is not clear on whether the teacher and student are still romantically involved, saying only that they "maintain a relationship as a result of their joint parenting of the child".
...
The decision said the teacher had emphasised that the student was "very nearly eighteen".'

Football Upsets Increase Domestic Violence, Study Finds

anthony · 23 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The study, by the economists David Card at Berkeley and Gordon B. Dahl at the University of California-San Diego, looked at police reports of family violence on Sundays during the professional football season. (An earlier, free version of the study is here.)

The researchers were interested in what happened when a home team suffered an upset, which they defined as losses in games that the home team had been predicted to win by more than 3 points.

After controlling for things like location and weather, they found that upset losses by the home team were associated with higher rates of domestic violence. In fact, an upset typically led to an 8 percent increase in police reports of at-home incidents where a man attacked a female partner. Upset losses in games involving a traditional rival had an even bigger effect on the rate of partner violence as did unexpected losses after games involving an unusual number of sacks, turnovers or penalties.'

RADAR ALERT: "First they ignore you, ..."

Matt · 23 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Two weeks ago, Slate.com's short-lived[1] publication "Double X" published an article by Kathryn Joyce entitled "Men's Rights' Groups Have Become Frighteningly Effective"[2].

This was not Slate.com's finest hour. One thing this article could never be accused of is objective reporting.

On Nov. 5th, the very same day the Double X article appeared, Salon.com's Broadsheet published an article by Judy Berman entitled "'Men's rights' groups go mainstream"[3] that adds no new information, and simply seems to be an effort to repeat the Double X article to Salon's readers.

Since the Double X article appeared there have been several analyses of its flaws, the most recent being Cathy Young's article in Forbes:

"Feminism should be about equality–for males too"[4] which says:

> "More than a quarter-century ago, British feminist philosopher Janet Radcliffe Richards wrote, 'No feminist whose concern for women stems from a concern for justice in general can ever legitimately allow her only interest to be the advantage of women.'
>
> Joyce's article is a stark example of feminism as exclusive concern with women and their perceived advantage, rather than justice or truth."

Canada: "In defence of white male students"

Anonymous · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...“The presidents of the major universities are very concerned we are not attracting young men in the numbers we should,” says Samarasekera, who worries about a loss of gender diversity in the future ranks of CEOs and judges. That was cause for concern when men outnumbered women, she argues—why not now? “We’ll wake up in 20 years and we will not have the benefit of enough male talent.”

The remarks didn’t sit well with some at the U of A. Derek Warwick, a women’s studies major, decided to respond—he and his friends plastered 300 posters mocking Samarasekera around campus. One, borrowing a motif from the 1958 flick Attack of the 50 Foot Woman, depicted a towering female student menacing the campus, with the tagline, “Women are attacking campus!”

Warwick was threatened with penalties ranging from probation to expulsion for distributing “malicious material.”'

UK: 'Men's groups are fine by me, sister'

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Groups such as the MENS society (Masculinity Exploring Networking and Support) at the University of Manchester and Oxford University's MC-O (Man Collective-Oxford) have been caught in a maelstrom of feminist outrage. Here in Manchester, the MENS society has had just about everything thrown in its way to stop it being formalised as a society, from condemnatory letters from the NUS women's officer to a squabble over the suitability of its original name.

...

While, undoubtedly, there must still be concerns about how genuine the welfare-based aims of the MENS society and their Oxford brethren may prove to be, it seems that a whole lot of valuable feminist energy has been directed at prohibiting groups like these – and to what end? Now the MENS society is formally established (and making national headlines to boot), it seems that all that has been achieved is a rather soured relationship between those defending women's rights and those who would tackle enduring male stereotypes. Hardly a brick in the road to true gender equality.

...

...The fact that women are effectively legislated into assuming the role of primary carer by a lack of comprehensive paternity leave allowance is precisely the kind of issue that feminists and men's support groups should be tackling together. But that would be far too logical now, wouldn't it?'

U. of Kentucky feminist group seeks grant for new library

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'As the university continues to diversify its field of studies for students, an organization hopes to assist with the addition of a new library on campus.

The UK Feminist Alliance is applying for a grant to create a gender studies library and resource center to be located in Student Center in the Center for Student Involvement.

The Feminist Alliance will be applying for a grant from the Kentucky Foundation for Women in the spring, but they do not currently have funding for this project.

The president of the UK Feminist Alliance, Virginia Conn, said the library will be a significant addition to UK because it shows the university is committed to diversity. Conn said women are making up more of the workforce than ever before.

...

“Any effort that helps raise awareness about feminism and dispels stereotypes and misinformation, is something that I applaud and encourage,” Cooper said. “I also hope folks will be generous with their donations to the Feminist Alliance.”'

Letter to the editor: 'Important Information About The Male Foreskin'

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'The foreskin is a vital part of the penis which protects the glans, keeps it warm and moist, stops it becoming toughened and calloused [keratinized] as a result of constant abrasion on underwear and bed sheets and loosing most of its capacity to feel the normal sensations during intercourse.

The foreskin can be thought of as being in two parts: the outer foreskin is more or less an extension of the skin that covers the shaft of the penis whereas the inner foreskin is mucosal tissue and contains many of the specialized nerves that give pleasure during intercourse. The inner foreskin is a different color and when withdrawn over the shaft, as it is during intercourse, it covers between 30 and 90% of the penis. When considering the inner and outer foreskin it comprises approximately 90% of the skin of the penis and is a lot to have cut off.'

Also, another letter to the same paper, briefer and to the point.

More on the Gender Gap for SAT Math Test Scores

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A previous CD post showed that high school boys outperform high school girls for high SAT math test scores (see chart above, data here). For perfect 800 scores on the 2009 math SAT test, the ratio of boys to girls is 2.22 to 1 (6,928 to 3,124). What makes this outcome even more interesting are the following data from this SAT report from the College Board:

1. Girls are over-represented in the top 10% of high school students by GPA, which is 57% female and 43% male. Girl also outnumber boys in the second tenth of students by high school rank: 54% to 46%.
...
3. The average number of years of math study is almost identical: 3.9 years for boys and 3.8 years for girls.
...
5. Both 50% of boys and 50% of girls report that calculus is the highest level of high school mathematics taken.

6. More girls than boys took AP Honors math courses, by a ratio of 117 girls for every 100 boys.

Therefore, it would seem that girls are equally prepared, if not more prepared (more AP math classes), than boys for the SAT math test, and yet boys outperform girls measured both by the difference in mean scores (35 point difference in favor of boys) and the over-representation of boys for scores on the high end (2.22 to 1 ratio for perfect scores), and these differences persist over time.'

Players protest football's termination

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On Monday, those expectations were dashed. Roby announced Northeastern's decision to terminate the 74-year-old football program at his recommendation, effective immediately, at a press conference at Matthews Arena. Although Roby said issues of revenue were "irrelevant" in the decision-making process, he said he did not feel comfortable advising Northeastern to make a multi-million dollar investment necessary to turn the program around.
...
But while Roby said Northeastern would help current players make decisions about what to do next in their collegiate and athletic careers, many players said were visibly unhappy. About 30 players and fans gathered outside Cabot Gymnasium at a player-organized protest held three hours after the press conference, where players like Woody Romelus handed out flyers reading "Save NU Football" and questioned Roby's recommendation.
...
He referenced players like Kenny McAdow, a freshman linebacker from Ashburn, Va. who walked onto the team without a scholarship. McAdow, who is majoring in physical therapy, said he was told by head coach Rocky Hager that he would receive a scholarship before next season, but will not anymore.

"I just got out of a meeting with the coach because financial aid is a big issue for me, and there's nothing they can do," McAdow said. "I don't know if I can pay for school here. ... I don't know what I'm going to do."
...

Yaroslav Mukha, a sophomore offensive lineman from Philadelphia, said he thinks the money will not be going back into athletics and disagreed with what he saw as dishonesty on behalf of the university.

"Why promise us White Stadium, why promise us we were going to get a stadium on Columbus, why promise the kids that are coming in here as freshmen that they were going to definitely play out their careers here? Why should they treat us like we're not human beings?" Mukha said. "I feel like the least you could do is be honest with us. If there's a chance you're going to drop the program, tell us."'

Penn State Football Tickets Face Increase To Upgrade Women's Softball Field

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Penn State is scheduled to announce soon a new pricing structure that could significantly increase costs for season-ticket holders. The full details are not out yet, but according to several reports, members of the Nittany Lion Club will be required to make larger donations (some by as much as five times) to continue buying season tickets.

Head coach Joe Paterno, at one time Penn State's athletic director, was asked Tuesday about the prospect of raising ticket prices. He referenced how the football program, which took in $45.7 million in revenue during the 2008-09 season, is responsible for paying the freight for 28 other varsity sports.

"It's a lot different than when I was the athletic director," said Paterno said, who held the position from 1980-82. "Didn't have the impact it was now. We didn't have scholarships for all the women's sports. We didn't have to upgrade facilities. Right now we're going to build another softball field, a better softball field, for the women. And I think we should.'

Title IX suit targets KU men’s athletics

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Kansas University swimmer and member of the 1980 Olympic team has filed a Title IX complaint against the university, alleging that the school does not offer adequate competition for men.

The federal education department’s Office of Civil Rights will investigate the claim filed by Ron Neugent, who is now a dentist in Wichita.

He said he filed the complaint on Sept. 25, alleging that KU fails the three-pronged test required for Title IX compliance.

Jim Marchiony, KU associate athletic director, said he wouldn’t address any of the specific allegations raised in the complaint, but said that the athletics corporation hires a Title IX consultant who has raised no issues relating to compliance.'

Title IX under scrutiny and adversity

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Title IX was enacted in 1972 to open up educational opportunities for high school and college females. The most significant part of Title IX was the impact it had on athletics, but the rule has resulted in the cancelling of sports at universities trying to comply with the rule.

There are three ways for universities to comply with Title IX. The first is to have athletic participation equal to enrollment, the second is to show continued program expansion towards the underrepresented sex and the third is to show they have satisfied interests of the underrepresented sex.

Universities have options to comply with Title IX but have chosen to cut programs. A report on ESPN.com in 2006 stated James Madison University cut 10 teams from their athletics, 7 men's teams and 3 women's, to comply with Title IX. West Virginia University has cut its men's track team. In 2009 Northern Iowa University was looking to cut costs. Due to the male- to-female athlete ratio they had to choose a men's sport, and baseball found itself on the chopping block. Marquette University cut their wrestling team. Wrestling, field hockey, swimming, track, lacrosse, sports like these are feeling the effects of Title IX.

Elaine Jacobs, associate athletic director at Youngstown State University, said the blame shouldn't be placed on women or the rule but rather the athletic directors and presidents of universities who continue to allow out of control spending on men's basketball and football.'

College News online: "Will Title IX be amended?"

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an investigation of admissions from liberal arts colleges, the U.S. Civil Rights Commission has reported that male enrollment in college has been low in recent years. The investigation shows that men are more likely than women to join the military, seek jobs in building trades or surprisingly, end up in prison.

The investigation is ongoing to “allow schools to discriminate against women to attract more male students.” The federal agency is making claim that the reason male enrollment is so low is because there are not enough chances to be an athlete.

Due to this, the CRC feels there needs to be a change in Title IX, which states that, “No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.”

Leslie Brueckner, a lawyer with Public Justice, told Inside Higher Education that “Women should not be made to pay the price for the fact that fewer men are interested in seeking higher education.

“Surely, there are other ways to attract males to schools than to reinstate sex discrimination against women in sports.”'

South Africa: "Climate change: Are women the solution?"

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Johannesburg, South Africa - It is often asserted that climate change will affect women the most in the developing world. That's because most women will have to walk farther for drinking water, work harder to grow food, pull daughters out of school to help with family chores, and fuss more about family hygiene as the world – and particularly the developing world – becomes a hotter, drier place to live.

But women could also be the key agents of change that help countries to do a better job of preparing for climate change, and mitigating the damage.

That is the intriguing idea that comes out of a new report, issued Tuesday by the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), at an Arab League summit held in Cairo this week.

"We cannot successfully confront climate change if we neglect the needs, rights, and potential of half the people on our planet," said Thoraya Ahmed Obaid, executive director of the UNFPA, last week at the launch of the UN's State of World Population 2009 report, which is getting a second push at the Arab League summit in Cairo.'

Student film examines modern meaning of "true masculinity"

anthony · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In a campus full of "bros," "guys" and "dudes," it's increasingly difficult to define a true man and his role in society. Senior Daniel Sanchez tackled the challenge in his short film, "The Test of a Man," which debuted Tuesday evening in Peeler Auditorium.

...

Sanchez said he wanted to raise awareness about masculinity and the stereotypes men face in today's society.

...

Freshman Ifeoma Nwaedozie attended Tuesday's film screening and said he appreciated the topics raised by the film.

"I understand men's struggle and the burdens on their backs," Nwaedozie said, "but I wanted them to bring up black men and their children, and what these burdens have to do with it and why they leave so often."

Following the film was an open forum discussion involving the whole audience, where many new questions were posed about masculinity.'

Oprah: From daytime talkie host to softcore porn HBO-TV series producer in under a month

Matt · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I have resisted the urge to gloat-post over "Oprah" mercifully exiting public broadcast, but this is just too good to pass up. You go girl! Excerpt:

'Oprah Winfrey's getting her kink on with a steamy new cable series about a sexually curious LA housewife.

TV's touchy-feely daytime queen will get down and dirty with the HBO series, which revolves around a married woman who suddenly leaves her husband and kids to act out her secret fantasies in LA's seamy underbelly, according to Variety.

The news comes just days after Winfrey announced she's leaving her top-rated "Oprah Winfrey Show" in 2011 after 25 years to focus on her new cable network -- and endeavors like this one, taking her far afield from her goody-goody daytime image.

The HBO series (no title yet) will be produced by Winfrey's Harpo Productions and is being written by Erin Cressida Wilson -- who penned the 2002 steamfest "Secretary," about an S&M relationship between a lawyer (James Spader) and his secretary (Maggie Gyllenhaal).

"It's a very erotic mystery about . . . a woman and her secret desires that are, in fact, rather pure," Wilson told The Post yesterday.'

Seems the competition from the Internet as well as racier offerings is too much for The Big O to handle without going there, too. As I said in a previous comment, if it were not for the FCC, TV would be an endless stream of sports, food/shopping channels, and pornography. Hell, it practically is already!

US: 34.5 percent of young African American men are unemployed

Matt · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The title is of course something far-less gender-specific: "Blacks hit hard by economy's punch". And of course, we need to place black and white men at odds with one another in the reporting, too. Excerpt:

'The jobless rate for young black men and women is 30.5 percent. For young blacks -- who experts say are more likely to grow up in impoverished racially isolated neighborhoods, attend subpar public schools and experience discrimination -- race statistically appears to be a bigger factor in their unemployment than age, income or even education. Lower-income white teens were more likely to find work than upper-income black teens, according to the Center for Labor Market Studies at Northeastern University, and even blacks who graduate from college suffer from joblessness at twice the rate of their white peers.

Young black women have an unemployment rate of 26.5 percent, while the rate for all 16-to-24-year-old women is 15.4 percent.
...
Unemployment among young people is particularly troubling, economists say, because the consequences can be long-lasting. This might be the first generation that does not keep up with its parents' standard of living. Jobless teens are more likely to be jobless twenty-somethings. Once forced onto the sidelines, they likely will not catch up financially for many years. That is the case even for young people of all ethnic groups who graduate from college.
...

Some studies examining how employers review black and white job applicants suggest that discrimination may be at play.

"Black men were less likely to receive a call back or job offer than equally qualified white men," said Devah Pager, a sociology professor at Princeton University, referring to her studies a few years ago of white and black male job applicants in their 20s in Milwaukee and New York. "Black men with a clean record fare no better than white men just released from prison."'

"The Lambert double-standard" is coined

Matt · 24 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

By now many of you have heard that Adam Lambert, a (formerly) rising pop star, has gotten into major trouble with his handlers, financiers, publicists, and the public by planting a kiss on a male keyboardist during the Sunday night (Nov. 22, 2009) American Music Awards show. (The video can be watched here, at a non-US video site. It had been on YouTube, but was pulled after the producer of the awards show objected and the moral objections became too loud even for the YouTube operators to bear.)

Undoubtedly, and it is too bad I even feel I have to do this, some readers will think I am endorsing his actions as such or in particular that it was a same-sex kiss between men. The answer to that is no. I am not interested in watching guys kiss each other. What bothers me about this hullabaloo is that the double-standard here regarding not just the public's reaction but the media's reaction is glaring.

Many of us will remember the woman-on-woman kisses given by Madonna to not one but two other female pop stars at the 2003 MTV Awards Show. (Unlike the Lambert video, video clips of Madonna kissing the other women are still on YouTube. No one seems to mind that.) The cries of objection, the accusations of outrage, the demands for legal action, apologies, explanation, etc., etc. were entirely absent back in 2003. Maybe a few small voices said that this was not acceptable on a TV show wherein she should have known small children were likely to be watching. Overall though, people who style themselves as religious, and those who say they are not, all seemed mute. Yet a man does something far less overt and far less sexually-charged and well, it's a crime.

My feeling is this: If you are on a show like this, you should not be grabbing people and planting kisses on them, or doing other things, that would cause a child under a certain age to say "Mommy/Daddy, what was that he/she just did?" If it airs any time before 10 PM, maybe 11 PM, it ought to be "clean". However if such behavior is deemed permissible for women, either by our lack of objections to it or our encouragement of it by our attention and watching habits, then it must also be permissible for men.

Convicted murderess allegedly stabbed boyfriend's ex 18 times

anthony · 25 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman once convicted of killing her lover's mate is accused of striking again, this time stabbing her current boyfriend's ex as many as 18 times and then leaving her to die.

Patricia Crowl, 55, is facing an attempted first degree murder charge after she allegedly lured Jamie Checkos to a vacant Seattle parking lot and then brutally attacked her last week.

Checkos is the former lover of Crowl's boyfriend Leonard Jackson.

When investigators began looking in the suspect's background what they found astonished them. Crowl had been convicted of a "remarkably similar" crime in 1997.

Crowl pleaded guilty to charges of murder in the second degree after she beat her then-boyfriend's girlfriend, Shawn Beatrice Wallace, to death. According to court documents, she admitted to "hitting the victim over the head with a wrench, strangling her to death, and then disposing the body.
...
Crowl served nine of her 13 year sentence and was released from prison in 2006.'

The Japan Times: Every husband a potential 'abuser'

anthony · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Before the Christopher Savoie case hit the news, Japanese commentators on the Hague Convention on international parental child abduction had already begun fretting over the completely unsubstantiated assertion that "almost all" instances of children being brought to Japan involve a Japanese mother fleeing from an abusive foreign father. Would Japan signing the convention result in them being sent back? they asked. This is not an unreasonable concern, though I doubt any of these commentators would go so far as to approve of foreign parents taking children out of Japan to escape an abusive Japanese spouse.
...
The problem is that Japanese courts and other governmental agencies appear to deal with domestic violence by applying two simple rules of thumb: that domestic violence is only committed by men against women and children, and that almost any conduct (by men) constitutes domestic violence.'

Salon: 'Fatherhood isn't in the genes'

anthony · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man is supposed to take care of his children. If he gets a woman pregnant, he's expected to step up and take responsibility. But what if that man discovers that the child he thought was his own -- the kid he read to, cuddled and tucked in at night -- is another man's? Then who is responsible for the kid -- the biological father or the nurturing adoptive dad? That is the quandary increasingly being raised by DNA tests. As Ruth Padawer writes in a fascinating cover story for the upcoming New York Times Magazine, the rise of paternity tests -- bought on the cheap online or at local drug stores -- have revealed "just how murky society's notions of fatherhood actually are.
...
"I pay child support to a biologically intact family," Mike says. "How ridiculous is that?" Pretty ridiculous when you consider that Rob gets to live with L. and play the role of papa; and Mike only gets to see her on the weekend. As vexing as this case is, though, we hardly want courts to devalue the unbreakable bond that can develop even in relationships without genetic ties. At some point, DNA can become rather irrelevant. The truth is that Mike's utter adoration of L. jumps off the page; he is a doting, indulgent father. L., now 11 years old, still sees him as her daddy and he wants it to remain that way -- he just doesn't want to pay child support to the woman who cruelly cuckolded and defrauded him.'

Ed. note: Mike L.'s case is also mentioned in this NY Times Magazine article dated Nov. 17, 2009. Nice to see any part of the NY Times taking up an issue from the POV of men who have been shafted by "The System".

Australia: Boys face compulsory feminism programs in state schools across Victoria

anthony · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BOYS face compulsory feminism programs in state schools across Victoria in a major push to prevent violence against females.

Possible classroom activities include students acting out scenes of sexual coercion after which students would suggest more appropriate behaviour.
...
The report says programs for all students should start at primary level and be reinforced across all year levels in subjects including drama, English, science and sport.

They would combat common attitudes among boys such as young women are either "good girls or sluts", the report said.

It said feminist theories were best at explaining the link between gender power relations and violence against women, and must underpin the programs.

But the authors of the "Respectful Relationships Education" report admitted there was considerable community hostility to feminism, even among teachers and students.

"However, a feminist conceptual framework is essential both to reflect research on violence in relationships and families and to anchor the political commitments of the program," they said.

Australian Family Association spokesman John Morrissey said boys were already getting feminised education due to the falling number of male teachers in schools. "I'm sceptical if boys will respond to it if it is dressed up in feminist language and ideology," he said.

"Strident feminist propaganda won't wash with boys."'

MND: Activists in India launch 16-day campaign against globalized feminism

anthony · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Radical feminist groups across the globe have declared a war against men, boys, marriage and family. Enormous sponsorship from various Governments and the United Nations not only provides legitimacy to this war, but also serves to drown the voices of reason trying hard to be heard.

...

Through our campaign, we wish to:

1. Spread awareness on the perils of radical feminist ideologies
2. Emphasize harmonious gender relations
3. Protest discrimination and abuse of men and children in the name of women's rights
4. Advocate equal protection for men, women and children from all forms of violence Condemn all gender biased laws
5. Condemn male bashing and stereotyping of men
6. Promote gender equality in all walks of life
7. Protest the export of weapons of family destruction
8. Promote family harmony
9. Promote respect and justice for genuine victims of violence

...

Please stay tuned and visit the web site http://aimwa.in/ frequently for updates!

UK: It's time for Men's Lib: Why we're witnessing the beginning of a men's movement

anthony · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We are witnessing the beginnings of a men's movement, with newly-formed groups of young men who have set out to find answers to the vexing question of how modern men are supposed to behave.

Two such groups have recently announced their existence and their purpose.

At Manchester University, there is MENS Society - Masculinity Exploring Network and Support.

Ben Wild, who's a history and politics student, has set up the group because he feels young men find it hard to live up to an idealised masculine role.

By that, I suspect he means it's not every guy who can shine on the rugby field, bring home top quality bacon and change a nappy, while rustling up a cordon bleu dinner and ironing a pristine shirt.

The truth is that, in 2009, men are every bit as as oppressed by unrealistic expectations and outdated stereotypes as women.'

UK: Facebook sex teacher jailed

anthony · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A FEMALE religious education teacher was jailed for 32 months today for having sex with a teen pupil she seduced on Facebook.

Mum-of-two Madeleine Martin, 39, admitted having an eight-day long sexual relationship with the 15-year-old in February.

Martin — who taught at a school in Greater Manchester — bought the lad gifts including a mobile phone and arranged for the pair to get tattoos together, a court heard.

They soon embarked on a sordid affair — driving to remote car parks and meeting at Martin's home for sex.

Martin, who is divorced with two teenage daughters, set up a Facebook account under a fake name to stop the relationship being discovered, the court was told.

A "mutual decision" by Martin and the boy ended the relationship in February — but two months later the teen told his parents who went to the police.

Jennifer Birch, prosecuting, told the court the teenager has since quit school because he "suffered taunting".'

Australia: Teacher Michelle Lynn Dennis jailed for 'sex' with boys

anthony · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt;

'A FEMALE music teacher who had sex with two students sobbed today as she was sentenced to more than four years jail.

Michelle Lynn Dennis, 33, had betrayed the trust of the students and shown little remorse, the Ballarat County Court heard.

Judge Susan Cohen said the Ballarat teacher's offending had been worse than that of Karen Ellis because she had sex with more than one student.

In 2005, Karen Ellis, a physical education teacher, was convicted of having sex with a student and jailed for two years and two months.

Dennis pleaded guilty to two counts of sexual penetration of a child under her care, supervision or authority and one count of sexual penetration of a child under 16.

Dennis denied the crimes until the day of her scheduled trial.'

UK: Anger over women-only shortlists

anthony · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There was anger and dismay today after the Labour Party forced women-only shortlists on both the Wigan and Makerfield seats.

Against the majority of local members' wishes, a selection panel from the National Executive Committee insisted that positive discrimination was the way forward in the neighbouring constituencies.

...

One Wigan party member who declined to be named said: "This is scandalous, sexist and a big blow to democracy.

"We should be able to pick from all the available candidates purely on merit, not restrict ourselves because of their gender."

There was also puzzlement that the NEC had insisted on all-women lists in Wigan, Makerfield and several other constituencies, but had allowed open lists in Warrington South and Derby North.

A Makerfield Labour Party member said: "We can understand the need to increase the number of female MPs, but why have two all female lists in constituencies next door to each other while others are given a free hand?"'

Harriet Harman's costly Equality Bill won't do anything for women

anthony · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dogma is the salient characteristic of Labour's Equality Bill, the showpiece of last week's Queen's Speech and the special concern of Harriet Harman, the Leader of the House of Commons and Minister for Women and Equality.

Let's start with the problem that the Bill's provisions are meant to solve. Miss Harman insists that it is necessary in order to fight discrimination. Her primary example is the pay gap between men and women: the latter, on average, earn 26 per cent less than the former. But her conclusion – that this shows that women are being unfairly discriminated against – simply does not follow.

The Government's own figures show that discrimination is not the explanation for the pay gap. Surveys by the Office for National Statistics show that women aged between 22 and 29 are, on average, paid slightly more per hour than men. The critical factor that explains lower pay is not that women are discriminated against by sexist employers, but that they have children to care for. Women with one dependent child earn on average 12.3 per cent less than men, and women with four or more dependent children earn 35.5 per cent less.'

Australia: Call for women-only cabs in Top End

anthony · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TERRITORY women of all ages want a female-only taxi service like the fleet of pink taxis launched in Mexico this month to be introduced in Darwin.

Thirty-five pink taxis driven by women to cater exclusively for female passengers have been introduced in the Mexican city of Puebla to cater for women tired of leering male drivers.

Each cab comes with a beauty kit, a GPS system and an alarm button.

And they refuse to stop for male passengers.

The idea has been catching on in cities from Moscow to Dubai.

And Darwin teenagers Corina Reid, Karlee Truscott and Abbie Burke say the NT capital should be the next place on the list to take up the initiative.'

Ed. note: Article dated Oct. 31, 2009, but better late than never.

Another light-hearted humorous report on female-on-male violence

Proud_to_be_a_man · 26 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

The headline 'Shredding Tackle' for those not in the UK is a feeble pun on 'wedding tackle' (i.e., a man's genitalia). Story here. Excerpt:

'A JEALOUS mum has been quizzed by cops - for allegedly ripping out her lover's testicles.

"Helen Hodge, 34, was accused of mangling Billy Duncan's privates with her bare hands after accusing him of cheating on her."
...
"A police source said: "The officers who dealt with it have never seen anything like it. A few of the guys were crossing their legs when word spread."'

Hilarious huh?

France to ban 'psychological violence' in marriage

anthony · 27 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'PARIS — France is to pass a law banning "psychological violence within the couple" and study the idea of tagging violent partners to prevent them stalking their victims, the government said Wednesday.

Prime Minister Francois Fillon announced the measures in a speech to mark the United Nations' tenth International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women, promising legislation in the first half of nest year.

"It's an important step forward: the creation of this offence will allow us to deal with the most insidious situations, situations that leave no visible scars, but which leave their victims torn up inside," he said.

"And we are going to experiment with electronic surveillance measures on the Spanish model to monitor the effectiveness of restraining orders against a violent spouse," he added.

Spanish judges now have the power to force convicted a wife-beater to wear a watch-sized electronic bracelet that triggers an alarm if he gets too close to his former victim and gives her a chance to call the police.

Since June, 58 men have been tagged and police have been called 222 times.

Last year, 157 French women were killed by their husband or partner.'

TMZ.com reporting Tiger Woods assaulted by his wife during argument

Matt · 28 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. When it first broke yesterday on TMZ.com, there was some equivocation about the details. However as of Nov. 28 at 12:08 AM, they are reporting that they have a witness that says Woods stated his injuries were caused by his wife, and that her smashing his car windows was not to assist him after the crash, but to express her anger. Story:

'Tiger Woods did not suffer facial lacerations from a car accident. They were inflicted by his wife, Elin Nordegren -- according to a conversation Woods had Friday after the accident.

Tiger has yet to be formally interviewed by the Florida Highway Patrol -- that should happen this afternoon. But we're told Tiger had a conversation Friday -- with a non-law enforcement type -- detailing what went down before his Escalade hit a fire hydrant.

We're told he said his wife had confronted him about reports that he was seeing another woman. The argument got heated and, according to our source, she scratched his face up. We're told it was then Woods beat a hasty retreat for his SUV -- but according to our source, Woods says his wife followed behind with a golf club. As Tiger drove away, she struck the vehicle several times with the club.

Wall Street Journal: The Jobless Gender Gap

anthony · 28 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The unemployment rate for men, 11.4%, based on seasonally adjusted data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, outpaces the rate for women, 8.8%. We now have the largest jobless gender gap since tracking became possible in 1948. The gap reached its previous peak, 2.5 points, in 1967 and 1978. Today's gap has exceeded that for three months. It's endured at two points or above for an unprecedented length, eight months and counting.

As of the end of October, the U.S. had lost 7.3 million jobs in this Great Recession. Men account for 5.3 million of that loss. The shift is so dramatic that women now constitute 49.9% of the work force and will soon outnumber men.

So some have come to call this downturn the "he-cession." And yet, for all its unprecedented scope and nature, the limited attention and passive response it has received are remarkable. Imagine the outcry if women amounted to roughly three in four lost jobs in this recession.'

Top 20 Unfortunate Lessons Girls Learn From "Twilight"

insdel2005 · 28 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Is it a suprise that so many young women have a bad boy complex? Excerpt:

'From a male point of view, the only redeeming feature of the Twilight books and movies is the ammunition they provide against female claims of innate moral superiority over men.

Whenever a woman criticizes a man's lust, aggression, shallowness or any other lesser angel of his personality, the quick-witted fellow can point to the millions of women addicted to the base, insipid, bad-boy-worshiping, misogynist syrup so many female viewers of all ages knelt to this past weekend, when The Twilight Saga: New Moon raked in $147 million at the box office, setting several records.

In the spirit of speaking truth to diamond-skinned power, enjoy this list of unfortunate lessons girls learn from Twilight. (The list operates under the principle that any grownup female who embraces Twilight's junior-high dreck temporarily sacrifices her "victim card.")

...

1. If a boy is aloof, stand-offish, ignores you or is just plain rude, it is because he is secretly in love with you — and you are the point of his existence.
2. Secrets are good — especially life-threatening ones.
3. It's OK for a potential romantic interest to be dimwitted, violent and vengeful — as long as he has great abs.
4. If a boy tells you to stay away from him because he is dangerous and may even kill you, he must be the love of your life. You should stay with him since he will keep you safe forever.
5. If a boy leaves you, especially suddenly (while telling you he will never see you again), it is because he loves you so much he will suffer just to keep you safe.
6. When a boy leaves you, going into shock, losing all your friends and enduring night terrors are completely acceptable occurrences — as long as you keep your grades up.
7. It is extremely romantic to put yourself in dangerous situations in order to see your ex-boyfriend again. It's even more romantic to remember the sound of his voice when he yelled at you.

India: Of runaway wives & harassed husbands

webdigr · 29 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Since India has not signed the Hague Convention, courts here have not really been enforcing judgments of foreign courts," said senior advocate Pinky Anand, who represented complainant V. Ravi Chandran, on whose petition the Supreme Court ordered the CBI to trace his son and former wife in India.
...
"India has been used as a haven or a refuge where you could defeat the law. Moreover, dowry laws are peculiar to the Indian legal system," said Anand. "Hopefully, this judgement would pave the way for foreign judgements to be enforced in India."

The Canadian High Commission told HT that its "consular officers at the department of foreign affairs and international trade and in India were currently managing 23 child custody, child abduction and child welfare cases".'

UK: Free healthcare in works for all nations in the UK Commonwealth-- for women and children

Proud_to_be_a_man · 29 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Commonwealth countries are expected to make a landmark agreement on universal healthcare for almost one-third of the world's population, including free health care for women and children.

The agreement, reached at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in Trinidad and Tobago, comes after Prime Minister Gordon Brown's call at the United Nations in September for all developing countries to remove fees for healthcare, starting with services for women and children.

Britain will provide an additional £5 million for charities and non-governmental organisations to promote free health services for women and children in those Commonwealth countries where fees present the biggest barrier to treatment, on top of the £400 million that the UK already spends on improving health services in the 53-nation grouping.'

Men never get ill or injured, of course...

Woods on crash: 'This situation is my fault'

anthony · 29 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. How could a woman pull a 200-lb man out of a car? Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- Pro golfer Tiger Woods says he bears sole responsibility for an early-morning car accident, but state police said he has canceled a Sunday interview with investigators looking into the crash.

In a statement issued Sunday afternoon on his Web site, Woods offered no details of his Friday-morning wreck outside his Windermere, Florida, home except to say he suffered cuts and bruises and was "pretty sore."

"This situation is my fault, and it's obviously embarrassing to my family and me," he said. "I'm human and I'm not perfect. I will certainly make sure this doesn't happen again."

In his statement, Woods praised his wife, Elin Nordegren, whom he said "acted courageously when she saw I was hurt and in trouble." Nordegren told police she used a golf club to break out the rear window of the vehicle, then pulled Woods from the SUV after she heard the accident from inside their home.'

Opinion: Agencies should promote circumcision to help prevent AIDS

anthony · 29 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recent headlines announced a new AIDS vaccine that was said to show great promise. It was tested in Thailand and found to have a modest effect, 31 percent, on decreasing the acquisition of HIV. Within two weeks it was found that faulty statistical methods were used, and the findings are now in question.

A previous AIDS vaccine by Merck was removed from the market two years ago when it was found that not only was the drug ineffective, but in some cases it actually increased the chance of getting HIV.

Since 1989, multiple attempts have been made to develop an effective AIDS vaccine at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars. All have failed, as the virus mutated and became resistant. As these futile attempts continued, 25 million men, women and children died of AIDS, mostly in Africa, but tens of thousands in the United States.'

Ed. note: Wikipedia entry here on the author of this article. He has an "About" entry on his web site here. Based on this PR release, he can be contacted at edschoen-at-gmail.com

Radio Fiji article: 'Men mostly ignorant'

anthony · 29 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Males are more likely to be involved in high risk activity such as unprotected sex, abuse of alcohol, multiple partners and low acceptance of condom use.

This is the reason why a greater male population is infected with HIV than women according to the National Advisor on Family Health, Dr Josaia Samuela.

Initiation rites such as scarification, group circumcision, group tattooing and homosexual activity in many Pacific Island nations pose increased risks to HIV transmission.'

UK: Circumcising boys for religious reasons 'could breach Human Rights Act'

anthony · 29 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Dr David Shaw, lecturer in ethics at Glasgow University, argues that circumcising boys for no medical reason is unethical.

He wrote in the journal Clinical Ethics that any doctor who does perform circumcision without a medical reason could be guilty of negligence and in breach of the Human Rights Act as the child cannot consent to the operation and it can be argued it is not in their best interests.

Dr Shaw wrote: "Imagine a situation where two adherents of a minority religion ask their doctor to pull off their son's thumbnails, as this is part of the religion in which they want to bring up their son.

"The pain will be transient, and the nails will grow back, but the parents claim that it is an important rite of passage. I think it is reasonable to say that the doctor would send them packing.'

UK: Alleged false rape claim woman in court

anthony · 29 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A WOMAN who allegedly falsely claimed she was raped at a Hampshire beauty spot has appeared in court for the first time.

Gemma Mann is charged with perverting the course of justice in relation to an alleged incident at Royal Victoria Country Park in Netley on November 14, which sparked a largescale police investigation.

Yesterday, the 24-year-old, of St Clements Way, Bishopdown, Salisbury, attended a preliminary hearing at Southampton Magistrates' Court.

No plea was entered and Mann was released on unconditional bail until December 3, when she is due to appear at Southampton Crown Court.'

UK: Poor boys 'turned into criminals' at school

anthony · 29 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a damning report, it was claimed thousands of white British and black Caribbean boys from the poorest backgrounds were being consigned to a “lifetime of crime, drugs and prison” after being failed at school.

The report blamed the “ideological fads” of the left-wing educational establishment.
...
In its annual report, the watchdog said that a “stubborn core” of poor teaching was holding back progress at thousands of schools and warned of a persistent gap between rich and deprived pupils.
...
“Effective ways of teaching children to read have been replaced by a system which completely fails those who find reading most difficult. ...

“Standards of discipline have collapsed. The curriculum has been destroyed. Competitive sports have been run down. An acceptance of failure and a lack of aspiration is found in too many schools.”

It added: “The tragedy is that we are turning large numbers of potentially decent young men into misfits and criminals… The failure in our schools falls hardest on them. It condemns them to a life time of crime, drugs and prison and to seeing their own children also fail.”'

Wanda Sykes Fills In The Blanks On Tiger Woods

insdel2005 · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Wanda Sykes has a theory about what happened during the Tiger Woods incident. The bottom line? Tiger Woods was most likely a victim of domestic violence after his wife found out about his infidelity. It would be funny if it wasn't true. The video is here.

UK: School lessons to tackle domestic violence outlined

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Every school pupil in England is to be taught that domestic violence against women and girls is unacceptable, as part of a new government strategy.

Under the plans, from 2011 children will be taught from the age of five how to prevent violent relationships.

And next year, two helplines will be set up to deal with sexual violence and stalking and harassment.

The charity Refuge has welcomed the move but parents' groups questioned the government's interference.
...

Domestic Violence Calls Rise on Thanksgiving?

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SALT LAKE CITY - Take some forced family togetherness, the stress of the holidays, a little alcohol in some cases and you've got a recipe that can sometimes end up in family violence.

Police say they deal with family fights every Thanksgiving.

"It becomes an emotional time for all, and it's a stressful time in certain ways," Ogden Police Lt. Scott Conley said.

Ogden police said that on Thanksgiving, they get a lot of calls about child custody disputes between bitter parents.

"We become the mediator over some disagreement or disorderly conduct of using the child against one another," Conley told Fox 13 News.

A recent study by researchers at the University of California at Berkeley and UC San Diego documented police calls about partner violence, taking note of particular holidays. They found a 22-percent increase on Thanksgiving; a 17-percent increase on Christmas; a 32-percent spike on New Year's Eve; and a 28-percent hike on the Fourth of July, among other holidays.

The study, paid for by a grant from the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development's major finding was an 8-percent increase in partner violence as a result of an upset loss in an NFL football game. The study's results didn't surprise Sheila Richins, the director of the Safe Harbor Domestic Violence Shelter in Davis County.

"It's like, get angry and kick the dog but the dog isn't here, so we'll kick our wife instead," she told Fox 13 News.'

Woman in jail as 17-lb. 3-YO boy fights for survival

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'His mother is in jail, and his protector is the state. His home is a hospital, and his health is nearly as fragile as the day he landed in the ER at Memorial Hermann Children's Hospital.

Weighing just 17 pounds, 3-year-old Kayvon Lewis arrived in the emergency room last month extremely malnourished, dehydrated and at risk of heart failure and liver damage. He can neither walk nor talk. He is blind and suffers seizures, sometimes five a day.

His mother, authorities say, was starving him to death, a form of child abuse so rare that doctors almost never see it.

About 200 children each year die from abuse and neglect in Texas. Kayvon escaped death by a thread.

And as is often the case, a lengthy list of people knew about the boy's eroding condition, but failed to intervene.

“The care Kayvon was given was pathetic,” said Gary Polland, the attorney appointed to represent Kayvon at court after ER physicians had the boy taken into temporary custody by Texas Child Protective Services.'

Woman gets 22-to-life for child abuse, murder

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here

'Visalia - 24-year-old Nancy Ortiz cried as superior court judge Joseph Kalashian sentenced her to 15 years to life in prison, for the murder of her own baby, named Angelita by the community.

And he added another seven years for felony child abuse charges.

Ortiz will have to spend 22 years in prison before she could be considered for parole.

The judge called the crimes "callous."

"There were three babies that were abandoned. One of them succumbed to the conditions of the abandonment. This was an egregious case that warranted the sentence," said prosecutor Janet Wise.

Ortiz was convicted of second-degree murder, and three county of child abandonment.'

Fay Weldon: Feminism has made women into wage slaves, just like men

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism has turned many women into unhappy "wage-slaves", with only the better-off able to cope with the exhausting nature of modern life, according to author Fay Weldon.

The novelist, a pioneer of the feminist movement, said the sexual revolution of the Sixties ended the requirement for women to provide "sexual, childcare and cooking services".

However, there were many drawbacks, not least the effect that the demands of feminism had placed on working women, she told the Richmond Book Now Festival.

"The downside of feminism is that women are now expected to go out to work, which some women would rather do than looking after the children anyway," she said.

"Once it was only the men who were wage-slaves, and now it's the men and the women too. You know, I'd really rather blame capitalism.

"Probably 20 per cent of women are worse off and the enormous number are better off.
...
She added: "I was never a good feminist. I never lived by my principles. It was a fib. I've sort of always been married. I had husbands and I picked up socks but actually, as my husband points out, he picks up the socks in real life."

Weldon held up Katie Price, the former glamour model Jordan, as a positive role model.

"It depends what you think the function of women is. If it's to look good, then she's fine. If it's to make a lot of money, then she's fine.'

UK: The march of the new feminists

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'They are the Topshop generation: young girls more used to partying than protesting; keener on women's looks than women's lib. But now they have had enough. A new wave of feminists, some still in their teens, are putting the struggle for women's rights back on the agenda for the first time in a decade.

The feminist resurgence has spawned a flurry of new blogs, magazines, books, societies, conferences and protest marches – and this time dungarees are out.

On university campuses, women's groups are thriving once more, while hundreds of women each month are joining new feminist networks in cities from Birmingham and Manchester to Glasgow and London.

The old-school Fawcett Society, which dates back to the suffragists, has seen its membership jump by 25 per cent in the past 12 months and the number of its newsletter subscribers double; while earlier this month, more than 2,000 women took to London's streets to "Reclaim the Night" from the men who make them unsafe. ...
...
Kat Banyard, the Fawcett Society's campaigns director and author of The Equality Illusion, due out in March, said: "The mainstreaming of the sex industry has been the biggest catalyst [for the resurgence]. It's brought sex on to the high street. The bottom line is there is a need for feminist activism, despite the gains that have been made."

Campaigners such as Object's Anna van Heeswijk are already notching up victories. An amendment to the Police and Crime Bill was passed earlier this month that will help to halt the sex industry's proliferation on to the high street. "Next year could be the year that we reclaim the F-word for what it is, one of the world's most important movements for social justice," Ms van Heeswijk added.'

MND: The Myth of Women's Oppression

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Forty some odd years ago, feminists bellowed their way into mainstream attention, launching a major offensive on what they called a patriarchal system that had oppressed women for centuries.

Painting women as downtrodden and powerless, they railed against men with the missionary zeal of abolitionists and with largely the same message.

In short, women were slaves and men were their masters. They demanded liberation and have been making demands every since.

They did a magnificent job of pitching all this. That could be a testament to the inherent truth in their ideas. Or it might be something else, like the fact that they already had so much power that few were willing to question anything they said in the first place.'

Soccer hair-pulling fuels debate over sport sexism

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK — The vicious hair-pulling of an opponent was inexcusable. But prominent advocates of women's sports say that so, too, has been much of the commentary generated by the popular video of college soccer player Elizabeth Lambert's combative tactics in a recent game.

"Catfight" has been a term commonly used in cyberspace reactions to the video clip now seen by millions of people around the world. One Web site ran a poll: "Do you find violent women sexy?" Some bloggers — lapsing into old stereotypes — suggested Lambert's menstrual cycle was a factor.

"It's clearly sexist," said Terry O'Neill, president of the National Organization for Women, as she assessed the overall reaction to Lambert's rough play in a Nov. 5 game between her New Mexico team and Brigham Young.

"It's obvious there are still some people in this country who just can't accept that women want to play sports, and sometime sports get rough."'

"Another 101 Fact: There is no such thing as reverse sexism"

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Something that I often get asked is “aren’t feminists just being reversely sexist?” or “isn’t feminism just reverse sexism?” No, and no. There is no such thing as reverse sexism. First of all, let’s establish a working definition of sexism: Just like how racism = power + prejudice based on skin color, sexism = power + prejudice based on gender. When talking about the various forms of oppression, many people often confuse prejudice with the ism. From Failure to Communicate:

> That “+ power” portion of the equation is one of the most important parts. This is not to say that the disenfranchised cannot be prejudiced, because many of them are, but without power, they are not actually working within the systematic framework of advantage created by the majority to privilege themselves.

Therefore, a person who does not exist with the necessary institutionalized power and privilege of belonging to a dominant in-group, cannot be racist, sexist, ableist, etc. Women can certainly be prejudiced or discriminatory against men (which is not acceptable either) but they cannot be sexist or “reverse sexist” simply because they lack the institutional power to systematize their prejudice against men.
...
Therefore, claiming that feminists, feminism and Women’s Studies are all practicing or embodying “reverse sexism” is a mere silencing technique to further legitimize the status quo and to further normalize patriarchal oppression in society. It is a way to deny marginalized groups access to and membership in hegemonic institutions. It is a way to deny them any contributions to the construction and perpetuation of dominant discourses and ideology in society.'

Police say they'll investigate Tiger Woods' accident without his input

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Windermere, Florida (CNN) -- State police in Florida said Monday they will continue investigating a single-vehicle crash involving pro golfer Tiger Woods.

On Sunday, Woods canceled for the third time a meeting between himself and investigators to get his side of what happened early Friday when he pulled out of his driveway in his Orlando neighborhood about 2:25 a.m. in a 2009 Cadillac SUV and struck a fire hydrant, then a tree.

Woods suffered minor injuries. In a statement issued Sunday afternoon on his Web site, Woods offered no details of his wreck except to say he had cuts and bruises and was "pretty sore."
...
"We have been informed by the Florida Highway Patrol that further discussion with them is both voluntary and optional," said Woods' agent Mark Steinberg, in a written statement. "Although Tiger realizes that there is a great deal of public curiosity, it has been conveyed to FHP that he simply has nothing more to add and wishes to protect the privacy of his family."
...
"If we're unable to meet with him, we'll move on with our investigation," Montes said. But she called the delays "very unusual, because it's such a minor accident."'

UK: 'End of nuclear family' forecast

Matt · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The nuclear family is breaking down as children are increasingly raised by relations other than their parents, a government-backed parenting group says.

The Family and Parenting Institute says grandparents, aunts and uncles are helping out more as parents struggle to cope with marital breakdown and work.

One in four children is now brought up in a one-parent household, the vast majority of which are led by mothers.

Soon there would be no typical family model, the institute suggested.
...
And while mothers' employment is up, single mothers with children under five are the least likely to be working with employment rates 28% lower than for mothers who live as part of a couple.

Shadow education spokesman David Willetts says: "The long-term commitment of two adults to each other so they can raise their children together is not going the way of the bowler hat or Woolworths.

"It is wrong to misinterpret specific social changes such as most women being in paid work and the growing role of grandparents, as meaning that the so-called nuclear family is disappearing when it is not."'

Carey Roberts: Justice official gives thanks for bias and bigotry

Matt · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week we were jolted with the news that the global warming crisis is a hoax, an ideologically-driven scam based on data that have been routinely doctored, selectively presented, and when necessary, furtively disposed of.

But there's another global disinformation campaign that is still going strong. It's called the Cult of Domestic Violence. This ruse threatens the very foundation of American society: the traditional family.

This past Thursday Catherine Pierce, acting director of the Department of Justice Office of Violence Against Women, issued a Thanksgiving message — now that sounds comforting, doesn't it?

Ms. Pierce called for "a national conversation about violence against women and teen dating abuse. The Department of Justice will also dedicate this day to talk about ways to end the violence against women and girls that pervades every community in America."
...
And on Tuesday December 1, WETV will be airing its latest installment of Secret Lives of Women. The promo reads, "The fact is however, that more than a third of all DA [domestic abuse] cases feature males as victims, and even that number is considered low due to the relatively low reporting of these cases by men who are ashamed and afraid to do so."

Maybe we should all encourage OVW director Catherine Pierce to tune in: Catherine.Pierce-at-usdoj.gov. The last thing our families need is half-baked holiday greetings foisted upon us by self-serving government bureaucrats.

Spain: Doctor’s error leads to false accusation in Tenerife ‘rape’ case

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'An erroneous medical report led to a man being accused of the rape and murder of a three-year-old girl in Tenerife last week.

The child, Aitana, died last week in hospital. Initial press reports alleged the girl’s body bore numerous burns and bruises as well as evidence of sexual assault. The 24-year-old boyfriend of the girl’s mother was arrested in connection with the death.

But the man was yesterday released without charges as a new medical report revealed the girl’s death was due to internal injuries she suffered after falling in a play park five days before and that the burns were actually an allergic reaction to a cream. The new report also discounted any possibility of sexual abuse.

The young man’s lawyer has said his client will be pursuing legal action against the doctor who drew up the first medical report. The lawyer said: “We are furious with the press. How are they going to repair the damage they have done after ‘lynching’ my client and describing him as a rapist?”

UK: MENS Society becomes official Union society

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The MENS society has been officially recognised by the University of Manchester Students' Union, following a change of name as requested by the union.

The acronym, MENS, stands for masculinity, exploration, networking and support. Society founder and chair Ben Wild said: "The agreement reached with the Societies Committee is an amicable and positive one, as the name and goals of the society remain virtually intact, with the slight change [of] making our intentions more lucid to the outsider than they were before. Hopefully now the controversy can die down and the MENS Society can get on with what it is meant for: doing genuine and practical good."
...
Critics of the group have claimed that the very existence of the MENS society would be harmful to the work of women's groups who campaign for equal rights and would merely allow a respectable facade to be granted to a group that otherwise endorse stereotypical macho activities. UMSU Women's Officer, Hazel Kent said: "The MENS society must stay focussed on addressing the social construct of gender and men's health rather than a misperceived lack of men's rights if it is to avoid hindering women's liberation and women's rights campaigns."'

Law firm sets precedent as first Fort Lauderdale family law firm dedicated to men's rights

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Fort Lauderdale, FL (PRWEB) November 17, 2009 -- Gerald Adams and Associates is the first Fort Lauderdale family law firm dedicated to fighting for Men's Rights in the civil court room. This firm provides all services related to family law including divorce, parenting plans and time-sharing (custody rights), spousal support, asset distribution, paternity, child support, domestic violence and even post- trial- litigation.

Gerald Adams and Associates is determined to break through the politically correct barriers where society and prehistoric family courts have stereotypically favored mothers and wives in domestic violence and family law proceedings. The firm's business manager, Ila Bennett explained, "Most clients don't even know to look for a men's rights attorney in South Florida, they simply search for a Fort Lauderdale Divorce Attorney for men or family law firm in Fort Lauderdale. Taboo social issues such as spousal support for the stay- at - home dad and cases where the husband has been emotionally and even physically abused, is society's dirty little secret."'

Blog: Are some men's rights groups undercutting gains made by domestic violence activists?

anthony · 30 November 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Kathryn Joyce at Slate asks the question. She write of the men's movement group, RADAR, Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting:

> RADAR's rhetoric may seem overblown, but lately the group and its many partners have been racking up very real accomplishments. In 2008, the organization claimed to have blocked passage of four federal domestic-violence bills, among them an expansion of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) to international scope and a grant to support lawyers in pro bono domestic-violence work. Members of this coalition have gotten themselves onto drafting committees for VAWA's 2011 reauthorization. Local groups in West Virginia and California have also had important successes, criminalizing false claims of domestic violence in custody cases, and winning rulings that women-only shelters are discriminatory.

F&F Campaign: Ask DSM to Include Parental Alienation in Upcoming Edition

Matt · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of 50 mental health experts from 10 countries are part of an effort to add Parental Alienation to the fifth edition of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM V), the American Psychiatric Association's "bible" of diagnoses. According to psychiatrist William Bernet, adding PA "would spur insurance coverage, stimulate more systematic research, lend credence to a charge of parental alienation in court, and raise the odds that children would get timely treatment."

Few family law cases are as heartbreaking as those involving Parental Alienation. In PA cases, one parent has turned his or her children against the other parent, destroying the loving bonds the children and the target parent once enjoyed.

Fathers & Families wants to ensure that the DSM-V Task Force is aware of the scope and severity of Parental Alienation. To this end, we are asking our members and supporters to write DSM. If you or someone you love has been the victim of Parental Alienation, we want you to tell your story to the DSM-V Task Force. To do so, simply fill in our form by clicking here.'

Gang behavior and the lack of fathers in homes

el cid · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Good letter here on the role fathers play in preventing gang activity. Excerpt:

'The Rev. Leon Kelly makes a very revealing statement when he says, “Moms are grieving because they feel like they’ve lost their kids to this [gang] behavior.”

It was noteworthy that Rev. Kelly referred only to moms, not parents, nor mothers and fathers.

Study after study has shown that single-motherhood and the lack of a strong father figure in the home are at the root of gang recruitment, poor performance in school, and minority community poverty in general.'

Mother-Son Incest: 'Hidden in Shame and Rising'

anthony · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The molestation began as gentle fondling when Gregg Milligan was just 4, but it soon escalated to aggressive touching and eventually beatings that would render him unconscious.

For seven years until Michigan child welfare workers intervened when he was 11, Milligan was too ashamed to reveal that his tormentor was his own mother.

...

One of the unspeakable secrets in the world of child sexual abuse is that mothers can be molesters. Often, they prey on daughters, but more frequently their sons -- who report increased feelings of isolation and sexual confusion along with thoughts of suicide.

...

Previous studies of day care workers published in 2000 in the Journal of Sex Research, found that women -- without male accomplices -- accounted for only about 6 percent of the abuse of females and 14 percent of males.

But more recent national surveys indicate about 12 percent of all child abuse cases are committed by women -- "a 100 percent increase compared with previous data," according to Chris Newlin, NCAC's executive director.'

UK: School children give 'thumbs up' to domestic violence education

anthony · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the light of controversy about domestic violence education, a survey of schoolchildren in London has revealed their views on the subject.

Arts education organisation Tender, part of charity Until the Violence Stops, gives a voice to young people in the debate around domestic violence education.

The study, which looks at education that aims to change attitudes around domestic violence, reveals that following a drama workshop programme on the subject with school pupils aged between 13 and 15, almost nine out of 10 students (89%) said they enjoyed the workshops exploring issues of domestic violence and 90% understood more about the issues of domestic violence.
...
A 15-year-old boy who had completed the course said: "I have enjoyed this project and would do it again," while a 16-year-old boy stated: "It has made a difference to my way of thinking."
...
Shaun Baker, head of drama at Ravenswood School for Boys, in Bromley, said: "The boys very quickly matured in their response to difficult and emotional subject matter."'

The group sponsoring this educational initiative is called Tender.

Rick Pitino's accuser charged with false rape claim

anthony · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here This dates back to November 17th but still very much relevant. Excerpt:

'LOUISVILLE, Ky. -- The woman accused of trying to extort money from Louisville basketball coach Rick Pitino was charged Wednesday with retaliating against the coach by falsely claiming he raped her.

A federal grand jury in Louisville brought four new criminal charges against Karen Cunagin Sypher, including retaliation against a witness.
The FBI, Louisville police and prosecutors have said there was no basis for her rape allegations. She said the coach raped her in a criminal complaint filed after she was indicted in May on charges of trying to extort money from Pitino.
...
The grand jury also added two intent to extort charges and a second charge of lying to the FBI.'

Original post on MANN re this story is here.

New Zealand: Police find girl's rape claim to be false

anthony · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Police have found a young girl's claim she was sexually assaulted in a Christchurch cemetery was false.

She told them two men attacked her as she was walking through the grounds of Kendal School towards Waimairi Cemetery late last Monday night.

But police say they have found the incident did not happen the way they were told, and they are no longer looking for anyone in connection with it.

The girl will be referred to youth aid.'

No criminal charges filed after girl recants rape accusation

anthony · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CANFIELD — A month long rape investigation has ended after the victim recanted her accusation.
...
The accuser told the teacher she was attacked by a 16-year-old male juvenile in mid-August on the bike path in Canfield.

The case was closed Friday after the accuser admitted to police that she was not raped. She told detectives she and the teen boy were on the bike path together where they briefly engaged in consensual sexual intercourse.

The girl said she made up the rape allegation because she was angry with him for not wanting to be in a relationship with her, according to a police report.

No criminal charges will be filed, and the case has been turned over to the Canfield Juvenile Division for assessment of the filing of a false police report by the accuser.'

Huffington Post: "The AP, Lacrosse, and Rape Myths"

anthony · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No matter how we think boys ought to behave, society gives men, particularly white college men, license to do just about whatever they want. In the context of sexual assault and rape, 'he just got carried away' or 'he was drunk and wasn't thinking straight' are common refrains for perpetrators and those who defend them.

Applying that to say, an aggravated battery, may well be true, but no one would care. So what if you were drunk, you still beat someone, and in this country that is illegal. Imagine a defense for three guys who beat the hell out of somebody saying that assault charges were 'a gross exaggeration of alcohol-fueled hijinks.'

Rape myth number 2: Women lie

> This thinly veiled statement is suggesting that the victim is lying, that something just doesn't add up. This is meant to play on the fact that despite progress in sex equality over the past several generations, our society still takes a man's word over a woman's.

...
Rape is a crime that lives in the dark. We would all like to think of it as a rare and terrible thing. The fact is that an environment reluctant to talk seriously about rape, and recognize women as equal people, is a safe haven for rapists. All-male groups tend to form these environments, and a corresponding concentration of convicted rapists come from their ranks.'

Documentary: "An Emasculating Truth"

Matt · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Thanks to anthony for the heads-up on this.

It seems someone has decided take up the issue of the decline of masculinity not so much in society but in men themselves. He discusses the drop in testosterone, among other things. The trailer is at http://www.anemasculatingtruth.com/.

I am looking forward to seeing the while thing. I don't know anything else about this film other than what is on the site.

Health care bill amendment for women's health issues proposed - none for men

anthony · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Should I be surprised there's no amendment covering men's health? Excerpt:

'Sen. Mikulski, who's played a lead role in bringing women's health care to the forefront in the Senate, has introduced an amendment ensuring that all health plans cover women's preventative care - at no additional cost to women.

"I believe that the health care reform bill before us is an excellent bill," Senator Mikulski said. "It expands access to 94 percent of Americans, ends punitive practices of insurance companies, stabilizes and makes Medicare secure, and bends the cost curve through new quality and prevention measures. However, as I reviewed the bill, I felt we could do more to enhance and improve women's health care. That's what my amendment does."
...
Sen. Mikulski continued, "according to the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), the top killers of women are cancer: breast, cervical, colorectal, ovarian and lung, and heart and vascular disease. And silent killers if they go undetected like diabetes. For these killers, we have screenings at no cost that are proven to detect these diseases early. Guaranteed access to these screenings will save money and save lives."'

US promotes circumcision to fight AIDS worldwide

anthony · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — The United States on Tuesday unveiled a five-year strategy for fighting AIDS worldwide, shifting the focus from emergency response to sustainable programs in countries worldwide.

Marking World AIDS day, the administration of President Barack Obama outlined the next phase of the widely-hailed President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), which was launched in 2003 under then president George W. Bush.

"We're going to begin transitioning from an emergency response to a sustainable one through greater engagement with and capacity-building of governments," said Ambassador Eric Goosby, the US global AIDS coordinator.
...
"We're going to scale up highly effective prevention interventions like male circumcision, prevention of mother-to-child transmission," Goosby said. "We're going to work with countries to determine not just how many people are infected in their communities in their countries, but where the new infections are occurring," he added.'

Woods receives fine, and case closed

Matt · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla. – Tiger Woods will be cited for careless driving in a car crash outside his Orlando-area mansion, but will not face criminal charges, the Florida Highway Patrol said Tuesday.

Woods faces a $164 fine and four points against his driver's license, not close to enough to have it suspended. The citation closes the investigation of last week's crash.

The patrol "is not pursuing criminal charges in this matter nor is there any testimony or other evidence to support any additional charges of any kind other than the charge of careless driving," Sgt. Kim Montes said.'

Golf clubs through rear windows notwithstanding.

1. He gets assaulted and attempts to flee.
2. While attempting to flee from an enraged women chasing him with a golf club in his SUV, he hits a tree. Lacking a human target to beat with the club, she smashes the rear window of his vehicle with it.
3. He gets fined for recklesss driving.
4. She gets nothing but some criticism and a lot of sympathy.
5. He begins the process of becoming open-season for tabloids and losing his business and earnings.

In short, another day at the shop. Move along folks, there's nothing to see here.

Marc Angelucci to appear on national TV

Matt · 1 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Just in from Marc A.: I'll appear tonight (12/1) with David Woods, the lead plaintiff in Woods v. Horton, on the national TV show "The Secret Lives on Women" on the WE channel on 12/1/09 and again on 12/22 and 12/29. The episode is called Husband Beaters.
...
Upcoming Air Dates:
Tuesday, December 1 at 10pm (Eastern US Time)
Tuesday, December 22 at 3am (Eastern US Time)
Tuesday, December 29 at 3am (Eastern US Time)

UK: Social workers to be given pay raises after "Baby P" scandal

Matt · 2 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Social workers who deal with troubled families and vulnerable children should be paid more, a report said yesterday.

The proposal means that 'front line' social workers should be able to push their pay above the ceiling of around £35,000 and match the £50,000 available to the best classroom teachers and the best nurses.

Children's Secretary Ed Balls ordered the report in the aftermath of the Old Bailey trial of the killers of 17-month-old Baby P.

The higher pay should go to those who turn down desk-bound management jobs and build their experience in helping those at risk, the report said.

The proposals will also lead to the prospect of salary rises for social workers considered to be underpaid in some parts of the country.'

'Patience Is A (Feminist) Virtue'

anthony · 3 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why are women encouraged to wait around for major life events to just happen to us? Patience, my dear. These relationship milestones have been engineered and reinforced along traditional gender lines in order to test a woman's ability to shut up and sit pretty, while encouraging men of action to make all the decisions around here. But unfortunately for the patience lobby, us women have figured a few things out over the history of time. One: Our vaginas won't implode upon completion of premarital sex. Two: Our significant others can still love us without investing two paychecks worth of bling into one of our virtuous little fingers. And three: Waiting does not work. Ever.

...

Coincidentally, all of these people appear to be concentrated in our nation's record labels, movie studios, publishing houses, and newspapers. Behold, pop culture's vision of a feminism of patience: No need to abandon traditional marriage—just celebrate women who are strong enough to get what they want (that ring). Don't propose to your significant other—just subversively coerce him into doing it for you. Don't bother waiting around in your ivory tower for your prince to come—just make damned sure you're on the receiving end of that fairy-tale ending. Girl power!

...

"Wishin' and Hopin,'" a ditty made popular by Dusty Springfield, instructed women to stop their traditional wishin', hopin', thinkin', prayin', plannin', and dreamin', and instead, get off their asses and do stuff: like "the things he likes to do" and wearing "your hair just for him." As the song demonstrates, aggressively pursuing what you want isn't always an act of female empowerment.'

S. Africa: 'Male circumcision: why the delay?'

anthony · 3 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'South Africa's National AIDS Council (SANAC) raised the possibility of providing male circumcision services in 2007, but there was a lack of political support, according to Prof Helen Rees, head of SANAC's HIV Research Prevention Committee and executive director of the Reproductive Health and HIV Research Unit at the University of the Witwatersrand, in Johannesburg.

This time, the women's sector wondered how male circumcision would benefit them, and traditional leaders were worried that medical circumcision would conflict with the traditional circumcision that is part of young men's initiation rites for several ethnic groups in South Africa.

...

Prof Rebecca Upton, of the University of Botswana, told "a cautionary tale" based on research she conducted during a national campaign to promote male circumcision for HIV prevention. Many young men she interviewed said being circumcised was a free pass to having unprotected sex, while some young women believed that if their partner was circumcised he was likely to be HIV-negative.

"We have heard that if you get circumcised you will be safe, then you are protected - taking the blanket off is important if you want to be able to have sex. Most girls who want a baby, they also want you to be circumcised now," a 19-year-old male university student told her.

"I'm not arguing with science," Upton said. "But we need to keep listening to very important underlying cultural and social factors as we move forward with these male circumcision campaigns."'

The down-low on circumcision

anthony · 3 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although the American Medical Association does not recommend routine circumcision as a procedure to prevent health problems, more than 30 percent of males and 3 percent of females are circumcised worldwide. In the United States and Canada, although there is little data on how many females are circumcised, it is estimated that three-fourths of males become circumcised in their infanthood or adolescence. Here, at least, that leaves the vast majority of males with a removed foreskin. In fact, most Washington University female students I've talked to have never seen an uncircumcised penis!

But let's get back to the basics. In male circumcision, a physician surgically removes the foreskin of the penis, usually within the first few weeks of birth because doing this practice later is more likely to lead to complications. Male circumcision is a common religious practice across all monotheistic religions—especially Islam.'

States weigh health cuts, Oklahoma considers de-subsidizing circumcision

anthony · 3 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'News outlets report on budget squeezes in Oklahoma and Florida and a proposed overhaul of student health insurance in Massachusetts.

Tulsa World: "Thousands of Oklahoma Medicaid patients would see benefits reduced as the state agency that manages the federal program grapples with required 5 percent budget cuts, according to a spending-cut proposal presented Wednesday to a House budget subcommittee. Proposals include limiting paid emergency room visits to three a year, eliminating outpatient adult therapies, such as speech and physical therapy, eliminating reimbursement for newborn circumcision and reducing the number of brand-name prescriptions from three to two for adults, said Mike Fogarty, chief executive officer of the Oklahoma Health Care Authority" (McNutt, 12/3).'

Tiger, Elin, and the ol' prenup thing redwoodwriter · 3 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Apparently Elin and Tiger Woods are in the process of renegotiating their prenuptual agreement. The original prenup was worth $20 million, but this article reports that eventually she could receive a total of $75 million.

What exactly has Elin done that would entitle her to these astronomical sums of money? Their relationship looks very much like a financial transaction, and not a loving engagement between two people who want to make a life together. And why does Tiger Woods feel as though he needs to renegotiate the prenup? Isn't Elin already receiving an indecent and outrageous sum of money? Evidently Tiger wants to make it up to her, or keep her quiet, or something like that... How exactly is this any different from what Heather Mills did to Paul McCartney? She made off with about $50 million from McCartney. For what? What on earth makes these women entitled to so much money, money that they did not earn?

Tiger Woods: The domestic violence double standard

Anonymous · 3 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

George Cook of www.letstalkhonestly.com asks the question what if the Tiger Woods situation were reversed. Would it be funny if Tiger had beaten his wife with a golf club and then she crashed her car getting away from him. He also why he believes this double standard is very dangerous not only to men but to women. Watch the 2 minute commentary.

Male Role Conditioning Exploits the Lives of All American Men

Anonymous · 4 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

School Newspaper Opinion Piece: Male Role Conditioning Exploits the Lives of All American Men. Excerpt:

'Names of the dead from the War on Terror are displayed on the hallway walls of Valley College's Behavioral Sciences building, but those names are just the tip of an iceberg that shows the role of men as the disposable sex in American society.

...

Men are approximately: 94 percent of industrial accidents and deaths, according to the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health. Men are approximately 80 percent of suicides, according to the Center for Disease Control. Men are approximately 76 percent of homicides, according to the U.S. Department of Justice. Men are approximately 93 percent of the prison population, according to "The Sentencing Project." Men are also a significant percentage of domestic violence victims, according to the DOJ and CDC.

It's high time that the status of men and men's health, which contributes to their disposability is accurately and equitably addressed at all levels of government, including college level liberal arts curriculum and men's studies programs. To do otherwise, smacks of a misandrist disingenuousness that clearly reinforces the role of all males as second-class citizens under the tyranny of a government that does not equally protect, or value, their lives.'

Please be polite if commenting.

'What makes a good man? In a new book, a range of men weigh in'

anthony · 4 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'His story is a cautionary tale, Matlack says, and it's one he shares in a new book, "The Good Men Project: Real Stories from the Frontline of Modern Manhood," (The Good Men Foundation, Boston), a series of essays by Matlack and 30 other men, who bare their foibles - and their souls - in heartfelt musings about their experiences as fathers, sons, husbands, fathers and workers.

...

"Men generally have not talked about this. Women, with their more advanced emotional vocabulary, are better at it," he said. "I don't want to scare men off - they're not going to end up on Oprah Winfrey's couch - but, if you talk about what it's like to be in Sing Sing, in Iraq, guys sit up and take notice. It's liberating to figure out what's important. Stop being silent about this.

...

"That's what has happened to men. They don't have the ability to tell the truth. Look at [Bernard] Madoff, at [David] Letterman; you can name 100 men who don't know how to tell the truth," Matlack said. "That's what happened to me. I was unable to tell my own truth.

"Men are in pain. We need to crack things wide open and say, ‘Let's stop fooling ourselves. Lets not be Don Draper. Let's talk about what's important.' That sea change is a very powerful, exciting thing."'

Medical evidence shows circumcision is effective in battling HIV

anthony · 4 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In a Q&A with GlobalPost, Dr. Dino Rech, regional clinical consultant for Population Service International/Society for Family Health, discusses his experiences in scaling up male circumcision programs across southern Africa, including in Zambia, Swaziland, South Africa and Zimbabwe.
...
Obviously you've got feminist groups that are worried that men will get circumcised and then pressurize women to have sex without a condom. But you try to convince them that this [male circumcision] happens as part of a complete package. People get counseled twice, three times, four times even before they can undergo the procedure. They get counseled at two follow-up visits. People get a huge amount of information telling them that this is not full protection, it's just partial protection as part of an HIV program.
...
Rech: No. In every country you do surveys and there seems to be this huge demand, but when you start services, it kind of trickles in. People are apprehensive — people don't want to be the first one to have it done. Slowly, with word of mouth and as a good resource system is put in place, more people start coming. We haven't launched on a huge scale anywhere with mass media campaigns. The President of Zambia yesterday [Nov. 3] for the first time kind of endorsed male circumcision. Slowly things like that will start to see greater demand happening. But it's a slow process, you know. It's not men queuing around the block for male circumcision. It takes a lot of work to get them there.'

Ed. note: Do a Google search on "Dr. Dino Reich" and start reading.

Feminist books for five-year-olds

Anonymous · 4 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It all started with my son, Will, stamping his feet and saying he didn't want any girls invited to his sixth birthday party. Girls, he declared, are boring. At the same time I noticed my daughter, Vera, who is three, carrying a handbag and lip gloss. Will was demanding his first football kit, Vera was swooning over princess paraphernalia, and I suddenly realised that it was time for a gender stereotyping intervention.
...
Can books redress the balance? We often read Captain Pugwash and Asterix – but there are no girls in those stories. I was happy with Babar until Celeste became pregnant with triplets and never came out of the nursery again. In Peepo the mother is always ironing. Of course, there are some successes for both boys and girls. Ludwig Bemelmans' Madeline is a wonderful tale of convent girl derring-do, with lots of boy characters, too. Julia Donaldson's books (The Gruffalo, The Smartest Giant in Town) are great fun, but not exactly politically inspiring. I wanted to find something feminist, subversive. The Female Eunuch for five-year-olds.'

Senate Approves Women's Health Amendment

anthony · 4 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. On a personal note, I recently had a PSA test as a preventive measure because several men in my family have died of prostate cancer. My health insurance did not cover the test and I ended up paying $300 out of pocket. As it turns out, I had a fairly common condition called asymptomatic prostatitis. Without the test, I never would have known. Fortunately, a couple weeks of antibiotics and I was fine. My point is this, what about the guy who can't afford $300? Untreated prostatitis can lead to Benign prostatic hyperplasia -- a life long condition. I guess male reproductive organs have little value. Excerpt:

'The Women's Health Amendment would require health plans to cover comprehensive preventive care and screenings that address women's unique health care needs without cost sharing. Currently, coverage of comprehensive preventive health care is not guaranteed at zero cost sharing under the bill — for example, regular well-women visits, breast exams, and contraceptive services are not required to be covered at zero cost sharing.

This amendment would require that, in addition to the care and screenings specified in the recommendations of the United States Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF), the women's preventive care outlined by the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA)-supported guidance would also be covered at no cost to patients. The Women's Health Amendment is critical to guaranteeing that access to women's comprehensive preventive health care is increased under the health care reform bill.'

Amanda Knox sobs as guilty verdict read

anthony · 4 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Perugia, Italy (CNN) -- An Italian jury has found American student Amanda Knox and her Italian boyfriend Raffaele Sollecito guilty in the stabbing death of British exchange student Meredith Kercher.

Knox was sentenced to 26 years in prison and Sollecito was sentenced to 25 years.

Both were convicted on all charges except theft and together must pay 5 million euros ($7.4 million) to the victim's family. In addition, Knox must pay 40,000 euros ($60,000) to a man whom she falsely accused of the killing.

Knox, wearing a lime jacket, her hair in a single braid, began to sob -- her sniffles and sobs punctuating the otherwise silent courtroom -- as the judge read the verdict quietly, without expression.'

Police Allege Elaborate Bid for Revenge by a Wife

anthony · 5 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The police on Friday arrested a Brooklyn woman and accused her of taking extraordinary measures to exact revenge on her philandering husband and his pregnant paramour — including tricking the woman into taking a drug that induced early labor, and then trying to get nurses to feed the infant a strange substance disguised as breast milk.

According to law enforcement officials, about two months ago, the woman, Kisha Jones, 38, discovered that her husband was having an affair with a younger woman who she believed was carrying his child. Furious, Ms. Jones, who lives near Brownsville, somehow obtained a doctor's prescription pad, the officials said, and used it to order a prescription for a drug that would induce an abortion.

Then, they said, Ms. Jones turned to a more high-tech tactic to deceive her husband's mistress, whom officials identified as Monique Hunter, 25, of Brownsville. In a practice known as "spoofing," officials said, Ms. Jones called Ms. Hunter and caused her telephone number to appear on Ms. Hunter's caller ID as the number of an obstetrician, which allowed her to fool Ms. Hunter into taking the medication.'

French plan to force gender equality on boardrooms

anthony · 5 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Nicolas Sarkozy's centre-right party has put forward legislation that would see women make up half the figures in France's leading boardrooms by 2015, under a bold plan to impose gender equality on the male-dominated business world.

In a bill submitted to the French parliament this week, all companies listed on the Paris stock exchange would have to ensure female employees made up 50% of their board members by 2015. If passed, a gradual implementation of the law would see businesses obliged to have women in 20% of board seats within 18 months, and 40% within four years.

Jean-François Copé, president of the majority UMP party, said it could give a "much-needed electro-shock" to the French corporate world, long considered a bastion reserved for the male elite in which only 10.5% of board members in CAC 40 (French stock market index) companies are female.'

Germany: Father strikes blow for single dads in war for justice

Matt · 5 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here

'An unmarried German man has struck a blow for fatherhood, winning a landmark legal decision on his right to see his daughter. The European Court of Human Rights ruled in favour of Horst Zaunegger, whose former partner refused him access to their teenage daughter when the couple split up and she moved away.

Under current German law, unmarried fathers can be refused access by the mother. Zaunegger said: “For me this is clearly a violation of human rights because, as an unmarried father, I’m being treated as a second-class parent. There is no justification for that. I’m a responsible father, I’ve proved this but I have no access to joint custody.” Single German fathers must pay child support, but can make no decisions and can be prevented from seeing their children. Child custody is generally split between married couples. The law has been under increasing pressure, and in Berlin the justice minister called for a fundamental review of the rights of unmarried fathers. Figures from 2008 show that every third German child is born out of wedlock.'

Statewide survey shows "ball tapping" problem widespread

Matt · 5 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Bizarre. But when kids see it on TV without condemnation (but loads of canned laughs), no surprise, they think there's nothing wrong with it. Excerpt:

'It's a disturbing game with devastating consequences, and a new WTHR survey suggests it is rampant in Indiana schools.

"Ball tapping" is the act of intentionally hitting or kicking a male in the genitals. Earlier this month, an Eyewitness News investigation showed the game has become commonplace in some area schools, resulting in serious injuries for students.

As part of the investigation, WTHR also conducted a statewide survey of school nurses. The results are in, and they show the problem of ball tapping is more common and widespread than many school officials had realized.
...

Conway says the Eyewitness News investigation and survey should be "a real wakeup call" to schools and school nurses across Indiana. She says the IASN board of directors will further research the issue because Conway believes more education and awareness is needed for teachers, administrators and school nurses to help protect students. 52% of school nurses who completed the 13 Investigates survey said they had never heard of ball tapping prior to learning of WTHR's investigation.

"I'm surprised nothing has really been said about it," admitted Conway. "I think any issue that impacts health in a permanent way needs to be addressed."'

George Stephanopoulos: 'Clinton Hasn't Talked to Italians About Knox'

anthony · 6 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That's the question Sen. Maria Cantwell is posing following the Italian murder conviction of the former University of Washington student.

The year-long murder trial of the 22-year-old has caused an international media frenzy.

The senator argued in a statement released Friday that the Italian prosecution "did not present enough evidence" to convict Knox of the murder of her housemate, and said she would convey her concerns to Secretary of State Clinton.

During our "This Week' interview airing Sunday, Clinton told me she'd be happy to meet with Sen. Cantwell but she hasn't expressed any concerns to the Italians about Knox ... here's our exchange:

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: "Do you share her concerns about this trial?"

SECRETARY OF STATE HILLARY CLINTON: "George I honestly haven't had time to even examine that. I've been immersed in what we're doing in Afghanistan. Of course I'll meet with Sen. Cantwell or anyone who has a concern but I can't offer any opinion about that at this time."

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: "So you have not expressed any concerns to the Italian government?"

SECRETARY OF STATE HILLARY CLINTON: "I have not, no."'

UK: No jail time for cheating wife who cried rape in text message to husband after fit of guilt over affair

anthony · 6 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A wife who cried rape because she felt guilty about cheating on her husband in their home was spared jail yesterday.

Helen Dalby went to extraordinary lengths to stand by her false claim, having a full medical examination and even helping create an e-fit of her imaginary attacker.

But despite wasting £3,800 of public money and showing little regard for two men arrested, she was given a ten-month suspended jail sentence after admitting perverting the course of justice.

Judge David Tremberg told 35-year-old Dalby: 'The men (who came under suspicion) no doubt will have wondered what might have happened to them if this nightmare did not go away. Your lies diverted a massive amount of precious police time and resources from proper duty.'

Dalby's behaviour risked weakening the cases of genuine rape victims and allowing dangerous offenders to be acquitted, he added. In similar cases prison sentences of up to two years have been imposed.

But the judge ruled this case was 'exceptional' because Dalby did not act out of 'spite or malice', and imposed a more lenient sentence.'

U.S. Civil Rights Commission Investigates College Admission Bias

Matt · 6 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is investigating whether college admission offices are discriminating against female applicants to achieve gender balance in their student bodies.

College enrollment rates for women have increased over the past 20 years. In 2005, 57 percent of the 17.5 million undergraduate students enrolled in college were women, and the National Center for Education Statistics projects that by 2016, 60 percent of all college students will be female. The increase in female applicants has meant that at some selective colleges, they are rejected in higher percentages than male applicants are. "We hope to start a conversation on how to deal with it," says Gail Heriot, one of the group's commissioners and a law professor at the University of San Diego.

The commission would not give the names of the schools it is investigating but said that it is focusing on a sample group of 10 to 20 within a 100-mile radius of Washington.
...
Some experts argue that the commission's probe could be misguided. Lisa Maatz, director of public policy at the Washington-based American Association of University Women, says that expanding socioeconomic diversity on campus is more important. "We need to help impoverished boys and girls to improve educational outcomes and have equal opportunity," Maatz says.'

Phyllis Schlafly takes this report up in a more recent article here.

Australian academic links father's rights and violence against women as common foes

Matt · 6 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Wikipedia entry for the author is here. Contact info is at the end of the excerpt. Excerpt:

'The fathers' rights movement is defined by the claim that fathers are deprived of their 'rights' and subjected to systematic discrimination as men and fathers, in a system biased towards women and dominated by feminists. Fathers' rights groups overlap with men's rights groups and both represent an organised backlash to feminism. Fathers' rights and men's rights groups can be seen as the anti-feminist wing of the men's movement, the network of men's groups and organisations mobilised on gender issues (Flood, 1998).

Two experiences bring most men (and women) to the fathers' rights movement. The first is deeply painful marriage breakups and custody battles. Fathers' rights groups are characterised by anger and blame directed at ex-partners and the 'system' that has deprived men or fathers of their 'rights', and such themes are relatively common among men who have undergone separation and divorce. The second experience is non-resident fathers' dissatisfaction with loss of contact with their children or with regimes of child support.

...

The fathers' rights movement has had four forms of impact on violence against women.

...

Most importantly, the fathers' rights movement has influenced family law, with damaging consequences for women, children, and indeed men. Above all, fathers' contact with children has been privileged, over children's safety from violence.

...

The second impact the fathers' rights movement has had on violence against women is in discrediting victims. Fathers' rights groups tell two key lies.

...

Related to this, the fathers' rights movement also has had some impact on public perceptions of intimate violence. In particular, it tells the lie that domestic violence is gender-equal or gender-neutral – that men and women assault each other at equal rates and with equal effects.

...

The fourth way in which the fathers' rights movement has had an impact on violence against women is in its efforts to modify responses to the victims and perpetrators of violence.

...

However, thwarting the fathers' rights movement's backlash requires that we directly confront the movement's agenda, disseminate critiques of its false accusations, and respond in constructive and accountable ways to the fathers (and mothers) undergoing separation and divorce.

...

More widely, we must continue do the work of violence prevention: to undermine the beliefs and values which support violence, challenge the power relations which sustain and are sustained by violence, and promote alternative constructions of gender and sexuality which foster non-violence and gender justice.

...

Contact the Author:

Dr Michael Flood
Postdoctoral Fellow
Australian Research Centre in Sex, Health and Society (ARCSHS)
La Trobe University
E-mail: michael.flood[at]anu.edu.au

'SNL' Criticized After Airing Tiger Woods Domestic Violence Skit While Rihanna On Show

Matt · 6 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A breath of fresh air-- someone actually mentions the double-standard! Excerpt:

'"Saturday Night Live" is making headlines for featuring a skit over the weekend, which parodied domestic violence.

On Saturday night's episode, the NBC sketch comedy show made light of Tiger Woods' scandalous week, satirizing reports - denied by the golfer - that his wife, Elin Nordegren, attacked him prior to his early-morning car accident on November 27 with a sketch featuring Keenan Thomson and host Blake Lively.
...
"It was another sketch that gave us pause," noted PopEater in an article titled "'SNL' Lampoons Alleged Violence in Tiger Woods' Marriage," on Sunday. "We think, had the genders been reversed, 'SNL' wouldn't make light of the potentially violent situation."

Female-oriented site Jezebel called the sketch one of the show's "obvious missteps... when you consider that Rihanna was the night's musical guest."
...
"As soon as this sketch started, I immediately thought, 'Oh, no! Stop the sketch! Rihanna might see,'" adding, "Had the tables been turned and a man was suspected of beating up his wife, there definitely wouldn't be a lighthearted sketch like this. But since it's female-on-male domestic violence, our current culture deems it kind of, sort of okay to make fun of and the scandal had to be addressed before it lost heat."
...
"The Tiger Woods sketch was terrible. Domestic abuse is NOT funny. It was even more awkward since Rihanna was there," a commenter named Lindsey noted on EW.com.'

California Woman Fatally Stabbed Younger Brother, Police Say

anthony · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'LOS ANGELES — Authorities say a 20-year-old woman has been arrested after stabbing her younger brother to death at an apartment in Sylmar.

Los Angeles Police Officer April Harding says 17-year-old Parrish Reed was found slashed and bleeding Saturday night. Paramedics rushed him to a local hospital where he was pronounced dead.

His sister, Amber Reed, was arrested and is being held in lieu of $1 million bail on suspicion of murder.

Investigators believe the victim was stabbed with a kitchen knife during an argument over money.

Their mother was home at the time of the incident.'

New Yorker: The Encyclopedia of Counterintuitive Thought

anthony · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the aughts, the shocking hidden side of everything became the only side of anything worthy of magazine covers and book deals. Social scientists applied their techniques to the problem of climate change; liberals who wanted to be taken seriously had to come up with arguments for conservative policies and vice versa. Everywhere in the media, the former creators of mass consensus devoted themselves to contradicting the conventional wisdom. Here, a selection of the most unlikely ideas in a decade that was always looking to blow your mind.
...
Boys are the biggest victims of sex discrimination.
2000, Book.

Girls are doing better in school than boys, but because feminists insist that girls are still an at-risk group, boys are now ignored and left to fail. Furthermore, teaching boys to be sensitive and empathetic is a mistake; what they really need is a father's masculine presence, to instill a sense of honor and make them into "gentlemen."
CHRISTINA HOFF SOMMERS, THE WAR AGAINST BOYS: HOW MISGUIDED FEMINISM IS HARMING OUR YOUNG MEN.'

UK: 63% of women prefer male bosses

anthony · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In short, our commercial DNA is not wired for corporate success. And nowhere was that more graphically demonstrated than last week when the much-feted co-chairman of Gordon Brown's Women's Enterprise Task Force was successfully sued by one of her employees for bullying.

Dr Glenda Stone runs a successful recruitment website, Aurora, with her husband. So even this colossus of female business success, the woman chosen to front such a highprofile government body, co-runs her business with her spouse.

Not much of a triumph for feminism after all, is it?

And what's more, by all accounts in the industrial tribunal, she was a terrible boss - overbearing, foulmouthed, petty, bullying, micromanaging-vindictive.

I know that type of female boss well, the Bully Boy Boss, who thinks they have to be nastier than the nastiest male boss to succeed. But more of them later.

Now, before the hate emails start pouring in from outraged feminists and female bosses, I have a special interest in this subject.

Not just because I've had the misfortune of having some of the most God-awful female bosses in the history of modern business, but because I was a boss myself, more than once.

I have edited two national newspapers, been the managing editor of one, the marketing director of two and the managing director of one national newspaper group.

As William Hague's Press Secretary, I was boss to a team of press officers.

I have sat in the editor's chair, the boardroom and the shadow cabinet. And while I can confidently say most of the people who worked for me liked me and respected me (I always thought of them working with me, but that's such a girl thing), and, more importantly, worked well for me, I'm not sure I was always a good boss.

Believe it or not, I wasn't tough enough. I had that classic female trait of being able to get the most out of people - it's called nurturing now - but I also wanted to be liked, a fatal flaw in a boss.'

Scotland: Children should know not only women are victims of violence

anthony · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DOMESTIC abuse – there's no excuse. No excuse, that is, to continue to peddle the myth that only females are victims of this criminal behaviour.

Last Wednesday, the BBC announced schoolchildren in England and Wales will receive compulsory lessons about domestic violence in an effort to reduce attacks on women and girls.

Clearly unaware of the irony, the newsreader's next item referred to the recapture of Jane Andrews, the former royal aide who is serving a minimum of 12 years for the beating and stabbing to death the man who refused to marry her.

...

Let's be clear: women are far more likely to be victims of domestic violence than men. However, the number of males who are abused by female partners is significant and growing. In Scotland, police reports where men have been harmed by female partners has increased 110 per cent since 1999-2000. In 2007, Strathclyde police reported that more than 3,000 incidents involved violence by females on males, compared to more than 20,000 incidents of male-on-female violence.

While under-reporting affects the statistics of both genders, most researchers in the field agree under-reporting is a far greater problem regarding information on the number of male victims. Women have been encouraged to report violent behaviour while men remain the invisible victims, unwilling to come forward for fear of embarrassment.

...

In my opinion, the Scottish government's message on domestic abuse is seriously flawed. Our political leaders should be saying strongly to the public that all violence in the home is unacceptable, no matter the gender of the abuser. It is also imperative schools take a more even-handed approach when discussing the issue of abusive relationships.'

Cathy Young: 'Tiger Woods, Gender & Domestic Violence'

anthony · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chastising men's rights groups for using the Tiger Woods story to promote awareness of men as victims of domestic violence, Rosin dismisses the female abuser as a myth unsupported by "sociological research." Never mind that some of the most prominent sociologists specializing in domestic violence research, such as Murray Straus of the University of New Hampshire, have written extensively about abuse as a two-way street (though recognizing that male violence poses a higher risk of harm).

A review of hundreds of studies, published in 2000 by British psychologist John Archer of the University of Central Lancashire, found that women are as likely to initiate partner violence as men and that male victims account for a third of domestic violence injuries. But Rosin ignores this vast research, much of it done by women, in favor of a single "expert" on "the myth of the battered husband syndrome": Jack Straton, an assistant professor of University Studies at Portland State University whose Ph.D. is in quantum physics and whose background in domestic violence is that of a feminist activist, not a scholar.

Yes, Rosin admits, there are some female perpetrators, but generally "women tend to use violence as self defense, or impulsively, not as a systematic method of control the way male abusers do": while "they may slap a man or throw a cup of water at him," they are "less likely" to engage in real abuse. Therefore, she concludes, if Elin Nordegren really did assault her husband, the best course of action for him is to show "chivalry" and cover up for her.'

UK: Woman charged with false rape allegation

anthony · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A WOMAN from Salisbury has appeared at Southampton Crown Court accused of making a false allegation of rape.

Gemma Mann, 24, is charged with attempting to pervert the course of justice by claiming her sister had been raped.

Mann, of St Clements Way, Bishopdown, who does not have a sister, had bail extended to January 29.

Police mounted a full-scale operation with volunteer search groups at the Royal Victoria Country Park in Netley last month.'

Ed. note: This is an update on this story.

Teacher allegedly had 'sex' with schoolboy

anthony · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A female teacher at a regional NSW school has been charged with having sex with a 16-year-old male student, police say.

Police at Dubbo, in the state's central west, charged the 24-year-old woman on November 18 with having sexual intercourse with a person under her care.

"Police ... were alerted to an allegation of an inappropriate relationship between a teacher and pupil at a district high school," police said in a statement on Wednesday.

The woman has been granted bail and is due to face Dubbo Local Court on January 12.'

Australia: 'Active boys smarter'

anthony · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teenage boys who are heavily into sport get new respect in a Swedish study that found physically active teenagers tend to be smarter than their couch-potato counterparts.

Researchers from the Institute of Medicine at the University of Gothenburg set out to see if aerobic or cardiovascular fitness and muscle strength were associated with brain power and future socioeconomic status.

They analysed a physical and intelligence snapshot taken of 1.2 million Swedish men born between 1950 and 1976 when they reported for mandatory military duty at age 18.

They also assessed genetic and family influences by looking at the scores of brothers and twins and, over time, the association between all initial scores and measures of success at midlife, including education level and occupation.

The researchers, led by Dr H Georg Kuhn, said the results showed a strong positive link between cardiovascular fitness and smarts but not between muscle strength and intelligence measures.'

Woman allegedly stabs husband three times

anthony · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A man was reportedly stabbed three times today by his wife.

Eddie Zaragoza, 28, was at his home in the 3500 block of Valdez Drive around 5:15 a.m. when he received two stab wounds to his left upper back and one to his lower back, according to a police report.

Witnesses said they were outside Zaragoza's house smoking when he reportedly stumbled outside and said he had been stabbed. They took Zaragoza to Broadlawns Medical Center, where his injuries were listed as serious, police said.

Police spoke to Zaragoza at the hospital. He said he and his wife got into a fight about her going out to bars and clubs.

He told police that his wife got angry and reportedly punched him in the face, and he pushed her back.

Zaragoza told police he did not remember exactly what happened next except that she stabbed him.

Zaragoza did not want to press charges, but police requested a warrant for domestic assault with intent for his wife.'

Maybe it's time for men's lib

Anonymous · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's a dire time for the stronger sex. Men are in the firing line of sexism, too, so please stop the ‘dorking down’
...
But I’m not thinking these things. Faking it, like multitasking, must be another of those many things men aren’t very good at. Janice Turner writes with the bracing clarity of the true campaigner. I can’t fake the same kind of campaigning zeal for masculism — not least because I had to look it up.

To put it mildly, the male version of feminism has not got much traction in popular culture. You will find one or two male writers who do have that zeal. But they don’t speak for men. Most don’t know what masculism is either, and really don’t care.

So what do I really think? I think if female journalism students are brighter and more motivated than boys, so be it. I’m not going to call for quotas. If my finance director wants to tease me — I’ll treat it as harmless banter, more or less.

As for the bumper sticker — as a baby boomer who had to undergo involuntary attitude surgery as feminism took hold in the 1970s and 1980s, I still feel as if I’ve got about a thousand years of apologising to do. Silly bumper stickers and Jo Brand sketches are part of the community service we’re all serving.'

Oct 14, 2008: "Should women have to register for the draft? Obama says yes" and no sign of action

anthony · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog post here. Excerpt:

'Tuesday, October 14, 2008

Should women have to register for the draft? Obama says yes.

Instapundit gives lukewarm agreement -- "we should probably include women, too. Seems only fair" -- and links to this report:

> But the two presidential candidates disagree on a key foundation of any future draft: Mr. Obama supports a requirement for both men and women to register with the Selective Service, while Mr. McCain doesn't think women should have to register....
>
> Both Congress and the Supreme Court have exempted women from registration because of the combat rules.

The Supreme Court hasn't exempted women, it has accepted the exemption of women.
...

Political correctness runs amok as governor snubs men-only club

Anonymous · 7 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Governor Deval Patrick of Massachusetts refused to appear at the Clover Club, an Irish American group of businessmen and community leaders in Boston over the weekend because it is a men-only club.

Deval was dead wrong.

I hope he will similarly cancel visits to the National Organization of Women for the same reason.

The club was founded in 1883 by Irish-American men as a dinner and card-playing venue. But it is now an organization of prominent business and civic leaders, and one that helps many groups.

Clearly, there are some men's clubs at which Patrick should not appear, but the Clover Club is not one of them.'

Niall O'Dowd is founder and publisher of Irish America magazine, The Irish Voice and "Home & Away" newspapers. He is also founder of IrishCentral, and an adjunct professor at the Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism.

Single-Sex Cardiac Rehab Helps Depressed Women

anthony · 8 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A motivational women-only cardiac rehabilitation program helped reduce symptoms of depression in women with coronary heart disease, a U.S. study has found.

Depression, which is more common in female heart disease patients than in males, can interfere with adoption of lifestyle changes meant to improve health and willingness to attend cardiac rehabilitation.

"Women often don't have the motivation to attend cardiac rehab, particularly if they're depressed," lead author Theresa Beckie, a professor at the University of South Florida's College of Nursing in Tampa, said in a news release from the American Heart Association.

"Historically, women have not been socialized to exercise, and their attendance in cardiac rehabilitation programs has been consistently poor over the last several decades. This poor attendance may be partly due to mismatches in stages of readiness for behavior change with the health professional approaching from an action-oriented perspective and the women merely contemplating change -- this is destined to evoke resistance," Beckie explained in the news release.'

UK: Party invitation is 'women only'

anthony · 8 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HIGH Peak looks set to have a female Labour candidate at the next election after the local party proposed an all-woman shortlist.

Constituency Chairman Alan Barrow said "At our meeting on Friday an overwhelming majority of members present favoured an all women shortlist."

"With several examples of high performing women locally including former Chapel County Councillor Anne Western who is now leader of the Labour group on the county council and the current Leader and Deputy Leader of the High Peak Borough Council's Labour group, it was an easy decision to reach," he said.

Buxton Councillor Caitlin Bisknell is the leader of the Labour Group on High Peak Borough Council while Jacqui Wilkinson from Glossop is the deputy leader.

Procedure Secretary Cllr Anthony McKeown, said: "Our local decision now goes to the national party for agreement and a timetable for the selection will then be put in place."

The move follows Labour's High Peak MP Tom Levitt's announcement that he is to stand down at the next election.'

'Movember' raises money for men's health

anthony · 8 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Movember is a month-long event that both celebrates the moustache and raises awareness on men's health issues.

"Movember is a fundraising effort throughout the month of November," said Ryan Morimura, Interfraternity Council public relations vice president. "It benefits men's health issues, specifically prostate cancer."

Morimura said throughout the month of November, men grow mustaches and when they are asked why he is growing a mustache, they can talk about Movember's fundraising efforts.

"The money goes to fund research to find better treatments and a cure for prostate cancer," Morimura said.

According to its Web site, the Movember Foundation is a not-for-profit organization. Beginning with the 2009 campaign, the money raised will be donated evenly between the Prostate Cancer Foundation and the Lance Armstrong Foundation.'

Detectives Arrest Preschool Teacher for Sex Abuse

anthony · 8 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(ALBANY, Ore.) - Linn County detectives say an Albany female preschool teacher sent cell phone text messages with sexual content to a 14-year-old boy. Linn County Sheriff Tim Mueller says text messages were discovered by the boy's parents and reported on November 29.

"The woman is a preschool teacher at Central Valley Adventist Academy on Highway 34 near Tangent, the same school where the boy is an eighth grade student."

Mueller says the investigation has revealed that in addition to the text messages, the woman and boy had kissed and had other inappropriate contact both on and off school grounds.

On December 2, 34-year old Jenifer Stitzel, was arrested on two counts of third-degree sex abuse, a class A misdemeanor.'

Cops say dance teacher gave boys wine, tried to seduce them

anthony · 8 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'OSBORNE — An Osborne woman was charged with providing alcohol to her dance students from an Allegheny County school and indecently assaulting one of them.

Cassandra L. Sproch, 42, of 1433 Beaver Road, was charged Tuesday with indecent assault, child endangerment, corruption of minors, unlawful contact with a minor and providing alcohol to minors.

According to a complaint filed by Allegheny County police, Sproch was a part-time dance instructor at the Propel School in Homestead on Nov. 15, when the incident is alleged to have taken place at her home.

Police wrote that Sproch's 14-year-old son asked Sproch to pick up three students, two males and one female, and around 6 p.m., all the juveniles were at Sproch's house.

Sproch gave the males wine during dinner, her son told police, and got drunk on wine herself.

At one point, the boy told police, Sproch put her hand on a 15-year-old boy's crotch, kissed him and offered him sex.

She also took a 16-year-old boy to her bedroom, the boy told police, and held him against a wall with her arms and body, trying to kiss him, until the other boys dragged him away.'

Book explores how New Deal program helped UP men

anthony · 8 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ISHPEMING, Mich. - The country is suffering through economic crises and high unemployment rates that some have dubbed the "Great Recession."

While many are facing hardships, today's numbers don't compare with the Great Depression of the 1930s.

"By 1933, it's hard to believe but 45 percent of the people in the Upper Peninsula were on welfare," said local author Larry Chabot, who gave a presentation on his newest book "Saving Our Sons: How the Civilian Conservation Corps Rescued a Generation of Upper Michigan Men" recently at the Ishpeming Carnegie Public Library. "In this poverty atmosphere, the character of the people began to change."

As the nation began to see its young men living as hobos, riding the rail lines to wherever they could find food, and watched small-town banks closing, it became clear something had to be done.

"The picture became bleaker and bleaker and bleaker," Chabot said. "There were no social nets at that time."'

Staten Island's Wagner College Implements Male Studies Program

anthony · 8 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'STATEN ISLAND, N.Y., Dec. 7 (SEND2PRESS NEWSWIRE) -- Leading scholars concerned about today's men and boys will convene here April 7, 2010 to plan for a new academic discipline focusing on male studies at the university level. The event sponsored by The On Step Institute will be held at Wagner College and hosted by Professor Miles Groth, Ph.D., Editor, The International Journal of Men's Health and Thymos: Journal of Boyhood Studies. It will lay out the groundwork for the First International Conference on Male Studies scheduled for October 2010 and the launch of the Male Studies Journal.
...
It will encompass a broad range of topics relevant to the study of boys and men in contemporary society ranging from their roles in the family, and workforce, as well as their physical and emotional health, to the growing problem of misandry -- the hatred of males, an unacknowledged but underlying socio-cultural, economic, political and legal phenomenon endangering the well-being of both genders.'

French Orangina commercial shows bizarre abuse of man

Anonymous · 8 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This is a French Orangina commercial which is one of the most bizarre and demeaning misandric commercials I've ever seen. It depicts a black cat-woman in a bikini with a whip vocally demanding that a man dance and strip. The cat-woman is, of course, very fit and the man, of course, fat and bald and appears to be terrified. At the end the cat-woman hits the man across the face with the whip.

Looks like we have something else to add to the boycott list.

Can you imagine a commercial in which, say, a muscular tiger-man with a whip wearing only shorts does the same to an overweight woman? Can you imagine the uproar that would cause?

Fathers & Families: Two Action Items

Matt · 9 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via the Dec. 8, 2009 F&F Newsletter, item one here regarding getting PAS into the next edition of the DSM (in case you haven't taken action already), and a new one: Are You a Military Parent Who Has Had Family Law Problems?. Excerpt:

'Are you a military parent who has had family law problems? Fathers & Families is submitting military parents' cases to the Secretary of Defense—to be included, please fill out the form below.

Fathers & Families' legislative representative Michael Robinson worked with Mark Sullivan of the American Bar Association on the National Defense Reauthorization Act (HR 2647), which was signed by President Obama in October, 2009. The bill mandates that the Secretary of Defense produce a report on child custody litigation involving members of the Armed Forces, as well as international intrafamilial abductions of servicemembers' children.'

Feministing: SNL Tiger Woods Skit and DV Issues

anthony · 9 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog post here. Excerpt:

'I'm not sure if this has been discussed already. there's a new SNL skit that you can watch on hulu:

at first when i watched it i did laugh at the "breaking news" aspect and mockery of the situation. but soon i was just disturbed at the way it mocked domestic violence. if there's a possibility that Tiger Woods's wife really assaulted him, then we shouldn't be making light of the situation, no matter how many shocking extra marital affairs he has. besides that, the violence joked about in the skit was serious and can't be made fun of in any domestic violence situation.

I certainly wouldn't have appreciated any jokes about rihanna. So I don't want to see a double standard when the violence is the other way around.

Also, I was going to post this under "domestic violence" category, but alas, Feministing has "violence against women" not "domestic violence." time to add another category!'

Police Say Maryland Woman Tried to Cut Out Unborn Baby

anthony · 9 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SUITLAND, Md. — A 29-year-old homeless woman has given birth to a baby girl after, police said, she was befriended by a Maryland woman who held her captive for several days and tried to cut the baby from her womb.

Officer Michelle Reedy, a spokeswoman for Prince George's County police, said 40-year-old Veronica Deramous of Suitland, Md., has been charged with attempted first-degree murder, false imprisonment and other related charges. Police said Deramous befriended Teka Adams at a southeast Washington homeless shelter and persuaded her to come to her apartment on Dec. 1 with a promise of baby clothes and other items for the unborn child.

Once there, Reedy said, Deramous bound the woman, who was in her third trimester. Days later, the woman escaped after Deramous tried to cut the unborn baby from her body, Reedy said.

"She bound the victim's hands and proceeded to try to cut the victim's abdomen to try to get the baby out," she said. "They believe she wanted the victim's baby."' ifeminists.com: 'Another man victimized by the DV industry'

anthony · 9 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I frequently receive stories similar to the following one. Unfortunately, there is no advice I can offer the fellow who has become another victim of the unreasonable and brutal DV industry. ...

My story briefly:

November 4, 2009 6 AM - My wife had a seizure due to a medication problem and fell out of bed. I called 911. EMS decided I'd been beaten her over the head, although there was no head trauma. They kept me away from her and called the police, who detained me and ruled the incident accidental. Still the the EMS workers insisted she'd been beaten and fabricated stories about an imaginary bloody bat and blood on my shoes (I'd just woken up).

The Trauma Room nurse treated me like a felon and would not talk to me about her condition (even though there were certain medical facts only I knew) or let me in, although my wife was in critical condition and had stopped breathing a few times, to my knowledge. Finally, my wife regained consciousness and I was allowed into the Trauma Room. When it became obvious that the was medication, not trauma related, the Trauma Nurse insisted that the erroneous and damning EMS diagnosis had to remain on the file, although it was wrong.
...
I saved my wife's life and ended up being treated like a felon. I think it's time the public knew what really goes on with EMS. I'm trying to get the media interested in my story. I'd appreciate any advice or tips you have.'

Whitworth U student paper: 'Feminism still an important campus issue'

anthony · 9 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bra-burning, man-hating females still exist in America. Overall, however, their cry for female superiority is less aggressive than it has been in previous decades.

Nonetheless, their historical legacy remains at the forefront of the feminism label. This last Wednesday, Whitworth hosted a feminism panel, appropriately called “The F Word,” which took part in discussing feminism as a whole, revealing many aspects of feminism that have nothing to do with burning bras or hating men. As the evening’s motto suggests, “you don’t have to be anti-man to be pro-woman.”

Why be pro-woman in this day and age? American women have the right to vote, the right to drive, and the right to an education and career–which is more than women in some other countries can boast. Nevertheless, according to the U.S. Census Bureau, women still are paid only 77 cents for each dollar a man makes. That means a woman will make an average of $2 million less than a man will during lifetime, despite a woman’s education or career position. ...

Obamacare: The Emergence of Victoria's Secret Feminism

anthony · 9 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Some Obamacare supporters want to tax cosmetic surgical procedure as a way of helping pay for its costs. I am no fan of cosmetic surgery, but oppose taxing it on principle, as I wrote here.

At the time, I had no idea feminism has devolved into what we could call "Victoria's Secret Feminism," which holds that "feeling good" about oneself through cosmetic alteration should be a driving principle of the sisterhood. But that seems to be the case as the National Organization for Women opposes the tax because it wants nothing to interfere with women getting those frown lines removals and tummy tucks. From a column by New York Times columnist Judith Warner:

> Yes, standing up for the rights of middle-aged women to have access to cosmetic enhancement is part of the work of contemporary feminism, [NOW president Terry] O'Neill told me this week. It's the sorry consequence of a number of sorrier truths: The economy is terrible. Middle-aged women, many of whom reduced their working hours, limiting their earning power and ambition, when they had kids or, later, found themselves having to care for their parents, are in a particularly vulnerable spot these days, as they're increasingly called upon to supplement or take over the lion's share of family money-making. And any number of studies have shown that people with better (read: younger) looks have a better chance of getting a good job. Particularly women.

...

Phyllis Schlafly: Feminist Vendetta Against Men's Sports

anthony · 9 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the Bill Clinton administration, another aggressive feminist, Norma Cantu, ran the Education Department's Civil Rights Office and essentially made "proportionality" the only test that matters for Title IX compliance by colleges that must cut their sports budgets. She used the power of the bureaucracy and activist judges to threaten college athletic departments.

Colleges have every reason to fear lawsuits from failure to kowtow to feminist dictates. Losing a lawsuit means the college must pay the feminist lawyers' attorneys' fees and suffer adverse publicity.

The feminists forced colleges to cancel men's teams until the number of men and women on sports teams has the same ratio as the number of men and women enrolled in academic classes. This resulted in abolishing hundreds of men's athletic teams, especially sports at which men excel, many of them trophy-winning teams.
...
Reducing opportunities for college sports is a powerful disincentive to men and is a major cause of the dramatic drop in male attendance. Why bother attending college if men can't play the sport they love?'

Florida Woman Accused of Attacking Boyfriend With Raw Meat

anthony · 9 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'DUNNELLON, Fla. — A 53-year-old Dunnellon woman has been arrested after alledgedly hitting a man in the head with a raw steak.

According to a Marion County Sheriff's Office report, the man told deputies that Elsie Egan repeatedly hit him with the uncooked meat and slapped his face after he refused a piece of sliced bread. The man said he wanted a bread roll.

Egan denied hitting the man with the steak but did admit to slapping him, saying she did it "so that he could learn."

The man told deputies that Egan was his live-in girlfriend. He declined medical assistance.

Egan is charged with abuse of a disabled adult. According to online records, she has been released on $2,500 bond and is scheduled to appear in court in January. It's unclear if she has an attorney.'

Cops: Riverhead Woman Fatally Stabbed Boyfriend

anthony · 9 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Suffolk police arrested a woman for allegedly stabbing her boyfriend to death in Riverhead on Tuesday morning.

Riverhead Town Police received a call of a domestic disturbance at an East Main Street apartment, the home of 21-year-old Kianna Coach and upon arrival, they discovered 25-year-old James Wheeler of Riverhead laying on the lawn outside the apartment at 11:40 a.m.

He had been stabbed in the chest, according to Homicide Squad detectives. He was taken to Peconic Bay Medical Center in Riverhead where he died.

Coach was charged with first-degree manslaughter. The time and location of her arraignment has not been determined, police said.'

Woman accused of taping dog to refrigerator pleads 'impaired mental condition' - due to DV el cid · 9 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This story represents a unique application of the "battered woman syndrome". Basically, this woman is using her boyfriend's alleged DV to excuse her taping his dog to the fridge. I guess if you can use DV to justify murder you can use it to justify anything. Only problem: in Boulder, pets actually have value and rights. Not so sure about men. Excerpt:

'A former University of Colorado student who was arrested in April on suspicion of taping her boyfriend's dog to the refrigerator pleaded in court Wednesday that she suffered from an “impaired mental condition” that excuses her behavior.

...

Toll's defense attorney George Kokus has argued that his client should be allowed to use the mental defense at trial because she was an “ongoing victim of domestic violence,” putting her in a mental state that either justifies, excuses or mitigates her actions.

For someone to plead an impaired mental condition means, in essence, that the person admits to doing the criminal act but was incapable of knowing what he or she was doing at the time of an alleged crime, according to deputy district attorney David Cheval.'

Tiger's Women Cash In - How Much They've Made Selling Their Stories

Matt · 10 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Being a mistress of a famous sports star is a part-time job but it pays full-time money!

Just ask all the women who are capitalizing on their affairs with Tiger Woods. A RadarOnline.com investigation has uncovered how much they've earned off the scandal so far for making their affair details public after staying in the background while romancing the married golf star.
...
The story of Uchitel's affair with Tiger was broken by the National Enquirer, but Uchitel vehemently denied it publicly. The Enquirer caught her in a series of lies and contradictions, however, and she then hired power attorney Gloria Allred. It was clear that Uchitel was entertaining offers to sell her story to the highest bidder and received bids in the low six-figure range. But RadarOnline.com has learned that Tiger's wife Elin called Uchitel the night Woods crashed his car and confronted her about their relationship.
...
Uchitel denied the affair to Elin and later told Tiger that she had protected him. It was Tiger who made the decision to pay her off.

So what about the other so called mistresses? No dollar figure has been attached to any of them, and the porn star who claims a relationship with Tiger has not provided any proof. An Orlando lawyer is representing an as-yet unnamed woman and has not named a price.

So the grand total for being Tiger's mistress right now stands at a range of $1,210,000 to $3,210,000.'

A myth is busted: Testosterone not tied to aggression arindamp · 10 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A new study challenges the common belief that testosterone causes aggression in humans and proposes instead that the hormone encourages status-seeking behavior, the journal Nature reported.'

Hopefully this will break the stereotype that men are inherently violent due to their high testosterone level.

Trudy Schuett: First article in 'New Perspectives on Partner Abuse' axolotl · 10 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I would not refer my worst enemy to our local women's shelter. The reason is clear: they provide a single solution for everyone, regardless of circumstances. That solution is a divorce...

The ugly, backward provisions of VAWA need to be removed from our communities and its proponents sent back to the fringes of society where they belong. Otherwise, almost no one will be helped, and no progress made in new approaches, and we need far more from our tax dollars than that.'

Note the link in the left sidebar to Trudy's new web site: 'New Perspectives on Partner Abuse' (link here: partnerabuse.com. Note there is no 'www' in the URL.)

Judge sets woman's bail in sexual assault and burning

Anonymous · 10 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman from First Street who admitted to police that she sexually assaulted a 43-year-old male back in November while he was passed out, and then burned him with microwave-heated water, made her first appearance in court on Wednesday.
...
The victim was sodomized by Smith with a wooden dowel in front of the witness and “Laura laughed about it,” he reported to police.
...
The witness then stated Smith and the man hosting the party kicked the victim in his midsection and “at one point, Laura Smith began to heat water in the microwave. She then poured the water on [the victim’s] back,” the affidavit states. “She did this several times.”'

Patrick Stewart discusses his experience as a child in violent home

Matt · 11 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Thanks to Jeremy S. for the heads-up. The video is here. What an incredibly moving video. Clearly this man is very deeply traumatized in multiple ways. Those of you with a clinical background are certain to catch on to these ways.

What bowls me over about him is his courage in discussing publicly what happened to him. At his age, undoubtedly even after many years of therapy, he will never be over what happened to him.

As for the topic, it is unlikely he will ever see that DV in its both mildest to worst forms, happens to men as well as women. Despite our urge as MRAs to get angry at him or men like him because we can clearly see that he is not acknowledging the whole truth about DV, nor how the sex role stereotypes that men are indoctrinated into and often forced into (for example, was his father drafted into the British Army?), contribute to the state his father got into - which is not at all to excuse his behavior - nonetheless, it is entirely praiseworthy that he acknowledge what happened to him as a boy and how it affected him. This is a large piece of the kind of work that men as individuals need to do - we cannot get over our own personal demons, whatever they be, if we do not have the courage to face them and strive to understand how they came into being, and how they affect us as individuals. It is the difference between living life on auto-pilot, like so many people do, and living it with self-awareness and thus, with purpose.

I have no dislike for Patrick Stewart. Indeed, I could not care less if he continued advocating for DV programs for women only, as much as I utterly disagree with such a thing. That he has set this kind of example not just to men but to everyone in having the courage to discuss publicly such intimate and sensitive matters and showing us his feelings in this way makes me want to just plain kiss the guy.

Judge drops rape charges against William McCaffrey after accuser admits to perjury

Anonymous · 11 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A deeply apologetic judge officially dropped all charges Thursday against an innocent man he sent to prison for rape.

"I want to convey to you my personal regret in having participated, though unknowingly, in the injustice committed to you," Manhattan Criminal Court Judge Richard Carruthers told William McCaffrey, calling the wrong conviction "a catastrophe both for [McCaffrey] and for the criminal justice system."

McCaffrey's accuser, Biurny Peguero, 27, took back her damning rape allegations in August and confessed to perjury.

"Given the startling turn of events, I now recant what I said about you when I sentenced you for 20 years in prison for a rape we now know you did not commit," said the judge, who had called the alleged assault "horrific" and "disgusting" when he sent McCaffrey upstate in October 2006.'

Ed. note: Some background on this case here.

Serena Williams slams officials for being 'totally sexist'

arindamp · 11 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MELBOURNE: American tennis star Serena Williams has launched an extraordinary attack on officials and former players in a bitter aftermath to her record fine.

Considered by many to be fortunate to escape suspension for abusing a lineswoman at the US Open, Williams claims that the $175,000 fine is excessive, and sexist.

Williams was found guilty by the Grand Slam committee of aggravated behaviour for screaming at the lineswoman: "If I could. I would take this f...ing ball and shove it down your f...ing throat."'

If she was a man, she would have been immediately disqualified from the tour. Let's see if the ITF and WTA tour officials have the guts to take stricter action against her.

Canada: Universities changing names of women's studies depts. in effort to get male students to take classes

Anonymous · 11 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While many Canadian universities are changing their women's studies programs into gender studies programs, UPEI is sticking with its label.

The name change is meant to make the courses more appealing to men. The official line at UPEI is the name change is not an issue, and the women's studies department would not comment.

Psychology professor Fiona Papps, who offers four courses that are part of the women's studies program, told CBC News Thursday it is a misconception that women's studies focuses narrowly on women.

"You know, just militant feminists or bashing men — that's not true. It looks at issues of social justice, it looks at issues of sexuality, it looks at issues of race," said Papps.
...

"I need to look at both men and women and across races to see what the differences and similarities are," said Little.

"Then I can actually speak much more as an expert about how all women experience welfare and whether all women experience welfare in similar ways or in different ways."

Papps said that many men do take women's studies courses at UPEI, despite the name.'

Teachers found naked together in classroom during school hours remain employed

Matt · 12 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. They are to be reassigned? So if they were two male teachers found naked together would they be reassigned? Or how about if one was male and the other female? Why is there any question at all? Why haven't they been fired? You already know the answer. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (CBS) Cindy Mauro and Alini Brito, two New York high school teachers who have been pulled from their classrooms for an alleged nude on-campus romp, have now been joined in the controversy by a third teacher, Allison Musacchio, who is under investigation for being involved with a male student, according to the New York Daily News.

In regards to Brito and Mauro, Feinberg issued a statement confirming that the school was investigating "an incident of employee misconduct while the school was having an event in the assembly during the evening of Nov. 20."

The tenured teachers "have been reassigned, pending the outcome of the investigation," the statement said, but did not name Brito or Mauro.

In regards to a Crimesider question about Musacchio, Feinberg issued a statement confirming "an allegation against a teacher for employee misconduct" had been made in March 2009. The teacher involved was "reassigned pending the outcome of the investigation," it said, but did not name Musacchio.'

UK: So, who do women think does all the work?

anthony · 12 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This report, based on interviews with 15,000 working women, casts intriguing new light on the relationship between men and women. It seems that the idea of the "useless man" slobbing around the home while his woman does all the work is nothing but a post-feminist myth. According to Rebecca Meisenbach, from Missouri University, it has been propagated by women who feel "an overwhelming sense of guilt" at having a career, rather than fulfilling their traditional gender role of wife and mother.

Naturally, there's a part of me that would like to congratulate Dr Meisenbach. After four decades of feminist drivel stigmatising men as inept, workshy, uncommunicative neanderthals whose only significant inventions are rape and war, it's about time someone spoke up in our defence.

Consider how men are now portrayed in films, books, adverts, and sitcoms from Men Behaving Badly to Friends: always it's the boys who are feckless, one-track-minded, chauvinistic and basic, while the girls are invariably the much put-upon omnicompetents who do all the real work and make everything right in the end.
...
If you don't believe me, try breeding a daughter. From almost the moment she can speak, she will dedicate her tiny life to bossing Daddy around, telling him where he's going wrong and ordering him to do chores – often ganging up with Mummy in sisterly solidarity to mock and diminish Daddy's supposedly pathetic achievements.

This isn't learned behaviour; this is hardwired into the female system. A woman's work is never done – and boy, doesn't she just love to remind us of the fact. But when her mate performs similar wonders, his only reward is his own virtue. After all, it wasn't really the man who did those boring domestic tasks, was it? It was those wondrous, perpetually unappreciated Spanner Fairies.'

New Zealand: Botched circumcision put boy in hospital

anthony · 12 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A BOTCHED circumcision of a four-year-old boy that resulted in the severing of a penis artery has landed a doctor in trouble.

The boy was sent to hospital to stem the "uncontrollable bleeding" after the procedure by a GP, who was assisted by an unqualified doctor and his wife in a New Zealand medical centre last January.

A report on the distressing episode, with the names of the centre and the "medical team" not revealed, was released today by New Zealand's Health and Disability Commissioner, NZPA reports.

"This case illustrates what can happen when a doctor is unfamiliar with, or chooses not to follow, recommended guidelines for a surgical procedure," the report said.

The report recommended the doctor not attempt circumcisions on patients older than six months.
...
The parents said they were both ejected from the operating room when they became distraught.

The father said he even felt dizzy enough to faint after the doctor had cut into his son before a painkiller could take effect.

He was ordered to join the crying mother outside.

"We could hear our son crying for help and begging us not to leave him there by himself. He kept asking them to let us in, but they wouldn't listen," the mother said.

After an hour the father went back into the surgery room to see the clinic manager and the unlicensed doctor holding the boy "as if they were holding a wild animal".

The GP said the child was "extremely difficult to handle" meaning he had been forced to call in help to restrain the thrashing.'

Obama Pushes New Stimulus Package Focusing On 'Shovel Ready' Jobs

anthony · 12 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Sounds good until feminist groups cry sexism and have the funds re-directed towards female dominated fields which have actually prospered through the current recession. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama pressed forward with an expansion of his $787 billion stimulus plan Tuesday, unveiling job-creation proposals that largely build on the initial package, including a hiring tax credit that his own party jettisoned as unworkable and some business owners deemed ineffective.
...
New infrastructure spending envisioned by Mr. Obama would include funds for roads, bridges, airports and water systems, even though tens of billions of dollars from the original stimulus plan remain in the pipeline. White House economist Jared Bernstein said worthy projects not deemed "shovel ready" in the initial funding applications now will see money, implying that federal stimulus spending could stretch well beyond 2010.'

Fox: "Gym Closes, Women Still Forced to Pay"

anthony · 12 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HOUSTON - A ladies' only gym goes belly up, but hundreds of women are still being forced to pay up.

The women say the Lady of America franchise in The Woodlands has already broken two laws, and therefore their contracts should be voided.

Dozens of them have taken their complaints straight to the top. Both the Montgomery County District Attorney's Office and the Texas Attorney General's Office are investigating.

At first, the words "women only" sounded pretty good.

"I have never belonged to a gym before, and the main reason was I didn't want a facility with men," said Ann Holmes.

But working out isn't what's bringing so many women together now. On October 15th, a year and a half after opening, the franchise in The Woodlands locked members out. The women say they never saw a 30 day notice posted, as required by state law.
...
Tiede says hiring an attorney may be the women's best and safest course of action, but that's little comfort when the legal process can be a long one.

The owner of Gold's Gym, Bryan Murphy, says there are women from Lady of America using his gym and actually prefer it. He adds his gym hasn't seen a penny and will explore solutions when the women's memberships completely transfer in January.'

Amanda Knox: "The guards helped me out. They held me all night"

Matt · 13 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I can't begin to tell you how much red I am seeing over this topic. Brace yourselves, please, for a Matt-rant. Here goes:

I wonder how many times the guards in a prison somewhere have "held" a male prisoner all night as he sobbed miserably after being convicted of a murder in a case that had a mountain of evidence against him? Knox supporters have been crying anti-Americanism is behind her convictions, but was anti-Ivorian sentiment behind Rudy Guédé's conviction? (Who the hell was that, you ask? The "third" person found guilty in this trial, which is a funny way to look at it since he was the first of the three to stand trial and the first actually convicted. So we know where he sits in precedence of public consideration already.)

Is any one of her partners in crime receiving such sympathy? Her Italian boyfriend (umm, what's-his-name again... Raffaele Sollecito, umm, that's it) is also doing 25 years for this crime, and the "third convict" as he is being called was found guilty in a separate trial. I am amazed they even bother to mention his name, Rudy Guédé, at all in the article as he is 1) a man, and 2) from the Ivory Coast (ie, he's black) and 3) was not romantically (but by his account, in a sexual way, and only recently relative to the crime) involved with Knox. Does anyone at all, in comparison to Knox, care a whit about what his first night in jail was like?

But to be fair, those two others were assuredly held all night in prison by the guards. They just weren't cuddled or coddled in that meaning of the word. They were instead held in cells probably without any contact with others, unless it was in the form of some kind of abuse, which no one cares about. (Aside: Notice how NGOs like Amnesty International have stopped discussing such matters as the abuse of prisoners in jails unless the prisoners are female?)

It would seem, as I often point out, that nymphotropism has absolutely no limits. I predict Ms. Knox will be out in less than five years while her "boyfriend" will do all 25. (God knows how long Guédé got; they don't mention it in this article but they do mention his was the only DNA not found on the murder weapon, which is not to say I think he isn't guilty of the murder along with the other two). In any case after she gets out, I doubt she'll do anything to get either of them out of jail, either.

Let me be clear: I firmly believe anyone guilty of such a crime shouldn't be let out early. I also believe with equal firmness that all the guilty parties should do the same time yet even if one of them is cuter or more feminine than the others. Excerpt:

'PERUGIA, Italy – Amanda Knox sounded casual, surprised even, by the simple question as it came through the door of her prison cell in English on Sunday: "How are you?"

"OK, thanks. How are you guys?" said the American student, who had been sentenced eight days earlier to 26 years in prison for the murder of her British roommate. But minutes later, Knox confided, in answer to a question from an Associated Press reporter in her cell: "I am scared because I don't know what is going on."

The 22-year-old, who is a cause celebre in the United States among those who contend she was wrongly convicted by the Perugia court, received a 10-minute visit inside the cell by two Italian lawmakers, prison officials and a pair of reporters in Capanne prison on the outskirts of Perugia.
...
Three people, including Knox's Italian former boyfriend, have been convicted of sexual assault and murder.
...
Toward the end of the visit, the woman from Washington state recalled her emotions on Dec. 5, when shortly after midnight the judge read out the verdict after a nearly yearlong trial: "I was feeling horrendous" upon being convicted.

"The guards helped me out. They held me all night," she said.

Knox's ex-boyfriend, Raffaele Sollecito, who was given a 25-year-sentence, is now in another prison. Both insist they are innocent, as does a third defendant, Ivory Coast national Rudy Guede, who was convicted in a separate trial.

...

Knox's cell mate, who has been identified by other lawmakers in previous visits as a 53-year-old American woman from New Orleans serving a four-year sentence for a drug conviction, wasn't present during the visit.

The cell includes a private bathroom with shower, toilet and bidet.

Shortly after her visitors left the cell, just before lunch time, Knox sat on her bed and was reading some handwritten papers. When she heard the delegation leaving the corridor, she looked up, waved and said, "Ciao."

TVs and newspapers are available, although Knox said she doesn't watch television or read the newspapers.

The prison was decked out for the holidays, with Christmas trees. During a short tour, the delegation saw a hairdresser, whose services inmates can use once a week.

A pingpong table is among the recreation facilities.'

Don't let your children watch "family" programming promoting hate jayhammers · 14 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

We all know the media's misandristic portrayal of men as slow-witted, obtuse, brainless beasts is pervasive. Even worse, most "family" programming - ABC Family and the Disney channel as examples - will teach your children that men are stupid and women are the wiser, more intelligent sex. They will also teach your daughters to dress provocatively and obsess over boys and your sons to care about only one thing - sex. I just saw a minute long commercial for a show on ABC Family that portrayed high school students deciding to skip school because algebra was unimportant. The girls were made up like prostitutes in skimpy shorts and the boys looked like anime characters, promoting superficiality.

Even the movies on these channels persist in portraying males as blundering idiots. Santa Baby 2 portrayed Santa, all the male elves, and Jenny McCarthy's little lumberjack-looking boytoy as completely inept, weak-willed, idiotic Neanderthals. Every woman - Jenny McCarthy, Mrs. Claus, and the evil elf - was portrayed as incredibly intelligent, smart, and powerful.

When Jenny - Santa's daughter - was upset with him, she became frustrated and pushed him causing him to hit his head and say "ouch". Of course, this is funny because it's only female on male violence.

Part of the reason society's views on women's and men's rights are in such a terrible state is that the media pushes radical anti-male ideals without any checks or balances. Worse yet they perpetuate these myths in what is supposed to be wholesome family programming, infusing misandry in our children from the day they are born.

What happened to Sesame Street, to the original Jungle Book, to Mary Poppins, to wholesome family programming in general? And we wonder why children act the way they do today....

My call to action?

1) Don't let your kids watch the Disney channel or ABC Family or any other station that promotes misandry.
2) Educate your children about the state of men's and women's rights in today's society. Awareness is the first step in promoting change.
3) Express your concerns directly to these "family" stations. My letter to ABC family is below. Click here to send your own.

Greetings,

I was offended by the rampant misandry present in the ABC Family programming. The ABC Family movie Santa Baby 2 portrays all males as inept and unintelligent and condones female on male violence as acceptable and comical. In addition I witnessed a commercial for an ABC Family series which portrayed high school boys and girls - who dress like provocative men and women - deciding to skip school because their classes were unimportant. This is not what I would expect from programming meant for families and children. I must protest and inform you that my children will never watch programming that promotes hatred based on gender, devalues the importance of education, and is infused with sexual innuendo. Specifically, they will never watch ABC Family as long as it continues to espouse immoral ideas. I will also be sure to tell my friends and family with children about what I saw today so that they may spare their own children from viewing the poison you call "family" programming.

Thank you,
Jay Hammers

Roseanne Barr: Palin Is "Slave To Right-Wing Men"

Matt · 14 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

A 24/7 news cycle has people doing almost anything to get attention, including saying the sorts of things that would never get into print or aired. Because MSM outlets are competing ferociously for the last vestiges of scarce and scarcely-profitable market-share, they are actually "reporting" such things, too. That is the only explanation I can think of for this.

Those involved are known quantities. Nothing herein should come as a surprise, aside from the level of stupidity some have sunk to along with the depths of self-degradation required to behave in ways so offensive and bizarre, possibly in the hopes that their infantile attempts to gain attention will be attributed merely to a relapse of insanity or, more benignly, holiday stress. Excerpt:

'Friday's Joy Behar Show on CNN Headline News showed a pre-recorded interview with Roseanne Barr [link added] in which Barr opined that, although Sarah Palin is "likable," the "stuff she says is half nuts," and she's "half crazy and out of her mind." Barr -- who herself has a recent history of doing such bizarre things as appearing in Heeb magazine dressed as Adolf Hitler removing Jewish gingerbread cookies from an oven -- went on to declare that Palin is "like a slave to these, you know, right-wing men. That's like the only way a right-wing woman can make it."

Barr soon added: "The only way a woman can make it in the right wing, or the conservative, whatever the hell you want to call it, Republican, is to be against all other women. And that is what she does."

Ironically, just moments later as she and Behar expressed disapproval at the man who recently threw tomatoes at Palin, Barr was critical of liberals who have treated the former Alaska governor "badly because she's female," calling it "disgusting." Barr: "I don't like where she is treated like badly because she's female. I think that's so wrong, and I think the left and the liberals are disgusting to do that."'

Man Kills Woman In Self Defense: No Charges Filed

Luek · 14 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. -- No charges will be filed in the death of a 42-year-old Mesa County woman who was shot nine times in the driveway of a neighbor who said he fired his gun in self-defense.

Crystal Nash, 42, was shot and killed around 2:20 a.m. on Nov. 1 in the driveway at 3007 Rood Ave.

"In declining to file criminal charges here, I do not intend to condone or endorse anything that happened," District Attorney Pete Hautzinger wrote in a letter sent Thursday to Mesa County Sheriff Stan Hilkey. "I certainly believe that neighborhood disputes are usually better resolved without firearms being involved."'

Washington Post: 'It's time for New Deal feminism'

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We are in the midst of a sexual revolution at work. Thanks in part to the recession, women now hold close to half of all jobs in the economy, mothers are the main or co-breadwinners in two-thirds of American families, and men can claim the dubious honor of being a majority of the jobless. But this is one sexual revolution that hasn't produced much joy of late -- at work or at home. For many, decent wages and economic security remain elusive, and the stress of long hours and job competition has frayed social relationships.

...

Feminism today should concentrate on the economy and the workplace -- and on the huge transformations that are needed there to get greater equality and security. These are issues that can unite women across class and culture and allow feminism to speak to the fears and concerns of everyone. A few women's organizations and groups have been moving in this direction for a long time. But what often gets lost is how much we can draw not only from the great feminist upsurge of the late 1960s and 1970s but also from the movement that preceded it. The next women's movement should look a lot more like the one in the 1930s than the one in the late 1960s.

...

It wasn't enough for women to gain access to what had traditionally been men's work. All too often that meant entering dangerous or poorly paid jobs and adjusting to a work world premised on the ideal of an unencumbered wage-earner without home or community responsibilities. Rather, what was needed, they argued, was to transform the world of work, its values and its practices.'

Woman Who Made False Rape Charge Is Guilty of Perjury

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who in 2005 falsely accused a man of rape, leading to his wrongful conviction and imprisonment, pleaded guilty on Monday to two counts of perjury.

The woman, Biurny Gonzalez, 27, acknowledged in State Supreme Court in Manhattan that she had falsely testified under oath before a grand jury and during a trial when she asserted that the man, William McCaffrey, had sexually assaulted her.

Mr. McCaffrey, 32, an interior contractor, was convicted of rape in 2006 and began serving a 20-year sentence. But this past spring, Ms. Gonzalez recanted, first confessing to a priest that she had lied, then telling prosecutors.
...
A religious reawakening prompted Ms. Gonzalez to admit her misdeeds to a priest at St. Anthony's parish in Union City, her lawyer, Paul F. Callan, said.

"It was very wrong what she did in the first place," he said. "But in the end she found her way to do the right thing, the courageous thing, the just thing."'

Officers Speak Out About False Rape Cases

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A report of rape is a call that puts police officers on high alert.

"Because of the egregiousness of the crime, the need is to make an apprehension as soon as possible, we throw all the resources we have available at it," says Sgt. Kelly Walker with the Waynesboro Police Department.

Walker says false reports, such as rape, are made more often than they should.

Investigations in Staunton and Waynesboro have turned up two of these cases just this week.

Walker adds, "As a standard response, we don't allow any presumptions. We don't prejudge any situations. We just allow the evidence to take us where the case is going to go."
...
He says false reports can put unnecessary stress on community members.'

Reality Check Blog: 'To End the Campus Rape Epidemic, Let Go of Secrecy'

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the most disturbing things about the culture of secrecy and total lack of transparency uncovered by the CPI last week is that such a veiled system makes progress really hard to measure. Campus rape won't end until we attack rape culture at its roots, but there are ways to curb the problem, such as innovative, mandatory education programs, transparent channels for counseling and reporting and student-led initiatives like Men Against Rape that target fraternities and other student groups, or Take Back the Night events which brings the issue into the open.

Another method that some schools have embraced and more should is to separate rape prevention programming from campus sex ed programs, thereby clearly delineating the difference between healthy sex between consenting parties and rape, rather than contributing to the boundary-blurring that plagues the issue. A feminist-minded way of doing this is promoting a model of "enthusiastic consent" as posited in the book Yes Means Yes (now being used for sex ed at Colgate University!); the idea that consent is more than a lack of no, but a wholehearted yes.'

UK: Woman sentenced to 200 hours of community service for false rape accusation

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Moray woman who falsely accused two men of raping her was ordered to do 200 hours of community service yesterday.

Leoni Campbell admitted making the allegations in 2006 when she appeared at Elgin Sheriff Court.

Campbell claimed she had been raped by a 20-year-old man on July 12 and by a 22-year-old man on August 2.
...
Campbell's agent, Diane MacFarlane, said her client had not known either man personally. She had identified one of them by flicking through previous school yearbooks.

She said 20-year-old Campbell, who was 16 when she made the false rape allegations, had matured considerably since giving birth four months ago.'

N. Ireland: Warrant issued over false rape claim

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Lindsay Gorman, 20, originally from Lake Glen Avenue, Belfast sparked a massive police hunt last year after claiming she had been raped.

Belfast Crown Court heard that Gorman, has not been seen since her last court appearence in late October when she pleaded guilty to a single charge of doing an act between April 26 and July 25 last year which had a tendancy to pervert public justice by claiming she had been attacked and raped by an unknown man.'

Police: Rape, abduction reports unfounded

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MARION — Local authorities issued a statement Monday regarding a false report circulating about a crime committed in Marion.

The statement was in regards to the Marion Police Department receiving numerous text message inquires about an abduction and rape that had occurred over the weekend..

“The Marion Police Department knows of no such crimes that were committed in the downtown area in the recent past,” states Maj. Bill Collins in the press release.

Police are investigating an incident involving an intoxicated female found wandering around Sunday morning. However, the case is not related to any rape or abduction crimes.

The department issued the statement because “it did not want needless feelings of unease by the citizens of Marion.'

Police say disabled woman's rape claims are false

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'LADUE, Mo. (KMOX) -- Ladue police say the disabled woman who told police she was raped along McKnight Road made up the entire story.

50 year old Virginia Burns of Overland is now charged with making a false police report and misdeamor possession of marijuana.

Burns had told police she ran out of gas on McKnight, then took her wheelchair out of vehicle and started riding north for help when she was attacked.'

India: Rape Law says 'Yes can mean No'

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to Section 375 of the Indian Penal Code, a man is said to have committed rape if he has had sexual intercourse with a woman against her will and without her consent.
The definition of rape does not end there!

Even if a woman has given her consent for sex, the man would be deemed to have committed rape when

• her consent has been obtained by putting her or any person in whom she is interested in fear of death or of hurt.

• the man knows that he is not her husband, and that her consent is given because she believes that he is another man to whom she is or believes herself to be lawfully married.

• at the time of giving such consent, by reason of unsoundness of mind or intoxication or the administration by him personally or through another of any stupefying or unwholesome substance, she is unable to understand the nature and consequences of that to which she gives consent.

In addition, a male having sex with a female under sixteen years of age is rape regardless of whether the act is done with or without her consent. What is striking, at the outset, is the inherent bias in the definition of rape itself. According to this law, rape is a criminal act that is committed by a man against a woman. Not only that, the crime is entirely in the mind of the female “victim.”'

Lacrosse Sex Scandal — Sexual Assault or Prank?

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An 18-year-old student at Sacred Heart University claims that three lacrosse players at the Connecticut school — one of them a Long Island native — sexually assaulted her in a dorm room last weekend. The victim was having consensual sex with 19-year-old freshman Timothy Sanders, when the suspect allegedly held her down and shouted for his two teammates, freshmen Nicholas Travers and Zachari Triner, to join in, according to police. The two men then purportedly ran naked into the dorm room and touched the woman inappropriately. After she screamed and struggled, Travers and Triner fled.

But Sanders' lawyer claims the incident was an alcohol-fueled joke, not a criminal matter. "This young woman was unfairly humiliated by some college boy prank. This is not a sexual assault," said attorney Wayne Keeney, who claims that the lacrosse players have been negatively stereotyped: "I guess lacrosse is the new preppy version of al Qaeda." According to Keeney, the two other students "certainly never touched the girl. And they left the room immediately." The attorney also stated that the bed was lofted 5 feet off the floor, raising questions about the woman's description of events, and he claims that Travers — the Smithtown native — wasn't involved in any way.
...
But Sacred Heart student Danielle Palmaccio had this to say: "I think she'd be telling the truth. Why wouldn't she? I know sometimes information gets skewed but I don't think she would lie about it." The suspects have been charged with conspiracy to commit sexual assault and have been suspended from school and the lacrosse team.'

UK: Widow Says Husband Driven to Heart Attack after False Accusation

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'We've all heard about false accusations of sexual criminality, incidents such as the 2006 Duke University rape frame-up case. They are a form of psychological molestation and can destroy a person's life just as being physically molested can. Well, now such an accusation might have ended a man's life.

The hapless victim, 63-year-old British citizen Bryan Davies, died of a massive heart attack last Friday after months of community harassment resulting from a false accusation of pedophilia. And what was the reason for the accusation?

Two girls leveled it after the man and his wife, Debbie Davies, 43, refused to allow a "sleepover" at their home or the girls to walk their dog.

The Daily Mail reports on the story, writing, "Mrs Davies said her husband had fought in vain to clear his name after two schoolgirls falsely accused him in [sic] indecently touching them in the summer." And it didn't help Mr. Davies that the police had dismissed the girls' story after an investigation. It didn't help when, reports the Mail, "Police in Accrington, Lancashire, even went as far as handing out leaflets to locals in the neighbourhood to officially state the allegations as 'false and without any foundation whatsoever'." No, despite this, the couple suffered continual harassment.'

Malaysia: 275 boys circumcised in a mass ceremony

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'KEPALA BATAS, MALAYSIA - Nearly 300 boys from the Kepala Batas parliamentary constituency were circumcised in a mass ceremony yesterday.

The event was jointly organised by the parliamentary constituency and Penaga, Bertam and Pinang Tunggal state constituencies with cooperation from the Kepala Batas Hospital Visitors' Board, as part of the 1Malaysia community health programme.

Of the 275 boys, 108 were circumcised by the traditional method. The rest were circumcised using a modern technique.

Before the circumcision, the boys took part in a bicycle procession and were sprayed with water in a symbolic start to the ceremony.

Kepala Batas Umno division vice-chief Mohamad Naser Talib launched the ceremony. He represented former prime minister Tun Abdullah Ahmad Badawi.'

Uganda: "Unmasking the lie: Circumcision, sex and HIV/Aids"

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A few days ago I found it necessary to restate my position, calmly and quietly, that my sons – two so far – should under no circumstances be circumcised. Two very simple and I am persuaded, logical reasons.

First, while I respect the standpoint of those who argue for circumcision, I personally do not believe in it. Circumcision is such a personal affair; nobody has the right to decide for anybody else whether or not they should undergo it. And since kids are too young to appreciate the merits (probably lack of them) of a matter as personal and important as losing their foreskin, I argue that it is improper for somebody else (parent though they be) to make that decision for them, unless it is a medical emergency that has implications on their immediate survival or potency.
If as adults they decide to submit to the knife, that is their responsibility.

The other reason is that the advocates of circumcision in Uganda today are advancing very lame, wrong and wholly incompetent reasons for it. Their message is two-fold: that circumcision will help protect men from contracting HIV – the virus that causes Aids.'

New VA patients younger, more often women

axolotl · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"It's not the old guys group anymore," said Ann Brown, the medical center director, from her office inside the brown brick hospital not far from Harpers Ferry. "It's women and it's younger, and the younger folks, they need more than just medical care. They've got family issues. They need help reintegrating in how to get back into their jobs."'

A couple of observations:

1) The headline 'more often women' turns out to apply to a clinic in some small town.
2) You know those (old) guys - no family issues to worry about, and no reintegration necessary!
3) War is affecting women soldiers - now we really better do something!!

Australia: 'White Ribbon Day in forum's sight'

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THERE is an angry core of Australian men who use cyberspace as the latest forum to unload on how women have done them wrong

A few weeks ago we ran a column on The Punch website, examining their emergence. The piece documented how even those columns with the most innocent subject matter, such as breast cancer, maternity leave, child care or body image become a vehicle whereby crotchety men can bemoan the apparent neglect of men's health issues, the economic pressures faced by single dads and the raw deal they get from the courts.

The article had the unsurprising effect of attracting, well, an angry core of Australian men who use cyberspace as a forum to unload on how women have done them wrong.

There was a depressingly pertinent example of this mindset this week and it's worth pinging the perpetrators over it, as it demonstrated all the nonsensical self-pity of the men-are-victims-too brigade.

...

Parents are reporting their concerns when their sons come home wearing the WR wristband and then begin asking questions, which suggest the boys fear their future will be one of violence, the Men's Rights Agency said this week.

The MRA says there is no excuse for the intrusion of the White Ribbon message into our schools, particularly with their brand of over-exaggeration of male violence and denial of violence by females.

Setting aside the fact that there's no such thing as an over-exaggeration, it would be nice if the Men's Rights people could line up this army of angry families who are appalled by this innocent educational gesture and, while they're at it, maybe they can also wheel out those long-suffering men for whom home is a place of terror.'

Inside Amanda Knox's Prison Cell

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When Associated Press reporter Patricia Thomas was in Capanne prison outside Perugia, Italy, Sunday and saw Knox, "They were passing food through the bars so the inmates could eat inside their cell, which seemed sort of sad to me."

Thomas provided a description of Knox to "Good Morning America" today of a young, timid woman who was so scared after her murder conviction that the female prison guards physically held her during the night to comfort her.
...
"She said one of her big problems now is passing the time in prison... she is trying to work it out with her professors back in the states so she can finish her university degree," Thomas said.
...

'The reporter said the prison is "extremely clean." Knox's cell, which she shares with another American who has been sentenced on drug charges, is small. "It had a little bathroom with a door, a bidet, a sink, a shower.... better than some of the things I've seen at summer camp or boarding school."

The women inmates are allowed to go to a hairdresser once a week.

The prison is a new facility, just opened in 2005. The women's ward has an infirmary, an entertainment room with a pool table and ping-pong table, and a library. There is also a small chapel. Outside there is a little playground for children with benches and toys because there are cells specifically for women with children. Currently there are two women in Capanne with children.'

Funding cuts to women-only shelters could be a positive event for communities

TWSchuett · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Yesterday a story appeared at East Valley Living, a Phoenix-area website, bemoaning the budget cuts by the State of Arizona to the women-only DV shelters across the state. The story included some stunning numbers on the millions of dollars per year the largest shelter in AZ spends on little more than housing and feminist education for a shrinking number of clients.

In response I wrote "Funding cuts to women-only shelters could be a positive event for communities" detailing how shelters could better serve their communities by eliminating most of that housing, emphasizing instead things like counseling and expanding the numbers of qualified clients.

Ed. note: Trudy Schuett has been an advocate for sane public policy around DV programs and laws for a long time. Some on her can be found here.

Prostate Cancer Diagnosis May Bring Suicide, Heart Risks

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prostate cancer may not be as deadly as it once was, likely because of advances in screening and treatment, but a new study suggests that even a diagnosis of the disease carries some risks.

A collaboration including researchers from Harvard University and the Karolinska Institute in Sweden looked at data for more than 4 million men in Sweden above the age of 30 and found that the diagnosis of prostate cancer -- something that occurred in over 160,000 of those men -- increased the relative risks for fatal heart problems 11 times and suicide by eight times in the week after diagnosis.

"Stress can be an important trigger for physiologic reactions, including increased risk of cardiovascular disease," said Dr. Meir Stampfer, chair of the department of epidemiology at the Harvard School of Public Health. "The diagnosis of cancer also can cause high enough stress to see a noticeable increase in both heart disease and suicide."'

Washington Post: Full participation for our 'sisters-in-arms'

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is it possible we are seeing the beginnings of a top-down campaign to end the 1994 policy that has excluded women from assignment to direct, sustained ground combat?

If so, we are likely to hear much chatter soon about sex on submarines and alternate use of limited bathroom and berthing space on notoriously cramped vessels. Common sense and courtesy should go a long way toward resolving such issues. And why should anyone object that those are unreasonable expectations of sailors? No one who cannot deal in a civilized manner with female comrades-in-arms and shipmates needs access to a rifle, much less torpedoes or nuclear weapons.

...

"Servicewomen long ago earned the right to be treated as our sisters-in-arms. To that end, we urgently petition Congress to drop all remaining restrictions against them. As for the men within our ranks who disapprove of this: The man who hurts or disrespects our sisters-in-arms, excuses their rapes and harassers or collaborates with their assailants is not our brother."

Our century will become only more violent. American women and gays have a stake in the survival of our republic, and the military will continue to need to draw on their strength, intelligence and courage. It is time the military acknowledged them and welcomed them into the profession of arms, rather than using, ignoring or discarding them.'

American Thinker: 'Radical feminism's attack on manhood in America'

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the years, radical feminism has been attempting to demonize any display of testosterone. The slightest aggressive behavior is taken to the ultimate extreme portraying males as abusers. Their goal clearly is to wimpify maleness.
...
Whether feminists like it or not, boys are designed to display strength, power and bond with other males. This is why so many fatherless boys join gangs. While I assume some kids truly are hyperactive, I wonder how many boys are being drugged simply for acting like boys?
...
Even fatherhood is no longer honored and respected. I find it difficult to enjoy sitcoms and movies where the kids totally disrespect the father. They chastise and say whatever they want to him. The message is clear, "Dad is an idiot" -- a far cry from the classic TV show, "Father Knows Best".

To a certain degree, radical feminists have been successful in their quest to wimpify American men. You see it in everything from the way news stories are covered to national political issues. We are overly concerned with feelings rather than doing the right thing.'

UK: Poor white boys sliding down GCSE pass rates

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys from white working class homes are falling further behind their classmates when it comes to GCSE passes, according to a breakdown of this summer's results.

A breakdown of the pass rate shows that fewer than one in five white British boys on free school meals obtained five A* to C grade passes including maths and English – the yardstick by which success is traditionally measured.

That put them 31.5 percentage points behind the national average – a rise of 1.3 percentage points in the gap in the past three years.

Separate research also published by the Government today underlined their poor performance.

The research, by Andy Ross from the National Centre for Social Research , showed youngsters who were "disengaged" with education by the time they were 13 were "more likely to be white males".'

UK: Women go online to share child sex-abuse fantasies

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thousands of women appear to be using the internet to share sexual fantasies of abuse involving children.

An investigation by The Independent on Sunday found a series of websites that depict female-perpetrated child abuse as "natural, educational and enjoyable" for children.

Users log into online forums to meet other "like-minded" web users and to share personal childhood experiences about sexual acts with adults that they say include mothers, teachers and babysitters. User profiles on one website monitored by the IoS claimed to be those of teachers, doctors and retired grandmothers with an interest in "young girls" and "lesbian incest".

The postings on such sites – assuming they are not posted by men – run counter to the widely held belief that female abusers are either anomalies or feel forced into such depravity by abusive men. Many of the users appear to have easy access to children and describe deriving sexual gratification from sharing their fantasises.
...

Carol Clarke, 46, will also be sentenced this week in Grimsby after she admitted following boys and girls and abusing them in public toilets.

Dr Anne Carpenter, a clinical and forensic psychologist in Glasgow, said: "The internet is presenting clinicians with completely new dilemmas and new questions. We don't know if interaction on these websites translates into offences, but while many may be able to stop at the fantasy level, we cannot ignore these sites and assume people won't act on these fantasies. They may be fewer in number, but women are as accountable for their actions as men. Being a victim of abuse doesn't mean a woman can't be dangerous."
...
Susannah Faithfull (no connection to the Faithfull Foundation) survived years of sexual and physical abuse perpetrated by her mother. Her therapy service, Aurora, has received a 25 per cent jump in calls from survivors of female abuse since news of Vanessa George's crimes.'

Brooklyn teacher 'sex scandal': Third teacher under investigation

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Never let it be said that Brooklyn doesn't know how to party.

The Brooklyn high school that found itself at the center of widespread attention yesterday after reports surfaced that two female teachers were allegedly discovered in flagrante delicto by a janitor who tattled is again getting unwanted press for the sexy shenanigans of its educators. More scandalous reports surfaced today, this time regarding instances of "sexting" an a potentially inappropriate relationship between teacher Allison Musacchio, 31, (above, left) and a one-time male student.

The New York Post reports that Musacchio is under investigation because a female student spotted her ex-boyfriend's number on the woman's cell phone. Officials allegedly uncovered more than 200 text messages and calls between the two and removed Musacchio from the classroom. (Although how the messages and call records were obtained is unclear.) Prior to that alleged incident of impropriety, Musacchio was investigated for a "fling" with a former student- but the incident was not further probed because the boy was of legal age to consent and no longer a student at James Madison.

Jane Fonda's Eye-Opening Masculinity Speech

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'9 to 5 [link added] actress, author and marriage equality advocate Jane Fonda posed some thought provoking questions about American masculinity in a speech to a women's organization in New York City on Tuesday, reports the Advocate.

The fitness guru, who recently starred on Broadway in the Tony Award-nominated 33 Variations, was presented with a lifetime achievement award by the New York Women's Agenda.

Long-time feminist Gloria Steinem introduced the actress and in her acceptance speech, Fonda made sure to relate her thoughts about society and the masculine-based theories that are keeping violence with children at an all time high.

Fonda suggested that violent behavior could be reduced by examining the hyper-masculinity at the core of acts such as the school shooting at Columbine and other massacres committed by young men.

"What is it about our culture's view of masculinity that makes men and boys so vulnerable to shaming?" asked Fonda. "This is a toxic masculinity."

The On Golden Pond star and Women's Media Center co-founder proposed that a more sensitive and refined understanding of gender could lessen some of the grief.

"If we want to reduce violence in this country anywhere in the world is to create a democratic masculinity that's not so vulnerable to shaming," she said. "But we're so far from that because we don't view the problem in the proper gendered context."'

F&F Action Alert: Write FOX 10 to Protest Dad-Bashing Report

Matt · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Item here. Excerpt:

'In one of the most biased news reports I've ever seen, Phoenix KSAZ FOX 10 beat up on so-called "deadbeat dads" in its recent piece Deputies Round Up Deadbeat Dads. In it, Rochelle Black, the mother of a 3-year-old girl, blasts her husband as a deadbeat, holding the picture of their daughter up to the man's face. When her ex-husband, in handcuffs, begins to respond "you won't let me see her," FOX abruptly cuts away from him. Later, she claims poverty and he accuses her of lying before he is again cut off.

If this father is going to be humiliated on a major TV station, he should at least be able to speak and give his side. We're asking Fathers & Families supporters to email Andrew Hasbun, the segment's reporter, and Linda Williams, the anchor at the time by filling out the form below.'

"Guyland" book review hits nail on the head

Matt · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Review on Amazon.com here. The book is Guyland: The Perilous World Where Boys Become Men. The author of the review, Peter Allemano, is a long-time MRA, and is known for his cogent writing on these matters. Well worth the time. Excerpt:

'Ostensibly a concerned but kindly portrait of young American males, the book is actually a scathing, unforgiving indictment. Indeed, an in-depth analysis of how adroitly Kimmel has crafted his monumental insult of young American males and impugned their dignity -- while patting himself on the back for being simultaneously insightful and avuncular -- is the stuff of a doctor's thesis with potential to run for more pages than the book itself. This review constitutes but a brief glance at a few of the salient points that such a thesis would highlight.

It is through a combination of neatly interwoven tacks that Kimmel navigates the tricky process of passing off a brutal -- and very shallow -- portrait of young males as a thoughtful assessment.

The overall structure of the book, in and of itself, constitutes Kimmel's primary tack. Focusing, in sequence, upon various unseemly aspects of Guyland -- the term Kimmel has coined to demark the social and psychological world of males approximately 16 to 26 years in age -- he carefully cushions his words with polite disclaimers.'

Woman kills daughters, self in upscale home; custody dispute suspected

Matt · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SAN CLEMENTE, Calif.— A woman killed herself and three other family members, including two young children, in what may have started as a child custody dispute in an upscale, gated Orange County community, authorities said Tuesday.

Sheriff's deputies checking on the tenants were sent to a house in the Careyes community shortly before 2 p.m. Monday. They found the bodies of a 38-year-old woman and her daughters, ages 2 and 4, along with a close relative who was in her 60s, said sheriff's spokesman Jim Amormino.
...
He said that man was inside the home when a disturbance began.

"It raised a red flag," Amormino said.
...
Deputies were sent to check on the welfare of the children and found the bodies in a first-floor hallway of the red-roofed, mustard-colored stucco house. Nobody else was in the house.
...

"There was a custody battle going on between the mother of the little girls" and the father, Amormino said. However, the father was not considered a suspect, he said.
...
However, the last homicide report in town also involved a family massacre. Relatives who hadn't heard from relatives broke into a home in another gated community in May 2008 and found five decomposing bodies.

Authorities said Margrit Ucar, 48, shot her husband and herself, while their 21-year-old twin daughters and the family's 72-year-old maternal grandmother died from prescription drug overdoses in an apparent suicide pact. The motive has not been determined.'

DNA testing clears man who served 28 years

Matt · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON— A man who spent 28 years in prison for a rape and murder has been freed after DNA testing showed he's innocent.

Fifty-eight-year-old Donald Eugene Gates left the federal prison in Tucson, Ariz., on Tuesday, just hours after a Washington judge ordered his release.

Gates tells The Associated Press it feels "beautiful" to be free. He says his faith in God helped him get through his incarceration.

Judge Fred Ugast, who presided over Gates' trial, ordered his release just hours before.

Gates was convicted of the 1981 rape and murder of 21-year-old Catherine Schilling.'

Iowa mom gets life for murdering son; barred from contacting surviving son

anthony · 15 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- An Iowa mother was sentenced to life without parole Tuesday for slitting her 2-year-old son's throat and leaving him to die near a remote pond in October 2008, a prosecutor said.

Michelle Kehoe, 36, also received 25 years on one count of attempted murder for slashing her older son's throat. She left both children outside the family van before attempting to kill herself.

The 7-year-old survived and provided key testimony against his mother, whose attorneys argued that she believed she was trying to save her sons from a life of suffering when she cut their throats and her own.

A jury rejected her insanity defense and convicted her of first-degree murder, attempted murder and child endangerment on November 4.

Kehoe also received a 10-year sentence for child endangerment for the injuries she inflicted on her older son, who survived for the night locked inside the family van, Buchanan County Attorney Allan Vander Hart said.'

'Tigress' Uchitel hires Gloria Allred against Woods

anthony · 16 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'She began her career challenging the Boy Scouts of America to admit a girl for the first time and won. She has challenged all-male clubs, fought for gay rights and been voted America's "most effective lawyer".

Now Gloria Allred [link added], the advocate representing one of Tiger Woods's alleged lovers, Rachel Uchitel, and another unnamed mistress, is back again in front of the cameras where she likes to be. A prospect not likely to bring the disgraced golfer any comfort.

Allred's appearance in the Woods saga has set up a new dynamic in an already febrile story, pitting, as it does, the world's most successful sportsman against one of America's most aggressive, successful and media-savvy "sharks".

Among her critics, Arianna Huffington has described Allred as the "most disturbing symbol" of what has gone wrong with the US legal system. But Allred's own self-image is of a feminist, campaigning lawyer – champion of the weak against the strong.'

Salon: 'The woman who cried rape'

anthony · 16 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We've all heard various renditions of the story of the woman who cried rape. It's often dubiously told by men from behind bars, but sometimes it comes straight from the accuser herself. This week, a new version that falls into the latter category is making the rounds: On Monday, 27-year-old Biurny Peguero of New Jersey pleaded guilty to perjury after her false allegation about a gang rape sent William McCaffrey, an innocent man, to jail. He served three years of a 20 year sentence before she came forward with her confession.
...
Feminists are often characterized as applying the "guilty until proven innocent" rule to rape cases and the "innocent until proven guilty" standard to allegations of a woman crying rape. But mark this feminist's words: Some women lie about sexual assault and some rapists go free -- but the response in either case shouldn't split down gender lines.'

UK: Drunk men who demand sex from partner should be 'treated as rapists'

anthony · 16 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Drunken men who demand sex from their wives or girlfriends should be treated as rapists and no longer allowed to claim their judgment was blurred by alcohol, according to the head of the government's review of the rape laws.

Lady Stern, who is leading the review into how rape complaints are handled, has said there must be "no grey area" and that drink should be regarded as an aggravating factor when the case comes to court.

Stern told London's Evening Standard newspaper that a drunken woman was not "fair game" and called for a much tougher line to be taken with men who failed to restrain themselves when they are drunk.

"Being drunk is voluntary and people who become drunk are responsible for their actions. It is not the alcohol that commits the rape. It is not an excuse. It used to be regarded as such, but it is not an excuse . It is an aggravating factor."

Stern said that clear consent had to be obtained for sex regardless of how well couples know each other. A man could not assume a woman's consent.'

Abuse bill betrays victims, subsidizes a radical agenda

Matt · 16 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two years ago Millie Almore was admitted to the SafeSpace shelter in Stuart, Florida. Ten days later the 26-year-old woman lay dead, stabbed in the neck by Marilyn Hooks, another resident at the facility. An investigation into the incident found the homicide reflected an "egregious failure of the entire agency to satisfactorily assure the health, safety, and welfare of both its clientele and staff."

Millie Almore's tragic death spotlights the woes that vex our nation's 1,800 domestic violence shelters. These problems stem from non-existent accountability, poorly-trained staff, and most of all, a deeply-ingrained ideological agenda.

One former resident at the Hope House shelter in West Virginia attested, "I often felt unsafe. There were several physical and verbal altercations between the shelter residents." No wonder that so many opt to return to their batterer rather than continue to submit to harassment and threats by shelter residents.'

Brazilian Court Orders U.S. Boy to Be Returned to Father

anthony · 16 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'MOUNT LAUREL, N.J. — A U.S. Congressman says a Brazilian court has ordered a 9-year-old who has lived there for the last five years to be handed over to his father and returned to New Jersey.

U.S. Rep. Chris Smith says a court meeting in a closed session Wednesday in Rio de Janeiro ruled 3-0 that the Sean Goldman should be handed over to his father, David, at a U.S. Embassy on Friday.

Goldman has been trying to have his son returned since his wife took the child to her native Brazil in 2004, saying she's be back in two weeks. She divorced him there, remarried, and then died in childbirth last year.

Her Brazilian husband argued that he should have custody.

A federal court on Wednesday agreed with Goldman that the boy belongs in New Jersey under an international treaty governing cross-border child abductions.'

PBS re-emerges with "Breaking the Silence"

Matt · 16 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S., via DADD-SC:

Once again, The Battered Mothers Conference and PBS are distributing and showing the documentary, "BREAKING THE SILENCE, Children's Stories."

This film came out in 2005. It was produced by notorious feminazis, and filmed in a battered women's shelter. The numbers they quote (70% of custody decisions favor abusive fathers) are blatantly spurious. They want everyone to believe that judges and marital masters give preference to abusive men in custody decisions. That flies in the face of common sense and several hundred objective studies. Moreover, the main protagonist in the film was HERSELF convicted in three separate cases, of abusing her children. Note that several of the children featured in the film DENIED on camera, that their father had ever been abusive. It's not unexpected that the mothers in the film are obviously ALIENATING their children against their fathers, even as they try to deny the validity of Parental Alienation Syndrome.

When the film first came out, the outcry was loud. PBS was forced to review the film, and concluded that the criticisms were VALID. The PBS ombudsman issued a statement renouncing the film, and assured us that it would be removed from their distribution list. Yet here it is again. We are urging all fathers to visit the Battered Mothers website, click on the appropriate links, and send their comments to PBS and the sponsors of the conference. PBS contact: pmitchell-at-pbs.org.

Paul Clements
DADD-SC

Canada: Woman charged with 10-hour assault

Matt · 16 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'REGINA — A 28-year-old Regina woman has been charged with stabbing, assaulting and threatening to kill another woman over a 10-hour period last week.

Jodi Buckles made her first appearance in Regina provincial court on Monday.

Regina police spokeswoman Elizabeth Popowich said officers were sent to a hospital shortly after 4 a.m. on Friday, where a 24-year-old woman was being treated for stab wounds, numerous bruises and swelling.

Popowich said Buckles is accused of going to the victim's house at 6 p.m. Thursday. The victim was then assaulted, stabbed, robbed and confined in her house for several hours.

The woman was released at about 4 a.m. the next day, and was then taken to hospital by a friend.'

South African boys die to become men in traditional circumcision

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LIBODE, South Africa — The lucky ones survive with mutilated penises and shameful scars for the rest of their lives, but that's the high price boys in rural South Africa pay to become a man.

In the Eastern Cape province, the ethnic Xhosa boys graduate to manhood through a sacrosanct ritual of circumcision.

But every year, the custom among the country's second-largest ethnic group sees young initiates die of complications from botched circumcisions by ill-trained traditional surgeons.

Boys still flock to traditional initiation schools in the bush, because the faster and less painful medical method can result in a lifetime of rejection.

"When you are uncircumcised regardless of your age, society will never regard you as a man, you will always be a boy. No one wants to live with that," said Athenkosi Mtirara, who is about to undergo the procedure.'

'Crying wolf: False rape charges hurt real victims'

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'There are real victims in Biurny Peguero Gonzalez's fake rape story.

In 2005, the Union City woman told authorities in New York that William McCaffrey, a construction worker from the Bronx, and two other men kidnapped and sexually assaulted her at knife point. She now admits it never happened.

McCaffrey was three years into a 20-year sentence when a judge ordered him freed, based on Gonzalez's admission. She now faces seven years in prison herself.

The other victims in this case are the true victims of rape. Andrea Spencer-Linzie, executive director of N.J. Coalition Against Sexual Assault, estimates that 80 percent of sexual assaults go unreported, often because victims fear they won't be believed.

"There's a very prevalent myth that there are a lot of false allegations, so whenever there is one, it plays into the myth," she says.

That's a real crime. And another reason Gonzalez deserves to be punished.'

Canada: Big Ideas: 'Womenomics' promises some wrenching changes -- particularly for men

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Millennia of male dominance in workplaces, governments, companies and countries could come to an end in the next few decades.

The resulting changes will reverberate through every aspect of our lives and society. And, as with all revolutions, it may not go smoothly.

This revolutionary power shift isn't due to social programs or social engineering. It's about economics. Some call it "womenomics" because women already account for 80 per cent of all purchasing decisions.

More formidably, women may soon be the primary breadwinners. It's a trend that began more than 30 years ago as women flooded into colleges, universities and trade schools.
...
"It won't be race or ethnicity. It will be gender. We have no precedent for a world after the death of macho. But we can expect the transition to be wrenching, uneven, and possibly very violent."
...
It is a bleak forecast. Too bleak, really, since it neglects the reality that, for centuries, women have been discriminated against, forced into subservience or simply told to be quiet.

It may well be the death of macho. But it is also the liberation of half the world's people.

dbramham-at-vancouversun.com

'Feminomics: Breaking New Ground - Women and the New Deal'

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From an economic standpoint, will 2010 be the year of the woman? As part of the Roosevelt Institute's ongoing 'Feminomics' series, running on the New Deal 2.0 blog, I was asked to reflect on women's changing roles in the economy. Here's my take on how the New Deal advanced the cause of women's equality.

Earlier this year, the National Organization for Women reported that it was pleased with the way Congress and the Obama administration had approached the need to ensure that women workers benefited from the federal stimulus program. NOW played an important behind-the-scenes role in making sure that the federal dollars not only went to "shovel ready" infrastructure projects (like roads, bridges and other construction work), but also to our nation's "human infrastructure," especially those occupations -- such as nursing, teaching, and social work -- that are frequently held by women.

...

These gains, though somewhat modest within the overall scope of the New Deal relief, nevertheless established the precedent that the plight of working women must be taken into consideration in any state or national effort to provide relief to the unemployed. Equally important, the opportunities provided by the New Deal for professional women such as Ellen Woodward to work in the upper echelons of the federal government was also unprecedented. Indeed, the New Deal's record in placing women in positions of responsibility within government -- which includes, among others, Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, the first female cabinet minister in American history; Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Hilda Smith, the Director of Workers Education within the WPA; Clara Beyer, Associate Director of the Division of Labor Standards; and Mary McLeod Bethune as head of the Division of Negro Affairs in the National Youth Administration -- would not be matched again until the 1960s.

Thanks to the efforts of Eleanor Roosevelt and others, then, the New Deal-though not perfect -- broke new ground for women in America.'

Women's rights groups say judge went too easy on Sen. Monserrate

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After New York state Supreme Court Justice William M. Erlbaum announced his decision on Dec. 4 to sentence a Queens' senator to three years probation for assaulting his girlfriend, women's rights groups say they are disappointed.

They are now awaiting the decision of the Senate's committee of special inquiry's investigation of the senator, hoping he will be forced from the legislature's upper house by Democratic colleagues.

Hiram Monserrate, D-Queens, was acquitted in October of felony charges which would have forced him to give up his seat in the Senate. Due to his misdemeanor conviction, he could have spent a year in prison, but received probation for assaulting his girlfriend — a move Marcia Pappas, the president of the National Organization for Women-New York state, did not agree with.

"We think it would have done him some good to sit in jail for a year to think about what he did," Pappas said, "but we hope the special Senate committee takes action and does the right thing and expels Monserrate."

Letter to the editor: 'Women shouldn't have to "prepare" for abuse'

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'In the editorial "Work to end domestic violence must carry on 20 years later" (Dec. 8), the author writes "if young women are not aware of the prevalence of domestic violence, how do they prepare themselves for it?"

No young woman should have to "prepare" for abuse -- rather, the roots of violence against women need to be exposed through school curriculum for boys and girls that addresses sexism and healthy relationships.

The author wonders if the lessons from 20 years ago at L'Ecole Polytechnique have been learned -- if Harper's pending closure of most Status of Women Canada offices across the country is any indication, the answer is a resounding "no."

Any effective strategy to curb violence against women in our society would require that the government shift its focus from criminalizing offenders to funding feminist organizations to do research, public education and advocacy to address the systemic roots of women's inequality.

Women don't need to "prepare for violence" -- they need governments who respond to the violent realities in their lives, including the pervasiveness of sexism, poverty, the lack of universal childcare, racism, and the legacy of colonialism that continues to impact Aboriginal communities.'

Ed. note: emphasis in text added.

Pro football player dies after domestic dispute

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This is one to watch. Will the 'unidentified' woman face the same level of investigation as a man in a similar situation? Excerpt:

'CHARLOTTE, N.C. -- Cincinnati Bengals receiver Chris Henry has died, one day after falling out of the back of a pickup truck in what authorities described as a domestic dispute with his fiancée.

Charlotte-Mecklenburg police said Henry died at 6:36 a.m. ET Thursday. Henry was 26.

"We knew him in a different way than his public persona," Bengals owner Mike Brown said of the player who was suspended five times during his career. "He had worked through the troubles in his life and had finally seemingly reached the point where everything was going to blossom. And he was going to have the future we all wanted for him. It's painful to us. We feel it in our hearts, and we will miss him."

Police spokeswoman Rosalyn Harrington said homicide detectives have been assigned to the case but had no further information.'

Report: State Child Services Visit Woods Home Over Alleged Domestic Incident

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Florida Department of Children and Families is investigating the possibility that Tiger Woods and wife Elin Nordegren were involved in a domestic dispute with a weapon, RadarOnline.com is reporting.

According to police dispatch notes obtained exclusively by Radar, DCF attempted to make an in-home visit to the Woods' residence last weekend, accompanied by the Orange County Sheriff's Office. The notes use police code, and reportedly detail a domestic incident that took place in front of their young children involving a weapon, which sources say is a golf club.

DCF asked the Sheriff's office to assist Friday. Deputies arrived at Woods' gated community shortly after 3 p.m. and the police involvement was over shortly after 4 p.m. The report noted "negative contact," although police involvement in the case is closed.'

Ed. note: This is dated Dec. 14, 2009, three days prior to this post's date.

Woman faces charges for firing gun in domestic dispute

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'OCEANA COUNTY — A 38-year-old Hesperia-area woman was arrested by Oceana County Sheriff's deputies early Sunday after allegedly shooting at her husband during a domestic dispute. He was not injured.

Lt. Craig Mast said the incident occurred at the couple's home in the 4300 block of S. 184th Avenue in Greenwood Township. He said deputies had previously responded to several domestic-related calls at the residence.

Mast said the woman fired two rounds from a .44-Magnum rifle. "We believe one round was fired into the air and the other at (the husband), who was in his vehicle," Mast said. The 46-year-old man drove off and contacted police.

The wife was arrested and lodged in the Oceana County Jail. A warrant was pending Monday.'

Woman arrested for naval arson after domestic dispute

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LIDO ISLE – A Newport Beach woman was arrested today after her boyfriend's boat caught fire following a domestic dispute. According to police, Nicole MacDonald, 40, threatened her boyfriend Ian Prider, of Costa Mesa, with a knife while on his boat in Newport Beach Harbor. Prider was able to disarm her, but she is accused of setting fire to the boat while he left to call police, said Newport Beach Police Department Public Information Officer Evan Sailor.

MacDonald was arrested on suspicion of assault with a deadly weapon, arson, driving under the influence and child endangerment, Sailor said.

At about 2 p.m. police responded to a call about disturbing the peace involving a fight between a boyfriend and girlfriend, police Sgt. Steve Burdette said.

Shortly after, police contacted the boyfriend who told officials he'd argued with his girlfriend, officials said.

"And the next thing you know his boat is on fire," Burdette said.

MacDonald left, but police caught up to her later in her car, with her son in the back seat, officials said.

Nobody was hurt in the fire, Burdette said.'

"A teen mom hopes to overcome her violent past"

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It had been a stressful night for the 18-year-old mother of two, who organized a party for a dozen and then saw 40 show up. Her mom didn't make it, and she was left to run Pin the Tail on the Donkey by herself.

Her outburst was the default reaction of a teenager raised in a home where violence was the accepted way of dealing with frustration. And her struggle represents the challenge of teaching a youngster how to manage the stress of motherhood and break the intergenerational cycle of violence.

Thomas is working to alter her aggressive tendencies, and help at the party came in the form of Cynthia Brown, her counselor in a parenting program.

"Shantell," Brown said, "maybe we can think about a better way to say that?"

Thomas dropped the knife to hip level and relaxed her shoulders. "OK, OK, back up, everyone," she said, her voice still tense. "Back up!"

Research shows that children raised in violent homes are more likely to be violent themselves. But a growing body of science suggests there are critical stages when intervention can interrupt the cycle. And new findings in brain development, human behavior and economics suggest that early childhood is the most critical and cost-effective time.
...
If Jabari is to learn alternatives to aggressive behavior, it must be imprinted onto his brain now. Doing that starts with his mother.'

Bossip: Chris Henry's Fiancee Known For Domestic Violence, Has Drinking Problem

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Cincinnati Bengals Wide receiver, Chris Henry, is no stranger to trouble. He has been arrested several times and suspended from the NFL since he was drafted in 2005. In an effort to get his life back in order, Henry attempted to turn a new cheek, but his life at home was not that great.

A source close to the situation has exclusively told Bossip that Henry's fiancée, Loleini Tonga has a history of domestic violence and a severe drinking problem. The source states, "I knew the next time Chris would get in trouble it would be because of that girl. She drinks all the time, they get into fights, and she has even bragged about getting into disputes with former boyfriends."

Chris was injured after falling out the back of Tonga's pickup truck after a heated argument. He was found on the side of the road with fatal injuries to his head. Currently homicide detectives are looking into the case. Henry and Tonga currently have two children together, and one child a piece from previous relationships.'

Prominent author addresses 'Why Men Cheat'

anthony · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It seems crazy the amount of media attention Tiger Woods' alleged infidelity has received, especially when you consider the fact that Tiger is not alone in his indiscretions. Prevalence aside, it's always a major blow to the person who has been deceived. Tiger's wife is undoubtedly in this boat, as are millions of his fans left shocked by his behavior. The Woods scandal has occupied dinner table conversations around the country, and has once again forced us to re-evaluate the state of marriage today. Why do people cheat? What can you do to prevent it? And how can you move on if it happens to you? We spoke with M. Gary Neuman, rabbi, marriage counselor and author of The Truth About Cheating, who through his research gave insight on how to keep a healthy marriage.

Let's get down to it: Why do men cheat?
I can tell you why men don't cheat. It's usually not because of sex: Only 8 percent of men who cheat said it was because of sexual dissatisfaction. Rather, 48 percent of men who have cheated said it was because of emotional dissatisfaction. Mens' egos are not as strong as they think, and therefore, they are highly susceptible to someone serving them up admiration outside the marriage, especially when the man is not properly connected with his wife. It often starts as emotional infidelity, where he will use a relationship outside the marriage to satisfy an emotional void.'

Intact America Action Item: AAP close to making recommendation in favor of circumcision

Matt · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

An American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) task force is considering recommending circumcision for all baby boys – and Dr. Susan Blank, who chairs the task force, has described arguments in favor of circumcision based on controversial African studies as "very compelling."

Make sure they hear our side of the debate! Circumcising babies is wrong – ethically, morally, and medically.

Tell Dr. Blank that the AAP should NOT recommend infant circumcision.

Already taken action? Tell your friends, or share the campaign on social networks. And if you can, please make a donation to help us spread the word even further!

DNA clears Florida man after 35 years behind bars

Matt · 17 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Look everyone, another wrongly-convicted man (and hey, a black one at that!) is exonerated from a rape charge! Quel surprise! Excerpt:

'BARTOW, Fla. - James Bain used a cell phone for the first time Thursday, calling his elderly mother to tell her he had been freed after 35 years behind bars for a crime he did not commit.

Mobile devices didn't exist in 1974, the year he was sentenced to life in prison for kidnapping a 9-year-old boy and raping him in a nearby field.

Neither did the sophisticated DNA testing that officials more recently used to determine he could not have been the rapist.
...
The jury rejected Bain's story that he was home watching TV with his twin sister when the crime was committed, an alibi she repeated at a news conference last week. He was 19 when he was sentenced.

Florida last year passed a law that automatically grants former inmates found innocent $50,000 for each year they spent in prison. No legislative approval is needed. That means Bain is entitled to $1.75 million.'

Brazil's highest court halts return of boy to father in U.S.

anthony · 18 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Rio de Janeiro, Brazil (CNN) -- Brazil's high court has halted the return of a 9-year-old boy to the United States, his American father told CNN.

Thursday's ruling comes one day after a lower court unanimously upheld a decision last June by the 16th Federal Court in Rio de Janeiro, which ordered Sean Goldman returned to his home with his father, David Goldman, in New Jersey. That decision was made in accordance with the 1980 Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of Child Abductions.

"It is very, very discouraging," David Goldman told CNN's Wolf Blitzer. "I'm very disappointed. This ruling ... has nothing to do with the merits of the case."

It was unclear whether the high court's ruling is a permanent order or if Sean Goldman is being ordered to stay during the appeals process.'

4-YO boy found drinking beer in girl's dress in hopes to join his father in jail while his parents divorce

anthony · 18 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — Tennessee investigators say a 4-year-old boy was found roaming his neighborhood in the night, drinking beer and wearing a little girl's dress taken from under a neighbor's Christmas tree.

The child's mother, 21-year-old April Wright, tells WTVC-TV the boy "wants to go to jail because that's where his daddy is." Wright says she and the boy's father are going though a divorce.

The boy, found outside his house in Chatanooga on Tuesday, was taken to a hospital and treated for alcohol consumption.

Hamilton County Sheriff's Department spokeswoman Janice Atkinson says the incident is being investigated but the department declined to release the report.'

The boy's mother says she met with child protective services and was told she will get to keep custody of her son.'

Australia: 'Gang rape' victim lied to get pity

Matt · 18 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man behind bars for nearly four years for a gang rape that did not happen has been cleared after his accuser admitted she lied to make her friends feel sorry for her.

William McCaffrey hugged his lawyer after the same New York judge who had sentenced him to 20 years in prison threw out the case and apologised on Thursday.

"I've been waiting for this for a long time," the softly spoken McCaffrey, 32, said outside a Manhattan court.

"I'm just glad it's over."

New DNA tests played a part, but his exoneration hinged largely on his accuser recanting - a rarity after rape convictions, the head of a national prosecutors' group said.

State Supreme Court Justice Richard Carruthers called the case "a catastrophe" for both the criminal justice system and Mr McCaffrey, who was in jail from his arrest in 2005 to his release on $5000 bail in September.'

Feministing: 'A Long Way To Go: My frustrations with the pro-feminist men's movement'

anthony · 18 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here

'Last month, I attended a conference at the College of Saint Benedict/Saint John's University in St. Joseph, Minnesota which was billed as the "First National Conference For Campus Based Men's Gender Equality and Anti-Violence Groups". Initially excited to be around pro-feminist allies who were willing to engage in tough discussion about issues related to masculinity and men's violence against women, I left feeling disheartened rather than refreshed and revitalized. The reason being that several of the conference's most outspoken attendees treaded anti-feminist ground by suggesting the conversation about men's violence needs to be de-gendered, and that instead we use neutral language to talk about violence as a whole. Most anyone who has written on the subject of gender-based violence prevention notes that hegemonic masculinity and male socialization needs to be addressed as one of the core causes of men's violence against women. Additionally, many people had qualms with the phrase "men's violence against women". One panel presenter stated outright that women need to "learn to listen to men" and sadly opined that it was "like the oppressed don't want to listen to their oppressors". When this happened, I felt unsafe in a place I was supposed to feel comfortable in - as these were men who were supposed to be different from the anti-feminist, sexist men I interacted with on a daily basis. But here they were, reitirating the same tired talking points we were trying to dismiss. Needless to say, I (and others, both male and female) called this presenter out and lambasted him and the other men stating anti-feminist viewpoints.'

US: 1 of 100 children now predicted to have autism with 400% more boys diagnosed than girls

Matt · 18 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Video story here. Caption:

'Autism on the Rise
Fri Dec 18, 12:31AM PT ...
CDC study shows the disease is more common than previously believed.'

MSN: 'What Sex Does to a Man's Brain'

anthony · 18 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She appears at the curb, waiting to cross. No, she's not the love of your life. She's more like the heat of the moment. It's fortunate that your wife isn't there, otherwise you'd be in deep trouble as you take in the stranger's hips and breasts, and the way her waist scoops in to accentuate both. Time is enhanced; there's a pleasing buzz connecting your temples.

Your reaction is automatic, reflexive, and quite possibly the most powerful one you'll have this day. It temporarily blots out your long-range commitments — that 10-year marriage, that kid in second grade, that responsibility to keep eyes forward at traffic lights. You've surrendered control; you're captivated by the pleasure in the vision.

"You dog!" you may whisper under your breath, embarrassed by what you're envisioning as you sit there in your family van. But it might be more correct to say, "You dopamine fiend!" As a neuroscientist of 25 years, I know that your brain is command central for everything sexual.
...

Why You've Always Been Horny

You've been lit up on testosterone right from the start, even when you were just a multicelled notion in your mother's womb. The inherited Y chromosome that makes you male (thanks, Dad) triggers two bursts of testosterone that change your brain and body.

The first produces a male brain: one that's more interested in objects, actions, and competition. The left (parietal) lobe flourishes in the testosterone bath and helps you visualize objects in three dimensions (good for catching a football or watching a woman cross the street), and it boosts your aptitude in mathematics (that's how you estimate that she's about a 34DD). In addition, testosterone beefs up your hypothalamus, the area of the brain that's interested in sex. The hypothalamus is twice as large in men as it is in women.'

Man convicted of in-home indecent exposure

Matt · 18 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FAIRFAX, Va. - As Erick Williamson sees it, being naked is liberating, and if passers-by get an eyeful while he's standing in front of a picture window, that's not his problem.

A Fairfax County judge saw it a little differently Friday, convicting Williamson of indecent exposure in a case that has raised questions about what's OK when you're in your own home.

Two women said they saw much more of Williamson than they cared to in October, even though he never left the confines of his home. He received neither jail time nor a fine but is appealing anyway, saying a larger principle is at stake.

"I think that being tried and found guilty of something like this is outrageous," Williamson said after he was convicted and sentenced. "I feel like I'm living in a fishbowl."

Williamson testified that he never intended to expose himself and was simply exercising "personal freedom" as he spent several hours naked in his Springfield home packing up belongings.'

"Dennis" - Film short on YouTube highlights the dangers of emotional incest between sons and mothers jim4146 · 18 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Folks,

I thought I'd share this short film I saw on YouTube. It is creating quite a stir, extremely depressing and disturbing.

In a nutshell, a young bodybuilder mentally abused by a domineering passive-aggressive mother, struggling for independence and self-worth. Can be upsetting, so please be warned.

New Jersey Dad's Battle With Brazil Threatening Ties

anthony · 19 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RIO DE JANEIRO — A U.S. man caught in a tug-of-war with his late ex-wife's relatives for custody of his son got a boost from Brazil's top prosecutor in a dispute that is testing an international child abduction treaty and heating up into a political tussle.

Attorney General Luis Inacio Adams filed an appeal with the Supreme Court late Friday challenging a decision by one of its justices suspending an order that David Goldman's son, Sean, be turned over to him.

Citing the Hague Convention on International Child Abduction, Adams warned in a briefing posted on the court's Web site that "failing to follow that accord will lead to the imposition of sanctions and damage the reputation of Brazil before the international community."
...
University of Brasilia political scientist David Fleischer said the case — along with Brazil's refusal to extradite Cesare Battisti, a fugitive ex-militant who is wanted in Italy for murder but remains in Brazil despite an extradition treaty between the two nations — is harming the South American country's reputation.

"This is a case involving an international agreement of repatriation of children that Brazil has signed," Fleischer said, referring to the Hague Convention. "So Brazil will a get nasty international image as a country that doesn't comply with the international agreements it has signed."'

Ed. note: Very significant, Mr. Adams is the Sol-Gen'l of Brazil, the highest civil-cases representative for the Brazilian government. In short, this warning/criticism is coming from inside Brazil's own government, from its highest legal co-official, too. (the other is Brazil's Atty-Gen'l).

Words from such sources are not to be ignored lightly by their fellows.

National Journal: 'The Rot At Duke -- And Beyond'

anthony · 19 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You might think that a university whose students were victims of the most notorious fraudulent rape claim in recent history, and whose professors -- 88 of them -- signed an ad implicitly presuming guilt, and whose president came close to doing the same would have learned some lessons.

The facts are otherwise. They also suggest that Duke University's ugly abuse in 2006 and 2007 of its now-exonerated lacrosse players -- white males accused by a black stripper and hounded by a mob hewing to political correctness -- reflects a disregard of due process and a bias against white males that infect much of academia.

In September, far from taking pains to protect its students from false rape charges, Duke adopted a revised "sexual misconduct" policy that makes a mockery of due process and may well foster more false rape charges by rigging the disciplinary rules against the accused.

Meanwhile, none of the 88 guilt-presuming professors has publicly apologized. (Duke's president, Richard Brodhead, did -- but too little and too late.) Many of the faculty signers -- a majority of whom are white -- have expressed pride in their rush to judgment. None was dismissed, demoted, or publicly rebuked. Two were glorified this month in Duke's in-house organ as pioneers of "diversity," with no reference to their roles in signing the ad. Three others have won prestigious positions at Cornell, Vanderbilt, and the University of Chicago.'

In New York state, a new look at the wrongly convicted

anthony · 19 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters) – A recent spate of exonerations in New York state has put renewed focus on the plight of the wrongly convicted, with advocates saying it is not as easy as it should be to get an unjust verdict reversed.

In the last two decades, 246 people have been exonerated in the United States with the help of DNA evidence after being convicted of crimes.

But advocates say the system still lags for a far larger pool of people -- who are part of the 90 percent of criminal cases where no DNA evidence exists, but where compelling evidence might surface, such as questions about the reliability of a witness.

Last week, a 32-year-old carpenter who was convicted of rape became the fourth New York man in six months to have his conviction overturned after flaws in the evidence against them were uncovered.

The man, William McCaffrey, had served almost three years of a 20-year prison sentence until his accuser came forward and said she made the story up and lied in court.

"McCaffrey's case shows that people can get on the witness stand and ... evidence that is convincing to a jury is not true," said his lawyer, Glenn Garber.

According to the Innocence Project, which helps exonerate wrongly convicted people through DNA testing, the 246 convicts who have been freed with the help of DNA testing nationwide served an average of 13 years behind bars.'

MND: Feminists Secretly Abolish Male Service Provider at UK University

anthony · 19 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Well, here's another one. We know that, within the past few months, at the University of Chicago, the University of Manchester and Oxford University, student organizations have been established to better understand men and masculinity. In each case, feminists have been outraged and gone to some fairly debased lengths to try and stop the groups from getting university recognition.

But now it turns out that at Hull University in the U.K. they've gone a step further. It seems that the Student's Union there (and at 12 other universities in the country), until recently had a Men's Officer. It also seems to have a Women's Officer. In any event, there was a move to abolish the position of Men's Officer, even though there had been a campus-wide referendum on the position in 2007 and male and female students alike had voted to retain it.

But what did they know. The Executive Committee of the Student Union simply met in secret during the summer recess and did what the students didn't want done - abolished the position of Men's Officer.'

Feminist: Husbands and fathers are “useless hunks of flesh”

anthony · 19 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the latest anti-male screed to pop up on Feministing, one feminist takes an article written by a working wife and mother… and turns it into a man-bashing rant.

> On my Twitter feed I came across this article, from a woman explaining why she was late for work. Turns out she is, somehow, the only person responsible for rounding up the kids in the morning:
>
> So where the f*ck is her husband, who presumably sired the kids in question?
>
> Women of the world: it’s time to leave those useless hunks of flesh called “husbands” and “fathers” who feed off your labour while you earn 70 per cent of their wages.
>
> And by the way: don’t forget to leave them custody. Leave your guilt at the door. The kids will work out fine. Your husband will have to make sure of that, just like you would if you were the sucker. Don’t be.
>
> After all, men earn more money. They can look after the kids better. Let them.

Just so you know, this was listed as one of the editor’s favorites on the site for this week. While several commenters condemned this article, there were just as many who applauded it. Apparently, calling men “useless hunks of flesh” is perfectly fine in the feminist world. Can you just imagine the outrage if some male blogger called women nothing but useless hunks of flesh?

Letter to the editor: 'Misandry ignored'

anthony · 19 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'Editor: I saw a Girl Power T-shirt at Backdoor Disc and Tape in Cotati that showed a woman beating a man. When I asked the male clerks if they would sell a T-shirt that celebrated a man beating a woman, they looked at me like I was crazy.

The root of this double standard is misandry, the sexist counterpart of misogyny. Because we live in a gynocentric society, misogyny is considered unacceptable and closely monitored.

Even though misandry is visible to anyone, it is not visible to most as a problem. Misandry is usually excused ("Men are jerks"), trivialized ("Take it like a man") or rationalized ("He had it coming"). The latter is apparent in "Saturday Night Live" sketches and cartoons making a joke of Tiger Woods allegedly being assaulted by his wife.

According to a survey by the Justice Department, 41 percent of Americans find it "less severe when a wife stabs her husband to death than they do when a husband stabs his wife to death." This double standard also applies to non-lethal forms of violence. Men as the "bad guy" has become so commonly accepted that this inequity is virtually unrecognizable, even to men. As such, most people still assume that only women need to fear domestic violence, while the Justice Department statistics tell a very different story.'

Mona Charen: 'Civil Rights Commission Blunders Again'

anthony · 19 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights (yes, it's still around and, yes, it's outlived its usefulness) is about to subtract from national wisdom about college admissions by focusing on exactly the wrong problem.

The commission has undertaken an inquiry to determine whether colleges may be discriminating against female applicants. The question turns on whether admissions officers, in an attempt to maintain rough gender parity on campuses, are putting a thumb on the scale in favor of underrepresented male applicants, thus disadvantaging the more qualified females.

...

So we seem to have a problem here. For every 100 women who earn a college degree, only 73 men do. These statistics practically shout "boy crisis." Yet the Commission on Civil Rights apparently sees the problem as one of discrimination.

...

Christina Hoff Sommers argued nearly a decade ago in The War Against Boys that in our zeal to remedy past discrimination against girls, we had managed to pathologize normal male behavior. The schools in particular, she wrote, discouraged male strengths such as competition and drive in favor of female strengths such as cooperation and detail work.'

Carey Roberts: 'Additional Fetal-Ripping Case Study'

anthony · 19 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Over four months ago I wrote an article about the phenomenon of what I have come to call "fetal-ripping", the violent crime of cutting open a pregnant woman to steal the fetus. This article came on the heels of a prediction I made on wendymcelroy.com/smf in which I discussed the most recent case of fetal-ripping that had occurred in late July. In that case, after Darlene Haynes was killed and her living fetus taken, I predicted that when the violent criminal was found that it would be a woman, which eventually turned out to be true.

In the article, I presented a series of other case studies of this specific type of crime and showed that in every single case the attacker was a woman. I have found no examples of a man having ever committed this type of crime (which is distinct from simply killing a pregnant woman, which many men have done). I stated that this pattern of crime needs to be noticed, and that this should be included in the discussion of gender and violent crime.

On December 8, the Washington Post reported that police arrested Veronica Deramous who attempted to commit the same crime. Deramous kept her pregnant victim captive for five days, restraining her with duct tape and telling the victim that she was going to cut out and steal her fetus with box cutters and a razor. Fortunately, the victim escaped.

We cannot say that Deramous "snapped". Deramous made a series of logical (but not rational) choices in this premeditated violent crime. This is simply another case study in what is as yet an unrecognized phenomenon.

It is both irresponsible and a hazard to women that this pattern is not more widely recognized.'

Women-only ski center carves new turn in Vail

anthony · 19 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Colorado's female skiing community is buzzing about this month's opening of the Jeannie Thoren Women's Ski Center in Vail, the nation's first slopeside ski center exclusively for women.

Thoren, a veteran crusader for women's ski equipment and proper fit for females, long ago developed the "Thoren Theory" that applies female-specific anatomy and physical movement to proper alignment on skis. Named one of the 100 most influential skiers of the century, Thoren has traveled the country for decades explaining how the anatomical differences between men and women affect ski performance and how gender-specific equipment makes a difference.

Now, women can visit the gear guru on their own schedule with the advantage of test- riding equipment on Vail Mountain, just steps from Thoren's Women's Ski Center in Lionshead. Thoren specializes in picking the right ski and boot for a women's ability, adjusting bindings and adding heel lifts and cants for optimal alignment.
...
Get it: Call 970-476-3888 or visit jeanniethoren.com'

Ed. note: Lots of contact info on that home page, FYI.

'Women-only program' implemented to fight veteran homelessness

anthony · 19 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ortiz is one of the new faces among America's homeless veterans. They're younger than homeless male veterans and more likely to bring children. Their number has doubled in the past decade, and there are an estimated 6,500 homeless female veterans on any given night - about 5 percent of the total homeless veterans population.

But women-only programs such as the one Ortiz participates in are few. "It is always hard to find a place or resources or help when you are homeless," said Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash, a member of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee. "It is almost impossible if you are a woman. Most of the VA facilities cater to men, and you can't take a mom with two little kids and put her in the middle of a homeless center with 30 or 40 male veterans."
...
Administrators had worked with male veterans for years and assumed the same types of programs worked for women. They quickly learned when they opened the women's program in 2001 that the women's issues were more complex and required longer treatment.'

UK: Legal firm offers 'divorce voucher' as gift

Matt · 20 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It's a gift that won't exactly spread festive cheer when taken from under the family tree.

But that hasn't stopped the lawyers behind divorce gift vouchers – which entitle the recipient to free legal advice.

They have been put on sale by Vanessa Lloyd Platt, a leading family lawyer who has represented celebrities including Les Dennis and Anne Diamond.

The vouchers cost £125 for 30 minutes of advice and £250 for an hour, both excluding VAT, and some embossed with a gold scales of justice logo.

Miss Lloyd Platt's firm said it had sold more than 50 since they went on sale earlier this month with requests from husbands, wives and mistresses.'

Double standard on domestic violence

anthony · 21 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Herein lies the troubling paradox of the situation. Only one national writer, Hanna Rosin of Slate Magazine, has written about the domestic violence implications of the situation. Why is Woods in seclusion? Florida is one of many states where police responding to domestic violence calls have the power to arrest based on their own assessment as to who the likely aggressor is, without allegations or charges from the victim. Most important, the legislation states: “The decision to arrest and charge shall not require the consent of the victim or consideration of the relationship of the parties.”

I think the reason he refused to talk with local police, and the reason he hasn’t been seen in public, and probably won’t for several more weeks, is because his injuries were obviously inconsistent with the car crash scenario. His very sharp and well-paid attorneys and agents moved quickly to contain the situation and avoid the even more embarrassing scenario of his wife being hauled off to jail.

The national discussion almost completely overlooks this angle. Almost every female national commentator writing about or discussing the situation has one of two responses: He got what he deserved, or it’s none of our business. My own informal survey of women locally shows the same attitudes.

If the police encountered a similar situation at a trailer park instead of a gated community, would it be handled the same way? If it was Tiger Woods holding the golf club and his wife going to the hospital, would it be handled the same way? If he wasn’t one of the most famous professional athletes of our times, would it have been handled the same way?'

Australia: "Orgasm case" against gynaecologist dismissed badgerb · 21 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This fake orgasm cost this woman in the pocket book. Excerpt:

'A woman who accused her gynaecologist of giving her "leg buckling" orgasms during an examination has had her case dismissed and been ordered to pay her doctor damages of around $55,000.

Bibi Giles' case and credibility fell apart after a second doctor came forward and said she had tried to seduce him.

Ms Giles, 50, dropped her case after hearing the doctor was prepared to give evidence, according to a report in the Daily Mail.

In her case against gynaecologist Angus Thompson, she accused him of touching her in a sexual manner in 2006.
...
He wrote a letter of complaint to the Medical Defence Union before his patient announced she was suing him for sexual harassment.

Dr Thompson was fully exonerated in court and will return to work.'

Having their cake and eating it too webdigr · 21 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This is regarding a recent article in India Today titled 'Separated Women Can Now Adopt Children'. According to the article, the Cabinet recently cleared an amendment to the Hindu Adoption and Marriage (Amendment) Bill, paving the way for separated women to adopt a child. The law defines separated women as those who are living apart from their husbands but are not yet divorced. The Bill will now be tabled in Parliament. The step has been welcomed by women's activists. Excerpt:

'"It should have happened long ago. But in a patriarchal society like ours it takes time for such changes to happen," former National Commission for Women (NCW) chairperson Mohini Giri said, according to the article.

"How many husbands actually contribute to raising a child? It is mainly the woman who does everything. So why should separated women not allowed to raise children?" she asked, according to the article.
...
"In fact, this would help women who stay on in failed marriages. Now they know they can still go in for an adopted child," NCW chairperson Girija Vyas said, according to the article.'

This move smacks of bias against men. First of all, it will encourage women to separate from their husbands on flimsy pretexts. Instead of divorcing her husband, a woman will adopt children and still have somebody to call her own. She will fulfill her aim of isolating her husband while building up a strong support system and social network of her own (including her adopted children, parents and siblings who will always be at her beck and call). Countless children will be brought up without knowing the importance of having a father in their lives. Statements such as 'how many husbands actually contribute to raising a child' are profoundly anti-male.

If a woman wants to be independent, let her be independent in the fullest sense of the term. Let feminists do in letter and spirit what the NCW former chairperson is exhorting them to do ("It is mainly a woman who does everything"). Let a woman not keep her husband trapped in a loveless marriage. Let her free him and raise her children herself without demanding compensation from her spouse. Women in India want to be modern or traditional at their convenience. When it comes to divorce, they shudder and say it's a social stigma. However, they don't mind being single mothers and will go to any length possible to indulge in male-bashing.

Written by S Verma

Ruling expected on US man's Brazil custody fight

Matt · 22 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RIO DE JANEIRO – Brazil's Supreme Court chief justice is expected to rule Tuesday on an appeal that a U.S. father hopes will reunite him with his young son after a five-year custody battle.

A Supreme Court official said Tuesday afternoon that the decision by Chief Justice Gilmar Mendes would be issued before the end of the day. It originally was set for release Monday, but was delayed for unexplained reasons. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because she was not authorized to discuss the case.

David Goldman, a New Jersey man who has pledged to fight for his 9-year-old son, Sean, as long as it takes, was still holding out hope of being reunited in time to celebrate the holidays with his son in the United States.

Mendes will rule on appeals made by Goldman and Brazil's attorney general seeking to lift a stay on a lower court's order that Sean be handed over to his father.'

General Backs Off on Court Martials for Pregnant Soldiers

Matt · 22 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

An Army general in Iraq backed away from his threat today to court martial female soldiers who get pregnant.

"I regret that the term 'court martial' is bandied about or mentioned," Maj. Gen. Anthony Cucolo III said from Iraq today. "I do not ever see myself putting a soldier in jail for this."

Cucolo triggered debate, some of it angry, when his Nov. 4 policy forbidding pregnancy among his soldiers became public recently. His policy statement said violation of the rule could be punishable by court martial, and that it would also apply to the men who get female soldiers pregnant, even if the couple is married.

Pregnant soldiers are immediately redeployed out of combat zones to bases where they can get comprehensive medical care.

"The true purpose behind this is to cause them to pause and think about, 'Okay wait a minute. It was written in the order and I'm going to leave my team. I'm going to leave an outfit shorthanded,'" Cucolo said.
...
While legal and military experts said the order was proper, a spokeswoman for the National Organization for Women called it "ridiculous."

"How dare any government say we're going to impose any kind of punishment on women for getting pregnant," NOW President Terry O'Neill said. "This is not the 1800s."'

Wife and daughter plot murder of father

jayhammers · 22 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Imagine the reaction if a husband and son had plotted to kill their wife/mother.

'The Texas girl who was charged alongside her mother with trying to hire a hit man to kill her father says her mom often talked about getting rid of her husband, but that she never took her seriously.

"She pulled me into the spare bedroom and said sort of laughing, 'Hey, I bought these pills, let's put them in your Dad's beer,' and I was like, 'Why would you do that?'" Ashley Shamp, 18, told "Good Morning America."

The Katy, Texas, teen was arrested just two days after her own mother, 38-year-old Catherine, was charged by Harris County Sheriff officials with solicitation of capital murder and faces the same charge.

The bizarre story started in late November when David Shamp's wife, Catherine, was arrested after a confidential informant -- later identified as her daughter's ex-boyfriend Nathaniel Blake -- contacted the sheriff's office and said she had asked to hire him to kill her husband.'

Brazilian Supreme Court rules in favor of David Goldman in custody case

Matt · 22 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'New Jersey dad David Goldman won a court fight today when the Brazilian Supreme Court ruled that the Brazilian family of his deceased ex-wife must hand over custody of his 9-year-old son.

The court ruled that the boy "be handed over to his father and should be returned to the United States."

It is unclear, however, whether the court's ruling will end the five-year custody battle over Sean Goldman. His Brazilian family has threatened to appeal the court's ruling.

When the ruling is issued, "we will read it carefully and consider the legal remedies available, if needed," Sergio Tostes, a lawyer for the Brazilian family, said in an e-mailed statement while waiting for the court's ruling. "All necessary action will be taken."

The family could take the case to Brazil's top appeals court, but some have doubted whether that court would be willing to review the case if the Supreme Court backs a lower federal court ruling awarding custody to Goldman.'

Warn your sons: Accidentally hitting a girl with a basketball during playtime could get him killed

Matt · 23 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Never too early in life to let nymphotropism guide you to commit felonies against your fellow men (or in this case, boy). Not unlike that whole scene from that TV show in India where the "dominatrix" slapped a contestant and he had the unmitigated gall to slap her back, thus leading to him being beaten nearly to death by all those tough stand-up guys on the stage. (Hey, it's easy to be tough when it's 20 vs. 1 and you're on the "20" side) Excerpt from this particular atrocity here:

'What began as an innocent mistake ended in a vicious attack on a local honor student.

Police said as many as 11 students beat up the eighth-grader leaving him severely injured, and he may even lose his sight.

CBS 2 HD spoke with some of his friends about what led to the brutal attack.

The incident near a school soccer field was so violent that 13-year-old David Muneton needed reconstructive surgery to his face to correct several broken bones.
...
Police have arrested seven students from both the middle school and high school, charging them with aggravated assault. The youngest one is just 12 years old.

Investigators said the teenagers jumped Muneton on Friday as he walked home from school to get back at him for an earlier incident during which the eighth-grader accidentally hit a girl with a basketball.

The superintendent said the girl, who has also been charged, led the boys to Muneton, saying "He's the one."

"We do know that after the girl made the comment one of the people, the boys, who was with him immediately punched him," Superintendent Dr. Richard Segall said.'

Practical Implications of Current Domestic Violence Research: For Law Enforcement, Prosecutors and Judges

Anonymous · 23 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

This is a directive to law enforcement in regards to substantial research on domestic violence which appears to be inconsistent with current law enforcement policies.

This directive states "behavior that is likely to violate most state and federal criminal and civil (protective order) statutes is typically perpetrated by males".

This directive neglects that substantial research on domestic violence includes the use of Straus' Conflict Tactics Scale, which is a measure of the severity of violence, and still finds nearly equal rates between genders.

The directive continues to advise that "If the ratio of male to female suspects and victims differs substantially from those found above, departments should be alert to potential gender bias in their response to domestic violence."

This directive appears to advise that if police departments stray from 86-90% male arrest ratio then that would considered to be gender bias.

UK: Judge says wife-beater should be 'paraded in the streets and pelted with rotten vegetables'

Matt · 23 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A top judge wants men who bash women to be paraded and shamed in public so people can throw rotten vegetables at them.

Judge Esmond Faulks said he wished he could order the medieval punishment while hearing the case of a 17-year-old girl who had been subjected to two nasty assaults by her violent boyfriend.

The victim, Lisa Dinsdale, had been pregnant during the first attack at the hands of Andrew Harrison, 19, but lost the baby at 11 weeks.

Harrison admitted two charges of assault causing harm relating to two beatings, the first on May 18 and the second on August 14.

It was after seeing the pictures of Miss Dinsdale beaten 'black and blue' that Judge Faulks said: 'It's a pity a judge cannot order someone like this to have the pictures hung around his neck saying "I did this to my girlfriend" and be paraded down the high street so people can throw rotten vegetables at him.'"

College student won't be charged for false rape report

Anonymous · 23 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'WINONA, Minn. - The Winona city attorney has decided not to charge a 19-year-old woman who falsely reported she was sexually assaulted.

The Winona State University student had told police a man put a bag over her head Dec. 5 and assaulted her in a parking lot.

Police launched an investigation and the school issued a campuswide alert. The Winona Daily News reports she later admitted making up the story.

Police cited her for filing a false report and referred the case to the city attorney's office, an unusual step for a misdemeanor ticket.

Assistant city attorney Brian Glodosky says he decided not to pursue charges because the woman had a clean record, is an honor student and because the incident was out of character for her.

He says she has problems better handled outside the court system.'

Canada: Teen girls accused of attempted murder

Anonymous · 24 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two teenaged girls tried to kill a 14-year-old guest at a house party in the North End by beating and stabbing her repeatedly, Winnipeg police said on Wednesday.

Officers said at around 11:30 p.m. CT last Saturday, a 13-year-old confronted the victim and physically assaulted her in a dispute where the victim was accused of talking behind the other girl's back.

When she fell to the ground, three other girls – aged 13, 14, and 16 – allegedly jumped in and also began assaulting her.

Police said the violence escalated to the point that the teen victim was beaten with a weight used for weightlifting.

She was then stabbed all over her body by one of the suspects using a knife obtained from the home's kitchen, police said.'

Sean Goldman released to his father, returns to US

Matt · 25 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Now here's a Christmas present! Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla. - A father and his 9-year-old son at the center of a five-year custody battle on two continents are spending Christmas together at an undisclosed location.

Sean Goldman and his dad, David Goldman of Tinton Falls, N.J., landed in Orlando on a private jet chartered by NBC. They reunited earlier in Rio de Janeiro, ending an epic battle that pitted Sean's father against the boy's Brazilian stepfather, who had cared for Sean since his mother died last year.

"It's a Christmas miracle," David Goldman told Jeff Rossen of NBC News, who was aboard the plane for the 9-hour flight.'

Victims of domestic violence being turned away by packed city shelters

Matt · 26 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chantal is one of the lucky ones.

When she needed to escape an abusive marriage, there was room for her at a women's shelter.

Tragically, that's not always the case. Alberta, one of Canada's spousal-abuse capitals, has disgracefully few sanctuaries for battered wives and traumatized children.'

When Chantal's husband erupted into a violent, drunken rampage, police couldn't find anywhere in the city that had room for Chantal and her two small children.
...
That was a few years ago. Police and women's advocates say that nowadays it's even harder to find a safe haven that isn't already full.
...
"Intimate partner conflicts," Simioni says, are considered the most unpredictable, volatile and dangerous situations police can find themselves in.

If it's that risky for the police, just imagine what it's like for the victims.'

Ed. Note: Letters to the editor can be sent to mailbag-at-edmsun.com. Feedback form is also found here.

Charlie Sheen spends Christmas in jail for domestic violence charges, says wife was the aggressor

jayhammers · 26 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. It's kind of sad that only TMZ seems to be able to acknowledge that women commit domestic violence, too. Excerpt:

'Charlie Sheen is not going down for the count. The sitcom star is telling friends wife Brooke Mueller grossly "exaggerated" their fight when she called 911 Christmas morning.
...
She was angry at her husband of less than two years, and "wanted to teach him a lesson by calling the cops," a source told RadarOnline.com.
...
Within hours, Brooke had already changed her story with the Aspen police, several sources have told us.

Sheen's version of events is that they were arguing about Brooke's drinking with Charlie standing firm that the mother of his twins had been partying too much. Brooke went postal at the idea that her husband was critical of her mothering skills.'

Parental Alienation is Kidnapping

Anonymous · 27 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Currently our laws grossly ignore parental alienation as nothing more than an act of absconding (ie, running away). However, running away means to take oneself. Abduction and kidnapping means to take someone else. Most children are too young or too used to going with a parent that they are unaware that any crime is being committed and in many cases are brainwashed into thinking that they were being abused.

ABSCOND - Etymology: Latin abscondere to hide away, from abs- + condere to store up, conceal Date: circa 1578
:
1 : to depart secretly and hide oneself

ABDUCT - Etymology: Latin abductus, past participle of abducere, literally, to lead away, from ab- + ducere to lead Date: 1825
1 : to seize and take away (as a person) by force
2 : to draw or spread away (as a limb or the fingers) from a position near or parallel to the median axis of the body or from the axis of a limb

Currently in most states, courts and law enforcement reduce the act of parental alienation to nothing more than a civil matter that is misclassified as absconding. Any parent and child(ren) who has been through parental alienation know that it is nothing shy of abduction, kidnapping and in some cases holding a child for ransom.

As you can see from the Webster dictionary definitions it is clear that to abscond is to “hide oneself” where abduct is “to seize and take away.” Many children are not old enough to know what is happening to them and therefore the act of parental alienation is a gross injustice. Currently this biased view gives unjust enrichment and discriminatory power to one parent. By simply creating the custody order at the time of birth you can resolve nearly 100% all of parental alienations and reduce courts caseload dramatically because you have removed a HUGE grey area that plague parents, children, law enforcement and the courts.

Parental Alienation is just starting to be recognized as a serious form child and spousal abuse and therefore I must ask that we give children and both biological parents the justice that they deserve. Our children are more than “just a civil matter”; they are humans who rate human rights, they are children who rate biological rights and they are citizens who should be protected by our states and above all else our nation. Our current child support system, our courts, and attorneys are given the power and authority to hold children hostage for money.

I am calling for revisions to all U.S. Federal, State and Local Codes to reflect that acts of parental alienation are felony acts of child abduction and/or kidnapping as may apply to each case.

Many acts of parental alienation are malicious acts of vengeance against the other spouse and therefore need to be judged according to the time a child is kept from the other biological parent barring true and just cause. Limiting the amount of time that a child can be kept from visitation, communication and other legal rights that both biological parents possess would help reduce the courts case loads.

Stephen Ricket
www.WheresDADDY.org
www.AChildsRights.org

Entertainer and anti-DV crusader Mary J. Blige punches husband at record release party

Hunchback · 28 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Entertainer Mary J. Blige, who not long ago opened a DV center (for women only), punched her husband in public in the face, drawing blood. Details here. Excerpt:

'Mary J. Blige punched husband Kendu Isaacs [link added] in the face at her record release party at club M2 Tuesday night. The singer slugged Isaacs, drawing blood, after she thought he was flirting with a waitress. "She turned to him and was screaming, 'You're not going to ruin my night,' " our witness says. "They got up in each other's faces before someone tried to separate them, at which point she shoved the guy aside, pulled back and popped [Isaacs] in the face." The source said Blige, Isaacs and their entourage were whisked through a door to the attached club Pink, which was closed. Our witness relates, "She was yelling at him, 'What are you gonna do, Chris Brown me?' Four of her bodyguards and two of the club's kept them apart." Isaacs was kicked out. Blige went to the bathroom to fix her hair and makeup, but soon fled, creating an uncomfortable scene for partygoers Jay-Z, Beyoncé and Busta Rhymes. Her rep said only, "People lie and don't know what they're talking about."'

Ed. note: Other links in excerpt left out as being non-germane to the topic.

"A Family’s Heartbreak": New Book on Parental Alienation

Anonymous · 29 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Allow me to introduce myself. My name is Mike Jeffries, the author of A Family's Heartbreak: A Parent's Introduction to Parental Alienation. [link added]

The book has only been out a few months and is getting excellent reviews from both professionals and lay people. Please check it out at our website -- http://www.afamilysheartbreak.com/. If you are interested in doing a book review or interview for your site visitors please let me know.

Sincerely,

Mike Jeffries

Mary J. Blige beats up her husband - deafening silence from MSM and DV advocates

Matt · 29 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Is anyone else hearing so much as a peep out of the MSM or so-called DV advocacy groups about this story? Not a word.

Well maybe I am just all fired up on coffee and OTC cold meds today but as far as I am concerned, this is not just going to slip by in the usual stream of news stories that bombards us daily. This is if nothing else THE example of the decade of how DV vs. men is utterly ignored by just about everyone who may (or may not) hear about it via the MSM or any other source. It's nymphotropism and cognitive dissonance in action x 1000. One day I imagine it will be a case-study that SOC101 students will be made to write essays about. (Well, a fellow can dream, can't he?)

The MSM reflects what they believe (and all too often, get right) their viewers or readers want to see in the content they serve up. If there is some inconvenient truth that needs telling, they need to be informed to get on the stick and start telling it or else start losing their advertisers or subscribers.

Let's start with TV contact information, then the (so-called) papers, then radio. Click 'Read more', as I will list contact information for as many MSM sources as I can think of. Also, I will write a sample letter for you to use. Let's roll on this, since if we cannot move on such an open, high-profile, and egregious example of the double-standards at work here, then we may as well hang it up.

Law Fathers & Families Helped Create Leads to Victory for High-Profile Military Parent

Matt · 29 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

From F&F latest newsletter here. Excerpt:

'Because of problems in the family court system, when a divorced or never-married military parent deploys overseas, they often face the possibility of losing their custodial arrangement and their relationship with their children.

Fathers & Families and its legislative representative Michael Robinson have been at the forefront of this issue, successfully working to pass military parent legislation in dozens of states. The first success on this issue occurred in 2005 in California with the passage of SB 1082.

SB 1082 addressed the way parents who serve are often taken advantage of in custody and family law matters while they are deployed, and helped resolve the child support nightmare many mobilized reservists face. Fathers & Families organized a campaign in support of the bill, and the Senate Judiciary Committee Analysis of SB 1082 made specific note of your calls and letters. We've also had some success with federal legislation on this issue–to learn more, click here.'

Iranian president seeks further sex segregation

Matt · 29 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I am sure he would have plenty of American feminist support if they could be certain the women's facilities were not only separate but more-than-equal to men's. Nothing like a toxic mix of ideology and power-hunger, is there? Sound familiar? Excerpt:

'An increase in efforts to separate men and women in Iranian institutions has sparked concern that President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad has ordered a substantial tightening of state policy on sex segregation since his June reelection.

Since Ahmadinejad was elected, the government has made various moves to further segregate office buildings, hospitals, public parks and primary schools and in the half year since the president was reelected a number of Iranian ministers and religious leaders have called for a more strict adherence to sex segregation in various aspects of public life.

"There has definitely been a concerted effort to rekindle the kind of policies that enforce gender segregation," Dr. Mehrdad Khonsari, a senior research consultant at the Centre for Arab and Iranian Studies told The Media Line. "There are efforts to have separate dining areas in universities, to close co-ed places, the atmosphere is just generally different."
...
"The only difference between today and ten years ago is that you have more female post graduates at university," he added. "So if anything we are seeing an increase in female participation in academics. Indeed over the past three months I brought three people into the department. All of them are women."'

"10 years of advocacy"

TWSchuett · 30 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I've just published 10 years of advocacy, an essay about my years in the movement, and what seems to be ahead.

I'm pretty positive about the future, but hey, that's me... Excerpt:

'When the big ball falls in Times Square this time, I will have been in this advocacy for ten years. Much has changed since then, and we all know much that has not.

In the early months of 2000, I knew nothing of VAWA and the industry that has sprung up to benefit, in terms of both money and political clout, from the misery of the abused.

Even today, I still can't figure out how I did not know. After all, I'd been working either as volunteer or paid staff at one or another of several social services agencies since 1984. In 1991, I'd even served as a member of our local United Way's Allocations Panel, and our only local "battered women's shelter" was one of the agencies in my assignment.'

Article: "Lesbian 'mother' case presents constitutional issue" liberty · 30 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Vermont judge has ruled that the birth mother of a Virginia girl must turn custody of the child over to a former lesbian partner. Could this be another benchmark for custody dispute issues?

Lisa Miller was in a homosexual relationship with Janet Jenkins in Vermont, but Miller became a Christian, gave up her former lifestyle and moved to Virginia with her daughter. Although Jenkins is not the biological mother and never tried to adopt the now seven-year-old Isabella, Vermont Judge William Cohen ordered Miller to turn the girl over to Jenkins this Friday. Attorney Steve Crampton tells OneNewsNow that Liberty Counsel argued before a Virginia judge last week, asking for Miller's protection.

"There's a very serious constitutional issue regarding whether Virginia must enforce the Vermont court order," the attorney notes. "So the clock is ticking quite loudly right now, and it remains to be seen whether we can get any relief in Virginia."'

Tiger Woods whisked away for surgery after Elin Nordegren clubbed him, blogger says

Matt · 31 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Blog post here. Excerpt:

'Enraged over reports of her husband's philandering and set off by the discovery of an "incriminating" text message, Elin Nordegren smashed Tiger Woods in the face with a 9-iron on U.S. Thanksgiving Day and then chased a bleeding and woozy Woods as he fled from his Florida home, a prominent sportswriter relays in a Boxing Day blog that has caught the attention of celebrity gadfly Perez Hilton.

Furman Bisher, a retired sports columnist for the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, posts on his blog what he says is a "legitimate message" he received from a "trustworthy journalist" he has known for years.

The source tells Bisher that Woods wasn't home when Florida State Troopers came to question him following the crash outside his home. That's because he had already been whisked away to Phoenix, where he underwent reconstructive surgery to repair the damage to his face, which included a gash to the right side near the nose, a broken facial bone and damaged teeth.'

Real Women of Canada: "The Family Hits The Spotlight"

Matt · 31 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Western nations are looking at the shambles their countries have become. A great increase in family breakdown (divorce and separation) resulting in increased substance abuse, alienated youth dropping out of school with no skills, and an ever increasing number of children raised in single parent homes, are just a few of the problems facing nations today. This has led to government policy makers, churches and charities trying to make sense of both the causes and consequences of family break-up. Consequently, the future of the family has now been placed at the top of the political list of priorities.

For example, British Prime Minister Gordon Brown talked about family values at the annual Labour Party Conference in Brighton, September 27-October 1, 2009. The UK opposition leader David Cameron told his party members that the family lay at the heart of his beliefs. Other government leaders in Russia, France, Poland, Latvia and Romania are expressing similar concerns.

...

Status of Women funded feminist organizations, such as the organization National Association of Women and the Law (NAWL), recently made a submission to the Department of Justice on the issue, rejecting Mr. Vellacott's shared parenting bill. The Feminist Alliance for International Action (FAFIA) (see article "Status of Women Must be Disbanded", p.1) has submitted its own objections to shared parenting. The reason that shared parenting raises feminist hackles is due to the fact that, if it were to be implemented, women would no longer be assured on divorce of having control, as well as physical custody of the children of the marriage, as is the current situation. Therefore, feminists regard Bill C-422 as a severe undermining of their "entitlement" to the children of the marriage upon separation and divorce.

Since most divorces in Canada are initiated by the wife, women might not be quite so quick to initiate divorce proceedings if there was a real possibility that they would not have custody of their children on divorce, as they do at the present time.'

Womenomics: Feminist management theorists are flirting with some dangerous arguments

fibtastic · 31 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I can't say I completely agree with this story over at the Economist, which contends that first-generation feminists were "tougher" than the current generation of feminists, and also "tougher" than men. Excerpt:

'The new feminism contends that women are wired differently from men, and not just in trivial ways. They are less aggressive and more consensus-seeking, less competitive and more collaborative, less power-obsessed and more group-oriented. Judy Rosener, of the University of California, Irvine, argues that women excel at “transformational” and “interactive” management. Peninah Thomson and Jacey Graham, the authors of “A Woman’s Place is in the Boardroom”, assert that women are “better lateral thinkers than men” and “more idealistic” into the bargain. Feminist texts are suddenly full of references to tribes of monkeys, with their aggressive males and nurturing females.
...
Women would be well advised to ignore the siren voices of the new feminism and listen to Ms Dong instead. Despite their frustration, the future looks bright. Women are now outperforming men markedly in school and university. It would be a grave mistake to abandon old-fashioned meritocracy just at the time when it is turning to women’s advantage.'

Gen X Men: Double-digit income decline met with political and social indifference

Matt · 31 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You are somewhere between 35 and 45 years old, give or take, and you can't shake the feeling that things just aren't adding up for you, your family, your generation.

The bosses and politicians in charge — many of whom are older than you — don't talk about you much, even as your job bites the dust or you gripe about money in the cubicle next door.
...
If you are a man born between 1964 and 1974, you were earning 12 percent less in 2004 than your father was when he was your age three decades earlier, according to a study by the Economic Mobility Project of the Pew Charitable Trusts.

Let's attach a dollar figure to that — so that we truly register the generational grand larceny here.

Fathers were making $40,000 as thirtysomethings, compared to $35,000 for their Gen X sons. With help from an Inquirer colleague, I tabulated that Gen Xers lucky enough to continue making that meager $35,000 for the next 30 years without a single pay raise (but at a 2.2 percent annual inflation rate) will have pocketed $227,680 less than the dad who told them to believe in the American Dream.

And that was before the stock market crash of 2008.'

Houston Dad Looking to Get Daughter Back From Brazil

anthony · 31 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After seeing what one New Jersey man did to get his son back from Brazil, a Texas father is looking to do the same.

Marty Pate says his ex-wife defied a custody agreement and returned to her native country of Brazil with the couple's 8-year-old daughter, Nicole, MyFoxHouston.com reports.

"Here we are three and a half years later, and still no daughter," Pate told MyFoxHouston.com, but in his renewed efforts, Pate is hopeful he'll have his daughter back in Texas by summer.

...

One congressman is hoping to help parents like Goldman and Pate.

Rep. Ted Poe, R-Texas, is co-sponsoring a bill that would make it harder for parents in custody disputes to flee the country with their kids. Brazil, in particular, has been of little help.'

Spokane boys kidnapped by mom found 11 years later

Matt · 31 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MILTON, PA -- Bill Connington's two young sons have been missing for 11 years after their mother abducted them and disappeared. Tuesday night authorities in Pennsylvania called Connington to confirm they had been found safe and sound in Milton, where their mother had been living under an alias.

Jill Diane Haugen, 48, was arrested Tuesday at her home in Milton, Pennsylvania where she was going by the name Ann Thompson. Haugen is Connington's ex-wife and the mother of Connington's 17-year-old and 15-year-old sons.

Milton Police Officer Todd Ulrich called Connington by phone Tuesday to tell him the news. Ulrich says Connington was "absolutely surprised" and had thought he'd never see his sons again.'

Texas county targets military personnel as perpetrators of domestic abuse

TWSchuett · 31 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

I'm a big supporter of the military. I worked in a Marine corps library for three years, and my husband still works teaching Marines how to fix their cars. So I was particularly outraged when I saw this effort to go after military personnel specifically for domestic violence, and by a civilian authority, no less.

What's worse, the news story was accompanied by a poster which says, "Battering is always a choice." When you visit the website for the producers of the poster, you find that self-defense is considered by them to be an "excuse for battering."

If you're as mad about this as I am, contact info for all parties as well as the poster and an excerpt from the news story (which BTW does neither KXXV nor Bell County any favors with its semi-literate prose) is on my site.

Happy New Year guys, wish the current news was better!

T____

Slate: "Why Bristol Palin Shouldn't Get Sole Custody"

fibtastic · 31 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Interesting article on shared parenting in Alaska, driven by the Palin case. Excerpt:

Bristol Palin wants sole custody of her 1-year-old son, Tripp, we learned when a judge refused her request to keep the proceedings closed. Judge Kari C. Kristiansen made the court filings public after Tripp's father, Levi Johnston, opposed closure, saying that Bristol's mother, who is of course Sarah Palin, "has a reputation for being extremely vindictive." ("Not that Bristol would ever be that way, nor that I would," he demurely added.)
...
That probably won't happen, because Alaska has a statutory preference for joint custody. As in most states, the legislature has instructed the courts to err on the side of shared parenting as long as doing so doesn't undermine the best interests of the child. This idea has become well-entrenched in a relatively short time. Until the end of the 19th century, courts favored fathers, who had the money and the power and the property rights. Then, for much of the 20th century, mothers had the upper hand because of the presumption that children needed them more during what courts called their "tender years." For a child under the age of 5, custody almost always went to the mother.
...
Denying Levi Johnston's shared legal custody of his son, at this point, would be premature and out of step with the idea of encouraging dads to play a real part in their kids' lives. If he doesn't come through for his son and joint custody in fact devolves into maternal custody, Bristol can go back to court later. But for now Levi deserves the chance to keep his promises to the judge and to Tripp.'

Charlie Sheen Could Be Prosecuted Without Brooke Mueller's Cooperation

anthony · 31 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brook Mueller may want a chance to work things out with husband Charlie Sheen in the wake of her claims that he threatened her with a switchblade, but experts say the seriousness of her accusations may get prosecutors involved even without her cooperation.

Lawyers for the Hollywood couple have asked a judge to throw out a restraining order imposed shortly after Sheen was arrested on domestic violence charges Christmas Day, so that they can work on their relationship.

The restraining order, common in Colorado domestic violence cases, prevented Sheen from having contact with Mueller, possessing weapons or using drugs and alcohol.

But even if Mueller is willing to reconcile with Sheen, prosecutors may choose to proceed with a court case without Mueller's testimony, noted criminal defense attorney Roy Black told "Good Morning America."

"There's no question they can proceed without her cooperation ...because they can use her statements, her 911 call," Black said.'

RADAR ALERT: Mainstream Media Suppresses Stories Of Violence By Women

Matt · 31 December 2009 · Archived copy · Original

When Rhianna hit Chris Brown in the head with her stiletto heels while he was behind the wheel trying not to lose control of the car and Brown overreacted[1], what did mainstream media report? They showed us Rhianna's injuries, but were totally silent about what part Rhianna's temper played in the altercation.

When Tiger Woods' wife attacked him with a golf club[2], the mainstream media ignored his wife's violence. Hardly any of the mainstream media reported that the Florida Highway Patrol described Woods' injuries as "serious".[3] Instead they waited for more stories about Woods' affairs to come out so they could spin it as a tale of Woods' infidelities rather than about female-perpetrated domestic violence.

Now we have the case of Mary J. Blige, a woman who purports to be concerned about domestic violence, so much so that she has provided part of the funding for a domestic violence shelter named in her honor[4]. But her comment, "Women from all walks of life, not just women from poverty-stricken areas," makes it clear that only female victims will be helped by her shelter. And her actions make it clear that she believes that as a female she enjoys the privilege of using violence whenever any male displeases her. On Christmas Eve, the New York Post reported that she punched her husband in the face, drawing blood, because she thought he was flirting with a waitress.[5] How has the rest of the mainstream media covered her hypocrisy? The silence has been deafening!

Mom admits poisoning 2nd baby to get dad's attention

Anonymous · 1 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HILLSBORO, Ore. (AP) -- A 25-year-old former medical assistant has pleaded guilty to poisoning her 2-month-old daughter with morphine in a bid to attract the attention of the child's father. She was on probation for a similar crime in California.

Sara Rose Dillard appeared in Washington County Circuit Court on Wednesday and admitted giving her daughter Elise a high dose of the opiate in June. Judge Mark Gardner sentenced Dillard to seven years in prison after she pleaded guilty to first-degree assault.

Authorities said Dillard, of Beaverton, was on probation from California for feeding her son, who was 10 months old at the time, two opiate pills.
...
"She knew the baby would go into respiratory distress and bring a lot of attention to her and her baby because she'd put herself through respiratory distress before," prosecutor Megan Johnson said Wednesday.

Doctors at Providence St. Vincent Medical Center admitted the 2-month-old for observation in June although they couldn't detect the fever Dillard said she had. The next morning, the child was barely breathing. Her condition puzzled doctors until toxicology tests came back positive for opiates.'

Teenage mother charged in death of her infant son: Police say she threw him to the floor head first

Matt · 2 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Jan. 1--A teenage Tulsa mother was charged Thursday with killing her infant son.

Tulsa Country prosecutors charged Dominique Lagail Lee, 18, with the first-degree murder of Kai'den Terry.

He was 48 days old when he was fatally injured on Sept. 27, the charge states.

Lee is accused of inflicting a blunt trauma injury to her son's head at their apartment in the 6900 block of South Trenton Avenue.

A police investigator's affidavit asserts that Lee grabbed the child's legs, pulled him off a bed, and threw him to the floor head first.'

Woman fails to surrender child to ex-partner in custody war

Matt · 2 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman at the center of a complex dispute with her former lesbian partner defied a court order to give up custody of her 7-year-old daughter Friday, opening the door to possible criminal charges.

A Vermont judge had ordered Lisa Miller to turn over daughter Isabella to Janet Jenkins at 1 p.m. Friday at the Falls Church, Va., home of Jenkins' parents. Miller did not show up with the girl, according to Fairfax County, Va., police and Jenkins' Vermont-based attorney.

...

Her attorney, Mathew D. Staver, the law school dean at Liberty University, did not respond to a request through an assistant for comment.

Carl Tobias, a University of Richmond law professor who has followed the case, said it was likely the Vermont judge would issue another contempt order in the wake of Friday's developments.'

Welcome to the jungle, ladies!

ABC News gleefully asks: "Can Male Prostitutes Boost The Economy?"

anthony · 4 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. It ends with the suggestion that "Shady Lady" is looking to see if it can "put a price on a man". They were beat to that punch a long time ago by governments conscripting men into military service, companies planning for the number of deaths and injuries working men would suffer, and of course, by divorce courts treating men as wallets to be plundered.

Are there any discussion of brothels staffed by women for men that get such joyful treatment? Haven't seen one yet.

Barbara Kay: The end of the gender wars

Matt · 4 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog article here. Excerpt:

'Commonsensical Canadians are losing patience with the angry, blame-all-males school of feminism. It's no accident that the feminist Toronto Women's Bookstore, for years a bustling cynosure of the cultural zeitgeist, is in danger of closing down. Or that once overflowing women's studies classes are emptying out, or morphing into "gender studies" to attract more students (a trap, really: Gender studies are also gynocentric, offering a more subtle version of heterosexual male-bashing than women's studies).

Rob Kenedy, an assistant professor in the sociology department of York University with a specialty in the men's rights movement, was unique amongst sociologues in teaching a course in the 1990s about men and their particular tribulations and needs. In a telephone interview he recalled his surprise when more young women signed up than men: "Women are far more interested in learning about men and masculinity than men are."

Because the numbers in universities are so skewed to the distaff — in a current obligatory sociology course, his own tutorial is comprised of 25 women and two men — Kenedy predicts sociology departments will have to open up (positive) masculinity courses to satisfy the burgeoning curiosity of women about what makes men tick.'

UK: "The surprising lessons I learned on a journey to the heart of feckless Britain"

Matt · 4 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. What jumped out at me about this is that most of her examples were of young men. Does that mean that young women do not have similar problems of low self-esteem or a feeling of "feckless hopelessness"? I doubt it, and she mentions two cases of it in her article. But I have to wonder, is it just easier for her to find examples of such despair among young men? Based on other reports I have read, that answer seems to me to be "yes". Excerpt:

'With my producer, Charlotte Simpson, I went to the north-east of England, an area of very high deprivation with the highest rate of youth unemployment in England.

What I found was in many respects somewhat chastening. I met people living near Blyth, Northumberland, who were struggling to get a job in places where there was precious little work to be found.

Many young people seemed to be just being shunted from vocational course to vocational course without ever getting a job. When asked, they all said they wanted to work in order to retain a sense of self-respect.
...

When I asked this teenage father whether he would accept a job he found boring in order to support his family, he said he would not; he would rather live indefinitely on welfare.

This boy hadn't seen his own biological father for years; he seemed to have no responsible male role model in his family. And now he looked set to give his own son the same message.
...
One Nigerian man leaves home before four every morning to get to the first of his two daily jobs in central London as a cleaner, getting back home at 10.30 at night. At weekends he sleeps, so he rarely sees his family.

Then there is the harassed mother from Ecuador, trying to look after her young children in between her two jobs cleaning lavatories an hour's bus ride from her home - all with no holidays, no sick pay and, with both jobs on the minimum wage, sometimes not enough money for food.
...
I developed a greater sympathy for people struggling to motivate themselves to work. But I also developed an even deeper belief that the current system, which seems to undermine them at every turn, must as a matter of urgency be reformed.'

RADAR ALERT: Tell the OVW to Obey President Obama's Scientific Integrity Directive

Matt · 4 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

On March 9, 2009, President Obama issued a directive on scientific integrity (see this (.pdf file), in which he said:

> "The public must be able to trust the science and scientific process informing public policy decisions. Political officials should not suppress or alter scientific or technological findings and conclusions."

In late November Catherine Pierce, Acting Director of the Office on Violence Against Women published a memo (see note here) in which she suppressed all information about victimization of males and all information about perpetration of domestic violence by females. Pierce's memo was the subject of RADAR's Dec. 2, 2009 press release.

In his directive, President Obama also said:

> "By this memorandum, I assign to the Director of the Office of Science and Technology Policy (Director) the responsibility for ensuring the highest level of integrity in all aspects of the executive branch's involvement with scientific and technological processes."

"A Girl's Life on PBS" propagates falsehoods about education, suicide, etc.

fibtastic · 5 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Just caught this documentary on my local PBS affiliate. It seems to rehash the tired and disproven tropes from the 1992 AAUW report on "How schools short-change girls" as though they were facts. Excerpt:

'Girls growing up in America today have more opportunities than their mothers and grandmothers ever imagined. They do well in school; by fifth grade they're equal to boys in math and science, and they're significantly better at reading and writing. They have more career choices, more flexibility in family roles and more female role models in positions of political power.

But even as doors open, girls may not be able to walk confidently through them. When they get to middle school, girls' self-esteem plunges. Twice as many girls as boys attempt suicide. Twice as many show signs of depression. Girls have a higher risk of abusing alcohol and drugs, and violent physical assaults by girls have skyrocketed since 1990.'

Colorado to get its first only single-sex public school - for girls

mens_issues · 5 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. So the Denver Public School system is finally going to start a single-sex public school. Did they do something for boys and their lagging performance (particularly in reading and writing) in the feminised school system by creating a school just for them? Of course not! The first school will be for girls only. Excerpt:

'Following a growing nationwide trend toward single-gender classroom education, the first all-girls public school in Colorado will open next year in Denver.

In 2002, only 11 U.S. public schools offered single-gender classrooms. Today, at least 547 public schools offer single-sex classes, according to the National Association for Single-Sex Public Education. At least 91 of those schools are single-gender schools.

The surge comes three years after a federal rule said single-sex classrooms weren't discriminatory and as emerging research suggested that girls' and boys' brains develop differently.

Girls Athletic Leadership School, or GALS, was approved at a Denver board meeting this month. The charter school will open with sixth- and seventh-graders and grow to include eighth through 12th grades.

"We know that girls focus on academics more when they're in an all-girls setting, simply put, because we are taking away a large social distraction, especially in middle school," said Elizabeth Wolfson, founder of the school, which will be in south-central Denver.
...
"The idea is to take girls to a place where they can deconstruct what it is like to be a girl," Bowar said.

The next move, she said, is to create a similar program for boys.'

RADAR ALERT: Oral Argument in Crespo to be Webcast Jan. 6, 2010

Matt · 5 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Oral arguments in the Crespo case will be webcast live at 12:00 noon, Eastern Standard Time, on Wednesday, January 6, 2010. The webcast can be viewed at http://www.judiciary.state.nj.us/webcast/index.htm. The court's schedule for the day is at http://www.judiciary.state.nj.us/webcast/op100106.htm.

++
Date of RADAR Release: January 4, 2010

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org/

New York Times Book Review: No winning for losing for any sexiness from male authors

fibtastic · 5 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Check out Katie Roiphie's piece in the NYT Book Review comparing/contrasting the Roth/Updike/Mailer generation of writers with the Eggers/Wallace/Kunkel generation. Her conclusion? The former are assholes while the latter are sissies, either way they're "sexist". There are even nice pink graphs to prove it! Excerpt:

'The same crusading feminist critics who objected to Mailer, Bellow, Roth and Updike might be tempted to take this new sensitivity or softness or indifference to sexual adventuring as a sign of progress (Mailer called these critics “the ladies with their fierce ideas.”) But the sexism in the work of the heirs apparent is simply wilier and shrewder and harder to smoke out. What comes to mind is Franzen’s description of one of his female characters in “The Corrections”: “Denise at 32 was still beautiful.” To the esteemed ladies of the movement I would suggest this is not how our great male novelists would write in the feminist utopia.

The younger writers are so self-conscious, so steeped in a certain kind of liberal education, that their characters can’t condone even their own sexual impulses; they are, in short, too cool for sex. Even the mildest display of male aggression is a sign of being overly hopeful, overly earnest or politically untoward. For a character to feel himself, even fleetingly, a conquering hero is somehow passé. More precisely, for a character to attach too much importance to sex, or aspiration to it, to believe that it might be a force that could change things, and possibly for the better, would be hopelessly retrograde. Passivity, a paralyzed sweetness, a deep ambivalence about sexual appetite, are somehow taken as signs of a complex and admirable inner life.'

F & F Supporter Triumphs in Vicious False DV Accusations/Family Law Case

Matt · 5 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gonzalez's lawyer, Denise Placencio, argued that West staged the entire incident because of a bitter child-custody dispute.

In an interview, Placencio said the recent December court decision that ordered West to pay Gonzalez should serve as a "cautionary tale" to anyone tempted to make false allegations.
...
She said her client faced the possibility of five life sentences in prison as a result of West's criminal complaint. Gonzalez couldn't see or speak to his son until October 2008 because of the criminal charges and West's filing of the request for a permanent restraining order against him.

> A Ventura County judge has ordered a woman to pay her former boyfriend more than $55,000 after she falsely accused him of raping and brutalizing her in Simi Valley in 2008 during a child-custody dispute.
>
> The money is for attorney's fees and travel expenses after Tracy West requested a permanent restraining order against Louis Gonzalez and then dismissed the allegations just before the matter was set for trial.
> ...

Radical feminist Mary Daly dead at 81

mens_issues · 5 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. What can I say? A radical man-hating feminist who was part of a movement that has wreaked so much havoc on Western civilization is dead. Excerpt:

'Fiercely and playfully -- often at the same time -- Mary Daly used words to challenge the basic precepts of the Catholic Church and Boston College, where she was on the faculty for more than 30 years.

Dr. Daly emerged as a major voice in the burgeoning women's movement with her first book, "The Church and the Second Sex," published in 1968, and "Beyond God the Father: Toward a Philosophy of Women's Liberation," which appeared five years later. That accomplishment was viewed, then and now, as all the more significant because she wrote and taught at a Jesuit college.

...

One of Dr. Daly's caregivers was reading to her from the "Wickedary" when she died Sunday.

"She basically fairly clearly defined the outer limits of radical feminist theology," said Robert Daly, who chaired the theology department during much of Dr. Daly's tenure and was not related to her. "People around the world are generally grateful for her having done that."'

Ed. note: Wikipedia entry on her is here.

Shouting at your wife may get you a criminal record in France

Mr VanHuizen · 6 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Married couples in France could end up with criminal records for insulting each other during arguments.

Under a new law, France is to become the first country in the world to ban 'psychological violence' within marriage.

The law would apply to cohabiting couples and to both men and women.

It would cover men who shout at their wives and women who hurl abuse at their husbands - although it was not clear last night if nagging would be viewed as breaking the law.

The law is expected to cover every kind of insult including repeated rude remarks about a partner's appearance, false allegations of infidelity and threats of physical violence.

Police are being urged to issue a caution in the first instance, but repeat offenders could face a fine, a restraining order or even jail.
...
Sociologist Pierre Bonnet said: 'The next step will be to make rudeness a criminal offence. The police and courts will be over-stretched trying to deal with numerous cases.'"

Update: Barbara Kay on this one, here.

"Abusegate": The Most Important Word in the English Language

Matt · 6 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed:

“Abusegate” refers to the systematic distortion of the truth about partner aggression by representatives of the domestic violence industry. These falsehoods form the basis of a well-financed but harmful effort to curb partner violence.

In January, we are mounting a high-profile campaign to inform the American public about the truth of domestic violence. At the national level, the campaign will be waged on three fronts:

1. A series of radio interviews featuring Dr. Donald Dutton of the University of British Columbia. Dutton is well-known for his willingness to challenge the prevailing domestic violence “paradigm,” as he likes to call it.
2. A series of op-ed columns by leading columnists.
3. A big lobbying effort on Capitol Hill highlighting how flawed information leads to flawed public policy.

Locally, we are inviting people to get the word out every way imaginable: via blogs, letters to the editor, radio talk shows, messages to email lists, meetings, etc. Here’s a flyer you can pass out: http://www.mediaradar.org/docs/RADARflyer-Time-to-Tell-the-Truth.pdf

And here's (.pdf file) a Special Report that details many of the falsehoods entitled "Fifty Domestic Violence Myths"

The fate of our families, our civil rights, indeed the fundamental values of our society hang in the balance. As VAWA comes up for reauthorization in 2010, we invite you to participate in this critical national effort to expose the lies of the DV industry.

Boycott Mary J. Blige

YinYang · 7 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Please boycott Mary J. Blige for her abuse to her husband just as Chris Brown is being boycotted for his abuse to Rihanna.

Abuse transcends genders. Demand the end of the defending, minimizing, encouraging and denying abuse from females.

My YouTube video on this topic is here.

Virginia mulls discrimination against divorced parents: child support college mandate

ItsDan · 7 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Married parents don't have any legal obligation to pay for their adult children's college education or living expenses. But a bill just introduced in Virginia's legislature would require divorced parents to pay for such expenses.

HB 146 would extend child support beyond age 18 to age 23 when the "child" is attending college. Right now, child support in Virginia usually ends soon after the child reaches the age of majority.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court struck down a similar provision providing for post-majority support as a violation of the Constitution's Equal Protection Clause. It reasoned that since married parents do not have to support their adult children, it was discriminatory to force divorced parents to do so. See Curtis v. Kline, 666 A.2d 265 (Pa. 1995). (Courts have apparently split over the constitutionality of such requirements).'

Carey Roberts: "Abuse shelters: havens for feminist thought reform"

Matt · 8 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists will argue until they're blue in the face that women are victims of the Great Satanic Patriarchy. That tenet is laughable when one considers women are leading men on almost every indicator of social welfare.

But give them credit, feminists are a determined bunch. So in their crusade to spread the gospel of female victimization, they have established a network of domestic violence shelters around the nation. These programs resemble socialist thought reform experiments more than anything that can be considered to be professional counseling or crisis intervention.

To gain admittance to such facilities one must of course be female — after all, male victims of domestic violence are unlikely to benefit from a regimen of patriarchal deprogramming.
...

Shelter residents enjoy no right to privacy. I have heard from women about confidences shared with shelter workers that were later passed on to Child Protective Services and other shelter residents. One woman revealed, "Nothing was confidential and what I discussed with staff was being discussed with clients."
...
Given these experiences, it's no surprise that women opt to return to their abuser rather than continue to subject themselves to this grandiose government-financed brainwashing experiment.'

Abusegate Cure: “YOU LIE!”

Matt · 8 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed:

To hear it from the Abusegaters, men are inherently abusive creatures, and women are utterly incapable of being physically aggressive with their partners.

That’s what the DV industry has been saying for years. No doubt about it, Abusegate represents one of the biggest scientific hoaxes of our time.

And how do the Abusegate propagandists get away with all the Ms.-Information? Simple... no one dares to challenge them, because they don’t want to be called “misogynist” or “anti-woman.”

But what if everyone decided at the same time to stand up and tell the truth? What if we all started saying “YOU LIE!”

It’s time to step up and speak out (and if you can say it with a smile, even better!): “Why are you telling only half the story?” “That’s not true!” “Stop stereotyping men as abusers!”

So what’s stopping us??

To learn more about the Abusegate myths, see: http://www.mediaradar.org/docs/RADARreport-50-DV-Myths.pdf

Ex-cop tells the Tiger Woods story

Matt · 8 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

The latest person to weigh in on what really happened at the Tiger Woods home on the night of Nov. 27 is former Toronto Maple Leafs and Montreal Canadiens head coach Pat Burns.

Burns, a one-time police officer who lives Florida and reportedly has many law-enforcement contacts there, related what he's heard to a Montreal radio station on Tuesday morning. His version is very similar to that which first emerged on the blog of retired sports columnist Furman Bisher shortly before the new year. Nobody has been able to prove or disprove this version of events, but Burns adds another voice in support of it.

According to the Toronto Sun, Burns told CKAC Sports that Tiger has remained out of public view since the incident because a nine-iron to his face — courtesy of wife Elin Nordegren — knocked out two of his teeth.

Burns said he got his information from a friend in the highway patrol who visited the Woods home on the night of the incident. His version includes the detail about Woods leaving his cell phone behind as he played poker at a friend's house, while alleged mistress Rachel Uchitel was still texting him.

Burns also gave credence to the story that Woods was flown to Phoenix for surgery on his teeth.

Canada: Woman who flew from US to meet teen arrested

Matt · 8 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Texas authorities have arrested a Houston woman for allegedly luring a 16-year-old Barrie, Ont., boy from his home, after meeting him through an online video game.

Investigators believe Lauri Ann Price, a 42-year-old mother of four, struck up a relationship with the Ontario teenager about two years ago while playing the popular computer game World of Warcraft.

Donna Hawkins, a spokesperson for the Harris County District Attorney's Office, told CTV.ca that the two allegedly "engaged in a cybersexual relationship" for more than a year.

It is alleged that Price flew to Toronto last month, rented a car and drove to Barrie to pick up the teenager. Police said the boy left a note for his mother saying he was running away with Price.

The teenager was later found in Orillia, Ont., and was returned to his parents.'

Antimisandry blog: Hypocrisy off to a good start in 2010

Matt · 8 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'A 42 year old married man from Texas meets a 16 year old Ontario girl in an online chat group. Over the course of many months he grooms his relationship with her through the online chat group. During this time he comes to Canada more than once and sits outside the girl's home watching her and her family through the window.

Then, over the Christmas holidays, he flies to Toronto in order to meet the girl and spirit her off on a romantic rendezvous. When he is finally found with the girl by police he says he thought the girl was 20. No big deal right? No crime committed? The man involved would never be charged nor would he ever be arrested, right? Just a nice normal teenage fantasy playing out in the real world right?
...
Now let's consider the exact same story but change the married man to a married woman and change the 16 year old girl to a 16 year old boy.

Is there any difference in the way this case should be handled?

Logically, no. But we know that logic plays no role whatsoever when it comes to the hypocrisy of the feminists and their political and judicial sycophants.'

"Committed": Why again is she doing this?

redwoodwriter · 8 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

In a new book called "Committed," Elizabeth Gilbert, best-selling author of "Eat, Pray, Love," reveals her attitude toward making even small sacrifices for the sake of a relationship with a man. A review appearing in The Wall Street Journal, written by Meghan Cox Gurdon, describes the experience of Gilbert:

'She interviews her mother and friends about married life and learns that both husbands and wives need to make small personal sacrifices if the union is to succeed. This insight would seem stunningly self-evident to anyone who has ever tried to get along with anyone else, but it frightens Ms. Gilbert.
...
The spectacle of a celebrity author publicly working herself around to a position that she has already taken may seem a trifle sophomoric and more than a little self-indulgent. But here Elizabeth Gilbert is, a re-married woman. It would be churlish not to wish her and "Felipe" every happiness.'

It is surprising that Gilbert, a woman who has previously been married, makes such a big deal about this matter. Or is her fussing about this instead a reflection of a message from radical feminists, who claim that "women can have it all?" Have modern American women, inspired by radical feminist doctrine, come to expect that they never need to compromise? Have we indulged, pampered, and coddled these women for so long, that they cannot stomach the notion of compromise? If so, what does this imply about the future divorce rate [assuming some men would want to marry such women]?

71-year-old murders grandson in Florida

Matt · 8 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 71-year-old German woman has been arrested in Florida for murdering her grandson to keep him from growing up with divorced parents in the United States.
...
The police said on Wednesday the grandmother decided to kill the five-year-old boy during her holiday on St. George Island while her husband had gone shopping. After drowning her grandson in the bathtub, the woman identified as Marianne Bordt from Nufringen near Stuttgart vainly attempted to commit suicide by throwing herself in the ocean.
...
She told police she killed the boy, who has US citizenship, because she couldn't bear to see him grow up in a broken home after his parents divorced in 2006. According to the authorities, the boy spent most of his time in Georgia with his mother, who is the murderer's daughter.

The grandmother now faces either the death penalty or life in prison should she be convicted of premeditated murder.'

Mrs. Robinson's affair with teen rocks N Ireland

Matt · 8 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BELFAST, Northern Ireland – A political scandal riveting Northern Ireland has a certain cinematic feel: an affair by 58-year-old woman named Mrs. Robinson with a 19-year-old male lover.
...
But there is a serious side to the story of Iris Robinson, who also happens to be a member of Parliament and the wife of Peter Robinson — Northern Ireland's government leader.

The BBC reported that Iris Robinson allegedly solicited 50,000 pounds ($80,000) from businessmen so her young lover could open a restaurant — without disclosing the fact to lawmakers.

Iris Robinson has said she would not seek re-election because she was suffering clinical depression that left her unable to function in public life and revealed that she attempted suicide. She also begged forgiveness from her husband, Peter, and the public.
...

On Wednesday, Peter Robinson invited four journalists to his home to give his own agonized account of his family's private turmoil — an unprecedented display from a man renowned for an icy demeanor.

The Robinsons neglected to mention the nub of the BBC report: That Iris Robinson's lover, 39 years her junior, had received third-party cash from her that should have been disclosed to Parliament.'

So much here I am not sure what to say about it except this: contrary to feminist assertions throughout the 60s and 70s, the fact that a politician is female has no bearing on her ability to make sound discretionary judgments, personally or otherwise. If nothing else the take-home lesson remains that people should be assessed as individuals, not based on their indelible characteristics, such as ethnicity, sex, etc. The myths however around female moral superiority promulgated by people such as the now-deceased Mary Daly persist nonetheless.

Arizona State U grant created to close "gender gap" in science and math

Broadsword · 9 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An ASU team of researchers recently received $1.9 million in grants to help close the gender gap between men and women in science fields, a disparity that some women in the field say is still prevalent today.

The rate that women are earning doctoral degrees in science, technology, engineering and mathematics is 7 to 10 percent lower than males, according to an ASU statement released Wednesday.
...
When Baker was younger, many family members and colleagues were put off by the fact that she wasn't planning on having children, she said.

"My mother would say, 'You poor woman, you have no children,' and no one ever said, 'Your poor sisters, they have no education,'" she said. "I caught a lot of flack from parents and relatives telling me I wasn't doing the right thing."

Engineering sophomore Emily Christman said she chose to go into engineering because she has always liked math and been good at it.

It's hard to be a woman in science and mathematics fields in college, but Christman said she sees it as an advantage after school.
...
"What you find is there's a large spot of society not being appropriately served," Middleton said. "I think the learning style of teaching math and science isn't where it needs to be. I think we're all not being served, but women are disproportionally not being served."'

Worldwide study finds few gender differences in math abilities

Broadsword · 9 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – Girls around the world are not worse at math than boys, even though boys are more confident in their math abilities, and girls from countries where gender equity is more prevalent are more likely to perform better on mathematics assessment tests, according to a new analysis of international research.

"Stereotypes about female inferiority in mathematics are a distinct contrast to the actual scientific data," said Nicole Else-Quest, PhD, a psychology professor at Villanova University, and lead author of the meta-analysis. "These results show that girls will perform at the same level as the boys when they are given the right educational tools and have visible female role models excelling in mathematics."

The results are reported in the latest issue of Psychological Bulletin, published by the American Psychological Association. The finding that girls around the world appear to have less confidence in their mathematical abilities could help explain why young girls are less likely than boys to pursue careers in science, technology, engineering and mathematics.

Else-Quest and her fellow researchers examined data from the Trends in International Mathematics and Science Study and the Programme for International Student Assessment, representing 493,495 students ages 14-16 from 69 countries. Both studies' results were released in 2003, and not all countries participated in both assessments. The TIMSS focuses on basic math knowledge, while the PISA test assesses students' ability to use their math skills in the real world. The researchers felt these two tests offered a good sampling of students' math abilities.'

Contact Dr. Nicole Else-Quest by e-mail at Nicole.Else.Quest-at-Villanova.edu

Is it Yahoo! or MSN? Can you tell the difference anymore?

Matt · 9 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

As of 11:45 PM EST, writing from upstate New York, the main page of Yahoo! looks like this.

I am not sure but I will guess that the Yahoo! main page is probably in the top 5 URLs people set as their web browser's start page. So one would think (hope) the people at Yahoo! (like MSN) would be willing to serve up a bit more substantive vittles for the hapless end user.

Instead, we get strange obsessions like Kate Gosselin's expensive new hair extensions and "Requests men shouldn't make" (note the red circle around the tab in my off-linked piece of ad-hoc art mentioned above).

I had no idea who Kate Gosselin was. I had to Google her name to find out and then I had to ask myself why anyone would care about the narcissistic carryings-on of her and her husband.

Anyway, I am sorry to say I must declare after multiple such examples that yet another large web portal has gone the way of MSN. Why these sources seem to think they need to feed some kind of ill-defined lowest-common-denominator dreck at us made of utterly useless information, with a healthy added dose of misandry at nearly every turn, is beyond me. But apparently, a certain class of person is pulling the content-management strings behind the scenes at these places. Not much new to report then, is there?

Abusegate Profiteers

Matt · 11 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed:

Every year around this time lobbyists for the domestic violence industry anoint themselves with sackcloth and ashes. They travel to the state legislature, hat in hand, pleading for more money to help all the abused women that shelters had to turn away the past year.

But these lobbyists conveniently leave out the fact that many shelter directors are making very good money. Here are 3 examples:

a. At Safe Horizon shelter in New York City, nine senior managers take in over $100,000 a year: http://mensnewsdaily.com/2009/10/23/well-heeled-abuse-shelter-implicated-in-nyc-housing-scam/
b. In Dallas, Family Place director Paige Flink rakes in $163,000 annually in salary and benefits.
c. In Florida, Another Way director Donna Fagan receives $95,000 – that's more than local bank presidents make

Want to find out the salary of shelter directors in your area? Go to www2.guidestar.org, enter the name of the shelter, and pull up their 990 forms. Interested in seeing the total revenues of the state domestic violence coalitions and the salaries of their executive directors? http://www.mediaradar.org/state_dv_coalition_info.php It's all in the public record.

The domestic violence industry is callous to victims' needs, harmful to families, and unaccountable to the public. People shouldn't be allowed to live on easy street while discriminating against male victims of domestic violence.

Let's get the word out about the abusegate profiteers.

China: "Women-only" parking lot unveiled

Matt · 11 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Indeed, it seems that women are such timid and easily-frightened creatures, with men being so foreboding, menacing, and indeed, unbelievably dangerous, that otherwise public services need to create women-only parking lots with pink parking space lines and wider-than-typical parking spaces in order for them to "feel safe".

Add China to the growing list of countries that is allowing women-only public spaces or services of this or that kind while gleefully ignoring the way they they are short-changing their male citizens. But I couldn't make this stuff up if you paid me. Excerpt:

'A shopping centre in China's Hebei province has built a car park with wider spaces that it says is designed especially to suit women drivers.

The women-only car park in Shijiazhuang city is also painted in pink and light purple to appeal to female tastes.

Official Wang Zheng told AFP news agency the car park was meant to cater to women's "strong sense of colour and different sense of distance".

The parking bays are one metre (3ft) wider than normal spaces, he said.

The Wanxiang-Tiancheng shopping centre had also "installed signs and security monitoring equipment that corresponded more to women's needs", he said.'

My dear old mother, who is past 70, lived all throughout the terrible, terrible years before feminism and never once, to the best of my knowledge, found mixed-sex parking lots absent pink parking space dividers to be the least bit threatening. But I guess she was also a lot tougher than the soft, frightened fawns of today. Hey, wasn't women's lib supposed to empower women to be less timid and fawn-like? I don't get it.

Canada: Why are our schools are failing boys badgerb · 11 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A well-informed article by Robert Smol posted on the Canadian Broadcast Company' website which is astonishing in itself due to its far left leanings. Excerpt:

'Looking at the demographics of university-bound students today, it is hard to believe that not so long ago we were developing programs to get more girls into university.

By all indications now, that same spirit of reform and innovation is needed to push more boys into higher education — for all that may be worth.

These days I need only peek into a class and I can tell by the gender makeup whether or not it is academic or applied.

Those classes where the majority are female students are invariably academic. Those where the majority is male are not.

No surprise then that the face of university education in this country is increasingly becoming female as women have been overtaking men in both the participation rate as well as in the percentage who graduate.

According to the federal department of human resources and skills development, 18 per cent of young men 18-24 were in university in 2005-06. The equivalent figure for young women was 28 per cent.

At the same time, the high school dropout rate for male students has remained consistently higher in recent decades than that for girls, another indicator that our education system is failing our boys.

There is clearly a problem here.
...
I am blaming "the system" for this because we shouldn't be blaming young male students for the difficulties they face in what is arguably an increasingly female-programmed educational culture.'

Check out the comments as well. Very telling especially when an obvious gender feminist named EmmyPankhurst gets taken to task.

Chinese concerned 24 million men have no one to wed in 2020

Matt · 11 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BEIJING (AFP) – More than 24 million Chinese men of marrying age could find themselves without spouses in 2020, state media reported on Monday, citing a study that blamed sex-specific abortions as a major factor.

The study, by the government-backed Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, named the gender imbalance among newborns as the most serious demographic problem for the country's population of 1.3 billion, the Global Times said.

"Sex-specific abortions remained extremely commonplace, especially in rural areas," where the cultural preference for boys over girls is strongest, the study said, while noting the reasons for the gender imbalance were "complex."
...
China first implemented its population control policy in 1979, generally limiting families to one child, with some exceptions for rural farmers, ethnic minorities and other groups.

It has said the policy has averted 400 million births.

Researchers said the gender imbalance problem cropped up in the late 1980s when the use of ultrasound technology became more prevalent.

This allowed women to easily determine the sex of their foetuses, leading to an increased number of sex-selective abortions.'

Abusegate: A Generation Deceived

Matt · 11 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Abusegate: a generation deceived
By Trudy W. Schuett

January 11, 2010

Science has come full-circle, taking a page from the medieval Church by using fear and persecution to silence skeptics. The oppressed have become the oppressors. Given that most professional scientific bodies and peer-reviewed journals have been active accomplices in this scandal, one wonders how many other so called scientific consensuses have been similarly engineered and waiting for their own ClimateGates before truth is known.
—Joanne Nova
...
Where Abusegate is concerned, however, there is one more element – the life or death of feminism, and its determination to liberate women from the so-called “oppression” of marriage and family. The story of Abusegate is as much about the attempt by feminists to obscure their real intentions as it is about feminist attempts to conceal the reality of partner abuse, in order to claim the issue as their own, and possibly the only issue available at the time to keep this essentially destructive philosophy alive.
...

While the feminists of the 20th Century are dying off or retiring, their ugly legacy of opportunism remains. Legions of divorce lawyers, shelter advocates, and organizations providing feminist education all benefit from the multi-billion dollar industry that now forms the basis of society’s approach to partner abuse.

The real tragedy of Abusegate is that victims of genuine partner abuse are still left without hope and support. They have been doubly victimized by a society that has been too willing to accept answers without first considering the problem.

Trudy W. Schuett

Introducing The DesertLight Facebook Group

TWSchuett · 12 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Are you divorced and separated from your kids? Are you a man being abused by his wife (or significant other)? Are you a man who feels like nobody cares? Or are you a man with a good life, a solid marriage and children, or grandchildren, who wonders about the institutions of marriage and family disappearing before your eyes?

The DesertLight Group on Facebook cares. Right now we are a small collection of people with no access to legal or medical/psychological help. All we want to do is give you the opportunity to tell your story and know that someone hears.

That's because we do care. Men still hold up half the sky, and fill the majority of the protective positions such as military and law enforcement. Men do the ditch digging, the crop harvesting, the building of wondrous structures.

Men are still our only fathers. Men are the people most women simply can't live without.

Please tell us your story. We can't offer solutions, but we can listen. Our hope is that if enough men tell their stories, we can make some changes in the way men are treated by our governments and major corporations.

Israeli women's organization is being taken to court by Israeli legislator

Anonymous · 12 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Israeli MK* Michael Ben Ari (link added) is taking "Shdulat Hanashim" ("Women's Lobby"), an Israeli women's organization, to court, the Israeli media has reported today. In the framework of a discussion in the Israeli Parliament about a law to extend women's maternity leave from 3 months to 6 months, MK Ben Ari has argued that Israeli employers might refrain from hiring women in the first place. "The proposed law might end up hurting women's status rather than helping them", MK Ben Ari said. MK Ben Ari has given an imaginary example of an accountant's office that would prefer hiring men rather than women as a result of the proposed law.'

Ed. note: "MK" is short for "Member of the Knesset", which you can read about here if you are unfamiliar with it. Also, I tried, but could not found a source article on this report. If anyone can post, please do so.

Israel: Anti-Feminist Speech by Dafna Netanyahu at a Likud Party conference

Anonymous · 12 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

[Submitter of this item: Please be sure to click "Read more" and read my "Ed. note" comments. Thank you. -- Matt]

Article here . Excerpt:

It is very uncommon to see a politician speaking in public against feminism, in the political correctness atmosphere that controls the Israeli politics and media. However, in a brave speech, Dr. Dafna Netanyahu is presenting Anti-Feminist views in open air, in a conference of the Israeli Likud Party. The Israeli Likud party is a moderate right-wing party. The Current Israeli Prime Minister, Binyamin Netanyahu, is from the Likud Party.

A translation of Danfa Netanyahu's speech:
...
The anthropologist has explained that when a society reaches such a level of lack of compassion, even between a mother and her child, the rehabilitation of such a society is no longer possible. Apparently the emotional relationship between family members is a glue that is necessary to the existence of a any group, as it functions as the basis for the emotional ability of humans to feel dedication to a group. First for his family, then close groups outside the family, and finally to other humans.
...

"All signs point to a new era of women in charge - socially, economically, politically" liberty · 12 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From the Boston Globe, article here. Excerpt:

'Women outnumber men here; you knew that. Women outnumber men in US colleges; you probably knew that, too. You might not have known that women receive almost 60 percent of university degrees in America and Europe combined. So who's going to be running the show? You tell me.

More women have jobs in the US than men. The Bureau of Labor Statistics identifies job categories most likely to grow in the next decade. In 10 of the top 15 categories, women constitute two thirds of the workforce.

Witness the battle of the apothegms: A while back, economist Paul Samuelson (who died last month at 94) acknowledged females' second-class socioeconomic status with the famous remark, "Women are men without money." More recently, conservative agitator Christina Hoff Sommers has reversed the terms of trade. Boys, she has observed, "are tomorrow's second sex."

Two of the three network anchors are women. Women watch more TV, read more books, and subscribe to newspapers more than men. Guess who elected our president, Mr. Sensitive, in 2008? Women, who voted in greater numbers than men. Guess who's going to elect the next senator from Massachusetts? Women, who vote here more than men. So former Jordache jeans model Scott Brown's strategy of posing in camo fatigues doesn't sound real promising, does it?"
...
"Girls," Barrett concludes, "are boys plus. They can play sports and have careers, and you can dress them in pink and take them to tea at the American Girl cafe. What’s not to like?"

As the father of three sons, I have my concerns. Have I been raising the underclass of tomorrow? Trina Leonard, who works for MicroSort, thinks I fail to see the silver lining in the new era of women on top. “You know, it may be a boon to men," she said. “They will probably have fewer heart attacks and generally less stressful roles. They can spend more time at home and have more of the pleasures and less of the pain of working life."

Hmmm. Live longer, see your children more, and offload the nasty business of earning a living to the ladies. Sounds good to me.'

Please post comments ASAP so MRA views can be part of the dialogue!

UK: "Sperm bank asks sports fans to lend a hand"

Broadsword · 12 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The government is starting a pilot scheme in Manchester this month for a national sperm bank — and will target sports fans as potential donors. Fertility experts at St Mary's hospital have been given funds to run the pilot scheme, which may lead to a national programme along the lines of the blood donation service.

Daniel Brison, professor of clinical embryology at the hospital's department of reproductive medicine, said sporting events were a good place to find men who might be inclined to donate sperm.

"Approaching sports fans at football and cricket matches in Manchester is a way of accessing large numbers of men," he said. "We might also get support from the sports clubs themselves. The idea is to make it easier to donate."

...

The government has been keen to reverse a drop in sperm donations that has led fertility clinics to buy supplies from countries such as Denmark, prompting suggestions that a generation of blonde, blue-eyed British Vikings could be the result.

...

The move follows a recommendation from the British Fertility Society that a national programme should be funded by the Department of Health. A spokeswoman for the department said:

"The number of donors is improving in the UK, but there is still a shortage of sperm. We are funding a project which will pilot a model for managing sperm donation, to illustrate ways in which more effective and efficient use of available resources can be made."'

F&F: Victory for Military Father Deployed to Afghanistan

Matt · 12 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Fathers & Families' latest newsletter:

'Because of problems in the family court system, when a divorced or never-married military parent deploys overseas, they often face the possibility of losing their custodial arrangement and their relationship with their children. Fathers & Families and its legislative representative Michael Robinson have been at the forefront of this issue, successfully working to pass military parent legislation in dozens of states. The first success on this issue occurred in 2005 in California with the passage of SB 1082.

SB 1082 addressed the way parents who serve are often taken advantage of in custody and family law matters while they are deployed, and helped resolve the child support nightmare many mobilized reservists face. Fathers & Families organized a campaign in support of the bill, and the Senate Judiciary Committee Analysis of SB 1082 made specific note of your calls and letters. We've also had some success with federal legislation on this issue–to learn more, click here.

Recently we reported that military mom Lt. Col. Vanessa Benson, who is a part of these efforts, won her case in part because of a Florida law Fathers & Families helped create. To learn more about the case, which was covered by CBS News, click here.'

London, England: Creation Of A Men-Only Antifeminist Meet-Up Group In London

Matt · 13 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Rod in the UK:

MANN Readers,

I am interested in forming a men-only anti-feminist group in the London area. Hopefully we could start with forming a discussion group, and then (more importantly) form a workable think tank.

I want to form this group this with other men, with the idea for those interested to move onto future activism and further educating more men. All men are welcome irrespective of irrespective of race, sexuality, or faith.

The activism I am interested in includes having leaflets and packs of information to hand out at places like Speakers' Corner on Sundays. My objective is to advertise publicly the relevant mens-rights, anti-feminist activism sites, eg: Angry Harry, Mensactivism, Men's News Daily, The Spearhead, A Voice For Men, etc. I want more men to be aware of the truth about feminists, and to have the access to it. The best information available is all out there on the many men's rights web-sites. The important thing to remember is that the web connects men with other men, and is the backbone of men's rights antifeminist movement. I think we could help support it with some real on-the-ground grass-roots support. We have our great men on the web, lets support them, in our fight against feminism.

With respectful permission (from the sites or the authors) we can photocopy articles from the web sites and creates informational packets that the think-tank agrees on using. It is then simply a matter of distributing this information to men on the street.

The meet-up group is not meant to be a "social group". It's will be a place where men can discuss feminism and how it has affected our lives. It will be a place where we can challenge the disinformation and shaming attacks we are fed and discuss these things openly without fear of abuse or threat. This includes de-programming ourselves of adherence to automatic obligations, such as those tapped via emotional blackmail, etc.

Why MEN ONLY? Personally, I think it's as it should be. And in fact I think it would be easier for us if women were in the group, but such would defeat the purpose. I think men don't know how to connect heathfully with other men. We have been prevented from doing so by feminist programming/internalized anti-male attitudes. This is something we need to work to overcome and the Meet-up group could help with that, but it needs to be men-only for it to work.

I also think a lot of modern men tend to connect to men via women. I think we even see ourselves from a feminine perspective. And to make things worse, this feminine perspective sees men and boys from a feminist point-of-view.

I feel suppressed by a lifetime's accumulation of negative female opinions, squashing any honest, self-affirming thoughts or feelings that I might have had. And personally, as a boy and man, I have been so used and abused by some women that my anger about it overwhelms me and inhibits my subjective sense of my living a fulfilling life. So eventually, I hope women who care about and support men will come to understand that feminism has damaged so much between us with lies and ugly stereotypes (as was its intention), that they will willingly become part of changing this state of affairs. But in the mean time, sadly, a lot of us will protect ourselves by throwing the baby out with the bath water.

If you are interested in contacting or working with me in London please send an email at: antifemnasty-at-googlemail.com

Thank you,

Rod

Mayor proposes firing city workers found guilty of DV and suspending those accused

anthony · 13 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'City workers arrested for domestic violence would face discipline, and those convicted would be fired, under rules proposed yesterday by Pittsburgh Mayor Luke Ravenstahl.
...
Rules have been in place for police accused of domestic violence for two years. The new, tweaked policy would apply to firefighters, public works employees, paramedics and the rest of the city's 3,300 workers.

Some of the unions representing those workers said they were waiting for the mayor to invite them to discuss the policy.

"Nobody wants to see domestic violence occur at all," said Josh Bloom, a lawyer representing the firefighters union. He welcomed proposed domestic violence awareness training. "However, that doesn't mean that every type of domestic altercation that ever happened in history warrants an employee losing their jobs."
...

An employee who knew that another was involved with "abuse or violence" would have to report it. A supervisor who noted aggressiveness or other signs of domestic trouble in an employee would be required to meet with the employee, report the situation to the bureau or department chief, and a psychological exam and possibly enrollment in a program for abusers would ensue.

An accusation of domestic violence would trigger a city Office of Municipal Investigations probe, while an arrest would compel a Disciplinary Action Report that usually leads to punishment.

"Guilty until proven innocent is not the standard in general society and certainly not the standard in union-management relations," said Mr. Bloom. "Not only is it completely unfair to the employees, but it's unfair to the taxpayers, because a policy like that may create a tremendous amount of back pay and legal fees" when employees are exonerated and brought back to work.

Any "domestic violence incidents" would be reviewed by a board including the directors of public safety and operations, the solicitor, bureau and department chiefs, a psychologist and an adviser from the Women's Center and Shelter. Incidents in which police are accused are heard by a similar, but separate, board.
...
Mr. Ravenstahl's proposal came a day after he fired Eugene Hlavac, until then a police sergeant and one of those promoted in 2007. His ex-girlfriend accused him last month of dislocating her jaw in a dispute, and he has denied wrongdoing. He faces simple assault charges, and if convicted would be barred from policing in Pennsylvania.'

Woman arrested in 'broom bashing'

anthony · 13 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NASHUA – A local woman is being held on $10,000 cash bail, charged with beating her former boyfriend with a broom.

Anne M. Hughes, 40, of 39 Crown St., Apt. 6, was arrested yesterday afternoon and charged with second degree assault...

Lt. George McCarthy said Hughes had bail conditions barring her from going near her boyfriend... On Saturday, however, she went to his apartment, according to McCarthy.

McCarthy said the two got into an argument and Hughes grabbed a broom with a metal handle and beat her boyfriend in the head with it. He was taken by ambulance to Southern New Hampshire Medical Center where he needed staples to close wounds to his head, McCarthy said.'

"Wife Allegedly Changes Wires on Saw to Shock Hubby"

anthony · 13 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) -- Court papers allege that an Olympia woman, angry that her husband left her, tampered with his power tools so that he received a powerful electric shock. Carolyn Paulsen-Riat was booked Friday into the Thurston County Jail for investigation of third-degree assault, domestic violence, and second-degree malicious mischief. A judge released the 33-year-old woman on her own recognizance.

The Olympian newspaper reported that court documents said that on Jan. 1, the man was using a 220-volt table saw when he received the shock, knocking him to the ground. Thurston County sheriff's deputies said the man did not need to go to a hospital.

In the documents, deputies said the woman told them she had reversed the wires on his power tools because she was angry he was leaving.'

Day care provider accused of burning baby

Matt · 13 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here Excerpt:

'A Gates day care provider accused of burning an 8-month-old baby has been charged with second-degree assault and reckless assault of a child by a day care provider, according to Gates police.

Kelly Hernandez, 44, 165 Kencrest Drive, who is licensed to operate a day care facility from her home, is accused of changing the baby's diaper on an electric stovetop that she believed was turned off, police said.

The baby suffered first-, second- and third-degree burns and is being treated at Strong Memorial Hospital, police said.'

Very brief report (as they are in these cases - i.e., there is a female suspect), and submitted by someone oddly-named "Staff Report".

I am fine with the matter of the charge. It is possible to be careless and/or stupid and accidentally sit an infant on a hot stove. I can imagine one can do this without hostile intent. However the criminal state of mind is recklessness and that is a valid place from which to pursue charges. And if an infant is so badly injured in this fashion then yes, charges better be pursued.

I think what gets me here is that I doubt very much "Staff Report" would have reported this and I also doubt it would be on Page ?? as a report if the suspect were male. Without doing the whole screen-cap routine, I can tell you that at this moment, the home page of the reporting paper does not have this story off-linked anywhere on it.

The "Men Tax" in Israel: A gender-based flat rate 300$ annual men tax

Anonymous · 14 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Making men special special gender-based income tax has been part of the feminist agenda for a long time now. However, in Israel a gender-based men tax is already a reality that is well integrated within the income tax system.
...
...if you are a woman, you will get an additional 0.5 credit points just because you are a woman. It doesn't matter if you have children or not. You just have to be a woman. This additional 0.5 credit point worth about 300$* every year.
...
The worst thing about it is that the Israeli government doesn't even try to hide it or excuse it in some way. The Men Tax is proudly mentioned in the official website of the finance ministry. Search for "Tax Credits" and you will see it there. An Official Men Tax!'

1/15/10: UPDATE: What I wrote here originally was wrong:

"Ed. note: A trailing $ indicates the denomination for shekel, or more precisely, the Israeli New Shekel."

I got a note from the O.P. as follows:

"Regarding the article about the men tax in Israel, you have added an editor note that $ means Israeli shekels. But, your ED note is incorrect at this time - I have already converted the amounts to USD, so 300$ in the article means 300 USD."

Human Y Chromosome Evolving Faster Than Expected

Broadsword · 14 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The Y chromosome is often seen as the rotten corner of the human genome — a place of evolutionary decline that is slowly decaying and threatening the end of man. Reports of its imminent demise, however, have been exaggerated.

Research has indicated that, far from stagnating, the male chromosome is a hotspot of evolution that is changing more quickly than any other part of humanity's genetic code.
...
But the first comparison of the human Y chromosome with its counterpart in chimpanzees has revealed that they differ radically. The findings suggest that the Y chromosomes of both are evolving rapidly and dynamically — probably because of their critical roles in reproduction — and have a vibrant future.

In the new research, which is published in the journal Nature, Dr David Page, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology — who first sequenced the Y chromosome in 2003 — has now sequenced the Y chromosome of the chimp, humanity's closest relative, and compared this with the human version.

The scientists expected the two sequences to look very similar. However, while human and chimp DNA generally differ by less than 2 per cent, more than 30 per cent of the Y chromosome differed between the two species.
...
"This research shows that the Y chromosome isn't necessarily degrading, but is evolving very fast," said Professor Robin Lovell-Badge, of the National Institute for Medical Research in London, an expert on the Y chromosome. who was not involved in the study."'

Also covered on FOX News here and on the NY Times (surprisingly) here.

Submitted by user lance:

'Offensive title aside ("Y chromosome not stagnating, men not idiots"), the take home is pretty important: while for the past few decades biology teachers and popular culture have derived great pleasure in painting men as genetically inferior. In fact, this attitude is one of the reasons why I took up a vocation with a strong biological component. In my early days, I figured I could "right the wrongs" I perceived or I was taught existed in our genome. Well it turns out the wrongs are not quite so wrong. Similar reporting in "Nature" here.

As commented here (Nature article) and here (TG Daily article), it seems our little Y chromosome is not the unadulterated failure it once was thought to be.'

Russia plans to cut alcohol consumption in half by 2020

Matt · 14 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Prime Minister Vladimir Putin has approved a national concept to fight pervasive alcohol abuse in Russia with the target to cut alcohol consumption in half by 2020 and uproot the illegal market.

Measures to achieve the goals include the introduction of criminal punishment for alcohol production and sales violations, advertising restrictions, a pricing policy dependent on quality, and efforts to promote a healthy lifestyle, the Russian government said on its website on Wednesday.

"The first phase (2010-2012) will include measures to cut alcohol consumption by 15% per capita... The second phase (2012-2020) will see the elimination of the illegal alcohol market and a reduction in consumption levels by 55%," the government said.

The concept is designed to reduce the high mortality caused by alcohol abuse especially among men. More than 23,000 people die of alcohol poisoning annually, while another 75,000 die of alcohol-related diseases, according to official statistics.'

Abusegate: Most Americans Aware of Male DV Victims

Matt · 14 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed:

The great majority of Americans are aware of the problem of male victims of domestic violence. According to a 2006 Harris poll*:

88% of Americans have seen or heard of a male domestic violence victim in the past year 76% of Americans believe domestic violence against men is a “serious” problem.

But representatives of the domestic violence industry work night and day to deny the very existence of male victims. One almost comes to admire the intellectual gymnastics of the VAWA Mafia.

*See Tables 1 and 3.

Israel: Serial False Rape Allegations Maker Arrested

Anonymous · 15 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Israeli local court in Kefar Saba, has extended arrest order of Malka (Mali) Zarihan in 5 days, YNET NEWS has reported today. (Original YNET Article in hebrew here).

Malka (Mali) Zarhian, a 25 year-old woman from Raanana, Israel, is suspected of comitting a series of blackmail and false rape accusation crimes. According to YNET report, Mali Zarihan used to hitch-hike on the roads, and then blackmail the drivers. She would say that unless the drivers give her money she would complain in the Israeli police that they raped her. According to YNET report, several dozens of Israeli drivers fell victim to Mali Zarihan's crime over the last year...

...

Jail time for French women who berate husbands

Matt · 15 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Column here Excerpt:

'Record cold temperatures are beginning to take their toll on average citizens around the world. In bone-chilled France, frustrated housewives have taken to venting their spleens at their husbands — and for good reason.

For decades, effete French men have indulged themselves with aerosol hair spray for their over-groomed hairpieces, contributing, as we all know, to the thinning of the ozone layer and melting of the polar ice caps.
...
Thankfully, the epidemic of shrieking wives has not escaped the attention of the ever-vigilant French Parliament, which is now considering a ban on the practice. The law would apply to both married and cohabiting couples.

Support reaches to the highest political levels. Announcing the proposed law last week, French premier Francois Fillon explained, "The creation of this offence will allow us to deal with the most insidious situations — situations that leave no visible scars, but which leave victims torn up inside."
...
And some recall when actress Brigitte Bardot was fined $6,000 for violating the French hate-crimes law when she made impolitic statements about the looming influence of radical Islam.

Thanks to the new law, millions of French women will end up spending time behind bars. But it will be for their own good. And once we put an end to the spate of psychological violence, we can move on to other pressing problems like raised eyebrows, annoying grimaces, and unsympathetic stares.'

Amidst Haiti Disaster, Women's Groups Seek to Deny Relief to Men

Broadsword · 15 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog post here. Excerpt:

'This week's devastating earthquake in Haiti, which struck near Port au Prince, has led to countless tragedies on the impoverished island, and is a disaster that may rival the recent Sichuan quake in China. The damage struck indiscriminately, killing young and old, rich and poor, and man and woman alike.

However, some relief groups have decided that women deserve more aid, and have come up with a number of reasons why men should be left to die from injuries and disease while women get preferential treatment.

Quoted in Salon.com in an article titled Why "women and children first" persists, Elaine Enarson (probably a Swedish woman*), cofounder of the Gender and Disaster Network ("Calling for a gendered approach in disaster risk reduction"), explains why men are to be excluded:

Creating a Men's Anti Feminist Group In London - update

Roderick1268 · 16 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Hi all, Rod here.

My London friend Tom is an MRA who believes in "equality feminism". In a number of words he explained to me I need to make it clear to men that I am not anti-equality or a misogynist.

I have-long standing female friends as well as male friends. Like many men growing up around the 1970s I thought if I was nice, helpful and respectful to women, if I worked hard and had talent, that I would in kind be liked, and respected by people of both sexes... by most people anyway - and I would have a place in this world.

It is strange that I would think that, considering the background I came from. But I did because I was young and had hope. I had faith and a sense of responsibility and a desire to achieve, like a lot of men who I would now see as being naive.

I am very fond of my female friends, as I am my male friends. I am much less challenging or opinionated with women who I am close to personally vs. men simply because I know it would affect our relationship adversely. Like a lot of men, I find helping women gives me a buzz. I feel good about myself when in warm female company. Giving to a woman is weirdly empowering and warm and makes me feel good about myself. A male trait. And this is something I have really learned to hate about myself.

Now, directly due to how I have been treated, I am extremely cautious and have limited my exposure to the company of women considerably. The sophisticated lying, manipulation, narcissism and ruthless greed I have experienced in modern women seems rampant and largely unavoidable.

Many women empower themselves with criminally devious cruelty. Sometimes for the buzz of control, other times as an instinctual but sophisticated malignant plan against other people.

The outcome is ruthlessly successful financial gain and a position of influence and power over other people, in which they seem endlessly intoxicated on.

Who are their role models?
What are men missing in their young development?
Why are over-empowered women seemingly omnipresent?

Do men have their own morality issues? Of course we do.

But the men that dive to the depths of depravity that seem common to many women are either incarcerated, live in squalor, or in a position of great power and wealth, all while female sociopaths walk freely among us.

I believe feminism has never had anything to do with gender-equality whatsoever. I believe the misguided intellectuals are outnumbered a thousand to one. Their education and class leads them to talk conceptually - out of their boxes.

I believe it is a misuse of the meaning 'rights' to speak of "women's rights" today. I think feminists have abused the meaning of "women's rights" to abolish the human rights of men. To me, feminists are aptly called "female supremacists".

I believe the appallingly-wealthy women who called themselves the Suffragettes were some of the most selfish, ignorant and grotesquely privileged citizens in the world at the time. Their rioting, vandalism, violence and assaults on police went unpunished, a privilege enjoyed by many women worldwide today.

It is interesting to compare such leniency to the men of that time, who in protest or on strike over the most desperate issues, were subjected to the most unrestrained violence by government order, with army and police on horseback using batons and guns.

If you see past the glamor in places, you will see that our society is unsustainable. Naturally, women will not be held responsible or accountable. The women who have caused this are ever more powerful, and continue to point the finger of blame to their primary victims. This blame will land squarely where it always has, on men's our heads, with government cooperation.

There has been a long war against us. Good men have told us so. Our allies, some reasonable and fair-minded women, have looked the other way; most seem only willing to help if the outcome affects them.

A least, let's meet up,

Rod
Creating A Men's Antifeminist group In London

Businessman sues BA 'for treating men like perverts'

Proud_to_be_a_man · 16 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A businessman is suing British Airways over a policy that bans male passengers from sitting next to children they don't know - even if the child's parents are on the same flight.

Mirko Fischer has accused the airline of branding all men as potential sex offenders and says innocent travellers are being publicly humiliated.

In line with the policy, BA cabin crew patrol the aisles before take-off checking that youngsters travelling on their own or in a different row from their parents are not next to a male stranger.

If they find a man next to a child or teenager they will ask him to move to a different seat. The aircraft will not take off unless the passenger obeys.'

Unbelievable discrimination!

MSN: "10 Things You Should Never Say to Your Boyfriend"

Matt · 17 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Credit where do, read it here. Suppose they read MANN? :) I want to see a day where gender-baiting stuff like this unabashedly splashed all over the MSM is as unacceptable as are articles today that appeal to ethnic stereotyping. Excerpt:

'You pride yourself on your open, honest relationship. But that doesn't mean you should blurt out any thought that comes to mind.

Sometimes, a comment that seems perfectly harmless to you might be hurtful, awkward or just plain irritating to your boyfriend.

Excelle has identified 10 such comments. Ignore us at your own risk!'

US study: More than 12% of "youths" in juvenile prisons are sexually abused; most cases are female staff vs. boys

Matt · 17 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Notice the use of the word "youths" when referring to a class of victims who are mostly boys. If so many were female, the word "girls" would most certainly have been used. Excerpt:

'More than 12% of youths in juvenile prisons are sexually abused while in custody there, according to a Justice Department study out Thursday, and the vast majority of cases involve female staff and boys under their supervision. [Ed.: emphasis added]

In the worst facilities surveyed — in Indiana, Maryland, North Carolina and Texas — more than 30% of youths reported they had been sexually victimized. The study, the first of its kind, shows a rate of sexual assault more than seven times higher than that indicated by a 2008 Justice Department report that collected sexual abuse claims to juvenile facility administrators. It is also higher than a similar study of adult prisons because of the "very high rate of staff sexual misconduct," said Allen Beck, who directed the survey for the Bureau of Justice Statistics.

The survey of 9,198 youths ages 13 to 21 — all in custody by order of a juvenile court — included methods to eliminate interviews considered unreliable. The survey covered 195 facilities, at least one in each state. Approximately 26,550 juveniles — 91% of them boys — are held in more than 500 such facilities around the country.'

Israel: False allegations-maker to pay US $25,000 in compensation

davidcohen188 · 17 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Lilach Irmiyahu, an Israeli female student, will pay 25000 USD plus 4000 USD for legal costs to compensate a man whom she accused of sexually abusing her. A pioneer court ruling by female Judge Oshri Frost-Frenkel from the local court in Tel-Aviv has recognized the false allegations victim's right for compensation...
...
The Israeli national media has published the man's name as a sex offender, and now he cannot get rid of the stigma. This is a problem common among many of the victims of false accusations. The Israeli media is dominated by feminists, and as soon as they hear anything that sounds like an opportunity to have a go at men, they never miss a shot...
...
Later on, the police has noticed that the accuser is telling inconsistent versions of what happened. She eventually admitted that her accusations about sexual abuse were completely false. In 2004, criminal charges were filed against Lilach Irmiyahu for making the false accusations. In the framework of a deal with the state attorney, the accuser has admitted the facts but has not been convicted. As a result, the false accuser is now free to make false accusations against other men as well, and will not spend even a single day in jail.'

California Teen Made Up Rape, Kidnapping Story

anthony · 18 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'RICHMOND, Calif. — A 15-year-old California girl who told police she had been kidnapped off the street and raped now says she made up the story.

The Richmond teenager had claimed she was forced into a car with four males at gunpoint Friday night and driven around for several hours before two of them raped her.

Lt. Mark Gagan says the girl called Richmond police around 1 p.m. Sunday and told them the story was not true.

The girl says she had had consensual sex with someone, but needed an explanation for why she had not returned home Friday night.

Gagan says dozens of patrol officers, detectives, forensic technicians and nurses had been working on the investigation. Police found physical evidence Sunday that confirmed the girl had made up her initial story.

In October, Richmond police say a 16-year-old girl was the victim of a gang rape outside a homecoming dance at a local high school.'

Woman who murders three young men receives lower sentence than man who steals a scarf jayhammers · 18 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Jeanette Sliwinski, a former trade show model, killed three men when she collided into the back of their vehicle at over 90 miles per hour when they were stopped at an intersection. She did it intentionally, trying to commit suicide. She initially said she purposely drove her car into the parked vehicle, then changed her story. She served less than 4 years for her crime. Oh, and a broken ankle.

See the article here. A few quotations:

> "Cook County Circuit Judge Garritt Howard, who presided over the bench trial, sentenced Sliwinski. She could have received up to 10 years for the reckless homicide conviction, but the judge said he factored in her lack of violent history and what he found to be her diminished mental state."'

Male Studies Program at Wagner College

anthony · 18 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

'A gathering of academicians drawn from a range of disciplines will meet on April 7, 2010, at Wagner College, Staten Island, New York, to examine the declining state of the male, stemming from cataclysmic changes in today's culture, environment and global economy. The live teleconferenced colloquium will be co-chaired by Judith Kleinfeld, PhD, Professor of Psychology and Director of the Boys Project at the University of Alaska, and Lionel Tiger, PhD, Rutgers University Charles Darwin Professor of Anthropology. It will encompass a broad range of topics relevant to the study of boys and men in contemporary society ranging from their roles in the family and workforce, as well as their physical and emotional health, to the growing problem of misandry—the hatred of males, an unacknowledged but underlying socio-cultural, economic, political and legal phenomenon endangering the well-being of both genders.'

Also from anthony: Feministing's take on this news:

'Anyway, just wanted to share this in case people may not have heard about it. It reminds me of those university programs funded by Christian fundamentalists to nurture the free market & conservative intellectuals of the future. In this case, we simply must protect male privilege and enshrine invented fears of misandry in the academic landscape. Ugh.'

New Zealand: Airline’s ‘cougar’ ad blasted by rape victims

Matt · 18 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'AUCKLAND, New Zealand - An advert for an airline competition that portrays older, single women as "cougars" who prey on young men at night is to close on Monday after incurring the wrath of both male and female rape victims in New Zealand.

"Cougar" has become a popular term for sexually aggressive older women on the hunt for younger men, with actress Courteney Cox recently starring in TV comedy "Cougar Town." But the term can be viewed either as misogynistic or a word of empowerment.

An online spoof documentary by Air New Zealand, promoting a competition for free tickets to a rugby tournament, tells of a so-called cougar starving herself during the day then "hunting large slabs of meat at night" by stalking young men at a bar.
...

New Zealand's Rape Prevention Education has labeled the ad appalling, disgusting and degrading to women, adding that some Air New Zealand staff were also concerned about the promotion.

"They find it degrading and that it is encouraging potentially harmful behavior, so my question is why is our national carrier promoting sexually predatory behavior?" director Kim McGregor told the NZ Herald newspaper.

"We have also had complaints from male survivors who have been raped by women and they are very distressed that their situation is being laughed at and made out to be humorous."'

"Slabs of meat" and it's "degrading to women". Huh??

That' s right up there with "The Ministry of Love" - you know, that big windowless building where they tie you up for days until you confess to anything they want you to. Feel the love, baby! But at least they mention male rape survivors... in the closing paragraph, of course...

UK: A couple of lovely English roses

Proud_to_be_a_man · 19 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

First we have a rapist who rapes her victim 200 times:

'A single mother had sex with a 12-year-old boy almost 200 times - marking each encounter with a star in a sordid diary.

"Angela Sullivan, 36, could face an indefinite jail sentence after admitting ten child sex charges.

"Sullivan even bought the youngster a pair of trainers as a reward when the pair slept together for the 100th time, Teeside Crown Court heard.'

***

Then we have a brain-dead example of Britain's world-class (HAHHAHHAHHAAAA!!!!) education system:

"A teenage mother was investigated by police after photographs of her six-month-old son with a cigarette in his mouth were posted on Facebook.
...
"Rebecca then declared her love for her son, writing: 'Why Would SomeOne Do That To Me U Ollie No was taking U Yur Mine for lyfee Darlinggg Mummy Loves You :)'"

Social services are more interested in taking away babies from hard-working middle-class families. Picking on 'single mums' is something they tend to avoid.

Dear God... WTF has happened to this so-called country?!

Title IX: Lawsuit Thrown Out

anthony · 19 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HARRISONBURG, Va. — A group fighting against JMU's Title IX cuts to varsity teams announced plans to appeal a court's Dec. 30 decision to throw out their case against James Madison University.

A federal court struck down a lawsuit brought by Equity in Athletics, a non-profit and tax exempt status, for JMU's relegating 10 varsity athletic teams to club status in July 2007 to comply with Title IX's requirements for gender equality in federally funded education programs.

Larry Joseph, an attorney for EIA based in Washington, D.C., said he was not surprised by Judge Glen Conrad's decision to throw out the case.

"He basically showed his hand at the beginning of the trial," Joseph said.

The Equal Opportunity in Education Act, better known as Title IX, was made a federal law in 1972. It stated no person may be discriminated against for his or her gender in a federally funded school activity. Although this certainly applies to academics, most of Title IX's publicity has come from the world of athletics.'

UK: Boys failed by education system says Eton headmaster

anthony · 19 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tony Little said that the different sexes required different teaching methods to bring out students' potential and that GCSEs favour girls more than boys.

He also blamed teachers for failing to realise that boys are "more emotional" than girls, despite the fact that girls "turn on the waterworks".

Mr Little, who co-hosted the International Boys' Schools Coalition Conference at the Guildhall with David Levin, headmaster of City of London School, said: “As a nation, we do not support and nurture boys, especially teenage boys, at all well.

“It is foolish to assume that boys can always be helped in the same way as girls. We feel our education system needs to face up to that fact.”

Boys, he believes, require a more physical and active style of learning. He said that an increased verbal element of GCSEs favoured girls over boys and that educational techniques had become skewed because of the male-dominated society of the past.

“It's assumed that opening up opportunity means giving a better deal to girls and women. I don't decry that in the slightest — we have moved hugely forward,” he said.'

Ed. note: For those who may not know, Eton College, or Eton Boys' College, is a very prominent school in the UK. A lot of very well-known names have passed through it. That the headmaster of this school would speak out on this topic so publicly is quite significant.

Contender for Massachusetts Senate seat co-sponsored Shared Parenting Bill

Matt · 19 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

F&F article here. Well, I really do not care if he is a Republican or Democrat. Any politician who supports a shared parenting bill is worthy of consideration, in my opinion, what with the shared parenting struggle being as uphill as it is. IMJ, no person you may otherwise prefer or not prefer as a candidate or office-holder can be ignored out of hand if he or she supports shared parenting. Excerpt:

'The race to fill the late Ted Kennedy's Senate seat has become a national media story, as polls show that upstart Massachusetts Republican State Senator Scott Brown (pictured) has pulled even with favored Democratic Party candidate Martha Coakley, Massachusetts' Attorney General. President Obama has come to Massachusetts to try to save the race for Coakley–this in a state where Democrats outnumber Republicans 3-1.

Senator Brown has been a co-sponsor of Fathers & Families' Shared Parenting Bill, has met with F & F Board Chairman Ned Holstein, MD, and has spoken at a F & F meeting. Dr. Holstein explains:

> Our Shared Parenting Bill, which Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick has publicly pledged to sign, would end the barbaric practice of judges stripping fathers (or sometimes mothers) of custody of their children without a sound, stated basis. Family courts must protect the relationship between children and both parents after a divorce, instead of allowing an angry mother (or father) to push the other parent out.

Fathers & Families recently circulated the message below to its Massachusetts members concerning some of Brown and Coakley's positions, and we urge our members to vote on Tuesday, January 19.'

Canada: Another "Teacher Accused of Having Sex with Teen" Story

Anonymous · 20 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. At least once, in the second paragraph, they mention that she was charged with sexual assault. B ut notice how the whole tone of the story is defensive towards the teacher, not a shred of sympathy for the assault victim. Excerpt:

'An elementary school French teacher accused of having a sexual relationship with one of her former students has been arrested and suspended from the Toronto District School Board.

Mary Gowans, a popular teacher at Joseph Howe Senior Public School in Scarborough, has been charged with sexual assault and sexual exploitation.

Police allege the 40-year-old Gowans and young teenage student had been "engaged in an inappropriate relationship" since June 2009.

In an effort to protect the identity of the student, investigators said they are not releasing the victim's gender, although numerous police officials with knowledge of the case referred to the student as a "he."'

Hey Feminists, Leave The Kids Alone!

davidcohen188 · 20 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

A crucial part of the feminist movement strategy is to take control over the minds of young children. This becomes possible in a variety of ways. The takeover of the education system and the teaching profession by feminist women leaves our young boys vulnerable to their feminist brainwash before they are old enough to develop their own judgment.
.....
Women's organizations claim that Superman might "Encourage young children to try to fly". Yes, you are not mistaken. This is actually what they have claimed. It is clear that the real motive behind it was an attempt to censor a healthy male role model for boys. This is how crazy feminist brainwashing in Israel has become.'

Abusegate: Mother of All Scandals?

Matt · 20 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed: Article here. Excerpt:

'Mirror, mirror, on the wall, what's the most colossal scandal of them all? Watergate? Climategate? Tigergate? If you said 'yes' to any of these, you're not even close!

Folks, we're not talking about a media-adled tempest in a teapot. No, this is an old-fashioned head-banging, sit-down-and-cry-your-eyes-out affair.

Abusegate refers to our nation's flawed crusade to curb domestic violence (DV). Originally a high-minded and well-intentioned effort, the end-abuse campaign has now fallen prey to an invidious anti-family agenda. In the name of making homes safe, the domestic violence industry curtails fundamental civil rights and often betrays those in greatest need.'

Side-by-side cases show double standard for murder/attempted murder charges

Matt · 20 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S. Read the first case:

Bangor man, 35, guilty in stabbing

'BANGOR, Maine — A jury Tuesday found a local man guilty of trying to kill his ex-girlfriend when he stabbed her twice in the abdomen nearly two years ago outside a Hudson Street apartment.
...
Archer, who took the stand in his own defense Tuesday morning, told the jury that he did not remember stabbing his ex-girlfriend twice on the evening of April 26, 2008, outside a mutual friend's apartment in Bangor. He admitted, however, that he must have caused her injuries.
...
In his closing arguments, defense attorney Stephen Smith of Bangor told jurors that the evidence showed Archer was too intoxicated on a cocktail of legal and illegal drugs to form the intent to commit either of the more serious crimes. He said the jury should find the defendant guilty only of aggravated assault.'

Now, the second:

Wife Acquitted In Stabbing Death Of Husband

'A Gwinnett County jury deliberated for about three hours Monday before acquitting Laurie Alexander of murder and related charges in the Dec. 8, 2007 stabbing death of Kent Alexander.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution reports that Laurie Alexander claimed that after she confronted her husband about an affair, she took two prescription anti-anxiety pills and went to bed. She told police she didn't remember anything until the next morning, when she found her husband dead on the kitchen floor.

Alexander testified that a few hazy details came to her later in dreams. She said her husband may have become aggressive toward her after they argued.'

Mile-high morality

Matt · 20 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Column here. Despite its status as vapid mainstream "romantic comedy" fluff, Barbara Kay nonetheless is a good at pointing out key double-standards that remain part and parcel of "modern romance" found in a recent film. Excerpt:

Up in the Air is the Rom Com (romantic comedy) of the year. Most critics love it. It's hugely entertaining, but the surprise ending (spoiler alert!) sends a jarring message no reviewer (to my knowledge) has mentioned.

The film is based on Walter Kirn's eponymous 2001 novel about Ryan Bingham, a man who fires people for a living. Ryan spends most of his time on airplanes, traveling to mundane, mid-sized American cities, in each occupying a mundane office cubicle in which he fires mundane workers.
...
On one of his downsizing forays, he hooks up with Chicago based Alex, a beautiful, sophisticated frequent-flying female version of himself. Their brisk, mutually straightforward seduction of each other suggests a long history of sexual grazing at the diverse human buffet frequent travel provides.
...

Shortly afterward, succumbing to the neediness the trip home has inspired, Ryan impulsively flies to Chicago to see Alex and declare his feelings. Arriving unexpectedly at her door, he is shocked to hear the sound of children and a husband's voice. Alex's bourgeois family represents her real life, just as airports are Ryan's. He leaves before any damage is done, but she is furious with him for breaking the rules of their ... whatever it is, and for putting her happiness at risk. He meekly accepts her right to be angry. Back to his meaningless life he goes, sadder and not much wiser.

This is where the film lost its appeal for me. Ryan presented honestly as what he was, a single man looking for brief encounters. Alex presented herself as a single woman looking for same. But she wasn't. She was committed -- in her way -- to a family. Ryan wasn't cheating on anyone. She was.
...
Ryan's crime, in Alex's eyes, was to allow emotion to col-our what was supposed to be a sex-only affair of convenience, the result of which was a near-intrusion into the real life Alex apparently holds sacred.

And yet: A mother of small children with a punishing travel schedule, Alex broke what surely has to be an equally important rule for one playing that game: the rule that says a frequent flyer's rare free time should be spent with one's nuclear family. She took a whole precious weekend -- precious for them, at least -- for an extended sexual fling, cementing the impression that she was single, and allowing Ryan's family to lavish warmth on her as a potential in-law to boot.
...
In most comedies worthy of the name, even if guy doesn't get girl, some sense of social order and just desserts should prevail. Alex deserved exposure for her multiple duplicities, and Ryan deserved to feel he had been gratuitously humiliated.

Instead, the movie ends with Alex seizing and holding a false moral high ground, with Ryan accepting her judgment of him as a cad for succumbing to a yearning for intimacy. The would-be gentleman is alone and sad. The travel slut is happy and self-righteous. How Rom is that? How Com is that?'

Israel: Feminists attempt to frame a Supreme Court candidate with false accusations

davidcohen188 · 21 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's is quite rare to have evidence to false allegations. Usually, it's a "word against a word", there are no witnesses. However, this rare story is amazing, you can see online all the evidence and everything links together.

So our story begins at the Law Faculty of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. We have two dominant characters in our story: The first is Prof. Zohar Goshen, a law professor. Prof. Zohar Goshen had been a candidate to become a Judge in Israel's supreme court. The second character is Goshen's colleage, Dr. Orit Kamir, a well known feminist activist and law professor. Prof. Goshen and Dr. Kamir has a well-documented rivalry between them, After Dr. Kamir has accused Prof. Goshen of being "the enemy of women's rights".

Dr. Orit Kamir has published a public letter against the planned appointment of Prof. Goshen to the Supreme court. You can find a news article about publish in Ha'aertz it in Hebrew here.
Ha'aretz is Israel's third largest national newspaper. Translation of the news article:

'A letter criticizing Prof. Zohar Goshen, the leading candidate to be appointed to the Supreme Court, has been spread across the Internet during the last few days. Behind the letter is Dr. Orit Kamir. However, the letter has been spread by feminists activists and women's organizations.

"Goshen has opposed the law against sexual harrassment" Kamir has written, "When the law passed he accused me (Kamir has been one of those who initiated the law) that now his life will have to change. As a result of my initiative to promote this law, Goshen has started a personal attack against me and led the Hebrew University to fire me... Goshen is a dangerous enemy to women's rights". Sources close to Goshen has said: "Kamir's claims are a lie and Goshen has never opposed the law against sexual harrassment".' This article is dated 25/7/06.

OK, and now comes the best part. The is a this very popular Internet portal called "Tapuz". In this portal, there is a "Feminism" forum. in 25/7/06, (remember that date? see above!) a user named "Portal" publishes in the Feminism Forum the following message:

Title "Looking for female students who studied at Zohar Goshen's Courses"

Female students who studied at Prof. Zohar Goshen's students, in the Hebrew University or at the "Academic Institute", recently or a few years ago: With relation to his expected appointment to the Supreme Court, it is about time to let some skeletons out of the closet. Girls that this is relevant to them or to their friends know what I am talking about. Please leave me a message".

Amazing isn't it? They are actually actively looking for potential false accusers in order to de-rail Prof. Goshen's appointment to the supreme court! By the way, the original hebrew message in the Tapuz Feminism forum is still there, you can find it here.'

Man charged with domestic battery smearing meatloaf on wife's face

MichaelClaymore · 21 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'BRADENTON, Fla., Jan. 7 (UPI) -- Authorities in Florida said a man was arrested for allegedly smearing meatloaf in his wife's face while they were discussing a separation.

The Manatee County Sheriff's Office said Lance David Ziegler, 39, allegedly picked the meatloaf up off his kitchen table and smeared it into his wife's face Wednesday after she announced her intention to leave him, the Sarasota (Fla.) Herald-Tribune reported Thursday.

Deputies said they arrived at the home at about 7:45 p.m. and found the woman's face was slightly red and slathered with small amount of residual sauce.

Ziegler, who told deputies he had not hit his wife, was arrested and charged with domestic battery.'

"The Economist" Debates: Richard Donkin and Terry O'Neill re women's status in developed nations

anthony · 21 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This promises to be a debate that engages people's passions as well as their emotions.

Richard Donkin argues that the motion is what Americans call a "no brainer". Women clearly enjoy opportunities to make their livings and shape their lives that their predecessors could only dream of. They may not be doing as well as they would like. But, as he remarks, to say that they have never had it so good is not to say they cannot have it better.

Terry O'Neill produces a wealth of statistics to show that women still get a bum rap. They earn less than men, on average, and bear more responsibility for looking after children and the elderly. Only 3% of Fortune 500 CEOs are female.

There is much to chew on here. As the debate continues, Mr Donkin needs to grapple with the fact that, particularly in America, ordinary people have seen their incomes stagnate since the 1970s. It now takes two incomes to afford what one could afford in the 1960s. Are women running faster just to stay in the same place?'

Ed. note: Debate was done on Jan. 19. 2010. This article is the content and Q/A trail.

'Mary, on the Contrary': NY Times obit made feminist theologian Daly sound sane

anthony · 21 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As one who has long followed the career of the late radical feminist theologian Mary Daly, I was disappointed by her obituary in the New York Times a couple weeks ago. As a summation of Daly's outsize life and work, it was inexplicably drab.

A pioneering figure of "eco-feminism" and a major draw on the campus lecture circuit in the 1980s and '90s, Daly was probably best known in the secular world for her long-standing refusal to admit men to some of her undergrad courses at Boston College. This unilateral deviation from coeducational policy made national headlines in the late 90s, when a libertarian-conservative "public interest law firm" threatened to sue the college on behalf of an undergrad who felt his Title IX rights were being violated. In what Daly termed an instance of "rapism," the college administration used the threat of litigation to maneuver her into retirement in 1999.
...
"People are afraid to say that kind of stuff anymore," said Daly in 1999 to an interviewer uneasy about her proposed planetary "Mister-ectomy." But Daly exhibited no such qualms, which is why I think she would agree that Fox's obit was kind of a whitewash. Daly, however, would have surely found a way to blame its shortcomings on "the patriarchy," whereas I construe them as the consequence of Fox trying to register Daly's stature as (in the words of former Ms. editor Robin Morgan) "a central figure in 20th-century feminism" without giving the average lay reader the impression that she was a flaming moonbat.'

Proposal in process in Maryland State Assembly to restrict men's contact with foreign women johndias · 21 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The following is from a letter to the editor in the Cumberland Times-News, based in Maryland. Excerpt:

'How far out of touch with reality are Maryland legislators anyways? That's exactly the question being asked by citizens (women and men) regarding a proposed bill in the Maryland General Assembly, that would restrict men's rights to use dating sites to meet foreign women.

Delegate Jeannie Haddaway-Riccio (R-Talbott),vice president of the women's caucus is leading 35 other delegates (all women) on a campaign for passage of HB 65, that would shockingly require Maryland men to submit their fingerprints and other background information before they can initiate communication with a foreign woman if they use an "International Marriage Broker".

The bill is littered with false, misleading, and inaccurate information. Nobody is being traded or sold as the title, "Regulation of Marriage Brokers", deceptively implies. The truth reveals these are merely dating sites that provide names, addresses and phone numbers so that a Maryland citizen can initiate communication (as in saying "hello") with a foreigner. Punishment for violations of the law include $12,000 fine and or up to one year imprisonment.
...

The Maryland law requires male matchmaking clients to provide an array of personal and criminal information to a foreign woman, making them vulnerable identity theft, blackmail and other crimes. Also, the law fails to protect American men from immigrant spouses who often file false charges of abuse in order to obtain citizenship.

So what exactly is the mindset of Maryland women legislators who are going after fictitious "marriage brokers" surreptitiously masking the reality of a law that regulates men's communication, and land them in jail for a year — just for writing a love letter?

Let it be known that writing a letter — including a romance letter, is a legitimate activity and the government has no right to enact laws that place restrictions on relationships and communication occurring across international boundaries.'

Abusegate, Investigate!

Matt · 21 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader, Ed:

Call 202-224-3121 today!

False Allegations of Domestic Violence Cost Taxpayers $20 Billion a Year.* That's 20,000 million dollars, thanks to wrongful allegations of abuse.

Families are being broken up, children harmed, men discriminated against, and the Constitution trampled on. Why is the mainstream media so damn complacent? Why hasn't the President sounded the alarm? And why hasn't Congress launched an investigation?

TODAY, call 202-224-3121 – that's the Capitol Switchboard. Ask to be connected to your congressman. State your name and city of residence. Then ask your elected official to "Investigate Abusegate, the failure of the domestic violence industry to live up to its promises."

Our lobbyists are working Capitol Hill this week. Your call is important. Do it now!

*Source: http://www.radarsvcs.org/docs/RADARreport-False-DV-Allegations-Cost-20-Billion.pdf

Maggie Gallagher: "Do We Care About Boys?"

Broadsword · 21 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The headline from The Washington Post celebrates yet another milestone: "University of Virginia picks its first female president."

But meantime, the data continues to mount that our educational system is massively failing one gender: boys.
...
And yet every sign that boys or men are hurting gets determinedly turned around into a happy news story of female success. The disconnect between the happy headlines and the reality underneath will only be solved by women. The irony of men is that they cannot defend themselves or organize around their own systemic, gendered problems. Putting their own gender in the position of "the weaker sex" unmans them -- and also makes them deeply unattractive to women. It's not going to happen.

So the only way we are going to identify the new problem that has no name, own it, and do something about it, is if women with power make it a cause of our own. We have sons as well as daughters, nephews as well as nieces. We want husbands and fathers for ourselves or for our children who are confident, successful males and good family men willing and able to work hard to support those families. The problem is not that women are doing well, it's that boys are doing badly. The two genders cannot be pitted against one another without all of us losing.
...
An education system failing a generation of boys is going to produce unprecedented human misery for children, for women, and for the men themselves.

Are we women enough to do something about it?'

Ed. note: Re the author:
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Maggie_Gallagher
http://www.marriagedebate.com/mgbio.php

France to push women into the boardroom (whether they want to go there or not)

Broadsword · 21 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The French version of the glass ceiling has just been cracked open by parliamentary vote. With the backing of President Sarkozy's administration, the National Assembly last night passed a bill that aims to force big companies to appoint women to 40 percent of their seats on the board. The quota is likely to reach the statue books, with amendments, later this year, making France the biggest state so far to use the law to break the boys only culture of the boardroom. Norway introduced a 40 percent rule in 2002 when women accounted for only 6 per cent of board seats there. Spain has also just passed a similar law.
...
Male opponents are wondering -- though not publicly -- where France will find enough qualified femmes d'affaires. Jean-François Copé, the UMP parliamentary leader and co-author of the bill, pointed out that women managers handled the financial crisis better than men. "A business is not going to go bankrupt because it has as many women as men on the board," he said. Some of the media reporting has illustrated the distance that France has yet to travel towards equality. The parity quota was "not aimed at bringing more glamour to the boardroom", Europe 1 radio joked yesterday morning.

Leading businesswomen initially opposed quotas but many have changed their minds in the face of continuing refusal by les machistes of the the old guard to feminise the upper ranks. "The situation in France is abnormal. If we cannot manage otherwise then let's make things move with quotas," said "Atomic Anne" Lauvergeon, the chief of Areva, the nuclear power giant, who is France's senior corporate female.'

Female reporter sexually assaults David Beckham - but it's him who's being controversial

GaryB · 21 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This story on the BBC site (including video) explains how an Italian female presenter decided to pull a prank on David Beckham, and grab his testicles to see how large they are. She does it, and he is shocked and leaves. As he leaves she's deriding him and telling the world he has small balls.

But it's interesting how it's Beckham who's 'finding himself in controversy yet again'. So basically it's his fault, right? I mean he's a man, he's appeared in underwear ads, obviously he asked for it. No mention of arrest or even a negative word said against his assailant, the PP once again...

Excerpt:

'David Beckham has had his private parts grabbed by a woman trying to check the size of his testicles.

Italian journalist Elena Di Cioccio took the soccer star by surprise as she put on a pair of rubber gloves and grabbed his manhood - to see whether or not he lived up to his nickname "Goldenballs", the name famously given to him by his wife, Victoria Beckham.

She said: "I want to find out how big his testicles are!"'
...

More info: Symposium on Male Studies at Wagner College, NY (USA)

Matt · 22 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Greg Andresen:

Apologies for cross-postings...

http://www.malestudies.org/

A gathering of academicians drawn from a range of disciplines will meet on April 7, 2010, at Wagner College, Staten Island, New York, to examine the declining state of the male, stemming from cataclysmic changes in today's culture, environment and global economy. The live teleconferenced colloquium will be co-chaired by Judith Kleinfeld, PhD, Professor of Psychology and Director of the Boys Project at the University of Alaska, and Lionel Tiger, PhD, Rutgers University Charles Darwin Professor of Anthropology. It will encompass a broad range of topics relevant to the study of boys and men in contemporary society ranging from their roles in the family and workforce, as well as their physical and emotional health, to the growing problem of misandry—the hatred of males, an unacknowledged but underlying socio-cultural, economic, political and legal phenomenon endangering the well-being of both genders.

The goal of the April colloquium is to consider the nature and structure of male studies programs designed for institutions of higher education. It follows on the current experience of the On Step Institute (OSI), which supports graduate fellowships at New York University's Steinhardt School of Education, Culture and Human Development. It will seek to generate a cross-disciplinary community of scholars in male studies and establish a series of networks enabling scholars to become acquainted with each other's work. The Chair of OSI, Edward Stephens, MD, who has organized the consortium, finds that while a handful of schools now sporadically offer courses dealing with males in traditionally unrelated departments – for example, literature, history, anthropology, psychology and sociology – the courses are unequal to providing effective insight into the immense problems confronting males in the 21st century which requires an integrated approach incorporating a multiplicity of academic disciplines.

The panel will include leading authorities on males and masculinity, including: Rocco Capraro, PhD, Associate Dean and Director, The Program for Men's Studies at Hobart William Smith College; Gar Kellom, PhD, Director of the Men's Center for Leadership and Service at Saint John's University, Collegeville, Minnesota, and editor of Developing Effective Programs and Services for College Men; and Katherine Young, PhD, and Paul Nathanson, PhD, both of McGill University, co-authors of Spreading Misandry: The Teaching of Contempt for Men in Popular Culture; Legalizing Misandry: From Public Shame to Systemic Discrimination Against Men; Sanctifying Misandry: Goddess Ideology and the Fall of Man; and the forthcoming Transcending Misandry: From Feminist Ideology to Intersexual Dialogue.

Male Studies: A New Academic Discipline FAQ

Live teleconferencing technical requirements

View the complete program

For more information about the April 7 Consortium, email: wagnerconference-at-malestudies.org.

Canada: Man beaten severely by police after dragging him from house on DV suspicion

Matt · 22 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Plain-clothed officer burst into a man's home and dragged him from it, then beat him nearly to death due to him being suspected of a crime. This is why such things as arrest warrants and such concepts as the use of force continuum and presumed innocence (I include the links for the VPD's educational use) were invented... unless of course the suspected crime is anything DV-related, wherein of course the suspected victim is female. This is just what the founding fathers were on about.

However with respect to my reference to the US's founding fathers, that this brutal criminal act committed by persons acting under color of law and in the employ of a taxpayer-supported governmental system occurred in Canada hardly detracts from the point, does it? It could just as well have happened in the US and I am pretty sure it already has on more than one occasion.

So, the police involved have "apologized"? I hardly think that's good enough. Had they done this to any person except a man, they would be not only sacked but probably facing criminal charges.

Can you just imagine if they had beaten an attractive young women that way for any reason? Can you just imagine the trouble they would be in? Excerpt:

'The Vancouver Police Department has issued an apology after a man said he was beaten by officers who knocked on the wrong door while investigating a report of a violent domestic dispute.

Plainclothes officers arrived at the right house at 2 a.m. PT Wednesday near Knight and 49th Street in East Vancouver, but they were at the wrong suite, police admitted in a news release Thursday.

Speaking through a translator, Yao Wei Wu told CBC News that as soon as he opened the door the officers pulled him out of the house and beat him.

He was hit multiple times on the back, head and face, said Yao, 44.

He said he did not resist because the men had guns.

It was only after they handcuffed him and asked his name that they appeared to realize they had the wrong man, Yao said.

...

"The man resisted by striking out at the police and trying to slam the door, but the officers persisted in the belief that there may be a woman and child inside who could be in danger."

The man the police were looking for who lived in the other suite in the house was later found and arrested on suspicion of assault, McGuinness said. '

Police Say Georgia Mom Forced Son to Kill Hamster

Matt · 22 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'WARM SRPINGS, Ga. — A Georgia woman is in jail after police say she forced her son to kill his pet hamster with a hammer as punishment for bad grades.

The sheriff of rural Meriwether County told the Atlanta Journal-Constitution Thursday that the 12-year-old boy told his teacher about the killing. The teacher reported it to the Division of Family and Child Services, who contacted police.

Sheriff Steve Whitlock said 38-year-old Lynn Middlebrooks Geter of Warm Springs faces one charge each of animal cruelty, child cruelty and battery.

The sheriff's office said she remained in the Meriwether County jail early Friday. It was not immediately known if she had a lawyer.

Meriwether County is located about 90 minutes southwest of Atlanta.'

Scorned Mistress of Married Obama Adviser Posts Billboards Nationwide

Matt · 23 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I am sure I (or MANN) will get accused (even moreso) of anti-Obama bias. Well that is not what this post is about. It's about this: Would the company posting these billboards have done so if there was a female adviser to the president in the same position and her jilted on-the-side fellow tried to buy billboard time talking about it?

Billboard space vendors reject ads all the time for all manner of reason. The fact that she wanted space on a billboard to complain about her high-profile jilter and that they rented it to her speaks volumes about what they think the public won't complain to them about.

In any case, we here on MANN know that the rate of infidelity among the sexes is roughly equal. However the substance of this story continue to reinforce the idea (and gleefully so) that males are the "primary cheaters" in our species. Excerpt:

'On first glance, it could be the ultimate Valentine's Day card -- a gigantic billboard that towers over New York's Times Square, featuring a happy couple with the text: "You are my soulmate forever, Charles & YaVaughnie."
...
YaVaughnie Wilkins posted the signs after she learned that her lover, Charles E. Phillips — president and director of the tech conglomerate Oracle Corporation and a member of Obama's Economic Recovery Advisory Board — had reconciled with his wife, the New York Post reported.

The billboards -- there are three in New York and one apiece in Atlanta and San Francisco, where Phillips lives -- may have cost Wilkins up to $250,000, at an estimated $50,000 each.

After the billboards surfaced, Phillips fessed up to his longtime affair through a spokesman on Thursday.

"I had an 8-and-a-half-year serious relationship with YaVaughnie Wilkins. The relationship with Ms. Wilkins has since ended, and we both wish each other well," he said.
...
In an Oracle newsletter from 2006, Phillips was described as an ex-marine and "family man" who has a wife and 10-year-old son, Chas, the New York Times reported.'

Country's first legal gigolo starts work in Nevada

Matt · 23 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Undoubtedly feminists will attempt to say this is an example of how men are having it better and better because "they can get sex not just 'for free', but now some can get paid for it," and that there needs to be further effort to stop "this sort of thing" not for men's sake but for women's. Of course to have things in the world of pay-for-play being male-to-female is also bad for women because it's sexual exploitation thereof. No winning, if you are male.

Also there are complaints that he won't have sex with other men, while some think having men around a brothel as prostitutes will "hurt the industry". And the article makes it sound like he hasn't even had a client yet, either. And on and on and on. Try to keep up. Excerpt:

'BEATTY, Nev. (AP) - A brothel in a Nevada desert town has hired the state's first male prostitute, a muscular college dropout who abandoned a brief stint as a porn actor in Los Angeles to become the only legal gigolo in the United States.

The Shady Lady Ranch successfully won state and county approval to clear the way for the "prostidude," as Nevada's newest sex worker is already being called. After a slow first week on the job, his first appointments are scheduled for this weekend.

The male prostitute - known as "Markus" - has quickly become the center of attention in Nevada's brothel industry.

He has been criticized by female counterparts for not being willing to have sex with men. ... Not surprisingly, he has been forbidden from doing interviews after the remarks.
...
Davis said that he and his wife aren't interested in establishing a gay male clientele, but it will be up to Markus to decide whether to accept men as customers. Davis said Markus told him that he wouldn't perform for male customers.

"All this gay homophobia in this country is horrible," Davis said. "Everybody's so damn scared two men might have sex - it's happening every day in Las Vegas. Not going to happen here, but that's all the big fear, is gay people."

George Flint, a longtime lobbyist for the Nevada Brothel Owners Association, said allowing a male prostitute creates legitimate health concerns. Male customers are thoroughly cleaned and inspected for signs of disease before sex at Nevada's brothels, and he doesn't believe the same "fanaticism" is possible when checking female customers.
...
Flint said he believed the Shady Lady Ranch, which is not a part of his association, could see a temporary wave of curious female customers, but the experiment will ultimately fail.

"I think she truly believes that it's a viable effort, and I'm wondering after four or five days and there haven't been any takers, if she's beginning to wonder if maybe she was wrong," Flint said. "You and I and the rest of the world can sit and debate this damn thing until hell freezes over, but if nobody shows up at her front door, what's it proved?"'

VPD changes their story; victim does not accept excuses, apology, and fears reprisals

Anonymous · 23 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VANCOUVER - The family of the Vancouver man injured by police in a case of mistaken identity Thursday is not ready to accept the Vancouver police department's apology.

Two plainclothes police officers arrived at Yao Wei Wu's south Vancouver home at 2:20 a.m. Thursday after receiving a call from a woman at the residence who said she was being attacked by her husband and feared for the safety of their baby.

What police didn't know was that there were two suites in the home and they had gone to the wrong door.

The altercation that ensued left 44-year-old Wu — who does not speak English — bloodied, with small cuts all over his face and an eye swollen shut.
...

The couple has not yet decided what action they will take, if any.

"As for right now, I haven't really thought about what I'm going to do," said Wu after returning home from a doctor's visit. "I just want to rest. I'm really tired."

Chi said she is hesitant to take legal action, fearing police would retaliate.

"If we filed a lawsuit, would they get back at us?" she asked. "I'm scared. I don't know, I don't know."

The VPD is now investigating the matter, but the B.C. Civil Liberties Association called Friday for an independent police force to take it over.'

New York mother pleads not guilty to torturing family pets, abusing her children

anthony · 23 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RIVERHEAD, N.Y. - A woman pleaded not guilty Thursday to abusing her children and family pets, sometimes forcing the children to witness her torturing animals to death, prosecutors said.

"This is a case where a mother subjected her children to the most unimaginable and horrific living conditions that I have ever seen," Suffolk County District Attorney Thomas Spota said. "These kids were beaten, they were starved, they lived in absolutely horrendous conditions within their own household and this was done intentionally by the mother."

Sharon McDonough, 43, killed numerous kittens and dogs, stashing the dead cats in the trash, and burying 42 dead dogs in the backyard of her Selden, Long Island, home, Spota said. The dogs were buried, he said, because some had identifying microchips implanted in them and McDonough feared being discovered if the carcasses were found in the trash. '

No parole for 'Angry Betty' Broderick

Luek · 23 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Ex-wife from Hell, Betty Broderick, has been denied parole for killing her ex-husband and his new wife in their bed in 1989.

Just goes to show that even the California Parole Board can have at least a functioning brain stem when it comes to rabid killer women. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- Elisabeth "Betty" Broderick, once a socially prominent lawyer's wife who fatally shot her ex-husband and his new wife in bed in 1989, has been denied parole.

When Broderick's husband of 16 years dumped her for his young legal assistant, she seethed with a white-hot fury. She was one angry Betty, as a California writer, a long-time Broderick watcher, recently observed.

She still is, the California parole board concluded Thursday after hearing Broderick's rambling statement in which she continued to blame her actions on her husband's extramarital affair and their bitter divorce.'

Student: ‘Beating So Bad Thought I Was Going To Die’

Matt · 24 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A man need not even be suspected of DV to get charged (of what crime-it seems it matters not), tried, found guilty, and punished by severe beating, all in one fell swoop, and by police officers no less. (No judges need apply.) Sometimes he just needs to be standing there. Excerpt:

'PITTSBURGH -- Pittsburgh police Chief Nate Harper said three plainclothes officers have been reassigned during an internal investigation into the beating of an 18-year-old student violinist from the city's Creative and Performing Arts High School.

Police charged Jordan Miles, 18, with assault and resisting arrest Jan. 11 because, they said, he fought with the officers who thought a "heavy object" in his coat was a gun. It turned out to be a bottle of Mountain Dew.

Miles said he resisted because he thought the men were trying to abduct him and didn't identify themselves as police.

Miles' family and attorney said he was hit with a stun gun and hospitalized after the violent Homewood struggle during which a chunk of his hair was yanked out and a tree branch went through his gums.

"I was accused for something I never had anything to do with," said Miles, an honor student at CAPA. "I was completely innocent. They couldn't find anything."

Police took Miles to a Pittsburgh hospital for treatment. The student said he had to go back after he was released from custody.'

Israel: Feminists Robbing Dead Bodies For Sperm

davidcohen188 · 24 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So, think you have seen it all? You have seen nothing yet. The immorality and disgracefulness of the Feminist movement have now reached a new record high. We have already got used to the fact that feminists make men's lives bitter. However, when we died, feminists used to leave us alone. Well, so it was until recently. Nowadays, feminists have also taken away the privilege men used to have, to die in peace.

When a men dies, it is possible to pump out sperm of the dead body. If the pumping is done within 24 hours from the time of death, the sperm can be used to fertilize a woman. There is only one problem - the man is dead. Which means that you cannot ask him whether or not he agrees to be a father.

However, the feminist-infected family court in Israel doesn't see this as a problem. On January 17th 2007, an Israeli Family has first approve pumping out sperm from a dead body of an IDF soldier died in the course of his military service. The young soldier, 19 years of age, has never been asked whether or not he would be willing to become a father in a way like this, or at all.

The dead soldier's mother, hooked up with a total stranger female, and together they applied to the Israeli family court to approve pumping sperm out of the dead soldier's body. The sperm was to be used to fertilize a total stranger female, whom the young soldier has never met or heard of in his life. However, since the request was filed by women, the Israeli family court automatically approved the request, as it always does.

The sperm has been pumped, and the total stranger female now has a baby. But what about the rights of the young dead man to decide whether he wants to be father or not? And what about the fact that the mother is a total stranger whom the young man has never met in his life?'

'Why I Give to Women-Focused Relief Organizations'

anthony · 24 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the earthquake hit Haiti last week I decided to direct my giving toward CARE, an organization that focuses its work on women. Some will question why I don't give right to the Red Cross, a very worthy organization. The honest answer is that I want to give my money to an organization who will put women and mothers as a priority. It's not a sexist statement, as much as a truth that reflects our gendered world.

Women are the caregivers of not just their families, but also of their communities around the world. Women know who lived where, who needs help, and so much more vital information that relief organizations require. Add in the fact that with globalization of our economy there are many parts of our world where women far outnumber men due to men immigrating to big cities or other countries, and well, you see how women get left at home to hold things together. When women do immigrate for paying jobs, they leave farming behind, hurting the community. Bottom line, when you put money into women's well-bring it impacts the entire community.

That is why I sent and will continue to send money to CARE. A gendered response is necessary. It doesn't mean that men and boys aren't important. Far from it. It means that women do have certain needs that men don't -- pregnancy, motherhood, and menstruation for starters -- that need addressing. When I give to women-focused agencies, I know they will make sure that women's needs are addressed.'

Australia: Sex abuse accused father fights back

anthony · 25 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A DAD cleared of claims he sexually abused his kids is now hitting back at his ex wife.

The man is accusing his ex-wife of perjury, assault and threatening to kill.

The legal action, believed to be a first for Victoria, will set a controversial precedent and could open the floodgates to similar cases.

"Bill", whose identity cannot be revealed for legal reasons, is alleging his wife deliberately lied when she made allegations that he had sexually abused their children.
...
He was eventually acquitted, but the ordeal cost him his job, his home and about $450,000 in lost income and legal costs. The case is also based on similar accusations of sexual abuse of their children made by the ex-wife during a bitter Family Court battle.

The Family Court judge found Bill's ex-wife to be violent, untruthful, lacking moral values and responsible for the psychological and emotional abuse of her children - but still gave her custody of the two girls, now aged 9 and 11, because they had become estranged from their father.'

The Domestic Violence Industry’s War on Men

Matt · 25 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By painting all males as brutes, feminists hope to reduce half the population to a state of dhimmitude.

January 21, 2010 - by Barbara Kay

The industry that has grown up around domestic violence (DV), or, as it is more precisely situated these days in research circles, intimate partner violence (IPV), began in good faith decades ago as a legitimate campaign to help women trapped in abusive relationships.

Over the years, as the triumphalist feminist revolution’s long march through the institutions of the West proceeded with eerily unchallenged vigor, DV emerged as a highly politicized touchstone justifying women’s entitlements — legal, economic, familial — at the expense of boys’ and men’s human rights.

A tipping point in the DV chronology, when the focus amongst militant feminists shifted from helping individual women to the more totalitarian ambition of reducing the male population to cultural dhimmitude, can be traced back in time to December 6, 1989, and in space to a school two miles north of my front door.

December 6, 2009, marked the 20th anniversary of a unique tragedy in Western history, the systematic massacre of 14 women engineering students, with injury to 13 others, at Montreal’s École Polytechnique by a lone young gunman, Marc Lepine, who killed himself at the end of his shooting spree.'

Investigate Abusegate: Call Sen. Hatch TODAY!

Matt · 25 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Each year, 2-3 million restraining orders are issued in the United States (1). But according to one study, 70% of those orders are unnecessary or false (2).

The Violence Against Women Act bankrolls the issuance of millions of restraining orders, for which there is little proof of benefit, and which, according to the Independent Women's Forum, only "lull women into a false sense of security." This week our lobbyists are working Capitol Hill, asking our elected officials to "Investigate Abusegate!"

One of the key supporters of VAWA over the years has been Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah. Sen. Hatch views VAWA as one of his legacies. Really? Then Sen. Hatch should be leading the charge to find out exactly how the Violence Against Women Act got sidetracked.

CALL TODAY! Call Sen. Hatch's office at (202) 224-5251. Or send him an email via http://hatch.senate.gov/public/index.cfm?FuseAction=Offices.Contact. The message to Sen. Hatch only needs to be 5 words long: "Investigate Abusegate! Fix VAWA Now!"

Sources:
1. http://www.radarsvcs.org/docs/RADARreport-VAWA-Restraining-Orders.pdf
2. Foster BP. Analyzing the cost and effectiveness of governmental policies. Cost Management, Vol. 22, No. 3, 2008.

Tennessee Woman Accused in Trail of Death

Matt · 25 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'But almost everyone has an opinion on how he ended up there. Mr. Leath, 57, was found dead of a gunshot wound in his own bed in 2003. His wife, Raynella Dossett Leath, said it was a suicide, but she was ultimately charged with murder. Her dramatic trial last year gripped the city, but it ended in a hung jury. Last week, she went on trial again.

The trail of death in the case, however, does not begin and end with a beloved barber, but winds its way up to the highest levels of law enforcement in this city. There was a fatal car crash, a love child, a missing will and, strangest of all, the 1992 death, officially by cattle stampede, of the Knox County prosecutor, Ed Dossett, who happened to be Ms. Dossett Leath's first husband at the time.

...

Ms. Dossett Leath soon lured Mr. Walker to a barn on her farm, telling him she had found some papers related to the child. Once there, she opened fire on him, according to his account, and chased him across the hayfields until she ran out of ammunition. According to Mr. Walker's statement to the police, she said she would kill him and the child's mother and raise the child herself.

Ms. Dossett Leath was charged with attempted murder, but pleaded guilty to a lesser charge and did six years of "diversion," a form of probation. Then, the charge was expunged.

Friends say it was only months after Ms. Dossett Leath completed her sentence that Mr. Leath was found dead. He had signed deeds and a will, now missing, ensuring that Ms. Dossett Leath would inherit all the couple's property. At the trial, her defense lawyers argued that the victim killed himself, offering evidence that he was depressed and that his health was declining. But a firearms expert for the prosecution said that of three shots fired from the gun that day, it had been the second one that killed Mr. Leath.'

'Help Choose Nine Women to Run the World'

anthony · 25 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I recently came up with an idea: that it would be revelatory to ask as many women who were willing to “nominate” our next world leaders: to choose who, among women, they’d put forward to lead the world. This seems more apt than ever, given last week’s decision by the Supreme Court, which may guarantee even more corporate sponsorship of our elected officials.

What do you think? Is it time for us to start imagining a new kind of world, since this one ain’t working? Is it time for us to try a different approach —say, give the other gender a chance at running things?

Most in the handful of women I polled, of all ages, would like to see women given a chance at piloting the ship for a while. We’ve had men in the majority in just about every area of governance and power — everywhere on the planet. If women were in charge, would things improve? How about The Nine, an international court of women — enlightened governance?

Please respond by nominating one or two or nine women who you think could take charge and give us a chance to save ourselves and the planet. At a certain point, I’ll tally the results to see who The Nine are, but we are not so interested in how many votes any single”candidate” gets as which names appear.'

'Mancession' Takes Toll on Working Women

anthony · 25 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(Jan. 23) – Women are about to claim majority status in the American workplace, sounding the bell on a number of decades-old feminist goals. At last, we're financially independent, professionally respected, in charge of both men and ourselves. But even before we've cleared that milestone, we're ready to give it all back.

Isn't that just like a woman, a man might say.

A recent Pew study found that an increasing number of women express ambivalence about sharing the job market equally with men. Nearly two-thirds of working mothers now say they'd prefer their jobs be part time, up from 48 percent just 10 years ago. Only 37 percent are content with working full time.

Women aren't becoming lazier; nor, it seems, are they making a concerted turn against feminist ideals. Rather, it's that these days – when you factor in the new recessionary reality of longer hours at the office for those who still have jobs, as well as the resulting uptick in even more time away from the kids and money spent on child care – the cost of working is greater than the cost of staying home.
...
Some working mothers would argue that choosing to stay home with the kids is itself an act of feminism – empowerment isn't about proving superiority over men, but making decisions that are personally suitable. Still, even if life as a stay-at-home mom is as fulfilling as climbing the corporate ladder, in nearly all cases it doesn't pay very well.

Which leaves us dependent on our partners. All over again.'

Supreme Court: Indian women won't make false rape claim

anthony · 25 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mumbai: In an observation that could have far-reaching implications in the prosecution of rape cases, the Supreme Court recently observed that an Indian woman would never make a false allegation of rape, given the social stigma attached to it. This is likely to bolster the cases of rape victims and may have a bearing on recent cases involving actor Shiney Ahuja and Shree Ram Mills scion Abhishek Kasliwal.

“In Indian society, any girl or woman would not make such allegations (of rape) against a person as she is fully aware of the repercussions flowing therefrom. If she is found to be false (sic), she would be looked at by society with contempt throughout her life,” the apex court observed.

Upholding the seven-year imprisonment handed out to an auto-rickshaw driver who raped a 12-year-old in 1988, a bench of justices JM Panchal and Deepak Verma stated: “For an unmarried girl, it will be difficult to find a suitable groom. Therefore, unless an offence has really been committed, a girl or a woman would be extremely reluctant even to admit that any such incident had taken place which is likely to reflect on her chastity (sic). She would also be conscious of the danger of being ostracised by society.”'

Woman Guilty of Cutting Baby From Teen's Womb

anthony · 25 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PITTSBURGH — A woman who lured a pregnant teenager to her apartment, drugged her, cut out her baby, then killed her and tried to pass the infant off as hers was found guilty but mentally ill of second-degree murder and kidnapping.

Monday's verdict against Andrea Curry-Demus, while supported by evidence of her long history of mental illness, was "perhaps more merciful than the defendant deserves," Allegheny County Judge Jeffrey Manning said.

In finding Curry-Demus not guilty of first-degree murder, Manning said he wasn't satisfied that her psychotic delusions allowed her to form the intent to kill.

Curry-Demus, 40, of Wilkinsburg, will be formally sentenced in March, but the second-degree murder conviction carries an automatic life prison sentence without parole. She will serve part of her sentence in a prison mental hospital until doctors conclude her illness improves enough for her to serve the rest in prison.

Prosecutors sought a first-degree murder conviction, which would have carried the same penalty as the second-degree murder count because prosecutors weren't seeking the death penalty. The defense wanted her found not guilty by reason of insanity.'

Fear of maths among teachers damages pupils

Broadsword · 26 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A lack of confidence in their ability to add, subtract and divide is easily passed on to female pupils, it was disclosed.

The study, which was based on 117 infants in the US, found that many girls had a “significantly worse” grasp of maths after a year of being taught by a nervous teacher.

Academics from Chicago University found that “worries and self-doubt” were not passed on to boys as they rejected the behaviour and attitudes of adults of the opposition sex.

The trend is being fuelled by the fact that the vast majority of primary school teachers are female.

Figures published last year showed that almost nine-in-10 primary teachers in England were women. More than a quarter of schools had no male teachers at all, it was disclosed.'

'My So-Called Wife'

Matt · 26 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I found this to be quite funny, well-written, and of course, pathetic. Give 'em an inch they want a mile. Give 'em a mile, they want an inch. And on and on it goes. I don't single women out though for this observation. I see it time and again at work, in what the public or the people expect (from government, etc.), and so on. Of further interest though were also the off-linked articles, which I mention after this excerpt:

'I am stricken with the peculiar curse of being a 21st-century woman who makes more than the man she's living with — first with a husband for 13 years and now with a new partner. It's an increasingly common situation, according to a recent Pew study that found that the proportion of American marriages in which the wife makes more money rose to 22 percent in 2007 from 4 percent in 1970.

I don't know how it's going for my sisters, but as my 40s and Verizon bills and mortgage payments roll on, I seem to have an ever more recurring 1950s housewife fantasy. In this magical Technicolor world, the breadwinner husband, Brad, leaves home (where his duties are limited to mowing the lawn and various minor home repairs) at 7 a.m. When he returns from work at 6 p.m., aside from a savory roast with mashed potatoes, his homemaker wife, Nancy, has pipe, slippers and a tray of Manhattans ready.
...
One could ask, who are the modern women who are content with such a role? These are times when mothers with newborns watch "Oprah" episodes that feature a harried mom just like you who became entrepreneurial with her jam, and is now head of a multimillion-dollar company in addition to being a great mom!

In the end, we all want a wife. But the home has become increasingly invaded by the ethos of work, work, work, with twin sets of external clocks imposed on a household's natural rhythms. And in the transformation of men and women into domestic co-laborers, the Art of the Wife is fast disappearing.

So in the meantime, I may need to settle for a man who can simply make a decent tray of Manhattans and, while you're at it, pussycat, make mine a double.'

As promised:
More Men Marrying Wealthier Women
Skipping Spouse to Spouse Isn't Just a Man's Game

F&F: Write, Call to Support Bill to Protect Disabled Fathers from Family Court Abuses

Matt · 26 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Fathers & Familes Action Item here. Excerpt:

'Arizona HB 2348 will help protect disabled fathers (and mothers) from child support and alimony abuses—to email and fax a letter in support of the bill, click here.

The hearing on the bill is Wednesday January 27, so please act ASAP. This is a national issue and supporters both inside and outside of Arizona are encouraged to participate.

Although federal law is clear, judges are often ignoring it and calculating veterans' disability compensation into divorce settlements as a divisible asset. Very often these payments are the only assets a veteran has. When judges include it as income, it creates great hardship for those veterans, who rarely have the resources to hire legal help to contest the taking of their benefits. HB 2348 will help end this practice—to email and fax a letter in support of the bill to all members of the Arizona House Military Affairs and Public Safety Committee to express your support for HB 2348, click here. To call the Committee members, click here.

Abusegate: Mother of All Scandals?

Matt · 26 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed: Article here. Excerpt:

'Mirror, mirror, on the wall, what's the most colossal scandal of them all? Watergate? Climategate? Tigergate? If you said 'yes' to any of these, you're not even close!
...
Abusegate refers to our nation's flawed crusade to curb domestic violence (DV). Originally a high-minded and well-intentioned effort, the end-abuse campaign has now fallen prey to an invidious anti-family agenda. In the name of making homes safe, the domestic violence industry curtails fundamental civil rights and often betrays those in greatest need.

Let me count the ways our domestic violence effort has failed to deliver on its promises, all the while undermining our most cherished values and societal institutions:

1. Takes advantage of vulnerable women. Our abuse shelters are filled with women who are just as violent as the men they left. When abused women come for help, they need a safe place where they can get counseling, housing assistance, and treatment for substance abuse problems. But instead they get a hefty dose of gender ideology proffered in the name of promoting "female empowerment":
http://www.radarsvcs.org/docs/RADARreport-Are-Abuse-Shelters-Helping-True-Victims.pdf

2. Stereotypes men as abusers. Amanda McCormick of Praxis International recently shocked abuse conference attendees with this calumny: "I know a lot of men who deserve to be beaten." Less than two months later the Department of Justice awarded a $3.5 million grant to her organization, prompting Examiner.com columnist Trudy Schuett to wonder why the federal government is using taxpayer money to subsidize anti-male hate-speech.'

US: Record number of young Americans jobless, with 1/5th of 20-24-YO black males unemployed

Matt · 26 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Quick, fund more programs for girls! That'll fix the problem! Excerpt:

'CHICAGO (Reuters) - The U.S. economic recession has taken a particularly heavy toll on young Americans, with a record one out five black men aged 20 to 24 neither working nor in school, according to research released on Tuesday.

Teenagers have found it significantly harder to get a job since the recession began in late 2007, with black youths and young people from low-income families faring the worst, wrote Andrew Sum of Northeastern University in Boston, a employment researcher commissioned by the Chicago Urban League and the Alternative Schools Network.

"Low-income and minority youth, who depended on part-time jobs as a significant stepping stone to future employment, have been forced out of the job market and economically marginalized," Herman Brewer of the Chicago Urban League said in a statement.

Overall, 26 percent of American teenagers aged 16 to 19 had jobs in late 2009, said the report, which was based on U.S. Census Bureau data. That figure is a record low since statistics began to be kept in 1948, the researchers said.

Employment counts the number of people with a job as a percentage of the entire work force. By contrast, the unemployment rate -- which stood at 10 percent in December in the United States -- does not include people who have grown discouraged and stopped looking for work.'

Do you think we need a "gendered approach" to solve this? Oh yeah, that only counts if the gender is female. Sorry, I was confused there for a minute.

UK: Disillusioned with stressful jobs, a whole generation of women are opting out of the rat race

Broadsword · 26 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For years, the only reason women would take a step back from their career was to raise a family, but my friends are getting off the treadmill before then.

A new book called 30-Something And Over It - What Happens When You Wake Up One Morning And Don't Want To Go To Work. . . Ever Again sums up the mood.
...
In the book she quotes some interesting statistics. Apparently, 26 per cent of women at the cusp of the most senior levels of management don't want the promotion. One in 15 under-35s have already dropped out of paid work to pursue ' self-improvement', while half plan to do so in the future.

She speaks to several psychotherapists who are seeing as many people in the midst of thirtysomething burnout as they do those with mid-life crises.
...

My friend Vanessa says she felt the same. 'I kept thinking things would get better if I just got to the next level, but they never did,' she says. 'I looked at my boss and didn't want his job. I sat in meetings and thought: "I don't care any more." I was stressed, single and not sleeping. And even though I was earning good money, I was broke because I was blowing it all on things to cheer myself up. It got to the stage where none of it made sense.'

And far from fuelling our ambition, it seems that the current economic crisis is only compounding our sense that status, success and money are a fool's gold."
...
I learned to lower my expectations of what work will provide and found other things to give me meaning and fulfilment. I discovered that a job will never meet your relationship needs, and no matter how much you love it, it will never love you back.'

NY Times: 'She Works. They're Happy.'

anthony · 27 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'EVER since Betty Friedan urged women to leave the house and pursue careers, people have argued over whether women's marriages and romantic prospects would suffer for it. Was a financially successful woman a threat to her husband or a relief?

Last week, a report from the Pew Research Center about what it called "the rise of wives" revived the debate. Based on a study of Census data, Pew found that in nearly a third of marriages, the wife is better educated than her husband. And though men, over all, still earn more than women, wives are now the primary breadwinner in 22 percent of couples, up from 7 percent in 1970.

While the changing economic roles of husbands and wives may take some getting used to, the shift has had a surprising effect on marital stability. Over all, the evidence shows that the shifts within marriages — men taking on more housework and women earning more outside the home — have had a positive effect, contributing to lower divorce rates and happier unions.

"Women no longer need to marry up educationally or economically, so they are more likely to pick men who support a more egalitarian relationship," said Stephanie Coontz, director of research and education for the Council on Contemporary Families and author of "Marriage, A History: How Love Conquered Marriage."'

Ed. note: On the heels of the article from the UK, you have this. Try to keep up!

College 'gender gap' favoring women stops growing

anthony · 27 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'-- More men are attending college and graduating with a bachelor's degree, reversing the tendency of female undergraduates to outnumber men and outperform them academically, according to a new report out Tuesday.

One notable exception is young Hispanic men - especially new immigrants - who are falling further behind Hispanic women.

Men account for 43 percent of overall college enrollment and earn 43 percent of bachelor's degrees - figures that have remained consistent since the early 2000s.

However, the analysis by the Washington-based American Council on Education shows the disparity lies largely in the fact that men are much less likely than women to go to college - or return to college - later in life: Undergraduate men age 25 or older are outnumbered by women in the same age group 2-to-1.
...
The U.S. Civil Rights Commission is investigating whether private liberal arts colleges in the Washington, D.C., area are discriminating against women in an effort to better balance their enrollments.

Linda Sax, an associate professor at the University of California, Los Angeles Graduate School of Education and Information Studies, said attention should focus on preparing and attracting low-income African-American and Latino men to college, given their historic under-representation.

"At the same time, we must acknowledge the fact that women continue to comprise the majority of low-income and first-generation college students and remain underrepresented in traditionally male fields like engineering and computer science," said Sax, author of "The Gender Gap in College: Maximizing the Developmental Potential of Women and Men." "Their needs ought not be overlooked."'

Authorities: David Copperfield's accuser charged with lying to police

Anonymous · 27 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A false-accuser was fouled in her 2+ year assault on the famous magician David Copperfield. Her accusations of being subjected to the crime that dares not speak its name by Mr. Copperfield were exposed as an attempt to extort money from him. She was also charged with being a "common whore" also by the authorities. It is significant to note that out of this ordeal Mr. Copperfield suffered no drop in income from his fan base and is estimated to have made $30 million last year from his performances. I guess getting accused of a sexual assault no longer carries the stigma it once did because so many public men are being accused? Too bad the perpetrator will probably not be charged with a major felony. A false accusation of rape is RAPE. Excerpt:

'Los Angeles, California (CNN) -- A Seattle, Washington, woman who accused illusionist David Copperfield of sexually assaulting her more than two years ago has now been charged with prostitution and making a false accusation in another case, according to Copperfield's attorney and Washington state officials.

The federal probe of Copperfield was officially closed earlier this month.

"Local authorities have charged Mr. Copperfield's accuser with making yet another false claim of rape, this time against a Seattle-area businessman, and with prostitution," Copperfield lawyer Patty Eakes said Tuesday.

King County, Washington, prosecutor Susan Irwin said in criminal complaints filed Monday that Lacey Carroll committed the alleged offenses on December 2, 2009.'

Newsweek: 'Reproductive Coercion'

Anonymous · 27 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Perhaps. But so is the "oops, I forgot to tell you I didn't take my birth control" excuse. THAT is reproductive coercion as well - if not outright FRAUD and hijacking a male's finances for 20+ years. Excerpt:

Experts are studying a phenomenon that brings a whole new meaning to the term 'unwanted pregnancy.

About a decade ago, Elizabeth Miller remembers seeing a certain teenage girl at a hospital clinic for adolescents in Boston. The patient thought she might be pregnant and asked for a test. When it came out negative, Miller started asking the standard questions, inquiring as to whether her patient wanted to be pregnant (she didn't) and whether she was using contraceptives (she wasn't). So Miller explained all of the birth-control options and, as she describes it, "sent her on her merry way with a brown bag of condoms." It was, by most measures, a pretty routine appointment.

Except that, two weeks later, the same patient was back at the hospital, in the emergency room after her partner pushed her down the stairs. "That was the wake-up call where I started thinking there might be a relationship between the two situations," says Miller, now an assistant professor of pediatrics at University of California, Davis. "She was coming in for a pregnancy test, not wanting to be pregnant, and not wanting to use birth control. And now I'm wondering what's going on for her, knowing she was in a physically and sexually violent relationship. I started wondering whether I needed to be asking her about why [she isn't using birth control] at that visit."
...

Overall, rates of reproductive coercion among family-planning-clinic patients are suprisingly high: about one in five women report their partner having attempted to coerce them into pregnancy. "What we're seeing is that, in the larger scheme of violence against women and girls, it is another way to maintain control," says Miller, who studied 1,300 female patients culled from five family-planning clinics in Northern California. "You have guys telling their partners, 'I can do this because I'm in control' or 'I want to know that I can have you forever.' " This may help explain previous findings of higher rates of unintended pregnancies in relationships with partner violence.
...
The boundary between reproductive coercion and relationship violence—and whether there is, in fact, a boundary at all—is a difficult issue for health-care providers to address. In some cases, it can fit a spectrum of other abusive behaviors, from threatening to physical violence, that create an imbalance in a relationship's power dynamic. "Just like violence, it's a power thing," says Walker, who has seen patients whose boyfriends monitor their periods to ensure they're not taking Depo-Provera contraceptive shots (which often cause women to skip their period). "The man is taking away a woman's power to decide she's not going to have a child. Still, the line is unclear. Miller, for example, would be hesitant to categorize reproductive coercion as a form of partner violence, since many states have laws mandating reporting of such incidents. ...

Lawsuit against Bob Uecker tossed

anthony · 27 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'MADISON, Wis. -- A Wisconsin appeals court has dismissed a lawsuit filed by a woman who claims she has been unfairly portrayed as a stalker by the Milwaukee Brewers and radio announcer Bob Uecker.

The District 2 Court of Appeals did not rule on the merits of Ann Ladd's claims.

Instead, the three-judge panel said Wednesday that her allegations of defamation and invasion of privacy were either filed after the two-year statute of limitations had run out or lacked a legal basis.

In 2006, Uecker alleged a pattern of stalking and harassment by Ladd. She was charged with felony stalking, but a prosecutor dismissed the criminal charge after a court commissioner issued an injunction barring her from contacting him.'

Intact America in The Washington Post

Matt · 27 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From IA's recent email:

'Over the history of circumcision, there's been one justification after another," said Intact America's Georganne Chapin in a Washington Post article reviewing the debate over routine circumcision last week.

Hundreds of concerned readers have written comments in response to the article's apparent bias in favor of circumcision – and The Washington Post subsequently published a letter to the editor from John Geisheker of Doctors Opposing Circumcision. Read his letter to the editor and post your own comment >>

A new study finds little evidence that circumcision can prevent sexually transmitted infections, urinary tract infections, and penile cancer. Read the article >>

Reader's Digest features the story of Lia Boldt, a mother who turned to her state's court system to prevent her nine-year-old son from being circumcised against his wishes. Read the story >>

Also, please take action:

'Last week, the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) Task Force on Circumcision met to finalize the organization's new policy on circumcision – which could recommend circumcision for all baby boys.

Before the AAP releases its statement, we need to make sure it hears directly from people who oppose infant circumcision.

Send a message to the AAP right now and tell them that routine neonatal circumcision is wrong – morally, medically, and ethically.'

Psychiatry Online: Young women commit domestic violence 130+% more often than men

jayhammers · 27 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In addressing intimate partner violence, the focus is usually on women who are physically battered by husbands or boyfriends. However, women sometimes hurt their partners as well.
Previous Section

Women are doing virtually everything these days that men are—working as doctors, lawyers, and rocket scientists; flying helicopters in combat; riding horses in the Kentucky Derby. And physically assaulting their spouses or partners.

In fact, when it comes to nonreciprocal violence between intimate partners, women are more often the perpetrators.

These findings on intimate partner violence come from a study conducted by scientists at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). The lead investigator was Daniel Whitaker, Ph.D., a behavioral scientist and team leader at the National Center for Injury Prevention and Control (which is part of the CDC). Results were published in the May Journal of Public Health.'

Rutgers sorority members are accused of beating pledges during hazing

anthony · 28 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The young pledge said she was told the beatings would "humble" her, that each flesh-rending strike with a wooden paddle would build love and trust between sorority sisters.

It wasn't hazing, she said they told her. The women of Sigma Gamma Rho at Rutgers University didn't condone hazing.

For seven nights the beatings went on, she said. In all, she was struck 201 times. On the eighth day — unable to sit, her buttocks covered with blood clots and welts — she went to the hospital. Then she reported it to the university.

Today, Rutgers police said they had arrested six members of the sorority on charges of aggravated hazing, alleging they repeatedly beat at least three pledges between Jan. 18 and Jan. 25. A university official, vice president of student affairs Greg Blimling, and the pledge who spoke to The Star-Ledger put the number of victims at seven.'

UK: Record numbers of women held for violent crimes

Broadsword · 28 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Record numbers of women are being arrested for violent crimes, it was revealed today.

Annual criminal justice statistics showed 88,139 women were arrested for violent offences in a single year - or nearly 250 every day. That is an increase of nearly 1,000 on a year earlier. At the same time the number of men arrested for violent crimes fell by 10,000.

...

The rise in arrests means that for the second consecutive year women were more likely to be held for crimes of violence than for any other offence. It overtook shoplifting for the first time in 2005/6. Today's figures, published by the Ministry of Justice and covering 2007/8, showed arrests of women for theft continued to fall, by nearly 3,000 to 77,425.

...

Violence against the person - a category which includes manslaughter, assault and grievous bodily harm - accounted for 35% of all crimes committed by women.

Since 2002, the number of women arrested for violent crimes has more than doubled. At the turn of the century the figure was 37,100.

...

More than 250,000 women were arrested for all crimes in 2007/8, compared to more than 1.2 million men.'

UK: "Feminism: What went wrong?"

Broadsword · 28 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. (Daily Mail has an article by Natasha Walter also on this topic.) Excerpt:

'"In previous generations many women had to repress their physical needs and experiences in order to fall in with social conventions, and feminism was needed to release them from the cage of chastity," writes Walter. "But what I heard from some women is that they feel there is now a new cage holding them back from the liberation they sought, a cage in which repression of emotions takes the place of repression of physical needs." In short, they daren't feel because it might limit the exercise of their freedom. "It's my choice," is now an argument-clincher for any kind of louche behaviour.

Ouch. Was this what their mothers fought for? Of course not. Freedom, combined with economic independence, may have proved a poisoned chalice, one that has made women more unhappy than ever before. Is it all feminism's fault, some are asking – among them Martin Amis, whose new novel, The Pregnant Widow, is based around the wretched story of his late sister Sally, who was unable to control her own drinking and promiscuity. To him, she was a victim of liberation."

...

Questions about the flaunting of sexuality do not trouble this generation. Today, the only debate about gender issues centres on the physiological differences between men and women. "All that gender determinist stuff about men having one kind of brain and women another is even more dangerous that the more aggressive sexism of the past," finds Izzy Finkel, who has just graduated from Cambridge, and, like most of her contemporaries, is chiefly concerned with getting a job.'

UK: "Scotland: domestic violence against men is frequent and often unreported"

Matt · 28 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The results of a major piece of government research on partner abuse in Scotland slipped out relatively unreported before Christmas. The new Scottish findings mirror much Australian and international domestic violence research showing family violence against men is frequent and often goes unreported.

The Scottish Crime and Justice Survey 2008-09: Partner Abuse was published by Scotland's Chief Statistician on December 15th 2009. The research was conducted with 16,000 interviewees and represents the most comprehensive investigation to date into the extent of partner abuse in Scotland.

Interviewees were asked about their experience of physical or psychological partner abuse both since the age of 16 and within the preceding 12 months. The findings included:

• 18% of adults who had had at least one partner since the age of 16 reported having experienced at least one form of partner abuse. The figure for women was 20.9% and for men 15.3%.

• However, in the most recent 12 months the figure for both men and women was 5%.

...

Scottish journalist John Forsyth said, "To date most Government pronouncements and campaigns have insisted that male experience of partner abuse is minimal and insignificant. This data completely contradicts these assertions. It is hoped that the Government will now review their meagre support for male victims of domestic abuse and their children.

"The research has to be commended for its rigour. When asked whether they had been subject to domestic abuse since the age of 16, only 3% of men and 14% of women said yes. However, when asked to report specific conduct by a partner that falls within the definition of partner abuse, the number for men rose 5 times to 15% and for women by half to 20.9%. This is hardly surprising given the tens of millions that has been spent by successive Scottish administrations on campaigns, support services and organisations targeted at women, encouraging them to recognise and report domestic abuse. In the same period precisely nothing has been spent on efforts to encourage men to recognise and report domestic abuse."'

Attack on boyfriend included frying pan and a kitchen knife - no jail time, boyfriend elects to stay with assailant

Matt · 28 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HAMPTON - After beating him with a frying pan and stabbing him with a kitchen knife, a Rothesay woman avoided jailtime and returned home with her victim/boyfriend.

Judge Henrik Tonning couldn't deny if the male/female roles were reversed, the penalty would likely be harsher.

Instead, he followed the joint recommendation of Crown prosecutor Kelly Winchester and defence lawyer Al Levine by sentencing Mary Lisa Joyce Carrier to a six-month conditional sentence, followed by one year's probation for assault causing bodily harm.

Carrier, 21, sat next to the boyfriend she assaulted and still lives with during her sentencing in Hampton provincial court. When she stood to be sentenced, he stood with her and often put his arm around her.
...
He said if the role was revered and it was a man who beat his girlfriend with a frying pan and then stabbed her repeatedly, he is "doubtful" the sentence would be as light.

"More likely he would be incarcerated for a significant period of time," Tonning said. "(But) I don't intend to rock the boat today."

He told Carrier to accept the support she has and get help for her issues.

"Everyone needs a little help now and then," Tonning said.

Under the conditional sentence she must abstain from alcohol and non-prescription drugs and take programs recommended by her probation officer.'

'Catcher in the Rye' author J.D. Salinger dies

Matt · 28 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

R.I.P., Mr. Salinger. Article here. Excerpt:

NEW YORK – J.D. Salinger, the legendary author, youth hero and fugitive from fame whose "The Catcher in the Rye" shocked and inspired a world he increasingly shunned, has died. He was 91.

Salinger died of natural causes at his home on Wednesday, the author's son, actor Matt Salinger, said in a statement from Salinger's longtime literary representative, Harold Ober Associates, Inc. He had lived for decades in self-imposed isolation in a small, remote house in Cornish, N.H.

"The Catcher in the Rye," with its immortal teenage protagonist, the twisted, rebellious Holden Caulfield, came out in 1951, a time of anxious, Cold War conformity and the dawn of modern adolescence. The Book-of-the-Month Club, which made "Catcher" a featured selection, advised that for "anyone who has ever brought up a son" the novel will be "a source of wonder and delight — and concern."

Enraged by all the "phonies" who make "me so depressed I go crazy," Holden soon became American literature's most famous anti-hero since Huckleberry Finn. The novel's sales are astonishing — more than 60 million copies worldwide — and its impact incalculable. Decades after publication, the book remains a defining expression of that most American of dreams: to never grow up.

...

In 2000, daughter Margaret Salinger's "Dreamcatcher" portrayed the writer as an unpleasant recluse who drank his own urine and spoke in tongues. Actor Matt Salinger, the author's other child, disputed his sister's book when it came out and labeled it "gothic tales of our supposed childhood."

"He was a caring, fun, and wonderful father to me, and a tremendous grandfather to my boys," he wrote in an e-mail to The Associated Press.'

NCFM: President Obama Speech Spreads More Myths About Gender Pay Gap

MR · 29 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

National Coalition for Men: President Obama Speech Spreads More Myths About Gender Pay Gap

Obama Ignores Department of Labor Study that Proves the Gender Pay Gap A Woman's Option

In his presentation, President Obama said: "We're going to crack down on violations of equal pay laws - so that women get equal pay for an equal day's work." In stating this, says Angelucci, "President Obama helped spread the myth that the gender pay gap is due to sex discrimination."

Angelucci points to the Department of Labor (DOL) which recently funded a major study (.pdf file) on the causes of the pay gap. The results showed what earlier studies also found - the pay gap reflects women's privilege of having more options than men - to stay home full-time, or to work part-time or full-time.
...
NCFM calls on Obama to be truthful about the gender pay gap consistent with his March 2009 memo insisting on scientific integrity, and also calls on Obama to stop ignoring issues affecting men and boys. "Our elected officials should help all of us, not just women," said Angelucci. "There are still many of us who love our sons as well as our daughters."

Australia: "Call to end shared custody: Chisholm report"

Matt · 29 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A REPORT commissioned by the Rudd government recommends major changes to the controversial shared parenting law introduced by former prime minister John Howard, saying it has put women and children at risk.

The report by retired Family Court judge Richard Chisholm says the law has also set fathers up to believe they are entitled to a 50-50 time split with their children after divorce, when this was never the parliament's intention, nor part of the law. The report into family law was ordered by Attorney-General Robert McClelland, in response to the shocking death of four-year-old Melbourne girl Darcey Freeman, who was thrown to her death from the West Gate Bridge one year ago.

Her father, Arthur Freeman, is now facing a murder charge.

In launching the report yesterday, Mr McClelland said it was "motivated at least in part by the very tragic events, in the case of Darcey Freeman".'

Happening Right Now-The University of Ottawa Women's Resource Centre- Hate Speech

Matt · 29 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S.: Dated Jan 29, 1:30 AM: Captured by cellphone photography, a picture of signs in the windows to The University of Ottawa Women's Resource Centre's hate speech sent to FathersCan by a third party, via a student at Ottawa University. It's an "In the Window Now" situation. Male Students report being outraged.

FathersCan asks what would be the public and media reaction be if the wording was somewhat different and reflected a male perspective about dangers to women? The reader can use their imagination: Would a 'Men's Resource Centre' be allowed to display something akin to this (even were there to be such a resource centre, which there isn't) So, hate speech or not? Does the law allow this? Not for men.

Ed. note: One thing is to contact them and the University administration (see below). You have the "smoking gun" in the form of this picture. Sunlight, as I have said before, has a cleansing effect.

President: http://www.president.uottawa.ca/home.html
VP & Provost: http://www.uottawa.ca/vr-etudes-academic/en/
Staff positions (all kinds): http://www.president.uottawa.ca/contact-us.html

Remember, be polite!

Woman stabs man over American Idol

Stinger503 · 30 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

' ST. PETERSBURG — Police said a St. Petersburg woman took a TV dispute too far Tuesday night when she stabbed and scalded her boyfriend over "American Idol."

Police arrested Cynthia E. Bettis-Ware, 52, on a charge of first-degree attempted murder of Kevin Johnson, 47.

It happened at 11:22 p.m. at the Empress Motel, 1501 Martin Luther King St. N, which the couple listed as their permanent address, said police spokeswoman Jennifer Dawkins.'

Australia: Bushfire safety workshops - for women only

Minuteman · 30 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to media release here (.pdf file). Excerpt:

'Women in regional South Australia are being offered free basic bushfire safety skills workshops to assist them in becoming Bushfire Ready. This follows a successful pilot program offered on Eyre Peninsula in 2008.

Fiona Dunstan, Manager Community Education and Public Warnings, says “The workshops provide women with a safe non-threatening setting to learn new skills to protect their families and livelihoods, covering both information and providing practical sessions over two sessions”.

“Feedback from women who attended the previous program was excellent,” she said.'

This was reported in an article on page 8 of the Saturday, 30th January edition of Adelaide newspaper "The Advertiser" (the on-line version can only be accessed through a paid subscriber service), a rag owned by Murdoch's News Limited which recently introduced a Friday "Women's Weekly", section and no longer pretend to be anything except a glorified women's magazine.

He allegedly didn't pay child support - so murdering him is OK?

Matt · 30 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S.: Regarding Body in backyard is missing Fla. lottery winner's

"What is the point of including this in the article? It seems to me it is a reporter's way of biasing the reader to think that since he didn't pay child support (and has a CRIMINAL record for it), he is somehow a lower life form and hence not deserving of any pity or consideration. He is scum, therefore he deserved to be murdered. And of course we note that his purchases are enumerated too - again to bias the reader - "he had no right to any of the money anyway - he didn't pay child support so murdering him to take it away is not a big deal" seems to be the message. And also ,"Rolex from a Pawn shop".

What difference does it make where he bought it as long as he did so legally - would the reporter had said "Rolex from WalMart"? Again the implication that since he used the money to buy something from a pawn shop, he doesn't deserve to live. While I wouldn't go to a pawn shop, they are legitimate businesses and apparently one can get some fairly good bargains there.

If the murder victim had been a mother who won the lottery and the murder suspect was a man do you think the article would mention if the victim had been convicted of violating a court order by not allowing the father visitation rights? Would it mention that the mother had bought herself a car? Would it say that she had bought herself a fur coat from a Salvation Army store?

Misandry may be disguised but it is still misandry.

"Gendered approach" to international rescue and charity neither new nor limited in scope

Matt · 30 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

It seems the "gendered approach" we are hearing about regarding the efforts to help Haiti is far from new nor is it restricted to just a few charitable organizations, or ones that happen to be run or supported by feminists as such.

Take a look at care.org. I saw an ad on TV just today saying care.org was supporting relief efforts in Haiti and focusing on women and children (see the special Haiti page here). Well if they said they would be focusing on men and children they would probably guess that there would be fewer donations - and alas, they would be right. But how about just saying the people there need help and they are providing it? No, it needs to be about "women and children" - again. There are counter-examples of charitable groups not openly stating that they seek to help "women and children" - for example, Plan International USA says it seeks to help "children and their families".

They are bringing relief to places that need it. That is good. I just wish they and other such groups were at least not misandrist in their approach. I am sure men are gaining benefit as these groups assert, but via the support women are getting. But why is it that men need to be getting support via women instead of just getting it because they are human beings? I am guessing it is because people in general simply don't see men as fit targets of compassion, and neither do these relief organizations.

Maryland seeks to jack up child support obligations, based on bogus inflation rationale

Matt · 30 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill, SB 252, was just introduced in Maryland to increase child support obligations for households at most income levels – a massive 29% increase for a couple (with one child) making $3400 a month! Maryland residents, already burdened by state tax increases, now face additional burdens.

I don't live in Maryland, and I'm not divorced, so I won't be affected by the bill. But as a lawyer who has studied most states' child support guidelines, I find the economic ignorance behind the bill infuriating.

The bill is based on the bogus rationale that child support awards must go up, because inflation has increased child-rearing costs over the years. But under Maryland's existing child support guidelines, awards are based on income -- the more you make, the more you pay! So when incomes and prices rise due to inflation, so, too, do child support payments. The guidelines thus contain a built-in inflation adjustment.

Yet some Maryland officials apparently do not grasp basic economics, arguing that “today’s child support levels" are too low because they "are based on the economic realities of 1988, when a gallon of gas cost $1.08 and a first-class stamp was 22 cents.”'

UK: "Ladette Britain: Violence among women soars as record 250 are arrested every day"

Matt · 31 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ten 'ladettes' were detained every hour for a violent crime last year - an all-time record.

Where a women is arrested she is now more likely than a man to be a suspect in cases of wounding or other assaults.

Some 88,139 women were arrested for violence over 12 months - nearly 250 every day. That is an increase of nearly 1,000 on a year earlier.

The number of men arrested for violence fell by 10,000.

It is the second straight year in which women were more likely to be held for crimes of violence than for any other offence. Shoplifting had previously led the list.

Violence against the person - a category which includes manslaughter, assault and grievous bodily harm - accounted for 35 per cent of all arrests of women. This compared with 30 per cent of arrests of men.'

CNN reports that men are openly being denied food in Haiti lance · 31 January 2010 · Archived copy · Original

If you are like me, you have been watching the humanitarian efforts underway in Haitti with interest. It seems that the level of acceptable misandry in the world is being demonstrated in its truest form. Like a scene out of the Titanic, more and more so-called humanitarian non-profits are focusing their energies on "women and children" first. Well today this blatant misandry has reached a whole, new level where CNN has reported that food is only being distributed to women. Interestingly, CNN has actually underscored this sexism and even interviewed a man denied of life saving food. This is of small consolation though as men are being turned away to starve simply because of their gender. Excerpt:

'"The area has been extremely volatile recently with a significant increase in gang violence, but we are hopeful we will be able to reach them soon," he said.

Distribution was orderly elsewhere, Prior said.

Only women were given tickets to collect a 55 pound (25 kilogram) bag of rice per family. Forty-two metric tons of rice will be distributed each day over the next two weeks.

At Champs de Mars, the city's central plaza which has turned into a sprawling makeshift camp for the quake displaced, women formed a long line that snaked up to trucks carrying the rice.
...
"Our long experience in food distribution tells us that by delivering food into the hands of women, it is more likely to be redistributed equitably among the household -- including the men," he said.

Montouroy said most men have someone -- a wife, a sister, a mother or girlfriend -- who will be able to feed them. He said it was safer to deliver the rice to the women.

But things didn't sit well with some men.

"What about me? I didn't get anything. I need food," said Johnny Sanon Stevenson. "Many people could not participate."'

CNN.com did do us one service though. They provided a list of charities that are engaging in this practice. I encourage each and every individual reading this site to contact these charities and let them know that you will not be donating any money until they no longer engage in what amounts to be gendercide:

(Click 'Read more' to see the list)

Huge Gender Degree Gap at Age 22: National Crisis, Title IX, Government Funding? Probably Not

anthony · 1 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to a report released yesterday by the BLS:

At age 22, women were more likely than men to be enrolled in college and were more likely to have received a bachelor's degree. Twenty-nine percent of women were attending college during the October when they were age 22, compared with 25.2% of men. Moreover, 12.8% of women had earned a bachelor's degree, compared with 6.9% of men (bold added, see chart above). [Ed.: Chart not viewable on MANN; see the original linked article]

MP: In other words, at age 22, there are 185.5 women holding a Bachelor's degree (or more) for every 100 men who have graduated from college. Now that's a huge gender disparity in college completion at age 22, but I predict:

1. This gender degree gap will receive almost no media attention, and certainly no attention from the gender activists.

2. There will be no calls for government studies, or increased government funding to address the problem, and nobody will refer to this gender degree gap as a "crisis."

...

In other words, the standard "disparity-proves-discrimination" dogma will not be applied in this case of a huge gender imbalance in college completion by age 22, because the disparity favors women, not men. But consider what happens when the disparity favors men, and this is just one example of many:

NY Times: "Women make up 46% of the American workforce but hold just 25% of the jobs in engineering, technology and science, according to the National Science Foundation. To Sally K. Ride, a former astronaut, that persistent gender gap is a national crisis that will prove to be deeply detrimental to America's global competitiveness."'

Canada: Female sexual abusers not as rare as widely believed

anthony · 1 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WINDSOR, Ont. -- She gave him life and was the only parent he ever knew. In the way she snapped photos of him sleeping and playing happily, she was like any other adoring mother. But she also committed unspeakable acts to his little body, turning him into a human sex toy in her pornographic broadcasts.

The set of facts involving the Windsor-area mother who sexually abused her two-year-old son horrified both those involved in the case and those who'd only heard about it.

...

While female sexual abusers are rare in the court system, those who deal with child sexual abuse know the woman is not unique. She may be the first Ontario woman to be jailed for making child pornography featuring her own offspring, but she's not the first mother to sexually abuse a child.

A national study released in 2005 shows that biological mothers were the perpetrators of sexual abuse in 5% of the substantiated cases investigated by child welfare authorities.

...

A 2003 U.S. study questioned a random sample of adults to determine the prevalence of childhood sexual abuse. It found that of the 32% of females and 14% of males who identified themselves as victims, 9% of women and 39% of men said they had been abused by at least one female.

While figures are usually inflated, studies of male sex offenders show 45% to 50% were themselves victims of sexual abuse. Hovey is researching counselling practices for women survivors of sexual abuse to see if they should be asked if they've ever in turn abused anyone. She saw it in her private practice -- women sexually abusing children.'

Female suicide bomber kills dozens in Baghdad

anthony · 1 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Baghdad, Iraq (CNN) -- At least 41 people were killed and 106 others wounded Monday in a suicide bombing that targeted Shiite pilgrims in northeastern Baghdad, Iraq's Interior Ministry said.

The female bomber detonated her explosive vest in the middle of a procession of pilgrims in Boob al-Sham, in a predominantly Shiite area of the Iraqi capital, according to an Interior Ministry official.

The detonation took place in a tent set up to search females, according to the Baghdad Operations Command. Three volunteer female searchers were among those killed.

The attack took place amid tight security as thousands of Shiite worshipers are making their way to the holy city of Karbala, south of Baghdad, to mark the Arbaeen -- the end of the 40-day mourning period at the close of Ashura.'

Abusegate Campaign Shatters Icy Grip of DV Ms.-Information

Matt · 1 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed:

While many parts of the United States were experiencing record-setting temperatures in January, the Abusegate campaign got warmed up, launching a multi-pronged effort to break the falsehoods and lies of the domestic violence industry. The high-temperature campaign featured Op-Ed columns, radio interviews, lobbying on Capitol Hill, and internet alerts.

As a result, a Google search on the word “Abusegate” now reveals 22,800 hits.

Here’s a recap of January’s activities:

1. Op-Ed Columns
   Three major op-eds were published:
   1. Trudy Schuett: Abusegate: A Generation Deceived
   2. Carey Roberts: Abusegate: The Mother of All Scandals
   3. Barbara Kay: The Domestic Violence Industry’s War on Men
2. Radio Interviews
   Leading DV researcher Donald Dutton appeared in 10 radio interviews conducted around the United States – see listing below.
3. Lobbying on Capitol Hill
   On January 22, Abusegate campaign lobbyists went to Capitol Hill and distributed a flyer titled, “Abusegate, Investigate!”
4. Internet Alerts
   Numerous Internet Alerts were published throughout the month.

February is promising to be even bigger than January. The Abusegate campaign will continue until the Domestic Violence industry warms up to the truth of partner abuse.

(Click 'Read more' for the list of radio shows that have had commentators on this topic.)

Abusegate Awareness Campaign Goes International

Matt · 1 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed:

The domestic violence industry has established a foreboding international presence, and is now bankrolled by the United Nations UNIFEM program, Amnesty International, and other organizations.

So following an incredibly successful campaign in the United States in January, our Abusegate, Investigate! campaign is now going international. Our growing effort to expose the DV lies now includes these groups:

AUSTRALIA: One in Three Campaign: http://oneinthree.com.au/

CANADA: Fathers are Capable, Too: http://www.fact.on.ca/

INDIA: True Equality Network, India: https://sites.google.com/site/tenindiaclub/

As the Abusegate, Investigate! campaign gains momentum, we expect other groups around the world will join in our truth-telling effort.

P.S.: For your reading pleasure, see this report, "The Emperor's Clothes: How the U.N. Hides the Truth of Domestic Violence" (.pdf file)

RADAR ALERT: Massachusetts Voters Reject Nifong-Style Prosecutor

Matt · 1 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

RADAR has issued a press release regarding the recent special election in Massachusetts. Excerpt:

> Even before Democratic Senate Candidate Martha Coakley was defeated by the Republican candidate, Scott Brown, political commentators were offering explanations for her loss of popularity, ranging from a bungled campaign to the idea that the Massachusetts election was a national referendum on health care reform or the Obama agenda. One explanation that deserves more attention was recently put forward by Carey Roberts at ifeminist.net. In "Prosecution of Innocent Man Seals Martha Coakley's Defeat", Roberts argues that Coakley's role in keeping Gerald Amirault in prison played a major role in the election of Scott Brown.
>
> In the early 1980s, as explained in a story by Dorothy Rabinowitz that ran in the Wall Street Journal five days before the election, Gerald Amirault had been accused of plunging "a wide-blade butcher knife into the rectum of a 4-year-old boy, which he then had trouble removing. When a teacher in the school saw him in action with the knife, she asked him what he was doing, and then told him not to do it again, a child said. On this testimony, Gerald was convicted of a rape which had, miraculously, left no mark or other injury." In 2001, when the Massachusetts Board of Pardons voted 5-0 to release him, Coakley, then District Attorney Coakley, successfully pushed for the Governor to deny commutation, which she did in 2002. Amirault spent two more years in prison before finally being paroled.

Even Consumer Reports is becoming misandrist mens_issues · 2 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I just received the March 2010 issues of Consumer Reports. On page 44 there is an article about vacuums, and at the bottom of the page is a little blurb titled "Women do the work." Below this it says "Alas, 75 percent of women who answered our survey said they do most of the household vacuuming, compared with 45 percent of men."*

The January 2010 issue has "Why Women Pay More" on the cover, and on page 8. The article goes on to compare the price of drugstore items such as shaving cream, antiperspirant, pain reliever, eye revitalizer, body wash and razor blades. It finds that women pay "up to 50 percent more" than men for similar products due to the "perceived value" of the products.

Also, in the March 2009 issue on page 7 there is a report on American's risky behavior. One sentence says "Men were slightly more likely than women to let kids play on a trampoline; women were more apt to eat burgers well done, fasten their safety belt religiously, and - listen up , men - clean lint from the dryer after each use.

Broadview (formerly Brinks) Security's "Arrgghh bad men!" ads

Matt · 2 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I have seen several Broadview Security ads recently. The theme is the same: a woman alone or alone with a child suddenly has her home invaded quite overtly and aggressively by a lone man who seems to know her from some place (who could that be... hmmm? An ex-bf, ex-husband, etc.) and who just plain kicks in the front door of her house but is fast deterred by a loud alarm and a phone call to the Broadview call center.

There are a few variations on the ad but they are all the same in their plot. One example is shown here with Sarah Haskins of InfoMania hitting the nail right on the head with her discussion of the foolishness of these ads. Her "Target Women" commentaries are simply not to be missed.

Contact info for Broadview is here. They don't seem to have an email address so may I suggest you call them and say you are ready to buy a security system right now. Then when they get all excited, say that on second thought since it seems based on their ads that the system is designed to protect women from intruders and so probably won't work for you, you will instead go with an ADT System, but thanks anyway... then, hang up.

Money doesn't talk, it screams.

"Gendered response" violates UN Universal Declaration on Human Rights

Matt · 2 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I wrote this and then thought: "Hmm, we got some work to do."

The precedent of "genderizing" catastrophic relief efforts must be stopped NOW, nipped in the bud while we have any hope to do it; otherwise gender feminists who, among other means, want to see men just die off by natural disaster calamities, will start winning in their efforts.

The UN needs to know this is not going unnoticed. They are the central authority for handling trans-national relief efforts when governments are too busy or otherwise too afraid to do too much around natural disaster victims. (That would seem to describe the current state in Haiti.)

It is really very sad that this disaster now has become a political football not just for this issue but for many others. But I guarantee you if the east coast of the USA suffered the same fate, not only would that happen (ie, political football-hood) but it would be a huge international political football the likes of which has never before been seen. So there is no avoiding it.

The UN has a special sub-site for women called "WomenWatch". It is filled with discussions of how women in Haiti need all the help they can get. It is as if there are no men at all in Haiti as far as the UN is concerned! So let no one have any doubts about where the UN is on this topic. But since misandry and its related ills are to be found all over the place, we cannot let it stop us.

Contact the UN and let them know you know what is happening here and you don't like it. Contact the relief organizations that insist on "genderizing" their efforts and tell them: You know what they are doing and you will not stay silent about it. Tell your office-mates and colleagues, family and friends.

Remember (here in the US) when HIV awareness among the gay community in the 1980s was first arising, the slogan used was "Silence = Death". That is true here in no uncertain terms. Men will die in Haiti because they are men - unless the men who are not in Haiti make it clear that what these aid organizations are doing is intolerable. And make it clear to them that donations to them will not be forthcoming from you until they stop "genderizing" humanity, especially with life and death decisions.

F&F Action Alert: 'Psychology Today' praises Clara Harris' Vehicular Murder as a "Great Revenge"

Matt · 2 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Alert here. Excerpt:

Fathers & Families is sending the protest letter below to Psychology Today via regular US mail and email. To add your signature to the letter and send it to Psychology Today, simply click here and fill out the fields.

Letter from Fathers & Families to Psychology Today:

> Kaja Perina
> Editor-in-Chief > Psychology Today
> 115 E. 23rd St., 9th Floor
> New York, NY 10010
> 212-260-7210
>
> Dear Ms. Perina & Psychology Today:
>
> In the shockingly irresponsible article “Sweet Revenge” (Psychology Today, January/February 2010), Regina Barreca, Ph.D. praises convicted Texas killer Clara Harris for her “great moment of revenge.” The act for which Barreca praises Harris? In 2002, Harris repeatedly ran over her ex-husband David, as David’s daughter Lindsey sat in the front seat of the car begging Clara Harris not to kill her father.
>
> While Barreca praises Clara Harris, Lindsey, who loved her father and was only 16 years old at the time of the killing, publicly denounced Clara Harris for “the ultimate act of selfishness, caring only about obtaining revenge and thinking not one bit about how her horrible act was going to affect me or my brothers, Brian and Bradley. Anyone who shared my ride in the car that evening, seeing my dad’s face as he was about to be hit, and experiencing the horrible feel of the car bumping over his body would understand that this murderess deserves no sympathy.”

Ed note: Please see first comment for more details re the author of the article.

F&F also reports: "Success: Bill to Protect Disabled Parents from Family Court Abuses Passes Committee Unanimously"

Matt · 2 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Monday evening Fathers & Families issued an Action Alert in support of Arizona HB 2348, a bill to protect disabled parents from child support and alimony abuses. As usual, your response was overwhelming—we thank all those who participated.

We have just learned that the bill has passed the Arizona House Military Affairs and Public Safety Committee unanimously. We thank Arizona House Member Frank Antenori, who sponsored the bill, as well as Mark Beres of the American Retirees Association and the ULSG, and Fathers & Families' legislative representative Michael Robinson, who worked with Beres. Robinson was also instrumental in the passage of a similar bill, SB 285, in California last year.

We will be following the bill as it advances through the Arizona legislature—thanks again to all of you who responded to our Action Alert and participated.'

Abusegate: Budget proposal includes increase for women's programs

Matt · 2 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed: Today (Jan. 1) President Obama released his 2011 federal budget, which totals an eye-popping $3.83 TRILLION. To make his bank-busting proposal more palatable, the President declared his budget would impose a spending freeze on non-discretionary and non-military spending.

But wait! Turns out there's a loophole. Nine federal programs that specifically target women will see an increase, including an extra $117 million for domestic violence programs – see this Miami Herald article.

So while millions of American men are falsely accused of domestic violence each year, the programs that push these false claims will actually see a 22% increase.

Does that make sense to anyone?

Express your extreme displeasure TODAY directly to the White House – keep your message short and polite:

Email: public-at-who.eop.gov

Internet: http://www.whitehouse.gov/contact

Domestic violence czar Lynn Rosenthal: lrosenthal-at-who.eop.gov

Eve Ensler: Girl power can save the world

Broadsword · 2 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The future is "girl." Imagine girl is a cell that each of us -- boys and girls -- are born with. Imagine this girl cell is central to the evolution of our species and an assurance of the continuation of the human race.

Now imagine that a few powerful people, invested in owning this world, understood that the oppression of this cell was key to retaining their power, so they reinterpreted this cell, undermining its value and making us believe that it is weak. They initiated a process to crush, eradicate, annihilate, humiliate, belittle, censor, reduce and kill off the girl cell.

This was called patriarchy.

Imagine that girl is the part of each of us that feels compassion, empathy, passion, intensity, association, relationship, emotion, play, resistance, vulnerability, intuitive intelligence, vision.

Imagine that compassion informs wisdom. That vulnerability is our greatest strength. That emotions have inherent logic and lead to radical saving action."

Texas Woman: 'I Just Killed My Babies'

anthony · 3 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SAN ANTONIO — A 22-year-old woman stabbed her two young sons to death, then calmly held her wrists out to police officers who arrived at her home and said "I killed my babies," authorities said.

Elyse Marsyl Colon was being held Wednesday on two counts of capital murder of a child in the deaths of her sons, 3-year-old Jose Luis Garcia and 1-year-old Guillermo Garcia. Her bond was set at $2 million.

"Words can't describe the scene," San Antonio police Chief William McManus said. "It was unspeakably sad."

Colon was waiting outside her home when officers arrived Tuesday evening and put her hands behind her back as they approached, police said. When an officer asked "What happened?", Colon allegedly responded with, "I killed my babies."'

The faces of men denied food in Haiti

Matt · 3 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A.: To major charities like CARE and UNICEF, these men are potential criminals because they're men who might not feed their families. Never mind that many of them, if not most of them, risk their lives every day to feed their families and to rescue people in the disaster. See also: Haitian Men Told to Stay Away From Food Lines. Men are asking "What about me? I didn't get anything. I need food."

Culprits reportedly include: World Food Programme, Samaritan's Purse, Catholic Relief Services, CARE, World Vision, ACTED, Save The Children, GOAL, and ADRA

"Rising economic stress cited in domestic violence increase" leaves out male DV victims liberty · 3 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The actions of a few criminals will shed a dark shadow across all men. Excerpt:

'The Westford man who shot his wife Monday, critically wounding her, before fatally shooting his daughter and himself is the second to allegedly kill a family member in this suburb in less than a month, and the fatal shootings are the latest in a rash of domestic killings in Massachusetts this year.

Since Jan. 9, at least five women have been killed in domestic violence. Two others were severely wounded in the total of six different incidents.

The violence has alarmed authorities and advocates for women, who point out that women's groups are reporting dramatic increases in domestic abuse in Massachusetts and across the country.

"I haven't seen this level of violence - and it's not just the homicides, it's the assaults and attempted murders - and I've been doing this for over 30 years." said Joanne Tulonen, director of the YWCA/Battered Women's Resources organization in Leominster, where a domestic dispute led to a knife attack on two women Sunday morning.'

Classroom gender de-segregation by any means - nice but a hollow victory

Matt · 3 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Stories like this one occasionally popping up are nice to see, but bear in mind the victory is hollow. The reasons are not because the people involved have come to realize that gender segregation is wrong and they are reversing their bad ideologies, but instead, they just want to save/make money. If they could get away with it, the all-female allocations for classroom space and learning resources would be increasing, not decreasing. Excerpt:

'The Aquinas Institute and the Nazareth Schools announced a partnership today to merge student bodies into one school system.

Beginning in September, pre-kindergarten through sixth-grade classes will be held at the Nazareth Academny campus on Lake Avenue. Classes for grades 7 through 12 will be at the Aquinas Institute campus on Dewey Avenue.

The move will combine the all-female Nazareth Academy with the co-educational Aquinas Institute.'

Teen-On-Teen Girl Fights Sweeping Internet (Boys fighting not a problem, apparently)

Matt · 3 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. (CBS) - Two teenage girls went at it. Two adults allegedly watched and another minor videotaped the whole thing in Louisiana. The fight popped up on YouTube more than a week ago. Days later, in Lowell, Mass., local authorities discovered similar videos online and said local educators report about 80 percent of school fights are now girl against girl.

Some experts believe the trend is partly fueled by the Internet.

CBS 2 HD met with members of the cyber safety group "Teenangels" at The Ursuline School in New Rochelle.

"People want attention from it. They want to be on the Internet. They want to be famous and they're willing to go to any cost to do that," said Teenangel Angelina.
...
Cyber experts said it's one of the most effective ways to slow down this dangerous trend.'

List of excuses (just a start), as everyone knows, "girls don't do that sort of thing":

1. The Internet - desire to be notorious (kind of like male boxers)
2. Boys are behind it in some way for some reason or reasons
3. Pressure on girls coming from "society" is too much for them to handle so they get together and beat each other up (huh?)
4. Parents are not doing enough for the girls and the girls are beating each other up as a result (huh?)

Answer:
They need help. They need more money for special programs and funding for girls-only types of education.

There, that's it.

Hey, why doesn't anyone think boys fighting on Youtube videos isn't a "dangerous trend"?

In Maine, It Doesn’t Pay to be a Man

Matt · 3 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Practically everyone in town knows Amy Dugas is a serial batterer. But the Maine criminal justice system keeps finding ways to keep her from facing the music.

In 2004 Amy assaulted her husband Mark in their home in Waldoboro. When the police officer came to arrest her, she kicked him in the groin. The judge released her on bail, ordering her to refrain from using weapons. Four months later she stabbed Mark with a foot-long kitchen knife, fatally severing his pulmonary artery. At the trial, she got away with the trusty I-feared-for-my-life alibi.

Two years later Dugas spent 125 days in jail following an attack on a male friend. In 2007 she was arrested again, this time for assaulting Brian Pelletier, her new husband of three weeks.

Each time, Amy Dugas was let off the hook with a chivalrous slap on the wrist, even though many were demanding she do hard time at the state pen.

...

Patrick Henry College professor Stephen Baskerville has recently issued a stunning indictment of our contemporary criminal justice system, lambasting it as a “Feminist Gulag.” Now in Maine, a man can be killed in cold blood without consequence to the perpetrator, prosecuted for rape with the flimsiest of evidence, or framed in a partner dispute on account of his sex.

And whatever happened to the equal protection clause of the U.S. Constitution?'

The silent victims: Battered husbands

Matt · 3 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW PERSPECTIVE: If there's anything I've learned in 10 years of advocacy for unserved victims of partner abuse, it's that men don't tell. Yes, the U.S. Dept. of Justice says there about 840,000 male victims of domestic violence each year. But those are just the ones who've reported it.

Not that the numbers really matter: What matters is that it's happening, and it's no joke.

There's a popular presumption that men should somehow be able to "control" the woman in their lives, and if they can't, then they deserve what they get. But the fact is that today a man who tries to defend himself is more likely than not to end up in jail.'

Announcing MensEnews newsletter

Matt · 3 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The following announcement is being forwarded by RADAR on behalf of MensEnews. If you'd like to subscribe, follow the instructions below.

Dear RADAR Supporter:

MensEnews: For perhaps the first time, topics and issues vital to men are in one place. http://www.mensenews.org/ strives to improve the health and well-being of men, boys and families.

Here are just some of the news topics featured in the MensEnews

Family Law newsletter:

- Child Custody
- Child Support
- Adoption
- Child Abuse & Neglect
- Domestic Violence
- Economics of Divorce

"Penis Gluer" Gets Probation

MichaelClaymore · 4 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Remember that woman who last year glued a man's penis to his belly because she wasn't the only one he was sleeping with? She's been convicted but given no jail time - not only that, but the Judge actually admitted it was a double standard then went on to blame the man! Excerpt:

'CHILTON, Wis. -- A Wisconsin woman who tied up a cheating lover and glued his penis to his stomach said Tuesday that she didn't mean to hurt him and only overreacted because he had tried to contact her 12-year-old daughter.

Therese A. Ziemann, 48, of Menasha, said she and three other women only meant to confront the married man about his cheating ways. Her decision to grab the bottle of nail glue from her makeup bag was "a stupid spur-of-the-minute decision," she said.

"I had just found my daughter's number in his cell phone," she said outside a Calumet County courtroom. "It was just a warning from me to him, to stay away from the kids."

Ziemann, her sister, another lover and the man's wife were all sentenced Tuesday to one year probation plus community service for their roles in the revenge plot. A judge also imposed and stayed jail sentences of 60 days for Ziemann and 30 days for the other three, meaning they would only serve the jail terms if they violate the conditions of their probation.'

The Daily Show makes fun of and insults men, Warren Farrell, and men's groups fibtastic · 4 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Jon Stewart seems to have a thing against men. He's in fine company, as you know, right there with the US gov't, the UN, and many others. One day I hope he will see the light and realize that his own sex is not so bad, or at least realize that when people talk about men, they are in fact talking about him, too. Video (dated 2/3/10) here.

Starting at 00:40 Dr. Warren Farrell is shown and roundly dismissed, openly snickered at, and with some video editing, insulted, and this, all throughout the video. (Apparently the interviewer, Samantha Bee, didn't have the courage to do it to his face). Watching the entire vid will be for most MRAs quite infuriating. Ms. Bee is openly contemptuous of the men who she is interviewing and in some places, both very crude and rude (at one point when she is in a men's circle, she asks them "when do you start to masturbate?")

I kind of feel sorry for Stewart and Bee. I don't think they realize just how many un-friends they have just made, nor realize how much in the way of bridges they have burned with this "little piece of humor". Brazenly insulting Dr. Farrell like that, editing out full comments to make them reflect partial thoughts, canning laughter over his statements, etc., all done in very bad taste to say the least. Making fun of men's groups too in that fashion also shows an unbelievable level of ignorance around what these groups do for men (and women, too), and also who is part of them.

Misandry and the Canadian media: Mother accused of murdering two sons, Canadian media tries to blame the father

Anonymous · 4 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

In recent days there has been a great deal of media coverage of the deaths of two little boys in Alberta. They appear to have been drowned by their mother who then attempted to kill herself, at least according to neighbours and the media outside of Canada. So far the RCMP and other sources have refused to comment on the investigation. The Canadian press has been flooded with stories about "domestic disputes" and "bitter custody battles" in an attempt to blame the man for this woman's alleged actions.

Women abusing, kidnapping and murdering children is nothing new, but for several days after the murders the Canadian media and RCMP have been careful never to mention the fact that the mother was accused of drowning the boys as part of a murder-suicide when a custody dispute wasn't going her way. If you wanted to learn those details, you had to visit a news outlet in Australia or the UK. If you have a moment, visit a news site and do a search for coverage of this story. Then compare the Canadian media's coverage with what's being said by media outlets elsewhere in the world.

Apple's iPad sales blamed on - lack of women on its board

Matt · 4 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Yes, indeed. Because of the name "iPad", the implication is that it is unappealing to women because the name sounds too much like "MaxiPad" or some other kind of similar type of pad. (I recall MAD TV running with the "iPad" idea back in 2006, noting as they did that a legal pad should not be confused with the other kind of pad. The video is here but I will say it is for adult viewing only; there are reasons MAD TV airs late at night on week-ends only. Also some of you will find it offensive regardless of your age, so don't say I didn't warn you.)

Believe it or not, one Susan Estrich has actually put the lackluster debut of the Apple iPad together with this very idea to implicate Apple's failure to come up with a product that appeals to the typical female consumer (or it seems to the typical male one too, according to reports). The solution she says is to get rid of some of those men on the Apple Board (she also notes they all seem to be white), and to replace them with people other than those fitting that genderal-ethnic description. THAT will guarantee the success of a company such as Apple, which as many of us know has been in business over 30 years and has been a leader in the bringing of computers to the home and workplace.

One bad product-marketing approach (and it wouldn't be the first time - both large personal computer/operating system vendors, Apple and Microsoft, have had real flops in their histories) and it means that a shakeup of the Board is necessary to make sure that success for Apple can be guaranteed - and the way this will happen is to relieve one or more members of the Board of their positions due to their ethnicity and sex and replace them with a person or people of another ethnicity and/or sex. (And you know what, I think it's too early to call the iPad a flop. If anything if it fails to sell it will be because the iPod is competing too well with it. Either way, Apple is making money.)

Yeah, that'll fix whatever problems they may have.

Some others have comments on Ms. Estrich's column as well, critical: here and supportive: here.

Women's Studies courses are political activism, not academic scholarship

Matt · 4 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an irate letter to the editor February 2, Penni Stewart, president of the Canadian Association of University Students, and Katherine Giroux-Bougard, national chairperson of the Canadian Federation of Students denounce the Post's Jan. 26 editorial expressing satisfaction with the demise of Womens's Studies programs. They are "shocked" at such an attitude, and set out to explain why Women's Studies are needed more than ever. But the letter actually vindicates the editorial, because almost every sentence in it confirms that Women's Studies are nothing more than political activism with a blackboard, not objective scholarship.

They begin with the curious statement that Women's Studies "are informed by the belief that men and women are equal," a straw statement of remarkable disingenuousness. Nobody at the Post or anywhere else considers this "a radical belief," and I, who have often publicly agreed with the Post's editorial stance, take exception to the implication that it is only Women's Studies that holds that value. All university programs, indeed our entire society believes in gender equality. Actually, our public, tax-funded institutions, our courts, our social service agencies and our charities believe in more than equality, they believe in special entitlements for women.'

Canadian police: Alberta boys victims of homicide

Matt · 4 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two Alberta boys found dead this week in their home were victims of homicide, police said.

RCMP confirmed Wednesday that Connor and Jayden McConnell, aged 2½ and 10 months, died in their home in Millet, Alta., about 40 kilometres south of Edmonton.

The bodies of the two boys were found by their father Monday afternoon.

Investigators are not releasing the cause of death. No charges have yet been laid in connection with the deaths.
...
Court documents show that Curtis and Allyson McConnell, who got married in Australia in January 2007, separated in November 2009 and began divorce proceedings in December.

According to the documents, Allyson McConnell, 31, wanted to take the children back to her native Australia, where her family lives and where she would be entitled to government support and have better prospects of generating more income than in Canada.

In her statement of defence and counterclaim, McConnell said the father would "continue to have reasonable and generous access" to the children.

Curtis McConnell did not want his children to leave Canada.

"I am completely opposed to this, and I am fearful that she will attempt to do this without my consent or knowledge," he stated in an affidavit filed in Edmonton Court of Queen's Bench on Dec. 11.'

Man exonerated of rape conviction after 33 years in jail

Matt · 4 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Score another one for The Innocence Project! Story here. Excerpt:

'ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — A mentally ill New York man who spent nearly six years behind bars for a 1976 rape he insisted he didn't commit was exonerated Thursday after DNA testing showed he was innocent.

The conviction of Freddie Peacock of Rochester, now 60, was based on a false confession police attributed to him just hours after the early morning rape of a 24-year-old woman who lived in the same apartment building.

State Judge David Egan vacated the conviction after lawyers for Peacock and Monroe County prosecutors agreed DNA evidence obtained from the victim's underwear and from Peacock in 2008 proved he wasn't the rapist.
...
Peter Neufeld, the Innocence Project's co-director, said that with Peacock's exoneration, "New York becomes the nation's capital of false confessions."

Since 2002, 10 people in New York have been exonerated through DNA testing after false confessions or admissions led to wrongful convictions. That accounts for one-third of all DNA exonerations nationwide since 2002, the group said.
...
"Freddie didn't just happen to get wrongly convicted," Neufeld said. "It doesn't work that way. There were two police officers that questioned him and attributed a statement to him, 'I did it' — a bare bones confession at best."

The statement wasn't written down, videotaped, audiotaped or "recorded in any way and he didn't sign anything," Neufeld said in calling for mandatory recording of all serious crime interrogations in New York.'

Take a look at the local story, which shows the man's picture. Is it me or are a lot of these exonerated men also black? Seems the fastest way to get found guilty of rape on the flimsiest of evidence, aside from being male, is being black. But there is one thing everyone summarily thrown into jail and presumed guilty of any given purported crime against a female have in common: they are all men.

When was the last time you heard of a Miss A tossed into jail because a Miss B accused her of, say, stealing something from her, or indeed, of a sexual assault? Never. Not once.

"Daily Show" contact page

Matt · 5 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Regarding the recent MANN post revealing Jon Stewart's latest salvo against his own sex: I forgot to include the comment submission link for it.

This piece of "comedy" is so insulting to men in general, MRAs, and men in mythopoetic circles, it's as if they decided to just take on everything pro-male all at once and make fun of and diminish it as much as possible within the short attention span of the typical viewer. I have a hard time thinking of any group that would be the target of such open tastelessness and crude meanness transmitted over cable TV in prime time to a wide viewing audience in this day and age.

I ask feminists this: If men as a class are as respected and damn-near worshiped as you insist we are, would a truly "patriarchal society" even be able to produce such a piece of "humor"? Can you imagine such "humor" being created about feminism or about women? Can you even suggest there is a "patriarchal society" in place that so favors men and so derides women given this sort of thing that you see?

Just what kind of energy and double-think do feminists need to use to keep up their self-delusions and to maintain the lies they tell themselves? Truly, it is mind-boggling.

US Targets Global Violence Against Women - Men noticably absent

Anonymous · 5 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Once again the media/govt male hate campaign rolls on. Shouldn't it be "violence against anybody"? Excerpt:

'US politicians have called for a $US175 million aid package to combat violence against women and girls in poorer countries such as Haiti and Afghanistan.

"Every day, too many women and girls across the globe endure horrific acts of violence," said Democratic Senator Barbara Boxer, who is backing a Bill that would make preventing violence against women central to US foreign policy.

"They are disfigured by acid, raped and beaten, or they are denied the opportunity to see a doctor."

Another supporter, Democratic Representative Bill Delahunt, said: "The nations with the worst track record in preventing violence against women are also the most unstable and are breeding grounds for terrorism."

The Bill, which enjoys cross-party support, calls for $US175 million ($A202 million) over five years to go towards developing programs to combat violence against women in as many as 20 low-income countries.'

Super Bowl Sunday, Domestic Violence & Your Health

anthony · 5 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's that time again… When Super Bowl Sunday dominates the U.S. headlines, and people plan their Sunday evenings around a get-together, party, or the game. It's also a good time to look at two stories related to Super Bowl Sunday.

The first is the largely debunked myth that domestic violence calls spike around Super Bowl Sunday and other drinking holidays of the year (like New Year's). Snopes originally tracked down the myth and showed it to be nothing more than another urban legend. Since their last update on the myth in 2005, however (and our article 4 years ago), there's been further research examining the myth.

A 2007 study by Oths & Robertson examined 2,387 crisis call records covering a previous 3-year period. They supplemented the call records with both formal and informal interviews with abused women and staff. What did they find?

> The widely held belief that more women seek shelter during "drinking holidays" such as New Year's and the Super Bowl was unsubstantiated, while the contention that women with school-aged children time their leaving to coincide with breaks in the academic schedule was supported.'

A different kind of health care reform is needed in America — how men treat themselves

Anonymous · 6 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I found it refreshing to find an article that approached the issue from multiple directions, not trying to lay the blame on any single issue. Excerpt:

'The reasons have physical, psychological, social and cultural roots. From birth, males are saddled with certain macho expectations which, combined with a misplaced sense of invincibility, ironically leaves them more vulnerable — they take big risks, are reluctant to ask for help, and won't easily admit pain or weakness.

While these factors continue to exact a heavy toll on men, women's health care has blossomed (admittedly from a low base), further widening the gender gap and sparking renewed efforts to correct a health system that is arguably under-serving half the population.'

NYTimes: Shortage of college men makes for female "victims"

Anonymous · 6 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not that anyone would find a misandrist slant surprising at the NYT, but now they're claiming that the absence of men on university campuses is really a bigger problem for women. Why? Because the poor women can't find dates. Or because “girls feel pressured to do more than they’re comfortable with". Remember that this is the same newspaper that recently ran a whole slew of sympathetic articles claiming that women are only 16% of the military (also men's fault, of course). Where is the sympathetic article about the under-enrollment of men in higher education?

The author is careful to toast "female achievement" and boast about eliminating "affirmative action for boys" while happily dismissing an entire generation of men - particularly black and Hispanic men - who will experience less-than-equal opportunity.

Australia: Couple caught having sex in public, only man charged

Anonymous · 8 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This story is another example of men being held responsible for not just their own behaviour but also that of women. SHE was on top of him, yet HE was the one that was the only one charged. HER name isn't mentioned, and I presume she wasn't charged. Unbelievable.

'A Darwin man has pleaded guilty to having sex at a petrol bowser and refusing to stop even when asked by police to do so.

The Darwin Magistrates Court has heard that 29-year-old Lionel Mark William Spratt was seen sitting with a woman in a ute parked at a bowser, near the front door of an Adelaide River petrol station last September.

The court heard the woman got out of the driver's seat and sat on his lap and he started to "passionately kiss her".

The court heard the woman was making "loud moaning noises" and moving her body in a way that indicated the pair were having sex.

Police were called and officers asked Spratt to stop what he was doing but he continued for several more minutes.

When asked why he behaved indecently in public, Spratt told police "no comment".
He will be sentenced on Wednesday.'

Glenn Sacks comment threads shut down badgerb · 8 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Here is the link. I believe the announcement of the ending of the comment threads on Glenn Sacks has huge ramifications and should be discussed here.

UK: "Men expect women to take all the decisions"

Broadsword · 8 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Why is there an expectation that the woman will make the majority of the choices - from the minor and flippant, such as what to wear, to the more major, such as where to live?

It is as if, on top of everything else, she has to become the chief decision-maker, the 'decider.'

Studies appear to confirm that women are increasingly the dominant decision-making force in relationships.
...
Jenny, a consultant urologist, sees things from a different perspective. 'I work in a very male-oriented environment. I watch men strut about the hospital. At work, they hold all the power. Some of them clearly revel in it - they actually get off on bossing junior people, often women, about. 'But when I see them with their wives, they are completely different people. They are like little boys. They do as they're told. They ask permission to have a drink. It's as if, for a lot of them, their wives are more like their mothers than their equals.
...
One male friend said it was watching his friends change from free- spirited, independent individuals to emasculated husbands that put him off marriage. 'I would say the vast majority of my male friends are subservient to their wives.

'They'd never admit this, of course. But it's blindingly obvious. They remind me of that cartoon in which a woman is grinning manically and gripping on to her husband, saying: "Our marriage has been so successful because we are open to each other's points of view, and we always think for ourselves - isn't that right, dear?"

'The husband is nodding frantically. It's an exaggeration, obviously, but it's not too far from what I see. I am afraid of ending up like that. Which is why I've decided to give marriage a body-swerve.'"

Men and the recent Super Bowl ads insdel2005 · 8 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I guess I wasn't the only one to notice the anti-male bias while watching the big game. Good news: the media is finally starting to report on all of the male bashing in advertising. Bad news: No one seems to think it's a problem. Straight from Yahoo's front page:

Some of the best [sic] ads skewered the male ego, with help from a tough tyke and Betty White. Watch the ads for yourself

If you're looking for the male bashing ads the main tag line is referring to, then just scroll down to the ads titled: 'Dove, Dodge, and FloTV. I don't really have a problem with Dove's advertisement. It's Dodge's and FloTV's ads that are taking a stab at men.

NOW claims DV is the ‘real issue’ with Tebow’s Super Bowl ad

anthony · 9 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. F&F covers this issue here as well. Excerpt:

'The National Organization for Women (NOW) just can’t seem to get enough of Pam and Tim Tebow. After several weeks of sweating over the likelihood of a “pro-life, anti-abortion” ad featuring the Tebows and sponsored by Focus on the Family, the president of NOW, Terry O’Neill, is claiming that the Super Bowl ad promotes domestic violence.

In the ad, Pam Tebow begins talking about the uncertainty of little Timmy’s entry into the world. Suddenly, she’s tackled by the Heisman Trophy winner and thrown off-screen. She immediately bounces back up and scolds her son, saying, “Timmy! I’m trying to tell our story here!”

So while the ad was meant to discourage women from having abortions, O’Neill – according to the Los Angeles Times – saw a much more dangerous message being promoted:

> NOW president Terry O’Neill said it glorified violence against women. “I am blown away at the celebration of the violence against women in it,” she said. “That’s what comes across to me even more strongly than the anti-abortion message. I myself am a survivor of domestic violence, and I don’t find it charming. I think CBS should be ashamed of itself.”'

Woman leaves children unattended- fire results in death, gets lesser guilty verdict, faces only 1-4 years

Matt · 9 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Nicole C. Allen wept tears of joy Monday night when she was convicted of a lesser homicide charge for causing severe burns to her three children — one of whom later died — by leaving them alone so she could buy beer.

She mouthed the words "Thank you" to a state Supreme Court jury of seven men and five women when they found her guilty of a low-level felony of criminally negligent homicide after acquitting her of a more-serious felony of second-degree manslaughter.

Allen, 22, stood and wept on the shoulder of her lawyer, Dianne C. Russell, as the verdict was announced after jurors deliberated more than 5 ½ hours.

The jury also convicted Allen of three misdemeanor counts of endangering the welfare of a child.

She faces a penalty ranging from probation to a prison term of up to 1 1/3 to four years when Justice Francis A. Affronti sentences her Feb. 23.

Had she been convicted of manslaughter, she could have received a prison term of up to five to 15 years.'

Denmark: Mothers-only school meeting attracts outrage

anthony · 9 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Politicians up in arms over school's anti-bullying meeting that is aimed only at mothers of pupils

The decision taken by a Copenhagen school to ban fathers from a parental meeting out of respect for Muslim mothers has drawn deep divides between politicians and school leaders.

Holberg School in the city's Bispebjerg district has scheduled a meeting for parents about the school's anti-bullying policy this evening. But the meeting at the multi-cultural school is mothers only, and neither Danish nor immigrant fathers of pupils have been welcomed to attend.

The invitation from the school invites mothers to attend a 'debate about bullying that includes mother talk, yummy food, coffee and cake'. They are also invited to bring their young children with them if needed, as babysitting will be provided.

School principal Søren Ellesøe told Berlingske Tidende newspaper that the school took the decision in order to reach out to a group of parents who usually don't attend parent teacher meetings.

'We have immigrant women parents in particular whose husbands believe that women should not take part in something if other men are present,' he said.

A questionnaire on the school's website undertaken by older students showed that a quarter of the school pupils come from a non-Danish ethnic background.

Chairman of the Danish Teachers' Union, Anders Bondo Christensen, is backing the decision taken by the principal.'

UK: Can love survive when a woman earns more than a man?

Broadsword · 10 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Recent figures from a large-scale government study show the number of 'breadwinner wives' - women in partnerships who earn more than their men - has soared to 19 per cent, with another 25 per cent earning the same amount as their menfolk.

...

Nikki Owen, 49, typifies this new breed of high-earning women.

A director of her own international personal development company, she comes from a well-off professional background and was brought up to believe there were no limits to what she could achieve.

Nikki first began dating her fiance Mark, 50, a customer services manager, when they were both in their teens.

But, she says, 'he dumped me because he was intimidated by my ambition'. Four years ago, both single again, they were reintroduced through friends.

In the intervening years, Nikki fast-tracked her way up the career ladder, ending up as head of her own firm 'with a huge house in Sevenoaks, a flash convertible Audi and a wardrobe full of designer labels'.

She now earns as much as five times what Mark does, with the potential to increase that even more over the coming years.

'When I recently landed a £60,000 contract, Mark's initial reaction was: "You've just earned in a month what I earn in a year!"' she says.

Marks says: 'I have to admit that if we hadn't already fallen in love and been very close after we met again, I would probably have struggled with the relationship because of her earning power.'

...

We should celebrate our achievements as women, which have been so enormous and rapid that they amount to a revolution.

But it's a very incomplete revolution - and it's time the rest of our lives caught up with our achievements at work.

If the past 40 years have been all about women entering the workforce and boosting the economy, the next 40 will be spent dealing with the social, personal and family consequences.

And that may be the hardest part of all."

UK: Study kills '1 in 10' myth of cuckolded fathers

Broadsword · 10 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Here:

'It is one of the world's most persistent myths: that one in 10 children are illegitimate without their legal fathers knowing that they have been cuckolded. Now scientists believe they have arrived at the real figure. One in 25.

Scientists analysed the Y chromosomes of 1,600 unrelated men with 40 surnames to test the idea that there could be a link between the Y chromosome and surnames, which are both passed on to boys down the male line.

For certain, uncommon surnames there was a clear association between the unique genetic markers carried on the Y chromosome with the surname, suggesting that many of the men sharing the same surname had a common male ancestor many centuries ago.

This also enabled the scientists to estimate the probability of illegitimacy among the men carrying the same surname and found that it came out at between 1 and 4 per cent.

"People often quote a figure of one in 10 for the number of people born illegitimately. Our study shows that this is likely to be an exaggeration. The real figure is more likely to be less than one in 25," said Professor Mark Jobling of Leicester University, who carried out the study with colleague Turi King.'

Mother Gets Jail Time Over Son's Last Name

Anonymous · 10 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CN) - A mother must spend 10 days in jail for allowing her son to use his stepfather's last name in his baseball league, the Alabama Court of Appeals ruled.

As part of her divorce decree, Lisa Preston was required to have her son use the last name of her former husband, Matthew Saab, when playing sports.
...
The mother admitted that she had allowed her son to choose which last name to use. He had his first name on the back of his jersey.

The trial court found the mother guilty of five counts of criminal contempt and sentenced her to five days in jail for each count. The Alabama Court of Appeals affirmed on two counts, but reversed on the others. Preston must spend 10 days in jail -- five days each for the incorrect name on the registration and on the baseball roster, the court ruled.
...
The original sentence was 25 days, but the judges reversed the ruling on the mother's contempt charges for the clothing tags, the magazine subscription, and for allegedly not allowing sufficient telephone contact with the father.'

RADAR ALERT: Psychology Today Praises Murder of David Harris

Matt · 10 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Fathers & Families has written an excellent protest letter to Psychology Today.

RADAR asks that you add your signature to the letter and send it to Psychology Today. Please click here and fill out the form.

Thank you.

++
Date of RADAR Release: February 10, 2010

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://mediaradar.org/

Phyllis Schlafly: "Obama Panders to the Feminists"

Matt · 10 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Obama presented his multitrillion dollar budget, he declared with great fanfare that he was calling for a freeze in discretionary spending. Feminists immediately had a tantrum to complain that the freeze exempted funding for the military, intelligence and homeland security.

Now we learn that all feminist programs and organizations will also be exempted from the freeze. Instead, they will get what White House spokesman Kate Bedingfield admits are "significant funding increases."

A White House document titled "Opportunity and Progress for Women and Girls" describes 15 federal programs that will receive increased funding to appease the feminists. Chief among them is the Violence Against Women project, which is targeted for a 22 percent increase, an extra $117 million more than current funding, which is already close to $1 billion a year.
...
Obama hasn't yet gone as far as Norway, which passed a law requiring that women must comprise 40 percent of all companies' corporate boards. U.S. feminists probably would like that rule — they pretend to see no hypocrisy in touting gender-neutrality while demanding affirmative action for females.

Rush Limbaugh got it right when he commented on Obama's State of the Union speech as "from the 1970s ... totally cliched." Half of American women are in the workforce today, while male unemployment is setting new records.'

Abusegate: Abusegate campaign launches web site

Matt · 10 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Ed: In our ongoing effort to expose the fraudulent and discriminatory practices of the domestic violence industry, our Abusegate campaign now has its own webpage on the website of Men's News Daily.

To visit the Abusegate page, go to http://mensnewsdaily.com/ and then click on the picture of the little boy covering his face with his hands (this image highlights how the DV industry exploits children by separating them from their fathers). Or you can link directly to the Abusegate page: http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/.

To leverage the visibility of this international awareness campaign, we invite you to post the words "Abusegate, Investigate!" on your website, and provide a link to http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/.

2010 is the year that we put VAWA's Pandora back in her box.

UK: Woman poisons couple with lethal substance yet is cleared of attempted murder in second instance

MichaelClaymore · 11 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A British woman has been convicted of killing her lover by lacing his curry with the 'Queen of Poisons'.
...
Ms Singh poisoned a leftover curry in the fridge of her lover's home in west London with aconite, known as the Queen of Poisons. It hasn't been used in England since 1882. The mother of three had sneaked into the couple's home to spike the food.

Mr Singh died hours after eating the curry, while his 21-year-old fiance, Gurjeet Choongh, fell violently ill but survived.

The couple ate the meal while they discussed their upcoming wedding, due to take place on Valentine's Day last year.
...
Singh was also found guilty of causing Miss Choongh grievous bodily harm with intent but was cleared of attempted murder.'

The Female Condom: Effective, Underused

anthony · 11 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The FC Female Condom - effective in preventing STIs and pregnancy - was approved by the FDA in 1993. The first version consisted of a soft but strong polyurethane sheath about the same length as a male condom but with flexible rings at each end. One ring was at the closed end of the sheath and was used for insertion and to help anchor the condom in place. The other end remained outside the vagina and partially covered the external genitalia (vulva). That version didn't catch on in the U.S. - partly because it was more expensive (up to $15 for a 3-pack) and noisier than the male condom. A representative of the company told me today that a newer, less expensive version, the FC2, ($6.40 for a 3-pack retail, 82 cents a condom for the public sector) was approved in March, 2009. Right now, it is only available commercially in the U.S. at CVS stores in Washington, D.C. but it is being increasingly distributed in the public sector (e.g., clinics, health departments, NGOs). The company's main distribution is in developing countries via organizations like UNAIDS and UNFPA. PATH - the organization I visited in Seattle - has created its own version of the female condom and is introducing the product into low-resource settings.

Worldwide use of the female condom has slowly increased since 2005, when only 14 million were available. That year, the United National Population Fund (UNFPA) launched the Global Female Condom Initiative and by 2008 female condom distribution reached 35 million in 93 countries - still only a fraction of the more than 10 billion male condoms distributed worldwide every year.
...
Marketing geniuses routinely sell us all sorts of things we don't need. Here's a product the world desperately needs. Does anybody out there have any suggestions about how we can solve the barrier to entry of this highly effective barrier to entry?'

Single mom discharged, Army says

anthony · 12 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A single mother who chose taking care of her infant over deploying to Afghanistan has been discharged, the Army said in a statement.

When her unit deployed to Afghanistan in November, Alexis Hutchinson was missing from the plane. Her lawyer said she refused to go because there was no one to take care of her then 10-month-old son, Kamani, and she feared he would be placed in foster care.

But the Army contended that the young mother and now former Army specialist had plenty of time to sort out family issues and said she could face court-martial.

The issue was resolved this week, the Army said in a statement Thursday from Fort Stewart in Georgia, where Hutchinson was training.

"The soldier will not be tried by court-martial and therefore is not at risk of receiving a federal conviction," the statement said. "She is, however, reduced to the lowest enlisted rank, private, and subject to losing other military benefits from the Army and the Department of Veterans Affairs to which soldiers who serve honorably are entitled."'

Girl, 6, Handcuffed, Committed Because Of Classroom Behavior

Matt · 12 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. When I was 6, I used to throw tantrums, too. And even though the principal's office scared the hell out of me, even if I had thrown a tantrum there, it wouldn't have been grounds for arrest by a police officer. What normally happened was I was taken (by force if necessary, such as picking me up) and removed from wherever I was and placed in my room. If I had done this at school my folks would be called and I'd be kept in a room until they arrived to take me home, which thankfully, never happened.

I see this story is yet further proof that parents in general are continuing to lose both legal and practical control of their kids.

As for men's (and boys') rights, well, stories like this are much more likely to elicit sympathy for the child given that she is a girl. As in other cases of excessive restraint use against children, I would say she is a victim of state abuse of police power as well.

Nonetheless, I remain aware of how permissive the use of all manner of punishments against boys are that are never even thought to be applied to girls behaving the same way. In this particular instance, this girl was treated as a boy would be. And in both cases, everyone should be outraged. Excerpt:

'PORT ST. LUCIE, Fla. -- A Port St. Lucie first-grade student was handcuffed and committed to a mental health facility because of her classroom behavior, and her parents are furious that the school took such extreme measures.

Mickey Shalansky explained Wednesday what he said happened to his 6-year-old daughter at Parkway Elementary.

"She couldn't put her in two handcuffs because her wrists are that small, so she put them both in the same handcuff and left marks on my daughter's arms," Shalansky told WPBF 25 News' Bob Kaple.

But a St. Lucie County Sheriff's Office report paints a much different picture.

Deputies said his daughter, Haley, got upset and stormed out her classroom when her teacher asked her to do something. The report said it then escalated into a temper tantrum in the principal's office.

According to the incident report, a deputy said Haley was out of control. It said she "kicked the wall, went over to the desk and threw the calculator, electric pencil sharpener, telephone, container of writing utensils and other objects across the desk."

She was then handcuffed.

"I don't think it should have had to come to this -- you know, to put a little girl, 6 years old, 37 pounds in handcuffs and take her away in a police car," Shalansky said.'

Wonders never ceasing: Oprah looking for people sexually abused by women for her show

Matt · 12 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Solicitation for guests here.

"When you were a child, were you sexually abused by an adult female? The Oprah Show is looking for adults who are willing to discuss the sexual abuse they suffered at the hands of a mother, aunt, family friend or other female in your life. How did the sexual abuse start and how long did it last? When did you finally start discussing the abuse? Do you think you were "groomed" by your abuser? Are you finally willing to discuss the traumatic events of your childhood and how they affected the rest of your life? Please provide as many details as possible. Respond only if you are willing to discuss this sensitive subject on nation television."

Abusegate: Next Week it's OUR Turn!

Matt · 12 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader, Ed:

Over the last umpteen years, the VAWA Mafia has stage-managed the public discourse on domestic violence, in the process disseminating an untold number of half-truths, misrepresentations, and lies.

Just consider all the publicity that NOW president Terry O'Neil garnered the last few days over her single remark on the Tim Tebow Super Bowl ad: "I am blown away at the celebration of the violence against women in it."

So next week, it's OUR turn to speak out!

To move the Abusegate, Investigate! campaign into the public eye, we'll be doing press releases, radio interviews, a phone-a-thon, and more. We want the public to understand the extent to which federal laws have been ignored, Constitutional protections trampled upon, and families upended.

Say it loud, say it proud: "Abusegate, Investigate!"

In the meantime, we invite you to bone up on the issue by checking out 50 Domestic Violence Myths (.pdf file).

For more information, visit: http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/.

Globe & Mail's Margaret Wente: Cheating husbands fit for whacking

Matt · 12 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If a woman cheats, no matter what, she should never be assaulted over it, never ever, not even if she is brazen in it -- and that is a good thing; a man being so abused should just leave her without violence. (I am told that in China, men whose wives cheat on them are talked of; they are said to wear a "red hat", and people laugh at them. If anyone can say where this "red hat" image comes from, please post. And we can find many similar cultural values all over the world wherein men are "blamed" for a wife's infidelities, or in most cases, made fun of over it.)

But should a man be unfaithful though, well, he is fit for a good whacking. The offending sentence is at the end of the article, so I state it here: "I desperately hope that one of these days some humiliated spouse will whack the guy with a frying pan. I'd give good money to see that."

G&M contact info: http://v1.theglobeandmail.com/help/contact-paper/
Letters to the Editor: letters-at-globeandmail.com
Based on the "Other Newspaper Staff" heading text, I am also guessing the author's email at the paper is mwente-at-globeandmail.com

Excerpt:

'Toronto city politics are hardly scintillating at the best of times. So we owe a vote of thanks to Adam Giambrone, the brash young mayoral candidate who turned out to be too hot for politics. His was a textbook case of self-immolation. First, he doused himself with gasoline, and then he lit the match. By Wednesday, nothing was left but a greasy smudge on the floor of the council chamber.
...

Did Eliot Spitzer really think his encounters with expensive hookers (after a career of busting prostitution rings) would go forever undetected? Did John Edwards really figure he could keep his flaky girlfriend and their love child a secret while running for the most public job in the world? Did Mr. Giambrone never fret that Ms. Lucas (an aspiring actress, we are told) might get the least bit miffed when he broke the news to her (by text) that he was not living with his family (the excuse he gave for his failure to invite her home), but with another woman? Or that she might enjoy having her assets splashed all over Page 1?

My guess is that such men don't think about these things at all. They are such extreme narcissists (a helpful trait in politics) that no one is ever quite as real to them as they are to themselves. That includes their wives, their children and all the people who have busted their tails on their behalf.
...
Mr. Giambrone, who looked genuinely shattered at his press conference Wednesday, is even attracting a bit of sympathy (though not from me) and his long-suffering girlfriend is standing by him. I desperately hope that one of these days some humiliated spouse will whack the guy with a frying pan. I'd give good money to see that.'

NY Daily News touts "Deadbeat Dad" disparagement

Matt · 12 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Michael Lohan is a deadbeat dad.

"It's almost been a year without child support," Dina Lohan said after a closed door meeting with her ex-husband in Nassau County Family Court on Tuesday.

The parents of troubled starlet Lindsey Lohan have been squabbling over court-ordered child support payments.

It's unclear how much Michael Lohan owes, but TMZ.com reported it was more than $15,000.

"I just want him to do the right thing. I just want him to take care of his kids," Dina Lohan said after the meeting. "This isn't about us. It's about his children."'

So the Lohans (ie, Lindsay and her mother) can't get by without $15k over a year's time in addition to whatever it is they are taking in by being famous?

But we know know this isn't about the money. It's about finding ways to humiliate some guy who is undoubtedly getting dragged though the ringer in the post-divorce-go-to-court-over-everything phase. And we have the NY Daily News to thank for keeping a certain tradition of dad-bashing going, too.

Anyone ever seen a headline that reads "<Name>: Deadbeat mom <name> hasn't paid child support in nearly a year"? This is so possibly because so few women do not get custody of the kids and thus so few are required even to pay child support.

Deadbeat, indeed.

Divorced parents turning to laptops for virtual visits

Matt · 12 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpts:

'CHICAGO — Greg Baddick helped his 9-year-old daughter learn the state capitals of the Midwest.

Later, when he asked Isabella how her test went, she said she got an A-plus — although she almost forgot the answer for Nebraska.

Baddick congratulated her by Internet video link, the same way he helped her study. "I'm proud of you."

Because Baddick, a senior manager for a pharmaceutical company, is divorced from Isabella's mother, he helped his daughter study using their laptop computers and the Internet. The virtual visits are a weekly date, in addition to the in-person weekly visits and twice-monthly weekend stays. Isabella lives in Elgin, Ill.; Baddick in Chicago.

"It's been, honestly, a godsend," Baddick, 39, said. "I feel like I'm there. I don't feel like I'm missing anything."

Language added to an Illinois law this month includes virtual visitation among the rights of noncustodial parents, making it enforceable by a judge. According to the measure, parents are entitled to electronic visits unless the court believes contact would harm the child.
...
But then the father and daughter adjusted, and in recent years, they discovered virtual visitation. In the Baddicks' case, the visits aren't part of an official custody agreement, but rather worked out informally between Isabella's parents.'

Dads-at-a-distance: the farther, the better, it seems. "Contact" with dad is fine (for some) provided it is only via electrons running over metal wires.

Three killed in U. of Alabama shooting; star female professor in custody

Scottie · 13 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. It seems a female professor decided to go Rambo after being denied tenure*. Read the story quickly because I'm sure it will be shuffled to the back page in a matter of minutes. At least on CBC, the story is short, vague and understated. Excerpt:

'Three people were killed and several more injured in a shooting Friday in a science building at the University of Alabama's Huntsville campus, university officials said.

A woman was in custody, but university spokesman Ray Garner said he could not identify her or the victims. Local television stations reported she is a faculty member.

Trent Willis, chief of staff for Huntsville Mayor Tommy Battle, said several other people had been shot in addition to the four Garner reported, but he did not have an exact number or their conditions.'

---
*Ed. note: I don't see that mentioned in the article. Possibly Scottie knows this from another source, but the article itself does not contain that as a fact.

Update (2/13/10 2:35 PM US-EST): CNN story page here. More comprehensive, mentioning tenure. But I notice that CNN, like other sites, also no longer has this piece as a main-page news article, opting instead to run a story about some lost letters of Princess Di (I preserve it here). Came and went fast, didn't it?

Race & Gender of Judges Make Enormous Differences in Rulings, Studies Find

Matt · 13 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A judge's race or gender makes for a dramatic difference in the outcome of cases they hear—at least for cases in which race and gender allegedly play a role in the conduct of the parties, according to two recent studies.

The results were the focus of a program about "Diversity on the Bench: Is the 'Wise Latina' a Myth?," sponsored by the ABA Judicial Division at the ABA Midyear Meeting in Orlando on Saturday afternoon.

In federal racial harassment cases, one study (PDF) found that plaintiffs lost just 54 percent of the time when the judge handling the case was an African-American. Yet plaintiffs lost 81 percent of the time when the judge was Hispanic, 79 percent when the judge was white, and 67 percent of the time when the judge was Asian American.
...
A second study (PDF), looked at 556 federal appellate cases involving allegations of sexual harassment or sex discrimination in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The finding: plaintiffs were at least twice as likely to win if a female judge was on the appellate panel.
...
The program took its title from a much-debated comment made years ago by U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sonia Sotomayor : "I would hope that a wise Latina woman with the richness of her experiences would more often than not reach a better conclusion than a white male who hasn't lived that life."

The participants never answered the question of whether a Latina judge reaches better conclusions, but at least in some cases, it appears likely that she would reach a different conclusion from a white male jurist hearing the same evidence.'

"Men's Rights" Wikipedia page fleshed out nicely

Matt · 13 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

In case you haven't seen it recently:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Men%27s_rights

(URL, text only: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Men%27s_rights)

Very nice. Thanks to the author(s) thereof.

Oh yeah, that "%27" in the URL is the single apostrophe in the topic name. Without that kind of encoding, some older-version browsers won't load the page correctly. The later-version ones can handle apostrophes in the URL, so you can also try:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Men's_rights

(URL, text only: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Men's_rights)

U of Alabama shooter is the same "Amy Bishop" from 1986 news headlines

Matt · 13 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I knew I had heard that name before! Turns out she is the exact same "Amy Bishop" who shot and killed her brother back in 1986 - yet the death was deemed an accident. Read it here. And get this: The file on that case is missing! Excerpt:

'Bishop is the University of Alabama, Huntsville professor accused of killing three of her colleagues and wounding three others on Friday.

Braintree Police Chief Paul Frazier said the file of the 1986 shooting which the police closed as an accidental gun discharge, is missing.

He added that from what could be pieced together, the police chief in 1986 ordered Bishop released even before her arrest was formalized.
...
Bishop killed her brother with a shotgun blast in 1986 in Braintree, Mass. in what she said at the time was an accident, according to the Boston Globe and other news outlets.'

Stay tuned - skeletons are going to pop out of closets and people who thought they were safe from scrutiny over the 1986 case will now be scrambling to explain the whos and whys.

Fatherless Day, Los Angeles, 2009

MR · 14 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Technical problems, etc. withheld release of this Fatherless Day, Los Angeles, 2009 video, until now.

Fathers4Justice, L.A. (F4JLA), and the National Coalition for Men, Los Angeles (NCFMLA) staged this protest last summer.

This is the downtown Los Angeles courthouse, where a number of Hollywood celebrities have had their divorces and child custody/support cases heard over the years.

Murder, Gender and Punishment

el cid · 14 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Traci Housman appears to be likely to get a light sentence or even just probation for the killing of her husband, John. What I found interesting in this article are these comments by her defense attorney, who basically admits the bias in the system. Excerpt:

'Traci Housman originally was charged with second-degree murder in the stabbing death of John Housman, and a conviction could have sent her to prison for between 10 to 32 years in prison. Criminally negligent homicide, which is a lesser offense that comes with a sentencing range between one and three years in prison, requires that a person failed to perceive the risk of their actions.

Housman's public defender Matthew Connell said he plans to ask for a probation sentence because Housman was "defending herself."
...
According to police, Housman stabbed her husband once in the chest with a kitchen knife during an altercation in their 2994 23rd St. home early on Aug. 2. Housman told investigators that they had been drinking on the Pearl Street Mall earlier in the night and ended up at a nearby sushi restaurant, where John Housman started telling people, "I'm gay," according to a police report.
...

Denver defense attorney Scott Robinson said that more often than not a person who commits a criminal act that causes someone else to die ends up in prison. However, he said, because this is a domestic violence case and because Housman has been in the Boulder County Jail since August, she could have a shot at a probation sentence.

Traci Housman told detectives that her husband had told her years ago that he was bisexual, and she had no problem with it. But, according to police, she told him that night "that it was disrespectful for him to announce this to everyone since they were married."
...
"The fact that there was a single blow certainly supports this being self-defense," Robinson said, adding that women in cases like this statistically receive less severe sentences than men. "Gender issues certainly play a part in the sentencing of domestic violence cases."'

Wife of Murdered Olympic Medalist Arrested (for murdering her husband)

anthony · 14 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'OXNARD, Calif. — The wife of an Olympic shot put medalist gunned down in his Southern California back yard last summer was arrested Saturday in the homicide case, authorities said.

Jane Laut, 52, was detained during a traffic stop Saturday morning on a warrant issued earlier in the week, Oxnard police said in a written statement.

Her husband David Laut, who won a bronze medal in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles, was shot several times in the head on the night of Aug. 28 in their yard in Oxnard, a coastal city 60 miles northwest of Los Angeles. He was declared dead at the scene.

Jane Laut's attorney called it a "self-defense case," apparently contradicting police reports of her statements at the time of the killing.

Jane Laut had told investigators immediately after the shooting that he went to the backyard to check out suspicious sounds, and she heard shots fired, police said. Police initially said Laut may have been killed by prowlers, but a few days later said the killing was not random.

She was being held on $3 million bail in Ventura County Jail.'

Alleged University Shooter Was Suspect in Harvard Professor Bomb Attempt

anthony · 15 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Alabama professor accused of shooting six colleagues was a suspect in the attempted mail bombing of a Harvard Medical School professor in December of 1993, the Boston Globe reported.

Amy Bishop and her husband James Anderson were questioned by authorities after a package with two bombs were sent to Dr. Paul Rosenberg, the newspaper reported.

When Rosenberg saw the long, thin package had wires and a cylinder inside, he and his wife called police and ran from their Newton, Mass. home Dec. 19, 1993, the Globe reported.

Two 6-inch pipe bombs connected to two nine-volt batteries were found in the package.

The new information comes a day after information surfaced that Bishop killed her brother. The 1986 shooting was ruled accidental and no charges were filed against her.'

1986 Mass. State Police investigative review report on fratricide by Amy Bishop surfaces

Matt · 15 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Fox shows it here. I have some questions about this report and I put them in the first comment of the story. Excerpt:

'To: First Assistant District Attorney John P. Kivlan
From: Trooper Brian L. Howe #1332 BLH
Subject: Accidental Shooting of Seth Bishop, White Male,
D.O.B. 4/9/68 At 46 Hollis Avenue, Braintree, Massachusetts on December 6, 1986.
Case: # 86-112-0910-0185

On December 6, 1986, this officer was directed by Detective Lieutenant James Sharkey to conduct an investigation into the fatal shooting of Seth Bishop at his residence of 46 Hollis Avenue in the Town of Braintree.

This officer contacted Captain Theodore Buker of the Braintree Police Department and was informed by Captain Buker that at approximately 1422 hours on December 6, 1986, the Braintree Police Department had responded to the report of a shooting a 46 Hollis Avenue in their town.

Upon arriving at the location, Officers Jordan and Murphy had observed the decedent lying on his back on the floor in a pool of blood in the kitchen area, with a large chest wound.
...
Captain Buker stated that preliminary investigation conducted by Officers Jordan and Murphy indicated that the victim had been shot by his sister, Amy Bishop (age 19), and that apparent cause of the gunshot discharge into the victim had been accidental in nature. Captain Buker further stated that indications were that Amy Bishop had been attempting to manipulate the shotgun and had subsequently brought the gun downstairs in an attempt to gain assistance from her mother in disarming the weapon.'

A father's search for the truth

ItsDan · 15 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Amazing story of a father who spent months trying to find his child after it's mother abandoned the newborn in a church in another country. Excerpt:

"Across an ocean, 28-year-old Brandon Henry was on a quest for answers of his own. He no longer believed his girlfriend's story that their baby died at birth last summer at a Sugar Land hospital.
...
That's when Stephanie Chavarria confessed to leaving the child in Florence while vacationing with her parents, police said. “She told me she gave birth in the hotel bathroom,” Henry said. “Then, not knowing what else to do, she'd gone into a church to pray. She wanted help but nobody spoke English. So she just left him there.
...
After a DNA analysis proved Henry was indeed the father, he was finally permitted to see his son, who was 3 months old by then.
...
Henry remains grateful for every kiss — and the nuns' prayers that he credits for helping to get his son home."

Another Time When Amy Bishop Should Have Been Charged

redwoodwriter · 16 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It now surfaces that Amy Bishop pulled a shotgun on a Tom Petttigrew some 20+ years ago. She threatened him and his friend with the gun, and was later surrounded by and arrested by the police. Again she was given the pass, and no charges were pressed. How many times do we give women "the pass"? It turns out that the criminal justice system gave this woman the pass again and again. And now three are dead at the University of Alabama, and two more critically wounded and in the hospital. Is this what comes from letting women get away with things, not holding them responsible for their actions, not treating them as adults? This is, after all, what modern feminism is advocating, that women have all the power to do things like this, but none of the responsibilities that go along with being an adult. Note that this story also indicates that the shooting of her brother was probably intentional, because she is, in this story, looking for a get-away car.

From the story:

"Shortly after fatally shooting her brother in 1986, Amy Bishop held two men at gunpoint and demanded a getaway car at an auto repair shop near her family's Braintree home, according to one of the men involved.

Carrying a shotgun by her side, a 21-year-old Bishop walked intently across a car lot into the adjacent storefront, where she began searching for car keys. Coming down from the second floor, she was heading toward the garage when she ran into Tom Pettigrew and a friend, who had spotted her in the parking lot and came to investigate.

Her gun hit me in the chest," Pettigrew, 45, recalled from his Quincy apartment. "I yelled, 'What are you doing?' and she screamed at me to put my hands up. So I put my hands up."

On Friday, Bishop, a biology professor at the University of Alabama, allegedly opened fire at a faculty meeting, killing three colleagues and wounding three others. Investigators soon discovered that Bishop had killed her younger brother in 1986 with a shotgun, a shooting that was ruled accidental."

F&F Campaign: Ask DSM to Include Parental Alienation in Upcoming Edition

Matt · 16 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Round 2–We've Made Progress, but Need Your Participation Again
(Update, 2/16/10)

Fathers & Families wants to ensure that the DSM-5 Task Force is aware of the scope and severity of Parental Alienation. To this end, in December we asked our supporters to write the Task Force to urge them to consider including Parental Alienation Disorder in DSM-5. As usual, your response was overwhelming. It also helped lead to progress–while as expected the newly-released draft version does not specifically include Parental Alienation Disorder, the DSM-5 Task Force has now listed Parental Alienation Disorder among the "Conditions Proposed by Outside Sources... that are still under consideration by the work groups."

The Task Force says it "welcome[s] your comments on whether available evidence indicates that the following [disorders] should be included in DSM-5." Fathers & Families is asking its supporters to write to the Task Force and again emphasize that Parental Alienation Disorder is a large-scale problem–to do so, please click here.

Accused Alabama Shooter Fought With Neighbors, Told Family She Was Stalked

anthony · 17 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Accused Alabama shooter Amy Bishop screamed and cursed at children, instigating confrontations with their parents, according to former neighbors who painted a frightening portrait of an woman accused of a killing rampage.

Former Massachusetts neighbors described the brilliant scientist as a woman who 15 years ago had "face-to-face, nose-to-nose confrontations" over evening basketball games, skateboarders and even whether an ice cream truck would be allowed on the child-friendly street.
...
Schizophrenia can be marked by social isolation, odd behavior, "strange disordered" thinking and speaking, poor hygiene and lack of friends, according to Galynker.

Often people don't notice signs until more serious symptoms emerge.

"Brilliant scientists are supposed to be crazy," he told ABCNews.com.
...
Ochberg, who is an expert in psychopathic predators and mass shootings, said female shooters are rare, but he admits, "mothers have done tragic things. They have killed their kids."

"In general being a woman and a mother makes you more in tune with your feelings, more nurturing and sympathetic," said Ochberg. "I believe men are from Mars and women are from Venus, but some women are from Mars."'

Sorority Hazing Increasingly Violent, Disturbing

anthony · 17 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Joanne said she had to stand silently with her nose touching a cold, dirty wall while her potential sorority sisters screamed that she wasn't worth their time. If the pledges moved at all, Joanne said, one of the four Penn State Altoona sorority members would shove their heads into the concrete bricks until they had lumps or bruises.

Even now, Joanne said, a year later, she still gets harassed by her former sorority sisters, which is why she asked that her real name not be used. When she first decided to pledge as freshman, and eventually join, a sorority at Penn State-Altoona, Joanne had hoped for the comfortable camaraderie of a close-knit group of friends; not "the semester from hell."

"One night the sisters made us cook them dinner," she said. "Since I obviously wasn't into cooking and then cleaning their dishes, the sisters forced me to clean the kitchen floor. I didn't have any gloves and they would tell me to do it again until it was spotless. I used my fingernails to scrub the ground.'

Students Complained About Ala. Professor Charged in Shooting

anthony · 17 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HUNTSVILLE, Ala. — Students said they signed a petition and complained to no avail about the classroom conduct of a professor accused of killing three colleagues and wounding three others in a shooting rampage at a faculty meeting.

The students upset with biology professor Amy Bishop told The Associated Press they went to administrators at the University of Alabama in Huntsville at least three times a year ago, complaining that she was ineffective in the classroom and had odd, unsettling ways.
...
"The whole incident was just stupid," Bishop's husband, James Anderson, said Wednesday.

Asked if he was referring to his wife's actions, he said: "Everything."

"It was way overblown," he said. "Someone trying to make something out of nothing."

He also defended his wife's teaching, saying the "vast majority" of students were happy with her. He said his wife taught the "cut course" for nursing students, who would either go on toward a degree or quit the program based on how they did in her class.'

Abusegate: Groups Call for Congressional Investigation of Domestic Violence Programs

Matt · 18 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Feb. 16 / U.S. Newswire / — Twenty-two groups are calling for Congress to investigate allegations of widespread violations of federal law and constitutional protections by domestic violence programs, according to Men's News Daily. The names of the groups requesting the probe are listed here: http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/?p=58

Two federal laws — the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 and Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 — prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex. But an authoritative report documents continued bias against male victims of domestic violence: http://www.radarsvcs.org/docs/RADARreport-VAWA-Discriminates-Against-Males.pdf'

Related action item:
IN THE NEXT 24 HOURS: Tell Sen. Hatch to "Investigate Abusegate!"

Domestic Violence-Time For a Change

Matt · 18 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What do Chris Brown, Ike Turner, and OJ Simpson have in common? They are all famous men who beat their wives. Chris Brown's case got maximum exposure on Oprah, Ike Turner was vilified in a movie, OJ got all day/every day coverage at his murder trial. Our ability to remember them as examples of "wife beaters" is called the availability heuristic- we develop these associations largely from high profile media events. Since an availability heuristic- the examples of domestic violence we can call to mind-shapes our beliefs and judgments about an issue like domestic violence, the question is raised whether these media examples are representative of typical domestic violence. The answer is that they are not. They mis- represent domestic violence in three ways by making the perpetrators appear to always be black, male and acting alone.

Reality bites- when large sample victim surveys that ask about domestic violence are done, a very different picture emerges. In the first place, domestic violence is not more common in black relationships than white or other racial groups. Perhaps more surprisingly, the stereotype of the male as a bully and the female as hapless victim is not supported by the data. Surveys from 1989 to 2007 keep finding the same thing; the most common form of domestic violence is two -way- both partners assault each other at about the same level of severity. Women are hurt somewhat more but only somewhat- men get hurt too for the obvious reason that everyday weapons get used, knives, frying pans, and boiling water, amongst other things.'

Australia: MHA says Minister misleads Parliament on domestic violence

Matt · 18 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A leading men's health organisation today claimed that the Minister for the Status of Women, Hon Gail Gago MLC, misled Parliament by maintaining that false statistics on the Government's Don't Cross the Line anti-violence campaign website are accurate.

Men's Health Australia also lodged an official complaint with the Ombudsman last Thursday after five months of attempting to draw the Minister's attention to the major statistical errors on the website. The complaint alleges that the Office for Women acted unreasonably by publishing and not correcting this false and misleading information.

Men's Health Australia spokesman Greg Andresen said, "The Facts and Stats page of the website is extremely misleading to the public. It clearly inflates statistics about domestic violence against women while understating statistics about domestic violence against men."'

Duke lacrosse accuser charged with attempted murder, arson

anthony · 18 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Durham, N.C. — Durham police arrested Duke lacrosse accuser Crystal Gale Mangum, 33, late Wednesday after she allegedly assaulted her boyfriend, set his clothes on fire in a bathtub and threatened to stab him.

Her bond was set at $1 million. Mangum has been appointed a public defender and is scheduled to appear in court on Feb. 22.

Police charged her with attempted first-degree murder, five counts of arson, assault and battery, communicating threats, three counts of misdemeanor child abuse, injury to personal property, identity theft and resisting a public officer.
...
When officers arrived, they found Mangum and her boyfriend, Milton Walker, 33, fighting. According to police documents, Mangum scratched, punched and threw objects at Walker and told him, "I'm going to stab you, (expletive)!"

She then went into a bathroom and set his clothes on fire in the bathtub, police said. Officers called the fire department to put out the flames. No one was injured.

Milton was not charged in the incident, police said. The three children inside the house, ages 3, 9 and 10, were not injured.
...

Mangum is the author of the memoir "Last Dance for Grace." She was a student at North Carolina Central University in 2006 and also worked as an exotic dancer when she performed at the now infamous Duke lacrosse party.

It was there, she claimed, that three white members of the team trapped her inside a bathroom and raped and sexually assaulted her. The three players were indicted on rape and other charges on the basis of her allegations and were eventually exonerated after North Carolina's attorney general dismissed the case.'

"Circumcision ring cuts AIDS risk in Africa"

Matt · 19 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I guess the MSN pro-male-genital-mutilation-and-junk-science shills decided the momentum around MGM in Africa had died down a bit too much and so they had to resurrect it. A "new invention" it seems has been uncorked that slowly and effortlessly mutilates a man's penis all in the name of creating a false sense of security for everyone that having "unprotected sex" will now no longer place one at risk of getting HIV. The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation is financing it, too (which should come as no surprise since MSN is owned by the Gateses... well, eventually, several rings up the corporate ownership ladder). Excerpt:

'The most powerful force against AIDS in Africa may be circumcision, a procedure that's easily done in the developed world. But it's a challenge on a continent where there are too few medical workers and a reluctance by men for cultural reasons and fear of pain.

Now there may be a new weapon in the arsenal — a ring-shaped device that is mostly painless and requires less time for health workers.

The Chinese-developed device, the ShangRing, has been tested in a small study in Kenya and a larger test is set for later this year. The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation will invest about $4 million into studying the device.

The drawback is that men must wear the ShangRing for 10 days, but at least one man who tried it found it surprisingly painless.'

Contact info for the Gates Foundation is here should you be inclined to voice your disapproval.

Geraldo Rivera defends assault on Tiger Woods

Matt · 19 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

At around 2:10 PM EST, I happened to be watching a FOX News interview regarding Tiger Woods' recent public apology/statement. At around 2:20, the interviewee, Geraldo Rivera, who up until then had been speaking pretty cogently on the public relations and interpersonal implications of the statement, suddenly seemed to malfunction. He stated that, as a "clean ex-cheater" now for 10 years, and having had a tooth knocked out of his head by an angry ex-wife, he understands why Mrs. Woods may have attacked her husband as she did and indeed, it was "natural for a woman to react that way," and thus no one should blame her for that.

I will see when the interview is available on-line and wonder just when a woman will one day, if ever, make a similar statement on a national news program that has the sexes reversed and not elicit condemnation from one and all. I doubt in fact we will ever hear such a thing, and I would agree that that is good. But it's bad when we hear the kinds of things Mr. Rivera said.

No excuses for domestic violence, Mr. Rivera, despite your unresolved guilt issues that allow you to just wave it off. No excuses.

Abusegate Round 2: In the next 24 hours, Call your Representative in Congress

Matt · 19 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Ed:

This Thursday and Friday, our crack team of VAWA-reform lobbyists will be visiting Capitol Hill. To maximize their chances of success, please dial 1-202-224-3121 and ask to be connected to your Representative's office.

Tell the receptionist your Name, City, and these words: "Investigate Abusegate!" Tell them to probe the corruption and fraud of the domestic violence industry.

Please place the call within 24 hours of reading this message.

Not sure who your Representative is? When you call 1-202-224-3121, just tell the person your Zip code.

Update sent by separate note:

Today a group of our VAWA-reform lobbyists stormed Capitol Hill, holding meetings with staffers and distributing flyers, which can be seen here:

Mandatory arrest/Predominant aggressor: http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/?p=73

International VAWA: http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/?p=72

It's not too late to call your Representative and urge them to "Investigate Abusegate!" If you already made the call, THANK YOU!!

Abusegate: Teaching Women to Falsely Accuse

Matt · 19 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'False accusations of rape, sexual assault, and domestic violence are not an anomaly.

Sociologist Eugene Kanin did two studies of rape claims among university students. The first found a 50% false accusation rate, the second reported 41% of women later recanted their stories.

Studies of domestic violence accusations paint a similar picture.

One analysis of protective orders in West Virginia found seven of 10 orders were unnecessary or false. A Massachusetts inquiry found over half of protective order petitions did not even allege physical abuse.
...
Lawyers are well aware of the problem. Elaine Epstein, former president of the Massachusetts Bar Association, revealed, "Everyone knows that restraining orders and orders to vacate are granted to virtually all who apply." And Casey Gwinn, a nationally-known domestic violence prosecutor, admits, "If we prosecuted everybody for perjury that gets on a witness stand and changes their story, everybody would go to jail."

The federal Violence Against Women Act — VAWA — bears much of the responsibility for this legal travesty. VAWA teaches women to bear false witness in five ways:

First, VAWA subscribes to the dubious proposition that any slight — physical, psychological, or financial — is a form of "violence." That includes raising your voice, furrowing your brow, even sticking out your tongue. In most states, any woman who claims to be "fearful" — no evidence required — is entitled to a protective order.
...
Fifth, there are no penalties for women who manipulate the system. If a woman wants to make a man's life miserable, she can keep going back to the courthouse, rehashing her sob-story about being "harassed" or "stalked" or "abused." No evidence is required, not even an allegation of actual violence.'

RADAR ALERT: New Jersey Supreme Court OKs Issuing Restraining Orders Based On Lowest Standard Of Proof

Matt · 19 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Bad news!

The Supreme Court of New Jersey upheld the appellate decision in Crespo v. Crespo that found the New Jersey Prevention of Domestic Violence Act constitutional. The Supreme Court decision is cursory. They state initially that "The judgment of the Appellate Division is affirmed substantially for the reasons expressed in the thorough opinion by Judge Fisher." They then quickly summarize the appellate decision. They only add the observation that the issue of whether the Second Amendment right to own a gun applies to the States is presently pending before the United States Supreme Court, and then state that they "need not reach that point because the right to possess firearms clearly may be subject to reasonable limitations," thus implying that even if New Jersey has to respect gun rights, New Jersey taking away the gun rights of someone pursuant to the Prevention of Domestic Violence Act constitutes a reasonable limitation.

A syllabus the of the decision can be found here (.pdf).

++
Date of RADAR Release: Febuary 19, 2010

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://www.mediaradar.org

F4J Canada takes action at Olympics

Matt · 20 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S.:

Greetings everyone,

The Lions Gate Bridge Action that occurred on Feb.17, 2010 in Vancouver, BC during the Winter Olympics may now be reviewed on the Action site directly at http://www.f4jcanada.com/BCPages/F4J_Canada_Olympic_Action_BC.html

There are many pictures, links to news coverage and a video clip from the Outlook News on the North Shore - Enjoy. I have also included a couple of more pictures with this message.

Cheers: Rob Robinson - NAC - Fathers 4 Justice Canada

Ed. note: The page has an embedded song file that plays "Eye of the Tiger". Personally, I love this song, and it is worth it to wait for the page a few extra seconds to load. But if you'd rather not listen to it, you should disable embedded media in your browser before opening this page. For Firefox, use this Add-on. For IE, I have learned disabling attempts often fail, so it's better to disable your sound-out before loading a page with sound media in it.

Female Indian minister wants lower tax rates for women arindamp · 21 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here This is the feminist version of gender equality! Excerpt:

"NEW DELHI: Recognising that financial independence is the only way to effective gender empowerment, the government has started thinking beyond the age-old fiscal incentive of a higher threshold for taxable income for women. It is now considering demands from women' rights groups for a differential tax rate for women.

This boldness in gender budgeting was enunciated to TOI by women and child development minister Krishna Tirath. She said the ministry could endorse the women rights' groups demand for a lower tax rate for women. ``It is a serious factor in empowering working women. After all, it is a woman's income that directly impacts the living standard and health of her family and children's nutritional levels,'' she said."

The right to be a father - short documentary on YouTube - entry in an Amnesty International contest

Anonymous · 21 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Language: Swedish
Subs: English (slightly misspelled but understandable)

Featuring Swedish blogger Daddy and Mr. Markus Ollikainen from Pappamanualen.se

Clip here: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KqSA81b1d1Y

Story submitted by Ulf Andersson of PappaRättsGruppen (http://www.dads-r-us.se/), a Fathers Rights Group in Sweden

E-Mail: uffe-at-dads-r-us.se

India: One married man commits suicide every 9 min webdigr · 22 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Delhi: Family problems, illness, love affairs, bankruptcy identified as top causes

Is the mounting burden of responsibilities driving men to the end of their tether? Numbers suggest so.

In India, one married man commits suicide every nine minutes. Of the total 1,25,017 cases of suicide in 2008, married men alone accounted for 57,639. While the number of women taking the extreme step did not lag far behind, men appeared more vulnerable to mounting social and economic pressures. In the case of women, the trigger was more emotional and personal.

The overall male-female ratio of suicide victims for the year 2008 was 64:36, according to the latest data of the National Crime Record Bureau (NCRB). The general scene is much grimmer. Suicides in 2008 registered a decadal growth of 19.4% compared to 1998, the figures say. They also reveal a year-on-year rise of 1.9% compared to the 2007 numbers — 1,22,637.

The overall increase in cases involving women was 355 in two years while it was 2,187 among men. The increase in suicide among men is six times more than that of women. "Every nine minutes a married man is committing suicide in India. Are we ignoring our men too much or burdening them with too many responsibilities?" said Virag Dhulia of the Save Family Foundation, an organisation fighting for harassed husbands.'

Sen. Evan Bayh: Political Gridlock Caused By 'Testosterone Poisoning'

anthony · 22 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Washington (CNN) – Disenchanted Democratic Sen. Evan Bayh on Sunday blamed "tribal" politics for the gridlock that is paralyzing Capitol Hill.

"Our politics in Congress has become tribal in some ways. We have the tribe of the Democrats and tribe of the Republicans," Bayh said, appearing on CNN's State of the Union with Democrat Jon Corzine, a former New Jersey governor and senator, and Republican Susan Molinari, a former House member from New York.

In discussing partisanship, Molinari said that "women have a tendency to band together a little bit more than the men."

Bayh interjected: "It's testosterone poisoning; it's not our fault."

"You said it. I didn't," Molinari joked in response.'

RADAR ALERT: NOW President's Comment Goofier Than Tebow's Superbowl Ad

Matt · 22 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Love him or hate him, controversial talk show host Rush Limbaugh has it right when it comes to the expanding definition of domestic violence.

During the Superbowl, University of Florida quarterback and Heisman Trophy winner Tim Tebow and his mother ran an issue ad opposing abortion. In the ad, Tebow's mother talks about how difficult her pregnancy was and how she had to be tough when Tebow suddenly tackles her. Only then do you realize the difficult pregnancy was that of her son, Tim Tebow.

The ad attempts to be goofy and funny, in sharp contrast to the expectations of those who knew the ad was coming. The reaction of NOW president Terry O'Neill, however, was even more startling: "I am blown away at the celebration of the violence against women in it. That's what comes across to me even more strongly than the anti-abortion message. I myself am a survivor of domestic violence, and I don't find it charming. I think CBS should be ashamed of itself."

The Monday following the Superbowl, Limbaugh riffed:

> "Did you see the ad, Snerdley? What happened, if you didn't see the sound effect there, Tim Tebow tackled his own mom, looked like bam, she got tackled and then she pops back up. The ad then directed everybody to the Focus on the Family website where the story would be explained. So what do you think the reaction to this ad is today by the NAGs? (interruption) No. No. They are so livid because it glorified violence against women. NAG President Terry O'Neill said it glorified violence against women when Tim Tebow ostensibly tackled his own mother."

Washington Post: For women in America, equality is still an illusion

anthony · 22 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Because despite the indisputable gains over the years, women are still being raped, trafficked, violated and discriminated against -- not just in the rest of the world, but here in the United States. And though feminists continue to fight gender injustices, most people seem to think that outside of a few lingering battles, the work of the women's movement is done.

It's time to stop fooling ourselves. For all our "empowered" rhetoric, women in this country aren't doing nearly as well as we'd like to think.
...
The distressing statistics don't stop with violence: Women hold 17 percent of the seats in Congress; abortion is legal, but more than 85 percent of counties in the United States have no provider; women work outside the home, but they make about 76 cents to a man's dollar and make up the majority of Americans living in poverty.

This is a far cry from progress; it's an epidemic of sexism. So where's the outrage? When my co-bloggers and I write at Feministing.com about the hurdles American women face, a common criticism is that if we cared about women's rights, we'd focus on countries where women are actually oppressed -- that women here have it too good to complain. When I speak on college campuses, I'm sometimes asked the same question (generally by a male student): What are you complaining about? Women are doing terrific!'

Canada: It is not just women who are the victims of spousal violence

Anonymous · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This is a very rare event for this type of article to be posted at cbc.ca This is a positive signal of change in the mainstream media that has largely ignored this issue. Excerpt:

"In the almost 40 years since the first shelter for battered women opened its doors, we have made noticeable progress in dealing with and denouncing domestic violence.

Nevertheless, much still needs to be done and the biggest challenge, in my view, is what to do about men.

Not men as perpetrators — there we seem to have a handle on things. Rather, I'm talking about the hundred thousand or so confirmed male victims who are, often violently, abused by their female partners every year."

Reid: 'Men, when they're out of work, tend to become abusive'

Matt · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. As one commenter posted at the thehill.com site, Mr. Reid, it seems is likely to become 'more abusive' soon enough, as he too shall soon be out of a job. Good riddance. Excerpt:

'Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.) suggested Monday that domestic violence by men has increased due to U.S. joblessness.

Reid, speaking in the midst of a Senate debate over whether to pass a $15 billion package meant to spur job creation, appeared to argue that joblessness would lead to more domestic violence.

"I met with some people while I was home dealing with domestic abuse. It has gotten out of hand," Reid said on the Senate floor. "Why? Men don't have jobs."

Reid said that the effects of joblessness on domestic violence were especially pronounced among men, because, Reid said, women tend to be less abusive.

"Women don't have jobs either, but women aren’t abusive, most of the time," he said.

"Men, when they're out of work, tend to become abusive," the majority leader added. "Our domestic crisis shelters in Nevada are jammed.”'

RADAR ALERT: Senator Reid Plays the Domestic Violence Card

Matt · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Yesterday Senator Harry Reid made the following comments in support of a supposed jobs bill.

> "I met with some people while I was home dealing with domestic abuse. It has gotten out of hand," Reid said on the Senate floor. "Why? Men don't have jobs."

Reid said that the effects of joblessness on domestic violence were especially pronounced among men, because, Reid said, women tend to be less abusive. "Women don't have jobs either, but women aren't abusive, most of the time," he said. "Men, when they're out of work, tend to become abusive," the majority leader added.

Contrary to Reid's politically-convenient claims, reputable researchers have found time and time again that women perpetrate domestic violence at rates comparable to that of men.

Researchers from the CDC have found that in half of all relationships in which violence occurs, the violence is reciprocal. And surprisingly, "in nonreciprocally violent relationships, women were the perpetrators in more than 70% of the cases."

The Reid Rant: Let the Outrage Begin!

Matt · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed:

Yesterday, Sen. Reid stated on the Senate floor, “Men don't have jobs. Women don't have jobs either, but women aren't abusive, most of the time. Men when they're out of work tend to become abusive."

So today, we are calling for a BLIZZARD of complaints to Sen. Reid’s office, demanding he apologize for his sexist remark. Here’s the contact info:

Telephone: 1-202-224-3542
Internet: http://reid.senate.gov/contact/index.cfm
Fax: 1-202-224-7327

Ed

PRESS RELEASE:

Contact: Trudy Schuett
Groups Demand Sen. Harry Reid Apologize for Sexist Remarks

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23 / U.S. Newswire / -- Groups are calling for Sen. Harry Reid of Nevada to apologize for sexist remarks made yesterday, according to Men’s News Daily. Reid’s comments served to stereotype men as “abusive,” while ignoring the well-established scientific fact that men and women in partner relationships are equally likely to be violent.

Reid’s remarks on the Senate floor can be seen here: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=BTc8X9AJpmE

Over 250 scholarly studies show women are as physically aggressive, or more aggressive, than men in their relationships with their male partners, according to Martin Fiebert, professor of psychology at California State University.

“Senator Reid's bizarre and unfounded statement reveals an unimaginable disconnect from the millions of unemployed Americans who are not abusive. These persons are understandably frightened about their futures and the security of their families,” notes Paul Elam, editor-in-chief of Mensnewsdaily.com. “Mr. Reid needs to apologize immediately.”

Numerous political leaders have highlighted the existence of male victims of domestic violence:

-- “Domestic violence touches the lives of Americans of all ages, leaving a devastating impact on women, men, and children of every background and circumstance.” -- President Barack Obama

-- “Domestic violence cuts across all races, all income brackets, all levels of education – and both sexes.” -- Connecticut Governor M. Jodi Rell

-- “When we think of domestic violence, we think of the women as being the victims. But it’s also men victimized as well.” -- Rep. Judy Biggert (R-IL)

The “Abusegate, Investigate!” campaign is requesting the government launch a probe into the widespread fraudulent and illegal practices of the domestic violence industry: http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/.

Many believe current domestic violence laws unduly infringe on Americans’ civil liberties. The Washington Civil Rights Council has termed domestic violence programs the “biggest civil rights roll-back since [the] Jim Crow era.” http://www.heraldnet.com/article/20091013/OPINION03/710139998

The following 16 groups are demanding that Sen. Reid issue an apology for his sexist statement: African-Americans for VAWA Reform, CPF/Fatherhood Coalition, Dads and Moms of Michigan, Fathers' and Children's Equality, Fathers for Equal Rights of America, Illinois Fathers, Men and Fathers for Justice, Men's Equality Conference, National Organization for Men, National Congress for Fathers & Children of New Hampshire, Petition for Child Support Reform, Shared Parenting Works, TABS (Taking Action against Bias in the System), Utah Father's Rights Meetup Group, Washington Domestic Violence Press, and the Washington Civil Rights Council.

'Romantic rejections, misogyny and a new masculinity'

anthony · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Another cultural belief I want explore, in dating and romance, is a sense of male entitlement. This entitlement render women choiceless - that if given enough attention, or gifts, or emotional support, that no woman could ever say no, and if she does, it's of course, her fault. This mentality, in turn, hurts women because they are never truly given a choice, in love or lust, because it is believed women could be bought - if not with money then with attention.

In either cases, women are turned from human beings with preferences in sexual and romantic partners, into objects that will give in if someone tried long enough. It is reasons like these that we often see violence against women - not because men were born to seek out and destroy women, but because male entitlement and social constructions of masculinity dictate men must protect their own egos and hearts, and will do so at the expense of women.

...

It isn't just women who are hurt by patriarchy's definition of masculinity. Men, too, are hurt for the reasons above, and because without being able to emotionally cope, human beings, regardless of gender, are more likely to be depressed and hurt themselves. If the Men's Rights Activists are truly serious about men's health and well-being, they, too, would choose to take on issues of the constructions of masculinity. But it's not happening because they're neither serious nor do they really have any stake in this. For them, men's rights is about taking rights away from women, because in their misled philosophy, women's gain must be men's losses.'

Advocating emasculation in the mainstream press

Proud_to_be_a_man · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original Article here Ho hum. It's a 'jokey' headline of course, but (as usual) reverse the genders and see how it looks. Excerpt:

'And then there were five. At the last oiled body count, that was the number of young women claiming to have had sex with serial cheater Ashley Cole (link added).

No wonder his poor wife Cheryl has finally dumped him - by long-distance text, a nicely brutal touch.
...
Despite Cheryl's neck tattoo - a large 'Mrs Cole' in pretty, cursive script - her assertion that 'this is the man I am going to have my babies with' and her promise that 'he's learning, he has a beautiful soul, he's a really nice guy', the curtain has come down on their goldfish bowl marriage.

Apparently, Cheryl is returning home shortly to consult lawyers and chop their assets in half. If that is the only thing chopped in half, then Ashley Cole remains a lucky man. For the time being. This soap opera isn't over until the small lady sings.'

Ric Flair's Wife Arrested for Domestic Violence

anthony · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Well we didn't see this one coming: The wife of professional wrestling legend Ric Flair (link added) has been arrested for domestic violence, TV Guide is reporting, claiming Flair suffered minor injuries at the hands of Jacqueline Bains Beems after the two had "an unfortunate disagreement." While we'd certainly never make light of a domestic violence situation, we will note that Flair's catch phrase was "to be the man, you've got to beat the man." Apparently, it seems Bains Beems took that a bit too literally.

According to Flair's agent, Melinda Morris Zanoni, "Ric and his wife had an unfortunate disagreement [Sunday], which led to his wife being arrested and charged with assault."
...
Morris Zanoni went on to say that "Ric has done nothing wrong,' and that the wrestling pro "finds this incident unsettling and is committed to correcting any issues in his personal life."

Previous story: Ric Flair Hospitalized Following Attack from Wife on Sunday

Like clockwork: "Files show Ala. suspect's husband wanted revenge"

Matt · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. "It was actually HIS FAULT! Let that POOR WOMAN go!"

I still bet she does less than 15 years for all three murders. Excerpt:

'BOSTON – The husband of the Alabama professor accused of gunning down three colleagues once said he wanted violent revenge on a doctor who gave his wife a bad job review, according to federal documents released Tuesday to The Associated Press.

Amy Bishop is charged with killing three colleagues at the University of Alabama-Huntsville on Feb. 12. Investigative files from the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives show that Bishop and her husband, James Anderson, were questioned in 1993 in the attempted mail bombing of Dr. Paul Rosenberg of Boston's Children's Hospital.

Rosenberg has said he played a role in Bishop's resignation as a research fellow. A pipe bomb package was sent to his home weeks later.

The files show Anderson told a witness he wanted to get back at Rosenberg by shooting, bombing, stabbing or strangling him. The couple were never charged, and the case remains unsolved.
...
But James Anderson previously told the AP he and his wife were among a number of innocent people questioned by investigators who cast a wide net. He said the case "had a dozen people swept up in this, and everybody was a subject, not a suspect."

"There was never any indictment, arrest, nothing, and then everyone was cleared after five years," he said.
...
Bishop fatally shot her brother in Braintree, Mass., in 1986; the case was declared an accident and she was never charged.

U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, who was district attorney at the time, now says it was a shame Bishop did not receive a mental evaluation after the shooting. He said she was not evaluated because state police working for his office weren't told that after Bishop shot her brother, she allegedly threatened two auto shop workers with the gun, demanding a car, or that she aimed the gun at police.'

The Dartmouth: 'A Misandrist Mistake'

anthony · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As I read “Too Few Good Men” (Feb. 22) by Blair Sullivan ’10, I came upon the statement, “males have never been the victims of systematic discrimination.” Such a boldly stated assertion must be true, even if it invalidates the gross injustice that men have faced historically and continue to face today. Never mind the massive inequities in our country’s system that challenge the male gender — according to Sullivan, men have never suffered the brunt of institutionalized inequity.

Forget that the United States only forces men to risk their lives in conscripted military service. Or that males must sign up for their Selective Service numbers if they ever intend to see a drop of federal educational assistance. That’s not systematic discrimination — forced military service is clearly a privilege extended only to males.

And ignore the dark reality of violence against men being treated as a joke in this nation. The Violence Against Women Act was enacted into federal law exclusively for the protection women, perhaps because most acts of violence are perpetrated against females. But for men, no parallel legislation protects a man who seeks justice for acts of domestic violence and sexual assault brought upon him. In this instance, males are also clearly not the victims of systematic discrimination. After all, they’re capable of defending themselves.'

Woman admits selling 2 kids for 1 bird, $175

anthony · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VILLE PLATTE, La. - A Louisiana woman has pleaded guilty to selling two children for a cockatoo and $175 in what her attorney called an attempt to do a good thing that went wrong.

"It was a really clumsy attempt at an adoption proceeding," said Steve Sikich, attorney for Donna Louise Greenwell of Pitkin. "She was trying to help the children and get them situated."

Greenwell, 53, was sentenced Monday to 15 months of hard labor on each of two criminal counts: sale of a minor. The sentences are to run concurrently.

...

Greenwell had custody of the children for more than a year before meeting the Romeros, Sikich said. Her lawyers have maintained she was just trying to find a better home for them.

"They were undernourished and not well taken care of," Sikich said. "It's my understanding that the mother had requested that she take care of the kids."'

Australia: Mother who gassed children to be sentenced today

GaryB · 23 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Sydney Morning Herald reports here. Excerpt:

'A Queensland woman is to be sentenced today for gassing her two children to death in the family car - so her ex-husband couldn't have custody of them on Christmas Day. The Queensland Supreme Court trial heard the mother, who can't be identified, started planning her children's deaths in October 2002.
...
She had been issued with a Family Court order stating the children should spend Christmas Day with their father.

One month later, the bodies of her eight-year-old son and 10-year-old daughter were found in the garage of their home near Bribie Island.

A Supreme Court jury found the woman guilty last week.'

No comments on the story have been allowed.

US woman gets prison for gang-rape lie that put man behind bars for crime he didn't commit

Anonymous · 24 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK - A woman who fabricated a gang rape accusation was sentenced Tuesday to up to three years behind bars herself, saying she was riven with remorse for sending an innocent man to prison.

Biurny Peguero, 27, pleaded guilty in December to perjury, admitting she made up the September 2005 incident that unjustly put construction worker William McCaffrey in jail and prison for nearly four years. A judge overturned his rape conviction in December, with new DNA evidence also playing a role.
...
McCaffrey, now 32, said she had agreed to go with them to a party. He said they dropped her off unharmed after she changed her mind.
...
Prosecutors have said she told them she claimed she was raped to make her friends feel sorry for her. Assistant District Attorney Evan Krutoy suggested Tuesday that she may have lied out of anger at a man who had upset - but not attacked - her.

"I don't know the reason why, but she wanted to do this," he said, urging a two-to six-year sentence.'

UK: Woman who cried rape after sex in public toilet walks free from court

Anonymous · 24 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A woman who accused a student of rape after dragging him into a public toilet for sex was spared jail yesterday.
...
Yesterday Mr Bowers, also 20, attacked the 'ridiculous' sentence after Hilliard received 12 months in jail, suspended for two years. She had denied perverting the course of justice.
...
Mr Bowers - who says he is now afraid to speak to women - said: 'It's absolutely ridiculous. That's not even a slap on the wrist. She's been let off and I'm still having to sneak around because there are still people after me who think I did it.'

It was more than a week after his arrest that Mr Bowers discovered he was not to be charged.
...
Mr Bowers's father Tony, 48, said: 'My son was facing up to ten years in prison for rape on the strength of her lies. The least I expected was for her to have been given a prison sentence."

Women only: Japan airline to have female toilets

anthony · 24 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TOKYO (Reuters) - Women flying Japan's All Nippon Airways will have a toilet all to themselves from next month, with the airline designating one restroom on most international routes as female-only.

The airline said in a statement it was responding to "numerous requests for this service," adding that the toilet would be located in the rear of the plane and be available to women passengers from all classes.

An airline official told Kyodo news agency that ANA decided to designate women-only lavatories based on a 2007 online survey in which 90 percent of the women polled said they found the idea attractive.

The official also said women do not like using shared toilets as men sometimes leave the seat up. She said demand for women-only toilets was especially high among passengers taking long flights.

Men would be allowed to use the lavatory only in emergencies or when there were very few female passengers on the flight, the ANA statement said.'

Woman sentenced to three years in jail for false rape accusation

anthony · 24 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A young mother who falsely cried rape, sending an innocent man to prison for nearly four years, will experience firsthand what he suffered -- she'll spend one to three years behind bars for perjury.

"I wish her the best of luck," said William McCaffrey last night of Biurny Peguero Gonzalez.

"Jail isn't easy."

...

McCaffrey said he has some sympathy for Gonzalez and hopes she "doesn't go through what I went though.

"I was an accused rapist in prison," he said, adding that in prison, "rape is the worst crime possible."

All is clearly not forgiven.

A person who would "lie and paint somebody as a rapist is worse than a real rapist or a real murderer," McCaffrey said.'

Reid Unapologetic for Linking Unemployment to Violence Against Women

anthony · 24 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Advocates for men are calling for Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid to apologize for suggesting that men are more likely than women to commit domestic violence, especially when they're out of work for long periods of time.

But Reid's spokesman told FoxNews.com on Tuesday that the Nevada Democrat is not apologizing for arguing during Senate debate a day earlier that the $15 billion jobs bill he is sponsoring should be passed to help prevent an uptick in violence.

Marty Nemko, co-president of The National Organization for Men, described Reid's comments as "irresponsible," citing numerous studies that show women are just as likely or even more so to commit domestic violence against their male partners.
...
"Instead of looking to try and find men jobs, he's bashing men completely unfairly," Nemko told FoxNews.com.'
...

Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting (RADAR) took Reid to task for his comments, arguing that the $787 billion stimulus package that he supported last year funneled close to half of the spending to programs that women while 80 percent of those who lost jobs in the recession were men.

"Grant for the moment that, in spite of all the scientific research to the contrary, maybe Sen. Reid is naïve enough to believe that only men, and not women, turn violence to their partners when unemployed," the group said in a press release. "What kind of misogynist promotes a bill as unjust as last year's massive stimulus package while sincerely believing that doing so will cause more women to be beaten?"'

PAS interview on Divorce Source Radio

Matt · 25 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

"My name is Joseph Goldberg and I am the Founder of The Canadian Symposium for Parental Alienation Syndrome (C.S.P.A.S.). I am also a consultant advising parents and Family Law lawyers in the matters that pertain to Parental Alienation child abuse.

I just finished a Radio Show on the Divorce Source Radio Network. I would like to know if you could post the interview on your website. The hyperlink below will take you to the website that will enable you to listen to this important program."

The interview .mp3 file is at http://media.libsyn.com/media/steve2256/Uload23PAS.mp3. Right click the link and download the file, then play it in whatever media player you choose.

Mary, on the Contrary: The New York Times obit made radical feminist theologian Mary Daly sound downright sane

Matt · 25 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As one who has long followed the career of the late radical feminist theologian Mary Daly, I was disappointed by her obituary in the New York Times a couple weeks ago. As a summation of Daly's outsize life and work, it was inexplicably drab.

A pioneering figure of "eco-feminism" and a major draw on the campus lecture circuit in the 1980s and '90s, Daly was probably best known in the secular world for her long-standing refusal to admit men to some of her undergrad courses at Boston College. This unilateral deviation from coeducational policy made national headlines in the late 90s, when a libertarian-conservative "public interest law firm" threatened to sue the college on behalf of an undergrad who felt his Title IX rights were being violated. In what Daly termed an instance of "rapism," the college administration used the threat of litigation to maneuver her into retirement in 1999.

...Fox referred to the support Daly received from the still all-male student body of Boston College during her landmark 1970 antidiscrimination campaign to wrest tenure from that Jesuit-run institution, but not to Daly's later espousal of "a drastic reduction in the population of males" as an efficient way to effect a "decontamination of the Earth."

"People are afraid to say that kind of stuff anymore," said Daly in 1999 to an interviewer uneasy about her proposed planetary "Mister-ectomy." But Daly exhibited no such qualms, which is why I think she would agree that Fox's obit was kind of a whitewash. Daly, however, would have surely found a way to blame its shortcomings on "the patriarchy," whereas I construe them as the consequence of Fox trying to register Daly's stature as (in the words of former Ms. editor Robin Morgan) "a central figure in 20th-century feminism" without giving the average lay reader the impression that she was a flaming moonbat.
...
She elaborated this scenario in a dialogue between her time-traveling self and a first-person alter ego called Annie, her primary guide to the wonders of the Lost and Found Continent:

"Are you saying that men who insisted on clinging to patriarchal beliefs and behaviors became obsolete and 'died off'?" asked Mary.

"Yes, they rapidly became extinct," I said.

"And what became of the patriarchally assimilated women who identified with the roles and rules of patriarchy?" asked Mary.

I answered, "Those women who refused to release themselves from the phallocratic dependencies and habits that had been embedded in them . . . were in effect refusing to evolve. So they also could not survive in the New energy field."'

"What, me worry?" Harry Reid Refuses to Apologize - Take Action

Matt · 25 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Sen. Harry Reid is being hammered in the polls, with only 40% of Nevada voters saying they plan to vote for him in November.

Back in Washington, Reid's staffers were deluged with a blizzard of phone calls, emails, and faxes demanding an apology from the good senator. Things got so bad that staff couldn't keep with all the calls and the answering machine got backed up. No coffee breaks today, folks!

Reid's staff confidently insisted the senator's comments on domestic violence were backed up by a 2004 Department of Justice study. But when asked to provide the name of said study, staffers suddenly became tongue-tied. And some callers reported Reid's staff became downright testy – imagine that!

Obviously, Mr. Reid needs a little educatin'. So let's re-double our efforts and send him a message on Wednesday that he can't ignore!

Telephone: 1-202-224-3542
Internet: http://reid.senate.gov/contact/index.cfm
Fax: 1-202-224-7327

Our message is simple: "Senator Reid owes men an apology!" Let's go for it!

Related press release: Sen. Reid is Cherry-Picking the Research, Experts Say

Intact America: Big opportunity in Massachusetts

Matt · 25 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA email:

It could all start to change in Massachusetts. On March 2, the Massachusetts State Senate will consider the Male Genital Mutilation Bill, legislation that would outlaw genital mutilation of both young girls AND boys in Massachusetts.

The deadline is rapidly approaching and we urgently need your help to show Massachusetts legislators why passing this bill is the right thing to do.

Submit your own personal story about why you oppose infant circumcision before March 2 – and we'll make sure your testimony is heard by the Massachusetts State Senate Joint Committee.

Time and again, Intact America has seen just how powerful stories like yours can be.

More than statistics, policy papers, or even medical information, first-hand accounts from people's real life experiences are what change the way even the most skeptical person thinks about circumcision.

Congress banned female genital mutilation in the U.S. in 1996. But no one has ever considered extending the same protection to baby boys – until now!

This is the first time a Male Genital Mutilation Bill has made it to debate in a state legislature. We cannot let this opportunity pass us by.

With your help, I know we can get Massachusetts to see circumcision for what it really is: unnecessary, risky, harmful, and ethically wrong.

Your story has the power to finally win baby boys the protection they deserve so please submit your personal testimony before March 2!

Once you've shared your own story, please help spread the word about this time-sensitive opportunity.

Thank you for helping us make the most of this unique opportunity, and we'll keep you posted as the legislative process unfolds!

Sincerely,

Georganne Chapin

The Daily Princetonian: The real 'Sex on a Saturday Night'

anthony · 25 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine the following scenario: A girl goes to a frat party, drinks too much and has sex with a guy she just met. The next day she does not remember anything. When she finally realizes what occurred, she wants her partner charged with rape.

Though she was conscious, yet drunk, during the act, everybody agrees that what happened is not her fault. But is this really the right way to approach this problem?

When I first found out that something like this happened to one of my friends at another college, I immediately remembered the somewhat cliche play “Sex on a Saturday Night” from freshman week. Showing this play to freshmen might at first seem pointless, since it just reiterates for the nth time well-known “rules” for college students: Don’t have sex when drunk, don’t be ashamed of your sexual orientation, and other facts which we have heard too many times already.
...

Similarly, my friend blamed her partner and wanted him arrested. She was conscious during the act, but the alcohol concentration in her blood was so high that she could not have been responsible for her decisions.
...
This brings up another question: Why is the guy always to blame? Since the beginning of time, society has taught us that whenever a situation like this arises, the fault belongs almost entirely to the male participant.

Why? Maybe because males are traditionally the initiators of sex, or maybe because guys are usually to blame for anything that goes wrong in a relationship. No matter the reason, this perception has been around for a while, and it is unlikely that it will disappear anytime soon.

We live in times when sexual discrimination has, more or less, disappeared from our society. Yet it still prevails when talking about a ubiquitous thing like sex. If both people were drunk and if the girl has the right to make the accusation of rape, then why shouldn’t the boy enjoy the same privileges? If a culprit is required, then both of them should be guilty or there should be no culprit at all.'

Bishop update: She shot at her brother three times, federal DA to open probe of pipe-bomb investigation

Matt · 26 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Seems she wasn't just learning to clean the trusty old family shotgun after all (which we already knew). Read more here. Excerpt:

'Amy Bishop shot her teenage brother in the chest in 1986, Braintree police Chief Paul Frazier said at a news conference. Bishop fired at least three shots, hitting her brother in the chest, and then fled with the shotgun before police took her into custody at gunpoint, he said.

Before Bishop, who was 19 at the time, could be booked the police chief back then called officers and told them to release her to her mother, Frazier said. The shooting of the brother, Seth Bishop, an 18-year-old accomplished violinist, was logged that day as a "sudden death" and later considered accidental, but detailed records of the shooting have disappeared, Frazier said.'

You may want to read about how she had to be tracked down and placed in a two-target situation before she would surrender to the police. It's here. She was not a distraught newbie with a gun who just accidentally shot (thricely firing upon) her beloved brother. She was a shooter hiding out from the cops behind cover waiting for her chance to get away, with ammunition ready no less.

Also, a US attorney will investigate her own office's investigation into the 1993 pipe-bomb case as well. Aside from the fact that the current US attorney is different from the one holding that office in 1993, I have to ask myself, just how objective would such a review be? Well, it may be something. We'll have to see. Story here. Excerpt:

'The state's top federal prosecutor announced today that her office will review its investigation of the December 1993 attempted mail bombing of a Harvard Medical School professor, now that a woman once considered a suspect in the case is accused of killing three people during a shooting rampage at the University of Alabama at Huntsville.

US Attorney Carmen Ortiz, who was appointed to her post in November, said today in a statement that she has ordered a review to make sure that "all appropriate steps" were taken at the time of the original investigation.'

International paternity-custody case points up problems with parental rights policies

Anonymous · 26 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From the Colas Family:

This is about what it happening to our kids who are being held in Haiti because of some insane policy.

Evens & Sue Colas

Article here. Excerpt:

5:32 P.M. — PALM BAY — Born in Haiti but a naturalized U.S. citizen, Evens Colas said he fell in love with his two children the moments they came into the world 15 and 13 years ago in Port-au-Prince.

He split his time between Haiti and the United States as he and his Haitian wife raised them. And he cared for them through her illness and death in 2004, even though a DNA test taken as part of the process to bring them to the United States showed he wasn't their biological father.

At the time, Colas didn't believe it.

A later test, however, confirmed the shocking news. And the fact of their fatherhood continues to haunt the 49-year-old Palm Bay musician who believes he is at a dead end in rescuing the children from the earthquake-ravaged capital city where they live with his mother and their maternal grandmother.
...

Violent French husbands 'may be tagged'

anthony · 26 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men seen as likely to be violent towards their wives could be forced to wear an electronic tag under a law being debated by the French parliament.

The tag would have to be worn by men who have received a court order to stay away from their partner.

The proposal is part of a draft law on conjugal violence. It has cross-party support and is expected to pass easily.

According to the government, around 160 women in France are murdered by their husbands or partners every year.

Parliament is also considering outlawing psychological violence in the home, because it is seen by many as a precursor to physical violence.

It is rare for the left and the right in France to agree on anything, says the BBC's Hugh Schofield, so the near unanimity in parliament behind this law comes as something of a novelty.

Everyone agrees that domestic violence is bad and getting worse.'

Australia: Violence against women we say no — except from another woman

anthony · 26 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to violence against women, “Australia Says No”. But what happens when women are the ones committing these crimes against other women?

Tuesday night’s armed assault against a 35-year-old woman at Glenroy Railway Station in Melbourne by two young females highlights the rapid growth of crimes in Australia committed by women against women.

This incident occurred only months after a woman pleaded guilty to charges around encouraging her daughter and three friends to violently attack a 16-year-old mentally disabled girl at St Albans and posted footage of the violence on YouTube. Other female crimes committed against women during the preceding year include the alleged murder of a legally blind 65-year-old woman by 25-year-old Amber Cooper in Bairnsdale.

A survey conducted by the NSW Bureau of Crime Statistics and Research in 2008 showed the number of girls aged 10-17 allegedly involved in criminal offenses soared from 3622 in 1998 to 5724 that year. The figures have caused speculation over why more young women are becoming violent, particularly against other women.

Professor Kerry Carrington, head of the School of Justice at Queensland University of Technology, wrote in her recently released book Offending Youth, Sex and Crime that cyber bullying accounted for the alarming increase in female youth violence. Professor Carrington draws her observations from more than 45 years of adolescent crime statistics, which suggest that young female delinquency is on the rise.'

ABC News: 'Chivalry Lives! Arizona Teacher Requires Boys to Have Old-Fashioned Manners in Class'

anthony · 26 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When Elise Rierson walks into Latin class, the door is held open for her. When she arrives at her desk, her chair is pulled out for her.

It's not the kind of treatment most 14-year-old freshman expect. But Elise and the rest of her female classmates have gotten used to the chivalrous gestures -- and rather enjoy it.

...

Among Ivanyi's other rules, boys are not allowed to sit at their desks until the girls have been seated first. And if a girl should stand in the middle of class, the boys must stand with her to show respect.

...

"If my daughter's dating boys who are polite in that way and show respect in that way," she said, "then I have no problem with it."

For their part, the girls only need to say "thank you."

But Erin Matson, acting vice president of the National Organization for Women, said she wonders if singling out the boys for good manners is the way to go, even though she called the idea of old-fashioned manners "adorable."

"We see it as teaching kids to treat people differently because they're girls," Matson said, though quickly adding. "I don't want to seem like an angry raging feminist."

"I'm sure some of the boys and teachers in the school wouldn't mind the door being held open for them too," she said, calling for "etiquette for all, just across the board."

...

Cindy Post Senning, co-director of the Emily Post Institute and great-granddaughter of the etiquette guru, said she admired the thought behind Ivanyi's plan, but questioned whether his rules on manners were a bit outdated.

"I wouldn't teach the same manners that Emily wrote about in 1922, but I'd definitely teach the same principles," she said.

The roles between men and women, she said, are constantly evolving. Back in the 1960s, as more women were entering the workforce, it was common for women to remain seated when a man introduced himself. Now, she said, it's considered not only good manners, but a show of equality, for the woman to stand.

For girls to accept that their chairs always be pulled out and that the boys will stand when they do has the potential to "disempower" the girls, Senning said.

...

And outside the classroom? Elise said that she doesn't necessarily expect future boyfriends to adhere to the rule of Ivanyi's classroom, but "it would be nice if they did."'

Rape is a Male-Only offense in Israeli Criminal Law davidcohen188 · 27 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women cannot be rapists. This is not only a feminist agenda, but a hard legal fact in the Israeli Criminal Law, which defines rape as a male-only offense. Say a 40 years old woman who works as a school teacher, seduces a 13 years old pupil, it might be impossible to file criminal charges against her. She might lose her job, but legally there is no much you can do about it.

Israeli legislators now wants to change the rape definition in the Israeli Criminal Law so that it includes women as well. Feminists has already launched a very noisy campaign in the Israeli media, opposing the proposed changes to Israeli Criminal Law.

Their arguments are silly and stupid as always. Israeli feminists claim that making it possible to file rape charges against women might lead to situations where "Male rapists will accuse the women of being the rapists". As always, the Israeli media is at the feminist side, and we only need to wait and see whether the proposed law change will pass or be buried in the parliament.'

NY Daily News: "Domestic violence victims must not be intimidated"

Hunchback · 28 February 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This opinion piece in the NY Daily News, complete with the usual cliches and femstats, is just the type of nonsense we should attack in a timely manner. The author is CEO of Safe Horizon, which runs NYC's DV Hotline. Needless to say, no men need apply for help.

Any letters to the News should be no longer than 100 words (preferably 50) and not contain web addresses. As of now (2/28 @1:30pm EST), the comment section on the website is empty. Bon appetit. Excerpt:

'For those of us who have been reading the papers the last couple of days, there are a lot of questions about what actually happened with David Johnson, the aide to Gov. Paterson who has been accused of assaulting his girlfriend. There are questions about contact that state officials had with his ex-girlfriend, who had initiated court proceedings to obtain an order of protection against him.

Despite some very serious and disturbing allegations, we don't yet know exactly what happened.

Regardless, we can learn from the outlines of the story. Because the sad truth is that - whether the batterer is famous or not, politically powerful or not - far too many victims of domestic violence are intimidated by their batterers or their friends and relatives from obtaining the justice and services they need and deserve.'

Wars force US military to review ban on women in combat

Matt · 1 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (AFP) – US commanders are taking a second look at policies that bar women from ground combat, as the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan have thrust female soldiers into the thick of the fight.
...
Despite a policy designed to keep women away from units engaged in ground combat, the conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan have placed women in battle with insurgents who do not operate along defined front lines.

As a result, women have earned medals for valor and praise for their mettle.
...
More than 220,000 women have fought in the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, and more than 120 of them have been killed in the conflicts, according to the Pentagon.

Ending the ban on ground combat will come sooner or later, Nagl said, as it is "simply recognizing a truth that's already been written in blood and sweat on the battlefield."'

Aside from nymphotropism/chivalry, I don't see the rationale (and these are not rationales in any case) for the current policies. There's just no justification.

RADAR ALERT: McGill University Student Newspaper Smears RADAR

Matt · 1 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

In December, The McGill Tribune, published by the McGill University Students' Society, printed an article (found here) that made false statements about RADAR (Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting). A few days later, the Tribune's editor promised to retract the most offensive claim. But even with that claim retracted, the article still paints a misleading portrait of RADAR. So he also said he might consider publishing an op-ed by RADAR to correct the other misinformation about the reasons RADAR exists.

RADAR did submit a response, but of necessity it was much longer than the Tribune's length limit for an op-ed. That's because the information RADAR knows about is not common knowledge, so for us to simply state a position without backing it up with facts would not make a credible case. After weeks of inquiries as to whether or not the Tribune will be publishing our response, we learned just recently that they will not.

This is the article the Tribune will not be printing. Excerpt:

'The 12/1/2009 article "OFF THE BOARD: The fight for men's rights" by Carolyn Gregoire repeated claims about RADAR (Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting) from an article in Slate.com's DoubleX. Although the DoubleX article contained more misrepresentation than fact, at least that author interviewed her subjects. Ms. Gregiore not only failed to do that, but also added embellishments of her own, which caused the Tribune's editor to append an apology. This article was composed to counter the misrepresentation and enlighten the Tribune's readers about what RADAR is really all about, but the Tribune has declined to publish it.

First of all, we are not a Men's Rights group, as those working against us like to claim. As our mission statement says, RADAR is dedicated to improving the effectiveness of solutions to the problem of domestic violence. RADAR has always been as concerned about women abused by the system as about men. If we seem to be advocating more for men than for women, that's a reflection of the ways that DV policies are badly broken, not a reflection of our underlying philosophy.

On a personal note, I must object to the statement, "RADAR chooses to undermine the prevalence of rape and domestic violence against women." Far from wishing to deny women protection, one of my primary motivations is to see to it that no other children suffer the fate that befell my sister – a matter I've touched on in many of my compositions, most notably "Don't Put Your Trust In Movements".

Due to decades of one-sided reporting on domestic violence, explaining the issues RADAR is concerned about often feels like telling someone, "Everything you know is wrong!" In fact, DV policy in the U.S. (and Canada too) is not the solution its supporters claim. All too often, it causes harm even as it fails to help those it purports to help.'

Media coverage report on Reidgate

Matt · 1 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From MANN reader Ed:

DV Reformers –

Thought you'd be interested to see this report on media coverage of Reidgate. This information has also been posted at http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/

Cheers,

Ed

++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++

On February 22, Sen. Harry Reid stood on the Senate floor and declared, "Men, when they're out of work, tend to become abusive."

Sen. Reid miscalculated in making his remarks on a Monday, allowing the ensuing firestorm of ridicule and protest to rage for an entire week. Following is a summary of what happened, by the numbers:

1. Length of Sen. Reid's Senate-floor gaffe: 25 seconds
2. Number of Google hits for "Harry Reid" and "sexism": 204,000
3. Number of Google hits for "Groups Demand Sen. Harry Reid Apologize for Sexist Remarks" (title of Tuesday's press release): 1,370
4. Number of Google hits for "Sen. Reid is Cherry-Picking the Research, Experts Say" (title of Wednesday's press release): 940
5. Percentage of Nevada voters likely to vote for Harry Reid in November (Rasmussen Reports, Feb. 5): 39-41%
6. Number of apologies issued by Sen. Reid for stereotyping men as abusers: 0

Following are the awards for the past week's media coverage of Reidgate:

- Most spirited defense: MediaMatters: "Right-wing media mock Reid for linking unemployment to rise in domestic abuse:" -- http://mediamatters.org/research/201002230026
- Blithest attempt to paper-over the existence of female partner abuse: Christian Science Monitor: "Harry Reid Links Unemployment to Rise in Domestic Abuse" -- http://www.csmonitor.com/USA/Society/2010/0223/Harry-Reid-links-unemployment-to-rise-in-domestic-abuse
- Et Tu, Brute? award: Former Tennessee Senator Fred Thompson: "Reid: Jobless men = domestic abuse. Is he saying we should be worried about Mrs. Reid after the November elections?" -- http://www.politico.com/blogs/glennthrush/0210/Reid_spokesman_Thompson_wifebeating_Tweet_despicable.html
- Best political cartoon: RedState: "Soon-to-be ex-Senator Harry Reid: Arrested for fear of domestic abuse after he loses his job in November 2010" -- http://www.redstate.com/erick/2010/02/23/morning-briefing-for-february-23-2010/
- Largest audience: Russ Limbaugh: "Dingy: Jobless Men Beat Wives" -- http://www.rushlimbaugh.com/home/daily/site_022310/content/01125111.guest.html (Weekly audience: Over 20 million persons)
- Funniest editorial: Andrea Tantaros, New York Daily News, "Harry Reid's remarks making light of domestic abuse prove he needs a lesson tongue-fu" -- http://www.nydailynews.com/opinions/2010/02
- Most thoughtful editorial: Paul Elam of Men's News Daily: "Reid Backpedaling with Media Help and Public Ignorance." -- http://mensnewsdaily.com/2010/02/24/reid-backpedaling-with-media-help-and-public-ignorance/

- Best all-around article: Kerry Picket, Washington Times: “Leader Reid Distorts the Facts on Domestic Violence.” -- http://washingtontimes.com/weblogs/watercooler/2010/feb/23/leader-reid-distorts-facts-domestic-violence/?feat=home_blogs

Woman charged after man found dead

Matt · 1 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Another curiously brief report wherein a man's body is found and a woman is charged with murder. No reporter's name, no details. Seems no one in the MSM thinks their career is furthered by reporting on woman-on-man murders, but the other way around? They can't get to the scene fast enough, can they? Says something.

'RICHMOND HILL- York regional police have charged a 30-year-old woman with second-degree murder after the body of a man was discovered early Friday in Richmond Hill, Ont.

Police received a call about trouble at a residence in the town north of Toronto and discovered a 45-year-old man with no vital signs.

He was pronounced dead at the scene.

A woman who was known to the man was located at the scene and arrested shortly after the discovery of the body.

The name of the deceased will not be released pending notification of next of kin.

Renee Laurence, of Richmond Hill, is being held in custody and will appear in court March 3 in Newmarket.'

Fathers & Families' Holstein, F&F Members Appear on Fox Child Support Special

Matt · 2 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Fathers & Families founder Ned Holstein, MD, MS and Fathers & Families members John Gagnon and Brian Ayers appeared on a Fox Boston report on Massachusetts' new child support guidelines yesterday.

In 2001, Fathers & Families won changes in Massachusetts law which lowered child support by 15%. Our victory saved noncustodial parents over $1 billion—$200 a million a year over five years. That's $1 billion that non-custodial parents were able to spend on their children themselves.

The opposition struck back by stacking a special committee with reliable votes for increasing the child support amounts, ignoring the data Holstein presented them showing that the proposed new child support orders were far too high for middle class people to pay. Holstein sat on this committee and prepared a Minority Report (.pdf) detailing the problems with the new Guidelines.'

Melanie Phillips: "Pay men to commit to their families"

Matt · 2 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Devastating new research by sociologist Geoff Dench shows that not only is one in four mothers single, but more than half of such mothers have never lived with a man at all and are choosing to live alone on state benefits.

They believe they have no need for a man in their life and that their children have no need for a father.

The founding premise of the Government's £280million sex education strategy - that young mums get pregnant through ignorance - is thus very far from the truth.

It is, therefore, hardly surprising that Britain still has the highest teenage pregnancy rate in Europe.
...
With so much flailing around over the family, I have a modest proposal to help break through the confusion.

It is that the Government should introduce a Man Benefit.

Before people assume that I have confused today's date with this time next month, let me say that my somewhat light-hearted proposal is based on a deeper point that I believe has been generally overlooked.
...

For the great unsayable is that Child Benefit acts as a huge incentive to have children outside marriage.

When it was introduced in the Seventies, it replaced child tax allowances, which were set against the earned income of fathers. It was, therefore, hailed as a transfer of family income 'from wallet to purse'.
...
Since marriage has always helped turn young men into responsible adults, this marginalisation gave them a green light to be as irresponsible as they wanted - thus creating a vicious circle in which girls would dismiss these wastrel youths as a 'waste of space'.

What's needed, therefore, is to help turn men once again into an attractive, marriageable proposition.'

"The gender bender agenda"

Matt · 2 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Also by Melanie Phillips. She is vindicated somewhat in my eyes with this one. :) Excerpt:

'So what do you expect if you have something called an ‘Equality Minister’? She will impose gross injustice wherever she can in the interests of a coercive and preposterous ideology. Harriet Harman’s proposal that companies should positively discriminate in favour of women job candidates (ie discriminate against men) is yet another example of the way in which feminism got hijacked and turned from a campaign for fairness for women into an onslaught against men. Her proposal is not only totally unfair -- job candidates should be appointed on grounds of merit, not chromosomes – but is based on the false premise that the gender pay gap proves that women are the victims of systematic discrimination in the workplace.

But this is simply untrue. Granted that there are indeed specific instances of discrimination against women, the generalised claim is false because it ignores the differences in behaviour between women and men at work. As academics such as Professor Catherine Hakim of the London School of Economics have long argued, such iconic feminist causes as the ‘glass ceiling’ and the ‘gender pay gap’ are in very large measure the outcome of the choices made by women themselves.'

Better get that Louisville Slugger, Mrs. Reid

Matt · 2 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fresh from the news that Sen. Reid once marveled that President Obama had "no Negro dialect," the senate majority leader has now taken to slamming half the American population. During a February 22 floor debate on his jobs bill, Mr. Reid opined, "women aren't abusive, most of the time. Men when they're out of work tend to become abusive."

That quip reaped boatloads of sarcastic ridicule for the four-term senator from Nevada.

Within hours of the gaffe, the National Republican Senatorial Committee scolded Reid for "invoking caustic partisan rhetoric and bizarre analogies," and lectured him to "focus on the actual legislation moving forward and start doing what is best for Nevadans."

Reporters who contacted Reid's office were treated rudely as if to say, "How dare you question the veracity of our Exalted Leader?" Some staffers simply hung up on callers.

...

Nevadans are angry — justifiably so — and are directing much of their ire towards Washington, DC. According to the most recent Rasmussen poll, only 40% of Nevadans plan to vote for Mr. Reid, come November 2. And now that he has stamped the scarlet 'A' on the forehead of every unemployed man in Nevada, that number is certain to drop.

Mr. Reid is beginning to come to terms with the prospect of joining the ranks of unemployed after November's election. So Mrs. Reid, please be careful.'

"Living in a Feminist Male-Hating Matriarchy"

Matt · 2 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Jeremy S, a heads-up to this 5-part production on YouTube:

"Living in a Feminist Male-Hating Matriarchy" - with Michael Beurke and featuring Melanie Phillps

Part 1
Part 2
Part 3
Part 4
Part 5

Bonus clip:
Misandry-Men Don't Exist?

This is really good. Of course I have reservations with, in some ways, the matter is approached, but that is to be expected. All of us will have varying opinions. But overall, this is a fantastic little series.

And I want to stress the importance of watching the "Bonus clip". It is worth the price of admission all by itself. If you forward a YT clip URL re misandry, etc. to anyone, this is the one to use. Major props to 'manwomanmyth'.

Gender-bending chemicals update

Matt · 2 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- Atrazine, a weed killer widely used in the Midwestern United States and other agricultural areas of the world, can chemically "castrate" male frogs and turn some into females, according to a new study.

New research suggests the herbicide may be a cause of amphibian declines around the globe, said biologists at the University of California-Berkeley, who conducted the study. The findings are being published this week in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Researchers found that long-term exposure to low levels of atrazine -- 2.5 parts per billion of water -- emasculated three-quarters of laboratory frogs and turned one in 10 into females. Scientists believe the pesticide interferes with endocrine hormones, such as estrogen and testosterone.
...

Hayes found that 10 percent of the exposed genetic male frogs developed into functional females who copulated with unexposed males and produced viable eggs. The other 90 percent of the exposed male frogs expressed decreased libido, reduced sperm count and decreased fertility, among other findings.

Syngenta, a Swiss company that is the largest manufacturer of atrazine, has challenged the validity of Hayes' study.'

This isn't news. Atrazine has been under a great deal of scrutiny for some time. Google "Atrazine" for more. But there is a lot of stuff out there on all manner of other pesticides, as well as certain kinds of plastics, etc.

YouTube clip shows recent history of "Dad's Week" protests in Los Angeles

MR · 3 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Two years before the first Fatherless Day, L.A. rally was held in 2008, the National Coalition for Men, L.A. recognized the plight of Fathers in Los Angeles by staging a week long protest (Dad's Day Week) that lasted more than 100 hours. It was just the beginning.

Naomi Campbell accused again of assault/harassment-- charges are...?

Matt · 3 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I do believe she could beat up on a man in front of 100 police and they would do nothing to stop her. Add femaleness to fame and you have the power to assault with impunity. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (AP) - A man hired to drive Naomi Campbell told police the supermodel assaulted him from the back seat of a luxury SUV on Tuesday before hopping out and running away.

Police were looking to speak with Campbell, who is known for her feisty temper, and were weighing whether to charge her.

A spokesman for Campbell, who has previously pleaded guilty to assaulting people hired to work for her, said she'll cooperate with police.

"There shouldn't be a rush to judgment," spokesman Jeff Raymond said. "Naomi will cooperate voluntarily, and there is more to the story than meets the eye."

The driver, whose name wasn't immediately released, told police he pulled the black Cadillac Escalade over in midtown Manhattan after Campbell hit him from behind and his head struck the steering wheel, causing bruising under his right eye. He spoke to a traffic agent, who alerted police. Campbell was not at the scene when officers arrived, police said.

The 27-year-old driver, apparently hired just for the day, told police he picked Campbell up at a Manhattan hotel and was taking her to Astoria Studios, a TV and film studio complex in Queens, New York Police Department spokesman Paul Browne said.'

"There shouldn't be a rush to judgment," says her spokesman. Agreed-- unless the suspect is a male movie star or entertainer, in which case... well...

Novella featuring men's rights themes

Sheldon · 4 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Just thought you might be interested in a novella I wrote. An excerpt has been published here. Much of the content of the story and one of the main characters carries a strong emphasis on MRA concerns, which I think might appeal to people here. I am currently trying to get the whole work published. If you are interested in reading it, please let me know.

Ed. note: Only contact info I have for him is via the page itself, possibly through the comments section. But he didn't submit an email address or anything.

Both men and women oppose Women's Reservation Bill in India

arindamp · 4 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Full story here. Excerpt:

'The Women's Reservation Bill (which has been pending for the last 12 years) is a tool of blackmail used by anti-male women to make more and more biased laws, to fuel a gender war and disrupt harmony in the society.

ALL INDIA Forgotten Women's Association (AIFWA) and All India Men's Welfare Association (AIMWA) are holding this press conference to voice their opposition against the 85th Constitutional Amendment Bill (Women's Reservation Bill).

What does the Women's Reservation Bill propose?

Thirty three per cent of all seats in Lok Sabha and state legislative assemblies shall be reserved for women.
...
Why are AIFWA and AIMWA opposing the Women's Reservation Bill?

We believe that public representatives in a democracy should be those who have everyone's welfare in mind and not promoting a specific gender, caste or creed.

Having said that, the proposed Women's Reservation Bill is not meant to actually empower women, but it represents the innocuous face of a hidden agenda to make the situation of Indian men miserable. The Women's Reservation Bill (which has been pending for the last 12 years) is a tool of blackmail used by anti-male women to make more and more biased laws, to fuel a gender war and disrupt harmony in the society.'

Dating violence: At the DoJ, they still don't "get it"

Matt · 4 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

On Tuesday, March 2 the Centers for Disease Control released "Dating Matters: Understanding Teen Dating Violence Prevention," a 60-minute, web-based training program on dating violence.

The program emphasizes the fact that both boys and girls can be perpetrators, and boys and girls can be victims: http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/2010/03/03/when-it-comes-to-dating-violence-cdc-gets-it/

But some people are still floating around in La-La Land, filled with the illusion that girls are never aggressive, and boys are never victims.

One such person is Associate Attorney General Tom Perrelli, third ranking official at the Department of Justice (DoJ). At a recent meeting to launch Teen Dating Violence Month, Perrelli used the phrase "violence against women" four times. Any guesses how many times he commented on "violence against men"?

Zero.

You can see his remarks here: http://www.justice.gov/asg/speeches/2010/asg-speech-100128.html

Obviously the DoJ is out to lunch on this critical issue that faces millions of Americans, male and female. The DoJ Office on Violence Against Women should know better. Tell OVW acting director Catherine Pierce to remove these biased comments from her website:

Email: Catherine.Pierce-at-usdoj.gov
Telephone: 1-202-307-3876

Child custody changes take force in Ontario

Matt · 4 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Changes to how Ontario courts handle child custody cases came into effect March 1, reforms the government says will provide better protection for children.

The move came about, in large part, as a result of the killing of seven-year-old Katelynn Sampson in the summer of 2008.

The child's legal guardian, Donna Irving, was convicted of the murder, along with her boyfriend, Warren Johnson.

A family court judge had granted Irving custody two months earlier without asking about Irving's criminal record.

Now, judges in Ontario must consider record checks and Children's Aid Society reports before giving custody.'

Barbara Kay: How patriarchy ran into its own iceberg

Matt · 4 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Titanic sank in 1912 after hitting an iceberg. Of the 2,200 people on board, 1,517 died. The Lusitania sank in 1915, victim to a German U-boat torpedo. Of the nearly 2,000 people on board, 1,200 died. In addition to carrying about the same numbers of passengers, the demographic composition of the two ships - adults, children, men, women, old, young - was also similar.
...
According to a new study in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, the altruism of the Titanic and the length of time it took for the ship to sink are causally linked. Benno Torgler, study author and economics professor at Queensland University of Technology in Australia explains that circumstances dictate levels of altruism. According to the study, since the Titanic passengers had a few hours to consider their options, "there was time for socially determined behavioural patterns to re-emerge."
...
Yes, women were infantilized in many ways in the patriarchy, which a cynic might say was the driving impulse behind the chivalry of the Titanic's men. But so what? At the moment when it mattered most, the notion that men should above all act as protectors of the vulnerable in times of danger to all committed them to death in the service of others. Was there ever a more noble or selfless act?

The study reminds us that the heroism of the Titanic was a willed phenomenon, and one that feminists do not wish to discuss (I have tried).

Instead of fetishizing the victimhood of women at men's hands and the deviance from our cultural norm that Marc Lepine represented with man-bashing dirges across the land every December 6, would it not make more sense - and would it not be more ethically fitting and socially unifying - to celebrate the more representative manliness of men every April 15, the date of the Titanic's sinking? Still six weeks left to plan it.'

Men Beginning to File More Sexual Harassment Claims

anthony · 5 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From 1990 to 2009, the percentage of sexual harassment claims filed by men has doubled from 8 percent to 16 percent of all claims, according to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Women still file the overwhelming majority of sexual harassment claims with the EEOC and state and local agencies. But lawyers at the commission say they've noticed the increase in complaints by men — more than 2,000 were filed in 2009 out of about 12,700 cases.

Male claims made up about 12 percent of all cases a decade ago, but the percentage has continued to rise even as the overall number of sexual harassment complaints has declined. And last year, the percentage of lawsuits the EEOC filed on behalf of male victims hit an all-time high, making up 14 percent of all cases.

"It's certainly possible that there's more sexual harassment of men going on, but it could just be that more men are coming forward and complaining about it," said Ernest Haffner, an attorney in the EEOC's Office of Legal Counsel.'

'Forcible touching' conviction obtained on testimony

Matt · 5 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Ontario County jury on Thursday found Victor Central School District art teacher Ronald Bartlett guilty of one count of forcible touching and one count of endangering the welfare of a child.
...
With its verdict, the jury ruled Bartlett was guilty of touching the thigh of a then-16-year-old girl who was a student in his commercial arts class during the 2008-09 school year.

Assistant Ontario County District Attorney James Ritts said he is pleased that the victim has been vindicated.

"We've got a victim who came forward and did the right thing for the right reason," he said. "She had nothing to gain and everything to lose."

It is the Democrat and Chronicle's policy not to name victims of sexual abuse.'

Previous related story here. Now compare and contrast this case to others involving female teachers who are caught sometimes even in the act of "having sex" with underage students; many do no time in jail or do not even face criminal charges. Assuming that the verdict in this case is accurate, this male teacher found guilty of "forcible touching" faces a year in jail and loss of his livelihood, and probably also he will have to register as a sex offender as well.

Finally, note it was he said-she said as the evidentiary basis of the conviction, which was handily obtained. No corroborating testimony was required. So should any man out there in reader-land be thinking of becoming a teacher, may I suggest you re-think this decision.

Woman charged with killing husband is a domestic violence lobbyist

Anonymous · 5 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 45-year-old woman, charged with ending a domestic dispute by killing her 26-year-old husband of five days, is a registered lobbyist for a group fighting domestic violence.

Arelisha Bridges was ordered held without bond in the Fulton County Jail. She is scheduled for a preliminary hearing later this month on charges of felony murder, murder, aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony.

Officials said Bridges claimed she was unemployed. But records show she is a lobbyist for an organization called the National Declaration for Domestic Violence Order; its Web site says the group is pushing legislation to create a database of those convicted of sex crimes or domestic abuse.'

Women need to speak out on feminism and the hateful ideology it represents

Matt · 5 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'March is Women's History Month. Time to prepare ourselves for the annual Sista-fest of narcissistic victim-mongering, gleeful male-bashing, and shameless prevarication.

How's this for breathless overstatement, courtesy of President Obama's March 2 proclamation for Women's History Month: "Countless women have steered the course of our history...breaking barriers on athletic fields and battlefields."

Countless women on battlefields have altered the course of history?

Yes, by allowing a far stronger enemy force to decimate and despoil their ranks! (But count your blessings — at least the president didn't spell "history" with "her.")
...
Like the beguiling schoolgirl who keeps elaborating on a little White Lie because everyone has stopped listening to her, the feminist claims have become increasingly shrill.

Take a March 2 BBC headline that screamed, "UN Warns HIV/AIDS Leading Cause of Death in Women." The article went on to claim that "up to 70% of women worldwide have been forced to have unprotected sex." (Note the red-meat words designed to summon every chivalrous male within hailing distance: "forced" and "unprotected.")

The BBC article provided few details and didn't even concede the name of the report. So I set out to search out every nook and cranny of the UNAIDS website.

I never did locate the document.

But according to the UNAIDS, there were two million AIDS-related deaths in 2008, about one million of whom were females. And according to the WHO World Health Report, 8.6 million women die of cardiovascular disease each year.'

Maryland proposal would relax the standards for obtaining protective orders

anthony · 6 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The House and Senate are considering bills that would change the standard of proof needed to grant a final protective order. The bills, H.B. 700 by Del. C. Sue Hecht (D-Frederick) and S.B. 823 by Sen. Jennie M. Forehand (D-Montgomery), would replace the current standard of "clear and convincing evidence" to a "preponderance of the evidence." Maryland is the only state that uses this higher standard when victims -- and generally they are women -- seek orders to protect themselves from their alleged abusers. In all other civil matters, Maryland courts require only a preponderance of evidence.

The House and Senate are considering bills that would change the standard of proof needed to grant a final protective order. The bills, H.B. 700 by Del. C. Sue Hecht (D-Frederick) and S.B. 823 by Sen. Jennie M. Forehand (D-Montgomery), would replace the current standard of "clear and convincing evidence" to a "preponderance of the evidence." Maryland is the only state that uses this higher standard when victims -- and generally they are women -- seek orders to protect themselves from their alleged abusers. In all other civil matters, Maryland courts require only a preponderance of evidence.

Contrary to the fears of some opponents, this would not open up the floodgates to capricious decisions based on false charges. Judges would still be able to judge the credibility of any claim, but they would have more discretion in reaching a decision. Instead of being bound by there being no doubt about a petitioner being in danger, the court would be able to use the more reasonable standard of there being a good chance of danger.'

D.C. to be first U.S. city to give away free female condoms to fight HIV/AIDS

Matt · 6 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The District will become the first city in the United States to distribute female condoms free, part of a project that will make 500,000 of them available in beauty salons, convenience stores and high schools in parts of the city with high HIV rates.

City officials said the distribution could begin within the next three weeks in parts of wards 1, 2, 3, 6 and 7, where a study showed that large numbers of African American heterosexuals engage in risky sexual behavior that could easily lead to infection.

The move is an official acknowledgment of the futility of relying solely on the use of male condoms, which have been distributed citywide for nearly a decade, to stem the District's epidemic of HIV and AIDS. Officials said they are turning to female condoms to give women more power to protect themselves from HIV and sexually transmitted diseases when their partners refuse to use protection.'

Good luck with that. 'Tis been my experience that women are as much put off by having latex between them and their partners as men. But everyone needs to learn the hard way. Perhaps the reason for the pending lack of success will now become that the boys 'forced themselves' onto the girls when the girls insisted they accept use of the female condom. Remember, it's always the boys' fault for anything. Always.

'New York Woman Allegedly Tried to Whack Husband at Bargain Price'

anthony · 7 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'NEW YORK — An affluent housewife in Long Island, New York, accused of hiring a hit man to off her hubby lamented she could only afford to maim him — but then was thrilled to learn she could whack him at a bargain-basement price of just $20,000, authorities told the New York Post.

That's the stone-cold, cost-calculating mentality of sick soccer mom Susan Williams, 43, who allegedly hired an undercover cop this week to whack her husband of 21 years. She was held yesterday on $1 million bail.

The twisted plot didn't surprise her long-suffering spouse, Peter Williams.

His lawyer said the woman "tortured" the poor man with sick lies during their divorce in a grab for their million-dollar Garden City home and other cushy assets.

She even allegedly turned their four kids — ages 11 to 19 — against him.

"I can't believe it took her this long" to try to kill Peter, said his divorce lawyer, Nancy Dreeben.

"She's a desperate woman, and she will just do whatever she needs to do to get what she wants. She's a narcissist."'

UK: Number of men applying to teach soars by 49%

Mr VanHuizen · 7 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The recession has contributed to a spike of nearly 50 per cent in the number of men applying to become teachers, figures showed today.

Statistics released from the Training and Development Agency for Schools (TDA) revealed a 49 per cent increase in male applicants, from 7,885 in the 2008/09 year to 11,721 for 2009/10.

Research suggests that the economic downturn has led to the jump in those wanting to teach, with recession and redundancies forcing people to re-evaluate their career goals.

Maths is one of the main winners. The number of people wanting to teach the subject has soared by 33 per cent.

It will go some way to address a perceived shortage of maths teachers in recent years.'

The Rise and Fall of a Female Captain Bligh

Matt · 7 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not to say there are not abusive commanders in the armed forces who are not also men; indeed, since the vast majority of ship commanders in the USN are men, nearly all abusive ship commanders in the USN are very likely also to be men-- this by deduction. The point of this article appearing on MANN is to show that the dogmatic feminist assertion that by appointing more women to positions of command (naval or not) is likely to make more commanders (as a percentage of commanders) less likely to be abusive or exploit their positions for personal gain is spurious. Excerpt:

'Women are so common in the upper ranks of the U.S. military these days that it's no longer news when they break through another barrier. Unfortunately, the latest benchmark isn't one to brag about: being booted as captain of a billion-dollar warship for "cruelty and maltreatment" of her 400-member crew. According to the Navy inspector general's report that triggered her removal — and the accounts of officers who served with her — Captain Holly Graf was the closest thing the U.S. Navy had to a female Captain Bligh.

A Navy admiral stripped Graf of her command of the Japan-based guided missile cruiser U.S.S. Cowpens in January. The just-released IG report concludes that Graf "repeatedly verbally abused her crew and committed assault" and accuses her of using her position as commander of the Cowpens "for personal gain." But old Navy hands tell TIME that those charges, substantiated in the IG report, came about because of the poisonous atmosphere she created aboard her ship.

The case has attracted wide notice inside the Navy and on Navy blogs, where her removal has generated cheers from those who had served with her since she graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1985. While many denounced Graf, even greater anger seems directed at the Navy brass for promoting such an officer to positions of ever-increasing responsibility. Graf declined an interview request.'

UK press covers the story here as well.

Ottawa Citizen: "Psycho chicks, and other Women's Day thoughts" badgerb · 8 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The Ottawa Citizens resident misandrist Janice Kennedy is at it again spewing well worn falsehoods and vitriol. Excerpt:

'It is a good time to consider that litany of wrongs (a litany I can't help trotting out every year with depressing predictability) that, so far, have shown little sign of disappearing: wrongs like the terrible injustices done to women in cultures that formally encourage their subjugation. Or the shocking gender discrepancy in poverty rates around the world (including here at home, where we don't formally encourage the subjugation of women). Or the abuse perpetrated overwhelmingly by men against women in what is benignly termed "domestic" violence. Or the stark under-representation of women in meaningful decision-making domains, from corporate boardrooms to political arenas, both backroom and front-of-house.'

Yawn The comment section is open. Have at her but be polite.

France: 18-24-YO Males Unemployed at 25.3%

Matt · 8 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Saw the statistic quoted here. I am assuming that, like in other countries, the French statisticians exclude full-time students in this accounting. Excerpt:

'Politicians on both sides said the economy was weighing on voters' minds, with data last week showing the unemployment rate hitting 10 percent in France for the first time in a decade.

More alarming still for the government, a record 25.3 percent of males aged 15 to 24 were registered as unemployed.

"The government's strategy has led to more poverty and more unemployment, so the regional elections have come at the right moment," Socialist party spokesman Benoit Hamon told Canal+ television on Sunday.'

Noticeably absent is any mention of the unemployment rate for women in France in that same age group. Given how incredibly high the 25% figure is, and the lack of the female statistical equivalent being mentioned, I can only assume that French women in that age group are doing better (perhaps a lot) than their male counterparts.

Bride targets former love rival in murder-by-car attempt on wedding night

Matt · 8 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Why was the husband charged? Possibly behaving disorderly after the bride was arrested. Undoubtedly they were both drinking. But I would like to know just why he was charged anyway, other than just assuming he happened to be a passenger in a car driven by a homicidal woman. As to the charge against her, it is I hope the initial charge and that more serious ones are pending. We shall see.

'HYANNIS, Mass. — A newlywed Massachusetts couple spent their wedding night in separate jail cells after police said the bride tried to run over an old flame of the groom.

Police say 22-year-old Hyannis resident Marissa Ann Putignano-Keene tried Monday to run over the other woman and the woman's son in a parking lot. The intended victim later told police that she had previously been in an intimate relationship with the groom.

Police say the couple got married at Barnstable Town Hall and split a bottle of Champagne afterward.

The bride was charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. Her husband, 37-year-old Timothy Keene, was riding in the car with her and was charged with disorderly conduct.

Both were released Tuesday. It was unclear if either had hired an attorney.'

HIV tests offered free to women through Snohomish Health District lance · 8 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

In this story, women/girls of a town in Washington state are being provided with free HIV tests for a day while the men/boys of the same town are not. While the group providing the tests is a "local public health agency" it appears that this only applies to women/girls in the county. Excerpt:

'Women and girls: It's time to get tested for HIV.

That's the message from the Snohomish Health District, which is offering free HIV tests today, Tuesday and Wednesday in support of National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day, which is Wednesday.

District clinics will offer prevention information and free anonymous or confidential HIV tests for females age 14 and older who are at risk for HIV infection from unprotected sex, from injection drug use, or from mother-to-child contact during pregnancy, birth or breastfeeding.'

"Don't Talk to the Police" by Professor James Duane

Matt · 8 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A very good video here defending the Fifth Amendment. Makes reference to Innocence Project exonerees at time mark 11:49.

'Men' Facebook fan-group started

Matt · 8 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From a MANN reader. Thanks, Marie!

"Hi, there!

I just wanted to pass along, for you to post on the website, that I've created a fanpage on Facebook for Men.

Here's the link: http://www.facebook.com/pages/Men/353116132365

Thanks,
Marie"

Abusegate: I-VAWA train wreck is coming!

Matt · 8 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Abusegate Bob:

Friend –

The family is the most protective institution of women and men in the world – that's true in every country, and even more so in low-income countries that have little or no "safety net" for the dispossessed.

One month ago the International Violence Against Women Act was introduced in the House and the Senate. Let's be candid: I-VAWA is a thinly-disguised attempt to export a radical gender ideology and break up families around the world.

Originally, we hoped the rad-fems weren't going to move I-VAWA very fast. But as of today, I-VAWA has 42 co-sponsors in the Senate and 40 co-sponsors in the House. It now appears the liberals are hoping everyone will be distracted by the healthcare reform debate, so they can slip this through while no one is watching.

It is critical that we act promptly to get word out that this bill is a pig in a poke. Instead of helping women, it will harm them by breaking up the family and forcing women to become dependent on the state.

An analysis of the bill is here. Feel free to use this analysis in any way you wish – modify it, elaborate on it, post it, distribute it, whatever. But it's critical that we get word out that I-VAWA represents a raw deal for women, a disaster for men, and would be a devastating blow for families around the world.

Please do whatever you can to help us stop this bill.

Man beaten by Vancouver police files suit against city, cops, investigators

Matt · 8 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Good for him! Excerpt:

'A Vancouver man who was mistakenly beaten by two police officers says Delta police have botched their investigation of the incident.

In the early hours of Jan. 21, Yao Wei Wu, 44, was woken up, dragged out of his house on Lanark Street and beaten by two police officers in plain clothes.

Wu, a tiling subcontractor, suffered fractures to his face and injuries to his legs and back. His eyes were swollen shut. His wife, Chi Nan Man, who was present during the assault, says she has suffered serious psychological trauma.

Vancouver police subsequently apologized, saying the officers had been called to a domestic-violence incident but had got the wrong address.

Police Chief Jim Chu asked the Delta police to conduct an “independent” investigation into the matter.'

F&F: NOW Fires Back at Fathers & Families over DSM Campaign

Matt · 9 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of 50 mental health experts from 10 countries are part of an effort to add Parental Alienation Disorder to the fifth edition of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM V), the American Psychiatric Association's "bible" of diagnoses. This scientific coalition is led by psychiatrist William Bernet, who explains that adding PAD to DSM "would spur insurance coverage, stimulate more systematic research, lend credence to a charge of parental alienation in court, and raise the odds that children would get timely treatment."

Fathers & Families wants to ensure that the DSM-5 Task Force is aware of the scope and severity of Parental Alienation. To this end, in December we asked our supporters to write the Task Force to urge them to consider including Parental Alienation Disorder in DSM-5. As usual, the response was overwhelming. It also helped lead to progress–while as expected the newly-released draft version does not specifically include Parental Alienation Disorder, the DSM-5 Task Force has now listed Parental Alienation Disorder among the "Conditions Proposed by Outside Sources... that are still under consideration by the work groups."
...
The National Organization for Women has learned about our efforts and is concerned about them. They have now sent out an Action Alert to counter our campaign.
...

While Simmons' claims aren't credible, there are legitimate questions to be asked about Parental Alienation Disorder, as there are with all mental health issues. We address many of these in Frequently Asked Questions about Parental Alienation and also summarize the scientific perspective in the Case for Including Parental Alienation Disorder in DSM V.

To participate in our campaign, click here.

International Women's Days counter-indoctination placards from India

Matt · 9 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From a MANN reader:

In case you missed it, yesterday was International Women's Day. I'm passing along the placards they distributed in India featuring the theme, "No more gender war." Great to know our struggle is being waged on the other side of the globe.

-----Original Message-----
From: Uma Challa
Sent: Thursday, March 04, 2010 4:01 AM
To: Uma Challa
Subject: Int'l Women's Day Placards

Attached are the placards I have designed and got printed today.

You are free to print and use them.

Thanks
Uma

Ed. note: The off-linked placards in .pdf format were so good I registered on MediaFire just to make them available.

Fury at ruling in custody battle

Matt · 9 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A MOTHER found by the Family Court to be violent, untruthful, lacking moral values and responsible for the psychological and emotional abuse of her children has been given custody of them.

The father, deemed "principled" and with "much to offer his children", has been effectively banned from seeing his daughters.

The case will spark renewed debate about family law and the issue of shared parenting.

The father, who we will name "Bill" because he cannot be identified for legal reasons, is described by a Family Court judge as no threat to his daughters, a successful parent who is "courteous" and "intelligent".

The same judge found the mother, whom we will call "Jasmine" and who abandoned her first daughter at two and spurned the child's subsequent attempts at reconciliation, had displayed "dreadful", "cruel" and "malicious" behaviour.

...

Historian and Family Court critic Prof John Hirst questions the underlying principles in family law.

"The Family Court by law has to make the children's interests paramount in divorce cases. Everyone thinks this is wise and proper, but to elevate one principle above all others can produce terrible results," he said.

"To stop mothers being tempted to make accusations of sexual abuse and so keep children to themselves, the law should state that any parent making false accusations of this sort will lose the right to be chief carer of the children. If a mother has so turned the children against the father that they don't want to see him, for a time at least the children should be taken into care.

"Even on the present test of child's best interests, it is hard to see how a child will benefit from being left with such a mother. She has burdened the child with the story that her father abused her.

"Then when the child comes of age she will discover that the mother's accusations were false."'

Why Women Are the Biggest Emerging Market

Matt · 9 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. OK, so, oppression everywhere, right? Excerpt:

'What's the biggest emerging market of them all? I'll give you a hint: The answer isn't geographic but demographic. The answer is...women.

Women leaders are the new power behind the global economy, proclaims Deloitte Touche Tohmatsu's announcement of its second annual webcast celebrating International Women's Day. In developing nations, women's earned income is growing at 8.1 percent, compared to 5.8 percent for men. Globally, women control nearly $12 trillion of the $18 trillion total overall consumer spending, a figure predicted to rise to $15 trillion by 2014.

More significant, the majority of tertiary degrees are now being awarded to women. Highly qualified, well-educated and ambitious, these women are taking over the talent pool from Delhi to Dubai and bringing new urgency to the issue of managing diversity.
...
By investing in women in emerging markets, companies are betting on a brighter future — for a workforce just waiting to blossom, for economies whose development depends on this new crop of talent, and, of course, for themselves.'

"Most often children die at hands of young men"

Matt · 9 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BANGOR, Maine — Fathers and father figures are most often the perpetrators of severe physical abuse of children, including cases that result in death, according to law enforcement and child abuse authorities in Maine.
...
Statistics maintained by the Maine Department of Public Safety show that 12 children have died as the result of homicide or manslaughter over the past five years. The numbers show that the youngest, the most vulnerable, are most at risk. Eight victims were under age 3, and most of the children died at the hands of a parent, stepparent or the partner of a parent, according to Stephen McCausland, spokesman for the Maine Department of Public Safety. Click here to see a list of Maine homicide victims under age 18 from 2005 to present.
...
One service that Ricci said he would like to see one day in Maine is long-term home visitation that would specifically target high-risk families. Ideally, the service would be provided until the child reaches school age before development problems from abuse and neglect have a chance to set in.'

Note that comments are disabled for this story. Contact info. for the paper is here.

Pennsylvania woman charged with recruiting jihadists online

Matt · 9 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Can't be right. A woman would never do such a thing. Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA – A Pennsylvania woman has been charged with using the Internet to recruit jihadist fighters and help terrorists overseas.

Authorities say the case shows how terror groups are looking to recruit Americans to help carry out their goals.

A federal indictment charges Colleen R. LaRose with agreeing to kill a Swedish citizen on orders from the terrorists and traveling to Europe to carry out the killing. It doesn't say whether the Swede was killed.

U.S. Attorney Michael Levy tells The Associated Press the indictment doesn't link LaRose to any organized terror groups.
...
The indictment describes LaRose as in her 40s and from Montgomery County, in suburban Philadelphia. LaRose has been in custody since Oct. 15.

Telephone calls placed Tuesday to her federal public defenders haven't been returned.'

Upper house of Indian parliament passes the anti-men female's reservation bill

arindamp · 9 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The upper house of the Indian parliament passed the anti-men female's reservation bill without hearing to the voice of the men. A highly shameful and sexist bill indeed. Excerpt:

'NEW DELHI: After a day of high drama that saw the Rajya Sabha swarm with more than a hundred marshals in blue dresses called in to bundle out seven MPs blocking proceedings, the House recorded a historic vote in favour of a bill providing for 33% reservation for women in Parliament and assemblies.

The legislation is likely to be brought to the Lok Sabha after the vote-on-account has been passed, with the Congress leadership showing that it was not deterred by the bigger strength of the quota opponents in the lower House. It has to be brought to the LS as a logical corollary, said Sonia Gan-dhi although she refused to get into the specifics of the likely time-table.

The vote had been vehemently stalled by anti-women's quota protesters in the RS throughout Monday while the government calculated the political fallout of all-out hostilities with SP and RJD leaders Mulayam Singh and Lalu Prasad. While the government dithered, a handful of dissenters held the House to ransom.'

"O Canada" lyrics to be reviewed the_captain · 10 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Get ready to memorize new words to the national anthem.

Parliament is to be asked to review the "original gender-neutral wording of the national anthem," says the throne speech delivered by Gov. Gen. Michaëlle Jean on Wednesday.
...
Liberal Leader Michael Ignatieff said the initiative to change the lyrics is the kind of "symbolic gesture" the Conservative government makes when it doesn't want to do anything real.

"Anything that makes a national anthem more gender-sensitive is a good thing," he told CBC News.

"But, I mean, no disrespect to those who feel strongly on this issue, but, for heaven's sake, we have some very important challenges and every time the government is asked to do something real, it does something symbolic.

"There's lots of things to do for women that are more important than changing the words of the national anthem, just as there are lots of things to do for pensioners and seniors that are more important than having a Seniors Day."'

Check out the definitions for "MRA" at urbandictionary.com

Sheldon · 10 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I've created a couple of entries for MRA at Urban Dictionary. Please show your support by rating them a thumbs up (that's if you like them of course :)

You may also notice a couple so called definitions there that don't exactly accurately represent what MRA means. Feel free to thumb them down.

Urban Dictionary is a popular website and so it is important for the true meaning of MRA to be accurately represented, and the false meanings to be dismantled.

And please feel free to create a new definition for "MRA" yourselves. It's fairly easy to do because you don't need to register an account.

Teacher Turns Herself in After Alleged 6-Month 'Relationship' With Student

anthony · 10 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 33-year-old Burbank middle school teacher accused of having sex with a teenage male student over a six-month period last year was charged on Tuesday with unlawful sex with a minor, MyFoxLA.com reported.

Amy Victoria Beck, a teacher at David Starr Jordan Middle School, appeared in Burbank Superior Court Wednesday. She did not enter a plea and her arraignment was scheduled for March 25.
...
She did not make bail and remains in the custody of the Burbank Police Department.

If convicted, Beck faces up to seven years in state prison, officials said.
...
Police interviewed the boy "and confirmed that the acts did occur" between March and September of last year, the sergeant said.

The boy was 14 at the time the alleged sexual activity began, and he is now 15, Quesada said. His name was not released.

Beck had taught English and Social Science at the school for ten years, according to The Burbank Leader. She resigned on Friday.

"She’s a well-respected and loved teacher," Principal Sharon Cuseo told the paper. "We’re all shocked."'

Feminism and the Feelings of Men davidcohen188 · 11 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Full Article here. Excerpt:

'A common complaint by women is that "men are not connected to their feelings"
...So, today I am going to talk about my own feelings as a men regarding feminism, in a language that women are able to understand.
...
As most of my peers, I have dreamed about the day where I would become an adult, and my time will come to have my own beloved wife and adorable children. I could not wait to have my own family. It was something that I perceived as a natural stage in my development as a human being.
...
But as I was growing up, things began to change. The newspapers and the TV were suddenly filled with all kinds of weird stories about poor women being battered and abused by their husbands. The Israeli government started making all kinds of weird laws against men, who were suddenly portrayed as the "Enemies of Society". At some point one would feel the need to apologize for having being born with a penis. Divorce rates were on the rise. Israeli courts began to make all those bad policies against men, imposing impossible child support amounts on them, not allowing them to see their children, etc. False Domestic violence and Rape accusations became the new trend. Worst of all, the perception of family in the Israeli society has changed. Families weakened a great deal, and the trust between men and women deteriorated.

When I grew up, I realized that the Israeli family is not what it used to be. I have known some men whose life has been completely destroyed by the Israeli family courts. Their children were taken away from them, the ex-wife interfered with visitation rights, one of them has even been put on a criminal charges because his ex filled false domestic violence allegations against him. All were financially ruined.
...
On the way, I gradually began to lose trust in the whole governmental systems in my country. The government itself, the police, the courts, the welfare systems, are all feminist secret agents now, imposing their evil agenda. The love I felt to my country began depreciating. How can I love such an evil country, that takes away my most basic right, to have a family of my own?

So this is my story. This is how I lost my dream to have a family of my own, and the country that I loved. So no wonder than I am angry. Feminism has brought a social disaster on us. Feminism is destroying families, and the social fabric as a result. So there you go. I was personally hurt and I am angry, just like any other person in my situation would have been.'

Canada: Ex-MP calls for shared parenting

Matt · 11 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to gaining access to their kids, a growing number of divorced fathers say they've been stymied by a police and court system that reflexively views women as believable and men as violent.

It's an emotional topic that dismays many of those who work in the field of domestic violence.

But a growing number of men's groups -- and a private member's bill (C-422) that would amend the Divorce Act by instructing judges to grant equal shared parenting except in proven cases of abuse -- are advancing this view.

One man I spoke to, for instance, says his ex-wife falsely accused him of slamming a van door on her leg. And even though that assault charge was later withdrawn by the Crown attorney, the man says the allegations damaged his reputation during proceedings with a family court judge who restricted his access to his kids.

It's those kinds of situations that the fledgling London Equal Parenting Committee will explore during "an evening of awareness in relation to domestic violence" Thursday at Crouch Library.'

Male/female high school dropout ratios show huge gap

Matt · 11 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Admittedly, this is just one city, and one that has been under great educational distress for some time. But it does reflect the larger trend: girls are beating boys solidly in terms of graduation, and not by a mere couple of percentage points but by solid margins. They are also clobbering boys in terms of grade performance as well, but this is hardly news. And yet feminists still insist there is no boys' education crisis. Excerpt:

'The state education department released graduation rates this week for all high schools and school districts across New York.

Rochester's four-year graduation rate dropped from 52-percent to 46-percent. News 10 NBC wanted to know how the numbers break down for male students and female students.

The city school district today released those numbers. Fifty-two-percent of girls graduate on time while only 39-percent of boys graduate on time.

Dropout numbers are also revealing. According to state figures for the 2008-09 school year, more male students dropped out than female students. Twenty-nine-percent of girls dropped out, while 35-percent of boys did.

Rochester Mayor Bob Duffy is seeking approval in Albany for a City Hall takeover of city schools. City Hall contributes $119-million annually in property tax revenue to the schools. He has a plan to keep boys and girls in school to graduate. "I think first of all you have to meet them where they're at. And one of the things, making sure they are in school," said Duffy.'

39/52 = .75. Boys this past year in Rochester graduated from high school at 75% the rate of girls. For every 4 girls graduating, 3 boys are doing the same.

And the overall numbers are abysmal. Forty-six percent. It's unfathomable to me. I grew up in a small town where people were expected, generally, just to make it out of high school. The graduation rate was nonetheless solidly above 90%, closer to 95%, consistently across years. And you could count on two hands and two feet the number of people with degrees beyond high school in that town, population 5,000. Nonetheless, the H.S. graduation rates were that high. (I'll tell you what, too, people were very slow to get divorced when I was growing up, and despite the fact that sounds like I am referring to 1867, it was not that long ago; it was the 1970s and early '80s. You could safely assume any kid in your school had mom and dad, both living under the same roof.) Now look at what things have come to. These numbers are consistent with what I'd expect to see from a second-world country.

"That's such a huge number, especially for a 16-year-old girl."

Matt · 11 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Sixteen-year-old girl pleads guilty to manslaughter. Presumably, if the perp had been male, 18 years for murder would not have been too much. Excerpt:

'Facing life in prison if her case went to trial, a 16-year-old girl admits she shot a man in the head after some sort of fight last June on Conkey Avenue.

Jessica Arnold was supposed to go on trial next week. The victim was Lamont Smith.

This morning, Arnold pled guilty to first-degree manslaughter. The reason being, her lawyer said, they didn't want to take the risk of going to trial. Arnold would have been tried as an adult on charges of murder and she could have faced up to life in prison if convicted.

On June 13, 2009, Arnold shot and killed 33-year-old Lamont Smith on Conkey Avenue during an argument. Arnold's attorney says there was a crowd, and that she fired in self-defense but prosecutors say that's not the case.

Arnold's attorney talked to News 10NBC about his client accepting 18 years in prison. Arnold's attorney Andre Vitale spoke with her family after the court appearance. Defense attorney Andre Vitale said, “That's such a huge number, especially for a 16-year-old girl. She's going to spend almost as long in state prison as she has alive. And it's really tough to resolve the case in that way but I really think that she has a chance after 15 years to get out and to really move on with her life.”'

Spanish researchers assert that men should feel more random guilt-- just like women do

Matt · 11 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

If it gets any more ridiculous, I will be forced to fall off my chair. Read the inanity here. Excerpt:

'Kim Moldofsky can feel guilt over just about anything — her children, stray cats, her work, her husband. “I am easily guilted,” she told me, laughing.

Meanwhile, her husband, Brad, 41, remains blissfully guilt-free. “He is kind and caring but he can be more detached,” said Moldofsky, a 41-year-old “mom blogger” and social media strategist near Chicago. “Sometimes I want him to get caught up in the emotion.”

So, apparently, does a team of Spanish psychological researchers. In a reversal of Professor Henry Higgins’ plaintive cry “Why can’t a woman be more like a man?,” it suggested that when it comes to guilt, men should be more like women.

Men are guilt-deficient, suggests the study, which was published in a recent issue of The Spanish Journal of Psychology. We lack “interpersonal sensitivity,” while women suffer from destructive guilt largely imposed by society.

So women need support, while men need fixing. “This study highlights the need for educational practices and socializing agents to reduce the tendency towards anxious-aggressive guilt in women, and to promote interpersonal sensitivity in men,” write the authors of the study, which was led by Dr. Itziar Extebarria of the Unversity of the Basque Country in Spain.
...
“Empathy is wonderful,” she continued. “We can share emotions. We can feel someone else’s pain. But that comes at a cost, and that cost is the higher preponderance of anxiety and depressive disorders” in women.

On the other hand, men generally feel guilt less intensely, partly because we have a huge testosterone payload. It makes us take more chances, be more a little more callous about our actions, not spend time worrying about our decisions once they’re made. This is good, argued Sommers*. “Men may be more stoical and that may be adaptive for society. We need to have 25-30 year old men not ruminating” but building, sometimes even fighting.'

("...sometimes even fighting." Well, can't say I agree with her on that.)

Anyway, this is like saying that to make life easier for people who are bound to wheelchairs, everyone else who can walk should likewise be bound to them. Then things would be much better for everyone.

I think Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. wrote a novel that had this as a theme-- that society would in future find ways to hobble individuals based on their strengths so as to "even out" society. Those who were physically strong would have weights attached to their limbs to make them less capable of doing things, so that they were more like "everyone else". People with high IQs would have higher standards to pass to get the same jobs or would be forced to take IQ-inhibiting drugs, etc., to make them "more like other people" in the brains department, etc., etc.

Can't remember the name, but this story reminds me of that book.

---
*That's Christina Hoff Sommers they are referring to.

Australia: "Murder accused wife weeps in court"

Matt · 12 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'An Adelaide woman has pleaded not guilty to murdering her husband by setting him alight at their Unley home in 2008.

Rajini Narayan, 45, wept in Adelaide Magistrates Court as she denied a charge of murder and another of arson.

It has been alleged she poured methylated spirits on her husband's genitals and ignited it, because of an alleged affair.

Narayan also pleaded not guilty to endangering the lives of her three children who were at home.

She will face the Supreme Court in April.'

Woods responders concerned about domestic violence

Matt · 12 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla. – The ambulance crew that responded after golfer Tiger Woods crashed his SUV would not allow his wife to ride with him to the hospital because they thought it was a case of domestic violence, documents released Friday by the Florida Highway Patrol show.

But a police officer who responded said he didn't know where the crew got that information because he never heard it from anyone at the scene.

The reports also show that Woods' wife, Elin, turned over two bottles of pain pills to troopers after the Nov. 27 crash outside the couple's suburban Orlando home.

Tiger Woods crashed his sport utility vehicle into a fire hydrant at 2:30 a.m., and officers found him lying in the street. The SUV had a broken window and the couple told investigators Elin Woods had broken it with a golf club so she could unlock a door and pull him out.'

Small-Town Mom Second American Woman Arrested in Terror Plot on Swedish Cartoonist

anthony · 13 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Last Easter, Jamie Paulin-Ramirez, a 31-year-old mom with a $30,000-a-year job as a medical assistant, announced to her family that she had converted to Islam. A few months later, she began posting to Facebook forums whose headings included "STOP caLLing MUSLIMS TERRORISTS!"

On Sept. 11, she suddenly left Leadville, Colo., a small town in the Rocky Mountains, with her 6-year-old son for Denver, then for New York, to meet and marry an Algerian man she connected with online, her family says. Paulin-Ramirez, who is 5-foot-11 and blonde, phoned her mother and stepfather in Leadville, providing them with an address in Waterford, Ireland, they say.

Now, she is in the custody of the Irish police, along with three other individuals, arrested as part of an investigation into a conspiracy to commit murder, according to officials familiar with the case. The nature of the authorities' suspicions about Paulin-Ramirez couldn't be determined on Friday.'

"My 6-year-old suddenly hates dad...why?"

Matt · 13 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I've seen better from Carolyn Hax.

To see the anti-father bias in both the girl's mother and in Carolyn's response to it, just switch out the sexes. Had the dad been writing in about the mom, what would Carolyn or indeed any other columnist been likely to reply? It exposes the deep suspicion of fathers in our society even by the mothers of their children and the generalized and accepted distrust of men in general. No wonder so many men these days eschew fatherhood or association even with their own children. More even than the misandrist and anti-father court system, it is the attitudes of society in general that allow such things to exist that so well-discourage men from paternity at every turn, never-mind the arguments around human overpopulation or the unaffordability of having children these days.

Except:

From the letter:
'Please help. My 6-year-old has all of a sudden started saying she doesn't want to be around her daddy (my husband). She hates when I leave the house without her and cries before and after he takes her anywhere himself. She used to adore him. My husband is clueless about what brought on this change and so am I.'
...
From the reply:
'Ask your pediatrician, immediately. I would say to ask your 6-year-old directly -- she's certainly old enough to speak for herself -- but you have to be so careful not to put words in a child's mouth that I feel more comfortable steering you to a pro. Also, the more serious the problem is, the more likely she'll struggle to make sense of it enough to put it into words, and/or the more frightened she'll be that telling the truth will get her in trouble.
...
A dad with nothing to hide will presumably support, encourage and participate in this process, both for his daughter's benefit and for his own.'

Female Prison Guards Often Behind Sex Misconduct

anthony · 15 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HELENA, Mont. — Inmate Michael Murphy usually started by seeking a small favor. That would often lead to a kiss or love letters. And in at least five cases, he convinced female prison employees to have sex with him or do other illegal favors.

In each of those cases, the female corrections employees were caught, shamed and forced out of a job, according to documents detailing an investigation by Montana prison officials and obtained by The Associated Press after an open-records lawsuit.

The female officers described Murphy as the aggressor, even as the predator. But that makes no difference in either state or federal penitentiaries, where prison employees — male or female — are the violators if they have sex with inmates.

A Justice Department study shows that cases like Murphy's are common: Female staff are more often implicated than their male counterparts in prison sexual misconduct. While many cases could be considered consensual, incarceration experts and female prison guards say the problem is much more complicated.
...
A 2007 U.S. Department of Justice study analyzing the prevalence of sexual assault in state and federal prisons found that 58 percent of staff perpetrators of sexual misconduct were female.'

Welcome home, men.. sort of...

Matt · 15 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Young veterans returning home to few jobs. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON - The unemployment rate last year for young Iraq and Afghanistan veterans hit 21.1 percent, the Labor Department said Friday, reflecting a tough obstacle combat veterans face as they make the transition home from war.

The number was well above the 16.6 percent jobless rate for non-veterans of the same ages, 18 to 24.

As of last year, 1.9 million veterans had deployed for the wars since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. Some have struggled with mental health problems, addictions, and homelessness as they return home. Difficulty finding work can make the adjustment that much harder.'

"Women earn less than men, despite laws"

Matt · 15 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

More of the same from MSN (think I'll start referring to it as "MainStream Nonsense") ... article here. Again, no mention of life choices, fair comparisons to relevant areas of comparison, etc. Excerpt:

'BRUSSELS - Women with children earn almost a third less than men and still face too many career obstacles, a global trade union said in a report released Monday.

The persistent imbalance in household chores can hurt women's careers, the study of the International Trade Union Confederation concluded. Women with kids earn on average 68 percent of what men make, and overall, women make 74 percent of what men bring in, according to the report.

The report is "a call to action at all levels," Diana Holland, chair of the ITUC's Women's Committee, said in a statement. The publication of the report coincided with the United Nations Day for Women's Rights.

The study said that women with kids more often work part-time than men or women without children, indicating it is hard to combine careers with the demands of a family.

Employers often break laws by paying women less than men and by not giving them enough maternity leave, the report said. Women with kids can also be denied promotions or be illegally asked to take pregnancy tests before being hired, the study found.'

No discussion of men and paternity leave... anyone notice? You will not see MSN or the UN decry this kind of discrimination any time soon, will you?

Fathers & Families Introduces 4 Bills into California Legislature

Matt · 16 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

'Fathers & Families and our allies recently introduced a wide-ranging package of California bills which include child custody reform, child support reform, protection from family court financial abuses, and others. Our lobbying team has spent many months laying the groundwork for these bills, and we are confident of their passage.

California legislation is widely recognized to have an enormous impact on other states and the federal government. California ushered in the era of no fault divorce in 1969, and many of the draconian domestic violence laws common throughout the US were first passed in California in the mid-1990s. The military parent/child custody legislation we passed in California in 2005 has led to the passage of similar legislation in over two dozen states. California losses are national losses–our California victories on this legislation will be national victories.'

India: 'Rape' to be made gender-neutral, to be replaced with 'sexual assault'

arindamp · 16 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The government has decided to amend the Indian Penal Code (IPC), replacing the word "rape" with "sexual assault" in the existing law in order to broaden the ambit of crimes covered under the sections and make the provisions gender neutral.

"The home ministry is working on a draft Bill. It will soon be brought in the public domain for detailed discussion over all the provisions relating to sections covering rape," said a senior home ministry official.

Making sexual assault "gender neutral" will imply that the relevant sections of IPC can be slapped on accused of any gender who has committed the crime.

"The provisions can be imposed on sexual crimes inflicted on women, men and children thus broadening the reach," said the official.'

This is good for men's rights. Now male victims can hope for justice against female perpetrators when the law is changed.

Judge: Winfrey must defend ex-headmistress's suit

Matt · 16 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. As they say in Spain: "When one sleeps with dogs he should not be surprised to wake up with fleas." Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA – Talk show host Oprah Winfrey must defend a defamation suit over remarks she made about a headmistress at her girls' school in South Africa after a sex-abuse scandal erupted there, a U.S. judge ruled.
...
Judge Eduardo Robreno refused to dismiss the suit in a decision Monday, ruling that former headmistress Nomvuyo Mzamane has enough evidence to pursue her defamation claims against the media mogul. Winfrey made the remarks in 2007 after the complaints surfaced at the $40 million Oprah Winfrey Leadership Academy for Girls, near Johannesburg.

A dorm matron who worked under Mzamane was later charged with abusing six students.

Mzamane accused Winfrey of suggesting she was not trustworthy through comments about the need for new leadership and remarks such as "I thought she cared about the girls of South Africa," according to the October 2008 lawsuit.

Winfrey's lawyers argued the remarks, made at an Oct. 20, 2007 meeting with parents and at a Nov. 5, 2007 press conference, reflected Winfrey's opinions.'

"Pelosi Calls All Female Democratic Members Into Meeting"

Matt · 17 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

Imagine this:

"So-and-so Calls All Male Democratic Members Into Meeting"

Imagine the outrage: a sex-specific political meeting called by the Speaker of the House -- would the sex were male. You could hear the cries of sexism all the way down into northern Virginia and back.

Airline’s new restroom policy doesn’t fly with men’s group

Matt · 17 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When he heard the news that Japan’s All Nippon Airways would start offering women-only bathrooms on most of its international routes served by large aircraft, San Diegan Harry Crouch wasted no time in drafting a letter of protest to All Nippon CEO Ito Shinichiro.

Crouch, who heads the National Coalition for Men, based in San Diego, said the policy, implemented March 1, was gender-based discrimination.

“All passengers, male and female, should be treated equally,” Crouch wrote.

The fact that men would be allowed to use the women-only designated lavatory only when few female passengers were on board or in emergency situations is considered a violation of California law by Crouch and his group.

Crouch received a response from All Nippon’s Torrance office the other day, thanking him for bringing the matter to the airline’s attention and explaining that the airline is carefully reviewing the issue with its headquarters in Japan and will have a response soon.

...

Members of the Coalition for Men, which welcomes female members, have filed lawsuits on numerous inequality issues, such as local nightclubs’ “ladies’ nights,” in which women were offered special discounts or benefits. In this instance, a lawsuit would be “way down the road,” said Crouch, who awaits the airline’s full response.'

Author seeks male sexual harassment victims

Matt · 17 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Abusegate Bob:

I am interested in interviewing men who have been victims of sexual harassment at work for an upcoming project. Please forward this request. Thank you.

Philip Cook
Author, "Abused Men-The Hidden Side of Domestic Violence" philipcook1-at-live.com

Female prison guard lieutenant pulls gold grill from man's tooth, leaves him to bleed

Matt · 17 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. And some would still have us believe that female prison guards are actually on the down-side of the "power dynamic". There is no end to the foolishness.

Mom of Missing Baby Delays Case

Matt · 17 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. She makes my skin crawl. Unbelievable what she is trying to get away with. She has admitted to killing her own baby, and now she is refusing to leave her cell?

Of course the commentators speculate she may be "insane". Look for the insanity defense and even if she is convicted of murder, watch for a nice short prison sentence.

In Ontario, Equally Shared Parenting Gets a Boost

Matt · 18 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From Tennessee we go now to Canada on the continuing topic of equally shared parenting. In both the state and the nation, there are bills pending before the legislatures that would establish the presumption of equally shared parenting. And in both, the presumption could be rebutted by a showing that one parent was violent or otherwise unfit. And both bills have substantial backing and momentum, although their ultimate fate remains unknown.

But what a difference a thousand miles or so can make! This article on shared parenting actually deals honestly with some of the issues involved, particularly the issue of domestic violence (The London Free Press, 3/10/10).

(As a brief aside, let me point out that the entire debate about equally shared parenting sometimes seems like nothing more than a debate about domestic violence. In that way, the anti-dad crowd has successfully highjacked the terms of the discussion. And that's a shame since actual incidents of physically harmful DV are fairly rare. As but one example, about three months ago, the government of Scotland published its most recent findings on DV in that country. It found that about 5% of men and 5% of women in intimate relationships had experienced some form of DV in the previous year. Seventy-nine percent of those had suffered no injury whatsoever or simply a "minor cut or bruise.")'

UK: BSB Chairman decries downgrading of paternal role

Matt · 18 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the last half a century there has been a sea change in society's attitude towards same-sex relationships, marriage and the family. Homosexuality has moved from criminal status to legalisation, from legalisation to acceptance and the same respectfulness as heterosexual relationships. We have now reached the stage where, in the event of an election victory, the Conservative leader has promised that civil partners will benefit from extended paternity and maternity leave (in the case of adoption or artificial insemination babies). ...

While changes to the law which have given homosexual couples the same rights and responsibilities as heterosexual couples are welcome, there are two issues involving modern society's attitude towards children which give me unease.
...
Government policy is that men should take financial responsibility for their children and stay in touch with them after separation; that they should take paternity leave and be involved. There is a wealth of research showing that children need fathers, not just two parents.-->

<--Children need to see complementary roles, the relationship between the sexes, a microcosm of society, as they grow up. Recent reports have placed Britain at the bottom of international league tables for the welfare of children and we know that boys without fathers do worse at school and turn to worse role models. Research shows that their presence gives girls as well as boys advantages in educational and social development. The limit to same sex relationships is that they cannot be a reproductive unit in a way that is best for the welfare of the child if they cut out all contact with members of the other sex or falsify the birth registration. Tolerance of both types of parenting has to be ensured.'

The BSB is a very significant body in the UK. Read about it here. Their site is here. Not only is this article written by the head of the BSB, note that who that is: Ruth Deech, Baroness Deech. Nice to see some people in positions to make a difference are finally coming around to reality.

Cops: Man lured by ex, sodomized

Matt · 18 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The 29-year-old man told his former lover that he had romance on his mind Sunday night.

His ex, Renada Williams, 28, told him she did, too, but Philadelphia police said she had on her mind a brutal plan of revenge against him.

With her former lover nude and ready for romance at her place, police said, two thugs, 16 and 20, showed up and brutalized him with a broomstick.

Police said they sodomized the man, then pummeled him with the broomstick. After the ordeal, the two tied up the unidentified victim with electrical cords.'

"A generation of women bred to work"

Matt · 18 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Our careers were proof that generations of oppression were over, the revolution complete and women were finally "free". As Lady Gaga, the icon of striving and ambition, said this month: "Some women choose to follow men, and some women choose to follow their dreams. If you're wondering which way to go, remember that your career will never wake up and tell you that it doesn't love you any more." Her comments caused a blog storm, as recession-weary women asserted that you can most certainly wake up and find that your career doesn't love you any more, and to put career ahead of love and family can be a dangerous mistake.

...

Our mothers wanted to go out to work for many reasons — independence, freedom, fulfilment — but mainly, they wanted to do it because men did it and their work was more valued. So we set a new rule, saying we'll go out to work, too (if you do 50% of the house and kids' stuff — okay, do 30% and I'll pretend it's 50%). And in one generation we have reversed the situation, so that a man who earns enough for his wife to stay at home is doing her a favour. Economically, the woman who has time to stay at home and cook her children a dinner from scratch is not downtrodden, but privileged.

...

Yet the drudgery of cleaning and cooking and child-rearing, it has now transpired, was important skilled labour. So skilled, in fact, that we now need television programmes to show us how to clean our lavatories, rear our children and cook our dinners. The most basic housekeeping skills — such as working out a weekly budget and sticking to it — seem to have eluded us. Debt? Our grandmothers did not know what that meant. Could they have imagined their granddaughters would spend half a month's wages on a handbag and the other on Marks & Spencer's ready meals? Or throw out a perfectly good blouse because of a missing button, or not know how to bake a batch of buns without looking up a recipe in a lavishly illustrated cookbook?'

ABC News: New Study Shows Boys Lagging Behind Girls in Reading

anthony · 18 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Girls are reading better than boys, according to a new study by the Center on Education Policy, and the pattern is giving girls a life-long advantage, experts tell ABC News.

Boys are lagging behind girls on standardized reading tests in all 50 states, the research suggests. In some states, the boys are trailing girls by as much as 10 percentage points.
...
So why the gap?

For reading, one theory points to differences between the brains of boys and girls. While girls' brains are more verbally oriented, often making reading skills easier for them, boys' brains are visually oriented.

Another theory is that boys are more physically restless than girls. Even recess time has been cut in some schools in the push for better achievement test scores.

"[Boys] can read, but they need to be moving around or they need to be doodling, they need to be doing something that's activating their brains," said Dr. Michael Gurian, a family therapist.

The problem extends beyond high school.

"There's a consistent pattern here that says boys are not learning how to read as well as girls," Jennings said. "They're dropping out of school at greater rates than girls. They're going to college at lower rates than girls, and they're getting their college degrees at lower rates than girls."'

Study: Helpful Dads Damage Mother's Self-Esteem at Home

anthony · 19 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The competence of diligent dads helping out at home is damaging the self-esteem of "super-moms" who feel caught between work and traditional child-rearing roles, according to a new study revealed by LiveScience.

The University of Texas at Austin interviewed 78 dual-earner couples who had eight-month-old infants, measuring them on two types of self-esteem — self-liking and self-competence.

Researchers asked the parents to talk about their partner's strengths and weaknesses and rated their responses.

They found that among mothers who thought their partners were competent caregivers, the more time those fathers spent alone with their children, the lower the mother's self-competence rating was.

"In American society, women are expected to take a main role in parenting despite increasingly egalitarian sex roles," said study researcher Takayuki Sasaki of the Osaka University of Commerce in Japan.

"Thus, we believe that employed mothers suffer from self-competence losses when their husbands are involved and skilful because those mothers may consider that it is a failure to fulfil cultural expectations," Sasaki said.'

Female sexual abusers not as rare as widely believed

Scottie · 20 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story from the National Post here. I found the story was actually (comparatively) reasonable. It even touches upon the fact that the legal system is not reflecting what really goes on. However, the story does end with a typical quote from a police detective:

"The predominant offender in Internet child exploitation is males," said Windsor police Det. Jason Belanger. "They're out there, but if you do get a female offender, you're surprised."

Still, if one reads carefully, it would be clear that quoting a cop is not a good source.

If someone can find a contact e-mail for the author, Sarah Sacheli, it might be worthwhile to send a note commending the story but questioning the inclusion of the quote from the police officer.

Los Misandry - a video parody of the domestic violence industry

MR · 20 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Beneath the facade of domestic violence law exists an anti-male bias that destroys innocent men. Los Misandry is a slide show/video parody about modern domestic violence laws and the taxpayer funded, domestic violence industry that often follows gender-feminist, political ideology more than, the U.S. Constitution and other U.S. laws.

I-VAWA: liberal lies tempt women to embrace a radical agenda

anthony · 20 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Behind its innocent-sounding name, the International Violence Against Women Act will fund "female empowerment" programs that would serve to break up families, vilify men as abusers, and leave millions of women dependent on the state.

The bill does that by defining domestic violence expansively to include "coercion" and "psychological harm," convincing women to call the police at sign of the first sharply-uttered word, and then slapping a restraining order on the couple that has the effect of precluding partner counseling or reconciliation.

I'm not going to claim that Democrats Sen. John Kerry or Rep. Bill Delahunt of Massachusetts truly desire to undermine the fundamental family unit. But the fact is, their bill is awash in a sea of Orwellian half-truths that are designed to scare women out of the protective embrace of the family.

If even half the bills' 15 findings were truthful, I might think about supporting the International Violence Against Women Act. But it turns out to be a sham, a scientific legerdemain that calls to mind the United Nations' now-discredited predictions on global warming.'

'Year of Hell' after false rape claim

anthony · 20 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Mangakino man falsely accused of raping a 14-year-old girl says the stigma is something he'll never be able to shake.

Leonard Joseph, 42, is a shattered man. The pain and distress the ordeal have caused him and his family are evident on his face as he relives his "year of hell".

Mr Joseph was last week acquitted at the High Court in Rotorua on all charges relating to the alleged rape of the 14-year-old Mangakino girl in March, 2009. The charges he faced included abduction, forcibly taking a minor and rape.

The jury took just seven minutes to come back with a not guilty verdict following a five-day trial.

His mother, Shirley Joseph, broke down in tears as she described that day.

"I stood by my son 100 per cent all the way through this," she said from her Tokoroa home.

"We have gone to hell and back. I knew he wasn't guilty."'

Police, deputies charge women with filing false reports

anthony · 20 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PANAMA CITY BEACH — A woman who accused a sheriff's deputy, a jail officer and a club security guard of rape has been charged with filing a false crime report in addition to disorderly conduct.

Kimberly Mills, 22, of McDonough, Ga., was taken to the Bay County Jail early Monday after a sheriff's deputy said she locked a friend out of their hotel room, fought with her and resisted when he tried to intervene.

She was arrested for disorderly conduct but resisted on the way to a patrol car, according to an incident report, eventually accusing the deputy of raping her.'

Woman arrested for false rape claim

anthony · 20 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) - Police say a Las Cruces woman has been arrested for falsely claiming that she had been sexually assaulted.

Police say 20-year-old Michelle Holcomb is charged with one count of filing a false police report. She's jailed at the Dona Ana County Detention Center on $1,000 bond.

Police say were dispatched to Holcomb's home Sunday afternoon after the woman claimed that she had been drugged and raped during a party Saturday night. She was taken to Memorial Medical Center for an examination while detectives followed up on her allegations.'

Evidence shows rape allegations false

anthony · 20 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MANKATO — Text messages saved by an Iowa man, as well as reports from other witnesses, helped get him released from jail and out from under false rape charges.

Referring to 23-year-old Anthony James Weatherman of Milford, Iowa, as an “all-American boy,” attorney Thomas Hagen said his client was the real victim in allegations that led to his arrest in September.

A woman accused Weatherman of raping her during a college football victory party, but felony charges were dismissed after investigators learned more about what happened at the Sept. 6 party near Minnesota State University.

“Basically, what she said was a lie, and no rape occurred,” Hagen said. “He played basketball in high school, he’s a member of the National Guard. It was just totally out of his nature, these allegations that were made.”

The woman told police she was sleeping before Weatherman forced her to have sex. Weatherman was arrested, charged with first-degree criminal sexual conduct and jailed until he was able to post a bond for his release more than a week later. His bail had been set at $75,000 but was later reduced to $10,000.'

Upcoming campaign: Turning the Tide, May 1-16

Matt · 20 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Real hope and change – that's the thought that passed through my head when I heard the San Diego Domestic Violence Council has just awarded a grant to the National Coalition for Men, a men's rights organization.

Of course, we have a long way to go, but for the first time, the wind is filling our sails.

So we're now pleased to announce an upcoming 2-week campaign, "Turning the Tide." We picked that title because after 5 years of hard work, we're beginning to see the fruits of our labors!

Girl beats 42-YO woman nearly to death in 'game'

Matt · 21 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. But she wasn't alone. I wondered about posting this since it strikes me as being more about how we are producing "feral youth" now instead of children on their way to becoming adults, some of whom occasionally did something wrong that landed them in trouble. The perp in this case could have just as easily been male. Far cry from the days when the "bad kids" were just smoking cigarettes and writing beatnik poetry. Excerpt:

'Two residents of Southwest Philadelphia were injured - one of them seriously - in separate, recent attacks by youth engaging in a violent game they have dubbed "Catch and Wreck," police said tonight.

Lt. John Walker of Southwest Detectives said tonight a 12-year-old girl has been charged with aggravated assault and related offenses in connection with an attack on a 42-year-old woman Friday night, and additional arrests are expected.

In the game, a group of children between the ages of nine and 15 congregating at the Finnegan Playground at 69th Street and Grovers Avenue beat, strike and stomp adults they believe may be homeless, Walker said. He said neither victim in the two attacks was homeless.'

Barbara Kay: The suicide double-standard

Anonymous · 22 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog post here. Excerpt:

'And men, of course, are far more likely to commit suicide than women altogether, although the fact is rarely brought to public attention as a matter for special concern, even when it would be appropriate to do so. Three students at Cornell University in New York State in the last month alone committed suicide by jumping off a bridge on the campus into a deep gorge. These were not “cries for help” — they were irrevocable decisions to die. The students were male. Yet Cornell president David Skorton said that “… suicide among young people is a national health crisis.”

Well, it isn’t a crisis amongst young people, but it is a crisis amongst young males. In Canada over 80% of suicides are male (77% in the U.S.). Suicides amongst men rise dramatically after separation or divorce, especially amongst men deprived of their family home and children, while suicide rates amongst women remain flat.

If the figures were reversed, and women were committing suicide at the rates of men, we can be sure that it would be considered a national crisis, one on which a great deal of money, media attention and authentic concern would be lavished. As of now, the only research being carried out on male suicide is being done by activists in the fathers’ rights movement.'

Idaho Senate votes to shield young men from rape charges

anthony · 22 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'BOISE, Idaho (AP) - Young males who have consensual sex with their 16- or 17-year-old girlfriends would be shielded from rape charges, under a bill passed 35-0 by the Senate.

Sen. Brent Hill, a Rexburg Republican, told lawmakers Monday he doesn't believe "an 18-year-old boy who makes an indiscretion with his 17-year old girlfriend should be considered a rapist or a criminal in the same category as those degenerates."

Idaho's age of consent for females is now 18.

With Hill's measure, which now goes to the House, men within three years of their 16-year-old or 17-year-old girlfriends could no longer be charged with rape after consensual encounters.

His bill leaves all fornicators - Idahoans who have sex out of wedlock, regardless of age - subject to six months in jail, under an old Idaho law.'

UK: Harriet Harman's 'unreliable statistics on rape scare off victims'

anthony · 22 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman was ordered to stop misleading the public about rape by an official inquiry report yesterday.

The Equalities Minister was accused of pumping out unreliable figures about the low number of rapists brought to justice, thus discouraging victims from reporting attacks.

The review by Baroness Stern appeared to put an end to years of claims by ministers that laws and criminal procedures for dealing with rape need radical reform because only six per cent of complaints end in a conviction.
...
The six per cent figure relates to reported cases. In fact, the conviction rate for those actually charged with rape is nearly two out of three, higher than comparable figures for other violent crime.

The report's view is doubly humiliating for Miss Harman because it was she who set up the review.

Instead of condemning low conviction rates and demanding legal reforms - as ministers have repeatedly done over the past six years - Lady Stern said there should be more help for victims and greater use of police intelligence to track down men who serially attack and rape strangers.

Her report said: 'The figure for convictions of those charged with rape as the term is normally used is actually 58 per cent.

'There is concern that the six per cent figure can make victims feel it is not worth reporting.
...
Last summer the watchdog UK Statistics Authority accused Miss Harman of 'undermining public trust' by exaggerating the pay gap between men and women.

Baroness Stern's report criticised 'sharp failures' by police in the cases of John Worboys, a taxi driver who was convicted of 12 attacks on women and may have committed more than 100, and Kirk Reid, suspected of 71 offences.

It called for sharing of police intelligence across London boroughs and for forces to consider specialist rape units.

Lady Stern also said the Ministry of Justice should study numbers of false rape accusations. Because the alleged victim's anonymity is guaranteed by law, critics say false claims can be made with impunity.
...
Lady Stern also said there should be an end to targets for rape convictions for the police and the Crown Prosecution Service; better forensic examination of complainants; better video evidence schemes for witnesses, improved compensation procedures for victims, and more explanation of sexual offences law to young people.'

Cops: Woman's lie about rape led to lover's beating, sodomy

anthony · 22 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here (originally appeared on MANN here). Another classic case of getting someone else to do your dirty work by lying to them. "Outsourced sexual assault," courtesy of a vengeful ex-girlfriend. Of course it doesn't exonerate the two men involved, either. Let it be a warning to men who think that to take up the cause of a woman claiming an offense (and then acting without referring the matter to proper authorities) is a great way to find yourself behind bars along with her. Excerpt:

'Renada Williams told her alleged cohorts in crime that her lover had raped her and that she had come up with a horrific plan of revenge, which left one police veteran cold.

"This type of crime shocks your consciousness," said Capt. Jack McGinnis, of Northeast Detectives. "I've been doing this for 38 years and this is really bad. How can people treat each other like this, and how do you bring a 16-year-old into this?"

While Williams stood by in her Frankford home, her acquaintances, Shawn Aiken and the teen, allegedly beat her 29-year-old lover with their hands, a 4-by-4-foot wood plank, extension cords and a mop.

The perpetrators allegedly yelled at their victim, "You raped her!" He responded, "I didn't do that, I didn't do that."

But the pair believed Williams, and continued to punch the victim, McGinnis said.

The victim was then "violated with the mop stick repeatedly over time," undergoing nearly 24 hours of torture, according to the victim and police.

...

McGinnis said that police still don't know why Williams came up with the plan. She gave a rape motive to acquaintances, Aiken and the teen, but never told any friend that she had been raped, he said. She did not report it to Philadelphia police, he said.

The victim told police that he never raped her, but that the two had argued the week before.'

Canada: The talk you must have with your teenage son

Anonymous · 22 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A clinical psychologist and parenting guru spreading false stereotypes in a national newspaper. Excerpt:

'I've written about how to talk to teenage sons about responsible sexual behaviour – being considerate, always, of the wants and feelings of a potential sex partner.

But there's another talk you should have with your son: It is about abuse.

Many teenage boys – it has probably always been so – are abusive to their girlfriends. Most are not, but many are. How can you know whether your teenage son is abusive, or potentially abusive, with women? You can't.

That's why it's important for you to talk outright with your son – about what constitutes abuse, and why such behaviours are flat-out wrong. Many of the behaviours that I will list seem obvious. But most boys who abuse their girlfriends either do not think that what they are doing is abuse or think that it's somehow justified.
...
Many boys abuse their girlfriends. I'm not saying that I think you will or that you do. But many boys abuse girls, and I want you to know clearly what abuse is. All the things that I'm about to talk about are abuse and are not acceptable under any circumstances. It's a pretty big list, but you must not do any of these things.

You can't grab a girl hard, ever.

Never hit a girl.

If a girl gets physical with you – either hitting or kicking or threatening you with physical harm – leave right away. Hitting a girl in self-defense is not okay. Leave.

If you are in an argument and are mad and you get very close to a girl, you must back away. An in-your-face angry guy is often genuinely scary, even though you may know that you will do nothing physical.'

Author's info page is here.
Author's email is awolf-at-globeandmail.com

Indiana Governor Signs F & F-Inspired Bill to Protect Disabled Parents from Family Court Abuses

Matt · 23 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here.

'Although federal law is clear, judges are often ignoring it and calculating veterans' disability compensation into divorce settlements as a divisible asset. Very often these payments are the only assets a veteran has. When judges include it as income, it creates great hardship for those veterans, who rarely have the resources to hire legal help to contest the taking of their benefits.

Last year Fathers & Families' legislative representative Michael Robinson successfully worked to pass California SB 285 (Wright) which protected disabled veterans' VA disability compensation, and has worked with advocates and legislators from several other states on similar legislation.

One of the first of these is Indiana HB 1165. A military parent bill also modeled on SB 285, HB 1165 was signed into law last week by Indiana Governor Mitch Daniels. Thanks to Indiana activist/lobbyist Lisa Wilken for her fine work on the bill.'

Male Studies Symposium at Wagner College - April 7, 2010

Matt · 23 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

I am working with a group of academics, primarily psychologists and psychology professors. In response to a lack of understanding of male physiology, psychology, biology and behavior, their foundation is working to introduce a new program of male studies to colleges and universities worldwide.

In light of catastrophic issues men and boys face today - from hatred, disproportionate job losses, dwindling enrollment at colleges, and a biased legal system, this is a much-needed course of action.

I was wondering if you could take a few minutes and visit our site at http://www.malestudies.org/. Please help us by writing about our April 7 conference, in which scholars will introduce a new academic discipline.

Also, if you can suggest anyone else I can contact about this, I would be grateful.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Joseph Notovitz
wagnerconference-at-malestudies.org
Male Studies Foundation

New book: "The Male Brain" - more from the "men need fixing" department

Matt · 24 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video interview with the author here. Of course, men need fixing, and we are inherently flawed vis-a-vis women and we need to focus on "fixing" men relative to women. Our tendency to move to fix problems rather than emote about them is a big flaw that apparently needs fixing. She even uses the term "civilizing" when referring to men who are unfaithful to their mates. (Starts at time mark 1:48.)

"Civilizing".

As if to be civilized is equal to being faithful. So as in the examples they took (Tiger Woods and John Edwards), these men are by implication "uncivilized" since they are unfaithful. This would mean that John F. Kennedy was uncivilized. Indeed, most of our presidents have been uncivilized then, and virtually every man who has ever been a monarch has been uncivilized, and I wonder, would that also include the many female politicians and other kinds of leaders in history that also have been unfaithful to their mates? Are they also uncivilized?

Can you imagine how greeted a book written by a male researcher that had comparable criticisms of females, and how they need "fixing" to be more like men, and perhaps to be a little less conservative in their sexuality? Probably by violent protests.

Amazon.com sells the book here. The author's web site is http://www.louannbrizendine.com/. You can contact her here.

I also noticed she had a previously-published book entitled The Female Brain. I wonder if she suggests therein that women must be "civilized" for this or that reason, against their "natural inclinations"? And wow, just look at some of those comments on that book, too!

More junk science, promulgated by junk-mainstream-media.

UK: Rallying call for group championing men's rights at Oxford University

Matt · 24 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'AN OXFORD University student who set up a group championing men's rights is hosting his first get-together at the weekend.

Alex Linsley, 20, a second year economics and management student at Merton College, launched the Man Collective-Oxford in November.

He set up the organisation to provide man-to-man support after noticing the high number of young men committing suicide in Oxford.

Now, working with friend Marc Quinn, he is hoping to bring like-minded men together at an event called The Gathering, to explore everything from healthcare to sexuality and gender policy.

He said: "Although there is quite an established network and movement of guys who are taking a stand and starting to challenge society's expectations of them in the States, in the UK there is really nothing similar."'

Intact America petition needs more signatures

Matt · 24 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From a recent IA email:

We will be delivering the petitions to CDC headquarters in April with the hopes of convincing them to make the right decision.

But we're still just 4,973 shy of our 25,000 signature goal.

Will you please ask your friends and family to join you in signing the petition to make sure the CDC gets the message that infant circumcision is painful, risky, and ethically wrong? Click here to send them a quick note now.

Based on flawed studies that ignore the risks and ethical concerns of infant circumcision, the CDC may recommend this unnecessary surgery for our baby boys.

We know that safe sexual practices and abstinence – not circumcision – prevent sexually transmitted diseases. And we know that there is NO link between infant circumcision and better health.

We need your help to make sure that the CDC gets the message – and we're just 4,973 signatures away from making sure our voices are heard loud and clear.

Help us reach our 25,000 signature goal by March 31 – ask your neighbors, parents, adult kids, co-workers, siblings, and friends to join you in signing the petition to the CDC today.

Thank you again for all that you do.

Sincerely,

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America
http://www.intactamerica.org/

Financial Post Mocks Millions of Unemployed Men: "Who's The New Head of the Household?"

Anonymous · 25 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Men have lost 10 times as many jobs as women but that's a good thing. Just ask the Financial Post. Apparently their advertisers are demanding more girl power and emasculation than usual.

Article here (don't forget to leave a comment. Despite the nauseating, gender-baiting headline, the story isn't quite as misandrist as you might expect. It is, however, full of the usual nonsense about how great it is that more and more men are losing their livelihoods and the antiquated, sexist notion that men somehow owe women a lifetime of support.

Remember, it's not sexism or controlling behavior when women do it.

Abusegate poster now available

Matt · 25 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Thanks to the efforts of Paul Elam, editor in chief of Men's News Daily, Abusegate now has an official poster! This can be placed on your website, handed out to your friends, or turned into a larger poster suitable for hanging on a wall or some other appropriate place.

Let's get the word out: "Abusegate, Investigate!"

UK: Daily Mail pans Obama for his "boys' club", with inference to Antichrist characteristics

Matt · 25 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

At the risk of opening a Pandora's Box with this posting, I direct you to this story. Let me be clear: This is not about politics or the recent health care bill that just got passed. This is about how the picture caption is worded, as follows:

"Just another boys' club: Barack Obama, centre on the phone, is surrounded by male aides at the White House as they plot healthcare reform this week in a new image released today. The President has been compared to the Antichrist"

In one paragraph a group of presidential aides, who happen to be all men, and the concept of said president as being the Antichrist, are all mentioned. (Most of us know the the president has a number of female aides as well; they just are not in this particular picture.) I don't see the caption's wording here as a coincidence. This is sexism of the worst kind: An all-male group of men = these being in service to the Antichrist, by inference. Would a picture like this one, if we had a female president surrounded by female aides, get the same kind of wording? I very much doubt it.

"Why Would Anyone Protest Against the Women's Studies Program at Columbia?"

Matt · 25 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I'd say we could contribute to the discussion in the comments section. Excerpt:

'On the morning of April 8th the Federal Court in New York City will hear the oral argument in a Federal suits against the Women's Studies Program at Columbia University.

The lawsuit claims that students, male and female, as well as the nation, are being harmed by the misapplication of monies under Title IX. which states that: "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance..." (Title Nine is most commonly evoked to ensure equal opportunities for girls and women in high school and college athletics but is obviously being used here to challenge the use of funds for women's education) There is a demonstration being planned to support this lawsuit and the preceding day there will be a special seminar and a webinar at Wagner College in support of this issue.

At first glance this lawsuit seems to be ridiculous. We all know that programs such as this one have been part of social change which has brought well deserved equality to women from the early suffrage movement to where we have seen a viable woman candidate for President of the United States. Certainly in education we have seen the number of women undergraduates in the United States outnumber men.
...

Australia: Predatory woman robs elderly men

MichaelClaymore · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Seems there's a woman going around Sydney's poorer suburbs robbing men in their eighties! She must have been hiding behind the door when God was handing out that famous female compassion. Excerpt:

'Elderly men are the favoured prey of a woman who makes sexual advances then robs her victims.

Police are investigating up to 40 incidents in Sydney's west and inner western suburbs over the past month or so.

In at least three cases, victims have described the same woman, who has indecently assaulted at least one man.

The woman has introduced herself as "Katie" and on one occasion followed an 86-year-old man home from the pub and once inside his house, stole cash.'

Is Being Male Hazardous to Your Health?

Michael · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ask any man and he's sure to say that the male sex is the stronger one. It's easy to see why: Men are bigger than women, so we can lift more, run faster, and jump higher.

But ask doctors of either gender, and they're likely to say that women are actually stronger, at least where health is concerned.

How much stronger and why? What can men do to become healthier and keep up with women? The answer isn't very complex. Men need to be more like women. That means understanding our bodies, taking better care of ourselves, and getting the medical care we need.
...
In the U.S. and around the world, women live longer than men. The average American woman has a life expectancy of 80.4 years while American men lag 5.2 years behind at 75.2 years. At every age, starting at conception, males have a higher death rate than females.'

Fathers and bias in the Family Court

Anonymous · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Let's play the pedophile card when we run out of reasons to oppose shared custody. Excerpt:

'A recent decision by the Family Court of Australia suggests that it is out of touch with general community standards and reveals that the law needs further amendments.

A father who was charged and convicted of downloading child pornography has been granted weekend overnight access to his two young daughters. He was previously found guilty in a criminal court of downloading internet material that by its nature is produced from the actual abuse of children. Furthermore, he was found guilty of “reproducing” child exploitation material.

The judge ordered that during the weekend overnight contact, he must have a friend present in the house and that the children’s bedroom door needs to be locked at night. In the comments section to the news article about this decision, comment number 69 asks, “What is it about the Family Court that keeps doing this? This is NOT the first time it has happened. Why is the court giving sex offenders access to children?”
...

One indicator that their contentions are not true and that the Family Court does not have a bias against “fathers” is revealed by the simple fact that despite the use of the word “fathers” by the fathers’ rights campaigners, most separated fathers in Australia do not end in the Family Court. Their repeated use of the plural word “fathers” gives the false impression that they represent a great number of separated fathers in Australia. However, the Family Court statistics indicate that the number of cases that proceed to trial is about 5-6 per cent of the cases that actually present to the Family Court. That means that of all the couples that separate in Australia, 95-96 per cent do not end up in the Family Court. That also means that the accusations that the Family Court is biased against “fathers” in general cannot be accurate, especially when the claim is couched in terms that give the impression that the problem of fatherlessness in Australia is due to the Family Court.'

First 'prostidude' leaves Shady Lady Ranch, object of sexual harassment by media and coworkers

Anonymous · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Interesting double standard. Excerpt:

'As far as she is concerned, the way the media in general attacked Markus was more than unfair; it was a double-standard.

"Several papers just cremated him. If it was a woman, they never would have gotten away with it," Davis said.

But no one was quite as cruel as the working women from some other Nevada brothels who posted about Markus on the discussion boards of their Web sites. "They were unmerciful," she said.

Even a few the women at the Shady Lady were "bitchy" about having to work alongside a man, Davis said.

"I don't know why. It's not like they're competing for the same customers."'

South Korea: Law passed requiring 40% of teachers must be men

Anonymous · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Original story in French here. Translation into English is here. It seems that in some Asian countries, politicians really want to increase the number of male teachers. Excerpt:

'The educational bureau of the city of Seoul pushed for a quota system to guarantee a certain number of men among teachers of primary and secondary schools in an attempt to prevent women dominate the profession, it was learned official sources, Wednesday, March 26, 2008.

In the Korean capital, women represent 83% of primary teachers, revealed the Municipal Office for Education (Seoul Metropolitan Office of Education), which will propose revising the Ministry of Education, Science and Technology in the day.

According to Seoul City, the female raises one hand a problem for male students who do not find in their teachers figure "models" and secondly it generates problems of administrative management.

"To reduce gender disparity teachers, laws should be revised, which can be done by the Ministry of Education, said an inspector of schools in the city of Seoul.'

Abusegate: Turning the Tide campaign -- starts 5 weeks from now!

Matt · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

2010 is the year we get out of damage-control mode. 2010 is the year we stop the VAWA juggernaut. 2010 is the year we turn it around.

That's why May 1-16 will be an all-out, super-duper, we-really-mean-business campaign called "Turning the Tide."

During the 2 week campaign, we are asking organizations around the country to hold some kind of event or organized activity such as:

- Table at a community fair
- Distribute Abusegate flyers to community residents
- Post the (just released!) Abusegate poster at local businesses
- Do a phone-a-thon directed at state legislators
- Get on a talk-radio program
- Hold a press conference
- Give a talk at a local college
- Hire a sky-writing airplane – YES, THE SKY'S TRULY THE LIMIT!

Our goal is for at least 10 organizations around the country to have an event or activity that month.

The campaign is starting 5 weeks from now, SO LET'S GET STARTED!

Questions? Email barbara-at-saveservices.org

P.S. Registration for the May 6-7 Spring Cleaning event in Washington DC will begin this coming Monday. Stay tuned: http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/

Sandra Bullock on Cheating Husbands: 'I'd Get the Baseball Bat'

anthony · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When "The Insider" asked Bullock about her thoughts on Tiger Woods' infidelities at the People's Choice Awards Jan. 6, she replied, "If I were [Tiger's wife] Elin [Nordegren], man, I would have hit a lot more than she did. I would have kept hitting."

Bullock was referring to reports that Nordegren wielded a golf club at Woods the night of his November car crash, which led to the uncovering of his multiple affairs. (Both Woods and his wife have vehemently denied the golf club rumors.)

"Yeah, she stopped, she was respectable," Bullock continued. "I'd get the baseball bat, I'd get everything out."'

Guilt-Ridden Teacher Pleads No Contest After Confessing to 'Sex' With Middle School Student

anthony · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The lawyer for the California middle-school teacher who shocked the country with her unsolicited confession of a months-long sexual affair with a 14-year-old former student -- and who later declined to be bailed from jail -- said the woman "couldn't live" with her actions and wanted the story to come out.

Amy Beck may have cleared her conscience, but she now faces a 2-year sentence in state prison after pleading no contest to charges against her on Thursday. Beck's lawyer, Michael Williamson, told "Good Morning America" today she would likely serve a year with good behavior.
...

The Burbank, Calif., teacher stunned police and school officials when she showed up at the police station and told them she'd repeatedly had sex with a now-15-year-old boy.

"Obviously we were surprised," Burbank Police Sgt. Robert Quesada said. Without Beck's confession, "we would have never known about this."'

Mom Reportedly Approved of Teen Son's 'Affair' With Teacher

anthony · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Affairs between teachers and students have become increasingly public, but rarely do they come with a parent's stamp of approval.

The mother of a 15-year-old Florida boy who was allegedly having a sexual relationship with a sixth-grade teacher not only knew of the affair, she reportedly endorsed it.

Police in Hialeah, Fla., arrested Maria Hernandez, 32, Saturday and charged her with sexual battery after the school's principal notified the Department of Children and Families.

According to police, Hernandez and the student met at the Our Lady of Charity School in Hialeah where Hernandez taught sixth grade.

Police made the arrest after Hernandez and the boy returned from a vacation together to Disney World in Orlando. Police said Hernandez admitted to the affair.'

New York Mom Free on Bail in Hit Man Hire Try Case

anthony · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Susan Williams left the Nassau County Jail in East Meadow on Friday afternoon after posting $500,000 bond. She had been held on $1 million bond, but an appeals court ordered that amount cut in half.

Williams has pleaded not guilty to conspiracy and criminal solicitation.

Prosecutors say she offered $20,000 to an undercover officer posing as a hit man and paid $500 as a down payment.

Defense attorney John Carman has said Williams may have had a daydream about hurting her husband that she took too far, but she never would have gone through with it.

If convicted, she faces up to 25 years in prison.'

MRA comedy writing group in London looking for collaborators tom of covent garden · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

If you're a pro-equality MRA (male or female), and able to attend a weekly brainstorming meeting in Central London on a Tuesday Evening for two hours, we would like to hear from you - our mission: To manufacture the ultimate MRA stand up comedian.

A lot of comedians appear to be MRAs at heart, but can usually only manage about two jokes on the subject before moving to safer ground. For a standup to deliver solely MRA material for several minutes will be a challenge - but we have a unique plan to get the most out of the group dynamic, to produce material far beyond the sum of our parts. You may be good with concepts and set-ups, or you may be good with language, or you may be good with punch-lines. Whatever you have to offer, we would like to hear from you.

If interested, email with a little bit about yourself - and please have a go at completing in your own way, the following sayings:-

Behind every great man... ? A woman needs a man like a... ? Boys will be... ?

No woman... ? It's a man's... ? Hell hath no fury... ?

Contact: mrastandup-at-hotmail.com

CBS: Sexual Harassment Claims by Men Growing but Not Equal

anthony · 26 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to alleged sexual harassment, more men are standing up for themselves these days. Of the nearly 12,700 sexual harassment complaints filed with the U.S. Equal Opportunity Commission in the 2009 fiscal year, 16 percent -- some 2,030 -- came from men. That's up from 9.9 percent, or roughly 1,430, a decade-and-half earlier. The number of complaints from men increased even as the number of overall cases have declined.

"It's not really clear whether more men are being subjected to harassment or more men are willing to come forward," said Ernest Haffner, a senior attorney adviser at the EEOC. "There are more decisions in the courts dealing with sexual harassment by men -- it could be that just more men are aware of their rights as they speak to attorneys."

But just because more men are filing claims, it doesn't mean male victims have achieved parity with their female counterparts -- at least not in the public eye, some experts say.'

MRm! Magazine issue 3 now available

Anonymous · 27 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Issue #3 of MRm! magazine is available here. This third issue seeks to explain the position of the MRm! to the public.

Ed. Note: On the download page, click the "Download Now" icon on the left under "Magazine Issue 3 color.pdf", not the "Download Shared 4Shared Desktop" icon at its right.

High-profile masculinity-shaming among men persists to our detriment

Matt · 27 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I saw this and shook my head. More of the same. Until men stop using preconceived masculinity and male gender roles as instruments of bashing one another, how can we expect women to stop? Excerpt:

'It's not just that Rupert Murdoch doesn't like Arthur Sulzberger, or doesn't think he's a serious newspaper publisher. It's that he think he's weak—girly. Sulzberger—"young Arthur"—was a frequent subject during the many hours I talked to Murdoch when I was writing his biography. Sulzberger was always, for Murdoch, a punch line. Murdoch even mimicked him in a way to suggest … well … a certain lack of manhood.

It is a joke that is shared by Murdoch and Robert Thomson, the former Australian-rules football player who is now the editor of Murdoch's Wall Street Journal: Arthur is a sort of poofter*.

...

Without a doubt, the Wall Street Journal has selected Arthur Sulzberger as a prime example of its idea of a feminine-looking man.

...

So just imagine what Young Arthur felt this morning when he saw the lower quadrant of his face in the Journal representing the archetypal girly-man.

This is a psychological warfare side of what's going to be a very nasty newspaper war.'

*I wonder if Vanity Fair understands that "poofter" as a word may not be seen as any big deal here in the US (in fact many American may not even know what it's supposed to mean) but has a very serious negative connotation against male homosexuals in other parts of the world. Maybe they do know and just don't care.

Child sex-abuse charges dropped against St. George mom, dad

Anonymous · 28 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Absolutely disgusting what this couple went through. Article here. Excerpt:

'Prosecutors have dropped sexual abuse charges against a St. George couple after determining pictures of the father kissing his naked infant son were scenes of affection, not abuse.

But the undocumented immigrant couple may yet be deported and their U.S.-born son is still in state custody.
...
The sequence of several photos shows a smiling father posing with the boy, according to a motion to dismiss filed Friday in 5th District Court. They show him affectionately holding the baby, kissing his head, forehead and ear. Two of the photos show the father kissing the son's buttocks and genitals.

"These images are consistent with traditional family photos of a proud father with his son," Deputy Washington County Attorney Ryan Shaum wrote.
...
"Latino people are affectionate. We kiss the little babies anywhere because they love them," Coon said. "It has nothing to do with sexual interaction."

She was hopeful Saturday that the couple could be released on bail, and possibly allowed to stay in the country.'

Albany Times-Union: "White men shun Democrats"

Matt · 28 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Millions of white men who voted for Barack Obama are walking away from the Democratic Party, and it appears increasingly likely that they'll take the midterms elections in November with them. Their departure could well lead to a GOP landslide on a scale not seen since 1994.
...
...Among whites, 71 percent of men and 56 percent of women favor a smaller government with fewer services over a larger government with more services, according to ABC/Washington Post polling.
...
This recession remains disproportionately a "he-cession." Men account for at least seven of 10 workers who lost jobs, according to the latest Bureau of Labor Statistics data. Nearly half of the casualties are white men, who held 46 percent of all jobs lost.
...
...The term "angry white male" or "angry white men" was mentioned 37 times in English-language news media contained in the Nexis database between 1980 and the 1994 election. In the following year, the phrases appear 2,306 times.

Tarnishing their opponents as merely "angry" was poor politics for the Democrats. Liberals know what it's like to have their views -- most recently on the war in Iraq or George W. Bush -- caricatured as merely irrational anger. Most voters vote their interests. And many white men by the 1980s had decided the Democrats were no longer interested in them.

Think about the average working man. He has already seen financial bailouts for the rich folks above him. Now he sees a health care bailout for the poor folks below him. Big government represents lots of costs and little gain.'

MSN: The World's Best Country for Women is Sweden

anthony · 28 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In other words, Ebba is the perfect example of what the latest research shows: that Sweden is a country in which women truly thrive. In fact, a 2005 report by the World Economic Forum found this Scandinavian nation to be the world's "most advanced country" for women, with greater levels of equality, power, health, and well-being among women than anywhere else. (The survey ranked the U.S. an abysmal 17th place — one above Costa Rica.)
...
The goal of equality starts young: "Anti-Sexism Awareness Training" begins in kindergarten, where male toddlers are encouraged to play with dolls, and females with toy tractors. In school, classes in cooking, sewing, metalworking, and woodworking are compulsory for both sexes. All education, including college, is free, and girls routinely outperform boys; in 2005, women made up more than 60 percent of all Swedish college students. All this adds up to more flexible gender roles later: As one Swedish website puts it, "In our country, women drive the buses and men push the baby buggies."
...
In fact, most women in Sweden find it easy to meld femininity with feminist ideals. Carin Gablad, 49, is Stockholm's chief of police, in charge of fighting crime in the capital with a force of 4600 officers. "My approach is the opposite of macho," says the tall, blonde police boss. "I use psychology and negotiation in most cases, but I'm not afraid to use brute force."
...

But for all this, is Sweden really the ultimate female nirvana? With its high income tax, women take home an average of $22,000 per year, compared with $29,000 for American women. Yet prices in Sweden are up to four times higher: a drugstore lipstick costs $15, a pair of non designer jeans, $130. An evening out costs almost $150. For young women who like to have fun, it can be hard on the wallet. "I save all week for the weekends," says Anna-Maria Blomberg, 27, who works as a human resources assistant for a pharmaceutical company. "When I shop, I'm always trying to find ways to buy clothes on sale, so I can spend more on accessories like shoes and bags."'

Unattended child drowns; only the father is arrested

Matt · 29 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Whay aren't they both under arrest and facing charges? Excerpt:

'The father of a 14-month-old child who drowned in a uncovered cesspool in the family's backyard is being held on a $5,600 bond.

Michael Wilson, 20, of Somerton, made his initial appearance in Somerton Justice Court Thursday morning via video feed from the county jail.

"I'm going to hold you on bond due to the nature of the offense," said Somerton Justice of the Peace Jorge Lozano.
...
Wilson's child, Aiden Lee Bailey, fell into an open-pit cesspool and drowned Wednesday, according to YCSO. The child was pronounced dead at Yuma Regional Medical Center after lengthy efforts failed to revive him.

The child's mother, Crystal Bailey, 20, was also interviewed by YCSO deputies. YCSO will be asking the Yuma County Attorney's Office to review the case for potential criminal charges against her as well.

An investigation into the case revealed that the child allegedly had been left in the yard, located at 11516 S. Somerton Ave., while the parents were inside the residence.'

Omega Males and the Women Who Hate Them

fibtastic · 29 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the Noah Baumbach movie Greenberg, out in limited release this Friday, the eponymous main character is having trouble being a man. The 41-year-old Greenberg, played by Ben Stiller, tells his 25-year-old love interest that when he was a kid he dreamed of being an astronaut. Now he can't even drive, much less pilot a shuttle. He sabotaged his career as a musician, so he's trying the old-fashioned, manly pursuit of carpentry. He pretends not to care about his new line of work—he tells his friends he's doing "nothing for a while"—yet Greenberg is seriously wounded when an ex-girlfriend tells him she doesn't remember the bed he built for her. All she recalls are his anxiety attacks.

Greenberg is pretty much the fictional representation of the masculinity crisis that Susan Faludi outlined in her 1999 book Stiffed: The Betrayal of the American Man. Men like Greenberg, Faludi argued, were led to believe as boys that they were "going to be the master of the universe and all that was in it," that they'd be astronauts conquering the final space frontier or, at the very least, that they would master a lifelong stable job and a healthy family. But by the '90s, Greenberg types found themselves "masters of nothing." The latest recession is only making it more so, as job security becomes a fantasy for many, and marriage rates plummet.'

Female suicide bombers target Moscow Metro, 50+ dead

arindamp · 29 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Did somebody say females can't be criminals and terrorists? Excerpt:

'For the first time in nearly six years, Chechnya's Shahidka – or Black Widows – have been linked to a terror attack inside Russia.

On Monday, Russian authorities say a pair of women ignited suicide bombs inside the Russian subway. Nine hours after the morning rush-hour attacks, 37 people were listed as killed in two separate attacks.

News reports have linked the women to embattled northern Caucuses and the Shahidka movement that first sprouted there in 2000. The term is a feminine derivation of shahid, the Arabic word for "witness," or "martyr."

The black widows are reportedly Chechen women who have lost husbands and brothers in the fight against Russian military forces. They are generally young, often teenagers. They wear mourning clothes – dressing in black from head to toe.
...
In 2004, during the last terror siege on the Russian capital, nearly all suicide bombers were black widows.

Since then, they have come to fascinate and terrify the Russian population. Monday's bombing will revive all of those fears.'

Intact America: Keep the momentum

Matt · 29 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA email:

ACT NOW

No professional medical association in the world has ever recommended infant circumcision. But the Centers for Disease Control is still considering recommending routine circumcision of all infant boys – and they may be doing this very soon.

More than 20,000 intactivists have already added their names to our petition urging the CDC not to endanger our baby boys. Now we're just 3,152 signatures shy of our 25,000-signature goal!

Our plan is to deliver the petitions to the CDC in April to make sure they hear our message. Will you help us reach 25,000 signatures by March 31? Tell your friends, and be sure to share the campaign on Twitter or Facebook.

Misandrist commercial for Pepto-Bismol compares man to dog

Matt · 29 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Commercial here.

Let's see if we can get an e-mail campaign against the marketing firm that produced this commercial. How can we find out who made this for Pepto-Bismol?

Kate McCormack

Abusegate, Investigate! Flyer now Available

Matt · 29 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

A new "Abusegate, Investigate!" flyer is now available. The one-page flyer, titled “Distortions, Half-Truths, and Lies” challenges three major myths of the domestic violence industry:

Myth #1. Women are never prone to violence
Myth #2. Domestic violence is caused by sexism
Myth #3. The cure for domestic violence is to break up families

The flyer is suitable for community events, group presentations, to post on bulletin boards, and for other purposes. Groups can print the flyer with their organization's name and address in the lower right hand corner, if desired.

The flyer can be downloaded here (.doc file).

Psychology Today: "Boys and Young Men: A New Cause for Liberals"

anthony · 29 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In case you haven't noticed, America's boys and young men are in trouble – not doing well in school, lacking ambition, often floundering. Not all of them, of course, but enough to take notice. There's more and more in the news lately about the trouble America's boys are in ("crisis" was the term used in a Newsweek cover story in 2006). As a psychologist with a longstanding interest in gender issues, I have been aware of and upset by this for many years. (And I will freely admit that an important motivator for me is the fact that I have three sons and three grandsons.) What has disturbed me even more has been the response I have often received when I've mentioned this issue to female friends over the years. Either they have been unaware of it, surprised to hear that males in college are a distinct minority – now down to 43 percent of college undergraduates -- or they have said something like, So what? You guys had your turn, now it's ours.

Aside from the fact that this attitude is blatantly anti-child and anti-youth, since it absolutely denies the aspirations of half our children, it is bad for today's girls and young women too. As New York Times columnist John Tierney – among others – has pointed out, high achieving women want even higher achieving men as partners, and these men are in ever shorter supply http://select.nytimes.com/2006/01/03/opinion/03tierney.html
...

There are lots of theories about its causes, including absent fathers, schools geared more to girls than boys, brain differences between the sexes, boys' obsession with videogames and so on. But because no one has ever launched a major study, it's all still speculation. But it's very easy to point to something that has let the problem grow to the point where even the most ardent feminist may find it hard to ignore: Caring about boys and young men -- as a social group -- is not something liberals do. At least they haven't, right up to this day.
...
I think things have changed somewhat since that conversation, but on the list of liberal causes, the "boy problem" is barely on the radar screen. Maybe a new book by Richard Whitmire (cited by Kristof), will help. It's called Why Boys Fail, and, as Kristof says, it has "mountains of evidence" showing how boys are lagging behind girls in school.

I hope my fellow liberals read it. The time has more than come.'

Carey Roberts: "Latest Threat to the Constitution: The Domestic Violence Industry "

anthony · 30 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The principles and precepts of the American Constitution are once again under attack, this time at the hand of groups that operate under the laudable façade of curbing partner abuse. Aptly taking the name from its signature legislation — the Violence Against Women Act – the self-proclaimed VAWA Mafia is relentlessly working to take us back to an era when persons could be accused, charged, and even convicted of a heinous act without evidence or proof.

These determined women have not only succeeded in passing a gaggle of federal and state domestic violence laws, they have erected a nearly unassailable moral authority that makes it difficult to pose even the most basic questions, like are these programs working? (The answer to that question is an unequivocal “no,” but that’s not the focus of this article.)

It’s well-known that federal domestic violence laws dole out $1 billion a year for programs that often escalate partner conflict and weaken families. But what does that have to do with ignoring the Constitution?

The VAWA Mafia members are compulsive worry-warts when it comes to the boogeyman of “power and control.” Believe it not, they are now pushing to make “coercion” part of the federal definition of domestic violence.

This has already happened in Rhode Island, where the state Judiciary published this handy-dandy checklist: “Are you concerned about your relationship?” and “Does your partner tell you what to do?” http://www.courts.state.ri.us/domesticnew/

Think about it, ladies: The next time you order your better half to pick up around the house or take out the trash, you are tempting the criminal justice system to swoop in and brand your forehead with the scarlet “Abuser” label.'

Mom of Four Accused of Hiring Hit Man Makes Bail

anthony · 30 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Long Island, N.Y., woman accused of hiring a supposed hit man for $20,000 to kill her estranged husband has been released from jail after an appeals court reduced her bail last week.

The decision came on the heels of prosecutors' releasing more details about Susan Williams' alleged attempt to have her husband, Peter Williams, killed. Williams has pleaded not guilty to charges of conspiracy in the second-degree and criminal solicitation in the second-degree.

"She's obviously ecstatic to be at liberty today," her lawyer, John Carman, said Friday to reporters outside Nassau County Jail. "She looks forward to being at home to see her children."
...

Assistant District Attorney Jane Zwirn-Turkin argued at the March 10 hearing, and again Thursday, that Williams was a flight risk because of the calculation she is accused of exhibiting while allegedly planning her husband's killing.

"She had been discussing if she should go to her husband's funeral, how should she look and react when cops came to her house and told her that her husband was killed," Carol Trottere of the Nassau County District Attorney's Office said of Williams alleged discussion that was recorded by an undercover Nassau County detective posing as a hit man.
...
Her lawyer, Carman, reportedly said in court Thursday that Williams may have had a "daydream" about hurting Peter that she took too far but that she never would have carried though with the act.'

Official says football (is) Title IX's biggest problem

anthony · 30 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A wrestling coach sees Title IX being used to discriminate against men. The man who wrote the original legislation thinks it's working well with the numbers of both men and women playing college sports up greatly over the past four decades.

The head of an athletic department in the mighty Southeastern Conference says the biggest problem with meeting gender equity is what he calls the elephant in the room: College football.

"We have 330 varsity athletes, 110 are on the football team," Vanderbilt vice chancellor David Williams said Tuesday night. "So if you want me to get to 50-50, that means I have slots for 55 men other than football."
...
He cited men forced to play club level sports because of cuts in wrestling, track and field, swimming and other sports. He noted Division I has only 17 men's gymnastics programs left, and he gave examples of programs like a wrestling program at Carson-Newman College in Tennessee that recently lost its team despite a $1 million endowment offer.'

Massachusetts Lawmakers Reject Circumcision Ban

anthony · 30 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BOSTON, March 18 /PRNewswire/ -- A bill calling for prison time and fines for those who perform circumcision on any male under the age of 18 was rejected by the Judiciary Committee of the Massachusetts state legislature.

The text of the proposed measure specifically mandated that no exception be given, even though the law would obstruct religious observance of the commandment of circumcision.

The measure also called upon the Department of Public Health to implement an educational program to discourage religious groups from carrying out the commandment of circumcision.

A goal of the legislation, according to an advocate group's website, included enforcement by local police.

In a letter to the Committee following their vote, the Community Guardians Group (CGG) wrote that the people of Massachusetts "are inheritors of a rich heritage of courageous thinkers and leaders who have sought to advance the causes of righteousness and justice for all people... But there are also matters which lie outside the power entrusted to government." The CGG mentioned that included among the things not to be restricted by government, is the commandment of circumcision, given by G-d Almighty.'

Australia: Gender games at play in classroom

anthony · 30 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys will be boys. Girls are easier to teach. Boys can't pay attention. Girls listen. We might like to think that access to education has nothing to do with gender any more but these perceptions linger.

Like it or not, there are some accepted differences about educating boys and girls and these become apparent as early as kindergarten.

Researchers from the Queensland University of Technology Centre for Learning Innovation have found significant gender differences in the quality of the teacher-child relationship present in the first year of school.

They found that teachers - even in the earliest years of school - generally found girls to be more compliant and to display more positive behaviour and approaches to learning than boys.
...
A simple answer is not to separate boys and girls, says Lingard, even though research has shown that boys tend to behave better in a classes where girls are present and that girls do better in same-sex schools.

"It seems single-sex schools are good for girls and co-educational schools are good for boys," he says. Obviously these two wants can never marry up - and so you have some comprehensive high schools with many more boys than girls.
...
Being seen to work too hard brought negative consequences as male peers "policed what was deemed acceptable". Boys also still tended to do "boy subjects" such as maths and science, even if they were not doing well in them.

Having only boys in a classroom can exacerbate the very worst aspects of masculinity, the professor said.'

NY Times Op-Ed: 'The Boys Have Fallen Behind'

anthony · 30 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Op-ed here. Excerpt:

'Around the globe, it's mostly girls who lack educational opportunities. Even in the United States, many people still associate the educational "gender gap" with girls left behind in math.

Yet these days, the opposite problem has sneaked up on us: In the United States and other Western countries alike, it is mostly boys who are faltering in school. The latest surveys show that American girls on average have roughly achieved parity with boys in math. Meanwhile, girls are well ahead of boys in verbal skills, and they just seem to try harder.

The National Honor Society says that 64 percent of its members — outstanding high school students — are girls. Some colleges give special help to male applicants — yes, that's affirmative action for white males — to avoid skewed sex ratios.

...

Some say that the "boy problem" is just a problem for members of minorities. But "Why Boys Fail" says that at the end of high school, among white boys who have at least one parent who attended college, 23 percent score "below basic" in reading. Only 7 percent of their female counterparts score that low.'

F&F Action Alert: Support CA. AB 2416—Child Custody Reform to Help Parents Who Serve

Matt · 30 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Alert here. Excerpt:

'California AB 2416 will help protect the loving bonds that servicemembers share with their children–to email and fax a letter in support of the bill, click here. Please send your letter whether you are a California resident or not.

Fathers & Families has worked closely with the American Retirees Association, Assemblyman Paul Cook, and others on AB 2416, which will be heard in committee on Tuesday, April 6.

At Fathers & Families we receive many letters from divorced or separated military servicemembers with painful but preventable family law problems.

Many parents serving in Afghanistan, Iraq, or other distant locales are anguished that custodial parents have impeded or completely eliminated their contact with their children. When the deployed soldier calls his children at the court-specified time, nobody answers. Letters are written, but they never reach the children. Needless to say, it is extremely difficult for a deployed servicemember to effectively overcome this visitation interference. Given the length and frequency of current deployments, many soldiers lose all contact and sometimes even their relationships with their children, particularly if the children are young.'

Father gets court bill after wife murdered kids

Matt · 30 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Belgian state has stuck the father of five children who were murdered by their mother in 2007 with the bill for convicting her of the crime, the Le Soir daily reported.

A Belgian court sentenced Genvieve Lhermitte to life in prison in December 2009 for killing her son and four daughters, aged three to 14, while her husband was on a trip to Morocco.

As Lhermitte is incarcerated and insolvent, the Belgian state has sought to recover court expenses and collect fines from her then husband, Bouchaib Moqadem.'

Charges brought against 7 girls and 2 boys in bullying case leading to girl's death

Matt · 30 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It is not clear what some students at South Hadley High School expected to achieve by subjecting a freshman to the relentless taunting described by a prosecutor and classmates.

Certainly not her suicide. And certainly not the multiple felony indictments announced on Monday against several students at the Massachusetts school.

The prosecutor brought charges Monday against nine teenagers, saying their taunting and physical threats were beyond the pale and led the freshman, Phoebe Prince, to hang herself from a stairwell in January.
...
In the Prince case, two boys and four girls, ages 16 to 18, face a different mix of felony charges that include statutory rape, violation of civil rights with bodily injury, harassment, stalking and disturbing a school assembly. Three younger girls have been charged in juvenile court, Elizabeth D. Scheibel, the Northwestern district attorney, said at a news conference in Northampton, Mass.

Appearing with state and local police officials on Monday, Ms. Scheibel said that Ms. Prince's suicide came after nearly three months of severe taunting and physical threats by a cluster of fellow students.

"The investigation revealed relentless activities directed toward Phoebe to make it impossible for her to stay at school," Ms. Scheibel said. The conduct of those charged, she said, "far exceeded the limits of normal teenage relationship-related quarrels."
...
"My daughter was bullied for three years, and we continually went to the administration and we really got no satisfaction," Mr. Brouillard said, adding, "I was offered an apology a few weeks ago that they should have handled it differently."'

Reuters: 'If women ran Wall Street? Geithner likes the idea'

anthony · 30 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In opening a Women in Finance Symposium that brought together top female government figures such as Sheila Bair and Mary Schapiro, Geithner said he recently read an article asking what it would be like if women ran the hyper-competitive money hub of the United States.

"It's an excellent question. But kind of a low bar," Geithner joked, eliciting laughs from the gathering in the historic Treasury Cash Room. "How, you might ask, could women not have done better?"

The symposium featured the leading female figures working with Geithner to right the financial markets and economy, as well as craft new rules to police banks, Wall Street and the markets.

They touched on their awe at being in their positions of power, as well as the isolating feeling of being in the minority at major conferences and meetings.

"The good news is there's no line for the ladies' room," said Elizabeth Warren, a Harvard law professor who heads the Congressional Oversight Panel which keeps an eye on the government's $700 billion financial system bailout.
...
Bair said not much has changed, especially when it comes to the ego-driven paychecks that led to big risks and a financial collapse.'

Myth that testosterone causes aggression discussed fondueguy · 31 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Regarding this story from yesterday, a study summarized in a science blog and printed in "Nature" shows that testosterone, contrary to popular belief, does not cause aggression, egocentric, nor risky behavior. A game was played by the test subjects whereby those administered a dose of testosterone actually played more fairly. The scientists think that testosterone might cause an increase in sensitivity to status.

Not that I think we should use science to create legal or corporate policies that discriminate based on gender... I just think this scientific study beautifully demonstrates the importance of carefully considering environment before calling observed behavior gender-specific. In relation to the recent financial blunders on Wall Street and how they have been blamed on typical "male behavior", this article reinforces that all we need is more regulation and accountability.

Martha Burk: "These guys are just like Tiger"

Matt · 31 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Martha Burk is interviewed here. She asserts that the other golfers are just like Tiger Woods vis-a-vis women (presumably also in terms of their sexual behavior as well). In fact she says some pretty outrageous things, in my opinion, about the other golfers. (I will assume she doesn't know any of them personally, though she may claim to know about them.)

I recall protesting Martha Burk outside a hotel in northern Virginia some years ago as she hosted a women's conference that sought to de-unisex the Augusta club, among other things. Ms. Burk is fine with golf courses for women-only but not for men-only. Her suggestion that this particular golf course should be de-unisexed because so many important business deals are done there is simply not accurate. Anyone who knows about high-level business politics knows that one gets into such clubs after he has risen to the top of the pyramid, not as a result of it.* She neglects to mention some very nice women-only golf courses (for example: The Ladies Golf Club of Toronto) that attract moneyed and powerful women as members but doesn't suggest they need to be made de-unisexed.

But overall, unisex facilities are not acceptable to me. Actually I agree with Ms. Burk that places that are otherwise public in nature should not have access to them restricted, or membership to them restricted, based solely on a person's sex (unless intimate personal modesty issues are clearly present, such as with bathrooms). The problem I have with her is that she is all about objecting to Augusta's unisex rule but not at all about objecting to, say, Toronto's. Also, she is just plain nasty. Listen to what she says about people she has never even met. She assumes pro golfers are categorically powerful, misogynist, sexist, etc. Not only is this highly prejudicial, it isn't likely to further her cause. After years of flinging nasty-grams over the fence at Augusta's management, you'd think by now she would have learned a new strategy to try.

Martha has her own web site. You could email her to tell her what you think of her, but I seriously doubt she'd care. If anything it would only make her think she's ever-more right about everything.

--
* The chances of me ever even being within 10 miles of the place are effectively nil and I am "all man", baby! :)

Violent women are no "fantasy" (Salon.com)

Anonymous · 31 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'You know, Amy Jenkins' piece in the Independent, "The Fantasy That Is Violent Women," would be a little bit ridiculous under any circumstances. Using Hit-Girl, the tween female assassin from the new action flick "Kick-Ass," as a jumping-off point, Jenkins maintains that the violent woman is, yes, a mythical creature never seen in our own reality. "The one thing women are not is violent," she maintains, and goes on to state that "Women really don't go around murdering people. They don't even hit other people very often."

Again, this would be wrong no matter when you published it -- because we know women are capable of abuse, murder and all manner of violent things. But let's recap just this week alone: Women blew up a train in Moscow, and we covered that. (Jenkins acknowledges them too: "a truly extraordinary exception." But.) A group of teen girls bullied a female classmate horrifically, and that classmate killed herself, and we covered that. Sarah Palin, a woman who is known for, among other things, her abiding passion for shooting animals dead, is getting her own show. And that is being covered all over. And it's Wednesday.'

Not to underestimate the wrongness of this piece, or really even to oversimplify its points, but: Amy Jenkins, or the Independent, or both, have got some bad timing.'

DV Spring Cleaning: Register Now for the Biggest Event of the Year!

Matt · 31 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Domestic violence laws represent the biggest roll-back in civil rights since the Jim Crow Era

Our constitutionally-protected rights and our families are being threatened by the Violence Against Women Act and the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act. Both laws are up for renewal in the next year. If we don't tell lawmakers about all the damage that's being done, how can we expect them to fix these laws? The DV Spring Cleaning will be the biggest domestic violence reform event ever held – we invite you to come and make your voice heard!

NH DV Coalition does nice report on male victimization

Matt · 31 March 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The fruits of our efforts are beginning to be apparent. The New Hampshire DV Coalition has recently released a report (.pdf file) on male victimization.

Most impressive!

Abusegate Bob

Double-standards persist in seeking to make violent video games illegal

redwoodwriter · 1 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tokyo, Japan (CNN) -- The game begins with a teenage girl on a subway platform. She notices you are looking at her and asks, "Can I help you with something?"

That is when you, the player, can choose your method of assault.
...
It is little wonder that the game, titled RapeLay, sparked international outrage from women's groups. Taina Bien-Aime helped yank the game off store shelves worldwide.

"This was a game that had absolutely no place on the market," said Taina Bien-Aime of women's rights organization Equality Now which has campaigned for the game to be taken off the shelves.
...
"It's obviously very difficult to curtail activity on the Internet. But the governments do have a role in trying to regulate this sort of extreme pornography of children, both in their countries, and through the Internet ," she said, adding that they were calling for the Japanese government "to ban all games that promote and simulate sexual violence, sexual torture, stalking and rape against women and girls. And there are plenty of games like that. "
...
A member of the Institute of Contents Culture, who did not want to give CNN his name, said restricting game themes limits freedom of expression.

"In my opinion, RapeLay's storyline went too far. However, if a game creator wants to express something and create content out of it, a government or public entity shouldn't have the power to restrain it."'

Video games depicting violence against men also exist, but of course there is no outcry against those games. There is only a move to ban games that involve sexual violence against women. Why is that?

UK: Tears of teenage girl charged over fatal stabbing of boy, 15, at Victoria station

Matt · 1 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A teenage girl wept today as she appeared in court accused of murdering a promising 15-year-old footballer at one of Britain's busiest railway stations.

Sofyen Belamouadden was stabbed to death in a rush hour attack at Victoria Station in London last Thursday.

Victoria Bukky Osoteku, 18, became the 13th teenager to be charged over the murder and today appeared at Croydon Magistrates Court in south London.

As the petite student was led into the dock by two security guards, she already had tears streaming down her face.'

"The No Nonsense Man" radio show goes live April 1, 2010 9 PM EST

Matt · 1 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Mark Rudov's new radio show starts tonight. Details:

Broadcast via CBS Radio
Canadians and Other Countries outside the US can listen at:
http://www.ustream.tv/

Program Schedule: 04.01.2010:

9-10PM EST: Second Chances
Why we give each other second chances
Read: “The Vanity of Second Chances”

10-11PM EST: Toxic Women
How men can recognize and avoid them
Guest: Susan Shapiro Barash, Author
"Toxic Friends: The Antidote for Women"
"Stuck in Complicated Friendships"

E-Mail: Marc-at-TheNoNonsenseMan.com
Website: http://TheNoNonsenseMan.com/
Radio: http://MarcRudovRadio.com/
Pilot Show: Thursday, April 1, 2010
Time: 6-8PM PT | 8-10PM CT | 9-11PM ET

Why a pilot on April Fools’ Day?
Answer: Only fools pay for sex

American University Erupts Over Date Rape Column

anthony · 1 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'Let's get this straight: any woman who heads to an EI [fraternity] party as an anonymous onlooker, drinks five cups of the jungle juice, and walks back to a boy's room with him is indicating that she wants sex, OK?" columnist Alex Knepper, 20, wrote in the Eagle, the school paper.

"To cry 'date rape' after you sober up the next morning and regret the incident is the equivalent of pulling a gun to someone's head and then later claiming that you didn't ever actually intend to pull the trigger," he said.

The column -- "Dealing With AU's Anti-Sex Brigade" -- sparked a backlash and nearly 300 online comments on the newspaper's Web site, chastising the Eagle for being "open-facedly offensive" and publishing a "slap in the face to so many women, and men, in our generation."
...
"Of course men have to behave themselves," he said. "These are freedoms women have fought for -- the same opportunities and ability to go into these sexual realms. But they have the same risk and responsibilities.

"There is a pattern of infantilizing women," he said. "If they have too much to drink and do something stupid, they still have to be responsible for their actions."'

Man put on sex offender list for 'sexting'

anthony · 2 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two years ago, following a fight with his 16-year-old girlfriend, Phillip Alpert, then 18, did something really stupid.

"It was 3:28 in the morning, I think it was, and I got up and I went to my computer, and I sent a couple of pictures that she had sent to me to her contact list," Alpert told ABC News. "And I went back to sleep."

Because of that single action, Alpert, now 20, is a registered sex offender, Florida Department of Corrections No. x61836. For sending the images, Alpert was arrested on charges of child pornography.
...
"When I got home, the police were waiting for me," Alpert continued. "They were going through everything that was electronic in my house. My computer, my discs, my MP3 player, just everything. Looking for any other kind of nude photographs, evidence, whatever.
...
"I was forced to register as a sex offender, and that is wherein lies the big problems," Alpert said. "Being a registered sex offender means ... I can't live like near a school or a playground or a park. There's a whole lot of stuff I can't live near -- bus stops, stuff like that ... so basically, I just can't live in a city. It means every six months I have to register as a sex offender."'

Stop the "Kill the Gays" Bill in Uganda

Matt · 3 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an AdvocatesForYouth.org emailing. Is there any doubt who will be the primary victims of this legislation? I challenge anyone to show at any time in history where a state has outawed homosexuality (or such acts) that it has not been men who have borne the brunt of the enforcement actions. Email content here. Excerpt:

"A bill being considered in Uganda's parliament right now would make homosexuality a crime punishable by death.

If passed, this measure will promote an unprecedented climate of discrimination and violence against Uganda's LGBT citizens. Among other things, the "Kill the Gays" bill would:

- Impose life in prison or the death penalty on those found to be (by a lay witness or the police) having homosexual sex.
- Impose the death penalty on gay HIV-positive citizens found to be having sex.
- Provide for up to three-year jail sentences for anyone who does not turn in LGBT citizens to Ugandan authorities.
- Outlaw HIV/AIDS awareness programs as a "promotion of homosexuality." Working for such programs would constitute a crime punishable by up to a three-year jail sentence.

Today, Advocates for Youth is launching StandForUganda.com, a website focused on stopping the "Anti-Homosexuality Bill" and defending the rights of Uganda's LGBT citizens."

Abusegate DV Spring Cleaning: Early registration available for May 6-7 conference

Matt · 3 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob: Register now, get the early-bird registration rate (free – what a deal!)

Colorado mom charged in terror case 'overwhelmed and distraught'

anthony · 4 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A Colorado woman who was indicted on terrorism charges Friday is "overwhelmed and distraught and very much in tears with concern for her son," her lawyer said Saturday.

Jamie Paulin-Ramirez, 31, was charged with conspiracy to provide material support to terrorists. Her lawyer, Jeremy Ibrahim, said he met with her for the first time on Saturday.

Ibrahim said that he has not yet been able to see Paulin-Ramirez's 6-year-old son, who was placed in the custody of child services after his mother's arrest.
...
According to the U.S. Justice Department, LaRose and five co-conspirators recruited men on the Internet "to wage violent jihad in south Asia and Europe." The indictment lists Paulin-Ramirez separately from those five co-conspirators.'

UK: "A divorce deal that shames women"

Matt · 4 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Philippa Vaughan persuaded the judge to award her the extra lump sum of £215,000

The High Court's award of a £215,000 divorce payout to the former wife of a leading barrister - 25 years after the couple split - is a terrible blow to those who rightly believe that women are equal to men.

Philippa Vaughan, 66, has no children, lives in a four-bedroom £1million house in fashionable Hammersmith, West London, and inherited £770,000 from her parents.

But she still convinced the judge to award her the extra lump sum. He said it was 'plainly wrong' to think she could adjust to life after her exhusband's maintenance payments were cancelled last year.

In this case, the absurdity of Mrs Vaughan's divorce claim is exposed by the fact that as a working woman (with a job as an expert in Islamic and Indian art), she was able to earn her own living.

By any yardstick this was an unjust claim. Particularly since her exhusband had accrued most of his wealth after they split and during his second marriage.

It seems Mrs Vaughan's main concern was to get one over her ex - rather than any interest in justice. So once again our crazy divorce laws, which too often encourage women to sponge off men, have delivered another hammer blow against the institution of marriage.'

US: The Draft (should it come) as discrimination against men

CC3337 · 5 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Despite the incorect prediction regarding 2004, the substance of the essay is still relevant.

'To secure the continuing existence of the United States democracy against intractable religious fanaticism, whose goal is nothing less than a Muslim theocracy for all of planet Earth, it is inevitable that military conscription will again be implemented during the months following the 2004 Presidential Election. The nature of this struggle renders irrelevant the person or party who wins the election.

With very rare exceptions, every male residing in the United States 18 to 26 years of age is required by the Military Selective Service Act to register with the Selective Service System, and thereby subject himself to the possibility of involuntary military service. Yet, with the ongoing War on Islamic Terrorism, the prosecution of which has required the deployment of hundreds of thousands of U.S. military personnel, and stretched the National Guard and Reserve to its limit, absolutely no female in the U.S. is required to register. This clear fact of gender discrimination has not been focused upon in public discussions because an active draft has not been in effect since 1973.
...

Finally, to address those arguments, based on strength and speed, against placing females involuntarily into direct ground combat. Gender-norming has been used to affirmatively place females ahead of males into civilian positions requiring physical strength and speed, such as firefighters, police, smoke jumpers, and cadets in service academies. Why not use these same gender-normed standards, which are significantly less rigorous than those minimums required of males for the same occupations, to affirmatively qualify females for involuntary direct ground combat? Females cannot be simultaneously too weak and slow to perform as equals to males on the battlefield, and still be affirmatively placed ahead of males in civilian occupations that require similar strength and speed.'

"A starter wife is for life"

Anonymous · 5 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's not often that my heart misses a beat at the six o'clock news, but the other day when the newsreader announced "a victory in the Court of Appeal for first wives" I almost dropped my gin. I am a supporter of the First Wives' Club — remember the sublime film with Sarah Jessica Parker as an undernourished marriage wrecker and Goldie Hawn facially immobile with Botox? — and we seldom have much to cheer about. But the case of Philippa Vaughan was one to reckon with.

Her victory was summed up in loaded terms in one newspaper: "Ex-wife wins £215,000 . . . 25 years (heavily underscored) after her divorce." The implication is that the best-before date on your ex-wife status expires long before the quarter-century mark and especially if your former spouse has moved on to another wife.
...
Okay, we're talking about well-to-do people on both sides here; this isn't a case where either mister or missus would end up poor, even after paying the eyewatering legal bill of £400,000. (The chief lesson of this case for the rest of us is, as ever, to beware any involvement with lawyers.)

But it's the principle of the thing that matters, and that principle is that the marital commitment isn't something you can discard at will. For Vaughan, the yearly £27,000 he paid his first wife from their divorce in 1985, and the payout now, are a disagreeable reminder of the day he said "I do" to the query whether he would have and hold the lady, for better or worse, till death did them part, back in 1967. Philippa Vaughan was merely holding him to the latter part of that commitment.'

"Has your man got a one-track mind? Just proves he's normal"

Anonymous · 5 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In The Male Brain, Louann Brizendine, the American psychiatrist, follows up her controversial 2006 bestseller The Female Brain, which famously — and incorrectly — claimed that women use an average of 20,000 words a day compared with only 7,000 for men, and explores how the differences between the male and female brains often lead to the profoundest of misunderstandings and unintended consequence
Her conclusion that the male brain, "marinated in testosterone" since the eighth week of conception, is hardwired to cause men to lie, take risks and suppress their emotions, is equally controversial, appearing to suggest that men's behaviour is devoid of personal responsibility and social conditioning.
...
Besides, men's brain biology often works in women's favour. Dr Brizendine cites research suggesting that testosterone levels plummet while levels of the milk-producing hormone prolactin soar in fathers-to-be, probably in reaction to the pheromones emanating from the mother-to-be's skin. At the same time the man's auditory circuits become more sensitive, making him better able to hear a crying infant. "By the time the baby is born, the father is primed to take care of it," she says.
...
"Being a feminist in the 1970s, I really considered men to be the enemy. We feminists put a 30-year gag on men and stopped them speaking about their reality. But the pendulum has swung too far. In 2010, 60 per cent of US college graduates will be women and only 40 per cent men. This is a huge mismatch. We are leaving our males behind," she says. "If we start out with a deeper understanding of the male brain, we can create more realistic expectations for boys and men."'

"Miners", not "men"

Matt · 6 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

By now many of you know about this story. Note that the men killed and trapped in the mine are miners, not men. Oh, they are both, yes. But in this article, they get referred to as miners, or a man speaking who is a miner gets referred to as such, 12 times in the article. "Man" or "men" is used only once, when the trapped miners (or men) are referred to on page 2. And as for the dead mine-explosion victims, well, they are referred to only as miners.

Keeping up? I hope so! This is the same kind of thing that was discussed here (the "bonus clip" points this out wonderfully). Men as a class of person have become such an unsympathetic group that when men are the victims of some kind of work or other tragedy, the press and others refer to them by their occupation, or relationship status, or something else. Anything but "man". "Man" is a dirty word used to refer, almost exclusively, to bad men: criminals, or men doing things others disapprove of in some way, etc. Good men are not men. They are husbands, fathers, miners, self-sacrificing heroes of some kind, ie, men giving of themselves to women and children or others yet even at the expense of their own lives, but yet rarely if ever referred to as MEN.

Well, that'd be a such dirty word to use on such nice... guys... now wouldn't it?

Japan: "Lonely Deaths" claim much larger numbers of men

Matt · 6 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the 1990s, Taichi Yoshida, the owner of a small moving company in Osaka, Japan, began noticing that many of his jobs involved people who had just died. Families of the deceased were either too squeamish to pack up for their dead relatives, or there wasn't any family to call on. So Yoshida started a new business cleaning out the homes of the dead. Then he started noticing something else: thick, dark stains shaped like a human body, the residue of liquids excreted by a decomposing corpse.

These, he learned, were kodokushi, or 'lonely deaths.' Now he has seen plenty - these deaths make up 300 of the 1,500 cleaning jobs performed by his company each year. The people die alone, sprawled on the floor beside crumpled clothing and dirty dishes, tucked beneath flowery bedspreads, slouched against the wall. Months - even years - can pass before somebody notices a body. On occasion, all that's left are bones. "The majority of lonely deaths are people who are kind of messy," says Yoshida. "It's the person who, when they take something out, they don't put it back; when something breaks, they don't fix it; when a relationship falls apart, they don't repair it."
...
Japan's two-decade economic slump is not helping. The collapse of the bubble economy after 1990 shrunk the size of Japanese firms and led to a restructuring that is still playing out today. The percentage of the workforce employed in part-time, temporary and contract work has tripled since 1990, forcing workaholic Japanese businessmen, many of whom never married, into a lonely early retirement. "Their world has evaporated under their feet," says Scott North, an Osaka University sociologist who studies Japanese work life. "The firm has been everything for these men: their sense of manliness, their social position, their sense of self is all rooted in the corporate structure."'

Russia: Violent crimes by women increase arindamp · 7 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Moscow: Crimes committed by women, particularly theft and crimes of passion, have risen sharply in Russia, reflecting an alarming trend, a top law official has said.

About 49,000 women convicts are at present imprisoned in 46 female prisons in the country.

"I would like to point out an alarming trend: female crime has been steadily on the rise," Russia's Deputy Prosecutor General Yevgeny Zabarchuk said Tuesday.

According to statistics, the most "popular" crimes committed by women in Russia are theft, drug trafficking and crimes of passion.'

So much for the myth that female criminals are less violent as compared to men.

"Panel sees male dominance behind banking crisis"

arindamp · 7 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Of course, if things go wrong it is because of men. If things go right it is because of women. More hypocritical feminist doctrine. Excerpt:

'There is a view that the banking crisis that sent Western economies tumbling two years ago may not have happened at all, or would have been less severe, if there had been more women at the top in the banking sector — the argument being that women are more cautious and risk averse and, therefore, more likely than men to challenge the sort of practices that caused the crisis.

Until now, this theory had been pushed mostly by women campaigners while men tended to snigger. But now even men seem to agree. A male-dominated parliamentary committee (13 men and one woman — an ironic comment on Westminster's own attitude to gender diversity) has blamed a macho culture and “potentially dangerous group think” for the collapse of several leading British banks arguing that boards need more women to prevent reckless decision-making.

In a report, highlighting the acute dearth of women at the top in Britain's financial sector, the Treasury Select Committee says that the prevailing male-driven high-risk mindset is not conducive to good “corporate governance”.

“Diversity at the top is one way to challenge potentially dangerous ‘group think',” it says citing some eye-popping statistics to underline deep-seated sexism in the City, London's famous global financial hub.'

Indian women seek to be guaranteed a third of legislature seats trotter · 7 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'India is about to become the first country in the world where women will be guaranteed by law a third of the seats in all legislative bodies in the country. The project ley managed to win a first hurdle in early March, to obtain the approval of the Senate (Rajya Sabha) and, although it still must be approved by the Lok Sabha, or lower house, its supporters are already singing victory.

And no wonder, because for them it is a milestone in the history of a society that has been sexist for centuries, as evidenced by the 14 years it took the proposal to open step in the tangle of legislation, before coming to a vote.

Although this time there were also controversies, heated arguments and even baiting events in the upper house, in the end negotiator skills were imposed by the president of the ruling Congress Party, Sonia Gandhi.
...
“In the name of the tradition, there are stereotypes imposed on us against which we must fight every day,” said the parliamentarian.

Perhaps without meaning to be a discordant note, but perhaps a rather more pragmatic approach offers the best conclusion offers the writer, Rupa Gulab, for whom a seat in Parliament does not necessarily grant more power to women. Something in compensation, yes, we take advantage of with greater access to education.'

Walk a Mile in Her Shoes Campaign Couldn't Walk Three Feet in His

MR · 7 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Walk a Mile in Her Shoes Campaign Couldn't Walk Three Feet in His

Excerpt:

'Each April we expose another generation to the "light hearted" spectacle of grown men in high heels, leading a parade to help break the silence about how "1 in 6 women" are violently sexually assaulted by men. Men should "walk in women's shoes" is the theme of April as "Sexual Assault Awareness Month" an event calling attention to how women are hobbled by both fashion and by the evil patriarchy.

...

There is not even a hint that women ever commit serious acts of violence including the sexual abuse of children. It's just a Politically Correct event hammering home the point that girls and women suffer because men are evil. It's not a parade, it's a charade. And it crosses the line into hate as surely as if the marchers were wearing sheets and pointed white hoods. Never in all the years of asking men to walk in women's shoes have we asked women to walk in men's shoes. That too would be politically incorrect.'

F&F: Bill AB 2416 Passes Committee Unanimously

Matt · 7 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'At Fathers & Families we receive many letters from divorced or separated military servicemembers with painful but preventable family law problems. California AB 2416 will help protect the loving bonds that servicemembers share with their children.

Fathers & Families has worked closely with Assemblyman Paul Cook, the American Retirees Association, and others on AB 2416, and last week thousands of you responded to our Action Alert in support of the Bill. We are pleased to announce that today the bill passed the Assembly Judiciary Committee unanimously.

The bill will now go to the full Assembly, where it has been put on the consent calendar and is likely to pass. Thanks to all of you who participated. We will keep our members informed of the bill's progress–stay tuned for future Action Alerts.

To learn more about the bill and to read Fathers & Families' official support letter, see our AB 2416 Campaign page here.'

Casey Anthony generates volumes of "leaked" letters

Matt · 7 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Perfect setup for an insanity defense (or an attempt thereat). She claims in these letters that the "end times" are upon is, that she was sexually abused by her brother and dad, admits that at times she used chloroform to put her child to "sleep" to go out at night, that there was never any nanny she claimed there was, etc. etc.

And the drama continues... which is just what she is counting on.

'Real Housewife' Kim Zolciak Recommends Castration For Jesse James

anthony · 7 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Jesse James should be glad he's married to Sandra Bullock and not Real Housewives of Atlanta star Kim Zolciak.

While Sandara has not publicly said how she will react to her husband's cheating scandal, Kim told RadarOnline.com that she thinks Sandra should castrate Jesse!'

During the video she also made reference to lighting James genitals like a firecracker and blowing it off.

Feministing Blog: 'Boys Crisis, Men's Violence Against Women one of the same'

anthony · 7 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As I grow within my feminism and begin to zero-in on my niche - working with men to deconstruct issues of masculinity and gender roles, as an alternate solution to ending men's violence against women , I've come to realize the problem with no name is a problem that also plagues men, and sadly, because of social conservatives' tendency to reinforce gender roles, and liberal feminists' tendency to focus on women as a way to promote gender equality, many men and boys are left to fight and deconstruct gender roles on their own. Indeed a crisis among boys and young men does exist, and until feminism begins to admit it is a problem, and more importantly, works to end this crisis, issues of men's violence against women and sexism will always exist, and it affects both women and men.
...
In their struggles to find their place and status within social hierarchies, many men and boys find themselves without a place - a safe space - to talk about and deconstruct those feelings, for patriarchy's constructions of gender roles deem it "weak" for men to speak of their feelings and struggles. Combine this with homophobia and the fear of being "othered," - that is, being labeled anything other than "manly," boys and men find themselves giving in to the social constructions of gender roles, and the result, as we've seen played out in too many scenario here in "developed" nations as well as Global South nations, is men's reinforcement of sexist and misogynistic attitudes, ending parts of the time in not only in the dehumanization of men, themselves, but also the physical and emotional violence against other men - and particularly important in feminist discussions - women.'

Man Turned Away for Breast Cancer Screening

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Scott Cunningham has been vigilant about his health since both his parents were diagnosed with breast cancer in the 1990s.

When Cunningham, who is 45 and from Marion, N.C., developed the same symptoms as his father -- "knots" on the chest underneath the nipple -- he put off getting help for months because he had been laid off from his job at a furniture plant and was uninsured.

"My chest is swollen, just like it started with my dad," said Cunningham, who also said he feels tired and "different" than he did just a few months ago.

But as symptoms got worse, he finally called the local health clinic and was turned away -- not for financial reasons, but because he was a man.

The clinic, the Rutherford-Polk-McDowell Health District's National Breast and Cervical Cancer Early Detection Program, is funded by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which only serves women, aged 40 to 60.
...
While breast cancer among men is 100 times less common than among women, it can be deadly.

The American Cancer Society reported nearly 2,000 cases of male breast cancer in the United States in 2009. About 440 of those men will die from the disease.'

Inside Higher Ed: Male Studies vs. Men's Studies

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First came women's studies, then came men's studies, and now, a new field in reaction to both: male studies.

Scholars of boys and men converged Wednesday at Wagner College, in Staten Island, N.Y., to announce the creation of the Foundation for Male Studies, which will support a conference and a journal targeted at exploring the triumphs and struggles of the XY-chromosomed of the human race -- without needing to contextualize their ideas as being one half of a male-female binary or an offshoot of feminist theory. Organizers positioned themselves in contrast to men's studies, which is seen as based on the same theories as women's studies and is grouped together with it as gender studies.

More than anything else, the event was a chance for supporters to frame men and boys as an underrepresented minority, and to justify the need for a male studies discipline in a society that many perceive to be male-dominated.

Lionel Tiger, a professor of anthropology at Rutgers University, said the field takes its cues "from the notion that male and female organisms really are different" and the "enormous relation between ... a person's biology and their behavior" that's not being addressed in most contemporary scholarship on men and boys.

"I am concerned that it's widespread in the United States that masculinity is politically incorrect," said Christina Hoff Sommers, a resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute and author of The War Against Boys: How Misguided Feminism Is Harming Our Young Men.'

Huffington Post: 'The Myth of Having It All'

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'March 31st marked the end of Women's History Month, a celebration of women's contributions to history, culture and society throughout the history of our nation. Trailblazers like Gloria Steinem and Betty Friedan who helped redefine the role of a woman in America come to mind.

Perhaps one of the most transformative messages born from the women's movement was the concept that a woman can "have it all." It's an empowering and exciting message; yet, the misinterpretations of this message can also be dangerous and actually quite disempowering for women.

A lot of women define Feminism as a woman's ability and right to have it all. But Feminism is not about having it all or doing it all. Feminism is about the freedom to make choices. Somewhere along the path of the women's liberation movement, we began to buy into the belief that to be an empowered women means we have to do everything that both men and women do. So instead of making choices, we have tried to fulfill both gender roles at the same time. And from my perspective, it's not working. Instead of giving us a tremendous amount of freedom and opportunity, this concept of having it all has morphed into something that excuses putting so much on our plates that we are stressed out, burned out and running out of time for ourselves (and our loved ones) every single day.'

Duke Settles Suit by Ex-Coach of Lacrosse Team

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Duke University and Mike Pressler, who was the lacrosse coach when false rape accusations were made against three team members, have settled a slander suit by Pressler, The Raleigh News & Observer reported. Pressler's suit focused on comparisons the university made between him and his successor after he was forced out in 2006, amid the scandal over the allegations that (at that time) were widely treated as fact. No details were released about the settlement, except that Duke issued this statement: "Coach Michael Pressler is an excellent coach. He did a great job building the Duke men's lacrosse program, while maintaining a 100 percent graduation rate in his 16 years. Duke University regrets any adverse consequences that the Newsday or AP article had on Coach Pressler or his family. Duke wishes nothing but the best for Coach Pressler in his future endeavors, especially at Bryant University and as he leads Team USA in the World Lacrosse Championships."

Authorities: Wyoming woman apologizes for false rape claim

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LANDER -- Fremont County authorities say a 25-year-old Casper woman admitted to lying about a rape claim in order to get out of a drunk-driving charge.

The Fremont County sheriff's office says Helen Witt came clean after investigators couldn't make her story from last summer match up.

Witt originally told law enforcement she was raped by two men on the Fourth of July in Boysen State Park. She said the two men drug her from her car and sexually assaulted her on a dirt road near the Cottonwood Bay area of the park.
...
Authorities say Witt has apologized for filing the false report.

Investigators spent hours on the case involving several agencies in addition to the sheriff's office: the Boysen State Park Rangers, the Fremont County Ambulance Service and the Fremont County attorney's office.'

Australia: "2010: In search of the Omega Male"

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Apparently “Omega males are the lowest of the low on the guy food chain; they’re the type of men who shirk responsibility, refuse to grow up and generally avoid participating in the real world,” found Moore, based on an article written by author Jessica Grose from Slate.com.
...
The majority of men are nothing like an Omega Male. Sure the financial crisis meant that men who defined themselves on fast cars and fancy dinners have had to redefine their masculinity on their actions not their job title alone. But Peter Pan – well he’s been around forever (he just wears a cardigan now) and Wendy - she always left him.

And anyway, the recession wouldn’t have caused his masculine decline– because Peter didn’t want a job to begin with…

In truth: while there may be men who would love to sit around, contemplate writing a novel, smoke pot, strum a guitar and give the proverbial finger to the man - these blokes find it very hard to find love off-screen.

A guy with no work ethic does not have Alpha Women (or many others) lining up to date him.

While there might be a few examples of Omega Men who are loved up, the majority would be where they have always been. In their share flat, talking crap or pretending they are “above” working or settling down - because it’s easier than having no-one interested.

The rest of the men – well they are doing “manly things” – like living in the real world, like always. Nothing new there.'

Will the Rise in e-Readers Mean a Rise in Boy's Reading Levels

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's no new revelation that boys lag behind girls in reading levels and comprehension. Study after study has found this to be the case. The newest study, which the Center on Education Policy just released, found that while girls have made ground on boys in math, boys still fall behind girls in reading. An excerpt of findings from the report:

> In reading, girls outperformed boys in 2008 at the elementary, middle, and high school levels. Higher percentages of girls than boys scored at or above the proficient level on state reading tests at grade 4, grade 8, and high school; in some states, these gaps exceeded 10 percentage points.
>
> In grade 4 reading, higher percentages of girls than boys reached the basic, proficient, and advanced achievement levels in 2008. The median percentages of 4th grade girls reaching all three achievement levels—basic, proficient, and advanced—were higher than the median percentages for boys. (The median is the midpoint; half of the states with sufficient data had percentages above this point and half had percentages below.) In no state did boys outperform girls in reading at any achievement level."

Mother sues school for allegedly burning son's hand

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SALT LAKE CITY — A Salt Lake City woman is suing Meadow Lark Elementary School, alleging that her son's special education teacher put the boy's hand in "scalding water" and burned him.

Maria Gutierrez's son, who has cerebral palsy and is confined to a wheelchair, was in Erin Robinson's class when she was teaching students the difference between hot and cold water and allegedly stuck the boy's hand in scalding water, according to the lawsuit filed Monday in 3rd District Court'

"Women's hoops not worth loss of other programs"

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The national championship game this week did not speak especially well of women's college basketball. Two excellent teams played mostly ugly hoops and the better team came back to win.
...
The empty seats, row after row and section after section, in the regular season yell out a message heard by some but acknowledged by none. That same message is acutely visible, if we care to look, in the shallow pool of talent and overall quality disparity.

Women's college basketball eventually must face the big boss of sports: money.
...
That's the case for now, as dictated by the 1972 enactment of Title IX, which bans sex discrimination in educational programs receiving federal money. It's fair and necessary to grant such equality, though it usually is enforced only as it relates to sports. Title IX didn't kill sexism, but it resulted in a reasonably level playing field.

It also leveled a staggering number of men's and combined programs — hundreds upon hundreds since '72 — and they're still dropping. Football was discontinued at Saint Mary's, Santa Clara and University of the Pacific. Colorado State dropped baseball. Arizona State dropped wrestling two years ago, and Northern Iowa axed baseball last year.
...
Men's basketball generates billions in TV revenue; the women a fraction of that. In many if not most cases, the men subsidize the women — even as other programs are victimized by budget cuts. Seton Hall claims it will save $1.5 million by shedding men and women's track; the school will add women's golf. Slashing programs to save money has become popular.
...
Meanwhile, very few schools realistically compete for a championship in women's basketball; UConn and Tennessee have accounted for 13 of the last 20 titles. There is an abundance of lopsided games and a lot of ugly basketball suitable for "club" sport status, which keeps alive Colorado State baseball.

Is what's being gained worth what's being lost? Money thinks not. And money will, at some point, be heard.'

Commission: Title IX interpretation unnecessarily hurts men's sports

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights released a series of recommendations on Title IX policy Thursday aimed at what it called an "unnecessary reduction of men's athletic opportunities."

The commission recommended that schools use a model survey offered by the Department of Education in 2005, calling it "the best possible method" for measuring women's interest and abilities. The survey is one of three ways schools can meet the participation requirements of Title IX, the law that bans sex discrimination at schools receiving federal funds.

That model survey was blasted by women's groups when it was introduced. The NCAA asked member schools not to use it. Few have. Daniel Cohen, an attorney who was a panelist before the commission, said he knows of several schools that have used it, though he declined to name them.

"The commission concluded that a properly administered model survey with a high response rate can potentially help schools improve their Title IX compliance and may provide an objective alternative to proportionality for some schools," Cohen said.'

Dispelling Sandra Bullock's "Oscar curse"

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Poor Sandra Bullock and Kate Winslet. Just moments -- or in the latter case, a year -- after winning Best Actress Oscars, they've lost their marriages. Why, it's almost as though there's a curse on the women who take home that statue! Or perhaps it's something a little more down-to-earth; Nicole LaPorte at The Daily Beast wonders, "Is the ultimate honor for women in Hollywood the ultimate castration for men?"
...
Consider: In addition to Bullock and Winslet, Jane Wyman, Reese Witherspoon, Halle Berry, Hilary Swank and Helen Hunt all got divorced within a couple years of winning Academy Awards -- and Julia Roberts broke up with Benjamin Bratt not long after she did. ... Since at least three of these break-ups famously involved the male partners cheating -- and we all know that never happens unless a guy is feeling threatened by a woman's success -- what more evidence do we need that the fundamental problem in each relationship was men suffering "the ultimate castration"? (Aside from, you know, actual castration, which I imagine would feel somewhat more definitive to the man experiencing it.)
...
When a supposed trend is used to send yet another message that women had best put relationships before careers -- by the way, have you given any thought today to how many eggs you have left, missy? -- I'm always skeptical. But this one is even more ridiculous than most. Grose already made the point a lot more efficiently than I have here: "Needless to say, the notion of a such a curse is a load of bull."'

Sandra Bullock reportedly is seeking joint-custody of Jesse James' daughter

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'March 27, 2010, (Sawf News) - Sandra Bullock is reportedly consulting top family lawyers in Los Angeles to explore options for joint custody of Jesse James' six-year-old daughter Sunny, a source tells UK's Sunday Mirror.

However, Sandra has been cautioned that she faces an uphill legal battle; being a step-mother her rights are limited. Sandra's best hope is that Jesse agrees to joint custody.

Sandra, who married Jesse in July 2005, brought up Sunny as her own daughter.

In November 2009, she and Jesse fought a legal battle to wrest custody of Sunny from her biological mother and Jesse's former wife, porn star Janine Lindemulder.

"Sandra and Sunny have a special bond. She raised her since before she could walk. She did everything for that girl and now it looks as if she's going to have to fight even for visitation rights. It's heartbreaking," the source tells Mirror.'

Afghan women: Don't exclude our men

anthony · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a place where women have few rights, it seems improbable women would plead for men's advancement too. But, it's happening in Afghanistan.

Not for the reasons you might think, but because many Afghan women realize without the support of fathers, brothers and uncles, they will remain second-class citizens.

For years, the United States has developed and funded special "women's only" programs to help women start their own small businesses.

And while those efforts have been greatly appreciated, some global women's groups wonder if these programs are as effective as they could be when it comes to achieving equality in a patriarchal society.

More disturbingly, some other women's groups say these efforts, if not done well, may actually endanger women.

"Women are put at greater risk of violence when they must return home to frustrated, unemployed husbands who don't understand why their wives are getting training and credit and they are not," says Ritu Sharma, president of Women Thrive Worldwide.

It's time, says Sharma, to look at helping Afghan women in a more inclusive way – and that means including brothers and husbands – as well as sisters and wives.
...
Sharma and others are urging U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton to integrate genders across all of the United States' assistance programs and foreign policy, in addition to promoting women's empowerment programs in places where women need a special focus.

It's the only way, she says, that Secretary Clinton's own words will ring solidly true, "... human rights are women's rights ... and women's rights are human rights."'

3 girls plead not guilty in suicide bullying case

Matt · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HADLEY, Mass. - Lawyers for three teenage girls accused of participating in the bullying of a 15-year-old girl who committed suicide entered not guilty pleas Thursday on their behalf to charges including civil rights violations and criminal harassment.

Ashley Longe, Sharon Chanon Velazquez and Flannery Mullins, all 16, did not appear in Franklin-Hampshire Juvenile Court for their arraignments.

A judge ordered them to have no contact with the family of Phoebe Prince, a South Hadley High School freshman who hanged herself in January after what prosecutors called an "unrelenting" three-month bullying campaign by six teenagers. Prosecutors say Prince was targeted after she briefly dated a popular boy.
...
Mullins, Velazquez and Longe are charged as youthful offenders with civil rights violations resulting in injury. Mullins and Velazquez are also charged with stalking.

Prosecutors said in court Thursday that all three also face separate delinquency cases listing the same alleged offenses, along with criminal harassment charges against each of them.
...
Prosecutors said they will argue the delinquency charges at the same time as the other charges. Had the teens been charged only under delinquency laws and not as youthful offenders, their identities would have been confidential.

The maximum punishment in a juvenile delinquency case is commitment to a state youth services facility until age 18. Juveniles ages 15 and 16 who are charged with a felony can be prosecuted as youthful offenders under certain circumstances, including when they are charged with a crime that involves the infliction or threat of serious bodily harm.'

Abusegate Action Item: Send your letter to incoming OVW head Susan Carbon

Matt · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Last Friday, Susan B. Carbon took over as director of the DoJ Office of Violence Against Women. As we work to reform VAWA and the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (which funds abuse shelters and state DV coalitions), it's important that the OVW understand and support the need for reform.

So I'd like to encourage your group to send a one-page welcome letter to her. The letter should outline your organization's work to stop domestic violence, offer to work with the OVW in its continued efforts, and be polite and constructive in tone.

You may also want to include a paragraph to this effect (change the exact wording so it doesn't sound canned):

> Research shows men and women are approximately likely to abuse. The 2000 NIJ-CDC survey found approximately 1.3 million women and 835,000 men are physically assaulted by an intimate partner annually in the United States. More recent CDC studies have found women are more likely to be the perpetrators of abuse:
>
> 1. Among young adults, 71% of perpetrators in one-way abuse are female: Daniel Whitaker et al. Differences in Frequency of Violence and Reported Injury Between Relationships With Reciprocal and Nonreciprocal Intimate Partner Violence American Journal of Public Health, May 2007.
> 2. Teenage girls are substantially more likely to initiate physical aggression than teenage boys: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Youth Risk Factors. Behavioral Surveillance—United States, 2007. Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Review 2008; 57.

ACFC: Shared Parenting Rally in Chicago, Illinois, April 10, 2010

Matt · 8 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via an ACFC release:

This Saturday, April 10th, there will be a rally in Chicago coinciding with the next meeting of the Illinois Family Law Study Committee. Awareness and the list of supporting organizations continues to grow. All are welcome to attend. Click here for details.

Palin and Bachmann: Feminists in Naughty Monkey Peep Toe Heels

anthony · 9 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Poor, poor Tim Pawlenty. The earnest Minnesota governor brought his best zingers and one-liners to the Minneapolis Convention Center on Wednesday, but he got his biggest applause at the GOP fundraiser only when he introduced Sarah Palin and Michele Bachmann. The two brightest stars of the conservative movement were headliners for the event to raise cash for Bachmann's re-election campaign. On the charisma scale, he was chalk to their napalm.

With Martina McBride's "This One's for the Girls" blaring in the background, Bachmann and Palin took the stage in a blur of waving hands, teased hair, floral prints and piled-on pearls. Far away from Michael Steele's sex-club scandal and John Boehner's "Hell No!" legislative strategy, Palin and Bachmann gave their mostly female audience of more than 11,000 a riled up hour of newfangled Republican girl power.
...
On health care reform, Bachmann promised to push for repeal. "You better believe it, baby! Repeal is what this girl is going to be all about after November." On federal spending, she promised to shrink it. "We're going to start by starving the beast!" On the details of all this, she sort of fudged it (the government owns or controls 51 percent of the American economy?), but that's not the point right now.
...

The point is that artfully folded into the women's right-of-center red meat rhetoric was an unusually heavy dose of what anyone would call old-fashioned feminism if it wasn't coming from two hot Republican women in high heels. (Palin put Naughty Monkey-brand shoes on the map when she wore their red "Double Dare" peep-toe pumps to a John McCain rally.)

"In politics, if you want something said, ask a man. If you want something done, ask a woman," Palin joked to the delight of the crowd, quoting Margaret Thatcher. "My own mantra is that behind every good, productive man stands a very surprised woman."
...
It's hard to think that Wednesday's event was not what Betty Friedan envisioned for women in "The Feminine Mystique," when she said that women should be allowed to want more than a life of folding laundry and driving carpool. "We can no longer ignore that voice within women that says: 'I want something more than my husband and my children and my home.'" she wrote.
...
As Palin finished her stump speech for Bachmann, she made a prediction about the 2010 election cycle. "There are a lot of conservative women like Michele who are standing up and speaking out for common sense conservative solutions and they're ready to take their country back," she said. "2010 is shaping up to be the year that conservative women get together to take back this country and Michele is leading the stampede."'

UK: New Fathers 4 Justice: General Election Demo

Matt · 9 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

'Date: Saturday, April 10, 2010
Time: 9:00am – 4:00pm
Location: CARFAX TOWER, OXFORDSHIRE
City/Town: Oxford, United Kingdom
...
NEW FATHERS 4 JUSTICE has a protest in the run up to the General election will be going to do a demo on our battle bus (open top double-decker bus). We will be targeting David Cameron (the likely new PM) in the run up to the election.

The bus is will be decorated with our banners and slogans and will be making 3 points of call:

1.OXFORD TOWN CENTRE
2.WITNEY OFFICE (David Cameron's constituency)
3.DAVID CAMERON'S HOUSE

Spread the word.'

Abusegate: May 6-7: Working for Men, Working a Miracle!

Matt · 9 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Domestic violence laws are bad for men because they strip due process protections from the falsely-accused, deny services to male victims, and stereotype men as batterers. Some say the effect of our nation's DV laws is to turn men into a new social under-class.

Since 2008, a dedicated group of men and women has been working on Capitol Hill to educate lawmakers about the harmful effects of DV laws. Three times, this group has succeeded in blocking bad bills from being passed:

2008: International Violence Against Women (I-VAWA) Act
2008: National Domestic Violence Volunteer Act
2009: Security and Financial Empowerment (SAFE) Act

But it's not enough to stop bad bills from becoming law. Now, we need to reform the existing laws, especially the Violence Against Women Act, so they are effective, inclusive, and respectful of civil rights.

On May 6-7, we will take our campaign to a new level. WE WILL WORK A MIRACLE.

Register here. Just do it.

Man falls 30 feet saving suicidal woman

Anonymous · 9 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. We post a lot of 'women behaving badly' articles, and a lot of examples of men being treated poorly, as second class citizens, and often even as sub-human. This article should be a shining example to anyone who doesn't think men deserve basic respect of the type of selflessness and heroism men are capable of. It would be easy to attribute his actions to outmoded ideas of chivalry and sacrifice, or to suggest he should never have risked his life in the first place, but I choose to view it as a doctor doing all in his power to help a patient, an example of the type of person, man or woman, that we should all wish there were more of it in the world. Excerpt:

'An Allentown man saved a suicidal woman's life but suffered extensive arm fractures when they fell 30 feet from the roof of a Lehigh Valley personal care facility on Monday.

As they fell, he maneuvered himself under her, so he hit the concrete first, allowing the woman to suffer only injuries so minor she was able to walk away, according to a relative.
...
Smith, 48, a married father of three and a grandfather of three, hit facing down, hitting his left arm, then his head and his right arm as he rolled, Katchisin said.

Smith shattered bones in both arms, and gashed his forehead, but suffered no apparent brain or spinal injuries.

The woman, confirmed as suicidal by Saucon Township police, reportedly suffered a fracture or two to a finger and a toe.'

"Cops: Wiccan listed victim as 'sacrifice' in phone"

Matt · 9 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. – A self-described Wiccan had a man's phone number programmed in her cell phone under the word "sacrifice" before she stabbed him to death, then claimed he had tried to rape her, authorities said Thursday.

Angela Sanford, 30, is accused of killing 52-year-old Joel Leyba last month with a dagger after inviting him to join her in a Wiccan celebration of spring near a popular hiking trail east of Albuquerque.

She told police she stabbed Leyba three times in the stomach after he tied her up and tried to assault her.

But police say Leyba was stabbed 11 to 13 times, and a detective reviewing Sanford's cell phone found the nickname "sacrifice" instead of Leyba's name.

"It makes us absolutely confident there was something more here than her claims of self-defense," said Patrick Davis, a spokesman for the Bernalillo County district attorney's office.'

Undoubtedly some will read this story as a veiled dig at Wiccans on top of the MRA interest it has (which is that she claimed she was defending herself against an attempted rape before she found out she could not uphold that story). Such is not the case, as anyone who knows anything about religions knows that Wiccans generally hold the Rule of Three as part of their ontological belief system and that religions of all kinds attract various sorts of nut cases and extremists who use their religion as a cover/justification for their atrocities.

Yahoo/the MSM are the ones throwing the Wiccan thing in there. She could just as easily been a person with a claim to any other religious belief system or had any number of other labels attached to her. The point of the story is this: a woman murders a man under the guise of a claim of self-defense against rape. We've heard it before, haven't we?

Inmates sue over jail conditions

anthony · 9 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Eleven inmates have filed lawsuits against the Orangeburg-Calhoun Regional Detention Center in U.S. District Court over living conditions.

Inmates claim they've suffered malfunctioning toilets and showers, don't receive prescription medication in a timely manner and have no emergency call system in their cells, among other things, according to complaints filed between Feb. 16 and March 15.

Robert Hooper, who chairs the Orangeburg-Calhoun Law Enforcement Commission, says some of the issues arose during the 2009 annual state Department of Corrections inspection.
...
Last July, the Regional Detention Center was cited for housing sentenced and pre-trial inmates together. Other violations cited were the lack of two-way emergency intercom systems in individual cells and failure to give inmates required outdoor exercise time due to staffing shortages.

The state fire marshal's office also cited the detention center for potential fire hazard violations, including the storage of combustible materials in rooms with electrical equipment.'
...
Many of the inmates who sued in federal court are being held for non-payment of child support. Child support inmates usually make up half or more of the total population, which averages about 400 inmates.'

NOW calls for a woman to replace Justice John Stevens

anthony · 9 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This shouldn't come as a surprise. I have no problem with women on the highest court, but to nominate someone based on gender is unacceptable. Excerpt:

'The National Organization for Women also weighed in on Stevens' retirement. The group called on the president to nominate a woman to the high court, which counts Justice Sotomayor and Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg among its nine members.

"NOW is dedicated to achieving gender parity on the Supreme Court, and we call on President Obama to nominate a woman to fill this seat," NOW President Terry O'Neill said in a statement. "The Supreme Court is out of balance, with women making up a mere 22 percent of the bench. That's simply not enough."'

Inner-city Chicago charter school has perfect college acceptance rate

Matt · 9 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. How about that!? Geez, if you give a whit about them and teach them the way they need to be taught, boys CAN actually succeed and even EXCEL in school! Wow, what a novel concept! And it works for girls, too. It's just that that particular approach has been applied to all our public schools, and so, the results are well-known there: fast-diminishing graduation and college acceptance rates for boys while girls continue to increase their level of excellence -- at the boys' expense. Excerpt:

'Chicago – In Chicago, the graduation rate for African-American boys is about 40 percent, and only about half of all students are accepted to some form of college. The chances of young black men going to college – particularly young men from the poorest neighborhoods – are not good.

But the Urban Prep (link added) charter school, located in the city's tough Englewood neighborhood, has produced a very different statistic. In March, this school, which is made up of young African-American men, announced that all 107 boys in its first graduating class have been accepted to a four-year college. Just 4 percent of those seniors were reading at grade level as freshmen.

It's a remarkable achievement for any urban high school, but particularly one with a population that some people are inclined to write off. It has educators examining what aspects of the school are responsible – and how replicable they are.

Some elements are easy to quantify: an extended school day that means students have an additional 72,000 minutes in school each year, a double period of English, and required extracurriculars and public service.

But many more elements seem embedded into a culture that is based on four R's, as founder and CEO Tim King describes it: ritual, respect, responsibility, and relationships.
...
Most important, King says: College graduation, not admission, is the goal. The school is doing what it can to prepare students for the leap they'll make when they move to a college campus. For one thing, most students participate in at least one summer college program. Also, counselors will be assigned to all graduates to help them over the next few years.

"It will be very hard for them, which is why we want to have this support piece in place so students don't give up," says King.

The 100 percent acceptance "is a big deal," he adds. "But we don't consider it a completion of our mission. We consider it a milestone.... We're supposed to make sure that they finish college."'

Tennessee Mother Ships Adopted Son Back to Moscow Alone

anthony · 9 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Tennesee mother's decision to send her 7-year-old adopted son back to Russia, alone and with a note that she no longer wanted him, has horrified officials and adoption experts in both countries.

Angry Russian officials are calling for a halt to all U.S. adoptions until the two countries could hammer out a new agreement that spelled out the conditions and obligations for such adoptions.

Russian President Dmitry Medvedev called the boy's abrupt return "a monstrous deed." The Russian president told ABC News' George Stephanopoulos in an exclusive interview that he had a "special concern" about the recent treatment of Russian children adopted by Americans.

Torry Hansen of Shelbyville, Tenn., put 7-year-old Artyem Saviliev -- renamed Justin Artyem Hansen in the U.S. -- on a plane to Moscow's Domodedovo airport with a note in his pocket saying she ws returning him, that the boy had severe psychological problems and that the orphanage had lied about his condition.

"I no longer wish to parent this child," the note read, calling the boy a liability.'

Maine Commission Moves to Ban Gender Specific Bathrooms, Sports Teams in Schools

anthony · 9 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Maine Human Rights Commissions taking heat over a proposal to ban schools from enforcing gender divisions in sports teams, school organizations, bathrooms and locker rooms, saying forcing a student into a particular room or group because of their biological gender amounts to discrimination.

The issue came to light last year when the commission ruled that, under the Maine Human Rights Act, a school had discriminated against a 12-year-old transgender boy by denying him access to the girls' bathroom.

Now the commission aims to issue guidelines on how schools should deal with similar situations in the future. It would make Maine the first state to implement such guidelines for schools as young as preschool and nursery -- and even some private schools.

...

"When we separate biology it gets very confusing for everyone," Mike Heath, president of the American Family Association of New England, told FoxNews.com. "Now we're talking about bathrooms where ladies will entertain the possibility of men being in the restroom with them, and every woman I've talked to has indicated that they wouldn't be comfortable with that."

...

"There's not a whole lot of places a girl can expect privacy, but the bathroom should be one of them," said Celeste. "And there's not a whole lot of places a boy expects privacy, but the bathroom should be one of them. Married couples close the door when they go to the bathroom."

...

Ken Trump, President of National School Safety and Security Services, says the guidelines set out in the commission's draft brochure pose some serious safety issues as well.

"If my kid walks into a girls' bathroom and sees a man in there, the child is going to instinctively feel that something's wrong. If you create an entirely new climate where anything goes, you're going to create increased confusion, and those with ill intentions could take advantage of that confusion and decreased ability to make a distinction," Trump told FoxNews.com.'

Watch out women's studies, here comes male studies

Matt · 10 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Inside Higher Ed reports that the discipline will be dedicated to "exploring the triumphs and struggles of the XY-chromosomed of the human race -- without needing to contextualize their ideas as being one half of a male-female binary or an offshoot of feminist theory." Paul Nathanson, a religious studies researcher at McGill University, tells Higher Ed that "the institutionalization of misandry" is "being generated by feminists," although he generously adds, "not all feminists." Lionel Tiger, an anthropology professor at Rutgers University and the chair of the men's studies symposium, calls feminism "a well-meaning, highly successful, very colorful denigration of maleness as a force, as a phenomenon."

...

Inevitably, men's studies will be confused with its new confrontational and divisive counterpart, which is awfully sad. I remember wishing my college women's studies courses would talk more about men, which is to say that I wished for the broader perspective that men's studies embraces. Now male studies has arrived on the scene to turn this into yet another battle between the sexes. Grab your armor, because this one's gonna be bloody.'

UK: Rape claim is a set up, court hears

Matt · 10 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A DOG-OWNER accused of rape claims he has been set up by a woman who changed her mind about selling her pet to him.

Stephen Tuggey, 42, is alleged to have crept into the 57-year-old's bedroom and forced himself on her after arranging to drive more than 100 miles to bring her beloved dog back to South Wales to see her on her birthday.

She called police to her Cardiff home after her daughter saw blood on her dressing gown and she broke down saying she had been attacked.

But Tuggey told police who arrested him: "She consented – going up to bed together was her suggestion, she was waiting for me on the landing."
...
They still had a pub lunch together as planned but when they got back and he fell asleep, her mother started crying and said she wanted him out of the house.

Tuggey denies rape and sexual assault. The woman cannot be named.'

"The woman cannot be named." - but the man can.

Is Feminism Getting In The Way of "Male Studies?"

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The creation of the Foundation for Male Studies was announced on Wednesday at Wagner College in New York, along with a proposal for male studies as a new discipline. While gender studies, women's studies and men's studies already exist, the scholars behind the new discipline insist that colleges need to start fresh in order to examine the current state of boys and men.

The interdisciplinary study would examine the experience of modern males, particularly those under 35, in a moment in history when they are the minority of college graduates, the majority of suicide victims, have shorter life spans and increasingly suffer psychological problems.

To be sure, these are valid and interesting pursuits, deserving of our attention--now more than ever. However, it's the distinction from current men's studies programs that's raising eyebrows.

"This came out of the contentious business of gender studies," says Lionel Tiger, professor of anthropology at Rutgers University. "It's not men's studies as contrasted with women's studies. It's a study of males without all the ideology and self-righteousness of feminists about turning over patriarchy."

The supporters of the new discipline believe that existing programs are biased toward feminist ideology and critique masculinity rather than study it. "Much of it has to do with the almighty females," Tiger says. "A lot of feminist argument is just irritating." Uh, okay.'

'Call off the war against boys'

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The focus was an emerging movement towards men's studies at universities. I think the desire to even out the time and money spent on studying issues unique to each sex -- Women's Studies consume more than 90 per cent of budgets for gender-specific research -- is well intentioned, but I suspect it is ultimately misguided.

What men need most is not to be studied but to be allowed to be men. It is not possible to save or revive masculinity by overanalyzing it.

At our core, we men are uncomplicated and straightforward if allowed to be.
...
Men are simple, not simpletons. For the most part we want to earn a living and provide for those we love. We desire to be proud of what we do and respected for it, even if only by those close to us -- family and friends. Not every man desires to be a celebrity, but he would like to known at work or in the neighbourhood as the best butcher, salesman or handyman.
...
Christina Hoff Sommers, a scholar at the American Enterprise Institute and author of The War Against Boys: How Misguided Feminism is Harming our Young Men, told the Wagner College conference that men acting like men are too often thought of sociopaths. "I'm concerned that male-averse attitude is widespread ... that we're in a society where masculinity is politically incorrect."

We need not devote hundreds of millions of dollars to new university departments studying declining masculinity. We need to stop disparaging the masculine as unthinking, unconcerned and unwanted.'

Educators: Reading gap can be closed

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to reading, boys continue to lag behind girls, according to recent studies.

But it doesn't have to be that way, say a growing number of Greater Cincinnati and Northern Kentucky teachers and education researchers. They say schools can close reading gaps by adhering to relatively simple strategies, including:

• Change what boys are required read at school and on tests.

• Give boys more choices.

• Get parents to push reading at home.

• Limit video game time.

• Teach reading comprehension and assign more writing in middle and high school grades; let teachers stray from teaching to state tests.

• Consider separating genders at high school.'

Study says boys' reading scores most pressing gender-gap issue

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys in Kentucky's schools need to work on reading, according to a national analysis of gender gaps in education being released Wednesday.

The Kentucky results generally mirror the national picture, which shows boys trailing girls on reading assessments in most states.

The report, which covers 2007-2008, was prepared by the Center on Education Policy, an independent education advocacy organization. It called the reading performance by boys "the most pressing gender-gap issue facing our schools."
...
In 2008, however, 76 percent of fourth-grade girls tested at proficiency, while the percentage of boys at that level fell to 67 percent.

The difference was more dramatic among Kentucky eighth graders, with 74 percent of girls at proficiency in reading in 2008 compared to just 60 percent of boys. Meanwhile, among 10th graders, 68 percent of girls were at reading proficiency in 2008, compared to only 52 percent of boys.'

UK: ‘Lost generation’ feared as more boys reject education

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FEARS are growing of a generation of young men lost to education after data yesterday showed boys are increasingly turning their backs on the schools system.

While girls remain more likely to continue in full-time education after the age of 16, a report from Careers Wales found that boys are increasingly likely to leave the system altogether.

And though the majority of young people continue with their education once they reach the legal age at which they can leave school, a study found that there has been a slight fall in the percentage of young people expected to go from year 13 into higher education.

The survey showed that, as in previous years, a larger proportion of girls than boys chose to continue in full-time education. The difference is most marked in year 11, with over 6% more girls than boys.'

"Sexist Beatdown: Manly Masculine Male Edition"

Matt · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A great opportunity to leave comments. Excerpt:

Two important developments in the World of Men this week:

> 1. A group of scholars, led by a man with the almost suspiciously masculine name of Lionel Tiger, established a new discipline of gender studies: Male Studies. Male Studies differs from the already existing discipline of Men's Studies in that it is devoted to studying the "male as male," as opposed to the "male as Easter Bunny" or whatever Men's Studies is passing off as scholarly research nowadays. Also, Male Studies really fucking resents Women's Studies. Cage match, anyone?
> 2. Sady Doyle of Tiger Beatdown, the preeminent scholar in the field of Lady Business Studies, invited some men to talk about their experiences for once. Sady's Visions of Manliness series (see A, B, and C) has addressed stuff like the simultaneous marginalization and privilege of trans men, ironically homophobic sports blogging, and how deeply Valentine's Day truly blows. Strangely, none of the posts are about how feminists have stolen their male identity, trampled upon their masculine phenomenon, and overall been super mean. In other words, this is total Men's Studies shit.

In this edition of Sexist Beatdown, Sady and I YELL ABOUT THESE THINGS AND ALSO bell hooks SO JOIN US!

The Truth Behind Legal Dominance Feminism's "Two Percent False Rape Claim" Figure

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Paper here (.pdf file). Excerpt:

'For at least the last decade, Legal Dominance Feminism has been the predominant voice on sexual abuse within legal academia. However, many of its empirical claims regarding the sexual abuse of women are erroneous. Unlike the exemplary scholarship of other feminist academics, LDF has in recent years promulgated a series of social science myths about rape in the American legal system. Often resting upon a highly problematic methodology, LDF significantly misrepresents empirical reality. This Article attempts to demonstrate that the LDF discourse on rape is fundamentally flawed.

...

Unlike those who oppose the LDF program because of its alleged "malebashing," this Article concedes that were it empirically true that only two percent of those charged with rape were innocent, LDF's solutions might represent a reasonable public policy. But if, as may well be the case, as many as a quarter of the men currently accused of rape are actually innocent, then the goals of LDF are truly destructive. First, the proportion of wrongful convictions would certainly rise if LDF's program were fully implemented. Second, as demonstrated in Part V, wrongful convictions would fall disproportionately on black youths.'

This paper appeared in the April 2000 edition of the Loyola Law Review.

India: Court finds that women can be charged under the new Domestic Violence Act

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW DELHI: In the wake of the raging debate on whether the Domestic Violence Act, enacted for the welfare of women, can be used against them or not, with different high courts expressing "conflicting views", a trial court has set the record straight by holding that female members of a family can be charged under the Domestic Violence Act in case of harassment of a woman.

While giving an interpretation of the provisions for protection of women in the Domestic Violence Act, 2005, the court has said that the law provided a wife can file complaint against her husband and his relatives (both males and females). "Section 2 Clause (q) of the Act which provides that ‘an aggrieved wife or female living in a relationship in the nature of a marriage may also file a complaint against a relative of the husband or the male partner’. The provision includes both male and females," additional sessions judge Kamini Lau said.'

Men Walk-A-Mile to end abuse

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men in heels and feather boas strutted among an entourage of women carrying signs and chanting on a mile-long loop of downtown Ukiah [link added] west of State Street Saturday morning.

They were taking part in the 9th annual "Walk a Mile in Her Shoes" event, aimed at making a visual display to stimulate talk in the community about ending sexual violence. April is Sexual Assault Awareness Month.

"It's one of those topics that's taboo to discuss, but Walk a Mile' brings a little humor to it and makes it more approachable for people, so we can address a serious subject and still have a good, uplifting time," said Carissa Johnson, a volunteer coordinator for the inland branch of Project Sanctuary, which sponsors the event. Project Sanctuary is the local battered women's shelter.

One of the organization's board members, Tim Rohan, sported low, red heels and a black tie over a pink shirt and jeans. The pink showed his support for ending domestic abuse and sexual violence, he said.'

White House set to spend M$730 in FY2011 'to combat violence against women'

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The White House is stepping up its efforts in the area of Violence Against Women, according to Vice-President Joe Biden who announced an unprecedented $730 million in the President's proposed FY2011 budget to shore up services, help victims find housing and legal assistance, and make sure every call for help is answered.

The United States Vice President, who took his commitment to ending violence against women to Peoria, Illinois where he spoke at the Center for the Prevention of Abuse's Partners in Peace awards, pledged to continue his commitment to change attitudes and to "free women from the oppressive cultural norm that causes them in any way to feel they are responsible for or contributed to their own abuse."

The first Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) hearing was held on June 20, 1990, and over the next four years then-Senator Biden held moving hearings on domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking.'

South Africa to circumcise two million men

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Durban: In an effort to combat the scourge of HIV and Aids, over two million men will be circumcised in South Africa's eastern KwaZulu-Natal province, BuaNews reported on Friday.

The premier of KwaZulu-Natal province, Zweli Mkhize, said on Thursday this initiative had received overwhelming support from HIV activists and the medical fraternity.

The process will begin on April 11.

Uganda government outlaws female circumcision

In late 2006, two randomised controlled trials on whether male circumcision reduces HIV transmission were halted because interim results showed an overwhelming protective effect, validating the results from an earlier South African trial conducted in Orange Farm.

Based on the weight of the evidence from both observational studies and randomised trials, public health leaders have concluded that male circumcision when performed by well-trained and well-equipped health professionals can significantly reduce the risk of HIV infection among adult men.

"We now have our task cut out for us to circumcise over two million males using the safety of professional techniques and encourage HIV pre-testing," he said.'

Circumcision: A Man's Decision?

anthony · 11 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I don't have a son so I've never had to make the circumcision decision. I know which way I'd go, but that's neither here nor there.

And in Madatom blogger Jacob Harper's opinion, it's irrelevant what any mom thinks because moms should not be the ones making the decision of whether or not to circumcise their kid.
...
Harper is one guy who isn't the least bit shy about sharing his opinion. In his blog post "Living the Dream: Uncircumcised in America," he writes about being in the "freaky hooded minority," but says that he's proud not resentful.
...
I do think Harper's post is hilarious and I enjoyed reading about circumcision from his perspective, but what he fails to appreciate is that making decisions that affect their kids' lives is what moms do every day -- on things that go well beyond haircuts. Sometimes it's just not practical to wait 18 years and let your kid make a life-changing decision on his own.'

Ex-teacher pleads guilty to having 'sex' with teens

anthony · 12 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tampa, Florida (CNN) -- Former middle school math teacher Stephanie Ragusa was teary-eyed Monday as she pleaded guilty to having sex with two underage students.

Ragusa, 31, faces up to 10 years in prison when she is sentenced on June 15.

She pleaded guilty to three counts of lewd and lascivious battery in a March 2008 case involving a 14-year-old boy.

She also pleaded guilty to two counts of having unlawful sex with a minor in an April 2008 case involving a 16-year-old student.

Prosecutor Rita Peters said Ragusa had intercourse with the 14-year-old on three occasions between October 2006 and May 2007. Evidence in that case included a phone conversation police recorded with the teen's consent. During the phone call, Ragusa could be heard urging him to keep their encounters secret, Peters said.
...
Ragusa has been in jail since her arrest, and defense attorney Robert Herce said she has spent more time behind bars than several other teachers in Hillsborough County, Florida, who have faced similar charges.'

Washington Woman Accused of Luring Disabled Man Into Relationship, Spending His Money

anthony · 12 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Washington woman is accused of luring a disabled man into a relationship with promises of marriage and children only to squander thousands of dollars of his money, leaving him suicidal and in debt, investigators say.

Alesha Lair, 23, is charged with theft and domestic violence stemming from what King County prosecutors are calling a "deceptive" two-year relationship with 55-year-old Douglas Lare.

Lare was diagnosed at birth with mild mental retardation and cerebral palsy and has a mental age that ranges between 6 and 12 years old, according to the probable cause report from the Seattle Police Department.

Prior to his relationship with Lair, he had no outstanding debt and held a full-time job. But in the past year, he has been hospitalized multiple times for suicidal threats because of the debt his relationship resulted caused, according to the report.

...

"One only has to be with Lare for a few minutes to realize his vulnerability, Litalien wrote in the report. "I believe Lair was fully aware of Lare's cognitive and physical disabilities, and knowingly and willingly exploited him."

According to statements by Lare given to authorities, his new girlfriend "promised him they would be married" but that before they could do so, she insisted she had to "establish credit in her name."'

The Justice Project: Crime Labs Need Independence and Robust Oversight to Ensure Justice

Matt · 13 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog post here. Excerpt:

'San Francisco's top public defender, Jeff Adachi, recently called for the city's crime lab to become independent of the police department. This announcement comes on the heels of a series of scandals in the San Francisco Police Department's forensic laboratory initiated by the discovery that a criminalist was stealing cocaine from evidence storage facilities. What initially seemed to be a problem with one unethical employee has led to the unearthing of myriad problems within the lab, including two cases of tainted DNA samples. Moreover, a troubling audit was released showing an improper maintenance of chain of custody of evidence, inadequate record keeping, and a lack of cleanliness in the overall facility. Multiple legal challenges raised in the aftermath of the scandal, including a murder case, have pointed to the possibility that police and prosecutors withheld vital information about the drug thefts from defendants' attorneys.

Adachi is right to push for an independent crime lab. The majority of publicly operated crime labs are part of a law enforcement agency. As a result, crime lab employees may come to see themselves as part of a crime fighting team, rather than objective agents of science. Given that many forensic examinations involve subjective interpretations of data, the risk for bias is greater when the lab is structurally part of law enforcement. Independent crime labs help to ensure that analysts operate maintain an impartial environment to ensure accurate, unbiased and reliable testing. The National Academies of Science recognized these concerns when they recently recommended that laboratories become independent of law enforcement agencies.'

F & F Introduces 5th California Family Court Reform Bill

Matt · 13 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Fathers & Families' mission is to protect children's right to the love and care of both parents after divorce or separation. One of the ways fit parents are sometimes driven to the margins of their children's lives is by one parent using the other parent's disability or partial disability as a pretext to deny them custody or visitation with their children.
...
Existing California family law codes do not address the issue of disabled parents, leaving the door open for unnecessary and often expensive litigation, even in cases where the disabled parent had been successfully parenting the children for many years prior to the separation or divorce.

SB 1188 will add Section 3049 to the Family Code. It will read:

> 3049. In any proceeding to determine child custody or visitation under this part, in which at least one parent is disabled as defined by the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. Sec. 12101 et seq.), a court shall not use the disability of that parent as the basis of an award of custody or visitation to another party unless that party establishes by clear and convincing evidence that a grant of custody or visitation to the disabled parent would be detrimental to the health, safety, and welfare of the child.

...
Fathers & Families often hears from parents who have had their disability unfairly used against them in family court. If this has happened to you, please let us know by filling out our form here.'

Dr. Claudia Cornell on the emotional abuse of men by women

Anonymous · 13 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog post here. Excerpt:

'If you search the web, you will find few web sites that deal with the emotional abuse of men by women. Most sites that deal with this subject tend to be a bit on the misogynistic side. As a man, I don't want to be painted with the same brush as men who abuse women, so it's not fair to paint all women as emotionally abusive.

In my search, I did find one web site that presented an intelligent, balanced view of the subject. WomenAbusingMen.org was founded by Dr. Claudia B. Cornell and Kimberly C. Taylor.

While I found WomenAbusingMen.org to be quite intriguing, I wanted to learn more on the subject of emotional abuse of men by women. I sent an email with a comprehensive list of interview questions. Fortunately, I received a prompt response from Dr. Cornell expressing a great willingness to answer my questions in the hope of spreading awareness on the emotional abuse of men by women.'

Ben Roethlisberger, 'You Can Do Better,' District Attorney Says

anthony · 13 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ben Roethlisberger might have promised to be a role model, but the district attorney who declined to press sexual assault charges stemming from a drunken evening at a nightclub said it was the actions of the Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback, not his words, that would prove it.

...

Bright said that due to scant physical evidence and conflicting statements from the student, he could not prove a crime had happened.

"You get a lot of he said, she said," Bright said, "but it's unclear. It's foggy, and I couldn't prove it beyond a reasonable doubt."

The woman, who Bright said told police after the incident she didn't know if they even had sex, wrote a letter asking that Roethlisberger not be charged, but Bright said it made little difference in his decision.

"Without that letter, I still feel we did not have enough to prove him guilty, at least of the charge of rape," Bright said.

...

During a news conference, Bright spelled out a confusing mix of stories that emerged immediately after the complaint was filed, and said alcohol played a significant role in the night's events.

When she was first asked by a police officer if she had been raped, she answered, "No," Bright said, citing police reports. When asked if she and Roethlisberger had sex, she said, "I'm not sure," the district attorney said.

...

"I still said no. This is not OK with me. He said it's okay. He had sex with me," Bright quoted the woman saying.

The police interview with Roethelisberger quoted him telling police that he tried to send the student away, saying, "I told her she was too drunk to be back here," Bright said.

The police officer who wrote the report concluded, "It is unclear as to what happened due to the …recollection due to her intoxication level."'

Time: "Is the U.S. Army Losing Its War on Suicide? "

anthony · 13 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From the invasion of Afghanistan until last summer, the U.S. military had lost 761 soldiers in combat there. But a higher number in the service — 817 — had taken their own lives over the same period. The surge in suicides, which have risen five years in a row, has become a vexing problem for which the Army's highest levels of command have yet to find a solution despite deploying hundreds of mental-health experts and investing millions of dollars. And the elephant in the room in much of the formal discussion of the problem is the burden of repeated tours of combat duty on a soldier's battered psyche.

The problem is exacerbated by the manpower challenges faced by the service, because new research suggests that repeated combat deployments seem to be driving the suicide surge. The only way to apply the brakes will be to reduce the number of deployments per soldier and extend what the Army calls "dwell time" — the duration spent at home between trips to war zones. But the only way to make that possible would be to expand the Army's troop strength, or reduce the number of soldiers sent off to war.
See pictures of an Army town's struggle with PTSD.

"It's frankly frustrating that with the level of effort that we've put out there, that we haven't stemmed the [suicide] tide," General George Casey, the Army's top officer, told a House panel March 23. When pressed by a lawmaker the previous month on whether the Army was getting closer to solving the challenge, Army Secretary John McHugh was blunt. "Sadly, the answer is not much closer," he told the Senate Armed Services Committee Feb. 23. "As to why people take this step — particularly as to why men and women in uniform do — we're still in many ways befuddled."

Mother in Adoption Scandal Was Trying for Second Child

anthony · 13 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Tennessee mother who horrified the adoption community when she put her 7-year-old son on a plane back to Russia was in the process of trying to adopt a second child.

Torry Hansen had turned to a second adoption agency to bring home a child from the Soviet Republic of Georgia, a source with the sheriff's department told ABC News.

She switched adoption agencies after the agency that arranged the adoption of her first child, World Association for Children and Parents, urged her to wait before adopting again, the source said. The association advised Hansen it would be best to settle in with the boy before adding to her family, the source said.

A few months later, Hansen, of Shelbyville, Tenn., and her mother, Nancy Hansen put 7-year-old Artyem Savilev on a plane back to Moscow in hopes of having the boy's adoption annulled.'

New book claims Oprah Winfrey concocted stories about sexual abuse she suffered as a child

anthony · 13 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Winfrey's relationship with longtime "love" Stedman Graham, her reputed dirt-poor upbringing in rural Mississippi, her rumored lesbian crushes on women such as Diane Sawyer -- all are stories she has manipulated for decades in the name of sensational ratings, according to writer Kitty Kelley's latest unauthorized biography "Oprah."
...
The much-anticipated book details how:

* Winfrey concocted stories about sexual abuse she suffered as a child -- and grossly exaggerated the poverty she was brought up in.
...
The future star would steal from her mother's purse, pawn her jewelry and even turn tricks. She was eventually sent to live in Nashville with Vernon Winfrey, who was her mother's former lover and who is listed on her birth certificate as her father. He has been described as the domineering disciplinarian who set her straight.

Later, determined to become rich and famous, Winfrey was ready to change her story to her advantage, making sure she cultivated her image as an everywoman, the book alleges.'

Books for Boys Author Signs 11 Book Contracts

Anonymous · 13 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Release here. Excerpt:

'(I-Newswire) April 13, 2010 - ROCKFORD, Illinois: Children's adventure and mystery author, Max Elliot Anderson, has signed contracts for 11 books to be published by two publishers.

Comfort Publishing, in Concord, North Carolina, will republish his first 7 titles after the original publisher could not withstand the economic pressures that have hurt so many small businesses.

The titles to be republished by Comfort Publishing include Newspaper Caper, Terror at Wolf Lake, North Woods Poachers, Mountain Cabin Mystery, Big Rig Rustlers, Secret of Abbott's Cave, and Legend of the White Wolf. A new book, Barney and the Runaway, will also be published.

Comfort Publishing has also contracted a first right of refusal option on another 16 titles and wants to pursue an extensive series with him. This could become a 24 book deal. "These books are already written," Anderson said, "although I'm doing a revision on each one to increase the word count."

"Over a period of 3 1/2 years," Mr. Anderson added, "I wrote 35 manuscripts. Now I'm glad I did that." Each book has different characters, locations, and plots.'

Would a young woman have been beaten like this?

Matt · 14 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

By now some of you have heard of this incident in Maryland near the University of Maryland. As the video shows, the kid was doing nothing wrong but skipping down a sidewalk. When an officer on horseback approached him, he got scared and backed away. Then a number of other police descended on him and beat him into unconsciousness. The police then lied about the incident in official reports, all the while thinking that they were not being filmed.

So my question to you is this: Had he been a she, would this have happened, even if all those police had been female? I don't think so. I think this is a further example of how men, and young men in particular, are viewed as fair fodder for things like beatings and abuse by the authorities. After all, if they can be drafted into the armed forces to get blown to bits, then why shouldn't the state or its agents feel they can get away with beating them senseless whenever they feel like it?

Men's rights are human rights. After all, we're human... right?

NY Times: Male Studies vs. Feminism

anthony · 14 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Education | The academic gender wars got a bit more spirited last week, Inside Higher Ed reports, with the creation of the above-named interdisciplinary effort, announced at a conference at Wagner College on Staten Island, to study malehood in all its power and powerlessness. Quote:

> Lionel Tiger, a professor of anthropology at Rutgers University, said the field takes its cues “from the notion that male and female organisms really are different” and the “enormous relation between … a person’s biology and their behavior” that’s not being addressed in most contemporary scholarship on men and boys.
>
> “I am concerned that male-averse attitudes are widespread in the United States and that masculinity is becoming politically incorrect,” said Christina Hoff Sommers, a resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute and author of “The War Against Boys: How Misguided Feminism Is Harming Our Young Men.”
>
> The culprit, said Dr. Tiger, is feminism: “a well-meaning, highly successful, very colorful denigration of maleness as a force, as a phenomenon.”

Were 3rd-grade boys asked to dress as girls for Women's History Month?

anthony · 14 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WHEN JANINE Giandomenico's son explained his school project to her, she dismissed his worries and figured she'd have to fork out a few bucks for poster board, magazines and a glue stick or two.

Then she read the letter that accompanied the project, over and over again, and believes that her son's third-grade teacher at the Maude Wilkins Elementary School in Maple Shade, Burlington County, was asking the class, including the boys, to dress as women during a fashion show for a Women's History Month project.

"I don't see how a women's fashion show, and asking my son, whether it's dressing up in jeans and trousers or a dress, teaches anything about women's history," the 41-year-old township resident said yesterday morning. "Teach them about real people and about real things. Don't turn into the Paris Hilton and the Kardashian channel."
...
The initial letter describing the project, written by teacher Tonya Uibel, has been interpreted different ways by Giandomenico, the school district, and parents sitting in their cars outside the school yesterday afternoon. In the letter, Uibel said that the class had been learning about women in history in March and that "all students" must participate in the fashion-show project, which was a graded assignment.'

'Baby Emma' case puts state adoption laws between father, child

Anonymous · 15 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This is just horrible. Apparently, it's OK for a mother to put a child up for adoption without the father's consent. Excerpt:

'John Wyatt raced to the hospital, excited to be a father but worried about the mother.

His girlfriend had promised to call him the moment she went into labor, but she'd turned off her cellphone. Wyatt had been calling it for hours. Finally, an operator at Potomac Hospital in Woodbridge confirmed the news: His girlfriend was there, and his daughter had been born.

When Wyatt arrived at the hospital that morning of Feb. 11, 2009, he got the shock of his 20-year-old life: Administrators insisted that no such baby was there -- and no such mother.

Court records show that Wyatt's daughter, Emma, was born Feb. 10, at that very hospital, and that she spent the next week at two Woodbridge hotels before being put up for adoption -- in Utah. "We just want Emma to come home," says Wyatt's mother, Jeri. "My son wants his child. I want to see my granddaughter."

More than a year later, a cross-country court fight over the child known as "Baby Emma" has yet to settle the question of whether the strawberry-blond, blue-eyed girl was illegitimately taken from her father or legally put up for adoption by her mother, 20-year-old Emily Colleen Fahland, a George Mason University student. The highly unusual dispute pits Virginia against Utah; a Stafford County judge in December awarded Wyatt custody of Emma and cited a federal kidnapping statute in ordering the state to bring her back from Utah.

Virginia officials say they lack the legal authority to follow the judge's order.

In Salt Lake City, a Utah judge issued a competing order granting temporary custody to the adoptive couple in that state, and Emma has been living with them ever since. Attorneys for the couple say Wyatt, of Dumfries, failed to assert his parental rights in time to contest the adoption. His appeal is pending in a Utah court.'

Barbara Kay: Male Studies — a proposed curriculum

Scottie · 15 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Barbara Kay gives a fairly decent account on the need for Male Studies here. There isn't much time to leave comments, so have at it! Excerpt:

'The 93rd anniversary of the battle of Vimy Ridge, considered one of Canada's defining moments as a young nation, was commemorated at the National War Memorial last Friday.
...
But of course, it was not "young people" who "braved gunfire," it was young men.

You'll see the same tendency in reports of coal mine disasters: "Miners" are trapped, "rescuers" race against time, "families" await word. If you didn't know better, you'd think miners, rescuers and families were a mixed bag of men and women, when in fact the first two — the ones taking the risks and facing the terror — are almost invariably men, while only the third — anguishing, but alive and well — are women and children.
...
Interest in creating a program in Male Studies may have been spurred by weariness with feminism's misandric myths. But its subject matter, one hopes, will unfold organically along rigorous scholarly lines. Perhaps it will venture into the three "Ps" of normative masculinity: man as progenitor, protector and provider — and what happens to cultures that assign a low value to these roles. I would urge Male Studies specialists to go where the evidence leads — into areas such as intimate partner violence.

As it happens, the inauguration of the Male Studies program coincides with the 98th anniversary — April 15 — of the sinking of the Titanic. As another putative course, "The Titanic and Male Honour Codes in Western Civilization" would open up a fascinating discussion on values around the perceived worth of men's lives and women's lives.'

High school administrator and others allegedly spied on students via school-issued laptops

Matt · 16 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. (Related report here). No, a woman would never do that. Not in a million years. Excerpt:

'The system that Lower Merion school officials used to track lost and stolen laptops wound up secretly capturing thousands of images, including photographs of students in their homes, Web sites they visited, and excerpts of their online chats, says a new motion filed in a suit against the district.

More than once, the motion asserts, the camera on Robbins' school-issued laptop took photos of Robbins as he slept in his bed. Each time, it fired the images off to network servers at the school district.

Back at district offices, the Robbins motion says, employees with access to the images marveled at the tracking software. It was like a window into "a little LMSD soap opera," a staffer is quoted as saying in an e-mail to Carol Cafiero, the administrator running the program.

"I know, I love it," she is quoted as having replied.

Those details, disclosed in the motion filed late Thursday in federal court by Robbins' attorney, offer a wider glimpse into the now-disabled program that spawned Robbins' lawsuit and has shined an international spotlight on the district.'

Undoubtedly many people were involved in this invasion of privacy, and given that so many people working in schools from teachers to administrators and staff are overwhelmingly female, I would not be surprised if those implicated are as well. That society cannot seem to accept that women are as capable of such things as men still confounds me when the evidence is so stark.

Girls and boys in movies: Punching boys is OK, not so girls

Matt · 18 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Saw How to Train Your Dragon recently and can say it was a great movie in many ways. A cute, heart-tugging tale, with some father-son stuff in there, too. My favorite character was the main dragon character, "Toothless".

But like any MRA, I can't just turn it off. One recurring image was that of the heroine-girl (Astride) often punching the hero-boy (Hiccup) in the arm and chest to show her disapproval of what he does or says. This is on top of the repeated depictions of the other boy characters as being incompetent and acceptance-dependent on Astride, who also knocks them around some. And some of us wonder how is it girls come to the conclusion that it's OK for them to hit boys but not the other way around. Answer: We are teaching them this.

The studio is Dreamworks Animation. A contact form at their investor relations web site is here. What you say to them is your business but my intention is just this: "Great movie, loved it! Just one thing: You don't need to encourage domestic violence from a young age in your movies by showing a girl (or boy for that matter) character hitting others of their peers with whom they have romantic potential. The story would have been fine without it." You also may want to send them these links, too:
http://www.menstuff.org/archives/harrypotter3.html
http://www.thefreeradical.ca/Schoolyard_violence_not_just_for_boys.htm

More on the Philadelphia Webcam Spy Case

Matt · 18 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Original report on MANN here. Thousands of pictures and possibly videos as well appear to have been taken. Caption: "Web cams in school-issued laptops allegedly photographed students at home."

Feminist jurisprudence hurts men and women

anthony · 19 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For feminism, spring is an aphrodisiac for histrionics and unadulterated stupidity. The University of New Hampshire's Womyn's Club spent all of last week fighting the local fire department over the right to burn smutty magazines wherever the "womyn" pleased. Last month Sen. Harry Reid uttered perhaps the stupidest remark by a feminist in history: "Women don't commit domestic violence."

This is false. In a report published in 2003 in the Florida State University Law Review, Professor Linda Kelly from the Indiana University Law School states, "Men and women commit violence at similar rates." Kelly's research, which cites various in-depth studies from over three decades of legal scholarship, found that "women match, and often exceed, husbands in the frequency with which they engage in violent behavior," and "wives were found to engage in more severe acts of violence than husbands." In 1975, for example, 3.8 percent of husbands and 4.6 percent of wives engaged in "severe violence," defined as "kicking, biting or hitting with a fist; hitting or trying to hit with something; beating up; and threatening with or using a knife or gun." Kelly identifies another disturbing trend: since the 1970s, the incidence of male violence "has declined steadily"; female violence "has remained virtually the same."

To add insult to injury, or rather, injury to injury, "female violence is not recognized within the extensive legal literature on domestic violence" and is instead "denied, defended and minimized" by the legal and judicial establishments. "Female violence," Kelly writes, "presents both a threat to feminist theory as well as to the practice of domestic violence law." According to feminist theory, "society is controlled by an all-encompassing patriarchal structure," and "no aspect of male to female relations can be considered without first accepting the male as all-powerful and the female as powerless." Men batter their wives not due to psychopathology, but out of a desire to subordinate and control women. The feminists have spoken. Abusive women cannot be recognized. Men cannot be victims.'

Canada: 'Men don high heels for a cause'

anthony · 19 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SUDBURY, Ont. — More than 100 men donned red high-heeled shoes in downtown Sudbury, Ont., Sunday.

The inaugural “Walk A Mile in Her Shoes” event aimed to raise awareness about violence against women.

Pumped dignitaries from around the community joined in, including the mayor, chief of police and local MP.

Police Chief Frank Elsner says domestic issue is an important issue.

Money raised is going toward a YWCA women’s program.

The event also marks the beginning of National Victim Awareness Week.

“Look at all the men who’ve come out and put on their heels,” said Mayor John Rodriguez, who gained a couple of centimetres from his own pair of pumps.'

Student paper columnist: Men’s center not a bad idea

anthony · 19 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I recently was in a class when a discussion broke out about the men’s center and how it was going to be voted on in this past week’s election due to it being included in the platform of one of the candidates.
...
In the beginning of this conversation, I will admit that I was convinced that this would be a place where men would sit and talk about how women are pulling the rape card or plotting how they would get out of whatever situation they were in.
...
If these gentle spirits that help me with my movement and my cause need the same help I do, I would never, ever, turn my back on them based solely on their sex.

This is not to say that every man who may use this center is a part of the feminist movement, but they hopefully are more compassionate to women’s causes if they are experiencing the same type of gender violence that women are.

In the case of the men’s center, I feel it is the first step towards fixing a broken system and bringing light to men’s gender violence issues as well.

Hopefully we can all work together someday to end these atrocities and maybe this is just the beginning.'

Our boys are falling behind in education

anthony · 19 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What's the next battle for an aging feminist?

Boys.

Granted, the battle for women's rights and equality has not been completely won, but the new reality is that in the future, it will be males who are most endangered.

Currently, up to 60 percent of the students at an average co-educational college or university are female. The majority of bachelors' degrees are now awarded to females in every racial and ethnic group. By 2017, the ratio of female to male college graduates will be 1 1/2 to 1. One demographer calls that prediction "staggering and transformational."

Feminists have lobbied for a societal transformation where the rights and talents of women are fully recognized. But is this the kind of transformation we want? A "role reversal," where women will reign supreme in all fields but the sciences?

Is it healthy that even those men who do stay in college seek fewer student leadership positions and perform worse academically than women do? Won't these factors, combined with the lower graduation rate, promote a "marriage gap?"

How many college-educated women today would want to marry a man with such low educational achievement, skills or ambition that he would be permanently relegated to the role of full-time "homemaker" — not by choice, but by default?

...

To some, this boy crisis is difficult to accept. "Boys will be just fine . . . it's girls and women we still have to concentrate on," a feminist colleague said recently during a rather heated "boy gap" discussion.

"Look around," say others. "How can we worry about boys when men still rule the world?"'

Ed. note: About the author, here.

“Men’s Rights” Movement Doesn’t Belong On Top

anthony · 19 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rutgers University Professor Lionel Tiger and some of his penis-wielding peers have been rallying to establish a “men’s studies” program at Rutgers University. Men have reached a point where “they’re experienced a considerable amount of dismay and uncertainty,” says Tiger to CNN. Men today feel “somewhat scorned, in principle by women.” Tiger’s work has been born from a fear that men are being feminized. Thus, men must explore what it means to be masculine; both on a social and biological level, and reclaim their territory.

Professor Tiger’s not alone in his masculinity mission. Just ask Harry Reid. The senator enraged “men’s rights” activists last month when he claimed unemployed men are to blame for increased domestic violence. Said Reid, “Men, when they’re out of work, tend to become abusive.” Men’s News Daily Editor Paul Elam described Reid’s remarks as “bizarre and unfounded” that “reveals an unimaginable disconnect from the millions of unemployed Americans who are not abusive.” The National Organization for Men, Men and Fathers for Justice, Men’s Equality Conference, the Fatherhood Coalition and at least a dozen other “men’s rights” groups joined the fray and called for Reid to apologize. He did not.

These organizations not only protest the feminization and demonization of men. They also rally against what they describe as widespread inequality against men. Marty Nemko, president of the National Organization for Men, insists that men are consistently put on the back burner for women and “minorities,” “When boys start to look into college, the very first thing they see are the colleges’ brochures and websites, with far more pictures of women and minorities; the subliminal message: we don’t care about white males.” Thus, they feel like a “disposable sex.” He goes on, “In our attempt to lift up girls and women, we have destroyed boys and men. Just as we are assiduous to avoid unfair treatment of women and minorities, we must do the same for boys and men.” Other members of this men’s movement are making a career out of revitalizing America’s men.'

Australian men reclaim child support through DNA tests after law change

anthony · 19 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Nearly 50 men have won back child support payments totalling A$434,378 (£262,249), with one man recovering A$70,000.

In January, 2007, changes made to the Child Support (Assessment) Act allowed any parent to seek a DNA test to determine the paternity of his or her child.

Support groups hailed the development, saying too many men had been duped by former partners into supporting children who were not theirs.

"I think it's a good thing that children are able to know the biological father rather than their pretend father," said Sue Price, director of the Men's Rights Agency. "I think it's essential that they should be able to have the money repaid to them.

"Why should they have to pay for another man's child?"

But Kathleen Swinbourne, president of the Sole Parents Union, said the new laws were damaging children at the centre of such DNA disputes: "What does this say to children about being wanted, being loved, being parented?"

While 48 men determined from DNA tests that they were not the biological fathers of the children they had been supporting, hundreds of other men challenging paternity have learned that they were, in fact, the biological father of the child in question.'

Sperm and the Single Girl

Broadsword · 19 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Successful 30-something women are turning to the Web to shop for top-notch sperm donors — vetting personality traits, listening to voice samples, and even enduring wait lists

[Redacted by request], a clinical researcher in Boston, Massachusetts, was contemplating grad school when she saw an episode of Lipstick Jungle that changed her life. "A woman was freezing her eggs, and it hit me: I'm 37, and I want to have children." Within three months, [Redacted by request] had purchased eight vials of sperm from a bank, an experience she likens to "match.com, because you're looking for qualities in someone you'd want to date. I used Google for everything."

...

A similar urge, deep and primal, is driving single women in their 30s, women with solid careers and financials, to forget about finding The One and move ahead with having a baby. Jane Mattes, founder of the New York City-based organization Single Mothers by Choice (SMC), which has over 2,000 members, says that 75 percent go to sperm banks, versus the 25 percent who adopt. The profile of the average woman choosing DI may sound just like your circle of friends and coworkers: "She's 30 to 45," Mattes says. "Ninety-nine percent have a college degree and are upper middle class."

UK: New research reveals a third of boys struggle to find books that interest them

Broadsword · 19 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A new study by the National Literacy Trust* of 17,089 pupils aged from eight to 16 has revealed that almost one-third (32.3%) of boys agree with the statement 'I can't find anything to read that interests me'.

The finding comes as the National Literacy Trust and the Premier League launch the 2010 Premier League Reading Stars (PLRS), an initiative that uses Barclays Premier League players to encourage families to share stories together and particularly inspire boys who wouldn't normally enjoy reading. Research also finds that over a quarter of boys (28.3%) say sportspeople inspire them to read. The PLRS project hopes to utilise this finding by showing them their football heroes enjoy reading for pleasure.

...

Jonathan Douglas, Director of the National Literacy Trust, said: "National literacy levels are being undermined by the fact that one-third of boys can't find anything to read that interests them. The Premier League Reading Stars initiative enables us to reach new audiences, inspiring them to read through their passion for football."

Laptop spycam case update: 56,000 images

Matt · 20 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Follow-up story here. 56,000 images. So they took that many images in an effort to "recover" 80 supposedly missing laptops? We have one name involved with this sleaze-fest: Carol Cafiero. I want to see some more names associated with those responsible for this invasion of the students' privacy and rights. Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA – A suburban school district secretly captured at least 56,000 webcam photographs and screen shots from laptops issued to high school students, its lawyer acknowledged Monday.

"It's clear there were students who were likely captured in their homes," said lawyer Henry Hockeimer, who represents the Lower Merion School District.
...
The Philadelphia Inquirer first reported Monday on the large number of images recovered from school servers by forensic computer experts, who were hired after student Blake Robbins filed suit over the tracking practice.

Robbins still doesn't know why the district deployed the software tracking program on his computer, as he had not reported it lost or stolen, his lawyer said.
...
The depositions taken to date have provided contradictory testimony about the reasons for tracking Robbins' laptop. One of the two people authorized to activate the program, technology coordinator Carol Cafiero, invoked her Fifth Amendment right not to answer questions at the deposition, Haltzman said.

About 10 school officials had the right to request an activation, Hockeimer disclosed Monday.

The tracking program helped police identify a suspect not affiliated with the school in the locker room theft, Hockeimer said. The affluent Montgomery County district distributes the Macintosh notebook computers to all 2,300 students at its two high schools, Hockeimer said.'

Intact America: Petition Delivery Imminent, more signatures needed

Matt · 20 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA email:

Next week, we will be delivering our petition urging the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) NOT to recommend routine circumcision for all baby boys.

Despite tremendous support from our intactivists, we're still just 1,616 signatures away from our 25,000-signature goal.

If you haven't already signed the petition, please click here to take action today!

There are only a few days left - will you help us reach our April 26 goal by sharing the campaign on Facebook or tweeting about it on Twitter? We need your help!

The more signatures we can deliver, the more likely the CDC will be to listen to our message.

That's why we need YOUR help to spread the word about the importance of protecting our baby boys from unnecessary risk and harm. Will you help us by doing the following?

- If you use Facebook, click here to share this campaign on your profile (don't forget to become a fan of Intact America while you're at it).

- If you use Twitter, click here to tweet about this campaign. If you're not already following us on Twitter, click here to add us to your list now.

- Or, if you don't use either one (or even if you do!), you can always spread the word via our Tell a Friend page.

Motivated by faulty conclusions drawn from flawed studies that ignore the risks and ethical concerns of infant circumcision, the CDC may actually recommend this unnecessary and dangerous surgery for all newborn baby boys.

We know that safe sexual practices and abstinence &ndash not circumcision &ndash are best at preventing sexually transmitted diseases. And we know that there is NO link between infant circumcision and better health.

But we need your help to make sure that the CDC gets that message before it's too late for the next generation of baby boys.

We're just 1,616 signatures away from making sure our voices are heard loud and clear.

Please help us reach our 25,000-signature goal by Monday, April 26 - post an update to your Facebook account and get the message out on Twitter today.

Thank you again for all that you do.

Sincerely,

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America
www.intactamerica.org

P.S. If you haven't already signed the petition, please click here to take action today!

Cost-Saving Measure: Fire the Men, Promote the Women

anthony · 20 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There appears to be a new, novel way to cut IT personnel costs: Get rid of the men and keep the women, because you know you can get away with paying them less.

According to Computerworld's "Salary Survey 2010," the perennial gender wage gap has remained firmly in place in the past year. For example, female application development managers made 7 percent less than their male counterparts, and female CIOs made a staggering 16 percent less.

It seems hardly coincidental that a study by recruiting firm Sheila Greco Associates, cited in the Computerworld report, found that the percentage of female CIOs and executive vice presidents of technology rose to 16.4 percent in 2009, compared to 12 percent in 2007. When women are clearly equally capable and you can pay them 16 percent less, why wouldn't you pad the upper echelons with as many women as availability will allow?

F&F: Child Custody Bill Passes California Assembly by Unanimous Consent

Matt · 20 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'At Fathers & Families we receive many letters from divorced or separated military servicemembers with painful but preventable family law problems. California AB 2416 will help protect the loving bonds that servicemembers share with their children.

Fathers & Families has worked closely with Assemblyman Paul Cook, the American Retirees Association, and others on AB 2416, and earlier this month thousands of you responded to our Action Alert in support of the bill. We are pleased to announce that this week the bill passed the Assembly by unanimous consent. The bill will now go to the Senate.

To learn more about the bill and to read Fathers & Families' official support letter, see our AB 2416 Campaign page here.

Bills don't pass by unanimous consent by accident—this victory was achieved because Fathers & Families' legislative representative Michael Robinson and assistant legislative representative Nicole Silverman have spent months lobbying legislators and gathering support for AB 2416. We've been at the forefront of this issue, successfully working to pass military parent legislation in dozens of states.'

"An Emasculating Truth" complete and ready for viewing

Matt · 20 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Hello -

A few months ago, Matt posted the trailer for “An Emasculating Truth” – a new film directed by the Neistat Brothers.

I wanted to let you know that the film is now complete and can be viewed at anemasculatingtruth.com.

Over the course of the past few months, new studies and articles have been published about the decline of manhood. It’s only proof that this topic is gathering attention amongst academics and the news media, from nutrition and health blogs to almost every major outlet from the New York Times to NPR.

And even with the latest swath of commercials “emasculating” the American Man, we believe our film, “An Emasculating Truth”, couldn’t have come at a better time.

Thank you for taking interest in our film and letting your readers know about it.

Hope you and your readers enjoy it.

Best,

Chris

Abusegate: "DV Spring Cleaning" gearing up

Matt · 20 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

All –

Registrations are rolling in for our May 6-7 DV Spring Cleaning on Capitol Hill. We want to have as many face-to-face meetings as possible with staffers to “close the deal” on the various VAWA reforms we’re pushing for.

We’re doing advance registrations to facilitate advance orientation and team-matching. If you haven’t registered yet, please do so As Soon As Possible at http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/dv-spring-cleaning-register-now/

If you register by this coming Friday, you get the early-bird discount – FREE! After that, the registration fee will be $25.

-- Abusegate Bob

"Despite New Law, Gender Salary Gap Persists"

anthony · 20 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New legislation in Congress aims to close the pay equity gap, even as administration officials prepare to step up enforcement of the existing law.

Economists say part of the gap is because women are more likely to take time off work for child care, and an even bigger part is because of "occupational segregation": Women tend to work disproportionately in lower-paying fields. To be sure, many women's groups see this as a vestige of discrimination. (Another bill, the Fair Pay Act, seeks to address this, though that legislation is considered less likely to gain congressional passage.)
...
Critics worry the Paycheck Fairness Act would encourage a surge of unfounded class-action lawsuits. Labor and employment lawyer Jane McFetridge said small businesses would also find the new requirements cumbersome. For example, an employer who pays a man more than a woman for the same job might have to show that it's a "business necessity."

"Do we want the government deciding what is business necessity?" McFetridge asked lawmakers at the hearing. "Isn't that for the business owner to decide?"'

RADAR ALERT: A Weird Story Gets Weirder -- Ever-Expanding Definitions Of Abuse

Matt · 21 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Last month, England's Daily Mail reported that New Jersey resident Donna Simpson was determined to become the world's fattest woman.

Already 600 lbs at the age of 42, the stay-at-home mom of a three year old girl wants gain 400 lbs in the next two years, reaching her goal weight of 1000 lbs and thereby breaking the Guinness World Record for female fatness. Her husband, a 150lb "belly man," is completely supportive of her pursuit.

On March 20, 2010, an outraged Renee Martin blogged that Simpson's husband isn't just a chubby chaser, he's an abuser. "Abuse can take many forms and it often goes unremarked upon, or else wrongly labeled. The nature of the power dynamic between the feeder/feedee removes agency and therefore eliminates culpability. Just as it is highly unreasonable to blame the victim of domestic violence for their bruises, so too is it unconscionable to blame the feedee for over eating."

Ms. Martin's take on the story is wrong for three reasons. First, and most importantly, by stretching the definition of domestic violence to include the encouragement of overeating, she diminishes the suffering of real victims of domestic violence. Secondly, she infantilizes Donna Simpson, that is, she treats her as an unconscious automaton who has no role to play in her efforts to gain weight. Lastly, she places Simpson's husband in a no-win position. What if he chastised her for wanting to gain more weight, or was simply indifferent? Wouldn't that make him an unsupportive bastard? Isn't that abuse under an expansive definition of domestic violence?

The story of one woman's quest to become the fattest woman in the world and the accompanying question of whether her husband is an abuser for encouraging her to reach her goal is perfect for talk radio, both on the left and the right of the political spectrum. Please contact your favorite radio talk show and tell them about the controversy. If you can, please send them a copy of our report, Expanding Definitions of Domestic Violence, Vanishing Rule of Law (.pdf file).

Thanks for your help.

++
Date of RADAR Release: April 20, 2010

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence. http://mediaradar.org/

Department of Education repeals Bush-era policy on Title IX

anthony · 21 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Department of Education is repealing a Bush-era policy that some critics argue was a way to avoid complying with federal law in providing equal opportunities for female athletes.

Under the move, schools and colleges must now provide stronger evidence that they offer equal opportunities for athletic participation under the federal Title IX gender equity law.

It reverses a 2005 policy under former President George W. Bush that allowed schools to use just a survey to prove a lack of interest in starting a new women's sport and encouraged schools to consider a non-response to the questionnaire as disinterest.

"Making Title IX as strong as it possibly can be is the right thing to do," Vice President Biden said Tuesday at an event at George Washington University in Washington, D.C., announcing the change.'
...

But Gerald Reynolds, a former Education Department official under Bush, said the new policy is a step back for women's rights because it focuses more on numbers than what female and male students want.

"The women's movement was in part about ensuring women's liberty interests — that in the hopes, wishes and desires about any aspect of their life, they were the shot-callers," said Reynolds, chairman of the National Commission on Civil Rights. "I think we are trampling upon that concept."

Reynold's commission recently released a report on Title IX that supported the 2005 policy, saying it was the most accurate way to ensure equality in athletics.

Critics of Title IX say revoking the policy will have a chilling effect on students expressing their opinions.'

Obama seeks court nominee who backs women's rights

Matt · 21 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Women's rights concerns as such include issues other than abortion rights. Yet, it seems the president and others focus on that issue in a make-or-break fashion, at the same time completely ignoring the other side of the equation: What of the right of men to have the same chance to terminate parental responsibilities? Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – President Barack Obama, treading carefully on the explosive issue of abortion and the Supreme Court, said Wednesday he will choose a nominee who pays heed to women's rights and privacy when interpreting the Constitution.

"That's very important to me," Obama said. Yet he insisted he will not make any potential nominee pass a "litmus test" on abortion rights.

Obama consulted Senate leaders from both parties at the White House as he moved toward choosing a replacement for Justice John Paul Stevens, who turned 90 on Tuesday and is retiring.

The White House says Obama is considering about 10 people and has begun conversations with candidates. A nominee is expected within the next few weeks.

Noting that the abortion debate has long divided the country, Obama underscored his belief in a right to privacy while attempting not to box himself in.
...
The Senate Democratic leader said he told Obama the nominee need not already be a judge, but possibly "someone who's an academic, someone who's held public office, someone who's an outstanding lawyer. And the president said he'll take that into consideration."'

The president, et al., concerned with reproductive-rights-as-women's-rights, seem deaf and blind on one side of their heads while able to see and hear just one thing on the other. Oh and another thing: Hillary Clinton has been mentioned as a candidate for the vacant seat.

NOW Foundation Opposes 'Phony' Parental Alienation Disorder

anthony · 21 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the years, hundreds of women have contacted National Organization for Women chapters looking for assistance in their efforts to protect minor children in family court custody proceedings. Often these women have been accused of a phony psychiatric condition, termed Parental Alienation Disorder (PAD). The "disorder" has been proposed by so-called father's rights (men's custody) activists to be added to the American Psychiatric Association's Diagnostics and Statistics Manual - V to give it more legitimacy than it currently has -- or should have -- in court.

This accusation is made by abusive ex-husbands and is intended to cause the courts to disregard mothers' claims of fathers' physical or sexual abuse in an effort to gain the fathers' full or joint custody. NOW Foundation is concerned that because of the alienation accusation known batterers and child abusers have been awarded custody; the numbers of cases involving dads in custody disputes abusing and murdering children is appalling...
...
NOW Foundation has sent a letter recently to the American Psychiatric Association noting that publications by the American Bar Association and the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges have concluded proposed "alienation disorder" is inadmissible in court and has been discredited by the scientific community. ...

More information on fathers and ex-partners involved in child custody or child support matters who have killed children, murdered mothers and/or committed suicide, please visit this website.'

Ben Roethlisberger Suspended by NFL

Stinger503 · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Steelers quarterback will be suspended for 4-6 games due to a violation of the league's personal conduct policy, league sources told FOXSports.com.

The punishment will essentially be a conditional suspension, based both on any new information that arises surrounding Roethlisberger and also his behavior moving forward after speaking to NFL commissioner Roger Goodell last week in New York.

The suspension comes in the wake of accusations by a 20-year-old college student that the two-time Super Bowl champion sexually assaulted her in the bathroom of a Milledgeville, Ga. nightclub on March 5.

After a month-long investigation by the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, prosecutors announced April 12 that Roethlisberger, who maintained his innocence throughout, would not be charged in the case due to a lack of probable cause.'

Title IX missile on collision course with football arms race

anthony · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Obama administration announcement that it is stepping up enforcement of Title IX, the law that requires equal gender opportunity at any educational institution receiving federal funding, and the possible expansion of the Big Ten Conference appear to be separate stories. But soon enough, they will become one.

That's because colleges are going to have to reconcile two differing mandates: providing fair representation, opportunity and funding for female and male athletes, and plowing every dollar possible into football in for what for most schools will be a vain hope of creating an athletic cash cow. Not for nothing have the lords of football and their protectors fought numerous times, including soon after Title IX was passed in 1972, to exempt football from the law.

...

The College Sports Council, a passionate spokesorganization when it comes to what it sees as the (mostly) men-hurting excesses of Title IX, has already blamed Title IX for the elimination of football at Hofstra and Northeastern, and it says more FCS schools could have football in their sights. After all, at the FCS level, football really doesn't make any money.

...

I'm not saying Title IX would be the real reason for cutting football. I'm just saying, it would be logical to think it would enter the conversation at some point.'

USA Today: Rescinding of Title IX model survey draws praise from critics

anthony · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'News that the Obama administration Tuesday will rescind a Bush-era Title IX policy known as the model survey is viewed as a step forward by women's interest groups and a step backward by men's interest groups.

"Making Title IX as strong as possible is a no-brainer," Vice President Biden said in a draft of a Department of Education news release announcing the change. "What we're doing here today will better ensure equal opportunity in athletics, and allowing women to realize their potential — so this nation can realize its potential."

Tuesday's action "responds to concerns and widespread objections that the 2005 policy and the prototype survey issued by the Department were inappropriate for assessing compliance with Title IX," Secretary of Education Arne Duncan said in the draft of the news release.

Some of that objection came from the National Women's Law Center, which long characterized the model survey as a loophole through which schools could evade their obligations under Title IX, the law banning sex discrimination at schools receiving federal funds.

"We have criticized the policy for many years," said Neena Chaudhry, senior counsel for the NWLC. "We welcome the withdrawal of the policy and think it is a step in the right direction."

Eric Pearson, chairman of the College Sports Council, said in a statement: "At a time when the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is calling for reform of Title IX, this is a step backwards for everyone that cares about fairness in athletics."'

Relatedly:
On Title IX: How Will The Recent Change Affect College Sports?
Obama administration facelift of Title IX sparks praise, protests

Cops: Missing Ohio Mom Left Home 'To Start a New Life'

anthony · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Ohio mother who disappeared from her husband and year-old child for days -- sparking a national manhunt in the process -- left them with another man to "start a new life," police told ABC News.

"She left voluntarily with this fellow and drove to Miami to -- and these are her words -- start a new life," Miami Beach police Sgt. Wayne Jones told ABC News.

Tiffany Tehan, 31, who disappeared Saturday, was found alive and well in Miami Beach late Wednesday night with Tre Hutcherson, the man who police called a "person of interest" in her disappearance. Miami police were acting on an FBI tip, Jones said.

...

Tehan's husband, David Tehan, said he is not angry and wants to work on their marriage. Tehan's aunt, Peggy Tehan, told ABC News she is not convinced Tehan has done anything wrong and plans to welcome her home.

Tehan told police she intends to return to Ohio where her husband David and 1-year-old daughter Lexie are waiting, but it is unclear when, Jones said.

David Tehan told "Good Morning America" Wednesday the couple was not having marital problems.

"It just seems so completely out of character. I just can't understand or believe it," he said. "It's terrifying to imagine the different possibilities, but I don't know."

Tehan's friends said she would never have just left her daughter.

"We're trying to leave the details and the speculation to the police," Tracy Staley said earlier this week. "That mother-child bond is unlike anything else."'

Researchers claim that jealousy may make women "functionally blind"

Daringest · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I always considered that some emotions hindered some women's ability to think rationally and fairly. This study supports my observations. Apparently jealousy can cause "functional" visual impairment in some people. Of course the researchers were accused of hating women because they didn't conclude that women were either better than men or that women are victims of men. From ABC News: Feeling Jealous? It May Blind You

'Jealousy can be so powerful that it can leave a person "functionally blinded," unable to see key images in their immediate environment. That's the core finding of a study by two psychologists at the University of Delaware, who have been running for cover ever since their study was published in the journal Emotion a few days ago.
...
Why Women but Not Men?

It was juicy fodder for the Internet, leading one writer to claim the conclusions proved that "scientists hate women." Other comments, which Laurenceau labeled "venomous," cast doubt upon the scientists' credentials, intelligence, and intentions.

"We're definitely not women haters," Laurenceau said in a telephone interview. "I'm married to one, and I have a daughter."

The study targeted women, Most said, because the sample needed to be homogeneous, and men and women apparently have different attitudes about jealousy. Previous studies have also focused on women, so this adds to that data, and the researchers are considering doing other experiments targeting men, although it's not clear if that is going to happen.'

Illusionist David Copperfield's 'rape' nightmare over as model drops two-year-old claim

anthony · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A model who accused David Copperfield of luring her to his private island in the Bahamas and raping her has dropped her lawsuit against the magician.

Lacey Carroll, 23, announced her decision just days after a U.S. judge ruled that Copperfield's lawyers would be allowed to question her under oath this week.

'It has never been about money,' Ms Carroll said in the statement. 'I just wanted him held accountable for what he did.'

Since the alleged incident, she has since been charged with fabricating sexual assault claims against another man.
...
The FBI and federal prosecutors spent more than two years investigating the allegations, even searching Copperfield's Las Vegas warehouse, but closed the case early this year without filing criminal charges and without explaining the decision.
...
But the magician's Seattle attorney, Angelo Calfo, today said: 'Carroll's lawsuit was nothing but a pathetic attempt to extort Mr Copperfield for money with malicious and false allegations.'

AU President Prostrates to Feminists: Date Rape Column Was a “Mistake”

anthony · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After weeks of prudent silence, American University’s president, Neil Kerwin, has finally spoken up about the date-rape controversy sparked by my recent column. Now, the last time anyone was interested in what was coming out of American University, it was because Kerwin’s predecessor was caught embezzling school funds — so perhaps, not used to all of the attention, the opportunity was too tantalizing for him to stay quiet. Trying — and failing — to assume a position of balance, Kerwin writes thus in his campus-wide spring semester memorandum:

> I want to acknowledge the challenges our community faced in the wake of a provocative column in the March 31 Eagle on the topic of date rape. Our community exchanged views on this incident in a manner that reflects the value we place on civil discourse. Through dialogue, exchanges of opinion, and discussion forums, several principles were affirmed—among them, that sexual assault in all its forms and circumstances (including date rape) is a crime and a violation of AU’s Student Conduct Code; and that the First Amendment protects the right to share viewpoints, even when they may be hurtful or insensitive. Date rape victims/survivors were personally affected and many were deeply offended by the column’s words. The Eagle editors have acknowledged they could have made different editorial choices that would have avoided the harm without compromising First Amendment rights. The editors should be commended for acknowledging their mistakes, listening carefully to criticisms, and responding thoughtfully.

Lawsuit against Columbia U's women’s studies department dismissed

anthony · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though Roy Den Hollander, MBA ’97, thinks Columbia’s support of gender studies discriminates against men’s rights, the U.S. Court of Appeals ruled on Friday that the University has not harmed men with its actions.

Hollander, a controversial men’s rights activist who first filed a lawsuit against Columbia in August 2008, has claimed that Columbia’s support of a women’s studies department was a First Amendment violation, on the grounds that, legally and constitutionally, feminism counts as a religion.

He has also charged that the discriminatory nature of a women’s studies program is in violation of the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment. His argument is that Columbia cannot use public funds for the Institute for Research on Women and Gender unless it supports an equivalent men’s studies program.
...

And last week, Hollander’s case, for now, reached the end of the line with the U.S. Court of Appeals’ decision to uphold the lower courts’ dismissals. The court argued that the prior decisions “properly dismissed the action for lack of standing as to all defendants because the plaintiff’s claims of harm amount to the kind of speculative harm for which courts cannot confer standing.”

But Hollander said on Tuesday that the fight was far from over. “I can bring this case again, and I’m going to bring this case again,” he said, arguing that the court ruling emphasizes that he has no standing, which he said leaves options open to pursue a different track of the case. Hollander said he plans to focus his complaint on government support for the “religion” of feminism, an argument that he said he can make because he is a taxpayer.'

Australia: Parent tests to save Coast dads

anthony · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THERE are times I feel a bit sorry for blokes.

Not many mind you, but on the odd occasion I have to admit blokes get a raw deal.

For one, they can never be as smart as women, something that has to be embarrassing.

And another, they seem to be handicapped when it comes to admitting they're wrong, or need help, like asking for directions, for example.

These flaws aside, you have to feel sorry for men.

Imagine what it is like to think you are a father, only to find out you are not.

When a woman falls pregnant, she knows it's hers but for men, it's not so easy.

The fact is, men cannot be sure the baby is theirs.

When it comes to cheating on your partner, it's a matter of equal opportunity adultery.

Men are told they're about to be a dad, how can they be sure? Because a woman said so? Our word is enough?

It seems so.

Women have all the power.'

Men seek to North Carolina paternity law

anthony · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Raleigh, N.C. — Five men who say they're victims of paternity fraud met with some state lawmakers on Thursday.

The men say they have DNA tests proving they're not the biological fathers of children, yet they must still pay child support due to state law, which allows fathers two months after acknowledging paternity to dispute it and one year to prove fraud.

“Anyone in my position that’s got caught in the system, you’re at the mercy of the courts. They’re going to dictate how to live your life,” said Victor McAllister, who says he is the victim of paternity fraud.

“The question is how to remedy that. First to stop any future child support requirements on that person who is not the father; second to do so in a way that doesn't disrupt totally the life of the child,” said Rep. Rick Glazier, D-Cumberland County.

A bill to extend the time period to prove fraud passed in the House last year, but stalled in the Senate.'

Girl, 12, turns her life around after removal from mother

anthony · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SHE had been an obese, ungainly child whose personal hygiene was "deplorable". But less than a year after living with her father and his new wife, the 12-year-old was almost unrecognisable, having shed 17 kilograms and discovered a newfound confidence.

The dramatic turnaround came after the girl was removed from her mother, who allegedly worked as a prostitute and had exposed her to inappropriate sexual issues.

In granting sole parental responsibility to the father, Family Court judge Sally Brown said the improvement in the girl's life was "such compelling evidence of the detriment to a child of inadequate parenting and the benefit … of more than adequate parenting".
...

"The outcome of the child's move to the father's care has been dramatic, and dramatically to the child's benefit," Justice Brown said. "She is very fortunate to have the support of a loving father and a remarkably able and loving stepmother. In their care, she is thriving."

The father had been concerned that his daughter had been neglected while in her mother's care and was at serious risk as a result of the woman's mental health, drug use and lifestyle.

The woman had violated a court order by refusing to hand her daughter over until April last year, when she was arrested and the girl went to live with her father, the court heard.'

Christina Hoff Sommers: The Equal Pay Day Reality Check

anthony · 22 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is more at stake here than having to endure another feminist victim-fest on April 20. Groups like NOW, the AAUW, CAP, and the National Women's Law Center have produced volumes of tendentious research that is taken seriously by journalists and by Congress. The Senate is now holding hearings on the misleadingly named Paycheck Fairness Act. The bill, which has already sailed through the House with bipartisan support, reads as if it were written by AAUW and NOW members during a particularly bitter "Un-happiness Hour."

Under this convoluted and impenetrably murky law, feminist lawyers will file multi-million dollar class-action lawsuits and innocent employers will settle. Liability will be based on not only intentional discrimination (we already have laws against that) but on the "lingering effects of past discrimination." What does that mean? Employers have no idea. Universities, for example, typically pay professors in the business school more than those in the school of social work. They cite market forces as the justification. But according to feminist theory, market forces are tainted by past discrimination. Women's Studies departments will eagerly provide expert witnesses to testify that sexist attitudes led society to place a higher value on male-centered fields like business than female-centered fields like social work. If the Paycheck Fairness Act passes, it will wreak havoc in the American workplace. Employers today are already nervous about making new hires. This legislation will give them added pause.'

Former Olympic Athlete Disappears with American Son in Brazil

anthony · 23 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'This week was supposed to have held a joyous reunion more than three years in the making.

But for a Houston father who has been fighting to get his American-born son back on U.S. soil, there has been only more heartache. One day after a Brazilian court ruled that his son be returned to the U.S., Kelvin Birotte's wife disappeared with 4-year-old Kelvin Birotte Jr., setting off an international manhunt.
...
Birotte, a 43-year-old chef, has devoted the last three and a half years to bringing his son home after his wife, Olympic volleyball medalist Hilma Aparicida Caldeira, took the then-infant for a visit to her native Brazil and never returned.

On Monday, Birotte got the call he'd been waiting for telling him that the Brazilian court in Belo Horizonte had sided with him and ordered 4-year-old Kelvin Birotte Jr. be returned to the United States immediately.

"I was shocked," he said of the call from the U.S. State Department's Office for Children's Issues, which had been assisting him with the international abduction proceedings. "At first I had to sit down because my knees gave out. And then came the joy and tears."

But then, just tears. One day later, he received a second call that Caldeira had fled her home with their son.

"At this point I don't really know what state of mind she's in," Birotte said.'

Latest "Runaway Mom" likely to be uncharged

Matt · 23 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an unusual case of a successful manhunt going south, Ohio runaway mom Tiffany Tehan is likely to go uncharged for causing a nationwide hunt. Tehan was located by law enforcement officials, including the FBI, in a Miami motel with the man she actually ran away with. Even more interesting, Tehan's husband David Tehan told reporters he forgives her and wants her back.

Tehan, 31, disappeared last Saturday, leaving behind husband David and 1-year-old daughter Lexie. Her disappearance was obviously a mystery to her husband and family, which led to a massive nationwide hunt for her. What now turns out to be an apparent "love nest getaway" had much more dire possibilities only days ago. Police are basically at a loss as to what to charge Tehan with now, as no crime was really committed.
...
Any way, Miami Beach police Sgt. Wayne Jones said when they found Tehan, she basically told them she was starting a new life with Tre Hutcherson, the man who was originally sought in her apparent disappearance. Whatever the outcome, Tehan and her new boyfriend did not get off to a good start headlining Good Morning America with their tackiness. Image you tried to pull something like this off.'

Ed. note: This is a follow-up to a story on MANN posted here.

VAWA immigration fraud radio interviews reach 50,000 listeners

Matt · 23 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Press release forwarded by Abusegate Bob:

April 23, 2010
Domestic Abuse Laws Breed Immigration Fraud
Allegations of Violence Move Immigrants to Front of the Line

(Dallas) Accusing your husband of domestic abuse may be the quickest way to get a Green Card. The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) is a breeding ground for immigration fraud. The domestic-abuse industry spawned by this disastrous legislation actually teaches women how to work the system—all at taxpayer expense.

David Brannon knows this nightmare first-hand. After his Russian-immigrant wife falsely accused him of abuse, he discovered how difficult it is to clear your name. Now he's speaking out, along with Natasha Spivack, an international business owner who has witnessed immigration fraud first-hand. Most Americans have no idea what a racket the domestic-abuse system has become. These stories will open many eyes.

For more information visit http://www.mediaradar.org/special_reports.php

To interview Natasha Spivack or David Brannon, contact Geralyn Berry: gberry-at-spencemedia.com

Unsung hero reporting continues: "workers", "crew-members", etc.-- never "men"

Matt · 23 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This is just one example of numerous stories about this accident that has claimed the lives of 11 men. Officially they are still missing but we know by this time if they were still alive they probably would have turned up.

If they had been women, this fact would have been pointed out every other sentence. That they are men is ignored. This is the kind of sexism, the presumption that men will sacrifice themselves for others' convenience, even, without too much in the way of specifically pointing out what they as men are doing, that contributes so insidiously to the devaluation of men's lives. Want more examples? I can't count the number. Google with just these keywords: oil rig missing and read. You'd think a "worker" or "crew member" were possibly third sexes of the human race.

Woman jailed after blow-gun shooting spree

anthony · 23 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 41-year-old woman was jailed after police say she went on a blow gun spree. The Stevens Point Journal reported that police got a report at 9 p.m. Wednesday from a 25-year-old woman who said she was walking downtown when she felt something hit her chest. In the next half hour, three more people made similar reports. None were seriously injured.

One of the victims reported she saw the dart shot from a pipe sticking out the window of a black minivan. Police pulled the vehicle over at 9:30 p.m. and found a blow gun, a slingshot and a bucket of rocks inside.

Police arrested the van's driver, Paula Wolf, and said she eventually admitted to shooting the pedestrians. She allegedly told an officer that she "liked to hear people say ouch."

Wolf has been charged with recklessly endangering safety. She could not be reached for comment.'

Pregnant stabbing suspect faces judge

Matt · 23 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PROVIDENCE, R.I. (WPRI) - A Massachusetts woman who's seven months pregnant faced a judge Thursday on charges she stabbed three other people in Providence after an argument.

The stabbing happened at the Manton Heights Housing Project on Wednesday. Nicole Bruton, whose pregnancy is considered high-risk, is charged with three counts of felony assault for the incident.

"This defendant produced a knife from under her shirt, and which time she stabbed and slashed these three individuals," said prosecutors.
...
Her attorney said in court Thursday that Bruton, a mother of three, has been the emergency-room coordinator at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston for two years.
...
The judge set bail at $15,000 cash or surety. Bruton's fiancé said he plans to post bail.'

The article says she has 3 kids already. I wonder what the excuse will be: "pre-partum depression"? "Pre-partum insanity", maybe? It also says she is (well, was) the ER coordinator at Mass Gen. What, she was trying to drum up business as a favor to the local Providence hospitals?

Prediction: Stress management seminars, time served, next case.

"Third wave feminism" and girls behaving badly

anthony · 23 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

"CNN's Carol Costello explores what could be the "third wave" of feminism, and why that's troubling."

Another Example of the Idiocy of Feminist Doctrine

redwoodwriter · 24 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Discussion here. Turns out that a significant number of married couples working two jobs could do better economically if one of them quit and stayed at home. If you figure in all the related costs, such as commuting, work clothes, child care, lunches, etc., it makes sense for many two wage earner couples to switch to one wage earner couples.

This illogical situation is largely due to the propaganda of the women's movement, which has told women that they must get out there and get a job.

Excerpt:

"Now of course that touches on one of the most volatile issues touching on the household economy, the politics of gender. For complex cultural reasons, a great many feminists in the 1960s and 1970s came to believe that working for one's family in the household economy was a form of slavery, while working for an employer in the money economy – often under conditions that were even more exploitative – was a form of liberation. Now it's certainly true that assigning people to participation in the household economy by gender was unfair, but it's equally true that assigning them to participation in the money economy on the same basis was no better; for every woman whose talents were wasted in a housewife's role, there was arguably a man whose life would have been much happier and more productive had he had the option of working full time in the household economy."

An approach for fair gender - A fair blog radus · 24 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

See the blog here There are significant impacts due to the constraints brought by the existence of gender bias and stereotyping in all cultures and communities.

I found this blog space exposes a basic conceptual solution, but I hope I am clear about the bottom line, especially from these aspects which I perceive regarding the men's rights movement MRA and feminism:

- Feminism is well-organized but has assumed an unshakable doctrinaire kind of fundamentalist mindset
- Alternatively, the men's rights movement converges with blaming feminism as the one and only obstacle that prevents equal rights to men.

This blog is purposeful as an expression in the perspective of fair (ie, reasonable) equal opportunities for men and women. But it is not limited to feminism, women's rights, or men's rights. Nonetheless its primary aim is to address men's issues, the masculinity crisis, and equality of men.

So it would be useful to all who are interested in gender issues.

Gender Studies Lawsuit in London seeks MRAs for Fighting Fund Stall tom of covent garden · 24 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A pro-equality MRA in London is bringing a damages claim against an elite university's Gender department, for discriminating against him, and men in general, during a taught degree.

The case already has the support of a lawyer and barrister, but requires funding.

Your mission, should you choose to accept it, is to join us, at an awareness-raising stall, which will be appearing on campuses around Central London.

Broadsheet newspapers have expressed an interest in covering the story, so we can expect the campaign to be high profile.

Interaction with the public will give MRA volunteers a great opportunity to perfect their debating and persuasion skills, across a full range of men's rights issues.

All interested in volunteering, should contact mrastandup-at-hotmail.com for more details.

This case is rock solid, so now is the time for up and coming MRAs to make their move.

20/20: "Girl's Night Out Gone Bad", a false rape accusation report mens_issues · 24 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

ABCNews.com has an article about a 20/20 episode regarding a false rape accusation that ruined a man's life. This is regarding the 2005 case where Biurny Peguero falsely accused William McCaffrey of rape. Some of the comments below the story are from or about men who have also faced false accusations. Appalling.

Getting boys to read

anthony · 25 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent report from the Center on Education Policy shows that boys across the nation lag behind girls when it comes to their reading skills. Over the years, that gap spreads, and many education researchers believe it's in direct corrolation to the declining numbers of boys enrolling in college.

So why aren't boys reading? And how do you inspire them to pick up a book?

That was the focus of this morning's conversation on Midmorning, which I had the pleasure of hosting (Kerri Miller had the day off). Teen lit author John Coy joined me in studio, while Professor John Chec, of the University of Florida, joined us by phone. Chec teaches children's literature, and has also served as the president of the Children's Literature Association. Coy has written several books aimed at young boys, including "Eyes on the Goal," "Crackback" and "Box Out."

One of the first revelations of the conversation was how the publishing industry helps perpetuate the problem by offering next to nothing for boys to read. The bookshelves for teens are dominate with fiction and fantasy aimed at girls. Girls (and women) are far more likely to spend their money on books, and so they get the bulk of the attention.'

Multiple factors at work in ‘gender wage gap'

anthony · 25 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the conservative Independent Women's Forum and others have pointed out, the 80 percent statistic is misleading because it is a raw comparison of all full-time working men and women. “Thus the female receptionist working 40-hour weeks is tossed in with the male orthopedic surgeon putting in 70-hour weeks,” writes the IWF's Arrah Nielsen, who pointed out that men are more likely to take jobs that pose more physical danger – a risk appropriately rewarded in higher pay. The pay gap between men and women in many occupations is much less than 20 percent, and in some vanishes altogether.
...
Nielsen notes that women take more time off work to raise children – gaps that do (and should) affect their pay. And the same Department of Labor statistics that “prove” the gap exists also state that women work 3.5 hours fewer per week than men do. Various studies, such as that by June O'Neill, former director of the Congressional Budget office, suggest that when those and other factors are considered, the gap is dramatically reduced or even eliminated.'

The College Degree Gap: Young Women Outnumber Men at Every Level

anthony · 25 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The National Committee on Pay Equity (NCPE) celebrated Equal Pay Day this week to bring attention to the gap between men's and women's wages. On the very same day that Equal Pay Day was supposed to highlight alleged wage discrimination against women, the Census Bureau released data showing that there is a huge gender college degree gap in favor of women for 25- to 29-year-olds (see chart below).

Women in this age group hold a majority of college degrees at all levels, from associate's degrees to professional degrees (MD, DDS, and law) and doctoral degrees (PhD and EdD). There are now 138 women holding advanced degrees (master's and higher) for every 100 men with those degrees. The Census Bureau predicts that "more women than men are expected to occupy professions such as doctors, lawyers, and college professors as they represent approximately 58 percent of young adults, age 25 to 29, who hold an advanced degree."

So at the time that American women are being told by the NCPE that they remain victims of ongoing wage discrimination in the workplace because they are "segregated into a few low-paying occupations," the new census report presents a much more optimistic picture of unprecedented opportunities for women. Given their amazing educational achievements, young women are apparently not buying into the NCPE story of victimization and discrimination; they are too busy earning degrees in record numbers, and leaving their male counterparts behind.'

Exclusive: Reclaiming Masculinity

anthony · 25 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men in America today are suffering from M.P.S.: Masculinity Paralysis Syndrome. It is something that is documented by grim statistics and cultural proclivities that condemn men to mere caricatures, found in seemingly every nook and cranny of modern American life.

Why is that, you may ask?

Although authentic masculinity suffers attacks from many sources, some surprising, the primary villains are the modern feminist movement and the media, both of which seek to replace true male figures – strong, comforting, protective, faithful, and confident men - with effeminate, dismissive, flaky, unfaithful, and passive individuals. Even “tough guys” like Jack Bauer and his “take-no-prisoners” mentality have been overshadowed in the final season of 24 by strong female characters like U.S. President Allison Taylor and Dalia Hassan, widow of the President of the Islamic Republic of Kamistan, who steps up to take her husband’s place at the peace table and – together with President Taylor – finally bring peace to the entire planet. Beyond the urge to say “fat chance,” the cultural message could not be clearer: Mother Knows Best.'

UK: 'Face of a rape liar'

anthony · 25 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is the drunken liar whose false rape claim almost wrecked the life of a grammar school pupil.

Lying Lindsay Gorman, known as Linzi, sparked a huge manhunt when she told police she had been sexually assaulted late at night in Belfast's Botanic Gardens in April 2008.

The 20-year-old from the plush Walnut Hollow area of Larne had, in fact, had drunken consensual sex with two different men in bushes at the park.

But detectives believed her pack of lies and a short time later arrested Campbell College student Mark McLean.

In June 2008, the innocent 18-year-old from east Belfast appeared in court charged with rape.'

UK: 'I've been torn apart by false rape claim'

anthony · 25 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A MAN cleared by a jury of raping a pensioner says his life has been ruined by the false accusation.

And George Northam is now calling for rape suspects not to be named unless they are convicted.

The 29-year-old, from Exeter, overcame an intense crown court trial last month, but now says he is continuing to suffer despite being acquitted of the charge.

He has decided to break his silence to reveal the trauma of being wrongly accused of rape — and to say why he feels his identity should not have been made public.

The jury unanimously found Mr Northam not guilty of rape within hours of retiring to consider its verdict.

He told the court the woman had imagined the sex attack.

But despite being told he was free to go by the judge, Mr Northam said that he stepped out of the courtroom into a world where he lives in fear of ridicule.'

Teen charged with making false rape report

anthony · 25 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A McCalla teen is under arrest after authorities say she made up a story that she was raped to avoid getting in trouble for being out past her curfew.

Her tale of being attacked at a service station made its way onto the internet and grew to the point where rumors spread that the same type of incident had occurred two other times over the past week, said Jefferson County Chief Deputy Randy Christian.

"At the very least it caused serious concerns and some panic in that area and also had the potential to damage the reputation of area businesses," Christian said.

Brittany Krider, 18, is charged with giving false information to law enforcement. She was booked into the county jail Tuesday and released on $5,000 bond.'

Woman charged in second bogus rape allegation

anthony · 25 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For the second time in five months, a Muncie woman has been accused of lodging a false rape accusation against a male acquaintance.

Amber May Foster, 22, 221 N. Hackley St., early Wednesday gave police a signed statement alleging that a male roommate had tried to sexually assault her.

However, under further questioning, Foster admitted that she and her boyfriend had made up the allegation after the roommate had "accused one of them of stealing food from him," according to Amoreena Kessler, a city police officer.

Foster and Michael Anthony Franks, 23, same address, were preliminarily charged with false reporting, a Class D felony carrying a standard 18-month prison term.

Foster was also charged with false informing last November after police said she had falsely claimed an ex-boyfriend had raped her.'

Obama Calls for Safety Improvements in Eulogy for W.Va. Miners

anthony · 25 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'President Obama, delivering a eulogy Sunday for the 29 workers who died in a West Virginia coal mine explosion, said their deaths should serve as a call to action to improve mine safety and prevent a similar tragedy from ever happening again.

Obama and Vice President Biden met privately with the families who lost loved ones before closing the memorial service with their remarks.

The president said in his eulogy that letters have poured into the White House since the April 5 disaster at the Upper Big Branch mine. "They make a simple plea: don't let this happen again," Obama said.

The president questioned how a country that relies on miners could "fail" in its duty to protect them, but said that must change.

"We cannot bring back the 29 men we lost. They are with the Lord now. Our task, here on Earth, is to save lives from being lost in another such tragedy. To do what must be done, individually and collectively, to assure safe conditions underground," Obama said at the service in Beckley, W.Va. "To treat our miners the way they treat each other -- like family. For we are all family. We are Americans."'

"Feeling Warehoused in Army Trauma Care Units"

Matt · 26 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Just try this on women and see what the response is. At least the Times did a story on it but I doubt it is because they are that sympathetic with the soldiers. They are not as we know a big supporter of the cause. I have a suggestion for the Army: Try actually treating these traumatized men for their emotional injuries instead of heaping further abuse on them. What a novel concept! Excerpt:

'COLORADO SPRINGS — A year ago, Specialist Michael Crawford wanted nothing more than to get into Fort Carson's Warrior Transition Battalion, a special unit created to provide closely managed care for soldiers with physical wounds and severe psychological trauma.

A strapping Army sniper who once brimmed with confidence, he had returned emotionally broken from Iraq, where he suffered two concussions from roadside bombs and watched several platoon mates burn to death. The transition unit at Fort Carson, outside Colorado Springs, seemed the surest way to keep suicidal thoughts at bay, his mother thought.

It did not work. He was prescribed a laundry list of medications for anxiety, nightmares, depression and headaches that made him feel listless and disoriented. His once-a-week session with a nurse case manager seemed grossly inadequate to him. And noncommissioned officers — soldiers supervising the unit — harangued or disciplined him when he arrived late to formation or violated rules.

Last August, Specialist Crawford attempted suicide with a bottle of whiskey and an overdose of painkillers. By the end of last year, he was begging to get out of the unit.

"It is just a dark place," said the soldier, who is waiting to be medically discharged from the Army. "Being in the W.T.U. is worse than being in Iraq."'

Relatedly: Fort Campbell tries to stop soldier suicides

UK: Jack Tweed cleared of raping 19-year-old

Matt · 26 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Jade Goody's widower Jack Tweed was cleared today of twice raping a student six months after his wife died from cervical cancer.

Tweed, 22, was accused of attacking the 19-year-old blonde while estate agent Anthony Davis, 26, held the bedroom door shut and said: 'Don't worry, Jack, I've got the door, do what you've got to do.'

But a jury at east London's Snaresbrook Crown Court took just 15 minutes to clear the club promoter after he insisted the teenager had consented to sex at his bachelor pad in Woodford Green, Essex.
...

Davis admitted lurking in the shadows of the bedroom before joining in but insisted the girl was willing to take part in three-way sex.

A former crimper at Hob Salon in Loughton, Essex, Davis denied holding the door and claimed the girl said: 'Yeah, I'm fine' when her friends asked after her.

He said the girl's pals sauntered off, cackling: 'Ha, ha, you little st' when they heard their friend was 'okay'.
...
She claimed she heard her say: 'I don't want to go' when her friend told her she was leaving because she had work the next day.

Sean Minihan, defending Davis, told the jury she had only reported the two men after regretting taking part in a threesome when quizzed by her friends.

Ronald Jaffa, for Tweed, said the girl and her friends had chased him.'

Lesson here is this: If you're a rich/famous man, make sure you get a signed waiver, with witnesses, and notarized, before having sex in any way, shape, or form, with anyone you have not known for at least the past 30 days.

Why levels of sperm in men are falling

Broadsword · 26 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As many as one in five healthy young men between the ages of 18 and 25 produce abnormal sperm counts. Even the sperm they do produce is often of poor quality. In fact only between 5 and 15 per cent of their sperm is, on average, good enough to be classed as "normal" under strict World Health Organisation rules – and these are young, healthy men. By contrast, more than 90 per cent of the sperm of a domestic bull or ram, or even laboratory rat, are normal.

Human males also suffer a disproportionately high incidence of reproductive problems, from congenital defects and undescended testes to cancer and impotency. As these also affect fertility, it's a minor miracle men are able to sire any children at all. In fact, an increasing number of men are finding themselves childless. Among the one in seven couples now classed as infertile, the "male factor" has been found to be the most commonly identified cause.
...
There is now an emerging consensus among some experts that whatever it is that is exacerbating the problems of male infertility, it probably starts in the womb. It is not the lifestyle of men that is problem, but that of their mothers.
...

Meanwhile, studies of migrants between Sweden and Finland, showed that a man's lifetime risk of testicular cancer tends to follow the country he was born in rather than the country where he was brought up. It was his mother's environment when she was pregnant with him, rather than his own as a boy or as an adolescent, that seems to have largely determined a man's risk of testicular cancer.

One of the strongest pieces of evidence in support of this idea comes from studies of people who smoke. A man who smokes typically reduces his sperm count by a modest 15 per cent or so, which is probably reversible if he quits. However, a man whose mother smoked during pregnancy has a fairly dramatic decrease in sperm counts of up to 40 per cent – which also tends to be irreversible.
...
"Public concern about the adverse effects of environmental chemicals on spermatogenesis in adult men are, in general, not supported by the available data for humans. Where adverse effects of environmental chemicals have been shown, they are usually in an occupational setting rather than applying to the general population," he says.

So although scientists are closing in on the critical window of foetal development in the womb that determines a man's fertility status in later life, they are still not sure about what it is that could be affecting this change in his reproductive status. But one thing is clear, it is his mother who almost certainly holds the key.'

Times of India: "Times life - Her wild side"

Matt · 26 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A. Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys don't cry, especially when they grow up into men who are hit by their women. As stories of battered men come out of the closet, it's clear that more and more women are losing control and giving in to their wild side.

Tales of rudeness, shouting and violent outbursts are more in the news. Recently, two Iranian women in Bangalore beat up a traffic cop; almost a week later, a drunk woman in Bangalore hit an auto-rickshaw driver.

Take this: Men are getting punched, boxed, kicked with pointed stilettos, and even having hot coffee thrown on their faces. As women initiate assault in an intimate relationship, men become the silent victims. Says Swaroop Sarkar, co-founder of the Battered Men helpline in Delhi, "I was a victim and on the brink of committing suicide. There were days that I wouldn't get out of bed. I almost lost my job." But Sarkar didn't give up. He started a helpline in Delhi, "We get 20 troubled men who come to us for help every week in Delhi itself. They just need our gentleness," adds Sarkar, who is a textile engineer.

The stories are stark but real. There's Ravi in Bangalore, all of 31, who studied at IIT, Delhi, and he narrates how he was traumatised by his wife after she discovered he had one kidney. "She threw me out of my own house. Men in our country don't cry and certainly never get beaten," says the engineer, who works for an MNC in Bangalore.
...
The stories told by battered men are no less horrifying than those told by women. According to psychiatrist Dr Avdesh Sharma, "The tipping point comes when the women can't be in control. Alcohol is making women aggressive. Some women remain tomboys."

It's time men come out of the closet and get help. Simply say goodbye to shame and guilt!'

The Ticker: "A new discipline: male studies"

anthony · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Born out of reaction to the current women's and men's studies, the male studies field was officially established at Wagner College on April 7. According to InsideHigherEd.com, a group of scholars congregated at Wagner College in Staten Island to announce the creation of the Foundation for Male Studies. The foundation will support a conference and journal aimed at exploring the struggles and celebrating the triumphs of men. "Based on the same theories as women's studies [it] is grouped together with [women's studies] as gender studies," the website says.

Another distinction between men's and male studies is that it targets all ages. The foundation's website states that male studies is a "multidisciplinary study of the male human being, boys and men," whereas, "men's studies, by definition, has focused on fully grown men." The discipline will recognize all the various interpretations of males based on culture and the foundation notes that male studies is not a strictly western discipline.

Claiming to be an underrepresented minority, organizers and supporters of the discipline are justifying it by stating that society really isn't as male-dominated as many think it is.

Supporters argue that elementary and secondary schools, as well as higher education, have been "heavily influenced by feminism." The claim is that males experience an academic discrimination leading to gender-gaps of enrollment and graduation rates.

...

"We don't need male studies, because overall studies are done by, and conducted on, males and most of what we learn comes from a male perspective," said the chair of the psychology department, Samuel D. Johnson, Ph.D.

Noting that men have had the upper hand in academia for as long as anyone can remember, Johnson understands the need for women's studies but male studies is something that he doesn't understand.

"It's a reaction to feminism. They are looking at it as a denigration of maleness," he said. "Gender studies is probably a more apt rubric to do it under because that covers both and gender studies also covers the LGBT aspect."'

Phyllis Schlafly: 'Democrats Try to Lock Up Their Base'

anthony · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Indeed, the Democrats and their feminist allies have decided on one of their major goals. It is to increase the number of single moms by increasing the flow of taxpayer-paid incentives that subsidize the non-marriage lifestyle.

The plan also includes locking in this group's dependence on government and allegiance to the Democratic Party. The plan is conveniently set forth in a 60-page document called "Advancing the Economic Security of Unmarried Women" just published by John Podesta's left-wing think tank called Center for American Progress.

The Democrats know that 70 percent of unmarried women voted for Barack Obama in the 2008 election. It's obviously part their political game plan to reward that group and keep it in the Obama column.

The feminists, who have always been anti-marriage and very anti-full-time-homemaker, consider it progress that women are now half the workforce and are major breadwinners for their children. As chief feminist Ruth Bader Ginsburg wrote in her 1977 tax-funded book "Sex Bias in the U.S. Code," the concept of breadwinning husband and homemaking wife "must be eliminated."

When the husband-breadwinner is eliminated, single moms look to Big Brother Government as provider. Democrats are glad to claim credit for facilitating the taxpayer subsidies.'

Are combat veterans more prone to suicide?

anthony · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Are combat veterans more prone to suicide?

That's a controversy that has heated up as the United States last year lost almost as many military personnel to suicide as to combat.

In November, the nonpartisan Congressional Quarterly reported that more active-duty military personnel committed suicide (334) in 2009 as of Nov. 24 than were killed in Afghanistan (297) or Iraq (144) that year. The Army's active-duty suicide rate doubled from nine per 100,000 in 2001 to 20.2 per 100,000 in 2008, a number comparable with the general population. And those figures don't take into account veterans like Jesse Huff who have been discharged from active service.
...
Dr. Ethan Bean, a staff psychiatrist in the primary care clinic at the Dayton VA Medical Center, said combat soldiers may be in a higher-risk category because men are six times more likely to commit suicide than women. "A lot of veterans also possess firearms, so they have easy access to that method of suicide," he added.

Bean said the leading indicators for suicide are depression, PTSD, bipolar disorder and substance abuse. "What we usually see when we do our research is that it's not just one of those (factors)," Bean said. "Everything is tied together."'

UK: 'She’s not my daughter – I want my money back'

anthony · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The test result was there in black and white but even so, James did not want to believe it: “Based on the genetic testing results ... the alleged father is excluded as the biological father of the child. The probability of paternity is 0%.” In other words, his beloved 17-year-old daughter Ella wasn’t his after all.

It was something James had suspected but the reality was crushing — he commissioned a second DNA test, with a different laboratory, hoping there might have been a mistake. That test, too, confirmed he could not be Ella’s father.

“It was devastating,” he says. “People say to me ‘she’s still your daughter’ but it’s not the same. I said to Ella myself when I got the results, ‘This won’t change anything,’ but it does, of course it does.”

The DNA test was carried out last November, just over a year after James finalised his divorce from Ella’s mother, Helen. As part of the divorce settlement, he agreed to give up his share in the family home in Surrey. “I did it because I didn’t want my daughter’s life to be disrupted, I didn’t want her to have to move home because I wanted a divorce,” he says.

Now, not surprisingly, he feels angry, bitter and betrayed and intends to return to court to ask that the agreement be overturned. If he succeeds, it will be a first. “I love Ella and none of this is her fault,” he says. “I would not ask for a penny I’ve spent on her school fees or on maintenance for her but I feel strongly that there’s a principle here.'

'Student's GF Outs Cheating BF's Sex With Teacher'

anthony · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A female teacher from a Broward middle school has been busted for having an illicit relationship with a 14-year-old student after the boy's girlfriend found out the two were having sex.

Police said the teen boy confessed to his girlfriend after she found several text messages suggesting there was a relationship between the boy and their computer teacher. The girl had suspected the boy was cheating on her.

Kirsten Sullivan, 25, was arrested Tuesday and charged with two counts of sexual battery on a minor and one count of sex offense against a minor. She bonded out of Broward County jail Wednesday.

...

They first had sex in a computer storage room at the school, the boy told police and would sometimes have sex at least three times in a day.

Sullivan also gave the boy gifts like a mobile phone, jewelry and cash, police said. The police report also claims the woman bought the teen marijuana and that Sullivan may have been impregnated by the teen.'

Editorial: 'Men's studies' would lead to more gender trouble

anthony · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although creating a separate field of study called “men’s studies” would be redundant expanding women’s studies into gender studies would not be remiss. Recently, colleges across the nation have created concentrations known as either male or men’s studies in response to women’s studies. But this is the incorrect reaction. These majors tend to denounce or demean the topics broached in women’s studies classes, instead of working with them and finding relevant parallels.

Living in a society that is male-dominated means that many fields already inadvertently stem from “male studies” – textbooks are mostly written by men and thus have a male perspective. History classes almost always focus on men, and therefore has a male perspective. Creating men’s studies is only going to cause a greater divide between the genders and create more misunderstanding. Studies about men and masculinity should not be pitted against studies about women and femininity. Both can coexist and be discussed together.

Women’s studies continues to be a necessary field because women are not always adequately represented in other areas. But women’s studies can incorporate masculinities effectively. Many women’s studies programs already encompass gender studies in general. The interaction between men and women, and the reasoning behind male dominance, are features that appear in a multitude of women’s studies courses.'

"Title IX covers more than sports"

anthony · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Neither should one expect some education professor in a university, still using moldy old yellowed lecture notes from the 1970s, to be brave enough to suggest that male students are not being well served in our schools today. I believe there is a healthy fear that they will be perceived as politically incorrect if they skate out on the thin ice that suggests males are being discriminated against in our schools.

The data clearly show that the achievement gap between boys and girls is widening in high schools, and attention should be given to this phenomenon.

In spite of this, anyone reading educational literature will find people still writing papers claiming that girls are being short-changed in our schools, while girls continue to outperform their male classmates.

I am aware of the achievement gap data, but I don't claim to know why the gap exists and is widening.

More should be done to address this phenomenon and try to determine the "why" of it. Some experiments should be carried out to determine if the trend can be reversed.

Good science calls for careful collection and analysis of data involving large samples over significant time, under a variety of conditions, etc., but good science also allows for experimentation to effect change.

We know that many of our students go through grades K-6 and never have a male teacher. This is not new, but along with the positive changes that Title IX and other equity efforts have brought about, this may be more significant than it was in the past. It is not difficult to believe that boys may think that learning is a "girl thing" just as our girls who had only male math and science teachers in the past may have believed that math and science was a "male thing."

Canada: Foster mother target of lawsuit amid sex charges

Anonymous · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WINDSOR, Ont. -- A mother who says she turned her teenage son over to the Children's Aid Society to get him needed help is suing after his foster mother was charged with having a sexual relationship with him.

The mother, who can't be named to protect the boy's identity, is acting on her son's behalf. She is suing the Windsor-Essex Children's Aid Society and the foster parents in whose care her son was placed. In allegations yet to be tested in court, she is seeking $450,000 in damages.

...

The mother says the CAS, knowing she was grieving and in a "fragile" emotional state, convinced her it would be in her son's best interest to be placed with a foster family. The arrangement was to be temporary, and she still had contact with her son.

But soon after the October 2008 placement, the mother "became concerned about his behaviour and aspects of his care." She said she went to CAS workers assigned to her son's case, but they "ignored her concerns."

She said she learned later from police that, while in foster care, her son smoked marijuana with his guardians. She also alleges they introduced him to ecstasy.'

Wellgate ad claims women never stop moving and get things done, in contrast to men

Matt · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Alerted via email. Video here. Wellgate contact info here. Looks like they market exclusively to women. Maybe we should let them know our money is as green as anyone else's. Looks like the audio from their ad is also in text, here, Excerpt:

'There are a lot of differences between men and women. Women never stop moving. Women get things done. And women want to look good doing it all. So if you have sore wrists, aching knees, or weak ankles, don't settle for a brace or support made for a man. Try Wellgate for Women - made to fit the power of women.'

I never move. I have yet to get anything done. This is because I am a man. Hell, I do believe I am a member of the plant kingdom. Water me.

F&F: Did Dr. Phil Unwittingly Promote False Accusations on His Recent ‘Crisis in Family Court’ Show?

Matt · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog article here. Excerpt:

'Dr. Phil did an hour long special called “Crisis in Family Court” on April 14. The view put forward both by Dr. Phil and his various guests was that mothers were losing custody of their children to abusive fathers, and that the courts were favoring fathers even when there is strong evidence that they are violent or have sexually abused their children.

...

While Dr. Phil is correct to publicize these tragic cases, according to the US Department of Health and Human Services, most parental murders of children are committed by mothers, not by fathers. Dr. Phil could have had a similar show featuring fathers whose children were murdered by the children’s mothers, at times after fathers had tried to warn courts. It is misleading to only focus on murdering fathers when there are, in fact, more mothers who kill their children than fathers.

...

Russell believes that there’s a “crisis” in family courts, and that courts are handing over custody of children to physically and sexually abusive fathers. Russell and the CJE promote reforms which will make it easier to deny parents shared custody or visitation rights based on unsubstantiated abuse claims. They have also been the prime movers behind California AB 612, a bill that would exclude evidence of Parental Alienation from family law proceedings and prevent target parents of Parental Alienation from raising PA as an issue in their cases. Last year Fathers & Families’ legislative representative Michael Robinson helped build a professional coalition to scuttle AB 612.

...

Dr. Phil highlighted three cases. In two, a father murdered his children, which is terrible but Dr. Phil could have just as easily reported on two cases where a mother murdered her children. In the other case, Dr. Phil alleges that a family court has given custody to a child molester, yet the evidence is strong that this is not a molestation case, and the court certainly did not award custody in the case capriciously or without a thorough investigation.'

"Hundreds Camp Out For Job Opps In Queens"

Matt · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I wonder how many were female? Excerpt:

'Hundreds of job-seekers did just that in Queens in the hopes of landing a coveted union job.

Construction workers, engineers, electricians -- hundreds spent the weekend right here. Many left with a job application, while many others walked away empty-handed.

"The sky's the limit after this!" said Aaron Johnson of Mount Vernon.

Johnson is living month-to-month, struggling to pay the bills, with a 4-year-old daughter to support -- and he was one of the lucky ones.

After three days of sleeping on the street, he left with one of just 750 job applications handed out for a position as an elevator technician apprentice -- a secure job with pension and benefits and an earning potential up to $40 an hour.
...
"Right here, baby girl ... she's depending on my in three years to have the big house ... and that's what I'm working on," Johnson said.'

Home violence a men's issue, speaker argues

anthony · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic and sexual violence is a men's issue, not a women's issue, said a U.S. educator, author and filmmaker in Victoria last week as part of Prevention of Violence Against Women Week.

"Men, and masculinity itself, have been rendered invisible in conversations about domestic and sexual violence," said Jackson Katz [link added], co-founder of Mentors in Violence Prevention program, a widely used domestic- and sexual-violence prevention program in U.S. colleges and professional athletics.

Issues such as sex assault, domestic violence, sexual harassment and sexual abuse of children have historically been regarded as women's issues "that some good men help out with," he told a conference hosted by the Ending Violence Association of B.C. at the Fairmont Empress hotel.

And the problem with that is that it allows men to tune out of the discussion, and not participate in finding solutions, Katz argued. As soon as men hear it's a women's issue or gender issue, "there's a chip in our brain" that directs a man's attention elsewhere, he said.
...
Katz said men in leadership roles must mentor younger men and boys to respect women or, as bystanders to sexism, challenge other men about their views.'

Kennel for pets of domestic violence victims

anthony · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Orange County has awarded Harbor House of Central Florida a $50,000 grant to help build Central Florida's first kennel for pets of domestic violence victims.

The grant will be awarded from the Animal Services Trust Fund, which sustained by donations.

The kennel at Harbor House will house up to 20 pets of shelter residents and will be one of 37 known nationwide in the American Humane Pets and Women's Shelter program.

In addition to the kennel, the agencies' implementation of the PAWS program includes a first-responder transport that enables Animal Services officers to take abuse victims' pets to Harbor House's on-kennel, vaccinate them and evaluate them for injuries. In cases where animal abuse is suspected, Animal Services will launch a cruelty investigation.

Up to 75 percent of domestic violence victims report their batterers have threatened, harmed or killed their pets, and nearly 80 percent of violent incidents occurred in the presence of women and children.'

Police charge woman over false rape report

anthony · 27 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A McConnellsburg woman faces charges for allegedly reporting a rape that apparently didn't happen.

Rachela Spriggs, 20, reported on April 8 that she had been raped by an ex-boyfriend on March 27, according to Pennsylvania State Police, McConnellsburg. Spriggs reportedly provided investigators with a detailed account of the incident.

Police said Spriggs admitted to lying about the incident on April 13. She provided a written statement that the allegations against her ex-boyfriend were false.

A criminal complaint was filed Saturday, charging Spriggs with making false reports to law enforcement.'

Grown Up Mean Girls: Mom on Mom Cyberbullying

anthony · 28 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Motherhood is supposed to be like apple pie and a warm hug. Wholesome. Dependable.

But online, it can be anything but. Right next to support groups on diaper rash and the terrible twosare mean girls, all grown up.

It's mom on mom cyberbullying and as the popularity of mommy blogging rises, so do the often stinging criticisms.

A mom who asks about baby bottles is called "a cop out" and "uneducated" for not breastfeeding. Working moms are "selfish" and co-sleeping moms are labeled "irresponsible" online.

"There's a lot of insecurity, a lot of confusion, resentment, just about being a mother," psychiatrist and mommy blogger Janet Taylor told "Good Morning America." "There's a sense of 'I have to be better than you and I'm going to prove it by writing negative things.' Not supporting, just writing negative things."'

Man Robbed By Drink-Drugging Women Speaks Out

anthony · 28 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A North Miami Beach man who police believe may have been a victim of the drug 'em and rob 'em female thieves doesn't want what happened to him to happen to anyone else.

"No matter how wide open your eyes are, open them wider," said the unidentified 45-year-old man Thursday. "[I felt] definitely violated and vulnerable."

The man, who wants his identity hidden, said he was the victim of a couple of smooth female crooks who lure men in with a drink, drug them and rob them blind.

It was November 2009 when the victim met the woman and a friend at Set Night Club in South Beach. They danced, they dined and they drank.
...
In all, six designer watches were missing, along with about $26,000 in cash.

The victim thought it might be an isolated incident until reports surfaced this week of a string of similar robberies happening throughout South Florida.

Police in Palm Beach County said the main female scammer, who may have the help of at least three accomplices, targets rich older men in bars and restaurants. When she gets them alone for a drink, she slips them a "Mickey" and cleans them out of cash and pricey jewelry.'

The Innocence Project gets another innocent man freed

Matt · 28 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For nearly two decades prosecutors and judges have maintained that Frank Sterling — and not Mark Christie — murdered a 74-year-old woman as she walked along an abandoned railway bed in Hilton.

Today, a judge freed Sterling after prosecutors and defense lawyers revealed that Christie has now admitted to the Nov. 29, 1988, murder of Viola Manville.

“Our justice system’s goal is to assure that only the guilty are convicted,” state Supreme Court Justice Thomas Van Strydonck said this afternoon when agreeing to reverse Sterling’s 1992 conviction for the Manville murder. “This case and others demonstrate that ours remains an imperfect system.”

While not stating definitively in court that Sterling is innocent, District Attorney Michael Green said admissions from Christie coupled with genetic evidence from the homicide convinced him that Sterling should go free. The investigation has now been reopened.

Christie is now imprisoned for the 1994 strangulation of Kali Ann Poulton.

At a news conference after he left court, Sterling, 46, said leaving prison was “heaven.”
...
Innocence Project officials contend that investigators became too fixated on Sterling and ignored other possibilities.

“There’s no question in this case the police officers had tunnel vision,” said Innocence Project co-founder Peter Neufeld.

Green said the police work in the Manville homicide was solid. “I’m very uncomfortable going back and second-guessing what people did 19 years ago,” he said.'

Larger numbers of men seek breast reduction surgery

redwoodwriter · 29 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The sick bodies of men are expendable, are irrelevant, are ignored. The fact that these male bodies are increasingly looking like female bodies should be setting off big-time alarms with the powers that be, such as the Environmental Protection Agency. But no, it is men who are disproportionately being affected, so these powers that be just ignore it. How short sighted... our misandrist chemical-laden industrialized society is on its way to wiping out the human race (and many other species in the process).

An extract of this story is provided below, found at http://www.nurseforhealth.com/brittanys-notes/2008/7/11/time-line-of-destruction.html

'Surgical clinics surveyed by The Sunday Times in Britain report a sharp upsurge in the numbers of men seeking breast reduction surgery. Hormones in the water are blamed for a doubling of cases in just a year of gynecomastia, a hormonal-induced growth in men's breasts.

Researchers with the Southern California Coastal Water Research Project discover that two-thirds of some species of fish examined from coastal waters off Los Angeles and Orange counties possess both male and female reproductive organs. The sea floor sediment in these areas is contaminated with estrogenic chemicals from wastewater effluent generated by nine million inhabitants of coastal cities.

A report by the U.S. Government Accountability Office, the investigative arm of the U.S. Congress, finds that the EPA is failing to protect people from tens of thousands of toxic chemicals. Chemical companies have provided health impact data to the EPA for only about 15 percent of chemicals introduced over the past 30 years.'

India: Gender Neutral Laws in four years

Anonymous · 29 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BANGALORE: The government will be working towards making laws gender neutral in the next four years, Union minister of law and justice M Veerappa Moily said on Sunday.

He also said after legislating the Right to Education Act the government will soon come up with a Food Security Act.

“We have already passed the Right to Education Act and Food Security Act is coming shortly,” Moily said while inaugurating a three-day 'Civil Society Summit: The state of the Indian Republic @ 60', here. Observing that a number of laws were gender-biased, he said “they (laws) should become gender neutral and I assure you in the next four years this will be done.” '

This has been a demand from Indian MRAs and Indian feminists are upset. Yesterday, I was talking to a feminist legal scholar from the local Law College. She claims that DV laws in many US states are still gender-specific. As far as I know, California was the only state with gender-specific DV laws, and that was before `Woods v Shewry'.

Can someone from the US say what the true position is? In particular, I'd request Marc A.

Thanks -- Mangesh

Canada: Girls can join boys teams, boys can't join girls teams

Stinger503 · 29 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With few exceptions, girls who have wanted to play high school sports in Ontario over the years have had to do so on girls' teams, if one was available.

No more.

As of last week, girls now have carte blanche to play on boys' teams if they can make it. Even when a girls' team is available.

The decision stems from the case of a Waterloo high school student who filed a human rights complaint recently after her demand to play on the boys' soccer team was denied. As the process rolled on, Ontario Federation of School Athletic Associations lawyers decided they were going to lose the fight, so the organization relented before legal precedent was set. A negotiated settlement allowed it to write its own policy rather than being force-fed the wording.
...
OFSAA's executive director Doug Gellatly says the new policy -- which he was against -- raises a number of issues.

Start with the obvious question before it's even asked: No, Gellatly says, if a girl takes a boys' spot on a team, a boy can't try out for a girls' squad in return.

If he requests the chance and is denied, he'd almost certainly be wasting his time launching a human rights case of his own.'

Sandra Bullock on circumcising her son: "the greatest moment I have ever had in my life"

anthony · 29 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Louis Bardo Bullock is the name of Sandra Bullock's newly adopted black son from New Orleans. And as the World swoons over photos of happy mom and son, interesting news from the People Magazine exclusive interview are coming out. One is that Bullock gave son Louis Bardo a Jewish circumcision ceremony with "full on Jewish brit."
...
Sandra Bullock calls the private circumcision "the greatest moment I have ever had in my life" in People Magazine. Considering all the pain she's gone through with Jesse James in the cheating scandal, Bullock deserves more great moments.

Congratulations to her.'

Children's Rights Group Agrees with New Study: Infant Circumcision Causes 100 Deaths Each Year in US

anthony · 29 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'West Lafayette, IN (PRWEB) April 28, 2010 -- The International Coalition for Genital Integrity (ICGI) acknowledges a critical, important, new study, published Monday in Thymos: Journal of Boyhood Studies, and believes it accurately estimates that more than 100 baby boys die from circumcision complications each year.

ICGI applauds that, for the first time, a rational attempt has been made to estimate the scale of the problem, and is simultaneously appalled by how many baby boys needlessly die each year in the United States.

The study concluded: “These boys died because physicians have been either complicit or duplicitous, and because parents ignorantly said ‘Yes,’ or lacked the courage to say ‘No.’” And called the deaths “an unrecognized sacrifice of innocents.”

The study found that approximately 117 neonatal (first 28 days after birth) circumcision-related deaths occur annually in the United States, one out of every 77 male neonatal deaths. Causes of death include anesthesia reaction, stroke, hemorrhage, and infection. Because infant circumcision is elective, all of these deaths are avoidable. The study also identified reasons why accurate data on these deaths are not available, some of the obstacles to preventing these deaths, and some solutions to overcome them.'

Duke’s sexist sexual misconduct policy

anthony · 29 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FOUR YEARS ago, Duke University became the center of a national controversy about sexual assault, wrongful accusations, and campus politics when four lacrosse players were falsely accused of raping an exotic dancer at a party. Now, Duke is back in the news with a campus policy that ostensibly seeks to prevent sexual assault — but, in fact, infantilizes women, redefines much consensual sex as potentially criminal, and does a grave disservice to both sexes.

But the policy’s far-reaching definition of sex without “affirmative consent” covers much more. Unlike the notorious Antioch College rules of the 1990s that required verbal consent to every new level of intimacy, Duke’s policy recognizes non-verbal expressions of consent. However, it stresses that “consent may not be inferred from silence [or] passivity” — even in an ongoing sexual relationship.

What’s more, consent can be invalidated by various circumstances — not just obvious ones such as being threatened or unconscious, but also being intoxicated to any degree, or “psychologically pressured,” or “coerced.” The latter is an extremely broad term, particularly since the policy warns that “real or perceived power differentials . . . may create an unintentional atmosphere of coercion.” As FIRE has noted, a popular varsity athlete may face a presumption of coercion in any relationship with a fellow student.

Meanwhile, women, the default victims in the Duke policy, are presumed passive and weak-minded: Goddess forbid they should take more than minimal responsibility for refusing unwanted sex. In one of the policy’s hypothetical scenarios, a woman tells her long-term boyfriend she’s not in the mood, but then “is silent” in response to his continued non-forcible advances; if he takes this as consent and they have sex, that is “sexual misconduct.” Why she doesn’t tell him to stop remains a mystery.'

Scientists develop spray to make men more affectionate using 'cuddle' hormone oxytocin

Broadsword · 29 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Scientists have finally worked out what women really want.

They have created a spray that makes men more caring, affectionate and in tune with others' feelings.

Just a puff or two and even the most macho of males is as sensitive as a woman, they claim.

The spray is based on oxytocin - a hormone naturally made in the body and involved in sex, sexual attraction, trust and confidence.

It is released into the blood during labour - triggering the production of breast milk - and floods the brain during breastfeeding, helping mother and baby bond.

In spray form, it seems that the so-called 'cuddle chemical' can make a man feel like a woman.'

Intact America: CDC Petition Delivery only days away!

Matt · 30 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA e-mail:

ACT NOW

Earlier this week, Georganne Chapin, Executive Director of Intact America, spoke with Dr. Peter Kilmarx, Chief of HIV/AIDS Prevention at the Centers for Disease Control. They discussed the CDC's forthcoming guidelines on male infant circumcision, and she'll be sending him a follow-up letter next week – along with the petition signatures we've received from you and other supporters...

...and we're only 300 signatures shy of our 25,000-signature goal!

Please help us by asking your friends to sign our petition RIGHT NOW – asking the CDC not to recommend infant circumcision. We're so close to our goal, we just need a few more signatures!

You can also help by sharing this campaign on Twitter and Facebook.

Thank you again for being such a powerful advocate for our infant boys.

Lawyer on Runaway Ohio Mom: No Charges, Will Pay Thousands

anthony · 30 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Ohio mother who set off a nationwide manhunt when she ran away with another man earlier this month will face no charges in Ohio, but she and the man will pay thousands in restitution to the county, an attorney for the woman told ABC News today.

"My clients have agreed to make full restitution for the investigation in whatever amount the prosecutor deemed appropriate," Jon Paul Rion, attorney for former missing mother Tiffany Tehan and boyfriend Tre Hutcherson, told ABC News today. "I think that they've always wanted to make this county as whole as possible."

While Rion would not disclose the exact amount that was settled on, he said it is greater than $5,000.

Tehan disappeared while she was supposedly shopping on Saturday, April 17, leaving behind her husband David and year-old daughter Lexie. The vanishing act triggered a cross-country search until police, acting on a tip from the FBI, found Tehan and a man identified as Tre Hutcherson staying at motel in Miami Beach, Florida. Police, who had been calling Hutcherson a person of interest in her disappearance, quickly determined that Tehan was not in danger.'

US Navy Allows Women on Submarines -- still not required to register for the Selective Service

anthony · 30 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Notice how the concern is giving women privacy. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Navy formally announced on Thursday that it will for the first time recruit women into its submarine force.

It has been 20 years since the Navy first allowed women to serve on its surface warfare ships. But submarines remained off-limits for several reasons.

The main reason had to do with cramped quarters on the subs, where there is little privacy. Now the chief of the Navy's task force on women in submarines, Rear Admiral Barry Bruner, says larger, more modern subs have changed that.

"The reason it's available to women is that we can give them privacy," said Admiral Bruner. "So we're finally where we can do it. And I'm pleased that the submarine force is headed down this path."'

Substitute Teacher Allegedly Shows Fifth Graders Her Bikini, Tan Lines

anthony · 30 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CAMBRIDGE, Ohio -- It's being dubbed "The Case Of The Sexy Substitute."

...

"The teacher came in, in a sweat suit to start off the day at school, and then proceeded to strip down into a bikini with a lace cover-up over it," said Sally Dyer, recounting what her 11-year-old son described. "She kissed some other boys on the cheek, and she showed off her tan lines."

After three hours of this, word got out, and Superintendent Dennis Dettra says he rushed to the school and confronted the substitute, asking her if she did those things.

"She kind of nodded and said yeah," recalled Dettra. "Just very pecular, the way she answered it. I told her those were highly inappropriate actions for a school setting."

...

She also speculated that if it had been a male teacher with female students, there would have been an immediate arrest, not just an investigation.

"I believe he would already be in jail," Dyer said. "I think there would have been no questions asked.'

Labor Force Polarized as Middle-Skill Jobs Disappear: Report

Anonymous · 30 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Yes, society can continue to make family court a black hole of discrimination and human rights abuses where information about discrimination doesn't get our, but discrimination in education and labor will only get increasingly hard to ignore. They try to skirt over it a little in this article, but how much longer will this be effective depends on people like us. Excerpt:

'Middle-skills jobs have lost share in the employment pool in the last three decades, a trend of labor-market "polarization" reinforced by the recession, according to a report released Friday.
...
"Perhaps most alarmingly, males as a group have adapted comparatively poorly to the changing labor market," Autor wrote. "For males without a four-year college degree, wages have stagnated or fallen over three decades. And as these males have moved out of middle-skill blue-collar jobs, they have generally moved downward in the occupational skill and earnings distribution."

The employment and earnings of less-educated males have been particularly harmed by fewer middle-skill, blue-collar jobs in manufacturing, according to the report.

"The job opportunities available to males displaced from manufacturing jobs, particularly those displaced at midcareer, are likely to be primarily found in lower-paying service occupations," Autor wrote.

Why have middle-skilled jobs declined? Changes in technology, international trade, and the off-shoring of jobs all play a part.'

Media Release: The Masculinity Conspiracy

Anonymous · 30 April 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Starting Now: The Masculinity Conspiracy
A free online book
http://masculinityconspiracy.com/

What if the biggest conspiracy in human history had gone completely unnoticed? What if that conspiracy was responsible for some of the biggest problems the world faces today? Wouldn't you want to know? Wouldn't you want to do something about it? Well guess what: You can.

The Masculinity Conspiracy is a free online book about masculinity. It argues that nearly every assumption about masculinity in contemporary society is wrong. The result is nothing short of exposing a worldwide conspiracy that has been preventing humanity from reaching its fullest potential.

About the Author
Dr Joseph Gelfer is a masculinities researcher in the School of Political and Social Inquiry at Monash University, Australia. He is author of Numen, Old Men: Contemporary Masculine Spiritualities and the Problem of Patriarchy and editor of Journal of Men, Masculinities and Spirituality. His anthology, 2012: Decoding the Countercultural Apocalypse will be published later this year.

Contact: joseph-at-gelfer.net

Systematic study of adult mortality reveals disparity increase between countries and between sexes fondueguy · 1 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This article summarizes the global mortality rates of men and women aged 15 to 59 years from 1970 to 2010. The study published April 30th, 2010 in the Lancet is the first of its kind to comprehensively collect data from censuses, surveys on household deaths, vital registration data, and sibling survival histories. Previous studies have largely relied on child mortality numbers to estimate adult mortality rates. Excerpt:

'Women overall have seen their health improve more then men have. In the 40 years between 1970 and 2010, adult mortality fell by 34 percent and 19 percent in men globally. The gap between adult male and female mortality widened by 27 percent in that period.

Dr. Alan Lopez said "We have seen these estimates for child mortality for two decades now that have been enormously influential in informing debates about priorities for child survival. But we have been remarkably ignorant around adult mortality... We need to apply the passion that surrounds keeping children alive to young adults alive."
...
South Asia, and India in particular, had among the highest female mortality in the world in 1970. Both the region and the country have seen major declines. In 2010, it is better to be a woman in India than it was to be a man in the United States in 1997.'

I'm just glad that there was a significant health study that showed the health disparity between men and women and actually considered it to be of importance.

Life in Prison for Woman who forced 13-year-old boy to fondle her

Matt · 1 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. If a man would have gotten the same punishment withy the same facts, then great. Would he have? I dunno. I do know this: it is nice to see the sexual abuse of boys by women now finally getting some serious attention from at least one court. Excerpt:

'While obviously deeply moved with her plea and confessing dismay at why no plea bargain was ever offered to the Twin falls woman, Memeo had no choice but to sentence the 34 year old Taylor to the only sentence allowed by the legislature-- Life in prison with the earliest possible parole after ten years.
...
Taylor was convicted of lewdness with a minor under 14 in November after a week-long trial.

According to Kirkpatrick the woman had been offered no plea bargain and that the jury had not been informed that the life sentence would be imposed on Taylor should she be found guilty.

In 2007 the Nevada Legislature removed any discretion from a judge in the sentencing of lewdness with minors and set a blanket mandatory life sentence for all offenders convicted of the crime.

Since then well over 95 percent of defendants originally charged with the crime plead guilty to a lessor charge with a greatly reduced penalty.

“Why you were charged with these crimes particularly, I don’t. know,” Memeo said. “Why plea bargains are offered to some and not to others, I don’t know. I do know that you were charged and found guilty for this charge by a jury and this is the sentence. Good luck.”'

Abusegate: Turning the Tide Campaign Launches Today!

Matt · 2 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

The first two weeks of May are featuring an unprecedented period of grass-roots activism centered around reforming the multi-billion dollar domestic violence industry.

The national campaign includes the release of Special Reports, press releases, radio interviews, op-ed columns, lobbying on Capitol Hill, advocacy telethons, and more!

Do your part to reform the Violence Against Women Act, and keep up with all the action at Abusegate: http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/

Sweden: Doctors refuse to perform circumcisions

anthony · 2 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Doctors in western Sweden are refusing to carry out the circumcision of boys, despite clearance by elected officials to carry out the procedure for non-medical reasons.

The Västra Götaland region is obliged to procure healthcare for at least 300 operations each year among Jewish and Muslim families, according to the Göteborgs-Posten (GP) local daily.

"Now we have to go out and find someone who is willing to perform the operations. The doctors' sector council (Sektorsrådet) have said no to these procedures. We respect the doctors' position," said Lars-Göran Moberg, head of the region's healthcare committee to GP.

Paediatric surgeon John Westfelt can see no possibility for doctors within the public healthcare system to perform the operations.

"We have de-prioritised several other measures to help sick children, such as surgery on tight foreskins for medical reasons. And obviously we can not carry out these operations without sacrificing something else."

Washington Post: 'Sorting out boys' school problems'

anthony · 2 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now I have read the book, and feel everyone should read it. I don't know of a clearer or more balanced examination of this issue. Whitmire is passionate about the need to help boys, but he respectfully presents other points of view, including those of pro-girl optimists like me. In fact, one of the book's most impressive features is its exposure of the harm done by pro-girl vs. pro-boy politics. The reluctance of either side to let the other experiment with new ways of teaching has been one of the greatest obstacles to moving all students up to their potential.

Whitmire's recommendations at the end of the book are sensible, creative and overdue. He wants more and better data on boys' progress, more innovative early reading instruction for boys, more hands-on subjects in high school, better managed and studied single-sex schools and classes and some affirmative action in college admissions. I don't think he celebrates the rise of achievement among impoverished girls, a worldwide phenomenon of immense importance, as much as he should, but that's a quibble. We have to do more for boys and stop blocking promising ideas out of fear that treating the two sexes differently would be politically incorrect.'

Entry in Amnesty Contest stopped by the Womens Shelter in Uppsala (Sweden)

Anonymous · 3 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

With reference to http://news.mensactivism.org/node/14745, I obtained an email sent by the Women's Shelter in Uppsala, which read (translated into English):

"Subject: Successful protests

Hello!

Earlier today we sent you an urgent request that you should protest against the movie "The Right To Be A Father"

Thanks to the protests, the movie never was displayed on the Festival and it was later removed from their website. We thank Amnesty for still fighting for justice!

Kind Regards,

The Womens Shelter in Uppsala"

Conclusion:
1. Amnesty does not stand for human rights
2. The Womens Shelters does not stand for equality

Watch the movie stopped by The Womens Shelter in Uppsala (English subs)
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=F_nwJfpOuGI

Please spread the word about what happend in Sweden!

Story submitted by Ulf Andersson, PappaRättsGruppen http://www.dads-r-us.se/
English version: http://www.dads-r-us.se/ (as translated by Google Translate)

Abusegate: 'VAWA is the new Jim Crow' - Call Sen. Leahy Now

Matt · 3 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Today SAVE (Stop Abusive and Violent Environments) is releasing a new Special Report, "Assaulting our Rights: How Domestic Violence Laws Curtail our Fundamental Freedoms." The report can be seen here: http://www.saveservices.org/special-reports/

The report's conclusion? The Violence Against Women Act has violated the fundamental rights of more innocent Americans, in more ways, and for a longer period of time, than probably any other law passed in the history of the United States!

Sen. Leahy is the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and will play a lead role in the upcoming reauthorization of VAWA.

Call Sen. Leahy's office now at 202-224-4242. Tell him this simple but important message: "VAWA is the new Jim Crow. Fix the Violence Against Women Act now!"

As always, be polite and respectful.

UK: Medical Chiefs Worried There Are Too Many Female Doctors

Broadsword · 3 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The problem is that women will form the majority of UK medics after 2017, thanks to a ten-fold rise in their numbers entering training. Most of them will be in their childbearing years.

In order to continue working, they will need proper support while starting families, as well as careers where they can happily combine work with raising children. But an array of official reports reveals how the NHS is sorely failing to meet this need.

The result is a time-bomb for patient care, with the health service facing significant shortages in crucial hospital specialties as young women doctors head instead to the few areas of the health service where they can mix work and family.

Thus the paucity of childcare support and female-friendly practices in the NHS not only damages the prospects of thousands of female medics, it also jeopardises the future of healthcare for everyone in Britain.
...
But the stark fact is that Leigh, and the burgeoning numbers of women doctors like her, cannot be treated like substitute men. If the NHS does not wake up to that fact, the care of millions of patients could be seriously affected for many years to come.'

"Runaway mom" update: Planned fake abduction and disappearance for months, would not seek divorce due to 'spiritual beliefs'

Matt · 4 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Basically, she planned her own fake abduction, was in fact the one who suggested it to her boyfriend, and wouldn't consider a divorce due to her 'spiritual beliefs'. In short, she had no excuse at all. Yet there are no immediate plans to charge her with something like perpetuating a public fraud, etc. Again, the female discount is at play. There is actually the suggestion that SHE might divorce HIM and seek custody of their daughter!

And yet her husband stays with her. I wonder what if anything have other people said to this guy about such things as self-respect and boundaries. This is an example of how badly messed up the minds are of some men due to the brainwashing that nymphotropism inflicts. It is reinforced at every turn, including (most especially) in religious institutions and belief systems. There are actually people who will in all sincerity look at something like this and say yes, he is doing the right thing by staying with her and "trying to make it work." Just how many times does one need to be betrayed before he (or she) gets it?

SAVE Press release: "Jim Crow Justice under Partner Abuse Laws, Report Finds"

Matt · 4 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Release here. Excerpt:

Jim Crow Justice under Partner Abuse Laws, Report Finds

WASHINGTON, May 3 / U.S. Newswire / -- Each year an estimated two million Americans see their basic rights compromised or vitiated by heavy-handed domestic violence policies. This number rivals, and in some ways surpasses the legal abuses of the infamous Jim Crow era, according to a report released today.

The analysis, “Assaulting our Rights: How Domestic Violence Laws Curtail our Fundamental Freedoms” is published by SAVE – Stop Abusive and Violent Environments. The report is available online: http://www.saveservices.org/special-reports/

Constitutional law experts have long expressed doubts about “get-tough” domestic violence policies. According to Cheryl Hanna of the Vermont Law School, “evidentiary standards for proving abuse have been so relaxed that any man who stands accused is considered guilty.”

The SAVE report identifies nine Constitutionally-protected rights that are often ignored by domestic violence laws. These rights include:

1. Probable cause for arrest: Twenty-three states mandate arrest for allegations of assault, even when probable-cause evidentiary standards are not met.

2. Right to due process: Civil domestic violence laws do not require notice or hearing, or even proof of abuse before a temporary restraining order is issued.

3. Equal treatment under the law: Domestic violence programs provide legal services to abuse accusers, but not for defendants, thus compromising the principle of "innocent until proven guilty."'

Abusegate Alert: Senate Judiciary Committee schedules VAWA hearing for May 5 at 10 AM ET

Matt · 4 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

The Senate Judiciary Committee has scheduled a hearing on VAWA on May 5 at 10:00 AM Eastern Time-- the day before our big lobbying event May 6-7. Rest assured, the timing of the Senate hearing is no coincidence.

For the first time, the Committee has invited a mainstream, reputable researcher to testify, Dr. Richard Gelles of the University of Pennsylvania. It will be very interesting to see what Gelles has to say, since a few years ago he published an article ridiculing ideologically-driven DV researchers: The politics of research: The use, abuse, and misuse of social science data—The cases of intimate partner violence. Family Court Review, Vol. 45, No. 1, 2007.

I would invite everyone to watch the hearing live on the Judiciary Committee website

Below is the witness list. This may be a break-through event for us.

F&F: NOW Criticizes F & F over Campaign to Ask DSM to Include PAS in latest edition

Matt · 4 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of 50 mental health experts from 10 countries are part of an effort to add Parental Alienation Disorder to the fifth edition of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM V), the American Psychiatric Association's "bible" of diagnoses. This scientific coalition is led by psychiatrist William Bernet, who explains that adding PAD to DSM "would spur insurance coverage, stimulate more systematic research, lend credence to a charge of parental alienation in court, and raise the odds that children would get timely treatment."

Fathers & Families wants to ensure that the DSM-5 Task Force is aware of the scope and severity of Parental Alienation. To this end, in December we asked our supporters to write the Task Force to urge them to consider including Parental Alienation Disorder in DSM-5. As usual, the response was overwhelming. It also helped lead to progress–while as expected the newly-released draft version does not specifically include Parental Alienation Disorder, the DSM-5 Task Force has now listed Parental Alienation Disorder among the "Conditions Proposed by Outside Sources…that are still under consideration by the work groups." Gaining inclusion isn't easy–David J. Kupfer, M.D., the chair of the DSM-V Task Force, recently told the media that with any disorder proposed for inclusion, "The door to get in [the manual] is pretty hard."

...

The National Organization for Women is very concerned about our efforts, condemning them in March and again in their recent media release NOW Foundation Opposes Phony Parental Alienation Disorder. In it, the NOW Foundation references Fathers & Families' DSM Campaign and explains "The 'disorder' has been proposed…to be added to the American Psychiatric Association's Diagnostics and Statistics Manual - V to give it more legitimacy than it currently has — or should have — in court." The NOW Foundation has also written the DSM Task Force, urging them to reject PAD.

NOW repeatedly encourages us to believe that Parental Alienation is "discredited" by family law experts and professionals. This is absolutely not the case–those who believe, as NOW does, that Parental Alienation is a fiction are a decided minority within the field.'

Ask Dr. Helen: Does Society Encourage Genital Assault Against Men?

Matt · 5 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is some very good exposure for this issue. Dr. Helen Smith is widely-syndicated and her column appear all over the place. Just Google "Ask Dr. Helen" to see. Excerpt:

'The other day I received an email from reader Kevin who is concerned about the increase in the depiction of sexual violence — particularly that of genital assault — against men in our society:

> Dear Dr. Helen,
>
> I want to ask you about something because you seem to be a logical and rational person and I am having trouble finding any logical, rational people who have the guts to speak out about this one particular issue.
>
> Ever since I was a kid I have noticed a steady rise in the depictions of sexual violence against males in movies, and later in television. It was obvious that these depictions, always the hero sexually assaulting the villain and almost never the other way around, were encouraging this kind of sexual violence against males. As soon as it became a regular Disney staple it became a regular part of every boy's life, something he had to endure repeatedly as part of growing up. Even as a kid I was baffled by parents willingness to let this go and not protest it. ...

Canada: Friend tells court of chilling phone call from accused Strathmore killer

Matt · 5 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CALGARY - Minutes after she is alleged to have fatally shot her common-law husband Kevin Dunseath in the head, Lela Mae La France phoned a friend looking for drugs, court heard Tuesday.

Claude St. Germaine testified he received the call from La France just after midnight on Aug. 9, 2008, requesting crack cocaine and telling him, "I killed him."

St. Germaine said he put his cell phone on speaker phone at the rural home, so three friends could hear what she was saying to La France on the call from hers and Dunseath's home in Strathmore, 40 kilometres east of Calgary.

"She said, 'I finally did it, I did what we had discussed, I killed him,'" the witness told Crown prosecutor Eric Tolppanen.

La France, 40, on trial for second-degree murder, has pleaded not guilty in connection with the death of Dunseath, 46.'

Abusegate: Submit Testimony for Today's Senate VAWA Hearing

Matt · 5 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

On Wednesday May 5 at 10am Eastern time, the Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing on the Violence Against Women Act. The hearing page is here: http://judiciary.senate.gov/hearings/hearing.cfm?id=4562

Even though you could not be there in person, you CAN submit testimony to the Committee. It's simple; just write a concise, polite letter about your experiences with VAWA, and email to Senators Leahy (Democrat of Vermont) and Sessions (Republican of Alabama). It is preferable that your letter not be longer than one page.

Just fill in the missing places in the draft letter below, and email it to:

Anya McMurray (Leahy's staffer): Anya_McMurray-at-judiciary-dem.senate.gov
Bradley Hayes (Sessions' staffer): Bradley_Hayes-at-judiciary-rep.senate.gov

Send a copy of the letter to: news-at-saveservices.org. The deadline to receive your letter is this coming Tuesday, May 11!

DRAFT LETTER

RE: Violence Against Women Act

Honorable Patrick Leahy
Honorable Jeff Sessions
Senate Judiciary Committee

Dear Senators Leahy and Sessions:

I am writing regarding the May 5, 2010 Judiciary Committee hearing on the Violence Against Women Act.

[POLITELY, FACTUALLY, AND CONCISELY DESCRIBE YOUR EXPERIENCES AND RECOMMENDATIONS HOW TO REFORM VAWA.]

Sincerely,

[YOUR NAME, ADDRESS, AND TELEPHONE NUMBER]

VAWA Hearing: “The Increased Importance...” testimony available

Matt · 5 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Note that most of the testimony delivered today is available for download as .pdf files. Go to the hearing page and look at the right-hand column under "Witness Testimony". You can download and read the statements. Of note is Dr. Gelles' statement which discusses on pages 6 and 7 of the .pdf file the lack of scope of the Act for male and other victims of DV. In his conclusion he states that this is an opportunity to revisit the scope of VAWA and to start including men in its consideration but also disputes the notion that the economic downturn we are in is causing an increase in DV generally.

I have read the other statements. [I am including contact information for those who made them. But if you choose to contact any of them and voice your concerns, I urge you to be factual and polite. (I suggest where possible that you use email over telephone since it is harder to get into heated arguments over email.) You will be a lot more persuasive if you point out the well-documented facts around male DV victims vs. being accusatory and making unproductive comments about, say, their relatives.] My take:

The Honorable Susan Carbon: No mention at all of male DV victims except on page 10 of the .pdf where she says: '...According to the 2007 "Youth Risk Behavior Surveillance" survey...approximately 10% of adolescents nationwide reported being hit, slapped, or physically hurt by a boyfriend or girlfriend in the past year.' (Contact here)

VAWA hearing reviewed

Matt · 6 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Abusegate Bob has penned a series of new articles covering the hearing and VAWA in general. Good news includes the fact that male DV victims were indeed brought up at the hearing. This is a start; they have been invisible and to government officials and unmentioned since VAWA started. Progress. See http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/

University student accused of making false rape claim

anthony · 6 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Oakland University student admitted to police that she falsely reported she had been raped by two men to get attention and support from her boyfriend, according to the Oakland County Sheriff's Office.

Now Jessica Joe is facing a felony charge herself.

According to the sheriff's office, the 21-year-old Detroit resident was arraigned Tuesday in 52-3 District Court in Rochester Hills on a count of filing a false report of a felony and was released on a $10,000 personal bond.

Joe, police said, reported on April 24 that she was walking out of the CVS Pharmacy at Adams and Walton, when she was grabbed by two men and dragged into a van parked next to her car. She told police that the men pulled her clothing off and one man drove around, while the other man raped her and was eventually pushed out of the van in the lot, according to the sheriff's office.'

Mom of woman accused of false report faces charge

anthony · 6 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'(UALR Public Radio) - Police say the mother of a woman accused of filing a false rape accusation at Fort Smith now faces a charge as well.

A news release from Fort Smith police says 39-year-old Ericka Lee Church of Sallisaw, Okla., has been charged with harassing communications, a misdemeanor.

The release said Church made harassing phone calls and sent text messages and Face Book postings to Steven David, accusing him of raping her daughter.

David was one of two men accused by Church's daughter, Heather Smith also known as Heather Boss and another woman of raping Smith. Fort Smith police say they have cleared both men of the accusations, and have charged both women with filing a false police report, a felony.'

Woman accused of filing false rape report

anthony · 6 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Latrobe woman, who allegedly instigated an attack on a man she accused of sexual assault, has been charged with falsely accusing another man of raping her weeks earlier.

Felisha Hardison, 24, of 14 W. Harrison Ave., was arraigned yesterday by District Judge Michael Mahady for allegedly filing a false report with Latrobe police on March 31.

Hardison told police she had been raped by a man with whom she has three children. Hardison claimed the man forced her to have sex with him, punched her and choked her, and videotaped the act with his cell phone camera.

